Summary

The present action was instituted in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York by the government under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act against the defendants, who were engaged in the business of promoting professional boxing contests on a multistate basis. Originally, the District Court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the business of professional boxing is not interstate trade or commerce within the scope of the act. However, on appeal the United States Supreme Court reversed (348 US 236, 99 L ed 290, 75 S Ct 259), reaching a contrary conclusion and holding that the complaint stated a cause of action under the act. After a trial the District Court held that the government was entitled to relief by appropriate decree. (150 F Supp 397; 171 F Supp 841.) The decree, in addition to granting appropriate injunctive relief, ordered the individual defendants to divest themselves, within a 5-year period, of all stock owned by them in a corporation (Madison Square Garden); ordered the dissolution of two boxing clubs formed pursuant to, and as a means to effectuate, the conspiracy charged; ordered the defendants to lease buildings of corporations controlled by them to qualified promoters of championship contests, the matter, in the event the terms of a lease could not be agreed upon, to be submitted to the District Court; and prohibited exclusive contracts applying to all professional boxing contests and not merely to championship contests.

On appeal, the United States Supreme Court affirmed the judgment below. In an opinion by Clark, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that the findings of the District Court were not clearly erroneous, that in view of the court's former holdings on the sufficiency of the complaint the judgment on the merits was properly entered, and that, in framing the decree, the court below, as to the relief granted, did not exceed the limits of allowable discretion.

Harlan, J., with the concurrence of Frankfurter and Whittaker, JJ., dissented in part, disapproving those parts of the decree below which ordered the divestiture of the stockholdings of the individual defendants and the dissolution of the corporations controlled by them.

Frankfurter, J., in a separate opinion, explained why he joined the dissent written by Mr. Justice Harlan.

Stewart, J., did not participate.

After the United States Supreme Court held that the complaint in an anti-trust action instituted by the government against the promoters of professional boxing contests stated a cause of action, and the District Court, upon a subsequent trial, found the allegations in the complaint to have been proven, the defendants, upon appeal from an adverse decree of the District Court, have the burden of showing that its findings, or at least the basic ones, are "clearly erroneous" within the meaning of Rule 52\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, providing that findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and where the defendants have not been able to meet that burden the District Court's decree entered on the merits, adjudging them to have violated the Sherman Act, must be affirmed.

In approaching the question of relief in an anti-trust action, the United States Supreme Court, on direct appeal from a judgment of a District Court, does not sit as a trial court.

LEdHN[9] [9]

The framing of decrees in anti-trust suits should take place in the District Courts, which are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case, rather than in an appellate court.

RESTRRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- scope. -- > Headnote:

LEdHN[10] [10]

A decree in favor of the government in an anti-trust action based on unlawful monopoly should (1) put an end to the combination or conspiracy when that is itself the violation; (2) deprive the defendants of the benefits of their conspiracy; and (3) break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the act.

LEdHN[11] [11]

The relief granted by a trial court in an anti-trust case brought to the United States Supreme Court on direct appeal will be given the most careful scrutiny of the Supreme Court to make certain that justice has been done.

[LEdHN\[12A\]](#) [12A] [LEdHN\[12B\]](#) [12B]

An order directing the individual defendants in an action brought by the government against promoters of professional boxing contests to divest themselves, within a 5-year period, of stock owned by them in a corporation (Madison Square Garden) does not exceed the limits of allowable discretion of the District Court, where the stock, though not acquired pursuant to the conspiracy charged in the complaint and not the fruit of the conspiracy, may be utilized as part of the conspiracy to effect its ends; it is immaterial that the stock was not proven to be the lever by which the corporation was persuaded to join the conspiracy, that the sale of the stock, made in the manner outlined in the decree, would result in great loss to the defendants, and that the defendants were not permitted by the decree to exercise an option, as proposed by them, of a choice between Madison Square Garden and another corporation, the Chicago Stadium, both of which they still controlled.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §15 > knowledge of illegality -- prior proceedings -- boxing contests. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[13\]](#) [13]

It is reasonable to assume that the defendants in an anti-trust action instituted by the government against them, who were engaged in the business of promoting professional boxing contests, knew the illegality under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of their conduct continued after the United States Supreme Court, on the government's appeal from an adverse decision, had held that their business constituted interstate commerce within the meaning of the act, where no denial was made by them on that appeal of the sufficiency of the government's complaint.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §79 > relief -- corporations -- common control. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[14\]](#) [14]

Common control of corporations being one of the instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making a conspiracy to violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act effective, the proclivity of the past, on the part of the defendants, to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future, since, if that affiliation continues, there may be tempting opportunity to act in combination.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §79 > dissolution of combination. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[15\]](#) [15]

It is anti-trust policy to decree dissolution of a combination where the creation of the combination is itself the violation of the anti-trust laws.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §79 > decree -- dissolution -- boxing clubs. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[16\]](#) [16]

