a private action for damages . . . may be barred on the grounds of the plaintiff's own culpability only where (1) as a direct result of his own actions, the plaintiff bears at least substantially equal responsibility for the violations he seeks to redress, and (2) preclusion of suit would not significantly interfere with the effective enforcement of [RICO] and the protection of the . . . public.

Bateman, 472 U.S. at 310-11. Both the Supreme Court and this court have cautioned against deciding such defenses in the absence of factual development. See id. at 311 n.21 ("We note, [*52] however, the inappropriateness of resolving the question of respondents' fault solely on the basis of the allegations set forth in the complaint."); Sullivan, 34 F.3d at 1109 ("Ultimately . . . these are factual questions for the jury . . .").

The defendants make a misplaced attempt to argue in favor of the more defendant-helpful in pari delicto defense by relying on Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, 110 S. Ct. 792 \(1990\). Tafflin, they urge, weakens the analogy of RICO to the Clayton Act, and, therefore, to the equal involvement defense. In Tafflin, the Court held that RICO did not vest exclusive jurisdiction in the federal courts where the language of the statute did not purport to do so and the legislative history did not show that Congress addressed the question. Id. at 460-62. The Court rejected the argument that it should derive such an exclusivity from the fact that actions under the Clayton Act may only be brought in federal court. Id. at 462-63. The analogy to the Clayton Act did not provide the answer because Congress was also [*583] presumed to have operated against a backdrop of well-established law governing when there was exclusive federal jurisdiction. Id. at 459-60. [*53] There is no such "judicial default rule" which operates in defendants' favor here. Cf. Landgraf v. U.S.I. Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 114 S. Ct. 1483, 1505, 128 L. Ed. 2d 229 \(1994\) (discussing judicial default rules in the context of retroactivity of statutes).

Similarly, there is no comfort for defendants in the Supreme Court's rejection in Sedima of application of the "antitrust injury" rule to RICO. "This is so because 'RICO injury' would [otherwise] be an unintelligible requirement, not because there is no parallel between the two statutes." Carter v. Berger, 777 F.2d 1173, 1176 \(7th Cir. 1985\) (noting the Court's remark in Sedima, 473 U.S. at 489-90 & n.8, that Congress relied on the analogy to antitrust).

Indeed, RICO was enacted in 1970, after the Perma Life decision, of which Congress was undoubtedly aware. The modelling of RICO on the Clayton Act was done against the backdrop of judicial recognition of an equal involvement defense. The piece of legislative history relied upon by defendants, to the extent it should be considered at all, may be equally read to support the proposition that Congress implicitly allowed an affirmative equal involvement defense as under [*54] the Clayton Act.

But defendants do have a point. The analogy to the Clayton Act is not perfect. Indeed, the American Bar Association report from which the civil RICO provisions emerged suggests that not all the accoutrements of the Clayton Act should be imported into RICO. See 115 Cong. Rec. 6995 (1969) (Report of A.B.A. Antitrust Section); Abrams, supra, § 1.4, at 25-26. This may be a situation where Congress did not explicitly contemplate the question and so congressional "intent" in the classic formulation simply does not exist. The courts then are left with the delicate task of providing the answer.

I very much doubt that the federal definition of "innocence" for purposes of the equal involvement defense would ordinarily involve reference to and incorporation of state law, as the majority asserts.<sup>18</sup> The Supreme Court did not <sup>18</sup> There may be situations, not present here, in which the state has such an exceptionally strong policy interest in the enforcement of its own laws that Congress would choose to accommodate that interest in the RICO enforcement scheme. This may be more true under RICO than other statutes in as much as Congress has referred to violations of state law in defining predicate offenses under 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\)\(A\). However, the recognition of an interest in enforcement is not the same as the recognition of an interest in a defense. The Rhode Island bribery and extortion statutes do not evidence such an overwhelming look to state law to define the defense in either Perma Life or Bateman, nor should we do so here. Nor has this court looked to state law to define the defense under the Clayton Act in the aftermath of Perma Life.

[**55] To say there is some form of affirmative defense like the equal involvement defense does not describe precisely the content of such a defense. Even the Supreme Court Justices in Perma Life did not agree on the content. See supra footnote 17. In the absence of factual findings in which to set the questions of the honing of such a defense, there is, and should be, reluctance to engage now in such refinement. The precision of any standard awaits further development. It is enough now to say that the positions at the extremities -- that any wrongdoing disables a plaintiff or that wrongdoing is irrelevant -- are untenable.

The equal involvement defense recognized under the Clayton Act and the Securities Act derives its contours from federal policy as recognized by federal statutes. There is no reason not to apply that paradigm to RICO.<sup>19</sup>

[**56] [*584] As to the claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, the plaintiffs have adequately alleged that the harm they suffered was caused by the extortionist policies and practices in which the town officials are claimed to have engaged. Again, there is no need to delve into the distinction between coercive extortion and bribery.

---

End of Document

---

interest in affording defendants an in pari delicto defense, even before reaching the issue of whether Congress would have wanted to import Rhode Island law into RICO.

<sup>19</sup> The district court was very troubled by the notion of rewarding people who pay bribes to public officials with RICO treble damages, whatever the circumstances of the payment. Roma, 906 F. Supp. at 82-83. That is certainly a reasonable concern. Policy arguments may be made both for and against such a result. In the antitrust field, the Supreme Court has noted that because of the "important public purposes" served by private suits, it is inappropriate to invoke "broad common-law barriers to relief." Perma Life, 392 U.S. at 138. Thus "the plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition." Id. at 139.

This strong enforcement rationale certainly is present in RICO, a statute intended to increase the arsenal of weapons striking at criminal activity. In addition, it may be inherently unfair to deny plaintiffs any ability to pursue a RICO claim where their fault is relatively small. An absolute "innocent victim" requirement would create such an undesirable imbalance.

Little Caesar Enters. v. Smith

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division

September 30, 1996, Decided ; October 2, 1996, FILED

93-40520, 93-40521

Reporter

172 F.R.D. 236 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21012 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,817

LITTLE CAESAR ENTERPRISES, INC., Plaintiff, vs. GARY G. SMITH, LINDA M. SMITH, BRIAN T. SMITH, AND SMITH FAMILY FOODS, INC., Defendants. GARY G. SMITH, LINDA M. SMITH, BRIAN T. SMITH, SMITH FAMILY FOODS, INC., JOHN W. HENNESSY, DANI L. HENNESSY, PIZZA FARM, INC., SHARON A. FIELDS, LCP OF LENOIR CITY, INC., LCP OF EAST NASHVILLE, INC., LCP OF CHAPMAN SQUARE, INC., AND LCP OF POWELL PLACE, INC., Plaintiffs, vs. LITTLE CAESAR ENTERPRISES, INC., BLUE LINE DISTRIBUTING, INC., AND LITTLE CAESAR NATIONAL ADVERTISING PROGRAM, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: [**1] Adopting Order of March 31, 1997, Reported at: 172 F.R.D. 236, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6989.

Core Terms

---

franchisees, buyers, products, distributors, tie-in, logoed, coercion, alternate, franchise, tie, tied product, seller, franchise agreement, supplier, damages, proofs, plaintiffs', prices, buy, class action, class certification, conditions, tying arrangement, announced, cases, class member, contractual, defendants', competitors, predominate

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

HN1 [] Parties, Joinder of Parties

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) contains four prerequisites that must be satisfied before a lawsuit can proceed as a class action. The Rule provides: (a) Prerequisites to a Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN2 Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b) requires for a class action that (2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or (3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3 Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The only issue before a court on a motion for class certification is whether plaintiff is asserting a claim, which, assuming its merit, will satisfy the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. In determining whether to certify a class, inquiry into the merits of plaintiffs' claims is inappropriate. A Rule 23 determination is wholly procedural and has nothing to do with whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail on the substantive merits of its claims. The particular merits of plaintiffs' claims are to be accepted as valid in considering a class certification motion under Rule 23. Nonetheless, the court must undertake an analysis of the issues and the nature of required proof at trial to determine whether the matters in dispute and the nature of plaintiffs' proofs are principally individual in nature or are susceptible of common proof equally applicable to all class members. Moreover, when a court is in doubt as to whether to certify a class action, it should err in favor of allowing a class.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

HN4 Parties, Joinder of Parties

The "impracticability" of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1) does not require impossibility, but only difficulty or inconvenience in joining all members of the class. The numerosity requirement is met when plaintiffs demonstrate that the number of potential class members is large, even if plaintiffs do not know the exact figure.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN5** Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

*Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)* also requires that the proposed class members present common questions of law and fact. The resolution of common issues must affect all or most of the class members. This criterion requires only some common issues of law or fact, not the predominance of common issues required by *Rule 23\(b\)\(3\)*.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN6** Class Actions, Class Members

Typicality exists when the class representative presents issues common to the class, and the representative's position on those issues is not antagonistic to the position of the other class members. Under this requirement, the interests of the class representative should be generally coextensive with those of the class members he or she seeks to represent. The typicality requirement is met if the plaintiff's claim arises from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of the other class members, and her or his claims are based on the same legal theory. Typicality may exist where there is a very strong similarity of legal theories, even if substantial factual distinctions exist between the named and unnamed class members.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

**HN7** Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The district court is given broad discretion in dealing with class actions under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. Rule 23\(c\)\(1\)* states that a class certification order under this subdivision may be conditional, and may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits. Affording plaintiffs the opportunity to provide such substitutes is the common practice in cases where, although the current named representatives are inadequate, adequate representatives are known and available as substitutes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN8** Prerequisites for Class Action, Adequacy of Representation

The fourth and final requirement of *Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)* is that the named plaintiff must fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class. This requirement has two prongs: the first concerns the zeal and competence of the named plaintiffs' legal representation, the second concerns conflicts of interest between the named plaintiffs and the class.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

In addition to proving the illegal tying arrangement, plaintiffs must also prove the impact of such a violation. It must be shown that the illegal tie caused harm to consumers of the tied product in the tied market and that this affected a substantial volume of commerce. The impact or the fact of damages is separate from proving the actual measure of damages for each class member. Liability and damages phases of litigation are generally bifurcated, and a class action on liability should not be avoided merely because the specific damage claims will need to be handled in individual trials. The class plaintiffs need only show that all suffered some loss in their business, and that there was a causal relation between the tying arrangement and that loss. There is no requirement that the loss be personal or unique to a plaintiff, and the fact of damages is different than a measure of individual damages for each specific plaintiff in the class.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

It is only when the buyer's freedom to choose a given product is restricted that the tying doctrine comes into play: so long as the buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem. Where plaintiff franchisees place no reliance on express contractual tie-ins, each, individually, must prove that his purchases were coerced as an element of establishing a prima facie case of illegal tying.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying claim consists solely of three elements. Assuming economic power over the tying product and a not insubstantial amount of commerce, the plaintiff need only show that a seller conditioned the sale of one product (the tying product) on the purchase of another product (the tied product). Once a plaintiff proves that a defendant has conditioned the sale of one product upon the purchase of another there is no requirement that he prove that his purchase was coerced by the seller's requirement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Coercion is not a separate element, but may be a necessary element of proof implicit in proving that there was an actual tie of one product to the sale of another. In the absence of an express contractual written tie, or in the absence of similar contract clauses which, when considered with other common proofs extrinsic to the contract, have the practical economic effect of precluding the purchase of the tied product from a competing third party source, plaintiffs may be required to resort to proof of coercion based on specific instances involving each individual plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

HN14 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where there is an express contractual tying arrangement, or where the practical economic effects flowing from the contract clauses and other common proofs establish a tie, individual proof of coercion is not necessary, and common proof of the tie-in can be made. If plaintiffs wish to establish a tie by common proofs, they should be precluded from introducing individual evidence of specific threats or specific instances of defendants' refusal to grant approval that would be necessary for an individual plaintiff to buy from a third party source.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Coercion is implied where a contract explicitly requires the tie because a contract is backed by the force of law. Coercion remains a necessary element of an unlawful tying arrangement but it is inferred on a class-wide basis; a contractual provision is coercive in and of itself because it is backed by the force of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Defenses

It is not a legitimate defense for the defendant to prove the plaintiff would have bought defendant's tied product even if there had been no tie. While the quality and relative price of defendant's product may be relevant to the fact of damages and its individual measurement, tying is a per se antitrust violation because it deprives the buyer of free choice in a market of competitors. Such restraint of free market forces is presumed to have an effect on market quality and more commonly on market price of the defendant's product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

While not a separate element of the prima facie case, proof of coercion may be necessary to prove the first element of a tying claim -- that the sale of one product is in fact conditioned on the purchase of another -- in the absence of an express contractual tie.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Franchise Agreements

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Conveyances, Franchises

While the district court's ruling on a motion for class certification is not to consider the merits of the case or even the sufficiency of the evidence as would be done in a motion for summary judgment, it is worth reviewing some of the proffered evidence to determine if it is common to the class in order to help make a judgment whether the common evidence predominates over the evidence that need be individual.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The commonality of proofs of a tie-in is an easy issue where there is an express contractual tie or an announced tie-in. The inability to prove a tie-in by the express or direct application of the contract or by a defendant's announcement will make the proofs far more complicated. This will often, if not generally, require use of individual proof of coercion, particularly where salesmanship, refusals, pressure, or subtle threats are involved. Yet, in evaluating whether common questions of law or fact predominate, the critical question under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) is not whether the proofs are external to the contract terms, nor whether they are complex instead of simple proofs. Rather, the critical question for Rule 23(b)(3) is whether the method of proving coercion involves facts -- even if complex and external to the contract -- that are predominately common to the class and not individual.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The important inquiry centers on the buyer's state of mind and whether the buyer was forced or coerced into making the purchase of the tied product by the seller's conduct. Yet, this does not render irrelevant the nature of the seller's action and intent. "Forcing" and "coercion" mean something less than that the buyer would not have bought from the defendant but for the alleged illegal act. Even if the buyer would have bought from the defendant without the illegal act, an act is still an illegal tie if it created an impermissible added inducement to purchase defendant's product B, or impermissibly altered the market and competitive capabilities of alternate sellers to lessen or remove altogether the consumer's choice in choosing a competitor's product.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The need to compute individual damages will not prevent class certification on issues of liability.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

172 F.R.D. 236, *236L<sup>A</sup>1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21012, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN22[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Adequacy of Representation

In addition to the requirements under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) of numerosity, common questions, typicality, and fair and adequate representation, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(2\) requires the plaintiffs to show that the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN23[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The defendants' allegedly wrongful conduct need not be directed at or damaging to every member of the class for a class action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(2\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Superiority

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN24[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(2\) requires a showing that the party opposing the class acted on grounds generally applicable to the class. Unlike Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\), it does not require the court to determine the predominance of common questions of law and fact or the superiority of class action treatment of adjudication.

Counsel: For LITTLE CAESAR ENTERPRISES, INCORPORATED, plaintiff (93-CV-40520): Irwin M. Alterman, Kemp, Klein, Troy, MI. Alan C. Harnisch, Harnisch & Hohauser, Bingham Farms, MI. Stephen D. Susman, Susman Godfrey, Houston, TX.

For GARY G. SMITH, defendant (93-CV-40520): Paul J. O'Reilly, Charles E. Turnbull, O'Reilly, Rancilio, Sterling Heights, MI. Richard A. Lockridge, Lockridge, Grindal, Minneapolis, MN. Shawn M. Perry, Perry, Perry, Minneapolis, MN. Robert J. Schmit, Schatz, Paquin, Minneapolis, MN. Richard J. Rodney, Mound, MN. For LINDA M. SMITH, defendant (93-CV-40520): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). Robert J. Schmit, (See above). For BRIAN T. SMITH, defendant (93-CV-40520): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). Robert J. Schmit, (See above). For SMITH FAMILY FOODS, INCORPORATED, defendant (93-CV-40520): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). Robert J. Schmit, (See above).

For GARY G. SMITH, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, Charles E. Turnbull, O'Reilly, Rancilio, Sterling Heights, [**2] MI. Gary A. Austerman, Christopher A. McElgunn, Klenda, Mitchell, Wichita, KS. Richard A. Lockridge, Lockridge, Grindal, Minneapolis, MN. Shawn M. Perry, Perry, Perry, Minneapolis, MN. Robert J. Schmit, Schatz, Paquin, Minneapolis, MN. Richard J. Rodney, Mound, MN. For LINDA M. SMITH, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). Robert J. Schmit, (See above). For BRIAN T. SMITH, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). Robert J. Schmit, (See above). For SMITH FAMILY FOODS, INCORPORATED, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). Robert J. Schmit, (See above). For JOHN W. HENNESSY, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). [**3] Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). For DANI L. HENNESSY, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). For PIZZA FARM, INCORPORATED, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). For SHARON A. FIELDS, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). For LCP OF LENOIR CITY, INCORPORATED, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). For LCP OF EAST NASHVILLE, INCORPORATED, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). For LCP OF CHAPMAN SQUARE, INCORPORATED, [**4] plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above). For LCP OF POWELL PLACE, INCORPORATED, plaintiff (93-CV-40521): Paul J. O'Reilly, (See above), Charles E. Turnbull, (See above). Gary A. Austerman, (See above), Christopher A. McElgunn, (See above). Richard A. Lockridge, (See above).

For LITTLE CAESAR ENTERPRISES, INCORPORATED, defendant (93-CV-40521): Irwin M. Alterman, Kemp, Klein, Troy, MI. Alan C. Harnisch, Harnisch & Hohauser, Bingham Farms, MI. Stephen D. Susman, Susman Godfrey, Houston, TX. For LITTLE CAESAR INTERNATIONAL, INCORPORATED, defendant (93-CV-40521): Irwin M. Alterman, (See above). Alan C. Harnisch, (See above). Stephen D. Susman, (See above). For BLUE LINE DISTRIBUTING, INCORPORATED, defendant (93-CV-40521): Irwin M. Alterman, (See above). Alan C. Harnisch, (See above). Stephen D. Susman, (See above). For LITTLE CAESAR NATIONAL ADVERTISING PROGRAM, INCORPORATED, defendant (93-CV-40521): Irwin M. Alterman, (See above). Alan C. Harnisch, (See above). Stephen D. Susman, (See above).

For MORLEY CANDY MAKERS WEST, INCORPORATED, [**5] respondent (93-CV-40521): Linda C. Scheuerman, Julia F. Blakeslee, Jaffe, Raitt, Detroit, MI.

For CENTRAL COATED PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED, movant (93-CV-40521): Daniel M. Share, Barris, Sott, Detroit, MI. Leonard W. Stauffenger, Stark & Knoll, Akron, OH.

Judges: STEVEN D. PEPE, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE. HONORABLE PAUL V. GADOLA

Opinion by: STEVEN D. PEPE

Opinion

---

[*238] REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION ON PLAINTIFFS' SECOND MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

[Corrected Version]

I. Background Facts:

The current motion involves only the antitrust tie-in class in the second of these two consolidated cases. The Smith plaintiffs (hereinafter referred to as "Smiths" or "plaintiffs") are current franchisees of Little Caesar Enterprises ("LCE") who have owned and operated three carry-out-only Little Caesar restaurant franchises in the Jacksonville, Florida, area since 1983. The plaintiffs bring this action seeking damages and declaratory and injunctive relief on behalf of themselves and a proposed class for alleged [*239] antitrust tie-in violations by defendants. From 1989 to date, the relevant class period in dispute, Blue Line Distributing, Inc. ("Blue Line"), a wholly owned subsidiary of Little Caesar [*6] Enterprises, Inc. ("LCE"), has sold to LCE franchisees virtually all goods necessary to operate their Little Caesar Restaurants.

Little Caesar was founded in Michigan in 1959 by Michael Ilitch, who began to franchise his "Little Caesar" restaurants in 1962. There are presently in excess of 500 franchisees nationwide operating over 3,000 carry-out type restaurants. LCE also has a substantial number of company-owned outlets comprising approximately 25% of the carry-out units. Blue Line purchases all of the items used in Little Caesar's restaurants from producers and suppliers and then re-sells them to LCE franchisees making a single delivery of the multiple goods. Most of these items are produced to meet LCE specifications. These items include foodstuffs, beverage products, sign equipment, paper products, salad dressing, other condiments with LCE's proprietary symbols and marks, and other items. Blue Line initially had only one warehouse in Farmington Hills, Michigan, and thus was limited in the number of midwestern franchisees to whom it could distribute goods. Other distributors were approved by LCE in various regions throughout the country.

In the middle 1980's, Blue Line began to [*7] expand the number of its distribution warehouses throughout the country. The Smith plaintiffs allege that LCE and Blue Line replaced other distributors with the newly opened Blue Line distribution warehouses. They allege that by August 1989 defendants had eliminated the majority of third party distributors servicing Little Caesar franchisees and thereafter eliminated virtually all of the remaining distributors in the continental United States except for two remote areas in Idaho that Blue Line did not consider economically feasible to service.

Plaintiffs accuse defendants of unlawfully tying sales of the above-noted goods from Blue Line to the sale and continued operation of the Little Caesar franchises. They allege that the defendants have used Little Caesar's inherent monopoly power derived from its copyrights, trademark, service names, and trade names to impose contractual and other uniform restrictions on the distribution of the various goods to franchisees, thereby eliminating the possibility of renewed competition with Blue Line by other food distributors.

Plaintiffs allege that LCE franchisees who have invested substantial funds in their restaurants and signed long-term franchise [*8] agreements were effectively "locked in" to the LCE franchise system. While the franchise agreements provide to each franchisee the right to request that LCE approve an alternate distributor of products made to LCE specifications, plaintiffs accuse defendants of a pattern of wrongfully refusing requests for approval of alternative sources of distribution other than Blue Line. In Judge Gadola's Memorandum Opinion and Order (Little Caesar Enterprises, Inc. v. Smith, 895 F. Supp. 884 \(E.D. Mich. 1995\)), he denied class certification of a national class of Little Caesar franchisees who asserted that defendants had been involved in a tie-in arrangement orchestrated by a master plan to deny entry into the marketplace of approved alternate distributors to Blue Line Distributing, Inc. Because the bulk of the franchisees had contracts in which they could seek an alternate distributor of paper products and other goods, the Court found that there was not an express contractual tie-in arrangement. Thus, following a long line of cases that I analyzed in my earlier Report and Recommendation, Judge Gadola determined that individual questions for the various class members would predominate over [*9] common questions of law and fact, and, thus, class treatment was not appropriate. He also granted summary judgment on the tie-in claim against the named plaintiffs who had contractual rights to seek an alternate distributor of all items distributed by Blue Line other than proprietary products.<sup>1</sup>

[*240] LCE in June 1989 entered into a licensing agreement that gave Blue Line the exclusive right to distribute logoed products to franchisees. In Judge Gadola's earlier opinion, he determined that this 1989 licensing agreement applied [*10] only to those items that bear the Little Caesar registered mark, such as items on logoed paper products (bags, cups, napkins), packaging, and condiments such as salad dressing which a Little Caesar's franchise provides its customers in the sale of its food products. Defendants assert that well in excess of 90% of the food products and other items sold by Blue Line to a franchisee involve items other than these logoed products. Plaintiffs dispute these figures. Nonetheless, plaintiffs contend that because the profit margin for a distributor on logoed products is greater than other items, other potential distributors cannot effectively compete with Blue Line if they are not given access to these logoed products.

This 1989 exclusive licensing agreement with Blue Line was initially kept secret from the franchisees and only came to light several years later. For franchisees renewing their franchises or entering into new franchises after the middle of 1990, the Franchise Agreement contained restrictive language not permitting them to seek an alternate source of supply of logoed paper supplies and signage.<sup>2</sup>

[**11] These logoed products are essential to the operation of a Little Caesar franchise. Plaintiffs are contending that defendants are using this 1989 exclusive Blue Line licensing right on logoed paper, combined with the new 1990 contractual limits on franchisees seeking alternate distributors of logoed products, to preclude alternate sources of supply and competition on these logoed items. Plaintiffs assert that the defendants' denial of access to these logoed products is also intended to make it less profitable or more burdensome for alternate distributors of franchise supplies to enter the market. In sum, plaintiffs argue that the franchisees were squeezed into buying logoed items and supplies from Blue Line at super-competitive or above-market prices because of defendants' illegal actions to preclude competition.

In reaching its decision denying class certification and granting partial summary judgment, the Court left open the question as to whether there might be a "basis for certification of a national class action [involving] the franchise agreements signed after mid-1990 [that] prevent franchisees from requesting an alternate distributor of logoed products." Id. at [*12] 905. The Court noted: "It could be argued that the post mid-1990 agreements, combined with the 1989 exclusive licensing agreement, evidence an express contractual tie-in of logoed products which could receive class treatment." Thus, the Court did not grant summary judgment on the tie-in claim involving the mid-1990 Franchise Agreements.

The Smith plaintiffs thereafter filed this modified motion for a class certification on the surviving tying claims pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) (for damages) and 23(b)(2) (for injunctive and declaratory). They define the proposed class as:

All franchisees of Little Caesar Enterprises, Inc. ("LCE") who, as of the date of the filing of the Complaint, operated Type C carry-out Little Caesar restaurants in the Continental United States, and who have operated at least one restaurant pursuant to a franchise agreement which was executed, renewed or modified subsequent to mid-1990 to restrict franchisees from requesting alternate suppliers of "signage and other products bearing the Little Caesar name and Proprietary marks." The class excludes defendants, any persons who are not franchisees as of the filing of the Complaint, who are current [**13] officers or [**241] directors of LCE or its subsidiaries, members of their immediate families, any entity in which any excluded person has a controlling interest, the legal representatives, heir, successors or assigns of any such excluded party, and the affiliates and co-conspirators of any defendant.

---

<sup>1</sup> These included special LCE ingredients such as Pan Pan Dough and special spice mixes. Plaintiffs are not challenging Blue Line's exclusive distribution of these items. These are different from the "logoed products" involved in this motion. These "logoed products" are not a secret part of the ultimate product being sold and consumed by customers, but cups, boxes, and packaging with the famous Little Caesar figure on them that can be produced to quality and design specifications set by LCE.

<sup>2</sup> The amended Franchise Agreement prevented franchisees from seeking alternate suppliers from "signage or other products bearing the Little Caesar name and Proprietary marks." Lockridge Declaration, Exhibit 12, referring to § 7 of the Little Caesar Franchise Agreement of form AC(8/90). While signage is covered by this agreement, it is a one-time purchase of an outdoor sign that requires supplier expertise, and this opinion will use the term "logoed paper products" throughout as dealing with the relevant limitation in these post mid-1990 franchise agreements.

Plaintiffs' Brief at 1-2.

II. Class Certification on Plaintiff's Tying Claims:

A. Background Law:

1. Class Actions:

HN1[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) contains four prerequisites that must be satisfied before a lawsuit can proceed as a class action. The Rule provides:

(a) Prerequisites to a Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

In addition to the requirements of Rule 23\(a\), HN2[] plaintiffs must demonstrate that their case falls within the guidelines of Rule 23\(b\). [**14] That Rule provides:

(b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:

* * * *

(2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or

(3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

[**15] In re Consumers Power Co. Securities Litigation, 105 F.R.D. 583, 600 \(E.D. Mich. 1985\).

HN3[] The only issue before a court on a motion for class certification is "whether plaintiff is asserting a claim, which, assuming its merit, will satisfy the requirements of Rule 23 . . ." Eggleston v. Chicago Journeymen Plumbers' Local Union No. 130, U.A., 657 F.2d 890, 895 \(7th Cir. 1981\), cert. denied sub nom. Chicago Journeymen Plumbers' Local Union No. 130, U.A. v. Eggleston, 455 U.S. 1017, 102 S. Ct. 1710, 72 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1982). In determining whether to certify a class, inquiry into the merits of plaintiffs' claims is inappropriate. Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline, 417 U.S. 156, 177, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732, 94 S. Ct. 2140 \(1974\); Weathers v. Peters Realty Corp., 499 F.2d 1197, 1201 \(6th Cir. 1974\). A Rule 23 determination is wholly procedural and has nothing to do with whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail on the substantive merits of its claims. Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 901 \(9th Cir. 1976\).

1975), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 816, 50 L. Ed. 2d 75, 97 S. Ct. 57 (1976). The particular merits of plaintiffs' claims are to be accepted as valid in considering a class certification motion under Rule 23.

[**16] Nonetheless, the Court must undertake an analysis of the issues and the nature of required proof at trial to determine whether the matters in dispute and the nature of plaintiffs' proofs are principally individual in nature or are susceptible of common proof equally applicable to all class members. See, e.g., Denver v. American Oil Co., 53 F.R.D. 620 (D.Colo. 1971). Moreover, when a court is in doubt as to whether to certify a class action, it should err in favor of [*242] allowing a class. Eisenberg v. Gagnon, 766 F.2d 770, 785 (3d Cir. 1985), cert. denied sub nom. Weinstein v. Eisenberg, 474 U.S. 946, 88 L. Ed. 2d 290, 106 S. Ct. 342, 106 S. Ct. 343 (1985); Horton v. Goose Creek Independent School Dist., 690 F.2d 470, 487 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1207, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1387, 103 S. Ct. 3536 (1983); Esplin v. Hirschi, 402 F.2d 94, 101 (10th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 928, 22 L. Ed. 2d 459, 89 S. Ct. 1194 (1969).

It is clear that the Smith plaintiffs satisfy the first two prerequisites of Rule 23(a). Rule 23(a)(1) requires that the class be so large that joinder of all members would be "impracticable." HN4 [↑] The "impracticability" of Rule 23(a)(1) does not require impossibility, but only [**17] difficulty or inconvenience in joining all members of the class. Jordan v. Global Natural Resources, Inc., 102 F.R.D. 45, 51 (S.D. Ohio 1984) ("satisfaction of the numerosity requirement does not require that joinder is impossible, but only that plaintiffs will suffer a strong litigational hardship or inconvenience if joinder is required."); 4 H. Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions ("Newberg"), § 18.03 (3d ed. 1992). The numerosity requirement is met when plaintiffs demonstrate that the number of potential class members is large, even if plaintiffs do not know the exact figure. See Piel v. National Semiconductor Corp., 86 F.R.D. 357, 365 (E.D.Pa. 1980). Based on an earlier submission by defendants, as of September 30, 1993, there were 244 franchisees that had only the mid-1990 Franchise Agreement and 214 franchisees, like Gary Smith, who had a mixture of old franchises on some outlets and new 1990 franchises on other outlets. Thus, plaintiffs have made the necessary showing to meet the requirement of numerosity.

HN5 [↑] Rule 23(a) also requires that the proposed class members present common questions of law and fact. The resolution of common issues must affect all or most of the [**18] class members. Jenkins v. Raymark Industries, Inc., 782 F.2d 468, 469 (5th Cir. 1986). This criterion requires only some common issues of law or fact, not the predominance of common issues required by Rule 23(b)(3). This requirement is satisfied here.

The common questions of law and fact presented on the tying claim include the following issues:

- a. Whether LCE has market power in Little Caesar's franchises;
- b. Whether defendants imposed an illegal tying arrangement on franchisees by a combination of the 1990 Franchise Agreement and Blue Line exclusive licensing agreement;
- c. Whether defendants used their market power over LCE logoed products to exclude competitive distributors of logoed products ("the narrow tie-in");
- d. Whether defendants used their market power over LCE logoed products to exclude competitive distributors of all other franchise foodstuffs and supplies ("the expanded tie-in");
- e. Whether, as a result of defendants' illegal tying arrangement, defendants charged prices for logoed products higher than the prices that would have prevailed absent the illegal conduct, and thus whether all class plaintiffs suffered the "fact of damages."
- f. Whether, [**19] as a result of defendants' illegal tying arrangement, defendants charged prices for some or all other franchise foodstuffs and supplies higher than the prices that would have prevailed absent the illegal conduct.
- g. Whether defendants' anticompetitive conduct affected interstate commerce, and if so, to what degree.

The typicality requirement of Rule 23(a) is somewhat more difficult, but I believe it is also fulfilled. HN6 [↑] "Typicality exists when the class representative presents issues common to the class, and the representative's position on those issues is not antagonistic to the position of the other class members." Consumers Power Co., 105 F.R.D. at 602. Under this requirement, the interests of the class representative should be generally coextensive with those of the class members he or she seeks to represent. The typicality requirement is met if the plaintiff's claim "arises from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of the other class members, and her [*243] or his claims are based on the same legal theory." Newberg, § 18.08. Typicality may exist where there is a very strong similarity of legal theories, even if substantial factual [**20] distinctions exist between the named and unnamed class members. Appleyard v. Wallace, 754 F.2d 955, 958 \(11th Cir. 1985\).

In the present case, the Smith plaintiffs base their claim on a nationwide course of conduct by defendants which affected all class members. The class representatives' claims arise from precisely the same events, legal documents, and consequences and legal theories affecting all franchisees -- the illegal tying scheme imposed by defendants on the franchisees.

Defendants argue that because Gary Smith in the spring of 1992 wrote for the specifications for paper supplies and asserted his position that he could seek an alternate supplier of logoed goods under his mid-1990 Franchise Agreement, this should bar his being a typical class representative and also show this was an individual and not a common issue of fact. In an April 7, 1992, response, LCE's Director of Quality Assurance stated:

Please note that no specifications have been included for logoed items, such as pizza bags, as these items may only be purchased from Blue Line Distributing, Inc.

Smith again wrote for the Approved Supplier List for all items, including paper goods. In response [**21] to this second request, David Deal wrote on May 7, 1992, quoting the restriction in the mid-1990 Franchise Agreement to "help clarify your 'understanding' of my franchise agreement." (The quotation marks around "understanding" could be interpreted by a jury to indicate an incredulity about Smith's asserted belief as to what the Franchise Agreement clearly said.)

Please be advised that Blue Line is the sole approved supplier of paper products containing the Little Caesar name or proprietary marks. It is my understanding that under the Franchise Agreement you do not have the right to request that any other suppliers be approved for those products.

Altermann Declaration. Exh. 4.

Smith wrote back on May 15, 1992, that the Franchise clause allowing a franchisee to purchase goods "including paper goods as approved by LITTLE CAESAR" from any source approved by LCE gave him the right. He asserted that if Blue Line were "the sole distributor of paper products," was there a "monopoly and perhaps illegal tying arrangement?" Smith repeated his earlier request that AmeriServ be approved as a distributor.

Defendants argue that if the tie-in claim is based on the mid-1990 Franchise [**22] Agreement forcing a state of mind in franchisees that they could not seek an alternate distributor other than Blue Line for logoed goods, Smith's letter shows he did not have that state of mind, at least until after Deal's May 7, response. Thus, they claim Smith is not typical.

Defendants also contend that the contract must be ambiguous and thus requires extrinsic evidentiary input on the intent of the parties (obviously a question that could require individual and not common proofs). I do not find any ambiguity or incompatibility between the contract clauses. The mid-1990 Franchise Agreement makes it clear that the franchisee can purchase logoed goods from an alternate source if one is approved other than Blue Line. If no other distributor of logoed goods is approved, however, the franchisee cannot ask that an alternate distributor of these goods be approved. Mr. Deal's response is a correct interpretation of the unambiguous contract he had drafted and a clear articulation of Blue Line's position. Whether Mr. Smith really believed his assertions or these were merely tactical assertions made in the hope they would get Blue Line to relent or clearly articulate its position so Smith [**23] could accuse Blue Line of antitrust violations, which he did in his next letter, does not seem a critical issue.

The critical question is what the Franchise Agreement says and what a reasonable franchisee would understand it to mean. If defendants have demonstrated Gary Smith is unreasonable, maybe he is not typical. Whether Gary Smith really believed or [*244] feigned belief that he could demand what his Franchise Agreement clearly and expressly precluded him from demanding is not the centerpiece of the antitrust question this Court must resolve. Deal's response made clear that Gary Smith, like all post-mid-1990 franchisees, was in a market with a single approved supplier of logoed products (Blue Line), and that the Franchise Agreement and the defendants were not going to allow such franchisees to request an alternate supplier of logoed products. Smith is one of these franchisees and knew of the constraints on him at least after May 7, 1992.

I believe Gary Smith's claim is typical for purposes of Rule 26(a)(3). The other issue is whether Gary Smith, who owned franchises with both pre and post-mid-1990 Franchise Agreements should represent purported class members who only have post-mid-1990 [**24] Franchise Agreements. It is possible the Court could grant summary judgment against these "hybrid" franchise holders who have both pre and post-mid-1990 Franchise Agreements. This could eliminate Gary Smith's tie-in claim on the mid-1990 Franchise Agreement and leave those with only mid-1990 Franchise Agreements without a representative.

While I do not believe it to be essential at this time, and do not recommend it, if the Court determines Gary Smith is not typical or does not adequately represent franchisees with solely post-mid-1990 Franchise Agreements, the Court could give plaintiffs a fixed and limited time to come forward with a substitute class representative and, if one is not produced, refuse to certify the class. In other words, the Court may condition the class certification upon plaintiffs' production of an adequate representative within a fixed period of time.<sup>3</sup>

[**25] HN8 [↑] The fourth and final requirement of Rule 23\(a\) is that the named plaintiff must fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class. This requirement has two prongs: the first concerns the zeal and competence of the named plaintiffs' legal representation, the second concerns conflicts of interest between the named plaintiffs and the class. In this case, defendants have not challenged that plaintiffs are represented by competent counsel who have experience in this type of litigation. Gary Smith has also demonstrated a strong and indeed tenacious interest in taking an active role in the litigation and in vigorously protecting the interests of the entire class. He has repeatedly come from Florida to Michigan for important motion hearings even when it was clear his presence was not needed. Few could argue that Gary Smith is the leader of this crusade to end Blue Line's near-monopoly on distribution to Little Caesar franchises. As discussed above, the interests of the Smith plaintiffs generally are not in conflict with those of the class on the tying claim. Their interests in establishing the illegal nature of the defendants' conduct coincide with those of the proposed class.

[**26] The most difficult issue in this motion, as with the prior class certification motion, is whether, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\), the plaintiffs' common issues of fact predominate over individual issues of fact. Additional background on the law of tying and its case [*245] law development under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) is necessary to analyze plaintiffs' proposed methods of proving both the alleged illegal tying and the impact of that tying on the class members (i.e. the "fact of damages" as a consequence of the alleged wrong).

2. Illegal Tying:

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2079 \(1992\), elaborated on the elements of a prima facie tying case:

HN9 [↑] A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." *Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States*, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 518, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 \(1958\). Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has "appreciable economic [**27] power" in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market. *Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp.*, 394 U.S. 495, 503, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 1258, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 \(1969\).

<sup>3</sup> HN7 [↑] This Court is given broad discretion in dealing with class actions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. Rule 23\(c\)\(1\) states that "[A class certification] order under this subdivision may be conditional, and may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits." Carpenter v. Stephen F. Austin State University, 706 F.2d 608, rehg. denied, 712 F.2d 1416 \(5th Cir. 1983\), allowed substitution of adequate class representatives for representatives found to be inadequate during the course of the class claims. Affording plaintiffs the opportunity to provide such substitutes is the common practice in cases where, although the current named representatives are inadequate, adequate representatives are known and available as substitutes. Davis v. Thornburgh, 903 F.2d 212, 233 (3rd Cir.) (Becker, CJ, concurring in part and dissenting in part), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 970 \(1990\); see also, Hanzley v. Blue Cross of Western New York, 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9308, Unpub. op. No. CIV-86-35E, 1989 WL 39427 (W.D.N.Y. 1989) (copy attached). Thus, this Court could permit a substitute class representative if it becomes necessary. Because any substitute class representative was covered in the earlier motion for class certification and by this motion, the statute of limitations has been tolled for substantial periods during this litigation and will continue to be tolled if this proposed class is certified. Wright, Miller & Kane, 7B Federal Practice & Procedure: Civil 2d at §§ 1791, 1994.

See also, *Bell v. Cherokee Aviation Corp.*, 660 F.2d 1123, 1127 \(6th Cir. 1981\) (citing *Fortner Enterprises v. U.S. Steel Corp.*, 394 U.S. 495, 499, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 \(1969\), ("Fortner I") and *Northern Pac. Ry. Co., supra, at 6*).

3. Damages -- the Fact of Damages v. Individual Damages:

HN10 In addition to proving the illegal tying arrangement, plaintiffs must also prove the impact of such a violation. It must be shown that the illegal tie caused harm to consumers of product B in the tied market and that this affected a substantial volume of commerce.

The impact or the fact of damages is separate from proving the actual measure of damages for each class member. Liability and damages phases of litigation are generally bifurcated, and a class action on liability should not be avoided merely because the specific damage claims will need to be handled in individual trials.<sup>4</sup>

[**28] The class plaintiffs need only show that all suffered some loss in their business, and that there was a causal relation between the tying arrangement and that loss. *Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp.*, 561 F.2d 434, 454 \(3d Cir. 1977\), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086, 55 L. Ed. 2d 791, 98 S. Ct. 1280 (1978). The court noted particularly that there was no requirement that the loss be personal or unique to a plaintiff, and that the fact of damages was different than a measure of individual damages for each specific plaintiff in the class. The fact of damages could be made on a common basis so long as the common proof adequately demonstrates some damage to each individual. Whether or not fact of damage can be proven on a common basis therefore depends upon the circumstances of each case.

*561 F.2d at 454*. It noted on the facts of that case:

If the price structure in the industry is such that nationwide the conspiratorially affected prices at the wholesale level fluctuated within a range which, though different in different regions, was higher in all regions than the range which would have existed in all regions under competitive conditions, it would be clear [**29] that all members of the class suffered some damage, notwithstanding that there would be variations among all dealers as to the extent of their damage.

Under such circumstances, proof on a common basis would be appropriate. *561 F.2d at 455*. Nor is the fact that there will be uncertainty [*246] later in the individual measure of damages fatal to common proof of the fact of damages so long as it can be clearly shown that the illegal behavior of defendants did cause some damage in fact to each class member.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 2d at § 1781, notes:

In this connection it uniformly has been held that differences among the members as to the amount of damages incurred does not mean that a class action would be inappropriate. Rather, the question of damages can be severed from that of liability and tried on an individual basis. Allowing split proceedings furthers the *Rule 23* purpose of promoting judicial economy . . . .

(Footnote omitted.)

<sup>5</sup> See, e.g., *Story Parchment v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co.*, 282 U.S. 555, 562, 75 L. Ed. 544, 51 S. Ct. 248 \(1931\):

The rule which precludes recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect of their amount.

Defendants argue that the damages or fact of damage issue is too complicated for class treatment, and that Bogosian [**30] and other cases are flawed in their reasoning. I find no precedent in this circuit that accepts this argument. The gestalt of much of defendants' argument is an attempt to make this case appear overwhelmingly complicated and thereby remove the class action tool from plaintiffs' hands. Simple express tie-ins do not come to federal courts today because they are too easily detected. Without prejudging the merits of this case, if plaintiffs are correct on their claims, then the complexity of the tie-in scheme and its long-undetected duration--which is the result of its covert, complex and subtle dimension--are the causes of any complexity on liability or on the actual measure of damages. If it is ultimately proven that defendants violated the Sherman Act, it seems unfair and ironic that the party who caused the complexity on liability and damages should benefit from such acts by disarming the plaintiffs and the Court of the most efficient and effective tool for resolving the issues. I believe defendants' complexity arguments are exaggerated, should not intimidate or overwhelm this Court, and should not prevail.

*4. Is Coercion an Element of a Tying Claim, and Is It Amenable to Common [**31] Proofs?*

In the present case, there exist several questions regarding the extent to which coercion of the franchisees must be proven. Plaintiffs assert that proof of coercion is not a separate and essential element of a tie-in prima facie case. Defendants contend that it is either a separate element or a necessary part of the proof on the issue whether two products are actually tied when there is not an explicit tie-in in the franchise contract. Because there is no clear and express tie-in of the LCE franchise with the foodstuffs and supplies, or even with the logoed products in this case, defendants argue that coercion must be proven, and such proofs must be made on an individual basis, i.e., there must be evidence that each franchisee felt that it was forced to buy the "tied products" from Blue Line in order to maintain its Little Caesar franchise (the "tying product"). Defendants note that part of plaintiffs' claim that the Blue Line exclusive license over logoed products precluded purchase of other foodstuffs and products from an alternate supplier is based on the asserted preference of franchisees for "one-stop" shopping and their aversion to having multiple suppliers delivering [**32] different products to the outlet at different times. Defendants contend that such preference for one-stop shopping varies among the franchisees and would necessitate individual proofs. Even though plaintiffs assert that they will use common proofs on such preference by calling only a limited number of representative franchisees to testify to this preference, defendants assert that they can call in rebuttal a parade of individual franchisees who are willing to take more than one delivery from various distributors each week. Plaintiffs argue that if coercion must be separately proven to show a tie-in, it is amenable to common or class-wide proofs, and thus common proofs "predominate" over individual proofs and Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) is satisfied.

a. The Third Circuit Analysis:

Because the Sixth Circuit case law on coercion as a separate element of tying and on when it is amenable to common proofs is incomplete, it is worth analyzing these two issues and their effect upon class certification as they developed in the Third Circuit, which has undertaken the most thorough and helpful analysis of these issues. In addition, the recent (1996) analysis by Professors Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge [**33] in their treatise [*247] provides helpful insights and warnings of common judicial missteps and confusions.<sup>6</sup>

The Eastern District of Pennsylvania, in *Ungar v. Dunkin' Donuts of America, Inc.*, 68 F.R.D. 65 \(E.D. Pa. 1975\), rev'd, 531 F.2d 1211 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 823, 50 L. Ed. 2d 84, 97 S. Ct. 74 (1976), held that coercion was not a separate element of proof necessary to establish an illegal tie-in. Ungar involved Dunkin' Donuts' alleged tie-in of real estate, equipment, signs, and supplies to a Dunkin' Donuts franchise. Dunkin' Donuts offered what was called a "turnkey" franchise in which it bought or rented real estate, completely outfitted a Dunkin' Donuts retail outlet, and then provided it to a "franchisee" who merely had to "turn the key" in order to be in business. The district court noted that several of these franchisees could [**34] not afford to acquire their own real estate, build their own shop, or buy equipment independently, and many of them never considered dealing with anybody but Dunkin'

*Id.* at 92-92 n.8.

<sup>6</sup> Areeda, Hovenkamp, and Elhauge, *Antitrust Law*, Vol. X, *An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application*, (Little, Brown & Co. 1996).

Donuts. Several franchisees acknowledged that they were "persuaded" by the defendant's sales persons, and not coerced to deal with the defendant on the tied products.

For periods after 1970, Dunkin' Donuts did not have an express contract provision requiring the franchisees to buy equipment and other items. Yet, the plaintiffs accused Dunkin' Donuts of having a "de facto policy of tying." They also accused Dunkin' Donuts of only approving other suppliers if those suppliers gave a kick-back to Dunkin' Donuts, which required the franchisees to pay a higher price to acquire products from these "approved" suppliers than would have existed in a free market. Because the district court found that coercion was not a necessary element, it found that the individual franchisees would not have to testify about their being coerced into buying the tied items. Thus, the district court concluded that the case could proceed as a class action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\) because common proofs of a company's pervasive policy of illegal [\[\*35\]](#) tying would predominate over individual issues.

The Third Circuit reversed the district court. In highlighting the central harm to the marketplace that was involved in tying, the court concluded that "it is only when the buyer's freedom to choose a given product is restricted that the tying doctrine comes into play." 531 F.2d at 1226.

Coercion is implicit--both logically and linguistically--in the concept of leverage upon which the illegality of tying is premised:

531 F.2d at 1218. The Court continued:

we simply cannot accept the district court's view that the Supreme Court has not set forth a coercion requirement in tying cases.

Id. at 1219. It then acknowledged that:

Saying that coercion is an element of a tying claim is, of course, not the same thing as saying that it must be established on an individual basis, but we think that the two statements are logically related. What is sufficient to coerce one buyer's choice may not be sufficient to coerce another buyer's choice; an item that one buyer might accept voluntarily, another might accept only if forced to do so. The expressions "coercion" and "individual coercion", in our view, reflect [\[\*36\]](#) different perspectives on the same phenomenon. In the context of substantive tying law, "coercion" is the relevant term. But in the context of a class action, the question is whether "individual coercion" must be established by each plaintiff.

531 F.2d at 1219.

In the Ungar case, for the relevant periods after 1970 there was not an express contractual tying arrangement that specifically removed from the franchisees the freedom to acquire the "tied products" from another source. On those facts, the Court found that individual coercion had to be proven. Thus, common questions of fact did not predominate and class certification was inappropriate under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\). The Third Circuit left open the question whether individual coercion needed to be shown when there was an express contractual provision. 531 F.2d at 1226 n.17.

[\[\*248\]](#) After outlining the three elements from Eastman Kodak noted above as making out a prima facie tie-in claim, the court considered the first element of whether there was "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product." Id. at 1224 (citing Northern Pacific Ry. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958)). It notes:

Obviously, with respect to the first element, a formal agreement is not necessary, although it is sufficient. But, in the absence of a formal agreement, a plaintiff must establish in some other way that a tie-in was involved and not merely the sale of two products by a single seller. This can be done by proof that purchase of one product, the tied product, was not voluntary, i.e., by proof of coercion.

531 F.2d at 1224 (footnote omitted). It noted that while a number of franchisees might have agreed to accept burdensome or uneconomic terms in purchasing the tied product, this alone was not sufficient to prove the coercion element of an illegal tie-in, although the Court acknowledged that such facts were some evidence of coercion. Id. at 1225. In making its analysis, the Third Circuit looked to the policy behind the per se bar on tie-ins:

The purpose of the antitrust laws is to stimulate economic competition, the essence of which is the presence of many competing sellers; salesmanship--the art of persuasion and influence--is inherent in competition among sellers. HN11 [**38] It is only when the buyer's freedom to choose a given product is restricted that the tying doctrine comes into play: so long as "the buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem." Northern Pacific Ry. v. United States, supra, 356 U.S. at 6 n.4.

531 F.2d at 1226. The Court concluded that on the facts before it:

Where, as here, plaintiff franchisees place no reliance on express contractual tie-ins, each, individually, must prove that his purchases were coerced as an element of establishing a prima facie case of illegal tying.

Id. Ungar made a critical distinction that the doctrine of coercion was implicit in the existence of a tie-in, and that, at least in the absence of an express contractual tie, coercion on an individual basis (or "individual coercion") was required to be shown to demonstrate that an illegal tie existed.

Following Ungar, the Eastern District of Pennsylvania faced another case in which various oil companies were accused by their franchise gas station distributors of conditioning the leasing or subleasing of a gas station site on their purchase of gasoline supplied by the oil company-lessor. Bogosian [**39] v. Gulf Oil Corp., 62 F.R.D. 124 \(E.D.Pa. 1973\), vacated and remanded, 561 F.2d 434 \(3d Cir. 1977\), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086 (1978). In Bogosian, no single lease provision required the lessee to purchase all its gasoline from the lessor. Yet, the lease provisions were for terms of only six to twelve month, the lessee had to purchase a license to use the lessor's trademark, and, as a condition of that, the lessee was required not to sell other gas from pumps bearing that oil company's trademark. In addition, the lessee could make no alteration to the leasehold (such as putting in an additional gas storage tank and pump) without the lessor's approval. Finally, the lease could be terminated whenever the lessee failed to purchase the stated quantity of gasoline from the lessor. The defendant lessor oil companies asserted that this did not prevent the lessees from installing their own pumps and tanks to sell a different brand of gas. The plaintiffs asserted that this requirement was uneconomical on a six to twelve month lease, particularly because such alterations of the leasehold premises would be grounds for termination and further that the station operator would be unable [**40] to meet the minimum contract purchase quota of the lessor's gasoline if they sold a competing brand.

The district court initially held that because no single lease provision expressly required the purchase of gasoline from the defendants, there were thus disparate legal and factual claims and it would be necessary to make "a factual determination in each and every lease that there was such economic coercion in fact as to constitute an illegal tie- [\*249 in agreement]." Id. at 137. Citing some of the same cases on coercion that the defendants cited in this case on the first class certification motions, the district court found that a class action was inappropriate because common questions did not predominate over individual issues of fact. Id. at 135-36.

The Third Circuit disagreed with the district court, stating:

Relying upon Ungar, defendants appear to argue that coercion is a requirement of proof in all tying cases. Neither Ungar nor any other case has so held. Rather, Ungar affirmed that under a long line of Supreme Court precedents HN12 [**41] a tying claim consists solely of the three elements quoted above. Assuming economic power over the tying product and a not insubstantial [**41] amount of commerce, the plaintiff need only show that a seller conditioned the sale of one product (the tying product) on the purchase of another product (the tied product).

561 F.2d at 449.

***

We therefore conclude that once a plaintiff proves that a defendant has conditioned the sale of one product upon the purchase of another there is no requirement that he prove that his purchase was coerced by the seller's requirement.

561 F.2d at 450.

***

We cannot agree with the district court that proof of coercion is necessary to the existence of a tie-in on the theory under which the lease claim is brought. Plaintiffs do not contend that defendants pressured them into refraining from selling competing brands, but that the lease contracts themselves precluded them from doing so. Defendants acknowledge that the only way a lessee could sell other brands under the lease agreements would be to install his own pumps and tanks. Whether such a course is realistically open to a short term lessee is a common question of fact which can be developed by expert testimony concerning the relative costs and benefits of making such installations. Similarly, a lease provision [**42] which permits termination of the lease when a stated quantity of gasoline is not purchased from the lessor hardly leaves the lessee open to reject some or all of the lessor's gas in favor of that of a competitor. If plaintiffs are able to show that the lease agreements in use by all defendants have similar clauses which have the practical economic effect of precluding the sale of other than the lessor's gasoline, they will have shown that the purchase of gasoline was tied in to the lease of the service station. Under these circumstances the lease agreement itself conditions the sale of one product (here a lease) upon purchase of another, and as we indicated in part III B 1 a, supra, proof of coercion is not a required element of the plaintiff's case.[n.11 omitted] Thus, this case differs from Ungar in which plaintiff's proof of the existence of a tie-in focused not on the terms of the agreement but on proof of salesmanship accompanied by threats of termination.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>12</sup>/ It follows from the foregoing discussion that if class certification is granted, plaintiffs will be precluded from introducing evidence of threats of termination to prove the existence of a tie-in. [**43] Ungar, supra. Similarly, plaintiffs could not prove that they were precluded from installing tanks and pumps by the clause requiring the lessor's approval of leasehold alterations if proofs that such approval would be withheld depended on specific instances of the clause being exercised in that manner.

561 F.2d at 452.

Thus, the Third Circuit in Bogosian held that HN13 coercion was not a separate element, but may be a necessary element of proof implicit in proving that there was an actual tie of one product to the sale of another. In the absence of an express contractual written tie, or in the absence of similar contract clauses which, when considered with other common proofs extrinsic to the contract,<sup>7</sup> have the [\[\*250\]](#) practical economic effect of precluding the purchase of the tied product from a competing third party source, plaintiffs may be required to resort to proof of coercion based on specific instances involving each individual plaintiff.<sup>8</sup> [**45] Yet, HN14 where there is an express contractual tying arrangement, or where the practical economic effects flowing from the contract clauses and other common proofs establish a tie, individual proof of coercion is not necessary, and [\[\*\*44\]](#) common proof of the tie-in can be made.<sup>9</sup> It is worth noting that the Third Circuit ruled that if plaintiffs wish to establish a tie

<sup>7</sup> While it could be argued that demonstration of coercion by proofs extrinsic to the contract should preclude class treatment under Rule 23\(b\)\(8\), it is clear that in Bogosian, proof of the practical economic effects would indeed require such extrinsic proofs, probably by an economic expert, as to the practical market effects and limitations a gas station operator faced in light of the various contract terms.

<sup>8</sup> Bogosian noted that several cases involving coercion in a tie-in setting dealt with a pattern of making a request or suggestion that the buyer acquire the tied product from the seller "coupled with pressure, intimidation, in short . . . coercion." 561 F.2d at 451. It is clear, in a case in which the tie is to be established by a request or a suggestion followed by pressure, intimidation, or traditional types of coercion, that individual proofs would generally predominate and a class action would be inappropriate.

<sup>9</sup> Other courts have explained why HN15 coercion is implied where a contract explicitly requires the tie because a contract "is backed by the force of law." Halverson v. Convenient Food Mart, Inc., 69 F.R.D. 331, 335 (N.D. Ill. 1974); McCoy v. Convenient Food Mart, Inc., 69 F.R.D. 337, 340 (N.D. Ill. 1975). Coercion remains a necessary element of an unlawful tying arrangement but it is inferred on a class-wide basis; a contractual provision is coercive in and of itself because it is backed by the force of law. See also, 7- Eleven Franchise Antitrust Litigation, 1972 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P74,156 \(N.D.Cal. 1972\).

by common proofs, they should be precluded from introducing individual evidence of specific threats or specific instances of defendants' refusal to grant approval that would be necessary for an individual plaintiff to buy from a third party source. The Third Circuit in Bogosian vacated the district court order that denied class certification and remanded for reconsideration in light of its opinion. *Id. at 457.*

The wrong that the per se prohibition on tying seeks to remedy is the removal of the buyer's free choice in the tied market. In establishing a prima facie case, the plaintiff need not prove that other competing products in the tied market are superior to defendant's or that the plaintiff would have chosen a competitor's product. Bogosian makes it clear that HN16 it is not a legitimate defense for the defendant to prove the plaintiff would have bought defendant's tied product even if there \*\*46 had been no tie. 561 F.2d at 449. While the quality and relative price of defendant's product may be relevant to the fact of damages and its individual measurement, tying is a per se antitrust violation because it deprives the buyer of free choice in a market of competitors. Such restraint of free market forces is presumed to have an effect on market quality and more commonly on market price of the defendant's product. As the Third Circuit noted in Bogosian:

It has never been an element of plaintiff's case to disprove, nor even a permitted defense, that the tied product is superior to others available on the market, or that even without the tie requirement plaintiff would have purchased the tied product.

* * *

The purpose of the rule against tying is to insure that a buyer's choice is counseled solely by his perception of the merits of the tied product, so that the seller with economic power over the tying product does not gain an artificial advantage over competitors engaged in sales of the tied product. The antisocial conduct which the rule seeks to deter is the act of the seller conditioning sale of one product upon purchase of another. One can hardly imagine \*\*47 anything which would vitiate that purpose more than a requirement that a violation depends upon proof that the buyer bringing suit would not have purchased the tied product but for the tie requirement. The issue is whether the seller acted in a certain way, not what the buyer's state of mind would have been absent the seller's action.

561 F.2d at 448-49.

Following the 1977 remand by the Third Circuit, and before the 1984 remand consideration by the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, the Supreme Court decided Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). Jefferson Parish set out a two-step analysis in tying cases: "whether petitioners are selling two separate products that may be tied together, \*251 and, if so, whether they have used their market power to force their patients to accept the tying arrangement." Id. at 18. The Court made several statements indicating that there is a coercion requirement. The Court noted:

We have condemned tying arrangements when the seller has some special ability--usually called "market power"--to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. Citations [\*\*48 omitted] When "forcing" occurs, our cases have found the tying arrangement to be unlawful.

466 U.S. at 13-14. In a footnote, the Court noted:

This type of market power has sometimes been referred to as "leverage." . . . "Leverage" is loosely defined here as a supplier's power to induce his customer for one product to buy a second product from him that would not otherwise be purchased solely on the merit of that second product." 5 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P 1134a, p. 202 (1980).

466 U.S. at 14 n.20.

The Court later noted:

Per se condemnation--condemnation without inquiry into actual market conditions--is only appropriate if the existence of forcing is probable.

466 U.S. at 15. "Only if patients are forced to purchase [the tied product] as a result of the hospital's market power would the arrangement have anticompetitive consequences." Id. at 25. Like the Third Circuit in Bogosian, the Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish looked to the underlying policies of the Sherman Act.

Basic to the faith that a free economy best promotes the public weal is that goods must stand the cold test of competition; that the public, [**49] acting through the market's impersonal judgment, shall allocate the Nation's resources and thus direct the course its economic development will take . . . . By conditioning his sale of one commodity on the purchase of another, a seller coerces the abdication of buyers' independent judgment as to the "tied" product's merits and insulates it from the competitive stresses of the open market.

466 U.S. at 10 (quoting Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 605, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953)).

While the Third Circuit in Bogosian focused on the action of the seller that precluded the buyer's choice, not the buyer's actual state of mind, 561 F.2d at 450,<sup>10</sup> [**50] Jefferson Parish used a perspective that focused more upon the effects on the consumer in the marketplace.<sup>11</sup> Yet, neither this case nor other subsequent cases have specifically made coercion an independent element of proof in the tying case, although this was an issue considered by the Eastern District of Pennsylvania after Jefferson Parish in the 1984 Bogosian remand determination.

b. Sixth Circuit Case Law on Coercion:

The Sixth Circuit in Bell v. Cherokee Aviation Corp., 660 F.2d 1123 (6th Cir. 1981), appears to have limited the coercion element in the same manner as the Third Circuit in Bogosian. In Bell, defendant Cherokee had leased airport space to Executive with an express contract provision requiring Executive to purchase all aircraft fuel and non-emergency maintenance service from Cherokee. The defendant argued that it was the plaintiff's corporation (Executive) that proposed the express written tie-in, and thus [*252] there was no coercion. The Sixth Circuit cited Bogosian and rejected this defense. The court stated that "we do not think that coercion is an element of an illegal tying arrangement," but later added that "where the tie-in [**51] is clear on the face of the contract . . . there is no need to inquire into coercion." Id. at 1131. The Sixth Circuit noted further that:

Coercion might be relevant in determining whether a seller in fact conditioned the purchase of one product on the purchase of another.

Id. This is consistent with the Third Circuit's position in Bogosian that, HN17 while not a separate element of the prima facie case, proof of coercion may be necessary to prove the first element of a tying claim -- that the sale of one product is in fact conditioned on the purchase of another -- in the absence of an express contractual tie.

Dictum in Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 11 F.3d 660 (6th Cir. 1993), indicates that coercion is still relevant in tying cases where there is not an express tie-in. An "essential characteristic" of an illegal tying arrangement [is] the seller's ability to coerce customers into buying an unwanted tied product." Virtual Maintenance, 11 F.3d at 665 (quoting A. I. Root Co. v. Computer/Dynamics, Inc., 806 F.2d 673 (6th Cir. 1986)).

<sup>10</sup> As noted above, the Third Circuit state in Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086, 55 L. Ed. 2d 791, 98 S. Ct. 1280 (1978), that the rule against ties "seeks to deter the act of the seller conditioning sale of one product on the purchase of another." 561 F.2d at 450 (emphasis in the original). "The issue is whether the seller acted in a certain way, not what the buyer's state of mind would have been absent the seller's action." Id.

<sup>11</sup> Defendants here argue that this requires an inquiry into whether Little Caesar franchisees felt coercion to buy from Blue Line. Yet, for reasons stated below, the actual and anticompetitive effects in the marketplace can occur without proof that the individual franchisees knew of them or of the reasons for them.

It is also significant that, like the Third Circuit, the Sixth Circuit rejected the defense [**52] theory "that even without the tie-in requirement plaintiff would have purchased the tied product."<sup>12</sup> Bogosian, 561 F.2d at 449. See also Photovest Corp. v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704, 721-25 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917, 63 L. Ed. 2d 601, 100 S. Ct. 1278 (1980), cited by the Bell court for this proposition that the illegality of a tie-in is its wrongful restraint in the marketplace of the buyer's freedom "to take either product by itself," Northern Pacific R. Co., supra, 356 U.S. at 6, n.4, or not at all. Unlike a fraud case, in which a defendant has available the defense that the plaintiff would have bought the item notwithstanding the misrepresentation or material omission (i.e. "lack of reliance"), the same is not true in a per se tie-in antitrust case. The antitrust laws are concerned with harm to the marketplace caused by unreasonable restraints on competition. As noted in Fortner I, supra:

There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the [**53] precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

* * *

Where [tying] conditions are successfully exacted competition on the merits with respect to the tied product is inevitably curbed. Indeed "tying agreements serve hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition." . . . They deny competitors free access to the market for the tied product, not because the party imposing the tying requirements has a better product or a lower price but because of his power or leverage in another market. At the same time buyers are forced to forego their free choice between competing products. For these reasons "tying agreements fare harshly under the laws forbidding restraints of trade." . . . They are unreasonable in and of themselves . . .

394 U.S. at 498 (1969) (quoting Northern Pac., supra, 356 U.S. at 5-6, footnote and citations omitted.) Jefferson Parish adds that "application of the per se rule focuses on the probability of anticompetitive consequences."

The rationale for per se rules in part is to avoid a burdensome inquiry into actual market conditions in situations where the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct is so great [**54] as to render unjustified the costs of determining whether the particular case at bar involves anticompetitive conduct.

466 U.S. at 15-16 and n.25 (citation omitted).

[*253] c. Other Cases Allowing Common Proofs of a Coercive Tie-In:

Other cases without express contractual ties have allowed class certification where common proofs of coercion or forcing demonstrate a tie-in. One case involved a "firm policy" of the defendant having a "uniform effect" of tie-in and where statements of an agent of defendant to 99% of prospective franchisees and consistent form letters showed a tie-in.<sup>13</sup>

[**55] Another case involved common proofs of an unremitting policy of tie-in accompanied by sufficient market power in the tying product to restrain competition in the tied product.<sup>14</sup> Other courts have found that where

<sup>12</sup> If the issue of whether defendants would have purchased from Blue Line at higher costs (even if they had a choice) was relevant, then individual proofs of each franchisee would predominate.

<sup>13</sup> Martino v. McDonald's System, Inc., 81 F.R.D. 81 (N.D. Ill. 1979) (prior to the express tie-in in 1964, from 1961-1964 McDonald's had a uniform policy of tying a lease from a subsidiary of the defendant to McDonald's franchisees.)

<sup>14</sup> Hill v. A-T-O, Inc., 535 F.2d 1349, 1354 (2d Cir. 1976) (The sale of a vacuum cleaner was tied to the sale of membership in a buying club. The sale of these items was done by door-to-door salespersons, and it was undisputed that the only way one could buy a membership in the buying club was to also purchase a compact vacuum cleaner.)

172 F.R.D. 236, *253L 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21012, **55

sufficient economic power exists in the tying market, an appreciable number of buyers accepting burdensome or uneconomic terms in the tied market can be either sufficient<sup>15</sup> [**56] or at least some<sup>16</sup> common proof of a tie-in.

An admission by a defendant that a subsidiary of the franchisor was the prime lessor on all stores has been taken to indicate that common proofs of a tie exist.<sup>17</sup> Newberg on Class Action notes:

Evidence of an unremitting policy of tie-in and sufficient market power may also be proffered to show classwide coercion. Allegations alone of such a policy may be insufficient, however, and the plaintiff should bolster such charges with evidence such as classwide adherence to the tie-in policy.

Id. at § 18.30 (footnotes omitted).

[**57] d. The Antitrust Treatise of Professors Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge:

Excerpts from Professors Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge's treatise bring together the themes in the case law, clarify common errors, and focus on the policy behind prohibition on tie-ins to project how courts should address certain issues where there is not a clearly expressed tie-in, and where part of the actions or thinking of the seller is hidden from the buyer.

A tying condition occurs when its "practical effect" is to foreclose, even partially, rival suppliers of the allegedly tied product.

Id. at P1752, p. 279 (references to subsection in the book omitted).

[*254] To decide that issue [of whether two products have been tied together], the courts have often asked whether the plaintiff's purchase of the defendant's bundle was "coerced" and "forced" or in fact "voluntary." But these terms must be understood merely as shorthand for a more nuanced inquiry into whether the defendant has so acted as to constrain buyer choices illegitimately.

Id. at 280.

If the tied customers might have purchased elsewhere, an impact on the defendant's "competitors" should be found even [**58] if there are no competitors because of the tie.

Id. at 282 (footnote omitted).

<sup>15</sup> In Image Technical Services v. Eastman Kodak Co., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12652, 1994 WL 508737 (N.D. Calif. 1994), Kodak was selling replacement parts for its copiers only to buyers who agreed not to buy service for the machines from independent service organizations. In certifying a class action, the district court addressed the 23(b)(3) issue of predominance by noting that plaintiffs sought to prove coercion under Ninth Circuit case law that permits coercion to be implied from proof that "an appreciable number of buyers have accepted burdensome terms, such as a tie-in, and there exists sufficient economic power in tying market." Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews and Co., 550 F.2d 1207, 1217 (9th Cir. 1977). See also, Krehl v. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co., 78 F.R.D. 108, 118-19 (C.D. Cal. 1978).

<sup>16</sup> While the Ninth Circuit accepts such proofs as adequate proofs of coercion, the Third Circuit in Ungar v. Dunkin' Donuts, 531 F.2d 1211, 1225 (3d Cir. 1976), discussed in detail above, held that such proofs constitute "some evidence of coercion," but could not "accept the proposition that such proof, alone, would suffice to establish, prima facie the coercion element of an illegal tie-in claim."

<sup>17</sup> Krehl v. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co., 78 F.R.D. 108, 118-19 (C.D. Cal. 1978). The defendant had admitted to the Federal Trade Commission that its subsidiary was the prime lessor on all of its stores, and that all stores were fully equipped and ready for operation when turned over to a franchisee. Id. at 118. The court noted that in the absence of such an admission of the universal acceptance of the lease and initial equipment package, the court would not certify a class. Id. at 119. While the court found that the coercion element in its case was amenable to common proof on the tie between the franchise and the lease and equipment package, these claims were not certified for class treatment because common proofs did not exist on the fact of damage with respect to these alleged ties.

. . . a tying "agreement" or "condition" is present when the defendant has taken advantage of customers' desire for his product A to constrain improperly their choice between his product B and that of his rivals (footnote 16 omitted). Given the constraints created by the defendant, customers choose his B "voluntarily." At the same time, the improper constraint "coerces" or "forces" those choices.<sup>17/</sup> Unfortunately, both verbs are often used loosely by litigants and judges.

<sup>17/</sup> See P1754b (collecting cases showing that coercion merely express the need for proving a tying condition).

Courts usually say that two products are not tied unless buyers are "coerced" or "forced" to take them together (footnote omitted). They are certainly correct that more must be shown than buying two products from the defendant, and "coercion" or "forcing" is often a useful shorthand for the necessary showing.

* * *

Furthermore, "coercion" often raises abstract, extraneous, and metaphysical questions about whether the buyer acted "willingly" or "voluntarily." After all, every [**59] package purchase is voluntary in that buyers preferred it to the other available options (such as buying elsewhere or doing without) and in that its price did not exceed its value to them. It is involuntary in that others have constrained or structured the options. The legal question then is whether the defendant constrained or structured those options illegitimately and by what standard. . . ."the only thing that can be said with absolute certainty on the subject [of coercion] is that the concept has proved elusive." . . . The buyer's volition does not distinguish what should be condemned nor what should be allowed.

In sum, the language of "coercion," "forcing," and "voluntariness" should be understood as inviting a specific factual inquiry about whether the defendant has illegitimately constrained buyer choices and precise articulation of the standards for determining legitimacy.

Id. at 283-86 (some citations and footnotes omitted).

In the present case, defendants frequently note facts that seem curious and inconsistent with antitrust claims that involve "coercion," "forcing," and "conditioning" claims. For example, there are many contented franchisees who freely [**60] choose to buy paper products and other supplies from Blue Line. Why did so few other franchisees other than Gary Smith seek an alternate supplier to Blue Line? Indeed, even many franchisees who own outlets with both the old and new franchise agreements have not used their right under the old contracts to seek an alternate supplier of logoed products which, if honored, would provide an alternate source of logoed goods for all the franchisees in the area.

Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge note that an illegal tie-in constraint on buyers' choices can occur even if there are no competitors or if the buyers would not have purchased from a competitor. "The buyer's volition does not distinguish what should be condemned nor what should be allowed."

Where there is a tying arrangement, it is not made legal by the fact that the "buyers would have purchased the defendant's product without regard to the tie, [or buyers] do not consider the contract onerous or suffer rigorous enforcement . . ." Id. at 292. The relevant question is whether the seller "has illegitimately constrained buyer choices." The authors note that:

[*255] Jefferson Parish said, "tying arrangements need only be condemned [**61] if they restrain competition on the merits by forcing purchases that would not otherwise be made."

Id. at 295 (citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 27, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)). Yet, the authors clarify:

But the Supreme Court did not invite inquiries into what buyers would otherwise have done, for the Court made plain that sufficient "forcing" exists when buyers "might have preferred" to buy the tied product elsewhere. Tying "occurs when the buyer must accept the tied item and forego possibly desirable substitutes."

Id. at 295, citing *Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews*, 550 F.2d 1207, 1217 \(9th Cir. 1977\) (emphasis added).

The policy rationale is simple. "Even if some of the [buyers] would have selected [the defendant's tied product] regardless of the tying arrangement, the arrangement prevented them from making that choice freely."

Id. at 295, citing *Tic-X-Press v. Omni Promotions Co.*, 815 F.2d 1407, 1417 \(11th Cir. 1987\).

While this treatise was revised well after Jefferson Parish (1984) and its focus on the buyer, these antitrust scholars still quote Bogosian's conclusion [**62] that:

The issue is whether the seller acted in a certain way, not what the buyer's state of mind would have been absent the seller's action.19/

19/ Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 449-450 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086, 55 L. Ed. 2d 791, 98 S. Ct. 1280 (1978); *Anderson Foreign Motors v. New England Toyota Distributors*, 475 F. Supp. 973, 988 \(D. Mass. 1979\) (tying test focuses not on buyer's state of mind but on seller's actions).

Speculation about what buyers would have done had the defendant allowed them to exercise independent judgment is often unreliable and involves the very sort of burdensome inquiry into actual market conditions the per se rule was meant to avoid. . . . Moreover, the very existence of the tie prevents buyers from changing their minds and discourages rivals, including new entrants, from tying to woo them from the defendant.20/20/ Associated Press, note 5, at 756, 759 (key evil of tying is that "it forces the buyer to give up his independent judgment").

There is little reason to undertake that burden when the defendant himself doubted the outcome sufficiently to impose the restraint and [**63] when there is a better test. The best way to test whether buyers would otherwise have taken the defendant's tied product would be to offer the tying and tied products separately.21/ If the best the defendant can say about an otherwise unlawful tie is that it has no effect, there is little reason to tolerate it.22/

21/ See, e.g., Photovest v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917, 63 L. Ed. 2d 601, 100 S. Ct. 1278 (1980)], note 6, at 725.

22/ While the existence of a tying restraint does not depend on what buyers would otherwise have done, there would be no foreclosure (P1724c) and perhaps no separate products (PP1743a, 1748) absent a reasonable possibility that buyers would purchase the tied product elsewhere. It is enough that buyers might have wanted to purchase the tied product elsewhere in the absence of the defendant's tying conditions. . . .

Id. at 295-96.

The authors note that the Supreme Court has wisely refused to require rigorous enforcement of a tying contract. Both International Salt and Northern Pacific held products tied together even though the contractual obligation [**64] to buy the tied product was often unenforced, waived, or leniently administered (footnote omitted). The reason is that the "overhanging threat of enforcement is ever present" to influence buyer choices.

Id. at 297.

In situations involving seller approval of alternate suppliers, Areeda, Hovenkamp, and Elhauge state:

When the number or size of disinterested suppliers the defendant is willing to approve is too small to provide buyers with workably competitive choices, the products should be deemed tied together.

[*256] Id. at 300. The authors suggest as a rule of thumb that the buyers of the defendant's product A should have a 50 percent supply of product B from alternate available sources in order not to constitute a tie.

The present case does not involve a clear, express tie in a single contract as was involved in the Sixth Circuit's Bell v. Cherokee Aviation Corp. case. Rather, in a market where there are no current alternate suppliers of logoed items and no current alternate suppliers of other foodstuffs and supplies, the post-mid-1990 franchisees were contractually limited from seeking an alternate supplier of logoed goods. Plaintiffs assert that [**65] this new 1990 express contractual limitation was drafted with defendants' intention that it work in tandem with the covert 1989 licensing agreement that gave Blue Line the exclusive right to have logoed products produced and the exclusive right to distribute logoed products either to franchisees or to third-party distributors approved by LCE. These facts involve what Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge call an "understood condition."

1754c. Understood condition. The situation is exactly the same when a defendant makes no formal announcement but so acts as to lead reasonable buyers to understand that they cannot get product A unless they also take his product B. There is then a tying condition promulgated by the defendant's own conduct, which clogs competition by denying rivals free access to buyers. We stress two requirements for an understood tying condition.

First buyers must actually and reasonably believe that such a condition exists, for otherwise there is no understood condition. As a practical matter, however, there is no need to inquire into subjective belief once the tribunal is persuaded that the circumstances generate a reasonable belief that a tying condition [**66] exists, for subjective beliefs can be inferred from objective circumstances.<sup>13/</sup> And, any subjective belief must still be objectively reasonable. . . .

<sup>13/</sup> Even so, the defendant should be allowed to rebut such an inference with credible proof that buyers did not actually believe this threat--such as direct statements from them of disbelief or proof that buyers frequently violated the condition without loss.

Id. at 303-304.

Second, buyers' reasonable belief that they must buy defendant's B in order to get his A must be the result of the defendant's own conduct that could reasonably be expected to bring that belief about.<sup>15/</sup>

<sup>15/</sup> See ibid.; Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 460 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086, 55 L. Ed. 2d 791, 98 S. Ct. 1280 (1978) ("The issue is whether the seller acted in a certain way, not what the buyer's state of mind would have been absent the seller's action."); Anderson, note 5, at 988 (tying test focuses not on buyer's state of mind but on the seller's conduct in conditioning).

Otherwise, a defendant would be unfairly punished though he has not created a reasonably understood [**67] tying condition. . . .

Once we have an absolute and unqualified understood condition, the consequences are the same as an announced condition. But the announced condition is more likely to be clear, while the plaintiff may have difficulty persuading the tribunal that an understood condition exists. . . .

In these ambiguous situations . . . the tribunal may have difficulty judging what constitutes a sufficient and illegitimate constraint on buyer choices. Such judgments depend on substantive antitrust policy, which does not differ between the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

Id. at 305 (footnote omitted).

The authors then create a series of presumptions from circumstantial facts. They note, first of all, that even with an announced condition,

The defendant might have relented if asked. Nonetheless, the defendant is engaged in tying, at least presumptively. The announcement is intended to constrain buyer choice and, absent contrary evidence, creates the reasonable impression among buyers that their ability to purchase product A is conditioned on their purchases of product B.<sup>21/</sup> This is enough.

<sup>21/</sup> The announcement also implies that the defendant <sup>**68]</sup> intended to implement a tying condition even if uncommunicated to buyers. See P1755.

[*257] Id. at 305-306 (emphasis in the original). In such situations, Areeda, Hovenkamp, and Elhauge do not feel that the plaintiff needs to affirmatively prove that requests by other buyers to buy A separately were rebuffed by the defendant, nor must they show the onerous nature of the bundling of the two products which buyers would not otherwise have accepted but for the tie, nor what the buyers understood with respect to the announced condition, nor the percentage of bundled sales versus separate sales, nor the termination of customers or franchisees who buy B from rivals. The authors note:

After all, when the defendant feels the need to announce the condition, he must have thought it would have some effect.

Id. at 306.

In the absence of an express contract, or a clearly announced condition, some other proof of "coercion" is required. Yet this coercion means only that there is a conditioning or other illicit market manipulation of the sale of one item on that of another, and not that the purchase otherwise would not have been made but for the tie. Again, according <sup>**69]</sup> to these authors, "foreclosure resulting from 'coercion,' not coercion alone, is the gravamen of the tying offense." Id. at 298. These commentators observe that the question of whether the customer would have purchased the tied product absent the tie is irrelevant in cases involving announced or understood conditions as well those involving unambiguous tying contracts. Id. at 307. Yet, the authors note that certain courts have confused this concept by the use of the term "coercion."

Unfortunately, some erroneous dicta have required proof of "coercion" -- apparently in the sense of a purchase that would not otherwise have been made -- even though an announced or understood condition has been established.<sup>31/</sup>

<sup>31/</sup> If the plaintiff is a purchaser, however, he would not be able to obtain damages for purchase of a tied product that he would have taken in the same amount and at the same price absent the tie. With respect to such purchases he has suffered no injury-in-fact.

Id. at 307.

These courts recognize that no such proof is needed for express tying contracts and distinguish the nonexpress case as requiring coercion (typically in the sense <sup>**70]</sup> of a proved announced or understood condition), but then appear beguiled by their coercion language to require proof that coercion caused buyers to take a product they would not otherwise have taken.<sup>32/</sup>

<sup>32/</sup> See Tic-X-Press, note 10, at 1415-1416; [Will v. Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665, 669 n.5 (7th Cir. 1985)] Unijax v. Champion Intl., (quoting Ungar v. Dunkin' Donuts, 531 F.2d 1211, 1218 n.8

(3d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 823, 50 L. Ed. 2d 84, 97 S. Ct. 74 (1976); Response of Carolina v. Leasco Response, 537 F.2d 1307, 1327 n.8 \(5th Cir. 1976\) (quoting Ungar); Capital Temporaries v. Olsten Corp., 506 F.2d 658, 662-663 \(2d Cir. 1974\).

This is mostly dicta, either because the existence of an announced or understood condition was either unclear or not at issue. These cases should be understood merely to require the necessary condition and some proof that without that condition the buyers might have wanted another product.<sup>33/</sup>

<sup>33/</sup> See P1753c; Smith, note 8, at 1331-1332 & n.15 (class action need not be dismissed though some members of class desired defendant's tied product; tying condition evidenced [**71] by form contract).

Otherwise, courts would be burdened with assessing proof the buyers were caused or coerced to take tied products they did not want even when it is undisputed that there was an announced or understood condition that product B had to be bought to get product A. That unnecessary burden is especially great when courts refuse to certify class actions because they require proof of individual coercion, which varies among customers, beyond an announced or understood tying condition.<sup>35/</sup>

<sup>35/</sup> Ungar, note 8; Waldo v. [North American Van Lines, 669 F. Supp. 722, 727-728 n.8 \(W.D. Pa. 1987\). See also Olmstead v. Amoco Oil Co., 1977-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P61,487 (M.D. Fla.) (refusing to certify a class of gasoline dealers forced by their dealership contracts to operate car wash facilities as well; dealers who wished to have the car wash and would have taken it anyway suffered no injury and thus could not be included in a class seeking damages). And see Service & Training v. Data General Corp., 963 F.2d 680, 685 \(4th Cir. 1992\) (stating in tying class action that absent evidence of an "express tying agreement" the plaintiff must present "evidence [**72] that affirmatively 'tends to exclude the possibility' that [the defendant] and [his customers] 'were acting independently' in the sales and purchases of products" (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\)).

[*258] Id. at 307-308 (emphasis supplied).

The authors provide courts guidance on the types of proofs that may be sufficient to prove a tie-in when the tie is not expressed clearly in a contract or in an announcement by defendant. In considering whether a silent plan or covert intention of the seller to tie the products together can constitute a tie, the authors conclude that it should not because the basic test of tying "is whether the defendant seller has illegitimately constrained buyers' choices in buying product B from the defendant rather than from his competitors." Id. at 313. A defendant using solely a silent decision to tie has done nothing to induce anyone to purchase his second product because the buyers do not know of the silent condition. If they did, it would then have become an understood condition. It is in this sense that the "buyer's state of mind" (see [Jefferson Parish, \[\*73\] 466 U.S. at 12](#), and Judge Gadola's opinion in this case, 895 F. Supp. at 905), is important. Did defendants' actions create sufficient non-covert effects in the marketplace of which the buyer was aware that they helped induce his choice of seller's product B? If so, then not all of the seller's actions or intentions need be publicly known.

The critical first question is what sorts of proofs are necessary to constitute a prima facie case of an "understood tie in," particularly if certain facts are not known to plaintiffs until after the suit is filed, as in this case. The second question is whether such proofs are available in this case, and, if so, are they predominately common to all class plaintiffs or predominately individual.

Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge have a complete section on Proving Understood Conditions that makes out an impermissible tie-in.

The authors considered various presumptions which they believe should prevail in the absence of contrary evidence. They start with an easy case. When the defendants make products A and B available separately, a tying condition is presumptively absent even when buyers request or choose a bundle of products. The conclusion [**74] is not undermined even when there is "a high percentage of bundled sales, onerous terms for the tied product, or a single contract covering both products, although these factors might help resolve more ambiguous cases . . . ."

They also conclude that: "A form contract covering two products is presumptively a tie even though the buyers have not requested separate provision and been rebuffed." Ibid. The authors noted that in ambiguous cases, other relevant proofs include a high percentage of defendant's transactions are bundled or the terms for defendant's products are onerous. A high proportion, or even 100 percent, of bundled sales does not itself indicate that the two products have been tied together. The buyers may prefer to acquire the products together. Yet, "a high percentage of bundled sales can usefully supplement other evidence to indicate an understood tying condition." Id. at 317.c

In another example where the defendant employs a "form contract" covering two products, this initially indicates an understood tying condition but the seller can offer evidence to rebut this inference. In such a case, a high percentage of bundled sales would then be surrebuttal evidence [**75] by plaintiff. In the form contract example, the authors acknowledge that 80 percent taking the bundled items A and B might indicate that a vast majority of customers reasonably assumed they had no choice. Admitting that any market percentage line is arbitrary, they would require 90 percent bundling to make persuasive otherwise insufficient evidence of a tying condition or more than 10 percent unbundling to rebut an otherwise established or presumed inference of a tying condition.

Id. at 318 (footnote omitted).

Regarding onerous conditions, the authors state that: "A tie is not conclusively established by evidence that taking product B is onerous because its price is higher or its [*259] quality lower than market alternatives." Id. at 318. Price-quality claims are difficult to resolve, and buyer testimony of lower quality is self-serving. An objectively higher price might be offset by higher quality. Nonetheless, the authors note:

We can presume that a rational customer would not take an overpriced or inferior product B unless he must in order to get the defendant's product A -- that is, unless there was a tying condition.20/

20 [**76] / Data General Corp. v. Grumman Systems Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1181 (1st Cir. 1994) (contract provided some but insufficient prima facie evidence of a tie; tying condition might be inferred if alleged tied product "inferior or overpriced"); Detroit City Dairy v. Kowalski Sausage Co., 393 F. Supp. 453, 464-466 (E.D. Mich. 1975) (relying in part on high price for defendant's tied product coupled with evidence of direct threats from the defendant's employees).

To be sure, the typical buyer burdened with an above-market quality-adjusted price for product B is compensated in the form of a lower price than he would otherwise have paid for product A. Nevertheless, a customer might prefer to buy product B elsewhere notwithstanding recompense when buying it from the defendant.

Id. at 318-19 (n.21 omitted). This leads the authors to conclude that if the buyer purchased product B from the defendant, it tends to suggest that the buyer did so in order to get product A.

Indeed, where the defendant's opening position involves both products, rebuffed efforts to buy product A separately or proof that such a request would be futile could indicate [**77] an illegal tie-in. Here, the authors note the relevance of evidence that might have been kept secret from the buyer until discovery in litigation.

For convenience in administering the antitrust laws, moreover, we would infer futility from defendant's internal documents or admissions known to the tribunal--though not to customers--that defendant would not sell A separately.

Id. at 325.

In the present case, Little Caesar and Blue Line did not specifically announce a tie-in. But, plaintiffs assert that they specifically did announce that franchisees could not request an alternate supplier of logoed products, and the surrounding circumstances, which circumstances were contributed to by the defendants, made an alternate choice of suppliers of logoed products impossible. Thus, franchisees with a mid-1990 franchise agreement who chose to continue purchasing product A (continuing as a Little Caesar franchisee) knew they were required to continue buying paper products from Blue Line and could not seek an alternate supplier of such goods.

In the present case, plaintiffs' tie-in case rests on the assertion that because of the surreptitious 1989 exclusive licensing agreement [**78] with respect to paper products, the defendants had precluded any alternate suppliers and, through the express contractual provision in the existing market conditions, induced the franchisees not to seek an alternate supplier.<sup>18</sup>

III. Plaintiffs' Suggested Mode of Proof:

Plaintiffs assert that they intend as their primary proofs to use documents obtained from the defendants in discovery and expert opinions of economists and others, that will constitute common proof of a national effort by the defendants to use their market power, particularly their exclusive right to have manufactured and to distribute logoed products essential to a franchise operation, to create a situation where Blue Line [**79] was not only the sole distributor of logoed paper products but maintained its position as the near exclusive distributor of all supplies necessary to operate a franchise.

Considering certain of the factors that Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge found relevant in ambiguous cases of the understood condition tie-in, in the present case, in all relevant respects Blue Line is virtually the [*260] exclusive distributor of logoed paper goods and other foodstuffs and supplies for a franchise.

Second, the proofs will show that a form franchise contract was used after mid-1990 with respect to all of the proposed class members. This contract expressly prohibits the franchisees from requesting an alternate supplier of logoed paper products in a market in which Blue Line was at the time the sole distributor of such products. While this was not an express form contract tying product A and B together, the relevant inquiry for an "understood condition" tie-in is its practical economic effect in a market where these franchisees had only Blue Line as a distributor of product B.

While the Little Caesar/Blue Line exclusive license agreement was not known to the parties at the time, its consequences [**80] were apparent in the marketplace at least to the extent that no other entities had produced or attempted to distribute logoed paper products to Little Caesar franchisees. Also, because Blue Line was a wholly owned subsidiary of Little Caesar, the exclusive licensing agreement in effect meant little more than Little Caesar Enterprises was refusing to allow production or distribution of logoed paper products without its consent. While the facts show that LCE did relent in the two recent applications for alternate distributors that were approved during the pendency of this lawsuit, there is evidence that, during the earlier relevant time periods, Little Caesar withdrew the rights to distribute logoed paper products from at least one of the prior competing distributors, PYA Monarch, and other documents made available to plaintiffs through discovery show that this was known to be a strategic business tactic that made it more difficult for competing distributors to compete with Blue Line and satisfy the franchise preferences for one-stop shopping.

Plaintiffs also assert that the contracts entered into by the franchisees resulted in the charging of supra-competitive prices, thus being the [**81] "onerous contract" evidence referred to by Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge. While defendants can point to the fact that recent applications for alternate distributorships that were pending during this lawsuit have been approved, and even note that these distributors have not yet entered the marketplace to provide goods and services, plaintiffs will show that during the relevant time at least one other applicant for distribution services, AmeriServ, was denied the right to be a distributor. Plaintiffs will also show through expert and other testimony that because the mark-up on logoed paper goods is higher than that of other items, defendants' tactic of denying access to logoed paper goods to alternate distributors made it more difficult for competitors to enter the market and match or beat Blue Line's pricing.

---

<sup>18</sup> An issue that has not been briefed or argued and awaits further judicial resolution is whether the subclass of "hybrid" franchisees, who also had an old franchise agreement without the restrictive language and were permitted to seek alternate suppliers of paper products but failed to do so, have a tie-in claim?

[HN18] While the Court's ruling on a motion for class certification is not to consider the merits of the case or even the sufficiency of the evidence as would be done in a motion for summary judgment, it is worth reviewing some of the proffered evidence to determine if it is common to the class in order to help make a judgment whether the common evidence predominates over the evidence [**82] that need be individual.

In referring to the deposition of LCE's President, David Deal, he acknowledged that the reason the franchise agreement was modified in 1990 was "because we wanted to conform the Franchise Agreement to the business intent we had to control distribution of our trademarked items." Plaintiffs' Exh. 14, Deal Dep. at 186.

A September 22, 1988, memorandum from Deal to Ilitch dealing with Blue Line's expansion into the southeast United States where it would compete with the existing distributor, PYA Monarch, Deal noted that the approach used in the past of merely disapproving the competitive distributor would not work because PYA had been doing a credible job in the southeast at the time. It appears another competitor, Sysco, would be disapproved. In dealing with the franchisees, the tone of the announcement was to state an expectation that the franchisees would swing over to Blue Line or "in the PYA area, we are going to fight them (albeit with a stacked deck)," apparently referring to the exclusive access to logoed products that Blue Line would have. Plaintiffs' Exh. 8 at p. 1.

[*261] In a November 12, 1991, memo from David Deal to David Kushner, he notes:

The [**83] original intent of the agreement was to provide an exclusive arrangement for Blue Line to distribute paper products and other supplies to Little Caesar restaurants so that Little Caesar would be able to exclude third parties from these offerings. It was not contemplated at that time to put in place an even broader agreement to involve products that do not ultimately find their way to the customer, such as uniforms, signage, etc.

Plaintiff's Exh. 21. At his deposition, when asked to explain what he meant when he said he was going to fight PYA Monarch "albeit with a stacked deck," Deal admitted: "That we were going to leverage every business advantage we had seen." Id. at 400. He later noted that the competitive strategy intended "Pushing our business advantages within the limit of the law." Id. at 404. He noted that one of those advantages was the fact that Blue Line had exclusive access to logoed items.

In a memo of April 20, 1992, in dealing with how to compete with AmeriServ when it was about to enter the southeast as an alternate distributor to Blue Line, Deal again wrote Ilitch outlining a number of tactical considerations. Again, apparently the anticipation was [**84] that AmeriServ would not be given access to logoed paper products, so that franchisees who purchased from AmeriServ would also have to purchase at least some items (i.e. logoed products) from Blue Line. Deal's memo concluded,

The result of these elements will be to put us in. the best competitive position and also require the stores to take two deliveries per week - one from us and one from AmeriServ. I am hopeful, that, over time, they will see that this inconvenience is not giving them any significant benefit. This was a fairly significant factor in our ability to wear down those stores that initially wanted to continue with PYA Monarch several years ago.

Plaintiffs' Exh. 11 at p. 1. Deal's deposition also acknowledged that restricting PYA Monarch's ability to get logoed and proprietary items was an intentional effort to force the franchisees in the southeast to take two deliveries, one from Blue Line and one from PYA Monarch. Id. at 404.

In Deal's deposition, while denying that the defendants had a master plan to control distribution of goods to franchisees, he acknowledged: "Certainly we wanted as much of the business as we could obtain through being competitive [**85] and leveraging everything we could to our advantage that was legal . . ." Plaintiff's Exh. 14, Deal Dep. at 378. In listing the specific business advantages that he had vis-a-vis competing distributors, among other advantages Deal noted that "we had access to our trademarked and proprietary items." Id. at 389.<sup>19</sup>

[**86] Plaintiffs also refer to a July 5, 1991, letter from Matt Ilitch, Vice-President for Distribution at Blue Line, to Kathy Campbell of Leprino Foods, who was earlier the distributor before Blue Line moved into its distribution area of Northern California and Nevada. He noted that Leprino Foods was being displaced by Blue Line not because of any failures of Leprino "as our associate distributor. Rather it is part of the Little Caesar master plan to control distribution of Little Caesar brand products through its Blue Line distribution division." Lockridge Exh. 7.

In a January 17, 1989, memo from Deal to Ilitch, he again refers to the strategy for moving into the southeast through their Atlanta [*262] warehouse to compete with PYA Monarch by denying them access to "our super-proprietary items of square dough mix, spice mix and logoed packaging."

This approach, which will require those franchisees to place twice weekly food orders in the event they choose not to give us all their business, is bound to generate some degree of resentment among certain franchisees. Over time, however, I believe that they will not begrudge us our right to totally control distribution of our proprietary items [**87] and this move will put us in the best possible competitive situation.

Lockridge Exh. 9.

Plaintiffs contend it is precisely this conscious effort to leverage the sale of one product on the other that the tie-in antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

Plaintiffs' expert economists Stephen Siwek and Dr. Philip Nelson note that an anti-competitive tie-in can be accomplished through a series of actions and contracts rather than a single contract. They distinguish between "single systems distributors" that provide food services for a limited menu restaurant such as a Little Caesar franchise outlet, with a "broadline distributor" that services multiple restaurants or other food sale outlets. The economists indicate that most sales through such distributors are on a cost-plus basis, and thus the ability to buy in greater volume at lower costs or to cut transportation costs provides a substantial competitive advantage. The experts note that most systems distributors handle more than one restaurant chain, which allows them to bundle distribution deliveries to various stores run by different chains and thereby lower the unit cost of delivery. They also stress that such multi-chain [**88] systems have substantial buying power by buying supplies to service different chains, allowing them to negotiate good prices.<sup>20</sup> They add, for example, that AmeriServ's sales were larger in total volume than Blue Line's. They argue that they could show impact or damages based on an analysis of a typical "market basket" full of goods necessary to operate a franchise. Based on an analysis of the varying costs, they assert that the defendants through their asserted tie-in have forced each of the franchisees to pay higher prices for Blue Line's distribution services than they would have been paying had they been able to use or to credibly solicit the services of a competing distributor. Lockridge Exh. 1 at P 41. They note that this injury to class members can be proven based on overall prices charged for a market basket regularly purchased by a Little Caesar franchise. They explain further how the damages affected all of the franchisees, whether or not they would have switched to a competitive distributor, because the price competition would force Blue Line to lower its prices if they faced competition from an alternate distributor. This would benefit even the customers who stayed with [**89] Blue Line.

<sup>19</sup> Obviously an ultimate issue for the Court is whether defendants' strategy to limit access to the logoed products was a legal or an illegal business practice. For purposes of this motion for class certification, this Court must assume that plaintiffs' legal theory on this is correct, unless this Court wishes to invite and resolve motions for summary judgment of the issue prior to determining whether to certify a class. Compare Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F.2d 43 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 955 (1972), where it was held impermissible for the franchisor to control distribution of items needed for operation of a franchise when the criteria for those items could be set by specifications, with Krehl v. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co., 78 F.R.D. 108 (1978), in which the court held that the franchisor could control distribution of the product when it was the ultimate product being consumed by the customer. In the present case, the logoed items are sold to the customer, but, unlike Baskin-Robbins, these are not the products actually consumed by the customer.

<sup>20</sup> In a June 19, 1989, letter from David Deal when he was Senior Vice-President at Blue Line to Fred Dietrick at Food Services Enterprises, Inc., in Rocky River, Ohio, Deal noted that they had compared Blue Line's cost with that of a competitive distributor, Gordon's. He noted that Blue Line was producing a comparable cost result. With regard to "lower volume food items on the list," Deal acknowledged "we are purchasing much lower volumes than our competition and I would expect [these items] to be somewhat higher" (Bates # 00064).

William Burgess of AmeriServ, in his Declaration of August 3, 1994, noted that:

Without the ability to distribute logoed products as part of the full-line distribution program, it is not economically possible to compete [with Blue Line] because the food items are traditionally sold on very low margins and to achieve an economic blended profit margin, it is necessary to be able to also sell the higher profit paper and packaging.

Lockridge Exh., Burgess [**90] Declaration at P 17.<sup>21</sup> He noted that they quoted Little Caesar a blended profit of 8 to 8-1/2 percent for full line distribution services. Id. at P 19. He added that AmeriServ provided food services or at least delivery of food to multiple chains, and these delivery services were highly computerized allowing delivery two or [*263] more times a week, but one time a week was most economical. Id. at P 26. He stated that the major cost to a distributor is the cost of delivering the goods by truck ... [and] independent distributors that served multiple locations like AmeriServ and its competitors, that distributor has the capability to deliver the same goods at a lower cost than a distributor which is serving only one chain. Most national chain restaurants tend to be clustered in very close proximity to each other. As a result, AmeriServ can deliver, for example, to a Wendy's, Applebees, KFB, Burger King all of which may be situated at the same intersection or within blocks of each other.

Id. at P 28. In contrast, he noted that Blue Line serves only Little Caesar outlets, which tend to be spread out geographically. He also claimed that for other chains they serviced, [**91] AmeriServ was allowed to distribute logoed goods, including paper and packaging. "We purchase direct from the manufacturers in those instances." Id. at P 30. Finally, he asserted that AmeriServ had "greater purchasing power than Blue Line has, since the independent distributors purchase products for more than one chain." Id. at P 33. He concluded that:

I am aware of the locations of Blue Line warehouses and know that there are specialty distributors and/or broadline distributors capable of serving Little Caesar restaurants anywhere in the Continental United States.

Id. at P 34.

Plaintiffs have produced a document they argue suggests that defendants have admitted that facing a competitor would result in a lowering of Blue Line's profit margins and prices, not only in the competitive market, but nationwide. In the [**92] April 20, 1992, Deal to Ilitch memorandum dealing with the defendants' planned response to AmeriServ's efforts to enter the market in the southeastern United States, in addition to the planned efforts to limit their access to logoed products to force two deliveries, Deal also stated that:

We must move to modestly reduce our margins on items we will be competing on. At this time, it is difficult to really know how good our pricing is. However, I do think it is high enough that we can be undercut [hand written] "and AmeriServ still operate profitably." A percent or two we could quickly respond to, but if they get really aggressive we run the risk of losing the credibility we have worked so hard to regain. To minimize the risk of this, I think we need to gradually move our margins down over the next two to three months, particularly in the Southeast. Pricing would be adjusted on the high visibility items such as cheese, meats, boards and flour. Phasing this in over several months will reduce its visibility. I am suggesting price reductions which would lower our margin by 1.0 to 1.25 percentage points out of the Atlanta, Orlando and Greensboro, with reductions of about one-half [**93] that amount in other centers. This will probably not be enough to face down a competitive onslaught, but will reduce the attractiveness of our business and keep us within the credibility range.

Lockridge Exh. 11.

<sup>21</sup> In a January 21, 1993, memo from AmeriServ, it was noted that "without the logo products, it will be very difficult to make a successful program." Plaintiffs' Exh. 19.

In a supplemental declaration of October 16, 1995, from plaintiffs' experts Stephen Siwek and Philip Nelson, they assert:

The defendants in their brief have made a fundamental error by confusing the computation of damages with the antitrust impact requirement which only requires a showing of some anticompetitive effect on all class members.

Siwek and Nelson supplemental declaration of October 16, 1995.<sup>22</sup> This supplemental declaration points to P 44 of their earlier declaration, which reads as follows:

Because members of the class had the contractual right to use qualified distributors other than Blue Line, they had the right to "shop" the market for distribution services. Because of the tie, however, [*264] Blue Line's anticompetitive conduct adversely impacted all class members by preventing franchisees from entering into lower-price contracts with third-party distributors and by undermining the credibility of threats to leave Blue Line. [**94] LCE's policies thus undercut the ability of all franchisees to negotiate better prices with Blue Line. Moreover, the ability of some franchisees to negotiate better prices with Blue Line would have led to lower prices for other franchisees. For all of these reasons, Blue Line's exclusionary behavior adversely impacted all franchisees by reducing competitive pressures for system-wide price reductions.

The earlier declaration includes an appendix showing that each Blue Line Distributor had at least one nearby independent distributor that could have created a potential competitive threat.

Plaintiffs' experts also indicate in their supplemental declaration that discovery of the Deal to Ilitch April [**95] 20, 1992, memo shows:

(1) that Blue Line planned on reacting to potential competition from AmeriServ by reducing prices throughout the nation and (2) that the threat of AmeriServ's serving Little Caesar's franchisees (even before it actually served any of their franchisees, or had established its relative efficiencies) led Blue Line to seriously consider cutting its prices. The memorandum also suggests that because of its anticompetitive conduct, Blue Line was maintaining supra competitive pricing.

They also note that other national class cases, such as R & D Business Systems, Inv. v. Xerox, 150 F.R.D. 87 (E.D. Tex. 1993), certified a national class even though the defendant Xerox "faced different service competitors in different parts of the country."<sup>23</sup> Thus, they argue that regional differences might have an effect relating to actual damages but not to antitrust "impact" within the meaning of the standards for class certification.

[**96] Plaintiffs' experts also point out that while Blue Line asserts that it can purchase at better costs than other national distributors, this is a disputed issue of fact in which plaintiffs' experts assert that Blue Line is "much smaller and thus less efficient than large systems distributors, it is doubtful it could compete on the merits for franchisee business but for its anticompetitive practices (see, e.g. paragraphs 43 and 45, Siwek and Nelson's earlier declaration) (Supplemental Declaration at P 10).

With regard to the issue whether the scope of the tying arrangement involved only logoed products or also affected other items, plaintiffs' experts assert:

The defendants in their brief also argue that the scope of the products tied by the defendants' tying arrangement is an individualized issue. That argument ignores Blue Line's own documents which show that it analyzes its pricing on a market basket basis. (See, e.g. Appendix 6 to our prior declaration.) It also ignores the structural characteristics of the food distribution industry serving large chain accounts which do operate on highly structured cost-plus market basket pricing programs. In this type of environment, [**97] franchisees could not practically or economically make sustained purchases other than on a market basket program. Even if the tie is only of logo products, which is the most profitable portion of the market basket of goods, the franchisees are damaged across the entire line of products. This competitive effect is common to the class, given the way this industry operates.

<sup>22</sup> It could be honestly said that Siwek and Nelson were stating that I had also made a similar mistake in my earlier Report and Recommendation when I suggested that impact could only be proven on a regional basis. For reasons stated in footnote 29 below, I believe I did make this mistake in my earlier Report.

<sup>23</sup> See also, Collins v. International Dairy Queen, Inc., 168 F.R.D. 668 (M.D.Ga. 1996) (W.L. 501867).

Id. at P 11.

Plaintiffs in their briefs also state that "defendants have admitted in a prior brief that the "scope of the exclusive license is a common issue." Defendants' Third Supplemental Brief Opposing Class Certification at p. 2. Accordingly, plaintiffs argue that the effect of tying logoed goods is also a common issue. Finally, while plaintiffs argue that there is more than adequate common evidence to show the jury the scope of the tie, they also note that "the determination of the scope of the tie is unquestionably a merits [*265] issue relevant to damages which has no bearing on a class certification motion."

Plaintiffs, at n.9 of their brief, assert that in reaching my earlier determination I overlooked the assertion of William Burgess in his declaration and deposition that indicated AmeriServ was [**98] willing to distribute throughout the Continental United States. Plaintiffs' Exh. 2, Burgess Declaration Exh. 1, and Plaintiffs' Exh. 13, Burgess Deposition at p. 91. Whether this assertion is true or not, plaintiffs' experts and other common evidence do suggest of some economic impact throughout the country, even though the exact measure may need to be proven region by region and depend upon the realistic availability of a viable alternate distributor to Blue Line.

Other cases have also been certified for national class treatment even though they involved regional variances and damages. Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12652, 1994 WL 508737 (N.D. Calif. 1994); R & D Business Systems v. Xerox Corp., 150 F.R.D. 87 (E.D. Tex. 1993) (Lockridge Decl. Ex. 5); Martino v. McDonald's System, Inc., 81 F.R.D. 81 (N.D. Ill. 1979); Krehl v. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co., 78 F.R.D. 108 (C.D. Cal. 1978); Collins v. International Dairy Queen, Inc., 168 F.R.D. 668 (M.D.Ga. 1996), 1996 W.L. 501867.

IV. Analysis on Predominance of Common Facts:

HN19[] The commonality of proofs of a tie-in is an easy issue where there is an express contractual [**99] tie or an announced tie-in. The inability to prove a tie-in by the express or direct application of the contract or by a defendant's announcement will make the proofs far more complicated. This will often, if not generally, require use of individual proof of coercion, particularly where salesmanship, refusals, pressure, or subtle threats are involved. Yet, in evaluating whether common questions of law or fact predominate, the critical question under Rule 23(b)(3) is not whether the proofs are external to the contract terms,<sup>24</sup> nor whether they are complex instead of simple proofs. Rather, the critical question for Rule 23(b)(3) is whether the method of proving coercion involves facts -- even if complex and external to the contract -- that are predominately common to the class and not individual.

Judge Gadola notes that after Jefferson Parish, HN20[] "the important inquiry centers on the buyer's state [**100] of mind and whether the buyer was forced or coerced into making the purchase of the tied product by the seller's conduct," 895 F. Supp. at 904.<sup>25</sup> Yet, this does not render irrelevant the nature of the seller's action and intent. Clearly, the case law and commentators are in accord that "forcing" and "coercion" mean something less than that the buyer would not have bought from the defendant but for the alleged illegal act. Even if the buyer would have bought from the defendant without the illegal act, an act is still an illegal tie if it created an impermissible added inducement to purchase defendant's product B, or impermissibly altered the market and competitive capabilities of alternate sellers to lessen or remove altogether the consumer's choice in choosing a competitor's product.<sup>26</sup>

---

<sup>24</sup> Again, in Bogosian there had to be proofs external to the contract to show its practical economic effect.

<sup>25</sup> See also, Bogosian (Remand) opinion, 596 F. Supp. 621 (E.D.Pa. 1984).

[**101] In the present case, the buyer's state of mind of proposed class members knew there were no competitors offering logoed goods or other supplies needed to operate a franchise. The reasonable franchisee with the post-mid-1990 Franchise Agreement also knew (even Gary Smith reasonably must have known) that he had contractually given up the right to seek an alternate supplier of logoed goods. All of this was because of defendants' intended acts. This Court ultimately will determine if all of these acts as used in conjunction with the Blue Line exclusive [*266] license were legal competitive behaviors. If it determines that some were impermissible restraints on the market choice of consumers or on alternate potential distributors' ability to enter the market and compete with Blue Line, then--if this had an impact on prices franchisees paid for logoed products alone or for the entire market basket of goods needed to operate a franchise--an illegal tie-in is established even if the buyer did not know why only Blue Line distributed logoed goods or why potential alternate distributors felt inhibited or dissuaded from competing. Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge make it clear that these post-mid-1990 franchisees [**102] would not need to ask for relief from the limitation their Franchise Agreement imposed on them in order to state a tie-in claim. Nor does it seem they would have to ask for an alternate distributor of other products and accept two-stop shopping--from Blue Line for logoed goods and the competitor distributor for other items--if the total market basket price remained higher than would be the case if competitors could offer all products including logoed goods.

If this Court determines that for the buyers in the new proposed class the state of mind element necessary to establish a tie-in need only encompass the knowledge that to be an LCE franchise one must buy logoed goods from Blue Line (because they are the sole distributor) and not ask for an alternate source, those elements can be proven by facts common to the class. Other facts concerning the actions of the defendants that Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge found relevant to ambiguous understood conditions can also be proven by facts common to the class.

Common proofs are also available on the use of a form franchise contract, high percentage (nearly 100%) of bundled sales, and "onerous terms" or supra-competitive prices for product [**103] "B" [logoed goods or all franchise foodstuffs and supplies] again relevant evidence in an ambiguous "understood condition" case.<sup>27</sup>

Finally, whether the actions of defendants impermissibly dissuaded potential alternate distributors from entering the market or from competing as effectively with Blue Line also will involve proofs in which common questions of fact will predominate based on plaintiffs' proposed method of proceeding.<sup>28</sup> Whether the scope of the tie-in involves solely logoed goods or all products is a question that presently seems to involve a predominance of common questions of law and fact.

[**104] While plaintiffs may ultimately fail to prove defendants' actions were illegal, or fail to prove any effect on prices, or fail to prove the tie-in of logoed products leveraged a larger tie-in, all of these are merit questions that should not affect the class certification question. Based on plaintiffs' present theories and proffer of proofs, I believe

<sup>26</sup> As noted by Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge:

The best way to test whether buyers would otherwise have taken the defendant's tied product would be to offer the tying and tied products separately. If the best the defendant can say about an otherwise unlawful tie is that it has no effect, there is little reason to tolerate it.

(Footnote omitted.) Areeda, supra at 296.

<sup>27</sup> See Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge, supra, § 1756, pp. 314-323.

<sup>28</sup> The "one-stop" v. "two-stop" preference is not a critical issue if alternate competitors cannot compete without logoed goods as part of their mix. Also, the Court need not hear from every franchisee to determine whether offering "one-stop" shopping with a full line of products is a competitive advantage over offering only the non-logoed products. If it is a competitive advantage of some significance, as defendants seem to admit in their memoranda, and if it is obtained by an impermissible means, then an illegal tie-in could be established on this by predominately common proofs.

that common questions of law and fact predominate over individual questions on the liability issue of this tie-in claim, including the issue of impact as plaintiffs presently intend to prove impact.<sup>29</sup>

[*267] [**105] With regard to superiority of class treatment, if for purposes of class treatment we assume that plaintiffs' allegations are correct, then all class members are victims of the defendants' illegal tying arrangement. Until it has been determined as to the size of damages resulting from this illegal tie, it is hard to determine whether the levels of damages for each individual franchisee are sufficient to support and warrant an individual cause of action. Given the uncertainty of this, as well as the monumental task of taking on a complex and enormous litigation of a franchise antitrust claim, when added to the fact that each franchisee may also be reluctant to commence an individual action against the franchisor upon whom they are so dependent, it seems that a class action is a superior method, and that no alternative method of resolving this dispute would be as fair and efficient.

Clearly, this case can be bifurcated so that issues of liability are tried separately from those of damages. The Court can then consider whether to modify or whether to treat the damage claims as a class action, or use a Special Master or other device for calculation of damages. Notwithstanding defendants' [**106] arguments on complexity of damages, these issues need not be addressed in detail at this time. While defendants dispute its continued vitality, there is substantial case authority holding that HN21[↑] the need to compute individual damages will not prevent class certification on issues of liability.<sup>30</sup> [**107] If some mechanical method of computing individual damages, such as using some differential in profit margins charged multiplied by gross purchases by each individual franchisee, or some other common economic theory for measuring damages is not derived with possible use of subclasses, this Court could choose not to pursue the damages phase on a class basis.<sup>31</sup>

As noted by Newberg on Class Actions, § 4.26 at p. 4-90 to 4-93 (3d ed. 1992):

In most cases, the amount of damages suffered is an individual matter, but the Advisory Committee Notes expressly state that such needed individual proof of damages will not preclude a finding of predominance. Courts have substantially reduced the judicial burdens of resolving individual damage issues through various

<sup>29</sup> If one uses heuristically the Deal to Ilitch memo of April 20, 1992, to posit the hypothetical assumption that plaintiffs could prove that Blue Line would lower its profit margin by "1.0 to 1.255 percentage points" in areas faced with a potential competitor and "about one-half that amount at other [Blue Line distribution] centers," then the issue of impact could be shown nationwide with common proofs. The analysis in my earlier Report and Recommendation at pp. 55-58, on the need for regional proofs, then would be applicable only to the exact measure of damages--i.e., does the class member get damages of 1% of past purchases because there was an available alternate distributor in the region or only 1/2% of past sales as damages because there was no immediately available alternate distributor. In my earlier Report and Recommendation, I discounted plaintiffs' asserted common proofs of impact and confused them with the types of proofs needed to prove actual damages. Such fact-finding is inappropriate in a determination on class certification, and in this Report and Recommendation I do not wish to repeat this error.

<sup>30</sup> As noted by the Sixth Circuit in Sterling v. Velsicol Chemical Corp., 855 F.2d 1188, 1197 (6th Cir. 1988):

No matter how individualized the issue of damages may be, these issues may be reserved for individual treatment with the question of liability tried as a class action. Consequently, the mere fact that questions peculiar to each individual member of the class remain after the common questions of the defendant's liability have been resolved does not dictate the conclusion that a class action is impermissible.

I am also familiar with In re Consumers Power Securities Litigation, 105 F.R.D. 583 (E.D. Mich. 1985). In that case the damages issues involved sales on multiple dates at different prices of Consumers' various securities, which prices were allegedly inflated due to varying degrees of non-disclosure about the problems that Consumers Power was having with the development of its nuclear power facility at Midland, Michigan. The difference money calculations for each sale of security based upon an imputed actual fair market value had disclosures been made involved damages calculations of complexities at least equal to those in this case, if not far more complex.

<sup>31</sup> Plaintiffs' experts Siwek and Nelson have proposed various formulaic methods to compute damages. Even if this Court does not select a formulaic method to compute damages on a class-wide basis or by regions, it is not clear that a series of individual mini-trials would be necessary given the historical trend that many complex cases settle once the liability issues have been determined.

devices such as bifurcated trials of liability and damages issues with same or different juries; use of master or magistrates to preside over individual damages proceedings; class decertification after liability trial accompanied by notice to the class....

Thus, the potential difficulties involving damages [**108] in this case are not insurmountable and should not preclude class treatment over alternate means of litigating this dispute of national significance.

Accordingly, for the above-stated reasons, I recommend that the Court certify the proposed Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) damages class and allow the Smith plaintiffs to serve as class representatives.<sup>32</sup>

[*268] V. Class Certification on Tying Claim Injunction/Declaratory Judgment Relief:

Plaintiffs seek class certification not only for their damages claims on the mid-1990 Franchise Agreement, but they also seek declaratory and injunctive relief for the same class under Rule 23\(b\)\(2\).<sup>33</sup> HN22 [↑] In addition to the Rule 23\(a\) requirements of numerosity, common questions, typicality, and fair and adequate representation, Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) requires the plaintiffs to show that "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding [**109] declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole." Because I have recommended that the tying claim be certified for class treatment on damages, it should be similarly treated with respect to declaratory and any injunctive relief this Court may deem appropriate if it determines that there has been a tie-in violation.

In the present case, if proven, the defendants acted on "grounds generally applicable" to all post-mid-1990 franchisees thereby satisfying Rule 23\(b\)\(2\). See Senter v. General Motors Corp., 532 F.2d 511 (6th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 870, 50 L. Ed. 2d 150, 97 S. Ct. 182 (1976); Weathers v. Peters Realty Corp., 499 F.2d 1197 (6th Cir. 1974). The Court should consider certifying a declaratory and injunctive class even if it determines the case should not be certified under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) for the damages claim.

Newberg, Wright, Miller and Kane, and the official Committee notes to Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) all conclude that HN23 [↑] the defendants' allegedly wrongful conduct need not be directed at or damaging to every member of the class for a Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) class action. 1 H. Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions, § 4.11 (3d ed. 1992); 7A Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1775 at pp. 455-56 (2d ed. 1986); 1966 Committee notes to Rule 23\(b\)\(2\).

The 1966 Committee Notes use as an example of an appropriate injunctive class a challenge to the legality of an alleged tying arrangement:

So also a patentee of a machine, charged with selling or licensing the machine on condition that purchasers or licensees also purchase or obtain licenses to use an ancillary unpatented machine, could be sued on a class basis by a numerous group of competing sellers or licensors of the unpatented machine, to test the legality of the "tying" condition.

HN24 [↑] Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) requires a showing that the party opposing the class acted on grounds generally applicable to the class. Unlike Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), it does not require the Court to determine the predominance of common [**111] questions of law and fact or the superiority of class action treatment of adjudication.

Thus, I recommend this Court certify the proposed Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) declaratory and injunctive class and allow the Smith plaintiffs to serve as class representatives.<sup>34</sup>

<sup>32</sup> See footnote 3 above and surrounding text.

<sup>33</sup> The Court may determine that injunctive relief is not necessary in light of the fact that defendants recently have approved alternate distributors and have given them access to logoed products.

<sup>34</sup> See footnote 3 above and surrounding text.

RECOMMENDATION

IT IS RECOMMENDED that this Court certify the proposed damages and declaratory and injunctive class and allow the Smith plaintiffs to serve as class representatives.

As with my earlier Report, because of the length of this Report and Recommendation and the complexity of the issue, the parties should have twenty (20) business days from the service of a copy hereof as provided for in 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1) and E.D. Mich. LR 72.1(d)(2). Because service is by mail, this deadline date for objecting shall be November 4, 1996. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(e). Failure to file specific objections constitutes a waiver of any further right of appeal. Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 88 L. Ed. 2d 435, [**112] 106 S. Ct. 466 (1985); Howard v. Secretary of HHS, 932 F.2d 505 (6th Cir. 1991); United States v. Walters, 638 F.2d 947 (6th Cir. 1981). Filing [*269] of objections which raise some issues but fail to raise others with specificity, will not preserve all the objections a party might have to this Report and Recommendation. Smith v. Detroit Fed'n of Teachers Local 231, 829 F.2d 1370, 1373 (6th Cir. 1987). Pursuant to E.D. Mich. LR 72.1(d)(2), a copy of any objections is to be served upon this Magistrate Judge. (The service copy need not include exhibits submitted on this or the earlier class certification motion.)

Within ten (10) business days of service of any objecting party's timely filed objections, the opposing party may file a response. It should also be served on the Magistrate Judge without exhibits earlier submitted.

Objections and responses shall be not more than thirty-five (35) pages in length unless by motion and order such page limit is extended by the Court. The response shall address specifically, and in the same order raised, each issue contained within the objections.

STEVEN D. PEPE

UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Dated: September 30, 1996

Ann Arbor, Michigan

[**113] ATTACHMENT

[EDITOR'S NOTE: THIS DOCUMENT IS REPORTED AT: 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9308.]

---

End of Document

Heritage Home Health, Inc. v. Capital Region Health Care Corp.

United States District Court for the District of New Hampshire

October 1, 1996, Decided ; October 1, 1996, Filed

Civil No. 95-558-JD

Reporter

1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22387 *; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,584

Heritage Home Health, Inc. v. Capital Region Health Care Corp., et al.

Disposition: [*1] Defendants' motion for summary judgment (document no. 17) granted as to the claims in count III based on RSA § 356:2. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on count IV (document no. 21) denied in part and granted in part. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on count V (document no. 18) granted.

Core Terms

---

patients, defendants', home health care, private right of action, prospective contractual relation, tortious interference, amended complaint, plaintiff's claim, subsidiaries, pleadings, providers, contractual relationship, summary judgment motion, motion for judgment, motion to dismiss, summary judgment, contracts, referrals

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

A court may only grant a motion for summary judgment where the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial burden of establishing the lack of a genuine issue of material fact. The court must view the entire record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, indulging all reasonable inferences in that party's favor. However, once the moving party has submitted a properly supported motion for summary judgment, the nonmoving party may not rest upon mere allegation or denials of its pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

RSA § 356:2 (New Hampshire) prohibits contracts, combinations, and conspiracies that restrain trade or have various anticompetitive purposes or effects. RSA § 356:2 (1995). Courts interpreting the provision specifically are authorized to use the antitrust laws of the United States as a guide. § 356:13. Given the unity of interest between and among a corporation and its subsidiaries, neither the coordinated activity of the corporation and its subsidiaries nor the coordinated activity of the subsidiaries can constitute a violation of the statute. Although the New Hampshire Supreme Court has not addressed the question of whether the joint conduct of a corporation and its employees can constitute a violation of the statute, federal courts construing the federal analog of RSA § 356:2, § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, hold that, absent proof of divergent interests between a corporation and its employees, the Copperweld doctrine precludes an action based on such conduct.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN3 [down] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

A motion for judgment on the pleadings will be granted if, accepting all of the plaintiff's factual averments contained in the complaint as true, and drawing every reasonable inference helpful to the plaintiff's cause, it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The court's inquiry is a limited one, focusing not on whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims. In making its inquiry, the court must accept all of the factual averments contained in the complaint as true, and draw every reasonable inference in favor of the plaintiff.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN4 [down] Intentional Interference, Elements

New Hampshire recognizes the torts of intentional interference with contractual relations, and intentional interference with prospective contractual relations. The contract or prospective contract need not be reduced or expected to be reduced to a formal, written instrument. Instead, all that is required is a promise, or the reasonable expectation of a promise, creating a duty recognized by law.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN5 [down] Intentional Interference, Elements

One who intentionally and improperly interferes with the performance of a contract (except a contract to marry) between another and a third person by inducing or otherwise causing the third person not to perform the contract, is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss resulting to the other from the failure of the third person to perform the contract.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN6 [down arrow] Intentional Interference, Elements

One who intentionally and improperly interferes with another's prospective contractual relation (except a contract to marry) is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary harm resulting from loss of the benefits of the relation, whether the interference consists of (a) inducing or otherwise causing a third person not to enter or continue the prospective relation or (b) preventing the other from acquiring or continuing the prospective relation.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN7 [down arrow] Intentional Interference, Elements

To permit a cause of action for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations to proceed in the absence of any relationship whatsoever between the plaintiff and its potential customers would run afoul of the New Hampshire Supreme Court's statement that to prove either tortious interference with a prospective agreement or tortious interference with a contractual relationship, the plaintiff must prove that a plaintiff had a contractual relationship with a third party.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN8 [down arrow] Intentional Interference, Elements

One who intentionally causes a third person not to enter into a prospective contractual relation with another who is his competitor or not to continue an existing contract terminable at will does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if (a) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and the other and (b) the actor does not employ wrongful means and (c) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint of trade and (d) his purpose is at least in part to advance his interest in competing with the other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN9 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

RSA § 356:3 (New Hampshire) prohibits the establishment, maintenance or use of monopoly power, or any attempt to establish, maintain or use monopoly power over trade or commerce for the purpose of affecting competition or controlling, fixing or maintaining prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10 [down arrow] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits the monopolization, or attempted monopolization, of any part of interstate commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Public Health & Welfare Law > Social Security > Medicare > General Overview

Public Health & Welfare Law > ... > Medicaid > Providers > General Overview

HN11 [down arrow] Social Security, Medicare

42 U.S.C.S. § 1395a does not provide a private right of action to parties other than patients, for whose benefit the statute was enacted. In addition, § 1395nn, which prohibits physicians from making self-interested referrals for services otherwise payable by Medicare, appears not to have been enacted for the special benefit of health care providers seeking referrals, and specifically contemplates that the Secretary of Health and Human Services may initiate a civil action to recover payments made in violation of the statute or to assess civil monetary fines. 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 1395nn(g), § 1320a-7a(c). These factors evince a lack of congressional intent to confer a private right of action on the plaintiff through § 1395nn.

Public Health & Welfare Law > Social Security > Medicare > Eligibility

Public Health & Welfare Law > ... > Medicaid > Eligibility > General Overview

HN12 [down arrow] Medicare, Eligibility

See 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395a.

Torts > ... > Proof > Violations of Law > General Overview

Torts > ... > Proof > Violations of Law > Statutes

HN13 [down arrow] Proof, Violations of Law

Under New Hampshire law, liability may be based on the violation of a statute if the (1) plaintiff is a member of the class protected by the statute; (2) the harm inflicted is the type intended to be protected against; and (3) the legislature expressed an intent, either explicitly or implicitly, that a violation of the statute should give rise to a cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Public Health & Welfare Law > Social Security > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

Concerning the first and second prongs of the Marquay test, the statutory scheme of RSA § 125:25-b\(III\) (New Hampshire) is designed to protect patients from making uninformed decisions, and does not specifically seek to provide another remedy to health care providers claiming to be victims of anticompetitive activity. As to the third prong, the court notes that neither provision expressly provides a private right of action to a party injured as a result of violations of the statute, and that both provisions contemplate enforcement through disciplinary action against offending practitioners or entities, to be meted out under the direction of the state division of public health services. RSA § 125:25-b\(VI\) (Supp. 1995); id. § 125:25-c\(VIII\) (Supp. 1995).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

RSA § 125:25-b (New Hampshire) requires physicians with ownership interests in the entities to which they refer patients to disclose the nature of their interests to their patients. RSA § 125:25-c requires health care practitioners and entities owned by health care practitioners to disclose such interests to the state division of public health services.

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Public Health & Welfare Law, Healthcare

RSA § 125:25-b\(III\) (New Hampshire) requires practitioners having an ownership interest in an entity to which he is referring patients to include the following language conspicuously on the face of a written referral: The referring health care practitioner maintains an ownership interest in the facility to which you are being referred. You are not required to utilize the facility to which you are being referred for these services. These services may be available elsewhere in the community. This office will provide an alternate referral upon your request. RSA § 125:25-b\(III\).

Counsel: For HERITAGE HOME HEALTH, INC., plaintiff: Peter G. McGrath, Esq., McGrath Law Office, PA, Concord, NH.

For CAPITAL REGION HEALTH CARE CORP., CONCORD HOSPITAL, INC., CONCORD REGIONAL VISITING NURSES ASSOCIATION, DAVID WORSTER, MARY LIMOGES, defendants: Donald J. Perrault, Esq., Wadleigh, Starr, Peters, Dunn, & Chiesa, Manchester, NH.

Judges: Joseph A. DiClerico, Jr., Chief Judge.

Opinion by: Joseph A. DiClerico, Jr.

---

Opinion*ORDER

The plaintiff, Heritage Home Health, Inc. ("Heritage") brought this action against the defendants, Capital Region Health Care Corp. ("Capital Region"); two of Capital Region's wholly owned subsidiaries, Concord Hospital and Concord Regional Visiting Nurses Association ("VNA"); and David Worster and Mary Limoges, respectively, the current and former Director of Social Services at Concord Hospital, alleging anticompetitive conduct under various [*2] state and federal law theories. Before the court are the defendants' motion for summary judgment on count III of the plaintiff's amended complaint (document no. 17) and the defendants' motions to dismiss counts IV and V (documents nos. 21 & 18).

Background

1

Heritage is a New Hampshire corporation licensed by the state to provide nursing services to patients in their homes and as a hospice to provide services to terminally ill patients. According to Heritage, consumers for home health services generally are either patients who have been discharged from hospitals and require follow-up care, or are patients who have received referrals from physicians or social workers acting in their capacity as hospital employees. Heritage actively and aggressively solicits referrals from hospitals throughout New Hampshire, including defendant Concord Hospital, which serves and, according to Heritage, "enjoys a virtual [*3] monopoly over the provision of acute and emergency care services in," central New Hampshire. Amended Complaint P 28.

The defendant VNA is a not-for-profit corporation also providing home health services to patients. The VNA and Concord Hospital, both wholly owned subsidiaries of Capital Region, claim the same Concord address as their principal place of business. The defendants employ a "nurse liaison" who works at Concord Hospital and visits patients in need of home health care services, including those who may already have entered into contractual relationships with home health care providers, and refers the patients exclusively to the VNA for home health care services. The nurse liaison does not inform patients that the VNA is owned by the same corporation that owns the hospital, and the defendants have made no disclosures to the state division of public health services concerning either Capital Region's ownership of the VNA or the nature of the referral process at Concord Hospital. Heritage does not have access to the medical records of patients who receive care at Concord Hospital.

The plaintiff commenced this action on November 17, 1995, filed an amended complaint on December 20, 1995, and [*4] moved to withdraw count I of its amended complaint on May 17, 1996. Thus, it currently alleges that the defendants (1) have attempted to monopolize and have monopolized the home health care market in central New Hampshire by committing various anticompetitive acts in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (count II); have prevented home health care providers other than the VNA from gaining access to patients at Concord Hospital in violation of the New Hampshire Combinations and Monopolies Act, N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. ("RSA") § 356 (count III); (3) tortiously interfered with the plaintiff's contractual and prospective contractual relations (count IV); and (4) failed to disclose their ownership interests in the VNA to patients at Concord Hospital and to the state division of public health services in violation of 42 U.S.C. §§ 1395a, 1395nn and RSA §§ 125:25-b, 125:25-c (count V).

Discussion

I. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment

The defendants argue that summary judgment is warranted on the claims asserted in count III that are based on RSA § 356:2<sup>2</sup> because the defendants -- a parent company, two of its [*5] wholly owned subsidiaries, and two individuals acting in their roles as employees of one of the subsidiaries -- legally are incapable of contracting, combining, or conspiring in restraint of trade within the meaning of the statute.

---

<sup>1</sup> The facts relevant to the instant motions either have been alleged by the plaintiff or are not in dispute.

<sup>2</sup> The defendants have not moved for summary judgment on the count III claims that allege violations of RSA § 356:3.

HN1[] The court may only grant a motion for summary judgment where the "pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial burden of establishing the lack of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Quintero de Quintero v. Aponte-Roque, 974 F.2d 226, 227-28 (1st Cir. 1992). The court must view [*6] the entire record in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, "indulging all reasonable inferences in that party's favor." Mesnick v. General Elec. Co., 950 F.2d 816, 822 (1st Cir. 1991) (quoting Griggs-Ryan v. Smith, 904 F.2d 112, 115 (1st Cir. 1990)), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 985 (1992). However, once the defendant has submitted a properly supported motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff "may not rest upon mere allegation or denials of its pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986) (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\)).

HN2[] RSA § 356:2 prohibits contracts, combinations, and conspiracies that restrain trade or have various anticompetitive purposes or effects. RSA § 356:2 (1995). Courts interpreting the provision specifically are authorized to use the antitrust laws of the United States as a guide. Id. § 356:13. Given the unity of interest between and among a corporation and its subsidiaries, neither the coordinated activity of the corporation and its subsidiaries nor the [*7] coordinated activity of the subsidiaries can constitute a violation of the statute. Kenneth E. Curran, Inc. v. Auclair Transp., Inc., 128 N.H. 743, 748-49, 519 A.2d 280, 284 (1986) (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); Century Oil Tool, Inc. v. Production Specialties, Inc., 737 F.2d 1316, 1317 (5th Cir. 1984)). Although the New Hampshire Supreme Court has not addressed the question of whether the joint conduct of a corporation and its employees can constitute a violation of the statute, federal courts construing the federal analog of RSA § 356:2, section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, have held that, absent proof of divergent interests between a corporation and its employees, the Copperweld doctrine precludes an action based on such conduct. See, e.g., Okusami v. Psychiatric Inst., 295 U.S. App. D.C. 58, 959 F.2d 1062, 1065 (D.C. Cir. 1992); Odishelidze v. Aetna Life & Casualty Co., 853 F.2d 21, 23 (1st Cir. 1988). In light of the statute's instruction that courts look to federal antitrust law for [*8] guidance, the New Hampshire Supreme Court's acceptance of the Copperweld doctrine, and the absence of any allegations of divergent interests among the defendants, the court finds that the plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that the defendants were legally capable of forming a contract, combination, or conspiracy in violation of RSA § 356:2.

Accordingly, the court grants summary judgment to the defendants on the plaintiff's count III claims alleging violations of RSA § 356:2.

II. Defendants' Motions Under Rule 12

The defendants have moved to dismiss counts IV and V of the amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. However, because the defendants already have filed an answer to the plaintiffs' complaint, the pleadings have closed under Fed. R. Civ. P. 7\(a\). As such, the court will treat the defendants' motions to dismiss counts IV and V as motions for judgment on the pleadings. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(c\).

HN3[] A motion for judgment on the pleadings will be granted if, accepting all of the plaintiff's factual averments contained in the complaint as true, and drawing every reasonable inference helpful [*9] to the plaintiff's cause, "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Rivera-Gomez v. de Castro, 843 F.2d 631, 635 (1st Cir. 1988). The court's inquiry is a limited one, focusing not on "whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974) (motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\)). In making its inquiry, the court must accept all of the factual averments contained in the complaint as true, and draw every reasonable inference in favor of the plaintiff. Garita Hotel Ltd. Partnership v. Ponce Fed. Bank, 958 F.2d 15, 17 (1st Cir. 1992) (Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion); Santiago de Castro v. Morales Medina, 943 F.2d 129, 130 (1st Cir. 1991) (Rule 12\(c\) motion).

A. Count IV: Tortious Interference with Contractual and Prospective Contractual Relations

The defendants argue that the plaintiff has failed to state a claim for tortious interference with contractual and prospective contractual [*10] relations because the plaintiff has failed to identify any contracts between itself and patients that existed or were likely to exist with which the defendants interfered. They further contend that any interference with the plaintiff's contracts or prospective contracts was not, as a matter of law, improper.

HN4[] New Hampshire recognizes the torts of intentional interference with contractual relations, see, e.g., Montrone v. Maxfield, 122 N.H. 724, 726, 449 A.2d 1216, 1217 (1982) (citing Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766 (1979)),<sup>3</sup> and intentional interference with prospective contractual relations, see, e.g., Baker v. Dennis Brown Realty, Inc., 121 N.H. 640, 644, 433 A.2d 1271, 1273-74 (1981) (citing Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766B (1979)).<sup>4</sup> The contract or prospective contract need not be reduced or expected to be reduced to a formal, written instrument. Instead, all that is required is a promise, or the reasonable expectation of a promise, creating a duty recognized by law. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766 cmt. f (1979); id. § 766B cmt. c; see Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., 774 F. Supp. 225, 233-34 (D.N.J. 1991) [*11] (interpreting Restatement § 766B), rev'd on other grounds, 980 F.2d 171 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 921, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993).

[*12] Here, the plaintiff has alleged that patients with whom it had established some form of business relationship "were, upon discharge [from Concord Hospital], intentionally diverted to VNA for their home health care needs," and that the defendants knew of the patients' relationships with the plaintiff. See Amended Complaint PP 45-47. These allegations provide an adequate factual basis for the plaintiff's claims of tortious interference with contractual relations.

However, to the extent the plaintiff also seeks relief based on its allegation that, given its capabilities, it had and has "prospects of contractual relations with a portion of the market of home health care patients that exists in the central New Hampshire area," id. P 48, it has failed to state a claim. The court has found no authority for the proposition that a plaintiff may bring an action for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations based solely on a plaintiff's potential for capturing a share of a given market. Moreover, HN7[] to permit such a cause of action to proceed in the absence of any relationship whatsoever between the plaintiff and its potential customers would run afoul of the New Hampshire [*13] Supreme Court's statement that "to prove either tortious interference with a prospective agreement or tortious interference with a contractual relationship, the plaintiff must prove . . . that a plaintiff had a contractual relationship with" a third party. Montrone, 122 N.H. at 726, 449 A.2d at 1217. Accordingly, the court finds that the plaintiff has stated a claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations only to the extent it seeks relief for the defendants' interference with already existing relationships that give rise to a "reasonable expectation of economic advantage." Fineman, 774 F. Supp. at 234.

<sup>3</sup> Section 766 of the Restatement provides:

Intentional Interference with Performance of Contract by Third Person

HN5[] One who intentionally and improperly interferes with the performance of a contract (except a contract to marry) between another and a third person by inducing or otherwise causing the third person not to perform the contract, is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss resulting to the other from the failure of the third person to perform the contract.

<sup>4</sup> Section 766B of the Restatement provides:

Intentional Interference with Prospective Contractual Relation

HN6[] One who intentionally and improperly interferes with another's prospective contractual relation (except a contract to marry) is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary harm resulting from loss of the benefits of the relation, whether the interference consists of

- (a) inducing or otherwise causing a third person not to enter or continue the prospective relation or
- (b) preventing the other from acquiring or continuing the prospective relation.

As to the defendants' claim that its conduct was not, as a matter of law, improper, their argument is without merit. The Restatement provides in pertinent part:

Competition as Proper or Improper Interference

HN8 [↑] (1) One who intentionally causes a third person not to enter into a prospective contractual relation with another who is his competitor or not to continue an existing contract terminable at will does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if

- (a) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition [*14] between the actor and the other and
- (b) the actor does not employ wrongful means and
- (c) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint of trade and
- (d) his purpose is at least in part to advance his interest in competing with the other.

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 768 (1979). The defendants boldly assert that, based on their motion for summary judgment on count III, the plaintiff cannot show that the defendants' actions were wrongful or that their actions constituted an unlawful restraint of trade. However, as noted supra, the defendants have acknowledged that their motion for summary judgment on count III is directed only at the plaintiff's claims under RSA § 356:2, and does not address the plaintiff's claims under HN9 [↑] RSA § 356:3, which prohibits "the establishment, maintenance or use of monopoly power, or any attempt to establish, maintain or use monopoly power over trade or commerce for the purpose of affecting competition or controlling, fixing or maintaining prices." In addition, count II of the amended complaint alleges that the defendants violated HN10 [↑] section 2 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits the monopolization, or attempted monopolization, [*15] of any part of interstate commerce. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2 \(West Supp. 1996\). The plaintiff has pleaded facts sufficient to support its claims that the defendants wrongfully and unlawfully interfered with the defendants' contractual and prospective contractual relations.

The defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on count IV is denied to the extent the plaintiff seeks relief for the defendants' interference with already existing relationships, and granted to the extent the plaintiff's claim is based on its potential for capturing a share of the home health care market.

B. Count V: Failure to Disclose Ownership Interests

The defendants argue that dismissal is warranted on the plaintiff's failure to disclose claims under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1395a, 1395nn and RSA §§ 125:25-b, 125:25-c, because none of these statutory provisions confers a private right of action upon health care providers. The court considers these claims seriatim.

1. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1395a, 1395nn

Despite the plaintiff's contention that "the plain language of [42 U.S.C. \[§\] 1395](#) allows this cause of action," Memorandum [*16] of Law in Opposition to Motion to Dismiss at 6, the court has found no cases holding that the provisions of the statute under which the plaintiff is proceeding provide a private right of action to health care providers. In fact, both federal courts that have considered the question have concluded that HN11 [↑] § 1395a does not provide a private right of action to parties other than patients, for whose benefit the statute was enacted.<sup>5</sup> Mays v. Hospital Auth., 582 F. Supp. 425, 430-31 (N.D. Ga. 1984) (no private right of action for physicians); Home Health Care Services, Inc. v. Currie, 531 F. Supp. 476, 478 (D.S.C. 1982) (no private right of action for home health care providers), aff'd, 706 F.2d 497 \(1983\).<sup>6</sup> In addition, § 1395nn, which prohibits physicians from making self-

<sup>5</sup> The statute provides:

HN12 [↑] Any individual entitled to insurance benefits under this subchapter may obtain health services from any institution, agency, or person qualified to participate under this subchapter if such institution, agency, or person undertakes to provide him such services.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1395a \(West 1992\).

interested referrals for services otherwise payable by Medicare, appears not to have been enacted for the special benefit of health care providers seeking referrals, and specifically contemplates that the Secretary of Health and Human Services may initiate a civil action to recover payments made in violation of the statute or to assess civil monetary fines. See [*17] 42 U.S.C. § 1395nn\(g\) \(West Supp. 1996\); id. § 1320a-7a\(c\) (West Supp. 1996). These factors evince a lack of congressional intent to confer a private right of action on the plaintiff through § 1395nn. See Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66, 78, 45 L. Ed. 2d 26, 95 S. Ct. 2080 \(1975\). Accordingly, the plaintiff's claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1395 are dismissed.

[*18] B. RSA §§ 125:25-b, 125:25-c

HN13 [↑] Under New Hampshire law, liability may be based on the violation of a statute if the (1) plaintiff is a member of the class protected by the statute; (2) the harm inflicted is the type intended to be protected against; and (3) the legislature expressed an intent, either explicitly or implicitly, that a violation of the statute should give rise to a cause of action. Marquay v. Eno, 139 N.H. 708, 715, 662 A.2d 272, 277-78 \(1995\) (quoting Bob Godfrey Pontiac, Inc. v. Roloff, 291 Ore. 318, 326, 630 P.2d 840, 844-45 \(1981\)). After reviewing the language and structure of the disclosure requirements of RSA §§ 125:25-b, 125:25-c,<sup>7</sup> [*20] the court finds that no private right of action is available to the plaintiff under either provision. HN14 [↑] Concerning the first and second prongs of the Marquay test, the court infers from the disclosure requirement set forth in RSA § 125:25-b\(III\)<sup>8</sup> that the statutory scheme is designed to protect patients from making uninformed decisions, and does not specifically seek to provide another remedy to health care providers claiming to be victims of anticompetitive activity. As to the third prong, [*19] the court notes that neither provision expressly provides a private right of action to a party injured as a result of violations of the statute, and that both provisions contemplate enforcement through disciplinary action against offending practitioners or entities, to be meted out under the direction of the state division of public health services. See RSA § 125:25-b\(VI\) (Supp. 1995); id. § 125:25-c\(VIII\) (Supp. 1995). Finally, the court notes that the New Hampshire Supreme Court has yet to recognize any private right of action under the statutory scheme, and that, as a general matter, "expansive reading of New Hampshire statutes and recognition of novel causes of action under those statutes is a practice best left to the New Hampshire Supreme Court." Kelley v. City of Manchester, No. 94-358-M, slip op. at 17 \(D.N.H. Sept. 29, 1995\). Accordingly, the plaintiff's claims under RSA §§ 125:25-b, 125:25-c are dismissed.

Conclusion

---

<sup>6</sup>The court pauses to note that its resolution of the instant motion has been hampered by the amoebic nature of the plaintiff's claims. Prior to specifying the provisions of § 1395 under which it is seeking relief, the plaintiff distinguished Mays and Currie on the ground that they involved provisions that were "entirely different" than those implicated by the instant action. Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Motion to Dismiss at 6. It was only after twice being ordered by the court to specify the provisions under which it was proceeding that the plaintiff made reference to § 1395a, the very provision under which Mays and Currie were decided, and § 1395nn.

<sup>7</sup>HN15 [↑] RSA § 125:25-b requires physicians with ownership interests in the entities to which they refer patients to disclose the nature of their interests to their patients. RSA § 125:25-c requires health care practitioners and entities owned by health care practitioners to disclose such interests to the state division of public health services.

<sup>8</sup>HN16 [↑] The statute requires practitioners having an ownership interest in an entity to which he is referring patients to include the following language conspicuously on the face of a written referral:

The referring health care practitioner maintains an ownership interest in the facility to which you are being referred. You are not required to utilize the facility to which you are being referred for these services. These services may be available elsewhere in the community. This office will provide an alternate referral upon your request.

The defendants' motion for summary judgment (document no. 17) is granted as to the claims in count III based on RSA § 356:2. The defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on count IV (document no. 21) is denied to the extent the plaintiff seeks relief for the defendants' interference with already existing relationships, and granted to the extent the plaintiff's claim is based on its potential for capturing a share of the home health care market. The defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on count [*21] V (document no. 18) is granted.

SO ORDERED.

Joseph A. DiClerico, Jr.

Chief Judge

October 1, 1996

---

End of Document

In re Citric Acid Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

October 1, 1996, Decided ; October 2, 1996, FILED

MDL No. 95-1092 and Master File No. C-95-2963 FMS

Reporter

1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16409 *; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,595

IN RE: CITRIC ACID ANTITRUST LITIGATION; THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO: All Actions

Disposition: [*1] Plaintiffs' motion for class certification granted.

Core Terms

---

citric acid, prices, class member, products, conspiracy, antitrust, class action, courts, class certification, price-fixing, predominate, purchasers, cases, certification, plaintiffs', class representative, alleged conspiracy, question of law, class-wide, unfamiliar, Bottling, lawsuit, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The burden of proving that a class is appropriate rests with the proponent of the class. The party seeking to maintain the action as a class suit must, therefore, establish a prima facie showing of each of the four certification prerequisites and must demonstrate that appropriate grounds for a class action exist. The failure to carry this burden as to any one of the requirements precludes the maintenance of the lawsuit as a class action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Prerequisites for Class Action, Numerosity

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) sets out four conjunctive requirements that must be met in all class actions: (1) the class must be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there must be questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties must be typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties must fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Verdicts > Inconsistent Verdicts

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3 [] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\), the trial court must find either: (1) that common questions of law or fact predominate and that a class action is superior to other available methods of adjudication, (2) that the defendant acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, so that declaratory or injunctive relief is appropriate with respect to the entire class, (3) that the prosecution of individual actions would create a risk of inconsistent verdicts that would establish incompatible standards of conduct for defendant, or (4) that adjudication of individual claims would be dispositive of the claims of non-party class members, or substantially impede the ability of non-party class members to pursue their own claims. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(1\)-\(3\).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Supplemental Pleadings

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN4 [] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Before ordering that a lawsuit may proceed as a class action, the trial court must rigorously analyze whether the class action allegations meet the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. Because the early resolution of the class certification question requires some degree of speculation, however, all that is required is that the trial court form a "reasonable judgment" on each certification requirement. In formulating this judgment, the trial court may properly consider both the allegations of the class action complaint and the supplemental evidentiary submissions of the parties.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN5 [] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(1\) requires that the size of the proposed class be so large that joinder of all class members is impracticable. There is no set numerical cut-off.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN6 [] Prerequisites for Class Action, Numerosity

A finding of numerosity may be supported by common-sense assumptions.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3) requires that the claims or defenses of the plaintiff seeking to be the named representative for the class be typical of those of the other members of the class for which certification is sought. The claims and defenses are typical if they stem from the same event, practice, or course of conduct that forms the basis of the claims of the class and are based on the same legal or remedial theory.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Parties are generally considered to be adequate representatives of absent class members if there are no conflicts of interest between the representatives and class members, and if the trial court is persuaded that counsel for the representatives will vigorously pursue the action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In determining the adequacy of representation of a class, the emphasis has been and should be placed on whether the representative's counsel is capable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN10** [down] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The threshold of knowledge required to qualify a class representative is not high. A party must be familiar with the basic elements of his claim and will be deemed inadequate only if she is "startlingly unfamiliar" with the case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN11** [down] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

It is not necessary that a representative be intimately familiar with every factual and legal issue in the case. It is enough that the representative understand the gravamen of the claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN12** [down] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In determining adequacy of representation, the trial court must evaluate the ability of the named representatives to represent the interest of the class fairly and adequately. This inquiry focuses on whether the representative has antagonistic or conflicting interests with the unnamed class members.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

In deciding whether a class action can be maintained under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\)*, the trial court must focus on liability issues.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Certification of Classes > Decertification

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > References

HN14 [blue icon] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Courts resolve doubts in antitrust actions in favor of certifying a class. The trial court retains the authority, however, to withdraw class certification in part or in whole, should the questions of adequate representation or predominance of common issues develop so as to make a class action unwarranted. Other options short of decertification are also available to the trial court if individual issues arise but do not predominate. These include referral to a magistrate judge or creation of subclasses.

Counsel: For 7-UP BOTTLING COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, INC., Plaintiff, (Master File No. C-95-2963 FMS): Kirk B. Hulett, Barrack Rodos & Bacine, San Diego, CA. Leonard Barrack, Steven A. Asher, Barrack Rodos & Bacine, Philadelphia, PA. Guido Saveri, Richard Saveri, Saveri & Saveri, San Francisco, CA. Joseph W. Cotchett, Bruce L. Simon, Nancy L. Fineman, Cotchett & Pitre, Burlingame, CA. Steven A. Kanner, Michael J. Freed, Michael Hyman, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg, Ament & Eiger PC, Chicago, IL.

For ARCHER DANIELS MIDLAND CO., INC., defendant, (Master File No. C-95-2963 FMS): Edward P. Sangster, Robert Brewer, Jr., McKenna & Cuneo LLP, San Francisco, CA. Aubrey M. Daniel, III, John E. Schmidlein, Steven R. Kuney, Williams & Connolly, Washington, DC.

For CARGILL INC, defendant, (Master File No. C-95-2963 FMS): Charles F. Preuss, Vernon I. Zvoleff, John J. Powers, Preuss Walker & Shanagher, San Francisco, CA. Robert E. Bloch, Mark W. Ryan, Mayer Brown & Platt, Washington, DC.

Judges: FERN M. SMITH, United States District Judge

Opinion by: FERN M. SMITH

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

INTRODUCTION

The individual [*2] and representative plaintiffs ("plaintiffs") seek certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23\(a\)\(1\)-\(4\) and 23\(b\)\(3\) of the following plaintiff class ("class"):

All persons and entities in the United States (excluding governmental entities, defendants, defendants' parents, subsidiaries and affiliates, and other producers of citric acid and their subsidiaries and affiliates) who purchased citric acid directly from any of the defendants at any time during the period from January 1, 1991 to and including June 30, 1995.<sup>1</sup>

The class alleges a conspiracy among defendants to raise, fix, maintain, and stabilize prices of citric acid throughout the United States, and to allocate their major customers or accounts among themselves for the purpose of selling citric acid in violation of section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and sections four and sixteen of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, 26.

BACKGROUND

Citric acid is an amino acid derived from corn. It comes in a [*3] variety of forms, including crystal, powder, and liquid, and has a wide range of uses. It is used as a preservative and flavoring agent in food; as a phosphate substitute in cleaning products; as a flavoring and stabilizing agent in pharmaceuticals; for industrial cleaning and finishing; and in agriculture. Defendants in this lawsuit are major manufacturers, sellers, and/or distributors of citric acid in the United States.

In June 1995, the Department of Justice began an investigation into possible antitrust violations in the citric acid industry. In August 1995, plaintiffs, who are purchasers of citric acid, began to file claims against defendants.

Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy among defendants to raise, fix, maintain, and stabilize prices of citric acid throughout the United States, and to allocate their major customers or accounts among themselves. Defendants allegedly effected the conspiracy by discussing and agreeing on general price increases; approving and issuing general price increases to reflect their agreements; and monitoring and enforcing adherence to those prices. As a result, plaintiffs allege, purchasers of citric acid paid artificially high and non-competitive prices [*4] for the product. Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief, as well as treble damages under antitrust law.

Plaintiffs proffer six class representatives. Trans-Packers Services Corp., of New York, is a contract packaging firm that prepares dry food and beverages for the Department of Defense and large private companies. Varni Brothers Corp., of California, manufactures, bottles, cans, and distributes soft-drinks and other beverages. The 7-Up Bottling Company of Philadelphia was, until a recent asset sale, a major soft-drink bottling company in the mid-Atlantic region. Southeastern Specialty Foods, of Mississippi, was a manufacturer and bottler of fruit beverages until the fall of 1994. Gangi Brothers, of California, is a processor of tomato products. The 7-Up Bottling Company of San Francisco is a major soft-drink bottling company in the western region.

DISCUSSION

---

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs seek to interpret this definition as including those who purchased citric acid outside the United States, as well. The definition is not susceptible to this interpretation.

I. Evidentiary Burden and Standard for Class Certification

HN1[] The burden of proving that a class is appropriate rests with the proponent of the class. In re Northern Dist. of Cal. Dalkon Shield IUD Prod. Liab. Litig., 693 F.2d 847, 854 (9th Cir. 1982); Shields v. Smith, [1992 Transfer Binder] [*5] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 97,001, 94,376 (N.D. Cal. 1992). The party seeking to maintain the action as a class suit must, therefore, establish a prima facie showing of each of the four certification prerequisites and must demonstrate that appropriate grounds for a class action exist. Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 901 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 816, 50 L. Ed. 2d 75, 97 S. Ct. 57 (1976). The failure to carry this burden as to any one of the requirements precludes the maintenance of the lawsuit as a class action. Rutledge v. Electric Hose & Rubber Co., 511 F.2d 668, 673 (9th Cir. 1975).

Class certification is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23, which provides for a two-step procedure. First, HN2[] subsection (a) of Rule 23 sets out four conjunctive requirements that must be met in all class actions:

- (1) the class [must be] so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable,
- (2) there [must be] questions of law or fact common to the class,
- (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties [must be] typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and
- (4) the representative parties [must] fairly and adequately protect the [*6] interests of the class.

If these requirements are met, the proponent must also show that it has met one of the four disjunctive prerequisites of subsection (b) of Rule 23. HN3[] Under this subsection, the Court must find either: (1) that common questions of law or fact predominate and that a class action is superior to other available methods of adjudication; (2) that the defendant acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, so that declaratory or injunctive relief is appropriate with respect to the entire class; (3) that the prosecution of individual actions would create a risk of inconsistent verdicts that would establish incompatible standards of conduct for defendant; or (4) that adjudication of individual claims would be dispositive of the claims of non-party class members, or substantially impede the ability of non-party class members to pursue their own claims. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(1)-(3).

HN4[] Before ordering that a lawsuit may proceed as a class action, the trial court must rigorously analyze whether the class action allegations meet the requirements of Rule 23. General Tel. Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740, 102 S. Ct. [*7] 2364 (1982); Hanon v. Dataproducts Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 509 (9th Cir. 1992). Because the early resolution of the class certification question requires some degree of speculation, however, all that is required is that the Court form a "reasonable judgment" on each certification requirement. In formulating this judgment, the Court may properly consider both the allegations of the class action complaint and the supplemental evidentiary submissions of the parties. Blackie, 524 F.2d at 900-01 & n.17.

II. Analysis

A. Rule 23(a) Requirements

1. Numerosity

HN5[] Rule 23(a)(1) requires that the size of the proposed class be so large that joinder of all class members is impracticable. There is no set numerical cut-off. Welling v. Alexy, 155 F.R.D. 654, 656 (N.D. Cal. 1994) (citing example of approved class with fourteen members, and case in which certification was denied for class of more than 300).

Plaintiffs are unable to give a precise number of class members at this stage; however, they maintain that based on the nature of the citric acid market and the allegation of a nationwide conspiracy, the total number of class members will be in the thousands. [*8] Pls.' Mem. at 8. HN6[] A finding of numerosity may be supported by such common-sense assumptions. Scholes v. Stone, McGuire & Benjamin, 143 F.R.D. 181, 184 (N.D. Ill. 1992). Defendants do not dispute that this first requirement is met.

2. Common Questions of Law or Fact

Rule 23(a)(2) requires that there be questions of law or fact common to the members of the proposed class. Plaintiffs argue that their antitrust claims against defendants involve common legal and factual questions regarding the existence, scope, and effect of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy. In deciding to transfer this litigation to the Court, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation expressly found that the actions present common questions of fact. In re Citric Acid Antitrust Litig., MDL-1092, at 4-5 (J.P.M.L. 1995). Defendants do not dispute that this requirement is met.

3. Typicality

HN7 Rule 23\(a\)\(3\) requires that the claims or defenses of the plaintiff seeking to be the named representative for the class be typical of those of the other members of the class for which certification is sought. The claims and defenses are typical if they stem from the same event, practice, or course of conduct [*9] that forms the basis of the claims of the class and are based on the same legal or remedial theory. Jordan v. County of Los Angeles, 669 F.2d 1311, 1321 (9th Cir. 1982), vacated on other grounds, 459 U.S. 810 (1982).

The alleged underlying course of conduct in this case is defendants' conspiracy to fix the price of citric acid and to allocate customers among themselves during the period from January 1, 1991 through June 30, 1995. The legal theory that plaintiffs rely on is antitrust liability. Because plaintiffs and all class members share these claims and this theory, the representatives' claims are typical of all. See In re Amino Acid Lysine Antitrust Litig., No. 95 C 7679, MDL-1083, at 16 (1996). Defendants do not dispute that this requirement is met.

4. Adequacy of Representation

Rule 23(a)(4) requires that the plaintiff seeking to certify a class demonstrate that as the representative of the class she will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. HN8 Parties are generally considered to be adequate representatives of absent class members if there are no conflicts of interest between the representatives and class members, and if the Court is persuaded [*10] that counsel for the representatives will vigorously pursue the action. General Tel. Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157 n.13.

Defendants contend that the proffered representatives are inadequate because (1) they are unfamiliar with the case, and (2) they are not truly representative of the class.

a. Familiarity With the Case

HN9 In determining the adequacy of representation of a class, "the emphasis has been and should be placed on whether the representative's counsel is capable." Shields v. Smith, [1992 Transfer Binder]Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 97,001, at 94,377 (ND. Cal. 1992); Weinberger v. Jackson, 102 F.R.D. 839, 845 (N.D. Cal. 1984). Defendants do not contest the qualifications of plaintiffs' counsel. They do contest the named plaintiffs' familiarity with the case, however, and that is also a factor that courts consider in determining adequacy.

HN10 The threshold of knowledge required to qualify a class representative is not high; a party must be familiar with the basic elements of his claim, Burkhalter Travel Agency v. MacFarms Int'l, Inc., 141 F.R.D. 144, 153-54 (N.D. Cal. 1991), and will be deemed inadequate only if she is "startlingly unfamiliar" [*11] with the case. Greenspan v. Brassler, 78 F.R.D. 130, 133-34 (S.D.N.Y. 1978); see also Welling v. Alexy, 155 F.R.D. at 659 (plaintiff inadequate because he showed a "complete lack of interest in the conduct of the case"); Koenig v. Benson, 117 F.R.D. 330, 337 (E.D.N.Y. 1987) (plaintiff inadequate because of "alarming unfamiliarity" with lawsuit).

HN11 It is not necessary that a representative "be intimately familiar with every factual and legal issue in the case." In re Worlds of Wonder Sec. Litig., [1989-1990 Transfer Binder]Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 95,004, 95,627

(N.D. Cal. 1990). It is enough that the representative understand the gravamen of the claim. Id. Those courts that have found representatives inadequate have done so because plaintiffs knew nothing about the case and completely relied on counsel to direct the litigation. E.g., *Rolex Employees Retirement Trust v. Mentor Graphics Corp.*, 136 F.R.D. 658, 665-66 \(D. Or. 1991\).

Defendants make a series of arguments regarding the familiarity of each representative with the litigation. They contend that plaintiffs are unfamiliar with the parties and counsel in the case, the procedural history of the case, [*12] the market for citric acid, and their responsibilities as class representatives. See Defs.' Mem. at 6-11. Defendants also assert that plaintiffs have no personal knowledge of any price-fixing. Id.

Based on a review of the deposition testimony presented by plaintiffs and defendants,<sup>2</sup> the Court finds that plaintiffs have a basic understanding of the contours of the case, their own purchase and use of citric acid, and the role of class representatives in general. Plaintiffs' corporate representatives do not have comprehensive knowledge of the litigation; however, the inability to name all defendants, to explain the strategy underlying the complaint, or to understand how antitrust damages are calculated does not amount to startling unfamiliarity.<sup>3</sup>

[*13] This case is distinguishable from authority cited by defendants. For example, in Burkhalter Travel Agency v. MacFarms Int'l, Inc., the court deemed the plaintiff an inadequate representative because its executives did not understand who the defendants in the action were, did not know the composition of the class, and did not understand purchasing and pricing policies in their own firm or in the industry. 141 F.R.D. at 154. In Rolex Employees Retirement Trust v. Mentor Graphics, the representative could not describe the allegations of the complaint. 136 F.R.D. at 666. In Welling v. Alexy, the representative was a frequent filer, who stated that his only role was to alert his lawyers that there was a possible case. 155 F.R.D. at 658.

In this case, the proposed representatives all know that defendants were manufacturers, sellers, and distributors of citric acid; are able to identify the major defendants; understand that the class is made up of purchasers of citric acid who may have been the victims of price-fixing; and demonstrate an understanding of the purchase and use of citric acid in their own businesses.

Regarding defendants' argument that plaintiffs have no [*14] personal knowledge of price-fixing, defendants do not cite, nor is the Court aware of, any authority requiring personal knowledge to establish familiarity with a class action. Moreover, it defies common sense that plaintiffs alleging a conspiracy would have personal knowledge of it, unless they were involved. Presumably, if plaintiffs had been involved as beneficiaries of the conspiracy, they would not need to bring this lawsuit.

For these reasons, the Court finds the proffered representatives to be sufficiently familiar with the litigation.

b. Representativeness

HN12 In determining adequacy of representation, the Court must evaluate the ability of the named representatives to represent the interest of the class fairly and adequately. *In re Diasonics Sec. Litig.*, 599 F. Supp. 447, 452 \(N.D. Cal. 1984\). This inquiry focuses on whether the representative has antagonistic or conflicting interests with the unnamed class members. *Weinberger v. Jackson*, 102 F.R.D. at 844-855.

Defendants argue that plaintiffs do not adequately represent the broader class for a number of reasons:

<sup>2</sup>The Court's analysis is hindered by the failure of either side to provide complete deposition transcripts. This evaluation is therefore based only on review of selected excerpts.

<sup>3</sup>Moreover, defendants' allegations of unfamiliarity frequently overstate the case. For example, defendants suggest that Daniel Weiss, corporate representative for Trans-Packers Services, had "no idea" about Trans-Packers' purchase volume in recent years. Def. Mem. at 7. In fact, the deposition transcript reveals that Mr. Weiss characterized the volume as small, and merely stated that he could not give precise percentages. Weiss Dep. at 17. Read in context, the testimony of the corporate representatives does not demonstrate startling unfamiliarity.

- . All except 7-Up, San Francisco purchased citric acid only sporadically during the class period;
- . [*15] Southeastern Specialty and 7-Up, Philadelphia are no longer involved in businesses that use citric acid;
- . Trans-Packers Services and Gangi Brothers have not purchased from defendants recently;
- . 7-Up, San Francisco and Varni Brothers both purchased from cooperatives; and
- . None of the plaintiffs purchased any non-food grade citric acid.

The Court finds that the variety among plaintiffs with regard to frequency, continuity, recency, and mode of purchase actually contributes to their representativeness because there will likely be similar diversity among members of the class. Having representatives who were small or sporadic purchasers, who have since stopped using citric acid, or who bought from cooperatives assures that class members in similar circumstances will have their interests protected.<sup>4</sup>

[*16] Defendants' argument that the named plaintiffs will not adequately represent the interests of class members who purchased different kinds of citric acid raises a more serious concern. The inquiry here, however, is not how many kinds of citric acid plaintiffs purchased, but rather whether each representative has sufficient incentive to present evidence that will establish the existence of the alleged conspiracy and its effect on the prices of all of the products purchased by the class members. See In re Industrial Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. 374, 1996 WL 380234, *5 (S.D.N.Y. 1996).

In cases in which plaintiffs allege that defendants conspired to set an artificially inflated base price for products, courts consistently certify classes because the complaints themselves provide sufficient incentive--individual plaintiffs cannot prove their own claims without proving the class claims. See id. at *8 (citing seven such cases). This case presents exactly that situation. The Court therefore finds the Proffered plaintiffs to be adequate class representatives.

B. Rule 23(b) Requirements

Plaintiffs argue that this class action can be maintained under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure [*17] 23(b)(3) because common questions of law or fact in the case predominate over questions affecting only individual members. HN13↑ In deciding this question, the Court must focus on liability issues. In re Sugar Indus. Antitrust Litig., 73 F.R.D. 322, 345 (E.D. Pa. 1976).

To succeed in this action, plaintiffs will have to prove (1) that there was a conspiracy to fix prices in violation of the antitrust laws; (2) that prices were fixed pursuant to the conspiracy; and (3) that plaintiffs purchased products at prices that, as a result of the conspiracy, were higher than they should have been. See, e.g., Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 339-41, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990). On a motion for class certification, "plaintiffs' burden is to establish that common or 'generalized proof' will predominate at trial with respect to these three essential elements of their antitrust claim." In re Industrial Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. 374, 1996 WL 380234, *6 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (quoting In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 137 F.R.D. 677, 685 (N.D. Ga. 1991)). Defendants do not dispute that the existence of the conspiracy and the alleged price-fixing are [*18] common to the litigation. They contend, however, that plaintiffs cannot show common impact, and therefore individual issues of fact and law will predominate.

Defendants argue that because citric acid comes in many forms and is used for many purposes, the pricing varies between products, making common proof of impact impossible. Diversity of products and pricing does not necessarily mean that plaintiffs cannot show class-wide impact, however. "Contentions of infinite diversity of product, marketing practices, and pricing have been made in numerous cases and rejected." In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 75 F.R.D. 727, 734 (N.D. Ill. 1977).

---

<sup>4</sup> Defendants assert that purchasing through a cooperative is not the norm. This fact actually supports the need for class representatives who used cooperatives to assure that their interests do not go unheard in the litigation.

Some courts find as a matter of law that impact can be shown on a class-wide basis in antitrust cases because "as a general rule, an illegal price fixing scheme presumptively impacts upon all purchasers of a price-fixed product in a conspiratorially affected market." E.g., In re Alcoholic Beverages Antitrust Litig., 95 F.R.D. 321, 327 (E.D.N.Y. 1982). A smaller number of courts carefully examine the facts of each case in order to determine whether common proof of impact is possible. E.g., Windham v. American Brands, Inc. 565 F.2d *191 59 (4th Cir. 1977). Even those courts that require plaintiffs to make a showing that common impact can be proven only require that plaintiffs "come forward with seemingly realistic methodologies," as plaintiffs have done in this case. In re Brand Name Prescription Drug Antitrust Litig., 1996 WL 478547, at *5 (N.D. Ill. 1994); see also In re Industrial Gas Antitrust Litig., 100 F.R.D. 280, 289 (N.D. Ill. 1983).

Those cases in which courts have denied class certification for inability to prove common impact have involved additional complications; for example, different market conditions, Burkhalter Travel Agency v. MacFarms Int'l, Inc., 141 F.R.D. 144, 154 (N.D. Cal. 1992), and individualized pricing and credit negotiation. American Custom Homes v. Detroit Lumberman's Ass'n, 91 F.R.D. 548, 551 (E.D. Mich. 1981). See also In re Hotel Telephone Charges, 500 F.2d 86, 89 (9th Cir. 1974) (forty million plaintiffs stayed in 600 different hotels).

This case seems more akin to In re Industrial Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. 374, 1996 WL 380234 (S.D.N.Y. 1996), and other cases in which plaintiffs have alleged that defendants conspired to set list prices for a variety of products. [*20] See also In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 159 F.R.D. 682 (D. Minn. 1995); In re Glassine & Greaseproof Paper Antitrust Litig., 88 F.R.D. 302 (E.D. Pa. 1980). Because plaintiffs planned to prove at trial that defendants set artificially high list prices for their products, those courts certified the classes. The high list prices proved the fact of impact, even if the degree of impact differed between products and purchasers.

Plaintiffs have submitted the declaration of Robert G. Harris, an economist, who avers that he has identified at least three formulae to measure the class-wide impact of price-fixing in this case: one that compares the list prices for citric acid products before, during, and after the alleged conspiracy; one that analyzes the economic rate of return in the industry; and one that compares industry capacity utilization and citric acid prices. Harris Decl. at 15-16. Dr. Harris expresses the most confidence in the "before and after" approach because of defendants detailed financial reporting, which he says will make it possible to calculate competitive benchmark prices for citric acid products and therefore measure overcharge. Harris Decl. at 14-15. This submission [*21] is sufficient to show that means exist for proving impact on a class-wide basis, which is all that is required under the authority cited by defendants. See, e.g., Klein, 94 F.R.D. at 660-661 (certification denied because data essential to methodology for calculating impact did not exist).<sup>5</sup>

Even if common impact cannot be proven, the Court may certify the class. The great weight of authority suggests that the dominant issues in cases like this are whether the charged conspiracy existed and whether price-fixing occurred. See, e.g., In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 159 F.R.D. 682, 693-96 (D. Minn. 1995); In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 75 F.R.D. 727, 734-35 ("courts have consistently [*22] found the conspiracy issue the overriding, predominate question") (N.D. Ill. 1977); In re Sugar Indus. Antitrust Litig. 73 F.R.D. at 342-355. Moreover, class certification does not require that the common questions be completely dispositive of the litigation. In re Sugar Indus. Antitrust Litig., 73 F.R.D. at 344.

Because plaintiffs have presented a method for proving common impact, and because even without proof of class-wide impact, common issues predominate, the Court finds that plaintiffs have satisfied the requirements of Rule 23(b).

---

<sup>5</sup> Defendants correctly identify shortcomings with plaintiffs' other proposed methodologies; Dr. Harris does not suggest an industry to which citric acid can be compared for purposes of evaluating economic rate of return, and he cannot "confidently recommend" the capacity utilization approach. Harris Decl. at 16.

C. Court's Authority to Reconsider

Class actions play an important role in the private enforcement of antitrust actions. For this reason, HN14 courts resolve doubts in these actions in favor of certifying the class. In re Potash Antitrust Litis., 159 F.R.D. at 688-69. The Court retains the authority, however, to withdraw class certification in part or in whole, should the questions of adequate representation or predominance of common issues develop so as to make a class action unwarranted. Social Serv. Union, Local 535 v. County of Santa Clara, 609 F.2d 944, 948-49 (9th Cir. 1979). Other options short of decertification are also [*23] available to the Court if individual issues arise but do not predominate. These include referral to a magistrate judge or creation of subclasses. In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 1994 WL 663590, at *5 (N.D. Ill. 1994). The Court will not hesitate to exercise these authorities if the circumstances warrant it.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, the Court hereby grants plaintiffs' motion for class certification.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: October 1, 1996

FERN M. SMITH

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

United States v. Delta Dental

United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island
October 2, 1996, Decided ; October 2, 1996, OPINION FILED
C.A. No. 96-113/P

Reporter

943 F. Supp. 172 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14868 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,609

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. DELTA DENTAL OF RHODE ISLAND, Defendant.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) As Corrected October 10, 1996.

Prior History: Adopting Magistrate's Document of July 12, 1996, Reported at: 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14873.

Disposition: Defendant's Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted denied.

Core Terms

---

Buyer, Prudent, Recommendation, Dental, dentists, effects, anticompetitive, Sherman Act, participating, clauses, prices, cases, savings, alleges, purchaser, rule of reason, market power, competitor, unilateral, motion to dismiss, monopoly power, reasons, legitimate business, consumer price, matter of law, consumers, practices, courts, restraint of trade, concerted action

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[

According to § 1 of the Sherman Act, every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2[

Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. 21 1, plaintiffs must prove the existence of two elements: 1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy among two or more parties, that (2) unreasonably restrains trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The second element of a Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, cause of action, proof of an unreasonable restraint of trade, can be further divided into two categories of cases. Courts consider whether a restraint on trade is either: (1) a per se violation; or (2) a restraint subject to the "rule of reason" analysis, under which the fact finder weighs all the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The rule of reason analysis requires courts to conduct a highly fact-specific inquiry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se rules of illegality are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effects, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant factors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

According to the "rule of reason" analysis, in an antitrust case the Government has the burden of showing that the anti-competitive effects of the agreement outweigh their legitimate business justifications.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN8 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Whereas Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, requires the existence of a contract, combination, or conspiracy, and thus requires the involvement of two or more entities, § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 regulates the unilateral conduct of a single entity when it threatens actual monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN9 Scope, Monopolization Offenses

A Sherman Act 2 plaintiff establishes a violation by showing two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

943 F. Supp. 172, *1721996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14868, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN10 [down] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

The second element of a Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, claim is the use of monopoly power to foreclose competition, or to destroy a competitor. In other words, the second element involves proving a scheme of willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN11 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

The Supreme Court has recognized that Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not reach conduct that is "wholly unilateral."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Insurers

HN12 [down] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Concerted action may be amply demonstrated by an express agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN13 [down] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Coercion is not a required element of a violation of Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Rather, the cases hold that coercion is just one factor in the § 1 inquiry, and other factors may be relevant to finding a § 1 violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

HN14 [down] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

The desire to crush a competitor, standing alone, is insufficient to make out a violation of antitrust laws.

Counsel: ATTORNEY(S) FOR PLAINTIFF(S): Anthony C. DiGioia, Esquire, U.S. Attorney's Office, Providence, RI. Anne K. Bingaman, Esquire, Joel I. Klein, Esquire, Rebecca P. Dick, Esquire, Gail Kursh, Esquire, David Jordan, Esquire, Steven Kramer, Esquire, Paul J. O'Donnell, Esquire, Michael S. Spector, Esquire, U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, Washington, DC.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR DEFENDANT(S): William R. Landry, Esquire, Blish & Cavanagh, Providence, RI. William Kopit, Esquire, Epstein, Becker & Green, P.C., Washington, DC.

Judges: Raymond J. Pettine, Senior U.S. District Judge

Opinion by: Raymond J. Pettine

Opinion

---

[*173] ORDER AND MEMORANDUM

The Report and Recommendation of United States Magistrate Judge, Robert W. Lovegreen filed on July 12, 1996 in the above-captioned matter is hereby accepted pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\).

Delta Dental of Rhode Island ("Delta") objects to the Magistrate Judge's ("Magistrate") Report and Recommendation, which recommended a denial of Delta's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Accordingly, [*2] I must make a de novo "determination of those portions of the report ... to which objection is made." 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\). After carefully considering the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, Delta's objections, and the United States of America's ("Government")'s Opposition to Defendant's Objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, for the following reasons, I fully accept the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation. In so doing, I incorporate in whole, and without discussion, the Magistrate's statement of facts as well as the Magistrate's discussion of Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 12\(b\)\(6\) standards, and, for reasons of clarity, I attach in full the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation.

DISCUSSION

1. Sherman Antitrust Act, § 1 and § 2: General Principles

To fully understand Delta's objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, it is important to understand §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

HN1 According to § 1 of the Sherman Act ("§ 1"), "every contract, combination .. or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN2 § 1 plaintiffs must prove the existence [*3] of two elements: 1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy among two or more parties, that (2) unreasonably restrains trade.<sup>1</sup> Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 59-60, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 \(1911\). HN3 The second element, unreasonable restraint of trade, can be further divided into two categories of cases. Courts consider whether a restraint on trade is either: (1) a per se violation;<sup>2</sup> [*4] or (2) a restraint subject to the "rule of reason" analysis. "Under this rule, the fact finder weighs all the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on

---

<sup>1</sup> Under § 1, plaintiff also must show that the restraint affects interstate or foreign commerce. However, since there is no dispute that Delta's alleged conduct affects interstate commerce, I do not discuss this element here.

<sup>2</sup> "HN5 Per se rules of illegality are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive." Continental T.V., Inc. v. Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\).

competition." Continental T.V., Inc. v. Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Thus, HN4<sup>1</sup> the rule of reason analysis [\*174] requires courts to conduct a highly fact-specific inquiry.<sup>3</sup>

In the case at hand, the Government does not allege that Delta's Prudent Buyer clause (also referred [\*\*5] to as "Most Favored Nation" or "MFN" clause) is a per se violation of § 1. Therefore, I must apply the "rule of reason" analysis. HN7<sup>1</sup> According to this analysis, the Government has the burden of showing "that the anti-competitive effects of the agreement outweigh their legitimate business justifications." Monahan's Marine Inc. v. Boston Whaler Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 526-7 (1st Cir. 1989).

HN8<sup>1</sup> Whereas § 1 requires the existence of a "contract, combination ... or conspiracy" and thus requires the involvement of two or more entities, § 2 of the Sherman Act, ("§ 2") regulates the unilateral conduct of a single entity "when it threatens actual monopolization." Copperweld Corporation v. Independence Tube Corporation, 467 U.S. 752, 767, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984). HN9<sup>1</sup> A § 2 plaintiff establishes a violation by showing two elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 480, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 [\*\*61 (1992)], quoting, United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). Plaintiffs generally have more difficulty establishing the second element. HN10<sup>1</sup> The second element of a § 2 claim is the use of monopoly power 'to foreclose competition, or to destroy a competitor.'" Eastman Kodak, supra, at 482, quoting, United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948). In other words, the second element involves proving "a scheme of willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power." Eastman Kodak, supra, at 483.

In sum, § 1 primarily regulates anticompetitive agreements between two or more entities, while § 2 typically regulates the unilateral action of a single entity. Further, the relevant inquiries under § 1 and § 2 are distinct.

2. Discussion Of Delta's Objections To The Magistrate's Report and Recommendation.

Delta raises a number of objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation. I will discuss these objections in the context of § 1's two required elements.

a. The Magistrate Properly Concluded That Delta's Prudent Buyer Clause Is Sufficient to [\*\*7] Satisfy the "Concerted Action" Requirement of § 1

In its Motion to Dismiss, Delta argued that the Government's "complaint challenges a contractual provision which is automatically included in all contracts between Delta Dental and its participating dentists as a matter of a unilateral policy, and thus fails to allege conspiratorial action sufficient to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act." Defendant Delta Dental of Rhode Island's Motion to Dismiss [emphasis added]. The Magistrate, in his Report and Recommendation, rejected this argument stating:

<sup>3</sup>The Continental T.V. Court took note of the fact-intensive inquiry the rule of reason analysis requires, stating:

One of the most frequently cited statements of the rule of reason is that of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918):

"HN6<sup>1</sup> The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effects, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant factors."

