

Date and Time: Thursday, October 19, 2023 8:48:00 AM CST

Job Number: 208418739

Documents (100)

1. Lerma v. Univision Communs., Inc., 52 F. Supp. 2d 1011

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

2. Louisa Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Pepsi-Cola Metro. Bottling Co., 94 F. Supp. 2d 804

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

3. Endsley v. City of Chicago, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9481

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

4. AD/SAT v. AP, 181 F.3d 216

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

5. AlliedSignal, Inc. v. B.F. Goodrich Co., 183 F.3d 568

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

6. Caldera, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 87 F. Supp. 2d 1244

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

7. Abbott Lab. v. Durrett, 746 So. 2d 316

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

8. Archer Daniels Midland Co. v. Seven Up Bottling Co., 746 So. 2d 966

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

9. Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 182 F.3d 1132

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

10. Full Draw Prods. v. Easton Sports, Inc., 182 F.3d 745

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022
11. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co v. Phillip Morris Inc., 60 F. Supp. 2d 502
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022
12. Solla v. Aetna Health Plans of New York, Inc., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14628
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022
13. Callahan v. A.E.V., 182 F.3d 237
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022
14. Dyno Nobel, Inc. v. Amotech Corp., 63 F. Supp. 2d 140
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022
15. FTC v. Mylan Labs., Inc., 62 F. Supp. 2d 25
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

16. North Star Steel Co. v. MidAmerican Energy Holdings Co., 184 F.3d 732

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

17. Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

18. Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

19. Den Norske Stats Oljeselskap A.S. v. Heeremac Marine Contrs., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23595

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

20. Sea-Land Serv. v. Atlantic Pac. Int'l, 61 F. Supp. 2d 1092

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

21. Sea-Land Serv. v. Atlantic Pac. Int'l, 61 F. Supp. 2d 1102

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

22. In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 186 F.3d 781

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

23. United States v. Andreas, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11166

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

24. Neo Gen Screening, Inc. v. New England Newborn Screening Program, 187 F.3d 24

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

25. Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 185 F.3d 957

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

26. Robert's Haw. Sch. Bus. Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., 91 Haw. 224

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

27. Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc., 184 F.3d 268

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

28. United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 62 F. Supp. 2d 173

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

29. CDC Techs., Inc. v. IDEXX Lab., Inc., 186 F.3d 74

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

30. American Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. American Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 185 F.3d 606

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

31. Sheet Metal Div. v. Local Union 38 of the Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n, 63 F. Supp. 2d 211

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

32. Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 58 F. Supp. 2d 228

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

33. Armstrong Surgical Ctr., Inc. v. Armstrong County Mem'l Hosp., 185 F.3d 154

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

34. Miller Pipeline Corp. v. British Gas PLC, 69 F. Supp. 2d 1129

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

35. South Milwaukee Sav. Bank v. Barczak, 229 Wis. 2d 521

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

36. Long v. Abbott Labs., 1999 NCBC 10

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Narrowed by

Cases

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

37. Subsolutions, Inc. v. Doctor's Assocs., 62 F. Supp. 2d 616

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

38. Bizzle v. N. Mont. Healthcare, 1999 Mont. Dist. LEXIS 1136

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

39. Century 21 Region V, Inc. v. Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21092

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

40. J & S Oil, Inc. v. Irving Oil Corp., 63 F. Supp. 2d 62

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

41. Red Lion Med. Safety, Inc. v. Ohmeda, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 2d 1218

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

42. Rhode Island Laborers' Health & Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 99 F. Supp. 2d 174

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

43. JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., 190 F.3d 775

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

44. Center for Legal Studies, Inc. v. Lindley, 64 F. Supp. 2d 970

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

45. SMS Sys. Maintenance Servs. v. Digital Equip. Corp., 188 F.3d 11

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

46. Fogie v. THORN Ams., Inc., 190 F.3d 889

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

47. Modesto Irrigation Dist. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 61 F. Supp. 2d 1058

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

48. Pan Asia Venture Capital Corp. v. Hearst Corp., 74 Cal. App. 4th 424

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

49. Concho Residential Servs., Inc. v. MHMR Servs., 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 6356

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

50. 7-UP Bottling Co. v. Archer Daniels Midland Co. \(In re Citric Acid Litig.\), 191 F.3d 1090

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

51. Found. for Interior Design Educ. Research v. Savannah College of Art & Design, 73 F. Supp. 2d 829

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

52. Merck-Medco Managed Care, LLC v. Rite Aid Corp., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 21487

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

53. National Asbestos Workers Med. Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 74 F. Supp. 2d 221

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

54. American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. General Tel. Co., 190 F.3d 1051

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

55. Redwood Empire Life Support v. County of Sonoma, 190 F.3d 949

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

56. Rockholt Furniture, Inc. v. Kincaid Furniture Co., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 22436

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

57. Glen Holly Entertainment, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 100 F. Supp. 2d 1073

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Narrowed by

Cases

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

58. Western Parcel Express v. UPS of Am., 190 F.3d 974

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

59. Noack v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, Inc., 742 So. 2d 433

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

60. Amundson & Assocs. Art Studio v. Nat'l Council on Comp. Ins., 26 Kan. App. 2d 489

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

61. Arkansas Carpenters' Health & Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 75 F. Supp. 2d 936

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

62. Philip Morris, Inc. v. Grinnell Litho. Co., 67 F. Supp. 2d 126

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

63. Bayou Fleet, Inc. v. Alexander, 68 F. Supp. 2d 734

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

64. Albany Specialties v. Bd. of Educ., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21040

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

65. Toscano v. PGA Tour, Inc., 70 F. Supp. 2d 1109

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

66. In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 90 F. Supp. 2d 819

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

67. Hawaii v. Gannett Pac. Corp., 99 F. Supp. 2d 1241

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

68. Hingel v. Exxon Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16126

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

69. Alabama Ambulance Serv. v. City of Phenix City, 71 F. Supp. 2d 1188

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

70. Pickett v. HCA Hosp. Corp., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 39318

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

71. In re Baseball Bat Antitrust Litig., 75 F. Supp. 2d 1189

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

72. United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 190 F.R.D. 140

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

73. Ess Tech. v. PCTel, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23227

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

74. Caldera, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 72 F. Supp. 2d 1295

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

75. Chawla v. Shell Oil Co., 75 F. Supp. 2d 626

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

76. Rock-It, Inc. v. Futura Coatings, Inc., 74 F. Supp. 2d 420

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

77. Allegheny Gen. Hosp. v. Phillip Morris, Inc, 116 F. Supp. 2d 610

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

78. Intergraph Corp. v. Intel Corp., 195 F.3d 1346

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Narrowed by

Cases

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

79. Bar Techs., Inc. v. Conemaugh & Black Lick R.R., 73 F. Supp. 2d 512

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

80. Park Ave. Radiology Assocs., P.C. v. Methodist Health Sys., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 29986

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

81. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Local 734 Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, 196 F.3d 818

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

82. Randall v. Buena Vista County Hosp., 75 F. Supp. 2d 946

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

83. Ports Auth. v. Compania Panamena de Aviacion \(Copa\), S.A., 77 F. Supp. 2d 227

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

84. Chromalloy Gas Turbine Corp. v. United Techs. Corp., 9 S.W.3d 324

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

85. Dauro Adver., Inc. v. GMC, 75 F. Supp. 2d 1165

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

86. Jeffers Vet Supply, Inc. v. Rose Am. Corp., 75 F. Supp. 2d 1332

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

87. Bourns, Inc. v. Raychem Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23679

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

88. Hewlett-Packard Co. v. Boston Sci. Corp., 77 F. Supp. 2d 189

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

89. Access Telecom, Inc. v. MCI Telecomm. Corp., 197 F.3d 694

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

90. Roniger v. McCall, 72 F. Supp. 2d 433

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

91. Massachusetts Food Ass'n v. Massachusetts Alcoholic Bevs. Control Comm'n, 197 F.3d 560

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

92. Serpa Corp. v. McWane, Inc., 199 F.3d 6

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

93. Ford Motor Co. v. Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc., 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 9187

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

94. Ass'n of Wash. Pub. Hosp. Dists. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 79 F. Supp. 2d 1219

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

95. George Lussier Enters. v. Subaru of New Eng., Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19769

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

96. Covad Communs. Co. v. Pac. Bell, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22789

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

97. Stucky v. City of San Antonio, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 38905

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

98. Ocean View Capital, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp. of Am., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19194

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by
Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

99. Morton's Mkt., Inc. v. Gustafson's Dairy, Inc., 198 F.3d 823

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Narrowed by

Cases

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

100. Santana Prods. v. Sylvester & Assocs., 121 F. Supp. 2d 729

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Sep 14, 1998 to Dec 31, 2022

Lerma v. Univision Communs., Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin

June 11, 1999, Decided ; June 11, 1999, Filed

Case No. 99-C-447

Reporter

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251 **

RAMON LERMA d/b/a BLUE SCREEN ADVERTISING, ROBERT MONTEAGUDO, DELTA MORALES, MARIO OMAR d/b/a BIEI ADVERTISING, YVETTE VELASQUEZ d/b/a MUFFLERS FOR LESS, and W46AR CHANNEL 46, Plaintiffs, v. UNIVISION COMMUNICATIONS, INC., Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Plaintiffs' motion to remand DENIED. Claims of plaintiffs Lerma and Omar DISMISSED. Plaintiffs' motion to stay briefing and consideration of pending motion to dismiss DENIED.

Core Terms

advertising, cable, monopolist, broadcasting, Skiing, competitor, antitrust, programming, monopoly, switch, allegations, anticompetitive, anticompetitive conduct, viewers, monopolization, over-the-air, ticket, cases, consumers, cable television, refusals, purchaser, removal, monopoly power, television, barrier, prices, anti trust law, plaintiffs', terminate

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Fraudulent Joinder

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Citizenship > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > Fraudulent Joinder

HN1[] Joinder of Parties, Fraudulent Joinder

While diversity ordinarily must be complete for federal court subject matter jurisdiction to exist, a plaintiff cannot avoid diversity jurisdiction by fraudulently joining nondiverse parties.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Fraudulent Joinder

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1011LÁ1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 1

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Misjoinder

HN2 [down] Joinder of Parties, Fraudulent Joinder

Joinder is fraudulent when there are false allegations of jurisdictional fact, or more commonly, when the claim against the nondiverse defendant has no possible chance of success in state court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > Fraudulent Joinder

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Misjoinder

HN3 [down] Procedural Matters, Fraudulent Joinder

The removing party bears the burden of proving fraudulent joinder, and the burden is a heavy one. The removing party must show that, after resolving all issues of fact and law in favor of the plaintiffs, the nondiverse plaintiffs cannot establish a cause of action against the defendant. If there is any reasonable possibility that a state court would rule against the nondiverse defendant, then joinder is not fraudulent. If there is any doubt as to the right of removal, ambiguities are to be resolved against removal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

There are two elements to a monopolization claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, and, thus, under Wis. Stat. § 133.03\(2\): (1) the defendant's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power by anticompetitive or exclusionary means. Although not a specifically-stated element of a monopolization claim, in order for any particular plaintiff to pursue an antitrust claim, he or she also must assert personal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Antitrust injury is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if his or her loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1011LÁ1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The Supreme Court has indicated that neither growth nor development as a consequence of a superior product, nor business acumen, nor historic accident can be considered illegal. And conduct is not condemned when it is determined that it constituted no more than aggressive competition or the rigorous pursuit of legitimate business objectives. Monopoly power does not itself constitute unlawful monopolization. Not the possession, but the abuse, of monopoly power violates the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN7 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

One stated test of anticompetitive conduct is whether monopoly power is used to foreclose competition, gain a competitive advantage, or destroy a competitor. Courts should consider whether the conduct has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way. Anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct impairs the opportunities of rivals and is neither competition on the merits nor more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition. The definition is objective and does not depend, in any ordinary sense, on the purpose, intent, or willfulness of the defendant or on the non-inevitability of its action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN8 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Whether valid business reasons motivated a monopolist's conduct generally is a question of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The antitrust laws are not a price-control statute or a public-utility or common-carrier rate-regulation statute. A monopolist has no duty to reduce its prices or to keep them low in order to help consumers. When the defendant is a legal monopolist, insofar as a plaintiff pays high prices because the defendant is a monopolist, the plaintiff's claim must fail; a lawful monopolist can charge what it wants. Provided it does not engage in any unlawful exclusionary practice, a monopolist is entitled to charge whatever price the market will bear.

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1011LÁ1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN10[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

It is not anticompetitive conduct for a party, even a monopolist, to terminate an at-will contract with one dealer and enter into a similar contract with another dealer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

In practice, a complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory. The pleader may not evade these requirements by merely alleging a bare legal conclusion; if the facts do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, plaintiffs will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust. Invocation of antitrust terms of art does not confer immunity from dismissal; to the contrary, conclusory statements must be accompanied by supporting factual allegations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN12[] Private Actions, Remedies

In regard to determining whether an antitrust claim is stated, the court is not required to don blinders and to ignore commercial reality. To survive a motion to dismiss, a claim must make economic and factual sense.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: Scott W. Hansen.

For Defendant: Thomas L. Shriner.

Judges: LYNN ADELMAN, District Judge.

Opinion by: LYNN ADELMAN

Opinion

[*1012] DECISION AND ORDER

Issues of fraudulent joinder and antitrust coalesce in this case involving the decision of the sole provider of Spanish-language television programming in the Milwaukee area to switch from over-the-air broadcasting to a direct cable feed.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit and a motion for a temporary restraining order on Wednesday, April 28, 1999, seeking to prevent defendant Univision Communications, Inc. from terminating plaintiff W46AR Channel 46's over-the-air broadcast of Univision's Spanish-language network programming. Channel 46's contractual right to broadcast [*1013] Univision programming was due to expire on April 30.

Plaintiffs filed the case in Milwaukee County Circuit Court and waited in the courtroom of the assigned judge, Lee Wells,¹ for an opportunity to address the TRO request. When the case was called, Judge Wells [2] telephoned defendant's general counsel, located in Los Angeles, California, who then conferred in outside counsel, also located in California. The court and parties discussed the matter and then scheduled an expedited hearing for the next day, Thursday, April 29, at 2:00 p.m. At the end of the telephone conference, however, Judge Wells stated as follows:

Here's what I'm going to do, though, so that the status quo is retained until we have our hearing tomorrow, and that is as follows:

That is, I am verbally ordering that the status quo procedure remain now and intact until such time as at the conclusion of tomorrow's hearing, at which time I'll take some action one way or the other, and that is that Channel 46 must remain in business. They must continue to be able to transmit programming through -- provided by Univision in the same manner that they are right now, not being on cable but being regular television programming without Cable TV, and that will be the order at least until tomorrow until I can make some decision on what I hear tomorrow; and tomorrow I'll make a new order one way or the other, one way on this aspect as well as the other aspects requested by the plaintiff [3] or the defendant or both.

(Tr. of 4/28/99 at 36.) Upon an objection by Univision's attorneys because the "order is unnecessary . . . because the contract doesn't expire until the 30th," the judge indicated: "I know. But the reason I'm doing this is I wouldn't want somebody down there in your office to haphazardly decide to cancel tomorrow and, therefore, claim we're not retaining the status quo; and that's why I'm doing it to protect the status quo." (Id. at 36-37.)

At 1:23 p.m. the next day, Univision removed the case to federal court, where it was assigned to me. Counsel for Univision attended the state court's hearing at 2:00 p.m. but made no formal appearance, instead informing Judge Wells of the removal. Noting that removal prevented him from doing anything further in the case, Judge Wells nevertheless noted that because [4] of . . . the needs of the community to have the benefit of ongoing free television for Hispanics and Latinos in this community, I did order a temporary restraining order on the record, and that order remains intact and in place until there's further order of this Court. Since I cannot make further order of this Court, it remains intact unless otherwise changed or altered or removed by some other Court of appropriate jurisdiction.

(Tr. of 4/29/99 at 4-5.)

On Friday, April 30, my chambers contacted the parties' attorneys to arrange a TRO hearing and further proceedings in the case. Also on April 30, plaintiffs filed a motion to remand the case to state court. Upon the setting of an in-person status conference for the following Tuesday, May 4, Univision's counsel questioned the validity of Judge Wells's order but agreed to abide by it until the status conference could be held.

Defendants removed this case under 28 U.S.C. § 1332 based on diversity jurisdiction. It is undisputed that more than $ 75,000 is involved. But according to the complaint and notice of removal, plaintiffs Ramon Lerma and Mario Omar are citizens of California, and defendant Univision Communications, Inc. [5] has its principal place of business in California. Lerma, Omar and Univision thus are citizens of the same state, which ordinarily defeats federal court subject matter jurisdiction. [*1014] Hoosier Energy Rural Elec. Co-op., Inc. v. Amoco Tax Leasing IV

¹ Actually, Judge Michael Malmstadt was assigned the case, but was unavailable at the time the case was filed. Judge Wells was Judge Malmstadt's substitute that day.

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1014-1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 5

Corp., 34 F.3d 1310, 1314-15 (7th Cir. 1994) (diversity must be "complete," meaning that no plaintiff may be a citizen of the same state as any defendant). Whether the case should remain in this court therefore was a serious question.

At the May 4 status conference I indicated that I would address the motion to remand before dealing with the TRO because of my belief that in the absence of federal subject matter jurisdiction, the decision on the TRO should be handled by the state court. The parties agreed to a briefing schedule for the remand motion and Univision agreed to continue supplying Channel 46 with broadcasting until I could issue a decision. On May 24, 1999, I heard oral argument on the remand motion.

Since then Univision filed a motion to dismiss. Plaintiffs in turn moved to stay briefing on and consideration of the motion to dismiss until the remand issue is decided.

II. FRAUDULENT JOINDER

HN1 While diversity ordinarily [6] must be complete for federal court subject matter jurisdiction to exist, plaintiff cannot avoid diversity jurisdiction by fraudulently joining nondiverse parties. Id. at 1315. Thus, if Univision can show that the joinder of Lerma and Omar was fraudulent, as it alleged in its notice of removal, removal will nevertheless be allowed. See Wilson v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 257 U.S. 92, 97, 66 L. Ed. 144, 42 S. Ct. 35 (1921); Poulos v. Naas Foods, Inc., 959 F.2d 69, 73 (7th Cir. 1992).

HN2 Joinder is fraudulent when there are false allegations of jurisdictional fact, or more commonly and as is alleged here, when the claim against the nondiverse defendant has no possible chance of success in state court. Hoosier Energy, 34 F.3d at 1315. Even though plaintiffs filed the motion to remand, HN3 the removing party bears the burden of proving fraudulent joinder, see Wilson, 257 U.S. at 97, and the burden is a heavy one. The removing party must show that, after resolving all issues of fact and law in favor of the plaintiffs, the nondiverse plaintiffs cannot establish a cause of action against the defendant. Poulos, 959 F.2d at 73. If there is any reasonable possibility that a [7] state court would rule against the nondiverse defendant, then joinder is not fraudulent. Id. If there is any doubt as to the right of removal, ambiguities are to be resolved against removal. Tom's Quality Millwork, Inc. v. Delle Vedove USA, Inc., 10 F. Supp. 2d 1042, 1044 (E.D. Wis. 1998).

When analyzing whether Lerma and Omar can establish a cause of action against Univision I look at the allegations in the complaint. See Poulos, 959 F.2d at 74 ("only present allegations count"); Lynch Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 934 F. Supp. 1005, 1007 (N.D. Ill. 1996) (where plaintiff alleged additional facts in support of its theory in motion to remand, "those factual allegations will be ignored The Court's inquiry is limited to the factual assertions of [the] complaint."). Jurisdiction depends on the situation at the time of removal. Id.

As a result, I must analyze the claims made by Lerma and Omar as pled in the complaint to determine whether there is a reasonable possibility that Lerma and Omar could prevail. The inquiry is similar to an analysis under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).

III. THE MONOPOLIZATION CLAIM

A. General Allegations [8] in the Complaint

According to the complaint, Univision is the largest and most dominant Spanish-language broadcast network in the United States, with 90 percent of the national market for Spanish-language television and 100 percent of the Milwaukee area market. (Compl. PP 1 & 12.) The only other Spanish-language broadcast network in the country, Telemundo, has no presence in Milwaukee. (Compl. P 15.)

[*1015] For over nine years Univision has broadcast its programming in the Milwaukee area over W46AR Channel 46, which supplies the Milwaukee area with free, over-the-air broadcasting. (Compl. P 1.) Channel 46 is the only station in the Milwaukee area that currently broadcasts Spanish-language programming. (Compl. P 5.) Univision now plans to withdraw its programming from Channel 46 and make it available only through cable television. (Compl. P 3.) Univision's switch to a direct-feed on cable thus will deprive persons in the Milwaukee area of the free broadcast of any Spanish-language programming. (Compl. P 16.)

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1015LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 8

More than half of the 19,000 Milwaukee area Hispanic households currently do not have cable television. (Compl. PP 2 & 13.) Many of these households depend exclusively or primarily [9] upon Spanish-language television programming for news, entertainment, sports, and other local and national information. Most of these families -- those who do not or cannot purchase cable packages -- have access to Univision's programming only through Channel 46. (Compl. P 14.)²

Plaintiff Ramon Lerma is a California resident who runs an advertising agency called Blue Screen Advertising. Plaintiff Mario Omar owns an advertising agency located in California, called BIEI Advertising. Both Blue Screen and BIEI buy and sell advertising time for broadcast in Hispanic communities. (Compl. PP 9 & 10.) Blue Screen and BIEI need access to local advertising time to reach Hispanic [10] communities within certain areas. Blue Screen purchases advertising time from Channel 46. (Compl. P 11.)

In regard to the claims of Lerma and Omar, the complaint asserts that because of Univision's switch to cable television in the Milwaukee area, advertisers who currently run advertising on Channel 46 and who would in the future purchase advertising slots on Univision's cable broadcasts "will be foreclosed from reaching any Hispanic households which do not, or cannot, purchase cable television packages." (Compl. P 19.) Further, advertisers also will be subject to higher rates after Univision's switch, as the amount of advertising minutes available to local advertisers will decrease substantially and the price will rise as available minutes become more scarce and the local advertisers have no viable substitutes or alternatives for broadcasting their advertisements. (Compl. P 20.)

B. Lerma's and Omar's Legal Claims

As set forth in the complaint Lerma and Omar sue Univision under Wisconsin's antitrust law for monopolization and attempted monopolization, Wis. Stat. § 133.03(2).³ [12] This statute was intended as a reenactment of § 2 of the federal Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2,⁴ with application to anticompetitive activity having an impact in Wisconsin. See Emergency One, Inc. v. Waterous Co., Inc., 23 F. Supp. 2d 959 [*1016] (E.D. Wis. 1998). Wisconsin courts have held that the state version is generally controlled by federal court decisions regarding the Sherman Act. See Carlson & Erickson Builders, Inc. v. Lampert Yards, Inc., 190 Wis. 2d 650, 665, 529 N.W.2d 905 (1995); American Med. Transport of Wisconsin, Inc. v. Curtis-Universal, Inc., 148 Wis. 2d 294, 299, 435 N.W.2d 286 (Ct. App. 1988), rev'd on other grounds, 154 Wis. 2d 135, 452 N.W.2d 575 (1990). The purpose of ² From what counsel indicated at the status conference I held on May 4 and as discussed in Univision's brief on the remand motion -- and from what is plainly visible on Milwaukee area cable itself -- Channel 46's signal presently is rebroadcast on cable. Thus, cable watchers currently may view Univision programming as part of their cable packages.

³ Wisconsin Statute § 133.02(3) reads:

Every person who monopolizes, or attempts to monopolize, or combines or conspires with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of trade or commerce may be fined not more than $ 100,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, may be fined not more than $ 50,000 or imprisoned for not more than 7 years and 6 months or both.

⁴ Section 2 states:

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1016 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 11

such antitrust laws is to preserve the health of the competitive process. Brunswick Corp. v. Riegel Textile Corp., 752 F.2d 261, 266 \(7th Cir. 1984\).

HN4 [↑] There are two elements to a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, and thus under Wis. Stat. § 133.03(2): (1) the defendant's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power by anticompetitive or exclusionary means. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\) (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\)); Chase v. Northwest Airlines Corp., [\[13\] F. Supp. 2d , , 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6072](#), No. 96-74711, 1999 WL 248936, *11 (E.D. Mich. April 23, 1999); American Med., 148 Wis. 2d at 301; see Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 595, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\). Although not a specifically-stated element of a monopolization claim, in order for any particular plaintiff to pursue an antitrust claim, he or she also must assert personal antitrust injury. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\).

For purposes of the current motion, Univision does not deny that it has a monopoly in the "relevant market." The possession of monopoly power depends on a defendant's market power regarding a "product market" within a "geographic market." Irving Scher, Antitrust Adviser § 1.22 (4th ed. 1998). The complaint asserts that the Milwaukee area constitutes the geographic market and that Spanish-language programming constitutes the product market for antitrust purposes. (Compl. P 27.) I assume for present purposes that these allegations are true and sufficient for asserting the first element of a monopolization claim.

Univision, however, vigorously challenges [\[14\]](#) plaintiffs on the second element. Univision asserts that its planned action -- switching to cable -- does not and will not constitute anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct. It also contests whether the two California plaintiffs can establish, under the facts of the complaint, any antitrust injury allowing them to bring the antitrust claims.⁵ I will address the two issues in reverse order.

[15] C. Antitrust Injury

HN5 [↑] Antitrust injury is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. at 489. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if his or her loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., [\[*1017\] 495 U.S. 328, 344, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\)](#).

For argument's sake, I assume for the moment that Univision's switch from supplying Channel 46 with its programming for over-the-air broadcast to supplying such programming to the Milwaukee cable operator can be considered anticompetitive behavior. Also, I note at the outset that while my decision regarding remand does not turn on this (as there are two California plaintiffs), the facts alleged in the complaint support no finding of antitrust injury whatsoever to Omar. The extent of the allegations specifically mentioning Omar are, in total, as follows:

[\[16\]](#) "Plaintiff Mario Omar also owns and runs his own advertising agency, BIEI Advertising, located at . . . Marina del Rey, CA 90292. Biei Advertising also buys and sells advertising time for broadcast to Hispanic communities." (Compl. P 10.) In contrast to the allegations about Lerma's business, regarding which the complaint states that "Blue Screen purchases advertising time from Channel 46 because it is the best way to reach consumers within the Hispanic community in the Milwaukee Metropolitan area," (id. P 11), no allegation is made

⁵ While I have set forth the elements of only the monopolization claim, the requirements of anticompetitive conduct and antitrust injury apply to plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim as well. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\) (attempted monopolization requires (1) predatory or anticompetitive conduct, (2) specific intent to monopolize, and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power); Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 373 \(7th Cir. 1986\) ("Conduct lawful for a monopolist is lawful for a firm attempting to become a monopolist."). Therefore, if the monopolization claim fails on these points, the attempt claim fails too.

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1017 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 16

that Omar or BIEI Advertising ever arranged for advertising on Channel 46 or in the Milwaukee area. (At oral argument counsel indicated that such an allegation was made regarding Omar, but I have not found it in the complaint.) As a result, Omar asserts no injury related to Univision's actions regarding the relevant product in the relevant geographic area.

In arguing the issue of antitrust injury, Univision tries to shift the focus from Lerma's claims to those asserted by Channel 46, the distributor being replaced. But for present purposes I must look at the claims of Lerma, as a purchaser of local-only advertising time. While Univision is correct [17] that "the antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors,'" Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 338 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962)), Lerma is not alleged to be a competitor of Univision. As a consumer or purchaser of advertising time, Lerma is an indirect customer of Univision, not a competitor.

As alleged in the complaint, Lerma himself will face higher prices and lower availability of advertising time if Univision switches to cable. If Univision changes to a direct-feed to cable, a chunk of its advertising time now devoted to local advertising will be replaced by nationwide advertising. There is no other Spanish-language broadcasting in Milwaukee to which Hispanic-targeted local advertisers can turn and there are only so many available minutes of advertising during Univision programs. If advertising minutes available to local advertising purchasers, which Lerma is asserted to be, are fewer, Univision's local advertising "output" will be lower. Further, if, as Lerma alleges, prices for local advertising will rise as the supply of local advertising minutes decreases, consumers [18] like Lerma also will pay more.

Higher prices and lower output from the consumer's perspective are the principal vices prescribed by the antitrust laws. See Nelson v. Monroe Reg'l Med. Ctr., 925 F.2d 1555, 1562 (7th Cir. 1991). In Caribbean Broadcasting System, Ltd. v. Cable & Wireless P.L.C., 331 U.S. App. D.C. 226, 148 F.3d 1080, 1087 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the D.C. Circuit found antitrust injury in a broadcaster's charging of excessive prices for advertising related to the broadcaster's unlawful monopolistic actions. The court indicated that "paying higher prices is certainly a direct harm to customers. . . . It appears that antitrust injury to [plaintiff] CBS is ultimately a harm to U.S. purchasers of radio advertising. By keeping CBS out of the market, [defendants] CCC and C&W denied such purchasers the benefit of competition." Caribbean Broadcasting, 148 F.3d at 1087. In the present case, Lerma is a similar purchaser of television advertising, and is similarly harmed by Univision's alleged monopolistic practices that reduce competition in the market.

[*1018] Lerma is also like Shearin Inc., a plaintiff in Community Publishers, Inc. v. DR Partners, 139 F.3d 1180 (8th Cir. [19] 1998). This recent case concerned the acquisition of one local daily newspaper by the owner of the other leading local daily newspaper. The Eighth Circuit upheld a finding of a threat of antitrust injury based upon Shearin's status as a purchaser of advertising in one of the papers:

Shearin alleged that a combination of the Times and the Morning News would raise advertising rates as a result of the two newspapers' dominant market position. The threat of higher prices resulting from dominant market power being a primary concern of Section 7 [of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18], the District Court correctly determined that Shearin had shown antitrust injury.

Id. at 1183.

In its brief, Univision argued that plaintiffs' economics are all wrong because Channel 46 itself has been a monopolist and therefore already should be capturing monopoly advertising rates. Changing who holds the monopoly will have no effect, says Univision. Univision may be correct. But plaintiffs' theory -- based on the well-known doctrine of "supply and demand" -- is not wholly implausible, and thus there is a reasonable possibility that Lerma will be harmed by Univision's switch to cable. [20] Even Univision conceded at oral argument that, based on the above cases, advertisers like Lerma could in theory suffer antitrust injury if the available slots for advertising go down and/or the prices of advertising go up as a result of anticompetitive conduct.

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1018 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 20

The assumption I made above regarding anticompetitive conduct is extremely important, however, for purposes of antitrust injury. As stated above, antitrust injury arises only when a private party is adversely affected by an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's conduct. See Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 339. Lerma must show an injury to him resulting from Univision's illegal conduct. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). This means that Lerma must allege not only an injury to himself, but an injury to the market as well. Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107 (7th Cir. 1984). While I find that the complaint adequately alleges some injury to Lerma from Univision's switch to cable, it remains to be seen whether Univision's switch to cable is anticompetitive conduct and thus whether Lerma's injury is antitrust [21] injury.

D. Anticompetitive Conduct

As stated above, the second element of a monopolization claims is acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power through anticompetitive or exclusionary means. Commentators have noted that this element, as stated, is a vague one. See Scher, supra, § 1.27 ("The issue of the kind of conduct that fulfills this requirement has perplexed courts ever since Judge Learned Hand stated in Alcoa [United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 432 (2d Cir. 1945)] more than 50 years ago that willfully monopolistic conduct can be found without a showing of 'specific' intent to monopolize."); Kenneth L. Glazer & Abbott B. Lipsky, Jr., Unilateral Refusals to Deal Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 63 Antitrust L.J. 749 (1995) ("Courts have long struggled to define the specific forms of business conduct that constitute monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act."). Anticompetitive conduct has been said to "come in too many different forms, and [be] too dependent upon context, for any court or commentator ever to have enumerated all the varieties." Caribbean Broadcasting, 148 F.3d at 1087.

Some general principles [22] provide some guidance, often focusing on what does not constitute unlawful conduct. HN6 [↑] The Supreme Court has indicated that neither growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, nor business acumen, nor historic accident can be considered illegal. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481 [*1019] (quoting Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71); see American Med., 148 Wis. 2d at 301. And conduct will not be condemned "when it is determined that it constituted no more than aggressive competition or the rigorous pursuit of legitimate business objectives." Scher, supra, § 1.27. Monopoly power does not itself constitute unlawful monopolization. "Not the possession, but the abuse, of monopoly power violates section 2 [of the Sherman Act]," Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, (7th Cir. 1986), and thus Wis. Stat. § 133.03(2). "The mere existence of the power to control prices or exclude competition is not unlawful unless it is coupled with an element of deliberateness (conduct intended to use or preserve such power)." Scher, supra, § 1.21 (citing Grinnell and other Supreme Court cases).

HN7 [↑] One stated test of anticompetitive conduct, however, is whether [23] monopoly power is used to foreclose competition, gain a competitive advantage, or destroy a competitor. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 482-83. Courts should consider whether the conduct "has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 605. Anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct "impairs the opportunities of rivals and is neither 'competition on the merits' nor more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition. The definition is objective and does not depend, in any ordinary sense, on the purpose, intent, or willfulness of the defendant or on the non-inevitability of its action." III Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 650a (rev. ed. 1996). Courts should ask whether the underlying purpose of the firm's conduct was to enable the firm to compete more effectively. Did the firm engage in the challenged conduct for a legitimate business reason? Or was the firm's conduct designed solely to insulate the firm from competitive pressure? . . . When courts speak of a firm's intent in a monopolization case, they refer to the legitimacy of the firm's conduct as measured by its intended effect on the competitive process. [24] . . . Conduct that tends to exclude competitors may therefore survive antitrust scrutiny if the exclusion is the product of a "normal business purpose" . . .

State of Ill. ex rel. Burris v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 935 F.2d 1469, 1481 (7th Cir. 1991). HN8 [↑]
Whether valid business reasons motivated a monopolist's conduct generally is a question of fact. Id.

52 F. Supp. 2d 1011, *1019 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9251, 24

Monopolization cases involve a wide variety of challenged conduct, falling into categories such as "monopoly leveraging," which is the use of monopoly power in one market to obtain a competitive advantage in a second market; predatory pricing; and refusals to deal. Scher, supra, §§ 1.27-1.30. Through its references, especially at oral argument, to such cases as Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847; Byars v. Bluff City News Co., 609 F.2d 843 \(6th Cir. 1979\); and Chase, 49 F. Supp. 2d 553, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6072, 1999 WL 248936, plaintiffs construe their antitrust claims as the refusal to deal type.

Monopoly cases also sometimes are separated based on whether the monopolist is the single entity in a market or whether, even though the defendant is a monopoly, other competitors exist. [25] Many of the single-entity market cases involve natural monopolies, which exist in markets where the entire demand can be satisfied at lowest cost by one producer. See Neil W. Hamilton & Anne M. Caulfield, The Defense of Natural Monopoly in Sherman Act Monopolization Cases, 33 DePaul L. Rev. 465, 465 (1984); Richard A. Posner, Natural Monopoly and Its Regulation, 21 Stan. L. Rev. 548, 548 (1969). No allegations in the complaint assert that Univision has a natural monopoly. Nevertheless, it is undisputed that Univision is the only Spanish-language program provider in town.

Plaintiffs allege that three different anticompetitive effects will occur after Univision's planned switch to a direct cable [*1020] feed, all of which, they say, should be added together to assess whether anticompetitive conduct has occurred: (1) higher advertising rates for advertisers like Lerma, (2) the charging of a fee for cable to viewers currently receiving Univision broadcasting over-the-air, and (3) entry barriers for Telemundo.

1. Higher Prices and Reduced Supply for Lerma and Viewers

The fact that Lerma, as alleged in the complaint, will face a lower supply and thus higher prices for an advertising [26] slot following Univision's switch to cable does not itself equal anticompetitive conduct; the same is true of the result that Univision's viewers are to be charged a price in order to obtain its programming. "HNG† The antitrust laws are not a price-control statute or a public-utility or common-carrier rate-regulation statute." Blue Cross & Blue Shield United v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406, 1413 \(7th Cir. 1995\). A monopolist has no duty to reduce its prices or keep them low in order to help consumers. Olympia, 797 F.2d at 376. When the defendant is a legal monopolist -- and plaintiffs do not claim that Univision is otherwise -- insofar as a plaintiff pays high prices because the defendant is a monopolist, the plaintiff's claim must fail; "a lawful monopolist can charge what it wants." Blue Cross, 65 F.3d at 1415. "Provided it does not engage in any unlawful exclusionary practice, a monopolist is entitled to charge whatever price the market will bear." Areeda, supra, P 657c1.

A monopolist's raising of prices, in fact, is a procompetitive act. The higher a monopolist's prices, the greater the opening for competitors. Blue Cross, 65 F.3d at 1415. It is "an attracting [27] rather than an excluding practice." Id. at 1413; see Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 583 ("respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price"). The same is true for a monopolist's limiting of output. See id. (limitation of distribution in United States by Japanese firms cannot create cognizable claim for antitrust damages).

2. Refusal to Deal

Plaintiffs argue that Univision's conduct is anticompetitive because Univision refuses to deal. The refusal to deal category originated in dictum in United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\), where the Supreme Court declared:

In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the [Sherman Act] does not restrict the long recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal; and of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.

The Sixth Circuit has labeled the question "under what circumstances does a monopolist have a duty to deal?" as "one of the most unsettled and vexatious [28] in the antitrust field." Byars, 609 F.2d at 846.

The most easily spotted refusal to deal is Univision's decision to terminate its contract with Channel 46. The fact that Univision is changing distributors of its product does not constitute anticompetitive conduct, though. Suppliers should have the discretion to structure their own distribution. Glazer, supra, at 787. As Judge Easterbrook suggested in Premier Electrical Construction Co. v. National Electrical Contractors Association, Inc., 814 F.2d 358, 369 \(7th Cir. 1987\):

In selecting a method of distribution, manufacturers act in the consumers' interest. Neither wants a higher markup unless that is beneficial to purchasers. If the manufacturer adopts a restricted distribution policy in order to serve its own interests, therefore, there is no reason to doubt that the policy is beneficial to consumers and consistent with the purposes of antitrust law. Perhaps a given manufacturer is mistaken, but if so the reaction of consumers (and the lower profits) will send the message faster than courts could.

[*1021] HN10 It is not anticompetitive conduct for a party, even a monopolist, to terminate an at-will contract with one [29] dealer (assuming, for present purposes, that is what Channel 46 is) and enter into a similar contract with another dealer. See Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532, 539 \(7th Cir. 1986\); Burdett Sound, Inc. v. Altec Corp., 515 F.2d 1245, 1249 \(5th Cir. 1975\) ("it is simply not an antitrust violation for a manufacturer to contract with a new distributor, and as a consequence, to terminate his relationship with a former distributor, even if the effect of the new contract is to seriously damage the former distributor's business"). Where a monopoly exists, from the standpoint of antitrust law it is a matter of indifference whether one party versus another -- in this case, one dealer versus another -- exploits the monopoly. Riegel, 752 F.2d at 267.

In arguing the anticompetitive nature of defendant's refusal to deal plaintiffs, however, do not emphasize the effects on Channel 46. Rather, they argue the effects of Univision's conduct on advertisers, viewers, and Telemundo. It is uncertain whether Univision's actions toward advertisers constitute refusals to deal at all. Univision has not blocked access to its product, but instead has changed the terms and price [30] which, as discussed above, is usually lawful. The same is generally true regarding viewers. Plaintiffs, however, have alleged or implied that the price to be charged viewers by the cable company will in fact prevent some viewers from obtaining any access to the station, and at this stage I will assume that indicates a refusal to deal.

Plaintiffs liken their antitrust claims to those in Aspen Skiing, Byars, and Chase, cases discussed at oral argument. In Aspen Skiing the defendant ("Ski Co.") terminated the "all-Aspen, six-day ticket," which was first developed when three independent companies (one of which was Ski Co.) operated three different ski mountains in the Aspen area. The ticket allowed Aspen visitors to ski the mountain of their choice on the day of their choice. The interchangeable ticket continued to provide a desirable option for skiers when the market was enlarged to include a fourth mountain, also owned by Ski Co. Ski Co. thereafter acquired one of its competitor's mountains, giving it monopoly power. It then refused to continue the all-Aspen ticket, thereby refusing to deal with the remaining independent operator, Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. ("Highlands"), [31] and instead offered a similar ticket good only on its three mountains. Further, Ski Co. blocked Highlands' attempts to develop a substitute package by turning away skiers who attempted use the substitute package.

The Court upheld the jury's verdict that Ski Co. had committed unlawful anticompetitive conduct. While recognizing that "even a firm with monopoly power has no general duty to engage in a joint marketing program with a competitor," Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 600, the Court indicated that the right to refuse to deal with a competitor was not unqualified, id. at 601. Ski Co. did not merely reject a novel offer to participate in a cooperative venture; rather, it elected to alter the character of the market itself -- the all-Aspen ticket was the product of competition when the market contained three independent operators. Id. at 603-04. While such a market change is not necessarily anticompetitive, the Court found evidence in the record that there were no valid business reasons for Ski Co.'s actions in terminating the all-Aspen ticket. Consumers were angered and were not skiing the mountain of their choice because their ticket would not permit it; Ski Co.'s rejection [32] of skiers attempting to use the Highlands' substitute package indicated it chose to forgo the short-run benefits of those revenues in order to harm Highlands over the long run; and Ski Co. maintained similar all-area tickets in other locations where it owned ski resorts. As a result, the Court deemed Ski Co.'s conduct to be illegal anticompetitive behavior. See id. at 605-11.

[*1022] Plaintiffs attempt to draw parallels between Aspen Skiing and this case, arguing that there are no legitimate business reasons for Univision's switch to cable and that the switch will substantially change the market. However, the complaint does not allege that there are no legitimate business reasons for Univision's decision to switch to cable (a suggestion which Univision also vigorously disputes). And plaintiffs' argument that Univision's switch will change the market has no antitrust relevance in the present circumstances where Univision already has a one hundred percent monopoly. The fact that Univision presently broadcasts on free television is, unlike the situation in Aspen Skiing, not the result of an arrangement between competitors that permitted the market to function in a manner favorable [33] to consumers. Rather, it was the result of Univision's unilateral decision upon entering the market. Univision's decision to switch to cable occurs in a context where no competition exists.

Following Aspen Skiing, the Seventh Circuit issued Olympia. There, Western Union, a monopolist of telex service, was forced to stop requiring subscribers to lease their telex terminals from it in order to obtain service. It then decided to sell off all of its terminal inventory to get out of the equipment business. At first Western Union gave subscribers a list of other vendors, including Olympia, from which they could purchase terminals. Western Union stopped the practice, though, when its own inventory of units was declining too slowly. Olympia sued under § 2 when its business then plummeted, as it had no sales staff of its own and relied upon the Western Union referrals. The court found no anticompetitive conduct when a monopolist extends a helping hand to competitors and then withdraws it. 797 F.2d at 375-76. In discussing Aspen Skiing, now-Chief Judge Posner indicated that Aspen Skiing was narrowly written. "If it stands for any principle that goes beyond its unusual facts, [34] it is that a monopolist may be guilty of monopolization if it refuses to cooperate with a competitor in circumstances where some cooperation is indispensable to effective competition." Id. at 379. Unlike Aspen Skiing as interpreted in Olympia, in the present case there is no competitor with whom Univision could cooperate; the affirmative duties imposed upon the monopolist in Aspen Skiing thus are not appropriate in this case.

In Chase, 49 F. Supp. 2d 553, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6072, 1999 WL 248936, Northwest Airlines was sued by an individual challenging the company's "refusal to sell" policy regarding "spoke-hub-spoke" tickets for "spoke-hub" travel. The case arose out of Northwest's policy of pricing tickets beginning or terminating at one of its three hubs at higher prices than tickets for travel merely going through the hubs. When hub-originating and hub-bound consumers began purchasing spoke-hub-spoke tickets and then disposing of the legs they did not need, Northwest instituted a policy of refusing to sell such passengers spoke-hub-spoke tickets, imposed the policy on any travel agents who wanted to sell Northwest tickets, and enforced the policy on passengers by requiring [35] luggage to be checked through to the final destination and canceling any ticket with an abandoned leg. Northwest's motion to dismiss Chase's monopolization claim, based on Northwest's argument that its policy was not anticompetitive, was denied. The district court held that Chase sufficiently alleged an anticompetitive barrier to intrabrand competition because the refusal to sell policy interfered with how the competitive (between travel agents) intrabrand market operated.

Again, however, as with Aspen Skiing, Lerma's case is unlike Chase in that here, with Univision's one hundred percent monopoly, no competitive market exists, thus, there is no standard of competition Univision can be charged with altering. Plaintiffs have not alleged that Univision previously authorized two different stations to broadcast in Milwaukee (competing against each other) and then altered the market. Univision's switch to cable will not reduce the number of affiliates permitted [*1023] to broadcast Univision programming. Univision is simply replacing the current monopolist dealer with a different monopolist dealer, which generally is insignificant from an antitrust standpoint. See [Riegel, 752 F.2d \[36\] 261](#).

The Byars case involved another distinguishable scenario. For years, Byars distributed Bluff City's magazines to small neighborhood stores. After Bluff City changed ownership, the new owners decided to vertically integrate by taking over distribution themselves and eliminating the middleman Byars. Byars sued. The Sixth Circuit vacated the district court's decision for Bluff City, remanding for further findings on whether a refusal to deal occurred. See Byars, 609 F.2d at 864. Byars, however, was not a customer nor even simply a dealer of Bluff City. Although he started out as a dealer or distributor, upon Bluff City's vertical integration his position changed to that of competitor, and there was evidence that Bluff City attempted to squeeze him out of that role. Upon remand, the district judge was told to carefully consider whether Bluff City's vertical integration was justifiable on efficiency and business grounds and whether it had committed predatory conduct. Again, in the present case plaintiffs have not alleged that Univision's decision is not justifiable on business grounds nor that Univision is making a currently competitive market less competitive. And if Univision's [*37] actions can in someway be considered vertical integration (by cutting out the Channel 46 middleman in its current cable broadcasts), such vertical integration into distribution has been approved. See Paschall v. Kansas City Star Co., 727 F.2d 692 (8th Cir. 1984) (newspaper owner lawfully eliminated 250 independent carriers and took over retail business itself).

Lerma and Univision's viewers do not resemble customers whose rejection by a monopolist led to a finding of anticompetitive conduct, such as the Highlands skiers turned away by Ski Co. or the advertisers in Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 (1951). In Lorain Journal, the Supreme Court upheld a verdict that the one daily newspaper serving a small town violated § 2 by refusing to accept advertisements from customers who also advertised on a fledgling radio station, which was the newspaper's main competitor in the local advertising market. The Court found substantial evidence that the paper's conduct "amounted to an attempt by the publisher to destroy WEOL [the radio station] and, at the same time, to regain the publisher's pre-1948 substantial monopoly over the mass [*38] dissemination of all news and advertising." Id. at 153. Univision's Milwaukee viewers are unlike the advertisers in Lorain Journal and the skiers in Aspen Skiing in that Univision is not blocking them from, or penalizing them for, patronizing a competitor. The defendants in Lorain Journal and Aspen Skiing were acting to destroy the competitive market by depriving customers of choices. In this case, there is no competition in the relevant market, and thus no concern that Univision is eliminating consumer options in order to destroy a competitor.

As a result, because Lerma and Univision's viewers have not been blocked from or penalized for patronizing a competitor, are not victims of the alteration of a market characterized by competition, and are merely the subjects of a monopolist's right to raise its prices, they cannot show any anticompetitive conduct or effect merely because Univision refuses to deal with them.

My finding comports with the analysis of refusal to deal cases in Glazer's and Lipsky's 1995 article, Unilateral Refusals to Deal Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The authors divide refusal to deal cases into two groups that can lead to a finding [*39] of anticompetitive conduct: (1) "single monopoly cases," which include (a) refusals to deal with customers or suppliers that deal with the monopolist's competitors (as in Lorain Journal and Aspen Skiing), (b) refusals to participate in a joint venture [*1024] with a competitor (as in Aspen Skiing), and (c) refusals to license technology to a competitor; and (2) refusals to deal to gain or protect a monopoly in another market (integration into complementary markets, for instance). Glazer, supra, at 767-780. The authors indicate that a third category exists as well, but it is one that generally does not lead to any illegality: cases where there is no competitive relationship between the monopolist and the party allegedly injured by the refusal. Id. at 781-82. This third category consists of cases in which there is no danger of preserving or extending monopoly. In the most familiar pattern, a monopolist supplier refuses to deal with firms playing a role in the distribution of the supplier's product. . . .

Another common scenario involves a monopolist supplier of goods or services refusing to deal with a purchasing consumer rather than with a distributor of its product. [*40] . . .

Finally, some cases involve refusals to deal representing pure monopolistic exploitation: a refusal to sell except at a high price or on terms reflecting an exercise of the bargaining power inherent in the defendant's market position.

Id. at 781-82. According to the authors, in all cases in this third category, the rule should be one of legality. Id. at 783. "Indeed, a monopolist invites erosion of its market position by discriminating among its customers or by exploiting them. Although neither . . . is desirable, at least their tendency to encourage competitive erosion of the monopolist's position is consistent with antitrust objectives." Id. The complaints of Lerma and Univision's viewers fall into this third category.

3. Market Entry Barrier For Telemundo or Other Potential Competitors

Plaintiffs have not alleged that defendant has refused to deal with competitors in Spanish-language programming, specifically Telemundo. There are no allegations, for instance, that Telemundo has attempted to enter the relevant market and been rebuffed by Univision.⁶ or that Univision is or controls an essential facility.⁷ Instead, as the parties more clearly [41] focused the issue at oral argument, because there currently is no competition in Spanish-language programming in the Milwaukee area, the key question is whether Univision's change to cable makes it more difficult for Telemundo (or any other competitor that may start up) to enter the market.

[42] As stated above, monopolists, like any other businesses, usually may replace dealers and alter distribution methods without violating antitrust laws. If Univision were merely swapping one over-the-air broadcasting station for another in the Milwaukee area, there would be no anticompetitive effect. But does the fact that one distributor is an over-the-air broadcaster and the other is cable make a difference? And does plaintiffs' complaint actually allege that Univision's switch from Channel 46 to a direct feed to the cable television provider will make it more difficult for competitors to enter the Milwaukee area market?

Allegations in the complaint relating to this issue are sparse, but there are some:

18. To maintain access to Univision's Spanish-language programming, many [*1025] of the Milwaukee Area's Hispanic households undoubtedly will give in and purchase cable television packages. The remaining Hispanic households which do not, or cannot, purchase cable television will be too small in number to economically justify entry into the market by any other provider of free-broadcast Spanish-language programming (such as Telemundo). Univision's actions, therefore, will have the effect [43] of erecting significant economic barriers which will foreclose other Spanish-language programming networks from entering the market.

....

29. Univision has violated Wis. Stat. § 133.03\(2\) by monopolizing the Milwaukee Area market for Spanish-language television programming, and by engaging in anticompetitive acts designed to, among other things, (a) erect barriers foreclosing other Spanish-language programmers/networks from entering the Milwaukee Area market . . .

(Compl. PP 18, 29.)

HN11 [↑] In practice, a complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory. Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106. "The pleader may not evade these requirements by merely alleging a bare legal conclusion; if the facts do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "Invocation of antitrust terms of art does not confer immunity from [dismissal]; to the contrary, these conclusory statements must be accompanied by supporting factual [44] allegations." Id. at 1110.

Further, HN12 [↑] in regard to determining whether an antitrust claim is stated, "the court is not required to don blinders and to ignore commercial reality." Id. To survive a motion to dismiss, a claim must make economic and factual sense. See id.; cf. California Dental Ass'n v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 526 U.S. 756, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 1999 U.S. LEXIS 3606 \(1999\) (in case involving "quick look" at restraint of trade, court stated that unless economic view is implausible court should not initially dismiss it as presumptively wrong); Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, 596-97. In Car Carriers, for instance, the court granted Ford's motion to dismiss, finding "implausible"

⁶ There are no allegations or suggestions in the record that Telemundo is even interested in the relevant market or that it is a real competitor of Univision's in the sense of offering a similar product.

⁷ A facility is essential if it is necessary for access to the relevant market and a competitor cannot practically or reasonably duplicate it. MCI Communications Corp. v. AT&T Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132-33 \(7th Cir. 1983\). Examples are electrical transmission lines, see Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\), and the only railroad terminals in town, see United States v. Terminal R.R. Ass'n, 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 \(1912\). Antitrust laws have imposed on firms controlling an essential facility the obligation to make the facility available to competitors on nondiscriminatory terms. MCI, 708 F.2d at 1132.

and "preposterous" allegations in the complaint that Ford, having absolute control over and being highly concerned about the rates charged by its suppliers, would conspire with a company called Nu-Car to eliminate plaintiff from competition so Nu-Car could later charge Ford monopoly prices. Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1107 n.4, 1110.

Lerma's key allegation -- that "remaining Hispanic households which do not, or cannot, purchase cable television will be [45] too small in number to economically justify entry into the market by any other provider of free-broadcast Spanish-language programming (such as Telemundo)" -- is extremely conclusory and relies upon several factual assumptions, none of which is even alleged in the complaint. It assumes, for instance, that: (1) a competitor would itself choose over-the-air broadcasting versus cable; (2) assuming the competitor chose over-the-air broadcasting, the signal would not be picked up and rebroadcast by the cable provider;⁸ (3) if the over-the-air signal is not picked up, cable viewers do not and will not change back and forth between cable television and over-the-air broadcasting; and (4) those Hispanic households that give in and purchase cable television to get Univision would not drop cable television if a competitor came into the geographic market with free over-the-air broadcasting. [*1026] The failure of any one of these assumptions likely renders plaintiffs' barrier allegation false.

[46] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 requires simple notice pleading. While thin, the allegation itself is specific enough to inform Univision about the market entry barrier theory. See, e.g., Sanjuan v. American Bd. of Psychiatry & Neurology, Inc., 40 F.3d 247, 251 \(7th Cir. 1994\) (at pleading stage, plaintiff receives "the benefit of imagination, so long as the hypotheses are consistent with the complaint").

But plaintiffs' allegations about a potential market barrier fail to make factual and economic sense. For fraudulent joinder purposes, in order for me to deem the allegations inadequate, I must be able to say that, even assuming them to be true, Lerma cannot establish a cause of action against the defendant. Poulos, 959 F.2d at 73. If there is any reasonable possibility that a state court would rule against Univision, then the claim is not fraudulent. Id. If the allegations, though, are preposterous or implausible like the situation in Car Carriers or bare legal conclusions dressing up inadequate facts in antitrust lingo, the allegations cannot survive and will not block removal.

Besides being tenuous because of the underlying assumptions mentioned above, the [47] market barrier allegation and some of the assumptions themselves run contrary to accepted economic theory. For instance, the assumption that once current over-the-air Hispanic viewers purchase cable they will not return to free television if a free-broadcaster appears in the market is implausible. It flies in the face of the accepted principle that a monopolist's higher prices in fact attract competitors because consumers will jump to a lower-cost provider. The Spanish-language television market is likely to be more rather than less attractive after Univision's move to cable. Telemundo has not chosen to attempt to compete against Univision under current circumstances. It is hard to see how it could be more difficult to compete against Univision than it is now. As pled in the complaint, currently there are approximately 19,000 Hispanic households watching Spanish-language television in Milwaukee either via cable or over-the-air, all of whose viewing needs are satisfied by Univision. After the switch, of the approximately 11,000 current over-the-air Univision viewers, say 6,000 choose to purchase cable television to get Univision broadcasting. That will leave 5,000 noncable viewers, [48] none of whose viewing needs will be met by anyone. It seems to me that 5,000 people -- whether affluent or not⁹ -- desperately wanting some Spanish-language programming is a more attractive market than 19,000 viewers who are fully satisfied by the present situation.

What if there currently were no Spanish-language programming at all in Milwaukee and Univision wanted to enter the market? Could plaintiffs stop Univision (or any other network) from choosing a direct cable feed rather than free-broadcasting, even when the company would be acquiring a monopoly? Although I did not pose this question to the parties and am not myself an economist, intuitively I think the answer must be no. [49] If Univision, initially coming into the market and acquiring a monopoly, had chosen a direct cable feed rather than Channel 46's broadcasting, the resulting situation would not differ from that involving a switch from over-the-air to cable. The similarity of result in either situation makes it extremely implausible that Univision's jump to cable is unlawfully harmful to competition.

⁸ While plaintiff made some vague references at oral argument about a lack of space on the cable network for a second Spanish-language channel, there are absolutely no allegations in the complaint asserting that fact or that Univision has forced the cable provider, as controller of a possibly essential facility, to sign an exclusivity agreement.

⁹ Plaintiffs suggested at oral argument that the viewers left behind after Univision's switch to cable will be those at the low-end of the economic scale who cannot afford cable, and they will be unattractive to Telemundo or any other competitor. No such allegation is made in the complaint, however, which focuses on numbers.

Moreover, such similarity highlights the fact that plaintiffs really have failed to allege any misuse of monopoly power at all. As plaintiffs themselves indicate, anticompetitive conduct is found when "a monopolist [*1027] who claims to have lawfully acquired its power misuses it." (Pls.' Reply Br. at 7 (citing Intergraph Corp. v. Intel Corp., 3 F. Supp. 2d 1255 (N.D. Ala. 1998); see also Pls.' 5/28/99 Letter to Court at 1 ("The thrust of plaintiffs' argument is that Univision may not use its dominant market power . . . to create barriers that prevent others from competing here.").) See also Kodak, 504 U.S. at 482-83 (second element of a § 2 claim is "use of monopoly power" to foreclose competition) (emphasis added)). Plaintiffs have failed to allege how Univision's switch to cable is enabled [50] by or the result of Univision's dominant market power as opposed to being a choice any programmer -- whether or not a monopoly and whether or not it is part of a competitive market -- could make.

In sum, the allegation of a market entry barrier caused by too few viewers remaining after Hispanic households able to purchase cable television do so is a speculative, conclusory, and economically implausible prediction insufficient to sustain Lerma's claim.

IV. CONCLUSION

Lerma's claim makes no factual and economic sense and fails to assert any form of anticompetitive conduct; it therefore fails to state an antitrust claim under Wis. Stat. § 133.03(2). The same problem defeats Omar's claim, and, in addition, the complaint fails to provide sufficient facts regarding Omar's relation to the relevant market.

I find that Lerma and Omar cannot possibly state a claim upon which a state court would find in their favor against Univision. As a result, they are both disregarded for diversity jurisdiction purposes, removal was proper, and the claims of these two plaintiffs will be dismissed.

With this Decision and Order, plaintiffs' motion to stay briefing regarding Univision's motion to [51] dismiss becomes moot and will therefore be denied.

THEREFORE, IT IS ORDERED that plaintiffs' motion to remand is DENIED.

IT IS ORDERED that the claims of plaintiffs Lerma and Omar are DISMISSED.

IT FURTHER IS ORDERED that plaintiffs' motion to stay briefing and consideration of the pending motion to dismiss is DENIED.

FINALLY, IT IS ORDERED that a status conference to discuss the TRO motion, other pending motions, and scheduling of this case will be held on June 15, 1999, at 1:30 p.m. in Room 204 of the United States Courthouse.

Dated at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, this 11 day of June, 1999.

LYNN ADELMAN

District Judge

Louisa Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Pepsi-Cola Metro. Bottling Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, Ashland Division

June 11, 1999, Decided ; June 11, 1999, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 96-114

Reporter

94 F. Supp. 2d 804 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21663 **

LOUISA COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO., PLAINTIFF, v. PEPSI-COLA METROPOLITAN BOTTLING CO., INC., DEFENDANT.

Disposition: [1] Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claims GRANTED; Defendant's motion for partial summary judgment on Counts II and III of its counterclaims DENIED; Plaintiff's complaint DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

Core Terms

retailers, products, bottlers, space, prices, antitrust, shelf, display, loaders, dealer, territory, contracts, employees, Counts, secret, gifts, commercial bribery, summary judgment, competitor, consumer, soft drink, Bottling, programs, anticompetitive, counterclaims, promotions, violations, discounts, franchise, regional

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 a court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, in this case the plaintiff. Thus, when examining the record the court will resolve doubts and construe inferences in favor of the plaintiff in an effort to determine if any genuine issues of material fact exist. However, in a series of decisions commonly referred to as the "trilogy", the U.S. Supreme Court emphasized that the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff. In short, the "trilogy" requires the nonmoving party to produce specific factual evidence that a genuine issue of material fact exists.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

94 F. Supp. 2d 804, *804LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21663, 1

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The nonmoving party must produce enough evidence, after having had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery, so as to withstand a directed verdict motion. The movant could challenge the opposing party to put up or shut up on a critical issue and if the respondent did not put up, summary judgment is proper.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

HN3[Bribery, Commercial Bribery

See Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 518.020.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

Torts > ... > Proof > Violations of Law > Criminal & Penal Legislation

HN4[Crimes Against Persons, Bribery

Civil remedies for violations of Ky. Rev. Stat. An.. § 518.020 are generally available through § 446.070.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN5[Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

See Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 365.050.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN6[Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

To succeed on a claim under Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 365.050, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) a secret payment, (2) made to the injury of a competitor, (3) which tends to destroy competition. An actual intent to destroy competition does not matter.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7[Private Actions, Remedies

Before a plaintiff can succeed on any antitrust claim, it must first demonstrate an antitrust injury as opposed to a mere economic injury. Actionable antitrust injury is an injury to competition rather than just competitors. It requires proof (1) that the alleged violation tends to reduce competition in some market and (2) that the plaintiff's injury would result from a decrease in that competition rather than from some other consequence of the defendant's actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Low prices which remain above predatory levels do not constitute an antitrust injury because they benefit consumers regardless of how they are set.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

When a firm or even a group of firms adhering to a vertical agreement, lowers prices but maintains them above predatory levels, the business lost by rivals cannot be viewed as an anticompetitive consequence of the claimed violation. A firm complaining about the harm it suffers is really claiming that it is unable to raise prices. This is not antitrust injury; indeed, cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition. The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to non-predatory price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN10 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

A single competitor's lost profits does not demonstrate a market wide competitive detriment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN11 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Dominant firms can lawfully try to drive out their inefficient rivals through above cost price cuts even if they intend to raise prices later once the competition is eliminated.

Counsel: For LOUISA COCA-COLA BOTTLING COMPANY, INC., plaintiff: Richard A. Getty, Gregory A. Keyser, Getty, Keyser & Mayo, LLP, Lexington, KY.

For PEPSI-COLA METROPOLITAN BOTTLING CO., INC., PEPSICO, INC., defendants: William P. Emrick, McKenzie, Woolery, Emrick & Webb, P.S.C., Ashland, KY.

For PEPSI-COLA METROPOLITAN BOTTLING CO., INC., PEPSICO, INC., defendants: Richard T. Colman, Edward P. Henneberry, Michael P.A. Cohen, Howrey & Simon, Washington, DC.

For PEPSI-COLA METROPOLITAN BOTTLING CO., INC., PEPSICO, INC., counter-claimants: William P. Emrick, McKenzie, Woolery, Emrick & Webb, P.S.C., Ashland, KY.

For PEPSI-COLA METROPOLITAN BOTTLING CO., INC., PEPSICO, INC., counter-claimants: Richard T. Colman, Edward P. Henneberry, Howrey & Simon, Washington, DC.

For LOUISA COCA-COLA BOTTLING COMPANY, INC., counter-defendant: Anthony P. Tokarz, Bowles, Rice, McDavid, Graff & Love, P.L.L.C., Richard A. Getty, Gregory A. Keyser, Getty, Keyser & Mayo, LLP, [2] Lexington, KY.

Judges: Henry R. Wilhoit, Jr., Chief Judge.

Opinion by: Henry R. Wilhoit, Jr.

Opinion

[*805] MEMORANDUM OPINION & ORDER

Plaintiff, a soft drink distributor, brought this antitrust action against its chief rival for monopolizing the local soft drink market. Plaintiff accuses the Defendant of unfair trade practices including coercive marketing plans, illegal payoffs, and commercial bribery to obtain an unfair competitive advantage. Defendant denies any wrongdoing and accuses the Plaintiff, in turn, of unfair, anticompetitive conduct as well, including defaming Defendant and abusing the Court system in an effort to stifle legitimate competition.

This matter is currently before the Court on Defendant's motions for (1) summary judgment on each of Plaintiff's claims and (2) partial summary judgment on Counts II and III of Defendant's counterclaims. The parties fully briefed these motions and the Court conducted oral argument on the same. The Court having been sufficiently advised, the motions are now ripe for decision.

[*806] I. Facts

A. The Parties

Pepsi ¹ and Coke ² both manufacture a variety of beverage syrups and concentrates which they distribute to bottling companies. [3] The bottlers manufacture bottled and canned beverages from the syrups which they sell to retailers for resale to the public. Each bottler has a franchise territory in which it holds exclusive distribution rights for its products.

Pepsi Cola Metropolitan Bottling Co., Inc ("Pepsi-Metro") and the Louisa Coca-Cola Bottling Co. ("Louisa Coke") are bottlers servicing parts of Eastern Kentucky and West Virginia ³ [5]. Pepsi-Metro, one of the world's largest bottlers, is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Pepsi Cola Co. It began distribution in Kentucky and West Virginia after acquiring one of Pepsi's independent bottlers, East Kentucky Beverage Co. ("EKB") in the early 1990's. Louisa Coke, by contrast, [4] is a small, privately-held business owned and operated by Harold Britton ("Britton") which consists of ten employees and services only a seven county area.⁴ Coke services the remainder of Kentucky and West Virginia through Coca-Cola Enterprises, Inc. ("CCE"), the largest Coke bottler in the world; Coca-Cola Bottling Co. Consolidated ("Coke Consolidated"), Coke's second largest bottling operation; and Middlesboro Coca-Cola Bottling Works ("Middlesboro Coke"), another small, independent bottler servicing an eight county, tristate rural franchise. Pepsi-Metro's Pepsi franchise territory covers the entire Louisa Coke franchise territory and parts of those serviced by each of these other Coke bottlers. Thus, Pepsi-Metro competes with all of these Coke bottlers, large and small, for business in the Eastern Kentucky/West Virginia market.

¹ The term "Pepsi", as used in this opinion, shall refer generically to the entire Pepsi Cola Company system including its product bottlers and distributors. Similarly, the term "Coke" shall reference the entire Coca Cola Company system including the bottlers and distributors of Coke products.

² See note 1, supra.

³ Though identified as a bottler, Louisa Coke no longer does any actual bottling. Rather, it simply serves as a distributor. While it holds the exclusive distribution rights for all Coke products in its franchise territory, it does not provide fountain syrup services or carry the complete line of Coke products such as Nestea, Fruitopia and the like. Britton complains that it would not be profitable to provide these other services because of Pepsi's market dominance. Though Britton has not made his ability to market these other services an issue in his case, Pepsi-Metro has raised the matter to suggest that Louisa Coke suffers in its market from its own refusal to compete on a broad scale.

B. Marketing Programs

National and regional retailers are the biggest outlets for Coke and Pepsi products. Many larger grocery and convenience store retailers like SuperAmerica, Kroger, and Winn Dixie have stores in more than one bottler's territory and operate out of multi-state marketing and distribution centers without regard to local bottlers. To provide these larger clients with consistency in distribution, pricing, service, advertising and promotion of soft drink products, Coke and Pepsi implement national and regional marketing programs. They coordinate the displays and advertising and give the retailers certain promotional allowances. They also provide their bottlers with funds for promotions in local stores within the bottler's sale territory. At issue in this case are two promotional tools, Calender Marketing Agreements ("CMAs", also known as Customer Development Agreements or "CDAs" by Pepsi); and "dealer loaders".

[6] 1. CMAs

CMAs are written agreements in which the retailer agrees to promote a particular brand on certain weeks and holidays by [*807] featuring that product in newspaper ads to the exclusion of the competition, providing a certain amount of shelf space and the opportunity to place vending equipment, as well as displaying the product in a certain way or place during the promotional period. The retailer is usually compensated for his performance on a per case basis. Large retailers frequently enter into CMAs with more than one company on an annual basis. Thus, Coke will be the retailer's featured product on some weeks, Pepsi on others. The retailers are free to cancel the agreement at any time and the only penalty for noncompliance is loss of the per case discount.

Coke USA and Pepsi enter into many CMAs with retailers at the national and regional level on behalf of all their bottlers. Similarly, all of the individual Coke and Pepsi bottlers in the Kentucky/West Virginia market area with the exception of Louisa Coke offer CMAs of their own to local retailers. Pepsi, Coke USA and all Coke bottlers other than Louisa Coke agree that CMAs foster competition, drive up volume, improve efficiency [7] and reduce retail prices. Everyone agrees consumer prices would rise if CMAs were eliminated.

Even though a few customers have requested CMAs from Louisa Coke, it refuses to offer such. Britton testified that he refuses to offer the same because he believes they are anticompetitive. Pepsi claims Britton does not want to go to the expense of competing in this fashion or investing in his company's future. To prove its point, Pepsi notes that Britton's warehouses are nearly completely depreciated and he has purchased no new equipment for his operations other than two used trucks. Pepsi further notes that Britton has made a number of interest free loans to himself and his family, abandoned his contracts with the Jenny Wiley State Park System, and refuses to carry the full line of Coke products or any fountain syrups. Britton does not deny these facts but says his decision to abandon fountain syrups and other coke products are attributable to Pepsi's lock on the market. Britton also says he abandoned the Jenny Wiley account because of a dispute with the park service over a decision to reopen the bidding process.

⁴ Specifically, Louisa Coke's territory covers Lawrence, Johnson, Martin, and Floyd Counties in Kentucky, as well as Wayne, Mingo and Lincoln Counties in West Virginia.

Whatever Louisa Coke's reasons are for not offering its own CMAs, the fact [8] remains that it does operate under and benefit from the national and regional CMAs negotiated by Coke USA and other bottlers with such large clients as Winn-Dixie, Kroger, Wal-Mart, Food City, SuperAmerica, and Happy Mart, though. Louisa Coke simply reports its case sales to Coke USA who then makes its contractual payments to the retailer's account.

Louisa Coke sells 40% of its volume to customers with national or regional Coke CMAs. Furthermore, every other Coke bottler in this region negotiates CMAs of their own -- some of which Louisa Coke benefits from. Louisa Coke insists, however, that the Court should enjoin Pepsi-Metro from offering or participating in the same. It complains that Pepsi-Metro has secured for itself the best advertising, display, shelf and storage space for all of the key marketing weeks and holidays. Louisa Coke says there is no point in providing CMA benefits to retailers in its franchise territory because Pepsi has already taken the most desirable promotional dates. Louisa Coke further complains that the CMAs restrict the shelf space available for Coke products. This causes diminished shelf and storage space which means Coke drivers make more trips to deliver [9] less product. This increases costs and decreases efficiency. Finally, Louisa Coke says it has to offer retailers lower prices than Pepsi in order to keep its products priced competitively by the retailer during the Pepsi promotions. Thus, it sells for less than which it is delivering inefficiently for more. Until the CMAs are eliminated in its territory, Louisa Coke complains it will not be able to compete effectively and that prices will remain artificially low.

2. Dealer Loaders

Dealer loaders are sales incentive contests and display programs implemented [*808] through written agreements with the retailers in which the bottlers award prizes to retailers who meet specific performance criteria like increased sales. The retailer is free to accept or reject these promotions. Those who do participate are free to do with the prize as they like. Most raffle them off to customers or employees. Like CMAs, dealer loaders are designed to increase sales volume which leads to lower retail prices. Dealer loaders are commonly offered nationwide by many product manufacturers including those outside the soft drink industry.

As with CMAs, Louisa Coke does not offer dealer loaders but Coke USA and [10] all of the other Coke bottlers servicing the eastern Kentucky region do. For example, Coke USA gave SuperAmerica's racing team $ 100,000 in exchange for its bottlers' exclusive right to market soft drinks for a one month period, two to one display space over Pepsi during the promotional period, "first position" on displays and cold ice barrel placements; and a lowered promotional margin to consumers. Louisa Coke benefitted from this dealer loader and Coke USA assessed Louisa Coke's proportionate share of the costs against a Louisa Coke marketing account funded by Coke USA. Other Coke USA dealer loaders funded from Louisa Coke's account include golf outings, trips to the beach, World Cup Soccer tickets; Final Four tickets; golf clubs, Disney World passes and NFL tickets. Because of the widespread use of these programs, all of the other regional Coke Bottlers agree that Pepsi-Metro would be placed at a serious competitive disadvantage if enjoined from participating.

Louisa Coke believes that dealer loaders are anticompetitive and that it would be a waste of time trying to compete with such against Pepsi given Pepsi's control over the market. Louisa Coke also believes there is more going [11] on here. It claims Pepsi gives retail managers and employees gifts "under the table" and without the owners' knowledge in exchange for the best display and shelf space and even the elimination of Coke shelf and storage space. To support this claim, Louisa Coke submitted many affidavits most of which contain either irrelevant information or hearsay. Pepsi vehemently denies making any cash payments and claims any "gifts" it gave were promotional items exchanged pursuant to the written dealer loader incentive plans.

C. Prior Litigation

This is not Louisa Coke's first antitrust venture. In 1987, it sued Pepsi-Metro's predecessor, EKB, in an antitrust and state law unfair competition case. Louisa Coca-Cola Bottling Co., v. East Kentucky Beverage Co., No. 87-240 (E.D.Ky.). That case challenged, among other things, EKB's use of CMA's, dealer loaders and secret payments.

The Court summarily dismissed the CMA issues but permitted Plaintiff's secret payment allegations to proceed. EKB settled the remaining claims before the case went to trial by paying Louisa Coke $ 400,000.⁵

[12] Before the settlement was finalized on the EKB suit, Britton asked Coke USA to fund another lawsuit against Pepsi.⁶ Coke USA declined this request.

In 1992, Britton informed Coke USA that he intended to sue Pepsi-Metro for unfair trade practices. He claimed Pepsi's illegal incentives to store managers "on the take" prevented him from obtaining a fair retail price and display space for his Coke products. Coke USA sent a team to Louisa Coke's territory to investigate these charges. The Coke team surveyed a dozen stores throughout Louisa Coke's territory before finding Britton's accusations unsubstantiated. The team reported to Coke USA its findings that Louisa Coke did not (1) provide its customers with regular merchandising on the weekends; (2) [*809] did not always receive a display for its featured promotions but the retailers indicated this was due to Coke's failure to keep its shelves stocked during the promotion; [13] and (3) though Britton claimed Wal-Mart locked him out of business there, the store manager said he would like to have a Coke CMA but he had not heard from anyone at Coke in more than ten months. Ultimately, the Coke team concluded that Britton's competitive shortcomings were the product of his marketing methods and factors entirely in his control. The team recommended that Britton train his team better to combat his low sales level though this alone would not solve his problems. The team then concluded that Britton was competitive or fairly represented with regard to retail pricing and permanent display space -- his two biggest complaints.

D. Effect of Litigation on Parties

During the EKB case, the parties estimated that EKB had a 70% market share. The parties estimate that Pepsi-Metro's market share is the same as its predecessor. Thus, there has been no change in Pepsi's position whatsoever.

As for Louisa Coke, its business and profits have increased significantly since settling the EKB suit. Its sales volume is up at least 47.5%, gross profits are up 65.58%; and operating income has risen 336.5%. Plaintiff's expert says these increases are lower than that which he would [14] expect in a competitive market, though, and attributes them to Plaintiff's low overhead.

E. Current Case

Plaintiff's current claims are as follows:

Counts I & XIII (contracts in restraint of trade): Pepsi-Metro has entered into contracts which provide certain rebates and discounts to preferred retailers in exchange for promises not to (1) sell Louisa Coke's products at a lower price than Pepsi; (2) offer Louisa Coke equal shelf space; and (3) display Louisa Coke's products. Such contracts constitute an unreasonable restraint on trade in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1 and W.Va. Code § 47-18-3.

Counts II & VI (price discrimination): Pepsi-Metro offers certain preferred retailers special rebates and discounts in an effort to monopolize the market in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 15; KRS 365.020.

Count III (tying agreements): Pepsi-Metro denies retailers its Pepsi products unless they also agree Pepsi's snack foods and other products and also exclude Louisa Coke's products in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 14.

⁵ Interestingly, Britton put none of that $ 400,000 into Louisa Coke. Rather, he divided this money amongst his family.

⁶ A copy of that letter is not in the record but Coke USA's response referencing this letter is.

Count IV & XI (monopolization): Pepsi-Metro has an 80% share of the soft drink market in Louisa [15] Coke's territory which makes it a monopoly. It has maintained that monopoly power by (1) purchasing other brands such as 7-UP, Dr. Pepper, etc.; (2) buying certain fast food franchises; (3) entering contracts with retailers that discriminate in price; (4) offering certain select retailers special rebates in exchange for preferential treatment; (5) entering contracts which prohibit retailers from promoting, displaying, or giving equal pricing or shelf space to Louisa Coke's products; and (6) conditioning the sale of Pepsi products on the sale of other products such as snack foods as well. Maintenance of this monopoly through such anticompetitive acts violates 15 U.S.C. § 2 and W.Va. Code 47-18-4.

Counts V & XII (attempted monopolization): Pepsi-Metro engaged in anti-competitive conduct for the sole purpose of controlling prices and/or output and/or destroying competition in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2 and W.Va. Code § 47-18-4.

Counts VII & X (secret rebates): Pepsi-Metro offers secret payments, gifts, allowances, rebates, refunds, commissions, discounts and incentive programs to certain retailers and store managers in violation of [16] KRS 365.050 and W.Va. Code § 47-11a-9.

Count VIII (unlawful acts): Pepsi-Metro's unfair acts, contracts and monopolies violate KRS 367.170 & 367.175.

[*810] Count IX (commercial bribery): Pepsi-Metro gives gifts, payments, and the like to retail employees without their employer's consent in order to influence the employee's conduct in ways contrary to the employer's interests. Such conduct violates Kentucky's commercial bribery statute, KRS 518.020.

II. Summary Judgment Standard

HN1 Under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure the Court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, in this case the Plaintiff. Thus, when examining the record the Court will resolve doubts and construe inferences in favor of the Plaintiff in an effort to determine if any genuine issues of material fact exist. However, in a series of decisions commonly referred to as the "trilogy", Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\), [17] the U.S. Supreme Court emphasized that "the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252. In short, the "trilogy" requires the nonmoving party to produce specific factual evidence that a genuine issue of material fact exists.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has interpreted the "trilogy" to mean that HN2 the nonmoving party must produce enough evidence, after having had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery, so as to withstand a directed verdict motion. Street v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 886 F.2d 1472, 1477 \(6th Cir. 1989\). As that Court stated, "the movant could challenge the opposing party to 'put up or shut up' on a critical issue...[and] if the respondent did not 'put up', summary judgment [is] proper." Id. at 1478.

III. Pepsi-Metro's Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's Claims

A. Price Discrimination, Tying Agreements and Unlawful Acts

Plaintiff has stipulated to the dismissal of its price discrimination, tying [18] agreement and unlawful acts claims as set forth in Counts II, III, VI and VIII. of its complaint. Accordingly, the Court shall grant summary judgment to the Defendant on these claims.

B. Commercial Bribery

Count IX accuses Pepsi-Metro of giving secret payments and gifts to various retail employees without their employers' consent in violation of Kentucky's Commercial Bribery Statute, HN3⁷ KRS 518.020. As it pertains to this action, that statute makes it a crime to Offer[], confer[], or agree[] to confer any benefit upon any employee ... without the consent of the latter's employer ... with intent to influence his conduct contrary to his employer's ... best interests.

Id. HN4⁷ Civil remedies for violations of this criminal statute are generally available through KRS 446.070⁷. Big Rivers Electric Corp. v. Thorpe, 921 F. Supp. 460, 462 (W.D. Ky. 1996). Plaintiff can only pursue this civil relief, however, if it has standing to assert such a claim. This means Louisa Coke must belong to that class of persons for whose benefit the Kentucky General Assembly passed the commercial bribery statute. See, State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. v. Reeder, 763 S.W.2d 116, 118 (Ky. 1989); [\[19\]](#) & Hackney v. Fordson Coal Co., 230 Ky. 362, 19 S.W.2d 989, 990 (Ky. 1929).

In considering the question of Louisa Coke's standing, the Court found the [\[*811\] Hackney](#) decision very helpful. Hackney was a small retailer who challenged a coal company's decision to pay its employees in scrip redeemable only at company stores. 230 Ky. 362, 19 S.W.2d 989. This decision cost the retailer a great deal of business because any employee redeeming the scrip outside the company store was subject to discharge. 19 S.W.2d at 990. The retailer argued that such conduct violated § 2738s1 which made it unlawful for any company to directly or indirectly require employees to purchase items at a company store or to punish employees who shop elsewhere. Id. The retailer further argued that [\[20\]](#) it had standing to pursue these violations by the coal company pursuant to § 466, the equivalent of current KRS 466.070. Id. The trial court and appellate court both disagreed. Id. These courts noted that § 2738s1 was passed solely to protect employees from being coerced into trading at the employer's commissary where they might be subject to extortion and unfair dealing. Id. It did not intend to protect merchants competing with the company stores. Id. Thus, the courts concluded that the coal company employees had standing to contest the scrip but an outside retailer clearly did not. Id.

Though the Hackney decision is seventy years old, the Kentucky Supreme Court has cited it with approval as recently as 1989. Reeder, 763 S.W.2d at 118. Applying it to the instant action, this Court can only conclude that Louisa Coke lacks standing to assert a commercial bribery claim in this case. The commercial bribery statute, on its face, seeks to protect employers from the manipulation of their employees in ways contrary to the employer's interests. KRS 518.020\(a\). Louisa Coke is a business competitor rather than an employer for purposes of this action. [\[21\]](#) The retailers whose employees Pepsi allegedly bribed might have a cause of action but Pepsi's rivals, like those of the coal company stores, do not. Thus, Louisa Coke, though allegedly injured by Pepsi's conduct, does not have a cause of commercial bribery cause of action under KRS 446.070 as it falls outside the class of persons the commercial bribery statute was intended to protect.

In rendering this decision, the Court considered but found Judge Coffman's decision in Big Rivers Electric Corp. v. Thorpe, 921 F. Supp. 460 (W.D.Ky. 1996) inapposite. Judge Coffman permitted utility rate payers to pursue commercial bribery claims against a coal company which entered into fraudulent coal contracts with an electric company who then passed the costs of those contracts on to distribution companies. The distribution companies, in turn, passed them on again to the ultimate utility rate payers in the form of higher utility bills. Id. at 462. Though Judge Coffman declined to apply a "direct-purchaser" rule which would have limited KRS 446.070's availability to persons directly injured by the alleged violators, id. at 462, she did not address [\[22\]](#) nor was she asked to address whether the General Assembly intended to protect anyone other than employers with its commercial bribery statute -- the issue in the instant action. Thus, Big Rivers has no application to this Court's conclusion that only employers and principals have standing to civilly pursue such violations under KRS 446.070.

C. Secret Payments

⁷ KRS 446.040 provides that "[a] person injured by the violation of any statute may recover from the offender such damages as he sustained by reason of the violation, although a penalty or forfeiture is imposed for such violation."

Counts VII and X accuse Pepsi-Metro of giving retailers secret payments and gifts in violation of Kentucky and West Virginia's Unfair Trade Practice Acts.⁸ These Acts contain virtually identical language and prohibit:

The secret payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions, or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, or secretly extending to certain purchasers special services [*812] or privileges not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions, to the injury of a competitor, and where such payment or allowance tends to destroy competition, is an unfair trade practice, and no person shall resort to such trade practice.

HN5 KRS 365.050; W.Va. Code § 47-11a-3. HN6 To succeed on these claims, Plaintiff must demonstrate (1) a secret payment, (2) made to the 23 injury of a competitor, (3) which tends to destroy competition. Jefferson Ice & Fuel Co. v. Grocers Ice & Cold Storage Co., 286 S.W.2d 80, 83 \(Ky. 1955\). An actual intent to destroy competition does not matter. Id.

Defendant insists it made no secret payments. It says it prohibits its personnel from "taking cash to the street" and that this has not occurred to the best of its knowledge. Indeed, Pepsi-Metro obtained affidavits from all but one of the retailers Plaintiff originally identified as receiving illegal payments. Each affiant denied these secret payment allegations. While Pepsi and the retailers agree that "gifts" were exchanged, they state that such only occurred 24 pursuant to formal, written dealer loader incentive plans which the retailers authorized.

Plaintiff has little if any evidence to contradict Pepsi-Metro's position. Indeed, Plaintiff's proof of a West Virginia violation is limited to the affidavit of Vernon Adkins.⁹ Adkins is the owner of a small family grocery store in West Virginia -- the only store originally identified by Plaintiff as receiving cash payments which has not since denied the allegation. Adkins averred that Pepsi personnel offered to buy Coca Cola's shelf space from him on two occasions but that he refused these offers. Adkins admitted that Pepsi continues to provide him with Pepsi products though at a less favorable price.

25 Though it is a fairly close call, the Court finds this scant evidence does not suffice to defeat summary judgment on Plaintiff's West Virginia Unfair Trade Practice claim. Assuming the offer was made, Adkins refused it. Thus, no secret payment occurred. Furthermore, there is no question that Pepsi continued to provide Adkins with Pepsi products after the offers were refused. Though Adkins does say Pepsi-Metro subsequently canceled his CMA, he does not say when this happened. Louisa Coke infers that Adkins began paying more for Pepsi some undefined time later because he refused this cash offer. Without more information, though, this is a leap that neither this Court nor any reasonable juror could make. This is particularly so here given the overwhelming evidence from every other retailer Plaintiff identified that such secret gifts did not occur.

As for a Kentucky violation, Plaintiff's proof is limited to the affidavits of Steven Banks, Lisa Burke, and Peggy Wallace.¹⁰ Banks and Burke are employees of local SuperAmerica stores who claim their district manager, James

⁸ Count VII specifically asserts violations of KRS 365.050 and relief for such through KRS 365.070. Count XI alleges that the same conduct also violated W.Va. law though no specific statute is mentioned. Plaintiff demands relief through W.Va.Code 47-11a-9 but is apparently asserting a violation of W.Va.Code § 47-11a-3.

⁹ Plaintiff also presented affidavits from its drivers who claim various retail personnel told them they had received cash payments from Pepsi-Metro. Plaintiff did not produce any affidavits or testimony from these retailers. Those statements, as presented to the Court, are hearsay. Since Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(e\) requires that supporting affidavits be based on personal knowledge and set forth facts as would be admissible in evidence, the Court shall not consider these drivers' affidavits to the extent they offer inadmissible hearsay evidence.

¹⁰ Plaintiff also presented an affidavit from Junior Curtis, the manager of a Foodland Grocery Store in Louisa, Kentucky, who states that Pepsi paid Foodland a "special fee" for more shelf space. Curtis does not say when this occurred or how he knows this to be true. Contrary to Plaintiff's original allegations, Curtis does not say Pepsi paid him personally anything or that he witnessed such a transaction with anyone else. Indeed, the owner of that same Foodland denies receiving any such fee. Because the Court cannot determine whether Curtis' statements are based on personal knowledge or hearsay, the Court cannot

Mills, received camping equipment and other valuable merchandise from Pepsi. They [*813] also claim that Mills gives Pepsi [26] very favorable treatment. Mills denied any wrongdoing and insists any gifts he received were issued pursuant to an authorized dealer loader program. He further insists his favorable treatment of Pepsi was motivated by legitimate business concerns. Burke and Banks offer no opinion or evidence to contradict this. Thus, the Kentucky claim rests entirely on Peggy Wallace's affidavit.

[27] Wallace claims she and her manager received gifts from the Pepsi driver. Wallace says she told the driver she could not receive such items and that he then began leaving them in her car. Pepsi has provided affidavits indicating that it gave all of the gifts Wallace mentioned pursuant to formal, written dealer loaders with Wallace's employer. Though the Pepsi driver's "covert" conduct in delivering these gifts is suspicious, neither Wallace nor anyone else denies that this is true. More importantly, Wallace does not claim that she or her manager had any authority to effect how her employer treated Coke or Pepsi. Because there is no evidence that any gift to Wallace was likely to destroy competition, Plaintiff's Kentucky Unfair Trade Practice Claim fails as well.

D. Antitrust Claims

Counts I, IV, V, XI, XII, and XIII accuse Pepsi-Metro of various West Virginia and federal antitrust law violations including monopolization, attempted monopolization, and entering into unlawful contracts in restraint of trade. West Virginia construes its state antitrust laws in conformity with its parallel federal counterparts. Gray v. Marshall Cty. Bd. of Educ., 179 W. Va. 282, 367 S.E.2d 751 \(W.Va. 1988\); [28] W.Va. Code § 47-18-16. Accordingly, the Court shall consider the state and federal antitrust claims together.

1. Antitrust Injury

HN7 Before Plaintiff can succeed on any antitrust claim, it must first demonstrate an antitrust injury as opposed to a mere economic injury. Campus Ctr. Discount Den v. Univ. of Miami, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 12017, 1997-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P71,826 \(6th Cir. 1997\). Actionable antitrust injury is an injury to competition rather than just competitors. Valley Prods. Co. v. Landmark, 128 F.3d 398, 402 \(6th Cir. 1997\). It requires proof "(1) that the alleged violation tends to reduce competition in some market and (2) that the plaintiff's injury would result from a decrease in that competition rather than from some other consequence of the Defendant's actions." Tennesseean Truckstop, Inc. v. NTS, Inc., 875 F.2d 86, 88 \(6th Cir. 1989\) quoting Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 334.1b at 299 (1988 Supp.). The Court does not believe Plaintiff has met this burden.

Plaintiff does not argue that all dealer loaders and CMA programs are anticompetitive. Indeed, there is no evidence to support such a position. These are formal, [29] written programs which retailers are free to accept, reject, or cancel at any time. Pepsi, Coke USA, and every other Coke bottler agree that these programs are valuable, pro-competitive tools which increase sales volume and decrease consumer costs. This position is bolstered by the fact that Plaintiff derives almost half of its sales from these programs in what it describes as a monopolized, locked market. It is further bolstered by the fact that Plaintiff does not seek to enjoin Coke USA or any other bottler from participating in the same. Rather, Plaintiff argues that only Pepsi-Metro should be so enjoined because it already has enough of a market share in Louisa Coke's franchise territory.

Plaintiff's complaint, reduced to its most basic terms, is that it cannot charge more for its products. Louisa Coke claims Pepsi's alleged exclusionary practices have artificially deflated consumer soft drink prices in Louisa Coke's market. Louisa Coke currently competes with Pepsi by cutting its wholesale price. Apparently, Louis Coke cannot raise its wholesale prices and remain competitive under current circumstances. Though Louisa Coke has operated at a significant profit in this [*814] deflated [30] market, it believes it could increase its profit margins even more if Pepsi's current competitive practices were enjoined because it could sell its products at a higher price. There is apparently no question that consumer prices would rise if the Court were to grant the relief Plaintiff seeks.

Though the parties agree that current prices are unusually low, there is no complaint of predatory pricing here. HN8[¹] Low prices which remain above predatory levels do not constitute an antitrust injury because they benefit consumers regardless of how they are set. Atlantic Richfield Co. \(ARCO\) v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 338, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1892, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\). The whole purpose behind the antitrust laws is to protect consumer interests. Id. That the low prices may be "ruinous" to one or more competitors, then, does not matter. Id. at 337 n. 7. Furthermore, it is not for Courts to decide whether the competition that produces these low prices is good or bad. Id. As explained by the Supreme Court, HN9[¹] when a firm or even a group of firms adhering to a vertical agreement, lowers prices but maintains them above predatory levels, the [31] business lost by rivals cannot be viewed as an "anticompetitive" consequence of the claimed violation. A firm complaining about the harm it suffers "is really claiming that it [is] unable to raise prices." Blair v. Harrison, Rethinking Antitrust Injury, 42 Vand.L.Rev. 1539, 1554 \(1989\). This is not antitrust injury; indeed, "cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition." Matsushita, supra, at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1359. The antitrust laws were enacted for "the protection of competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1521, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\) (emphasis in original). To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to [nonpredatory] price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share."

Id. at 337-38.

Plaintiff, of course, insists there is more than low prices at stake here. It claims the low prices are simply a by-product of its inability to obtain adequate shelf, storage and display space -- the real injury in this case. [32] Because it has less retail space to work with, Louisa Coke says it is forced to operate inefficiently. Its drivers must make more trips to fill less shelf space which costs more. Thus, Louisa Coke is selling for less than which costs more. Louisa Coke argues that it is entitled to more shelf space under the antitrust laws because such would balance the parties' positions with customers.

Plaintiff offers nothing other than its own projected lost profits to prove that Pepsi's actions have foreclosed a substantial share of the soft drink market. HN10[¹] A single competitor's lost profits does not demonstrate a market wide competitive detriment. Baum Research and Development Co., Inc. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., Inc., 31 F. Supp. 2d 1016, 1021 \(E.D. Mich. 1998\). Louisa Coke apparently expects the Court to assume that the many fringe brands which control 20% of the market have suffered a similar fate. This is an assumption the Court cannot make. Even if the assumption were made, though, it would not save Plaintiff's case.

There is probably no question that Pepsi's promotions influence retailers to give more space to Pepsi products. When Pepsi gets more space, others will obviously [33] get less. There is no evidence, however, that Pepsi can control that retailers' decisions or has the power to exclude its rivals' products outright. Rather, all of the evidence indicates that the store owners within the Louisa Coke market allot shelf, storage and display space at their sole discretion based on such factors as the market's demand for a product and the supplier's ability to keep such products in stock. Common sense dictates that retailers will give more space to those [*815] products which are more popular with consumers and available for sale. See, e.g., Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 543 F. Supp. 1255 \(W.D. La. 1982\) aff'd 725 F.2d 300 \(5th Cir. 1984\). Pepsi's uncontraverted evidence indicates that it is superior within Louisa Coke's territory in both respects. Not only are Pepsi products more popular among consumers, Pepsi presented ample evidence that Louisa Coke has an inadequate service record franchise-wide.¹¹

¹¹ Affidavits from 15 large, important customers indicate that they denied Coke more shelf space because they could not count on having enough Coke products to sell. They say they often ran out of Coke products because Louisa Coke did not keep its shelves fully stocked and was slow to respond, if it responded at all, to their requests for additional products. While Pepsi drivers made deliveries several times a day including weekends, stocked the shelves themselves and set up their own displays and advertising, Louisa Coke only came once or twice a week, often left the products on the floor, and never brought any signs or Indeed, Coke USA's own investigation confirmed that Louisa Coke was fairly represented among its retailers given its operational shortcomings.

[34] To refute Pepsi's evidence, Louisa Coke offered neither claim nor evidence that Pepsi's allotted shelf space is inconsistent with its market share. Nor did it provide any proof that either it or any other soft drink competitor received less retail shelf space than either market demand or their service history justified. Under these circumstances, this Court has no business in engaging in "affirmative action" among retail outlets by telling retailers to give Coke and Pepsi equal retail space. Id. The Court would be protecting a competitor rather than competition if it were to do so. Id. Since Louisa Coke has failed to justify its demand for more retail space, it has failed to state an antitrust injury premised upon the same. See, Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300, 304 \(5th Cir. 1984\) (suggestion that bottler was entitled to more shelf space than market share justified did not state an antitrust injury).

As a final thought, the Court notes that Louisa Coke's complaint seems to be of too much competition rather than anticompetitive conduct. Louisa Coke does not want to compete as vigorously as its opponents. Its owner, Harold Britton, simply [35] refuses to compete at that level. Its pessimism that its efforts would be fruitless is no excuse for its refusal to try. Out Front Productions, Inc. v. Magid, 748 F.2d 166 \(3rd Cir. 1984\). Rather than rise to the challenges set by its chief rival, it asks the Court to restrain that rival from competing. This is something the Court cannot and will not do. Louisa Coke may indeed be a David facing a Goliath but the law affords it no special favor in meeting its foe in battle. For even monopolists have a right to engage in vigorous competition. Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300, 304 \(5th Cir. 1984\). HN11[] Dominant firms can lawfully try to drive out their inefficient rivals through above cost price cuts even if they intend to raise prices later once the competition is eliminated. Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler, Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 527 \(1st Cir. 1989\). The Court can find no antitrust injury in practices that are themselves competitive regardless of whether the practices were enabled by antitrust violations. Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1418 \(7th Cir. 1989\); Bayou Bottling, Inc., v. Dr. Pepper Co., 543 F. Supp. 1255, 1269 \(W.D. La. 1982\) [36] aff'd 725 F.2d 300 \(5th Cir. 1984\). For all of the foregoing reasons, then, Defendants are therefore entitled to summary judgment on Counts I, IV, V, XI, XII and XIII of Plaintiff's complaint.

2. Contracts in restraint of trade

Even if Plaintiff had stated an actionable antitrust injury, counts I and XIII would still fail. These claims allege that Pepsi violated 15 U.S.C. § 1 and [W.Va. \[816\] Code § 47-18-3](#) by entering into unlawful contracts in restraint of trade. Specifically, Plaintiff claims Pepsi-Metro offered certain preferred retailers contracts with "discounts" and "advertising subsidies or rebates" in exchange for the retailers' promises not to sell Louisa Coke's products at prices lower than Pepsi or to advertise, promote, display or offer shelf space for Louisa Coke products.

Louisa Coke's allegations apparently refer to the CMAs. The Court has carefully considered Pepsi's CMAs and finds nothing illicit in them. Just as it found in the challenge to EKB's CMAs, the Court finds Pepsi-Metro's "practices of using calendar marketing agreements and discounting to obtain secondary displays would appear to be similar to the practices upheld [37] in other cases." Louisa Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. East Kentucky Beverage Co., Inc., Lex. Civ. No. 87-240, Memorandum Opinion & Order of April 19, 1999 at P.11; AAA Liquors, Inc. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 705 F.2d 1203, 1206 \(10th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 919, 77 L. Ed. 2d 290, 103 S. Ct. 1903 (1983); & Beverage Management Inc v. Coca-Cola Bottling Corp., 653 F. Supp. 1144, 1146 \(S.D. Ohio 1986\).

As an additional problem with Plaintiff's case, Plaintiff failed to show that Pepsi-Metro's use of CMAs "foreclose[s] competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected", Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 \(1960\), as assessed under a "rule of reason". Omega Envt'l, Inc. v. advertising. At least one customer reported that he ejected a Coke driver from his store because the driver's appearance was "nasty, unpresentable and repulsive to customers". Another customer banned Louisa Coke from its store for some time after a Coke driver punched the manager in the face.

Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1163 (9th Cir. 1997), cert denied, 525 U.S. 812, 119 S. Ct. 46, 142 L. Ed. 2d 36 (1998). Retailers are free to accept or reject Pepsi-metro's CMAs, can enter into more than one, and will suffer only a loss of the discount if they opt not to comply. The CMAs typically last one year or less and can be terminated [38] any time by either party. Their short duration and easy terminability substantially negate their potential for foreclosing competition. Id. While Louisa Coke complains that Pepsi's CMAs have secured the best promotional opportunities, it presumably need offer only a more attractive CMA package to get the retailer to terminate Pepsi-Metro's CMA in favor of a Coke CMA. See, Omega, 127 F.3d at 1164. The fact that it does not want to offer such packages is of no concern to the Court. The Court would be hard pressed to find Louisa Coke foreclosed from the market when it can still reach the ultimate consumers by "employing existing or potential alternative channels of distribution" if it so chose. Id. at 1163.

Finally, the Court cannot find market closure when "fringe" brands like "Ale-8-One", "Jolt Cola", and "7-UP", which presumably lack the backing of a worldwide conglomerate of Coke USA's or Pepsi's magnitude, can still capture a combined 23% market share. Furthermore, other, stronger Coke bottlers are apparently waiting on the sidelines should Louisa Coke fold. Louisa Coke, a single competitor, may face market foreclosure in its territory but there [39] is no evidence that competition as a whole or even coke products, themselves, risk elimination from the Louisa Coke franchise territory. Without such evidence, Plaintiff's claims fail.

III. Pepsi-Metro's Counterclaims

Pepsi-Metro also seeks partial summary judgment on Counts II and III of its counterclaims. These counts accuse Louisa Coke of defaming Pepsi-Metro and filing frivolous lawsuits in attempt to stifle competition. Louisa Coke, of course, insists the allegedly defamatory statements it made were true and that its litigation efforts have been legitimate even if unsuccessful. The Court finds there are genuine issues of material fact with respect to each claim. Accordingly, Defendant's motion for summary judgment shall be overruled.