Even though a decree in favor of the government in an action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act against promoters of professional boxing contests leaves the parent corporations of boxing clubs free to organize new corporations to handle their respective boxing promotions, the dissolution of the boxing clubs does not exceed the limits of the District Court's allowable discretion, where the boxing clubs were formed pursuant to, and were the means used to effectuate, the conspiracy charged in the complaint and their continued operation under the old charters might lead to a situation nominis umbra not conducive to the elimination of the old illegal practices.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- leasing to others -- boxing clubs. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[17\]](#) [17]

In framing a decree in favor of the government in its action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act against promoters of professional boxing contests, the District Court does not exceed the limits of its allowable discretion by ordering defendants to lease buildings of corporations controlled by them to qualified promoters of championship contests and by providing that in the event the terms of the lease cannot be agreed upon the matter should be submitted to the court.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- exclusive contracts -- boxing clubs. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[18\]](#) [18]

The prohibition, in a decree in favor of the government in its action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act against promoters of professional boxing contests, against exclusive contracts applying to all professional boxing contests, does not exceed the District Court's allowable discretion, even though the prohibition goes beyond the "relevant market" considered for purposes of determining violations of the act, such market being limited to professional championship boxing contests.

APPEAL §1400 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §75 > decree -- extent -- review. -- > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[19\]](#) [19]

Relief in an anti-trust action, to be effective, must sometimes go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation; when this sort of relief is granted, the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, will be especially wary lest the trial court overstep the correspondingly narrower limits of its discretion.

Syllabus

1. The Government's civil complaint charging appellants with a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce among the States in the promotion, broadcasting and televising of professional world championship boxing contests, as well as a conspiracy to monopolize and monopolization of the same, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, was sustained by this Court as stating a cause of action, and the case was remanded for trial on the merits. 348 U.S. 236. After a trial, the District Court, in an opinion incorporating detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law based on the principles laid down by this Court, found that the allegations of the complaint had been sustained, and adjudged that appellants had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Held: The District Court's findings are not clearly erroneous, and its judgment on the merits is affirmed. Pp. 244-252.

(a) The District Court's finding that the relevant [*2] market was the promotion of championship boxing contests, in contrast to all professional boxing contests, was not clearly erroneous and it is sustained. Pp. 249-252.

2. After further hearings on the nature and extent of the relief necessary to protect the public interest, the District Court entered a final judgment dissolving the two international boxing clubs, directing the individual appellants to divest themselves of their stock in Madison Square Garden and granting injunctive relief designed to open up the market in the business of promoting professional world championship boxing matches. Held: The relief granted was not beyond the allowable discretion of the District Court and its judgment is affirmed. Pp. 253-263.

(a) At the time of the final decree, the Joe Louis agreements had lapsed; the exclusive-contract practice had been abandoned at least temporarily; the leases on Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds and St. Nicholas Arena in New York had been given up; and the appellants had no control over the new heavyweight champion; but this Court agrees with the District Court that the additional evidence taken by it showed that appellants still possessed all of the [*3] power of monopoly and restraint. Pp. 254-255.

(b) Even if the individual appellants' stock in Madison Square Garden was lawfully acquired and was not the fruit of the conspiracy, it had been utilized to effect the purposes of the conspiracy and could be so used again, and the record supports the District Court's conclusion that they should be required to divest themselves of this stock in order to break up the unlawful combination and restore competition in championship boxing contests -- without being granted the alternative options requested by them. Pp. 255-259.

(c) Since the two international boxing clubs were formed pursuant to the conspiracy and were the means used to effectuate it, the requirement that they be dissolved was justified. Pp. 259-261.

(d) The District Court having found that one of the means used in effectuating the conspiracy was the ownership and control of arenas and stadia, the requirement of the decree that Madison Square Garden and the Chicago Stadium be rented to any qualified promoter at a reasonable rental, subject to specified conditions, was justified. Pp. 261-262.

(e) Practical considerations justify the prohibition against exclusive contracts [*4] with contestants, even though they apply not only to championship bouts but to all professional boxing contests, thus going beyond the "relevant market" considered for the purposes of determining the Sherman Act violations. P. 262.

This civil Sherman Act ¹ case was here four years ago on direct appeal from a dismissal by the District Court, which had held that the Act did not apply to the business of professional boxing. We reversed, finding 274 that "the complaint states a cause of action [under the Act] and that the Government is 5 entitled to an opportunity to prove its allegations," and remanded the case for trial on the merits. United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236 \(1955\). The complaint charged the appellants with a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce among the States in the promotion, broadcasting, and televising of professional world championship boxing contests, as well as a conspiracy to monopolize and monopolization of the same. After a trial, the District Court, in an opinion incorporating detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law based on the principles laid down in our earlier opinion, found that the allegations of the complaint had been sustained. 150 F.Supp. 397. After further hearings on the nature and extent of the relief necessary to protect the public interest, the court entered its final judgment dissolving two of the corporate appellants, directing divestiture of certain stock owned by the individual appellants and granting injunctive relief designed to open up the market in the business of promoting professional world championship boxing matches.