Continental T.V., supra, at 49.

Although HN11<sup>1</sup> the Supreme Court has recognized that § 1 does not reach conduct that is "wholly unilateral," Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-68, [\[\*175\] 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\)](#), HN12<sup>1</sup> concerted action may be amply demonstrated by an express agreement. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 213-218, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 \(1899\). Here, there is no dispute that each participating dentist agrees explicitly to comply with Delta's Participating Dentist's Agreement, which incorporates by reference Delta's Rules and Regulations, including the MFN clause at issue. [\[\*\*8\]](#) Thus, every contract between Delta and a participating dentist contains the MFN clause at issue. As a result, the requisite concerted action has been alleged.

Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 9-10. Delta objects to the Magistrate's reasoning, arguing that "since the United States Supreme Court's decision in Monsanto Co. v. Spray Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\), the threshold for vertical restraint cases under Section 1 has become considerably higher than the Report and Recommendation would suggest." Memorandum of Defendant Delta Dental of Rhode Island in Support of Its Objections to Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 58. According to Delta, under Monsanto, a § 1 conspiracy requires a "meeting of the minds" between the supplier and purchaser. Delta contends that the Prudent Buyer clause does not manifest this required "meeting of the minds," but rather merely constitutes a unilateral policy on the part of Delta and unilateral acceptance of the policy by participating dentists.

With this objection, Delta is merely reiterating its position that the Prudent Buyer clause is nothing more than a unilateral [\[\*\*9\]](#) policy. Accordingly, because the Magistrate adequately responded to this argument in his Report and Recommendation, and because Delta raises no additional arguments in its objection, I must reject Delta's objection.

Moreover, Delta's argument is disingenuous. The Government has averred that it is clear to all dentists participating in Delta that they must comply with the Prudent Buyer policy, and it is just as clear that if they receive fees lower than Delta's set fee schedule, they run the risk of Delta lowering their reimbursement fees. To highlight this allegation, the Government cites a January 1994 letter Delta allegedly wrote to participating dentists to discourage them from participating in Dental PPO of Rhode Island. The letter states in relevant part:

Your profile reflects certain adjustments necessitated by our reimbursement policy. We understand that you have agreed to accept these fees from the Dental Blue PPO. As a result, your Delta Dental of Rhode Island reimbursement has been limited to these levels.

Complaint, P 23. Through this letter, Delta makes it abundantly clear to participating dentists that the only way to avoid the risk of lower Delta fees [\[\*\*10\]](#) is to refuse to accept any fees lower than Delta's fee schedule. Thus, despite Delta's contentions otherwise, its Prudent Buyer clause is not merely a unilateral policy on the part of Delta. Rather, it is a contractual clause to which Delta dentists expressly agree to comply. Further, pursuant to this contractual clause, Delta dentists are well aware that charging lower fees may result in Delta lowering their reimbursement rate.

Delta also argues that the Government did not allege that Delta Dental "coerced" the participating dentists. Memorandum of Defendant Delta Dental of Rhode Island in Support of Its Objections To Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 64. According to Delta, "cases which have inferred 'concerted action,' have done so only where there were threats of termination or other forms of retaliation," Id. at 65. But the cases upon which Delta relies constitute a narrow line of case law, all involving resale agreements wherein suppliers control the resale price of goods sold to resalers. This resale relationship is substantially different from Delta's relationship with participating dentists.

Further, the cases cited by Delta do not hold that HN13<sup>1</sup> coercion is a required [\[\*\*11\]](#) element of a § 1 violation. Rather, these cases hold that coercion is just one factor in the § 1 inquiry, and other factors may be relevant to finding a § 1 violation. In fact, in FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 \(1922\), cited by Delta, the Supreme Court relied on a number of factors in [\[\*176\]](#) determining that Beech-Nut's pricing policy amounted to an illegal conspiracy, including Beech-Nut's practice of actively surveying prices resalers charged for Beech-Nut products. Id. at 454; see also, Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 54 (2d Cir. 1980) ("The coercive atmosphere may have been enhanced by a policy of price surveillance."). The Government alleges, and Delta does not deny, that Delta monitors the fees participating dentists receive. "Rule 7 of Delta's Rules and Regulations further allows Delta to audit the records of any participating dentist." Complaint, P 14. <sup>4</sup> Thus, Delta's careful monitoring of its participating dentists's fees may suggest that Delta's Prudent Buyer clause is anticompetitive.

[**12] In sum, for the reasons set forth in the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, and for the reasons I have given, I find that the Government's complaint sets forth facts sufficient to withstand a motion for dismissal with regard to "concerted action" under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

b. The Magistrate Properly Concluded That The First Circuit Cases, Kartell and Ocean State, Do Not Establish A Rule That Prudent Buyer Clauses Are Competitive As A Matter Of Law Absent Pricing That is Predatory Or Below Incremental Costs

The gravamen of Delta's objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation is that the Magistrate failed to follow the rule of law set down in the First Circuit cases, Kartell v. Blue Shield of Massachusetts, Inc., 749 F.2d 922 (1st Cir. 1984), cert. den., 471 U.S. 1029, 85 L. Ed. 2d 322, 105 S. Ct. 2040, 105 S. Ct. 2049 and Ocean State Physicians Health Plan v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Rhode Island, 883 F.2d 1101 (1st Cir. 1989), cert. den., 494 U.S. 1027, 108 L. Ed. 2d 610, 110 S. Ct. 1473. However, I find that the Magistrate properly concluded that:

despite Kartell and Ocean State's broad language, these decisions, properly construed, fail to establish [**13] a per se validation of the MFN clauses in all cases where pricing is not predatory or below incremental costs. Such a blanket condonation of MFN clauses would ignore the context Kartell and Ocean State were decided in, run counter to the Sherman Act's preference for fact-specific inquiries, implausibly reject the premise that MFN clauses produce substantial anticompetitive effects in particular circumstances and contradict the Sherman Act's animating concern for low consumer prices.

Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 20. Key to the Magistrate's conclusion that courts must not read Kartell and Ocean State as establishing a per se rule regarding Prudent Buyer clauses are the facts that: (1) both Kartell and Ocean State arose in contexts different from the one here; and (2) Kartell and Ocean State both involved low consumer prices, while here the Government alleges higher consumer prices. I fully agree with the Magistrate that these two distinctions militate against reading Kartell and Ocean State as resolving the case at hand, and I add the following points to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation.

Delta argues that [**14] Kartell and Ocean State establish that Prudent Buyer clauses, absent predatory pricing or incremental costs, are competitive as a matter of law. The Government concedes that these cases validate the clause on its face, but asserts that this Court must look behind the face of the clause to its effects. According to the Government, the clause has anticompetitive effects, which Kartell and Ocean State do not validate. A careful examination of the the two First Circuit decisions reveals that the Government has the better position.

The First Circuit in Kartell upheld Blue Shield's "ban on balanced billing" policy against a § 1 of the Sherman Act challenge. The court found that Blue Shield's policy [*177] could not be anticompetitive unless Blue Shield was viewed as a "'third force,' intervening in the marketplace in a manner that prevents willing buyers and sellers from independently coming together to strike price/quality agreements." Id. at 924. The court found, however, that Blue Shield must be viewed:

<sup>4</sup> Rule 7 provides:

Verification program. Delta Dental at all times reserves the right to review services rendered and fees charged by participating and nonparticipating dentists or group practices with respect to which benefits are sought. Such review may encompass, without limitation verification of ... fees charges and collections made with respect to non-subscriber patients...

not as an inhibitory 'third force,' but as itself the purchaser of the doctors' services... Antitrust law rarely stops the buyer of a service from trying [**15] to determine the price or characteristics of the product that will be sold. Thus, the more closely Blue Shield's activities resemble, in essence, those of the purchaser, the less likely that they are unlawful.

Id. at 924-5. The First Circuit went on to emphasize Blue Shield's role as purchaser on behalf of its enrollees. "Once one accepts the fact that, from a commercial perspective, Blue Shield in essence 'buys' medical services for the account of others [it becomes apparent] that the ban on balance billing is permissible." Id. at 925 [emphasis added]. The court illustrated the point with examples:

Suppose a father buys toys for his son - toys the son picks out. Or suppose a landlord hires a painter to paint his tenant's apartment, to the tenant's specifications. Is it not obviously lawful for the father (the landlord) to make clear to the seller that the father (the landlord) is in charge and will pay the bill? Why can he not then forbid the seller to charge the child (the tenant) anything over and above what the father (the landlord) pays - at least if the seller wants the buyer's business?... In each of these instances, to refuse to allow the condition [**16] would disable the buyer from holding the seller to the price of the contract. Yet, if it is lawful for the buyer to buy for the third party in the first place, how can it be unlawful to bargain for a price term that will stick?

Id. These examples highlight the First Circuit's reliance on the concept that Blue Shield was acting as a purchaser when it purchased, on behalf of its enrollees, services from doctors at the lowest possible prices.

On its face, Delta's Prudent Buyer clause is indistinguishable from Blue Shield's ban on balanced billing. Delta's Prudent Buyer clause appears to guarantee that Delta purchases dental services for its enrollees for the lowest fee that the dentists are willing to receive. However, as stated earlier, the Government contends that it is important to look at the effects of Delta's Prudent Buyer clause, and not merely the clause as written. According to the Government, the Prudent Buyer clause has the effect of "excluding potential rivals, retarding expansion by existing competitors, and substantially increasing the costs to Rhode Island consumers of dental insurance and dental services." Complaint, at 1. Viewed in this light, Delta looks [**17] less like the ideal purchaser that the Kartell court portrayed.<sup>5</sup> Kartell is distinguishable from this case because the ban on balanced billing at issue in Kartell resulted in low prices for Blue Shield's enrollees, while the Government alleges that Delta's Prudent Buyer policy at issue here ultimately results in higher prices for Rhode Island dental service consumers.

[**18] The Kartell court itself underscored the importance of this low consumer price versus high consumer price distinction:

The Congress that enacted the Sherman Act saw it as a way of protecting consumers against prices that were too high, not too low... And, the relevant economic considerations may be very different when low prices, rather than high prices, are at issue. These facts suggest that courts at least should be cautious - reluctant to condemn too speedily - an arrangement that, [*178] on its face, appears to bring low price benefits to the consumer.

Id. at 931.

Similarly, Ocean State does not resolve the issue presented here, not only because Ocean State, like Kartell, involved lower consumer prices, but also because the context of Ocean State is different from the context here.

<sup>5</sup>This point is highlighted by the difference in postures between Kartell and the case here. In Kartell, the plaintiff represented a group of physicians challenging Blue Shield's policy, in large part because Blue Shield's reimbursement rates were so low that they reduced physician profits. These low prices, however, benefitted Blue Shield enrollees through lower premium rates. Here, plaintiff is the United States. Rhode Island dentists apparently do not disapprove of Delta's Prudent Buyer clause. In fact, the chair of Rhode Island Dental Association's Council on Dental Programs supports Delta's Prudent Buyer policy because he feels that the policy sets a floor on dentists' fees. Memorandum of the United States in Opposition to the Defendant's Objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 9; Complaint, P22.

Ocean State plaintiffs, Ocean State Physicians Health Plan ("Ocean State"), sued Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Rhode Island ("Blue Cross") under § 2 of the Sherman Act, alleging that Blue Cross "had acted unlawfully to exclude Ocean State from the health care insurance marketplace." Id. at 1102. Among other claims, Ocean State alleged that Blue Cross adopted [**19] its "Prudent Buyer policy not in order to save money, but rather to induce physicians to resign from Ocean State." Id. at 1104. The jury found that Blue Cross had violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, but the District Court granted Blue Cross' motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. On appeal, the First Circuit agreed "with the district court ... that the Prudent Buyer policy - through which Blue Cross ensured that it would not pay a provider physician any more for any particular service than she was accepting from Ocean State or any other health care purchaser - is, as a matter of law, not violative of section 2 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 1110.

As stated above, allegations of a § 2 violation invoke consideration of two elements: (1) existence of monopoly power; and (2) "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co., supra, at 480. On appeal, Blue Cross conceded the first prong, and did not dispute its monopoly power; Ocean State conceded that Blue Cross legitimately acquired its market power. Id. at 1110. [**20] Thus, the very narrow issue before the First Circuit was "whether Blue Cross maintained its monopoly power through improper means." Id. In fact, the First Circuit described its inquiry as follows:

We must ask whether Blue Cross' conduct "went beyond the needs of ordinary business dealings, beyond the ambit of ordinary business skill, and 'unnecessarily excluded competition' from the health care insurance market. Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 230 (1st Cir. 1983).

Ocean State, supra, at 1110.

In contrast, the issue presented here is an alleged violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, which requires a showing of: 1) concerted activity which 2) unreasonably restrains trade. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 59-60, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911). As discussed earlier, the Government's allegations, if true, establish the first element. Moreover, the Government has not alleged a per se violation. Accordingly, the rule of reason analysis applies to the second element. Continental T.V., Inc. v. Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). As stated above, under the "rule of reason" [**21] analysis, the Government must establish "that the anticompetitive effects of [Delta's Prudent Buyer clause] outweigh [the] legitimate business justifications." Monahan's Marine Inc. v. Boston Whaler Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 526-7 (1st Cir. 1989). This analysis is fact-specific, requiring an examination of the anticompetitive effects of Delta's Prudent Buyer clause as compared to the clause's legitimate business benefits. This inquiry is more fact-intensive than the inquiry the First Circuit conducted in Ocean State. Because of the different inquiries involved, the First Circuit's decision in Ocean State does not necessarily control the decision here.

Moreover, here the Government has alleged that the effects of Delta's Prudent Buyer clause are anticompetitive. As the Magistrate noted in his Report and Recommendation, the Ocean State court may have canvassed the effects of Blue Cross' Prudent Buyer clause, but the "court did not undertake a searching inquiry into their severity, as would be appropriate under a § 1 rule of reason analysis, as such a claim was simply not before it." Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 21-22.

For example, in touching upon one alleged [**22] "effect" of Blue Cross' Prudent Buyer clause, the First Circuit noted Ocean State's assertion [*179] that evidence on the record showed that Blue Cross' Prudent Buyer clause would have the effect of weakening or eliminating Ocean State. Ocean State pointed to evidence that Blue Cross directors expressed hopes of "emasculating Ocean State." Ocean State, supra, at 1113. The First Circuit responded that "HN14" the desire to crush a competitor, standing alone, is insufficient to make out a violation of antitrust laws." Id. at 1113.

Here, however, the Government alleges that Delta's Prudent Buyer policy adversely affects not just one existing competitor, but numerous existing and potential competitors. The Government further alleges that Delta's Prudent Buyer clause prevents many Rhode Island dentists from participating in lower cost programs, which pay dentists lower fees than Delta, because dentists fear that accepting lower fees from these programs will result in Delta reimbursing them at a lower rate. According to the Government:

Faced with enforcement of Delta's MFN clause and the prospect of substantially lower payments for all of their Delta patients if they participate in [**23] a lower-cost plan, Delta participating dentists have either withdrawn from - or refused to join - lower-cost dental plans, or insisted as a condition of their participation that payments be increased to Delta's levels.

Memorandum of the United States in Opposition to Defendant's Objections to Report and Recommendation, at 8. The Government alleges that the ultimate effects of Delta's Prudent Buyer clause are threefold: (1) exclusion of potential competitors from the dental insurance market; (2) prevention of existing competitors from expanding their insurance programs; and (3) substantial increase in the costs of dental insurance and services to all Rhode Island consumers. Complaint P 35. The Government, in its complaint, lists examples of these alleged negative effects. Complaint PP 19-29.

From this it is clear that the Government is not merely alleging that the effect of the Delta's Prudent Buyer clause is to eliminate one competitor, as was the case in Ocean State. Rather, the Government alleges that Delta's Prudent Buyer clause has a negative impact on all existing and potential competing plans, and ultimately, the consumer. Because Ocean State was decided pursuant [**24] to § 2 of the Sherman Act, and not § 1, the Ocean State court simply was not presented with, nor did the court assess, any allegations or evidence that Blue Cross' Prudent Buyer policy had the same anticompetitive effects as those alleged here.

Ocean State is distinguishable from the case here for another reason. In upholding Blue Cross' Prudent Buyer clause, the First Circuit noted that Blue Cross would save an estimated $ 1,900,000 through its policy. These estimated savings supported Blue Cross' contention that the Prudent Buyer policy was exactly what it was called - a policy prudently designed to save Blue Cross money by reducing the price it paid dentists for their services. Blue Cross's estimated savings from the Prudent Buyer clause suggested that the clause was procompetitive and not anticompetitive. Moreover, these estimated savings undermined Ocean States' claim that the Prudent Buyer policy was willfully employed by Blue Cross to maintain its monopoly power.

In the case at hand, however, the Government has alleged that:

the MFN clause, by Delta's own admissions, has not generated any meaningful savings or other procompetitive benefits. Delta has not [**25] considered the MFN clause a cost-savings device, has not sought to calculate any savings from its application, and has not factored any such savings into determining the premiums it charges customers.

Complaint, P 32. The lack of savings associated with Delta's Prudent Buyer clause suggests that it is not procompetitive. Further, the lack of savings suggests Delta's inability to assert any "legitimate business justifications" to outweigh any findings that the clause has "anti-competitive effects," as required under a "rule of reason" analysis. Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 526-7 (1st Cir. 1989).

In sum, for the reasons set forth in the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, as well as the reasons stated above, I find that the Government has alleged facts sufficient [*180] to overcome a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss regarding the "unreasonable restraint" on trade arising from Delta's Prudent Buyer clause.

c. Delta's Remaining Objections To The Magistrate's Report And Recommendation Have No Merit

As stated above, the gravamen of Delta's objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation concern the applicability of the First Circuit [**26] decisions Kartell and Ocean State. Having discussed these objections fully, I need address Delta's remaining objections only briefly.

Delta argues that the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation "erroneously concludes that Delta Dental's alleged 'market power' permits the Government to avoid dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6)," contrary to the First Circuit's opinion in Kartell. True, the First Circuit in Kartell found that Blue Cross' alleged market power did not make a "significant difference" to the outcome of the case. Kartell, supra, at 926. But in Kartell, the court found that market power was irrelevant because Blue Shield was doing nothing more than using its market power to obtain a low price for its enrollees. Id. at 928.

In this case, however, Delta's alleged market power is one important factor in assessing the effects of Delta's Prudent Buyer clause. As the Magistrate correctly noted in his Report and Recommendation, "the relevant focus in the present case turns precisely on the severity of the alleged anticompetitive effects flowing from the application of Delta's MFN clause juxtaposed against any competitive benefits." Magistrate's Report [**27] and Recommendation, at 22. The Magistrate also correctly concluded that a "generous reading of the government's Complaint reveals a plausible allegation that Delta possesses significant market power. Armed with this power, Delta applies its MFN clause selectively to block alternative reduced-fee plans from the dental insurance market, but has gained no discernible cost savings." Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 23. In sum, unlike the situation in Kartell, the extent of Delta's market power is relevant here in discerning the effects that Delta's Prudent Buyer clause has on the dental insurance market.

Delta also objects to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation on the grounds that the Magistrate "fails to disclose that its conclusions are inconsistent with the unanimous weight of authority on this issue elsewhere." Defendant Delta Dental of Rhode Island's Objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 3. Certainly, some of the cases Delta cites lend support to its argument. But for purposes of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, Delta's cases simply do not resolve the issue at hand.

For example, Delta cites Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Michigan v. Michigan Association of Psychotherapy Clinics, et al., 502 F. Supp. 751, 1980 WL 1848 (E.D. Mich.) to support their position. In Michigan Association, defendants brought a Sherman Act counterclaim against plaintiffs alleging that plaintiffs' "non-discrimination clause"<sup>6</sup> constituted a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The court held that the clause did not amount to illegal price fixing, noting that:

practices that are not per se violative of the Sherman Act may be struck down under the rule of reason standard if they unduly restrain commerce... However, the only antitrust violation alleged in the counterclaim is that the contracts between plaintiff and participating [providers] constituted price-fixing agreements; defendants assert no other effect on price formation, or other type of restraint of trade, independent of what the contractual terms discussed above require.

*Id. at *3*. Here, the Government has not alleged a per se violation of the Sherman Act. More importantly, the Government has alleged that Delta's Prudent Buyer clause has significant other effects on "price formation," and that the clause has the effect of restraining trade. Michigan Association [**29] defendants simply did not make the same allegations [*181] that the Government has made here. Therefore, Michigan Association is not directly on point, and simply does not resolve the issue presented here.

Delta also cites E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. FTC, 729 F.2d 128, 139-140 (2d Cir. 1984) as standing for the proposition that "use of MFN clauses is a legitimate business practice." Defendant Delta Dental of Rhode Island's Memorandum in Support of Its Objections to Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, at 52. In DuPont, petitioners DuPont and Ethyl challenged the Federal Trade Commission's finding that DuPont's and Ethyl's business practices, including their respective MFN policies, were anticompetitive. Again, however, the DuPont court resolved an issue different from the one presented here. According [**30] to the DuPont court, "the essential question is whether, given the characteristics of the [specific] industry, the Commission erred in holding that the challenged business practices constitute 'unfair methods of competition' in violation of § 5 [of the Federal Trade Commission Act] simply because they 'facilitate' consciously parallel pricing at identical levels." Id. at 135-6. Further, before rendering its decision, the court thoroughly reviewed the Commission's findings and the evidence upon which the Commission relied, concluding that, "we do not find substantial evidence on this record, as a whole that the challenged practices significantly lessened competition ... or that the elimination of those practices would improve competition." Id. at 141. Thus, the court did not find that, as a matter of law, that the use of MFN clauses is a legitimate business practice. In fact, its decision suggests that a motion to dismiss in the case at hand would be improper, as courts must conduct a fact-specific inquiry to assess any anticompetitive effects of challenged business practices. Thus, DuPont, like Michigan Association, simply does not resolve the issue presented [**31] here.

---

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiff's non-discrimination clause, as Delta notes in its memorandum in support of their objections to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, is similar to Delta's Prudent Buyer clause.

Similarly, while Kitsap Physicians Service v. Washington Dental Service, 671 F. Supp. 1267 (W.D. Wash. 1987), also cited by Delta, lends support to Delta's position, it is not controlling. In Kitsap, the court held that plaintiffs were not entitled to preliminary injunctive relief - finding that plaintiff did not "have a 'fair chance' of prevailing on the merits." Id. at 1269. Here, however, I do not consider whether the Government has a chance of succeeding on the merits, rather, I only decide whether "the allegations of the complaint permit relief to be granted on any theory..." O'Neil v. O.L.C.R.I., 750 F. Supp. 551, 553 (D.R.I. 1990).

Blue Cross and Blue Shield United of Wisconsin v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406 (7th Cir. 1995), cited by Delta, also fails to resolve the issue at hand. True, as Delta argues, in Marshfield Clinic, Chief Judge Posner came out strongly in favor of MFN clauses. But Posner did not hold, that as a matter of law, MFN clauses are valid absent predatory pricing. In fact, Posner conceded that, "perhaps, as the Department of Justice believes, these clauses are misused to anticompetitive ends in some cases; but there [**32] is no evidence of that in this case." Id. at 1415 [emphasis added.] Here, the Government alleges facts to support the contention that Delta's Prudent Buyer clause is "misused to anticompetitive ends."

Finally, Delta cites Willamette Dental Group, P.C. v. Oregon Dental Service Corporation, 130 Ore. App. 487, 882 P.2d 637 (Ct.App.Or. 1994) to support its argument. Oregon Dental is factually similar to Ocean State; Oregon Dental plaintiffs brought claims against dental service providers, claiming that defendants' MFN clause violated state antitrust laws almost identical to § 2 of the Sherman Act.<sup>7</sup> The Oregon Dental court rejected defendant's argument that "as a matter of law, enforcement of a most favored nations clause can never constitute predatory pricing." Id. at 642. In so doing, the court criticized Ocean State, noting that the Ocean State court invoked an efficiency rationale, and finding that Ocean State's:

consideration of economic efficiency, although accurate in many respects, is hardly conclusive. In this context, preoccupation with economic efficiency is almost tautological. A purchaser's enforcement [*182] of a most favored [**33] nations clause will always be "efficient" in the sense that the purchaser will pay less for good or services than it would have otherwise. We note, moreover, the possibility that, in some circumstances, the enforcement of most favored nations clauses can have severe anticompetitive effects. Such clauses may

"(1) eliminate a dynamic mechanism by which prices are ratcheted down to the competitive level; (2) reduce [output of medical services]; and (3) prevent the market from rewarding more efficient distribution systems." Celnicker, "A Competitive Analysis of Most Favored Nations Clauses in Contracts Between Health Care Providers and Insurers," 69 NCLRev 863, 884 (1991)."

Id., at 642-3 [emphasis added]. Thus, Oregon Dental undermines Delta's position, and stands for the proposition that courts should not adopt a per se rule regarding MFN clauses, but should carefully examine the alleged anticompetitive effects of each challenged clause.

[**34] It is true, as Delta argues, that the Oregon Dental court subsequently upheld the validity of the challenged MFN clause, noting that there "is no evidence in the record that defendant's enforcement of [the MFN clause] has unreasonably excluded competition." Id. It is also true, as Delta points out, that the court found that "there was no meaningful distinction between the facts of [Ocean State] and this case." Id. at 642. However, as discussed earlier, there are notable distinctions between the case at hand and Ocean State. Thus, the fact that the Oregon Dental court upheld a Prudent Buyer clause in a case factually similar to Ocean State does not mean that the Oregon

---

<sup>7</sup> In fact, the Oregon Dental court "looked to federal decisions interpreting section 2 of the Sherman Act for persuasive ... guidance." Oregon Dental, supra, at 640.

Dental court would uphold Delta's Prudent Buyer clause based on the facts alleged here. Delta simply cannot rely on Oregon Dental to control the matter here, and, in fact, Oregon Dental favors the Government's position.

CONCLUSION

For all the reasons set forth in the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, in addition to the reasons set forth above, I fully accept the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation. Accordingly, I deny defendant's Motion to Dismiss for failure [**35] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

SO ORDERED:

Raymond J. Pettine

Senior U.S. District Judge

October 2, 1996

---

End of Document

Winston v. American Medical Int'l

Court of Appeals of Texas, First District, Houston

October 3, 1996, rendered and delivered ; October 3, 1996, Opinion filed

NO. 01-91-01441-CV

Reporter

930 S.W.2d 945 *; 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 4548 **

DONALD S. WINSTON, M.D., DONALD S. WINSTON, M.D., P.A., AND GALLERIA MEDICAL CENTER, INC., Appellants v. AMERICAN MEDICAL INTERNATIONAL, INC., TWELVE OAKS HOSPITAL, VICTORRINO G. CUMAGUN, M.D., R. ANDREW JACKSON, M.D., RONALD F. NORRIS, M.D., AND NORBORNE B. POWELL, M.D., Appellees

Subsequent History: Writ denied by, 06/12/1997

Disposition: [**1] Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part

Core Terms

---

staff privileges, cause of action, patients, Antitrust, business relationship, tortious interference, summary judgment, federal court, limitations, privileges, federal suit, private hospital, state court, trial court, pled, summary judgment motion, grant summary judgment, statute of limitations, no writ, contractual, temporary, lawsuit, tolling, clinic, hired, collateral estoppel, executive committee, plaintiffs', termination, grounds

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The court will consider the summary judgment evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovants and indulge every reasonable inference in their favor. The court will affirm if any theory in the summary judgment was meritorious. Plaintiffs must show that each of the independent grounds alleged in the motion is insufficient to support the order.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Collateral estoppel precludes the relitigation of identical issues of fact or law that were already litigated and essential to the judgment in a prior lawsuit where the parties were cast as adversaries. There are three requirements which must be met for the federal doctrine of collateral estoppel to apply to a subsequent, related state court proceeding: (1) the prior federal decision must have resulted in a judgment on the merits; (2) the same fact issues sought to be concluded must have been actually litigated in the federal court; and (3) the disposition of those issues must have been necessary to the outcome of the prior federal litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05(a) (1987), of the Texas Antitrust Act is comparable to, and indeed taken from 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (1988), Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Accordingly, the court look to federal judicial interpretations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act in applying section 15.05(a) of the Texas antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a violation of section one of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (1988), the Sherman Antitrust Act or Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05(a) (1987), a plaintiff must prove the challenged restraint of trade is unreasonable and has an adverse effect on competition in the relevant market.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Intentional Interference, Elements

The elements of a cause of action for tortious interference with contractual relations are: (1) there was a contract subject to interference; (2) the act of interference was willful and intentional; (3) such intentional act was a proximate cause of a plaintiff's damages; and (4) actual damage or loss occurred. Texas law protects existing and prospective contracts from interference.

Real Property Law > Landlord & Tenant > Lease Agreements > Subleases

930 S.W.2d 945, *945L 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 4548, **1

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN6 [down] Lease Agreements, Subleases

Interference with a business relationship is similar to the tort of contract interference. It is not necessary to establish the existence of a valid contract, but interference with a general business relationship is actionable only if a defendant's interference is motivated by malice. To recover on a cause of action for tortious interference with a prospective business relationship, a plaintiff must show: (1) there was a reasonable probability he would have entered into a business relationship; (2) the defendant acted maliciously by intentionally preventing the relationship from occurring with the purpose of harming the plaintiff; (3) the defendant was not privileged or justified in his actions; and (4) actual harm or damage occurred to the plaintiff as a result.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

HN7 [down] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

See Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.064 (1986).

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN8 [down] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

The tolling provisions are remedial in nature and are to be liberally construed.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN9 [down] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 16.064 and 16.068 should be interpreted together so as to achieve the clear purpose of the statutes, which is to toll limitations for a certain period when a case is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction and to allow adding to a petition additional theories of liability or defenses after the lawsuit has been filed if those new theories or defenses are not wholly based on a new, distinct, or different transaction or occurrence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

930 S.W.2d 945, *945L 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 4548, **1

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

When summary judgment is sought on the ground that limitations has expired, it is the movant's burden to conclusively establish the limitations bar, including the negation of a tolling or suspension statute raised by the nonmovant.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

The absence from the state of Texas of a person against whom a cause of action may be maintained suspends the running of the applicable statute of limitations for the period of the person's absence under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.063 (1986).

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Judicial Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Business Administration & Organization, Judicial Review

The decision of a governing board of a private hospital with regard to staff privileges is not subject to judicial review.

Counsel: For Appellant: MIKE O'BRIEN, HOUSTON.

For Appellee: DAN MCCLURE, DANIEL HEDGES, HOUSTON, RICHARD ZOOK, HOUSTON, BEN TAYLOR, DALLAS.

Judges: Sam H. Bass.<sup>7</sup> Justices Mirabal and Wilson also sitting.

Opinion by: Sam H. Bass

Opinion

---

[*947] OPINION

In the trial court, Donald S. Winston, M.D., Donald S. Winston, M.D., P.A., and Galleria Medical Center, Inc. (plaintiffs), sued American Medical International, Inc. (AMI), Twelve Oaks Hospital, and various doctors (defendants). Fundamentally, this is a dispute between doctors over two intertwined issues: (1) the business end of their medical practices; and (2) the denial of Dr. Winston's application for staff privileges. The trial judge granted defendants' joint motion for summary judgment, and plaintiffs appeal challenging the adverse ruling. We affirm in part, and reverse and remand in part.

---

<sup>7</sup> Justice Bass, who retired on May 31, 1993, continues to sit by assignment for the disposition of this case, which was submitted prior to that date.

I. Undisputed Facts

In 1981, Dr. Winston opened an industrial medicine practice in the Galleria shopping mall [**2] known as Galleria Clinic, Inc., since renamed Galleria Medical Center, Inc. (GMC). In late 1981 and early 1982, and pursuant to the Hospital's by-laws, Dr. Winston applied <sup>1</sup> for, and then received, temporary staff privileges <sup>2</sup> at Twelve Oaks Hospital, a private hospital owned by Twelve Oaks Medical Center, Inc., corporate affiliate of AMI. During the time Dr. Winston held privileges, approximately 15 patients per month were referred from his Galleria office [*948] to the Twelve Oaks Hospital for admission and/or treatment.

[**3] By letter dated November 4, 1982, Twelve Oaks notified Dr. Winston that the committee examining his application for permanent staff privileges would recommend to the Board of Directors that his request for staff privileges be denied, and that his temporary privileges were suspended pending the Board's decision. A few days later, Dr. Winston was informed by subsequent letter of the charts reviewed by the relevant committee in making its recommendations and of his right to a hearing before the Judicial Review Committee. By letter of November 15, Dr. Winston informed Mr. John Sielert, executive director of the Hospital, that he withdrew his "pending application for active staff privileges at Twelve Oaks Hospital."

Dr. Winston reapplied to Twelve Oaks in March of 1983. The application was referred to the Hospital's credentials committee for consideration, and it in turn appointed an ad hoc committee to review the medical charts of the patients treated by Dr. Winston in 1982. The ad hoc committee's findings were then presented back to the Hospital's credentials committee, of which Dr. Ronald Norris, a defendant, was a member. The credentials committee voted to recommend denial of Dr. [**4] Winston's application.

The executive committee, including Dr. Cumagun and Dr. Jackson, also defendants, next considered the matter. The executive committee accepted the decision of the credentials committee and voted to deny the application. The executive committee notified Dr. Winston by letter dated August 4, 1983, of the decision to deny him medical staff privileges.

Dr. Winston then requested the findings of the executive committee be reviewed by the judicial review committee, a committee of five doctors chaired by Dr. Norborne Powell, also a defendant. The judicial review committee met with Dr. Winston on August 30, 1983, and subsequently voted September 7, 1983, to uphold denial of staff privileges as recommended by the executive committee.

The appellate review committee of the board of directors of the Hospital, which included doctors Norris and Powell, met on October 19, 1983, to consider Dr. Winston's appeal of the judicial review committee's decision. The board reaffirmed the denial of Dr. Winston's request for staff privileges and sent him notice by certified mail dated October 24, 1983.

II. Dr. Winston's Factual Contentions

Fundamentally, Dr. Winston claims [**5] to have uncovered an illicit scheme by certain Twelve Oaks doctors to allocate industrial medicine patients among themselves to his professional and financial injury. The objective of the alleged conspiracy was the suppression of competition which in turn would enhance profits subsequently shared by members of the scheme. Dr. Winston claims they achieved their objective by denying him staff privileges in the Hospital, not because of any lack of professional competence, but in furtherance of their malicious plan.

---

<sup>1</sup> The defendants describe Dr. Winston as having received temporary staff privileges while his application for permanent staff privileges was being considered. This application for permanent status was what was later denied and then withdrawn. Dr. Winston notes that he was not unknown to the Hospital when he filed the '81 application. While Dr. Winston was completing his medical residency, he received privileges beginning in April 1979 limited to the Department of Emergency Medicine.

<sup>2</sup> The type of staff privileges sought by Dr. Winston would allow him to admit patients, provide care, and perform certain general types of medical and surgical procedures at the hospital.

Plaintiffs allege each defendant doctor would send a list of companies that the doctor claimed were his clients to the emergency room nurses at Twelve Oaks. If an employee from a listed company came to the emergency room, the doctor who claimed a relationship with that company was called. The patients had no knowledge of this alleged arrangement. Dr. Winston says the doctors had no agreements with these companies, and that these companies, in fact, had never even heard of these doctors.

Dr. Winston states Dr. Cumagun, chief of surgery at Twelve Oaks, was appointed to ad hoc physician review committees to remove potential competitors from the staff. Dr. Winston claims he ran [**6] afoul of the scheme when he contracted with many of the companies and became a competitor of Dr. Cumagun. Dr. Winston asserts that after he started competing for patients, the Hospital initiated a malicious peer review process against him.

Dr. Winston claims Twelve Oaks did not follow proper procedures in the review and [*949] appeal process according to the Hospital's bylaws. Dr. Winston avers he was not allowed to appear before the ad hoc committee to discuss his medical charts. Further, Dr. Winston says there was no independent review by the credentials or the executive committees, also in violation of hospital bylaws. Although the judicial review committee allowed Dr. Winston to appear, in contrast to other committees, Dr. Winston states he was told he could not be represented by an attorney, even though the sole purpose of the judicial review committee was to ensure that the bylaws were fairly applied.

Dr. Winston asserts he did not learn of the decision of the appellate review committee of the board of directors until November 1983. Dr. Winston also claims corporate counsel for AMI instructed the executive director of Twelve Oaks to alter the minutes of the October 19, [**7] 1983, meeting, and that he was unaware of the alleged alteration until after he initiated his federal suit.

Dr. Winston avers that as a result of the denial of his applications for privileges at Twelve Oaks, he cannot get privileges at any other hospital. Due to the damage to his reputation from the events at the Hospital, Dr. Winston states he was unable to obtain staff privileges or admit patients at other hospitals and was forced to close his practice.

He also asserts that in 1984 or 1985, the defendants set up a competing practice in the Galleria area, "The Doctors at the Galleria," and hired his former office manager, who then recruited his former patients.

In summary, Dr. Winston claims that:

- 1) defendants conspired to "eliminate competition for emergency room patients and to prevent the entry of new physicians into the market at [the Hospital]";
- 2) he discovered this conspiracy after he obtained his temporary staff privileges;
- 3) on November 4, 1982, his temporary staff privileges were terminated, and it was recommended that permanent staff privileges be denied because he did not condone the conspiracy;
- 4) the manner in which his applications for [**8] staff privileges were denied, and his temporary staff privileges were terminated, violated the Hospital "bylaws and various contractual agreements between [the Hospital], AMI and [himself]";
- 5) the denial of staff privileges made it impossible for him to practice medicine, and resulted in his patients going to the Hospital to be treated by defendants;
- 6) he was unable to obtain "admitting privileges" at other hospitals because of the manner in which he lost his staff privileges at the Hospital;
- 7) defendants "sought to obtain [his] proprietary information, to confuse [his] patients as to the clinic's identity and to interfere with [his] business relationships by implying that [he] and his clinic had gone out of business";
- 8) his ex-employee took confidential business information with her when hired by the defendants which was used to, in effect, take over his medical practice; and
- 9) he discovered the plan to take over his medical practice on January 26, 1987, during a deposition taken during the pendency of the federal lawsuit discussed below.

III. The Appellees' Factual Contentions

The defendants assert Dr. Winston's initial staff [**9] privileges were merely temporary. When Dr. Winston reapplied, the ad hoc committee appointed to evaluate his charts criticized them for: (1) inappropriate evaluation of patients; (2) frequent cases of inadequate and inconsistent medical records; (3) repeated examples of inappropriate surgical judgment; and (4) frequent inappropriate preoperative evaluation of patients. The defendants maintain this was the basis for the denial of Dr. Winston's privileges. They assert a total of 31 doctors on various peer review committees participated in the review of Dr. Winston's charts before his staff privileges were denied on October 19, 1983.

IV. Procedural History

Dr. Winston initially sued the defendants in federal court in November 1985, seeking [*950] liability under the following statutes and theories:

- (1) Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 15, and 22, and 28 U.S.C. § 1337;
- (2) Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. § 1961, et seq.;
- (3) Texas Antitrust laws, TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.01 et seq. (Vernon 1987); and
- (4) tortious interference with present and prospective contractual and business relationships [**10] and prospective advantage.

On May 8, 1990, the federal trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment regarding causes of actions pled under the Sherman and RICO acts. Because the only remaining claims were based on state law, the federal court exercised its discretion to dismiss the state claims without prejudice at the time it granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. The federal court clarified by amended order signed July 23, 1990, that its dismissal of the state claims was without prejudice to the state claims being refiled.

Plaintiffs filed suit in state court on July 6, 1990, based on the same facts, asserting the pendent state claims dismissed by the federal court and numerous additional claims. The state suit was based on the following statutes and theories of recovery:

CAUSES OF ACTION IN FEDERAL SUIT RETAINED

- (1) Texas Antitrust laws, TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.01 et seq. (Vernon 1987);
- (2) tortious interference with present and prospective contractual and business relationships and prospective advantage; and

CAUSES OF ACTION ADDED IN STATE COURT

- (3) fraud;
- (4) negligence;
- (5) breach of good faith and fair dealing;
- [**11] (6) promissory estoppel;
- (7) defamation and business disparagement;

- (8) negligent misrepresentation;
- (9) breach of fiduciary duty;
- (10) Texas Deceptive Trade Practice Act;
- (11) civil conspiracy;
- (12) statutory commercial bribery;
- (13) unjust enrichment;
- (14) ratification; and

(15) breach of contract. Defendants filed a joint motion for summary judgment on five distinct grounds: (1) the denial of Dr. Winston's staff privileges was not actionable under Texas law regardless of the cause of action asserted; (2) the conduct of the defendant doctors relative to the rejection of Dr. Winston's application for privileges was statutorily privileged; (3) the actions filed were barred by the applicable statute of limitations; (4) the claims were barred by collateral estoppel; and (5) Dr. Winston failed to state necessary elements of the various causes of action pled. The motion was granted in whole by the trial court on August 19, 1991, without stating the specific grounds upon which it was based.

V. Standard of Review on Appeal from Summary Judgment

Plaintiffs bring five points of error attacking each of the grounds asserted by defendants as a basis for granting of the [**12] summary judgment. Accordingly, HN1↑ we will consider the summary judgment evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovants and indulge every reasonable inference in their favor. Reilly v. Rangers Management, Inc., 727 S.W.2d 527, 529 \(Tex. 1987\); [Holbrook v. Guynes, 827 S.W.2d 487, 489 \(Tex. App.--Houston \[1st Dist.\] 1992\), aff'd sub nom, Guynes v. Galveston County, 861 S.W.2d 861 \(Tex. 1993\)](#). We will affirm if any theory in [*951] the summary judgment was meritorious. [Fontenot v. NL Industries, 877 S.W.2d 339, 340 \(Tex. App.--Houston \[1st Dist.\] 1993, writ denied\)](#). Plaintiffs must show that each of the independent grounds alleged in the motion is insufficient to support the order. [Crowder v. Tri-C Resources, 821 S.W.2d 393, 396 \(Tex. App.--Houston \[1st Dist.\] 1991, no writ\)](#).

VI. The Claims Contained in the Federal Complaint

Although we decide below that the statute of limitations does not bar any claim brought by plaintiffs, we consider the claims asserted in the federal suit apart from the "new" allegations first brought in the state petition.

A. The State Antitrust Claim

Defendants contend plaintiffs are collaterally estopped [**13] from maintaining the Texas Antitrust Act claim because the federal court decided the merits of that claim. HN2↑ Collateral estoppel precludes the relitigation of identical issues of fact or law that were already litigated and essential to the judgment in a prior lawsuit where the parties were cast as adversaries. [Eagle Properties, Ltd. v. Scharbauer, 807 S.W.2d 714, 721 \(Tex. 1990\); State v. Approximately \$ 2,000,000 in United States Currency, 822 S.W.2d 721, 725 \(Tex. App.--Houston \[1st Dist.\] 1991, no writ\)](#). There are three requirements which must be met for the federal doctrine of collateral estoppel to apply to a subsequent, related state court proceeding:

- (1) the prior federal decision must have resulted in a judgment on the merits;
- (2) the same fact issues sought to be concluded must have been actually litigated in the federal court; and

(3) the disposition of those issues must have been necessary to the outcome of the prior federal litigation.

Shell Pipeline Corp. v. Coastal States Trading, Inc., 788 S.W.2d 837, 843 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1990, writ denied). When an issue of fact or law is actually litigated and determined by [**14] a valid final judgment, and the determination is essential to the judgment, that determination is conclusive in a subsequent action between the parties, whether on the same or a different cause of action. See Bonniwell v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 663 S.W.2d 816, 818 (Tex. 1984).

Plaintiffs' Texas Antitrust Act claim is brought under section 15.05\(a\) of the Texas Antitrust Act. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.05(a) (Vernon 1987). The Texas Supreme Court has noted:

HN3 [↑] Section 15.05\(a\) [of the Texas Antitrust Act] is comparable to, and indeed taken from, section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1988\). Accordingly, we look to federal judicial interpretations of section 1 of the Sherman Act in applying section 15.05\(a\) of our state antitrust law.

DeSantis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 687 (Tex. 1990) (footnote omitted). In addition, section 15.04 of the Texas Antitrust Act provides that its provisions "shall be construed in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes" to an extent consistent with maintaining and promoting economic competition in trade and commerce within Texas. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE [**15] ANN. § 15.04 (Vernon 1987). See also Red Wing Shoe Co. v. Shearer's, Inc., 769 S.W.2d 339, 343 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1989, no writ) ("The Texas legislature not only used language tracking that of the federal statute . . . but it also included a clause [section 15.04] specifying uniformity of construction between the federal and Texas statutes."); Nafrawi v. Hendrick Medical Ctr., 676 F. Supp. 770, 774 (N.D. Tex. 1987) ("Establishing a violation of the [Texas Antitrust Act], then, requires the same elements as are required to establish the comparable violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.").

HN4 [↑] To establish a violation of section one of the Sherman Antitrust Act or section 15.05\(a\) of the Texas Antitrust Act, a plaintiff must prove the challenged restraint of trade is unreasonable and has an "adverse effect on [*952] competition" in the relevant market. DeSantis, 793 S.W.2d at 688; see also MJR Corp. v. B & B Vending Co., 760 S.W.2d 4, 22-23 (Tex. App.--Dallas 1988, writ denied) ("Without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition, [a plaintiff] cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws.").

Here, the federal [**16] court considered the merits of plaintiffs' federal antitrust act claim when it granted the motion for summary judgment. In its memorandum opinion, the federal court held that the claim of conspiracy to purloin patient admissions and referrals (1) could not fall under the "per se rule" of illegality, but must be examined under the "rule of reason,"<sup>3</sup> and (2) under the "rule of reason" analysis, it "could not have had an adverse effect on competition" as a matter of law because Twelve Oaks Hospital dealt with a very small share of the patient market.

Plaintiffs advance the same factual allegations as a basis for the Texas Antitrust Act claim as were advanced in the federal antitrust act claim. Accordingly, we conclude the plaintiffs are collaterally estopped from relitigating the state antitrust [**17] act claim in state court. We hold the trial court properly granted summary judgment on the state antitrust act claim on the basis of collateral estoppel.

b. Tortious Interference

Plaintiffs contend the trial court also committed error in granting summary judgment for defendants regarding the claim against AMI and other defendants for tortious interference with the business relations of Dr. Winston, P.A. and GMC. In their federal complaint, plaintiffs claimed defendants tortiously interfered with their actual and prospective contractual and business relationships, made wrongful use of confidential information, and breached a confidential relationship. The first amended complaint filed in federal court alleged AMI used bribes and illegal inducements to establish a physician group, defendants sought and did obtain Dr. Winston's proprietary information, confused Dr. Winston's patients as to the identity of this physician group, and implied that Dr. Winston and GMC had gone out of business.

---

<sup>3</sup> See National Soc'y of Professional Eng'r's v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 688-92, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1363-65, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978), for an analysis of the distinction between these types of trade restraints.

The original petition filed in state court alleged that AMI used bribes, and other illegal inducements to establish a physician group in the Galleria, and "this group sought to obtain Dr. [**18] Winston's proprietary information, to confuse Dr. Winston's patients as to their identity, and to interfere with Dr. Winston's business relationship by implying that Dr. Winston and his clinic had gone out of business." The second amended petition filed in state court more specifically alleged that in the summer of 1984, AMI hired Dr. Winston's GMC office manager, Nelda Barrera, to assist in establishing its medical office at The Doctors at the Galleria. The petition also states that when Barrera left to work for defendants, she took Dr. Winston's rolodex, confidential information concerning price lists and fee agreements, and the names of Dr. Winston's patients. In response to the defendants' motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs submitted Dr. Winston's affidavit setting out these allegations.

The state court summary judgment record also includes excerpts of deposition testimony from Randy Winograd, the head of AMI's physician relations department. The Doctors at the Galleria was funded by AMI. Winograd stated he was involved in recruiting Barrera to work at The Doctors at the Galleria and knew she was working for Dr. Winston at GMC at that time. Winograd also stated he did not [**19] ask Barrera to bring patient lists from GMC and Barrera told him she would not consider bringing confidential information to AMI if she was hired by The Doctors at the Galleria. Barrera was hired as office manager for The Doctors at the Galleria.

[*953] Excerpts from the deposition of Patricia Claiborne, another employee of GMC, also appear in the record. Claiborne stated Barrera told her she had been hired to work at The Doctors at the Galleria. Claiborne also stated she saw Barrera take the rolodex with names of contact persons, price lists, vendor lists, and other information from GMC, and Barrera told her she was taking such items so that when she left GMC, she would have "everything she needed." Claiborne further stated that after The Doctors at the Galleria opened, patients would arrive at GMC with forms from the other clinic, unaware they were at the wrong clinic.

HN5 The elements of a cause of action for tortious interference with contractual relations are: (1) there was a contract subject to interference; (2) the act of interference was willful and intentional; (3) such intentional act was a proximate cause of a plaintiff's damages; and (4) actual damage or loss occurred. [**20] Browning-Ferris, Inc. v. Reyna, 865 S.W.2d 925, 926 (Tex. 1993); John Masek Corp. v. Davis, 848 S.W.2d 170, 175 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1992, writ denied). Texas law protects existing and prospective contracts from interference. Davis, 848 S.W.2d at 175.

HN6 Interference with a business relationship is similar to the tort of contract interference. It is not necessary to establish the existence of a valid contract, but interference with a general business relationship is actionable only if a defendant's interference is motivated by malice. CF & I Steel Corp. v. Pete Sublett & Co., 623 S.W.2d 709, 715 (Tex. Civ. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1981, writ ref'd n.r.e.). To recover on a cause of action for tortious interference with a prospective business relationship, a plaintiff must show: (1) there was a reasonable probability he would have entered into a business relationship; (2) the defendant acted maliciously by intentionally preventing the relationship from occurring with the purpose of harming the plaintiff; (3) the defendant was not privileged or justified in his actions; and (4) actual harm or damage occurred to the plaintiff as a result. *American [**21] Medical Int'l, Inc. v. Giurintano, 821 S.W.2d 331, 337* (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1991, no writ).

In their motion for summary judgment, defendants argue plaintiffs' claim of tortious interference against AMI is barred by limitations. We disagree. The tortious interference claims against defendants are alleged to have arisen in 1984, when defendants established its clinic and hired Barrera. The plaintiffs filed their federal complaint in 1985, within the two-year limitations period. Although the plaintiffs do not specify the business relationships or actual or prospective contracts of GMC and Dr. Winston, P.A. that were subjected to interference by defendants, such is not their burden to defeat a motion for summary judgment based on limitations. The defendants argued all the plaintiffs' causes of action accrued in October 1983, when Dr. Winston's staff privileges were denied, and so did not present argument or summary judgment evidence sufficient to defeat the claims against defendants for their actions in 1984 as a matter of law. Because of the tolling provisions discussed below, we determine that the trial court could not have properly granted summary judgment on the basis [**22] of limitations as to the tortious interference causes of action originally pled in the federal suit.

VII. Statute of Limitations

Next, we consider the question of whether the trial court could have correctly granted summary judgment in part because a portion of the remainder of Dr. Winston's claims were filed outside the applicable statutes of limitations.

Dr. Winston reapplied for staff privileges at Twelve Oaks in March of 1983. He was sent formal notification of the Hospital's denial of his reapplication by certified mail on or about October 25, 1983, however, there was evidence he did not receive the notice until mid-November, 1983. The federal lawsuit was filed on November 4, 1985, and the amended order of dismissal was signed July 23, 1990. The state court lawsuit was filed July 6, 1990.

[*954] Notwithstanding that the state lawsuit was filed nearly seven years after the events that predicated Dr. Winston's complaints, plaintiffs argue that the respective statutes of limitations were tolled while their case was pending in federal court, based on TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 16.064 (Vernon 1986). Plaintiffs further claim that they could add additional [**23] causes of action that were not included in their federal lawsuit pursuant to TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 16.068 (Vernon 1986), provided that any new theories of recovery were based on the same facts alleged as a basis for the federal suit.

Defendants respond by arguing that (1) plaintiffs have not complied with the procedural requirements of 16.064; (2) that in any event, plaintiffs could not "save" any causes of action other than those specifically pled in the federal suit; and (3) that certain of the state law claims now pled were barred by the relevant statute of limitations before the federal suit was filed. HN7 TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 16.064 (Vernon 1986), provides in part:

(a) The period between the date of filing an action in a trial court and the date of a second filing of the same action in a different court suspends the running of the applicable statute of limitations for the period if:

(1) because of lack of jurisdiction in the trial court where the action was first filed, the action is dismissed or the judgment is set aside or annulled in a direct proceeding; and

(2) not later than the 60th day after the date the dismissal or other disposition [**24] becomes final, the action is commenced in a court of proper jurisdiction.

a. Procedural Requirements of 16.064

Defendants first note plaintiffs filed the state suit (July 6, 1990) before the federal dismissal became final (July 20, 1990) and thus violated section (a)(2). Defendants argue the statute requires that the state suit can only be filed in a window of 60 days after the federal suit becomes final. Therefore, the defendants claim the state suit was filed too soon to take advantage of the statute. Finally, defendants state that Dr. Winston's construction of the statute "would encourage the filing of a second suit anytime during the pendency of the first suit and lead to an undesirable deluge of simultaneous parallel state and federal litigation." (Emphasis in original.)

However, under the facts of this case, we disagree. Here, the state suit was not filed at anytime, but only after a putative final judgment was signed on May 8, 1990, in the federal case. HN8 The tolling provisions are remedial in nature and are to be liberally construed. Vale v. Ryan, 809 S.W.2d 324, 326 (Tex. App.--Austin 1991, no writ.). Although defendants are correct that the precise question [**25] before us was not answered in the Vale opinion, we do not find the construction of the language in the statute urged on us by defendants independently persuasive, nor consistent with the many cases mandating a liberal construction of the statute. Further, we do not find the filing of the state suit in this case so premature, if it was so filed, as to be devoid of any meaningful relationship with the signing of the final judgment. Accordingly, we do not find the trial judge could have granted the summary judgment because of the plaintiffs' alleged failure to comply with the procedural requirements of 16.064.<sup>4</sup>

b. "Saving" statute

Next, defendants [**26] argue that if the state suit was filed consistent with the timeliness requirements of the statute, the only causes of action that can be saved are the ones asserted in the federal suit. Defendants [*955] state that the "same action" language of 16.064(a) limits what plaintiffs can file in the state court to exactly what was filed in the federal court. If defendants are correct, then plaintiffs would have a state suit under the Texas Antitrust laws and for tortious interference with present and prospective contractual and business relationships. The remaining causes of action contained in plaintiffs' state pleadings would have been properly dismissed by the trial judge.

Plaintiffs argue that TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 16.068 (Vernon 1986) allows Dr. Winston to add additional theories of recovery if the new claims are not grounded in new, distinct, or different transactions or occurrences. Defendants present us with no Texas authority that prohibits litigants from taking advantage of the amending provisions of 16.068 to causes of action saved under 16.064. Defendants do cite us to authority from other states construing statutes similar to 16.064, but not to any authority [**27] involving the interaction between statutes like 16.064 and 16.068.

We find that [HN9\[!\[\]\(827454e5bf9d65bde2ee50ccc5bca8a5_img.jpg\)\]](#) sections 16.064 and 16.068 should be interpreted together so as to achieve the clear purpose of the statutes, which is to toll limitations for a certain period when a case is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction and to allow adding to a petition additional theories of liability or defenses after the lawsuit has been filed if those new theories or defenses are not wholly based on a new, distinct, or different transaction or occurrence. Accordingly, we hold the trial judge could not have granted the summary judgment and eliminated the "new" causes of action pled based on the inapplicability of 16.068 to causes of action "saved" under 16.064.

c. Claims Barred before Federal Suit Filed

[HN10\[!\[\]\(3d03aa9edebfde4d4b507bebd61a6cf8_img.jpg\)\]](#) When summary judgment is sought on the ground that limitations has expired, it is the movant's burden to conclusively establish the limitations bar, including the negation of a tolling or suspension statute raised by the nonmovant. Zale Corp. v. Rosenbaum, 520 S.W.2d 889, 891 \(Tex. 1975\); Ardila v. Saavedra, 808 S.W.2d 645, 647 \(Tex. App.--Corpus Christi 1991, no writ\). Dr. Winston pled in his second amended [**28] petition that "the individual Defendants were absent from the state for several days during the two years following the denial of staff privileges; thereby, tolling the statute of limitations on the tort claims."

[HN11\[!\[\]\(6942ce8a0b35c97a36484ee9cc23f476_img.jpg\)\]](#) The absence from this state of a person against whom a cause of action may be maintained suspends the running of the applicable statute of limitations for the period of the person's absence. TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 16.063 (Vernon 1986); Ardila, 808 S.W.2d at 646; Hooper v. Torres, 790 S.W.2d 757, 758-59 \(Tex. App.--El Paso 1990, writ denied\). Because defendants moved for summary judgment, it was their burden to conclusively negate Dr. Winston's reliance on 16.063 and prove the individual defendants were not out of the state as alleged. Ardila, 808 S.W.2d at 647. We find no evidence in the record from the defendants on this issue; thus, the defendants have failed to carry their burden. Therefore, we conclude the trial judge could not have granted summary judgment based on the running of any statute of limitations.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Defendants also urge our consideration of Gutierrez v. Lee, 812 S.W.2d 388, 392 (Tex. App.--Austin 1991, writ denied). In Gutierrez, the Austin Court found 16.064 inapplicable to the facts of the case before it for substantive reasons. We are not bound by the court's suggestion of how 16.064 would have been unhelpful to the Lees even if it did apply.

<sup>5</sup> Because we resolve the case as to all parties later in the opinion with regard to the causes of action arising from the denial of Dr. Winston's application for staff privileges, it is unnecessary here to distinguish between the corporate and individual defendants relative to application of the tolling statute. Obviously, the corporate defendant had not left the state.

[**29] We note that both sides to the litigation have discussed the statute of limitations issue in the context of a suit "for denial of staff privileges." The parties generally agree that the cause of action accrued sometime between late October and late November of 1983 with the receipt by Dr. Winston of the final denial letter sent to him by Sielert, the Hospital's chief administrator. The parties dispute the precise date on which Dr. Winston received the letter. We do not decide whether an accrual date can be determined as a matter of law because plaintiffs pled a [*956] tolling statute, which brings into issue when the limitations period ended as distinguished from when it started. Because we cannot determine as a matter of law on what day limitations ran, it is not necessary for the resolution of the limitations questions presented to address or resolve on what day it started.<sup>6</sup>

[**30] VIII. Private Hospital Action

The first grounds for summary judgment urged by the defendants was that in 1982 and 1983, the denial of staff privileges at a private hospital was not actionable under Texas law, regardless of the cause of action asserted. It is uncontested that Twelve Oaks Hospital is a private hospital. Numerous Texas cases have drawn a distinction between private and public hospitals, consistently holding that HN12<sup>7</sup> the decision of a governing board of a private hospital with regard to staff privileges is not subject to judicial review. *Armintor v. Community Hosp. of Brazosport*, 659 S.W.2d 86, 88-89 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1983, no writ); *Tigua Gen. Hosp. v. Feuerberg*, 645 S.W.2d 575, 578 (Tex. App.--El Paso 1982, writ dism'd w.o.j.); *Hodges v. Arlington Neuropsychiatric Ctr., Inc.*, 628 S.W.2d 536, 538 (Tex. App.--Fort Worth 1982, writ ref'd n.r.e.); *Charter Medical Corp. v. Miller*, 605 S.W.2d 943, 951 (Tex. Civ. App.--Dallas 1980, writ ref'd n.r.e.). See also *Grossling v. Ford Memorial Hosp.*, 614 F. Supp. 1051, 1058 \(E.D. Tex. 1985\). The court in Tigua stated the controlling principles as follows:

Where [**31] a hospital excludes or discriminates against a physician or surgeon applying for or seeking to maintain staff membership, the subsequent treatment of the problem by the courts depends primarily upon whether the hospital involved is a public or private institution and it is generally held that a private hospital acts at its own discretion and that its decisions are not subject to judicial review . . . . Texas follows the rule that the exclusion of a physician from staff privileges is a matter which ordinarily rests with the discretion of the management authorities and is not subject to judicial review. In summary, in the area of private hospitals those cases have held that the doctor in this State has no cause of action against a private hospital for the termination of staff privileges even where the action of the hospital was arbitrary and capricious or where common law rights to procedural or substantive due process were violated. In this situation, the final authority to terminate a doctor-staff privilege rests with the Board of Governors.

645 S.W.2d at 578 (citations omitted).

We agree with defendants that at the relevant time, 1982-1983, Texas law did not permit recovery [**32] by a physician against a private hospital or its staff for denial or termination of physician staff privileges, regardless of the name given to the cause of action. Dr. Winston has not cited to this court a single Texas decision to the contrary, and we have found none.

Accordingly, we affirm the summary judgment against Dr. Winston as to all of his causes of action based on certain defendants' denial of Dr. Winston's application for staff privileges and the termination of his temporary privileges.

We reverse the summary judgment as to Dr. Winston's claim of tortious interference with present and prospective contractual and business relationships based on defendant's establishment of a competing practice in the Galleria area, and we remand that portion of the case to the trial court.

/s/ Sam H. Bass<sup>7</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup> We note that under Dr. Winston's theory of the case, the denial of staff privileges was not an end in itself, but evidence of a broader illegal objective, the taking of his medical business. We have not been asked to discuss other acts allegedly taken in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy, such as the hiring of Dr. Winston's office manager, as they might impact our consideration of the limitations issues.

930 S.W.2d 945, *956L<sup>1</sup>996 Tex. App. LEXIS 4548, **32

Justices Mirabal and Wilson also sitting.

Judgment [**33] rendered and opinion delivered OCT 3 1996

---

End of Document

---

<sup>7</sup> Justice Bass, who retired on May 31, 1993, continues to sit by assignment for the disposition of this case, which was submitted prior to that date.

Trugman-Nash, Inc. v. New Zealand Dairy Bd.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

October 8, 1996, Decided ; October 9, 1996, FILED

93 Civ. 8321 (CSH), 93 Civ. 8329 (CSH)

Reporter

942 F. Supp. 905 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14933 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,588

TRUGMAN-NASH, INC. and TRIO CHEESE IMPORTS, INC., Plaintiff, -against- NEW ZEALAND DAIRY BOARD, MIL PRODUCTS HOLDINGS (NORTH AMERICA) INC. and WESTERN DAIRY PRODUCTS, INC., Defendants. WESTERN DAIRY PRODUCTS, INC., Plaintiffs, -against- TRUGMAN-NASH, INC. and TRIO CHEESE, INC., Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motions in 93 Civ. 8321 denied in their entirety. Western Dairy's motion for partial summary judgment in 93 Civ. 8329 denied. Stay of discovery vacated.

Core Terms

---

Dairy, cheese, cooperatives, export, allegations, amended complaint, plaintiffs', importation, defendants', Sherman Act, marketing, licenses, conspirators, monopolize, motion to dismiss, antitrust claim, conspiracy, entities, farmers, electricity, fraudulent, reinsurers, antitrust, Holdings, quota, act of state doctrine, summary judgment, relevant market, district court, circumstances

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

In deciding whether claims should be dismissed as improper applications of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., to foreign conduct, the only substantial question is whether there is in fact a true conflict between domestic and foreign law.

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

HN2[] Authority to Regulate, Anticompetitive Activities

942 F. Supp. 905, *905LÁ996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14933, **1

The lawfulness of a foreign defendant's conduct under foreign law is not dispositive on the issue of conflict vel non with American law; and that is so even where the foreign state has a strong policy to permit or encourage such conduct. No conflict exists where a person subject to regulation by two states can comply with the laws of both.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

HN3 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In the absence of any demonstrated conflict between American antitrust law and foreign law, the foreign conduct of foreign defendants is subject to district court antitrust scrutiny.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN4 [] Sherman Act, Defenses

It is a necessary factual predicate for application of the act of state doctrine that the relief sought or the defense interposed would have required a court in the United States to declare invalid the official act of a foreign sovereign performed within its own territory.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Political Questions > General Overview

HN5 [] Justiciability, Political Questions

The political question doctrine excludes from judicial review those controversies that revolve around policy choices and value determinations constitutionally committed for resolution to the halls of Congress or the confines of the Executive Branch.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the trial court's function is merely to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint, not to assay the weight of the evidence that might be offered in support thereof. The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims. The district court should grant a Rule 12(b)(6) motion only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN7 [] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

942 F. Supp. 905, *905L<sup>A</sup>996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14933, **1

Except in certain circumstances, consideration of a motion to dismiss the complaint must focus on the allegations contained on the face of the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN8 [down] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

On a motion to dismiss, a district court must accept plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations as true, and the allegations must be construed favorably to the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN9 [down] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\)* need not be granted nor denied in toto but may be granted as to part of a complaint and denied as to the remainder.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN10 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. In antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

942 F. Supp. 905, *905L 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14933, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did produce some substantial effect in the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

While the conduct of a single firm can violate Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, if it threatens actual monopolization, Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, in contrast, reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a "contract, combination or conspiracy" between separate entities. An agreement between two or more persons is fundamental to any Sherman Act § 1 claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of single enterprise for purposes of Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, so that a corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of that section.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There is no requirement that an antitrust plaintiff name all co-conspirators, as long as their existence is set forth in the complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN16** [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Economic reality, not corporate form, should control the decision of whether related entities can conspire.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN17** [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The requisite plurality of conspirators under Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not exist unless cooperatives or the individuals who make up those cooperatives pursued diverse interests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

**HN18** [blue document icon] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

A horizontal price-fixing conspiracy, if proved, constitutes a per se violation of Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1; to sustain that claim, a plaintiff need not plead or prove a relevant market, nor demonstrate that defendant's conduct was economically reasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN19** [blue document icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 2, condemns the conduct of every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN20 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Monopolization without conspiracy is unlawful under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, but restraint of trade without a conspiracy or combination is not unlawful under Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. §2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN21 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The offense of monopoly under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN22 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market analysis turns upon the identity of and options available to the consumers whose interests the antitrust laws are intended to protect.

942 F. Supp. 905, *905L<sup>A</sup> 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14933, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Industrial activities cannot be confined to trim categories. Illegal monopolies under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, may well exist over limited products in narrow fields where competition is eliminated.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

An action for fraud requires proof of a representation of fact which is false and known to be false when made, which is offered to deceive another and with the intention to induce the other to act or refrain from acting, and proof of reliance upon the representation which causes injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN26 [blue icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) must be read together with Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\), which requires only a "short and plain statement" of the claims for relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN27 [blue icon] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

On a motion to dismiss, the court assumes the truth of plaintiff's factual allegations, reads the complaint generously, and draws all inferences in favor of the pleader.

942 F. Supp. 905, *905LÁ996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14933, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN28[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) must be enforced so as to accomplish its three goals: (1) providing a defendant fair notice of plaintiff's claim, to enable preparation of his defense; (2) protecting a defendant from harm to his reputation or goodwill; and (3) reducing the number of strike suits.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN29[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

To satisfy the particularity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), a complaint must adequately specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiff contends the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements. Where multiple defendants are asked to respond to allegations of fraud, the complaint should inform each defendant of the nature of his alleged participation in the fraud. However, no specific connection between fraudulent representations or omissions need be pleaded as to defendants who are insiders or affiliates personally participating in the statements at issue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN30[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

A complaint may adequately identify the statements alleged to be misrepresentations and properly indicate when, where and by whom they were made, yet still fail Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) scrutiny if the complaint does not allege circumstances giving rise to a strong inference that defendant knew the statements to be false, and intended to defraud plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Knowledge

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN31[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

While Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) permits conditions of mind to be averred generally, the rule also requires that allegations of scienter be supported by facts giving rise to a "strong inference" of fraudulent intent.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

**HN32** [blue document icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Knowledge of falsity cannot be alleged in conclusory terms. Plaintiff must be able to allege particulars regarding a defendant's awareness or discovery of the facts upon which plaintiff relies for the claim of fraud.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Eyewitness Identification > Due Process Protections > Fair Identification Requirement

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

**HN33** [blue document icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

To satisfy the scienter requirement, a plaintiff need not allege facts which show a defendant had a motive for committing fraud, so long as plaintiff adequately identifies circumstances indicating "conscious behavior" by the defendant from which an intent to defraud may fairly be inferred. However, where a particular defendant's motive to defraud is not apparent, the strength of the circumstantial allegations must be correspondingly greater.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

**HN34** [blue document icon] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Allegations may be based on information and belief when facts are peculiarly within the opposing party's knowledge. However, that exception to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\)'s general requirement of particularized pleading does not constitute a license to base claims of fraud on speculation or conclusory allegations. Where pleading is permitted on information and belief, a complaint must adduce specific facts supporting a strong inference of fraud or it will not satisfy a relaxed pleading standard.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > Aggravating Circumstances

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

**HN35** [blue document icon] Damages, Punitive Damages

Under New York law, punitive damages may be awarded for gross, wanton, or willful fraud, or other morally culpable conduct.

Counsel: APPEARANCES:

ZUCKERMAN, SPAEDER, GOLSTEIN, TAYLOR & KOLKER, New York, NY, Of Counsel: Edward Little, Esq., Howard Adler, Esq., Attorneys for Trugman-Nash, Inc. and Trio Cheese Imports, Inc.

BAKER & McKENZIE, New York, NY, Of Counsel: Lawrence W. Newman, Esq., Craig Celniker, Esq., Lalit Loomb, Esq., Attorneys for New Zealand Dairy Board, Milk Products Holdings (North America), Inc. and Western Dairy Products, Inc.

Judges: CHARLES S. HAIGHT, JR., UNITED STATES SENIOR DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: CHARLES S. HAIGHT, JR.

Opinion

---

[*908] MEMORANDUM OPINION

HAIGHT, Senior District Judge:

These consolidated cases arise out of the importation of New Zealand cheese into the United States. The factual background and the nature of certain pending motions are described in the Court's opinion dated February 21, 1996. Subsequently the Court heard oral argument. This opinion resolves the pending motions.

Familiarity with the prior opinion is presumed. For present purposes, it is sufficient to say that plaintiffs in 93 Civ. 8321 are domestic [*2] importers of New Zealand cheese under licenses issued by the United States Department of Agriculture ("USDA"). Defendants in that action consist of the New Zealand Dairy Board ("the NZDB" or "the Board") and two Delaware corporations closely related to NZDB and each other. Plaintiffs complain of defendants' failure to deliver a contracted-for quantity of cheese. Their claims sound in breach of contract, quantum meruit, common law fraud, and antitrust. Defendants move to dismiss the fraud and antitrust claims. In 93 Civ. 8329, Western Dairy Products, Inc. ("Western Dairy"), a defendant in the other case with [*909] whom plaintiffs dealt directly, moves for partial summary judgment to recover an allegedly undisputed amount due.

I

In 93 Civ. 8321, defendants move to dismiss plaintiffs' fourth and fifth claims. Those claims, as set forth in an amended complaint, allege that defendants violated the antitrust laws of the United States. The fourth claim alleges that defendants entered into a conspiracy in restraint of trade, in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The fifth claim alleges that defendants monopolized the importation, distribution and sale in the United [*3] States of New Zealand cheese, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Defendants make two arguments in support of their motion. First, they contend that this Court lacks jurisdiction to adjudicate plaintiffs' antitrust claims, or that it should refrain from exercising any jurisdiction that might exist. Second, defendants contend that the fourth and fifth claims fail to state claims upon which relief can be granted.

A

Defendants' jurisdictional arguments are founded primarily upon the manner in which the New Zealand Dairy Board Act of 1961, as amended, created and governs the conduct of the NZDB. On that aspect of the case, defendants invoke the doctrines of act of state, foreign sovereign compulsion, and international comity. These doctrines, while separately briefed and argued, overlap to a large degree. I think that the applicability of all three doctrines to the case at bar depends upon the answer to the same question: whether New Zealand law compels defendants to conduct their affairs in the manner described in the amended complaint, which plaintiffs say violate American antitrust law.<sup>1</sup> If that question be answered in the negative, then there is no apparent [*4] impediment to defendants' compliance with the laws of both countries, and no basis for immunizing defendants from the consequences of American antitrust violations.

---

<sup>1</sup> For purposes of this motion, I treat plaintiffs' factual allegations as true.

These conclusions follow from the Supreme Court's decision in Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 (1993). Plaintiffs alleged that domestic primary insurers and reinsurers, brokers, and trade associations, together with British reinsurers based in London, violated the Sherman Act by engaging in various conspiracies aimed at forcing American primary insurers to change the terms of their liability policies to conform with policies the defendants wished to sell. I am concerned in the case at bar only with the Court's holding with respect to the British reinsurers.

The British reinsurers argued that the principle of international comity precluded District Court jurisdiction over the foreign conduct alleged, a contention [**5] that the District Court accepted. The Ninth Circuit reversed. In re Insurance Antitrust Litigation, 938 F.2d 919, 932-34 (9th Cir. 1991).<sup>2</sup> The Court of Appeals applied the six factors enumerated in its prior decisions in Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, 549 F.2d 597 (9th Cir. 1976) (Timberlane I), and 749 F.2d 1378 (9th Cir. 1984) (Timberlane II). The balancing of those factors, the Ninth Circuit concluded in Hartford, militated in favor of District Court jurisdiction over plaintiffs' antitrust claims against the British reinsurers. The Timberlane case reached the opposite conclusion, which defendants at bar understandably stress; but the Court of Appeals explained the different result in Hartford by saying at 938 F.2d at 933:

The comparison led to the ultimate dismissal of the Timberlane suit in Timberlane II: the effects of the conduct charged were substantial in Honduras and minimal in the United States. Timberlane II, 749 F.2d at 1385. The case here is just the reverse. The effects are minimal, or at any rate not large in England, and they are, as implicitly found by the district court, "direct, substantial, and reasonably [*910] foreseeable" [**6] in the United States, as to which Lloyds does at least half of its casualty underwriting. Accepting as true the plaintiffs' allegations, the actions of the foreign defendants have had the kind of "real economic consequences" for the American economy that strongly weigh in favor of the exercise of jurisdiction.

The Supreme Court affirmed the Ninth Circuit, but I think it fair to say that its analysis was more sharply focused. HN1[↑] In deciding whether "certain claims against the London reinsurers should have been dismissed as improper applications of the Sherman Act to foreign conduct," 509 U.S. at 794-95, the Court identified as "the only substantial question in this litigation . . . whether there is in fact a true conflict between domestic and foreign law." Id. at 798 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). Answering that question in the negative, the Court accepted [**7] the British reinsurers' assertion "that Parliament has established a comprehensive regulatory regime over the London reinsurance market and that the conduct alleged here was perfectly consistent with British law and policy." Id. at 798-99. "But," the Court continued, "this is not to state a conflict." HN2[↑] The lawfulness of a foreign defendant's conduct under foreign law is not dispositive on the issue of conflict vel non with American law; and that is so, "even where the foreign state has a strong policy to permit or encourage such conduct." Id. at 799. No conflict exists "where a person subject to regulation by two states can comply with the laws of both"; and that circumstance obtained in Hartford, "since the London reinsurers do not argue that British law requires them to act in some fashion prohibited by the law of the United States, or claim that their compliance with the law of both countries is otherwise impossible." Id. (citations and interior quotation marks omitted). HN3[↑] In the absence of any demonstrated conflict between American antitrust law and British law, the foreign conduct of the British reinsurers was subject to District Court antitrust scrutiny.

Accordingly, [**8] I conceive the threshold question in the case at bar to be whether New Zealand law requires defendants to engage in the conduct which plaintiffs allege violates the Sherman Act.

B

---

<sup>2</sup> I will hereafter refer to the Ninth Circuit's decision as "Hartford", to conform to the title of the case in the Supreme Court.

On August 30, 1961, the New Zealand Parliament enacted the Dairy Board Act of 1961 (hereinafter "the Act"), which came into force on September 1 of that year.<sup>3</sup> Act, § 1. The Act established "a Board, to be called the New Zealand Dairy Board," § 3(1), which "is a body corporate, with perpetual succession and a common seal." § 3(4).

The Board is comprised of two directors appointed by the Minister, a government official, and eleven directors appointed or elected by 15 cooperative companies in the dairy industry. Act, § 3AA. The Board elects its Chairman. § 5(1).

§ 14 of the Act is captioned "General functions of the Board." That section provides in part:

- (1) The general functions of the Board shall be--
- (a) Repealed
- (b) [**9] To acquire, pay for, and market such export produce as the Board may from time to time determine;
- (c) To control the export of dairy produce other than dairy produce acquired and marketed by the Board. . ."

§ 15 is captioned "Board to comply with general trade policy of Government." That section provides:

In the exercise of its functions and powers under this Act the Board shall comply with the general trade policy of the Government of New Zealand, and shall comply with any general or special directions given by the Minister pursuant to the policy of the Government in relation thereto.

Part II of the Act is captioned generally "Marketing of Export Produce." § 17 of the [*911] Act falls within Part II. § 17 provides in part:

- 17. Powers of Board as to acquisition and marketing of export produce
  - (1) Without limiting any of the powers conferred on the Board by this Act or otherwise howsoever, the Board shall have full authority to make and carry out such arrangements as it thinks proper for any of the following purposes:
    - (a) For the acquisition and marketing by the Board of export produce;
    - (b) For the handling, pooling, transport, and storage of [**10] export produce;
    - (c) For the consignment of export produce on such terms and in such quantities as it thinks fit;
    - (d) For the insurance against loss of export produce;
    - (e) For the establishment of a fund for the purpose of meeting any loss of or damage to export produce acquired by the Board or for the taking of such other steps as the Board thinks fit for that purpose;
    - (f) For the further treatment, processing, or packing of export produce;
    - (g) For furthering the sale or export of dairy produce;
    - (h) Subject to subsections (1A) to (1F) of this section, for prohibiting, restricting, and controlling the export of any export produce other than by the Board;
    - (i) Generally for all such matters as are necessary for the exercise of the functions and powers of the Board under this Part of this Act.
  - (1A) Any person who wishes to export dairy produce of any kind or description may apply to the Board for permission to do so, specifying the markets where the produce is intended to be sold; and, having had regard to --
    - (a) The extent to which the markets are in states that do not impose quantitative restrictions on the importation of dairy produce; and
    - (b) [**11] The extent to which the export of the produce to the markets might result in a direct or indirect reduction of the overall returns to the New Zealand dairy industry; and
    - (c) Any other relevant guidelines for the time being established by the Board for the purposes of this section and published by the Board, -- the Board shall grant or refuse permission.

The manner in which the NZDB has structured the exportation of New Zealand cheese to the United States is described in the amended complaint and the motion papers. There appears to be no dispute on that subject.

---

<sup>3</sup>The text of the Act submitted with the motion papers includes all amendments as of June 30, 1993.

As noted, New Zealand's thousands of dairy farmers were formed into 15 cooperatives. The Board formed defendant Milk Products Holdings (North America) Inc. ("MP Holdings"), a Delaware corporation, as its wholly owned subsidiary, for the purpose of holding the stock of other United States corporations. Amended Complaint, P 4. The Board also caused the creation of defendant Western Dairy, a Delaware corporation and a wholly owned subsidiary of MP Holdings, to act as the Board's agent in the distribution and sale of New Zealand dairy products in the United States. Id., P 5. Western Dairy, like the plaintiffs, holds [***12] licenses from the USDA to import New Zealand cheese into the United States. Pursuant to USDA regulations, Western Dairy has been designated as the "preferred" importer of New Zealand cheese, which entitles it to receive a specific portion of the quota amount of cheeses allotted to New Zealand for importation, together with any other amounts to which Western Dairy might be entitled by other licenses it holds. Honeyfield Affidavit, P 7.

Plaintiffs say, and defendants do not appear to question, that the NZDB has exercised the powers conferred upon it by the Act to become "the de facto exclusive purchaser and exporter of New Zealand dairy produce, including cheese." Amended Complaint, P 13. And American importers such as plaintiffs may purchase New Zealand cheese only from Western Dairy. In defendants' phrasing, the NZDB utilizes Western Dairy "as its conduit for all New Zealand cheeses sold to import licensees in the United States." Honeyfield Affidavit, P 9. Plaintiffs state the proposition in less genteel [*912] terms. "United States importers, such as the plaintiffs, have no alternative but to procure New Zealand dairy produce, including cheese, from the monolithic export cartel created [***13] by the Board, its Directors, and co-conspirators." Amended Complaint, P 13.

The market price of cheese in the United States is set at weekly intervals by the National Cheese Exchange, also known as the Green Bay Cheese Exchange ("the Exchange"). Plaintiffs purchase New Zealand cheese from Western Dairy at prices slightly discounted from the most recent Exchange quotes. Thus, the two purchase orders giving rise to this litigation were based upon prices quoted by Western Dairy at, respectively, 6 cents and 8 cents below the Exchange quotes in effect on the Friday before the preparation of entry documents for the cheese covered by the purchase orders. Amended Complaint, P 17.

Plaintiffs do not suggest that defendants control or influence in any way the price quotations on the Green Bay Cheese Exchange. The gravamen of plaintiffs' antitrust charges is that they cannot deal directly and individually with New Zealand dairy farmers or cooperatives, in an effort to obtain a greater discount from the Exchange rate, which is to say, to pay a lower price for the cheese plaintiffs then resell in the American market. Counsel for plaintiffs put it this way at the oral argument:

The point [***14] is that if this were a free market, if these 15 combines weren't cooperating through the dairy board in this price cartel and we could go to one or the other, we wouldn't be getting a rate 6 cents off of the floating market rate, we would be getting 10, 20, 30 cents cheaper.

Tr. 35.

Moreover, plaintiffs argue, defendants are practicing a form of price control that is not mandated by the New Zealand Dairy Board Act:

What we are complaining about is that just because the New Zealand government said, poof, there is a dairy board and that has broad discretion to control the market, the New Zealand government didn't say, Dairy board create a price cartel, you sell every gram of cheese, you set the price.

Tr. 36-37.

Plaintiffs are correct. I do not find any language in the Act that mandates the pricing and selling structure that the Board devised and implemented. The Act created the Board; defines the Board's "general functions" in language that is general indeed; commands the Board, in comparable language, to "comply with the general trade policy of the Government of New Zealand," an unsurprising directive for the Parliament to include.

§ 17 of the Act confers [***15] broad powers upon the Board, and defendants rely primarily upon that section to show that the statute compelled the conduct of which plaintiffs complain. But I do not think that the language bears that interpretation. § 17(1) gives the Board "full authority to make and carry out such arrangements as it thinks proper" for, inter alia, "the acquisition and marketing by the Board of export produce," § 17(1)(a), and "the consignment of export produce on such terms and in such quantities as it thinks fit," § 17\(1\)\(c\). Those provisions certainly authorize the Board to market all export produce itself, and consequently to funnel all cheese exports to the United States through Western Dairy, as indeed it has done. However, the Act does not require that all export produce be marketed by or through the Board; § 17\(1A\) permits "any person who wishes to export dairy produce" to "apply to the Board for permission to do so," in which event "the Board shall grant or refuse permission." In evaluating such a request, the Act commands the Board to "give regard," inter alia, to "the extent to which the export of the produce to the markets might result in a direct or indirect reduction of [**16] the overall returns to the New Zealand dairy industry," § 17\(1A\)\(b\). That particular provision no doubt reflects Parliament's unexceptionable policy of maximizing New Zealand's dairy product income; but the statute falls well short of compelling any particular commercial arrangements to carry that policy out.

Accordingly the most that can be said for the defendant Board is that the New Zealand [\[\*913\]](#) Parliament established a statutory scheme conferring comprehensive powers upon it, and that the Board's conduct alleged here is perfectly consistent with New Zealand law and policy. That is the showing made by the English reinsurers in Hartford; but, as that case holds, it is not sufficient to create a conflict with American antitrust law.

C

Accordingly the present defendants' invocation of international comity avails them nothing; and the same result necessarily follows with respect to the doctrine of foreign sovereign compulsion, since the Act cannot be read to compel the particular conduct alleged in the amended complaint.

But defendants make an additional argument with respect to the act of state doctrine. They contend that "the issue of compulsion is irrelevant to the act of state [\[\*\*17\]](#) doctrine analysis," which focuses instead upon the validity of the foreign state's legislative enactment. Defendants' Reply Brief at 14. In defendants' view, "the act of state doctrine is properly invoked when the validity of a sovereign act, taken within the territory of that sovereign, is necessarily at issue"; in such a circumstance, the argument concludes, "the Court should apply the act of state doctrine to hold that Act valid and refrain from adjudicating [plaintiffs'] challenge to it." Id.

The act of state doctrine has no application to this case. Notwithstanding defendants' characterization of the action in their briefs, plaintiffs are not challenging the validity of the New Zealand Dairy Board Act. Rather, plaintiffs challenge the particular conduct indulged in by the defendants pursuant to powers conferred by that statute. HN4 It is a necessary factual predicate for application of the act of state doctrine that "the relief sought or the defense interposed would have required a court in the United States to declare invalid the official act of a foreign sovereign performed within its own territory." [W. S. Kirkpatrick & Co., Inc. v. Environmental Tectonics Corp., International, \[\\[\\*181\\] 493 U.S. 400, 405, 107 L. Ed. 2d 816, 110 S. Ct. 701 \\(1990\\)\]\(#\)](#). I need not declare the Dairy Board Act invalid in order to conclude that the defendants' conduct thereunder violated the Sherman Act. The case at bar may be contrasted with Hunt v. Mobil Oil Corp., 550 F.2d 68 \(2d Cir. 1977\), in which an independent American oil producer holding a Libyan oil concession asserted an antitrust claim against major American oil companies for conspiring successfully to obtain a Libyan government decree nationalizing plaintiff's Libyan interests. Although plaintiff did not name the Libyan government as a party defendant, the Second Circuit observed that "its claim is admittedly not viable unless the judicial branch examines the motivation of the Libyan action and that inevitably involves its validity." 550 F.2d at 77. In that circumstance, the act of state doctrine was applied to bar the antitrust claim. The case at bar does not involve the motivation of a foreign state's nationalization of property within its territory. The New Zealand Parliament's motivation in enacting the Dairy Board Act is manifest, and plaintiffs do not challenge the validity of New Zealand's conduct in enacting it.

[\[\*\*19\]](#) My conclusion that the act of state doctrine does not apply to this case is reinforced by certain declarations made on behalf of defendants in a different setting. In March 1995, the United States Department of Agriculture was conducting public hearings to consider revisions to USDA regulations governing the importation of certain cheese and noncheese dairy products. Representatives of plaintiffs and defendants participated, taking positions opposed to each other. It is not necessary to recount the issues in detail. The significance of the hearings for present purposes lies in descriptive statements made by NZDB representatives about the Board and its functions.

Specifically, Graeme Honeyfield, president of Western Dairy, appeared at a hearing on March 10, 1995 "on behalf of Western Dairy Products and its parent, the New Zealand Dairy Board, in response to the Department's invitation to present views on the possible changes in the regulation of dairy product imports." Tr. 100. A time came when Mr. Honeyfield was moved to say:

I think it's fair to comment, and I'd like to put on the record, that the New Zealand [*914] Dairy Board is an entity that is owned by the cooperative dairy [**20] farmers in New Zealand. It is not controlled by any other organization other than the 14,000 dairy farmers and the dairy Board operates as that marketing arm with the full consent of those farmers. And in fact, a recent survey in New Zealand of those farmers reported that 93 percent of those farmers wanted to maintain the current system. So it is certainly not what might be traditional [sic] termed the "state trading organization." There is not government involved in the operation, of New Zealand Diary Board and its marketing.

Tr. 109-110.

On March 17, 1995, counsel for the NZDB and Western Dairy submitted to the USDA a written "rebuttal statement," which states in part:

The Board is a cooperatively structured organization which operates as the export marketing arm of the New Zealand dairy industry. It is owned by the supplying Co-operatives, which in turn are owned by New Zealand's dairy farmers, whose milk is processed by the Co-operatives for export by the Dairy Board. Thus, the Board is a commercial organization operating as an independent entity, funded entirely by the farmer owners without taxpayer assistance. It is the industry's choice, which is to say the [**21] desire of New Zealand dairy farmers, to structure their business in this way, with the common objective of maximizing returns from export marketings. An independent survey recently conducted resulted in 89% of dairy farmers supporting the Board's marketing of NZ dairy exports.

These declarations, admissible against defendants under Rule 801\(d\)\(2\), Fed. R. Evid., are inconsistent with their litigation position that the act of state doctrine shields the Board's conduct from an American court's scrutiny.<sup>4</sup>

In sum, the doctrines of international comity, foreign sovereign compulsion, and act of state, viewed separately or together, do not preclude this Court from exercising jurisdiction over plaintiffs' antitrust claims.

II

Defendants also argue that plaintiffs' antitrust claims raise nonjusticiable political questions. This is urged as an alternative basis for dismissal.

[**22] Defendants' argument necessarily focuses upon the actions of the United States government, not the government of New Zealand. That is because HNS↑ "the political question doctrine excludes from judicial review those controversies which revolve around policy choices and value determinations constitutionally committed for resolution to the halls of Congress or the confines of the Executive Branch." Japan Whaling Association v. American Cetacean Society, 478 U.S. 221, 230, 92 L. Ed. 2d 166, 106 S. Ct. 2860 \(1986\). The Judiciary is regarded as "particularly ill suited to make such decisions, as courts are fundamentally underequipped to formulate national policies or develop standards for matters not legal in nature." Id. (citation and quotation marks omitted).

Defendants say that these considerations are implicated in the case at bar because plaintiffs' complaint "attack[s] the entire statutory and regulatory scheme that governs the importation of foreign cheese into the U.S." Defendants' Main Brief at 17. But the amended complaint cannot reasonably be read in that manner. As the allegations that defendants themselves summarize in their brief reveal, plaintiffs are attacking the [**23] conduct of defendants and its effect upon the prices plaintiffs must pay for New Zealand cheese. While these economic consequences occur within the context of an import quota system fashioned by the Congress and Executive Branch of the United States government, it is far too much of a stretch to say that the amended complaint "challenges the substance" of that statutory and regulatory authority. Id. at 22. In this action at least, plaintiffs do not challenge the acts of the [*915] Congress, expressed in statutes or treaties, or the acts of the Executive, expressed in regulations. On the contrary: plaintiffs proclaim and celebrate the existence of a licensed quota system which endows the licenses they hold with commercial value. The gravamen of their antitrust claims is that defendants' conduct deprives them of the full benefit of import licenses generated under domestic law.

---

<sup>4</sup> These statements run equally counter to defendants' invocation of the doctrines of international comity and foreign sovereign compulsion.

It follows that the political question doctrine does not preclude this Court's exercise of jurisdiction over plaintiffs' antitrust claims.

Having dealt with these objections to the Court's jurisdiction over those antitrust claims, I now turn to their legal sufficiency.

III

Defendants move to dismiss plaintiffs' **24] antitrust claims under Rule 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P., for failure to state a claim.

HN6[] On a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the trial court's function "is merely to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint, not to assay the weight of the evidence which might be offered in support thereof." Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639 (2d Cir. 1980); see Ricciuti v. N.Y.C. Transit Authority, 941 F.2d 119, 124 (2d Cir. 1991). "The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974). The district court should grant a Rule 12(b)(6) motion "only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984) (citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957)).

HN7[] Except in certain circumstances, consideration of a motion to dismiss the complaint must focus on the allegations contained on the face of the complaint. See Cortec Industries, **25] Inc. v. Sum Holding, L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 47 (2d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 112 S. Ct. 1561 (1992); Kramer v. Time Warner, Inc., 937 F.2d 767, 773 (2d Cir. 1991). HN8[] On a motion to dismiss, a district court must accept plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations as true, Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 283, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209, 106 S. Ct. 2932 (1986), and the allegations must be "construed favorably to the plaintiff." LaBounty v. Adler, 933 F.2d 121, 123 (2d Cir. 1991). HN9[] "[A] Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss need not be granted nor denied in toto but may be granted as to part of a complaint and denied as to the remainder." Decker v. Massey-Ferguson, Ltd., 681 F.2d 111, 115 (2d Cir. 1982).

These strictures apply with particular force to antitrust claims. In Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976), the Supreme Court said:

We have held that HN10[] "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, **26] 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) (footnote omitted). And in antitrust cases, where "the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators," Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962), dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.

The question is whether plaintiffs' complaint, read in the light required by these authorities, "states a claim upon which relief can be granted under the Sherman Act." 425 U.S. at 747 (footnote omitted).

A

Plaintiffs' fourth claim alleges that defendants violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. That section forbids HN11[] "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." It is now well established "that HN12[↑] the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did produce some substantial effect in the United [\[\*916\]](#) States." Hartford, 509 U.S. at 796.<sup>5</sup>

[**27] Plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges that the NDZB and its co-conspirators have created an "export cartel" setting "export prices for New Zealand dairy products, including cheese, higher than those that would have prevailed if New Zealand dairy manufacturers had sold independently in a free and open competitive market." As a result, "plaintiffs and other American importers of New Zealand dairy produce, including cheese, have been forced to pay higher prices" than they would otherwise have had to pay. Amended Complaint, PP 47, 48, 49(c), 50(b). It follows, plaintiffs argue, that they have sufficiently alleged a price-fixing cartel which is unlawful per se, thereby relieving them of the necessity of pleading or proving the reasonableness of the price as fixed, or the relevant market. Plaintiffs' Brief at 29.

Defendants argue that plaintiffs have not adequately alleged a § 1 conspiracy. Their first contention is that the amended complaint does not plead the requisite plurality of conspirators.

"The Sherman Act contains a basic distinction between concerted and independent action." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 [\[\*\*28\]](#) (1984) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). HN13[↑] While the conduct of a single firm can violate § 2 of the statute if it threatens actual monopolization, § 1, "in contrast, reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy' between separate entities." Id. at 767-68 (emphasis in original). "An agreement between two or more persons is fundamental to any § 1 claim." Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's International Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 70 \(2d Cir. 1988\).

Copperweld holds that HN14[↑] "the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of single enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act," so that a corporation "and its wholly owned subsidiary . . . are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act." 467 U.S. at 771, 777. It follows that in the case at bar, the NZDB, MP Holdings and Western Dairy must be regarded as a single enterprise, insufficient to satisfy § 1's requirement that there be at least two conspirators. I do not understand plaintiffs to contend otherwise.

Plaintiffs profess to find the requisite plurality [\[\*\*29\]](#) of conspirators among the dairy farmers of New Zealand. Thus P 47 of the amended complaint alleges:

This claim is asserted against New Zealand Diary Board for injuries to plaintiffs' business and property caused by the inflation of export prices on New Zealand cheese that has resulted from the unlawful combination and conspiracy among the New Zealand Dairy Board and New Zealand dairy manufacturers that have collectively refused to sell dairy produce, including cheese, to United States importers in a free and open competitive market but have instead combined and conspired to create an export cartel.

In briefs and oral argument, counsel for plaintiffs further refine this concept to consist of the 15 dairy cooperatives formed to act in concert with the Board. It appears from the record that plaintiff may have first learned of the cooperatives from affidavits submitted by defendants in support of their motion to dismiss the antitrust claims.

Defendants say that plaintiffs' references, in briefs and argument, introduce a new factual allegation which can properly be asserted only in the form of a further amended complaint. But I do not think it is necessary to require plaintiffs [\[\*\*30\]](#) to engage in further Rule 15 practice before the Court addresses the substantive issues involved. On a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, a complaint's factual allegations must be construed favorably to the plaintiff, and the description of collective conduct alleged in P 47 is broad enough to embrace [*917] the concept of the 15 cooperatives as Sherman Act § 1 co-conspirators.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>5</sup> Whatever limitations on this principle may arise from § 402 of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 (FTAIA), 15 U.S.C. § 6a, do not apply to the case at bar, since the FTAIA specifically excludes from its coverage "import trade or import commerce."

[**31] However, that conclusion on a point of procedure does not resolve the question of substance, which is whether the Board, MP Holdings, Western Dairy, and the cooperatives should be regarded as a single economic enterprise under the rationale of Copperweld.

The parties' research and that of the Court reveals three cases which consider cooperatives or trade associations in the context of antitrust single enterprise analysis. These are Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. 19, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305, 82 S. Ct. 1130 (1962); United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 (1972); and City of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa v. Associated Electric Cooperative, Inc., 838 F.2d 268 (8th Cir. 1988), an Eighth Circuit opinion by Judge Arnold which discusses both Sunkist and Topco.

In Sunkist, 12,000 growers of citrus fruits in California and Arizona organized into local associations which operated packing houses. The associations in turn were grouped into district exchanges, and representatives from those exchanges made up the governing board of Sunkist, a nonstock membership corporation, which served the members [**32] as an organization for marketing their fresh produce, all its net revenues being distributed to the members. Subsequently, several member associations created a separate corporation to develop by-products for lemons in order to create a market for produce not salable as fresh fruit. 370 U.S. at 21.

These entities were sued for Sherman Act § 1 conspiracy and § 2 monopolization. The Court, reversing a jury verdict in plaintiffs' favor, held that these entities could not "be considered independent parties for the purposes of the conspiracy provisions of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 27. The Court reasoned that if the 12,000 growers had done no more than form a single collective association, the immunity from antitrust prosecution conferred by § 6 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 17, and § 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C. § 291, would clearly apply. Id. at 27-29. But plaintiffs argued that the growers' creation of several separate organizations, as described above, took the conduct of the growers and these entities out of the protection of the Clayton and Capper-Volstead Acts.

The Court disagreed, saying at 370 U.S. at 29:

. . . the 12,000 growers here [**33] involved are in practical effect and in the contemplation of the statutes one "organization" or "association" even though they have formally organized themselves into three separate legal entities. To hold otherwise would be to impose grave legal consequences upon organizational distinctions that are of de minimis meaning and effect to these growers who have banded together for processing and marketing purposes within the purview of the Clayton and Capper-Volstead Acts. There is no indication that the use of separate corporations had economic significance in itself or that outsiders considered and dealt with the three entities as independent organizations. That the packing is done by local associations, the advertising, sales, and traffic by divisions of the area association, and the processing by separate organizations does not in our opinion preclude these growers from being considered one organization or association for purpose of the Clayton and Capper-Volstead Acts.

In Topco, the Court considered an action for injunctive relief against Topco, a cooperative association of approximately 25 small [*918] and medium-sized regional supermarket chains operating stores in 33 states.

<sup>6</sup>While the amended complaint does not name the cooperatives or make them parties defendant, that does not render the pleading defective. HN15↑ There is "no requirement that a plaintiff name . . . all co-conspirators as long as their existence is set forth in the complaint." Eye Encounter, Inc. v. Contour Art, Ltd., 81 F.R.D. 521, 524 (S.D.N.Y. 1981). The pleading's reference to collective conduct on the part of New Zealand dairy farmers is sufficient to implicate the cooperatives, and of course defendants know who they are. See also Volvo North America Corp., 857 F.2d at 71 (requisite plurality of conspirators sufficiently pleaded where named association consisted of multiple entities acting as joint venturers, although those entities were not named or made parties defendant).

[**34] Each of the member chains operated independently, without pooling of earnings, profits, capital, management, or advertising resources. Topco did not conduct grocery business under its own name. Its basic function was to serve as a purchasing agent for its members. 405 U.S. at 598. Over time, Topco "developed into a purchasing association wholly owned and operated by member chains, which possess much economic muscle, individually as well as cooperatively." Id. at 600.

The government charged Topco with violating § 1 of the Sherman Act by allocating marketing territories among its members. Clearly regarding the Topco members as competitors inter se and hence with interests diverse from the cooperative, the Court said that "one of the classic examples of a per se violation of § 1 is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition . . . . We think that it is clear that the restraint in this case is a horizontal one, and, therefore, a per se violation of § 1." 405 U.S. at 608.

Analyzing Topco in Mt. Pleasant, Judge Arnold observed that while the fact that "Topco's members had [**35] interests diverse from the cooperatives was not made explicit in the Court's opinion, it was in the District Court's findings of fact in that case." 838 F.2d at 276 n.6. The District Court in Topco found, inter alia, that "there have been a number of instances where Topco members have expanded into new territories without using Topco-branded products, including areas already licensed to another Topco member." United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 1031, 1037 \(N.D. Ill. 1970\).

In Mt. Pleasant, the defendants charged with being Sherman Act § 1 conspirators were separate corporations comprising part of a rural electric cooperative organized in Missouri and Iowa. The Court of Appeals' opinion describes the structure of the cooperative as follows:

This organization has three tiers. At the top of the organizational chart is Associated Electric Cooperative, Inc., which owns all but a fraction of the cooperative's electrical-generating capacity, and all of the larger power lines in the cooperative's transmission grid; it controls all of the production and distribution of electricity for the organization. J.A. 197-200. At the next level are six generation-and-transmission [**36] cooperatives (G & Ts), including defendants Central Electric Power Cooperative and Northeast Missouri Electric Power Cooperative, each of which owns a portion of the transmission grid, and which are responsible for transporting and selling wholesale electricity. Id. The third tier contains 43 local retain-distribution cooperatives, which buy wholesale power from the G & Ts and sell it to the cooperative's consumer-members in their service areas. Id.

838 F.2d at 271.

Plaintiff City of Mt. Pleasant owned an electric utility that sold electricity at retail to industrial, commercial and residential customers. The city found it less expensive to buy electricity wholesale from other utilities rather than produce its own, and accordingly entered into purchase agreements with the cooperative. Thereafter the city brought an antitrust action against certain of the entities involved in the cooperative structure previously described, alleging inter alia that these defendants "participated in a price-squeeze conspiracy" in violation of § 1 of the Sherman act. 838 F.2d at 270. Upon completion of discovery, defendants moved for summary judgment. The District Court dismissed [**37] the § 1 claim on the authority of Copperweld. The Eighth Circuit affirmed.

Judge Arnold's opinion summarizes Copperweld as holding "that HN16 economic reality, not corporate form, should control the decision of whether related entities can conspire," and expresses the view that the Copperweld Court's "approving citation" of Sunkist "illustrates the point." 838 F.2d at 275. In Mt. Pleasant the Eighth Circuit went on to say of Sunkist:

It is true that Sunkist was decided under statutes granting immunity from antitrust liability, but we see no reason why, in the absence of a statutory immunity, similar [*919] considerations should not guide the determination of whether related entities are a single enterprise for purposes of the conspiracy statute. In either case, a holding that the separate cooperatives are of separate organizations or can conspire together would "impose grave legal consequences upon organizational distinctions that are of de minimis meaning and effect." Id.

The Mt. Pleasant court distinguished Topco in these words:

The critical distinction between this case and Topco is that here there is no evidence that any [**38] defendant ever pursued interests antithetical to those of the cooperative as a whole, while in Topco the members were actual or potential competitors of each other, and therefore had pursued interests antithetical to the Association's.

838 F.2d at 276. The court held that the record developed on discovery "bears out defendants' claim that the cooperative organization is a single enterprise pursuing a common goal -- the provision of low-cost electricity to its rural consumer-members." That holding placed the burden on plaintiff city, resisting summary judgment, to show specific facts presenting a triable issue "as to whether any of the defendants has pursued interests diverse from those of the cooperative itself," a concept which the court defined as interests "which tend to show that any two of the defendants are, or have been, actual or potential conspirators, . . . or, at the very least, interests which are sufficiently divergent so that a reasonable juror could conclude that the entities have not always worked together for a common cause." 838 F.2d at 276. The Eighth Circuit concluded its analysis by returning to Copperweld:

In the language of Copperweld, [**39] the City must show facts that could lead a reasonable juror to find the coordination between any two defendants to be a "joining of two independent sources of economic power previously pursuing separate interests." 467 U.S. at 771, 104 S. Ct. at 2741.

Id.

The city argued that the record contained such evidence, but the Court of Appeals rejected the effort, concluding that au fond "[the cooperatives'] power depends, and has always depended, on the cooperation among themselves. They are interdependent, not independent." 838 F.2d at 277.

In these circumstances, the plaintiff in Mt. Pleasant failed to demonstrate the requisite plurality of conspirators, and defendants obtained summary judgment dismissing the § 1 claim.

So far as the research efforts of counsel and my own reveal, the Second Circuit does not appear to have considered the antitrust implications of cooperatives of thousands of citrus growers or associations of rural producers of electricity. Perhaps the demographics of the states of New York, Connecticut and Vermont explain why that is so. But I find Judge Arnold's analysis in Mt. Pleasant persuasive, and will apply it to the case at bar.

It [**40] follows that HN17 the requisite plurality of § 1 conspirators does not exist in this case unless the 15 New Zealand dairy cooperatives or the dairy farmers who make up those cooperatives pursued "diverse interests," as that phrase is defined in Mt. Pleasant.

While the present record makes that appear unlikely, the question is not appropriate for resolution on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). It is important to recall that Sunkist and Topco were decided after plenary trials, and Mt. Pleasant on a motion for summary judgment after full discovery. Discovery in the instant case has been stayed; and it is not clear that no relief could be granted on this claim under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the amended complaint's allegations, that being the touchstone of Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) practice.

Accordingly defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Sherman Act § 1 claim is denied. Defendants may, if so advised, move for summary judgment on the claim after the pertinent facts have been developed by discovery.<sup>7</sup>

[**41] [*920] B

---

<sup>7</sup> Defendants' brief also challenges the sufficiency of plaintiff's Sherman Act § 1 claim for failing to allege the relevant market or the factors involved in rule of reason analysis. But the amended complaint clearly alleges HN18 a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy which, if proved, constitutes a per se violation; to sustain that claim, plaintiffs need not plead or prove a relevant market, 7 Areeda, Antitrust § 1510 at 415, nor demonstrate that defendants' conduct was economically reasonable, Topco, 405 U.S. at 608-12; United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 397-98, 71 L. Ed. 700, 47 S. Ct. 377 \(1927\).

Plaintiff's fifth claim alleges that defendants violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, which HN19↑ condemns the conduct of "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . .".

If plaintiff's § 2 claim was limited to an alleged conspiracy to monopolize, the plurality of conspirators requirement present in the § 1 claim would also apply, and I would approach the issue in the same way. But "the conduct of a single firm" may violate § 2, if that conduct "pose[s] a danger of monopolization." Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767-68. HN20↑ "Monopolization without conspiracy is unlawful under § 2, but restraint of trade without a conspiracy or combination is not unlawful under § 1." Id. at 767 n.13.

HN21↑ "The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." [**42] Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (citing and quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). The present question is whether plaintiffs' amended complaint, evaluated by the criteria governing Rule 12(b)(6) practice, sufficiently alleges these elements against defendants.

As plaintiffs acknowledge in their brief at 30, § 2 requires them "to allege the existence of monopoly power in a relevant market." Plaintiffs say they have done so. Specifically, the amended complaint alleges that "the defendants and their co-conspirators<sup>8</sup> have . . . created an export cartel in New Zealand" giving them "a monopoly of the exportation of New Zealand dairy products, including cheese, to the United States," P 56(a), and "created a price squeeze by establishing export prices for New Zealand cheese that enable NZDB and the co-conspirator manufacturers to earn monopolistic profits while limiting the ability of the plaintiffs and other competitors of Western Dairy to purchase and resell New Zealand cheese on a profitable basis," P 56(d).

[[**43]] While the amended complaint contains other charges, I think that these are sufficient to describe anticompetitive activities implicating § 2 of the Sherman Act, assuming that plaintiffs have adequately identified the relevant market. "It is, of course, a basic principle in the law of monopolization that the first step in a court's analysis must be a definition of the relevant markets." Berkey Photo., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 268 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980).

HN22↑ Market analysis turns upon the identity of and options available to the consumers whose interests the antitrust laws are intended to protect. The amended complaint alleges that defendants acted with the intent "of monopolizing the market for the importation, distribution, and sale in the United States of New Zealand cheese." P 57. In plaintiff's view, the competitors in that market are those American commercial entities holding USDA-granted quota licenses for the importation of New Zealand cheese, including plaintiffs and Western Dairy. Plaintiffs contend that "for United States customers desiring to use their New Zealand import licenses, no other [[**44]] products are interchangeable with New Zealand cheese." Brief at 37. That *921 brings the case at bar, plaintiffs contend, squarely within the ruling of Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., where the Court said that "because service and parts for Kodak equipment are not interchangeable with other manufacturers' service and parts, the relevant market from the Kodak equipment owner's perspective is composed only of those companies that service Kodak machines." 504 U.S. at 482 (emphasis added).

Defendants say that the United States' statutory and regulatory scheme limiting the importation of cheese "precludes the existence of any economically viable 'market' for cheese imports from any particular country, let alone from New Zealand." Reply Brief at 39. I am unable to perceive the basis for that conclusion. It is quite true that the statutory and regulatory quota and licensing scheme limits (a) the amount of cheese that can be imported from New Zealand, and (b) the number of authorized importers. In short, the licensed New Zealand cheese importers' non-interchangeable New Zealand cheese market is a creation of American law. But that does not prevent an identifiable market [**45] from being a market. Markets come into being as the result of a broad spectrum of human behavior. Here, that behavior takes the form of governmental action; but I think that the genesis of the market is not so important as the conduct of the market players. HN23[<sup>14</sup>] "Industrial activities cannot be confined to trim categories. Illegal monopolies under § 2 may well exist over limited products in narrow fields where competition is eliminated." United States v. du Pont & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956).

<sup>8</sup> I construe the phrase "co-conspirators" to mean the 15 dairy cooperatives. Even if the named defendants and the cooperatives should be regarded as a single economic entity so that they could not conspire together, see discussion under Point III-A supra, their joint conduct may constitute the possession and exercise of monopoly power in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act.

I agree with plaintiffs at bar that New Zealand cheese imported into the United States is the relevant market for § 2 analysis, and that Eastman Kodak supports their position. For the quota-licensed New Zealand cheese importer, desirous of deriving maximum profit from its license, New Zealand cheese is no more interchangeable with other cheeses than were non-Kodak parts for servicers of Kodak equipment. Defendants' reliance upon the regulations, 7 CFR § 6.30, is misplaced. That section provides only that if a licensee submits "proof satisfactory to the Licensing Authority that said licensee will be unable to enter during a quota year his or her quota share [**46] of an article from the country of origin specified in his or her license," application may be made "to obtain the unfilled portion of their quota shares" from another country. The regulation focuses upon supply, not upon price, and is not implicated in the case at bar. Plaintiffs are quite prepared to enter their full quota shares of New Zealand cheese; but they complain of defendants' allegedly monopolistic practices in respect of the price they must pay for it.

Defendants profess to find comfort in Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993), but I do not think the case assists them. In Spectrum the Ninth Circuit affirmed a judgment in plaintiff's favor after jury trial, on the theory that the evidence supported a finding of attempt to monopolize in violation of § 2. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the defendants "may not be liable for attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a particular market and specific intent to monopolize." 506 U.S. at 459. Plaintiffs' verdict in Spectrum could not stand because the trial court's instructions, [**47] contrary to those principles, "allowed the jury to infer specific intent and dangerous probability of success from the defendants' predatory conduct, without any proof of the relevant market or of a realistic probability that the defendants could achieve monopoly power in that market." Id. In the case at bar, the amended complaint sufficiently alleges the existence of the relevant market, and conduct by defendants that not only could achieve monopoly power in that market, but in fact has done so.

For these reasons, I conclude that the present plaintiffs' Sherman Act § 2 claim survives Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) challenge, and deny defendants' motion to dismiss the claim.

IV

Plaintiffs' third claim is for common law fraud. The following allegations in the [*922] amended complaint are pertinent to that claim.

For many years the NZDB has followed the practice of sending written communications of all holders of New Zealand cheese licenses offering to sell cheese against the licensees' annual entitlement. These offers are made in the name of Western Dairy, acting as agent for NZDB, and are sent to the licensees shortly before the start of the calendar year. Amended complaint, P 16.

Consistent with [**48] that practice, the Board and Western Dairy made their annual offer for New Zealand's 1993 cheese quotas by a letter dated December 30, 1992, which set forth the conditions of sale "and invited orders for New Zealand cheese against 1993 license entitlement through May 31, 1993." The prices quoted by Western Dairy to the licensees were 6 cents and 8 cents "below the Green Bay Cheese Exchange quotes in effect on the Friday before preparation of entry documents for the cheese. The only condition placed on the offer was 'subject to availability.'" Id. P 17. Plaintiffs, as New Zealand cheese licensees, received that communication from Western Dairy and shortly thereafter responded to it. Specifically, Mel Persily, a representative of plaintiffs, telephoned Western Dairy and accepted the latter's offer for "large orders" of New Zealand cheese "to be delivered in January and February of 1993. A Western Dairy employee then falsely informed Persily that no cheese was available for delivery at the time specified by Persily" Id. P 19.

Faut de mieux and "under protest," Persily then placed orders with Western Dairy on behalf of plaintiffs for delivery of New Zealand Cheese by vessels \*\*49 scheduled to arrive in the United States in mid-May, "the earliest time when the Western employee represented that cheese would be available." Plaintiffs were compelled to place that order because they had "purchased sufficient inventory to meet orders taken and to be taken from domestic customers of plaintiff." Id. P 20. But as the result of a sharp increase in the exchange quotes between late February and late May, alleged in P 23 of the amended complaint, plaintiffs were eventually billed for the cheese they received on the basis of the April 30, 1993 Exchange quote. This caused plaintiffs to pay more for the cheese than they would have if defendants had delivered the cheese earlier, in response to plaintiff's acceptance of Western Dairy's offer to sell.

Plaintiffs characterize defendants' conduct as fraudulent, resulting in the economic loss described above.

These are well-pleaded factual allegations. I accept them as true within the Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) context.

Defendants make two arguments in support of their motion to dismiss this claim. First, defendants say that these allegations show no more than defendants' refusal to deal with plaintiffs at the time plaintiffs wished to \*\*50 do so, and that a refusal to deal cannot constitute fraud as a matter of law. Second, and in the alternative, defendants contend that plaintiffs have not pleaded fraud with the specificity required by Rule 9\(b\), F.R.Civ.P.

A

In support of their "refusal to deal" contention, defendants cite three cases whose facts bear no useful resemblance to the facts alleged in the amended complaint.

I do not think that those allegations spell out a refusal by defendants to deal with plaintiffs. On the contrary, defendants followed the practice of prior years and offered to deal with plaintiffs by selling New Zealand cheese to them. Plaintiffs accepted that offer and requested delivery in early 1993. The amended complaint alleges not a refusal to deal on the part of defendants, but rather the defendants' fraudulent protestation of an inability to deal at the time plaintiffs requested. That protestation of inability to deal was fraudulent because, accepting the truth of plaintiffs' allegations, New Zealand cheese was available to defendants for delivery to plaintiffs in early 1993, and a Western Dairy employee lied when he told plaintiffs' representative that no cheese was then available, and would \*\*51 not be until several months later.

This alleged conduct, if proven, is certainly commercially dishonorable; and it comes with ill grace from defendants to contend \*923 that it cannot be characterized in law as fraudulent.

I think that the amended complaint sufficiently pleads HN24↑ an action for fraud, which "requires proof of a representation of fact which is false and known to be false when made, which is offered to deceive another and with the intention to induce the other to act or refrain from acting, and proof of reliance upon the representation which causes injury." Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A. v. Perla, 65 A.D.2d 207, 411 N.Y.S.2d 66, 68 \(4th Dept. 1978\).

Plaintiffs at bar sufficiently allege these elements. The amended complaint alleges that a Western Dairy representative falsely told plaintiffs that there was no New Zealand cheese then available for delivery when in fact he knew that there was. It is hard to imagine why the Western Dairy representative lied to plaintiffs' representative unless he intended to deceive plaintiff. The deceiver's intention was apparently to persuade plaintiffs to accept a later delivery of cheese. Plaintiffs relied upon Western Dairy's \*\*52 disclaimer of present cheese availability and, confronted with their own economic necessities, agreed to accept delivery at a later time, thereby subjecting themselves to market volatility which in fact caused them monetary loss. If (accepting the accuracy of plaintiffs' allegations as I must) the Western Dairy representative had told plaintiffs' representative the truth in early January 1993 -- that defendants had plenty of cheese available but had decided not to fill plaintiffs' order -- plaintiffs could have sought administrative relief, or declaratory or injunctive relief from a court in the form of an order to show cause.

I conclude that the amended complaint alleges conduct on the part of defendants which, if proved, would constitute fraud as a matter of law.

B

Rule 9(b) provides: HN25 "In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally." Rule 9\(b\) HN26 must be read together with Rule 8\(a\) which requires only a "short and plain statement" of the claims for relief." Quaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 79 (2d Cir. 1990); \*\*53 DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries, Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir. 1987). HN27 On a motion to dismiss, the court assumes the truth of plaintiff's factual allegations, Quaknine at 78, reads the complaint generously, and draws all inferences in favor of the pleader. Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 11 (2d Cir. 1989); Yoder v. Orthomolecular Nutrition Institute, Inc., 751 F.2d 555, 562 (2d Cir. 1985). But Rule 9\(b\) HN28 must be enforced so as to accomplish its three goals: (1) providing a defendant fair notice of plaintiff's claim, to enable preparation of his defense; (2) protecting a defendant from harm to his reputation or goodwill; and (3) reducing the number of strike suits. O'Brien v. National Property Analysts Partners, 936 F.2d 674, 676 (2d Cir. 1991); DiVittorio at 1247.

HN29 To satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9\(b\), a complaint must adequately specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiff contends the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements. Cosmas at 11. Where multiple defendants are asked to \*\*54 respond to allegations of fraud, the complaint should inform each defendant of the nature of his alleged participation in the fraud. DiVittorio at 1247. However, no specific connection between fraudulent representations or omissions need be pleaded as to defendants who are insiders or affiliates personally participating in the statements at issue. DiVittorio at 1247 (offering memorandum); Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 55 (2d Cir. 1986) (same).

HN30 A complaint may adequately identify the statements alleged to be misrepresentations and properly indicate when, where and by whom they were made, yet still fail Rule 9\(b\) scrutiny if the complaint does not allege circumstances giving rise to a strong inference that defendant knew the statements to be false, Wexner v. First Manhattan Co., 902 F.2d 169, 173 (2d Cir. 1990), and intended to \*924 defraud plaintiff, Quaknine at 80; Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 50 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1005, 98 L. Ed. 2d 650, 108 S. Ct. 698 (1988).

Knowledge is a state of mind. So is intent to defraud, or "scienter." HN31 While Rule 9\(b\) permits conditions of mind to be averred generally, the rule also \*\*55 requires that allegations of scienter be supported by facts giving rise to a "strong inference" of fraudulent intent. Quaknine at 80; Beck at 50; Connecticut National Bank v. Fluor Corp., 808 F.2d 957, 962 (2d Cir. 1987).

HN32 Knowledge of falsity cannot be alleged in conclusory terms. Plaintiff must be able to allege particulars regarding a defendant's awareness or discovery of the facts upon which plaintiff relies for the claim of fraud. O'Brien at 677.

Allegations supporting an inference of fraudulent intent frequently include defendant's statement that a fact exists or an event will come to pass coupled with allegations that the fact did not exist or the event did not occur, and circumstances indicating that the statement was false when made. See, e.g., Luce at 56 (alleged misrepresentation in offering memorandum that general partners would make an initial capital contribution of $ 385,000 and guarantee a $ 4.5 million construction loan accompanied by allegations that general partners contributed only $ 80,000 and did not guarantee the loan); DiVittorio at 1248 (offering memorandum's statement that proceeds of offering would be expended as quickly as \*\*56 possible accompanied by allegation that proceeds were never so applied, and estimate that property contained approximately 9,260,000 tons of coal accompanied by allegation that mines did not contain nearly that much). See Quaknine at 81 for a comparable analysis.

HN33[] To satisfy the scienter requirement, a plaintiff need not allege facts which show a defendant had a motive for committing fraud, so long as plaintiff adequately identifies circumstances indicating "conscious behavior" by the defendant from which an intent to defraud may fairly be inferred. Cosmas at 13. However, where a particular defendant's motive to defraud is not apparent, the strength of the circumstantial allegations must be correspondingly greater. Beck at 50.

HN34[] Allegations may be based on information and belief when facts are peculiarly within the opposing party's knowledge. Luce at 54 n 1; DiVittorio at 1247-48. However, that exception to Rule 9(b)'s general requirement of particularized pleading does not constitute a license to base claims of fraud on speculation or conclusory allegations. Where pleading is permitted on information and belief, a complaint must adduce specific facts supporting [**57] a strong inference of fraud or it will not satisfy a relaxed pleading standard. Wexner at 172.

Applying these principles to the case at bar, I conclude that the amended complaint complies with the requirements of Rule 9(b). While plaintiffs do not identify the allegedly mendacious Western Dairy employee by name, the identity of the representative speaking with plaintiffs' Mr. Persily is peculiarly within Western Dairy's knowledge. The circumstances giving rise to an inference of fraudulent intent are sufficiently pleaded in P 27 of the amended complaint, which alleges:

Further investigation revealed to Trugman and Trio that Western had itself taken delivery of huge shipments of cheese from NZDB for its own account during the very periods for which Western had falsely represented that no cheese was available. Upon information and belief, even after Western took delivery of its cheese, there was still cheese available to fulfill Trugman's and Trio's orders for early 1993 arrival.

The other pleading requirements are also fulfilled. Given Western Dairy's alleged role as agent for the NZDB, the amended complaint adequately alleges claims for fraud against the Board and [**58] MP Holdings, since a principal is liable for the fraudulent acts of its agent committed within the scope of the agent's authority. Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A. v. Perla, supra, 411 N.Y.S.2d at 69.

Defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's third claim for common law fraud is denied.

[*925] V

Defendants also move to dismiss plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages. I deny that motion. HN35[] Under New York law, punitive damages may be awarded for "gross, wanton, or willful fraud or other morally culpable conduct," Borkowski v. Borkowski, 39 N.Y.2d 982, 983, 387 N.Y.S.2d 233, 355 N.E.2d 287 (Ct.App. 1976). Given the allegations of the amended complaint with respect to defendants' fraudulent conduct, I am not prepared to say that they cannot prove circumstances that would justify an award of punitive damages.

Lastly, Western Dairy as plaintiff in 93 Civ. 8329 moves for partial summary judgment in the amount of $ 1,873,505.64, an amount that, in Western Dairy's view, "Trugman concedes it owes [Western Dairy] for the cheese." Defendants' main brief at 55. However, defendants face the possibility -- prior to discovery and trial, I put it no higher than that -- of significant liability which [**59] would exceed this amount. In those circumstances, I do not think that defendants can establish a present right to partial summary judgment for the amount indicated. The net obligations and rights of the parties must await resolution by trial.

For the foregoing reasons, the defendants' motions in 93 Civ. 8321 are denied in their entirety. Western Dairy's motion for partial summary judgment in 93 Civ. 8329 is denied. The stay of discovery is vacated. Counsel for the parties are directed to attend a status conference in Room 17C, 500 Pearl Street at 2:00 p.m. on October 18, 1996 for the purpose of settling an appropriate scheduling order.

It is SO ORDERED.

DATED: New York, New York

October 8, 1996

942 F. Supp. 905, *925L<sup>A</sup> 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14933, **59

CHARLES S. HAIGHT, JR.

UNITED STATES SENIOR DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Tower Air v. Federal Express Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

October 15, 1996, Decided

94-CV-5677 (JS)

Reporter

956 F. Supp. 270 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20645 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,676

TOWER AIR, INC., Plaintiff, -against- FEDERAL EXPRESS CORPORATION, Defendant.

Disposition: [**1] Federal Express's motion for summary judgment as to Claims XII through XV denied and Federal Express's motion to dismiss Claims I through XI denied.

Core Terms

---

flights, joint venture, relevant market, supplemental agreement, anti-competitive, antitrust, Air, government contract, parties, summary judgment, passenger, motion to dismiss, state law claim, contractor, contracts, carriers, cargo, antitrust claim, district court, matter of law, anti trust law, monopoly power, rule of reason, passenger service, allegations, competitors, submarkets, argues, Sherman Act, Regulations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 [blue icon] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A district court should grant a motion to dismiss under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)* only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. In applying this standard, a district court must read the facts alleged in the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and accept these allegations as true.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Notice Requirement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

According to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\), if, on a motion asserting failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, matters outside the pleading are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. A district court may not convert a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) into a Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 motion for summary judgment without sufficient notice to the opposing party to respond. The essential inquiry is whether the plaintiff should reasonably have recognized the possibility that the motion might be converted into one for summary judgment or was taken by surprise and deprived of a reasonable opportunity to meet facts outside the pleadings.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Enforcement > Duties & Liabilities of Parties > Conversion of Instruments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN3 Duties & Liabilities of Parties, Conversion of Instruments

In deciding whether to convert a motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment, the complaint is deemed to include any written instrument attached to it as an exhibit or any statements or documents incorporated in it by reference. When a plaintiff chooses not to attach to the complaint or incorporate by reference a document upon which it solely relies and which is integral to the complaint, the court may under certain circumstances take the document into consideration in deciding the defendant's motion to dismiss without converting the proceeding to one for summary judgment. In addition, the court may consider documents annexed to the movant's papers which, although not annexed to the complaint, plaintiff either had in his possession or had knowledge of and upon which he relied in bringing suit. It is error to consider factual allegations contained in legal briefs or memoranda without converting the motion to one for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > Memoranda in Opposition

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > Opposing Memoranda

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Notice Requirement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN4 Opposing Materials, Memoranda in Opposition

When a non-movant of a motion to dismiss offers supplemental submissions, and the court wishes to consider them, conversion to a motion for summary judgment is only inappropriate if the movant did not have adequate notice that the motion might be treated as one for summary judgment.

956 F. Supp. 270, *270A 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20645, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN5 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment may not be granted unless the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Under the law of the Second Circuit, a district court must weigh several considerations in evaluating whether to grant a motion for summary judgment with respect to a particular claim. First, the moving party carries the burden to demonstrate that no genuine issue respecting any material fact exists. Second, all ambiguities and inferences must be resolved in favor of the non-moving party. Third, the moving party may obtain summary judgment by showing that no rational jury could find in favor of the nonmoving party because the evidence to support its case is so slight. Finally, the trial court's duty is confined to issue-finding and does not extend to issue-resolution.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN6 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In evaluating the considerations whether to grant a motion for summary judgment, a court must be mindful of whether the purported factual dispute is material, because only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 Clayton Act, Claims

Section 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, of the Clayton Act provides that any person injured in their business by reason of a violation of antitrust law may sue for treble damages. To obtain this relief, a plaintiff must show (1) that the alleged loss is the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and (2) that the antitrust violation was the cause in fact of such injury. Lack of causation in fact between antitrust injury and alleged antitrust violation is fatal to the merits of any antitrust claim. The injury, however, must reflect the anti-competitive effects of either the alleged violation or of anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation in the relevant market. The determination of whether a plaintiff has standing and injury, therefore, necessitates a finding as to the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN8 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To make out a claim for monopoly, a plaintiff must show that the defendant had monopoly power in a relevant market. Likewise, in its claim of attempted monopoly, a plaintiff must show that the defendant had a "dangerous probability" of achieving monopoly power. To evaluate this element, the court must define the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

A market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purpose for which they are produced, and a court must consider price, use and qualities. Because a relevant market includes all products which are reasonably interchangeable, plaintiff's failure to define its market by reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability is, standing alone, valid grounds for dismissal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN10 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A market may be composed of various well-defined submarkets for antitrust purposes, based on various practical indicia, including, inter alia, industry or customer recognition of the submarket as a separate economic market, the products' peculiar circumstances and uses, and distinct prices. In these indicia are evidentiary proxies for direct proof of substitutability.

956 F. Supp. 270, *270A 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20645, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11 [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The fact the government is the sole domestic purchaser and regulates a sale does not mean that no market exists. Moreover, the Federal Acquisition Regulations protect against anti-competitive conduct in government procurement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Securities Law > Regulators > Self-Regulating Entities > National Association of Securities Dealers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue document icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

A plaintiff alleging a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act must allege concerted action by two or more persons that unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce. Thus, a complaint alleging a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act must identify co-conspirators and describe the nature and effects of the alleged conspiracy or combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] Sherman Act, Claims

A plaintiff claiming an antitrust conspiracy must first establish either a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. It is essential to any claim in restraint of trade to establish the existence of an agreement between two or more independent entities. A unilateral or independent act does not create conspiratorial liability under the Sherman Act.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Commercial Law (UCC) > Secured Transactions (Article 9) > Default > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

HN14 [blue document icon] Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

Joint ventures may operate lawfully if there is sufficient economic integration among the members. Competitors who form a joint venture must pool resources and capital, as well as share in the risks of profit and loss. In addition, the Federal Acquisition Regulations set out the various types of economic interests that are acceptable in such arrangements, including the ability to complement each other's unique capabilities and to offer the government the best combination of performance, cost, and delivery for the product being acquired and provide that contractor team arrangements may not exist in violation of antitrust statutes. 48 C.F.R. § 9.602.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN15 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Restraints imposed by an agreement between competitors are denominated as horizontal restraints, while those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution are vertical restraints. Competitors at the same level can lawfully combine if there is sufficient economic integration.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

HN16 Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

Side agreements to joint ventures can operate lawfully as well. Restraints collateral to but necessary for the implementation of a lawful agreement, and which are no broader in scope than necessary to accomplish the purpose of the agreement, are termed "ancillary."

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

HN17 Types of Contracts, Covenants

No conventional restraint of trade can be enforced unless the covenant embodying it is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract, and necessary to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract. To be lawful, the contract must be one in which there is a main purpose, to which the covenant in restraint of trade is merely ancillary. Thus, to be lawful, the ancillary restraint must be subordinate to a separate, legitimate transaction and serve to make the main transaction more effective in accomplishing its purpose.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

956 F. Supp. 270, *270A 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20645, **1

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

HN18 [ ] Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

Joint ventures and their ancillary agreements, however, are not exempt from antitrust review. The mere label of "joint venture" is not enough to immunize such combinations from illegal restraint of trade. These activities, as combinations among horizontal competitors, can be deemed unreasonable restraints on trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN19 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There are two rules courts use to assess whether a horizontal agreement constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade. A court will apply the rule of per se liability when the agreement or practice at issue appears on its face to be one that would almost always act to restrict competition within the market. When a practice or agreement is not plainly anti-competitive, courts apply the traditional rule of reason, which requires the defendant to demonstrate that the pro-competitive aspects of the challenged agreement outweigh any anti-competitive aspects. In determining whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, there is a presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard and departure from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, rather than formalistic distinctions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN20 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The per se rule is only used in the relatively narrow circumstances where courts have had sufficient experience with the activity to recognize that it is plainly anti-competitive and lacks any redeeming value.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN21** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

When the alleged restraint of trade is not plainly anti-competitive, the court must apply the rule of reason and determine whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. Under the rule of reason, the court must weigh all circumstances of the case in deciding whether the restrictive practice should be prohibited as an unreasonable restraint on competition. In this respect, the court must balance the pro-competitive and anti-competitive effects of any restraint; it is not sufficient that plaintiff prove either anti-competitive intent or effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

**HN22** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A party claiming unreasonable restraint of trade under the rule of reason must prove more than an injury to itself; it must prove that competition in the relevant market was harmed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

**HN23** [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Monopoly in and of itself is not unlawful. To make out claim of monopolization under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must establish that the defendant had monopoly power in a relevant market, that the defendant engaged in anti-competitive conduct, and that its injury was, in fact, caused by the defendant's violation of antitrust laws. The defendant's activities must consist of willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen or historic accident. To prove a monopolist willfully acquired monopoly power, a plaintiff must prove that the alleged monopolist used or attempted to use monopoly power to foreclose competition, gain competitive advantage, or destroy competitors; this element requires proof of exclusionary or anti-competitive intent and effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24 [blue document icon] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to establish an attempted monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct (2) with the specific intent to monopolize (3) and a dangerous possibility of achieving monopoly power exists. Proof of the first element may be used to infer second element and, when coupled with proof of monopoly power, may demonstrate a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN25 [blue document icon] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

As noted when discussing the relevant market, a dangerous probability of success may exist where the defendant possesses a significant market share when it undertakes the challenged anti-competitive conduct. To make this finding, however, it is necessary for the court to define the relevant product market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN26 [blue document icon] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

A district court may exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims whenever federal law claims and state law claims in a case derive from a common nucleus of operative fact and are such that plaintiff would ordinarily be expected to try them all in one judicial proceeding. The decision whether to exercise such jurisdiction is entirely within the discretion of the district court. Among the factors a district court will consider are judicial economy, convenience, fairness and federal-state comity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Governments > Fiduciaries

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

HN27 [blue document icon] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

28 U.S.C.S. § 1337\(c\)\(2\) provides that a district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim if the state claim substantially predominates over the federal claims.

Counsel: Appearances:

For Plaintiff: Howard J. August, Esq., Colamarine & Sohns, New York, New York. C. Alexander Hewes, Jr., Esq., Hewes, Morella, Gelband & Lamberton, Washington, D.C.

For Defendant: Lawrence Mentz, Esq., Biedermann, Hoenig, Massamillo & Ruff, New York, New York. Colby S. Morgan, Esq., Federal Express Corporation, Memphis, Tennessee.

Judges: Joanna Seybert, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: Joanna Seybert

Opinion

---

[*273] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Tower Air, Inc. ("Tower") brings this action against defendant Federal Express Corporation ("Federal Express") asserting a number of causes of action arising from the participation of Tower Air and Federal Express in a joint venture to provide civilian air support to the Military Air Command ("MAC") in times of national emergency. Federal Express now moves to dismiss Tower's Claims XII through XV for failure to state a cause of action under the Sherman Act. Federal Express further moves to dismiss Claims I through XI of Tower's complaint on the basis of lack of subject matter jurisdiction, [*2] or in the alternative, that this Court should decline to extend supplemental jurisdiction over these claims. Finally, Federal Express also moves to dismiss Claims I through XI on the grounds that Tower failed to assert these claims as compulsory counterclaims in a prior related litigation instituted in Tennessee state court by Federal Express against Tower.

For the following reasons, the Court hereby converts Federal Express's motion to dismiss as to Claims XII through XV into one for summary judgment and denies that motion. The Court further denies Federal Express's motion to dismiss as to Claims I through XI.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

A. The CRAF Program and the MAC Contract

In 1950, Congress established the "Civil Reserve Air Fleet" or "CRAF Program," [*274] under which the Department of Defense ("DOD") could call upon private air carriers to supply airlift resources in times of national emergency to augment existing military capabilities. Private carriers participating in the CRAF Program were required to provide committed air support during various phases of military activation. The operation of the CRAF Program was managed by the then-named Military Air Command ("MAC").

The Government, [*3] in contracting for air support under the CRAF Program, engaged a number of contractors to provide these services. The government ordered service from all MAC airlift service contractors on an equitable pro rata basis, giving consideration, among other things, to each contractor's aircraft commitment to the requirements of the CRAF stage which had been activated. Once a contractor participated in the CRAF Program, it was then eligible to compete for MAC peacetime annual airlift services contracts. These peacetime flights were only offered to carriers that were CRAF participants or agreed to become CRAF participants.

In 1989, the government issued a solicitation for bids on a MAC contract to provide private air service to the government for guaranteed fixed-schedule flights, CRAF activation and expansion-peacetime operations (the "MAC Contract"). As per the solicitation, otherwise known as a "Request for Proposal" or "RFP," prices to be paid for all fixed and expansion services would be determined at the MAC negotiated uniform rates and in accordance with a Memorandum of Understanding issued by the Air Force. The government intended the contract to be an award of a multi-year indefinite [*4] quantity fixed unit price contract.

The RFP provided that joint ventures could participate as a single contractor to provide the air services required under the MAC Contract. Because the MAC Contract required both passenger and freighter air service, such joint ventures enabled carriers who provided primarily one type of service to join together and present a more attractive package to MAC. The MAC Contract required, however, that if a contractor was a joint venture, the terms of the joint venture agreements had to correspond to the terms of the MAC Contract and had to provide for one designated and authorized party to bind the joint venture in dealings with the government. In addition, the joint venture agreement had to provide for (1) joint and several liability among the members, (2) one member to act as the sole payee for all revenues earned by members of the joint venture and (3) a statement of unity of purpose among the members. Moreover, the MAC Contract prohibited any member of a joint venture participating under the MAC Contract from competing on an individual basis for the same awards.

In deciding whether or not to make an award under the MAC Contract, the government would [**5] consider: (1) the number of aircraft by type that the contractor was making available for CRAF activation purposes and (2) the mobilization value of the committed aircraft. As a separate incentive to induce airlines to participate in the CRAF Program, the DOD conferred mobilization value points ("MV Points") to each participant. These MV Points allowed airlines the opportunity to operate routine MAC operational and training flights during peacetime, for which the airlines earned agreed-upon revenues.

B. The Joint Venture Agreement

To be able to successfully compete for the MAC Contract, on May 10, 1989, Tower and Federal Express entered into a joint venture agreement (the "JV Agreement"), along with the Flying Tiger Line Inc., Northwest Airlines, Inc. ("Northwest"), United Parcel Service Co. and its parent United Parcel Service of America, Inc. (collectively, "UPS"), and Pan American World Airways, Inc. ("Pan Am"). The stated purpose of the JV Agreement was to form a joint venture: (1) to contract with MAC as a single entity in order to satisfy military requirements for CRAF participation, (2) to obtain eligibility for MAC fixed contract flights and (3) to obtain eligibility for [**6] peacetime expansion flights. JV Agreement, Exhibit A to Complaint, at 1.

Under the JV agreement, each participant pledged the use of specified aircraft to the joint venture for use in the CRAF Program for the 1990-1992 CRAF Cycle as per the MAC Contract. The parties further agreed [*275] that Federal Express would represent and bind the JV in its dealings with MAC. JV Agreement P 6. Invoices for services provided to MAC were to be billed directly to MAC, which would then pay Federal Express, as the sole payee for the JV. Id. P 7. Federal Express would then remit payment to the appropriate carrier "for MAC flights operated by the Joint Venture." Moreover, the terms of the JV Agreement were not to be modified unless in writing and signed by authorized representatives of the parties. Id. P 12(b). Tennessee law governed the JV agreement.

C. The Supplemental Agreements

In addition, on May 10, 1989, Federal Express and Tower entered into a separate supplemental agreement to the JV Agreement. MAC would, from time to time, offer to the JV additional passenger flights not included in the fixed flights under the MAC Contract. These additional flights were termed "Expansion Flights." [**7] Under the Tower Supplemental Agreement, when either Federal Express or Northwest did not have aircraft available to meet MAC's needs for these Expansion Flights, Federal Express promised to refer the Expansion Flights to Tower. If Tower then operated these flights, it would pay Federal Express a 2 1/2% commission of the gross revenues payable by MAC.

Federal Express also entered into supplemental agreements with Northwest, UPS and Pan Am. On May 12, 1989, Federal Express and Northwest entered into an agreement supplemental to the JV Agreement and the JV Operating Agreement (the "Northwest Supplemental Agreement"). According to Tower, the terms of the Northwest Supplemental Agreement provided for:

- (a) the division of the market for MAC Program flights for Category Y and B Passengers and Category B Cargo flights by allocating
  - (i) all Pacific Category Y passenger service flights and all North Atlantic Category Y passenger service flights originating in Boston, Detroit and Minneapolis to Northwest;
  - (ii) all North Atlantic Category Y passenger service flights except for those originating in Boston, Detroit and Minneapolis to other JV participants;

- (iii) all Category [**8] B cargo flights to Federal Express;
- (iv) Category B passenger service to Federal Express and Northwest according to an agreed upon formula, with Northwest having a right of first refusal on all Atlantic flights not flown by Federal Express and on all Expansion Flights not flown by Federal Express; and
- (v) Category B passenger Expansion Flights not operated by Federal Express or Northwest to Tower Air.
- (b) Division between Federal Express and Northwest of the JV participants entitlement benefits under the MAC Contract to fly the most desirable flights, i.e. fixed contract passenger and cargo flights, such that Federal Express received all of the entitlements of UPS and Tower Air, and Federal Express and Northwest split the entitlements of Pan Am.
- (c) Allocation of commissions received from Tower Air and Pan Am to Federal Express and Northwest; and
- (d) Covenants to take no action which could adversely affect the aforesaid division of the market and revenues therefrom.

Complaint, P 89.

On May 11, 1989, Federal Express and Pan Am entered into an agreement to supplement the JV Agreement and the JV Operating Agreement (the "Pan Am Supplemental Agreement"). [**9] According to Tower, this agreement provides for:

- (a) the division of the market for MAC Program flights for Category Y and B Passenger flights and Category B Cargo flights by allocating
  - (i) all North Atlantic Category Y passenger service flights except for those originating in Boston, Detroit and Minneapolis to Pan Am;
  - (ii) all Pacific Category Y passenger service flights and all North Atlantic Category Y passenger service flights originating in Boston, Detroit and Minneapolis to Northwest;
- [*276] (iii) all Category B cargo flights to Federal Express;
- (iv) Category B passenger service to Federal Express and Northwest, with some Category B Expansion Service to be assigned to Tower Air by Federal Express; and
- (b) payment of commissions by Pan Am to Federal Express on compensation paid to Pan Am by MAC for Category Y passengers carried by Pan Am as a result of Pan Am's participation in the Joint Venture.

Complaint, P 90.

On May 12, 1989, Federal Express and UPS entered into a supplemental agreement to the JV Agreement (the "UPS Supplemental Agreement"), which provided that:

- (a) Federal Express would pay UPS a fixed percentage of the value [**10] of the MAC Contract, paid monthly and a percentage of revenues received by Federal Express as a result of Northwest's, Pan Am's and Tower Air's participation in the Joint Venture;
- (b) UPS would give Federal Express all of its entitlement flights and to undertake flights under the MAC Contract only if Federal Express was unable to do so.

Complaint, P 91.

In its complaint, Tower also claims that Federal Express made similar agreements with Delta Airlines ("Delta"), Trans World Airlines, Inc. ("TWA") and United Airlines, Inc. ("United"), who were not parties to the JV Agreement, under which Federal Express collected commissions for flights awarded by MAC to the joint venture. Complaint, P 92.

D. The Gulf War

MAC first made use of the services available under the JV Agreement beginning in 1990 with the outbreak of the war in the Persian Gulf. On August 17, 1990, MAC ordered a Stage I CRAF activation with the commencement of Operation Desert Shield. By January 17, 1991, MAC elevated its requirements to Stage II CRAF activation with the start of Operation Desert Storm. By May 17, 1991, MAC reclassified activation to Stage I, and by May 24, 1991, all activation stages [**11] were terminated.

From January 1, 1990 to December 31, 1992, MAC dealt directly with Tower to arrange military flights on Tower's aircraft. Although payment was exchanged solely between Federal Express and MAC, MAC would communicate directly with each air carrier to schedule missions under the CRAF Program under MACR 55-8, Section 3-4. In accordance with the JV Agreement, Tower then billed MAC directly for services relating to the use of its aircraft. MAC then remitted payment to Federal Express for payment to Tower. Tower claims that Federal Express unjustly withheld $ 4,029,689 from the payment sent by MAC as a commission of 2 1/2% due under an agreement between Tower and Federal Express. Tower also claims that other carriers were paid directly by MAC for services under the JV Agreement.

E. Litigation History

In February, 1993, Tower filed a complaint against Federal Express in the Eastern District of New York, through diversity jurisdiction, regarding the state law claims arising out an alleged breach of the JV Agreement or the Tower Supplemental Agreement. Having discovered that no diversity existed, Judge Dearie dismissed the action.

In August, 1994, Federal Express filed [**12] a complaint against Tower in Tennessee state court based on state law claims arising out of the same contracts. The state case is currently pending.

In December, 1994, Tower refiled the instant federal case with this Court, adding its antitrust claims and asserting federal question jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and pendent jurisdiction for its state law claims under 15 U.S.C. § 4.

DISCUSSION

I. STANDARDS GOVERNING THIS MOTION

A. Conversion into a Motion for Summary Judgment

HN1 A district court should grant a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure only if "it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with" [*277] the allegations. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 249-50, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 2906, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 \(1989\) (quoting Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 2232, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 \(1984\)). In applying this standard, a district court must "read the facts alleged in the complaint in the light most favorable" to the plaintiff, and accept these allegations as true. Id. at 249, 109 S. Ct. at 2906; see Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 \(1974\); see also Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 \(1993\) (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\) to demonstrate liberal system of 'notice pleading' employed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure).

HN2 According to Rule 12\(b\), however, if, on a motion asserting failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, matters outside the pleading are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56. A district court may not convert a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) into a Rule 56 motion for summary judgment without sufficient notice to the opposing party to respond. Groden v. Random House, Inc., 61 F.3d 1045 \(2d Cir. 1993\). The essential inquiry is whether the plaintiff should reasonably have recognized the possibility that the motion might be converted into one for summary judgment or was taken by surprise and deprived of [**14] a reasonable opportunity to meet facts outside the pleadings. In re G&A Books, Inc., 770 F.2d 288, 294-95 \(2d Cir. 1985\), cert. denied sub. nom M.J.M. Exhibitors v. Stern, 475 U.S. 1015, 106 S. Ct. 1195, 89 L. Ed. 2d 310 (1986).

HN3 In deciding whether to convert a motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment, the Court recognizes that the complaint is deemed to include any written instrument attached to it as an exhibit or any statements or documents incorporated in it by reference. Cortec Indust. Inc. v. Sum Holding, L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 47 \(2d Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 960, 112 S. Ct. 1561, 118 L. Ed. 2d 208 (1992). When a plaintiff chooses not to attach to the complaint or incorporate by reference a document upon which it solely relies and which is integral to the complaint, the court may under certain circumstances take the document into consideration in deciding the defendant's motion to dismiss without converting the proceeding to one for summary judgment. Id. at 47-48; International Audiotext Network, Inc. v. AT&T, 62 F.3d 69, 72 (2d Cir. 1995). In addition, the Court may consider documents annexed to the movant's papers which, although not annexed [**15] to the complaint, plaintiff either had in his possession or had knowledge of and upon which he relied in bringing suit. Rouccchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 366 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (Seybert, J.) (citing Cortec, 949 F.2d at 48). The Second Circuit has warned, however, that it is error to consider factual allegations contained in legal briefs or memoranda without converting the motion to one for summary judgment. Fonte v. Board of Managers of Continental Towers Condo., 848 F.2d 24, 25 (2d Cir. 1988).

Tower's complaint in this action only attaches the JV Agreement and the Tower Supplemental Agreement, yet refers to various secret supplemental agreements between Federal Express and other air carrier partners and non-partners to the joint venture. In opposing defendant's motion, however, Tower submitted additional documentation to counter Federal Express' arguments. Among the exhibits were a deposition extract, correspondence, MAC rates and regulations, and the Joint Venture Operating Agreement for the JV. Federal Express also provided additional documents for the Court's consideration, including an affidavit, correspondence regarding the Tower Supplemental Agreement, excerpts [**16] from the RFP, a Memorandum of Understanding and pleadings from the prior litigations. Moreover, Tower's reply papers rely on outside matters and supply facts that go beyond those alleged in the complaint, including more in-depth analysis of the payment mechanisms under the MAC Contract. See Tower's Memorandum in Opposition to Federal Express's Motion to Dismiss, at 5 8.

[*278] HN4 When a non-movant offers supplemental submissions, and the Court wishes to consider them, conversion is only inappropriate if the movant did not have adequate notice that the motion might be treated as one for summary judgment. B.V. Optische Industrie de Oude Delft v. Hologic, Inc., 909 F. Supp. 162, 167 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). In their moving papers, both parties have acknowledged the possibility that the Court would convert this motion into summary judgment. Tower's Memorandum in Opposition to Federal Express's Motion to Dismiss, at 4-5; Federal Express's Reply Memorandum in Support of its Motion to Dismiss, at 2-3. Federal Express's motion goes as far as to provide a section dedicated to "Undisputed Facts Relevant to Determination of Motion." Federal Express's Reply Memorandum in Support of its Motion to Dismiss, [**17] at 11-15.

Because of the complexity of the factual allegations in this action and of the fact-intensive nature of antitrust analysis, the Court finds it necessary to consider matters outside the complaint to assess the claims in this case. As noted above, both parties were on notice of the potential for converting this motion. The Court will therefore proceed to treat this motion as one for summary judgment, and apply that standard accordingly.

B. Standard for Summary Judgment

HN5 Summary judgment may not be granted unless "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Under the law of the Second Circuit, a district court must weigh several considerations in evaluating whether to grant a motion for summary judgment with respect to a particular claim. Gallo v. Prudential Residential Servs., L.P., 22 F.3d 1219, 1223 (2d Cir. 1994) (internal case citations omitted). First, the moving party carries the burden to demonstrate that no genuine issue respecting [**18] any material fact exists. Id. (citations omitted). Second, all ambiguities and inferences must be resolved in favor of the non-moving party. Id. Third, the moving party may obtain summary judgment by showing that no rational jury could find in favor of the nonmoving party because the evidence to support its case is so slight. Id. Finally, the trial court's duty is confined to issue-finding and does not extend to issue-resolution. Id.

HN6 In evaluating the above considerations, a court must be mindful of whether the purported factual dispute is material, because "only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2510, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

In this action, the Court also heeds the words of the Supreme Court in Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 491, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962) that "summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles."

II. ANTITRUST CLAIMS

This case presents unique and complex issues [**19] regarding the application of antitrust law to government contracting. The issues presented here are further complicated because we are not dealing with single entities bidding on a government contract. Rather, the Court is faced with a dispute between two members of a joint venture that was formed specifically to meet the needs of a specified government contract. The joint venture was formed ostensibly to pool resources and complement each other's capabilities to make their proposal more attractive to the government purchasing agency. For these reasons, complex issues arise not only regarding the application of antitrust law to government contracts, but the application to joint ventures as well.

In light of these complexities, the Court will first address some of the special considerations in assessing antitrust claims arising in connection with government contracts. This includes ascertaining the relevant market under a government contract. Second, the Court will analyze the applicability of antitrust law to joint ventures and agreements ancillary to those combinations.

[*279] A. Antitrust Law and Government Contracts

Government contractors are not strangers to antitrust scrutiny. [**20] The courts have been called upon to assess the antitrust implications of bid-rigging to obtain contracts, price-fixing among competitors for public contracts and agreements to refrain from bidding. See United States v. Koppers Co., 652 F.2d 290 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1083, 70 L. Ed. 2d 617, 102 S. Ct. 639 (1981); United States v. Champion Int'l Corp., 557 F.2d 1270 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 938, 54 L. Ed. 2d 298, 98 S. Ct. 428, 98 S. Ct. 429 (1977); COMPACT v. Metropolitan Government of Nashville & Davidson County, 594 F. Supp. 1567 (M.D. Tenn. 1984). Markets created by the government, therefore, are ripe for predatory and anti-competitive conduct just as in other commercial markets. The government contracting arena, however, provides certain special circumstances that do not exist in general commercial purchasing.

1. The Government as Monopsonist

First and foremost, in a market created by a government contract, there is only one purchaser - a specific department of the government on one proposed sale, i.e., one request for proposal. Charles L. Eger, Contractor Team Arrangements Under the Antitrust Laws, 17 Pub. Con. L.J. 595, 616 (1988). [**21] As a sole purchaser or "monopsonist," the government enjoys considerable economic power and can prescribe certain procedures and safety nets prior to awarding a contract to a joint venture. Peter B. Work, Antitrust Issues Relating to Arrangements and Practices of Government Contractors and Procuring Agencies in Markets for Specialized Government Products, 57 Antitrust L.J. 543, 545 (1988). For example, the government can require contractors (1) to sign certificates stating that their prices are based on current, accurate and complete cost data, (2) to accept fixed-price contracts and (3) to limit profits under cost-type contracts. Id. at 544-545. In this case, for instance, Federal Express asserts that the government negotiated uniform rates in accordance with a Memorandum of Understanding between the participating carriers and the government. Deft's Mem. in Support of its Motion to Dismiss, at 15.

Simply because the government enjoys this power, however, does not mean that no anti-competitive conduct can occur. Indeed, the fact that the Federal Acquisition Regulations specifically require joint venture bidders to comply with antitrust laws suggests that the government itself [**22] perceives a market in which anti-competitive acts can occur each time a government contract is issued. 48 C.F.R. § 9.604 (1995).

2. The Relevant Market Under a Government Contract

Determining the relevant product market under a government contract is a substantial obstacle. Assuming that the government creates a market for a certain product or system when it issues a Request for Proposal, this market is very narrow and specific, based upon detailed specifications and requirements.

The definition of the relevant market, however, is critical to Tower's antitrust claims under the Clayton Act and the Sherman Act. First, Tower seeks a private remedy for its antitrust claims under HN7 § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, which provides that any person injured in their business by reason of a violation of antitrust law may sue for treble damages. To obtain this relief, Tower must show (1) that the alleged loss is the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and (2) that the antitrust violation was the cause in fact of such injury. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\); Disenos Artisticos e Industriales, [\[\*23\] S.A. v. Work, 676 F. Supp. 1254, 1276 \(E.D.N.Y. 1987\)](#). Lack of causation in fact between antitrust injury and alleged antitrust violation is fatal to the merits of any antitrust claim. Argus, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 801 F.2d 38, 41 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1088, 94 L. Ed. 2d 151, 107 S. Ct. 1295 \(1987\). The injury, however, must reflect the anti-competitive effects of either the alleged violation or of anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation in the relevant market. Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489, 97 S. Ct. at 697. The determination of whether Tower has standing and injury, [\[\*280\]](#) therefore, necessitates a finding as to the relevant market.

Second, Tower's claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act alleging illegal restraint of trade cannot be assessed without determining the relevant market. For the reasons set forth infra, the Court will apply the "rule of reason" analysis in assessing the restraints imposed under the JV Agreement and the Supplemental Agreements. A threshold issue in analysis under the rule of reason, however, is the appropriate definition of the relevant market. Disenos, 676 F. Supp. at 1283.

Third, analysis of Tower's remaining [\[\*24\]](#) monopoly claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act also requires a determination of the relevant market. HN8 To make out a claim for monopoly, Tower will have to show that Federal Express had monopoly power in a relevant market. Irvin Indus., Inc. v. Goodyear Aerospace Corp., 974 F.2d 241, 244 \(2d Cir. 1992\). Likewise, in its claim of attempted monopoly, Tower will have to show that Federal Express had a "dangerous probability" of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1993\). To evaluate this element, the court must define the relevant market. Id. 113 S. Ct. at 891.

The essential inquiry for this Court, therefore, is the definition of the relevant market under the facts presented. As a motion for summary judgment, the Court must find that the undisputed facts support its conclusion as a matter of law.

In the general realm of antitrust law, the Supreme Court articulated the traditional test for determining the product market in United States v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\). The Court stated that HN9 a market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability [\[\*25\]](#) for the purpose for which they are produced, and a court must consider price, use and qualities. Id. at 404, 76 S. Ct. at 1012; see also State of New York v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 811 F. Supp. 848, 871 \(E.D.N.Y. 1993\). The Court emphasized the importance of the purchaser's willingness to substitute one commodity for another. DuPont, 351 U.S. at 393, 76 S. Ct. at 1003. Because a relevant market includes all products which are reasonably interchangeable, plaintiff's failure to define its market by reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability is, standing alone, valid grounds for dismissal. E&G Gabriel v. Gabriel Bros., Inc., 1994 WL 369147, at \*3 \(S.D.N.Y. July 13, 1994\).

Moreover, in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\), the Supreme Court found that HN10 a market may be composed of various well-defined submarkets for antitrust purposes, based on various practical indicia, including, inter alia, industry or customer recognition of the submarket as a separate economic market, the products' peculiar circumstances and uses, and distinct prices. Id. at 325, S. Ct. at 1524; see also Grumman Corp. v. LTV Corp., [\[\*26\] 527 F. Supp. 86, 89 \(E.D.N.Y. 1981\), aff'd, 665 F.2d 10 \(2d Cir. 1981\)](#). In Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210, 218 \(D.C. Cir. 1986\), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1033, 93 L. Ed. 2d 834, 107 S. Ct. 880 \(1987\), Judge Bork noted that in that these indicia are evidentiary proxies for direct proof of substitutability.

As noted above, however, in the context of a complex government contract calling for a number of different services and providing detailed requirements and specifications, the traditional analysis of "interchangeability" is difficult to apply. Indeed, the "relevant market" for antitrust analysis is hotly debated between the parties in this case. The inquiry is further complicated by the complexity of facts and the disputed interpretation of those facts by the parties.

Tower argues that there are essentially four relevant markets for the Court to consider. First, there is the market for air passenger and cargo transportation services under the MAC Program and the CRAF Program. Second, there is the submarket for Expansion Flights under these programs. Third, there is the market for international trans-Atlantic and [**27] trans-Pacific air service under the MAC Program and the CRAF Program. Fourth, there is the market for trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific Expansion [*281] Flights under these programs. Tower claims that these relevant markets are discrete submarkets of the overall market for sale of air passenger and cargo transportation services to the U.S. government. Compl. P 84.

Federal Express, on the other hand, contends that a single government contract cannot create a market for antitrust purposes. Deft's Reply Mem., at 6. Even if it could, Federal Express argues that its limited duration of only 33 months does not impact antitrust concerns. Id. Furthermore, Federal Express claims that under Tower's analysis, the Court would have to find the following factual and legal premises:

- (1) discrete portions of a single government contract can be submarkets;
- (2) the MAC Contract with the JV is a separate market, despite contracts with other carriers and joint ventures;
- (3) the 1990 to 1992 CRAF Program cycle is distinct from the market consisting of the government's continuing demand for air transport services.

Deft's Reply Mem., at 5.

Finally, Federal Express concedes that if [**28] any market exists, it can only be the CRAF Program, but strenuously argues that there cannot, as a matter of law, be submarkets for fixed and Expansion Flights under the MAC Contract because they were never separately offered or contracted for by the Government. Reply Mem. at 6.

Tower counters these arguments by asserting that a discrete submarket for expansion flights did exist. First, the parties to the joint venture were free to compete with each other and with other CRAF Program participants based on the variable cost factors for Expansion Flights. Second, MAC reserved the right to select any carrier for a given Expansion Flight. Third, only the price per passenger mile and the number of nautical miles for flight routes were fixed; all other components of the pricing formula specified in the MAC Contract for Expansion Flights, including ferrying costs and allowable cabin load, were variable and subject to free competition among carriers.

Tower also argues that there are discrete submarkets for fixed and Expansion Flights because they are not interchangeable or substitutable. First, Expansion Flights are unscheduled flights added on short notice in addition to regularly scheduled [**29] fixed flights. Second, the market for Expansion Flights is competitive, whereas the market for fixed flights was not. Moreover, both CRAF air carriers and MAC treated the market for Expansion Flights as a separate submarket with respect to how flights were awarded, priced and administered.

Finally, Tower asserts that the fact that the government contract had a limited and finite term did not mean there could not be any market. Even a single market can be a relevant market. Plt's Opp. Mem. (citing F. Buddie Contracting, Inc. v. Seawright, 595 F. Supp. 422, 438 \(N.D. Ohio 1984\)).

The Court rejects Federal Express's argument that no market can exist under a single government contract. In other cases involving antitrust allegations in connection with the award of government contracts, the courts have found or assumed that the contract itself can be the relevant market. Northrop Corp. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp., 705 F.2d 1030, 1055 \(9th Cir. 1983\), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 849, 78 L. Ed. 2d 144, 104 S. Ct. 156 (1983); COMPACT, 594 F. Supp. at 1571; Grumman Corp., 527 F. Supp. at 89. HN11[] The fact the Government is the sole domestic purchaser and regulates this sale does not [**30] mean that no market exists. Northrop, 705 F.2d at 1055. Moreover, as noted earlier, the Federal Acquisition Regulations protect against anti-competitive conduct in government procurement.

Accepting that there can be a relevant market to define, the difficult issue is which market is relevant. Both Tower and Federal Express have made arguments relying on the interpretation of the MAC Contract. Their arguments have also raised numerous disputed facts, including the ability of individual carriers to bid for Expansion Flights within the MAC Contract, the variability of the price for such flights and the factors that MAC considers in awarding such flights. The Court can hardly find, therefore, that the undisputed facts point to a particular relevant market. Without a relevant [*282] market in which to assess the alleged anti-competitive acts, the Court cannot rule as a matter of law as to any of Tower's claims. For this reason, the Court must deny Federal Express's motion, considered here as a motion for summary judgment.

Even if the Court could resolve the facts and rule as to the relevant market, however, a significant number of disputed facts exist as to the other elements of Tower's [**31] claim that would preclude granting Federal Express's motion.

B. Claim XII and Claim XIII-Restraint of Trade

HN12 [↑] A plaintiff alleging a § 1 violation must allege concerted action by two or more persons that unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce. In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 894 F. Supp. 703, 710 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). Thus, a complaint alleging a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act must identify co-conspirators and describe the nature and effects of the alleged conspiracy or combination. Reiter's Beer Distrib. v. Christian Schmidt Brewing, 657 F. Supp. 136, 142 (E.D.N.Y. 1987); International Television Prods. Ltd. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Television Div. of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 622 F. Supp. 1532, 1537 (S.D.N.Y. 1985).

1. Concerted Action

HN13 [↑] A plaintiff claiming an antitrust conspiracy must first establish either a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. It is essential to any claim in restraint of trade to establish the existence of an agreement between two or more independent entities. Disenos, 676 F. Supp. at 1280. A unilateral or independent act does [**32] not create conspiratorial liability under the Sherman Act. Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 257 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977 (1987); Capital Imaging Assocs. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993).

Although the parties do not dispute the existence of either the JV Agreement or the Supplemental Agreements, Federal Express claims that Tower has failed to meet this requirement because it only identified Federal Express as a conspirator. Deft's Motion at 18. In International Television Prods., however, the district court found that where the complaint named the two parties to an agreement and specified the content of the agreement, there could be no question that there was sufficient notice as to the identity of the co-conspirators. 622 F. Supp. at 1537. In the present case, the complaint sets forth at least three potential co-conspirators along with Federal Express. Tower refers to and provides excerpts from alleged "secret" agreements between Federal Express and Northwest (Compl. P 89), Pan Am (Compl. P 90) and UPS (Compl. P 91). Tower also alleges that Federal [**33] Express made secret agreements with Delta, TWA and United (Compl. P 92).

The Second Circuit has found, however, circumstances with respect to an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade must be such as to warrant a finding that conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement. Int'l Dist. Ctrs. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987) (citations omitted). In its opposition papers, Tower suggests that "Northwest appears to have knowingly aided in and accepted the benefits of the Federal Express's web of secret agreements, as evidenced by the terms of its secret agreement with Federal Express where the two carriers agreed to divide the CRAF market, mobilization value points, and Pan Am commissions." Pl's Opposition and Compl. P 89. At this point, however, the Court cannot rule as a matter of law on the undisputed facts that any of the other parties had the requisite intent to achieve an unlawful objective.

Federal Express also contends that the other joint venturers cannot be considered co-conspirators where they function as a single [**34] economic unit.<sup>1</sup> Deft's Motion in Support of [*283] Its Motion to Dismiss, at 20 (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). HN14[] Joint ventures may operate lawfully if there is sufficient economic integration among the members. The Supreme Court in Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982) suggested that competitors who form a joint venture must pool resources and capital, as well as share in the risks of profit and loss. 457 U.S. at 356, 102 S. Ct. at 2479. In addition, the Federal Acquisition Regulations set out the various types of economic interests that are acceptable in such arrangements, including the ability to complement each other's unique capabilities and to offer the government the best combination of performance, cost, and delivery for the product being acquired and provide that contractor team arrangements may not exist in violation of antitrust statutes. 48 C.F.R. § 9.602.

[**35] Tower asserts that the joint venture here did not form a single economic unit and therefore the members could be considered co-conspirators and violate the antitrust laws. First, the JV Agreement, and an operating agreement related to the JV Agreement, prohibited the pooling of capital and sharing of the risks of profit or loss. Each party was required to indemnify the other parties, to be solely liable for claims arising from its performance under the MAC Contract and to obtain at its own expense insurance to cover such liabilities.

As to the element of concerted action, therefore, the Court finds that there continues to be disputed issues of material fact that preclude ruling as a matter of law on this issue.

2. The Agreement Unreasonably Restrained Trade

HN15[] Restraints imposed by an agreement between competitors are denominated as horizontal restraints, while those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution are vertical restraints. Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Elecs., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 1522-23, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988). As noted above, competitors at the same level can lawfully combine if there is sufficient economic integration. [**36] In this case, "contractor team arrangements" are specifically provided for in the Federal Acquisition Regulations and under the solicitation for the MAC Contract. See 48 C.F.R. § 9.601.

Moreover, HN16[] side agreements to joint ventures can operate lawfully as well. Restraints collateral to but necessary for the implementation of a lawful agreement, and which are no broader in scope than necessary to accomplish the purpose of the agreement, are termed "ancillary." Eger, supra, at 613. This doctrine was first advanced nearly a hundred years ago in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 282 (9th Cir. 1898), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 (1899). Then Circuit Judge Taft found that:

HN17[] no conventional restraint of trade can be enforced unless the covenant embodying it is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract, and necessary to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract . . . . [To be lawful,] the contract must be one in which there is a main purpose, to which the covenant in restraint of trade is merely ancillary.

85 F. 271 at 282. Thus, to be lawful, the ancillary restraint [**37] must be subordinate to a separate, legitimate transaction and serve to make the main transaction more effective in accomplishing its purpose. Rothery Storage, 792 F.2d at 229.

HN18[] Joint ventures and their ancillary agreements, however, are not exempt from antitrust review. In Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 71 S. Ct. 971, 95 L. Ed. 1199 (1951), the Supreme Court ruled that the mere label of "joint venture" is not enough to immunize such combinations from illegal restraint of trade. 341 U.S. at 597, 71 S. Ct. at 974. These activities, as combinations among horizontal competitors, can be deemed unreasonable restraints on trade.

<sup>1</sup> Federal Express argues that neither MAC nor any other federal government instrumentality are a "person" within the meaning of the Sherman Act. Deft's Motion at 19 (citing United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U.S. 600, 85 L. Ed. 1071, 61 S. Ct. 742 (1941)).

[*284] HN19 There are two rules courts use to assess whether a horizontal agreement constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade. A court will apply the rule of per se liability when the agreement or practice at issue appears on its face to be one that would almost always act to restrict competition within the market. Gregoris Motors v. Nissan Motor Corp., 630 F. Supp. 902, 906 \(E.D.N.Y. 1986\). When a practice or agreement is not plainly anti-competitive, courts apply the traditional rule of reason, which requires the defendant to [**38] demonstrate that the pro-competitive aspects of the challenged agreement outweigh any anti-competitive aspects. Hertz Corp. v. City of New York, 1 F.3d 121, 130 \(2d Cir. 1993\), cert denied, 510 U.S. 1111, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375, 114 S. Ct. 1054, 114 S. Ct. 1055 (1994). In determining whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, there is a presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard and departure from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, rather than formalistic distinctions. Business Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. at 724, 108 S. Ct. at 1519.

HN20 The per se rule is only used in the relatively narrow circumstances where courts have had sufficient experience with the activity to recognize that it is plainly anti-competitive and lacks any redeeming value. Hertz Corp., 1 F.3d at 129; Gregoris Motors, 630 F. Supp. at 906. In these circumstances, the defendant's actions must be so obviously harmful to competition and so clearly lacking in any redeeming pro-competitive values that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543.

HN21 When the alleged restraint of trade is [**39] not plainly anti-competitive, the court must apply the rule of reason and determine whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. Clorox Co. v. Winthrop, 836 F. Supp. 983, 989 \(E.D.N.Y. 1993\). Under the rule of reason, the court must weigh all circumstances of the case in deciding whether the restrictive practice should be prohibited as an unreasonable restraint on competition. Anheuser-Busch, 673 F. Supp. 664, 666-667. In this respect, the court must balance the pro-competitive and anti-competitive effects of any restraint; it is not sufficient that plaintiff prove either anti-competitive intent or effect. U.S. Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1360 \(2d Cir. 1988\).

In this action, the Court will apply the rule of reason to analyze these claims. The Court finds that in this context, there is not "sufficient experience with the activity to recognize that it is plainly anti-competitive and lacks any redeeming value." Hertz Corp., 1 F.3d 121 at 129. This Court distinguishes the cases that applied per se liability to joint [**40] ventures and ancillary agreements in other contexts. In COMPACT v. The Metropolitan Government of Nashville and Davidson County, Tennessee, 594 F. Supp. 1567 \(M.D. Tenn. 1984\), the district court held that:

Federal courts will not hesitate to apply the per se rule to impose Section 1 liability upon a finding of some intrusive or ancillary aspect of the joint venture agreement which falls within the well-defined parameters of the per se rule.

594 F. Supp. at 1575 (citing Timken Roller Bearing, 341 U.S. at 598, 71 S. Ct. at 974). In that case, however, the district court found that because the joint venture had a blanket prohibition on its individual members rights to compete for the public contract at issue, competition was preempted between COMPACT and its members and between the individual COMPACT members themselves. 594 F. Supp. at 1577-78. This case is inapplicable because here, the restriction from bidding individually comes from the MAC contract itself.

Tower also cites Yamaha Motor Corp. v. FTC, 657 F.2d 971, 981 \(8th Cir. 1981\), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 915 (1982), to support its contention that side agreements among joint venturers can still [**41] rise to the level of per se antitrust violations. In Yamaha, the 8th Circuit found that side agreements to a joint venture that divided the geographical and product markets and restrained the members from competing with each other in shared markets were per se illegal. 657 F.2d at 980. Again, this case can be distinguished from the present [*285] facts. In Yamaha, the collateral agreements at issue banned the members of the joint venture from producing or selling outboard motors outside the joint venture. In this case, however, it is MAC that prohibits independent efforts by the joint venturers from providing air services, not the agreements between Federal Express and any of the other members. Moreover, the court in Yamaha noted that the portions of the agreements that gave each member of the joint venture an exclusive territory was arguably valid. Id. at 981.

The Court will also apply the rule of reason rather than the per se rule because the anti-competitive aspects of the joint venture and the supplemental agreement in this case are not plainly apparent.<sup>2</sup> On the one hand, the joint venture provides a method of organization which enables air carriers involved [**42] to join together to produce a combined product of passenger and cargo transport that is beyond the capacity the individual members. On the other hand, the supplemental agreements set a precise scheme of how Expansion Flights will be allocated if awarded, which may raise costs to the government.

Tower further claims that Federal Express' actions were per se violations because the supplemental agreements divided the market for air passenger services sold to MAC pursuant to the MAC Program. The supplemental agreements, however, merely allocated which members of the joint venture would operate certain flights, if awarded to the joint venture. It is unclear what effect this territorial restriction had on [**43] competition for the joint venture to obtain such Expansion Flights. As noted again and again, MAC required that air carriers give up their rights to compete independently for awards once the joint venture was accepted as a participant in the CRAF Program.

Finally, Tower alleges a per se violation in that Federal Express fixed, stabilized and maintained the cost to MAC for such services. Compl. P 96. Federal Express disputes this fact and argues that it simply could not fix the prices. The MAC Contract contained detailed formulas for rates, regulations and price determination and the parties signed a Certificate of Independent Price Determination.

Because of the disputed facts, which preclude a finding as a matter of law that the per se rule applies, the Court will proceed to analyze the undisputed facts under the rule of reason test. HN22[]. A party claiming unreasonable restraint of trade under the rule of reason must prove more than an injury to itself; it must prove that competition in the relevant market was harmed. Disenos, 676 F. Supp. at 1283. As noted earlier, the relevant market for purposes of this analysis cannot be determined as a matter of law because of the disputed [**44] facts among the parties.

Even if the market could be defined as a matter of law, however, the court must assess whether competition in that market has been harmed. Under the rule of reason analysis, a plaintiff must demonstrate a precise harm which is a restraint on competition, not merely a harm to a competitor. Gregoris Motors; 630 F. Supp. at 906. Tower must demonstrate therefore that the injury it suffered causes a lessening of competition in the market as a whole. Id.

Tower alleges that the supplemental agreements unreasonably restrained trade by creating preferential payment and workshares among the joint venturers. Furthermore, it claims that these agreements created a horizontal division of markets among competitors and imposed duties on the parties to refrain from bidding against each other on CRAF Expansion Flights. Plt's Opposition, at 13. As such, these restrictions were so broad they suppressed competition without creating any efficiencies. Id.

Federal Express, on the other hand, claims that these agreements do not exclude any JV member from obtaining benefits under the MAC Contract. Deft's Reply Mem., at 8. Rather, they are reasonable efforts to prevent [**45] [*286] "free riding" on the part of participants in the Joint Venture. Id. (citing Rothery Storage, 792 F.2d at 212-13). A free ride can pose a serious threat to the efficiency of a joint venture because the partner that provides capital and resources without receiving compensation has a strong incentive to provide less, thus rendering the common enterprise less effective. 792 F.2d at 212-13.

---

<sup>2</sup> Joint ventures present a difficult concept for antitrust analysis, defying neat classification and precise definition and, by extension, well established rules for evaluating their competitive impact. COMPACT v. Metropolitan Govt. of Nashville & Davidson Cty., 594 F. Supp. 1567, 1574 \(M.D. Tenn. 1984\).

Federal Express also argues that the work share allocation and preferences in the supplemental agreements were reasonable to achieve the purposes of the JV because it reflected the number of aircraft committed by each carrier. Through the JV Agreement, Federal Express committed 16 DC-10 cargo planes, Northwest committed 29 747 passenger planes, 20 DC-10 passenger planes and 8 747 cargo planes. Tower, on the other hand, committed overall 3 747 passenger planes. Moreover, the JV could be eligible for higher MV Points the more cargo planes committed. Northwest and Federal Express together committed 24 cargo planes, whereas Tower committed none.

Again, the material facts are disputed as to whether the alleged restraints in the Supplemental Agreements are unreasonable. The Court cannot, therefore, [**46] rule as a matter of law on Tower's § 1 claim. As discussed below, factual disputes are also prevalent in Tower's § 2 claims.

C. Claim XIV-Monopoly

HN23 [↑] Monopoly in and of itself is not unlawful. National Ass'n of Pharmaceutical Mfrs. v. Ayerst Labs., 850 F.2d 904, 915 \(2d Cir. 1988\). To make out claim of monopolization under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must establish that the defendant had monopoly power in a relevant market, that the defendant engaged in anti-competitive conduct, and that its injury was, in fact, caused by the defendant's violation of antitrust laws. Irvin Indus., 974 F.2d at 244. The defendant's activities must consist of willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen or historic accident. Ayerst Labs., 850 F.2d at 915. To prove a monopolist willfully acquired monopoly power, a plaintiff must prove that the alleged monopolist used or attempted to use monopoly power to foreclose competition, gain competitive advantage, or destroy competitors; this element requires proof of exclusionary or anti-competitive intent and effect. Clorox, 836 F. Supp. I\*\*47I at 993.

In the present case, to meet the first prong of the test, Tower claims that by means of obtaining separate, secret agreements from potential competitors, which agreements Federal Express characterized as supplemental to the JV Agreement, Federal Express placed itself in a position to ensure that it had a preferential opportunity to operate all Category B Expansion Flights, to control the referral and distribution of Expansion Flights, to charge other air carriers a fee for referral of such flights, and to control all competitive price negotiations between MAC and the other participants in the Joint Venture so as to ensure that the price of Expansion Flights would be stabilized at non-competitive levels higher than what MAC would have been required to pay if there were free competition.

In addition, Tower asserts that it need not specify a precise percentage of the market share controlled by Federal Express to meet this aspect of the cause of action. Plaintiff's Opp. (citing General Elec. Co. v. Bucyrus-Erie Col., 563 F. Supp. 970, 977 \(S.D.N.Y. 1983\); Phone Programs III. v. National Jockey Club, Inc., 692 F. Supp. 879 \(N.D. Ill. 1988\)). In this respect, Tower contends [**48] that further discovery is needed to ascertain market share.

Tower does assert, however, that Federal Express achieved a 72% share of all MV points, which entitled Federal Express to dominance in the market for peacetime Fixed Flights. Tower argues that although the MAC Contract provided that MV points would only be a secondary factor in awarding Expansion Flights, Federal Express sought to obtain monopoly leverage over the competitive market for Expansion Flights by "enforcing an interpretation of the secret agreements calculated to guarantee its control over the same dominant 72 share of that market." Pltf's Opp. Mem. (citing [Virgin \[\*287\] Atlantic Airways, Ltd. v. British Airways, PLC, 872 F. Supp. 52 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\)](#)).

Federal Express, on the other hand, claims that it was factually impossible for it to undertake any of these anti-competitive activities under any market that Tower could define. First, the agreement and JV were only limited to a 33 month period. Second, none of its activities had any impact on any other joint venturers or individual bidders or participants. Supp. Mem. at 5. Third, its acts did not affect entry in any way into the market, as defined by Tower. Id. Fourth, [**49] Federal Express did not have the power to set prices or exclude competition from this market because the government set the prices and picked which joint venture would satisfy its needs for this market. Fifth, any monopoly power was conferred by the government through MV points, calculated on the basis of the government's preferences and needs.

These arguments make clear that the facts underlying Tower's allegations of monopoly are contested. For this reason, the Court finds that it cannot rule as a matter of law that Federal Express did or did not have monopoly power. The disputed facts also preclude granting summary judgment as to the issue of attempted monopoly, as discussed below.

D. Claim XV-Attempt to Monopolize

HN24 [↑] In order to establish a § 2 attempted monopolization claim, plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct (2) with the specific intent to monopolize (3) and a dangerous possibility of achieving monopoly power exists. B.V. Optische Industrie de Oude Delft v. Hologic, 909 F. Supp. 162, 171 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (citing Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456, 113 S. Ct. at 890-91). Proof of the first element may be used [**50] to infer second element and, when coupled with proof of monopoly power, may demonstrate a dangerous probability of success. Volvo N. Am. v. Men's Int'l Prof. Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 74 (2d Cir. 1988).