In passing, the Court notes it's skepticism that Pepsi-Metro is pursuing a legitimate grievance through its counterclaims. The Court believes these counterclaims are just "fluff" filed in retaliation for Louisa Coke's lawsuit. Nevertheless, the Court is not in a position to resolve these [*817] counterclaims at this point. Their merit is something a jury will have to decide.

IV. Conclusion

For all of the foregoing reasons, IT [40] IS HEREBY ORDERED AND ADJUDGED:

- (1) that Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claims is GRANTED;
- (2) that Defendant's motion for partial summary judgment on Counts II and III of its counterclaims is DENIED;
- (3) that Plaintiff's complaint is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE; and
- (4) that Defendant's counterclaims shall come on for trial on Tuesday, SEPTEMBER 7, 1999, at 9:00 a.m. in COURTROOM A at the U.S. Courthouse, ASHLAND, KENTUCKY.

This 11 day of June, 1999.

Henry R. Wilhoit, Jr., Chief Judge

Endsley v. City of Chicago

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

June 16, 1999, Decided ; June 18, 1999, Docketed

Case Number: 98 C 8094

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9481 *; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,602

ROY L. ENDSLEY, III and STEPHEN GRAHAM, individually and on behalf of those similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. THE CITY OF CHICAGO, a municipal corporation, Defendant.

Disposition: [*1] Class certification denied and the claims of the putative class dismissed without prejudice. Defendant's motion to dismiss [3-1] granted and defendant's motion to stay Count IV [3-2] denied as moot. Judgment entered in favor of the defendant, The City of Chicago and against the plaintiffs' Roy L. Endsley, III, et al.: dismissing individual plaintiffs' federal cause of action with prejudice; dismissing individual plaintiffs' state law cause of action without prejudice; and dismissing the claims of the putative class without prejudice.

Core Terms

tolls, plaintiffs', Bonds, cause of action, Interstate, Route, market participant, private right of action, defendant argues, funds, relevant market, Sherman Act, transportation, allegations, proprietary, transportation improvement, provisions, violations, purposes, bridges, private right, finance, travel

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1 [down arrow] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

On a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, a plaintiff's well-pleaded allegations of fact are taken as true and all reasonable inferences are drawn in the plaintiff's favor. A complaint need not set forth all relevant facts or recite the law; all that is required is a short and plain statement showing that the party is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\). A plaintiff in a suit in federal court need not plead facts; conclusions may be pleaded as long as the defendant has at least minimal notice of the claim. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). It is unnecessary to specifically identify the legal basis for a claim. A party can plead him or herself out of court by alleging facts showing he or she has no viable claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 [down arrow] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

As long as they are consistent with the allegations of the complaint, a plaintiff may assert additional facts in his or her response to a motion to dismiss. Although the complaint itself need not specifically or correctly identify the legal basis for any claim, in response to a motion to dismiss that raises issues as to a claim, the plaintiff must identify the legal basis for the claim and make adequate legal arguments in support of it.

Governments > Public Improvements > Financing

Transportation Law > Bridges & Roads > Toll Bridges

HN3  Public Improvements, Financing

See 23 U.S.C.S. § 301.

Governments > Public Improvements > Financing

HN4  Public Improvements, Financing

See 23 U.S.C.S. § 129\(a\)\(1\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN5  Justiciability, Standing

It must be a "provision in question," not the undifferentiated whole of a federal act that gives rise to a plaintiff's right to sue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

HN6  Justiciability, Standing

Four factors that courts should consider in determining whether an implied cause of action exists are: whether a plaintiff is a member of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted; whether there is any indication of legislative intent to create or deny such a remedy; whether an implied remedy is consistent with the underlying purposes of the statutory scheme; and whether the cause of action is one traditionally relegated to the state so that it would be inappropriate to infer a federal remedy. Id. Where inferences of Congressional intent to create a private right of action are not present, it must be adduced that a private remedy does not exist. A plaintiff must assert the violation of a federal right, not merely a violation of federal law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Sherman Act, Claims

To make out a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 for unreasonable restraint of trade, a party must show a contract combination, or conspiracy, a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market, and an accompanying injury. To satisfy the first element of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim a party must establish concerted efforts between at least two legally distinct entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To prove monopolization, a plaintiff must show the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, the willful acquisition or maintenance of the power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. A plaintiff must allege and define the relevant market in which the defendant has the power to control prices or exclude competitors. A relevant market is comprised of those commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. In making this determination, a court must decide whether the product is unique or has close substitutes, as to which there are substantial cross-elasticities of demand.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

A plaintiff can plead himself out of court by alleging facts which if true would legally preclude a claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A plaintiff's complaint should not be dismissed merely because it includes invalid claims along with a valid one.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Market Participant Doctrine

Transportation Law > ... > Federal Powers > Powers of Congress > Substantial Relations

HN13 [blue icon] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

The Commerce Clause restricts state and local taxes or regulatory measures that impede free trade in the national marketplace. A state may not regulate in a way that favors its own citizens at the economic disadvantage of citizens of other states. There is an exception to this general rule. The market participant exception. For Commerce Clause purposes, a basic distinction exists between states as market participants and states as market regulators. If a state is acting as a market participant, rather than a market regulator, the Commerce Clause does not limit its activities. Both state and local governments can be market participants. A government acts as a market participant when it operates in a proprietary capacity as a party to the transaction, charging others for the uses of its services, facilities or products. A government is a market regulator if it imposes conditions that have a substantial regulatory effect outside of that particular market.

Counsel: For ROY L ENDSLEY, III, STEPHEN GRAHAM, plaintiffs: Arthur Mark Lalongo, Lalongo & Meyer, James G. Meyer, Attorney at Law, Lee J. Schwartz, Attorney, Chicago, IL.

For CITY OF CHICAGO, THE, defendant: Weston Wayne Hanscom, Karen M. Dorff, City of Chicago, Department of Law, Chicago, IL.

Judges: William T. Hart, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: William T. Hart

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs Roy Endsley and Stephen Graham bring this action against defendant City of Chicago to contest the City's alleged 1996 decision to use tolls collected on a portion of Interstate Route 90 as a source of general revenue to pay for other [*2] city transportation expenses. Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief to reduce the toll rates and to prevent the diversion of toll revenue to fund other transportation projects.¹ Plaintiffs label Count I as violations of 23 U.S.C. § 129; Count II as violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2; and Count III as violations of the Interstate Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution. Count IV alleges violations of Illinois law. Presently before the court is defendant's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss Counts I through III and its motion to stay Count IV.

¹ Plaintiffs denominate their complaint as a class action. However, neither party has sought certification of the class. Since class certification has not been promptly sought by either plaintiffs or defendant, class certification will be denied. See Mira v. Nuclear Measurements Corp., 107 F.3d 466, 474-75 \(7th Cir. 1997\) (class certification should be decided early in a case before any rulings on dispositive motions). The class allegations are dismissed without prejudice because the parties have failed to promptly pursue certification. See Anderson v. Cornejo, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 519, 1999 WL 35307, at *1 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 11, 1999).

[*3] STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 [↑] On a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, a plaintiff's well-pleaded allegations of fact are taken as true and all reasonable inferences are drawn in the plaintiff's favor. See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 164-65, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 113 S. Ct. 1160 \(1993\); Swofford v. Mandrell, 969 F.2d 547, 549 \(7th Cir. 1992\). A complaint need not set forth all relevant facts or recite the law; all that is required is a short and plain statement showing that the party is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\); Doherty v. City of Chicago, 75 F.3d 318, 322 \(7th Cir. 1996\). A plaintiff in a suit in federal court need not plead facts; conclusions may be pleaded as long as the defendant has at least minimal notice of the claim. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\); Albiero v. City of Kankakee, 122 F.3d 417, 419 \(7th Cir. 1997\). It is unnecessary to specifically identify the legal basis for a claim. Id. It is also true, however, that a party can plead him or herself out of court by alleging facts showing he or she has no viable claim. See Tregenza v. Great American Communications Co., 12 F.3d 717, 718 \(7th Cir. 1993\); Early v. Bankers Life & Casualty Co., 959 F.2d 75, 79 \(7th Cir. 1992\). Further, HN2 [↑] as long as they are consistent with the allegations of the complaint, a plaintiff may assert additional facts in his or her response to a motion to dismiss. Albiero, 122 F.3d at 419; Travel All Over the World, Inc. v. Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, 73 F.3d 1423, 1428 \(7th Cir. 1996\); Highsmith v. Chrysler Credit Corp., 18 F.3d 434, 439-40 \(7th Cir. 1994\). Although the complaint itself need not specifically or correctly identify the legal basis for any claim, in response to a motion to dismiss that raises issues as to a claim, the plaintiff must identify the legal basis for the claim and make adequate legal arguments in support of it. Stransky v. Cummins Engine Co., 51 F.3d 1329, 1335 \(7th Cir. 1995\); Carpenter v. City of Northlake, 948 F. Supp. 759, 765 \(N.D. Ill. 1996\).

FACTS

According to the complaint, which must be taken as true, the facts are as follows. Defendant maintains and controls the Chicago Skyway Toll Bridge System (the "Skyway") which is a part of the Interstate Highway System. The Skyway is a toll bridge which forms approximately 7.8 miles of Interstate Route 90 extending between [*5] the terminus of the Indiana Tollway at the Indiana-Illinois border and the Dan Ryan Expressway, Interstate Route 90/94, in Chicago, Illinois.

The City of Chicago constructed the Skyway in the late 1950's and financed the construction with revenue bonds (the "Original Skyway Bond Issue"). The City continues to operate and maintain the Skyway. Currently, the costs of operating the Skyway are paid solely by vehicle tolls and concessions charged to Skyway users; costs are not supported by City revenues.

The Original Skyway Bond Issue, which paid for initial construction, was refinanced through a series of refunding bonds issued in 1994 (the "Series 1994 Bonds"). The tolls charged on the Skyway have increased several times over the years, largely pursuant to federal court orders in a case brought by bond-holders. The Skyway toll was increased to generate revenue to pay the costs of its operation and maintenance, including debt service on the bonds, and to make the Skyway self-sufficient. These toll increases coupled with increased traffic have resulted in revenues in excess of the total expenses of the Skyway, including debt service.

In 1996, the City issued another series of bonds to [*6] refinance the Series 1994 Bonds (the "Series 1996 Bonds"). The sale of the Series 1996 Bonds, in addition to providing funds to repay the aggregate principal of the outstanding Series 1994 Bonds, also provided $ 52,000,000 to be used for non-Skyway purposes, other transportation related capital projects of the City deemed "City Transportation Improvements."

Plaintiffs' complaint arises from the City's issuance of the Series 1996 bonds repayable from revenues generated by the Skyway tolls. The sole source of revenue pledged by the City for repayment of the Series 1996 Bonds, including the City Transportation Improvements, are tolls and concessions paid by travelers on the Skyway.

Plaintiffs pay tolls to drive on the Skyway and object to the use of toll revenue to repay bonds, the proceeds of which were used, in part, to finance improvements to parts of the City's transportation system other than the Skyway. Plaintiffs further object to any future use of Skyway toll revenues to pay for additional non-Skyway transportation improvements. It is plaintiffs' position that the City's decision to finance the City Transportation Improvements from toll revenues charged to Skyway travelers improperly [*7] increases the costs of interstate travel.

DISCUSSION

Count I

Plaintiffs allege that the Skyway is a part of the National Highway System as defined in 23 U.S.C. § 129, and as such is subject to the provisions of Title 23. Plaintiffs claim that the City's use of Skyway toll revenues violates Title 23 because the revenues are being used for purposes other than financing the costs of construction, operation, reconstruction, resurfacing, restoration, or rehabilitation of the toll facility.

Defendant argues that Count I fails to state any claim under 23 U.S.C. § 129\(a\)\(3\) because the federal funds received by the Skyway were not subject to the provisions of that section. Defendant argues § 129\(a\)\(3\) is inapplicable for two reasons: (1) federal funding was authorized pursuant to the Intermodal Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991 ("ISTEA"), Pub. L. 102-240, § 1106(b), 105 Stat. 1914; and (2) federal funds were not devoted to initial construction but rather were used for reconstruction, resurfacing, restoring, and rehabilitating the Skyway or ("4R work"). In the alternative, defendant argues that plaintiffs have no right to enforce compliance with the provisions of § 129\(a\)\(3\) should it apply.

Whether § 129 grants plaintiffs a private right of action to enforce compliance with its provisions will be determined first. There are no published opinions that have decided whether a private right of action exists under § 129\(a\)\(3\). However, in Clallam v. Department of Transportation, 849 F.2d 424, 427 (9th Cir. 1988), the court recognized a private right of action to enforce a different portion of 23 U.S.C. § 301.² It is plaintiffs' position that Clallam dictates that a private right of action must be recognized for § 129.³ [9] Defendant argues that nothing in § 129 or §

² HN3[] Section 301 provides, in pertinent part:

Except as provided in section 129 of this title with respect to certain toll bridges and toll tunnels, all highways constructed under the provisions of this title shall be free from tolls of all kinds.

³ HN4[] Section 129\(a\)\(1\) authorizes federal participation in toll highway projects, providing in pertinent part:

Notwithstanding section 301 of this title and subject to the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall permit Federal participation in--

* * *

(B) reconstructing, resurfacing, restoring, and rehabilitating a toll highway, bridge, or tunnel . . . or approach thereto;

Section 129\(a\)\(3\) places limitations on the use of revenues from toll highway projects, providing in pertinent part:

Before the Secretary may permit Federal participation under this subsection in construction of a highway, bridge, or tunnel located in a State, the public authority (including the State transportation department), having jurisdiction over the highway, bridge, or tunnel must enter into an agreement with the Secretary which provides that all toll revenues received from operation of the toll facility will be used first for debt service, for reasonable return on investment of any private person financing the project, and for the costs necessary for the proper operation and maintenance of the toll facility, including reconstruction, resurfacing, restoration, and rehabilitation. If the State certifies annually that the tolled facility is being adequately maintained, the State may use any toll revenues in excess amounts required under the preceding sentence for any purpose for which Federal funds may be obligated by a State under this title.

1106(b) indicates that Congress intended private persons to be able to enforce the obligations imposed in those sections.⁴

In Clallam, the court held that 42 U.S.C. § 1983 provided an express right of action to enforce § 301. Section 301 is a general prohibition on federal funding of toll facilities because "users of federally funded bridges have an obvious financial interest in toll free bridges and are the primary beneficiaries of Section 301." Id. at 428. The Clallam plaintiffs argued that they were entitled to be free from tolls under the general proscription of § 301. Section 129\(a\) creates an exception to § 301 and can be raised as a defense to an action claiming a violation of § 301. In the Clallam court's view, § 301 provided the "predicate right, if any, giving rise to an action under section 1983." Id. at 428. Clallam is silent as to whether Section 129 either confers or gives rise to any enforceable private rights. Plaintiffs here are not claiming any rights that arise from § 1*101 301, rather plaintiffs' claim is based on § 129.

Plaintiffs cannot point to § 301 and expect that all of Title 23 similarly creates private enforcement rights. Indeed, HN5 it must be the "provision in question," not the undifferentiated whole of a federal act that gives rise to a plaintiff's right to sue. See Blessing v. Freestone, 520 U.S. 329, 117 S. Ct. 1353, 1362, 137 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1997). Thus, because a private right of action is not apparent in either § 129 or § 1106, whether an implied cause of action exists under the statute must be considered.

In Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66, 78, 45 L. Ed. 2d 26, 95 S. Ct. 2080 (1975), the Supreme Court identified HN6 four factors that courts should consider in determining whether an implied cause of action exists: (1) whether the plaintiff is a member of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted; (2) whether there is any indication of legislative intent to create or deny such a remedy; (3) whether an implied remedy is consistent with the underlying purposes of the statutory scheme; and (4) whether the cause of action is one traditionally relegated to the state so that it would be inappropriate to infer a federal remedy. Id.

In recent years, the Supreme Court [*11] has focused primarily on the second factor, legislative intent. See Suter v. Artist M, 503 U.S. 347, 364, 118 L. Ed. 2d 1, 112 S. Ct. 1360 (1992) ("The most important inquiry here . . . is whether Congress intended to create the private right sought by the plaintiffs"); Karahalios v. National Fed'n of Fed. Employees, 489 U.S. 527, 532, 103 L. Ed. 2d 539, 109 S. Ct. 1282 (1989) ("The 'ultimate issue is whether Congress intended to create a private cause of action'"); Thompson v. Thompson, 484 U.S. 174, 189, 98 L. Ed. 2d 512, 108 S. Ct. 513 (1988) ("In determining whether to infer a private cause of action from a federal statute, our focal point is Congress' intent in enacting the statute"); see also Mallett v. Wisconsin Div. of Vocational Rehabilitation, 130 F.3d 1245, 1249 (7th Cir. 1997) (collecting cases).

Thus, the primary inquiry is whether Congress intended an implied right of action under § 129\(a\)\(3\) and/or § 1106(b) given the language, structure, and legislative history. Where inferences of Congressional intent to create a private right of action are not present, it must be adduced that a private remedy does not exist. See Mallett, 130 F.3d at 1249; Statland [*12] v. American Airlines, Inc., 998 F.2d 539, 540 (7th Cir. 1993) ("courts seldom imply a private right of action where none appears in the statute, for a 'strong presumption exists against their creation'"). Moreover, a plaintiff must assert the violation of a federal right, not merely a violation of federal law. Blessing, 117 S. Ct. at 1362.

Plaintiff has not identified any portion of the legislative history to support the existence of a private right to enforce the sections in question, nor has this court's own examination revealed any. Nothing in the language, structure or legislative history of the provisions suggests that either provision confers a federal right to plaintiffs.

Defendant characterizes the two sections as being parts of a "massive funding statute," that is "phrased as a general directive to a federal agency engaged in the disbursement of public funds, its language provides no support for the implication of a private remedy." It is defendant's position that there is no private right created. See Lloyd v. Illinois Regional Transportation Authority, 548 F. Supp. 575, 585 (N.D. Ill. 1982) (the Supreme Court has noted that there "would be far less reason to [*13] infer a private remedy in favor of individual persons" where Congress, rather than drafting the legislation "with an unmistakable focus on the benefitted class", instead has framed the statute simply as a general prohibition or a command to a federal agency).

⁴ Section 1106(b) was enacted to provide funds for projects that enhance urban access and urban mobility. The Section lists the dollar amounts allocated for 76 different projects across the nation.

Defendant relies on Wallace v. City of Rock Island, 303 F.2d 637, 639 \(7th Cir. 1962\), to support the position that § 129 does not create a private right of action. In Wallace, the court held there was no private right to enforce the terms of a federal statute authorizing construction of toll bridges. See 33 U.S.C. § 529. The court found the statute indicated that "Congress has given no right to private persons, as distinguished from the United States and its appropriate agencies, to seek federal court aid to enforce [bridge statutes]." Wallace, 303 F.2d at 639. As the district court in Wallace explained, "if defendant has violated the federal statutes, that violation may be redressed upon complaint by the United States or an appropriate agency thereof. Any detriment to the motoring public would thereby be alleviated." Wallace v. City of Rock Island, 198 F. Supp. 73, 75 \(S.D. Ill. 1961\).

If the City [*14] has violated § 129, any violation may be properly redressed by the Secretary of Transportation (although it is not alleged that any restructure agreement between the Secretary and the City exists). Further, § 129 can be distinguished from § 301. Section 301 provides that roads be free of tolls, while § 129(a)(3) governs the use of revenues raised from roads where tolls are collected. Arguably, § 129 is less concerned with creating rights for motorists than § 301, as § 129 generally seeks to structure relations between state highway departments and the Secretary of Transportation when federal funds are devoted to a state project. There is no compelling reason why private persons such as plaintiffs, as distinct from the United States and its appropriate agencies, should have the right to seek federal court action to aid in enforcement of this portion of the statute. Accordingly, Count I will be dismissed.

COUNT II: Sherman Act Claims

Plaintiffs allege that "the City has operated the Skyway as a proprietary enterprise, and not in its governmental capacity." (Complaint at P 28) Thus, plaintiffs aver that the City is subject to the requirements of various provisions [*15] of federal antitrust law with respect to its proprietary operation of the Skyway. Plaintiffs claim the City's operation of the Skyway violates §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. Plaintiffs contend that the Skyway is an essential facility which the City maintains as a monopoly and by conditioning access to that facility on the payment of tolls used to finance other transportation improvements the City is also engaged in an illegal tying agreement.

Sherman Act Section 1

Defendant argues that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act because plaintiffs have not alleged a contract or combination between the City and another entity.⁵ HN7 To make out a claim under § 1 for unreasonable restraint of trade, a party must show: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy, (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market, and (3) an accompanying injury. MCM Partners, Inc. v. Andrews-Bartlett & Assoc. Inc., 161 F.3d 443, 448 \(7th Cir. 1998\).

[*16] To satisfy the first element of a Section 1 claim a party must establish concerted efforts between at least two legally distinct entities. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\). Unilateral conduct by a single entity falls outside the scope of Section 1. Monsanto Corp. v. Spray

⁵ HN8 15 U.S.C. § 1 provides:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments at the discretion of the court.

Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); see also Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 267, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, 106 S. Ct. 1045 (1986).

Here, plaintiffs allege no contract, combination, or conspiracy of any kind between the City and some other entity or person. The allegations are clear that only the city is claimed to be involved in the alleged misconduct. Because Section 1 does not reach conduct which is unilateral, plaintiffs have not stated a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Sherman Act Section 2

Defendant argues that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under Section 2 of the Act because plaintiffs have failed to allege any relevant market.⁶ Plaintiffs' complaint contains no relevant market allegation. However, plaintiffs respond to defendant's motion by contending [*17] that the Skyway is "the only high-speed, limited access connection between [the Indiana Toll Road and the Dan Ryan Expressway in Chicago]." These circumstances, plaintiffs maintain, place the City in control of a monopoly. Plaintiffs further argue that the Skyway is "unique," having "no reasonable substitute for the Interstate Route it covers."

HN10[ To prove monopolization, a plaintiff must show: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, the (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of the power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior [*18] product, business acumen, or historic accident. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); Olympia Equipment Leasing Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 797 F.2d 370, 373 (7th Cir. 1986). Defining the relevant market is a threshold inquiry. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 455-56, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993). A plaintiff must allege and define the relevant market in which the defendant has the power to control prices or exclude competitors. Banks v. NCAA, 977 F.2d 1081, 1095 (7th Cir. 1992); Fishman v. Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 531 (7th Cir. 1986).

A relevant market is comprised of those "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." United States v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956). In making this determination, a court must decide whether the product is unique or has close substitutes, as to which there are substantial cross-elasticities of demand. Fishman, 807 F.2d at 531.

Aside from the Skyway, there are substitute routes between Chicago and Indiana. Judicial notice is taken of the location [*19] map attached to plaintiffs' responsive pleadings as exhibit A.⁷ That map shows that there are other primary competing routes connecting the Indiana Toll Road and the Dan Ryan Expressway located in the Skyway's service area, including Interstate 80/94, consisting of the Borman, Kingery and Bishop Ford Expressways. Other routes include Indianapolis Boulevard/Lake Shore Drive and to a lesser extent, the Tri-State Tollway. Granted, the Skyway may be a shorter route, depending on where the driver's trip begins and ends, but it is not the only route. Thus, defendant does not have a monopoly over travel routes between Chicago and Indiana.

Accordingly Count II will be dismissed.

[*20] COUNT III

⁶ HN9[ 15 U.S.C. § 2 provides:

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize and part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

⁷ Judicial notes may be taken of geographical locations, including the locations of streets and highways. See Deutch v. United States, 367 U.S. 456, 470, 6 L. Ed. 2d 963, 81 S. Ct. 1587 (1961); Lowrance v. Pflueger, 878 F.2d 1014, 1018 (7th Cir. 1989); State v. Seigel, 163 Wis. 2d 871, 472 N.W.2d 584, 591 n.15 (1991).

Plaintiffs claim that the City has discriminated against them and unreasonably burdened interstate commerce in violation of the Commerce Clause, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3, by maintaining arbitrary tolls to raise revenue for non-Skyway purposes which increases the cost of interstate travel on the Skyway. Plaintiffs argue that the tolls burden only persons involved in interstate commerce on the Skyway, but not persons engaged in commerce on other streets and highways of the City who stand to benefit from the other transportation improvements.

Defendant argues that the Skyway toll does not violate the Commerce Clause or discriminate against Skyway users because the tolls are fairly related to benefits conferred by them. In addition, defendant notes that plaintiffs' allegations and arguments in support of its antitrust count suggest that the City is a market participant, rather than a government regulator in its operation of the Skyway. Under this view, defendant argues the City is immune from liability under the Commerce Clause when acting as a market participant.

HN11[] A plaintiff can "plead himself out of court" by alleging facts which if true would legally preclude [*21] a claim. American Nurses' Ass'n v. Illinois, 783 F.2d 716, 724 \(7th Cir. 1986\); see also Tregenza, 12 F.3d at 718; Early, 959 F.2d at 79. Here, plaintiffs have done so.

In Count II plaintiffs, among other things, allege:

Since its inception, the City has operated the Skyway as a proprietary enterprise, and not in its governmental capacity.

Plaintiffs' allegations in its antitrust count characterize the City's operation of the Skyway as proprietary. The City's proprietary operation of the Skyway makes the City a market participant, exempt from the Commerce Clause as are other private market participants. Plaintiffs allege that the City charges a toll for use of the Skyway - a proprietary act. There is no allegation that the City charges any other fees or in any way tries to tax all motor vehicles entering into Chicago or crossing the Illinois-Indiana border.⁸ HN12[] While a plaintiff's complaint should not be dismissed merely because it includes invalid claims along with a valid one, American Nurses, 783 F.2d at 725, here, the validity of plaintiffs' allegations in the antitrust claim render plaintiffs' Commerce Clause claim invalid by definition.

[*22] HN13[

The Commerce Clause restricts state and local taxes or regulatory measures that impede free trade in the national marketplace. Reeves, Inc. v. Stake, 447 U.S. 429, 436-37, 65 L. Ed. 2d 244, 100 S. Ct. 2271 \(1980\). Generally, a state may not regulate in a way that favors its own citizens at the economic disadvantage of citizens of other states. J.F. Shea Co., Inc. v. Chicago, 992 F.2d 745, 747 \(7th Cir. 1993\). However, there is an exception to this general rule. The market participant exception. For Commerce Clause purposes, a basic distinction exists between states as market participants and states as market regulators. Reeves, 447 U.S. at 436. "If a state is acting as a market participant, rather than a market regulator," the Commerce Clause does not limit its activities. South-Central Timber Development v. Wunnicke, 467 U.S. 82, 93, 81 L. Ed. 2d 71, 104 S. Ct. 2237 \(1984\). Both state and local governments can be market participants. See SSC Corp. V. Town of Smithtown, 66 F.3d 502, 510 \(2d Cir. 1995\).

A government acts as a market participant when it operates in a proprietary capacity as a party to the transaction, charging others for the uses of its services, [*23] facilities or products. See, e.g., Four T's, Inc. v. Little Rock Mun. Airport Comm'n, 108 F.3d 909, 912 \(8th Cir. 1997\); J.F. Shea, 992 F.2d at 749 ("when acting as a proprietor, a government shares the same freedom from the Commerce Clause that private parties enjoy"). In contrast, a government is a market regulator if it imposes conditions "that have a substantial regulatory effect outside of that particular market." South-Central Timer, 467 U.S. at 97; see also J.F. Shea, 992 F.2d at 748.

The allegations pled in plaintiffs' complaint run directly counter to establishing a violation of the Commerce Clause. Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that defendant operated the Skyway as a market participant. Defendant maintains that the tolls are contractual in nature, thus in fact making the City a market participant. See People ex Rel. County of

⁸ The parties disagree as to whether the fees charged Skyway users are properly categorized as tolls or as taxes. However plaintiffs' complaint repeatedly characterizes the fees as "tolls."

DuPage v. Smith, 21 Ill. 2d 572, 173 N.E.2d 485, 491 (1961) (under Illinois law "service charges, tolls, water rates and the like are . . . contractual in nature, either express or implied, and are compensation for the use of another's property"). Drivers pay tolls to use the City's property and the City is a party to each transaction. [*24] Plaintiffs do not expressly allege any substantial regulatory effect that the Skyway tolls have outside the market in which the City operates and none can reasonably be inferred. Since the only fact consistent with plaintiffs' allegations is that the City acted as a market participant, plaintiffs' claim cannot succeed. Accordingly, Count III will be dismissed.

COUNT IV

Because the federal causes of action are all being dismissed, supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims will not be exercised. See 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(c\)\(3\).⁹

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that class certification is denied and the claims of the putative class are dismissed without prejudice. Defendant's motion to dismiss [3-1] is granted and defendant's motion to stay Count IV [3-2] is denied as moot. The Clerk of the Court is directed to enter judgment in favor of defendant and against plaintiffs: [*25] (1) dismissing individual plaintiffs' federal cause of action with prejudice; (2) dismissing individual plaintiffs' state law cause of action without prejudice; and, (3) dismissing the claims of the putative class without prejudice.

ENTER:

William T. Hart

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

DATED: JUNE 16, 1999

JUDGMENT IN A CIVIL CASE - FILED 16 1999

Decision by Court. This action came to hearing before the Court. The issues have been heard and a decision has been rendered.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that pursuant to the court's Memorandum Opinion and Order, judgment is entered in favor of the defendant, The City of Chicago and against the plaintiffs' Roy L. Endsley, III, et al.: (1) dismissing individual plaintiffs' federal cause of action with prejudice; (2) dismissing individual plaintiffs' state law cause of action without prejudice; and (3) dismissing the claims of the putative class without prejudice.

Date: 6/16/1999

End of Document

⁹ Plaintiffs are parties to a prior state court action filed in the Circuit Court of Cook County, No. 98 CH 2012.

AD/SAT v. AP

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

December 5, 1996, Argued ; June 23, 1999, Decided

Docket No. 96-7304

Reporter

181 F.3d 216 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13760 ; 1999-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,561; 1999 WL 415326

AD/SAT, a division of Skylight, Inc., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. ASSOCIATED PRESS, NEWSPAPER ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, NATIONAL NEWSPAPER NETWORK, THE NEWARK STAR LEDGER, THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS COMPANY, ADVANCE PUBLICATIONS, INC., DONALD E. NEWHOUSE, THE OAKLAND PRESS CO., THE NEWS & OBSERVER PUBLISHING COMPANY, OKLAHOMA PUBLISHING COMPANY, THE LEXINGTON HERALD-LEADER, DAYTON NEWSPAPERS, INC., and COX ENTERPRISES, INC., Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the March 6, 1996, judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Peter K. Leisure, District Judge), granting summary judgment in favor of all defendants and dismissing an antitrust complaint alleging anticompetitive practices in the field of delivering advertising to newspapers.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

newspapers, advertising, affiliation, delivery, electronic, terminate, conspiracy, monopolize, transmission, monopoly, leveraging, delivery service, markets, prices, network, monopoly power, Sherman Act, summary judgment, boycott, competitors, conspiracy claim, satellite, concerted action, conspire, join, anti trust law, market share, announced, tending, trade association

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Hearings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Hearings > Oral Arguments

HN1 [blue icon] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A district court's decision whether to permit oral argument rests within its discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN2 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To survive a motion for summary judgment dismissing an attempted monopolization claim, plaintiff is required to demonstrate triable issues of fact as to whether defendant (1) engaged in anticompetitive or predatory conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A threshold showing for a successful attempted monopolization claim is sufficient market share by the defendant because a defendant's market share is the primary indicator of the existence of a dangerous probability of success. The existence of monopoly power ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN4 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In order to ascertain the market share of defendant, the court first must define the relevant product and geographic markets. Once the relevant market is determined, the court considers a variety of factors in addition to the defendant's market share, including the strength of competition, barriers to entry, and the probable development of the market in order to determine whether there is a dangerous probability that, left unchecked, the defendant will attain monopoly power, i.e., the ability (1) to price substantially above the competitive level and (2) to persist in doing so for a significant period without erosion by new entry or expansion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The relevant market for purposes of antitrust litigation is the area of effective competition within which the defendant operates. The market which one must study to determine when a producer has monopoly power will vary with the part of commerce under consideration. The tests are constant. That market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use, and qualities considered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Products or services need not be identical to be part of the same market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Significant price differences do not always indicate distinct markets. Products can be near-perfect substitutes even when their prices or qualities differ.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > Civil Actions > Damages

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A market is any grouping of sales whose sellers, if unified by a hypothetical cartel or merger, could profitably raise prices significantly above the competitive level. If the sales of other producers substantially constrain the price-increasing ability of the hypothetical cartel, these others are part of the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN9 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A 33 percent market share does not approach the level required for a showing of dangerous probability of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN10 Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A successful claim of monopoly leveraging requires proof of at least three factors: monopoly power in one market; the use of that power, however lawfully acquired, to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor in another distinct market; and injury caused by the challenged conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN11 Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Although a plaintiff alleging monopoly leveraging is not required to demonstrate a substantial market share by the defendant, application of the doctrine is limited to those circumstances where the challenged conduct actually injures competition, not just competitors, in the second, non-monopolized market.

181 F.3d 216, *216L999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13760, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

It is not unlawful for an existing firm, entering a new product market, to promote its product by touting the benefits afforded by that product's association with the firm. Nor is it unlawful for employees of one division of a firm to promote products produced by another division.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Pre-announcement of a new product constitutes predatory conduct only when it is knowingly false.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN15 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A Sherman Act section 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, boycotting claim requires evidence of an illegal agreement that constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade, either per se or under the rule of reason. Only after an agreement is established will a court consider whether the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN16 [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

181 F.3d 216, *216LÁ1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13760, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A successful conspiracy claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires (1) proof of a concerted action deliberately entered into with the specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, and (2) the commission of an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN18 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

The inference of concerted action can be drawn only where the plaintiff presents direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove each defendant had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff seeking damages must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. The absence of a rational motive to engage in the alleged conspiracy is highly relevant to whether a genuine issue for trial exists within the meaning of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\); if the defendants have no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

An antitrust plaintiff must present evidence tending to show that association members, in their individual capacities, consciously committed themselves to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

A party cannot rely on inadmissible hearsay in opposing a motion for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Introducing a new competitor to a market's customers is conduct which the antitrust laws are designed to protect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

HN22 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A trade association's seal of approval for a particular product, without constraining others to follow the recommendation, does not violate antitrust laws.

Counsel: Daniel R. Shulman, Minneapolis, Minn., Joseph M. Alioto, San Francisco, Cal. (Terry M. Walcott, Shulman, Walcott & Shulman, Minneapolis, Minn.; David E. Nachman, Solomon, Zauderer, Ellenhorn, Frischer & Sharp, New York, N.Y., on the brief), for plaintiff-appellant.

Dennis J. Drebsky, New York, N.Y. (Richard N. Winfield, Hilary Lane, John A. Nathanson, Gregory G. Marshall, Rogers & Wells, New York, N.Y., on the brief), for defendant-appellee Associated Press.

Yvonne S. Quinn, New York, N.Y. (Timothy J. Helwick, Andrew Rotstein, Sullivan & Cromwell, New York, N.Y., on the brief), for defendants-appellees Newark Morning Ledger Co., The Birmingham News Company, Advance Publications, Inc., and Donald E. Newhouse.

Conrad M. Shumadine, Norfolk, Va. (Frank A. Edgar, Jr., Willcox & Savage, Norfolk, Va., on the brief), for defendant-appellee [2] The News & Observer Publishing Company.

Patricia Farren, Matthew S. Wild, Cahill Gordon & Reindel, New York, N.Y., submitted a brief for defendants-appellees Newspaper Association of America and National Newspaper Network.

James A. Treanor, III, Timothy J. O'Rourke, Scott D. Dillard, Dow, Lohnes & Albertson, Washington, D.C., submitted a brief for defendants-appellees Dayton Newspapers, Inc. and Cox Enterprises, Inc.

A. Douglas Melamed, James W. Lowe, Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, Washington, D.C., submitted a brief for defendant-appellee The Oakland Press Company.

Robert P. Reznick, James B. Kobak, Jr., Hughes Hubbard & Reed, New York, N.Y., submitted a brief for defendant-appellee Lexington Herald-Leader.

Thomas J. Lilly, Lilly & Bienstock, Garden City, N.Y., submitted a brief for defendant-appellee Oklahoma Publishing Company.

Judges: Before: WINTER, Chief Judge, NEWMAN, and WALKER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

[*220] PER CURIAM:

This case involves allegations of anticompetitive conduct in the market for delivery of advertisements to newspapers. The plaintiff-appellant, AD/SAT, was engaged in the business of electronically transmitting advertisements to newspapers from [*3] the mid-1980s until 1996. After the Associated Press ("AP") launched a similar service in 1994, AD/SAT accused the AP of violating section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, by (i) attempting to monopolize the alleged market for the electronic transmission of advertisements to newspapers; (ii) engaging in monopoly leveraging; and (iii) monopolizing the wire services news and photo transmission markets. In addition, AD/SAT alleged that all the defendants in this case (i) conspired to boycott AD/SAT, in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; and (ii) conspired to monopolize the alleged [*221] market of electronic transmission of advertisements to newspapers, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. AD/SAT appeals from the March 6, 1996, judgment of the District Court for the Southern District of New York (Peter K. Leisure, District Judge), to the extent it (i) dismissed AD/SAT's attempted monopolization and monopoly leveraging claims against the AP and its conspiracy claims against the AP and the other defendants, and (ii) declined to reconsider the District Court's April 24, 1995, decision dismissing AD/SAT's claims against the Lexington Herald-Leader. See [*4] AD/SAT v. Associated Press, 920 F. Supp. 1287 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\) ("AD/SAT II").

We affirm the judgment of the District Court in all respects. AD/SAT's claim that the AP attempted to monopolize the market of advertising delivery cannot survive summary judgment because there is insufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact as to the existence of a dangerous probability that the AP will achieve monopoly power in the relevant product market. Likewise, AD/SAT's monopoly leveraging claim was properly dismissed because AD/SAT has not presented evidence that could support a finding of tangible harm to competition in the advertising delivery market, an essential element of that claim. Finally, we conclude that AD/SAT's allegations of conspiracy are insufficient to withstand the scrutiny prescribed by the Supreme Court in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\), and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\).

Background

Overview. Historically, advertisers and advertising agencies have sent their ads to newspapers by means of physical [*5] delivery, such as the postal service, messengers, or overnight delivery services. With these services, advertisers typically bear the cost of delivery. In 1996, when the defendants' motions for summary judgment were decided, over 80 percent of all newspaper ads were delivered by overnight couriers such as Federal Express.

An alternative to physical delivery available to advertisers is electronic delivery. This involves the transmission of copy to newspapers via satellite, land-based lines, or both. From 1986 until 1996, AD/SAT, a division of Skylight, Inc., was engaged exclusively in the electronic delivery of advertisements to newspapers. In providing its transmission services, AD/SAT delivered ads to newspapers over a satellite network owned and operated by the AP. The AP, a cooperative association whose members consist of more than 1,500 United States newspapers, is engaged primarily in the collection and distribution of news and photographs to newspapers. In 1994, the AP launched AdSEND, which delivers ads to newspapers via the AP's satellite network. Unlike physical carriers, such as Federal Express, which offer delivery services for a wide variety of goods, AD/SAT and AdSEND [*6] focused their services exclusively on the delivery of ads to newspapers. In this action, AD/SAT argues that the AP's conduct upon its entrance into the ad delivery business, as well as the allegedly unlawful assistance of the remaining defendants, violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

The parties. In addition to the AP, the other defendants named by AD/SAT include the Newspaper Association of America ("NAA"), the Newspaper National Network (sued herein as the National Newspaper Network) ("NNN"), several newspapers or groups of newspapers that are member-owners of the AP and members of the NAA, and one individual, Donald Newhouse. The NAA is a non-profit trade association whose members consist primarily of general circulation daily newspapers in the United States. Its mission is to promote the newspaper industry, in part by encouraging the development of technological and marketing innovations that will enhance the efficiency and profitability [*222] of newspapers. Formed in the spring of 1994, the NNN is a limited partnership organized by the NAA and forty-eight NAA member-newspapers to promote the use of newspapers as an effective medium for national advertising. The newspaper [*7] partners of the NNN consist of forty-eight of the fifty largest newspapers by circulation in the United States. In an attempt to overcome the perception that newspaper advertising is inefficient and cumbersome relative to advertising in other media, such as television and radio, the NNN established a clearinghouse for processing multi-newspaper insertion orders. That service, which is aimed at attracting new advertisers to the newspaper medium and making it as easy as possible for advertisers to place ads in numerous papers, is called the "one order/one bill" service.

Defendant Advance Publications, Inc. ("Advance") is owned by the Newhouse family. Defendant Donald Newhouse, the president of Advance, was, during times relevant to this litigation, a member of the board of directors of the AP and the volunteer chairman of the NAA. Through wholly owned subsidiaries, Advance owns defendants Newark Morning Ledger Co., which publishes the Star-Ledger, and Birmingham News Company, which publishes the Birmingham News.

Cox Newspapers, Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of defendant Cox Enterprises, Inc. ("CEI"), publishes fourteen newspapers of general circulation, including the Dayton Daily News, which is owned by defendant Dayton Newspapers, Inc. ("DNI"). David Easterly, the president of CEI, was a member of the AP board of directors and sat on an ad hoc committee of the AP board that assisted the AP's management in investigating and planning its entry into the ad delivery market.

Defendant Oklahoma Publishing Company publishes an independent daily newspaper called the Daily Oklahoman. Defendant News & Observer Publishing Company publishes the News & Observer. Defendant Oakland Press Company publishes The Oakland Press. Finally, defendant Lexington Herald-Leader, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Knight-Ridder, Inc., publishes The Herald-Leader.¹

The AD/SAT system. AD/SAT's electronic delivery system allowed the advertiser to deliver a single hard copy of its ad [*9] to one of AD/SAT's two transmittal stations, located in New York and Los Angeles. The ad would then be scanned into AD/SAT's system, and transmitted to designated newspapers via the AP-owned-and-operated satellite network. The ad would be received at each newspaper by an AP satellite dish, and then forwarded to a "recorder" installed and owned by AD/SAT. The recorder would then produce a hard copy of the ad. The recorders -- essentially high speed facsimile machines -- cost over $ 60,000 each, and required an additional $ 30,000 worth of equipment to be operational.

Under this system, AD/SAT generated revenue from annual affiliation fees paid by the newspapers and service fees charged to both the newspapers and the advertisers. Newspapers that joined the AD/SAT network before 1988 paid an annual affiliation fee of $ 7,500, while newspapers joining after that date paid an annual fee of between $ 4,500 and $ 12,500. Depending on the newspaper's affiliation agreement, newspapers paid either a flat reception fee of $ 28 per ad, or $ 25 for national ads and $ 20 for retail ads. Certain newspaper affiliates were not charged reception fees for retail ads. In 1994, forty-eight of the fifty [*10] largest papers in the United States were AD/SAT affiliates; of the next one hundred largest papers, sixty were AD/SAT affiliates.

In addition to the fees paid by newspapers, advertisers were charged a transmission [*223] fee, with the price decreasing as the number of sites to which the ad was being sent increased.² Because the cost of sending a distinct ad to a single location over the AD/SAT network was much higher than the cost of physical delivery, the system was cost-effective only for those advertisers who sent an identical ad to many different locations. For this reason, AD/SAT targeted national advertisers.

¹ The Baltimore Sun was also named as a defendant, but pursuant to a joint motion of The Sun and AD/SAT, the District Court dismissed AD/SAT's claims against The Sun with prejudice in May 1995.

² Under the rate card effective from August 1991 to 1994, the fee for an advertiser sending a single ad to a single paper on the same day was $ 90. The lowest price per transmission was $ 11.70, which applied if the advertiser sent the ad to 76 or more newspapers. In its last years of operation, however, AD/SAT often negotiated special rates for its larger customers.

Though AD/SAT delivered more ads electronically [11] than any other supplier of delivery services, it delivered only a small percentage of all ads placed in newspapers. AD/SAT found expansion of its network difficult, due in large part to the high fees necessary to cover the fixed costs associated with the recorders, as well as the annual fee of $ 730,000 which AD/SAT paid to the AP for use of its satellite network. As early as 1990, AD/SAT recognized that the high costs associated with its system would preclude growth. At that time, AD/SAT's then-president, Richard Atkins, decided to stop acquiring recorders, and pursue converting the AD/SAT system into a digital network, which would allow newspapers to use much less expensive computers rather than the recorders to receive advertisements. However, as a result of financial difficulties, AD/SAT's transition to digital technology was extremely slow. Although it developed a digital delivery system sometime in 1991, it had installed digital reception equipment at less than fifteen newspapers by 1994.

In March of 1994, Skylight, Inc. purchased AD/SAT for approximately $ 4.1 million dollars, including the assumption of certain liabilities. The new management recognized the existing problems [12] with the business, and had plans to revitalize and expand AD/SAT's business, which, they assert, would have been successful but for the actions of the AP and the other defendants.

The AP's development of AdSEND. The AP began to consider entering the business of electronic delivery of ads to newspapers as early as 1991. At that point, the AP had recently introduced PhotoStream, a high speed, satellite-based delivery system for the transmission of photographs to newspapers. The AP saw electronic delivery of advertisements as a natural extension of this business. The AP's approach, however, was quite different from AD/SAT's. From the beginning, the AP believed that it needed to price its services at levels competitive with the prices charged by the overnight delivery services that dominated the delivery market. Furthermore, the AP installed reception equipment at the newspapers free of charge and allowed member-newspapers to receive advertisements without any charge. Thus, unlike AD/SAT's pricing structure, advertisers bear the entire cost of using AdSEND, just as they do when using traditional physical delivery services.

AdSEND allows advertisers to transmit ads from their own [13] computers to newspapers' computers in digital form, via a hub in New Jersey. At the hub, a central computer checks to ensure that no transmission error has occurred and then sends the ad to the designated newspapers. No hard copy of the ad is created until the ad is downloaded to the newspapers' imaging equipment; thus, the ad arrives at the newspaper as a first generation image.

As the AP researched its new venture, it sought and received assistance from the NAA, which has extensive knowledge about the newspaper advertising market. Newhouse, volunteer chairman of the NAA, president of Advance, and also an AP board member, was the AP's primary contact at the NAA. Before AdSEND was announced publicly, NAA officials, at Newhouse's [*224] request, met with AP officials to discuss the project. These meetings led the NAA to support the AP's efforts. After AdSEND's announcement, the NAA allowed the AP to give presentations on AdSEND at NAA-sponsored conferences that focused on the "one order/one bill" project, and one NAA employee stated that it would have been reasonable for industry members to have the impression that the NAA endorsed AdSEND at these meetings. This relationship between the AP, [14] Newhouse, and the NAA is at the heart of AD/SAT's conspiracy claims.

The AdSEND business plan was approved by the AP board and announced to the public in April 1994. During times relevant to this lawsuit, AD/SAT and the AP were not the only companies that offered electronic delivery services. Other companies offering similar services included DigiFlex, Ad eXpress, AdStar, AdLink, and Business Link.

District Court proceedings. In September 1994, AD/SAT filed its complaint. The Court denied AD/SAT's application for a preliminary injunction barring the AP and those in active concert with it from initiating or participating in the AdSEND program. The Court concluded that AD/SAT had failed to make the requisite showing of likelihood of success on the merits. See AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. at 1295 (recounting 1994 preliminary injunction ruling).

In November 1994, AD/SAT filed an amended complaint, alleging that the AP had violated section 2 of the Sherman Act by (i) attempting to monopolize the alleged market for the electronic transmission of advertisements to newspapers; (ii) engaging in monopoly leveraging; and (iii) monopolizing the wire services news and photo transmission markets. [\[15\]](#) In addition, AD/SAT alleged that the AP, NAA, NNN, Newhouse, and the newspaper defendants had engaged in conspiracies to boycott AD/SAT, in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, and to monopolize the alleged market for the electronic transmission of advertisements to newspapers, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. The parties proceeded to conduct extensive discovery, taking more than 70 depositions and exchanging approximately 40,000 pages of documents.

In December 1994, one of the newspaper defendants, the Lexington Herald-Leader, moved for judgment on the pleadings or, in the alternative, summary judgment. The District Court granted the motion in April 1995, dismissing AD/SAT's conspiracy claims against the Lexington Herald-Leader. See AD/SAT v. Associated Press, 885 F. Supp. 511 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\) ("AD/SAT I"). The District Court held that AD/SAT failed to state a claim against the Lexington Herald-Leader for conspiracy to monopolize because it had not alleged facts from which the necessary element of a specific intent to monopolize could be inferred. Accordingly, the Court dismissed the section 2 claim against the Herald-Leader on the pleadings. [\[16\]](#) See id. at 516.

With respect to AD/SAT's claim that the Herald-Leader violated section 1 by conspiring with the other defendants to boycott AD/SAT, the Court ruled that AD/SAT's pleadings were sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss. Applying the standard articulated by the Supreme Court in Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, however, the Court held that summary judgment was appropriate because AD/SAT had failed to present evidence that tended to exclude the possibility that the Lexington Herald-Leader was acting independently when it terminated its relationship with AD/SAT. See AD/SAT I, 885 F. Supp. at 519-21. Specifically, the Court found that there was no evidence suggesting that the Lexington Herald-Leader had ever agreed with any other newspaper or the AP on any course of conduct with regard to AD/SAT; furthermore, the Court concluded that AD/SAT had not presented any evidence to undermine the Lexington Herald-Leader's explanation that "economic compulsions . . . constrained it to suspend its association with AD/SAT." Id. at 519. [\[225\]](#) Accordingly, the Court granted summary judgment, dismissing AD/SAT's remaining claim against the Lexington Herald-Leader [\[17\]](#).

In May 1995, the AP and the other remaining defendants moved for summary judgment. The District Court granted the motion and dismissed the rest of AD/SAT's claims in their entirety. See AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. 1287. In considering AD/SAT's attempted monopolization claim against the AP, the Court concluded that the relevant product market was the delivery of advertising to newspapers by any means, including physical delivery. See id. at 1296-99. As is frequently the case in antitrust litigation, the Court's definition of the relevant market was dispositive. Defining the market so broadly meant that AD/SAT could not show that there was a dangerous probability that the AP would achieve monopoly power -- one of the essential elements of an attempted monopolization claim. See id. at 1299-1300. The Court also found that AD/SAT's claims that AdSEND was prematurely announced and that it was predatorily priced were not supported by any evidence in the record. See id. at 1301-04. Accordingly, the Court dismissed AD/SAT's claim of attempted monopolization.

The District Court also found that AD/SAT's monopoly leveraging claim could not survive summary judgment. The Court expressed [\[18\]](#) skepticism about the applicability of such a claim in the absence of allegations of product "tying." See id. at 1304-05. Furthermore, the Court found that AD/SAT's allegations of leveraging were either not supported by any evidence in the record or that the challenged conduct did not depend on the AP's having a monopoly in either the wire services news or photo transmission markets. See id. at 1305-06. Rather, the Court concluded that the challenged conduct demonstrated that the AP was taking advantage of its resources and good will in a manner wholly consistent with lawful business development. See id. Accordingly, the Court granted summary judgment in favor of the AP on this claim.

With respect to AD/SAT's claim of unlawful monopolization of the wire services news and photo transmission markets, the District Court found that AD/SAT lacked standing to assert this claim because it was neither a customer nor a competitor of the AP in either of these markets. See id. at 1306-07.

The Court then considered AD/SAT's conspiracy claims. Turning first to AD/SAT's threshold arguments regarding concerted action, the Court rejected AD/SAT's argument that the AP was collaterally [19] estopped by the Supreme Court's decision in Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2d 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1945), from denying that every action it takes is the concerted action of its members. The District Court was also not persuaded by AD/SAT's argument that trade associations, such as AP, are continuing conspiracies of their members as a matter of law, reasoning that the cases cited by AD/SAT were inapposite and that the caselaw of this Circuit requires that "AD/SAT must establish a conspiracy . . . by proving the existence of an agreement." AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. at 1308.

The District Court then examined the evidence submitted by AD/SAT pertaining to each defendant to determine whether a reasonable juror could find that there was concerted action between two or more legally distinct defendants. Guided by the Supreme Court's holding in Matsushita, the District Court considered whether the defendants, other than the AP, had any rational motive to join a conspiracy to destroy competition in the market for delivery of advertisements. See id. at 1309-10; 1315-16. Finding that they did not, the Court proceeded to determine whether a reasonable inference [20] of conspiracy could be drawn from the conduct challenged by AD/SAT. The Court concluded that the defendants' conduct was as consistent with their independent business interests as [*226] with an unlawful conspiracy and, therefore, granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants (other than the AP) because AD/SAT had failed to proffer any evidence tending to exclude the possibility that they had acted independently. See id. at 1309-18. Having granted summary judgment on the conspiracy claims to all other defendants, the Court also dismissed AD/SAT's conspiracy claims against the AP. See id. at 1318.

AD/SAT appeals from the District Court's rulings dismissing its conspiracy claims against all defendants and its claims of attempted monopolization and monopoly leveraging by the AP.

Discussion

I. Denial of Oral Argument on Summary Judgment Motion

As a threshold matter, AD/SAT argues that it was reversible error for the District Court to grant summary judgment in favor of the defendants without permitting oral argument. We have held that HN1[↑] a district court's decision whether to permit oral argument rests within its discretion. See Katz v. Morgenthau, 892 F.2d 20, 22 (2d Cir. [21] 1989). Although AD/SAT argues that oral argument should have been permitted given the complexity of the issues, it presents no basis for concluding that resolving the summary judgment motion solely on the basis of the extensive record and the elaborate motion papers exceeded the District Court's discretion.

In support of its argument, AD/SAT relies on the decision of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Dredge Corp. v. Penny, 338 F.2d 456, 461-2 (9th Cir. 1964), which held that a court may not deny a request for oral argument on a motion for summary judgment unless the court intends to rule in favor of the party requesting argument. This Court, however, has never adopted such a rule. Moreover, even the Ninth Circuit requires that a party seeking to reverse a summary judgment order must demonstrate that it was prejudiced by the court's refusal to hear argument. See Partridge v. Reich, 141 F.3d 920, 926 (9th Cir. 1998). AD/SAT has made no showing of prejudice.

II. Attempted Monopolization Claim

We turn first to AD/SAT's claim that the AP attempted to monopolize the market for delivery of advertisements to newspapers. HN2[↑] To survive a motion for summary judgment dismissing [22] this claim, AD/SAT was required to demonstrate triable issues of fact as to whether the AP (1) engaged in anticompetitive or predatory conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993); Twin Laboratories, Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 570 (2d Cir. 1990). As we have previously noted, "HN3[↑] A threshold showing for a successful attempted monopolization claim is sufficient market share by the defendant" because a defendant's market share is "the primary indicator of the existence of a dangerous probability of success." Twin Laboratories, 900 F.2d at 570 (citation omitted); see also United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384

U.S. 563, 571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\) ("The existence of [monopoly power] ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market.").

HN4[] In order to ascertain the market share of AP's AdSEND, we first must define the relevant product and geographic markets. See Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 15 L. Ed. 1^{231} 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 \(1965\). Once the relevant market is determined, we consider a variety of factors in addition to the defendant's market share, including the strength of competition, barriers to entry, and the probable development of the market, see International Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 792 \(2d Cir. 1987\), in order to determine whether there is a dangerous probability that, left unchecked, [*227] the defendant will attain monopoly power, i.e., the ability "(1) to price substantially above the competitive level and (2) to persist in doing so for a significant period without erosion by new entry or expansion." 2A Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law P 501, at 86 (emphasis in original) [hereinafter "Areeda"].

The parties agree that the relevant geographic market is the United States. Based on its finding that physical and electronic delivery services are reasonably interchangeable, the District Court concluded that the relevant product market is the market for delivery of advertisements to newspapers by any means. See AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. at 1297-1300. AD/SAT asserts that this definition of the market is too broad and [*24] urges us to limit the relevant market to the market for electronic delivery of advertisements, in particular the "rush," three-hour electronic delivery market. At the very least, AD/SAT argues, a triable issue of fact regarding the definition of the relevant product market exists.

HN5[] The relevant market for purposes of antitrust litigation is the "area of effective competition" within which the defendant operates. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-28, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 \(1961\). As the Court explained in United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\):

The "market" which one must study to determine when a producer has monopoly power will vary with the part of commerce under consideration. The tests are constant. That market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use and qualities considered.

Id. at 404. Thus, HN6[] products or services need not be identical to be part of the same market. See id. at 394 ("Where there are market alternatives that buyers may readily use for their purposes, illegal [*25] monopoly does not exist merely because the product said to be monopolized differs from others."). In economists' terms, two products or services are reasonably interchangeable where there is sufficient cross-elasticity of demand. Cross-elasticity of demand exists if consumers would respond to a slight increase in the price of one product by switching to another product. Cf. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. Also relevant to the delineation of a relevant product market is cross-elasticity of supply, which depends on the extent to which producers of one product would be willing to shift their resources to producing another product in response to an increase in the price of the other product. See 2A Areeda P 536, at 195. Where there is cross-elasticity of supply, a would-be monopolist's attempt to charge supracompetitive prices will be thwarted by the existence of firms willing to shift resources to producing the product, thereby increasing supply and driving prices back to competitive levels. See id.; see also id. P 423, at 77-78.

In its First Amended Complaint, AD/SAT stated that "the transmission of advertising to newspapers" was a "relevant product market for purposes of [*26] this action." First Amended Complaint P 21. Although it predicted that electronic transmission of advertisements -- via satellite, land links, or both -- would become the predominant mode of transmission in the future, AD/SAT noted that "at present, advertisers use several means to transmit their ads to newspapers[.]" citing, as the most common, "delivery through the mail, courier service, overnight delivery service, such as Federal Express, and similar physical delivery services." Id. AD/SAT's president, David Hilton, stated in deposition testimony that AD/SAT's competitors included companies that offer physical delivery services, as well as companies that offer electronic transmission services. Likewise, Bain & Company, a management consulting firm retained by AD/SAT, concluded that because most deliveries [*228] of ads to newspapers are not urgent, AD/SAT needed to price its service at levels competitive with overnight delivery services, which accounted for approximately 80 percent of all deliveries to newspapers.

Recognition of the broad scope of the market within which AD/SAT competed helps to explain why the company was not highly successful. Due to the high cost of its service, [27] AD/SAT captured only a small segment of the relevant market: certain advertisers who periodically required emergency rush service. Unlike AD/SAT, the AP understood from the beginning that it needed to price AdSEND's services to compete with physical carriers. Indeed, it listed as a "key success factor" that AdSEND "must be cost-effective, even to advertisers that mail their ads to newspapers." Plaintiff's Ex. 7 at 15 (emphasis in original). Thus, it is beyond dispute that both AD/SAT and the AP considered physical carriers, such as Federal Express, to be their competitors.

Despite the abundance of evidence demonstrating that physical carriers competed with electronic delivery services for advertisers' business, AD/SAT argues that electronic delivery services -- especially rush, three-hour, services -- constitute a distinct product market. AD/SAT points out that, despite the greater expense, advertisers continued to use its service for rush deliveries and that AP's AdSEND has a dual pricing structure ($ 8 for overnight transmission; $ 40 for one-hour transmission). Based on these facts, AD/SAT argues that persisting demand for the higher-priced electronic transmission service, [28] despite the availability of lower-priced alternatives, demonstrates that the two services are not reasonably interchangeable and, thus, do not compete in the same market.

It is true that one hallmark of reasonable interchangeability between two particular goods is uniformity in price. See 2A Areeda P 530a, at 150. The Supreme Court recognized the relevance of price differences to the definition of a relevant market in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\). However, HN7[[↑]] significant price differences do not always indicate distinct markets. See 2A Areeda P 562c, at 262 ("Products can be near-perfect substitutes even when their prices or qualities differ."). In this case, we are not persuaded that the difference in prices for rush electronic and non-rush delivery services indicates that distinct markets for these services exist. As the Areeda treatise notes, antitrust law is concerned only with "substantial" market power. Thus, where a "market" itself is insubstantial, made up of only a few buyers with extremely strong preferences, antitrust law is not implicated. See id. P 530e, at 155 ("Most courts implicitly insist that [29] a market be 'substantial' in scope by ignoring smaller ones.").

Moreover, AD/SAT's experience reveals that the market for rush electronic delivery of advertisements to newspapers is not a viable one. According to AD/SAT's own marketing consultants, the rush delivery market was a "very narrow segment" of the newspaper advertising delivery market. These same consultants concluded that AD/SAT needed to reposition itself by moving away from its image as a last-resort emergency service in order to survive. The evidence showed, beyond reasonable dispute, that the few customers AD/SAT was able to attract for its rush services indicated not the existence of a distinct market but the constraint AD/SAT encountered in expanding its business because of the availability of physical carriers.

It is important to remember that "[HN8[[↑]] a] 'market' is any grouping of sales whose sellers, if unified by a hypothetical cartel or merger, could profitably raise prices significantly above the competitive level. If the sales of other producers substantially constrain the price-increasing ability of the hypothetical cartel, these others are part of the market." 2A Areeda P 533, at 169 (emphasis added). Here, [30] the evidence before the District Court indicated [*229] that if the providers of electronic delivery services formed a cartel and charged supracompetitive prices for their "rush" services, a sufficient number of their customers would shift to other carriers or to non-rush electronic delivery, that the hypothetical cartel's price increase would not prove profitable. Under such circumstances, there is significant cross-elasticity of demand for rush and non-rush delivery services, and the two services are part of the same market. Accordingly, the District Court properly found the relevant product market to be the market for delivery of advertisements to newspapers by any means.

With the relevant product market thus defined, it is clear that AdSend's market share is not sufficient to support an attempted monopolization claim. As AD/SAT's own research revealed, during the time relevant to this action, over 80 percent of all ads were delivered to newspapers by overnight carriers. Even if AdSEND managed to capture the rest of the market, such a market share would not be cause for concern. Indeed, we have held that HN9[[↑]] a 33 percent market share does not approach the level required for a showing of dangerous [31] probability of monopoly power. See Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 841 \(2d Cir. 1980\); see also Thomas V. Vakerics, Antitrust Basics, § 5.03, at 5-23 ("It would appear rather difficult to establish the dangerous probability element where a defendant holds less than a 40% share of a market, unless other factors indicate the market share figures understate the market power held by the defendant.").

Furthermore, we agree with the District Court that "it is simply implausible to think that the development and implementation of AP['s] AdSEND could drive these competitors [the overnight delivery services] out of the ad delivery business." AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. at 1299. As the District Court noted, even if AdSEND became the dominant method of delivering ads to newspapers, overnight carriers could quickly and easily reenter the market in the event that AdSEND attempted to charge supracompetitive prices. See id.; see also 2A Areeda P 506d, at 103 ("Transitory power may safely be ignored by antitrust law. The social costs of antitrust intervention (including its error potential) are likely to exceed the gains when market [32] forces themselves would bring the defendant's power to an end fairly quickly.").

Even if we were to recognize a relevant product sub-market limited to the electronic transmission of advertisements, that sub-market would be characterized by rapid technological development and low barriers to entry. See Walsh Trucking, 812 F.2d at 792 (noting that, among other things, barriers to entry and probable development of the market are relevant to determination of whether there is a dangerous probability that the defendant will achieve monopoly power). Indeed, AD/SAT itself noted that "at present, the market for the transmission of newspaper advertising, as well as the electronic transmission submarket thereof, is characterized by low concentration, vigorous competition, rapid technological development, and ease of entry" Amended Complaint P 23. AD/SAT's marketing consultants likewise were aware of the threat of new entrants. See Deposition of Sam Rovit at 133 ("Because of the technology, eventually you would probably find other people coming in."). Indeed, from its inception, AdSEND faced competition from several companies, in addition to AD/SAT, that provided electronic transmission [33] services.

In summary, AP's AdSEND enjoys only a small share of the relevant product market. Competition within that market is substantial. Rapidly developing technology for the transmission of data and low barriers to market entry suggest that the AP will face significant competition from new entrants. In the face of these facts, AD/SAT cannot prove an essential element of its attempted monopolization claim -- [*230] that there is a dangerous probability that AP's AdSEND will achieve monopoly power. We need not consider whether AD/SAT presented triable issues of fact with respect to the remaining elements of an attempted monopolization claim -- predatory conduct and specific intent to monopolize. The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of the AP on this claim.

III. Monopoly Leveraging Claim

AD/SAT also contends that the AP leveraged its monopoly power in the wire services news and photograph transmission markets to gain an unlawful advantage in the market for delivery of newspaper advertisements, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. Whatever the continued scope of monopoly leveraging claims as independent causes of action, cf. Spectrum Sports, 506 F.2d at 459 ("Section 2 makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so.") (citation omitted), it is clear that AD/SAT has not presented evidence to support such a claim in this case.

We have said that HN10[↑] a "successful claim of monopoly leveraging requires proof of at least three factors: monopoly power in one market, the use of [that] power, however lawfully acquired, to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor in another distinct market, and injury caused by the challenged conduct." Grand Light & Supply Co. v. Honeywell, Inc., 771 F.2d 672, 681 \(2d Cir. 1985\) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). This Court first recognized monopoly leveraging as a distinct cause of action under section 2 of the Sherman Act in Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 \(2d Cir. 1979\), where we stated, in dictum, that "the use of monopoly power attained in one market to gain a competitive advantage in another is a violation of § 2, even if there has not been an attempt to monopolize the second market." Id. at 276.

HN11[↑] Although a plaintiff alleging monopoly [35] leveraging is not required to demonstrate a substantial market share by the defendant, application of the doctrine is limited to those circumstances where the challenged conduct actually injures competition, not just competitors, in the second, non-monopolized market. See Twin Laboratories, 900 F.2d at 571 (noting that a monopoly leveraging claim requires "tangible harm to competition"); cf.

Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459 ("The concern that § 2 might be applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics."). As Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp explain, a claim for monopoly leveraging is properly stated only where the plaintiff can demonstrate that the challenged conduct "threatens the [second] market with the higher prices or reduced output or quality associated with the kind of monopoly that is ordinarily accompanied by a large market share." 3 Areeda P 652, at 90. Thus, a large firm does not violate § 2 simply by reaping the competitive rewards attributable to its efficient size, nor does an integrated business offend the Sherman Act whenever one of its departments [36] benefits from association with a division possessing a monopoly in its own market. So long as we allow a firm to compete in several fields, we must expect it to seek the competitive advantages of its broad-based activity -- more efficient production, greater ability to develop complementary products, reduced transaction costs, and so forth. These are gains that accrue to any integrated firm, regardless of its market share, and they cannot by themselves be considered uses of monopoly power.

Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 276.

Here, the AP conceded for purposes of its motion for summary judgment that it has monopoly power in the market for wire services, and that PhotoStream, [*231] AP's service for the electronic transmission of photographs to newspapers, enjoys monopoly power in the market for that service. AD/SAT contends that the AP caused tangible harm to competition in the ad delivery market by leveraging these monopolies in the following ways: (i) subsidizing the cost of AdSEND reception equipment through member-owner assessments; (ii) charging AD/SAT monopoly prices for the use of AP's satellite network; (iii) prematurely announcing AdSEND in order to deter potential competitors; [37] (iv) premising its marketing approach to advertisers on AdSEND's ability to offer access to all United States newspapers via AP's preexisting satellite network; (v) using its bureau and communications chiefs and news and photo division employees to solicit customers for AdSEND; (vi) marketing AdSEND to member newspapers by trading on their interest as owners of the AP and, ultimately, AdSEND; (vii) combining with member-owner newspapers to solicit advertisers and encourage them not to use competitors' services; and (viii) soliciting and obtaining agreements from member-owner newspapers not to deal with competitors. These last three examples of allegedly predatory conduct are merely restatements of AD/SAT's conspiracy claims and are considered below in our discussion of those claims.

Turning to AD/SAT's other leveraging allegations, we note that there is no evidence that the AP conditioned the use of PhotoStream or its wire service on the use of AdSEND. In Twin Laboratories, we expressed some skepticism about the viability of a monopoly leveraging claim in the absence of an allegation of tying. See 900 F.2d at 570-71. Furthermore, much of the conduct AD/SAT challenges is the [38] very sort of activity Berkey Photo cautions against deterring, much less punishing. See 603 F.2d at 276. That is, HN12[ it is not unlawful for an existing firm, entering a new product market, to promote its product by touting the benefits afforded by that product's association with the firm. Nor is it unlawful for employees of one division of a firm to promote products produced by another division. As the District Court found, such conduct is the sort of "normal business development which is to be expected by any competitor entering a new business." AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. at 1305-06.

Furthermore, AD/SAT has not presented any evidence to support its claim that the AP announced AdSEND prematurely. When publicly announcing AdSEND in April 1994, the AP stated that the program would be tested over the summer and launched in September. Testing was done over the summer and, while some glitches remained in the system throughout the fall of 1994, it was operational shortly after the time the AP had projected. Moreover, "HN13[ pre-announcement" of a new product constitutes predatory conduct only when it is knowingly false. See MCI Communications Corp. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., I^{39} 708 F.2d 1081, 1128 (7th Cir. 1983). There is no suggestion that the AP's announcement of AdSEND was knowingly false.

With respect to AD/SAT's claim that the AP subsidized the cost of reception equipment with member-owner assessments, we note that AdSEND retains title to the reception equipment it places with newspapers. Furthermore, the costs of launching AdSEND, including the costs associated with reception equipment, were accounted for in AdSEND's financial projections. Thus, AD/SAT has not submitted evidence that could support a finding of cross-subsidization from other AP activities. Moreover, this allegation has little, if anything, to do with AP's purported monopoly power in the wire services and photo transmission markets. A monopoly leveraging claim is established only where a defendant uses its monopoly power in one market to injure competition in a second market. See Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 284.

AD/SAT's remaining allegation of predatory conduct is that the AP charged AD/SAT [*232] monopoly prices for its use of the AP satellite network. AD/SAT paid an annual use fee of $ 730,000, while the AP charged AdSEND only $ 75,000. Despite this significant disparity in prices, [40] AD/SAT's argument fails for several reasons. First, AD/SAT has not even alleged, much less submitted evidence demonstrating, that the AP has a monopoly in the market for satellite services. Second, the contracts governing AD/SAT's use of the AP satellite network were first entered into in 1986 -- long before the advent of AdSEND -- and favorably renegotiated in 1991. Third, there is no evidence that could support the finding that it was necessary for AD/SAT to use the AP satellite network to compete in the market for delivery of advertisements to newspapers. This is not surprising since the relevant product market is the delivery of advertisements to newspapers by any means. And, even if the market were limited to electronic transmission of advertisements, AD/SAT could not demonstrate that use of the AP network was essential to its ability to compete in the market. Other firms offer satellite services, and other modes of electronic transmission, such as land lines, are available.³

[41] In any event, the District Court's dismissal of AD/SAT's monopoly leveraging claim was appropriate because AD/SAT did not present evidence that could support a finding of tangible harm to competition, an essential element of the claim. See Twin Laboratories, 900 F.2d at 571. Indeed, the evidence submitted reveals that AdSEND's services are priced lower than those of AD/SAT, and that the technology used by AdSEND offers certain advantages over physical delivery and some electronic transmission services. Cf. 3 Areeda P 652, at 90 (arguing that monopoly leveraging claims should be limited to instances where the challenged conduct "threatens the [second] market with the higher prices or reduced output or quality associated with the kind of monopoly that is ordinarily accompanied by a large market share").

The District Court properly granted summary judgment dismissing AD/SAT's monopoly leveraging claim against the AP.

IV. Sherman Act Conspiracy Claims

AD/SAT claims that the AP and the remaining defendants -- the newspaper defendants, Newhouse, the NAA, and the NNN -- unlawfully conspired to boycott AD/SAT, in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, and to monopolize [42] the market for delivery of newspaper advertisements, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act.

HN14 [↑] Section 1 states that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN15 [↑] A section 1 boycotting claim requires evidence of an illegal agreement that constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade, either per se or under the rule of reason. See Capital Imaging Associates v. Mohawk Valley Medical Associates, Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir. 1993). Only after an agreement is established will a court consider whether the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. See id.

HN16 [↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits individuals from "combining or conspiring with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several [*233] States . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

³ AD/SAT's claim of overcharging is very similar to an "essential facilities" antitrust claim. Thus, it is relevant to note that an "essential facilities" plaintiff must raise a triable issue of fact with respect to whether it is economically infeasible for the facility to be duplicated, and whether the denial of use inflicts a severe handicap. See Twin Laboratories, 900 F.2d at 568-69. Assuming that overcharging for the use of a facility is tantamount to denial of use, AD/SAT's claim nevertheless would fail because it has not raised a genuine issue of material fact with respect to whether it was overcharged so as to be effectively denied use or at least severely handicapped.

HN17 [+] A successful conspiracy claim under section 2 requires "(1) proof of a concerted action deliberately entered into with the specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, and (2) the commission of an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy." Walsh Trucking, 812 F.2d at 795 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

Critical to surviving a motion for summary judgment on these claims is the threshold showing that a reasonable jury could find that the defendants' actions were concerted rather than independent. In Monsanto, the Supreme Court held that HN18 [+] the inference of concerted action can be drawn only where the plaintiff presents "direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that [each defendant] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." 465 U.S. at 764 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Furthermore, "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. Thus, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment . . . , a plaintiff seeking damages . . . must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. (citations omitted). Moreover, the absence of a rational motive to engage in the [44] alleged conspiracy is "highly relevant to whether a 'genuine issue for trial' exists within the meaning of Rule 56\(e\)," id. at 596; if the defendants have "no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy," id. at 596-97 (citation omitted).

Before examining AD/SAT's allegations against the various defendants, it is necessary to consider two threshold arguments that AD/SAT makes in support of its allegation of concerted action. First, AD/SAT argues that the AP is collaterally estopped from denying that any action taken by it is concerted action by its members, citing the Supreme Court's 1945 decision in Associated Press, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416. In that case, the Supreme Court found that two AP bylaws, which had the effect of preventing non-AP member newspapers from buying news from the AP or its members and granting each AP member the power to block non-member competitors from becoming members, violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. We agree with the District Court that the principle of collateral estoppel does not [45] mandate a finding of concerted action in this case. The issue decided by the Court in Associated Press was whether two particular bylaws of the AP constituted a conspiratorial agreement in violation of the antitrust laws. Neither of those bylaws is at issue in this case. Associated Press did not determine that AP members are engaged in a conspiratorial agreement with respect to all actions of the AP. The defendants are not precluded from denying concerted action with respect to the allegations levied by AD/SAT.

Second, AD/SAT contends that, as a matter of stare decisis, Associated Press and other decisions finding the conduct of trade associations to be joint action of the association's members dispense with the need to inquire into the existence of a conspiratorial agreement among the members of such associations. In support of this argument, AD/SAT cites this Court's opinion in Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 139 F.2d 393 \(2d Cir. 1943\). There, we stated that "a member [of a trade association] who knows or should know that his association is engaged in an unlawful enterprise [restraining competition] and continues his membership [46] without protest may be charged with complicity as a confederate." Id. at 396. The Supreme Court's decisions in Monsanto and Matsushita call into doubt [*234] the continued viability of Phelps' membership-ratification theory as a basis for antitrust conspirator liability. Other courts have held that this doctrine does not retain the force of law. See Wilk v. American Medical Ass'n, 671 F. Supp. 1465, 1492 (N.D. Ill. 1987), aff'd, 895 F.2d 352 \(7th Cir. 1990\). Furthermore, recent decisions of this Court demonstrate that we require a factual showing that each defendant conspired in violation of the antitrust laws, and have not adopted a "walking conspiracy" theory in place of such a showing. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 544-45 (holding that members of a physicians' practice association had the capacity to conspire among themselves but that "the mere opportunity to conspire does not by itself support the inference that such an illegal combination actually occurred"); see also Vakerics, supra, § 6.13, at 6-37 to -38 ("In situations where a trade association, its officers, employees or members are found to have violated the antitrust laws, membership in [47] the association will not automatically involve all members in the violation. There must, instead, be some evidence of actual knowledge of, and participation in, the illegal scheme in order to establish a violation of the antitrust laws by a particular association member.") (emphasis added).

Thus, although the nature of trade associations is such that they are frequently the object of antitrust scrutiny, see Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 500-01, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988), every action by a trade association is not concerted action by the association's members. Indeed, the varying roles played by trade associations such as the AP call for careful consideration by courts faced with allegations of antitrust conspiracy. As has been properly noted, there seems no conceptual difficulty in treating organizations created to serve their member-competitors or to regulate their market behavior as continuing conspiracies of the members. Nor is there any practical problem when we focus on those improprieties reducing competition among the members or with their competitors. But what about the day-to-day operations of the organization? [48] Must we also see the trade association's buying, selling, hiring, renting, or investing decisions as continuing conspiracies among the members? . . . All of these decisions become subject to Sherman Act § 1 litigation if [trade associations] are conspiracies. . . . One might respond to this concern in three ways: ignore it, adjust the necessary allegations or proofs, or hold such organizations continuing conspiracies for some purposes but single entities for other purposes.

7 Areeda P 1477, at 347. To avoid unwarranted regulation of legitimate conduct, Professor Areeda suggested that "to the extent that [trade associations] are buying and selling [products or services] in their own right, they can fairly be regarded as single entities whose selling decisions are not 'price-fixing conspiracies' and whose buying decisions are not 'boycott conspiracies' of rejected suppliers." Id. at 348.

Regardless of whether trade associations are ever "continuing conspiracies" of their members, we think it clear in this case that a finding of concerted action based on the defendants' status as members of the AP would seriously undermine the standards articulated by the Supreme [49] Court in Matsushita and Monsanto. Consistent with those decisions, HN19 an antitrust plaintiff must present evidence tending to show that association members, in their individual capacities, consciously committed themselves to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Accordingly, we must examine the evidence submitted by AD/SAT pertaining to each defendant to determine whether, viewed in the light most favorable to AD/SAT, this evidence could give rise to a reasonable inference of concerted action by the defendants.

[*235] The District Court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment dismissing the conspiracy claims because it found that (i) the other defendants had no rational motive to conspire with the AP to reduce competition in the market for delivery of newspaper advertisements to newspapers and (ii) their conduct was as consistent with the defendants' legitimate business interests as with a conspiracy to monopolize the advertising delivery market or to boycott AD/SAT.

A. The Newspaper Defendants

AD/SAT contends that the newspaper defendants were motivated to join the AP in a concerted refusal to deal with AD/SAT, and in a conspiracy to monopolize the [50] market for delivery of advertisements, by the desire to benefit from AdSEND's monopoly profits in the form of lower annual dues for AP membership.

Like the District Court, we are not persuaded that the hope for lower AP dues can be said to be a rational motive for joining the conspiracies alleged in this case. We do not doubt that the newspaper defendants would be pleased to have their AP membership fees reduced, or that they may have seen lower fees as a possible fringe benefit of AdSEND. Nevertheless, in view of the importance of advertising revenue to the newspaper industry, we think it highly unlikely that the newspaper defendants would jeopardize that revenue by overcharging advertisers for delivery services in the hope that monopoly profits for such services eventually would lead to lower AP dues. Indeed, it is more likely that the newspaper defendants hoped that AdSEND would increase competition in the advertising delivery market, thereby lowering prices and making the newspaper medium more attractive to advertisers.

Allegedly anticompetitive conduct must be considered in its factual context. Where that context reveals that the conspiracy claim is one "that simply makes no [51] economic sense -- [the plaintiff] must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support [its] claim than would otherwise be necessary." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587. In this case, the factual context of each defendant's decision to terminate, or attempt to terminate, its relationship with AD/SAT strongly suggests that the newspaper defendants had no rational economic motive to join the alleged conspiracies. Furthermore, the challenged conduct of each newspaper defendant is as consistent with the defendant's legitimate, independent business interests as with an illegal combination in restraint of trade. Under these circumstances, AD/SAT was required to submit evidence tending to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588; see also Burlington Coat Factory Warehouse Corp. v. Esprit De Corp., 769 F.2d 919, 923 (2d Cir. 1985) ("An antitrust plaintiff may not, therefore, in opposing a motion for summary judgment, rest on conclusory assertions of conspiracy when the defendants have proffered substantial evidence supporting a plausible and legitimate explanation of their conduct.") (citation omitted). As discussed in [52] detail below, AD/SAT failed to submit such evidence.

(1) Lexington Herald-Leader

The Lexington Herald-Leader started doing business with AD/SAT in 1987, when it entered into a five-year AD/SAT affiliation agreement. Under the terms of this agreement, the Lexington Herald-Leader paid a $ 7,500 affiliation fee, as well as a minimum usage charge of $ 12,500 each year. In the first years of its relationship with AD/SAT, the volume of ads transmitted via AD/SAT fell far below the paper's expectations. As a result, the Herald-Leader renegotiated its contract in 1989 to eliminate the $ 12,500 minimum usage fee. Nevertheless, the per-ad cost of the service remained extremely expensive for the paper. With the end of its contract approaching, the paper's national advertising manager prepared an analysis [*236] of the service in late 1991. His report recommended that the contract be terminated. Formal notice of termination was sent in May of 1992. In response, AD/SAT offered to halve the affiliation fee, and the Lexington Herald-Leader decided to continue using AD/SAT's service. Nevertheless, the service remained extremely expensive on a per-ad basis. On June 10, 1994, the [53] Lexington Herald-Leader terminated its relationship with AD/SAT.

Despite this history, AD/SAT maintains that the Lexington Herald Leader terminated its relationship with AD/SAT not because of economic concerns but, instead, as part of a concerted refusal to deal with AD/SAT. In support of this argument, AD/SAT cites several circumstances that it contends reveal that the Lexington Herald-Leader was not acting independently in refusing to deal with AD/SAT. First, it points to the timing of the Lexington Herald-Leader's termination of its affiliation agreement with AD/SAT, which occurred approximately a month and a half after AdSEND was announced publicly. AD/SAT also points out that representatives of the Lexington Herald-Leader attended the NAA meeting where Newhouse purportedly invited newspaper executives to join in collective action to boycott AD/SAT. Finally, AD/SAT cites to a memorandum purporting to describe a conversation during which a representative of the Knight-Ridder group, the Lexington Herald-Leader's parent company, pledged its support for AdSEND.

This evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility that the Lexington Herald-Leader acted [54] independently. First, AD/SAT may not rely on the memorandum describing Knight-Ridder's pledge of support because it is inadmissible hearsay. See Burlington Coat Factory, 769 F.2d at 924 (noting that it is well-settled that HN20[↑]] a party "cannot rely on inadmissible hearsay in opposing a motion for summary judgment"). Furthermore, AD/SAT's other evidence demonstrates, at most, parallel conduct following an invitation to conspire. Such evidence, without more, does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy. See Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253-54 (2d Cir. 1987). Accordingly, summary judgment in favor of this defendant was appropriate.

(2) Oakland Press

Similarly, AD/SAT failed to adduce any evidence tending to show that the Oakland Press was not acting independently when it decided to terminate its affiliation agreement with AD/SAT. The Oakland Press signed an affiliation agreement with AD/SAT in October 1993; under the terms of that agreement, AD/SAT was required to install reception equipment at the paper's offices. The affiliation agreement also provided that either party could terminate the agreement without penalty if the other was in material default [55] of its obligations under the agreement. During negotiations, Atkins, AD/SAT's then-president, promised to install the reception equipment within thirty days from the date of the agreement. And, in an October 20, 1993, letter to Alfred Derusha, the advertising director of the Oakland Press, Atkins said that AD/SAT would "get to work right away on installation of the equipment." Seven months later, in May 1994, the equipment still had not been installed, and AD/SAT informed the Oakland Press for the first time that the Macintosh interface it had promised to install was not available. At that point, Derusha wrote to AD/SAT, informing it that the Oakland Press was exercising its right to terminate the affiliation agreement because AD/SAT was in material default. AD/SAT responded that the Oakland Press had no right to terminate and that the equipment was being delivered.

AD/SAT contends that the Oakland Press's stated reasons for its termination of the affiliation agreement were pretextual, and that the paper's real motivation was its desire to boycott AD/SAT and support AdSEND. This inference cannot reasonably be drawn from the evidence. At [*237] the time the Oakland Press [56] terminated its affiliation with AD/SAT, AdSEND was not even operational. The Oakland Press did not test AdSEND at its site until January of 1995, when an advertiser requested the service. Furthermore, AD/SAT has not produced any evidence tending to show that Derusha or anyone at the Oakland Press discussed the paper's relationship with AD/SAT with anyone from the AP or another paper. Finally, the facts belie AD/SAT's claim that the Oakland Press refused to deal with it; up to the time this action was commenced, the Oakland Press was attempting to negotiate a new affiliation agreement with AD/SAT. This conduct is clearly as consistent with legitimate business activity as with an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade. AD/SAT's claim against the Oakland Press cannot survive summary judgment.

(3) News & Observer

The News & Observer entered into its affiliation agreement with AD/SAT on August 15, 1986; in February 1993, the paper decided to temporarily unplug its AD/SAT recorder due to renovations at the paper that caused space constraints. After disconnecting the equipment, Richard Lee Henderson, the vice-president in charge of sales and marketing, noticed [57] that the paper had received no complaints from advertisers regarding the unavailability of AD/SAT's delivery service. In the fall of 1993, Henderson learned that AD/SAT's corporate parent was filing for bankruptcy. Believing that this prospect was grounds for terminating the News & Observer's affiliation agreement with AD/SAT, Henderson, advertising director James McClure, and W.L. "Mack" McCormick, the local sales manager, decided to terminate the agreement. This decision was communicated to AD/SAT by letter dated November 24, 1993.

AD/SAT's then-president, Atkins, told the paper that AD/SAT did not consider bankruptcy a valid grounds for termination under the contract; nevertheless, the paper reiterated its intention to exercise its right to terminate the agreement in a letter dated January 20, 1994. This letter was written five days after Lawrence Blasko of the AP visited the paper and introduced AdSEND. AD/SAT continued to contest the News & Observer's right to terminate the affiliation agreement and, after consulting with its lawyers, the paper decided that paying the $ 7,500 annual affiliation fee would be less costly than a legal battle. Upon AD/SAT's insistence that [58] the affiliation agreement so required, the paper re-installed the AD/SAT recorder at its offices.

AD/SAT points to the following facts in its attempt to implicate the News & Observer in the alleged conspiracies: (i) the paper's president, Frank Daniels, Jr., was chairman of the board of the AP during the development, approval, and implementation of AdSEND; (ii) five days after Blasko's visit, the paper reconfirmed its intention to terminate its relationship with AD/SAT; and (iii) during a conversation between AD/SAT president Hilton and Daniels on June 15, 1994, Daniels purportedly stated, "I don't think that we will be doing business together, we're a beta [test] site for Ad/Send."

Contrary to AD/SAT's arguments, this evidence does not support the inference that the News & Observer joined in a concerted refusal to deal with AD/SAT. Rather, the evidence shows that the paper -- because it was dissatisfied with AD/SAT's service -- expressed its desire to terminate its affiliation agreement well before anyone at the paper had heard of AdSEND and before the conspiracies alleged by AD/SAT supposedly came into existence. Furthermore, the outcome would be no different even if [59] the paper had decided to terminate its AD/SAT affiliation after the paper's employees learned of AdSEND; the decision to terminate a service that was both costing the paper money and not bringing in additional revenue, and to install an alternative, cost-free service, [*238] does not give rise to an inference of an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade.

The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of this defendant.

(4) DNI and CEI

CEI and its subsidiary, Cox Newspapers, own over fifteen newspapers; of those papers, only four entered into affiliation agreements with AD/SAT. These include the Dayton Daily News (owned by DNI), the Atlanta Journal/Constitution, the Palm Beach Post, and the Austin-American Statesman. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution and the Palm Beach Post remained AD/SAT affiliates until AD/SAT ceased operations, and AD/SAT acknowledges that the Austin-American Statesman's decision to terminate its agreement with AD/SAT was not the product of any conspiratorial agreement. However, AD/SAT does contend that the Dayton Daily News's decision to terminate its relationship with AD/SAT in August of 1994 was the result of [60] its participation in the alleged conspiracy to boycott AD/SAT and secure a monopoly position for AP's AdSEND.

In support of this argument, AD/SAT points to the following facts: (i) Cox's president, David Easterly, was a member of the ad hoc committee overseeing the AdSEND program for the AP; (ii) on June 16, 1994, AP officers met with Cox advertising executives and, at the conclusion of the meeting, Cathleen Coffey of Cox directed the Cox newspapers affiliated with AD/SAT to "review their contracts"; (iii) the Dayton Daily News gave AD/SAT notice of its intent to terminate its contract two months later, in August 1994; and (iv) notes taken by AD/SAT president Hilton indicate that the paper's advertising director, Pat Keil, told him that the paper's decision to use AdSEND was a corporate one.

This evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility that the Dayton Daily News was acting independently in terminating its relationship with AD/SAT. First, the record reveals that Keil, the person who made the decision not to renew the paper's affiliation agreement, did not attend the June 16 session on AdSEND. Furthermore, the fact that two Cox papers continued to use AD/SAT [61] undermines AD/SAT's claim that the Cox papers made a corporate decision to boycott AD/SAT. Refusing to renew a contract that had proved very costly and opting to use a similar, free service is at least as consistent with a paper's legitimate business interests as with an unlawful conspiracy. Summary judgment in favor of the Cox defendants was appropriate.

(5) Daily Oklahoman

The Oklahoma Publishing Company publishes the Daily Oklahoman, which entered into an affiliation agreement with AD/SAT in 1986. In 1993, the Daily Oklahoman received approximately 159 ads over the AD/SAT system; the affiliation and per-transmission fees resulted in a per-ad cost to the paper of approximately $ 68. That same year, the paper received approximately 400 ads over its own internal electronic "bulletin board." The Daily Oklahoman's advertising department conducts an annual budget review each October. After the October 1993 review, the paper's advertising director, David Thompson, decided to terminate the paper's relationship with AD/SAT as a way to reduce operational costs. Thompson consulted with other members of the department to ascertain whether terminating the paper's AD/SAT service [62] would harm operations; they reported it would not. On November 1, 1993, the Daily Oklahoman notified AD/SAT in writing that it was terminating its affiliation agreement with AD/SAT. AD/SAT did not respond to this notice of termination until September 28, 1994, when it wrote to the Daily Oklahoman asking it to reconsider its decision. There is no evidence that Thompson had even heard of the AdSEND program until several weeks after the AP's formal announcement [*239] of the program in April 1994 -- six months after the Daily Oklahoman terminated its relationship with AD/SAT.

Nevertheless, AD/SAT contends that the Daily Oklahoman's decision was the product of its involvement in the alleged conspiracy to boycott AD/SAT. In support of this argument, AD/SAT points to the fact that in the summer and fall of 1994, the paper informed some of its larger advertisers that it had both terminated its relationship with AD/SAT and installed AdSEND at its offices. AD/SAT also contends that the paper's failure to renegotiate its agreement with AD/SAT is evidence of its involvement in the conspiracy. Finally, AD/SAT reports that one employee at the Daily Oklahoman told an AD/SAT executive [63] that she would prefer that the paper stay on the AD/SAT network because of the speed of the service.

As the District Court ruled, none of these facts would allow a reasonable juror to conclude that the Daily Oklahoman was a member of a conspiracy to boycott AD/SAT. Antitrust law is not violated when a newspaper informs its advertisers that it has terminated its relationship with one delivery service and subsequently informs them that it has elected to use another service. The alleged statement of one employee who preferred AD/SAT is not sufficient to support an inference of conspiracy. Finally, the paper's refusal to renegotiate its contract with AD/SAT is not evidence of conspiratorial conduct, especially since AD/SAT's offer to renegotiate came more than ten months after the Daily Oklahoman terminated its relationship with AD/SAT and the offer did not include a marked reduction in cost. The grant of summary judgment in favor of the Oklahoma Publishing Co. was proper.

(6) Newark Star-Ledger and Birmingham News

Advance Publications, Inc. owns, through subsidiaries, Newark Morning Ledger Co., which publishes the Newark Star-Ledger, and Birmingham News Company, [64] which publishes the Birmingham News. AD/SAT's attempt to implicate these three companies -- which are part of the Newhouse group -- is also unsuccessful.

The Star-Ledger became AD/SAT's first affiliate in 1986. The paper is published in Newark, New Jersey, within close proximity of New York City's strong advertising base. Thus, although receiving some ads from overnight couriers and electronic delivery systems, the Star-Ledger also receives many of its ads via messenger services. While the prices paid for these services vary, all are substantially less expensive for the paper than receiving ads over AD/SAT's network. After receiving an invoice for the $ 7,500 annual affiliation fee in January 1993, Mark Herrick, the Star-Ledger's director of marketing and advertising, decided not to pay the fee. In his deposition, Herrick stated that he felt the fee was too expensive and wanted to renegotiate with AD/SAT. In a meeting with AD/SAT representatives in August 1993, Herrick stated that he believed the service was too expensive, and asked that the affiliation agreement be renegotiated and the unpaid 1993 fee waived. In response, AD/SAT's then-president Atkins stated that [65] AD/SAT intended to increase the Star-Ledger's annual affiliation fee to $ 12,500.

At the same meeting, however, Atkins proposed a group discount for all the Newhouse newspapers. Herrick stated that he did not have the authority to consider such proposals but that he would pass the proposal on to his superiors. The proposal was ultimately rejected by the Newhouse group.

No further discussions took place until the summer of 1994, when Hilton and the new owners of AD/SAT realized that the Star-Ledger had not paid its 1993 or 1994 affiliation fees. After an exchange of letters, Herrick submitted proposed amendments to the affiliation agreement to Hilton on August 19, 1994. Herrick proposed [240] that the unpaid fees be forgiven, future affiliation fees be eliminated, and the notice period for termination be reduced from nine months to seven days. On December 28, 1994, after this lawsuit was filed, AD/SAT rejected the proposal and demanded that the outstanding fees be paid, but also promised to provide a new proposal to the paper in the near future. At the time the Star-Ledger filed its motion for summary judgment, no proposal had been made. The Star-Ledger eventually paid the [66] outstanding fees and remained an AD/SAT affiliate until AD/SAT ceased operations.

The only evidence AD/SAT offers to support its claim that the Star-Ledger was a member of the alleged conspiracy is that Newhouse, the president of the company that indirectly owns the Star-Ledger, knew about the AP's plan to enter the ad delivery business several months before Herrick's August 1993 meeting with AD/SAT representatives. AD/SAT contends that this fact explains why the Star-Ledger refused to deal with AD/SAT and why its group discount offer to the Newhouse papers was rejected.

This evidence does not give rise to an inference of a concerted refusal to deal on the part of the Star-Ledger. To the contrary, the evidence shows that the Star-Ledger sought not to terminate its relationship with AD/SAT, but rather to renegotiate the terms of that relationship. Although Herrick's refusal to pay the affiliation fees owed under the contract may have been an unreasonable negotiating tactic, it is not evidence of a conscious commitment to an unlawful scheme in restraint of trade. Moreover, even if the actions taken by Herrick had constituted a refusal to deal with AD/SAT, the paper [67] had valid business reasons for ending its relationship with AD/SAT because of the availability of other, more cost-effective means of receiving ads. The fact that Newhouse knew about the AP's plans to develop AdSEND before the August 1993 meeting does not tend to exclude the possibility that Herrick's decision on behalf of the Star-Ledger was an independent one. Indeed, AD/SAT has submitted no evidence tending to show that Herrick discussed his actions with Newhouse.

Nor can a concerted refusal to deal be inferred from the Newhouse papers' rejection of AD/SAT's group proposal; AD/SAT has not contradicted the evidence indicating that the Newhouse papers do not enter into such group arrangements. Furthermore, the allegation of a group boycott by the Newhouse papers is undermined by the fact that other Newhouse papers continued to use AD/SAT. Conspiracy claims cannot be based on speculation. The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of the Newark Morning Ledger Company.

Likewise, the evidence pertaining to the Birmingham News Company, which publishes the Birmingham News, does not support the inference that this paper joined in an unlawful conspiracy in violation [68] of the Sherman Act. In 1990, the Birmingham News entered into a five-year AD/SAT affiliation agreement. On April 11, 1994, AD/SAT sent the paper an invoice for its annual $ 10,000 affiliation fee. In the third or fourth week of May, Tom Lager, the director of sales and marketing at the Birmingham News, reviewed this invoice. Lager had joined the paper in January 1994 and was responsible for approving expenditures such as the affiliation fee.

Lager was familiar with AD/SAT because his former employer, the Omaha World Herald, had been affiliated with AD/SAT until Lager made the decision not to renew that paper's affiliation at the end of 1991. That decision was made after Lager and others at the World Herald reviewed the paper's level of usage in relation to the cost of the service and after Office Depot, the primary user of AD/SAT's delivery service, agreed to shift its deliveries to the World Herald to other carriers such as Federal Express. From [*241] his earlier experience, Lager thought to check whether the Birmingham News's use of AD/SAT justified its cost. A review of the log of ads received over AD/SAT revealed that the volume of ads delivered by AD/SAT was [69] low and that most of the ads received via AD/SAT were from Office Depot. Concluding that the paper's continued affiliation with AD/SAT was not financially prudent, Lager consulted with his supervisor, Victor Hanson, who accepted Lager's recommendation not to renew the contract. On June 6, 1994, Lager sent a letter notifying AD/SAT that the Birmingham News would not be renewing its AD/SAT contract. Lager concedes that he had seen documents discussing AdSEND before he sent the termination letter.

In its appellate brief, AD/SAT asserts that Donald Newhouse's ownership of the paper and the paper's termination of its affiliation after the announcement of AdSEND give rise to the inference that the Birmingham News participated in the alleged conspiracies. As discussed above, the fact that Newhouse owned the newspaper, in the absence of any evidence tending to show that he was involved in its decision to terminate its AD/SAT affiliation, does not support an inference of conspiracy. Likewise, the fact that the paper terminated its relationship after the introduction of AdSEND does not give rise to an inference of concerted action. Rather, it shows, at best, parallel conduct following [70] an invitation to conspire. Since the Birmingham News's conduct was at least as -- if not more -- consistent with legitimate business concerns as with unlawful conspiracy, AD/SAT was required to submit evidence tending to exclude the possibility that the Birmingham News acted independently. Because it failed to do so, summary judgment was appropriate.⁴

B. Donald Newhouse

AD/SAT alleges that Donald Newhouse -- as a member of the AP board of directors and chairman of the NAA board of directors during the planning, approval, and implementation of AdSEND -- was at the center of the alleged conspiracies to boycott AD/SAT and allow AdSEND to monopolize the ad delivery market. Though it is true that Newhouse, who is also the president and part owner of Advance, had the [71] opportunity to join in a conspiracy with the AP to destroy competition in the ad delivery market, it is also true that, like the newspaper defendants, the NAA, and the NNN, Newhouse had no rational motive to do so. As both a newspaper owner and chairman of the NAA, a primary interest for Newhouse is making newspapers a more attractive medium for advertisers. As the District Court noted, "Encouraging and assisting AP in its effort to enter the delivery market is certainly consistent with this interest[,] while "joining a conspiracy to refuse to deal with AD/SAT in an effort to drive it out of business is not." AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. at 1316.

⁴ In addition, summary judgment in favor of Advance was warranted since AD/SAT made no specific allegations against this defendant other than those levied against its president, Newhouse, and the newspaper publishing companies that it owns.

Furthermore, none of the evidence submitted by AD/SAT tends to exclude the possibility that Newhouse was acting in an independent effort to further the interests of his own newspapers and the organization he represented, the NAA. AD/SAT points to a letter, dated August 2, 1993, to AP president Louis Boccardi, in which Newhouse stated that the AP should move quickly if it planned to get into the ad delivery business because "there is a window of opportunity now which AdSat [sic] might close if too much time goes by." Far from demonstrating 72 the existence of a conscious commitment to an unlawful scheme, this statement encourages competition by urging the AP to act quickly before AD/SAT forecloses competition. AD/SAT also asserts that Newhouse was instrumental in securing the NAA's exclusive support for AP's AdSEND. As discussed *242 below, the NAA never endorsed AdSEND to the exclusion of other firms involved in the electronic ad delivery market.

Nor is the fact that Newhouse introduced the AdSEND service to several major advertisers indicative of an unlawful conspiracy. With a position on the board of the AP and holding the view that AdSEND was a good product of general benefit to the newspaper industry, Newhouse had entirely legitimate reasons for promoting AdSEND. Moreover, "HN21 introducing a new competitor to a market's customers is conduct which the antitrust laws are designed to protect." [AD/SAT II, 920 F. Supp. at 1317.