6 [LEdHN\[1\]](#)  [1]The appellants, while not attacking any specific finding as clearly erroneous, claim that the proof did not show that they violated either Section 1 or 2 of the Act. In this regard appellants level their strongest blows at the District Court's definition of the relevant market. Out of the entire field of professional boxing, the District Court carved a market in championship contests alone, holding 245 it to be the relevant market at which the conspiracy was aimed. In the alternative, appellants insist that the relief granted the Government was "unnecessarily punitive," even if liability is assumed. On a direct appeal to this Court we noted probable jurisdiction, 356 U.S. 910 (1958). We have concluded that the findings of the District Court are not clearly erroneous and that in view of our former holding on the sufficiency of the complaint the judgment on the merits was properly entered. As to the relief granted we find that the court did not exceed the limits of allowable discretion in framing a decree "that will, so far as practicable, cure the ill effects of the illegal conduct, 7 and assure the public freedom from its continuance." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 88 \(1950\).

Our previous decision herein having decided that the promotion of professional *248 championship boxing contests on an interstate basis constituted trade and commerce among the States, within the meaning of the Sherman Act, there is no contest here either on the findings or the law on that point. Since on that appeal we discussed in some detail the allegations of the complaint, which the trial court has now found amply proven by the evidence, we shall only summarize the findings here.

THE FINDINGS.

The conspiracy began in January 1949, when appellants Norris and Wirtz, who owned and controlled the Chicago Stadium, the Detroit Olympia Arena and the St. Louis Arena, made an agreement with Joe Louis, the then heavyweight boxing champion of the world. Wishing to retire, Louis agreed to give up his title after obtaining from each of the four 275 leading contenders ² exclusive promotion rights including rights to radio, television and 246 movie revenues. Upon securing these exclusive contracts Louis assigned them to 8 the appellant International Boxing Club, Illinois, which was organized by Norris and Wirtz for the purpose of promoting boxing for the combination in Illinois. They paid Louis $ 150,000 cash plus an employment contract and a 20% stock interest in I. B. C., Illinois.

In March 1949 Norris and Wirtz approached appellant Madison Square Garden, in which they had for many years owned 50,000 shares of stock. It was the "foremost sports arena in New York City and is the best known arena of its kind in the United States, if not the world." ³ However, its facilities were tied up by an exclusive lease it had granted to Mike Jacobs' interests -- the leading professional boxing promoter in the field at that time. Norris and Wirtz proposed that they should all "work together now and keep the events for our buildings and not create a competitive situation that would be harmful to all." In order to effectuate this program, appellant Madison Square Garden bought [*9] out Mike Jacobs' interests, including, in addition to his lease on Madison Square Garden, his exclusive leases to Yankee Stadium and the St. Nicholas Arena and his contract with the then welterweight champion Sugar Ray Robinson. These contracts were assigned to International Boxing Club, New York, organized for the purpose of promoting boxing for the combination in New York.

Once Jacobs' interests had been acquired, there remained only one substantial competitor in the field of [*247] promoting championship boxing matches. That was Tournament of Champions, Inc., owned in part by the Columbia Broadcasting System. It [*10] owned an exclusive lease on the Polo Grounds as well as an exclusive promotion contract covering the next two fights of the then middleweight champion of the world. In May 1949 Madison Square Garden bought all of the stock of Tournament of Champions at a cost of $ 100,000 plus 25% of the net profits on the next two middleweight championship matches. The assets thus acquired were likewise assigned to I. B. C., New York. By a simultaneous separate agreement, Columbia Broadcasting System agreed for a five-year period not to invest in or promote any professional boxing matches in return for a first refusal right to the broadcasting of certain boxing matches staged for a like period in Madison Square Garden.

This series of agreements, consummated within four months' time, gave appellants exclusive control of the promotion of boxing matches in three championship [249] divisions, i. e., heavyweight, middleweight, and welterweight. Not satisfied with this temporary control, however, appellants perpetuated their hold on championship bouts by requiring each contender for the title to grant to them an exclusive promotion contract to his championship fights, including film and broadcasting, [*11] for a period of from three to five years. Over the facilities [276] for the staging of contests appellants exercised like control, owning or managing the "key" arenas and stadia in the Nation.⁴

Tightening the ropes around the ring thus built, Norris and Wirtz increased their stockholdings in Madison Square Garden to where they controlled it and were able [*248] to "dictate its policies and boxing activities." This has continued their control over I. B. C., New York, the stock of which is now wholly owned by Madison Square Garden.⁵ They are the sole stockholders of Chicago Stadium Corporation which in turn is the sole stockholder of I. B. C., Illinois. Their control over this boxing empire is revealed by the fact that Norris is president of each of the four top corporations, [*12] i. e., Madison Square Garden, I. B. C., New York, Chicago Stadium Corporation, and I. B. C., Illinois. He and Wirtz are directors in all four, while I. B. C., Illinois and I. B. C., New York, which have owned all of the promotion contracts with the contenders, have a joint board of directors.