HN25 [↑] As noted when discussing the relevant market, a dangerous probability of success may exist where the defendant possesses a significant market share when it undertakes the challenged anti-competitive conduct. See H.L. Hayden Co. v. Siemens Medical Systems, 879 F.2d 1005, 1018 (2d Cir. 1989). To make this finding, however, it is necessary for the court to define the relevant product market. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456, 113 S. Ct. at 890. Because the Court cannot determine the relevant market at this point, it is unable to reach a conclusion as to this issue on the basis of undisputed facts.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court denies Federal Express's motion for summary judgment as to all of Tower's antitrust claims. The Court now turns to assessing its jurisdiction over Tower's state law claims.

III. DISMISSAL OF CLAIMS I TO XI

A. Supplemental Jurisdiction

HN26 [↑] A district court may exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims whenever federal law claims [**51] and state law claims in a case derive from a common nucleus of operative fact and are such that plaintiff would ordinarily be expected to try them all in one judicial proceeding. Block v. First Blood Assocs., 988 F.2d 344, 351 (2d Cir. 1993) (citation omitted). The decision whether to exercise such jurisdiction is entirely within the discretion of the district court. Id. Among the factors a district court will consider are judicial economy, convenience, fairness and federal-state comity. Id.

Federal Express argues that in the event the Court denies its motion as to the antitrust claims, it should nevertheless decline to exercise any supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1337(c)(2). HN27 [↑] Section 1337(c)(2) provides that a district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim if the state claim substantially predominates over the federal claims.

In this action, Tower has raised state law claims based on contract, tort and fiduciary duty. Each one of these claims arises out of alleged violations of the JV Agreement, the JV Operating Agreement and the Supplemental Agreements, which are at [*288] issue in the antitrust portion of [**52] this case. Indeed, any finding as to the validity of Tower's antitrust claims may directly implicate the legality of these agreements. For this reason, the Court will continue to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over these state law claims.

B. State Compulsory Counterclaims

Federal Express argues in the alternative that Tower's state law claims should be dismissed because they must be raised as compulsory counterclaims in the Tennessee litigation.

Federal Express cites Adam v. Jacobs, 950 F.2d 89 (2d Cir. 1991) to support its argument that Tower's claims should be dismissed. In Jacobs, however, the Second Circuit noted that at least in the context of the federal rule pertaining to compulsory counterclaims, the rule was "directed against one who failed to assert a counterclaim in one action and then instituted a second action in which that counterclaim became the basis of the complaint." Id. at 93 (citing Southern Constr. Co. v. Pickard, 371 U.S. 57, 60, 83 S. Ct. 108, 110, 9 L. Ed. 2d 31 (1962)). What Federal Express failed to note about that case, however, was the only grounds for federal jurisdiction was diversity of citizenship. In this case, federal antitrust [**53] claims are involved that will bear on the validity of the state law claims. Moreover, Federal Express seems to have conveniently forgotten that Tower filed the first action in the Eastern District of New York, which Judge Dearie dismissed without prejudice. In the interim before Tower had the opportunity to refile, Federal Express instituted action in Tennessee state court based on the same contracts in issue in the first action, fully aware that Tower would be raising antitrust claims on those same activities.

For these reasons, and the reasons stated above with respect to supplemental jurisdiction, the Court will retain jurisdiction over Tower's state law claims.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Federal Express's motion for summary judgment as to Claims XII through XV is denied and Federal Express's motion to dismiss Claims I through XI is denied.

SO ORDERED.

Joanna Seybert, U.S.D.J.

Dated: Uniondale, New York

October 15, 1996

---

End of Document

Jackson v. W. Indian Co.

United States District Court for the District of the Virgin Islands, Division of St. Thomas and St. John

October 16, 1996, Decided

Civil No. 1995-151

Reporter

944 F. Supp. 423 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15969 **; 35 V.I. 269 ***

DAVID JACKSON, DUNCAN CONNOR, ALBERT BENJAMIN, and NARVEL FLEMING, for themselves and others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. THE WEST INDIAN COMPANY, LTD., a corporation; VIRGIN ISLANDS TAXI ASSOCIATION, an unincorporated association, Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] WICO's motion for summary judgment as to Counts One through Five of plaintiff's complaint DENIED; and WICO's motion for summary judgment as to Count Seven (Violation of the Commerce Clause) GRANTED; and WICO's motion to dismiss Count Eight (Violation of Fourteenth Amendment) GRANTED; and WICO's motion for summary judgment as to Count Six (Tortious Interference with Business Relations) and Count Nine (Violation of 31 V.I.C. § 235) DENIED without prejudice.

Core Terms

---

Islands, instrumentalities, passengers, immune, territorial, anti-trust, interstate commerce, pickup, taxi, unincorporated territory, taxi driver, dock, regulations, agencies, court of appeals, liberty interest, anti trust law, state action, cruise ship, plaintiffs', commerce, Revised, powers, preliminary injunction, summary judgment, exclusive right, out-of-state, articulated, in-state, pre-paid

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN1 Scope, Exemptions

All government instrumentalities, whether state or federal, enjoy some level of immunity from anti-trust suits under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 - 7. Federal instrumentalities enjoy absolute immunity from anti-trust suits. Instrumentalities of a state or municipal government are immune where the challenged conduct is undertaken pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to displace competition with regulation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN2 Scope, Exemptions

A finding that a defendant is immune from federal anti-trust liability means that the defendant is also immune from liability under the local statute. 11 V.I.C. § 1518 (Virgin Islands). When the language of Chapter 11 is the same or similar to the language of a federal antitrust law, a district court in construing the chapter shall follow the construction given the federal law by the federal courts.

944 F. Supp. 423, *423L<sup>A</sup> 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15969, **1L<sup>A</sup> 265 V.I. 269, ***269

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN3[ Scope, Exemptions

The United States may not be sued for antitrust violations under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN4[ Sherman Act, Scope

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 -7, prohibits contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce and monopolization or attempts or conspiracies to monopolize trade or commerce by any "persons." 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN5[ Scope, Exemptions

Federal instrumentalities are outside the scope of the anti-trust laws and are absolutely immune from suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN6[ Scope, Exemptions

States, unlike the federal government, are considered "persons" for purposes of the anti-trust laws. Nevertheless, the United States Supreme Court holds that the anticompetitive actions of states acting as sovereigns are not prohibited by the anti-trust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN7[ Scope, Exemptions

Parker immunity, does not automatically extend to the actions of state or municipal instrumentalities. Municipal and state agencies are immune from the antitrust laws only if the actions taken were pursuant to a "clearly articulated" state policy. It is not necessary that the state statute granting power to a municipal or state agency expressly state that the legislature intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effects. An agency is acting pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy so long as the anticompetitive conduct is a foreseeable result of the authority granted by the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN8[ Scope, Exemptions

In the case of the unincorporated territories of the Virgin Islands and Guam, some courts have concluded that agencies created by the territorial governments should be treated as federal instrumentalities and thus accorded absolute immunity from antitrust liability. However, in the case of the District of Columbia and the unincorporated territory of Puerto Rico, agencies created by those governments are treated as state-created agencies and subject to the limitations of state-action immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN9 [blue download icon] Scope, Exemptions

The Virgin Islands is more analogous to a state government than to an appendage of the federal government. The Virgin Islands should at the least be afforded the same type of treatment as the District of Columbia and another unincorporated territory, Puerto Rico, which are also not states of the Union. Because the Virgin Islands enjoys many of the trappings of a sovereign governmental entity, even if that sovereignty is a creation of Congress, the Virgin Islands should be treated in the same way as a state when analyzing the applicability of antitrust laws.

Constitutional Law > Relations Among Governments > Federal Territory & New States

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Relations Among Governments, Federal Territory & New States

Congress has sovereignty over the territories of the United States and accordingly has power to legislate for a territory with respect to all subjects upon which the legislature of a state might legislate within the state. Congress may delegate to a territory such of these powers as it sees fit. And the right of Congress to revise, alter and revoke these delegated powers does not diminish the powers while they reside in the territory. The aim of Congress is to give the territory full power of local self-determination. The local laws enacted under the legislative power granted by Congress are accordingly territorial laws, not laws of the United States. These principles apply to the unincorporated territories, such as the Virgin Islands. Congress may create a territorial government for an unincorporated territory and may confer upon it an autonomy similar to that of the states. And the territorial body politic thus created may be endowed with attributes of sovereignty, such as nonliability to suit without its consent.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

HN11 [blue download icon] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

The Commerce Clause, U.S. Const. art. 1, § 8, grants Congress the power to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States. While the Commerce Clause is an affirmative grant of power to Congress, it has also been interpreted as a limitation on the power of the States to impede interstate commerce. The negative implications of the Commerce Clause are referred to as the dormant commerce clause.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Constitutional Law > Relations Among Governments > Federal Territory & New States

HN12 [blue download icon] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

944 F. Supp. 423, *423L<sup>1</sup> 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15969, **1L<sup>2</sup> 265 V.I. 269, ***269

Although the Commerce Clause has not been made applicable to the Virgin Islands by Congress in § 3 of the Revised Organic Act, the limitations implied in the Commerce Clause have been held to be applicable to the Virgin Islands through the Territorial Clause. Congress has comprehensive power to regulate territories under the Territorial Clause, U.S. Const. Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, and Congress' Commerce Clause powers are implicit in that clause. Accordingly, when territorial enactments affect interstate or foreign commerce--a subject over which Congress has supreme control--those enactments must be scrutinized under Dormant Commerce Clause principles. Any other conclusion would mean that an unincorporated territory would have more power over commerce than the states possess.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN13 [blue] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

A state action that constitutes simple economic protectionism and discriminates against out-of-state interests or in favor of in-state interests is subject to a heightened level of scrutiny under the Commerce Clause and is most likely to be declared unconstitutional. However, actions which do not discriminate against, but rather have only an incidental effect on, interstate commerce, are governed by a balancing test, under which the state conduct is invalid only if the incidental burden on interstate commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

HN14 [blue] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

When neither a fundamental right nor a suspect class is involved, a state's action is constitutional so long as it is rationally related to a legitimate state interest.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN15 [blue] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

In order for plaintiffs to state a claim under the Due Process Clause, they must establish that some protected property or liberty interest is implicated by the challenged action.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN16 [blue] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

The Fourteenth Amendment guarantees that no person may be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. A person may acquire a property interest in a government entitlement or benefit which may not be taken away absent due process. Whether a benefit constitutes a property interest is a question of state or local law.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN17 [blue icon] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

Liberty interests are also protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. The opportunity to pursue one's livelihood is a constitutionally protected liberty interest that may not be arbitrarily denied.

Counsel: ATTORNEYS: James Derr, Esq., St. Thomas, U.S.V.I., For the plaintiffs.

Maria Tankenohn Hodge, Hodge & Francois, St. Thomas, U.S.V.I., For defendant West Indian Company Ltd.

Rhys S. Hodge, Esq., St. Thomas, U.S.V.I., For defendant Virgin Islands Taxi Association.

Judges: Thomas K. Moore, Chief Judge

Opinion by: Thomas K. Moore

Opinion

---

[*424] [***270] MEMORANDUM

Moore, C.J.

This matter is before the Court on a motion to dismiss or in the alternative for summary judgment filed by defendant West Indian [***271] Company, Ltd. ["WICO"]. For the following reasons WICO's motion is granted in part and denied in part.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This suit arises from a Taxi Concession Agreement ["the 1995 Agreement"], entered into [*2] on August 3, 1995 by WICO and the Virgin Islands Taxi Association ["VITA"], which grants to VITA members the exclusive right to pick up all "independent" cruise- ship passengers from WICO's dock. Taxi drivers who are not members of VITA retain the right to pick up passengers who have arranged for pre-paid tours operated by various independent tour operators. Under the agreement, VITA is responsible for providing dispatchers and assuring that all the taxi drivers comply with the rules and regulations concerning orderly conduct, proof of insurance coverage, etc. Before the 1995 Agreement, the Taxi Concession agreements between WICO and VITA allowed all licensed taxi drivers to pick up both independent and pre-paid tour passengers.

David Jackson, Duncan Connor, Albert Benjamin and Narvel Fleming ["plaintiffs"], licensed taxi drivers who are not members of VITA, brought this suit on September 11, 1995. The complaint alleges that the 1995 Agreement violates the Sherman anti-trust laws (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 - 7), as well as the Virgin Islands anti-monopoly law (V. I. CODE ANN., tit. 11, §§ 1501-1518). Plaintiffs also allege "restraint of trade in violation of public policy," "tortious interference [**3] with business relations" and violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Finally, plaintiffs allege, against WICO only, violation of the Virgin Islands competitive bidding statute (31 V.I.C. § 235), and violation of the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution (U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 3). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question), and 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(a\) (commerce and antitrust regulations), as authorized by section 22(a) of the Revised Organic Act of 1954, 16 U.S.C. § 1612\(a\).<sup>1</sup>

Plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction on October 25, 1995 to enjoin enforcement of the new agreement, which had not gone [***272] into effect as scheduled on October 1, 1995 due to the arrival of Hurricane Marilyn on

---

<sup>1</sup>The Revised Organic Act of 1954 is found at 48 U.S.C §§ 1541-1645 \(1995\), reprinted in V.I. CODE ANN., Historical Documents, 73-177 (codified as amended) (1995) ["Revised Organic Act"].

September 15, 1995 which caused the cancellation of all cruise ships calls to St. [**4] Thomas. Plaintiffs prayed for an injunction before the expected return of cruise ships in the beginning of November. Because a hearing could not be scheduled until November 20, 1995, the new agreement had been in effect for approximately two weeks at the time of the hearing. The Court denied plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction at the end of the presentation of evidence after considering (1) the extent to which the movant would suffer irreparable harm if the injunction were denied, (2) the extent to which the nonmovant would suffer if the injunction were issued, (3) the likelihood of success on the merits by the movant, and (4) the public interest. Opticians Ass'n v. Independent Opticians, 920 F.2d 187, 191-192 (3d Cir. 1990). A key factor in the ruling was the Court's finding that the plaintiffs would not likely succeed on the merits of their claim because WICO and VITA were most likely immune from anti-trust liability. After the hearing, WICO filed the instant motion to dismiss or in the alternative for summary judgment.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Anti-trust claims

In their first through fifth causes of action, plaintiffs allege that the defendants' actions [**5] constitute an unlawful restraint of trade in violation of both federal and Virgin Islands anti-trust laws. It is well established that HN1[↑] all government instrumentalities, whether state or federal, enjoy some level of immunity from anti-trust suits under the Sherman Act. Federal instrumentalities enjoy absolute immunity from anti-trust suits. See, e.g. Sea Land Service v. Alaska Railroad, 212 U.S. App. D.C. 197, 659 F.2d 243 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 919, 71 L. Ed. 2d 459, 102 S. Ct. 1274 (1982). Instrumentalities of a state or municipal government are immune where the challenged conduct is undertaken pursuant to a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to displace competition with regulation." Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 40, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985). HN2[↑] A finding that WICO is immune from federal anti-trust liability means that WICO is also immune from liability under the local statute. See 11 V.I.C. § 1518 [***273] ("when the language of this Chapter is the same or similar to the language of a Federal Antitrust Law, the District Court in construing this chapter shall follow the construction given the Federal Law [**6] by the Federal courts."); Sea Air Shuttle Corporation v. Virgin Islands Port Authority, 782 F. Supp. 1070, 1077 (D.V.I. 1991).

This Court concludes that the more appropriate immunity doctrine is the one applicable to state governments and state governmental entities rather than the immunity doctrine applied to federal instrumentalities. This conclusion contrasts with Judge Huyett's reasoning in Sea Air Shuttle, which held that the Virgin Islands Port Authority was immune from anti-trust suit under both federal immunity and state action immunity doctrines. While Sea Air Shuttle rested its holding alternatively on the state action theory, Judge Huyett stated that "we do not believe that state action doctrine should be applied to the Government of the Virgin Islands . . ." 782 F. Supp. at 1076, n. 10. We respectfully disagree.

1. Federal Immunity v. State Action Immunity

It is well established that HN3[↑] the United States may not be sued for antitrust violations under the Sherman Act. United States v. Cooper Corp. 312 U.S. 600, 85 L. Ed. 1071, 61 S. Ct. 742 (1941). In Cooper, the Supreme [*426] Court noted that HN4[↑] the Sherman Act prohibits contracts, combinations or conspiracies [**7] in restraint of trade or commerce and monopolization or attempts or conspiracies to monopolize trade or commerce by any "persons." 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. The Court held that Congress did not intend for the Sherman Act to expose the United States to liability and that the United States was not included in the term "persons."<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> The issue in United States v. Cooper, 312 U.S. 600, 85 L. Ed. 1071, 61 S. Ct. 742 (1941), was whether the United States could bring treble damage civil actions against antitrust violators. Cooper held that United States was not a "person" under the antitrust laws. In 1955 Congress responded to issue raised in Cooper by adding section 4(a) to the Clayton Act, which authorizes the United States to sue alleged antitrust violators for actual, but not treble, damages. See Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Alaska R.R., 212 U.S. App. D.C. 197, 659 F.2d 243, 245 (1981). The congressional action did not disturb Cooper's holding that the United States is not a "person."

The prohibition [**8] against suits against the United States has been expanded to federal instrumentalities. The leading case espousing the doctrine of anti-trust immunity for federal instrumentalities is [***274] Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Alaska R.R., 212 U.S. App. D.C. 197, 659 F.2d 243 (D.C. Cir. 1981). In Sea-Land, the court of appeals, relying on the Supreme Court's analysis in Cooper, held that since the Alaska Railroad was owned and operated by the federal government, it too could not be considered a "person" under the antitrust laws. The Sea-Land court thus established that HNS [**8] federal instrumentalities are outside the scope of the anti-trust laws and are absolutely immune from suit.

The absolute immunity afforded federal instrumentalities contrasts with the limited immunity of state and municipal instrumentalities. HN6 [**8] States, unlike the federal government, are considered "persons" for purposes of the anti-trust laws. Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, 86 L. Ed. 1346, 62 S. Ct. 972 (1942). Nevertheless, the Supreme Court has held that the anticompetitive actions of states acting as sovereigns are not prohibited by the anti-trust laws. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 1**91 307 (1943). The Court reasoned that the statutory history and language of the Sherman Act demonstrates that the Act was mainly concerned with business combinations of private individuals, and that state directed actions did not seem to fit the statutory requirement that there be a "contract, combination or conspiracy" in restraint of trade. Id. at 351. The Court was also concerned with federalism and adopted a rule of statutory construction that in a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress.

Id. For these reasons, state governments may not be held liable for the anticompetitive actions it may take.

HN7 [**8] Parker immunity, however, does not automatically extend to the actions of state or municipal instrumentalities. City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 394, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978). Municipal and state agencies are immune from the antitrust laws only if the actions taken were [**10] pursuant to a [***275] "clearly articulated" state policy. Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. at 39. It is not necessary that the state statute granting power to a municipal or state agency "expressly state . . . that the legislature intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effects." Id. at 43. An agency is acting pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy so long as the anticompetitive conduct is a foreseeable result of the authority granted by the state. Id. at 44.

2. Territorial Government Instrumentalities

Since agencies and instrumentalities of territorial governments are neither state-created agencies, nor are they federal instrumentalities in the same sense as the Alaska Railroad, we must determine what immunity, if any, from antitrust laws such entities should possess. HN8 [**8] In the case of the unincorporated territories of the Virgin Islands [*427] and Guam, some courts have concluded that agencies created by the territorial governments should be treated as federal instrumentalities and thus accorded absolute immunity from antitrust liability. See, e.g. Sakamoto v. Duty Free Shoppers, Ltd., 764 F.2d 1285 (9th Cir. 1985); [Sea Air Shuttle Corporation v. \[\*\*11\] Virgin Islands Port Authority](#), 782 F. Supp. 1070 (D.V.I. 1991); IT & E Overseas, Inc. v. RCA Global Communications, Inc., 747 F. Supp. 6 (D.D.C. 1990). However, in the case of the District of Columbia<sup>3</sup> [**12] and the unincorporated territory of Puerto Rico,<sup>4</sup> agencies created by those governments are treated as state-created agencies and <sup>3</sup>The District of Columbia is governed by Congress under art. I, § 8, cl. 17 of the Constitution, whereas Congress derives its authority over the territories under Article IV, Section 3, Clause 2. The two constitutional grants of power to Congress often have been considered together and treated as having similar parameters. See, e.g., O'Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 541-42, 77 L. Ed. 1356, 53 S. Ct. 740 (1933).

<sup>4</sup>Puerto Rico is fundamentally an unincorporated territory, still subject to art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 of the Constitution, even though the people of Puerto Rico have entered into a compact with the Congress by which Puerto Rico has its own 'constitution' and is called a 'commonwealth'. See Statement of the Hon. Elton Gallegly, June 26, 1996, available in WESTLAW, UTESTIMONY library, 1996 WL 374770 (during committee markup of H.R. 3024, the United States-Puerto Rico Status Act, Gallegly stated, [***276] subject to the limitations of state-action immunity. See, e.g. Hecht v. Pro-Football, 144 U.S. App. D.C. 56, 444 F.2d 931 \(D.C. Cir. 1971\); Zapata Gulf Marine Corp. v. Puerto Rico Maritime Ship. Auth., 682 F. Supp. 1345 \(E.D.La. 1988\); Caribe Trailer Systems v. Puerto Rico Maritime Ship. Co., 475 F. Supp. 711 \(D.D.C. 1979\); Star Lines, Ltd. v. Puerto Rico Maritime Ship. Auth., 451 F. Supp. 157 \(1978\).

[**13] The court in Sakamoto reasoned that "since Guam is an unincorporated territory enjoying only such powers as may be delegated to it by Congress in the Organic Act of Guam, . . . the government of Guam is in essence an instrumentality of the federal government." 764 F.2d at 1286. The court of appeals cited Congress' plenary power over the territories and the fact that Congress retained the right to annul any act of Guam's legislature as supporting its characterization of the territory of Guam and by extension the Guam Airport Authority, an agency of the Guam government, as mere federal instrumentalities. Id. This reasoning was followed by the District Court for the District of Columbia when faced with a factually indistinguishable case relating to the telephone company in Guam. IT & E Overseas, Inc. v. RCA Global Communications, Inc., 747 F. Supp. 6. Relying on Sakamoto, the IT & E Overseas court held that the Guam Telephone Authority ["GTA"], a not-for-profit public corporation, was a federal instrumentality for purposes of antitrust immunity. The opinion noted, however, that "were this a case of first impression, the Court may well have determined that because [**14] Guam is more closely analogous to a state, GTA is not entitled to absolute immunity . . . , but rather to the qualified immunity afforded to state and local governments." Id. at 11-12. Sakamoto and IT & E Overseas were also followed by Judge Huyett in Sea Air, which found that the Virgin Islands Port Authority ("VIPA") was a federal instrumentality for the same reasons that the GTA was a federal instrumentality.

Assuming that the Virgin Islands were to be considered merely a federal instrumentality as the above line of cases might suggest, then WICO would also have to be characterized as a federal instrumentality. WICO is similar in nature to VIPA, which was created by the Virgin Islands legislature as a "body corporate and politic constituting a public corporation and autonomous governmental instrumentality for the Government of the Virgin Islands [***277] . . ." 29 V.I.C. § 541\(a\); Sea Air, 782 F. Supp. at 1073. The West Indian [\[\*428\]](#) Company, Ltd. was purchased by the Government of the Virgin Islands in 1993 under Act. No. 5826, and was "granted the status and authority of a public corporation and governmental instrumentality of the Government of the Virgin Islands of the [**15] United States and shall be deemed to be a public entity operating on behalf of the Government . . ." Act. No. 5826, § 8 (attached as Exh. A to WICO's Mem. in Opp'n to Mot. for Prel. Inj.). Thus WICO, as a government entity, would also be entitled to be absolutely shielded from operation of the antitrust laws, assuming federal action immunity applies to the Virgin Islands.

This Court, however, does not agree that unincorporated territories, specifically the Virgin Islands, and their agencies should be held to be mere instrumentalities of the federal government. HN9 The Virgin Islands is more analogous to a state government than to an appendage of the federal government. The Virgin Islands should at the least be afforded the same type of treatment as the District of Columbia and another unincorporated territory, Puerto Rico, which are also not states of the Union. This Court concludes that because the Virgin Islands enjoys many of the "trappings of a sovereign governmental entity,"<sup>5</sup> even if that sovereignty is a creation of Congress, the Virgin Islands should be treated in the same way as a state when analyzing the applicability of antitrust laws.

[**16] This analysis is founded on the well-reasoned opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, grounded solidly upon Supreme Court precedent, which held that the Virgin Islands is not a mere federal instrumentality and that the laws passed by our Legislature are not laws of the United States. Harris v. Boreham.

---

"The 'Commonwealth' choice in the bill now accurately describes the current Commonwealth status as a territory, which is not permanent, and cannot guarantee equal benefits and rights for the people of Puerto Rico. Congress retains discretion under the Constitution's Territory Clause as to what laws apply to Puerto Rico."); compare United States v. Sanchez, 992 F.2d 1143, 1151 \(11th Cir. 1993\) (Puerto Rico is still constitutionally a territory and not a separate sovereign); with United States v. Andino, 831 F.2d 1164, 1168 \(1st Cir. 1987\) (holding that for double jeopardy purposes Puerto Rico is a separate sovereign like a state).

<sup>5</sup> See Ngiraingas v. Sanchez, 858 F.2d 1368, 1371 \(9th Cir. 1988\), aff'd, 495 U.S. 182, 110 S. Ct. 1737, 109 L. Ed. 2d 163 \(1990\).

233 F.2d 110 (3d Cir. 1956) (Maris, J.). In holding that the government of the Virgin Islands is not a "federal agency" within the meaning of the Federal Tort Claims Act, the Court of Appeals concluded that it was clear that the [government set up by Congress] in the unincorporated territory of the Virgin Islands [is] a body [***278] politic quite distinct from the Government of the United States and that it [has] attributes of sovereignty which [have] been delegated to it by the Government of the United States but which [are] distinct from the powers of that government.

Id. at 114. The Court reasoned as follows:

It is settled that HN10[<sup>1</sup>] Congress has sovereignty over the territories of the United States and accordingly has power to legislate for a territory with respect to all subjects upon which the legislature of a state might [**17] legislate within the state. Simms v. Simms, 175 U.S. 162, 168, 44 L. Ed. 115, 20 S. Ct. 58 (1899). It is also settled that Congress may delegate to a territory such of these powers as it sees fit. Binns v. United States, 194 U.S. 486, 491-92, 48 L. Ed. 1087, 24 S. Ct. 816 (1904); Christianson v. King County, 239 U.S. 356, 364-66, 60 L. Ed. 327, 36 S. Ct. 114 (1915). And the right of Congress to revise, alter and revoke these delegated powers does not diminish the powers while they reside in the territory. Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 85 U.S. (18 Wall.) 648, 655-56, 21 L. Ed. 966 (1873); District of Columbia v. John R. Thompson Co., 346 U.S. 100, 106, 97 L. Ed. 1480, 73 S. Ct. 1007 (1953). The aim of Congress is to give the territory full power of local self-determination. The local laws enacted under the legislative power granted by Congress are accordingly territorial laws, not laws of the United States. People of Puerto Rico v. Shell Co., 302 U.S. 253, 82 L. Ed. 235, 58 S. Ct. 167 (1937); People of Puerto Rico v. Rubert Hermanos, Inc., 309 U.S. 543, 84 L. Ed. 916, 60 S. Ct. 699 (1940); Arroyo v. Puerto Rico Transp. Authority, 164 F.2d 748 (1st Cir. 1947). [**18]

These principles apply to the unincorporated territories, such as the Virgin Islands. For it has been held that Congress may create a territorial government for an unincorporated territory and may confer upon it an autonomy similar to that of the states. Gromer v. Standard Dredging Co., <sup>1</sup>*4291 224 U.S. 362, 370, 56 L. Ed. 801, 32 S. Ct. 499 (1912); People of Puerto Rico v. Shell Co., 302 U.S. 253, 260-62, <sup>1</sup>**2791 82 L. Ed. 235, 58 S. Ct. 167 (1937). And the territorial body politic thus created may be endowed with attributes of sovereignty, such as nonliability to suit without its consent. People of Porto Rico. v. Rosaly Y. Castillo, 227 U.S. 270, 57 L. Ed. 507, 33 S. Ct. 352 (1913). In the Rosaly case the Supreme Court held that Congress by the Foraker Act of 1900, had conferred such sovereignty upon what was then the unincorporated territory of Puerto Rico.

....

As the Supreme Court said with respect to the Organic Act of Puerto Rico, "the purpose of Congress . . . was to follow the plan applied from the beginning to the organized territories by creating a government conforming to the American system with defined and divided powers, -- legislative, executive and judicial . . . [**19] ." People of Porto Rico v. Rosaly Y Castillo, 227 U.S. 270, 276-77, 57 L. Ed. 507, 33 S. Ct. 352 (1913).

346 U.S. at 113-14.<sup>6</sup> Although the facts of Boreham arose under the 1936 Organic Act, the court noted that its ruling would be no different under the Revised Organic Act of 1954 ["Revised Organic Act"]. Id. at 113 n.1. In fact, the reasoning of Boreham applies with even more force under the Revised Organic Act, as amended, which has established an elected governor and legislature, as well as a territorial judiciary independent of the District Court of the Virgin Islands. Revised Organic Act § 22; 48 U.S.C. § 1612.

---

<sup>6</sup> Since the Government of the Virgin Islands has an autonomy similar to that of a state, including such attributes as sovereign immunity, the statutory construction for our dual system of government is as appropriate for the Virgin Islands as it is for a state. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 at 346, 351, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943).

Under the state action [**20] immunity doctrine which the Court finds applicable to this case, WICO is only immune from liability for its action in granting an exclusive contract to VITA for the pickup of 'independent' passengers if it takes such action pursuant to a clearly articulated policy of the Virgin Islands legislature. Therefore, WICO is immune from liability under both federal and local antitrust law if the 1995 Agreement was a foreseeable result of the authority granted by the Legislature.

[**280] WICO argues that its 1995 Agreement is a foreseeable result of the Legislature's authorization for WICO to "enter into contracts with any person, firm or corporation for the operation and maintenance of the Facilities . . ." Act No. 5826, § 5. However, this legislative authorization to enter into contracts does not necessarily contemplate that WICO would enter into such an exclusive contract as the 1995 Agreement.<sup>7</sup> While at the time of the Government's purchase of the West Indian Company WICO and VITA were parties to a taxi concession agreement which regulated how passengers were to be picked up at WICO's dock, that agreement did not exclude any taxi drivers from picking up 'independent' passengers. The failure [**21] of the Legislature to include more specific language in section 5 is not necessarily to be taken as ratification of such a preexisting concession contract. Moreover, even if it were to be so taken, the general language of section 5 cannot be taken as giving advance approval of such a more restrictive contract. We thus cannot find that the type of contract at issue here, which grants VITA the exclusive right to pick up 'independent' passengers, was the type of contract that the legislature would reasonably foresee WICO would enter into. Since WICO has not met the "clearly articulated state policy" test, it is not [*430] immune from anti-trust liability under either federal or Virgin Islands law.

[**22] B. Commerce Clause Claim

In their complaint, plaintiffs also allege that WICO's actions constitute a violation of the Commerce Clause. U.S. Const. art. 1, § 8. HN11[↑] The Commerce Clause grants Congress the power "to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States [**281] . . ." While the Commerce Clause is an affirmative grant of power to Congress, it has also been interpreted as a limitation on the power of the States to impede interstate commerce. E.g., H.P. Hood & Sons, Inc. v. DuMond, 336 U.S. 525, 534-35, 93 L. Ed. 865, 69 S. Ct. 657 (1949); Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 299, 13 L. Ed. 996 (1851). The negative implications of the Commerce Clause are referred to as the 'dormant commerce clause'.

HN12[↑] Although the Commerce Clause has not been made applicable to the Virgin Islands by Congress in section 3 of the Revised Organic Act,<sup>8</sup> the limitations implied in the Commerce Clause have been held to be applicable to the Virgin Islands through the Territorial Clause. Polychrome Intern. Corp. v. Krigger, 5 F.3d 1522, 1534 (1993). The Court of Appeals noted that "Congress has comprehensive power to regulate territories under the Territorial [**23] Clause, Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, and that Congress' Commerce Clause powers 'are implicit' in that clause." Id. Accordingly, the court held that "when territorial enactments affect interstate or foreign commerce--a subject over which Congress has supreme control--those enactments must be scrutinized under Dormant Commerce Clause principles. Any other conclusion would mean that an unincorporated territory would have more power over commerce than the states possess." Id. (internal quotations and citation omitted).

<sup>7</sup> WICO cites a fifth circuit case to support its contention that the clear articulation test has been met. Independent Taxicab Drivers' v. Greater Houston Transportation, 760 F.2d 607 (1985). Independent Taxicab Drivers involved a challenge to a city's grant of an exclusive contract to one taxicab company for the transportation of passengers from the city's airport. Like WICO the city was authorized to operate the airport and "enter into contracts, leases and other arrangements . . ." Unlike WICO, however, the city was also authorized to "regulate, license and fix the charges and fares made by any person" who owns or operates taxicabs. Thus the state empowered the city with broad authority to regulate the taxicab industry and the airport. Here, WICO is simply vested with authority to enter into contracts; it is not vested with broad authority to regulate the taxicab industry.

<sup>8</sup> Such "non-fundamental" provisions of the Constitution are applicable to an unincorporated territory only to the extent Congress makes them applicable. Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 266-67, 45 L. Ed. 1088, 21 S. Ct. 770; Balzac v. Porto Rico, 258 U.S. 298, 312-13, 66 L. Ed. 627, 42 S. Ct. 343; cf. Dorr v. United States, 195 U.S. 138, 145, 149, 49 L. Ed. 128, 24 S. Ct. 808.

Applying dormant commerce clause principles to WICO's actions demonstrates that WICO has not violated the Commerce Clause.<sup>**24</sup> "The primary purpose behind the Commerce Clause is to ensure that 'our economic unit is the Nation' rather than individual states." Norfolk Southern Corp. v. Oberly, 822 F.2d 388, 399 (3d Cir. 1987) (citation omitted). HN13[<sup>13</sup>] A state action that constitutes "simple economic protectionism" and discriminates against out-of-state interests or in favor of in-state interests is subject to a heightened level of scrutiny under the Commerce Clause and is most likely to be declared unconstitutional. Id. at 399-400. However, actions [***282] which do not discriminate against, but rather have only an incidental effect on, interstate commerce, are governed by a balancing test, under which the state conduct is "invalid only if the incidental burden on interstate commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits." Id. at 399.

There is no burden on interstate commerce when the challenged action affects in-state as well as out-of-state interests equally. As the Court of Appeals stated, the "incidental burden on interstate commerce" appropriately considered in Commerce Clause balancing is the degree to which the state action incidentally discriminates against interstate [**25] commerce relative to intrastate commerce. It is a comparative measure. There conceivably is language suggesting that any increased costs imposed on out-of-state interests, in an absolute sense, are relevant burdens regardless of whether the same costs are imposed on in-state interests. However, we find that the holdings of the Supreme Court case law, consistent with the anti-protectionism purpose of the Commerce Clause, apply the much narrower comparative burden concept. As earlier noted, virtually all state regulation involves increased costs for those doing business with the state, including out-of-state interests doing business in the state as well as in-state interests. . . . Where the "burden" on out-of-state interests is no different from that placed on competing in-state interests, [**431] however, it is a burden on commerce rather than a burden on interstate commerce.

Id. at 406.

WICO's 1995 Agreement granting VITA the exclusive right to pick up 'independent' cruise-ship passengers at WICO's dock is a nondiscriminatory burden affecting all taxi operators, whether those operators are Virgin Islands businesses or not. This case is similar to one decided in Pennsylvania. [**26] Pa. Coach Lines, Inc. v. Port Authority of Allegheny, 874 F. Supp. 666 (W.D.Pa. 1994). In Pa. Coach Lines, a transportation carrier sued the port authority for granting to another company the exclusive right to transfer passengers from [***283] the airport to certain locations. The court noted that this burden affected all carriers regardless of state affiliation, and thus did not violate the commerce clause. Id. at 670. Similarly, the burden on taxi cab operators under the 1995 Agreement is a burden on all taxi cab operators regardless of whether the operators are Virgin Island operators or non-Virgin Island operators.

While the 1995 Agreement is not a burden on interstate commerce with respect to taxicab operators, it may be argued that it results in burdening interstate and foreign travelers. The court in Pa. Coach Lines noted that "even if plaintiff construed defendant's resolution [the grant of the exclusive right] as a burden on out-of-state travelers--assuming plaintiff has standing to argue this point--the burden would still be nondiscriminatory because in-state travelers would also 'suffer' from the resolution." Id. at 670 n.4. In the context of picking up cruise [**27] ship passengers, it is difficult to distinguish between intrastate and interstate commerce given that passengers' visits to St. Thomas are just one stop on interstate - even international - journeys. However, even assuming the 1995 Agreement represents a burden on interstate commerce because of the impact on interstate travelers, and assuming that plaintiffs have standing to argue such a point, that burden is not so substantial and unreasonable that it violates the Commerce Clause. There is precedent for the proposition that an exclusive agreement for the provision of taxicab services in the Virgin Islands is a substantial and unreasonable burden on interstate commerce and thus violative of the Commerce Clause. Southerland v. St. Croix Taxicab Association, 315 F.2d 364 (3d Cir. 1963). The facts of the case before us, however, differ significantly from those in Southerland and do not violate the rule of that case.

In Southerland the Government of the Virgin Islands granted one taxicab association the exclusive right to pick up passengers at the St. Croix airport. As a result, the plaintiff was prohibited from picking up passengers whom he had contracted to transport to [**28] their hotels, pursuant to a prearranged package tour. The Court of Appeals held that such an agreement unduly burdened interstate commerce and was in violation of the Commerce Clause. Significantly, the agreement between WICO and VITA does not prohibit those taxicab drivers who work for tour operators from picking up [***284] those passengers who have signed up for the tours. Indeed, the amount of business generated by pre-paid package tours constitutes a majority of the business generated by the cruise ship arrivals. Edward E. Thomas, the president and chief executive officer of WICO, testified at his deposition that the number of passengers traveling on pre-paid package tours versus passengers hiring taxi drivers independently increased from 20 percent in 1991 to over 50 percent in 1994. (Dep. Tr. at 14). Moreover, uncontradicted testimony at the preliminary injunction hearing indicated that for some ships that arrive, over 70 percent of the passengers have signed up for pre-paid tours. Edward Thomas also noted that at times taxis who waited in the feeder lines to pick up independent passengers would end up receiving no fares. This was corroborated by testimony of plaintiff's witnesses at [**29] the hearing. Accordingly, the fact that the 1995 Agreement restricts who can pick up independent passengers does not unduly burden interstate commerce under these circumstances, as a matter of law.

C. Fourteenth Amendment Claim

In plaintiffs' eighth cause of action, they allege that "the actions of WICO were and [*432] are arbitrary, capricious and unlawful, are not rationally related to any legitimate state interest and constitute a deprivation of Plaintiffs' rights to substantive and procedural due process and to equal protection of the law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment . . . ." <sup>9</sup> WICO asserts that plaintiffs should be deemed as having abandoned that claim, because plaintiffs did not argue or rely on it at the hearing on the motion for preliminary injunction. In the alternative, WICO argues that plaintiffs have not been denied any due process of law or equal protection. This Court does not agree that plaintiffs have abandoned this claim, as they do discuss it briefly in their memorandum [***285] of points and authorities in support of the motion for preliminary injunction. However, we agree with WICO that plaintiffs have not been denied any procedural or substantive due process [**30] or equal protection of the law.

1. Equal Protection Claim

Plaintiffs allege that WICO's actions represent a violation of plaintiffs' right to equal protection of the laws. HN14↑ When neither a fundamental right nor a suspect class is involved, a state's action is constitutional so long as it is rationally related to a legitimate state interest. City of New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 303, 49 L. Ed. 2d 511, 96 S. Ct. 2513 (1976). Plaintiffs do not allege either that they are a suspect class or [**31] that a fundamental right is involved.

Under this rational basis test, WICO has clearly shown that there were legitimate reasons underlying the adoption of the 1995 Agreement. Evidence presented at the preliminary injunction hearing demonstrated that, before the agreement, there were several problems with discipline and compliance with WICO's rules and regulations by the taxi cab drivers. Although the evidence did not demonstrate whether the problems were primarily caused by the non-VITA member taxi drivers or by VITA member taxi drivers, it is clear that substantial problems existed. The evidence at the hearing, as well as from Edward Thomas' deposition, indicated that since the new agreement had gone into effect until the time of the hearing, WICO had had no difficulties with taxi drivers complying with their rules and regulations. Thomas testified that since the agreement went into effect, "it is the best this dock has ever operated." (Tr. Dep. at 20.) WICO noted that tourism is vital to St. Thomas' economy and that it is therefore in the public interest to ensure that tourists have a pleasant experience when greeted by taxi drivers upon exiting the cruise ships. We agree that ensuring [**32] orderly and efficient taxi service at the cruise docks is a legitimate goal

<sup>9</sup> The second sentence of section one of the Fourteenth Amendment is applicable to the Virgin Islands. Revised Organic Act § 3; 48 U.S.C. § 1561. That sentence reads in full:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

that the 1995 Agreement is rationally related to, and thus any claim premised upon the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment must fail.

2. Substantive or Procedural Due Process

HN15 [+] In order for the plaintiffs to state a claim under the Due Process Clause, [***286] they must establish that some protected property or liberty interest is implicated by the challenged action. Plaintiffs do not specify what constitutional property or liberty interest is at stake. The only interest at issue in the complaint is plaintiffs' interest in being able to pick up 'independent' cruise ship passengers from WICO's dock. However, this interest does not rise to a constitutional right that is protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.

HN16 [+] The Fourteenth Amendment guarantees that no person may be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1. A person may acquire a property interest in a government entitlement or benefit which may not be taken away absent due process. Board of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548, 92 S. Ct. 2701 \(1972\); Molloy v. Monsanto, 30 V.I. 164, I\*\*33I 173 \(D.V.I. 1994\). Whether a benefit constitutes a property interest [*433] is a question of state or local law. 408 U.S. at 577. In this case, plaintiffs cannot point to any local law or regulation which grants them a protected right to pick up passengers at WICO's dock. Simply because it was the past practice of WICO to allow all taxi cab operators to pick up all passengers does not convert the plaintiffs' expectation that such a practice would continue into a protected property interest. As the Supreme Court in Roth noted, "to have a property interest in a benefit, a person clearly must have more than an abstract need or desire for it." Id. The plaintiffs have alleged nothing more than a desire for WICO's past practice to continue, and cannot allege that such a wish rises to the level of a property interest.

HN17 [+] Liberty interests are also protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. The opportunity to pursue one's livelihood is a constitutionally protected liberty interest that may not be arbitrarily denied. Piecknick v. Com. of Pennsylvania, 36 F.3d 1250, 1259 \(3d Cir. 1994\) ("The right to hold specific private employment and to follow a chosen profession free from unreasonable governmental [**34] interference comes within both the 'liberty' and 'property' concepts of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments."); Cowan v. Corley, 814 F.2d 223, 227 \(5th Cir. 1987\). Plaintiffs' complaint could be construed as alleging a deprivation of their liberty interest in pursuing their chosen profession.

Viewing the complaint as alleging a liberty interest and viewing the alleged facts in a light most favorable to the plaintiffs, we [***287] conclude that the 1995 Agreement does not deprive plaintiffs of their right to follow their chosen profession. As discussed above, the 1995 Agreement allows plaintiffs to pick up pre-paid tour passengers, a significant portion of taxicab business at the dock. Furthermore, the 1995 Agreement only concerns taxi service at the WICO dock and has no impact on taxicab operators' ability to pursue fares at other locations on the island. This case is similar to Piecknick where the Court of Appeals held that allowing another towing company to provide towing services in the zone previously serviced exclusively by the plaintiff was not "an unreasonable interference with [plaintiff's] right to pursue its chosen occupation." 36 F.3d at 1261. See also Durham v. Jones, I\*\*35I 698 F.2d 1179, 1181 \(11th Cir. 1983\)(per curiam)(sheriff did not affect towing company's right to operate towing service or ability to perform towing for other law enforcement agencies where it refused to place towing service on call list). "It is the liberty to pursue a particular calling or occupation and not the right to a specific job that is protected by the Fourteenth Amendment." 36 F.3d at 1262.

III. CONCLUSION

In summary, this Court finds that WICO is not immune from antitrust liability because WICO's actions cannot be said to have been taken pursuant to a clearly articulated policy of the Virgin Islands legislature and WICO's motion to dismiss Counts one through five of the plaintiff's complaint will be denied. Regarding the plaintiff's Commerce Clause claim, there are no factual issues of genuine material dispute and WICO is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. This Court will also dismiss plaintiff's eighth cause of action premised on the Fourteenth Amendment, because plaintiffs have not asserted any deprivation of any constitutionally protected property or liberty interests or denial of equal protection of the laws. Finally, this Court will deny without [**36] prejudice WICO's motion for summary judgment with respect to plaintiff's claim for "tortious interference with business relations" and for violation of the Virgin Islands bidding statute as such claims have not been fully argued or briefed.

944 F. Supp. 423, *433L 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15969, **36L 35 V.I. 269, ***287

ENTERED this 16 day of October, 1996

Thomas K. Moore

Chief Judge

[***288] ORDER

For the reasons set forth in the accompanying memorandum, it is hereby

ORDERED that WICO's motion for summary judgment as to Counts One through Five of plaintiff's complaint is DENIED; and it is further

ORDERED that WICO's motion for summary judgment as to Count Seven (Violation of the Commerce Clause) is GRANTED; and it is further

ORDERED that WICO's motion to dismiss Count Eight (Violation of Fourteenth Amendment) is hereby GRANTED; and it is further ORDERED that WICO's motion for summary judgment as to Count Six (Tortious Interference with Business Relations) and Count Nine (Violation of 31 V.I.C. § 235) is DENIED without prejudice.

ENTERED this 16th day of October, 1996

Thomas K. Moore

Chief Judge

---

End of Document

Duke v. Browning-Ferris Indus.

United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division

October 22, 1996, Decided ; October 22, 1996, FILED; October 23, 1996, entered on docket

NO. 96-2859-TUA

Reporter

1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20769 *; 1996 WL 33415134

JERRY DUKE, doing business as MOSCOW MANOR APARTMENTS, on behalf of itself and all other entities similarly situated in the Counties of Shelby and Fayette, in the State of Tennessee; and in the Counties of DeSoto, Tate, and Tunica, in the State of Mississippi, Plaintiff, VS. BROWNING-FERRIS INDUSTRIES OF TENNESSEE, INC. and BROWNING-FERRIS INDUSTRIES, INC., Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Plaintiff's Motion for Remand of Proceedings to State Court granted and action remanded.

Core Terms

---

interstate commerce, antitrust, Sherman Act, intrastate, federal claim, predominantly, interstate, alleges, garbage

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > Federal Questions

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions

HN1[] Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

28 U.S.C.S. § 1441(b) provides that any civil action of which the district courts have original jurisdiction founded on a claim or right arising under the Constitution, treaties or laws of the United States shall be removable without regard to the citizenship or residence of the parties. The "arising under" language requires that the federal question be present on the face of a plaintiff's complaint and not as a defense raised by defendants or anticipated by plaintiff. This "well-pleaded complaint" rule applies to determinations of removal jurisdiction as well as to determinations of original federal question jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > Substantial Questions

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > Well Pleaded Complaint Rule

HN2 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

An exception to the well pleaded complaint rule exists when plaintiffs "artificially plead" their complaint in order to avoid federal jurisdiction of claims that are federal in nature. If it appears that some substantial, disputed question of federal law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded state claims or if plaintiff's claim is really one of federal law, then the matter is properly in federal court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act encompasses far more than restraints on trade that are motivated by a desire to limit interstate commerce or that have their sole impact on interstate commerce. Wholly local business restraints can produce the effects condemned by the Sherman Act. There are two established tests for interstate commerce. First, the interstate commerce element of the Sherman Act is established if the product market itself is interstate in nature. However, even if this "in commerce" test is not met, a claim can still fall under the Sherman Act if a local business substantially affects interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The mere existence of a multi-state market for what otherwise appear to be local activities does not suffice to establish per se the interstate nexus which is a necessary factor of a federal court's subject matter jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

HN5 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

Defendants who seek to force a plaintiff from his state claim to a federal claim bear the burden of establishing their right to remove.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

HN6 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

The fact that a plaintiff has both state and federal remedies does not mean that he must state his federal claim.

Counsel: For JERRY DUKE, Jerry Duke, doing business as Moscow Manor Apartments, on behalf of itself and all other entities similarly situated in the Counties of Shelby and Fayette, in the State of Tennessee; and in the Counties of DeSoto, Tate and Tunica, in the State of Mississippi dba Moscow Manor Apartments: James F. Goodwin, WILDR CRONE JOHNSTON MASON & GOODWIN, Somerville, TN. Andrew S. Johnston, Esq., JOHN S. WILDER & ASSOCIATES, Somerville, TN. Steve W. Berman, Esq., George Sampson, HAGENS & GERMAN, Seattle, WA. Michael Hausfeld, Gary Mason, COHEN MILSTEIN HAUSFELD & TOLL, Washington, DC. Gordon Ball, BALL LAW FIRM, Knowville, TN. Don Barrett, BARRETT LAW FIRM, Lexington, MS. Patrick Pendley, PENDLEY LAW FIRM, Plaquemine, LA. Howard Sedran, LEVINE FISHBEIN SEDRAN & BENNAN, Philadelphia, PA.

For BROWNING-FERRIS INDUSTRIES OF TENNESSEE, INC., BROWNING-FERRIS INDUSTRIES, INC., defendants: Michael F. Rafferty, Esq., James R. Garts, Jr., Esq., HARRIS SHELTON DUNLAP & COBB, Memphis, TN. Stephen D. Susman, Vineet Ghatia, SUSMAN GODREY, L.L.P., Houston, TX.

Judges: JEROME TURNER, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: JEROME TURNER

Opinion

---

ORDER ON PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO REMAND

Plaintiff filed this class action in the Tennessee Circuit Court for Fayette County alleging defendants violated the antitrust laws of Tennessee.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff received a dual-state class certification from the Tennessee Circuit Court. On August 13, 1996, defendants removed the claim to this court. Plaintiff now moves this court to remand these proceedings to the Circuit Court. Plaintiff claims that the complaint alleges only violations of state laws and that, therefore, this court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the case. Defendants, however, assert that while plaintiff's claim does not specifically indicate that he is suing under federal antitrust law, the claim is really a disguised complaint under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Thus, this action invokes federal question jurisdiction and this court may properly hear the case.

---

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff also alleges that defendants violated the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act, breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing, unjust enrichment, and Mississippi laws.

[*2] I. Facts

This action was filed by Jerry Duke, a Tennessee resident, doing business as Moscow Manor Apartments against Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc. ("BFI") and Browning-Ferris of Tennessee, Inc. ("BFIT") for alleged violations of Tennessee and Mississippi antitrust laws.<sup>2</sup> BFIT is a waste-hauling company incorporated in Tennessee with its principal place of business in Tennessee. BFIT is engaged in waste-hauling in the Memphis market, which plaintiff has defined as Shelby and Fayette Counties of Tennessee and DeSoto, Tate, and Tunica Counties of Mississippi. One of the services BFIT provides is small containerized solid waste hauling. Small containerized solid waste hauling is a service used by apartment buildings and small businesses whereby trash is placed into receptacles of one to ten cubic meters for collection and disposal by the waste hauling company.

[*3] BFIT entered into contracts with several clients in the Memphis market. BFIT generally used the same contract with all its clients which required an initial contract term of three years, automatic renewal terms of three years unless BFIT was given six months notice, and a liquidated damages clause equalling the most recent monthly charge times six or the number of months remaining on the contract if less than six months remained.

The United States brought an action against BFI, BFIT, and another BFI subsidiary charging that the defendants had violated federal antitrust laws by engaging in anti-competitive behavior designed to acquire and maintain monopoly power in the Memphis market and to shutout any competitors. On February 15, 1996, the United States and BFI (including its subsidiaries) entered into a consent final judgment which enjoined BFI from using the aforementioned contracts and required BFI to set initial terms and renewal terms of no more than two years with substantially less liquidated damages. The Competitive Impact Statement filed with the final judgment provided that it neither helps nor hinders private parties who bring subsequent actions against BFI.

Plaintiff, [*4] who had entered into a contract with BFI, then filed this action on behalf of himself and any other persons in Shelby and Fayette Counties of Tennessee and DeSoto, Tate, and Tunica Counties of Mississippi, who are similarly situated. The action was originally filed in the Circuit Court of Tennessee for the Twenty-Fifth Judicial District at Somerville. The Circuit Court judge certified the class based on documents filed with the complaint. Defendants removed the action to this court based on federal question jurisdiction. Plaintiff then filed a motion to remand this proceeding to state court. Oral arguments were heard on this motion on September 25, 1996.

II. Removal Jurisdiction and the Well-Pleaded Complaint Rule

HN1 [↑] 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(b\) provides that "any civil action of which the district courts have original jurisdiction founded on a claim or right arising under the Constitution, treaties or laws of the United States shall be removable without regard to the citizenship or residence of the parties." The Supreme Court has interpreted this "arising under" language as requiring that the federal question be present on the face of a plaintiff's complaint and not as a defense raised [*5] by defendants or anticipated by plaintiff. Louisville & N.R. Co. v. Mottley, 211 U.S. 149, 153-54, 53 L.Ed. 126, 29 S.Ct. 42 \(1908\). This "well-pleaded complaint" rule applies to determinations of removal jurisdiction as well as to determinations of original federal question jurisdiction. Franchise Tax Board v. Contr. Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 10, 77 L.Ed. 2d 420, 103 S.Ct. 2841 \(1983\).

III. Artful Pleading Exception

The Supreme Court has adopted an exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule which permits a defendant to remove a case if the real nature of the claim is federal, regardless of the law under which the plaintiff alleges the claim arises. Federated Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 397 n.2, 69 L.Ed. 2d 103, 101 S.Ct. 2424 \(1981\); Striff v. Mason, 849 F.2d 240 \(6th Cir. 1988\) (finding a claim was actually federal because it challenged a promotion scheme implemented through settlement of a federal claim). The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals explained this exception in Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of Ontario v. City of Detroit, 874 F.2d 332, 339 (6th Cir. 1989):

---

<sup>2</sup>BFI is a Delaware holding company of BFIT and other subsidiary companies with its principal place of business in Texas. Plaintiff has acknowledged that BFIT is the principal defendant.

HN2[↑] An exception to the well pleaded [*6] complaint rule exists when plaintiffs 'artificially plead' their complaint in order to avoid federal jurisdiction of claims that are federal in nature. . . . If it appears 'that some substantial, disputed question of federal law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded state claims' or if plaintiff's claim is 'really one of federal law,' then the matter is properly in federal court.

(citations omitted). The Supreme Court implicitly applied this exception in Avco Corp. v. Aero Lodge Int'l Assoc. of Machinists & Aerospace Workers, 390 U.S. 557, 560, 20 L. Ed. 2d 126, 88 S. Ct. 1235 (1968). In that case, the Supreme Court denied a plaintiff's motion to remand a case seeking an injunction under state law to prevent a union from striking. The Court found that the action actually arose under the Labor Management Relations Act, and the district court had therefore properly exercised jurisdiction over the case.

V. Applicable Antitrust Statutes

In the present case, the complaint alleges that "defendants have engaged in anti-competitive conduct, and have willfully acquired or maintained, and/or attempted to acquire and maintain, monopoly power in the Memphis market." (Compl. P 2). Plaintiff asserts [*7] this antitrust claim under Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 and Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-9. The claim is essentially the same as the one the United States filed against defendants in a separate action under Section 2 of the Sherman Act.<sup>3</sup> United States v. Browning-Ferris Indus. of Iowa, Inc., Civil Action No. 96-CV-00297 (D.D.C. 1996).<sup>4</sup> The main distinction between claims under the Tennessee and the federal statutes is that the Sherman Act prohibits monopolization in interstate commerce, while the Tennessee statute only applies if the action is predominantly intrastate. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 225, 91 L. Ed. 2d 1010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 (1947) (explaining that some interstate commerce must be present for the Sherman Act to apply); Valley Products Co., Inc. v. Landmark, 877 F. Supp. 1087, 1094-95 (W.D. Tenn. 1994) (holding that the Tennessee antitrust statute pertains to transactions that are predominantly intrastate); Lynch Display v. Nat'l Souvenir Center, 640 S.W.2d 837 (Tenn. App. 1982) (holding that the Tennessee antitrust statute applied to transactions that were predominantly, but not necessarily exclusively, intrastate). Hence, this court, [*8] in determining if plaintiff has pleaded a cause of action under the Sherman Act rather than the Tennessee antitrust statute, must decide if the complaint alleges monopolization in interstate or predominantly intrastate commerce.

IV. Monopolization

In Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Rex Hosp. Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976), the Supreme Court addressed the issue of the necessary nexus to interstate commerce that a plaintiff must allege to establish a claim under the Sherman Act. The court stated, "it is settled that HN3[↑] the Act encompasses far more than restraints on trade that are motivated by a desire [*9] to limit interstate commerce or that have their sole impact on interstate commerce. 'Wholly local business restraints can produce the effects condemned by the Sherman Act.'" Id. at 743 (quoting United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 98 L. Ed. 618, 74 S. Ct. 452 (1954)).

The Hospital Bldg. case established two tests for interstate commerce. First, the interstate commerce element of the Sherman Act is established if the product market itself is interstate in nature. Id.; McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 241-42, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980). However, even if this "in commerce" test is not met, a claim can still fall under the Sherman Act if a local business substantially affects interstate commerce. Hospital Bldg., 425 U.S. at 743; McClain, 444 U.S. at 242; United States v. Women's Sportswear Ass'n,

<sup>3</sup> Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, . . ."

<sup>4</sup> This action was ended by a consent injunctive decree and it does not appear that federal jurisdiction (interstate commerce) was questioned.

336 U.S. 460, 464, 93 L. Ed. 805, 69 S. Ct. 714 (1949) ("If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze.")

The Seventh Circuit, facing a case factually similar to the one before this court, found both of these tests were met for purposes [*10] of defendant's motion for summary judgment. Tiger Trash v. Browning-Ferris Indus., Inc., 560 F.2d 818, 825 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1034, 54 L. Ed. 2d 782, 98 S. Ct. 768 (1978). Tiger Trash involved Browning-Ferris Industries of Indiana ("BFII"), another subsidiary of Browning-Ferris, Inc., which operated in a market area encompassing Evansville, Indiana and Henderson, Kentucky. The court found that plaintiff's claim had sufficiently alleged that BFII had engaged in a monopoly affecting interstate commerce and: "At this state, plaintiff has adequately charged that a sufficient part of interstate commerce, namely the Evansville-Henderson market for refuse disposal, was affected." Id. 560 F.2d at 826. The court pointed out that BFII was an Indiana company collecting garbage in Kentucky, using garbage trucks in Kentucky, and having clients in Kentucky as well as Indiana. Id. at 825. Similarly, BFIT is a Tennessee company which collects garbage in Mississippi, uses garbage trucks in Mississippi, and has clients in Mississippi as well as Tennessee.

Duke's complaint has, however, been drawn with a clear purpose to avoid asserting a federal cause of action. There [*11] are no facts alleged to show that BFIT engaged in commerce, not that its activities affected commerce. Nor does the record otherwise reflect how the collection and disposal of garbage, be it in Tennessee or Mississippi, affects interstate commerce. On the other hand, it is arguable that such intrastate collection and disposal of garbage is predominantly intrastate activity.

It is true that plaintiff asserts a geographic market composed of two states and alleges that it was this multi-state market where the attempted monopolization has occurred. But HN4[↑] the mere existence of a multi-state market for what otherwise appear to be local activities does not suffice to establish per se the interstate nexus which is a necessary factor of this court's subject matter jurisdiction. But see Id. at 824.

The mere fact that plaintiff might have otherwise chosen to prove an interstate nexus relative to the alleged monopoly does not mean that he must do so. Like most, plaintiff is entitled to limit his claim to predominantly intrastate activity and cannot be forced to pursue a federal claim based on interstate activity.<sup>5</sup>

[*12] This is not a case where plaintiff's allegations of an interstate nexus are being tested for sufficiency. It is one in which HN5[↑] defendants, who seek to force plaintiff from his state claim to a federal claim, bear the burden of establishing their right to remove. Her Majesty the Queen v. City of Detroit, 874 F.2d at 339. To do so they must at least establish that plaintiff does not have a state antitrust claim but only a federal claim. But if this is so, then plaintiff suffers the peril of dismissal in the state court.

It is not enough to show that plaintiff has both claims. As noted by Judges Milburn and Jordan: HN6[↑] "The fact that a plaintiff has both state and federal remedies does not mean that he must state his federal claim." Magic Chef, Inc. v. Int'l Molders & Allied Workers Union, 581 F. Supp. 772, 776 (E.D. Tenn. 1983); Blake v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., 894 F. Supp. 327 (E.D. Tenn. 1995).

The court concludes that defendants have failed to establish that the claim asserted by plaintiff is a federal claim subject to the jurisdiction of this court.

For these reasons, the Plaintiff's Motion for Remand of Proceedings to State Court is granted and this action is remanded [*13] to the Circuit Court of Tennessee for the Twenty-Fifth Judicial District at Somerville.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 22nd day of October, 1996.

JEROME TURNER

---

<sup>5</sup> Indeed, if plaintiff is unable to establish the necessary predominantly intrastate activity there is no basis for a state antitrust claim.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Cost Mgmt. Servs. v. Washington Natural Gas Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

August 8, 1996, Argued, Submitted, Seattle, Washington ; November 7, 1996, Filed

No. 95-35566

Reporter

99 F.3d 937 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 29016 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,613; 96 Cal. Daily Op. Service 8111; 96 Daily Journal DAR 13466

COST MANAGEMENT SERVICES, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. WASHINGTON NATURAL GAS COMPANY, Defendant-Appellee.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington. D.C. No. CV-94-01318-CRD. Carolyn R. Dimmick, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: REVERSED and REMANDED.

Core Terms

---

pricing, tariff, customers, competitors, antitrust, rates, monopoly, monopolize, regulated, off-tariff, predatory, Sherman Act, shipper, monopoly power, leveraging, district court, anti trust law, market share, suits, Concrete, allegations, anticompetitive, supervision, argues, Interstate, Commerce, damages, anticompetitive conduct, motion to dismiss, delivery

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN1 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action immunity doctrine exempts qualifying state and local government regulation from federal antitrust, even if the regulation at issue compels an otherwise clear violation of the federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

**HN2** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Courts apply a two-part test when determining whether alleged anticompetitive conduct is immunized under the state action immunity doctrine. A state law or regulatory scheme cannot be the basis for antitrust immunity unless, first, the state has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the state provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

**HN3** Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

An anti-competitive practice embodied in a tariff may violate the antitrust laws if it impacts upon competitors as opposed to customers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

**HN4** Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

Activities which come under the jurisdiction of a regulatory agency may be subject to scrutiny under the antitrust laws.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN5** Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

When there is a basis for judicial action, independent of agency proceedings, courts may route the threshold decision as to certain issues to the agency charged with primary responsibility for governmental supervision or control of the particular industry or activity involved under the doctrine of primary jurisdiction. The doctrine applies when protection of the integrity of a regulatory scheme dictates preliminary resort to the agency which administers the scheme.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN6** Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 provides that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce, commits a felony. In order to state a claim for monopolization under this provision, a plaintiff must prove that: (1) the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) the defendant has willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) the defendant's conduct has caused antitrust injury. In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must prove: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), an antitrust complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To show antitrust injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition. If the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury, even if the defendant's conduct is illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN9 Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the predator's high price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

If there is a dangerous probability that a monopoly will be created by leveraging conduct, then the conduct will be reached under the doctrine of attempted monopoly.

Counsel: Paul R. Taylor, Byrnes & Keller, Seattle, Washington, for the plaintiff-appellant.

Howard A. Coleman, Riddell, Williams, Bullitt & Walkinshaw, Seattle, Washington, for the defendant-appellee.

Judges: Before: William A. Norris and Diarmuid F. O'Scannlain, Circuit Judges; William D. Browning, * District Judge. Opinion by Judge O'Scannlain.

Opinion by: O'SCANNLAIN

Opinion

---

[*940] OPINION

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge:

In this action brought under the Sherman Act by an unregulated competitor against a natural gas distributor, we must explore the interplay between state public utility regulation and federal antitrust law.

I

Cost Management Services, Inc. ("CMS") is a Seattle-based company that purchases natural gas on the open market and sells it to various commercial and industrial consumers. In the trade area in which CMS sells gas, Washington Natural Gas Company ("WNG") owns the only delivery [*2] facilities capable of transporting gas from the interstate pipeline to end users. Accordingly, customers who buy gas from CMS must obtain delivery of that gas through WNG's delivery facilities. WNG charges those customers, who are known as "transporters," a "transport charge" for the use of its facilities. Customers who purchase gas from WNG are known as "system sales" customers.

WNG is subject to regulation by the Washington Utilities and Transportation Commission ("WUTC"). The WUTC has approved two tariffs which are relevant to this case.<sup>1</sup> The first, Tariff 57, applies when customers purchase gas from a source other than WNG. According to CMS, Tariff 57 dictates the terms and conditions which WNG must follow when it charges CMS's customers for the use of WNG's delivery facilities. The second tariff, Tariff 87, applies when system sales customers purchase gas directly from WNG. CMS alleges that a customer's actual or anticipated gas usage must meet a particular minimum volume threshold in order to be eligible for the pricing set forth in Tariff 87.

[**3] In September 1994, CMS filed a complaint against WNG in federal district court alleging that in the relevant market for sale of gas, WNG has a market share of over 90 percent. The complaint also alleged that WNG has engaged in a variety of practices in an attempt to monopolize that market, and that WNG has indeed monopolized that market.<sup>2</sup> In particular, the complaint sought recovery based on four alleged violations of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1994).

First, CMS alleged that WNG has violated Tariff 87 by offering gas at the apparently low rates specified in that tariff to customers who do not meet the mandatory minimum volume requirements in the tariff. CMS alleged that WNG's "off-tariff pricing" has made it impossible for others to compete for the sale of gas to those [*4] particular customers, and that competition in the market has been injured as a result.

---

* The Honorable William D. Browning, United States District Judge for the District of Arizona, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup> "A 'tariff' is a document that a regulated firm files with its regulatory agency, requesting that it be required to charge certain prices, offer certain prices, offer certain packages of services, have certain policies respecting treatment of customers, and the like. Once the tariff has been approved by the agency, the firm is legally obliged to follow the tariff." H. Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy: The Law of Competition and its Practice § 20.3 at 677 n.5 (West 1994).

<sup>2</sup> The complaint alleges that the "relevant market" includes "a geographic area extending from approximately Everett, Washington, to the north, to Chehalis, Washington, to the south, and east as far as Monroe, Washington."

Second, CMS alleged that WNG has engaged in what CMS calls "monopoly leveraging." More specifically, CMS alleged that WNG has used its monopoly over gas delivery facilities in an unlawful attempt to monopolize the market for gas sales.<sup>3</sup> CMS claimed that WNG has enhanced its monopoly over gas sales by including anticompetitive provisions in Tariff 57 which are designed to make it economically inefficient for consumers to purchase gas from anyone other than WNG. CMS alleges, for example, that WNG has forced customers who purchase gas from sellers other than WNG to install expensive telemetry equipment which monitors the customer's gas usage. Customers who purchase gas from WNG are not required to install similar equipment. In addition, CMS alleges that customers who purchase gas from sellers other than WNG must pay a monthly customer charge and are subject to a minimum monthly bill, while customers who purchase [*941] gas from WNG pay no customer charge and a lower monthly minimum. CMS alleges that WNG has "no valid business reason" for including these provisions in the tariff. CMS further argues that [**5] WNG was able to obtain WUTC approval for the tariff only by repeatedly refusing to provide the WUTC with critical documents which CMS alleges that the WUTC admitted it needed in order to make an intelligent decision on whether to approve the tariff.

Third, CMS alleged that WNG violated Tariff 57 in an attempt to encourage customers not to purchase gas from CMS. More specifically, CMS alleged that under the express provisions of Tariff 57, customers who desired to convert from "system sales" (purchasing gas from WNG) to "transport sales" (purchasing gas from CMS) were only allowed to do so on October 1, 1994, and were required to commit to purchasing transport services from WNG for a period of one year. According to CMS, customers wishing to convert were required to notify WNG in writing no later than July 1, 1994. On June 28, 1994, CMS provided WNG with a list of customers who wished to convert. CMS alleged that immediately thereafter, WNG extended the [**6] switching deadline from July 1, 1994, to August 1, 1994, and then attempted to persuade customers who had given notice of their intent to convert to remain with WNG.

Fourth and finally, CMS alleged that WNG has interfered with CMS's relationship with its customers. In particular, CMS alleged that certain customers have agreed to purchase gas from CMS and have asked CMS to represent them in their dealings with WNG, but that WNG has unlawfully refused to permit the customers to be represented by CMS. CMS alleged that this conduct constituted an additional attempt by WNG to eliminate competition.<sup>4</sup>

WNG moved to dismiss CMS's Sherman Act claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). WNG contended that (1) CMS had failed to allege the elements of an antitrust violation, (2) the state action immunity doctrine was a bar to the claims, [**7] (3) the "filed tariff" or Keogh doctrine was a bar to the claims, and (4) the claims were barred under the doctrine of primary jurisdiction. In May 1995, the district court entered an order which granted WNG's motion. The court found that CMS's antitrust claims were barred by the state action immunity doctrine, but did not address WNG's remaining contentions. The court also dismissed CMS's state law claims without prejudice. CMS timely appealed.

II

CMS first argues that the district court erred by finding that its claims were barred by HN1 the "state action immunity" doctrine. This doctrine, which originated in the Supreme Court's opinion in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943), "exempts qualifying state and local government regulation from federal antitrust, even if the regulation at issue compels an otherwise clear violation of the federal antitrust laws." H. Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy: The Law of Competition and its Practice § 20.2, at 673 (West 1994) (hereinafter "Federal Antitrust Policy"). The doctrine is based on principles of federalism, and on judicial recognition of the fact that "continued enforcement of the national antitrust policy grants the States [**8] more freedom, not less, in deciding whether to subject discrete parts of the economy to additional regulations and controls." F.T.C. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 632, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992). However, a broad interpretation of the doctrine may inadvertently extend immunity to anticompetitive activity which the states did not intend to sanction. Because of a concern that a broad application of the doctrine will thus impede states' freedom by threatening to hold them accountable for private activity they do not condone "whenever they enter the realm of economic regulation," the doctrine is said to be "disfavored." Id. at 635-36.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> WNG concedes that it has a monopoly over gas delivery.

<sup>4</sup> Neither the district court's order nor any of the parties' appellate briefs discusses the latter two of CMS's four theories. Accordingly, we will not reach the merits of those allegations.

[*942] In California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980), the Supreme Court outlined HN2↑ a two-part test which courts must apply when determining whether alleged anticompetitive conduct is immunized under the doctrine. As recently [**9] described by the Court in its decision in Ticor Title, supra, under the Midcal test

[a] state law or regulatory scheme cannot be the basis for antitrust immunity unless, first, the State has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the State provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors.

Ticor Title, 504 U.S. at 631 (citing Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105); see also Columbia Steel Casting Co., Inc. v. Portland Gen. Elec. Co., 60 F.3d 1390, 1395 (9th Cir. 1995) (applying Midcal test).

The district court concluded that CMS's claims were barred under this test. First, quoting Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985), the court stated that in order to satisfy the first prong of the test, WNG must show only that Washington "clearly intends to displace competition in [the market for sale of natural gas] with a regulatory structure." Id. at 64. The court concluded that this requirement was satisfied with respect to CMS's Tariff 57 "monopoly leveraging" claim, because "the Washington statutory scheme displaces pure [**10] competition in sale of natural gas with a regulatory structure." The court also concluded that Midcal's "active supervision" requirement was satisfied with respect to this claim, because "the record amply demonstrates that the WUTC was actively involved in setting Tariff 57." With respect to CMS's off-tariff pricing claim, the court concluded that the first prong of the Midcal test was satisfied because "the WUTC is empowered to set and police pricing, including off-tariff violations." (Emphasis added). The court did not explicitly discuss whether the "active supervision" requirement was satisfied with respect to CMS's off-tariff pricing claim.

For a number of reasons, we conclude that the district court erred. First, although the court properly quoted Southern Motor Carriers, the court misapplied the first prong of the Midcal test. As noted above, the Supreme Court clarified in Ticor Title that this prong is satisfied if a plaintiff establishes that "the State has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct . . ." Ticor Title, 504 U.S. at 631 (emphasis added); see also id. at 627 ("state-action immunity . . . [**11] . permits anticompetitive conduct if authorized and supervised by state officials") (emphasis added). Accordingly, the fact that Washington may have displaced competition in the market for sale of natural gas with a regulatory structure is not dispositive. Rather, the relevant question is whether the regulatory structure which has been adopted by the state has specifically authorized the conduct alleged to violate the Sherman Act. As applied to CMS's off-tariff pricing claim, the first prong of the Midcal test will thus be satisfied only if WNG can establish either that (1) it did not participate in off-tariff pricing, or that (2) off-tariff pricing is legal under Washington's regulatory scheme. Because this case arises on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), WNG cannot make the former showing here. In addition, CMS's allegation that off-tariff pricing is illegal under Washington law is supported by a state statute which provides in relevant part that no gas company . . . shall charge, demand, collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for any service rendered or to be rendered than the rates and charges applicable to such service as specified [**12] in its schedule filed and in effect at the time . . . .

Wash. Rev. Code § 80.28.080 (1991). Moreover, the district court's conclusion that the first prong of the Midcal test was satisfied because "the WUTC is empowered to set and police pricing, including off-tariff violations," misses the point. If, as the district court suggested, off-tariff pricing is a violation of Washington law, then WNG's alleged conduct simply would not be protected by the state action immunity doctrine. Accordingly, the [*943] court erred in dismissing the off-tariff pricing claim on that ground.

---

<sup>5</sup> For a comprehensive discussion of the state action immunity doctrine, see Federal Antitrust Policy, supra at §§ 20.1 - 20.8.

The district court also erred in applying Midcal's "active supervision" requirement to CMS's Tariff 57 "monopoly leveraging" claim. In Ticor Title, the Supreme Court explained that the purpose of the active supervision inquiry is not to determine whether the State has met some normative standard, such as efficiency, in its regulatory practices. Its purpose is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among [**13] private parties. Much as in causation inquiries, the analysis asks whether the State has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy. The question is not how well state regulation works but whether the anticompetitive scheme is the State's own.

Ticor Title, 504 U.S. at 634-35. Furthermore, "the mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the State." Id.

As should be clear from this discussion, the question of whether a state has "actively supervised" a state regulatory policy is a factual one which is inappropriately resolved in the context of a motion to dismiss. CMS has argued that the WUTC approved Tariff 57 only because WNG deliberately withheld key information from the WUTC which the WUTC repeatedly requested and which the WUTC admitted it needed in order to make an informed decision on whether to approve the tariff. The district court was required to accept CMS's allegation as true. In addition, if CMS is able to prove its allegations, then the state action immunity doctrine almost certainly would not preclude its claim based on Tariff 57. See Ticor Title, 504 U.S. at 638 (finding [**14] that Montana had failed adequately to supervise its state regulatory policy because "a rate filing became effective despite the failure of the rating bureau to provide additional requested information").

Accordingly, we hold that the court erred in dismissing CMS's claims on the ground of state action immunity.<sup>6</sup>

III

WNG next urges us to affirm the district court on the ground that the "filed tariff" or Keogh doctrine precludes CMS's claims. The Keogh doctrine stems from Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922).<sup>7</sup>

[**15] In Keogh, a private shipper claimed that rates which had been submitted to and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission ("ICC") under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Act ("ICA") had been fixed pursuant to a conspiracy prohibited by the Sherman Act. The shipper alleged that because of the conspiracy, the rates were "higher than the rates would have been, if competition had not been thus eliminated." 260 U.S. at 160. The shipper sought damages based on the difference between the rates established pursuant to the agreement and the rates previously in effect. Id.

The defendants argued that approval of the rates by the ICC conclusively established [*944] that the rates were "reasonable and nondiscriminatory," id. at 161, and the Court agreed. The Court noted that the ICC approval "did not foreclose the possibility that slightly lower rates would also have been within the zone of reasonableness that the Commission would also have found lawful," *Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc.*, 476 U.S. 409, 415, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 \(1986\) (describing Keogh), nor did it "require rejection of Keogh's contention that the combination among the railroads violated the Sherman Act." [**16] Id. Nonetheless, the Court held that Keogh could not "recover damages under [the Sherman Act] because he lost the benefits of rates still lower, which, but for the conspiracy, he would have enjoyed." *Keogh*, 260 U.S. at 162.

<sup>6</sup> WNG urged this court that Tanner Elec. v. Puget Sound Power & Light, 128 Wash. 2d 656, 911 P.2d 1301 (Wash. 1996) was controlling with respect to the preeminence of regulatory law. In light of our conclusion on the applicability of the state action immunity doctrine, we need not consider that case on these facts.

<sup>7</sup> The phrase "Keogh doctrine" is usually applied in cases involving rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, whereas the "filed rate doctrine" applies more broadly to cases involving rates filed with any regulatory body. See, e.g., Lifschultz Fast Freight, Inc. v. Consolidated Freightways Corp. of Delaware, 805 F. Supp. 1277, 1294 n.32 (D.S.C. 1992), aff'd, 998 F.2d 1009 (4th Cir. July 6, 1993) (unpublished disposition), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 993, 126 L. Ed. 2d 454, 114 S. Ct. 553 (1993). However, we have also applied the "Keogh doctrine" in cases involving state regulatory agencies. See, e.g. Brown v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 982 F.2d 386, 393-94 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. granted, 510 U.S. 810, 114 S. Ct. 56, 126 L. Ed. 2d 26 (1993), cert. dismissed as improvidently granted, 511 U.S. 117, 114 S. Ct. 1359, 128 L. Ed. 2d 33 (1994). Accordingly, we will use the terms "Keogh doctrine" and "filed tariff doctrine" interchangeably.

The Court offered four rationales for its holding. First, the Court noted that under the ICA, shippers who had been injured by illegally filed rates had a right to recover their actual damages in proceedings before the ICC. *Id. at 162-63*. Because damages were available in an ICC proceeding, the Court doubted that Congress intended to provide a duplicative remedy in the Sherman Act. Id. Second, the Court concluded that granting an antitrust damages remedy only to those shippers who chose to sue would result in an arbitrary and discriminatory rate structure, because the successful litigant would receive a lower effective rate than other shippers. The Court concluded that this would conflict with "the paramount purpose of Congress - prevention of unjust discrimination." *Id. at 163*. Third, the Court noted that a damage recovery would require a showing that a hypothetical lower rate should and would have been adopted by the ICC. Whether or not [**17] the agency would have actually approved a different rate was a question best left to the agency itself, rather than the courts. *Id. at 163-64*. Fourth and finally, the Court explained that individual shippers would not be injured by the illegal rate, because if the rate applied to all of the shipper's competitors, the increase in the rate would simply be passed on to the shippers' customers. *Id. at 164-65*.

The Keogh doctrine has been vigorously criticized by a number of leading observers. Professor Hovenkamp, for one, has argued that "none of these arguments had much to be said for them at the time they were originally made, and they are even less sensible today." Federal Antitrust Policy, supra § 19.6 at 660; see also P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, *Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application* Par. 227.2a, at 267-69 (Supp. 1994) (arguing that modern legal developments have undermined rationales for Keogh doctrine). Similar considerations dominated Judge Friendly's opinion for the Second Circuit in *Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc.*, 760 F.2d 1347 (2d Cir.), cert. granted, 474 U.S. 815, 106 S. Ct. 57, 88 L. Ed. 2d 47 (1985), aff'd, [*476* \[\*\*18\] *U.S. 409, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 \(1986\)*](#). In an opinion which the Supreme Court subsequently praised as "characteristically thoughtful and incisive," *Square D Co., supra, 476 U.S. at 423*, Judge Friendly effectively invited the Supreme Court to overturn Keogh. He noted that each of the rationales which may have justified the Keogh rule in 1922 had been undermined by subsequent legal developments. More specifically, he noted that under current law, antitrust damage remedies are available in spite of the fact that similar remedies are also available under other federal statutes. *Square D*, 760 F.2d at 1353-54. Accordingly, the Court's earlier conclusion that Congress did not intend to provide for duplicative remedies seemed mistaken. Second, the Court's concerns about possible rate discrimination which might result if only certain shippers decided to sue was undermined by the emergence of modern class actions. *Id. at 1352*. In addition, Judge Friendly explained that "the fear that recovery of antitrust damages would operate 'like a rebate' to produce discrimination among shippers ignores the difference between a carrier's passing money under the table to a favored shipper and a court's deciding [**19] that a shipper had suffered antitrust injury." Id.

Third, Judge Friendly noted that concern that "an antitrust action would require the carrier to prove that a hypothetical lower rate conformed to the requirements of the [**45] ICA" was no longer compelling in light of the fact that "the process in which the ICC would have to engage if a court requested it to determine whether lower rates procured by competition would be reasonable and non-discriminatory does not differ in essence from that which it must undertake" in other antitrust actions. Id. Fourth and finally, Judge Friendly noted that the Keogh Court's concern that "'no court or jury could say that, if the rate had been lower, [the shipper] would have enjoyed the difference,' since the benefit 'might have gone to his customers,'" *id. at 1353* (quoting *Keogh*, 260 U.S. at 165), was no longer valid in light of subsequent decisions in which the Court had "rejected the argument that a plaintiff cannot recover damages it was able to pass on to its customers in the antitrust context." Id. (citations omitted).

The Supreme Court ultimately declined Judge Friendly's invitation to overrule Keogh. See Square D, Inc., [\[\*20\] 476 U.S. at 417-24](#).<sup>8</sup> However, the Court did not directly challenge the validity of his observations. Instead, the Court "assumed that petitioners are correct in arguing that the Keogh decision was unwise as a matter of policy," id. at 420, but nonetheless affirmed on grounds of stare decisis. The Court explained that the developments in the six decades since Keogh was decided are insufficient to overcome the strong presumption of continued validity that adheres in the judicial interpretation of a statute. As Justice Brandeis himself observed, a decade after his Keogh decision, in commenting on the presumption of stability in statutory interpretation: "Stare decisis is usually the wise policy because in most matters, it is more important that the applicable rule of law be settled than that it be settled right. . . ." We are especially reluctant to reject this presumption in an area that has seen careful, intense, and sustained congressional attention. If there is to be an overruling of the Keogh rule, it must come from Congress, rather than from this Court.

Id. at 424 (footnotes omitted) (emphasis added). Finally, the Court offered [\[\*21\]](#) a relatively narrow interpretation of the Keogh rule: "Keogh simply held that an award of treble damages is not an available remedy for a private shipper claiming that the rate submitted to, and approved by, the ICC was the product of an antitrust violation." Id. at 422.<sup>9</sup>

[\[\*22\]](#) The fact that Square D's endorsement of Keogh was only lukewarm is of particular importance here, because WNG is essentially asking us to extend Keogh to preclude rate-related suits brought by competitors, as opposed to customers, of regulated entities. The weight of authority, and the better-reasoned authority, supports CMS's argument that Keogh simply does not apply to such suits. See, e.g., Federal Antitrust Policy § 19.6, at 660 ("Most courts correctly hold that Keogh does not apply to competitor suits - for example, suits challenging filed rates as predatory pricing."); Antitrust Law Par. 227.2c, at 270 ("Many courts have allowed antitrust damage actions by actual or potential competitors against allegedly predatory [\[\*946\]](#) filed rates."). As Professor Hovenkamp has explained:

First, of the original rationales given for Keogh only the third, the primacy of agency rate determination, would apply to a competitor suit. Indeed, even that argument is weak because the agency generally scrutinizes rates to see if they are too high, making sure that cost figures are justified. It much less frequently scrutinizes tariff requests to see if the requested [\[\*23\]](#) rates are too low. Second, a doctrine as indefensible as Keogh should be narrowly tailored.

Federal Antitrust Policy § 19.6, at 660.

The Second, Third, and Eighth Circuits have all held that Keogh does not preclude rate-related suits brought by competitors of regulated entities. See In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litigation, 998 F.2d 1144 (3rd Cir. 1993), cert. dismissed, 510 U.S. 1021 (1993); City of Kirkwood v. Union Elec. Co., 671 F.2d 1173, 1179 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1170, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1013, 103 S. Ct. 814 (1983); City of Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 662 F.2d 921, 929 (2d Cir. 1981) ("an anticompetitive practice embodied in a tariff may violate the antitrust laws if it . . . impacts upon competitors as opposed to customers"); Essential Communications Sys., Inc. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 610 F.2d 1114, 1121 \(3d Cir. 1979\).

<sup>8</sup> Justice Marshall dissented, noting that "Judge Friendly cogently and comprehensively explained why the reasoning of [Keogh] has been rendered obsolete by subsequent developments in the law." Square D, Inc., 476 U.S. at 424-25 (Marshall, J., dissenting).

<sup>9</sup> The Court's description of the Keogh rule clarifies that Keogh only precludes claims based specifically on rates approved by the relevant regulatory agency. See Keogh, 260 U.S. at 161 ("The instrument by which Keogh is alleged to have been damaged is rates approved by the Commission."); Square D, Inc., 476 U.S. at 414 (Keogh precludes "a treble-damages action based on the filed tariffs") (emphasis added). Accordingly, the only one of CMS's allegations which might arguably be barred by Keogh is its allegation that WNG has included anticompetitive provisions within Tariff 57; this is, in effect, an action "based on the filed tariff." However, to the extent that CMS's other allegations are not "rate-related," they would not be barred by Keogh. See, e.g., In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litigation, 998 F.2d 1144, 1159 (3rd Cir.) (Keogh "does not preclude liability based on non-rate anticompetitive activity"), cert. dismissed, 510 U.S. 1021 (1993); Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1457 (6th Cir.) ("To the extent that these alleged acts are unrelated to defendants' rates, any damages suffered therefrom would not be barred by Keogh."), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988).

In City of Kirkwood, the Eighth Circuit explained that Keogh does not apply to competitor suits because "[a] rule formulated to ensure uniformity of rates as between customers should not give an unfair advantage to a utility in its dealings with competitors." City of Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1179. [**24] Similarly, in Essential Communications, the Third Circuit explained that

In this case the plaintiff is not suing in the capacity of a customer for communication services. Essential seeks recovery for injury to its business or property from actions taken by the defendants in formulating a tariff, and in rendering customer services. The [defendant] will not be asked to disgorge to any customers any revenues derived under the filed tariff. Indeed, it can continue to collect those revenues until a new tariff is filed. There is no policy conflict, actual or potential, therefore, between the Section 4 Clayton Act remedy and the antidiscrimination purposes of the filed tariff rule.

Essential Communications, 610 F.2d at 1122 (emphasis added). Finally, one district court has persuasively observed that although the Supreme Court's ruling in Square D saved Keogh from extinction, it did not breathe a new expansive energy into the doctrine. The decision represents simply an unwillingness to deliver a coup de grace to a weak and forcefully criticized doctrine because that function might be more appropriately carried out by Congress. That holding does not justify [**25] expansion of the doctrine to nullify competitor suits.

Capital Freight Serv., Inc. v. Trailer Marine Transp. Corp., 704 F. Supp. 1190, 1195 \(S.D.N.Y. 1988\) (Leval, J.); see also Frontier Enter. v. Amador Stage Lines, Inc., 624 F. Supp. 137, 143 \(E.D. Cal. 1985\) (declining to apply Keogh in suit involving competitor).

The Sixth Circuit is the only circuit which has concluded that Keogh bars rate-related claims brought by competitors. See Pinney Dock & Transport Corp. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988).<sup>10</sup> However, we are not persuaded by the Sixth Circuit's analysis. In Pinney Dock, the court conceded that "the anti-discrimination arguments behind the Keogh doctrine lose their force in competitor lawsuits such as this." 838 F.2d at 1457. The court nonetheless concluded that when the ICC approves a rate . . . it necessarily takes an anticompetitive action. This action is justified by the [Interstate Commerce Act] because the statute assumes that the pro-competition policies of the antitrust laws have been taken into account but also assumes that the [Interstate [*947] Commerce Commission] [**26] possesses and ought to have the power to override those policies in order to further national transportation policy as expressed in the Act. Rates must not only protect against overcharging captive customers but must also keep in mind the economic costs of delivery of the service. Regulation of one aspect inevitably begets regulation of the other. Thus, the ICC is the sole source of the rights not only of shippers, but of the entire public, including competitors.

Id. at 1457 (emphasis added).

As has been noted elsewhere, the Sixth Circuit's reasoning is somewhat obscure. Indeed, Judge Leval cogently observed in Capital Freight, the Sixth [**27] Circuit's argument that ICC review "assumes that the pro-competition policies of the antitrust laws have been taken into account," 838 F.2d at 1457, is somewhat inconsistent with the Supreme Court's statement in Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 324 U.S. 439, 460, 65 S. Ct. 716, 727, 89 L. Ed. 1051 [1945], that "the Interstate Commerce Act does not provide remedies for the correction of all the abuses of ratemaking which might constitute violations of the anti-trust laws," and is at odds with the Second Circuit's assertion that HN3[<sup>1</sup>] "an anti-competitive practice embodied in a tariff may violate the antitrust laws if it . . . impacts upon competitors as opposed to customers."

<sup>10</sup> We note that one district court, which relied on Pinney Dock, also held that Keogh bars competitor suits. See Lischultz Fast Freight, Inc. v. Consolidated Freightways Corp. of Delaware, 805 F. Supp. 1277 \(D.S.C. 1992\), aff'd, 998 F.2d 1009 (4th Cir. July 6, 1993) (unpublished disposition), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 993, 126 L. Ed. 2d 454, 114 S. Ct. 553 (1993).

704 F. Supp. at 1195-96 (quoting City of Groton, 662 F.2d at 929). We agree with this conclusion. In addition, even if we were to agree with Pinney Dock's assumption that the ICC has necessarily taken "the pro-competition policies of the antitrust laws" into account when calculating its rates, we fail to see how that justifies a conclusion that a competitor may not sue under the Sherman Act based on an allegation that the rates which were adopted were adopted in part because of an antitrust violation on the [**28] part of the defendant. Cf. Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 372, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\) HN4[<sup>1</sup>] ("Activities which come under the jurisdiction of a regulatory agency nevertheless may be subject to scrutiny under the antitrust laws."); City of Long Beach v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 872 F.2d 1401, 1408 \(9th Cir. 1989\) (holding that existence of federal price controls did not absolve companies of antitrust liability, because "if the price ceilings were based on prices set artificially low as a result of an unlawful conspiracy, liability should still exist"), as amended on denial of reh'g, 886 F.2d 246 \(9th Cir. 1989\), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1076, 110 S. Ct. 1126, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1032 (1990). In addition, even if such an assumption is appropriate with respect to the Interstate Commerce Commission, we question whether it would be appropriate to extend a similar assumption to cases involving the plethora of state agencies which approve commercial tariffs of a variety of regulated enterprises.

Nor are we persuaded by the Sixth Circuit's reliance on Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railway Co., 324 U.S. 439, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 \(1945\), in support of its conclusion that Keogh precludes competitor suits. It is true that in Georgia, [**29] the Supreme Court applied Keogh in a case in which the State of Georgia was suing in its dual capacity as a customer and a competitor of the defendant. See Pinney Dock, 838 F.2d at 1457 n.12 (citing Georgia); see also Lirschultz Fast Freight, Inc. v. Consolidated Freightways Corp. of Delaware, 805 F. Supp. 1277, 1295 \(D.S.C. 1992\) (citing Georgia in support of its conclusion that Keogh applies in competitor suits), aff'd, 998 F.2d 1009 (4th Cir. July 6, 1993) (unpublished disposition), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 993, 126 L. Ed. 2d 454, 114 S. Ct. 553 (1993). However, the Third Circuit has persuasively explained that in Georgia, the state of Georgia sued both in its parens patriae capacity and as owner of a railroad and other public institutions. Although Georgia's ownership of a railroad placed it in competition with the defendants, the [Court] clearly focused on Georgia's parens patriae claim and treated the injury to the state as proprietor merely as "make weight." . . . It is obvious that in rendering its decision the Court's focus was on Georgia's claims as a customer. We, therefore, do not construe Georgia as Supreme Court precedent to apply Keogh to bar competitor [**30] suits.

[*948] In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore, 998 F.2d at 1161-62 n.6 (emphasis added). We agree. In addition, although not specifically discussed by the Third Circuit, we also note that the court's conclusion is supported by the fact that in Square D, supra, Judge Friendly distinguished certain cases on the grounds that "all of these cases, moreover, were suits by competitors rather than users of the service, so that many of the considerations relied upon in Keogh would not apply." Square D, 760 F.2d at 1356 (citing Essential Communications, 610 F.2d at 1122) (emphasis added). Significantly, the Supreme Court did not take issue with this observation when it affirmed Judge Friendly's opinion.

Our conclusion that Keogh does not apply in competitor suits also finds some support in our decision in Barnes v. Arden Mayfair, Inc., 759 F.2d 676 \(9th Cir. 1985\). In Barnes, two companies which had developed new methods of pasteurizing and packing milk sued two Alaskan dairies and a shipping company under the Sherman Act. The plaintiffs alleged that the dairies had undertaken various anticompetitive tactics to keep the plaintiffs out of the Alaskan dairy market. [**31] In particular, the plaintiffs alleged that the dairies had convinced the shipping company to help them keep the plaintiffs out of Alaska by illegally manipulating the tariff rates which the carrier charged for shipping milk to Alaska. The plaintiffs also alleged that an employee of the shipping company had discouraged a potential purchaser of one of the plaintiff's distributorships from entering into an agreement with the plaintiffs.

The defendants argued that the plaintiffs' complaint was barred under Keogh. We rejected this argument by noting that [the plaintiffs] do not seek damages solely for an illegally-set price, as did the plaintiffs in Keogh. Rather, they claim a conspiracy to destroy their businesses through a broad range of anticompetitive behavior. The district court observed that [the plaintiffs] did not allege merely that illegal rates were set, but in addition that [the defendants] undertook further alleged anticompetitive acts by attempting to prevent a prospective distributor from entering into an agreement with [one of the plaintiffs]. Because such activities would be beyond the scope of the ICC's jurisdiction, the antitrust action [**32] was not subject to dismissal on this ground.

Id. at 679 (emphasis added).

It is clear from this passage that we did not actually hold that a competitor may bring an action for damages based on "rate-related" activity; instead, we emphasized that the plaintiffs in that case had alleged that the defendants also participated in other, "non-rate related" conduct not covered by Keogh. However, our decision to allow CMS's claims to proceed is consistent with our holding today that competitor suits are not barred by Keogh.

Finally, we note that our conclusion that Keogh should not be extended to preclude antitrust damage actions brought by competitors is also consistent with the Supreme Court's observation that "exemptions from the antitrust laws are strictly construed and strongly disfavored," Square D, 476 U.S. at 421, and with our prior observation that "implied repeals of the antitrust statutes are disfavored, and require a convincing showing that the antitrust laws and the regulatory program cannot coexist." City of Long Beach, 872 F.2d at 1409.

Accordingly, because the rationales offered for the Keogh doctrine do not justify extending that doctrine [**33] to preclude rate-based damages actions brought by competitors of regulated entities, we decline to apply the doctrine here.

IV

WNG next argues that we should affirm the district court on the basis of the primary jurisdiction doctrine.<sup>11</sup> Specifically, WNG argues we should decline to exercise jurisdiction over this case and should instead transfer the case to the WUTC for resolution [*949] of such "threshold" questions as whether WNG did in fact violate Tariff 87.

In United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 828 F.2d 1356 (9th Cir. 1987), we explained that:

HN5  The doctrine of primary jurisdiction operates as follows: When there is a basis for judicial action, independent of agency proceedings, courts may route the threshold decision as to certain issues to the agency charged with primary responsibility for governmental supervision or control of the particular industry or activity involved. [**34] The doctrine applies when protection of the integrity of a regulatory scheme dictates preliminary resort to the agency which administers the scheme.

Id. at 1362 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted) (emphasis added); see also Mt. Hood Stages, Inc. v. Greyhound Corp., 616 F.2d 394, 403 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 831, 66 L. Ed. 2d 36, 101 S. Ct. 99 (1980) (applying doctrine). We further explained that there are four factors uniformly present in cases where the doctrine properly is invoked: (1) the need to resolve an issue that (2) has been placed by Congress within the jurisdiction of an administrative body having regulatory authority (3) pursuant to a statute that subjects an industry or activity to a comprehensive regulatory scheme that (4) requires expertise or uniformity in administration.

---

<sup>11</sup> For a discussion of the primary jurisdiction doctrine, see Federal Antitrust Policy, supra § 19.4 at 655-57.

General Dynamics, 828 F.2d at 1362 (citations omitted) (emphasis added).

WNG's argument that we should apply this doctrine in this appeal is misplaced. Because this case arises in the context of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), we must accept as true CMS's allegation that WNG violated Tariff 87. For that reason, the "threshold decision" which WNG would [**35] have us refer to the WUTC must necessarily be resolved in favor of CMS. Accordingly, the primary jurisdiction doctrine is simply inapplicable here.<sup>12</sup>

[**36] V

Finally, WNG argues that we should affirm the district court on the alternate ground that CMS has failed to allege the elements of a Sherman Act claim.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: HN6<sup>13</sup> "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce . . . [commits a felony]."
15 U.S.C. § 2 (1994). In order to state a claim for monopolization under this provision, a plaintiff must prove that: (1) the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) the defendant has willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) the defendant's conduct has caused antitrust injury. SmileCare Dental Group v. Delta Dental Plan of California, Inc., 88 F.3d 780, 783 (9th Cir. 1996) (citations omitted).<sup>13</sup> In order to state a claim for [*950] attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must prove: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Id. (citations omitted). HN7<sup>14</sup> In order to survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), [**37] an antitrust complaint "need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws." Newman v. Universal Pictures, 813 F.2d 1519, 1522 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1059, 100 L. Ed. 2d 931, 108 S. Ct. 2831 (1988). CMS's complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that CMS can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief. SmileCare Dental Group, 88 F.3d at 783.

[**38] WNG raises three specific challenges to CMS's complaint. We address each in turn.

A

---

<sup>12</sup> We note in passing that we are not entirely persuaded that the doctrine should be applied in any event to allow a federal court to "route" issues to a state agency for resolution. In Industrial Communications Sys., Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., 505 F.2d 152 (9th Cir. 1974), we did apply the doctrine to stay proceedings in federal court pending a decision by the California Public Utilities Commission on whether certain proposed tariffs would become effective. However, in our more recent decisions, we have emphasized that because "the primary jurisdiction doctrine is in effect, a power-allocating mechanism, a court must not employ the doctrine unless the particular division of power was intended by Congress." General Dynamics, 828 F.2d at 1363 n.13 (emphasis added); see also P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application Par. 213, at 79 (1978) (noting that the primary jurisdiction doctrine "is designed to harmonize the conflicting commands of the same sovereign" and is "not well-suited for a situation in which the conflict is between commands of two different sovereigns, one of whom is superior by force of the Constitution"). However, because we conclude that the doctrine is inapplicable in this appeal in any event, we need not decide this question.

<sup>13</sup> We have explained that

HN8<sup>15</sup> to show antitrust injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition. If the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury, even if the defendant's conduct is illegal per se.

Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424, 116 S. Ct. 515 (1995).

WNG first challenges the sufficiency of CMS's allegation that WNG possesses monopoly power.<sup>14</sup> WNG notes that the Supreme Court has defined monopoly power as the power to "control prices or exclude competition," United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\) (citation omitted), and asserts that because it cannot set its own rates it meets neither of these standards. WNG also notes that market share standing alone does not establish monopoly power in a regulated industry, and argues that CMS's complaint is defective because the only factual allegation which CMS offers on the monopoly power issue is its allegation that WNG has a 90 percent market share.

WNG's first argument effectively boils down to an assertion [**39] that it cannot possess monopoly power because it is a regulated entity. However, the mere fact that WNG is a regulated utility does not preclude a finding that it retains monopoly power. See, e.g., Federal Antitrust Policy, supra § 19.5, at 658 (discussing "market power" offenses in regulated markets).<sup>15</sup> Moreover, CMS has alleged, in addition to its allegation that WNG has a 90 percent market share, that (1) WNG has charged rates other than those mandated by its tariffs, or, in other words, that WNG retains the ability to control its prices, and (2) that WNG's off-tariff pricing has "made it impossible for others to compete for the sale of Gas," or, in other words, that WNG's practices have excluded competition. These allegations are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss.

With respect to WNG's second argument, it is true that market share standing alone does not automatically equate to monopoly power. See, e.g., SmileCare [**40] Dental Group, 88 F.3d at 783; Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1439 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (offering comprehensive analysis of market power and noting that HNG [↑] "[a] mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the predator's high price."), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424, 116 S. Ct. 515 (1995). However, as noted above, CMS's allegation that WNG possesses monopoly power does not rest entirely on its market share allegation. Moreover, in Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919 \(9th Cir. 1980\), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348, 101 S. Ct. 1369 (1981) we held that while market share is just the starting point for assessing market power, we think that market share, at least above some level, could support a finding of market power in the absence of contrary evidence. Where such an inference is not implausible [**41] on its face, an allegation of a specific market share is sufficient, as a matter of pleading, to withstand [**42] a motion for dismissal. With nothing but Hunt's complaint before us, we cannot say that allegations that Ragu had a 65 per cent market share, and that the share was increasing, could not under any market conditions provide a basis for inferring the requisite market power.

Id. at 925 (emphasis added).

In sum, while CMS's complaint perhaps could have provided more detailed allegations on this issue, we are not prepared to hold, based on CMS's allegations that (1) WNG has a 90 percent market share in the relevant market, (2) WNG has been able to charge off-tariff prices, and (3) WNG's alleged off-tariff pricing has excluded competition from the market, that CMS can prove no set of facts establishing that WNG has monopoly power. CMS's allegations are sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss. Cf. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1438 ("ARCO's market share of 44 percent is sufficient as a matter of law to support a finding of market power, if entry barriers are high and competitors are unable to expand their output in response to supracompetitive pricing.").

B

Second, WNG argues that CMS's "monopoly leveraging" theory was rejected by this court in Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 549 \(9th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 977, 118 L. Ed. 2d 316, 112

---

<sup>14</sup> The question of whether a party possesses monopoly power is essentially one of fact. Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1425 \(9th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 127 L. Ed. 2d 658, 114 S. Ct. 1307 (1994).

<sup>15</sup> The terms "market power" and "monopoly power" are used interchangeably herein.

S. Ct. 1603 (1992), and that CMS therefore cannot proceed on its theory that WNG has used its monopoly over gas delivery services in an attempt to monopolize the market for gas sales.

The dispute between the parties on this issue turns primarily on the definition of "monopoly leveraging." In Alaska Airlines, we did in fact reject the Second Circuit's holding in Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980) that "a single firm may be liable for monopoly leveraging, even in the absence of a threat that the 'leveraged' market will be monopolized . . ." Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 546 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted) (emphasis added). We noted that in contrast to the traditional actions for monopoly and attempted monopoly, Berkey Photo's "monopoly leveraging" doctrine has only two rather loose elements: 1) there must be monopoly power in some market, and 2) such power must be "exercised . . . to the detriment of competition" in another market. The Berkey Photo court slighted the functions performed [**43] by the elements of the traditional Section 2 offenses, stating: "There is no reason to allow the exercise of [monopoly] power to the detriment of competition, in either the controlled market or any other. That the competition in the leveraged market may not be destroyed but merely distorted does not make it more palatable."

Id. at 547 (quoting Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 275). Accordingly, we rejected Berkey Photo's definition of "monopoly leveraging" as an independent theory of liability under Section 2.<sup>16</sup>

It is clear from our analysis, however, that to the extent that "monopoly leveraging" is defined as an attempt to use monopoly power in one market to monopolize another market, this theory remains a viable theory under Section 2. For example, we explained that "even in the two-market situation, a plaintiff cannot establish a violation of Section 2 without [**44] proving that the defendant used its monopoly power in one market to obtain, or attempt to attain, a monopoly in the downstream, or leveraged, market." Id. (emphasis added). We also explained that the elements of the established actions for "monopolization" and "attempted monopolization" are vital to differentiate between efficient and natural monopolies on the one hand, and unlawful monopolies on the other. Berkey Photo's monopoly leveraging doctrine fails to differentiate properly [*952] among monopolies. The anticompetitive dangers that implicate the Sherman Act are not present when a monopolist has a lawful monopoly in one market and uses its power to gain a competitive advantage in the second market. By definition, the monopolist has failed to gain, or attempt to gain, a monopoly in the second market. Thus, such activity fails to meet the second element necessary to establish a violation of Section 2. Unless the monopolist uses its power in the first market to acquire and maintain a monopoly in the second market, or to attempt to do so, there is no Section 2 violation.

Id. at 548 (emphasis added). Finally, we concluded that HN10 [if there is a dangerous probability [**45] that a monopoly will be created by leveraging conduct, then the conduct will be reached under the doctrine of attempted monopoly.] Id. at 549 (emphasis added).

It is clear from our opinion in Alaska Airlines that to the extent that CMS seeks to proceed on the basis of the "monopoly leveraging" theory adopted in Berkey Photo, it may not proceed. However, CMS has alleged that WNG has used its monopoly power in the gas delivery market in an attempt to monopolize the market for gas sales. Accordingly, CMS has alleged conduct which may be reached "under the doctrine of attempted monopoly," Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 549, and it may proceed on this theory. We emphasize, however, that under this theory, CMS must establish each of the elements normally required to prove an attempted monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., SmileCare Dental Group, supra, 88 F.3d at 783.

C

---

<sup>16</sup> See also Federal Antitrust Policy, supra § 7.9, at 283-85 (criticizing Berkey Photo's "monopoly leveraging" theory).

Third, WNG challenges CMS's attempted monopolization claim based on WNG's alleged off-tariff pricing. WNG argues that CMS's off-tariff pricing claim is in effect a claim for predatory pricing, and argues that because CMS has failed to allege that WNG's prices were below [**46] its average total costs of production, CMS's claim necessarily fails. CMS responds by arguing that in Farley Transp. Co. Inc. v. Santa Fe Trail Transp. Co., 786 F.2d 1342 (9th Cir. 1985), and *Western Concrete Structures Co., Inc. v. Mitsui & Co. \(U.S.A.\), Inc.*, 760 F.2d 1013 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 903, 88 L. Ed. 2d 229, 106 S. Ct. 230 (1985), this court held that off-tariff pricing alone may constitute a violation of the Sherman Act, independent of any allegation of predatory pricing.<sup>17</sup> The parties' arguments require us to examine Farley and Western Concrete.

In Western Concrete, the plaintiff and one of the defendants ("VSL") were [**47] competitors in the business of post-tensioning. The court explained that post-tensioning "is a construction process . . . that involves the stretching of steel strand tendons within concrete slabs or girders." *Western Concrete*, 760 F.2d at 1015. Because the cost of steel strand represented more than half of the companies' direct costs, the price of steel strand significantly affected the companies' respective competitive positions. Id. Under regulations promulgated by the United States Treasury Department, importation of steel strand below certain "trigger prices" was illegal. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had conspired to import steel strand at prices below the trigger prices, and had done so in order to allow VSL to monopolize the industry. Id. Importantly, the plaintiff "expressly disclaimed" that it was proceeding on a predatory pricing theory. Id. Instead, the plaintiff alleged that the defendants had imported steel at prices below the legal levels, knowing that the plaintiff could not legally match those rates, and had done so in order to obtain an illegal competitive advantage and monopolize the market.

The district court dismissed the plaintiff's [**48] claim for failure to state a claim, concluding that "price cutting does not violate section 1 [of the Sherman Act], unless it is 'predatory' in the sense that it is below cost." *Id. at I\*953I 1016*. We reversed. In doing so, we effectively treated the plaintiff's claim as one alleging predatory pricing. However, relying in part on our decision in *Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. International Bus. Mach. Corp.*, 698 F.2d 1377 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 955, 78 L. Ed. 2d 329, 104 S. Ct. 370 (1983), we concluded that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to establish that the defendant's prices were below its costs. We noted that in Transamerica Computer, we had stated that "this court has . . . recognized that prices exceeding average total cost might nevertheless be predatory in some circumstances." *Transamerica Computer*, 698 F.2d at 1387. Relying in part on this exception, we held that the plaintiff had stated a valid claim. Judge Sneed succinctly explained the legal theory which we found to be adequate in that case:

The improper conduct alleged in this case is a conspiracy to sell at prices below those that other competitors, acting within the law, could offer. This is no more [**49] and no less than a form of predatory pricing. The only difference between the conduct alleged in this case and ordinary predatory pricing is that here it is the law, rather than costs, that prevents the defendant's competitors from matching the defendant's price.

*Western Concrete*, 760 F.2d at 1020 (Sneed, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (emphasis added).<sup>18</sup>

We applied the majority's and Judge Sneed's reasoning in Western Concrete to Farley. In Farley, the plaintiff sued two of its competitors, a trucking company and a railroad company, under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Farley, 786 F.2d at 1344. The defendants and plaintiff were each subject [**50] to tariff schedules approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission through a regional tariff bureau. Id. Under the Interstate Commerce Act, it was illegal for the parties to charge any rates not authorized by the tariff schedules. The plaintiff argued that the defendants had conspired to violate the tariffs by providing false information concerning their cargos to the tariff bureau, and had thereby obtained lower rates than those which the plaintiff could legally offer to its customers. The plaintiff alleged that the violation of the tariff illegally deprived it of business, and distorted the structure of the market. Id. at 1347.

<sup>17</sup> "Predatory pricing occurs when a company that controls a substantial market share lowers its prices to drive out competition so that it can charge monopoly prices, and reap monopoly profits, at a later time." *Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. International Business Machines Corp.*, 698 F.2d 1377, 1384 (9th Cir.) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 955, 78 L. Ed. 2d 329, 104 S. Ct. 370 (1983).

<sup>18</sup> Judge Sneed dissented from the majority's conclusion that the plaintiff's claim stated a cause of action under Section 1, rather than *Section 2*, of the Sherman Act: "Our cases have always treated predatory pricing as a violation of *Section 2*, not Section 1." Id. (Sneed, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

As Judge Sneed had done with respect to the claim in Western Concrete, we noted that the plaintiff's theory in Farley "closely resembles predatory pricing." Id. We also observed that "under ordinary circumstances, Farley's theory would be difficult to sustain in light of the fact that the tariff for the Santa Fe Plan V was above average total cost." Id. However, relying on the legal theory outlined in Judge Sneed's concurring opinion in Western Concrete, and noting that the facts in Farley were "virtually identical" to those [**51] in Western Concrete, we held that the plaintiff had stated a Sherman Act claim. Id. at 1348.

CMS argues that Western Concrete and Farley should be read broadly for the proposition that a plaintiff seeking recovery for attempted monopolization may satisfy its burden of showing "predatory or anticompetitive conduct," SmileCare, 88 F.3d at 783, merely by showing that the defendant has offered prices below those outlined in a legally binding tariff. We disagree.

Our decisions in Western Concrete and Farley proceeded from the premise that the plaintiffs in those cases were seeking recovery under a legal theory which amounted to a variation of predatory pricing. In each case, we noted that a predatory pricing claim normally may not proceed unless the plaintiff establishes that the defendant's prices are below its costs. However, as Judge Sneed recognized, the rationale for the "below cost" rule is simply that a defendant who is setting its prices below its costs may legitimately be presumed to be doing so in an attempt to drive its competitors out of the market by charging economically inefficient prices which its competitors cannot match. Because [*954] the defendant's [**52] prices are below its costs, the pricing may legitimately be deemed "predatory." The rule which we adopted in Western Concrete and Farley simply acknowledged that in cases where both the plaintiff and defendant are regulated entities subject to tariff restrictions, a defendant may be able to achieve the same result by illegally charging prices below its tariff rate, knowing that its competitor cannot match those rates without similarly violating the law. Cf. Farley, 786 F.2d at 1350 ("The purpose of the [defendant's] scheme to falsify the weight and composition of cargo was to arrive at a rate lower than that possible under [the tariff which the plaintiff was obligated to follow].") By charging prices below this rate, the defendant can force its competitors into a Hobson's choice: either match the defendant's prices and risk incurring legal sanctions, or fail to match those prices and run the risk of being underbid and, eventually, driven from the market. Accordingly, we held that in these particular, narrow set of circumstances, "below-tariff pricing may serve as a surrogate for below-cost pricing . . ." Coastal Transfer Co. v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., 833 F.2d 208, 212 (9th Cir. 1987).

Accordingly, CMS's broader reading of Western Concrete and Farley is erroneous. In order for CMS to establish, on the basis of the theory outlined in these cases, that WNG participated in "predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization," SmileCare, 88 F.3d at 783, CMS would have to establish that (1) CMS and WNG are regulated entities in the same relevant market; (2) each is precluded by law from setting prices below those outlined in controlling tariffs; (3) WNG has illegally offered prices below the tariff prices; and (4) CMS cannot match WNG's prices without similarly violating the law. Because CMS is not a regulated entity, it cannot establish a violation of section 2 based on Western Concrete and Farley. We therefore dismiss CMS's off-tariff pricing claim outright.

VI

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's order is REVERSED, and this case is REMANDED for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

Southern Card & Novelty, Inc. v. Lawson Mardon Label, Inc.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, Orlando Division

November 19, 1996, Decided ; November 19, 1996, Filed

CASE NO. 95-130-CIV-ORL-22

Reporter

1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22287 *

SOUTHERN CARD & NOVELTY, INC., Plaintiff -vs- LAWSON MARDON LABEL, INC., d/b/a LAWSON MARDON POST CARD, and DANIEL J. SAUNDERS, Defendants

Disposition: [*1] Lawson Mardon Post Card's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 42) GRANTED; Lawson Mardon's Motion to Strike Expert Affidavit Testimony In Limine to Exclude Expert Testimony Regarding Damages (Doc. 86) DENIED as moot; Southern Card's Motion In Limine to Prohibit Evidence of Settlement or Compromise (Doc. 88) and to Preclude Any Reference to Trebling of Damages (Doc. 90) DENIED as moot; Southern Card's Motion In Limine to Prohibit Bad Acts Evidence (Doc. 92) DENIED as moot; Southern Card's Motion to Compel Attendance of Witnesses at Trial (Doc. 115) DENIED as moot.

Core Terms

---

Card, postcards, distributor, manufacturer, geographic, products, relevant market, monopolization, consumer, sales, anticompetitive, contends, summary judgment, rule of reason, tied product, dealer, tying arrangement, antitrust, markets, sellers, competitors, purchases, buy, tying product, Sherman Act, nonprice, vertical, tie-in, buyer, summary judgment motion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN1 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

A motion for summary judgment is granted when the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial burden of identifying for the district court those portions of the record which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. There is no genuine issue for trial unless the non-moving party establishes, through the record presented to the court, that it is able to prove evidence sufficient for a jury to return a verdict in its favor. The court considers the evidence and all inferences drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits contracts in restraint of trade. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is illegal. A tying arrangement may violate § 1 if the seller has "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market. Tying claims may violate 15 U.S.C.S. § 14 if the tie-in involves goods, wares, merchandise or other commodities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN3 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A "tying" arrangement is defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product, the "tying" product, but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different, or "tied," product. A tying arrangement is not illegal simply because two products are sold together in the same package. The key to such an arrangement's anti-competitiveness, and thus its illegality, is the seller's ability to force buyers to purchase one product in the package, the tied product, by virtue of the seller's control or dominance over the other product in the package, the tying product. The essential characteristics of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In traditional antitrust "tying" cases, in which the end consumer is subjected to the tie-in, the court uses a per se analysis. However, not every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain competition. This is the case when the tie-in does not force the end consumer to buy the two products together.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Although antitrust tying arrangements are one of the classic per se forms of anti-competitive behavior, such claims are also analyzed under the rule of reason in certain instances. This shift to a rule of reason analysis is particularly evident in cases involving middlemen, who are intermediate links in the chain of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

An antitrust tie-in can foreclose some distributors of the tied product without threatening the kind of impact on consumers that anti-tying rules are designed to prevent. Requiring a distributor to purchase a tied product from the manufacturer need not impair the ultimate consumers' purchases from the manufacturer's rivals who sell directly to consumers or who continue to reach consumers through an ample number of other dealers. Arrangements whereby the manufacturer requires a distributor or dealer to carry a less popular item from its line in order to receive a more popular item has been described by various courts as "full" or "representative" line forcing or "vertical non-price restraints," undeserving of per se treatment. When only dealers are subject to a tie, competitors do not lose a segment of the tied market if there are genuine alternative paths to consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where manufacturers require dealers to carry a full or representative line, or condition purchase of a more popular product on the purchase of a less popular product, such arrangements are not illegal per se, since they often promote competition, rather than stifle it, thereby benefiting the ultimate consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where a dealer is serving as an intermediate link in a distribution chain, if one manufacturer is foreclosed from selling to a dealer because of an arrangement, it is likely going to find another way to take its product to market, providing a profit potential continues to exist. There is no ultimate foreclosure to the consumer of a choice of goods. In other more traditional tying arrangements, there is an ultimate foreclosure of choice to the ultimate consumer. A foreclosure of choice to an ultimate consumer is the principal key to a tie that is illegal per se. No such foreclosure occurs or is threatened in a typical line forcing situation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

When an alleged tying action is not per se illegal, the court must apply the rule of reason to determine whether the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN10 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Speculation about anti-competitive effects is not enough.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN11 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In order to show anti-competitive effect under the rule of reason standard, a plaintiff must first offer proof of a well-defined relevant market upon which the challenged anti-competitive actions would have had a substantial impact. In the case of a tying vertical non-price restraint between a manufacturer and a distributor, the manufacturer's power in the tying market tells nothing of other competing distributors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The plaintiff in an antitrust tying action must establish the particularized or relevant market in which the defendant's actions had an anticompetitive effect. The relevant market contains a product dimension and a geographic dimension, both of which must be shown to be economically significant. The product dimension is determined by the availability of substitutes to which consumers can turn in response to price increases and other existing or potential producers' ability to expand output. The geographic dimension is the area in which the product or its reasonably interchangeable substitutes are traded.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Tribunals

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

International Law > Territorial Boundaries

HN13 [ ] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Without a definition of the relevant market in which commerce is allegedly being restrained, there is no way to measure the anti-competitive effect. The relevant geographic market is the area in which sellers of the particular product or service operate and to which purchasers can practicably turn for such products or services.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN14 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

In determining the relevant geographic market in which a product or its substitutes are traded, such economic and physical barriers to expansion as transportation costs, delivery limitations and customer convenience and preference must be considered. The location and facilities of other distributors are essential in determining the relevant geographic market. Economically significant geographic barriers limit the ability of sellers outside the market to operate within, and the ability of purchasers to obtain the product from suppliers outside the geographic area. If sellers within the market must take account of sellers outside it, either because those sellers are mobile and can easily come into the area to sell, or because buyers are mobile and can easily go outside the area to buy, the market is being defined too narrowly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN15** [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

The four elements required to prove that a tying arrangement is illegal per se are: 1) that there are two separate products, a "tying" product and a "tied" product; 2) that those products are in fact "tied" together, that is, the buyer was forced to buy the tied product to get the tying product; 3) that the seller possesses sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce buyer acceptance of the tied product; and 4) involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the market of the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN16** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 2 provides that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or person, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN17** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The offense of monopoly under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. To establish an attempted monopolization claim, a plaintiff must show: (1) an intent to bring about a monopoly; and (2) a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN18** [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Proof of monopoly power in the relevant market is the first element of a monopolization claim, and proof that there is a dangerous probability of the defendant successfully attaining monopoly power is the second element of an attempted monopolization claim. A plaintiff's failure to adequately define the relevant market and to prove that the defendants possessed or were close to possessing monopoly power in the relevant market, will be fatal to a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim for monopolization and for attempted monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The principal judicial device for measuring actual or potential market power remains market share, typically measured in terms of a percentage of total market sales.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Lay Witnesses > General Overview

HN20[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Construction of a relevant economic market or a showing of monopoly power in the market cannot be based upon lay opinion testimony.

Counsel: For SOUTHERN CARD & NOVELTY, INC., plaintiff: Hal K. Litchford, Litchford & Christopher, P.A., Orlando, FL USA.

For LAWSON MARDON LABEL, INC. dba Lawson Mardon Post Card, defendant: James A. Murray, Janine Bloch, Nathan Lane, III, Graham & James, San Francisco, CA. Christopher K. Kay, Michael J. Beaudine, Kay, Panzl & Latham, Orlando, FL.

For SCENIC CARD & NOVELTY, INC., movant: Brandon Scott Peters, Dean, Mead, Egerton, Bloodworth, Capouano & Bozarth, P.A., Orlando, FL USA.

For DANIEL J. SAUNDERS, defendant: Nathan Lane, III, Graham & James, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: ANNE C. CONWAY, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: [*2] ANNE C. CONWAY

Opinion

---

ORDER

This cause comes before the Court on Defendant Lawson Mardon Label, Inc. d/b/a Lawson Mardon Post Card's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 42) and Plaintiff Southern Card & Novelty, Inc.'s Opposition (Doc. 61). This case involves claims by Southern Card that Lawson Mardon engaged in an unlawful tying scheme by conditioning purchases of licensed Disney postcards upon purchases of local or general view ("non-Disney") postcards. Southern Card alleges that, due to the market power of Lawson Mardon's licensed Disney postcards in the greater Orlando area, Lawson Mardon has attempted to extend its monopoly into the local view postcard market in the greater Orlando area. Southern Card seeks treble damages and injunctive relief for Lawson Mardon's alleged antitrust violations and invokes this Court's jurisdiction pursuant to the Sherman and Clayton Acts, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, 14, 15, 24. Southern Card also claims Lawson Mardon has violated Florida's antitrust provisions, Fla. Stat. §§ 542.18, .19, & .22.

The question presented by Lawson Mardon's motion for summary judgment is whether Southern Card's illegal tying claim should properly be analyzed as a [*3] per se restraint of trade or under the rule of reason; and whether Lawson Mardon's actions were monopolistic or constituted an attempted monopolization. The Court finds that Southern Card has failed to define the relevant market for the tied product, or alternatively, has failed to define two separate products, and as such, Lawson Mardon's motion for summary judgment is due to be granted on the tying claim (Counts I and II). Southern Card has also failed to measure Lawson Mardon's market power in the relevant market; therefore, summary judgment is also warranted on the monopolization (Counts III and IV) and attempted monopolization claims (Counts V and VI).

I. Standard for Summary Judgment

HN1 A motion for summary judgment should be granted when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial burden of identifying for the district court those portions of the record 'which it believes demonstrate the absence [*4] of a genuine issue of material fact.'" Cohen v. United American Bank of Cent. Fla., 83 F.3d 1347, 1349 (11th Cir. 1996) (quoting Cox v. Administrator United States Steel & Carnegie, 17 F.3d 1386, 1396 (11th Cir. 1994)). There is no genuine issue for trial unless the non-moving party establishes, through the record presented to the court, that it is able to prove evidence sufficient for a jury to return a verdict in its favor. Cohen, 83 F.3d at 1349. The Court considers the evidence and all inferences drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Hairston v. Gainesville Sun Publishing Co., 9 F.3d 913, 918 (11th Cir. 1993).

II. Background facts

The following facts are either undisputed or are taken in the light most favorable to Southern Card, the non-moving party:

Southern Card & Novelty, Inc. ("Southern Card") is a postcard distributor located in Daytona Beach, Florida. Southern Card does not print its own postcards, but buys instead printed postcards from Lawson Mardon Label, Inc. d/b/a Lawson Mardon Post Card ("Lawson Mardon") and distributes them mainly to retail outlets (primarily to chain stores) in the northern half of the State [*5] of Florida.

Lawson Mardon is a nonexclusive licensee of Walt Disney Company postcards.<sup>1</sup> Although the license is "nonexclusive" in nature, no other postcard printers have been granted such a license in the greater Orlando area, where Walt Disney World is located; thus, Lawson Mardon is the only available source for postcards printed with copyrighted Disney images and characters. As such, Lawson Mardon is the exclusive seller of copyrighted Disney postcards in the greater Orlando area.

Lawson Mardon also sells postcards that contain only local or general views [hereinafter "local view"] and bear non-licensed local images, such as beaches, palm trees, alligators and other images that typify the area. Unlike the Disney postcards, Lawson Mardon has a number of competitors for local view postcards in the Orlando market. Until 1991, Southern Card purchased as many postcards as it desired, Disney and local view, from Lawson Mardon. [*6] During the late 1980's and early 1990's, Southern Card bought a percentage of its local view cards from manufacturers other than Lawson Mardon, and found the postcards of Lawson Mardon's competitors to be superior in price and quality. Southern Card still purchased all of the unique Disney cards from Lawson Mardon because there was no other source for these licensed postcards in the greater Orlando area.

In late 1991, Lawson Mardon informed Southern Card that it was introducing its "Premium Disney Product" program in the State of Florida. In correspondence dated December 12, 1991, Lawson Mardon set forth the following terms of the agreement it wished to reach with Southern Card:

- d) Distributor will purchase local view and general postcards and allied products from Lawson Mardon equal to his purchases from Lawson Mardon of Disney products, i.e., if distributor purchases $ 100,000.00 in 1992 of Disney product from Lawson Mardon, distributor agrees to purchase a minimum of $ 100,000.00 in 1992 of Local View or General Product Florida product from Lawson Mardon.

---

<sup>1</sup> Lawson Mardon's predecessor-in-interest, Crocker, was the previous licensee.

e) Failure to meet the minimum agreed to in d) above, may result in Lawson Mardon's decision to not sell [*7] any product the following year.

Doc. 87, Ex. 19, Letter setting forth "Outline of Basic Agreement." Based on its fear of losing the significant Orlando Disney-postcard market, Southern Card complied with the requirements in the December 12, 1991 letter.

By October 1993, Lawson Mardon noted Southern Card was selling a significant quantity of local view postcards manufactured by Lawson Mardon's competitors. In November 1993, Lawson Mardon stated its expectation that Lawson Mardon receive 100% of Southern Card's local view business, on penalty of losing the supply of Disney postcards. Southern Card responded that it was already giving Lawson Mardon 75-80% of its total business and insisted that it had never committed to giving Lawson Mardon any specific percentage of its local view business. Lawson Mardon continued to insist that Southern Card carry Lawson Mardon's entire postcard line including local view postcards, not just the copyrighted Disney postcards.

A few months later, in February 1994, Lawson Mardon began recruiting other distributors, competitors of Southern Card, to sell Lawson Mardon's Disney and local view postcards in the chain stores (Southern Card's primary [*8] market). Lawson Mardon also raised Southern Card's prices, and limited Southern Card's selection of Disney products to those postcards Southern Card actually purchased in 1993. However, Lawson Mardon has elected to sell a number of new Disney cards that have been developed since 1994 to Southern Card's competitors who agreed to carry Lawson Mardon's local view cards. As a result, Southern Card has faced new competition in the chain stores for sales of postcards in the Orlando market.

III. Analysis of Summary Judgment Motion

A. Tying claim - 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 14

Southern Card alleges that Lawson Mardon's sales of Disney and local view cards constitute an illegal tying arrangement in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1 & 14 \(West Supp. 1996\). Lawson Mardon seeks summary judgment on the tying claim, contending that the "tie-in" alleged by Southern Card is not illegal per se, and should be evaluated under the rule of reason standard.

HN2 Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not mention "tying," but prohibits contracts in restraint of trade: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint [*9] of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 \(West Supp. 1996\). A tying arrangement may violate § 1 of the Sherman Act "if the seller has 'appreciable economic power' in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\) (quoting Fortner Enters., Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 503, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 \(1969\)). Tying claims may violate § 3 of the Clayton Act pursuant to the same test as the Sherman Act if the tie-in involves goods, wares, merchandise or other commodities. Jefferson Parish Hospital v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 23-24 n.39, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). Eleventh Circuit and Supreme Court precedent define HN3 a "tying" arrangement, a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act, as "an agreement by a party to sell one product [the "tying" product] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or "tied") product." A tying arrangement is not illegal, however, simply because two products are sold together in the same package. The [*10] key to such an arrangement's anticompetitiveness (and thus its illegality) is the seller's ability to force buyers to purchase one product in the package, the tied product, by virtue of the seller's control or dominance over the other product in the package, the tying product. As the Supreme Court stated ... "the essential characteristics of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms."

Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co. of Ga., 815 F.2d 1407 \(11th Cir. 1987\) (quoting Northern Pacific Railway Co., 356 U.S. 1, 4, 78 S. Ct. 514, 517, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 \(1958\) and Jefferson Parish Hospital v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1558, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\) (other citations and footnote omitted)). Southern Card's state law antitrust claims are to be construed under federal law, except for interstate commerce issues. See St. Petersburg Yacht Charters, Inc. v. Morgan Yacht, Inc., 457 So. 2d 1028, 1032 (Fla. 2d DCA 1984) (the Florida legislature has adopted as the law of Florida [*11] the body of antitrust law developed by the federal courts under the Sherman Act); Hackett v. Metropolitan General Hospital, 465 So. 2d 1246, 1251 (Fla. 2d DCA 1985) (same).

In this case, Lawson Mardon challenges the application of the per se rule, contending that the alleged tie should be analyzed under the rule-of-reason standard, and not as a per se illegal restraint, because the alleged "tie" in this case is really a vertical nonprice restraint. See Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988) (applying rule of reason analysis to a vertical nonprice restraint).

HN4[] In traditional "tying" cases, in which the end consumer is subjected to the tie-in, the Eleventh Circuit uses a per se analysis. See, e.g., Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1414 (applying per se analysis). However, "not every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain competition." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 11. This is especially the case when the tie-in does not force the end consumer to buy the two products together. Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1382 (5th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1103, 115 S. Ct. [*12] 779, 130 L. Ed. 2d 673 (1995). The practice challenged in this case is unlike traditional tying arrangements, historically condemned under the antitrust laws, because Southern Card does not allege that the ultimate consumer must buy the tied product (a local view postcard) to buy the tying product (a Disney postcard). As another district court has recently recognized, "the law has undergone substantial changes in recent years and modern tying cases indicate that tying may be subject to a 'rule of reason' balancing approach." Servicetrends, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 870 F. Supp. 1042, 1060 n.11 (N.D. Ga. 1994) (four Supreme Court Justices favor removing tying from the per se category of antitrust offenses) (citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)).<sup>2</sup> The Eleventh Circuit has recognized that, HN5[] although tying arrangements are one of the classic per se forms of anti-competitive behavior, such claims can also be analyzed under the rule of reason in certain instances. Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1574 (11th Cir. 1991), cert. denied sub nom. DeKalb Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Thompson, 506 U.S. 903, 121 L. Ed. 2d 219, 113 S. Ct. 295 (1992) (citing [Tic-X-Press, Inc. \[\*13\] v. Omni Promotions Co. of Ga.](#), 815 F.2d 1407 (11th Cir. 1987) and Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 608-10, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872, (1953)). This shift to a rule of reason analysis is particularly evident in cases involving middlemen, who are intermediate links in the chain of commerce.

In certain situations, HN6[] a tie-in can foreclose some distributors of the tied product without threatening the kind of impact on [*14] consumers that anti-tying rules are designed to prevent. IX Philip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1725a., at 317 (1991). Requiring a distributor to purchase a tied product from the manufacturer need not impair the ultimate consumers' purchases from the manufacturer's rivals who sell directly to consumers or who continue to reach consumers through an ample number of other dealers. Id. Arrangements whereby the manufacturer requires a distributor (or dealer) to carry a less popular item from its line in order to receive a more popular item has been described by various courts as "full" or "representative" line forcing or "vertical nonprice restraints," undeserving of per se treatment. When "only dealers are subject to a tie, competitors do not lose a segment of the tied market if there are genuine alternative paths to consumers." Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1383.

The Eleventh Circuit has not ruled on a case involving a distributor or middleman subjected to an alleged tie-in,<sup>3</sup> however, other appellate courts have considered "forcing" or vertical nonprice arrangements similar to the one in the instant case and determined such arrangements were not per se illegal. HN7[] In cases [*15] in which manufacturers required dealers to carry a full or representative line, or conditioned purchase of a more popular product on the purchase of a less popular product, appellate courts have held that such arrangements were not illegal per se, since they often promote competition, rather than stifle it, thereby benefitting the ultimate consumer. See, e.g., Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1383 \(5th Cir. 1994\) (holding manufacturer's requirement that dealer buy less popular product to have access to more popular product to be a vertical nonprice restraint), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1103, 115 S. Ct. 779, 130 L. Ed. 2d 673 (1995); Smith Machinery Co., Inc. v. Hesston Corp., 878 F.2d 1290, 1296 \(10th Cir. 1989\) (holding manufacturer's requirement for distributor to carry full line to be a vertical nonprice restraint), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1073, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1026, 110 S. Ct. 1119 (1990); Southern Pines Chrysler-Plymouth v. Chrysler Corp., 826 F.2d 1360, 1363 \(4th Cir. 1987\) (holding manufacturer's conditioning dealer's purchase of desirable autos on purchase of hard-to-sell autos not within antitrust statute); Fox Motors, Inc. v. Mazda Distributors, 806 F.2d 953, 959 \(10th Cir. 1986\) (holding challenged [*16] allocation system was not per se unlawful); Paul E. Volpp Tractor Parts v. Caterpillar, Inc., 917 F. Supp. 1208, 1231 \(W.D.Tenn. 1995\) (holding per se analysis of exclusive line-forcing arrangement to be inappropriate).

---

<sup>2</sup> "This evolution in judicial thinking is based on a reevaluation of the economic theory associated with tying. Originally, tying was condemned because of a fear that a firm with monopoly power in the tying product market would be able to use that power as a lever into the tied product market. The leverage theory underpinning the per se treatment of tying has lost favor, however, as economists today generally concede that tying cannot transfer monopoly power from one market to another." Servicetrends, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 870 F. Supp. 1042, 1060 n.11 (N.D. Ga. 1994).

<sup>3</sup> Compare Graphic Products Distributors v. Itek Corp., 717 F.2d 1560, 1568 (11th Cir. 1983) (holding anticompetitive effect to be "at the center of the analysis" of vertical nonprice restraint claim).

In Smith Machinery Co., Inc. v. Hesston Corp., 878 F.2d 1290 \(10th Cir. 1989\), the Tenth Circuit held that an arrangement whereby a manufacturer required a dealer to carry one product in its line to receive the more popular product (but did not prohibit the dealer from carrying competing lines) enhanced interbrand competition by making another product available for sale to the public. *Id.* at 1296; see also Paul E. Volpp, 917 F. Supp. at 1230 (exclusive line forcing arrangement enhanced interbrand competition). The plaintiff in Smith argued that due to its limited [*17] financial resources, this requirement restricted competition because every forced purchase of the defendant's "tied" product effectively foreclosed the plaintiff's purchase of a product sold by the defendant's competitor. Smith, 878 F.2d at 1296. The Tenth Circuit rejected this argument, saying:

HN8 [↑] Where a dealer is serving as an intermediate link in a distribution chain, if one manufacturer is foreclosed from selling to a dealer because of [an] arrangement, it is likely going to find another way to take its product to market, providing a profit potential continues to exist In such a case, there is no ultimate foreclosure to the consumer of a choice of goods. In other more traditional tying arrangements there is an ultimate foreclosure of choice to the ultimate consumer. Thus, a foreclosure of choice to an ultimate consumer appears to be the principal key to a tie that is illegal per se. No such foreclosure occurs or is threatened in a typical line forcing situation....

Id.

Similarly, in Ray B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., the Fifth Circuit considered an alleged tie in which the manufacturer of foodhandling equipment conditioned the distributor's [*18] purchase of patty machines on the purchase of patty paper to be used with the machine. 28 F.3d 1379 \(5th Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 779 (1995). The Fifth Circuit held that the agreement constituted a vertical nonprice restraint between a manufacturer and dealer on goods that the dealer offered to customers independently--in effect an exclusive dealing agreement 28 F.3d at 1384. The customers purchasing the patty machines from the distributor were free to buy the patty paper from another paper manufacturer elsewhere; only the distributor was bound. Id. "Such an arrangement is not the sort 'that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output'" and does not warrant per se analysis. 28 F.3d at 1384-85 (quoting Sharp, 485 U.S. 717 at 723).

Rejecting the per se analysis, the Fifth Circuit used the rule of reason standard, holding that such an arrangement would be illegal only if it had a substantially adverse effect on competition. *Id.* at 1385; see also Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 343, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 \(1982\) (party challenging the alleged unlawful tie must set forth both the tying arrangement and that the arrangement [*19] is "an unreasonable restraint on competition"); Paul E. Volpp Tractor Parts v. Caterpillar, Inc., 917 F. Supp. 1208, 1231 \(W.D. Tenn 1995\) (citing Maricopa and Taylor). HN9 [↑] When an alleged action is not per se illegal, the Court must apply the rule of reason to determine whether the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition. Sharp, 485 U.S. at 723.

1. Anticompetitive effect

Lawson Mardon contends that, as in Smith Machinery and Taylor, Lawson Mardon's packaged sales arrangement only affected distributors and did not foreclose competition in the local view postcard market for the ultimate consumers. Lawson Mardon contends that "faced with vigorous competition from other postcard manufacturers," it is merely using its exclusive arrangement with Southern Card as a means to bring its entire line of Disney and local view postcards to market, and there "has been no foreshore to the consumer of a choice of postcards."

In this case, Southern Card serves as an intermediate link in a distribution chain between manufacturers and retailers, who then sell to the ultimate consumer. This is not a case of foreclosure to the ultimate consumer [*20] -- the "principal key to a tie that is illegal per se." See Smith, 878 F.2d at 1296. Since Southern Card fails to allege a tie-in that is illegal per se, its tying claim will be evaluated under the rule of reason approach. Under this approach, Southern Card must set forth the alleged tying arrangement and that the arrangement unreasonably restrains competition. Lawson Mardon seeks summary judgment on the tying claims, contending that Southern Card has failed as a matter of law to demonstrate that Lawson Mardon has unreasonably restrained competition.

Southern Card contends that three items demonstrate the "anticompetitive effect" of Lawson Mardon's actions in the local view postcard market First, Southern Card contends that a competing distributor has testified that it will not buy local view postcards from other manufacturers. When the distributor was asked, "If a printer solicited you tomorrow, for example offering you let's say a better price and a higher quality of general and local view cards, would you use that printer?", the distributor merely answered "No." Doc. 87, Ex. 3 at 26, Scenic Card Depo. However, the same distributor testified that Lawson Mardon did not require [*21] him to purchase his general and local view cards from Lawson Mardon, but that he did so in part not to jeopardize the relationship. Id. Southern Card's interpretation of a competing distributor's preference for Lawson Mardon's local view cards, without more, is speculation. [HN10\[\]](#) "Speculation about anticompetitive effects is not enough." Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1385.

Second, Southern Card contends that Lawson Mardon has a disproportionate share of the local view market based on the statement of a competing distributor. In fact, the distributor was asked, "Is Lawson Mardon's share of the non-Disney market in this local area greater than outside of this area?" He responded, "It could be." The distributor's lack of expertise in assessing market share underscores the difference between a lay opinion and an economist's expert opinion. Southern Card has failed to present any supportable opinion on the size of Lawson Mardon's local view market share in or outside of Orlando. See American Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 \(11th Cir. 1985\) (relevant market cannot be based on lay opinion testimony).

Third. Southern Card contends that consumers pay more for local view cards [*22] in Orlando than elsewhere in the state. Even assuming arguendo that Dr. Seaman's study is valid <sup>4</sup> for the price of local view cards sold within and outside the Orlando area, Dr. Seaman's conclusions are without foundation since he has not adequately derived the relevant market for the tied product, local view postcards.

[HN11\[\]](#)

In order to show anticompetitive effect under the rule of reason standard, "a plaintiff must first offer proof of a 'well-defined relevant market upon which [*23] the challenged anticompetitive actions would have had a substantial impact.'" Cf. Graphic Products Dist. v. Itek Corp. 717 F.2d 1560, 1569. In the case of a tying vertical nonprice restraint between a manufacturer and a distributor, the manufacturer's power in the tying market "tells us nothing of other [competing] distributors." Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1384. To survive summary judgment, Southern Card must show an anticompetitive effect in the tied market Evaluation of the anticompetitive effect of an alleged restraint is "rendered impossible in the absence of proof regarding the economic significance (or relevance) of the market

---

<sup>4</sup> Dr. Seaman's survey is of little value for purposes of determining the cause of the alleged price differential. First, Southern Card did not file the supporting information with Dr. Seaman's affidavit. Second, any price differential may be caused by the biased sample of local view postcard purchases from Orlando gift and souvenir shops, rather than from lower-cost retail outlets served by Southern Card. Third, Dr. Seaman fails to factor in differentials in the cost of living (or cost of a vacation) in the various parts of the state.

allegedly influenced by the defendant's conduct." L.A. Draper & Son v. Wheelabrator-Frye, Inc., 735 F.2d 414, 423 (11th Cir. 1984).

HN12[] Southern Card must establish the particularized or relevant market in which the defendant's actions had an anticompetitive effect. The relevant market contains a product dimension and a geographic dimension, both of which must be shown to be economically significant. Id. The product dimension is determined by the availability of substitutes to which consumers can turn in response to price increases and other existing [*24] or potential producers' ability to expand output Id. The geographic dimension is the area in which the product or its reasonably interchangeable substitutes are traded. Id.

Southern Card has alleged that the relevant product market for the tied product is local (and general) view cards. Seaman Report P 1a. Dr. Seaman opines that the tying product is Disney postcards and the tied product is local view cards based on his analysis of their substitutability and cross price elasticities. Lawson Mardon challenges Southern Card's definition of two separate product markets, contending that Disney postcards and local view postcards are one product with high substitutability.<sup>5</sup> Lawson Mardon also challenges the relevant geographic market of the greater Orlando area contending that the geographic market for postcards is national or international. The Court finds that, even assuming arguendo that local view postcards constitute the relevant product market, Southern Card offers insufficient proof to create a genuine issue of material fact as to the relevant geographic boundaries of the local view postcard market. HN13[] Without a definition of the relevant market in which commerce is allegedly [*25] being restrained, there is no way to measure the anticompetitive effect. American Key Corp. v. Cumberland Assoc., 579 F. Supp. 1245, 1255 (N.D. Ga. 1983) (rejecting plaintiff's definition of geographic market), aff'd, 762 F.2d 1569 (11th Cir. 1985) (affirming grant of summary judgment). "Ordinarily 'the relevant geographic market is the area in which sellers of the particular product or service operate and to which purchasers can practicably turn for such products or services.'" 579 F. Supp. at 1256 (quoting H.M. Applebaum, et al., Antitrust Law Developments, at 51 (ABA 1975)).

HN14[]

In determining the relevant geographic market in which a product or its substitutes are traded, "such economic and physical barriers to expansion as transportation costs, delivery limitations and customer convenience and preference must be considered." Draper, 735 F.2d at 423 (quoting Hornsby Oil Co. v. Champion Sparkplug, 714 F.2d 1384, 1394 (5th Cir. 1983)). [*26] The location and facilities of other distributors are essential in determining the relevant geographic market Draper, 735 F.2d at 423. "Economically significant geographic barriers limit the ability of sellers outside the market to operate within, and the ability of purchasers to obtain the product from suppliers outside the geographic area." Id. (citing Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961)). "If sellers within the market must take account of sellers outside it, either because those sellers are mobile and can easily come into the area to sell, or because buyers are mobile and can easily go outside the area to buy, the market is being defined too narrowly." Draper, 735 F.2d at 423 (quoting L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust § 19 at 68 (1977)).

In Draper, the Eleventh Circuit affirmed the district court's granting of a directed verdict when the plaintiff insufficiently proved the relevant market. 735 F.2d 414 (11th Cir. 1984). The plaintiff defined the geographic market as the four-state area in which it had 50% of the relevant product sales. Id. at 423. The Eleventh Circuit held that any showing on how the four-state [*27] sales area functioned as a distinct or relevant geographic market was "notably absent from the record"; the plaintiff had offered no evidence on the location of the product manufacturers (other than defendant's location) or the ability of those competing manufacturers to sell in the four-state area. Id. Even though the plaintiff-distributor competed in the four-state area with eight to ten other distributors, there was no evidence in the record concerning where those competing distributors obtained the product or sold the product Id. The plaintiff also failed to introduce evidence of the sales pattern of competing distributors, other than that of its main competitor. Id. Upon completing its analysis, the Eleventh Circuit rejected the four-state sales area as the appropriate geographic market definition. Id. at 425.

---

<sup>5</sup> The Court addresses this issue in greater detail supra.

In this case, Southern Card's expert, Dr. Seaman, opines that the relevant geographic market is two counties in the greater Orlando area, closest to Disney World. Even if this is arguably the relevant geographic market for Disney postcards, it is not the relevant market for local view postcards, the market for which anticompetitive effects must be considered. [*28] As Dr. Seaman readily admits, the manufacturers of local view postcards who compete with Lawson Mardon are national and international. Further, the postcards are not printed locally in Orlando, and it is not necessary for the manufacturer to be located nearby since the "local view" depicted on the postcard is often owned by the distributor and merely printed by the manufacturer. These factors alleviate the necessity of using a locally-based manufacturer. It is undisputed that Lawson Mardon sells nationwide and that Southern Card has purchased local view cards from other national and international manufacturers, Dynacolor (of Miami, Florida) and Argentofot (of Germany).

Additionally, Southern Card's customers, the chain stores, purchase local view postcards for sale to their customers throughout the state of Florida, not just in Orlando. Dr. Seaman admits that chain store buyers negotiate with distributors to service large areas of the state, not just the Orlando area. These factors support at least a statewide, if not a national, geographic market for local view postcards. Applying the Eleventh Circuit's Draper analysis to the instant case, Southern Card has failed to sufficiently [*29] identify the greater Orlando area as a distinct geographic market.

In this case, it is undisputed that Southern Card competes with eight other independent postcard distributors. However, other distributors' sales areas or sales patterns, or which manufacturers they purchase from, are factors completely absent from Dr. Seaman's definition of the relevant geographic market. The only information of the sales of manufacturers competing with Lawson Mardon is a distributors' guess that Lawson Mardon has less than 50% of the local view sales in Florida; therefore other manufacturers must have more than 50%. The Court finds that Southern Card's opposition and expert's report is devoid of sufficient evidence to support the use of "greater Orlando" as the relevant geographic market. By failing to sufficiently define the relevant geographic market, Southern Card cannot demonstrate that Lawson Mardon's actions have an anticompetitive effect on the local view postcards market. Summary judgment is warranted on the tying claims, under the rule of reason approach.

2. Per se analysis

The Court believes that the rule of reason approach is appropriate in this case. However, even if the Court were [*30] to use a per se analysis, Southern Card's tying claims would fail. HN15[] The four elements required to prove that a tying arrangement is illegal per se, are those set forth in the Eleventh Circuit case of Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co. of Ga.:

- 1) that there are two separate products, a "tying" product and a "tied" product; 2) that those products are in fact "tied" together --that is, the buyer was forced to buy the tied product to get the tying product; 3) that the seller possesses sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce buyer acceptance of the tied product; and 4) involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the market of the tied product

815 F.2d 1407, 1414 \(11th Cir. 1987\).

Assuming arguendo that the per se test is appropriate, summary judgment nevertheless would be warranted because the alleged "Disney" and non-Disney classifications are not two separate products such that there can be a "tie-in" between them (element # 1). Rather, all of Lawson Mardon's postcards are sufficiently unitary to be considered a single product. See Areeda P 1725d, at 324 & n.29. Whether one or two products [*31] are involved "turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 19, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). No tying arrangement can exist unless there is a sufficient demand for the purchase of local view cards separate from Disney cards to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer the local view postcards separately from Disney cards. See id. at 19.

It is undisputed that there are significant fluctuations in the demand for "Disney" postcards throughout the state; there is limited demand for Disney postcards other than in the Orlando area.<sup>6</sup> However, fluctuating demand in different parts of the state for a particular type of postcard does not create two separate products. Compare Southern Pines Chrysler-Plymouth v. Chrysler Corp., 826 F.2d 1360, 1363 (4th Cir. 1987) (holding that various models of one car manufacturer are not separate products; differences in demand for models merely reflection of shifting tastes within same product market).

[*32] Southern Card's expert, Dr. Seaman, opines that the large volume of Disney postcards sold in the two-county area in close proximity to the Disney attractions "is suggestive of limited substitutability between the two types of [Disney and local view] postcards" and thus suggests the existence of two separate product markets. Seaman's Rep. at 6-7. However, in his deposition, Dr. Seaman acknowledged that the final consumer (once distributors and retailers are excluded) would probably view Disney and non-Disney postcards as "reasonably similar products." Doc. 56 at 112-13; 133-34 ("If the only consumer worth considering in this situation is the final consumer of these cards, it wouldn't make any difference to them.").

Further, Lawson Mardon's expert, Dr. Blair, refutes the opinion that the popularity of Disney cards in Orlando creates two separate product markets:

Dr. Seaman [Plaintiff's expert] attempts to bolster the notion that Disney postcards and non-Disney postcards are in separate markets in Orlando because Disney postcards are more popular in Orlando than non-Disney postcards. For Dr. Seaman, Disney and non-Disney postcards are not in separate product [*33] markets in Pensacola, but they are in separate product markets in Orlando. Frankly, this is economically illogical. When products are differentiated, some are apt to be more popular than others. This does not place them in separate markets for antitrust purposes.

Doc. 50 at 8. In fact, the more logical analysis is that the "Disney" cards have a particularly localized demand in the Orlando area because they are associated with the principal tourist attraction there, Walt Disney World (and its characters).

However, fluctuations in the demand for particular types of postcards in the different parts of the state does not create separate product markets.<sup>7</sup> Dr. Seaman admits that "a highly distinct localized demand" for postcards is "an inevitable element" present in each "relevant geographic market" Doc. 87, Ex. 13 at 16.

After all, local view is by definition limited [sic] to a particular location. There is no real market for Grand Canyon local view post cards in the area surrounding Mount Rushmore. [One distributor] has testified that he is not able to sell a warehouse full of Disney post cards in the Panhandle section of Florida, which is at least in the same state [*34] as the Disney attractions.

Id. Dr. Seaman admits that, in order to support his analysis, he must deviate from the "general rule that two products do not vary in their degree of substitutability across geographical areas" and recognize Disney postcards as a separate product Dr. Seaman does not cite any legal or economic support for this admitted deviation from the general rule.

As further evidence of the separate markets for the products, Southern Card points to Lawson Mardon's own treatment of the Disney postcards as a separate product is a vis the local view postcards. It is undisputed that Lawson Mardon develops and engages in specific marketing plans for its Disney postcards, its distribution agreements have different sales requirements and separate pricing schedules [*35] for the Disney postcards, and it will allow for separate ordering and delivery of Disney postcards. This evidence does not indicate two separate product markets; rather, it is simply an indication of Lawson Mardon's separate treatment of its more popular featured postcards. Varying demand for a particular type of postcard in different parts of the state does not mean that two separate product markets exist for those products in the various areas. Compare Southern Pines, 826 F.2d at 1363. Southern Card has failed to define a separate product market for Disney cards as required under a per se analysis. Summary judgment is due to be granted on the tying claims under a per se approach.

<sup>6</sup> "In every area in Florida outside of the greater Orlando area, local view cards occupy the vast majority of rack space in retail outlets and greatly outsell all other postcards." Doc. 61 at 2.

<sup>7</sup> Dr. Blair uses the analogy of the varying demand for Coca Cola and RC Cola in the cities of Los Angeles and Houston. Despite the wide differences in demand in the two separate cities, the two colas are in the same product market.

B. Monopoly claims - 15 U.S.C. § 2

Southern Card claims that Lawson Mardon violated § 2 of the Sherman Act<sup>8</sup> by monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the market for the alleged tying product, the licensed Disney postcards. Lawson Mardon contends that Southern Card's claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization fail as a matter of law because Southern Card has not made any effort to measure market power in the relevant market.

[*36] HN17↑

"The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Levine v. Central Florida Medical Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1555 \(11th Cir. 1996\) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\)), cert. denied, 117 S. Ct. 75 (1996). To establish an attempted monopolization claim, "a plaintiff must show (1) an intent to bring about a monopoly and (2) a dangerous probability of success." Levine, 72 F.3d at 1555 (quoting Norton Tire Co. v. Tire Kingdom Co., 858 F.2d 1533, 1535 \(11th Cir. 1988\)).

HN18↑ "Proof of monopoly power in the relevant market is the first element of a monopolization claim, and proof that there is a dangerous probability of the defendant successfully attaining monopoly power is the second element of an attempted monopolization claim." Levine, 72 F.3d at 1556. A plaintiff's failure to adequately define the relevant market and to prove that the defendants possessed or [*37] were close to possessing monopoly power in the relevant market, will be fatal to a § 2 claim for monopolization and for attempted monopolization. See id.

In this case, Lawson Mardon contends that Southern Card has failed to adequately define the relevant market, in that Southern Card's expert does not have any opinion regarding the § 2 claims. HN19↑ The principal judicial device for measuring actual or potential market power remains market share, typically measured in terms of a percentage of total market sales." U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 994 \(11th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1221, 114 S. Ct. 2710, 129 L. Ed. 2d 837 (1994). Southern Card's expert, Dr. Seaman, testified that he did not have any opinion as to a violation of § 2, nor had he included such an analysis in his expert report. Doc. 56 at 70-71, Seaman Depo.<sup>9</sup>

[*38] Under Eleventh Circuit precedent, HN20↑ "construction of a relevant economic market or a showing of monopoly power in the market" cannot be based upon lay opinion testimony. American Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 \(11th Cir. 1985\) (affirming summary judgment for defendant). In its opposition, Southern Card fails to point to any expert testimony regarding the relevant economic market, and can point only to the insufficient lay opinions of a competing distributor and a Southern Card employee. Southern Card has failed to produce any admissible evidence that creates triable issues of fact with respect to the existence of a cognizable market or Lawson Mardon's monopoly power in such a market. See id.; see also Cal Distributing Co. v. Bay Distributors, Inc., 337 F. Supp. 1154, 1158 \(M.D. Fla. 1971\) (holding that relevant geographic market was entire Florida west coast area, rather than merely Sarasota area, where each of the six competitors was distributing wine in the entire Florida west coast area). Lawson Mardon's motion for summary judgment on the § 2 claims is due to be granted.

<sup>8</sup> HN16↑ Section 2 provides that "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony ...." 15 U.S.C.A. § 2 \(West Supp. 1996\).

<sup>9</sup> The Court also reviewed Dr. Seaman's supplemental affidavit filed on July 31, 1996 (Doc. 78) in opposition to Lawson Mardon's motion for summary judgment, and found no mention of an opinion as to the § 2 claims.

C. State claims - Fla. Stat. § 542.18, .19 & .22

Southern Card claims [*39] that Lawson Mardon's actions violated the Florida Antitrust Act. Florida antitrust law mirrors federal law as applied to the tying, monopolization and attempted monopolization claims in the instant case. See St. Petersburg Yacht Charters, Inc. v. Morgan Yacht, Inc., 457 So. 2d 1028 (Fla. 2d DCA 1984). State law does not offer alternative grounds for Southern Card's claims to survive summary judgment.

Based on the foregoing, it is ordered as follows:

1. Lawson Mardon Post Card's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 42) is GRANTED.
2. The case is removed from the November 1996 trial docket.
2. The Clerk is directed to enter a final judgment providing that the Plaintiff Southern Card & Novelty, Inc. shall take nothing on its claims against the Defendants, Lawson Mardon Label, Inc. d/b/a Lawson Mardon Post Card, and Daniel J. Saunders, and that the Defendants shall recover their costs of action.
3. The Clerk is directed to CLOSE the file.
4. Lawson Mardon's Motion to Strike Expert Affidavit Testimony and In Limine to Exclude Expert Testimony Regarding Damages (Doc. 86) is DENIED as moot.
5. Southern Card's Motion In Limine to Prohibit Evidence of Settlement or Compromise [*40] (Doc. 88) is DENIED as moot.
6. Southern Card's Motion In Limine to Preclude Any Reference to the Trebling of Damages (Doc. 90) is DENIED as moot.
7. Southern Card's Motion In Limine to Prohibit Bad Acts Evidence (Doc. 92) is DENIED as moot.
8. Southern Card's Motion to Compel Attendance of Witnesses at Trial (Doc. 115) is DENIED as moot.

DONE AND ORDERED in Chambers, Orlando, Florida, this 19th day of November, 1996.

ANNE C. CONWAY

United States District Judge

State ex rel. Ieyoub v. Bordens, Inc.

Court of Appeal of Louisiana, Fourth Circuit

November 20, 1996, Decided

No. 95-CA-2655

Reporter

684 So. 2d 1024 *; 1996 La. App. LEXIS 2746 **; 95-2655 (La.App. 4 Cir. 11/20/96);

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EX REL RICHARD P. IEYOUB, ATTORNEY GENERAL, ET AL v. BORDENS, INC.

Subsequent History: [**1] Rehearing Refused January 16, 1997. Released for Publication January 16, 1997.

Prior History: APPEAL FROM CIVIL DISTRICT COURT, FOR THE PARISH OF ORLEANS. NO. 94-15827, DIVISION "J". HONORABLE GEORGE C. CONNOLLY, JR., JUDGE.

Disposition: AFFIRMED

Core Terms

---

prescription, antitrust, bids, one year, bid-rigging, conspiracy, period of prescription, federal complaint, attorney general, damages, antitrust action, parens patriae, prescribed, school system, concealment, schools, prices, milk

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

La. Const. art. IV, § 8 and La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 13:5036 provide the Attorney General's authority to institute proceedings to protect the state's interests. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:138 of the Louisiana Anti-Monopoly Statute, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §51:121 et seq., provides authority to file suit to enforce the antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

State attorney generals have parens patriae authority to bring antitrust actions on behalf of state citizens.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

684 So. 2d 1024, *1024 (1996 La. App. LEXIS 2746, **1

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Double Jeopardy > Res Judicata

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN3 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A final judgment in a criminal prosecution by the United States shall be prima facie evidence against a defendant in any civil proceeding as to all matters which would be res judicata between the parties to the suit or prosecution. Running of prescription of a private right of action arising under the laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in the proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency of the federal criminal proceeding. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:132 of the Louisiana Anti-Monopoly Statute, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §51:121 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

An antitrust action sounds in tort and the one year prescriptive period of La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 3492 applies in a private action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Torts > ... > Statute of Limitations > Begins to Run > Continuing Violations

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN5 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The one year prescriptive period begins to run from the date actual or appreciable damage is sustained. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 3492. The damage need not be calculable or fully incurred but cannot be speculative. The commencement of prescription is delayed when a complex business tort, similar to a continuing tort, is involved. Prescription does not begin to run until the continuing tort ceases. There must be continuing acts coupled with continued damages.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 [down] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

Prescriptive statutes are strictly construed against prescription and in favor of the claim. If there are two possible constructions of a prescriptive statute, the one that maintains the action should be adopted.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN7 Legislation, Statute of Limitations

The burden of proving that a suit has prescribed rests with the party pleading prescription. When a petition reveals on its face that prescription has run, the plaintiff has the burden of showing that the claim has not prescribed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN8 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate antitrust laws, each time a plaintiff is injured by the act of a defendant, a cause of action accrues to recover damages caused by that act and the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the last act. Federal cases interpreting the statute of limitations involved in antitrust actions hold that in a conspiracy action the period begins with an overt act pursuant to the conspiracy. Cases look to the last bid in which wrongdoing is alleged in bid rigging cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN9 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In an antitrust action the plaintiff must know or should have known that he is sustaining an actionable injury before the prescriptive period begins to run. When an act does not effect a traumatic injury but produces ill effects by passage of time, and it is impossible to designate the exact moment when the act produced the requisite damage to start prescription, recovery should be allowed for all damages sustained within one year prior to the filing of the suit.

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Revival

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Statute of Limitations, Revival

There are two grounds for allowing an antitrust suit to be filed more than four years after the events that create the cause of action: the continuing conspiracy or continuing violation exception that allows a cause of action to accrue whenever the defendant commits an overt act to further the antitrust conspiracy, and the revival of the cause of action outside the limitations period because the plaintiff's damages were speculative or unprovable when the act originally occurred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN11 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Actions to show fraudulent concealment need not be separate from the acts underlying the bid-rigging.

Counsel: RICHARD P. IEYOUB, Attorney General, JANE BISHOP JOHNSON, Assistant Attorney General, Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70801, Attorneys for Plaintiff/Appellee.

ALSTON & BIRD, MICHAEL A. DOYLE, Atlanta, Georgia 30309-3424 and JONES, WALKER, WAECHTER, POITEVENT, CARRERE & DENEGRE, L.L.P., EDWARD H. BERGIN, PAULINE F. HARDIN, NAN ROBERTS EITEL, New Orleans, Louisiana 70170-5100, Attorneys for Defendant/Appellant.

Judges: PANEL Judge Denis A. Barry, Judge Robert J. Klees, Judge Joan Bernard Armstrong. JUDGE DENIS A. BARRY, Author.

Opinion by: DENIS A. BARRY

Opinion

---

Pg 1

[*1026] On October 10, 1994 the State ex rel. the Attorney General filed a petition for treble damages (pursuant to Louisiana Anti-Monopoly Statute, La. R.S. 51:132, 51:137 and 51:138) against Borden's Inc. (Borden) in state court.

<sup>1</sup> The Attorney General sued on behalf of a number of Louisiana school systems alleging the schools did not receive competitive bids or pay competitive prices for milk; and on behalf of school <sup>**2</sup> children who paid inflated prices due to bid-rigging. <sup>2</sup> Attached to the petition was: an October 12, 1993 federal criminal antitrust complaint; Borden's guilty plea agreement; a federal judgment which fined Borden $ 750,000 for its participation in a conspiracy to rig bids (Sherman Antitrust Law) which was signed April 14, 1994 and entered April 18, 1994. <sup>3</sup> Borden removed [Pg 2] the case to federal court, but it was remanded to state court with a declaration that the Louisiana Attorney General had authority to sue in a parens patriae capacity, and Louisiana had a quasi-sovereign interest in the economic well-being of its citizens and was a real party in interest. In state court Borden filed an exception of prescription which was overruled.

---

<sup>1</sup> The petition is stamped October 10, 1994 and has an entry date of October 12, 1994.

<sup>2</sup> In two paragraphs the state alleges that the children who suffered damages are plaintiffs but they are not listed in the caption. Only the school systems are in the caption.

<sup>3</sup> The Attorney General and Borden make reference to an amended petition which included a number of Catholic dioceses. The record does not contain an amended petition.

[**3] THE LAW

HN1 [↑] La. Const. art. IV, § 8 and La. R.S. 13:5036 provide the Attorney General's authority to institute proceedings to protect the state's interests. La. R.S. 51:138 provides authority to file suit to enforce the Antitrust Law. Here the State filed the action on behalf of the school systems and the citizens of the state as parens patriae, literally "parent of the country," the concept of "standing" which is utilized to protect quasi-sovereign interests such as the general economy of the state. HN2 [↑] State attorney generals have parens patriae authority to bring antitrust actions on behalf of state citizens. See generally Alfred L. Snapp and Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico ex rel., Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 102 S. Ct. 3260, 73 L. Ed. 2d 995 \(1982\); State v. Time, Inc., 249 So. 2d 328 \(La. App. 1st Cir. 1971\), writ denied 259 La. 761, 252 So. 2d 456 (La. 1971); Black's Law Dictionary, 1003 (5th Ed. 1979); National Association of Attorneys General, L. Ross, ed., State Attorneys General: Powers and Responsibilities, 91-92.<sup>4</sup> HN3 [↑] A final judgment in a criminal prosecution by the United States "shall be prima facie evidence" against the defendant in any civil proceeding as to all matters [**4] which would be res judicata between the parties to the suit or prosecution. "Running of prescription of a private right of action arising under these laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in the [Pg 3] proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency of the [federal criminal] proceeding." La. R.S. 51:132.

There is no statute of limitation in La. R.S. 51:121 et seq., the Louisiana Anti-Monopoly Law, more particularly R.S. 51:137 which provides for recovery of treble damages. There is one Louisiana case which discusses a prescriptive period. In Loew's, Incorporated v. Don George, Inc., 237 La. 132, 110 So. 2d 553 \(La. 1959\), the Supreme Court held that HN4 [↑] an antitrust action sounds in tort and the one year prescriptive period of La. C.C. art. 3492 applies in a private action. See also [**5] Delaughter v. Borden Company, 364 F.2d 624 \(5th Cir. 1966\); Diliberto v. Continental Oil Company, 215 F. Supp. 863 \(E.D. La. 1963\)<sup>5</sup>; ABA Antitrust Section, State Antitrust Practice and Statutes: Chapter 20 for the State of Louisiana, 20-21 (1990).

HN5 [↑] The one year prescriptive period begins to run from the date actual or appreciable [*1027] damage is sustained. La. C.C. art. 3492. The damage need not be calculable or fully incurred but cannot be speculative. Harvey v. Dixie Graphics, Inc., 593 So. 2d 351 \(La. 1992\). The commencement of prescription is delayed when a complex business tort, similar to a continuing tort, is involved. Prescription does not begin to run until the continuing tort ceases. National Council on Compensation Insurance v. Quixx Temporary Services, Inc., 95-0725 \(La. App. 4 Cir. 11/1/95\), 665 So. 2d 120. There must be continuing acts coupled [**6] with continued damages. Id.; South Central Bell Telephone Company v. Texaco, Inc., 418 So. 2d 531 \(La. 1982\).

HN6 [↑] Prescriptive statutes are strictly construed against prescription and in favor of the claim. Bustamento v. Tucker, 607 So. 2d 532 \(La. 1992\). If there are two [Pg 4] possible constructions of a prescriptive statute, the one that maintains the action should be adopted. Louisiana Health Services and Indemnity Company v. Tarver, 93-2449 \(La. 4/11/94\), 635 So. 2d 1090.

HN7 [↑] The burden of proving that a suit has prescribed rests with the party pleading prescription. Boyd v. B.B.C. Brown Boveri, Inc., 26,889 \(La. App. 2 Cir. 5/10/95\), 656 So. 2d 683, writ not considered 95-2387 \(La. 12/8/95\), 664 So. 2d 417. When a petition reveals on its face that prescription has run, the plaintiff has the burden of showing that the claim has not prescribed. Wimberly v. Gatch, 93-2361 \(La. 4/11/94\), 635 So. 2d 206; Lima v. Schmidt, 595 So. 2d 624 \(La. 1992\). La. R.S. 51:122 et seq. is a counterpart to § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The U.S. Supreme Court's interpretation of the Sherman Act is a persuasive influence on the interpretation of our state statutes. Louisiana [**7] Power and Light Company v. United State Pipe Line Company, 493 So. 2d 1149 \(La. 1986\), rehearing granted on other grounds. Generally, an antitrust cause of action accrues when a defendant commits an act which injures a plaintiff's business. However, HN8 in the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate antitrust laws, each time a plaintiff is injured by the act of a defendant, a cause of action accrues to recover damages caused by that act and the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the last act. Al George, Inc. v. Envirotech Corporation, 939 F.2d 1271 (5th Cir. 1991), quoting Zenith Radio Corporation v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). See also Imperial Point Colonnades Condominium, Inc., 549 F.2d 1029 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied 434 U.S. 859, 98 S. Ct. 185, 54 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1977); Bell v. Dow Chemical Company, 847 F.2d 1179 (5th Cir. 1988); Poster Exchange, Inc. v. National Screen Service Corporation, 517 F.2d 117 (5th Cir. 1975). Federal cases interpreting the statute of limitations involved [Pg 5] in antitrust actions (four years under 15 U.S.C. § 15b) hold that in a conspiracy action the period begins with an overt act pursuant to the conspiracy; cases look to the last bid in which wrongdoing is alleged in bid rigging cases. See State of Texas v. Allan Construction Company, 851 F.2d 1526 (5th Cir. 1988).

---

<sup>4</sup> The Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Act of 1976 provides that any Attorney General of a state has the authority to sue parens patriae for treble damages for a Sherman Act violation. 15 U.S.C. § 15c.

<sup>5</sup> Loew's Incorporated, Delaughter, and Diliberto use La. C.C. art. 3536, which was subsequently incorporated into La. C.C. 3492.

HN9 In an antitrust action the plaintiff must know or should have known that he is sustaining an actionable injury before the prescriptive period begins to run. When an act does not effect a traumatic injury but produces ill effects by passage of time, and it is impossible to designate the exact moment when the act produced the requisite damage to start prescription, recovery should be allowed for all damages sustained within one year prior to the filing of the suit. Delaughter, 364 F.2d at 624.<sup>6</sup>

[**9] However, HN10 there are two grounds for allowing an antitrust suit to be filed more than four years after the events that create the [*1028] cause of action: the continuing conspiracy or continuing violation exception that allows a cause of action to accrue whenever the defendant commits an overt act to further the antitrust conspiracy; and the revival of the cause of action outside the limitations period because the plaintiff's damages were speculative or unprovable when the act originally occurred. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., [Pg 6] 677 F.2d 1045 (5th Cir. 1982). See also Zenith Radio Corporation, 91 S. Ct. at 795.

In order to avoid the federal statute of limitations a plaintiff may also invoke the fraudulent concealment doctrine, which is similar to Louisiana's doctrine of contra non valentem. Fraudulent concealment involves proof that the defendant concealed the injurious conduct and that the plaintiffs did not discover the conduct despite due diligence. Some federal circuits have held that antitrust violations arising from bid-rigging conspiracy are self-concealing and affirmative acts of concealment need not be shown. New York v. Hendrickson \*\*101 Brothers, Inc., 840 F.2d 1065 (2d Cir. 1988), cert. denied 488 U.S. 848, 109 S. Ct. 128, 102 L. Ed. 2d 101 (1988); State of Colorado ex rel. Colorado Attorney General v. Western Paving Construction Co., 833 F.2d 867 (10th Cir. 1987), panel opinion vacated en banc 841 F.2d 1025 (1988). See also Hobson v. Wilson, 237 U.S. App. D.C. 219, 737 F.2d 1 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. denied 470 U.S. 1084, 105 S. Ct. 1843, 85 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1985). The Fifth Circuit rejects that argument, but holds that HN11 actions to show fraudulent concealment need not be separate from the acts underlying the bid-rigging. State of Texas, 851 F.2d at 1531.

DISCUSSION

Borden argues that prescription runs where the State asserts claims in its parens patriae capacity and here the one year prescriptive period has run. The Attorney General counters that prescription does not run against the State based on La. Const. art. XII, § 13, which declares that "prescription shall not run against the state in any civil matter unless otherwise provided in the constitution or expressly by law." A parens patriae action brought by the State on behalf of its citizens has elements of private and public enforcement. The passage of the four year period under [**11] federal law is used to bar actions by the states. See State [Pg 7] v. Texas, 851 F.2d at 1526. The Attorney General quotes the constitutional article which grants the State immunity, but provides no support for that proposition in this case where the State filed suit on behalf of citizens and school systems against whom prescription runs. See State of Louisiana through Department of Highways v. City of Pineville, 403 So. 2d 49 (La. 1981). The passage of the prescriptive period has barred antitrust actions by states. See State v. Texas, 851 F.2d at 1526.

<sup>6</sup> At issue in Delaughter, 364 F.2d at 624, was Borden's alleged offering and paying of rebates and discounts, violations of the Louisiana Orderly Milk Marketing Act, which declared that each day's violation constituted a separate offense. The U.S. Fifth Circuit adopted Louisiana's one year prescriptive period because the Louisiana Supreme Court utilized the one year period in Loew's Inc., 237 La. at 132, 110 So. 2d at 553, which was a private anti-monopoly action. The Fifth Circuit reversed the district court's decision that the action prescribed because prescription ran from the month that Delaughter knew of Borden's injurious activities, and the action was filed more than one year afterward, and allowed Delaughter's claims for injuries sustained within one year of the filing of suit.

The Attorney General also argues that La. R.S. 51:121 et. seq. does not set out a prescriptive period for antitrust actions, and a ten year period is appropriate because Borden was unjustly enriched. Borden correctly notes that the petition below did not raise an unjust enrichment claim. The Petition For Treble Damages Pursuant To The Louisiana Monopolies Law referred to La. R.S. 51:132, 51:137 and 51:138 and sought treble damages as a result of Borden's acts. The petition alleged a bid-rigging scheme that affected the ability of the schools to receive fair competitive bids and pay competitive prices on milk sold to [**12] Louisiana schools. The petition claimed that Borden and its co-conspirators had a continuing agreement to allocate among themselves all or part of contracts to supply milk to schools, to refrain from submitting bids or to submit collusive, non-competitive and rigged bids, to supply milk to Louisiana schools at non-competitive prices. The petition claimed that Borden and the other co-conspirators discussed submission of bids, designated which conspirator was to be the low bidder, discussed and agreed upon prices to be bid, and submitted intentionally high bids. There is no mention of Borden's unjust enrichment except in an opposition to Borden's prescription exception. The petition did not allege unjust enrichment or quasi-contract. The one year prescriptive period of the antitrust law, La. [Pg 8] 51:121 et seq., applies. Loew's Incorporated, 110 So. 2d at 553; Delaughter, 364 F.2d at 624; Diliberto, 215 F. Supp. at 863.

[*1029] Borden contends that the petition predicates liability entirely upon the federal criminal antitrust judgment. Borden argues that the state civil claim is limited to the time frame of the federal judgment ending in June, 1989 and the October 10, 1994 petition has [**13] prescribed.

Paragraph 3 of the State's petition declares that "during the critical period, defendant engaged in the sale, processing and distribution of fluid milk...." Paragraph 10 of the petition filed October 10, 1994 states: "During the pertinent period, relative to the criminal judgment...." without directly stating the time period. The description of the offense in the federal information filed October 12, 1993 against Borden Inc. states: "Beginning at least as early as 1985 and continuing thereafter until at least June 1989, the exact dates being unknown to the United States, the defendant and others entered into and engaged in a combination and conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition by rigging bids...." Borden pleaded guilty pursuant to a plea bargain agreement on October 12, 1993 and judgment, which declared that the conduct concluded in June, 1989, was entered on April 18, 1994.

The civil petition does not clearly set out the time periods. The federal complaint, which arose pursuant to a federal grand jury investigation, stated that Borden's activities continued at least until June, 1989. The criminal antitrust judgment is prima facie evidence against Borden [**14] in the civil proceeding as to all matters which would be res judicata between the parties in the prosecution. Borden points out that the state court civil petition encompassed claims by 27 school systems not included in the federal complaint. Borden also declares that the [Pg 9] civil suit "appears to go far beyond the limited scope of the earlier federal proceeding." The federal complaint involved bid-rigging in western Louisiana; the civil suit includes a number of school systems in eastern Louisiana as well. The state civil petition covered far more than the federal complaint; it included a bid-rigging scheme involving many school systems not in the federal complaint. The parens patriae suit was not limited to the allegations and time periods in the federal complaint.<sup>7</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> The petition is poorly drafted, but Borden did not complain about the drafting; it only filed a prescription exception. The petition erroneously declares that "antitrust liability is established, leaving only damages to be proven at trial." However, the petition, which includes a number of school systems not mentioned in the federal complaint, is not limited to the ending date in the federal judgment.

[**15] Regardless, the one year tort period runs from the time the plaintiff acquired sufficient knowledge of the offense to realize there was an injury. Delaughter, 364 F.2d at 624. The federal complaint was filed October, 1993 and Borden concedes that prescription as to the civil suit was suspended until the judgment of April 18, 1994. The state petition filed October 10, 1994 was not prescribed on its face. In its memorandum in support of its prescription exception, Borden argued that the civil action had prescribed one year after the June, 1989 date in the federal judgment. It did not allege or show that bid-rigging was known prior to the date the federal complaint was filed. Nothing was presented to show there was sufficient knowledge about Borden's antitrust violations more than one year prior to filing the civil petition (deleting the time suspended because of the federal prosecution) or that the last act of bid-rigging in furtherance of the antitrust conspiracy occurred more than one year prior to that date.

Borden concedes that under La. R.S. 51:132 prescription was suspended from October 12, 1993 to April 18, 1994, and bid-rigging occurring after April [Pg 10] 14, 1993 (counting [**16] the date backward from October 12, 1994) fell within one year. Although Borden contends that such conduct was not properly alleged, we conclude the trial court did not err by overruling the prescription exception. The exception may be raised if the claims are subsequently shown to have prescribed.

The judgment is affirmed.

AFFIRMED

---

End of Document

Cyber Promotions v. America Online

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

November 26, 1996, Decided

C.A. NO. 96-2486, C.A. NO. 96-5213

Reporter

948 F. Supp. 456 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17771 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,675; 25 Media L. Rep. 1144

CYBER PROMOTIONS, INC. VS. AMERICA ONLINE, INC.; AMERICA ONLINE, INC. VS. CYBER PROMOTIONS, INC.

Disposition: [**1] Motion by Cyber Promotions, Inc. to amend its Complaint GRANTED. Cyber Promotions, Inc. GRANTED leave to file and serve a Second Amended Complaint in the form appended to its motion. Motion of Cyber Promotions, Inc. for injunctive relief in the form of a temporary restraining order DENIED.