AD/SAT relies heavily on Newhouse's retirement speech at the April 1994 NAA convention, which it contends constituted an invitation to boycott AD/SAT and to assist AdSEND's effort to monopolize the market for ad delivery. In the speech, Newhouse encouraged NAA members to "work with the Associated Press 73 and help our cooperative perfect its ability to transmit ads digitally from the advertisers' computer to our computer." Newhouse also stated that "NAA is working with the Associated Press as AP develops a computer to computer advertising transmission system which will . . . remove a barrier to the use of newspapers." Newhouse stressed the importance of "collective action" within the newspaper industry.

Newhouse's statements simply do not support the inference that AD/SAT proposes. Perhaps most telling is the fact that AD/SAT was never mentioned during the speech. AD/SAT's attempt to construe the statement, "We must not let our competitors have the advantage of creating the playing field and controlling the gateway," as a reference to AD/SAT is unavailing. The context of this statement strongly suggests that Newhouse was not referring to any deliverers of ads, much less AD/SAT in particular, but to the array of entities vying to develop new technologies to gather and deliver news.

In sum, the evidence provided by AD/SAT would not permit a reasonable juror to infer that the actions of Newhouse in support of the AP's development and marketing of AdSEND constituted participation in a 74 concerted refusal to deal with AD/SAT in restraint of trade.

C. NAA and NNN

Unlike the other defendants, the NAA and NNN are not direct participants in the advertising delivery business. Rather, the NAA was established with the goal of encouraging technological development in the newspaper industry in order to increase the profitability of newspapers; the NNN has the more specific goal of increasing the newspaper industry's declining share of advertising dollars. Thus, neither organization -- as long as they were acting in accordance with these goals -- had a rational motivation to join the conspiracies alleged by AD/SAT. Indeed, it would be counter to the goals of both organizations to eliminate a competitor in the market for delivery of ads in order to facilitate an attempt to monopolize the market by a newcomer that was not yet operational, especially since competition among delivery mechanisms would promote both technological innovation and fair pricing.

AD/SAT concedes that the NAA, after an initial meeting with AP executives in August 1993, made it clear that, while it would cooperate with the AP in its efforts to develop an electronic ad delivery system, it could not exclude 75 other groups providing this service. Nevertheless, AD/SAT contends that the NAA reversed its position and, along with the NNN, began to boycott AD/SAT after certain meetings arranged by Newhouse between top AP executives and NAA president Cathie Black.

It is not seriously disputed that the NAA and NNN encouraged and assisted the AP when it was developing AdSEND. Indeed, after the AP's public announcement of AdSEND, these organizations allowed [*243] the AP to give presentations about AdSEND at NNN regional meetings. Despite this, and other evidence of the NAA's and the NNN's encouragement, AD/SAT's claim against these defendants cannot survive summary judgment because AD/SAT has failed to submit evidence tending to show that the NAA and the NNN participated in an anticompetitive refusal to deal with it. To the contrary, the evidence reveals that the NAA and NNN continued to promote other electronic delivery services beyond AP's AdSEND, including AD/SAT itself. Furthermore, even if the NAA and NNN endorsed AP's service, a conspiracy could not be inferred from such an endorsement. See Consolidated Metal Products, Inc. v. American Petroleum Institute, 846 F.2d 284, 292 (5th Cir. 1988) (holding [76] that HN22↑ trade association's seal of approval for particular product, without constraining others to follow the recommendation, does not violate antitrust laws). Under these circumstances, summary judgment in favor of the NAA and NNN was appropriate.

Having ruled that summary judgment in favor of all other defendants with respect to AD/SAT's conspiracy claims was appropriate, we conclude that summary judgment in favor of the AP was also appropriate.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

End of Document

AlliedSignal, Inc. v. B.F. Goodrich Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

June 11, 1999, Argued ; June 23, 1999, * Decided

No. 99-2098

Reporter

183 F.3d 568 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13993 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,564; 44 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 689; 1999 WL 437578

AlliedSignal, Inc., Crane Co., Eldec Corp., and Hydro-Aire, Inc., Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. B.F. Goodrich Co., Coltec Industries, Inc., and Menasco Aerospace, Ltd., Defendants-Appellants.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, South Bend Division. No. 3:99 CV 0116 AS. Allen Sharp, Judge.

Disposition: District court's grant of a preliminary injunction AFFIRMED. Case REMANDED for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Core Terms

landing gear, merger, preliminary injunction, arbitration, antitrust claim, district court, antitrust, manufacturers, brakes, jets, worldwide, wheels, landing, district judge, argues, airplane, notice, anti trust law, irreparable, merits, prices, harms, arbitration clause, purchaser, contends, military, effects, parties, seal

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Notice of Appeal

HN1 [blue icon] Appeals, Notice of Appeal

Fed. R. App. P. 3(c)(1)(B) requires that the notice of appeal designate the judgment, order, or part thereof appealed from. The requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 3(c) are jurisdictional and their satisfaction is a prerequisite to appellate review. Nevertheless, "mere technicalities" should not stand in the way of an appellate court's consideration of the merits, and the appellate court will find a notice of appeal sufficient so long as it is the functional equivalent of what the rule requires. The rule in the Seventh Circuit is that an error designating the judgment or a part thereof will not result in a loss of appeal if the intent to appeal from the judgment complained of may be inferred from the notice and if an appellee has not been misled by the defect.

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

* The opinion was originally issued in typescript.

183 F.3d 568, *568LÁ 999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13993, 1

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN2 [down] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Arbitration

28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\)\(1\) makes a district court's issuance of a preliminary injunction an immediately appealable interlocutory order, but does not confer jurisdiction over a district court's refusal to refer an antitrust claim to arbitration or an alleged denial of a stay pending arbitration. Jurisdiction over these latter two claims is conferred by 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 16\(a\)\(1\)\(C\), 16\(a\)\(1\)\(A\), respectively.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Arbitrability

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

HN3 [down] Arbitration, Arbitrability

A district court must refer a dispute to an arbitrator unless it may be said with positive assurance that the arbitration clause is not susceptible of an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute. A reviewing court resolves any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues in favor of arbitration.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN4 [down] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The purpose of a preliminary injunction is to minimize the hardship to the parties pending the ultimate resolution of a lawsuit. To prevail on a motion for preliminary injunction, a moving party must meet the threshold burden of establishing (1) some likelihood of prevailing on the merits, and (2) that in the absence of the injunction, he will suffer irreparable harm for which there is no adequate remedy at law. If a moving party clears both of these prerequisites, a district court engages in a "sliding scale" analysis by balancing the harms to the parties and the public interest. Because preliminary injunctions are by their very nature, interlocutory, tentative, provisional, ad interim, impermanent, mutable, not fixed or final or conclusive, characterized by their for-the-timebeingness, an appellate court reviews a district court's decision to issue a preliminary injunction for an abuse of discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

183 F.3d 568, *568LÁ999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13993, 1

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers the effect of which may be to substantially lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN6 [down] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Courts do not generally defer to an agency's decision not to challenge a merger. To the contrary, federal regulators will not necessarily challenge every potentially troublesome merger, which is why Congress made private enforcement an integral part of the congressional plan for protecting competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN7 [down] Standing, Clayton Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act sets forth the group of persons who may maintain private damages actions under the antitrust law. It provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Standing

The antitrust laws do not provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation. The doctrine of antitrust standing therefore limits the class of plaintiffs under § 4 to those who can show a direct link between the antitrust violation and the antitrust injury. Several factors to be considered in determining whether a plaintiff is the proper party to bring a private action under the antitrust laws: (1) the causal connection between an antitrust violation and a plaintiff's injury; (2) the nature of a plaintiff's injury and the relationship between the plaintiff's injury and the type of activity sought to be redressed under the antitrust laws, and (3) the speculative nature of a plaintiff's claim for damages and the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN9 Private Actions, Standing

A competitor in the merging industry ordinarily lacks antitrust standing because that competitor would generally only stand to gain from the increase in prices.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN10 Judicial Officers, Judges

There is no general requirement that a district judge hear live testimony or conduct a hearing at all before issuing a preliminary injunction. The burden is on the party seeking such a hearing to establish that it has and intends to introduce evidence that if believed will so weaken the moving party's case as to affect the judge's decision on whether to issue the injunction.

Counsel: For ALLIEDSIGNAL, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff - Appellee: Thomas D. Yannucci, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, Washington, DC USA. Joseph Fullenkamp, BARNES & THORNBURG, South Bend, IN USA.

For CRANE CO., ELDEC CORPORATION, HYDRO-AIRE, INCORPORATED, Plaintiffs - Appellees: Michael T. Hannafan, HANNAFAN & ASSOCIATES, Chicago, IL USA. Thomas H. Singer, South Bend, IN USA. Garret G. Rasmussen, PATTON & BOGGS, Washington, DC.

For B F GOODRICH CO, Defendant - Appellant: Robert J. Palmer, MAY, OBERFELL & LORBER, South Bend, IL USA. Thomas F. Cullen, Jr., JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE, Washington, DC USA. Robert J. Konopa, KONOPA & MURPHAY, South Bend, IN USA.

For COLTEC INDUSTRIES, INCORPORATED, MENASCO AEROSPACE. LIMITED, Defendants - Appellants: Robert D. Joffe, Rory O. Millson, CRAVATH, SWAINE & MOORE, New York, NY USA. Robert J. Konopa, KONOPA & MURPHY, South Bend, IN USA.

For STATE OF INDIANA, Amicus Curiae: Jeffery A. Modisett, OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, Indiana Government Center South, Indianapolis, IN USA.

For STATE OF CONNECTICUT, Amicus Curiae: Richard Blumenthal, OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, Hartford, CT USA.

For STATE OF IOWA, Amicus Curiae: Thomas J. Miller, IOWA ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Des Moines, IA USA.

Judges: Before Bauer, Flaum and Kanne, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: FLAUM

Opinion

[*570] Flaum, Circuit Judge. Plaintiffs AlliedSignal, Crane Co., Eldec Corp. and Hydro-Aire, Inc. filed suit in federal district court alleging that the proposed merger between defendants B.F. Goodrich, Coltec Industries, and Menasco Aerospace, Ltd. violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. AlliedSignal separately alleged that the proposed merger would violate a joint agreement between it and Coltec. The district court granted a preliminary injunction for a stay of the merger pending arbitration of the contract claim and pending a bench trial on the antitrust claim scheduled for July 12, 1999. B.F. Goodrich, Coltec, and Menasco took an interlocutory appeal which we have considered on an expedited basis. We now affirm.

Background

An aircraft landing system is composed of three component parts: the landing gear, the wheels and brakes [2] (sold together as a package), and the brake control system. The industry is currently dominated by a few large firms. AlliedSignal manufactures wheels and brakes. B.F. Goodrich manufactures landing gear and wheels and brakes. Coltec manufactures landing gear through its subsidiary Menasco Aerospace, Ltd. The only other major player in this industry is a French company which manufactures landing gear under the name Messier-Dowty, and wheels and brakes under the name Messier-Bugatti.

AlliedSignal and Coltec currently operate under a Strategic Alliance Agreement ("SAA") which provides for cooperation between AlliedSignal and Coltec in the preparation [*571] of joint bids on landing systems. Their principal competitor in these bids is B.F. Goodrich, which generally pairs its wheels and brakes with its own landing gear. The proposed merger between B.F. Goodrich and Coltec would bring Coltec's aircraft landing gear division under the control of B.F. Goodrich and result in a single large domestic manufacturer of aircraft landing gear. If the merger were to proceed, B.F. Goodrich-Coltec would control approximately 64% of the worldwide market for landing gear for wide-body jets, 44% of the worldwide [3] market for landing gear for narrow-body jets, and 59% of the worldwide market for landing gear for U.S. military jets.

AlliedSignal alleges several harms resulting from the proposed merger. First, in preparing joint bids and the integrated landing systems which result, AlliedSignal and Coltec have shared confidential proprietary information. AlliedSignal is concerned that B.F. Goodrich would have access to this information once Coltec is under B.F. Goodrich's control. In its capacity as a landing gear purchaser, AlliedSignal alleges that B.F. Goodrich could use its market power to charge it uncompetitive prices for landing gear. Last, AlliedSignal fears that B.F. Goodrich could leverage its dominant post-merger position in domestic landing gear production to favor B.F. Goodrich's own wheels and brakes over those of AlliedSignal in the formation of integrated landing systems.

Crane Co., Eldec Corp. and Hydro-Aire, Inc. ("the Crane Plaintiffs") are sellers of component parts for landing gear systems to both Coltec and B.F. Goodrich. They join AlliedSignal's Clayton Act claim out of a concern that the merger will allow B.F. Goodrich monopoly buying power (monopsony) for their goods.

[4] Neither the Federal Trade Commission nor the Department of Defense (which reviewed the merger because of the parties' status as defense contractors) has objected to the merger. As noted above, the district judge granted a preliminary injunction for a stay of the merger pending arbitration of the contract claim and pending a bench trial on the antitrust claim scheduled for July 12, 1999.

Discussion

I. Arbitration Issues

B.F. Goodrich first raises a set of arguments predicated on the arbitration clause in the AlliedSignal-Coltec SAA. It asserts that the antitrust claim should be arbitrated with the contract claim and that the preliminary injunction should therefore last only as long as it takes to convene an arbitral panel. Assuming that the antitrust claim is not subject to arbitration, B.F. Goodrich argues that the district court improperly failed to stay consideration of the antitrust claim pending the results of the AlliedSignal-Coltec contract arbitration. Before we may consider the merits of B.F. Goodrich's argument, however, we must first consider two related jurisdictional obstacles to these aspects of the appeal.

A. Jurisdiction

HN1 [↑] Fed. R. App. P. 3(c)(1)(B) requires [5] that the notice of appeal "designate the judgment, order or part thereof appealed from." The requirements of Rule 3(c) are jurisdictional and "their satisfaction is a prerequisite to appellate review." Smith v. Barry, 502 U.S. 244, 248, 116 L. Ed. 2d 678, 112 S. Ct. 678 (1992); Torres v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 487 U.S. 312, 317, 101 L. Ed. 2d 285, 108 S. Ct. 2405 (1988). Nevertheless, "mere technicalities" should not stand in the way of our consideration of the merits, and we will find a notice of appeal sufficient so long as it "is the functional equivalent of what the rule requires." See Torres, 487 U.S. at 316-17. The rule in this Circuit is that "an error designating the judgment or a part thereof will not result in a loss of appeal if the intent to appeal from the judgment complained of may be inferred from the notice and if the appellee [572] has not been misled by the defect." Cardoza v. Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n, 768 F.2d 1542, 1546 (7th Cir. 1985); see also Ortiz v. John O. Butler Co., 94 F.3d 1121, 1125 (7th Cir. 1996), Badger Pharmacal, Inc. v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 1 F.3d 621, 625 (7th Cir. 1985); but see Garcia v. City of Chicago, 24 F.3d 966, 969 n.4 (7th Cir. 1994); [6] Brandt v. Schal Assocs., Inc., 854 F.2d 948, 954 (7th Cir. 1988).

B.F. Goodrich's notice of appeal gave notice only of an appeal "from an order entered on April 30, 1999 granting AlliedSignal's motion for preliminary injunction." In an attached docketing statement, B.F. Goodrich alleged jurisdiction over this appeal solely under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1). HN2 [↑] Section 1292(a)(1) makes the district court's issuance of a preliminary injunction an immediately appealable interlocutory order, but does not confer jurisdiction over the district court's refusal to refer the antitrust claim to arbitration or its alleged denial of a stay pending arbitration. (Jurisdiction over these latter two claims is conferred by 9 U.S.C. § 16(a)(1)(C) and § 16(a)(1)(A), respectively.) AlliedSignal therefore contends that B.F. Goodrich failed to adequately indicate its intent to appeal the district court's arbitration rulings.

Before we may consider this question, we must consider another one: whether the district court actually made any rulings regarding arbitration. The record reveals that the parties to the litigation did fully brief the arbitration issues raised by B.F. Goodrich on appeal, though the written [7] order issued by the district judge discussed only the propriety of a preliminary injunction on the antitrust claim. B.F. Goodrich argues that this order, granting a preliminary injunction pending a trial on the merits of the antitrust claim, necessarily encompasses a refusal to refer the antitrust claim to arbitration. We agree. However, an order granting a preliminary injunction and setting a trial date does not necessarily constitute a refusal to stay the antitrust claim pending a resolution of the contract arbitration. Setting a July 12th trial date does not in and of itself indicate that the district judge will refuse to stay the trial if the contract arbitration is not completed by that date. Since we cannot conclude that the district court actually denied B.F. Goodrich a stay of the antitrust proceedings, no appellate jurisdiction lies over this issue.

Consideration of this second jurisdictional question leads us back to our original one, whether B.F. Goodrich gave adequate notice of its intent to appeal the refusal to refer the antitrust claim to arbitration. Since we agree with B.F. Goodrich that the order granting the preliminary injunction necessarily encompassed a denial [8] of a referral to arbitration, we believe that B.F. Goodrich's identification of the "order entered on April 30, 1999 granting AlliedSignal's motion for preliminary injunction" sufficiently noticed its intent to appeal the denial of the referral to arbitration. We therefore have jurisdiction over the district court's refusal to refer the antitrust issue to arbitration.

B. Arbitrability of Antitrust Claim

In the SAA, AllliedSignal and Coltec agreed to cooperate in the production of integrated landing systems through joint projects involving AlliedSignal's brakes and wheels and Coltec's landing gear. B.F. Goodrich claims that the antitrust claims fall within the arbitration clause of the SAA, which provides for arbitration of "any claim or controversy arising out of or relating to [the] Agreement," because any future anticompetitive effects produced by the merger would occur only if B.F. Goodrich-Coltec fails to abide by the terms of the SAA.

HN3 A district court must refer a dispute to an arbitrator "unless it may be said with positive assurance that the arbitration clause is not susceptible of an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute." Matthews v. Rollins Hudig Hall [*573] Co., [*91] 72 F.3d 50, 53 (7th Cir. 1995). We resolve "any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues . . . in favor of arbitration." See Moses H. Cone Mem'l Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 24-25, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765, 103 S. Ct. 927 (1983). In this case, however, it is clear that AlliedSignal's and the Crane Plaintiffs' antitrust claims do not arise under the SAA.

The Crane Plaintiffs' antitrust claim is not subject to arbitration because the Crane Plaintiffs are not parties to the SAA and therefore cannot be bound by its arbitration clause. See, e.g., IDS Life Insurance Co. v. SunAmerica Inc., 103 F.3d 524, 528 (7th Cir. 1996). With regard to AlliedSignal, B.F. Goodrich argues that AlliedSignal's antitrust claim arises under the SAA because AlliedSignal would suffer antitrust injury only if B.F. Goodrich-Coltec fails to abide by the terms of the SAA. B.F. Goodrich provides no legal support for its argument that a Section 7 claim that has its "origin or genesis" in a contract containing an arbitration clause must also be arbitrated. This absence of legal authority need not trouble us, however, because the factual predicate underlying B.F. Goodrich's claim is without basis.

As [10] explored more fully below, AlliedSignal claims antitrust injury in part from an increase in the price of landing gear it purchases as a landing systems integrator. The SAA, though it does provide for shared information and cooperation, does not regulate the price Coltec may charge for its landing gear. Therefore, B.F. Goodrich-Coltec could fully comply with the SAA and still cause AlliedSignal antitrust injury by charging uncompetitive prices. AlliedSignal's antitrust claims do not arise under the SAA and hence are not subject to arbitration.¹

II. Propriety of Preliminary Injunction

We turn now to the other aspect of B.F. Goodrich's appeal, a challenge to the district court's [11] issuance of the preliminary injunction pending arbitration of the contract claims and pending a bench trial on the antitrust claim. B.F.

¹ This conclusion moots B.F. Goodrich's contention that the preliminary injunction on the contract claim should last only as long as it takes to convene an arbitral panel. The need to preserve the status quo prior to a trial on the merits of the antitrust claim provides a sufficient basis for the duration of the preliminary injunction.

Goodrich argues that neither of these two claims has a sufficient likelihood of success to warrant the issuance of a preliminary injunction. We first examine the antitrust claim and conclude that the district court's preliminary injunction was proper. This determination provides a sufficient basis to sustain the preliminary injunction and therefore moots any consideration of the contract claim.²

"HN4[] The purpose of a preliminary injunction is to minimize the hardship to the parties pending the ultimate resolution of the lawsuit."Kellas I121 v. Lane, 923 F.2d 492, 493 (7th Cir. 1990) (quoting Faheem-El v. Klincar, 841 F.2d 712, 716 (7th Cir. 1988) (en banc)). To prevail on a motion for preliminary injunction, the moving party must meet the threshold burden of establishing (1) some likelihood of prevailing on the merits; and (2) that in the absence of the injunction, he will suffer irreparable harm for which there is no adequate remedy at law. Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 931, 45 L. Ed. 2d 648, 95 S. Ct. 2561 (1975); Roth v. Lutheran Gen. Hosp., 57 F.3d 1446, 1453 (7th Cir. 1995). If the moving party clears both of these prerequisites, a district court engages in a "sliding scale" analysis by balancing the harms to the parties and the public interest. Roth, 57 F.3d at 1453; Storck U.S.A., L.P. v. Farley Candy Co., 14 F.3d 311, 314 (7th Cir. 1994). Because preliminary injunctions [*574] are "by [their] very nature, interlocutory, tentative, provisional, ad interim, impermanent, mutable, not fixed or final or conclusive, characterized by [their] for-the-timebeingness," Lawson Prods., Inc. v. Avnet, Inc., 782 F.2d 1429, 1435 (7th Cir. 1986) (quoting Hamilton Watch Co. v. Benrus Watch Co., 206 F.2d 738, 739, 742 (2d ^{131} Cir. 1953))), we review the district court's decision to issue a preliminary injunction for an abuse of discretion. Duct-o-Wire Co. v. U.S. Crane, Inc., 31 F.3d 506, 508 (7th Cir. 1994).

To show some likelihood of success on the merits of its Section 7 claim, AlliedSignal had to demonstrate (1) that the effect of the merger had some likelihood of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly, 15 U.S.C. § 18; and (2) that AlliedSignal had some likelihood of being within the class of plaintiffs with standing to assert the likely antitrust injuries. See, e.g., Associated General Contractors of California v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). The district court found that AlliedSignal had made the requisite showing of likely anticompetitive effects and found two possible bases for AlliedSignal's antitrust standing. After concluding that AlliedSignal would suffer irreparable injury in the absence of a preliminary injunction and then balancing the relative harms to the respective parties along with the public interest, the district court concluded that a preliminary injunction was warranted. As noted above, [*574] we review the district court's decision for an abuse of discretion.

A. Market Concentration

HN5[] Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers the effect of which "may be to substantially lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U.S.C. § 18. AlliedSignal defines three product markets in which the B.F. Goodrich-Coltec merger may lessen competition: (1) the worldwide market for wide body landing gear; (2) the worldwide market for narrow body landing gear; and (3) the worldwide market for military landing gear. AlliedSignal observes that the merger would reduce the worldwide number of firms that design and manufacture landing gear for each of these three markets from three to two and that after the merger, B.F. Goodrich-Coltec would control approximately 64% of the worldwide market for landing gear for wide-body jets, 44% of the worldwide market for narrow-body jets, and 59% of the worldwide market for landing gear for U.S. military jets. The merger would therefore result in large increases in the HerfindahlHirschman Index (HHI) for these markets: from 3230 to 5272 in the market for landing gear for wide-body jets, from 4496 to 4947 in the market for landing gear for narrow-body [*575] jets, and from 3157 to 4372 in the market for landing gear for U.S. military jets.³ Based on this

² In supplemental filings, the parties have made us aware of the ongoing arbitration of the contract claim. Since we rely solely on the antitrust claim to sustain the preliminary injunction, we have no need to consider what effect these ongoing proceedings might have on our view of the likelihood of success on the merits of the contract claim.

³ The HHI estimates market concentration by summing the squares of the market shares of every firm in the market. Areeda, Hovenkamp, & Solow, Antitrust Law, P 930(a) (rev. ed. 1998). Federal antitrust regulators define as "highly concentrated" any market in which the HHI exceed 1800, and presume that mergers in that range "producing an increase in the HHI of more than evidence, the district court found that AlliedSignal had made a sufficient showing of a likely Section 7 violation to warrant a preliminary injunction.

B.F. Goodrich raises two objections to the district court's finding that the merger would likely have anticompetitive effects. First, B.F. Goodrich argues that although B.F. GoodrichColtec might possess market power in landing [16] gear, the airplane manufacturers will continue to possess overwhelming buying power and will be able to squelch any monopoly rents B.F. Goodrich attempts to extract. Second, B.F. Goodrich relies on the failure of either the FTC or the Department of Defense to object to the merger as evidence [575] that post-merger competition in the landing gear market will remain robust.

Neither of these objections convinces us that the district court abused its discretion in concluding that AlliedSignal had shown a sufficient likelihood of a Section 7 violation. The buying power of the large airplane manufacturers might in fact be sufficient to prevent B.F.Goodrich-Coltec from charging uncompetitive prices. However, if airplane manufacturers have market power relative to the purchasers of the fully-assembled airplanes, the airplane manufacturers would simply pass along the increased landing gear costs and hence would have no incentive to prevent B.F. Goodrich-Coltec from charging uncompetitive prices. AlliedSignal presents evidence that airplane manufacturers do possess such market power and that a number of airlines object to the merger, which suggests that AlliedSignal's prediction of the likely market [17] effects of the merger is worthy of some credence. The district court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that this factual dispute could not be resolved at the preliminary injunction stage.

Similarly, B.F. Goodrich gives us no reason to believe that the failure of either the FTC or the Department of Defense to object to the merger should be regarded as conclusive of its legality. HN6[] Courts do not generally defer to an agency's decision not to challenge a merger. See, e.g., Tasty Baking Co. v. Ralston Purina, Inc., 653 F. Supp. 1250, 1254 \(E.D. Pa. 1987\); Laidlaw Acquisition Corp. v. Mayflower Group, Inc., 636 F. Supp. 1513, 1521 \(S.D. Ind. 1986\). To the contrary, federal regulators will not necessarily challenge every potentially troublesome merger, which is why Congress made private enforcement "an integral part of the congressional plan for protecting competition," California v. American Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271, 284-85, 109 L. Ed. 2d 240, 110 S. Ct. 1853 \(1990\). The district court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the failure of the FTC or DOD to object to the merger does not bar AlliedSignal's private enforcement action.

B. Antitrust Standing

Having concluded [18] that the district court did not abuse its discretion in finding a sufficient likelihood of a Section 7 violation, we turn to AlliedSignal's antitrust standing. HN7[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act sets forth the group of persons who may maintain private damages actions under the antitrust law. It provides:

Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides.

15 U.S.C. § 15. Despite this broad language, it is well-settled that "Congress did not intend HN8[] the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an anti-trust violation." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 534; see also Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\). The doctrine of antitrust standing therefore limits the class of plaintiffs under § 4 to those who can show "a direct link between the antitrust violation and the antitrust injury." Greater Rockford Energy & Technology Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 395 \(7th Cir. 1993\). The Supreme Court [19] has identified several factors to be considered in determining whether a plaintiff is the proper party to bring a private action under the antitrust laws: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's injury and the relationship between the plaintiff's injury and the type of activity sought to be redressed under the antitrust laws; and (3) the speculative nature of the plaintiff's claim for damages and the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537-46; see also Serfecz v. I-5761 Jewel Food Stores, 67 F.3d 591, 595-96 \(7th Cir. 1995\).

HN9 A competitor in the merging industry ordinarily lacks antitrust standing because that competitor would generally only stand to gain from the increase in prices. See, e.g., Cargill v. Monfort of Colo., 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\); Alberta Gas Chems., Ltd. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 826 F.2d 1235 \(3d Cir. 1987\); Areeda, Hovenkamp, & Solow, Antitrust Law, P 373(b) (rev. ed. 1998). B.F. Goodrich argues that AlliedSignal's claim is founded only on its rivalry with B.F. Goodrich for the [20] sale of wheels and brakes and hence lacks antitrust standing. AlliedSignal, however, initially alleges standing not as a competitor for sales of wheels and brakes, but as a purchaser of landing gear.

AlliedSignal presents evidence that in the airplane manufacturing industry, the wheels and brakes manufacturer is responsible for integrating its wheels and brakes together with landing gear and brake control systems to produce a complete landing system. B.F. Goodrich does not argue that AlliedSignal does not act as a purchaser in its capacity as a landing systems integrator. Rather, B.F. Goodrich claims that AlliedSignal has not identified any current aircraft program in which it is an ongoing customer for landing gear. Although the record is unclear as to whether AlliedSignal is currently serving as a landing systems integrator on any ongoing project, AlliedSignal does continue to submit bids (at least one of which has been accepted) to serve as a landing systems integrator. Given the early procedural stage of this case and the necessarily tentative nature of the district court's conclusions, we do not believe that the district judge abused his discretion in concluding that AlliedSignal [21] has some likelihood of showing antitrust standing.⁴

C. Irreparable Harm

B.F. Goodrich argues that a preliminary injunction should not have issued because it has promised to hold separate the landing gear division of Coltec from B.F. Goodrich's landing gear facility until at least the end of August 1999 and hence any harm to AlliedSignal and the Crane Plaintiffs resulting from the merger would not be irreparable. B.F. Goodrich [22] contends that if a court were to find an antitrust violation, divestiture of the Coltec landing gear division would be the likely remedy. B.F. Goodrich therefore argues that holding the Coltec division separate is sufficient to maintain the status quo pending trial and that a preliminary injunction was therefore unnecessary.

We believe that the district judge did not abuse his discretion in finding a sufficient likelihood of irreparable harm. On the basis of this record, we cannot definitively determine that the proposed separation between Coltec's landing gear division and the remainder of Coltec would adequately preserve the status quo pending a trial on the merits of the antitrust claim. In addition, if the merger were consummated with the Coltec landing gear division held separate, this might unduly prejudice the scope of a possible remedy should the merger ultimately be found to violate Section 7. The district court did not abuse its discretion in finding a sufficient likelihood of irreparable harm.

D. Balance of Harms and Public Interest

⁴ Since we have determined that AlliedSignal has demonstrated a sufficient likelihood of establishing standing as a consumer of landing gear, we do not reach AlliedSignal's alternative ground of antitrust standing based on the injury AlliedSignal would endure if B.F. Goodrich-Coltec were able to use its dominant position in landing gear to leverage its own wheel and brakes division unfairly over that of AlliedSignal. We similarly do not address the Crane Plaintiffs' injury based on B.F. Goodrich-Coltec's alleged monopoly buying power as it has not been made the subject of this appeal.

B.F. Goodrich last contends that the merger promises substantial efficiencies [*577] in the global aerospace market which will go unrealized while [*23] the injunction stands and hence that the balance of harms weighs against the preliminary injunction. The merger will significantly concentrate the worldwide market for landing gear for wide-body jets, for narrow-body jets, and for U.S. military jets. If the merger were to lead to noncompetitive prices for landing gear, this would be a significant harm to AlliedSignal, the Crane Plaintiffs, and the public. Whether the merger will have these effects is a subject for trial. At this stage, we find no abuse of discretion in the district court's determination that the balance of harms outweighed the potential benefits identified by B.F. Goodrich.

III. Procedures Adopted by District Court

In a catch-all objection, B.F. Goodrich contends that the manner in which the district judge reached his decision constituted an abuse of discretion. The district judge initially announced that he would allow each side to present argument and one live witness. After hearing argument from both sides, the district judge decided to issue the preliminary injunction without hearing from each side's live witness. B.F. Goodrich contends that the failure to conduct a more extensive evidentiary hearing was an [*24] abuse of discretion.

Under the circumstances of this case, we conclude that the procedures adopted by the district court were adequate. We note that B.F. Goodrich did not object to the district court's conduct of the hearing at the time. Moreover, B.F. Goodrich fails to indicate what, if anything, a live witness would have added in light of the voluminous exhibits, affidavits, and depositions each side provided. Finally, contrary to B.F. Goodrich's claim, HN10[] there is no general requirement that a district judge hear live testimony or conduct a hearing at all. The burden is on the party seeking such a hearing to establish that it "has and intends to introduce evidence that if believed will so weaken the moving party's case as to affect the judge's decision on whether to issue the injunction," Ty, Inc. v. GMA Accessories, Inc., 132 F.3d 1167, 1171 \(7th Cir. 1997\). B.F. Goodrich did not carry this burden.

IV. Sealed Appendices

One final issue concerns B.F. Goodrich's and AlliedSignal's motions to file confidential supplemental appendices and substantial portions of the record under seal. B.F. Goodrich has filed the motion in an attempt to comply with the protective order it and AlliedSignal [*25] stipulated to in the district court. AlliedSignal indicates in its motion that it believes the protective order overbroad, but nevertheless seeks to have the materials sealed. The information in the appendices and the proposed sealed portions of the record consists of a variety of strategic plans, economic forecasts, party and non-party depositions, and affidavits from expert witnesses.

In light of the expedited nature of this appeal and its inherent time constraints, we grant the motions. On remand, the district court shall conduct, with appropriate dispatch, a review of whether the submitted materials may remain under seal. This examination shall be carried out in accordance with our recent opinion in Citizens First National Bank of Princeton v. Cincinnati Ins. Co., 178 F.3d 943, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 11121, 1999 WL 342772 \(7th Cir. 1999\).

Conclusion

The district court's grant of a preliminary injunction is AFFIRMED. The case is REMANDED for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Caldera, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Utah, Central Division

June 24, 1999, Decided ; June 28, 1999, Filed

Case No.: 2:96-CV-645 B

Reporter

87 F. Supp. 2d 1244 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21652 **

CALDERA, INC., Plaintiff, vs. MICROSOFT CORPORATION, Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Defendant's motions for partial summary judgment on "Product Preannouncement," "Product Disparagement," and "Licensing Practices" DENIED.

Core Terms

preannouncement, summary judgment, licenses, anticompetitive, operating system, disparagement, processor, alleges, knowingly false, release date, Antitrust, contends, motions, relevant market, manufacturers, Practices, announced, monopoly, license agreement, misleading, schedules, users

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

87 F. Supp. 2d 1244, *1244 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21652, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN3 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment on a case is proper if the moving party can demonstrate that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and, therefore, is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The court is required to construe all facts and reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. In considering whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, the court determines whether a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party in the face of all the evidence presented.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN4 [] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to establish a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must establish that: (1) the defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the defendant willfully acquired or maintained that monopoly power through anticompetitive means as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Ordinarily, the rule of reason is employed to determine whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. That is, the fact finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Requirements Contracts

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Output & Requirements Contracts

HN6 Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

An exclusive dealing arrangement violates antitrust law when: 1) the agreement at issue is exclusive; and 2) the agreement has an adverse effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A contract need not be denominated exclusive, nor must exclusivity be an express condition of a contract, in order for it to be exclusive under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. An agreement with the "practical effect" of exclusivity is covered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

For purposes of a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, determining whether competition has been foreclosed in a given market requires, first, defining the product market, and, second, identifying the geographic market by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies. Moreover, the competition foreclosed by the contract must be found to constitute a substantial share of the relevant market. That is to say, the opportunities for other traders to enter into or remain in that market must be significantly limited.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN9 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

To determine whether competition has been significantly limited in a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, it is necessary to weigh the probable effect of the contract on the relevant area of effective competition, taking into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which preemption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein.

Counsel: For CALDERA, plaintiff: Stephen J. Hill, Ryan E. Tibbitts, Mr., Max D Wheeler, Mr., SNOW CHRISTENSEN & MARTINEAU, SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

87 F. Supp. 2d 1244, *1244 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21652, 1

For CALDERA, plaintiff: Stephen D. Susman, Charles R. Eskridge, III, James T. Southwick, SUSMAN GODFREY LLP, HOUSTON, TX.

For CALDERA, plaintiff: Parker C. Folse, III, SUSMAN GODFREY LLP, SEATTLE, WA.

For CALDERA, plaintiff: Ralph H. Palumbo, Lynn M. Engel, Philip S. McCune, Lawrence C. Locker, SUMMIT LAW GROUP, SEATTLE, WA.

For SALT LAKE TRIBUNE, THE, SAN JOSE MERCURY NEWS, movants: Michael P O'Brien, Mr., JONES WALDO HOLBROOK & MCDONOUGH, SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

For MICROSOFT, defendant: James S. Jardine, Steven J. Aeschbacher, Mr., Mark M Bettilyon, Mr., John W. Mackay, Valerie A. Longmire, Mark W. Pugsley, SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

For MICROSOFT, defendant: Richard J. Urowsky, Steven L. Holley, Richard C. Pepperman, II, Jay Holtmeier, Richard H. Klapper, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For MICROSOFT, defendant: William H. Neukom, Thomas W. Burt, David A. Heiner, MICROSOFT CORPORATION, [2] REDMOND, WA.

For MICROSOFT, defendant: James R. Weiss, PRESTON GATES ELLIS & ROUVELAS MEEDS, WASHINGTON, DC.

For MICROSOFT, defendant: Michael H. Steinberg, Michael Tenenbaum, Brendan P. Cullen, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, LOS ANGELES, CA.

For BRISTOL TECHNOLOGY, movant: Clark Waddoups, Mr., PARR WADDOUPS BROWN GEE & LOVELESS, SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

For BRISTOL TECHNOLOGY, movant: Robert G. Loewy, OMELVENY & MYERS, NEWPORT BEACH, CA.

For SAN JOSE MERCURY NEWS, movant: James Chadwick, Edward P. Davis, Jr., GRAY CARY WARE & FRIDENRICH, PALO ALTO, CA.

For BLOOMBERG L.P., movant: Gary F. Bendinger, Mr., Joy E. Onton, GIAUQUE CROCKETT BENDINGER & PETERSON, SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

For BLOOMBERG L.P., movant: Richard L. Klein, Marcia T. Maack, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY.

Judges: Dee Benson, United States District.

Opinion by: Dee Benson

Opinion

[*1246] MEMORANDUM OPINION and ORDER

I. Introduction

This case concerns two manufacturers of operating systems for personal computers, plaintiff Caldera, Inc. and defendant Microsoft Corporation. Caldera alleges and Microsoft does not dispute for purposes of the instant motions, that by the mid-1980's Microsoft had monopoly [3] control of the relevant market for computer operating systems with its product MS DOS. In an effort to compete with MS DOS, Digital Research Inc. (DRI) developed its own computer operating system known as DR DOS.¹ Caldera alleges that because DR DOS was superior to MS DOS and posed a threat to Microsoft's operating systems, Microsoft engaged in anticompetitive conduct in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.² Among the predatory behavior alleged, Caldera complains of the following conduct related to the three motions currently before the Court: (1) Microsoft prematurely and falsely announced to the public plans to release an improved MS DOS product (MS DOS 5.0) at the same time DR DOS was gaining significant market acceptance - Caldera contends this was done with the intent to forestall computer manufacturers from buying DR DOS and with the knowledge that MS DOS 5.0 was not forthcoming as represented; (2) Microsoft improperly engaged in a campaign of disseminating information in the computer industry to create fear, uncertainty and doubt about the effectiveness of DR DOS and its compatibility with "Windows," Microsoft's popular graphical user interface (GUI) [4] program; and (3) Microsoft employed licensing agreements relating to MS DOS among computer manufacturers that were designed to prevent the manufacturers from purchasing DR DOS by offering significant discounts to computer manufacturers who elected to enter into agreements that required them to pay a royalty to Microsoft on every computer sold, irrespective of whether MS DOS or another operating system was actually installed on the computer.

[5] In response to these allegations Microsoft has moved for partial summary judgment on "Plaintiff's Product Preannouncement Claims," "Plaintiff's Product Disparagement ("FUD") Claims," and "Plaintiff's Claims Regarding Microsoft's Licensing Practices." The Court heard [*1247] oral argument on these motions on May 25, 1999 and May 27, 1999. After considering the written briefs and oral arguments of the parties, the Court denies defendant's motion for the following reasons.

II. Standard of Review

HN3[] Summary judgment is proper if the moving party can demonstrate that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and, therefore, is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The court is required to construe all facts and reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); Wright v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 925 F.2d 1288, 1292 (10th Cir. 1991). In considering whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, the court determines whether a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party in the face of all the evidence [6] presented. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Clifton v. Craig, 924 F.2d 182, 183 (10th Cir. 1991).

III. Motions for Partial Summary Judgment

HN4[] In order to establish a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, a plaintiff must establish that (1) the defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the defendant willfully acquired or maintained that monopoly power through anticompetitive means "as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 480, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). Because Microsoft does not contest, for purposes of the instant motions, that it has monopoly power in the relevant market, the following motions address only whether Microsoft willfully maintained its monopoly power through anticompetitive means.

¹ In 1991 DRI merged with Novell Corporation. In 1996 Caldera acquired DR DOS and the right to pursue any claim DRI/Novell may have against Microsoft Corporation.

² HN1[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits restraints on trade. It states in relevant part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN2[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes guilty of a felony "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

A. Product Preannouncement

Caldera asserts that in an attempt to insulate its monopoly position in the DOS market, Microsoft engaged in a pattern [7] of anticompetitive conduct by: (1) preannouncing a new version of MS DOS shortly after DRI announced a new version of DR DOS; (2) announcing a false release date for MS DOS 5.0 to curtail DOS users from buying DR DOS; (3) studying the new DR DOS version in order to add its improved features to the promised MS DOS version; and (4) moving MS DOS's release date back in small increments to keep MS DOS users awaiting the promised new MS DOS version, rather than purchasing DR DOS. Caldera points to several statements made to the public by Microsoft representatives that Microsoft would be releasing MS DOS 5.0 as early as September of 1990.³ Caldera further contends that Microsoft knew it was impossible to release MS DOS 5.0 by the proposed date. MS DOS 5.0 was in fact not released until June of 1991.

[8] In response to Caldera's allegations that Microsoft improperly preannounced its plans to release MS-DOS 5.0, Microsoft argues that in order succeed on a product preannouncement claim Caldera must show that the announcements made by Microsoft were "knowingly false or misleading." See MCI Communications Corp. v. AT&T, 708 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir. 1983) (finding that in order to succeed on a product preannouncement claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate that statements were knowingly false or misleading). However, much of Caldera's evidence centers around the fact that the Microsoft release dates [*1248] were objectively unreasonable rather knowingly false and that Microsoft was aware of the unreasonableness of their projected release dates for MS DOS 5.0, 6.0, and 7.0. Caldera submits a report from its own expert as well as deposition testimony from Microsoft management personnel stating that the scheduled release dates for MS DOS were unrealistic or impossible to meet. Microsoft complains that Caldera is asking the Court to abandon the test applied in MCI and its progeny (requiring that a preannouncement statement must be either knowingly false or misleading) and adopt a more [9] relaxed standard requiring only a showing that statements relating to product preannouncement were not made in good faith or otherwise were objectively unreasonable.

The Court agrees as a general proposition that the question of reasonableness may not be the appropriate standard to determine whether product preannouncement is anticompetitive under Section 2, especially in a case where product preannouncement is the sole basis for the claim. However, regardless of the standard, an inquiry into reasonableness will most likely be relevant to assessing whether a statement was knowingly false or misleading. Proving state of mind is a difficult task. Rare indeed is the case where a plaintiff has direct evidence that a defendant knew he or she was making a false statement at the time they were preannouncing a product. Often whether a monopolist acted knowingly will be based on circumstantial evidence. It is appropriate that the reasonableness of the statement be considered. Had the product manager of MS DOS 5.0 announced that the product would be released the following week and it was subsequently discovered that there were not even specifications in existence at the time the statement was [10] made, a logical inference could be drawn that the statement was knowingly false.

Caldera offers internal Microsoft documents in support of its allegations that Microsoft made false statements about the release date for MS DOS 5.0. In a Microsoft document entitled "DR DOS 5.0 Competitive Analysis" dated May 3, 1990, the document states, "On the PR side, we have begun an 'aggressive leak' campaign for MS-DOS 5.0. The goal is to build anticipation for MS-DOS 5.0 and diffuse potential excitement/momentum from the DR DOS 5.0 announcement." (Caldera Exhibit 49). Caldera asserts that the aggressive leak campaign consisted of disseminating information in the computer industry that MS DOS was forthcoming, when in fact it was not.

³ Specifically, Microsoft points to the following public statements: statements made by Microsoft representatives to three computer trade magazines in late April of 1990, statements made by Microsoft representatives to original equipment manufacturers (OEM) in May of 1990, and statements made by Microsoft representatives to a reporter in June of 1990,

As further evidence that Microsoft knew that the preannounced dates could not be met, Caldera cites to the minutes from a program management meeting attended by top Microsoft executives titled "Windows 3.0 Post Mortem." Under the heading "Schedule" the following language is found:

- * Set by BillG (upper management) before feature definitions are outlined.
- * Problem motivating people to achieve "fake" ship dates.

- * Need to be more realistic in our schedules. [11]
- * Lying to people on the team about schedules. Morale hit to the team.
- * How to separate out development schedules and the schedules we give to other groups (USSMD or upper management) without appearing to "lie" to the product team.

(Caldera Exhibit 47).

Based on these documents and evidence that the publicly stated release dates for MS DOS were objectively unreasonable, a genuine question of fact has been raised as to whether Microsoft made knowingly false statements, or otherwise engaged in anticompetitive behavior with respect to its "product preannouncement" practices concerning the release of MS DOS. Such a question is appropriately considered by a fact-finder and is inappropriate for summary judgment. Having found that a material [*1249] issue of fact exists as to whether Microsoft's statements were knowingly false, the court need not determine with finality at this point of the proceedings whether MCI's standard is controlling in this case. Caldera contends the MCI standard is not applicable here where its product preannouncement allegations against Microsoft are only part of a larger picture. This issue will be more fully explored by the Court in connection with [12] Caldera's motion to strike and, of course, in the formulation of appropriate instructions to the jury. Defendant's motion for summary judgment on product preannouncement is denied.

B. Product Disparagement

Caldera also alleges that Microsoft engaged in a campaign of spreading fear, uncertainty and doubt (FUD) to create the perception that DR DOS and Windows were incompatible. Caldera alleges that Microsoft employed a variety of tactics to this end. Among other allegedly predatory conduct complained of, Caldera contends that: (1) Microsoft made false statements to computer makers about the compatibility of the two products; (2) Microsoft blacklisted DRI from participating in the Windows 3.1 beta program and then took advantage of resulting incompatibilities between DR DOS and Windows by blaming them on DR DOS; (3) Microsoft included code in Windows 3.1 during the beta program that was designed solely to display a false error message if a user tried to run Windows 3.1 on any operating system other than MS DOS; (4) Microsoft introduced "bugs" in Windows 3.1 that caused fatal errors when users tried to use Windows on DR DOS; and (5) Microsoft included code in Windows 3.1 that [13] prevented DR DOS from running with Windows. Caldera contends that this and other anticompetitive behavior was in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

In response, Microsoft has moved for partial summary judgment on Caldera's "Product Disparagement" claim relating to the false statements allegedly made by Microsoft. Microsoft asserts that in order to succeed on a product disparagement claim Caldera must demonstrate that the statements made by Microsoft about DR DOS were "(1) clearly false, (2) clearly material, (3) clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, (4) made to consumers having little understanding of the subject matter, (5) continued for an extended time period, and (6) not readily susceptible to counter statement, explanation or other neutralizing effort or offset by the plaintiff." David L. Aldridge Co. v. Microsoft Corp., 995 F. Supp. 728, 749 \(S.D. Tex. 1998\).

However, unlike the plaintiff in David L. Aldridge Co., Caldera has not alleged libel or business disparagement. Rather, as explained above, Caldera takes a broad approach to its Section 2 claim, arguing that based on an examination of all the predatory conduct Microsoft engaged [14] in, Microsoft violated antitrust law. The misleading statements may not amount to a finding of Section 2 liability standing alone, but Caldera has not alleged a separate product disparagement claim. The statements viewed with other behavior may, however, support a Section 2 violation, as Caldera has alleged. Therefore, summary judgment on product disparagement is denied.

It is important to note that the denial of summary judgment on this claim does not necessarily allow for the admission of all the evidence presented by Caldera relating to Microsoft's motion for summary judgment on product disparagement. Questions as to the admissibility of specific evidence will be addressed as they arise.

C. Licensing Practices

Caldera also alleges that Microsoft's two and three-year per processor licensing agreements with minimum commitments provisions were anticompetitive and unlawful under antitrust laws. Under these agreements an original equipment manufacturer (OEM) was required to pay Microsoft a royalty on every machine the OEM shipped regardless of whether the machine contained MS DOS or another [*1250] operating system. The effect of such an arrangement was that an OEM who chose to [15] install DR DOS would pay two royalties on the same machine. Moreover, Caldera asserts that Microsoft required OEMs to make large minimum commitments with up-front payments and that Microsoft's pricing structure rewarded OEMs that made overly-optimistic minimum commitments. Accordingly, OEMs regularly had large prepaid balances when the licenses expired. OEMs would forfeit these balances unless they renewed their licenses with Microsoft. Although Microsoft offered other licensing agreements, Caldera claims that Microsoft coerced OEMs into entering per-processor licenses by offering significant discounts on MS DOS licensed under a per processor agreement. Caldera contends that this conduct was anticompetitive and therefore in violation of both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.⁴

[16] HN5[↑]

Ordinarily, the Rule of Reason is employed to determine whether particular concerted action violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act. That is, "the fact finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). Here, the alleged facts that OEMs entered into per processor licensing agreements with Microsoft at Microsoft's suggestion and that Microsoft used economic pressure to give OEMs an incentive to enter into per processing agreements is enough evidence of restraint of trade to allow Caldera to proceed on its Section 1 claim. Therefore, the Court denies Microsoft's motion for summary judgment on Caldera's Section 1 claims relating to licensing practices.

Turning to the strength of Caldera's Section 2 claim, the parties agree that the standard for determining whether Microsoft's licensing agreements constitute illegal exclusive dealings was established in Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 \(1961\). In Tampa Electric the United States Supreme Court [17] addressed the validity of a requirements contract under the Clayton Act. HN6[↑] In evaluating whether an exclusive dealing arrangement violates antitrust law, the Court developed a two-part test: first, the agreement at issue must be exclusive; and second, the agreement must have an adverse effect on competition. Id. at 329.

Microsoft argues because per processor agreements did not require an OEM covered by such an agreement to purchase all operating systems from Microsoft it is not an exclusive agreement and Caldera cannot meet the first prong of the Tampa Electric test. HN7[↑] However, a contract need not be denominated exclusive nor must exclusivity be an express condition of a contract, in order for it to be exclusive under Section 2. An agreement with the "practical effect" of exclusivity is covered. Tampa Electric, 365 U.S. at 327 (quoting United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451, 457, 66 L. Ed. 708, 42 S. Ct. 363 \(1922\)). The effect of per processor licenses was that an OEM had to pay two royalties on a computer shipped with an operating system other than MS DOS. A fact-finder could reasonably conclude that this effect coupled with the significant [18] discount offered OEMs who participated in per processor agreements resulted in an agreement with the practical effect of exclusivity.

⁴ Microsoft also offered "per copy" licenses which obligated an OEM to pay Microsoft a royalty on every computer shipped with a copy of MS DOS installed on a computer and "per system" licenses which required an OEM that wished to install a Microsoft operating system on computers that bore a particular model designation to pay Microsoft a royalty on every computer shipped that bore that designation.

Microsoft also contends that because new OEMs were always entering the market and a certain number of MS DOS licenses were expiring at any given time, [*1251] competition was not foreclosed. HN8[] However, determining whether competition has been foreclosed in a given market requires first, defining the product market, and second, identifying the geographic market "by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies." 365 U.S. at 328. Moreover, "the competition foreclosed by the contract must be found to constitute a substantial share of the relevant market. That is to say, the opportunities for other traders to enter into or remain in that market must be significantly limited." Id.

The Supreme Court further stated in Tampa Electric that HN9[] "to determine whether competition has been significantly limited "it is necessary to weigh the probable effect of the contract on the relevant area of effective competition, taking into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate [19] volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of 10 commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which preemption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein." Applying this to the instant case, Microsoft has not defined the relevant market or properly weighed the factors outlined in Tampa Electric to determine whether per processor licenses had a substantial effect on competition. Therefore, Microsoft has not met its burden on this issue for purposes of summary judgment.

Finally, unlike the plaintiff in Tampa Electric, Caldera offers Microsoft's licencing scheme as part of a bigger picture of anticompetitive behavior by Microsoft. It is not a discrete claim of exclusive dealing. Microsoft's per processor agreements may not amount to a finding of Section 2 liability standing alone, however, use of per processor licenses viewed in context with other alleged anticompetitive behavior may give rise to a Section 2 violation as complained of by Caldera. Therefore, summary judgment on Microsoft's licensing practices is denied.

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, defendant's motions for [20] partial summary judgment on "Product Preannouncement," "Product Disparagement," and "Licensing Practices" are DENIED.

DATED this 24 day of June 1999.

BY THE COURT:

Dee Benson

United States District

End of Document

Abbott Lab. v. Durrett

Supreme Court of Alabama

June 25, 1999, Released

1960464

Reporter

746 So. 2d 316 *; 1999 Ala. LEXIS 196 ; 1999-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,559

Abbott Laboratories et al. v. Cecil Durrett et al.

Subsequent History: [1] Application for Rehearing Denied October 22, 1999. Released for Publication January 21, 2000. As Corrected April 7, 2000.

Prior History: Appeal from Greene Circuit Court. (CV-94-029). William R. Gordon, TRIAL JUDGE.

This Opinion Substituted on Rehearing for Withdrawn Opinion of July 31, 1998, Previously Reported at: 1998 Ala. LEXIS 208.

Disposition: OPINION OF JULY 31, 1998, WITHDRAWN; OPINION SUBSTITUTED; REVERSED AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

interstate commerce, combinations, commerce, monopoly, manufacture, antitrust, restraint of trade, commodity, regulation, pool, antitrust statute, anti trust law, transactions, Oil, price fixing, Sherman Act, fined, out-of-state, national bank, confederation, wholesaler, destroy, intrastate commerce, five hundred, commerce clause, interstate, intrastate, indirect, enters, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN1 Legislation, Interpretation

If possible, legislative intent should be gathered from the language of the statute itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN2 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See Ala. Code § 6-5-60 \(1975\).

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN3 Legislation, Interpretation

Related statutes should, when possible, be construed in pari materia.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN4 Interstate Commerce, State Powers

The Alabama Legislature was aware toward the end of the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th century, when it first enacted its antitrust statutes, that its ability to regulate antitrust activity was limited in that it did not have the power to directly regulate transactions involving interstate commerce.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Legislation, Interpretation

When circumstances surrounding the enactment of laws cast doubt on the otherwise clear language of the statutes themselves, the court must look to other factors in determining legislative intent.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

It is permissible in ascertaining the purpose and intent of a statute to look to the history of the times, the existing order of things, the state of the law when the instrument was adopted, and the conditions necessitating such adoption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Ala. Code § 6-5-60 (1975) does not provide a cause of action for damages allegedly resulting from an agreement to control the price of goods shipped in interstate commerce.

Counsel: For Appellants: William D. Coleman and Raymond L. Jackson of Capell, Howard, Knabe & Cobbs, P.A., Montgomery, for Ciba-Geigy Corp. and on behalf of all Manufacturer Defendants.

Richard H. Gill of Copeland, Franco, Screws & Gill, Montgomery, for Schering-Plough Corp. and on behalf of all Manufacturer Defendants.

Lawrence B. Clark and E. Burton Spence of Lange, Simpson, Robinson & Somerville, L.L.P., Birmingham.

For Appellees: Joe R. Whatley, Jr., Russell Jackson Drake, and Peter Burke of Cooper, Mitch, Crawford, Kuykendall & Whatley, L.L.C., Birmingham; and Michael Straus and Philippa McC. Bainbridge of Bainbridge & Straus, Birmingham, for appellees.

Of counsel for the appellees: J. Michael Rediker, Thomas L. Krebs, Steven P. Gregory, and Michael J. Skotnicki of Ritchie & Rediker, Birmingham; David Cromwell Johnson and J. Flint Liddon of Johnson, Liddon, Bear & Tuggle, Birmingham; J.L. Chestnut, Jr., of Chestnut, Sanders, Sanders & Pettaway, P.C., Selma; and T. Roe Frazer II, Richard Freese, and Dennis C. Sweet III of Langston, Frazer, Sweet & Freese, P.A., Jackson, Mississippi.

For Amicus curiae Wholesaler Defendants: Tabor R. Novak, Jr., and E. Hamilton Wilson, Jr., of Ball, Ball, Matthews & Novak, P.A., Montgomery, for Durr Drug Company and Bergen Brunswig Corp.; and Crawford S. McGivaren, Jr., of Cabiness, Johnston, Gardner, Dumas & O'Neal, Birmingham, for Cardinal Health, Inc., Whitmire Distribution Corp., Bindley Western Industries, Inc., McKesson Corp., and Amerisource Corp.

Melvin R. Goldman and Lori A. Schechter of Morrison & Foerster, L.L.P., San Francisco, California; Thomas L. Long of Baker & Hostetler, Columbus, Ohio; Nada S. Suliaman of Arent Fox Kintner Plotkin & Kahn, Washington, D.C.; J. Thomas Rosch and Peter K. Huston, San Francisco, California; and Howard D. Scher and Steven E. Bizar of Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Judges: Hooper, C. J., and Maddox, See, and Brown, JJ., concur. Cook and Johnstone, JJ., dissent. Houston and Lyons, JJ., recuse themselves. See, J., files statement of nonrecusal.

Opinion

[*317] On Rehearing Ex Mero Motu

PER CURIAM.

The opinion of July 31, 1998, is withdrawn and the following is substituted therefor.

The issue presented on this appeal is whether Ala. Code 1975, § 6-5-60, provides a cause of action for damage alleged to have resulted from a conspiracy to control the price of brand-name prescription drugs that were shipped from companies out-of-state into Alabama. The trial court ruled that § 6-5-60 provides such a cause of action; therefore, it denied the defendants' motion for a judgment on the pleadings. We granted the defendants' request for permission to appeal that interlocutory order. Rule 5, Ala.R.App.P. We [\[2\]](#) reverse and remand.

The plaintiffs, individual owners of independent drug stores in Greene and Dallas Counties, filed this action on behalf of themselves and seeking to represent a class consisting of "similarly situated independent retail pharmacists in Alabama who purchase brand-name prescription drugs from the defendant manufacturers and defendant wholesalers at illegally high prices dictated by the discriminatory pricing scheme set by the defendant manufacturers." The defendants are various drug manufacturers, drug wholesalers, health maintenance organizations, and mail-order companies. The complaint alleges that each of the manufacturer and mail-order-company defendants is a foreign corporation with its principal place of business outside Alabama and that the same is true for the majority of the wholesaler defendants. The complaint also alleges that the health-maintenance-organization defendants are Alabama corporations and that they, along with the other defendants, engaged in a conspiracy to control the price of brandname prescription drugs shipped into Alabama. The plaintiffs allege that they were injured as a result of that conspiracy by being forced to pay the manufacturers [\[3\]](#) and the wholesalers more for the drugs than was paid to those companies by the mail-order companies and the health maintenance organizations, which are alleged to have been "favored purchasers" and an integral part of the price-fixing scheme.

Citing, among other cases, Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542 (1913); Dothan Oil Mill Co. v. Espy, 220 Ala. 605, 127 So. 178 (1930); Ex parte Rice, 259 Ala. 570, 67 So. 2d 825 (1953); San Ann Tobacco Co. v. Hamm, 283 Ala. 397, 217 So. 2d 803 (1968); In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust

Litigation, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14529, [No. 94 C 897, October 2, 1996] (N.D. Ill. 1996), reversed, 123 F.3d 599 (7th Cir. 1997); In re Nasdaq Market Makers Antitrust Litigation, 929 F. Supp. 174, 179 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); and Warren v. Playmobil U.S.A., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22191, [CV-95-B-1591-S, March 19, 1996] (N.D. Ala. 1996), the defendants contend that Alabama's antitrust statutes have consistently been interpreted by state and federal courts to apply only to transactions involving intrastate commerce. The defendants argue that Alabama's antitrust statutes, including § 6-5-60, have the same field of operation today that they had when they [4] were first enacted. According to the defendants, the legislative history of Alabama's antitrust statutes, as well as the [*318] state of federal caselaw at the time of their enactment, creates a presumption that the Legislature never intended to directly regulate agreements to control the price of goods shipped in interstate commerce. This presumption, the defendants argue, has not been overcome by the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs contend that § 6-5-60 provides a cause of action in favor of "any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect," and against "any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly." According to the plaintiffs, § 6-5-60 is clear on its face and should not be construed so narrowly as to limit its application to transactions involving intrastate commerce. The plaintiffs maintain, in the alternative, that even if § 6-5-60 should be construed in light of the legislative history of Alabama's antitrust statutes and the state of federal caselaw at the time of their enactment, the clear intent of the Legislature in enacting § 6-5-60 was [5] to regulate all agreements in restraint of trade, whether those agreements involved interstate commerce or intrastate commerce.

With the positions of the parties in mind, we pause to point out what this case is not about. We are not here concerned with whether the Legislature, based on the current state of federal caselaw, has the power to enact a statute, such as § 6-5-60, to provide a means of redress to Alabama companies for indirect injuries suffered as the result of agreements to control the price of goods shipped through interstate commerce. See California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 (1989), cited by the parties for the proposition that the Legislature now has that power.¹ This Court has held that an Alabama statute does not expand like an accordion with changes in federal law bearing on the Legislature's power. Instead, we are concerned only with whether the Legislature, when it enacted § 6-5-60, contemplated that it would apply to such agreements. See In re Upshaw, 247 Ala. 221, 23 So. 2d 861 (1945). In determining whether § 6-5-60 provides a cause of action for damage resulting from an agreement to control the price of [6] goods shipped through interstate commerce, we must follow the cardinal rule of statutory construction and ascertain and give effect to the intent of the Legislature in enacting the statute. HN1[↑] If possible, legislative intent should be gathered from the language of the statute itself. John Deere Co. v. Gamble, 523 So. 2d 95 (Ala. 1988).

[7] However, when circumstances surrounding the enactment of a statute cast doubt on the otherwise clear language of the statute, we must look to other factors in determining legislative intent. In Siegelman v. Chase Manhattan Bank (USA), N.A., 575 So. 2d 1041 (Ala. 1991), this Court was faced with the question whether the financial-institution excise tax, levied pursuant to Ala. Code 1975, § 40-16-1 et seq., applied to the credit-card business conducted by national banks located outside Alabama with Alabama residents. When that excise-tax statute was enacted in 1935, such taxation by the states was prohibited [*319] by federal statutes and caselaw. Federal law changed in 1976 so as to allow the taxation of national banks; the state argued that that change should

¹ We note that in 54A Am.Jur.2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 798 (1996), the following statement appears:

"A state antitrust act can have no extraterritorial operation; consequently, the courts in construing a state antitrust statute will generally apply it to trusts and combinations formed or operated within the state, even though its terms are broad enough to include combinations formed with parties residing outside the state."

But see the recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in In re: Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599 (7th Cir. 1997), citing R.E. Spriggs Co. v. Adolph Coors Co., 37 Cal. App. 3d 653, 112 Cal. Rptr. 585 (Dist. Ct. App. 1974), and Heath Consultants, Inc. v. Precision Instruments, Inc., 247 Neb. 267, 527 N.W.2d 596 (1995).

render out-of-state national banks subject to the 1935 excise-tax statute. This Court rejected that argument, stating, 575 So. 2d at 1048-51:

"In the case presently before us, the trial court in its opinion stated that [Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die Co., \[537 So. 2d 923 \(Ala. 1988\)\]](#), controlled the resolution of the case:

"In Dixie Tool & Die, as in the instant case, the issue was whether in originally [\[8\]](#) enacting the statute, the legislature intended to tax transactions not previously taxed under that statute.

"The Court holds that at the times § 40-16-1 was enacted, the State was prohibited by federal statute from taxing out-of-state national banks. The National Bank Act expressly limited the state's authority to tax only those "national banking associations located within its limits." Because the federal statute was in force at the time § 40-16-1 was enacted, full knowledge and information as to the prior and existing law on the subject of this section [are] imputed to the legislature. A legislature is presumed to know the limit of its taxing power. Further, the statute will be interpreted on the assumption that the legislature was aware of existing statutes at the time new statutes are enacted.

"Based on the foregoing, the Court finds that at the time § 40-16-1 was enacted the legislature could not have intended to impose a tax on out-of-state national banks.'

"In Dixie Tool & Die Co., the Alabama Department of Revenue assessed a sales tax against an Alabama corporation for sales made to out-of-state buyers and to federal government contractors. [\[9\]](#) The Court in Dixie Tool & Die Co. considered whether sales made by the corporation to out-of-state purchasers were subject to Alabama's sales tax. The sales tax provision in question was Ala. Code 1975, § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\). This code section provides:

"(a) There are exempted from the provisions of this division and from the computation of the amount of the tax levied, assessed or payable under this division the following:

"....

"(17) The gross proceeds of sales of tangible personal property or the gross receipts of any business which the state is prohibited from taxing under the Constitution or laws of the United States or under the Constitution of this state.'

"In its opinion, the Court in Dixie Tool & Die Co. recognized that the United States Supreme Court allowed taxation of interstate commerce if the tax met certain criteria. However, the Court stated:

"'[These] recent pronouncements of the United States Supreme Court which enlarge the permissible area of state taxation cannot change the intent or enlarge the scope of enactments passed by our Legislature. [State v. Southern Electric Generating Co., 274 Ala. 668, \[101\] 151 So. 2d 216 \(1963\)](#). Therefore, the question is not whether the State may, under prevailing caselaw, impose a tax upon the gross receipts earned from those transactions. Rather, the controlling issue is whether, in originally enacting this statute, the Legislature intended to tax these transactions."

"The provision that has become § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\) was originally enacted in 1959. In 1959, and, indeed, until Complete Auto Transit v. [Brady, 430 U.S. 274, 97 S. Ct. 1076, 51 L. Ed. 2d 326] in 1977, the applicable case law held that a tax on the sale of goods in interstate commerce was invalid. The Legislature must be deemed to have [*320] been aware of the then-existing limits on a state's power to tax when it enacted the 1959 statute from which § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\) derives. Thus, we must presume that the legislature knew, at the time the statute was passed, that the applicable case law would prevent the application of a sales tax to transactions in interstate commerce. The Legislature must also be presumed to be aware of the judicial enlargement of the State's permissible area and method of taxation, so it could have taken full advantage of those changes if it either [11] intended or desired to do so. No changes have been made to § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\). We conclude, therefore, that it applies today in the same manner that it did when enacted in 1959 and that it exempts sales of goods in interstate commerce from sales tax.'

" 537 So. 2d at 925 (quoting Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., 398 So. 2d 291, 293 (Ala. 1981) (emphasis in [Louisville & Nashville])).

"The trial court also relied on Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., supra. In Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., the Court considered 'whether Alabama's gross receipts tax upon a railroad's earnings from "intrastate business" applies to receipts generated by the L & N Railroad's movement of goods between two points in Alabama.' Id. at 292. The railroad gross receipts tax statute in question, Ala. Code 1975, § 40-21-57, provided:

"In addition to all other taxes imposed by this title, there is hereby levied a license or privilege tax upon each person engaged in the business of operating a railroad in the state of Alabama for the privilege of engaging in such business; said license tax or privilege tax shall be ... in a sum equal to two and [12] one-half percent of the gross receipts in excess of $ 150,000.00 of such railroad from all intrastate business of such railroad within the state of Alabama during the preceding year, the gross intrastate earning to be determined by the amount received from intrastate business.'

"The Court stated that the controlling issue in the case was whether in originally enacting the statute the legislature intended to tax these transactions:

"The question before us is one of legislative intent. We presume that, in enacting the statute in 1935, the Legislature was aware of the existing interpretations and permissible limits of a state's power to tax. Thus, we presume our Legislature knew that at the time the statute was passed, the rule in Minnesota v. Blasius, [290 U.S. 1, 54 S. Ct. 34, 78 L. Ed. 131 \(1933\),] would have prevented the application of the tax to transactions similar to those at issue because they constitute a portion of interstate commerce. We also presume that the Legislature was aware of the fact that this tax could not be sustained as one "in lieu of" other taxes because the tax was expressly levied "in addition to all other taxes." Similarly, [13] we presume that the Legislature was apprised of the fact that it could not justify this tax as one upon "local activity," because to do so would require the indulgence in the proscribed conceptual segmentation of the integral parts of an interstate transaction. Finally, we presume that the Legislature is aware of the judicial enlargement of the State's permissible area and method of taxation, so that the Legislature could have taken full advantage of those changes if it either intended or desired to. No such changes have been made during the forty-five years since the statute was passed and the State has not, by legislation, attempted to enlarge the scope of its taxation. Thus, viewed in its broadest scope, the statute in question could reach and impose a tax upon only those activities which were local and purely intrastate in character. [*321] We therefore conclude that the statute, as enacted in 1935 and as it exists today, was not intended to apply to receipts generated by transactions such as these which, although conducted wholly within the confines of Alabama, constitute an integral portion or segment of interstate commerce.'

" 398 So. 2d at 296-97. See also State v. Southern I^{14]} Elec. Generating Co., 274 Ala. 668, 151 So. 2d 216 \(1963\).

"Like the question in Dixie Tool & Die Co. and Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., the question before us is whether in originally enacting the Alabama Excise Tax Statute, the legislature intended to tax the net income derived by out-of-state national banks from solicitation of credit card applications from Alabama residents.

"In determining the intent of the legislature, we presume that in enacting the Excise Tax Statute the legislature was aware of existing prohibitions against the State's power to tax national banks. When the Excise Tax Statute was enacted in 1935, federal law and judicial interpretation prohibited states from taxing out-of-state national banks. It was not until the Congressional moratorium expired in 1976 that states were allowed to tax out-of-state national banks. Even after the expiration of the moratorium in 1976, the Alabama legislature failed to amend or to reenact the Excise Tax Statute in light of the federal change. See Freeman v. Jefferson County, 334 So. 2d 902, 904 \(Ala. 1976\) ('the rejection of an amendment by the Congress which would have made the statute [15] applicable to a given situation furnishes a strong inference that the statute was not intended to be applicable to that given situation'). Also, the Alabama legislature failed to amend or to reenact the Excise Tax Statute after the United States Supreme Court's 1977 announcement that there would no longer be a per se ban on taxation of interstate commerce. In fact, the last amendment to the Excise Tax Statute occurred in 1978, after the change in both federal statutory and judicial law that would have allowed taxation of out-of-state national banks, and no provision was then made for such taxation. Ala. Acts 1978, Special and Regular Sessions, Act No. 840, p. 1247. We do note, however, that a bill was introduced in the 1990 Regular Session of the Alabama legislature for the stated purpose of extending the Excise Tax Statute to out-of-state national banks, but it was not enacted. House Bill No. 944, Legislative Digest, Final Status p. 14 (May 3, 1990).

"In the present case, we recognize that under existing federal law and judicial enlargement states are able to tax out-of-state national banks if their taxing measures are nondiscriminatory. See 12 U.S.C. § 548 \(1988\). However, [16] when the Excise Tax Statute was enacted in 1935, federal law prevented taxation of out-of-state national banks. In addition to the changes implemented by Congress in 1976, the United States Supreme Court changed its position so as to allow taxation of interstate commerce. See Complete Auto Transit, Inc. v. Brady, supra.

"Under prevailing Alabama statutory construction law, we presume that the legislature was aware of the federal law in 1935 and of the subsequent changes in that law in 1976, as well as the changes in the United States Supreme Court's analysis of the taxation of interstate commerce. Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., supra, and Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die Co., supra. Although the Alabama legislature presumably was aware of Congress's enlargement of state taxing power over national banks, and of the United States Supreme Court's enlargement in regard to taxation of interstate commerce, it made no changes to the Excise Tax Statute.

"This Court's role is not to displace the legislature by amending statutes to [*322] make them express what we think the legislature should have done. Nor is it this Court's role to assume the legislative prerogative [17] to correct defective legislation or amend statutes. Consequently, we conclude that the Excise Tax Statute applies today in the same manner that it did when it was first enacted. Because states were prohibited from taxing out-of-state national banks at the time the statute levying the excise tax was first enacted and judicial interpretation disallowed taxation of interstate commerce, the State may not tax Chase, an out-of-state national bank, in the absence of additional action by the Alabama legislature."

This Court, in Ellis v. Pope, 709 So. 2d 1161 \(Ala. 1997\), reaffirmed Siegelman, Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die, and Ex parte Louisville & N.R.R., insofar as those cases require that we look to the original intent of the Legislature when interpreting a statute. In Pope, this Court adopted, as part of its opinion, a portion of the trial court's order, including this statement:

"The meaning of the term 'district' appears to have varied over the years. Since the [1973] adoption of the present Judicial Article [of the Alabama Constitution], 'district' [as in references to the district court] has come to mean a judicial subdivision of the State geographically [18] equal to or less than a 'circuit.' It usually coincides with county boundaries, and is never a subdivision of a county. The term must not be viewed in light of its meaning today, but as it was used in 1901, when Art. I, § 6, was drafted. Act No. 569, Acts of Alabama, 1907, which subdivided Coffee County, was adopted within six years of the ratification of our present Constitution, and that Act used the term 'district' to refer to the subdivisions of the county. Therefore, it must be concluded that the term 'district' in the terminology used at the time of the drafting and ratification of [the Alabama] Constitution in 1901 meant the subdivision of a county."

709 So. 2d at 1165.

HN2[] Section 6-5-60 provides:

"(a) Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of $ 500 and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly and may commence the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, [19] officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. All such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, or judgment in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"(b) Actions under this section may be commenced in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed, or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

As the plaintiffs correctly point out, § 6-5-60 is not, on its face, limited to transactions involving intrastate commerce. We hasten to add, however, that there is no language in § 6-5-60 that conclusively indicates an intent on the Legislature's part to regulate transactions involving the shipment of goods through interstate commerce. Because the language of § 6-5-60, standing alone, is not conclusive on the question of legislative intent, and because other factors, including the legislative history of Alabama's antitrust statutes, [20] as well as the state of the law at the time of their enactment, cast doubt on the original intent of the Legislature, we find it necessary [*323] to look beyond the language of the statute.

"From this country's beginning there has been an abiding and widespread fear of the evils which flow from monopoly -- that is, the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. By 1890, there was a vast accumulation of wealth in the hands of corporations and individuals, and an enormous development of corporate organization with the facility for combining into 'trusts.' Units of traders and producers had snowballed by combining into trusts, and there was a widespread impression that the trusts had used and would use their power to oppress individuals and injure the public. Competition was threatened; price control was feared; and individual initiative was dampened.

"On the basis of these fears, Congress passed the Sherman Antitrust Act in July 1890 [15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.], in order to prevent or suppress devices or practices which create monopolies or restrain trade or commerce by suppressing or restricting competition and obstructing the course of trade. It is designed [21] to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade. The basic objective of the Act, therefore, is the protection of competition and a competitive process that brings to consumers the benefits of lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods. Thus, the purpose of the Act is not to protect businesses from the working of the market, but to protect the public from the failure of the market. The Act is not directed against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but is directed against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. It does so not out of solicitude for private concerns, but out of concern for the public interest."

54 Am.Jur.2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 1 (1996).

Following the lead of other states, the Alabama Legislature enacted this state's first general antitrust law on February 7, 1891.² Ala. Acts 1890-91, Act No. 202, p. [*324] 438, entitled "An Act to prohibit pools, trusts, or combines to regulate or control the prices of products, goods, wares or merchandise in this state," was patterned after a similar [22] statute that had been enacted in Illinois and was akin to the Sherman Antitrust Act, which Congress had enacted shortly before on July 2, 1890. Act No. 202, which was criminal in nature, provided:

[23]

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any person, corporation or association of persons who shall, within this state, engage or agree with other persons, corporations or association of persons, or enter into, either directly [sic], any combination, pool, trust or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this state for speculation; and any person, corporation or

²The Legislature had enacted a law, approved on February 23, 1883, regulating the "pooling of freights":

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That it shall be unlawful for two or more railroad companies or persons operating railroads in this State to enter into any agreement among themselves, directly or indirectly, for the division among themselves of the freight carrying business at any station, town or city in this State, or into any pool arrangement among themselves of the nature and character aforesaid, the object, purpose and effect of which in either event shall be to prevent free and fair competition among said railroad companies or persons operating said railroads, for said freight carrying business, and to establish extortionate rates in favor of said companies or persons in doing said business, and which shall have the effect of being in undue restraint of the trade and business at any such station, town or city of this State.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That any officer, agent or servant of any such company, or person operating any railroad in this State who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or who shall aid or assist in making or carrying out or performing any such agreement or pool arrangement shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction for every such offense shall be fined not less than fifty dollars, nor more than two hundred dollars, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

"Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That it is the true intent and meaning of this act, that any such agreement, rates or pool agreement made by any convention or association of freight agents, or commissioner of freight rates or rate making committee outside of this State, but to be performed in whole or in part in this State, shall as to such part of the same, as is to be performed within this State, come within the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That any agreement, rates, or pool arrangements made by two or more railroad companies, or persons operating railroads in this State, or by any convention, or by any association of freight agents or commissioner of freight rates, or rate making committee outside of this State, but to be performed in whole or in part within this State for the purpose of cheapening freight rates or of extending additional facilities to the public generally, or to any town, city or station in this State and which are not extortionate and in undue restraint of trade at any town, city, or station in this State, shall not be construed as coming within this act.

"Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, That if any such agreement, rate, or pool arrangement as is mentioned in the fourth section of this act shall have the certified approval of the railroad commission of Alabama, it shall be deemed as prima facie lawful and just in any proceeding before any court or officer of this State, and no officer, agent or servant of any railroad company, or person shall be liable to prosecution, for aiding or assisting in carrying out, or performing any such agreement or pool arrangement, so approved by any railroad commission of Alabama."

(Emphasis added.) Ala. Acts 1882-83, Act No. 79, p. 152-53. Section 2 of Act No. 79 was codified in the Alabama Code of 1886 as Article IV, § 4145.

association of persons who shall enter into, become a member of a party to, any pool, agreement, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article or commodity to be produced or manufactured, mined or sold in this state, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to indictment and punishment as herein provided.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any corporation chartered under the laws of Alabama, or for any officer, stockholder, agent or employe of such corporation to enter into any combination with other persons or corporations, the purpose and effect of which are to place the management or control thereof in the hands of others, with the purpose or [24] intent to limit or fix the price, or lessen the production or sale of any article of commerce, use or consumption, or to restrict or diminish the manufacture of such article.

"Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That any person or corporation violating the provisions of section one or two of this act, within the State of Alabama, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred dollars, nor more than two thousand dollars, at the discretion of the jury trying the same; and any officer, agent or employe of such corporation guilty of violating either of the two preceding sections of this act may be imprisoned, in addition to the fine, not less than six months, and not more than twelve months for every such offense: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent the producers of agricultural products from holding the same for higher prices; And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent the producer of any article of food or commerce from holding the same for higher prices, provided he does not combine or confederate with others thus to raise or lower prices.

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the circuit [25] and city courts to give this act in special charge to the several grand juries of the state."

(Emphasis added.) Act No. 202 was codified in the Alabama Code of 1896 as Chapter 196, Article 5, § 5557, § 5558, and § 5559:

[*325] "5557. Forming pools or combinations to regulate the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation, who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this state for speculation, or any person or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool, agreement, combination, or confederation to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold in this state, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

"5558. Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. - Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent, or employe of any such corporation, [26] which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person and thereby limit or fix the price, or restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use, or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

"5559. Preceding two sections given in special charge to grand juries. -- The preceding two sections must be given in special charge to the grand jury."

What clearly stands out with respect to the 1896 codification of Act No. 202 is the change in phraseology in § 5557, specifically, the deletion of the words "within this state," which had appeared as the 20th, 21st, and 22d words of Act No. 202. This change was made by William L. Martin, Alabama's Code commissioner. Pursuant to Ala. Acts 1894-95, Act No. 507, § 1, p. 1001, Martin was given the authority to "revise, digest and codify all of the statutes of this state of a general and public nature, both civil and criminal." Act No. 507 specifically provided as follows:

"Sec. [27] 3. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said commissioner, at least three months before the meeting of the next general assembly to deliver said code to the governor of this state, together with a sworn statement, showing all the changes he shall have made in the phraseology of all the acts and laws codified by him, including additions thereto and omission therefrom, with accurate reference to the acts and laws so altered or changed; and it shall be the duty of the governor carefully to examine the same, and to specifically report upon the same to the succeeding general assembly, recommending such alterations if any, as to him may seem proper; and attaching to his report the sworn statement of the commissioner herein provided for.

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That said commissioner shall prepare appropriate chapters, titles, and subdivisions of titles for each chapter, clearly and briefly expressive of the subjects treated, which shall be arranged alphabetically, bringing into each chapter as near as may be, a condensation of all public laws, appertaining to the subject treated in each chapter: that said commissioner shall not simply transfer [28] or transcribe the laws, but shall (without changing the sense) so alter the phraseology as to exclude all redundancy, or obscurity of expression, and where there shall be several acts relating to the same subject, they shall be condensed into one, and so expressed, as clearly to set forth the sense of the whole, having regard to judicial exposition thereof: that whenever it shall be apparent that there may be legislative omissions in any statute, said commissioner shall supply the same, so as to perfect such statute, and render its operation complete, and shall add all [*326] such original notes and references as shall be proper for the clear elucidation of them, and for easy reference to the several laws from which they may be compiled, showing as far as may be, when such acts and statutes become operative, when amended, with foot notes of all decisions of the supreme court, construing or mentioning such sections or acts, and as far as practicable, a brief and concise statement of the question decided by such decisions."

In his report to the Governor, on page 111, Martin stated as follows:

"CHAPTER 195. TRADE, PUBLIC POLICY AND POLICE.

"....

"5549, 5550, [29] 5551. Based on the act of February 7, 1891 -- page 438. To prohibit pools, trusts, etc. Rewritten with such changes as were necessary in phraseology."

We note that Act No. 202, dealing with the prohibition of "pools, trusts, etc." was codified as Article 5, § 5557, § 5558, and § 5559 of Chapter 196 of the 1896 Code, not as § 5549, § 5550, and § 5551, of Chapter 195. Notwithstanding these apparent errors, Martin did specifically state that he had rewritten "the act of February 7, 1891 -- page 438" (Act No. 202) so as to make "such changes as were necessary in phraseology." Neither the Governor nor the Legislature made any changes to § 5557, § 5558, or § 5559 before the Legislature adopted the 1896 Code.

Article IV, § 103, of the Constitution of Alabama of 1901 provided:

"The legislature shall provide by law for the regulation, prohibition, or reasonable restraint of common carriers, partnerships, associations, trusts, monopolies, and combinations of capital, so as to prevent them or any of them from making scarce articles of necessity, trade, or commerce, or from increasing unreasonably the cost thereof to the consumer, or preventing reasonable competition [30] in any calling, trade, or business."

This constitutional mandate, Rogers v. City of Mobile, 277 Ala. 261, 169 So. 2d 282 (1964), resulted in the Legislature's readopting § 5557, § 5558, and § 5559 of the 1896 Code in substantially the same form in the 1907 Code as § 7579, § 7580, and § 7582:

"7579. (5557) Forming pools or combinations to regulate the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or any person or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool, agreement, combination, or confederation, to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold, in this state, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

"7580. (5558) Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. -- Any corporation chartered [31] under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent, or employe of any such corporation, which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person, and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use, or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

"....

"7582. (5559) Four preceding sections given in special charge to grand juries. -- The four preceding sections must be given in special charge to the grand jury."

[*327] The Legislature also added the following provision, which appeared as § 7581 of Chapter 273 of the 1907 Code:

"7581. Monopolies, penalty for. -- Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control, or sale of any commodity, or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, or description [32] of business; or which shall destroy, or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offense."

In addition to these criminal antitrust provisions, in the 1907 Code the Legislature, for the first time, provided for a civil cause of action for injuries resulting from the effects of a trust, combine, or monopoly:

"2487. Actions against trusts, combines, or monopolies. -- Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of five hundred dollars and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly; and may maintain the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. And all such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment or decree against [33] any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, judgment, or decree in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"2488. County in which action brought. -- Actions under the preceding section may be brought in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed, or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed; or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile, or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

Section 7579, § 7580, § 7581, and § 7582 of the 1907 Code were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1923 Code as § 5212, § 5213, § 5214, and § 5215, respectively:

"5212. (7579) (5557) Forming pools or combinations to regulate the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or any person or corporation [34] who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool agreement, combination, or confederation, to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold, in this state, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

"5213. (7580) (5558) Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. -- Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent or employe of any such corporation, which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person, and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

[*328] "5214. (7581) Monopolies, penalty for. -- Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production, [35] or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control, or sale of any commodity, or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, or description of business; or which shall destroy or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offense.

"5215. (7582) Three preceding sections given in special charge to grand juries. -- The three preceding sections must be given in special charge to the grand jury."

Section 2487 and § 2488 of the 1907 Code (providing for a civil cause of action) were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1923 Code as § 5697 and § 5698:

"5697. (2487) Actions against trusts, combines, or monopolies. -- Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of five hundred dollars and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, [36] aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly; and may maintain the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. And all such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment or decree against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, judgment, or decree in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"5698. (2488) County in which action brought. -Actions under the preceding section may be brought in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed, or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed; or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile, or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

Section 5212, § 5213, and § 5214 of the 1923 Code were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1940 Code as Title 57, § 106, § 107, and § 108, respectively:

" § 106. (5212) (7579) (5557) Forming pools or combinations to regulate [37] the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or any person or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool agreement, combination, or confederation, to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold, in this state, [*329] must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

" § 107. (5213) (7580) (5558) Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. -- Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent or employee of any such corporation, which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person, and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the production, [38] manufacture, sale, use or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

" § 108. (5214) (7581) Monopolies, penalty for. -Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control, or sale of any commodity, or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, or description of business; or which shall destroy or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offense."

Section 5697 and § 5698 of the 1923 Code (providing for a civil cause of action) were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1940 Code as Title 7, § 124 and § 125:

"§ 124. (5697) (2487) Actions against trusts, combines, or monopolies. -- Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly, or its effect, [39] direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of five hundred dollars and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly; and may maintain the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. And all such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment or decree against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, judgment, or decree in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"§ 125. (5698) (2488) County in which action brought. -- Actions under the preceding section may be brought in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed, or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed; or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile, or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

Section 106, § 107, and § 108 of Title 57 of the 1940 Code were [40] carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1975 Code as § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3, respectively:

"[§ 8-10-1] Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations or enters, directly or indirectly, into any combination, pool, trust, or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state or any person or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of or party to any pool agreement, combination, or confederation to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold in this state must be fined, on conviction, not less than $ 500 nor more than $ 2,000."

"[§ 8-10-2] Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state or any officer, stockholder, agent, or employee of any such corporation which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use, or consumption of any article [41] of commerce must be fined, on conviction, not less than $ 500 nor more than $ 2,000."

"[§ 8-10-3] Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall [*330] restrain, or attempt to restrain, the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, the production, control, or sale of any commodity or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, or description of business or which shall destroy, or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $ 500 nor more than $ 2,000 for each offense."

Section 124 and § 125 of Title 7 of the 1940 Code (providing for a civil cause of action) were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1975 Code as subsections (a) and (b), respectively, of § 6-5-60.

With this legislative history in mind, we move next to the state of federal constitutional law at the time Alabama's antitrust statutes were originally enacted. In 1 ABA Antitrust Law Section, State Antitrust Practice and Statutes Introduction-20 (1990), we find the following:

"An important [42] factor in most early state antitrust cases was the prevailing 'dual sovereignty' theory of state-federal regulatory authority. This theory postulated distinct and mutually exclusive zones of jurisdiction for the states, which exercised jurisdiction only over purely intrastate matters, and the federal government, which exercised jurisdiction only over goods and services in interstate commerce."

(Emphasis in original.) See, also, Lawrence H. Tribe, American Constitutional Law, § 5-4, at 307-08 (2d ed. 1988) (discussing the United States Supreme Court's varying approaches to interpreting the Commerce Clause, Article I, § 8, of the United States Constitution, but specifically noting the consistent dichotomy maintained by that Court between interstate commerce and intrastate commerce prior to the New Deal). This dichotomy between interstate commerce and intrastate commerce is clearly illustrated in a series of cases decided by the Court between 1888 and 1899. See Bowman v. Chicago & N.W. Ry., 125 U.S. 465, 493, 31 L. Ed. 700, 8 S. Ct. 689 (1888) ("[A] State has legislative control, exclusive of Congress, within its territory, of all persons, things, and transactions [43] of strictly internal concern. ... It cannot, without the consent of Congress, expressed or implied, regulate commerce between its people and those of the other States of the Union in order to effect its end, however desirable such a regulation might be."); Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U.S. 289, 302, 38 L. Ed. 719, 14 S. Ct. 829 (1894) ("we think it must be considered, in view of a long line of decisions, that it is settled that nothing which is a direct burden upon interstate commerce can be imposed by the State without the assent of Congress"); United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 12, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249 (1895) ("That which belongs to commerce [between the States] is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State." ³ [45]); Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 233,

³ United States v. E.C. Knight Co. was the Supreme Court's first decision construing the Sherman Antitrust Act. The full text in which this quotation appears is as follows:

"It cannot be denied that the power of a State to protect the lives, health, and property of its citizens, and to preserve good order and the public morals, 'the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominion,' is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the general government, nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive. The relief of the citizens of each State from the burden of monopoly and the evils resulting from the restraint of trade among such citizens was left with the States to deal with, and this court has recognized their possession of that power even to the extent of holding that an employment or business carried on by private individuals, when it becomes a matter of such public interest and importance as to create a common charge or burden upon the citizen; in other words, when it becomes a practical monopoly, to which the citizen is compelled to resort and by means of which a tribute can be exacted from the community, is subject to regulation by state legislative power. On the other hand, the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States is also exclusive. The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraints. Therefore it has been determined that the failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject shall be free from restrictions or impositions upon it by the several States, and if a law passed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers comes into conflict with that will, the Congress and the State cannot occupy the position of equal opposing sovereignties, because the Constitution declares its supremacy and that of the laws passed in pursuance thereof; and that which is not supreme must yield to that which is supreme. 'Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic,' said Chief Justice Marshall, 'but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.' That which belongs to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 210, 6 L. Ed. 23; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. 419, 12 Wheat. 419, 448, 6 L. Ed. 678; The License Cases, 5 How. 504, 599; [County of] Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U.S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Bowman v. Chicago & N.W. Railway, 125 U.S. 465, 31 L. Ed. 700, 8 S. Ct. 689; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U.S. 100, 34 L. Ed. 128, 10 S. Ct. 681; In re Rahrer, 140 U.S. 545, 555, 35 L. Ed. 572, 11 S. Ct. 865."

156 U.S. at 11-12.

In P. Areeda & D. Turner, 1 Antitrust Law, An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and their Application, § 232c (1978), we find the following discussion of Knight:

"The 1895 Knight case, the Supreme Court's first Sherman Act decision, held a national monopoly of sugar manufacturing beyond the constitutional reach of the act because mere manufacturing was not 'commerce.' At that time, the Commerce

44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 \(1899\) (also involving an alleged violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act) ("each state ... would have complete jurisdiction over the commerce which was wholly within its own borders, while the jurisdiction of Congress, under the provisions of the [44] Constitution, over interstate commerce would be paramount, and would include therein jurisdiction over contracts [in restraint of such commerce]"); see, also, W. W. Thomas, A Treatise On Combinations In Restraint of Trade, § 90-91, at 229, 232 (2d ed. 1928) ("Congress has no control over intrastate commerce.... No state may in any way enact legislation which in any wise controls, regulates, or infringes on interstate commerce.").⁴

[46] [332] One of the best discussions of the prevailing dual-sovereignty theory of state-federal regulatory authority at the turn of the century is found in Justice Stewart's dissenting opinion in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 632-36, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 \(1976\). In Cantor, the Supreme Court was called upon to decide whether Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\), which had held that the Sherman Antitrust Act was not violated by state action displacing competition in the marketing of raisins, immunized private action that had been approved by a state regulatory agency and that had to continue while the state approval remained effective. Justice Stewart's historical analysis of the legislative history of the Sherman Antitrust Act, which was not in dispute, reads as follows:

"The floor debates and the House Report on the proposed legislation [the Sherman Antitrust Act] clearly reveal, as at least one commentator has noted, that 'Congress fully understood the narrow scope given to the Clause embraced only the actual and 'direct' purchase, sale, or transportation of goods across state lines. The Court acknowledged that such commerce was affected by the sugar monopoly, but only 'indirectly.'

"Two characteristics of the Knight decision remain important today. First, the Court never reached the merits of the government's case because the constitutional determination was made first, and the courts still treat the commerce question as a preliminary jurisdictional hurdle in antitrust litigation. Second, the jurisdictional inquiry was entirely independent of the Sherman Act's purposes. That separation seemed feasible in 1895 when 'interstate commerce' was wholly dependent upon the location of the defendant's conduct, and without regard to its impact on the interests protected by the Sherman Act. This neat separation of jurisdictional and substantive inquiries caused difficulties with later and more expansive definitions of interstate commerce."

⁴We note that the Supreme Court had held at the time Alabama first enacted its antitrust statutes that the Commerce Clause, in conferring on Congress the power to regulate commerce, did not wholly withdraw from the states the power to regulate matters of local concern with respect to which Congress had not exercised its power, even though the regulation in some way affected interstate commerce. See, e.g., California v. Thompson, 313 U.S. 109, 113, 85 L. Ed. 1219, 61 S. Ct. 930 \(1941\), in which the Court noted:

"Ever since Willson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet. 245 [(1829)], and Cooley v. [Board of Wardens of the Port of Philadelphia], 53 U.S. 299, 12 How. 299, 13 L. Ed. 996 [(1851)], it has been recognized that there are matters of local concern, the regulation of which unavoidably involves some regulation of interstate commerce, but which because of their local character and their number and diversity may never be adequately dealt with by Congress. Because of their local character, also, there is wide scope for local regulation without impairing the uniformity of control of the national commerce in matters of national concern and without materially obstructing the free flow of commerce which were the principal objects sought to be secured by the Commerce Clause. Notwithstanding the Commerce Clause, such regulation in the absence of Congressional action has, for the most part, been left to the states by the decisions of this Court, subject only to other applicable constitutional restraints."

See, also, South Carolina State Highway Department v. Barnwell Brothers, Inc., 303 U.S. 177, 82 L. Ed. 734, 58 S. Ct. 510 \(1938\); Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U.S. 539, 61 L. Ed. 480, 37 S. Ct. 217 \(1917\); Bowman v. Chicago & N.W. Ry., supra, and the cases cited therein. There is nothing, however, in the Supreme Court's decisions in United States v. E.C. Knight Co., supra, and Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, supra, that indicates that the Court would have viewed extraterritorial state antitrust provisions as falling within that constitutionally permissible category of local regulation having only an indirect or incidental effect on interstate commerce.

commerce clause' in 1890. This understanding is, in many ways, of historic interest only, because subsequent decisions of this Court [47] have 'permitted the reach of the Sherman Act to expand along with expanding notions of congressional power.' But the narrow view taken by the Members of Congress in 1890 remains relevant for the limited purpose of assessing their intention regarding the interaction of the Sherman Act and state economic regulation.

"The legislative history reveals very clearly that Congress' perception of the limitations of its power under the Commerce Clause was coupled with an intent not to intrude upon the authority of the several States to regulate 'domestic' commerce. As the House Report stated:

"It will be observed that the provisions of the bill are carefully confined to such subjects of legislation as are clearly within the legislative authority of Congress.

"No attempt is made to invade the legislative authority of the several States or even to occupy doubtful grounds. No system of laws can be devised by Congress alone which would effectually protect the people of the United States against the evils and oppression of trusts and monopolies. Congress has no authority to deal, generally, with the subject within the States, and the States have no authority to legislate [48] in respect of commerce between the several States or with foreign nations.

"It follows, therefore, that the legislative authority of Congress and that of the several States must be exerted to secure the suppression of restraints upon trade and monopolies. Whatever legislation Congress may enact on this subject, within the limits of its authority, will prove of little value unless the States shall supplement it by such auxiliary and proper legislation [*333] as may be within their legislative authority.'

"Similarly, the floor debates on the proposed legislation reveal an intent to 'go as far as the Constitution permits Congress to go,' in the words of Senator Sherman, conjoined with an intent not to 'interfere with' state-law efforts to 'prevent and control' combinations within the limit of the State.' Far from demonstrating an intent to pre-empt state laws aimed at preventing or controlling combinations or monopolies, the legislative debates show that Congress' goal was to supplement such state efforts, themselves restricted to the geographic boundaries of the several States. As Senator Sherman stated: 'Each State can deal with a combination within the State, but only [49] the General Government can deal with combinations reaching not only the several States, but the commercial world. This bill does not include combinations within a State' Indeed a preexisting body of state law forbidding combinations in restraint of trade provided the model for the federal Act. As Senator Sherman stated with respect to the proposed legislation: 'It declares that certain contracts are against public policy, null and void. It does not announce a new principle of law, but applies old and well-recognized principles of the common law to the complicated jurisdiction of our State and Federal Government. Similar contracts in any State in the Union are now, by common or statute law, null and void.'

"It is noteworthy that the body of state jurisprudence which formed the model for the Sherman Act coexisted with state laws permitting regulated industries to operate under governmental control in the public interest. Indeed, state regulatory laws long antedated the passage of the Sherman Act and had, prior to its passage, been upheld by this Court against constitutional attack. Such laws were an integral part of state efforts to regulate competition to which Congress [50] turned for guidance in barring restraints of interstate commerce, and it is clear that those laws were left undisturbed by the passage of the Sherman Act in 1890. For, as congressional spokesmen expressly stated, there was no intent to 'interfere with' state laws regulating domestic commerce or 'invade the legislative authority of the several States....'

"As previously noted, the intent of the draftsmen of the Sherman Act not to intrude on the sovereignty of the States was coupled with a full and precise understanding of the narrow scope of congressional power under the Commerce Clause, as it was then interpreted by decisions of this Court. Subsequent decisions of the Court, however, have permitted the 'jurisdictional' reach of the Sherman Act to expand along with an expanding view of the commerce power of Congress. See Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 743 n.2, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848, and cases cited therein. These decisions, based on a determination that Congress intended to exercise all the power it possessed when it enacted the Sherman Act, have in effect allowed the Congress of 1890 the retroactive benefit of an enlarged judicial [51] conception of the commerce power.

"It was this retroactive expansion of the jurisdictional reach of the Sherman Act that was in large part responsible for the advent of the Parker doctrine. Parker involved a program regulating the production of raisins within the State of California. Under the original understanding of the draftsmen of the Sherman Act, such in-state production, like in-state manufacturing, would not have been subject to the regulatory power of Congress under the Commerce Clause and thus not within the 'jurisdictional' reach of the Sherman Act. See United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249. If the state of the law had remained static, the Parker problem would rarely, if ever, [*334] have arisen. As stated in Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679, 24 S. Ct. 436, the operative premise would have been that the 'Anti-Trust Act ... prescribed ... a rule for interstate and international commerce, (not for domestic commerce,') id. at 337. The relevant question would have been whether the anticompetitive conduct required or permitted by the state statute was in restraint of [*52] domestic or interstate commerce. If the former, the conduct would have been beyond the reach of the Sherman Act; if the latter, the conduct would probably have violated the Sherman Act, regardless of contrary state law, on the theory that 'no State can, by ... any ... mode, project its authority into other States, and across the continent, so as to prevent Congress from exerting the power it possesses under the Constitution over interstate and international commerce, or ... to exempt its corporation engaged in interstate commerce from obedience to any rule lawfully established by Congress for such commerce.' Id. at 345-346."

428 U.S. at 632-36 (Stewart, J., dissenting) (emphasis in Justice Stewart's opinion).

An Alabama appellate court first dealt with the scope of this state's antitrust statutes in 1913. In Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, supra, the defendant in a breach-of-contract action defended on the ground that the contract was illegal and void as in restraint of trade and against public policy. The Court of Appeals upheld the trial court's order sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the complaint, stating:

"Section 23 of our Constitution forbids [*53] the granting of exclusive and irrevocable special privileges and immunities by the Legislature, and section 103 thereof, which is a provision new to the Constitution of 1901, enjoins positively upon the Legislature the duty of providing by law for the 'regulation, prohibition, or reasonable restraint of common carriers, partnerships, associations, trusts, monopolies, and combinations of capital, so as to prevent them or any of them from making scarce articles of necessity, or increasing unreasonably the costs thereof to the consumer, or preventing reasonable competition in any trade, calling or business.' In pursuance of this latter provision the Legislature of this state, following the lead of other states, has passed the act now embraced in sections 7579, 7580, and 7581 of the Code, patterned after a similar statute in Illinois and other states and akin to the federal statute, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200).