The [*13] effect of the conspiracy is obvious. Using the facilities of I. B. C., Illinois, and I. B. C., New York, appellants entered into exclusive promotion contracts with title aspirants, requiring exclusive handling agreements in the event the contender became champion. In amassing their empire, appellants obtained control of champions in three divisions. The choice given a contender thereafter was clear, i. e., to sign with appellants or not to fight. With appellants in control of the key arenas and stadia of the country through Madison Square Garden, Chicago Stadium Corporation, and others, an event could not be successfully staged in any of these areas, the most fruitful in the Nation, without their [*249] consent. The exercise of this power brought immediate results. From June Square Garden. The balance of the New York championship bouts, with one exception, were held in Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds, or St. Nicholas Arena.

1949, when appellants staged their first championship fight, until May 15, 1953, the date of the amended complaint, they staged or controlled the promotion of 36 of the 44 championship battles held in this country, giving them approximately 81% of that field. In two of the classifications, heavyweight and middleweight, the combine staged all of the contests. The power of the combine to exclude competitors [*14] in the championship field is graphically shown by their promotion of 25 out of 27 fights in all divisions, a total of 93%, during the two-and-a-half-year period ending with the filing of the amended complaint. This power extended to the sale of film and broadcasting rights -- most valuable adjuncts to successful promotion in the business.

LEdHN2^[↑] [2] Appellants launch a vigorous attack on the finding that the relevant market was the promotion of championship boxing contests in contrast to all professional boxing events. They rely [250] primarily on United States v. du Pont & Co., [277] 351 U.S. 377 (1956). That case, involving an alleged monopoly of the market in cellophane, held that the relevant market was not cellophane alone but the entire field of flexible packaging materials. In testing for the relevant market in Sherman Act cases, the Court said:

" . . . no more definite rule can be declared than that HN1^[↑] commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same [*15] purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce,' monopolization of which may be illegal." Du Pont, supra, at 395.

The appellants argue that the "physical identity of the products here would seem necessarily to put them in one and the same market." They say that any boxing contest, whether championship or not, always includes one ring, two boxers and one referee, fighting under the same rules before a greater or lesser number of spectators [250] either present at ringside or through the facilities of television, radio, or moving pictures.

We do not feel that this conclusion follows. As was also said in du Pont, supra, at 404:

LEdHN3^[↑] [3] HN2^[↑] "The 'market' . . . will vary with the part of commerce under consideration. The tests are constant. That market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use and qualities considered."

LEdHN4^[↑] [4] [*16] With this in mind, the lower court in the instant case found that there exists a "separate, identifiable market" for championship boxing contests. This general finding is supported by detailed findings to the effect that the average revenue from all sources for appellants' championship bouts was $ 154,000, compared to $ 40,000 for their nonchampionship programs; that television rights to one championship fight brought $ 100,000, in contrast to $ 45,000 for a nontitle fight seven months later between the same two fighters; that the average "Nielsen" ratings ⁶ over a two-and-one-half-year period were 74.9% for appellants' championship contests, and 57.7% for their nonchampionship programs (reflecting a difference of several million viewers between the two types of fights); that although the revenues from movie rights for six of appellants' championship bouts totaled over $ 600,000, no full-length motion picture rights were sold for a non-championship contest; and that spectators pay "substantially more" for tickets to championship fights than for [251] nontitle fights. In addition, numerous representatives of the broadcasting, motion picture and advertising industries testified [*17] to the general effect that a "particular and special demand exists among radio broadcasting and telecasting [and motion picture]

companies for the rights to broadcast and telecast [and make and distribute films of] championship contests in contradistinction to similar rights to non-championship contests." ⁷

LEdHN/5 [↑] [5] In view of these findings, we cannot say that the lower court was "clearly erroneous" [*18] in concluding [*278] that nonchampionship fights are not "reasonably interchangeable for the same purpose" as championship contests. HN3 [↑] A determination [251] of the "part of the trade or commerce" encompassed by the Sherman Act involves distinctions in degree as well as distinctions in kind. One prime example of this is the application of the Act to trade or commerce in a localized geographical area. See, e. g., Schine Theatres v. United States, 334 U.S. 110 (1948); United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100 (1948); cf. Times-Picayune v. United States, 345 U.S. 594 (1953); United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495 (1948). The case which most squarely governs this case is United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131 (1948). There, the charge involved, inter alia, extensive motion picture theatre holdings. The District Court had refused to order a divestiture of such holdings on the grounds that no "national monopoly" had been intended or obtained. This Court [*19] felt that such a finding was not dispositive of the issue, saying:

"First, there is no finding as to the presence or absence of monopoly on the part of the five majors [252] [defendants] in the first-run field for the entire country, in the first-run field in the 92 largest cities of the country, or in the first-run field in separate localities. Yet the first-run field, which constitutes the cream of the exhibition business, is the core of the present cases. Section 1 of the Sherman Act outlaws unreasonable restraints irrespective of the amount of trade or commerce involved (United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224, 225, n. 59), and § 2 condemns monopoly of 'any part' of trade or commerce." Paramount, supra, at 172-173. (Emphasis in the original.)

LEdHN/6 [↑] [6] Similarly, championship boxing is the "cream" of the boxing business, and, as has been shown above, is a sufficiently separate part of the trade or commerce to constitute the relevant market for Sherman Act purposes. ⁸

[*20] LEdHN/7 [↑] [7] We have also examined the remainder of this characteristically lengthy record. When the case was here previously appellants did not deny that the allegations of the complaint stated a cause of action against them, provided their activity came within the meaning of the Sherman Act. We held that the complaint stated a cause of action. The District Court has now found these allegations to have been proven. With the case in this posture, appellants have an almost insurmountable burden. They must show that the findings, or at least the basic ones, are "clearly erroneous." Rule 52 \(a\), Rules of Civil Procedure. This they have not been able to do. It follows that the decree entered on the merits adjudging the appellants to have violated both §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act must be affirmed.

[*253] THE RELIEF.

LEdHN9¹ [9]HN4¹ "The framing of [antitrust] decrees should take place in the District [252] rather than in Appellate Courts. They are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case."

[LEdHN\[11\]](#)  [11] HNS  [*22] The relief granted by a trial court in an antitrust case and brought here on direct appeal, thus by-passing the usual appellate review, has always had the most careful scrutiny of this Court. Though the records are usually most voluminous and their review exceedingly burdensome, we have painstakingly undertaken it to make certain that justice has been done. See, e. g., United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra; Schine Theatres v. United States, supra; United States v. National Lead Co., supra. That we have done here. We have finally concluded that the relief granted was not beyond the allowable discretion of the District Court.

At the time of the final decree the Joe Louis agreements had elapsed; the exclusive-contract practice had been at least temporarily abandoned; the leases on Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds and St. Nicholas Arena in New York had been given up and the appellants had no control over the new heavyweight champion, Floyd Patterson. Nevertheless, the additional evidence taken by the District Court showed that they still possessed all of the power of [*23] monopoly and restraint. In this we agree. The appellants had exercised a strangle hold on the industry for a long period. It was evident at the time of the decree that, statistically, they still dominated the staging of championship bouts and completely controlled the filming and broadcasting of those contests. They had gained this leadership through the elimination by purchase of all of their major competitors in the field; by the control of contending boxers through exclusive agreements; and by the staging of events through the ownership or lease of key stadia and arenas. This illegal activity gave appellants an odorous monopoly background which was known and still feared in the boxing world. In addition, Norris and Wirtz still possessed the major tools, so well used previously, necessary to continue their control. They owned or controlled the key arena and stadium in New York and Chicago, the most [280] lucrative communities in boxing; they continued to control all of the championship bouts staged there; they commanded the filming and broadcasting of all championship fights -- the cream of the business -- wherever staged; and though on the surface they owned no stock [*24] directly in the two I. B. C. corporations, each was the wholly owned subsidiary of corporations which Norris and Wirtz did control and manage.

In this setting the District Court ordered Norris and Wirtz to divest themselves, within a five-year period, of [*255] all stock which they owned "directly or indirectly" in Madison Square Garden. In addition, both of the International Boxing Clubs, Illinois and New York, were ordered dissolved. The Chicago Stadium and Madison Square Garden were each enjoined from staging more than two championship bouts annually. All exclusive agreements for the promotion of boxing events, including nonchampionship, were banned. Madison Square Garden was ordered for a period of five years to lease its premises when available at a "fair and reasonable" rental to any duly qualified promoter applying in writing therefor. Failure to agree on terms would require submission to the courts for determination. Like requirement [253] was imposed on Chicago Stadium Corporation, provided Norris-and-Wirtz control continued.

The Order of Divestiture.

"The unlawful combination of the defendants still possesses and exercises its monopolistic control in the field of championship contests. It appears that since May 15, 1953 there have been held in the United States 37 championship contests, excluding one bantamweight contest. The defendants admit that they had promotional control over 24 of the 37 championship contests which were held or of 65 per cent of the market, but we find that the defendants were not financial strangers to the other 13 championship contests which were held in cities other than New York and Chicago. Because the defendants are licensed by state authorities to promote only in New York and Illinois, they could not be the persons actually designated as the promoter of the 13 championship contests, but all five of the championship contests which originated in cities other than Chicago or New York on Friday [29] nights were televised on IBC's-New York Friday night television series.