Core Terms

---

advertisements, subscribers, e-mail, Internet, online, competitors, networks, temporary restraining order, electronic, marketing, blocking, servers, relevant market, messages, advertising material, facilities, software, injunctive relief, electronic mail, unsolicited, customers, hardware, non-AOL, sending, prices, Web, advertising agency, monopoly power, supracompetitive, communications

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Temporary Restraining Orders

HN1 [] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

The factors a court must consider when ruling on a motion for a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction are (1) the likelihood that the applicant will prevail on the merits at a final hearing; (2) the extent to which the plaintiff is being irreparably harmed by the conduct complained of; (3) the extent to which the defendants will suffer irreparable harm if the preliminary injunction is issued; (4) the public interest. All four factors should favor preliminary relief before the injunction will issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Under the "essential facilities" or "bottleneck" doctrine, a business or group of businesses which controls a scarce facility has an obligation to give competitors reasonable access to it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In order to make out a claim under the essential facilities doctrine, a plaintiff must show (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN4 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In order to show a defendant is a monopolist, a plaintiff must show that the defendant possessed monopoly power in a relevant market and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Monopoly power is the power to control prices and exclude competition with respect to a particular product and within a particular geographic market. The determination of a well-defined market, both geographically and by product, is essentially one of fact, turning on the unique market situation of each case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The test for determining the relevant product market is one of "reasonable interchangeability." That is, commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose make up that part of the trade or commerce, monopolization of which may be illegal. The key factor in determining whether certain products move in the same market is their cross-elasticity of demand, i.e. the degree that buyers of one product switch to the other in response to price changes. The higher the cross-elasticity of demand, the more buyers consider the two products substitutes for each other, and the more sensible it is to describe them as within the same market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

An "essential facility" is one which is not merely helpful but vital to the claimant's competitive viability.

Counsel: For CYBER PROMOTIONS, INC., PLAINTIFF: RALPH A. JACOBS, RICHARD M. BERNSTEIN, HOYLE, MORRIS & KERR, PHILADELPHIA, PA USA. GLENN S. GITOMER, JANEEN OLSEN DOUGHERTY, MC CAUSLAND, KEEN & BUCKMAN, RADNOR, PA USA. JONATHAN A. DAVID, LERNER, DAVID, LITTENBERG, KRUMHOLZ AND MENTLIK, WESTFIELD, NJ USA. For AMERICA ONLINE, INC., PLAINTIFF: MICHAEL A.

GROW, VORYS, SATER, SEYMOUR AND PEASE, WASHINGTON, DC USA. RONALD P. SCHILLER, PIPER AND MARBURY, PHILA, PA USA.

For AMERICA ONLINE INCORPORATED, DEFENDANT: RONALD P. SCHILLER, DAVID L. WEINREB, PIPER AND MARBURY, PHILA, PA USA. For CYBER PROMOTIONS, INC., DEFENDANT: RALPH A. JACOBS, RICHARD M. BERNSTEIN, HOYLE, MORRIS & KERR, PHILADELPHIA, PA USA. GLENN S. GITOMER, MC CAUSLAND, KEEN & BUCKMAN, RADNOR, PA USA. PAUL H. KOCHANSKI, LERNER, DAVID, LITTENBERG, ETAL, WESTFIELD, NJ USA.

Judges: CHARLES R. WEINER

Opinion by: CHARLES R. WEINER

Opinion

---

[*457] MEMORANDUM OPINION [*2] AND ORDER

WEINER, J.

NOVEMBER 26, 1996

A mere two days after this Court ruled in a Memorandum Opinion and Order dated November 4, 1996 that Cyber Promotions, Inc. ("Cyber") does not have a right under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution or under the Constitutions of Pennsylvania and Virginia to send unsolicited e-mail advertisements over the Internet to subscribers of American Online, Inc. ("AOL"), Cyber filed a motion for leave to [*458] amend its First Amended Complaint to assert an entirely different yet equally untenable theory which it claims gives it the right to use AOL's private property free of charge to send millions of e-mail advertisements to AOL subscribers that AOL's blocking of Cyber's e-mail advertisements in favor of its own advertising violates the federal antitrust laws. Specifically, Cyber contends that AOL has obtained a monopoly in the market for providing direct marketing advertising material via electronic transmission to AOL's own subscribers in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Proposed Second Amended Complaint at PP 119-21. Not only has Cyber sought leave to file a Second Amended Complaint alleging its monopolization [*3] theory, it has also moved for injunctive relief in the form of a temporary restraining order on that claim. Cyber, however, has not cited nor has our research disclosed a single case which has granted a temporary restraining order in a Sherman Act case. In any event, after reviewing the parties' submissions and hearing oral argument by telephone, we will grant the motion to amend but deny the motion for a temporary restraining order.

The following are facts from our Memorandum Opinion and Order of November 4, 1996 which the parties have stipulated to and which provide background to Cyber's motion for a temporary restraining order.

1. AOL is a private online company that has invested substantial sums of its own money in equipment, name, software and reputation.
2. AOL's members or subscribers pay prescribed fees for use of AOL resources, access to AOL and access and use of AOL's e-mail system and its connection to the Internet.
3. AOL's e-mail system operates through dedicated computers known as servers, which consist of computer hardware and software purchased, maintained and owned by AOL. AOL's computer servers have a finite, though expandable, capacity to handle e-mail. All Internet [*4] e-mail from non-AOL members to AOL customers or members and from AOL customers or members to non-AOL members requires the use of AOL's computer hardware and software in combination with the hardware and software of the Internet and the hardware and software of the non-AOL members.
4. Private companies compete with AOL in the online business.

5. Although the Internet is accessible to all persons with just a computer, a modem and a service provider, the constituent parts of the Internet (namely the computer hardware and software, servers, service providers and related items) are owned and managed by private entities and persons, corporations, educational institutions and government entities, who cooperate to allow their constituent parts to be interconnected by a vast network of phone lines.

6. In order for non-AOL members to send Internet e-mail to AOL members, non-AOL members must utilize a combination of their own hardware and software, the Internet and AOL's network.

7. Cyber, an advertising agency incorporated in 1996, provides advertising services for companies and individuals wishing to advertise their products and services via e-mail.

8. Cyber sends its e-mail via the Internet [**5] to members of AOL, members of other commercial online services and other individuals with an Internet e-mail address.

9. AOL provides its subscribing members with one or more e-mail addresses so that members can exchange e-mail with one another and exchange e-mail (both sending and receiving) over the Internet with non-AOL members.

10. AOL attached to its Memorandum of Law in Support of its Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on First Amendment Issues three sets of examples of e-mail messages sent by Cyber to AOL members. The first set (Tab 1) consists of a multi-page set of advertisements; the second set (Tab 2) consists of an exclusive or single-advertiser e-mail; and the third set (Tab 3) consists of a document called by Cyber an "e-mag." Under each tab are two examples, the first selected by AOL and the second selected by Cyber. The Court has reviewed all of the examples and notes that many of the ads [*459] include get-rich-quick ads, weight loss ads, health aid promises and even phone sex services.

In addition to the parties's factual stipulations, the following factual findings about the Internet itself made earlier this year by our court in American Civil Liberties Union v. Reno, **\[\*\*61** 929 F. Supp. 824 \(E.D. Pa. 1996\) are relevant:

11. The Internet is "a giant network which interconnects innumerable smaller groups of linked computer networks." Id. at 830. In short, it is "a global Web of linked networks and computers..." Id. at 831.

12. "The Internet is an international system." Id. It is "a decentralized, global medium of communications--or 'cyberspace'-- that links people, institutions, corporations, and governments around the world. This communications medium allows any of the literally tens of millions of people with access to the Internet to exchange information." Id.

13. "No single entity academic, corporate, governmental, or non-profit--administers the Internet. It exists and functions as a result of the fact that hundreds of thousands of separate operators of computers and computer networks independently decided to use common data transfer protocol to exchange communications and information with other computers (which in turn exchange communications and information with still other computers)." Id. at 832.

14. Computer users have a wide variety of avenues by which to access the Internet. Id. One such avenue is "through one of the major national [**7] commercial 'online services' such as America Online, CompuServe, the Microsoft Network, or Prodigy. Id. at 833. These online services offer nationwide computer networks (so that subscribers can dial-in to a local telephone number), and the services provide extensive and well organized content within their own proprietary computer networks. In addition to allowing access to the extensive content available within each online service, the services also allow subscribers to link to the much larger resources of the Internet." Id. (emphasis in original). "The major commercial online services have almost twelve million individual subscribers across the United States." Id. Approximately seven million individuals are subscribers of AOL.

15. There are a number of different ways to communicate over the Internet. One such way "is via electronic mail, or 'e-mail', comparable in principle to sending a first class letter. One can address and transmit a message to one or more other people." Id. at 834.

The Court has also received an unrefuted affidavit from a UNIX Systems Administrator for AOL who avers:

16. From September 18 through October 21, 1996 AOL received from Cyber an average of 1.5 [**8] million e-mail messages per day.
17. From October 21, 1996 to the present, Cyber has continued to send to AOL members, on average, more than one million e-mail messages per day.
18. From November 4 through November 11, 1996, Cyber has sent to AOL members more than 1.9 million e-mail messages per day.

The motivation behind Cyber's assertion of its latest theory which it claims entitles it to send unsolicited e-mail advertisements over the Internet to subscribers of AOL appears to be AOL's implementation of a system "tool" which it calls "PreferredMail-The Guard Against Junk E-Mail". This "tool" allows access to Cyber's e-mail advertisements to those AOL subscribers who wish to receive these advertisements. Cyber objects to this tool because, according to Cyber, it places the onus on the AOL subscriber to take affirmative steps to access Cyber's e-mail by checking off a box on the screen captioned "I want junk e-mail!" and because it groups legitimate advertisers such as Cyber with pornographic advertisers thereby discouraging the subscriber to choose to receive Cyber's e-mail. Cyber likens "PreferredMail" to a "virtual black list" because it "contains the names of Internet advertisers [**9] who are responsible for sending the vast majority of unsolicited advertising through the Internet to AOL subscribers." Memorandum of Cyber in Support of Motion for Injunctive Relief at 3-4.

[*460] Cyber points out in its Memorandum that AOL does not automatically block its own unsolicited advertising which it transmits to its subscribers under the label "marketing 'pop-up' messages". Instead, it places the onus on its subscribers to block these messages by entering an area of AOL called "Marketing Preferences". The Marketing Preferences area advises AOL subscribers that AOL sells the right to target electronic advertising to its subscribers and sells the subscribers names to direct mail advertisers who use the U.S. Postal Service to send unsolicited advertisements. Cyber contends that the "striking distinctions between the means by which an AOL subscriber can receive or block unsolicited advertising from AOL and its competitors was intended by AOL to secure, and has in fact secured, AOL's monopoly in the market for providing targeted electronic advertising to its subscribers." Second Amended Complaint at P 119. Cyber requests that we temporarily enjoin AOL from implementing its PreferredMail [**10] blocking tool, or from otherwise blocking system-wide, or interfering with, the electronic transmission of Cyber's advertising material sent to AOL subscribers.

HN1 The well-established factors we must consider when ruling on a motion for a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction are (1) the likelihood that the applicant will prevail on the merits at a final hearing; (2) the extent to which the plaintiff is being irreparably harmed by the conduct complained of; (3) the extent to which the defendants will suffer irreparable harm if the preliminary injunction is issued; (4) the public interest. S & R Corp. v. Jiffy Lube Intern., Inc., 968 F.2d 371, 374 (3rd Cir. 1992). "All four factors should favor preliminary relief before the injunction will issue." Id. Because Cyber cannot satisfy the first factor--a likelihood of success on the merits at a final hearing--the motion for injunctive relief in the form of a temporary restraining order must be denied.<sup>1</sup>

[**11] Cyber contends that the ability to advertise to AOL's subscribers over the Internet via electronic mail is an "essential facility" and that AOL has "refused to deal" with Cyber in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The irony of this contention is that AOL has not actually excluded Cyber from having access to AOL's system. Cyber is continuing to send its e-mail advertisements to AOL's servers. By implementing its PreferredMail system, AOL has given its own subscribers the option of viewing Cyber's e-mail without them having to pay to erase the e-mail every time they go online. Thus, Cyber is only being denied the access to AOL's system in a manner which it prefers, i.e.,

---

<sup>1</sup> As it has done in its previous motions for a temporary restraining order, Cyber continues to argue that unless a temporary restraining order is issued enjoining AOL from blocking Cyber's e-mail advertisements from reaching AOL's subscribers, AOL will go out of business. Despite the absence of any such orders, Cyber is not only still very much in business but, as the Roach affidavit discloses, has actually increased the amount of e-mail advertisements it sends to AOL servers to 1.9 million per day. In short, Cyber will not be irreparably harmed in the absence of the temporary restraining order it seeks.

that AOL's customers should be able to view Cyber's e-mail without having to take affirmative steps to view the e-mail.

In any event, **HN2**↑ under the "essential facilities" or "bottleneck" doctrine, "a business or group of businesses which controls a scarce facility has an obligation to give competitors reasonable access to it." *Byars v. Bluff City News Co., Inc.*, 609 F.2d 843, 846, 856 & n.34 (6th Cir. 1980) citing *Associated Press v. United States*, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 \(1945\). **\*\*12** Areeda & Turner caution that the doctrine should "at most" extend to "facilities that are a natural monopoly, facilities whose duplication is forbidden by law, and perhaps those that are publicly subsidized and thus could not practicably be built privately." P. Areeda & D. Turner, **Antitrust Law**, P 736.2b at 680-81.

**HN3**↑ In order to make out a claim under the essential facilities doctrine, Cyber must show "(1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility [**\[\*461\]**](#) of providing the facility." *Ideal Dairy Farms*, 90 F.3d 737, 748.

With regard to the first factor, there is little likelihood that Cyber will be able to demonstrate that AOL is a monopolist. **HN4**↑ In order to show AOL is a monopolist, Cyber must show that AOL possessed monopoly power in a relevant market and "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." [*United States v. Grinnell Corp.*, 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 \[\*\*\\[\\*\\*131\\]\*\*\]\(#\) S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\)](#); *Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. John Labatt, Ltd.*, 90 F.3d 737, 749 \(3rd Cir. 1996\). Monopoly power is the power to control prices and exclude competition with respect to a particular product and within a particular geographic market. *United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.*, 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\). The determination of a well-defined market, both geographically and by product, is essentially one of fact, turning on the unique market situation of each case. *Id. at 394-95*.

In its Second Amended Complaint, Cyber alleges the relevant market to be "the market for providing direct marketing advertising material via electronic transmission to AOL's subscribers". Second Amended Complaint at PP 114, 115, 120, 122. In its Reply Memorandum, Cyber defines the product market as the service of transmitting commercial advertising by electronic means to AOL's subscribers and defines the geographic market as AOL's subscribers themselves, a type of "electronic island to which AOL controls the only bridge". Reply Memorandum of Cyber Promotions, Inc. in Support of Motion for Temporary Restraining Order at 6. Even without the benefit [**\[\*\*14\]**](#) of discovery or a hearing, the market as defined by Cyber appears to us to be unrealistically narrow and tailored solely for Cyber's own purpose.

The first problem with Cyber's definition of the market is that AOL and Cyber are not competitors. Cyber alleges that Cyber and AOL are. "competitors in the business of providing direct marketing advertising materials, via electronic transmission, to AOL's subscribers." Second Amended Complaint at P 114 (emphasis added). Cyber repeats this allegation in its Memorandum by stating that "AOL and Cyber Promotions are head-to-head competitors in the market for transmitting direct marketing advertising materials to AOL's subscribers by electronic means." Memorandum in Support of Motion for Injunctive Relief at 10.

The record reveals, however, that AOL is not a business competitor of Cyber. AOL's business is that of a private commercial online service.<sup>2</sup> Cyber, on the other hand, is not in the business of providing commercial online service but instead is an advertising agency which provides advertising services for companies and individuals wishing to advertise their products and services via e-mail. Cyber's potential competitors are not [**\[\*\*15\]**](#) the online systems whose customers it seeks to send its e-mail advertisements but rather other potential advertisers who also wish to provide direct marketing advertising materials via electronic mail to AOL subscribers.

---

<sup>2</sup> Numerous other commercial online services including CompuServe, Prodigy and the Microsoft Network compete with AOL for the growing number of potential online customers. Indeed, an article about AOL in the October 31, 1996 edition of the Wall Street Journal which Cyber has attached to its Motion for Injunctive Relief as part of Exhibit H states that "AOL is besieged by competition." As stated above, the parties have also stipulated that "private companies compete with AOL in the online business." In fact, in order to keep up with its competition, AOL only recently announced that it was offering its subscribers a flat rate of $ 19.95 per month for unlimited access to AOL's electronic services as well as the Internet.

Even if AOL and Cyber can somehow be viewed as "competitors" in the market [**16] for providing direct marketing advertising material via electronic transmission to AOL's subscribers, AOL has the right to control the advertisements which reach its own subscribers. After all these individuals became AOL subscribers by paying AOL a monthly fee. As is evident from the exhibits Cyber attaches to its Memorandum, AOL has no problem accepting advertisements from advertisers as long as these advertisers pay AOL and therefore provide AOL with a [*462] source of revenue. Cyber, however, refuses to pay AOL for sending approximately 1.9 million e-mail advertisements to AOL servers each day.<sup>3</sup> In short, the federal antitrust laws simply do not forbid AOL from excluding from its system advertisers like Cyber who refuse to pay AOL any fee (as opposed to those advertisers who do pay a fee) for their advertising on AOL's system. See *Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\)* (a "business...has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently.")

[**17] The problems with Cyber's market definition can best be revealed by the following analogy: Suppose that an advertising agency (Cyber) promises that for a fee it can get an advertiser's advertisements for get-rich-quick schemes, health aid promises and phone sex services in a daily newspaper or magazine for dissemination to that publication's subscribers without having to pay any fee to the publication. When the publication refuses to carry the ads, the advertising agency sues the publication claiming it has a monopoly over the market of advertising access to its own subscribers by means of the pages of its newspaper. The likelihood of success on such a theory would be slim indeed.

Even accepting Cyber's definition of the relevant market<sup>4</sup>, in order to prove that AOL possesses monopoly power in this market, Cyber must show that AOL has the ability to charge advertisers supracompetitive prices for the right to advertise to AOL subscribers. Cyber has not, at least at this stage of the proceedings, made any showing that because AOL has restricted the manner in which Cyber may send its e-mail advertisements to AOL's subscribers, AOL has charged other potential advertisers supracompetitive [**18] prices for the right to advertise on its system or would desire to do so in the future. Indeed, it would be against AOL's economic best interests for it to even attempt to charge supracompetitive prices to advertisers on its system. As mentioned above, there are numerous commercial online services which compete for AOL's customer base, including CompuServe, the Microsoft Network and Prodigy. Were AOL to charge supracompetitive prices for advertising on its system, advertisers would only have to switch to any of these competing services or to other parts of the Internet such as the World Wide Web to disseminate their advertisements to online users. In short, AOL is not blocking the e-mail advertisements of a so-called competitor such as Cyber in order to charge supracompetitive prices but is blocking the Cyber's advertisements because Cyber is bombarding AOL's servers with up to 1.9 million e-mail advertisements per day without paying AOL a cent for the imposition.

[**19] There is one more problem with Cyber's definition of the market. Cyber correctly points out that **HNS**<sup>5</sup> the test for determining the relevant product market is one of "reasonable interchangeability". That is, "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose make up that 'part of the trade or commerce,' monopolization of which may be illegal." *Id. at 391*. The key factor in determining whether certain products move in the same market is their cross-elasticity of demand, i.e. the degree that buyers of one product switch to the other in response to price changes. The higher the cross-elasticity of demand, the more buyers consider the two products substitutes for each other, and the more sensible it is to describe them as within the same market. *Id. at 380-81.*

<sup>3</sup> Thus, we find it ironic that Cyber states in its Reply Memorandum that "the fact remains ... that AOL is the only 'game in town'. Those who want to send commercial advertising material electronically to AOL's subscribers can either pay the freight or go elsewhere." Reply Memorandum of Cyber in Support of Motion for Temporary Restraining Order at 7. Cyber, of course, has never even offered to "pay the freight" to advertise on AOL's system.

<sup>4</sup> As noted above, the definition of the relevant market is ultimately a question of fact which will have to be determined by a jury or a factfinder.

In the case sub judice, there are numerous competitive methods for advertisers such as Cyber to reach AOL subscribers including, but not limited to, the World Wide Web as [*463] well as direct mail, billboards, television, newspapers and leaflets. AOL does not do business in these alternative advertising methods. If these additional advertising methods are ultimately found to be reasonably interchangeable with electronic [**20] mail and included as part of the relevant product market, AOL would not control a large enough percentage of the relevant product market to justify a finding of monopoly power.

Finally, even if Cyber could prove that AOL exercises monopoly power in a relevant market, there is little likelihood that Cyber will be able to show that AOL willfully acquired that power. On the contrary, AOL has throughout this litigation offered a number of legitimate business justifications for blocking Cyber's e-mail including the numerous complaints it has received from its subscribers, the technical burden the millions of e-mail advertisements cause on AOL's servers and the fact that Cyber does not pay AOL any fee whatsoever to carry Cyber's e-mail.

Even if Cyber could prove AOL is a monopolist in the relevant market, there is little likelihood that Cyber could prove that AOL monopolizes an "essential facility".

HN6 [↑] "An 'essential facility' is one which is not merely helpful but vital to the claimant's competitive viability." Monarch Entertainment Bureau v. N.J. Highway Authority, 715 F. Supp. 1290, 1300 (D.N.J. 1989) (citing P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law, P 736.2b at 680-81 (Supp. 1988), [**21] aff'd, 893 F.2d 1331 (3d Cir. 1989)). The essential facility Cyber contends that AOL monopolizes is advertising to AOL's own subscribers via electronic mail. We believe there is little likelihood that Cyber will be able to show that the ability to advertise to AOL's subscribers is vital to Cyber's competitive ability.

In the first instance, as mentioned above, AOL has not even completely excluded Cyber from the AOL system. AOL's Preferred Mail simply gives the AOL subscriber the option to choose whether he wishes to view Cyber's e-mail advertisements. In addition, AOL currently has approximately seven million members who constitute no more than one-sixth to one-seventh of the current total e-mail population of 40 to 50 million and approximately one-half of the current total online population of 12 million. Cyber also has many other means of disseminating its advertising to Internet users in general and to AOL subscribers in particular besides electronic mail. Cyber can send its advertisements to the subscribers of the many other online services which compete with AOL, including CompuServe, the Microsoft Network and Prodigy. Cyber can send its advertisements to AOL members over [**22] the Internet through the World Wide Web which would allow access by AOL subscribers who want to receive Cyber's advertisements. Cyber, as an advertising agency, can disseminate its advertisements to AOL subscribers and others by non-Internet means including the United States mail, telemarketing, television, cable, newspapers, magazines, billboards and leaflets. And, of course, Cyber could attempt to lure AOL subscribers away from AOL by developing its own commercial online system or advertising web site and charging a competitive rate.

As a result, this case is not like the situation in United States v. Terminal Railroad Association, 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 (1912) where the defendant railroads jointly owned the only feasible terminal for rail traffic coming to St. Louis from the west or the situation in MCI Communications v. AT & T, 708 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir.) cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983) where AT&T controlled access to the communications facility essential to operation of its competitor or the situation in Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. v. Aspen Skiing Co., 738 F.2d 1509 (10th Cir. 1984) where the defendant [**23] ski operator controlled three of the four skiing mountains in the Aspen area and defendant refused to market a multi-day multi-mountain ticket with plaintiff leaving plaintiff unable to compete.

Instead, this case is much more similar to Colonial Penn Group v. American Association of Retired Persons, 698 F. Supp. 69 (E.D.Pa. 1988). The defendant in Colonial Penn was a publisher of several magazines targeted to individuals in the over-fifty age group. Plaintiff was a provider of travel [*464] services, homeowners and automobile insurance programs also targeted to individuals in the over-fifty age group. After endorsing plaintiff's services for a period of time in its publications, defendant decided to endorse only the services of plaintiff's rivals while at the same time excluding advertisements for plaintiff's services. Plaintiff brought an "essential facilities" claim, contending that advertising in defendant's publications is the only effective means to market its products to persons over the age of fifty in general and to defendant's members in particular. In reviewing plaintiff's definition of the relevant market as advertising access to defendant's members, the same market Cyber [**24] has defined here, this Court stated:

Moreover, plaintiff, to show that [defendant] members comprise a discrete market segment, must show distinguishing characteristics of defendant members from the broader population of persons over the age of fifty. Merely defining the relevant market by the readership of defendant publications without further distinction is plainly insufficient and an exercise in circular reasoning; i.e., defining a market merely by a publication's readership begs the question of whether that publication is an essential facility.

Colonial Penn, 698 F. Supp. at 71, n. 1.

Although the Court ultimately denied the defendant's motion to dismiss with leave to renew in the form of a motion for summary judgment after discovery was completed, the reasoning of Colonial Penn is equally applicable to the case sub judice. Merely defining the relevant market as Cyber has done by the subscribership of AOL without further distinguishing AOL's subscribers from the other online subscribers or other Internet e-mail users to whom Cyber provides advertising services is also insufficient as such a definition begs the question of whether the subscribership [**25] of AOL is an essential facility. In short, Cyber has failed to show why its advertising to AOL subscribers is any more vital than its advertising to the subscribers of the many other commercial online services or its advertising to other individuals with an Internet e-mail address.

Even if Cyber could prove an essential facility, it is unlikely that it could satisfy the remaining elements of its essential facilities claim. With regard to the second factor--the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility--Cyber has not shown any reason why it could not (other than perhaps because it would have to pay its own way) use its servers to create its own commercial online internet service or advertising web site and attempt to lure away AOL subscribers.

With regard to the third element--denial of the use of the essential facility to a competition--we reiterate that Cyber has not been completely prevented from sending its e-mail advertisements to AOL subscribers. Although the onus is on the AOL subscriber who wants to view Cyber's advertisements to click the "I want junk e-mail!" box on the screen, we do not believe this process is unreasonably [**26] burdensome to AOL subscribers.

Finally, Cyber is unlikely to be able to show the feasibility of AOL providing its facility to Cyber without the PreferredMail tool. It is clearly unfeasible for AOL's e-mail servers, which the parties have stipulated have a finite capacity, to be burdened with up to 1.9 million e-mail advertisements each day from a single advertiser such as Cyber. In addition, as we noted in our Memorandum Opinion of November 4, 1996, the Court has received a plethora of letters from disgruntled AOL subscribers who complain of not only having to sift through Cyber's e-mail advertisements in their e-mail boxes but also of having to pay for the time it takes to erase these messages. AOL simply should not have to incur the wrath of its paying customers and resulting damage to its reputation in order to carry millions of Cyber's e-mail advertisements free of charge.

In sum, we find that there is little likelihood that Cyber will be able to establish the necessary elements of its claim under the "essential facilities" or "bottleneck" doctrine and that AOL has "refused to deal" with Cyber in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. As there is little likelihood that Cyber [**27] will prevail on the merits of its antitrust claim at a final hearing or that it will be [*465] irreparably harmed in the absence of a temporary restraining order, its motion for injunctive relief in the form of a temporary restraining order must be denied.

ORDER

The motion of Cyber Promotions, Inc. to amend its Complaint is GRANTED. Cyber Promotions, Inc. is GRANTED leave to file and serve a Second Amended Complaint in the form appended to its motion.

The motion of Cyber Promotions, Inc. for injunctive relief in the form of a temporary restraining order is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

948 F. Supp. 456, *465 (1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17771, **27

CHARLES R. WEINER

---

End of Document

In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

November 26, 1996, Decided ; November 27, 1996, FILED

M.D.L. No. 1023, 94 Civ. 3996 (RWS)

Reporter

169 F.R.D. 493 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17671 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,643

IN RE: NASDAQ MARKET-MAKERS ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, Class certification granted by In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 172 F.R.D. 119, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4687 \(S.D.N.Y., 1997\)

Prior History: Tisdale v. A.G. Edwards & Sons \(In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig.\), 938 F. Supp. 232, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13967 \(S.D.N.Y., 1996\)

Disposition: [**1] Plaintiffs' motion for class certification pursuant to Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) and \(b\)\(3\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure granted in part. Plaintiffs motion to compel discovery granted in part and denied in part conspiracy, Defendants', damages, spreads, class action, class member, antitrust, class certification, traded, Plaintiffs', market-makers, cases, discovery, prices, brokers, courts, alleged conspiracy, investors, purchasers, aggregate, methodologies, predominate, odd-eighth, price-fixing, allegations, Comparing, inflated, bid, certification, stock

Core Terms

---

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN1 Class Actions, Certification of Classes

For purposes of deciding a Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 motion for class certification, the allegations set forth in the complaint are accepted as true.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN2 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(c\)\(1\).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3 Class Actions, Certification of Classes

In applying Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(c\)\(1\), class action determinations are to be based solely on the allegations set forth in the complaint, which are accepted as true. Thus, the only question to be determined at the certification stage is whether the requirements of Rule 23 have been satisfied.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN4 Class Actions, Certification of Classes

District courts will apply Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 according to a liberal rather than a restrictive interpretation. However, despite the liberal interpretation that the court must give to Rule 23, the court may certify a case as a class action only after undertaking rigorous analysis to assure that the requirements of the rule are satisfied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN5 Justiciability, Standing

The burden is on the party claiming jurisdiction to demonstrate that a court has jurisdiction over the subject matter. Standing is an essential element of subject matter jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Personal Stake

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN6 Standing, Personal Stake

The fundamental principles governing whether a plaintiff has standing to maintain an action in federal court are straightforward and familiar. A plaintiff must allege such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to warrant his invocation of federal-court jurisdiction and to justify exercise of the court's remedial power on his behalf.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN7 Justiciability, Standing

A plaintiff may not use the procedural device of a class action to bootstrap himself into standing he lacks under the express terms of the substantive law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN8[] Justiciability, Standing

The question of standing is totally separate and distinct from the question of w plaintiff's right to represent a purported class under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. Standing to sue is an essential threshold which must be crossed before any determination as to class representation under Rule 23 can be made.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN9[] Justiciability, Standing

Where a particular industry structure includes a principal-agent relationship between the indirect and direct purchasers such that the two are not distinct economic entities in the purchase chain, the indirect purchaser has standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > General Overview

HN10[] Private Actions, Purchasers

Several factors are relevant to determining whether a principal and an agent constitute distinct economic entities for purposes of Illinois Brick standing: whether the agent performs a function on behalf of his principal other than securing an offer or a price from a buyer or seller for the product; the degree to which the agent is authorized to exercise his discretion concerning the price and terms under which the principal's product is to be sold or bought; and finally whether the use of the agent constitutes a separate step in the vertical distribution of the product.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

HN11[] State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 49:257\(A\).

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

**HN12** [blue icon] State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 49:257\(A\) does not allow the Attorney General to act as a party in interest on behalf of state agencies; rather, it merely provides that the Attorney General may act as counsel for state agencies in certain cases.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

**HN13** [blue icon] State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

The State of Louisiana cannot sue on causes of action that belong to state agencies as distinct legal entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

**HN14** [blue icon] Standing, Requirements

Because antitrust liability is joint and several, a plaintiff injured by one defendant as a result of the conspiracy has standing to represent a class of individuals injured by any of the defendant's co-conspirators.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

**HN15** [blue icon] Parties, Joinder of Parties

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN16** [blue icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Numerosity

Rule 23\(a\)\(1\) requires that the class be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(1\). Impracticability means difficulty or inconvenience of joinder; the rule does not require impossibility of joinder.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN17 [blue document icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Numerosity

Precise quantification of the class members is not necessary because the court may make common sense assumptions to support a finding of numerosity. Plaintiffs may rely on reasonable inferences drawn from the available facts in order to estimate the size of the class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN18 [blue document icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2) requires that, for an action to be properly maintained as a class action, there must be common issues of fact and law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN19 [blue document icon] Private Actions, Purchasers

Allegations concerning the existence, scope, and efficacy of an alleged antitrust conspiracy present important common questions sufficient to satisfy the commonality requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN20 [blue document icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Typicality

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3) requires that the claims asserted by plaintiffs on behalf of a proposed class be typical of the claims of the other members of the class. Typicality refers to the nature of the claim of the class representatives and not to the specific facts from which the claim arose or relief is sought. The proper inquiry is whether other members of the class have the same or similar injury, whether the action is based on conduct not special or unique to the named plaintiffs, and whether other class members have been injured by the same course of conduct.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN21 [blue document icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Typicality

Typicality under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 requires that a class representative have the incentive to prove all the elements of the cause of action which would be presented by the individual members of the class were they initiating individualized actions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN22 [blue icon] Class Members, Named Members

The typicality requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) is established where the claims of the representative plaintiffs arise from the same course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of the other class members, where the claims are based on the same legal theory, and where the class members have allegedly been injured by the same course of conduct as that which allegedly injured the proposed representatives.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Private Actions, Purchasers

Typicality does not require that the situations of the named representatives and the class members be identical. Provided that all claims arise from a same price-fixing conspiracy, factual differences among proposed class members' claims do not defeat class certification.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Adequacy of Representation

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(4\) requires that the class representatives be adequately representative of the class. Plaintiffs must satisfy both prongs of a two-pronged test to qualify as adequate representatives: (1) the representatives' interests must not conflict with the class members' interests, and (2) the representatives and their attorney must be able to prosecute the action vigorously. The plaintiffs thus must show, first, that there is an absence of conflict and antagonistic interests between the proposed representatives and the class members, and second, that plaintiffs' counsel is qualified, experienced and capable. The commonality and typicality requirements blend together in determining whether the representative plaintiffs' claims are typical enough of the classwide claims that the representatives will adequately represent the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

In order to warrant denial of class certification, it must be shown that any asserted conflict is so palpable as to outweigh the substantial interest of every class member in proceeding with the litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN26 [blue icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Adequacy of Representation

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4) requires that, in order for a case to proceed as a class action, the court must find that the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. The party's attorney must therefore be qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the proposed litigation. Adequacy of representation merely requires that the class representative's attorney be qualified, and that the class representative not have interests conflicting with the class in the litigation at hand.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In order to maintain a class action, plaintiffs must satisfy the requirements of Rule 23(b) (Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)) in addition to satisfying the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) (Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN28 [blue icon] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Certification is appropriate under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) where declaratory or injunctive relief is an important aspect of the overall relief sought.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN30 [blue icon] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

To certify a case under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\), a court must find that the common issues of law and fact predominate over individual issues. The predominance requirement is satisfied unless it is clear that individual issues will overwhelm the common questions and render the class action valueless.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN31 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

To recover damages for an antitrust action, plaintiffs will have to prove: (1) that defendants violated the antitrust laws; (2) that the alleged violations caused plaintiffs to suffer some direct antitrust injury to their business or property; and (3) that the extent of this injury can be quantified with requisite precision.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN32 [ ] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The existence of a conspiracy is the predominant issue in price fixing cases, warranting certification of a class even where significant individual issues are present. Other questions regarding damages and the like are subordinate to the common question of the existence of the alleged conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN33 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

Liability for antitrust violations is joint and several. Each class member may therefore recover his or her full loss from any defendant who can be shown to have participated in the alleged conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN34 [ ] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

In order to show fraudulent concealment, an antitrust plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant concealed the existence of the antitrust violation, (2) that plaintiff remained in ignorance of the violation until sometime within the four year antitrust statute of limitations; and (3) that his continuing ignorance was not the result of lack of diligence. Plaintiffs may prove concealment by showing either that the defendants took affirmative steps to prevent plaintiffs' discovery of the conspiracy, or that the conspiracy itself was inherently self-concealing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN35 [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

In a class action, even when the issue of fraudulent concealment involves both common and individual questions, the common question of whether defendants successfully concealed the existence of the alleged conspiracy predominates over any individual questions regarding the knowledge or diligence of individual plaintiffs.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN36 [blue icon] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(d) provides in part that a court may make "appropriate orders" dealing with "procedural matters," which may be altered or amended "from time to time," including orders determining the course of proceedings or prescribing measures to prevent undue repetition or complication in the presentation of evidence or argument. Rule 23(d) provides that these orders may be combined with an order under Fed. R. Civ. P. 16. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c) provides that the court may take appropriate action with respect to inter alia: the avoidance of unnecessary proof and of cumulative evidence; the possibility of obtaining admissions of fact and of documents which will avoid unnecessary proof; an order establishing a reasonable limit on the time allowed for presenting evidence; an order for a separate trial pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b) with respect to a claim or with respect to any particular issue in the case; or referring matters to a master.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN37 [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Even if it can be shown that some individual class members were not injured, class certification, nevertheless, is appropriate where an antitrust violation has caused widespread injury to the class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

**HN38** [blue icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

To prove an effective conspiracy to fix prices, facts will be adduced which will tend to establish, perhaps circumstantially, that each class member was injured. In the class action context the inference is predicated on the establishment of certain facts: (1) an antitrust violation, typically a conspiracy to fix prices or allocate markets; (2) an ability on the part of defendant-conspirators to effectuate the conspiracy; (3) generalized price increases or damages in the industry involved; and (4) purchase or rental by plaintiffs during the period of anti-competitive activity. The impact element necessitates only an illustration of generalized injury.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN39** [blue icon] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The fact that a defendant may be able to defeat the showing of causation as to a few individual class members does not transform the common question into a multitude of individual ones; plaintiffs satisfy their burden of showing causation as to each by showing generalized damage as to all.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN40** [blue icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The predominance requirement of *Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\)* is satisfied with respect to proof of injury, even though individualized inquiry may be necessary on the quantum of damages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Separate Trials

**HN41** [blue icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Even if it develops that each class member's damages must be separately determined, class certification would still be appropriate. Under those circumstances, bifurcation would allow classwide issues to proceed on a class basis, while reserving any individual issues to be litigated in a subsequent set of proceedings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN42** [blue icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In a class action suit, fluid recovery refers to the distribution of unclaimed or unclaimable funds to persons not found to be injured but who have interests similar to those of a class.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN43** [blue document icon] Private Actions, Purchasers

Causation is susceptible of common classwide proof, and as a general rule, an illegal price-fixing scheme presumptively damages all purchasers of a price-fixed product in an affected market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

**HN44** [blue document icon] Private Actions, Remedies

In an antitrust action, once the existence of injury is established (by direct evidence or inference from the character of a sustained conspiracy), the proof necessary to set the amount of damages need not be exact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN45** [blue document icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) requires plaintiffs to demonstrate that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

**HN46** [blue document icon] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

Manageability problems are significant in class actions only if they create a situation that is less fair and efficient than other available techniques.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Relevance of Discoverable Information

**HN47** [blue document icon] Discovery, Privileged Communications

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

**HN48** [blue document icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The phrase, "relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action," contained in Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1), is construed broadly to encompass any matter that bears on, or that reasonably could lead to other matter that could bear on, any issue that is or may be in the case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN49 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Although the relevancy requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1) should be firmly applied, where the proof is largely in the hands of alleged conspirators, antitrust plaintiffs must be given ample opportunity for discovery.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN50 [blue icon] Methods of Discovery, Inspection & Production Requests

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 34, a party need not have actual possession of documents to be deemed in control of them.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN51 [blue icon] Methods of Discovery, Inspection & Production Requests

Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 requires production if a party has the practical ability to obtain the documents from another, irrespective of his legal entitlement.

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN52 [blue icon] Civil Procedure, Attorneys

A current or former employee may be considered under a defendant's control for Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 purposes where that employee was: (i) briefed by a company representative or counsel prior to the civil investigation demand (CID) deposition or debriefed after the deposition; (ii) represented by counsel recommended, retained, or paid for by a company representative or counsel; or (iii) informed by a representative of defendant or defense counsel of the possibility of ordering a copy of their CID transcript.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

HN53 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Pursuant to 15 U.S.C.S. § 1313(c)(3), the Government may not disclose materials obtained through civil investigation demands without the target's consent.

Counsel: APPEARANCES:

ATTORNEYS FOR PLAINTIFFS: FINE KAPLAN AND BLACK, Philadelphia, PA, By: ARTHUR M. KAPLAN, ESQ., Of Counsel. LOVELL & SKIRNICK, LLP., New York, NY, By: CHRISTOPHER LOVELL, ESQ., ROBERT A. SKIRNICK, ESQ., Of Counsel. MILBERG, WEISS, BERSHAD, HYNES & LERACH, San Diego, CA, By: LEONARD B. SIMON, ESQ., Of Counsel.

SHEARMAN & STERLING, Liaison Counsel for Defendants and Attorney for Defendant Herzog, Heine, Geduld, Inc., New York, NY, By: JOSEPH T. McLAUGHLIN, ESQ., JAMES T. HALVERSON, ESQ., THOMAS F. SWIFT, ESQ., BRIAN S. CHEVLIN, ESQ., Of Counsel.

Judges: ROBERT W. SWEET, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: ROBERT W. SWEET

Opinion

---

[*498] OPINION

Sweet, D. J.,

Plaintiffs in this multidistrict securities antitrust class action have moved for class certification pursuant to Rules 23\(b\)\(2\) and \(3\), Fed. R. Civ. P, and to compel discovery pursuant to Rule 37\(a\), Fed. R. Civ. P. For the reasons set forth below, Plaintiffs' motion will be granted in part.

Parties

The [*2] parties and prior proceedings are fully set forth in several prior opinions of this court. See In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 894 F. Supp. 703 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\) ("Nasdaq I"); In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 164 F.R.D. 346 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\) ("Nasdaq II"); In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4969, 1996 WL 187409 \(S.D.N.Y. April 18, 1996\) ("Nasdaq III"); In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 929 F. Supp. 723 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\) ("Nasdaq IV").

The 33 named Defendants (the "Defendants" or "Market-makers") in this action are all market-makers on the Nasdaq exchange.<sup>1</sup> The Complaint in this action describes them as "leading Nasdaq market-makers." Nasdaq [*499] is a computerized securities quotations system operated by the National Association of Securities Dealers ("NASD"). In 1993, Nasdaq trading volume totaled more than 66.5 billion shares, with an average of 263 million shares traded each trading day. For that year, more than $ 1.35 trillion dollars in trades were executed through Nasdaq. 1994 Nasdaq Fact Book and Company Directory ("Fact Book"). In 1993, there were 492 Nasdaq market-makers, making markets [*3] in 5,393 stocks, of which approximately 3,250 are listed and traded on the Nasdaq National Market, and the remainder on the Nasdaq Small Cap Market. On average there are 11 market-makers for each Nasdaq stock, although there are some stocks with more than 40 market-makers.

[**4] Plaintiffs include the State of Louisiana, through its Attorney General, Richard P. Ieyoub, which brings this action in its capacity as parens patriae, trustee, guardian, and representative of Louisiana investors allegedly damaged by Defendants' price-fixing scheme, and 30 individual plaintiffs<sup>2</sup> who purchased or sold shares of Class

---

<sup>1</sup>The named Defendants include: Goldman Sachs & Co.; Herzog, Heine, Geduld, Inc.; Alex. Brown & Sons, Inc.; Cantor Fitzgerald & Co.; CS First Boston Corp.; Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, Inc.; Bear, Stearns, Inc.; Cowen & Co.; Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.; Hambrecht & Quist, Inc.; Jeffries and Co., Inc.; Kidder, Peabody & Co. Incorporated; Lehman Brothers, Inc.; Kemper Securities Group, Inc.; Legg Mason Wood Walker, Inc.; Mayer & Schweitzer, Inc.; Merrill Lynch & Co.; Morgan Stanley & Co.; Old Discount Corporation; PaineWebber Inc.; Montgomery Securities; Nash, Weiss & Co.; Oppenheimer & Co., Inc.; Piper Jaffray & Hopwood, Inc.; Prudential Securities Incorporated; The Robinson-Humphrey Company, Inc.; Sherwood Securities Corp.; Troster Singer; Robertson, Stephens & Company; Salomon Brothers Inc.; Smith Barney Inc.; UBS Securities Inc.; Weeden & Co., L.P.

<sup>2</sup>Individual named plaintiffs include: Donald Bleznak c/f Andrew Bleznak, a resident of New Jersey; Richard I. Burstein, a resident of Vermont; Chevra Gemilath Chasodah, a charitable organization located in New York; Carl S. Clark and Patricia Securities from one or more Defendants or their commonly owned affiliates during the period of May 1, 1989 to May 24, 1994.

[**5] Prior Proceedings

The first class-action complaint in what is now a multidistrict case was filed in this Court on May 27, 1994 following reports in the media on May 26 and 27, 1994 of a study by Professors William G. Christie and Paul H. Schultz<sup>3</sup> discussing the spreads on the Nasdaq exchange (the "Christie & Schultz study"). Eventually more than two dozen complaints were filed around the country, alleging variations on the theme that Nasdaq Market-makers had engaged in a conspiracy to avoid odd-eighth quotes in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Approximately two dozen of the thirty-three moving Defendants were defendants in at least one of these initial complaints.

Certain parties named in the initial complaints petitioned the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation (the "Panel") for consolidation of all related actions before this Court. [**6] On October 14, 1994, the Panel ordered that the already filed actions, as well as later-filed actions, be assigned to this Court.

A pretrial order was signed on November 16, 1994 which named Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Counsel and directed Defendants to choose liaison counsel. The Court confirmed Defendants' choice on December 21, 1994.

Plaintiffs filed a "Consolidated Amended Complaint" on December 16, 1994. By Opinion dated August 3, 1995, this Court granted Defendants' motion to dismiss that complaint based on Plaintiffs' failure to identify the securities that are the subject of this action, and granted Plaintiffs leave to replead within 45 days. See Nasdaq I.

On August 22, 1995, Plaintiffs filed a Refiled Consolidated Complaint (the "Complaint"), identifying 1659 Nasdaq traded securities as the securities at issue in this action.

On December 6, 1995, Plaintiffs moved for an order, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37\(a\), to compel Defendants to produce, to the extent responsive to consolidated discovery requests, CID interrogatories, documents reflecting agreements modifying the CIDs, answers to the CID interrogatories, CID deposition transcripts, and CID financial discovery; [**7] and to modify the Stipulated Order Regarding Confidential Documents (the "Confidentiality Order") to permit Plaintiffs to confer with the DOJ regarding Defendants' compliance with Court orders regarding CID discovery.

Plaintiffs' motion was resolved pursuant to Joint Proposed Pretrial Order No. 3 (the "Pretrial Order"), prepared by the parties and ordered by this Court on March 7, 1996. The Pretrial Order read in part:

6. On February 28, 1996, each defendant will identify those of its current employees or former employees who were deposed by the DOJ in connection with the Nasdaq investigation, to the extent known to that defendant.
7. By March 7, 1996, each defendant shall produce copies of all materials, not previously produced pursuant to the Stipulated Order, that were given to the Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, pursuant to Civil Investigative Demands as described in the Stipulated Order, setting forth revenues, costs, profit and/or losses derived from trading Nasdaq securities.

---

Clark, residents of Michigan; Daniel D'Addario, a resident of New York; Roseann D'Addario, a resident of New York; Maxine Dampf, a resident of New York; Jerome D. Derdel, M.D., a resident of Pennsylvania; Sulochana Desai, a resident of Michigan; H. Leslie Fineberg, a resident of New Jersey; Nicholas Frangiosa, a resident of Pennsylvania; Neal Hansen and Donna Hansen, residents of New Jersey; Timothy Hennessey, a resident of Oregon; Brent Johnson, a resident of Minnesota; Charles Kaye, a resident of Michigan; James Krum, a resident of Minnesota; Robert Lipinski, a resident of New Jersey; Dr. John Lorge, a resident of the State of Washington; William Lutz, Jr., a resident of Pennsylvania; Dennis Maloney, a resident of New York; Kevin Maloney, a resident of New York; Richard I. Perlman, a resident of California; Jeffrey Sachs, a resident of California; David Siegel, a resident of California; Two Guys Limited Partnership and their General Partner, Geltmore, Inc., having their principal place of business in New Mexico; Peter Wasserman, a resident of the State of New Hampshire; Dennis Weiner, a resident of New Jersey; and Sumner Woodrow, a resident of Massachusetts.

<sup>3</sup> The article, entitled "Why do NASDAQ Market Makers Avoid Odd-Eighth Quotes?," was published in The Journal of Finance in December, 1994.

...

10. By March 20, 1996, defendants shall produce copies of all interrogatory answers that were given to the Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, pursuant to [**8] Civil Investigative Demands as described in the Stipulated Order, to the extent such answers related to the operation and structure of the Nasdaq Stock Market. Defendants shall also produce the interrogatories to which answers are being produced pursuant to this paragraph.

The Pretrial Order also stayed discovery on the merits of this litigation pending resolution of Plaintiffs' as yet unfiled motion for class certification. See Pretrial Order, P 24.

Plaintiffs moved for class certification on March 20, 1996. By Opinion dated April 18, 1996, this Court granted in part Defendants' motion to depose certain proposed class representatives prior to submission of Defendants' opposition to the instant motion for class certification. Pursuant to that Opinion, Defendants were permitted to conduct depositions of the State of Louisiana. See Nasdaq III.

Oral argument on Plaintiffs' motion for class certification was heard on June 25, 1996. Additional submissions have been received until issuance of this Opinion.

On August 30, 1996, Plaintiffs moved (i) to lift the stay of discovery imposed by P 24 of Pretrial Order No. 3, and (ii) to compel Defendants to produce the following documents [**9] related to a companion case filed by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice ("DOJ") (the "Government Action"): (a) all Civil Investigative Demand ("CID") deposition transcripts within defendants' control, and (b) a settlement memorandum created by the DOJ (the "Settlement Memorandum") and any evidentiary materials expressly referenced therein.<sup>4</sup> Oral argument on Plaintiffs' discovery motion was heard on October 16, 1996, at which time the motion was considered fully submitted.

As of November 1996, more than 30 actions had been consolidated in this Court as MDL 1023 -- In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation.

Related Proceedings

In October 1994, the Antitrust Division of the Department of [**10] Justice ("DOJ") announced that it was commencing a broad review of a number of aspects of Nasdaq's market structure.

On November 14, 1994, the Securities and Exchange Commission (the "SEC") announced that it was undertaking a review of the operation of Nasdaq, including the "spreads" issue alleged in the Complaint, and broader issues concerning the structure of the market itself.

[*501] In addition, on November 20, 1994, the NASD announced the formation of a seven-member panel to undertake a "plenary review of the effectiveness of the operation and surveillance" of the NASD.

On July 17, 1996, as a result of its investigation of Nasdaq's market structure, the Antitrust Division of the DOJ filed the Government Action, United States v. Alex. Brown & Sons, Inc., et. al., 96 Civ. 5313, in this Court, alleging that twenty-three NASDAQ market-makers had engaged in price-fixing in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.<sup>5</sup> At least fifteen of the twenty-three Defendants in the Government Action are also Defendants in the consolidated class action. The Government Action was assigned to this Court as a related action to the instant class action.

---

<sup>4</sup> The background and proceedings of the Government Action are more fully set forth in the Related Proceedings section herein, and in the Opinion of the Court issued today in that action. See United States v. Alex. Brown & Sons, Inc., et. al., 96 Civ. 5313 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 27, 1996).

<sup>5</sup> See United States v. Alex. Brown & Sons, Inc., et. al., 96 Civ. 5313 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 26, 1996).

[**11] The Government Action was based on evidence gathered by the DOJ during the course of its investigation. According to the Competitive Impact Statement filed by the DOJ pursuant to Section 2(b) of the APPA, 15 U.S.C. § 16 \(b\)-\(h\), which summarizes the evidence supporting the Complaint's allegations, the Antitrust Division took over 225 depositions. Defendants have previously identified 62 of their current or former employees whose depositions were taken by the DOJ. In connection with its investigation, the DOJ prepared the Settlement Memorandum, a compilation of evidence which was reviewed by Defendants.

Simultaneously with its Complaint in the Government Action, the Government filed a proposed Stipulation and Order, signed by each party, which, upon approval of the Court, will resolve the allegations of the Complaint in that action. Entry of the proposed Stipulation and Order is subject to the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act ("APPA" or "Tunney Act"), which requires a sixty-day period in which the public may submit comments relating to the Order.

On August 28, 1996, Plaintiffs in this class action moved to intervene in the Government Action in order to obtain discovery of [**12] the Settlement Memorandum and the underlying documents. Plaintiffs' motion to intervene and for discovery is resolved by an Opinion of this Court issued today in the Government Action.

Facts

HN1 [↑] For purposes of deciding a Rule 23 motion for class certification, the allegations set forth in the complaint are accepted as true. See Shelter Realty Corp. v. Allied Maintenance Corp., 574 F.2d 656, 661 n.15 \(2d Cir. 1978\). The facts presented herein are taken from the Complaint and are limited to this motion.

Nasdaq is a computerized stock quotations system operated by the NASD and is one of the world's largest securities markets. Complaint PP 2, 99. In contrast to the stock exchanges, which employ an auction system (in which customer orders to buy or sell are matched against one another by a single "specialist" for the security), Nasdaq employs a multiple market-maker system in which customers sell to and buy from market-makers. Complaint PP 3, 100. Defendants are leading Nasdaq market-makers. Complaint PP 2(b), 99(a).

Nasdaq operates on a "bid and asked" system. The "bid" price is the price at which a given market-maker is willing to buy a security. The "ask" price is [**13] the price at which a market-maker is willing to sell the security. Complaint PP 2(c), 99(b), 100. Each Nasdaq market-maker is purportedly independent, and purportedly competes against other market-makers in quoting bids and asks for customer trades. Complaint PP 3, 100(b). All Nasdaq market-makers, including Defendants, continuously communicate to one another their bid and ask quotations through Nasdaq's "electronic billboard" computer system and computer screens in their respective offices. By virtue of such communication, each market-maker is continuously aware of the price quotations of every other market-maker. Complaint PP 4, 101.

A major source of every market-maker's profits -- and a significant element of Plaintiffs' cost in executing trades over the Nasdaq system -- is the difference between the bid price and the ask price for a given security. Complaint PP 3(c), (d), 99(b), (c). This [*502] difference is referred to as the bid/ask spread, or simply the "spread." Id. The wider the spreads, the greater the market-makers' individual and collective revenues and profits. Id.

In a competitive market for most actively traded stocks, the spread in the stock will typically be one [**14] eighth of a point, or $ 0.125, i.e., the bid will be 20 1/8 and the ask will be 20 1/4. Complaint PP 6, 7, 105(a). On stock exchanges generally, including the New York Stock Exchange and the American Stock Exchange, spreads of one eighth are typical for most actively traded stocks. Complaint P 105(b).

Nasdaq itself has claimed that multiple market-makers competing for business on Nasdaq securities and Nasdaq's high degree of automation should result in vigorous competition between market-makers to narrow spreads. Complaint PP 5, 103. However, Plaintiffs allege that beginning at least as early as May 1989, Defendants and their co-conspirators conspired to raise, fix and maintain at supra-competitive levels the "spread" paid by Plaintiffs and members of the proposed Class to trade in Class Securities. Complaint PP 1, 102, 103.<sup>6</sup>

[**15] As a result, spreads on Class Securities have been, on average, approximately twice as large as spreads on the New York and American stock exchanges for securities with comparable characteristics. Complaint PP 5, 11, 103. Moreover, from May 1, 1989 to May 1993, average spreads on the Nasdaq National Market increased by over 37%, while average spreads on the New York and the American stock exchanges held steady. Complaint PP 11, 110. Spreads were reduced by more than 50% on average when the very same securities moved from trading on Nasdaq to trading on an exchange. Id.

Defendants are alleged to have used a number of mechanisms to effect and police their conspiracy to fix spreads. Notably, Defendants and their co-conspirators collectively refused to quote odd-eighths (i.e., 1/8, 3/8, 5/8 and 7/8 of a dollar) in their bids and asks for Class Securities, thereby inflating their spreads. Complaint PP 7, 106(a).

In the absence of collusion, odd-eighth bids or asks would be expected to occur nearly as often as even-eighth bids or asks for any given security. However, Defendants quoted bids and asks for Class Securities in a manner that reflects a statistically unexplainable, almost [**16] complete absence of bids or asks in odd-eighths. Complaint PP 12, 105(c), 111. Accordingly, $.25 per share became the minimum spread for Class Securities, whereas the typical spread for actively traded Class Securities otherwise would have been half that amount. Complaint PP 7, 106(b).

Defendants are also alleged to have effected their conspiracy by following the spread set by the dominant dealer (known as "the name") in a particular security, and by agreeing not to compete by "breaking the spread" -- that is, by quoting any odd-eighth or better bid or ask which would reduce Defendants' inflated spread. Complaint PP 10, 109. Any trader who attempted to break the spread was subject to various kinds of pressure and sanctions. Complaint PP 8-10, 107-109. For example, one trader who tried on occasion to narrow a spread told Forbes Magazine: "I used to get phone calls from people; they'd scream, 'Don't break the spread! You're ruining it for everybody else!'" Complaint P 108. Another trader who tried something similar said: "My phone lights up like a Christmas tree. 'Whaddya doing in the stock? You're closing the spread. We don't play ball that way. Go back where you belong.'" [**17] Id. In addition to exhortations to rejoin the conspiracy, Defendants and their co-conspirators are alleged to have refused to conduct business in other contexts with any trader who tried to break a spread. Complaint PP 10, 109.

[*503] In May 1994, Professors William G. Christie and Paul H. Schultz completed a study indicating the existence of collusion in the fixing of Nasdaq spreads.<sup>7</sup> Drafts of the Christie & Schultz study were circulated to the NASD, and the study was widely reported in the national press in late May 1994, along with criticism of Defendants' apparently collusive behavior. Complaint P 112.

In late [**18] May 1994, immediately after the publicity about collusion, and in order to deflect such criticism, Defendants allegedly reintroduced odd-eighth quotations for certain high-profile Nasdaq securities, thereby cutting the spreads on those securities by approximately 50%. Complaint PP 13, 112. According to Plaintiffs, there were no significant changes in the structure of the market or the costs or risks of doing business that can account for this reintroduction of odd-eighths and dramatic reduction in the size of spreads. Complaint PP 14, 113.

<sup>6</sup>The spread in effect is a charge paid by plaintiffs and Class members to the market-makers for their services in making a market in these securities. Complaint P 122. (The market-maker's charge per share for a buy or sell respectively is measured by the effective half-spread.) Defendants are alleged to have overcharged plaintiffs and other Class members by inflating that charge. Id. The extent of the overcharge is the difference between the spreads charged and the spreads that would have prevailed in a competitive market, absent violations of the antitrust laws. E.g., New York v. Hendrickson Bros., Inc., 840 F.2d 1065, 1077 \(2d Cir. 1988\).

<sup>7</sup>The Christie and Schultz study, "Why Do NASDAQ Market Makers Avoid Odd Eighth Quotes?," was published in The Journal of Finance in December, 1994. At the American Finance Association's annual meeting on January 6, 1996, this study was awarded the Smith Breeden award, as best paper published in The Journal of Finance (the official journal of the American Finance Association) for the year.

Plaintiffs allege that the sole reason for Defendants' ability to cut the spreads for selected high-profile Class Securities by approximately 50% is that those spreads previously had been fixed and maintained at artificially inflated and supra-competitive levels. Complaint PP 14, 113. Plaintiffs allege that despite Defendants' effort to deflect criticism by cutting the spreads on selected high-profile Class Securities, Defendants' spread-fixing conspiracy has continued. Complaint P 117.<sup>8</sup>

[**19] Plaintiffs allege that, as a result of Defendants' conspiracy, spreads on Class Securities were maintained at supra-competitive levels, and price competition among Defendants and their co-conspirators was restrained or eliminated. Complaint P 120. Consequently, the prices which Plaintiffs and the members of the Class paid for purchases of Class Securities were artificially inflated, and the prices received from sales of Class Securities were artificially depressed. Complaint PP 120, 121.

Discussion

The Plaintiffs seek an order pursuant to Rule 23, Fed. R. Civ. P., certifying this action as a class action on their own behalf and as representatives of the class defined herein.

The persons injured by Defendants' alleged conspiracy are those who traded in "Class Securities," which are defined by Plaintiffs as:

any and all stocks traded on the Nasdaq National Market for which odd-eighth quotations were effectively eliminated for a period of at least one continuous, full year within the relevant time period. A security is a Class Security only for those periods during which odd-eighth quotations were effectively eliminated.

Complaint P 82. Plaintiffs have [**20] identified 1,659 stocks which fit this definition of a Class Security.<sup>9</sup>

Plaintiffs seek certification of:

(a) a Class consisting of all persons, firms, corporations, and other entities (excluding Defendants and other Nasdaq market-makers, and their respective affiliates) who purchased or sold Class [*504] Securities on the Nasdaq National Market, trading directly (or through agents) with the Defendants or their co-conspirators, or with their respective affiliates, during the period May 1, 1989 to May 27, 1994 ("Class Period"); and

(b) a Subclass consisting of those members of the above Class who at the time of class notice are current brokerage customers of Defendants (or their affiliates), or whose brokerage accounts are cleared by the Defendants (or their affiliates), and to whom Defendants (or their affiliates) send periodic mailings. [**21]<sup>10</sup>

For purposes of this Class Definition, the term "affiliates" includes parents, subsidiaries and other commonly-owned affiliates.

I. Applying Rule 23

---

<sup>8</sup> For example, after Domestic Securities Inc. broke the spread on Intel Corp. on a trading day in late summer 1994, defendant Weeden & Co. flashed a message of "pathetic" on the trading terminal of Domestic Securities Inc. and defendant Morgan Stanley & Co. called immediately and complained "did you guys break the spread for 1,000 shares?" Complaint P 108.

Similarly, after Domestic Securities Inc. broke the spread for Chiron Corp. stock, Keith Balter, the head of over-the-counter trading for defendant Weeden & Co., immediately telephoned Domestic Securities Inc. and stated "you're embarrassing and pathetic ... you're breaking the spreads for everybody." Id.

On July 15, 1994, Domestic Securities Inc. broke the spread in Xilinx Corp. stock, and, in response, defendant Hambrecht & Quist called Domestic and stated "This is bull . I have institutional customers come to me and I have to meet your price. It's bull , you guys going down 1/8 for 1,000 shares." Id.

<sup>9</sup> A list of these stocks, reflecting the respective dates within the Class Period for which each stock is a Class Security, is attached as Exhibit "A" to the Complaint.

<sup>10</sup> The proposed Subclass is limited to persons to whom the Defendants send periodic mailings.

Rule 23(c)(1), Fed. R. Civ. P., provides that HN2 "as soon as practicable after the commencement of an action brought as a class action, the Court shall determine by order whether it is to be so maintained."

HN3 In applying this Rule, courts have held that class action determinations are to be based solely on the allegations set forth in the complaint, which are accepted as true, see Shelter Realty Corp. v. Allied Maintenance Corp., 574 F.2d 656, 661 n.15 \(2d Cir. 1978\), and not on an inquiry into the merits of the plaintiff's claims. See Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline, 417 U.S. 156, 177-78, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732, 94 S. Ct. 2140 \(1974\); Dura-Bilt Corp. v. Chase Manhattan Corp., 89 F.R.D. 87, 94 \(S.D.N.Y. 1981\). Thus, the only question to be determined [\[\*\*22\]](#) at this stage is whether the requirements of Rule 23 have been satisfied. In making this determination, any references to the Plaintiffs' factual allegations set forth below are not to be construed as findings of fact regarding those allegations.

Furthermore, the Second Circuit has directed HN4 district courts to apply Rule 23 according to a liberal rather than a restrictive interpretation, see Korn v. Franchard Corp., 456 F.2d 1206, 1208-09 \(2d Cir. 1972\); Green v. Wolf Corp., 406 F.2d 291, 298, 301 \(2d Cir. 1968\).

However, despite the liberal interpretation that this Court must give to Rule 23, it may certify this as a class action only after undertaking "rigorous analysis" to assure that the requirements of the Rule are satisfied. General Tel. Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740, 102 S. Ct. 2364 \(1982\).

Before addressing the specific requirements of Rule 23, the Court must address the standing issues raised by Defendants.

II. Standing

It is well-established that HN5 "the burden is on the party claiming jurisdiction to demonstrate that the court has jurisdiction over the subject matter." International Shipping Co., S.A. v. Hydra [\[\*\*23\]](#) Offshore, Inc., 675 F. Supp. 146, 151 & n.5 \(S.D.N.Y. 1987\), aff'd, 875 F.2d 388 \(2d Cir. 1989\). Standing is an essential element of subject matter jurisdiction, and the question presented is whether this action should be dismissed against any of these Defendants for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring it.

HN6 The fundamental principles governing whether a plaintiff has standing to maintain an action in federal court are straightforward and familiar. A plaintiff must "allege[] such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to warrant his invocation of federal-court jurisdiction and to justify exercise of the court's remedial power on his behalf." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 498-99, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343, 95 S. Ct. 2197 \(1975\) (internal quotation omitted).

As this Court has noted, HN7 a plaintiff may not use the procedural device of a class action to bootstrap himself into standing he lacks under the express terms of the substantive law. Angel Music Inc. v. ABC Sports, Inc., 112 F.R.D. 70, 74 \(S.D.N.Y. 1986\). It must be noted that HN8 the question of standing is totally separate and distinct from the question of plaintiff's [\[\*\*24\]](#) right to represent a purported class under Rule 23. Standing to [\[\*505\]](#) sue is an essential threshold which must be crossed before any determination as to class representation under Rule 23 can be made. Vulcan Society of Westchester County v. Fire Dep't of City of White Plains, 82 F.R.D. 379, 398 \(S.D.N.Y. 1979\); German v. Federal Home Mortgage Corp., 885 F. Supp. 537, 547-48 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\).

A. Illinois Brick

Defendants contend that under the Supreme Court's holding in Illinois Brick, which held that only direct purchasers from an alleged conspirator have standing to bring antitrust claims, proposed class members who traded through brokers not owned or controlled by Defendants are indirect purchasers, and therefore lack standing to sue

Defendants.<sup>11</sup> Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 735, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977). As set forth above, the issue of Illinois Brick standing must be addressed at this juncture, prior to class certification.

[**25] The Supreme Court has strictly adhered to the bright-line rule established in Illinois Brick, holding that the "possibility of allowing an exception, even in rather meritorious circumstances, would undermine the rule." Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 2817, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990). Nonetheless, HN9 where a particular industry structure includes a principal-agent relationship between the indirect and direct purchasers such that the two are not distinct economic entities in the purchase chain, the indirect purchaser has standing under Illinois Brick. See Diskin v. Daily Racing Form, Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9129, 1994-1 CCH Trade Cases P 70,649 (S.D.N.Y. 1994).

Plaintiffs contend that proposed class members who purchased securities through non-Defendant owned brokers have standing under Illinois Brick because, as a matter of law, securities brokers are not distinct economic entities; rather, as statutorily defined, brokers buy or sell "for the account of others," not for their own accounts. See 15 U.S.C. § 78(c).

The small body of case law addressing this issue indicates that the question whether an investor who purchased Class Securities through non-Defendant-owned [**26] brokers has standing turns on the scope of the brokers' role in relation to the transaction at issue.

The plaintiff in Diskin, an antitrust suit against the publisher of the Daily Racing Form, a horse racing newspaper, asserted that Illinois Brick did not bar his suit because the distributors from whom he purchased the newspaper were mere sales agents who retained the right to send back all unsold copies to the publisher. The Court held that the distributors were "mere agents", and did "not constitute a distinct entrepreneurial link in the chain of distribution." Diskin at *5.

In McCarthy v. Recordex Service, Inc., 80 F.3d 842 (3d Cir. 1996) several individuals who had been plaintiffs in medical malpractice cases brought suit against copying services and hospitals that had charged $ 1 or more per page for copying. However, the hospital or copying service "in each case, billed the [plaintiff's] attorney directly." Id. at 845. Moreover, "in actual practice, the [law] firm never sought reimbursement for advanced costs where representation of the client did not lead to a recovery." Id. at 846. The Court found that, where "none of the plaintiffs retained their [**27] lawyers to act as mere purchasing agents," the lawyers themselves were "the direct purchasers of the hospital-record photocopies." Id. at 852.

The McCarthy court noted that, under the circumstances, the "plaintiffs here are no more direct purchasers of the hospital record photocopies than a passenger in a taxicab would be considered the direct purchaser of the gasoline used by the taxicab to carry the passenger to his destination." McCarthy, 80 F.3d at 853, n.18.

This analogy clarifies the distinctions between the facts upon which the McCarthy [*506] holding was based and the facts present here. The brokers who purchased securities on behalf of investors did not incorporate those securities into a bundle of services that was then provided to the investors, in the way the photocopies were incorporated into legal services, or gasoline is incorporated into taxi service. Rather, the purchase of the securities was itself the ultimate service provided to the investor. Moreover, as securities brokers are in the business of effecting transactions "for the account of others," they do not constitute a distinct link in the chain of distribution.

Accordingly, the McCarthy court's [**28] holding -- that an attorney's status as agent did not render her clients direct purchasers of photocopies -- does not compel the conclusion that brokers' agent status does not render investors direct purchasers of stock such that they have standing under Illinois Brick. Stock brokers are not necessarily a separate "link in the chain of distribution," but instead (by statute) they trade "for the account of others."

<sup>11</sup> Defendants concede that investors who purchased securities through brokers who are commonly-owned affiliates of Defendants have standing under Illinois Brick. Accordingly, this section addresses only the standing of those investors who purchased securities through brokers not owned by Defendants.

This Court, in Diskin, HN10 has set forth several factors relevant to determining whether a principal and an agent constitute distinct economic entities for purposes of Illinois Brick standing:

whether the agent performs a function on behalf of his principal other than securing an offer [or a price] from a buyer [or seller] for the . . . product; the degree to which the agent is authorized to exercise his discretion concerning the price and terms under which the principal's product is to be sold [or bought]; and finally whether the use of the agent constitutes a separate step in the vertical distribution of the . . . product.

Diskin at *5 (citing Fuchs Sugars & Syrups, Inc. v. Amstar Corp., 602 F.2d 1025, 1031, n.5 \(2d Cir. 1979\)). [\[\*\*29\]](#)

With respect to the first of these criteria, Defendants urge that some securities brokers provide investment advice as well as purchasing and sales services, and that they charge one lump sum to cover that advice as well as the sales. There has been no evidence submitted regarding which non-Defendant owned brokers provide such advice, and which only execute the purchases and sales requested by investors. Likewise, there is no evidence before the Court with respect to the broker's discretion concerning the price and terms of the purchase and sales. The third factor, whether the use of the broker constitutes a "separate step" in the vertical distribution of the securities, appears to be not an independent factor so much as the conclusion to which the first two factors lead.

In light of the cases cited above and the factors set forth in Diskin, the class will be defined to include investors who transacted through non-Defendant owned brokers where those brokers did not function as a distinct economic entity in the chain of purchase or sale. Thus, a determination of whether, in the event of a monetary settlement or judgment, particular investors who transacted through brokers are [\[\*\*30\]](#) entitled to a portion of the award, will require evidentiary submissions in light of the Diskin factors.

In any event, even if it is later determined that some or all Plaintiffs who purchased or sold securities through a non-Defendant owned broker lack standing under Illinois Brick, those Plaintiffs will only be barred from prosecuting damage claims, and will still be entitled to remain in the class for purposes of seeking injunctive relief. See McCarthy, 80 F.3d at 856 (citing Mid-West Paper Products Co. v. Continental Group, Inc., 596 F.2d 573, 590 \(3d Cir. 1979\); In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 600 F.2d 1148, 1167 \(5th Cir. 1979\)).

B. The State of Louisiana Cannot Sue on Claims of State Agencies

Plaintiff the State of Louisiana, through its Attorney General, Richard P. Ieyoub, seeks inclusion in the proposed class in its capacity as parens patriae, trustee, guardian, and representative of individual Louisiana residents. Plaintiffs have identified five retirement systems (the "Systems") on whose behalf the State of Louisiana now seeks to proceed as a class representative.<sup>12</sup> [\[\*507\]](#) Complaint, P 91. Plaintiffs contend that, pursuant to L.A. Rev. [\[\*\*31\]](#) Stat. § 49:257A, the Attorney General has statutory authority to represent the systems, as they are state agencies.

L.A. Rev. Stat. § 49:257A provides:

.... HN11 In addition, to any other powers, duties or authority granted to the attorney general and the Department of Justice by the constitution and the laws of the state, the attorney general shall represent the state and all departments and agencies of state government....

L.A. Rev. Stat. § 49:257A.

HN12 This statute, however, does not allow the Attorney General to act as a party in interest on behalf of state agencies; rather, it merely provides that the Attorney General may act as counsel for state agencies in certain cases. [**32] See Minutes of the House Committee on Appropriations, Regular Session, June 20, 1988 (legislative committee discussions focusing on litigation control issues, i.e., numbers of attorneys to be retained, and method of selecting outside attorneys).

<sup>12</sup> The Systems are the Louisiana School Employees Retirement System, the Louisiana State Employees Retirement System, the Employees Retirement System of the Sewerage & Water Board of New Orleans, the Employees Retirement System of the City of Baton Rouge and the State of Louisiana District Attorneys' Retirement System.

Louisiana's Supreme Court has long held that HN13<sup>13</sup> the State cannot sue on causes of action that belong to state agencies as distinct legal entities. The contrary view, advanced by the Attorney General here, was rejected by the Louisiana Supreme Court in State v. Tensas Delta Land Co., 126 La. 59, 52 So. 216 (La. 1910):

The argument that the board is . . . a mere instrumentality of the state, and that therefore the state may sue in every case where the said board might sue, contains a manifest non sequitur. Every city, town, and parish of the state is a mere agency or instrumentality of the state; but no one would venture to say that the Attorney General could ignore the existence of these corporations and enforce, in the name of the state, any cause of action which any of them might have . . . If one of these corporations have [sic] a right of action, the proper functionary to enforce same is the governing body of the corporation, [**33] and not the Attorney General, or the state.

Id. at 221. See also Saint v. Allen, 172 La. 350, 134 So. 246, 249 (La. 1931); State, through Governor's Special Comm'n on Educ. v. Dear, 532 So. 2d 902 (La. App. 5th Cir. 1988) (state agencies and political corporations are sole parties capable of bringing suit to enforce their rights); State ex rel. Guste v. Board of Highways, 275 So. 2d 207 (La. App. 1st Cir. 1973), writ issued by, 279 So. 2d 201 (La. 1973), aff'd, 289 So. 2d 82 (La. 1974).

Under Louisiana law, each of the Systems has the power to "sue and be sued," <sup>13</sup> demonstrating that each is a distinct legal entity from the State of Louisiana. See Saint, 134 So. at 249. Indeed, the retirement systems' legal independence from the State is demonstrated by the fact that the State has previously been sued by two of the Systems -- the Louisiana State Employees' Retirement System and the Louisiana School Employees' Retirement System. See Louisiana State Employees' Retirement Sys., et al. v. State of Louisiana, 423 So. 2d 73 (La. App. 1st Cir. 1982), writ denied, 427 So. 2d 1206 (La. 1983).

[**34] There is thus a distinction between the State acting as plaintiff, and the Attorney General's statutory authority to represent state agencies proceeding in their own names. Even assuming the Attorney General is authorized here to serve as counsel to the Systems, such authorization does not transform the State into the real party in interest.<sup>14</sup>

[*508] Moreover, in the absence of a direct pecuniary interest, the state cannot proceed. See Green v. Louisiana Underwriters Ins. Co., 571 So. 2d 610, 615 (La. 1990). Because the Systems' assets belong to state employees,<sup>15</sup> not to the State of Louisiana, Louisiana has no distinct pecuniary interest [**35] in the Systems' funds:

The [retirement system] funds involved here consist of contributions made by the individual members of the retirement systems and matching contributions by the State. The State contributions are in the nature of fringe benefits or additional compensation. The funds here belong to the members of the systems. Neither the State nor the general public has any proprietary interest in same.

<sup>13</sup> See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 11:1001 et seq. (Louisiana School Employees' Retirement System); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 11:401 et seq. (Louisiana State Employees' Retirement System); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 11:1581 et seq. (Louisiana District Attorneys' Retirement System); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 11:3821 et seq. (Employees' Retirement System of the Sewerage & Water Board of New Orleans); Board of Trustees of the Employees' Retirement System of the City of Baton Rouge and Parish of East Baton Rouge v. Commission on Ethics for Public Employees, 655 So. 2d 1355 (La. App. 1st Cir. 1995) (Employees Retirement System at the City of Baton Rouge).

<sup>14</sup> Even where the Attorney General has represented a state agency pursuant to La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 49:257, the real party in interest remained the agency, not the State. See, e.g., American Furniture Co. v. International Accommodations Supply, 721 F.2d 478 (5th Cir. 1981) (Attorney General represented Louisiana State Employees' Retirement System in its own name).

<sup>15</sup> The Attorney General has acknowledged that retirement system funds are not "public funds," but rather belong to the employee members of the systems, such that the State has no interest. Mr. Ieyoub admitted that the State has no interest in the monies owned by the Original and Late Filing Systems. Louisiana Attorney General Opinion No. 94-44.

Louisiana State Employees' Retirement Sys., 423 So. 2d at 75.

The claims for relief here thus belong to the individual retirement systems that bought or sold the securities. Those Systems alone have the right to assert their claims. See *Guste, I**36] 275 So. 2d at 207;* Tensas Delta Land Co., 52 So. at 216. Consequently, Louisiana has no viable claim to bring on its own behalf.

Plaintiffs also contend that the Systems may confer, and have conferred, authority upon the State to pursue its claims and upon the Attorney General "to represent" the systems. Although affidavits have been sworn on behalf of each of the Systems purporting to confer on the Attorney General authority to represent these systems in this case, this purported conferral of representational authority on the Attorney General does not establish the State as a party with claims to pursue, as required to proceed.

Finally, although Plaintiffs refer to the systems' purported willingness to intervene as plaintiffs, they have not done so, and their stated willingness to seek intervention in the future is not relevant to the instant motion.

C. The Proposed Class Representatives Have Standing to Sue Each of the Named Defendants

Defendants note that 23 of the 33 named Defendants are not alleged to have traded with any of the named individual Plaintiffs. However, in order to establish standing against all the named Defendants, Plaintiffs need not have included *[**37]* among their proposed Class Representatives one individual who traded with each Defendant. HN14 [↑] Because antitrust liability is joint and several, a Plaintiff injured by one Defendant as a result of the conspiracy has standing to represent a class of individuals injured by any of the Defendant's co-conspirators. Rios v. Marshall, 100 F.R.D. 395, 404 (S.D.N.Y. 1983).

II. The Requirements of Rule 23(a)

Rule 23(a) provides that:

HN15 [↑] one or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

If these four criteria are not met, an action may not be maintained as a class action. Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 23(b). Each of these criteria is considered in turn below.

A. Numerosity and Impracticability

Rule 23(a)(1) HN16 [↑] requires that the class be "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." *[**38]* Impracticability means difficulty or inconvenience of joinder; the rule does not require impossibility of joinder. Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis v. Fox & Co., 102 F.R.D. 507, 511 *[*5091 (S.D.N.Y. 1984); Goldstein v. North Jersey Trust Company, 39 F.R.D. 363, 367 (S.D.N.Y. 1966).* Here, the class numbers at least a million members, and the numerosity requirement is clearly satisfied. Moreover, a class of this size plainly makes joinder of all members impracticable, if not impossible.

Courts in this circuit have routinely held that classes far smaller than the one proposed here are sufficiently numerous for class certification. See, e.g., Korn v. Franchard Corp., 456 F.2d 1206, 1209 (2d Cir. 1972) (certifying class which may be limited to 70 investors); McNeill v. New York City Housing Authority, 719 F. Supp. 233, 252 (1989) (1,059 Section 8 tenants whose subsidies were suspended or terminated); Fidelis Corp. v. Litton Industries, Inc., 293 F. Supp. 164, 170 (S.D.N.Y. 1968) (certifying class of 35-70 individuals).

As this Court noted in German, 885 F. Supp. at 552, HN17 [↑] "precise quantification of the class members is not necessary because the court may make [**39] common sense assumptions to support a finding of numerosity." Accord, Maywalt v. Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., 147 F.R.D. 51, 55 (S.D.N.Y. 1993); Ellender v. Schweiker, 550 F. Supp. 1348, 1359 (S.D.N.Y. 1982), app. dism'd, 781 F.2d 314 (2d Cir. 1984). Plaintiffs may rely on reasonable inferences drawn from the available facts in order to estimate the size of the class. McNeill, 719 F. Supp. at 252.

Here, as in McNeill, more precise information as to the numbers of persons affected is within Defendants' control, but "there is something within the record from which it can be inferred that a class does exist," and "a rough estimate could be made." See Clarkson v. Coughlin, 783 F. Supp. 789, 798 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\).

In sum,

there is no magic minimum number that breathes life into a class, see Bruce v. Christian, 113 F.R.D. 554, 556 (S.D.N.Y. 1986), and lack of knowledge of the exact number of persons affected is not a bar to certification where the Defendants alone have access to such data, see McNeill v. New York City Housing Authority, 719 F. Supp. 233, 252 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\); Folsom v. Blum, 87 F.R.D. 443, 445 \(S.D.N.Y. 1980\) ....

[**40] Clarkson, 783 F. Supp. at 798.

The number of plaintiffs who have bought or sold Class Securities during the Class Period readily meets the numerosity requirement of Rule 23\(a\)\(1\).

B. Commonality

Rule 23\(a\)\(2\) HN18 [↑] requires that, for an action to be properly maintained as a class action, there must be common issues of fact and law.

Here, common questions of law and fact exist as to whether a conspiracy existed among the Defendants to eliminate odd-eighths in order to inflate the spread artificially. Specifically, Plaintiffs assert that the following questions of law or fact are common to all plaintiffs in the proposed class:

- (a) whether Defendants and their co-conspirators engaged in a conspiracy to raise, fix and maintain Nasdaq spreads at supra-competitive levels;
- (b) the duration and extent of Defendants' conspiracy;
- (c) whether each Defendants was a participant in the conspiracy;
- (d) whether Defendants' conspiracy violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act;
- (e) whether Defendants took affirmative steps to conceal their conspiracy;
- (f) the effect of Defendants' conspiracy upon the Nasdaq spreads for Class Securities;
- (g) the appropriate [**41] measure of damages and the amount of damages suffered by the Class as a whole;
- (h) whether Plaintiffs and the members of the Class are entitled to declaratory and injunctive relief.

Complaint P 88.

Numerous courts have held that HN19 [↑] allegations concerning the existence, scope, and efficacy of an alleged antitrust conspiracy present important common questions sufficient to satisfy the commonality requirement of Rule 23\(a\)\(2\). See In Re Potash Antitrust Litigation, 159 F.R.D. 682, 689 (D. Minn. 1995); In Re Workers' Compensation Antitrust Litigation, 130 F.R.D. 99, 105 (D. Minn. 1990) (recognizing [*510] that "antitrust, price-fixing conspiracy cases, by their nature, deal with common legal and factual questions about the existence, scope and effect of the alleged conspiracy"); Town of New Castle v. Yonkers Contracting Co., Inc., 131 F.R.D. 38, 41 n.4 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) ("We agree with plaintiffs that the issue of the existence and effect of an antitrust conspiracy involves common questions of law and fact."); Thillens, Inc. v. Community Currency Exch. Assn., 97 F.R.D. 668, 677 (N.D. Ill. 1983) ("The overriding common issue of law is to determine the existence of a conspiracy."); [**42] In re Alcoholic Beverages Antitrust Litigation, 95 F.R.D. 321, 324 (E.D.N.Y. 1982); Jennings Oil Co., Inc. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 80 F.R.D. 124, 128 (S.D.N.Y. 1978) (commonality requirement satisfied when plaintiff raises "common questions of the existence, scope, and effect of the alleged conspiracy"); In Re Master Key Antitrust Litigation, 70 F.R.D. 23, 25-26 (D. Conn.), app. dism'd, 528 F.2d 5 \(2d Cir. 1975\); Dennis v. Saks & Co., 1975-2 CCH Trade Cases P 60, 396 (S.D.N.Y. 1975). See also, 4 H. Newberg & A. Conte, Newberg on Class Actions § 18.05 (3d ed. 1992).

The Complaint alleges a single conspiracy among Defendants and their co-conspirators, as leading Nasdaq market-makers. Complaint P 1, 2(b), 7-10, 99(b), 102, 104, 106-109. Proof of the alleged conspiracy is the heart of this case, and is crucial to the claims of all members of the class. Each of the putative class members has a common interest in proving the existence, scope, effectiveness and impact of that conspiracy, as well as the appropriate injunctive and monetary relief to remedy the injury caused by the conspiracy.

Even to the extent that "each member of the class presents a slightly [**43] different factual situation, each presents a common legal question." Stenson v. Blum, 476 F. Supp. 1331, 1335 (citing Lyons v. Weinberger, 376 F. Supp. 248, 263 \(S.D.N.Y. 1974\)); 3B Moore's Federal Practice P 23.06-1 at 23-176, 23-180 (3d ed. 1978)). In the event further proceedings reveal that some of the questions raised by the Plaintiffs require individual inquiries, those issues can be resolved either by further defining the scope of the class action, by designating sub-classes, or by decertifying the class. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(4)(B).

In sum, there are sufficient common questions of fact and law to satisfy this requirement.<sup>16</sup>

C. Typicality

Rule 23\(a\)\(3\) HN20 [↑] requires that the claims asserted by plaintiffs on behalf of a proposed class be typical of the claims of the other members of the class.

Typicality refers to the nature [**44] of the claim of the class representatives and not to the specific facts from which the claim arose or relief is sought. The proper inquiry is whether other members of the class have the same or similar injury, whether the action is based on conduct not special or unique to the named plaintiffs, and whether other class members have been injured by the same course of conduct.

Dura-Bilt Corp., 89 F.R.D. at 99; see Gary Plastic Packaging Corp. v. Merrill Lynch, 903 F.2d 176, 179 \(2d Cir. 1990\).

HN21 [↑] Typicality under Rule 23 requires that a class representative "have the incentive to prove all the elements of the cause of action which would be presented by the individual members of the class were they initiating individualized actions." Daniels v. Amerco, 1983-1 Trade Cas. P 65, 274 (S.D.N.Y. 1983); National Auto Brokers Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 60 F.R.D. 476, 486-87 \(S.D.N.Y. 1973\) ("the primary criterion [for determining typicality] is the forthrightness and vigor with which the representative party can be expected to assert the interests of the members of the class").

The Plaintiffs in this action, like every other member of the proposed Class, are purchasers [**45] and sellers of Class Securities during the Class Period. They allege that they have been injured by Defendants' conspiratorial refusal to quote in odd-eighths, which artificially inflated the spread between [*511] the bid and the ask price, to the financial disadvantage of investors.

Rule 23\(a\)'s HN22 [↑] typicality requirement is established where, as here, the claims of the representative Plaintiffs arise from the same course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of the other Class members, where the claims are based on the same legal theory, and where the class members have allegedly been injured by the same course of conduct as that which allegedly injured the proposed representatives. See, e.g., In Re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, 960 F.2d 285, 291 \(2d Cir. 1992\); Rossini v. Ogilvy & Mather, Inc., 798 F.2d 590, 598 \(2d Cir. 1986\); German, 885 F. Supp. at 554-55; Maywalt, 147 F.R.D. at 57; Trief v. Dun & Bradstreet Corp., 144 F.R.D. 193, 200 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\); Dura-Bilt, 89 F.R.D. at 99. See also 1 Newberg on Class Actions § 3.13 at 2-76 (the typicality requirement is usually met "when it is alleged that the same unlawful conduct was directed at or affected [**46] both the named plaintiffs and the class sought to be represented").

---

<sup>16</sup> The issue of the predominance of common issues of law and fact is addressed herein at the Court's discussion of the requirements of Rule 23\(b\)\(1\).

Defendants advance several contentions with respect to the typicality requirement of Rule 23\(a\). First, Defendants urge that typicality is defeated by objective economic variables which determine the spreads on a given security and which must be assessed individually to assess whether a given Class Security was actually affected by the alleged conspiracy. According to the Defendants, each Plaintiff has an interest only in demonstrating that the security which she bought or sold was affected by the alleged conspiracy at the time of the Plaintiff's transaction, and such a limited interest is insufficient to adequately represent the proposed class, which would include millions of investors with varying individual interests in demonstrating the effect of the alleged conspiracy on millions of different transactions over a five-year period.

HN23 [+] Typicality, however, does not require that the situations of the named representatives and the class members be identical. Trief v. Dun & Bradstreet Corp., 144 F.R.D. at 200. See also Dura-Bilt Corp., 89 F.R.D. at 99 n.12. Moreover, provided that all claims arise from the same [**47] price-fixing conspiracy, factual differences among proposed Class members' claims do not defeat class certification.

As set forth above, the Court has determined that the alleged conspiracy will be susceptible by proof common to all class members. Moreover, the Court has also determined that a Plaintiff injured by one of the Defendants as a result of the conspiracy has standing to sue the co-conspirator defendants even though that plaintiff had no direct dealings with the co-conspirators. See Rios, 100 F.R.D. at 404. Accordingly, each Plaintiff has an incentive to demonstrate each Defendant's participation in the alleged conspiracy.

In In re South Central States Bakery Products Antitrust Litigation, 86 F.R.D. 407, 417 \(M.D. La. 1980\), the court held:

although ... members of the proposed class, bought through different mechanisms ... the essential claim of both [class representative] and the class members is that the prices paid were established by combination or conspiracy. The mere fact that all of the methods through which the alleged conspiracy was effected were not used with respect to [the plaintiff], or the fact that [the class representative] did not [**48] purchase from all defendants, does not determine that the claim of [the class representative] lacks typicality under Rule 23\(a\)\(3\).

86 F.R.D. at 417.

As held in the In re Sugar Indus. Antitrust Litig.:

In antitrust disputes, since the representative parties need prove a conspiracy, its effectuation, and damages therefrom -- precisely what the absentees must prove to recover -- the representative claims can hardly be considered atypical.

73 F.R.D. 322, 336 \(E.D. Pa. 1976\). See also, 1 Newberg on Class Actions § 3.13 at 3-79 & n. 208 (explaining that "differences in the methods of purchase or kinds of products purchased among class members have been held not to bar a finding of typical claims" in price-fixing actions, and that "in class actions charging defendants with a conspiracy to fix prices, the claims of the named plaintiff were [*512] held typical of the claims of the class members despite variations in the manner in which members of the class purchased from the defendants, variations in the kinds of products purchased, differences in price, and other factors"). In the present case, the typicality requirement is satisfied, because the Complaint [**49] alleges a single price-fixing conspiracy, and the class is limited to securities on which odd-eighth quotations were effectively eliminated by reason of that conspiracy.

Defendants also argue that institutional investors cannot be included in a class, because they are sophisticated traders with superior bargaining power who effectively determine, in individual negotiations, the prices at which they execute trades. In light of the Court's holding that the State of Louisiana may not proceed in this action on behalf of its state agencies, the named Plaintiffs do not currently include any institutional investors. Accordingly, the issue of the typicality of institutional investors' claims is not currently before the Court, and need not be addressed.

Finally, Defendants contend that the inclusion of six Plaintiffs who purchased or sold securities through a broker defeats typicality, as the claims of those Plaintiffs are factually and legally different from those of the remainder of the individual Plaintiffs, who traded directly with Defendants.<sup>17</sup> Defendants rely on In re Anthracite Coal Antitrust Litig., 1978-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 62,059, at 74,590 (M.D. Pa. 1978), in which the court [**50] held that the claim of the proposed class representative, a direct purchaser of coal, was not typical of a class where many of the class members purchased coal indirectly through middlemen. Here, however, the proposed class representatives include individuals who transacted directly with Defendants as well as those who used brokers to transact Defendants. Accordingly, the proposed Class representatives include those whose claims are typical of those proposed Class members who invested with a broker, as well as those who invested without a broker.

Defendants argue further that it has not been demonstrated that any of these six Plaintiffs' brokers actually traded directly with a Defendant or a co-conspirator, as required by Plaintiffs' class definition. In the event it is determined that any of those brokers did not trade [**51] with a Defendant or a co-conspirator, the investors on behalf of whom they traded will be deemed excluded from the class, as they will not meet the class definition.

Adequacy of Representation

Rule 23(a)(4) HN24 requires that the class representatives be adequately representative of the class.<sup>18</sup> The Supreme Court has held that Plaintiffs must satisfy both prongs of a two-pronged test to qualify as adequate representatives: (1) the representatives' interests must not conflict with the class members' interests, and (2) the representatives and their attorney must be able to prosecute the action vigorously. General Tel. Co., 457 U.S. at 157 & n.13; Dean v. Coughlin, 107 F.R.D. 331, 334 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). The commonality and typicality requirements blend together in determining whether the representative Plaintiffs' claims are typical enough of the classwide claims that the representatives will adequately represent the class. General Tel. Co., 457 U.S. at 157 & n.13.

[**52] The Plaintiffs thus must show, first, that there is an absence of conflict and antagonistic interests between the proposed representatives and the class members, and second, that Plaintiffs' counsel is "qualified, experienced and capable." *Ross v. A.H. Robins [*513] Co., 100 F.R.D. 5, 7 (S.D.N.Y. 1982)*; accord In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc., 960 F.2d 285, 291 (2d Cir. 1992).

1. Absence of Conflict

Defendants contend that inclusion in the Class of both purchasers and sellers creates an inherent conflict that precludes the named Plaintiffs from serving as class representatives. Plaintiffs' central allegation is that Defendants' conspiracy to eliminate odd-eighth quotes artificially widened spreads, such that a stock with an inside spread of 1/4 should have been quoted with a spread of 1/8. Plaintiffs have not provided a mechanism for determining whether, in the absence of the conspiracy, the bid price on a given Class Security should have been 1/8 higher, or the ask price should have been 1/8 lower. According to Defendants, buyers of a given Class Security will want to show that the extra 1/8 inflated the ask -- their purchase price -- whereas sellers of that [**53] same Class Security would want to show that the bid -- their sale price -- was decreased by the Defendants' illegal conduct.

The Complaint, however, which must be taken as true for purposes of the instant motion, alleges that "spreads" on Class Securities were "raised, fixed and maintained at artificially inflated and supra-competitive levels"; and that as a result of "these artificially inflated and supra-competitive spreads, the prices paid for Class Securities" by Class members were "artificially inflated," and the "prices realized from the sale of Class Securities" were "artificially depressed." Complaint, P 120. Thus, the conspiracy alleged by Plaintiffs is a conspiracy to fix the price of Defendants' market-making service, which is charged both to the buyers and sellers of Class Securities. As stated by Plaintiffs' expert, Professor Barclay:

<sup>17</sup> The issue of the Illinois Brick standing of those Plaintiffs who traded through non-defendant owned brokers is addressed supra, in the section of this Opinion addressing standing.

<sup>18</sup> Plaintiffs propose the following 21 class representatives:

State of Louisiana, through its Attorney General Richard P. Ieyoub, Donald Bleznak c/f Andrew Bleznak, Richard I. Burstein, Carl S. and Patricia Clark, Maxine Dampf, Jerome D. Derdel, M.D., H. Leslie Fineberg, Neal and Donna Hansen, Brent Johnson, Charles Kaye, James Krum, Robert Lipinski, John Lorge, Dennis Maloney, Kevin Maloney, Richard I. Perlman, Jeffrey Sachs, David Siegel, Two Guys Limited Partnership and its General Partner, Geltmore, Inc., Peter Wasserman and Dennis Weiner.

.... All members of the plaintiffs' class in this litigation are purchasers of market-making services.... Class members paid for market-making services, through the spread, every time they bought securities and every time they sold securities.

Each buyer and seller in the putative Class has an interest in proving the existence [**54] of Defendants' conspiracy, and in securing declaratory and injunctive relief to bring an end to that conspiracy. Moreover, every buyer and every seller has the same interest in maximizing the aggregate amount of classwide damages. See Bacon v. Toia, 437 F. Supp. 1371, 1381 \(S.D.N.Y. 1977\), aff'd, 580 F.2d 1044 \(2d Cir. 1978\).

The conflict to which Defendants refer relates only to the apportionment of the damages as between purchasers and sellers. Such hypothetical conflicts regarding proof of damages are not sufficient to defeat class certification at this stage of the litigation.

This Court previously has rejected efforts by Defendants to defeat certification by raising the possibility of hypothetical conflicts or antagonisms among class members, especially regarding proof of damages. In National Super Spuds, Inc. v. New York Mercantile Exchange, 77 F.R.D. 361 \(S.D.N.Y. 1977\), holders of Maine potato futures contracts sued short sellers and brokers of such contracts who allegedly conspired to manipulate the market price of such contracts in violation of, inter alia, Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Defendants argued that conflicts existed among Class members who purchased [**55] and sold their contracts at different times. Id. at 370-71. The Court held:

Plaintiffs have pleaded a continuing course of conduct over the period in question ... and the Court has great flexibility under Rule 23 to deal with conflicts if and when they may arise. Defendants' argument of potential time conflicts is, therefore, insufficient to deny class status.

It is clear from the foregoing that the various claims of 'conflicts' are insubstantial. The interests of the plaintiffs and of all class members in proving a conspiracy ... throughout the Class Period are identical.

Id. at 371.

In Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891 \(9th Cir. 1975\), the Ninth Circuit rejected the argument that alleged seller-purchaser conflicts could provide a basis for denying class certification:

[Defendants] contend that the interests of class members in proving damages from price inflation (and hence the existence and [**514] materiality of misrepresentations subsumed in proving inflation) irreconcilably conflict, because some class members will desire to maximize the inflation existing on a given date while others will desire to minimize it. For example, they posit that [**56] a purchaser early in the class period who later sells will desire to maximize the deflation due to an intervening corrective disclosure in order to maximize his out of pocket damages, but in so doing will conflict with his purchaser who is interested in maximizing the inflation in the price he pays. We agree that class members might at some point during this litigation have differing interests. We altogether disagree, for a spate of reasons, that such potential conflicts afford a valid reason at this time for refusing to certify the class.

Id. at 908.

"As a result, courts have generally declined to consider conflicts, particularly as they regard damages, sufficient to defeat class action status at the outset unless the conflict is apparent, imminent, and on an issue at the very heart of the suit." Blackie 524 F.2d at 909. See also Greene v. Emersons Ltd., 86 F.R.D. 47, 61 \(S.D.N.Y. 1980\) ("while differing interests among class members may ultimately surface, the greater weight of recent authority militates against denying class certification on that ground, at least at this stage of the proceedings"); Nathan Gordon Trust

*v. Northgate Exploration, Ltd., 148 [**57] F.R.D. 105, 108 (S.D.N.Y. 1993)* (rejecting defendants' argument that alleged conflicts required the elimination of in-and-out traders from the class); Simon v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 73 F.R.D. 480, 484 (E.D. Pa. 1977) ("...conflicts between buyers and sellers, or between sellers and those who continued to hold relate only to damages, and thus are peripheral to the central issues in this case.").

Even to the extent Defendants are correct that a conflict may later arise as to damages, that possibility does not preclude class certification. In In re Plywood Antitrust Litigation, 76 F.R.D. 570, 580-82 (E.D. La. 1976), the court held:

.... The benefit or detriment to particular class members ... goes to the amount of damages, if any, suffered by them. There is no antagonism within any of the classes with respect to proving that defendants did indeed illegally conspire....

76 F.R.D. at 581-82.

Similarly, in Sol S. Turnoff Drug Distributors Inc. v. N.V. Nederlandsche Combinatie Voor Chemische Industrie, 51 F.R.D. 227 (E.D. Pa. 1970) the court rejected defendants' argument that certification of a price-fixing class should be denied due to an alleged conflict: [**58]

At least at this stage of the case, all the members of the class . . . have a common interest in a favorable verdict on the issue of a conspiracy.... The possibility ... that it may develop that the interests with respect to damages of several groups within the class . . . will conflict, cannot at this point justify the denial of a class action.

Id. at 233.

The Blackie court noted that, if real antagonism later develops among the interests of various class members, the problem could be addressed through the creation of subclasses under Rule 23(c)(4). In Herbst v. International Telephone and Telegraph Corp., 495 F.2d 1308, 1321 (2d Cir. 1974), the Second Circuit affirmed a district court opinion which addressed this issue as follows:

If it appears at some time in the future that the proper allocation of damages would be effectuated by the designation of appropriate subclasses, it is undisputed that the court has all the power necessary to implement such a procedure. Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(c)(4). In any event, problems well down the road which may be pertinent to the procedures which ultimately should govern the allocation of damages need not and should [**59] not provide a roadblock to the prompt and conditional determination of whether this suit may be properly maintained as a class action.

In sum, potential conflicts between buyers and sellers do not provide a basis for denying class certification here. Rather, HN25↑ in order to warrant denial of class certification, it must be shown that any asserted "conflict" is so palpable as to outweigh the substantial interest of every class member in proceeding with [*515] the litigation. Defendants have not made this showing. Accordingly, the Court finds no fundamental conflict or inconsistency between the claims of the proposed class members. See Caleb v. DuPont De Nemours, 110 F.R.D. 316, 319 (1986).

2. Qualification of Counsel

Rule 23(a)(4) HN26↑ requires that, in order for a case to proceed as a class action, the court must find that "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." The party's attorney must therefore be "qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the proposed litigation." Id. at 563. See also Nilsson v. Coughlin, 670 F. Supp. 1186, 1191. Adequacy of representation merely requires that the class representative's attorney [**60] be qualified, and that the class representative not have interests conflicting with the class in the litigation at hand. Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 403, 42 L. Ed. 2d 532, 95 S. Ct. 553 (1975).

The attorneys seeking to represent the class in this case include some of the most experienced lawyers in the United States in the prosecution of antitrust and securities class actions. The firms representing Plaintiffs have represented that they are ready, willing and able to devote the resources necessary to litigate this case vigorously. Accordingly, this prong is satisfied.

III. The Requirements of Rule 23(b)

HN27[<sup>18</sup>] In order to maintain a class action, Plaintiffs must satisfy the requirements of Rule 23(b) in addition to satisfying the prerequisites of Rule 23(a). Pursuant to Rule 23(b), a class action may be maintained where:

(2) HN28[<sup>19</sup>] the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief for the class as a whole; or

(3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions [**61] affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

Subparts (b)(2) and (b)(3) of Rule 23 are disjunctive, and only one need be satisfied in order to support certification of a class. Plaintiffs request that the Court certify a class pursuant to both Rule 23(b)(2) and (b)(3).<sup>19</sup>

[**62] Courts have certified antitrust class actions both under Rule 23(b)(2) and (b)(3) if the requirements of each rule are satisfied.

Nothing in the language of Rule 23 precludes certification of both an injunctive class and a damages class in the same action. In fact, where injunctive relief and damages are both important components of the relief requested, court[s] have regularly certified an injunctive class under Rule 23(b)(2) and a damages class under Rule 23(b)(3) in the same action.

[*516] Davis v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20033, 1993-2 CCH Trade Cases P 70,480, 71,604 (S.D. Fla. 1993) (citing Waldrup v. Motorola, Inc., 85 F.R.D. 349 (N.D. Ga. 1980); Marshall v. Electric Hose & Rubber Co., 68 F.R.D. 287 (D. Del. 1975)). See also In re Domestic Air Transportation Antitrust Litigation, 137 F.R.D. 677, 696 (N.D. Ga. 1991); In re Catfish Antitrust Litigation, 826 F. Supp. 1019, 1045-46 (N.D. Miss. 1993); 1 Newberg on Class Actions § 4.14 at 4-49 - 4-51.

A. The Class Will Be Certified Under Rule 23(b)(2) Because Injunctive Relief Is Appropriate

Plaintiffs' Complaint seeks the following relief:

<sup>19</sup> Where a class is certified under Rule 23(b)(3), notice must be provided individually to each class member who can be identified through reasonable efforts. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2). Notice under Rule 23(b)(2) is flexible, and may consist entirely of published notice in appropriate circumstances.

Here, a Subclass will be certified consisting of Class members who, at the time of class notice, are current customers of Defendants and to whom Defendants send periodic mailings. As to this Subclass, the notice requirement of (b)(3) can be satisfied by an insert in Defendants' regular monthly mailing, at Plaintiffs' expense. See, e.g., Sollenbarger v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 121 F.R.D. 417, 437 (D.N.M. 1988) (telephone company required to enclose antitrust class notice in defendant's monthly billing envelopes); In re Domestic Air Transportation Antitrust Litigation, 141 F.R.D. 534, 549-52 (N.D. Ga. 1992) (rejecting defendants' objections to inclusion of notice in the defendants' inflight magazines). As the Supreme Court noted with approval in Oppenheimer Fund, Inc. v. Sanders, 437 U.S. 340, 355 n.11, 57 L. Ed. 2d 253, 98 S. Ct. 2380 (1978), "a number of courts have required defendants in Rule 23(b)(3) class actions to enclose class notices in their periodic mailings to class members in order to reduce the expense of sending the notice." (citing, inter alia, Ste. Marie v. Eastern R.R. Assn., 72 F.R.D. 443, 450 n.2 (S.D.N.Y. 1976), aff'd, 650 F.2d 395 (2d Cir. 1981); Gates v. Dalton, 67 F.R.D. 621, 633 (E.D.N.Y. 1975); Popkin v. Wheelabrator-Frye, Inc., 20 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 125, 130 (S.D.N.Y. 1975)). Such "piggyback notice" will significantly reduce the cost of providing mailed notice under Rule 23(b)(3).

(b) That the unlawful combination [**63] and conspiracy alleged herein be adjudged and decreed to be in unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1;

* * *

(d) That Defendants be preliminarily and permanently enjoined from continuing the unlawful combination or conspiracy alleged herein.

Complaint P 124.

HN29 [Footnote] Certification is appropriate under Rule 23(b)(2) where declaratory or injunctive relief is an important aspect of the overall relief sought. Gelb v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 150 F.R.D. 76, 78 (S.D.N.Y. 1993). See also In re Catfish Antitrust Litigation, 826 F. Supp. at 1045-46; Northwestern Fruit Co. v. A. Levy & J. Zentner, 116 F.R.D. 384, 388 (E.D. Cal. 1986); Davis, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20033, 1993-2 CCH Trade Cases P 70,480 at 71,604. As reasoned in Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 811 (3rd Cir. 1984), another antitrust case:

The class in this case is a classic (b)(2) class in that the Defendants have "acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class" and the primary relief sought is an injunction.... When a suit seeks to define the relationship between the defendant(s) and the world at large, as in this case, [**64] (b)(2) certification is appropriate.

Here, Plaintiffs have alleged a combination or conspiracy which has had the effect of significantly widening spreads on Class Securities. Plaintiffs specifically allege that Defendants' combination or conspiracy is continuing. Complaint P 117. Unless enjoined and made subject to the appropriate equitable relief, Defendants' alleged conspiracy will continue to inflate spreads for the benefit of Defendants and to the detriment of the Class.

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs primarily seek monetary damages, in the form of antitrust treble damage, and that under these circumstances, class certification under section 23(b)(2) is inappropriate. See The Advisory Committee Note to the 1966 Amendment of Rule 23 ("subdivision [23(b)(2)] does not extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages").

In support of this contention, Defendants rely on cases from this Circuit holding that Subsection (b)(2) is applicable only where the relief sought is exclusively or predominantly injunctive or declaratory, and not where antitrust treble damages are a prominent feature of the relief sought. [**65] Eisen, 391 F.2d 555, 564; see also Gelb, 150 F.R.D. at 78; Milonas v. Hess, 1976-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 61,069 at 69, 818-19 & n.2 (S.D.N.Y. 1976); Robertson v. National Basketball Ass'n, 389 F. Supp. 867, 900 (S.D.N.Y. 1975); Free World Foreign Cars, Inc. v. Alfa Romeo, 55 F.R.D. 26, 30 n.9 (S.D.N.Y. 1972); Coniglio v. Highwood Serv., Inc., 60 F.R.D. 359, 363 (W.D.N.Y. 1972); United Equities Co. v. New York Tel. Co., No. 70 Civ. 4379, 1971 WL 4730, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. June 18, 1971).

Defendants note that Plaintiffs have not alleged that all of the members of the purported injunctive class intend to trade in Class Securities in the future, and that Plaintiffs have alleged that the "relevant time period" of the Complaint ended almost two years ago, in May 1994. Complaint P 83. Finally, Defendants contend that imposing injunctive relief on such a massive scale would inappropriately involve this Court in the day-to-day trading operations of Nasdaq, [*517] a large, high volume securities market. See National Auto Brokers Corp., 60 F.R.D. at 492 (in antitrust pricing case, "to attempt to grant injunctive relief on a mass basis would violate the applicable provision of [**66] the antitrust laws."); United Equities Co., No. 70 Civ. 4379, 1971 WL 4370, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 18, 1971) ("The injunction asked for is an order directing the defendants to cease and desist from the activities complained of . . . This injunction is as impractical as it is nebulous. It would involve the court in day-to-day supervision . . .").

As stated in the In re Catfish Antitrust Litigation, 826 F. Supp. 1019, 1046 (N.D. Miss. 1993), however, "more recent trends in Rule 23(b)(2) utilization appear to favor a broader application of equitable relief certification" even where damages also are sought. See also Vulcan Society v. Fire Department of City of White Plains, 82 F.R.D. 379, 402 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

Defendants' contention that plaintiffs primarily seek antitrust treble damages is insufficient to defeat class certification under Rule 23(b)(2). In the event Plaintiffs are able to prove the existence and effect of the alleged conspiracy, the requested declaratory and injunctive relief will be necessary to ensure that Nasdaq investors are not harmed in the future by Defendants' anticompetitive conduct. Moreover, the Proposed Consent Decree submitted in the Government [**67] Action demonstrates that significant changes in Nasdaq's operation are necessary to eliminate the practices of which Plaintiffs complain.

Thus, the requested declaratory and injunctive relief is a significant component of the overall relief which plaintiffs seek. Class certification under Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) therefore appropriate.

B. The Class Will Be Certified Under Rule 23(b)(3)

1. Predominance of Common Issues

HN30 [+] To certify a case under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), a court must find that the common issues of law and fact predominate over individual issues. The predominance requirement is satisfied unless it is clear that individual issues will overwhelm the common questions and render the class action valueless. Milberg v. Lawrence Cedarhurst Federal Sav. & L. Ass'n, 68 F.R.D. 49, 52 (E.D.N.Y. 1975), citing inter alia, Dolgow v. Anderson, 43 F.R.D. 472 (E.D.N.Y. 1968).

HN31 [+] To recover damages, Plaintiffs will have to prove:

- (1) that defendants violated the antitrust laws; (2) that the alleged violations caused plaintiffs to suffer some direct [antitrust] injury to their business or property; and (3) that the extent of this injury can be quantified with requisite precision.

[**68] Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969), rev'd on other gds, 401 U.S. 321 (1971); see also Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983); U.S. Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1377 (2d Cir. 1988).

Plaintiffs' burden on this motion for class certification is to establish that common proof will predominate at trial with respect to these three essential elements of antitrust liability. See Daniels v. Amerco, 1983-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 65,274 at 69,313 (S.D.N.Y. 1983).

As set forth above in the discussion of the commonality requirement of Rule 23\(a\), Plaintiffs, in order to prove the existence and scope of the alleged conspiracy, will have to submit evidence regarding the following issues:

- (1) whether Defendants and their co-conspirators engaged in a combination or conspiracy to raise, fix and maintain Nasdaq spreads at supra-competitive levels;
- (2) the implementation, duration and scope of Defendants' combination or conspiracy;
- (3) whether each defendant [**69] was a participant in the combination or conspiracy;
- (4) whether Defendants' conduct violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act;
- (5) whether Defendants took affirmative steps to conceal their combination or conspiracy;
- [*518] (6) the effectiveness of Defendants' combination or conspiracy;
- (7) whether Plaintiffs and the members of the Class are entitled to injunctive relief, and the appropriate contours of that relief;
- (8) the appropriate measure of damages and the amount of damages suffered by the Class as a whole.

Each of these issues will be addressed in greater detail below.

a. The Existence of Defendants' Conspiracy

Since a single conspiracy is alleged, the relevant proof of this will not vary among class members, and clearly presents a common question fundamental to all class members. See, e.g., Uniondale Beer Co., Inc. v. Anheuser

Busch, Inc., 117 F.R.D. 340, 342 (E.D.N.Y. 1987); In re Alcoholic Beverages Litigation, 95 F.R.D. 321, 324 (E.D.N.Y. 1982); Fisher Bros. v. Mueller Brass Co., 102 F.R.D. 570, 574-75 (E.D. Pa. 1984).

Courts repeatedly have held that HN32[<sup>18</sup>] the existence of a conspiracy is the predominant issue in price fixing [**70] cases, warranting certification of the class even where significant individual issues are present. See e.g., Rios, 100 F.R.D. at 407-08; Jennings Oil Co., 80 F.R.D. at 130; City of New York v. Darling-Delaware, 1976-1 CCH Trade Cases P 60,812 at 68,513 (S.D.N.Y. 1976) (although customized and diverse services were negotiated and priced separately for each customer, proof of conspiracy predominates); Carnivale Bag Co. v. Slide-Rite Mfg. Co., 1976-2 CCH Trade Cases P 61,032 at 69,562 (S.D.N.Y. 1976) (finding predominance of common issues based on allegations of conspiracy, even though elements of impact and damages would have to be litigated individually); In re Master Key Antitrust Litig., 70 F.R.D. 23, 26 (D. Conn. 1975) (characterizing question of the existence of a conspiracy as "the central and common element of these cases"); Shelter Realty, 75 F.R.D. 34, 37 (despite customized services priced separately for each plaintiff, existence of a conspiracy is a predominating issue "when allegations of anti-competitive behavior embracing all of the various products and distribution patterns have been credibly pleaded."); Kromer v. Saks & Co., 1977-2 CCH Trade [**71] Cases P 61,771 at 73,186 (S.D.N.Y. 1977) ("other questions regarding damages and the like are subordinate to the common question of the existence of the alleged conspiracy"); Barr v. WUITAS, Inc., 66 F.R.D. 109, 115 (S.D.N.Y. 1975); Professional Adjusting Systems of America, Inc. v. General Adjustment Bureau, Inc., 64 F.R.D. 35, 40-42 (S.D.N.Y. 1974).

In order to recover, each Plaintiff class member will have to prove the existence of the Defendants' conspiracy to fix spreads. Plaintiffs have stated that, as common proof of the existence of the alleged conspiracy, they intend to submit, inter alia, certain documents already produced by Defendants, including internal Nasdaq memoranda acknowledging the widening of Nasdaq spreads; academic studies, including the one by Professors Christie and Schultz, describing the widening Nasdaq spreads and the absence of odd-eighths quotations; and documents demonstrating the narrowing of the spreads following the publicity surrounding the Christie and Schultz study.

Proof of the alleged single conspiracy will also involve evidence of conspiratorial statements and conduct, including the contents of taped telephone conversations, attributable [**72] to Defendants, which will not vary among the class members. See, e.g., In re Catfish Antitrust Litigation, 826 F. Supp. at 1039 ("evidence of a national conspiracy to fix the price of catfish and processed catfish would revolve around what Defendants did, and said, if anything, in pursuit of a price fixing scheme"); Transamerican Refining Corp. v. Dravo Corp., 130 F.R.D. 70, 75 (S.D. Tex. 1990) (proof of conspiracy is susceptible to generalized proof since the focus is on what defendants said and did). See also, e.g., National Super Spuds v. New York Mercantile Exchange, 77 F.R.D. 361, 363 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' Complaint alleges not a single conspiracy but thousands of mini-conspiracies, and that each Plaintiff will need to submit individualized proof that the particular market-maker with whom that Plaintiff traded was involved in [*519] the conspiracy to eliminate odd-eighths quotations. A plain reading of the Complaint, however, confirms Plaintiffs' characterization of their Complaint, the allegations of which must be taken as true for purposes of the instant motion. Moreover, because, as set forth below, the antitrust law provides [**73] for joint and several liability of co-conspirators, each Plaintiff will have an equal incentive to generally prove the Defendants' participation in the alleged conspiracy.

As held in the In re Sugar Industry Antitrust Litigation, 73 F.R.D. at 345:

In this litigation, it is the allegedly unlawful horizontal price-fixing arrangement among defendants that, in its broad outlines, comprises the predominating, unifying common interest as to these purported plaintiff representatives and all possible class members. Hence, the existence, implementation and effect of this alleged conspiracy ... are the central issues.... A common thread of evidence is admissible on these elements and will correspond to evidence which otherwise could be introduced by absent class members.

In sum, proof of Defendants' conspiracy lies at the heart of this case and is common to the Class.

b. The Implementation, Duration And Scope Of Defendants' Combination Or Conspiracy

In order to recover, each Plaintiff Class member will have to prove the implementation of the Defendants' conspiracy, and the mechanisms used to enforce or police that conspiracy. The relevant proof in this area will [**74] include direct as well as economic evidence of: the effective elimination of odd-eighth quotations for Class Securities; the causal relationship between the absence of odd-eighth quotations and the increased spreads for Class Securities; and the reintroduction of odd-eighths that caused a dramatic reduction in spreads following publicity about collusion.

Plaintiffs also intend to introduce economic and direct evidence regarding the scope of Defendants' conspiracy, including evidence of what securities were subject to Defendants' anticompetitive conduct, and the respective time periods for which each stock was effectively targeted.

Plaintiffs have already disclosed the methodology by which the list of Class Securities was compiled; according to Plaintiffs' expert, that methodology was used without differentiation between class members and with regard to all class members, and is therefore presents a common issue that predominates over individual issues.

c. Whether Each Defendant Participated In The Combination Or Conspiracy

HN33↑ Liability for antitrust violations is joint and several. See Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630, 635, 68 L. Ed. 2d 500, I**751 101 S. Ct. 2061 (1981); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 342-48, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, 91 S. Ct. 795 (1971). Each Class member may therefore recover his or her full loss from any defendant who can be shown to have participated in the alleged conspiracy. See, e.g., In re Uranium Antitrust Litig., 617 F.2d 1248, 1257 (7th Cir. 1980). Every Class member therefore has an interest in establishing the liability of each Defendant, and evidence as to the participation and liability of each defendant is common to the claim of every Class member.

d. Whether Defendants' Combination Or Conspiracy Violated Section 1 Of The Sherman Act

A determination of whether Defendants' conduct violates relevant antitrust law is a question of law common to all Plaintiffs. Likewise, nearly all the Defendants have raised primary jurisdiction and implied antitrust immunity as affirmative defenses in their answers to the Complaint. These affirmative defenses also present legal issues common to the entire class.

e. Whether Defendants Took Affirmative Steps To Conceal Their Combination Or Conspiracy

Plaintiffs have alleged that the statute of limitations [**76] has been tolled by reason of Defendants' fraudulent concealment of their conspiracy. Complaint P 118. HN34↑ In order [*520] to show fraudulent concealment, an antitrust plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant concealed the existence of the antitrust violation, (2) that plaintiff remained in ignorance of the violation until sometime within the four year antitrust statute of limitations; and (3) that his continuing ignorance was not the result of lack of diligence. State of New York v. Hendrickson Bros., Inc., 840 F.2d 1065, 1083 (2d Cir. 1988). Plaintiffs may prove concealment by showing either that the Defendants took affirmative steps to prevent plaintiffs' discovery of the conspiracy, or that the conspiracy itself was inherently self-concealing. Id.

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs have placed at issue the time at which each individual Plaintiff had, or should have had, actual knowledge of the conspiracy, as well as each Plaintiff's diligence in ascertaining information with respect to her trading and her dealings with a broker. According to Defendants, such issues of knowledge and diligence are inherently individual.

Defendants concede, however, that these individual issues have [**77] been held to bar class certification only where they constitute the majority of Plaintiffs' proof of concealment. Courts have overwhelmingly held that, HN35↑ even when the issue of fraudulent concealment involves both common and individual questions, the common question of whether Defendants successfully concealed the existence of the alleged conspiracy predominates over any individual questions regarding the knowledge or diligence of individual plaintiffs. See Town of New Castle v. Yonkers Contracting Co., Inc., 131 F.R.D. 38, 42-43 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); Fisher Bros. v. Mueller Brass Co., 102 F.R.D.

570 (E.D. Pa. 1984); In re Art Materials Antitrust Litigation, 1983-1 CCH Trade Cases P 65,315 at 69,868 (N.D. Ohio 1983).

Here, Plaintiffs' allegations of concealment include allegations common to all Plaintiffs, including allegations that Defendants: actively misrepresented the competitiveness of the Nasdaq market; falsely and publicly denied price-fixing; provided false rationales for the magnitude of Nasdaq spreads; and wrongly disparaged the Christie and Schultz study which indicated the existence of price-fixing. Insofar as the individual Plaintiffs are all members of the investing [**78] public, their knowledge and diligence with respect to the information Defendants allegedly concealed from the public can be litigated collectively, without significant reference to individual differences in knowledge or diligence. Accordingly, each of Plaintiffs' allegations is susceptible to common proof.

f. The Effectiveness Of Defendants' Conspiracy

Plaintiffs have identified the securities which they allege were affected by Defendants' anticompetitive conduct and have disclosed the methodology by which that list was compiled. The same methodology was used without differentiation between class members and with regard to all class members. That methodology therefore is common to the class.

Plaintiffs intend to prove the effectiveness of Defendants' conspiracy by using economic theory, academic studies, data sources, and statistical techniques -- all designed to demonstrate that Nasdaq spreads were actually widened as a result of the conspiracy -- that are common to the entire class.

g. Whether Plaintiffs Are Entitled To Injunctive Relief, And The Appropriate Contours Of That Relief

In order to establish a claim for equitable relief, the plaintiffs must establish: [**79] (1) that they are suffering actual or threatened injury as a result of the illegal conduct of the Defendants; (2) that the actual or threatened injury is reasonably traceable to the challenged conduct; and (3) that the alleged injury is likely to be redressed by the requested relief. See German, 885 F. Supp. at 559. Each of these elements is common to the class. Likewise, the contours of appropriate equitable relief will be a common question of critical importance at trial.

h. The Appropriate Measure Of Damages And The Amount Of Damages Suffered By The Class As A Whole

(i) Methodologies

Plaintiffs have disclosed the following methodologies by which they propose to [*521] prove the existence and measure of damages suffered by the Class:

1. Comparing spreads (and resulting revenues) on Class Securities with spreads (and resulting revenues) on comparable securities traded on other markets, such as the New York Stock Exchange or American Stock Exchange;
2. Comparing spreads (and resulting revenues) before and after certain Class Securities moved from trading on Nasdaq to trading on the New York Stock Exchange or the American Stock Exchange;
3. Comparing spreads [**80] (and resulting revenues) for Class Securities traded on Nasdaq, before publicity about collusion in late May, 1994 and before publicity about the commencement of the Department of Justice investigation, with spreads (and resulting revenues) for the same securities after such publicity;
4. Comparing spreads (and resulting revenues) for Class Securities traded on Nasdaq with spreads (and resulting revenues) on other Nasdaq National Market securities traded on Nasdaq;
5. Comparing spreads (and resulting revenues) for Class Securities traded on Nasdaq with spreads (and resulting revenues) for the same securities traded on alternative markets, such as Instinet;
6. Comparing Defendants' profits (as well as revenues and costs) from spreads on Class Securities with benchmarks (including but not limited to profits from spreads on other Nasdaq National Market securities traded on Nasdaq, profits after publicity about collusion or the DOJ investigation, or profits from spreads for the same or comparable securities traded on other markets).

These potential classwide measures of injury and damages may be used in combination with one another to yield a single formula or measure.

[**81] Each of these methodologies is common to the class, and the validity of each will be adjudicated at trial based upon economic theory, data sources, and statistical techniques that are entirely common to the class. Once a measure of damages is established, it can be applied to the aggregate trading volumes in Class Securities to determine aggregate damages for the Class as a whole, or to individual transactions to determine damages for individual Class members.

The above-described methodologies are widely accepted means of measuring damages in antitrust cases. In ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments (3d ed. 1992) the law on "Calculation of Damages" is summarized as follows:

In price-fixing cases ... the measure of damages in a suit by a purchaser normally is the difference between the price the plaintiff paid and the price he would have paid absent the violation....

Several different methodologies have been developed for proving damages. The "before and after" theory compares ... the prices [plaintiff] paid during the period the violation continued with ... prices paid prior to the beginning of the violation or after its termination. The "yardstick" [**82] approach compares profits earned or prices paid by the plaintiff with the corresponding data for a firm or in a market unaffected by the violation.... The "before and after," [and] "yardstick" ... theories are not the only acceptable methodologies.... Courts have also accepted ... damage models combining elements of both the "before and after" and "yardstick" methodologies; and analyses of the defendant's costs and profits. In practice, plaintiffs will often present alternative damage methodologies.

ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments (3d ed. 1992) at 669-673, and cases cited therein.

Methodologies of this kind likewise have been cited with approval by numerous courts in granting class certification. See, e.g., In re South Central States Bakery Products Antitrust Litig., 86 F.R.D. 407, 422 (M.D. La. 1980) (certifying class based on representations that impact of Defendants' conspiracy could be shown by using at least one of four accepted methods, or a combination of these methods: comparing prices in different geographical regions, comparing prices and profits of conspirators versus non-conspirators, comparing prices in comparable markets, [**83] and [*522] comparing prices or profits before and after termination of the conspiracy); In re Domestic Air Transportation Antitrust Litig., 137 F.R.D. 677, 689-90, 692 (N.D.Ga. 1991) (certifying 12.5 million member class where plaintiffs presented potential statistical methodologies for proving injury); In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litigation, 80 F.R.D. 244, 251-52 (S.D. Tex. 1978) (class certified based on prediction that injury could be determined to a "reasonable degree of certainty" by "either of two generally accepted methodologies"); In re Potash Antitrust Litigation, 159 F.R.D. 682, 697-98 (D. Minn. 1995).

The Court need not decide at this juncture what approach is best suited to the particularities of this case. It is sufficient to note at this stage that there are methodologies available, and that Rule 23(c)(1) and (d) allow ample flexibility to deal with these issues.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>20</sup> Rule 23(c)(1) provides in relevant part that any order certifying a class "may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits." Rule 23(d) HN36 [↑] provides in relevant part that the Court may make "appropriate orders" dealing with "procedural matters", which may be altered or amended "from time to time", including orders "determining the course of proceedings or prescribing measures to prevent undue repetition or complication in the presentation of evidence or argument". Rule 23(d) provides that these orders "may be combined with an order under Rule 16". Rule 16(c) provides that "the court may take appropriate action" with respect to inter alia: "the avoidance of unnecessary proof and of cumulative evidence"; "the possibility of obtaining admissions of fact and of documents which will avoid unnecessary proof"; "an order establishing a reasonable limit on the time allowed for presenting evidence"; "an order for a separate trial pursuant to Rule 42(b) with respect to a claim ... or with respect to any particular issue in the case"; or "referring matters to a ... master".

[**84] As recently held by the Court in In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig. (MDL 1030) (M.D.Fla. Sept. 5, 1996), in which of class of between 15 and 18 million members was certified, the fact "that defendants' expert disagrees with the methodology and conclusions propounded by [plaintiff's expert] is not reason to deny class certification. Whether or not plaintiffs will be successful in persuading the jury that there has been a common impact remains to be seen." *Id. at 12.*

(ii) Procedural Issues

As well as the various substantive methodologies outlined above, a wide variety of procedural approaches will ultimately be available to the Court in determining when and how to deal with damages. See 1 Newberg on Class Actions § 4.26 at 4-91-97; *In re Potash, 159 F.R.D. at 698* ("various judicial methods are available to resolve individual damage issues" including "bifurcating liability and damages", "appointing special masters", or "using defendants' transactional records").

Price fixing cases such as this one often involve relatively small injuries to a relatively large number of people. Based on the Defendants' own records, a jury may reasonably estimate [**85] damages. See, e.g., *Greenhaw, 721 F.2d 1019, 1024-25;* *In re Domestic Air Transp., 137 F.R.D. at 692-93;* *In re Potash, 159 F.R.D. at 698* (noting the possibility of using the defendants' transactional records to compute individual damages); In re Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 333 F. Supp. 278, 281 (S.D.N.Y. 1971) (court allowed plaintiffs to establish an aggregate quantum of classwide damages, but provided that individual class members would have to file claim to justify their entitlement to receive a portion of this sum); *In re Melridge, Inc. Securities Litigation, 837 F. Supp. 1076, 1080 \(D. Or. 1993\)* (court allowed proof of classwide damages and entered judgment in favor of class based on the jury's aggregate verdict; individual claims were to be determined using a measure of damages adopted by the jury, and applied to purchases as evidenced by individual proofs of claim).

Courts have allowed the plaintiffs to establish the measure of damages at trial, and this measure is then applied to the individual transactions (typically in a second bifurcated proceeding following trial on the common issues). See, e.g., *Dennis v. Saks & Co., 1975-2 CCH Trade Cases P60,396 at 60,749 \(S.D.N.Y. 1975\); Hedges Enterprises, Inc. v. Continental Group, 81 F.R.D. 461, 476 \(E.D. Pa. 1979\).* See also *Shelter Realty, 75 F.R.D. at 38* ("formulary approach to the calculation of damages.").

[*523] Bifurcation has been widely used and in antitrust class actions. See, e.g., *In re Master Key, 528 F.2d 5, 14-15* ("bifurcated trials have frequently been employed with great success ... even in antitrust suits....") (citing *Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 \(1975\); Green v. Wolf Corp., 406 F.2d 291, 301 \(2d Cir. 1968\)* (bifurcation in securities class action); *City of New York v. Darling-Delaware, Inc., 1976-1 CCH Trade Cases P60,812 \(S.D.N.Y. 1976\)* (bifurcating damages in price-fixing class action)).

(iii) Individualized Damages

Neither a variety of prices nor negotiated prices is an impediment to class certification if it appears that plaintiffs may be able to prove at trial that, as here, the price range was affected generally. As held in *Hedges Enterprises, Inc. v. Continental Gp., Inc., 81 F.R.D. 461, 475 \(E.D. Pa. 1979\)*, certifying the class notwithstanding negotiated [**87] prices:

The proof necessary to demonstrate that the defendants conspired to maintain an inflated "base" from which all pricing negotiations began and that this "base" price was higher than the "base" price which would have been established by competitive conditions would be common to all members of the class. Proof of a conspiracy to establish a "base" price would establish at least the fact of damage, even if the extent of the actual damages suffered by the plaintiffs would vary.... The proof with respect to the "base" price from which these negotiations began, or the structure of the conspiracy to affect individual negotiations, would be common to the class. Accordingly... the fact of damage is predominantly, if not entirely, a common question.

HN37 Even if it could be shown that some individual class members were not injured, class certification, nevertheless, is appropriate where the antitrust violation has caused widespread injury to the class. As stated in

Presidio Golf Club v. National Linen Supply Corp., 1976-2 CCH Trade Cases P 61,221 at 70,630-31 (N.D.Cal. 1976), quoting Blackie, 524 F.2d at 906 n.22:

As a practical matter, HN38 to prove an effective conspiracy \*\*88 to fix prices, facts will be adduced which will tend to establish, perhaps circumstantially, that each class member was injured. . . . In the class action context the inference is predicated on the establishment of certain facts: (1) an antitrust violation, typically a conspiracy to fix prices or allocate markets; (2) an ability on the part of defendant-conspirators to effectuate the conspiracy; (3) generalized price increases or damages in the industry involved; and (4) purchase or, as here, rental by plaintiffs during the period of anti-competitive activity.... Contrary to defendants' contention part of plaintiffs' prima facie case will not require proof that overcharges were imposed upon the rental of each item rented to plaintiffs. "The impact element necessitates only an illustration of generalized injury."

* * *

The fact that certain members of plaintiffs' class escaped injury altogether would not preclude certification or destroy the class's prima facie case of impact. Unless it is clear that no ultimate consumers were damaged, the exact amount each may have sustained is an issue to be treated at the damages phase of the litigation. In re Western Liquid Asphalt, \*\*89 supra at 123. HN39 "The fact that a defendant may be able to defeat the showing of causation as to a few individual class members does not transform the common question into a multitude of individual ones; plaintiffs satisfy their burden of showing causation as to each by showing [generalized damage] as to all."

Other courts have likewise held that HN40 the predominance requirement of Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) is satisfied with respect to proof of injury, even though individualized inquiry may be necessary on the quantum of damages. See e.g., Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 456; In re Master Key, 70 F.R.D. at 25-26; In Re Potash, 159 F.R.D. at 697-98; In re Catfish, 826 F. Supp. at 1042-43; 4 Newberg on Class Actions § 18.27 at 18-89 ("Individual damages questions do not preclude a Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) class action when the issue of liability is common to the class.").

[*524] Indeed, decisions in this District have recognized that if individual damage questions were a barrier to class certification, "there would be little if any place for the class action device in the adjudication of antitrust claims." Shelter Realty, 75 F.R.D. at 37. See also e.g., Hill v. A-T-O, Inc., \*\*90 80 F.R.D. 68, 70 (E.D.N.Y. 1978) (although "damages in this case may have to be determined on an individual basis," this "does not preclude class action certification, where, as here, the common issues which define liability predominate"); National Super Spuds, 77 F.R.D. at 372; Maywalt, 147 F.R.D. at 56, 57 (differences regarding damages among class members not sufficient to defeat class certification) (citing Green v. Wolf Corp., 406 F.2d 291, 301 (2d Cir. 1968)); Town of New Castle, 131 F.R.D. at 42 (citations omitted) ("the fact that each class member's damages will be different and, thus, will require individualized treatment does not prevent one from concluding that common questions predominate."); Rios, 100 F.R.D. at 408 (predominance of common issues is not defeated simply because the class members have incurred varying damages); In re Alcoholic Beverages, 95 F.R.D. at 327.

In sum, HN41 even if it develops that each class member's damages must be separately determined, class certification would still be appropriate. See e.g., In re Master Key, 70 F.R.D. at 27-28; Shelter Realty, 75 F.R.D. at 37; In re Alcoholic Beverages, 95 F.R.D. at 328. \*\*91 Under those circumstances, bifurcation would allow classwide issues to proceed on a class basis, while reserving any individual issues to be litigated in a subsequent set of proceedings. See Green v. Wolf, 406 F.2d at 301; In re Master Key, 70 F.R.D. at 28-29; Bresson v. Thomson McKinnon Securities Inc., 118 F.R.D. 339, 343 (S.D.N.Y. 1988); Dennis, 1975-2 CCH Trade Cases P60,396 at 66,749; Darling-Delaware Inc., 1976-1 CCH Trade Cases P60,812 at 68,514 (S.D.N.Y. 1976).

(iv) Aggregate Damages

Due to the nature of the Nasdaq market and the availability of computerized data, the aggregate damages of the Class as a whole may be susceptible to determination in a single trial along with the issue of liability. Indeed, as a result of the computerized databases of the NASD, and of Defendants themselves, the data relevant to aggregate damages here may be susceptible to being assembled and organized in a relatively straightforward manner.

There is case support for basing the class certification in part on a finding that damages can best be determined on a classwide basis. In In re Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 333 F. Supp. 278, 281 (S.D.N.Y.), amended, [**92] 333 F. Supp. 291 \(S.D.N.Y.\), mandamus den'd, 449 F.2d 119 \(1971\), plaintiffs alleged price fixing in the sale of antibiotic drugs to millions of consumer class members. Defendants asserted that individual issues of damages were predominant and that the case was unmanageable. The court certified the class, concluding that the amount of damages could be determined on a classwide basis, because:

It is far simpler to prove the amount of damage to the members of the class by establishing their total damages than by collecting and aggregating individual damage claims as a sum to be assessed against the defendants.

And it is the court's tentative conclusion that this can be done without sacrificing the rights of the defendants.

333 F. Supp. at 281. <sup>21</sup>

[**93] The court held that the defendants had no constitutional right to compel the plaintiffs to establish damages individually, rather than from defendants' own records:

[*525] Most important management decisions in the business world in which these defendants operate are made through the intelligent application of statistical and computer techniques and these class members should be entitled to use the same techniques in proving the elements of their cause of action. The court is confident that they can be successfully utilized in the courtroom and that their application will allow the consumers to protect their rights while freeing the court and the defendants of the specter of unmanageability. In these circumstances the court cannot conclude that the defendants are constitutionally entitled to compel a parade of individual plaintiffs to establish damages.

333 F. Supp. at 289. The Second Circuit denied the defendants' petition for mandamus on this point. Pfizer, Inc. v. Lord, 449 F.2d 119, 120 \(2d Cir. 1971\).

In Van Gemert v. Boeing Co., 553 F.2d 812 \(2d Cir. 1977\), the Second Circuit affirmed an aggregate judgment in a securities class action. Likewise, in [Gerstle \[\*\*94\] v. Gamble-Skogmo, Inc., 478 F.2d 1281 \(2d Cir. 1973\)](#), the Second Circuit modified and affirmed an aggregate judgment in a securities class action. In fact, aggregate judgments have been widely used in antitrust, securities and other class actions. See cases collected in Newberg, supra. See also Van Gemert v. Boeing Co., 590 F.2d 433, 436 \(2d Cir. 1978\), aff'd, 444 U.S. 472, 479-80, 62 L. Ed. 2d 676, 100 S. Ct. 745 and n.6 \(1980\).

Accord, e.g., Greenhaw v. Lubbock County Beverage Ass'n, 721 F.2d 1019, 1029 \(5th Cir. 1983\) (aggregated judgment affirmed in antitrust class action); In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16658, 1994 WL 663590 \(N.D. Ill. Nov. 18, 1994\) ("the fact of the matter is that the putative class plaintiffs have come forward with seemingly realistic methodologies for proving damages on a class-wide basis"); In re Sugar Industry, 73 F.R.D. at 351 ("the most suitable procedure for the determination of damages sustained by the proposed consumer classes in this litigation, if any, is either by an aggregate class-wide approach or through individualized evidence based on proven and accepted statistical methods"). [**95]

<sup>21</sup> The court in the In re Antibiotic Antitrust Actions envisioned that the determination and allocation of individual damages would occur in an administrative process, rather than in a second trial phase:

Damages would be awarded on a class-wide basis, if and when liability was established, and individual claims could then be processed administratively after entry of judgment.

333 F. Supp. at 283. In a subsequent opinion, the Court followed up on its tentative decision that the class would be manageable by finding, on a more developed record, that the class in fact was manageable. In re Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 333 F. Supp. 291 \(S.D.N.Y. 1971\).

The leading commentator on class actions likewise notes the advantage and viability of proving aggregate class damages:

In many cases, the class representative in an antitrust suit may prove the amount of damages for the entire class . . . thus eliminating the need for individual damage proofs during trial. This approach allows the named plaintiff to show the total class damages caused by the defendant's unlawful conduct.

4 Newberg on Class Actions, § 18.53.

The aggregate class damage approach has obvious case management advantages. By eliminating individual damage proofs at trial, the length, complexity and attendant costs of litigation are greatly reduced. As stated in 2 Newberg on Class Actions § 10.01 at 10-2:

Proof of aggregate monetary relief for the class is feasible and reasonable under various circumstances. The evidentiary standard for proof of monetary relief on class-wide basis is simple - the proof submitted must be sufficiently reliable to permit a just determination of the defendant's liability within recognized standards of admissible and probative evidence.

Moreover, as noted in Newberg, § 10.05:

Aggregate computation [**96] of class monetary relief is lawful and proper. Challenges that such aggregate proof affects substantive law and otherwise violates the defendant's due process or jury trial rights to contest each member's claim individually, will not withstand analysis.

Finally, Defendants contend that the aggregate damage approach would lead to a "fluid class recovery," which has been rejected in this Circuit. See Abrams v. Interco Incorp., 719 F.2d 23, 31 (2d Cir. 1983); Van Gemert v. Boeing Co., 553 F.2d 812, 815-16 (2d Cir. 1977), aff'd, 444 U.S. 472, 62 L. Ed. 2d 676, 100 S. Ct. 745 (1980); Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline, 479 F.2d 1005, 1016-18 (2d Cir. 1973), vacated on other gds, 417 U.S. 156 (1974). HN42↑ Fluid recovery refers to the distribution of unclaimed or unclaimable funds to persons not found to be injured but who have interests similar to those of the class. See In re Corrugated Container, [*526] 1980-81 CCH Trade Cases P 63,810.

In the cases on which Defendants rely, however, damages could not be returned to any meaningful number of class members, and plaintiffs accordingly proposed fluid recovery. Damages in an antitrust class action may be determined on a classwide, [**97] or aggregate, basis, without resorting to fluid recovery where the computerized records of the particular industry, supplemented by claims forms, provide a means to distribute damages to injured class members in the amount of their respective damages.

As set forth above, Defendants here are required to maintain detailed computerized records of their transactions, and Plaintiffs propose that those records will provide the means to determine damages on a classwide basis without creating a need to rely on fluid recovery. Accordingly the circumstances here will permit recovery by class members who, by virtue of their membership in the class, have claimed injury caused by Defendants' practices, rather than by a broader class of investors who were not injured but who may be injured by future transactions. See In re Agent Orange Product Liability Litig., 818 F.2d 179, 184-85 (2d Cir. 1987) (holding no fluid recovery problem where "the class that will benefit . . . is essentially equivalent to the class that claims injury").

(v) Causation

With respect to Defendants' argument that the Plaintiff Class will be unable to prove that the Defendants' conspiracy caused Plaintiffs [**98] injury, courts have held that this element HN43↑ is also susceptible of common classwide proof, and that, as a general rule, an illegal price-fixing scheme presumptively damages all purchasers of a price-fixed product in an affected market. The court addressed that issue as follows in Master Key, 70 F.R.D. at 26 n.3:

If the plaintiffs introduce proof . . . at the liability stage that they bought master key systems and that the defendants engaged in a pervasive nationwide course of action that had the effect of stabilizing prices at supracompetitive levels, the jury may conclude that the defendants' conduct caused injury to each plaintiff.

Moreover, on defendants' appeal, the Second Circuit stated that:

If the appellees establish at the trial for liability that the defendants engaged in an unlawful national conspiracy which had the effect of stabilizing prices above competitive levels, and further establish that the appellees were consumers of that product, we would think that the jury could reasonably conclude that appellants' conduct caused injury to each appellee. See In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litigation, 55 F.R.D. 269, 275-76 (D.D.C. 1972); Illinois v. Harper [**991] & Row Publishers, Inc., 301 F. Supp. 484 (N.D. Ill. 1969). The amount of such injury could then be computed at a separate trial for damages, and appropriate sub-stratification of classes could be utilized to facilitate that determination. See Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. Nisley, 300 F.2d 561, 567 (10th Cir. 1961); Aamco Automatic Transmissions, Inc. v. Tayloe, 67 F.R.D. 440 (E.D. Pa. 1975); Sommers v. Abraham Lincoln Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 66 F.R.D. 581, 591-92 (E.D. Pa. 1975); Barr v. WUI/TAS, Inc., 66 F.R.D. 109, 115 (S.D.N.Y. 1975); Wainwright v. Kraftco Corp., 54 F.R.D. 532, 534-35 (N.D. Ga. 1972).

In re Master Key Antitrust Litigation, 528 F.2d 5, 12 n.11 (2d Cir. 1975). See also, e.g., J. Truett Payne Co., Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 567, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981) (jury may "infer antitrust injury"); Shelter Realty Corp., 75 F.R.D. at 37; In re In re Wirebound Boxes Antitrust Litig., 128 F.R.D. 268, 272 (D. Minn. 1989) ("Proof of impact typically follows from proof of a price-fixing conspiracy where the defendants are shown to have sufficient market power."); Town of New Castle v. Yonkers Contracting Co., Inc., 131 F.R.D. 38, 41 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (citing In re Master Key, 528 F.2d at 12 n.11); In re Folding Carton, 75 F.R.D. at 734 ("Courts have consistently held that an illegal price fixing scheme presumptively impacts upon all purchasers of a price fixed product in a conspiratorially affected market.").

[*527] HN44 Once the existence of injury is established (by direct evidence or inference from the character of a sustained conspiracy), the proof necessary to set the amount of damages need not be exact. In J. Truett Payne Co., Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 565-68, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981), the Supreme Court summarized "our traditional rule excusing antitrust plaintiffs from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury", as follows:

In Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123-124, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969), for example, the Court discussed at some length the fixing of damages .... We accepted the proposition that damages could be awarded on the basis of plaintiff's estimate....

"Damage issues in these cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed [**101] proof of injury which is available in other contexts. The Court has repeatedly held that in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may 'conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs....'"

In Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 (1946) .... we explained:

"Any other rule would enable the wrongdoer to profit by his wrongdoing at the expense of his victim.... Failure to apply it would mean that the more grievous the wrong done, the less likelihood there would be of a recovery." 327 U.S. at 264-265....

Our willingness to accept a degree of uncertainty in these cases rests in part on the difficulty of ascertaining business damages.... The vagaries of the marketplace usually deny us sure knowledge of what plaintiff's situation would have been in the absence of the defendant's antitrust violation. But our willingness also rests on the principle [**102] articulated in cases such a Bigelow, that it does not "come with very good grace" for the wrongdoer to insist upon specific and certain proof of the injury which it has itself inflicted.

In sum, the numerous fundamental common issues of fact and law predominate over whatever individual issues may arise in the adjudication of this lawsuit. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have made the showing necessary under the first prong of Rule 23(b)(3).

2. The Class Action is Superior to Other Methods of Adjudication

HN45 [↑] Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) requires plaintiffs to demonstrate that "a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." Given the number of class members injured by Defendants' conspiracy, a class action is not only the most efficient and convenient method to resolve this controversy, it is the only "fair" and "efficient" means to adjudicate this controversy.

Multiple lawsuits would be costly and inefficient, and the exclusion of class members who cannot afford separate representation would be neither 'fair' nor an 'adjudication' of their claims. Moreover, although a large number of individuals may have been injured, no \*\*103 one person may have been damaged to a degree which would induce him to institute litigation solely on his own behalf. Green v. Wolf Corp., 406 F.2d 291, 296 \(2d Cir. 1968\).

As stated in In re Potash, 159 F.R.D. at 699:

Separate proceedings would produce duplicate efforts, unnecessarily increase the costs of litigation, impose an unwarranted burden on this Court and other courts throughout the country, and create the risk of inconsistent results for similarly situated parties. Additionally, the cost associated with individual claims may require claimants with potentially small claim amounts to abandon otherwise valid claims simply because pursuing those claims would not be economical. This in turn would result in unjustly enriching the Defendants; precisely the result antitrust laws are designed to remedy.

[*528] In addition, class certification here would partially equalize the bargaining power between plaintiffs as a group and Defendants as a group, and thus improve the chances of an equitable settlement. See In re A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 880 F.2d 709, 739-40 \(4th Cir. 1989\) ("it is 'proper' in determining certification to consider whether such certification will \*\*104 foster settlement...."); duPont Glore Forgan Inc. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 69 F.R.D. 481, 487 \(S.D.N.Y. 1975\) ("The sheer disparity of economic forces suggest a death knell of those claims if individual actions are required.").

The Court foresees no insurmountable problems in the management of this lawsuit. As held in the In re Sugar Industry, 73 F.R.D. at 358 (citation omitted):

The federal bench and bar must remain cognizant of the fact that difficulties in the management of class actions should not lead to a conclusion that class actions are not superior to other available means for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. HN46 [↑] Manageability problems are significant only if they create a situation that is less fair and efficient than other available techniques.

Courts are generally loath to deny class certification based on speculative problems with case management:

Three reasons exist for granting class certification when only speculative manageability difficulties are perceived. First, the nature of our judicial system mandates that our courts provide a forum for the redress of injuries, and they should not shirk this responsibility \*\*105 because of conjecture. Secondly, at the outset of litigation, consideration of future manageability is by necessity limited because discovery has not advanced to the point where certain judgments can be made regarding the relative ease or difficulty with which the litigation will progress. Lastly, Rule 23\(c\)\(1\), which requires a court to determine the propriety of a class action as soon as practicable after institution of the lawsuit, also allows the courts the luxury of later altering or amending the class certified before any decision on the merits is rendered. It must be remembered that a determination granting a class action always may be modified upon fuller development of the facts, but a negative determination may sound the death knell of the actions as one for a class of persons or entities.

* * *

Moreover, denial of class certification because of suspected manageability problems is disfavored among both the courts and the legal commentators because a court refusing to certify a class action on the basis of vaguely perceived manageability obstacles is acting counter to the policy behind Rule 23, and because that court is discounting unduly its power and creativity in \*\*106 dealing with a class action flexibly as difficulties arise.

In re Sugar Industry, 73 F.R.D. at 356 (citations omitted).<sup>22</sup>

As noted in Shelter Realty Corp., 75 F.R.D. at 38, "the threat of inundation comes from the prospect of individual, duplicative actions" rather than from a class action. Thus, the [**107] size of the class militates in favor of, not against certification. See, e.g., In re Antibiotic, 333 F. Supp. at 282-83, 289 and n.7 (S.D.N.Y. 1971) (price-fixing class of several million members certified); Zachary v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 52 F.R.D. 532 (S.D.N.Y. 1971) (class of over a million certified); Sollenberger v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 121 F.R.D. 417, 437 (D.N.M. 1988) (class of several million telephone customers certified in antitrust action); Davis v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 1993-2 CCH Trade Cases P70,480 (S.D. Fla. 1993) [*529] (class of several million telephone customers certified in antitrust action).

As the Court reasoned in In re Domestic Air Transportation Antitrust Litigation, 137 F.R.D. at 693-94, a case involving at least 12.5 million class members:

"Difficulties in management are of significance only if they make the class action a less 'fair and efficient' method of adjudication than other available techniques." In re Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 333 F. Supp. 278, 282 (S.D.N.Y. 1971).

The Court finds a class action the only fair method of adjudication for plaintiffs. The individual [**108] claims of many class members are so small that the cost of individual litigation would be far greater than the value of those claims.... Thus, if this case is not certified as a class action, a majority of class members would likely abandon their claims even if it can be proven that defendants have conspired to fix prices....

Computers can index and control vast quantities of textual data and scanners are available to enter data automatically onto the computer. These are resources that have only recently become available and that courts must be willing to employ to resolve the dilemma of the massive antitrust case.

.... Defendants should not be permitted to avoid responsibility for the magnitude of their alleged conspiracy.

Accord, e.g., In re Antibiotic Antitrust Litigation, 333 F. Supp. 278.

Defendants contend that individual NASD arbitrations provide an efficient means by which aggrieved investors can pursue their claims against market-makers. Defendants' suggestion, however, serves to highlight the superiority of the class action to available alternatives.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has recognized the efficiency of class actions as a [**109] means of resolving claims involving numerous investors, and accordingly approved a rule displacing individual arbitrations in favor of class actions:

The Commission agrees... that, in all cases, class actions are better handled by the courts and that investors should have access to the courts to resolve class actions efficiently.... Over the years of the evolution of class action litigation, the courts have developed the procedures and expertise for managing class actions.

S.E.C. Release No. 34-31371, 57 Fed. Reg. 53659 (November 4, 1992).

If the instant motion for class certification were denied, each individual investor would have to arbitrate the existence, and economic effect, of a massive antitrust conspiracy in proceedings that ordinarily provide only limited discovery. See NASD Rules of Fair Practice, Art. III § 21(f) (requiring NASD member organizations to warn customers who enter into arbitration agreements that "pre-arbitration discovery is generally more limited than and different from court proceedings.").

<sup>22</sup> See also In Re Corrugated Container, 80 F.R.D. at 253; Dennis, 1975-2 CCH Trade Cases P 60,396 at 66,749 ("It is the court's conclusion that at this point, the defendants' assertion that measuring the impact of the conspiracy and calculating individual damages will be an unmanageable task should not defeat plaintiff's motion. . . . However, when discovery is completed if it appears that, contrary to plaintiffs' assertion no general measure of damages can be proven and that any trial will involve separate analysis of the impact of the conspiracy on thousands of different styles of clothing, then the court, pursuant to the flexibility in Rule 23, will reconsider class certification.").

Moreover, the conspiracy would have to be litigated before securities industry panels that have been widely criticized for their lack of antitrust [**110] or legal expertise. Perhaps most significantly, as set forth above, few, if any, individual investors would have the financial means and motivation necessary to prove the conspiracy alleged here.

In sum, as this Court held in Maywalt v. Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., 147 F.R.D. at 57:

In light of the numerosity of the class members and the fact that the typical claim of an individual class member is too small to justify his personally maintaining a separate action, a class action is most appropriate.

Because class action treatment is superior to any other available method for the "fair" and "efficient" adjudication of this case, the requirements of Rule 23(b)(3) are fully satisfied. If insurmountable management problems were to develop at any point, class certification can be revisited at any time under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1).

Plaintiffs' Discovery Motions

Plaintiffs have moved (i) to lift the stay of discovery imposed by P 24 of Pretrial Order No. 3, and (ii) to compel Defendants to produce, pursuant to Rule 37(a), Fed. R. Civ. P.: [*530] (a) all CID deposition transcripts within defendants' control, and (b) the Settlement Memorandum and any evidentiary [**111] materials expressly referenced therein.

A. The stay of Discovery Will Be Lifted

The stay of discovery was imposed pursuant to the Pretrial Order pending resolution of the class certification motion. That motion is resolved pursuant to this Opinion, and, accordingly, the stay of discovery will be lifted upon issuance of this Opinion.

B. Plaintiffs' Motions to Compel Production of CID Discovery

Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that HN47 "parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action," without regard to whether the material sought will be admissible at trial, "if the information sought appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." Rule 26(b)(1), Fed. R. Civ. P. As the Supreme Court stated in Oppenheimer Fund, Inc. v. Sanders, 437 U.S. 340, 57 L. Ed. 2d 253, 98 S. Ct. 2380 (1978), HN48 "relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action" -- has been construed broadly to encompass any matter that bears on, or that reasonably could lead to other matter that could bear on, any issue that is or may be in the case." [**112] Id. at 351.

As this Court has already held in connection with Plaintiffs' prior motion for discovery of CID materials, those CID materials are relevant and not privileged. See Nasdaq IV, 929 F. Supp. 723. The Supreme Court has held that HN49 although the relevancy requirement of Rule 26(b)(1) "should be firmly applied," Herbert v. Lando, 441 U.S. 153, 177, 60 L. Ed. 2d 115, 99 S. Ct. 1635 (1979), "where the proof is largely in the hands of alleged conspirators," antitrust plaintiffs must be given "ample opportunity" for discovery. Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976); see, e.g., In re Shopping Carts Antitrust Litig., 95 F.R.D. 299 (S.D.N.Y. 1982). The CID materials sought here could provide additional evidence regarding liability and damages and potential impeachment material and lead to the discovery of other admissible evidence. See Nasdaq IV.

Moreover, the CID materials are not privileged. This Court has adopted the reasoning of the cases that have held in favor of compelling the production of CID materials where such materials are within Defendants' control. See Nasdaq IV (citing [**113] In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 142 F.R.D. 354 (N.D. Ga. 1992); In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 141 F.R.D. 556 (N.D. Ga. 1992); In re Air Passenger Computer Reservation Sys. Antitrust Litig., 116 F.R.D. 390 (C.D. Cal. 1986)).

Defendants urge that the CID materials sought by Plaintiffs are not within the Defendants "possession, custody, or control," and therefore Defendants are not required to produce them pursuant to Rule 34, Fed. R. Civ. P.. However, HN50[] under Rule 34, "a party need not have actual possession of documents to be deemed in control of them." In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litigation, 76 F.R.D. 420, 423 \(N.D. Ill. 1977\). A "party has 'control' over a document if that party has a legal right to obtain those documents." Haseotes v. Abacab International Computers, Inc., 120 F.R.D. 12, 15 \(D. Mass. 1988\). See also Searock v. Stripling, 736 F.2d 650, 653 \(11th Cir. 1984\) ("Control is defined not only as possession, but as the legal right to obtain the documents requested upon demand"). Courts have also "interpreted Rule 34 to HN51[] require production if the party has the practical ability to obtain the documents from another, irrespective [**114] of his legal entitlement." Golden Trade S.r.L. v. Lee Apparel Co., 143 F.R.D. 514, 525 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\). Accord, e.g., Scott v. Arex, Inc., 124 F.R.D. 39, 41 \(D. Conn. 1989\) ("A party controls documents that it has the right, authority, or ability to obtain upon demand").

1. Defendants Will Be Compelled to Produce the CID Transcripts

Those CID deposition transcripts already in Defendants' possession must be produced. As set forth above, discovery of those transcripts was stayed pending resolution of the [*531] class certification motion, and that motion is resolved pursuant to this Opinion. Accordingly, no reason presently exists to further delay production of those transcripts currently in Defendants' possession.

With respect to Defendants' employees' deposition transcripts not in Defendants' possession, those employees are entitled by law to copies of their CID deposition transcripts. See 15 U.S.C. § 1312\(i\)\(6\). Moreover, to the extent Defendants exercise control over their current and former employees, Defendants will produce transcripts of those employees' depositions. See In re Woolworth Corporation Securities Class Action Litigation, 166 F.R.D. 311, 1\*\*1151 313 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\); In re Domestic Air, 142 F.R.D. 354, 357 n.4 \(N.D. Ga. 1992\); In re Folding Carton, 76 F.R.D. at 423.<sup>23</sup>

HN52[] A current or former employee may be considered under a Defendants' control for Rule 34 purposes where that employee was: (i) briefed by a company representative or counsel prior to the CID deposition or debriefed after the deposition; (ii) represented by counsel [**116] recommended, retained, or paid for by a company representative or counsel; or (iii) informed by a representative of defendant or defense counsel of the possibility of ordering a copy of their CID transcript. See In re Domestic Air, 142 F.R.D. at 357. See also Herbst v. Able, 63 F.R.D. 135, 138 \(S.D.N.Y. 1972\) ("Plaintiffs . . . may request [Defendant] to have its non-defendant employees procure copies of their private testimony before the SEC so that [Defendant] may give same to plaintiffs. Plainly [Defendant's] employees are persons within its control").

Accordingly, each Defendant will be required to identify those of its current employees or former employees who were deposed by the DOJ in connection with the Nasdaq investigation,<sup>24</sup> and to produce to Plaintiffs, at Plaintiffs' expense, transcripts of the depositions of those current and former employees under Defendants' control as defined herein.

[**117] 2. Defendants Will Not Be Compelled to Produce the Settlement Memorandum

Defendants contend that they cannot produce the Settlement Memorandum, as it is not in their possession, custody or control as required under Rule 34. Plaintiffs contend that Defendants can be compelled to produce the Settlement Memorandum, because they have the legal right to obtain it -- and all of the CID evidence collected by the government -- pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 26 and 34 and DOJ regulations set forth in the Antitrust Division Manual. Pursuant to those regulations, "if a civil action is commenced based on information obtained by CID, the defendants in that action may invoke their full discovery rights under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and obtain CID information relevant to their defense." See Antitrust Division, U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division Manual at III-46.

<sup>23</sup> Defendants cite In re Air Passenger Computer Reservation Systems Antitrust Litigation, 116 F.R.D. 390, 393 \(C.D. Cal. 1986\), in support of their position that a witness might be able to avoid discoverability of his CID deposition testimony by simply refusing to request a copy of it. 116 F.R.D. at 393. The dictum upon which Defendants rely has been superseded by statute. See In re Woolworth Corp. Securities Class Action Litigation, 166 F.R.D. 311, 313 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\) (dictum in Air Passenger pre-dates the 1991 Amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and rejected by Woolworth court).

<sup>24</sup> To the extent Defendants have already provided, pursuant to the Pretrial Order, lists of employees deposed by the DOJ, Defendants will be required to update those lists.

The plain language quoted above, however, indicates that this regulation was intended to afford Defendants in government antitrust actions a full and fair opportunity to defend against such actions. To hold that such language can be invoked to allow Plaintiffs to obtain discovery of CID materials for use [\[\*118\]](#) against Defendants in a private action would distort the regulations and impose an injustice on Defendants.<sup>25</sup> No case support exists [\[\*532\]](#) for the proposition that, pursuant to the regulation cited, Plaintiffs may obtain Government evidence against Defendants even where Defendants do not want to obtain such evidence for use in their own defense. Accordingly, Defendants will not be compelled to obtain from the Government and produce to the Plaintiffs the Settlement Memorandum.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' motion for class certification pursuant to Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) and \(b\)\(3\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is hereby granted in part, as set forth above. Plaintiffs motion to compel discovery is hereby granted in part and denied in part as set forth above.

Settle order on notice.

It is so ordered.

New York, N. Y.

November 26, 1996

ROBERT W. SWEET

U.S.D.J.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>25</sup> Moreover, HN53 pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1313\(c\)\(3\), the Government may not disclose materials obtained through CIDs without the target's consent. If Plaintiffs here were allowed to obtain all CID materials by forcing Defendants to invoke their general right to discovery of the DOJ's evidence against them, Defendants would be effectively denied the protection intended by § 1313\(c\)\(3\).

Peters v. Saunders

Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division Seven

November 26, 1996, Filed

No. B092492

Reporter

50 Cal. App. 4th 1823 *; 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 690 **; 1996 Cal. App. LEXIS 1105 ***; 96 Cal. Daily Op. Service 8605; 96 Daily Journal DAR 14205; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,646

RONALD J. PETERS, Cross-Complainant and Appellant, v. MARK SAUNDERS, Cross-Defendant and Respondent.

Notice: NOT CITABLE - ORDERED NOT PUBLISHED

Subsequent History: [***1] As Modified on Denial of Rehearing December 19, 1996; Reported at: 1996 Cal. App. LEXIS 1179. Review Denied March 26, 1997 and the Reporter of Decisions directed not to publish this opn. in the Official Reports (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 14; rule 976, Cal. Rules of Ct.), Reported at: 1997 Cal. LEXIS 1733.

Prior History: Appeal from an order of the Los Angeles Superior Court. Super. Ct. No. BC072147. Hon. David A. Workman, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Core Terms

---

declaration, trial court, boycott, secondary boycott, Devine-Hall, contracting, cause of action, lawsuit, unfair competition, cross-complaint, establishments, defamation, target, personal knowledge, Cartwright Act, competitor, coerce, practices, hearsay, notice, exclude evidence, free speech, manufacturers, grounds, reasons, unfair, cases, right of petition, public issue, nonreviewability

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Forums

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Strategic Lawsuits Against Public Participation

HN1 Judicial & Legislative Restraints, Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

In order to allow prompt exposure and dismissal of strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP) suits, Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16\(b\) provides a cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue shall be subject to a special motion to strike. An act in furtherance of a person's right of petition or free speech includes any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body or any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16\(e\).

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Strategic Lawsuits Against Public Participation

HN2 Dismissal, Involuntary Dismissals

The defendant seeking to dismiss a cause of action under the strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP) statute bears the initial burden of showing the cause of action arises from any act in furtherance of the defendant's right of petition or free speech. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16\(b\).

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Defamation > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Strategic Lawsuits Against Public Participation

HN3 Freedom of Speech, Defamation

To invoke the strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP) statute a defendant does not have to show every statement he made about a plaintiff was made in furtherance of his First Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. I, rights. He only needs to show the defamation cause of action arises from any act in furtherance of his right of petition or free speech. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16\(b\).

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Defamation > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

50 Cal. App. 4th 1823, *1823L<sup>58</sup> Cal. Rptr. 2d 690, **690L<sup>1996</sup> Cal. App. LEXIS 1105, ***1

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Strategic Lawsuits Against Public Participation

HN4 Freedom of Speech, Defamation

Requiring the defendant in a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP) suit to show every act complained of was in furtherance of his First Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. I., rights would be inconsistent with the stated legislative purpose of the statute to address lawsuits brought primarily to chill the valid exercise of constitutional rights. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16(a).

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN5 Dismissal, Involuntary Dismissals

Once the defendant shows one or more causes of action arose from acts in furtherance of his right of petition or free speech the burden shifts to the plaintiff to establish a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on those causes of action. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16(b). To establish a probability of success the plaintiff must (1) demonstrate the complaint is legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited and (2) meet the defendant's constitutional defenses by showing the defendant's purported constitutional defenses are not applicable to the case as a matter of law or by a prima facie showing of facts which, if accepted by the trier of fact, would negate such defenses.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Overview & Legal Concepts > Related Legal Issues > Defamation

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Strategic Lawsuits Against Public Participation

HN6 Related Legal Issues, Defamation

Under the strategic lawsuit against public participation statute, a showing in support of a cause of action must be made by competent evidence within the personal knowledge of the declarant.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN7 Appeals, Standards of Review

It has long been the rule in California an appellate court will not look behind the trial court's judgment to review its reasoning. This rule is often referred to as the rule of nonreviewability.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN8 Appeals, Standards of Review

50 Cal. App. 4th 1823, *1823L<sup>58</sup> Cal. Rptr. 2d 690, **690L<sup>1996</sup> Cal. App. LEXIS 1105, ***1

The rule of nonreviewability applies to the exclusion of evidence. If evidence is excluded on an improper objection, or the trial court excludes evidence on its own motion, the exclusion will be upheld if the evidence was inadmissible for any reason.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN9[ Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

An appellate court will uphold the exclusion of evidence on grounds not raised in the trial court except in cases where the appellant can show the defect in the evidence was neither manifest or at least suggested by the opponent's objection; the defect could have been cured if it had been called to the proponent's attention; and it is reasonably probable the proponent of the evidence would have obtained a more favorable ruling had he or she been afforded the opportunity to cure the defect or supply substitute evidence.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN10[ Appeals, Standards of Review

The rule a reviewing court will uphold the trial court's ruling if it reached the correct result, regardless of how it got there, is justified because it prevents a reversal on technical grounds where the cause was correctly decided on the merits. Thus, the rule should apply in circumstances where the reviewing court can have confidence in the outcome, i.e. that the cause was correctly decided on the merits. But where the procedures in the trial court undermine the reviewing court's confidence in the outcome, the rule should not apply.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Nonsuits > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN11[ Pretrial Judgments, Nonsuits

The rule of nonreviewability is intended to uphold judgments correct on the merits. It should not be permitted to produce the opposite result.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN12[ Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Cartwright Act prohibits two or more persons from combining to do certain specified anti-competitive acts including creating or carrying out restrictions on trade or commerce and preventing competition in the sale or purchase of any commodity. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720\(a\), \(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In order to succeed on a cause of action under the Cartwright Act, the plaintiff must prove the formation and operation of a conspiracy or combination; illegal acts done pursuant to this conspiracy; a purpose to unlawfully restrain trade; and injury to the plaintiff's business or property.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Unfair competition is defined as any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The unfair competition statute borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Violations of the Cartwright Act are unlawful business practices under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

A private litigant is not entitled to damages under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 but may seek injunctive relief under §17203 which provides: any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Rights of Buyers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN18 [↓] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

In a secondary boycott, the defendant and the target are competitors who do not engage in any transactions among themselves, so the defendant cannot remove the target from competition by refusing to deal with it. Instead, the defendant uses the threat of economic sanctions to coerce the suppliers or customers it shares with the target to refuse to deal with the target, thus denying the target access to the goods or buyers it needs to compete with the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN19 [↓] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

For a secondary boycott to violate the antitrust laws the defendant need not conspire with fellow competitors against the target competitor. A boycott by a single trader constitutes the necessary combination in restraint of trade if it is carried out through coercion, threats or intimidation upon the target's suppliers. Nor is it necessary the coercion actually result in the supplier refusing to do business with the target. A would-be boycotter may be enjoined from attempting to violate the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN20 [↓] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiries as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Indirect or secondary boycotts have traditionally been held to fall within this pernicious category of practices which means they are presumed to be unlawful restraints of trade without the necessity of analyzing their economic effects and possible justifications.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN21 [↓] Private Actions, Remedies

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750 \(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN22 [↓] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN23 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 is no longer limited to a business practice, i.e. a pattern of behavior or course of conduct but applies to any act of unfair competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN24 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The Unfair Practices Act prohibits locality discrimination, sales below cost and special rebate schemes. Cal. Bus. Prof. Code §§ 17040- 17045.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN25 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The Unfair Practices Act (Act) makes it unlawful for a person to use threats, intimidation or boycotts to effectuate any violation of the Act or to solicit any violation of the Act. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17046, 17047.

Counsel: Dan Stormer for Cross-Complainant and Appellant.

Yvonne M. Renfrew for Cross-Defendant and Respondent.

Judges: WOODS, J.; LILLIE, P.J., and GODOY-PEREZ, J. *, concurring.

Opinion by: WOODS

Opinion

---

[*1829] [**693] WOODS, J.:

The trial court granted a special motion to strike the cross-complaint in this action based on California's SLAPP suit statute.<sup>1</sup>

---

* Assigned by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

<sup>1</sup> The acronym SLAPP stands for "strategic lawsuit against public participation." SLAPPs can be described briefly as lawsuits lacking merit brought primarily for the purpose of chilling the defendant's exercise of the right to free speech and to petition the government for a redress of grievances. (Wilcox v. Superior Court \(1994\) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 823.) For a detailed discussion of SLAPPs see Wilcox, supra, 27 Cal. App. 4th at pp. 815-817.

[***2] [**694] FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS BELOW

This appeal is the latest battle between two groups of certified shorthand reporters: the California Reporting Alliance (CRA or Alliance) led by Peters and the Court Reporters' Action Fund (CRAF) led by Saunders. We discussed the dispute between these organizations and their members in detail in *Saunders v. Superior Court \(1994\) 27 Cal. App. 4th 832* and *Wilcox v. Superior Court, supra*, and therefore we only summarize it here.

The dispute between the parties involves the practice of "direct contracting" under which a certified shorthand reporter or reporter agency contracts with a major consumer of reporters' services, such as an insurance company, for the exclusive right to report depositions taken by attorneys representing that consumer. In August 1992 Saunders and other reporters filed the underlying action against Peters and other reporters alleging "direct contracting" as practiced by defendants constituted an unfair business practice and intentional interference with plaintiffs' economic advantages and existing contracts. Peters and the other defendants filed a cross-complaint against Saunders and other reporters alleging defamation and unlawful [***3] restraint of trade.

One of the cross-defendants, Wilcox, claimed the cross-complaint was a SLAPP suit and brought a special motion to strike under California's SLAPP statute, *Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16*.<sup>2</sup> The trial court denied the motion to strike and Wilcox sought review by way of petition for writ of mandate. We granted the writ and directed the trial court to strike the cross-complaint in its entirety as to Wilcox. (*Wilcox, supra, 27 Cal. App. 4th at p. 831*.) We held Wilcox met her burden of showing the claims against her arose from acts in furtherance of her right of petition or free speech while Peters and the other cross-complainants failed [*1830] to establish a probability of prevailing on their defamation and business tort claims against Wilcox. (*§ 425.16, subdivision \(b\); 27 Cal. App. 4th at pp. 825-830*.)

Following our decision in Wilcox, cross-defendant Saunders brought a motion under the SLAPP statute to strike [***4] the cross-complaint as to him. Saunders based the motion on the pleadings and his declaration. Peters and the other cross-complainants opposed the motion and filed counter-declarations. The trial court took Saunders' motion under submission and subsequently issued an order striking the cross-complaint. Peters appeals.<sup>3</sup>

[***5] DISCUSSION

I. SAUNDERS MADE A SUFFICIENT SHOWING THE CROSS-COMPLAINT AGAINST HIM AROSE FROM ACTS IN FURTHERANCE OF HIS RIGHTS OF PETITION AND FREE SPEECH IN CONNECTION WITH A PUBLIC ISSUE.

HN1 [↑] In order to allow prompt exposure and dismissal of SLAPP suits, *section 425.16, subdivision \(b\)* provides "[a] cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue shall be subject to a special motion to strike . . . ." An act in furtherance of a person's "right of petition or free speech" includes "any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body . . . or any written or oral statement or writing [**695] made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest." (*§ 425.16, subd. \(e\).*) It is conceded for purposes of this litigation direct contracting is a public issue within the meaning of *section 425.16, subdivisions \(b\)* and *\(e\).* (*Wilcox, supra, 27 Cal. App. 4th at p. 821*)

<sup>2</sup> All statutory references are to the Code of Civil Procedure until further notice.

<sup>3</sup> Ordinarily, an appeal will not lie from an order striking the defendant's cross-complaint against the plaintiff. However, we elected to decide the issues raised by the granting of the SLAPP motion in order to avoid further delay which would prejudice respondents and would undermine the very purpose of the SLAPP statute, which is to permit rapid disposition of actions brought to chill the exercise of constitutional rights of free speech and petition. (See *Wilcox, supra, 27 Cal. App. 4th at p. 823*.)

Peters' cross-complaint alleged causes of action in addition to defamation and restraint of trade, however he does not discuss these additional claims on appeal. Therefore he has waived any objections to the trial court's striking these causes of action.

HN2[<sup>7</sup>] The defendant [***6] seeking to dismiss a cause of action under the SLAPP statute bears the initial burden of showing the cause of action arises from "any act . . . in furtherance of the [defendant's] right of petition or free speech . . . (" § 425.16, subd. \(b\).) Peters argues if Saunders had confined [*1831] himself to acts in support of the litigation against CRA or to criticism of "direct contracting" he might have been able to make a prima facie showing the cross-complaint arose out of protected constitutional activity. However, Saunders went beyond acts in furtherance of his rights of petition or free speech "in connection with a public issue" and engaged in a defamatory attack on Peters personally as well as an attempt to coerce other reporters into boycotting Peters and CRA.

Peters submitted the declarations of four shorthand reporters in support of his argument that some of Saunders' acts were not in furtherance of the rights of petition and free speech on a public issue.

Elizabeth Devine-Hall described a telephone conversation she had with Saunders in April 1992, prior to the filing of the lawsuit. In this conversation Saunders "tried to discourage [Ms. Devine-Hall] from remaining a member of [***7] [CRA]" by telling her "there was going to be a lawsuit and that he did not want to see [her] damaged as a result." Saunders also told Ms. Devine-Hall if she did not resign from CRA he would not speak to her any more and "he would not be able to recommend [her] agency." In addition, Saunders asked Ms. Devine-Hall if she would be interested in participating in a group of reporters he was setting up to compete with CRA.

The declaration by Karen Abbott described a shorthand reporters' meeting she attended at a hotel in Los Angles in June or July of 1992, shortly before the lawsuit was filed. Saunders was in charge of the meeting. An attorney addressed the group describing grounds for a potential lawsuit against CRA and an insurance company based on direct contracting. Saunders then told the group it would cost between $ 2,000 and $ 2,500 per person to join the lawsuit. Saunders read the group a list of reporter agencies he claimed were members of CRA. Ms. Abbott cannot remember if Saunders specifically urged the group not to do business with these agencies but "he strongly implied that we were not to accept work from, or refer work to, those agencies."

Jeri Burnett described a [***8] letter she allegedly received from Saunders in May 1993, nine months after the lawsuit was filed. The letter stated "reporters could lose their licenses by reporting depositions pursuant to a contract with an insurance company." The letter also stated "CRA members are illegally contracting with insurance companies."

Saunders statements as described in the Devine-Hall, Abbott and Burnett declarations fall within the category of statements "made in connection with an issue [i.e. direct contracting] under consideration or review by a legislative, executive or judicial body." ( § 425.16, subd. \(e\).) Saunders' remarks at [*1832] the shorthand reporters' meeting may also come within the category of statements "made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest." (Ibid.)

Peters also submitted the declaration of a shorthand reporter, Susan Harris, who described a telephone conversation she had with Saunders in September 1992, a month after the complaint was filed. According to Harris, Saunders first mentioned the lawsuit against CRA and then went on to tell her "working for CRA was like working for the Mafia;" her firm "would never get paid by [***9] CRA;" and "CRA had lost an account with Aetna Insurance because Aetna caught Ron Peters at fraud and double-billing." Saunders also said Peters "bilks' insurance companies," "is not a certified reporter" and described Peters as "a crook."<sup>4</sup>

[**696] Peters contends Saunders' statements to Harris were defamatory and not in furtherance of Saunders' First Amendment rights. We agree these statements by Saunders were not made "in connection with" the CRA litigation or the public issue of direct contracting. However, HN3[<sup>8</sup>] to invoke the SLAPP statute Saunders does not have to show every statement he made about Peters was made in furtherance of his First Amendment rights. [***10] He only needs to show the defamation cause of action arises "from any act . . . in furtherance of [his] right of petition or free speech." ( § 425.16, subd. \(b\); emphasis added.) HN4[<sup>9</sup>] Requiring the defendant in a SLAPP suit to show

---

<sup>4</sup> We postpone our consideration of the admissibility of the Burnett and Harris declarations until we reach the question whether Peters made a prima facie showing in support of his defamation cause of action. (See Part II below.) For purposes of the present discussion, the result is the same whether or not the Burnett and Harris declarations were properly admitted.

every act complained of was in furtherance of his First Amendment rights would be inconsistent with the stated legislative purpose of the statute to address "lawsuits brought primarily to chill the valid exercise of constitutional rights . . ." ( § 425.16, subd. \(a\); emphasis added.)

Because the restraint of trade and defamation causes of action rest, in part, on acts done in connection with the public issue of "direct contracting," Saunders satisfied the statutory requirement for invoking the special motion to strike.

II. PETERS HAS MADE A SUFFICIENT SHOWING IN SUPPORT OF HIS DEFAMATION CAUSE OF ACTION.

HN5 Once the defendant shows one or more causes of action arose from acts in furtherance of his right of petition or free speech the burden shifts to the plaintiff to establish "a probability that the plaintiff will prevail" on those [*1833] causes of action. ( § 425.16, subd. \(b\).) In Wilcox we held that to establish a probability of success the plaintiff must [***11] (1) "demonstrate the complaint is legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited" and (2) "meet the defendant's constitutional defenses. . . by showing the defendant's purported constitutional defenses are not applicable to the case as a matter of law or by a prima facie showing of facts which, if accepted by the trier of fact, would negate such defenses." (27 Cal. App. 4th at p. 824.)

Of particular relevance to the present appeal, we held in Wilcox the plaintiff must base his prima facie showing on admissible evidence. We specifically rejected Peters' argument the plaintiff need only demonstrate the existence of sufficient evidence in order to establish a prima facie case. (27 Cal. App. 4th at p. 830.)

Evidence of Saunders' defamatory statements is contained in the declaration of Susan Harris. The Harris declaration states "Mark Saunders called me [on the telephone]" and said, among other things, Peters "is not a certified reporter," he had been caught "at fraud and double-billing," he "bilks' insurance companies," he is a "crook" and working for his organization [*12] is "like working for the Mafia." With the exception of the reference to the Mafia, these statements clearly were defamatory because they charged Peters with criminal activity and tended directly to injure him in his profession, trade or business as a court reporter and head of a court reporter agency. ( Civ. Code § 46.)<sup>5</sup>

Saunders objected to the statements in the Harris declaration as hearsay. The trial court did not explicitly rule on this objection. After hearing oral argument on the motion to strike, the court [***13] took the matter under submission and later issued a minute order granting the motion without explanation. Thus, we cannot determine from the record whether the trial court admitted the Burnett and Harris declarations or excluded them on hearsay or other grounds.

[**697] The statements are not hearsay. Clearly, Peters was not introducing Saunders' defamatory statements to prove the truth of the matters stated. Therefore, the only way the trial court's ruling striking the defamation claim can [*1834] be upheld is if the Harris declaration was excludable on some ground other than hearsay.