"Said section 7579 of our Code thus provides: 'Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, [*54] pool, or trust, or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or ... must, on conviction, be fined,' etc.

"Section 7581 reads: 'Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control or sale of any commodity, or ... shall be fined,' etc.

"The Sherman Anti-Trust Act makes illegal, punishing the parties thereto by fine or imprisonment, 'every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations,' etc.

"*There being thus both a state and national law prohibiting unlawful combinations in restraint of trade -- the one law relating to intrastate, the other to interstate, commerce -- it is immaterial as to which character of commerce, [335] whether only one or both, is involved in the contract here under consideration; for if the contract is in violation of either law it is void as contravening a positive statute; and, even if it does not go to the extent [55] of being in actual violation of either statute, yet if it tends to create a monopoly by unreasonably restraining trade, it is still void under our law, as at common law, as being against public policy. Arnold v. Jones, 152 Ala. 501, 44 So. 662, 12 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 150; 2 May. Dig. 784; 5 May. Dig. 218; 6 May. Dig. 182, where the authorities are cited."

9 Ala. App. at 131-33; 62 So. at 545-46. (Emphasis added.)

This Court first considered the application of Alabama's antitrust statutes in Dothan Oil Mill Co. v. Espy, supra. The defendants in that case were Alabama manufacturers of cottonseed oil "in different localities in this state" and were "the only buyers in Alabama of any appreciable amount of cotton-seed offered for sale in the State." 220 Ala. at 606-07, 127 So. at 179-80. The plaintiffs, Alabama cotton ginners, alleged that the defendants had "agreed among themselves the price to be paid for cotton-seed throughout the State of Alabama." 220 Ala. at 606, 127 So. at 179. The defendants argued that the trial court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, on the ground that the challenged conspiracy to control the price of cottonseed involved interstate commerce. [56] The defendants based their argument on the fact that a portion of the products that were manufactured from cottonseed were sold outside Alabama. This Court rejected the defendants' argument, stating:

"We are not of [the] opinion, however, that the business of buying cotton seed, confined wholly to the state, to be crushed and manufactured into oil and other products, in such state, constitutes interstate commerce, within the scope and purpose of [the Federal Trade Commission Act] or within the sense of the Sherman and Clayton Acts (15 [U.S.C.] §§ 1-7, 15, and sections 12-27, 44) which confer on the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction to enforce said acts, though some of the manufactured products may eventually find their way into and become commodities of interstate commerce. 'The fact, of itself, that an article when in the process of manufacture is intended for export to another state does not render it an article of interstate commerce.' Crescent Cotton Oil Co. v. State of Mississippi, 257 U.S. 129, 42 S. Ct. 42, 44, 66 L. Ed. 166; Coe v. Errol, 116 U.S. 517, 6 S. Ct. 475, 29 L. Ed. 715; New York Central R. R. Co. v. Mohney, 252 U.S. 152, 40 S. Ct. 287, 1571 64 L. Ed. 502, 9 A.L.R. 496."

220 Ala. at 610, 127 So. at 182. Thus, the essence of this Court's decision in Espy was that the plaintiffs' complaint stated a statelaw antitrust claim because the alleged illegal conduct involved only commercial transactions wholly confined to Alabama.

This Court next commented on Alabama's antitrust statutes in Ex parte Rice, supra. That case involved an original petition for a writ of mandamus to require the trial court to vacate its order overruling the plaintiffs' motion to compel answers to interrogatories. The underlying action was filed by the Sinclair Refining Company and sought the specific performance of a contract. The defendant raised as a defense that the contract was illegal, arguing that its "purpose was to engage in a monopoly in violation of the state and federal law." 259 Ala. at 572, 67 So. 2d at 826. This Court denied mandamus relief, holding that the motion to compel had been properly denied because the interrogatories filed by the defendant sought to place an improper burden on the plaintiff. In the course of its discussion of the applicable law, this Court noted:

"We do not seem to have in Alabama a statute [58] which defines an unlawful monopoly. Section 108, Title 57, Code, makes it a crime, punishable by fine, for any person, including a corporation, to [~~336~~] restrain trade or create a monopoly. Section 103 of the Constitution requires legislation to prohibit monopolies and combinations. Section 78, Title 57, Code, makes lawful certain contracts fixing a minimum resale price. We have applied the common law, which is substantially as set out in the Sherman and Clayton Acts. See Sherrill v. Alabama Appliance Co., 240 Ala. 46 \(7\), 197 So. 1.

"The federal statutes, Sherman and Clayton Acts, prescribe the terms of unlawful monopolies and restraints of trade as they should also be administered in Alabama. The question, therefore, is properly affected by those acts, and it must be controlled by them when the business involved in the suit affects interstate commerce. It is upon that basis that the foregoing conclusions prevail in this case."

259 Ala. at 575, 67 So. 2d at 829. (Emphasis added.)

In San Ann Tobacco Co. v. Hamm, supra, this Court addressed the constitutionality of an amendment to the Alabama Unfair Cigarette Sales Act, Ala. Acts 1951, Act No. 805, as amended [59] in 1965 by Ala. Acts 1965, Act No. 78, p. 105, Second Special Session. In striking down the amendment as violating § 1 and § 35 of the Alabama Constitution, this Court wrote:

"This Court held the original Act to be constitutional on its face, Simonetti, Inc. v. State ex rel. Gillion, 272 Ala. 398, 132 So. 2d 252, and appellants do not attack that holding. But appellants do argue that one part of the 1965 amendment does render the Act unconstitutional on its face.

"The pertinent part of § 3(a) (Tit. 57, § 83(3)) of the original Act provided:

"It shall be unlawful for any wholesaler or retailer, with intent to injure competitors, destroy or substantially lessen competition, to advertise, offer to sell, or sell at wholesale or retail, cigarettes at less than cost to such wholesaler or retailer as the case may be.'

"This sentence was amended in 1965 and we emphasize the five additional words added which are pertinent to this decision:

"It shall be unlawful for any wholesaler or retailer with intent to injure competitors, destroy or substantially lessen competition, or with the effect thereof, to advertise, offer to sell [60] or sell at wholesale or retail cigarettes at less than cost to such wholesaler or retailer as the case may be'

"We quote excerpts from the decision in Simonetti, Inc. v. State ex rel. Gillion, supra:

""The present bill directly alleges a dual or cumulative specific intent to 'injure competitors and destroy or substantially lessen competition' and that respondent's advertising, offers to sell, and sale of cigarettes at wholesale have been 'at less than cost to said respondent.' These are considered to be allegations of ultimate, issuable facts, sufficient for the purpose of pleading, since the respondent's actual intent in fact, its costs, and its selling prices are presumably matters within its knowledge, and greater particularity would not seem to be required either to frame the issue or inform respondent of the charge against which it is required to defend. By these allegations, the State as complainant assumes a heavy burden of proof, since it must be proof of far more than mere intent of injury to competitors or 'unfairness' of competition. It must also prove, under the construction placed upon the Act, a selling below cost with the specific intent [61] of destroying or substantially lessening competition, since the Act, if valid at all, can only be held so as an exercise of the police power of the state over intrastate commerce to the end of inhibiting practices tending toward monopolization.""

[*337] 283 Ala. at 400, 217 So. 2d at 804-05. (Some emphasis original; other emphasis added.)

At least three federal courts have followed the aforementioned line of Alabama decisions and have declined to interpret Alabama's antitrust statutes as reaching transactions involving interstate commerce. See In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, supra (district court denying motion to remand to state court, stating that "it is clear that the statute [§ 6-5-60] applies only to intrastate activity");⁵ In re Nasdaq Market Makers Antitrust

⁵ The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed the district court's order denying the motion to remand. In doing so, the court recognized that at the turn of the century the Alabama Legislature lacked the constitutional authority to regulate interstate commerce through the use of antitrust provisions:

"The cases on which the defendants rely, for example, Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542, 546 (1913), date from a period in which, interstate commerce being narrowly defined, see, e.g., Hadley Dean Plate Glass Co. v. Highland Glass Co., 143 F. 242, 244 (8th Cir. 1906), and federal power to regulate such commerce being deemed

Litigation, supra, at 179 (denying motion to remand and noting that "the Alabama state courts have deemed the Alabama antitrust statutes upon which the complaint is based to regulate only intrastate commerce"); and Warren v. Playmobil U.S.A., Inc., supra (denying motion to remand, concluding that "the Alabama statutes the plaintiff purports to rely upon § 6-5-60, § [62] 8-10-1, and § 8-10-3] regulate only intrastate commerce").

[63] After carefully reviewing the record and the briefs (which, we note, were exceptionally well written), we conclude that the rationale of Siegelman (that because the states were prohibited by federal law from taxing out-of-state national banks at the time the statute levying the excise tax was first enacted, the state could not tax an out-of-state national bank under the existing tax statute in the absence of further action by the Legislature) is equally applicable in the present case. Although what is now § 6-5-60 (providing for a civil cause of action) was enacted a little over 16 years after what are now § 8-10-1, [*338] § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3 (prescribing criminal penalties), all of these statutes are part of a uniform system of regulation, in the sense that they are all directed toward punishing or providing redress for activities in restraint of trade. HN3 [↑] Related statutes of this kind should, when possible, be construed in pari materia. Jordan v. Reliable Life Insurance Co., 589 So. 2d 699 (Ala. 1991), citing N. Singer, Sutherland Statutory Construction, § 70.05, at 505 (4th ed. 1986). It is significant, we think, that all of these antitrust provisions were first enacted [64] at a time in this country's history when the United States Supreme Court maintained a clear dichotomy with respect to a state's power to regulate commerce. Our research indicates that at the time of the enactment of what are now § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3 (1891), and extending through the time of the enactment in 1907 of what is now § 6-5-60, the United States Supreme Court had clearly held that the regulation of interstate commerce was within the exclusive domain of Congress. It is also significant that a federal antitrust law (the Sherman Antitrust Act) was already in effect at the time of the enactment of what are now § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3. Thus, under the rationale of Siegelman, we must entertain a strong presumption that HN4 [↑] the Alabama Legislature was aware toward the end of the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th century, when it first enacted these antitrust statutes, that its ability to regulate antitrust activity was limited in that it did not have the power to directly regulate transactions involving interstate commerce. The United States Supreme Court had clearly signaled, however, that the regulation of intrastate commerce at the turn [65] of the century was still largely within the exclusive domain of the states.

This presumption that the Legislature intended to limit the scope of its antitrust laws to transactions involving intrastate commerce is strengthened by several additional factors. First, the Illinois statute that formed the basis for what are now § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3, was held early on by the Illinois Supreme Court to be limited to transactions involving intrastate commerce. See People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co., 201 Ill. 236, exclusive, id.; United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 11, 15 S. Ct. 249, 253, 39 L. Ed. 325 (1895), a state statute limited to intrastate commerce would have some, albeit a strictly limited, scope and could not have a greater scope no matter how much the state wanted it to."

123 F.3d at 612-13. The court then went on to reason that "the cases thus were not interpreting the statute; they were interpreting the Constitution as placing upper and lower bounds on the reach of the statute." 123 F.3d at 613. Stating that the United States Constitution "has since been reinterpreted," the court noted that "other states [have] read their antitrust statutes to reach what is now understood to be interstate commerce," and that "we are given no reason to suppose that Alabama would buck this trend." Id. This Court's decisions in Siegelman v. Chase Manhattan Bank, supra; Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die Co., supra; and Ex parte Louisville & N.R.R., supra, which created a presumption that the Legislature did not intend to exceed its constitutional authority in enacting this state's antitrust provisions, preclude the kind of statutory construction that the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals thought we might engage in. As we have explained, this presumption was strengthened by, among other things, the extensive legislative history of the Alabama statutes that we have set out, including the critical limiting words contained in Act No. 202 -- "within this state." The Seventh Circuit apparently ruled without the benefit of this legislative history or this Court's decisions referenced above. We also note that the Seventh Circuit expressed concern that "if the statute is limited today as it once was to commerce that is not within the regulatory power of Congress under the commerce clause, it is a dead letter because there are virtually no sales, in Alabama or anywhere else in the United States, that are intrastate in that sense." 123 F.3d at 613. However, the statutes, as we interpret them, may yet have a field of operation because they continue to reach transactions within this state, in the geographic sense, even though such transactions may affect interstate commerce as currently defined by federal law. See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 633, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (1976) (Stewart, J., dissenting) (recognizing that when Congress passed the Sherman Antitrust Act, state efforts to restrain monopolies were "restricted to the geographic boundaries of the several states").

66 N.E. 349 (1903). Second, Act No. 202, § 1 (the predecessor of § 8-10-1), as originally enacted by the Legislature in 1891, read as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any person, corporation or association of persons who shall, within this state, engage or agree with other persons, corporations or association of persons, or enter into, either directly [sic], any combination, pool, trust or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this state for speculation; and any person, corporation or association of persons who shall enter into, become [66] a member of a party to, any pool, agreement, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article or commodity to be produced or manufactured, mined or sold in this state, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to indictment and punishment as herein provided."

(Emphasis added.) Although this fact is certainly not conclusive, this section, as originally worded, suggests that the Legislature intended to limit the scope of Alabama's antitrust regulations to transactions involving intrastate commerce. Although the Code commissioner deleted the words "within this state" from § 5557 during his compilation of the 1896 Code, we find in our research no indication that he had the authority or the intent to make any substantive changes to Act No. 202, or that the Legislature, by adopting the 1896 Code with the commissioner's suggested change to § 5557, contemplated that the deletion of the words would effect the kind of substantive change that the plaintiffs suggest was intended -- to expand the scope of the statute to encompass transactions involving interstate [*339] commerce. We find it more probable (although we certainly can never know for sure) that [67] the commissioner deleted the words, and that the Legislature accepted that change, out of an understanding or belief that the state lacked extraterritorial authority over commerce and, therefore, that the words were not necessary. Third, and perhaps most important, the Court of Appeals stated in 1913, shortly after these statutes were enacted, that the Legislature's regulatory power over antitrust violations did not extend to transactions involving interstate commerce, specifically recognizing that the regulation of such transactions had been undertaken by Congress pursuant to the Sherman Antitrust Act. The understanding of the Court of Appeals in this respect has been echoed by this Court on every occasion on which it has considered the matter. Fourth, the Legislature, with presumptive knowledge of the interpretation placed on Alabama's antitrust laws by Alabama appellate courts, has made no substantive changes to any of Alabama's antitrust laws since their original enactment.

As previously noted, HN5 when circumstances surrounding the enactment of laws, such as the antitrust statutes at issue here, cast doubt on the otherwise clear language of the statutes themselves, we must look [68] to other factors in determining legislative intent. Siegelman, supra. In an effort to avoid indulging in conjecture or searching for imaginary purposes with respect to these antitrust statutes, we have followed the well-settled rule of statutory construction "HN6" that it is permissible in ascertaining [the purpose and intent of a statute] to look to the history of the times, the existing order of things, the state of the law when the instrument was adopted, and the conditions necessitating such adoption." In re Upshaw, 247 Ala. at 223, 23 So. 2d at 863. Having done that, we hold, based on the above, that HN7 does not provide a cause of action for damages allegedly resulting from an agreement to control the price of goods shipped in interstate commerce. We reiterate what we stated in Siegelman, supra:

"This Court's role is not to displace the legislature by amending statutes to make them express what we think the legislature should have done. Nor is it this Court's role to assume the legislative prerogative to correct defective legislation or amend statutes."

575 So. 2d at 1051. We hold only that the field of operation of Alabama's antitrust statutes, [69] specifically § 6-5-60, is no greater today than it was when the laws were first enacted. Thus, these statutes regulate monopolistic activities that occur "within this state" -- within the geographic boundaries of this state -- even if such activities fall within the scope of the Commerce Clause of the Constitution of the United States.⁶ We leave to the Legislature the policy decision of whether to expand the reach of Alabama's antitrust statutes to activities that cross state boundaries.

⁶ Of course, Alabama's antitrust statutes may not be applied in a manner that discriminates against or unduly burdens interstate commerce. See Minnesota v. Cloverleaf Creamery Co., 449 U.S. 456, 66 L. Ed. 2d 659, 101 S. Ct. 715 (1981); Hunt v. Washington State Apple Advertising Comm'n, 432 U.S. 333, 53 L. Ed. 2d 383, 97 S. Ct. 2434 (1977).

The trial court's order denying the defendants' motion for a judgment on the pleadings is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

[70] OPINION OF JULY 31, 1998, WITHDRAWN; OPINION SUBSTITUTED; REVERSED AND REMANDED.

Hooper, C. J., and Maddox, See, and Brown, JJ., concur.

Cook and Johnstone, JJ., dissent.

Houston and Lyons, JJ., recuse themselves.

SEE, Justice (statement of nonrecusal).

For the reasons given in my statement of nonrecusal in Archer Daniels Midland Co. v. Seven Up Bottling Co. of Jasper, Inc., [Ms. 1960220, June 25, 1999] 1999 Ala. LEXIS 201, So. 2d, (Ala. 1999) (See, J., statement of nonrecusal), I decline to recuse.

Hooper, C.J., and Maddox, Kennedy,¹⁵ Cook, Brown, and Johnstone, JJ., concur.

Dissent by: COOK; JOHNSTONE

Dissent

[*340] COOK, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent from the majority's holding that § 6-5-60, Ala. Code 1975, does not provide a cause of action for damage occurring within Alabama and resulting from an unlawful agreement to control the price of goods shipped through interstate commerce into Alabama.

The issue presented by this appeal is whether the application of Alabama's antitrust law, § 6-5-60, to the in-state purchase of brand-name prescription drugs shipped from companies out-of-state is precluded because of the minimal presence of interstate commerce, which arguably invokes the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution.⁷ The actual focus is on the narrow issue of state-antitrust-law preclusion under the Commerce Clause.

[71] Like the majority, I also believe a review of the legislative history of the statute is a necessary prerequisite to an analysis of the statute. Therefore, for a court to ascertain legislative intent, it is necessary to examine the plain language of the statute and to consider conditions existing when the Alabama antitrust laws were enacted. See Advertiser Co. v. Hobbie, 474 So. 2d 93 (Ala. 1985); League of Women Voters v. Renfro, 292 Ala. 128, 290 So. 2d 167 (1974).

¹⁵ Justice Kennedy's vote regarding the motion to recuse was made prior to his resignation on June 11, 1999.

⁷ In Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146, 150, 28 L. Ed. 2d 686, 91 S. Ct. 1357 (1971), the United States Supreme Court explained:

"The Commerce Clause reaches, in the main, three categories of problems. First, the use of channels of interstate or foreign commerce which Congress deems are being misused Second, protection of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce Third, those activities affecting commerce."

We are concerned with the third element of interstate-commerce jurisdiction stated in Perez.

The time immediately before the enactment of the Sherman Antitrust Act in 1890 and the Alabama antitrust laws in 1891 was a period of high prices and reduced output.⁸ According to Robert Lande, Congress's primary concern in 1890 was the abundance of wealth transfers away from consumers to the monopolist.⁹ Senator Sherman and Senator John T. Morgan of Alabama described the abuse by trusts in 1890 as a predatory practice by the cottonseed-oil trust against competitors that injured customers by monopolistic price increases.¹⁰ The Sherman Antitrust Act was passed on July 2, 1890, as a response to the unfair competitive practices against independent businesses that were occurring in the oil and railroad industries. [72] In Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky v. Tennessee, 217 U.S. 413, 54 L. Ed. 817, 30 S. Ct. 543 (1910), a Kentucky corporation attempted to raise oil prices in Tennessee by persuading local merchants to cancel orders with that corporation's competitor located in Pennsylvania. The Kentucky corporation was convicted of violating the Tennessee antitrust act. On appeal to the United States Supreme Court, the defendant contended:

"As the only illegal purpose that can be attributed to this agreement is that of protecting the defendant's oil against interstate competition, it could not be made the subject of punishment by the state; ... the offense, if any, is against interstate commerce alone."

217 U.S. at 421.

Justice Holmes responded [73] by stating:

"The mere fact that it [the Tennessee Act] may happen to remove an interference with commerce among the States as well with the rest does not invalidate it. It hardly would be an answer to an indictment for forgery that the instrument forged was a foreign bill of lading, or for assault and battery that the person assaulted was engaged in peddling [*341] goods from another State. How far Congress could deal with such cases we need not consider, but certainly there is nothing in the present state of the law at least that excludes the States from a familiar exercise of their power."

Id. at 422.

The Alabama legislature responded to the discontent and resentment of monopolistic practices in Alabama by enacting Alabama's first criminal antitrust law in 1891, Act No. 202, 1890-91 Ala. Acts 438 (presently codified at § 8-10-1, in substantial form), only one year after the passage of the Sherman Act. Act No. 202 provided:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any person, corporation or association of persons who shall, within this state, engage or agree with other persons, corporations or association of persons, [74] or enter into, either directly [sic], any combination, pool, trust or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this state for speculation; and any person, corporation or association of persons who shall enter into, become a member of a party to, any pool, agreement, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article or commodity to be produced or manufactured, mined or sold in this state, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to indictment and punishment as herein provided.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any corporation chartered under the laws of Alabama, or for any officer, stockholder, agent or employee of such corporation to enter into any combination with other persons or corporations, the purpose and effect of which are to place the management or control thereof in the hands of others, with the purpose or intent to limit or fix the price, or lessen the production or sale of any article of commerce, use or consumption, or to restrict or diminish the manufacture of such article.

⁸ A. Marshall, Principles of Economics, 493-94, 820 (8th ed. 1938).

⁹ Lande, Wealth Transfers as the Original and Primary Concern of Antitrust: The Efficiency Interpretation Challenged, 34 Hastings L.J. 67, 150 (1982).

¹⁰ 21 Cong. Rec. 1768, 2609-10 (1890).

"Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That any person or corporation [75] violating the provisions of section one or two of this act, within the State of Alabama, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred dollars, nor more than two thousand dollars, at the discretion of the jury trying the same"

(Emphasis added.)

Act No. 202 was codified in the 1896 Code, at Chapter 196, Article 5, § 5557, § 5558, and § 5559.¹¹ I note that in the 1896 codification of Act No. 202, the phrase "within this state" was omitted from § 5557. However, Act. No. 202, a criminal statute prohibiting pools, trusts, etc., was applicable only to criminal activity occurring in Alabama, because of the phrase "within this state." When this phrase was omitted in the 1896 codification of Act No. 202, the applicability of the statute only to criminal activity occurring within Alabama was not eliminated. Because Act No. 202 and its successor statutes are criminal in nature, they apply only to prohibited criminal activity in Alabama, regardless of whether the language of the statute provides for that result. Therefore, the omission of the phrase "within this state" is immaterial, because this criminal statute could not have regulated criminal activity occurring [76] "outside Alabama."

The Alabama legislature, in the 1907 Code, Chapter 48, Article 6, § 2487 and [*342] § 2488,¹² provided for a civil cause of action for injuries occurring from damage caused by an antitrust violation. Sections 2487 and 2488 provided:

[77]

"2487. Actions against trusts, combines, or monopolies.-- Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of five hundred dollars and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly; and may maintain the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. And all such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment or decree against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, judgment, or decree in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"2488. County in which action brought. -- Actions under the preceding section may be brought in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed, or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed; or in any county in which either of the defendants may have [78] a domicile, or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

On its face, § 6-5-60 does not indicate whether the statute applies to activities affecting both "intrastate" and "interstate" commerce. Unlike Act No. 202, the language in § 6-5-60 and its predecessors, §§ 2487 and 2488, are broadly written and give no indication whether the Alabama legislature intended for § 6-5-60 to apply to transactions occurring within Alabama but touching interstate commerce.

¹¹ Sections 5557, 5558, and 5559 of the 1896 Code were adopted in primarily the same form in the 1907 Code, Chapter 273, as § 7579, § 7580, and § 7582. The legislature added § 7581 of the 1907 Code entitled "Monopolies, penalty for." Sections 7579, 7580, 7581, and 7582 were readopted in the 1923 Code as § 5212, § 5213, § 5214, and § 5215. Sections 5212, 5213, and 5214 were readopted in the 1940 Code as Title 57, § 106, § 107, and § 108. Sections 106, 107, and 108 were readopted in the 1975 Code as § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3.

¹² Sections 2487 and 2488 were adopted in primarily the same form in the 1923 Code, as § 5697 and § 5698. Sections 5697 and 5698 were readopted in the 1940 Code as Title 7, § 124 and § 125. Sections 124 and 125 were readopted in the 1975 Code as § 6-5-60 (a) and (b) respectively.

During the period following the enactment of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the United States Supreme Court described that Act as one aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade. The Supreme Court declared any attempt by the states to regulate interstate commerce a burden on commerce and, therefore, unconstitutional. The United States Supreme Court "narrowly" defined interstate commerce as being within the exclusive realm of federal regulatory control.¹³ The regulation of interstate commerce was deemed to be beyond the scope of state antitrust laws. See United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 11, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249 \(1895\); [Hadley Dean Plate Glass \[79\] Co. v. Highland Glass Co., 143 F. 242, 244 \(8th Cir. 1906\)](#); see also Brennan v. City of Titusville, 153 U.S. 289, 38 L. Ed. 719, 14 S. Ct. 829 \(1894\) (license tax imposed upon the defendant was a direct burden on interstate commerce and was beyond the power of the state); Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 228, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 \(1899\) ("The power to regulate interstate commerce is ... full and complete in Congress"). However, I note that the United States Supreme Court has recognized that the Commerce Clause allows state regulation of activities that happen to affect interstate commerce, but which Congress has not regulated. See California v. Thompson, 313 U.S. 109, 113, 85 L. Ed. 1219, 61 S. Ct. 930 \(1941\) ("it has been recognized that there are matters of local concern, the regulation of which unavoidably involves some regulation of interstate commerce, but which because of their local character and their number and diversity [*343] may never be adequately dealt with by Congress").

[80] Because of the United States Supreme Court's narrow conception of interstate commerce during the time that the Sherman Act was enacted, our cases during that period, constrained by the Supremacy Clause, reflect those views. This Court viewed the federal Constitution as placing a barrier on the breadth of our antitrust laws, recognizing the then absolute power of Congress to exclusively regulate interstate commerce. Therefore, the Court did not have the need to interpret the "scope" of our antitrust laws. Instead, we accepted the status of federal constitutional law at that time and acknowledged its impact upon our state antitrust laws. See Dothan Oil Mill Co. v. Espy, 220 Ala. 605, 127 So. 178 \(1930\) (Alabamians' purchase of cottonseed from Alabama manufacturers to be used in Alabama did not constitute interstate commerce, even if some of the manufactured products eventually made their way into interstate commerce); Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542, 546 \(1913\).

In Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, supra, the Georgia Fruit Exchange sued D.C. Turnipseed for breach of contract. In pertinent part, the contract stated:

"Penrode, [81] Ala., March 10, 1909. In consideration of the benefits I expect to receive in common with all other fruit growers in Georgia by the organization of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, I hereby subscribe for membership and stock therein, and I hereby pledge to the Georgia Fruit Exchange, as follows: First, I agree to make all car load shipments of peaches grown by me during 1909, through the Georgia Fruit Exchange and pay 10 percent. of gross sales to cover all commission charges, remittance to be made by commission house direct to shipper, and the shipper reserving the right to designate by April 1 of each year the commission house in each market to which his consignments have been allotted. On orchard and other sales f.o.b. my station in consideration of a protected market and consequent enhanced price, I agree to pay the exchange 5 per cent. of such gross sales, and I further agree to abide by all the rules and regulations of the board of trustees of said exchange. Second, I hereby subscribe for and I agree to pay for on a basis of 10 per cent. Nov. 1, 1908, and 10 per cent. monthly thereafter on shares at $ 10 each of the stock of the Georgia Fruit Exchange aggregating $ 10. This agreement [82] is not binding until $ 50,000 of stock is subscribed, and pledges secured covering 60 per cent of the prospective crop for 1909, based on 1908 shipments. D.C. Turnipseed."

See 9 Ala. App. at 125, 62 So. at 543.

The trial court entered a judgment for Turnipseed, and Georgia Fruit Exchange appealed. The Alabama Court of Appeals held that the contract at issue was void as being against public policy, because the contract's object was to prevent free and fair competition in trade. 9 Ala. App. at 143, 62 So. at 549. In its opinion, the court acknowledged the then bright-line distinction between state and federal antitrust laws.¹⁴ The court stated:

¹³ "The Congress shall have Power ... to regulate Commerce ... among the several states...." U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

"There being thus both a state and [a] national law prohibiting unlawful combinations in restraint of trade -- the one law relating to intrastate, the other to interstate, commerce -- it is immaterial as [83] to which character of commerce, whether only one or both, is involved in the contract here under consideration"

Georgia Fruit Exchange, 9 Ala. App. at 132-33, 62 So. at 546.

However, the court refused to determine the scope of Alabama antitrust laws:

*"It is not necessary to the invalidity of the contract here and to the disposition [344] of the present case to decide whether the contract is in violation of the state statute or of the federal statute, or any statute at all. We are not dealing with a criminal prosecution, and need not therefore concern ourselves with the question as to whether the commerce involved in the contract is inter or intra state, or both, or whether the terms of either statute have been violated. It is sufficient, as before seen, to destroy it and all obligations created by it, if it violates the public policy of the state or nation, as declared in judicial decisions predicated upon the principles of the common law obtaining here. It does contravene such public policy if it unreasonably restrains trade, because in such event it tends to create a monopoly, which is odious to our law and detrimental to public good, which requires freedom of [84] trade and competition -- 'the life of a people's prosperity.'"

9 Ala. App. at 142, 62 So. at 549 (emphasis added) (citation omitted).

We have interpreted our state antitrust laws and have decided our antitrust cases in accordance with the state of federal constitutional law existing at the time our antitrust laws were enacted. However, those cases are now of little precedential value because they were premised on strict adherence to the United States Supreme Court's mechanical intrastate-interstate view of the Commerce Clause. Although state antitrust law and federal antitrust law were seen as occupying separate fields during the period around 1890, it was not long before these two fields were almost concurrent. See Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 87 L. Ed. 122, 63 S. Ct. 82 \(1942\) (holding that although a small amount of wheat grown by a farmer was essentially consumed on his farm and some was sold locally, a marketing quota to control the price of wheat could be legitimately applied to the farmer); and Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 13 L. Ed. 2d 290, 85 S. Ct. 377 \(1964\) (upholding the application of Title II of the Civil Rights Act to Ollie's barbecue restaurant [85] in Birmingham, stating that the family-owned restaurant's purchase of $ 70,000 worth of meat that had originated out-of-state brought the restaurant under the Act and supported a constitutional exercise of Congress's commerce power over that purchase). The usefulness of the solely-intrastate-or-soley-interstate classification in 1890 has now been lost. It is almost inconceivable today for the sale of goods to be viewed solely as intrastate, because interstate commerce is affected if there is any arguable connection between a regulation and commerce that touches more than one state; this fact results in an overlap between state antitrust law and federal antitrust law. The fact that the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution has historically dominated the field of regulating interstate commerce does not now prevent the application of state antitrust laws to activities affecting interstate commerce, given the recent broadening of the concept of interstate commerce. Another state court has wisely observed:

"Monopolies and restraints of trade are of infinite form and variety. ... Some expend their efforts almost wholly upon intrastate commerce and are of only local interest [86] and some almost wholly upon interstate commerce and so become matters of national concern, and there are all gradations between. In many cases it would be very difficult to draw the line. If State laws have no force as soon as interstate commerce begins to be affected, a very large area will be fenced off in which the States will be practically helpless to protect their citizens without, so far as we can perceive, any corresponding contribution to the national welfare. ... Especially is this true in view of the immense broadening in the conception of interstate commerce in recent years."

¹⁴ The court did not address the issue whether state or federal antitrust laws were applicable in that case, because the contract was held to be void.

Commonwealth v. McHugh, 326 Mass. 249, 265, 93 N.E.2d 751, 762 \(1950\).

[*345] Because of the very nature of commerce and the expanding scope of transactions that affect interstate commerce, it stands to reason that the legislature intended for § 6-5-60 to apply to conduct occurring within Alabama but touching interstate commerce. Finding state preclusion whenever interstate commerce is involved would effectively destroy our state antitrust enforcement. Since the demise of the mechanical "dual-sovereignty" theory and the development of expansive federal power over activities merely "affecting" interstate [*87] commerce (see, e.g., Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 \(1948\); United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc. 324 U.S. 293, 298, 89 L. Ed. 951, 65 S. Ct. 661 \(1943\) ["Congress, in passing the Sherman Act, left no area of its constitutional power unoccupied"]), the regulatory power of the national government has become so broad that, if it was fully exercised, virtually all intrastate activity might be regulated, to the complete exclusion of state authority. See, e.g., Perez v. United States 402 U.S. 146, 28 L. Ed. 2d 686, 91 S. Ct. 1357 \(1971\) (loan-sharking); Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States 379 U.S. 241, 13 L. Ed. 2d 258, 85 S. Ct. 348 \(1964\) (public accommodations). Therefore, if our state antitrust laws are deemed inapplicable to conduct occurring within Alabama but having interstate characteristics, our antitrust laws would become irrelevant, given that courts now recognize that most activities, however localized, have some effect, however remote, on interstate commerce.

The United States Supreme Court has consistently held that the Commerce Clause "does not exclude all state [*88] power of regulation" and that "there is a residuum of power in the state to make laws governing matters of local concern which nevertheless ... affect interstate commerce or even ... regulate it." Southern Pacific Co. v. Arizona, 325 U.S. 761, 766-67, 89 L. Ed. 1915, 65 S. Ct. 1515 \(1945\); see St. Joe Paper Co. v. Superior Court, 120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 175 Cal. Rptr. 94 \(1981\), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 982, 102 S. Ct. 1489, 71 L. Ed. 2d 691 (1982).

The United States Supreme Court has also shown a long-time willingness to defer to state regulation. See Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U.S. 86, 53 L. Ed. 417, 29 S. Ct. 220 \(1909\); Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky v. Tennessee, 217 U.S. 413, 54 L. Ed. 817, 30 S. Ct. 543 \(1910\); Straus v. American Publishers' Ass'n, 231 U.S. 222, 58 L. Ed. 192, 34 S. Ct. 84 \(1913\). Therefore, Alabama is not precluded from exercising jurisdiction to enforce its own antitrust law unless its doing so places an undue burden on interstate commerce. See Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland, 437 U.S. 117, 57 L. Ed. 2d 91, 98 S. Ct. 2207 \(1978\) (state not without power to regulate retail sale or distribution of gasoline).

Congress has also left unregulated the right of indirect [*89] purchasers to sue for damages under the Sherman Act. In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\), the Supreme Court barred indirect purchasers from bringing certain kinds of antitrust actions for damages under federal law, thereby leaving indirect purchasers seeking antitrust damages to sue under state law. However, like state antitrust statutes in many other states, Alabama's antitrust statute, § 6-5-60\(a\), expressly allows indirect purchasers to sue for antitrust damages. Because the United States Supreme Court expressly held in Illinois Brick that indirect purchasers lack standing to sue in federal courts under the Sherman Act, it is permissible for Alabama's antitrust laws to regulate activities that affect "interstate" commerce. Id.

Reflecting the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of the federal Constitution as allowing states to reach interstate commerce under their antitrust statutes and addressing the standing of indirect purchasers to sue under Alabama's antitrust laws, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed the district court's judgment entered [*346] in In re Brand Name Prescription [*90] [Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14529, \[Ms. 94 C 897, Oct. 2, 1996\]](#) (N.D. Ill. 1996) (not reported in F. Supp.). See In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599 \(7th Cir. 1997\). In that case, retail pharmacists filed an antitrust lawsuit against drug manufacturers and wholesalers of prescription drugs, challenging a price-fixing conspiracy. The drug manufacturers gave discounts only to favored customers, such as hospitals, HMOs, nursing homes, and mail-order companies. The manufacturer and a favored customer would enter a contract establishing a discounted price at which the customer would purchase prescription drugs from the wholesaler. After the customer purchased from the wholesaler at that price, the manufacturer reimbursed the wholesaler the difference between the regular wholesale price and the discounted price. The manufacturers argued that only the direct purchasers (wholesalers and others who purchased drugs directly from the manufacturers) could sue under the Sherman Act for overcharges, and not indirect purchasers (pharmacists who had purchased drugs from the wholesalers). The trial court entered a summary judgment for one of the manufacturers and [91] denied the other manufacturers' summary-judgment motions. The Seventh Circuit reversed, holding, among other things, that the indirect-purchaser rule barred pharmacists' actions against manufacturers. In its discussion of an indirect purchaser's standing now to sue for damages under Alabama antitrust law, the court stated:

"If the [state] statute is limited today as it once was to commerce that is not within the regulatory power of Congress under the commerce clause, it is a dead letter because there are virtually no sales, in Alabama or anywhere else in the United States, that are intrastate in that sense. United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549, 558, 115 S. Ct. 1624, 1630, 131 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1995); Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 63 S. Ct. 82, 87 L. Ed. 122 (1942); United States v. Hicks, 106 F.3d 187, 189-90 (7th Cir. 1997). Other states read their antitrust statutes to reach what it now understood to be interstate commerce. ... The reading is constitutionally permissible, Clay v. Sun Ins. Office, Ltd., 377 U.S. 179, 84 S. Ct. 1197, 12 L. Ed. 2d 229 (1964), and we are given no reason to suppose that Alabama would buck this trend and by doing so kill its statute."

[92] In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d at 613 (emphasis omitted).

Given the exclusive regulatory power over interstate commerce that Congress had under the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Commerce Clause at the time Alabama's antitrust statutes were enacted, which interpretation presumptively was known by the legislature, Alabama legislators, given the choice between a restrictive statute or a broad statute, chose to construct what is now § 6-5-60 with broad language. It is reasonable to assume that the legislature chose a broadly worded statute with the intent to afford maximum protection to the citizens of Alabama. It would be incongruous to interpret our state statute in a manner that would not provide maximum protection from unfair competitive practices, when the legislative history of the Sherman Antitrust Act evinces an intent to "supplement" state antitrust enforcement. Thus, continuing to interpret Alabama antitrust laws as applying only to purely intrastate commerce and as not applying to commerce with any hint of an interstate nature, is inconsistent with providing Alabamians maximum protection from unfair competition.

I do not think [93] that to interpret our antitrust statute so as to provide Alabamians with maximum protection from unfair competition, as we are permitted to interpret it under the United States Constitution, is to treat the statute as an accordion. The language of § 6-5-60 has not [*347] changed. However, we can now correctly read that section, in light of the reasoning in Brand Name Prescription Drugs, supra, to permit this claim by indirect purchasers; to do so, I think, would be to recognize that section's constitutionally permissible scope. It is Federal law, not Alabama state law, that is changing. My view of the scope of Alabama's antitrust statute is, therefore, not expansive; it would continue to apply our state law to conduct occurring within Alabama.

I believe the trial court correctly ruled that § 6-5-60 provides a cause of action for damages alleged to have resulted from a conspiracy to control the price of brand-name prescription drugs shipped by out-of-state companies into Alabama. The conspiracy alleged in this case was directed toward an "intrastate" market and actually occurred within Alabama.

I therefore dissent.

JOHNSTONE, Justice (dissenting).

I respectfully dissent from the [94] reversal of the trial judge's order for two reasons. First, the trial judge's denial of the defendants' motions for judgment on the pleadings does not conflict with the express holding by the majority. Second, the holding, to the extent that it be construed to require reversing the trial judge, is based on a misinterpretation of the federal constitutional law existing in 1907 when the statute invoked by the plaintiffs originated.

The majority holds, in pertinent part,

"that [§ 6-5-60 \[Ala. Code 1975\]](#) does not provide a cause of action for damages allegedly resulting from an agreement to control the price of goods shipped in interstate commerce" and that "these [Alabama] statutes regulate monopolistic activities that occur 'within this state' -- within the geographic boundaries of this state -- even if such activities fall within the scope of the Commerce Clause of the Constitution of the United States."

The plaintiffs' pleadings, which must be deemed true for the purpose of deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings, expressly allege, in pertinent part, that the defendants violated § 6-5-60, Ala. Code 1975,

"by sending their agents and employees ... [\[95\]](#) into Alabama to make presentations to physicians, hospital administrators, HMO officers and administrators and others in the health-care field, and by marketing and selling their pharmaceutical products in this state either directly or through some or all of the defendant wholesalers, which pharmaceutical products ultimately were purchased by the named plaintiffs and members of the class at artificially high prices as a result of the price-fixing and unfair competition conspiracy" (C. 192.) (Emphasis added.)

These pleadings expressly allege "monopolistic activities that [have] occurred 'within this state'" (the language of the majority holding, So. 2d at) and thus which are, according to the express majority holding, regulated by § 6-5-60. Therefore, the pleadings, even as judged by the express language of the majority holding, state a claim upon which relief can be granted; and this Court should not reverse the trial judge's recognition of this claim in his denial of the defendants' motions.

To the extent that the majority deems its holding to mean that § 6-5-60 does not regulate the conduct alleged by the plaintiffs, the majority proceeds from the mistaken [\[96\]](#) premise that, in 1907, when § 6-5-60 originated, federal constitutional law prohibited states from regulating combinations in restraint of trade in interstate commerce. From this mistaken premise, the majority concludes that the Alabama legislature, in adopting its statute, must not have intended to regulate such conduct, but must have intended to exempt it, notwithstanding the utter absence of any language excluding the conduct and notwithstanding the all-encompassing language of the statute.

[*348] The United States Supreme Court case of Standard Oil of Kentucky v. Tennessee, 217 U.S. 413, 54 L. Ed. 817, 30 S. Ct. 543 \(1910\), however, declares the pertinent federal constitutional jurisprudence as it existed in 1907. There, Justice Holmes himself writes, "certainly there is nothing in the present state of the law, at least, that excludes the states from a familiar exercise of their power." 217 U.S. at 422 (emphasis added).

Standard Oil of Kentucky is controlling precedent for the case at issue on the power of states to regulate combinations in restraint of trade in interstate commerce notwithstanding the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution. Tennessee adopted [\[97\]](#) its statute in 1903, four years before Alabama adopted its, and well after Congress adopted the Sherman Antitrust Act. The State of Tennessee sued to disenfranchise Standard Oil of Kentucky for entering "into an arrangement for the purpose and with the effect of lessening competition in the sale of oil at Gallatin, Tennessee, and with the further result of advancing the price of oil there." 217 U.S. at 419. The operative facts are that Standard Oil of Kentucky had induced "merchants in Gallatin to revoke orders on a rival company for oil to be shipped from Pennsylvania, by an agreement to give them 300 gallons of oil." 217 U.S. at 421. The pertinent defense advanced by Standard Oil of Kentucky was "that, although construed by the [trial] court to apply to domestic business only, nevertheless [the statute] is held to warrant turning the defendant out of the State for an interference with interstate trade." 217 U.S. at 421 (emphasis added), and that the statute is, therefore, "an unconstitutional interference with commerce among the States," 217 U.S. at 419. The trial court, affirmed by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, rejected this defense and forbade Standard Oil of Kentucky [\[98\]](#) to do business "other than interstate commerce" in Tennessee. Standard Oil of Kentucky appealed to the United States Supreme Court, which affirmed. Justice Holmes reasons:

"The mere fact that it may happen to remove an interference with commerce among the States as well with the rest does not invalidate it. It hardly would be an answer to an indictment for forgery that the instrument forged was a foreign bill of lading, or for assault and battery that the person assaulted was engaged in peddling goods from another State. How far Congress could deal with such cases we need not consider, but certainly there is nothing in the present state of the law at least that excludes the States from a familiar exercise of their power." 217 U.S. at 422.

This case, Standard Oil of Kentucky, is controlling because the interstate features of the commerce are as strong as, and the intrastate features are no stronger than, those respective categories of features in the case at issue. Standard Oil of Kentucky distinguishes the intrastate aspects of interstate commerce and allows the states to regulate those intrastate aspects. Importantly, one of the intrastate aspects [99] the Supreme Court allows Tennessee to regulate is the "domestic business," the sales within Tennessee, by the oil company, even though most or all of the oil to be sold (or not sold) would necessarily have travelled in interstate commerce into Tennessee.

On the one hand, some treatises and some passages in some cases say or imply that the regulatory authority of the states over combinations in restraint of trade is confined to intrastate commerce. On the other hand, the actual rulings applicable to the parties in the cases decided by the Alabama state appellate courts, the United States Supreme Court, and the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals with jurisdiction over Alabama cases have always allowed the states to regulate the intrastate aspects of combinations in restraint of trade in interstate commerce as "interstate [*349] commerce" is now defined. See, e.g., Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542 \(1913\); Dothan Oil Mill v. Espy, 220 Ala. 605, 127 So. 178 \(1930\); Standard Oil of Kentucky, supra; California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 \(1989\); In re Brand Name Prescription [100] Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599 \(7th Cir. 1997\) (reversing a United States District Court decision from Alabama, consolidated with a similar case in the Northern District of Illinois under the federal multi-district litigation rules).

The majority does not cite a single Alabama state appellate court decision, United States Supreme Court decision, or United States Circuit Court of Appeals decision which invalidates a complaint, claim, or defense of a party to the case grounded on a state law regulating combinations in restraint of trade. None of these courts has invoked the Commerce Clause to invalidate such a complaint, claim, or defense by a party before the court.

The expansion of the inclusiveness of the term interstate commerce over the decades has in no way diminished the power of the states to regulate combinations in restraint of trade. The states can regulate such conduct as that alleged by the plaintiffs in the case at issue now just as the states could in 1907, when § 6-5-60 originated. In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs and California v. ARC, supra.

An analysis of the Alabama state appellate court decisions cited by the defendants and the [101] majority is instructive as much for what the decisions do not hold as for what they do hold. They will be discussed in chronological order.

Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542 \(1913\), decided six years after the origination of § 6-5-60, held that Alabama courts would condemn a contract effectuating a combination in restraint of trade regardless of whether the trade be intrastate or interstate.

"It is not necessary to the invalidity of the contract here and to the disposition of the present case to decide whether the contract is in violation of the state statute or of the federal statute, or any statute at all. We are not dealing with a criminal prosecution, and need not therefore concern ourselves with the question as to whether the commerce involved in the contract is inter or intra state, or both, or whether the terms of either statute have been violated. It is sufficient, as before seen, to destroy it and all obligations created by it, if it violates the public policy of the state or nation, as declared in judicial decisions predicated upon the principles of the common law obtaining here. It does contravene such public policy if it unreasonably [*102] restrains trade, because in such event it tends to create a monopoly, which is odious to our law and detrimental to public good, which requires freedom of trade and competition --'the life of a people's prosperity.'-- Bir. & Pratt [Mines St.] Ry. Co. v. Bir. St. Ry. Co., 79 Ala. [465, 475 (1885)]." 9 Ala. App. at 142, 62 So. at 549.

This decision is significant for several reasons. First, the trade under scrutiny certainly would be called "interstate" commerce these days. The contract on which the plaintiff sued, and to which the defendant successfully objected, was part of a combination which gave the plaintiff brokerage control over at least 60 percent of the peach crop in the southeast. Second, Georgia Fruit Exchange opines that not only federal and state statutory law but also common law existing contemporaneously with the origination of § 6-5-60 (which the opinion does not address specifically) all forbade combinations in restraint of trade. And, third, the opinion states that the statutory law both federal and state could apply to this multi-state combination. 9 Ala. App. at 130-33, 62 So. at 545-46.

The chief holding of Dothan Oil Mill Co. [103] v. Espy, 220 Ala. 605, 127 So. 178 (1930), is [*350] that Alabama residents may sue other Alabama residents for combining in restraint of trade in cotton seed even though the products to be manufactured by one or more parties to the trade "may eventually find their way into and become commodities of interstate commerce." 220 Ala. at 610, 127 So. at 182.

"Taking as true the averments of the bill, as must be done on demurrer, and interpreting the alleged resolutions made Exhibit A to the bill in the light of the facts averred, however inoffensive they may appear on their face, we have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the defendants have entered into a combine, pool trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of cotton seed in this state, and are attempting to destroy competition in the sale thereof in violation of the state anti-trust laws. Code 1923, §§ 5212-5214; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Knox et als., 202 Ala. 694, 81 So. 656; Arnold v. Jones Cotton Co., 152 Ala. 501, 44 So. 662, 12 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 150; Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542." 220 Ala. at 610, 127 So. at 183.

The secondary holding of [104] Dothan Oil Mill is that the complainants were not suing under the "Sherman and Clayton Acts (15 USCA §§ 1-7, 15, and sections 12-27, 44) which confer on the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction to enforce said acts." 220 Ala. at 610, 127 So. at 182.

Dothan Oil Mill also exemplifies the limited scope of the term interstate commerce in the older cases as follows:

"The fact, of itself, that an article when in the process of manufacture is intended for export to another state does not render it an article of interstate commerce." 220 Ala. at 610, 127 So. at 182.

Of course, all commerce that was not "interstate" (or international) would necessarily have been "intrastate." Thus, to the extent that the definition of "interstate commerce" was narrow, the definition of "intrastate commerce" was concomitantly broad. Therefore, language in the older cases confining state regulatory power over combinations in restraint of trade to "intrastate commerce" does not confine that power to the limited sphere of trade that would fit inside today's extremely restricted definition of "intrastate commerce" and does not prohibit the states from regulating [105] the intrastate aspects of combinations in restraint of trade in what is "interstate commerce" by today's more inclusive definition. Indeed, as revealed, Dothan Oil Mill allows the suit for violations of Alabama antitrust statutes committed in the Alabama-based aspects of what would now be regarded as interstate commerce.

Ex parte Rice, 259 Ala. 570, 67 So. 2d 825 \(1953\), holds that, for a pleading to invoke the Sherman and Clayton acts in the Alabama state courts, the pleading must allege that the matter in controversy (a filling station in this case) is directly (and not merely incidentally) influential in effecting a monopoly, 259 Ala. at 573, 67 So. 2d at 828, and must allege that the lessening of competition is substantial, 259 Ala. at 574, 67 So. 2d at 828. The Rice court concluded on this topic only that the allegations of the particular pleading there at issue (an answer) did not meet those requirements of the Sherman and Clayton Acts and therefore did not effectively invoke those Acts. 259 Ala. at 575, 67 So. 2d at 829. The chief holding of Rice follows that, because the pleadings invoked only Alabama state law, Alabama discovery privileges [106] applied so as to defeat the discovery sought by the petitioner. 259 Ala. at 575-76, 67 So. 2d at 829.

Rice does not in any way whatsoever hold that Alabama state law cannot prohibit and redress combinations in restraint of trade in interstate commerce. On the contrary, notwithstanding the interstate nature of the commerce in the case, Rice specifically holds that state law controlled. 259 Ala. at 575, 67 So. 2d at 829.

San Ann Tobacco Co. v. Hamm, 283 Ala. 397, 217 So. 2d 803 (1968), does not [*351] address, tangentially or otherwise, § 6-5-60 or any dispute about the Commerce Clause. While the Court referred to the Alabama Unfair Cigarette Sales Act, Tit. 57, § 83(3), Ala. Code 1940, as "an exercise of the police power of the state over intrastate commerce," 283 Ala. at 400, 217 So. 2d at 805 (emphasis added), the commerce at issue was the sale of nationally manufactured and distributed cigarettes in Jefferson County, which would be called "interstate commerce" by today's definition. San Ann held only that the act could not be amended to forbid price cutting absent intent to "destroy or substantially lessen competition." 283 Ala. at 401, 217 So. 2d at 805. [107] The San Ann court left intact the original act, which forbade price cutting with the intent to destroy or substantially to lessen competition, notwithstanding the national character of the source of the cigarettes.

The case which epitomizes the extremely narrow scope of the old-timey definition of "interstate commerce" and the concomitantly broad scope of the old-timey definition of intrastate commerce, and which virtually eliminates any likelihood that Alabama legislators would have thought the Sherman Act preempted the power of the states to regulate combinations in restraint of trade in 1907, is United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249 \(1895\). There the United States Supreme Court held that a monopoly over 98% of the manufacture of sugar in the United States "bore no direct relation to commerce between the States or with foreign nations," 156 U.S. at 17, and thus did not warrant a suit under the Sherman Act.

The Sherman Act was essentially the same in 1907, when § 6-5-60 originated, as it is now. The Commerce Clause and the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution were exactly the same then as now. Barring some judicial [108] philosophy that the courts have the power to change the constitution, a philosophy which I reject, the Commerce Clause no more restricted the power of the states to regulate combinations in restraint of trade then than it does now. In 1907 the Alabama legislators' oath of office obliged them to support and to defend the same Commerce Clause and Supremacy Clause, not to support and to defend misleading or mistaken language, or passages in distinguishable contexts, in judicial decisions.

In 1907 combinations in restraint of trade were as odious as trafficking in cocaine is now. Virtually all cocaine trade is interstate and international, well within the ambit of the Commerce Clause. The mood and law in 1907 no more limited Alabama legislators' intent to regulate all combinations in restraint of trade affecting Alabamians than the mood and law of the present limit the current intent of Alabama legislators to eliminate cocaine traffic, intrastate, interstate, or international.

The plain and unambiguous language of § 6-5-60 reaches the Alabama aspects of combinations in restraint of trade in interstate commerce. This Court has no valid ground to question the intent or to engraft an exception.

[109] Thus, the majority opinion reversing the trial court should be withdrawn, and the trial court should be affirmed, first because the plaintiffs' complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted even under the holding written by the majority and, second, because in 1907 Alabama could, and the plain and unambiguous language of § 6-5-60 does, regulate combinations in restraint of trade in interstate commerce resulting in damage from sales and purchases in Alabama.

Archer Daniels Midland Co. v. Seven Up Bottling Co.

Supreme Court of Alabama

June 25, 1999, Released

1960220

Reporter

746 So. 2d 966 *; 1999 Ala. LEXIS 201 ; 1999-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,560

Archer Daniels Midland Company et al. v. Seven Up Bottling Company of Jasper, Inc.

Subsequent History: [1] Application for Rehearing Denied October 22, 1999. Released for Publication January 21, 2000. As Corrected April 7, 2000.

Prior History: Appeal from Walker Circuit Court. (CV-95-436.80). John L. Madison, Jr., TRIAL JUDGE.

Disposition: REVERSED AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

combine, monopoly, interstate commerce, commodity, commerce, recusal, law firm, manufacture, pool, transactions, fined, national bank, Antitrust, price fixing, out-of-state, antitrust statute, confederation, enters, intrastate commerce, five hundred, taxation, changes, excise tax, Sherman Act, destroy, thousand dollars, regulation, products, trusts, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN1 Legislation, Interpretation

If possible, legislative intent should be gathered from the language of the statute itself.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN2 Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

A state antitrust act can have no extraterritorial operation; consequently, the courts in construing a state antitrust statute will generally apply it to trusts and combinations formed or operated within the state, even though its terms are broad enough to include combinations formed with parties residing outside the state.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN3 Legislation, Interpretation

When circumstances surrounding the enactment of a statute cast doubt on the otherwise clear language of the statute, a court must look to other factors in determining legislative intent.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4 Legislation, Interpretation

A statute will be interpreted on the assumption that the legislature was aware of existing statutes at the time new statutes are enacted.

Banking Law > Bank Activities > State Tax

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Bank Activities, State Tax

The rejection of an amendment by the legislature which would have made a statute applicable to a given situation furnishes a strong inference that the statute was not intended to be applicable to that given situation.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

A court's role is not to displace the legislature by amending statutes to make them express what the court thinks the legislature should have done. Nor is it the court's role to assume the legislative prerogative to correct defective legislation or amend statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, State Regulation

Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of $ 500 and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly and may commence the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. All such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, or judgment in favor of one or more of the defendants. Ala. Code § 6-5-60\(a\) \(1975\).

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN8 [down] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Actions under Ala. Code § 6-5-60 may be commenced in any county where a trust, combine, or monopoly was formed or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed, or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found. Ala. Code § 6-5-60\(b\) \(1975\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN9 [down] Contracts, Sales of Goods

Ala. Code § 6-5-60 \(1975\) is not, on its face, limited to transactions involving intrastate commerce. However, there is no language in Ala. Code § 6-5-60 \(1975\) that conclusively indicates an intent on the legislature's part to regulate transactions involving the shipment of goods through interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN10 [down] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

The dual sovereignty theory postulates distinct and mutually exclusive zones of jurisdiction for the states, which exercise jurisdiction only over purely intrastate matters, and the federal government, which exercises jurisdiction only over goods and services in interstate commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN11 [down] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

A state has legislative control, exclusive of Congress, within its territory, of all persons, things, and transactions of strictly internal concern. It cannot, without the consent of Congress, expressed or implied, regulate commerce between its people and those of the other states of the union in order to effect its end, however desirable such a regulation might be.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN12 [down] Interstate Commerce, State Powers

Nothing which is a direct burden upon interstate commerce can be imposed by a state without the assent of Congress.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Governments > Police Powers

HN13 [blue icon] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

That which belongs to commerce between the states is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the state.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

Each state has complete jurisdiction over the commerce which is wholly within its own borders, while the jurisdiction of Congress, under the provisions of the Constitution, over interstate commerce is paramount, and includes therein jurisdiction over contracts in restraint of such commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN15 [blue icon] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

Congress has no control over intrastate commerce.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Interstate Commerce, State Powers

No state may in any way enact legislation which in any wise controls, regulates, or infringes on interstate commerce.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

A plaintiff's complaint states a state-law antitrust claim where the alleged illegal conduct involves only commercial transactions wholly confined to that state.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

It is clear that Ala. Code § 6-5-60 \(1975\) applies only to intrastate activity.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN19 [blue icon] Interstate Commerce, State Powers

The Alabama state courts have deemed the Alabama antitrust statutes to regulate only intrastate commerce.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN20 [blue icon] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

The Alabama statutes found in Ala. Code §§ 6-5-60, 8-10-1, -3 regulate only intrastate commerce.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN21 [blue icon] Legislation, Interpretation

Related statutes should, when possible, be construed in pari materia.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN22 [blue icon] Legislation, Interpretation

It is permissible in ascertaining the purpose and intent of a statute to look to the history of the times, the existing order of things, the state of the law when the instrument was adopted, and the conditions necessitating such adoption.

Counsel: For Appellants: Vernon L. Wells and Julia Boaz-Cooper of Walston, Wells, Anderson & Bains, L.L.P., Birmingham; L. Vastine Stabler, Jr., Birmingham, and Aubrey M. Daniel III and John Schmidlein of Williams & Connolly, Washington D.C., "of counsel," for Archer Daniels Midland Co.

Robert D. Eckinger and E. Berton Spence of Lange, Simpson, Robinson & Somerville, Birmingham, for Haarmann & Reimer Corp.

James L. North of James L. North & Associates, Birmingham, for Cargill, Inc.

For Appellee: Garve Ivey, Jr., of King & Ivey, Jasper; Philippa McC. Bainbridge and Michael Straus of Bainbridge & Straus, Birmingham; J. Michael Rediker, Thomas L. Krebs, and Steve P. Gregory of Ritchie & Rediker, Birmingham; Larry W. Morris and Randall S. Haynes of Morris, Haynes, Ingram & Hornsby, Alexander City; and Herman Watson, Jr., and Douglas C. Adair of Watson, Fees & Jimmerson, Huntsville.

Judges: Hooper, C. J., and Maddox, Houston, See, and Brown, JJ., concur. Cook and Johnstone, [2] JJ., dissent. Lyons, J., recuses himself. See, J., files statement of nonrecusal.

Opinion

[*967] PER CURIAM.

The issue presented on this appeal is whether Ala. Code 1975, § 6-5-60, provides a cause of action for damage alleged to have resulted from a conspiracy to control the price of citric acid that was shipped from companies out-of-state into Alabama. The trial court ruled that § 6-5-60 provides such a cause of action; therefore, it denied the defendants' Rule 12(b)(6), Ala.R.Civ.P., motion to dismiss. We granted the defendants' request for permission to appeal that interlocutory order. Rule 5, Ala.R.App.P. We reverse and remand.

The plaintiff, Seven Up Bottling Company of Jasper, Inc. ("Seven Up"), filed this action on behalf of itself and seeking to represent a class consisting of "all persons or entities within Alabama who purchased citric acid and/or products containing citric acid indirectly from any of the Defendants or their co-conspirators at any time during the period January 1, 1991, to the present." Seven Up is an Alabama corporation engaged in the business of bottling and distributing soft drinks. Seven Up uses citric acid in its bottling operation. The defendants, [3] Archer Daniels Midland Company; Cargill, Inc.; and Haarmann & Reimer Corporation, are in the business of selling citric acid. The complaint alleges that each of the defendants is a foreign corporation with its principal place of business outside Alabama. The complaint also alleges that the defendants engaged in a conspiracy to control the price of citric acid shipped into Alabama. The complaint further alleges that the plaintiff and others were injured as a result of that conspiracy by paying more for citric acid and for products containing citric acid than they would have paid if the price of citric acid had been set by free competition. In its order denying the defendants' motion to [*968] dismiss, the trial court stated that "the dispositive legal issue, as advanced by the Defendants, is whether [\[Ala. Code 1975, § 6-5-60\]](#), has application to such a conspiracy which, if conducted at all, is admittedly conducted in interstate commerce rather than in intrastate commerce."

Citing, among other cases, Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542 (1913); Dothan Oil Mill Co. v. Espy, 220 Ala. 605, 127 So. 178 (1930); Ex parte Rice, 259 Ala. 570, 67 So. 2d 825 (1953); [4] San Ann Tobacco Co. v. Hamm, 283 Ala. 397, 217 So. 2d 803 (1968); In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14529, [No. 94 C 897, October 2, 1996] (N.D. Ill. 1996), reversed, 123 F.3d 599 (7th Cir. 1997); In re Nasdaq Market Makers Antitrust Litigation, 929 F. Supp. 174, 179 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); and Warren v. Playmobil U.S.A., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22191, [CV-95-B-1591-S, March 19, 1996] (N.D. Ala. 1996), the defendants contend that Alabama's antitrust statutes have consistently been interpreted by state and federal courts to apply only to transactions involving intrastate commerce. The defendants argue that Alabama's antitrust statutes, including § 6-5-60, have the same field of operation today that they had when they were first enacted. According to the defendants, the legislative history of Alabama's antitrust statutes, as well as the state of federal caselaw at the time of their enactment, creates a presumption that the Legislature never intended to directly regulate agreements to control the price of goods shipped in interstate commerce. This presumption, [5] the defendants argue, has not been overcome by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff contends that § 6-5-60 provides a cause of action in favor of "any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect," and against "any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly." According to the plaintiff, § 6-5-60 is clear on its face and should not be construed so narrowly as to limit its application to transactions involving intrastate commerce. The plaintiff maintains, in the alternative, that even if § 6-5-60 should be construed in light of the legislative history of Alabama's antitrust statutes and the state of federal caselaw at the time of their enactment, the clear intent of the Legislature in enacting § 6-5-60 was to regulate all agreements in restraint of trade, whether those agreements involved interstate commerce or intrastate commerce.

With the positions of the parties in mind, we pause to point out what this case is not about. We are not here concerned with whether the Legislature, based on the current state of federal caselaw, has the power to enact [6] a statute, such as § 6-5-60, to provide a means of redress to Alabama companies for indirect injuries suffered as the result of agreements to control the price of goods shipped through interstate commerce. See California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 \(1989\), cited by the parties for the proposition that the Legislature now has that power.¹ This Court has held that an Alabama statute does not expand like an accordion with changes in federal law bearing on the Legislature's power. Instead, [*969] we are concerned only with whether the Legislature, when it enacted § 6-5-60, contemplated that it would apply to such agreements. See In re Upshaw, 247 Ala. 221, 23 So. 2d 861 \(1945\). In determining whether § 6-5-60 provides a cause of action for damage resulting from an agreement to control the price of goods shipped through interstate commerce, we must follow the cardinal rule of statutory construction and ascertain and give effect to the intent of the Legislature in enacting the statute. HN1[[↑]] If possible, legislative intent should be gathered from the language of the statute itself. John Deere Co. v. Gamble, 523 So. 2d 95 \(Ala. 1988\). [7]

However, HN3[[↑]] when circumstances surrounding the enactment of a statute cast doubt on the otherwise [8] clear language of the statute, we must look to other factors in determining legislative intent. In Siegelman v. Chase Manhattan Bank \(USA\), N.A., 575 So. 2d 1041 \(Ala. 1991\), this Court was faced with the question whether the financial-institution excise tax, levied pursuant to Ala. Code 1975, § 40-16-1 et seq., applied to the credit-card business conducted by national banks located outside Alabama with Alabama residents. When that excise-tax statute was enacted in 1935, such taxation by the states was prohibited by federal statutes and caselaw. Federal law changed in 1976 so as to allow the taxation of national banks; the state argued that that change should render out-of-state national banks subject to the 1935 excise-tax statute. This Court rejected that argument, stating, at 575 So. 2d 1041:

"In the case presently before us, the trial court in its opinion stated that [Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die Co., \[537 So. 2d 923 \(Ala. 1988\)\]](#), controlled the resolution of the case:

"'In Dixie Tool & Die, as in the instant case, the issue was whether in originally enacting the statute, the legislature intended to tax transactions [9] not previously taxed under that statute.'

"The Court holds that at the times § 40-16-1 was enacted, the State was prohibited by federal statute from taxing out-of-state national banks. The National Bank Act expressly limited the state's authority to tax only those "national banking associations located within its limits." Because the federal statute was in force at the time § 40-16-1 was enacted, full knowledge and information as to the prior and existing law on the subject of this section [are] imputed to the legislature. A legislature is presumed to know the limit of its taxing power. Further, HN4[[↑]] the statute will be interpreted on the assumption that the legislature was aware of existing statutes at the time new statutes are enacted.

¹ We note that in 54A Am.Jur.2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 798 (1996), the following statement appears:

"HN2[[↑]] A state antitrust act can have no extraterritorial operation; consequently, the courts in construing a state antitrust statute will generally apply it to trusts and combinations formed or operated within the state, even though its terms are broad enough to include combinations formed with parties residing outside the state."

But see the recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in In re: Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599 \(7th Cir. 1997\), citing R.E. Spriggs Co. v. Adolph Coors Co., 37 Cal. App. 3d 653, 112 Cal. Rptr. 585 \(Dist. Ct. App. 1974\), and Heath Consultants, Inc. v. Precision Instruments, Inc., 247 Neb. 267, 527 N.W.2d 596 \(1995\).

"Based on the foregoing, the Court finds that at the time § 40-16-1 was enacted the legislature could not have intended to impose a tax on out-of-state national banks.'

"In Dixie Tool & Die Co., the Alabama Department of Revenue assessed a sales tax against an Alabama corporation for sales made to out-of-state buyers and to federal government contractors. The Court in Dixie Tool & Die Co. considered whether [10] sales made by the corporation to out-of-state purchasers were subject to Alabama's sales tax. The sales tax provision in question was Ala. Code 1975, § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\). This code section provides:

"(a) There are exempted from the provisions of this division and from the computation of the amount of the tax levied, assessed or payable under this division the following:

"....

"(17) The gross proceeds of sales of tangible personal property or the gross receipts of any business which the state is prohibited from taxing under the Constitution [*970] or laws of the United States or under the Constitution of this state.'

"In its opinion, the Court in Dixie Tool & Die Co. recognized that the United States Supreme Court allowed taxation of interstate commerce if the tax met certain criteria. However, the Court stated:

"'[These] recent pronouncements of the United States Supreme Court which enlarge the permissible area of state taxation cannot change the intent or enlarge the scope of enactments passed by our Legislature. State v. Southern Electric Generating Co., 274 Ala. 668, 151 So. 2d 216 \(1963\). Therefore, the question [11] is not whether the State may, under prevailing caselaw, impose a tax upon the gross receipts earned from those transactions. Rather, the controlling issue is whether, in originally enacting this statute, the Legislature intended to tax these transactions.'

"The provision that has become § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\) was originally enacted in 1959. In 1959, and, indeed, until Complete Auto Transit v. [Brady, 430 U.S. 274, 97 S. Ct. 1076, 51 L. Ed. 2d 326] in 1977, the applicable case law held that a tax on the sale of goods in interstate commerce was invalid. The Legislature must be deemed to have been aware of the then-existing limits on a state's power to tax when it enacted the 1959 statute from which § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\) derives. Thus, we must presume that the legislature knew, at the time the statute was passed, that the applicable case law would prevent the application of a sales tax to transactions in interstate commerce. The Legislature must also be presumed to be aware of the judicial enlargement of the State's permissible area and method of taxation, so it could have taken full advantage of those changes if it either intended or desired to do so. No [12] changes have been made to § 40-23-4\(a\)\(17\). We conclude, therefore, that it applies today in the same manner that it did when enacted in 1959 and that it exempts sales of goods in interstate commerce from sales tax.'

" 537 So. 2d at 925 (quoting Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., 398 So. 2d 291, 293 \(Ala. 1981\) (emphasis in [Louisville & Nashville])).

"The trial court also relied on Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., supra. In Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., the Court considered 'whether Alabama's gross receipts tax upon a railroad's earnings from "intrastate

"business" applies to receipts generated by the L & N Railroad's movement of goods between two points in Alabama.¹ 398 So. 2d at 292. The railroad gross receipts tax statute in question, Ala. Code 1975, § 40-21-57, provided:

"In addition to all other taxes imposed by this title, there is hereby levied a license or privilege tax upon each person engaged in the business of operating a railroad in the state of Alabama for the privilege of engaging in such business; said license tax or privilege tax shall be ... in [13] a sum equal to two and one-half percent of the gross receipts in excess of $ 150,000.00 of such railroad from all intrastate business of such railroad within the state of Alabama during the preceding year, the gross intrastate earning to be determined by the amount received from intrastate business.'

"The Court stated that the controlling issue in the case was whether in originally enacting the statute the legislature intended to tax these transactions:

"The question before us is one of legislative intent. We presume that, in enacting the statute in 1935, the Legislature was aware of the existing interpretations and permissible limits of a state's power to tax. Thus, we presume our Legislature knew that at the time the statute was passed, the [*971] rule in [Minnesota v. Blasius, 290 U.S. 1, 54 S. Ct. 34, 78 L. Ed. 131 (1933)] would have prevented the application of the tax to transactions similar to those at issue because they constitute a portion of interstate commerce. We also presume that the Legislature was aware of the fact that this tax could not be sustained as one "in lieu of" other taxes because the tax was expressly levied "in addition [14] to all other taxes." Similarly, we presume that the Legislature was apprised of the fact that it could not justify this tax as one upon "local activity," because to do so would require the indulgence in the proscribed conceptual segmentation of the integral parts of an interstate transaction. Finally, we presume that the Legislature is aware of the judicial enlargement of the State's permissible area and method of taxation, so that the Legislature could have taken full advantage of those changes if it either intended or desired to. No such changes have been made during the forty-five years since the statute was passed and the State has not, by legislation, attempted to enlarge the scope of its taxation. Thus, viewed in its broadest scope, the statute in question could reach and impose a tax upon only those activities which were local and purely intrastate in character. We therefore conclude that the statute, as enacted in 1935 and as it exists today, was not intended to apply to receipts generated by transactions such as these which, although conducted wholly within the confines of Alabama, constitute an integral portion or segment of interstate commerce.'

¹ 398 So. 2d at 296-97. [15] See also State v. Southern Elec. Generating Co., 274 Ala. 668, 151 So. 2d 216 \(1963\).

"Like the question in Dixie Tool & Die Co. and Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., the question before us is whether in originally enacting the Alabama Excise Tax Statute, the legislature intended to tax the net income derived by out-of-state national banks from solicitation of credit card applications from Alabama residents.

"In determining the intent of the legislature, we presume that in enacting the Excise Tax Statute the legislature was aware of existing prohibitions against the State's power to tax national banks. When the Excise Tax Statute was enacted in 1935, federal law and judicial interpretation prohibited states from taxing out-of-state national banks. It was not until the Congressional moratorium expired in 1976 that states were allowed to tax out-of-state national banks. Even after the expiration of the moratorium in 1976, the Alabama legislature failed to amend or to reenact the Excise Tax Statute in light of the federal change. See Freeman v. Jefferson County, 334 So. 2d 902, 904 \(Ala. 1976\) (HN5) [16] 'the rejection of an amendment [16] by the Congress which would have made the statute applicable to a given situation furnishes a strong inference that the statute was not intended to be applicable to that given situation'). Also, the Alabama legislature failed to amend or to reenact the Excise Tax Statute after the United States Supreme Court's 1977 announcement that there would no longer be a per se ban on taxation of interstate commerce. In fact, the last amendment to the Excise Tax Statute occurred in 1978, after the change in both federal statutory and judicial law that would have allowed taxation of out-of-state national banks, and no provision was then made for such taxation. Ala. Acts 1978, Special and Regular Sessions, Act No. 840, p. 1247. We do note, however, that a bill was introduced in the 1990 Regular Session of the Alabama legislature for the stated purpose of extending the Excise Tax Statute to out-of-state national banks, but it was not enacted. House Bill No. 944, Legislative Digest, Final Status p. 14 (May 3, 1990).

[*972] "In the present case, we recognize that under existing federal law and judicial enlargement states are able to tax out-of-state national banks if their taxing measures are nondiscriminatory. [17] See 12 U.S.C. § 548 \(1988\). However, when the Excise Tax Statute was enacted in 1935, federal law prevented taxation of out-of-state national banks. In addition to the changes implemented by Congress in 1976, the United States Supreme Court changed its position so as to allow taxation of interstate commerce. See Complete Auto Transit, Inc. v. Brady, supra.

"Under prevailing Alabama statutory construction law, we presume that the legislature was aware of the federal law in 1935 and of the subsequent changes in that law in 1976, as well as the changes in the United States Supreme Court's analysis of the taxation of interstate commerce. Ex parte Louisville & Nashville R.R., supra, and Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die Co., supra. Although the Alabama legislature presumably was aware of Congress's enlargement of state taxing power over national banks, and of the United States Supreme Court's enlargement in regard to taxation of interstate commerce, it made no changes to the Excise Tax Statute.

[HN6] This Court's role is not to displace the legislature by amending statutes to make them express what we think the legislature should [18] have done. Nor is it this Court's role to assume the legislative prerogative to correct defective legislation or amend statutes. Consequently, we conclude that the Excise Tax Statute applies today in the same manner that it did when it was first enacted. Because states were prohibited from taxing out-of-state national banks at the time the statute levying the excise tax was first enacted and judicial interpretation disallowed taxation of interstate commerce, the State may not tax Chase, an out-of-state national bank, in the absence of additional action by the Alabama legislature."

This Court, in Ellis v. Pope, 709 So. 2d 1161 \(Ala. 1997\), reaffirmed Siegelman, Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die, and Ex parte Louisville & N.R.R., insofar as those cases require that we look to the original intent of the Legislature when interpreting a statute. In Pope, this Court adopted, as part of its opinion, a portion of the trial court's order, including this statement:

"The meaning of the term 'district' appears to have varied over the years. Since the [1973] adoption of the present Judicial Article [of the Alabama Constitution], 'district' [as [19] in references to the district court] has come to mean a judicial subdivision of the State geographically equal to or less than a 'circuit.' It usually coincides with county boundaries, and is never a subdivision of a county. The term must not be viewed in light of its meaning today, but as it was used in 1901, when Art. I, § 6, was drafted. Act No. 569, Acts of Alabama, 1907, which subdivided Coffee County, was adopted within six years of the ratification of our present Constitution, and that Act used the term 'district' to refer to the subdivisions of the county. Therefore, it must be concluded that the term 'district' in the terminology used at the time of the drafting and ratification of [the Alabama] Constitution in 1901 meant the subdivision of a county."

709 So. 2d at 1165.

Section 6-5-60 provides:

"(a) HNT[↑] Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of $ 500 and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly and [20] may commence the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. [*973] All such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, or judgment in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"(b) HN8[↑] Actions under this section may be commenced in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed, or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

As the plaintiff correctly points out, HN9[↑] § 6-5-60 is not, on its face, limited to transactions involving intrastate commerce. We hasten to add, however, that there is no language in § 6-5-60 that conclusively indicates an intent on the Legislature's part to regulate transactions involving the shipment of goods through interstate commerce. Because the language of § 6-5-60, standing alone, is not conclusive [21] on the question of legislative intent, and because other factors, including the legislative history of Alabama's antitrust statutes, as well as the state of the law at the time of their enactment, cast doubt on the original intent of the Legislature, we find it necessary to look beyond the language of the statute.

"From this country's beginning there has been an abiding and widespread fear of the evils which flow from monopoly -- that is, the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. By 1890, there was a vast accumulation of wealth in the hands of corporations and individuals, and an enormous development of corporate organization with the facility for combining into 'trusts.' Units of traders and producers had snowballed by combining into trusts, and there was a widespread impression that the trusts had used and would use their power to oppress individuals and injure the public. Competition was threatened; price control was feared; and individual initiative was dampened.

"On the basis of these fears, Congress passed the Sherman Antitrust Act in July 1890 [15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.], in order to prevent or suppress devices or [22] practices which create monopolies or restrain trade or commerce by suppressing or restricting competition and obstructing the course of trade. It is designed to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade. The basic objective of the Act, therefore, is the protection of competition and a competitive process that brings to consumers the benefits of lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods. Thus, the purpose of the Act is not to protect businesses from the working of the market, but to protect the public from the failure of the market. The Act is not directed against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but is directed against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. It does so not out of solicitude for private concerns, but out of concern for the public interest."

54 Am.Jur.2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 1 (1996).

Following the lead of other states, the Alabama Legislature enacted this state's first general antitrust law on February 7, 1891.² Ala. Acts 1890-91, Act No. 202, p. [*974] 438, entitled "An Act to [23] prohibit pools, trusts,

²The Legislature had enacted a law, approved on February 23, 1883, regulating the "pooling of freights":

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That it shall be unlawful for two or more railroad companies or persons operating railroads in this State to enter into any agreement among themselves, directly or indirectly, for the division among themselves of the freight carrying business at any station, town or city in this State, or into any pool arrangement among themselves of the nature and character aforesaid, the object, purpose and effect of which in either event shall be to prevent free and fair competition among said railroad companies or persons operating said railroads, for or combines to regulate or control the prices of products, goods, wares or merchandise in this state," was patterned after a similar statute that had been enacted in Illinois and was akin to the Sherman Antitrust Act, which Congress had enacted shortly before on July 2, 1890. Act No. 202, which was criminal in nature, provided:

[24]

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any person, corporation or association of persons who shall, within this state, engage or agree with other persons, corporations or association of persons, or enter into, either directly [sic], any combination, pool, trust or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this state for speculation; and any person, corporation or association of persons who shall enter into, become a member of a party to, any pool, agreement, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article or commodity to be produced or manufactured, mined or sold in this state, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to indictment and punishment as herein provided.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any corporation chartered under the laws of Alabama, or for any officer, stockholder, agent or employe of such corporation to enter into any combination with other persons or corporations, the purpose and effect of which are to place the management or control thereof in the hands of others, with the purpose or [25] intent to limit or fix the price, or lessen the production or sale of any article of commerce, use or consumption, or to restrict or diminish the manufacture of such article.

[*975] "Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That any person or corporation violating the provisions of section one or two of this act, within the State of Alabama, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred dollars, nor more than two thousand dollars, at the discretion of the jury trying the same; and any officer, agent or employe of such corporation guilty of violating either of the two preceding sections of this act may be imprisoned, in said freight carrying business, and to establish extortionate rates in favor of said companies or persons in doing said business, and which shall have the effect of being in undue restraint of the trade and business at any such station, town or city of this State.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That any officer, agent or servant of any such company, or person operating any railroad in this State who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or who shall aid or assist in making or carrying out or performing any such agreement or pool arrangement shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction for every such offense shall be fined not less than fifty dollars, nor more than two hundred dollars, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

"Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That it is the true intent and meaning of this act, that any such agreement, rates or pool agreement made by any convention or association of freight agents, or commissioner of freight rates or rate making committee outside of this State, but to be performed in whole or in part in this State, shall as to such part of the same, as is to be performed within this State, come within the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That any agreement, rates, or pool arrangements made by two or more railroad companies, or persons operating railroads in this State, or by any convention, or by any association of freight agents or commissioner of freight rates, or rate making committee outside of this State, but to be performed in whole or in part within this State for the purpose of cheapening freight rates or of extending additional facilities to the public generally, or to any town, city or station in this State and which are not extortionate and in undue restraint of trade at any town, city, or station in this State, shall not be construed as coming within this act.

"Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, That if any such agreement, rate, or pool arrangement as is mentioned in the fourth section of this act shall have the certified approval of the railroad commission of Alabama, it shall be deemed as prima facie lawful and just in any proceeding before any court or officer of this State, and no officer, agent or servant of any railroad company, or person shall be liable to prosecution, for aiding or assisting in carrying out, or performing any such agreement or pool arrangement, so approved by any railroad commission of Alabama."

(Emphasis added.) Ala. Acts 1882-83, Act No. 79, p. 152-53. Section 2 of Act No. 79 was codified in the Alabama Code of 1886 as Article IV, § 4145.

addition to the fine, not less than six months, and not more than twelve months for every such offense: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent the producers of agricultural products from holding the same for higher prices; And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent the producer of any article of food or commerce from holding the same for higher prices, provided he does not combine or confederate with others thus to raise or lower prices.

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the circuit [26] and city courts to give this act in special charge to the several grand juries of the state."

(Emphasis added.) Act No. 202 was codified in the Alabama Code of 1896 as Chapter 196, Article 5, § 5557, § 5558, and § 5559:

"5557. Forming pools or combinations to regulate the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation, who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this state for speculation, or any person or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool, agreement, combination, or confederation to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold in this state, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

"5558. Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. - Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent, or employe of any such corporation, [27] which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person and thereby limit or fix the price, or restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use, or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

"5559. Preceding two sections given in special charge to grand juries. -- The preceding two sections must be given in special charge to the grand jury."

What clearly stands out with respect to the 1896 codification of Act No. 202 is the change in phraseology in § 5557, specifically, the deletion of the words "within this state," which had appeared as the 20th, 21st, and 22d words of Act No. 202. This change was made by William L. Martin, Alabama's Code commissioner. Pursuant to Ala. Acts 1894-95, Act No. 507, § 1, p. 1001, Martin was given the authority to "revise, digest and codify all of the statutes of this state of a general and public nature, both civil and criminal." Act No. 507 specifically provided as follows:

"Sec. [28] 3. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said commissioner, at least three months before the meeting of the next general assembly to deliver said code to the governor of this state, together with a sworn statement, showing all the changes he shall have made in the phraseology of all the acts and laws codified by him, including additions thereto and omission therefrom, with accurate reference to the acts and laws so altered or changed; and it shall [976] be the duty of the governor carefully to examine the same, and to specifically report upon the same to the succeeding general assembly, recommending such alterations if any, as to him may seem proper; and attaching to his report the sworn statement of the commissioner herein provided for.

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That said commissioner shall prepare appropriate chapters, titles, and subdivisions of titles for each chapter, clearly and briefly expressive of the subjects treated, which shall be arranged alphabetically, bringing into each chapter as near as may be, a condensation of all public laws, appertaining to the subject treated in each chapter: that said commissioner shall not simply transfer [29] or transcribe the laws, but shall (without changing the sense) so alter the phraseology as to exclude all redundancy, or obscurity of expression, and where there shall be several acts relating to the same subject, they shall be condensed into one, and so expressed, as clearly to set forth the sense of the whole, having regard to judicial exposition thereof: that whenever it shall be apparent that there may be legislative omissions in any statute, said commissioner shall supply the same, so as to perfect such statute, and render its operation complete, and shall add all such original notes and references as shall be proper for the clear elucidation of them, and for easy reference to the several laws from which they may be compiled, showing as far as may be, when such acts and statutes become operative, when amended, with foot notes of all decisions of the supreme court, construing or mentioning such sections or acts, and as far as practicable, a brief and concise statement of the question decided by such decisions."

In his report to the Governor, on page 111, Martin stated as follows:

"CHAPTER 195. TRADE, PUBLIC POLICY AND POLICE.

"....

"5549, 5550, [30] 5551. Based on the act of February 7, 1891 -- page 438. To prohibit pools, trusts, etc. Rewritten with such changes as were necessary in phraseology."

We note that Act No. 202, dealing with the prohibition of "pools, trusts, etc." was codified as Article 5, § 5557, § 5558, and § 5559 of Chapter 196 of the 1896 Code, not as § 5549, § 5550, and § 5551, of Chapter 195. Notwithstanding these apparent errors, Martin did specifically state that he had rewritten "the act of February 7, 1891 -- page 438" (Act No. 202) so as to make "such changes as were necessary in phraseology." Neither the Governor nor the Legislature made any changes to § 5557, § 5558, or § 5559 before the Legislature adopted the 1896 Code.

Article IV, § 103, of the Constitution of Alabama of 1901 provided:

"The legislature shall provide by law for the regulation, prohibition, or reasonable restraint of common carriers, partnerships, associations, trusts, monopolies, and combinations of capital, so as to prevent them or any of them from making scarce articles of necessity, trade, or commerce, or from increasing unreasonably the cost thereof to the consumer, or preventing reasonable competition [31] in any calling, trade, or business."

This constitutional mandate, Rogers v. City of Mobile, 277 Ala. 261, 169 So. 2d 282 (1964), resulted in the Legislature's readopting § 5557, § 5558, and § 5559 of the 1896 Code in substantially the same form in the 1907 Code as § 7579, § 7580, and § 7582:

"7579. (5557) Forming pools or combinations to regulate the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or any person or corporation [*977] who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool, agreement, combination, or confederation, to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold, in this state, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

"7580. (5558) Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. -- Any corporation [32] chartered under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent, or employe of any such corporation, which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person, and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use, or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

"....

"7582. (5559) Four preceding sections given in special charge to grand juries. -- The four preceding sections must be given in special charge to the grand jury."

The Legislature also added the following provision, which appeared as § 7581 of Chapter 273 of the 1907 Code:

"7581. Monopolies, penalty for. -- Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control, or sale of any commodity, or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, [33] or description of business; or which shall destroy, or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offense."

In addition to these criminal antitrust provisions, in the 1907 Code the Legislature, for the first time, provided for a civil cause of action for injuries resulting from the effects of a trust, combine, or monopoly:

"2487. Actions against trusts, combines, or monopolies. -- Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of five hundred dollars and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly; and may maintain the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. And all such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment [34] or decree against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, judgment, or decree in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"2488. County in which action brought. -- Actions under the preceding section may be brought in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed, or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed; or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile, or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

Section 7579, § 7580, § 7581, and § 7582 of the 1907 Code were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1923 Code as § 5212, § 5213, § 5214, and § 5215, respectively:

"5212. (7579) (5557) Forming pools or combinations to regulate the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation who engages or agrees [*978] with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or any person [35] or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool agreement, combination, or confederation, to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold, in this state, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

"5213. (7580) (5558) Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. -- Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent or employe of any such corporation, which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person, and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

"5214. (7581) Monopolies, penalty for. -- Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade [36] or production, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control, or sale of any commodity, or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, or description of business; or which shall destroy or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offense.

"5215. (7582) Three preceding sections given in special charge to grand juries. -- The three preceding sections must be given in special charge to the grand jury."

Section 2487 and § 2488 of the 1907 Code (providing for a civil cause of action) were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1923 Code as § 5697 and § 5698:

"5697. (2487) Actions against trusts, combines, or monopolies. -- Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of five hundred dollars and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, [37] operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly; and may maintain the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. And all such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment or decree against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, judgment, or decree in favor of one or more of the defendants.

"5698. (2488) County in which action brought. -Actions under the preceding section may be brought in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed, or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed; or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile, or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

Section 5212, § 5213, and § 5214 of the 1923 Code were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1940 Code as Title 57, § 106, § 107, and § 108, respectively:

[*979] " § 106. (5212) (7579) (5557) Forming pools or combinations [38] to regulate the quantity or price of products. -- Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, trust, or confederation, to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or any person or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of, or party to, any pool agreement, combination, or confederation, to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold, in this state, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars.

" § 107. (5213) (7580) (5558) Combinations to control corporations with intent to fix the price or production of commodities. -- Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state, or any officer, stockholder, agent or employee of any such corporation, which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person, and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the [39] production, manufacture, sale, use or consumption of any article of commerce, must, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

" § 108. (5214) (7581) Monopolies, penalty for. -Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control, or sale of any commodity, or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, or description of business; or which shall destroy or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offense."

Section 5697 and § 5698 of the 1923 Code (providing for a civil cause of action) were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1940 Code as Title 7, § 124 and § 125:

" § 124. (5697) (2487) Actions against trusts, combines, or monopolies. -- Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly, [40] or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of five hundred dollars and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly; and may maintain the action therefor against any one or more of the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly. And all such actions may be prosecuted to final judgment or decree against any one or more of the defendants thereto, notwithstanding there may be a dismissal, acquittal, verdict, judgment, or decree in favor of one or more of the defendants.

" § 125. (5698) (2488) County in which action brought. -- Actions under the preceding section may be brought in any county where the trust, combine, or monopoly was formed, or where it exists or is carried on, promoted, operated, practiced, employed, used, or enjoyed; or in any county in which either of the defendants may have a domicile, or where an officer or agent of any defendant corporation may be found."

Section 106, § 107, and § 108 of Title 57 of the [41] 1940 Code were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1975 Code as § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3, respectively:

"[§ 8-10-1] Any person or corporation who engages or agrees with other [*980] persons or corporations or enters, directly or indirectly, into any combination, pool, trust, or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state or any person or corporation who enters into, becomes a member of or party to any pool agreement, combination, or confederation to fix or limit the quantity of any article or commodity to be produced, manufactured, mined, or sold in this state must be fined, on conviction, not less than $ 500 nor more than $ 2,000."

"[§ 8-10-2] Any corporation chartered under the laws of this state or any officer, stockholder, agent, or employee of any such corporation which enters into any combination with any other corporation or person with the intent to place the management or control of any such corporation in the hands of another corporation or person and thereby limit or fix the price, restrict or diminish the production, manufacture, sale, use, or consumption [42] of any article of commerce must be fined, on conviction, not less than $ 500 nor more than $ 2,000."

"[§ 8-10-3] Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain, or attempt to restrain, the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, the production, control, or sale of any commodity or the prosecution, management, or control of any kind, class, or description of business or which shall destroy, or attempt to destroy, competition in the manufacture or sale of a commodity shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $ 500 nor more than $ 2,000 for each offense."

Section 124 and § 125 of Title 7 of the 1940 Code (providing for a civil cause of action) were carried forward in substantially the same form into the 1975 Code as subsections (a) and (b), respectively, of § 6-5-60.

With this legislative history in mind, we move next to the state of federal constitutional law at the time Alabama's antitrust statutes were originally enacted. In 1 ABA Antitrust Law Section, State Antitrust Practice and Statutes Introduction-20 (1990), we find the following: [43]

"An important factor in most early state antitrust cases was the prevailing 'dual sovereignty' theory of state-federal regulatory authority. HN10[¹] This theory postulated distinct and mutually exclusive zones of jurisdiction for the states, which exercised jurisdiction only over purely intrastate matters, and the federal government, which exercised jurisdiction only over goods and services in interstate commerce."

(Emphasis in original.) See, also, Lawrence H. Tribe, American Constitutional Law, § 5-4, at 307-08 (2d ed. 1988) (discussing the United States Supreme Court's varying approaches to interpreting the Commerce Clause, Article I, § 8, of the United States Constitution, but specifically noting the consistent dichotomy maintained by that Court between interstate commerce and intrastate commerce prior to the New Deal). This dichotomy between interstate commerce and intrastate commerce is clearly illustrated in a series of cases decided by the Court between 1888 and 1899. See Bowman v. Chicago & N.W. Ry., 125 U.S. 465, 493, 31 L. Ed. 700, 8 S. Ct. 689 (1888) ("[HN11][¹] A] State has legislative control, exclusive of Congress, within its territory, [44] of all persons, things, and transactions of strictly internal concern. ... It cannot, without the consent of Congress, expressed or implied, regulate commerce between its people and those of the other States of the Union in order to effect its end, however desirable such a regulation might be."); Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U.S. 289, 302, 38 L. Ed. 719, 14 S. Ct. 829 (1894) ("we think it must be considered, in view of a long line of decisions, [*981] that it is settled that HN12[¹] nothing which is a direct burden upon interstate commerce can be imposed by the State without the assent of Congress"); United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 12, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249 (1895) ("HN13[¹] That which belongs to commerce [between the States] is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State." ³ [46]); Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 233, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 \(1899\) (also involving an alleged violation of the [*982] Sherman Antitrust Act) ("HN14[¹] each state ... would have complete jurisdiction over the commerce which was wholly within [45] its own borders, while the jurisdiction of Congress, under the provisions of the Constitution, over interstate commerce would be paramount, and would include therein jurisdiction over contracts [in restraint of such commerce]"); see, also, W. W. Thomas, A Treatise On Combinations In Restraint of Trade, § 90-91, at 229, 232 (2d ed. 1928) ("HN15[¹] Congress has no control over intrastate commerce.... HN16[¹] No

³ United States v. E.C. Knight Co. was the Supreme Court's first decision construing the Sherman Antitrust Act. The full text in which this quotation appears is as follows:

"It cannot be denied that the power of a State to protect the lives, health, and property of its citizens, and to preserve good order and the public morals, 'the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominion,' is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the general government, nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive. The relief of the citizens of each State from the burden of monopoly and the evils resulting from the restraint of trade among such citizens was left with the States to deal with, and this court has recognized their possession of that power even to the extent of holding that an employment or business carried on by private individuals, when it becomes a matter of such public interest and importance as to create a common charge or burden upon the citizen; in other words, when it becomes a practical monopoly, to which the citizen is compelled to resort and by means of which a tribute can be exacted from the community, is subject to regulation by state legislative power. On the other hand, the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States is also exclusive. The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraints. Therefore it has been determined that the failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject shall be free from restrictions or impositions upon it by the several States, and if a law passed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers comes into conflict with that will, the Congress and the State cannot occupy the position of equal opposing sovereignties, because the Constitution declares its supremacy and that of the laws passed in pursuance thereof; and that which is not supreme must yield to that which is supreme. 'Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic,' said Chief Justice Marshall, 'but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.' That which belongs to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State. [Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 210, 6 L. Ed. 23; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. 419, 12 Wheat. 419, 448, 6 L. Ed. 678; The License Cases, 5 How. 504, 599; \[County of\] Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U.S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Bowman v. Chicago & N.W. Railway, 125 U.S. 465, 31 L. Ed. 700, 8 S. Ct. 689; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U.S. 100, 34 L. Ed. 128, 10 S. Ct. 681; In re Rahrer, 140 U.S. 545, 555, 35 L. Ed. 572, 11 S. Ct. 865.](#)"

156 U.S. at 11-12.

In P. Areeda & D. Turner, 1 Antitrust Law, An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and their Application, § 232c (1978), we find the following discussion of Knight:

"The 1895 Knight case, the Supreme Court's first Sherman Act decision, held a national monopoly of sugar manufacturing beyond the constitutional reach of the act because mere manufacturing was not 'commerce.' At that time, the Commerce Clause embraced only the actual and 'direct' purchase, sale, or transportation of goods across state lines. The Court acknowledged that such commerce was affected by the sugar monopoly, but only 'indirectly.'

"Two characteristics of the Knight decision remain important today. First, the Court never reached the merits of the government's case because the constitutional determination was made first, and the courts still treat the commerce question as a preliminary jurisdictional hurdle in antitrust litigation. Second, the jurisdictional inquiry was entirely independent of the Sherman Act's purposes. That separation seemed feasible in 1895 when 'interstate commerce' was wholly dependent upon the location of the defendant's conduct, and without regard to its impact on the interests protected by the Sherman Act. This neat separation of jurisdictional and substantive inquiries caused difficulties with later and more expansive definitions of interstate commerce."

state may in any way enact legislation which in any wise controls, regulates, or infringes on interstate commerce.").

⁴

[47] One of the best discussions of the prevailing dual-sovereignty theory of state-federal regulatory authority at the turn of the century is found in Justice Stewart's dissenting opinion in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 632-36, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 \(1976\). In Cantor, the Supreme Court was called upon to decide whether Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\), which had held that the Sherman Antitrust Act was not violated by state action displacing competition in the marketing of raisins, immunized private action that had been approved by a state regulatory agency and that had to continue while the state approval remained effective. Justice Stewart's historical analysis of the legislative history of the Sherman Antitrust Act, which was not in dispute, reads as follows:

"The floor debates and the House Report on the proposed legislation [the Sherman Antitrust Act] clearly reveal, as at least one commentator has noted, that 'Congress fully understood the narrow scope given to the commerce clause' in 1890. This understanding is, in many ways, of historic interest only, because subsequent [48] decisions of this Court have 'permitted the reach of the Sherman Act to expand along with expanding notions of congressional power.' But the narrow view taken by the Members of Congress in 1890 remains relevant for the limited purpose of assessing their intention regarding the interaction of the Sherman Act and state economic regulation.

"The legislative history reveals very clearly that Congress' perception of the limitations of its power under the Commerce Clause was coupled with an intent [*983] not to intrude upon the authority of the several States to regulate 'domestic' commerce. As the House Report stated:

"It will be observed that the provisions of the bill are carefully confined to such subjects of legislation as are clearly within the legislative authority of Congress.

"No attempt is made to invade the legislative authority of the several States or even to occupy doubtful grounds. No system of laws can be devised by Congress alone which would effectually protect the people of the United States against the evils and oppression of trusts and monopolies. Congress has no authority to deal, generally, with the subject within the States, and the States [49] have no authority to legislate in respect of commerce between the several States or with foreign nations.

⁴ We note that the Supreme Court had held at the time Alabama first enacted its antitrust statutes that the Commerce Clause, in conferring on Congress the power to regulate commerce, did not wholly withdraw from the states the power to regulate matters of local concern with respect to which Congress had not exercised its power, even though the regulation in some way affected interstate commerce. See, e.g., California v. Thompson, 313 U.S. 109, 113, 85 L. Ed. 1219, 61 S. Ct. 930 \(1941\), in which the Court noted:

"Ever since Willson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet. 245 [(1829)], and Cooley v. [Board of Wardens of the Port of Philadelphia], 53 U.S. 299, 12 How. 299, 13 L. Ed. 996 [(1851)], it has been recognized that there are matters of local concern, the regulation of which unavoidably involves some regulation of interstate commerce, but which because of their local character and their number and diversity may never be adequately dealt with by Congress. Because of their local character, also, there is wide scope for local regulation without impairing the uniformity of control of the national commerce in matters of national concern and without materially obstructing the free flow of commerce which were the principal objects sought to be secured by the Commerce Clause. Notwithstanding the Commerce Clause, such regulation in the absence of Congressional action has, for the most part, been left to the states by the decisions of this Court, subject only to other applicable constitutional restraints."

See, also, South Carolina State Highway Department v. Barnwell Brothers, Inc., 303 U.S. 177, 82 L. Ed. 734, 58 S. Ct. 510 \(1938\); Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U.S. 539, 61 L. Ed. 480, 37 S. Ct. 217 \(1917\); Bowman v. Chicago & N.W. Ry., supra, and the cases cited therein. There is nothing, however, in the Supreme Court's decisions in United States v. E.C. Knight Co., supra, and Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, supra, that indicates that the Court would have viewed extraterritorial state antitrust provisions as falling within that constitutionally permissible category of local regulation having only an indirect or incidental effect on interstate commerce.

"It follows, therefore, that the legislative authority of Congress and that of the several States must be exerted to secure the suppression of restraints upon trade and monopolies. Whatever legislation Congress may enact on this subject, within the limits of its authority, will prove of little value unless the States shall supplement it by such auxiliary and proper legislation as may be within their legislative authority.'

"Similarly, the floor debates on the proposed legislation reveal an intent to 'go as far as the Constitution permits Congress to go,' in the words of Senator Sherman, conjoined with an intent not to 'interfere with' state-law efforts to 'prevent and control' combinations within the limit of the State.' Far from demonstrating an intent to pre-empt state laws aimed at preventing or controlling combinations or monopolies, the legislative debates show that Congress' goal was to supplement such state efforts, themselves restricted to the geographic boundaries of the several States. As Senator Sherman stated: 'Each State can deal with a combination [50] within the State, but only the General Government can deal with combinations reaching not only the several States, but the commercial world. This bill does not include combinations within a State' Indeed a preexisting body of state law forbidding combinations in restraint of trade provided the model for the federal Act. As Senator Sherman stated with respect to the proposed legislation: 'It declares that certain contracts are against public policy, null and void. It does not announce a new principle of law, but applies old and well-recognized principles of the common law to the complicated jurisdiction of our State and Federal Government. Similar contracts in any State in the Union are now, by common or statute law, null and void.'