⁹Norris and Wirtz were given five years to sell their stock in Madison Square Garden, which stock is listed on the New York Stock Exchange. During this time, the stock is to be held by two trustees named by the court. If the stock is not sold within five years, the trustees are ordered to sell it within the next two years.

"We find, too, that all of the 37 championship contests in this period from May 15, 1953, save [*258] only the five outdoor contests, were televised on either the defendants' Wednesday or Friday night television series, and that the profits of the sale of the telecasting rights inured to the benefit of the defendants."

[LEdHN\[13\]](#)[\[↑\]](#) [13]As this was some two and a half years after our opinion in the former appeal on January 31, 1955, it appears that appellants had continued exercising their unlawful control long after they well knew that this activity was within the coverage of the Sherman Act. In view of the fact that no denial was made on that appeal of the sufficiency of the Government's complaint it is reasonable to assume that appellants, subsequent to our opinion, knew that their conduct violated the Sherman Act, obedience to which is so important to our free enterprise system. Still they continued their [282] illegal activity. In fact from all appearances it is continuing to this day. Such conduct, in addition to the interlocking [*30] nature of the ownership at the time of the final decree, fully justified the District Court's conclusion that the "dissolution of the combination can only be accomplished by an immediate and complete severance of the interlocking ownership of Norris and Wirtz in Madison Square Garden. . . . There must be a complete divestiture of the stockholdings of Norris and Wirtz in the Garden. The Government has established Norris and Wirtz control the Garden Corporation." Moreover, this was the only effective means at hand by which competition in championship events might be restored. It was intended to return the parties as near as possible to the status quo existing prior to the conspiracy.

[LEdHN\[12B\]](#)[\[↑\]](#) [12B]

For these reasons, we do not see why it was incumbent upon the court to give Norris and Wirtz certain options requested at the time of the decree. We shall mention only two. The first was that they have the right to exercise a choice of retaining either Madison Square Garden [*259] or the Chicago Stadium. But this would not be conducive to the re-establishment of competition between the two interests, [*31] which the District Court considered a necessity. Nor would it eliminate the "great evil" the trial court found in the Norris-Wirtz-Garden combination. Another requested option was that Norris and Wirtz be permitted to retain their control of Madison Square Garden and the latter be enjoined from promoting championship boxing events. But this would have eliminated the world's principal boxing center -- "the premier sports arena in the world," as appellants characterized it -- from promoting such events in competition with Norris and Wirtz.

[255] In short, the Government in its effort to free the professional boxing business of monopoly and unreasonable restraints would have won the battle but lost the war under either of the proffered alternatives. As this Court said in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 189-190 \(1944\):

[LEdHN\[14\]](#)[\[↑\]](#) [14]Common control was one of the instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making the conspiracy effective. If that affiliation continues, there will be tempting opportunity . . . to act in combination [*32] The proclivity in the past to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future."

The Dissolution of the Two International Boxing Clubs.

Admittedly these corporations were formed pursuant to and were the means used to effectuate the conspiracy. As the trial judge said:

"These corporations are the promotional arms of the defendants, conceived and used to enable defendants [*260] to restrain and monopolize promotion of championship boxing contests. Their assets are of but nominal value except for the goodwill attaching to their names by virtue of the conspiracy."

[LEdHN\[15\]](#)[\[↑\]](#) [15]The conditions existing here even subsequent to our former opinion confirm the need for such dissolution. Both corporations continued to share equally the profits the combination reaped from the staging of championship boxing contests. This also included revenues from championship contests promoted by others but televised by the combination. [283] They continue even now as the bridge between the choice arenas Norris and [*33] Wirtz own or control and the boxers with whom they have exclusive promotion contracts. Through interlocking officers and directorates the two I. B. C.'s thus effectively hold the combination together. HN6  It is antitrust policy to decree dissolution "where the creation of the combination is itself the violation." United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, at 189, and cases there cited. This is one of those situations where the injunctive process affords too little relief too late.

LEdHN[16]  [16] Appellants argue that this is punitive; that the parent companies, under the decree, are left free to organize new corporations to handle their respective boxing promotions and, hence, dissolution is a useless act. The trial court felt, however, and we agree, that continued operation under the old I. B. C. charters might lead to a situation nominis umbra not conducive to the elimination of the old illegal practices. New corporations, if formed, would start off with clean slates free from numerous written [*34] and oral agreements and understandings now existent and known throughout the industry. Hence dissolution might well have the salutary effect of completely clearing new horizons that the trial judge was attempting to create in the boxing world, especially when effected in conjunction [*261] with the stock divestiture provision. Moreover, there would be little inconvenience and nominal expense even if, as appellants contend, they "as a practical matter must [form new corporations] if they are to promote any boxing at all." This we think a poor excuse for not completely eliminating, by dissolution, these old trappings of monopoly and restraint.