Saunders suggests such an alternative ground exists in Harris' lack of personal knowledge the defamatory telephone call actually came from Saunders. ( Evid. Code § 702.) We agree. HN6 Under the SLAPP statute, a showing in support of a cause of action must "be made by competent evidence within the personal knowledge of the declarant." ( Church of Scientology v. Wollersheim \(1996\) 42 Cal. App. 4th 628, 654.) Ms. Harris states in her declaration: "Mark Saunders called me." She provides no information showing how she knew it was Saunders to whom she was speaking. (Cf. People v. Hess \(1970\) 10 Cal. App. 3d 1071, 1078, 90 Cal. Rptr. 268.) Her conclusory [***14] statement the information in her declaration is within her personal knowledge does not fill in this gap. ( Fisher v. Cheeseman \(1968\) 260 Cal. App. 2d 503, 506, 67 Cal. Rptr. 258.)

<sup>5</sup> As to Saunders' comparison of Peters' organization to the Mafia, an expression of opinion or an exercise in hyperbole is not defamatory. ( Fletcher v. San Jose Mercury News \(1989\) 216 Cal. App. 3d 172, 190-191, 264 Cal. Rptr. 699.) Clearly, the comparison of one organization to another expresses the opinion of the person making the comparison. ( Holy Spirit Ass'n v. Harper & Row Publishers \(N.Y.Sup.Ct. 1979\) 101 Misc. 2d 30, 420 N.Y.S.2d 56, 59 [comparison of "Moonies" to Nazis an expression of opinion not actionable as defamation].)

HN7[] It has long been the rule in California an appellate court will not look behind the trial court's judgment to review its reasoning. This rule is often referred to as the "rule of nonreviewability." A century ago our Supreme Court pronounced, "No rule of decision is better or more firmly established by authority, nor one resting on a sounder basis of reason and propriety, than that a ruling or decision, itself correct in law, will not be disturbed on appeal merely because given for a wrong reason." ( Davey v. Southern Pacific Co. \(1897\) 116 Cal. 325, 329, 48 P. 117.)

HN8[] This rule of nonreviewability applies to the exclusion of evidence. If evidence is excluded on an improper objection, or the trial court excludes evidence on its own motion, the exclusion will be upheld if the evidence was inadmissible for any reason. ( Davey v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, 116 Cal. at p. 330; Philip Chang & Sons Associates v. La Casa Novato \(1986\) 177 Cal. App. 3d 159, 173, 222 Cal. Rptr. 800.) Here, evidence of the defamatory statements was inadmissible because Harris failed to [***15] allege facts demonstrating her personal knowledge Saunders made the statements.

In our original opinion in this appeal, our analysis ended at this point because we determined a proper ground existed for the exclusion of the evidence and, without this evidence, Peters could not establish a prima facie case of defamation. On petition for rehearing, however, Peters urged there should be an exception to the rule of nonreviewability in cases where the appellant shows (1) he lacked actual or constructive notice of the defect in the evidence; (2) if he had notice of the actual defect in the evidence he could have cured it or supplied substitute evidence; and (3) it is reasonably probable he would have obtained a more favorable result in the proceeding if the evidence had been admitted. We granted rehearing to consider this and other points raised by Peters.

As the present case demonstrates, it is common in motion practice, where the facts and arguments are presented principally in writing, for one party to [*1835] object to another party's evidence but for the trial court never to rule explicitly on the objection. Typically, the trial court reviews the parties' legal memoranda and declarations, hears argument on the motion and either rules from the bench or takes the matter under submission and later issues its [***16] ruling in the form of a minute order. These rulings rarely address evidentiary issues raised by the parties. Thus, whatever evidentiary rulings the trial court makes, it makes in private. It may decide to accept or reject an evidentiary objection raised by a party or it may determine on its own motion an item of evidence is admissible or inadmissible for a reason not raised by any party.<sup>6</sup>

[**698] Affirming the judgment in such a case on the [***17] ground the trial court reached the correct result no matter how it got there would be consistent with the long-established and well-recognized rule of nonreviewability discussed above. Nevertheless, there is merit to Peters' argument it is unfair to apply the rule in this case because he had no way of knowing the trial court (or this court) was going to rule the declaration inadmissible for lack of personal knowledge. Saunders did not raise this ground below nor was it ever mentioned by the trial court. The ground was first raised on appeal, after it was too late to correct the defect. Peters asserts had he known of this ground for objection in the trial court he could have filed a supplemental declaration showing declarant Harris did have personal knowledge she was speaking to defendant Saunders on the telephone. (See discussion below, pp. 17-18.)

Notwithstanding the historical basis and sound reasons for the rule of nonreviewability, precedent exists for the kind of exception urged by Peters.

In Davey, supra, the appellant argued for an exception to the rule on grounds similar to those urged by Peters in the present case. Davey brought a personal injury action against Southern [***18] Pacific after she fell between the rails of its track into an excavation negligently left open and unprotected by defendant. The complaint alleged

---

<sup>6</sup>We are not suggesting the trial court should refrain from excluding inadmissible evidence on its own motion. A trial judge, after all, is not a bucket of rocks sitting behind the bench and the authority to exclude evidence on the court's own motion is well established. (3 Witkin, Cal. Evid. (3d ed. 1986) § 2032, p. 1994.) What we are suggesting is that trial courts should be cautious in exercising their authority to exclude evidence on their own motion when the proponent of the evidence does not have fair notice of the ground for exclusion. (See discussion below, pp. 15, 16.)

Southern Pacific was negligent in leaving exposed and unprotected a dangerous excavation on a public street. The evidence Davey offered at trial, however, showed the excavation was on the private property of Southern Pacific, but at a point where the public was privileged to pass. Southern Pacific objected to Davey's evidence on the ground it was "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent." The trial court [*1836] sustained the objection and granted Southern Pacific's motion for nonsuit. (116 Cal. at p. 328.)

On appeal, Davey argued the trial court erred in excluding her evidence on the general objection it was irrelevant, immaterial and incompetent. Southern Pacific responded even if it had objected on the wrong ground in the trial court, the evidence was properly rejected on the ground of material variance between the pleadings and the proof at trial and therefore the judgment should be affirmed. Davey acknowledged there was an obvious material variance but contended the question of variance "was not raised in the court below; that no such specific [***19] objection was there made, nor was it fairly included within the general objection interposed; that had it been called to the attention of counsel for appellant at the time the evidence was offered, plaintiff would have had an opportunity to conform her pleading to the proof, and thus have obviated the objection; and . . . respondent should not now be heard to make such objection for the first time in this court, and thus cut off plaintiff's right to so amend, and have her case tried upon its merits." (116 Cal. at pp. 328-329.)

The Supreme Court acknowledged the specific objection of material variance was not raised at trial and "the objection there made, and the ruling had, would seem to have proceeded upon a different theory from that upon which respondent now rests." (116 Cal. at p. 329.) Nevertheless, relying on the general rule discussed above, the court held where the trial court excludes evidence "the ruling will be sustained, if the evidence was for any reason inadmissible." (116 Cal. at p. 330.) As to appellant's argument for an exception to the rule, the court responded exclusion of the plaintiff's evidence was entirely her fault. Not only was the defect in the evidence "so manifest [***20] that it should have been perceived without suggestion; but, moreover, it was suggested, although not in express terms, by the objection made." (116 Cal. at p. 332.)

It is important to note the court in Davey did not reject the appellant's argument in principle; it only said the argument was not supported by the facts in that particular case. Thus, Davey left the door open for reversal of a judgment based on exclusion of the appellant's evidence where there was no objection to the evidence or the only ground [**699] of objection was improper, the actual defect in the evidence was not "manifest" or "suggested by the objection made," the defect in the evidence could have been cured if the appellant had been on notice of it and it is reasonably probable the appellant would have obtained a more favorable result in the proceeding if the evidence had been admitted.

In Lawless v. Calaway \(1944\) 24 Cal. 2d 81, 147 P.2d 604, the Supreme Court did make an exception to the rule of nonreviewability for reasons very [*1837] much like those urged in Davey. The issue in Lawless was whether a judgment of nonsuit could be upheld on appeal on grounds other than those specified at trial. Respondent relied on the traditional rule a reviewing [***21] court will uphold the judgment if it is right even if the trial court's reasons are wrong. The Supreme Court declined to apply that doctrine to nonsuits, explaining: "The doctrine is sound and salutary in most situations since it prevents a reversal on technical grounds where the cause was correctly decided on the merits. But this is not true as applied to nonsuits, for such a doctrine would frequently undermine the requirement that a party specify the ground upon which his motion for nonsuit is based in order to afford the opposing party an opportunity to remedy the defects in proof. It seems obvious that the doctrine intended solely to uphold judgments correct on the merits should not be permitted to produce the opposite result." Therefore, the court concluded, "the correct rule is that grounds not specified in a motion for nonsuit will be considered by an appellate court only if it is clear that the defect is one which could not have been remedied had it been called to the attention of plaintiff by the motion. This rule is complementary to the requirement that a party specify the grounds upon which his motion for nonsuit is based." (Id. at p. 94.)

Another exception to the rule [***22] of nonreviewability holds the appellate court will not affirm a judgment on the basis of a theory not advanced in the trial court which involves controverted questions of fact or mixed questions of law and fact. The rationale for this exception is the appellant has not had an opportunity to present evidence contradicting the new theory because he was not on notice the theory would be relied upon. (Cramer v. Morrison

(1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 873, 887, 153 Cal. Rptr. 865; Pacific Gas & E. Co. v. Peterson (1969) 270 Cal. App. 2d 434, 439, 75 Cal. Rptr. 673.) Still other exceptions to the rule have been recognized which we will not detail here but are discussed elsewhere. (See 9 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Appeal, § 262, p.269.)

The exceptions noted above rest on the premise it is fundamentally unfair to rule against a party without telling him what the defect in his case is and giving him an opportunity to cure it. This is the same premise which requires the opponent to state his specific objection to the evidence or the objection is waived. "To require this is simply a matter of fairness and justice" because if attention is called to the particular objection counsel would be "advised directly what the particular complaint [***23] against the [evidence] was, and, if he [*1838] deemed it tenable, could have withdrawn the inquiry or reframed his question to obviate the particular objection." ( Bundy v. Sierra Lumber Co. (1906) 149 Cal. 772, 776, 87 P. 622.)<sup>7</sup>

A ruling excluding evidence on a ground not raised in the trial court is analogous to a ruling granting a nonsuit on a ground not raised in the trial court because [***24] it undermines the requirement a party specify its objection to evidence in a manner which "clearly informs . . . the proponent of the defect to be corrected." ( Rupp v. Summerfield (1958) 161 Cal. App. 2d 657, 662, 326 P.2d 912). It is also analogous to affirming a judgment on a theory not advanced in the trial court involving contested facts because [**700] the opponent was denied notice and an opportunity to present evidence to counter the theory raised for the first time on appeal.

Considerations of fair play, therefore, lead us to conclude the correct rule should be HN9↑ an appellate court will uphold the exclusion of evidence on grounds not raised in the trial court except in cases where the appellant can show the defect in the evidence was neither "manifest" or at least "suggested" by the opponent's objection; the defect could have been cured if it had been called to the proponent's attention; and it is reasonably probable the proponent of the evidence would have obtained a more favorable ruling had he or she been afforded the opportunity to cure the defect or supply substitute evidence.

Sound policy reasons support this exception. HN10↑ The rule a reviewing court will uphold the trial court's ruling if it reached [***25] the correct result, regardless of how it got there, is justified because "it prevents a reversal on technical grounds where the cause was correctly decided on the merits." ( Lawless v. Calaway, supra, 24 Cal. 2d at p. 94.) Thus, the rule should apply in circumstances where the reviewing court can have confidence in the outcome, i.e. that "the cause was correctly decided on the merits." But where the procedures in the trial court undermine the reviewing court's confidence in the outcome, the rule should not apply. As the court explained in Lawless, HN11↑ the rule of nonreviewability is intended to uphold judgments correct on the merits. It should not be permitted to produce the opposite result. (Ibid.) In Lawless, the court found, on a motion for nonsuit, failure to afford the plaintiff a fair opportunity to remedy defects in its proof undermined confidence the cause was correctly decided. In the present case, the plaintiff was [*1839] denied a fair opportunity to know and correct the defects in his proof on the defamation claim thereby undermining confidence the cause was correctly decided on the merits.

The principle argument against the exception we recognize here is that it would permit reversal [***26] in cases where admittedly the evidence was properly excluded thus turning the concept of reversible error upside down. In addition, it could be argued the exception would flood the appellate courts with appeals from every losing party who had an evidentiary ruling go against it and impose unreasonable delay and expense in obtaining a final resolution of the parties' dispute.

We believe the exception discussed here is consistent with traditional notions of fundamental fairness which should be an appellate court's chief guide and that the exception can be applied without disrupting the appellate process or unfairly burdening either party.

<sup>7</sup> The situation would be different if the Harris declaration had been admitted and Saunders was the appellant. Under those circumstances, notions of fairness and justice would have required him to confine his argument to the hearsay objection he specifically raised at trial. To allow the appellant to assert a new objection to the evidence on appeal would not only deprive his opponent of the opportunity to cure the defect it would allow a party knowing of a defect in the evidence to take his chance on a favorable verdict with the power and intent to annul it should it go against him. (1 Wigmore on Evidence (Tillers rev. 1983) § 18, p. 793.)

The argument the exception permits reversal where there is no error to reverse is based on a misunderstanding of the theory underlying the exception. The "error" being reversed is not the ruling excluding the evidence but the failure to afford the proponent notice and an opportunity to cure the defect which causes the evidence to be inadmissible. This error is prejudicial, i.e. reversible, if, as we have said, the appellant can show he could have cured the defect had he been given the opportunity to do so and it is reasonably probable he would have [***27] received a more favorable result had his evidence been admitted.

The narrow exception we have framed will not unduly burden the respondent, the trial court or the Court of Appeal.

Occasions to apply the exception will seldom arise because only rarely will affirmance of the judgment depend on whether the trial court correctly excluded an item of evidence offered by the appellant. Even in those rare cases, in order to invoke the exception the appellant will have to show lack of notice of the grounds for exclusion, curability and prejudice. The showing necessary to invoke the exception can usually be made on the basis of the trial court record and the briefs on appeal. In some cases, such as the one before us, the appellant will have to go outside the record to establish that had he known of the actual defect in the evidence he could have cured it or supplied substitute evidence. The authority and procedure for making such a showing in the Court of Appeal already exists in section 909 and California Rules of Court, rule 23, subdivision (b). Alternatively, the Court of Appeal could remand [**701] the curability issue to the trial court for determination.

[*1840] The exception will arise even less frequently [***28] if trial courts, before excluding evidence on a ground not raised by a party, give the proponent notice of the alternative ground for exclusion and an opportunity to respond. Furthermore, there would be no need for the exception at all in motion practice if the Legislature provided across-the-board, as it has with respect to motions for summary judgment, that all objections to the form and substance of supporting and opposing declarations shall be first made in the trial court and not on appeal. ( § 437c, subd. (d); Stats. 1990, ch. 1561, § 1.)

To summarize our holding: if the excluded evidence was inadmissible for any reason an appellate court should uphold the exclusion except in cases where the appellant can show the defect in the evidence was neither "manifest" or at least "suggested" by the opponent's objection, the defect could have been cured if it had been called to the proponent's attention and it is reasonably probable the proponent of the evidence would have obtained a more favorable ruling if he or she had been afforded the opportunity to cure the defect or supply substitute evidence.

In this instance the trial court struck the cross-complaint in its entirety. We do [***29] not reach the question whether the exception should apply to rulings which do not terminate the action.

In the present case, the first requirement is met because the defect in Harris' declaration, failure to demonstrate personal knowledge it was Saunders speaking on the telephone, was not suggested by making a hearsay objection to evidence of the conversation nor was the defect so obvious "it should have been perceived without suggestion." (Davey, supra, 116 Cal. at p. 332.) In Davey, the court concluded the objection to the plaintiff's evidence as "irrelevant" was at least technically correct because the evidence "had no tendency to establish the facts" alleged in the complaint and was sufficient to put the plaintiff on notice of the material variance between the complaint and the evidence offered. (116 Cal. at pp. 330, 332.) Here, as we have previously explained, Harris' declaration clearly was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove the truth of the statements attributed to Saunders, nor should the hearsay objection have alerted counsel to the true defect in the declaration.<sup>8</sup> The true defect, Harris' failure to demonstrate personal knowledge she was speaking to Saunders, is [***30] not the kind of "obvious" or "manifest" defect which should have been perceived without the necessity for a specific objection. The declaration clearly demonstrated Harris' personal knowledge of the conversation because she was a party to it. Her failure to state the reasons she knew it was [*1841] Saunders on the other end of the conversation is more in the nature of an understandable oversight than a manifest defect in proof.

---

<sup>8</sup> Had the caller said, "Hello, this is Mark Saunders," or words to that effect, an hearsay objection would lie if this statement was being offered to prove the caller was in fact Mark Saunders. However, no such statement was offered into evidence in this case.

In order to determine whether the defect in the declaration could have been cured at the time the motion to strike was heard, we treated a supplemental declaration by Harris filed in this court as a motion to produce additional evidence under California Rules of Court, rule 23, subdivision (b). We afforded Saunders an opportunity to respond [***31] to the motion. Having considered the supplemental declaration and the response thereto, we are satisfied Peters has met his burden of showing the defect could have been cured if it had been called to his attention at the time of the hearing. Indeed, Saunders' response concedes this point.

Prejudice is established because the evidence of Saunders' statements to Harris was necessary to make a prima facie case of defamation. The statements Peters was "caught . . . at fraud and double-billing," he "'bilks' insurance companies," and he "is not a certified reporter" are defamatory per se and establish Peters' entitlement to general damages. Had the trial court admitted evidence of these statements it would have had to find a prima facie case of defamation. The element of fault was established through Saunders' own declaration in which he denied making the statements contained in the Harris [**702] declaration. If Harris' testimony is credited it necessarily follows Saunders was at least negligent in failing to learn whether the statements were false, since he cannot have verified the truth of statements he denies making. There were no constitutional defenses for Peters to overcome because, as we [***32] have explained, the statements Saunders made to Harris were not made "in connection with" the CRA litigation or the public issue of direct contracting.

Summing up, it was error to exclude the Harris declaration as hearsay. Although the declaration was excludable for lack of personal knowledge, Saunders cannot rely on this ground on appeal because this ground was not manifest or suggested by Saunders' hearsay objection, Peters could have supplied evidence of Harris' personal knowledge had he been on notice of this defect and Peters would have defeated the motion to strike had he been afforded the opportunity to cure the defect. For these reasons the ruling striking the defamation/slander cause of action is reversed.

III. THE TRIAL COURT ERRED IN STRIKING THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR UNFAIR COMPETITION BASED ON SAUNDERS' ATTEMPT TO ENGAGE IN A SECONDARY BOYCOTT.

Peters' cross-complaint alleges Saunders is engaged in a restraint of trade in violation of the Cartwright Act (California's anti-trust law) as well [*1842] as statutes prohibiting unfair trade practices and unfair competition. (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700 et seq., 17000 et seq.)<sup>9</sup> He seeks damages and injunctive relief. For the reasons [***33] explained below, we conclude Peters made a prima facie showing for injunctive relief under the unfair competition statute based on Saunders' attempt to restrain trade in violation of the Cartwright Act.

According to the cross-complaint and Peters' declaration, most reporter agencies are small companies which do not employ reporters directly but rather subcontract with independent, freelance reporters to handle assignments as they arise. These independent reporters typically accept work from a number of reporter agencies. Without the availability of these independent reporters, many reporter agencies, including Peters', would be unable to undertake their clients' assignments. Peters claims Saunders is attempting to drive him out of business by coercing independent reporters not to do business with him. Saunders' alleged coercive activities include threatening not to do business with reporters who do business with [***34] Peters.

HN12[<sup>14</sup>] The Cartwright Act prohibits two or more persons from combining to do certain specified anti-competitive acts including creating or carrying out restrictions on trade or commerce and preventing competition in the sale or purchase of any commodity. ( § 16720, subds. (a), (c.) HN13[<sup>15</sup>] In order to succeed on a cause of action under the Cartwright Act, the plaintiff must prove the formation and operation of a conspiracy or combination; illegal acts done pursuant to this conspiracy; a purpose to unlawfully restrain trade; and injury to the plaintiff's business or property. ( Jones v. H. F. Ahmanson & Co. (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 93, 119, 81 Cal. Rptr. 592, 460 P.2d 464; G.H.I. v. MTS, Inc. (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 256, 265, 195 Cal. Rptr. 211.)

HN14[<sup>16</sup>] Unfair competition is defined as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice . . ." ( § 17200.) As we explained in Saunders v. Superior Court, supra, HN15[<sup>17</sup>] the unfair competition statute "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable under section 17200. (27 Cal. App. 4th at p. 839.) HN16<sup>1</sup> Violations of the Cartwright Act are unlawful business practices under section 17200. (People v. National Association of Realtors \(1981\) 120 Cal. App. 3d 459, 474, 174 Cal. Rptr. 728.) ***35 HN17<sup>1</sup> A private litigant is not entitled to damages under section 17200 but may seek injunctive relief under section 17203 which provides: "Any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction."

---

<sup>9</sup> All future statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code unless otherwise noted.

[*1843] [**703] The declaration of Elizabeth Devine-Hall reports a telephone call she received from Saunders in which he told her unless she resigned from CRA "he would not be speaking to [her] anymore and he would not be able to recommend [her] agency."<sup>10</sup> In other words, Saunders threatened to stop sending work to Devine-Hall unless Devine-Hall agreed to stop accepting work from Peters.

The Devine-Hall declaration describes what is often referred to as an indirect or "secondary" boycott. (Jomicra, Inc. v. California Mobile Home Dealers Assn. \(1970\) 12 Cal. App. 3d 396, 401, 90 Cal. Rptr. 696; ***36 People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling Etc. Assn. \(1965\) 238 Cal. App. 2d 225, 237, 47 Cal. Rptr. 570.) HN18<sup>1</sup> In a secondary boycott, the defendant and the target are competitors who do not engage in any transactions among themselves, so the defendant cannot remove the target from competition by refusing to deal with it. Instead, the defendant uses the threat of economic sanctions to coerce the suppliers or customers it shares with the target to refuse to deal with the target, thus denying the target access to the goods or buyers it needs to compete with the defendant. (Note, Three Exceptions to the Per Se Rule Against Boycotts (1985) 65 B.U.L.Rev 165, 170; and see e.g. Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores \(1959\) 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705.) Here, Saunders threatened to refuse to deal with Devine-Hall unless she refused to deal with Peters thus attempting through economic coercion on Devine-Hall to affect Peters' labor supply.

HN19<sup>1</sup> For a secondary boycott to violate the antitrust laws the defendant need not conspire with fellow competitors against the target competitor. A boycott by a single trader constitutes the necessary combination in restraint of trade if it is carried out through coercion, threats or intimidation upon the target's ***37 suppliers. (Albrecht v. Herald Co. \(1968\) 390 U.S. 145, 149-150, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869; Klor's v. Broadway-Hale, supra, 359 U.S. at p. 209; G.H.I.I. v. MTS, supra, 147 Cal. App. 3d at pp. 268-269 and cases cited therein.) Nor is it necessary the coercion actually result in the supplier refusing to do business with the target. (Cf. Associated Press v. United States \(1945\) 326 U.S. 1, 12, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416.) A would-be boycotter may be enjoined from attempting to violate the antitrust laws. (Lorain Journal v. United States \(1951\) 342 U.S. 143, 144-145, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181; Jomicra, Inc. v. California Mobile Home Dealers Assn., supra, 12 Cal. App. 3d at pp. 398-399 [association enjoined from "attempting or threatening" a secondary boycott].) Thus, in order to make out a prima facie case of secondary boycott, Peters did not have to show Saunders previously had referred Devine-Hall's agency to anyone, although the trier of fact could reasonably infer this from Saunders' statement. The threat of economic coercion is enough. It is not necessary to show Devine-Hall took the threat seriously or that the coercion actually resulted in devine-Hall refusing to do business with Peters.

The principal issue before us is whether Saunders' attempt to organize a boycott should be treated as a "per se" violation of the Cartwright [*1844] Act or reviewed under the "rule of reason" standard. As the United States Supreme Court explained in Northern Pac. Ry. co. v. United States \(1958\) 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514: HN20<sup>1</sup> "There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate ***38 inquiries as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Indirect or secondary boycotts have traditionally been held to fall within this "pernicious" category of practices which means they are presumed to be unlawful restraints of trade without the necessity of analyzing their economic effects and possible justifications.

<sup>10</sup> Ms. Devine-Hall states she had previously met Saunders. Therefore, the trier of fact could draw the inference she knew it was he on the telephone. (See discussion, supra, at p. 1831.)

[**704] Klor's v. Broadway-Hale, supra, remains the leading federal case on secondary boycotts.<sup>11</sup> Klor's was a small retailer of household appliances located next to a Broadway department store which sold the same goods. Klor's complaint alleged Broadway-Hale used its huge buying power to coerce manufacturers and distributors of well known brands not to sell to Klor's or to sell only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms. This concerted refusal to deal seriously handicapped Klor's ability to compete with Broadway and resulted in a great loss of profits, goodwill, reputation and prestige. (359 U.S. at p. 209.) Broadway-Hale did not dispute these allegations but submitted unchallenged evidence there were hundreds of other retailers, some within a few blocks of Klor's, which sold many competing brands of appliances, including [***39] those whose manufacturers refused to sell to Klor's. The trial court granted summary judgment to Broadway-Hale, concluding the controversy was a "purely private quarrel" between Klor's and Broadway-Hale which had no affect on the market for household appliances. The Ninth Circuit affirmed on the same rationale. (359 U.S. at p. 210.)

The Supreme Court took an entirely different view of the dispute between Klor's and the Broadway. The Court framed the issue as whether "a group of powerful businessmen may act in concert to deprive a single merchant, like Klor, of the goods he needs to compete effectively." (359 U.S. at p. 210.) In answering this question, the Court referred to its earlier decisions recognizing there were "classes of restraints which from their 'nature or character' were unduly restrictive, and hence forbidden [***40] by both the common law and the [Sherman Act]. *** Group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category." ([359 U.S. at pp. 211-212 \[3 L. Ed. 2d at p. 744\], \[\*1845\]](#) fns. omitted.) Such a boycott, the Court found, was plainly disclosed by the allegations in Klor's complaint. "This is not a case of a single trader refusing to deal with another, nor even of a manufacturer and a dealer agreeing to an exclusive distributorship." Rather, the complaint alleged "a wide combination consisting of manufacturers, distributors and a retailer." (59 U.S. at pp. 212-213.) The harm in this combination was that it took from Klor's "its freedom to buy appliances in an open and competitive market and drives it out of business as a dealer in the [manufacturers'] products" while at the same time it deprived "the manufacturers and distributors of their freedom to sell to Klor's at the same prices and conditions made available to Broadway-Hale, and in some instances forbids them from selling to it on any terms whatsoever." (Id. at p. 213.) The restraint on trade Broadway-Hale imposed on the manufacturers, distributors and its targeted competitor had by its "nature' and 'character' [***41] a 'monopolistic tendency.'" (Ibid.)

Furthermore, the Court held, a concerted refusal to deal "is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy. Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups." For this reason, "the Sherman Act has consistently been read to forbid all contracts and combinations which tend to create a monopoly, whether the tendency is a creeping one or one that proceeds at full gallop." (359 U.S. at pp. 213-214 (internal quotes, citations and footnote omitted).) (See also, Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n. (1941) 312 U.S. 457, 465, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703, in which the Court applied the per se rule to strike down an agreement by a manufacturer's guild not to sell to retailers who pirated their original dress designs.)

The leading California case on secondary boycotts is People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling Etc. Assn., supra (hereafter Santa Clara Bowling). In that case the defendants, two associations of bowling establishment proprietors, adopted rules providing only bowlers who confined their league [***42] bowling to member establishments could participate [**705] in tournaments sponsored or conducted by those establishments. Defendants subsequently amended these rules to provide a bowler had to participate in at least one league in a member establishment in order to participate in a member establishment's tournaments. The trial court found these tournament eligibility rules had no adverse effect on competition for league bowlers between member and nonmember establishments but concluded, nevertheless, the original rules constituted a secondary boycott in violation of the Cartwright Act because "they constituted agreements to coerce bowlers to refrain from [*1846] dealing with [nonmember establishments]." (238 Cal. App. 2d at p. 237.) Based on the reasoning of Klor's, the Court of Appeal held both the original and modified rules were per se illegal restraints of trade. The court concluded the fact the tournament

---

<sup>11</sup> Federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable as an aid in interpreting California's antitrust statute. (Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson, (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 920, 925, 130 Cal. Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833.)

eligibility rules had no effect on competition was not relevant." (Ibid.) "The gravamen of the offense against the Cartwright Act," the court held, "is the mere formation of the combination or conspiracy for the unlawful purpose of restraining trade." (238 Cal. App. 2d at p. 238.) The court found the original [***43] rules "were adopted for the primary purpose of inducing league bowlers bowling in leagues in nonmember houses to cease doing so and thus suppress the competition from nonmember establishments." (238 Cal. App. 2d at pp. 238-239.) The modified rule was just as objectionable even though it did not totally preclude a bowler from bowling in a nonmember establishment. The distinction between the two versions was "one of degree only and not of purpose." (238 Cal. App. 2d at p. 239.)

In *Jomicra, Inc. v. California Mobile Home Dealers Assn., supra*, the plaintiff, a mobile home dealer, brought an action for an injunction and damages under the Cartwright Act alleging defendant was attempting through economic sanctions to coerce businesses engaged in furnishing necessary services to mobile home dealers and parks not to deal with plaintiff. The Court of Appeal affirmed the trial court's preliminary injunction which "prohibited the Association and its members from imposing a secondary boycott on Jomicra . . ." (12 Cal. App. 3d at p. 401.) Citing Klor's as authority, the appellate court characterized defendant's conduct as a group boycott which was "illegal per se and against public policy." (Id. at p. 402.)

Although the [***44] California Supreme Court has not addressed directly the question whether the per se rule or the rule of reason should apply in secondary boycott cases, its opinion in *Marin County Bd. of Realtors, supra*, strongly suggests it would find secondary boycotts illegal per se. In that case a board of realtors comprising 75 percent of the active brokers in the county denied nonmembers access to its multiple listing service. The court held this form of boycott was subject to the rule of reason because it was "not directly aimed at coercing third parties and eliminating competitors." (16 Cal. 3d at p. 932.) The court distinguished boycotts subject to the per se rule from boycotts subject to the rule of reason on the basis the boycotts in Klor's and Fashion Guild involved "a particular type of predatory activity . . . aimed at coercing parties to adopt noncompetitive practices" while boycotts subject to the rule of reason involve refusals to deal which arise "only as a byproduct of the [parties'] agreement." (Ibid.) The court cited Santa Clara Bowling as an example of a case in which the per se rule was properly applied because the trade associations intended to coerce bowlers into boycotting [***45] nonmember [*1847] establishments and patronizing member establishments, thus suppressing the competition from nonmember establishments. (16 Cal. 3d at p. 933, fn. 9.)<sup>12</sup>

The present case differs from Klor's and other secondary boycott cases in one obvious [**706] respect. In every other case we have found, a substantial imbalance in economic power existed between the participants in the boycott and the targeted competitor. In Klor's, for example, [***46] the court described the defendants as a "wide combination" of "powerful businessmen" which included such major corporations as Broadway-Hale, General Electric, RCA and Zenith among others. In Fashion Guild, the defendant sold between 38 and 60 percent of all women's garments. In Santa Clara Bowling, the defendants controlled 87 and 88 percent of the bowling establishments in their respective jurisdictions. (238 Cal. App. 2d at p. 228.) It could be argued that while the economic power of the targeted competitor is irrelevant (*Klor's, supra, 359 U.S. at p. 213*) the economic power of the boycotter is relevant because in order to fall within the proscription of the antitrust laws the boycott must "tend to create a monopoly" even if the tendency is only "a creeping one." (359 U.S. at pp. 213-214.) Mark Saunders and Elizabeth Devine-Hall together can hardly be described as a "wide combination of powerful businessmen." Nor is there any evidence to suggest that if Saunders were to eliminate Peters as a competitor his demise would turn out to have been Saunders' first creeping move toward monopoly of the shorthand reporting business.

---

<sup>12</sup> To avoid confusion over terminology, it should be noted the Marin court used the term "indirect boycott" to refer to boycotts where the refusal to deal was only a byproduct of the agreement between the parties as compared to a "direct boycott" aimed at coercing parties to adopt noncompetitive practices. (16 Cal. 3d at p. 932.) Thus, when the court in Marin referred to "direct boycotts" it was referring to the type of combination in which the defendant attempts to shut off the target competitor's source of material or labor which is generally referred to as an indirect or "secondary" boycott.

If the only reason for condemning secondary boycotts was their [***47] tendency to lead to monopolies, then we would agree evidence of the defendants' economic power in relation to the danger of monopolization would be relevant. But the eventual creation of a monopoly is only one factor courts and commentators have cited as the reason secondary boycotts are illegal per se. Courts have been just as concerned about the immediate effect of the boycott on the targeted competitor and the neutral third parties coerced into joining the boycott. In Klor's, the Court listed three reasons for condemning the boycott in addition to its monopolistic tendency. The boycott deprived Klor's of its freedom to buy goods in an open, competitive market. It was likely to drive Klor's out of business. And, it deprived the manufacturers and distributors of their freedom to sell to Klor's. ([359 U.S. at p. 213 \[3 L. Ed. 2d \*1848\] at p. 745](#).) Similarly, in condemning secondary boycotts our Supreme Court observed in Marin: "Another beneficiary of antitrust law is the competitor himself. The preservation of competition, while indirectly aiding society by producing lower prices and higher quality goods and services, directly aids the scrupulous trader by insuring him a fair opportunity to compete on the market." [***48] (16 Cal. 3d at p. 935) Secondary boycotts have also been criticized because they permit one competitor an advantage over his rival, not through "individual enterprise and sagacity," ( Associated Press v. United States, supra, 326 U.S. at p. 15) but through coercing the conduct of a neutral intermediary. (Comment, Use of Economic Sanctions By Private Groups: Illegality Under the Sherman Act (1962) 30 U. Chi. L. Rev. 171, 181.) Finally, secondary boycotts tend to polarize society by increasing the number of people aligned in a dispute and highlighting the existence of their conflict. (Heidt, Industry Regulation and the Useless Concept "Group Boycott" (1986) 39 Vand. L. Rev. 1507, 1587.) The hostility between the parties, their respective supporters and counsel in the present case amply demonstrate this aspect of a group boycott.

For the reasons explained above, we conclude Peters has made a prima facie showing of unlawful restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act. The remaining question is whether Peters has demonstrated entitlement to relief.

HN21 [↑] The Cartwright Act provides any person "injured in his or her business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by [***49] this [Act], may sue therefor . . . . Such action may be brought by any person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this [Act], regardless of whether such injured person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant." ( § 16750 \(a\).) This latter provision has been interpreted to mean the plaintiff must have suffered injuries which were the direct result of the defendant's unlawful conduct and were the kind of injuries the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. ( Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1993\) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1232-1233.)

[**707] Peters' declaration states: "A number of CRA's insurer clients have terminated their relationships with CRA in the past 16 months. . . . These clients told us that they were terminating their relationship with CRA because they did not want to be named as defendants in plaintiffs' lawsuit. The loss of clients due to threats of suit by the Saunders plaintiffs has resulted in a large reduction in business. . . . Other potential clients also terminated their relationship with CRA, without giving a reason, after questioning us about this lawsuit." Leaving aside the obvious hearsay objection [***50] to this declaration, the declaration shows any damage Peters suffered [*1849] was the indirect result of Saunders' filing a lawsuit challenging Peters' "direct contracting"--a constitutionally protected petitioning activity which, under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine,<sup>13</sup> cannot be the basis of an antitrust action if the threatened litigation is meritorious. ( Coastal States Marketing, Inc. v. Hunt \(5th Cir. 1983\) 694 F.2d 1358, 1367; Aircapital Cablevision, Inc. v. Starlink Communications Group, Inc. \(D.Ka. 1986\) 634 F. Supp. 316, 326.) There is no contention here the underlying lawsuit brought by Saunders is a sham. In Wilcox, supra, Peters "contended using the threat of litigation to get the insurers to 'back off' from entering into contracts with CRA was an unlawful activity." We noted we had found no authority to support this proposition where the threatened lawsuit is meritorious. (27 Cal. App. 4th at p. 822 & fn. 6.) We still haven't. Therefore, Peters is not entitled to damages under the Cartwright Act.

---

<sup>13</sup> Eastern Railroad Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc. \(1961\) 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523; United Mine Workers v. Pennington \(1965\) 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585; California Transport v. Trucking Unlimited \(1972\) 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609.

[***51] The showing Peters made would, however, entitle him to injunctive relief under HN22↑ section 17203 of the Unfair Competition Act which provides: "Any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction." The Devine-Hall declaration shows Saunders has engaged, or at least has proposed engaging, in unfair competition by organizing a secondary boycott in violation of the Cartwright Act. We note in 1992 the Legislature amended the definition of unfair competition to include "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." (Section 17200 as amended by Stats. 1992, ch. 430, § 2, emphasis added.) HN23↑ The statute is no longer limited to a business practice, i.e. "a pattern of behavior" or "course of conduct" (see State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. \(1988\) 46 Cal. 3d 1147, 1170, 252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385) but applies to "any act" of unfair competition. Thus, under the statute as amended, Saunders' single act of proposing a secondary boycott to Devine-Hall is ground for injunctive relief.<sup>14</sup>

[***52] Finally, we agree with the trial court Peters has failed to establish a prima facie case of unfair trade practices.

[*1850] HN24↑ The Unfair Practices Act prohibits locality discrimination, sales below cost and special rebate schemes. ( §§ 17040-17045.) HN25↑ The Act makes it unlawful for a person to use threats, intimidation or boycotts to effectuate any violation of the Act or to solicit any violation of the Act. ( §§ 17046, 17047.) Peters presented no evidence Saunders' conduct involved a pricing policy or marketing method proscribed by the Act. Thus he failed to demonstrate a probability of prevailing on this cause of action. (Cf. Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co. \(1978\) 79 Cal. App. 3d 13, 25, 144 Cal. Rptr. 664 [affirming dismissal of unfair trade practices cause of action for [**708] failure to allege conduct proscribed by the Act].) Even if the threat of legal action against anyone joining with CRA in direct contracting could somehow be construed as conduct prohibited under the Act, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine would bar Peters' suit. (See discussion, supra, pp. 27-28.)

DISPOSITION

The trial court's order striking Peters' cross-complaint as to Mark Saunders is reversed as to the third cause of action (unfair [***53] competition) and fifth cause of action (defamation/slander). In all other respects the order is affirmed. Each party to bear its own costs on appeal.

LILLIE, P.J., and GODOY-PEREZ, J. *, concurring.

End of Document

<sup>14</sup> Saunders argues the amendment to the statute did not take effect until January 1, 1993, and therefore it does not apply to his contact with Devine-Hall which occurred in 1992. As we have previously pointed out, however, the unfair competition statute is remedial in nature (see supra, p. 1842) and therefore the general rule a statute does not apply retroactively is not applicable here. ( Kuykendall v. State Bd. of Equalization \(1994\) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1211, fn. 20.) A statute which is remedial or procedural in nature "may be given effect as to pending and future litigation even if the event underlying the cause of action occurred before the statute took effect." ( Pacific Coast Medical Enterprises v. Department of Benefit Payments \(1983\) 140 Cal. App. 3d 197, 204, 189 Cal. Rptr. 558.)

* Assigned by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

United States v. Alex. Brown & Sons, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

November 26, 1996, Decided

96 Civ. 5313 (RWS)

Reporter

169 F.R.D. 532 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17634 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,683

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, - against - ALEX. BROWN & SONS, INC., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: As Amended December 3, 1996.

Motion granted by United States v. Alex. Brown & Sons, 963 F. Supp. 235, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5375 \(S.D.N.Y., 1997\)

Prior History: United States v. Alex. Brown & Sons Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22952 \(S.D.N.Y., July 26, 1996\)

Disposition: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Plaintiffs' motion to intervene in this action granted for the limited purposes of moving to compel disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum, objecting to the prospective protective order in the proposed consent decree, and appealing from the decisions of this Court upon these issues. The Plaintiffs' motion to compel disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum and underlying materials denied. The parties are granted leave to file supplemental briefs on the issue of the prospective protective order.

Core Terms

---

consent decree, Settlement, Memorandum, antitrust, disclosure, Tunney Act, documents, public interest, decree, market-makers, proceedings, parties, intervene, tapes, proposed order, Multidistrict, discovery, public comment, violations, protective order, provisions, telephone, cases, stock, confidentiality, comments, settlement negotiations, limited purpose, evidentiary, disclose

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Entry of a proposed consent decree in an antitrust case is subject to the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act (or Tunney Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 16.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN2 [down] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

The Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16, was designed to expose consent decree proceedings to public scrutiny in order to enhance the likelihood that antitrust decrees would serve the public interest in eliminating anticompetitive behavior. It is imperative that the integrity of and public confidence in procedures relating to settlements via consent decree procedures be assured. The purpose of Tunney Act is to prevent judicial rubber stamping of antitrust consent decrees.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Masters > Appointment of Masters

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > References

HN3 [down] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16 provides for a process of judicial consideration and public scrutiny of proposed consent decrees. Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(b\), requires that certain materials be filed with the court and published in the Federal register for public comment. Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(c\) provides for publication of summaries of certain materials in newspapers. Pursuant to 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(d\) requires the Government to respond to public comments on the proposed decree. Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(e\) directs the district court to determine whether the proposed consent decree is in the public interest, considering several enumerated factors, before entering judgment on the decree. Pursuant to 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(f\) permits the court to use a number of procedures to gather additional information in making its public interest determination, including taking testimony and appointing special masters.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Amicus Curiae

HN4 [down] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(f\)\(3\), in making its determination as to whether the entry of a consent decree is "in the public interest," the court may: authorize full or limited participation in proceedings before the court by interested persons or agencies, including appearance amicus curiae, intervention as a party pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, examination of witnesses or documentary materials, or participation in any other manner and extent which serves the public interest as the court may deem appropriate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > Permissive Intervention

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > Intervention of Right

HN5 [down] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In making its public interest determination under the Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16, a court may consider the impact of entry of a consent decree upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(e\)\(2\). Permitting plaintiffs in a treble damages action to intervene in a parallel Tunney Act proceeding may assist the court in determining the impact of the proposed consent decree on the interests of those private litigants alleging injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > Permissive Intervention

HN6 [down] Settlements, Consent Judgments

A court has discretion to allow permissive intervention in antitrust consent decree proceedings.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Parties, Intervention

Intervention under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 24* is the proper mechanism for a non-party to seek modification of a protective order and thus to gain access to information generated through judicial proceedings.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Parties, Intervention

Under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 24\(b\)*, upon a timely application anyone may be permitted to intervene in an action when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or fact in common. In exercising its discretion the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Under the collateral estoppel doctrine, once a court has decided an issue of fact or law necessary to its judgment, that decision is conclusive in a subsequent suit involving a party to the prior litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

**HN10** [down] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

A person whose private interests coincide with the public interest in government antitrust litigation is nonetheless not bound by the eventuality of such litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN11 [blue document icon] Settlements, Consent Judgments

The entry of a consent decree is not an adjudication on the merits that can give rise to issue preclusion because there is no judicial determination of questions of law or fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN12 [blue document icon] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

The Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(b\), provides that any other materials and documents which the United States considered determinative in formulating a proposed consent decree shall also be made available to the public at the district court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In enacting the Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16, Congress recognized the high rate of settlement in public antitrust cases and wished to encourage settlement by consent decrees as part of the legal policies expressed in the antitrust laws. It wanted to remedy abuses in the consent decree process by focussing judicial and public scrutiny on the Justice Department's decision to enter into a proposal for a consent decree, but not at the expense of eliminating the decree as a practicable means of resolving antitrust matters. The purpose of the competitive impact statement, the public comment procedures, and the requirement that a defendant reveal lobbying contacts with the government, 15 U.S.C.S. 16\(g\), are to enable a court to determine whether a proposed consent decree is in the public interest, not to evaluate the strength of the Government's case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

The Government's judgments in a Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16, proceeding are entitled to deference.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Although "determinative documents" under the Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 16\(b\), are not necessarily limited to recommendations prepared by outside consultants, the events that led Congress to enact the "determinative document" provisions support the conclusion that Congress was more concerned with exposing external influences on the consent decree process than it was with documents reflecting the Government's internal evaluation of its evidence, even when that internal evaluation is undertaken to persuade defendants to enter into a consent decree.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN16 [blue icon] Settlements, Consent Judgments

15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(e\)\(2\) provides that, in making the Tunney Act public interest determination, the Court may consider the impact of entry of such judgment upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations, including consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of the issues at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN17 [blue icon] Settlements, Consent Judgments

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(f\)\(3\), in making the public interest determination required by the Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16, the Court may authorize full or limited participation by interested persons including examination of witnesses or documentary materials, or participation as the court may deem appropriate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Under the Tunney Act, while a court may consider the interests of individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint, that consideration is limited to the impact of entry of a consent decree upon those individuals pursuant to 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(e\)\(2\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

**HN19** [blue icon] Settlements, Consent Judgments

Congress has strictly limited disclosure of materials obtained by the Government under the Antitrust Civil Process Act (ACPA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1313\(c\), from defendants and other targets of Civil Investigative Demands requests. Although the Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16, was enacted after the ACPA's confidentiality provisions, the Act does not purport to invalidate them and make the Government's files open to broad disclosure.

Administrative Law > Governmental Information > Recordkeeping & Reporting

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

**HN20** [blue icon] Governmental Information, Recordkeeping & Reporting

Information that the Department of Justice obtains from the Securities and Exchange Commission remains confidential. 17 C.F.R. 230.122; 17 C.F.R. 240.0-4; 44 U.S.C.S. § 3510\(b\). Data immune from disclosure in the hands of a federal agency acquiring the data retains that protection in the hands of a receiving agency after an inter-agency transfer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

**HN21** [blue icon] Settlements, Consent Judgments

A consenting defendant in a government antitrust suit gains whatever benefit there may be in accepting the terms of the consent decree rather than risking a more onerous decree entered after litigation. A consenting defendant also benefits from the saving in litigation expense which is made possible by a consent decree. But neither in the express nor implied terms of the statutes or rules is there any indication that a consenting defendant could gain the additional benefit of holding under seal, or stricture of nondisclosure, for an indefinite time, information which would otherwise be available to the public or at least to other litigants who had need of it.

Counsel: APPEARANCES:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Antitrust Division, Attorney for United States of America, Washington, DC, By:
HAYS GOREY, JR., ESQ., ANDREA LIMMER, ESQ., JOHN D. WORLAND, JR., ESQ., JESSICA N. COHEN, ESQ., Of Counsel.

SHEARMAN & STERLING, Attorney for Defendants, New York, NY, By: JAMES T. HALVERSON, ESQ., JOSEPH T. McLAUGHLIN, ESQ., GRANT J. ESPOSITO, ESQ., J. NICHOLAS GRAYDON, ESQ., Of Counsel.

Attorneys for Intervenors: FINE, KAPLAN AND BLACK, Philadelphia, PA, By: ARTHUR M. KAPLAN, ESQ., Of Counsel. LOVELL & SKIRNICK, New York, NY, By: CHRISTOPHER LOVELL, ESQ., ROBERT A. SKIRNICK, ESQ., Of Counsel. MILBERG WEISS BERSHAD HYNES & LERACH, San Diego, CA, By: LEONARD B. SIMON, ESQ., Of Counsel.

Judges: [**2] ROBERT W. SWEET, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: ROBERT W. SWEET

Opinion

---

[*533] OPINION

Sweet, D. J.

The plaintiffs in a private civil antitrust damages action, In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation (hereafter, "Plaintiffs"), have moved to intervene or appear as amici in this civil action (the "Government Action") brought by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice (the "DOJ" or the [*534] "Government"). Plaintiffs seek to compel filing and publication of a "Settlement Memorandum" (and all evidentiary materials referenced therein) prepared by the DOJ and to challenge a provision of the proposed Consent Decree in this action.

For the reasons set forth below, the Plaintiffs' motion to intervene for the limited purposes described will be granted. Their motion to compel disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum and underlying materials will be denied, and their objection to the consent decree will be considered, along with other materials provided by the Government and through the public comment process, at the time this Court determines whether entry of the Consent Decree is in the public interest.

Parties

The parties, facts and prior proceedings in the In re [**3] Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, M.D.L. No. 1023 (the "Multidistrict action" or the "Private action") are described in the prior opinions of this court, familiarity with which is assumed. See In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 894 F. Supp. 703 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); 164 F.R.D. 346 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\); 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4969, No. 94 Civ. 3996, 1996 WL 187409 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 18, 1996); 929 F. Supp. 723 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\); 929 F. Supp. 174 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\); 938 F. Supp. 232 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\).

In this Government action, defendants Alex. Brown & Sons Inc., Bear, Stearns & Co., Inc., CS First Boston Corp., Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp., Furman Selz LLC, Goldman, Sachs & Co., Hambrecht & Quist LLC, Herzog, Heine, Geduld, Inc., J.P. Morgan Securities, Inc., Lehman Brothers, Inc., Mayer & Schweitzer, Inc., Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., Nash, Weiss & Co., Olde Discount Corp., Painewebber Inc., Piper Jaffray Inc., Prudential Securities Inc., Salomon Brothers Inc., Sherwood Securities Corp., Smith Barney Inc., Spear, Leeds & Kellogg, LP, and UBS Securities LLC (collectively, the "Defendants") are or were market-makers [**4] on the Nasdaq exchange and purchased and sold stock on Nasdaq.

The Plaintiffs in the Multidistrict action, who seek to intervene here, include the State of Louisiana, in its capacity as parens patriae, trustee, guardian, and representative of Louisiana investors allegedly damaged by the alleged price-fixing scheme, and numerous individual plaintiffs who purchased or sold specified Nasdaq Securities from market-makers or their affiliates.

Background and Prior Proceedings

On May 27, 1994, the first class action complaint in what has become a multidistrict case, In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Litigation, MDL 1023, was filed, following reports in the media of a study by Professors William G. Christie and Paul H. Schultz discussing the "spread" between what market-makers on the Nasdaq exchange offer to pay sellers for certain securities and the price at which they offer to sell the securities to buyers. The complaint alleged improper manipulation of spreads through, inter alia, a convention among brokers to not quote "odd eightths" on certain securities. Eventually more than two dozen complaints were filed around the country by various plaintiffs alleging variations [**5] on the charge that the NASDAQ market-makers had engaged in a conspiracy to avoid odd-eighth quotes in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. On October 14, 1994, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ordered that the actions already filed and any actions filed later be assigned to this Court. A "Consolidated Amended Complaint" was filed on December 16, 1994. More than thirty actions involving thirty-three defendants have now been consolidated in this Court as part of the multidistrict litigation.<sup>1</sup>

In October 1994, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice (the "DOJ" or the "Government") announced that it was undertaking a broad review of a number of aspects of NASDAQ's market structure.<sup>2</sup> In its [*535] Competitive Impact Statement (the "CIS"), the Government describes its inquiry as "a major, two-year investigation by [**6] the Department of the trading activities of Nasdaq securities dealers." The investigation actually began in the summer of 1994, shortly after the public disclosure of the economic study by Professors Christie and Schultz.

During the course of its investigation, the Government reviewed thousands of pages of documents that were produced by the twenty-four Defendants in this action and other market participants in response to over 350 Civil [**7] Investigative Demands ("CIDs") issued by the DOJ. The DOJ reviewed hundreds of responses to interrogatories that were submitted by the Defendants and others. The DOJ took over 225 depositions of individuals with knowledge of the trading practices of Nasdaq market-makers, including current and former officers and employees of the Defendants and other Nasdaq market-makers, as well as officials and committee members of the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. ("NASD"), the organization responsible for oversight of the Nasdaq market.

The DOJ conducted numerous telephone and in-person interviews of current and former Nasdaq stock traders, Nasdaq investors, and others with relevant knowledge of the industry, and listened to approximately 4500 hours of audio tapes of telephone calls between stock traders employed by the Defendants and other Nasdaq market-makers. These audio tapes had been recorded by certain of the Defendants (and other market-makers) in the ordinary course of their business and were produced to the Government in response to its CIDs.

The DOJ reviewed and analyzed substantial quantities of market data, including information showing all market-maker quote changes [**8] on Nasdaq during a twenty-month period. The DOJ also reviewed eighteen months of data on trades in Nasdaq stocks. Finally, the DOJ reviewed numerous transcripts of depositions taken by the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") in its concurrent inquiry into the operations and activities of the NASD and the Nasdaq market.

Based on the evidence uncovered during this substantial investigative effort, the Government concluded that the Defendants and others had been engaged for a number of years in anticompetitive conduct in violation of the Sherman Act.

---

<sup>1</sup> A more complete description of the background and proceedings in the companion Multidistrict Action is set forth in the Opinion in that action issued by the Court today.

<sup>2</sup> At least two other investigations into the operation of the Nasdaq exchange have been commenced. On November 14, 1994, the Securities and Exchange Commission (the "SEC") announced that it would review the operation of NASDAQ, including the spreads issue alleged in the Consolidated Amended Complaint and broader issues concerning the structure of the market itself. On November 20, 1994, the National Association of Securities Dealers ("NASD") announced the formation of a seven-member panel to undertake a plenary review of the effectiveness of its own operation and surveillance.

On July 17, 1996, the Government filed the complaint in this civil action, pursuant to Section 4 of the Sherman Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 4, seeking equitable and other relief to prevent and restrain violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1. In its complaint, the Government alleged that the Defendants and others adhered to and enforced a "quoting convention" that was designed to and did deter price competition among the Defendants and other market-makers in their trading of Nasdaq stocks with the general public. The Government believed that investors incurred higher transaction costs for buying and [\[\*\*9\]](#) selling Nasdaq stocks than they would have incurred had the Defendants not restrained competition through their illegal agreement.

On the same day as the complaint in the Government action was filed, the United States and the Defendants filed a Stipulation and Order ("proposed Order" or "proposed Consent Decree") to resolve the allegations in the complaint. The Government contends that the proposed Order will eliminate the anticompetitive conduct identified in the complaint and establish procedures that will ensure that such conduct does not recur. Specifically, the proposed Order seeks to prevent the Defendants from agreeing with other market-makers to adhere to the quoting convention, or to fix, raise, lower, or maintain prices or quotes for Nasdaq securities. The proposed Order also requires each defendant to adopt an antitrust compliance program and designate an antitrust compliance officer to ensure the firm's future compliance with the antitrust laws. To this end, the proposed [\[\*536\]](#) decree requires the compliance officer to: (1) randomly monitor and tape record telephone conversations between stock traders; and (2) report any violations of the proposed Order within ten business days [\[\*\*10\]](#) to the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

The proposed decree also requires that these tape recordings be made available to the DOJ for its review. The proposed Order gives the DOJ authority to receive complaints of possible violations, to visit Defendants' offices unannounced to monitor trader conversations as they are ongoing, to direct taping of particular suspected violators, and to request copies of tapes as they are made.

Paragraph IV (C)(6) of the proposed Order provides:

Tapes made pursuant to this stipulation and order shall be retained by each defendant for at least thirty (30) days from the date of recording, and may be recycled thereafter. Tapes made pursuant to this stipulation and order shall not be subject to civil process except for process issued by the Antitrust Division, the SEC, the NASD, or any other self-regulatory organization, as defined in Section 3(a)(26) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended. Such tapes shall not be admissible in evidence in civil proceedings, except in actions, proceedings, investigations, or examinations commenced by the Antitrust Division, the SEC, the NASD, or any other self-regulatory organization, [\[\*\*11\]](#) as defined in Section 3(a)(26) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended.

In this opinion, Paragraph IV(C)(6) will be referred to as the "non-disclosure" provision or the "prospective protective order."

In the course of conducting its investigation, the Government prepared a "Settlement Memorandum," or "briefing book," which was shared with Defendants in settlement negotiations. The document summarizes selected evidence compiled in the course of the investigation and sets forth some of the legal underpinnings of the Government's case. The purpose of the Memorandum was to facilitate negotiations by demonstrating to Defendants the supposed strength of the Government's case. In order to disclose the evidence obtained through CIDs issued by DOJ, those who responded to CIDs signed limited waivers. These waivers permitted the DOJ to disclose evidence otherwise protected by the confidentiality provisions of the Antitrust Civil Process Act (the "ACPA"), 15 U.S.C. § 1313\(c\), only to Defendants and potential defendants and only for the purpose of settlement negotiations with these Defendants and potential defendants.

HN1[↑] Entry of the proposed Consent Decree is subject to the [\[\*12\]](#) Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act (the "APPA" or "Tunney Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 16. On July 17, 1996, in accordance with procedures outlined in the APPA, the Government submitted materials to the Court, including a Competitive Impact Statement ("CIS") summarizing the evidence supporting the allegations in the complaint and describing the resolution set forth in the proposed Decree. The Government also published proposed settlement documents in the Federal Register and newspapers, thus initiating the process of public comment and court consideration of the proposed consent decree required by the Tunney Act.

Plaintiffs filed notice of the instant motion on August 28, 1996, the Court received opposition and reply papers, and oral argument was heard on October 16, 1996. Plaintiffs simultaneously filed a motion in the Multidistrict Action seeking to compel production of all CID deposition transcripts in the Multidistrict Defendants' control and the Settlement Memorandum and evidentiary materials referenced therein. Post-argument submissions were received until November 15, 1996, at which time the matter was deemed fully submitted.<sup>3</sup>

[**13] Discussion

I. The Motion to Intervene Will Be Granted for the Limited Purposes Advanced

HN2 [↑] The Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, was designed to expose consent decree proceedings to public scrutiny in order to enhance [*537] the likelihood that antitrust decrees would serve the public interest in eliminating anticompetitive behavior. See H. Rep. No. 93-1463, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess., reprinted in 1974 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6535, 6536 ("it is imperative that the integrity of and public confidence in procedures relating to settlements via consent decree procedures be assured"); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 312 U.S. App. D.C. 378, 56 F.3d 1448, 1458 \(D.C. Cir. 1995\) (purpose of Tunney Act was to prevent judicial "rubber stamping" of antitrust consent decrees).

HN3 [↑] Section 16 of Title 15 of the United States Code provides for a process of judicial consideration and public scrutiny of proposed consent decrees. Section 16\(b\) requires that certain materials be filed with the court and published in the Federal register for public comment. Section 16\(c\) provides for publication of summaries of certain materials in newspapers. Section 16\(d\) requires the Government to respond to public comments on the proposed [**14] decree. Section 16\(e\) directs the district court to determine whether the proposed consent decree is in the public interest, considering several enumerated factors, before entering judgment on the decree. Section 16\(f\) permits the court to use a number of procedures to gather additional information in making its public interest determination, including taking testimony and appointing special masters. Section 16\(g\) requires defendants to disclose lobbying contacts with any officer or employee of the United States concerning the proposed decree.

HN4 [↑] Section 16\(f\)\(3\) provides that, in making its determination as to whether the entry of a consent decree is "in the public interest," the Court may:

Authorize full or limited participation in proceedings before the court by interested persons or agencies, including appearance amicus curiae, intervention as a party pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, examination of witnesses or documentary materials, or participation in any other manner and extent which serves the public interest as the court may deem appropriate . . . .
(emphasis added).

Moreover, HN5 [↑] in making its public interest determination, a court may consider [**15] "the impact of entry of [a consent decree] upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 16\(e\)\(2\). Permitting plaintiffs in a treble damages action to intervene in a parallel Tunney Act proceeding may assist the court in determining the impact of the proposed consent decree on the interests of those private litigants alleging injury.

Plaintiffs move for mandatory intervention pursuant to Rule 24\(a\)\(2\), Fed.R.Civ.P., or, in the alternative, permissive intervention pursuant to Rule 24\(b\), Fed.R.Civ.P. Because Plaintiffs will be permitted to intervene pursuant to Rule 24\(b\), the Court need not address whether Plaintiffs satisfy the standards for mandatory intervention.

HN6 [↑] A court has discretion to allow permissive intervention in a consent decree proceeding such as this. See, e.g., United States v. American Cyanamid Co., 719 F.2d 558, 563 \(2d Cir. 1983\) (affirming permissive intervention in antitrust consent decree proceedings); United States v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. 131, 218-19 \(D.D.C. 1982\) (intervenor status granted in antitrust consent decree proceedings; [**16] intervenors permitted to file briefs, participate in proceedings and oral argument, and appeal the entry of the consent decree ), aff'd sub nom. Maryland v. United States, 460 U.S. 1001, 75 L. Ed. 2d 472, 103 S. Ct. 1240 \(1983\).

---

<sup>3</sup> Plaintiffs' discovery motion in the companion Multidistrict action is decided by a separate opinion issued by this Court today. On November 15, 1996, the Government filed its Response to Public Comments and moved for entry of the proposed Order.

Moreover, our Court of Appeals has suggested that HN7 intervention under Rule 24 is the proper mechanism for a non-party to seek modification of a protective order and thus to gain access to information generated through judicial proceedings. See, e.g., Palmieri v. State of New York, 779 F.2d 861, 864 \(2d Cir. 1985\); Martindell v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 594 F.2d 291, 293-94 \(2d Cir. 1979\); see also In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 164 F.R.D. 346, 351 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\).

HN8 Rule 24\(b\), in relevant part, provides:

Upon timely application anyone may be permitted to intervene in an action . . . when an applicant's claim or defense and [*538] the main action have a question of law or fact in common. . . . In exercising its discretion the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties.

The Government and Defendants in this action do [**17] not seriously dispute that the Multidistrict Action shares questions of law and fact in common with the Government Action. The two complaints allege essentially the same conduct on the part of Nasdaq market-makers, and both complaints assert that this conduct violated the Sherman Act.

However, the Government does contend that the specific issues to be determined in the Tunney Act proceeding are different from the issues in the Plaintiffs' action. The Government argues that the primary issue in the Tunney Act proceeding is whether the proposed consent decree is in the public interest, while the primary issue in the private action is whether Plaintiffs are entitled to damages.

This attempt to narrowly define the "main action" to mean only the Tunney Act proceeding inappropriately limits the court's discretion to permit intervention. Rule 24 permits intervention in the Government "action," not merely the Tunney Act proceeding. The "main action," within the meaning of the rule, is not the Tunney Act proceeding, but the entire Government action seeking to remedy alleged violations of the antitrust law. Therefore, the Plaintiffs have met the threshold condition for permissive intervention [**18] that there be common issues of law and fact between the two claims.

However, the Government and Defendants urge the Court to exercise its discretion and deny intervention based on the risk that intervention would "unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties." They contend that most courts have denied intervention in similar circumstances because of the inevitability of delay when new parties are added. See, e.g., United States v. International Business Machines Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8482, No. 72-344, 1995 WL 366383, *5 (S.D.N.Y. June 19, 1995) ("IBM") (denying permissive intervention because, inter alia, potential for unwarranted delay outweighed any benefit from intervention). An intervenor, they contend, may have the right to file counterclaims and cross-claims, to depose witnesses and to appeal from orders of the Court. Any such action, they argue, would only delay entry of the Stipulation and would, as a result, delay the initiation of enforcement procedures, including taping and monitoring of telephone conversation.

Defendants and the Government also argue that the Tunney Act facilitates a consolidated Government response to all comments and that [**19] intervention would undermine the efficiency of such consolidated proceedings. The Tunney Act requires that such responses, together with the underlying comments, be filed with the Court. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 16\(d\), \(f\). The parties to this action urge that Plaintiffs' formal intervention would impose upon the Court and the DOJ the burdensome task of separately responding to and ruling on Plaintiffs' objections.

The possible delays imposed on the Court and the existing parties to this case by intervention are not unduly burdensome in light of the potential benefit of intervenors' vigorous litigation of the prospective protective order and the discoverability of the Settlement Memorandum. Significantly, this action provides the only forum in which to seek disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum (and appeal from the Court's decision thereon), since it will not be in the possession of parties to the Multidistrict action.

The proposed intervention in the IBM case, cited by the Government and the Defendants for the proposition that intervention should normally be denied in consent decree proceedings, would have required completely new discovery and the introduction of new evidence [**20] and legal issues into the case. 1995 WL 366383, *5. The IBM court distinguished *United States v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. at 218-19* (in which the court granted intervention in antitrust consent decree proceedings) on the grounds that the intervening parties in AT&T were limited to submission of comments, engaging in oral argument and filing appeals, not conducting discovery or [*539] developing evidence. *IBM, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8482, 1995 WL 366383* at *6.

Here, Plaintiffs are being permitted to intervene for two very limited purposes: (1) to make a concurrent motion to disclose a single document (along with the underlying depositions and documentary evidence expressly referred to therein) to which they do not have access in their private action, and (2) to raise an objection to a single provision of the proposed consent decree. Resolving the motion to compel disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum and underlying documents will not delay the proceedings any more than resolving the motion to intervene, since this opinion decides both motions simultaneously. The Plaintiffs' objections to the prospective non-disclosure provisions of the proposed decree raise purely legal questions [**21] that will not require additional discovery or evidence. As in AT&T, Plaintiffs here will be limited to submitting comments on the decree, engaging in oral argument, and filing appeals. Any delay incident to the additional argument required to decide this issue or to any appeal therefrom is not "undue" given the significance of the legal issues raised.

The Defendants' assertion that intervention will require this Court to address Plaintiffs' objections to the proposed Consent Decree separately from the objections raised by commentators from the public is unfounded. If the Government has not already responded to the specific objection raised by Plaintiffs in this motion, perhaps because no public comments addressed the issue, they may be required to make an additional submission. However, all parties have already prepared written argument on the issue. Any additional effort required will be minimal.

The Government and Defendants further contend that the interests of Plaintiffs can be protected adequately without intervention. They claim that Plaintiffs will be able to seek discovery of the Settlement Memorandum and underlying materials in the Multidistrict action. They argue further [**22] that there is no reason to permit Plaintiffs to submit their views to this Court as intervenors or amici when they have an opportunity to comment on the proposed order pursuant to the public comment provisions of the Tunney Act. See *United States v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., 563 F. Supp. 642, 652 \(D.Del. 1983\)* ("under the APPA, courts have rejected requests for third party participation in the absence of a showing that the statute's comment procedure is inadequate for evaluation of a complainant's views"); *United States v. Carrols Development Corp., 454 F. Supp. 1215, 1221-22 \(N.D.N.Y. 1978\)* (denying request for amicus participation where "the purposes for granting such participation have already been achieved here since the moving parties have set forth their views in considerable detail . . . in comments submitted to the Government under the APPA").

The Government and the Defendants urge that reliance on the Tunney Act's comment procedure, as opposed to intervention, would also be consistent with Congressional intent. They cite an interpretation of the legislative history contained in Heileman Brewing:

Congress expected that the district court "would adduce [**23] the necessary information through the least complicated and least time-consuming means possible." . . . Hence, the legislative history reveals that the main purpose of the bill was "to encourage additional comments and response by more adequate notice to the public" and not to invite intervention with all of the attendant problems, complexities, and delays that such participation would inevitably involve. . . . According to the bill's chief sponsor, Senator John Tunney, the [Tunney Act's] proponents did "not seek to open the floodgates to litigation, nor has anyone argued that the bill, in its final version and as it was endorsed by all members of the Judiciary Committee would do so."

563 F. Supp. at 652-53 (citing S. Rep. No. 298, 93rd Cong., 1st Sess. 6-7 (1973); H.R. Rep. No. 1463, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess. 8 (1974), 1974 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6535; 119 Cong. Rec. 24598-24599 (1973) (remarks of Sen. Tunney); 120 Cong. Rec. 36343-36344 (*1974) (remarks of Rep. Jordan)).

While it may be true that some aspects of the legislative history suggest a preference for using the public comment mechanisms in §§ 16(b), (c) and (d), the statute expressly permits intervention, and some [**540] courts have exercised [**24] their discretion to allow intervention. See American Cyanamid, 719 F.2d at 563; AT&T, 552 F. Supp. at 218-219. Here, intervention is appropriate because not all of the Plaintiffs' asserted interests can be protected through the public comment process. As the Government conceded at oral argument, Plaintiffs will be unable to compel production of the Settlement Memorandum in their private case, since Defendants are not in possession of the Memorandum. Moreover, if Plaintiffs' sole vehicle for seeking the Settlement Memorandum or objecting to the prospective non-disclosure provision is public comment, they would be unable, as non-parties, to appeal an adverse decision.<sup>4</sup>

[**25] Plaintiffs will be permitted to intervene for the limited purposes of making their motion to compel disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum (and underlying evidence referred to therein) and to raise objections to the prospective nondisclosure provisions of the consent decree.

II. The Government Will Not Be Compelled to Produce the Settlement Memorandum

Plaintiffs advance two arguments for disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum and its underlying evidentiary materials. First, they argue that the Settlement Memorandum is a "determinative document," required to be disclosed under 15 U.S.C. § 16(b). Second, they argue that the Court should exercise its discretion to order production of the documents pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 16(f)(3), which permits the court to "authorize . . . examination of . . . documentary materials."

A. The Settlement Memorandum is Not a "Determinative Document"

HN12[] The Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16(b), provides that "any other materials and documents which the United States considered determinative in formulating [a proposed consent decree], shall also be made available to the <sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs also contend that intervention in this action is necessary to challenge the non-disclosure provision, because if they wait to challenge the provision in a separate proceeding, the Defendants will argue that they were precluded from litigating an issue that could have been litigated during the consent decree proceedings. It seems unlikely that Plaintiffs would actually be barred from challenging the provision in later proceedings. If Plaintiffs were not permitted to intervene as parties in this action, they would not be bound by traditional principles of collateral estoppel. HN9[] Under the collateral estoppel doctrine, once a court has decided an issue of fact or law necessary to its judgment, that decision is conclusive in a subsequent suit involving a party to the prior litigation. United States v. Mendoza, 464 U.S. 154, 158, 78 L. Ed. 2d 379, 104 S. Ct. 568 (1984). Even so-called "non-mutual" collateral estoppel can only be asserted against parties (or privies of parties) to the prior action. See id. at 159 n.4 (describing offensive and defensive non-mutual collateral estoppel). While the Supreme Court has indicated that an individual's failure to intervene in a prior proceeding could preclude that individual from making offensive use of a prior advantageous judgment, Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 331, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 99 S. Ct. 645 (1979), there is no reason that such a non-party would be bound by an adverse determination in a case to which it was not a party.

Further, it is not likely that Defendants could successfully argue in a later proceeding that Plaintiffs should be precluded from litigating the validity of the prospective non-disclosure provision of the decree because the Government represented Plaintiffs' interests in the prior action. In Sam Fox Publishing Co. v. United States, 366 U.S. 683, 689, 6 L. Ed. 2d 604, 81 S. Ct. 1309 (1961), the Supreme Court denied a private parties' intervention in a government antitrust action on the grounds that "HN10[] a person whose private interests coincide with the public interest in government antitrust litigation is nonetheless not bound by the eventuality of such litigation." Moreover, HN11[] the entry of the consent decree is not an adjudication on the merits that can give rise to issue preclusion of the sort Plaintiffs fear. See IAM National Pension Fund v. Industrial Gear Mfg. Co., 232 U.S. App. D.C. 418, 723 F.2d 944, 949 & n.7 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (consent decree no basis for issue preclusion because no judicial determination of questions of law or fact).

public at the district court." The government has claimed that [**26] there are no "determinative" documents or materials required to be submitted in this case.

Although the Government's determinations in prosecuting an antitrust case are entitled to considerable deference, see Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1461, at least one court has decided that the Government's conclusion that there are no determinative documents is subject to independent judicial review, and that disclosure of documents the court deems determinative [*541] may be ordered. See United States v. Central Contracting Co., 531 F. Supp. 133 \(E.D. Va. 1982\).

Plaintiffs contend that the Settlement Memorandum and associated materials provided to Defendants in advance of filing and expressly referenced in the Settlement Memorandum were determinative documents and should be made public. They argue that the Settlement Memorandum is a determinative document because it contributed to the Defendants' decision to enter into a consent decree.

Plaintiffs rely primarily on the Central Contracting cases, in which the district court held that determinative documents are those "materials and documents that substantially contribute to the determination (by the government) to proceed by [**27] consent decree." 537 F. Supp. at 577. In applying this standard, the Central Contracting court compelled the Government to disclose a letter from one of the defendants in the case and a plea agreement in a prior criminal prosecution of the same defendant. Id. at 576-78. The letter related information concerning the defendant's financial circumstances and referred to terms on which the defendant would be willing to settle. The plea agreement apparently included a stipulation that the defendant would accept a civil consent decree very much like that proposed in the civil case before the Central Contracting court.

The Settlement Memorandum Plaintiffs seek is unlike the documents considered "determinative" by the Central Contracting court. The documents in Central Contracting were non-evidentiary documents prepared by sources external to the DOJ that did not relate directly to the strength of the Government's case on the merits, but nonetheless bore heavily on the Government's determination to proceed by consent decree and on the shape of the relief itself. Here, the Settlement Memorandum is a document related directly to the merits of the case and created internally [**28] by the DOJ. It has been represented that it organizes the Government's evidence and legal theory for the purpose of facilitating a consent decree, which the Government already believed would be in the public interest. It did not "determine" the Government's decision to enter into a consent decree or the shape of the proposed relief, any more than the individual elements of evidence it contained determined the relief. It was, instead, the result of the internal effort of DOJ to organize its evidence for the purpose of evaluating its case and presenting it to Defendants in settlement negotiations.

Moreover, Central Contracting's broad definition of "determinative documents" may conflict with Congress's intent to maintain the viability of consent decrees as a means of resolving antitrust cases. HN13 In enacting the Tunney Act, Congress recognized the "high rate of settlement in public antitrust cases" and wished to "encourage[] settlement by consent decrees as part of the legal policies expressed in the antitrust laws." H.R. Rep. 93-1463 at 6. It wanted to remedy abuses in the consent decree process by focussing judicial and public scrutiny on "the Justice Department's decision to enter [**29] into a proposal for a consent decree," id. at 7, but not at the expense of eliminating the decree as a practicable means of resolving antitrust matters. The purpose of the competitive impact statement, the public comment procedures, and the requirement that a defendant reveal lobbying contacts with the government (15 U.S.C. 16\(g\)), are "to enable a court to determine whether a proposed consent decree is in the 'public interest'" id. at 21, not to evaluate the strength of the Government's case.

Plaintiffs' expansive interpretation of "determinative document" is inconsistent with the Tunney Act's limited purpose of ascertaining whether a proposed consent decree is within the scope of the public interest. Under the Tunney Act, "the court is only authorized to review the decree itself," and is "not empowered to review the actions or behavior of the Department of Justice." Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1459. Moreover, HN14 the Government's judgments in a Tunney Act proceeding are entitled to deference. Id. at 1461.

The legislative history of the Tunney Act gives some support to a narrower reading of "determinative document" than that proposed by Plaintiffs. Congress enacted the [*542] Tunney [**30] Act partly in response to consent decrees entered in three cases involving the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation (ITT). These cases challenged three ITT acquisitions, including that of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. The consent decrees permitted ITT to retain Hartford. Subsequent Congressional hearings revealed that the Antitrust Division had employed Richard J. Ramsden, a financial consultant, to prepare a report analyzing the economic consequences of ITT's possible divestiture of Hartford. Ramsden concluded that requiring ITT to divest Hartford would have adverse consequences on ITT and on the stock market generally. Based in part on the Ramsden Report, the Department concluded that the need for divestiture of Hartford was outweighed by the divestiture's projected adverse effects on the economy.

The Ramsden Report was cited by the Act's chief sponsor as exemplifying a "determinative document." During the Senate debate on the determinative documents provision, Senator Tunney expressly stated: "I am thinking here of the so-called Ramsden memorandum which was important in the ITT case." 119 Cong. Rec. 24,605 (1973).

HN15 [↑] Although "determinative documents" are not [**31] necessarily limited to recommendations prepared by outside consultants, the events that led Congress to enact the "determinative document" provisions support the conclusion that Congress was more concerned with exposing external influences on the consent decree process than it was with documents, such as the Settlement Memorandum, reflecting the Government's internal evaluation of its evidence, even when that internal evaluation is undertaken to persuade defendants to enter into a consent decree.

For the reasons set forth above, the Settlement Memorandum and the underlying materials will not be disclosed as determinative documents.

B. Plaintiffs Will Not Be Permitted to Review the Settlement Memorandum Under 15 U.S.C. § 16\(f\)\(3\)

Plaintiffs also argue that the Court should order production of the Settlement Memorandum pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 16\(e\)\(2\) and 16\(f\)\(3\). HN16 [↑] Section 16\(e\)\(2\) provides that, in making the Tunney Act public interest determination, the Court may consider "the impact of entry of such judgment upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations . . . including consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from [**32] a determination of the issues at trial." HN17 [↑] Section 16\(f\)\(3\) provides that, in making the public interest determination, the Court may "authorize full or limited participation . . . by interested persons . . . including . . . examination of witnesses or documentary materials, or participation . . . as the court may deem appropriate."

Plaintiffs claim that, because they are "individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint" within section 16\(e\)\(2\), they should be granted a right to "examination of documentary materials" under section 16\(f\).

HN18 [↑] While the Court may consider the interests of "individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint," that consideration is limited to "the impact of entry of such judgment upon . . . [those] individuals . . ." 15 U.S.C. 16\(e\)\(2\). Plaintiffs' primary asserted interests in obtaining the Settlement Memorandum are to facilitate their own discovery efforts and to assist the Court in determining whether the decree is in the public interest by allowing Plaintiffs to provide more detailed comments on the decree's effects.

Plaintiffs contend that it would be inefficient to require them [**33] to "reinvent the wheel" by duplicating the Government's investigation through private discovery. They also contend that they should have access to the Settlement Memorandum as a "road map" for their private case. However, the Tunney Act's purpose is to expose consent decrees to greater public scrutiny, not to facilitate discovery in private antitrust suits. See SEC v. Everest Management Corp., 475 F.2d at 1239 (intervention not aimed at assisting private plaintiffs who seek to avoid duplication of agency's investigative efforts).

Plaintiffs rely on a portion of the Tunney Act's legislative history that suggests that a court may conclude in particular cases that it [*543] is appropriate to "condition approval of the consent decree on the Antitrust Division's making available information and evidence obtained by the government to potential, private plaintiffs which will assist in the prosecution of their claims." S. Rep. No. 93-298 at 6-7; accord H.R. Rep. No. 93-1463 at 8. However, had Congress intended that courts routinely condition their approval of consent decrees on such disclosure, it could have required that the Government make its evidentiary files public. Congress imposed [**34] no such requirement, and there is no compelling reason to require the sort of disclosure Plaintiffs seek in this case. Through normal discovery in their private action, Plaintiffs will have access to much of the raw evidence collected by the Government in this case, specifically the transcripts of the testimony of CID deponents employed by the Multidistrict defendants.

In addition, HN19 [↑] Congress has strictly limited disclosure of materials obtained by the Government under the ACPA from Defendants and other targets of CID requests. See In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 929 F. Supp. at 726; 15 U.S.C. 1313\(c\)\(3\).<sup>5</sup> Although the Tunney Act was enacted after the ACPA's confidentiality provisions, the Act does not purport to invalidate them and make the Government's files open to broad disclosure.

[**35] Moreover, the information incorporated in the Settlement Memorandum appears to be protected from disclosure by a variety of statutory, contractual and common law confidentiality provisions and privileges. For example, HN20 [↑] information that the DOJ obtained from the SEC remains confidential. See 17 C.F.R. 230.122; 17 C.F.R. 240.0-4; 44 U.S.C. 3510\(b\); Shell Oil Co. v. Department of Energy, 477 F. Supp. 413, 420 (D. Del. 1979) ("Data immune from disclosure in the hands of a federal agency acquiring data retains that protection in the hands of a receiving agency after an inter-agency transfer.").

Moreover, the Government assured all of those whose CID depositions or other confidential disclosures were to be included in the Memorandum that the information would be used for no purpose other than settlement negotiations. The Government further assured the parties that access to the Settlement Memorandum would be strictly limited to a few individuals, none of whom were permitted to keep or copy any part of that document. Each of the individuals to whom the Settlement Memorandum was disclosed agreed in writing to maintain strict confidentiality of the information. To compel public disclosure [**36] of such carefully controlled information simply because it was previously disclosed exclusively in connection with settlement efforts<sup>6</sup> could seriously compromise the ability of investigative agencies to reach settlements in multi-party proceedings.

Furthermore, much of the Settlement Memorandum is arguably protected by a number of other established privileges. The Settlement Memorandum appears to have served in part as an aid in reviewing and making a decision on the Government's [**37] enforcement options, and thus falls within the governmental deliberative process privilege. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 150-52 & n.19, 44 L. Ed. 2d 29, 95 S. Ct. 1504 \(1975\); Access Reports v. Dept. of Justice, 288 U.S. App. D.C. 319, 926 F.2d 1192, 1196 (D.C. Cir. 1991); Weissman v. Fruchtman, No. 83 Civ. 8958, 1986 WL 15669, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 31, 1986) (quoting Mobil Oil Corp. v. Dept. of Energy, 102 F.R.D. 1, 5 (N.D.N.Y. 1983)). Further, since the Settlement [*544] Memorandum was prepared for the express purpose of negotiating a settlement, it is arguably protected by the pro-settlement policy embodied in Fed. R. Evid. 408, which renders statements made in the course of settlement negotiations inadmissible. Cf. Bottaro v. Hatton Associates, 96 F.R.D. 158, 159-60 (E.D.N.Y. 1982) (denying discovery of settlement agreement, inadmissible in evidence under Fed. R. Evid. 408, in absence of particularized showing of likelihood that disclosure will lead to discovery of admissible evidence); accord, e.g., Weissman v Fruchtman, 1986 WL 15669 at *20 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 31, 1986). Finally, because the Settlement Memorandum is part of the <sup>5</sup> This court ruled in the companion Multidistrict action that the CID materials (which are presumably referenced in the Settlement Memorandum) are not protected by a privilege that Defendants in that action may assert. In re Nasdaq, 929 F. Supp. at 725-26. However, this does not mean that the Government can be compelled to disclose the materials in this action, since 15 U.S.C. § 1313\(c\)\(3\) expressly prohibits the Government from disclosing such documents without permission from the targets. Id. at 725.

<sup>6</sup> This Court notes with some dismay the fact that the existence, and perhaps some of the allegedly confidential contents, of the Settlement Memorandum were apparently shared with members of the press. See, e.g., Scot J. Paltrow, "Nasdaq Dealers Mull Next Move in Light of U.S. Probe Evidence," The Los Angeles Times, June 7, 1996, at B4 (Washington Edition). However, since it is not possible to identify the parties responsible for this disclosure, the parties cannot be held to have waived the confidentiality of the documents.

Government's investigative [**38] files, it may be protected by the law enforcement investigative privilege while the investigation is still pending and for a "reasonable" time thereafter. See Raphael v. Aetna Cas. and Sur. Co., 744 F. Supp. 71, 74 (S.D.N.Y. 1990).

Plaintiffs argue that any privilege the Settlement Memorandum may have enjoyed was waived by the Government when it shared the Memorandum with adverse parties. See Center for Auto Safety v. Dept. of Justice, 576 F. Supp. 739, 747-49 (D.D.C. 1983) (under Freedom of Information Act, arguably deliberative Government documents, once disclosed in negotiations with the defendants, were no longer protected by FOIA's "deliberative process" exception). However, in this case, unlike Center for Auto Safety, the disclosure of the protected document was expressly conditioned on the preservation of privileges and confidentiality.

In addition, routine disclosure of the materials Plaintiffs seek would deter future defendants from entering into negotiated settlements with the Government, and, perhaps, from cooperating in investigations that are likely to lead to such negotiations. See *United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. at l**391 151* (rejecting position that would, "as a practical matter [eliminate the consent decree] as an antitrust enforcement tool, despite Congress' directive that it be preserved"). The cost to antitrust enforcement, particularly in an era of declining government resources, could be substantial. Most of the Government's civil antitrust cases are now settled rather than tried. If more cases are required to be litigated because the substance of settlement negotiations are discoverable, fewer of them can be brought.

Finally, Plaintiffs are not foreclosed from seeking discovery of the evidence underlying the Settlement Memorandum in their private litigation. Although they may not be able to obtain the "road map" the Memorandum itself would provide, they do have access to the information collected by the DOJ.<sup>7</sup>

[**40] With regard to Plaintiffs' assertion that disclosure is necessary to evaluate the adequacy of the proposed relief, the Court will be able to assess the provisions of the proposed order without giving Plaintiffs access to the Settlement Memorandum. The Competitive Impact Statement (the "CIS") gives the Plaintiffs, the Court, and the public detailed and specific information concerning the conduct uncovered by the DOJ in its investigation. While the CIS does not disclose specific names and dates and evidentiary details, such information is unnecessary to a meaningful evaluation of the decree. The CIS and the complaint provide sufficient information to enable the Court to determine whether the proposed order adequately remedies the violations uncovered and alleged, and thus whether entry of the proposed order is within the "reaches of the public interest." See Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1460 (court must look exclusively to allegations in complaint to determine whether remedies provided are adequate).

Plaintiffs argue that the Settlement Memorandum and underlying evidence should be disclosed because of the possibility that telephone monitoring will be inadequate to remedy the alleged collusion [**41] of the Defendants, since Defendants could disseminate and enforce the allegedly illegal quoting convention through other means of communication. Such conjecture does not constitute an adequate basis for granting Plaintiffs broad access [*545] to the Government's files. First, the CIS gives sufficient detail about the way in which the conspiracy has operated to obviate the need for reviewing the Settlement Memorandum. Moreover, Plaintiffs do not need to examine the Settlement Memorandum to make their argument that audio-taping of telephone conversations cannot guarantee that Defendants will not fix prices through other means.

Plaintiffs also argue that the Court needs a full evidentiary record to evaluate the adequacy of the decree, because it fails to impose on Defendants certain "quoting rules" proposed by the SEC. The CIS explains the DOJ's reasons for not insisting that the Defendant implement those rules as a condition of settlement. These reasons include the complexity involved in requiring less than all industry participants to implement the rules, fairness concerns and the pendency of the rules before the SEC. Moreover, since the Government's complaint was filed, the SEC has enacted [**42] the "quoting rules" that the DOJ supported (see 61 Fed. Reg. 48,290 (Sept. 12, 1996)), thereby mooting this issue.

---

<sup>7</sup> Indeed, in an opinion issued today in the companion Multidistrict Action, this Court grants Plaintiffs' motion for discovery of the CID deposition transcripts in the control of the Multidistrict Defendants.

III. The Court Will Consider the Plaintiffs' Objections to the Consent Decree In Making Its Public Interest Determination

Under the terms of the proposed consent decree, the Defendants will tape record and monitor not less than 3.5 percent of their Nasdaq trader telephone conversations (up to a maximum of 70 hours per week). Section IV(C)(6) of the consent decree contains a protective order providing that tapes made pursuant to the decree are neither discoverable nor admissible in private civil actions.

Although the Court reserves decision until the time at which it makes its final public interest determination pursuant to the Tunney Act, the proposed prospective "protective order" raises serious concerns about the extent to which parties may use the consent decree as a mechanism to cloak evidence that would ordinarily be accessible to future litigants. See Olympic Refining Company v. Carter, 332 F.2d 260, 265 (9th Cir. 1964) ("[HN21] A consenting defendant in a Government antitrust suit gains whatever benefit there may be in accepting the terms of [**43] the consent decree rather than risking a more onerous decree entered after litigation. A consenting defendant also benefits from the saving in litigation expense which is made possible by a consent decree. But neither in the express nor implied terms of the statutes or rules is there any indication that a consenting defendant could gain the additional benefit of holding under seal, or stricture of nondisclosure, for an indefinite time, information which would otherwise be available to the public or at least to other litigants who had need of it").

The parties will be permitted to file supplemental briefs on the legal permissibility and the policy implications of this prospective protective order. The Court will consider these briefs in the context of other materials made available to it in the course of the Tunney Act proceedings.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, Plaintiffs' motion to intervene in this action is hereby granted for the limited purposes of moving to compel disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum (and materials referenced therein), objecting to the prospective protective order in the proposed consent decree, and appealing from the decisions [**44] of this Court upon these issues. The Plaintiffs' motion to compel disclosure of the Settlement Memorandum and underlying materials is hereby denied. The parties are hereby granted leave to file supplemental briefs on the issue of the prospective protective order.

It is so ordered.

New York, N. Y.

November 26, 1996

ROBERT W. SWEET

U.S.D.J.

345 Benham Ave. v. Madison Square Assocs., L.P.

Superior Court of Connecticut, Judicial District of New Haven, At New Haven

November 27, 1996, Decided ; December 2, 1996, Filed

CV 96-0385225-S

Reporter

1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 3157 *; 1996 WL 704361

345 Benham Avenue, Inc. v. Madison Square Associates, L.P. et al.

Notice: [*1] THIS DECISION IS UNREPORTED AND MAY BE SUBJECT TO FURTHER APPELLATE REVIEW. COUNSEL IS CAUTIONED TO MAKE AN INDEPENDENT DETERMINATION OF THE STATUS OF THIS CASE.

Disposition: The motion to strike is granted as to first, second, third, fourth, and fifth special defenses, and the motion to strike is granted as to the first and second counterclaims as well.

Core Terms

---

mortgage, special defense, counterclaim, foreclosure, motion to strike, antitrust, judicial district, alleges, defenses, factors, foreclosure action, anti trust law, equitable, Shop, antitrust violation, violates, move to strike, premises, cause of action, unclean hands, unenforceable, predecessor, grocery, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN1[

The function of a motion to strike is to test the legal sufficiency of a pleading. A plaintiff can move to strike a special defense or counterclaim. Conn. Gen. Prac. Book 152(5). A motion to strike admits all facts well pleaded. It does not admit legal conclusions or the truth or accuracy of opinions stated in the pleadings. When ruling on a motion to strike, a court must construe the facts most favorably to the nonmoving party. In ruling on a motion to strike the trial court is limited to considering the grounds specified in the motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN2[

Conn. Gen. Prac. Book 164 defines the parameters of a valid special defense and provides in part that no facts may be proved under either a general or special denial except such as show that a plaintiff's statements of fact are untrue. Facts which are consistent with such statements but show, notwithstanding, that he has no cause of action, must be specially alleged. The purpose of a special defense is to plead facts that are consistent with the allegations of the complaint but demonstrate, nonetheless, that the plaintiff has no cause of action. A cause of action is that single group of facts which is claimed to have brought about an unlawful injury to the plaintiff and which entitles the plaintiff to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Deficiency Judgments

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > General Overview

HN3 [] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 49-1 provides in part that the foreclosure of a mortgage is a bar to any further action upon the mortgage debt, note or obligation against the person or persons who are liable for the payment thereof who are made parties to the foreclosure. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 49-28 provides in part that all other proceedings for the collection of a debt shall be stayed during the pendency of the foreclosure suit, and, if a deficiency judgment is finally rendered therein, the other proceedings shall forthwith abate.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > Coercion & Duress

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > Failure of Consideration

Real Property Law > Financing > Mortgages & Other Security Instruments > Deed in Lieu of Foreclosure

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Defenses

Real Property Law > Financing > Mortgages & Other Security Instruments > Usury

HN4 [] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Because a mortgage foreclosure action is an equitable proceeding, a trial court may consider all relevant circumstances to ensure that complete justice is done. A trial court in foreclosure proceedings has discretion, on equitable considerations and principles, to withhold foreclosure or to reduce the amount of the stated indebtedness. Trial courts permit defendants to raise several additional equitable defenses in foreclosure actions, including equitable estoppel, Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, laches, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, tender of deed in lieu of foreclosure, refusal to agree to a favorable sale to a third party, usury, unconscionability of interest rate, duress, coercion, material alteration, and lack of consideration. Special defenses to foreclosure are proper only when they attack the making, validity, or enforcement of the note or mortgage, rather than some act or procedure of the mortgagee. Courts are not receptive to foreclosure defendants who assert defenses and counterclaims based on factors outside of the note or mortgage.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Perfections & Priorities > Liens > Mechanics' Liens

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > General Overview

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Unclean Hands

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > General Overview

HN5 Liens, Mechanics' Liens

In a foreclosure action, the defense of unclean hands is properly stricken where the allegations of unclean hands do not address the making, validity, or enforcement of a note or mortgage, or where the allegations address a behavior of the mortgagee, or factors outside of the note or mortgage. Furthermore, the defense of unclean hands to a mortgage foreclosure is generally disallowed in Connecticut.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN6 Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act is a valid defense in a foreclosure action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

When construing Connecticut antitrust laws, Connecticut courts must look to interpretations by federal courts of the federal antitrust laws. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-44b. A fundamental requirement of a viable antitrust complaint is the allegation of facts that a plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury, and thus has standing to assert an antitrust claim. An antitrust injury is an injury of the type the anti-trust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendant's acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anti-competitive effect either of the violation or of the anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation. It should be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Real Property Law > Landlord & Tenant > Lease Agreements > Standing

HN8[] Private Actions, Standing

An owner and lessor of commercial property that is leased to a grocery store does not have standing to charge a competing grocery store with violating the antitrust laws because it is not a consumer, customer, competitor, or participant in the relevant market or otherwise inextricably intertwined with any such entity. Its injury is not sufficiently linked to the pro-competitive policy of the antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN9[] Pleadings, Crossclaims

Conn. Gen. Prac. Book 116 provides in part, in any action for legal or relief, any defendant may file counterclaims against any plaintiff provided that each such counterclaim arises out of the transaction that is the subject of the plaintiff's complaint. A counterclaim is a cause of action existing in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff and on which the defendant might have secured affirmative relief had he sued the plaintiff in a separate action. A counterclaim must arise out of the transaction which is the subject of the plaintiff's complaint. When determining whether claims made in the complaint and the counterclaim arise out of the same transaction, a court must consider whether a substantial duplication of effort would result if each claim was tried separately.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA) is the basis for a claim for damages and so can be properly pleaded as a counterclaim. However, the CUTPA-based counterclaim must still arise from the same transaction that gives rise to the complaint.

Judges: Donald W. Celotto, Judge Trial Referee.

Opinion by: Donald W. Celotto

Opinion

---

Memorandum of Decision

On June 6, 1996, the plaintiff, 345 Benham Avenue, Inc., (Benham), filed a two-count amended complaint against the defendants, Madison Square Associates Limited Partnership (Madison); Amity Road Shopping Center, Inc.; Robert Fers, Incorporated, a/k/a The Robert S. Fers Incorporated; Pad Two Associates, Limited Partnership; Connecticut Bank of Commerce; Superior Products Distributors, Inc.; Town of Woodbridge; Ballou Painting and Restoration, Inc. a/k/a Ballou Painting & Restoration, Inc.; Amity Card and Gift, LLC; A. Secondino & Son, Inc.; and, Charles Farricelli; seeking a judgment of strict foreclosure of certain premises. The defendants did not object to the plaintiff's request for leave to amend the complaint, therefore, [*2] the amended complaint is the operative complaint.<sup>1</sup> According to the facts alleged in the complaint, by a mortgage note dated December 21, 1993, Madison promised to pay People's Bank, or other holder of the note, the principal sum of $ 22,000,000.00 with interest thereon as provided in the note. To secure the note, Madison executed a mortgage deed and security agreement, dated December 21, 1993, whereby it mortgaged to People's Bank a parcel of land known as Amity Shopping Center. As further security for the note, Madison executed a conditional assignment of leases and rentals in favor of People's Bank, dated December 21, 1993. The mortgage and assignment of leases were recorded in the appropriate municipal land records. On February 23, 1996, the note, mortgage and assignment of leases and rentals were assigned to the plaintiff.

Count one alleges that Madison defaulted on the note and mortgage and, despite Benham's demand for payment, there is now due [*3] and owing the principal sum of $ 20,748,291.73, plus interest and late charges.<sup>2</sup>

Count two incorporates the allegations of count one relating to the execution of the note and mortgage and alleges that, as additional security for the note, Madison granted to People's Bank a security interest in all personal property used, owned and operated in connection with the mortgaged premises. Count two further alleges that Madison failed and neglected to pay periodic installments due under the note and that Benham has exercised its option to declare the entire principal balance and accrued interest due and payable in full.

Benham seeks a judgment of strict foreclosure of the mortgage or foreclosure by sale; immediate possession of the mortgaged premises; appointment of a receiver to collect rents [*4] and profits accruing from the mortgaged premises; the costs and expenses of this action, including reasonable attorneys fees; foreclosure of the security interest; and any other equitable relief that may pertain.

On July 12, 1996, Madison filed an answer, five special defenses and a three-count counterclaim.

On July 26, 1996, Benham filed a motion to strike and a memorandum in support thereof. Benham moves to strike Madison's first, second, third, fourth, and fifth special defenses, and Madison's first and second counterclaims. On August 7, 1996, Madison filed a memorandum in opposition to Benham's motion to strike. This motion to strike is presently before the court.

HN1[] The function of a motion to strike "is to test the legal sufficiency of a pleading." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) RK Constructors, Inc. v. Fusco Corp., 231 Conn. 381, 384, 650 A.2d 153 (1994); Practice Book 152. "[A] plaintiff can [move to strike] a special defense or counterclaim." Nowak v. Nowak, 175 Conn. 112, 116, 394 A.2d 716 (1978); Practice Book 152(5).

A motion to strike "admits all facts well pleaded; it does not admit legal conclusions or the truth or accuracy of opinions [*5] stated in the pleadings." (Emphasis omitted.) Mingachos v. CBS, Inc., 196 Conn. 91, 108, 491 A.2d 368 (1985). When ruling on a motion to strike, the court must construe the facts most favorably to the nonmoving party. Novametrix Medical Systems, Inc. v. The BOC Group, Inc., 224 Conn. 210, 215, 618 A.2d 25 (1992). "In ruling on a motion to strike the trial court is limited to considering the grounds specified in the motion." Meredith v. Police Commission, 182 Conn. 138, 140, 438 A.2d 27 \(1980\).

<sup>1</sup> The original complaint was filed on March 28, 1996.

<sup>2</sup> Count one also identifies the interests of various entities, including the named defendants, whose interests in the mortgaged premises are either prior in right or subsequent in right to the plaintiff's interests.

A. Defendant's First Special Defense

The first special defense claims that "the second count of the plaintiff's complaint is stayed by operation of law, and in particular, by Sections 49-1 and 49-28 of the Connecticut General Statutes as made and provided." Benham moves to strike Madison's first special defense on the ground that the alleged statutory stay is not a proper defense under Practice Book 164. Madison responds that the first special defense is proper under Practice Book 164.

HN2[] Practice Book 164 defines the parameters of a valid special defense and provides in pertinent part that "no facts may be proved under either a general or special denial except such as [*6] show that the plaintiff's statements of fact are untrue. Facts which are consistent with such statements but show, notwithstanding, that he has no cause of action, must be specially alleged . . ." "The purpose of a special defense is to plead facts that are consistent with the allegations of the complaint but demonstrate, nonetheless, that the plaintiff has no cause of action." Grant v. Bassman, 221 Conn. 465, 472-73, 604 A.2d 814 \(1992\). "A cause of action is that single group of facts which is claimed to have brought about an unlawful injury to the plaintiff and which entitles the plaintiff to relief . . ." Guriacci v. Mayer, 218 Conn. 531, 546-47, 590 A.2d 914 \(1991\).

HN3[] General Statutes 49-1 provides in pertinent part that "the foreclosure of a mortgage is a bar to any further action upon the mortgage debt, note or obligation against the person or persons who are liable for the payment thereof who are made parties to the foreclosure . . ." General Statutes 49-28 provides in pertinent part that "all other proceedings for the collection of a debt shall be stayed during the pendency of the foreclosure suit, and, if a deficiency judgment is finally rendered therein, the [*7] other proceedings shall forthwith abate."

The second special defense asserts that count two is stayed by operation of law, it does not plead facts which show that the plaintiff has no cause of action. Therefore, Benham's motion to strike is granted as to Madison's first special defense.

B. Defendant's Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Special Defenses

Benham moves to strike the second, third, fourth and fifth special defenses on two grounds. First, Benham claims that these special defenses are legally insufficient because they are not related to the making, validity, or enforcement of the note or mortgage, and they rely entirely on factors outside the note and mortgage. Madison responds that the second, third, fourth, and fifth special defenses do attack the making, validity, and enforcement of the note or mortgage, and therefore, are valid special defenses. In addition, Benham moves to strike on the ground that Madison lacks standing to assert these defenses.

1. Proper Foreclosure Defenses

"At common law, the only defenses to an action of [foreclosure] . . . would have been payment, discharge, release or satisfaction; . . . or, if there had never been a valid lien." [*8] (Internal citation omitted.) Petterson v. Weinstock, 106 Conn. 436, 441, 138 A. 433 \(1927\). In Petterson v. Weinstock, the Supreme Court recognized accident, mistake, and fraud as additional defenses available in a foreclosure action and noted that the recognition of these additional defenses to foreclosure represented "a fine example of the triumph of equitable principles over the arbitrary and unjust dogmas of the common law." Petterson v. Weinstock, supra, 106 Conn. 442. HN4[] "Because a mortgage foreclosure action is an equitable proceeding, the trial court may consider all relevant circumstances to ensure that complete justice is done." Reynolds v. Ramos, 188 Conn. 316, 320, 449 A.2d 182 \(1982\). "[A] trial court in foreclosure proceedings has discretion, on equitable considerations and principles, to withhold foreclosure or to reduce the amount of the stated indebtedness." Hamm v. Taylor, 180 Conn. 491, 497, 429 A.2d 946 \(1980\).

Accordingly, trial courts have permitted defendants to raise several additional equitable defenses in foreclosure actions, including "equitable estoppel, CUTPA, laches, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair [*9] dealing, tender of deed in lieu of foreclosure, refusal to agree to a favorable sale to a third party, usury, unconscionability of interest rate, duress, coercion, material alteration, and lack of consideration." Teachers Insurance v. Broad and Hanrahan, Superior Court, judicial district of Stamford-Norwalk at Stamford, 1995 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1896, Docket No. 132304 (June 28, 1995) (Hickey, J.); Berkeley Federal Bank & Trust v. Phillips, Superior Court, judicial district of Fairfield at Bridgeport, 1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 176, Docket No. 317957 (January 23, 1996) (West, J.).

Nonetheless, there are limits as to which equitable defenses and counterclaims may be raised in a foreclosure action. Special defenses to foreclosure "are proper only when they attack the making, validity, or enforcement of the note or mortgage, rather than some act or procedure of the mortgagee." National Mortgage Co. v. McMahon, Superior Court, judicial district of New Haven at New Haven, 1994 Conn. Super. LEXIS 377, Docket No. 349246 (February 18, 1994) (Celotto, J.); Berkeley Federal Bank & Trust v. Phillips, supra. "Courts have not been receptive to foreclosure defendants who have [*10] asserted defenses and counterclaims based on factors outside of the note or mortgage." Shoreline Bank & Trust v. Leninski, Superior Court, judicial district of New Haven at New Haven, 1993 Conn. Super. LEXIS 670, Docket No. 335561, 8 CONN. L. RPTR. 522 (March 19, 1993) (Celotto, J.). "The rationale behind this is that counterclaims and special defenses which are not limited to the making, validity or enforcement of the note or mortgage fail to assert any connection with the subject matter of the foreclosure action and as such do not arise out of the same transaction as the foreclosure action." National Mortgage v. McMahon, supra; Dime Savings Bank v. Albir, Superior Court, judicial district of Stamford-Norwalk, 1995 Conn. Super. LEXIS 369, Docket No. 132582 (February 7, 1995) (D'Andrea, J.).

a. Defendant's Second Special Defense

The second special defense claims that "the transaction referenced in the plaintiff's complaint is incidental to the transaction which violates the antitrust provision of Connecticut law, as made and provided, and is unenforceable."

The second special defense asserts that the note and mortgage are unenforceable because they are [*11] incidental to a transaction which violates Connecticut antitrust law. Essentially, Madison is claiming that the note and mortgage are unenforceable because they are related to a separate agreement which allegedly violates Connecticut antitrust law. Benham counters that this separate agreement, to which the note and mortgage are allegedly incidental, is a certain "Restriction Agreement," which was entered into on May 13, 1992 by Madison and the Stop & Shop Companies. (Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiff's Motion to Strike, p. 6.)

In Bristol Savings Bank v. Miller, Superior Court, judicial district of Hartford-New Britain at Hartford, 1992 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2981, Docket No. 512558 (October 19, 1992) (Aurigemma, J.), Miller, a foreclosure defendant, filed two special defenses based upon interrelated loans and business dealings between the parties. The court struck Miller's special defenses because they did "not address the making, validity or enforcement of the notes and mortgages which are the subject of the complaint. Rather they allege the nonperformance, breach, and misrepresentation with respect to agreements and dealings which are separate from the notes and mortgages [*12] referred to in the complaint." Id.

The motion to strike is granted as to the second special defense because the second special defense does not attack the making, validity, or enforcement of the note or mortgage, and because it is based on an agreement separate from, and outside of the note or mortgage. See Bristol Savings Bank v. Miller, supra; National Mortgage Co. v. McMahon, supra, ("special defenses to foreclosure are proper only when they attack the making, validity or enforcement of the note or mortgage, rather than some act or procedure of the mortgagee."); Shoreline Bank & Trust v. Leninski, supra, ("courts have not been receptive to foreclosure defendants who have asserted defenses and counterclaims based on factors outside of the note or mortgage.").

b. Defendant's Third Special Defense

The third special defense states that "the plaintiff is a wholly-owned subsidiary of People's Bank, which is the plaintiff's predecessor in regard to the instruments referenced in its complaint. The plaintiff's predecessor, People's Bank, knowingly entered into the transactions referenced in its complaint, which are in furtherance of a restraint of trade [*13] in favor of the Stop & Shop Companies, and accordingly are unenforceable and against the antitrust provisions of the Connecticut General Statutes as made and provided."

The third special defense claims that the note and mortgage are unenforceable because the plaintiff's predecessor participated in separate activities that violate Connecticut antitrust law. The motion to strike the third special defense is granted for the same reasons set forth with respect to the second special defense.

c. Defendant's Fourth Special Defense

The fourth special defense states that "for the reasons set forth in the Second and Third Special Defenses, the plaintiff and its predecessor lack clean hands in which to maintain said foreclosure."

This court has held that HN5 the defense of unclean hands is properly stricken where the allegations of unclean hands do not address the making, validity or enforcement of the note or mortgage, or where the allegations address a behavior of the mortgagee, or factors outside of the note or mortgage. National Mortgage Co. v. McMahon, supra; see also Great Country Bank v. Kiely, Superior Court, judicial district of Ansonia-Milford at Milford, 1995 [*141] Conn. Super. LEXIS 2921, Docket No. 047460 (October 19, 1995) (Curran, J.). Furthermore, "the defense of unclean hands to a mortgage foreclosure has generally been disallowed in this state." Mechanics & Farmers Savings Bank, FSB v. Delco Development Co., 43 Conn. Supp. 408, 420, 656 A.2d 1075, aff'd, 232 Conn. 594, 656 A.2d 1034 (1995); Berkeley Federal Bank & Trust v. Phillips, Superior Court, judicial district of Fairfield at Bridgeport, 1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 176, Docket No. 317957 (January 23, 1996) (West, J.).

In the present case, the allegations of unclean hands are based on the alleged antitrust violations. These alleged violations are separate from, and outside of, the note and mortgage. The defense of unclean hands does not address the making, validity or enforcement of the note or mortgage itself, instead, it relies on factors outside of the note or mortgage. Therefore, the motion to strike the fourth special defense is granted. See National Mortgage Co. v. McMahon, supra; Great Country Bank v. Kiely, supra.

d. Defendant's Fifth Special Defense

The fifth special defense states that "for the reasons set forth in the Second and Third Special [*15] Defenses, the plaintiff and its predecessor are guilty of violating the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act ('CUTPA') C.G.S. 42-110a, et seq., as made and provided."

HN6 CUTPA is a valid defense in a foreclosure action. First Federal Savings and Loan, Rochester v. Nielsen, Superior Court, judicial district of New Haven at New Haven, 1992 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2721, Docket No. 326502 (September 16, 1992) (Celotto, J.); Hans L. Levi, Inc. v. Kovacs, Superior Court, judicial district of Litchfield, 1991 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2569, Docket No. 056101, 5 CONN. L. RPTR. 260 (November 4, 1991) (Pickett, J.). However, the alleged CUTPA violation must still go to the making, validity or enforcement of the note or mortgage. Berkeley Federal Bank & Trust v. Rotko, Superior Court, judicial district of Fairfield at Bridgeport, 1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 249, Docket No. 318648 (January 25, 1996) (West, J.).

In the present case, Madison's CUTPA defense arises out of Benham's alleged antitrust violations. The fifth special defense does not address the making, validity, or enforcement of the note or mortgage; rather, it is premised on factors outside of the note and mortgage. Accordingly, [*16] the motion to strike fifth special defense is granted.

2. Standing

Benham's second ground for moving to strike Madison's second, third, fourth and fifth special defenses is that Madison lacks standing to assert these antitrust based special defenses. In the present case, however, this court need not determine whether Madison has standing to assert its antitrust based special defenses and counterclaims because Madison's second, third, fourth, and fifth special defenses and first and second counterclaims fail because they do not attack the making, validity, or enforcement of the note or mortgage.

HN7 When construing Connecticut antitrust laws, Connecticut courts must look to interpretations by federal courts of the federal antitrust laws. General Statutes 35-44b; Elida, Inc. v. Harmor Realty Corp., 177 Conn. 218, 226-27, 413 A.2d 1226 (1979). "A fundamental requirement of a viable antitrust complaint is the allegation of facts that the plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury, and thus has standing to assert an antitrust claim." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Waterford Parkade, Inc. v. Picardi, Superior Court, judicial district of *Hartford-New Britain at Hartford, [*17] 1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 679*, Docket No. 539883 (March 11, 1996) (Aurigemma, J.). An antitrust injury is an "injury of the type the anti-trust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendant's acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anti-competitive effect either of the violation or of the anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 125, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969). In Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535-45, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983), the Supreme Court expressly identified the factors to be used in determining whether a party has standing to raise federal antitrust claims. These factors include "(1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; [*18] (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations. Southaven Land Co., Inc. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1085 (6th Cir. 1983), citing Associated General Contractors, supra. In Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 483-84, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982), the Supreme Court held that "although [the plaintiff] was not a competitor of the conspirators, the injury [plaintiff] suffered was inextricably intertwined with the conspirators sought to inflict on [the relevant] market."

In Waterford Parkade, Inc. v. Picardi, supra, Judge Aurigemma applied the factors set forth in Southaven and McCready, and after an extensive review of the pertinent federal case law, held that a land developer did not have antitrust standing to sue a supermarket for alleged antitrust violations. In Southaven Land Co., Inc. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., supra, 715 F.2d 1079, the court held that HN8 an owner and lessor of [*19] commercial property (Southhaven) leased to a grocery store did not have standing to charge a competing grocery store with violating the antitrust laws. The court held that Southaven did not have antitrust standing because "[it] is not a consumer, customer, competitor or participant in the relevant market or otherwise inextricably intertwined with any such entity. Its injury is not sufficiently linked to the pro-competitive policy of the antitrust laws." Id. 1087. In Rosenberg v. Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen and Hamilton, 598 F. Supp. 642 (1984), the court held that a land developer (Cherry Pike) did not have antitrust standing despite its claim that the relevant market was not the grocery market, but instead the construction market, because Cherry Pike's alleged injuries as a builder are "no more than a tangential by-product of an antitrust violation in the grocery market." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id. 645.

Conversely, in Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores, 67 F.3d 591 (7th Cir. 1995), the court held that a shopping mall owner (Serfecz) did have standing to bring an antitrust action against a grocery store chain because Serfecz had "alleged that the defendants [*20] had conspired to restrain trade and monopolize sales in the retail shopping center market. Here, the district court quite correctly determined that the plaintiffs, who are direct participants in this market, alleged an injury that is sufficiently direct to give them standing" Id. 599.

C. The Defendant's First and Second Counterclaims

Benham moves to strike Madison's counterclaims on two grounds. First, Benham claims that Madison lacks standing to assert these antitrust based counterclaims.<sup>3</sup> Second, Benham claims that these antitrust based counterclaims do not arise out of the transaction which is the subject of Madison's action.

HN9 Practice Book 116 provides in pertinent part, "in any action for legal or equitable relief, any defendant may file counterclaims against any plaintiff . . . provided that each [*21] such counterclaim . . . arises out of the transaction . . . which is the subject of the plaintiff's complaint . . ." "[A] counterclaim is a cause of action existing in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff and on which the defendant might have secured affirmative relief had he sued the plaintiff in a separate action." (Citation omitted.) Wallingford v. Glen Valley Associates, Inc., 190 Conn. 158, 160, 459 A.2d 525 (1983). "[A] counterclaim must arise out of the transaction which is the subject of the plaintiff's complaint." Id. When determining whether claims made in the complaint and the counterclaim arise out of the same transaction, a court must consider whether a substantial duplication of effort would result if each claim was tried separately. Bristol Savings Bank v. Miller, supra; citing Wallingford v. Glen Valley Associates, Inc., supra.

1. Defendant's Counterclaim First Count

Count one of the counterclaim alleges that Madison, People's Bank, and Stop & Shop Companies entered into an agreement whereby Stop & Shop sought to limit business competition and that this agreement violated Connecticut antitrust laws. Count one also alleges [*22] that as a result of this agreement, the note and mortgage are void as against public policy and Madison is entitled to a refund of the money it has paid to People's Bank under the note and mortgage.

Benham's complaint arises out of the December 1993 note and mortgage. The first count of Madison's counterclaim arises out of the alleged May 1992 Restriction Agreement. The first count of the counterclaim alleges antitrust violations on the part of Benham in connection with an agreement which is an entirely separate agreement from the note and mortgage. Accordingly, the motion to strike count one of the counterclaim is granted because it does not arise out of the same transaction that is the subject of Benham's complaint. See Union Trust v. Hamilton Branford LTD., Superior Court, judicial district of New Haven at New Haven, 1993 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2215, Docket No. 325651 (August 27, 1993) (Celotto, J.).

2. Defendant's Counterclaim, Second Count

Count two of the counterclaim incorporates the allegations of count one and alleges that Benham has violated the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act by acting in an immoral, oppressive, unethical, and unscrupulous manner, which [*23] has caused substantial injury to consumers, competitors, and other businessmen.

HN10 CUTPA "is the basis for a claim for damages and so [is] properly . . . pleaded as a counterclaim." GE Capital Mortgage v. Klett, supra. However, the CUTPA-based counterclaim must still arise from the same transaction that gives rise to the complaint. The second count of the counterclaim, like the first count, is premised on a transaction (the Restriction Agreement) which is separate from the transaction (the note and mortgage) which is the basis of Benham's complaint. Accordingly, the motion to strike the second count of the counterclaim is granted because the complaint and counterclaim do not arise out of the same transaction. See Union Trust v. Hamilton Branford LTD., supra.

CONCLUSION

---

<sup>3</sup> Because Madison's counterclaims fail on other grounds, the court need not determine whether Madison has standing to assert antitrust violations. For a discussion on standing see pages 13-16.

Based upon the above reasoning, the motion to strike is granted as to first, second, third, fourth, and fifth special defenses, and the motion to strike is granted as to the first and second counterclaims as well.

Donald W. Celotto, J.T.R.

---

End of Document

Borg-Warner Protective Servs. Corp. v. Guardsmark, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, Covington Division

November 27, 1996, Decided ; November 27, 1996, FILED

CIVIL ACTION NO. 94-169, CIVIL ACTION NO. 95-124

Reporter

946 F. Supp. 495 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18001 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,720

BORG-WARNER PROTECTIVE SERVICES CORP., ET AL, PLAINTIFFS VS. GUARDSMARK, INC., DEFENDANT AND HAROLD I. LLOYD, ET AL, PLAINTIFFS VS. GUARDSMARK, INC., DEFENDANT

Disposition: [**1] Guardsmark's motions for summary judgment (doc. # 193 in 94-169 and doc. # 83 in 95-124) granted on plaintiffs' claims under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the analogous section of the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act, and Kentucky common law; Borg-Warner's motion for summary judgment (doc. # 161 in 94-169) denied; The individual plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment (doc. # 57 in 95-124) denied

Core Terms

---

covenants, employees, security guard, Antitrust, compete, depo, training, restraint of trade, summary judgment, plaintiffs', conspiracy, injunction, contracts, res judicata, noncompetition, enjoined, clauses, courts, guards

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Full Faith & Credit Statutes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Collateral Order Doctrine

HN1 [down arrow] Decisions, Res Judicata

A final, valid determination on the merits is conclusive on the parties and those in privity with them, as to matters that were litigated or should have been litigated, in another action or proceeding involving the same cause of action. Furthermore, a final valid judgment, even if erroneous on either the facts or the law, must be given a binding effect as res judicata or collateral estoppel, in either a federal or state tribunal. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1738 requires that a federal court give the same preclusive effect to the judgment of a state court that would be given in the state in which the judgment was rendered. Only a final judgment is res judicata. Under Tennessee law a judgment is not final and res judicata where an appeal is pending. This is true unless the appeal has been abandoned and is, therefore, considered adjudged. Under the federal rule and the rule of the majority of states, the pendency of an appeal does not suspend the operation of an otherwise final judgment as res judicata or collateral estoppel.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN2** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN3** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a valid claim for violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to establish the following elements: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN4** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The conspiracy required to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is not possible as a matter of law between a corporation and its employees unless those employees have an independent personal stake and stand to benefit from conspiring to restrain trade. It is perfectly plain that an internal agreement to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that § 1 was designed to police. The officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, so agreements among them do not suddenly bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals. For these reasons, officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a § 1 conspiracy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

**HN5** Types of Contracts, Covenants

The Tennessee Supreme Court has adopted a rule of reasonableness with regard to covenants not to compete. Under that rule, Tennessee courts, absent bad faith by the employer, will enforce covenants not to compete to the extent necessary to protect the employer's interests without imposing undue hardship on the employee as long as the public interest is not adversely affected.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN6 [ Types of Contracts, Covenants

In Kentucky an agreement in restraint of trade is reasonable if, on consideration and circumstances of the particular case, the restriction is such only as to afford fair protection to the interests of the covenantee and is not so large as to interfere with the public interests or impose undue hardship on the party restricted.

Counsel: Thomas R. Nienaber, Busald Funk Zevely, PSC, Florence, KY. Thomas L. Henderson, McKnight, Hudson, Lewis & Henderson, Memphis, TN, For Plaintiff.

Harry D. Rankin, Greenebaum Doll & McDonald, Covington, KY. David Wade, Martin, Tate, Morrow & Marston, PC, Memphis, TN, For Defendant.

Judges: WILLIAM O. BERTELSMAN, CHIEF JUDGE

Opinion by: WILLIAM O. BERTELSMAN

Opinion

---

[*496] OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is before the court on cross-motions for summary judgment (docs. # 161 and # 193 in 94-169 and docs. # 57 and # 83 in 95-124). After conducting oral arguments and reviewing supplemental briefs, it is determined that summary judgment should be entered in favor of the defendant on all claims.

BACKGROUND

Guardsmark and Borg-Warner are competitors in the private security guard industry. [**2] The parties agree that there are over 13,000 private security guard firms in this country. Guardsmark is the fifth largest of these, and Borg-Warner is even larger than Guardsmark.

Initially, Guardsmark contracted with the Gap to provide security officers for the Erlanger, Kentucky Gap facility. Guardsmark advertised for and recruited security guard applicants to work at the Gap facility. It required the applicants to complete a 28-page application form, undergo either the MMPI or MMPI-2 psychological test, submit to a drug test, undergo a police background check, submit notarized statements regarding periods of unemployment, and provide character references and fingerprints. In addition, Guardsmark personnel checked neighborhood references, personal references and offered polygraph examinations. Clark depo. at 22-24; see also Bisch depo. at 88-91 and 117-118. Each individual plaintiff admits that he underwent these screening procedures. Fillenwarth depo. at 11, 13-16<sup>1</sup>; Fitch depo. at 14, 16, 18-19, 27-28; Lloyd depo. at 18, 23, 25-26.<sup>2</sup> The plaintiffs vaguely contend that these procedures were not followed 100% of the time, but John Clark, of Guardsmark, testified that these [**3] procedures were followed as to each of the security guards placed at the Gap. Clark depo.

---

<sup>1</sup> Fillenwarth denies that he submitted to a drug screen. Fillenwarth depo. at 16.

<sup>2</sup> Lloyd did not recall whether he took a drug test. Lloyd depo. at 27.

at 22-23. The testimony of the Gap security supervisor, Richard Bisch, supports Clark's statements. Bisch depo. at 89, 94, 116-118.

In addition to recruiting and placing the security guards at the Gap facility, Guardsmark assisted in training each security guard recruit. Guardsmark required each security guard to view videotapes concerning fire safety and other security issues and to take tests regarding the topics covered in the videotapes. Sisson aff. at 3; Clark depo. at 22. Each plaintiff admits that he received this generalized training. Fillenwarth depo. at 18; Fitch depo. at 18-19; Lloyd depo. at 27.

Also, each security guard placed at the Gap underwent an 80-hour on-the-job training program. Bisch depo. at 104-113. This 80-hour specialized training program [**4] consisted [**497] of receiving training on each post at the Gap facility with either a Gap security supervisor or Guardsmark's on-site training officer, Nick Bosse. Sisson aff. at 3; Sheppard depo. at 83-84. It is undisputed that Guardsmark did not charge the Gap for the first two weeks that a new security guard was placed at the Gap so that the new guard could receive this on-site training.

Guardsmark requires each of its employees to enter into a covenant not to compete that states:

Employee hereby agrees that following his (her) termination of employment with GUARDSMARK, whether voluntary or involuntary, for a period of one year thereafter he (she) will not perform or hire others to perform any security services at the site, place or location where he (she) performed security services within the immediate preceding twelve (12) months of his (her) employment with GUARDSMARK.

The contract also provides that Tennessee law governs the interpretation of the contract. Guardsmark uses these form contracts with all of its security guards nationwide.

Ultimately, Borg-Warner obtained the Gap contract from Guardsmark. Consistent with its practice, Borg-Warner sought to hire the Guardsmark [**5] security guards already working at the Gap and promised the guards that it would represent them in the event that Guardsmark attempted to enforce its non-compete clauses. This is a relatively common practice in the security guard industry.

As is its practice, Guardsmark enforced its covenants not to compete. However, Guardsmark also offered each of its Gap security guards employment at another facility.

On May 5, 1994, Guardsmark filed a tort claim against Borg-Warner in the Chancery Court of Shelby County, Tennessee for intentional interference with contractual relations. Guardsmark claimed that Borg-Warner intended to cause Guardsmark employees to breach their contracts with security guards in Seattle, Washington and Birmingham, Alabama.

Shortly thereafter, Borg-Warner filed an action in an Alabama state court seeking to resolve the issues at stake in the Tennessee chancery court. On August 29, 1994, Tennessee Chancellor Neal Small issued a restraining order enjoining Borg-Warner from "taking any action to interfere with Guardsmark's restrictive covenants with its past, present or future employees and from making misrepresentations regarding Guardsmark and its restrictive covenants." [**6] The order also enjoined Borg-Warner from initiating, encouraging or assisting in litigation to challenge Guardsmark's restrictive covenants with its employees.

On September 21, 1994, Guardsmark filed a verified petition to hold Borg-Warner in contempt in Shelby County, Tennessee. Guardsmark based its contempt motion on statements allegedly made to a Guardsmark security guard formerly assigned to the Gap facility in Erlanger, Kentucky. While the contempt motion was pending, Borg-Warner filed this case.

Borg-Warner's initial complaint listed Borg-Warner as the sole plaintiff and included Chancellor Small and the Shelby County Chancery Court as defendants. The complaint alleged claims under the First Amendment, the Supremacy Clause, the Full Faith and Credit Clause, and the Anti-Injunction Act (28 U.S.C. § 1738), and sought only injunctive relief. See doc. 1. In addition to the complaint, Borg-Warner sought a preliminary injunction enjoining Chancellor Small and Guardsmark from enforcing Chancellor Small's injunctions and restraining orders. Doc. # 2 at 1.

Concluding that this court lacks personal jurisdiction over Chancellor Small, the court denied Borg-Warner's motion for a [**7] preliminary injunction. Since that time, Borg-Warner has voluntarily dismissed its claims against Chancellor Small for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Borg-Warner later filed a second amended complaint, adding a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, antitrust claims and supplemental state law claims against Guardsmark. In addition, the second amended complaint added [**498] 100 unnamed plaintiffs that formerly worked for Guardsmark at the Gap.

Ultimately, the court resolved all of Borg-Warner's claims against Guardsmark except its federal and state antitrust claims and its claims under Kentucky common law. In addition, the court dismissed the claims alleged by the 100 "John Doe" plaintiffs. Approximately eleven months after Borg-Warner filed its initial complaint, three former Guardsmark security guards filed a similar action, alleging claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act, the analogous Kentucky Consumer Protection Act, and Kentucky common law.

All plaintiffs have voluntarily dismissed their claims under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the analogous section of the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act. This matter is now before the court on cross-motions for summary judgment on the remaining [**8] claims.

PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS ARE NOT BARRED BY RES JUDICATA

Guardsmark first contends that plaintiffs' claims are barred by res judicata. The Shelby County, Tennessee Chancery Court previously concluded that Guardsmark's covenants not to compete are valid under both Tennessee and Kentucky law. According to Guardsmark, Chancellor Small's decision precludes the plaintiffs from again challenging the validity of those covenants under Kentucky law and § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

HN1 "A final, valid determination on the merits is conclusive on the parties and those in privity with them, as to matters that were litigated or should have been litigated, in another action or proceeding involving the same cause of action." 1B Moore's Federal Practice § 0.405[3], at III-15 (2nd ed. 1995). Furthermore, "a final valid judgment, even if erroneous on either the facts or the law, must be given a binding effect as res judicata or collateral estoppel, in either a federal or state tribunal." Id. at § 0.405[4.-1], p. III-23.

Twenty-eight U.S.C. § 1738 requires that a federal court give the same preclusive effect to the judgment of a state court that would be given in the state [**9] in which the judgment was rendered. Whitfield v. City of Knoxville, 756 F.2d 455 \(6th Cir. 1985\). Therefore, this court must look to Tennessee law to determine whether Chancellor Small's judgment should be given preclusive effect.

"Only a final judgment is res judicata." 1B Moore's Federal Practice § 0.409[1.-1], at III-123. Under Tennessee law, "a judgment is not final and res judicata where an appeal is pending." McBurney v. Aldrich, 816 S.W.2d 30, 34 \(Tenn. Ct. App. 1991\).<sup>3</sup> This is true unless the appeal has been abandoned and is, therefore, considered adjudged. Smith v. Metropolitan Development Housing Agency, 857 F. Supp. 597 \(M.D. Tenn. 1994\).

In this [**10] case, Borg-Warner appealed the Tennessee Chancellor's decision on February 16, 1996. There is no evidence that this appeal has been abandoned. Therefore, Chancellor Small's decision that Guardsmark's covenant not to compete is valid under Kentucky law is not a final judgment. Accordingly, res judicata principles do not apply to that judgment, and this court should independently evaluate all of plaintiffs' claims.

PLAINTIFFS HAVE FAILED TO ESTABLISH THE CONSPIRACY NECESSARY TO SUPPORT A § 1 CLAIM

---

<sup>3</sup>The rule in Tennessee is the minority rule. Under the federal rule and the rule of the majority of states, "the pendency of an appeal does not suspend the operation of an otherwise final judgment as res judicata or collateral estoppel. . ." 1B Moore's Federal Practice 40.416[3-2], at III-322, III-323 and fn. 1 (2nd ed. 1995).

HN2 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides:

Every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C.A. § 1 (Supp. 1995). HN3 [↑] To state a valid claim for violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, a plaintiff must allege [*499] facts sufficient to establish the following elements:

- (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy;
- (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury.

Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Prod., Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 (7th Cir. 1993); see also Postal Instant Press v. Jackson, 658 F. Supp. 739 [*111] (D. Colo. 1987); Middlebrooks v. Eustis, 563 F. Supp. 1060 (M.D. Fla. 1983).

HN4 [↑] The conspiracy required to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act "is not possible as a matter of law between a corporation and its employees unless those employees have an independent personal stake and stand to benefit from conspiring to restrain trade." <sup>4</sup> Caremark Homecare v. New England Critical Care, 700 F. Supp. 1033, 1035 (D. Minn. 1988); see also Motive Parts Warehouse v. Facet Enterprises, 774 F.2d 380 (10th Cir. 1985); Morton Buildings of Nebraska, Inc. v. Morton Buildings, Inc., 531 F.2d 910 (8th Cir. 1976); Bellamy v. Mason's Stores, Inc., 508 F.2d 504 (4th Cir. 1974); Irving Scher, Antitrust Adviser § 1.06 (4th ed. 1995); Phillip Areeda, 7 Antitrust Law P 1470, p. 282-284 (1986). Indeed, the Supreme Court, in discussing a related issue, concluded:

It is perfectly plain that an internal "agreement" to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that § 1 [of the Sherman Antitrust Act] was designed to police. The officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, [**12] so agreements among them do not suddenly bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals. . . . For these reasons, officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a § 1 conspiracy.

Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); see also Guzowski v. Hartman, 969 F.2d 211 (6th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1053, 113 S. Ct. 978, 122 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1993); Potters Medical Center v. City Hospital Ass'n., 800 F.2d 568, 573 (6th Cir. 1986).

[**13] One case applying these principles is nearly identical to the case at bar. In Caremark Homecare, Inc. v. New England Critical Care, Inc., 700 F. Supp. 1033 (D. Minn. 1988), a health care service provider filed suit against certain former employees to enforce a covenant not to compete. The employees counterclaimed that the employer violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act by "forcing" them to sign covenants not to compete. In dismissing the § 1 claim, the court concluded that the necessary conspiracy was not possible as a matter of law between the corporation and its employees because those employees did not have an independent personal stake in the matter and did not stand to benefit from conspiring to restrain trade. Id. at 1035; see also Marshall v. Miles Laboratories, Inc., 647 F. Supp. 1326 (N.D. Ind. 1986).

In this case, plaintiffs contend that Guardsmark conspired with its own security guard employees to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Guardsmark admittedly required its employees to sign covenants not to compete. The employees signed the agreements because they were required to do so in order to maintain their employment with Guardsmark. [*14] The employees did not have any independent personal stake and did not stand to benefit from conspiring to restrain trade. Therefore, it is impossible, as a matter of law, for the employees to provide the plurality of actors imperative for a S.1 conspiracy.

<sup>4</sup> It is unclear whether the Sixth Circuit would even recognize this independent personal stake exception. In Potters Medical Center v. City Hospital Ass'n., 800 F.2d 568, 573 (6th Cir. 1986), the court stated, "Although several courts have recognized the 'independent personal stake' exception to the rule that officers and agents lack capacity to conspire with their corporation, . . . this circuit has never endorsed the exception. In fact, this court has noted the 'rather substantial policy reasons for not adopting such an exception.'" Id. (citations omitted).

Plaintiffs claim, without citation to authority, that the above concepts do not apply in this case because Guardsmark requires its employees to sign the covenants not to compete as a condition precedent to their employment. Therefore, plaintiffs contend, the [*500] signers of the covenants are not technically employees of Guardsmark at the time they sign the agreements. Plaintiffs' contention is without merit.

The covenant specifically refers to the signers as "employee" and becomes applicable only upon termination from employment with Guardsmark. Although the individuals may technically be applicants rather than employees at the time they sign the covenants, they are not acting as independent economic forces with any reason to restrain trade. Therefore, defendant is entitled to summary judgment on plaintiffs' claim under S.1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.<sup>5</sup>

[**15] THE COVENANTS ARE VALID UNDER KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE LAW

Plaintiffs contend that the covenants must be evaluated under Kentucky law, but the defendant claims that Tennessee law is applicable. However, the court need not make this determination because -- after careful consideration and research -- the court concludes that the covenant at issue is valid regardless of which state's law is applied.

Where, as here, the covenants not to compete are signed by employees who lack a great deal of bargaining power, the enforcement of those covenants presents a conflict between fundamental legal policies. As noted in one recent article:

Every time a noncompetition clause is litigated, the court is forced to grapple with two conflicting policies. The first policy is the freedom to contract, which has been protected by American courts since the early nineteenth century. This doctrine has existed to "encourage individual entrepreneurial activity" and has "been extolled as one of the great boons of modern democratic civilization, as one of the principal causes of prosperity and comfort." In the noncompetition clause setting, strict adherence to this doctrine would result in complete [**16] enforcement of all noncompetition clauses. The second doctrine, "one of the oldest and best established . . . [contract] policies developed by courts," is the doctrine against contractual restraints of trade. This doctrine holds that parties may not make contracts which overly restrict the fundamental right to practice a trade. Noncompetition clauses clearly are restraints on trade. Strict adherence to this doctrine, then, would result in judicial rejection of all noncompetition clauses. Obviously, these two fundamental principles of contract law are in direct conflict. The courts might have resolved this conflict by consistently striking a balance between the two principles.

A Statistical Analysis of Noncompetition Clauses in Employment Contracts, 15 J. Corp. L. 483 (Spring, 1990) (footnotes omitted).

Until the last several decades, courts exhibited great reluctance to enforce such covenants against employees whose services were not unique in some way. This was true unless the employee had access to trade secrets or customer lists or could appropriate customer good will upon leaving his or her employment.

Thus, Walsh observed:

The negative promise not to engage [**17] in like service for another will not be enforced unless the services to be rendered by the defendant are unique in the sense that the services of another person equally qualified cannot be readily secured. Therefore such a contract made by a salesman or by an actor without outstanding merit and reputation, will not be enforced in equity. For this reason a contract by an employe [sic] of the usual type not to engage in a similar line of employment with a competitor for a stated time after his employment is ended will not be specifically enforced, as the remedy at law is adequate, though if it appear that he has been entrusted with secrets of the employer's business he may be enjoined from using such secrets in competition with his former employer, either [*501] in a business of his own or in the employ of any other person.

<sup>5</sup> The parties agree that the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act is virtually identical to the Sherman Antitrust Act and has been interpreted as such. Therefore, if the defendant is entitled to summary judgment on the Sherman Antitrust Act claim, it is also entitled to summary judgment on the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act claim.

Walsh, A Treatise on Equity, 338 (1930)(footnotes omitted).

Furthermore, it is stated in 42 Am.Jur. 2d, Injunctions § 109, at 110:

Character of services to be performed.

An adult who has bound himself by contract to render special, unique, or extraordinary personal services or acts, or to render services which are intellectual, or peculiar [*18] and individual in their character, or who has special, unique, or extraordinary qualifications, may be restrained from breaching the negative covenant in his contract of employment not to render services to another. On the other hand, such relief will be denied if the services are ordinary, mechanical, without special merit, and can be readily supplied or obtained from others without much difficulty or expense. The result is that in the case of contracts to render services which require no special skill or qualifications, a breach by an employee will not be enjoined even though the employee has expressly agreed to work for no one else, or to devote all his time to the service of the complainant.

Particular employments.

The equity courts, in recognition and application of the rules underlying the assertion of their injunctive powers to prevent breaches of restrictive covenants in contracts for services or acts by those possessing special, unique, or extraordinary qualifications, have intervened by injunction to prevent breaches of employment contracts by newspaper writers and reporters; actors and actresses; singers; music teachers; professional athletes, including baseball, [*19] football, and basketball players, and boxers; acrobats; and various others. But even in the case of singers, actors, or performers, injunction will not issue if the employee is not of such ability and reputation that his place cannot be readily filled.

Id. (citations omitted).

Plaintiffs here rely heavily on this line of authority. Cf. Calhoun v. Everman, 242 S.W.2d 100 \(Ky. 1951\) (lack of mutuality stressed). However, the more modern cases, including those in Kentucky, place more emphasis on the employer's investment in the employee and have evolved an approach balancing the importance of that factor against the hardship to the employee and the public interest.<sup>6</sup>

[**20] Thus, in Central Adjustment Bureau v. Ingram Assoc. Inc., 622 S.W.2d 681 \(Ky. Ct. App. 1981\), the most recent Kentucky case on this subject, a two-year covenant was enforced against the former employee of a collection agency, whose services were in no way unique. Quoting from Hammons v. Big Sandy Claims Service, Inc., 567 S.W.2d 313 \(Ky. Ct. App. 1978\), in which a covenant not to compete was enforced against a claims adjuster, the Central Adjustment court said:

"It has been held HN6 in Kentucky that an agreement in restraint of trade is reasonable if, on consideration and circumstances of the particular case, the restriction is such only as to afford fair protection to the interests of the covenantee and is not so large as to interfere with the public interests or impose undue hardship on the party restricted." Ceresia v. Mitchell, Ky., 242 S.W.2d 359 \(1951\).

<sup>6</sup> HN5 The Tennessee Supreme Court has adopted a "rule of reasonableness." Under that rule, Tennessee courts -- absent bad faith by the employer -- will enforce covenants not to compete to the extent necessary to protect the employer's interests without imposing undue hardship on the employee as long as the public interest is not adversely affected. Central Adjustment Bureau, Inc. v. Ingram, 678 S.W.2d 28 \(Tenn. 1984\).

Contrary to appellees' argument, we believe the proposition enunciated in the Hammons case supports our decision. CAB's business is highly specialized and competitive, and since clients sign no written contract they are free to change collectors almost overnight. *Thus, covenants not to compete are [**21] about the only protection available to CAB to prevent employees from resigning and attempting to pirate away their clients after CAB has expended considerable time, effort, [*502] and money in training those employees* in the collection business. Absent the training afforded by CAB, its employees would hardly be in a position to compete. Therefore, we are satisfied that CAB's covenants not to compete are a reasonable restriction affording CAB fair protection for its legitimate business interests.

Central Adjustment Bureau v. Ingram Assoc. Inc., 622 S.W.2d at 685-86 (emphasis added). Indeed, the Hammons court stated as a general proposition that, if such covenants are "confined to a reasonable territory," they are enforceable, even if unlimited as to time.

Although the Kentucky Court of Appeals did not use the term in either of the above cases, it put heavy reliance on an employer's right to protect itself from "disintermediation." This is a twenty-dollar word meaning to cut out the middleman.

It is to be noted that the court places no weight on any unique quality of the employees in these cases. Indeed, they were ordinary debt collectors or claims adjusters, probably possessing [**22] similar educational qualifications as the security guards in the case at bar.

Although considerable advocacy was utilized in the effort, plaintiffs here have not rebutted defendant's claim that Guardsmark, as the plaintiff in Central Adjustment, spent "considerable, time, effort and money in training" its employees. As set forth above, the guards spent two weeks in on-the-job training becoming familiar with the particularized security requirements of the client's site. It is not disputed that this was at Guardsmark's expense. Also, the guards became familiar with the culture of the client's firm and the client's own security personnel.

All of this made Guardsmark -- like the collection agency and claims adjustment companies in the above cases -- vulnerable to disintermediation. In Consultants and Designers v. Butler Service Group, 720 F.2d 1553, 1558-59 \(11th Cir. 1983\), the court emphasized that the interest of "the much maligned but time-honored middleman" is a legitimate one that deserves protection against disintermediation. The court observes that the middleman must find a contractual means to protect itself or the employees, clients or competitors will "opportunistically [**23] appropriate" its work product "without paying it the full value of its services." Id. at 1559. The discussion of the court is highly persuasive to this court but too lengthy to quote in full. See also Janice Doty Unlimited, Inc. v. Stoecker, 684 F. Supp. 973 \(N.D. Ill. 1988\).

The legitimate interest of the employer must be balanced against hardship to the employee and the public. Vencor, Inc. v. Webb, 33 F.3d 840 \(7th Cir. 1994\). The covenant here has been carefully drawn to minimize such hardship, since it is applicable only to the specific client site where the employee worked and for which plaintiff trained him or her. The uncontradicted evidence demonstrated that the security guard positions are low level and the employees can easily find comparable employment elsewhere. Indeed, all the plaintiffs promptly found other employment. Thus, the employees' and public's interests are protected to the extent possible.

Therefore, the court being advised,

IT IS ORDERED as follows:

1. Guardsmark's motions for summary judgment (doc. # 193 in 94-169 and doc. # 83 in 95-124) are granted on plaintiffs' claims under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the analogous section [**24] of the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act, and Kentucky common law;
2. Borg-Warner's motion for summary judgment (doc. # 161 in 94-169) is denied;
3. The individual plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment (doc. # 57 in 95-124) is denied; and

946 F. Supp. 495, *502L<sup>A</sup> 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18001, **24

4. A separate Judgment shall enter concurrently herewith.

This 27th day of November, 1996.

WILLIAM O. BERTELSMAN, CHIEF JUDGE

---

End of Document

Gaebler v. New Mexico Potash Corp.

Appellate Court of Illinois, First District, Third Division

November 27, 1996, Decided

No. 1-95-2869

Reporter

285 Ill. App. 3d 542 *; 676 N.E.2d 228 **; 1996 Ill. App. LEXIS 898 ***; 221 Ill. Dec. 707 ****; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,659

DAVID B. GAEBLER, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. NEW MEXICO POTASH CORPORATION, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [***1] Rehearing Denied January 15, 1997. Released for Publication January 15, 1997.

Prior History: Appeal from the Circuit Court of Cook County. Honorable Michael B. Getty, Judge Presiding.

Disposition: Judgment affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Antitrust, Consumer Fraud Act, cause of action, practices, Sherman Act, potash, price discrimination, class action, trial court, Clayton Act, allegations, purchasers, consumers, indirect, sufficient to state, antitrust claim, circuit court, provisions, Deceptive, patterned, purported, pricing, unfair

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > General Overview

HN1[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 et seq., provides that no person other than the Attorney General of the State shall be authorized to maintain a class action in any court of the State for indirect purchasers asserting claims under that Act. 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7-2.

Counsel: For David B. Gaebler, APPELLANT: Clinton A. Krislov and Jonathan Nachsin, both of Chicago, Donald P. Alexander and Mark C. Rifkin, both of Haverford, Pennsylvania, Eugene Mikolajczyk and Kevin M. Prongay, both of Pacific Palisades, California, and Marguerite R. Goodman, of Wynnewood, Pennsylvania.

For New Mexico Potash Corporation, APPELLEES: Mitchell D. Raup, Antony S. Burt, and William T. Casey, all of Chicago, Richard J. Favretto, Marc Gary, Kerry Lynn Edwards, and Gary A. Winters, all of Washington, D.C., Stephen A. Marshall and Martin P. Michael, both of New York, N.Y.

Judges: PRESIDING JUSTICE TULLY delivered the opinion of the court. CERDA and GALLAGHER, JJ., concur.

Opinion by: TULLY

Opinion

---

[*542] [****708] [**229] PRESIDING JUSTICE TULLY delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, David B. Gaebler, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, filed this purported class action against New Mexico Potash Corporation and other U.S. and Canadian corporations involved in the potash industry, alleging violations of the Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act (hereinafter the Consumer Fraud Act) ( 815 ILCS 505/1 et seq. (West 1994)). The action purported to represent indirect purchasers of potash.

[*543] Defendants moved to dismiss the action pursuant to section 2-615 of the Code of Civil Procedure ( 735 ILCS 5/2-615 (West 1994)), which the trial court granted. It is from the order dismissing plaintiff's complaint that he now appeals to this court [***2] pursuant to section 6 of article VI of the Illinois Constitution \(Ill. Const. 1970, art. VI, § 6\) and Supreme Court Rule 301 (155 Ill. 2d R. 301).

On appeal, plaintiff in essence argues that the trial court erred in holding that plaintiff's complaint was essentially a claim under the Illinois Antitrust Act (hereinafter the Antitrust Act) ( 740 ILCS 10/1 et seq. (West 1994)) that could not be brought pursuant to the Consumer Fraud Act. We note that the trial court's dismissal of this cause under section 2-615 of the Code of Civil Procedure ( 735 ILCS 5/2-615 (West 1994)) is subject to our de novo review. Noyola v. Board of Education, 284 Ill. App. 3d 128, 1996 Ill. App. LEXIS 740, 219 Ill. Dec. 635, 671 N.E.2d 802 \(1996\).

In dismissing plaintiff's action, the trial court ruled that the gist of plaintiff's complaint was an Antitrust Act claim under the guise of a Consumer Fraud Act claim and that as such it was precluded by our supreme court's holding in Laughlin v. Evanston Hospital, 133 Ill. 2d 374, 550 N.E.2d 986, 140 Ill. Dec. 861 \(1990\). We agree with the circuit court.

In Laughlin, the trustees of two union health plans brought a class action on behalf of themselves and similar third-party payors who indemnify [***3] or insure patients for the cost of hospital services, against 10 Chicago-area hospitals. The complaint alleged the defendants' pricing practices were illegal price discrimination in violation of the Consumer Fraud Act and the Antitrust Act. The supreme court held that the trustees allegation of price fixing was insufficient to state a cause of action under either the Antitrust Act or the Consumer Fraud Act.

In affirming the circuit court's dismissal of the Antitrust Act count, the Laughlin court found that the Antitrust Act was patterned after the landmark Sherman Antitrust Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. \(1988\)) alone ( Laughlin, 133 Ill. 2d at 374) and contains no direct counterpart to the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 12 et seq. \(1988\)), as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The supreme court noted that the Clayton Act, which specifically prohibits, amongst other things, price discrimination, was enacted by Congress because the Sherman Act and other preexisting antitrust statutes did not cover such practices. Laughlin, 133 Ill. 2d at 386. Thus, the supreme court held that in enacting the Antitrust Act the General Assembly's embrace of Federal antitrust law reached only [***4] to anticompetitive practices prohibited by the Sherman Act and not to conduct proscribed by the Clayton Act. Laughlin, 133 Ill. 2d at 386-88. Therefore, the court concluded that the trustees did not state a cause of action under the Antitrust Act.

[*544] The Laughlin court then went on to hold that the Trustees' antitrust claims were not actionable under the Consumer Fraud Act and found that:

285 Ill. App. 3d 542, *544 IL<sup>676</sup> N.E.2d 228, **229 IL<sup>996</sup> Ill. App. LEXIS 898, ***4 IL<sup>221</sup> Ill. Dec. 707, ****708

"There is no indication that the legislature intended that the Consumer Fraud Act be an additional antitrust mechanism. The language of the Act shows that its reach was to be limited to conduct that defrauds or deceives consumers or others. The title of the Act is consistent with its content. The Consumer Fraud Act states that it was enacted to 'protect consumers and borrowers and businessmen against fraud, unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices.' (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1987, ch. 121 1/2, par. 261.) Further indication that this is a statute directed against fraud and not one designed to be [***709] [**230] an additional antitrust enforcement mechanism is that every one of the specifically prohibited acts set out in the Act describes a situation where a buyer is being harmed [***5] by overreaching or fraudulent conduct.

***

The legislature in the Act declined to include provisions against price discrimination because the legislature found that the inclusion of such provisions would be undesirable. To construe the Consumer Fraud Act to give a cause of action for discriminatory pricing that the legislature refused to give under the Antitrust Act would be incongruous. Legislation is designed to be consistent. It would be inconsistent to provide that the very conduct which is not sufficient to state a cause of action under the Antitrust Act is sufficient to state a cause of action under the Consumer Fraud Act." Laughlin, 133 Ill. 2d at 390-91.

In the case sub judice, we concur with circuit court's description of plaintiff's claims as classic antitrust allegations dressed in Consumer Fraud Act clothing." Our review of both the original complaint and the proffered amended complaint reveals that they repeatedly charge defendants with agreeing and conspiring to "fix," "maintain," or "stabilize" the price of potash. Such allegations are a classic example of price-fixing first outlawed by Congress over 100 years ago under section 1 of the Sherman Act [***6] (U.S. v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U.S. 265, 86 L. Ed. 1461, 62 S. Ct. 1070 \(1942\)), and by definition are covered by the Antitrust Act which "is patterned on the Sherman Act[.]" Laughlin, 133 Ill. 2d at 382. Thus, such allegations, pursuant to Laughlin, must be brought under the Antitrust Act and not the Consumer Fraud Act. Therefore, we find plaintiff's complaint failed to state a cause of action under the Consumer Fraud Act. See Laughlin, 133 Ill. 2d 388-91.

In addition, we note that as plaintiff's case, a class action brought on behalf of indirect purchasers, is in actuality an antitrust claim [*545] that can only be brought under the Antitrust Act, it is necessarily precluded by section 7(2) of HN1 the Antitrust Act which provides "that no person other than the Attorney General of this State shall be authorized to maintain a class action in any court of this State for indirect purchasers asserting claims under this Act." 740 ILCS 10/7\(2\) (West 1994).

In light of the foregoing, the judgment of the [***7] circuit court of Cook County is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

CERDA and GALLAGHER, JJ., concur.

Brown v. Presbyterian Healthcare Servs.

United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit

November 29, 1996, Filed

No. 95-2293, No. 96-2013

Reporter

101 F.3d 1324 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 30912 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,639

ARLENE M. BROWN, M.D.; FAMILY PRACTICE ASSOCIATES, P.C., Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. PRESBYTERIAN HEALTHCARE SERVICES; VALERIE MILLER; VICKIE WILLIAMS, D.O., Defendants-Appellants, and SIERRA BLANCA MEDICAL ASSOCIATES, P.A.; GARY JACKSON, D.O., Defendants. ARLENE M. BROWN, M.D. FAMILY PRACTICE ASSOCIATES, P.C., Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. PRESBYTERIAN HEALTHCARE SERVICES, VALERIE MILLER, SIERRA BLANCA MEDICAL ASSOCIATES, P.A., VICKIE WILLIAMS, D.O., GARY JACKSON, D.O., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied April 14, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. LEXIS 2457.

Prior History: [**1] ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO. (D.C. No. CIV-93-719-JP). D.C. Judge JAMES A. PARKER.

Disposition: REVERSED in part and AFFIRMED in part.

Core Terms

---

district court, damages, obstetrical, punitive damages, matter of law, privileges, peer review, jury award, patient, immune, tortious interference, vacating, databank, revocation, antitrust claim, antitrust, medical staff, award of punitive damages, contract claim, defendants', charts, compensatory damages, defamation claim, Health Care Quality Improvement Act, circumstances, Practitioner, malpractice, merits, treble, sufficient evidence

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Remedies

HN1 [down arrow] Damages, Punitive Damages

A federal appellate court reviews a district court's order granting judgment as a matter of law de novo, applying the same standard as the district court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The legal standard for granting judgment as a matter of law is identical to the standard for granting summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. When applying this standard, a court is to examine the factual record and reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion for summary judgment or judgment as a matter of law. Judgment as a matter of law should be affirmed only if the evidence is insufficient to permit a jury to properly return a verdict in the opposing party's favor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

HN3 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

In an antitrust case litigated under New Mexico law, the lack of certainty that will prevent a recovery is uncertainty as to the fact of damages, not as to the amount. Damages need not be computed with mathematical certainty, and recovery will not be denied where the evidence affords a reasonable basis for estimating plaintiff's loss. In reviewing a jury's award of damages, a court should sustain the award unless it is clearly erroneous or there is no evidence to support the award.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

In an antitrust case, once an injured person establishes his business or transaction would have been profitable, it is not fatal to the recovery of substantial damages that he is unable to prove with definiteness the amount of the profits he would have made or the amount of harm that the defendant has caused. It is only essential that he present such evidence as might reasonably be expected to be available under the circumstances.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

101 F.3d 1324, *1324LÁ1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 30912, **1

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

HN5 Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A district court's *Fed. R. Civ. P. 59\(e\)* order setting aside a punitive damages award is reviewed for an abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion > General Overview

HN6 Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Under the abuse of discretion standard, a trial court's decision will not be disturbed unless the appellate court has a definite and firm conviction that the lower court made a clear error of judgment or exceeded the bounds of permissible choice in the circumstances. When an appellate court applies the "abuse of discretion" standard, it defers to the trial court's judgment because of its first-hand ability to view the witness or evidence and assess credibility and probative value.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Remedies

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Judicial Review

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Remedies

It is clearly improper to allow a plaintiff to recover punitive damages along with trebled damages on an antitrust claim. Punitive damages beyond the statutory trebled damages cannot be awarded for an antitrust violation. The enhancement of damages in an antitrust case is the damages trebled.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Reviewability > Preservation for Review > Failure to Object

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

101 F.3d 1324, *1324LÁ1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 30912, **1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Reviewability > Preservation for Review > Jury Instructions

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Measurement of Damages > Judicial Review

HN9[] Damages, Punitive Damages

An appellant may not generally complain on appeal of errors he has himself induced or invited.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Verdicts > Special Verdicts

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Verdicts > General Overview

HN10[] Verdicts, Special Verdicts

When a jury returns a special verdict in an antitrust case, the trial judge is obligated to apply appropriate legal principles to the facts found by the jury. It is for the court to decide upon the jury's answers what the resulting legal obligation is.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN11[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

In determining whether to grant or deny a Fed. R. Civ. P. 59\(e\) motion to alter or amend the judgment, a district court is vested with considerable discretion. A district court may grant a motion to alter or amend the judgment where it is necessary to correct manifest errors of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Verdicts > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Verdicts > Special Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

HN12[] Jury Trials, Verdicts

When a district court's decision to vacate the award of punitive damages serves to correct a manifest error of law and does not prejudice the plaintiff, an appellate court cannot say that it has a definite and firm conviction that the lower court made a clear error of judgment or exceeded the bounds of permissible choice in the circumstances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

HN13 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

A federal appellate court reviews the denial of a motion for judgment as a matter of law de novo, applying the same legal standard used by the district court. Judgment as a matter of law should only be granted if the evidence, when viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, could not support a verdict in that party's favor.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN14 [ ] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act, 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 1111\(a\)\(1\), 11112\(a\), a peer review participant is immune from private damage claims stemming from the peer review action, provided the review action is taken: (1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care, (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter, (3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the adequate-notice-and-hearing requirements.

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > Sufficiency of Evidence

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN15 [blue document icon] Substantial Evidence, Sufficiency of Evidence

A peer review action is presumed to have met the standards necessary for immunity, pursuant to 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112. However, if a plaintiff challenging a peer review action proves, by a preponderance of the evidence, that any one of the requirements was not satisfied, the peer review body is no longer afforded immunity from damages under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112\(a\). Courts apply an objective standard in determining whether a peer review action is reasonable under § 11112\(a\).

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN16 [blue document icon] Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

In determining whether a peer review participant is immune under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101 et seq., the proper inquiry for the court is whether a physician provided sufficient evidence to permit a jury to find she overcame, by a preponderance of the evidence, any of the statutory elements required for immunity under 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112\(a\).

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

HN17 [blue document icon] Business Administration & Organization, Peer Review

The Health Care Quality Improvement Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101 et seq., confers immunity on any person who makes a report to the National Practitioner Data Bank without knowledge of the falsity of the information contained in the report. 42 U.S.C.S. § 11137\(c\). Thus, immunity for reporting exists as a matter of law unless there is sufficient evidence for a jury to conclude the report was false and the reporting party knew it was false.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN18 [blue document icon] Private Actions, Remedies

A private plaintiff seeking to invoke the antitrust laws must show the defendants caused her alleged injury. The key question in determining a defendant's ability to cause a restraint of trade to be imposed is whether the defendants had control over the decisionmaking process, or the ability to coerce or unduly influence the decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN19 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

Where a reasonable jury could conclude from the evidence that a defendant controlled, coerced, or unduly influenced a decision that results in a restraint of trade, a genuine issue of material fact exists on the issue of causation.

Torts > ... > Defamation > Elements > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

HN20 [ ] Defamation, Elements

Under New Mexico law, a plaintiff must prove actual injury to state a claim for defamation; damages cannot be presumed in a defamation action. However, actual injury is not limited to out-of-pocket loss. The more customary types of actual harm inflicted by defamatory falsehood include impairment of reputation and standing in the community, personal humiliation, and mental anguish and suffering.

Counsel: ARLENE M. BROWN, M.D., FAMILY PRACTICE ASSOCIATES, P.C., Plaintiffs-Appellants.

Thomas C. Bird (David W. Peterson of Keleher & McLeod, P.A.; and Phil Krehbiel of Krehbiel, Bannerman, Horn & Hisey, P.A., Albuquerque, New Mexico, with him on the briefs) of Keleher & McLeod, P.A., Albuquerque, New Mexico, for Plaintiffs-Appellees.

Bruce Hall (Edward Ricco and Theresa W. Parrish with him on the briefs) of Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin & Robb, P.A., Albuquerque, New Mexico, for Defendants-Appellants.

Judges: Before BRORBY, RONEY, * and LOGAN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: BRORBY

Opinion

---

[*1327] BRORBY, Circuit Judge.

Dr. Arlene Brown, a family physician, and her professional association, Family Practice Associates, P.C. (hereinafter collectively referred to as "Dr. Brown"), brought suit against Presbyterian Healthcare Services, Valerie Miller, Vickie Williams, D.O., Sierra Blanca Medical Associates, [**2] P.A., and Gary Jackson, D.O., seeking injunctive relief and damages for violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 \(1994\), unreasonable restraint of trade and unfair trade practices in violation of Section 57 of the New Mexico Annotated Statutes, bad faith breach of contract, intentional interference with contract, defamation, and prima facie tort. Dr. Brown's causes of action arose from the revocation of her obstetrical hospital staff privileges by Lincoln County Medical Center,<sup>1</sup> and from the hospital's subsequent report of this revocation to the National Practitioner Data

---

* The Honorable Paul H. Roney, Senior United States Circuit Judge for the Eleventh Circuit, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup> Defendant Presbyterian Healthcare Services, a nonprofit New Mexico corporation, manages and operates Lincoln County Medical Center under an agreement with Lincoln County, New Mexico.

Bank under the category of "Incompetence/ Malpractice/Negligence." According to Dr. Brown, the defendants' "anticompetitive motives" were at the heart of these actions.

After a three week jury trial, the jury rendered a verdict [**3] in favor of Dr. Brown on the defamation claim, tortious interference with contract claim, and certain of her antitrust claims. Thereafter, the district court set aside the jury's awards of damages on the tortious interference with contract claim, and the jury's award of punitive damages against Dr. Williams on the antitrust claims. Dr. Brown and Defendants Presbyterian Healthcare Services, Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams appeal from the district court's order and amended judgment.

I. Factual Background

Dr. Arlene Brown, a Board-certified family physician, began practicing family medicine in Ruidoso, New Mexico, in 1983. Dr. Brown joined the medical staff of Lincoln County Medical Center, and in 1992 she held clinical privileges at the hospital in obstetrics and other areas. Dr. Vickie Williams, a physician specializing in obstetrics and gynecology in Ruidoso, is an economic competitor of Dr. Brown.

In early 1992, Dr. Williams participated in an informal peer review of three patients treated by Dr. Brown. Dr. Williams expressed concerns about the quality of care reflected in the patients' charts and prepared typewritten comments on the charts. Valerie Miller, Lincoln County [**4] Medical Center's Administrator, then referred the charts to specialists outside the hospital for review. The outside reviewing physicians' comments were submitted to Lincoln County Medical Center's Executive Committee. At a meeting of the Executive Committee on July 13, 1992, Dr. Brown agreed to a requirement to consult with an obstetrics specialist in treating high-risk obstetrical patients.

In February 1993, Valerie Miller instituted formal peer review proceedings against Dr. Brown by sending a complaint to the Medical Staff Executive Committee, charging Dr. Brown with failure to abide by the [*1328] consultation agreement. The Executive Committee instituted formal peer review proceedings against Dr. Brown by appointing a panel of three physicians to conduct a hearing on the complaint. At the hearing in April 1993, the panel reviewed the charts of two patients treated by Dr. Brown and heard testimony from Dr. Williams and Dr. Brown. The next day, the hearing panel issued its report, concluding Dr. Brown breached her agreement to obtain appropriate consultation and recommending removal of Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges. Thereafter, the Medical Executive Committee approved the panel's [**5] recommendation and Lincoln County Medical Center's Board of Trustees adopted the recommendation.<sup>2</sup>

Following the Board of Trustees' disciplinary action, Lincoln County Medical Center submitted a report to the National Practitioner Data Bank concerning the revocation of Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges.<sup>3</sup> Glenda Perry, the hospital's medical staff coordinator, prepared the report in collaboration with Ms. Miller. One blank on the report called for insertion of an "Adverse Action Classification Code." Ms. Perry and Ms. Miller settled on the code entitled "Incompetence/ Malpractice/ Negligence."

[**6] When Dr. Brown received a copy of the hospital's data bank report, she submitted a report of her own to the National Practitioner Data Bank stating Lincoln County Medical Center never found her negligent, incompetent or guilty of malpractice. The National Practitioner Data Bank then notified Lincoln County Medical Center of Dr. Brown's objection to the report, and provided the hospital with an opportunity to revise its report. However, the hospital elected not to amend the data bank report.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Brown subsequently appealed the Board of Trustees' decision. However, on May 20, 1993, the Board's Appeal Panel affirmed the Board of Trustees' decision, with one minor modification. The modification allowed Dr. Brown to reapply for privileges after fulfilling certain training requirements.

<sup>3</sup> The National Practitioner Data Bank is an organization created under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act to collect information on physicians, including reports of adverse peer review actions. See 45 C.F.R. Part 60 (1995). "Each health care entity must report to the Board of Medical Examiners ... any professional review action that adversely affects the clinical privileges of a physician." 45 C.F.R. § 60.9\(a\). The Board of Medical Examiners must in turn report this information to the National Practitioner Data Bank. 45 C.F.R. § 60.9\(b\).

Although unrelated to the revocation of Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges, in 1992 a family practice physician named Dr. Mark Reib contacted a Presbyterian Healthcare Services recruiter to discuss family medicine practice opportunities in Ruidoso, New Mexico. When Dr. Reib expressed an interest in joining Dr. Brown's practice, the recruiter informed Dr. Reib the hospital would only offer him a financial recruitment package if he were to go to work for Lincoln County Medical Center or in direct competition with Dr. Brown. Dr. Reib chose not to join Dr. Brown's medical practice.

II. Trial and Subsequent Procedural History

In March 1995, the trial of this action commenced before [**7] a jury. Almost three weeks later, the jury returned a special verdict in Dr. Brown's favor on her defamation claim, intentional interference with contract claim, and on certain of her antitrust claims.<sup>4</sup> [**8] The district court entered judgment in accordance with the jury's findings, trebling, as required by law,<sup>5</sup> the antitrust damages against Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams. Thereafter, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(b) and 59(c), the defendants filed a motion for judgment as a matter of law or to alter or amend the judgment or for a new trial. In a comprehensive [*1329] and detailed "Memorandum Opinion and Order," the district court set aside the jury's award of compensatory and punitive damages against Presbyterian Healthcare Services on the intentional interference with contract claim, and the jury's award of punitive damages against Dr. Williams on the antitrust claim.<sup>6</sup> The district court rejected all of the defendants' remaining arguments and entered an amended judgment in conformity with its opinion.

Dr. Brown appeals the district court's amended judgment, raising two issues: (1) whether the district court erred in vacating the compensatory and punitive damages awards for tortious interference with contract and (2) whether the district court erred in vacating the punitive damages award against Dr. Williams. The appeal of Presbyterian Healthcare Services, Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams raises four issues: (1) whether the district court erred in determining the defendants were not immune as a matter of law from damages resulting from the revocation of Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges; (2) whether the district court erred in determining the defendants were not immune as a matter of law from damages resulting from the data bank report; (3) whether the district court erred in denying the defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law on the merits of Dr. Brown's antitrust claims; and (4) whether the district court erred in denying [**9] the defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law on the merits of Dr. Brown's defamation claim. After thoroughly reviewing the parties' briefs, the district court's Memorandum Opinion and Order, and all relevant statutes and case law, we conclude the district court erred in setting aside the jury's awards of damages on Dr. Brown's intentional interference with contract claim. However, with respect to the remaining issues raised by the parties on appeal, we find the district court's rulings were proper and in accordance with law.

III. Dr. Brown's Appeal

Dr. Brown first contends the district court erred in vacating as a matter of law the jury's award of compensatory and punitive damages against Presbyterian Healthcare Services on the tortious interference with contract claim. HN1 The Court reviews the district court's order granting judgment as a matter of law de novo, applying the same standard as the district court. Thompson v. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co., 34 F.3d 932, 941 (10th Cir.

<sup>4</sup> Specifically, the jury entered the following awards of damages: (1) $ 112,000.00 against Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams on the antitrust claims; (2) $ 30,000.00 against Ms. Miller on the defamation claim; (3) $ 7,500.00 in compensatory damages and $ 75,000.00 in punitive damages against Presbyterian Healthcare Services on the intentional interference with contract claim; (4) $ 75,000.00 in punitive damages against Ms. Miller on the antitrust and defamation claims; and (5) $ 75,000.00 in punitive damages against Dr. Williams on the antitrust claims. The jury found in favor of defendants Dr. Jackson and Sierra Blanca Medical Associates with respect to all claims against them.

<sup>5</sup> See 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (1994).

<sup>6</sup> The court set aside the former pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(b), and the latter pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e).

1994). HN2[

The legal standard for granting judgment as a matter of law is identical to the standard for granting summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. Pendleton v. Conoco, Inc., **10 23 F.3d 281, 286 (10th Cir. 1994). When applying this standard, a court is to examine the factual record and reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion for summary judgment or judgment as a matter of law. Wolf v. Prudential Ins. Co., 50 F.3d 793, 796 (10th Cir. 1995) (citing Applied Genetics Int'l, Inc. v. First Affiliated Sec., Inc., 912 F.2d 1238, 1241 (10th Cir. 1990)). Judgment as a matter of law should be affirmed only if the evidence is insufficient to permit a jury to properly return a verdict in the opposing party's favor. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 257, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1985).

In the present case, the jury found Presbyterian Healthcare Services liable for tortious interference with contract and awarded Dr. Brown $ 7,500.00 in compensatory damages and $ 75,000.00 in punitive damages on this claim. In its Memorandum Opinion and Order, however, the district court vacated the award of compensatory damages, concluding Dr. Brown had failed to present adequate proof of actual damages on this claim. Since the punitive damages award for tortious interference "was connected only to the jury's finding that [Presbyterian **11 Healthcare Services] intentionally interfered with plaintiffs' contractual relations," the district court also set aside the $ 75,000.00 punitive damages award.

Dr. Brown claims the district court erred in vacating the awards of damages for tortious interference with contract because [*1330] the record contains sufficient evidence to support the jury's awards. Presbyterian Healthcare Services, on the other hand, contends Dr. Brown did not establish damages for tortious interference with "reasonable certainty" and therefore, the district court properly set aside the jury's awards of damages on this claim. As noted by the district court, damages that are based on conjecture, speculation, or guesswork are not recoverable. Smith v. Babcock Poultry Farms, Inc., 469 F.2d 456, 459 (10th Cir. 1972) (citing United States v. Griffith, Gornall & Carman, Inc., 210 F.2d 11 (10th Cir. 1954)). However, the fact damages are difficult to ascertain will not necessarily bar recovery. Id. HN3[

Under New Mexico law, which is applicable in the present case, "the lack of certainty that will prevent a recovery is uncertainty as to the fact of damages, not as to the amount." Camino Real Mobile Home Park **12 Partnership v. Wolfe, 119 N.M. 436, 891 P.2d 1190, 1201 (N.M. 1995). Damages need not be computed with "mathematical certainty" and recovery will not be denied where the evidence "affords a reasonable basis for estimating [plaintiff's] loss." Archuleta v. Jacquez, 103 N.M. 254, 704 P.2d 1130, 1134 (N.M. Ct. App. 1985). In reviewing a jury's award of damages, the court should sustain the award unless it is clearly erroneous or there is no evidence to support the award. Hudson v. Smith, 618 F.2d 642, 646 (10th Cir. 1980).

Here, Dr. Brown's alleged damages for intentional interference with contract stem from Presbyterian Healthcare Services' interference with Dr. Brown's attempts to hire Dr. Mark Reib. In an effort to prove the hospital's interference with Dr. Reib caused her damages, Dr. Brown presented testimony at trial from Dr. Michael McDonald, an economic expert. Dr. McDonald testified regarding the additional patient receipts Dr. Steven Frey,<sup>7</sup> a family practitioner who joined Dr. Brown's practice in May 1992, brought in to Dr. Brown's practice in 1992 and 1993. According to Dr. McDonald, Dr. Frey's patient receipts averaged around $ 6,000.00 per month in 1992, and almost $ 15,000.00 per **13 month in 1993. Dr. McDonald also testified concerning the additional costs Dr. Brown would have incurred in obtaining additional patient revenues. Based on Dr. Brown's 1993 financial statements, Dr. McDonald determined Dr. Brown's costs would increase by 34.1 cents for every dollar of additional receipts. Hence, Dr. McDonald concluded "65.9 percent of any increment in patient receipts will go to the bottom line, the net income of [Dr. Brown's practice]."

Dr. George Rhodes, Jr., an **14 economist for the defense, also testified concerning the additional revenue Dr. Frey brought in to Dr. Brown's practice in 1992 and 1993. Dr. Rhodes testified the hiring of Dr. Frey increased the revenue to Dr. Brown's practice by $ 15,000.00 to $ 20,000.00 per month in 1993. Additionally, Dr. Rhodes firmly concluded the addition of another physician to Dr. Brown's practice would result in an increase in the practice's revenue.

---

<sup>7</sup> The court notes the credentials and background of Dr. Frey and Dr. Reib are strikingly similar. Dr. Frey completed a family practice residency in 1983, while Dr. Reib completed a family practice residency in 1984. Following completion of their respective residency programs, Dr. Frey and Dr. Reib each spent three to four years in the Navy. Apparently, the two doctors were stationed together on Guam and became friends. Dr. Frey and Dr. Reib each entered a private family medicine practice after their respective stints in the Navy.

From the above testimony, it is clear Presbyterian Healthcare Services' interference with the hiring of Dr. Reib caused financial harm to Dr. Brown's practice. Although the testimony of Dr. McDonald and Dr. Rhodes does not provide a precise model for determining the extent of Dr. Brown's damages, it does provide a reasonable basis for estimating the plaintiff's loss. From the testimony regarding the amount of additional revenue Dr. Frey brought into Dr. Brown's practice, the jury could have reasonably determined the hiring of Dr. Reib would have resulted in a similar increase in revenue. Such a determination finds support in New Mexico law (see, e.g., Ranchers Exploration & Dev. Corp. v. Miles, 102 N.M. 387, 696 P.2d 475, 477 (N.M. 1985) (historic profits [**15] of established business may be considered in determining lost profits) (citing J.R. Watkins Co. v. Eaker, 56 N.M. 385, 244 P.2d 540, 544 (N.M. 1952)), and is particularly sound in light of the similar training and professional backgrounds of Dr. [*1331] Frey and Dr. Reib, and the temporal proximity of the period in which Dr. Frey began his employment with Dr. Brown to the period in which Presbyterian Healthcare Services interfered with the hiring of Dr. Reib. Finally, from Dr. McDonald's testimony concerning the amount of additional costs Dr. Brown would have incurred from increased patient revenues, the jury could have reached a rational conclusion as to the amount of lost profits Dr. Brown's practice incurred due to Presbyterian Healthcare Services' tortious interference with contract.

As explained in Restatement (Second) of Torts, HN4 once an injured person establishes his business or transaction would have been profitable, it is not fatal to the recovery of substantial damages that he is unable to prove with definiteness the amount of the profits he would have made or the amount of harm that the defendant has caused. It is only essential that he present such evidence as might reasonably be [**16] expected to be available under the circumstances.

Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 912\(d\), at 483 (1979). Given the circumstances of this case, we believe the evidence concerning the increase in revenues resulting from the recruitment of Dr. Frey was a reasonable method of establishing damages. This is especially so in light of the fact that the certainty of damages "was 'made hypothetical by the very wrong' of the defendant." See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 774A comt. c (1979). We find the jury's award of compensatory damages to be reasonably based upon sufficient evidence in the record, and we therefore reverse the district court's order vacating this award.

Having reversed the district court's order vacating the jury's award of compensatory damages for tortious interference with contract, we must next determine whether its order setting aside the jury's award of punitive damages on this claim should stand. The district court set aside the punitive damages award solely because it was dependent on the jury's award of compensatory damages on the tortious interference claim. Since we have reinstated the compensatory damages award, the punitive damages award likewise [**17] must be reinstated. We therefore reverse the district court's order vacating the jury's award of punitive damages on the tortious interference with contract claim.

Dr. Brown also contends the district court erred in setting aside the jury's award of punitive damages against Dr. Williams on the antitrust claim. HN5 The district court did so pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 59\(e\), which ruling we review for abuse of discretion. Webber v. Mefford, 43 F.3d 1340, 1345 (10th Cir. 1994). HN6 Under the abuse of discretion standard, a trial court's decision will not be disturbed unless the appellate court has a definite and firm conviction that the lower court made a clear error of judgment or exceeded the bounds of permissible choice in the circumstances. When we apply the "abuse of discretion" standard, we defer to the trial court's judgment because of its first-hand ability to view the witness or evidence and assess credibility and probative value.

Moothart v. Bell, 21 F.3d 1499, 1504 (10th Cir. 1994) (quoting McEwen v. City of Norman, 926 F.2d 1539, 1553-54 (10th Cir. 1991)). In this circuit, abuse of discretion is defined as "an arbitrary, capricious, whimsical, [**18] or manifestly unreasonable judgment." FDIC v. Oldenburg, 34 F.3d 1529, 1555 (10th Cir. 1994) (quoting United States v. Hernandez-Herrera, 952 F.2d 342, 343 (10th Cir. 1991)).

In the present case, the jury found Dr. Williams liable on the antitrust conspiracy claims and awarded punitive damages against her in the amount of $ 75,000.00. Thereafter, in accordance with 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) \(1994\),<sup>8</sup> the district court entered an award of treble damages against Dr. Williams on the antitrust claims. However, the district court vacated the jury's award of punitive damages against Dr. Williams, noting such an award would be duplicative because [*1332] the treble damages provision already embodies punitive damages.

Dr. Brown now contends the district court erroneously set aside the punitive damages award because "the [**19] Defendants proposed a verdict form calling for punitive damages for antitrust violations." According to Dr. Brown, the defendants "invited" the jury to erroneously award punitive damages against Dr. Williams, and consequently, the defendants are now precluded from seeking judicial review of this "invited error." As an initial matter, the court notes HN8[] it is clearly improper to allow a plaintiff to recover punitive damages along with trebled damages on an antitrust claim. "Punitive damages beyond the statutory trebled damages cannot be awarded for an antitrust violation. The enhancement of damages in an antitrust case is the damages trebled." McDonald v. Johnson & Johnson, 722 F.2d 1370, 1381 (8th Cir. 1983) (citing Clark Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 148 F.2d 580, 582 (8th Cir.) (treble damage provision encompasses both punitive and compensatory damages), cert. denied, 326 U.S. 734, 90 L. Ed. 437, 66 S. Ct. 42 (1945)). See also Spence v. Southeastern Alaska Pilots' Ass'n, 789 F. Supp. 1014, 1029 \(D. Alaska 1992\) ("punitive damages are not available on federal anti-trust claims").

Notwithstanding the patent impropriety of allowing a plaintiff to recover punitive damages on an antitrust claim, [**20] Dr. Brown argues Dr. Williams' failure to object to the jury instructions and verdict sheet that permitted the recovery of such damages serves to preclude subsequent judicial review of the jury's award of punitive damages. As Dr. Brown points out, HN9[] an appellant may not generally complain on appeal of errors he has himself induced or invited. See, e.g., Meredith v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 18 F.3d 890 \(10th Cir. 1994\) (citing Gundy v. United States, 728 F.2d 484, 488 \(10th Cir. 1984\)). However, HN10[] where the jury has returned a special verdict, the trial judge is obligated to apply appropriate legal principles to the facts found by the jury. Thedorf v. Lipsey, 237 F.2d 190, 193 \(7th Cir. 1956\). "It is for the court to decide upon the jury's answers ... what the resulting legal obligation is." Id. Moreover, HN11[] in determining whether to grant or deny a Rule 59\(e\) motion to alter or amend the judgment, the district court is vested with considerable discretion. Edward H. Bohlin Co. v. Banning Co., 6 F.3d 350, 355 \(5th Cir. 1993\) (citing Lavespere v. Niagara Machine & Tool Works, Inc., 910 F.2d 167, 174 \(5th Cir. 1990\)). The district court may grant a motion to alter or amend the [**21] judgment where it is necessary to correct manifest errors of law. Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 2d § 2810.1, at 124-25 (1995).

In the case at bar, the jury instructions and special verdict form were exhaustive and labyrinthine. The jury's responsibilities included determining the liability of six defendants for as many as seven distinct claims. The special verdict form alone was twelve pages and contained more than thirty individual questions. Given the numerous parties, claims and overall complexity of the case, we do not believe the trial judge abused his discretion in vacating the jury's award of punitive damages against Dr. Williams. As stated in the district court's Memorandum Opinion and Order, "it would have been impractical and confusing to the jury to have drafted the special verdict to include all of the combinations of circumstances under which punitive damages could or could not have been awarded against various defendants." HN12[] The district court's decision to vacate the award of punitive damages served to correct a manifest error of law and did not prejudice Dr. Brown. Under these circumstances, we are not left with "a definite [**22] and firm conviction that the lower court made a clear error of judgment or exceeded the bounds of permissible choice in the circumstances." Hence, we affirm the district court's order vacating the award of punitive damages against Dr. Williams.

---

<sup>8</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) HN7[] provides in pertinent part, "any person who shall be injured ... by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws ... shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained."

IV. Appeal of Presbyterian Healthcare Services, Dr. Williams and Ms. Miller

Presbyterian Healthcare Services, Dr. Williams and Ms. Miller contend the district court erred in: (1) failing to find the defendants immune, as a matter of law, from antitrust and defamation damages under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act and (2) failing to grant judgment as a matter of law in the defendants' favor on the merits of [*1333] Dr. Brown's antitrust and defamation claims. As stated, HN13[<sup>13</sup>] we review the denial of a motion for judgment as a matter of law de novo, applying the same legal standard used by the district court. Thompson, 34 F.3d at 941. Judgment as a matter of law should only be granted if the evidence, when viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, could not support a verdict in that party's favor. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 257.