"It is noteworthy that the body of state jurisprudence which formed the model for the Sherman Act coexisted with state laws permitting regulated industries to operate under governmental control in the public interest. Indeed, state regulatory laws long antedated the passage of the Sherman Act and had, prior to its passage, been upheld by this Court against constitutional attack. Such laws were an integral part of state efforts to regulate [51] competition to which Congress turned for guidance in barring restraints of interstate commerce, and it is clear that those laws were left undisturbed by the passage of the Sherman Act in 1890. For, as congressional spokesmen expressly stated, there was no intent to 'interfere with' state laws regulating domestic commerce or 'invade the legislative authority of the several States....'

"As previously noted, the intent of the draftsmen of the Sherman Act not to intrude on the sovereignty of the States was coupled with a full and precise understanding of the narrow scope of congressional power under the Commerce Clause, as it was then interpreted by [*984] decisions of this Court. Subsequent decisions of the Court, however, have permitted the 'jurisdictional' reach of the Sherman Act to expand along with an expanding view of the commerce power of Congress. See Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 743 n.2, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848, and cases cited therein. These decisions, based on a determination that Congress intended to exercise all the power it possessed when it enacted the Sherman Act, have in effect allowed the Congress of 1890 [52] the retroactive benefit of an enlarged judicial conception of the commerce power.

"It was this retroactive expansion of the jurisdictional reach of the Sherman Act that was in large part responsible for the advent of the Parker doctrine. Parker involved a program regulating the production of raisins within the State of California. Under the original understanding of the draftsmen of the Sherman Act, such in-state production, like in-state manufacturing, would not have been subject to the regulatory power of Congress under the Commerce Clause and thus not within the 'jurisdictional' reach of the Sherman Act. See United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249. If the state of the law had remained static, the Parker problem would rarely, if ever, have arisen. As stated in Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679, 24 S. Ct. 436, the operative premise would have been that the 'Anti-Trust Act ... prescribed ... a rule for interstate and international commerce, (not for domestic commerce,') id., at 337. The relevant question would have been whether the anticompetitive [53] conduct required or permitted by the state statute was in restraint of domestic or interstate commerce. If the former, the conduct would have been beyond the reach of the Sherman Act; if the latter, the conduct would probably have violated the Sherman Act, regardless of contrary state law, on the theory that 'no State can, by ... any ... mode, project its authority into other States, and across the continent, so as to prevent Congress from exerting the power it possesses under the Constitution over interstate and international commerce, or ... to exempt its corporation engaged in interstate commerce from obedience to any rule lawfully established by Congress for such commerce.' Id. at 345-346."

428 U.S. at 632-36 (Stewart, J., dissenting) (emphasis in Justice Stewart's opinion).

An Alabama appellate court first dealt with the scope of this state's antitrust statutes in 1913. In Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, supra, the defendant in a breach-of-contract action defended on the ground that the contract was illegal and void as in restraint of trade and against public policy. The Court of Appeals upheld the trial court's order sustaining [\[54\]](#) the defendant's demurrer to the complaint, stating:

"Section 23 of our Constitution forbids the granting of exclusive and irrevocable special privileges and immunities by the Legislature, and section 103 thereof, which is a provision new to the Constitution of 1901, enjoins positively upon the Legislature the duty of providing by law for the 'regulation, prohibition, or reasonable restraint of common carriers, partnerships, associations, trusts, monopolies, and combinations of capital, so as to prevent them or any of them from making scarce articles of necessity, or increasing unreasonably the costs thereof to the consumer, or preventing reasonable competition in any trade, calling or business.' In pursuance of this latter provision the Legislature of this state, following the lead of other states, has passed the act now embraced in sections 7579, 7580, and 7581 of the Code, patterned after a similar statute in Illinois and other states and akin to the federal statute, known as [\[*985\]](#) the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200).

"Said section 7579 of our Code thus provides: 'Any person or corporation who engages or [\[55\]](#) agrees with other persons or corporations, or enters into, directly or indirectly, any combination, pool, or trust, or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold or produced within this state, or ... must, on conviction, be fined,' etc.

"Section 7581 reads: 'Any person or corporation, domestic or foreign, which shall restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, control or sale of any commodity, or ... shall be fined,' etc.

"The Sherman Anti-Trust Act makes illegal, punishing the parties thereto by fine or imprisonment, 'every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations,' etc.

"There being thus both a state and national law prohibiting unlawful combinations in restraint of trade -- the one law relating to intrastate, the other to interstate, commerce -- it is immaterial as to which character of commerce, whether only one or both, is involved in the contract here under consideration; for if the contract is in violation [\[56\]](#) of either law it is void as contravening a positive statute; and, even if it does not go to the extent of being in actual violation of either statute, yet if it tends to create a monopoly by unreasonably restraining trade, it is still void under our law, as at common law, as being against public policy. Arnold v. Jones, 152 Ala. 501, 44 So. 662, 12 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 150; 2 May. Dig. 784; 5 May. Dig. 218; 6 May. Dig. 182, where the authorities are cited."

9 Ala. App. at 131-33; 62 So. at 545-46. (Emphasis added.)

This Court first considered the application of Alabama's antitrust statutes in Dothan Oil Mill Co. v. Espy, supra. The defendants in that case were Alabama manufacturers of cottonseed oil "in different localities in this state" and were "the only buyers in Alabama of any appreciable amount of cotton-seed offered for sale in the State." 220 Ala. at 606-07, 127 So. at 179-80. The plaintiffs, Alabama cotton ginners, alleged that the defendants had "agreed among themselves the price to be paid for cotton-seed throughout the State of Alabama." 220 Ala. at 606, 127 So. at 179. The defendants [\[57\]](#) argued that the trial court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, on the ground that the challenged conspiracy to control the price of cottonseed involved interstate commerce. The defendants based their argument on the fact that a portion of the products that were manufactured from cottonseed were sold outside Alabama. This Court rejected the defendants' argument, stating:

"We are not of [the] opinion, however, that the business of buying cotton seed, confined wholly to the state, to be crushed and manufactured into oil and other products, in such state, constitutes interstate commerce, within the scope and purpose of [the Federal Trade Commission Act] or within the sense of the Sherman and Clayton Acts (15 [U.S.C.] §§ 1-7, 15, and sections 12-27, 44) which confer on the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction to enforce said acts, though some of the manufactured products may eventually find their way into and become commodities of interstate commerce. 'The fact, of itself, that an article when in the process of manufacture is intended for export to another state does not render it an article of interstate commerce.' Crescent Cotton Oil Co. v. State of Mississippi, 257 U.S. 129, 42 S. Ct. 42, 44, 66 L. Ed. 166; [58] Coe v. Errol, 116 U.S. 517, 6 S. Ct. 475, 29 L. Ed. 715; New York Central R. R. Co. v. Mohney, 252 U.S. 152, 40 S. Ct. 287, 64 L. Ed. 502, 9 A.L.R. 496."

[*986] 220 Ala. at 610, 127 So. at 182. Thus, the essence of this Court's decision in Espy was that HN17 the plaintiffs' complaint stated a state-law antitrust claim because the alleged illegal conduct involved only commercial transactions wholly confined to Alabama.

This Court next commented on Alabama's antitrust statutes in Ex parte Rice, supra. That case involved an original petition for a writ of mandamus to require the trial court to vacate its order overruling the plaintiffs' motion to compel answers to interrogatories. The underlying action was filed by the Sinclair Refining Company and sought the specific performance of a contract. The defendant raised as a defense that the contract was illegal, arguing that its "purpose was to engage in a monopoly in violation of the state and federal law." 259 Ala. at 572, 67 So. 2d at 826. This Court denied mandamus relief, holding that the motion to compel had been properly denied because the interrogatories [59] filed by the defendant sought to place an improper burden on the plaintiff. In the course of its discussion of the applicable law, this Court noted:

"We do not seem to have in Alabama a statute which defines an unlawful monopoly. Section 108, Title 57, Code, makes it a crime, punishable by fine, for any person, including a corporation, to restrain trade or create a monopoly. Section 103 of the Constitution requires legislation to prohibit monopolies and combinations. Section 78, Title 57, Code, makes lawful certain contracts fixing a minimum resale price. We have applied the common law, which is substantially as set out in the Sherman and Clayton Acts. See Sherrill v. Alabama Appliance Co., 240 Ala. 46 (7), 197 So. 1.

"The federal statutes, Sherman and Clayton Acts, prescribe the terms of unlawful monopolies and restraints of trade as they should also be administered in Alabama. The question, therefore, is properly affected by those acts, and it must be controlled by them when the business involved in the suit affects interstate commerce. It is upon that basis that the foregoing conclusions prevail in this case."

259 Ala. at 575, 67 So. 2d at 829. [60] (Emphasis added.)

In San Ann Tobacco Co. v. Hamm, supra, this Court addressed the constitutionality of an amendment to the Alabama Unfair Cigarette Sales Act, Ala. Acts 1951, Act No. 805, as amended in 1965 by Ala. Acts 1965, Act No. 78, p. 105, Second Special Session. In striking down the amendment as violating § 1 and § 35 of the Alabama Constitution, this Court wrote:

"This Court held the original Act to be constitutional on its face, Simonetti, Inc. v. State ex rel. Gallion, 272 Ala. 398, 132 So. 2d 252, and appellants do not attack that holding. But appellants do argue that one part of the 1965 amendment does render the Act unconstitutional on its face.

"The pertinent part of § 3(a) (Tit. 57, § 83(3)) of the original Act provided:

"It shall be unlawful for any wholesaler or retailer, with intent to injure competitors, destroy or substantially lessen competition, to advertise, offer to sell, or sell at wholesale or retail, cigarettes at less than cost to such wholesaler or retailer as the case may be.'

"This sentence was amended in 1965 and we emphasize the five additional words added which are [61] pertinent to this decision:

"It shall be unlawful for any wholesaler or retailer with intent to injure competitors, destroy or substantially lessen competition, or with the effect thereof, to advertise, offer to sell or sell at wholesale or retail cigarettes at less than cost to such wholesaler or retailer as the case may be'

"We quote excerpts from the decision in Simonetti, Inc. v. State ex rel. Gillion, supra:

[*987] ""The present bill directly alleges a dual or cumulative specific intent to 'injure competitors and destroy or substantially lessen competition' and that respondent's advertising, offers to sell, and sale of cigarettes at wholesale have been 'at less than cost to said respondent.' These are considered to be allegations of ultimate, issuable facts, sufficient for the purpose of pleading, since the respondent's actual intent in fact, its costs, and its selling prices are presumably matters within its knowledge, and greater particularity would not seem to be required either to frame the issue or inform respondent of the charge against which it is required to defend. By these allegations, the State as complainant assumes [62] a heavy burden of proof, since it must be proof of far more than mere intent of injury to competitors or 'unfairness' of competition. It must also prove, under the construction placed upon the Act, a selling below cost with the specific intent of destroying or substantially lessening competition, since the Act, if valid at all, can only be held so as an exercise of the police power of the state over intrastate commerce to the end of inhibiting practices tending toward monopolization.""

283 Ala. at 400, 217 So. 2d at 804-05. (Some emphasis original; other emphasis added.)

At least three federal courts have followed the aforementioned line of Alabama decisions and have declined to interpret Alabama's antitrust statutes as reaching transactions involving interstate commerce. See In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, supra (district court denying motion to remand to state court, stating that [HN18] it is clear that the statute [§ 6-5-60] applies only to intrastate activity");⁵ [In re Nasdaq \[*988\] Market](#)

⁵ The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed the district court's order denying the motion to remand. In doing so, the court recognized that at the turn of the century the Alabama Legislature lacked the constitutional authority to regulate interstate commerce through the use of antitrust provisions:

"The cases on which the defendants rely, for example, Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, 62 So. 542, 546 \(1913\), date from a period in which, interstate commerce being narrowly defined, see, e.g., Hadley Dean Plate Glass Co. v. Highland Glass Co., 143 F. 242, 244 \(8th Cir. 1906\), and federal power to regulate such commerce being deemed exclusive, id.; United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 11, 15 S. Ct. 249, 253, 39 L. Ed. 325 \(1895\), a state statute limited to intrastate commerce would have some, albeit a strictly limited, scope and could not have a greater scope no matter how much the state wanted it to."

123 F.3d at 612-13. The court then went on to reason that "the cases thus were not interpreting the statute; they were interpreting the Constitution as placing upper and lower bounds on the reach of the statute." 123 F.3d at 613. Stating that the United States Constitution "has since been reinterpreted," the court noted that "other states [have] read their antitrust statutes to reach what is now understood to be interstate commerce," and that "we are given no reason to suppose that Alabama would buck this trend." Id. This Court's decisions in Siegelman v. Chase Manhattan Bank, supra; Ex parte Dixie Tool & Die Co., supra; and Ex parte Louisville & N.R.R., supra, which created a presumption that the Legislature did not intend to exceed its constitutional authority in enacting this state's antitrust provisions, preclude the kind of statutory construction that the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals thought we might engage in. As we have explained, this presumption was strengthened by, among Makers Antitrust Litigation, supra, at 179 (denying motion to remand and noting that "HN19" [↑] the Alabama state courts have deemed [63] the Alabama antitrust statutes upon which the complaint is based to regulate only intrastate commerce"); and Warren v. Playmobil U.S.A., Inc., supra (denying motion to remand, concluding that "HN20" [↑] the Alabama statutes the plaintiff purports to rely upon [§ 6-5-60, §8-10-1, and § 8-10-3] regulate only intrastate commerce").

[64] After carefully reviewing the record and the briefs (which, we note, were exceptionally well written), we conclude that the rationale of Siegelman (that because the states were prohibited by federal law from taxing out-of-state national banks at the time the statute levying the excise tax was first enacted, the state could not tax an out-of-state national bank under the existing tax statute in the absence of further action by the Legislature) is equally applicable in the present case. Although what is now § 6-5-60 (providing for a civil cause of action) was enacted a little over 16 years after what are now § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3 (prescribing criminal penalties), all of these statutes are part of a uniform system of regulation, in the sense that they are all directed toward punishing or providing redress for activities in restraint of trade. HN21 [↑] Related statutes of this kind should, when possible, be construed in pari materia. Jordan v. Reliable Life Insurance Co., 589 So. 2d 699 (Ala. 1991), citing N. Singer, Sutherland Statutory Construction, § 70.05, at 505 (4th ed. 1986). It is significant, we think, that all of these antitrust provisions [65] were first enacted at a time in this country's history when the United States Supreme Court maintained a clear dichotomy with respect to a state's power to regulate commerce. Our research indicates that at the time of the enactment of what are now § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3 (1891), and extending through the time of the enactment in 1907 of what is now § 6-5-60, the United States Supreme Court had clearly held that the regulation of interstate commerce was within the exclusive domain of Congress. It is also significant that a federal antitrust law (the Sherman Antitrust Act) was already in effect at the time of the enactment of what are now § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3. Thus, under the rationale of Siegelman, we must entertain a strong presumption that the Alabama Legislature was aware toward the end of the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th century, when it first enacted these antitrust statutes, that its ability to regulate antitrust activity was limited in that it did not have the power to directly regulate transactions involving interstate commerce. The United States Supreme Court had clearly signaled, however, that the regulation of intrastate commerce [66] at the turn of the century was still largely within the exclusive domain of the states.

This presumption that the Legislature intended to limit the scope of its antitrust laws to transactions involving intrastate commerce is strengthened by several additional factors. First, the Illinois statute that formed the basis for what are now § 8-10-1, § 8-10-2, and § 8-10-3, was held early on by the Illinois Supreme Court to be limited to transactions involving intrastate commerce. See People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co., 201 Ill. 236, 66 N.E. 349 (1903). Second, Act No. 202, § 1 (the predecessor of § 8-10-1), as originally enacted by the Legislature in 1891, read as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any person, corporation or association of persons who shall, within this state, engage or agree with other persons, corporations or association of persons, or enter into, either directly [sic], any combination, [*989] pool, trust or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this state for speculation; and any person, corporation or association of persons [67] who shall enter into, become a member of a party to, any pool, agreement, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article or commodity to be produced or other things, the extensive legislative history of the Alabama statutes that we have set out, including the critical limiting words contained in Act No. 202 -- "within this state." The Seventh Circuit apparently ruled without the benefit of this legislative history or this Court's decisions referenced above. We also note that the Seventh Circuit expressed concern that "if the statute is limited today as it once was to commerce that is not within the regulatory power of Congress under the commerce clause, it is a dead letter because there are virtually no sales, in Alabama or anywhere else in the United States, that are intrastate in that sense." 123 F.3d at 613. However, the statutes, as we interpret them, may yet have a field of operation because they continue to reach transactions within this state, in the geographic sense, even though such transactions may affect interstate commerce as currently defined by federal law. See Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 633, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (1976) (Stewart, J., dissenting) (recognizing that when Congress passed the Sherman Antitrust Act, state efforts to restrain monopolies were "restricted to the geographic boundaries of the several states").

manufactured, mined or sold in this state, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to indictment and punishment as herein provided."

(Emphasis added.) Although this fact is certainly not conclusive, this section, as originally worded, suggests that the Legislature intended to limit the scope of Alabama's antitrust regulations to transactions involving intrastate commerce. Although the Code commissioner deleted the words "within this state" from § 5557 during his compilation of the 1896 Code, we find in our research no indication that he had the authority or the intent to make any substantive changes to Act No. 202, or that the Legislature, by adopting the 1896 Code with the commissioner's suggested change to § 5557, contemplated that the deletion of the words would effect the kind of substantive change that the plaintiff suggests was intended -- to expand the scope of the statute to encompass transactions involving interstate commerce. We find it more probable (although we certainly [68] can never know for sure) that the commissioner deleted the words, and that the Legislature accepted that change, out of an understanding or belief that the state lacked extraterritorial authority over commerce and, therefore, that the words were not necessary. Third, and perhaps most important, the Court of Appeals stated in 1913, shortly after these statutes were enacted, that the Legislature's regulatory power over antitrust violations did not extend to transactions involving interstate commerce, specifically recognizing that the regulation of such transactions had been undertaken by Congress pursuant to the Sherman Antitrust Act. The understanding of the Court of Appeals in this respect has been echoed by this Court on every occasion on which it has considered the matter. Fourth, the Legislature, with presumptive knowledge of the interpretation placed on Alabama's antitrust laws by Alabama appellate courts, has made no substantive changes to any of Alabama's antitrust laws since their original enactment.

As previously noted, when circumstances surrounding the enactment of laws, such as the antitrust statutes at issue here, cast doubt on the otherwise clear language of the statutes [69] themselves, we must look to other factors in determining legislative intent. Siegelman, supra. In an effort to avoid indulging in conjecture or searching for imaginary purposes with respect to these antitrust statutes, we have followed the well-settled rule of statutory construction "that HN22[ it is permissible in ascertaining [the purpose and intent of a statute] to look to the history of the times, the existing order of things, the state of the law when the instrument was adopted, and the conditions necessitating such adoption." In re Upshaw, 247 Ala. at 223, 23 So. 2d at 863. Having done that, we hold, based on the above, that § 6-5-60 does not provide a cause of action for damages allegedly resulting from an agreement to control the price of goods shipped in interstate commerce. We reiterate what we stated in Siegelman, supra:

"This Court's role is not to displace the legislature by amending statutes to make them express what we think the legislature should have done. Nor is it this Court's role to assume the legislative prerogative to correct defective legislation or amend statutes."

575 So. 2d at 1051. [70] We hold only that the field of operation of Alabama's antitrust statutes, specifically § 6-5-60, is no greater today than it was when the laws were first enacted. Thus, these statutes regulate monopolistic activities that occur [*990] "within this state" -- within the geographic boundaries of this state -- even if such activities fall within the scope of the Commerce Clause of the Constitution of the United States.⁶ We leave to the Legislature the policy decision of whether to expand the reach of Alabama's antitrust statutes to activities that cross state boundaries.

The trial court's order denying the defendants' motion to dismiss is reversed, [71] and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

Hooper, C. J., and Maddox, Houston, See, and Brown, JJ., concur.

⁶ Of course, Alabama's antitrust statutes may not be applied in a manner that discriminates against or unduly burdens interstate commerce. See Minnesota v. Cloverleaf Creamery Co., 449 U.S. 456, 66 L. Ed. 2d 659, 101 S. Ct. 715 (1981); Hunt v. Washington State Apple Advertising Comm'n, 432 U.S. 333, 53 L. Ed. 2d 383, 97 S. Ct. 2434 (1977).

Cook and Johnstone, JJ., dissent.

Lyons, J., recuses himself.

See, J., files statement of nonrecusal.

SEE, Justice (statement of nonrecusal).

The plaintiff, Seven Up Bottling Company of Jasper, Inc. ("Seven Up"), through its attorney, has moved for my recusal in this case. Because, when I first considered the motion, I thought further information would be useful in resolving the recusal issue, the clerk of this Court sent my response to the recusal motion to counsel for all parties involved in this case. That response requested that the law firm of Walston, Wells, Anderson & Bains ("Walston Wells") provide me with the following information by way of affidavit:

- (a) Mr. Larry Childs's interest in Walston Wells;
- (b) the materiality of a particular client involved in this appeal, Archer Daniels Midland Company, to Walston Wells;
- (c) the effect the result of this appeal will have on Walston Wells;
- (d) the effect the result of this appeal will have on Mr. Childs's [72] interest in Walston Wells;
- (e) whether Mr. Childs will receive a commission, contingency fee, or bonus from this case, or from all of the firm's cases for a particular time period, that is dependent in any way on the outcome of this appeal;
- (f) whether Mr. Childs will receive a compensation increase when the firm reaches a certain dollar amount of income in a given time period, and whether, and to what extent, the outcome of this appeal will affect the dollar amount of that income; and
- (g) the number and identity of the cases Walston Wells currently has before this Court.

After making an in camera examination of the affidavits provided by Walston Wells, I have determined that Mr. Childs has no interest in Walston Wells that will be substantially affected by the outcome of this case.⁷ Because Mr. Childs's interest will [*991] not be substantially affected, and because there are no other grounds asserted for questioning my impartiality, it is my constitutional duty to decide this case. I, therefore, decline to recuse myself.

[73] I.

Seven Up has moved for my recusal based on the fact that Larry Childs is my brother-in-law and is a partner in the law firm of Walston Wells, and the fact that Walston Wells is lead counsel for one of the defendants, Archer Daniels Midland Company ("ADM"). Mr. Childs did not appear as counsel. Nonetheless, because he is a partner in Walston Wells, it is possible to conceive of circumstances under which he might benefit to some degree from his firm's representation of one of the defendants. Therefore, I will address the concerns raised by Seven Up in its motion for my recusal.

II.

⁷ Because this case presents the same issues as Abbott Laboratories v. Durrett (No. 1960464), another case presently pending before this Court, I have also taken into account the effect the result of that case will have on Mr. Childs's interest in Walston Wells. I note that the plaintiffs in Durrett argue that my recusal decision should also take into account other cases not presently before this Court in which, they assert, Walston Wells is involved and which, they assert, may be affected by the outcome of this case. "Where a party seeks to create an artificial appearance of bias, ... recusal will generally not be required, because the duty of the judge to decide that case outweighs the appearance of partiality." Dunlop Tire Corp. v. Allen, 725 So. 2d 960, 977 (Ala. 1998) (See, J., statement of nonrecusal) (discussing whether a lawyer's threat to file a separate lawsuit against the judge creates an appearance of partiality). "To hold otherwise would allow a litigant to control judicial proceedings whenever a litigant becomes dissatisfied with the course of the proceedings." Id. A party cannot be permitted to "judge-shop" by seeking out information unknown to the judge, and then disclosing that information to the judge in order thereby to create an appearance of bias that will allow the party selectively to disqualify a judge the party believes will decide a case in a particular way. I will not recuse myself based on those cases not before this Court.

Seven Up argues that I am required to recuse on the basis that Mr. Childs's association with Walston Wells mandates my per se disqualification under the Canons of Judicial Ethics.⁸ The defendants respond with the argument that I am not required to recuse, because Mr. Childs has no association with the case other than the fact that he is a partner in a law firm involved in the case. They argue that under Alabama law that circumstance alone does not require recusal.

[74] "The law of recusal reflects two fundamental judicial policies: First, it is the [*992] duty of a judge to decide cases.⁹ [75] Second, a judge should be a neutral, or impartial, decision-maker."¹⁰ Dunlop Tire Corp. v. Allen.

⁸ Seven Up also maintains that my impartiality might reasonably be questioned by members of the public because I failed "to expressly disclose the existence of [my] relationship [to Mr. Childs] to Seven Up" Seven Up cites an advisory opinion of the Judicial Inquiry Commission ("JIC") that states:

"In all ... cases in which a party is represented by a member of a law firm of which the judge's sister-in-law is a partner, the judge should disclose the existence of the relationship to the parties and their attorneys. The general rule is that 'it is the judge's obligation to disclose all possibly disqualifying facts.'"

Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 97-653 (June 27, 1997) (quoting J. Shaman et al., Judicial Conduct and Ethics, § 5.26 (1990)).

First, I have disclosed "Larry B. Childs, Esq., of Walston, Wells, Anderson & Bains--Birmingham" continuously on my recusal list, filed with the Supreme Court clerk's office, since February 5, 1997, shortly after I assumed my position on this Court. Second, Canon 3D, which the JIC was interpreting, does not require disclosure in every instance in which the law firm of a lawyer relative is before the judge. Rather, it is the purpose of Canon 3D to permit a judge who is already disqualified by the terms of Canon 3C(1)(c) or Canon 3C(1)(d) to avoid withdrawing from the proceedings, through disclosure and consent of the parties and their attorneys. Cannon 3D provides:

"A judge disqualified by the terms of Canon 3C(1)(c) or Canon 3C(1)(d) may, instead of withdrawing from the proceeding, disclose in the record the basis of his disqualification. If based on such disclosure, the parties and lawyers, independently of the judge's participation, all agree in writing that the judge's relationship is immaterial or that his financial interest is insubstantial, the judge is no longer disqualified, and may participate in the proceeding. The agreement signed by all parties and lawyers shall be incorporated in the record of the proceeding."

Accordingly, the disclosure requirement imposed by the Canons of Judicial Ethics and discussed in the JIC opinion would not be effective until and unless the circumstances of the case otherwise required my recusal.

⁹ I have written in a statement of nonrecusal:

"The Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of Alabama of 1901 impose on judges the duty to decide cases. See U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 (vesting the 'judicial Power of the United States ... in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish');

id. at art. VI ('All ... judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution');

Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm, Inc., 514 U.S. 211, 218-19, 131 L. Ed. 2d 328, 115 S. Ct. 1447 (1995) ('Article III establishes a "judicial department" with the "province and duty" ... to decide "cases."') (quoting Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177, 2 L. Ed. 60 (1803)) (emphasis added)); Marbury, 5 U.S. at 180 (stating that a judge's oath to support the Constitution requires that he exercise the judicial power and decide cases in a manner consistent with fundamental law); Pierson v. Ray, 386 U.S. 547, 554, 18 L. Ed. 2d 288, 87 S. Ct. 1213 (1967) ('It is a judge's duty to decide all cases within his jurisdiction');

Ala. Const. 1901 amend. 328, § 6.01(a) ('The judicial power of the state shall be vested exclusively in a unified judicial system which shall consist of a supreme court');

id. at § 279 (requiring 'all officers, executive and judicial, ... [to] take the following oath or affirmation: "I, solemnly swear ... that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of Alabama ... and that I will faithfully and honestly discharge the duties of the office upon which I am about to enter"'); Federated Guaranty Life Ins. Co. v. Bragg, 393 So. 2d 1386, 1389 (Ala. 1981) ("It is the duty of the judge to adjudicate the decisive issues involved in the controversy ... and to make binding declarations concerning such issues, thus putting the controversy to rest") (citation omitted)."

Dunlop Tire Corp. v. Allen, 725 So. 2d 960, 976 (Ala. 1998) (See, J., statement of nonrecusal).

¹⁰ I also wrote the following in my statement of nonrecusal in Dunlop:

725 So. 2d 960, 976 (Ala. 1998) (See, J., statement of nonrecusal). The policies underpinning a judge's duty to vote on cases before him and a judge's duty to uphold the actual and apparent impartiality of the judiciary are embodied in Alabama's Canons of Judicial Ethics. Canon 3, Ala. Can. Jud. Eth. With respect to recusal, Canon 3C provides in pertinent part:

[76]

"(1) A judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his disqualification is required by law^[11] or his impartiality [993] might reasonably be questioned, including but not limited to instances where:

"....

"(d) He or his spouse, or a person within the fourth degree of relationship to either of them, or the spouse of such a person:

"(i) Is named a party to the proceeding, or an officer, director, or trustee [*77] of a party;

"(ii) Is known by the judge to have an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding;

"(iii) Is to the judge's knowledge likely to be a material witness in the proceeding."

There is no allegation that I have a personal bias for or against Seven Up. Mr. Childs is not a party to this proceeding; he is not an officer, a director, or a trustee of any party; and there is no indication that Mr. Childs is likely to be a material witness in the proceeding. Moreover, Mr. Childs does not himself represent any party in this case.¹²

"The Due Process Clauses of the Constitution of the United States and of the Alabama Constitution require that a judge be a neutral decision-maker. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 ('No State shall ... deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law....'); Concrete Pipe & Products of California, Inc. v. Construction Laborers Pension Trust for Southern California, 508 U.S. 602, 617, 124 L. Ed. 2d 539, 113 S. Ct. 2264 (1993) ('Due process requires a "neutral and detached judge"'); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Lavoie, 475 U.S. 813, 89 L. Ed. 2d 823, 106 S. Ct. 1580 (1986) (examining due process ramifications of a state Justice's financial interest in the outcome of a case on which he had ruled); Stallworth v. City of Evergreen, 680 So. 2d 229, 233-34 (Ala.) ('An unbiased and impartial decision-maker is one of the most, if not the most, fundamental ... requirements of fairness and due process.'), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1007, 136 L. Ed. 2d 399, 117 S. Ct. 509 (1996); Ala. Const. 1901, § 6 ('In all criminal prosecutions, the accused ... shall not be ... deprived of life, liberty, or property, except by due process of law'); id. at § 13 ('Every person, for any injury done him, in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have a remedy by due process of law'); Ex parte Wilkey, 233 Ala. 375, 377, 172 So. 111, 113 (1937) (recognizing that §§ 6 and 13 of the Constitution of Alabama of 1901 require courts to be 'impartial tribunals').

"Thus, the recusal law embodied in statutes, court decisions, and codes of ethics reflects both the duty to decide cases and the requirement of impartiality. See, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 455 (requiring federal judges to recuse themselves from any proceeding in which their 'impartiality might reasonably be questioned'); Ala. Code 1975, § 12-1-12 (prescribing general grounds for disqualification of Alabama judges from the trial of cases)."

Dunlop Tire Corp., 725 So. 2d at 976 (See, J., statement of nonrecusal).

¹¹ Ala. Code 1975, § 12-1-12, states:

"No judge of any court shall sit in any case or proceeding in which he is interested or related to any party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity or in which he has been of counsel or in which is called in question the validity of any judgment or judicial proceeding in which he was of counsel or the validity or construction of any instrument or paper prepared or signed by him as counsel or attorney, without the consent of the parties entered of record or put in writing if the court is not of record."

¹² Of course, if Mr. Childs did represent a party before this Court, my recusal would be required. Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 97-653 (June 27, 1997) ("A judge is disqualified under Canon 3C(1)(d) in any proceeding in which an attorney is related to the judge within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity."). The Judicial Inquiry Commission has based that disqualification on Canon 3C(1)(d)(i):

[78] Although the courts of Alabama have not addressed whether a judge must recuse himself because his relative is affiliated with a law firm that represents a party before him, the Commentary to Canon 3C(1)(d) states:

"The fact that a lawyer in a proceeding is affiliated with a law firm with which a lawyer-relative of the judge is affiliated does not of itself disqualify the judge. Under appropriate circumstances, the fact that 'his impartiality might be reasonably questioned' under Canon 3C(1), or that the lawyer-relative is known by the judge to have an interest in the law firm that could be 'substantially affected by the outcome of the proceedings' under Canon 3C(1)(d)(ii) may require his disqualification."

The Judicial Inquiry Commission has stated:

"The mere fact that a lawyer representing a party to a proceeding 'is affiliated with a law firm with which a lawyer-relative [of the judge] is affiliated' does not cause the judge's disqualification. It is thus the opinion of the Commission that the mere existence of the uncle's partnership interest is not a disqualifying factor."

Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 88-338 (September 30, 1988).

"However, [79] the judge is disqualified if other circumstances exist under which the judge's 'impartiality might reasonably be questioned' (Canon 3C(1)), if she has a personal bias or prejudice concerning [*994] a party as a result of the fact that a party is represented by this law firm (Canon 3C(1)(a)), or if the judge's sister-in-law is known by the judge to have an interest in the law firm that could be 'substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding.' Canon 3C(1)(d)(ii)."

Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 97-653 (June 27, 1997).

The JJC has suggested a process for a judge to consider when he presides over a case in which a lawyer representing a party is affiliated with a law firm with which a lawyer relative of the judge is also affiliated:

"1. ... The judge should disclose the existence of the relationship to the parties and their attorneys even though the mere fact of the relationship is not a basis for disqualification. ...

"2. The judge must then determine whether there exist any factors, other than the relationship, which, in conjunction with the relationship, would cause the judge's impartiality to be reasonably questioned. ...

"....

[80]

"3. Finally, the judge should determine whether the lawyer-relative has an interest in the law firm that could be 'substantially affected by the outcome of the proceedings' under Canon 3C(1)(d)(ii). ...

"... The judge is accountable only for those facts of which the judge has personal knowledge or of which he should have known. ... A judge need not initiate investigation to determine whether or not his relative has an interest in the law firm that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceedings unless the judge has reason to believe that such an interest exists.

"... There are no precise and rigid formulas which may be applied in these circumstances. However, the good faith and conscientious application of the principles set out above should enable a judge to determine whether disqualification is required."

Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 93-500 (August 31, 1993).

Richard Flamm has discussed that provision of the ABA Model Canons of Judicial Ethics that is substantially similar to Canon 3C(1)(d), Ala. Can. Jud. Eth. He explains:

"Canon 3C(1)(d)(i) provides that a judge is disqualified when, inter alia, a person within the fourth degree of relationship to the judge or his spouse is an officer, director, or trustee of a party. This provision has always been interpreted to require disqualification of a judge where a party's attorney is related to either the judge or the judge's spouse within the fourth degree, either by consanguinity or affinity."

Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 97-637 (March 14, 1997). The JJC has also relied on Canon 3C(1)(d)(ii), which requires a judge to disqualify himself if "he or his spouse, or a person within the fourth degree of relationship to either of them, ... is known by the judge to have an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding" See Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 89-356 (April 4, 1989).

"Courts generally have reasoned that the mere fact that a judge's relative is somehow affiliated with [81] a law firm representing a party in a proceeding pending before him does not constitute good cause for concluding that the judge is disqualified per se."

"It is generally agreed that when a case is being handled by an attorney other than a sitting judge's relative herself, the judge's impartiality may reasonably be questioned only when the judge's relative has an interest in the law firm that could be 'substantially affected' by the outcome of the proceeding. However, determining whether a judge's attorney-relative possesses such an interest is not always simple.

"The interest of a judge's relative is most likely to be substantially affected by a judge's decision when that interest is a direct, pecuniary one; concerns of this nature are most likely to arise in circumstances in which judges are called on to make attorney fee awards, and the income of the judge's relative is somehow dependent on the nature of that award." ¹³

[82] [*995] Richard E. Flamm, Judicial Disqualification: Recusal and Disqualification of Judges, §§ 8.5.3 and 8.5.4 (1996). Thus, Alabama's rejection of a per se recusal rule based on a lawyer relative's affiliation with a law firm is consistent with the general rule.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reasons that "it would simply be unrealistic to assume ... that partners in today's law firms invariably 'have an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of' any case in which any other partner is involved." Pashaiyan v. Ecclestan Properties, Ltd., 88 F.3d 77, 83-84 (2d Cir. 1996) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 455\(b\)\(5\)\(iii\)). ¹⁴ In determining that recusal was not required in the case before it, the Second Circuit relied heavily on the fact that the trial judge, whose recusal was being sought, had considered, from information provided under seal, the gross revenue of his relative's law firm; the extent to which his relative, as a partner in the law firm, participated in the net income of the law firm; and whether his relative's interest in the firm would be "substantially affected" by the outcome of the specific [83] case before the judge. ¹⁵ [85] The Second

¹³ Flamm continues, pointing out that there is authority to the contrary:

"[A] number of courts and commentators have concluded that when the judge's relative is a partner in a firm appearing in a matter presently pending before him, judicial disqualification is mandated, but disqualification of the judge is not necessarily mandated when the judge's relative is merely an associate."

Richard E. Flamm, Judicial Disqualification: Recusal and Disqualification of Judges, § 8.5.5 (1996). He also notes:

"While judicial disqualification is sometimes sought on the ground that a party to a proceeding is a client of a judge-relative's firm, it is ordinarily insufficient to establish merely that the party is just any client; rather, it may be necessary to show that the client is a 'material' client. The loss of a nonmaterial client--by definition--would not 'substantially affect' most law firms and, hence, would not substantially affect the interest of the judge's attorney-relative."

Id. at § 8.5.6.

¹⁴ The statute quoted, 28 U.S.C. § 455\(b\)\(5\) \(1976\), requires that any justice, judge, magistrate, or referee "shall ... disqualify himself ... [where] he or his spouse, or a person within the third degree of relationship to either of them, or the spouse of such a person:

- "(i) Is a party to the proceeding, or an officer, director, or trustee of a party;
- "(ii) Is acting as a lawyer in the proceeding;
- "(iii) Is known by the judge to have an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding;
- "(iv) Is to the judge's knowledge likely to be a material witness in the proceeding."

¹⁵ The Second Circuit also noted that the judge

"[took] judicial notice of those matters that add to the reputation of major law firms in the City of New York and concluded that insofar as the reputation of [the relative's law firm] is concerned, this matter is not of that significance to either add [to] or detract from its reputation in the City of New York"

Circuit determined that the trial judge's conclusion that his relative's interest would not be substantially affected "should not be ignored in favor of an unrealistic generalization that in our view is not supported, much less compelled, by the text of § 455(b)(5)(iii)." Id. at 84. Accord "Statement of Recusal Policy [of Seven Justices]," Supreme Court of the United States, November 1, 1993 ("We do not think it would serve the public interest to go beyond the requirements of the statute, and to recuse ourselves, out of an excess of caution, whenever a relative is a partner in the firm before us or acted as a lawyer at an earlier stage. Even one unnecessary recusal impairs the functioning of the Court. Given the size and number of today's national law firms, and the frequent appearance before us of many of them in a single case, recusal might become a common occurrence, and opportunities would be multiplied for 'strategizing' recusals, that is, selecting law firms with an eye to producing the recusal of particular Justices."). Although it may be that some jurisdictions may automatically disqualify a judge from cases involving [84] his brother-in-law's law firm,¹⁶ [86] it is the Second Circuit's [*996] rationale that is consistent with the current state of Alabama law.¹⁷

Pashaian, 88 F.3d at 84.

¹⁶ The United States Court of Appeals for the old Fifth Circuit required recusal when a judge's relative was a partner in a law firm involved in a case pending before the judge. That court stated:

"We hold that when a partner in a law firm is related to a judge within the third degree, that partner will always be 'known by the judge to have an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome' of a proceeding involving the partner's law firm."

Potashnick v. Port City Constr. Co., 609 F.2d 1101, 1113 (5th Cir. 1980) (basing its decision on 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(5)(iii), which is identical to Canon 3C(1)(d)(ii), Ala. Can. Jud. Eth.).

On the other hand, the present Fifth Circuit has refused to apply this rationale to a claim that, because the judge's husband was a partner in a law firm that had represented a party on numerous occasions, the judge's impartiality was called into question. In re Billeddeaux, 972 F.2d 104, 105-06 (5th Cir. 1992) (finding the interest to be "too remote and speculative to support or suggest recusal"). In Billeddeaux, the relative's law firm was not involved in the case then before the judge. The argument for recusal was that the law firm represented one of the parties before the judge on an ongoing basis and was receiving fees from those representations at the time the case was before the judge. Id.

The Second Circuit specifically rejected the rule of automatic recusal as set forth in Potashnick. Pashaian v. Eccelston Properties, Ltd., 88 F.3d 77 (2d Cir. 1996).

¹⁷ Finally, I note that although the United States Supreme Court has not issued an opinion resolving the conflict between the rationales of the Second and Fifth Circuits, seven Justices of that Court released a "Statement of Recusal Policy" on November 1, 1993. In that statement, the seven Justices set forth personal recusal policies that they would follow in certain circumstances. The Justices stated:

"A relative's partnership status, or participation in earlier stages of the litigation, is relevant ... only under one of two less specific provisions of § 455, which require recusal when the judge knows that the relative has 'an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding,' [28 U.S.C.] § 455(b)(5)(iii), or when for any reason the judge's 'impartiality might reasonably be questioned,' § 455(a). We think that a relative's partnership in the firm appearing before us, or his or her previous work as a lawyer on a case that later comes before us, does not automatically trigger these provisions. If that were the intent of the law, the per se 'lawyer-related recusal' requirement of § 455(b)(5)(ii) would have expressed it. Per se recusal for a relative's membership in the partnership appearing here, or for a relative's work on the case below, would render the limitation of § 455(b)(5)(ii) to personal work, and to present representation, meaningless."

"Statement of Recusal Policy," Supreme Court of the United States, November 1, 1993 (emphasis in original). Although the Justices are not automatically recused, they stated that they would personally recuse themselves from cases involving a law firm in which a relative is a partner who shares profits. The Justices explained:

"It seems to us that in virtually every case before us with retained counsel there exists a genuine possibility that success or failure will affect the amount of the fee, and hence a genuine possibility that the outcome will have a substantial effect upon each partner's compensation. Since it is impractical to assure ourselves of the absence of such consequences in each individual case, we shall recuse ourselves from all cases in which appearances on behalf of parties are made by firms in [87] In my review of this Court's cases, I have noted, for example, that two former Justices recused themselves from cases involving the law firm where their children were partners, but that when this Court, on July 31, 1998, initially issued an opinion in Abbott Laboratories v. Durrett (No. 1960464) (withdrawn this date on rehearing ex mero motu, and opinion substituted; see So. 2d), another Justice did not recuse under similar circumstances. The former situations involved a law firm with four partners and two lawyers of counsel. Thus, absent special provisions in the partnership agreement, any case could have a direct and substantial pecuniary impact on every partner. On the other hand, the law firm involved in the latter situation had [*997] over 300 lawyers, with almost 100 partners in the office where the child practices.¹⁸ The likelihood that a single case would have a substantial effect on the interest of a partner in such a firm is slight. Walston Wells is a law firm with 21 partners, 1 lawyer of counsel, and 10 associates. Although one could imagine situations where the interest of a partner of Walston Wells could be substantially affected by the outcome [88] of a case, the information contained in the affidavits provided by Walston Wells establishes that no interest Mr. Childs has in Walston Wells will be substantially affected by the outcome of this case.

"The Canon 3C(1) recusal test is: 'Would a person of ordinary prudence in the judge's position knowing all the facts known to the judge find that there is a reasonable basis for questioning the judge's impartiality?'" Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 93-500 (August 31, 1993) (quoting In re Sheffield, 465 So. 2d 350, 356 (Ala. 1984)). After examining the particular facts of this case, I am aware of no factors, other than the relationship, that might reasonably cause my impartiality to be questioned.¹⁹

[89] Normally, a judge need not initiate an investigation into whether his lawyer relative has an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of a case before him. See Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 93-500 (August 31, 1993) ("A judge need not initiate investigation to determine whether or not his relative has an interest in the law firm that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceedings unless the judge has reason to believe that such an interest exists."). However, because Seven Up has questioned whether the Canons of Judicial Ethics prohibit me from voting in this case, and because Mr. Childs is a partner in Walston Wells, I have investigated his interest in the firm, and whether the case before this Court will substantially affect that interest. After making an in camera examination of the affidavits provided by Walston Wells, I have determined that Mr. Childs has no interest in Walston Wells that will be substantially affected by the outcome of this case. Because no interest of Mr. Childs will be substantially affected, and because there are no other grounds asserted for questioning my impartiality, it is my constitutional duty to decide [90] this case. I, therefore, decline to recuse myself.

Hooper, C.J., and Maddox, Houston, Kennedy,²⁰ Cook, Brown, and Johnstone, JJ., concur.

Dissent by: COOK; JOHNSTONE

which our relatives are partners, unless we have received from the firm written assurance that income from Supreme Court litigation is, on a permanent basis, excluded from our relatives' partnership shares."

Id. Thus, although the seven Justices rejected a per se recusal policy like that set forth in Potashnick, 609 F.2d 1101 (5th Cir. 1980), they decided, in the interest of practicality, that they would recuse themselves from all such cases unless they "received from the firm written assurance that income from Supreme Court litigation is, on a permanent basis, excluded from [their] relatives' partnership shares." "Statement of Recusal Policy," supra.

¹⁸ It may also be that there is a difference in the nature of the fee arrangements. For example, contingent fees are dependent on the outcome of litigation, while noncontingent fixed or hourly fees are not.

¹⁹ The JIC has listed the following as "other factors" to be considered:

"Whether the lawyer-relative would receive a commission, contingency, or bonus from the instant case, or all of the firm's cases for a time period; whether the relative would receive a salary increase when the firm reaches a certain dollar amount in a given time period; the degree of kinship between the judge and the relative; the number of cases the firm has before the judge; and any other connections, dealings or relationships of the judge to other members of the relative's law firm."

Ala. Jud. Inquiry Comm'n Adv. Op. 93-500 (August 31, 1993).

²⁰ Justice Kennedy's vote regarding the motion to recuse was made prior to his resignation on June 11, 1999.

Dissent

COOK, Justice (dissenting).

I respectfully dissent, for the reasons expressed in my dissent in [Abbott Laboratories v. Durrett, \[Ms. 1960464, June 25, 1999\] 1999 Ala. LEXIS 196, So. 2d \(Ala. 1999\)](#).

JOHNSTONE, Justice (dissenting).

I respectfully dissent, for the reasons stated in my dissent in [Abbott Laboratories v. Durrett, \[Ms. 1960464, June 25, 1999\] 1999 Ala. LEXIS 196, So. 2d \(Ala. 1999\)](#).

End of Document

Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n

United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit

June 29, 1999, Filed

No. 98-5061

Reporter

182 F.3d 1132 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14618 ; 51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1253 ; 1999 Colo. J. C.A.R. 4105

CARDOONS, L.C., an Oklahoma Limited Liability Company, Plaintiff - Appellant, v. MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL PLAYERS ASSOCIATION, an unincorporated association, Defendant - Appellee.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Oklahoma. (D.C. No. 93-CV-576-E). D.C. Judge JAMES O. ELLISON.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

immunity, threats, prelitigation, petitions, sham, probable cause, rights, infringement, baseless, cards, district court, players, threat of litigation, correspondence, lawsuit, antitrust, enjoyed, incidental use, parody, libel, actual litigation, summary judgment, private party, good faith, threatening, good-faith, discovery, proximate, baseball, likeness

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN1 Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides general immunity from antitrust liability to private parties who petition the government for redress, notwithstanding the anticompetitive purpose or consequences of their petitions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN2 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Although broad and extensive, Noerr-Pennington immunity is not a shield for a petitioner whose conduct, although ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The court has established a two-part definition of sham litigation: First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of the definition of sham, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon. This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

To ascertain "baselessness," a court must consider whether the litigant had "probable cause" to initiate the legal action. If there is probable cause, the defendant automatically enjoys Noerr-Pennington immunity, and the second, subjective motivation prong of the Professional Real Estate test becomes irrelevant. Probable cause to sue may exist when the law is unsettled or when an action is arguably warranted by existing law or at the very least is based on an objectively good faith argument for the extension of existing law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Pre-litigation threats of suit enjoy the same immunity as litigation itself, so long as the threats are not shams.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Whether or not pre-litigation threats are consummated, such threats enjoy the same level of protection from liability as litigation itself. In addition, when considering whether pre-litigation threats enjoy Noerr-Pennington immunity, the court concludes that a court must apply the two-part sham test.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

182 F.3d 1132, *1132L 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14618, 1L51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1253, 1253

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN7 [down] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews the grant or denial of summary judgment de novo, applying the same legal standard used by the district court pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

In the Noerr-Pennington context, a court may decide probable cause as a matter of law at the summary judgment stage when a defendant raises Noerr-Pennington immunity as a defense and the predicate facts are undisputed.

Torts > ... > Invasion of Privacy > Appropriation > General Overview

HN9 [down] Invasion of Privacy, Appropriation

The law recognizes an incidental use exception to its right of publicity law that applies when a person's name or likeness is used for purposes other than taking commercial advantage of his reputation, prestige, or other value associated with him.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Defamation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Absolute Privileges

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

HN10 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A defendant who has probable cause to threaten litigation and makes no assertion beyond the legal and factual bases for the threats, may enjoy Noerr-Pennington immunity from a claim of libel.

Counsel: James W. Tilly (Craig A. Fitzgerald with him on the briefs), Tilly & Associates, Tulsa, Oklahoma, for Plaintiff - Appellant.

Russell S. Jones, Jr. (William E. Quirk and Leslie A. Greathouse of Shughart Thomson & Kilroy, Kansas City, Missouri, and James E. Weger of Jones, Givens, Gotcher & Bogan, Tulsa, Oklahoma, with him on the brief), Shughart Thomson & Kilroy, Kansas City, Missouri, for Defendant - Appellee.

Judges: Before EBEL, McWILLIAMS and LUCERO, Circuit Judges. EBEL, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

Opinion by: LUCERO

Opinion

[1254] [*1134] LUCERO, Circuit Judge.

This case requires us to decide whether Noerr-Pennington immunity can attach to threats of litigation made with probable cause. Applying the "objectively baseless" test articulated in Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993), the district court concluded that the non-consummated threats of a lawsuit made by the Major League Baseball Players Association to Cardtoons and Champs Marketing, Inc., enjoys Noerr-Pennington [2] protection. We exercise jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and affirm.

I

Cardtoons, L.C. ("Cardtoons"), produces parody trading cards that feature caricatures of active major league baseball players.¹ Cardtoons contracted with Champs Marketing, Inc. ("Champs"), an Ohio corporation, to print the cards. Major League Baseball Players Association ("MLBPA"), the exclusive collective bargaining agent for all active major league baseball players, is the assignee of the publicity rights of current players and handles licensing agreements authorizing the use of their identities.

In a letter to Cardtoons dated June 18, 1993 ("Cardtoons letter"), MLBPA claimed that by producing and selling the cards, Cardtoons was "violating the valuable property rights of MLBPA [3] and the players." The MLBPA threatened to "pursue its full legal remedies" if Cardtoons refused to cease production and sale of the cards. Appellant's App. at 8-9. In a similar letter dated the same day ("Champs letter"), MLBPA also threatened Champs with litigation if it did not stop "participating in Cardtoons's illegal activities." Appellant's App. at 10. Upon receipt of the letter, Champs notified Cardtoons that it intended to stop printing the cards.

Four days later, Cardtoons filed suit in federal district court for a declaratory judgment on the issue of whether its cards violated MLBPA's publicity and intellectual property rights. Also seeking injunctive relief,² Cardtoons asked the court to bar MLBPA from interfering with Champs and other third parties involved in the production and sale of the cards. Additionally, the suit alleged that MLBPA had tortiously interfered with Cardtoons's contractual relations with Champs. MLBPA moved to dismiss the complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and filed counterclaims seeking declaratory judgment, injunctive relief, and damages under Oklahoma's publicity rights statute, Oklahoma Stat. tit. 21 § 839.1 and 839.2 (1993).

¹ A more thorough description of the humorous cards, as well as the less humorous litigation surrounding the cards' production, can be found in Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Assoc., 95 F.3d 959, 962-64 (10th Cir. 1996).

² As part of its request for injunctive relief, Cardtoons sought a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction to prevent MLBPA from interfering with Cardtoons's contractual relations with Champs. Cardtoons subsequently withdrew its request for these additional remedies when they were rendered moot by Champs's decision to stop producing the cards.

[4] Unless Cardtoons was entitled to produce and sell the cards, as alleged in the claim for declaratory judgment, it could not recover damages on the tortious interference claims. Therefore, the parties agreed that before the [1255] adjudication of Cardtoons's tort claim, a magistrate judge should conduct an evidentiary hearing and issue a report limited to Cardtoons's declaratory judgment claim and MLBPA's counterclaims.

[*1135] Concluding that Cardtoons's activities violated the baseball players' rights of publicity under Oklahoma law, the magistrate recommended judgment on these claims in favor of MLBPA. The district court initially adopted the recommendation. See Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 838 F. Supp. 1501 (N.D. Okla. 1993). Following the Supreme Court's decision in Campbell v. Acuff-Rose Music, Inc., 510 U.S. 569, 127 L. Ed. 2d 500, 114 S. Ct. 1164 \(1994\), however, the district court concluded that the parody cards enjoyed First Amendment protection against MLBPA's infringement claims. Accordingly, the court vacated its initial decision and entered judgment for Cardtoons. See Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 868 F. Supp. 1266 \(N.D. Okla. 1994\) ("Cardtoons I"). We affirmed, holding that the parody cards are "an important form of entertainment and social commentary that deserve First Amendment protection." Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Assoc., 95 F.3d 959, 976 \(10th Cir. 1996\) ("Cardtoons II").

Having prevailed on the declaratory judgment claim, Cardtoons returned to the district court to pursue its claims for damages against MLBPA. In addition to the claim for tortious interference with contract, Cardtoons asserted new claims for prima facie tort, libel, and negligence, all stemming from the allegations contained in the Cardtoons and Champs letters. Concluding that both letters were immune from liability under the "Noerr-Pennington" doctrine, the district court granted summary judgment for MLBPA and dismissed all of Cardtoons's state law claims. See Cardtoons, L.C., v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22242, No. 93-C-576-E (N.D. Okla. Mar. 12, 1998) ("Cardtoons III"). Cardtoons challenges the court's application of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and appeals the grant of summary judgment.³ Cardtoons also appeals the court's decision to stay discovery pending [6] its ruling on MLBPA's motion for summary judgment.

II

As originally articulated, HN1 the Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides general immunity from antitrust liability to private parties who petition the government for redress, notwithstanding the anticompetitive purpose or consequences of their petitions. See Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135-38, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\) (establishing immunity for petitions to state legislature); see also United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\) (extending Noerr immunity to petitions of public officials). The Court later extended Noerr-Pennington immunity to the right of access to courts. See California [7] Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\) (citations omitted). Moreover, because it emanates from the First Amendment right of petition, see Bright v. Moss Ambulance Service, Inc., 824 F.2d 819, 821 n.1 \(10th Cir. 1987\) (quoting City of Lafayette, La. v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 399, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 \(1978\)), Noerr-Pennington immunity stands independent of its aborigine roots in antitrust, see, e.g., Bill Johnson's Restaurants, Inc. v. NLRB, 461 U.S. 731, 742-43, 76 L. Ed. 2d 277, 103 S. Ct. 2161 \(1983\) (immunizing employer from prosecution for unfair labor practice even if an otherwise valid suit against employee is driven by a retaliatory motive); NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 913-14, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215, 102 S. Ct. 3409 \(1982\) (immunizing a nonviolent business boycott seeking to vindicate economic and equal rights); South Dakota v. Kansas City Southern Indus., Inc., 880 F.2d 40, 50 \(8th Cir. 1989\) (immunizing defendant from claim of interference with contractual relations).

³ In its briefs, Cardtoons seems to appeal the grant of summary judgment only with respect to the Champs letter. We note, however, that our conclusions would not change if the appeal also involved the Cardtoons letter.

[*1136] HN2 Although broad and extensive, Noerr-Pennington immunity is [8] not a shield for a petitioner whose conduct, although "ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere with the business relationships of a competitor." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144. HN3 The Supreme Court has established a two-part definition of sham litigation:

First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of our definition of sham, [1256] the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor," Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144, through the "use [of] the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon," Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 \(1991\). This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability.

Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60-61, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 \(1993\). HN4

To ascertain "baselessness," a court must consider whether the litigant had "probable cause" to initiate the legal action. Id. at 62. If there is probable cause, the defendant automatically enjoys Noerr-Pennington immunity, and the second, subjective motivation prong of the Professional Real Estate test becomes irrelevant. See id. at 63. Probable cause to sue may exist when the law is unsettled or when an "action [is] arguably 'warranted by existing law' or at the very least [is] based on an objectively 'good faith argument for the extension . . . of existing law.'" Id. at 65 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 11).

Neither the Supreme Court nor this circuit has directly addressed the issue of whether Noerr-Pennington immunity attaches to the mere threat of a law [10] suit. Confronted with this issue, however, three other circuits have concluded that HN5 prelitigation threats of suit enjoy the same immunity as litigation itself, so long as the threats are not shams. See McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1558-60 \(11th Cir. 1992\); CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 850-51 \(1st Cir. 1985\); Coastal States Mktg., Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1367 \(5th Cir. 1983\). In so holding, the Fifth Circuit reasoned that "it would be absurd to hold that [petitioning immunity] does not protect those acts reasonably and normally attendant upon effective litigation. The litigator should not be protected only when he strikes without warning." Coastal States, 694 F.2d at 1367. Commentators have agreed with this extension and have further developed the policy rationales behind it. See, e.g., Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 205e at 237 (rev. ed. 1997) (withholding immunity from prelitigation communication would curb practices that "provide useful notice and facilitate the resolution of controversies"); Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy § 18.3d at 644 (1994) (immunizing prelitigation threats [11] is vital to "our entire dispute resolution process[, which] is designed to encourage people to resolve their differences if possible before litigating").

Applying Noerr-Pennington protection to prelitigation threats is especially important in the intellectual property context, where warning letters are often used as a deterrent against infringement. See, e.g., Matsushita Electronics Corp. v. Loral Corp., 974 F. Supp. 345, 359 \(S.D.N.Y. 1997\) (concluding that policing letters sent to suspected patent infringers enjoyed Noerr-Pennington immunity); Thermos Co. v. Igloo Products Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14221, 1995 WL 842002, *4 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 27, 1995) (same, for policing letters to alleged trademark infringers); see generally Ronald B. Colley, Notifications of Infringement and Their Consequences, 77 J. Pat. & Trademark Off. Soc'y 246, 246 (1995) (describing notification of suspected intellectual property infringers as a "common reaction" of rights holders).

[*1137] We adopt the legal and policy rationales [12] that have informed other circuits' extension of Noerr-Pennington immunity to prelitigation threats, and hold that HN6 whether or not they are consummated, such threats enjoy the same level of protection from liability as litigation itself. In addition, when considering whether prelitigation threats enjoy Noerr-Pennington immunity, we conclude that we must apply the two-part sham test of Professional Real Estate.

The dissent would bifurcate the test for granting Noerr-Pennington immunity by applying the more lenient Professional Real Estate standard when a party files suit, while requiring a party who merely issues a threat to demonstrate that he acted both in "good-faith" and as a "proximate prologue to actual or imminent litigation." Diss. Op. at 6. This approach creates an incentive to litigate, and would not, as the dissent maintains, protect poorly financed entities like Champs from "private bullying communication." Diss. Op. at 4. Instead, such companies would become more vulnerable to ruinous lawsuits, as the threatening letter takes the form of a legal complaint.

[13]

All of the prelitigation cases from other circuits were decided before Professional Real Estate, and provide us with no uniform standard to determine when a threat to litigate is worthy of Noerr-Pennington protection. See, e.g., McGuire Oil, 958 F.2d at 1560-61 & n.12 (applying subjective test and objectively baseless test); CVD, 769 F.2d at 851 (applying both a "bad faith" test and a test for clear and convincing evidence that the defendant's claim was objectively baseless); but see Coastal States, 694 F.2d at 1372 ("A litigant should enjoy petitioning immunity from the antitrust laws so long as a genuine desire for judicial relief is a significant motivating factor underlying the suit."). We note, however, that to the extent these cases are inconsistent with Professional Real Estate, they are unfaithful to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Professional Real Estate, 508 U.S. at 57, 60 (describing the "objective reasonableness" test as part of the "original formulation" of the Noerr-Pennington sham exception, and declaring that "fidelity to precedent compels us to reject a purely subjective definition of 'sham'"). Indeed, the Eleventh Circuit, when applying a test for sham litigation after the Supreme Court had granted certiorari but before it had decided Professional Real Estate, implied that whatever test the Supreme Court articulates for granting immunity for litigation under Noerr-Pennington must similarly apply to prelitigation threats. See McGuire Oil, 958 F.2d at 1560-61 & n.12.

[14]

[1257] III

"HN1[↑] We review the grant or denial of summary judgment de novo, applying the same legal standard used by the district court pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\)." Kaul v. Stephan, 83 F.3d 1208, 1212 \(10th Cir. 1996\) (citation and internal quotation omitted). Summary judgment is appropriate "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). HN8[↑] In the Noerr-Pennington context, "a court may decide probable cause as a matter of law" at the summary judgment stage when a defendant raises Noerr-Pennington immunity as a defense and the predicate facts are undisputed. Professional Real Estate, 508 U.S. at 63.

A

If MLBPA had probable cause to threaten Champs with litigation, the Champs letter enjoys Noerr-Pennington immunity under the Professional Real Estate test. To determine whether there was probable cause, we must first consider the validity of the underlying threatened action--the infringement suit against Cardtoons for its [15] parody cards--and then turn to the validity of a cause of action against Champs as the printer of the cards.

[*1138] Prior to our decision in Cardtoons II, the only federal appellate court decision addressing the constitutional tensions inherent in a celebrity parody provided some legal support for MLBPA's allegations against Cardtoons. See Cardtoons II, 95 F.3d at 970 (discussing White v. Samsung Electronics America, Inc., 971 F.2d 1395 \(9th Cir. 1992\)). At the time of its prelitigation threats against Champs, MLBPA therefore had probable cause to believe that Cardtoons's parody cards infringed its publicity rights. Furthermore, as

182 F.3d 1132, *1138 (1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14618, 15 L 51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1253, 1257

Cardtoons II demonstrates, MLBPA's infringement claim was premised on a reasonable argument that its publicity rights outweighed Cardtoons's free speech rights. See Cardtoons II, 95 F.3d at 970-76 (applying balancing test and concluding that Cardtoons's speech rights prevail over MLBPA's property rights). Therefore, although MLBPA's infringement claim did not prevail, our prior adjudication shows that "a similarly situated reasonable litigant could have perceived some likelihood of success." Professional Real Estate, 508 U.S. at 65. As [16] such, the district court could reasonably conclude that MLBPA's threats against Cardtoons were "an objectively plausible effort to enforce rights" and deserved Noerr-Pennington protection. Id.

Cardtoons argues that even if MLBPA's threats against Cardtoons enjoy immunity, our decision in Cardtoons II does not resolve the issue of whether Noerr-Pennington immunity attaches to the Champs letter. In Cardtoons II, we applied Oklahoma's statutory right of publicity law. Here, Cardtoons asserts, Ohio's common law of publicity rights controls because Ohio is the locus of Champs's conduct and its state of residence, and therefore has the most significant contacts to the torts alleged. Ohio's "incidental use" exception to the right of publicity, Cardtoons contends, provides MLBPA with less protection for its publicity rights than it enjoyed under Oklahoma law. Under Ohio law, therefore, MLBPA lacked probable cause for its threats against Champs.

HNg[] Ohio law recognizes an incidental use exception to its right of publicity law that applies when a person's name or likeness is used "for purposes other than taking [commercial] advantage of his reputation, prestige, [17] or other value associated with him." Zacchini v. Scripps-Howard Broadcasting Co., 47 Ohio St. 2d 224, 351 N.E.2d 454, 459 n.4 (Ohio), rev'd on other grounds, 433 U.S. 562, 53 L. Ed. 2d 965, 97 S. Ct. 2849 \(1977\) (quotation and internal citation omitted). In our prior adjudication, we specifically noted that Oklahoma's right of publicity statute also contains a provision that is analogous to the concept of "incidental use." See Cardtoons II, 95 F.3d at 968. We discern no marked difference between the incidental use exception in Oklahoma and Ohio. In both states the applicability of the exception turns on the degree to which a defendant derives commercial benefit from its use of the plaintiff's name or likeness. See 12 Okla. Stat. tit. § 1449(E) (1999) (stating that whether the use of a person's "likeness [is] so directly [1258] connected with commercial" activity as to constitute a violation of the right of publicity presents a question of fact); Zacchini, 351 N.E.2d at 458 n.4 (stating that although the incidental use exception under Ohio law does not apply to the commercial exploitation of another's likeness, the mere fact that a defendant "seeks to make profit" from [18] his endeavor is not enough to establish commercial use).

Moreover, MLBPA had a colorable claim for infringement under Ohio law. One Ohio court has applied the incidental use exception in a situation in which the defendant used an Olympic athlete's name and likeness in the context of accurate, historical information on disposable drinking cups. See Vinci v. American Can Co., 69 Ohio App. 3d 727, 591 N.E.2d 793, 794 \(Ohio Ct. App. 1990\). Because this use was not meant to support or promote the cups, the court found it to be merely incidental. See id. In our conclusion in Cardtoons II that the Oklahoma incidental use exception was inapplicable to the parody cards, we noted that "the players were specifically [*1139] selected for their wide market appeal," and the use of their likeness was "directly connected with a proposed commercial endeavor." Cardtoons II, 95 F.3d at 968. Accordingly, MLBPA's claim would not have been foreclosed under Ohio law.

Even if MLBPA had probable cause to assert a claim of infringement against Champs in Ohio, Cardtoons argues, MLBPA lacked probable cause for the Champs letter because as a printer, Champs was a passive actor and is liable as a contributory [19] tort infringer only if it knew or had reason to know that it was aiding and abetting an infringement. See, e.g., Misut v. Mooney, 124 Misc. 2d 95, 475 N.Y.S.2d 233, 236 \(N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1984\); Maynard v. Port Publications, Inc., 98 Wis. 2d 555, 297 N.W.2d 500, 507 \(Wis. 1980\). The Champs letter, however, provided the very notice that Misut and Maynard require. Cardtoons cannot argue that Champs was not liable unless it had notice of an infringement, while also contending that MLBPA rendered itself ineligible for Noerr-Pennington immunity by providing the required notice.

Moreover, the law of contributory infringement in the publicity rights context is not so settled that it would foreclose MLBPA from making a good faith argument for the extension of existing law by asserting a claim against Champs. See 1 J. Thomas McCarthy, The Rights of Publicity and Privacy § 3.7[E] (1999) (arguing that contributory infringement of a publicity right by a "passive actor" is a colorable claim for which there should be liability).

[20]

We therefore need not resolve the conflict of law and publicity rights issues that Cardtoons raises, because under either potentially controlling legal regime, MLBPA would have had probable cause on its infringement claim against Champs. Accordingly, the Champs letter enjoyed Noerr-Pennington immunity as a threat of litigation.

B

Cardtoons contends that Noerr-Pennington immunity does not extend to its libel claim against MLBPA, which is based not on the MLBPA's threat of litigation but on the allegations in the Champs letter that Cardtoons violated the law. Specifically, the Champs letter states, "[MLBPA] believes that the activities of [Cardtoons] violate the valuable property rights of publicity of the MLBPA and the players themselves." Appellant's App. at 10. The letter contains no further statements of fact or law concerning Cardtoons and its activities, except to characterize them as "illegal." Id.

We hold that HN10 a defendant like MLBPA, who has probable cause to threaten litigation and makes no assertion beyond the legal and factual bases for the threats, may enjoy Noerr-Pennington immunity from a claim of libel. This holding is not inconsistent [\[21\]](#) with McDonald v. Smith, 472 U.S. 479, 86 L. Ed. 2d 384, 105 S. Ct. 2787 \(1985\). There, the Court held that the First Amendment does not provide absolute immunity for petitions to the government that express libelous and damaging falsehoods. See id. at 485. In so holding, the Court relied on the principle at the core of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine that "baseless litigation is not immunized by the First Amendment right to petition." Id. at 484 (quoting Bill Johnson's Restaurants, 461 U.S. at 743).

We have already concluded that MLBPA's threats of litigation were not baseless because it had probable cause to assert a publicity rights infringement claim against Cardtoons. The statements that Cardtoons labels as libelous are coextensive with the threats of litigation to which we have already attached Noerr-Pennington immunity. If Cardtoons's argument prevails, a defendant would be exposed to libel claims even if his litigation or threat to litigate were supported by probable cause. By allowing an alternative cause of action against petitions that are otherwise eligible for immunity, the argument renders Noerr-Pennington a nullity.

[*1140] IV [\[22\]](#)

Cardtoons argues that it was prejudiced by the district court's stay of discovery pending [\[1259\]](#) its adjudication of MLBPA's summary judgment motion. It claims the stay barred it from attempting to discover whether MLBPA had any intent to pursue legal action against Champs, and whether MLBPA had performed any research on potential legal claims prior to issuing the threatening letters. Furthermore, Cardtoons claims that it hoped to discover evidence of MLBPA's subjective intent to dissuade Champs from performing its legitimate duties under its contract with Cardtoons.

Under the Professional Real Estate test, however, MLBPA's subjective intent would have been relevant only if its threats were objectively baseless. MLBPA presented sufficient predicate facts to demonstrate to the district court that as a matter of law, MLBPA had probable cause to threaten suit against Cardtoons and Champs, and that therefore its threats were not objectively baseless. Having affirmed the district court's conclusion that MLBPA is immune from all of Cardtoons's state law claims, we must affirm the district court's stay of discovery. See Professional Real Estate, 508 U.S. at 65-66 (holding that without [\[23\]](#) proof that defendant's infringement action was objectively baseless, circuit court correctly denied request for further discovery).

The district court's opinion is AFFIRMED.

Dissent by: EBEL

Dissent

EBEL, Circuit Judge, dissenting

Although I agree with much of the majority opinion, I respectfully dissent from its holding that (1) prelitigation threats, "whether or not they are consummated . . . enjoy the same level of protection from liability as litigation itself" under the First Amendment doctrine of Noerr-Pennington; and (2) "when considering whether prelitigation threats enjoy Noerr-Pennington immunity . . . we must apply the two-part sham test" of Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. \(PRE\), 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). Maj. Op. at 9. The first holding is flawed because it assumes that all threats of litigation between private parties constitute petitions to the government (which is solely what Noerr-Pennington protects). The second holding is flawed because PRE determines only whether an acknowledged governmental petition is a sham undeserving of Noerr-Pennington immunity, but [24] does not determine whether purely private communications that never go to the government should be considered a governmental petition in the first place. Therefore, granting Noerr-Pennington immunity to all prelitigation threats that satisfy PRE's sham test wrongly extends Noerr-Pennington by immunizing a whole host of prelitigation threats that cannot meet even the threshold criteria of facially presenting a petition to the government. Considered together, the majority's holdings may be read to stand for the proposition that all private correspondence between private parties that threaten objectively reasonable litigation shall be deemed to be petitions to government entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity. To state this proposition is to refute it.

Starting with fundamentals, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which provides immunity for petitions to the government, derives from the First Amendment right "to petition the government for a redress of grievances." U.S. Const. amend. I (emphasis added). The Supreme Court has established that actual litigation is a form of petitioning the government protected by the First Amendment. See California Motor Transport [25] Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510-11, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1971) (defendants entitled to Noerr-Pennington for instituting state and federal proceedings because right to petition includes "right of access to the courts"); PRE, 508 U.S. at 60 (litigation is protected under Noerr-Pennington if it is not sham). However, it is an unwarranted leap neither compelled by the text of the First Amendment, [*1141] nor the Noerr-Pennington line of cases from the Supreme Court or our circuit, to conclude that all purely private correspondence threatening suit constitutes a "petition [to] the government" under the First Amendment.¹

Indeed, the facts of this case belie any suggestion that the MLBPA actually petitioned the government with regard to the threatening letter at issue [26] here--specifically, the letter to Champs. The MLBPA's cease-and-desist letter to Champs threatening suit was never sent to the government; did not ask the government for any response or "redress of grievances"; was not even known to the government prior to Cardtoons' declaratory judgment action against the MLBPA; and did not ever result in any litigation. It seems an unreasonable stretch to shield this purely private correspondence between the MLBPA and Champs under the Noerr-Pennington aegis as a petition to the government.

Besides this textual problem, according Noerr-Pennington immunity to purely private [1260] correspondence poses practical problems. First, the government has supervisory power to prevent the misuse of actual petitions to the government. With litigation, for example, a district court has power under Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 to supervise pleadings, motions, and other representations "presented to the court," and to issue sanctions for violations of the rule. In contrast, the government has much more limited power to regulate the misuse of purely private correspondence because such correspondence will seldom be brought to the government's attention.

¹ In fact, the majority admits that "neither the Supreme Court nor this circuit has directly addressed the issue of whether Noerr-Pennington immunity attaches to the mere threat of a law suit." Maj. Op. at 8.

Second, the majority's [27] extension of Noerr-Pennington immunity to prelitigation threats will prove difficult to implement. How far back in time should Noerr-Pennington immunity extend prior to an actual petition to the government? Litigation is often preceded by lengthy communications of an increasingly acrimonious nature. How early into the process would the majority extend immunity? Would the majority go back to include the first tentative statement of disagreement over the interpretation of a contract, perhaps even before litigation is contemplated? Would it apply Noerr-Pennington even earlier to the structuring of business deals in the first instance, where considerations of potential litigation are often spoken or unspoken factors? Does the word "litigation" have to be explicitly mentioned in the communication in order for it to be privileged, or may it be implied?

Here, all these difficult questions are enormously compounded because no litigation ever actually resulted between the MLBPA and Champs. The threatening cease-and-desist letter from the MLBPA did not at any time--even to today--culminate in an actual petition to the government against Champs. Indeed, Cardtoons suggests that the [28] MLBPA commonly uses such threats of expensive litigation to bully poorly-financed entities who might tarnish the image of professional baseball players -- regardless of whether the MLBPA has any intention to petition the government with a follow-up lawsuit. If this claim can be proven, then it escapes me why such private bullying communication should receive Noerr-Pennington immunity as if it were a petition to the government just because it may state some theoretical but objectively supported claim. When a large company has a practice of threatening others in purely private correspondence without any intent or custom to follow through with actual litigation, there is no basis for awarding Noerr-Pennington immunity under the fiction that the company has petitioned the government. Granting Noerr-Pennington immunity to this type of correspondence declares open season for companies to engage in libelous, anticompetitive, or otherwise unlawful communications without fear of legal repercussion.

[*1142] These textual and practical problems illustrate the imprudence of extending Noerr-Pennington immunity to all prelitigation threats. Simply put, if all such threats between private [29] parties constitute petitions to the government, as the majority premises, then the First Amendment's protection of the right "to petition the government" is transmogrified into a generalized constitutional immunity for private disputes not involving the government in any form. Rather than suffer such a revision of the First Amendment, I would revise the majority's premise.

Noerr-Pennington should protect only prelitigation threats that have a strong and compelling nexus to actual litigation such that the threat may be considered an incipient part of a petition to the government. To prove this nexus, I would require the party invoking Noerr-Pennington to show that its prelitigation threat was a (1) good-faith, (2) objectively reasonable, and (3) proximate prologue to actual or imminent litigation.²

[30] Each element of this three-part test is essential to properly limit the reach of Noerr-Pennington with respect to prelitigation threats. First, the prelitigation threat must be in good faith to ensure that Noerr-Pennington immunity would not protect a private party who sends a threatening communication without any actual bona-fide intent to petition the government. This good-faith requirement is consistent with all circuit cases applying Noerr-Pennington to threats of litigation, as these cases implicitly require such threats to be in good-faith. See McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1559-60 (11th Cir. 1992) (stating that sham exception subjects to antitrust liability defendant whose activities, including threats of litigation, "are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action at all" (emphasis added; quotations omitted)); CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 851 (1st Cir. 1985) ("We hold that the threat of unfounded trade secrets litigation in bad faith is sufficient to [1261] constitute a cause of action under the antitrust laws, provided that the other essential elements of a violation are proven." (emphasis added)); [31] Coastal States Marketing, Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1367, 1372-73 (5th Cir. 1983) (finding threats of litigation and ensuing litigation protected by petitioning immunity because they were in good faith); Alexander v. National Farmers Org., 687 F.2d 1173, 1200, 1203 (8th Cir. 1982) (refusing to grant Noerr-Pennington immunity to "a broad pattern of litigation threats and harassment" where they were not "in good faith"

² This test differs from the majority's test because the majority would grant Noerr-Pennington immunity solely on the ground of an objectively reasonable basis for the threat without also requiring that the threat be in good faith and proximate to actual or imminent litigation.

but rather "clearly constituted bad faith unlawful harassment" (emphasis added); cf. American Potato Dryers v. Peters, 184 F.2d 165, 173 \(4th Cir. 1950\) (in pre-Noerr-Pennington case, holding that "threats of suit . . . made in good faith" were not antitrust violations (emphasis added)).

Furthermore, contrary to what the majority intimates, see Maj. Op. at 9-10 n.5, 16-17, this requirement is consistent with PRE's two-part sham test. That test engages in a subjective inquiry only if the litigation first is determined to be objectively baseless. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 60. By its facts and terms, however, PRE applies to litigation, i.e., an actual lawsuit. See id. ("We now outline a two-part definition of 'sham' [*32] litigation. First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless . . . Only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine a litigant's subjective motivation." (emphasis added).) PRE's sham litigation test determines whether a petition to the government (in lawsuit form) qualifies for Noerr-Pennington immunity. However, PRE provides no guidance on whether or when a prelitigation threat between private parties constitutes as a petition to the government. Hence, before we can apply PRE to determine which prelitigation [*1143] threats, as petitions to the government, merit Noerr-Pennington immunity, we first must decide which prelitigation threats amount to petitioning activity. Requiring good-faith in this threshold inquiry, therefore, does not conflict with PRE, as PRE does not come into play until after the prelitigation threat is determined to be a petition to the government.³ On the other hand, granting Noerr-Pennington immunity to all prelitigation threats that satisfy PRE, without winnowing out threats that cannot qualify as petitions to the government, erroneously extends Noerr-Pennington immunity beyond [*33] First Amendment activity.

Second, the objectively reasonable test is necessary to prevent Noerr-Pennington immunity from attaching to prelitigation threats that would have no basis as an actual petition, and therefore should not receive protection as petitioning activity. This element is coextensive with the objective prong of PRE.

Third, the proximity element ensures that Noerr-Pennington would immunize only those communications that are attendant to imminent or actual litigation and consequently may be considered [*34] an initial part of the petitioning process. If no petition actually results, it should be more difficult to establish proximity because the party claiming immunity should have to show some intervening cause that aborted an otherwise imminent petition.

Applied to the instant case, the three-part test cannot be met. Although I agree with the majority that the prelitigation threat in the MLBPA's letter to Champs had an objective basis, I do not believe the record in its undeveloped state allows us to determine whether the MLBPA's correspondence with Champs was in good-faith or proximate to actual litigation. As Cardtoons complains, the district court stayed discovery on the MLBPA's subjective intent regarding its threats pending summary judgment. I therefore would reverse the district court's entry of summary judgment in favor of the MLBPA on the ground that the MLBPA enjoyed Noerr-Pennington immunity, and remand to allow Cardtoons to proceed with discovery on the MLBPA's subjective intent in threatening Champs with litigation, and the proximity of that threat to actual litigation.

End of Document

³ As a result, the majority is wrong to imply that PRE contradicts the earlier circuit cases requiring threats of litigation to be in good faith in order to receive Noerr-Pennington immunity. While PRE may limit those cases to the extent that they also require actual litigation to be brought in good faith without first inquiring into objective baselessness, PRE does not touch upon the subjective test for whether threats of litigation should receive petitioning immunity.

Full Draw Prods. v. Easton Sports, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit

June 29, 1999, Filed

No. 98-1026

Reporter

182 F.3d 745 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14616 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,563

FULL DRAW PRODUCTIONS, a Colorado corporation, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. EASTON SPORTS, INC., a California corporation; PAPES, INC., a Kentucky corporation; BROWNING ARMS COMPANY, a Utah corporation; PRECISION SHOOTING EQUIPMENT, a Delaware corporation; HOYT U.S.A., INC., a California corporation; BEAR ARCHERY, INC., a Delaware corporation; ACI CONSOLIDATED, INC., a Michigan corporation; OUTTECH, INC., a New Jersey corporation; EHLERT PUBLISHING COMPANY, a subsidiary of Affinity Group, Inc.; ARCHERY MANUFACTURING AND MERCHANTS ORGANIZATION, a Florida Trade Association; SAUNDERS ARCHERY CO., INC., a Nebraska corporation; NEW ARCHERY PRODUCTS CORPORATION, an Illinois corporation; DARTON ARCHERY, a Michigan corporation; and BEMANS U.S.A., INC., a Utah corporation, Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Colorado. (D.C. No. 97-WY-1121-CB). D.C. Judge CLARENCE A. BRIMMER, JR.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

boycott, trade show, archery, antitrust, alleges, defendants', competitor, second amended complaint, Sherman Act, district court, consumers, space, group boycott, monopolize, customers, anti trust law, anticompetitive, exhibition, suppliers, producer, exhibitors, relevant market, manufacturers, output, manufacturers and distributors, distributors, conspiracy, quotations, boycotted, destroy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In an appeal from a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), the court must accept the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1337.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a district court's dismissal of a cause of action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The court upholds a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) only when it appears that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claims that would entitle him to relief, accepting the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true and construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, prohibits monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, or combining or conspiring with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN6 Clayton Act, Claims

Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), creates a private cause of action for any person who has been injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws, and provides for treble damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN7 Clayton Act, Claims

To recover damages under the Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), a private plaintiff must show more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Rather, the plaintiff must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendant's acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN8 Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Sherman Act

Classic group boycotts involving conspirators whose market position are horizontal to each other and who cut off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete, are generally per se illegal under the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Customers can unlawfully boycott to drive out a producer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN10[] Private Actions, Remedies

Where an alleged loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of defendant's behavior, such loss is antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The mere fact that the number of competitors after the boycott matches the number before the boycott does not cure the anticompetitive effect of the boycott, which is the elimination of a competitor by means other than the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

HN12[] Pleading & Practice, Pleadings

Although the modern pleading requirements are quite liberal, a plaintiff must do more than cite relevant antitrust language to state a claim for relief. A plaintiff must allege sufficient facts to support a cause of action under the antitrust laws. Conclusory allegations that the defendant violated those laws are insufficient. In the end, what is determinative is whether it cannot be said that the defendant did not have fair notice of the plaintiff's claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN13 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

To state a claim for a violation of the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1, the plaintiff must allege facts which show that the defendant entered a contract, combination, or conspiracy that unreasonably restrains trade in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN14 [blue download icon] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To state a claim for attempted monopolization under the Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2, the plaintiff must plead: (1) relevant market, including geographic market and relevant product market; (2) dangerous probability of success in monopolizing the relevant market; (3) specific intent to monopolize; and (4) conduct in furtherance of such an attempt. Factors to be considered in determining dangerous probability include the defendant's market share, the number and strength of other competitors, market trends, and entry barriers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN15 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize under the Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2, the plaintiff must plead: conspiracy, specific intent to monopolize, and overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN16 [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To state a monopolization claim under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2, the plaintiff must plead: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Counsel: James A. Jablonski (Harry L. Pliskin with him on the briefs), of Gorsuch Kirgis LLP, Denver, Colorado, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

John M. Peterson (Jonathan T. Howe with him on the brief), of Howe & Hutton, Ltd., Chicago, Illinois, for Defendants-Appellees.

Judges: Before TACHA, EBEL and KELLY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: EBEL

Opinion

[*747] EBEL, Circuit Judge.

Full Draw Productions ("Full Draw"), an archery trade show promoter, brought an antitrust suit against Easton Sports, Inc., and other co-defendants, who are archery manufacturers and distributors, a publishing company, a representative for archery manufacturers, and an archery trade association (collectively, "defendants"). Full Draw brought a private antitrust suit under Clayton Act § 4, alleging violations of Sherman Act §§ 1 & 2 from defendants' alleged group boycott of Full Draw's Bowhunting Trade Show ("BTS"). [*748] In addition, Full Draw claimed violations of Colorado antitrust laws and common-law tortious interference. The district court dismissed both federal and state antitrust claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, on the grounds that (1) Full Draw failed to allege antitrust injury, and (2) Full Draw failed to plead sufficiently the elements of Sherman Act offenses. The district court then dismissed the pendent state tortious interference claim. We reverse and remand.

BACKGROUND

Facts

Since this is HN1 an appeal from a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), we must "accept[] the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true and construe[] them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Yoder v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 1215, 1224 (10th Cir.) (quotations and citation omitted), cert. denied, 118 S. Ct. 55 (1997). In that regard, we draw the facts from Full Draw's second amended complaint.¹

Full Draw, a Colorado corporation, was formed to organize and present [*3] a trade show for the archery industry. In 1990, Full Draw held its first BTS, which at the time was the only merchandise mart devoted solely to archery equipment. Archery manufacturers and distributors purchased exhibition space and dealers paid a fee to attend. The corporate defendants (all defendants except the Archery Manufacturing & Merchants Organization ("AMMO")) were, for the most part, the large manufacturers (and some distributors) of archery equipment, and they all rented space and participated in the BTS.

That same year, Full Draw entered into a five-year agreement with AMMO, a trade association to which the other defendants belonged, and in which they actively participated. Under the agreement, Full Draw paid AMMO 10% of its BTS gross revenues in exchange for AMMO's endorsement of the show.

In 1994, with support from other defendants, AMMO sought to increase to 30% its revenue share from the BTS. AMMO also discussed buying the show from Full Draw. During and subsequent to the negotiations, AMMO and other defendants threatened to boycott the BTS unless Full Draw sold the show to AMMO on terms AMMO offered. Full Draw and AMMO failed to reach an agreement.

In 1995, following [*4] the failed negotiations, AMMO and other defendants decided that AMMO would present its own archery trade show, to be held one week after the 1997 BTS. Defendants also decided to boycott the BTS in order to eliminate it as a competitor to AMMO's new trade show. In support of the boycott, defendants (1) advertised that they would attend only the AMMO trade show in 1997; (2) informed others at the 1996 BTS that they would attend only the AMMO trade show; (3) persuaded other entities into participating in the AMMO show rather than the BTS by repeatedly stating that key manufacturers and distributors would not attend the 1997 BTS, and that the BTS would be a failure and probably not even occur; (4) created "a climate of fear of retribution and loss of business" for attending the BTS, and retaliated in various ways against certain businesses which attended the 1997 BTS; (5) agreed among themselves and caused other AMMO members to agree not to attend the 1997 BTS; and (6) actually boycotted the 1997 BTS.

¹ As explained infra, Full Draw's second amended complaint was the final complaint it filed and the one ruled upon by the district court.

As a result of defendants' boycotting efforts, the 1997 BTS failed financially and was eliminated as a competitor to future AMMO shows, leaving AMMO as the only supplier in the alleged market [\[*5\]](#) of archery trade shows in the United States.

[*749] Procedural History

Full Draw filed a complaint against defendants on May 30, 1997, alleging violations of Sherman Act §§ 1 & 2 as well as a supplemental Colorado state law claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage. Plaintiff subsequently amended its complaint to include additional monopoly claims and state antitrust claims. On August 18, 1997, defendants moved to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). On October 16, 1997, Full Draw sought to amend its complaint again to add four new defendants and to add allegations against existing defendants.

² Existing defendants objected to the new allegations against them, so Full Draw filed a new second amended complaint limiting its new allegations to the new defendants. Nevertheless, according to both Full Draw and defendants, the district court stated that it would consider the new allegations with respect to all defendants for purposes of the motion to dismiss, and we therefore consider all the new allegations in the second amended complaint to be directed against all defendants.

[\[*6\]](#) On December 23, 1997, the district court granted defendants' motion to dismiss. The court found that Full Draw failed adequately to allege antitrust injury. The court stated:

Simply put, Plaintiff has alleged that Defendants' competitive acts drove it out of business, but has not alleged that those same acts caused harm to consumers or competition--and this is unsurprising where Defendants are many of the relevant consumers and their acts increased, albeit temporarily, competition. By definition, it would seem that where a majority of consumers believe that a monopoly producer is not performing adequately and decide to provide an alternative for themselves and other consumers, there can be no antitrust injury, particularly where, as here, there have been no allegations that harm was caused to any other consumers (e.g., the other exhibitors or the attendees of the shows) by reduced output or increased prices.

The district court further noted that Full Draw failed to make specific factual allegations defining the relevant product and geographic markets, the number of market participants and their relevant market shares, or defendants' market power, all of which the court [\[*7\]](#) considered requisite elements of Sherman Act §§ 1 & 2 offenses. The court then dismissed the state antitrust claims, finding federal and Colorado antitrust laws sufficiently analogous. Finally, because the court dismissed all federal claims over which it had original jurisdiction, the court exercised its discretion under 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\) to dismiss the remaining state claim of tortious interference.

Full Draw appeals.

DISCUSSION

² The new defendants were Saunders, NAP, Darton, and Bermans. It should be noted that, on appeal, Full Draw omits to place these defendants' names in the caption of its opening brief. Consequently, Darton submits a brief pursuant to 10th Cir. R. 31.3, arguing that Full Draw should be deemed to have abandoned its appeal against Darton. However, Full Draw points out that it included Darton in its notice of appeal, and that its omission of Darton from the caption of its opening brief was inadvertent. We decline to find that Full Draw abandoned its appeal against Darton because of a mere scrivener's error in the caption of Full Draw's opening brief.

The district court had original jurisdiction over the antitrust claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1337,³ and supplemental jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1337. We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

[*750] HN3 "We review de novo a district court's dismissal of a cause of action for failure [8] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Chemical Weapons Working Group, Inc. v. United States Dep't of the Army, 111 F.3d 1485, 1490 (10th Cir. 1997). Furthermore, we uphold a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) only when it appears that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claims that would entitle him to relief, accepting the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true and construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Yoder, 104 F.3d at 1224 (quotations and citation omitted).

On appeal, Full Draw argues that it adequately alleged antitrust injury and the requisite elements of Sherman Act offenses. We agree, and address each issue in turn.

I. Antitrust Injury

A. General Legal Standard

HN4 Sherman Act § 1 prohibits "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN5 Sherman Act § 2 prohibits "monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, or combining or conspiring with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. HN6 Clayton Act § 4 creates a private cause of action for any person who has been "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws," and provides for treble damages. 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\).

HN7 To recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, a private plaintiff must show "more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). Rather, the plaintiff must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Id. (emphasis original); accord Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 339, 344, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990); Sports Racing Servs., Inc. v. Sports Car Club of Am., Inc., 131 F.3d 874, 882 (10th Cir. 1997); see also Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P 362, at 210 (1995) (purpose of [10] antitrust injury requirement is to "force[] antitrust courts to connect the alleged injury to the purposes of the antitrust laws").

B. Application

The injury Full Draw complains of--elimination from the archery trade show business as a result of defendants' alleged boycott--is "the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489; Sports Racing, 131 F.3d at 882.

³ This section states, in relevant part: HN2 "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action or proceeding arising under any Act of Congress regulating commerce or protecting trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies . . ." 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(a\).

1. Illegality of Group Boycott. As an initial matter, we conclude that the second amended complaint alleges a group boycott in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. HN8 [↑] Classic group boycotts involving conspirators whose market position are horizontal to each other and who "cut off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete," are generally per se illegal under § 1. Northwest Wholesale Stationers v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 294, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985); see Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959) (finding agreement among multiple manufacturers and [11] distributors and one retailer to boycott another retailer to be per se violation); TV Communications [*751] Network, Inc. v. Turner Network Television, Inc., 964 F.2d 1022, 1027 (10th Cir. 1992) ("A group boycott is another per se violation of section one. However, a group boycott can only exist between conspirators who compete at the same market level." (citation omitted)); Coffey v. Healthtrust, Inc., 955 F.2d 1388, 1392 (10th Cir. 1992) (same). "While the competitors need not be at the same market level as the plaintiff, there must be concerted activity between two or more competitors at [the] same market level." Coffey, 955 F.2d at 1392 (quotations and citation omitted).⁴

[12] In this case, defendants' alleged boycott of the BTS involved an agreement among, inter alia, members of AMMO--archery manufacturers and distributors--whose market positions are horizontal to each other as buyers of exhibition space at archery trade shows competing for dealer business. In addition, defendants allegedly controlled the essential supply of major manufacturing and distributing exhibitors necessary to enable an archery trade show to survive competitively. Further, defendants allegedly cut off this essential supply of manufacturing and distributing exhibitors for the naked purpose of destroying Full Draw as a competitor to AMMO.⁵ Construing these allegations in the light most favorable to Full Draw, as we must, we conclude that they state a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

[13] Nevertheless, both the district court and defendants discredited Full Draw's allegations of antitrust injury because the alleged boycott, as characterized by defendants and the district court, was by customers against a producer--by buyers of archery trade show exhibition space against an archery trade show producer. Admittedly, the second amended complaint focuses on Full Draw as a supplier of exhibitor space, and one of the ways the second amended complaint characterizes the manufacturers and distributors is as customers of Full Draw who purchased that exhibition space. Viewed in that light, Full Draw's antitrust injury was experienced as a producer or supplier. The district court therefore concluded that no antitrust injury was alleged because "[a] producer's loss . . . is no concern of the antitrust laws--the antitrust laws serve to protect consumers from suppliers, rather than suppliers from one another." Defendants add that "plaintiff's theory makes no economic sense because the parties harmed by the alleged violation would be the Defendants' [sic] themselves" as buyers of exhibition space, and "Defendants would . . . not subject themselves to market power or an unreasonable [14] restraint on competition." In essence, this argument asks why the defendants would conspire to destroy one of their two sources of suppliers of exhibition space (the BTS), leaving them with only one supplier (AMMO). Of course, that question is answered by the second amended complaint, which alleges that defendants controlled or influenced AMMO and, if AMMO were the only supplier of archery trade show distribution space, defendants could ensure that the shows would be favorable to their interests.

As an initial matter, if we view the alleged group boycott as a customer boycott, [*752] that would not insulate it from the proscriptions of § 1 of the Sherman Act. We acknowledge that it is unusual for customers to boycott to drive out producers, and that "whenever producers invoke the antitrust laws and consumers are silent," our antitrust inquiry "becomes especially pressing." SCFC ILC, Inc. v. Visa USA, Inc., 36 F.3d 958, 965 (10th Cir. 1994) (quotations and citation omitted). However, it is clear that HN9 customers can unlawfully boycott to drive out a producer. See Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) (Clayton Act § 4 "does [15] not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated." (quotations and citation omitted)); Reazin v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas, Inc., 899 F.2d 951, 962-63 (10th Cir. 1990) ("In any event, as the Supreme Court has specifically held, an antitrust plaintiff need not necessarily be a competitor or consumer. Where the plaintiff's injury is so 'inextricably intertwined' or 'so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged' plaintiff has established an antitrust injury." (quoting McCready, 457 U.S. at 479 (citations omitted)); see also Ernest H. Schopler, Refusals to Deal as Violations of the Federal Antitrust Laws, 41 A.L.R. Fed. 175, 224-25 (1979) (collecting cases finding customers unlawfully boycotted producers or other suppliers).⁶

⁴ Not all group boycotts are necessarily per se violations. See FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986); Northwest Wholesale Stationers v. Pacific Federation & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985). For a discussion of when group boycotts are considered per se violations of Sherman Act § 1 and when they are reviewed under a rule of reason, see ABA Section of Antitrust Law. Antitrust Law Developments 100-110 (4th ed. 1997).

⁵ Although the second amended complaint sometimes describes defendant manufacturers and distributors as customers, it also alleges that they supply an essential product needed to make an archery trade show successful -- manufacturers and distributors displaying products at the show to attract retail dealers to attend the show.

[16] In an analogous case, Taxi Weekly, Inc. v. Metropolitan Taxicab Bd. of Trade, Inc., 539 F.2d 907 (2d Cir. 1976), owners of taxi fleets boycotted the leading newspaper for the New York taxi industry by, inter alia, canceling their fleet subscriptions to that newspaper and supporting the formation of a rival trade paper. See id. at 908-09. The group boycott ultimately caused the demise of the once successful publication. See id. The Second Circuit upheld antitrust liability against the fleet owners under §§ 1 & 2 of the Sherman Act, finding that the fleet owners "did not simply switch their business from Taxi Weekly in search of better service; they wanted to destroy Taxi Weekly." See id. at 913.

Similarly, in the instant case, it is alleged that the archery manufacturers and distributors did not simply switch their business from the BTS to the AMMO show for legitimate business reasons, but did so out of a desire to destroy the BTS. It also was alleged that defendant manufacturers and distributors acted in combination with AMMO to boycott and destroy the BTS because Full Draw refused to sell the BTS to AMMO; defendant manufacturers and [\[*753\]](#) distributors did not [\[17\]](#) want the competitive situation of two trade shows; and defendant manufacturers were large entities which wanted to control the trade show market in order to favor themselves over small manufacturers. A group boycott such as this, by large customers to destroy one producer of trade show services in favor of another over which it had influence and could obtain advantage at the expense of other consumers, states a violation of the Sherman Act. See id. at 913.

We observe, further, that the characterization of the boycott as a customer boycott is not the only interpretation that could be given to Full Draw's second amended complaint. This case alleges a complex, often symbiotic set of relationships between Full Draw and defendants that cannot be as easily cabined as the district court and defendants have done, particularly when viewing the second amended complaint most favorably to the plaintiff. In one regard, defendant manufacturers and distributors could be viewed as suppliers and Full Draw as a customer. That is, defendant manufacturers and distributors were the suppliers of exhibitors, a commodity essential to the successful operation of a trade show. Although Full Draw did not [\[18\]](#) directly buy this commodity (indeed, the ⁶The district court's reliance on Stamatakis Indus., Inc. v. King, 965 F.2d 469 (7th Cir. 1992), and Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360 (9th Cir. 1988), is misplaced. Although the Seventh Circuit stated in Stamatakis that "a producer's loss is no concern of antitrust laws," it does not preclude a producer from alleging antitrust injury as a result of customer activity. See 965 F.2d at 471. Instead, Stamatakis requires that "the plaintiff . . . show actual or potential injury to consumers." Id. at 472. As quoted infra Part I.B.2., Full Draw alleged that the boycott injures consumers as well as itself by the non-competitive elimination of the BTS as AMMO's sole rival. Thus, we do not believe Stamatakis would preclude Full Draw's allegation of antitrust injury, even if the case were controlling authority, which it is not.

Oahu Gas also does not undermine Full Draw's allegation of antitrust injury. There, the Ninth Circuit found, inter alia, that a propane gas seller did not prove any anticompetitive effects from a competitor's offer of sham low prices to the plaintiff's customers knowing that the effort would cause the plaintiff to meet the sham offer and consequently lose profits. The court found that the plaintiff did not allege anticompetitive effects from the competitor's offers of low but non-predatory prices, because the marketing scheme had the effect of increasing price competition. See 838 F.2d at 368, 370. As is apparent, Oahu Gas offers neither analogy nor language that precludes Full Draw's allegation of antitrust injury.

manufacturers and distributors paid Full Draw for the privilege of being exhibitors), the manufacturers and distributors were paid in the currency of a forum for access to retail dealers who might purchase their archery products. Viewing the relationship between Full Draw and defendants in this light, Full Draw's alleged injury from defendant's unlawful group boycott exists at the customer level--and defendants do not dispute that a customer's injury can be antitrust injury.

Alternatively, another characterization of the second amended complaint could focus on AMMO's role in defendants' alleged group boycott. After all, the boycott of the BTS was alleged to have involved not only defendant manufacturers and distributors whom defendants and the district court characterize as customers of the BTS. The boycott also involved defendant AMMO--a direct competitor to Full Draw in the archery trade show market--and apparently other non-customer defendants (e.g., a trade publication) who had employees active in AMMO or otherwise assisted in the boycott. Defendants do not contend that a boycott by a direct competitor and others essential to the operations [\[19\]](#) of the plaintiff cannot be unlawful, and we do not believe they could make such an argument. See Northwest Wholesale, 472 U.S. at 293 ("Cases to which this Court has applied the per se approach have generally involved joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle." (quotations and citation omitted)); Klor's, 359 U.S. at 209, 212 (finding per se illegal group boycott involving a "wide combination consisting of manufacturers, distributors, and a retailer," brought about by the retailer against a competing retailer). Once again, even if the district court correctly stated the law regarding customer boycotts of a producer, Full Draw's second amended complaint would state a cause of action for antitrust injury to a competitor of defendant AMMO.