The Compulsory Leasing Provisions.

LEdHN[17]  [17] The District Court, having found that one of the means used in effectuating the conspiracy was the ownership and control of arenas and stadia, entered a compulsory leasing provision in the decree as to Madison Square Garden and the Chicago Stadium Corporation.¹⁰

[35] The [256] appellants' main concern with this provision of the decree is the requirement that in the event the terms of a lease cannot be agreed upon the matter will be submitted to the District Court. Appellants fear that this is not only an undesirable but an impractical activity for a District Court. But they have suggested no alternative to relieve the court of this burden. Obviously, such a provision may result in some disputes which must be settled. Until experience in the enforcement of the provision proves the reference to be too burdensome we see no reason to disturb it. If experience proves it unworkable the parties, under the decree, may apply to the court for [*262] appropriate relief. See Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 156-157 (1951); *International [284] Salt Co. v. United States, supra, at 401.

Exclusive Contracts With Contestants.

LEdHN[18]  [18] Appellants object to the prohibition against exclusive contracts applying to all professional boxing contests. They question the Government's enlarging its base from [*36] championship bouts to all professional boxing. But human nature being what it is there is sound reason to say that exclusive contracts with boxers in nontitle contests would surely affect those same boxers when and if they arrive at the title. Such arrangements would give appellants, so experienced in the boxing field, a decided advantage over the independent promoter. Such a prohibition is fully justified at least until the effects of the conspiracy are fully dissipated. For the same reason we see no fault in the five-year prohibition against exclusive rights to a return bout.

LEdHN[19]  [19] The trial court recognized that these restrictions went beyond the "relevant market" which has been considered for purposes of determining the Sherman Act violations, but felt that "the relief here must be broader than the championship field because the evil to be remedied is broader." This Court has recognized that [HN7\[↑\]](#) sometimes "relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., supra, 340 U.S., at p. 90; [37] Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 600 (1951). When this sort of relief is granted, we must of course be especially wary lest the trial court overstep the correspondingly narrower limits of its discretion, but, for the reasons set out above, we feel that no such misuse of the trial court's power is present here.

We have considered the other objections of appellants to the decree and find them unsubstantial as presently [*263] posed. In the event experience proves that some of the provisions are so severe as to require modification or amendment, the parties may apply to the District Court as provided in paragraph 25 of the decree. The judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Dissent

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, dissenting in part.

While I have heretofore expressed views in favor of the almost controlling deference to be paid to a District Court's considered formulation of the provisions appropriate to a decree designed [257] to remedy adjudicated violations of the antitrust laws, those views have not prevailed, [38] see the opinions in United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131, and this Court has felt free to modify and eliminate provisions of an antitrust decree, particularly when a single judge has imposed an unconventional and drastic remedy. The main issue dealt with in MR. JUSTICE HARLAN's dissent, while a narrow one, is, in my view, important. While divestiture has been decreed by the district judge, the mandatory disposition of the stock has been delayed for five years, and the stock placed in trusteeship. During this five-year period a series of detailed controls have been imposed, under the [285] supervision of the District Court, in order to prevent appellants Norris and Wirtz from exercising the power their stock ownership has given them over the operations of Madison Square Garden. The ownership itself has been sterilized. I think it not an unreasonable forecast that, even were we to postpone for five years the decision whether to order the divestiture or continue the trusteeship, appellants Norris and Wirtz would not find it profitable to continue their sterilized ownership of the Garden stock. However, [*264] there is no compelling reason [39] to order them to do what sound business judgment may compel. One has the right to assume that, in view of this Court's unanimous affirmance of the findings below that appellants were in violation of the Sherman Law, they will scrupulously obey the decree and not even by the subtlest indirection seek to avoid our decision. Therefore I think it is needless now to determine that divestiture must take place five years hence, rather than wait upon the event in order to determine whether divestiture should then be ordered.

Accordingly, I join MR. JUSTICE HARLAN's opinion.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE WHITTAKER join, dissenting in part.

I am unable to subscribe to the Court's approval of those parts of the decree below which ordered (1) the divestiture of the stockholdings of Norris and Wirtz in Madison Square Garden Corporation and (2) the dissolution of the New York and Illinois International Boxing Clubs. On the other aspects of the case I agree with the results the Court has reached.

DIVESTITURE.

It by no means follows, however, that the order divesting Norris and Wirtz of their Garden stockholdings was an appropriate method of accomplishing that objective in the circumstances of this case. Unless past pronouncements of this Court cautioning against the indiscriminate use of divestiture as a remedy in antitrust cases, see Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, are to be taken less seriously than they should be, it seems to me that the Court has too lightly given approval to the use of that drastic measure here.