First, the defendants argue the trial court erred in failing to find them immune, [**23] as a matter of law, from damages resulting from the revocation of Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges, under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act. In 1986, Congress adopted the Health Care Quality Improvement Act in response to "the increasing occurrence of medical malpractice and the need to improve the quality of medical care." See 42 U.S.C. § 11101\(1\), \(2\) \(1994\). Recognizing "the threat of private money damage liability ... unreasonably discourages physicians from participating in effective professional peer review," see 42 U.S.C. § 11101\(4\), Congress deemed it essential for the legislation to provide qualified immunity from damages actions for hospitals, doctors and others who participate in professional peer review proceedings. Imperial v. Suburban Hosp. Ass'n, Inc., 37 F.3d 1026, 1028 \(4th Cir. 1994\). Thus, HN14[<sup>14</sup>] under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act, a peer review participant is immune from private damage claims stemming from the peer review action provided the review action is taken:

- (1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care,
- (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter,
- (3) [**24] after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and
- (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirement of paragraph (3).

42 U.S.C. §§ 11111\(a\)\(1\), 11112\(a\) \(1994\). HN15[<sup>15</sup>] A peer review action is presumed to have met the preceding standards necessary for immunity. 42 U.S.C. § 11112. However, if a plaintiff challenging a peer review action proves, by a preponderance of the evidence, any one of the four requirements was not satisfied, the peer review body is no longer afforded immunity from damages under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act. 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\); see, e.g., Islami v. Covenant Medical Center, Inc., 822 F. Supp. 1361, 1377-78 \(N.D. Iowa 1992\) (review participants not entitled to immunity as matter of law because plaintiff presented sufficient evidence for a jury to conclude review participants did not provide plaintiff with fair and adequate process). Courts apply an objective standard in determining whether a peer review action was [**25] reasonable under 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\). See, e.g., Mathews v. Lancaster Gen'l Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 635 \(3d Cir. 1996\); Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 734 \(9th Cir. 1992\).

In the present case, the formal peer review hearing was held to determine whether Dr. Brown had agreed to seek consultation for high-risk obstetrical patients and if so, whether Dr. Brown had breached this agreement. During the hearing, Ms. Miller outlined the hospital's position, and the Panel reviewed the charts of two patients Dr. Brown treated. Both Dr. Williams and Dr. Brown testified at the hearing. Following approximately two hours of deliberations, the review panel concluded Dr. Brown had breached her agreement to obtain appropriate consultation and recommended removal of Dr. Brown's privileges to practice obstetrics at Lincoln County Medical Center.

At trial, Dr. Brown presented sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find, by a preponderance of the evidence, the peer review action was not taken after a "reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter." Dr. Norman Lindley, a physician specializing in obstetrics and gynecology, testified on behalf of Dr. Brown. Dr. Lindley reviewed the [**26] charts for every obstetrics patient Dr. Brown treated for the six-month period preceding her revocation and concluded Dr. Brown recognized high-risk obstetrics patients and obtained [*1334] appropriate consultation when necessary. Dr. Lindley also testified the peer review panel's review of only two charts prior to revoking Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges was unreasonably narrow and did not provide a reasonable basis for concluding Dr. Brown posed a threat to patient safety.

Thus, from Dr. Lindley's testimony, a reasonable jury could have found the panel's review to be unreasonably restrictive and not taken after a "reasonable effort to obtain the facts." Such a finding removes the defendants from the qualified immunity provided by the Health Care Quality Improvement Act. Hence, we conclude the district court did not err in failing to find Presbyterian Healthcare Services, Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams immune, as a matter of law, from damages stemming from the revocation of Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges.<sup>9</sup>

[**27] Next, Ms. Miller argues the district court erred in failing to find her immune, as a matter of law, from damages on Dr. Brown's defamation claim. HN17↑ The Health Care Quality Improvement Act confers immunity on any person who makes a report to the National Practitioner Data Bank "without knowledge of the falsity of the information contained in the report." 42 U.S.C. § 11137\(c\) \(1994\). Thus, immunity for reporting exists as a matter of law unless there is sufficient evidence for a jury to conclude the report was false and the reporting party knew it was false.

Although the data bank report in this case listed the reason for Lincoln County Medical Center's disciplinary action as "negligence/incompetence/mal-practice," the record reveals neither the review panel nor the hospital's Board of Trustees ever found Dr. Brown negligent, incompetent or guilty of malpractice. Rather, the review panel merely determined Dr. Brown breached her agreement to obtain appropriate consultation. Although the panel members were "concerned that [Dr. Brown] does not recognize complicated obstetrics or is reluctant to refer such cases," the panel "felt that Dr. Brown was competent to do uncomplicated obstetrics." [**28] Ms. Miller, who was involved in the preparation and review of the report, received a copy of the committee's written findings and was fully aware of the committee's conclusions and the Board of Trustee's action against Dr. Brown. Thus, the record contains sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could have concluded the data bank report was false and Ms. Miller knew of its falsity. We therefore affirm the district court's determination Ms. Miller is not immune from defamation damages, as a matter of law, under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act.

Presbyterian Healthcare Services, Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams also claim the district court erred in failing to enter judgment as a matter of law in their favor on the merits of Dr. Brown's antitrust claims. The jury in this case determined Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams joined in a conspiracy to exclude Dr. Brown from competing in the Ruidoso, New Mexico, market. However, the jury did not conclude Presbyterian Healthcare Services participated in the conspiracy. [*1335] Since the decision to revoke Dr. Brown's medical privileges was made by an independent, nonconspirator (Lincoln County Medical Center's Board of Trustees), the defendants [**29] contend Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams could not have proximately caused the revocation and, therefore, cannot be held liable for Dr. Brown's injuries.

<sup>9</sup>The defendants appear to argue the testimony of Dr. Lindley is irrelevant because the defendants presented evidence from a number of doctors who testified the review panel's actions satisfied the requirements of 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\). According to the defendants, "a difference of opinion among experts" does not raise an issue as to the objective reasonableness of the inquiry. We are not persuaded by the defendant's view. Under its theory, a peer review participant would be absolutely immune from liability for its actions so long as it produced a single expert to testify the requirements of 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\) were satisfied. This would be in direct contravention to Congress' intention to provide "qualified immunity." Moreover, to remove a plaintiff's claims from the jury simply because "a difference of opinion among experts" exists would abrogate the jury's responsibility to weigh the evidence and determine the credibility of witnesses. See, e.g., Moe v. Avions Marcel Dassault-Breguet Aviation, 727 F.2d 917, 930 (10th Cir.) ("entire jury system is anchored to the jurors' determination of credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony"), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 853, 83 L. Ed. 2d 110, 105 S. Ct. 176 (1984). Thus, HN16↑ in determining whether a peer review participant is immune under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act, the proper inquiry for the court is whether Dr. Brown has provided sufficient evidence to permit a jury to find she has overcome, by a preponderance of the evidence, any of the four statutory elements required for immunity under 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\). See, e.g., Austin, 979 F.2d at 734. In this case, we believe Dr. Brown presented sufficient evidence to overcome the presumption and allow the issue to be decided by the jury.

HN18 [↑] A private plaintiff seeking to invoke the antitrust laws must show the defendants caused her alleged injury. Todorov v. DCH HealthCare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1459 (11th Cir. 1991) (citing Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986)). The key question in determining the defendants' ability to "cause a restraint [of trade] to be imposed" is whether the defendants had control over the decisionmaking process, or the ability to coerce or unduly influence the decision. See Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 705-06 (4th Cir. 1991) (medical staff had no control where Board of Trustees requested and encouraged medical staff to take corrective action), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992); Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 819 n.57 (3d Cir. 1984) (given dominant role of medical staff and limited nature of review, evidence supported jury's finding medical staff violated antitrust laws), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985); Islami v. Covenant Medical Center, Inc., 822 F. Supp. 1361, 1383 (**301) (N.D. Iowa 1992) (medical staff had ability to coerce or unduly influence decision). HN19 [↑] Where a reasonable jury could conclude from the evidence that the defendants controlled, coerced, or unduly influenced the decision that resulted in a restraint of trade, a genuine issue of material fact exists on the issue of causation. Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 705-06; Weiss, 745 F.2d at 819 n.57; Islami, 822 F. Supp. at 1383.

Here, neither Ms. Miller nor Dr. Williams voted on the decision to revoke Dr. Brown's obstetrical privileges. However, the record reveals both Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams played an influential role in bringing about the revocation. The jury heard evidence at trial which tended to show Dr. Williams, a competitor of Dr. Brown, and Teresa McCallum, a nurse who had made anti-semitic remarks about Dr. Brown in Dr. Williams' presence, were responsible for identifying all five of Dr. Brown's charts that were reviewed during the two peer review proceedings. Dr. Williams authored the criticisms that Ms. Miller sent to the outside reviewing physicians, and she testified against Dr. Brown at the revocation peer review proceeding. Ms. Miller asked Dr. Williams to prepare the summary [**31] of criticisms that were attached to the cases sent to the outside reviewing physicians even though Dr. Brown had complained to Ms. Miller about a personality conflict between Dr. Williams and Dr. Brown. Furthermore, Ms. Miller instituted the formal peer review proceedings against Dr. Brown by sending a complaint to the Medical Staff Executive Committee, she presented the "hospital's position" at the formal review proceeding, and she served on the Board of Trustees.

Thus, the record is replete with evidence tending to show Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams were the catalysts behind, or played a crucial role in, every step of the proceedings against Dr. Brown. Viewing the entire evidence in the light most favorable to Dr. Brown, we believe a reasonable jury could have concluded Dr. Williams and Dr. Brown controlled, coerced or unduly influenced the decisionmaking process. We therefore affirm the district court's denial of the defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law on the merits of Dr. Brown's antitrust claims.

Finally, Ms. Miller argues the district court erred in failing to grant judgment as a matter of law in her favor on the merits of Dr. Brown's defamation claim. According [**32] to Ms. Miller, Dr. Brown failed to establish the data bank report caused actual injury to her reputation. HN20 [↑] Under New Mexico law, a plaintiff must prove actual injury to state a claim for defamation; damages cannot be presumed in a defamation action. Newberry v. Allied Stores, Inc., 108 N.M. 424, 773 P.2d 1231, 1236 (N.M. 1989) (citing Poorbaugh v. Mullen, 99 N.M. 11, 653 P.2d 511, 520 (N.M. Ct. App.), cert. denied, 99 N.M. 47, 653 P.2d 878 (N.M. 1982)). However, actual injury is not limited to out-of-pocket loss. Id.; see also Cowan v. Powell, 115 N.M. 603, 856 P.2d 251, 253 (N.M. Ct. App. 1993). As stated by the New Mexico [*1336] Supreme Court in Newberry, "the more customary types of actual harm inflicted by defamatory falsehood include impairment of reputation and standing in the community, personal humiliation, and mental anguish and suffering." 773 P.2d at 1236 (quoting Marchiondo v. Brown, 98 N.M. 394, 649 P.2d 462, 470 (N.M. 1982)).

In the case at bar, the record reveals Dr. Brown sought to obtain obstetrical privileges at Gerald Champion Memorial Hospital after the revocation by Lincoln County Medical Center. Pursuant to federal regulations, every hospital that receives an application for clinical privileges must [**33] check with the National Practitioner Data Bank for reports on the applicant. 45 C.F.R. § 60.10(a)(1) (1995). Thus, as part of the application process at Gerald Champion Memorial Hospital, Dr. Brown had to undergo a hearing and explain the reason Lincoln County Medical Center revoked her obstetrical privileges. As the district court found, we believe sufficient evidence exists for a jury to have concluded Dr. Brown suffered impairment of reputation and standing in the community or personal humiliation when she had to explain why Lincoln County Medical Center revoked her privileges based on "negligence/incompetence/malpractice." Although Gerald Champion Memorial Hospital ultimately granted obstetrical privileges to Dr. Brown, "an opportunity for rebuttal seldom suffices to undo harm [sic] of defamatory falsehood." See Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 344 n.9, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789, 94 S. Ct. 2997 (1974). We therefore affirm the district court's decision to deny the defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law on the merits of Dr. Brown's defamation claim.

V. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, we REVERSE the district court's order and judgment vacating the jury's award of compensatory [**34] and punitive damages on Dr. Brown's tortious interference with contract claim. We AFFIRM the judgment of the district court in all other respects.

---

End of Document

Amarel v. Connell

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

June 13, 1996, Argued, Submitted, San Francisco, California ; December 2, 1996, Filed

Nos. 94-15803, 95-16121

Reporter

102 F.3d 1494 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 34400 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,638; 97 Daily Journal DAR 569; 45 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. (Callaghan) 1390; 36 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 1

J. WILLIAM AMAREL; JACK E. CARRICO and PAMELA FAWN CARRICO; REASON FARMS; STARKEY RANCH, INC.; DANLEY BROS., INC.; RODRICK RANCH, INC.; ALLEN ETCHEPARE; A. CHARLES ETCHEVARRY; SOHNREY RANCHES; JAY DEE GARR; MAXWELL SPYRES; MORLEY GREEN, aka NOR-CAL BROKERAGE; YUBA FARMS CO.; JOHNSON EQUITIES, INC.; LAMBIRTH, C. FARMS, INC.; MCKNIGHT, J.H. RANCH, INC.; LARRY E. MIDDLETON; HENRY C. MOORE, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. GROVER CONNELL; CONNELL RICE AND SUGAR CO.; JOSEPH L. ALIOTO, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [**1] As Amended January 15, 1997.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. Nos. CV-89-00558-BAC, CV-89-00558-VRW. Barbara A. Caulfield, District Judge, Presiding in 94-15803. Vaughn R. Walker, District Judge, Presiding in 95-16121.

Original Opinion Previously Reported at: 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 30966.

Disposition: Affirmed the judgment for defendants on plaintiffs' monopolization claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act and the California Unfair Practices Act. Reversed the judgment for defendants on plaintiffs' restraint of trade claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the California Cartwright Act, and remanded the case for a new trial solely on the restraint of trade claims. Reversed the district court's award of costs and direct the district court to await resolution of plaintiffs' restraint of trade claims before determining whether an award of costs is appropriate.

Core Terms

---

rice, plaintiffs', defendants', prices, district court, antitrust, farmers, costs, cooperatives, sham, restraint of trade, anticompetitive, lawsuit, competitors, cross-examination, tons, monopolize, monopoly, anti trust law, predatory, Sherman Act, matter of law, time limit, per ton, conspiracy, exhibits, allegations, boycott, markets, export

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

Antitrust standing is a question of law that an appeals court reviews de novo. The issue of antitrust standing may be raised at any stage of litigation. Whenever it appears that standing has not been established and has not been conceded, an element necessary for the plaintiff to prevail is lacking.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN2 [down arrow] Remedies, Damages

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), allows recovery of treble damages by any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. The language of this provision is very broad and, read literally, could afford relief to all persons whose injuries are causally related to an antitrust violation. It is well-settled, however, that despite the sweeping language of § 4, Congress did not intend to provide a private remedy for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Commercial Law \(UCC\) > Sales \(Article 2\) > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

Courts are to consider certain factors in determining whether a plaintiff, who has suffered an injury which bears a causal connection to the alleged antitrust violation, also satisfies the more demanding standard for antitrust standing. These factors are: (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

102 F.3d 1494, *1494LÁ1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 34400, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Standing

Antitrust standing involves a case-by-case analysis of the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them. No single factor is decisive. The court must balance the factors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Remedies

It is well-settled that a plaintiff must prove the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. An injury will not qualify as antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition. As a corollary to the requirement that the alleged injury be related to anti-competitive behavior, the injured party must be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Standing

Losses a competitor suffers as a result of predatory pricing are a form of antitrust injury because predatory pricing has the requisite anticompetitive effect against competitors. When defendants engage in predatory pricing or other anticompetitive acts in an attempt to gain a monopoly, the competitor who is being driven out of the market is the party with standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Standing

A competitor of an alleged attempted monopolist has standing where it is either driven out of business or suffers reduced profits because of the alleged anticompetitive acts of the attempted monopolist.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Reversible Errors

HN9[ Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The appeals court reviews challenges to trial court management for abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

HN10[ Judges, Discretionary Powers

A district court is generally free to impose reasonable time limits on a trial. Time limits may be used to prevent undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Governments > Courts > Judges

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

HN11[ Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The appeals court reviews for abuse of discretion a district judge's decision to reconsider an interlocutory order by another judge of the same court.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

Governments > Courts > Judges

HN12[ Judicial Officers, Judges

The interlocutory orders and rulings made pre-trial by a district judge are subject to modification by the district judge at any time prior to final judgment, and may be modified to the same extent if the case is reassigned to another judge.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN13 [blue download icon] Judges, Discretionary Powers

A district court is vested with broad discretion to make discovery and evidentiary rulings conducive to the conduct of a fair and orderly trial. Within a district court's broad discretion lies both the power to exclude or admit expert testimony, and to exclude testimony of witnesses whose use at trial is in bad faith or would unfairly prejudice an opposing party. In addition, the district court has broad discretion over the admission of rebuttal evidence.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] Judges, Discretionary Powers

District courts should generally allow amendments of pre-trial orders provided three criteria are met: (1) no substantial injury will be occasioned to the opposing party, (2) refusal to allow the amendment might result in injustice to the movant, and (3) the inconvenience to the court is slight.

Civil Procedure > Trials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > Mandatory Disclosures

HN15 [blue download icon] Civil Procedure, Trials

The factors a district court must consider where a party seeks to call a witness who does not appear on the witness list are: (1) the prejudice or surprise of the party against whom the excluded witness testifies; (2) the ability of that party to cure the prejudice; (3) the extent to which calling the witness would disrupt the orderly and efficient trial; and (4) bad faith or willfulness in failing to comply with the court's order.

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Demonstrative Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Summaries

HN16 [blue download icon] Types of Evidence, Demonstrative Evidence

See Fed. R. Evid. 1006.

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Summaries

Evidence > ... > Documentary Evidence > Writings > General Overview

HN17 [blue download icon] Documentary Evidence, Summaries

A proponent of a summary exhibit must establish a foundation that (1) the underlying materials on which the summary exhibit is based are admissible in evidence, and (2) those underlying materials were made available to the opposing party for inspection. The purpose of the availability requirement is to give the opposing party an opportunity to verify the reliability and accuracy of the summary prior to trial. Where a party fails to make available materials underlying a summary exhibit, that summary exhibit is inadmissible.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Reversible Error > Evidence

Evidence > ... > Expert Witnesses > Credibility of Witnesses > Impeachment

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Ultimate Issue

HN18 [blue icon] Reversible Error, Evidence

Evidentiary rulings should not be reversed absent some prejudice.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appeals court reviews de novo the district court's grant of directed verdict.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

A directed verdict is proper when the evidence permits only one reasonable conclusion. The evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of that party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides that those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability. This general rule encompasses private actions that attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly, as well as the approach of citizens to administrative agencies and to courts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

102 F.3d 1494, *1494LÁ1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 34400, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

**HN22** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Noerr-Pennington antitrust immunity does not apply, however, when the activity is a mere sham to cover an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN23** Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

To be a sham, a lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively baseless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN24** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in sham litigation, and is an absolute defense to allegations of sham litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN25** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields from antitrust liability efforts to influence legislators and members of the executive branch.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

**HN26** Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

102 F.3d 1494, *1494LÁ1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 34400, **1

The appeals court reviews for abuse of discretion a district court's formulation of civil jury instructions.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN27 [blue icon] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appeals court reviews de novo the district court's decision to enter judgment as a matter of law, and must view conflicting evidence in the light most favorable to the non-movant, and determine whether the proffered result is the only reasonable conclusion.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN28 [blue icon] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(b\).

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

In directing the entry of judgment in the wake of a jury's failure to return a verdict, a district court must accept as true facts that necessarily were established by the jury's verdict.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 provides that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any person or persons, to monopolize trade shall be guilty of an antitrust violation. Claims for violation of § 2 must allege two key elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power. Because § 2 claims require proof of a defendant's market power in the form of monopolistic control, they inevitably encompass a smaller pool of anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

**HN31** [] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To establish a violation of the Sherman Act Section, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 for attempted monopolization, a private plaintiff seeking damages must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power; and (4) casual antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN32** [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, broadly prohibits concerted action that unreasonably restrains trade. Section 1 encompasses a wide variety of anticompetitive practices, including horizontal and vertical price fixing, horizontal and vertical restraints on such non-price factors as territories and customers, tying agreements, exclusive dealing agreements, and, finally, anticompetitive boycotts or concerted refusals to deal, as plaintiffs alleged in this case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN33 [L] Sherman Act, Claims

Unlike Sherman Act §2, 15 U.S.C.S. §2 claims, Sherman Act §1, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, restraint of trade claims need not establish the threshold showing of monopoly control over a relevant market. To show a violation of §1, a plaintiff must establish a contract, conspiracy or combination intended to restrain competition and which actually has an anticompetitive effect.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

HN34 [L] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Because the decision to award costs ordinarily resides in the district court, the appeals court reviews such decisions for an abuse of discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN35 [L] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Fed. R. Civ. P. 54\(d\)\(1\) provides that costs shall be allowed as of course to the prevailing party unless the court otherwise directs. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54\(d\)\(1\) creates a presumption in favor of awarding costs to the prevailing party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Taxation Issues

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN36 [L] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Where a reviewing court reverses a district court's judgment for the prevailing party, both the underlying judgment and the taxation of costs undertaken pursuant to that judgment are reversed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

HN37 [blue icon] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

A party in whose favor judgment is rendered is generally the prevailing party for purposes of awarding costs under Fed. R. Civ. P. 54\(d\). In the event of a mixed judgment, however, it is within the discretion of a district court to require each party to bear its own costs.

Counsel: Howard I. Langer and Kenneth L. Fox, Berger & Montague, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Eugene Crew and Margaret C. McHugh, Townsend & Townsend, Khourie & Crew, San Francisco, California; and Mitchell Blumenthal, Alexander Anolik, San [\[\*2\]](#) Francisco, California, for the defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: Mary M. Schroeder and Michael Daly Hawkins, Circuit Judges, and James M. Fitzgerald, * District Judge. Opinion by Judge Hawkins.

Opinion by: HAWKINS

Opinion

---

[*1499] OPINION

HAWKINS, Circuit Judge:

This appeal arose out of a complex, lengthy, and bitterly contested antitrust suit. Plaintiffs-appellants, independent California rice farmers, appeal the district court's March 1994 judgment for defendants-appellees, a rice exporter, its president, and its lawyer. That judgment was based in part on a jury verdict for defendants as to plaintiffs' Section 2 Sherman Act conspiracy claims and violations of the California Unfair Practices Act, and in part on the district court's judgment as a matter of law for defendants as to plaintiffs' claims for conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and California's Cartwright Act.

The litigants raise numerous procedural and substantive issues on appeal. Defendants insist plaintiffs lack standing to maintain this antitrust action. Plaintiffs [\[\*3\]](#) allege several instances of trial error, challenge the district court's rulings involving antitrust immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and argue that it was error for the district court to enter judgment as a matter of law as to the restraint of trade claims on which the jury was divided. Plaintiffs also appeal the district court's post-trial award to defendants of nearly $ 100,000 in costs.

We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.<sup>1</sup>

[*1500] FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

---

* Honorable James M. Fitzgerald, Senior United States District Judge for the District of Alaska, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup> Because the district court ordered separate trials of plaintiffs' claims and defendants' counterclaims, defendants' counterclaims remain pending in district court. Jurisdiction is nonetheless appropriate because the district court entered final judgment for defendants as to plaintiffs' claims, and certified the judgment for appeal pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54\(b\).

I. The Rice Industry

A. Crisis in the World Rice Market

The marketplace can be a harsh teacher and it certainly was here. [**4] These events have their beginning in 1980, when a worldwide rice shortage drove prices on the international rice market to record highs. The following year, many rice farmers reacted to these abnormally high prices by substantially increasing rice production. This, in turn, resulted in an oversupply of rice and the collapse of world rice prices in 1981.

The 1980 shortage was especially severe in the Republic of Korea ("Korea"), which had experienced a domestic rice crop failure as a consequence of bad weather. To meet domestic demand, Korea needed to import large quantities of rice. In light of the Korean shortage, the United States agreed to the export of one million tons of rice from Japan to Korea. That decision invoked an emergency exception to a U.S.-Japan bilateral agreement, executed earlier in 1980, which prohibited Japan from "dumping" rice on markets to which U.S. companies exported rice.

In exchange for this exemption, Korea committed in early 1981 to the purchase of certain rice quotas from the United States: (1) 200,000 tons of 1980 U.S. Southern short grain rice,<sup>2</sup> (2) the remaining balance of the 1980 California rice crop,<sup>3</sup> and (3) 500,000 tons of the 1981 California [**5] rice crop.

The current litigation was precipitated by the alleged actions of certain participants in the California rice market in responding to Korea's commitment to purchase rice from United States producers. The response transpired against a backdrop of continuing decline in rice prices occasioned by the 1981 world rice surplus.

B. The Parties

Plaintiffs are nineteen<sup>4</sup> independent California rice farmers who grow California rice, harvest it in "rough" or "paddy" form, and sell it to a handful of independent rice mills: Pacific International Rice Mills, Inc. ("PIRMI"), Comet Rice of California, and Grosjean Rice Milling.<sup>5</sup> The independent rice mills then mill the rice and sell it in milled form. The independent rice growers generally sell paddy rice to the independent mills through [**6] "participation contracts," under which they share profits from the sale of milled rice.

The original defendants in this action included two cooperatives of rice farmers, Farmers Rice Cooperative ("FRC") and Rice Growers Association of California ("RGA").<sup>6</sup> These cooperatives grow, mill, and sell rice. Plaintiffs allege that these cooperatives represent a vertical integration of all phases of rice production. Three defendants are still party to the action: Connell Rice & Sugar Company ("Connell Rice"), the export marketing agent for cooperatives RGA and FRC; Grover Connell, president of Connell Rice; and Joseph L. Alioto, a partner in the San Francisco law firm of Alioto & [**7] Alioto, past president of RGA, and sometime legal counsel to RGA, FRC, and Connell Rice.

C. Rice Sales to Korea

---

<sup>2</sup> Southern short grain rice is grown in the southern United States and resembles the "japonica" rice grown in California and Japan and preferred by Korean consumers.

<sup>3</sup> "California" rice is a variety of "japonica" rice.

<sup>4</sup> Although both parties number plaintiffs at eighteen, nineteen plaintiffs are named, both in the second amended complaint and in the briefs on appeal. This discrepancy apparently stems from the second amended complaint, which lists a husband and wife as one plaintiff.

<sup>5</sup> None of the independent rice mills are parties to this action.

<sup>6</sup> RGA was voluntarily dismissed from this action, and FRC was never served and was dismissed.

1. 1981-82 rice sales to Korea pursuant to Korea's commitment to purchase 200,000 tons of 1980 U.S. Southern short grain rice

On December 12, 1980, defendant Connell Rice bid to sell Southern rice at $ 515 per ton to Korea. Connell Rice was subsequently underbid, however, by an independent rice mill - PIRMI - which won the contract to [*1501] supply Korea with 200,000 tons of 1980 Southern rice at $ 449.50 per ton. A formal contract was executed January 23, 1981 by PIRMI and the Office of Supply of the Republic of Korea ("OSROK"), the Korean government agency responsible for the purchase of rice.

When it came time to perform, PIRMI had insufficient supplies to deliver on the entire 200,000 tons. PIRMI officials blamed this on two things: (1) Connell Rice's purchase of Southern rice (thereby depleting the [**8] overall supply of such rice), and (2) Connell Rice's subsequent sale of that rice to OSROK, both occurring just a few days after PIRMI's January 23, 1981 contract with OSROK. On February 3, 1981, OSROK confirmed that it had purchased 120,000 tons of Southern rice from Connell Rice at $ 449.90 per ton. PIRMI was able to deliver only 105,000 tons of Southern rice to Korea.

To make up for the shortfall on its promised delivery of Southern rice to OSROK, PIRMI offered to substitute 1981 California rice for the Southern rice. By letter of January 22, 1982, PIRMI's president offered to sell OSROK 70,000 tons of California rice at $ 349.90 per ton, a decrease in price of $ 100 per ton from the Southern rice PIRMI was unable to obtain.

On January 25, 1982, while PIRMI was still discussing this substitution with OSROK, Connell Rice, aware that OSROK was negotiating for the purchase of California rice, offered to sell 500,000 tons of California rice at $ 260 per ton.<sup>7</sup>

[**9] Plaintiffs later alleged in their lawsuit that defendants had conspired to depress the price of California rice, and that this conspiracy was part of a larger, prolonged effort to drive both the independent farmers and the independent mills out of business. They claimed they were damaged by defendants' alleged predatory pricing because this pricing reduced the return they earned on the paddy rice they sold to the independent mills for export to Korea.

At trial, plaintiffs attempted to establish that $ 260 per ton was a predatorily low price. A PIRMI official and plaintiffs' expert witness, an agricultural economist, testified that $ 260 was "below the [average] variable cost [of production]." Defendant Grover Connell testified, however, that $ 260 was a competitive price, given the oversupply in the world market at the time.

Simultaneous with its $ 260 bid, Connell Rice made other efforts to sell California rice to Korea. First, Connell Rice's attorney, defendant Joseph Alioto, sent several telegrams on Connell Rice's behalf to OSROK and other Korean officials, including the Korean ambassador to the United States, "requesting the opportunity to bid or negotiate on the competitive [**10] merits of the impending sale of American rice to Korea." Alioto's telegrams also mentioned "disturbing reports that other American suppliers are attempting to persuade you to exclude Connell [Rice] from the business and to deny it even the opportunity to bid or negotiate competitively on the forthcoming sale," and warned that such conduct would be actionable under U.S. antitrust laws.

Second, Connell Rice president Grover Connell accused Korean government officials of having accepted bribes from PIRMI in exchange for rice sale contracts. Such statements sparked investigations of commercial bribery by both the U.S. State Department and the Korean National Assembly. When State Department officials asked Grover Connell why he suspected bribery, he cited the difference between the price PIRMI negotiated with OSROK in early

---

<sup>7</sup> Connell Rice apparently provided the $ 260 price quote in response to OSROK's January 19, 1982 request, by telephone, for a price quote from RGA. Because Connell Rice is RGA's export marketing agent, RGA directed OSROK to contact Connell about the quote.

1981 and the dramatically lower prices Connell Rice had bid, explaining that he inferred bribery from OSROK's alleged "overpayment" to PIRMI.<sup>8</sup> No evidence of bribery was ever found, however.

[**11] [*1502] PIRMI eventually negotiated a contract with OSROK for the sale of 70,000 tons of California rice to substitute for the undelivered Southern rice. The price was $ 280 per ton, a sharp reduction in price from PIRMI's original offer of $ 449.90 per ton. PIRMI officials testified at trial that the substitution of California rice at $ 280 per ton for Southern rice at $ 449.90 per ton caused them losses of $ 12 million.

2. 1981-82 rice sales to Korea in connection with Korea's commitment to purchase 500,000 tons of 1980 California rice

Korea counted the 70,000 tons of California rice it bought from PIRMI toward its commitment to purchase 500,000 tons of the 1981 California rice crop; it also counted a 60,000-ton purchase from Agroprom, a Swiss company, toward that quota. By March 1982, therefore, Korea needed to purchase an additional 370,000 tons to meet its commitment.

In March 1982, OSROK solicited bids on its remaining 370,000 ton commitment. Connell Rice offered to supply all 370,000 tons at $ 249 per ton; shortly thereafter, Connell Rice lowered its bid to $ 246 per ton. Independent rice mill Comet later matched Connell Rice's $ 246 per ton offer. At trial, plaintiffs attempted [**12] to prove that Connell Rice's price was below the independent farmers' cost of production and therefore was a predatory price.

In May 1982, Comet was awarded the entire contract to supply Korea with rice at $ 246 per ton. However, Comet had only 120,000 tons of California rice available to sell. Between May and November of 1982, Comet negotiated with rice cooperatives RGA and FRC in an attempt to purchase the 250,000 tons it needed to meet its commitment to Korea. Comet and the cooperatives were never able to agree on a price. Plaintiffs later alleged Connell Rice and the cooperatives had boycotted and refused to deal with Comet, while defendants insisted that Comet simply rejected the cooperatives' repeated offers. Comet eventually satisfied the contract by renegotiating with Korea to substitute 1982 California rice.

II. Origins of the Litigation

In late 1985, plaintiffs brought federal antitrust claims and related state-law claims against several defendants: Connell Rice, Grover Connell, cooperatives FRC and RGA, Joseph Alioto, and James Robert Errecarte, former CEO of RGA.<sup>9</sup>

[**13] Plaintiffs' first cause of action was for monopoly, attempted monopoly, and conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Plaintiffs alleged rice cooperatives FRC and RGA were vertically integrated operations that had conspired with the other defendants to monopolize all three markets in the California rice industry: the California paddy rice market, the market for the milling of California rice, and the California milled rice market.

First, plaintiffs alleged that FRC and RGA "acting jointly as a combination controlled over seventy-five per cent of all paddy rice grown in California" while the independent farmers controlled the remaining twenty-five per cent. They alleged that the two rice milling cooperatives operated a monopoly or, in the alternative, a combination posing a "dangerous probability" of achieving a monopoly.

<sup>8</sup>Several members of Congress apparently took seriously the charge that Korea had paid inflated prices for U.S. rice: 111 members of Congress signed a letter to the president of Korea, accusing the Korean government of "improprieties in the purchase of U.S. rice."

<sup>9</sup>The sole defendants to go to trial were Connell Rice, Grover Connell, and Joseph Alioto. RGA and Errecarte were voluntarily dismissed with prejudice in 1986. FRC was apparently never served and was dismissed in 1986.

Second, plaintiffs alleged that FRC and RGA "acting jointly as a combination controlled over seventy-five per cent of all milled California rice," while the three independent rice mills - Comet, PIRMI, and Grosjean - divided the remaining twenty-five per cent of the milled rice market. Plaintiffs alleged FRC and RGA were, [**14] together, a monopoly or, in the alternative, a combination with a "dangerous probability" of achieving a monopoly. Third, plaintiffs alleged that FRC and RGA used their monopoly power in paddy rice and in milled rice to control the intervening market: the market for rice milling, the process whereby paddy rice is converted into milled rice. Finally, plaintiffs alleged that Connell Rice controlled over [*1503] ninety per cent of the submarket for the export of California rice to Korea during the period 1968 through 1981, and alleged that this degree of control constituted a monopoly. Connell Rice was also alleged to have a monopoly in the market for the export of California rice under the P.L. 480 export scheme.

Also contained in plaintiffs' first cause of action was the claim that defendants had a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs alleged a far-reaching, decades-long conspiracy among defendants to "eliminate independent rice purchasers and independent rice mills from the market for milled California rice and to eliminate independent growers of California paddy rice by driving [the] growers [**15] from the market or forcing them to become members of [one of the rice cooperatives]."

In support of their claim, the independent rice farmers alleged a long history of anticompetitive behavior by the rice cooperatives. They alleged the cooperatives had acquired several independent rice mills over the years; had used their alleged monopoly power to manipulate prices for paddy rice and milled rice with the aim of eliminating the independent farmers and mills; had refused to sell competitively priced paddy rice to the independent mills; had paid independent rice farmers discriminatorily high prices to prevent the sale of paddy rice to the independent mills; had refused to sell competitively priced milled rice to actual or potential customers of the independent mills; had charged predatorily low prices for milled rice to prevent the independent rice mills from selling their milled rice; and had excluded independent mills from California port facilities. Finally, with respect to the California rice export market to Korea, the independent rice farmers alleged the rice cooperatives had conspired to sell only the cooperatives' rice to Korea and had bribed Korean officials to obtain a monopoly [**16] in the export market to Korea.

Defendants-appellees Connell Rice, Grover Connell, and Joseph Alioto, it was further alleged, had all acted "in concert" with FRC and RGA in their alleged efforts to eliminate the independent rice mills and independent rice farmers. Plaintiffs accused Alioto of having masterminded the alleged anticompetitive activities.<sup>10</sup>

[**17] A. Allegations of Anticompetitive Activities in 1981-82

Plaintiffs alleged that by 1981, defendants had succeeded in eliminating every major independent rice mill in California except PIRMI and Comet, and in that year launched a final concerted effort to drive these last two independent mills out of the rice business and to eliminate all independent rice farmers by either driving them out of business or forcing them to join the rice cooperatives.

Plaintiffs alleged, first, that defendants used their monopoly power to drive down the price of California paddy rice in 1981 and 1982. Second, plaintiffs alleged that defendants boycotted independent rice mill Comet during this period by refusing to sell it paddy or milled rice. Finally, plaintiffs alleged defendants used their monopoly power to drive down the price of California milled rice from over $ 500 in 1981 to under $ 250 in 1982. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants' activities "destroyed PIRMI" and paved the way for RGA's attempted acquisition of PIRMI's mill operations. That acquisition was later enjoined by a district court order.<sup>11</sup> In addition, [*1504] plaintiffs alleged that defendants had instituted "sham litigation" during [*18] this period. They claimed Connell Rice, Grover Connell, and Joseph Alioto had commenced lawsuits that they "knew to be without merit and which were prosecuted solely for the purpose of injuring competition." Plaintiffs also alleged defendants engaged in "false testimony, false submissions to government agencies and threats to government officials" as well as threats against competitors, in furtherance of their alleged conspiracy.

<sup>10</sup> Plaintiffs accused Alioto of masterminding and perpetrating the alleged monopolization conspiracy for over thirty years, and alleged Alioto had orchestrated defendants' alleged anticompetitive activities in 1981-82. Particular allegations were that Alioto attempted to obstruct Korean contracts with the independent mills by allegedly lying to Korean officials about the price of rice; falsely accusing independent mill PIRMI of bribery of Korean officials; knowingly serving illegal subpoenas on Korean diplomats to deter them from contracting with the independent rice mills; masterminding the alleged sham litigation and sham administrative proceedings aimed at obstructing the independent mills' efforts to sell rice to Korea; and concealing the nature of RGA's attempted purchase of the PIRMI mill in an attempt to evade U.S. Department of Justice antitrust review.

[**19] B. Injuries Alleged and Damages Sought

The independent rice farmers alleged that defendants' actions caused them harm by: (1) restraining trade in the markets for California paddy rice, California milled rice, and the milling of California rice; (2) eliminating independent mills, thereby restricting the independent farmers' ability to sell paddy rice and reducing the number of mills selling California milled rice; (3) denying purchasers of California paddy rice and California milled rice of "the benefits of open and unrestricted competition;" and (4) causing plaintiff independent farmers "monetary injury to their business and property" by causing predatorily low prices for California paddy rice and California milled rice. Plaintiffs sought injunctive relief and treble damages of an unspecified amount.<sup>12</sup>

[**20] III. The Trial

After several years of pre-trial skirmishes and reassignment to several district judges, the suit finally went to a jury trial before Judge Caulfield in 1992. Although defendants had filed various counterclaims,<sup>13</sup> the district court severed plaintiffs' claims from defendants' counterclaims, in view of the complexity of the litigation. The liability phase of the trial lasted approximately seven weeks, running from March 23 to May 14, 1992. The jury rendered its verdict on May 29, 1992. The following are aspects of the trial that are relevant to this appeal.

A. Time Limit

Over plaintiffs' pretrial objection, the district court imposed a time limit on the trial. For the liability phase of the trial, the court allowed each side forty hours for direct and cross-examination, [*21] and allowed each party two hours for opening statements, two hours for closing arguments, and two-and-a-half hours for additional "commentary" to the jury. During the trial, the court granted each side six hours of supplemental time, after asking the lawyers for each side how much additional time they would need to finish trying the case.

<sup>11</sup> The United States Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, filed suit under Sections 7 and 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 18 and 25, seeking to enjoin RGA's acquisition of PIRMI assets. The district court entered judgment for the United States in 1986, finding that the attempted acquisition would result in a market concentration that could "substantially . . . lessen competition in the market for the purchase or acquisition for milling of paddy rice grown in California," and thus would violate Sections 7 and 15 of the Clayton Act. United States v. Rice Growers Ass'n of California, 1986-2 Trade Cases (CCH) [para] 67,287, 1986 WL 12562, * 12 (E.D. Cal. 1986). The district court found that the transaction, which was directed to some extent by Joseph Alioto, appeared "structured so as to avoid the reporting requirements of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement Act of 1976, 15 U.S.C. § 18\(a\)." Id. at * 13.

<sup>12</sup> Plaintiffs also brought monopoly and restraint of trade claims under the Cartwright Act, Calif. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16790 and the California Unfair Practices Act, Calif. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17045-17048 and 17200. Additionally, plaintiffs brought a claim suit under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, alleging defendants' actions "lessened competition or [] tended to create a monopoly in a line of commerce in a section of the country."

<sup>13</sup> Connell Rice's counterclaims allege plaintiffs and the independent rice mills conspired to monopolize the California rice market through commercial bribery, and engaged in abuse of process in bringing their antitrust claims.

B. Evidentiary Rulings

1. Admission of Defense Expert Testimony

In April 1991, during the discovery phase of the litigation, Chief Judge Henderson issued an order prohibiting defendants from introducing any expert testimony at trial. Judge Henderson's order described a series of discovery abuses by defendants. Defendants failed to respond to plaintiffs' July 1988 expert witness interrogatories. Plaintiffs moved twice to compel responses, and hearings were held before Magistrate Trumbull [*1505] in October and November 1988. On November 10, 1988, Magistrate Trumbull ordered defendants to "produce the information regarding their expert witness on the same day as they decide on their expert." Defendants identified Dr. Merrill Bateman as their expert witness in Defendants' December 2, 1988 Pretrial Conference Statement. However, it was not until two [**22] years later, in their December 3, 1990 Supplemental Responses to Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, that defendants furnished plaintiffs' counsel with the information they had requested about defendants' expert. On the basis of defendants' two-year delay in complying with Magistrate Trumbull's discovery order and their earlier discovery delays, Judge Henderson granted plaintiffs' Motion to Preclude Defendants from Adducing Expert Testimony. The order was a sanction for defendants' repeated discovery abuses. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37.

The parties' subsequent pre-trial conduct was consistent with Judge Henderson's order. Defendants' March 1992 pre-trial witness list made no mention of Dr. Bateman, and plaintiffs never deposed Dr. Bateman.

At trial, however, defendants sought to call Dr. Bateman as a "rebuttal expert," arguing that Dr. Bateman authored one of the reports plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Ronald D. Knutson, had analyzed during his testimony. Plaintiffs objected, arguing that Dr. Bateman was the very expert Judge Henderson had excluded in his order barring defense expert testimony, and that they had been deprived of the opportunity to conduct discovery of defendants' expert, having [**23] learned only the night before of defendants' plan to call Dr. Bateman as a rebuttal expert.

Despite Judge Henderson's earlier order prohibiting defense expert testimony, Judge Caulfield allowed Dr. Bateman to testify, albeit for one purpose only: "to speak about how his report was used" by plaintiffs' expert.

2. Admission of Defendants' Summary Exhibits

During trial, the district court admitted two summary exhibits at issue in this appeal: Defense Exhibit 529A and 781A. Defense Exhibit 529A was a graph comparing a price-to-loan ratio with a stocks-to-use ratio. Defense Exhibit 781A summarized Thai rice prices and adjusted California rice prices, and summarized defendants' expert's findings based on that price information.

C. Application of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Among the allegations underlying plaintiffs' antitrust claims were plaintiffs' allegations that defendants had initiated various "sham" lawsuits and "sham" administrative proceedings as part of a conspiracy to monopolize and to restrain trade in the various rice markets alleged. During trial, the district court ruled that as a matter of law, defendants' actions were not objectively baseless and therefore [**24] did not fall within the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine of antitrust immunity for private efforts to influence government action. Because it concluded that defendants' actions were protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the district court excluded some evidence of the allegedly "sham" lawsuits, although it did admit some evidence concerning defendants' alleged anticompetitive conspiracy.

D. Jury Instructions on Service of Subpoenas on Foreign Government Officials

Plaintiffs alleged Joseph Alioto mailed subpoenas to the Korean ambassador to the United States and to a Korean consular official in New York as part of the alleged "sham" litigation. Both subpoenas were quashed by the State Department. At trial, plaintiffs requested that the district court instruct the jury on aspects of the law governing the service of subpoenas on foreign officials. Instead of reading plaintiffs' proposed instructions, however, the district court read provisions of the Vienna Convention, 23 U.S.T. 3227 (April 18, 1961), the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1602-11, and certain Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

[*1506] E. Verdict

On May 29, 1992, following [*25] an eight-week trial before Judge Caulfield, the jury returned a special verdict for defendants on plaintiffs' claims of conspiracy to monopolize under Section 2 of the Sherman Act and the California Unfair Practices Act. The jury was unable to reach a unanimous verdict, however, as to plaintiffs' claims for conspiracy in restraint of trade under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and California's Cartwright Act.

IV. Post-Trial Proceedings

A. Directed Verdict for Defendants on Plaintiffs' Restraint of Trade Claims

Eighteen months after the jury verdict, Judge Caulfield entered judgment as a matter of law as to plaintiffs' claims that defendants had conspired to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the California Cartwright Act. Amarel v. Connell, 1994-1 Trade Cases Par. 70,632, 1993 WL 515885 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 30, 1993). In entering judgment for defendants on plaintiffs' remaining claims, the district court held that the jury verdict for defendants as to plaintiffs' monopolization claims precluded plaintiffs' restraint of trade claims, since "plaintiffs maintained in their amended complaint and in their presentation to the jury that it was defendants' [*26] attempt to conspire to monopolize that allegedly restrained trade in the relevant market." Amarel, 1993 WL 515885, * 2.

B. Directed Verdict for Defendant Joseph Alioto

After trial, defendant Joseph Alioto moved for judgment as a matter of law on grounds of attorney immunity from antitrust liability. Judge Caulfield granted the motion, finding in the record "no legally sufficient evidentiary basis" to support plaintiffs' antitrust claims against Alioto. Amarel v. Connell, 1994-1 Trade Cases Par. 70,632, 1993 WL 515885 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 30, 1993).

V. The District Court's Post-Judgment Award of Copying Costs

Following Judge Caulfield's entry of judgment for defendants on all plaintiffs' claims, defendants applied for an award of costs. In December 1993, they filed two bills of costs totalling $ 227,001.08: a bill of $ 170,446.66 for Connell Rice and a bill of $ 56,554.42 for Joseph Alioto.

Pending plaintiffs' appeal, Judge Caulfield stayed all proceedings, including the taxation of costs. After Judge Caulfield resigned, the case was reassigned to Judge Walker. Although plaintiffs contended the taxation of costs would be premature in view of the pending counterclaims [*27] that remained to be tried, Judge Walker directed the clerk to tax costs.

The clerk taxed plaintiffs a total of $ 129,695.01 in costs: $ 108,853.01 of the costs sought by Connell Rice and $ 20,842 of the costs sought by Alioto.

Both sides moved for reconsideration of the award. The day before the reconsideration hearing, Judge Walker entered an order directing defendants to present further documentation to support their claimed costs. At the May 5, 1995 hearing, counsel for defendants presented two affidavits and exhibits as further evidence of defendants' costs. Judge Walker ruled at the close of the three-hour hearing, awarding defendants $ 96,441.65 in costs: $ 75,599.65 for Connell Rice and $ 20,842 for Joseph Alioto. Plaintiffs timely appealed the district court's award of costs, and that appeal was consolidated with plaintiffs' appeal on the merits.

ANALYSIS

I. Standing

On appeal, defendants renew <sup>14</sup> their contention that plaintiffs lack standing to maintain [*1507] this antitrust action. They claim, first, that plaintiffs' alleged injury is "not the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent" and, second, that plaintiffs' alleged injury "is derivative [**28] and indirect" and therefore not cognizable under the antitrust statutes.

Because HN1 antitrust standing is a question of law, we review the issue de novo. Exhibitors' Service, Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 788 F.2d 574, 578 n.4 (9th Cir. 1986). The issue of antitrust standing may be raised at any stage of litigation. R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, \*\*291 145 (9th Cir. 1989) (en banc). In R.C. Dick Geothermal, we explained that "whenever it appears that [standing] has not been established and has not been conceded, an element necessary for the plaintiff to prevail is lacking." Id. (citing P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law Par. 335.1b (Supp. 1987)).

HN2 Section 4 of the Clayton Act allows recovery of treble damages by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\). The language of this provision is very broad and, "read literally, 'could afford relief to all persons whose injuries are causally related to an antitrust violation.'" Lucas v. Bechtel Corp., 800 F.2d 839, 843 (9th Cir. 1986) (citation omitted). It is well-settled, however, that despite the sweeping language of Section 4, "'Congress did not intend to provide a private remedy for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation.'" Bubar v. Ampco Foods, Inc., 752 F.2d 445, 448 (9th Cir.) (citing Blue Shield of Virginia, Inc. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472-80, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982)), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1018, 105 S. Ct. 3481, 87 L. Ed. 2d 616 (1985). As the Supreme \*\*30 Court has explained, HN3 "harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). Courts have developed the doctrine of antitrust standing to determine the "class of persons entitled to obtain [Section 4] damages." Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 791 F.2d 1356, 1363 (9th Cir. 1986).

The Supreme Court has identified several factors HN4 courts are to consider in determining whether a plaintiff, who has suffered an injury which bears a causal connection to the alleged antitrust violation, also satisfies the more demanding standard for antitrust standing. These factors are:

- (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall;
- (2) the directness of the injury;
- (3) the speculative measure of the harm;
- (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and

---

<sup>14</sup> On two occasions below, the district court denied similar motions by defendants-appellees. First, in a pre-trial ruling in response to defendants' motion for summary judgment, which was based on plaintiffs' purported lack of standing and was therefore treated as a motion to dismiss, the district court held that plaintiffs had standing. Amarel v. Connell, 1986-2 Trade Cases Par. 67,233, 1986 WL 10613, * 2-3 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 8, 1986). Second, in a post-trial order in response to defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law, the trial judge summarily rejected defendants' contention that plaintiffs lacked standing.

(5) [**31] the complexity in apportioning damages.

Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535.

HN5 Antitrust standing involves a case-by-case analysis of "the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them." Id. We have held that in examining the factors set forth in Associated Gen. Contractors, "no single factor is decisive. The court must balance the factors." R.C. Dick Geothermal, 890 F.2d at 146 (citing Los Angeles Coliseum Comm'n, 791 F.2d at 1363). We have also "rejected any [] implication [that] a favorable finding in each and every one of the [Associated Gen. Contractors] factors is a necessary precondition to a finding of antitrust standing." Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n, 791 F.2d at 1363. We have said, however, that the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury is of "tremendous significance" in determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 n.3 (9th Cir. 1985). With these factors in mind, we address defendants' challenges to plaintiffs' standing.

[*1508] A. The Nature of Plaintiffs' Alleged Injury

Defendants' first argument is [**32] that plaintiffs' "claimed injury is not of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Undergirding this argument is defendants' characterization of plaintiffs' alleged injury as the failure of PIRMI and Comet "to get higher prices due to the cooperative's competitive, nonpredatory quotes."

HN6 It is well-settled that a plaintiff "must prove the existence of 'antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)). An injury "will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to [the antitrust laws] to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition." Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334 (internal quotations and citations omitted). As a corollary to the requirement that "the alleged injury be related to anti-competitive behavior," we require that "the injured party be a participant in the same market as [**33] the alleged malefactors." Bhan, 772 F.2d at 1470 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 538-39).

In considering whether plaintiffs' alleged injuries are "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent" and "flow[] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful," Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334 (1990) (citation omitted), we begin by noting that plaintiffs' allegations of injury are far broader than defendants describe. Plaintiffs' complaint contained broad, albeit sometimes vague, allegations of a decades-long conspiracy to eliminate both plaintiffs, the independent farmers, and the independent rice mills, and to monopolize all phases of rice production. Alleged participants in the conspiracy were the rice cooperatives - which plaintiffs alleged are vertically integrated operations engaged in every stage of rice production - and various other parties, including defendants Connell Rice, Grover Connell, and Joseph Alioto. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff rice farmers are, in effect, competitors of the vertically integrated rice cooperatives, since the cooperatives compete at multiple levels of rice production.

Additionally, plaintiffs' [**34] complaint contains specific allegations as to defendants' conduct between 1980 and 1982. First, plaintiffs alleged that defendants engaged in predatory pricing during 1981 and 1982, and plaintiffs introduced evidence at trial that defendants' prices were below defendants' cost of production and therefore predatory. Such predatory pricing, alleged plaintiffs, harmed them directly because it depressed the market in which they sold their rice. Second, plaintiffs alleged that defendants engaged in a lengthy boycott by refusing to sell rice to Comet. This behavior allegedly harmed plaintiffs because it threatened to eliminate one of two remaining independent mills through which plaintiffs sold their paddy rice.

We consider the nature of plaintiffs' alleged injury in the context of the antitrust standing doctrine.

HN7 [↑] Losses a competitor suffers as a result of predatory pricing is a form of antitrust injury because "predatory pricing has the requisite anticompetitive effect" against competitors. Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 339 (1990) (holding plaintiff suffered no injury where it lost sales to a competitor charging nonpredatory prices pursuant to a vertical, maximum-price-fixing [**35] scheme); accord Matsushita Electrical Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582-83, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). "When defendants engage in predatory pricing or other anticompetitive acts in an attempt to gain a monopoly, the competitor who is being driven out of the market is the party with standing." In re Air Passenger Computer Serv. Reservation Systems, 727 F. Supp. 564, 568-69 (C.D. Cal. 1989); see also Phillip E. Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp, 2 Antitrust Law Par. 373d (revised ed. 1995) ("Standing is clear . . . when the plaintiff alleges that its rival engaged [*1509] in an exclusionary practice designed to rid the market of the plaintiff . . . so that the defendant could maintain or create a monopoly.") An important rationale for condemning predatory pricing "is to protect competition from improper destruction. The injured competitor fits within that rationale and therefore suffers antitrust injury." Id.

Here, plaintiffs allege that they participated in the market for milled rice by virtue of their "participation contracts" with the independent mills, and that defendants' alleged predatory pricing harmed them because it depressed prices below their costs. Plaintiffs introduced [**36] expert testimony at trial that Connell Rice's prices were below plaintiffs' average variable costs. This type of predatory pricing against a de facto competitor falls squarely within the category of antitrust injury.

Our conclusion is reinforced by previous decisions in which we have held that HN8 [↑] a competitor of an alleged attempted monopolist had standing where it was either driven out of business or suffered reduced profits because of the alleged anticompetitive acts of the attempted monopolist. See LaSalvia v. United Dairymen of Arizona, 804 F.2d 1113, 1116 (9th Cir. 1986) (plaintiffs, independent dairy farmers, were competitors of dairy cooperative and therefore had standing to challenge cooperative's alleged anticompetitive conduct in suit for attempted monopolization), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 928, 96 L. Ed. 2d 699, 107 S. Ct. 3212 (1987), and William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014, 1024 (9th Cir. 1981) (antitrust suit premised on allegations that defendant used discriminatory and below-cost pricing to drive out competition from independent bakers in market for wholesale bread), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 825, 74 L. Ed. 2d 61, 103 S. Ct. 57, 103 S. Ct. 58 (1982).

Another form of antitrust injury is "coercive [**37] activity that prevents its victims from making free choices between market alternatives." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 528 (citation omitted). Such conduct "is inherently destructive of competitive conditions and may be condemned even without proof of its actual market effect." Id. This category of antitrust injury includes agreements to restrain trade. Id. In this case, plaintiffs alleged that defendants, acting in concert with the rice cooperatives, conspired to eliminate both the independent mills and the independent growers. Among the specific tactics alleged are that defendants boycotted Comet, refusing to sell it rice, in an effort to undermine Comet's ability to sell rice to Korea.

The Supreme Court has identified the anticompetitive effects that may flow from group boycotts and concerted refusals to deal. In Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985), the Court explained that such actions may "disadvantage competitors by either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle." In particular, such actions [**38] may "cut off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 294 (citations omitted). In this case, Connell Rice was the marketing agent for the major rice cooperatives, and allegedly refused to supply one of the sole remaining independent mills with rice. That alleged refusal to deal by defendants directly harmed the farmers by harming competition in the market for milled rice.

Defendants also oppose plaintiffs' standing because, they assert, plaintiffs "are neither consumers nor competitors in the market claimed to have been affected by the allegedly depressed prices." We disagree with defendants' characterization of plaintiffs' role in the rice industry. Plaintiffs introduced evidence that they are "competitors" in the market for milled rice because they tender paddy rice to the independent mills under "participation contracts" which entitle them to a share of profits from the sale of milled rice. Because plaintiffs thus participate in the market for milled rice, defendants' alleged predatory pricing, if true, caused them a direct monetary loss.

Moreover, standing is appropriate in certain [**39] cases where the plaintiff is "a supplier of goods or services who can prove [*1510] that he suffered lower selling prices or diminished volume or other profit reduction as a result of illegal conduct by the defendant(s)." Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law at Par. 375a. Although a plaintiff normally lacks standing where that plaintiff's customer is the immediate victim of the defendant's conduct, standing is appropriate where that plaintiff also competes with the defendant. Id.; see also Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542-44. The plaintiff supplier's injury is sufficiently direct where that supplier "both competes with defendants and is their target." Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law at Par. 375d.

Such was the case in Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp., 951 F.2d 1158 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 913, 118 L. Ed. 2d 552, 112 S. Ct. 1947 (1992). Plaintiffs in that case were consulting firms that advised businesses on the form and content of yellow page advertisements. They also ordered, placed and processed advertisements for those businesses. Defendants were publishers of yellow page directories, but they also advised businesses on how to use yellow page [**40] advertising. Defendants included the cost of that advice in the fees they charged for yellow page advertisements. When defendants ended their practice of allowing the consultants to order, place, and process yellow page advertisements on behalf of advertisers, that policy change induced some of plaintiffs' customers to cancel their contracts with plaintiffs because it was less convenient to deal with both the consultants and the publishers. Plaintiffs brought suit under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, claiming that the yellow page publishers were attempting to use their alleged monopoly power in the yellow page publishing market to achieve a monopoly in the market for consultation about that market. Plaintiffs also brought a Section 1 claim, alleging that the publishers' refusal to deal with the consultants restrained trade in the market for consultation services.

The defendant publishers claimed plaintiffs lacked standing because defendants and plaintiffs did not compete in the same market. On appeal, we held that the plaintiffs and defendants did compete in the same market: the market for advising yellow page advertisers as to the form, content, and cost of yellow page advertising. [**41] Although the plaintiffs and the defendants did not offer exactly the same service, since they offered somewhat different advice and had different fee structures, we concluded that they nonetheless competed in one important respect: both offered advice to purchasers of yellow page advertisements. Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, 951 F.2d at 1161. We explained that for purposes of antitrust standing analysis, "the field of competition [includes] . . . the group or groups of sellers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business." Id. at 1162 (citing Thurman Industries, Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1374 (9th Cir. 1989)). We also noted that the consultants, in competing with the publishers' advice service, served a key function as competitors: "imposing 'an essential discipline on producers and sellers of goods to provide the consumer with a better product at a lower cost. . . .'" Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, 951 F.2d at 1162 (citing United States v. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659, 662-63 (9th Cir. 1990)).

This situation is similar: plaintiffs and defendants, while not identical entities, are nonetheless [**42] competitors in a particular market segment: the market for milled rice. Here, Connell Rice, the marketing agent for the rice cooperatives, was alleged to play a key role in predatory pricing and in refusing to deal with Comet. The plaintiffs supply paddy rice to the mills, and yet they also participate in the market for milled rice because their contractual arrangement with the independent mills gives them a share of the profits from the sale of milled rice. Moreover, plaintiffs insist that defendants' alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in various segments of the rice industry had as a central aim the elimination of the independent rice farmers. Because the plaintiffs "both compete[] with defendants and [are] their target," they have standing. Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law at Par. 375d.

The Second Circuit reached a similar result in *Crimpers Promotions, Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290 (2nd I*1511 Cir. 1983)*. The defendants in Crimpers Promotions were two companies alleged to dominate the business of buying cable television programming from producers and selling it to cable television stations. The plaintiff organized a trade show to facilitate direct [**43] contact between producers of programming and cable television stations that purchased such programming. One of the plaintiff's goals in organizing the trade show was to reduce the producers' and the stations' dependence on the defendants, who allegedly dominated the market for the sale of cable television programming. The plaintiff brought an antitrust suit, alleging that the defendants attempted to ruin the trade show by pressuring producers and cable system operators and threatening to boycott producers who attended the show. The plaintiff further alleged that defendants' tactics succeeded in keeping attendance far below plaintiffs' projections.

The defendants in Crimpers insisted that the plaintiff lacked standing because it did not compete directly with the defendants in the market for the purchase and sale of programming, and therefore was harmed only derivatively. The Second Circuit disagreed, concluding that the plaintiff had suffered antitrust injury because it was attempting to compete against the defendants' alleged monopoly in the market for the purchase and sale of cable television programming, and the defendants took anticompetitive action against the plaintiff. The [**44] Second Circuit reasoned that "Crimpers was not just a 'supplier' of a competitor, . . ." but instead was "endeavoring to forge a link in a chain of the sale of programming . . . that would compete with defendants in their role as middlemen." Crimpers Promotions, 724 F.2d at 294. The plaintiff's injury "was the precisely intended consequence of defendants' boycott," and was "inextricably intertwined with the injury the defendants sought to inflict on producers and television stations in the cable programming market." Id. at 294-95.

Similarly, plaintiffs here allege defendants attempted to destroy competition at several levels of the rice industry. They alleged that defendants' predatory pricing and their boycott of Comet worked anticompetitive harms similar to those alleged in Crimpers Promotions: These actions allegedly thwarted plaintiffs' attempts to compete with defendants in the market for the export of California rice to Korea.

In arguing that plaintiffs are neither their competitors nor their consumers, defendants rely heavily on Eagle v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538 (9th Cir. 1987). In that case, plaintiffs were crewmembers on fishing vessels who caught [**45] fish that was sold by vessel owners to tuna canneries. The crewmembers attempted to bring antitrust claims against the tuna canneries for allegedly conspiring to depress tuna prices, conduct the crewmembers insisted harmed them by reducing their wages and reducing their employment opportunities. We held that the crewmembers lacked standing because they were neither consumers nor competitors in the market for tuna but instead were employees of the entities that were directly injured: the owners of the fishing vessels. Id. at 541. Although the plaintiffs in Eagle insisted that they were "sellers along with the vessel owners" because their contracts with the vessel owners allowed them a share of the profits from the sale of tuna, we disagreed. We concluded that the plaintiff crewmembers were not sellers because they had no control over the vessel or the selling price of the fish, and "because the alleged anticompetitive conduct was directed at the vessel owners, not the crewmembers of the union." Id.

Here, in contrast, defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct - predatory pricing and the refusal to sell rice to Comet - was allegedly directed at both the independent farmers [**46] and the independent mills. Unlike the canneries in Eagle, which allegedly directed their anticompetitive conduct at the vessel owners, defendants in this case allegedly had a broader aim: the elimination of independent entities in the California rice industry.

B. The Directness of the Injury

Defendants next assert that plaintiffs' alleged harm is merely "derivative and indirect" because it "derived from the lower prices supposedly obtained for milled rice as [**1512] a result of defendants' acts." We disagree. Plaintiffs allege that defendants conspired to eliminate the independent farmers and independent mills. Among the particular injuries, plaintiffs allege, are depressed earnings caused by predatorily low prices and restraint of trade in the milled rice market resulting from defendants' refusal to supply rice to mills like Comet.

The Seventh Circuit recently addressed the "directness of the injury" requirement in the context of similar facts. In Sanner v. Board of Trade of Chicago, 62 F.3d 918 (7th Cir. 1995), soybean farmers sued the Chicago Board of Trade, alleging that they were injured by a Board of Trade emergency resolution ordering holders of "long" positions in soybean [**47] futures to liquidate their positions. The Board of Trade's resolution allegedly caused a price decline in the soybean futures market, which caused a corresponding decline in the soybean cash market. The plaintiff farmers were sellers in the soybean cash market who alleged that the emergency resolution harmed them because it depressed prices in the soybean cash market. The plaintiffs also claimed that the Board of Trade resolution was an illegal restraint of trade which caused them to suffer losses in the soybean cash market.

The Seventh Circuit concluded that because the farmers were sellers in the cash market who claimed injury caused by an unlawful action in the closely related futures market, the plaintiffs had antitrust standing. Id. at 927. It also found the injury alleged sufficiently direct to form a basis for antitrust standing. The court rejected the contention that the price depression in the soybean cash market was an "indirect" result and "derivative" of the price decline in the soybean futures market because it rejected the view that there was a "disjunction . . . between the cash market and the futures market for soybeans." Id. at 928. Acknowledging that there [**48] were differences between the two markets, the Seventh Circuit concluded that the two markets were not "unrelated for the purposes of antitrust standing analysis" since a significant price change in the futures market generally correlated with a similar price change in the cash market. Id. at 929. This close relationship between the two markets offered a basis for antitrust standing: "Since [the cash market] tends to move in lockstep with [the futures market], participants in the cash market can be injured by anticompetitive acts committed in the futures market." Id. Given the "close and continuous link" between the two markets, the injury was not too indirect and derivative to support antitrust standing. Id.

We face a strikingly similar situation here. Given the close ties between the paddy rice market and the milled rice market, and given that plaintiffs' profits were, in part, a function of profits in the milled rice market, defendants' alleged predatory pricing in the market for milled rice "predictably would have impacted" the price of paddy rice. Id.

Defendant's alleged boycott also caused direct injury to plaintiffs. The Supreme Court has suggested that, [**49] for purposes of standing analysis, the antitrust laws are concerned with the effect on direct victims of boycotts and secondary boycott victims. In Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982), the Supreme Court stated in dicta that a plaintiff would have antitrust standing to challenge a concerted refusal to deal where that plaintiff was sufficiently affected by that refusal. It hypothesized that if a group of psychiatrists conspired to boycott a bank until that bank stopped making loans to competing psychologists, antitrust standing would exist not only for the bank, the target of the primary boycott, but also for the psychologists, "against whom the secondary boycott was directed." Blue Shield of Virginia, 457 U.S. at 484 n.21.

Like the defendants in Blue Shield of Virginia, the defendants here allegedly intended to have an impact on both the milled rice and paddy rice markets. Given the interdependence between independent mills and independent farmers, harming one was tantamount to harming the other. Injuring the farmers was thus "an integral [] aspect of the conspiracy alleged." Blue Shield of Virginia, 457 U.S. at 479; see also Sanner, 62 F.3d at 929 [**50] (intent to harm soybean futures market could suggest intent to harm soybean cash market); Yellow Pages [*1513] Cost Consultants, 951 F.2d at 1162-63 (close link between defendants' actions [refusal to allow plaintiff consultants to process customer advertisements] and plaintiffs' loss of customers is sufficient for antitrust standing).

In concluding that plaintiffs were sufficiently direct victims of the defendants' alleged anticompetitive activities, we distinguish cases in which we have held injuries too indirect to support the standing of putative plaintiffs where those plaintiffs were not within the "identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement." Lucas, 800 F.2d at 845. Cf. Vinci v. Waste Management Inc., 80 F.3d 1372, 1375-76 (9th Cir. 1996) (shareholder and former employee of defendant lack standing to sue defendant for alleged antitrust conspiracy); R.C. Dick Geothermal, 890 F.2d at 147 (loss of royalties for lessor of property producing geothermal steam, caused by alleged conspiracy among lessees to conceal the property's steam capacity, was indirect injury); Lucas, [*51] 800 F.2d at 844-45 (union electricians working on construction project did not suffer sufficiently direct injury from alleged conspiracy between contractor and unions to monopolize the market in design and construction of such plants; electricians' alleged injury - depressed wages - were merely indirect consequence of alleged monopoly); Legal Economic Evaluations, Inc. v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 39 F.3d 951, 954 (9th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 304, 115 S. Ct. 1420 (1995) (consultants to tort plaintiffs did not suffer antitrust injury where life insurance carriers allegedly blocked tort plaintiffs from gaining access to annuity price information, since blocking tort plaintiffs' access did not cause injury to consultants).

II. Time Limit

Plaintiffs contend that the district court committed reversible error by imposing a time limit on the trial. HN9 [↑] We review such challenges to trial court management for abuse of discretion. General Signal Corp. v. MCI Telecommunications Corp., 66 F.3d 1500, 1507 (9th Cir. 1995).

HN10 [↑] A district court is generally free to impose reasonable time limits on a trial. Id. at 1507 (citing Deus v. Allstate Ins. Co., 15 F.3d 506, 520 (5th [**52] Cir.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 573, 130 L. Ed. 2d 490 (1994)). Time limits may be used to "prevent undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence." Monotype Corp. v. International Typeface Corp., 43 F.3d 443, 450 (9th Cir. 1994) (citing Johnson v. Ashby, 808 F.2d 676, 678 (8th Cir. 1987)). Rigid and inflexible hour limits on trials, however, are generally disfavored. Monotype Corp., 43 F.3d at 450-51 (citing Flaminio v. Honda Motor Co., 733 F.2d 463, 473 (7th Cir. 1984)).

We conclude that the time limits imposed by the district court were reasonable. We begin by observing that the district court based the time limits, in part, on the parties' estimates of trial length. Plaintiffs' counsel estimated that he would need four weeks to put on the liability portion of the case. After the court proposed a six-week trial, with forty hours per side for witness examination, plaintiffs' counsel asked the court for ten more hours - or fifty hours total - to try the liability issue. Although the court initially rejected this suggestion, it subsequently reconsidered and gave each side an six additional hours for witness examination. This adjustment brought [**53] the total hours to forty-six - close to plaintiffs' counsel's original request.

In implementing the time limits, moreover, the district court was flexible. It granted each side six additional hours for witness examination, which was even more time than the parties themselves estimated. Indeed, the district court told plaintiffs' counsel that she was granting him more supplemental time than the four hours he had requested because she thought he had underestimated the time needed. Additionally, the district court allowed counsel to use some of their allotted commentary time for witness examination.

Plaintiffs advance several specific challenges to the district court's time management during the trial.

Plaintiffs argue that the times imposed were arbitrary because they did not allow for [*1514] delays caused by dilatory witnesses and sidebar discussions. This argument is flawed in two respects. First, it overlooks the district court's willingness to extend the time limits for each side, which was not arbitrary but based on the parties' own estimates of time. Second, it ignores the nature of trials, which are typically fraught with delays the parties cannot control. Especially in trials with [**54] time limits, trial counsel are responsible for case management and frequently must make strategic decisions to adjust for unforeseen delays.

Plaintiffs also contend that the district court's decision to permit each party to use commentary time for witness examination was prejudicial because it gave defendants - who tried the case as two parties - additional time to examine witnesses, while depriving plaintiffs of the right of cross-examination.

Plaintiffs' account of the trial mischaracterizes the record. The district court did not, as plaintiffs allege, "arbitrarily cut" plaintiffs' final fifteen minutes of witness examination time and give defendants additional time for cross-examination. Plaintiffs' time was not cut; instead, the district court's own timekeeping indicated that plaintiffs had only fifteen minutes remaining. Moreover, defendants' time was not increased; the court's timekeeping indicated defendants had another five minutes remaining for cross-examination.

More importantly, plaintiffs are flatly incorrect in their assertion that they "did not cross-examine [defendants' expert] Bateman," since the record reflects that plaintiffs did, in fact, cross-examine Bateman [**55] at the very end of trial. They are also mistaken in their contention that they "had to forego any cross-examination of [defense witness] Errecarte." After defense counsel's direct examination of Errecarte, plaintiffs' counsel still had time remaining, but explicitly declined the opportunity to cross-examine Errecarte.

Plaintiffs were not "denied" the opportunity to cross-examine witnesses. Indeed, the district court allowed both sides additional time for cross-examination by allowing them to use their commentary time for cross-examination. Cf. General Signal Corp., 66 F.3d at 1508 (citing Harries v. United States, 350 F.2d 231, 236 (9th Cir. 1965)) (stating that a limitation on cross-examination denies due process only if it is "so severe as to constitute a denial" of the right to cross-examine)). Plaintiffs, though cognizant of the time limitations, used their supplemental time for other things, such as to recall their expert witness.

The record indicates that throughout the trial, plaintiffs' counsel was acutely aware that he would have limited time to cross-examine defendants' witnesses. Even before the trial got underway, plaintiffs' counsel predicted that under the [**56] forty-hour limit, "there will be virtually no time left when we come to cross-examine the defendants." Just one week after the district court had granted the parties additional time, plaintiffs' counsel complained that the five hours he then had remaining would force him to choose between conducting further examination of his expert and cross-examining defendants' witnesses, and notified the court that he would ask the court for "proper cross-examination time" after he finished direct examination of his expert. The next day, when plaintiffs' counsel had virtually depleted his time, the district court offered to let counsel use his remaining commentary time for witness cross-examination. The court refused to grant plaintiffs' counsel additional time, however, explaining:

The defendants have abided by the time rules that have been set down, and the court makes the finding that for me to give you additional time other than your commentary time would be injust [sic] to them, as they have also shortcircuited some things in order to live up to their own estimate of the time.

Plaintiffs are mistaken in their contention that the time limits deprived them of their due process right to [**57] confront witnesses. The case law makes clear that where a district court has set reasonable time limits and has shown flexibility in applying them, that court does not abuse its discretion. Moreover, to overturn a jury verdict based on a party's failure to use its limited time for witness cross-examination would be to invite parties to exhaust their time limits without completing cross-examination, then appeal on due [*1515] process grounds. Such a result would undermine the discretion of district courts to manage time during trials.

III. Evidentiary Rulings

A. Admission of Defense Expert Testimony

Plaintiffs challenge Judge Caulfield's decision to allow testimony by defense expert Dr. Merrill Bateman, which contravened Judge Henderson's earlier order sanctioning defendants' repeated discovery. HN11[] We review for abuse of discretion a district judge's decision to reconsider an interlocutory order by another judge of the same court. Zipfel v. Halliburton Co., 832 F.2d 1477, 1481 (9th Cir. 1987) (citation omitted), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1054, 108 S. Ct. 2819, 100 L. Ed. 2d 921 (1988).

We begin by acknowledging that HN12[] "the interlocutory orders and rulings made pre-trial by a district judge are subject to modification [**58] by the district judge at any time prior to final judgment, and may be modified to the same extent if the case is reassigned to another judge." In re United States, 733 F.2d 10, 13 (2nd Cir. 1984). There is "no imperative duty to follow the earlier ruling - only the desirability that suitors shall, so far as possible, have reliable guidance how to conduct their affairs." Id. (citing Dictograph Products Co. v. Sonotone Corp., 230 F.2d 131, 134-35 (2nd Cir.), petition for cert. dismissed, 352 U.S. 883, 77 S. Ct. 104, 1 L. Ed. 2d 82 (1956)).

Moreover, HN13[] a district court is vested with "broad discretion to make discovery and evidentiary rulings conducive to the conduct of a fair and orderly trial." Campbell Industries v. M/V Gemini, 619 F.2d 24, 27 (9th Cir. 1980). Within a district court's broad discretion "lies both the power to exclude or admit expert testimony," and "to exclude testimony of witnesses whose use at trial is in bad faith or would unfairly prejudice an opposing party." Campbell Industries, 619 F.2d at 27 (citations omitted). In addition, the district court has broad discretion over the admission of rebuttal evidence. Trust Services of America, Inc. v. United States, 885 F.2d 561, 569 [\*\*591] (9th Cir. 1989) (citation omitted). In Campbell Industries, for example, we upheld a district court's order - much like Judge Henderson's order in this case - that sanctioned a party's "flagrant violation" of the discovery rules by barring the testimony of that party's witness. Campbell Industries, 619 F.2d at 27.

We are confronted here with the delicate problem of two district court judges exercising their "broad discretion" over evidentiary rulings in different phases of the same case and reaching contradictory results. Judge Henderson exercised his discretion in sanctioning defendants' discovery violations by prohibiting defendants from introducing expert testimony. The propriety of that decision is uncontested here. See id. Judge Caulfield exercised her discretion to allow rebuttal testimony by the excluded defense expert.

In evaluating whether Dr. Bateman's testimony should have been admitted, we are guided by other limitations on the district court's rulings. We have made it clear HN14[] that district courts "should generally allow amendments of pre-trial orders" provided three criteria are met: (1) "no substantial injury will be occasioned to the opposing party," [\[\*60\]](#) (2) refusal to allow the amendment "might result in injustice to the movant," and (3) the "inconvenience to the court is slight." Id. at 27-28 (internal quotation and citation omitted); see also United States v. First Nat'l Bank of Circle, 652 F.2d 882, 887 \(9th Cir. 1981\) (factors to consider in deciding whether to modify pre-trial order include: prejudice to movant of a refusal to modify; prejudice to non-movant of modification; impact of modification on orderly conduct of case; and degree of wilfulness, bad faith, or excusable neglect on the part of the movant).

We have applied this principle to a district court's decision to amend a pre-trial order to allow parties to add witnesses. HN15[] The factors a district court must consider where a party seeks to call a witness who does not appear on the witness list are: (1) the prejudice or surprise of the party against whom the excluded witness testifies; (2) the ability of that party to cure the prejudice; (3) the extent to which calling the witness would [\[\*1516\]](#) disrupt the orderly and efficient trial; and (4) bad faith or wilfulness in failing to comply with the court's order. Price v. Seydel, 961 F.2d 1470, 1471 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (citations [\[\*61\]](#) omitted).

Applying that authority to the facts of this case, we conclude that Judge Caulfield's decision to allow Dr. Bateman to testify was not error. Judge Caulfield apparently concluded that the reference to a writing by Dr. Bateman during the examination of plaintiffs' own expert constituted a sufficiently changed circumstance as to justify a limited response. We will not second guess the exercise of the considerable discretion allowed her, particularly where the result was to allow limited testimony on an issue (plaintiffs' damages) which the jury never reached.

B. Admission of Defendants' Summary Exhibits

Plaintiffs challenge the admission of two of defendants' summary exhibits on grounds that defendants failed to provide plaintiffs with the materials underlying those exhibits. Evidentiary rulings are reviewed for an abuse of discretion and should not be reversed absent some prejudice. City of Long Beach v. Standard Oil Co., 46 F.3d 929, 936 \(9th Cir. 1995\).

Federal Rule of Evidence 1006 governs the admissibility of summary exhibits. It provides in relevant part:

HN16[] The contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be [\[\*62\]](#) examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals, or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at reasonable time or place.

Fed. R. Evid. 1006.

HN17[] A proponent of a summary exhibit must establish a foundation that (1) the underlying materials on which the summary exhibit is based are admissible in evidence, and (2) those underlying materials were made available to the opposing party for inspection. Paddock v. Dave Christensen, Inc., 745 F.2d 1254, 1259 \(9th Cir. 1983\). The purpose of the availability requirement is "to give the opposing party an opportunity to verify the reliability and accuracy of the summary prior to trial." Id. at 1261. Accord Intel Corp. v. Terabyte Int'l. Inc., 6 F.3d 614, 623 \(9th Cir. 1993\) (under adversary system, opposing party entitled to see materials that form basis for summary). Where a party fails to make available materials underlying a summary exhibit, that summary exhibit is inadmissible. United States v. Miller, 771 F.2d 1219, 1238 \(9th Cir. 1985\) (summaries inadmissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 1006 where government failed to [**63] provided defendants with copy of underlying documents before summary was introduced into evidence).

Defense Exhibit 781A summarized two types of price information: California rice prices that had been adjusted by defendants' expert, and Thai rice prices. Additionally, it summarized defendants' expert's regression analysis of that price information. During his testimony, defendants' expert used Defense Exhibit 781A to criticize plaintiffs' expert's study, which contained a similar regression analysis but relied on different data: round grain rice prices from the Food and Agricultural Organization ("FAO") and unadjusted California rice prices.

Defense Exhibit 529A was a graph comparing a price-to-loan ratio to a stocks to use ratio for California rice. In preparing Defense Exhibit 529A, defendants' expert used a formula contained in a graph offered by plaintiffs' expert, but used "different values of the stocks-to-use ratio and different values of the farm price-to-loan ratio."

Plaintiffs urge that the admission of Defense Exhibit 781A and Defense Exhibit 529A violated Federal Rule of Evidence 1006 because defendants allegedly "never produced the underlying data or computations" relating [**64] to those summary exhibits.

When plaintiffs objected at trial to the admission of Defense Exhibit 781A on grounds they were not furnished with the underlying information, the district court overruled plaintiffs' objection, finding that Exhibit 781A is the same analysis that your expert went through, except they're using a different [*1517] price, which is the Thai price instead of the FAO price. So it's exactly your model, alternatively presented in surrebuttal on the issue of credibility of the expert as well as authenticity of methodology.

Although plaintiffs failed to object when defense counsel questioned defendants' expert about Defense Exhibit 529A, they raised a blanket objection when defense counsel moved for admission of all the exhibits defendants' expert discussed in his testimony. Plaintiffs objected on grounds that "they were summary exhibits for which none of the underlying materials were ever provided." The district court overruled plaintiffs' blanket objection to the admission of defendants' summary exhibits, however, explaining:

All of the calculation testimony testified to by [defense expert] Dr. Bateman was testimony derived from the expert testimony of [plaintiffs' **65] expert] Dr. Knutson and [] the testimony is clear that it is the same calculations done with different foundational numbers.

The district court's explanations unfortunately ignore the requirement - embodied in the mandatory language of Federal Rule of Evidence 1006 and explicitly required by our Paddock decision, that a party must make available to the opposing party the materials that have gone into preparing the summary exhibit. Under Federal Rule of Evidence 1006, defendants had an obligation to make available to plaintiffs the information relied on in Defense Exhibit 781A (the adjusted California prices and the Thai prices) and the information relied on in Defense Exhibit 529A (defendants' values for the stocks-to-use ratio and for the price-to-loan ratio). Admission of these summary exhibits violated this mandatory provision.

Defendants defend the admission of Exhibit 781A by insisting that "the underlying materials upon which the summaries were based were formulae used by plaintiffs' own expert." This argument, however, ignores that the summary exhibit contained raw data - Thai prices and adjusted California prices - never provided to plaintiffs. Although defendants [**66] insist that this information was made available to plaintiffs "in defendants' pretrial motion and in their exhibits," they offer no support from the record as to the former and cite only to unadmitted exhibits as to the latter.

Our ultimate question, however, is whether the erroneous admission of these summary exhibits was prejudicial, since HN18[] evidentiary rulings should not be reversed absent some prejudice. City of Long Beach, 46 F.3d at 936. We conclude under the unusual circumstances here, including impeaching evidence given by plaintiff's expert in rebuttal, that the error was not prejudicial and therefore does not require reversal.<sup>15</sup>

[**67] IV. Application of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Plaintiffs challenge the district court's application of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and its evidentiary rulings with respect to conduct of defendants alleged to underlie plaintiffs' antitrust injury. HN19 We review de novo the district court's grant of directed verdict.<sup>16</sup> Berry v. Bunnell, 39 F.3d 1056, 1057 (9th Cir. 1994). HN20 A directed verdict is proper when the evidence permits only one reasonable conclusion. "The evidence must [\*1518] be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party," and "all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of that party." Id.

[**68] HN21 The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides that "those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability." Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). This general rule encompasses private actions that "attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly," id. (citing Eastern R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961)), as well as "the approach of citizens . . . to administrative agencies . . . and to courts," id. (citing California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972)).

HN22 Noerr-Pennington antitrust immunity does not apply, however, when the activity "is a mere sham to cover . . . an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Eastern R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 144, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961). The Supreme Court's latest articulation of the parameters of the "sham" litigation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity is contained in its Professional Real Estate [\[\*\*69\]](#) Investors decision.<sup>17</sup> There, the Court held that "an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be sham regardless of subjective intent." Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60. The Court outlined a two-part definition of "sham" litigation:

First, HN23 the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively baseless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation.

<sup>15</sup> Under Federal Rule of Evidence 703, these exhibits were inadmissible "as general proof of the truth of the underlying matter," Paddock, 745 F.2d at 1261 (internal quotations and citations omitted). Nonetheless, even had the district court not admitted Defense Exhibit 781A and Defense Exhibit 529A into evidence, defendants' expert could have discussed the information contained in Defense Exhibits 781A and 529A as a basis for criticizing plaintiffs' expert's analysis under Federal Rule of Evidence 703. Actually admitting the data into evidence was therefore not prejudicial. We disagree, moreover, with plaintiffs' contention that their expert was "unable to respond" to defendants' expert's testimony. This argument mischaracterizes the record. In fact, plaintiffs' expert did offer specific arguments to rebut defendants' expert's criticism of his models.

<sup>16</sup> Plaintiffs characterize the district court's Noerr-Pennington rulings as a judgment as a matter of law pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50\(a\). Because it appears from the record that the district court ruled during trial that defendants failed to meet the legal standard necessary to invoke the "sham" litigation exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, we analyze the rulings under the standard of review for a directed verdict.

<sup>17</sup> The district court made its ruling before the Supreme Court had issued its decision in Professional Real Estate Investors. We must apply that decision to this appeal, since a federal civil rule of law applies retroactively to appeals pending at the time the rule is announced. Harper v. Virginia Dept. of Taxation, 509 U.S. 86, 113 S. Ct. 2510, 125 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1993).

Id. at 60 (emphasis added).

[**70] In formulating the standard, the Court made clear that in the first step, the litigant's subjective purpose is irrelevant, explaining that "the legality of objectively reasonable petitioning . . . is not at all affected by any anticompetitive purpose [the litigant] may have." Id. at 59 (citing Noerr, 365 U.S. at 140). Indeed, the Court stated that HN24 [+] "the existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in sham litigation," and is an "absolute defense" to allegations of "sham litigation." Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 62-63. It defined "probable cause to institute civil proceedings" as the mere "reasonable belief that there is a chance that [a] claim may be held valid upon adjudication." Id. (citations omitted).

If the plaintiff succeeds in establishing that the lawsuit is "objectively baseless," as required in the first step of Professional Real Estate Investors, then a court "may . . . examine the litigant's subjective motivation." Id. This second step requires the court to determine "whether the baseless lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfere directly with the business" [**71] relationships of a competitor . . .' through the 'use [of] the governmental process . . . as an anticompetitive weapon.'" Id. (citations omitted).

Plaintiffs urge that Professional Real Estate Investors is an inappropriate test to apply in this case, insisting that the proper test is set forth in our recent decision in USS-POSCO Industries v. Contra Costa County Bldg. and Constr. Trades Council, 31 F.3d 800 (9th Cir. 1994). In USS-POSCO Industries, we recognized that "where the defendant is accused of bringing a whole [*1519] series of legal proceedings" as opposed to a "single action," as was the case in Professional Real Estate Investors, the analysis is different. As we explained in USS-POSCO Industries, "the question is not whether any one of [the legal proceedings] has merit . . . but whether they are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival." In other words, we must ask, "were the legal filings made, not out of a genuine interest in redressing grievances, but as part of a pattern or practice of successive filings undertaken essentially for purposes of harassment." [**72] USS-POSCO Industries, 31 F.3d at 811. In USS-POSCO Industries, we held that the plaintiff could not substantiate its "sham" litigation claim because more than half of the twenty-nine lawsuits and arbitration actions filed by the defendants were successful. Given that success rate, we concluded that the plaintiff could not establish that the defendants "were filing lawsuits and other actions willy-nilly without regard to success." Id.

The distinction we drew in USS-POSCO Industries reflects the distinction alluded to by the Supreme Court in Professional Real Estate Investors. There, the Court explained that in determining whether a challenged action falls within the "sham" exception, "a reviewing court [must] 'discern[] and draw[]' the 'difficult line' separating objectively reasonable claims from 'a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims . . . which leads the factfinder to conclude that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused.'" Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 58 (citing California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 513) (emphasis added). This distinction may be traced back to California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972), which fell within the latter category: the "abuse of [] process[] [that] effectively barred [the plaintiffs] from access to the agencies and courts." California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 513.

This case does not concern "a whole series of legal proceedings," USS-POSCO Industries, 31 F.3d at 811, or a "pattern of baseless, repetitive claims," Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 58 (citing California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 513), that would require us to apply the standard set forth in USS-POSCO Industries. Here, plaintiffs cite only two lawsuits, not a "series" or a "pattern" of them. Although we do not attempt to define here the number of legal proceedings needed to allege a "series" or "pattern" of litigation as required in USS-POSCO Industries, 31 F.3d at 811, we distinguish this case from USS-POSCO Industries, which involved twenty-nine legal proceedings. We do not consider the third "sham" litigation alleged, since that was simply a counterclaim in this litigation, and contained essentially the same allegation as one of the two alleged "sham" lawsuits.

Plaintiffs next argue [**74] that, even if USS-POSCO Industries is inapposite, the district court erred when it ruled that plaintiffs failed to meet "the standard [for a] baseless lawsuit [brought] without probable cause." With this contention in mind, we examine the legal and administrative proceedings plaintiffs insist fell within the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington antitrust immunity doctrine. We note that to invoke the "sham" exception, "the two-tiered process [in Professional Real Estate Investors] requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability." *Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 61.*

A. The Alleged "Sham" Lawsuits

Plaintiffs alleged that in 1981, defendants Connell Rice, Grover Connell, and Joseph Alioto instituted a "sham" lawsuit against PIRMI in the name of Louisiana rice farmer Larry Lyons. See Lyons v. PIRMI Delta, No. 811951 (W.D. La. October 28, 1981). The complaint in that suit alleged that PIRMI had violated United States Department of Agriculture ("USDA") reporting regulations pertaining to rice sales and had violated various antitrust laws. Plaintiffs alleged defendants surreptitiously sponsored the lawsuit "for [**75] the purpose of harassing and embarrassing actual and potential purchasers of California paddy rice and California milled rice who were defendants in that action." [*1520] Connell Rice and Joseph Alioto denied having had any involvement with the Lyons suit before it was filed, although Alioto's law firm subsequently represented Lyons in the suit. The Lyons suit was subsequently dismissed on a motion for summary judgment.

The next "sham" litigation plaintiffs alleged was a lawsuit brought by FRC and RGA, but allegedly sponsored by Connell Rice. That lawsuit accused PIRMI and Agroprom, a Swiss company, of bribing Korean officials to secure rice contracts. See Rice Growers Ass'n and Farmers Rice Cooperative v. Pacific Int'l Rice Mills, Inc., et al., No. C-82-0872 SC (N.D. Cal. 1982). Plaintiffs alleged that the suit was instigated by Grover Connell and Joseph Alioto, who acted "with knowledge that the suit lacked merit," and was financed in part by Connell Rice. Plaintiffs claimed the suit was commenced "for the purpose of embarrassing actual and potential purchasers of California paddy rice and California milled rice." That suit eventually settled without compensation.

The third [**76] "sham" litigation plaintiffs allege is defendant Connell Rice's counterclaim against PIRMI in separate litigation, the essential allegations of which were repeated in the instant lawsuit.

We conclude that plaintiffs failed to establish that the lawsuits were "objectively baseless" under the Professional Real Estate Investors standard, since they have not adduced evidence to "disprove the challenged lawsuit[s'] legal viability." *Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 61.*

We first note that the plaintiff in Lyons alleged defendants had violated USDA reporting requirements. Although the court handling the litigation later held that the plaintiff there lacked standing to sue for USDA regulatory violations, nonetheless there was evidence in the record tending to show PIRMI's failure to comply with USDA reporting regulations.

Next, we note that defendants' involvement in the Rice Growers lawsuit was based on their suspicion that PIRMI was bribing Korean officials to secure an exclusive opportunity to bid on the limited quota of rice sales to Korea. Although there was no direct evidence of such bribery, the absence of direct evidence does not preclude probable [**77] cause to institute litigation. They relied instead on circumstantial evidence - the price differential between PIRMI's bid prices and Connell Rice's bid price. Moreover, given defendants' concerns that PIRMI was on the verge of blocking them out of bidding, defendants had good reason to expedite the litigation. We conclude that defendants had probable cause to bring the Rice Growers suit, and for the same reasons had probable cause to bring the similar counterclaim in the instant litigation.

B. The Alleged "Sham" Administrative Proceedings

Plaintiffs also accused defendants of petitioning State Department officials and Korean officials in an effort to influence rice exports to Korea. In our view, defendants' efforts to influence various American and Korean officials - from State Department officials to members of Congress - was legitimate private action in response to defendants' suspicions of bribery. HN25↑ The Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields from antitrust liability efforts to influence legislators and members of the executive branch. *Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136.*

V. Refusal to Instruct Jury on the Law of Service of Subpoenas on Foreign Government Officials

Plaintiffs [**78] appeal the district court's refusal to adopt plaintiffs' proposed instructions to the jury with respect to the serving of subpoenas on foreign diplomatic officials. HN26[↑] We review for abuse of discretion a district court's formulation of civil jury instructions. Fikes v. Cleghorn, 47 F.3d 1011, 1013 \(9th Cir. 1995\).

Although the district court did not adopt plaintiffs' proposed jury instructions with respect to the law of subpoenaing diplomatic officials, the district court's instructions to the jury did not constitute an abuse of discretion. By the time it instructed the [*1521] jury, the district court had already entered judgment as a matter of law for defendants on plaintiffs' claims of "sham" litigation, meaning the district court's instructions to the jury on this peripheral question were of little or no import.

VI. The District Court's Judgment as a Matter of Law on Plaintiffs' Section 1 and California Cartwright Act Claims

Plaintiffs contend it was error for the district court to enter judgment for defendants on the claims on which the jury was hung: claims brought under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the California Cartwright Act. HN27[↑] We review de novo the district court's [**79] decision to enter judgment as a matter of law, and must "view conflicting evidence in the light most favorable to the non-movant, and determine whether the proffered result is the only reasonable conclusion." Forro Precision, Inc. v. International Business Machines Corp., 673 F.2d 1045, 1058 \(9th Cir. 1982\).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50\(b\) provides that HN28[↑] "if no verdict was returned, the court may, in disposing of the renewed motion [for judgment as a matter of law] direct the entry of judgment as a matter of law." We have held that HN29[↑] in directing the entry of judgment in the wake of a jury's failure to return a verdict, a district court "must accept as true facts that necessarily were established" by the jury's verdict.

The district court's entry of judgment as a matter of law is premised on the district court's characterization of plaintiffs' theory of the case. The district court interpreted plaintiffs' complaint and "their presentation to the jury" to articulate the following theory of the case: that "it was defendants' attempt to conspire to monopolize that allegedly restrained trade in the relevant market." Amarel, 1993 WL 515885, \* 2.

An examination of plaintiffs' [**80] claims suggests, however, that the jury's verdict for defendants as to the Section 2 monopoly claim does not, standing alone, preclude plaintiffs' Section 1 restraint of trade claim.

First, as a general matter, Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act proscribe two separate and distinct statutory offenses: Section 1 prohibits restraints of trade and Section 2 prohibits monopoly.

Significantly, Section 2 claims tend to encompass a narrower range of anticompetitive behaviors specifically defined as monopolization and attempts to monopolize. HN30[↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any person or persons, to monopolize . . . trade shall be guilty" of an antitrust violation. 15 U.S.C. § 2. Claims for violation of Section 2 must allege two key elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\). Because Section 2 claims require proof of a defendant's market power in the form of monopolistic control, they inevitably encompass a smaller pool of anticompetitive [**81] conduct. HN31[↑] To establish a Sherman Act Section 2 violation for attempted monopolization, a private plaintiff seeking damages must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving 'monopoly power'; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1432-33 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (citing McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 \(9th Cir. 1988\)).

HN32[↑] Section 1, in contrast, broadly prohibits concerted action that "unreasonably" restrains trade. Section 1 has been construed to encompass a wide variety of anticompetitive practices, including horizontal and vertical price fixing, horizontal and vertical restraints on such non-price factors as territories and customers, tying agreements, exclusive dealing agreements, and, finally, anticompetitive boycotts or concerted refusals to deal, as plaintiffs alleged in this [*1522] case. William C. Holmes, Antitrust Law Handbook 188 (Clark Boardman Callaghan: 1996). HN33 Unlike Section 2 claims, Section 1 restraint of trade claims need not establish the [**82] threshold showing of monopoly control over a relevant market. To show a violation of Section 1, a plaintiff "must establish a contract, conspiracy or combination intended to restrain competition and which actually has an anticompetitive effect." City of Vernon v. Southern California Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1361, 1365 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 908, 113 S. Ct. 305, 121 L. Ed. 2d 228 (1992).

Second, in this particular case, plaintiffs' theory of the case, though inartfully pleaded, does not condition recovery under Section 1 on recovery under Section 2. Although plaintiffs pleaded the two claims within a single cause of action, plaintiffs' complaint alleges several other instances of anticompetitive conduct in addition to the monopolistic behavior alleged. In particular, plaintiffs alleged defendants engaged in boycotts and refusals to deal in order to restrain trade in the markets for milled rice as well as for paddy rice.

For these reasons, it was improper for the district court to enter judgment for defendants on the restraint of trade claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the California Cartwright Act. We therefore reverse the district court's judgment for defendants as to plaintiffs' restraint [**83] of trade claims and remand for a new trial as to these claims only.

VII. Antitrust Immunity for Defendant Joseph Alioto

Plaintiffs challenge the district court's entry of judgment as a matter of law for defendant Joseph Alioto, which accorded him antitrust immunity on the ground that he was defendants' lawyer. We review de novo the district court's judgment as a matter of law, and thus must "view conflicting evidence in the light most favorable to the non-movant, and determine whether the proffered result is the only reasonable conclusion." Forro Precision, Inc., 673 F.2d at 1058.

We outlined the test for determining whether a lawyer is entitled to antitrust immunity in Pinhas v. Summit Health, Ltd., 894 F.2d 1024, 1033 (9th Cir. 1989), aff'd, 500 U.S. 322, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, 111 S. Ct. 1842 (1991). In Pinhas, we held that "an attorney is not immune from antitrust liability if he becomes an active participant in formulating policy decisions with his client to restrain competition." Pinhas, 894 F.2d at 1033 (citing Tillamook Cheese and Dairy Ass'n v. Tillamook County Creamery Ass'n, 358 F.2d 115, 118 (9th Cir. 1966)) (emphasis added).

Implicit in this rule is a corresponding requirement: [**84] Where a plaintiff seeks to impose antitrust liability on an attorney, that plaintiff must establish that the attorney "exerted [his] influence over [a client] so as to direct [the client] to engage in the complained of acts for an anticompetitive purpose." Pinhas, 894 F.2d at 1033. As the Sixth Circuit recently explained, Individual liability under the antitrust laws can be imposed only where corporate [attorneys] are actively and knowingly engaged in a scheme designed to achieve anticompetitive ends. To support a determination of liability under this standard, the evidence must demonstrate that a defendant exerted his influence so as to shape corporate intentions.

*Brown v. Donco Enterprises, Inc.*, 783 F.2d 644, 646 \(6th Cir. 1986\).

In bringing their lawsuit, plaintiffs alleged Alioto masterminded and perpetrated defendants' alleged conspiracy to monopolize and restrain trade in the rice industry for over thirty years, and, in particular, orchestrated the anticompetitive activities in 1981 in an attempt to prevent PIRMI and Comet from competing in the market for the export of California rice to Korea. On appeal, plaintiffs repeat these allegations, placing special [**85] emphasis on Alioto's role in defendants' alleged "sham" litigation. However, plaintiffs offer no evidence from the record to support [*1523] such accusations, and therefore fail to establish that Alioto "exerted [his] influence over [his clients] so as to direct [the clients] to engage in the complained of acts for an anticompetitive purpose." Pinhas, 894 F.2d at 1033.

We therefore conclude that Joseph Alioto was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on grounds of attorney immunity from antitrust liability.

VIII. Award of Costs to Defendants-Appellees

Plaintiffs appeal the district court's award of costs to defendants. HN34↑ Because "the decision to award costs ordinarily resides in the district court," we review such decisions for an abuse of discretion. National Information Services, Inc. v. TRW, Inc., 51 F.3d 1470, 1471 (9th Cir. 1995).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54\(d\)\(1\) provides that costs HN35↑ "shall be allowed as of course to the prevailing party unless the court otherwise directs." We have construed Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54\(d\)\(1\) to create a presumption in favor of awarding costs to the prevailing party. National Information Services, 51 F.3d at 1471. [**86]

HN36↑ Where a reviewing court reverses a district court's judgment for the prevailing party, however, both the underlying judgment and the taxation of costs undertaken pursuant to that judgment are reversed. Farmer v. Arabian American Oil Co., 379 U.S. 227, 13 L. Ed. 2d 248, 85 S. Ct. 411 (1967), disapproved of on other grounds by Crawford Fitting Co. v. J.T. Gibbons, Inc., 482 U.S. 437, 443, 96 L. Ed. 2d 385, 107 S. Ct. 2494 (1987). In Farmer, the district court entered a directed verdict for the defendant when the jury could not reach a decision as to the plaintiff's wrongful discharge claim. When the defendant, as the prevailing party, moved for an award of costs, the district court approved the clerk's taxation of costs against the plaintiff. The Second Circuit subsequently reversed the directed verdict and remanded for a new trial. In describing the Second Circuit's decision to reverse the directed verdict and remand for a new trial, the Supreme Court noted that the Second Circuit's decision to reverse the judgment "thereby upset[] the judgment and the taxation of costs." Farmer, 379 U.S. at 229 (emphasis added). Similarly, our reversal of the district court's judgment as a matter of law with respect to plaintiffs' claim under [**87] Section 1 of the Sherman Act therefore operates to reverse the district court's award of costs incurred in defending against that claim.

We acknowledge that our decision to reverse the district court's judgment for defendants on plaintiffs' Section 1 claim does not affect the jury verdict for defendants as to plaintiffs' Section 2 claim. In view of their success in defending against plaintiffs' Section 2 claim, defendants may very well be entitled to an award of the costs they incurred defending the Section 2 claim. On remand, however, we direct the district court to await resolution of plaintiffs' Section 1 claim before determining whether an award of costs is appropriate for either claim.

Our rationale is two-fold: First, the outcome of plaintiffs' Section 1 claim will bear on whether an award of costs is appropriate, since it will influence the district court's determination of whether defendants are the "prevailing parties" in the overall action. We have explained that HN37↑ "[a] party in whose favor judgment is rendered is generally the prevailing party for purposes of awarding costs under Rule 54\(d\)." d' Hedouville v. Pioneer Hotel Co., 552 F.2d 886 (9th Cir. 1977). In the event [**88] of a mixed judgment, however, it is within the discretion of a district court to require each party to bear its own costs. Testa v. Village of Mundelein, 89 F.3d 443 (7th Cir. 1996) (requiring each party to bear its own costs where plaintiff prevailed on one claim and defendant prevailed on federal claim) (citations omitted). In the event that plaintiffs prevail on their Section 1 claim on remand, the resultant mixed judgment may warrant that each party bear its own costs. We express no opinion on this matter, which will fall within the discretion of the district court following the new trial.

[*1524] Second, it would be difficult at this juncture to separate the costs incurred on the Section 1 claim from those incurred on the Section 2 claim: In awarding costs below, the district court did not distinguish the costs incurred in defending the Section 1 claim from the costs incurred in defending the Section 2 claim, since defendants prevailed on both claims. Instead of attempting to award partial costs at this juncture, the district court should await the outcome of the Section 1 claim to ascertain whether allocation of costs is necessary. See Farmer, 379 U.S. at 232-33 (dicta stating [**89] that where the district court's judgment and taxation of costs were both upset by the Court of Appeals' reversal of the first trial judgment, "it became the duty of the clerk to tax costs for both trials only when judgment was finally entered for the [defendant].") (emphasis added).

CONCLUSION

We affirm the judgment for defendants on plaintiffs' monopolization claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act and the California Unfair Practices Act. We reverse the judgment for defendants on plaintiffs' restraint of trade claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the California Cartwright Act, and we remand the case for a new trial solely on the restraint of trade claims. We reverse the district court's award of costs and direct the district court to await resolution of plaintiffs' restraint of trade claims before determining whether an award of costs is appropriate.

ORDER

Appellants' Motion to Correct and Amend Opinion is denied in part and granted in part. The Opinion filed December 2, 1996, is amended as follows:

On slip Opinion page 15199, change the first sentence in the first full paragraph to read: "The third 'sham' litigation plaintiffs allege is defendant Connell [**90] Rice's counterclaim against PIRMI in separate litigation, the essential allegations of which were repeated in the instant lawsuit."

---

End of Document

Classic Communs. v. Rural Tel. Serv. Co.

United States District Court for the District of Kansas

December 3, 1996, Decided ; December 3, 1996, FILED; December 4, 1996, ENTERED ON THE DOCKET

CIVIL ACTION Case No. 96-2166-DES

Reporter

956 F. Supp. 896 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19682 **; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,865

CLASSIC COMMUNICATIONS, INC.; CLASSIC TELEPHONE, INC.; and CLASSIC CABLE, INC., Plaintiffs, v. RURAL TELEPHONE SERVICE CO., INC.; VISION PLUS, INC.; LARRY E. SEVIER; MERLIN DENNIS; BARNEY HICKERT; F. C. BRUNGARDT; DOUGLAS ZIEGLER; CHARLEY MINIUM; MARION OTTER; GLENN LAMBERT; ROBERT E. McCALL; SHANE BRADY; KENNETH CLARK; CITY OF HILL CITY, KANSAS; CITY OF BOGUE, KANSAS; CITY OF QINTER, KANSAS; CITY OF MORLAND, KANSAS; CITY OF NORCATUR, KANSAS; CITY OF GORHAM, KANSAS; CITY OF DAMAR, KANSAS; CITY OF PALCO, KANSAS; and CITY OF LOGAN, KANSAS, Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motions granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

---

Cable, immunity, franchise, state action, Communications, motion to dismiss, cable television, anti trust law, attorney's fees, antitrust claim, municipality, entitlement, Telephone, antitrust, allegations, preempted, defeat, preemption, broadcast, appears, amended complaint, plaintiffs', constitutional right, property interest, federal statute, television, damages, doctrine of immunity, cable franchise, state statute

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The court may not dismiss a cause of action for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) unless it appears beyond doubt that the claimant can prove no set of facts supporting its claim which would entitle it to relief. In considering a rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, the court must assume as true all well-pleaded facts, and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmovant. The issue in reviewing the sufficiency of a complaint is not whether the plaintiff will ultimately prevail, but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support its claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Immunity

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

**HN2** [down] Affirmative Defenses, Immunity

A motion to dismiss is appropriate where allegations clearly indicate the existence of an affirmative defense. In such cases, the complaint is said to have a built-in defense and is essentially self-defeating. Privilege and immunity are examples of built-in affirmative defenses that are properly considered on a motion to dismiss.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Standing, Injury in Fact

A party meets the minimum constitutional requirements for standing when (1) it has suffered an injury in fact, (2) there is a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, and (3) it is likely that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. However, a plaintiff need only support the elements of standing with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation. At the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss the court presumes that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Franchises > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Justiciability, Standing

If the plaintiff is himself an object of the challenged action, there is ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has caused him injury.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

**HN5** [down] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7307 provides in pertinent part that a foreign corporation which has done business in this state without authority shall not maintain any action. A corporation is "doing business" in Kansas if it has an office or place of business within this state, or a distributing point herein, or delivers wares or products to resident agents in this state for sale, delivery or distribution. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7303. By its plain meaning, § 17-7303 does not appear to include merely applying for a franchise as "doing business." Nor do any cases hold as such. Under Kansas law, then, applying for a franchise, without more, is not "doing business" such that § 17-7307 would apply.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

956 F. Supp. 896, *896LÁ996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19682, **1

**HN6** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

To acquire the protection of state action immunity, a municipality must show the state legislature both authorized the challenged action and intended to displace competition with regulation.

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Telecommunications Act > Federal Preemption

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Telecommunications Act

**HN7** Telecommunications Act, Federal Preemption

Neither state nor local laws may be enforced or implemented in such a way as to frustrate the objectives of federal law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN8** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The fundamental objective of the Parker immunity doctrine is to protect state action from federal antitrust scrutiny. Federalism principles demand that antitrust goals yield to state action if Congress has not plainly indicated a contrary result.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

**HN9** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Without an element of fraud or illegality, allegations of conspiracy, self-dealing, and overstepping statutory authority are not enough to invoke an abuse of authority exception to state action immunity.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

**HN10** State & Territorial Governments, Relations With Governments

Municipal governments are not sovereign, and the same concerns that affect the relationship between the state and national governments are not present between a state and its municipalities.

956 F. Supp. 896, *896L<sup>A</sup>996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19682, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN11 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Parker immunity protects states and state supervised municipalities from federal antitrust scrutiny, and is based on federalism principles. In contrast, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects from antitrust liability those who petition the government for redress, and is based on the constitutional right to associate and to petition the government. By definition, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is not applicable to the government actor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN12 [blue icon] Communications, Sherman Act

Federal statutory schemes do not preempt independently existing constitutional rights.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Scope > Government Actions

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

HN13 [blue icon] Elements, Color of State Law

To state a claim under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, a plaintiff must allege both the deprivation of a federal right and that the alleged action was taken under color of state law.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN14 [blue icon] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

To establish a property interest in a particular benefit, one must have a legitimate claim of entitlement to it. An abstract need or desire for it or a unilateral expectation is insufficient. In deciding if the requisite property interest is present, a court must determine whether the applicable state law conferred such a property interest. Moreover, when analyzing whether a plaintiff presents a legitimate claim of entitlement, a court must focus on the degree of discretion given the decisionmaker and not on the probability of the decision's favorable outcome.

956 F. Supp. 896, *896LÁ996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19682, **1

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Franchises > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN15 [ ] Regulated Practices, Franchises

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 12-2006 expressly grants a city the discretionary right to permit or prohibit anyone from furnishing cable television services within its corporate limits.

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Franchises > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN16 [ ] Regulated Practices, Franchises

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 12-2007 provides that no person may provide cable services or conduct a cable business without first obtaining a franchise from the local city. However, it does not impose any requirement that a city actually grant such a franchise. In fact, § 12-2007 expressly provides that a city has the discretion to grant or not to grant cable television franchises.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Remedies > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Franchises > Authorities

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Franchises > General Overview

HN17 [ ] Distributorships & Franchises, Remedies

47 U.S.C.S. § 541 provides in part that a franchising authority may not unreasonably refuse to award an additional competitive franchise. If a franchise is unreasonably refused, 47 U.S.C.S. § 555 provides the potential franchisee with a private cause of action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN18 [ ] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

To survive a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff need only state a claim for which relief may be granted unless it appears beyond doubt that the claimant can prove no set of facts supporting its claim.

Counsel: For CLASSIC COMMUNICATIONS, INC., plaintiff: Victor A. Davis, Jr., David P. Troup, Weary, Davis, Henry, Struebing & Troup, Junction City, KS. Gordon D Gee, Paul G Schepers, Rachel H Baker, Susan S. Goldammer, Seigfreid, Bingham, Levy, Selzer & Gee, Kansas City, MO. Cary Ferchill, Mark D Goranson, Brian F Antweil, Winstead, Sechrest & Minick, P.A., Austin, TX. For CLASSIC TELEPHONE, INC., plaintiff: Victor A. Davis, Jr., (See above). David P. Troup, (See above). Gordon D Gee, (See above). Paul G Schepers, (See above). Rachel H Baker, (See above). Susan S. Goldammer, (See above). Cary Ferchill, (See above). Mark D Goranson, (See above). Brian F Antweil, (See above). For CLASSIC CABLE, INC., plaintiff: Victor A. Davis, Jr., (See above). David P. Troup, (See above). Gordon D Gee, (See above). Paul G Schepers, (See above). Rachel H Baker, (See above). Susan S. Goldammer, (See above). Cary Ferchill, (See above). Mark D Goranson, (See above). Brian F Antweil, (See above).

For RURAL TELEPHONE SERVICE COMPANY, INC., defendant: Donald D. Barry, Anthony S. Barry, Barry & Barry, Topeka, KS. J. Eugene Balloun, Timothy M. O'Brien, Robert [**2] D. Grossman, David A. Rameden, Shook, Hardy & Bacon L.L.P., Overland Park, KS. For VISION PLUS, INC., defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For LARRY E SEVIER, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For MERLIN DENNIS, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For BARNEY HICKERT, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For F C BRUNGARDT, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For DOUGLAS ZIEGLER, [**3] defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For CHARLEY MINIUM, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For MARION OTTER, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For GLENN LAMBERT, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For ROBERT E MCCALL, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For SHANE BRADY, defendant: Donald D. Barry, (See above). Anthony S. Barry, (See above). J. Eugene Balloun, (See above). [**4] Timothy M. O'Brien, (See above). Robert D. Grossman, (See above). David A. Rameden, (See above). For KENNETH CLARK, defendant: Allen Shelton, Shelton Law Firm, P.A., Oberlin, KS. For CITY OF HILL CITY, KANSAS, defendant: William B. Elliott, Hill City, KS. For CITY OF BOGUE, KANSAS, defendant: Allen G. Glendenning, Watkins, Calcara, Rondeau, Friedeman, Bleeker, Glendenning & McVay, Chtd., Great Bend, KS. For CITY OF QUINTER, KANSAS, defendant: S. Philip Stover, Quinter, KS. For CITY OF MORLAND, KANSAS, defendant: Tony A. Potter, Hill City, KS. For CITY OF NORCATUR, KANSAS, defendant: Steven W. Hirsch, Hirsch & Pratt, Oberlin, KS. For CITY OF GORHAM, KANSAS, defendant: Kenneth L. Cole, Woelk & Cole, Russell, KS. For CITY OF DAMAR, KANSAS, defendant: Craig C. Blumreich, Gehrt & Roberts, Chartered, Topeka, KS. For CITY OF PALCO, KANSAS, defendant: Craig C. Blumreich, (See above).

Judges: DALE E. SAFFELS, United States District Judge

Opinion by: DALE E. SAFFELS

Opinion

---

[*900] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This matter is before the court on the motions to dismiss of defendants City of Palco (Doc. 43), City of Damar (Doc. 44), City of Morland (Doc. 45), City of Norcatur (Doc. 48), and City of Gorham (Doc. 50). [**5] For the reasons set forth below, defendants' motions are granted in part and denied in part.

[*901] I. BACKGROUND

The following facts are uncontested or, where controverted, construed in a manner most favorable to the plaintiffs as the non-moving parties.

In 1992, Classic Communications, Inc. initiated efforts to expand its telecommunications business into western Kansas. Classic Communications' telephone subsidiary, Classic Telephone, Inc., attempted to purchase telephone exchange systems in the region and its cable television subsidiary, Classic Cable, Inc., attempted to expand its cable television service into the Cities of Palco, Damar, Morland, Norcatur, and Gorham (collectively the "Cable Cities" or "Cities"). In each of the Cable Cities, Rural Telephone Service Co., Inc. ("Rural"), or its wholly-owned subsidiary, Vision Plus, Inc. ("Vision"), was already operating a local telephone exchange or a cable television system, or both.

In order to operate a cable television system in Kansas, a business is required to obtain a franchise from the city to be serviced in order to use streets and rights-of-way. Classic Cable applied for a competitive cable television franchise [**6] in each of the Cable Cities, and each city denied Classic Cable's application without, according to plaintiffs, providing any valid reason.

Classic Cable subsequently notified the Cable Cities that, under 47 U.S.C. § 541 of the 1992 Cable Act, they were not permitted to deny a cable franchise for competitive reasons and Classic Cable requested additional information in an effort to find a "legitimate explanation" for the denial. According to plaintiffs, none of the Cable Cities responded with a legitimate explanation and all continue to refuse to grant franchises to Classic Cable.

Plaintiffs contend that these denials are a result of a conspiracy between Rural and the Cable Cities to deny Classic the opportunity to compete in the provision of telecommunications services.

II. RULE 12\(B\)\(6\) MOTION TO DISMISS STANDARD

HN1 The court may not dismiss a cause of action for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) unless it appears beyond doubt that the claimant can prove no set of facts supporting its claim which would entitle it to relief. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 249-50, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 \(1989\).

In [**7] considering a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, the court must assume as true all well-pleaded facts, and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmovant. Housing Auth. of the Kaw Tribe v. City of Ponca City, 952 F.2d 1183, 1187 \(10th Cir. 1991\); Swanson v. Bixler, 750 F.2d 810, 813 \(10th Cir. 1984\). The issue in reviewing the sufficiency of a complaint is not whether the plaintiff will ultimately prevail, but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support its claim. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 94 S. Ct. 1683 \(1974\).<sup>1</sup>

[**8] HN2

---

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs contend that motions to dismiss antitrust claims should be more disfavored than motions to dismiss other types of claims. The court disagrees. Under present law, motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), including those directed at antitrust claims, are greatly disfavored by the federal courts. NL Indus., Inc. v. Gulf & Western Indus., 650 F. Supp. 1115, 1122 \(D. Kan. 1986\). Enhancing the 12(b)(6) movant's already difficult burden would accomplish little more than transforming the dismissal into an impractical formality, and would virtually eliminate a procedural tool, which, when used cautiously, can promote the liberal rules of pleading and protect the interests of justice.

A motion to dismiss is appropriate where allegations "clearly indicate the existence of an affirmative defense." 5A C. WRIGHT, A. MILLER & M. KANE, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357. In such cases, "the complaint is said to have a built-in defense and is essentially self-defeating." Id. Professors Wright and Miller note that privilege and immunity are examples of built-in affirmative defenses that are properly considered on a motion to dismiss. Id.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Standing

The Cable Cities move to dismiss plaintiffs' action for lack of standing. HN3 A party meets the minimum constitutional requirements for standing when (1) it has suffered an injury in fact, (2) there is a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, and (3) it is likely that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 559-61, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351, 112 S. Ct. 2130 (1992); Skrzypczak v. Kauger, 92 F.3d 1050, 1052-53 (10th Cir. 1996). However, a plaintiff need only support the elements of standing "with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation." Id. [**9] "At the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we 'presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim . . . .'" Id. at 561 (quoting Lujan v. National Wildlife Fed'n, 497 U.S. 871, 889, 111 L. Ed. 2d 695, 110 S. Ct. 3177 (1990)).

The Cable Cities appear to contest the second, or causation, prong of the Lujan standing requirements. The crux of their argument is since they did not deal with all of the plaintiff corporations, not all of the plaintiff corporations can trace their alleged injuries to the challenged actions of the Cable Cities, and thus not all of the plaintiffs can have standing.

The court agrees that Classic Telephone's connection to the Cable Cities is negligible. According to plaintiffs' first amended complaint (Doc. 89), Classic Telephone sought no franchises from the Cable Cities. Nor did Classic Telephone conduct any other form of business with the Cable Cities. The court is not convinced, in light of plaintiffs' factual allegations and all reasonable inferences drawn therefrom, that plaintiffs can establish [**10] a causal connection between Classic Telephone's injury and the Cable Cities' challenged conduct. Accordingly, the court determines that Classic Telephone does not have standing to sue the Cable Cities.

Classic Cable, on the other hand, does have standing. According to plaintiffs' first amended complaint, Classic Cable was the particular Classic corporation that attempted to obtain cable franchises from the Cable Cities. Classic Cable was also the corporation intended by plaintiffs to operate the cable systems should the franchises have been granted. The Supreme Court has noted that HN4 if "the plaintiff is [itself] an object of the [challenged] action . . . there is ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has caused him injury . . . ." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. Here, Classic Cable, as the franchise applicant, was clearly an object of the Cities' rejection of the franchise requests; Classic Cable's inability to operate cable television systems in the Cable Cities, its alleged injury, is directly traceable to the Cities' challenged conduct, the Cities' rejection of Classic Cable's franchise requests.

The question of Classic Communications' standing to sue the Cable [**11] Cities is more problematic. Classic Communications, as the parent corporation, has a discrete corporate existence and is treated independently of its subsidiaries in the absence of extraordinary circumstances. 18 Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 55 (1985). See Quarles v. Fuqua Indus. Inc., 504 F.2d 1358, 1362-63 (10th Cir. 1974). Thus, in order for Classic Communications to have standing to sue, it must allege the Cable Cities caused it, as a separate and distinct corporation, to suffer some redressable injury to an enforceable legal right. Injury that arises solely out of harm done to a subsidiary corporation, however, is insufficient to confer standing to sue on a parent corporation. K-B Trucking Co. v. Riss Int'l Corp., 763 F.2d 1148, 1154 (10th Cir. 1985); RTC v. Fleischer, 848 F. Supp. 917, 923 (D. Kan. 1994).

Plaintiffs' amended complaint is somewhat vague concerning the causal connection between Classic Communications' injury and the Cable Cities' challenged conduct. However, in drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of Classic Communications, the court cannot say beyond doubt that plaintiffs' can prove no set of facts connecting Classic Communications' alleged [**12] harm to the Cable Cities' challenged conduct. There is insufficient factual development, at this early stage of litigation, to properly dismiss Classic Communications for lack of standing.

The Cable Cities also contend that Classic Communications is statutorily barred [*903] by Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7307 from pursuing claims against the cities. HN5↑ Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7307 provides that "a foreign corporation . . . which has done business in this state without authority shall not maintain any action . . ." (Emphasis added). A corporation is "doing business" in Kansas if it "has an office or place of business within this state, or a distributing point herein, or deliver[s] wares or products to resident agents in this state for sale, delivery or distribution . . ." Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7303. By its plain meaning, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7303 does not appear to include merely applying for a franchise as "doing business." Nor do any cases hold as such. Under Kansas law, then, applying for a franchise, without more, is not "doing business" such that Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7307 would apply. Accordingly, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7307 does not prevent Classic from pursuing its claims against [**13] the Cable Cities.

The Cable Cities further contend that, even if the statutory bar of Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7307 is inapplicable, the fact that Classic Communications is not registered to conduct business in Kansas is fatal to its claims against the cities. The gist of this argument appears to be that Classic Communications cannot claim injury, and hence lacks standing, because it never was authorized to conduct any sort of business in Kansas to begin with. The court disagrees. There is no reason why Classic could not first seek the required franchises before registering to do business. Nor is there any reason to believe that Classic would have been unable to obtain the right to conduct business in Kansas. Without some reasonable basis to show that Classic Communications was unable or unwilling to conduct its cable business should it have been granted a franchise, Classic Communications' allegation that the cities were the cause of its lost business suffices, at this juncture, to establish standing to sue.<sup>2</sup>

[**14] B. Recovery of Damages

The Cable Cities next move to dismiss any claims for money damages made pursuant to federal and state antitrust laws. The Cities contend that their immunity from antitrust claims for damages is absolute and that such immunity is set forth in 15 U.S.C. § 35 and Kan. Stat. Ann. § 12-205. Classic Cable's response does not address the Cities' claimed immunity from damages, and Classic offers no legal authority to refute what appear to be clear statutory bars to such claims. Therefore, to the extent Classic is attempting to assert against the Cities any claims for damages, costs, attorneys' fees or interest under federal antitrust law, or any claims for damages under Kansas antitrust law, such claims fail to state a claim for which relief may be granted and are dismissed. The validity of plaintiff's claims for injunctive relief under state and federal antitrust law will be addressed next.

C. Sherman Act Claim

The Cable Cities move to dismiss Count Two of plaintiff's amended complaint, the Sherman antitrust claim. The Cities assert immunity from the antitrust claim under the state action doctrine first announced in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, [**15] 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\) and extended to municipalities in Allright Colorado v. City and County of Denver, 937 F.2d 1502 \(10th Cir. 1991\). HN6↑ To acquire the protection of state action immunity, a municipality must show the state legislature both authorized the challenged action and intended to displace competition with regulation. Allright Colorado, 937 F.2d at 1506. The Cities contend they meet these requirements because they acted pursuant to authority clearly articulated by state statute, and the Kansas legislature contemplated anticompetitive regulation when it enacted Kan. Stat. Ann. § 12-2001, et seq. Therefore, the Cities argue, they are entitled to Parker state action immunity from plaintiffs' antitrust claim.

---

<sup>2</sup> For the remainder of this Memorandum and Order, the terms "Classic" and "plaintiff" denote Classic Cable, Inc.

In response, Classic Cable does not dispute the existence of the elements of Parker state action immunity. Classic instead attempts to defeat the Cities' state [*904] action defense by advancing a rather novel preemption argument, which appears to have two premises. The first premise is Classic's theory that "if a local statute, which on its face is consistent with federal law, is enforced in such a way that the results are inconsistent with a federal [**16] statute, that local statute is preempted by the federal statute." The second premise is that Parker immunity is not a valid defense where the challenged action was performed pursuant to a state statute that has been preempted by federal law. In reply, the Cities appear to misconstrue the first premise of Classic's argument as an argument for implied conflict preemption. The Cities assert that the Kansas statutes are not preempted and, logically, never reach the second premise of Classic Cable's argument.

Classic Cable cites Livadas v. Bradshaw, 512 U.S. 107, 114 S. Ct. 2068, 129 L. Ed. 2d 93 (1994) in support of the first premise of its preemption theory. The force of that case as precedent, however, is questionable. Livadas dealt exclusively with the preemption of state labor law by the National Labor Relations Act. 114 S. Ct. at 2068. It did not address the effect of federal preemption on state action immunity. Id. Nor did it involve antitrust claims, Parker immunity, the Cable Act, or the Telecommunications Act. Id.

Classic would point out that Livadas was cited for the particular legal principle that a policy interpreting a valid state statute may [**17] be preempted by federal law. Nonetheless, the connection to the present case is tenuous. The Livadas Court merely recognized that a policy made to explain or enforce a valid state statute may be preempted where that policy conflicts with federal law. 114 S. Ct. at 2068. It did not suggest that the state statute under which the offending policy was promulgated is also preempted. Id.

Classic also cites Chambers v. Capital Cities/ABC, 851 F. Supp. 543 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) in support of the first premise of its preemption theory. The court finds Chambers unconvincing. While we agree with the Chambers court that HN7[<sup>1</sup>] neither state nor local laws may be enforced or implemented in such a way as to frustrate the objectives of federal law, we do not agree that a municipality should incur antitrust liability simply for contravening some unrelated federal statute. Violations of, say, the federal Cable Act or Telecommunications Act should be pursued as just that-violations of independent federal statutes. Such violations should not also neutralize a municipality's immunity to federal antitrust law.

In addition to its lack of convincing precedent, Classic's preemption argument is inconsistent [**18] with the objectives of Parker immunity. HN8[<sup>1</sup>] The fundamental objective of the Parker immunity doctrine is to protect state action from federal antitrust scrutiny. Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 44 n. 7, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713, (1985). Federalism principles demand that antitrust goals yield to state action if Congress has not plainly indicated a contrary result. See Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 56-57, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985). Classic's preemption theory would undermine these principles by depriving a municipality of its protection from federal antitrust scrutiny whenever its conduct could be construed to be in conflict with a federal statute.

Classic also proposes that state action immunity is not a valid defense where a municipality exceeds or abuses its statutory grant of authority. The Cable Cities disagree with Classic's statement of the law and contend that this court has previously considered and rejected such a limit on state action immunity in Jacobs, Visconsi & Jacobs Co. v. City of Lawrence, Kansas, 715 F. Supp. 1000 (D. Kan. 1989), aff'd, 927 F.2d 1111 (10th Cir. 1991). [*19] In Jacobs, we stated that "once it is established that defendants are entitled to state action immunity, any further inquiry into the motives or reasons for defendants' decision is irrelevant." 715 F. Supp. at 1009. The Cities argue the Jacobs "no further inquiry" rule should apply in this case to preclude the court from considering whether the Cities exceeded or abused their statutory grant of authority.

[*905] The court agrees with Cable Cities that in Jacobs we declined to examine the subjective motives or reasons behind the decisions of the city council. Nevertheless, we are not convinced that certain improper conduct might not defeat state action immunity. Although the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed our decision in Jacobs, it did not hold that exceeding or abusing authority could never defeat state action immunity. 927 F.2d at 1111. On the contrary, the Appeals Court only held that the plaintiff's allegations were insufficient, "in the situation presented," to defeat Parker immunity. Id. That court expressly qualified its analysis by noting at the outset that "appellants do not allege that the city commissioners engaged in illegal or fraudulent actions." [**20] Id. at 1122. Indeed, it appears that the Appeals Court left open the possibility that, given certain improper conduct, a local government's actions could fall outside the state action immunity doctrine.

However, even assuming the Tenth Circuit would recognize an exception to Parker immunity, we disagree with Classic that such exception would be so broad as to be triggered whenever a municipality oversteps its statutory grant of authority. Rather, it appears from Jacobs that such an exception would be quite narrow, and probably limited to certain illegal or fraudulent acts. Allegations of self-dealing, standing alone, would be unlikely to defeat state action immunity. Likewise, no exception would exist for alleged conspiracies. See Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1984). See, also, Buckley Construction v. Shawnee Civic and Cultural Development Authority, 933 F.2d 853 (10th Cir. 1991).

Moreover, the policy underlying the state action doctrine also weighs against recognizing a broad exception to doctrine. The fundamental policy of the Parker exception is to immunize state action from federal antitrust scrutiny. [**21] Hallie, 471 U.S. at 44 n. 7. To allow such scrutiny whenever it is alleged that state or local decisionmakers have exceeded or abused their authority would defeat the purpose of the state action doctrine. As a general rule, then, it is best to leave the scrutiny of such misconduct to the state courts. Jacobs, 715 F. Supp. at 1010. See Areeda, Antitrust Immunity for State Action after Lafayette, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 435, 449-50 (1981).

The court finds that the allegations of misconduct detailed in Classic's amended complaint and response are insufficient to defeat the Cable Cities' state action immunity. Plaintiff's amended complaint merely alleges "a combination or conspiracy" between Rural and the Cable Cities. But as already noted, allegations of conspiracy are not enough to defeat state action immunity. Nor are plaintiff's allegations that "Rural and several of the Cities' council members were one and the same" or that one of the Cities "overstepped its statutory authority" enough to defeat state action immunity. HN9 Without an element of fraud or illegality, allegations of conspiracy, self-dealing, and "overstepping statutory authority" are not enough to invoke an abuse of [**22] authority exception to state action immunity.

Both of Classic's arguments fall short of convincing the court to dilute the state action immunity doctrine. Accordingly, the Cities' motions to dismiss Count Two of plaintiff's amended complaint are granted.<sup>3</sup>

D. Kansas Antitrust Claim

The Cable Cities also assert Parker state action immunity as a defense to Count Three of Classic's complaint, the Kansas antitrust claim. Although the Cities acknowledge the absence of Kansas cases applying Parker immunity to Kansas antitrust laws, they argue that the Kansas Supreme Court would likely adopt the Parker immunity doctrine if presented with the opportunity. The court [**23] disagrees.

As the court noted above, the fundamental purpose of the state action doctrine is to immunize state action from federal antitrust [*906] scrutiny. Hallie, 471 U.S. at 44 n. 7. Where, as here, federal antitrust laws are not implicated, the purpose behind state action immunity disappears. Even the underlying policy of state action immunity is inapplicable to the relationship between a state and its municipalities. The Parker immunity doctrine was founded on federalism grounds as a means to protect the delicate relationship between the federal and state governments, both of which are sovereign. Parker, 317 U.S. at 341. In contrast, HN10 municipal governments are not sovereign, and the same concerns that affect the relationship between the state and national governments are not present between a state and its municipalities.

The Cities assert that Parker immunity has been applied in cases arising under similar state antitrust laws. In support, the Cities cite Aurora Cable Communications v. Jones Intercable, 720 F. Supp. 600 (W.D. Mich. 1989).

---

<sup>3</sup> In dismissing Classic Cable's Sherman antitrust claim, the court assumed as true Classic's allegation that Rural and several of the Cities' council members "were one and the same." Therefore, no purpose would be served by permitting Classic Cable to conduct additional discovery concerning Rural's influence on the Cities' decisions.

The court finds Aurora Cable unhelpful to the Cities' position. Aurora Cable involved the application of the Noerr-Pennington [**24] doctrine to state antitrust laws. 720 F. Supp. at 600. It did not concern Parker immunity. Id. Indeed, the Aurora Cable court did not even mention Parker immunity or state action immunity. Id. An argument by analogy would also be unhelpful, as the two doctrines are fundamentally different. HN11[] Parker immunity protects states and state supervised municipalities from federal antitrust scrutiny, and is based on federalism principles. See Parker, 317 U.S. at 341. See, also, Allright Colorado v. City and County of Denver, 937 F.2d 1502 \(10th Cir. 1991\). In contrast, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects from antitrust liability those who petition government for redress, and is based on the constitutional right to associate and to petition government. See Eastern R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\). See, also, Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\). By definition, then, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is not applicable to the government actor.

The court finds the Cable Cities' state action immunity defense to Classic's Kansas antitrust [**25] claim without merit. Accordingly, the Cities' motions to dismiss Count Three are denied.

E. Section 1983 Claim

The Cable Cities contend that Classic's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claims are precluded by the existence of a comprehensive scheme of remedies available under the Cable Act and the federal antitrust laws. In support of this contention, the Cities cite Middlesex County Sewerage Auth. v. National Sea Clammers Assoc., 453 U.S. 1, 20, 69 L. Ed. 2d 435, 101 S. Ct. 2615, (1981). The Sea Clammers court held that "when the remedial devices provided in a particular Act are sufficiently comprehensive, they may suffice to demonstrate congressional intent to preclude the remedy of suits under § 1983." The court disagrees, however, that the rule announced in Sea Clammers applies in this case.

As the Sixth Circuit stated in Lillard v. Shelby County Bd. of Educ., the Sea Clammers doctrine "speaks only to whether federal statutory rights can be enforced both through the statute itself and through section 1983"; it does not "stand for the proposition that a federal statutory scheme can preempt independently existing constitutional rights, which have contours distinct [**26] from the statutory claim." 76 F.3d 716, 723 \(6th Cir. 1996\) (emphasis in original). The Tenth Circuit recently adopted this rationale in Seamons v. Snow, 84 F.3d 1226, (10th Cir. 1996). Here, Classic is not attempting to predicate its 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action on violations of the Cable Act or Sherman Antitrust Act. Instead, Classic is using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 as a vehicle to vindicate rights arising independently under the Constitution. Since, by Seamons, HN12[] federal statutory schemes do not preempt independently existing constitutional rights, the remedial schemes available under the Cable Act and the Sherman Act do not preempt the independently existing constitutional rights upon which Classic bases its 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim. The next step, then, is to examine the merits of the alleged constitutional [*907] violations that support Classic's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim.

HN13[] To state a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, a plaintiff must allege both the deprivation of a federal right and that the alleged action was taken under color of state law. Jacobs, Visconti & Jacobs v. City of Lawrence, 927 F.2d 1111, 1115 \(10th Cir. 1991\). The parties do not dispute that the Cities acted under color of [**27] state law. Therefore, the court need only address whether Classic was deprived of a federal right when the Cities denied the franchise requests. Classic bases its 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim on two allegations: 1) deprivation of due process as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution; and 2) infringement of its right to free speech as guaranteed by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.<sup>4</sup>

1. Due Process

---

<sup>4</sup> Unlike Plaintiff's original complaint, plaintiff's first amended complaint contains no allegations of equal protection violations.

Classic contends it was denied procedural due process because the Cable Cities arbitrarily refused Classic's cable television franchise request. As an initial matter, however, Classic must show it had a property interest sufficient to invoke procedural protections. Curtis Ambulance v. Board of County Commissioners, 811 F.2d 1371, 1375 \(10th Cir. 1987\). HN14<sup>14</sup> To establish a property interest in a particular benefit, one must have [\[\*\*28\]](#) a "legitimate claim of entitlement" to it. Board of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 577, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548, 92 S. Ct. 2701 \(1972\). "An abstract need or desire for it" or a "unilateral expectation" is insufficient. Id. In deciding if the requisite property interest is present, a court must determine whether the applicable state law conferred such a property interest. Id.; Jacobs, Visconsi & Jacobs, 927 F.2d 1111 \(10th Cir. 1991\). Moreover, when analyzing whether a plaintiff presents a legitimate claim of entitlement, a court must focus on the degree of discretion given the decisionmaker and not on the probability of the decision's favorable outcome. Jacobs, 927 F.2d at 1111, citing Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 266, 55 L. Ed. 2d 252, 98 S. Ct. 1042 \(1978\).

Classic Cable contends it has a property interest in the award of the requested franchise. This entitlement, Classic argues, "arises out of the very provisions regulating their disbursement." Thus, the court must look to those Kansas statutes which regulate the granting of municipal cable television franchises, Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 12-2006 and 2007, to decide whether Kansas law creates a legitimate [\[\*\*29\]](#) expectation of entitlement to a cable franchise. HN15<sup>15</sup> Kan. Stat. Ann. § 12-2006 expressly grants a city the discretionary right to permit or prohibit anyone from furnishing cable television services within its corporate limits. That statute's discretionary language, however, is not consistent with the creation of any expectation of entitlement to a cable franchise. Moreover, the statute does not contain any limitations on the city's exercise of its discretionary right to permit or deny an applicant's cable franchise which might otherwise give rise to a reasonable expectation of entitlement. See, e.g., Jacobson v. Hannifin, 627 F.2d 177, 180 \(9th Cir. 1980\) (finding no protected property interest, where gaming statute gave board "full and absolute power and authority" to grant or deny gaming licenses).

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 12-2007 is also unhelpful to Classic's argument. HN16<sup>16</sup> That statute provides that no person may provide cable services or conduct a cable business without first obtaining a franchise from the local city. However, it does not impose any requirement that a city actually grant such a franchise. In fact, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 12-2007 expressly provides that a city has the discretion [\[\*\*30\]](#) to grant or not to grant cable television franchises. Finally, the court agrees with the Cable Cities in that the mere fact that a city's decision in granting or denying franchises must be "reasonable" and in accordance with state and federal guidelines, is insufficient to confer upon franchise applicants a legitimate claim of entitlement. See Jacobs, 927 F.2d at 1111 (holding the requirement that a city's zoning decisions be [\[\*908\]](#) reasonable and based upon legally determined factors was insufficient to confer upon an applicant for a zoning change a legitimate entitlement to a zoning change). See, also, Buckley Construction v. Shawnee Civic & Cultural Development Auth., 933 F.2d 853 \(10th Cir. 1991\) (holding that the lowest bidder for a city contract does not have a legitimate expectation of receiving the contract since the applicable statute granted the city the discretionary right to decide who was the lowest "responsible" bidder). For these reasons, the court finds that Classic has no reasonable expectation of entitlement to a cable franchise, and Classic may not, therefore, rest its 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim on a violation of due process.

2. First Amendment Claim

Classic [\[\*\*31\]](#) Cable contends that the Cities violated its First Amendment rights by wrongfully rejecting its cable television franchise requests. In response, the Cities suggest that Classic's allegation is not sufficient to withstand their motions to dismiss. The Cities point out that the Tenth Circuit, in Community Communications Co v. City of Boulder, Colo., 660 F.2d 1370 \(10th Cir. 1981\), recognized that certain mediums, like cable television, require the use of a limited, invaluable part of the public domain. The Cities further point out that the Community Communications court held "no individual disseminator has the constitutional right to be the particular person who obtains the privilege to use the medium." Thus, the Cities argue, they did not violate Classic's First Amendment rights because, under Community Communications, Classic has no constitutional right to use the public domain to disseminate its messages by cable television.

The court disagrees with the Cities' application of Community Communications. In addition to factual dissimilarities, the law of Community Communications is not helpful to the Cities' argument. That court premised its holding on what it perceived [**32] as a likeness between cable and broadcast television. Community Communications, 660 F.2d at 1370. The Community Communications court noted that "inherent limitations on the number of speakers who can use a medium to communicate has been given as a primary reason why extensive regulation of wireless broadcasting is constitutionally permissible." Id. Thus, that court reasoned, since cable television is also inherently limited by the number of speakers, extensive regulation of cable television is likewise constitutionally permissible. The validity of the Community Communications court's premise, however, has become questionable in light of a more recent Supreme Court decision which appears to eliminate the "scarcity" argument for treating cable television like broadcast television. In Turner Broadcasting Systems v. FCC, the Court stated that "the broadcast cases are inapposite in the present context because cable television does not suffer from the inherent limitations that characterize the broadcast medium." 114 S. Ct. 2445 \(1994\). Absent any comparable limitations, the Community Communications court's analogy between cable and broadcast television loses much [**33] of its force, and its holding should have little impact on the present case.

Also unhelpful to the Cities' argument are several Supreme Court decisions clearly indicating that restrictions on cable television operators implicate the free speech and press clauses of the First Amendment. In City of Los Angeles v. Preferred Communications, the Court recognized that a municipal ordinance restricting cable franchising raises a cognizable First Amendment claim. 476 U.S. 488, 494-95 \(1986\). This notion was later repeated by the Court in Leathers v. Medlock, 499 U.S. 439, 113 L. Ed. 2d 494, 111 S. Ct. 1438 \(1991\), and most recently applied in Turner Broadcasting Systems, 114 S. Ct. at 2445 ("Cable programmers and cable operators engage in and transmit speech, and they are entitled to the protection of the speech and press provisions of the First Amendment").

At this juncture, facing as we do an incomplete factual record, and an area of law that is at best unsettled, the court is unable to find beyond doubt that Classic can prove no set of facts supporting its claim which would entitle it to relief. The Cities' motions to [*909] dismiss Classic's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim based on the [**34] deprivation of its free speech rights are therefore denied.

F. Cable Act Claim

Next, the Cities move to dismiss Classic's claim under 47 U.S.C §§ 541 and 555 of the Cable Act. HN17 47 U.S.C § 541 provides in part that "a franchising authority may not . . . unreasonably refuse to award an additional competitive franchise." If a franchise is unreasonably refused, 47 U.S.C § 555 provides the potential franchisee with a private cause of action. The Cities contend that they did not "unreasonably refuse" to grant franchises to Classic. Thus, the Cities argue, since only unreasonable denials of franchises are actionable, and since the facts establish that its denial was not unreasonable, they are entitled to dismissal of Classic's Cable Act claim.

The court disagrees with the Cities' reasoning. Whether the Cities' refusal was unreasonable is not an issue at this stage of the litigation. HN18 To survive a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff need only state a claim for which relief may be granted unless it appears beyond doubt that the claimant can prove no set of facts supporting its claim. H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 249-50. In the present case, Classic alleges a violation of the Cable Act which, [**35] if proven, would entitle it to relief. Moreover, the facts are insufficiently settled to find beyond doubt that Classic Cable can prove no set of facts supporting its claim. It would be improper for the court, at this early stage of the litigation, to deny Classic Cable the opportunity to offer evidence in support of its claim. Defendant's motions to dismiss Classic's Cable Act claim are denied.

G. Attorneys' Fees

Classic asserts that it is entitled to recover attorneys' fees for its federal antitrust claims. The Cable Cities contend that, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 35, it is immune from claims for attorneys' fees made under federal antitrust law.

Classic's response does not address the Cities' claimed immunity from attorneys' fees, and Classic offers no legal authority to refute what appears to be a clear statutory bar to such claims. Any claim for attorneys' fees made under federal antitrust law against the Cities is therefore dismissed.

Classic also asserts that it is entitled to recover attorneys' fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988, which applies to claims brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The Cities do not contest the application of 42 U.S.C. § 1988, but only suggests that [**36] Classic's claims for attorneys' fees should be dismissed along with its underlying 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claims. As discussed above, however, the court denied the Cities' motions to dismiss and upheld Classic's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim based on Classic's allegations of free speech violations. Accordingly, the Cities' motions to dismiss Classic's claims for attorneys' fees brought under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 is denied.

Finally, Classic seeks recovery of attorneys' fees under Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-108, which applies to claims brought pursuant to the Kansas Antitrust Act. The Cable Cities argue that this claim for attorneys' fees should be dismissed along with the entire state antitrust claim. Since the court has denied the Cities' motions to dismiss Classic's entire antitrust claim, any claim for attorneys' fees brought pursuant to that claim is also denied.

IT IS THEREFORE BY THE COURT ORDERED that the motions to dismiss of defendants City of Palco (Doc. 43), City of Damar (Doc. 44), City of Morland (Doc. 45), City of Norcatur (Doc. 48), and City of Gorham (Doc. 50) are granted in part and denied in part. Defendants' motions are granted as to the issue of damages claimed pursuant to [**37] federal and state antitrust law, the Sherman antitrust claim, and the claim for attorneys' fees under federal antitrust law. Defendants' motions are denied as to the Cable Act claim, the Kansas antitrust claim, the 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim, and as to claims for attorneys' fees under Kansas antitrust law and 42 U.S.C. § 1983. With regard to the question of standing, defendants' motions are granted with respect to Classic Telephone.

Dated this 3 day of December, 1996, at Topeka, Kansas.

/s/ DALE E. SAFFELS

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Hairston v. Pacific 10 Conf.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

February 6, 1996, Argued, Submitted, Seattle, Washington ; December 3, 1996, Filed

No. 95-35309

Reporter

101 F.3d 1315 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 33158 **; 96 Cal. Daily Op. Service 8710; 96 Daily Journal DAR 14419

RUSSELL HAIRSTON; FRANK GARCIA; JAIME WEINDL; JOVAN MCCOY; KYLE ROBERTS; SCOREBOARD, INC., a Washington Corporation; TEAM SPIRIT, INC., a Washington corporation; GRAHAM S. ANDERSON, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. PACIFIC 10 CONFERENCE, an unincorporated association; NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION, an unincorporated association, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) As Amended December 19, 1996.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington. D.C. No. CV-93-01763-BJR. Barbara J. Rothstein, District Judge, Presiding.

Original Opinion Previously Reported at: 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 30997.

Disposition: Affirmed

Core Terms

---

antitrust, players, athletes, football, sanctions, antitrust violation, damages, conspiracy, lawsuit, parties, bowl, athletic program, summary judgment, district court

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

**HN1** Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A district court opinion granting summary judgment is reviewed de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

**HN2** Private Actions, Standing

101 F.3d 1315, *1315LÁ1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 33158, **1

When a court concludes that no violation has occurred, it has no occasion to consider antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN3 [] Private Actions, Standing

The antitrust injury element of standing demands that the plaintiff's alleged injury result from the threat to competition that underlies the alleged violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN4 [] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, et seq., requires, at a minimum, that a plaintiff prove that the defendant's actions had an anticompetitive effect. In order to establish a claim under § 1, a party must demonstrate: (1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the rule of reason, the fact-finder examines the restraint at issue and determines whether the restraint's harm to competition outweighs the restraint's procompetitive effects. The plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the restraint produces significant anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets. If the plaintiff meets this burden, the defendant must come forward with evidence of the restraint's procompetitive effects. The plaintiff must then show that any legitimate objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN6 Burdens of Proof, Scintilla Rule

A plaintiff's burden of proof at the summary judgment stage of the proceedings is not high; all they need to do is present more than a mere scintilla of evidence to support its case.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN7 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to *Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\)* is reviewed de novo.

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > Claims & Enforcement

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > Intended Beneficiaries

HN8 Beneficiaries, Claims & Enforcement

Under Washington law, to create a third-party beneficiary contract, the parties must intend that the promisor assume a direct obligation to the intended beneficiary at the time they enter into the contract. The test of intent is an objective one; the key is not whether the contracting parties had an altruistic motive or desire to benefit the third party, but rather whether performance under the contract would necessarily and directly benefit that party. To determine the contracting parties' intent, the court should construe the contract as a whole, in light of the circumstances under which it was made.

Counsel: James L. Magee, Graham & Dunn; and Michael D. Hunsinger, Neubauer & Hunsinger, Seattle, Washington, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Richard J. Wallis, Bogle & Gates, Seattle, Washington, for the defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: Eugene A. Wright, Cynthia Holcomb Hall and Stephen S. Trott, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Hall; Separate Concurrence by Judge Trott.

Opinion by: HALL

Opinion

---

[*1317] OPINION

HALL, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs-appellants Russell Hairston, Frank Garcia, Jovan McCoy and Kyle Roberts appeal the district court's order granting summary judgment in favor of defendant-appellee, the Pacific-10 Conference ("Pac-10"). The district court had jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, and 28 U.S.C. § 1367. We have jurisdiction over this timely appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. We affirm.

I.

Appellants are former and current University of Washington ("UW") football players. [**2] Appellee, the Pacific-10 Conference ("Pac-10"), is an unincorporated association of ten universities situated in California, Arizona, Oregon and Washington,<sup>1</sup> formed for the purpose of "establishing an athletic program to be participated in by the members."

On November 5, 1992, the Seattle Times reported that UW's star quarterback, Billy Joe Hobert, had received three loans totalling $ 50,000 from an Idaho businessman. After investigating the allegations, UW officials suspended Hobert and declared him permanently ineligible to play amateur football. One month later, the Los Angeles Times published a series of articles alleging that UW's football program had violated several NCAA rules. At [**3] this time, UW, in conjunction with Pac-10 officials, began investigating these alleged irregularities.

After conducting an eight-month investigation into the allegations of recruiting improprieties, the Pac-10 placed the UW football team on probation for recruiting violations. The levied sanctions included: (1) a two-year bowl ban covering the 1993 and 1994 seasons; (2) a one-year television revenue ban; (3) a limit of 15 football scholarships each for the 1994-95 and the 1995-96 academic years; (4) a reduction in the number of permissible football recruiting visits from 70 to 35 in 1993-94 and to 40 in 1994-95; and (5) a two-year probationary period.

The imposition of penalties on the UW Huskies devastated both the players and their fans. In an effort to have the sanctions rescinded, appellants filed a complaint against the Pac-10. In their complaint, appellants alleged antitrust violations under Section One of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and breach of contract. They argued that the penalties were "grossly disproportionate to the University's violations" and evidence of a conspiracy engineered by UW's Pac-10 competitors to sideline UW's football program and thereby improve [**4] their own records and odds of winning a post-season bowl game berth. Besides injunctive relief appellants also sought damages, which would include the cost of air fare, lodging, meals and expenses related to a trip to play in a post-season bowl game.<sup>2</sup>

The Pac-10 responded by filing a motion to dismiss all claims. In its motion, the Pac-10 contended that the players lacked constitutional and antitrust standing. The Pac-10's motion was granted in part as to certain plaintiffs not included in this appeal, but denied as to the issue of the players' standing. Hairston v. Pacific-10 Conference, 893 F. Supp. 1485 \(W.D. Wash. 1994\) ("Hairston I"). The district court found that because [*1318] the players had demonstrated direct antitrust injury, they could pursue their antitrust claims. *Id. at 1491-92*. However, the court dismissed the players' breach of contract claim because it found that the players were [**5] not intended third-party beneficiaries of the contract between and among Pac-10 member schools. *Id. at 1494*.

The Pac-10 then filed a motion for summary judgment alleging that appellants had failed to present any evidence of anticompetitive conspiracy among Pac-10 members or between the Pac-10 and the NCAA. The court agreed and granted the Pac-10's motion. Hairston v. Pacific-10 Conference, 893 F. Supp. 1495, 1496 \(W.D. Wash. 1995\) ("Hairston II").

This appeal then followed.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup>The Pac-10 includes: the University of Washington, Washington State University, University of Oregon, Oregon State University, University of California, Berkeley, Stanford University, University of California, Los Angeles, University of Southern California, Arizona State University and the University of Arizona.

<sup>2</sup>Because the penalty period imposed on UW has ended, the appellants' claims for injunctive relief are moot.

II.

HN1[] A district court opinion granting summary judgment is reviewed de novo. Warren v. City of Carlsbad, 58 F.3d 439, 441 \(9th Cir. 1995\), cert. denied, 134 L. Ed. 2d 209, 116 S. Ct. 1261 (1996).

III.

On appeal, the Pac-10 contends that the motion for summary judgment should be affirmed because appellants lack antitrust standing under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 4. Although we are not persuaded by the reasoning in the district court's opinion, Hairston I, 893 F. Supp. at 1490-92, we need not decide whether appellants have met the requirements for antitrust standing, because they have failed to establish any violation of the antitrust laws.

As Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp have observed:

HN2[] When a court concludes that no violation has occurred, it has no occasion to consider [antitrust] standing. . . . An increasing number of courts, unfortunately, deny standing when they really mean that no violation has occurred. In particular, HN3[] the antitrust injury element of standing demands that the plaintiff's alleged injury result from the threat to competition that underlies the alleged violation. A court seeing no threat to competition in a rule-of-reason case may then deny that the plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury and dismiss the suit for lack of standing. Such a ruling would be erroneous, for the absence of any threat to competition means that no violation has occurred and that even suit by the government - which enjoys automatic standing - must be dismissed.

2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, \*\*7 Antitrust Law Par. 360f, at 202-03 (rev. ed. 1995) (footnotes omitted); accord Levine v. Central Florida Medical Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1545 \(11th Cir. 1996\) (declining to reach the issue of standing because appellant had failed to demonstrate existence of antitrust violation); see Sicor Ltd. v. Cetus Corp., 51 F.3d 848, 855 n.10 (9th Cir.) cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 111, 116 S. Ct. 170 (1995) (choosing not to reach standing issue because appellant had not made out claim of antitrust injury); see also McCormack v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Assoc., 845 F.2d 1338, 1343 \(5th Cir. 1988\) (putting on standing issue and reaching merits of antitrust claim). The Sherman Act requires, at a minimum, that appellants prove that the Pac-10's actions had an anticompetitive effect. It is on this showing that appellants' claim fails, and accordingly we decide this case on the merits.

IV.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States[.] . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN4[] In order to establish a claim under Section 1, the players must demonstrate: "(1) that there was a contract, combination, or \*\*8 conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce." Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1410 (9th Cir.), cert. [\*1319] denied, 502 U.S. 994, 112 S. Ct. 617, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1991) (citation omitted).

The first and third elements of this test are not at issue. The Pac-10 members' agreement to sanction UW fulfills the "contract, combination, or conspiracy" prong. See NCAA v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 99, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 \(1984\) ("NCAA member institutions have created a horizontal restraint - an agreement among competitors on the way in which they will compete against each other."). The parties do not dispute that the agreement affects interstate commerce. Thus, the only issue is whether the sanctions constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. We analyze this question using the rule of reason analysis. Id. at 103.

<sup>3</sup> Prior to filing this appeal, the players stipulated to the dismissal of the NCAA as a defendant. Thus, only the Pac-10 remains as a defendant-appellee.

HN5 Under the rule of reason, the fact-finder examines the restraint at issue and determines whether the restraint's harm to competition outweighs the restraint's procompetitive effects. Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1413. The plaintiff bears the initial [**9] burden of showing that the restraint produces significant anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets. If the plaintiff meets this burden, the defendant must come forward with evidence of the restraint's procompetitive effects. The plaintiff must then show that "any legitimate objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner." Id.

Here, the plaintiffs met their initial burden by showing that the Pac-10 members banned UW from participating in bowl games for two years. The Pac-10 replied with evidence showing that there are significant procompetitive effects of punishing football programs that violate the Pac-10's amateurism rules.<sup>4</sup> The burden then returned to the athletes to show that the Pac-10's procompetitive objectives could be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner. HN6 The players' burden of proof at the summary judgment stage of the proceedings was not high, all they had to do was present more than a "mere scintilla of evidence to support its case." City of Vernon v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1361, 1369 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 908, 121 L. Ed. 2d 228, 113 S. Ct. 305 (1992). This they failed to do.

[**10] The athletes claim that the Pac-10's penalties were grossly disproportionate to UW's violations. However, they do not offer even the thinnest reed of support for this proposition. They point to the testimony of Robert Aronson, a law professor at the University of Washington, who analyzed the sanctions imposed against the UW compared to sanctions imposed against similar institutions. Aronson, however, testified that the penalties were within the range of appropriate penalties. The players also claim that the NCAA's report on the Pac-10's sanctions concludes that the penalties were disproportionate. It does not. The report actually states that the Pac-10's penalties were too lenient, not that they were too harsh. In short, the athletes have presented no evidence that would allow a jury to find in their favor, hence summary judgment was proper.

V.

Appellants also argue that the district court erred in dismissing their breach of contract claim. HN7 A dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) is reviewed de novo. Stone v. Travelers Corp., 58 F.3d 434, 436-37 (9th Cir. 1995).

[*1320] In their complaint, the players alleged that the Pac-10's Constitution, Bylaws and [**11] Articles created a contract between the conference and its members, and that the players were third-party beneficiaries of this contract. The players further contend that the Pac-10 breached this contract when it levied unreasonable sanctions against UW, thereby injuring the players as beneficiaries.

<sup>4</sup> As the Supreme Court explained in NCAA,

The NCAA seeks to market a particular brand of football - college football. The identification of this "product" with an academic tradition differentiates college football and makes it more popular than professional sports to which it might otherwise be comparable, such as, for example, minor league baseball. In order to preserve the character and quality of the "product," athletes must not be paid, must be required to attend classes, and the like. And the integrity of the "product" cannot be preserved except by mutual agreement; if an institution adopted such restrictions unilaterally, its effectiveness as a competitor on the playing field might soon be destroyed. Thus, the NCAA plays a vital role in enabling college football to preserve its character, and as a result enables a product to be marketed which might otherwise be unavailable. In performing this role, its actions widen consumer choice - not only the choices available to sports fans but also those available to athletes - and hence can be viewed as procompetitive.

HN8 Under Washington law, to create a third-party beneficiary contract, the parties must intend that the promisor assume a direct obligation to the intended beneficiary at the time they enter into the contract. Postlewait Constr. Inc. v. Great American Ins., 106 Wash. 2d 96, 720 P.2d 805, 806 (Wash. 1986). "The test of intent is an objective one; the key is not whether the contracting parties had an altruistic motive or desire to benefit the third party, but rather whether performance under the contract would necessarily and directly benefit that party." 720 P.2d at 806-07. To determine the contracting parties' intent, the court should construe the contract as a whole, in light of the circumstances under which it was made. Id. at 807.

To support their claim, appellants point to the language of the Pac-10 Constitution. Under its "Statement of Purpose," the conference notes that its goal is "to enrich [**12] and balance the athletic and educational experiences of student-athletes at its member institutions, [and] to enhance athletic and academic integrity among its members."

By joining the Pac-10, members are obligated to "administer [an] athletic program in accordance with the Constitution, Bylaws, and other legislation of the Conference," "conduct [their] intercollegiate athletic program in keeping with the highest recognized standards and in a manner which will enhance the reputation for integrity of the Pacific-10 Conference," "assure the intercollegiate athletic program is maintained as an integral part of the educational objectives and programs on the campus of each Pacific-10 Conference member institution," and "participate in the sports of football and basketball."

The ultimate goal of the conference is realization of certain values including: "academic and athletic achievement of student-athletes," "increased educational opportunities for young people," "quality competitive opportunities for student-athletes," and "amateurism in intercollegiate athletics."

In dismissing appellants' contract claim, the district court found that this language largely consisted of "vague, [**13] hortatory pronouncements in the contract" and that "by themselves, these pronouncements are not sufficient to support the players' claims that the Pac-10 intended to assume a direct contractual obligation to every football player on a Pac-10 team." Hairston I, 893 F. Supp. at 1494. We agree.

The key here is that appellants have not demonstrated that the parties intended to create direct legal obligations between themselves and the students. Other than the statements from the Pac-10's Constitution, By-laws and other legislation, appellants have failed to provide any evidence that the parties intended to create a contractual obligation; accordingly, we find their claim without merit.

VI.

Appellants have failed to show that the penalties the Pac-10 imposed constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. As a result, no antitrust violation occurred. Appellants also have failed to allege a breach-of-contract claim since no language in the contract shows the Pac-10 and its members intended to assume a direct obligation to the students. For these reasons, we AFFIRM.

Concur by: Trott

Concur

---

Trott, Circuit Judge, Concurring in the result.

I concur wholeheartedly in Judge Hall's excellent [**14] analysis of the merits of the appellants' failed attempt to mount an antitrust case against the NCAA and the Pac-10. I write separately, however, to point out that there is yet another significant reason to affirm the district court's dismissal of this case: Hairston and his colleagues manifestly lack antitrust standing to bring this lawsuit, and thus cannot even qualify as valid plaintiffs. By not deciding this threshold issue, [*1321] I'm concerned that we might encourage other potential litigants to limber up their bats to take unwarranted swings at targets legally beyond their reach. My concern is aroused because we leave intact and on the books the district court's holding that these plaintiffs do have antitrust standing, a holding which I respectfully believe is demonstrably erroneous. See Hairston v. Pacific-10 Conference, 893 F. Supp. 1485 (W.D. Wash. 1994).

The district court's flawed analysis may encourage antitrust lawsuits such as this one every time a player feels injured by a conference sanction. In my judgment, this case presents an appropriate opportunity to advise such potential litigants that they do not have standing to come into court with these kinds of alleged [**15] injuries. The fact that these plaintiffs have struck out on the merits is no assurance that the next group of distant plaintiffs denied a free vacation will be dissuaded from filing equally frivolous lawsuits. Such entirely self-referential forays into court unnecessarily tax the time, resources, and energy of their targets, not to mention those of the court. Thus, I offer my interpretation of the majority's unexplained statement that they "are not persuaded by the reasoning in the district court's opinion" regarding the antitrust standing issue.

"Establishment of [antitrust] standing, logically, precedes the presentation of a plaintiff's case." R.C. Dick Geothermal v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 152 (9th Cir. 1988) (en banc). In fact, in Thermogenics we likened antitrust standing to the need to get to first base before one can score a home run. Id. at 145. But this unremarkable principle is based on more than logic: it is based also on the intent of Congress as expressed in Supreme Court precedent. As the Court has explained, Congress, in enacting section 4 of the Clayton Act, "did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that [**16] might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. St. Council, 459 U.S. 519, 534, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983) (internal quotation omitted). Thus, "in such case . . . the alleged injury [of a plaintiff] must be analyzed to determine whether it is of the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall." Id. at 539.

Antitrust standing is different, of course, from standing in the constitutional sense. Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535 n.31. The plaintiff's ability to fulfill the requirements of antitrust standing is an essential threshold element of an antitrust case whereas constitutional standing is essential to the jurisdiction of the court. Thermogenics, 890 F.2d at 145. In order to have antitrust standing, the plaintiff must show that he or she has suffered "antitrust injury." If this burden is met, the plaintiff must also show that he or she is an appropriate antitrust plaintiff. It is on this second ground that the instant plaintiffs' lawsuit surely fails. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986); see also Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 473, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) [**17] (limiting the section 4 remedy to "particular class of persons . . . for redress of particular forms of injury."); Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, 788 F.2d 574, 576 n.1 (9th Cir. 1986) (substituting "proper party" for "antitrust standing").

The inquiry as to whether a litigant is a proper antitrust plaintiff looks both at how connected the players' injuries are to the alleged antitrust violation, see Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 534 ("An antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the Nation's economy; but despite the broad wording of § 4 there is a point beyond which the wrongdoer should not be held liable.") (internal quotation omitted), and whether the players appropriately fulfill the private attorneys' general function of the Clayton Act. See Eagle v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538, 542 (9th Cir. 1987) (applying private attorneys' general theory to determine whether plaintiffs had antitrust standing). In order to determine if a plaintiff is proper, we look at several factors, none of which is controlling: 1) the character of the damages, including the risk of duplicative recovery, the complexity [**18] of apportionment, and whether the damages' character makes them too speculative; [*1322] 2) the specific intent of the alleged conspiracy; 3) the directness of the injury; and 4) the existence of other, more appropriate plaintiffs. See Thermogenics, 890 F.2d at 146.<sup>1</sup>

To start our analysis of these factors, we look first to the character of the damages alleged. The minimal damages at issue here are not difficult to apportion because the players seek only damages related to an all-expense paid trip to a bowl game, including air fare, lodging and meals. Separating these damages from the loss suffered by the school is easy. There certainly is no need for "long and complicated proceedings involving massive evidence and complicated theories." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 544. Accordingly, this factor [**19] does not cut against the plaintiffs.

---

<sup>1</sup> In Thermogenics, 890 F.2d at 146, we also looked at "the nature of the plaintiff's claimed injury." However, this factor is more properly considered when performing the "antitrust injury" analysis.

The specific intent of the Pac-10 query, however, does work against the athletes. No one alleges that the Pac-10 was out to punish the athletes, and even the players admit in their brief that "the penalties were imposed by competitors who did not . . . consider the impact on the players."

Nor can the athletes show a direct causal connection between the alleged violation and the alleged injury sufficient to satisfy the third prong of the test. The players argue they were the direct victims because barring the UW football team from playing in a postseason bowl game prohibits them from participating in that game. However, the players' position is analogous to that of the employees in Eagle, 812 F.2d 538. In Eagle, the plaintiffs were crewmembers on fishing vessels whose wages were tied to the value of their catch. The defendants were canneries accused of setting the price of tuna artificially low. The court held that only the vessel-owners were directly injured, and that any injury suffered by the crewmembers was derived from the vessel owners' loss. Id. at 541. Likewise, only the University of Washington was directly injured here, and [**20] the players' injuries derived from that loss.

The biggest flaw in the plaintiffs' case, however, is that another, more appropriate plaintiff exists: the University of Washington. The antitrust injury that the plaintiffs allege - loss of the trip to San Antonio - is insignificant in comparison to the millions of dollars the University allegedly lost because of these sanctions. Therefore, it seems unlikely that denying the athletes antitrust standing would "leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 544.

The players argue unpersuasively that the UW is not a more appropriate antitrust plaintiff because it has a strong incentive not to sue the Pac-10. If the players are not permitted to bring this suit, they say, any antitrust violation the Pac-10 committed would go unpunished. However, other colleges have challenged college sporting associations and have still remained a part of the association after the litigation. See, e.g., NCAA v. Board of Regents of the Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 \(1984\). Moreover, as this court said in Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, 788 F.2d 574, 581 \(9th Cir. 1986\), [**21] "we cannot agree with [the] premise that every restraint must become the subject of a private antitrust action even when those directly injured do not choose to make it so."

Finally, the practical consequences of allowing the players to bring this lawsuit after their university - which has suffered enormous economic losses - has agreed to the sanctions, demonstrates that the players are not the proper antitrust plaintiffs. If we were to hold that these four players had antitrust standing to alter the sanctions against the UW, we would invite numerous groups of indirectly injured parties to bring antitrust lawsuits and argue that the Pac-10 should have imposed different sanctions or remedies. For example, freshmen players would want sanctions to be immediately imposed so that they could be free of them in the later [*1323] years when they are more likely to play. Senior players would want deferred penalties so that they could finish school before the penalties took effect. Football players would want their schools to pay monetary fines and not be prohibited from televised games or postseason play. But monetary fines would adversely affect funding of other athletic programs and harm other [**22] athletes. Other players might then complain that their interests had been violated. The sanctioned university is in the best position to balance these competing interests, and, if necessary, bring an antitrust action.

After balancing the different factors, I conclude that the players have failed utterly to show that they are proper antitrust plaintiffs. Therefore, because the players lack antitrust standing, I would reverse the district court's published order of May 20, 1994 which held to the contrary. In all other respects, I concur in Judge Hall's opinion.

ORDER AND AMENDED OPINION

ORDER

The concurring opinion of Trott, Circuit Judge, filed in this case on December 3, 1996 is hereby ordered amended as follows:

1. On page 15224 of the slip opinion, the final line of the first paragraph shall be changed to read: "Accordingly, this factor does not cut against the plaintiffs."
2. On page 15224 of the slip opinion, the first sentence of the second paragraph shall be changed to read: "The specific intent of the Pac-10 query, however, does work against the athletes."

---

End of Document

Pharmacare v. Caremark

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

December 12, 1996, Decided ; December 12, 1996, FILED

CIVIL NO. 96-00474 ACK

Reporter

965 F. Supp. 1411 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20504 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,698

PHARMACARE, et. al, Plaintiffs, vs. CAREMARK, et. al, Defendants

Disposition: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Defendants' Motion to Dismiss concerning Plaintiffs' § 1962\(a\) claim and mail and wire fraud claims GRANTED. Remainder of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss DENIED.

Core Terms

---

Plaintiffs', enterprise, Defendants', bribery, mail, mail fraud, motion to dismiss, patients, bribes, predicate act, wire fraud, racketeering, therapy, racketeering activity, competitors, injunction, predicates, customers, allegations, infusion, fulfill, site, fiduciary duty, restitution, intangible, referrals, deprived, purposes, Travel, entity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), in determining whether a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, the court must accept as true the plaintiff's allegations contained in the complaint and view them in a light most favorable to the plaintiff. The complaint must stand unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff has alleged no facts that would entitle him to relief. A complaint may be dismissed as a matter of law for two reasons: (1) lack of a cognizable legal theory or (2) insufficient facts under a cognizable legal theory. The issue is not whether a plaintiff's success on the merits is likely but rather whether the claimant is entitled to proceed beyond the threshold in attempting to establish his claims. The court must determine whether or not it appears to a certainty under existing law that no relief can be granted under any set of facts that might be proved in support of plaintiffs' claims.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To establish a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, a plaintiff must establish: (1) conduct, (2) of an enterprise, (3) through a pattern, (4) of racketeering activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Coercion & Harassment > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN3 [] Crimes Against Persons, Coercion & Harassment

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) defines the term pattern of racketeering activity as requiring at least 2 acts of racketeering activity the last of which occurred within 10 years after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(5\). To prove a pattern of racketeering activity a plaintiff or prosecutor must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. The determination of whether a RICO plaintiff is able to establish a pattern of racketeering activity necessarily entails an initial determination of whether the defendants committed two or more predicate acts within the meaning of the RICO statute. See 18 U.S.C.S. 1965\(c\). And if so, whether the predicate acts were related in manner such that they created a threat of continued unlawful activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN4 [] Bribery, Public Officials

The predicate acts which may form the basis for a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), are found at 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\). Section 1961\(1\) lists five different categories of criminal offenses that could potentially constitute predicate acts. Subsection (A) provides that any act or threat involving a variety of criminal offenses which are chargeable under state law may serve as a RICO predicate. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\)\(A\). Subsection (B) provides that any act which is indictable under any of a variety of enumerated federal criminal statutes may serve as a RICO predicate. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\)\(B\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Travel Act > Elements

International Trade Law > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Travel Act > General Overview

HN5 [] Travel Act, Elements

To establish a Travel Act violation, a plaintiff need only prove that the defendant used any facility in interstate or foreign commerce, including the mail, with intent to carry on bribery in violation of the laws of the United States. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1952\(a\)\(3\) and \(b\).

Banking Law > ... > Criminal Offenses > Bank Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

965 F. Supp. 1411, *1411A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20504, **1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

HN6 [down] Criminal Offenses, Bank Fraud

To establish a claim for mail or wire fraud, a plaintiff needs to establish that defendants (1) formed a scheme or artifice to defraud; (2) used the United States mails or, for wire fraud, the use of wire, radio, or television communications; (3) with the specific intent to deceive or defraud. 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1341, 1343, and 1346. Mail fraud also requires the intent to defraud someone of money or property.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

To establish a pattern under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), it must be shown that the predicate acts themselves amount to, or that they otherwise constitute a threat of, continuing racketeering activity. Continuity is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition. A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To have standing to assert a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, a plaintiff must establish a defendant's predicate acts actually and proximately caused the plaintiff's financial loss.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN9 [down] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act defines an "enterprise" as either (1) any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity or (2) any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity associated-in-fact enterprise. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(4\). To adequately plead the associated-in-fact enterprise, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the enterprise has an existence beyond that which is merely necessary to commit the predicate acts of racketeering; and (2) the enterprise must have some sort of structure for the making of the decisions, whether it be hierarchical or consensual.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

965 F. Supp. 1411, *1411Â¹ 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20504, **1

HN10 [blue icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

The minimum requirement for an associated in fact enterprise under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) requires a RICO enterprise to have an ascertainable structure separate and apart from the racketeering activity; the enterprise as a whole to have a separate existence, not merely one player in the enterprise to have a separate existence.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

An enterprise must have an existence beyond that which is merely necessary to commit the predicate acts of racketeering and some sort of structure for the making of the decisions, but this requirement may be fulfilled by the simple inclusion of a corporation as a participant in the enterprise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

A plaintiff seeking civil damages for a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\) must allege facts tending to show that he or she was injured by the use or investment of racketeering income.

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Fiduciaries > Fiduciary Duties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Governments > Fiduciaries

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Types of Price Discrimination > Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Fiduciaries > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Fiduciaries, Fiduciary Duties

Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act applies to cases of commercial bribery tending to undermine the fiduciary relationship between a buyer and its agent involving the sale or purchase of goods. Competitors of a seller involved in commercial bribery have standing under § 2(c) if they suffer economic injury. To fulfill the economic injury tenet, the competitor must establish a physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Types of Price Discrimination > Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

965 F. Supp. 1411, *1411Â¹ 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20504, **1

HN14 [blue icon] Types of Price Discrimination, Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\).

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Restitution

HN15 [blue icon] Equitable Relief, Injunctions

Under the Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203, remedies are strictly limited to injunctive relief and restitution, which may include disgorgement of illicit profits to injured parties.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN16 [blue icon] Equitable Relief, Injunctions

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Standing, Injury in Fact

To have standing, a plaintiff must prove: (1) injury in fact; (2) a causal relationship between the injury and the challenged conduct; and (3) a likelihood that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

Counsel: For PHARMACARE, Incorporated as, A Hawaii Corporation aka Value Drug, Ltd., CREATIVE HEALTH CARE SERVICES, INC., an Arizona Corporation, HOME PARENTERAL CARE, INC., an Oregon Corporation, On Behalf of Themselves and All Others Similarly Situated, plaintiffs: Michael K. Livingston, Davis & Levin, Honolulu, HI. Sharon R. Himeno, Price Okamoto Himeno & Lum, Honolulu, HI. Bonny E. Sweeney, Leonard B. Simon, Kevin P. Roddy, Stephen H. Swartz, Dennis Stewart, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, San Diego, CA.

For CAREMARK, INC., a California Corporation, CAREMARK INTERNATIONAL, INC., a Delaware Corporation, BAXTER INTERNATIONAL, INC., a Delaware Corporation, BAXTER HEALTHCARE CORPORATION, a Delaware Corporation, defendants: Robert J. Hackman, Goodsill Anderson Quinn & Stifel, Honolulu, HI. Howard M. Pearl, Winston & Strawn, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Alan C. Kay, Chief United States District Judge

Opinion by: Alan C. Kay

Opinion

---

[*1413] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS. THE COURT GRANTS DEFENDANTS' MOTION [**2] TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND REGARDING: (1) PLAINTIFFS' WIRE AND MAIL FRAUD CLAIMS; AND (2) PLAINTIFFS' § 1962(a) CLAIM. THE COURT DENIES THE REMAINDER OF DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

BACKGROUND

This case concerns the alternate site infusion therapy industry. Alternate site infusion therapies consist of services involving the administration of medication, nutritional solutions and fluids to a patient outside of a hospital. The most common therapies include total parental nutrition, enteral nutrition, antibiotic, antiviral and antifungal therapies, chemotherapy, pain management therapy, human growth therapy and treatments for hemophilia and HIV/AIDS. Due to their medical nature, alternative site infusion therapies are typically prescribed by a patient's doctor. From February 1986 until April 1995, when it sold its alternate site infusion therapy business, Caremark, Inc. ("Caremark") was the largest company in this industry.

During this time, Caremark underwent certain corporate transformations. Prior to 1987, Caremark was known as Home Health Care of America. From approximately August 1987 to about November 1992, Caremark was owned by Baxter Healthcare Corporation [**3] ("Baxter Healthcare"), a Delaware Corporation with its principal place of business in Illinois. Baxter Healthcare is a subsidiary of Baxter International, Inc ("Baxter"), a Delaware corporation with its headquarters in Illinois. In November, 1992, Caremark became a subsidiary of Caremark International, Inc. (collectively Caremark, Caremark International, Inc., Baxter Healthcare and Baxter referred to as "Defendants").

This case came about because of two plea agreements entered into by Caremark in the District of Minnesota ("Minnesota plea") and [*1414] the Southern District of Ohio ("Ohio plea"). In the Minnesota plea, entered into on June 20, 1995, Caremark pled guilty to one count of mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341 and agreed to pay a fine of $ 9,000,000. Two days later on June 22, 1995, Caremark entered into the Ohio plea where it pled guilty to mail fraud and paid a $ 20,000,000 fine. The basis for these agreements was Caremark's improper payments to physicians in exchange for the physicians' referrals of patients.

The significance and scope of these agreements constitute the gist of this action. The Defendants argue that the agreements merely establish wrongdoing with regard [**4] to two doctors <sup>1</sup> in the Minneapolis and Columbus area concerning the Federal Employees Health Benefit Program ("FEHBP") and the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services ("CHAMPUS"), two federal programs.

Caremark's competitors disagree. They argue that these agreements evidence a nationwide scheme of commercial bribery. In fact, three competitors <sup>2</sup> ("Plaintiffs") filed a nationwide class action on May 20, 1996 against the Defendants. The complaint asserts that Defendants' scheme violated four different statutes: (1) Clayton Act § 2(c) as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(c\) ("§ 2(c)"); (2) RICO 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(a\) and \(d\) ("§ 1962(a)"); (3) RICO 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) and \(d\) ("§ 1962(c)"); and (4) the California Business & Professions Code § 17200 concerning unfair and fraudulent business practices ("pendent claim"). For these violations, Plaintiffs seek general damages (trebled [**5] as provided by law), attorney's fees, an injunction prohibiting the Defendants from continuing their actions, restitution of Defendants' ill-gotten gains, and the imposition of a constructive trust.

On August 26, 1996, the Defendants filed a motion to dismiss. With regard to the RICO claims, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' complaint fails to: (1) adequately establish the predicate acts of racketeering; (2) satisfy RICO's proximate cause and standing requirement; (3) establish the existence of an enterprise necessary for § 1962\(c\); and (4) establish that Plaintiffs were injured by Defendants' use of income derived from racketeering activity as required by § 1962\(a\). As to Plaintiffs' § 2(c) claim, Defendants argue that dismissal is appropriate because: (1)

<sup>1</sup> The doctors are Dr. Neufeld of Columbus, Ohio and Dr. Brown of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

<sup>2</sup> The competitors are (1) Value Drug, Ltd., a Hawaii corporation; (2) Creative Health Care Services, an Arizona corporation; and (3) Home Parenteral Care, Inc., an Oregon corporation.