2. Injury Reflects Anticompetitive Effects of Group Boycott. In its second amended complaint, Full Draw made the following allegation of antitrust injury:

The actions of Defendants unduly restrain, hinder and suppress competition between FDP [Full [\[20\]](#) Draw] and Defendant AMO [sic] trade show in the trade show business and interstate commerce. The actions of Defendants have directly and proximately caused "anti-trust injury" because they have resulted in elimination of FDP as an exhibitor, thereby directly and substantially reducing "output" of exhibitor space and directly and [\[*754\]](#) substantially reducing the ability of the consumers of such space to purchase exhibitor space and display their products and services, and archery dealers from purchasing admission to such an exhibition for the purpose of viewing products and services and otherwise transacting business. Because FDP produced one of only two archery business trade shows in the United States, the purposeful and wrongful destruction of FDP's business by Defendants directly injured competition as well as injuring FDP.

This allegation adequately states that Full Draw's injury "reflects the anticompetitive effect" of the illegal boycott, being "the type [of injury] the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489; accord Sports Racing, 131 F.3d at 882. The allegation describes the [\[21\]](#) anticompetitive effect of the boycott to be the loss of competition through the elimination of AMMO's sole archery trade show competitor and the resultant loss in exhibition space output. See Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, PP 1901a & 1901d, at 184-87 (1998) ("market output--assuming it can be determined--is a good measure of the amount of competition").⁷ The second amended complaint further alleges harm to consumers from the drop in exhibition space output (reducing choice for exhibitors) and shows (reducing choice for dealers). See SCFC, 36 F.3d at 965 ("To be judged anticompetitive, the agreement must actually or potentially harm consumers.")⁸

⁷ This allegation answers the district court's statement that Full Draw failed to allege "any harm to consumers or competition through reduced output or increased prices."

⁸ Of course, in the words of SCFC, an agreement need not "actually" harm consumers directly to be considered anticompetitive. SCFC, 36 F.3d at 965. An agreement that harms a producer may "potentially harm[] consumers" downstream, id., and thus may be anticompetitive.

[22] We have no doubt that alleging the loss of one of two competitors in this case alleges injury to competition. While it is axiomatic that the antitrust laws "were enacted for 'the protection of competition not competitors,'" Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962)), the instant case is not one in which it is alleged that a competitor fell prey to competition; it is one in which it is alleged that competition fell prey to a competitor. The competitor was AMMO, which through an alleged boycott by the trade association and various of its members reduced the number of competitors in the market from two to one, thereby decreasing competition and harming consumers.

In particular, as alleged in the second amended complaint, from 1995 to 1997, both AMMO and the BTS competed for customers for their 1997 trade shows. Thus, from the market's perspective, there were actually two competitors during that period. As a direct result of defendants' boycott, Full Draw was driven from the market in 1997, thereby depriving consumers of their pre-existing choices in that market. Because defendants' alleged boycott [23] reduced a competitive market of two producers to a market of one monopolist, Full Draw quite clearly alleged substantial injury to competition from defendants' group boycott.

What is more, we find it hard to imagine a closer connection between anticompetitive effect and injury than the destruction of the BTS (Full Draw's injury) and the loss of competition in the archery trade show market (the anti-competitive effect of defendants' boycott). HN10[↑] Full Draw's alleged loss "stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of defendant's behavior," and accordingly is antitrust injury. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 344, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990).

[*755] We are not persuaded by the arguments to the contrary. The district court and defendants state that Full Draw did not allege any anticompetitive effect from the group boycott because the number of competitors before and after the boycott remained the same, and therefore consumers were no worse off from defendants' boycott. We disagree. HN11[↑] The mere fact that the number of competitors after the boycott matches the number before the boycott does not cure the anticompetitive effect of the boycott, which [24] is the elimination of a competitor by means other than "the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 538, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983); see Taxi Weekly, 539 F.2d at 912-13 (rejecting argument that "no diminution of competition resulted from the demise of Taxi Weekly" merely because, after the boycott of the paper in favor of a rival publication, "the New York taxi industry had the same number of trade publications as before, i.e., one"). There is no antitrust safe harbor for violations that happen to conserve the pre-offense number of competitors. Regardless of such conservation, consumers suffer because the market make-up changed as a result of inefficient anticompetitive means.

In a related point, the district court and defendants reason that defendants' alleged activities were not anticompetitive because defendants actually increased the output of exhibition space, albeit briefly, and because the output of exhibition space merely returned to the pre-boycott level after the BTS failed (i.e., exhibition space offered by one show per year). Again, [25] we disagree. The effect of defendants' alleged boycott was not to increase competition between the two trade shows, but rather to distort and ultimately reduce competition by destroying one source of output (the BTS) and thereby limiting consumer choice to the other source of output (AMMO's show). Of course, pursuant to our reasoning above, the bare fact that the output of exhibition space before and after the alleged boycott stayed the same says nothing about whether the process in between was anticompetitive, which it allegedly was.

Therefore, we hold that Full Draw adequately alleged antitrust injury as a result of defendants' alleged group boycott. Our finding inures to Full Draw's Sherman Act § 1 claim as well as to its § 2 claims, because both sets of claims arise from the same alleged boycotting activities and involve the same alleged source of injury to Full Draw and to competition--the unnatural demise of the BTS at the hands of defendants.

II. Sherman Act Pleading Requirements

As noted, the district court dismissed Full Draw's second amended complaint on another ground: "Plaintiff has failed to make specific factual allegations defining the relevant product and [26] geographic market, the number of market participants and their relative shares, or Defendants' market power." Finding these shortcomings, the district court concluded that Full Draw failed to plead the requisite elements of Sherman Act §§ 1 & 2 offenses. Although Full Draw's second amended complaint is hardly a model of clarity or thoroughness, we disagree with the district court and hold that Full Draw adequately pled the requisite elements of its Sherman Act claims.

In TV Communications, we stated:

HN12 [↑] Although the modern pleading requirements are quite liberal, a plaintiff must do more than cite relevant antitrust language to state a claim for relief. A plaintiff must allege sufficient facts to support a cause of action under the antitrust laws. Conclusory allegations that the defendant violated those laws are insufficient.

964 F.2d at 1024 (citation omitted). In the end, "what is determinative is whether . . . it cannot be said that defendants did [*756] not have fair notice of [the plaintiff's] claims." Monument Builders of Greater Kansas City, Inc. v. American Cemetery Assn. of Kansas, 891 F.2d 1473, 1481 \(10th Cir. 1989\). We now address in turn the pleadings [27] underlying each of Full Draw's Sherman Act claims.

First, HN13 [↑] to state a claim for a Sherman Act § 1 violation, "the plaintiff must allege facts which show: the defendant entered a contract, combination or conspiracy that unreasonably restrains trade in the relevant market." TV Communications, 964 F.2d at 1027. We find that Full Draw sufficiently pled its Sherman Act § 1 claim. As detailed supra Part I, the second amended complaint factually alleges that defendants conspired and combined in various ways to boycott the BTS and thus unreasonably restrain trade in the archery trade show market in the United States. This is sufficient to state a § 1 claim. Id. at 1027.

Second, HN14 [↑] to state a claim for attempted monopolization under Sherman Act § 2, the plaintiff must plead: "(1) relevant market (including geographic market and relevant product market); (2) dangerous probability of success in monopolizing the relevant market; (3) specific intent to monopolize; and (4) conduct in furtherance of such an attempt." Id. at 1025 (quotations and citations omitted). We find that Full Draw sufficiently pled the elements of attempted monopolization under Sherman Act § 2. The second [28] amended complaint alleges the relevant market to be archery trade shows in the United States. This claim is supported by factual allegations detailing the distinct nature of the archery trade shows, their difference from gun shows, which focus only in limited part on archery, and their ability to draw a customer base of archery manufacturers, distributors, and dealers over the years. In addition, the second amended complaint alleges a dangerous probability of success in monopolizing the relevant market. Factors to be considered in determining dangerous probability include the defendant's market share, "the number and strength of other competitors, market trends, and entry barriers." Bacchus Indus., Inc. v. Arvin Indus., Inc., 939 F.2d 887, 894 \(10th Cir. 1991\). The allegation that defendants' boycott eliminated the only competitor to defendant AMMO's trade show demonstrates a significant entry barrier in the boycott itself, and confirms the dangerous probability of success from defendants' alleged attempt to monopolize the market. The second amended complaint also alleges specific intent on the part of defendants to monopolize the relevant market, in order to destroy the BTS and [*29] create a monopoly for AMMO. Finally, the second amended complaint alleges conduct in furtherance of the attempt, namely, the defendants' boycotting activities. Together, these allegations sufficiently plead the requisite elements of attempted monopolization.

Third, HN15 [↑] to state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize under Sherman Act § 2, the plaintiff must plead: "conspiracy, specific intent to monopolize, and overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy." Monument Builders, 891 F.2d at 1484. We find Full Draw sufficiently pled its conspiracy to monopolize claim. The second amended complaint alleges that defendants agreed to eliminate the BTS through a group boycott and other conspiratorial actions so that AMMO alone could produce archery trade shows, and that defendants participated in boycotting and other anticompetitive activities in furtherance of their conspiracy.

Fourth, HN16 [↑] to state a monopolization claim under Sherman Act § 2, the plaintiff must plead: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic [30] accident." TV Communications, 964 F.2d at 1025 (quotations and citations omitted). We find Full Draw sufficiently pled its monopolization claim. The second [*757] amended complaint alleges that defendants obtained monopoly power. Monopoly power requires proof of both power to control prices and power to exclude competition. See Reazin, 899 F.2d at 967; Shoppin' Bag of Pueblo, Inc. v. Dillon Cos., Inc., 783 F.2d 159, 163-64 (10th Cir. 1986). The second amended complaint's allegation that defendants' boycott successfully drove Full Draw from the market illustrates defendants' ability to exclude competition against AMMO's trade show. Additionally, because AMMO is now the sole producer of archery trade shows, AMMO and its members have the power to control prices in the market. Thus, the second amended complaint alleges that defendants possess the components of monopoly power. Finally, the second amended complaint alleges that defendants wilfully obtained that power as a consequence of their unlawful boycott and other wrongful conduct rather than a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. As a result, Full Draw has adequately pled its monopolization claim.

CONCLUSION

[31] Because we hold that Full Draw has alleged antitrust injury for purposes of Clayton Act § 4 and has adequately pled the requisite elements of its Sherman Act claims, we REVERSE the district court's dismissal of Full Draw's federal antitrust claims. Furthermore, because the district court dismissed Full Draw's state antitrust claims pursuant to its federal antitrust analysis, we REVERSE the district court's dismissal of Full Draw's state antitrust claims. Lastly, because the district court dismissed Full Draw's state tortious interference claim under the assumption that all the federal claims over which it had original jurisdiction had been disposed of, we REVERSE the district court's dismissal of Full Draw's tortious interference claim. We REMAND the case for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

End of Document

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co v. Phillip Morris Inc.

United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina

June 29, 1999, Decided ; June 29, 1999, Filed

CIVIL NO. 1:99CV00185, CIVIL NO. 1:99CV00207, CIVIL NO. 1:99CV00232

Reporter

60 F. Supp. 2d 502 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9926 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,599

R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, Defendant. LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, Defendant. BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION, Plaintiff, v. PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Plaintiff's joint motion for a preliminary injunction [Doc. # 2 in RJR 1:99CV185; Doc. # 2 in Lorillard 1:99CV207 and Doc. # 2 in B&W 1:99CF232] granted.

Core Terms

Retail, brand, display, cigarette, fixture, space, manufacturers, advertising, market share, signage, outlets, permanent, preliminary injunction, sales, injunction, market power, competitors, hardships, serious question, public interest, visibility, pack, pro-competitive, compete, smokers, merits, adult, likelihood of success, above-counter, interbrand

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN1 [] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy and the court should grant such relief only when a plaintiff clearly establishes entitlement to such relief. The court identified the four factors, known as the balance of hardships test, which must be analyzed in determining whether to issue a preliminary injunction. These factors are: (1) the likelihood of irreparable harm to the plaintiff without the injunction; (2) the likelihood of harm to the defendant with the injunction; (3) the plaintiff's likelihood of success on the merits; and (4) the public interest.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN2 [] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

60 F. Supp. 2d 502, *502LÁ1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9926, 1

Under the Blackwelder test a plaintiff must first make a clear showing that it will suffer irreparable harm without the injunction before any other inquiry is made. If the plaintiff makes a clear showing of irreparable harm, the court must then balance the likelihood of irreparable harm to plaintiff without the injunction against the likelihood of harm to the defendant if the injunction is issued.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

After balancing the hardships, the court then proceeds to evaluate the plaintiff's likelihood of success on the merits. The balancing of hardships step must precede evaluation of the likelihood of success on the merits because the outcome of the hardship test fixes the degree of proof required for establishing the likelihood of success by the plaintiff. If the hardship balance tilts sharply and clearly in the plaintiff's favor, the required proof of likelihood of success is substantially reduced. Similarly, if the hardship to plaintiff is minimal or non-existent, then the burden on the plaintiff to establish likelihood of success on the merits becomes considerably greater.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN4 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Where the balance tips decidedly in favor of the plaintiff, a preliminary injunction will be granted if the plaintiff has raised questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult, and doubtful as to make them fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation. As the balance of hardships shifts away from the plaintiff, a higher threshold showing on the merits is required. Thus, where the plaintiff fails to establish that the balance tips decidedly in its favor, the plaintiff must make a strong showing of likelihood of success, establish a substantial likelihood of success, or present clear and convincing evidence of success.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN5 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Plaintiff must establish that the public interest favors the issuance of a preliminary injunction. However, this factor does not appear always to be considered at length in preliminary injunction analysis and is rarely determinative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Claims

Establishing a § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation proceeds in three steps: (1) the plaintiff must carry the initial burden of showing the challenged conduct has an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in a relevant market; (2) the defendant must then demonstrate that its conduct has pro-competitive redeeming virtues; and (3) even if the defendant sustains that burden the plaintiff can still prevail by showing that the same pro-competitive benefit could be achieved through an alternative means that is less restrictive of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

With respect to the first step, the court has held that a threshold inquiry is whether the defendant has market power in the relevant product and geographic markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN8 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Market power for § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, purposes is a lesser degree of power than necessary to prove a § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, offense of monopolization.

Counsel: For R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, plaintiff: DANIEL R. TAYLOR, JR., KILPATRICK STOCKTON, L.L.P., WINSTON-SALEM, NC. DARRYL R. MARSCH, R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY LAW DEPT., WINSTON-SALEM, NC. RANDOLPH S. SHERMAN, MICHAEL MALINA, DAVID S. COPELAND, ERIC AARONSON, KAYE, SCHOLER, FIERMAN, HAYS & HANDLER, NEW YORK, NY. RICHARD M. COOPER, STEVEN R. KUNEY, JOHN E. SCHMIDTLEIN, WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY, WASHINGTON, DC.

For PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, defendant: LARRY B. SITTON, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, GREENSBORO, NC. MATTHEW W. SAWCHAK, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, RALEIGH, NC. ROBERT R. MARCUS, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, GREENSBORO, NC. JEROME I. CHAPMAN, HADRIAN R. KATZ, RICHARD L. ROSEN, L. ELIZABETH BOWLES, AMY E. RALPH, ARNOLD & PORTER, WASHINGTON, DC.

For LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, plaintiff: JAMES T. WILLIAMS, JR., BROOKS PIERCE MCLENDON HUMPHREY & LEONARD, GREENSBORO, NC. JENNIFER VAN ZANT, BROOKS, PIERCE, MCLENDON, HUMPHREY & LEONARD, GREENSBORO, NC. IRVING SCHER, BRUCE S. MEYER, AUGUST T. HORVATH, WEIL GOTSHAL [2] & MANGES, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, defendant: LARRY B. SITTON, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, GREENSBORO, NC. MATTHEW W. SAWCHAK, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, RALEIGH, NC. ROBERT R. MARCUS, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, GREENSBORO, NC. JEROME I. CHAPMAN, HADRIAN R. KATZ, RICHARD L. ROSEN, L. ELIZABETH BOWLES, AMY E. RALPH, ARNOLD & PORTER, WASHINGTON, DC.

For BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION, plaintiff: NORWOOD ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LAWING, WINSTON-SALEM, NC. ROBERT B. BELL, WILEY REIN & FIELDING, WASHINGTON, DC. RONALD S. ROLFE, VICTOR L. HOU, CRAVATH SWAINE & MOORE, NEW YORK, NY.

For PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, defendant: LARRY B. SITTON, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, GREENSBORO, NC. MATTHEW W. SAWCHAK, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, RALEIGH, NC. ROBERT R. MARCUS, SMITH HELMS MULLISS & MOORE, GREENSBORO, NC. JEROME I. CHAPMAN, HADRIAN R. KATZ, RICHARD L. ROSEN, L. ELIZABETH BOWLES, AMY E. RALPH, ARNOLD & PORTER, WASHINGTON, DC.

Judges: FRANK W. BULLOCK, JR., United States District Judge.

Opinion by: FRANK W. BULLOCK, JR.

Opinion

[*504] MEMORANDUM OPINION

BULLOCK, Chief Judge

This matter is before the court on Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction [*3] pursuant to Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to enjoin Defendant from implementing a retail merchandising program which allegedly violates federal antitrust and state unfair trade practice laws. The court conducted an evidentiary hearing on June 9 and 10, 1999. The parties presented witnesses and exhibits and designated affidavits for the court's consideration. After careful consideration of the exhibits, affidavits, and the testimony of witnesses, including their demeanor, opportunity to acquire knowledge of the facts about which they testified, and their interest in the case, the court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Plaintiffs in these consolidated actions--R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company (Reynolds), Lorillard Tobacco Company (Lorillard), and Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation (B&W)--all filed complaints against Defendant Philip Morris Incorporated (PM) seeking injunctive and declaratory relief and damages for alleged violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and North Carolina General Statutes §§ 75-1, 75-2, and 75-2.1. Plaintiffs have also filed motions for a preliminary injunction [*4] against PM seeking an order enjoining PM from continuing to implement certain provisions of its "Retail Leaders" retail merchandising program.
2. Reynolds, Lorillard, and B&W are all engaged in the manufacture and distribution of cigarettes. Reynolds' primary brands include Winston, Camel, and Doral, the nation's leading discount brand. Lorillard's primary brands include Newport, the nation's second leading premium brand. B&W's primary brands include Kool and GPC. Defendant PM is also engaged in the manufacture and distribution of cigarettes. PM's primary brands include Marlboro, the nation's leading premium brand, Merit, and Basic.
3. It is undisputed that the relevant product market for the purpose of this litigation is all cigarette sales through retail outlets and that the relevant geographic market is the United States. Historically, cigarette manufacturing has been a highly concentrated industry in the United States. Recent market share figures illustrate this point. In 1998 the four leading cigarette manufacturers--PM, Reynolds, Lorillard, and B&W respectively accounted for approximately 97% of all domestic cigarette sales.
4. In addition to being highly concentrated, the [*5] cigarette manufacturing industry is also characterized by high barriers to entry. These high barriers are evidenced by the fact that there has not been a significant new entrant into the market in over eighty years. Moreover, given the current economic, political, and regulatory environment, it is unlikely that any significant [*505] new entrants will emerge in the foreseeable future.
5. Within this industry, PM enjoys a significant market share advantage over its competitors. In 1998 PM reported that approximately 53% of retail cigarette sales within the United States were of PM brands. This is roughly twice the market share of Reynolds, PM's next closest competitor, which had a 1998 market share of approximately 25%. B&W and Lorillard trailed PM and Reynolds with 1998 approximate market shares of 15% and 8% respectively. The gap between PM and Reynolds and B&W, its closest competitors, has steadily increased since 1993.

6. PM's leading market share position is driven primarily by its Marlboro brand, which is the dominant brand in the industry. In 1998 Marlboro sales accounted for approximately 34% of all retail cigarette sales in the United States. The next closest brands, Reynolds' Doral [6] and Lorillard's Newport, accounted for approximately 6.4% and 5.8% of the market respectively.

7. The market for retail cigarette sales is diminishing as the population of adult smokers decreases. Thus, in competing with each other, cigarette manufacturers seek to maintain brand loyalty with respect to their existing customers while also inducing purchases by adult smokers of other manufacturers who occasionally buy different brands, or who do not have a usual brand preference at the time of purchase. While most adult smokers claim to have a "usual" brand, a significant percentage of adult smokers buy other brands on an "occasional" basis. Moreover, over time adult smokers who are loyal to a particular brand switch to a different usual brand. In the last two years, approximately 6 million adult smokers, representing approximately 14% of that population, have switched their usual brand.

8. The competition for switchers and occasional use purchasers occurs primarily in so-called pack outlets, which are comprised of convenience stores and gas stations, where approximately 60% of all cigarettes are sold. This is because adult smokers are more likely to purchase a non-usual brand by the [7] pack rather than by the carton.

9. In the competition for brand loyalty, product visibility and advertising at the point of purchase are essential to remaining competitive. Visibility and advertising at the point of purchase are critical to both the development and maintenance of a particular brand equity and also to price and promotional competition among manufacturers.

While visibility and advertising are important in most if not all product categories in the retail store environment, they are uniquely critical in the cigarette industry. First, unlike other product categories sold in the convenience store/grocery store environment, cigarette manufacturers face severe limitations with respect to advertising. Television and radio have long been off limits to cigarette manufacturers. Moreover, as a result of the recent tobacco litigation settlements, outdoor advertising on billboards, distribution of logoed merchandise, and advertising at sports and other public events have also been severely limited or entirely eliminated. Cigarette manufacturers are thus left with only three basic channels to communicate with adult smokers: print media, direct mail, and the point of purchase.

[8] A further unique aspect to the cigarette industry is that because of concern about youth smoking there has been a recent shift in display space location at the point of sale from self-service, counter-top displays to a non-self-service, back bar display behind a sales counter. In this environment, a customer approaches a counter and asks the clerk for the pack or carton of his choice from the display fixture on the back bar. Counter-top, end-of-aisle, or other self-service type displays that are often used in other categories, such as soda or snacks, are, for the most part, no longer available to cigarette manufacturers. For example, eight states and hundreds of municipalities have already [506] banned self-service displays and numerous other states are considering similar prohibitions. Thus, a manufacturer who cannot obtain quality display space on the back bar fixture will not be able to compensate by purchasing, for example, an end-of-aisle type display.

Another characteristic of the back bar environment is that approximately half of the display space available to the cigarette category will be below counter level and therefore out of the consumer's primary line of sight. In the past, [9] when self-service counter-top displays were the customary method of displaying the category, the entire display space for the cigarette category was generally either on the counter-top or in above-counter displays on the back bar. In either location a manufacturer could easily communicate its brand equity and price message to the consumer. In contrast, the new back bar fixtures typically rise from the floor to a height of six-to-eight feet. The display space on the lower half of the fixture is often obstructed by the sales counter, making it difficult for manufacturers on the lower half of the fixture to communicate brand equity and price messages.

10. The critical importance of brand visibility and display space at the point of purchase in the cigarette industry is not disputed. It is evidenced by the fact that all four of the major manufacturers involved in this litigation have vigorously competed with each other for in-store display space and advertising through the payment of retail display allowances (RDA's). Because of the significance of pack outlets in the competition for brand loyalty and occasional use purchases, manufacturers have usually offered greater RDA's to pack outlets [10] as compared with predominantly "carton outlets" such as supermarkets and cigarette and tobacco stores.

These RDA payments are essential to a pack outlet's ability to compete in a cigarette category. Excluding the sale of gas, cigarette sales represent perhaps the most important product category to convenience stores and gas stations. For example, Jack Barger, Chief Operating Officer of Morgan Oil Co., which operates twenty-two convenience stores in western North Carolina under the trade name "Convenience King," testified that cigarette sales represent 30% of his company's product sales.

The RDA payments from cigarette manufacturers are typically passed on to consumers in the form of price discounts. Thus, a retailer under a contract receiving RDA payments from PM will be able to offer consistently lower prices on PM brands such as Marlboro than a retailer who is not under contract. Moreover, because the cigarette category is so important to pack outlets and because the Marlboro brand is dominant in the category, a pack outlet receiving little or no RDA allowances from PM will not be able to compete in the cigarette category with pack outlets receiving substantial RDA's from PM. Inability [11] to compete in the cigarette category, in turn, makes it unlikely that convenience stores or gas stations will be able to survive in the market place given the significance of cigarette sales to their business.

12. In or about October 1998, PM announced that it was implementing "Retail Leaders," a new retail merchandising program to replace its "Retail Masters" program, which had been in existence since 1992. After a transitional period, during which participating retailers could be under either a Retail Leaders or Retail Masters contract, the Retail Masters program was to be terminated. The termination date for Retail Masters was originally March 31, 1999, but has since been extended by PM until June 30, 1999. Although certain isolated provisions from the Retail Masters program are carried over to the Retail Leaders program, there are important aspects of the Retail Leaders program which distinguish it from Retail Masters.

First, the prior Retail Masters program included participation levels which enabled [*507] retailers to obtain significant promotional discounts from PM while still enabling them to negotiate promotional agreements with at least two competing manufacturers. With opportunities [12] for at least three manufacturers to obtain significant in-store visibility and signage, all Plaintiffs had an effective opportunity to compete at the point of sale. In contrast, under Retail Leaders, there is a strong likelihood only one competing manufacturer will be able to obtain above-counter display space and signage. This is because the promotional payments are structured so that nearly all retailers will choose to sign a Retail Leaders contract at a level of participation, known as a "category performance level" (CPL), which will leave above-counter display space for only one or two competing brands. Retail Leaders has four CPL's, known as CPL Base, CPL 1, CPL 2, and CPL 3. However, the disparity between the promotional payments at CPL Base and CPL 1, on the one hand, and CPL 2 and CPL 3 on the other means that the retailers only viable choice is to sign on at CPL 2 or CPL 3. As Jack Barger credibly explained, it will be a competitive necessity for pack outlets to sign a Retail Leader contract at CPL 2 because they cannot survive without the PM promotional payments of offered at that level. Barger's testimony is supported by the fact that, of all the Retail Leaders contracts [13] entered into to date, all but 1% to 2% have signed on at CPL 2 or CPL 3.

Second, at these higher levels of Retail Leaders, PM introduces a so-called "industry fixture" which is to be placed in the boat display position in the store. Ordinarily this will be on the back bar behind a primary cash register. At CPL 2 the industry fixture must occupy 50% of the total display space for the cigarette category. PM brands are required to be placed on the top half of the industry fixture loaded horizontally, assuming a PM market share of 50%. Moreover, only PM can place permanent signage on the industry fixture. Thus, Retail Leaders would prohibit a retailer from entering into an agreement with a competing manufacturer to place a permanent sign on that manufacturer's own portion of the industry fixture.

At CPL 2 the remaining 50% of display space will ordinarily be divided into two additional fixtures. The first fixture, known as the PM "prime" fixture, will constitute approximately 25% of the overall space. Only PM brands and signage may be displayed on the prime fixture. The prime fixture must be placed in the second best visibility location. The last fixture, known as the "retailer's choice" [14] fixture, will occupy the remaining 25% of the category space. The retailer can display competing manufacturers' brands and signage in this location.

The practical effect of the industry fixture at CPL 2 is to provide PM with 75% of the above-counter display space and 75% of the permanent in-store signage, percentages well in excess of its market share. This will likely leave above-counter display space for perhaps one or two competing brands at most. While PM includes below-counter space in calculating its market-share-to-shelf-space percentages to conclude that it is only asking for its market share, PM's vice president of trade/marketing, Barry Hopkins, conceded at the evidentiary hearing that he would not pay for below-counter "display" space.

The industry fixture also allows PM to regulate how a competitor may display and advertise its own brand in its own space on the industry fixture. Thus, PM is not simply paying for the best display space for its own brands, but also exercising unprecedented control over how competitors may advertise and display their own brands.

At CPL 3 the industry fixture accounts for 100% of the category display space. Thus PM demands 100% of the above-counter [15] display space and 100% of the permanent in-store signage. Moreover, competitors are not allowed to purchase permanent signage to place on their respective portions of the industry fixture. Nevertheless, while there is substantial evidence [*508] in the record which indicates that most retailers will have no economic choice other than to sign a CPL 2 contract, there is no evidence that, as between CPL 2 and CPL 3, retailers will be coerced into choosing CPL 3.

13. By its own estimates, PM expects approximately 75% of its total sales volume to be generated through stores under a Retail Leaders contract which, as noted, will almost always be at CPL levels 2 or 3. Also as noted, the vast majority of these contracts will be at CPL 2.

14. Retailer response to the Retail Leaders program has been slow during the current transitional period between Retail Masters and Retail Leaders. Barger, whose Convenience King chain of stores is currently under a Retail Masters contract, testified that this was because the promotional structure of the Retail Leaders program was going to compel Convenience King to enter into a Retail Leaders contract at CPL 2, which would force him to abandon his current relationship [16] with B&W. Barger stated that he has tried to obtain concessions from PM that would enable Convenience King to maintain its relationship with B&W, but had been unsuccessful. For example, B&W had agreed to pay for a permanent sign to be placed on its portion of the industry fixture, but PM refused to allow the sign. Thus, Barger is waiting until the Retail Masters program expires on June 30, 1999, before signing on to a Retail Leaders contract.

15. The Retail Leaders program is likely to be particularly devastating to B&W and Lorillard as they will presumably be the "odd man out" at the point of purchase. Lorillard, for example, has already lost approximately 4,000 promotional contracts with retailers due at least in part to the impact of Retail Leaders. It is noteworthy that in the Retail Masters environment, Lorillard was routinely able to obtain counter-top displays at the point of purchase for its Newport brand, the second-leading premium brand in the country. In the Retail Leaders environment, however, Lorillard's Newport brand will be shifted to a location near the floor behind the counter.

16. Other than minor short-term difficulties, PM has not presented any evidence that it [17] will be significantly harmed by the issuance of an injunction. Barry Hopkins, PM's vice president of trade and marketing, admitted that he had not given much thought about a contingency plan in the event that this court entered an injunction. PM's only significant source of identified harm would result only if this court ordered it to not require that its product be shelved horizontally. Such an order would force PM to go back and re-shelf product in the approximately 20,000 stores already signed to Retail Leaders contracts. PM presented no evidence that allowing competitors to place permanent signage in their respective portions of the industry fixture, or allowing competitors to contract for permanent signage and temporary signage at other locations in the store, subject to PM being allowed to maintain corresponding signage at its market share levels, would disadvantage PM in the market place or adversely affect PM's advertising opportunities, brand goodwill, or market share.

DISCUSSION

HN1 A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy and the court should grant such relief only when a plaintiff clearly establishes entitlement to such relief. See *Direx Israel, Ltd. v. Breakthrough I18] Med. Corp., 952 F.2d 802, 811 (4th Cir. 1991). In Blackwelder Furniture Co. of Statesville, Inc. v. Seilig Mfg. Co., Inc., 550 F.2d 189 (4th Cir. 1977), the Fourth Circuit identified the four factors, known as the balance of hardships test, which must be analyzed in determining whether to issue a preliminary injunction. These factors are: (1) the likelihood of irreparable harm to the plaintiff without the injunction; (2) the likelihood of harm to the defendant with the injunction; (3) the plaintiff's likelihood of success on the merits; [*509] and (4) the public interest. See Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Bradley, 756 F.2d 1048, 1054 (4th Cir. 1985).

HN2 Under the Blackwelder test a plaintiff must first make a clear showing that it will suffer irreparable harm without the injunction before any other inquiry is made. Direx, 952 F.2d 802 at 812. If the plaintiff makes a clear showing of irreparable harm, the court must then balance the likelihood of irreparable harm to plaintiff without the injunction against the likelihood of harm to the defendant if the injunction is issued. Blackwelder, 550 F.2d at 195.

HN3 After balancing the hardships, the court then proceeds [*19] to evaluate the plaintiff's likelihood of success on the merits. The balancing of hardships step must precede evaluation of the likelihood of success on the merits because the outcome of the hardship test fixes the degree of proof required for establishing the likelihood of success by the plaintiff. If the hardship balance tilts sharply and clearly in the plaintiff's favor, the required proof of likelihood of success is substantially reduced. Similarly, if the hardship to plaintiff is minimal or non-existent . . . then the burden on the plaintiff to establish likelihood of success on the merits becomes considerably greater.

Direx, 952 F.2d at 817. In particular, HN4 where "the balance 'tips decidedly' in favor of the plaintiff . . . a preliminary injunction will be granted if 'the plaintiff has raised questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult, and doubtful as to make them fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation.'" Rum Creek Coal Sales, Inc. v. Caperton, 926 F.2d 353, 359 (4th Cir. 1991) (citations omitted). As the balance of hardships shifts away from the plaintiff, a higher threshold showing on the merits is [*20] required. Id. Thus, where the plaintiff fails to establish that the balance tips decidedly in its favor, the plaintiff must make a strong showing of likelihood of success, establish a substantial likelihood of success, or present clear and convincing evidence of success. See Direx, 952 F.2d at 818.

Finally, HN5 Plaintiff must establish that the public interest favors the issuance of a preliminary injunction. However, this factor "does not appear always to be considered at length in preliminary injunction analysis" and is rarely determinative. Rum Creek Coal Sales, 926 F.2d at 366.

Plaintiffs have made a clear showing of irreparable injury in the absence of injunctive relief. In particular, as found above, Plaintiffs have demonstrated that PM's control of display space and signage under Retail Leaders will cause all Plaintiffs to suffer irreparable injury in the form of lost goodwill and lost advertising opportunities, and incalculable harm to their respective competitive positions, including threatened loss of market share and threatened loss of existing and potential customers. These types of injury or threatened injury have all been held to satisfy the irreparable injury [*21] requirement. See, e.g., Philip Morris Inc. v. Pittsburgh Penguins, Inc., 589 F. Supp. 912, 920 (W.D. Pa. 1983), aff'd mem., 738 F.2d 424 (3d Cir. 1984) (plaintiff prevailed on a preliminary injunction motion against the defendant's threatened removal of cigarette advertising displays because the loss of potential customers who would be persuaded by the advertising was a loss which could not be calculated in money damages); see also Multi-Channel TV Cable Co. c. Charlottesville Quality Cable Operating Co., 22 F.3d 546, 552 (4th Cir. 1994) ("when the failure to grant preliminary relief creates the possibility of permanent loss of customers to a competitor or the loss of goodwill the irreparable injury prong is satisfied"); Medtronic, Inc. v. Catalyst Research Corp., 664 F.2d 660, 663 (8th Cir. 1981) (loss of market share constituted irreparable injury).

PM will not suffer any substantial hardship if an injunction is issued. PM's current marketing vice president Barry Hopkins [510] cited concerns only about short-term "administrative chaos" associated with having to send out representatives into retail stores already on Retail Leaders contracts in order to re-stack the display [*22] fixtures. Hopkins did not assert that PM would suffer any long-term harm or that its brands would suffer lost market share, goodwill, or brand equity dilution. Thus, the court concludes that, on balance, the hardships tip decidedly in Plaintiffs' favor. Indeed, in the absence of the re-shelving issue, the balance tips overwhelmingly in favor of Plaintiffs.

Because Plaintiffs have established that the balance of hardships tips decidedly in their favor, Plaintiffs must establish only that a serious and substantial question exists with respect to the merits. See Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, 756 F.2d at 1055. The court finds that Plaintiffs have established that a serious and substantial question does exist with respect to their Section 1 claim.¹

The Retail Leaders program is a vertical restraint and its legality under Section 1 should [*23] be analyzed under a traditional rule of reason standard. See Murrow Furniture Galleries, Inc. v. Thomasville Furniture Indus., Inc., 889 F.2d 524, 527 (4th Cir. 1989). HN6[] Establishing a Section 1 violation proceeds in three steps: (1) the plaintiff must carry the initial burden of showing the challenged conduct has "an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in [a] relevant market"; (2) the defendant must then demonstrate that its conduct has "pro-competitive 'redeeming virtues'"; and (3) even if the defendant sustains that burden the plaintiff can still prevail by showing that the same pro-competitive benefit "could be achieved through an alternative means that is less restrictive of competition." K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib., Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 127 (2d Cir. 1995) (citations omitted).

HN7[] With respect to the first step, the Fourth Circuit has held that "[a] threshold inquiry . . . is whether the defendant has market power" in the relevant product and geographic markets. Murrow Furniture Galleries, 889 F.2d at 528. As noted, the parties agree that the relevant product and geographic markets in this case is the retail sale of cigarettes in the United [*24] States.

As for market power, the court finds that Plaintiffs have raised a serious question as to whether PM has market power. The Supreme Court has indicated that HN8[] market power for Section 1 purposes is a lesser degree of power than necessary to prove a Section 2 offense of monopolization. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992). Here, PM's market share in excess of 50%, combined with the dominant presence of its Marlboro brand, the concentrated nature of the industry, and high barriers to entry, raises a serious question as to whether PM possesses market power. The Retail Leaders program itself is an indication of PM's market power. By structuring RDA payments in such a way as to prevent non-CPL 2 or 3 outlets from effectively competing with CPL 2 or 3 outlets on PM brands, including Marlboro, PM will obtain a minimum of 75% of the above-counter display space and in-store signage, a figure well in excess of its market share and likely to cause significant and incalculable harm to Plaintiffs. As Plaintiffs' economic expert Professor George Hay explained,

The Retail Leaders program is a classic [*25] example of market power to gain a significant competitive advantage by handicapping rivals and diminishing their ability to compete. The [Retail Leaders] program is compelling to retailers precisely because of PM's existing dominance. No firm without PM's dominant market share could hope to succeed in making significant numbers of retailers accept a similar program. Yet few retailers [511] can afford not to enroll in the PM Leaders Program as long as their competitors are doing so. Because the cost of not signing up is that virtually all PM promotional monies and other benefits will be withdrawn, the pressure to accept the program is clear-retailers who do not enroll in the PM Retail Leaders program will not be able to compete with other retailers who are receiving promotional discounts on Marlboro and the other PM brands. Further, there is no viable fallback option for a retailer that wants to work with several of the other major manufacturers and allow each a degree of visibility roughly commensurate with presence in the market. PM is thus using market power to confront retailers with the 'choice' of CPL 2 or 3 on the one hand and nothing on the other. And it is doing so in order [26] to demand a share of the visible retail space that is likely to have a dramatic impact on the ability of its rivals to compete effectively.

¹ Because the court finds a serious question with respect to Plaintiffs' Section 1 claim, it will not discuss Plaintiffs' Section 2 claim or state law claims.

(Hay Decl. P 25).

Because Plaintiffs seek an injunction prior to full implementation of the Retail Leaders program, Plaintiffs obviously cannot show an actual adverse effect on competition and must instead satisfy this burden by establishing that PM possesses market power "plus some other ground for believing that the challenged behavior could harm competition in the market, such as the inherent anti-competitive nature of the defendant's behavior or the structure of the interbrand market." Tops Mkts. Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 97 \(2d Cir. 1998\). The court has already found that Plaintiffs have raised a serious question as to PM's market power. The court also finds that Plaintiffs have raised a serious question as to the anti-competitive effect of Retail Leaders. In particular, Retail Leaders poses a serious threat to interbrand competition by severely limiting and regulating in-store displays and advertisements of competing manufacturers. It also appears that Retail Leaders will have an adverse effect upon consumer choice.

[27] As for the redeeming pro-competitive virtues of Retail Leaders, PM has offered none. Indeed, James Mortensen, the former vice-president of marketing at PM, could not identify any justification for PM's exclusion of competitive permanent signage on the industry fixture. Vertical restraints relating to display space and advertising at the point of purchase are often viewed as pro-competitive because they enhance interbrand competition, even though they may inhibit intrabrand competition. See, e.g., Jays Foods, Inc. v. Frito-Lay, Inc., 664 F. Supp. 364 \(N.E. Ill. 1987\), aff'd mem., 860 F.2d 1082 (7th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1014 (1989); Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Co., 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1134 \(S.D.N.Y. 1986\). This is because interbrand competition, and not intrabrand competition, is a primary concern of antitrust law. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 52 n.19, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\).

Earlier cases involving shelf space agreements are readily distinguishable from this case, however, in that a serious question as a defendant's power to coerce retailers was not present in those cases. Moreover, visibility and advertising [28] at the point of purchase are uniquely critical to competition in the cigarette industry as competitors lack significant alternative advertising channels to compensate for the lack of visibility at the point of purchase. Thus, even if the "interbrand competition" rationale was offered by PM, there is a significant likelihood in this case that Retail Leaders will have the effect of stifling interbrand competition, not enhancing it. Accordingly, the court concludes that Plaintiffs have, at a minimum, raised a serious question as to their threshold burden of demonstrating an anti-competitive effect of the Retail Leaders program. The court further concludes that a serious question exists as to whether PM can satisfy its burden of establishing pro-competitive benefits which offset the anti-competitive effect. Even if PM could establish pro-competitive benefits, there is a serious [*512] question as to whether Retail Leaders exceeds what is reasonably necessary to achieve any legitimate pro-competitive objective.

Finally, the court will consider the public interest. As previously noted, the public interest factor is seldom discussed at length in preliminary injunction analysis. Rum Creek Coal [29] Sales, 926 F.2d at 366. Plaintiffs contend that the public interest favors it because it is suing to vindicate the public's interest in effective enforcement of antitrust laws which, in turn, advance competition in the marketplace. Defendant contends that the public interest favors it because Plaintiffs are attempting to utilize this court to obtain a competitive advantage it could not achieve in the marketplace. The court does not find that the public interest factor alters the conclusion drawn from analysis of the other factors. Each side asserts that they are aligned with the public's interest in a competitive marketplace. "In this case, as in many, it is difficult to ascertain where the public interest rests. . . . Both sets of parties assert basic rights fundamental to our nation. . . . In short, the court cannot easily align the parties so as to place one on the side of the public interest." Virginia Chapter, Associated Gen. Contractors v. Kreps, 444 F. Supp. 1167, 1185-86 \(W.D. Va. 1978\).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Retail Leaders program will cause all Plaintiffs to suffer irreparable harm in the form of loss of advertising opportunities, goodwill, brand equity, and the [30] potential for permanent loss of customers.
2. The issuance of an injunction will not cause Defendant to suffer any significant harm to its advertising opportunities, market share, goodwill, or brand equity. The potential for any significant harm to PM can be obviated by not requiring PM to reshelf its product vertically as opposed to horizontally.
3. The balance of hardships tips decidedly in favor of Plaintiffs.
4. Plaintiffs have raised a substantial and serious question as to the merits of their claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. In particular, Plaintiffs have raised a serious question as to PM's market power and as to whether Retail Leaders will have an anti-competitive effect on the interbrand market which will outweigh any pro-competitive benefits of the program.
5. While fair and vigorous competition is in the public interest, this factor does not substantially affect the court's determination that it is appropriate to enter a preliminary injunction in this case.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court will grant Plaintiff's joint motion for a preliminary injunction [Doc. # 2 in RJR 1:99CV185; Doc. # 2 in Lorillard 1:99CV207; and Doc. # 2 in B&W 1:99CV232].

[31] An order in accordance with this memorandum opinion shall be entered contemporaneously herewith.

FRANK W. BULLOCK, JR.

United States District Judge

June 29, 1999

ORDER and PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

BULLOCK, Chief Judge

For the reasons set forth in the memorandum opinion filed contemporaneously herewith,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiffs' joint motions for preliminary injunction [Doc. # 2 in RJR 1:99CV185; Doc. # 2 in Lorillard 1:99CV207; and Doc. # 2 in B&W 1:99CV232] are GRANTED.

IT IS THEREFORE FURTHER ORDERED that, during the pendency of this action, Defendant Philip Morris Incorporated, its officers, employees, agents and those acting in concert with it, shall not, by contract, mutual understanding, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, in connection with the Retail Leaders program or any other merchandising program,

1. In CPL 2 contracts prohibit any retail outlet from installing any permanent or other signage (of whatever size, subject to Paragraph 2) in that section of a fixture that displays or holds packages of cigarettes manufactured by a firm other than Philip Morris;
2. In CPL 2 contracts require any retail outlet to allocate to Philip Morris [32] a percentage of the cigarette-related permanent signage (computed without excluding from the calculation any permanent Philip Morris signage) greater than Philip Morris's market share in the local market area or of the retailer's total cigarette sales (whichever is greater); or
3. Prohibit any retail outlet from advertising or conducting at any time any promotional program relating to cigarettes manufactured by a firm other than Philip Morris.

60 F. Supp. 2d 502, *512L^A999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9926, 32

FRANK W. BULLOCK, JR.

United States District Judge

June 29, 1999

End of Document

Solla v. Aetna Health Plans of New York, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

June 29, 1999, Decided

No. 98-9181

Reporter

1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14628 *; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,570

Dr. Phillip J. Solla, Dr. Andrew Lacerenza, and Dr. Nicholas Napolitano, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. Aetna Health Plans of New York, Inc.; ChoiceCare Long Island, Inc.; Cigna Healthcare of New York, Inc.; Empire Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York; Managed Health, Inc.; Metlife Healthcare Network of New York, Inc.; Oxford Health Plans (NY), Inc.; Prudential Health Care Plan of New York, Inc.; Sanus Health Plan of Greater New York, Inc.; Travelers Health Network of New York, Inc.; and U.S. Healthcare, Inc. Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [*1] RULES OF THE SECOND CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 23554.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

conspiracy, district court, chiropractic, chiropractors, material fact, Sherman Act, under-referral, conspirators, restraint of trade, claim for relief, concerted action, summary judgment, anti trust law, personal stake, impermissible, plaintiffs', antitrust, decisions, enrollees, intra-HMO, referral

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN1 [PDF] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The "contract, combination ... or conspiracy" language of § 1 requires concerted activity involving more than one actor. Moreover, a plaintiff alleging a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2 [+] Private Actions, Remedies

To survive a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust action, plaintiff must establish a genuine issue of material fact that: (1) defendants violated the antitrust laws; and (2) the violation caused plaintiffs actual injury.

Counsel: Appearing for Appellants: Laurence P. Meyer, Weber & Weber, Hauppauge, N.Y.

Appearing for Appellees: Bruce H. Schneider, David A. Markowitz, Stroock & Stroock & Lavan, LLP, New York, NY, for Managed Health, Inc. and Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York, Inc. Susan G. Fillichio, Sedgwick, Detert, Moran & Arnold, New York, NY, for ChoiceCare Long Island, Inc. Bryan Dunlap, Winthrop, Stimson, Putnam & Roberts, New York, NY, for Oxford Health Plans (NY), Inc. Kenneth J. Kelly, Epstein, Becker & Green, New York, NY, for Prucare of New York, Inc. and U.S. Healthcare, Inc. . Craig P. Murphy, Windels, Marx, Davies & Ives, New York, NY, for Travelers Health Network of New York, Inc. Kevin D. McDonald, Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Washington, D.C. for Cigna Healthplan of New York. William J. O'Shaughnessy, McCarter & English, Newark, NJ, for Aetna Health Plans of New York, Inc. Debra J. Pearlstein, Weil, Gotshal & Manges, New York, NY, for Empire Blue Cross and Blue Shield. Mitchell C. Shapiro, Constantine [*2] & Partners, New York, NY, for Sanus Health Plan of Greater New York, Inc. Carl J. Schaerf, Lester, Schwab Katz & Dwyer, New York, NY, for MetLife Healthcare Network of New York, Inc.

Judges: Present: Honorable Pierre N. Leval, Circuit Judge Honorable Sonia Sotomayor, Circuit Judge Honorable Frederick J. Scullin, Jr., District Judge ¹

Opinion

SUMMARY ORDER

UPON CONSIDERATION of this appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York (Nina Gershon, Judge), IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

Plaintiffs, a group of chiropractic physicians who are licensed to practice in New York, appeal from Judge Gershon's grant of summary judgment to defendant Health Maintenance Organizations ("HMOs"). The Fourth Amended Complaint asserts, in relevant part, three antitrust violations under the § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, as well as corresponding claims under New York's Donnelly Act, N. Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 \(1\). [*3] In their first claim, plaintiffs assert that the failure of HMO representatives to authorize chiropractors as providers rendered each HMO a combination in restraint of trade. In their second claim, plaintiffs allege that two forms of unlawful conspiracy existed within each of the defendant HMOs: (A) a conspiracy by HMO persons in power to establish coverage policies which operated to exclude or restrict chiropractic services; and (B) a conspiracy by certain Primary Care Practitioners ("PCPs") within the respective HMOs, each having an impermissible personal stake in the outcome, to under-refer their HMO enrollees to chiropractors. Finally, in their third claim, plaintiffs maintain that representatives of some or all of the HMO's conspired with each other to tolerate the intra-HMO conspiracies. While their notice of appeal is not so limited, in their briefs to this Court, plaintiffs state that they are restricting their appeal to the district court's dismissal of their first claim for relief. Although purporting not to dispute dismissal of their second claim, plaintiffs challenge as erroneous the district court's findings relating to that claim which plaintiffs state were "uncritically [*4] carried forward" to analysis of their first claim. Accordingly, given these facts, we consider only those arguments made by plaintiffs relative to their first claim for relief.

¹ Honorable Frederick J. Scullin, Jr., United States District Judge for the Northern District of New York, sitting by designation.

HN1[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Supreme Court has interpreted the "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" language of § 1 to require concerted activity involving more than one actor. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\). Moreover, a plaintiff alleging a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\). Put another way, plaintiffs were required to introduce at least some evidence that the inference of a § 1 violation is reasonable given the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could [*5] not have harmed plaintiffs. See First Nat'l Bank of Ariz. v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 280, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 \(1968\).

HN2[] To survive a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust action, plaintiffs were required to establish a genuine issue of material fact that: (1) defendants violated the antitrust laws; and (2) the violation caused plaintiffs actual injury. See New York v. Hendrickson Bros., 840 F.2d 1065, 1076 \(2d Cir. 1988\) (citing J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 \(1981\)).

On appeal, plaintiffs claim that the district court erred in finding that the personal interests of the PCPs did not diverge from the interests of defendant HMOs and that the PCPs were therefore legally incapable of conspiring for the purpose of non-referral or under-referral of HMO enrollees to chiropractors. See Brief for Appellants at 5. However, plaintiffs have misstated the district court's finding. What the district court said was that § 1 of the Sherman Act did not apply to unilateral conduct on the part of a single person or enterprise and therefore plaintiffs' claim of intra-HMO illegal conduct to [*6] restrict chiropractic services must be dismissed absent a showing that HMO policy makers or PCPs had a personal stake in the outcome of relevant decisions. Judge Gershon then held that plaintiffs failed to carry their evidentiary burden in establishing a question of material fact as to this issue. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\). Upon review of the record below, we find no error in the district court's analysis.

We also reject plaintiffs' argument that, given the presumed cost effectiveness of chiropractic care, the existence of under-referral alone bears witness to concerted action. Antitrust law curbs the breadth of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\). Accordingly, even if referrals to medical doctors were construed as under-referrals to chiropractors, such conduct would not necessarily "cast[] doubt on inferences of independent (not combined) action or proper conduct by defendants." Capital Imaging Assocs. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 545 \(2d Cir. 1993\). Plaintiffs simply did not shoulder their burden of presenting a question of material fact that [*7] chiropractic referral decisions were motivated by impermissible conduct by any of the actors identified in their complaint. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542; Michelman v. Clark-Schwebel Fiber Glass Corp., 534 F.2d 1036, 1043 \(2d Cir. 1976\).

Finally, plaintiffs suggest that there is a distinction between combination and conspiracy for purposes of a § 1 claim and that there is no unity of purpose requirement in order to establish an illegal "combination." This Circuit has yet to address the issue of a distinction between a combination and a conspiracy insofar as it might impact the degree of proof necessary to establish a § 1 violation. We note that other circuits have rejected the notion that a "combination" is distinct from a "conspiracy" under § 1. See Orson, Inc v. Miramax Film Corp., 79 F.3d 1358, 1366

(3d Cir. 1996); Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1455 (11th Cir. 1991). However, we need not decide this issue, because plaintiffs, although required to offer at least some evidence of concerted action, failed to offer any evidence in this regard. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 545. Moreover, we are unable to discern that plaintiffs proffered [*8] any evidence as to when or whether the doctors and HMOs who are defendants in this action were independent of each other.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

End of Document

Callahan v. A.E.V.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

March 25, 1999, Argued ; June 30, 1999, Filed

NO. 98-3456

Reporter

182 F.3d 237 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14649 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,567; 52 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. (Callaghan) 916

MICHAEL W. CALLAHAN; PERRY BEER INC.; PETER G. PETOUSIS; NORMAN BERNARDI; KATHLEEN A. KAPRES; PETE'S BEER INC.; LISA MARTIN; ANTHONY SANTAGUIDA; THOMAS SANTAGUIDA; A. L. ABROMOVITZ; CARL N. ALTENHOF; DOUGLAS J. BERTHOLD; BREW-THRU, INC.; ALLEN E. BRAUN; SPIKE'S BEER DISTRIBUTOR, INC.; DINO A. DEFLAVIO; CAROLE A. DEMARCO; FRED DEMSHER; E & C PRICE DISTRIBUTING, INC.; FRISCH DISTRIBUTING CO. INC.; SARA J. KELLY; MARY LOU LIBELL; THE BEER WAREHOUSE; ARMANDO NOVELLI; MARTIN P. PEKOR; T.C. VALLEY BEER & POP COMPANY, INC.; LORETTA J. PERRI; GREEN VALLEY DISTRIBUTING CO., INC.; MARYANNE SANTAGUIDA; INGEBORG G. SCHINDLER; DENNIS SENNEWAY; MICHAEL T. VOELKER; VOELKER DISTRIBUTING, INC., Appellants v. A.E.V., INC., a corporation; BEER AND POP WAREHOUSE, INC., a corporation; BRANDT DISTRIBUTORS OF PITTSBURGH, a corporation; EARL BRANDT, an individual; FRANK B. FUHRER WHOLESALE COMPANY, a corporation; FRANK B. FUHRER, JR., an individual; JET DISTRIBUTORS, INC., a corporation; ALFRED M. LUTHERAN DISTRIBUTORS, INC., a corporation; JAMES LUTHERAN, an individual; Q.F.A., INC., a corporation; RED SKY, INC., a corporation; RETAIL SERVICES AND SYSTEMS, INC., a corporation; DAVID J. TRONE, an individual

Subsequent History: [1] As Corrected July 23, 1999.

Prior History: On Appeal From the United States District Court For the Western District of Pennsylvania. (D.C. Civ. No. 92-cv-00556). District Judge: Honorable Donetta W. Ambrose.

Disposition: Judgment of the District Court reversed to the extent that it granted summary judgment to the defendants on the plaintiffs' antitrust claims, but affirmed in all other respects, and case remanded to the District Court for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Core Terms

Beer, plaintiffs', customers, defendants', discount, district court, distributor, causation, losses, wholesalers, damages, antitrust violation, proximate causation, factors, Liquor, antitrust, antitrust claim, purchasing, vindicate, retailers, reasons, prices, licenses, sales, sufficient evidence, fact of damage, racketeering, summary judgment motion, cases, injuries

LexisNexis® Headnotes

HN1 State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 47, §§ 4-438, 4-443, 4-438\(b\), 4-436\(e\), 4-436\(f\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Although the plaintiffs must prove loss, causation and specific damages, at the summary judgment stage, the court's main concern should be with determining loss and causation in general, rather than proof of specific amounts of damages. At this procedural juncture, reviewing the district court's grant of summary judgment, the court is not, as it would be upon reviewing a jury verdict, determining whether a plaintiff has brought sufficient evidence to justify the actual damages awarded. All the court is concerned with is whether a plaintiff has established that the defendants' illegal conduct was a material cause of the plaintiff's injury.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN4 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

On appeal, review of a district court's grant of summary judgment is plenary. The reviewing court evaluates the evidence using the same standard the district court applied in reaching its decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Price discrimination simpliciter, even when it violates the Robinson-Patman Act, is usually not a Sherman Act violation. But this does not necessarily mean that the plaintiffs are barred from bringing a price discrimination claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-2. Price discrimination, under appropriate circumstances, can be part of an agreement in restraint of trade or a monopolization attempt. So long as the price discrimination involves a conspiracy to restrain trade or create a monopoly in some market, along with a substantial effect on competition in the market, it would violate the Sherman Act. The proper evidence might support the conclusion that this constitutes a conspiracy or agreement to restrain trade or create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

A plaintiff must prove a causal connection between the antitrust violation and actual damage suffered. To recover damages, an antitrust plaintiff must prove causation, described in Third Circuit jurisprudence as fact of damage or injury. The plaintiff must show actual injury that was caused by the violation.

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > State of Mind > Proof of Earlier Acts

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exceptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > State of Mind > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Rule Components > Declarants

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Rule Components > Statements

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Rule Components > Truth of Matter Asserted

HN7 [down] State of Mind, Proof of Earlier Acts

Fed. R. Evid. 803\(3\) provides that the following is not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness: A statement of declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition (such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, and bodily health), but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will. Statements that are considered under the exception to the hearsay rule found at Fed. R. Evid. 803\(3\) cannot be offered to prove the truth of the underlying facts asserted. Statements of a customer as to his reasons for not dealing with a supplier are admissible for the limited purpose of proving customer motive, but not as evidence of the facts recited as furnishing the motives.

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > Spontaneous Statements > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Statements as Evidence > Hearsay > General Overview

182 F.3d 237, *237L999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14649, 1

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exceptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > State of Mind > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Rule Components > Statements

HN8[] Exceptions, Spontaneous Statements

The admissibility of customers' statements under the Fed. R. Evid. 803\(3\) hearsay exception does not depend on their being identified. Knowing the specific identity of the declarant will not make the statements more trustworthy evidence of the declarants' descriptions of their states of mind, the primary concern in interpreting hearsay exceptions. With respect to a state-of-mind statement, it is only important that the declarant be the person whose state of mind the statement concerns, which is true by definition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exceptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > State of Mind > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Remedies

Plaintiffs' testimony that certain customers no longer purchased from them, coupled with their testimony concerning the customers' statements of their motive, which is admissible hearsay under Fed. R. Evid. 803\(3\), are together evidence of the fact of damage.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN10[] Private Actions, Remedies

In order to establish antitrust liability and damages, all the plaintiffs must show is that they suffered an economic loss as a result of the defendants' antitrust violations, not that the defendants benefitted from that loss directly. A plaintiff, in order to recover on an antitrust claim, must prove an antitrust violation and that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that violation. As long as the plaintiffs can prove that they lost business, and that this loss was a result of the defendants' antitrust violations, they can bring a successful antitrust claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN11[] Private Actions, Remedies

On review of a grant of summary judgment, the court should focus on whether there is sufficient evidence of the fact of damage in general, not on the sufficiency of the evidence of a specific amount of damages. Accordingly, the lack of specific evidence of the total amount of lost sales does not preclude an ultimate conclusion that the customer evidence, especially in conjunction with expert evidence, is sufficient to meet the plaintiffs' burden of producing evidence of fact of damage.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN12[Private Actions, Remedies

Sufficient evidence of causation exists to defeat a motion for summary judgment where an expert report rests on assumptions that are based on past performance, not guesses as to the future. An opinion may be based on the assumption that the plaintiffs' performance in the years before defendants entered the market provides an appropriate benchmark for their performance thereafter.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN13[Discovery & Disclosure, Disclosure

Labeling of a witness as a rebuttal expert does not preclude consideration of his testimony to defeat a motion for summary judgment. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) governing the disclosure and discovery of expert witnesses in particular, make no distinction between the permissible uses of regular experts and rebuttal experts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN14[Private Actions, Remedies

In addition to establishing that the defendants' unlawful actions in fact caused the plaintiffs' losses, the plaintiffs must also establish proximate causation, showing that this causal connection is not too remote. A causal connection simpliciter between the defendants' actions and the plaintiffs' injuries is insufficient to give rise to a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341. The plaintiff must show that the connection is proximate, that is, not too remote.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN15 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Three key factors determine whether a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341, is based on an injury too remote from the alleged racketeering activity. First, the less direct an injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to the violation, as distinct from other independent factors. Second, quite apart from problems of proving factual causation, recognizing claims of the indirectly injured would force courts to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiffs removed at different levels of injury from the violative acts, to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries. And, finally, the need to grapple with these problems is simply unjustified by the general interest in deterring injurious conduct, since directly injured victims can generally be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general, without any of the problems attendant upon suits by plaintiffs injured more remotely.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN16 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

The less direct an injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to the violation as distinct from other independent factors. The more difficult it is to distinguish between the effects of the defendants' legitimate activities and their alleged racketeering actions on the plaintiffs, the more likely the court is to conclude that proximate causation is lacking.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN17 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Recognizing claims of the indirectly injured would force courts to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiffs removed at different levels of injury from the violative acts, to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries. As a result, where granting plaintiffs relief would require apportionment of that relief among numerous plaintiffs of different standing, the court is inclined to find an absence of proximate causation for those less directly involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN18 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

A searching inquiry into causation and apportionment of damages among plaintiffs is unjustified where the central focus of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341, in deterring unlawful conduct can be vindicated by other means. Where a more directly affected party is available to vindicate the public interest in enforcing the law, the court has less need to stretch the limits of proximate causation in RICO cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN19 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

See 18 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 911.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN20 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

A civil action under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341, is not specifically required to vindicate the general deterrence interest. Although not providing for treble damages, the prospect of state criminal racketeering charges provides an adequate deterrent to lawless conduct.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN21 [blue download icon] State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 47, §§ 1-104\(d\), 1-104\(a\) (1997).

Counsel: H. LADDIE MONTAGUE, JR., ESQUIRE, JEROME M. MARCUS, ESQUIRE, (ARGUED) BART D. COHEN, ESQUIRE, Berger & Montague, P.C., Philadelphia, PA Counsel for Appellants.

ROSLYN M. LITMAN, ESQUIRE, (ARGUED) MARTHA S. HELMREICH, ESQUIRE, Litman, Litman, Harris and Brown, P.C., Pittsburgh, PA Counsel for Appellees A.E.V., Inc.; Beer & POP Warehouse, Inc.; Jet Distributors, Inc.; Q.F.A., Inc.; Red Sky, Inc.; Retail Services and Systems, Inc.; David J. Trone.

MICHAEL YABLONSKI, ESQUIRE, (ARGUED) Meyer, Unkovic & Scott, LLP, Pittsburgh, PA Counsel for Appellees Frank B. Fuhrer Wholesale Company and Frank B. Fuhrer, Jr.

Judges: Before: BECKER, Chief Judge, LEWIS and WELLFORD, * Circuit Judges. [\[2\]](#)

Opinion by: BECKER

Opinion

[*240] OPINION OF THE COURT

BECKER, Chief Judge:

Prior to 1985, the retail sale of beer in the Pittsburgh area was conducted exclusively by "mom and pop"-type beer distributorships, such as those operated by plaintiff Michael W. Callahan and his fifteen co-plaintiffs. In that year, defendant David Trone opened the first "Beer World" store, a supermarket-style beer distributorship ten times the size of the traditional stores. He opened four more such stores in the Pittsburgh area between 1986 and 1988, offering a larger selection and lower prices. This case involves antitrust and RICO claims arising out of the manner in which Trone operated these stores.

* Honorable Harry Wellford, United States Circuit Judge for the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, sitting by designation.

The Pennsylvania Liquor Code limits the ability of one entrepreneur to own or operate more than one beer distributorship. Trone apparently evaded these restrictions by placing the Beer World stores in the names of others, and, while acting as a "consultant," effectively running the stores himself. According to the plaintiffs, Trone deceived the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB) as to the true state of affairs by filing of false statements and affidavits.

Trone negotiated purchases of beer from [3] wholesalers for all of the Beer World stores collectively. By doing so, the stores were able to purchase at a wholesale price lower than they would have been able to obtain in individual purchases. Central to this case are Trone's negotiations with defendant Frank Fuhrer, the master distributor in the Pittsburgh area for Anheuser-Busch and Coors, in the course of which Trone allegedly forced Fuhrer to agree to give a quantity discount to the Beer World stores based on their purchases as a group, but not to give this discount to any other retailers.¹ Trone is said to have been able to do this because the Beer World stores held a substantial portion (at least 25%) of the Pittsburgh beer market, and because he threatened to place Fuhrer's products poorly within the stores. The Beer World stores allegedly received this discount even though their orders in the aggregate did not always reach the 4500-case level Fuhrer set for the discount. According to the plaintiffs, this discount was not disclosed to anyone else; it was not included on Fuhrer's ordinary price list and was excluded from loading sheets posted at Fuhrer's distribution center. Not surprisingly, the Beer World stores' advantage [4] in pricing, as well as other areas, cut sharply into the business of the smaller stores.

This state of affairs has spawned this unusual antitrust and civil RICO case with state tort law claims appended, brought by the plaintiffs against Trone, the Beer World stores, and Fuhrer.² The plaintiffs' antitrust theory is that Trone, his employees, and the separately incorporated stores have contracted, combined and conspired to restrain trade in beer in Allegheny County, by confronting wholesalers as a group and using their buying power and the threats described above to force the wholesalers to sell them beer at a price lower than that available to other retailers. The plaintiffs' RICO theory is that Trone and others, by submitting false statements and affidavits to the [5] LCB, as well as lying to a grand jury to cover up these false statements, were able to maintain illegal consolidated control of the Beer World stores. The plaintiffs submit that, as a [*241] result of this control, Trone and the Beer World stores obtained the advantages that enabled them to sell beer at prices below that of the plaintiffs. Although in a free market, these different approaches to operating a beer distributorship might not seem to offer grounds for a federal antitrust or civil RICO suit, in the context of Pennsylvania's detailed malt and brewed beverages regulatory scheme, the plaintiffs have found grounds for a lawsuit.

[6] The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants on all claims, including both the state tort law claims and the federal claims, and the plaintiffs have appealed. Strangely, antitrust liability issues are not presented in this appeal. The District Court, in deciding the defendants' motion for summary judgment, did not consider antitrust liability issues at all; rather, the District Court disposed of the antitrust and RICO claims on the ground that the plaintiffs had not produced sufficient evidence that they suffered actual losses that were in fact a result of the defendants' actions. Accordingly, and given the incomplete state of the record as presented to us by the parties, we do not intend to engage in an examination of the nature and scope of the plaintiffs' theory or proof of antitrust violations (and, consequently, we express no view as to their correctness). Instead, we will assume, for the purposes of this appeal, that the plaintiffs can offer sufficient proof that the defendants engaged in antitrust violations throughout the relevant time periods. We will accordingly concentrate on the issues -- actual loss and causation in fact (termed "fact of damage") [7] with respect to the antitrust claims, and proximate causation with respect to the RICO claim -- that are fairly presented by this appeal.

¹ Several other master distributors were involved in similar arrangements with the defendants. Although they were apparently named in the original complaint, they have now settled with the plaintiffs and are no longer participating in this case.

² The Beer World stores are separately incorporated and named in the complaint as A.E.V., Inc., Beer and Pop Warehouse, Inc., Jet Distributor, Inc., Q.F.A., Inc., and Red Sky, Inc., all of which operate under the Beer World name. Trone is named personally in the complaint, along with the consulting business he runs, Retail Services and Systems, Inc. Fuhrer includes both Frank B. Fuhrer, Jr. himself and his business, Frank B. Fuhrer Wholesale Co.

In order to prove that the plaintiffs suffered losses and that the defendants' antitrust violations caused the injuries as a matter of fact, the plaintiffs offered (1) testimony that various customers no longer came to their stores and that the customers explained that this was because the Beer World stores offered cheaper prices, along with (2) the report of an expert who opined that the defendants' actions had caused harm to the plaintiffs. The defendants contend that this evidence is insufficient to meet the plaintiffs' burden of production. They first submit that the plaintiffs' anecdotal evidence is inadmissible hearsay on which the plaintiffs cannot rely. We disagree. The plaintiffs themselves can testify that the customers are in fact no longer shopping at their stores. Furthermore, although the reports of the customers' statements are hearsay, they are admissible as evidence of the customers' states of mind, i.e., their reasons for no longer shopping at the plaintiffs' stores. This combined evidence is sufficient to meet the plaintiffs' [8] burden of producing enough evidence of loss and causation with respect to the plaintiffs' antitrust claims to overcome a motion for summary judgment.

Also on the antitrust issues, the defendants argue that the plaintiffs' proffered expert testimony is inadequate to prove fact of injury and causation because, inter alia, the expert failed to discuss numerous other possible causes of the plaintiffs' losses. Furthermore, the defendants challenge the expert's methodology for estimating the amount of damages. In spite of these flaws, we conclude that the expert's testimony is sufficient to meet the plaintiffs' burden of proof. At all events -- taking into consideration both the customer evidence and the expert reports-- we believe that the District Court erred in dismissing the plaintiffs' antitrust claims on the ground that there was inadequate proof of fact of injury and causation in fact.

With respect to the RICO claim, the defendants contend that the alleged causal connection between the defendants' fraud and the plaintiffs' losses is not sufficiently close to meet the requirement of proximate causation. The plaintiffs' RICO claim runs as follows: If Trone and others [9] associated with the Beer World stores had [*242] not defrauded the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board by submitting sworn statements that Trone did not own and control all of the stores, the Liquor Control Board would have put Trone out of business. Since he stayed in business, Trone was able to use his control of several stores to obtain volume discounts by buying for the stores in the aggregate. The plaintiffs were then harmed by the defendants' ability to sell at lower prices.

We think this case is similar to Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912 (3d Cir. 1999), in which we recently held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove proximate causation. In Steamfitters, we recognized three factors the Supreme Court has identified for determining proximate causation in RICO cases: the directness of the injury, the difficulty of apportioning treble damages among potential plaintiffs, and the possibility of other plaintiffs vindicating the goals of RICO. Given that the plaintiffs are relatively remote third-party "victims" of the fraud and that the LCB itself, or the wholesalers, could take steps to counter the defendants' allegedly illegal [10] actions, we think the plaintiffs' claim meets none of the factors. Accordingly, we believe that the District Court properly dismissed the plaintiffs' RICO claim, although not for the appropriate reason. For these reasons, we will affirm the judgment of the District Court to the extent it dismissed the plaintiffs' RICO claim, but reverse its judgment with respect to the antitrust claims.

I. Facts and Procedural History

A. The Pennsylvania Beer Sales Regulation Scheme

Pennsylvania is a state in which temperance with respect to alcoholic beverages has always been an important policy, and statutory regulation of alcoholic beverage sales is extensive. The best known example, of course, is the "state store" system, under which liquor can only be sold in state-owned stores. With respect to malt and brewed beverages there is likewise a panoply of regulations. See, e.g., Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 47, § 4-441(b) (West 1997) (prohibiting sales in units smaller than one case); § 4-447 (limiting sellers' ability to change prices); § 4-492(2) (prohibiting sales by licensees for consumption on the premises); § 4-492(4) (prohibiting sales on Sunday); § 4-493(2) (prohibiting credit sales of [11] alcoholic beverages other than by credit card); § 4-493(3) (prohibiting exchange of alcoholic beverages for goods or services); § 4-493(8) (prohibiting the use of labels or advertisements containing the alcoholic content of brewed or malt beverages).

For present purposes, we are concerned with the regulation of beer sales. Under Pennsylvania law, beer sellers are divided into four classes for licensing purposes: manufacturers, master distributors, importing distributors and distributors. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 47, § 4-431 (West 1997). The first category consists of breweries. An out-of-state brewer is required to designate a particular importing distributor as the master distributor for a particular geographic area within which only that master distributor is permitted to buy that brewer's beer directly from the brewer. See § 4-431\(b\). Thus, any beer sold in a particular area must at some point pass through the master distributor designated for that brand in that area. A master distributor can sell beer to importing distributors, (ordinary) distributors or the public. An importing distributor can also sell beer either to other importing distributors, (ordinary) distributors [\[12\]](#) or the public. A distributor can only sell beer to the public. The Beer World stores all have importing distributor licenses, and can therefore sell to each other and to the public. Only some of the plaintiffs have such licenses.

Highly relevant here is the extent to which Pennsylvania law limits the ability of a participant -- e.g., a partner, member or shareholder -- in one beer distributor to participate in another. HN1¹ See § 4-438 ("No [\[*243\]](#) person shall possess more than one class of license . . ."); § 4-443 (prohibiting interlocking ownership in various forms). In particular, the law restricts the ability of an individual to participate in companies that operate at the same level, although the parties debate the extent to which the law does so. See § 4-438\(b\) ("No person shall possess or be issued more than one distributor's or importing distributor's license."); § 4-436\(e\) (application for brewed or malt beverage license must state "that the applicant is not, or in case of a partnership or association, that the members are not, or in the case of a corporation, that the officers or directors are not, in any manner pecuniarily interested, either directly or indirectly, in [\[*13\]](#) the profits of any other class of business regulated under this article, except as hereinafter permitted"); § 4-436\(f\) (applicant must state "that applicant is the only person in any manner pecuniarily interested in the business so asked to be licensed . . .").

B. Trone's Beer Business Arrangements

Trone's family had been in the beer business in Harrisburg and Pittsburgh for some time. While a business student at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, Trone apparently came up with a plan for a new type of beer distributorship business. Prior to his plan, beer distributors were typically small, low-capitalization "mom-and-pop" stores of the kind operated by the plaintiffs. They usually had ordinary distributor licenses and operated relatively small stores, selling beer by having people come in and ask for a particular brand. Trone's idea was to create much larger stores, roughly ten times the square footage of the plaintiffs' stores, to be operated like a supermarket. The cases of beer would be set out on shelves so that shoppers could wander through the store picking out particular brands themselves. In addition, Trone planned to offer soda and snacks in addition [\[14\]](#) to the beer. This business plan became the "Beer World" concept.³ We chronicle the history and management structure of the stores because it bears on the contention that Trone improperly controls all of the stores in violation of the Pennsylvania liquor control scheme, an important part of the plaintiffs' antitrust and RICO claims.

The first Beer World opened in the Pittsburgh area in 1985. Two more stores opened in Pittsburgh in 1986, followed by the last two in 1987 and 1988. The first store, incorporated as Jet Distributors, Inc., is apparently owned by Paul Piho, a childhood friend of Trone's. Piho initially worked full-time in Chicago after the store opened. For a short time, he moved to Pittsburgh [\[15\]](#) and managed the store. Currently, he works at a Delaware branch of a chain of liquor stores apparently owned by Trone. The second store is apparently owned by Trone's wife, who for a time worked at the store, but presently spends less than five hours per week there. The third is apparently owned by Thomas Esper, a retired schoolteacher who apparently knows little about either the store or the liquor business. The fourth store is apparently owned by Trone's sister, who has been in school or working at other jobs for the relevant period. Before 1990 and since 1994, she has lived outside of Pennsylvania. The last store was apparently owned by Albert Vivio, the father of one of Trone's employees. He stated that he did not pay anything to own the store, but that Trone asked him to put his name on a license. He testified that he had "no duties at the store," pursuant to an "agreement with Mr. Trone."

³ It might seem surprising that Trone was the first to come up with the beer supermarket concept. Indeed, one might think that it would have been around for decades. Perhaps he was simply the first to bring this idea to Pennsylvania. At all events, these ruminations have no bearing on the outcome of this case.

Since the Beer World stores opened, Trone has been employed as a "consultant" for all of them. The plaintiffs allege, however, that Trone's role in the stores is [*244] much greater. When the stores opened, he did much of the work in preparing the stores, choosing product line and layout, and selecting [16] employees. He also set up purchasing and delivery systems. Since then, Trone has apparently controlled the day-to-day operations of the stores. He set the salaries for Beer World employees. Employees were routinely moved from store to store while remaining on the payroll of the store in which they began. Although each store maintains a separate bank account in the owner's name, Trone has a stamp of each owner's signature which he uses for checks. He also designed all the advertising for the stores, which included aggressive price advertising until July 1, 1987, when Pennsylvania banned it. And he determined purchasing and product placement within the stores. Finally, Trone purchased a single insurance policy and used one law firm for all of the stores.

Of particular relevance to the plaintiffs' claims are Trone's efforts in coordinating purchasing. Trone negotiated purchases of beer from wholesalers for all of the Beer World stores at once, obtaining an agreement that the Beer World stores could order together in order to obtain substantial volume discounts. The parties focus particularly on the negotiations between Trone and Fuhrer, who was the master distributor in the Pittsburgh [17] area for Anheuser-Busch and Coors. All of Fuhrer's negotiations regarding the prices he would charge Beer World stores were conducted with Trone.

Even before the Beer World stores opened, beer wholesalers offered various quantity discounts, although they were relatively small. From September 1, 1987, until the end of 1989, pursuant to an agreement with Trone, Fuhrer implemented a $.25 per case discount for purchases of 4500 or more cases, a purchase amount substantially larger than that required for other, smaller volume discounts wholesalers offered. The Beer World stores were the only ones ever able to achieve this level of purchasing, which they did by ordering as a unit. Although each store would place separate orders that were delivered separately, they were placed in the name of Jet Distributors, one of the stores, in order to aggregate the order size to reach the 4500 case level. Each store's order was substantially less than this, usually in the range of 1000 cases. Although the plaintiffs attempted to take advantage of this discount, they were never able or permitted to do so.

Although the parties focus primarily on these quantity discounts, the plaintiffs allege that [18] Trone was also able to obtain other benefits for the Beer World stores from wholesalers. For example, Fuhrer allegedly gave the Beer World stores a full-time employee, paid by Fuhrer, who stocked shelves at all of the stores. The plaintiffs further contend that Trone forced Fuhrer to sell him out-of-code beer, i.e., beer past its expiration/freshness date, at a discount. Apparently state law prohibits this and requires wholesalers to give retailers new beer in exchange for out-of-code beer. Trone allegedly got such beer at a discount and sold it while concealing the fact that it had expired from customers and inspectors sent by the beer brewers.

The plaintiffs criticize several aspects of these arrangements. First of all, they contend that Trone forced Fuhrer to agree not to give the discount to any other retailers. He allegedly could do so because, since the Beer World stores held a substantial portion (at least 25%) of the Pittsburgh beer market, Trone's threat to place Fuhrer's products in unfavorable locations within the stores carried force. Second, the plaintiffs point out that the Beer Worlds consistently received this discount even though their orders in the aggregate did [19] not always reach the 4500-case level. In addition, many of the individual orders were fairly small: 29% were below 500 cases and 14% were below 200 cases, roughly the level at which the plaintiffs ordered. Finally, this discount was not [*245] disclosed to anyone else; it was not even included on Fuhrer's ordinary price lists.

In response to the defendants' actions, the plaintiffs instituted a state lawsuit against the defendants and convinced the Commonwealth to commence criminal proceedings. Neither of these actions achieved their desired results.

C. The Present Lawsuit

The plaintiffs filed the present lawsuit in March of 1992. Their primary claims include price fixing, engaging in a group boycott, and attempting and conspiring to monopolize the beer market in Pittsburgh, all in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2, and civil RICO claims predicated on money laundering and mail fraud in connection with the license applications to the LCB, said to be a violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1956, 1962. They also brought various other claims that have been dismissed and not appealed or that we may dispose of summarily.⁴ Although the plaintiffs moved for class certification, this [\[20\]](#) motion was denied, at which point some additional plaintiffs joined the suit.

The antitrust claims arise out of the joint operation of the Beer World stores. The plaintiffs contend that, by operating as a group, the Beer World stores were able to obtain an illegal competitive advantage. As evidence of such joint operation, they point to inter alia Trone's collective control of the stores, the aggregated orders through Jet Distributing, and coordinated advertising. The plaintiffs [\[21\]](#) contend that this conduct violated the antitrust laws in several ways. First, the "quantity" discounts the Beer World stores were able to obtain are said to have constituted unfair price fixing, i.e., the price for other beer distributors was fixed at a level $.25 higher than that for the Beer World stores. Second, the discounts are claimed to have resulted in a group boycott, i.e., Beer World convinced the wholesalers to sell to the other distributors only on unfairly disadvantageous terms. Finally, the plaintiffs allege that all of the actions of Trone and the Beer World stores constituted an effort to monopolize the beer retail market in Allegheny County, which includes Pittsburgh. These efforts were aggravated by the fact that, pursuant to the Pennsylvania Liquor Code, the plaintiffs could only purchase beer through the single, designated master distributor for each brand for Allegheny County.

The RICO claim arises out of the various statements made during and concerning the Beer Worlds' efforts to obtain licenses from the LCB. First, various of the defendants and others allegedly lied about the true ownership of the Beer World stores in affidavits and other documents filed [\[22\]](#) with the LCB via mailings in order to obtain and retain their licenses. Second, Trone and others allegedly lied before a grand jury investigating their operation when asked about the ownership of the Beer World stores. The plaintiffs contend that, as a result of this fraud, the Beer World stores were able to remain in business illegally under the control of Trone. Furthermore, Trone is said to have engaged in transactions involving the proceeds of this fraud, i.e., the income of the stores, by reinvesting the money in the stores, allegedly in violation of the money laundering statute. The plaintiffs contend that these various activities violated RICO.

D. The District Court's Rulings

Following extensive discovery, the parties each moved for summary judgment on [\[*246\]](#) various of the claims. The plaintiffs moved for summary judgment on their RICO claim relating to the Trone and Beer World defendants' statements to the LCB. The District Court denied the plaintiffs' motion because they did not "provide [any] substantive analysis of the meaning or application of § 1962 or its various subsections." Dist. Ct. Op. I, at 3.⁵

[\[23\]](#) The defendants moved for summary judgment on all of the plaintiffs' claims. The District Court, in a series of orders, granted the defendants' motions in part and denied them in part, and granted judgment in favor of the defendants on all of the plaintiffs' claims. First, the District Court dismissed part of the plaintiffs' RICO claim on statute of limitations grounds to the extent it was based on matters that occurred more than four years before the suit was filed.⁶ [\[24\]](#) Second, the District Court dismissed all of the plaintiffs' remaining claims -- the antitrust and ⁴These claims include price discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13; common-law fraud; common-law conspiracy to defraud; and RICO violations predicated on mail fraud in the mailing of price lists by Fuhrer, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1962. The Robinson-Patman Act claim was dismissed early on, and the plaintiffs have not appealed from that dismissal. See Callahan v. A.E.V., Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19761, Civ. A. No. 92-556, 1994 WL 682756 (W.D. Pa. Sept. 26, 1994). The plaintiffs' others claims are discussed in infra note 7.

⁵Since we will affirm the District Court's judgment in favor of the defendants on the plaintiffs' RICO claim, we need not consider specifically whether it erred in denying the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment.

⁶The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the RICO claim to the extent it was based on actions prior to March 1988, four years before the present suit was filed, because the plaintiffs should have been aware of the defendants' acts prior to that time. The plaintiffs contend that the District Court's conclusion erroneously rested on the fact that some of them filed a state lawsuit against Trone and the Beer World stores in 1986 alleging similar concerns, during which they

RICO claims -- because it concluded that the plaintiffs had not offered sufficient evidence of fact of damage, i.e., loss and causation in fact.⁷

[25] HN2[↑]

[*247] Summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). HN3[↑] Although the plaintiffs must prove loss, causation and specific damages, at the summary judgment stage, the court's main concern should be with determining loss and causation in general, rather than proof of specific amounts of damages:

At this procedural juncture, reviewing the district court's grant of summary judgment, we are not, as we would be upon reviewing a jury verdict, determining whether a plaintiff has brought sufficient evidence to justify the actual damages awarded. Rather, here, all we are concerned with is whether Rossi has established that the defendants' illegal conduct was a material cause of [his] injury.

could have obtained sufficient discovery to bring their present claims. They argue that their attorney misled them into believing they could not pursue their claim in that context, and that the statute of limitations should be tolled equitably.

We recently explained that attorney misconduct can give rise to equitable tolling only in unusual circumstances. See Seitzinger v. Reading Hosp. & Med. Ctr., 165 F.3d 236, 240 (3d Cir. 1999). The plaintiffs contend that such unusual circumstances are present here, because their attorney allegedly was conflicted in that he also represented Fuhrer, and because, unlike Seitzinger, the lack of information on which to base a claim was at least arguably a result of the defendants' fraud. Furthermore, the plaintiffs note that, given the tremendous difficulties they faced in obtaining adequate discovery from the defendants in this case, the defendants cannot contend that the plaintiffs would have been able to obtain sufficient discovery in the previous state case. On the other hand, the defendants point out that, even if they fraudulently concealed certain facts, the plaintiffs were aware of those facts by the end of 1987. We need not decide this issue, because we will affirm the District Court's dismissal of the RICO claim in its entirety on other grounds.

⁷ As noted above, the plaintiffs brought additional RICO and common-law tort claims. In the same series of orders identified in the text, the District Court granted summary judgment on these claims in the defendants' favor. We will affirm those aspects of the judgment summarily.

The plaintiffs' common-law claims are that Fuhrer issued price lists that were fraudulent because they did not state the volume discount the Beer World stores received, and that Trone and Fuhrer conspired to misrepresent the prices through the same mechanism. Claims for common-law fraud and conspiracy are governed by a two-year statute of limitations. See 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 5524\(7\). The discount was discontinued at the end of 1989, and the plaintiffs were aware of the discount before then. The complaint was filed in March of 1992. Accordingly, the District Court concluded that more than two years had elapsed between the defendants' fraudulent acts and the filing of the complaint, and that the claim was therefore time-barred. Since the plaintiffs have not addressed this issue in the briefs (or, apparently, before the District Court), and the District Court's decision appears to be correct, we will affirm the District Court's judgment as to the common-law claims summarily.

The other RICO claim was based on Fuhrer's allegedly fraudulent mailing of price lists that did not include the $.25/case volume discount offered to the Beer Worlds. This discount was begun in September of 1987. Fuhrer did not mail a price list thereafter until March of 1988, and the plaintiffs were aware of the discount by October of that year. The District Court analyzed whether this constituted a "pattern of racketeering activity," 18 U.S.C. § 1962, in light of long-standing precedent. See, e.g., H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 241, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 (1989). First, the Court concluded that this was not an open-ended pattern because, as Fuhrer discontinued the discount in 1989, the alleged fraud was unlikely to recur. Second, the Court found that fraud of six months' duration could not constitute a closed-ended pattern. See, e.g., Tabas v. Tabas, 47 F.3d 1280, 1293 (3d Cir. 1995) ("Since H.J., Inc., this court has faced the question of continued racketeering activities in several cases, each time finding that conduct lasting no more than twelve months did not meet the standard for closed-ended continuity." (citing cases)). Because the plaintiffs could prove no pattern of racketeering activity, the District Court concluded that they could not bring a successful RICO claim based on the price lists. Since the plaintiffs have not discussed this issue in their briefs and the District Court's reasoning is persuasive, we will affirm the District Court's judgment in favor of the defendants on this other RICO claim, also summarily.

Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 484 (3d Cir. 1998) (citation and quotations omitted); see also Stelwagon Mfg. Co. v. Tarmac Roofing Sys., Inc., 63 F.3d 1267, 1276 n.19 (3d Cir. 1995) (declining to consider [26] whether the plaintiff had offered sufficient proof of the amount of damages, since the plaintiffs' proof of loss in general was inadequate).

HN4 [+] On appeal, our review of a District Court's grant of summary judgment is plenary. See In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 123 (3d Cir. 1999). "We evaluate the evidence using the same standard the District Court applied in reaching its decision." 166 F.3d at 123-24.⁸

II. Antitrust Claims: Antitrust Liability

In the ordinary case, liability is the first question that must be decided. Accordingly, we would usually begin our analysis of this case with a discussion of whether the plaintiffs have produced sufficient evidence to prove that the defendants violated the Sherman Act. Although that would appear to be an obvious question in this case, for the reasons set forth below [27] we are not presently in a position to evaluate the plaintiffs' theory of antitrust liability. We will, however, briefly summarize that theory and the defendants' arguments against it in order to provide a background for our discussion of fact of damage, and for the benefit of the District Court and the parties on remand.

The plaintiffs' antitrust claims begin with the premise that Trone coordinated the activities of all of the Beer World stores. In support of this contention, they note that Trone dictated most aspects of store policy, was in charge of hiring and managing employees, and had sole control of the stores' accounts. In addition, Trone coordinated the stores' interactions with other people, including wholesalers and customers. He negotiated a single set of wholesale prices for all of the Beer World stores. When one wholesaler would not [*248] agree to a discount, he organized a joint advertising campaign among the stores against the wholesaler. He also published joint advertising for the stores.

Furthermore, Trone and the stores allegedly conspired with wholesalers, Fuhrer in particular, so that the stores could obtain a competitive advantage over other retailers. Most prominently, [28] the plaintiffs allege that Trone convinced Fuhrer to grant the stores a volume discount $.25/case lower than that available to any other retailer. This discount was concealed from other customers and wholesalers in several ways, and denied to the customers when they requested it. The Beer World stores' orders pursuant to the discount were placed jointly. Furthermore, the discount was always given even though the minimum order required for the discount was not always met by the Beer World stores in the aggregate. In addition, the plaintiffs contend that the evidence shows that Fuhrer granted the stores other advantages, including special delivery terms and assistance in placing beer in the stores.

The plaintiffs contend that the advantages the Beer World stores obtained caused losses to the plaintiffs. As a result of the advantages, the Beer World stores were able to undersell the plaintiffs. Accordingly, the plaintiffs contend, they lost customers to the Beer World stores. The plaintiffs submit that these harms were particularly aggravated because of the geographical limitations the Liquor Code places on distributors. The Code requires that, for each brand of beer sold in a particular [29] area, a specific wholesaler be designated as the master distributor. A beer retailer within that geographic area, must buy that brand either from the master distributor, or from someone who bought it from the master distributor. Since the plaintiffs allege that the defendants were conspiring with the master distributors, they were at a particular competitive disadvantage.

Although, as noted above, the plaintiffs identify several antitrust liability theories, they focus on one in particular in their briefs. They argue that the aforementioned actions constitute a group boycott on the part of Trone, the Beer World stores, and Fuhrer. They contend that Trone convinced Fuhrer to agree to sell beer to the Beer World stores at a lower price than would be available to any other retailer. They rest their legal theory on, inter alia, Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959), and Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452 (3d Cir. 1998).

⁸ The District Court had subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1337 and 1367, as well as 15 U.S.C. § 15. We have appellate jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

The defendants contend that the plaintiffs' theory of antitrust liability is untenable for several reasons. First, they argue that the plaintiffs' theory is simply a Robinson-Patman Act [30] price-discrimination claim recast as a Sherman Act claim. They note too that the plaintiffs did bring a Robinson-Patman Act claim that was dismissed on jurisdictional grounds. The defendants also submit that price discrimination without much more cannot be a violation of the Sherman Act.

We agree that HN5[↑] price discrimination simpliciter -- even when it violates the Robinson-Patman Act -- is usually not a Sherman Act violation. But we do not think this necessarily means that the plaintiffs are barred from bringing a price discrimination claim under the Sherman Act. The plaintiffs' claims are unlike an ordinary price discrimination case, in which a single supplier offers different prices to different purchasers in order to advance its own interests. They allege that Fuhrer was convinced to offer different prices in order to advance the defendants' -- the plaintiffs' competitors -- interests. We see no reason why price discrimination, under appropriate circumstances, could not be part of an agreement in restraint of trade or a monopolization attempt. See, e.g., Black Gold, Ltd. v. Rockwool Indus., Inc., 729 F.2d 676, 683-84 (10th Cir. 1984); Peelers Co. v. Wendt, 260 [*31] F. Supp. 193, 198 I*2491 (W.D. Wash. 1966); McKeon Constr. v. McClatchy Newspapers, 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10593, Civ. No. 51627, 1969 WL 226 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 24, 1969). So long as the price discrimination involves a conspiracy to restrain trade or create a monopoly in some market--along with a substantial effect on competition in the market, see J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1541 (3d Cir. 1990) (quoting Zoslaw v. MCA Distributing Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 887 (9th Cir. 1982)); see also United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 375, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967) -- it would violate the Sherman Act. The proper evidence in this case might support the conclusion that this constituted a conspiracy or agreement to restrain trade or create a monopoly, although we express no opinion as to whether the plaintiffs have produced such evidence.

The defendants also contend that the plaintiffs cannot prove that they engaged in a group boycott. Relying on Klor's and Rossi, they submit that a group boycott only exists where the defendants' actions result in the product's not being available to the plaintiffs at all, or only being available at highly unfavorable terms. [32] Of course, when one thinks of a boycott, one ordinarily thinks of preventing access to something entirely. Moreover, the defendants contend that the putative quantity discount is modest. The plaintiffs respond, however, that the evidence here is sufficient to conclude that, as a result of the defendants' actions, beer was only available to them on highly unfavorable terms, i.e., $.25/case more than their competitors were paying.

Finally, the defendants contend that the antitrust violations were limited to a narrow array of conduct, specifically the $.25/case discount discussed above. Plaintiffs contest this point vigorously. They suggest that, solely with respect to Fuhrer, the evidence supports the conclusion that he engaged in other activities over a longer period of time, including delivery and product placement assistance, that gave the Beer World stores an advantage. Furthermore, the plaintiffs point to evidence that suggests that other wholesalers were giving the Beer World stores discounts and other benefits throughout a substantially broader time frame.

The District Court did not address these questions of antitrust liability because it thought it could dispose of the [33] case on other grounds. In part, this may have been because the Court came to the case late, upon transfer of the case from the docket of another judge.⁹ In addition, it undoubtedly seemed to it to be a more straightforward way in which to dispose of the case. We imply no criticism of the District Court's approach. As discussed further below, however, liability is not an issue that ultimately can be avoided in this case. The defendants have suggested that it is an appropriate alternative grounds upon which we can rest our judgment, but we do not think so. Although the parties have set forth in their briefs their legal analyses of the liability questions, the record as presented to us is not sufficiently adequate for us to give the careful and thorough consideration these issues merit. Since the case must go back to the District Court, we think these issues would benefit from further elaboration there in the first instance.

⁹ We also note that the present plaintiffs' counsel came to the case late as well, after much of its present contours had been fixed.

[34] On remand, in determining whether the plaintiffs can prove that the defendants violated the Sherman Act, the District Court can answer the questions discussed above. The Court will be able to determine under which of their variegated antitrust theories the plaintiffs may proceed. In addition, the Court can clarify the precise temporal scope and nature of the defendants' antitrust violations. Explication of this last issue in particular will provide a better framework for more precise analysis [*250] of the questions to which we turn next (and which will remain a matter in controversy on remand). At this juncture, because of the lack of clarity concerning the precise nature and scope of the plaintiffs' antitrust liability proofs, we will assume that the plaintiffs can prove that the defendants engaged in antitrust violations throughout the relevant period. Based on this assumption, we turn to the issue upon which the District Court rested its decision: whether the plaintiffs have offered sufficient proof of fact of damage.

III. Antitrust Claims: Fact of Damage

The primary issue actually before us on the antitrust claims is whether the plaintiffs have proffered sufficient evidence [35] to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the defendants' alleged antitrust violations caused harm to the plaintiffs. HN6 "[A] plaintiff must prove a causal connection between [the antitrust violation] and actual damage suffered." Stelwagon Mfg. Co. v. Tarmac Roofing Sys., Inc., 63 F.3d 1267, 1273 (3d Cir. 1995); see also Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 483 (3d Cir. 1998) ("To recover damages, an antitrust plaintiff must prove causation, described in our jurisprudence as 'fact of damage or injury.' " (citations omitted)); II Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 360c2, at 195 ("The plaintiff must show actual injury that was 'caused' by the violation."). Although we suspect our factual analysis of loss and causation would apply equally to both the plaintiffs' antitrust and RICO claims, we will focus in this section only on the former. We can put the RICO claim to the side because, although we are unsure that the District Court's reasons for dismissing it was correct, we think they should be dismissed for other reasons, i.e., lack of proximate causation.

In brief, the plaintiffs' theory of antitrust fact of damage is as follows: [36] Trone, the Beer World stores, and Fuhrer engaged in various joint actions, including but not limited to granting the Beer World stores secret discounts on wholesale purchases, which resulted in the plaintiffs' losing business. In support of this theory of fact of damage, the plaintiffs offer two types of evidence: (1) testimony concerning customers who no longer shop at the plaintiffs' stores and their statements about their reasons for not doing so; and (2) expert opinion testimony concerning the cause of the plaintiffs' loss of income. We must decide whether the former type of evidence is admissible, and whether either is sufficient, individually or together, to establish actual injury and causation in fact.¹⁰

[37] A. Customer Evidence

1. Summary of the Evidence: In opposition to the defendants' motion for summary judgment, the plaintiffs offered deposition testimony concerning their customers. It included testimony of various plaintiffs that certain customers ceased purchasing beer from them after the Beer World stores opened, and that the customers stated that they had done so because the Beer World stores had cheaper beer. The District Court concluded that this testimony was inadmissible hearsay and therefore could not meet the plaintiffs' burden of production to defeat the defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Five of the plaintiffs offered testimony concerning customers' behavior and statements. This testimony can be divided into two categories. First, several of the plaintiffs testified that, during the time at issue in this litigation, some people who had formerly been their customers stopped [*251] coming to their stores. Carl Altenhof testified that, "Retail customers that I had as steady customers, I don't have anymore when Beer World came in . . ." App. at 750. Likewise, Douglas J. Berthold stated in his deposition that, although he could not document his losses, he had ¹⁰ Given our conclusion that the customer and expert evidence of causation is sufficient, we need not consider the plaintiffs' other arguments for reversing the District Court's conclusion that they had not adduced sufficient evidence of causation: (1) that a price differential permits an automatic presumption of causation of loss to those who pay the higher price, see Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 455 (3d Cir. 1977), and (2) that the defendants' own statements and "admissions" constitute proof of causation.

"lost [38] forty percent of [his] business, probably most of them are one case purchase customers, some of them two case purchase [sic]." App. at 754. Finally, Kathleen Kapres said that she lost customers, purportedly to Beer World. App. at 819.

Second, several of the plaintiffs testified that various customers, some identified and some not, told them that they no longer shopped at the plaintiffs' stores because of the Beer World stores' operations. Berthold testified that one customer, David Begg, told him that he was going to shop at Beer World because "I like selection" and "money talks." App. at 755. Kapres also stated that she "had quite a few customers come in and say they wanted the same deal [lower prices] from me or they were just going to buy their beer from [Beer World], and I said I just can't give you that deal." App. at 819. In addition, Paul Kelly identified by name three customers of his who began to buy from Beer World, and discussed at length conversations with one of them in which the customer revealed that he was going to Beer World because of the prices. App. at 822-27.

As noted previously, the defendants contend that the plaintiffs have presented evidence of [39] antitrust violations at most during a fairly brief period of time, for which only some of the customer evidence is relevant. The District Court did not consider this issue and, as we have stated, neither will we. Instead, we assume that the plaintiffs can establish antitrust violations throughout the relevant period. On remand, the District Court will have to analyze the extent of the defendants' antitrust violations and then determine whether the plaintiffs' evidence of loss and causation remains sufficient in light of the more specific temporal scope. If it appears that the defendants did not engage in antitrust violations during some of the relevant period, the District Court is free to revisit the question whether the plaintiffs' proof of causation remains sufficient.

2. Admissibility: The District Court, relying on our decision in Stelwagon Manufacturing Co. v. Tarmac Roofing Systems, Inc., 63 F.3d 1267 (3d Cir. 1995), held this evidence inadmissible, finding that the plaintiffs' testimony concerning their customers' statements was inadmissible hearsay. It also noted that, although this litigation has been proceeding for some six years, the plaintiffs had not taken [40] the simple step of obtaining affidavits from customers concerning their reasons for ceasing to purchase beer from the plaintiffs. We disagree with the District Court's reading of Stelwagon.

In Stelwagon, the plaintiff proffered the testimony of its employees concerning the statements of their customers. The employees proposed to testify, based on "out-of-court conversations with Stelwagon customers . . . that the customers could and did purchase Tarmac MAPs from 780 Standard at prices lower than Stelwagon's prices."

Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1274. The plaintiff argued that this testimony was admissible to prove fact of damage, i.e., both loss and causation, under HNT [↑] Federal Rule of Evidence 803\(3\), which provides:

The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness: . . . A statement of declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition (such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, and bodily health), but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's [41] will.

Fed. R. Evid. 803\(3\).

In Stelwagon, the plaintiff offered the customers' statements to prove, not only [*252] causation, i.e., the reason it lost business -- for which purpose it would be admissible evidence of motive under Rule 803\(3\) -- but also loss, i.e., the fact that it lost business to the defendants. We concluded that the customers' statements about why they purchased from Standard was inadmissible to prove that they actually did so. See 63 F.3d at 1274 ("Statements that are considered under the exception to the hearsay rule found at Fed. R. Evid. 803\(3\) . . . cannot be offered to prove the truth of the underlying facts asserted." (footnote omitted)). As we have explained, "'statements of a customer as to his reasons for not dealing with a supplier are admissible for this limited purpose,' i.e., the purpose of proving customer motive, but not as evidence of the facts recited as furnishing the motives." J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1535 n.11 (3d Cir. 1990) (quoting Herman Schwabe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 297 F.2d 906, 914 (2d Cir. 1962)).