[43] Second. If I am mistaken in thus divining the thinking of the District Court, I still consider that in the circumstances of this case divestiture was at least ordered prematurely. Determination whether that drastic remedy was required should have been postponed until the expiration of the trusteeship period so that the necessity for its application could then be judged in light of the effectiveness of the other sanctions of the decree. I recognize that various contingencies can be conjured up to support the view that divestiture, rather than trusteeship, holds the more solid promise of assuring the preservation of competition. Nevertheless I think that rejection of a continuance of the trusteeship in favor of divestiture should, in the peculiar setting of this case, be based on experience rather than speculative apprehension.

²The District Court put the matter in this way: "I don't charge them [Norris and Wirtz] with malicious intentional and moral wrongdoing, nor do I proceed to formulate the decree on such a basis. They are guilty, if anything, of a moral, prohibitive wrong when this Court handed down its opinion in [United States \[259\] v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236](#), [44] did it become known that professional boxing was even subject to the federal antitrust laws. In view [287] of this Court's earlier decisions in the baseball cases, Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U.S. 200, and Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356, I think it reasonable to say that in 1949 when this alleged conspiracy began most well-informed lawyers believed that professional boxing, like professional baseball, was beyond antitrust stricture. Hence the appellants had every reason to believe their actions were innocent when taken. Putting the matter somewhat differently, we should be slow in lending approval to the use of such a drastic remedy as this in a case where the appellants have never had the opportunity to demonstrate their willingness to comply with the law once they have learned that it applies to their activities. In my opinion, the thrust of this factor is not blunted by arguing, as the Court does, that appellants should voluntarily have done something to unscramble their relationships during the two and a half years that elapsed between the Court's decision in the original International [45] Boxing case and the entry of the present decree. That sort of squeeze play should not be expected of those already involved in a lawsuit.

[*268] Further, divestiture here is brought to bear upon a large investment much of which was acquired long before the conduct charged in this case began, and the balance of which was obtained prior to the announcement of the International Boxing decision. The "unlawful fruits" doctrine accordingly offers no justification for this divestiture. Although recognizing this to be true, the Court states that the Garden stock was nonetheless utilized as means of [*46] accomplishing the antitrust violations. But this is just another way of saying that divestiture is a necessary element of effective relief; it affords no independent justification for the employment of that remedy.

Lastly, the divestiture order reaches far beyond the subject matter of the action. It permanently removes Norris and Wirtz from all interest in the Garden, over 90% of whose activities are entirely unrelated to professional boxing.

Third. It is true, of course, that the trial court's considered judgment on what is necessary to dissipate the effects and prevent recurrence of an adjudged antitrust violation is entitled to much deference from this Court. But by the same token this Court, before it is asked to put its stamp of approval on such a drastic remedy as divestiture, is entitled to have a clear and unambiguous expression of the district court's reasoning in choosing such a course. Especially is this so where, as here, this Court is the sole reviewing authority and in consequence has not had the benefit of an intermediate review of the issues by a Court of Appeals. In my opinion this record leaves much to be desired in this regard. The most I can make of [*47] it, taking the case for divestiture most favorably to the Government, is that the District Court would have been justified in reserving that issue for consideration at the time the five-year trusteeship of the Norris and Wirtz stock expired. Certainly no adequate case for a present order of divestiture has been made out. In this view of [*269] the matter it becomes unnecessary to discuss at this time the various "options" alternative to divestiture which were rejected by the District Court.

DISSOLUTION.

I can find no adequate basis for [288] the order dissolving the two International Boxing Clubs. My difficulty with this aspect of the relief is sufficiently shown by the fact that, as I read the record, it would be permissible for Madison Square Garden and the Norris and Wirtz interests in Chicago to create new corporations carrying exactly the same name as [260] the two present organizations. The only justification offered by the Government for this aspect of the decree is that the two clubs were instrumentalities of the antitrust conspiracy and that their dissolution was but an expedient for insuring that all of their illegal agreements had been put to an end. [*48] But since all such agreements, both written and oral, are already canceled by other provisions of the decree, and since there is no suggestion that the sweeping relief granted by the District Court has any loopholes which would permit these organizations to function improperly, this justification is hardly convincing. In these circumstances dissolution appears to me to be not only punitive but futile, something not promotive of sound antitrust law enforcement.

I would remand the case to the District Court with instructions to modify its decree by striking the provisions for compulsory sale of the Norris and Wirtz stock in the Madison Square Garden Corporation, reserving the issue of which was in doubt as to whether it was even prohibitive at the time some of these acts were done, and serious doubt, but most people held it was not."

divestiture for further proceedings at the end of the five-year trusteeship period, and eliminating the requirement of dissolution of the two International Boxing Clubs.