965 F. Supp. 1411, *1414-996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20504, **5

Plaintiffs lack the requisite standing; (2) Doctors do not owe their [**6] patients a commercial duty; and (3) Plaintiffs failed to plead that doctors provided no services in return for the alleged payments. Finally, with regard to the pendent claim, Defendants sought dismissal on the grounds that: (1) the injunction sought is unnecessary; (2) the Plaintiffs lack standing; and (3) the relief sought would violate the Commerce Clause of the Federal Constitution.

Plaintiffs responded to all these arguments in their October 31, 1996 opposition. The Defendants filed a reply on November 7, 1996.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

1. Motion to Dismiss

HN1 [↑] Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), in determining whether a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, this Court must accept as true the plaintiff's allegations contained in the complaint and view them in a light most favorable to the plaintiff. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974); Wileman Bros. & Elliott, Inc. v. Giannini, 909 F.2d 332, 334 (9th Cir. 1990); Shah v. County of Los Angeles, 797 F.2d 743, 745 (9th Cir. 1986). Thus, the complaint must stand unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff has alleged no facts [**7] that would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 101-02, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). A complaint may be dismissed as a matter of law for two reasons: (1) lack of a cognizable legal [*1415] theory or (2) insufficient facts under a cognizable legal theory. Balistreri, 901 F.2d at 699; Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 533-34 (9th Cir. 1984).

In essence, as the Ninth Circuit has stated, "the issue is not whether a plaintiff's success on the merits is likely but rather whether the claimant is entitled to proceed beyond the threshold in attempting to establish his claims." De La Cruz v. Tormey, 582 F.2d 45, 48 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 965, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1072, 99 S. Ct. 2416 (1979). The Court must determine whether or not it appears to a certainty under existing law that no relief can be granted under any set of facts that might be proved in support of plaintiffs' claims. Id.

DISCUSSION

Although the Plaintiffs' class has not been certified, the Court will decide the issues presented in this motion. See Wright v. Schock, [**8] 742 F.2d 541 (9th Cir. 1984) (citing cases which have allowed a court to decide a motion to dismiss before certification.) The Court, however, will assume that the suit is a class action for purposes of this motion.<sup>3</sup> See City Of Inglewood, 451 F.2d 948 (9th Cir. 1972) (holding that the district court was proper in assuming that suit was class action for purposes of deciding a Fed. R. Civ. P. § 12(b)(1) motion.) With that said, the Court will discuss the claims in the order the Defendants attacked them in their motion to dismiss.<sup>4</sup>

[**9] I. Plaintiffs' have established all the elements required for their 1962(c) claim

HN2 [↑] To establish its RICO § 1962(c) claim, the Plaintiffs must establish: (1) conduct,<sup>5</sup> (2) of an enterprise, (3) through a pattern, (4) of racketeering activity. Sedima v. Imrex Co. Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S.

<sup>3</sup> If the class is ultimately not certified, therefore, this order, or portions thereof, may no longer be applicable. The Court is mindful that pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1) the issue of class certification must be ruled on "as soon as practicable." See e.g. Wright, 742 F.2d at 543.

<sup>4</sup> Defendants did not specifically challenge Plaintiffs' § 1962(d) claims which alleged that Defendants conspired to violate § 1962(c) and § 1962(a). See Plaintiffs' Complaint at P 48, 55. The Court, therefore, will not address Plaintiffs' 1962(d) claims.

<sup>5</sup> Defendants do not argue that Plaintiffs' failed to establish this element.

Ct. 3275 (1985). Defendants first argue that Plaintiffs have failed to plead the third and fourth elements, i.e. a pattern of racketeering activity.

A. Plaintiffs' Have Adequately Established a Pattern of Racketeering Activity

HN3 [↑] RICO defines the term "pattern of racketeering activity" as requiring "at least two acts of racketeering activity . . . the last of which occurred within ten years . . . after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5). Aside from the minimal requirement of showing two predicate acts existed, RICO nowhere addresses the meaning of the [**10] term "pattern" as used throughout the statute. In H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Company, the United States Supreme Court sought to develop a meaningful concept of that term. 492 U.S. 229, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1989). Drawing on dicta from a previous opinion in which the issue was considered, Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496 n.14, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985), the Supreme Court divined from RICO's legislative history a two-pronged framework for analysis: "To prove a pattern of racketeering activity a plaintiff or prosecutor must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity." Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. at 239. Thus, the determination of whether a RICO plaintiff is able to establish a pattern of racketeering activity necessarily entails an initial determination of whether the defendants committed two or more predicate acts within the meaning of the RICO statute. See 18 U.S.C. § 1965(c). And if so, whether the predicate acts were related in manner such that they created a threat of continued unlawful activity. Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. at 239-43.

[*1416] 1. Predicate Acts

[**11] Congress has enumerated HN4 [↑] the predicate acts which may form the basis for a RICO claim in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). Section 1961(1) lists five different categories of criminal offenses that could potentially constitute predicate acts. Subsection (A) provides that "any act or threat" involving a variety of criminal offenses "which [are] chargeable" under state law may serve as a RICO predicate. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(A) (emphasis added). Subsection (B) provides that "any act which is indictable" under any of a variety of enumerated federal criminal statutes may serve as a RICO predicate. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(B) (emphasis added). Plaintiffs rely on subsection (B) to establish its RICO predicates claiming that Defendants committed various acts in violation of the following statutes delineated in subsection (B): (1) bribery or attempted bribery in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 201; (2) mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341; (3) wire fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1343; and (4) interstate and/or foreign travel in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1952.<sup>6</sup>

[**12] a. Doctors involved with the CHAMPUS and FEHPB Programs Qualify as 'Public Officials' for purposes of the federal bribery statute

Defendants argue that 18 U.S.C. § 201 only applies to bribery of public officials or bribery connected to testimony to be given at trial and thus does not apply to the facts alleged by Plaintiffs. See Defendants' Motion to Dismiss at pgs. 6-7. In response, Plaintiffs argue that although 18 U.S.C. § 201 applies only to federal officials, the Supreme Court has defined that term to include any "person [who] occupies a position of public of trust with official federal responsibilities." Dixson v. United States, 465 U.S. 482, 496, 79 L. Ed. 2d 458, 104 S. Ct. 1172 (1942). Under this expansive definition, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' bribery of public officials.

The Court finds that Plaintiffs' argument has merit. In Dixson, the Supreme Court found that the Petitioner occupied a position of official responsibility because he "allocated federal resources, pursuant to complex statutory and regulatory guidelines, in the form of [federal] contracts." Id. at 497. For purposes of a motion to dismiss, that this precisely the purpose [**13] to dismiss, that is precisely the authority the doctors were given this case. See De la Cruz v. Tormey, 582 F.2d 45, 48 (9th Cir. 1978) (holding that motion to dismiss inappropriate unless Plaintiff cannot establish claim "under any set facts.") Under a generous reading of the facts, the doctors who worked with these programs "allocated federal resources" in referring the federal employees' alternative site infusion therapy contracts to Caremark. Moreover, once the federal employee chose the only referred company, i.e. Caremark, a "federal contract" <sup>7</sup> was created between Caremark and the FEHBP and CAMPUS programs. Therefore, when the doctors accepted "bribes to influence their official decisions," they violated the 18 U.S.C. § 201. Id. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have established the commission of two predicate acts of bribery for purposes of surviving a motion to dismiss.<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup>The Court will not address Plaintiffs' state law bribery claims because it finds that the complaint does not allege them. See Plaintiffs' Complaint P 47 ("defendants have engaged in . . . (a) bribery, or attempted bribery, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 201.) If the Plaintiffs want to allege state law bribery, they can amend their complaint.

[**14] b. Because the Court has found that the Plaintiffs have established the predicate acts of bribery, a Travel Act violation can be established by merely alleging that Defendants' used the mail to bribe the physicians

HN5 To establish a Travel Act violation, the plaintiff need only prove that the defendant used any facility in interstate or foreign commerce, including the mail, with intent to . . . (3) carry on . . . bribery . . . in violation of the laws . . . of the United States." 18 U.S.C. § 1952\(a\)\(3\) and \(b\). [*1417] The Court has already determined that accepting Plaintiffs allegations as true, the Plaintiffs have established a violation of the federal bribery laws. To establish a Travel Act violation, therefore, the Plaintiffs need only prove that Defendants used the mail with the intent to commit those acts of bribery.

Through the plea agreements incorporated into the Complaint,<sup>9</sup> Plaintiffs have clearly met this burden. By pleading guilty to mail fraud, the Defendants acknowledged that they "intended to devise a scheme" -- which the Court has found could be indictable under the bribery statute -- and "used the United States Postal Service for the purpose of executing the [**15] scheme." See Minnesota Plea at pg. 3-4. Or in other words, Defendants admitted to using the mail with the intent to commit bribery, which is a violation of the Travel Act. Accordingly, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs have established at least two Travel Act violations for purposes of surviving a motion to dismiss.

c. Plaintiffs' mail and wire fraud [**16] claims do not allege that Defendants' purported scheme or artifice deprived Plaintiff of any property protected by the mail or wire fraud statutes HN6 To establish a claim for mail or wire fraud,<sup>10</sup> the Plaintiffs need to establish that Defendants (1) formed a scheme or artifice to defraud; (2) used the United States mails (or, for wire fraud, the use of wire, radio, or television communications); (3) with the specific intent to deceive or defraud. 18 U.S.C. § 1341, § 1343, § 1346; see also Sun Savings and Loan Association v. Dierdorff, 825 F.2d 187 \(9th Cir. 1987\). "Mail fraud also requires the intent to defraud someone of money or property." United States v. Carpenter, 95 F.3d 773, 776 \(9th Cir. 1996\).

At first glance, the Plaintiffs' complaint appears to fulfill these criteria. In the complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants formed a scheme of bribery and [**17] kickbacks to doctors in exchange for their referrals. The complaint also states, through its incorporation of the plea agreements, that Caremark used the United States mails in furtherance of the scheme and that the Defendants had the intent to deceive.<sup>11</sup> See Complaint at P 32.

<sup>7</sup> Defendants would provide the therapy to the employee in exchange for payment from the federal government.

<sup>8</sup> This analysis, however, applies only to scenarios involving federal insurance programs.

<sup>9</sup> Exhibits submitted with the complaint may be considered as part of the complaint for purposes of a motion to dismiss without converting it into a summary judgment motion. See Hal Roach Studios v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 \(9th Cir. 1990\). However, other evidence submitted by the parties such as newspaper articles would convert this motion into one for summary judgment. For that reason, this Court has decided to exercise its discretion and disregard that evidence so as not to transform this motion into one for summary judgment. See e.g. Skyberg v. United Food & Commercial Workers Int'l Union, 5 F.3d 297, 302 fn.2 \(5th Cir. 1993\).

<sup>10</sup> Because the analysis for these counts is identical, the Court will address them together. See Dischner, 974 F.2d at 1518 n. 16.

<sup>11</sup> Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs misconstrue the plea agreements is misplaced. The Court reminds the Defendants that at this juncture, the Court must accept as true the Plaintiffs' allegations contained in the complaint and view them in a light most favorable to the Plaintiffs. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 \(1974\). Therefore,

Plaintiffs fail, however, to allege that the Defendants' scheme deprived them of property protected by the mail fraud statute. Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' scheme deprived [**18] them of two separate property rights: (1) the right to a level playing field; and (2) the right of the physicians' patients to honest services. See Plaintiffs' Opposition at pg. 47.

In response to Plaintiffs' first argument, Defendants rely upon the Ninth Circuit's decision in Lancaster Community Hospital v. Antelope Valley Hospital, 940 F.2d 397, 405 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1094, 117 L. Ed. 2d 414, 112 S. Ct. 1168 (1992), in arguing that "market share" <sup>12</sup> is not a property right protected by the mail and/or wire [**1418] fraud statute. In Lancaster, the Ninth Circuit stated that:

'Market share' is neither tangible or intangible property; its loss is far too amorphous a blow to support a claim of mail fraud under the reasoning of McNally, 483 U.S. at 356-60, 107 S. Ct. at 2779-82, and Carpenter, 484 U.S. at 26, 108 S. Ct. at 321 (newsmatter a commodity traded like any other). Put differently, it might be said that defendants hoped to 'steal' Lancaster's customers. But it cannot be said that these customers were Lancaster's property.

The 'fraud' Lancaster alleges is in reality nothing more or less than unalloyed anticompetitive conduct. This conduct [**19] may be unacceptable, but it is not 'fraud.'

Id. at 406. On the surface, this language would seem to control. Plaintiffs allege that they were deprived of potential customers, i.e. market share, because Defendants engaged in a nationwide scheme to defraud. However, two factors prevent the Court from blindly following Lancaster.

First, it is unclear whether the language above comprised the holding of the case or was just dicta. Arguably, before exploring the confines of the mail fraud statute, the Ninth Circuit already disposed of the mail fraud claim on the grounds that the Plaintiff had failed to establish a second [**20] mailing required to plead a "pattern" of racketeering activity. Id. at 405.

Second, the Ninth Circuit in Lancaster relied on a case, McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350, 97 L. Ed. 2d 292, 107 S. Ct. 2875 (1987), which had been superseded; and a statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, which had been amended. Id. at fn. 15. Specifically, on November 18, 1988, Congress enacted 18 U.S.C. § 1346 which included a "scheme or artifice to deprive another of the intangible right of honest services" within the purview of the mail fraud statute. In light of this amendment, therefore, Lancaster may not be the strongest precedent for the acts which occurred after November 18, 1988. However, Plaintiffs' complaint seems to include dates as early as February 1986. For these dates (February, 1986 to November, 1988), the Court finds that the reasoning in Lancaster, albeit dicta, applies. See U.S. v. Olano, 62 F.3d 1180, 1198 (9th Cir. 1995) (holding that section 1346 lacks retroactive force). Accordingly, the Court dismisses Plaintiffs' mail and wire fraud claims that precede November, 1988 finding that the Defendants' actions did not come within the mail and wire fraud statutes. [**21] <sup>13</sup>

The question remains, however, whether § 1346's amendment of the mail fraud statute altered the reasoning of Lancaster by including "market share" within the purview of the statute. The Court does not think so. Section 1346, absent the pleas, the Court still has to accept as true Plaintiffs' allegations concerning a national scheme to defraud. But see Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); footnote 17, infra.

---

<sup>12</sup> The Court reads "market share" and the "right to a level playing field" to only have semantic differences. After all, in Lancaster, the behavior Plaintiffs accused Defendant of -- engaging in kickbacks to gain customers -- certainly deprived the Plaintiff of the "right to a level playing field," but the Ninth Circuit instead addressed it as "market share." 940 F.2d at 405.

<sup>13</sup> The Court is also unpersuaded by the fact that the acts alleged constituted a pattern because whether they were a pattern or not, Congress "cannot criminalize conduct that has already occurred, U.S. Const., Art. I § 9 cl. 3, and mail [and wire] fraud is a criminal offense." Lancaster, 940 F.2d at 405; but see United States v. Paradies, 98 F.3d 1266, 1284 (11th Cir. 1996) (upholding conviction under § 1346 when scheme spanned from 1985 to 1990); United States v. Garfinkel, 29 F.3d 1253, 1259-60 (8th Cir. 1994); United States v. Hammen, 977 F.2d 379, 385 (7th Cir. 1992).

965 F. Supp. 1411, *1418 (1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20504, **21

as interpreted by the Ninth Circuit, simply nullified the McNally decision and reinstated the pre-McNally jurisprudence. See United States v. Dischner, 960 F.2d 870, 886 n. 16 (1992); [**22] United States v. Thomas, 32 F.3d 418, 419 (9th Cir. 1994); United States v. DeFries, 310 U.S. App. D.C. 56, 43 F.3d 707 (D.C. Cir. 1995); but see United States v. Brumley, 79 F.3d 1430 (5th Cir. 1996) (holding that § 1346 did not reinstate pre-McNally jurisprudence with regard to state actors.)

A review of the pre-McNally jurisprudence, moreover, leads to the conclusion that the property rights asserted by the Plaintiff are not covered by the statute. Before McNally, "intangible property rights" <sup>14</sup> only encompassed four distinct areas. See McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350, 107 S. Ct. 2875, 2883-84, 97 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1987) (Stevens, J. dissenting); United States v. Brumley, 79 F.3d 1430, 1433-34 (5th Cir. 1996). These areas included: (1) the "right [*1419] to honest services of their governmental officials;" (2) the "right to an honest election;" (3) the right of employers or unions to have "purchasing agents, brokers, union leaders, and other with clear fiduciary duties . . . [not] accept[] kickbacks or sell[] confidential information;" and (4) an individuals "right to privacy and other nonmonetary rights." Of these four, only the latter two could [**23] conceivably apply to this case.

None of these areas, however, go so far as to create a property right in market share. In fact, no case creating such a right has been put forward by the Plaintiffs <sup>15</sup>, or been found by the Court, except for one district court case which held that the mail fraud statute protects the intangible right to a level playing field. Pearlstine Distributors v. Freixenet, 678 F. Supp. 133, 136 (D.S.C. 1988). Plaintiffs' reliance on Pearlstine, however, does not change the Court's result. The Pearlstine case was decided before the enactment of § 1346. Consequently, the Court there was analyzing the same law that the Ninth Circuit analyzed in Lancaster. The Ninth Circuit, however, found that the pre - § 1346 mail fraud statute did not protect [**24] market share. Given a choice between following the Ninth Circuit or the district court of South Carolina, the Court obviously follows the Ninth Circuit.

Plaintiffs also assert a property interest in the physicians' patients right to honest services. For this assertion, Plaintiffs rely upon United States v. Neufeld, 908 F. Supp. 491 (S.D. Ohio 1995), a case concerning one of the doctors involved in Defendants' scheme. Neufeld, however, undermines Plaintiffs' argument. In Neufeld, the Defendant moved to dismiss the indictment which included three mail fraud counts based on the intangible rights theory. After noting the machination [**25] of the statute under McNally and 18 U.S.C. § 1346, the court dismissed the counts as they pertained to federal and state agencies. Id. at 499-500. It did so because "the intangible rights theory of mail and wire fraud is only cognizable, however, when there exists a fiduciary relationship between the victim and the accused," and Dr. Neufeld did not owe any duty to the agencies. Id. at 499.

That same reasoning applies here. The doctors alleged to have participated in Defendants' scheme owed a fiduciary duty to the patients but not to the Plaintiffs. Therefore, under the statute, the Plaintiffs did not have an "intangible property" interest in the doctors' actions. Accordingly, even if Defendants' scheme deprived the patients of their doctors' fiduciary duty, the Plaintiffs have not set forth a claim for mail fraud because they hold no property interest in that duty. Accordingly, the Court dismisses Plaintiffs' mail and wire fraud claims <sup>16</sup> [**26] finding that <sup>14</sup> Clearly, neither of the rights asserted -- a level playing field or the doctors' fiduciary duty -- concern tangible property. Accordingly, they will be analyzed under the "intangible property" portion of the mail fraud statute.

<sup>15</sup> Plaintiffs try to portray In re American Honda Motor Co., Inc., 1996 W.L. 534796, as support for a "market share" theory although the Court did not rely on such a theory. Instead, the Court relied on the Plaintiffs' "contractual rights" to cars. Id. at 13-14 fn. 21. Here, however, Plaintiffs try to assert a property right over the patients absent any contract.

<sup>16</sup> The Court recognizes the irony in holding that a nationwide class of Plaintiffs have failed to establish their mail fraud claims when the Defendants have pled guilty to two counts of mail fraud. The pleas however concern the taking of tangible property, i.e. money, from the government. See e.g. Plaintiffs Complaint, Minnesota Plea Agreement Joint Stipulation of Facts ("Defendant did knowingly devise and intend to devise a scheme and artifice to defraud the FEHBP and CHAMPUS programs and to obtain money and property by false and fraudulent premises . . .")

Defendants purported scheme or artifice did not deprive Plaintiffs of any property protected by the mail or wire fraud statutes.<sup>17</sup>

[**27] [*1420] 2. Plaintiffs have met the "pattern" requirement with regard to the predicate acts

According to Northwestern Bell, HN7 to establish a RICO pattern it must . . . be shown that the predicates themselves amount to, or that they otherwise constitute a threat of, continuing racketeering activity." 492 U.S. at 240. The Northwestern Bell Court also explained that there are two alternative ways to satisfy the continuity prong: "Continuity' is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition." Id. at 241.

a. Closed-ended continuity

"A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time." Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. at 241. This formulation raises the question of how long a substantial period of time is. The Supreme Court has declined to draw a bright line of "substantiality." Id. at 243. The Supreme Court did state however that "a few weeks or months" is not enough. Id. at 242.

Here, the alleged predicates [\[\*\*28\]](#) occurred over nine years. See Plaintiff's complaint at P 16. Such a period of time clearly qualifies as a "substantial period of time." See e.g. United States v. Dischner, 974 F.2d 1502, 1510-11 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (finding three years to be a "substantial period of time" for a bribery scheme). In addition, the predicates that the Plaintiffs have alleged -- the violation of the bribery and Travel Act statutes -- are all related to the scheme Plaintiffs allege: the bribing of doctors in exchange for referrals.<sup>18</sup>

II. Plaintiffs have standing to pursue their RICO claims

HN8 To have standing to assert its RICO claim, Plaintiffs must establish that Defendants' predicate acts actually and proximately caused Plaintiffs' financial loss. See [Holmes v. Securities \[\*29\] Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268-270, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 \(1992\)](#).

Defendants rely on two Ninth Circuit decisions in arguing that the Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert their RICO claims. See Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro v. Lerner, 31 F.3d 924, 928 \(9th Cir. 1994\); Imagineering, Inc. v. Kiewit Pacific Co., 976 F.2d 1303, 1311 \(9th Cir. 1992\). In their reply, Defendants even go so far to say that "Imagineering is directly on point." See Defendants' Reply at pg. 25. The Court disagrees.

In Imagineering, a class of minority and women owned businesses ("MWBEs") brought a RICO action against various prime contractors alleging that the prime contractors engaged in a scheme to avoid federal set aside

<sup>17</sup> Any effort by Plaintiffs to amend their complaint should bear in mind that Fed. R. Civ. P. § 9\(b\) requires that mail and wire fraud RICO claims be pleaded "with particularity [as to] the time, place and manner of each act of fraud, plus the role of each defendant in each scheme." Lancaster Community Hospital v. Antelope Valley Hosp. D., 940 F.2d 397, 405 \(9th Cir. 1991\). Only two mailings, however, need be established with particularity. Id.

The present Complaint has clearly established the two mailings with regard to the mail fraud action. In the Ohio and Minnesota Pleas, Caremark admits to using the mails twice at a certain time, place and manner in violation of the mail fraud statute. See Plaintiff's Complaint, Exhibits B and D. The agreements, however, do not refer to Caremark's commission of wire fraud. Consequently, the Complaint does not plead the wire fraud claim with the requisite particularity. Perhaps, this case could justify a relaxation of the standard but at this time such a determination would be premature. Wool v. Tandem Computers, Inc., 818 F.2d 1433, 1439 \(9th Cir. 1987\) (relaxing the 9(b) particularity requirement concerning "matters peculiarly within the opposing party's knowledge . . . [because] in cases of corporate fraud, the plaintiffs cannot be expected to have personal knowledge of the facts constituting the wrongdoing.") Id.

<sup>18</sup> Finally, in their 120 pages of papers filed in support of this motion, the Defendants do not contest the fact that if the Plaintiffs established the existence of predicate acts, the requirement for a pattern would not also be fulfilled.

regulations. Imagineering Inc., 976 F.2d at 1307. The district court dismissed their claims for lack of standing and the Ninth Circuit affirmed. According to the Defendants, this result should decide this case. What Defendants overlook is that the class in Imagineering were not competitors of the Defendants. Rather, the class consisted of subcontractors who still needed to be chosen by a prime contractor before receiving [**30] a contract. Id. 1310-1311. Thus, the Plaintiffs in Imagineering were asserting a two-tier injury, i.e. if Defendant did not act improperly, Firm A would have been picked and in turn Firm A would have picked us. In this case, however, the class consists of direct competitors of the Defendants. Thus, [*1421] there is only a one-tier injury, i.e. if Defendants did not act improperly, Plaintiff may have received the alternative site infusion therapy business. For Imagineering to apply, a beneficiary of the Plaintiffs -- like a pharmaceutical supplier -- asserting the loss of greater sales would have to be bringing the suit. That is not the case here<sup>19</sup>

[**31] Nevertheless, the Plaintiffs' causation requirement is a bit attenuated. Actual causation is not so difficult to find; "but for" the Defendants paying doctors for their referrals, some of the Plaintiffs would have received alternative infusion site therapy contracts.

The "proximate causation" component, however, is somewhat more difficult. The Supreme Court has held that common law notions of proximate cause apply in civil RICO claims. Holmes, 503 U.S. 258, 268-69, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1992). Applying common law principles, it can be argued that the laws Defendants allegedly violated were enacted to protect the patients, not its competitors. See Israel Travel Advisory v. Israel Iden. Tours, 61 F.3d 1250, 1257 (7th Cir. 1995); Lancaster, 940 F.2d at 405 (9th Cir. 1991).

The Court, however, finds this view myopic. Instead the Court believes that the common law notion of foreseeability should control. See Mid A. Telecom v. Long Distance Services, 18 F.3d 260, 263 ("in conducting the traditional common law proximate cause analysis, therefore, the courts should focus on the temporal and circumstantial relationship between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered by the plaintiff, [**32] and the foreseeability that intervening events would cause injury.") Applying foreseeability principles, Defendants' alleged perpetration of fraud on its patients could foreseeably affect the Plaintiffs who are also trying to entice those same customers.

In addition, Plaintiffs have pled that they were the targets of the fraud. With regard to this argument, the Court notes that "given the opportunity to engage in discovery, . . . [Plaintiffs] may be able to show that while the scheme was initially aimed only at defrauding [Defendants'] customers, [Defendants] broadened the sweep of intrigue to include [Plaintiffs] as a direct target (i.e., to obtain an unfair competitive advantage in recruiting [Plaintiffs'] customers.)" Id.

Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have established the causation/standing requirement set out by Holmes.
20

[**33] III. Plaintiffs have fulfilled the requirements for pleading an "enterprise"

HNG RICO defines an "enterprise" as either (1) "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity" or (2) "any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity ("associated-in-fact enterprise")." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4); see also United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 581-582, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, <sup>19</sup> Defendants' other case, Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro v. Lerner, 31 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 1994), also involved a two-tiered or "pass on" scenario. In Pillsbury, the plaintiffs, a law firm, sued various entities over a raise in their rent which they alleged was due to a money laundering and mail fraud scheme involving the likes of Michael Milken. Id. The Court found that the law firm lacked standing because it was a subtenant of the building. Id. Its rent increase, therefore, depended on the tenant "passing on" its rent increase to the plaintiffs. Id. at 928-9. Thus, Pillsbury is not applicable to this case, which only involves a one-tiered injury.

<sup>20</sup> Moreover, in discussing the need for establishing proximate cause in a Civil RICO action, the Supreme Court relied on causation principles enunciated in antitrust cases. Holmes, 503 U.S. 258, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311; see also Mid A. Telecom v. Long Distance Services, 18 F.3d at 263; but see Israel Travel Advisory Service v. Israel Iden. Tours, 61 F.3d 1250, 1257.

101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981). In their complaint, Plaintiffs invoke the latter theory by pleading that: (1) Caremark, Baxter Healthcare, Baxter and the doctors who received bribes constitute an "associated-in-fact enterprise;" or (2) Caremark, Baxter Healthcare, and Baxter constitute an "associated-in-fact enterprise."

To adequately plead the "associated-in-fact enterprise", the Plaintiffs must prove: (1) that the enterprise has "an existence beyond [*1422] that which is merely necessary to commit the predicate acts of racketeering;" and (2) the enterprise must have "some sort of structure for the making of the decisions, whether it be hierarchical or consensual." Chang v. Chen, 80 F.3d 1293, 1299 (9th Cir. 1996).

1. Under Ninth Circuit case law, the association-in-fact [**34] consisting of the Defendants and the doctors fulfills the requirement that the entity have a separate existence

Defendants argue that the "associated-in-fact enterprise" consisting of Caremark, Baxter Healthcare, Baxter and the doctors fails because it does not distinguish between the enterprise and the pattern of racketeering. This argument has merit.

In rebuttal, Plaintiffs argue that the "daily activities of the enterprise include the physicians' referral of patients to providers of alternate site infusion therapy." See RICO case statement P 8. Yet, the only physicians in the enterprise are the "doctors to whom Baxter and/or Caremark paid bribes or kickbacks." See Plaintiffs' Complaint at P 53. Thus, the physicians' referrals comprise the very act that Plaintiffs allege constitutes the racketeering activity, i.e. the doctors' referral of patients in exchange for bribes.

In their opposition, Plaintiffs put forward a second distinction why their enterprise has a separate existence other than the racketeering activity, namely, that Caremark is a corporation. Plaintiffs' Opposition at pg. 24. As Defendants point out, however, to accept this argument is to accept a per [**35] rule that any enterprise that contains a corporation fulfills the distinction requirement. Such a rule would seem to fly in the face of Chang, other Circuits' application of rule that Chang adopts, and the reasons for the "distinction" rule.

In Chang, the Ninth Circuit addressed HN10↑ the "minimum requirement for an associated in fact enterprise." 80 F.3d at 1297. After surveying other Circuits' approach, the Court adopted a rule that "requires a RICO enterprise to have an ascertainable structure separate and apart from the racketeering activity." Id. (emphasis added). This Court interprets that holding to require the "associated-in-fact" enterprise as a whole to have a separate existence, not merely one player in the enterprise to have a separate existence.

The cases followed by the Ninth Circuit in Chang support this interpretation. Id. at 1297-1298. For instance in Atkinson v. Anadarko Bank and Trust Co., 808 F.2d 438, 441 (5th Cir. 1987), a cattle business (and customer of the bank) sued the bank, its holding company and three bank employees in a civil RICO action for mail fraud committed when they overcharged interest on certain loans. Id. I**361 at 439. The jury awarded the customer $ 2,899,796.63 which the district court set aside on a j.n.o.v. motion. Id. at 440-41. The Fifth Circuit affirmed. It found that Plaintiffs wholly failed to establish the existence of any entity separate and apart from the bank. In this case, the alleged racketeering activity forming the predicate of the RICO charge was mail fraud -- the mailing of false statements requesting payment of interest in excess of the agreed amount. The mailing of loan statements was an activity of the bank. There is no evidence of any other activity on behalf of the enterprise.

In addition, there was no evidence presented that the five associates functioned as a continuing unit or formed an ongoing association. No connection was shown between the three individuals and the holding company.

This analysis squarely applies to this case. Here was a bank which undoubtedly had other customers -- or a separate existence other than the racketeering -- but the Fifth Circuit disregarded that and looked solely to whether the enterprise, as a whole, had a separate existence. Finding that it did not, the Fifth Circuit found the "enterprise" element [**37] unproved and affirmed dismissal of the Civil Rico claim.

Finally, the reasons behind Chang also cut against the Plaintiffs' argument. The Chang court did not want to "render the enterprise element superfluous." 80 F.3d at 1298. Instead, it wanted to respect the "centrality of the enterprise element in the statutory [RICO] scheme." Id. To find the enterprise [*1423] element fulfilled simply by including a corporation, however, would lead to the very results the Ninth Circuit hoped to avoid. No matter how decentralized or brief the actors involvement may have been, they could become an enterprise under RICO if one of the actors is a corporation.

Nevertheless, in another decision, the Ninth Circuit seems to clearly state that "the participation of a corporation in a racketeering scheme is sufficient, of itself, to give the enterprise a structure separate from the racketeering activity: "corporate entities have a legal existence separate from their participation in the racketeering, and the very existence of a corporation meets the requirement for a separate structure." Webster v. Omnitrition Intern. Inc., 79 F.3d 776, 786 (9th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 136 L. Ed. 2d 115, [**38] 117 S. Ct. 174. Although this case seems to contradict principles underlying Chang, the cases can be harmonized. Read together, Webster and Chang set forth the following rule: HN11 [↑] an enterprise must have "an existence beyond that which is merely necessary to commit the predicate acts of racketeering" and "some sort of structure for the making of the decisions," but this requirement may be fulfilled by the simple inclusion of a corporation as a participant in the enterprise. According to this conflicted rule, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs have established the enterprise element.<sup>21</sup>

[**39] IV. Plaintiffs' 1962(a) is dismissed without prejudice because Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts that show they have been injured by the investment of racketeering income

Section 1962\(a\) addresses entirely different behavior than § 1962\(c\). The latter provision merely prohibits racketeering conduct through an enterprise whereas § 1962\(a\) prohibits the income derived from such activity to be invested in the operation of any entity. See 18 U.S.C. § 1962.

Acknowledging the distinction between the two provisions, the Ninth Circuit has created two different standards. HN12 [↑] "[A] plaintiff seeking civil damages for a violation of section 1962\(a\) must allege facts tending to show that he or she was injured by the use or investment of racketeering income." Nugget Hydroelectric v. Pacific Gas and Electric, 981 F.2d 429, 437 (9th Cir. 1992). In an effort to abide by this standard, the Plaintiff in Nugget "alleged that PG&E received racketeering income and used it in a way that injured Nugget." Id. The Ninth Circuit rejected these allegations finding them "general, conclusory, and vague." Id.

Plaintiffs' allegations do not fare much better. In [\[\*\*40\]](#) their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "derived substantial income through the pattern of racketeering activity detailed herein . . . and used or invested such income, or the proceeds of such income, in the establishment of and operation of the above-referenced enterprises." Plaintiffs' Complaint at P 48. It is hard to imagine a claim less devoid of facts. Accordingly, under Nugget, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under § 1962\(a\) but grants the Plaintiffs leave to amend so they can meet the Ninth Circuit's specificity requirements.

V. Robinson-Patnam Act

Defendants do not deny that HN13 [↑] § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patnam Act applies to cases of "commercial bribery tending to undermine the fiduciary relationship between a buyer and its agent . . . involving the sale or purchase of goods." Rangen, Inc. v. Sterling Nelson & Sons, Inc., 351 F.2d 851, 858 (9th Cir. 1965). Instead, the Defendants seek dismissal because: (1) the Plaintiffs lack standing; (2) the physicians do not owe the type of duty required for a claim under 2(c); and (3) Plaintiffs fail to plead that doctors provided no services in return for the payments.

[*1424] 1. [**41] At the pleading stage, Plaintiffs' allegations of economic injury confer standing because Plaintiffs have no way of knowing the scope of Defendants' scheme

<sup>21</sup> This enterprise fulfills another requirement that the defendant must be different than the enterprise. The Ninth Circuit clearly allows some defendants to also be members of the alleged association-in-fact enterprise. River City Markets v. Fleming Foods West, 960 F.2d 1458, 1461 (9th Cir. 1992) ("in multiple-defendant RICO cases, some of the individual defendants may also be identified as members of the alleged association-in-fact enterprise).

Competitors of a seller involved in commercial bribery have standing under 2(c) if they suffer economic injury. See Rangen, Inc. v. Sterling Nelson & Sons, Inc., 351 F.2d 851, 858 \(9th Cir. 1965\); Larry R. George Sales Co. v. Cool Attic Corporation, 587 F.2d 266, 272 \(5th Cir. 1979\) (holding that only competitors of the firm which bribed a buyer's agent would have standing); Bunker Ramo Corporation v. Cywan, 511 F. Supp. 531 \(N.D. Ill. 1981\) (holding that only competitors of the company paying bribes had standing); Municipality of Anchorage v. Hitachi Cable, 547 F. Supp. 633 \(D. Alaska 1982\) (expanding on Larry R.'s standing discussion to include that company can sue when company's agents are bribed); NL Industries, Inc. v. Gulf & Western Industries, Inc., 650 F. Supp. 1115, 1123 (holding that competitor who suffered commercial disadvantage because of bribes made to buyer had standing). To fulfill the economic injury tenet, the competitor must establish a "physical and economic nexus" between the alleged \*\*42 violation and the harm to the plaintiff." NL Industries, 650 F. Supp. 1115, 1123 (quoting Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 478, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 \(1982\)).

The Plaintiffs have alleged that Defendants' behavior has caused them "lost sales which they otherwise would have made and, as a result, have been injured in their business or property and have suffered multi-million dollar damages." Plaintiffs' Complaint at P 37. Although Plaintiffs' allegations of injury will never be accused of being overly specific, the Court notes the Supreme Court's credo that "in antitrust cases, where the 'proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' [citations omitted], dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 \(1976\). This credo has particular application to this case. Without knowing how many physicians Defendants bribed, the Plaintiffs cannot know which sales they lost to natural competition and which they lost to the corrupting influence of bribery. Accordingly, at this juncture, the Court finds Plaintiffs' \*\*43 allegations of economic injury confer standing to pursue their 2(c) claim.

2. The physicians owe a fiduciary duty that 2(c) was intended to address

As noted above, the Ninth Circuit expanded 2(c) to encompass only claims where bribery corrupts the fiduciary relationship between a buyer and its agent involving the sale or purchase of goods. Rangen, Inc. v. Sterling Nelson & Sons, Inc., 351 F.2d 851, 858 \(9th Cir. 1965\). In their motion to dismiss, Defendants construe Rangen to apply only to a fiduciary duty in a commercial sense, not a medical one. The Defendants further argue that a physician only owes the latter, thus 2(c) does not apply to this case.

The Defendants read Rangen too narrowly. In Rangen, the bribed official -- Grimes -- was "the superintendent of the state's fish hatchery at hagerman, [sic] Idaho . . . [with] the authority in the Department with respect to the safe utilization and nutritional value of fish foods and with respect to fish food formulae." Id. at 854. Grimes did not have the responsibility for purchasing the goods. Instead, the court found "that Grimes did influence the responsible officials of the state to purchase \*\*44 substantially all of its fresh food requirements from the [bribing entity]." Id.

In short, Grimes was not a purchasing agent, but a scientist. A scientist whose responsibilities included ensuring that the state's fish hatcheries received fish food with adequate nutrition. In fact, Grimes' defense to the bribery charge consisted of the scientific explanation that he was merely conducting scientific experiments in exchange for the monies paid. Id. at 855. Yet, the Ninth Circuit still held that Grimes owed a fiduciary duty whose violation rose to 2(c) liability.

The Court finds that this analysis applies to the doctors who accepted bribes. Like Grimes, the doctors were not purchasing \*\*1425 agents per se for the patients who utilized the Defendants. Yet, like Grimes, they were professional experts whose advice would exert great influence on the "buyers'" decision. Moreover, unlike Grimes, buyers in this case -- the patients -- probably had no knowledge of other sellers whereas the purchasing agents for Idaho's Department of Fish and Game most certainly knew of other fish food sellers. Considering the patients lack of information, therefore, the physicians' advice certainly exerted \*\*45 more influence than that exerted by Grimes. Accordingly, following Rangen, the Court finds that the physicians owe a fiduciary duty that 2(c) was intended to address.<sup>22</sup>

[**46] 3. The "services provided" exception does not apply when the Plaintiffs plead that no services were furnished

Defendants' final attempt to dismiss Plaintiffs' 2(c) claim hinges on the "services rendered" exception in the provision.<sup>23</sup> [**47] In pleading their 2(c) claim, however, Plaintiffs clearly state that: "such commissions or other compensation were not paid for services rendered by doctors to their patients in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise. See Plaintiffs' Complaint at P 40. Accepting this fact as true, the "services rendered exception" does not apply.<sup>24</sup>

VI. Defendants' arguments concerning the Plaintiffs' pendent claim lack merit

Plaintiffs' fourth claim asserts that Defendants' business practices violated the California Business and Professions Code § 17200 et. seq.. The statute concerns the prevention of unfair business practices. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. § 17203. In the motion to dismiss, Defendants proffer three arguments why this claim should be dismissed: (1) any injunction Plaintiffs [**48] seek is unnecessary under California law; (2) Plaintiffs lack the standing necessary to assert a claim in federal court; and (3) the relief sought in this claim violated the Commerce Clause of the United States.<sup>25</sup>

[*1426] 1. Injunction Unnecessary

---

<sup>22</sup> Defendants reliance on Harris v. Duty Free Shoppers Limited Partnership, 940 F.2d 1272 (1991) to establish the contrary is misplaced. In Harris, the "intermediary" between the buyer and the seller -- the tour bus -- did not have any particular expertise that would convince the tourists that they should buy from the Defendant. Id. at 1275 (relying on the fact that "the tour guides were not shopping 'experts'"). Here, however, the doctors are clearly experts of the goods they sold.

Moreover, the Harris court also relied on the fact that "the tourists are free to purchase their souvenirs and gift items anywhere; in fact, they are free not to purchase at all." Id. That is not the case here. Patients with such diseases as AIDS and cancer that require alternate site infusion therapies are not "free not to purchase," nor can they purchase anywhere if they are not informed of other providers. Unlike a duty-free store, one does not just come across an alternative site infusion therapy store. For these reasons, the Court finds Harris inapposite.

<sup>23</sup> HN14 [↑] 2(c) in its entirety states:

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

15 U.S.C. § 13\(c\) (emphasis added).

<sup>24</sup> At the hearing for this motion, Plaintiffs seemed to concede that the doctors performed some services in exchange for Defendants' payments. Nevertheless, Plaintiffs allege that the payments were far above fair market value for the services performed. The latter allegation alone would seem to make the "services rendered" exception as defined by the Ninth Circuit inapplicable: "a price allowance or discount to compensate for the reasonable value of such services would come within the exception of section 2(c) and would not be unlawful." Federal Trade Commission v. Washington Fish & Oyster Co., 282 F.2d 595, 599 (9th Cir. 1960).

<sup>25</sup> The Court notes that Defendants do not claim that Plaintiffs have not stated a substantive claim under the statute. Instead, they argue standing, lack of necessity, and constitutional infirmities. The Court concurs in Defendants' decision finding that bribery, mail fraud and antitrust violations, if true, would constitute an unfair business practice. See People v. McKale, 25 Cal. 3d 626, 602 P.2d 731 (1979) (holding that statute applies to wrongful business conduct in whatever context.)

The only relevant statute to this action is HN15 [↑] Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203.<sup>26</sup> Its "remedies are strictly limited to injunctive relief and restitution, which may include disgorgement of illicit profits to injured parties." Mai Systems Corp. v. UIPS, 856 F. Supp. 538 \(ND. Cal. 1994\); [\[\*\*49\]](#) see also People v. Thomas Shelton Powers, M.D., Inc., 2 Cal. App. 4th 330, 340 \(1992\). In its opposition, Plaintiffs do not argue that they are entitled to injunctive relief,<sup>27</sup> instead they argue that they are entitled to restitution.

[\[\*\*50\]](#) In their reply, Defendants argue that restitution should not be granted because it was not pled in the complaint. This argument is erroneous: "plaintiffs pray for judgment as follows: . . . (5) . . . restitution of defendants' ill-gotten gains from the acts complained herein." See Plaintiffs' Complaint at pg. 22. Accordingly, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs have pled a cause of action for restitution under California Business and Professions Code.<sup>28</sup>

2. Defendants' constitutional challenges to the pendent claim lack merit

The Defendants put forward two constitutional [\[\*\*51\]](#) arguments that supposedly merit dismissing the California claim: (1) Plaintiffs lack Article III standing; (2) a nationwide injunction would violate the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution.

With regard to the latter argument, the Plaintiffs' failure to state a claim for injunctive relief necessarily moots the constitutionality of a nationwide injunction based on state law.

Plaintiffs also clearly have standing. HN17 [↑] To have standing, Plaintiffs must prove: (1) "injury in fact;" (2) "a causal relationship between the injury and the challenged conduct;" and (3) "a likelihood that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Northeastern Florida Contractors v. Jacksonville, 508 U.S. 656, 113 S. Ct. 2297, 2302, 124 L. Ed. 2d 586 \(1993\). As stated, Plaintiffs have adequately pled that Defendants' behavior inflicted economic harm on the Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs also fulfill the causal requirement because if Defendants did not bribe physicians, its competitors would have obtained more clients. Finally, if Plaintiffs obtain restitution under the statute, their economic injury will be redressed. Accordingly, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs have standing.

CONCLUSION

[\[\*\*52\]](#) For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss concerning Plaintiffs' § 1962\(a\) claim and Plaintiffs' mail and wire fraud claims but gives Plaintiffs 30 days leave to amend their complaint. The Court DENIES the remainder of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. IT IS SO ORDERED

DATED at Honolulu, Hawaii Dec 12 1996

Alan C. Kay

<sup>26</sup> HN16 [↑] Cal Bus & Prof Code § 17203 states as follows

Any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction. The court may make such orders or judgments, including the appointment of a receiver, as may be necessary to prevent the use or employment by any person of any practice which constitutes unfair competition, as defined in this chapter, or as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition.

<sup>27</sup> Even if Plaintiff did pursue the argument, clearly the Defendants withdrawal from the business obviates the need for an injunction. See Donald v. Cafe Royale, Inc., 218 Cal. App. 3d 168, 184, 266 Cal. Rptr. 804 (finding that injunction unnecessary when Defendants no longer in business).

<sup>28</sup> The Court does not interpret Plaintiffs' claim under this provision as one for damages, but rather for disgorgement of Defendants' profits. See People v. Powers, 2 Cal. App. 4th 330, 340 \(1992\) ("although there are few cases which have examined the remedies sanctioned by section 17203, there is little question but that the broad range of remedies provided for therein includes restitution and/or disgorgement of profits.")

965 F. Supp. 1411, *1426L 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20504, **52

Chief United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Westport News v. Minuteman Press

Superior Court of Connecticut, Judicial District of Fairfield, At Bridgeport

December 13, 1996, Decided ; December 16, 1996, Filed

CV 95-0319189S

Reporter

1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 3295 *; 1996 WL 737526

Westport News, Inc. v. Minuteman Press, Inc.

Notice: [*1] THIS DECISION IS UNREPORTED AND MAY BE SUBJECT TO FURTHER APPELLATE REVIEW. COUNSEL IS CAUTIONED TO MAKE AN INDEPENDENT DETERMINATION OF THE STATUS OF THIS CASE.

Disposition: Plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's counterclaim and prayer for relief related thereto GRANTED.

Core Terms

---

counterclaim, advertising, allegations, special defense, summary judgment, circulation, pricing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Defenses > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A defendant may move for summary judgment on the merits of a special defense where success on the defense will lead to a judgment against a plaintiff on the claim to which the special defense applies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA) prohibits unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110b\(a\). The legislature did not codify a comprehensive list of "unfair or deceptive acts or practices," but rather, articulated its intent that in construing the scope of the statutory prohibition, the courts shall be merely guided by the interpretations given by the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts to the Federal Trade Act. The federal courts have determined that an act or practice is deceptive if three requirements are met. First, there must be a representation, omission, or other practice likely to mislead consumers; second, the consumer must interpret the message reasonably under the circumstance; and third, the misleading representation, omission, or practice must be material, i.e., likely to affect consumer decisions or conduct. Although the theory of "predatory pricing" may be well defined under federal law, a complaint under CUTPA is not limited to federally defined causes of action in bringing an action under state law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Pleadings, Crossclaims

Conn. Super. Ct. R. 116 permits a party to assert a counterclaim to a plaintiff's claim provided that counterclaim arose out of the transaction, or one of them, which is the subject of the plaintiff's complaint. To arise out of the same transaction, the allegations of the counterclaim must be so corrected with the matter in controversy that its consideration is necessary for a full determination of the rights of the parties relative to the matter in controversy under the complaint. Where the facts of the counterclaim arise subsequent to the institution of the action, the counterclaim ordinarily cannot arise out of that transaction that preceded it.

Judges: Melville, J

Opinion by: Melville

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

This matter concerns the defendant's motion for summary judgment and plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's counterclaim. On January 10, 1996, the plaintiff, Westport News, Inc., (Westport) filed an amended and revised multi-count complaint against the defendant, Minuteman Press, Inc. (Minuteman), alleging, inter alia, violations of CUTPA and interference with business and contractual relations. The pertinent allegations assert that Westport and Minuteman are newspapers competing for circulation and advertising revenue; that Minuteman distributed a chart comparing the circulation and advertising rates of the two newspapers which intentionally misrepresented Westport's total circulation as being lower than it actually was in order to induce businesses to advertise with Minuteman rather than Westport.

On August 23, 1996, Minuteman filed an answer [*2] (# 126) that included five special defenses and a three-count counterclaim. On September 6, 1996, Minuteman followed with a motion for summary judgment (# 128) on its second special defense. Thereafter, on September 11, 1996, Westport filed a motion to strike Minuteman's counterclaim (# 130). Both these motions are now before the court. Minuteman is thus seeking, in effect, to preclude Westport from proceeding on the 1st and 2nd counts of its complaint while Westport is seeking to preclude Minuteman from proceeding on its entire counterclaim.

Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment on 2nd count of Special Defense

It is well settled that HN1 a defendant may move for summary judgment on the merits of a special defense where success on the defense will lead to a judgment against the plaintiff on the claim to which the special defense applies. See, e.g., Burns v. Hartford Hospital, 192 Conn. 451, 455, 472 A.2d 1257 \(1984\); Boucher Agency, Inc., v. Zimmer, 160 Conn. 404, 409, 279 A.2d 540 \(1979\); Ney v. Brandi, Superior Court, Judicial Dist of New Haven, 1995 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2742, Docket No. 368932 (Sept. 27, 1995) (Hodgson, J.)

Minuteman's second special defense [*3] alleges that the plaintiff's allegations under paragraphs 8 in the first and second counts of its complaint allege that Minuteman sold advertising at a random and arbitrary rates below its published rate card rates, without a criteria or categorical rate structure and it priced its advertising below its cost to eliminate competitors and reduce competition fails to state a claim under CUTPA because these allegations still lack the necessary elements to establish a cause of action for "predatory pricing." Westport counters that it is not necessary to allege a specific theory of recovery such as "predatory pricing" in order to state a cause of action under CUTPA. This court agrees.

HN2 CUTPA prohibits unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce. Sec. 42-110b\(a\) CGS. The legislature did not codify a comprehensive list of "unfair or deceptive acts or practices," but rather, articulated its intent that in construing the scope of the statutory prohibition, the courts shall be merely guided by the interpretations given by the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts to the Federal Trade Act. [Caldor, Inc., v. \[\*4\] Heslin, 215 Conn. 590, 598, 577 A.2d 1009](#), cert. den., 498 U.S. 1088, 111 S. Ct. 966, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1053 (1990). This relaxation from strict adherence to guidance was presumably intended by the legislature to permit practices which had not yet been specifically declared unlawful by federal authorities to be nevertheless unlawful under CUTPA. Id. citing Bailey Employment System, Inc. v. Hahn, 545 F. Supp. 62, 71 (D.Conn., 1982). The federal courts have determined that an act or practice is deceptive if three requirements are met. First, there must be a representation, omission, or other practice likely to mislead consumers; second, the consumer must interpret the message reasonably under the circumstance; and third, the misleading representation, omission, or practice must be material, i.e., likely to affect consumer decisions or conduct. Caldor, Inc., v. Heslin, supra, 215 Conn. 590, 597 quoting Figgie International, Inc., 107 FTC 313, 374 \(1986\). Although the theory of "predatory pricing" may be well defined under federal law, as Minuteman argues, a complaint under CUTPA is not limited to federally defined causes of action in bringing an action under state law. [*5] Caldor, Inc., v. Heslin, supra;; Bailey Employment System, Inc. v. Hahn, supra.

Notwithstanding that plaintiff's revised and amended complaint fails to allege the essential elements of a "predatory pricing" cause of action, its allegations do bring it within the parameters of the three requirements set forth above. Plaintiff alleges that Minuteman made a misrepresentation of fact concerning Westport's circulation rates. Giving the allegations an interpretation most favorable to the nonmoving party, it was reasonable for advertisers to interpret this message to mean that placing an advertisement with Minuteman would reach more readers, and therefore, more prospective purchasers of the advertiser's product, than placing the same advertisement with Westport. The plaintiff further alleges that Minuteman's misrepresentation of its circulation rate had the effect of inducing prospective advertisers to change their advertising decisions. Since plaintiff has alleged facts sufficiently to bring it under the CUTPA act, defendant's legal position as stated in its second special defense is clearly undermined. Accordingly motion for summary judgment on that defense must be DENIED.

[*6] Motion to Strike Counterclaim and Prayer for Relief

All three claims in Minuteman's counterclaim allege conduct by Westport which either amounted to a violation of the state's Antitrust law (Chapter 624, CGS) or a violation of CUTPA. All of the conduct complained of in the counterclaim allegedly occurred subsequent to the bringing of the instant action by Westport as well as subsequent to the acts complained of in the complaint. Accordingly, Westport moves to strike this counterclaim as not arising out of the same transaction or occurrence as that alleged in its complaint. The court agrees.

HN3 [↑] Section 116 of our Rules of Practice permit a party to assert a counterclaim to the plaintiff's claim provided that counterclaim arose out of the transaction, or one of them, which is the subject of the plaintiff's complaint. To arise out of the same transaction, the allegations of the counterclaim must be so corrected with the matter in controversy that its consideration is necessary for a full determination of the rights of the parties relative to the matter in controversy under the complaint. *Springfield-DeWitt Gardens v. Wood, 143 Conn. 708, 711-12, 125 A.2d 488 \(1956\)*. Where [*7] the facts of the counterclaim arise subsequent to the institution of the action, the counterclaim ordinarily cannot arise out of that transaction that preceded it. See, *The Fulfillment CTR, Inc v. Steven H. Cote, et al., Superior Court, Hartford/New Britain JD at Hartford, 1990 Conn. Super. LEXIS 618*, Docket No. 35 31 19 (May 15, 1990) (Purtill, J.); *Anthony Giordano, et al v. Cary M. Richitelli, Superior Court, New Haven JD at New Haven, Docket No. 29 68 79 \(Sept. 13, 1990\) \(Downey, J.\) and Daniel Lasprogato v. Brian Liddy, et al., Superior Court, Stamford/Norwalk JD at Stamford, 1991 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1850*, Docket No. CV88 0092642S (Aug 15, 1991) (Ryan, J.).

Although the parties are locked in competition for a relatively small print-advertising market and have been so apparently ever since Minuteman began publishing, the incidents giving rise to the complaint and counterclaim are isolated in time and nature. Consequently, the transactions in question could not logically be a part of an ongoing transaction although they may be part of an ongoing battle. Accordingly, plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's counterclaim and prayer for relief related thereto is GRANTED.

[*8] BY THE COURT

Melville, J

---

End of Document

Paddock Publs. v. Chicago Tribune Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit
November 8, 1996, Argued ; December 16, 1996, Decided
No. 96-2058

Reporter

103 F.3d 42 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 32937 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,647; 25 Media L. Rep. 1187

PADDOCK PUBLICATIONS, INC., doing business as The Daily Herald, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. CHICAGO TRIBUNE COMPANY, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Rehearing Denied January 21, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 994.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 93 C 7493. David H. Coar, Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED

Core Terms

---

features, news service, Advertising, newspaper, motion picture, contracts, papers, supplemental, Syndicate, rivals, subscribes, antitrust, stories, Sherman Act, theaters, district court, firms, tacit, exclusive contract, distributor, collusion, Stations, columns, smaller, notice, rights, terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

The existence of three competing facilities not only means that none is an essential facility but also means that each of the three is entitled to sign an exclusive contract with a favored user.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

**HN2** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Competition-for-the-contract is a form of competition that antitrust laws protect rather than proscribe.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

**HN3** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Collusion, tacit or express, requires some horizontal cooperation, or at least forbearance from vigorous competition among rivals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

**HN4** [] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

The unfair methods of competition which are condemned by the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45§ 5(a), are not confined to those that were illegal at common law or that are condemned by the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN5** [] Public Enforcement, US Federal Trade Commission Actions

A district court lacks the Federal Trade Commission's power to go beyond the limits of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

103 F.3d 42, *42L<sup>A</sup>1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 32937, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Disclosure & Registration > Requirements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN6 Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

An exclusive dealing contract obliges a firm to obtain its inputs from a single source. An exclusive distributorship, by contrast, does not restrict entry at either level.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Even exclusive dealing contracts are lawful if limited to a year's duration.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

A termination clause works just like a stated time limit in facilitating competition for the contract.

Counsel: For PADDOCK PUBLICATIONS, INCORPORATED, dba Daily Herald, Plaintiff - Appellant: James T. Malysiak, Lee A. Freeman, Jr., Albert F. Ettinger, FREEMAN, FREEMAN & SALZMAN, Chicago, IL USA.

For CHICAGO TRIBUNE COMPANY, Defendant - Appellee: Constantine L. Trela, William F. Conlon, Debra J. Stanek, William O. Fifield, Howard J. Trienens, Chicago, IL USA. Joseph P. Thornton, CHICAGO TRIBUNE COMPANY, Chicago, IL USA. For CHICAGO SUN-TIMES, INCORPORATED, Defendant- Appellee: Steven J. Harper, Anne J. McClain, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, Chicago, IL USA. For NEW YORK TIMES SYNDICATION SALES CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellee: Daniel K. Mayers, Alice Mott Stoeppelwerth, WILMER, CUTLER & PICKERING, Washington, DC USA. For CREATORS SYNDICATE, Defendant - Appellee: Albert J. Salvi, ALBERT J. SALVI & ASSOCIATES, Waukegan, IL USA. Daniel J. Sugrue, SALVI & ASSOCIATES, Waukegan, IL USA. For KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee: Gerald A. Connell, Lee H. Simowitz, BAKER & HOSTETLER, Washington, DC USA. John D. Parker, BAKER & HOSTETLER, [**2] Cleveland, OH USA. Eugene E. Gozdecki, Richard A. DelGiudice, Joseph R. Ziccardi, GOZDECKI & DEL GIUDICE, Chicago, IL USA. J. Michael Frascati, THE HEARST CORPORATION, New York, NY USA.

Judges: Before EASTERBROOK, MANION, and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: EASTERBROOK

Opinion

---

[*43] EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judge. Newspapers' content has many sources. To the work of their own staff, papers add dispatches from syndicated news services such as the Associated Press and Reuters that station reporters or stringers across the globe. Leading newspapers such as the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, the Washington Post, the Chicago Tribune, and the Wall Street Journal have set up supplemental news services. The New York Times News Service carries that paper's stories; the Los Angeles Times/Washington Post News Service combines stories from those papers; the Knight-Ridder/Tribune Information Service pools stories from the Tribune and the Knight-Ridder chain's papers. Subscribers can reprint the originating paper's stories (and those of other papers that contribute to the supplemental service) in the subscribers' home markets. Cartoons, op-ed pieces, book reviews, chess columns, [*3] puzzles, and other features are available from syndicators such as United Press Syndicate, United Features Syndicate, King Features Syndicate, Creators Syndicate, and Tribune Media Services.

Supplemental news services and features syndicators offer exclusive contracts to subscribers in each metropolitan area. Because the Chicago Tribune subscribes to the New York Times News Service, stories from the Times are unavailable to the Chicago Sun-Times and smaller newspapers in the Chicago area; the Sun-Times subscribes to the Los Angeles Times/Washington Post News Service, which therefore is unavailable to the Tribune and smaller papers. News services and features syndicates charge by the circulation of the subscribing paper, and they therefore strive to sign up the largest paper in each market. Exclusivity is one valuable feature the service offers, for a paper with exclusive rights to a service or feature is both more attractive to readers and more distinctive from its rivals. When selling to smaller papers, however, the supplemental news services and features syndicates generally do not offer exclusivity--for they still hope to interest the larger, and therefore more [*4] lucrative, papers in the market (which can sign up later with exclusive rights against all but the original customer).

As a rule, the larger papers subscribe to the more popular services and features; or perhaps it is the very fact that a feature runs [*44] in a market's larger papers that makes it "more popular." Causation need not concern us. No matter which way it runs, smaller papers perceive that they get the crumbs. This suit, by the Daily Herald, the number three general-interest paper in the Chicago area (with 6.7 percent of average weekly readership), contends that the pattern of exclusive distribution rights violates § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by making it harder for small papers to grow. Like the district court, we assume without deciding that "general-interest-newspaper readership in the Chicago SMSA" is a market. According to the complaint, the Chicago Tribune and the Chicago Sun-Times have locked up the "most popular" or "best" supplemental services and features, injuring consumers by frustrating competition. (We assume that "the best" services and features can constitute a market, although it sounds more like an aesthetic judgment; no [*5] one would say that "the best film of 1996" has a monopoly of any market just because there can be only one "best" film.) The Daily Herald views the Knight-Ridder/Tribune Information Service as a distant third to the supplemental news services the Tribune and Sun-Times use, and even it is unavailable because the Tribune will not license its stories to a competitor in its home market. The Herald concedes that the Associated Press, Reuters, and many quality comics and features are available to it (for example, it publishes Dilbert, one of today's most-followed comic strips) but insists that the best ones are committed to its larger rivals. After assuming that all of the Herald's allegations are true, the district court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted. 1995-2 Trade Cas. P 71,255.

The Herald does not contend that the Tribune has conspired with the Sun-Times to bring about this state of affairs. Compare Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 \(1945\) (holding that the Associated Press, a consortium of newspapers, must eliminate an exclusivity feature that could be traced to agreement among [*6] horizontal rivals). Nor does it contend that the supplemental news services and features syndicators (or their contributing papers and authors) have agreed among themselves. It concedes that each has adopted its method of doing business independently; they take the same approach to distribution because each has discovered that it is the most profitable way to do business. All of the contracts between services and newspapers are terminable at will or on short notice (usually 30 days, although some features require a year's notice). Instead of seeing whether money could persuade a supplemental news service to cut off one of the larger papers--the Herald has never tried to outbid the Tribune or Sun-Times, either on a total compensation basis or a per-subscriber basis--it asked the district court to declare that the antitrust laws entitle it to receive the leading supplemental news services and features without regard to the contractual exclusivity that the Tribune and Sun-Times currently enjoy. At times the Herald suggests that it would be happy with rights to articles from the New York Times, Los Angeles Times, and Washington Post that the Tribune [**7] and Sun-Times do not reprint; "there's plenty for all" is a theme of its brief. But this won't work well for news (must the Tribune give the Herald advance notice of its contents?) or at all for features, which are sold one at a time. For example, King Features Syndicate does not sell its entire portfolio to one paper per market; the Tribune, Sun-Times, and Herald each publish some of its comics and columns. So the Herald necessarily argues that it is entitled to run Peanuts and Dick Tracy even though these comic strips also appear in the Tribune.

This is fundamentally an "essential facilities" claim-- but without any essential facility. There are three supplemental news services that the Herald is willing to acknowledge as major competitors (and others besides, though the Herald denigrates them). There are hundreds, if not thousands, of opinion and entertainment features; a newspaper deprived of access to the New York Times crosswords puzzles can find others, even if the Times has the best known one. Unlike United States v. Terminal Railroad Ass'n, 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 \(1912\), the granddaddy of these cases, in [*45] which the Court held that [**8] a bottleneck facility that could not feasibly be duplicated must be shared among rivals, this case does not involve a single facility that monopolizes one level of production and creates a potential to extend the monopoly to others. We have, instead, competition at each level of production; no one can "take over" another level of production by withholding access from disfavored rivals. Flip Side Productions, Inc. v. JAM Productions, Ltd., 843 F.2d 1024, 1032-34 \(7th Cir. 1988\), holds that HN1[ the existence of three competing facilities not only means that none is an "essential facility" but also means that each of the three is entitled to sign an exclusive contract with a favored user. Other firms that want to enter the market can do so by competing at intervals for these contracts.

HN2[ Competition-for-the-contract is a form of competition that antitrust laws protect rather than proscribe, and it is common. Every year or two, General Motors, Ford, and Chrysler invite tire manufacturers to bid for exclusive rights to have their tires used in the manufacturers' cars. Exclusive contracts make the market hard to enter in mid-year but cannot stifle competition over the longer run, and competition [*9] of this kind drives down the price of tires, to the ultimate benefit of consumers. Just so in the news business--if smaller newspapers are willing to bid with cash rather than legal talent. In the meantime, exclusive stories and features help the newspapers differentiate themselves, the better to compete with one another. A market in which every newspaper carried the same stories, columns, and cartoons would be a less vigorous market than the existing one. And a market in which the creators of intellectual property (such as the New York Times) could not decide how best to market it for maximum profit would be a market with less (or less interesting) intellectual property created in the first place. No one can take the supply of well researched and written news as a given; legal rulings that diminish the incentive to find and explicate the news (by reducing the return from that business) have little to commend them.

In what way could the news services' practices harm consumers? Tacit collusion (economists' term for "shared monopoly") could be a source of monopoly profits and injury to consumers even if none of the stages of production is monopolized. Some distribution arrangements [**10] might be objectionable because they facilitate tacit collusion. But HN3 collusion, tacit or express, requires some horizontal cooperation, or at least forbearance from vigorous competition among rivals. See Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy § 4.4 (1994). Compare Richard A. Posner, [*Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective* 42-77 (1976), with Donald F. Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655 (1962). Although the newspaper market is concentrated on the readers' side, the inputs to newspaper production are unconcentrated and therefore do not facilitate tacit collusion in the more concentrated market. The New York Times News Service competes for column inches of ink not only with other supplemental news services but also with the Associated Press, Reuters, and the reporters of the subscribing papers. Markets here are less concentrated, and use fewer of the devices that facilitate oligopolistic interdependence, than the markets in E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. FTC, 729 F.2d 128 \(2d Cir. 1984\), where an antitrust claim was nonetheless rejected. The Herald does not argue that the [**11] practices at hand facilitate tacit collusion.

What the Herald does argue is that a mixture of fewness of firms, exclusive contracts, and relations between suppliers and users of news that endure despite short contract terms, hampers the growth of small rivals even though each market is competitive. Such an argument does not come within any of the economic approaches to tacit collusion--but it does, the Herald insists, come within the holding of FTC v. Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., 344 U.S. 392, 97 L. Ed. 426, 73 S. Ct. 361 \(1953\). The Herald relies as well on Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051 \(1949\) (Standard Stations), and United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 \(1962\), but rightly treats Motion Picture Advertising Service as its best case.

[*46] Four companies signed approximately 75 percent of the nation's motion picture theaters to exclusive-dealing contracts for advertisements to be displayed along with the films. Having signed with one supplier of ads, a theater could not display ads furnished by another. The Federal Trade Commission concluded that these arrangements, in the aggregate, stifled competition by firms that wanted to enter the business of furnishing [**12] advertising to theaters, and therefore violated § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45: as the Supreme Court phrased the FTC's conclusion, "due to the exclusive contracts, respondent and the three other major companies have foreclosed to competitors 75 percent of all available outlets for this business throughout the United States." 344 U.S. at 395. According to the Herald, the same kind of thing now has occurred in the news industry, making it equally appropriate to aggregate the market shares of the firms without proof of horizontal collaboration (for there was none in Motion Picture Advertising Service). The district court was not impressed, for the approach of Motion Picture Advertising Service--which depends on "foreclosure" of sales to competitors without proof of injury to consumers--reflects a bygone day in antitrust analysis. But the district court properly did not rely entirely on a belief that the opinion is a derelict. See Khan v. State Oil Co., 93 F.3d 1358, 1362-64 \(7th Cir. 1996\) (implementing another antique antitrust opinion that is unlikely to be reaffirmed if the Supreme Court revisits the subject). It held that Motion Picture [**13] Advertising Service is not controlling even if it remains authoritative.

First, Motion Picture Advertising Service was decided under § 5 of the FTC Act. The Commission has the authority under that provision to forbid practices that pose risks to effective competition, even when they do not violate the Sherman Act. The Court remarked on this in Motion Picture Advertising Service: HN4 [↑] "The 'unfair methods of competition,' which are condemned by § 5(a) of the Act, are not confined to those that were illegal at common law or that were condemned by the Sherman Act." 344 U.S. at 394. HN5 [↑] A district court lacks the FTC's power to go beyond the limits of the Sherman Act. Similarly, Standard Stations was decided under § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, and does not assist the plaintiff in a Sherman Act case that cannot be characterized as involving tie-in sales. Granted, the Court remarked in Motion Picture Advertising Service that "a device which has sewed up a market so tightly for the benefit of a few falls within the prohibitions of the Sherman Act", 344 U.S. at 395, but this bald and unreasoned assertion is not conclusive. Poorly reasoned holdings bind the inferior [**14] courts; unreasoned dictum does not--and this statement was obiter dictum, for the Court had emphasized only a paragraph before that it was deferring to the FTC's findings as § 5 of the FTC Act requires. No subsequent case has read Motion Picture Advertising Service to abolish the requirement of concerted action under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Second, Motion Picture Advertising Service involved exclusive dealing, while this case involves exclusive distributorships. Despite the similarity in nomenclature, there is a difference--one vital to the theory of Motion Picture Advertising Service itself. See generally Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy § 10.8. HN6 [↑] An exclusive dealing contract obliges a firm to obtain its inputs from a single source. Each of the theaters was committed to one distributor for all of its ads. This was the genesis of the concern about foreclosure. A new advertising distributor could not find outlets. An exclusive distributorship, by contrast, does not restrict entry at either level. None of the newspapers in Chicago (or anywhere else) has promised by contract to obtain all of its news from a single source--and the sources have not locked all [**15] of their output together (unlike the "block booking" involved in Loew's). A new entrant to the supplemental news service business could sell to every newspaper in the United States, if it chose to do so. Existing features syndicates sell to multiple firms in the same market (although most features go to one paper per city; this is the exclusive distribution aspect of the contracts). So vendors can and do sell news and features to multiple customers, and customers can and [*47] do buy news and features from multiple vendors. "Foreclosure" of the kind about which Motion Picture Advertising Service was concerned does not occur under exclusive distribution contracts.

Third, the FTC and the Supreme Court concluded that HN7[↑] even exclusive dealing contracts are lawful if limited to a year's duration. 344 U.S. at 395-96. The Commission saw that exclusivity can promote competition by making it feasible for firms to invest in promoting their products-- for these costs would not be recoverable if the contracts were of very short terms, or if rivals could exhibit the same films and obtain the benefit of this promotional activity. Moreover, with year-long contracts, the entire market is up for grabs. [**16] A new entrant can sell to a twelfth of the theaters in the first month, a sixth of all theaters by the end of the second month, and so on; competition for the contract makes it possible to have the benefits of exclusivity and rivalry simultaneously. Things work similarly in the newspaper business. Contract terms are short, so competition for the contract can flourish. Meanwhile, exclusive distribution of news or features through a single paper in a city helps the paper distinguish itself from, and compete with, its rivals. The SunTimes will not promote a readership for a particular columnist if the Tribune and the Herald carry the same column; free-riding would spoil the investment and thwart this aspect of competition.

Contracts in the news business, unlike those in the motion picture advertising business, are of indefinite duration, and either side may terminate after giving the required advance notice. According to the Herald, this makes all the difference, but we don't see why. HN8[↑] A termination clause works just like a stated time limit in facilitating competition for the contract. The FTC did not insist that dealings between a distributor and a theater cease [**17] after a year; the parties were free to renew their arrangement for successive years; it was enough that there be an option to change distributors or renegotiate once a year. That option exists in the newspaper business. Both sides to these contracts enjoy an annual (or more frequent) right to negotiate new terms or change partners. To this the Herald responds, in essence: The contracts aren't terminated in fact, so the legal terms do not matter; the contracts should be treated as perpetual. Yet for all we can tell renewal was (and remains) the norm in the motion picture business. As long as arrangements serve the interests of both parties, they will continue, whether that means signing another in a series of one-year contracts or declining to exercise an annual option to cancel a contract. Enduring exclusive distribution contracts characterize markets that are recognized as competitive: for example, Babylon 5 appears exclusively on WPWR-TV (Channel 50) in Chicago, and almost all other shows are exhibited exclusively on one channel per locale, sticking with that station for their entire original production run, even though no one thinks that individual stations or producers have [**18] market power. Cf. Schurz Communications, Inc. v. FCC, 982 F.2d 1043 (7th Cir. 1992); Capital Cities/ABC, Inc. v. FCC, 29 F.3d 309 (7th Cir. 1994). The FTC and the Supreme Court in Motion Picture Advertising Service wanted to ensure that dealings continued only while they remained in the interests of both distributors and theaters--which meant that someone else could come along with a better deal and get the business. Likewise someone with a better offer can get or sell news on short notice. The Herald has never tried to make a better offer, and we conclude that it has come to the wrong forum. It should try to outbid the Tribune and Sun-Times in the marketplace, rather than to outmaneuver them in court.

AFFIRMED

Philip Morris Inc. v. Blumenthal

United States District Court for the District of Connecticut

December 23, 1996, Decided ; December 23, 1996, filed

Civil No. 3:96CV1221 (PCD)

Reporter

949 F. Supp. 93 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19426 **; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,899

PHILIP MORRIS INC., R.R REYNOLDS TOBACCO CO., BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CO., LORILLARD TOBACCO CO., Plaintiffs, -vs- RICHARD BLUMENTHAL, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CONNECTICUT, Defendant.

Disposition: [**1] Defendant's renewed motion to dismiss (doc 44), dated October 10, 1996, granted.

Core Terms

---

Tobacco, important state interest, state court, abstention, proceedings, attorney general, present action, antitrust, state proceeding, federal court, injunctive, state court action, ongoing, enjoin, cases, subject matter jurisdiction, unfair trade practice, criminal proceeding

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Constitutional Law > Relations Among Governments > Full Faith & Credit

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

HN1 Relations Among Governments, Full Faith & Credit

Federalism requires comity, which is defined as a recognition of the fact that the entire country is made up of a union of separate state governments, and a continuance of the belief that the national government will fare best if the states and their institutions are left free to perform their separate functions in their separate ways.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

HN2 Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

The normal thing to do when federal courts are asked to enjoin pending proceedings in state courts is not to issue such injunctions. The principals of comity mandate extreme caution before enjoining certain kinds of state civil proceedings as well as state criminal proceedings.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN3 Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Abstention is appropriate when there is an ongoing state proceeding; an important state interest is implicated; and the plaintiff has an avenue open for review of constitutional claims in the state court. When those conditions are met, abstention is obligatory.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN4 Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

The abstention doctrine applies in cases where the federal action was filed preemptively.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN5 Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Federal courts need not abstain under Younger if there is no pending state proceeding, lest the hapless plaintiff find himself between the Scylla of intentionally flouting state law and the Charybdis of forgoing what he believes to be constitutionally protected activity in order to avoid becoming enmeshed in a criminal proceeding. However, Steffel applies when there is no pending state proceeding.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN6 Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Younger applies to certain types of civil actions. Hicks applies to civil proceedings to the same extent that Younger does.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

Legal Ethics > Sanctions > Disciplinary Proceedings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

HN7 Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Abstention is proper under Younger in civil cases only if the proceedings implicate important state interests. Civil actions by the state which are akin to a criminal prosecution have been held important state interests. State enforcement of attorney disciplinary rules are another example. Phrased more generally, important state interests include proceedings necessary for the vindication of important state policies or for the functioning of the state judicial system.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN8 [blue download icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The existence of an important state interest for Younger purposes does not depend on whether the relief sought is monetary or injunctive. Rather, it depends on the nature of the claim brought in the underlying state court action. It is therefore irrelevant that similar relief was sought under different laws, since it is the claim, not the relief, which determines the existence of an important state interest.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN9 [blue download icon] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

The fact that the plaintiff's complaint only seeks to enjoin state court imposition of monetary, as opposed to injunctive, relief is irrelevant for abstention purposes. The important state interest element of Younger does not depend on the relief sought by the federal plaintiff. Nor does it turn on whether the state court action seeks monetary or injunctive relief.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN10 [blue download icon] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

When a litigant has not attempted to present his federal claims in related state-court proceedings, a federal court should assume that state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

Criminal Law & Procedure > Jurisdiction & Venue > Jurisdiction

HN11 [blue download icon] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

When absolutely necessary for the protection of constitutional rights, courts of the United States have the power to enjoin state officers from instituting criminal actions.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Younger abstention is based on federalism, not on lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Thus when an action is brought pursuant to Ex Parte Young, but falls within the requirements of Younger and its progeny, abstention is appropriate.

Counsel: Attorneys for Plaintiff, Philip Morris, Inc.: Benjamin A. Solnit, Esq., Margaret A. Little, Esq., William R. Murphy, Esq., Robert K. Ciulla, Esq., Tyler, Cooper & Alcorn, New Haven, Connecticut. Peter C. Hein, Esq., Barbara Robbins, Esq., Ben M. Germana, Esq., Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz, New York, New York. Attorneys for Plaintiff, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.: Edward F. Hennessey, Esq., David T. Ryan, Esq., Brien P. Horan, Esq., Dennis F. Kerrigan, Jr., Esq., Robinson & Cole, Hartford, Connecticut. Donald B. Ayer, Esq., Robert F. McDermott, Jr., Esq., Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Washington, D.C. Attorneys for Plaintiff, Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp.: Andrew R. McGaan, Esq., David M. Bernick, Esq., Kirkland & Ellis, Chicago, Illinois. Francis H. Morrison, III, Esq., James H. Rotondo, Esq., Athena Roxene Tsakanikas, Esq., Day, Berry & Howard, Hartford, Connecticut. Marjorie Press Lindblom, Esq., Kirkland & Ellis, New York, New York. Attorneys for Plaintiff, Lorillard Tobacco Co.: William R. Murphy, Esq., Tyler, Cooper & Alcorn, New Haven, Connecticut. James R. Fogarty, Esq., Lawrence F. Reilly, Esq., [**2] Andrew P. Nemiroff, Esq., Epstein Fogarty Cohen & Selby, Greenwich, Connecticut. Gael Mahony, Esq., Hill & Barlow, Boston, Massachusetts.

Attorneys for Defendant, Richard Blumenthal, Attorney General: David S. Golub, Esq., Jonathan M. Levine, Esq., Silver, Golub & Teitel, Stamford, Connecticut. Gregory T. D'Auria, Esq., Jane R. Rosenberg, Esq., Eliot D. Prescott, Esq., Attorney General's Office, Hartford, Connecticut. Andrew P. Nemiroff, Esq., Epstein Fogarty Cohen & Selby, Greenwich, Connecticut. Stephen R. Park, Esq., Attorney General's Office, Anti-Trust, Consumer Protection, Hartford, Connecticut. William M. Rubenstein, Esq., Attorney General's Office, Hartford, Connecticut.

Judges: Peter C. Dorsey, Chief United States District Judge

Opinion by: Peter C. Dorsey

Opinion

---

[*94] RULING ON MOTION TO DISMISS

Defendant moves to dismiss under the Younger v. Harris, 281 F. Supp. 507, abstention doctrine and pursuant to the Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283. For the reasons below, defendant's motion is granted.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs ("Tobacco Companies") filed suit in district court (the "present action") to enjoin defendant (the "Attorney General") from filing an impending suit in state court. Shortly [**3] after the present action was filed, the Attorney General in fact filed suit in Connecticut Superior Court. The state court action seeks damages and injunctive relief for alleged violations of state antitrust law, state unfair trade practice law, and state common law. The Tobacco Companies removed the state court action to district court. The removed case came before the Honorable Janet Bond Arterton. The Attorney General moved to dismiss the present action and to remand the removed case to state court where originally filed, arguing that removal was improper due to a lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

The motion to dismiss the present action was denied without prejudice pending resolution of the subject matter jurisdiction issue in the removed case. On October 9, 1996, the removed case was remanded to state court for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The Attorney General then renewed the motion to dismiss the present action.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Abstention Under Younger v. Harris

The Tobacco Companies' action raises the issue of federal court interference with pending state litigation. The Supreme Court has noted that "since the beginning of this country's history Congress [**4] has, subject to few exceptions, manifested a desire to permit state courts to try state cases free from interference by federal courts." Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 43, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669, 91 S. Ct. 746 \(1971\). HN1 Federalism requires comity, which Justice Black defined as:

a recognition of the fact that the entire country is made up of a Union of separate state governments, and a continuance of the belief that the National Government will fare best if the States and their institutions are left free to perform their separate functions in their separate ways. This, perhaps for lack of a better and clearer way to describe it, is referred to by many as "Our Federalism" . . .

[*95] Id. at 44. Therefore, "HN2 the normal thing to do when federal courts are asked to enjoin pending proceedings in state courts is not to issue such injunctions." Id. at 45. Although Younger addressed federal actions to enjoin state criminal proceedings, the same principals of comity mandate extreme caution before enjoining certain kinds of state civil proceedings as well. See, e.g., Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., 420 U.S. 592, 604, 43 L. Ed. 2d 482, 95 S. Ct. 1200 \(1975\); Middlesex Ethics Comm. v. Garden State Bar Ass'n, 457 U.S. 423, 432, 73 L. Ed. 2d 116, 102 S. Ct. 2515 \(1982\). [**5]

HN3 Abstention under Younger is appropriate when: "1) there is an ongoing state proceeding; 2) an important state interest is implicated; and 3) the plaintiff has an avenue open for review of constitutional claims in the state court." Hansel v. Town Court For Town Of Springfield, 56 F.3d 391, 393 \(2d Cir. 1995\). When these conditions are met, abstention is obligatory. See Colorado River Water Cons. Dist. v. U.S., 424 U.S. 800, 816 n.22, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483, 96 S. Ct. 1236 \(1976\).

1. Ongoing State Proceeding

There clearly is an ongoing state proceeding in the present case. The question is whether this element requires that the state proceeding be brought before the federal action. The typical scenario, as in Younger, is that the state action came first. However, the Supreme Court has held that HN4 Younger also applies in cases where the federal action was filed preemptively. Hicks v. Miranda, 422 U.S. 332, 45 L. Ed. 2d 223, 95 S. Ct. 2281 \(1975\).

The Tobacco Companies argue that Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 39 L. Ed. 2d 505, 94 S. Ct. 1209 \(1974\), not Hicks, controls. Under Steffel, HN5 federal courts need not abstain under Younger if there is no pending state proceeding, lest "the hapless plaintiff [find himself] between the Scylla [**6] of intentionally flouting state law and the Charybdis of forgoing what he believes to be constitutionally protected activity in order to avoid becoming enmeshed in a criminal proceeding." Steffel, 415 U.S. at 463. However, Steffel applies when there is no pending state proceeding. The Supreme Court in Hicks specifically distinguished that scenario from one in which there is a pending state proceeding which, in a race to the courthouse, happened to be filed second:

Neither Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 39 L. Ed. 2d 505, 94 S. Ct. 1209 \(1974\), nor any other case in this Court has held that for Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669, to apply, the state criminal proceedings must be pending on the day the federal case is filed. Indeed, the issue has been left open; and we now hold that where state criminal proceedings are begun against the federal plaintiffs after the federal complaint is filed but before any proceedings of substance on the merits have taken place in the federal court, the principles of Younger v. Harris should apply in full force.

Hicks, 422 U.S. at 349 (footnote omitted).

The Tobacco Companies attempt to distinguish Hicks on several other grounds. First they argue [**7] that Hicks applies only to criminal, not civil, proceedings. This argument is without merit. As discussed above, HN6 Younger applies to certain types of civil actions. Hicks applies to civil proceedings to the same extent that Younger does.

Second, the Tobacco Companies distinguish Hicks on the grounds that the state proceedings brought in that case could only have been brought in state court, not in federal court. However, the only reason why the claims in Hicks could have been brought uniquely in state court is that they were criminal charges. The distinction therefore is irrelevant and merely rehashes the argument that Hicks only applies to state criminal proceedings. Furthermore, the cases cited do not support this argument.

Finally, the Tobacco Companies argue that "comity works both ways": Respect for federalism would have the state, not the federal, court abstain. However the only case cited, Chaulk Services v. Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, 70 F.3d 1361 (1st Cir. 1995), must be distinguished. In Chaulk the state administrative action interfered with a federal statutory and administrative [*96] system constitutionally adopted by [**8] congress. There is no such federal administrative preemption in the present action.

Accordingly, there is an "ongoing proceeding" for Younger purposes.

2. Important State Interest

HN7 Abstention is proper under Younger in civil cases only if the proceedings implicate "important state interests." Middlesex Ethics Comm. v. Garden State Bar Assn., 457 U.S. 423, 432, 73 L. Ed. 2d 116, 102 S. Ct. 2515 (1982). Civil actions by the state which are "akin to a criminal prosecution" have been held important state interests. Huffman, 420 U.S. at 604 (civil enforcement of anti-obscenity laws). State enforcement of attorney disciplinary rules are another example. Middlesex, 457 U.S. 423, 73 L. Ed. 2d 116, 102 S. Ct. 2515. Phrased more generally, important state interests include "proceedings necessary for the vindication of important state policies or for the functioning of the state judicial system." Id. at 432.

The Attorney General's claims under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act ("CUTPA") and under Connecticut antitrust law are important state interests. Both claims are under statutory schemes which contemplate civil enforcement actions by state authorities to effect state policy. See C.G.S. § 42-110m(a) (Commissioner [**9] of Consumer Protection can ask Attorney General to sue in name of the state under CUTPA); C.G.S. § 35-32(a) ("The attorney general, in the name of the state and on behalf of the people of the state, shall enforce [the Connecticut Antitrust Act]"). These laws are mechanisms for the state to enforce its important interest in fair trade in Connecticut.

The Tobacco Companies urge following Philip Morris v. Harshbarger, 946 F. Supp. 1067, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18438, 1996 WL 676807 (D.Mass.). In Harshbarger Tobacco Companies also preemptively filed suit to enjoy a state court action by the Massachusetts Attorney General. The Massachusetts District Court declined to abstain under Younger because it did not find an important state interest. The Massachusetts Attorney General's action, which sought reimbursement for Medicaid expenditures, was found to be "classically in the nature of subrogation," and accordingly not an important state interest. However, Harshbarger must be distinguished because the Massachusetts Attorney General's suit in state court did not allege violations of state unfair trade practice and antitrust law, as does the Connecticut state court action. It is therefore unnecessary to address the merits [**10] and applicability of Harshbarger, since the Attorney General's CUTPA and antitrust claims do implicate an important state interest.

The Tobacco Companies attempt to gloss over the absence of unfair trade practice and antitrust claims in the Massachusetts case by pointing out that the underlying state complaints in the two cases are "predicated on virtually identical factual allegations." Surreply Mem. at 2. This is irrelevant. The Attorney General has alleged an important state interest by invoking CUTPA and Connecticut antitrust laws, not merely by the nature of the factual allegations.

The Tobacco Companies argue that Harshbarger controls because the Massachusetts attorney general sought non-monetary relief similar to the present action, although without alleging unfair trade practice or antitrust claims. This argument misses the point. HN8 The existence of an important state interest for Younger purposes does not depend on whether the relief sought is monetary or injunctive. Rather, it depends on the nature of the claim brought in the underlying state court action. It is therefore irrelevant that similar relief was sought under different laws, since it is the claim, not [**11] the relief, which determines the existence of an important state interest. As discussed above, the Connecticut state court action's allegations constitute an important state interest.

HN9↑ The fact that the Tobacco Companies' complaint in the present action only seeks to enjoin state court imposition of monetary, as opposed to injunctive, relief is also irrelevant for abstention purposes. The important state interest element of Younger does not depend on the relief sought by the federal plaintiff. Nor does it turn on whether the [*97] state court action seeks monetary or injunctive relief.

Accordingly, the important state interest element of Younger is satisfied.

3. Avenue Of Review For Constitutional Claims In State Court

The Supreme Court has held that "HN10↑ when a litigant has not attempted to present his federal claims in related state-court proceedings, a federal court should assume that state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary." Pennzoil v. Texaco, 481 U.S. 1, 15, 95 L. Ed. 2d 1, 107 S. Ct. 1519 (1987). The Tobacco Companies do not challenge this element of Younger. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp. at 10. Since there are no doubts regarding the adequacy [**12] of the Tobacco Companies' avenue of review for constitutional claims in Connecticut state court, this element of Younger is satisfied.

B. Other Arguments Raised By The Tobacco Companies

The Tobacco Companies mischaracterize the relationship between the Younger abstention doctrine and Ex Parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 52 L. Ed. 714, 28 S. Ct. 441 (1908), which "established the doctrine that HN11↑ when absolutely necessary for protection of constitutional rights courts of the United States have power to enjoin state officers from instituting criminal actions." Fenner v. Boykin, 271 U.S. 240, 243, 70 L. Ed. 927, 46 S. Ct. 492 (1926). Ex Parte Young held that there is the requisite subject matter jurisdiction for such suits. HN12↑ Younger abstention is based on federalism, not on lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Thus when an action is brought pursuant to Ex Parte Young, but falls within the requirements of Younger and its progeny, abstention is appropriate. See Younger, 401 U.S. at 45.

The Tobacco Companies make a puzzling argument that claims in the federal action which seek injunctions against imposition of liability for future, as opposed to past, sales of tobacco should not be barred under Younger, [**13] This argument is based on mis-cited cases and faulty logic. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 51 L. Ed. 2d 752, 97 S. Ct. 1428 (1977), does not stand for the proposition that ongoing state proceedings can somehow be severed for Younger purposes into past and future liability. In Wooley, there were no ongoing state proceedings at issue -- only failure to seek state appellate review of prior convictions under the same law (covering up New Hampshire's "Live Free or Die" motto on a car license plate). Wooley is thus irrelevant.

There is furthermore no logical base to this argument. Nothing indicates that the state court would take the unprecedented step of imposing liability for sales which have not yet occurred. The outcome of the state litigation, whatever that may be, will affect future liabilities under the familiar doctrine of res judicata. Injunctions are always prospective. But these truisms have no bearing on Younger abstention.

The Tobacco Companies also argue that abstention analysis in this case should be governed by Pullman, not Younger, abstention. See R.R. Comm'n of Texas v. Pullman, 312 U.S. 496, 85 L. Ed. 971, 61 S. Ct. 643 (1941). However, these doctrines are not mutually exclusive. Since abstention [**14] is appropriate under Younger, as discussed above, Pullman analysis is thus unnecessary.

III. CONCLUSION

Defendant's renewed motion to dismiss (doc 44), dated October 10, 1996, is granted.

SO ORDERED.

Dated at New Haven, Connecticut, December 23, 1996.

949 F. Supp. 93, *97L996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19426, **14

Peter C. Dorsey

Chief United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Watts v. Clark Assocs. Funeral Home

Supreme Court of New York, Appellate Division, Second Department

November 25, 1996, Submitted ; December 23, 1996, Decided 95-11740

Reporter

234 A.D.2d 538 *; 651 N.Y.S.2d 585 **; 1996 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 13238 ***

H. Joseph Watts, Appellant, v. Clark Associates Funeral Home, Inc., et al., Respondents.

Prior History: [***1] In an action, inter alia, to recover damages for breach of contract and antitrust violations, the plaintiff appeals, as limited by his brief, from so much of an order of the Supreme Court, Westchester County (Fredman, J.), entered November 17, 1995, as granted those branches of the defendants' motions pursuant to CPLR 3211 which were to dismiss the third, fourth, and fifth causes of action.

Disposition: ORDERED that the order is affirmed insofar as appealed from, with one bill of costs to the respondents appearing separately and filing separate briefs.

Core Terms

---

cause of action, Donnelly Act, conspiracy, punitive damages, restraint of trade, seller and buyer, economic impact, relevant market, rescission, asserting, funeral, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN1** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A party asserting a violation of the Donnelly Act must identify the relevant market, describe the nature and effects of the purported conspiracy, allege how the economic impact of that conspiracy does or could restrain trade in the market, and set forth a conspiracy or reciprocal relationship between two or more legal or economic entities.

Counsel: Addesso, Merovitch & Lane, Mt. Vernon, N.Y. (Jack A. Addesso of counsel), for appellant.

Lawrence N. Martin, Jr., White Plains, N.Y. (Janice S. Altizio of counsel), for respondents Clark Associates Funeral Home, Inc., Estate of Eugene H. Lanoway, Eugenia Ann Lanoway, and Seymour Kaplan.

Foley, Hickey, Gilbert & O'Reilly, New York, N.Y. (Terrence P. O'Reilly of counsel), for respondents Daniel B. McManus and McManus and Clark, Inc.

Judges: Bracken, J. P., Thompson, Pizzuto and Luciano, JJ., concur.

Opinion

---

[*538] [**586] Ordered that the order is affirmed insofar as appealed from, with one bill of costs to the respondents [***2] appearing separately and filing separate briefs.

The plaintiff brought this action against the corporate and individual sellers and the corporate and individual buyers of a funeral home business, alleging, among other things, violations of New York's antitrust law, known as the Donnelly Act (General Business Law § 340). The court granted those branches of the motions of the sellers and buyers which were to dismiss four of the five causes of action asserted in the complaint. The plaintiff now contends that the court erroneously dismissed his third cause of action asserting a violation of the Donnelly Act, his fourth cause of action seeking punitive damages, and his fifth cause of action seeking rescission of the agreement between the sellers [**587] and buyers as well as specific performance of his own agreement with the individual buyer.

The Supreme Court properly concluded that the plaintiff's allegations were insufficient to state a cause of action under General Business Law § 340. HN1[↑] A party asserting a violation of the Donnelly Act must identify the relevant market, describe the nature and effects of the purported conspiracy, allege how the economic impact of that conspiracy [***3] does or could restrain trade in the market, and set forth a conspiracy or reciprocal relationship between two or more legal or economic entities (see, Anand v Soni, 215 AD2d 420, 421). Here, the plaintiff's contention that he was precluded from purchasing an interest in one of the few existing funeral parlor businesses within Northern Westchester County does not adequately allege impairment of competition within a relevant market or show how the economic impact of the alleged conspiracy restrains trade in the market (see, Constant v Hallmark Cards, 172 AD2d 641, 642; Van Dussen-Storto Motor Inn v Rochester Tel. Corp., 63 AD2d 244, 252).

The plaintiff's fourth cause of action seeking punitive damages [*539] based on his allegation that the defendants "exhibited an evil and wrongful motive and/or acted willfully and intentionally towards [him]" was properly dismissed, insofar as there is no separate cause of action for punitive damages ( Rocanova v Equitable Life Assur. Socy., 83 NY2d 603, 616; Hubbell v Trans World Life Ins. Co., 50 NY2d 899, 901). Further, because the fifth cause of action for rescission was based on the Donnelly Act claim, dismissal [***4] of that count of the complaint was properly granted.

The plaintiff's remaining contention is without merit.

Bracken, J. P., Thompson, Pizzuto and Luciano, JJ., concur.

Hawaii Newspaper Agency v. Bronster

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

November 5, 1996, Argued, Submitted, Honolulu, Hawaii ; December 24, 1996, Filed

No. 96-15142

Reporter

103 F.3d 742 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 33462 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,658; 96 Cal. Daily Op. Service 9365; 96 Daily Journal DAR 15438; 25 Media L. Rep. 1175

HAWAII NEWSPAPER AGENCY, a Delaware Limited Partnership; GANNETT PACIFIC CORPORATION, a Hawaii corporation dba The Honolulu Advertiser; LIBERTY NEWSPAPERS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, as Arkansas Limited Partnership dba The Honolulu Star-Bulletin, Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. MARGERY S. BRONSTER, in her official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Hawaii, Defendant-Appellant.

Prior History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii. D.C. No. CV-95-00635-SPK. Samuel P. King, Senior District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: AFFIRMED

Core Terms

---

newspapers, preempted, attorney general, ripe, Advertiser, regulation, antitrust immunity, state law, editorial, preemption, preemption claim, antitrust, exempting, state regulation, district court, conditions, hardship

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

**HN1** [**\[down arrow\]**](#) Exemptions & Immunities, Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

See 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1801-1804.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

HN2 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

The Newspaper Preservation Act (NPA), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1801-1804, provides that joint operating agreements (JOA) entered into prior to the law's passage will automatically receive antitrust immunity. 15 U.S.C. § 1803\(a\). Section 1803\(a\) shields joint operating agreements existing prior to July 24, 1970, if at the time at which such arrangement was first entered into not more than one of the newspaper publications involved in the performance of such arrangement was likely to remain or become a financially sound publication. Newspapers that execute JOAs after the effective date of the NPA are required to obtain the consent of the Attorney General of the United States in order to receive the same immunity. 15 U.S.C. § 1803\(b\). The NPA also provides that JOA participants are not exempt from laws which prohibit certain practices that would be unlawful if committed by a single entity. 15 U.S.C. § 1803\(c\). The law reinstated any JOA that had been declared unlawful under antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C. § 1804\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > General Overview

HN4 [down] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

The ripeness doctrine precludes federal courts from exercising their jurisdiction over an action that is filed before a real dispute exists between the parties. Nevertheless, it is a court's duty to consider sua sponte whether the preemption issue is ripe, because the question of ripeness goes to subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > Tests for Ripeness

HN5 [down] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Federal Questions

In Abbott Laboratories, the United States Supreme Court held that a claim's ripeness depended on the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration. Under the two-part test in Abbott, the preemption claim is ripe for review when first, the preemption challenge is fit for judicial decision. Legal questions that require little factual development are more likely to be ripe. The issue of whether a federal law occupies the field and thereby preempts state law is purely legal. Second, the threat of hardship if the court withholds consideration in this situation is both real and immediate, not conjectural or hypothetical.

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Administration & Procedure > General Overview

HN6 [down] State & Local Taxes, Administration & Procedure

See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 235-116 (1995).

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Supreme Law of the Land

HN7 [down] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Federal Questions

Under the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, federal law is the supreme law of the land. U.S. Const. art. VI cl. 2. A state law is preempted when (1) congress has expressly superseded state law, (2) congress has regulated a field so extensively that a reasonable person would infer that congress intended to supersede state law, and (3) when there is a conflict between federal and state laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN8 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

Congress has preempted the field of regulations that are based on a newspaper's involvement in a joint operating agreements (JOA). Congress has set forth all the conditions governing their formation and qualification for antitrust immunity. Both the statute's language and its legislative history indicate that congress intended its regulation of newspapers in JOAs to be exclusive. Congress expressly reserved a field of permissible state regulation in 15 U.S.C.S. § 1803\(c\). The Newspaper Preservation Act's, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1801-1804, language and structure precludes states from directly or indirectly regulating JOAs.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN9 [down] Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

When the federal government completely occupies a given field or an identifiable portion of it, the test of preemption is whether the matter on which the state asserts the right to act is in anyway regulated by the federal act.

Counsel: Girard D. Lau, Deputy Attorney General, Honolulu, Hawaii, for the defendant-appellant.

Jeffrey S. Portnoy (on the briefs), Cades Schutte Fleming & Wright, Honolulu, Hawaii; Robert C. Bernius, Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Doyle, Washington D.C., for the plaintiffs-appellees.

Judges: Before: J. Clifford Wallace, Mary M. Schroeder, and Arthur L. Alarcon, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Alarcon.

Opinion by: ALARCON

Opinion

---

[*743] OPINION

ALARCON, Circuit Judge:

Margery S. Bronster, in her official capacity as Attorney General of Hawaii, appeals from the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the Hawaii Newspaper Agency, Gannett Pacific Corp. (Honolulu Advertiser), and Liberty Newspapers (Honolulu Star-Bulletin). Attorney General Bronster contends that the district court erred in concluding that the Newspaper Preservation Act [*744] preempted Hawaii's Act 243, that the plaintiffs presented a ripe First Amendment claim, and that Act 243 violated the First Amendment, the Due Process Clause, as well as the Equal Protection Clause. We [**2] affirm because we conclude that the Newspaper Preservation Act preempted the field of the regulation of joint operating agreements between newspapers.

I.

In 1962, the Honolulu Advertiser was experiencing financial difficulty and was on the verge of failure. In order to prevent the newspaper's demise and preserve its editorial voice, the Advertiser entered into a joint operating agreement ("JOA") with the Honolulu Star-Bulletin on May 31, 1962. Under the JOA, the newspapers merged their commercial, circulation, and advertising departments, but maintained separate and independent editorial voices. The newspapers formed the Hawaii Newspaper Agency ("HNA") to carry out the JOA. The effect of the JOA was to cut costs and preserve two independent editorial voices in Honolulu.

In Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 22 L. Ed. 2d 148, 89 S. Ct. 927 (1969), the Supreme Court affirmed a district court's conclusion that a similar JOA between two newspapers in Tucson, Arizona violated federal antitrust laws. Id. at 135. The Court also held that the Tucson newspapers' "only real defense" was the "failing company" defense, which applies only when one party to a JOA can prove it was facing a liquidation [**3] and had no available purchasers. Id. at 136-39. The Tucson newspapers failed to meet this burden. Id. at 139.

In response to that decision, Congress passed the Newspaper Preservation Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1801-1804 ("NPA").

<sup>1</sup> H.R. Rep. No. 91-1193, 91st Cong., 2nd Sess. (1970), reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3547. Congress explained

<sup>1</sup> HN1 [↑] The Newspaper Preservation Act provides in pertinent part:

§ 1803. Antitrust exemptions

(a) It shall not be unlawful under any antitrust law for any person to perform, enforce, renew, or amend any joint newspaper operating arrangement entered into prior to July 24, 1970, if at the time at which such arrangement was first entered into, regardless of ownership or affiliations, not more than one of the newspaper publications involved in the performance of such arrangement was likely to remain or become a financially sound publication: Provided, That the terms of a renewal or amendment to a joint operating arrangement must be filed with the Department of Justice and that the amendment does not add a newspaper publication or newspaper publications to such arrangement.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to enter into, perform, or enforce a joint operating arrangement, not already in effect, except with the prior written consent of the Attorney General of the United States. Prior to granting such approval, the Attorney General shall determine that not more than one of the newspaper publications involved in the arrangement is a publication other than a failing newspaper, and that approval of such arrangement would effectuate the policy and purpose of this chapter.

(c) Nothing contained in the chapter shall be construed to exempt from any antitrust law any predatory pricing, any predatory practice, or any other conduct in the otherwise lawful operations of a joint newspaper operating arrangement which would be unlawful under any antitrust law if engaged in by a single entity. Except as provided in this chapter, no joint newspaper operating arrangement or any party thereto shall be exempt from any antitrust law.

§ 1804. Reinstatement of joint operating arrangements previously adjudged unlawful under antitrust laws that JOAs were necessary to maintain "a newspaper press editorially and reportorially independent and competitive in all parts of the United States." Id. at 3547. Congress found that "economic conditions have created a situation in which a large majority of American communities have already become one owner newspaper communities." Id. at 3548 (quoting remarks of Rep. [*745] Matsunaga). JOAs accomplished Congress's goal because they allowed newspapers "to reduce costs by combining the economic and business aspects of newspaper production, and at the same time, permitted the newspaper participants to maintain separate editorial and reportorial staffs and independent editorial and news policies." Id.

[**4] HN2 The NPA provides that JOAs entered into prior to the law's passage will automatically receive antitrust immunity. 15 U.S.C. § 1803\(a\). Section 1803(a) shields joint operating agreements existing prior to July 24, 1970, "if at the time at which such arrangement was first entered into . . . not more than one of the newspaper publications involved in the performance of such arrangement was likely to remain or become a financially sound publication." Newspapers that execute JOAs after the effective date of the NPA are required to obtain the consent of the Attorney General of the United States in order to receive the same immunity. 15 U.S.C. § 1803\(b\). The NPA also provides that JOA participants are not exempt from laws which prohibit certain practices that would be unlawful if committed by a single entity. 15 U.S.C. § 1803\(c\). The law reinstated any JOA that had been declared unlawful under antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C. § 1804\(a\).

Hawaii has made several unsuccessful attempts to regulate or dismantle the Honolulu Advertiser and the Honolulu Star-Bulletin's JOA. In 1974 and 1979, members of the state legislature introduced legislation that would have regulated the JOA as a public utility. [*5] This proposed legislation did not pass. In addition, the city and county of Honolulu challenged the newspapers' exemption from federal antitrust laws in federal court proceedings. In City and County of Honolulu v. Hawaii Newspaper Agency, Inc., 559 F. Supp. 1021 \(D. Haw. 1983\), the district court granted the newspapers' motion for a directed verdict. The court held that the 1962 JOA was entitled to the protection of section 1803 because the evidence demonstrated that the Honolulu Advertiser was in "serious financial trouble" and that the Honolulu Advertiser's management had a "good faith belief" that joint action "was necessary in order to preserve the Advertiser's editorial staff as an editorial voice in the community separate and apart from that of the Star-Bulletin." Id. at 1032.

In 1995, the Hawaii Legislature passed Act 243.<sup>2</sup> In section 1 of Act 243, the Hawaii legislature stated "that the original justification for the monopoly granted by the public in 1962 may no longer be true." 1995 Haw. Sess. Laws,

(a) Notwithstanding any final judgment rendered in any action brought by the United States under which a joint operating arrangement has been held to be unlawful under any antitrust law, any party to such final judgment may reinstitute said joint newspaper operating arrangement to the extent permissible under section 1803(a) of this title.

(b) The provisions of section 1803 of this title shall apply to the determination of any civil or criminal action pending in any district court of the United States [sic] on July 24, 1970, in which it is alleged that any such joint operating agreement is unlawful under any antitrust law.

<sup>2</sup> HN3 Act 243 § 2 provides in pertinent part:

§ -1 General definitions. As used in this chapter:

"Media" means any printed publication of general distribution in the state issued once or more per year that is a party to the Mutual Publishing Plan Agreement as executed on May 31, 1962, and any subsequent amendments.

§ -2 Disclosure. (a) The media shall submit to the attorney general, no later than thirty days after December 31 of the reporting year, an income tax return filed pursuant to section 235-4.

(b) Any media filing an annual income tax return pursuant to subsection (a) shall also furnish to the attorney general, in forms and at times that the attorney general deems necessary or expedient in the interest of the general public, special or supplementary reports covering information disclosed in subsection (a).

(c) Any report submitted pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) shall be a public record for the purposes of chapter 92F.

Act 243 § 1. The legislature also found "that it is in the public interest to review the income tax returns of organizations granted special operating powers to carry [**6] out its responsibilities to the people of Hawaii." Id. Act 243 requires the Honolulu Advertiser and the Honolulu Star-Bulletin to submit their income tax returns to the attorney general within thirty days after December 31 of the reporting year. Act 243 § 2-2(a). The statute also requires the Honolulu Advertiser and the Honolulu Star-Bulletin to furnish any "special or supplementary reports" that the attorney general "deems necessary or expedient." Act 243 § 2-2(b). Act 243 makes this information a public record. Act 243 § 2-2(c). Once the attorney general compiles this information, he or she must "submit an annual report to the United States Department of Justice." Act 243 § 2-3.

[**7] The Honolulu Advertiser, the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, and the HNA filed this action on August 3, 1995, pursuant to the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2200. In their complaint, the plaintiffs alleged that Act 243 was preempted by the NPA, violated the First Amendment, the Equal Protection Clause, the Due Process Clause, and was a bill of attainder. The newspapers moved for summary judgment on October 31, 1995 and the Hawaii Attorney General filed a cross-motion for summary judgment on November 9, 1995.

The district court granted the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on January 3, 1996. The court held that (1) the NPA preempted the State of Hawaii's attempt to regulate the JOA, (2) the plaintiffs presented a ripe First Amendment claim, (3) Act 243 violated the First Amendment, (4) Act 243 violated the Due Process Clause,<sup>3</sup> and (5) Act 243 was not a bill of attainder. Judgment was entered on January 11, 1996. Attorney General Bronster filed a timely notice of appeal on February 6, 1996.

[**8] II.

HN4 [↑] The ripeness doctrine precludes federal courts from exercising their jurisdiction over an action that is filed before a real dispute exists between the parties. Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 507, 6 L. Ed. 2d 989, 81 S. Ct. 1752 (1961); United Public Workers of America v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 89, 91 L. Ed. 754, 67 S. Ct. 556 (1947). Attorney General Bronster argues that the district court erred in concluding that the newspapers presented a ripe First Amendment claim. In their briefs before this court, however, neither party addressed whether the newspapers' preemption claim is ripe for review. Nevertheless, it is our duty to consider sua sponte whether the preemption issue is ripe, because "the question of ripeness goes to our subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case." Shelter Creek Development Corp. v. City of Oxnard, 838 F.2d 375, 377 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 851, 102 L. Ed. 2d 106, 109 S. Ct. 134 (1988); see also Southern Pacific v. City of Los Angeles, 922 F.2d 498, 502 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 943, 116 L. Ed. 2d 333, 112 S. Ct. 382 (1991) (holding that the ripeness issue "may be raised sua sponte if not raised by the parties"). HN5 [↑] In Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 18 L. Ed. 2d 681, 87 S. Ct. 1507 (1967), the Supreme Court held that a claim's ripeness depended on [**9] "the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration." Id. at 149. Under the two-part test in Abbott, the newspapers' preemption claim is ripe for review.

First, the newspapers' preemption challenge is fit for judicial decision. "Legal questions that require little factual development are more likely to be ripe." Freedom to Travel Campaign v. Newcomb, 82 F.3d 1431, 1434 (9th Cir. 1996). In Sayles Hydro Associates v. Maughan, 985 F.2d 451 (9th Cir. 1993), we held that the issue of whether a federal law "occupies the field" and thereby preempts state law is 'purely legal.'" Id. at 454. We are presented with a similar situation in this matter. We can decide the newspapers' claim without further factual development.

Second, the threat of hardship to the newspapers if the court withheld consideration in this situation is both "'real and immediate,' not 'conjectural' or 'hypothetical.'" City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 102, 75 L. Ed. 2d 675,

---

§ -3 Annual report. The attorney general shall submit an annual report to the United States Department of Justice with regard to the information provided in section -2.

<sup>3</sup> Although the district court's order declares that Act 243 violates the Due Process Clause, Judge King analyzed the law under the Equal Protection Clause. Plaintiffs did not address the Due Process Clause in their brief before this court.

103 S. Ct. 1660 (1983) (citations omitted). In fact, "the inevitability of the operation of [the] statute against certain individuals is patent." Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, I**101 419 U.S. 102, 143, 42 L. Ed. 2d 320, 95 S. Ct. 335 (1974). There can be no doubt that the Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser will violate the law if they do not comply with the Attorney General's request for financial information "no later than thirty days after December 31 of the reporting year." Act 243 § 2-2(a). Attorney General Bronster's argument in this matter clearly indicates her intention to enforce Act [*747] 243 against the newspapers. Thus, the facts presented in this matter are clearly distinguishable from the circumstances in Poe. In that case, the Supreme Court determined that a constitutional challenge to Connecticut's contraceptives regulations was not ripe because there was no evidence that state officials intended to prosecute violators. Poe, 367 U.S. at 507-08. Here, the threat of enforcement is imminent.

In addition, compliance itself will cause a significant injury. Hawaii law makes it a crime for a public official to disclose a tax return or information related to that return. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 235-116 (1995).<sup>4</sup> As noted above, however, Act 243 provides that a newspaper's tax returns and accompanying financial data shall be a public record and directs the state attorney general to submit [***11] the information in an annual report to the United States Department of Justice. Act 243 §§ 2-2(c), 2-3. As a result, any interested party, including business competitors, can gain access to information concerning the newspapers' financial status which, but for Act 243, would be confidential.

[**12] The newspapers' failure to comply with Act 243 does not affect our conclusion that there is a ripe preemption claim. In Sayles, we held that a party presented a ripe preemption claim even though it had not completed a state permit process. 985 F.2d at 453-54. In that case, the federal government granted Sayles Hydro Associates a license under the Federal Power Act to construct and operate a hydroelectric power plant. The California State Water Resources Control Board, however, would not issue a permit to Sayles allowing it to begin its operation. Instead, the state requested "a shifting, expanding range of reports and studies" regarding the project's environmental impacts. Id. at 453. Sayles refused to conduct additional studies and challenged the law on federal preemption grounds. We concluded that Sayles's preemption claim was ripe even though Sayles had not fully complied with the state requirements. Id. at 454. We held that Sayles's preemption claim was fit for judicial decision because it was a "purely legal" question. Id. We also determined that withholding judicial consideration of the state requirements would impose a sufficient hardship on Sayles because of [***13] the costs and uncertainty resulting from "undue process." Id. The hardship did not result from the state's denial of a permit. Rather, we concluded that "the hardship is the process itself." Id.

Our reasoning in Sayles applies with equal force to the circumstances present in this case. If the newspapers must comply with Act 243 before they can mount a constitutional challenge, they will have already suffered an irreparable injury from the "undue process" of having to produce the requested information and the public disclosure of their financial records.

There is no doubt that Hawaii's Attorney General will seek to enforce the requirements of Act 243 against the Hawaii Newspaper Agency. Not only will this law saddle the plaintiffs with a burden applicable solely to the Honolulu Advertiser and the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, it will also force them to reveal confidential financial information to the public. Due to the threat of imminent enforcement and the serious injury that would flow from compliance, the

<sup>4</sup> HN6 [↑] Section 235-116 provides:

All tax returns and return information required to be filed under this chapter shall be confidential, including any copy of any portion of a federal return which may be attached to a state tax return, or any information reflected in the copy of such federal return. It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer or employee of the State to make known intentionally information imparted by any income tax return or estimate made under sections 235-92, 235-94, 235-95, and 235-97 or wilfully to permit any income tax return or estimate so made or copy thereof to be seen or examined by any person other than the taxpayer or the taxpayer's authorized agent, persons duly authorized by the State in connection with their official duties, the Multistate Tax Commission or the authorized representative thereof, except as provided by law, and any offense against the foregoing provisions shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $ 500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

newspapers' only two options were to bring this action or break the law. These circumstances demonstrate that the plaintiffs' preemption claim is ripe.

[*748] III.

HN7 Under the [**14] Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, federal law is the supreme law of the land. U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. A state law is preempted when (1) Congress has expressly superseded state law, (2) Congress has regulated a field so extensively that a reasonable person would infer that Congress intended to supersede state law, and (3) when there is a conflict between federal and state laws. See Fidelity Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. de la Cuesta, 458 U.S. 141, 153, 73 L. Ed. 2d 664, 102 S. Ct. 3014 (1982). In passing the NPA, Congress did not expressly preempt state law. As we explain below, we agree with the district court that Act 243 violated the Supremacy Clause because Congress preempted the field in enacting the NPA. We review de novo a district court's application of the doctrine of preemption. Inland Empire Chapter of Associated Gen. Contractors v. Dear, 77 F.3d 296, 299 (9th Cir. 1996).

We must decide whether Congress intended to preempt any state laws regulating JOAs. Attorney General Bronster argues that "the scheme of federal regulation under the NPA is not so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for supplemental regulation." Defendant-Appellant's Opening [**15] Brief at 11. Rather, she contends that the NPA merely preempts state laws that directly remove or modify the newspapers' antitrust immunity. The newspapers' maintain that the NPA is a "complete strategy for validating newspaper joint operating agreements." Appellees' Brief at 16. Accordingly, the newspapers assert that the NPA precludes all state attempts to regulate newspapers due to their involvement in a JOA. To determine the preemptive effect, if any, of the NPA, we must look to congressional intent. Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck, 471 U.S. 202, 208, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206, 105 S. Ct. 1904 (1985).

Three factors illustrate Congress's intention to preempt any state regulation that is based on a newspaper's involvement in a JOA. First, in exempting participants to a JOA from the reach of antitrust laws, Congress adopted a comprehensive solution to the problems facing newspapers struggling to survive economically. The NPA sets forth each of the requirements that JOA participants must satisfy in order to receive antitrust immunity. 15 U.S.C. § 1803 (a)-(b). Once a JOA application satisfies the threshold requirements, "nothing more is required; nothing in the statute or its history indicates otherwise." Committee for [**16] an Independent P-I v. Smith, 549 F. Supp. 985, 994 (W.D. Wash. 1982), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 704 F.2d 467 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 892, 104 S. Ct. 236, 78 L. Ed. 2d 228 (1983). The NPA contains no temporal limitation. The NPA does not require that JOA participants disclose their financial information, or authorize the Attorney General of the United States to oversee participants' finances in order to determine whether a JOA is still necessary. The only post-formation requirement in the NPA is that parties to pre-existing JOAs must submit to the Department of Justice the terms of any agreement that would renew or amend their arrangement. 15 U.S.C. § 1803(a). The NPA's language makes clear that the nature of a newspaper's financial status following formation of a JOA is irrelevant to a JOA's antitrust immunity. The text of the NPA is simple and direct, yet pervasive. The statute's plain language leaves nothing for states to regulate. By exempting JOAs from any additional requirements that would limit a newspaper's antitrust immunity for entering into a JOA, we can infer that Congress did not intend that a state could pass laws imposing separate conditions on newspapers that receive antitrust [**17] immunity because they have entered into a JOA.

Second, Congress found that participation in JOAs without antitrust regulation was necessary to ensure that there was more than one newspaper in a community. Congress recognized that it had become nearly impossible for more than one newspaper to survive in any major market due to a variety of economic factors unique to the newspaper industry. See S. Rep. No. 535 at 4, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. (1969); Committee for an Independent P-I v. Hearst Corp., 704 F.2d 467, 473-74 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 892, 78 L. Ed. 2d 228, 104 S. Ct. 236 (1983). [*749] These unique economic conditions "necessitated allowing newspapers to enter joint agreements before they reached the point of distress required by Citizen Publishing." 704 F.2d 467 at 474. Congress chose this strategy because it had proven to be effective in the past at maintaining separate editorial voices in markets unable to support more than one paper. H.R. Rep. No. 91-1193 at 3, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 3548. A state's imposition of burdensome conditions on JOA participants, including requiring disclosure of financial records to competitors, would frustrate Congress's intent to ensure the economic [**18] survival of newspapers and guarantee the expression of conflicting views on social and political issues. Congress's comprehensive solution to the unique economic problems which threatened many newspapers' survival demonstrates that Congress intended JOAs to remain unregulated even after participating newspapers again operate profitably.

Finally, Congress further indicated an intent to preempt supplemental state regulation of JOAs by expressly enumerating the types of state laws that can be applied to JOAs. Section 1803\(c\) withholds antitrust immunity from "predatory pricing, any predatory practice, or any other conduct" that would be unlawful if committed by a "single entity." Thus, except for laws controlling these prohibited activities, a state may not enact statutes that regulate a newspaper solely because of its participation in a JOA. Given the NPA's comprehensive scheme, a reasonable person could infer that Congress intended that state regulation of JOAs be limited to the exemptions listed in section 1803\(c\).<sup>5</sup>

[**19] We hold that HN8↑ Congress has preempted the field of regulations that are based on a newspaper's involvement in a JOA. Congress has set forth all the conditions governing their formation and qualification for antitrust immunity. Both the statute's language and its legislative history indicate that Congress intended its regulation of newspapers in JOAs to be exclusive. Congress expressly reserved a field of permissible state regulation in section 1803\(c\). The NPA's language and structure precludes states from directly or indirectly regulating a newspaper's participation in a JOA unless the conduct of a newspaper comes within these specific exceptions.

We next consider whether Act 243 falls within the preempted field. HN9↑ When the federal government completely occupies a given field or an identifiable portion of it, . . . the test of preemption is whether 'the matter on which the state asserts the right to act is in anyway regulated by the Federal Act.' Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. State Energy Comm'n, 461 U.S. 190, 212-13, 75 L. Ed. 2d 752, 103 S. Ct. 1713 (1983) (quoting Rice v. Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 236, 91 L. Ed. 1447, 67 S. Ct. 1146 (1947)). In her opening brief, Attorney General Bronster characterizes Act 243 as a "supplemental [**20] regulation" to the NPA. Defendant-Appellant's Opening Brief at 11. Although Act 243 does not expressly remove or modify the newspapers' antitrust immunity, it requires the Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser to release their financial records to the public solely because they are operating under a JOA. Act 243 §§ 2-1, 2-2(a)-(c). Thus, Act 243 is unquestionably a state regulation of newspapers because they have entered into a JOA. Because Act 243 thus intrudes upon a field preempted by Congress, the Act is preempted by the NPA.

Our conclusion that the NPA preempts Act 243 is strengthened by the fact that Congress expressly considered Hawaii's primary interest in protecting the public from a JOA's harmful anticompetitive effects. See Sayles, 985 F.2d at 456 (conclusion of field preemption "strengthened" where federal government addressed and took steps to protect state interests). Although Congress knew that the NPA would affect competition, "it believed those possibly harmful effects were outweighed by other considerations and sufficiently [*750] alleviated by the requirements of the Act." Independent P-I, 704 F.2d at 482. Section 1803\(c\) reflects Congress's consideration of concerns [**21] such as those expressed in Act 243. This section's purpose was "to protect the competitive position of newspapers which share the market with a joint operating arrangement." S. Rep. No. 535 at 5, quoted in Independent P-I, 704 F.2d at 481. Having considered the NPA's potentially harmful effects, Congress made a rational policy choice in favor of "the more important objective of preserving separate editorial voices." H.R. Rep. No. 91-1193 at 4, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 3549 (quoting remarks of Rep. Matsunaga). The field preemption doctrine prevents Hawaii from interfering with this congressional policy through legislative regulation of a newspaper's involvement in a JOA.

---

<sup>5</sup> Hawaii correctly notes that the NPA does not preempt generally applicable laws that may have a negative financial impact on parties to a JOA, such as corporate taxes, utility rates, or minimum wage laws. Appellant's Opening Brief at 19. Act 243, however, is not a generally applicable law. A determination that Act 243 is preempted will have no effect on the application of general laws to the newspapers.

Attorney General Bronster argues that the district court's decision will prevent states from gathering information that can be used to lobby Congress to make changes in the NPA or remove the antitrust exemption in specific markets. Under the NPA, however, Congress does not need special state laws to assist it in discovering whether the NPA should be amended to exclude newspapers that are financially sound and no longer need antitrust immunity. Prior to the enactment of the NPA, Congress collected financial [**22] information from participants in pre-existing JOAs in part to assess their financial condition when they entered into the JOA. H.R. Rep. No. 91-1193 at 8-9, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N at 3552-53. Newspapers who now seek approval of a new JOA must submit relevant financial data to the Attorney General of the United States. If Congress desires more information, it can order the newspapers to disclose it.

Hawaii is free to request Congress to order newspapers to submit financial data to determine whether the NPA should be amended or repealed. Since Congress has preempted any attempt by a state to regulate a newspaper's participation in a JOA, Hawaii cannot impose discriminatory burdens on such newspapers for the purpose of gathering information for legislative reform by Congress.

Because field preemption alone is a sufficient basis to hold that Act 243 is invalid, we do not consider the validity of the newspapers' remaining constitutional claims.

AFFIRMED

---

End of Document

Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland GE

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

May 3, 1995, Argued, Submitted, Portland, Oregon ; December 27, 1996, Filed

No. 93-35902, No. 93-35958

Reporter

111 F.3d 1427 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 39499 **; 97 Cal. Daily Op. Service 2503; 97 Daily Journal DAR 4457

COLUMBIA STEEL CASTING CO., INC., an Oregon corporation, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. PORTLAND GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, an Oregon corporation, Defendant-Appellant. COLUMBIA STEEL CASTING CO., INC., an Oregon corporation, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. PORTLAND GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, an Oregon corporation; PUBLIC UTILITY COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF OREGON, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) As Amended on Denial of Rehearing April 3, 1997.

Prior History: Opinion Withdrawn December 27, 1996. Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Oregon. D.C. No. CV-90-00592-HJF. D.C. No. CV-90-00524-HJF. Helen J. Frye, District Judge, Presiding.

Original Opinion Previously Reported at: 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 33863.

Disposition: Partial summary judgment holding PGE liable to Columbia Steel under § 1 of the Sherman Act AFFIRMED. Partial summary judgment awarding Columbia Steel $ 508,425 in treble damages VACATED and the case is remanded. Columbia Steel's motion for attorney's fees on appeal pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15 GRANTED.

Core Terms

---

territories, Steel, customers, immunity, state-action, district court, electric, approving, facilities, allocated, plant, articulated, antitrust, damages, monopolies, Sherman Act, rates, authorize, displace, argues, foreseeability, regulation, ordinance, summary judgment, exchange of property, state policy, transferred, Parcel, antitrust immunity, foreseeable result

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN1 Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.400\(1\) defines "allocated territory" as an area with boundaries established by a contract between persons furnishing a similar utility service and approved by the commission or established by an order of the commission approving an application for the allocation of territory; § 758.410(1) permits any person providing a utility service to contract with any other person providing a similar utility service for the purpose of allocating territories and customers between the parties and designating which territories and customers are to be served by which of said contracting parties; § 758.425 authorizes the Oregon Public Utility Commission to approve the contract as filed and provides that if the commission approves the contract, it shall be deemed to be valid and enforceable; and § 758.450\(2\) provides that no other person shall offer, construct or extend utility service in or into an allocated territory.

111 F.3d 1427, *1427 (1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 39499, **1

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN2 Electric Power Industry, State Regulation

See Or. Rev. Stat. § 757.480.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

An agreement among competitors to allocate territories is a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In antitrust law, the state-action doctrine cloaks anticompetitive conduct with antitrust immunity only if the state's intent to displace competition with regulation is clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy. The appropriate test is a rigorous one that ensures that private parties can claim state-action immunity from Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1 et seq., liability only when their anticompetitive acts are truly the product of state regulation. It guarantees that the private party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests, and limits the spread of an immunity that is disfavored, much as are repeals of the antitrust laws by implication, because of Congress's overarching and fundamental policies protecting competition.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN5 Electric Power Industry, State Regulation

See Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.400\(1\).

111 F.3d 1427, *1427 (1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 39499, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In antitrust litigation, state action immunity only applies if the state actively supervises the challenged anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

HN7 Energy & Utilities, State Regulation

If the defendant in an antitrust case engages in anticompetitive conduct, presumably because of a territorial agreement, but the area in question was never approved by the Oregon Public Utility Commission, the defendant's action does not merit state action immunity because of the lack of active state supervision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The two elements in the federal test for determining whether it is a state's intent to displace competition with regulation - i.e, whether the state's policy is clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed - are both directed at ensuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN9 Regulators, Public Utility Commissions

See Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.460.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Contracts for Service

111 F.3d 1427, *1427* 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 39499, **1

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

**HN10** [blue icon] Utility Companies, Contracts for Service

Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.410 permits utilities to contract with each other for the purpose of allocating territories and customers between the parties.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Contracts for Service

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

**HN11** [blue icon] Utility Companies, Contracts for Service

See Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.425.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN12** [blue icon] State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

Actions otherwise immune from antitrust actions should not forfeit that protection merely because a state's attempted exercise of its power is imperfect in execution under its own law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Briefs

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

**HN13** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The Oregon Public Utility Commission can not confer state-action immunity by forming an intent that is not expressed forthrightly and clearly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN14** [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Mere state authorization, approval, encouragement, or participation in restrictive private conduct confers no antitrust immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN15** [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In antitrust litigation, the availability of the defense of state action immunity depends upon the satisfaction of the objective standards set forth by United States Supreme Court precedent and the authorities which have interpreted that precedent.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

**HN16** [L] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Oregon law provides that one tribunal may give preclusive effect to the prior determination of an issue by another tribunal only if the issue in the two proceedings is identical.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

**HN17** [L] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Oregon law provides that the one tribunal may give preclusive effect to an earlier decision by another tribunal only if the party sought to be precluded has had a full and fair opportunity to be heard on that issue while before the first tribunal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

**HN18** [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In antitrust litigation, state-action immunity is not an issue of fact. It cannot be decided simply by ferreting out extrinsic evidence in an effort to ascertain the subjective intent of the state. The issue of state-action immunity must be decided by applying the rigorous test of whether the state clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed its intent to displace competition with regulation as a matter of state policy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

**HN19** [L] Preclusion of Judgments, Full Faith & Credit

111 F.3d 1427, *1427* 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 39499, **1

It is fundamental that an order or judgment is not entitled to full faith and credit if the issuing tribunal had no subject matter jurisdiction over the matter before it.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN20 [blue icon] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

An appellate court may review an issue that has been raised for the first time on appeal under certain narrow circumstances, including when the issue is purely one of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A state must act if antitrust immunity is to exist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Antitrust Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

In the absence of state-action immunity, an agreement between two power companies to divide the a market for electricity constitutes a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Revival

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN23 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

111 F.3d 1427, *1427* 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 39499, **1

Even when a plaintiff alleges a continuing violation, an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN24[] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

The regulatory justification defense provides that there is no antitrust liability when a defendant reasonably concludes that its actions are necessitated by concrete factual imperatives recognized as legitimate by the regulatory authority.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN25[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

The business justification defense provides that a public utility is not liable for using high-powered transmission lines to the exclusion of competitors in order to keep rates low.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

HN26[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., does not prohibit competitors from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN27[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Applying to an administrative agency for approval of an anticompetitive contract is not lobbying activity within the meaning of federal precedent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN28 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

If a plaintiff can establish the existence of a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws and that certain defendants were a part of such a conspiracy, those defendants will be liable for the acts of all members of the conspiracy in furtherance of the conspiracy, regardless of the nature of each defendant's own actions.

Counsel: Allan M. Garten and Barbee B. Lyon, Tonkon, Torp, Galen, Marmaduke & Booth, Portland, Oregon, for Portland General Electric Company.

Michael C. Dotten, Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, Portland, Oregon, for Columbia Steel Casting Co., Inc.

Jas. J. Adams, Assistant Attorney General, Oregon Department of Justice, Salem, Oregon, for the Public Utility Commission of Oregon.

Robert B. Nicholson and David Seidman, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D. C., for the United States as amicus curiae.

Judges: Before: James R. Browning, Thomas [**2] M. Reavley, * and William A. Norris, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Norris.

Opinion by: NORRIS

Opinion

---

[*1432] OPINION

NORRIS, Circuit Judge:

TABLE OF CONTENTS

- I. Facts and Procedural History
- II. State-Action Immunity
  - A. The Midcal Clear Articulation Requirement
  - B. Issue Preclusion
- C. Foreseeability: PGE's New Argument on Appeal
- III. PGE's Other Defenses
  - A. Statute of Limitations
  - B. Justification Defenses

---

* The Honorable Thomas M. Reavley, Circuit Judge, United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, sitting by designation.

C. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

D. The Filed Rate Doctrine

IV. Damages

V. Columbia Steel's Cross-Appeal on Damages

VI. Conclusion

This appeal arises out of an antitrust action that Columbia Steel Casting Co., a large consumer of electric power in Portland, Oregon, brought against two electric utilities, Portland General Electric (PGE) and Pacific Power & Light (PP&L), charging them with dividing the city of Portland into exclusive service territories in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2.<sup>1</sup> PGE raised a state-action immunity defense on the basis of a 1972 order of the [**3] Oregon Public Utility Commission which, PGE argued, approved a division of the Portland market into exclusive service territories. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\). The district court rejected this state-action immunity defense and awarded summary judgment to Columbia Steel. PGE appeals the summary judgment in favor of Columbia Steel and the denial of its own motion for summary judgment. Columbia Steel cross-appeals the amount of its damage [*1433] award. We affirm the summary judgment in favor of Columbia Steel on PGE's antitrust liability and vacate and remand the damage award for further proceedings.

I. Facts and Procedural History

The facts are undisputed. Until 1972, PGE and PP&L competed for customers throughout Portland. This competition resulted in the duplication of transmission lines and poles, substations, and transformers throughout the city. For many years the two utilities attempted to gain regulatory approval for a division [**4] of the Portland market into exclusive service territories. In 1962, for example, PGE applied to Oregon's Public Utilities Commission (OPUC) for an allocation of an exclusive service territory in the city of Portland.<sup>2</sup> These efforts to secure exclusive service territories within Portland were unsuccessful, however, in part because of opposition from the city. Portland had a longstanding policy of encouraging competition among utilities, and the city charter provided that "no exclusive franchises shall be granted." Portland City Charter, § 10-206. See, e.g., Portland, Or., Resolution 28879 (1962) (opposing PGE's 1962 application to the OPUC for an "allocation of exclusive areas for electric service within . . . Portland").

[**5] In 1972, PGE and PP&L jointly submitted to the city of Portland a plan to eliminate competition between them by dividing the city into exclusive service territories. This plan provided, inter alia, that "subject to the necessary regulatory approvals . . . it is proposed that Parcels A & B [two defined areas within the city of Portland] be served exclusively by PP&L," and that "subject to the necessary approvals, it is proposed that Parcel C [a defined area within the city of Portland] . . . be exclusively served by PGE." CR 269, exh. 47 at 2-3.

The Portland City Council disapproved the utilities' 1972 plan to displace competition with territorial monopolies in Portland. The City Council agreed, however, that the duplication of facilities should be eliminated for aesthetic, safety, and economic reasons. In the ordinance it passed, the City Council declared, "both [PGE and PP&L] operate under non-exclusive franchises and . . . the obligation to supply properties within the City must remain binding upon both companies." Portland, Or., Ordinance 134416 (Apr. 26, 1972). The only action that the ordinance approved was "the sale, transfer and exchange of plant and property between [**6] Portland General Electric Company and Pacific Power & Light Company."<sup>3</sup> Id.

<sup>1</sup> Only PGE is a party to this appeal.

<sup>2</sup> In 1961, the Oregon legislature enacted a statute vesting in the OPUC exclusive authority to approve the creation of exclusive service territories in order to promote "the elimination and future prevention of duplication of utility facilities." Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.405. The statute authorizes the OPUC to approve contracts between competitors that divide markets into exclusive service territories. Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 758.410 - 758.425, 758.450.

<sup>3</sup> The Ordinance states, in part:

[**7] After securing the City Council's approval of the exchange of utility properties, but not the establishment of exclusive service territories, PGE and PP&L entered into an agreement, dated July 18, 1972 (the "1972 Agreement"), which they submitted to the OPUC for approval. In contrast to the plan submitted to the Portland City Council, the 1972 Agreement said nothing about exclusive service territories in Portland. The "whereas" [*1434] clauses of the 1972 Agreement recited that one of its purposes was to comply with the terms of the Portland ordinance, which had approved an exchange of plant and property, but had disapproved exclusive service territories. The 1972 Agreement recited:

WHEREAS, [PGE] and [PP&L] wish to provide for the elimination of duplicating electric facilities in [the city of Portland]; and

WHEREAS, the City of Portland, by Ordinance No. 134416, passed April 26, 1972, effective May 26, 1972, consented to the exchange by [PGE] and [PP&L] of certain properties located within the city;

NOW, THEREFORE, in order to implement the elimination of said duplicating facilities and to comply with Ordinance 134416, it is agreed . . . .

1972 Agreement [**8] at 1-2.

The 1972 Agreement used the following language to effect the exchange of facilities:

1. Exchange of Facilities

(a) [PP&L] shall transfer and convey to [PGE] and [PGE] shall acquire from [PP&L] all of the electric distribution plant, including distribution substations, poles, lines, transformers, meters, related distribution facilities, and all easements necessary for the operation thereof, owned, operated and maintained by [PP&L] in . . . the area [in Portland] designated as Parcel C . . . .

(b) [PGE] shall transfer and convey to [PP&L] and [PP&L] shall acquire from [PGE] all of the electric distribution plant, including distribution substations, poles, lines, transformers, meters, related distribution facilities, and all easements necessary for the operation thereof, owned, operated and maintained by [PGE] in the areas [in Portland] designated as Parcels A and B . . . .

1972 Agreement at 2-3.

The 1972 Agreement was approved by an order of the OPUC issued in December 1972. The 1972 Order provided, in relevant part:

The Commissioner's approval is needed prior to the sale, lease, assignment or other disposition of public [**9] utility property pursuant to ORS 757.480. . . .

On July 18, 1972, [PP&L] and [PGE] entered into an agreement whereby an exchange of property and utility facilities would be made between [PGE and PP&L] in the City of Portland . . . . This exchange . . . also involves the transfer of customers from one party to the other.

....

An Ordinance consenting to exchange of certain property within the City between [PGE] and [PP&L] on certain conditions in order to permit reduction of poles and wires and duplication of facilities in various areas of the City.

The City of Portland ordains:

Section 1. The Council finds that both [PGE] and [PP&L] operate electric power systems which serve patrons within the City, that both companies operate under non-exclusive franchises and that the obligation to supply properties within the City must remain binding upon both companies; that at the present time, however, in many areas of the City poles and wires are duplicated between the companies for service purposes . . . . ; that to reduce the visual impact of duplicating facilities, to promote safety, to promote economy, to simplify subsequent undergrounding and to work toward the lowest possible rates for users within the City, an interchange of properties between the companies should be permitted as hereinafter set forth; . . . now, therefore, the City does by this ordinance consent to the sale, transfer and exchange of plant and property between [PGE] and [PP&L] as follows . . . .

Portland, Or., Ordinance 134416 (Apr. 26, 1972) (emphasis added).

ORDERED that [PP&L] may transfer to [PGE] all electric distribution plant . . . situated within or used for providing utility service within the boundaries of Parcel A . . . [and] Parcel B . . .

ORDERED that [PGE] may transfer to [PP&L] all electric distribution plant . . . used for providing utility service within the boundaries of [Parcel C] . . .

.....
ORDERED that the manner and method of accomplishing the transfer and exchange of property, facilities and customers, and the terms and conditions governing this transfer, shall be provided by that agreement between the companies herein, dated July 18, 1972.

Pub. Util. Comm'n of Or., Order 72-970 (Dec. 15, 1972) (the "1972 Order").<sup>4</sup>

[**10] In approving the exchange of property in the city of Portland, the OPUC did not cite any of the statutory provisions that give the OPUC its authority to approve contracts between [*1435] utility companies allocating exclusive service territories. See Or. Rev. Stat., ch. 758 ("Utility . . . Territory Allocation . . .").<sup>5</sup> [**11] Unlike the Portland City Council ordinance - which had expressly disapproved exclusive service territories - but like the 1972 Agreement, the 1972 Order said nothing about exclusive service territories in Portland. The OPUC cited as authority for its approval of the 1972 Agreement Chapter 757 of the Oregon Revised Statutes ("Utility Regulation Generally"), specifically Or. Rev. Stat. § 757.480,<sup>6</sup> which gives the OPUC authority to approve the sale, lease, assignment or other disposition of public utility property.

<sup>4</sup>The only reference to customer accounts in the 1972 Agreement is in Section 7, which provides in relevant part:

7. Transfer of Customer Accounts

The transfer of customer accounts between [PGE] and [PP&L] shall commence on July 24, 1972, and shall be coordinated so that the revenues from the sales of electricity of each company will remain substantially the same over the period required to accomplish transfer of all customers involved. . . .

There is no reference to customer accounts in Section 1 of the 1972 Agreement, which provides for the exchange of facilities. In referring to the transfer of customers, Section 7 does not use the "shall transfer and convey" language used in Section 1. Thus the language and structure of the 1972 Agreement, as well as the language of the 1972 Order quoted in the text, suggest that the transfer of customers was treated as a necessary incident to the exchange of facilities. For a further discussion of the transfer of customers, see infra pp. 17-19.

<sup>5</sup> HN1↑ Chapter 758 of the Oregon Revised Statutes speaks of "allocated" territories and defines that term in a way that means exclusive service territories. Section 758.400\(1\) defines "allocated territory" as "an area with boundaries established by a contract between persons furnishing a similar utility service and approved by the commission or established by an order of the commission approving an application for the allocation of territory"). Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.400\(1\). Section 758.410\(1\) permits "any person providing a utility service [to] contract with any other person providing a similar utility service for the purpose of allocating territories and customers between the parties and designating which territories and customers are to be served by which of said contracting parties." Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.410\(1\). Section 758.425 authorizes the OPUC to approve the "contract as filed" and provides that "if the commission approves [the] contract . . . the contract shall be deemed to be valid and enforceable . . ." Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.425. Section 758.450\(2\) provides that "no other person shall offer, construct or extend utility service in or into an allocated territory." Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.450\(2\).

<sup>6</sup> Section 757.480 provides in pertinent part:

HN2↑ (1) No public utility doing business in Oregon shall, without first obtaining the commission's approval of such transaction:

(a) Sell, lease, assign or otherwise dispose of the whole of the property of such public utility necessary or useful in the performance of its duties to the public or any part thereof of a value in excess of $ 10,000, or sell, lease, assign or otherwise dispose of any franchise, permit, or right to maintain and operate such public utility or public utility property, or perform any service as a public utility;

....

After the OPUC issued its 1972 Order, PGE and PP&L stopped competing with each other in Portland. Each utility served customers exclusively in the parcels in which it had acquired the electric distribution facilities of the other.

Columbia Steel operates a steel casting plant located [**12] in the area which PGE began serving exclusively after the issuance of the 1972 Order. In 1987, Columbia Steel asked PP&L to service its plant because PP&L's rates were lower than PGE's. PP&L refused, citing the fact that the plant was located in the territory being served exclusively by PGE.

In 1989, Columbia Steel again asked PP&L to service its casting plant. This time, PP&L agreed and offered to enter into a supply contract with Columbia Steel. PGE objected, however, citing its 1972 Agreement with PP&L. PGE took the position that the 1972 Agreement gave it the exclusive right to service Columbia Steel's plant because it was located in the service territory allegedly "allocated" to PGE by the 1972 Agreement. Undeterred, Columbia Steel wrote PGE on May 30, 1990, asking it to "wheel" electricity generated by PP&L to the casting plant until PP&L could build a substation which would enable it to deliver power directly to the plant. PGE refused, reasserting that it had the exclusive right to service Columbia Steel's plant.

On June 19, 1990, Columbia Steel filed this antitrust action against PGE, PP&L, and the OPUC, on the theory that the division of Portland into exclusive service territories [**13] violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2.<sup>7</sup> The defendants raised the [*1436] state-action doctrine as an affirmative defense, contending that the division of the Portland market was cloaked with antitrust immunity by the 1972 Order of the Oregon OPUC approving the 1972 Agreement.

In July 1990, PP&L entered into a contract with Columbia Steel and began servicing the casting plant in July 1991, when PGE began transmitting PP&L's power to the plant over PGE's power line. Columbia Steel later dismissed all its claims [**14] against PP&L, which explains why PP&L is not a party to this appeal.

On July 3, 1991, the district court rejected PGE's state-action defense in an order granting Columbia Steel's motion for partial summary judgment. Pacificorp v. Portland Gen. Elec. Co., 770 F. Supp. 562 \(D. Or. 1991\). The district court held that the OPUC's 1972 Order did not articulate a state policy to allocate exclusive service territories in Portland as required by California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 \(1980\). Pacificorp, 770 F. Supp. at 569-71. As the district court interpreted the OPUC's 1972 Order, it approved a one-time exchange of property and customer accounts, but not an allocation of exclusive service territories. Id. at 570-71.

On February 4, 1993, the district court granted summary judgment for Columbia Steel on the remaining issues, ruling that PGE had violated section 1 of the Sherman Act in agreeing with PP&L not to compete in the Portland market. The court awarded Columbia Steel $ 508,425 in treble damages and $ 901,671.62 in attorneys' fees and costs.

II. State-Action Immunity

A. The Midcal Clear Articulation [**15] Requirement

HN4 [↑] The state-action doctrine cloaks anticompetitive conduct with antitrust immunity only if the state's intent to displace competition with regulation is "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy." Midcal, 445

(2) Every such sale, lease, assignment, mortgage, disposition, encumbrance, merger or consolidation made other than in accordance with the order of the commission authorizing the same is void.

Or. Rev. Stat. § 757.480.

<sup>7</sup> HN3 [↑] An agreement among competitors to allocate territories is a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. E.g., Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 \(1990\); Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 378, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\) (contracts that purported to restrict defendant's ability to wheel power "were 'in reality, territorial allocation schemes,'" and "were per se violations of the Sherman Act") (citation omitted).

U.S. at 105 (upholding state wine pricing system because "the legislative policy is forthrightly stated and clear in its purpose to permit resale price maintenance"). The Midcal test is a "rigorous" one that "ensures that private parties [can] claim state-action immunity from Sherman Act liability only when their anticompetitive acts [are] truly the product of state regulation." Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 \(1988\). It guarantees that the "private party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests," id. at 101, and limits the spread of an immunity that is "disfavored, much as are repeals [of the antitrust laws] by implication," FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 \(1992\), because of Congress's "overarching and fundamental policies" protecting competition, City of Lafayette v. I\*\*161 Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 398-99, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 \(1978\). See also Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law Par. 214e (1978).

The district court acknowledged that the provisions of chapter 758 of the Oregon Revised Statutes, which authorize the OPUC to approve contracts between public utilities allocating exclusive service territories, "articulate the policy of the State of Oregon to remove market competition as the basis for determining the customers of the providers of electricity." Pacificorp, 770 F. Supp. at 570. As the district court put it:

To the extent that a public utility provider obtains a lawful and valid contract for the allocation of territories and customers through the provisions of the territorial allocation statutes, [Or. Rev. Stat.] 758.400 to 758.475, that provider is immune from antitrust violations.

....

[Or. Rev. Stat.] 758.400(1) states that [HNS\[↑\]](#) "'allocated territory' means an area with boundaries established by a contract between persons furnishing a similar utility service and approved by the commission or established by an order of the commission approving an application for the allocation [\[\*17\]](#) of territory." In order to lawfully displace competition as the method of allocating customers for electric service in a particular area, utility companies must enter into [\[\*1437\]](#) a contract which allocates service territories and designates service to customers, and the utility companies must make application to and receive an order from the OPUC approving and establishing the allocation of these territories. These requirements must be met in order to receive the immunity which is provided by the state statutory scheme from the federal antitrust laws.

Id.

Notwithstanding the clarity with which chapter 758 expresses a legislative policy of authorizing the OPUC to approve allocations of exclusive service territories, the district court rejected PGE's state-action immunity defense because the OPUC failed to exercise that authority in issuing the 1972 Order. Id. at 571. The district court explained that the 1972 Agreement between PGE and PP&L, which the 1972 Order approved, did not establish exclusive service territories in the city of Portland. As the district court read the 1972 Agreement, PGE and PP&L had agreed "only to an exchange of facilities within the area relevant to this [\[\*18\]](#) action." Id. at 571. In other words, the state did not approve the displacement of competition with territorial monopolies in the Portland market with the clarity required by Midcal.

We agree with the district court that the 1972 Order fails to speak with sufficient clarity to satisfy the Midcal test.<sup>8</sup> Neither the 1972 Order nor the 1972 Agreement it approved says anything about exclusive service territories in the city of Portland. This omission becomes glaring when the language of the 1972 Order as it pertained to Portland is compared with the language of the same order as it pertained to the city of Rainier. Although the 1972 Order said nothing about exclusive service territories in approving the exchange of property in Portland, it expressly used such language in approving a provision of the 1972 Agreement which transferred to PGE an area within the city of Rainier that had previously been served exclusively by PP&L. See 1972 Order at 8 ("ORDERED that the application of [PP&L] to transfer certain of its exclusively served area allocated to it and lying in and around Rainier, Oregon, to [PGE] is approved.") (emphasis added). The contrast between the "transfer [**19] and exchanging of utility property and facilities and customers" language used in the 1972 Order to describe the utilities' agreement with respect to the city of Portland, 1972 Order at 8, and the "exclusively served territory" language used in the 1972 Order to describe the utilities' agreement [*1438] with respect to the Rainier area, id., is striking.

<sup>8</sup> PGE argues that the clear articulation prong of the Midcal is satisfied because Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 758.400 - 758.450 "encourage exactly the kind of division that PGE and PP&L carried out," and that whether or not the OPUC clearly authorized PGE's challenged conduct is relevant only to the active supervision prong of [Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105 HN6\[↑\]](#) (state action immunity only applies if the state actively supervises the challenged anticompetitive conduct). Resp. of Portland General Elec. Co. to Appellant's Pet. for Reh'g and Amicus Brief of United States, at 18. In making this argument, PGE relies on [Praxair, Inc. v. Florida Power & Light Co., 64 F.3d 609, 612 \(11th Cir. 1995\) HNT\[↑\]](#) ("If [the defendant engaged in anticompetitive conduct] presumably because of a territorial agreement, but the area in question was never approved by the Commission, the [defendant's] action would not merit state action immunity because of the lack of 'active state supervision.'") (quoting FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 \(1992\)), cert. denied, 116 S. Ct. 1678, 134 L. Ed. 2d 781 (1996).

[**20] Like the part of the 1972 Order relating to Rainier, the ordinance passed by the Portland City Council earlier in 1972 also referred to exclusive service territories. It did so, however, in disapproving, not approving, the elimination of competition in favor of a territorial division between PGE and PP&L. The ordinance reminded the utilities that they "operate under non-exclusive franchises and that the obligation to supply properties within the City must remain binding upon both companies." Portland, Or., Ordinance 134416 (1972).

Our second reason for agreeing with the district court is that in approving the exchange of property in Portland, the 1972 Order does not cite any of the statutory provisions governing the allocation of exclusive service territories. Rather than citing chapter 758 or any of its provisions, the OPUC cited a provision of chapter 757, the chapter governing "Utility Regulation Generally," specifically Or. Rev. Stat. § 757.480, which authorizes the approval of exchanges of utility facilities. We are struck by the precision and care with which the OPUC cited various statutory provisions in issuing the 1972 Order. As authority for approving the transfer to PGE [**21] of the exclusively served territory in Rainier previously allocated to PP&L, the OPUC cited the statutory provision governing transfers of previously allocated service territories (Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.460<sup>9</sup>). It did not cite any section of chapter 758 in approving the provisions of the 1972 Agreement relating to Portland.<sup>10</sup> As authority for approving the exchange of facilities in Portland, the OPUC cited only the statutory provision governing transfers of utility facilities (Or. Rev. Stat. § 757.480).

Praxair does not help PGE. As the Court explained in Ticor, the case on which Praxair relies, HN8↑ "Midcal's two elements . . . [are both] directed at ensuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy." Ticor, 504 U.S. at 636. Praxair is nothing more than a fact specific application of the Midcal test. The anticompetitive conduct had been authorized by a Florida Public Service Commission order approving an allocation of service territories, and the Eleventh Circuit merely held that the order was intended to include a particular county in the exclusive service territories created. See Praxair, 64 F.3d at 613. Since the Oregon statute speaks solely of authorizing the OPUC to approve exclusive service territories, the state's clearly articulated policy is to have the OPUC decide whether to sanction anticompetitive conduct. It follows, therefore, that we must look to the decisions of the OPUC to determine whether PGE's conduct was part of a clearly articulated state policy. Cf. Ticor, 504 U.S. at 636-37 (first prong of Midcal test intended to ensure state has not acted through inadvertence).

<sup>9</sup> Section 758.460 provides in relevant part:

HN9↑ (1) The rights acquired by an allocation of territory may only be assigned or transferred with the approval of the commission after a finding that such assignment or transfer is not contrary to the public interest.

Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.460.

<sup>10</sup> In particular, there is no reference in the 1972 Order to Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.410, HN10↑ which permits utilities to contract with each other "for the purpose of allocating territories and customers between the parties." Nor is there any reference to § 758.425, which gives the OPUC its authority to approve such contracts, even though an exclusive service territory can be established only HN11↑ "by a contract between persons furnishing a similar utility service and approved by the commission or . . . by an order of the commission approving an application for the allocation of territory." Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.400\(1\) (defining "allocated territory").

[**22] In sum, the OPUC did not "forthrightly state[]" a policy of the state of Oregon that was "clear in its purpose" to displace competition in the Portland market with territorial monopolies.<sup>11</sup> Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105.

The OPUC argues that, despite the failure of the 1972 Order to say anything about exclusive service territories in the city of Portland, the Order nonetheless immunized the division of the Portland market because the "statutory import" [**23] of the 1972 Order was necessarily an allocation of service territory in the City of Portland as between PGE and PP&L." Opening Brief of Pub. Util. Comm'n of Or. at 9. The OPUC asserts that the 1972 Agreement "effectively" allocated exclusive service territories because "exchanging customers is logically the only way to reallocate established service territory into exclusive zones." Id. at 9-10. The OPUC adds that "the only way that the OPUC could lawfully have approved the transfer of customers between existing utilities was under the authority of the territorial allocation statutes." Id. at 10. See also Resp. of Portland General Elec. Co. to Appellant's Pet. for Reh'g and Amicus Brief of United States, at 7 ("The allocation statutes speak of the allocation of 'territories and customers.' The 1972 Agreement and the 1972 Order explicitly allocate customers, whether they explicitly allocate [*1439] territories or not.") (citation omitted) (emphasis in original).

In response, Columbia Steel argues that nothing in the relevant statutory provisions rules out a one-time exchange of customers as an incident of an exchange of facilities without the establishment of permanent territorial [**24] monopolies. According to Columbia Steel, such a one-time exchange of customers is a practical consequence of an exchange of facilities:

When, as in this case, a utility sells the power line that distributes electricity directly to a customer, it makes sense that the account of the customer served by that line would be transferred to the new owner of the line. Thus, the transfer of customer accounts was only an incident of the transfer of utility property. It is the practical consequence of a transfer of facilities, but it is not the perpetual grant of monopoly power. As a practical matter, unless another source of electricity is available, the customer will take service from the utility that owns the facilities connected to that customer's premises. But the utility serves that customer because it is practical to do so, not because the utility has an exclusive right to serve that customer.

Pet. for Reh'g, at 13-14.

Columbia Steel's argument has considerable force. It is buttressed by the fact that PP&L was able to take a good customer away from PGE simply by building a substation in PGE's "territory" to transmit power to Columbia Steel's plant at rates that were more [**25] competitive than PGE's. Thus, although the transfer of facilities, and the transfer of customers incidental thereto, gave each utility a temporary competitive advantage, it did not immunize them from competition forevermore. That PGE's advantage proved to be transitory is not surprising given the competitive pressures that technology and deregulation have been exerting on utility markets where monopolies have traditionally reigned.

In any case, we need not resolve the dispute over whether, as the OPUC argues, an exchange of customer accounts is, as a practical matter, the factual equivalent of an allocation of exclusive service territories. Even if this were the case, it would merely be evidence that might tend to support a permissive inference that the OPUC intended to approve a displacement of competition in Portland with monopolies, and any such inference could not transform the 1972 Order into the forthright and clear statement that it takes to satisfy Midcal's stringent requirements.

PGE and the OPUC also argue that the OPUC's failure to cite any provision of chapter 758 as authority for the 1972 Order as it pertains to Portland renders the 1972 Order nothing more than an [**26] "imperfect regulation" which may still confer state-action immunity, citing Llewellyn v. Crothers, 765 F.2d 769, 774 (9th Cir. 1985) HN12 [↑]

<sup>11</sup> Columbia Steel argues that PGE and PP&L intentionally introduced ambiguity into the 1972 Agreement in order to slip a monopolistic agreement past the city of Portland. We need not address this argument because, whether or not ambiguity was introduced into the contract for the self-serving purpose of making it less politically vulnerable, the utilities' failure to include the "exclusively served" language in the 1972 Agreement that had been included in the plan submitted to the City Council certainly had the effect of creating ambiguity in the 1972 Order.

("actions otherwise immune should not forfeit that protection merely because the state's attempted exercise of its power is imperfect in execution under its own law").

PGE and the OPUC's reliance on Llewellyn is misplaced. In Llewellyn, the administrator of a state agency promulgated a fee schedule for health care providers, as he was authorized to do under state statute, but bypassed statutory rulemaking procedures. We held that although the administrator had acted in a "procedurally improper manner," the state government was nonetheless entitled to state-action immunity. Id. at 773. Llewellyn is inapposite here. There the state legislature had clearly articulated an intention to authorize the administrator to promulgate a fee schedule, and the administrator had exercised that authority in clearly articulating his intent to adopt such a fee schedule, notwithstanding that he did not follow the required rulemaking procedures of the state's Administrative Procedure Act. Id. at 772. In contrast, the OPUC did not clearly exercise [**27] its statutory authority to approve the allocation of exclusive service territories in Portland; indeed, it did not speak to the issue at all. So rather than exercising its authority "imperfectly," the OPUC failed altogether to exercise its authority to approve exclusive service territories with any clarity whatsoever.

Finally, PGE and the OPUC argue that even if the 1972 Order did not clearly authorize [*1440] an allocation of exclusive service territories within the city of Portland, later orders issued by the OPUC clarify the 1972 Order. In particular, the PGE and the OPUC rely upon a 1974 Order of the OPUC, which, they assert, confirmed that the 1972 Order did, in fact, confer state-action immunity.<sup>12</sup>

None of the OPUC orders relied on by PGE establishes state-action immunity. First, to the extent that there is language in the orders relevant to the division of the Portland market, it [**28] merely recognizes the undisputed fact that PGE and PP&L had stopped competing with each other in that city.<sup>13</sup> For instance, the 1974 Order, on which PGE relies most heavily, states that PGE and PP&L "no longer competitively serve the same areas. Their respective areas of service within Portland have been defined." Pub. Util. Comm'n of Or., Order 74-658 (Sept. 3, 1974), aff'd sub nom. American Can Co. v. Davis, 28 Ore. App. 207, 559 P.2d 898 \(1976\) (the "1974 Order"), at 25; see also Pub. Util. Comm'n of Or., Order 75-704 (Aug. 13, 1975) (noting that PP&L serves customers "in parts of Portland"). That language is merely a description of the status quo; it is not an expression of a state policy to replace competition with regulation. Although the quoted language might tend to support a permissive inference that the commissioners in 1974 thought that the commissioners in 1972 had defined exclusive service territories in Portland when they issued the 1972 Order, HN13<sup>14</sup> the OPUC can not confer state-action immunity by forming an intent that is not expressed forthrightly and clearly.

[**29] Second, the "respective areas of service" language in the 1974 Order, as well as the language in the other OPUC orders stating that PGE and PP&L had stopped competing in Portland, cannot be construed as a product of the OPUC's exercise of its statutory authority to approve contracts allocating exclusive service territories. Because there were no such contracts before the OPUC when it issued these later orders, the orders were not issued pursuant to the provisions of Or. Rev. Stat. ch. 758 authorizing approval of such contracts. The 1974 Order, for example, was issued pursuant to Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 757.205, 757.210, and 757.215, which pertain to changes in tariffs charged by utilities. The 1974 Order approved PP&L's revised tariff schedule, which equalized PP&L's rates in Portland with the higher rates it charged in other areas of the state. As a result, PP&L's rates for customers in Portland became higher than the rates charged by PGE. The "respective areas of service" language in the 1974 Order was recited merely to establish a rationale for the OPUC's action approving the new rates:

A rate differential between Portland and [other areas] was formerly justified on the basis [**30] of competing electric service in Portland between [PP&L] and [PGE]. For various reasons, it was believed that in the Portland metropolitan area rates between two similar utilities serving the same area should be the same.

<sup>12</sup> PGE also cites Pub. Util. Comm'n of Or., Orders 73-688 (Oct. 25, 1973), 75-704 (Aug. 13, 1975), and 79-055 (Jan. 12, 1979).

<sup>13</sup> As Columbia Steel puts it, "whether, as a matter of fact, the utilities competed is an entirely different inquiry from whether, as a matter of law, the utilities secured lawful allocations of exclusive service territory." Columbia Steel Reply Brief at 11.

The two companies no longer competitively serve the same areas. Their respective areas of service within Portland have been defined. Thus, with the lack of competition, the justification for rate uniformity is said to have disappeared.

1974 Order, at 25.

As a matter of law, then, neither the 1974 Order nor any of the other subsequent orders of the OPUC amend the 1972 Order to clarify that Order as an expression of state policy to displace competition with regulation. At best, these orders recite that the utilities have stopped competing with each other within territories they have defined. As our court has said, HN14<sup>14</sup> mere "state authorization, approval, encouragement, or participation in restrictive private conduct confers no antitrust immunity." Phonetel, Inc. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 664 F.2d 716, 736 (9th Cir. 1981) (quoting Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 592-93, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 [\*1441] (1976)), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1145, [\*\*31] 103 S. Ct. 785, 74 L. Ed. 2d 992 (1983).

In sum, we agree with the district court that the elimination of competition between PGE and PP&L in Portland was not cloaked with state-action immunity. As the district court put it, the OPUC did not "specifically and clearly authorize[] by the relevant statutory process" a division of the Portland market into exclusively served territories. Pacificorp, 770 F. Supp. at 571.

B. Issue Preclusion

After Columbia Steel filed this antitrust action in federal district court, PGE applied to the OPUC for a declaration that the 1972 Order allocated exclusive service territories in Portland. In response, the 1992 OPUC issued an order declaring that the 1972 OPUC had intended to do so, and amended the 1972 Order, nunc pro tunc, to that effect. In its 1992 Order, the OPUC acknowledged that "perhaps [the 1972 Order] did not unambiguously allocate exclusive service territories to PGE and PP&L." Pub. Util. Comm'n of Or., Order 92-557 (Apr. 16, 1992) (the "1992 Order"), at 14.<sup>14</sup>

[\*\*32] Armed with the OPUC's 1992 Order, PGE moved for reconsideration of the district court's summary judgment rulings in favor of Columbia Steel, arguing that the OPUC's 1992 Order was entitled to full faith and credit. The district court denied the motion, reasoning that:

HN15<sup>15</sup> the availability of the defense of state action immunity depends upon the satisfaction of the objective standards set forth in Parker v. [Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943)] and the authorities which have interpreted Parker. . . . The fact that the OPUC did not do what it now concludes that it intended to do in the 1972 Order does not alter the fact that the claim of PGE to a monopoly was not specifically and clearly authorized at the time that this court decided that Columbia Steel was entitled to a declaration that [the 1972 Order] neither empowers nor authorizes PGE to monopolize the service of electric power to Columbia Steel.

Unpublished Opinion, filed June 29, 1992, at 7-9.

<sup>14</sup> The 1992 Order states, in relevant part:

Because [the 1972 Order] did not expressly refer to ORS Chapter 758 with respect to future service in Portland under the allocation statutes and because the order did not say that exclusive territorial allocations are being created in Portland, . . . perhaps it did not unambiguously allocate exclusive service territories to PGE and PP&L. However, the order did create boundaries that the utilities observed as if they were allocated territories until Columbia Steel's attempt to switch utilities in 1989. The Commission made the required statutory findings to allocate exclusive service territories and acted as if it had approved a territorial allocation in its 1972 order. The behavior of the utilities and the Commission demonstrates an understanding that exclusive service territories had been created.

For the foregoing reasons, it appears to the Commission that [the 1972 Order] is not a complete and accurate memorial of the 1972 decision of the Commissioner . . . : the order omits a reference to the statute under which its findings were actually made when the Commissioner approve the PGE/PP&L contract. Pursuant to ORS 756.568, the Commission will amend [the 1972 Order], nunc pro tunc, to conform to the actual decision intended and followed.

We agree and hold that the 1992 Order is not entitled to preclusive effect because the issue decided by the OPUC in that order is not identical to the state-action immunity issue.<sup>15</sup> [**33] The issue decided by the [*1442] 1992 OPUC is whether the 1972 OPUC had the intent to approve the allocation of exclusive service territories in the city of Portland. The state-action immunity issue is different. It does not turn on the fact issue of the subjective intent of the OPUC at the time it issued the 1972 Order. Rather, the state-action immunity question is one of law that turns on whether the displacement of competition with monopolies in the Portland market was "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy," Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105. As the district court said, "the availability of the defense of state-action immunity depends upon the satisfaction of the objective standards set forth in Parker [and its progeny]." Unpublished Opinion, filed June 29, 1992, at 7-8. In other words, state-action immunity is a question of federal antitrust law that turns on the clarity of a state's expression of its policy, not the subjective intent of its policymakers.

[**34] In declaring what the 1972 OPUC intended to do, the 1992 OPUC approached the 1972 Order as though it were interpreting a contract. After finding ambiguity in the 1972 Order, the 1992 OPUC went on to decide, as an issue of fact, the intent of the 1972 OPUC by looking to extrinsic evidence such as the behavior of the parties between 1972 and 1990. See 1992 Order, at 12-15. To repeat, HN18<sup>16</sup> state-action immunity is not an issue of fact. It cannot be decided simply by ferreting out extrinsic evidence in an effort to ascertain the subjective intent of the state. The issue of state-action immunity must be decided by applying the "rigorous" test, Patrick, 486 U.S. at 100, of whether the state "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" its intent to displace competition with regulation as a matter of state policy. Midcal 445 U.S. at 105.<sup>16</sup>

[**35] In sum, the 1992 OPUC could not satisfy the Midcal test retroactively by amending the 1972 Order years after PGE entered into the monopolistic agreement it now seeks to cloak with federal antitrust immunity.<sup>17</sup> [**36] In other words, the state of Oregon cannot satisfy the objective Midcal clear articulation test by declaring that it had intended to displace competition with regulation 20 years earlier.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>15</sup> HN16<sup>16</sup> Oregon law provides that one tribunal may give preclusive effect to the prior determination of an issue by another tribunal only if "the issue in the two proceedings is identical." Hickey v. Settemier, 318 Ore. 196, 864 P.2d 372, 375 (Or. 1993).

HN17<sup>17</sup> Oregon law also provides that the second tribunal may give preclusive effect to an earlier decision only if "the party sought to be precluded has had a full and fair opportunity to be heard on that issue." Id. Columbia Steel argues that it was not given such an opportunity before the OPUC issued the 1992 Order. Columbia Steel denies having waived its right to a hearing on the merits, pointing to record evidence that it only agreed to postpone the submission of evidence to the OPUC until the OPUC ruled on Columbia Steel's motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction. We need not decide whether Columbia Steel was denied a fair opportunity to be heard in the proceeding before the OPUC because, as we explain in the text, the issue in that procedure is not "identical" to the issue of state-action immunity in this federal antitrust action. Id.

<sup>16</sup> For the same reason, there can be no issue preclusion based on the judgment of the Marion County Court affirming the 1992 Order on the ground that it was "supported by substantial evidence." See Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Public Util. Comm'n of Or., Marion County Circuit Court No. 92C-12005, Judgment affirming Public Utility Commission of Oregon Order Nos. 92-557 & 92-1135, at 2, aff'd without opinion, Oregon Ct. of Appeals (Dec. 15, 1993).

<sup>17</sup> HN19<sup>18</sup> It is fundamental that an order or judgment is not entitled to full faith and credit if the issuing tribunal had no subject matter jurisdiction over the matter before it. Underwriters Nat'l Assurance Co. v. North Carolina Life & Accident & Health Ins. Guar. Ass'n, 455 U.S. 691, 704-05, 71 L. Ed. 2d 558, 102 S. Ct. 1357 (1982). We do not know whether the OPUC and the Marion County Court had subject matter jurisdiction as a matter of state law to amend the 1972 Order retroactively. We believe, however, that it is questionable whether either had subject matter jurisdiction to decide the federal antitrust question of state-action immunity that is now before us. We need not decide this jurisdictional question because the lack of identity between the issue decided in the 1992 Order and the issue of state-action immunity deprives the 1992 Order of any preclusive effect in this federal antitrust action.

<sup>18</sup> PGE's reliance on California Aviation, Inc. v. City of Santa Monica, 806 F.2d 905 (9th Cir. 1986), and the cases on which it relies, for the proposition that Midcal can be satisfied retroactively is misplaced. In California Aviation, the later statute "articulated and affirmed a pre-existing state policy of allowing [particular anticompetitive conduct]." Id. at 909 (emphasis added).

C. Foreseeability: PGE's New Argument on Appeal

PGE, joined by the OPUC, argues for the first time on appeal that state-action immunity applies because the division of the Portland market was a foreseeable result of the 1972 Order. According to PGE, "state action immunity must apply where the [challenged] conduct is the 'foreseeable result' of the state's policy." Opening Brief of Appellant Portland General Elec. Co. at 23 (citing Nugget Hydroelectric Co. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 981 F.2d 429 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, [*37] 508 U.S. 908, 113 S. Ct. 2336, 124 [*1443] L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)). HN20 [↑] "We will review an issue that has been raised for the first time on appeal under certain narrow circumstances," including "when the issue is purely one of law." Parks Sch. of Business v. Symington, 51 F.3d 1480, 1488 (9th Cir. 1995). Because the foreseeability issue raised by PGE and the OPUC is a pure issue of law, and because consideration of it will not prejudice Columbia Steel, see Aronson v. Resolution Trust Corp., 38 F.3d 1110, 1114 (9th Cir. 1994), we exercise our discretion to consider it.

In our original opinion, we agreed with PGE. We held that "under [Nugget and Medic Air Corp. v. Air Ambulance Auth., 843 F.2d 1187 (9th Cir. 1988)], private conduct is immunized if it is a foreseeable result of state agency action and if circumstances justify an inference that the agency intended to authorize the conduct." Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland General Elec. Co., 60 F.3d 1390, 1396 (9th Cir. 1995), herewith withdrawn. Although we said that "the 1972 Order is not particularly clear regarding the OPUC's intention to permit a permanent division of the Portland market, as opposed to a one-time [*38] exchange of facilities and customer accounts," id. at 1396, we nonetheless "concluded that the elimination of competition between PGE and PP&L was a natural and foreseeable result of the 1972 Order," id. at 1399, "justifying the inference that it was intended by the [OPUC]." Id. Accordingly, we held that PGE's conduct enjoyed state-action immunity from Sherman Act liability.

We are persuaded by Columbia Steel's petition for rehearing and an amicus curiae brief filed by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice that we erred in allowing a foreseeability test to be substituted for the clear articulation test of Midcal. In doing so, we misconstrued Medic Air and Nugget. In Medic Air, we used Midcal's clear articulation test, not a foreseeability test, in deciding that state-action immunity shielded a monopoly granted to Air Ambulance Authority in the market of dispatching air ambulances in Washoe County, Nevada. 843 F.2d at 1189. We did use a foreseeability test in Medic Air, but only in deciding the reach of the antitrust immunity that protected Air Ambulance Authority's monopoly in the dispatching market. Specifically, we held that Air [*39] Ambulance Authority was not shielded from antitrust liability in using its immunized monopoly power to gain a competitive advantage in a different market, the market for air ambulance services. Id. We reasoned that Air Ambulance Authority's antitrust immunity in the dispatching market did not extend to the ambulance service market because anticompetitive conduct in the service market was "not a 'necessary or reasonable consequence' of the decision to establish an exclusive dispatcher." Id. (citation omitted). As we explained, "the state and its agencies have not granted Air Ambulance an exclusive [ambulance service] franchise. That they might have done so is irrelevant. HN21[↑] The state must act if immunity is to exist. . . . The Protocols [governing dispatching procedures] did not interfere with existing competition. The District Board did not seek to displace competition or limit entry into the ambulance market. The District Board did not even consider the dispatch program's effect upon competition." Id.

The anticompetitive conduct at issue in Nugget was also expressly authorized by state action independently of any foreseeability inquiry. A California statute authorized [*40] the California Public Utility Commission to "specify the prices, terms, and conditions' for the sale of power by a private power producer like Nugget to a utility." 981 F.2d at 434 (quoting statute). In exercising that statutory authority, the California PUC clearly expressed an intention to regulate such sales in detail. The California PUC's implementing Guidelines provided that private power producers would "generally bear the risk of failing to develop their power facility before the five year deadline and that only rarely will permitting delays qualify as force majeure events." Id. The Guidelines specified that a utility was "expected . . . [to] negotiate [force majeure claims] only in instances where it is convinced that a settlement, versus adjudication, is in the ratepayers' best interest." Id. (quoting Guidelines). We held in Nugget that state-action immunity extended to the anticompetitive effects of a utility's rejection of a private power supplier's force majeur

---

In contrast, there was no pre-existing state policy to eliminate competition in the Portland market for the OPUC to articulate or affirm in its 1992 Order.

claim for an extension of [*1444] the contract period because the anticompetitive effects were a foreseeable result of the California PUC's implementing Guidelines. Id.

Our rejection of [**41] PGE's argument that it is entitled to state-action immunity because the division of the Portland market was a foreseeable result of the 1972 Order is consistent with Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985), upon which we relied in Nugget. The issue in Town of Hallie was whether the city's anticompetitive activities were protected by state-action immunity "when the activities are authorized, but not compelled, by the State." Id. at 36 (emphasis added). The Supreme Court held that the challenged action of the city was protected by the state-action immunity doctrine because the city's conduct was "a foreseeable result of empowering the City to refuse to serve unannexed areas." Id. at 42. However, the Court held that this result was foreseeable because the state expressly authorized the city's anticompetitive behavior. See id. In contrast, the OPUC did not expressly authorize PGE to maintain an exclusive service territory; it merely approved the exchange of property and customers.

In sum, neither Medic Air nor Nugget applies a foreseeability test as a substitute for the threshold Midcal clear articulation [**42] test. As the Antitrust Division puts it, "express authorization [is] the necessary predicate for the Supreme Court's foreseeability test." Brief of Amicus Curiae United States, at 9. PGE cites no case to the contrary and we know of none.

III. PGE's Other Defenses

HN22[] In the absence of state-action immunity, an agreement between PGE and PP&L to divide the Portland market for electricity constitutes a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 (1990) (agreement among competitors to allocate territories to diminish competition is a per se § 1 violation). There is no genuine issue of material fact regarding the existence of such an agreement that would prevent the entry of summary judgment against PGE on liability. See Abdul-Jabbar v. General Motors Corp., 85 F.3d 407, 410 (9th Cir. 1996). We therefore address PGE's affirmative defenses other than state-action immunity. Although the district court found only one of these defenses worthy of discussion, we discuss each of them in turn.

A. Statute of Limitations

PGE argues that Columbia Steel's antitrust action, which was filed [**43] on June 19, 1990, is time-barred because it was filed four years after any overt act in furtherance of PGE and PP&L's agreement to divide the Portland market. See 15 U.S.C. § 15(b) (establishing 4-year limitations period for Sherman Act violations); Pace Indus., Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 237 (9th Cir. 1987) HN23[] ("even when a plaintiff alleges a continuing violation, an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act"). PGE argues that the acts relied upon by the district court in finding Columbia Steel's antitrust claims timely were insufficient to restart the running of the statute because they were merely "reaffirmations" of the original 1972 Agreement to divide the Portland market. See id. at 238.

On May 30, 1990, Columbia Steel wrote to PGE and stated that it would terminate its contract with PGE and take power from PP&L as of July 1, 1990, if PGE would agree to wheel power for PP&L so it could serve Columbia Steel's casting plant. PGE said no, declaring in a letter dated May 30, 1990, that "[Columbia Steel] is within PGE's exclusive territory. If it desires to purchase electricity, [**44] it must do so from PGE." The district court held that PGE's refusal to wheel PP&L's electricity to Columbia Steel's casting plant was an overt act that restarted the statute of limitations.

We agree with the district court. PGE's refusal was not a mere reaffirmation of PGE and PP&L's 1972 Agreement to stop competing in the Portland market because the 1972 Agreement was not a permanent and final decision that controlled the later act. [*1445] See Hennegan v. Pacifico Creative Serv., Inc., 787 F.2d 1299, 1300-01 (9th Cir.) (limitations period restarted each time tour guides shepherded tourists away from plaintiff's souvenir shop in furtherance of antitrust conspiracy between tour operators and other vendors) (quoting and distinguishing In re Multidistrict Vehicle Air Pollution, 591 F.2d 68, 72 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 900, 100 S. Ct. 210, 62 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1979), in which later acts were mere affirmations of earlier "irrevocable, immutable, permanent and final" decisions" that "completely and permanently excluded [plaintiff] from the market"), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 886, 107 S. Ct. 279, 93 L. Ed. 2d 254 (1986).<sup>19</sup> Hennegan also distinguishes David Orgell, Inc. v. Geary's Stores, Inc., 640 F.2d 936 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 816, 102 S. Ct. 92, 70 L. Ed. 2d 84 (1981), the only Ninth Circuit case other than Multidistrict Air Pollution that is cited by PGE on the statute of limitations issue, on the same ground. Hennegan, 787 F.2d at 1301-02.

B. Justification defenses

PGE asserts that the 1972 Order required it to stop competing with PP&L in the city of Portland, and that "had PGE failed to conform to the commands of the OPUC . . . it could" have subjected itself to treble damages for violation of Oregon utility law." Opening Brief of Appellant Portland Gen. Elec. Co., at 29. PGE argues that as a result it is entitled to raise HN24[<sup>19</sup>] a regulatory justification defense, see Phonetel, Inc. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 664 F.2d 716, 737-38 (9th Cir. 1981) (no antitrust liability when defendant reasonably concludes that its actions are necessitated by concrete factual imperatives recognized as legitimate by the regulatory authority), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1145, 74 L. Ed. 2d 992, 103 S. Ct. 785 (1983), and HN25[<sup>19</sup>] a business justification defense, see, e.g., City of Anaheim v. Southern Cal. Edison, 955 F.2d 1373, 1381 (9th Cir. 1992) (utility not liable for using high-powered transmission line to the exclusion of competitors in order to keep rates low).

These justification defenses are not available to PGE. When it stopped competing with PP&L in Portland after the 1972 Order issued, it was under no compulsion to do so because the 1972 Order did not approve the allocation of exclusive service territories. Had the 1972 Order done so, a justification defense would arguably have been available to PGE because the Oregon statutes \*\*47 provide that only the utility that has been allocated a territory may serve that territory. See Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.450(2) ("Except [under circumstances not relevant here], no other person shall offer, construct or extend utility service in or into an allocated territory."). In light of this provision, it is significant that in approving an exchange of facilities, the 1972 Order used permissive language. See 1972 Order at 8-9 ("ORDERED that [PP&L] may transfer to [PGE] all electric distribution plant . . . that [PGE] may transfer to [PP&L] all electric distribution plant . . . that the manner and method for accomplishing the transfer and exchange of property . . . and the terms and conditions governing this transfer, shall be as provided by [the 1972 Agreement]"') (emphasis added). Because the language of the 1972 Order was permissive, it did not require PGE and PP&L to perform the 1972 Agreement and did not prevent them from rescinding it before the property was exchanged. Given the statutory prohibition against serving a territory allocated to another utility, see Or. Rev. Stat. § 758.450(2), the permissive language in the 1972 Order would have \*\*48 been incongruous if the 1972 Order had approved an allocation of exclusive service territories.

C. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

PGE argues that it is entitled to antitrust immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136, 5 L. Ed. 2d [\[\*1446\]](#) 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961) HN26[<sup>19</sup>] (the Sherman Act does not prohibit competitors from "associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly"); United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). The Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which is rooted in the First Amendment protection of political activity, see Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 707, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962), does not apply here. HN27[<sup>19</sup>] Applying to an administrative agency for approval of an anticompetitive contract is not lobbying activity within the meaning of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. In any case, PGE is not being held liable for filing the application that resulted in the 1972 [**49] Order. PGE is being held liable for agreeing with PP&L to replace competition with area monopolies in the Portland market.

---

<sup>19</sup> Columbia Steel also argues that the refusal in 1987 of PGE's coconspirator PP&L to service the steel casting plant over the objection of PGE was also an overt act that restarted the statute of limitations. We need not consider the significance of the events in 1987 to the statute of limitations question because we hold that the statutory period was restarted in 1990. The 1987 events are, however, relevant to Columbia Steel's cross-appeal regarding damages, which we address in Part V, infra.