We think that the District Court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' evidence [42] on the basis of Stelwagon was inappropriate. The purpose for which the customers' statements are offered in this case differs in substance from the purpose for which the court in Stelwagon found them inadmissible. In that case, the only evidence of actual loss, i.e., that customers stopped purchasing from the plaintiff, was the employees' reports that customers had said that they were no longer buying from the plaintiff because the plaintiff's competitors had lower prices. We concluded that this evidence could not be used to prove such loss. While the plaintiffs here have also offered similar testimony that their customers told them that they were purchasing beer from the Beer World stores and not the plaintiffs, they offer it only for "the [limited] purpose of proving customer motive," for which purpose we found such evidence admissible under Rule 803\(3\). Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1274.¹¹

[43] [*253] In addition, however, the record contains other non-hearsay evidence of a type not before the court in Stelwagon, that the plaintiffs offer to prove the fact of loss, the issue for which the court in Stelwagon found the customers' statements inadmissible. Here, the plaintiffs themselves testified that they knew of customers who used to purchase beer from them, but no longer did. This is direct evidence of an actual loss of customers. Although in Stelwagon we held that customers' hearsay statements were not admissible to prove lost business, the plaintiffs' own testimony about the actual behavior of their customers is not hearsay. Rather, it is admissible evidence of lost business, although not of the reason therefore. Thus, in the present case, the HN9[↑] plaintiffs' testimony that certain customers no longer purchased beer from them, coupled with their testimony concerning the customers' statements of their motive, which is admissible hearsay under Rule 803\(3\), are together evidence of the fact of damage.

¹¹ The defendants also complain that, even if the testimony is otherwise admissible under Rule 803\(3\), it is not admissible, particularly for use at the summary judgment stage, because the declarants are unidentified or inadequately identified. First, the defendants contend that this means the evidence cannot meet the plaintiffs' burden to defeat a motion for summary judgment because it is not in an admissible form. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\) ("Supporting and opposing affidavits [introduced at the summary judgment stage] . . . shall set forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence . . ."); Petrucci's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1234 n.9 (3d Cir. 1993) (noting that evidence introduced to defeat a motion for summary judgment must be "capable of being admissible at trial"). In particular, the defendants argue that, since the declarants are unidentified, there is no way to ensure that they will be able or willing to testify at trial. We need not consider this issue, however, because the statements are admissible hearsay as discussed in the text.

Moreover, contrary to the defendants' apparent suggestion, we do not think that the fact that the declarants are not specifically identified is relevant for determining whether their statements fall within the Rule 803\(3\) hearsay exception. The defendants cite Philbin v. Trans Union Corp., 101 F.3d 957 (3d Cir. 1996), for the proposition that a hearsay statement by an unidentified or unknown person "is not 'capable of being admissible at trial.'" Philbin, 101 F.3d at 961 n.1 (quoting Petrucci's, 998 F.2d at 1234 n.9). Philbin is distinguishable, however. The plaintiff in that case relied on the statement of an unidentified official of the defendant as direct evidence of the defendant's allegedly unlawful motive in a Fair Credit Reporting Act suit. The declarant's identity was important to ensure that he or she was in fact an official of the defendant company whose statement would be admissible nonhearsay under Fed. R. Evid. 801\(d\). Identity was a critical element of admissibility.

The customers' statements in this case, however, are different. In a practical sense, their identities are not important. The relevance of their statements depends only on the fact that they were the plaintiffs' customers, not their particular identities. Furthermore, we do not think that HN8[↑] the admissibility of their statements under the Rule 803\(3\) hearsay exception depends on their being identified. Knowing the specific identity of the declarant will not make the statements more trustworthy evidence of the declarants' descriptions of their states of mind, the primary concern in interpreting hearsay exceptions.

In United States v. Mitchell, 145 F.3d 572, 576-77 (3d Cir. 1998), we held that the identity of the declarant is a substantial, although not determinative, factor in determining whether a hearsay statement is admissible under the present sense impression or the excited utterance exceptions to the hearsay rule. The proposed evidence in that case was an anonymous note purportedly identifying a getaway car. We held that the note was not admissible as a present sense impression or excited utterance because there was no evidence that the unidentified declarant personally perceived the event or condition about which the statement is made. With respect to a state-of-mind statement, however, it is only important that the declarant be the person whose state of mind the statement concerns, which is true by definition.

3. Sufficiency of the Evidence to Prove Causation: The next question is whether this evidence is sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment. "Our jurisprudence [44] does not require the summary judgment opponent to match, item for item, each piece of evidence proffered by the movant, but rather he or she must only exceed the 'mere scintilla' standard." Rossi, 156 F.3d at 466 (citations and some quotations omitted). We recently confronted the question of the sufficiency of this sort of evidence of causation in antitrust cases. In Rossi, the plaintiff offered, in opposition to the defendants' motion for summary judgment, the testimony of several potential customers that they would have purchased a certain product from him if he had not been deprived of it in violation of the antitrust laws. We concluded that this evidence was sufficient evidence of fact of damage to defeat a motion for summary judgment:

Rossi has proffered evidence from five specific customers that they would have purchased GAF product from Rossi if he had been able to sell it to them, and Rossi's inability to consummate those sales (leading to a loss of business and therefore injury) is a direct result of the alleged antitrust violation--the group boycott. In addition, Richard Drosch, Rossi's partner in the failed Rossi Florence venture, backed out of that venture [45] at least in part based upon his understanding that the company would not be able to get the products it needed, particularly GAF product, to compete successfully in the market. For all these reasons, we believe that the record supports Rossi's allegations that he suffered antitrust injury, and that it was caused by the defendant's [sic] allegedly unlawful actions.

156 F.3d at 485. We think that Rossi supports the conclusion that the plaintiffs' testimony concerning their customers' actions and statements is sufficient to meet their burden to produce evidence of loss and causation.

Initially, we reject the defendants' attempt to distinguish Rossi on the ground that the customers there stated that they would have purchased product from Rossi but for circumstances that were the direct and intended result of the conspiracy. As noted previously, we have had to assume for the purposes of this appeal that the plaintiffs will be able to prove that the defendants violated the antitrust laws. The direct result of these violations would [*254] be the Beer World stores' ability to sell beer at a lower price than the plaintiffs, the precise circumstance the customers cited as a [46] reason for their actions.

The defendants also submit that Rossi is distinguishable because in this case there was no admissible evidence that the customers purchased beer from the Beer World stores. Of course, the defendants are correct that the testimony at issue is not admissible to prove that the customers purchased beer from the defendants. See Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1274. But the plaintiffs do not need to prove that point; HN10[[↑]] in order to establish antitrust liability and damages, all the plaintiffs must show is that they suffered an economic loss as a result of the defendants' antitrust violations; not that the defendants benefitted from that loss directly. See Rossi, 156 F.3d at 464-65 (plaintiff, in order to recover on an antitrust claim, must prove an antitrust violation and "that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that" violation (citation omitted)). As long as the plaintiffs can prove that they lost business, and that this loss was a result of the defendants' antitrust violations, they can bring a successful antitrust claim.

At all events, Rossi makes no mention of any evidence, or even any requirement, that the customers in that case purchased [47] product from the defendants instead of the plaintiff. See Rossi, 156 F.3d at 485. For all we know, the customers who offered testimony in Rossi simply decided not to purchase GAF product at all, instead of buying it from the defendants. What the customers did instead of purchasing product from the plaintiff is irrelevant, so long as there is evidence that they did not purchase from the plaintiff because of the defendants' antitrust violations.

In addition to these points, we also find it significant that neither here nor in Rossi did the customer evidence purport to prove any specific amount of damages. Although the plaintiff in Rossi proffered the testimony of five customers, these customers gave no indication of exactly how much product they would have bought from him if they could. Yet we concluded that the evidence of causation was sufficient. This conclusion was driven by the principle that, HN11[[↑]] on review of a grant of summary judgment, we should focus on whether there is sufficient evidence of fact of damage in general, not on the sufficiency of the evidence of a specific amount of damages. See Rossi, 156 F.3d at 484. Accordingly, just as in Rossi, the lack [48] of specific evidence of the total amount of lost beer sales does not preclude our ultimate conclusion that the customer evidence, especially in conjunction with the expert evidence discussed next, is sufficient to meet the plaintiffs' burden of producing evidence of fact of damage.

B. Expert Evidence

The plaintiffs also offered expert opinion evidence in support of their contention that the defendants' alleged antitrust violations caused actual injuries to them. In particular, they offered the report and testimony of their primary expert, Garth Seidel, along with the report and testimony of their rebuttal expert, Brian Sullivan, to that effect. Neither the defendant nor the District Court raised a question about the admissibility of Seidel's or Sullivan's opinion. See Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238, 119 S. Ct. 1167 (1999); Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmas., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 (1993). The District Court concluded, however, that this evidence was insufficient as a matter of law to permit a finding of causation. In particular, the Court noted that Seidel's opinion appeared to be based primarily on timing, and that he did not [49] consider a number of possible alternative causes of the plaintiffs' losses. It therefore concluded that Seidel's report was deficient under the standards we have set forth in previous cases. We disagree.

1. Seidel's Report: Seidel concluded, based on the facts provided to him, that "the plaintiffs experienced significant [*255] drops in gross profits in the period subsequent to the start of Beer World operations and which were caused by the Beer World Stores' unique advantage." App. at 830. He began by collecting data on gross profits of the sixteen plaintiffs from 1980 to 1995, although such information was not available from every plaintiff for every year, or even for many of the years. He then made two calculations. First, using the admittedly incomplete data he had, he calculated the plaintiffs' average annual gross profits for the periods from 1980-84 and 1985-95. He then estimated that the plaintiffs' damages were the difference between these two numbers, multiplied by eleven years and sixteen plaintiffs, or approximately $ 6.6 million. Second, he made a similar calculation, but using only data from the six plaintiffs for whom data was available for most of the years. This method [50] gave a damages estimate of $ 2 million.

Next, he concluded that these lost profits "were caused by the Beer World Stores' unique advantage." App. at 830. He based this opinion initially on his conclusion that the Beer Worlds' ability to purchase beer at a lower wholesale cost "must have had a significant impact on the market." App. at 831. He also stated that the Beer World stores' aggressive price advertising would have magnified the effect of the special discount. In addition, he examined Fuhrer's profits between 1989 and 1994, and observed that they increased substantially during this period. Based on this, Seidel concluded that the malt-beverage market experienced no downturn during this time. Third, he noted that, beginning in 1991 -- after the grand jury investigation of Trone began -- the Beer World stores' volume of business declined each year until 1995, while at the same time the plaintiffs' gross profits increased. Finally, he noted that two other stores had opened using a "supermarket" approach similar to the Beer Worlds'. One of them opened shortly after the Beer World stores, but failed within a matter of months in spite of aggressive promotions. The other was open [51] from the mid-1970's to the mid-1990's, but did not appear to have had any effect on the plaintiffs. App. at 829-32.

The District Court found Seidel's report inadequate to meet the plaintiffs' burden of production because it failed to consider other market forces that could have explained the plaintiffs' losses. The Court began with the proposition that "any analysis of antitrust, RICO or similar damage that fails to exclude or take account of any adverse effects caused by other factors, including lawful competition on the part of the defendants, is fatally flawed." Dist. Ct. Op. IV, at 6. It observed that Seidel's report did not include a comparison of costs and business practices, price advertising, the availability of pool-buying and other discounts, store size, purchasing capacity, or proximity to a Beer World store, any one of which might have provided an alternative explanation for the plaintiffs' losses. Furthermore, it noted that Seidel had specifically failed to consider whether any other differences between the plaintiffs and the Beer World stores accounted for the plaintiffs' loss of business to the latter. Given these omissions, the District Court concluded that Seidel's [52] report provided insufficient evidence of causation.

The plaintiffs contend that we must reverse the judgment because the District Court relied, in its legal analysis, on the district court's opinion in Rossi rejecting Rossi's proffered expert evidence, which opinion we later reversed on these exact grounds, although not until well after the District Court in the present case had issued its opinions. See Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 958 F. Supp. 976 (D.N.J. 1997), revd., 156 F.3d 452 (3d Cir. 1998). As this question is before us on an appeal from a grant of summary judgment and our review is plenary, we will start from the premise that it is the defendants's burden to show that Seidel's report is inadequate to create a genuine issue of material fact as to causation. We begin with [*256] a review of our case law in this area, and then apply that law to the evidence before us.

2. Precedent: Stelwagon and Rossi: We have twice recently considered the sufficiency of expert evidence offered as proof of causation in antitrust cases. See Rossi, 156 F.3d at 485-87; Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1275-76. In addition to the customer evidence discussed above, the plaintiff [53] in Stelwagon offered expert opinion evidence to prove causation. In brief, "based on the assumption that but for Tarmac's price discrimination, Stelwagon's sales of MAPs would have tracked its sales of [other] products [not subject to anticompetitive practices], Dr. Perry concluded that Stelwagon lost $ 257,000 in profits as a result of Tarmac's illegal pricing policy." Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1275.¹²

[54] We concluded that the expert's testimony, although admissible evidence, was insufficient by itself to prove that the antitrust violations had in fact caused Stelwagon's losses:

Significantly, Dr. Perry's analysis failed to sufficiently link any decline in Stelwagon's MAPs sales to price discrimination. The sales may have been lost for reasons apart from the price discrimination -- reasons that Dr. Perry's analysis apparently did not take into account. For example, the evidence showed that Stelwagon had higher overhead costs than his competitors. In addition, there was undisputed evidence that Stelwagon experienced other business complications during the relevant time period. In 1988, for example, Stelwagon terminated a vice-president, two territorial managers and three key employees for their part in an embezzlement scheme.

Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1275. Given that Stelwagon had not offered any other evidence of loss -- as discussed previously, its employees' anecdotal testimony concerning lost customers was not admissible to prove that it actually lost customers, see Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1274-75 -- we concluded that he could not meet his burden of proof, [55] Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1275-76.

In Rossi, by contrast, we considered an expert opinion and found it sufficient to prove loss and causation. The expert in Rossi rested his calculation of damages on two assumptions:

First, he estimated that Rossi'[s businesses] would have achieved the same pattern of sales revenues (and revenue growth) beginning in 1989 and extending to 2008 that ABC's Morristown sales branch actually achieved from 1990-93, operating out of the same location, with Rossi as branch manager. . . . The second major assumption in the Rockhill Report is that Rossi would have been able to manage [his proposed businesses] in the manner that he had run Standard's Morristown branch from 1984-87. Rockhill used Standard's Morristown branch financial statements to develop 14-year averages for [costs] and applied them to the sales estimate.

Rossi, 156 F.3d at 486 (footnote omitted). Based on these assumptions, the expert estimated Rossi's losses as a result of the defendants' antitrust violations.

We determined that this expert evidence was sufficient proof of causation to defeat a motion for summary judgment. We began our analysis with [*56] the recognition that the expert's opinion was a "but for" damage model -- one that "aggregates the defendant's alleged violations and creates a hypothetical calculation projecting the [*257] plaintiff's profits and losses 'but for' the defendant's antitrust violations" -- which several courts have rejected. Rossi, 156 F.3d at 485 (citing Southern Pac. Com. Co. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 556 F. Supp. 825 (D.D.C. 1982), affd., 238 U.S. App. D.C. 309, 740 F.2d 980 \(D.C. Cir. 1984\); Van Dyk Research Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 478 F. Supp. 1268 (D.N.J. 1979), affd., 631 F.2d 251 \(3d Cir. 1980\)). We identified two key problems with the use of "but for" damage models:

¹² More specifically, the expert's report based its analysis on two premises. First, it assumed that Stelwagon's sales of the product at issue during the year in which it did not allegedly suffer antitrust harm were representative of what the sales would have been in the absence of such harm. Second, the expert assumed that its sales of this product would follow a pattern similar to that of other products Stelwagon sold. Finally, the expert posited that Stelwagon would have been able to charge the same retail markup on the product at issue as it did on other products. Based on these assumptions, the expert calculated Stelwagon's lost sales and profits. See Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1275.

First, they do not attempt to measure the particularized effects of any specific alleged illegal activities, but rather rely on an aggregation of injury from all factors. Second, their hypothetical "but for" calculations usually rely upon unrealistic ex ante assumptions about the business environment, such as assumptions of perfect knowledge of future demand, future prices, and future costs that tend to overstate the plaintiff's damages claim. Thus, using a "but for" damage model arguably makes it impossible 57 for the trier of fact to determine what, if any, injury derived from the defendant's antitrust violations as opposed to other factors, and courts sometimes reject such models as the basis of either causation or the amount of injury.

Rossi, 156 F.3d at 486 (citations omitted).

We concluded that, although the Rockhill Report rested on a "but for" damage model, this did not mean it was inadequate proof of causation, because it did not have the usual problems of "but for" damage models. We noted that, since the Report was based on the actual performance of other businesses -- the business Rossi managed instead of running his own and the business he formerly managed-- it did not involve any "unrealistic ex ante assumptions about the business environment." We concluded that, "This kind of estimate, while perhaps not one upon which we would base our own personal investment decisions, nevertheless is sufficient to establish causation . . ." Rossi, 156 F.3d at 485.

We also rejected the defendants' argument, upon which the district court had rested its decision, see Rossi, 958 F. Supp. at 991, that the Rockhill Report was inadequate because it failed to consider 58 possible alternative causes of Rossi's losses. In particular, the defendants contended that Rossi's businesses failed because: "(1) they were start-up operations, (2) they were founded during one of the worst recessions ever to hit the New Jersey housing market, (3) Rossi, as a manager, failed to control his costs, and/or (4) Rossi worked on other ventures to the detriment and ultimate failure of both companies." Rossi, 156 F.3d at 486. Although we recognized that these explanations might ultimately prove to be correct, we found that they were issues of fact best left to the jury, not reasons for concluding that the Rockhill Report was insufficient evidence of causation as a matter of law.

3. Application to Seidel's Report. We believe that our jurisprudence supports the conclusion that the plaintiffs, by offering Seidel's report, have produced HN12 sufficient evidence of causation to defeat a motion for summary judgment. Here, as in Rossi, Seidel's report rests on assumptions that are based on past performance, not guesses as to the future. His opinion was based on the assumption that the plaintiffs' performance in the years before Beer World entered the Pittsburgh market 59 provided an appropriate benchmark for their performance thereafter. This assumption does not rest on any "assumptions of perfect knowledge of future demand, future prices, and future costs" of the sort we condemned in Rossi. At most, it requires some consideration of whether general economic conditions were substantially similar before and after the Beer World stores opened. Seidel's observation that Fuhrer's sales increased substantially during the period after the Beer World stores opened strongly suggests that economic conditions were at least as good during this period. See App. at 831.

[\[*258\]](#) The defendants, in response, identify several problems that they believe render Seidel's report inadequate. In general, the defendants criticize Seidel's report for failing to take into account potential alternative causes for the plaintiffs' losses not attributable to the defendants' actions.¹³ Seidel stated that, "In my opinion, it does not appear that the losses in plaintiffs' profits . . . were caused by market factors other than plaintiffs' competition with the Beer World stores in the face of the availability to the Beer Worlds of unique discounts and special services, such as [60] free delivery." App. at 831. The defendants contend that, just as we found in Stelwagon that the expert's report was inadequate because it failed to consider alternative causes, so must we find Seidel's report inadequate because he failed to consider certain specific factors that might have affected the plaintiffs' business success, such as general economic conditions, changes in their operations during the relevant time period, or changes in costs.

¹³ The defendants also contend that, even if Seidel has shown that the defendants' acts caused the damages, he has not shown that the defendants' illegal acts caused damages. The defendants are correct that Seidel failed to account for many variations in what the defendants did during the periods that Seidel aggregated for analysis. We cannot evaluate this contention without a clearer picture of the scope of the defendants' antitrust violations, however. In the absence of such a clarification, we will leave it

[61] Initially, we note that, as discussed above, Seidel does discuss some of these factors the defendants suggest he should have -- including general economic conditions -- albeit not to the degree the defendants might prefer. In addition, he specifically noted a correlation between declining profits for the Beer World stores and increasing profits for the plaintiffs after the criminal indictment came down in 1991. Furthermore, we think that the factors Seidel failed to explain are more like those at issue in Rossi, in which we found the expert's report acceptable in spite of certain gaps, than the factors in Stelwagon. In the latter case, the expert failed to discuss certain factors-- higher overhead costs and embezzlement by the plaintiff 's employees -- about which the defendants introduced specific evidence. In Rossi, by contrast, the defendants argued that the Rockhill Report was inadequate because of factors the effects of which were pure speculation on the defendants' part. Similarly, the defendants here propose numerous factors extrinsic to the defendants that might explain the plaintiffs' losses. But they have not directed us to any point in the record that suggest [62] that these concerns were actually relevant in this case. Accordingly, we will leave these questions to be resolved during further proceedings in the District Court. See Rossi, 156 F.3d at 487 ("[Although o]ne or more of these reasons. . . might explain Rossi's failure and could conceivably result in a verdict for the defendants at trial . . . they all involve factual disputes that need to be resolved by the trier of fact, not by this court on a motion for summary judgment.").

Finally, the defendants make a number of arguments to the effect that Seidel's method of calculating the plaintiffs' losses is unsupported and inappropriate. Seidel's calculations were based on the average or aggregate gross profits of the plaintiffs. The defendants contend that this use of averages was inappropriate, as it ignored potential differences among the plaintiffs. For instance, it ignores the problem that data was not available for all of the plaintiffs for all of the relevant time period. Furthermore, there is no way to determine based on this calculation how the damages are to be allocated among the plaintiffs. Finally, it masks the fact that some of the plaintiffs in fact had higher gross [63] profits [*259] during the relevant period as compared with earlier. The defendants' observations are, of course, correct. They ignore a vital distinction, however: proof of fact of damage and proof of the actual amount of damages are two distinct steps. Cf. Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1276 n.19 ("Because of our conclusion on the issue of Stelwagon's entitlement to damages under the Clayton Act [i.e., he failed to present sufficient evidence to prove causation], we do not reach Tarmac's argument that the amount of damages is unsupported by the evidence.").

As we stated in Rossi, at the summary judgment stage "we are not, as we would be upon reviewing a jury verdict, determining whether a plaintiff has brought forth sufficient evidence to justify the actual damages awarded." Rossi, 156 F.3d at 484. Rather, before us is only the question whether the defendants' unlawful actions caused the plaintiffs' losses. See 156 F.3d at 484. Although in Rossi we did specifically note that the Rockhill Report would support a damages judgment in the amount the expert estimated, we did so only for the future guidance of the district court, and not for any purposes related to deciding motions [64] for summary judgment. See Rossi, 156 F.3d at 486 n.22 ("For the guidance of the district court on remand, we note that the Rockhill Report satisfies the relaxed Bigelow standard of proof for estimating the amount of damages . . ." (emphasis added)).

In sum, we believe that, although the question is close, Seidel's report, like the Rockhill Report in Rossi, is sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact concerning fact of damage. This is in contrast to the expert evidence offered in Stelwagon, in which the expert's opinion involved more speculation and failed to explain certain factors concerning which the defendants had presented specific evidence at trial.

4. Sullivan's Report: We find additional evidence of loss and causation, contributing to our ultimate conclusion that the plaintiffs have adduced sufficient evidence of fact of damage, in the report of the plaintiffs' rebuttal expert, Brian Sullivan. Sullivan examined the defendants' expert's report and rebutted it in part. Although his report focused primarily on antitrust liability issues, Sullivan observed that, between 1985 and 1993, beer distributors in Allegheny County failed at a rate [65] nearly twice that in Pennsylvania as a whole. The plaintiffs argue that, since the record suggests no other distinction between Allegheny County and the remainder of the Commonwealth than the presence of Beer World stores, the logical conclusion is that these failures were caused by the Beer World stores.

The defendants contend that we cannot consider Sullivan's report for several reasons. First, they submit that we cannot do so because he functioned only as the plaintiffs' rebuttal expert to respond to the defendants' expert, and that his report and testimony therefore cannot be introduced to support the plaintiffs' substantive case. The District Court refused to consider Sullivan's report on precisely these grounds. We think that that refusal was inappropriate. See Bowers v. Northern Telecom, Inc., 905 F. Supp. 1004, 1008 (N.D. Fla. 1995) (holding that HN13 labeling of a witness as a rebuttal expert did not preclude consideration of his testimony to defeat a motion for summary judgment). The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and Rule 26(a)(2) governing the disclosure and discovery of expert witnesses in particular, make no distinction between the permissible uses of "regular" experts [66] and "rebuttal" experts. Furthermore, we see no reason to prevent the plaintiffs from using Sullivan in their case-in-chief at trial. Accordingly, it is appropriate to consider Sullivan's report as evidence in opposition to the defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Second, the defendants submit that the distinction upon which the plaintiffs base their reasoning is flawed, in that Sullivan's own report reveals that there were Beer [*260] World stores in other parts of Pennsylvania. Although there may have been other beer supermarkets in Pennsylvania, as far as we can determine from the record the only other Beer World store was one in Harrisburg. We do not think the existence of this one store can be sufficient to render Sullivan's opinion a nullity as a matter of law.

Third and last, the defendants argue that Sullivan's report is irrelevant, since it focuses on predatory pricing and the Beer World operations in general, rather than the specific discriminatory discount. Once again, we note that the record before us is not sufficiently developed for us to address this contention. We will assume for present purposes that the Beer World stores committed antitrust violations. Accordingly, [67] we leave the defendants' contention to the District Court to consider in the first instance. We conclude that Sullivan's report provides some additional evidence of causation that, together with Seidel's report, meets the plaintiffs' burden of production on the issue of actual loss and causation in fact.

C. Is the Evidence in the Aggregate Sufficient to Prove Causation in Fact?

At all events, we are satisfied that Seidel's report, as well as Sullivan's, in conjunction with the customer evidence discussed above, constitutes sufficient evidence of causation. In Stelwagon, we noted that there was no admissible evidence that the plaintiffs had suffered injuries attributable to the defendants' price discrimination. See Stelwagon, 63 F.3d at 1275. We therefore held that the expert's report was not sufficient evidence of causation and loss. Here, by contrast, there is direct evidence--i.e., the plaintiffs' testimony about their customers' behavior -- that identifies customers whom the plaintiffs lost as a result of the defendants' actions. See supra section III.A. Furthermore, there is evidence -- the customers' hearsay statements, which are admissible under Rule 803(3), [68] in addition to the expert reports -- of the reasons for such loss. Thus, the plaintiffs have "adduced evidence of specific lost transactions showing causation or fact of injury, which is bolstered by an expert damage report that is not overly speculative as a matter of law." Rossi, 156 F.3d at 487. We conclude that all of this evidence taken together defeats the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiffs have not adduced sufficient evidence of fact of damage on their antitrust claims.¹⁴ Accordingly, we will reverse the District Court's grant of summary judgment on the antitrust claims, and remand for further proceedings.

¹⁴ The defendants offer as an alternative ground for affirming the dismissal of the plaintiffs' antitrust claim that the plaintiffs have failed to show that they suffered an "antitrust injury." Since we have declined to consider whether the plaintiffs have offered

[69] IV. RICO: Proximate Causation

A. Basic Principles

HN14[] In addition to establishing that the defendants' unlawful actions in fact caused the plaintiffs' losses, the plaintiffs must also establish proximate causation, i.e., that this causal connection is not too remote. Although this requirement applies to both antitrust and RICO claims, in this section we focus on the latter, because the plaintiffs' RICO claim founders on these grounds. A causal connection simpliciter between the defendants' actions and the plaintiffs' injuries is insufficient to give rise to a RICO claim; the plaintiff must show that that connection is proximate, i.e., not too remote. See Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 \(1992\); [Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 \[*261\] Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912, 932 \(3d Cir. 1999\)](#).

The defendants contend that, with respect to the plaintiffs' RICO claim, the causal connection between the defendants' racketeering activities -- defrauding the LCB -- is too remote as a matter of law from the plaintiffs' losses -- lost business. We agree. The LCB and the Commonwealth more generally were [70] the direct victims of the defendants' actions; the plaintiffs' losses are at most derivative of any injuries to the LCB's regulatory mission. The plaintiffs are simply too remote to be able to bring a claim based on the defendants' actions.

In Holmes, the Court identified HN15[] three key factors in determining whether a RICO claim is based on an injury too remote from the alleged racketeering activity:

First, the less direct an injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff 's damages attributable to the violation, as distinct from other, independent, factors. Second, quite apart from problems of proving factual causation, recognizing claims of the indirectly injured would force courts to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiffs removed at different levels of injury from the violative acts, to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries. And, finally, the need to grapple with these problems is simply unjustified by the general interest in deterring injurious conduct, since directly injured victims can generally be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general, without any of the problems attendant upon suits by [71] plaintiffs injured more remotely.

Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269-70 (citing, inter alia, Associated General Contractors, Inc. v. California St. Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 540-42, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\));¹⁵ see also Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 932 (citing Holmes).

sufficient evidence of antitrust violations at the present time, we will also refrain from considering the defendants' contention that the plaintiffs cannot prove an antitrust injury. See supra Part II.

¹⁵ Although the Court in Holmes adopted these three factors for RICO cases from Associated General Contractors, we recognized in Steamfitters that the Court in the latter case had outlined six factors relevant to antitrust proximate causation analysis. See Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 924. These factors included:

(1) the causal connection between defendant's wrongdoing and plaintiff 's harm; (2) the specific intent of defendant to harm plaintiff; (3) the nature of plaintiff 's alleged injury (and whether it relates to the purpose of antitrust laws, i.e., ensuring competition within economic markets); (4) "the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury"; (5) whether the "damages claim is . . . highly speculative"; and (6) "keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits," i.e., "avoiding either the risk of duplicate recoveries on the one hand, or the danger of complex apportionment of damages on the other."

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 924 (quoting Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537-38, 540, 542-44). In our discussion of proximate causation for the RICO claims in Steamfitters, in addition to analyzing the Holmes factors, we incorporated by reference our discussion of the Associated General Contractors factors from the antitrust analysis. We did not express an opinion as to whether the Holmes factors replace the Associated General Contractors factors for RICO claims or merely supplement them.

[72] Both Holmes and Steamfitters clarified how the three factors set forth above would apply in particular cases.¹⁶

[73] The factual [262] circumstances of these two cases, which inform our decision, are briefly summarized in the margin.¹⁷

At all events, to the extent the Associated General Contractors factors are relevant only to antitrust analysis, they are irrelevant in the present case. In addition, to the extent that any of the issues raised in these factors are not included in Holmes, they only weigh against a finding of proximate causation. For example, the second factor, specific intent to injure, is arguably not included in Holmes. To the extent it is not, however, we think it would be difficult on the present facts to conclude that the defendants specifically intended to harm the plaintiffs. Although harm to the plaintiffs may have been a probable ultimate consequence of the defendants' actions, we do not think they specifically intended to cause such harm. Accordingly, considering this factor in addition to the Holmes analysis would only provide an additional reason to conclude that proximate causation is lacking.

¹⁶ In a recent case, we concluded that RICO proximate causation existed without specifically analyzing the Holmes factors. See Brokerage Concepts, Inc. v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 140 F.3d 494 (3d Cir. 1998). That case is distinguishable, however. The plaintiff BCI had formerly been the administrator of a pharmacy's self-funded employee health-insurance plan. When the pharmacy opened a new branch that it wanted to be a part of U.S. Healthcare's network, U.S. Healthcare essentially forced the pharmacy to use a U.S. Healthcare affiliate as its health-plan administrator, rather than the plaintiff. We concluded that, in such circumstances, proximate causation could exist:

The injury proved by BCI, the loss of its TPA contract with Gary's [the pharmacy], is not derivative of any losses suffered by Gary's. Unlike the injuries suffered by the non-purchasing customers in Holmes, BCI's injury was not contingent upon any injury to Gary's, nor is it more appropriately attributable to an intervening cause that was not a predicate act under RICO. Here, BCI's administrator relationship with Gary's was the direct target of the alleged scheme -- indeed, interference with that relationship may well be deemed the linchpin of the scheme's success.

Brokerage Concepts, 140 F.3d at 521. The plaintiffs contend, similarly, that interference with their relationship with their customers, i.e., attracting the plaintiffs' customers to shop at Beer World stores, the precise harm the plaintiffs suffered, is the "linchpin of [Trone's] scheme's success." Although it may be true that interference in the relationship between the plaintiffs and their customers was the linchpin of the success of Trone's scheme, we think Brokerage Concepts is distinguishable.

The relationship between the alleged racketeering activities and the injuries to the plaintiffs are more distant than they were in Brokerage Concepts. In the latter case, the pharmacy, the party with whom BCI had a relationship with which U.S. Healthcare interfered, was the direct target of U.S. Healthcare's alleged racketeering activities, which included extortion and commercial bribery. See Brokerage Concepts, 140 F.3d at 521. Here, although the ultimate goal of Trone and the Beer World stores was presumably to woo customers away from the plaintiffs, the direct target of its alleged fraudulent scheme was the LCB, not customers. Unlike Brokerage Concepts, this case involves two third parties, one that was the target of the defendants' racketeering and another that had a relationship with the plaintiffs with which the defendants interfered.

¹⁷ In Holmes, the plaintiffs (actually the plaintiffs' subrogors, although that was not relevant to the result) were customers of broker-dealers that had failed as a result of the defendants' conspiracy to manipulate certain stocks. As a result of the broker-dealers' failure, their customers suffered losses. The particular plaintiffs in Holmes were customers of the broker-dealers who never purchased the particular stocks that the defendants had manipulated. Thus, the plaintiffs' losses were not an immediate result of the defendants' manipulations, but rather were a derivative effect of the collapse of the broker-dealers. The Court found this connection insufficient to establish proximate causation for RICO claims. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 271.

Steamfitters involved claims of union health and welfare funds against tobacco companies. The funds alleged that the tobacco companies had defrauded the funds by misleading them into believing that tobacco products were safe and could not be made safer. As a result of this fraud, the funds did not take steps to reduce their costs by, for example, attempting to reduce smoking among their participants or undertaking legal efforts to shift the costs of smoking back to the companies. The funds were harmed because their participants continued to smoke and accumulate medical bills that the funds were obligated to pay. We concluded that this causal chain was too attenuated to satisfy the requirements of proximate causation. See 171 F.3d at 932-34.

[74] B. Anatomy of the Plaintiffs' RICO Claim

The plaintiffs' RICO claim alleges that the defendants engaged in racketeering activities by fraudulently obtaining and retaining licenses to operate beer distributorships. Specifically, they contend that Trone and others made false and fraudulent statements to the Pennsylvania LCB in order to obtain or retain various liquor licenses. The plaintiffs themselves best summarize their contention that the defendants' actions proximately caused their injuries:

Causation in plaintiffs' RICO case . . . is a simple claim: we say that absent the fraud, the Trone defendants would not have been able to assemble or operate the chain of stores, and that only by [263] assembling the chain -- by "aggregating" their purchases, as Mr. Fuhrer put it -- were the Beer Worlds able to secure the discriminatory discount. The Trone defendants' brief (at 40) asks rhetorically how David Trone's fraudulent statements to the LCB caused the discount, but the above two sentences show exactly how: absent the fraud, no chain; absent the chain, no discrimination. It's that simple.

Appellant's Reply Brf. at 13 (emphasis added; alterations in original). Although [75] this is a clever and well-phrased summary, we disagree with its conclusion because the claim does not satisfy the specific factors the Court in Holmes identified as indicative of proximate causation.¹⁸ [76] Reflection on these three factors reveals that the direct impact of the fraud is primarily on the LCB, not the plaintiffs.

C. Analysis

1. Directness of the Injury. The first factor, and the one on which we focused primarily in Steamfitters, is the directness of the relationship between the defendants' actions and the plaintiffs' injuries. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269. This is significant because HN16↑ "the less direct an injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to the violation as distinct from other, independent, factors." Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269. The more difficult it is to distinguish between the effects of the defendants' legitimate activities and their alleged racketeering actions on the plaintiffs, the more likely we are to conclude that proximate causation is lacking.

In Holmes, the Court found this factor indicated a lack of proximate causation. "If the nonpurchasing customers were allowed to sue, the district court would first need to determine the extent to which their inability to collect from the broker-dealers was the result of the alleged conspiracy to manipulate, as opposed to, say, [77] the broker-dealers' poor business practices or their failures to anticipate developments in the financial markets." Holmes, 503 U.S. at 272-73. In Steamfitters, we reasoned that ¹⁸ The plaintiffs argue that, since the defendants' antitrust violations were a proximate cause of the plaintiffs' losses, a point the defendants do not -- unlike the issue of causation in fact--presently contest, the RICO violations must also be a proximate cause of their losses. They base this contention on our recognition in Steamfitters that proximate causation principles for antitrust and RICO claims are closely related. See Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 921 ("The standing requirements for RICO and antitrust claims are similar, and . . . the standing analysis under these federal laws is drawn from common-law principles of proximate cause and remoteness of injury . . .").

The plaintiffs misread Steamfitters. Admittedly, we said in that case that "much (if not all) of what we have said above in our discussion of antitrust standing applies to the Funds' RICO claims." See 171 F.3d at 932. But that was simply a recognition that the factual underpinnings of the causation chains in the funds' antitrust and RICO claims was so similar. The plaintiffs' theory of antitrust proximate causation in this case, however, is factually distinct from their RICO theory. Causation in their antitrust claim rests on the simple notion that the defendants contracted, combined and conspired to force the wholesalers to offer them beer at a lower price, which gave them a competitive advantage over the plaintiffs. Their RICO claim, however, rests on the more complicated theory of causation discussed in the text. It includes the additional step that Trone was able to operate the Beer World stores as a group because of his fraud on the LCB, which enabled him to obtain discounts which hurt the plaintiffs. This additional step distinguishes the plaintiffs' RICO and antitrust claims, and bars the inference of proximate causation they suggest, for reasons amplified in the text, infra.

if the Funds are allowed to sue, the court would need to determine the extent to which their increased costs for smoking-related illnesses resulted from the tobacco companies' conspiracy to suppress health and safety information, as opposed to smokers' other health problems, smokers' independent (i.e., separate from the fraud and the conspiracy) [*264] decisions to smoke, smokers' ignoring health and safety warnings, etc.

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 933 (footnote omitted).

We believe that this case presents similar difficulties in ascertaining the proportion of the plaintiffs' losses that can be attributed to the defendants' alleged racketeering activity. We think it would be difficult to trace the chain from the fraud on the LCB to particular actions of the defendants, and then to particular portions of the plaintiffs' losses, because the fraud only directly affects the LCB. In order to determine how the fraud affected the plaintiffs, we would need to analyze the extent to which the [78] defendants were permitted to act as they did as a result of the fraud as opposed to normal operating procedures. More specifically, focusing solely on the issue of volume discounts, even if we could say that the plaintiffs' losses were entirely attributable to the defendants' ability to obtain such discounts, we would be hard-pressed to say that those discounts were entirely attributable to Trone's fraud on a third party, the LCB. Rather, it is likely that the defendants' ability to obtain these discounts was attributable, in at least as substantial a part, to the size of the individual Beer World stores, Trone's negotiating ability, the operating methodology of the stores, or other legitimate actions. Accordingly, we conclude that, "As in Holmes [and Steamfitters], this causation chain is much too speculative and attenuated to support a RICO claim." Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 933.

2. Apportionment of Damages: Holmes also directs that we inquire into the difficulty of apportioning damages among potential plaintiffs in determining whether proximate causation is present. HN17 [↑] "Recognizing claims of the indirectly injured would force courts to adopt complicated [79] rules apportioning damages among plaintiffs removed at different levels of injury from the violative acts, to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries." Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269. As a result, where granting plaintiffs relief would require us to apportion that relief among numerous plaintiffs of different standing, we are inclined to find an absence of proximate causation for those less directly involved.

Again, this factor as applied to the facts in Holmes suggested that proximate causation was missing. The Court noted that the broker-dealers had suffered at least as much at the hands of the defendants as their customers did, and thus any determination of liability to the customers would necessitate an inquiry into the defendants' liability to the broker-dealers. The Court concluded that the possibility of treble damages in favor of both groups of plaintiffs militated in favor of finding no proximate causation for the former. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 273 ("The district court would . . . have to find some way to apportion the possible respective recoveries by the broker-dealers and the customers, who would otherwise each be entitled to recover the full treble damages."). [80] Likewise, in Steamfitters, we noted the potential difficulty in allocating recovery between the funds and their participants:

As we noted in our discussion of the Funds' antitrust claims, more directly injured parties, i.e., smokers, would be unlikely to bring federal claims against tobacco companies for the same damages claimed by the Funds. Yet, as we also noted above, Fund participants who have not been fully reimbursed for their out-of-pocket costs that are traceable to defendants' alleged fraud and conspiracy might bring RICO or antitrust claims. Therefore, as in Holmes, a court adjudicating the Funds' RICO claims would need to consider the appropriate apportionment of damages between smokers and others such as the Funds who suffered economic losses as a result of the tobacco companies' alleged fraudulent acts.

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 933.

We believe that these cases support the conclusion that the defendants' fraud on [*265] the LCB did not proximately cause the plaintiffs' injuries. In particular, we note that the master distributors from whom the defendants purchased their beer at an artificially lowered price -- at least according to the plaintiffs' [81] theory of the case--suffered an injury identical to the plaintiffs'. The wholesalers presumably were paying the same price to brewers for beer, regardless of the price at which they sold it to distributors. Any discounts they gave to the Beer World stores as a result of racketeering violations came out of their own pockets. Determining how to apportion damages between the wholesalers and the plaintiffs in this case would require exactly the same sort of apportionment determination condemned in Holmes and Steamfitters.¹⁹ This difficulty in apportioning damages among the potential plaintiffs suggests that proximate causation is not present in this case.

[82] 3. Vindication of Claims by Others: Thefinal factor that the Court in Holmes recognized as significant for proximate causation analysis was whether the plaintiff 's claim could be vindicated by another, more directly injured plaintiff. More specifically, the Court recognized that HN18 the searching inquiry into causation and apportionment of damages among plaintiffs discussed above is unjustified where the central focus of RICO in deterring unlawful conduct can be vindicated by other means. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269-70 ("The need to grapple with these problems is simply unjustified by the general interest in deterring injurious conduct, since directly injured victims can generally be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general, without any of the problems attendant upon suits by plaintiffs injured more remotely."). Where a more directly affected party is available to vindicate the public interest in enforcing the law, we have less need to stretch the limits of proximate causation in RICO cases.

In Holmes, the Court concluded that, since the broker-dealers were available to vindicate the public interest in deterring racketeering, it was unnecessary to [\[83\]](#) extend proximate causation analysis to include the customers. "The law would be shouldering these difficulties [of making fine distinctions among causes of the plaintiff 's injuries and apportioning recovery among potential plaintiffs] despite the fact that those directly injured, the broker-dealers, could be counted on to bring suit for the law's vindication." Holmes, 503 U.S. at 273. In Steamfitters, however, we found this factor to be less helpful. We noted initially that, although the funds' participants might be able to pursue RICO claims against the tobacco companies, granting due deference to the funds' allegations we could not conclude that their suits would provide the same deterrence as the funds. We were, however, ultimately "unconvinced that this distinction [from Holmes was] sufficient to overcome the concerns about apportioning damages and, most fundamentally, the remoteness of the Funds' alleged RICO injuries from any wrongdoing on the part of [\[*266\]](#) the tobacco companies." Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 933-34 (citation omitted).

The plaintiffs contend that this factor dictates a finding that proximate causation is present in this case because there is no other [\[84\]](#) party that was more directly injured or that will otherwise be able to vindicate the public interest in deterring racketeering activity of the sort in which the defendants have engaged. Preliminarily, as noted above, the master distributors were injured by the defendants' activities, and accordingly they could presumably serve at least as well to vindicate the public interest in deterring violations of the law. More significantly, the LCB--the direct victim of the defendants' alleged fraud -- is an additional possible alternative agent for vindicating the public interest.

As the plaintiffs point out, the LCB would not be able to bring a private civil RICO action, since it is not a "person injured in his business or property by reason of " the defendants' alleged racketeering violations. 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). In spite of the fact that the LCB cannot bring a private civil RICO action, we think that the LCB and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania more generally are in a position to vindicate the public interest in the sense set forth in Holmes. If the facts justified it, the Commonwealth could bring a criminal charge against Trone and the other defendants under the state "little RICO" [85] corrupt organizations statute, which is virtually identical to the federal racketeering statute. HN19¹⁹ See 18 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 911\(b\). Section 911 includes in particular perjury, false swearing in official matters, and tampering with official records as predicate activities which can lead to racketeering liability. See § 911\(h\)\(1\)\(i\) ("'Racketeering activity' means any act which is indictable under any of the following provisions of this title: . . . Chapter 49 (relating to falsification and intimidation)."); see also 18 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 4902\(a\) (defining perjury); § 4903 (defining false swearing in official matters); § 4911 (defining tampering with public records or information).

¹⁹ The plaintiffs in their supplemental memorandum discussing Steamfitters contend that we cannot consider the wholesalers in our Holmes calculus because "they have decided to make their separate peace with Beer World, no doubt for the same reasons they decided to acquiesce in this scheme in the first place." Appellant's Post-Arg. Memo. at 13. While it may be true that the wholesalers in this case have not attempted to recover from the defendants, we do not think this is relevant to our Holmes analysis. We do not think the question whether the defendants' fraud proximately caused the plaintiffs' injuries can turn on whether some other potential claimants have filed suit. Although the broker-dealers identified in Holmes as having a potential claim did in fact sue the defendants in that case, see Holmes, 503 U.S. at 273 & n.21, we recognized in Steamfitters that the fact that smokers themselves could bring claims against the tobacco companies was relevant to determining proximate causation with respect to the funds, even though the smokers were in fact unlikely to bring claims on their own, see Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 933.

In fact, the Commonwealth indicted Trone on state racketeering charges predicated on tampering with public records and perjury before the LCB. See App. at 99. These charges arose out of the same activities that the plaintiffs identify as the racketeering acts upon which their RICO claim is predicated. Although the indictment was dismissed,²⁰ this does not affect our ultimate conclusion that the Commonwealth could vindicate the public interest. The racketeering indictment charged Trone [86] only with racketeering predicates in which he participated as a principal, and was dismissed because all but one of these was found wanting. But the indictment included perjury charges against others involved in the Beer World operations, which, like the remaining charge against Trone, were eventually nolle prossed. See App. at 98, 100. The indictment could have charged these other acts of perjury as predicates to the racketeering charge against Trone, which would have created the pattern of racketeering activity necessary to support a "little RICO" charge.

[87] Although the Commonwealth cannot now bring civil RICO claims against the defendants here, given the possibilities set forth above, we do not think this brings it outside the scope of the third Holmes factor. The Court's primary concern in Holmes was to ensure that some plaintiff [*267] be available to vindicate the law's "general interest in deterring injurious conduct." Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269. HN20²⁰ A civil RICO action is not specifically required to vindicate this general deterrence interest. See Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 172 F.3d 223, 235 \(2d Cir. 1999\) (concluding that the possibility of independent tort claims by smokers, or subrogated claims based thereon by union health funds, would be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the third Holmes factor). Although not providing for treble damages, we believe that the prospect of state criminal racketeering charges would provide an adequate deterrent to lawless conduct of the type alleged here to satisfy the concerns embodied in Holmes.²¹

[88] 4. Summary: At all events, even to the extent that we have questions about whether the possibility of the Commonwealth bringing criminal racketeering charges against Trone and the other defendants falls within the scope of the third Holmes factor, such questions cannot alter our ultimate conclusion, based on the Holmes factors as a whole, that proximate causation is lacking here. To paraphrase Steamfitters, "we are unconvinced that [the potential lack of alternative plaintiffs] is sufficient to overcome the concerns about apportioning damages and, most fundamentally, the remoteness of [the plaintiffs'] alleged RICO injuries from any wrongdoing on the part of [Trone]."

²⁰ See App. at 43. The court dismissed the tampering charges on the ground that they should have been brought under a more specific statute, the Liquor Code, see Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 47, § 4-436\(j\) (West 1997), which makes false statements on liquor license applications a misdemeanor. See App. at 25-31. The alleged tampering therefore also could not serve as part of the pattern of racketeering activity necessary to support the racketeering charge, since Liquor Code violations are not specified as racketeering activities in section 911. See App. at 39 n.6; 18 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 911\(h\). Since the only remaining racketeering activity was one alleged instance of perjury on the part of Trone, the court concluded that there was no "pattern of racketeering activity" as required to support a racketeering charge. See App. at 40.

²¹ Judge Wellford in his dissent contends that we cannot consider the wholesalers or the Commonwealth as potential alternative agents for the vindication of the public interest, because in this case none of them brought suit against Trone and the Beer World stores. We think this circumstance is irrelevant to determining whether the plaintiffs' injuries are too remote from the defendants' actions to be a proximate cause for the RICO claim. The post-injury actions of intervening parties cannot make the plaintiffs' losses more or less of a direct result of the defendants' actions. The only question is whether these intervening parties are ones that possibly could take steps to deter illegal activity as contemplated in Holmes. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269-70 ("Directly injured victims can generally be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general" (emphasis added)); 503 U.S. at 273 ("Those directly injured . . . could be counted on to bring suit for the law's vindication")

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 933-34. Considered as a whole, the Holmes factors dictate the conclusion that the plaintiffs cannot demonstrate a proximate causal connection between their injuries and the defendants' alleged racketeering activities.

D. Policy Issues: Were the Plaintiffs the Intended Beneficiaries of the Liquor Code?

The plaintiffs also contend that proximate causation is present in a civil RICO case where the alleged racketeering conduct effects violations of a regulatory [89] regime designed to protect the plaintiffs. See, e.g., Rodriguez v. McKinney, 878 F. Supp. 744, 747-49 (E.D. Pa. 1995); Trautz v. Weisman, 819 F. Supp. 282, 287 (S.D.N.Y. 1993); see also In re Orthopedic Bone Screw Prods. Liab. Litig., 159 F.3d 817, 826-27 (3d Cir. 1998) (recognizing a similar principle in the context of state common-law fraud claims). Although this may be a valid principle, we find it inapposite in the present case, as the condition of its application is not present here.

The purpose of the Pennsylvania Liquor Code is to promote temperance, not to protect small-business owners or ensure competition among beer retailers:

The provisions of [the Liquor Code] are intended to create a system for distribution that shall include the fixing of prices for liquor and alcohol and controls placed on prices for malt and brewed beverages, and each of which shall be construed as integral to the preservation of the system, without which system the Commonwealth's control of the sale of liquor and alcohol and malt and brewed beverages and the Commonwealth's promotion of its policy of temperance and responsible conduct with respect to [268] alcoholic beverages [90] would not be possible.

HN21 [↑]

Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 47, § 1-104(d) (West 1997) (emphasis added); see also § 1-104(a) ("This act shall be deemed an exercise of the police power of the Commonwealth for the protection of the public welfare, health, peace and morals of the people of the Commonwealth and to prohibit forever the open saloon"); Altshuler v. Pennsylvania Liquor Control Bd., 729 A.2d 1272, 1999 WL 298228, at *3 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1999) ("The purpose of the Liquor Code is not to promote the sale of liquor, rather it is to regulate and restrain the sale of liquor."). At least one court has recognized that the Liquor Code was, in fact, not at all intended to protect the economic interests of liquor retailers. See Lancaster County Tavern Assn. v. Pennsylvania Liquor Control Bd., 14 Pa. D. & C. 3d 381 (Lancaster Cty. C.P. Ct. 1980).

The plaintiffs submit that even if the purpose of the Liquor Code is not to protect retailers like themselves, the effect of the Code, and one of the goals of the LCB in enforcing it, is to protect retailers and competition. But although the LCB's efforts to enforce the Code may have resulted largely [91] in a predominance of beer retailers similar to the plaintiffs, that does not render large-scale stores like the Beer World stores automatically illegal. Accordingly, we do not think that the principle of Rodriguez, were we to adopt it, would compel a finding of proximate causation. We will therefore affirm the District Court's grant of summary judgment on the plaintiffs' RICO claim.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the District Court will be reversed to the extent that it granted summary judgment to the defendants on the plaintiffs' antitrust claims, but affirmed in all other respects, and the case will be remanded to the District Court for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Concur by: WELLFORD (In Part)

Dissent by: WELLFORD (In Part)

Dissent

WELLFORD, Senior Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part: I concur in Chief Judge Becker's excellent analysis of the antitrust claims of plaintiffs against the defendants. I therefore share in the conclusion that the district court was in error in granting summary judgment to defendants on the antitrust claims before the court.

My disagreement is in respect to the treatment of the RICO claims. [92] I dissent in that respect with some trepidation, realizing that Chief Judge Becker has recently authored several RICO decisions of this court flowing from the Supreme Court decision in Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992). I begin, then, with an analysis of Holmes in respect to the RICO issues in this case.

First, however, I construe plaintiffs' RICO claim to be as follows: as an intended consequence of defendants' alleged predicate fraudulent actions and activities in attaining a special status as a Pennsylvania beer retailer/distributor and obtaining through that fraud from the state a special license and status (contrary to any legal entitlement), plaintiffs were economically damaged. The relevant cases discuss in the RICO context whether plaintiffs have standing to bring the claim against a defendant, and whether plaintiffs can establish commercial damages as a proximate cause of defendant's illegal predicate acts.

Holmes involved the issue of standing and of proximate cause under RICO by a party asserting securities fraud. Plaintiff, Securities Investor Protection Corp. ("SIPC"), was neither a buyer [93] nor a seller of alleged manipulated stocks orchestrated by defendants. SIPC sued seventy-five defendant broker/dealers whose alleged illegal predicate acts brought about the collapse of several brokerage concerns which were members of SIPC, causing it to pay millions in damages to the failed member brokerage houses. Holmes acknowledged that § 1964(c) of RICO was "modeled on [*269] the civil-action provision of the federal antitrust laws." Id. at 267. We agree that plaintiffs in this case have set out an antitrust claim that survives summary judgment treatment. Holmes interpreted proximate cause in its RICO analysis:

At bottom, the notion of proximate cause reflects "ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient." W. Keeton, D. Dobbs, R. Keeton, & D. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on Law of Torts § 41, p. 264 (5th ed. 1984). . . . [One requirement is] some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged.

Id. at 268.

Was the plaintiff in Holmes simply complaining about "harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts . . ."? Id. [94] Holmes held that SIPC was complaining about an indirect injury, but it is important to consider why it reached that result. First, Holmes noted in footnote 19 that SIPC was not claiming to sue under a claimed right of any customer who actually purchased the manipulated securities. Id. at 272 n.19. Second, it is important to note that in Holmes, the broker/dealers, directly defrauded, who went into bankruptcy "have in fact sued" the same defendants. Id. at 273. Those third parties might then vindicate the public interest in recouping the economic damages caused by the fraudulent defendants, and in punishing them by treble damages.

Because of the potential of multiple claims against defendants seeking damages as a direct result of the same illegal predicate acts and the necessity of difficult and complex apportionment, Holmes decided in favor of defendants that SIPC's damages claims did not meet the proximate cause test. Our case is a very different one factually from Holmes. Plaintiffs here assert actions arising from defendants' illegally attained status based on asserted fraud perpetrated on the state of Pennsylvania. This does not, in my view, vindicate [95] the rights of private parties, such as plaintiffs, arising out of that fraud.¹ Unlike defrauded third party customers who had also sued defendants for the RICO actions in Holmes, neither Fuhrer, nor any other master distributor, sought any such damages against the Trone defendants for the alleged illegal predicate activity.

¹ As Chief Judge Becker indicates, Pennsylvania may only seek criminal penalties and withdrawal of defendants' special license, not damages.

Indeed, Fuhrer denied that any such illegal activity took place, and is an alleged co-conspirator in the antitrust activity.

In sum, I cannot construe Holmes as helpful to defendants in this case. Steamfitters Local Union Fund No. 420 v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912 \(3d Cir. 1999\), I think, is distinguishable. In Steamfitters, customers or purchasers of the tobacco products had brought suit, or might be expected to bring suit, to vindicate plaintiff's clearly indirect claim. These customers or purchasers had varying degrees [96] of proximate contributory or comparative negligence or knowledge about the danger of the tobacco product used or sold to them. Respectfully, I do not believe plaintiffs' claims in the instant case to be as attenuated as in Steamfitters. It is closer to the standing and proximate causal relationship of plaintiff in Brokerage Concepts, Inc. v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 140 F.3d 494 \(3d Cir. 1998\), in my view.

I do, therefore, respectfully dissent on the RICO element of this difficult case. I would hold that we should reverse and remand on both the antitrust and RICO claims.

End of Document

Dyno Nobel, Inc. v. Amotech Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico

July 1, 1999, Decided ; July 7, 1999, Opinion Filed

Civil No. 95-2475(SEC), Collection of Monies/Antitrust

Reporter

63 F. Supp. 2d 140 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,605

DYNO NOBEL, INC., Plaintiff v. AMOTECH CORPORATION, et al., Defendants/Third-Party Plaintiffs v. DRILLEX, S.E., et al., Third-Party Defendants Disposition: [1] Amotech's claim of contractual interference against Dyno and Drillex DISMISSED. Motions for summary judgment filed by Dyno and Drillex GRANTED and Amotech's amended counterclaim and third-party complaint DISMISSED.

Core Terms

conspiracy, summary judgment, explosives, dealer, Sherman Act, summary judgment motion, terminated, monopolize, blasting cap, contractual, market share, Deposition, antitrust, alleges, fail to comply, material fact, just cause, Undisputed, commerce, distribution agreement, Robinson-Patman Act, counterclaim, distributors, non-movant's, monopoly, parties, manufacturer, products, genuine, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is appropriately granted when the record shows that no genuine issue of material fact exists and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Thus, in order to defeat a properly crafted summary judgment motion, the party opposing it must demonstrate that a trialworthy issue looms as to a fact which could potentially affect the outcome of the suit.

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *140LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 1

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In determining whether to grant a summary judgment, the court may not weigh the evidence. Summary judgment admits of no room for credibility determinations, no room for the measured weighing of conflicting evidence such as the trial process entails. Accordingly, if the facts permit more than one reasonable inference, the court on summary judgment may not adopt the inference least favorable to the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The mere existence of a factual dispute is not, however, enough to defeat summary judgment. In those cases where there are factual disputes, summary judgment will be deemed proper if the unresolved facts are not genuine and material to the resolution of the case. For a dispute to be "genuine", the factual controversy must be sufficiently open-ended to permit a rational factfinder to resolve the issue in favor of either side.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment may be appropriate even in cases where elusive concepts such as motive or intent are at issue if the non-moving party rests merely upon conclusory allegations, improbable inferences and unsupported speculation.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN5 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *140LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 1

As long as it is the nonmovant that bears the ultimate burden of proof at trial, he will not be able to defeat a motion for summary judgment by relying upon evidence that is "merely colorable" or "not significantly probative." To the contrary, the nonmovant will have to present definite, competent evidence to rebut the motion.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Misconduct During Discovery

HN6 Judges, Discretionary Powers

The court has a duty to sanction those parties that repeatedly fail to comply with a trial judge's pre-trial orders.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN7 Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

See Loc. R. 311.12.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN8 Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

When a party opposing a motion for summary judgment fails to comply with the foregoing "anti-ferret rule," the statement of material facts filed by the party seeking summary judgment shall be deemed admitted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN9 Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Although the non-movant's failure to provide a statement of uncontested material facts does not automatically warrant the granting of summary judgment, it launches the non-movant's case down the road towards an easy dismissal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *140LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 1

HN10 [blue download icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

See § 2\(a\) of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1936 by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In order to prevail under a claim for violation of § 2\(a\) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), a party must show: 1) a cognizable difference in price; 2) between two buyers purchasing contemporaneously from the same seller; 3) involving commodities; 4) of like grade and quality; 5) that may injure competition. 15 U.S.C.S. 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Penalties

See § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] International Aspects, Commerce With Foreign Nations

A plaintiff must prove three elements to recover under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) to wit: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more independent actors; (2) that unreasonably restrains trade; and (3) is in, or substantially affects, interstate or foreign commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a conspiracy claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, a plaintiff must prove the existence of a "meeting of the minds" or "an agreement" to carry out an unlawful scheme. Absent direct evidence of an agreement, the plaintiff bears the burden of showing that circumstantial evidence raises a legal inference of conspiracy.

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *140LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 1

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN15 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

To survive a motion for summary judgment for a claim of conspiracy under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), a plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN16 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

There are two separate inquiries critical to an antitrust plaintiff's burden of demonstrating an inference of conspiracy: first, whether the conspiracy is economically plausible, and second, whether the defendant's conduct was consistent with the defendant's independent interest. Where the inferences of conspiracy are no stronger than the competing inferences of independent action, the plaintiff has not sustained its burden of proof, and the claim must be dismissed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN17 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about the prices and the reception of their products in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN18 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Poor credit may constitute a defendant's proof that the refusal to deal was a unilateral rather than conspiratorial decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN19 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *140LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN20 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Share of the relevant market is the most significant element to determine monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN21 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The key elements of a "conspiracy to monopolize" offense are: 1) the existence of a conspiracy; 2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and 3) specific intent to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 15(a), plaintiff's burden of proof for claims of conspiracy to monopolize is higher than that required for § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 15(a) conspiracy claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

See Puerto Rico Dealers Act, Law 75 of June 24, 1964, as amended, 10 L.P.R.A. 278 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Limited Partnerships > Dissolution & Winding Up

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Good Cause

HN24 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The Puerto Rico Dealers Act clearly authorizes termination of a relationship between a distributor and its dealer when there is "just cause" for its termination. Law 75, 10 L.P.R.A. 278, defines "just cause" as nonperformance of any of the essential obligations of the dealer's contract on the part of the dealer, or any action or omission on his part that adversely and substantially affects the interest of the principal or grantor in promoting the marketing or distribution of the merchandise or service. 10 L.P.R.A. 278(d).

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *140LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN25 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Under 10 L.P.R.A. 278(d), the law limits the definition of "just cause" to acts attributable to the dealer. In essence, when the dealer fails to comply with an essential obligation of the agreement or adversely affects in a substantial manner the interest of the principal, the principal can terminate the contract without payment of damages.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN26 Intentional Interference, Elements

Puerto Rico law provides a cause of action for tortious interference by third parties with contractual obligations. 31 L.P.R.A. § 5141 (1990). To state a claim for interference with contracts under Puerto Rico law, there must be: (1) a contract with which a third person interferes; (2) fault or knowledge of the contract's existence; (3) damage to the plaintiff; and (4) causation.

Counsel: Edilberto Berrios-Davila, San Juan, PR, for third-party plaintiffs.

Edilberto Berrios-Perez, Hato Rey, PR, for third-party plaintiffs.

Edilberto Berrios-Davila, San Juan, PR, for counter-claimant.

Edilberto Berrios-Perez, Hato Rey, PR, for counter-claimant.

Francisco A. Besosa, Axtmayer, Adsuar, Muniz & Goyco, San Juan, PR, for counter-defendant.

Francisco A. Besosa, Axtmayer, Adsuar, Muniz & Goyco, San Juan, PR, for plaintiff.

Francisco J. Criado, SAN JUAN, PR, for third-party defendants.

Judges: SALVADOR E. CASELLAS, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SALVADOR E. CASELLAS

Opinion

[*142] OPINION AND ORDER

Pending before the Court are several motions for summary judgment filed by Dyno Nobel, Inc. ("Dyno") (Docket # 94, 93) and third-party defendants Drillex, S.E., Jose F. Criado Vazquez, his wife Pilar Valladares de Criado and their conjugal partnership. (hereinafter "Drillex")(Docket # 94). Dyno and Drillex seek dismissal of the antitrust, [2] Law 75 and tortious contractual interference claims filed by Amotech Corporation, Rey Francisco Rivera, Jr, his wife Ada Luz Collazo, and their conjugal partnership (hereinafter "Amotech"). Amotech filed its opposition on June 4 and June 7, 1999, more than a month after the April 25 deadline prescribed by the Court. For the reasons stated below in this Opinion and Order, the motions for summary judgment filed by Dyno and Drillex are GRANTED.

Summary Judgment Standard

The First Circuit Court of Appeals has explained that summary judgment "is a means of determining whether a trial is actually required. HN1[¹] It is appropriately granted when the record shows that no genuine issue of material fact exists and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Thus, in order to defeat a properly crafted summary judgment motion, the party opposing it must demonstrate that a trialworthy issue looms as to a fact which could potentially affect the outcome of the suit." Serapion v. Martinez, 119 F.3d 982 \(1st Cir. 1997\). See also McCarthy v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 56 F.3d 313, 315 \(1st Cir. 1995\).

HN2[¹] In determining whether to grant a summary [3] judgment, the Court may not weigh the evidence. Casas Office Machines, Inc. v. Mita Copystar America, Inc., 42 F.3d 668 \(1st Cir. 1994\). Summary judgment "admits of no room for credibility determinations, no room for the measured weighing of conflicting evidence such as the trial process entails." Id. citing Greenburg v. Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Authority, 835 F.2d 932, 936 \(1st Cir. 1987\). Accordingly, if the facts permit more than one reasonable inference, the court on summary judgment may not adopt the inference least favorable to the non-moving party. Casas Office Machines, 42 F.3d at 684.

HN3[¹] The mere existence of a factual dispute is not, however, enough to defeat summary judgment. United Structures, Inc. v. G.R.G. Engineering, S.E., 927 F. Supp. 556, 560 \(D.P.R. 1996\). In those cases where there are factual disputes, summary judgment will be deemed proper if the unresolved facts are not genuine and material to the resolution of the case. Corporacion Insular de Seguros v. Reyes Munoz, 849 F. Supp. 126, 132 \(D.P.R. 1994\). For a dispute to be "genuine", "the factual controversy 'must be sufficiently [4] open-ended to permit a rational factfinder to resolve [*143] the issue in favor of either side'." Lynne Woods-Leber v. Hyatt Hotels of Puerto Rico, Inc., 124 F.3d 47 \(1st Cir. 1997\). See also U.S. v. One Parcel of Real Property, 960 F.2d 200, 204 \(1st Cir. 1992\); Boston Athletic Assn. v. Sullivan, 867 F.2d 22, 24 \(1st Cir. 1989\), of the suit under the governing law. Morris v. Government Development Bank of Puerto Rico, 27 F.3d 746, 748 \(1st Cir. 1994\).

Recent case law has established that "HN4[¹] summary judgment may be appropriate 'even in cases where elusive concepts such as motive or intent are at issue ... if the non-moving party rests merely upon conclusory allegations, improbable inferences and unsupported speculation'." Woods v. Friction Materials, Inc., 30 F.3d 255, 259 \(1st Cir. 1994\) (quoting Medina-Munoz v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco, Co., 896 F.2d 5, 8 \(1st Cir. 1990\)).

It thus seems that, at least HN5[¹] as long as it is "the nonmovant [that] bears the ultimate burden of proof at trial, he [will] not [be able to] defeat a motion for summary judgment by relying upon evidence that is "merely [5] colorable" or "not significantly probative." Pagano v. Frank, 983 F.2d 343, 347 \(1st Cir. 1993\), referring to Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249-50, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\). "To the contrary, the nonmovant [will have to] 'present definite, competent evidence to rebut the motion'." Pagano, 983 F.2d at 347, referring to Mesnick v. General Elec. Co., 950 F.2d 816, 822 \(1st Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 985, 112 S. Ct. 2965, 119 L. Ed. 2d 586 (1992).

Factual Background

Dyno, a corporation organized under the laws of Delaware, formerly known as IRECO Incorporated, specializes in the manufacture and sale of explosives and explosives-related products. Amotech is a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, with its principal place of business in Toa Baja, Puerto Rico, that specializes in the distribution and sale of explosives and is also a drilling and blasting contractor. On or about December 3, 1991, Dyno and Amotech Corporation ("Amotech") entered into a distribution agreement (the "Agreement") whereby Amotech would [6] promote and sell Dyno products in Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands and other Caribbean Islands. Complaint, P18; Amotech, Agreement, P1.A.

The Agreement, according to Dyno, was not exclusive and would only become so for the Puerto Rico area if Amotech obtained 25% of the Puerto Rico market within the first year of the agreement. Agreement, Exhibit 3 of the Complaint, P1.A. Dyno alleges that the Agreement was never meant to be or become exclusive for the Virgin Islands and other Caribbean Islands. (Docket # 38 Unsworn Declaration of Richard Shea Under Penalty of Perjury, P10, DYNO's Corporate Counsel, Exhibit 1 (hereinafter "Shea Declaration").)

On or about April 1, 1992, at DYNO's request, Mr. Rey Rivera, Amotech's President ¹ and owner of 30% interest in the company (Complaint, P15, Deposition of Rey Francisco Rivera Jr., Exhibit 2, p. 16, "Rivera Deposition") executed a guaranty agreement (the "Guaranty") pursuant to which Rivera, individually and in his personal capacity, jointly and severally with Amotech, guaranteed the full and complete payment of "all sums owing, and to become owing, and to become owing upon any and all sales of goods" sold to Amotech by DYNO; and "all attorneys' [7] fees, court costs and other costs and expenses incurred by [Amotech] in connection with collection of such Debt. . ." (Complaint, P21; Rivera's Guaranty, Exhibit 5 of the Complaint.) Upon the execution of the Guaranty and upon Amotech's compliance of several additional terms and conditions, DYNO and Amotech continued doing business in the regular course of their Agreement. Complaint, P20, Amotech's Answer, P20.

[*144] From September 30, 1994 to September 30, 1995, DYNO sold Amotech goods on credit. Upon Amotech's failure to pay for these goods, Dyno filed the present complaint on December 1, 1995. On March 11, 1996, Amotech and Rivera filed an answer and a counterclaim alleging several violations by Dyno under the Puerto Rico's Dealers Act (Law 75). On February 20, 1997, Amotech filed an amended counterclaim and a third-party complaint against [8] Drillex, S.E., Jose Fernando Criado Vazquez, his wife Pilar Valladares de Criado and the conjugal partnership formed by them.

The third-party complaint alleged, in essence, that Drillex conspired with Dyno to control the market of explosives in Puerto Rico. Amotech claims that Dyno sold explosive materials to Drillex at a lower price than it had charged Amotech for the same materials. This alleged price discrimination, claims Amotech, substantially lessened competition and undermined Amotech's market share in the Puerto Rico "explosives material" market. Thus, Amotech claims damages under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. 15(a) and the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. 13(a).

On March 27, 1998, this Court granted Dyno's unopposed motion for partial summary judgment against Amotech and ordered Amotech to pay Dyno the amount of $ 176,455.34, plus accrued interest, costs, and attorneys' fees incurred in the collection of the debt. (Docket # 84) Amotech's claims pursuant to Law 75 and antitrust laws and its contractual interference claim are the focus of the pending summary judgment motions. However, before we decide the parties' [9] contentions on the merits, we must discuss Dyno and Drillex's allegations regarding Amotech's delayed filing of its opposition to the pending summary judgment motions. (Dockets # 99, 100, 101, 103,104)

Dyno and Drillex filed their respective summary judgment motions on March 15, 1999. (Dockets # 93, 94) On April 8, 1999, Amotech requested and this Court granted an extension of time to file its opposition until April 24, 1999. This Court noted on its margin order of April 12, 1999 that "no further extensions of time shall be granted." (Docket # 96). On April 26, 1999, notwithstanding this Court's order against further extensions, Amotech requested another extension of time to file a reply until May 20, 1999, which the Court did not grant. (Docket # 98) Dyno and Drillex both objected to Amotech's petition and requested sanctions and the entry of summary judgment against Amotech. (Dockets # 99-101). On June 1, 1999, Amotech requested another extension of time to reply until June 4, 1999, which the Court did not grant, claiming 1) that many of the depositions were in Spanish and Amotech's United States counsel could not understand them, 2) that Drillex [10] withheld relevant documents from Amotech, and 3) that Amotech received the summary judgment motions "well after March 15th, the date that the papers were certified as being mailed." This was the first time that Amotech recited this litany of reasons to request an extension. (Docket # 102) Amotech filed its opposition on the Law 75 claims on June 7, 1999, 3 days after its self-imposed deadline. (Docket # 106)

¹ In his taking of deposition Mr. Rivera noted that at the time he subscribed the Guaranty he was serving as Amotech's Vice-president. (Rivera Deposition, Exhibit 2, p. 13)

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *144L^A1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 10

In view of the procedural history described above, the Court would be shirking its duty to "secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action" if it allowed Amotech to flaunt this Court's orders with impunity. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 1. This Court would be hard-pressed to find another case where it would feel more justly entitled to "close the gates to the Courthouse." ² The First [*145] Circuit has repeatedly stressed the need for district court judges to keep a tight rein over its proceedings in discovery and pretrial matters. In Legault v. Zambarano, 105 F.3d 24 \(1st Cir. 1997\), the Court described HN6[↑] the Court's duty to sanction those parties that repeatedly fail to comply with a trial judge's pre-trial orders:

A challenge to a trial [*11] judge's exercise of discretion in these circumstances carries an especially heavy burden. Over twenty years ago the Supreme Court sharply underlined the importance of supporting a trial court's decisions concerning sanctions, even where the judge imposed the most stringent sanction, outright dismissal, for misconduct in the pretrial phase of a case. National Hockey League v. Metropolitan Hockey Club, Inc., 427 U.S. 639, 643-43, 49 L. Ed. 2d 747, 96 S. Ct. 2778 \(1976\). . .This circuit's decisions have been entirely consistent with the Supreme Court's directive. See, e.g. Spiller v. U.S.V. Laboratories, Inc., 842 F.2d 535, 537 \(1st Cir. 1988\) Damiani v. Rhode Island Hosp., 704 F.2d 12, 17 \(1st Cir. 1983\).

105 F.3d at 26.

[12] The First Circuit continued:

The extent to which a party's failure to file pretrial papers in a timely manner puts an opponent into an unfair position, by causing unnecessary preparation, confusion or distraction, and the translation of this unfairness into a sum of money, are tasks that must be left except in the most extraordinary circumstances to the good sense of the judge on the scene. Beyond this the trial judge has an independent responsibility to enforce the directives he has laid down for the case. This court has made this point before in the clearest terms. "Rules are rules --and the parties must play by them. In the final analysis, the judicial process depends heavily on the judge's credibility. To ensure such credibility, a district judge must often be firm in managing crowded dockets and demanding adherence to announced deadlines. If he or she sets a reasonable due date, parties should not be allowed casually to flout it or painlessly to escape the foreseeable consequences of noncompliance."

105 F.3d at 28-29. (Citing Mendez v. Banco Popular de Puerto Rico, 900 F.2d 4, 7 \(1st Cir. 1990\)).

Just as Amotech ignored the Court's admonition [*13] of April 12, 1999 that "no further extensions of time shall be granted," this Court shall ignore Amotech's belated opposition for summary judgment. Accordingly, the Court orders the Clerk of the Court to strike from the record Amotech's motion in opposition to summary judgment. (Docket # 106) Amotech, in failing to timely oppose the motion for summary judgment, has also failed to comply in a timely manner with the so-called "anti-ferret rule"; that is, they have not presented a concise statement of material facts as to which there is a genuine issue to be tried, as required by Local Rule 311.12.³

² We note that every party has a right to timely oppose a motion for summary judgment. In Delgado Biaggi v. Air Transport Local 501, 112 F.3d 565 \(1st Cir. 1997\), the Court of Appeals reversed the district court's grant of summary judgment, since the judge failed to give the opposing party the opportunity to file within the 10-day period prescribed by Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(c\). The Court noted: "Summary judgment targets should be secure in the knowledge that they will have at least ten days in which to formulate and prepare their best opposition." Id. at 567. In the present case, Amotech had over a month to prepare its opposition and yet was unable to comply with the Court's generous extension of time.

³ HN7[↑] Local Rule 311.12 provides that:

upon any motion for summary judgment, there shall be served and filed annexed to the motion a separate, short, and concise statement of the material facts as to which the moving party contends there is no genuine issue to be tried and the basis of such contention as to each material fact, properly supported by specific reference to the record. All material facts set forth in the statement required to be served by the moving party shall be deemed to be admitted unless controverted by the statement required to be served by the opposing party. The papers opposing a motion for summary judgment shall include a separate, short, and concise statement of the material facts as to which it is contended that there exists a genuine issue to be tried, properly supported by specific reference to the record.

[14] [*146] This Court has previously expressed that "HN8" when a party opposing a motion for summary judgment fails to comply with [the foregoing] 'anti-ferret rule,' the statement of material facts filed by the party seeking summary judgment [shall be] deemed... admitted." Mendez-Marrero v. Toledo, 968 F. Supp. 2d \(D.P.R. 1997\), referring to Dominquez v. Eli Lilly & Co., 958 F. Supp. 721, 727 \(D.P.R. 1997\). See also Tavarez v. Champion Products, Inc., 903 F. Supp. 268, 270 \(D. P.R. 1995\).

Otherwise, the Court would be forced to search "through the entire record for evidence of genuine issues of material fact which might preclude the entry of summary judgment." Mendez-Marrero, 968 F. Supp. at 34, referring to Stepanischen v. Merchants Despatch Transp. Corp., 722 F.2d 922, 930-31 \(1st Cir. 1983\). HN9 Although the non-movant's failure to provide a statement of uncontested material facts does not automatically warrant the granting of summary judgment, "it launches the non-movant's case down the road towards an easy dismissal." Id.

Such is the scenario in the present case. Because defendants have failed to timely [15] oppose the present motion, they have violated the anti-ferret rule. Accordingly, all material facts set forth in defendant's statement of undisputed material facts shall be deemed admitted. Rivas v. Federacion de Asociaciones Pecuarias, 929 F.2d 814, 816 n.2 \(1st Cir. 1991\); Laracuente v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 891 F.2d 17, 19 \(1st Cir. 1989\). Thus, we need only examine whether given the facts, Dyno and Drillex are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Applicable Law/Analysis

Amotech's Price Discrimination Claim Fails to Comply with the Required Elements of a Claim under the Robinson-Patman Act

Amotech claims that from the period of October 1994 through February 1996, Dyno began to sell explosives material to Drillex, specifically "blasting caps," at a substantially lower price than it sold "blasting caps" to Amotech. Amotech alleges that Dyno never offered it the same below-market prices that Dyno offered to Drillex. As a result of Dyno's refusal to make a similar offer, Amotech contends that it was forced to buy its supplies from Dyno at a price six times higher than the price offered to Drillex. This price discrimination between Drillex [16] and Amotech, argues Amotech, substantially affected its ability to compete in the "explosives material market" with Drillex, and caused irreparable economic injury to Amotech, all in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

HN10 Section 2\(a\) of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1936 by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 13\(a\), reads, in pertinent part:

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, ... where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination.... (Emphasis added)

Upon review of the allegations and the pertinent evidence before us, we find that Amotech fails to comply with the required criteria to establish a Robinson-Patman claim. HN11 In order to prevail under this claim, [17] Amotech must show: 1) a cognizable difference in price; 2) between two buyers purchasing contemporaneously from the same seller; 3) involving commodities; 4) of like grade and quality; 5) that may injure competition. 15 U.S.C. 13\(a\). Federal Trade Commission v. Borden Co., 383 U.S. 637, 643, 16 L. Ed. 2d 153, 86 S. Ct. 1092 \(1966\).

[*147] Although Amotech claims that there was a cognizable difference in the price of the blasting caps sold to Drillex and Amotech and that Drillex and Amotech purchased commodities from Dyno during the same period, Amotech has failed to present evidence to suggest that the "blasting caps" sold to Dyno and Amotech were "of like grade and quality" and that the price distinction from the sales directly caused the erosion of Amotech's market share in the "explosives material" market.

In the present case, the blasting caps put on the "blue light" list by Dyno are vastly different in quality, physical characteristics and value, compared to the new caps. It is undisputed that the blasting caps sold to Amotech were new, while the blue light caps sold to Drillex were old, obsolete or approaching the end of their shelf lives. (Docket [18] # 94, Dyno's Statement of Undisputed Facts # 3 (hereinafter "Dyno's Undisputed Facts")) An essential feature of a blasting cap is its ability to set off explosives with exact timing. As noted by Dyno's expert, as blasting caps age, their timing ability deteriorates. (Dyno's Undisputed Facts # 6, Deposition of Robert Taylor, p. 31) In view of the record presented before us, we agree with Dyno's contention that the "blue light" caps sold to Drillex were substantially different in grade and quality from the caps sold to Amotech and thus cannot be used to show price discrimination pursuant to the Robinson-Patman Act. Accordingly, Amotech's claim under the Robinson-Patman Act is DISMISSED.

Amotech has Failed to Establish the Required Elements of a Claim under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

a. § 1 of the Sherman Act for Conspiracy

HN12[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act reads as follows:

1. Trusts, etc., in restraint of trade illegal; penalty

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make [19] any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

HN13[] A plaintiff must prove three elements to recover under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, to wit: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more independent actors; (2) that unreasonably restrains trade; and (3) is in, or substantially affects, interstate or foreign commerce. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984)

Amotech claims that Dyno and Drillex conspired to undermine Amotech's market share in the "explosives material" market through a price-discrimination scheme. Amotech alleges that Dyno agreed to sell, and Drillex agreed to buy, explosives material, which included the "blasting caps", at a substantially lower price than the price Dyno would offer to Amotech. Such scheme, notes Amotech, constituted a conspiracy which curtailed [20] Amotech's ability to compete with Drillex and led to a precipitous decline in Amotech's market share in the "explosives material" market. Amotech thus notes that the above described scheme violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. (Amended Counterclaim, par. 10-12)

HN14[] To establish a conspiracy claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove the existence of a "meeting of the minds" or "an agreement" to carry out an unlawful scheme. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). Absent direct evidence of an agreement, the plaintiff bears the burden of showing that circumstantial evidence raises a legal inference of conspiracy. In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), the Supreme Court explained that "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a Section 1 case. Thus, . . . conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy . . . HN15[] To survive a motion for summary [21] judgment . . . , a plaintiff . . . must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently."

The Matsushita Court identified HN16¹⁵ two separate inquiries critical to an antitrust plaintiff's burden of demonstrating an inference of conspiracy: first, whether the conspiracy is economically plausible, and second, whether the defendant's conduct "was consistent with the defendant's independent interest." Id. at 587. Where the inferences of conspiracy are no stronger than the competing inferences of independent action, the plaintiff has not sustained its burden of proof, and the claim must be dismissed Id. at 596-97; see also Computer Identics Corp. v. Southern Pacific Co., 756 F.2d 200, 203 \(1st Cir. 1985\)(dismissing antitrust claim where plaintiff failed to produce evidence that would tend to "exclude the possibility that [the defendants] were acting independently." (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764)

It is clear from the record that there is no direct evidence that Dyno and Drillex had a "meeting of the minds" to intentionally undermine Amotech's competitiveness in 22 the market. Although representatives of Dyno and Drillex met in January 1994 to conduct business, such meeting, without more, does not create an inference of conspiracy as defined by the Sherman Act. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. at 762. ("HN17¹⁵ A manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about the prices and the reception of their products in the market.) Furthermore, the persons involved in the meeting of January 1994 testified that they did not discuss, and much less agreed, to any scheme or plan designed to undermine Amotech's position in the market. (Docket # 94, Dyno's Undisputed Facts, Exhibit 8, Deposition of Raymond Delon Hunsaker, p. 157, ln 17-19; Exhibit 9, Deposition of Hardin Dean Mitchell, p. 81, ln. 9-25., Exhibit 6, Deposition of Jose Criado Vazquez)

Lacking such direct evidence of conspiracy, Amotech also fails to show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. The meeting between Dyno and Drillex, as noted above, does not create a reasonable inference of conspiracy in the present 23 case; the fact that Dyno stopped selling to Amotech due to its poor payment record also fails to establish an inference of conspiracy. See Malcolm v. Marathon Oil Co., 642 F.2d 845, 860 \(5th Cir. 1981\)("Poor HN18¹⁵ credit may constitute a defendant's proof that the refusal to deal was a unilateral rather than conspiratorial decision").

Amotech's claim that Dyno would not sell it bagged ammonium nitrate ("AN") also fails to raise an inference of conspiracy. Dyno stopped selling bagged AN not only to Amotech but to all its other customers, since it could no longer obtain the product from Arcadian, who later discontinued sales of the product. (Docket # 94, Dyno's Undisputed Facts, Exhibit # 12, Deposition of Robert Taylor, p. 69-70, ln. 3-25). Practices that affect all distributors cannot satisfy conspiracy requirements. See Schaben v. Samuel Moore & Co., 606 F.2d 831, 834 \(8th Cir. 1979\) Furthermore, Amotech's allegation [\[*149\]](#) that Dyno's lawsuit for collection of a debt is a "sham" designed to cover up anticompetitive practices is without merit. This Court has already granted summary judgment in favor of Dyno's collection claim. (Docket # 85) Since 24 Amotech has failed to establish that the lawsuit is objectively baseless, its argument must fail. See Professional Real Estate Investors v. Columbia Pictures, 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 \(1993\).

Finally, Amotech cannot properly contend that Dyno's alleged conspiracy with Drillex was consistent with Dyno's independent interests. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587. As noted by Dyno, it would not have been in its best economic interest to substantially undermine Amotech's market share and eliminate it as Drillex's competitor. Although the elimination of Amotech may benefit Drillex, Dyno's financial interest in Puerto Rico would be harmed if Drillex became the sole distributor of explosives. Dyno argues, and this Court agrees, that Dyno's business interests are best served by selling to competing distributors, not to a powerful monopoly. The First Circuit Court of Appeals has explained that "other things being equal, a profit-maximizing dealer monopolist would set retail prices that, from the supplier's perspective, are too high and unduly restrict the product's sales." Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler, Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 528 \(1st Cir. 1989\). 25

Simply put, if Drillex eliminated Amotech as a dealer, it would harm Dyno. In the absence of competition, Drillex could raise prices and reduce output leading to diminished demand for Dyno's products. See Areeda and Turner, Antitrust Law sec. 402 (ordinarily manufacturers will maximize their profits by encouraging maximum competition among dealers and low retail profit margins). Furthermore, if Drillex became a monopoly, it would substantially strengthen its bargaining position with Dyno. Thus, Drillex could demand concessions from Dyno that would be unachievable if it faced competitors. See Robert Bork, The Antitrust Paradox, at 290 ("The manufacturer shares with the consumer the desire to have distribution done at the lowest possible cost. . ."); Viscusi, Vernon and Harrington, Economics of Regulation and Antitrust at 243 (dealer monopoly "would not be in supplier's best interest.")

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *149 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 25

Having failed to establish the "conspiracy" element required under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, this Court will not delve into the other elements of the claim. Pursuant to the previous analysis, Amotech's claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act against Dyno and Drillex is DISMISSED.

[26] b. Section 2 of the Sherman Act for Monopoly or Attempt to Monopolize

HN19 [↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act reads as follows:

2. Monopolizing trade a felony; penalty

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Amotech's monopoly claim against Dyno is improper, since Dyno does not have any market share in the relevant market, that is, "the market for the commercial explosive industry and explosives-related products in Puerto Rico." (Complaint, par. 9). See Gilbuilt Homes, Inc. v. Continental Homes, 667 F.2d 209, 211 (1st Cir. 1981); Pastore v. Bell Telegraph Co., 24 F.3d 508, 513 (3rd Cir. 1994) (share HN20 [↑] of the relevant market most [*150] significant element to determine monopolization)

As cogently [27] noted by Dyno's counsel, Amotech's Section 2 claim suffers the same infirmities as its Section 1 claim under the Sherman Act. HN21 [↑] The key elements of a "conspiracy to monopolize" offense are: 1) the existence of a conspiracy; 2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and 3) specific intent to monopolize. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 225, 91 L. Ed. 2010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 (1947). HN22 [↑] Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, plaintiff's burden of proof for claims of conspiracy to monopolize is higher than that required for Section 1 conspiracy claims. Seagood Trading Corp v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1573-75 (11th Cir. 1991). Amotech must show not only evidence of concerted action but also a shared intent to monopolize the market. As previously discussed by the Court with Amotech's Section 1 claim, there is no evidence of concerted action. In view of Dyno's non-participation in the relevant market and the absence of concerted action to monopolize, Amotech's Section 2 claim against Dyno and Drillex is DISMISSED.

Amotech's Claim under the Puerto Rico Dealers Act

Amotech also alleges in its amended counterclaim that Dyno terminated [28] its distribution agreement with Amotech without just cause, in violation of the Puerto Rico Dealers Act, Law 75 of 1964. Dyno contends in its motion for summary judgment that it terminated its relationship with Amotech due to Amotech's repeated failures to pay on time, as stipulated in the Agreement, and that such reason constitutes "good cause", for purposes of Law 75. This Court agrees.

HN23 [↑] The Puerto Rico Dealers Act, Law 75 of June 24, 1964, as amended, 10 L.P.R.A. 278 et seq. reads, in pertinent part:

Termination of relationship

Notwithstanding the existence in a dealer's contract of a clause reserving to the parties the unilateral right to terminate the existing relationship, no principal or grantor may directly or indirectly perform any act detrimental to the established relationship or refuse to renew said contract on its normal expiration, except for just cause. (Emphasis added)

10 L.P.R.A. 278a

HN24 [↑] The Puerto Rico Dealers Act clearly authorizes termination of a relationship between a distributor and its dealer when there is "just cause" for its termination. Law 75 defines "just cause" as "nonperformance of any of the essential obligations of the dealer's [29] contract on the part of the dealer, or any action or omission on his part that adversely and substantially affects the interest of the principal or grantor in promoting the marketing or distribution of the merchandise or service." 10 L.P.R.A. 278(d). HN25 [↑] The law limits the definition of "just cause" to acts attributable to the dealer. Warner Lambert v. Superior Court, 1973 PR Sup. LEXIS 203, 101 D.P.R. 378 (1973). In essence, when the dealer fails to comply with an essential obligation of the agreement or adversely affects in a substantial manner the interest of the principal, the principal can terminate the contract without payment of damages.

Dyno argues, and this Court agrees, that Amotech's refusal to pay its bills constituted just cause to terminate the agreement. From the beginning of the distributorship relationship, Amotech has repeatedly failed to make timely payments to Dyno. Despite repeated efforts by Dyno to set reasonable payment schedules, Amotech continued its untimely payments. Such delay eventually led to Dyno's filing of the present complaint. The First Circuit Court of Appeals has held that paying for goods on time is one of the bedrock essential obligations [30] of the dealer's contract. PPM Chemical Corp. of P.R. v. Saskatoon Chemical Ltd., 931 F.2d 138, 139 (1st Cir. 1991).

[*151] In PPM, a Canadian manufacturer, Saskatoon Chemical Ltd. ("Saskatoon") entered into an exclusive distribution agreement with PPM, under which it made PPM its Caribbean Distributor of calcium hypochlorite. Two years later, Saskatoon stopped selling to PPM on an exclusive basis due to PPM's poor performance. The First Circuit Court of Appeals found that PPM's failure to pay was "just cause" for termination of the exclusive agreement. Id.

We apply the same reasoning to the present case. Amotech's compliance with the payment terms of the Agreement was essential to Dyno. The Distribution Agreement includes several sections which underscore the importance of timely payments by Amotech, to wit: section 4C details the terms of payment (Docket # 93, Exhibit 2, par. 4C); section 6A notes that Dyno may require collateral at any time to secure full and complete payment (Id., Exhibit 2, par. 6A), and section 9b(1) stipulated that failure to make payments when due was an event which terminated the relationship immediately (Id., Exhibit2, par. 9b(1)). The record [31] shows that Dyno repeatedly required the payment of overdue amounts and that Amotech often responded by either not making any payments at all or failing to comply with its own proposed payment schedules. (Docket # 93, Dyno's Uncontested Facts Under Law 75, Exhibits 3-7).⁴ Accordingly, the Court holds that Dyno did not incur in a violation of Law 75, since it terminated its relationship with Amotech for just cause. Since we have found that Dyno properly terminated its distribution relationship with Amotech due to the latter's untimely payments, we need not go any further into the nature of the distribution agreement between the parties. Pursuant to the case law and the analysis above, Amotech's Law 75 claim is DISMISSED.

[32] Amotech's Claim of Contractual Interference Against Drillex

Amotech claims that Drillex knew about the exclusive distribution agreement between Dyno and Amotech. Amotech contends that despite this knowledge, Drillex agreed to buy explosives material from Dyno at substantially reduced prices, thus interfering with the existing contractual relationship between Dyno and Amotech. This interference, argues Amotech severely undermined the contractual relationship between Dyno and Amotech, which led to a substantial loss of market share for Amotech. Thus, Amotech seeks to hold Dyno and Drillex jointly liable for the damages caused by such contractual interference.

⁴ According to the civil code which regulates contractual relationships in Puerto Rico, Dyno properly invoked the doctrine of exceptio non adimplenti contractus, that is, once a party fails to fulfill its obligations under the contract, the other party is no longer bound to comply with its own obligations. See Mora Development v. Sandin, 1987 PR Sup. LEXIS 121, 118 D.P.R. 733; Martinez v. Colon, 89 JTS 109.

63 F. Supp. 2d 140, *151 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505, 32

This district court recently explained the requisites under which a plaintiff may recover for contractual interference. The Court explained in Mr. (Vega Alta) v. Caribe General Elec. Products, 31 F. Supp. 2d 226 (D.Puerto Rico 1998) as follows: "HN26" Puerto Rico law provides a cause of action for tortious interference by third parties with contractual obligations. See 31 L.P.R.A. § 5141 (1990). To state a claim for interference with contracts under Puerto Rico law, there must be: (1) a contract with [33] which a third person interferes; (2) fault or knowledge of the contract's existence; (3) damage to the plaintiff; and (4) causation. General Office Products Corp. v. A.M. Capen's Sons, Inc., 780 F.2d 1077, 1081-82 (1st Cir. 1986) (citing General Office Products Corp. v. A.M. Capen's Sons, Inc., 1984 PR Sup. LEXIS 138, 115 D.P.R. 553 (1984))." Id. at 238.

Although Amotech properly alleges the first three elements of the contractual interference claim, it has been unable to present persuasive evidence that Dyno's sale of blasting caps to Drillex during the term of Amotech's relationship with Dyno [*152] directly caused Amotech's financial losses and subsequent drop in its market share of the "explosives material" market. Accordingly, Amotech's claim of contractual interference against Dyno and Drillex is DISMISSED. Pursuant to the above discussion, the motions for summary judgment filed by Dyno and Drillex are GRANTED and Amotech's amended counterclaim and third-party complaint is DISMISSED. Judgment shall follow accordingly.

SO ORDERED.

In San Juan, Puerto Rico, this 1st day of July, 1999.

SALVADOR E. CASELLAS

United States [34] District Judge

JUDGMENT

Pursuant to our opinion and order of even date, Amotech's counterclaim against Dyno Nobel, Inc. and third party complaint against Drillex, S.E., Jose Fernando Criado Vazquez, his wife Pilar Valladares de Criado and their conjugal partnership are hereby DISMISSED. Judgment is entered accordingly.

SO ORDERED.

In San Juan, Puerto Rico, this 1st day of July, 1999.

SALVADOR E. CASELLAS

United States District Judge

FTC v. Mylan Labs., Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

July 7, 1999, Decided ; July 7, 1999, Filed

Cv. 98-3114 (TFH), Cv. 98-3115 (TFH)

Reporter

62 F. Supp. 2d 25 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,573

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Plaintiff, v. MYLAN LABORATORIES, INC., CAMBREX CORP., PROFARMACO S.R.L., and GYMA LABORATORIES OF AMERICA, INC., Defendants. THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT, et al., Plaintiffs, v. MYLAN LABORATORIES, INC., CAMBREX CORP., PROFARMACO S.R.L., GYMA LABORATORIES OF AMERICA, INC., and SST CORP., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendants' motions to dismiss granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

purchasers, indirect, restitution, disgorgement, defendants', motion to dismiss, damages, claim for damages, authorizes, injunctive relief, antitrust, lorazepam, civil penalty, manufacturer, anti trust law, attorney's fees, monetary relief, equitable, costs, state law claim, allegations, umbrella, amended complaint, generic, drugs, state law, permanent injunction, equitable relief, state statute, Clayton Act

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 Public Enforcement, US Federal Trade Commission Actions

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act prohibits violations of the Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *25L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 1

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12, a claim should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. In evaluating a plaintiff's complaint, a court must accept the factual allegations as true and draw reasonable inferences therefrom in favor of plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 53 \(b\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Real Property Law > Environmental Regulations > Indoor Air & Water Quality

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > Relief

HN4 Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Power is thereby resident in the district court, in exercising jurisdiction, to do equity and to mold each decree to the necessities of the particular case. The comprehensiveness of this equitable jurisdiction is not to be denied or limited in the absence of a clear and valid legislative command. Unless a statute in so many words or by a necessary and inescapable inference restricts a court's jurisdiction in equity, the full scope of that jurisdiction is to be recognized and applied. The great principles of equity, securing complete justice, should not be yielded to light inferences or doubtful conclusions.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > Relief

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

HN5 Equity, Relief

When Congress entrusts to an equity court the enforcement of prohibitions contained in a regulatory enactment, it must be taken to have acted cognizant of the historic power of equity to provide complete relief in light of the statutory purposes. There is inherent in the courts of equity a jurisdiction to give effect to the policy of the legislature.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Purchasers

Antitrust plaintiffs do not have standing to seek relief for purchases from non-conspirators. The umbrella theory is rejected for three reasons. First, ascertaining damages under such a theory would be "highly conjectural", as the court would need to estimate what portion of the non-conspirators' price increases was attributable to market forces and what portion was fueled by the defendants' anti-competitive conduct. Second, determining the effect of defendants' overcharges upon their competitors' prices would transform the litigation into the sort of complex economic proceeding that Illinois Brick counseled courts to avoid. Finally, permitting a purchaser from a competitor of the defendants to sue the defendants for treble damages is incompatible with the antitrust goal of maintaining a competitive economy. Purchasers from competitors of price-fixing defendants may not seek damages under an umbrella theory of liability.

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *25L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Purchasers

Claims based on umbrella liability are unacceptably speculative and complex. Any attempt to ascertain with reasonable probability whether non-conspirators' prices resulted from defendants' purported price-fixing conspiracy or from numerous other considerations would be necessarily speculative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN8 [down] Private Actions, Purchasers

A wide range of factors influence a company's pricing policies. Normally the impact of a single change in the relevant conditions cannot be measured until after the fact; indeed a businessman may be unable to state whether, had one fact been different he would have chosen a different price. A judicial inquiry into these factors would greatly complicate and reduce the effectiveness of already protracted treble-damages proceedings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN9 [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity. 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN10 [down] Remedies, Damages

While restitution is indeed an equitable remedy, § 16 of the Clayton Act limits the equitable remedies available under its terms to those against "threatened loss or damage". Recovery for past losses is properly covered under § 4; it comes under the head of "damages". Section 16 does not allow the claimed relief for past loss.

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *25L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN11[Remedies, Injunctions

Divestiture is a form of injunctive relief within the meaning of § 16 of the Clayton Act. The literal text of § 16 is plainly sufficient to authorize injunctive relief, including an order of divestiture, that will prohibit a defendant's conduct from causing that harm. Divestiture decrees are consistent with § 16's "statutory context" because of § 7's relatively expansive definition of antitrust liability. The remedy is an appropriate means of preventing the harm that a merger might inflict.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN12[Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

The addition of indirect purchasers to the litany of possible antitrust plaintiffs threatens to mire courts in unduly complicated and speculative damages proceedings, and permitting indirect purchasers to sue creates a serious risk of multiple liability for a defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN13[Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

Under the Clayton Act, private parties, including the states can pursue direct purchaser actions for treble damages under § 4. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. In addition, the states have a cause of action for treble damages under § 4c of the Clayton Act as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15c.

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *25L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN14 [blue icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The Monopolies Act, Alaska Stat. § 45.50.580, states that a court may make additional orders or judgments as may be necessary to restore to a person in interest any money or property that may have been acquired by an act prohibited by Alaska Stat. § 45.50.562 through Alaska Stat. § 45.50.596. Alaska is required to interpret its antitrust statutes consistently with analogous federal law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-310 states that if any person engaged in the manufacture or sale of any article of commerce shall, with the intent and purpose of driving out competition or for the purpose of financially injuring competitors, sell within this state at less than cost of manufacture or production or sell in such a way, or give away, in this state their productions then the person shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy to form or secure a trust or monopoly in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN16 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Colorado Antitrust Act states that the election by the attorney general to seek a civil penalty shall preclude the attorney general from pursuing an action against such person for damages. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-112.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN17 [blue icon] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

Connecticut courts are guided by federal court interpretations of federal antitrust statutes. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-44b.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Private Actions, Standing

The Florida courts have held that an indirect purchaser has standing to bring a suit for damages under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act. Because an intermediate state court in declaring and applying the state law is acting as an organ of the state and its determination, in the absence of more convincing evidence of what the state law is, should be followed by a federal court in deciding a state question.