D. The Filed Rate Doctrine

PGE argues that the filed rate doctrine bars Columbia Steel from recovering damages even if PGE did violate the Sherman Act. The filed rate doctrine generally forbids the recovery of treble damages under the Sherman Act based on the payment of rates that are established by regulated tariffs, even if the defendants engaged in illegal price-fixing. See, e.g., *Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry.*, 260 U.S. 156, 162, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 \(1922\). According to PGE, the filed rate doctrine applies in this case as follows: (1) Because PGE could charge only the rates approved by the OPUC, it could not charge the same rate offered by PP&L to Columbia Steel; (2) PGE could not "transfer" its customer Columbia Steel to PP&L without OPUC approval; (3) thus, the district court could not award damages based on the difference between the rate charged by PGE and the "rate that might have been approved absent the conduct at issue." Opening Brief of Appellant Portland General Electric Co. at 32.

We reject PGE's reasoning. The conduct challenged [**50] in this case is not PGE's refusal to sell electricity to Columbia Steel at a lower rate. Rather, the challenged conduct is the non-competition agreement that prevented Columbia Steel from buying electricity at PP&L's lower rates. The filed rate doctrine is inapplicable. To hold that it is applicable would be to "allow a blockade of a competitor to escape scrutiny. This would overextend Keogh's reach and could produce a rule that one who pays for services governed by [a regulatory body's] tariffs is foreclosed from asserting that antitrust violations prevented use of a less expensive, equivalent service." *In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig.*, 998 F.2d 1144, 1159 \(3d Cir. 1993\).

IV. Damages

PGE argues that Columbia Steel suffered no damages at any time because (1) at all relevant times, Columbia Steel was obligated on its requirements contract with PGE to purchase electricity from PGE, and (2) PGE could not transfer Columbia Steel as a customer to PP&L without prior OPUC approval. These arguments are to no avail. First, Columbia Steel's requirements contract with PGE did not bar it from suing PGE under the Sherman Act for agreeing with PP&L to stop competing in [**51] the Portland market. See, e.g. *Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp.*, 392 U.S. 134, 139-40, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 \(1968\) (franchise agreement does not defeat franchisee's standing to bring antitrust suit against franchisor); Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 377 F.2d 776, 781 (3d Cir. 1967) ("captive customer" having valid lease agreement with defendant for use of certain equipment could nonetheless sue for antitrust violation based on defendant's refusal to sell the equipment), aff'd on other grounds, *392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\)*.

As for PGE's second argument, the only authority it cites is the 1972 Order stating that "there can be no question that the Commissioner has regulatory approval over any such transfers or exchanges of customers," 1972 Order at 6. However, when read in context, this statement refers only to the joint application by PGE and PP&L for the transfer of tens of thousands of customers without the customers' permission. It has [*1447] no application, therefore, to Columbia Steel's request to be transferred, as a customer, from PGE to PP&L. In the absence of any further analysis or authority [**52] for PGE's argument that OPUC approval was necessary for Columbia Steel to become a customer of PP&L, we cannot hold that it has any merit.

V. Columbia Steel's Cross-Appeal on Damages

Columbia Steel argued to the district court, and now argues on its cross-appeal, that it was entitled to damages beginning with PP&L's refusal in 1987 to sell Columbia Steel power at its lower rates. The district court rejected this argument, stating that "Columbia Steel cannot recover damages from PGE for actions taken or not taken by PP&L. Even where officials of PP&L contacted officials of PGE and discussed the request for service, the refusal of service was an act by PP&L and not an act by PGE." Unpublished Opinion, filed Feb. 5, 1993, at 24. The district court therefore limited recovery of damages to the period from July 1990, when Columbia Steel entered into a contract with PP&L and was thus "willing and able to actually purchase power at a lower rate from PP&L," and July 1991, when PGE began wheeling PP&L's power to Columbia Steel over PGE's transmission lines. Id. at 25.

We agree with Columbia Steel that the district court erred in not awarding damages beginning in 1987. The district court [**53] mistakenly held that PGE could not be liable for PP&L's refusal to sell power to Columbia Steel in 1987. PP&L was a coconspirator in 1987, and PGE is liable for the acts of PP&L in furtherance of their conspiracy not to compete in Portland. See Beltz Travel Serv., Inc. v. International Air Transport Ass'n, 620 F.2d 1360, 1367 (9th Cir. 1980) HN28<sup>1</sup> ("If [plaintiff] can establish the existence of a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws and that [defendants] were a part of such a conspiracy, [defendants] will be liable for the acts of all members of the conspiracy in furtherance of the conspiracy, regardless of the nature of [defendants'] own actions.").

VI. Conclusion

The partial summary judgment holding PGE liable to Columbia Steel under § 1 of the Sherman Act is AFFIRMED. The partial summary judgment awarding Columbia Steel $ 508,425 in treble damages is VACATED and the case is remanded to the district court for a redetermination of Columbia Steel's damages in accordance with this opinion. Columbia Steel's motion for attorney's fees on appeal pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15 is GRANTED. The amount of the fees shall be determined by the district court.

ORDER

*The opinion [**54] filed on December 27, 1996 is amended as follows:*

Add to the end of footnote 8 at slip op. at 16278 the following two sentences:

*Since the Oregon statute speaks solely of authorizing the OPUC to approve exclusive service territories, the state's clearly articulated policy is to have the OPUC decide whether to sanction anticompetitive conduct. It follows, therefore, that we must look to the decisions of the OPUC to determine whether PGE's conduct was part of a clearly articulated state policy. Cf. Ticor, 504 U.S. at 636-37 (first prong of Midcal test intended to ensure state has not acted through inadvertence).*

Replace the first full paragraph at slip op. at 16298 with the following paragraph:

As for PGE's second argument, the only authority it cites is the 1972 Order stating that "there can be no question that the Commissioner has regulatory approval over any such transfers or exchanges of customers," 1972 Order at 6. However, when read in context, this statement refers only to the joint application by PGE and PP&L for the transfer of tens of thousands of customers without the customers' permission. It has no application, therefore, to [**55] Columbia Steel's request to be transferred, as a customer, from PGE to PP&L. In the absence of any further analysis or authority for PGE's argument that OPUC approval was necessary for Columbia Steel to become a customer of PP&L, we cannot hold that it has any merit.

With the above amendments, the panel, as constituted above, has voted unanimously to deny the petition for rehearing. Judge Browning has voted to reject the suggestion for a rehearing en banc, and Judges Reavley and Norris have recommended the same.

The full court has been advised of the suggestion for en banc rehearing and no judge of the court has requested a vote on the suggestion for rehearing en banc. Fed. R. App. P. 35(b).

The petition for rehearing is DENIED, and the suggestion for a rehearing en banc is REJECTED.

---

End of Document

Wisconsin v. Kenosha Hosp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin

December 31, 1996, Decided ; December 31, 1996, FILED

Civil Action No. 96-C-1459

Reporter

1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20215 *; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,669

STATE OF WISCONSIN, Plaintiff, v. KENOSHA HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL CENTER and ST. CATHERINE'S HOSPITAL, INC., Defendants.

Core Terms

---

health-care, provider, health plan, Subparagraph, patients, savings, target, privileges, contracts, purchasers, exclusive contract, compliance, terms, medical-staff, modification, Antitrust, consumers, terminate, entity, staff, reimburse, annual, notice, base year, five year, membership, referrals, ancillary services, provide a service, specialties

Counsel: [*1] For WISCONSIN, STATE OF, plaintiff: James E. Doyle, Jr., Kevin J. O'Connor, Wisconsin Department of Justice, Office of the Attorney General, Madison, WI.

Judges: Joseph Stadtmueller, Chief United States District Judge

Opinion by: Joseph Stadtmueller

Opinion

---

FINAL JUDGMENT

WHEREAS the State of Wisconsin filed a Complaint in this matter on December 30, 1996, as a direct purchaser of inpatient acute-care hospital services in Kenosha and surrounding counties and as parens patriae to protect its general economy, pursuant to section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18;

WHEREAS Kenosha Hospital and Medical Center ("KHMC"), St. Catherine's Hospital ("SCH"), and Dominican Healthcare, Inc., entered into an Alliance Agreement on December 1, 1995, by which they agreed to form Siena Healthcare System, Inc. ("Siena"), to manage and operate KHMC and SCH as an integrated community health-care delivery system in the southeast Wisconsin and northeast Illinois area;

WHEREAS Siena is expected to generate total cost savings of at least $ 43.7 million over the five-year period following its implementation, consisting of approximately $ 24 million in capital and duplicative-services avoidance and approximately [*2] $ 19.7 million in operational savings, to improve the quality of health care for area residents, and to increase access to health-care services for residents of Kenosha and surrounding counties, including the indigent and the otherwise underserved;

WHEREAS the Office of Attorney General of the State of Wisconsin ("Attorney General") is responsible for enforcement of the federal antitrust laws and is authorized to bring suit on behalf of the State as a direct purchaser of inpatient acute-care hospital services and as parens patriae to protect its general economy;

WHEREAS KHMC and SCH have cooperated fully with the Attorney General's investigation of the proposed consolidation;

WHEREAS the Attorney General has concluded its investigation of the proposed consolidation of the two hospitals and believes that, without this Final Judgment, the consolidation could raise competitive concern under the federal antitrust laws;

WHEREAS KHMC and SCH desire to assure the Attorney General and the community that they intend to operate Siena in accordance with the Siena mission and to continue the hospitals' traditional commitment of providing high-quality, affordable health care to the community;

[*3] WHEREAS KHMC and SCH, desiring to resolve the Attorney General's concerns without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law, and before the taking of any testimony, have consented to entry of this Final Judgment; and

WHEREAS this Final Judgment is not an admission, or probative, of liability by KHMC, SCH, or Siena as to any issue of fact or law and may not be offered or received into evidence in any action, or otherwise be construed or interpreted, as an admission, or as being probative, of liability; it is hereby ordered:

I. JURISDICTION

1. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action and each of the parties consenting to this Final Judgment. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants under section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18.

II. DEFINITIONS

As used in this Final Judgment:

2. "Kenosha Hospital and Medical Center, Inc." ("KHMC") means the nonstock, nonprofit, tax-exempt corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin that operates a hospital with the same name at 6308 Eighth Avenue, Kenosha, Wisconsin 53143; and any entities operated or controlled by KHMC that provide services [*4] provided by KHMC at the time of entry of this Final Judgment.

3. "St. Catherine's Hospital, Inc." ("SCH") means the nonstock, nonprofit, tax-exempt corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin that operates a hospital with the same name at 3556 Seventh Avenue, Kenosha, Wisconsin 53140. For purposes of this Final Judgment, "SCH" includes its sponsor, Dominican Health Care, Inc., and all entities operated or controlled by SCH that provide services provided by SCH at the time of entry of this Final Judgment.

4. "Siena" means the nonprofit, nonstock corporation that KHMC and SCH will create pursuant to their December 1, 1995 Alliance Agreement, and includes all physicians and other health-care providers employed, or whose business operations are controlled, by Siena. All provisions in this Final Judgment that apply to Siena also shall apply to KHMC and SCH.

5. "Member hospital" means KHMC or SCH.

6. "Ancillary services" means home-health services and durable medical equipment.

7. "Health plan" means all types of organized, health-service purchasing programs, including, but not limited to, networks or managed-care plans offered by third-party payers or providers, [*5] that purchase hospital and other health-care services.

8. "Health-care provider" means physicians, hospitals, laboratories, physician networks, and ancillary health-care providers.

9. "Acquire" means to purchase the whole or the majority of the assets, stock, equity, capital, or other interest in a corporation or other business entity, or to obtain the right or ability to designate the majority of directors or trustees or otherwise control the management of a corporation or other business entity.

10. "Kenosha and surrounding counties" means Kenosha, Racine, and Lake Counties.

11. "Attorney General" means the Criminal Litigation and Antitrust Unit of the Wisconsin Office of Attorney General.

III. TERMS

12. Anticipated Savings and Price Reductions

KHMC and SCH intend to merge and consolidate services into Siena, increase efficiency, and reduce the cost of delivering health-care services so that the cost to the community of those services will be lower than they would have been absent the Siena alliance.

12.1 As set forth in Exhibit 1, Siena shall achieve in 1996 constant dollars at least $ 43.7 million in savings by the end of five years after closing. Siena shall pass [*6] on the operational savings and the capital-avoidance savings (as reflected by unincurred depreciation expense), shown on Exhibit 1 to consumers or other purchasers of health-care services by one or more of the following means: (a) providing low-cost or no-cost health-care programs for the community not already provided by KHMC or SCH, (b) expanding low-cost or no-cost health-care services for the community already provided by KHMC or SCH, (c) reducing prices or limiting actual price increases for existing services affecting Siena's case-mix adjusted net patient revenue per equivalent admission ("Revenue") so that the increase in Revenue is less than the increase in the Consumer Price Index for Hospital and Related Services, or (d) other methods agreed upon by Siena and the Attorney General. Prior to passing on to consumers or purchasers savings in the form of low-cost or no-cost health-care services, Siena shall provide its proposals for doing so to the Attorney General in writing, and the Attorney General shall be deemed to have approved the proposals unless it objects to specific proposals, providing its reasons to Siena in writing, within ten business days after receiving Siena's [*7] proposals.

12.2 A schedule setting forth the savings of at least $ 43.7 million over the five-year period following implementation of Siena, including $ 24 million in capital and duplicative-services avoidance, $ 19.7 million in operational savings, and the required pass through of operational and capital-avoidance savings to consumers or customers, is attached to this Final Judgment as Exhibit 1.

12.3 Each year, as part of the report required by Subparagraph 21.1, Siena will prepare and submit to the Attorney General a report monitoring its duty to avoid $ 24 million in capital and duplicative-services expenditures listed in its efficiencies report.

12.4 If Siena fails to generate and pass on to purchasers or consumers the annual operational-savings target amounts in any year of the five-year period, the shortfall amount shall be carried forward into subsequent years until the required operational-savings target amount has been generated and passed on by Siena. If Siena exceeds the annual targeted operational-savings and pass-through amount of operational savings to purchasers or consumers in any given year, the excess amount shall be credited toward Siena's target for the next [*8] fiscal year.

12.5 If, by the end of five years after closing, Siena has not avoided $ 24 million in capital and duplicative-services costs and generated $ 19.7 million in operational savings as shown on Exhibit 1, Siena shall pay in cash an amount equal to $ 43.7 million less the amount of capital and duplicated services avoided and operational savings generated into an Indigent Care Fund established by Siena, but under the supervision of the Attorney General. The Indigent Care Fund shall be used for programs provided by Siena and approved by the Attorney General to meet the health-care needs of the indigent or underserved population of Kenosha and surrounding counties after consultation between Siena and the Attorney General about such programs. Such programs may include, but not necessarily be limited to, preventive health-care services, child immunizations, mammograms, prenatal care, and alcohol and drug-abuse treatment programs. If Siena has not achieved $ 43.7 million in savings by five years after closing, Siena shall have an opportunity to demonstrate, to the satisfaction of the Attorney General, that unforeseeable circumstances beyond its control prevented achievement of the [*9] savings, and the Attorney General may reduce accordingly the cash payment set forth in this subparagraph.

12.6 As methods for ensuring and documenting the operational savings and the passing on of the target savings to consumers and purchasers:

12.6(a) Siena's Revenue for patients treated during each of the five years after entry of this Final Judgment shall not exceed the combined hospital Revenue of the member hospitals for calendar year 1996 (the "base year"). To the extent the Revenue for a given year is less than the base year Revenue, the difference shall be counted toward the annual pass-through targets as shown in Exhibit 1. To the extent the Revenue for a given year is greater than the base year, Siena shall reimburse the excess by lowering its rates in the next fiscal year by a sufficient amount to repay the excess Revenue. If, at the end of five years Siena has not met the cumulative pass through targets, Siena shall lower its rates to the extent necessary to pass through the amount of the unmet target.

12.6(b) Siena's case-mix adjusted net patient operating expense per equivalent admission ("Expense") for patients treated during each year of the five years after entry [*10] of this Final Judgment shall not exceed the combined hospital Expense of the member hospitals for the base year. To the extent the Expense for a given year exceeds that of the base year, the excess amount shall be added to the next-year's annual operational savings target. Siena may instead reimburse the excess by lowering its patient rates in the next year by a sufficient amount to meet its prior year's unmet Expense target. The Attorney General may exempt Siena from adding the excess to future targets or from reimbursing the excess for good cause shown by Siena. If all or part of the excess was caused by the provision of low-cost or no-cost-services to the community, that amount shall be credited toward the operational savings target. To the extent the Expense for a given year is less than that of the base year, the difference shall be counted toward the operating savings targets as shown in Exhibit 1.

12.6(c) In determining compliance with Subparagraphs 12.6(a) and (b), base year Revenue and Expense shall be adjusted (up or down) for changes in the Consumer Price Index for Hospital and Related Services.

Siena shall describe its compliance with Subparagraph 12.6 in its annual report [*11] described in Subparagraph 21.1. Siena shall provide the Attorney General with information reasonably needed and requested by the Attorney General to monitor its compliance with this Subparagraph.

12.7 Subparagraphs 12.4 through 12.6 shall apply only during those fiscal years during which the State of Wisconsin or the federal government does not substantially regulate hospital rates.

13. Nondiscrimination in Contracting With Managed Care and Related Health Care Facilities

13.1 Siena shall not enter into any contract with any health plan that prohibits it from providing services to any other health plan.

13.2 Siena shall not restrict the ability of any physician not employed by it, or with which it does not have an exclusive contract as permitted by Subparagraphs 14.2 and 14.3, to provide services or procedures at locations other than Siena. This provision, however, shall not prohibit Siena from taking reasonable action necessary to ensure that such physician adequately covers his or her practice and patients at Siena.

13.3 Siena shall not restrict the ability of any physician not employed by it, or with which it has no exclusive contract as permitted by Subparagraphs 14.2 and [*12] 14.3, to participate in any health plan of his or her choice. Any health plan or network in which Siena has ownership or membership may engage in good-faith selective contracting with physicians and not enter into provider contracts with all providers desiring to contract with it.

14. Competitive Access to Siena Facilities

14.1 Except as provided in Subparagraphs 14.2 and 14.3, Siena shall not enter into any exclusive contract with any health-care provider by which, with respect to physicians not employed by it, it requires that provider to render services only or primarily at a member hospital, or by which, including physicians employed by it, it permits only one physician or group of physicians to be the sole or primary provider of particular services at a member hospital.

14.2 Siena may honor those exclusive contracts into which either KHMC or SCH had entered as of December 8, 1995, the date Siena was announced. It may not renew or expand those contracts after the nominal termination date of those contracts, regardless of any automatic renewal, "roll over," or "evergreen" provision unless they comply with Subparagraph 14.3. Siena may require physicians employed by it to provide [*13] services only at member hospitals.

14.3 Siena may enter into exclusive contracts for hospital-based services with anesthesiologists, radiologists, radiation oncologists, cardiologists using Siena's cardiac diagnostic and cardiac catheterization labs, pathologists, nephrologists providing renal-dialysis services at Siena, and emergency-medicine physicians if it seeks competitive bids for the contract at least once every three years and the bidding specifications require that the exclusive contractor not refuse unreasonably to participate in any health plans that have provider contracts with Siena. All exclusive contracts in effect at the time this Final Judgment is entered will be re-bid not later than March 31, 1997.

14.4 The Siena Board of Directors shall provide for an open medical staff, ensuring access to all highly qualified physicians. In determining clinical privileges, Siena shall not discriminate against any applicant for medical staff privileges based on that applicant's status as an employee or affiliate of a Siena competitor, although Siena may take reasonable steps to ensure that such applicants do not have access to competitively sensitive Siena information. In determining [*14] medical-staff membership and clinical privileges, Siena may enter into exclusive contracts to the extent permitted by Subparagraph 14.3, and may consider factors relating to the level of health-care quality provided at its facilities, apply its medical-staff bylaws, comply with all requirements of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations necessary for accreditation, and apply the privilege categories set forth in Exhibit 2. The Siena medical-staff bylaws shall be substantially similar to those in effect at KHMC at the time this Final Judgment is entered, and shall be consistent with this Final Judgment both initially and in any changes made during the duration of this Final Judgment, and shall not be substantially changed without the prior approval of the Attorney General. Siena shall provide copies of its medical-staff bylaws, together with all written form materials provided to physicians relating to its staff credentialing process (e.g., application forms, policies, instructions, and criteria) to the Attorney General with each Annual Report required by Subparagraph 21.1 and whenever any of them are amended.

14.5 All physicians with medical staff membership [*15] at KHMC or SCH, and all physicians with applications pending for medical staff membership who meet current credentialing requirements, shall have medical staff membership at Siena, provided that all subsequent decisions concerning privileges or corrective action shall be consistent with the Siena medical-staff bylaws in effect at the time of any such renewal or corrective action. Siena shall not deny any physician access to its medical-staff application process. Siena shall not reject the application for, terminate, suspend, or limit the staff privileges of any physician based on his or her lack of qualifications or for any quality-of-care concern without first providing the physician with due process pursuant to the medical-staff bylaws, including, without limitation, a statement of the reasons for its action and an appeal to the Siena Board of Directors. Siena shall make a final decision on each application for staff privileges within 90 days of its receiving all information necessary for making that decision. Pending applications and those that were pending on November 30, 1995, shall be decided within 60 days after entry of this Final Judgment. This subparagraph shall not apply [*16] to any application for privileges to render services for which Siena has an exclusive contract as permitted by Subparagraphs 14.2 and 14.3.

14.6 Siena shall negotiate in good faith with all health plans serving or that plan to serve Kenosha and surrounding counties that approach it in good faith seeking a provider contract, and shall attempt, in good faith, to contract with all such health plans that offer competitively reasonable terms. Siena shall not refuse to contract with any health plan solely because it proposes or uses a capitation or other risk-bearing or risk-shifting reimbursement methodology. This subparagraph, however, does not require Siena to contract with any particular health plan or with all health plans. Should KHMC or SCH move any services from one hospital to the other, Siena shall provide that service to any health plan that had a provider contract with either KHMC or SCH as of December 8, 1995, pursuant to the terms of that provider contract.

14.7 Siena shall not enter into provider contracts with any health plan in which it has an ownership (or membership, if a nonprofit entity) interest on terms significantly more favorable to it and which it receives because [*17] of Siena's financial interest if those terms would place other health plans at a significant competitive disadvantage and the favorable terms granted Siena's plan cannot be justified because of efficiencies resulting from economic integration between Siena and that plan.

14.8 Siena will not use employment, the location of a physician or group practice, or the location where patients will receive any necessary follow-up care to determine referrals from the member hospitals' emergency rooms. Siena may consider quality of care in determining referrals. Siena shall provide the referral policy used to inform unassigned patients of the availability of follow-up care to the Attorney General within 30 days from entry of this Final Judgment or at such time as Siena adopts such a policy. Should the Attorney General object to the policy, it and Siena shall attempt to reach a mutually satisfactory solution. This subparagraph shall not preclude any health plan operated by Siena from limiting referrals to providers with provider contracts with that plan.

14.9 Except with regard to exclusive contractors permitted by Subparagraphs 14.2 and 14.3 and physicians employed by Siena, if Siena controls [*18] or operates a health plan, it shall not base medical-staff appointment and privileging decisions or other decisions affecting a physician's access to, or working conditions at, Siena on whether that physician enters into a provider contract with either Siena's plan or with a competing health plan, or on whether the physician is employed by or has staff privileges at a competing hospital or health system.

14.10 Siena shall not condition the sale of hospital services provided by it to any purchaser on the purchaser's agreeing with Siena to (a) purchase other services from Siena or its employed physicians (unless those services are provided by physicians with whom Siena has an exclusive contract as permitted by Subparagraphs 14.2 and 14.3), or (b) deal with any health plan operated by Siena. Siena shall not reduce its rates for hospital services to purchasers on the condition that they purchase other services from Siena, from physicians employed by Siena, or from KHSC if, because of the differential in rates, the purchasers' only viable economic option is to purchase other services from Siena, its employed physicians, or KHSC.

14.11(a) Siena shall not enter into any agreement or understanding [*19] with any physician by which that physician refuses to refer patients to, accept patient referrals or transfers from, provide back-up and specialty coverage for, or consult in the treatment of any patient with, any other physician or health plan. This provision shall not apply to physicians with which Siena has an exclusive contract permitted by Subparagraphs 14.2 and 14.3, or in the situation where the patient is a patient of a health plan or network and the referral would be to a physician that does not have a provider contract with that plan.

14.11(b) Siena shall not discriminate against physicians employed by competing organizations in scheduling operating room times or usage of other hospital facilities. This provision shall not apply to physicians with which Siena has an exclusive contract as permitted by Subparagraphs 14.2 and 14.3.

15. Employment of Physicians.

15.1 Siena shall not employ more than 30 percent of the physicians within a 20-mile radius of Kenosha practicing in any of the following medical specialties: family practice/internal medicine, pediatrics, or obstetrics/gynecology, except as provided in Subparagraph 15.2. If, however, any other health-care provider [*20] employs more than 30 percent of the physicians within a 20-mile radius of Kenosha in the above specialties, Siena may employ the same percentage. If, on the date of entry of this Final Judgment, Siena employs more than the 30 percent permitted above, it is not required to divest physicians, but it cannot hire additional physicians in that specialty until the percentage falls to 30 percent or less. In specialties in which Siena employs the only physicians in Kenosha, Siena shall attempt in good faith to ensure that those physicians, when offered commercially reasonable terms, contract to provide services to all health plans seeking to contract for those physicians' services subject to bona fide capacity constraints.

15.2 Siena may petition the Attorney General in writing for an exception to Subparagraph 15.1 when market conditions justify its employing physicians in any of the enumerated specialties above the 30 percent limit. The Attorney General will respond to the petition within 30 days from the receipt of all information from Siena reasonably necessary to analyze the petition.

16. "Most-Favored-Nation" Provisions in Contracts With Health Plans

Siena shall not enter into [*21] any provider contract with any health plan on terms that include a most-favored-nation clause. A most-favored-nation clause is any term in a provider contract that allows the buyer to receive the benefit of any better payment rate, term or condition that the seller gives another provider for the same service. In the case of any existing most-favored-nation clause in any current KHMC or SCH provider contracts, Siena shall not renew or extend such contracts without deleting that term. Siena shall inform the Attorney General of the presence of a most-favored-nation clause in any existing provider contracts by providing a list of such contracts to the Attorney General not more than 30 days after entry of this Final Judgment.

17. Ancillary Services

Siena shall not require any health care purchaser or patient to purchase ancillary services from it. If other firms cannot provide ancillary services in a manner that would permit Siena to contain costs in the context of risk-bearing contracts, Siena may require that these services be purchased from it. Siena shall not discriminate in the provision of information provided to patients regarding ancillary services provided by Siena and any [*22] other provider of ancillary services. If Siena provides such services, it shall affirmatively inform patients and other purchasers of all alternative suppliers of those services when it provides information about its products or services to the purchaser if those suppliers provide the necessary information to Siena.

18. Applications

Siena shall not oppose applications filed by other hospitals or other health-care providers with the Wisconsin Department of Health & Social Services ("Department") unless it notifies the Attorney General in writing at least seven days prior to filing any opposition, and provides a copy of any opposition to the Attorney General at the time of its filing with the Department.

19. Future Sales and Acquisitions of Hospital Assets

Siena shall not, without the prior approval of the Attorney General, either (a) acquire any interest in (including entering into a management contract) any hospital or health-care system in Kenosha or surrounding counties, or (b) permit any hospital or health-care system in Kenosha and surrounding counties to acquire it or any portion thereof. In the future while this Final Judgment is in effect, Siena shall not enter into [*23] any joint venture with any health-care system in Kenosha or Racine Counties without the approval of the Attorney General, which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld. The Attorney General will notify Siena of its approval or disapproval within 30 days after the Attorney General has received from Siena information reasonably necessary for the Attorney General to analyze the joint venture, provided that the Attorney General shall promptly notify Siena of its information requests. If the Attorney General withholds its consent, Siena may challenge that determination by filing a petition with this Court, and the Attorney General shall have the burden of persuasion to show that the joint venture would violate federal or state antitrust law. Siena shall not, without providing at least 60-days' notice to the Attorney General, (a) enter into any joint venture with any other hospital, health-care system or health plan relating to the provision of hospital services, (b) acquire or be acquired by any health plan, or (c) acquire any interest in any hospital or health-care system outside Kenosha and surrounding counties. Nothing in this Paragraph shall be construed to apply to any sale or [*24] acquisition in which KHMC and SCH are the only parties.

20. Binding on Successors and Assigns

The terms of this Final Judgment are binding on Siena and its directors, officers, managers and employees, successors and assigns, including but not limited to any person or entity to whom Siena may be sold, leased or otherwise transferred, and all persons who are in active concert or participation with them who have actual or constructive notice thereof. Siena shall not permit any substantial part of Siena to be acquired by any other person unless that person agrees in writing to be bound by the provisions of this Final Judgment. Neither Siena nor any member hospital shall undertake any action through any entity controlled by any of them that would violate this Final Judgment if undertaken directly by Siena or a member hospital.

21. Reporting Mechanism

21.1 Within 150 days after the anniversary of this Final Judgment while it is in effect, Siena shall submit to the Attorney General an annual report accompanied by an officer's compliance certificate describing its compliance with this Final Judgment. This report shall include a review of capital and duplicative-service avoidance [*25] and indicate any monies spent to be added to the operational-savings target pursuant to Subparagraph 12.3. The report shall include an analysis of Revenue and Expense pursuant to Subparagraphs 12.6 (a), (b) and (c), indicating compliance with the required targets and documenting the amount and timing of any required rate reduction. The report shall also include a description of expenses incurred in providing low-cost or no-cost services to the community pursuant to Subparagraph 12.1(b). The Attorney General will provide notice to Siena of any concerns raised by the annual compliance report within 30 days after its receipt of the report. Siena will meet with the Attorney General to attempt to resolve any concerns that the Attorney General may raise from its review of the report.

21.2 Siena will reimburse the Attorney General for expenses, including the payment of any expert fees, incurred in analyzing and verifying this report, in an amount not to exceed $ 10,000 per year. Within 60 days from entry of this Final Judgment, Siena will pay the Attorney General $ 5,000 to establish a mutually-agreed upon model to be used to analyze compliance. This amount shall be deducted from the first [*26] year's reimbursement requirement. Siena will cooperate with any expert hired by the Attorney General, including, but not limited to, providing any additional requested information within Siena's control reasonably necessary to complete the analysis and verification of the compliance report.

22. Publication

22.1 Efficiency Report

Within 30 days after entry of the Final Judgment, Siena shall prepare and submit to the Attorney General a condensed explanation of the anticipated efficiencies and service reconfigurations resulting from Siena's creation, which will be released to the general public in Kenosha and surrounding counties.

22.2 Terms and Conditions

Within 21 days after entry of the Final Judgment, Siena shall prepare and submit to the Attorney General a condensed version of the Final Judgment's terms, which will be released to the general public in Kenosha and surrounding counties.

23. Compliance

To determine or secure compliance with this Final Judgment, any duly authorized representative of the Attorney General shall be permitted:

23.1 Upon reasonable notice, access during normal business hours to all non-privileged records and documents in Siena's possession [*27] or control relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

23.2 Upon reasonable notice, access during normal business hours to interview Siena officers, managers, or employees regarding any matters contained in this Final Judgment.

24. Complaint Procedure

Any person, including health-care providers, health plans, or consumers of medical services, who wishes to report a possible violation of this Final Judgment shall send a written description of the possible violation to the Assistant Attorney General in Charge of Antitrust Enforcement, Antitrust and Criminal Litigation Unit, Office of Attorney General, 4th Floor, 123 West Washington Avenue, Madison, Wisconsin 53707. Unless prohibited from doing so by law, the Attorney General shall send a copy of the complaint to Siena's President, 6308 Eighth Avenue, Kenosha, Wisconsin, 53143. At the request of the Attorney General, Siena shall respond in writing to the Attorney General within thirty 30 days after receiving the complaint. If the complaint is still unresolved, the Attorney General will attempt to negotiate a satisfactory resolution. If Siena believes any complaint is frivolous, it may so advise the Attorney General, [*28] and its obligations under this paragraph will be satisfied unless it is otherwise advised by the Attorney General to respond more fully to the Complaint.

25. Reimbursement of Expenses

Upon entry of this Final Judgment, KHMC and SCH shall jointly pay $ 20,000 to reimburse the Attorney General's costs incurred to conduct its investigation, which payment shall be used for future antitrust enforcement purposes.

26. Enforcement

26.1 If the Attorney General believes that there has been a violation of this Final Judgment, it shall promptly notify Siena in writing and explain the possible violation. The Attorney General shall permit Siena a reasonable opportunity to cure any alleged violation without instituting legal action. If Siena does not cure the alleged violation within 60 days after notification, the Attorney General may take any remedial action it deems appropriate. This time period shall be extended in circumstances where the 60-day period is not sufficient in which to cure the alleged violation.

26.2 In any action or proceeding brought by the Attorney General to enforce this Final Judgment or otherwise arising out of or relating hereto, the Attorney General, if it is [*29] the prevailing party, shall recover its costs and expenses, including attorneys' fees.

27. Legal Exposure

No provision of this Final Judgment shall be interpreted or construed to require Siena to take any action, or to prohibit Siena from taking any action, if that requirement or prohibition would expose Siena to significant risk of liability, including, but not limited to, liability for any type of negligence (including negligent credentialing or negligence in making referrals) or malpractice.

28. Notices

All notices required by this Final Judgment shall be sent by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested, postage prepaid, or by hand delivery, to:

If to the Attorney General:

Assistant Attorney General in Charge of Antitrust Enforcement
Criminal Litigation and Antitrust Unit
Office of Attorney General
4th floor, 123 West Washington Avenue
Madison, WI 53707

If to Siena:

President, Siena Healthcare System, Inc.
6308 Eighth Avenue
Kenosha, WI 53143

29. Averment of Truth

Siena avers that the information it provided to the Attorney General in connection with this Final Judgment, to the best of its knowledge, is true and [*30] represents the most recent and comprehensive data available, and that no material information has been withheld.

30. Termination

This Final Judgment shall expire on the seventh anniversary of its date of entry if it has not terminated prior to that time as provided in Paragraph 31.

31. Early Expiration

Five years after entry of this Final Judgment, Siena may request the Attorney General in writing to concur in Siena's application to this Court for an order terminating this Final Judgment. The Attorney General shall not unreasonably withhold its concurrence to the application if Siena has complied with the provisions of this Final Judgment. In addition, this Final Judgment shall terminate without further action by the Court or any of the parties at such time as any entity opens a health-care facility in Kenosha or Racine County which has a number of inpatient medical-surgical beds equal to 25 percent or more of the average number of inpatient staffed medical-surgical beds that Siena is operating at that time, except that Siena may not deem this Final Judgment to have terminated without first giving the Attorney General 30 days' advance written notice. In addition, if Siena [*31] believes that any entity has opened or expanded a health-care facility that will provide substantial competition to Siena, it may petition the Attorney General to join a petition to this Court to terminate this Final Judgment.

32. Modification

If either the Attorney General or Siena believes that modification of the Final Judgment would be in the public interest because of changed or unforeseen circumstances or for other reasons, that party shall notify the other, and the parties shall attempt to agree on a modification. If the parties agree on a modification, they shall petition the Court jointly to modify the Final Judgment. If they cannot agree on a modification, the party seeking modification may petition the Court for modification and shall bear the burden of persuasion that the requested modification is in the public interest.

33. Retention of Jurisdiction

Unless this Final Judgment is terminated early pursuant to Paragraph 31, this Court shall retain jurisdiction for seven years after entry to enable any party to apply for such further orders and directions as may be necessary and appropriate for the interpretation, modification and enforcement of this Final Judgment.

DATED [*32] this 20th day of Dec., 1996.

JAMES E. DOYLE

Attorney General

State of Wisconsin

KENOSHA HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL CENTER, INC.

By:

Kevin J. O'Connor

Assistant Attorney General

Office of Attorney General

4th Floor

123 West Washington Avenue

Madison, WI 53707

(608) 266-8986

By:

Richard O. Schmidt, Jr.

President and Chief Executive Officer

Attest: B Carol Gammon

ST. CATHERINE'S HOSPITAL, INC.

By:

Ryland Davis

President and Chief Executive Officer

Attest:

John J. Miles

Bruce R. Stewart

Ober, Kaler, Grimes & Shriver

A Professional Corporation

1401 H Street, N.W.

Fifth Floor

Washington, DC 20005-3324

(202) 826-5008

Attorneys for KHMC and SCH

SO ORDERED: December 31, 1996

Joseph Stadtmueller

Chief United States District Judge

Judgment entered this 31st day of December, 1996.

Exhibit 1

Siena Healthcare System, Inc.

(000's Omitted)

Year 1	Year 2	Year 3	Year 4	Year 5	Total
--------	--------	--------	--------	--------	-------

		Year 1	Year 2	Year 3	Year 4	Year 5	Total
1.	Operating Savings Target	(457)	3,597	5,502	5,514	5,519	19,675
2.	Depreciation Expense Not Incurred	75	318	519	618	792	2,322
3.	Sub-Total	(382)	3,915	6,021	6,132	6,311	21,997
4.	Pass Through Rate	60%	80%	80%	80%	80%
5.	Pass Through to Community	(229)	3,132	4,817	4,906	5,049	17,675
6.	Capital and Duplicative Service Avoidance	3,369	10,357	1,658	4,358	4,310	24,052
Total of Operating Savings and Capital-Avoidance Savings (Lines 1+6) $ 43,727

[*33] Exhibit 2

In determining the clinical privileges to grant applicants for medical-staff membership and clinical privileges, the Siena Board of Directors will grant each applicant Category I, II, or III privileges, depending on the characteristics of that physician's practice and patients.

Category I Privileges -- Those privileges requiring a physician to have his or her office and residence within 30-minutes driving time of Siena's northeast and southeast campuses because of the types of medical services he or she provides and the potential urgent or emergent nature of his or her patients' needs. For an applicant to be assigned Category I privileges, his or her patients must have the greatest acuity level and level of risk of complications resulting from the procedures performed by the physician at Siena.

Category II Privileges -- Those privileges requiring a physician to have his or her office and residence within 60 minutes of Siena's northeast and southeast campuses, and have written backup coverage for urgent and emergent patient-care needs with a physician whose clinical privileges are comparable and whose office and residence are within 30-minutes driving time of Siena's [*34] northeast and southeast campuses because of the types of medical services he or she provides and the potential urgent or emergent nature of his or her patients' needs.

Category III Privileges -- Those privileges requiring a physician to have his or her office and residence within 60 minutes of Siena's northeast and southeast campuses, but no physician backup coverage because the types of medical services rendered and type of patients seen result in little or no patient risk because of the non-urgent and non-emergent nature of patients seen or care rendered.

---

End of Document

Bijan Designer for Men v. Katzman

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

January 6, 1997, Decided ; February 7, 1997, FILED

96 Civ. 7345 (BSJ)

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1426 *

BIJAN DESIGNER FOR MEN, INC., a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff, v. ALAN KATZMAN, Defendant.

Disposition: [*1] Motions denied.

Core Terms

---

customers, customer list, vendors, confidential, restrictive covenant, no evidence, customer information, employees, confidential information, documents, lists, clothing, trade secret, mailing, secret, preliminary injunction, likelihood of success, names and addresses, irreparable harm, fiduciary duty, phone number, measurements, enjoin, merits, public relations firm, serious question, disclosure, injunctive, advertise, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN1[] Injunctions, Grounds for Injunctions

A court may grant a preliminary injunction only upon the movant's showing of: (a) irreparable harm, and (b) either (1) a likelihood of success on the merits or (2) a sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly toward the party requesting the preliminary relief.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Customer Lists

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Customers of Former Employer

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Unfair Competition

Trade Secrets Law > Employee Duties & Obligations > Right to Compete

HN2 [] Types of Contracts, Covenants

New York law disfavors restrictive covenants that interfere with a person's ability to pursue a vocation after leaving employment with a particular firm. Restrictive covenants appearing in employment agreements receive rigorous scrutiny. Therefore, a court will not enforce restrictive covenants between employer and employee unless reasonable temporally and geographically, and then only to the extent necessary to protect the employer from unfair competition stemming from the employee's use or disclosure of trade secrets, confidential customer lists, or confidential customer information. This rule effectively blunts the intended effect of many non-solicitation agreements, except insofar as they define the geographic or durational limits upon a former employee's use of trade secrets or other confidential information.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN3 [] Types of Contracts, Covenants

A court may enforce restrictive covenants between employer and employee if (1) it is reasonable temporally and geographically and (2) the employee's services are unique or extraordinary.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN4 [] Types of Contracts, Covenants

The reasonableness of a restrictive covenant's duration is determined in large part by the specific circumstances of the case.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN5 Types of Contracts, Covenants

If a court finds the duration of a covenant not to compete unreasonable it can "blue pencil" the covenant to reduce the term to a reasonable time frame.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Trade Secrets Law > Employee Duties & Obligations > Right to Compete > Covenants Not to Compete

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Customer Lists

HN6 Types of Contracts, Covenants

The court may only enforce a noncompetition agreement's restrictive covenants to the extent they protect an employer from an employee's unfair use of trade secrets or confidential customer information. Whether something is a confidential trade secret is determined by the following factors: (1) the extent to which the information is known outside the business; (2) the extent to which the information is known to employees and others involved in the business; (3) the extent that measures are taken to guard the secrecy of the information; (4) the value of the information to the business and its competitors; (5) the amount of effort or money expended in developing the information; and (6) the ease of difficulty with which the information could properly be acquired or duplicated by others. A customer list should be a confidential trade secret if it was developed through substantial effort and kept in confidence, provided the information it contains is not readily ascertainable.

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Customer Lists

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Machines

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > General Overview

HN7 Protected Information, Customer Lists

A customer list developed by a business through substantial effort and kept in confidence is entitled to trade secret protection. However, the owner is entitled to such protection only as long as he maintains the list in secrecy. Upon disclosure, the information loses trade secret protection. A substantial element of secrecy must exist so that, except by the use of improper means, there would be difficulty in acquiring the information.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Customers of Former Employer

HN8 [] Types of Contracts, Covenants

An injunction which enjoins one from doing business with former customers who seek out his services without solicitation on his part operates in a harsh and oppressive manner and is void as against public policy. A restrictive covenant seeking to prevent an employee from contacting friends or associates is overbroad. It is inequitable to enjoin an employee from calling upon his experience, knowledge, and friendships.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Customers of Former Employer

HN9 [] Types of Contracts, Covenants

To obtain injunctive relief enforcing a restrictive covenant concerning the information in a former employer's customer files other than names, addresses, and phone numbers, the employer need show not only that irreparable injury will likely occur, but also that such injury is imminent.

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Customers of Former Employer

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

HN10 [] Injunctions, Grounds for Injunctions

The use and disclosure of an employer's confidential customer information and the possibility of loss of customers through such usage constitute irreparable harm. The loss of good will constitutes irreparable harm that cannot be compensated by money damages.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN11 [] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

A preliminary injunction requires a concrete showing of imminent irreparable harm.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Governments > Fiduciaries

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN12 [] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Once a party to a covenant not to compete returns confidential information, no further relief is required.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > Remedies

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

HN13 [] Governments, Fiduciaries

Even where a former employee has not misappropriated trade secrets or other confidential materials, a court may enjoin him from using information obtained from a former employer if it is shown that he obtained that information by wrongful means amounting to an egregious breach of trust and confidence, such as theft. In such cases the ex-employee has breached a fiduciary duty to the employer by engaging in misconduct during the course of his employment.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN14 [] Commercial Interference, Contracts

To establish tortious interference with a contract, a party must show proof of (1) the existence of a valid contract between the plaintiff and a third party, (2) the defendant's knowledge of that contract, (3) the defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach that contract, and (4) damages. The plaintiff must establish that the motive for the interference was improper. To commit tort of intentional interference with contract, one's motive must be solely malicious.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Commercial Interference, Contracts

A claim for tortious interference with a contract is very difficult to sustain and will not lie absent a showing that the action complained of was motivated solely by malice or a desire to inflict injury by unlawful means rather than by self-interest or other economic considerations. Where a party's interest is intended even partially to advance its own interests, the misconduct must rise to the level of fraudulent or criminal acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must at least show that the defendants' alleged actions had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. The overarching standard is whether the defendant's behavior diminished overall competition and hence consumer welfare. A plaintiff must show more than simple injury resulting from the defendant's conduct. Without some evidence of an adverse impact on competition in either the interbrand or intrabrand market, the fact that customers induce a seller to refrain from dealing with another potential customer in order to limit competition does not satisfy a plaintiff's initial burden under § 1. Private antitrust plaintiffs must show more than that the defendant's conduct caused them injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

New York State's antitrust act, the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 (1988), is modeled on the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and is construed in accordance with the Sherman Act.

Counsel: For plaintiff: George L. Graff, Lisa J. Laplace, Paul, Hastings. Janofsky & Walker LLP, New York, NY.

For defendant: Alan B. Howard, Andrew T. Hahn, Winston & Strawn, New York, NY.

Judges: BARBARA S. JONES, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: BARBARA S. JONES

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM & ORDER

BARBARA S. JONES

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

This case concerns a men's clothier and its former employee. The clothier alleges that the former employee has breached a restrictive covenant in an agreement between them. The employee, in turn, alleges that his former employer is engaging in anti-competitive behavior towards the employee's new company.

Pending are cross-motions for preliminary injunctions. Plaintiff Bijan Designer for Men, Inc.'s ("Bijan") moves to enjoin its former employee, defendant Alan Katzman ("Katzman"), from using allegedly confidential information to develop his own retail clothing store. Katzman, meanwhile, cross-moves to enjoin Bijan from threatening clothing vendors with lost sales should they continue to deal with Katzman's new business.

After a hearing on November 7, 1996 and a review of the parties' post-hearing submissions, the Court [*2] denies both motions.

BACKGROUND

The following constitutes the Court's findings of fact pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 52\(a\):

Bijan is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business in New York. As such, it is the corporate vehicle for Bijan Pakzad ("Pakzad"), a successful designer and retailer of high quality men's apparel and accessories. Bijan operates a store on New York City's Fifth Avenue.

In merchandising its inventory, Bijan offers personalized service to clients who shop at the Bijan store by appointment and are catered to by sophisticated salespeople. Offering individual items that can cost thousands of dollars each, Pakzad states that it is not unusual for customers to spend over $ 100,000 on Bijan couture in a single day of shopping.

As might be expected, Bijan's potential client base is limited to those relatively few individuals able to afford the luxury of Bijan's offerings. As a result, Bijan has built its business on a small customer base, maintaining that any single customer represents a substantial amount of revenue.

In order to attract such customers, Pakzad states that Bijan has spent over [*3] $ 20 million in advertising in the past 15 to 20 years. Additionally, Pakzad and his associates -- including Katzman -- have traveled around the world publicizing the Bijan name and introducing themselves and their inventory to potential purchasers. In fact, according to Pakzad, only 15 to 20 percent of Bijan's business derives from New York City.

In connection with its business Bijan maintains customer information in an unlocked file cabinet in its New York store that consists of names, addresses, phone numbers, preferences, needs, measurements, and the manner of preferred payment. A list of customers' names and addresses is kept on notebook-size paper (hereinafter referred to as the "Customer List"). Bijan keeps at least two copies of this Customer List in its New York store. The rest of the information is kept in various other forms, such as on Rolodex and tailoring cards.

Bijan also attracts and keeps customers through its ability to offer unique and high-quality clothing. In this connection, Bijan's sources of supply are crucial to its success. Additionally, plaintiff has developed a list of manufacturers able to meet its standards and with which it regularly transacts.

In [*4] order to protect the information it considers most critical, Bijan informs each prospective employee that it considers customer information to be confidential. Bijan's employee handbook emphasizes this point, warning employees to guard against unauthorized disclosure. Indeed, Bijan employs a security guard responsible for inspecting the bags of Bijan employees exiting the premises. Additionally, Pakzad once sent a memo to Bijan's employees alerting them that failure to preserve the confidentiality of Bijan's customer information could result in dismissal. Bijan also requires its employees to sign a confidentiality agreement commanding them to preserve Bijan's secrets, including customer and vendor information.

At the beginning of his employ with Bijan in November 1989, Katzman signed such an agreement (the "Agreement"), which describes the information Bijan considers confidential as:

the names, buying practices or needs of Employer's customers; the fact that they may be customers of Employer; information relating to customer's personal and business affairs; customer lists, files, records, designs, measurements,... credit memoranda... methods used to contact customers and marketing [*5] data; names of vendors or suppliers of Employer....

In addition, the Agreement obligates Katzman, for the term of his employment and for five years following, to:

... NOT DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY USE, SELL, OR DIVULGE ANY CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION TO ANY PERSON, FIRM, OR CORPORATION;

... USE... BEST EFFORTS TO PREVENT THE DISCLOSURE OF ANY CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION BY OTHERS; AND

... NOT CALL ON, SOLICIT, TAKE AWAY OR OTHERWISE CONTACT, EXCEPT AS INSTRUCTED BY EMPLOYER, ANY INDIVIDUALS WHO ARE OR WERE CUSTOMERS OF EMPLOYER DURING THE TERM HEREOF.

Moreover, the Agreement obligates Katzman to return to Bijan upon termination of his employment any documents containing or reflecting confidential information.

Despite such agreements and Bijan's purported desire to keep its Customer List a secret, Bijan has advertised the names of hundreds of its customers, placing that list in national publications, posters in its store window, and even on t-shirts.<sup>1</sup> In addition, Bijan's New York store boasts a "wall of clocks," which contains the names and locations of hundreds of its customers, and displays pictures of some of its more famous ones. Additionally, Pakzad has [*6] disclosed the names of some of his customers to journalists preparing articles or television features concerning him. Moreover, even though Bijan employees are forbidden from removing company documents from its store, every Bijan employee, including the store's doorman, has access to the Customer List and Katzman regularly took home the business cards of Bijan customers.

As to his vendors, Pakzad admits that Bijan's sources are not a secret, stating that it is well known in the industry where Bijan purchases its clothes. Indeed, these vendors regularly advertise in trade journals and other publications. Moreover, Katzman has developed close personal relationships with their representatives.

While employed with Bijan, Katzman was promoted from salesman to general [*7] manager and was introduced to many of its valuable customers. In this connection, Katzman developed close business and personal relationships with many of those on Bijan's Customer List. Despite his success, he resigned in July, 1996.

That month, Katzman began managing his own upscale men's clothes shop, "Harrison James," naming himself as its president and scheduling the store to open for business in November, 1996.<sup>2</sup> Operating out of a 15,000 square foot townhouse on a side street off of New York City's Fifth Avenue (directly around the corner from Bijan's store), Harrison James desires to rival the exclusivity and quality of the goods and services Bijan provides.

In order to begin establishing itself, Katzman hired at least two former Bijan employees -- Medhi Pakzad and Melinda [*8] Raffi -- and a public relations firm. With regard to the employees, Medhi Pakzad, who is apparently related to Bijan Pakzad, terminated his employ with Bijan years ago and worked for the high-fashion retailer DeLisi prior to joining Harrison James. Melinda Raffi, meanwhile, testified that Katzman did not recruit her to leave Bijan, but that she asked Katzman to hire her.

When he hired the public relations firm, Katzman supplied the firm with a copy of Bijan's Customer List that he obtained while working at Bijan. It was to be used together with other lists of prominent citizens to accomplish a mass mailing announcing Harrison James' birth. There is no evidence that Katzman "stole" this list. Rather, the evidence only suggests that he lawfully had it in his possession when he resigned and that he did not return it until August 27, 1996, when Bijan reminded him of the Agreement's restrictive covenants. Later during the course of this litigation Katzman also produced pages from another Bijan customer list, photocopies of various cards taken from a Bijan Rolodex, and documents containing the tailoring measurements of certain Bijan customers. There is no evidence suggesting that prior [*9] to returning these items Katzman took the time to memorize their contents. Additionally, there is no evidence that Katzman has retained copies of those documents he returned.

---

<sup>1</sup> Pakzad characterizes these publications not as advertisements, but as "salutes" to people with style. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the publications -- whether meant to advertise or to honor -- announce the identities of certain Bijan customers.

<sup>2</sup> Katzman worked to form Harrison James during his tenure with Bijan -- but on his personal time. There is no evidence, however, to suggest that Katzman was working to undermine or to compete with Bijan while he was its employee.

Although he asked his public relations firm to return Bijan's Customer List, Katzman did not instruct it to remove from the Harrison James mailing list the names of the customers on the Bijan list. As a result, although a number of lists which duplicated names on the Bijan list were used for the mailing, the public relations firm cannot say which list was the source of any particular customer name. What is certain, however, is that the names and addresses on Bijan's Customers List are easily found in other sources. In fact, they can be duplicated by copying the membership rolls of exclusive Manhattan clubs and subscription lists of various publications. Patricia Harrington, Katzman's public relation's agent, testified that there is a "New York social list, which everyone has access to," as well as various other publicly available social lists whose content encompasses the names and addresses of Bijan's customers. Additionally, she stated that many of the addresses can be ascertained simply by calling Information. [*10] In this connection, Carlye Duffy, who works for the public relations firm that executed Harrison James' mass mailing, testified that she was unsure which sources were used to garner specific names and addresses to complete the mailing, but that she was certain that lists other than Bijan's Customer List were used. Similarly, she testified that the names on Harrison James' current customer list all came from sources other than Bijan's Customer List.

In addition to accomplishing a mass mailing after leaving Bijan, Katzman approached at least two of Bijan's vendors and placed orders for Harrison James. Specifically, Katzman ordered goods from Saintandrews and claims to have had a purchase agreement with the vendor Hettabretz, although he offers only a purchase order, and not a signed, written contract, to that effect.

Upon learning that Katzman sought to purchase clothing from these vendors, Pakzad became upset and told the vendors' representatives that he would cease purchasing from them if they maintained business relationships with Katzman. As a result, Hettabretz and Saintandrews refused to meet Harrison James' orders for goods. Specifically, by letter dated July 11, 1996, Hettabretz [*11] informed Katzman that after meeting with Pakzad, it was compelled to decide that it could not supply him with topcoats he earlier had ordered. That letter, however, also communicates Hettabretz' intention to remain available to do future business with Katzman. Additionally, John McCoy, a Saintandrews representative, informed Katzman that Pakzad had told the vendor that Bijan would no longer purchase Saintandrews' materials if the supplier continued to do business with Katzman. Given this, Saintandrews decided not to meet Katzman's order. Since then, Bijan has continued to purchase clothing from Saintandrews.<sup>3</sup> Lastly, a representative from Marol approached Katzman to inform him that Pakzad had told him that Bijan would not purchase from Marol if it sold to Harrison James. Katzman now maintains that Pakzad's behavior threatens his supply of high-quality, fine men's clothing.

[*12] DISCUSSION

I. LEGAL STANDARD

Two motions are pending. Plaintiff asks the Court to enjoin Katzman from soliciting Bijan's customers, manufacturers, and employees in building his business.<sup>4</sup> Defendant cross-moves to enjoin Bijan from threatening vendors from doing business with Harrison James.

Both motions are governed by the overarching and well-settled law instructing courts to issue sparingly the extraordinary remedy of a preliminary injunction. Indeed, HN1 [↑] a court may grant a preliminary injunction only upon the movant's showing of:

---

<sup>3</sup> Pakzad admits that he told vendors that he would not do business with them should they sell to Katzman, but denies threatening them to cut off all ties with his former employee.

<sup>4</sup> Originally, plaintiff also accused Katzman of approaching several manufacturers and attempting to persuade them to sell to Harrison James goods that they had agreed to sell exclusively to Bijan. However, while it still asserts the veracity of this allegation, plaintiff has withdrawn the claim pending further discovery.

(a) irreparable harm; and (b) either (1) likelihood of success on the merits or (2) sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make [*13] them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly toward the party requesting the preliminary relief.

Blum v. Schlegel, 18 F.3d 1005, 1010 \(2d Cir. 1994\); accord Baker's Aid v. Hussmann Foodservice Corp., 830 F.2d 13, 15 \(2d Cir. 1987\); Jackson Dairy, Inc. v. H.P. Hood & Sons, Inc., 596 F.2d 70, 72 \(2d Cir. 1979\); see also Hanson Trust PLC v. MS SCM Acquisition, Inc., 781 F.2d 264, 273 \(2d Cir. 1986\).

II. BIJAN'S MOTION

By Order to Show Cause dated September 30, 1996, Bijan asked this Court to issue a preliminary injunction enforcing the Agreement's restrictive covenants. Additionally, Bijan argues that a fiduciary duty arises out of Katzman's former relationship with Bijan, prohibiting him from now exploiting Bijan's Customer List and other allegedly confidential information for his own benefit.<sup>5</sup> In response, Katzman maintains that the Agreement's restrictive covenants are unenforceable and that this case does not implicate any fiduciary duty.

[*14] For the following reasons, Bijan's motion is denied.

A. Restrictive Covenant

1. Likelihood of Success or Sufficiently Serious Questions Going to the Merits

[HN2\[↑\]](#) New York law disfavors restrictive covenants that interfere with a person's ability to pursue a vocation after leaving employment with a particular firm. American Broadcasting Companies, Inc. v. Wolf, 52 N.Y.2d 394, 438 N.Y.S.2d 482, 486-87, 420 N.E.2d 363 \(Ct. App. 1981\); see also Baker's Aid, 730 F. Supp. at 1214 (noting that restrictive covenants appearing in employment agreements receive rigorous scrutiny). Therefore, a court will not enforce restrictive covenants between employer and employee unless reasonable temporally and geographically, and then only to the extent necessary to protect the employer from unfair competition stemming from the employee's use or disclosure of trade secrets, confidential customer lists, or confidential customer information.<sup>6</sup> [Coolidge Co., Inc. v. Mokrynski, 472 F. Supp. 459, 462 \(S.D.N.Y. 1979\); Columbia Ribbon & Carbon Mfg. Co., Inc. v. A-1-A Corp., 42 N.Y.2d 496, 398 N.Y.S.2d 1004, 1006-07, 369 N.E.2d 4 \(Ct. App. 977\); Reed, Roberts Assocs., Inc., 40 N.Y.2d 303, 386 N.Y.S.2d 677, 679-80, 353 N.E.2d 590 \(Ct. App. \[\*15\] 1976\); Family Affairs Haircutters v. Detling, 110 A.D.2d 745, 488 N.Y.S.2d 204, 207 \(App. Div. 1985\)](#). This rule effectively blunts the intended effect of many non-solicitation agreements, except insofar as they define the geographic or durational limits upon a former employee's use of trade secrets or other confidential information. See Briskin v. All Seasons Servs., Inc., 206 A.D.2d 906, 615 N.Y.S.2d 166-167 \(App. Div. 1994\); Greenwich Mills Co. v. Barrie House Coffee Co., 91 A.D.2d 398, 459 N.Y.S.2d 454, 459 \(App. Div. 1983\).

Katzman argues that the restrictive covenant at issue in [*16] this case is unreasonable in duration and that, in any event, its enforcement is unnecessary to protect Bijan from the unfair use of confidential trade secrets.<sup>7</sup> Bijan disagrees, stating that the covenant is enforceable as written.

<sup>5</sup> Bijan also moves to enjoin Katzman from soliciting individuals who were employed by Bijan during the term of Katzman's tenure to terminate their employ with Bijan. However, it fails to show how the Agreement or any other legal theory would support the issuance of such relief. Moreover, Bijan flounders in its attempt to show that Katzman has raided Bijan and solicited its employees to work for him. Indeed, of the two former Bijan employees working for Harrison James, one worked for Bijan years ago, while the other testified unequivocally that she approached Katzman for a job. Accordingly, Bijan's plea to obtain an injunction preventing Katzman from hiring Bijan employees is denied.

<sup>6</sup> Additionally, [HN3\[↑\]](#) a court may enforce restrictive covenants between employer and employee if (1) it is reasonable temporally and geographically and (2) the employee's services are unique or extraordinary. Columbia Ribbon & Carbon Mfg. Co., Inc., 398 N.Y.S.2d at 1006-07 \(1977\). However, as there is no allegation that Katzman possesses such unique or extraordinary abilities, the Court will not address this issue.

HN4↑ The reasonableness of a restrictive covenant's duration is determined in large part by the specific circumstances of the case. See Ivy Mar Co., Inc. v. C.R. Seasons Ltd., 907 F. Supp. 547, 558 (E.D.N.Y. 1995) (listing cases). The Court finds that it is unnecessary at this time to decide whether the full five-year term is overbroad. Rather, since Katzman left Bijan's employ only months ago in July 1996, it is clear that the Agreement's terms reasonably extend to the present and near future.<sup>8</sup>

[*17] Nonetheless, HN6↑ the Court may only enforce the Agreement's restrictive covenants to the extent they protect Bijan from Katzman's unfair use of trade secrets or confidential customer information. See Reed, Roberts Assocs., Inc., 398 N.Y.S.2d at 679-80. Bijan argues that its list of suppliers and manufacturers, i.e. its vendors, as well as the data on its Customer List constitute such information. The Court disagrees.

Whether something is a confidential trade secret is determined by the following factors: (1) the extent to which the information is known outside the business; (2) the extent to which the information is known to employees and others involved in the business; (3) the extent that measures are taken to guard the secrecy of the information; (4) the value of the information to the business and its competitors; (5) the amount of effort or money expended in developing the information; and (6) the ease of difficulty with which the information could properly be acquired or duplicated by others. Integrated Cash Management Services v. Digital Transactions, Inc., 920 F.2d 171, 173 (2d Cir. 1990); Ivy Mar Co., Inc. v. C.R. Seasons, Ltd., 907 F. Supp. at 556.

In this [*18] light, a customer list should be considered a confidential trade secret if it was developed through substantial effort and kept in confidence, provided the information it contains is not readily ascertainable. Defiance Button Machine Co. v. C & C Metal Products Corp., 759 F.2d 1053, 1063 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 844, 88 L. Ed. 2d 108, 106 S. Ct. 131 (1985); Columbia Ribbon & Carbon Mfg. Co., Inc., 398 N.Y.S.2d at 1006-07; Leo Silfen, Inc. v. Cream, 29 N.Y.2d 387, 328 N.Y.S.2d 423, 427-29, 278 N.E.2d 636 (Ct. App. 1972) (holding that HN7↑ a customer list developed by a business through substantial effort and kept in confidence is entitled to trade secret protection). However, the owner is entitled to such protection only as long as he maintains the list in secrecy; upon disclosure, the information loses trade secret protection. Defiance Button Machine Co., 759 F.2d at 1063 (citing Kewanee Oil Co. v. Bicron Corp., 416 U.S. 470, 475-76, 40 L. Ed. 2d 315, 94 S. Ct. 1879 (1974)). "A substantial element of secrecy must exist so that, except by the use of improper means, there would be difficulty in acquiring the information." Restatement of Torts, § 757, Comment [*19] b, at 6 (1939); see also FMC Corp. v. Taiwan Tainan Giant Ind. Co., Ltd., 730 F.2d 61, 63 (2d Cir. 1989) (per curiam) (stating that New York follows the Restatement of Torts, § 757, comment b).

Here, there is no evidence that Bijan took any steps to keep its customers or vendors' identities secret. Pakzad admits that the vendors it uses are known throughout the industry. Additionally, these vendors advertise themselves in trade journals and participate in trade shows. Indeed, their success depends in part on publicizing their identities and capabilities. Accordingly, the restrictive covenant is unenforceable to the extent it seeks to prevent Katzman from using certain vendors.

The situation is similar with regard to the information on Bijan's Customer List. All Bijan employees have access to its Customer List. Moreover, the evidence is clear that it is not difficult for anyone to obtain in the public domain the names and addresses on the list. Additionally, one may consult well-known sources such as Information, an exclusive club, or magazine subscription lists to garner information about people to whom stores like Bijan cater. Bijan not only made this information-gathering [*20] task easier when it hung its "wall of clocks," displayed photographs, and published advertisements depicting and naming hundreds of its customers, see Business Trends

<sup>7</sup> Katzman does not argue that the covenant is overbroad in geographic scope, and thus the Court will not treat the issue at this time.

<sup>8</sup> The Court notes that even HN5↑ if it found the five-year term unreasonable, it could "blue pencil" the covenant to reduce the term to a reasonable time frame. See South Nassau Control. Corp. v. Innovative Control Mgmt. Corp., 95 Civ. 3724, at *5, 1996 WL 496610 (E.D.N.Y. June 10, 1996); Webcraft Techs., Inc. v. McCaw, 674 F. Supp. 1039, 1047 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); Karpinski v. Ingrasci, 28 N.Y.2d 45, 320 N.Y.S.2d 1, 6-7, 268 N.E.2d 751 (Ct. App. 1971).

Analysts, Inc. v. Freedonia Group, Inc., 700 F. Supp. 1213, 1236 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (finding that party failed to take necessary steps to keep customer information a secret), but also offers no evidence suggesting, let alone proving, that the names and addresses on its list are not ascertainable through such methods. Indeed, there is testimony that the names on Katzman's customer list are all listed in publicly available databases, and that many, if not all, of those who received cards announcing Harrison James' opening are on lists other than Bijan's Customer List.<sup>9</sup> See Public Relations Aids, Inc. v. Wagner, 37 A.D.2d 293, 324 N.Y.S.2d 920, 922 (App. Div. 1971) (finding party's customer list "well-known to any one in the business of public relations"), aff'd, 30 N.Y.2d 890, 335 N.Y.S.2d 439, 286 N.E.2d 922 (Ct. App. 1972); cf. Town & Country House and Home Service, Inc. v. Newbery, 3 N.Y.2d 554, 170 N.Y.S.2d 328, 332, 147 N.E.2d 724 (Ct. App. 1958) (finding customer list confidential [*21] in part because the names could not be found in public directories).

[*22] While it is clear that the names and addresses of Bijan's customers are in the public domain, there is little evidence concerning whether their phone numbers are. In the absence of a well-developed record on this point, and faced with the testimony of Harrington and Duffy that the data concerning the customers is available through such services as public as Information, this Court declines to find such information "confidential."

On the other hand, the evidence is sufficient to show that the data beyond names, addresses and phone numbers in Bijan's customer files are not in the public domain; obviously, neither a person's neck and belt size, nor knowledge relating to a customer's personal and business affairs are discoverable by calling Information or consulting a magazine subscription list or club membership roll. See Holiday Food Co. v. Munroe, 37 Conn. Supp. 546, 426 A.2d 814, 818 (Conn. Super. Ct. 1981) (equating customers' buying habits, requirements, and preferences with "difficult to obtain information.") Additionally, there is no evidence suggesting that Bijan has ever disclosed this other information to persons outside of its employ.

Thus, this other information [*23] in Bijan's customer files -- the information beyond the names, addresses, and phone numbers -- constitutes confidential customer information. Accordingly, the Court finds that Bijan has demonstrated a likelihood of success on its claim as to that part of the Agreement's restrictive covenants regarding the use of this information.

2. Irreparable Harm

In order HN9 to obtain injunctive relief enforcing that part of the restrictive covenant concerning the information in Bijan's customer files other than names, addresses, and phone numbers, Bijan need show not only that irreparable injury will likely occur, but also that such injury is imminent. Borey v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 934 F.2d 30, 34 (2d Cir. 1991); JSG Trading Corp. v. Tray-Wrap, Inc., 917 F.2d 75, 79 (2d Cir. 1990).

HN10 "The use and disclosure of an employer's confidential customer information and the possibility of loss of customers through such usage constitute irreparable harm." Ecolab, Inc., 753 F. Supp. at 1110 (emphasis supplied); see also Ecolab, Inc. v. K.P. Laundry Machinery, Inc., 656 F. Supp. 894, 899 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (loss of good will constitutes irreparable harm that cannot be compensated [*24] by money damages).

<sup>9</sup> Bijan's motion seeks to enjoin Katzman from engaging in any contact with Bijan's customers. This relief, if granted, would prevent Katzman from doing business with these customers even if they sought his services without solicitation on his part. Indeed, it would require Katzman to actively avoid such customers. Such HN8 an injunction would operate in a harsh and oppressive manner, and thus would be void as against public policy. See American Broadcasting Companies, Inc., 438 N.Y.S.2d at 486; Mohawk Maintenance Co. v. Kessler, 74 A.D.2d 511, 424 N.Y.S.2d 907 (App. Div. 1980), aff'd, 52 N.Y.2d 276, 437 N.Y.S.2d 646, 419 N.E.2d 324 (Ct. App. 1981). Additionally, the Court notes that a restrictive covenant seeking to prevent an employee from contacting friends or associates, i.e. utilizing "normal friendships and business contacts", is overbroad. See Great Lakes Carbon Corp. v. Koch Industries, Inc., 497 F. Supp. 462, 471 (S.D.N.Y. 1980); Arnold K. Davis & Co., Inc. v. Ludemann, 160 A.D.2d 614, 559 N.Y.S.2d 240, 242 (App. Div. 1990) (holding that it would be inequitable to enjoin employee from calling upon his "experience, knowledge, [and] friendships....")

Here, there is no evidence beyond conclusory statements suggesting that the use of the information in Bijan's customer files other than names, addresses, and phone numbers -- the information concerning personal bents, needs, measurements, and the manner of preferred payment -- threatens any possibility, let alone an imminent one, of loss of customers or other irreparable harm. See USA Network v. Jones Intercable, Inc., 704 F. Supp. 488, 491 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\) (holding that HN11[<sup>15</sup>] preliminary injunction requires "concrete showing of imminent irreparable harm") (citing State of New York v. Nuclear Reg. Comm'n, 550 F.2d 745 \(2d Cir. 1977\)). Moreover, since Harrison James already has sent its mass mailing to persons on Bijan's Customer List, it is difficult to fathom the utility of an injunction prohibiting Katzman's use of those customers' measurements, preferences, and other confidential information. After all, Katzman presumably will discover this information on his own should the customers patronize his store. Further, there is no evidence that Katzman memorized or kept copies of documents memorializing this confidential information. See [Reidman Agency Inc. \[\*25\] v. Musnicki, 79 A.D.2d 1094, 435 N.Y.S.2d 837, 838 \(App. Div. 1981\)](#) (holding that HN12[<sup>16</sup>] once party returns confidential information, no further relief is required) (citing Leo Silfen, Inc., 387 N.Y.S.2d at 449). Thus, Bijan has failed to establish the elements required to obtain injunctive relief enforcing the restrictive covenant.

B. Fiduciary Duty

HN13[<sup>17</sup>] Even where a former employee has not misappropriated trade secrets or other confidential materials, a court may enjoin him from using information obtained from a former employer if it is shown that he obtained that information by wrongful means amounting to an egregious breach of trust and confidence, such as theft. Leo Silfen, Inc., 29 N.Y.2d 387, 328 N.Y.S.2d 423, 278 N.E.2d 636; accord Ivy Mar Co., 907 F. Supp. at 560; Panther Systems II, Ltd. v. Panther Computer Systems, Inc., 783 F. Supp. 53, 66-67 \(E.D.N.Y. 1991\) The rationale for issuing an injunction in such cases is that the ex-employee has breached a fiduciary duty to the employer by engaging in misconduct during the course of his employment. Leo Silfen, Inc., 328 N.Y.S.2d at 426.

Here, there is no evidence that Katzman purloined information concerning [\[\*26\]](#) Bijan's vendors. Moreover, although Katzman possessed documents belonging to Bijan containing customer information, there is no evidence that Katzman purposefully took these documents from Bijan. Rather, the evidence shows that he retained certain materials following his resignation and returned them upon being accused of their wrongful removal; the evidence does not suggest that Katzman still has any Bijan documents. This conduct does not amount to the kind of studied and wrongful behavior necessary to implicate a breach of the fiduciary duty. See Leo Silfen, Inc., 328 N.Y.S.2d at 426; Ruesch Intl., Inc. v. MacCormack, 222 A.D.2d 343, 635 N.Y.S.2d 226, 227 \(App. Div. 1995\) (where defendant "took" documents memorializing plaintiff's allegedly confidential customer information, but returned them upon being "accused by plaintiff of illegal removal," evidence is insufficient to show egregious breach of trust and confidence necessary to form breach of fiduciary duty).

III. KATZMAN'S MOTION

Katzman moves to enjoin Bijan from persisting in alleged anticompetitive and tortious behavior. Specifically, Katzman maintains that Bijan has engaged in systematic efforts [\[\*27\]](#) to intimidate and coerce vendors to keep them from dealing with Katzman and Harrison James. Such behavior, Bijan maintains, amounts to (1) tortious interference with contract, (2) tortious interference with precontractual relations, and (3) violations of federal and state antitrust law. Bijan counters that Katzman has failed to establish the elements required to obtain a preliminary injunction. For the following reasons, the Court denies the motion.

First, in order HN14[<sup>18</sup>] to establish tortious interference with contract, a party must show proof of (1) the existence of a valid contract between the plaintiff and a third party, (2) the defendant's knowledge of that contract, (3) the defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach that contract, and (4) damages. Finley v. Giacobbe, 79 F.3d 1285, 1294 \(2d Cir. 1996\); Kronos Inc. v. AVX Corp., 81 N.Y.2d 90, 595 N.Y.S.2d 931, 934, 612 N.E.2d 289 \(Ct. App. 1993\). In addition, the plaintiff must establish that the motive for the interference was "improper." M.J. Guard-Life Corp. v. S. Parker Hardware Mfg. Corp., 50 N.Y.2d 183, 428 N.Y.S.2d 628, 632 & n.2, 406 N.E.2d 445 \(Ct. App. 1980\) (listing factors to be considered [\[\*28\]](#) in determining whether motive was improper); see also M.J. & K. Co., Inc. v. Matthew Bender and Co., Inc., 220 A.D.2d 488, 631 N.Y.S.2d 938, 940 \(App. Div. 1995\) (stating that in order to commit tort of intentional interference with contract, one's motive must be "solely malicious").

Here, Katzman offers proof of only one agreement between it and a vendor, namely Hettabretz. Even there, however, there is no written signed contract between the entities, and it is unclear whether an enforceable contract existed. See New York v. SCA Services, Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12416, 83 Civ. 6402, 1993 WL 355348, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 8, 1993) (discussing whether purchase order constitutes enforceable contract). Additionally, there is no evidence demonstrating that Bijan was aware of that agreement; the evidence only shows that Pakzad knew that Katzman had approached various manufacturers to persuade them to sell to him. Moreover, the evidence does not show that Bijan's motive in informing vendors that he would cease purchasing from them should they sell to Harrison James was "improper." Rather, it seems fair for him to desire not to offer the same goods as Harrison James -- especially given Bijan's desire [*29] to offer relatively unique merchandise and the fact that Harrison James is located around the corner from Bijan's New York store.

Similarly, Katzman fails to establish a likelihood of success or sufficiently serious questions going to the merits on its claim for tortious interference with precontractual relations. Such HN15 [↑] a claim is "very difficult to sustain," Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Foundation, 890 F. Supp. 250, 258 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\), and will not lie absent a showing that the action complained of was motivated solely by malice or a desire to inflict injury by unlawful means rather than by self-interest or other economic considerations. Id.; M.J. Guard-Life Corp., 428 N.Y.S.2d at 632-633. Thus, where a party's interest is intended even partially to advance its own interests, the misconduct must rise to the level of fraudulent or criminal acts. Kahn v. Salomon Bros. Inc., 813 F. Supp. 191, 195 \(E.D.N.Y. 1993\). The evidence fails to show that Bijan was motivated solely by malice when he informed various vendors that he would no longer do business with them should they decide to sell to Harrison James.

Lastly, Katzman also fails to show a likelihood of success or [*30] sufficiently serious questions going to the merits of its claim grounded in federal and state antitrust law. In order HN16 [↑] to state a claim under section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, Katzman must at least show that Bijan's alleged actions had an "actual adverse effect" on competition as a whole in the relevant market; the overarching standard is whether Bijan's behavior "diminished overall competition, and hence consumer welfare." K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 126 \(2d Cir. 1995\); Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 966 F.2d 537, 543 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 \(1993\). Thus, Katzman must show more than simple injury resulting from Bijan's conduct; "without some evidence of an adverse impact on competition in either the interbrand or intrabrand market, the fact that customers induce a seller to refrain from dealing with another potential customer in order to limit competition does not satisfy a plaintiff's initial burden under § 1." K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc., 61 F.3d at 130 (citing Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 133-34 \(2d Cir. 1978\)); see also Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 797 \(2d Cir. 1994\) (private antitrust plaintiffs must show more than that the defendant's conduct caused them injury).

Here, Katzman merely demonstrates that Bijan's actions caused him to lose potentially lucrative contracts with Hettabretz, Saintandrews, and Marol; he shows only that Bijan, acting as a customer of the vendors, individually persuaded them not to sell to Harrison James, another potential customer. He does not establish any adverse effect on competition in the interbrand or intrabrand market and indeed submits no evidence demonstrating that his injury reflects the anticompetitive effect of Bijan's alleged antitrust violations. As a result, he fails to raise sufficiently serious questions on the merits of his antitrust claim, let alone a likelihood of success, justifying the issuance of the injunctive relief sought. See K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc., 61 F.3d at 127.<sup>10</sup>

[*32] CONCLUSION

---

<sup>10</sup> HN17 [↑] New York State's antitrust act, the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 (McKinney 1988), was modeled on the Sherman Act, see State v. Mobil Oil Corp., 38 N.Y.2d 460, 381 N.Y.S.2d 426, 344 N.E.2d 357 \(1976\), and generally is construed in accordance with that act, Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 N.Y.2d 327, 525 N.Y.S.2d 816, 820, 520 N.E.2d 535 \(1988\). Since Katzman identifies no state policy or difference in the statutory language that would justify construing the Donnelly Act differently from the Sherman Act in this case, his motion under New York antitrust law fails for the same reasons it does under federal antitrust law.

For the foregoing reasons, both motions are denied. The parties are directed to appear on January 10, 1996 in Courtroom 618, 40 Foley Square, New York, New York 10007 at 4:30 p.m. for a pretrial conference in order to discuss the further conduct of the case.

Dated: New York, New York

January 6, 1997

BARBARA S. JONES

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

McIver v. General Mills

Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division Six

January 6, 1997, Filed

No. B097951

Reporter

1997 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 5 *; 1997 WL 314376

SHERRIE ANN McIVER et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. GENERAL MILLS, INC., etc., et al., Defendants and Respondents. ELISA A. MORGAN et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. GENERAL MILLS, INC., etc., et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Notice: NOT TO BE PUBLISHED IN OFFICIAL REPORTS. CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT, RULE 8.1115\(a\), PROHIBITS COURTS AND PARTIES FROM CITING OR RELYING ON OPINIONS NOT CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED, EXCEPT AS SPECIFIED BY RULE 8.1115\(b\). THIS OPINION HAS NOT BEEN CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED FOR THE PURPOSES OF RULE 8.1115.

Prior History: [*1] Superior Court of Santa Barbara County. Super. Ct. No. 206666, Super. Ct. No. 207438. Arnold D. Gowans, Judge *.

Core Terms

---

discovery, cereal, prices, conspiracy, summary judgment, consumer, continuance, antitrust, increases, summary judgment motion, appellants', products, Foods, manufacturers, protective order, minimum price, documents, meetings, trial court, grant summary judgment, Cartwright Act, complaints, collusive, retail, alleged conspiracy, wholesale price, no evidence, allegations, nonmoving, agreeing

Counsel: Cappello & McCann, Michael W. McCann, J. Paul Gignac and Wendy D. Welkom for Plaintiffs and Appellants.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Robert S. Warren, Daniel G. Swanson, Antoinette D. Paglia and Charles F. Kester for Defendant and Respondent General Mills, Inc.

Steefel, Levitt & Weiss, Leonard R. Stein and Eugene M. Pak for Defendant and Respondent The Quaker Oats Company.

Arnold & Porter, Susan J. Eliot and Margaret M. Morrow; Donna E. Patterson, pro hac vice, and Nancy M. Olson, pro hac vice, for Defendant and Respondent Kraft Foods, Inc.

Furth, Fahrner & Mason, Frederick P. Furth, Daniel S. Mason and Michele C. Jackson for Defendant and Respondent Kellogg Company.

Judges: STONE, P. J.; GILBERT, J., YEGAN, J. concurred.

Opinion by: STONE

---

* Assigned by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

Opinion

---

Sherrie Ann McIver and Elisa A. Morgan on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated appeal from the judgment entered on grant of summary judgment by the Santa Barbara County Superior Court in favor of respondents General Mills, Inc., The Quaker Oats Company, Kraft Foods, Inc., and Kellogg Company. They [*2] contend that the trial court erred in granting a protective order to enable respondents to move for summary judgment and in granting summary judgment and denying the requested continuance. We affirm.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

In March and April of 1995, appellants McIver and Morgan filed their complaints for restraint of trade and unfair competition against respondents, the nation's four leading ready-to-eat (RTE) cereal manufacturers, alleging a price-fixing scheme in violation of the Cartwright Act and the Unfair Competition Act. (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700, 16750 et seq., 17200 et seq.) The complaints alleged that: 1) defendants pursued a common course of conduct, acted in concert, and conspired with one another to accomplish the alleged offenses; 2) defendants collectively control nearly 85 percent of the market for cold breakfast cereal; 3) during the past decade the price paid by consumers has risen by 90 percent even though production costs have decreased over the same period of time; 4) this price escalation is twice the price hike which has occurred with respect to other foods and "vastly exceeds the rate of inflation experienced during that period of time;" 5) as a result of continuous [*3] price escalation, defendants reap a profit margin of approximately 17 percent of the price of their cereal products, among the highest profit margins in the consumer food industry and three times higher than the average profit margin in the manufacturing industry; 6) the retail outlets pass on all of the supra-competitive fixed prices to consumers; 7) beginning on a date unknown and continuing to date of complaint, defendants "entered into and engaged in a contract, combination and conspiracy to suppress competition and unreasonably restrain trade and commerce by fixing and raising the prices of cereal products sold to consumers in the State of California;" 8) "This unlawful conduct, combination and conspiracy consisted of a continuing agreement, understanding and concert of action between and among Defendants and the Doe Defendants to fix, raise and maintain the prices of cereal products by: [¶] (a) agreeing to establish minimum price increases for cereal products; [¶] (b) agreeing to implement the minimum price increases; and [¶] (c) implementing the minimum price increases by means of a price leadership scheme;" 9) defendants combined and conspired to do these things by "(a) participating [*4] in meetings and discussions about the prices of cereal products; [¶] (b) agreeing, in the course of those meetings and discussions, on minimum price increases for cereal products; [¶] (c) agreeing, in the course of those meetings and discussions, that the agreed upon minimum price increases would be implemented by means of a price leadership scheme; [¶] (d) agreeing to adhere to the minimum price increases established for cereal products; and [¶] (e) monitoring and enforcing compliance with the agreements to implement minimum price increases for cereal products."

Respondents demurred to the complaints. The court overruled the demurrers and respondents filed their answers. May 19, 1995, Kellogg propounded document requests requiring McIver to produce all documents supporting the conspiracy allegations, and General Mills submitted special interrogatories to McIver asking her to identify all facts supporting the conspiracy allegations.<sup>1</sup> In response to the questions to identify each and every meeting at which defendants, or any of them allegedly participated in discussions about the price of cereal products, appellant McIver stated, "At present, Plaintiff is aware of no more specific information [*5] regarding any such meeting beyond that which is alleged in her Complaint. Plaintiff anticipates that, after a reasonable opportunity for discovery, she will be able to provide additional identifying information concerning such meetings." She produced four documents in response to the document request: 1) a report entitled "Consumers In A Box: [¶] A Consumer Report On Cereal Issued By [¶] Representative Sam Gejdenson, MC [¶] Representative Charles Schumer, MC" dated March 7, 1995; 2) a letter written by the two congressmen to the United States Attorney General Janet Reno urging her to investigate possible antitrust violations by the leading firms in the RTE cereal industry; 3) the transcript of a press conference by Representatives Schumer and Gejdenson on cereal pricing March 7, 1995; and 4) a copy of State v.

---

<sup>1</sup> The McIver and Morgan complaints were not as yet consolidated.

Kraft General Foods, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1995) 926 F.Supp. 321, discussing the State of New York's complaint seeking divestiture or rescission pursuant to section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18), section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) and the Donnelly Act (N.Y.Gen. Bus. Law, §§ 340-344) of Kraft's acquisition of RTE cereal assets of Nabisco in which the court entered judgment [\*6] in favor of defendants. In response to the question to identify all witnesses known to her who evidence any of the contentions set forth in paragraphs 35 or 36 regarding the alleged conspiracy and meetings, McIver listed as individuals who may possess information Representative Sam Gejdenson, Representative Charles Schumer, and Ronald Coterill, the State's expert witness in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., supra.<sup>2</sup>

In June 1995, McIver served on all respondents separate sets of form and special interrogatories, as well as requests for admissions and for documents. McIver requested all documents concerning pricing and other decisions for a 10-year period, including all documents concerning the State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., action, and names and addresses of each person employed between January 1, 1985, and the date of the request having any responsibility for maintaining and enforcing any practices regarding monitoring, tracking, or recording prices, participating in any investigations [\*7] of possible violations of federal antitrust laws, California antitrust laws, or consumer protection statutes, or who was present at any meeting in which there was any communication that related in any way to any actual, proposed or prospective prices of cereal.

General Mills filed a motion for a protective order, joined by all other defendants, seeking a stay of discovery pending the disposition of summary judgment motions to be filed based upon appellant's alleged factually devoid discovery responses. Appellant McIver opposed the motion, arguing that the discovery statutes and California case law provided for discovery in consumer class actions, and that without such discovery the consumer, who otherwise would never have evidence of the defendants' meetings, could never proceed. McIver also argued that the defendants had failed to establish good cause or sufficient burden to limit discovery. August 11, 1995, the court granted the motion. The court also granted the motion to consolidate the McIver and Morgan complaints.

In August 1995, respondents each filed motions for summary judgment, arguing that appellant McIver's interrogatory answers had effectively admitted that appellant had [\*8] no evidence of secret meetings or agreements to establish the conspiracy alleged. Appellants opposed the motions and requested a nine-month continuance to conduct discovery against respondents pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 437c, subdivision \(h\).<sup>3</sup> The trial court granted summary judgment to all respondents.<sup>4</sup>

DISCUSSION

1. No Error in Granting Protective Order Pending Summary Judgment

Appellants assert the trial court "manifestly abused its discretion when it issued a protective order for the sole purpose of shielding defendants from disclosing relevant information prior to hearing the defendants' yet-to-be filed summary judgment motions." They argue that since McIver's pleadings successfully withstood demurrer, she had an "absolute right" to proceed with discovery. Because of the similarity in California and federal discovery law, federal decisions have been considered persuasive absent contrary California law. [\*9] (Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal.App.4th 1282, 1288.) Under neither federal nor California law does a litigant have an absolute, unfettered right to discovery.

The Legislature intended that discovery be allowed whenever consistent with justice and public policy. (Irvington-Moore, Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 733, 738; accord, Brigante v. Huang (1993) 20 Cal.App.4th 1569, 1582.) To further that end, the trial court has the power to enter a protective order to protect a party from

<sup>2</sup> The court in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., found Coterill's "econometric analysis" "too flawed to be reliable." (926 F.Supp. 321, 358.)

<sup>3</sup> All further statutory references are to the Code of Civil Procedure unless otherwise stated.

<sup>4</sup> The court stated, "I just feel that, you know, to require the defendants to produce what you want them to produce, it's my position that there's no showing of collusion."

unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense. (Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 10 Cal.App.4th 1282, 1287; see also §§ 2017, subd. (c), 2030, subd. (e), 2031, subd. (e).) The court's ruling, like any discovery ruling, will not be disturbed absent abuse of discretion. (Liberty Mutual, supra, at pp. 1286-1287.)

Contrary to appellants' assertions, the court had good cause to stay discovery pending the hearing of respondents' summary judgment motions. A stay of discovery may be imposed whenever the interests of justice so require. (See Haskel, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1995\) 33 Cal.App.4th 963, 978, 980-981, in which the court [*10] ordered a stay of discovery by an insurer prior to the insured's summary judgment motion in a declaratory relief action where such discovery might prejudice the interests of the defendant insured in the underlying liability suit.) The record belies appellants' contention that respondents never argued the necessity of a protective order on grounds other than the pending of summary judgment motions. All respondents pointed out the breadth of the discovery requested by McIver which covered a 10-year period.

In particular, Kraft's attorney declared that responding to the requested discovery would be an undue burden and expense and explained that in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., Kraft had to hire over 20 temporary employees and spend over $1.5 million to comply with discovery in that case. (See West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court \(1961\) 56 Cal.2d 407, 417.) Kraft's counsel also explained that the discovery undertaken in the New York case would not alleviate its burden here because the issues were broader in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., and two years had passed. Kraft would essentially have to begin again to sort through documents to comply with McIver's requests and would [*11] be in no better position than the other respondents. Consequently, there was a sufficient showing of good cause for a temporary stay of discovery.

2. No Error in Denying Continuance and Granting Summary Judgment

To obtain summary judgment, a moving party must establish the right to the entry of judgment as a matter of law. (§ 437c, subd. (c).) Recent amendments to section 437c indicate a move toward the federal standard governing burden of proof on summary judgment motions codified in Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 56, as interpreted in [Celotex Corp. v. Catrett \(1986\) 477 U.S. 317 \[91 L.Ed.2d 265\]](#). (Hunter v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. \(1995\) 37 Cal.App.4th 1282, 1286.) Although the moving party always bears the initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, if the nonmoving party bears the burden of proof on an issue at trial, the moving party may simply point to the absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. (Ibid.) The burden then shifts to the nonmoving party to set forth specific facts which prove the existence of a triable issue of material fact. (Ibid.; Union Bank v. Superior Court \(1995\) 31 Cal.App.4th 573, 590.) A moving [*12] defendant may utilize the plaintiff's factually vague discovery responses to point to the absence of evidence to support the plaintiff's case. (Leslie G. v. Perry & Associates \(1996\) 43 Cal.App.4th 472, 482.) "A complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." (Hunter, supra, at p. 1286.) We review the trial court's ruling de novo. (Union Bank, supra, at p. 579.)

Stripped of hyperbole, appellants' position is that respondents could not be entitled to summary judgment until appellants had undertaken discovery and that summary judgment should not be granted where the issue is conspiracy in a consumer class action. Section 437c, subdivision \(h\), provides that "[i]f it appears from the affidavits submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment . . . that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented, the court shall deny the motion, or order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or discovery to be had or may make any other order as may be just." The trial court was aware of this provision and brought it to appellant McIver's attention [*13] at the hearing on the protective order.

Appellants contend that this section is mandatory and that they made the proper showing for a continuance of the summary judgment motions to conduct discovery. They argue that they were unable to obtain evidence to prove the existence of a conspiracy only because they were precluded from so doing by the protective order. Thus, they assert, they were entitled to a continuance pursuant to section 437c, subdivision \(h\).

Appellants were entitled to a continuance under section 437c, subdivision \(h\) only if the conditions recited in that section were met. (Wachs v. Curry \(1993\) 13 Cal.App.4th 616, 623.) The party opposing summary judgment must show by affidavit: 1) the facts to be obtained are essential to opposing the motion; 2) there is reason to believe such facts may exist; and 3) the reasons why additional time is needed to obtain these facts. (Ibid.; see also American Continental Ins. Co. v. C & Z Timber Co. \(1987\) 195 Cal.App.3d 1271, 1280.) Courts have construed section 437c, subdivision \(h\) to mean that the party seeking a continuance show that the proposed discovery "... would have led to "facts essential to justify opposition."'" (Scott v. CIBA Vision Corp. \(1995\) 38 Cal.App.4th 307, 326.)

Appellants' [*14] counsel, J. Paul Gignac, declared in opposition to summary judgment and in support of a continuance for discovery that the complaint was filed "on the heels of a comprehensive report on the Ready-To-Eat ('RTE') cereal industry prepared by two respected members of the United States House of Representatives" and the findings made in that congressional report were "sufficiently compelling" that the two congressmen made a written request that the United States Attorney General investigate possible antitrust violations by respondents. Mr. Gignac then enumerated the same allegations made in the complaints as facts establishing "a strong likelihood that evidence exists which, if discovered, will enable Plaintiffs to establish collusive behavior on the part of the defendants with respect to the fixing, raising and maintaining of prices for RTE cereal . . ." He also attached a copy of the United States District Court's decision in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., supra, and referred to facts in that decision to establish that General Mills and Kellogg are generally the first among the major manufacturers of RTE cereal to announce changes in the wholesale prices for RTE cereal, the other [*15] manufacturers of RTE cereal often follow the wholesale price increases initiated by General Mills or Kellogg, and it is profit-maximizing for other manufacturers of RTE cereal to follow the lead of General Mills and Kellogg on wholesale price increases for RTE cereal. (926 F.Supp. 321, 342.) He concluded that he intended to conduct depositions of those individuals identified by defendants in his propounded discovery in order to demonstrate that defendants were present at meetings or otherwise communicated among themselves with respect to the prices of RTE cereal; agreed to certain periodic minimum price increases for RTE cereal; implemented price increases for RTE cereal through a price leadership scheme whereby each defendant expressly or implicitly agreed to "follow the leader" in response to any increase in the prices; and monitored one another in order to ensure that each defendant was "falling in line" and implementing the agreed upon periodic minimum price increases.

We agree with respondents that appellants' request for a continuance did not meet the standard set forth in section 437c, subdivision \(h\). Gignac's declaration contained the same allegations as appellants' complaints, [*16] which were taken from the congressional report. Many of these alleged facts were rejected by the court in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., upon which appellants also relied to support their allegations.<sup>5</sup> Respondents produced evidence that the United States Attorney General's Office declined to investigate respondents, based in part on the court's findings in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc. The Attorney General's response to the congressmen's request stated that, "After a full trial on the merits, Judge Wood found that there was no evidence of collusion in this industry, that the data relied upon to argue that industry prices were high were misleading, because they failed to reflect the effect of promotions, that concentration in this industry was declining, and that private label cereals were a significant and growing presence in this market." A trial court can consider the extensive discovery completed in other cases on the same subject in deciding whether additional discovery would alter conclusions already reached on the subject. (See Artiglio v. Corning Inc. \(1996\) 49 Cal.App.4th 845, 859-860.)

<sup>5</sup> Respondents objected to the congressional report and news conference as incompetent [*17] hearsay. They did not obtain a ruling from the court on their objections. Appellants now contend that we may not consider the facts and findings in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., because judicial notice of the content of court records is appropriate only when the existence of the record itself precludes contravention or where collateral estoppel or res judicata applies. (See Columbia Casualty Co. v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. \(1991\) 231 Cal.App.3d 457, 473; Sosinsky v. Grant \(1992\) 6 Cal.App.4th 1548, 1569.) Appellants wish to rely on the decision for their purposes but preclude respondents from doing so. Because all parties failed to obtain rulings on their evidentiary objections, the objections are waived and not preserved for appeal. (Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center \(1993\) 6 Cal.4th 666, 670, fn. 1.) "Although many of the objections appear meritorious, for purposes of this appeal we must view the objectionable evidence as having been admitted in evidence and therefore as part of the record." (Ibid.) In any case, even if the "facts" or findings in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., are not subject to judicial notice, we look to them to ascertain whether appellants' [*18] reliance upon that opinion to support their causes of action is well founded.

Under the Cartwright Act, a court looks to whether the prices were in fact artificially maintained rather than to the economic reasonableness of the prices. (San Diego Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court \(1996\) 13 Cal.4th 893, 919, citing Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1993\) 14 Cal.App.4th 1224, 1246.) Federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable to problems arising under the Cartwright Act. (Roth v. Rhodes \(1994\) 25 Cal.App.4th 530, 542; Biljac Associates v. First Interstate Bank \(1990\) 218 Cal.App.3d 1410, 1420.) Concerted activity is essential to a Cartwright Act or Sherman Act claim because the acts prohibit only contracts, combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade. (Biljac Associates, supra, at p. 1423.) Conscious parallel pricing is not in itself unlawful and, without more, will not support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. (Id., at p. 1428; see also Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson \(1993\) 509 U.S. 593, 125 L.Ed.2d 168, 189; Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co. \(9th Cir. 1995\) 51 F.3d 1421, 1442.) Nor is an oligopoly per se illegal under the Sherman [*19] Act. (Rebel Oil Co., Inc., supra, at pp. 1442-1443.)<sup>6</sup> This is so even where an oligopolistic market structure consisting of a small group of manufacturers engages in consciously parallel pricing of an identical product. (Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas \(7th Cir. 1992\) 971 F.2d 37, 50.)

To state a cause of action for conspiracy, the complaint must allege 1) formation and operation of the conspiracy, 2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and 3) damage resulting from such act or acts. (Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court, supra, 14 Cal.App.4th 1224, 1236.) However, simply because appellants successfully opposed demurrers does not immunize them from summary judgment. A demurrer raises only a question of law, as the allegations of fact contained in the complaint must be accepted as true. (Id., at p. 1231.)

Appellants assert that courts are chary about granting summary judgment in antitrust conspiracy cases because the essential facts are in the possession of the defendants. It is true that, by its nature, [*20] a conspiracy to fix prices in violation of antitrust law is a secret act whose effects are public. (Union Carbide Corp. v. Superior Court \(1984\) 36 Cal.3d 15, 26.) There is a "practical inability of a typical plaintiff to allege at the outset of its Cartwright Act claim the full details of an alleged price fixing agreement. Because of the well-known wrongfulness of price fixing agreements, conspirators rarely make such agreements in the open or document their illicit agreements. Rather, it is usually the situation that such agreements are made covertly, thereby making it difficult for a plaintiff to allege the full details of such price fixing agreement prior to its ability to engage in the 'rock-turning' allowed by discovery." (Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court, supra, 14 Cal.App.4th 1224, 1239.) Nonetheless, even though the requisite concurrence and knowledge may be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relation of the parties, and the interests of the coconspirators and circumstances, a reasonable inference may not be based on suspicion alone, or speculation, or conjecture. (Wilcox v. Superior Court \(1994\) 27 Cal.App.4th 809, 828.)

The discovery responses and declaration [*21] in opposition to summary judgment and for a continuance reveal that the conspiracy allegations have no factual basis. If we consider the court's discussion in State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., that decision explains that RTE cereal manufacturers sell their cereals to retailers, not to consumers, and compete on the bases of price, quantity, new product introductions, promotions, coupons, and advertising. The district court found no evidence of close coordination in price as cereals are priced at widely varying wholesale prices per pound. (926 F.Supp. 321, 342.) Although wholesale prices for RTE cereal products are set by manufacturers, retail prices are set completely independently by retailers based on the retailers' own competitive circumstances, including their retail competition, overhead, financial incentives and pricing strategies. (Id., at p. 344.) The court found no evidence that RTE cereal manufacturers can or do punish competitors or that profit levels in the RTE cereals industry reflect impermissible market power or collusive behavior. (Id., at pp. 350-351.) The court also found no evidence of close coordination in price. (Id., at pp. 342-343.)

Antitrust law limits the range [*22] of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a Sherman antitrust case. (Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio \(1986\) 475 U.S. 574, 588) "[C]onduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." (Ibid.; Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp. \(1984\) 465 U.S. 752, 764.) Appellants had to produce evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." (Matsushita, supra, at p. 588.) Appellants did not do so.

---

<sup>6</sup> An oligopoly is a "market situation in which each of a few producers affects but does not control the market." (Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dict. (1983) p. 822.)

If we disregard State v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., as appellants would now have us do, appellants' factual underpinnings must rest upon the congressional report and the two congressmen's press conference. Although that report speaks of high profits and low costs in relation to other industries, the "facts" reported are "as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy." (Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio, supra, 475 U.S. 574, 588.) Appellants point out that the lack of merit of a conspiracy cause of action may not be proved simply by the nonmoving party's admission of unawareness of communications [*23] which he or she would not have been present to observe. (Villa v. McFerren (1995) 35 Cal.App.4th 733, 749.) Nonetheless, "[a]n entity that engages in legitimate business . . . cannot be deemed a coconspirator, absent clear evidence of an agreement to join in the tortious conduct." (Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp. (1995) 40 Cal.App.4th 1571, 1590.) Appellants failed to demonstrate how the purported "economic facts" upon which they rely are consistent with an inference of illegal conspiracy, and how those facts are more reasonably or probably construed in favor of appellants' conspiracy theory as opposed to being equally or more consistent with a finding of lawful conduct.<sup>7</sup>

A plaintiff's entitlement to discovery prior to a ruling on a motion for summary judgment is not unlimited and may be curtailed when it is not likely to produce the facts needed by plaintiff to withstand a motion for summary judgment. (Paul Kadair, Inc. v. Sony Corp. of America (5th Cir. 1983) 694 F.2d 1017, 1029-1030.) [*24] The court did not err in finding that appellants were simply attempting to engage in a nine-month fishing expedition (the length of their requested continuance) to substantiate their allegations and that to allow the requested discovery would not only be unduly burdensome and expensive to respondents, but was not justified by appellants' supporting documents. (Artiglio v. Corning Inc., supra, 49 Cal.App.4th 845, 859-860.)

Appellants decry the grant of summary judgment as signaling the death knell to consumer class-action antitrust suits which, they contend, depend upon discovery to unearth defendant conspirators' collusive activity. They interpret the court's ruling too broadly. There simply is no exception in the summary judgment statutes for class actions or antitrust suits. Appellants failed to offer any evidence to support their contention that Quaker was involved in a collusive price-fixing scheme. In fact, the documents they produced tended to negate that proposition. The congressmen, in their press conference, stated that Quaker's pricing and competitive practices were not in line with the other respondents. Appellants' allegations against the other respondents were based on [*25] speculation and conjecture. Although it may be unusual to grant summary judgment before the plaintiff has undertaken discovery, it was neither an abuse of discretion nor a violation of section 437c to do so here.

Appellants assert that the trial court did not provide an adequate statement of reasons for its decision. This assertion is without merit. Section 437c does not require the court to issue a statement of decision when granting the motion. (Dameshghi v. Texaco Refining & Marketing, Inc. (1992) 3 Cal.App.4th 1262, 1284, disapproved on other grounds in Trope v. Katz (1995) 11 Cal.4th 274, 286-287, 292.) We review the ruling and not the rationale. (Transamerica Occidental Life Ins. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1991) 232 Cal.App.3d 1048, 1053-1054.) Due to our independent review of a summary judgment, a trial court's failure to refer to the evidence in its ruling is not dispositive. (Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal.App.4th 168, 178.) The court stated at the hearing that there was no showing of collusion and that reliance upon the "Consumers In A Box" report was insufficient. The court's order indicated that it had considered the papers submitted and arguments and granted [*26] summary judgment on the complaint brought under the Cartwright Act. The basis of the court's ruling was evident.

The judgments are affirmed. Costs to respondents.

STONE, P. J.

<sup>7</sup> Appellants fare no better with their Business and Professions Code section 17200 claims (unfair business practices) as they are derivative of and based upon the conspiracy allegations. (Biljac Associates v. First Interstate Bank, supra, 218 Cal.App.3d 1410, 1433.)

We concur:

GILBERT, J.

YEGAN, J.

---

End of Document

Roncari Dev. Co. v. Gmg Enters.

Superior Court of Connecticut, Judicial District of Hartford - New Britain, At Hartford

January 8, 1997, Memorandum Filed

File No. CV910394934

Reporter

45 Conn. Supp. 408 *; 1997 Conn. Super. LEXIS 402 **; 718 A.2d 1025 ***

RONCARI DEVELOPMENT COMPANY v. GMG ENTERPRISES, INC., ET AL.

Subsequent History: [**1] As Amended November 10, 1998.

Prior History: Memorandum on the defendants' motions to strike the plaintiff's revised complaint.

Disposition: Motions denied.

Core Terms

---

antitrust, defendants', competitor, valet parking, allegations, airport, sham, revised, anti trust law, treble damages, lawsuit, courts, unfair, monopolize, anticompetitive, unfair methods of competition, antitrust violation, restraint of trade, conspiracy, provisions, consumer, damages, relevant market, federal trade, practices, singular, plural, prices, prevent competition, quotation

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

HN1 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to strike contests the legal sufficiency of the allegations of the challenged pleading to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Conn. Gen. Prac. Book, R. App. P. § 512. In ruling on a motion to strike, the court is limited to the facts alleged in the complaint. The court must take the facts to be those alleged in the plaintiff's complaint and construe the complaint in the manner most favorable to sustaining its legal sufficiency. A motion to strike admits all facts well pleaded. If the facts provable under its allegations would support a cause of action, then the motion to strike must fail. The challenged pleading is to be read broadly, not strictly limited to the allegations, but also including the facts necessarily implied by and fairly provable under them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

**HN2** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields from the Sherman Antitrust Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN3** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

It is generally recognized that there may be situations where the combination of parties to assert legal claims is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor and the application of the Sherman Act will be justified. In those situations, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine affords the colluding parties no protection from federal antitrust laws.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

**HN4** Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

See Conn. Const. art. 1, § 10.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN5** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

For purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be sham regardless of subjective intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN6** Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Pertaining to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, a new test is outlined as follows: First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability. Under the new test, evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transform otherwise legitimate activity into a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

45 Conn. Supp. 408, *408A 1997 Conn. Super. LEXIS 402, **1A 18 A.2d 1025, ***1025

**HN7** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Pertaining to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the plaintiff must plead facts which would support a claim that the litigation is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

**HN8** Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Pertaining to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon. Essentially, then, a sham situation involves a defendant whose activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action at all.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > State Regulation

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

**HN9** Costs & Attorney Fees, State Regulation

The right to bring a treble damages action for alleged violation of the Connecticut Antitrust Act (Act), Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-24 et seq., arises under Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-35, which provides that the state, or any person, including, but not limited to, a consumer, injured in its business or property by any violation of the provisions of this chapter shall recover treble damages, together with a reasonable attorney's fee and costs. To plead a sufficient cause of action under this section, a plaintiff must allege both that the defendants engaged in at least one violation of the provisions of this chapter--i.e., of the Act, which is codified at Conn. Gen. Stat. ch. 624--and that the plaintiff is a person injured in its business or property by said violation. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-35.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN10** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

**HN11** Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-27.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN12 [ ] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-28.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN13 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Since the Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-24 et seq., is based upon the federal antitrust laws, its provisions must ordinarily be construed in light of binding federal precedents interpreting and applying parallel provisions of federal law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Remedies, Damages

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN15 [ ] Legislation, Interpretation

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-44b.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > General Overview

HN16 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

A literal reading of 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) is inappropriate. Though the statute's language, like that of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-35, is broad enough to encompass every harm that can be attributed directly or indirectly to the consequences of an antitrust violation, that language must be read more restrictively in light of established common-law principles, including the doctrines of foreseeability and proximate cause, directness of injury, and certainty of damages, which the statute's framers expected courts to apply when construing it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN17 [+] Private Actions, Remedies

Pertaining to the issue of which cases are covered by 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) and which are excluded from it, lower federal courts must analyze each case individually, evaluating the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them, and deciding whether the law affords a remedy in the circumstances presented, in light of factors bearing appropriately on that issue, as identified in previously decided cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN18 [+] Private Actions, Standing

Several factors affecting judicial recognition of the plaintiff's antitrust claims include the following. First, , though not dispositive, is the alleged causal connection between an antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff. Second, also not dispositive, is the plaintiff's claim that the defendants intended to cause the particular harm. Third, which may be controlling, is the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN19 [+] Private Actions, Remedies

When an antitrust plaintiff has not yet entered the relevant market, more difficult questions naturally arise as to whether he has truly suffered any injury, much less an injury to his ability to compete in that market, which the antitrust laws were enacted to protect. If a plaintiff only contemplated entering the relevant market before the antitrust violation occurred, his claim of competitive injury, like his business plans themselves, is merely speculative, and thus is not the proper subject of a treble damages action. If, on the other hand, a plaintiff with well-developed plans, available means and a definite intention to make immediate entry into that market is prevented from so doing by the anticompetitive conduct of the defendants, then it, no less than those already competing with the defendants in the market, is the very sort of person who is classically entitled to bring a statutory treble damages action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN20 [+] Private Actions, Remedies

When a potential competitor brings an antitrust action, the court's task is to distinguish between a serious potential competitor who has illegally been kept out of the market and the inchoate business enterprise with a mere hope of entry. A prospective participant in the market suffers an antitrust injury if it has taken substantial and demonstrable steps to enter an industry but has been thwarted in that purpose by an antitrust violation.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN21 [blue document icon] Legislation, Interpretation

Singular and plural usages in state statutes may be used interchangeably where the broader statutory context supports such a reading. On this precise point, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 1-1\(f\) provides: Words importing the singular number may extend and be applied to several persons or things, and words importing the plural number may include the singular. It is true that the legal principle set forth in § 1-1\(f\) cannot be said to "require" that singular and plural forms have interchangeable effects. However, the principle is properly invoked and relied upon where the legislature's intent to give singular meanings to plural terms or plural meanings to singular terms is otherwise evidenced by the text or history of the relevant statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN22 [blue document icon] State Regulation, Claims

Though the language of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110b\(a\) unquestionably describes substantive violations of the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA), Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a et seq., in the plural, it does not, on its face, purport to require proof of multiple acts, practices, or methods of competition to establish a CUTPA violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN23 [blue document icon] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Each and every unfair method of competition, as well as each and every unfair or deceptive act or practice, is separately actionable as a violation of the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA), Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a et seq., by any person who suffers an ascertainable loss by reason thereof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN24 [blue document icon] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110g, which establishes the right to bring an action for money damages under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA), Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a et seq., describes the conduct necessary to recover such damages in the singular as follows: Any person who suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment of a method, act, or practice prohibited by Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110b, may bring an action to recover actual damages. The singular usage in the previously quoted statute leaves nothing to the imagination as to the conduct which is prohibited by § 42-110b. It makes plain that the plural language of § 42-110b prohibits single, as well as multiple or repeated acts, practices, and methods of competition.

45 Conn. Supp. 408, *408A 1997 Conn. Super. LEXIS 402, **1A 18 A.2d 1025, ***1025

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN25** Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The language of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110g clearly establishes that each such act, practice, and method of competition affords a proper basis for a damages action under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN26** Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110b.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

**HN27** Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Following the mandate of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a, Connecticut courts adopt the criteria set out in the "cigarette rule" by the Federal Trade Commission for determining when a practice is unfair: (1) Whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise--whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers (competitors or other businessmen).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN28** Public Enforcement, US Federal Trade Commission Actions

The Federal Trade Commission has broad powers to declare trade prices unfair, and this broad power is particularly well established with regard to trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

45 Conn. Supp. 408, *408A 1997 Conn. Super. LEXIS 402, **1A 18 A.2d 1025, ***1025

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > Creation of Trusts

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

A combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade is an unfair method of competition. The standards established by the anti-trust acts, and by the courts in construing and applying such acts, are the standards to be applied in determining whether particular acts amount to unfair methods of competition within the Federal Trade Commission Act, and in determining whether practices which are against public policy because of their dangerous tendency to hinder competition or create a monopoly constitute unfair methods of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN30 [blue icon] State Regulation, Claims

To prove a violation of the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA), Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a et seq., a plaintiff need not show that he suffered consumer injury. Instead, a competitor or other business person can maintain a CUTPA cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN31 [blue icon] State Regulation, Claims

The standards applicable to antitrust claims govern those applicable to similar conduct under the Federal Trade Commission Act, and thus, by extension, under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a et seq.

Counsel: Tyler, Cooper & Alcorn, for the plaintiff.

Nair & Levin, for the named defendant et al.

O'Connell, Flaherty, Attmore & Forsyth, for the defendant Northeast Parking, Inc.

Silver, Webb, Sweeney & Griffith for the defendant Northeast Parking, Inc., et al.

Dwyer, Sheridan & Fitzgerald, for the defendant Bradley Airport Valet Parking, Inc., et al.

No appearance for the defendants Joseph Scott Guilmartin and Bradley Air Parking Limited Partnership.

Judges: SHELDON, J.

Opinion by: SHELDON

Opinion

---

[*409] [***1026] SHELDON, J. In this case, plaintiff Roncari Development Company (Roncari), has sued seven defendants,<sup>1</sup> [*3] [***1027] all persons or entities allegedly involved in the airport valet parking business in and around Bradley International Airport (Bradley Airport) from 1987 or earlier, until the date this case was commenced.<sup>2</sup> The plaintiff [*410] seeks money damages and injunctive relief in connection with and as a result of the defendants' joint and concerted efforts, pursuant to a conspiracy to monopolize, restrict and/or prevent competition, and/or control prices [*2] in the local airport valet parking market to prevent the plaintiff from entering and competing in that market since 1989. In its four count revised complaint, the plaintiff alleges, more particularly, that the defendants pursued their anti-competitive design by jointly filing, maintaining and supporting by false and misleading testimony a groundless administrative appeal from the July 10, 1989 approval by the town of Windsor Locks zoning board of appeals (ZBA), of the plaintiff's application for a permit to construct a 2500 car valet parking facility on its thirty-two acre property directly across the road from Bradley Airport. As a result of the defendants' prosecution of their appeal, which the plaintiff has characterized as a "sham," the plaintiff claims that it has been delayed, hindered and/or prevented from using its property as an airport valet parking facility in competition with the defendants, lost income that would have derived from such use, and it incurred substantial costs, including attorney's fees, in opposing the appeal and otherwise protecting its interests.

The first and second counts of the revised complaint allege that the defendants engaged in the above described conduct in violation of the Connecticut Anti-trust Act, General Statutes § 35-24 et seq. The third count, which incorporates by reference all the allegations of the first two counts, alleges that the defendants' conduct constituted unfair methods of competition and/or unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of trade or business, in violation of the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA), General Statutes § 42-110a et seq. In this count, the plaintiff seeks both money damages for all losses allegedly caused by the [*411] defendants' conduct and injunctive relief to prevent the continuation and/or future repetition of such conduct. The fourth and final count of the revised complaint, which repeats all of the substantive allegations of the first three counts, claims that the defendants' joint and concerted efforts to prevent it from entering the airport [*4] valet parking market tortiously interfered with a reasonable business expectancy it has had ever since the ZBA approved its application to construct a valet parking facility on its property in July, 1989. In this count, like the third count, the plaintiff seeks both money damages and injunctive relief.

The defendants have now moved to strike the plaintiff's revised complaint on the following grounds: first, that all of the plaintiff's claims are based upon conduct that is constitutionally protected by the first and fourteenth amendments to the United States constitution by analogous provisions of the Constitution of Connecticut, to wit: the filing and prosecution of a non-sham lawsuit in the legitimate exercise of the defendants' legal rights; second,

---

<sup>1</sup> The defendants include: GMG Enterprises, Inc., doing business as Airport Valet Parking (GMG); GMG's vice president, Robert A. Gosselin; Bradley Air Parking Limited Partnership (BAP/LP); Northeast Parking, Inc., doing business as V.I.P. Valet Parking (Northeast); Joseph Scott Guilmartin, the managing general partner of GMG and the president of Northeast; Bradley Airport Valet Parking, Inc. (BAVP); and BAVP's president, Guy Piccolo.

<sup>2</sup> This case was commenced by the service of process on or about May 14, 1991, with a return date of May 28, 1991.

the plaintiff lacks standing to pursue its claims that the defendants violated the Connecticut Antitrust Act; third, that the plaintiff's CUTPA claim is legally insufficient because it is based upon a single act or course of conduct rather than a regular trade or business practice, it fails to allege that that act or course of conduct was engaged in the conduct of trade or commerce, and the plaintiff was not, at the time of such [**5] act or course of conduct, either a consumer or a competitor of the defendants in the relevant market.

I

HN1[] A motion to strike contests the legal sufficiency of the allegations of the challenged pleading to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Practice Book § 512; Mingachos v. CBS, Inc., 196 Conn. 91, 108, 491 [*412] A.2d 368 (1985); Ferryman v. Groton [***1028] 212 Conn. 138, 142, 561 A.2d 432 (1989). "In ruling on a motion to strike, the court is limited to the facts alleged in the complaint." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Novametrix Medical Systems, Inc. v. BOC Group, Inc., 224 Conn. 210, 215, 618 A.2d 25 (1992). The court "must take the facts to be those alleged in the plaintiff's complaint and construe the complaint in the manner most favorable to sustaining its legal sufficiency." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Warner v. Konover, 210 Conn. 150, 152, 553 A.2d 1138 (1989). A motion to strike admits all facts well pleaded. Mingachos v. CBS, Inc., supra, 108. "If the facts provable under its allegations would support . . . a cause of action, [then] the motion to strike must fail." Id., 109. The challenged pleading is to be read broadly, [**6] "not strictly limited to the allegations, but also including the facts necessarily implied by and fairly provable under them." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Frank Perrotti & Sons, Inc., 20 Conn. App. 253, 257, 566 A.2d 431 (1989) (citing Schmidt v. Yardney Electric Corp., 4 Conn. App. 69, 74, 492 A.2d 512 (1985)).

II

The defendants first claim that all counts of the revised complaint must be stricken because they are based, in their essence, on the filing and prosecution of a non-sham lawsuit in the legitimate exercise of their legal rights. Such conduct, note the defendants is constitutionally protected from federal antitrust actions by the first amendment to the United States constitution, as interpreted and applied under the so-called Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Therefore, they argue, it must similarly be protected from state antitrust and other statutory and common-law actions under the first and fourteenth amendments to the United States constitution and analogous provisions of the constitution of Connecticut.

[*413] The plaintiff does not strenuously argue against the applicability of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to state [**7] statutory and common-law damages actions. Rather, it argues principally that each count of its revised complaint states a valid claim for relief that may constitutionally be pursued under the sham litigation exception to Noerr-Pennington. For the following reasons, this court agrees with the plaintiff that this portion of the defendants' challenge to the revised complaint must be rejected.

HN2[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine, evolving from a trilogy of United States Supreme Court decisions; Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, reh. denied, 365 U.S. 875, 81 S. Ct. 899, 5 L. Ed. 2d 864 (1961); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965); California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972); "shields from the Sherman [Antitrust] Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose." United Mine Workers v. Pennington, supra, 670. As the court noted in California Motor Transport, "it would be destructive of rights of association and of petition to [**8] hold that groups with common interests may not, without violating the antitrust laws, use the channels and procedures of state and federal agencies and courts to advocate their causes and points of view respecting resolution of their business and economic interests vis a vis their competitors." California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, supra, 404 U.S. at 510-11.

Even so, HN3[] it is generally recognized that there may be situations where the combination of parties to assert legal claims "is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor and the application of the Sherman Act would be justified." Eastern [*414]

Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, supra, 365 U.S. 144. In those situations, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine affords the colluding parties no protection from federal antitrust laws.

In this case, the plaintiff brought claims under the Connecticut Antitrust Act, CUTPA and Connecticut common law. Although no Connecticut Supreme or Appellate Court decision has applied the Noerr-Pennington [***1029] doctrine to Connecticut antitrust law, the doctrine has gained wide acceptance [**9] in the decisions of this court. See Connecticut National Bank v. Mase, 1991 Conn. Super. LEXIS 364, judicial district of Fairfield at Bridgeport, Docket Number 269180 (January 31, 1991, Flynn, J.); Abrams v. Knowles, 1990 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1920, Superior Court, judicial district of Norwich, Docket No. 95287 (December 4, 1990) (3 Conn. L. Rptr. 13) (Axelrod, J.); Yale University School of Medicine v. Wurtzel, 1990 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1720, Superior Court, judicial district of New Haven, Docket Number 275314 (November 9, 1990, Flanagan, J.). Moreover, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals has concluded that our Supreme and Appellate Courts will very probably adopt Noerr-Pennington and the sham lawsuit exemption thereto when presented with the opportunity to do so: "We believe that Connecticut's courts would be guided by the strong suggestions from the federal courts that imposing liability for the act of filing a non-sham lawsuit would present serious constitutional problems, and would construe Connecticut law to avoid those problems. Especially since Noerr-Pennington's statutory exemption is defined in terms of first amendment activity, we are confident that Connecticut's courts would carve out a similar exception to CUTPA and the common [**10] law, whether or not they believed that they were required to do so by the Constitution." Suburban Restoration Co., Inc. v. ACMAT Corp., 700 F.2d 98, 102 (2d Cir. 1983).

This court agrees. Since HN4[<sup>1</sup>] article first, § 10, of the constitution of Connecticut provides that "all courts shall [*415] be open, and every person, for an injury done to him in his person, property or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without sale, denial or delay," the public policy of this state strongly supports the adoption of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Until recently, there was considerable uncertainty as to what constitutes "sham litigation" for the purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.<sup>3</sup> Some feared, in particular, that the term "sham" might become "no more than a label courts could apply to activity they deem unworthy of antitrust immunity." Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 55, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993), quoting Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 508 n.10, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988). In 1993, however, [**11] with its decision in Professional Real Estate Investors, the United States Supreme Court resolved this issue by holding that HN5[<sup>1</sup>] "an objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be sham regardless of subjective intent." Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., supra, 57, HN6[<sup>1</sup>] The court outlined a new test, as follows: "First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated [*416] to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. . . . This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability." (Emphasis in original.) Id., 60. Under the new test, "evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transform otherwise legitimate activity into a sham." Id., 59. HN7[<sup>1</sup>] To [**12] satisfy the first prong of the Professional Real Estate Investors test the plaintiff must plead facts which [***1030] would support a claim that the litigation is "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Id., 60. In the case at bar, the plaintiff alleges that the defendants violated the Connecticut Antitrust Act by "commencing, maintaining, and actively participating in the appeal without a reasonable basis in fact and in law for <sup>3</sup>Thus, for example, it has been held: that an alleged sham must be proved legally, unreasonable; McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1560 (11th Cir. 1992); that litigation with genuine legal substance raises merely a rebuttable presumption of immunity; Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313, 318 (6th Cir. 1986); that immunity should be denied, even in the pursuit of valid claims, if "the stakes, discounted by the probability of winning, would be too low to repay the investment in litigation;" Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466, 472 (7th Cir. 1982); and that "success on the merits does not . . . preclude" proof of a sham if the litigation was not "significantly motivated by a genuine desire for judicial relief . . . ." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 528 (5th Cir. 1987).

---

their claims of aggrievement . . . for their claims that the Zoning Board of Appeals acted illegally . . . for the purpose of preventing, delaying, or hindering competition during the pendency of the appeal without a reasonable expectation that they would ultimately prevail on the merits . . ." The language of this paragraph of the plaintiff's complaint is virtually identical to the language in Professional Real Estate Investors, outlining and explaining the "objectively unreasonable" test. The plaintiff will, of course, bear the burden of proving its allegations at trial. At this stage, however, nothing more is required.

[**13] The defendants claim, however, that even if the first prong of the test is satisfied, the second prong is not. HN8 "Under this second part of our definition of sham, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit [*417] conceals 'an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor;' [Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, supra, 365 U.S. 144];" through the 'use [of] the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon. . .' [(Emphasis in original.) Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 378, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991)]" Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc.,supra, 508 U.S. 60-61. Essentially, then, "[a] sham situation involves a defendant whose activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action at all . . ." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., supra, 380.

In the present case, the plaintiff has alleged that "the defendants combined, conspired, and colluded with each other . . . to monopolize, restrict [**14] and/or prevent competition in the market for valet parking, to prevent entry into the market and/or to control the price, service and availability of valet parking . . . in restraint of trade through . . . (a) meeting together, actively participating in, and jointly hiring counsel to commence, continue and maintain lawsuits . . . which lawsuits were designed and intended to delay or prevent new competitors from entering the valet parking market . . . (b) presenting false and misleading testimony and pleadings in the lawsuits . . . (c) filing the lawsuits under assumed or fictitious names . . ." Nothing else is needed. In fact, these allegations, if proven, describe the classic situation envisioned by the United States Supreme Court as typifying abuse of the legal process--"the filing of frivolous objections to the license application of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license but simply in order to impose expense and delay." Id., 380. The plaintiff has therefore [*418] alleged facts sufficient to satisfy the second prong of the Professional Real Estate Investors test.

Because the plaintiff has alleged facts which, if proved, would show that the defendant's [**15] appeal was objectively baseless and concealed an attempt to interfere directly with the plaintiff's business relationships, this portion of the defendant's motion to strike is denied.

III

The defendants next challenge the legal sufficiency of the first and second counts of the plaintiff's revised complaint, contending that on the facts therein alleged, the plaintiff lacks standing to sue for treble damages under the Connecticut Antitrust Act. They claim, in particular, that since the plaintiff, by its own allegation and resulting judicial admission, was not engaged in the airport valet parking business at the time of their alleged conspiracy, combination and joint and concerted actions to monopolize, restrain trade, prevent competition and/or control prices in the relevant market, it could not have suffered the kind of competitive injury that the Connecticut Antitrust Act was designed to prevent.

[***1031] HN9 The right to bring a treble damages action for alleged violation of the Connecticut Antitrust Act arises under General Statutes § 35-35, which provides that "the state, or any person, including, but not limited to, a consumer, injured in its business or property by any violation of the [**16] provisions of this chapter shall recover treble damages, together with a reasonable attorney's fee and costs." To plead a sufficient cause of action under this section, a plaintiff must obviously allege both that the defendants engaged in at least one "violation of the provisions of this chapter"--i.e., of the Connecticut Antitrust Act, which is codified at chapter 624 of the General Statutes--and that the plaintiff is a "person [*419] . . . injured in its business or property by [said] violation . . ." General Statutes § 35-35.

In this case, the plaintiff has clearly alleged that the defendants, by their conduct, violated several substantive provisions of the Connecticut Antitrust Act. In particular, the plaintiff's allegations of conspiracy, combination, and joint and concerted efforts to monopolize, restrain trade, prevent competition, and/or control prices in the local valet parking market would, if proved at trial, establish violations of the following substantive provisions of the Connecticut Antitrust Act: General Statutes § 35-26, which provides that HN10 "every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of any part of trade or commerce is unlawful[;]" General Statutes § 35-27, which provides that HN11 "every contract, combination, or conspiracy to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or monopolization of any part of trade or commerce is unlawful[;]" and General Statutes § 35-28, which provides in relevant part that, HN12 "without limiting section 35-26, every contract, combination, or conspiracy is unlawful when the same are for the purpose, or have the effect, of: (a) Fixing, controlling, or maintaining prices, rates, quotations, or fees in any part of trade or commerce; [or] (b) fixing, controlling, maintaining, [or] limiting . . . the . . . supply of any part of trade or commerce . . . ."

Accordingly, the defendants have focused their challenge on the second essential requirement of § 35-35: that the plaintiff be a "person . . . injured in its business or property by [the antitrust] violation[s]" alleged in its revised complaint. The defendants' claim, to restate it, is that the plaintiff could not, as a matter of law, have suffered an actionable antitrust injury because, at the time of the defendants' alleged conspiracy, combination and joint and concerted efforts to monopolize, restrain trade, prevent competition and/or [\[\*420\]](#) control [\[\*18\]](#) prices in the local airport valet parking market, the plaintiff did not compete in that market.

If the statutory phrase, "any person injured in its business or property by any violation of the provisions of this chapter," were given a literal interpretation, the statute would plainly be broad enough to confer standing to bring a treble damages action upon every person who ever sustained any kind of pecuniary loss or injury that could be traced, however remotely or indirectly, to a proven violation of the Connecticut Antitrust Act. In that event, the first and second counts of the plaintiff's revised complaint would surely state valid claims under § 35-35, for it explicitly alleges that as a result of the defendants' monopolistic and otherwise anticompetitive conduct, the plaintiff was unable to make profitable use of its Windsor Locks property as an airport valet parking facility, it lost profits that would have come from such use, and it has been forced to expend monies to protect its legal rights in response to the defendants' actions.

It has long been understood, however, that HN13 since the Connecticut Antitrust Act is based upon the federal antitrust laws, its provisions must ordinarily [\[\*19\]](#) be construed in light of binding federal precedents interpreting and applying parallel provisions of federal law. Westport Taxi Service, Inc. v. Westport Transit District, 235 Conn. 1, 15-16, 664 A.2d 719 \(1995\) (observing that since "the legislative history of the act clearly establishes that it was intentionally patterned after the antitrust law of the federal government . . . we follow federal precedent when we interpret the act unless the text of our antitrust statutes, or other pertinent state [\[\*1032\]](#) law, requires us to interpret it differently)." <sup>4</sup> (Citations [\[\*421\]](#) omitted.) Therefore, this court cannot construe § 35-35 until it has examined and considered federal case law interpreting and applying its functionally identical federal counterpart--the federal treble damages statute, which was enacted as § 4 of the Clayton Antitrust Act (Clayton Act) and is now codified at 15 U.S.C. § 15. See generally Douglas v. Hospital of St. Raphael, 33 Conn. Supp. 215, 219-25, 371 A.2d 396 \(1976\). Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides as follows: HN14 "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the [federal] antitrust laws may sue therefor [\[\*20\]](#) in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\). Prior to 1984, the lower federal courts had unanimously shared the view that this statute should be read more narrowly than its broad, all-encompassing language might suggest. In particular, they were concerned that unless the statutory treble damages remedy were restricted to persons or entities whose losses were proximately or legally caused by antitrust violations, courts would be clogged with a surfeit of speculative damages claims by those whom Congress never sought to protect by the federal anti-trust laws, and whose prosecution of such claims would actually frustrate private antitrust enforcement efforts by unnecessarily complicating more meritorious actions with complicated allocation of damages questions. See generally annot., "Target Area" doctrine as basis for determining standing to sue under § 4 of Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15) allowing treble damages for violation [**21] of antitrust laws, 70 A.L.R. Fed. 637, 642-45 (1984).

---

<sup>4</sup> Recently, this rule of construction was explicitly incorporated into the Connecticut Antitrust Act by the passage of Public Acts 1992, No. 92-248, which is now codified at General Statutes § 35-44b. HN15 Section 35-44b provides as follows: "It is the intent of the General Assembly that in construing sections 35-24 to 35-46, inclusive, the courts of this state shall be guided by interpretations given by the federal courts to federal antitrust statutes."

[*422] There was considerable disagreement among the federal circuits, however, as to how cases falling within the statute should be distinguished from cases falling outside it. Id. "Some courts have focused on the directness of the injury[.] . . . Others have applied the requirement that the plaintiff must be in the 'target area of the antitrust conspiracy, that is, the area of the economy which is endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry. Another Court of Appeals . . . asked [**22] whether the injury is 'arguably within the zone of interests protected by the antitrust laws.'" (Citations omitted.) *Associated General Contractors v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 536 n.33, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 \(1983\)*.

In Associated General Contractors, where it first formally addressed this issue, the United States Supreme Court agreed with the lower courts that HN16 a literal reading of the statute was inappropriate because such a reading would be inconsistent with the intent of Congress, as evidenced by the statute's legislative history. Thus, though it acknowledged that the statute's language, like that of § 35-35, "is broad enough to encompass every harm that can be attributed directly or indirectly to the consequences of an antitrust violation;" id., 529; it concluded that that language must be read more restrictively in light of established common-law principles, including the doctrines of foreseeability and proximate cause, directness of injury and certainty of damages, which the statute's framers expected courts to apply when construing it. Id., 532-33.

As it did so, however, the court declined to adopt any particular test for deciding which cases are covered [**23] by the statute and which are excluded from it. Instead, it declared that HN17 lower federal courts must analyze each case individually, evaluating "the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them;" id., 535; and deciding whether the [*423] law affords a remedy in the circumstances presented, in light of factors bearing appropriately on that issue, as identified in previously decided cases. Id., 537. The court then went on, [***1033] instructively, to identify and apply HN18 several "factors [affecting] judicial recognition of the [plaintiff's] antitrust claims" to the allegations in the case before it. Id.

The first factor so identified and applied, though not dispositive of the plaintiff's right of action, was the alleged "causal connection between an antitrust violation and harm to the [plaintiff]." Id. The second, which was also not dispositive, was the plaintiff's claim that "the defendants intended to cause [the particular] harm." Id.

A third factor, one which the court said "may be controlling;" id., 538; was "the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury." Id. On that score, the court made the following significant observations: "As the legislative [**24] history shows, the Sherman [Antitrust] Act, [15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.] was enacted to assure customers the benefits of price competition, and our prior cases have emphasized the central interest in protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market. Last term in [*Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, \[457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 \(1982\)\]*](#), we identified the relevance of this central policy to a determination of the plaintiff's right to maintain an action under § 4. McCready alleged that she was a consumer of psychotherapeutic services and that she had been injured by the defendants' conspiracy to restrain competition in the market for such services. The Court stressed the fact that 'McCready's injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress in providing a private remedy for violations of the antitrust laws.' 457 U.S. at 483, citing *Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 487-89, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701* (1977). After noting that her injury 'was inextricably [*424] intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market.' 457 U.S. at 484, the [**25] Court concluded that such an injury 'falls squarely within the area of congressional concern. Ibid." *Associated General Contractors v. Carpenters, supra, 459 U.S. 538*. So stating, the court went on to hold that in the case before it, the nature of the alleged injury was not a factor which favored the plaintiff, because the plaintiff was a labor union, whose interests as a bargaining representative for its members, unlike those of "a consumer [or] a competitor in the market in which trade was restrained;" id., 539; were not the sort of interests which the Sherman Antitrust Act was designed to protect. A final important factor identified by the court was "the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury." Id., 540. In the case before it, said the court, this factor worked against the plaintiff union because "the chain of causation between the Union's injury and the alleged restraint in the [relevant] market . . . contains several somewhat vaguely defined links. According to the complaint, defendants applied coercion against certain landowners and other contracting parties in order to cause them to divert business from certain union contractors to nonunion contractors. [**26] As a result, the Union's complaint alleges, the Union suffered unspecified injuries in its 'business activities.' It is obvious that any such injuries were only an indirect result of whatever harm may have been suffered by 'certain' construction contractors and subcontractors.

"If either these firms, or the immediate victims of coercion by defendants, have been injured by an antitrust violation, their injuries would be direct and, as we held in McCready, they would have a right to maintain their own treble-damages actions against the defendants. An action on their behalf would encounter none of the conceptual difficulties that encumber the Union's claim. The existence of an identifiable class of persons [*425] whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party such as the Union to perform the office of a private attorney general. Denying the Union a remedy on the basis of its allegations in this case is not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied." Id., 540-42. The court concluded its remarks on the directness or indirectness of the [**27] plaintiff's alleged injury by noting that if the right to bring treble damages actions were appropriately limited to those directly injured by the defendants' anticompetitive activity, speculative damages [***1034] claims would be avoided, the risk of duplicate recoveries would be lessened, and the scope of already complex antitrust cases would be maintained within manageable judicial limits by eliminating complex apportionment of damages issues. Id., 542-44.

The defendants in the instant case would have this court rule that since the plaintiff had not yet entered the airport valet parking business by the time of their alleged conspiracy, combination and joint and concerted actions to prevent him from doing so, the plaintiff has not suffered the sort of competitive injury which the antitrust laws, state and federal, were designed to prevent. Employing the analysis used by the United States Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors, however, the defendants' claim must be rejected.

To begin with, as previously noted, the plaintiff has clearly alleged a causal link between the defendants' alleged antitrust violations and the losses for which it seeks treble damages in this case. It has [**28] claimed, moreover, that it was the direct and intended victim of the defendants' anticompetitive activities, for the alleged purpose and effect of the defendants' challenged administrative appeal was to overturn the board's approval of its building permit application, and thus to [**426] delay, hinder or prevent its immediate entry into the local airport valet parking market.<sup>5</sup> These factors, all identified, described, and relied upon to determine antitrust standing under the Clayton Act by the United States Supreme Court, strongly favor the viability of the plaintiff's treble damages action under § 35-35.

[**29] It is true, of course, that the plaintiff had not yet become a competitor in the relevant market when the defendants' alleged conspiracy, combination and joint and concerted actions to prevent it from entering that market took place. Even so, both the nature of the defendants' challenged conduct and the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury strongly support the plaintiff's claim that it has standing to pursue this action. When an antitrust plaintiff is already a competitor of the antitrust defendants in the market they seek to monopolize and control, any alleged injury to its ability to compete in that market is the classic sort of injury for which a treble damages claim under the antitrust laws may be pursued. Such a competitor is the direct and foreseeable target of the defendants' conduct, its

---

<sup>5</sup> At least one of the defendants has argued that the plaintiff could not have been delayed, hindered or prevented from entering the airport valet parking business by the bringing and maintaining of the subject administrative appeal because the pendency of that appeal did not operate to stay the ZBA's approval of the plaintiff's building permit, or thus to prevent the construction and opening for business of the planned valet parking facility. Because this argument requires proof of facts outside the allegations of the revised complaint, it cannot be considered a proper basis for striking that pleading.

injuries are immediate and far from speculative, and the presentation of its claim presents no risk of duplicate recoveries or complex apportionment of damages issues.

[HN19] When, by contrast, an antitrust plaintiff has not yet entered the relevant market, more difficult questions naturally arise as to whether he has truly suffered any injury, much less an injury to his ability to compete [**30] in that market, which the antitrust laws were enacted to [*427] protect. If a plaintiff only contemplated entering the relevant market before the antitrust violation occurred, his claim of competitive injury, like his business plans themselves, is merely speculative, and thus is not the proper subject of a treble damages action. If, on the other hand, a plaintiff with well-developed plans, available means and a definite intention to make immediate entry into that market is prevented from so doing by the anticompetitive conduct of the defendants, then it, no less than those already competing with the defendants in the market, is the very sort of person who is classically entitled to bring a statutory treble damages action. See generally 54 Am. Jur. 2d 430, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 414 (1996) ("Prospective competitors, as well as current competitors, may have standing to bring an action alleging a conspiracy to restrain trade or other antitrust violation, if such would-be competitors are able to demonstrate both an intention and a preparedness to enter the relevant market.")

[***1035] [HN20] When a potential competitor brings an antitrust action, the court's task is to distinguish between a serious [**31] potential competitor who has illegally been kept out of the market and the inchoate business enterprise with a mere hope of entry. Practice Perfect, Inc. v. Hampton County Pharmaceutical Ass'n, 732 F. Supp. 798, 802 (S.D. Ohio 1990). A prospective participant in the market suffers an antitrust injury if it has taken substantial and demonstrable steps to enter an industry but has been thwarted in that purpose by an antitrust violation. In re Dual-Deck Video Cassette Recorder Antitrust Litigation, 11 F.3d 1460, 1464-65 (9th Cir. 1993).

In this case, the plaintiff alleges that over a period of four years it made efforts to secure the approval of Windsor Locks zoning authorities for the construction of a valet parking facility on its property across from Bradley Airport. Having finally secured the necessary [*428] permit, it alleges that it was prepared to construct the planned facility at once so that it could open its airport valet parking business by December, 1989. According to the plaintiff, the defendants' filing and prosecution of their sham administrative appeal injured it directly and substantially by delaying, hindering and preventing it from proceeding at once with the [**32] long planned construction of its new facility and the opening of its new valet parking business. Because these allegations, if proved at trial, would clearly establish both that the defendant was a serious potential competitor of the defendants in the market they sought to monopolize and control, and that the plaintiff had taken substantial and demonstrable steps to enter that market before it was thwarted in that purpose by the defendants' anticompetitive conduct, the court concludes that the plaintiff has standing to pursue that claim under § 35-35. Accordingly, this portion of the defendants' motion to strike is also denied.

IV

The defendants' final challenge to the plaintiff's revised complaint is directed at the third count of that pleading, which alleges, inter alia, that by filing and prosecuting their sham appeal from the ZBA's approval of the plaintiff's building permit application, and thereby preventing, hindering and/or delaying the plaintiff's entry into the local airport valet parking market pursuant to a conspiracy to monopolize, restrain trade, prevent competition and/or control prices in that market, the defendants violated CUTPA. The defendants have advanced [**33] a number of related reasons why their conduct, as alleged in the revised complaint, cannot be found to constitute an actionable violation of CUTPA. For the following reasons, the court concludes that this final aspect of the defendants' motion to strike must also be denied.

[*429] The defendants first claim that the doing of a single act, of whatever kind or for whatever reason, can never constitute a violation of CUTPA because the substantive proscription of unfair trade practices set forth therein is worded in the plural, as follows: "No person shall engage in unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or business." General Statutes § 42-110b (a). (Emphasis added.) There are two important reasons why this frequently proffered argument must be rejected.

First, the General Assembly has long made it clear that HN21 singular and plural usages in state statutes may be used interchangeably where the broader statutory context supports such a reading. On this precise point, General Statutes § 1-1 \(f\) provides: "Words importing the singular number may extend and be applied to several persons or things, and words importing the plural number [**34] may include the singular." It is true, of course, that "the legal principle set forth in § 1-1 \(f\) cannot be said to 'require' that singular and plural forms have interchangeable effects . . ." Winchester v. Connecticut State Board of Labor Relations, 175 Conn. 349, 361, 402 A.2d 332 \(1978\). However, the principle is properly invoked and relied upon where the legislature's intent to give singular meanings to plural terms or plural meanings to singular terms is otherwise evidenced by the text or history of the relevant statute. Id.

HN22 Though the language of § 42-110b \(a\) unquestionably describes substantive violations of CUTPA in the plural, it does not, on its [\[\*\*\*1036\]](#) face, purport to require proof of multiple acts, practices or methods of competition to establish a CUTPA violation. As it is the purpose of this remedial statute to protect consumers, competitors and other business people from all kinds of unfair trade practices, without limitation, it surely takes no leap of logic to infer that the legislature meant to prohibit every such act, practice or method of competition, if ever and [\[\*430\]](#) whenever it occurred. A contrary reading of the statute would effectively afford immunity [\[\*\*35\]](#) from CUTPA enforcement to any person whose unfair or deceptive act, practice or method of competition, however harmful to the rights and interest of others, cannot be shown to have happened more than once.

In fact, the broader context of CUTPA makes it clear that HN23 each and every unfair method of competition, as well as each and every unfair or deceptive act or practice, is separately actionable as a violation of CUTPA by any person who suffers an ascertainable loss by reason thereof. HN24 General Statutes § 42-110g, which establishes the right to bring an action for money damages under CUTPA, describes the conduct necessary to recover such damages in the singular as follows: "Any person who suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment of a method, act or practice prohibited by section 42-110b, may bring an action . . . to recover actual damages." (Emphasis added.) The singular usage in the previously quoted statute leaves nothing to the imagination as to the conduct which is prohibited by § 42-110b. It makes plain that the plural language of § 42-110b prohibits single, as well as multiple or repeated acts, practices [\[\*\*36\]](#) and methods of competition. HN25 It also clearly establishes that each such act, practice and method of competition affords a proper basis for a damages action under CUTPA. For these reasons, the defendants' initial challenge to the third count of the plaintiff's revised complaint must be rejected.

The defendants next claim that even if a single act can constitute a violation of CUTPA, the act of filing and maintaining a lawsuit--even one that meets the sham litigation exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and thus qualifies as a violation of the antitrust laws--does not violate CUTPA where, as here, none of the defendants filed the lawsuit "in the conduct of any [\[\*431\]](#) trade or commerce." General Statutes § 42-110b. For the following reasons, this court disagrees.

HN26 Section 42-110b provides in pertinent part that:

"(a) No person shall engage in unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce.

"(b) It is the intent of the legislature that in construing subsection (a) of this section, the . . . courts of this state shall be guided by interpretations given by the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts to Section [\[\*\*37\]](#) 5 (a) (1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45 \(a\) \(1\)), as from time to time amended."

HN27 Following the mandate of § 42-110a, Connecticut courts have "adopted the criteria set out in the 'cigarette rule' by the federal trade commission for determining when a practice is unfair: '(1) Whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise--whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers [(competitors or other businessmen)].'"

Conaway v. Prestia, [191 Conn. 484, 492-94, 464 A.2d 847 (1983),] quoting FTC v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233, 244-45 n.5, 92 S. Ct. 898, 31 L. Ed. 2d 170 (1972). . . ." McLaughlin Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 192 Conn. 558, 567-68, 473 A.2d 1185 (1984).

Applying these criteria to the act of prosecuting a sham lawsuit to prevent, hinder or delay a prospective competitor from entering [**38] a market pursuant to a conspiracy to monopolize, restrain trade, prevent competition and/or to control prices in that market, the [*432] following observations must be made. First, because such conduct directly [***1037] violates the antitrust laws, state and federal, it clearly "offends public policy as . . . established by [those laws]." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id. 568. Secondly, such conduct is "oppressive [and] unscrupulous," for it subjects the plaintiff, a would-be competitor, both to the loss of a valuable business opportunity and to the potentially crippling expense of hiring counsel to overcome the defendants' dishonest, anticompetitive effort to extinguish it entirely. (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id. Thirdly, the delay or prevention of the plaintiff's entry into the valet parking market with a large new facility that could potentially serve a large percentage of that market very probably caused substantial injury not only to the plaintiff, but to the consuming public. Just as the plaintiff was disenabled from competing in the relevant market, customers in that market were deprived of the plaintiff's services and of the price and service benefits that would doubtless [**39] have been realized with increased competition. In short, the challenged conduct appears on its face to satisfy each prong of the cigarette rule.

Not surprisingly, the federal courts have long agreed with this position, holding that HN28 [↑] "the [federal trade] commission has broad powers to declare trade prices unfair[, and that this] broad power . . . is particularly well established with regard to trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws." FTC v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 320-21, 86 S. Ct. 1501, 16 L. Ed. 2d 587 (1966). Accordingly, in FTC v. Motion Picture Advertising Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394-95, 73 S. Ct. 361, 97 L. Ed. 426 (1953), the United States Supreme Court declared that "the Federal Trade Commission Act was designed to supplement and bolster the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act . . . to stop in their incipiency acts and practices [*433] which, when full blown, would violate those Acts . . . as well as to condemn as 'unfair methods of competition' existing violations of them." (Citations omitted; emphasis added.)

So stating, the court has clearly established [**40] that HN29 [↑] "[a] combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade is an unfair method of competition . . ." 87 C.J.S. 649 Trade-Marks, Trade-Names and Unfair Competition, § 228c (1954). It has also established that "the standards established by the anti-trust acts, and by the courts in construing and applying such acts," are the standards to be applied in "determining whether particular acts amount to unfair methods of competition within the Federal Trade Commission Act, and in determining whether practices which are against public policy because of their dangerous tendency to hinder competition or create a monopoly constitute unfair methods of competition." Id. 649-50; accord 1 R. Langer, J. Morgan & D. Belt, Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (1994) § 2.4, p. 23 ("When first enacted, the Federal Trade Commission Act prohibited only unfair methods of competition. The provision now is understood to cover anticompetitive conduct of essentially the same character as the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. The Connecticut Antitrust Act covers the same subject matter . . .")

Here, then, since this court has already ruled that the allegations of the plaintiff's antitrust counts, all [**41] of which are incorporated by reference, in its CUTPA count, are sufficient to plead an actionable violation of the Connecticut Antitrust Act within the sham litigation exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the count concludes that it has also adequately pleaded a violation of CUTPA.

The defendants' final challenge to the third count of the plaintiff's revised complaint is that the plaintiff is [*434] not entitled to make a CUTPA claim since it was not a consumer or a competitor of the defendants when they filed the challenged administrative appeal. This argument is easily disposed of on two independent bases. First, in McLaughlin Ford, our Supreme Court explicitly held that HN30 [↑] to prove a violation of CUTPA, a plaintiff need not show that he suffered consumer injury. Instead, said the court, "we agree with the plaintiff that a competitor or other business person can maintain a CUTPA cause of action. . . ." (Emphasis added.) McLaughlin Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., supra, 192 Conn. 567. Since the plaintiff in this action, though only [***1038] a serious potential competitor of the defendants in the airport valet parking market, was clearly another "business person," it is entitled [**42] to present its claim for relief under CUTPA.

Second, as previously noted, since the plaintiff has already been determined by this court to have standing, as a potential competitor of the defendants, to file and maintain an antitrust claim against them, then it likewise has a right to present a CUTPA claim against them. To reiterate a point just made: HN31[] the standards applicable to antitrust claims govern those applicable to similar conduct under the Federal Trade Commission Act, and thus, by extension, under CUTPA.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, each and every claim presented by the defendants in their pending motions to strike is hereby denied.

---

End of Document

PSI Repair Servs. v. Honeywell, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

January 13, 1997, Decided ; January 13, 1997, Filed

No. 95-1351

Reporter

104 F.3d 811 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 455 **; 1997 FED App. 0008P (6th Cir.) ***; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,674

PSI REPAIR SERVICES, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. HONEYWELL, INC., Defendant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Certiorari Denied June 9, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. LEXIS 3574.

Prior History: ON APPEAL from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan.

Disposition: AFFIRMED

Core Terms

---

customers, market power, manufacturers, relevant market, costs, products, summary judgment, repair, circuit-board, monopoly power, repair service, district court, circuit board, replacement, industrial, contends, consumers, boards, prices, tie, Sherman Act, purchases, seller, aftermarket, antitrust, upgrades, issue of material fact, purposes, copiers, percent

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN1** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN2** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN3 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Summary judgment is appropriate when the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). In determining whether the non-moving party has raised a genuine issue of material fact, the evidence of appellant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in its favor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different or tied product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Such an arrangement constitutes an impermissible tie under S. 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A court follows a three-step analysis for determining whether a tying arrangement is likely to cause such an anticompetitive effect: (1) the seller must have power in the tying product market; (2) there must be a substantial threat that the tying seller will acquire market power in the tied-product market; and (3) there must be a coherent economic basis for treating the tying and tied products as distinct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Sherman Act, Claims

The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Counsel: For PSI REPAIR SERVICES, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff - Appellant: Rodger D. Young, ARGUED, BRIEFED, Anthony P. Cho, BRIEFED, Young & Associates, Southfield, MI.

For HONEYWELL, INCORPORATED, A FOREIGN CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellee: Thomas W.B. Porter, Dykema & Gossett, Detroit, MI. Matthew L. Woods, BRIEFED, Elliot S. Kaplan, ARGUED, Robins, Kaplan, Miller & Ciresi, Minneapolis, MN.

Judges: Before: BOGGS and MOORE, Circuit Judges; HILLMAN, District Judge. *

Opinion by: KAREN NELSON MOORE

Opinion

---

[*812] KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge. This case presents several issues involving §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman [***2] Antitrust Act.<sup>1</sup> [*813] Plaintiff PSI Repair Services, Inc. ("PSI") asserted an illegal tying claim under § 1 and a monopolization claim under § 2 against defendant Honeywell, Inc. ("Honeywell"). The district court granted summary judgment in favor of Honeywell on both counts. For the reasons that follow, we affirm, on different grounds, the judgment of the district court.

---

* The Honorable Douglas Hillman, United States District Judge for the Western District of Michigan, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in relevant part: **HN1** [up] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 provides: **HN2** [up] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

[**2] I. BACKGROUND

Honeywell manufactures and sells industrial control equipment. This equipment controls the manufacturing processes at various refineries and factories. At issue in this case are three different types of control equipment: the TDC, or "Total Distributed Controller"; the PLC, or "Programmable Logic Controller"; and the UDC, or "Universal Digital Controller." The TDC, which ranges in price up to $ 800,000 per unit, automates and controls the manufacturing processes at industrial facilities, such as oil refineries, paper mills, and chemical processing plants. The PLC controls various robotic operations on automobile assembly lines. While less sophisticated than a TDC, the PLC and TDC share some common characteristics. The third controller at issue, the UDC, which ranges in price from $ 250 to in excess of $ 4,000, regulates temperature operations in various industrial settings. J.A. at 371.

Honeywell's industrial control equipment contains and depends heavily on printed circuit boards. These boards, [***3] which range in price from $ 200 to $ 5000, are comprised of a thin rectangle of fiberglass that is laminated with copper foil. Placed on this fiberglass [**3] are numerous components, such as computer chips, that communicate with each other via the copper foil on the board. These components periodically fail, which in turn often causes the circuit board and the industrial control equipment also to fail. J.A. at 38-39. When a circuit board fails, Honeywell will replace it with a new or refurbished board, charging its customer fifty percent of the list price, so long as the customer returns the defective board. J.A. at 306. Upon receipt of the defective board, Honeywell evaluates it to determine whether it is repairable. If it is, Honeywell will replace any defective component and then test the board before placing the board back into its inventory. Thus, the customer does not receive the same board that it returned. Honeywell does not distinguish between its new and refurbished boards within its parts inventory. J.A. at 295.

Roughly ninety-five percent of the components on the circuit boards, referred to as "generic components," can be purchased either from the component manufacturer or from a component distributor. The other five percent are designed specifically for Honeywell by third-party manufacturers, as Honeywell itself does not manufacture [**4] components. Honeywell has restrictive agreements with these manufacturers whereby the manufacturers agree not to sell these components to either Honeywell equipment owners or service organizations such as PSI. Honeywell also has a stated policy of not selling its components to anyone. J.A. at 295. When a circuit board fails, equipment owners cannot usually identify which component caused the failure. J.A. at 1059. Thus, as a result of Honeywell's restrictive policy, its equipment owners essentially must return to Honeywell to obtain an entire replacement board.

PSI offers circuit-board repair services to owners of industrial control equipment. It does not manufacture industrial control equipment, and, similar to Honeywell, it does not manufacture board components. PSI provides [***4] board services for customers who own systems manufactured by Honeywell's competitors by purchasing the necessary components from either the equipment or component manufacturer. J.A. at 356-60. It is also able to obtain any firmware and documentation necessary for the non-generic components either from the manufacturer's marketing information or by purchasing this [*814] information from the manufacturer. [**5] J.A. at 359-60.

Because PSI is unable to obtain any of the components manufactured exclusively for Honeywell, it is, for all practical purposes, unable to compete in the market for repair of Honeywell boards. Indeed, the district court took judicial notice of this fact. J.A. at 396-97. The record contains ample evidence that without this restriction, PSI could effectively compete in the market for Honeywell board repair work. PSI's economic expert expressed the opinion that in an unrestrained market, PSI's market share should be as high as twenty-seven percent. J.A. at 1005. In addition, PSI's chief operating officer, Eugene Laurie, testified at the district court's evidentiary hearing about the numerous Honeywell equipment owners that have asked PSI to perform board repairs, only to find out that, because of Honeywell's restrictive policy, PSI may not be able to repair their board. J.A. at 373-76. While the district court apparently did not reject these contentions, it did not find them determinative in its analysis.

The district court granted Honeywell's motion for summary judgment on the § 1 tying claim because it found that there were not two separate products that could be [**6] tied. It stated in its order addressing the § 1 claim that "there are not separate markets for parts for the circuit boards manufactured by defendant and for the servicing of circuit boards when a board requires repair or replacement." District Ct. Order Dismissing § 1 Claim at 2-3. In granting Honeywell's motion for summary judgment on the § 2 claim, the court declared: "Here the only thing defendant has done is maintain its right to proprietary technology by declining to make available to the market the proprietary components that make up part of [***5] its circuit boards. Under such circumstances there is no genuine issue of material facts which is ripe for jury determination." District Ct. Order Dismissing § 2 claim at 3. As we explain at length below, the § 1 ruling was incorrect. But as we also explain, the primary equipment market, not any aftermarket, is the relevant market in this case for purposes of §§ 1 and 2. Because of this conclusion, the district court's § 2 analysis is no longer applicable in this case. Our relevant market analysis, however, leads us to conclude that summary judgment nonetheless was proper on both claims.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

[**7] HN3 We review a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. See City of Mount Clemens v. EPA, 917 F.2d 908, 914 \(6th Cir. 1990\); Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1472 \(6th Cir.\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988). HN4 Summary judgment is appropriate when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). In determining whether the non-moving party has raised a genuine issue of material fact, "the evidence of [appellant] is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in [its] favor." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 456, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\) (citations omitted). Prior to Kodak, there had been some debate whether Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\), placed special burdens on antitrust plaintiffs responding to summary judgment challenges. But this debate was resolved in Kodak, when the Court stated: "Matsushita demands only that the [**8] nonmoving party's inferences be reasonable in order to reach the jury, a requirement that was not invented, but merely articulated, in that decision." 504 U.S. at 468. We therefore now turn to the evidence in the record, construing it in a light most favorable to PSI, in order to determine whether it raises a genuine issue of material fact [***6] and whether PSI's inferences from this evidence are reasonable.

III. THE TYING CLAIM

Appellant alleges that Honeywell has violated § 1 of the Sherman Act through an impermissible tying arrangement. In particular, PSI contends that Honeywell has [*815] illegally tied the sale of its circuit-board components to its circuit-board repair services. HN5 "A tying arrangement is 'an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier.'" Kodak, 504 U.S. at 461 (quoting Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\)). Such an arrangement constitutes an impermissible tie under § 1 of the Sherman Act "if the seller has 'appreciable economic power' in the tying product market [**9] and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market." 504 U.S. at 462.<sup>2</sup> While a

---

<sup>2</sup> While PSI argues on appeal that Honeywell's tying arrangement is illegal under both per se and rule-of-reason analysis, these two theories have, in effect, merged in recent years. Under traditional per se analysis, restraints of trade were condemned without any inquiry into the market power possessed by the defendant. See, e.g., Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). However, under tying's per se rule, the seller must possess substantial market power in the tying product market. In addition, tying's per se rule provides for an inquiry into whether the defendant's conduct has procompetitive effects. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 478-79. Such an extensive factual inquiry is hardly the stuff of per se analysis. Under rule-of-reason analysis, the antitrust plaintiff must show, inter alia, an adverse effect on competition. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29-30, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). This circuit adopted the HN6 following three-step analysis for determining whether a tying arrangement is likely to cause such an anticompetitive effect: "(1) the seller must have power in the tying product market; (2) there must be a substantial threat that the tying seller will acquire market power in the tied-product market; and (3) there must be a coherent economic basis for treating the tying and tied products as distinct." Hand v. Central Transp., Inc., 779 F.2d 8, 11 \(6th Cir. 1985\). Thus, in this circuit, market power in the tying product market is an indispensable requirement under either per se or rule-of-reason analysis. As Professors Areeda, Elhauge, substantial amount [**7] of commerce is potentially involved, Honeywell disputes both the existence of two separate products and market power.

[**10] A. Separate Products

For the district court's grant of summary judgment to be reversed, PSI must first show that a reasonable trier of fact could find that circuit-board components and service are two distinct products. Our analysis of this issue is controlled largely by the Supreme Court's decisions in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992), and Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). In Kodak, the plaintiffs, a group of independent service organizations (ISOs), contended that Kodak had illegally tied the sale of replacement parts for its photocopiers and micrographic equipment to the service of such equipment. Because of Kodak's unique parts and its restrictive policy, the ISOs could not perform the repairs on Kodak machines. Kodak contended that parts and service could not constitute separate products under § 1 of the Sherman Act. In rejecting this contention, the Court remarked that parts and service could be separate products if there is "sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide service separately from parts." 504 U.S. at 462.

The consumer-demand test articulated [**11] in Kodak merely clarified what had already been decided in Jefferson Parish. In Jefferson Parish, the plaintiff, an anesthesiologist, alleged that the defendant hospital's exclusive contract with a firm of anesthesiologists was an illegal tie under § 1. [**8] The hospital responded that it was "merely providing a functionally integrated package of services." 466 U.S. at 19. Rejecting the hospital's argument, the Court stated that, in determining whether one or two products is involved, the focus should be "not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." Id. Indeed, as the Kodak Court stated, "We have often found arrangements [*816] involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices." 504 U.S. at 463 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19 n.30). With Jefferson Parish and Kodak as our guide, we now turn to the facts of this case.

Honeywell first contends that it does not even sell repair services, the tied product in this case. It claims that instead of servicing a defective circuit board, it simply replaces the board with [**12] a new or refurbished one, charging the same price for all similar replacement boards, regardless of the problem with the defective board. Honeywell, however, cannot claim that it does not participate in the repair business simply because the replacement board it gives a customer is not the same one the customer returned. Honeywell has decided that it is more cost-effective to replace a board immediately and then later to determine whether the board is worth repairing than to attempt to repair the same board returned by its customer. But this decision does not alter the fact that Honeywell repairs a substantial number of the boards that are returned. Simply put, there is substantial evidence that Honeywell repairs circuit boards.

Honeywell next contends that even if its practices reasonably can be characterized as involving repair services, separate markets for components and board services do not exist because consumers simply demand functioning replacement boards. We agree with Honeywell that its customers want functioning boards. In Kodak, the consumers certainly wanted functioning photocopiers, just as all consumers want functioning products. Yet this elementary conclusion [**13] had no bearing on the Kodak Court's [**9] inquiry into whether parts and services could be distinct products for antitrust purposes in that case. Similarly, Honeywell's characterization of its customers' needs moves us no closer to the resolution of the separate-products issue in this dispute.

What does aid our analysis in this case is the evidence in the record suggesting that it would be efficient for a firm to provide some component parts separate from circuit-board repair services. PSI's very existence indicates the possibility of a separate market for service, because PSI does not manufacture any of the component parts for the

---

and Hovenkamp comment, "the per se rule against tying is 'per se' in only one respect--namely, dispensing with proof of anticompetitive effects . . ." 10 PHILLIP E. AREEDA ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW P 1760e, at 372 (1996). The merger of these two theories is apparent in the majority opinion in Kodak, which does not even mention the terms "per se" or "rule of reason," even though Kodak was technically a per se case.

circuit boards but instead purchases them from third-party manufacturers. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462 ("The development of the entire high-technology service industry is evidence of the efficiency of a separate market for service."). There is also evidence in the record that it is not uncommon for other control-equipment manufacturers to sell circuit-board components. J.A. at 1201. Moreover, the record contains evidence that some circuit-board repair services do not even involve the purchase of components. J.A. at 1203-04. In addition, Honeywell [**14] admits that the generic components on its circuit boards--roughly 95% of the components--are available for sale either directly through the manufacturer or a third-party distributor. J.A. at 224.

Indeed, Honeywell itself sells components for its PLC equipment to customers and admits allowing one customer to purchase TDC components from it. In describing the latter situation, Edward Hurd, Honeywell's President of Industrial Control indicated that a "concession" was made in its policy to one customer. J.A. at 295-96. From the record before us, it appears that other Honeywell customers would welcome a similar concession. PSI's industry expert indicated that without Honeywell's component-part restrictions, PSI's repair market for Honeywell equipment would be twenty-seven percent. J.A. at 1005. The same expert also conducted a survey indicating that fifteen percent of Honeywell customers have purchased and continue to purchase component parts from Honeywell [***10] without purchasing circuit-board repair services. J.A. at 1003. While Honeywell contends that only one customer continues to purchase its component parts, this contention, when compared to the PSI survey, creates an issue [**15] of material fact that we are not in a position to resolve at the summary judgment stage.

More important, however, Honeywell's own actions have essentially limited the existence of a separate market for components. On this point, Allen-Myland, Inc. v. IBM, 33 F.3d 194 [*817] (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 615, 115 S. Ct. 684 (1994), is instructive. At issue in Allen-Myland was a "net pricing policy" by the defendant, which essentially required IBM customers to purchase computer upgrades and upgrade installation together. On a few occasions, however, IBM allowed customers to purchase the upgrade parts separately. IBM then contended that because only a few upgrades were sold apart from service, no separate market existed for service. In rejecting this argument, the Third Circuit stated that "the fact a few . . . upgrades were sold [separately from the installation] does not prove that there was no separate demand for installation services, particularly considering that IBM had every economic incentive to protect its revenues and avoid widely publicizing the existence of such upgrades." 33 F.3d at 214. Similarly, Honeywell cannot point to its one customer that purchases components separately [**16] as evidence of a lack of a market for components, when it was Honeywell's own restrictive policy that assured the absence of a component market.

As a final argument, Honeywell asserts that a decision in favor of PSI here would expand S. 1 to include virtually all parts of finished products, since very few products do not contain sub-parts of some kind. Honeywell's concerns are not without merit. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 39 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("All but the simplest products can be broken down into two or more components that are 'tied together' in the final sale."). While we are mindful of the various efficiency gains that can accrue to both suppliers and customers from bundling certain products together, see 9 PHILLIP E. AREEDA, ANTITRUST LAW P 1717b, [**11] at 214-18 (1991), we are confident that the antitrust laws provide the tools to distinguish between meritorious and non-meritorious claims. As a threshold matter, an antitrust plaintiff must be able to show that competition--as opposed to competitors--is harmed by the bundling of products. See, e.g., HyPoint Tech., Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 949 F.2d 874, 878 (6th Cir. 1991), cert. [**17] denied, 503 U.S. 938 (1992) ("The antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'") (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (emphasis in original)). Moreover, the Sherman Act is not triggered merely by the presence of component parts, but only when there is sufficient demand for these parts such that it would be efficient for a firm to provide them separately. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462. As the above discussion indicates, a question of fact exists in this case on this very point. We conclude, therefore, that the district court improperly relied on the lack of separate products as a basis for granting summary judgment in favor of Honeywell on PSI's S. 1 claim.

B. Market Power

We must now consider the next feature of an illegal tying arrangement: appreciable economic power in the tying market. The district court did not address this issue, having based its § 1 ruling on its finding that there were not separate products. Nonetheless, Honeywell contends that because it lacks market power, this is an alternative basis for granting summary judgment in its favor.

"Market power is the power 'to [**18] force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.' It has been defined as 'the ability of a single seller to raise price and restrict output.' The existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (citations omitted). "Accordingly, the proper focus of concern is whether the seller has the power to raise prices, or impose other burdensome terms such as a tie-in, with respect to any appreciable number of buyers within the [***12] market." Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 504, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 \(1969\). If the seller has sufficient market power in the tying market to "force" the customer to purchase the tied product then "competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12. The market power requirement is important because, without market power, a seller cannot engage in the forcing necessary to establish a § 1 violation. A thirty-percent share of the market, standing alone, provides an insufficient basis from which to infer market power. 466 U.S. at 26-29. [**19] With this background in mind, we turn to the parties' asserted definitions of the relevant market in this case.

PSI contends that Honeywell-brand components comprise the relevant market, since these components are not interchangeable with any other components offered in the market. It alleges that Honeywell has enough market power in the component market to force the undesired purchase of Honeywell board services. Honeywell, on the other hand, argues that the relevant market consists of either the market for all components used on its boards or the primary equipment market. Honeywell first claims that PSI is bound by a relevant market including all board-level components because this is how PSI has defined the relevant market until this appeal. While neither party has been exceptionally clear in its proposed definition of the relevant market, both PSI's amended complaint and its appellate brief indicate that it considers the relevant market to consist of only the Honeywell-brand circuit-board components. See First Am. Compl. P 15; Appellant's Br. at 38. [***13]<sup>3</sup>

[**20] Honeywell's real argument is that the relevant market should be defined to include all of the manufacturers of industrial control equipment with whom it competes. It contends that even if it possesses market power in the component market, competition in the primary equipment market precludes it from exercising this monopoly power. This was the precise argument presented by the defendant to the Court in Kodak. Defendant Kodak asked the Supreme Court to adopt a legal rule that "equipment competition precludes any finding of monopoly power in derivative aftermarkets." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 466.<sup>4</sup> In arguing against such a rule, the ISOs contended that information costs and switching costs prevented the competition in the primary market from constraining Kodak's ability to exact supracompetitive prices in the aftermarket. Information costs are costs that prevent consumers from obtaining all relevant information about a product at the time of sale. Switching costs are borne by customers who have already purchased a product and who would then incur some cost in switching to another product. Information and switching costs were particularly high in Kodak because Kodak adopted its [**21] parts-restrictive policy after numerous customers had already purchased Kodak copiers, thus creating a "lock-in" effect. Agreeing with the ISOs' theory that many Kodak customers were potentially "locked-in," the Court concluded that there was "a question of fact whether information costs and switching costs foil the simple assumption that the equipment and service markets act as pure complements to one another." 504 U.S. at 477. [***14]

<sup>3</sup> Honeywell's reasons for attempting to constrain PSI to a relevant market consisting of all components on Honeywell boards are obvious, since ninety-five percent of the components on its boards are widely available in the market. Nevertheless, it is questionable whether such a market definition would benefit Honeywell. Even though market power is normally established by controlling a substantial share of the market, market power also exists "when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer." See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 17. In this case, Honeywell itself describes its own board components as "proprietary," and there is substantial evidence that competitors are unable to offer these components.

<sup>4</sup> In Kodak the Court found that the ISOs had conceded that Kodak lacked market power in the equipment market. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 465 n.10.

Honeywell first contends that the Court in Kodak refused to uphold the grant of summary judgment largely because of the limited evidentiary record in Kodak. In Kodak, summary judgment was granted after a brief discovery period and without a hearing. 504 U.S. at 459. While Honeywell correctly concludes that the Court did not hold that summary judgment was never appropriate in aftermarket cases, neither did [*819] the Court hold [**22] that a more complete record would assure Kodak of summary judgment. Regardless of the size of the record after discovery, if a material issue of fact exists, summary judgment is inappropriate.

Honeywell's next attempt to distinguish Kodak has much more merit. It contends that while Kodak changed its service and parts policy to include the tie after many Kodak customers purchased their equipment, Honeywell has consistently maintained its policy of board replacement. While Honeywell does not clearly articulate why this distinction is important, we interpret Honeywell's argument to be that the Kodak Court's finding of a material issue of fact on the definition of the relevant market resulted from Kodak's change in policy. PSI, on the other hand, argues that even without a change in policy, significant information costs still exist. It points to deposition testimony by Honeywell's own personnel that it would be "very difficult" for customers to determine the lifecycle cost of its equipment. J.A. at 1347. There is also evidence in the record that it would be difficult for Honeywell to predict the cost of parts down the road. J.A. at 1344. And while Honeywell equipment owners may [**23] know that Honeywell's equipment is often capable of lasting for the lifetime of the plant, the owners are constantly upgrading and enhancing the equipment along the way, so that these costs are difficult to gauge. J.A. at 1354-55.

The Court in Kodak did not explicitly state the extent to which Kodak's change in policy affected the Court's analysis. Nonetheless, it suggested that the outcome might have been different had Kodak presented evidence that its [***15] restrictive parts policy was consistently maintained and generally known. In responding to Justice Scalia's dissent, which argued, inter alia, that but for Kodak's change in policy, the Court would be faced with a traditional tie between copiers and aftermarket service, the majority responded:

The dissent disagrees [with our conclusion in this case] based on its hypothetical case of a tie between equipment and service. "The only thing lacking" to bring this case within the hypothetical case, states the dissent, "is concrete evidence that the restrictive parts policy was . . . generally known." But the dissent's "only thing lacking" is the crucial thing lacking--evidence. Whether a tie between parts and service [**24] should be treated identically to a tie between equipment and service, as the dissent and Kodak argue, depends on whether the equipment market prevents the exertion of market power in the parts market. Far from being "anomalous," requiring Kodak to provide evidence on this factual question is completely consistent with our prior precedent.

504 U.S. at 477 n.24 (internal citations omitted). This passage can be read to imply that had Kodak presented undisputed evidence that it never changed its policy and that its policy was generally known, the Court would have considered Kodak copiers as the tying product and service and parts combined as the product being tied. See 10 PHILLIP E. AREEDA, ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW P 1740c, at 150 (1996) ("The majority [in Kodak] apparently agreed with [the dissent] when it emphasized the absence of evidence that Kodak's policy was generally known."); id. at 157 ("The Kodak majority indicated that it would assess the defendant's power in the interbrand machine market (where it had none) were it 'generally known' to machine buyers that the defendant supplied unique repair parts only in connection with its service, notwithstanding [**25] ignorance of lifecycle prices.").

[***16] Both the First and the Seventh Circuits have interpreted Kodak to be limited to situations in which the seller's policy was not generally known. See Digital Equip. Corp. v. Uniq Digital Techs., Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 763 (7th Cir. 1996)

(“The Court did not doubt in Kodak that if spare parts had been bundled with Kodak’s copiers from the outset, or Kodak had informed customers about its policies before they bought its machines, purchasers could have shopped around for competitive life-cycle prices. The material dispute that called for a trial was whether the change in policy enabled Kodak to extract supra-competitive prices from customers who had already purchased its machines.”); Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of North America, 23 F.3d 14, 20 (1st Cir.), [*820] cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 340, 115 S. Ct. 427 (1994) (“The timing of the ‘lock in’ at issue in Kodak was central to the Supreme Court’s decision. . . . Had previous customers known, at the time they bought their Kodak copiers, that Kodak would implement its restrictive parts-servicing policy, Kodak’s ‘market power,’ i.e., its leverage to induce customers to purchase Kodak servicing, could [**26] only have been as significant as its [market power] in the copier market, which was stipulated to be inconsequential or nonexistent.").

We likewise agree that the change in policy in Kodak was the crucial factor in the Court's decision. By changing its policy after its customers were "locked in," Kodak took advantage of the fact that its customers lacked the information to anticipate this change. Therefore, it was Kodak's own actions that increased its customers' information costs. In our view, this was the evil condemned by the Court and the reason for the Court's extensive discussion of information costs. While PSI's argument seems to suggest that Kodak supports a finding of market power whenever information costs are present, such a position cannot be reconciled with Jefferson Parish. In Jefferson Parish, the plaintiff argued there were various "market imperfections" that enabled the hospital to charge noncompetitive prices and that saddled the consumers with inadequate information, which in turn "render[ed]" [**17] consumers unable to evaluate the quality of the medical care provided by competing hospitals." 466 U.S. at 27. Dismissing this argument, the [**27] Court responded that "while these factors may generate 'market power' in some abstract sense, they do not generate the kind of market power that justifies condemnation of tying." Id. Put another way, the Court rejected the premise that imperfect consumer information resulting from basic market imperfections could be used as a basis to infer market power for purposes of the Sherman Act. We are unwilling to conclude that Kodak overruled this portion of Jefferson Parish, especially because the Court in Kodak cites Jefferson Parish with approval in its general discussion of market power. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464.

In light of our reading of Jefferson Parish and Kodak, we thus hold that an antitrust plaintiff cannot succeed on a Kodak-type theory when the defendant has not changed its policy after locking-in some of its customers, and the defendant has been otherwise forthcoming about its pricing structure and service policies. This rule should encourage manufacturers to divulge all relevant information at the time of sale. While we recognize that some information costs will still exist even with full disclosure by a seller, see Mark R. Patterson, [**28] Product Definition, Product Information, and Market Power: Kodak in Perspective, 73 N.C. L. REV. 185, 215-216 \(1994\) ("The buyer's pre-purchase knowledge of a tie allows her only to anticipate those additional costs of the tie about which she knows prior to the purchase; it does not reduce the effects of the information costs that prevented buyers of Kodak equipment from accurately determining lifecycle prices."), these additional information costs stem from the fact that our economy is not one of perfect information, a factor that alone should not invoke antitrust condemnation. Accepting PSI's argument would expose many manufacturers of durable, expensive equipment to potential antitrust liability for having inherent power over the aftermarkets of their products, a result certainly not intended by Kodak and not consistent with Jefferson Parish.

[**18] The present dispute provides an ideal example as to how our reading of Kodak can be applied in practice. In this case, there are no allegations that Honeywell changed its parts-restrictive policy in order to lock-in customers, nor has PSI alleged that Honeywell's policy was not generally known. There also is evidence [**29] that Honeywell and its customers engage in lengthy negotiations before the sale of Honeywell equipment. J.A. at 270. This fact is hardly surprising in light of the substantial price of the equipment. The record also contains evidence that Honeywell will provide estimates of service costs and failure rates of various parts if asked by its customers, J.A. at 1339, 1342, and that it offers various service plans to enable the customers more accurately to estimate the cost of the equipment. J.A. at 974-76. [*821] All of these actions by Honeywell reduce the information costs faced by its consumers. If there were any evidence in the record that Honeywell took advantage of its customers' imperfect information in order to reap supracompetitive profits in the aftermarkets for its equipment, we would not hesitate to allow a Kodak-type theory to be submitted to the jury. However, we can find nothing in the record or PSI's brief that alleges that Honeywell engaged in such activities. In this situation a Kodak-type theory is not applicable. Since PSI has not alleged or shown that Honeywell has market power in the relevant market--the primary equipment market--summary judgment is appropriate in [**30] favor of Honeywell on PSI's § 1 claim.

IV. THE MONOPOLY CLAIM

PSI contends the district court erred by granting summary judgment in favor of Honeywell on PSI's § 2 monopoly claim. HNT "The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). As was the case in [***19] Kodak, our § 1 analysis of the relevant market largely dictates our § 2 conclusion on this issue as well. Thus, our conclusion that the relevant market in this case is the primary equipment market is equally applicable here. Section 2 does, however, require a greater market share for a finding of market power than does § 1. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481; Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 502, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969). While there is no magical percentage of market power that will qualify as monopoly power under § 2, the Supreme [**31] Court has concluded that an 87% share of the market and over two-thirds of the market both constitute monopoly power under § 2. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966) (87% of market constitutes a monopoly); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946) (over two-thirds of market constitutes a monopoly).

In this case, PSI alleges that Honeywell possesses monopoly power in the market for circuit-board repair services, and that it willfully acquired this monopoly power by restricting the availability of its brand of circuit-board components. While the district court made no findings regarding the relevant market, it concluded that Honeywell had an absolute right to refuse to deal in its proprietary components, and that, because of this fact, Honeywell had legitimate reasons for acquiring whatever market power it had. In other words, the district court concluded that even if Honeywell had monopoly power in the market for circuit-board repair services, it achieved that power as a result of legitimate reasons, namely the proprietary nature of its components. In light of our holding on the relevant-market issue, however, the district court's [**32] analysis, which focused on Honeywell's reasons for acquiring and maintaining power in the market for circuit-board repair services, is no longer applicable. Because we have limited the relevant market in this case to the primary equipment market, PSI can no longer rely on any power that Honeywell may have in the market for circuit-board components and repair services as a basis for § 2 liability. Therefore, because PSI has not shown that Honeywell possesses market power in the relevant market, i.e., the [***20] primary equipment market, summary judgment likewise was appropriate in favor of Honeywell on the § 2 claim.

Even if PSI had produced evidence regarding Honeywell's share of the primary equipment market, and even if we assume, for summary judgment purposes, that Honeywell has monopoly power in the market for its equipment, PSI must satisfy the second part of the § 2 analysis, i.e., it must show that Honeywell willfully acquired or maintained this alleged monopoly power. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481. This requirement of proving exclusionary [*822] conduct also poses an insurmountable obstacle for PSI.