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *25L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN19 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Iowa Competition law should be interpreted to complement and be harmonized with the applied laws of the United States which have the same or similar purpose as this chapter. Iowa Code 553.2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN20 [blue icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The Monopolies Act applies to restraints of trade or commerce in this state. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122. Louisiana courts have held that federal antitrust law should be used as guidance in interpreting the Monopolies Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Private Actions, Standing

The Louisiana Consumer Protection Act (CPA) provides that an injured person may bring an action individually but not in a representative capacity to recover actual damages. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:1409 \(A\). Only consumers and competitors have standing to sue for damages under the CPA. The term "consumer" only applies to natural persons.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Minnesota's Antitrust Law, Minn. Stat. §§ 325D.49-325D.66 does not expressly authorize restitution and disgorgement and Minn. Stat. § 8.31 \(3\) allows other equitable relief but limits such relief to injunctions and penalties under $ 25,000.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

The administrative rules necessary to the enforcement of Missouri's Merchandising Practices Act (MPA) state that an unfair practice includes any practice which presents a risk of, or causes, substantial injury to consumers. Mo. Code Regs. Ann. tit. 15, § 60-8.020. The MPA also authorizes civil penalties up to $ 1000 per violation. See Mo. Rev. Stat. § 4.07.100.6.

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *25L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN24 [] Private Actions, Remedies

N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-15.1 allows a presiding judge to restore any moneys or property obtained by any defendant as a result of any violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN25 [] Private Actions, Standing

Oklahoma's Antitrust Reform Act does not authorize a suit on behalf of indirect purchasers. See Okl. Stat. tit. 79, § 212.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > General Overview

HN26 [] Private Actions, Standing

The legislative purpose of the Oregon Antitrust Act is that it apply only to intrastate trade or commerce, and to interstate trade or commerce which is primarily of an intrastate nature and over which federal jurisdiction, for whatever reason, has not been exercised by the Federal Trade Commission or the United States Department of Justice. Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.715.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN27 [] Private Actions, Standing

Although the South Carolina Antitrust statute applies only to intrastate conduct, the Unfair Trade Practices Act is not limited to in-state conduct by its own terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN28 [] Private Actions, Standing

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *25L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 1

The Trade Practices Act (TPA) and the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act (TCPA) apply only to violations occurring in intrastate commerce. When the challenged conduct occurs before the products arrive in Tennessee, the conduct is considered interstate in nature and the TPA and TCPA should not apply.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN29 [+] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

Texas is required to follow federal antitrust law, and both state and federal law prohibit damage relief on behalf of indirect purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Remedies > General Overview

HN30 [+] Private Actions, Purchasers

The Illinois Brick decision requires a plaintiff to allege purchases directly from the alleged price-fixing conspiracy between supplier and its Vermont dealers. The Vermont Consumer Fraud Act states that the attorney general may request and the court is authorized to render an order for restituiton of cash or goods on behalf of a consumer. Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 2458 (b)(2).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN31 [+] Private Actions, Purchasers

If direct purchasers decide not to sue, the indirect purchaser is not entirely without a remedy. While a private plaintiff must be injured in his or her business or property in order to bring any suit under Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.080, this requirement does not exist in the section that enables action by the Washington attorney general.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN32 [+] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Article 6 of West Virginia's Consumer Credit and Protection Act states that the legislative purpose of the article is to complement the body of federal law governing unfair competition and unfair, deceptive and fraudulent acts or practices. W.Va. Code §§ 46A-1-102.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN33 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To state a § 2 monopolization claim, a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to establish both (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN34 [blue icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Monopoly power is the power to raise prices well above competitive levels before customers will turn elsewhere.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN35 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Allegations of massive price increases, when combined with anti-competitive conduct such as exclusive licensing agreements, are sufficient to support a claim for unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN36 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Proof of a tacit, as opposed to explicit, understanding is sufficient to show agreement.

Counsel: For Plaintiff(s): Richard A. Feinstein, Esq., Bureau of Competition, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C.

For Mylan, Defendant(s): Steven A. Newborn, Esq., Rogers & Wells, Washington, D.C.

For Cambrex, Profarmaco S.R.L., Defendant(s): Ann M. Ashton, Esq., Jonathan M. Tuttle, Esq., Debevoise & Plimpton, Washington, D.C.

For Gyma Labs, Defendant(s): Peter Dean Isakoff, Esq., Weil, Gotshal & Manges, Washington, D.C.

For U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Defendant(s): Bertram W. Rein, Esq., Wiley, Rein & Fielding, Washington, D.C.

Judges: Thomas F. Hogan, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Thomas F. Hogan

Opinion

[*32] MEMORANDUM OPINION

The above-captioned cases are actions by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and thirty-two States against Mylan Laboratories and other drug companies for various federal and state law antitrust violations. Pending before the Court are defendants' motions to dismiss the complaints in both cases. There are three motions to dismiss pending in FTC v. Mylan and three pending in State of Connecticut v. Mylan. Defendants argue both that plaintiffs have not stated a [2] claim upon which relief can be granted, and that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over certain aspects of the complaints. For the reasons set forth below, defendants' motions will be granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Legal Framework

The first action is brought by the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") under § 13(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 53(a) ("FTC Act"), to secure a permanent injunction and other relief against the defendants. Defendants are Mylan Laboratories, Inc., Cambrex Corporation, Profarmaco S.R.L. and Gyna Laboratories of America, Inc. The FTC alleges that the defendants engaged and are engaging in unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce in violation of § 5(a) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a). The Complaint contains eight counts of unfair competition.¹ The relief sought by the FTC is for the Court to (1) find that the defendants have violated § 5(a) of the FTC Act; (2) permanently enjoin the defendants from engaging in such conduct; (3) rescind the defendants' unlawful licensing arrangements; and (4) order other equitable relief, including [3] the disgorgement of $ 120 million plus interest.

The second case, State of Connecticut v. Mylan Labs, is an action brought by thirty-two states against defendants for violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, as well as various state antitrust laws. Plaintiffs bring the action as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons; on behalf of their state's general economies in their sovereign capacities; and as injured purchasers or as reimbursers under state Medicaid and other programs. The defendants are the same as in FTC v. Mylan Labs, except that the State complaint names [4] an additional defendant, SST Corporation. The substantive allegations contained in the State complaint are identical to those in the FTC complaint, except that the State complaint contains an additional ninth count alleging that Mylan and SST entered into an illegal price-fixing agreement. As relief, the States are requesting that the Court (1) find that the defendants have violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) permanently enjoin the defendants from engaging in such conduct; (3) rescind the defendants' unlawful licensing [*33] arrangements; and (4) award treble damages; (5) award appropriate relief under the state statutes; and (6) order other equitable relief under federal law, including disgorgement and restitution.

The defendants have filed motions to dismiss in both cases.² The six motions are:

1. Defendants' motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6);
2. Defendants' motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint in part pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6);
3. Gyna Corporation's motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6);
4. Defendants' motion to [5] dismiss the States' amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6);

¹ The eight counts are for monopolization, attempted monopolization, conspiracy to monopolize, and unlawful restraint of trade. If proven, these counts constitute violations of HN1 [5] § 5 of the FTC Act, which prohibits "violations of the Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts." Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 609, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953).

² In addition, the United States Chamber of Commerce has filed a brief Amicus Curiae supporting defendants' motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6).

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *33L^A 999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 5

5. Defendants' motion to dismiss the States' amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\);
6. Gyna Corporation's motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

After briefly reviewing the factual background of these cases, the Court will address each of defendants' motions.

B. Facts

For purposes of the instant motions to dismiss, the allegations of the complaints are taken as true. The facts below are presented accordingly, and do not constitute factual findings.

These cases concern the generic drug industry. Generic drugs, which are chemically identical versions of branded drugs, cannot be marketed until after the patent on the branded drugs [6] has expired. Firms that manufacture and market generic drugs often specialize in such drugs, although Mylan manufactures both generic and branded drugs. Generic drugs are sold at substantial discounts from the price of branded drugs.

Mylan and other generic drug manufacturers require the approval of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to market a generic product in the United States. For each generic drug, the manufacturer must file an Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) with the FDA to establish that its version of the drug is therapeutically equivalent to the branded drug. FDA approval of an ANDA takes an average of about 18 months..

Typically, the generic manufacturer purchases the Active Pharmaceutical Ingredient (API) from a specialty chemical manufacturer (API Supplier). The generic manufacturer combines the API with inactive filters, binders, colorings and other chemicals to produce a finished product. To sell an API in the United States, the API supplier must file a Drug Master File (DMF) with the FDA. The DMF explains the processes that the API supplier uses to make the API and to test chemical equivalence and bioequivalence to the brand product. To use an API, the [7] generic manufacturer's ANDA must refer to the API supplier's DMF filed with the FDA. More than one drug manufacturer can reference the DMF of the same API supplier. A generic manufacturer that wants or needs to change its API supplier must obtain FDA approval of an ANDA supplement which includes a reference to the new supplier's DMF and test results regarding the generic manufacturer's product using the new API. This process averages about 18 months, though it can take as long as three years.

Lorazepam and clorazepate are two of the approximately 91 generic drugs that Mylan currently manufactures and sells in tablet form. Lorazepam is used to treat anxiety, tension, agitation, insomnia, and [*34] as a preoperative sedative. Doctors issue over 18 million prescriptions a year for lorazepam tablets. Because lorazepam is used to treat chronic conditions and is heavily prescribed for nursing home and hospice patients, lorazepam users tend to stay on the drug for long periods of time. Clorazepate is used to treat anxiety and in adjunct therapy for nicotine and opiate withdrawal. Doctors issue over three million prescriptions a year for clorazepate tablets.

Profarmaco (which is a wholly owned [8] subsidiary of Cambrex) manufactures APIs in Italy. Profarmaco holds DMFs for lorazepam API and clorazepate API, and has supplied such APIs to drug manufacturers in the United States. Foreign firms, like Profarmaco, that supply APIs to the United States typically have distributors in the United States who purchase APIs and resell them to generic drug manufacturers in the United States. Mylan purchases its lorazepam and clorazepate API from Gyna, Profarmaco's U.S. distributor of these products. Several other drug manufacturers have purchased API from SST Corporation, another U.S. distributor of this product.

The plaintiffs in these two cases allege the following anti-competitive conduct on the part of the defendants. Mylan sought from its API suppliers long-term exclusive licenses for the DMFs of certain APIs selected because of limited competition. If Mylan obtained such an exclusive license, no other generic drug manufacturer could use that supplier's API to make the drug in the U.S. Mylan sought exclusive licenses for the DMFs for lorazepam API and clorazapate API as well as one other drug not the subject of these lawsuits.

Mylan entered into contracts with Profarmaco and Gyna such [9] that these companies would license exclusively to Mylan for 10 years. The exclusive licenses would provide Mylan with complete control over Profarmaco's entire supply of lorazepam API and clorazapate API entering the U.S. With complete control of Profarmaco's supply of these products and by refusing to sell to any of its competitors, Mylan would deny its competition access to the most important ingredient for producing lorazepam and clorazapate tablets.

In return for the 10-year exclusive licenses, Mylan offered to pay Cambrex, Profarmaco and Gyma a percentage of gross profits on sales of lorazepam and clorazapate tablets, regardless of who Mylan purchased the API from. Mylan also tried to execute an exclusive licensing arrangement with SST for control of its lorazepam supply. This is significant because Mylan was not authorized by the FDA to sell lorazepam manufactured with SST API (i.e. Mylan's ANDA did not reference SST's DMF). Thus, the States allege that Mylan was entering into a deal for exclusive rights even though it would not have been able to use SST API until after an ANDA Supplement had been completed, which usually takes around 18 months. The plaintiffs' argue that Mylan's [10] attempt to obtain control over SST's supply, when Mylan could not even use SST API, demonstrates the anti-competitive nature of Mylan's actions.

On or around January 12, 1998, Mylan raised its price of clorazepate tablets to State Medicaid programs, wholesalers, retail pharmacy chains and other customers by amounts ranging approximately from 1,900 percent to over 3,200 percent, depending on the size of the bottle and the strength. On March 3, 1998, Mylan raised its price of lorazepam tablets by amounts ranging from approximately 1,900 to 2,600 percent. Shortly thereafter, SST raised the price of lorazepam API by approximately 19,000 percent. SST sold the lorazepam API to Geneva, one of Mylan's competitors, which raised its prices to approximately the price of Mylan's tablets.

The FTC brought its action on December 21, 1998, and filed an amended complaint ("FTC Compl.") on February 9, 1999. Fifteen states, by their respective attorney generals, filed an action under [*35] §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and their respective state statutes against the defendants and SST Corporation on December 22, 1998. These states, together with 17 other states, [11] filed an amended complaint ("State Compl.") on February 8, 1999. As noted above, the substantive allegations are substantially identical to those of the FTC complaint, except that the State complaint alleges that defendants and SST, another distributor of APIs, conspired to raise and stabilize the price of lorazepam API. See State Compl. PP 35, 38, 44, 55-70, 85-88.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Judgment

HN2 Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12, a claim should not be dismissed "unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). In evaluating plaintiffs' complaints, the Court must accept the factual allegations as true and draw reasonable inferences therefrom in favor of plaintiffs. Square D. Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 476 U.S. 409, 411, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 (1986).

B. FTC v. Mylan Labs

1. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Under Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6)

Defendants have moved to dismiss the complaint in the FTC Action because of a lack of subject [12] matter jurisdiction. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1). According to defendants, this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction under § 13(b) of the FTC Act for two reasons: (1) § 13(b) does not authorize the FTC to seek a permanent injunction in an antitrust case such as this one; and (2) § 13(b) does not permit monetary relief such as the disgorgement of profits sought in this case. These claims are addressed in turn.

a. Permanent Injunction

The first issue is whether § 13(b) of the FTC Act permits the FTC to seek a permanent injunction in an antitrust case. Section 13(b) states:

HN3[] Temporary restraining orders; preliminary injunctions

(b) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe-

(1) that any person, partnership or corporation is violating, or is about to violate any provision of law enforced by the Federal Trade Commission, and

(2) that the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or until the order of the Commission made thereon has become final, would be in the interest of the public-

the Commission by any of its attorneys designated [13] by it for such purpose may bring suit in a district court of the United States to enjoin any such act or practice.

Upon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission's likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest, and after notice to the defendant, a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction may be granted without bond: Provided, however, That if a complaint is not filed within such period (not exceeding 20 days) as may be specified by the court after issuance of the temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, the order or injunction shall be dissolved by the court and be of no further force and effect: Provided further, That in proper cases the Commission may seek, and after proper proof, the court may issue, a permanent injunction. Any such suit shall be brought in the district in which such person, partnership, or corporation resides or transacts business....

15 U.S.C. § 53(b). The FTC argues that the final proviso (the "permanent injunction proviso") provides it with the authority [*36] to seek a permanent injunction in antitrust cases. Defendants, on the other [14] hand, contend that this is not a "proper case" within the meaning of the proviso, and that this Court lacks jurisdiction to issue a permanent injunction in an action brought by the FTC.

The FTC's authority to pursue an injunction in antitrust cases was considered by this Court in FTC v. Abbott Laboratories, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18030, [1992-2 Trade Cas.] P 69,996 (D.D.C. 1992) (Gesell, J.) dismissed on other grounds, 853 F. Supp. 526 (D.D.C. 1994). In that case, the Court permitted the FTC to pursue a permanent injunction in an antitrust case and rejected the argument that preliminary relief only was available under § 13(b). *Id.*t 68,833. The Court held that the permanent injunction proviso applies to "any provision of law" enforced by the Commission and then concluded that the antitrust case at issue, involving a price fixing conspiracy, "fell squarely within the jurisdiction of the Commission's law enforcement responsibilities" under § 5 of the FTC Act. Id.

This Court can find no reason to depart from the Abbott Labs holding. Defendants attempt to distinguish Abbott Labs on the ground that it involved a per se antitrust violation (i.e. a price fixing agreement), [15] instead of a "rule of reason" antitrust violation, but this argument is unconvincing. Although the permanent injunction proviso speaks of "proper cases," there is nothing in the statute, regulations or case law restricting the statutory term "proper cases" to per se violations of the antitrust laws. Indeed, several courts have explicitly rejected such narrowing constructions. See, e.g., FTC v. Evans Products Company, 775 F.2d 1084, 1087 (9 Cir. 1985) (holding that the FTC may proceed under § 13(b) for any violation of a statute administered by the FTC); FTC v. H.N. Singer, 668 F.2d 1107, 1111 (9 Cir. 1982) (stating that "the district court has the power to issue a permanent injunction to enjoin acts or practices that violate the law enforced by the Commission."); FTC v. Virginia Homes Mfg. Corp., 509 F. Supp. 51, 54 (D. Md.) aff'd, 661 F.2d 920 (4 Cir. 1981). Accordingly, this Court finds that the permanent injunction proviso may be used to enjoin violations of "any provision of law" enforced by the FTC. 15 U.S.C. § 53(b)(1). Because § 5 of the FTC Act is a "provision of law" [*16] enforced by the Federal Trade Commission," § 13(b) allows this Court to issue a permanent injunction. Defendants' motion is therefore denied on this issue. | | |

b. Monetary Relief

The second issue is whether the FTC may pursue monetary relief in this action. In addition to an injunction prohibiting defendants' conduct and rescission of defendants' unlawful licensing arrangements, the FTC asks this Court to "order other equitable relief, including the disgorgement of $ 120 million plus interest." FTC Compl. at 22, P 4. Defendants object to the FTC's request on the ground that § 13(b) does not authorize disgorgement or any other form of monetary relief.

It is true that the plain language of § 13(b) does not authorize the FTC to seek monetary remedies. See 15 U.S.C. § 53\(b\). The FTC argues, however, that monetary relief is a natural extension of the remedial powers authorized under § 13(b). Although courts are generally disinclined to find remedies beyond those that Congress has expressly granted, the equitable jurisdiction of a federal agency such as the FTC must be read in light of the principles articulated in Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395, 90 L. Ed. 1332, 66 S. Ct. 1086 \(1946\). [17] In that case, the Supreme Court upheld the district court's authority to refund the illegal rent overcharges pursuant to § 205(a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, which expressly granted only the power to enjoin illegal practices. The Court wrote:

unless otherwise provided by statute, all the inherent equitable powers of the District Court are available for the proper and complete exercise of that jurisdiction. And since the public interest is involved in a proceeding of this nature, [*37] those equitable powers assume an even broader and more flexible character than when only a private controversy is at stake. HN4[↑] Power is thereby resident in the District Court, in exercising this jurisdiction, "to do equity and to mould each decree to the necessities of the particular case."

Id. at 398 (quoting Hecht Company v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329, 88 L. Ed. 754, 64 S. Ct. 587 \(1944\))(citation omitted). The Porter Court went on to state:

The comprehensiveness of this equitable jurisdiction is not to be denied or limited in the absence of a clear and valid legislative command. Unless a statute in so many words or by a necessary [18] and inescapable inference restricts the court's jurisdiction in equity, the full scope of that jurisdiction is to be recognized and applied. "The great principles of equity, securing complete justice, should not be yielded to light inferences or doubtful conclusions."

Id. (quoting Brown v. Swann, 35 U.S. 497, 10 Peters 497, 9 L. Ed. 508). The Supreme Court affirmed the Porter principle in Mitchell v. DeMario Jewelry, Inc., 361 U.S. 288, 291-92, 4 L. Ed. 2d 323, 80 S. Ct. 332 \(1960\). The Court wrote:

HN5[↑] When Congress entrusts to an equity court the enforcement of prohibitions contained in a regulatory enactment, it must be taken to have acted cognizant of the historic power of equity to provide complete relief in light of the statutory purposes. As this Court long ago recognized, 'there is inherent in the Courts of Equity a jurisdiction to...give effect to the policy of the legislature.' Clark v. Smith, 38 U.S. 195, 13 Peters 195, 203, 10 L. Ed. 123.

Id.

Based on the principle of statutory construction set forth in Porter and reaffirmed in DeMario, five courts of appeals and numerous district courts have permitted the FTC to [19] pursue monetary relief under § 13(b). See FTC v. Febre, 128 F.3d 530, 534 (7 Cir. | 1997); FTC v. Gem Merchandising, 87 F.3d 466, 470 (11 Cir. | 1996); FTC v. Pantron, 33 F.3d 1088, 1102 (9 Cir. | 1994); FTC v. Security Rare Coin, 931 F.2d 1312 (8 Cir. | 1991); FTC v. Southwest Sunsites, Inc., 665 F.2d 711 (5 Cir. | 1982); see also R.A. Walker & Assocs., No. 83-2138, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14114 (D.D.C. July 26, 1991). Although the precise form of monetary relief differs among the cases, compare Security Rare Coin, 931 F.2d at 1316 (restitution) with Southwest Sunsites, 665 F.2d at 718 (asset freeze pending further proceedings), at least one court has upheld the FTC's ability to seek disgorgement in the courts. See Gem Merchandising, 87 F.3d at 470 ("We conclude that section 13(b) permits a district court to order a defendant to disgorge illegally obtained funds"). As defendant cites no relevant case law that prohibits the FTC from seeking disgorgement or any other form of equitable ancillary relief, the Court denies defendants' [20] motion on this issue.

C. State of Connecticut v. Mylan Labs

1. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Under Rules 12\(b\)\(1\) and 12\(b\)\(6\)

This motion seeks to dismiss the State complaint insofar as the complaint asserts improper legal theories and requests for relief. Defendants' claims are that: (1) the States' request for monetary relief based on purchases from suppliers other than Mylan is not authorized under federal antitrust law; (2) the States' request for restitution and/or disgorgement should be dismissed because it is not authorized by Section 16 of the Clayton Act and it conflicts with the detailed scheme of antitrust remedies enacted by Congress, as well as the principles enunciated in Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977); and (3) many of the supplemental state law claims must be dismissed because the state statutes do not permit injunctive and/or monetary relief [*38] under the facts of this case. These claims are considered in turn.

a. "Umbrella Liability"

The State complaint seeks to recover damages not only for direct purchases from Mylan, but also for purchases from Mylan's competitors. See State [21] Compl. P 50. The premise of the States' request is that Mylan's competitors in the generic drug industry, though not parties to the exclusive licenses nor members of the alleged conspiracy, raised their prices as a consequence of Mylan's actions. The States argue that defendants should be liable for the difference between the prices charged by Mylan's competitors and what those prices would have been had Mylan not raised its prices pursuant to an illegal agreement.

The "price umbrella" theory of antitrust liability presented by the States has not been considered by this Circuit or the Supreme Court. Three circuits have addressed this theory. In Mid-West Paper Products Co. v. Continental Group Inc., 596 F.2d 573 (3d Cir. 1979), the Third Circuit held that the HN6[¹] antitrust plaintiffs in that case did not have standing to seek relief for purchases from non-conspirators. The court rejected the umbrella theory for three reasons. First, the court found that ascertaining damages under such a theory would be "highly conjectural," as the court would need to estimate what portion of the non-conspirators' price increases was attributable to market forces and what portion was fueled [22] by the defendants' anti-competitive conduct. Id. at 584-85 ("it cannot readily be said with any degree of economic certitude to what extent, if indeed at all, purchasers from a competitor of the price-fixers have been injured by the illegal overcharge."). Second, the court found that determining the effect of defendants' overcharges upon their competitors' prices would transform the litigation into the sort of complex economic proceeding that the Supreme Court in Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), counseled courts to avoid.³ 596 F.2d at 585. Finally, the court wrote that permitting a purchaser from a competitor of the defendants to sue the defendants for treble damages was incompatible with the antitrust goal of maintaining a competitive economy. Id. at 586. For these reasons, the court held that purchasers from competitors of price-fixing defendants may not seek damages under an umbrella theory of liability.

[23] The Fifth Circuit reached the opposite conclusion regarding umbrella liability in In re Beef Industry Antitrust Litigation, 600 F.2d 1148 (5th Cir. 1979), cert denied, 449 U.S. 905 (1980). The Beef Industry court addressed the umbrella theory in a footnote, which states that an umbrella-type injury (i.e. paying higher prices due to "price following" by non-conspirators) "satisfies the test for proximate causation." Id. at 1166 n.24. Accordingly, the Beef Industry court held that the antitrust plaintiffs in that case had standing to sue the defendants for purchases from non-conspirators.

³ For a complete discussion of Illinois Brick, see infra at 20.

Three years after Mid-West Paper and the beef industry litigation, the Ninth Circuit addressed the umbrella theory in In re Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 691 F.2d 1335 (1982).⁴ [25] The Petroleum Products court rejected the umbrella liability theory for two reasons. First, in the context of the multi-tiered scheme of distribution present in that case, the court was concerned that the umbrella theory would permit double recovery against the defendants for the effects of the same overcharge. Id. at 1340. [24] For example, borrowing from the facts of that case, if a plaintiff purchased gasoline both from Standard Oil and from an independent refiner further along the chain of distribution, the umbrella theory would dictate that Standard Oil is liable to the plaintiff both for its price increase (if the result of an illegal agreement) as well as the price hike instituted by the independent refiner. In addition, however, the independent refiner could sue Standard Oil for its price increase, without reduction for the damages already awarded to the plaintiff.⁵ See id. at 1340. The result would be to make defendants liable twice for the effects of the same overcharge.

The second basis of the Petroleum Products decision was that HN7⁶ claims based on umbrella liability are "unacceptably speculative and complex." 691 F.2d at 1341. Echoing the Midwest Paper decision, the court found that "any attempt to ascertain with reasonable probability whether the non-conspirators' prices resulted from the defendants' purported price-fixing conspiracy or from numerous other considerations" would be necessarily speculative.⁶ Id.

[26] In light of Midwest Paper and Petroleum Products, the Court will grant defendants' motion to dismiss the States' complaint insofar as it seeks umbrella damages. The main difficulty with the umbrella theory is that, even in the context of a single level of distribution, ascertaining the appropriate measure of damages is a highly speculative endeavor. There are numerous pricing variables which this Court would be bound to consider to approximate the correct measure of damages, including the cost of production, marketing strategy, elasticity of demand, and the price of comparable items (i.e. the brand versions of lorazepam and clorazepate). See Gross v. New Balance Athletic Shoe, 955 F. Supp. 242, 246 (S.D.N.Y. 1997). (dismissing umbrella liability claims as "the causal connection between the alleged injury and the conspiracy is attenuated by significant causative factors (i.e. independent pricing decisions of non-conspiring retailers)"). The interaction of these variables is uncertain. As noted in Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 492-93, "[HN8]⁷ a wide range of factors influence a company's pricing policies. Normally the impact of a single change in the [27] relevant conditions cannot be measured until after the fact; indeed a businessman may be unable to state whether, had one fact been different...he would have chosen a different price." A judicial inquiry into these factors "would greatly complicate and reduce the effectiveness of already protracted treble-damages proceedings[.]" Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 732. Accordingly, this Court will decline the States' invitation to consider umbrella damages and dismiss the States' complaint insofar as it requests such relief.

⁴ Of the district courts to consider the issue, at least five courts found it appropriate to hold a defendant liable under an umbrella theory while two other courts have denied such relief. Compare In Re Arizona Dairy Antitrust Litig., 627 F. Supp. 233, 236 (D. Ariz. 1985); In Re Uranium Antitrust Litig., 552 F. Supp. 518, 525 (N.D. Ill. 1982); Pollock v. Citrus Associates of New York, 512 F. Supp. 711 (S.D.N.Y. 1981); In Re Bristol Bay Salmon Fishery Antitrust Litig., 530 F. Supp. 36 (W.D. Wash. 1981); Washington v. American Pipe & Constr. Co., 280 F. Supp. 802 (W.D. Wash. 1968) with In Re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 88 F.R.D. 211 (N.D. Ill. 1980); Gross v. New Balance Shoe, 955 F. Supp. 242 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (denying plaintiffs standing to seek relief from purchases from non-conspirators).

⁵ Although Standard Oil might argue that the independent refiner was not injured by the antitrust violation because the independent refiner passed the price increase along to its customers (such as the plaintiff), this defense was rejected as a matter of law by the Supreme Court in Hanover Shoe v. United Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 494, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968).

⁶ The Petroleum Products court expressly reserved judgment on the application of the umbrella theory to the kind of facts present here. The court wrote: "we need not decide...whether, in a situation involving a single level of distribution, a single class of direct purchasers from non-conspiring competitors of the defendants can assert claims for damages against price-fixing defendants under an umbrella theory." Id. at 1340. Nevertheless, a principle concern of the Petroleum Products court - the speculative nature of umbrella damages - is also applicable to cases involving a single level of distribution.

[*40] b. Restitution/Disgorgement

Defendant's next argument is that the States cannot sue for restitution and disgorgement under § 16 of the Clayton Act. Section 16 states that "HN9" any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief...against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws...when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity." 15 U.S.C. § 26. Defendants argue that restitution and disgorgement are retrospective remedies for past conduct, not relief [\[*28\]](#) against "threatened" conduct.

The sole opinion addressing restitution and/or disgorgement under § 16 is from a 1976 case in the Ninth Circuit, In re Multidistrict Vehicle Air Pollution Litigation, 538 F.2d 231, 233-34 (9th Cir. 1976). In that case, twenty-two states, as well as other plaintiffs, sued four automobile manufacturers for allegedly suppressing the development of automobile antipollution technology and thereby eliminating competition in the research and development of automobile pollution control devices. In addition to an order requiring the automobile manufacturers to "retrofit" all automobiles produced by the defendants that did not have pollution control devices, the plaintiffs sought restitution for those persons who had already paid to have pollution devices installed on their own cars.

The Ninth Circuit upheld the district court's dismissal of the action on the basis that restitution was not an available remedy under § 16 of the Clayton Act. In a somewhat confusing opinion, the court first upheld the district court's dismissal based on the plain language of § 16. The court stated:

HN10 While restitution is indeed an equitable remedy, § [\[*29\]](#) 16 limits the equitable remedies available under its terms to those against "threatened loss or damage." Here, the "reimbursement" would be awarded for the loss which has already occurred, at the time the car owner paid to have his vehicle retrofitted; it would not be relief "against threatened loss or damage." Recovery for past losses is properly covered under § 4; it comes under the head of "damages."

Id. at 234. Following that holding, however, the court questioned the need for its legal conclusion by distinguishing the relief sought by the states from restitution in the "usual" sense. The court went on:

What plaintiffs seek is not "restitution" in the sense in which that term is usually used. Defendants have not received from the car owners any money to which they are not entitled; plaintiffs do not claim that they have. Thus, whether payments which appellants seek for some of their citizens is "equitable" or not is of no consequence because § 16 does not allow the claimed relief for past loss.

Id. This language suggests that a typical restitution or disgorgement scenario might fit within the contours of § 16, such as where plaintiffs [\[*30\]](#) seek to deprive antitrust violators of the benefits of their illegal conduct. Unlike the automobile manufacturers in Multidistrict Vehicle, such defendants have "received...money to which they are not entitled..." Id.

The Supreme Court addressed the remedies available under § 16 in California v. American Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271, 109 L. Ed. 2d 240, 110 S. Ct. 1853 (1990). In that case, the Court considered whether divestiture is a form of injunctive relief authorized by § 16. The case involved a merger between the first and fourth largest supermarkets in California. California sued under § 7 of the Clayton Act, alleging that the merger constituted an anticompetitive acquisition that would harm consumers throughout the State. The district court granted the state a preliminary injunction requiring the defendants to operate the acquired stores separately pending the outcome of the suit. The defendants appealed, contending that the [\[*41\]](#) "indirect divestiture" effected by the preliminary injunction was outside the district court's jurisdiction under § 16 of the Clayton Act. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit agreed with the defendants and reversed the district [\[*31\]](#) court.

On appeal from the Ninth Circuit, the Supreme Court held that HN11 divestiture is a form of injunctive relief within the meaning of § 16. The American Stores Court found that § 16's requirement of "threatened loss or damage" was "unquestionably satisfied" because of the economic harm threatened by the allegedly illegal merger.

Id. at 282. The Court based its holding on the plain language of § 16, finding that "the literal text of § 16 is plainly sufficient to authorize injunctive relief, including an order of divestiture, that will prohibit [defendants'] conduct from causing that harm." Id. at 283. Additionally, the Court reasoned that divestiture decrees are consistent with § 16's "statutory context" because of § 7's "relatively expansive definition of antitrust liability." Id. at 284.

Although American Stores is capable of broad application,⁷ the opinion must be read in light of the nature of the relief ordered by the district court in that case. The divestiture order in American Stores was quintessentially forward-looking: it was designed to prevent the anticompetitive harms of the merger from materializing [32] by dissembling the merged corporation. The Court emphasized the prospective effect of divestiture in concluding that the remedy was an "appropriate means of preventing the harm" that the merger might inflict. Id. at 282.

A second key distinction between the divestiture remedy authorized in American Stores and the disgorgement sought in this action is that divestiture does not implicate the concern for duplicative recoveries articulated [33] by the Supreme Court in Illinois Brick. The Illinois Brick holding that indirect purchasers do not have standing under the Clayton Act rested on two considerations: first, that HN12[⁸] the addition of indirect purchasers to the litany of possible antitrust plaintiffs threatened to mire courts in unduly complicated and speculative damages proceedings; and second, that permitting indirect purchasers to sue creates a "serious risk of multiple liability for defendants." Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730. Although the Court's concern for the complexity of the damages proceeding is not implicated by a disgorgement action, permitting disgorgement does raise the specter of duplicative recoveries. HN13[⁹] Under the Clayton Act, private parties (including the States) can already pursue direct purchaser actions for treble damages under § 4. 15 U.S.C. § 15. In addition, the States have a cause of action for treble damages under § 4c of the Clayton Act as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons. Id. § 15c. Permitting disgorgement under § 16 would provide yet another route to defendants' allegedly ill-gotten gains, and would therefore heighten the possibility [34] that defendants in antitrust actions could be exposed to multiple liability. While disgorgement would have the additional benefit of permitting the States to compensate indirect purchasers who are excluded from recovery under current law, the Supreme Court weighed this interest against the threat of duplicative recovery and determined that only direct purchasers have standing under the Clayton Act. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 741; see also Hawaii v. Standard Oil, 405 U.S. 251, 264, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184, 92 S. Ct. 885 (1972) (expressing unwillingness to "open the door" [*42] to duplicative recoveries"). The States should not be allowed to circumvent Illinois Brick through a novel interpretation of § 16. Accordingly, the Court will grant defendants' motion to dismiss insofar as the States seek disgorgement and/or restitution under § 16.

In light of the Court's ruling on the above issues, the States' federal claims against defendant are narrowed to the following cause of action: the States may sue the defendants under § 4 of the Clayton Act for any direct purchases that state entities or state citizens may have made of generic clorazepate and lorazepam [35] from the defendants.⁸ Defendants contend that the States' Amended Complaint fails to allege direct purchases of generic lorazepam or clorazepate tablets from Mylan, and that none of the persons on whose behalf the States purport to sue made such direct purchases from Mylan. Defendants therefore seek dismissal of the States' complaint under Rule 12(b)(6). Although defendants are correct that the States' case is dependent on facts supporting direct purchases by the States, the States have sufficiently alleged direct purchases for the purposes of a motion to dismiss. See State Compl. PP 7, 38, 40, 47, 50, 51. Accordingly, the Rule 12(b)(6) portion of defendants' motion is denied.

⁷ Most notably, American Stores is ambiguous on whether a court should apply the Porter v. Warner principle equally to actions brought by the federal government and actions brought by private parties. Although American Stores cites caselaw for the proposition that a court's equitable jurisdiction should be read more expansively in actions brought by government agencies, see 495 U.S. at 295, the Court also cites Porter v. Warner in the context of § 16 of the Clayton Act, which supplies a private right of action. Id.

⁸ In addition, all states are entitled to be in federal court to seek injunctive relief pursuant to § 16 of the Clayton Act. The Court notes that the States could also have proceeded under § 4c of the Clayton Act, but elected not to do so. See Oral Argument Transcript at 60.

2. Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Under [Rules \[36\] 12\(b\)\(1\)](#) and 12\(b\)\(6\) - State Law Issues

Finally, there is the issue of whether the States are entitled to the remedies they seek under the state statutes. Defendants argue that the supplemental state law claims should be dismissed to the extent that they fail to meet the requisite standing thresholds or other state law limitations on antitrust suits. Defendants offer six general arguments for why various state law claims must be dismissed. The Court will review those arguments and then address plaintiffs' claims under the individual state statutes.

a. General State Law Issues

i. Interstate Verses Intrastate Violations

Defendants' first argument is that, as a general matter, state law challenges to the interstate conduct alleged here must be dismissed if the state law applies only to intrastate violations of law. On this point, Louisiana, South Carolina, Tennessee and Utah have determined that their state antitrust statutes apply only to violations having solely intrastate impact. This issue requires state-by-state analysis and will be discussed in the individual sections for the five above-mentioned states.

ii. Damages Claims For Direct Purchasers

Defendants' second [\[37\]](#) argument is that, as previously discussed, damages claims for direct purchasers must be dismissed because no state specifically alleges that either it or its citizens made direct purchases of the products at issue from Mylan. This portion of defendants' motion is denied under each state law as well as under federal law as the States have adequately pleaded direct purchases for the purposes of a motion to dismiss. See supra at pp. 21-22. Whether the States have enough facts to support their direct purchase allegations will be determined at summary judgment.

iii. Umbrella Theory Damages Claims

Defendants' third argument is that, as discussed earlier, all damages claims based on the umbrella theory must be dismissed. Because the States do not suggest an independent state law approach to the "umbrella standing" theory and because state statutes refer to federal antitrust law for guidance, this portion of defendants' motion is granted under the state laws for the same reasons that it is granted under federal law. See [supra at I*43\] 13-17](#). Thus, the States' damages claims are dependant on purchases from the defendants and do not involve purchases from third party suppliers or manufacturers.

[38] iv. Damages Claims On Behalf of Indirect Purchasers

Defendants' fourth argument is that damages claims on behalf of indirect purchasers are barred unless the state statute specifically permits recovery for indirect purchasers. Because federal antitrust law bars damages claims by or on behalf of indirect purchasers, see Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061, and because each of the States' statutes and/or case law require or prompt courts to follow federal statutes and decisions when interpreting state antitrust law, unless a state has specifically instituted a right of action for indirect purchasers, that state cannot sue on behalf of indirect purchasers. See, e.g., Boos v. Abbott Labs., 925 F. Supp. 49 \(D. Mass. 1996\); Stifflear v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 931 P.2d 471 \(Colo. Ct. App. 1996\); In Re Wiring Device Antitrust Litig., 498 F. Supp. 79 \(E.D.N.Y. 1980\). The individual state statutes are discussed below.

v. Restitution and/or Disgorgement on Behalf of Direct Purchasers

Defendants' next argument is that the States' claims for restitution or disgorgement should be dismissed [\[39\]](#) unless specifically authorized by state statute. Defendants repeat arguments from their motion to dismiss the States' claims for restitution and disgorgement under § 16 of the Clayton Act. Several of the state statutes, however, are broader than the Clayton Act in this regard. Additionally, many state appellate court decisions have held that their antitrust statutes explicitly provide for restitution or that the concept of equitable relief, provided for in the statutes, includes restitution. Although Defendants state that a "federal court need not be bound by intermediate state appellate court ruling," Def. Mem. at 50 (citing C.A. Wright, Law of Federal Courts, § 58 at 395, n. 23 (5th ed. 1994)), the Court will follow state appellate court decisions on this point. See Fidelity Union Trust Co. v. Field, 311 U.S. 169, 177-78, 85 L. Ed. 109, 61 S. Ct. 176 (1940) ("An intermediate state court in declaring and applying the state law is acting as an organ of the State and its determination,...in the absence of more convincing evidence of what the state law is, should be followed by a federal court in deciding a state question."). Therefore, States with statutes [40] that explicitly provide for restitution or that have been interpreted by state courts as providing such relief; States with statutes that provide for equitable relief and courts that have held the concept of equitable relief to include restitution; and States with statutes that provide, without explicit limitation, for any other equitable relief the court may order, have authority to seek restitution and disgorgement on behalf of direct purchasers under state law.

vi. Restitution and/or Disgorgement on Behalf of Indirect Purchasers

Defendants also argue that even those States with statutes that explicitly authorize equitable monetary relief do not authorize such relief on behalf of indirect purchasers. As discussed elsewhere in this opinion, providing monetary relief to indirect purchasers increases the risk of duplicative recovery. Therefore, restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers will be denied absent express authority for such relief under state law.

vi. Procedural Defects

Defendants contend that California, Colorado, Maine, Michigan and New York have failed to comply with statutory prerequisites to bringing suit. See Def. Mem. at 5 n.5. [41] The Court will not dismiss the States' claims on this basis, but will require that each of these states either comply with the procedures that are required by their individual statutes or submit to [*44] the Court a statement as to why such procedures are not required in the instant case within ten days of the issuance of this Opinion.

b. Individual State Law Claims

The Court will now apply the above discussion to each plaintiff State's state law claims. A summary of the Court's holding appears in the chart attached as Appendix A. Claims brought by the states of Illinois, New Mexico, South Dakota and Wisconsin as well as by the District of Columbia are uncontested. Claims brought by the State of California are contested only as to the issue of defective procedure as discussed above. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has not made any state law claims.

i. Alaska

Defendants challenge Alaska's claim that the Monopolies Act (Alaska Stat. 45.50.580) or the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act (Alaska Stat. 45.50.501) allows the state to bring an action for restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers. Although HN14↑ the Monopolies Act states that "the court may make additional [42] orders or judgments as may be necessary to restore to a person in interest any money or property...that may have been acquired by an act prohibited by AS 45.50.562 through 45.50.596," the statute fails to address the issue of restitution for indirect purchasers. Alaska cites no authority supporting restitution for indirect purchasers in an antitrust case. Moreover, it is required to interpret its antitrust statutes consistently with analogous federal law. See West v. Whitney-Fidalgo Seafoods, Inc., 628 P.2d 10, 14 (Alaska 1981); Alaska Stat. § 45.550.545. As this Court has already determined that federal law does not permit private plaintiffs to sue for restitution, Alaska's claims are dismissed insofar as the state seeks disgorgement and/or restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers. Defendants do not challenge Alaska's claims for civil penalties, restitution on behalf of direct purchasers, attorney fees and costs, or preliminary or permanent injunctions, and the State has withdrawn all damages claims.

ii. Arkansas

All claims brought by Arkansas under Ark. Code Ann. §§ 4-75-301, et seq ("the Antitrust Law") must be dismissed. The only provision Arkansas [43] cites in support of its claims is HN15↑ § 4-75-310, which states that "if any person...engaged in the manufacture or sale of any article of commerce...shall, with the intent and purpose of driving out competition or for the purpose of financially injuring competitors, sell within this state at less than cost of manufacture or production or sell in such a way, or give away, in this state their productions...then the person...shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy to form or secure a trust or monopoly in restraint of trade." The plain language of this section clearly applies to products which are sold for too little (predatory pricing), not to products such as the generic drugs in the instant case which were sold for too much. Additionally, Arkansas fails to allege that defendants have performed "within this state some act directly tending to carry into effect a conspiracy prohibited by [the statute]." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-306. For these two reasons, the Court will dismiss all Arkansas Antitrust Law claims.

The Court will permit the State's restitution and damages claims on behalf of direct purchasers under the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-101 et seq. The ADTPA gives the Attorney General express authority to seek restitution and damages for violations of the section which prohibits "unconscionable, false, or deceptive" acts. There is no support for defendants' argument that the statute does not apply to direct purchasers in this case. As discussed above, damages and restitution for indirect purchasers will be dismissed as there is no express authority for such relief. [\[*45\]](#) Therefore, still standing are the State's claims for civil penalties, injunctive relief, restitution and damages on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

iii. Colorado

Defendants challenge Colorado's claim for both civil penalties and damages, and for restitution and/or disgorgement. Because HN16 the Colorado Antitrust Act plainly states that "the election by the attorney general to seek a civil penalty shall preclude the attorney general from...pursuing an action against such person for damages," Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6-4-112, and because Colorado elects to sue for damages if required to choose one of the above-stated remedies, Colorado's claim for civil penalties will be dismissed. Colorado's claim for restitution and/or disgorgement [\[*45\]](#) on behalf of both direct and indirect purchasers must also be dismissed because those remedies are not expressly authorized by state statute. Remaining claims include damages for direct purchasers, injunctive relief, and attorney fees and costs.

iv. Connecticut

The only disputed issue is whether Connecticut can seek restitution and disgorgement for indirect purchasers. Although the Connecticut Antitrust Act allows for injunctive relief, it does not provide express authority for other equitable relief such as disgorgement or restitution. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-34. Additionally, HN17 Connecticut courts are guided by federal court interpretations of federal antitrust statutes. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-44b. As discussed above, unless there is specific state authorization, States' claims for restitution or disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers must be dismissed. Additionally, Connecticut's claim that the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (the "CUTPA") authorizes the state to obtain restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers is without merit. While the statute does allow for restitution for direct purchasers, it nowhere addresses the issue of such relief for indirect purchasers. [\[*46\]](#) Because there is no state authority supporting the allegation that CUTPA remedies are available to indirect purchasers and because Connecticut antitrust law is guided by analogous federal law discussed above, this claim must be dismissed. Connecticut's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, injunctive relief, restitution on behalf of the State as a direct purchaser, and attorney fees and costs.

v. Florida

Defendants challenge Florida's claims for damages under the Florida Antitrust Act (the "FAA"), damages under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act (the "FDUTPA") and restitution and disgorgement under the FAA or FDUTPA. Florida is seeking damages under the FAA only for direct purchases. As discussed above, the States sufficiently pleaded direct purchases. Thus, Florida's claim for damages is sufficient to survive this motion to dismiss.

The Court will not dismiss Florida's claim seeking damages for indirect purchasers under the FDUTPA. Although allowing such a claim increases the risk of duplicative recovery as discussed above, the Florida Court of Appeals has specifically held that HN18 an indirect purchaser has standing to bring a suit for damages under [\[*47\]](#) the FDUTPA. See Mack v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 673 So. 2d 100 (Fla. 1st Dist. Ct. App. 1996), review dismissed, 689 So. 2d 1068 (Fla. 1997). Because "an intermediate state court in declaring and applying the state law is acting as an organ of the State and its determination,...in the absence of more convincing evidence of what the state law is, should be followed by a federal court in deciding a state question," Fidelity Union Trust Co., 311 U.S. at 178, the Court will deny Defendants' motion to dismiss on this issue.

[*46] On the other hand, Florida's contention that the Florida Antitrust Act or the FDUTPA authorizes restitution or disgorgement will be dismissed. Neither statute expressly authorizes such monetary equitable relief, and, as discussed above, this Court follows the logic of Illinois Brick in denying such additional relief. Claims still standing include civil penalties, injunctive relief, damages for direct and indirect purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

vi. Idaho

The disputed issues include Idaho's claims for recovery on behalf of indirect purchasers under the Idaho Antitrust Law, and for restitution [*48] for indirect purchasers under the Idaho Consumer Protection Act (the "ICPA"). Idaho's claim that it may recover on behalf of indirect purchasers under the Idaho Antitrust Law must be dismissed. Neither the statute nor subsequent case law grants standing to indirect purchasers, and Idaho antitrust law is guided by federal law. See Pope v. Intermountain Gas Co., 103 Idaho 217, 646 P.2d 988 \(Idaho 1982\) (stating that federal antitrust decisions offer persuasive guidance as to the interpretation of all provisions of the Idaho Antitrust Law that are based on federal antitrust statutes). Because there is no express Illinois Brick repealer provision, therefore, Idaho's damages claim on behalf of indirect purchasers must be dismissed.

The Court will not dismiss Idaho's claim that it should be allowed to seek restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers under the ICPA, however. Under Idaho law, great weight is given to the FTC's interpretation of the FTC Act in the construction of the ICPA. See Idaho Code § 48-604\(a\). Because this Court has found that the FTC Act authorizes equitable monetary relief, see supra, at 10-13, the Court will similarly [*49] deny the motion with regard to the ICPA. Thus, Idaho's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, injunctive relief, restitution on behalf of direct and indirect purchasers, damages on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

vii. Iowa

Defendants contest Iowa's claims for actual damages on behalf of indirect purchasers and for restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers. Both claims must be dismissed. HN19 The Iowa Competition law should be interpreted "to complement and be harmonized with the applied laws of the United States which have the same or similar purpose as this chapter." Iowa Code 553.2. Because federal law does not give indirect purchasers standing, as discussed above, absent an explicit statutory grant of authority to the State to sue on behalf of indirect purchasers, these claims must be dismissed. Although the Iowa Competition Law allows the Court to grant equitable relief in an antitrust suit brought by the state or the injured party, it nowhere authorizes the State to seek restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers. Therefore, the Court will follow the reasoning of Illinois Brick and dismiss both [*50] of Iowa's disputed claims. Remaining claims include civil penalties, injunctive relief, damages on behalf of direct purchasers, restitution on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

viii. Kentucky

Defendants challenge Kentucky's allegations that the state may seek relief for indirect purchasers in the form of damages or in the form of restitution and disgorgement. The Court will dismiss both claims. No provision in the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act gives the state express authority to bring such a suit, and state case law is divided on the issue. Kentucky cites one opinion which held that the legislature, in enacting KRS 367.200, intended to grant the State Attorney General authority to seek restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers. See Commonwealth of Kentucky ex. rel. Beshear v. ABAC Pest Control, Inc., 621 S.W.2d 705 [*47] (Ky. App. 1981). Several more recent cases, however, have determined that "the legislature intended that privity of contract exist between the parties in a suit alleging a violation of the Consumer Protection Act." Skilcraft Sheetmetal, Inc. v. Kentucky Machinery, Inc., 836 S.W.2d 907, 909. See also [*51] Kentucky Laborers District Council Health and Welfare Trust Fund v. Hill & Knowlton, Inc., 24 F. Supp. 2d 755 \(W.D. Ky. 1998\); Anderson v. National Sec. Fire and Casualty Co., 870 S.W.2d 432, 436 \(Ky. App. 1993\). Because Kentucky's case law is divided on the issue and because authorizing damages or equitable monetary relief to indirect purchasers would increase the risk of duplicative recovery as discussed above, defendants' motion to dismiss will be granted as to this issue. Kentucky's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, injunctive relief, damages and restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

ix. Louisiana

The disputed issues include whether Louisiana may assert claims under the Louisiana Monopolies Act, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 51:121 et seq., whether indirect purchasers have a right of recovery, whether the State has authority under the Consumer Protection Act (the "CPA") to seek damages on its own behalf, and whether the State has authority to seek restitution and/or disgorgement. HN20 The Monopolies Act applies to "restraint[s] of trade or commerce in this state." La. Rev. Stat. I521 Ann. § 51:122. The language of the statute is ambiguous as to whether the violation of the Act must occur intrastate. Although the issue has arisen, no state court has answered the question. See Free v. Abbott Labs., 739 So. 2d 216, 1999 La. LEXIS 784 (1999) (denying certification on the issue of whether the Monopolies Act applies to interstate commerce). Because state courts are undecided on the issue, the Court will allow the claim to stand for the time being and will reassess this claim at summary judgment or thereafter. Even if Louisiana proceeds with its Monopolies Act claims, however, it may not seek relief on behalf of indirect purchasers under the Act. State courts have held that federal antitrust law should be used as guidance in interpreting the Monopolies Act. See Louisiana Power & Light Co. v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 493 So. 2d 1149, 1158 (La. 1986). Therefore, because federal law does not give indirect purchasers standing, the State's claim for relief on behalf of indirect purchasers under the Monopolies Act will be dismissed. Similarly, the State's claim for equitable monetary relief under the Monopolies Act will be dismissed 53 because no statute or state case expressly authorizes such relief, and the Clayton Act, as discussed above, does not grant equitable monetary relief.

Louisiana's claim for damages on behalf of all direct and indirect purchasers under the CPA will also be dismissed. All claims on behalf of purchasers other than the State will be denied because HN21 the CPA provides that an injured person may "bring an action individually but not in a representative capacity to recover actual damages." La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:1409\(A\). The State's claim for damages on its own behalf under the CPA must also be dismissed because state case law has determined that only consumers and competitors have standing to sue for damages under the CPA, see Orthopedic & Sports Injury Clinic v. Wang Lab., Inc., 922 F.2d 220, 225-26 (5 Cir. 1991), and that the term "consumer" only applies to natural persons. See Shaw Industries v. Brett, 884 F. Supp. 1054, 1057-58 (M.D. La. 1994). Because the State is neither a competitor nor a consumer under the definition provided by state law, its claim for damages on its own behalf under the CPA will be dismissed. The claims still standing include 54 civil penalties, injunctive relief, and attorney fees and costs. |

x. Maine

Maine's claims seeking damages on behalf of indirect purchasers and *48 seeking restitution and disgorgement under its antitrust statute, as well as all claims under the Unfair Trade Practices Act (the "UTPA") must be dismissed. Nothing in Maine's antitrust statute authorizes Maine to bring an antitrust claim on behalf of indirect purchasers. See Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 1, § 1104. In Maine v. M/V Tamano, the court held that the State may recover damages in a representative capacity only when it has a "quasi-sovereign interest" in the suit. See 357 F. Supp. 1097 \(D. Me. 1973\). "Quasi-sovereign interest" is defined as "an interest of the State independent of and behind titles of its citizens, that is...the State must show a direct interest of its own and not merely seek recovery for the benefit of individuals who are the real parties in interest." Because Maine has no quasi-sovereign interest in suing on behalf of indirect purchasers and because doing so would increase the risk of multiple recovery, the Court will grant the motion to dismiss on this issue. Additionally, Maine's claim 55 that its antitrust statute authorizes the State to seek equitable monetary relief is incorrect. The statute allows for equitable injunctive relief, but fails to mention restitution or disgorgement. See Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 10 § 1104. As discussed above, absent express authority from state statutes or case law, restitution and disgorgement are not authorized. Additionally, all claims under the UTPA must be dismissed as the statute does not apply to antitrust claims. See Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 5 § 209. Maine's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, damages on behalf of direct purchasers, injunctive relief, and attorney fees and costs.

xi. Michigan

The Court will deny defendants' motion to dismiss all claims under § 445.903(1)(z) of Michigan's Consumer Protection Act (the "MCPA"), as well as the motion to dismiss Michigan's claim for treble damages. Defendants claim that the MCPA applies only to transactions in which a consumer is charged a grossly excessive price for property or services, and state that "State Medicaid programs, wholesalers, retail pharmacy chains and other customers" are not "consumers" under the plain meaning of the word. See [\[56\]](#) Defendants' Reply at 44. There is no authority, however, for the proposition that such programs and pharmacies that purchased the drugs should not be considered consumers. Defendants' allegation that the MCPA claims should also be dismissed because the drugs were purchased by state agencies and therefore not "primarily for personal, family or household purposes," see Mich. Comp. L. Ann § 445.902(d), is similarly denied. The language of the statute does not indicate whether the above-quoted phrase modifies the way in which the drugs were provided or the drugs themselves. Drugs sold to state medicaid programs or drug stores are not outside the scope of personal, family or household purchases. The Court will also deny defendants' motion to dismiss Michigan's claim for treble damages based on the State's failure to plead that Defendants' violations were flagrant as required by MCLA 445.778(2). The State complaint sufficiently alleges the flagrant nature of defendants' actions. See State Compl. P 38. Restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of direct and indirect purchasers will be allowed under the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act which states that the State as well as directly [\[57\]](#) or indirectly injured purchasers may receive injunctive or "other equitable relief." Mich. Comp. Laws 445.778(1), 445.778(2). Thus, remaining claims include civil penalties, damages on behalf of both the State and indirect purchasers, injunctive relief, restitution and disgorgement on behalf of both direct and indirect purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

xii. Minnesota

Defendants challenge Minnesota's claim for restitution and disgorgement. The Court will grant defendants' motion to dismiss on this issue. The HN22[↑] Antitrust Law [\[*49\]](#) (Minn. Stat. §§ 325D.49-325D.66) does not expressly authorize such relief and Minn. Stat. § 8.31(3) allows "other equitable relief" but limits such relief to injunctions and penalties under $ 25,000. Because Minnesota is guided by federal antitrust law, see State by Humphrey v. Alpine Air, 490 N.W.2d 888 (Minn. Ct. App. 1992), aff'd, 500 N.W.2d 788 (Minn. 1993), which does not allow monetary equitable relief under the Clayton Act, and because Minn. Stat. § 325D.57 states that Minnesota should "take any steps necessary to avoid duplicative recovery," the State may not seek restitution and disgorgement. The claims still [\[58\]](#) standing include civil penalties, damages on behalf of both the State and indirect purchasers, injunctive relief, and attorney fees and costs.

xiii. Missouri

The disputed issues include whether Missouri may seek any remedies under the Merchandising Practices Act (the "MPA"), whether the MPA authorizes damages relief for indirect purchasers, whether the MPA authorizes restitution on behalf of government entities, and whether the State may seek civil penalties. The Court will not dismiss all claims under the MPA at this time. HN23[↑] The administrative rules necessary to the enforcement of the MPA state that an unfair practice includes any practice which "presents a risk of, or causes, substantial injury to consumers." 15 CSR 60-8.020. Because the State complaint sufficiently pleads actions by defendants that present a risk of or cause substantial injury, Missouri is authorized to bring suit under the MPA.

Insofar as Missouri seeks damages relief on behalf of the State or State entities, such claims are authorized under Missouri Antitrust Law, Mo. Stat. Ann. §§ 4.16.011 et seq. The Court will not dismiss Missouri's claims for equitable monetary relief on its own behalf under the MPA [\[59\]](#) because it is not clear that the definition of "persons" in Mo. Stat. Ann. § 4.07.0105 excludes the State; it may be included in the category of "other legal entity." Additionally, as discussed above, the requirement that the goods be purchased "primarily for personal, family or household purposes" does not exclude the State or State entities. Defendants do not contest the State's authority to seek restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers under the MPA in light of Campos v. Ticketmaster Corp., 140 F.3d 1166, 1172 (8 Cir. 1998) (holding that even if indirect purchasers are barred from seeking damages relief, they may still obtain injunctive relief.). The MPA also authorizes civil penalties up to $ 1000 per violation. See Mo. Stat. Ann. § 4.07.100.6. Therefore, the State's claim for such relief will not be dismissed. The | State's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers must be dismissed, however. Neither the Antitrust law nor the MPA provides an Illinois Brick repealer provision; therefore, as discussed above, such relief will be denied. Missouri's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, injunctive relief, damages [60] for direct purchasers, restitution and disgorgement on behalf of direct and indirect purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

xiv. New York

The only disputed issue beyond the procedural defect discussed above is the State's failure to commence the claim in state court. Defendant's motion to dismiss on this issue will be denied. Although the normal procedure for claims brought under New York Executive Law § 63(12) is to apply to the state supreme court, this step would be illogical in the instant case. Federal supplemental jurisdiction is warranted because the facts underlying the federal and state claims are similar enough to create a "common nucleus of operative facts" which would be expected to be tried in one judicial proceeding. See Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 349, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720, 108 S. Ct. 614 (1988). Defendants provide no argument supporting the allegation that [*50] claims brought under § 63(12) should be excepted from this rule. New York's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, damages on behalf of direct and indirect purchasers, injunctive relief, restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of direct and indirect purchasers, [61] and attorney fees and costs.

xv. North Carolina

Defendants' motion to dismiss will be denied as to both of the disputed issues: the State's claims for damages on behalf of indirect purchasers and for equitable monetary relief. Although this Court is dismissing most state claims for damages on behalf of indirect purchasers, North Carolina's state case law expressly authorizes such claims. See Hyde v. Abbott Lab., Inc., 123 N.C. App. 572, 573, 473 S.E.2d 680 (1996). Defendants' motion to dismiss on this issue will therefore be denied.

The Hyde opinion does not address the issue of restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers. Although HN24 [↑] § 75-15.1 allows the presiding judge to restore "any moneys or property...obtained by any defendant" as a result of any violation of the antitrust laws, the statute does not address the issue of restitution for indirect purchasers. North Carolina's claims for restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers are therefore dismissed. Claims still standing include civil penalties, damages on behalf of both direct and indirect purchasers, injunctive relief, restitution and disgorgement on behalf of both direct and indirect [62] purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

xvi. Ohio

The Court will grant defendants' motion to dismiss as to both disputed issues: Ohio's claim for damages on behalf of indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers. Neither Ohio's antitrust legislation nor its relevant case law explicitly authorizes the State to bring suit on behalf of indirect purchasers. Although Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.0, speaks to conduct that is directly or indirectly anticompetitive, it does not provide relief to indirect purchasers. Because no express authority under state law is given, federal antitrust law is used as a guide. Illinois Brick is therefore controlling here, and Ohio's claims on behalf of indirect purchasers must be dismissed. Additionally, because federal antitrust law states that duplicative recovery must be avoided, Ohio also may not seek restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers. Thus, Ohio's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, damages and restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

xii. Oklahoma

Oklahoma's claims will be dismissed insofar as the State purports [63] to bring suit on behalf of indirect purchasers and seeks monetary equitable relief on behalf of indirect purchasers. HN25 [↑] Oklahoma's Antitrust Reform Act does not authorize a suit on behalf of indirect purchasers. See Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 79 § 212. As discussed above, when no state statutory or case law expressly authorizes such relief, federal antitrust law serves as a guide and under federal law, indirect purchasers do not have standing. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730. The

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *50L^A 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 63

State cannot bring the claim under the Consumer Protection Act because that statute fails to apply to indirect purchasers as well. Oklahoma's claim for restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers must also be denied. Nowhere in the antitrust or consumer protection statutes is equitable monetary relief on behalf of indirect purchasers provided for. Thus, Oklahoma's remaining state law claims are for damages on behalf of direct purchasers, restitution on behalf of direct purchasers, injunctive relief, and attorney fees and costs.

xiii. Oregon

The Court will dismiss Oregon's claims under the Oregon Antitrust Act because HN26[[↑]] [*51] the legislative purpose of the statute is that it apply only to "intrastate [64] trade or commerce, and to interstate trade or commerce which is primarily of an intrastate nature and over which federal jurisdiction, for whatever reason, has not been exercised by the Federal Trade Commission or the United States Department of Justice." Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.715. Oregon does not deny that this suit is primarily of an interstate nature or that the FTC, in the parallel action, is exercising federal jurisdiction. Although Oregon cites to witness testimony of legislative purpose, and contends that this provision is not jurisdictional, the plain language of the provision states that the Antitrust Act is not applicable in this case. Therefore, all of Oregon's state law claims are dismissed from this case.

xix. South Carolina

Defendants contest all of South Carolina's claims under the Unfair Trade Practices Act (the "UTPA"), the State's claim that the UTPA authorizes damages on behalf of indirect purchasers, the State's claim that the UTPA authorizes damages for itself, and the State's claim that the UTPA authorizes restitution on behalf of indirect purchasers. Defendants' motion to dismiss will be granted only insofar as South Carolina seeks damages and restitution [65] on behalf of indirect purchasers. The Court will not dismiss all claims under the UTPA at this time. HN27[[↑]] Although the South Carolina Antitrust statute applies only to intrastate conduct, the UTPA "is not limited to in-state conduct by its own terms..." Cheshire v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 758 F. Supp. 1098, 1101 \(D.S.C. 1990\). Defendants cite no authority disputing this point. Defendant's claim that indirect purchasers may not seek damages or restitution will be granted, however. No provision in the statute expressly authorizes such relief and, as discussed above, absent explicit authorization by state statute or case law, such relief will not be granted. The Court will not dismiss the State's claim for damages for its own direct purchases at this time. Although the definition of "person" under the statute does not list the State, the term "any other legal entity" may well apply to the State or state agencies who were direct purchasers of the drugs. Thus, South Carolina's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, damages on behalf of direct purchasers, injunctive relief, restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

[66] xx. Tennessee

The Court will dismiss all claims by Tennessee under HN28[[↑]] the Trade Practices Act (the "TPA") and the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act (the "TCPA") because both statutes apply only to violations occurring in intrastate commerce. See Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S.W. 705 \(1907\). Tennessee contends that in Standard Oil the court ruled that products that are imported into the state and "become commingled with the common mass of property of the state and subject to its laws" are included in the definition of intrastate commerce. 100 S.W. at 711. Because the generic lorazepam and clorazepate tablets manufactured and distributed by defendants eventually came to rest in Tennessee, the State argues that they are part of intrastate commerce. This reading of Standard Oil is overly broad. The challenged conduct as to the product in question in Standard Oil was deemed intrastate because it occurred after the product had been imported, not before as in the instant case. See id. at 711-12. When the challenged conduct occurs before the products arrive in Tennessee, the conduct is considered interstate in nature [67] and the TPA and TCPA should not apply. See Dzik & Dzik, P.C. v. Vision Service Plan, 1989 Tenn. App. LEXIS 25, 1989 WL 3082 \(Tenn. App. 1989\). Because this issue is dispositive as to all claims under the TPA and TCPA, defendants' motion to dismiss will be granted. Therefore, all of Tennessee's state law claims are dismissed from this case.

[*52] xxi. Texas

The only disputed issue under law Texas law is Texas' claim for restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers. Because HN29[↑] Texas is required to follow federal antitrust law, see Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 15.04, and both state and federal law prohibit damage relief on behalf of indirect purchasers, see Abbott Labs., Inc. v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503 \(Tex. 1995\); Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730, Texas' claim for restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers is dismissed. Texas' remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, injunctive relief, restitution and disgorgement on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

xii. Utah

The disputed issues are whether Utah can bring suit under the Unfair Trade Practices Act ("UTPA" or "the Act") and whether the State 68 can bring suit on behalf of indirect purchasers for either damages or equitable monetary relief. Utah's claim for relief under the UTPA must be dismissed because the Act applies only to intrastate conduct. Although the drugs eventually came to rest in Utah, no alleged violation occurred in intrastate commerce. There is no Utah case interpreting the intrastate commerce requirement of the UTPA, and the cases cited by the State are inapposite as they deal with violations which occurred within the state. As discussed above, the violation, not just the end location of the product at issue, must have occurred intrastate for the statute to apply.

Utah's claims for damages on behalf of indirect purchasers and for restitution under its antitrust statute must also be dismissed. No statutory or common law authority specifically addresses the issue of damages for such purchasers or for equitable monetary relief. As discussed above, absent express authorization, such relief will not be granted. Thus, Utah's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, damages on behalf of direct purchasers, injunctive relief, and attorney fees and costs.

xiii. Vermont

The disputed issues include whether 69 Vermont may seek restitutionary and damages relief on behalf of indirect purchasers, and treble damages for its own purchases. Vermont's claim that it may seek equitable monetary relief or damages relief on behalf of indirect purchasers must be dismissed. No provision exists in any state statute expressly allowing indirect purchaser suits. Moreover, in 1980 the court held that HN30[↑] the Illinois Brick decision requires plaintiff to allege purchases directly from the alleged price-fixing conspiracy between [supplier] and its Vermont...dealers." See Vermont v. Densmore Brick Co., 1980 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11581, No. 78-297, 1980 WL 1846 (D. Vt. Apr. 10, 1980). As discussed above, when no express authority exists for damages or monetary equitable claims on behalf of indirect purchasers, such relief is not permitted. Vermont will be permitted to seek restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of the State under the Vermont Consumer Fraud Act, which states that "the attorney general may request and the court is authorized to render...an order for restituiton of cash or goods on behalf of a consumer..." Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 2458\(b\)\(2\). Defendants' claim that the State has not alleged that it is a consumer 70 and therefore may not sue for treble damages is denied. The State sufficiently pleaded that it was a direct purchaser of the drugs in question. Vermont's remaining claims are for civil penalties, damages on behalf of the State as a direct purchaser, injunctive relief, restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of direct purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

xiv. Washington

The only disputed issue is whether the State may sue for restitution and disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers under Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.080 [\[*53\]](#) and in light of Blewett v. Abbott Labs, 86 Wash. App. 782, 938 P.2d 842 \(1997\). Although the State may not seek equitable monetary relief on behalf of indirect purchasers without express authorization, the Washington Court of Appeals stated that "HN31[↑] if direct purchasers decide not to sue, the indirect purchaser is not entirely without a remedy. While a private plaintiff must be 'injured in his or her business or property' in order to bring any suit under the Act, this requirement does not exist in the section that enables action by the attorney general." Id. at 790. Although indirect purchasers can not bring actions for damages 71 under Washington law, Blewett holds that the State may bring restitutionary claims on their behalf. Therefore, defendants' motion to dismiss this claim will be denied. Washington's remaining state law claims are for civil penalties, damages on behalf of direct purchasers, injunctive relief, restitution and/or disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers, and attorney fees and costs.

xv. West Virginia

Defendants challenge West Virginia's ability to bring a claim under chapter 46 of the Consumer Credit and Protection Act (the "CCPA") and to seek restitution under the West Virginia Antitrust Act for direct and indirect purchasers. The Court holds West Virginia may not bring its claim under the CCPA. Although HN32[[↑]] Article 6 of the Act states that the legislative purpose of that article is to "complement the body of federal law governing unfair competition and unfair, deceptive and fraudulent acts or practices," W. Va. Code §§ 46A-1-102, that statement applies only to Article 6, not to the entire chapter. The chapter applies only to consumers who have entered credit arrangements and is inapposite in the instant case.

The Court will also dismiss West Virginia's claim for restitution [72] under the West Virginia Antitrust Act. W. Va. Code §§ 47-18-1 et seq. (1998). Because neither the Act nor state case law expressly authorizes such relief, it is not available for the reasons discussed above. West Virginia's claims for damages for its own purchases and on behalf of indirect consumers still stand. Therefore, remaining claims are for civil penalties, damages on behalf of direct and indirect purchasers, injunctive relief, and attorney fees and costs.

xvi. Conclusion

Defendants' motion to dismiss all claims under state statutes that apply only to intrastate violations of law will be granted in part and denied in part. Claims under statutes applying only to intrastate violations in South Carolina, Tennessee and Utah will be dismissed. The legal sufficiency of claims under Louisiana's Monopoly Act will be determined at summary judgment.⁹ Defendants' motion to dismiss all damages claims for direct purchasers due to inadequate pleading will be denied as the States have sufficiently pleaded direct purchases. Defendants' argument that all damages claims based on the umbrella theory must be dismissed is granted under both federal and state law. Defendants' motion to [73] dismiss damages claims on behalf of indirect purchasers unless expressly permitted by state law is granted; the individual state statutes are discussed above. Defendants' motion to dismiss claims for restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of direct purchasers unless such relief is specifically authorized by state law is granted. The motion to dismiss restitutionary claims on behalf of indirect purchasers unless such relief is expressly authorized for such purchasers under state law is also granted; individual state statutes are discussed above. Finally, Defendants' arguments to dismiss claims based [*54] on specific state statutes are granted in part and denied in part as discussed in the individual state claims section above.

C. Motions Applicable to Both FTC v. Mylan and State of Connecticut v. Mylan

The remaining four motions in these cases actually only amount to two, as nearly [74] identical motions were filed in each case. These motions are considered in turn.

1. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss in Part Under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)

Defendants move to dismiss the complaints in both actions pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\).¹⁰ Defendants assert that the complaints' monopolization counts are defective because the relevant market is not adequately defined and, in any event, the allegations of monopoly power are insufficient. Defendants challenge the restraint of trade counts on the basis that their conduct was not unreasonable because it did not harm competition.

a. Monopolization

HN33[[↑]] To state a Section 2 monopolization claim, a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to establish both "(1) the possession [75] of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 480, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). Mylan alleges that the complaints fail this legal standard in two ways: (1) they fail to sufficiently identify a relevant market; and (2) the complaints fail to allege facts sufficient to show monopoly power.

⁹ The parties are invited to submit supplemental memoranda to the Court regarding Louisiana's state law claims.

¹⁰ Mylan moves to dismiss the monopolization and restraint of trade claims asserted by plaintiffs in both actions. Defendants Cambrex, Profarmaco and Gyna - which are not named in the plaintiffs' monopolization claims - join with Mylan in moving to dismiss the complaints' restraint of trade claims.

On the first issue, the complaints specifically identify four relevant markets: (1) generic lorazepam tablets; (2) generic clorazepate tablets; (3) lorazepam API; and (4) clorazepate API. FTC Compl. P 17. Each of the relevant markets includes only those products approved for sale in the United States. This level of definition is sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss, as it is entirely plausible that plaintiffs will prove a set of facts that supports those market definitions. See Daniel v. American Bd. of Emergency Med., 802 F. Supp. 912, 925-26 (W.D.N.Y. 1992) [76] ("The notice pleading system requires only that the allegations in the complaint give notice as to what markets are being brought into issue."); see also Michael Anthony Jewelers v. Peacock Jewelry, 795 F. Supp. 639, 647 (S.D.N.Y. 1992).

Mylan's second claim is that the Amended Complaint fails to establish the monopoly power element of the monopolization claim. In economic terms, "HN34" monopoly power is the power to raise prices well above competitive levels before customers will turn elsewhere." Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 31 (1st Cir. 1990). The complaints meet this standard by alleging that Mylan instituted massive and successful price increases for lorazepam and clorazepate. Furthermore, the complaints allege that Mylan constricted the supply of generic lorazepam and clorazepate tablets by denying its competitors the APIs to manufacture these products. Like the ability to control prices, this is evidence of monopoly power. See Great Western Directories v. Southwestern Bell Tel., 63 F.3d 1378, 1384 [*55] (5th Cir. 1995). Thus, Mylan's motion is denied on this issue.

b. Unreasonable Restraint of Trade

Defendants [77] assert that the unreasonable restraint of trade counts must be dismissed as plaintiffs have failed to allege any restraint on competition. This claim is easily disposed of, as the HN35 allegations of massive price increases, when combined with anti-competitive conduct such as the exclusive licensing agreements, are sufficient to support a claim for unreasonable restraint of trade. See, e.g., Reiter v. Sonotone, 442 U.S. 330, 342, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931, 99 S. Ct. 2326 (1979) (where petitioner alleges a wrongful deprivation of her money because the price of the hearing aid she bought was artificially inflated by reason of respondents' anticompetitive conduct, she has alleged an injury in her "property" under § 4); Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin v. Marshfield Clinic & Sec. Health Plan of Wisconsin, 65 F.3d 1406, 1415 (7th Cir. 1995) ("a lawful monopolist may charge what it wants") (emphasis added). Defendants motion is therefore denied on this issue.

c. Price-Fixing Count

Defendants' motion to dismiss in State of Connecticut v. Mylan contains one additional argument, which is that this Court should dismiss the ninth count included in [78] the State complaint but omitted from the FTC complaint. This count alleges that Mylan, Cambrex, Profarmaco, Gyma and SST conspired to fix, raise, or stabilize the prices of lorazepam API, a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Defendants Cambrex, Profarmaco and Gyma move to dismiss on the ground that the State complaint fails to allege any facts that show involvement by those defendants in a price-fixing agreement.

The State complaint alleges that Mylan met in Pittsburgh with SST in order to enter an exclusive licensing agreement. The States allege that at this meeting Mylan and SST conspired to raise the price of lorazepam API, thus ensuring a rise in the price of lorazepam tablets. The States further allege that this attempt was made with the full knowledge and consent of Cambrex/Profarmaco and Gyma, who benefitted from the price-fixing agreement through higher profits. See State Compl. P 88.

The allegations in the State complaint are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. The States have alleged the existence of circumstantial evidence suggesting a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. "HN36" Proof of a tacit, as opposed to explicit, understanding [79] is sufficient to show agreement."

Halberstam v. Welch, 227 U.S. App. D.C. 167, 705 F.2d 472, 477 (D.C. Cir. 1983); accord Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. Schumacher and Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1000 (3d Cir, 1994) ("An agreement need not be explicit to result in section 1 liability ..., and may instead be inferred from circumstantial evidence"). Thus, defendants' motion to dismiss this count is denied.

2. Defendant Gyma's Motion to Dismiss Under Rule 12(b)(6)

Gyma has moved to dismiss both complaints insofar as they name Gyma as a defendant. The gist of Gyma's motion to dismiss is that Gyma was not a party to the 10-year exclusive licensing agreements between Profarmaco and Mylan. While plaintiffs concede that Gyma was not a name party to the exclusive licensing agreements, the complaints allege that Gyma materially aided in the creation of the agreements. See FTC Compl. P 21; State Compl. P 35. Specifically, Gyma was present at and participated in the negotiations between Profarmaco and Mylan for the exclusive licenses. Id. Furthermore, Gyma benefitted financially from the existence of the exclusive licenses through its profit sharing agreement with Mylan. [80] See FTC Compl P 26 ("The Gyma-Mylan profit sharing agreements are the quid pro quo for Gyma's aid in furthering the licensing agreements."). These allegations are sufficient to support the complaints' allegations [*56] against Gyma on a motion to dismiss. See Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) (legal standard for restraint of trade is whether plaintiff has "direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'"); Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640, 646-47, 90 L. Ed. 1489, 66 S. Ct. 1180 (1946) ("once any conspirator takes an act in furtherance of the conspiracy...each member of the conspiracy is liable, whether or not they know or approve of each specific act."). Thus, Gyma's motion is denied.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, defendants' motion to dismiss the States Amended Complaint pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) is granted in part and denied in part. All other motions are denied.

An appropriate Order will accompany [81] this Memorandum Opinion.

July 7th, 1999

Thomas F. Hogan

United States District Judge

[*57] Appendix A

Remaining State Law Claims

	Injunctive	Restitution	Restitution	Damages
	Relief	Indirect	Direct	Indirect
		Purch.	Purch.	Purchaser
Alaska	X			X
Arkansas	X			X
CA	X	X		X
Colorado	X
Conn.	X			X
DC	X			X

	Injunctive Relief	Restitution Indirect Purch.	Restitution Direct Purch.	Damages Indirect Purchaser
Florida	X			X
Idaho	X	X		X
Illinois	X	X		X
Iowa	X			X
Kentucky	X			X
Louisiana	X
Maine	X
Michigan	X	X		X
Minnesota	X			X
Missouri	X	X
NM	X	X		X
New York	X	X		X
NC	X	X		X
Ohio	X			X
Oklahoma	X			X
Oregon
SC	X			X
SD	X	X		X
Tennessee
Texas	X			X
Utah	X
Vermont	X			X
Wash	X	X		X
WV	X			X
Wisconsin ¹¹	X	X		X

[82]

	Damages Direct	Civil Penalties	Atty Fee s
Purchaser
Alaska		X	X
Arkansas	X	X	X
CA	X	X	X
Colorado	X		X
Conn.		X	X
DC	X		X

¹¹ Wisconsin also seeks judgment declaring void all contracts or agreements directly or indirectly connected with violations of Wis. Sta. § 133.03, and for all payments which relate directly or indirectly to such contracts or agreements.

	Damages	Civil	Atty
	Direct	Penalties	Fee s
Purchaser
Florida	X	X	X
Idaho	X	X	X
Illinois	X	X	X
Iowa	X	X	X
Kentucky	X	X	X
Louisiana		X	X
Maine	X	X	X
Michigan	X	X	X
Minnesota	X	X	X
Missouri	X	X	X
NM	X	X	X
New York	X	X	X
NC	X	X	X
Ohio	X	X	X
Oklahoma	X		X
Oregon
SC	X	X	X
SD	X	X	X
Tennessee
Texas		X	X
Utah	X	X	X
Vermont	X	X	X
Wash	X	X	X
WV	X	X	X
Wisconsin ¹¹	X	X	X

[*58] ORDER

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion, it is hereby ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(1\) and 12\(b\)\(6\) is DENIED; it is further

ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint in part pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is DENIED; it is further

ORDERED that defendant Gyna Corporation's motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is DENIED; it is further

ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss the States' amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\) and 12\(b\)\(6\) is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART; specifically, the motion is GRANTED insofar as

¹¹ Wisconsin also seeks judgment declaring void all contracts or agreements directly or indirectly connected with violations of Wis. Sta. § 133.03, and for all payments which relate directly or indirectly to such contracts or agreements.

Alaska's claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers is DISMISSED;

Arkansas' claims under the Arkansas Antitrust Law, its claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers, and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

Colorado's claim for civil penalties and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

Connecticut's claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers is DISMISSED;

Florida's claim for restitution and/or [84] disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers is DISMISSED;

Idaho's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers is DISMISSED;

Iowa's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

Kentucky's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

Louisiana's claim for damages relief for direct and indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

Maine's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers, its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers, and all claims under the Maine Unfair Trade Practices Act are DISMISSED;

Minnesota's claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers is DISMISSED;

Missouri's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers is DISMISSED;

[*59] Ohio's claims for damages relief for indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

Oklahoma's [85] claim for damages on behalf of indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement on behalf of indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

All of Oregon's state law claims are DISMISSED;

South Carolina's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers will be DISMISSED;

All of Tennessee's state law claims are DISMISSED;

Texas' claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers is DISMISSED;

Utah's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers, its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers, and all claims under the Utah Unfair Trade Practices Act are DISMISSED;

Vermont's claim for damages relief for indirect purchasers and its claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for indirect purchasers are DISMISSED;

West Virginia's claim for restitution and/or disgorgement for direct and indirect purchasers and all claims under the West Virginia Consumer Credit and Protection Act are DISMISSED.

All other portions of defendants' motion to dismiss the States' amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. [86] 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) are DENIED; it is further

62 F. Supp. 2d 25, *59L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 86

ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss the States' amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is DENIED; it is further

ORDERED that defendant Gyna Corporation's motion to dismiss the FTC's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is DENIED.

SO ORDERED.

Thomas F. Hogan

United States District Judge

July 7th, 1999

End of Document

North Star Steel Co. v. MidAmerican Energy Holdings Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

April 22, 1999, Submitted ; July 7, 1999, Filed

No. 98-2987

Reporter

184 F.3d 732 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15032 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,583

North Star Steel Company, Appellant, v. MidAmerican Energy Holdings Company; MidAmerican Energy Company, Appellees.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied December 6, 1999, Reported at: 1999 U.S. LEXIS 8033.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Iowa. 4:97-cv-80782. Honorable Charles Woole, District Judge.

Disposition: Judgment of district court affirmed.

Core Terms

electricity, generation, district court, retail, territory, electric service, displacing, service area, supervised, customers, Energy, state action, articulated, argues, retail customer, regulations, grant summary judgment, third party, transmission, doctrine of immunity, issue preclusion, material fact, state court, distributed, immunity, wheeling, Steel, prong, pilot program, declaratory

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > De Novo Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Appellate courts review a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Summary judgment is proper if, assuming all reasonable inferences favorable to the non-moving party, there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). Summary judgment is particularly appropriate when the unresolved issues are legal rather than factual.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Full Faith & Credit Statutes

[HN2\[\] Decisions, Collateral Estoppel](#)

Issue preclusion prevents a party to a prior action in which a judgment has been entered from relitigating issues that were raised and resolved in that previous action. Federal courts must give state court judgments the same preclusive effect as would a court of the state in which the judgment was entered.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

[HN3\[\] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel](#)

The Iowa Supreme Court has enunciated four conditions that must be met before applying issue preclusion: (1) the issue decided must be identical; (2) the issue must have been raised and litigated in the prior action; (3) the issue must have been material and relevant to the disposition of the prior action; and (4) the determination made of the issue in the prior action must have been necessary and essential to the resulting judgment. Under Iowa law, issue preclusion may be applied to a trial court's ruling on the merits of an issue despite the pendency of an appeal from that ruling. Moreover, issue preclusion applies to the judgments in declaratory rulings. The Iowa Supreme Court has also ruled that mutuality of parties is not required when issue preclusion is used defensively.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN4 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Application of the state action immunity doctrine is a question of law. The Supreme Court of the United States held that principles of federalism and state sovereignty precluded the application of federal antitrust laws to activity directed by state legislative action. The state action doctrine immunizes a private party from antitrust liability if (1) the private party acts pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to allow the anti-competitive conduct, and (2) the regulatory policy is actively supervised by the state itself. To satisfy the first prong of the Midcal test, the state as sovereign must clearly intend to displace competition in a particular field with a regulatory structure. In contrast, the second prong of the Midcal test serves essentially an evidentiary function to ensure that there is adequate state supervision of the regulatory policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

See Iowa Code § 476.25 (1997).

Counsel: Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellant was Philip L. Chabot, Jr. of Washington, D.C.

Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellee was J.A. Bouknight, Jr. of Washington, D.C.

Judges: Before McMILLIAN, LOKEN and MURPHY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: McMILLIAN

Opinion

[*733] McMILLIAN, Circuit Judge.

North Star Steel Co. (North Star) appeals from a final order of the United States District Court ¹ for the Southern District of Iowa granting summary judgment in favor of MidAmerican Energy Co. and its parent corporation MidAmerican Energy Holdings Co. (collectively referred to as MidAmerican). The district court held as a matter of law that MidAmerican was immune from federal antitrust liability under the state action immunity doctrine. See North Star Steel Co. v. MidAmerican Energy Holdings Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22332, No. 4-97-CV-80782 (S.D. Iowa June 23, 1998) (North Star). For reversal, North Star argues that the district court erred in finding that: (1) Iowa has a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy displacing competition with regulation in the provision of retail electric service; (2) the regulatory policy is actively supervised by the state; and (3) there exists no genuine issue of material fact. For the reasons discussed below, we affirm the [*2] judgment of the district court.

Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction was proper in the district court based upon 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337. Jurisdiction in this court is proper based upon 28 U.S.C. § 1291. The notice of appeal was timely filed pursuant to Fed R. App. P. 4(a).

[*734] Background

¹ The Honorable Charles R. Wolle, Chief Judge, United States District Court for the Southern District of Iowa.

Although the parties basically agree on the relevant facts, they strongly dispute the nature and characteristics of the electric power industry. North Star, a wholly owned subsidiary of Cargill, Inc., operates a steel mill located near Wilton, Iowa. North Star uses a significant amount of electric energy to melt, refine, and shape scrap steel at its Wilton facility. The mill has a peak electric load of 48 megawatts.

MidAmerican is the largest electric utility in Iowa. In fact, MidAmerican owns the only transmission lines capable of supplying the North Star plant, which is located in the area designated under [\[3\] Iowa Code §§ 476.22-26](#) (1997) as the exclusive electric service territory of MidAmerican. The company purchases, generates, transmits, and sells electric energy in significant portions of Iowa as well as in several neighboring states. MidAmerican generates approximately 75% of the electricity sold in its exclusive service area, while it purchases the remaining 25% from third party generators. All of the electric energy, however, is sold by MidAmerican under its own "brand name."

In 1979, the Iowa General Assembly enacted legislation authorizing the Iowa Utilities Board (Board) to establish exclusive service territories in which specific electric utilities would provide the sole means of service to customers. See IOWA CODE § 476.25 (1997). The legislature found it "in the public interest to encourage the development of co-ordinated statewide electric service at retail, to eliminate or avoid unnecessary duplication of electric utility facilities, and to promote economical, efficient, and adequate electric service to the public." Id. The Board implemented this legislation by promulgating regulations, beginning in June of 1979. See Establishment of Exclusive Service Areas [\[4\]](#) for Electric Utilities by the Iowa State Commerce Comm'n, Docket No. RMU78-11 (I.C.C. June 29, 1979) (Order Adopting Rules).² In doing so, the state effectively replaced the prior system under which utilities had competed for customers with one in which designated utilities have exclusive service territories.

Even under this regulatory framework, North Star sought to purchase competitively-priced electric energy. North Star, while recognizing MidAmerican as the exclusive distributor of electricity in its territory, wanted either to purchase directly power produced by a third party generator or to have MidAmerican itself purchase power from a third party expressly for transmission to North Star's mill. Under either "retail wheeling"³ scenario, MidAmerican would remain the sole distributor of electricity to North Star but would not be transmitting power that it had itself generated. MidAmerican rejected [\[5\]](#) North Star's request. North Star brought the present action in federal district court claiming violations of the Sherman Act and Clayton Act by MidAmerican. North Star alleged that MidAmerican violated federal antitrust laws by refusing to allow it access over the transmission lines to alternate sources of electricity, thus preventing North Star from purchasing competitively-priced electricity for its steel mill. North Star alleged that MidAmerican's refusal to allow North Star access to alternate sources of electricity constituted a refusal to deal, monopolization, and an illegal tie-in.

[\[6\]](#) MidAmerican filed a motion to dismiss which later became a motion for summary [\[*735\]](#) judgment.⁴ However, before the district court ruled on the motion, MidAmerican requested a declaratory ruling from the Board. MidAmerican presented the Board with questions related to MidAmerican's rights and obligations pursuant to the Iowa Code provisions concerning the supply of retail electric service.⁵ The Board held that "Iowa's exclusive

² The Iowa State Commerce Commission is the administrative predecessor to the Iowa Utilities Board.

³ "Retail wheeling" is defined as "allowing a customer to have access to MidAmerican's transmission and distribution facilities so that a customer can procure electricity from a third party to be delivered through MidAmerican's transmission and distribution facilities." In re MidAmerican Energy Co., Docket No. DRU-98-1, slip op. at 1 (I.U.B. May 29, 1998), aff'd sub nom. North Star Steel Co. v. Iowa Utils. Bd., No. AA3127 (Iowa Dist. Ct. Polk County Jan. 29 1999), appeal docketed, No. 99-342 (Iowa Feb. 25, 1999).

⁴ The district court treated the motion as one for summary judgment since the parties submitted affidavits.

⁵ MidAmerican specifically presented the state with three questions. The first question is particularly relevant to this matter:

Does the Board's assignment of an exclusive service area to MidAmerican, pursuant to Iowa Code §§ 476.22 through 476.26 and related sections, give MidAmerican the exclusive right and responsibility to sell electricity to retail customers within the assigned service area, or are MidAmerican's rights and obligations limited to the transmission and distribution of electricity that may be provided competitively by other sellers to retail customers.

service territory laws apply to the provision of electricity, and the provision of electricity includes generation, distribution, and transmission." In re MidAmerican Energy Co., Docket No. DRU-98-1, slip op. at 5 (I.U.B. May 29, 1998), aff'd sub nom. North Star Steel Co. v. Iowa Utils. Bd., No. AA3127 (Iowa Dist. Ct. Polk County Jan. 29 1999), appeal docketed, No. 99-342 (Iowa Feb. 25, 1999). The Board stated that MidAmerican has a statutory duty to provide electric service to customers in its exclusive service area. See id. at 7. The Board found that the statutes concerning the supply of retail electric service do not distinguish between the distribution, transmission, and generation of electricity. See id. at 6-7. Rather, the IUB interpreted [7] the words "electric service" to include the actual supply of electricity. See id. The Board finally noted that there was no substantive difference between a customer directly buying the electricity generated by a third party or making MidAmerican buy the electricity and then distributing it to the customer. See id. at 8. Thus, the Board decided that both means of retail wheeling would violate MidAmerican's rights under the exclusive service territory state law and regulations.

[8] Less than a month after the Board issued its declaratory ruling, the district court granted summary judgment in favor of MidAmerican. Referring to the Iowa Code provisions concerning retail electric service, the district court found that "Iowa has clearly articulated a state policy to prevent electricity suppliers from competing for retail customers." North Star, slip op. at 4. The district court further found that the Board has actively implemented the regulatory scheme enunciated by the Iowa General Assembly. See id. Having found that MidAmerican had satisfied both requirements for the state action immunity doctrine, the district court held that MidAmerican was accordingly immune from North Star's claim of antitrust violations. See id. at 4-5. The district court further held that there was no genuine issue of material fact and that MidAmerican was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See id. at 3.

The day after the district court granted summary judgment in favor of MidAmerican, North Star filed a petition for judicial review of the Board's declaratory ruling in the Iowa District Court for Polk County.⁶ The state court held that the Board had the authority [9] to issue the declaratory ruling on the questions presented by MidAmerican. See North Star Steel Co. v. Iowa Utils. Bd., slip op. at 8-9. The court affirmed the Board's interpretation of the Iowa statutes, holding that the Iowa state exclusive service territory law and regulations include the generation of electricity. See id. at 8-9.

[*736] The Board subsequently approved a pilot program that allowed MidAmerican to sell electricity it purchased from third party generators directly to retail customers, with MidAmerican providing only transmission and distribution service. See In re MidAmerican Energy Co., Docket No. TF-97-229 (I.U.B. Aug. 21, 1998). The pilot program is unavailable to North Star, however, because the program's 10 megawatt limit per customer makes it uneconomical for large-load customers like [10] North Star. In part based upon these recent developments, North Star appealed the district court's order granting summary judgment.

Discussion

HN1 We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Summary judgment is proper if, assuming all reasonable inferences favorable to the non-moving party, there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); see, e.g., Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249-50, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). Summary judgment is particularly appropriate when the unresolved issues are legal rather than factual. See Crain v. Board of Police Comm'r's, 920 F.2d 1402, 1405-06 (8th Cir. 1990).

North Star first argues that the district court erred in finding that the Iowa statutory provisions concerning assigned exclusive service areas include the generation of electricity. Rather, North Star argues that these regulations apply

Id. Note that North Star proceeded to file comments in opposition to the Petition.

⁶ Under Iowa law, the district court acts in an appellate capacity to correct errors of law by the administrative agency. See Freeland v. Employment Appeal Bd., 492 N.W.2d 193, 196 (Iowa 1992).

only to the distribution of electricity, and not the generation of electricity.⁷ That is, North Star argues [11] that the Iowa General Assembly may have displaced competition in the distribution of electricity, but not the market for the generation of electricity.

North Star further argues that Iowa's exclusive service regulatory scheme was not enacted with the purpose of displacing competition in the market for generating electricity. North Star recognizes that one can infer a displacement of competition in the distribution market by the exclusive service areas because only one utility distributes electricity to each retail customer. However, North Star contends that the same inference cannot be made [12] with respect to the generation of electricity, because the utilities do not necessarily generate all of the electricity they distribute. North Star points out that MidAmerican only generates 75% of the electricity it distributes in its exclusive service area. The other 25% is produced by third party generators and then distributed by MidAmerican to the retail customers. North Star also emphasizes the pilot program supporting retail wheeling as demonstrating that Iowa has not displaced competition in the market for generating electricity. Thus, North Star contends that Iowa does not have a clearly articulated or affirmatively expressed policy concerning the generation of electricity.

North Star also maintains that even if Iowa clearly articulated a policy displacing competition in the generation of electricity, the district court erred in finding that policy to be actively supervised by the state. North Star argues that Iowa does not monitor whether utilities wheel electricity produced by third party generators for the benefit of retail customers. In fact, North Star contends that MidAmerican is able to unilaterally decide whether to even request the Board's approval for such a program. [13] North Star points out that although the Board may regulate the rates MidAmerican charges, the Board exercises no regulatory power with respect [*737] to whose generated power is ultimately distributed to retail customers. Therefore, North Star argues that the state action immunity does not apply because the Board fails to actively supervise MidAmerican's anti-competitive conduct.

Finally, North Star maintains that the district court erred in granting summary judgment because disputed issues of material fact, relating to the nature of the electric industry, have to be resolved before MidAmerican's state action immunity claim can be decided. North Star argues that three distinct markets, including (1) generation, (2) transmission, and (3) distribution, comprise the electric industry. North Star points out that there is conflicting expert evidence in the record concerning the nature of the electric industry. North Star's expert asserted the tripartite view of the electric industry, while MidAmerican's expert maintained that the industry is instead a single regulated monopoly at the retail level.

Before we analyze the applicability of the state action doctrine to the instant case, we must first [14] determine what effect the decision by the state court has on these proceedings. The state court's decision affirming the Board's ruling raises the issue of collateral estoppel, also referred to as issue preclusion. HN2[[↑]] Issue preclusion prevents a party to a prior action in which a judgment has been entered from relitigating issues that were raised and resolved in that previous action. See, e.g., Hunter v. City of Des Moines, 300 N.W.2d 121, 123 (Iowa 1981). Federal courts must give state court judgments the same preclusive effect as would a court of the state in which the judgment was entered, which in this case is Iowa. See Migra v. Warren City School Dist. Bd. of Educ., 465 U.S. 75, 81, 79 L. Ed. 2d 56, 104 S. Ct. 892 (1984) (citing the Federal Full Faith and Credit Statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1738).

HN3[[↑]] The Iowa Supreme Court has enunciated four conditions that must be met before applying issue preclusion: (1) the issue decided must be identical; (2) the issue must have been raised and litigated in the prior action; (3) the issue must have been material and relevant to the disposition of the prior action; and (4) the determination made of the issue in the prior action must have been [15] necessary and essential to the resulting judgment. See, e.g., Brown v. Kassouf, 558 N.W.2d 161, 163 (Iowa 1997) (Kassouf). Under Iowa law, issue preclusion may be applied to a trial court's ruling on the merits of an issue despite the pendency of an appeal from that ruling. See Peterson v. Eitzen, 173 N.W.2d 848, 850 (Iowa 1970) (holding that "the judgment of the trial court is res adjudicata until set aside, modified or reversed"); see also Cochrane v. Cochrane, 124 F.3d 978, 982 (8th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 118 S. Ct. 1044 (1998). Moreover, issue preclusion applies to the judgments in declaratory rulings. See Fournier v. Illinois Casualty Co., 391 N.W.2d 258, 260 (Iowa 1986). The Iowa Supreme Court has also ruled that mutuality of parties is not required when issue preclusion is used defensively.⁸ See Kassouf, 558 N.W.2d at 164.

⁷ North Star argues that there are three vertical markets in the industry, each of which has a different level of competition. These markets are: (1) the generation of electric energy; (2) the transmission of high voltage electric power from the generation plants to substations for conversion to delivery voltages; and (3) the distribution of low voltage electricity to retail customers. See Brief for Appellant at 14.

[16] We hold that, under Iowa law, the prior determination by the state court that the Board's assignment of exclusive service areas includes the generation of electricity collaterally estops this court from re-examining that same issue. The issue was identical in both actions and was properly litigated in the state court. Therefore, for purposes of this case, we will assume that under Iowa law the exclusive [*738] service territory provisions include the generation of electricity for retail sales.

We now consider the district court's determination that the state's exclusive service territory policy satisfied the requirements for state action immunity. HN4[↑] Application of the state action immunity doctrine is a question of law. See, e.g., FTC v. Hospital Bd. of Directors, 38 F.3d 1184, 1187 (11th Cir. 1994). In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943), the Supreme Court held that principles of federalism and state sovereignty precluded the application of federal antitrust laws to activity directed by state legislative action. The "state action doctrine" immunizes a private party from antitrust liability if (1) the private party acts pursuant to a "clearly [17] articulated" and "affirmatively expressed" state policy to allow the anti-competitive conduct, and (2) the regulatory policy is "actively supervised" by the state itself. California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980) (Midcal). To satisfy the first prong of the Midcal test, the state as sovereign must clearly intend to displace competition in a particular field with a regulatory structure. See Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 64, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985). In contrast, the second prong of the Midcal test serves essentially an evidentiary function to ensure that there is adequate state supervision of the regulatory policy. See FTC v. Ticor Title Insurance Co., 504 U.S. 621, 634-35, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992). That is, the second prong ensures that the state exercises sufficient independent judgment and control over the regulated activity and prevents private parties from engaging in unsupervised anti-competitive behavior. See id.

We hold that the district court did not err in finding that Iowa "clearly articulated" [*18] and "affirmatively expressed" a policy displacing competition in the market for retail electric service. The state statute expressly provides that its purpose is to create exclusive service areas which have only one supplier of electricity. See IOWA CODE § 476.25 (1997).⁹ The policy to displace competition in the provision of retail electric service, including the generation of electricity, is unambiguous because the statute has been interpreted to include the generation of electricity. See In re MidAmerican Energy Co., Docket No. DRU-98-1, slip op. at 5. Thus, the exclusive service territory statute is explicit state authorization for displacing competition in both the distribution and generation of retail electric service.

[19] Furthermore, the fact that MidAmerican does not generate all of its own electricity is irrelevant for our purposes because there is still no competition for retail customers under Iowa's regulatory scheme. See id.

⁸The Iowa Supreme Court has found defensive issue preclusion to occur when stranger to the judgment [in the former action], ordinarily the defendant in the second action, relies upon [that] judgment as conclusively establishing in his favor an issue which he must prove as an element of his defense." Brown v. Kassouf, 558 N.W.2d 161, 164 (Iowa 1997).

⁹The statute provides that: HN5[↑]

It is declared to be in the public interest to encourage the development of co-ordinated statewide electric service at retail, to eliminate or avoid unnecessary duplication of electric utility facilities, and to promote economical, efficient, and adequate electric service to the public. In order to effect that public interest, the board may establish service areas within which specified electric utilities shall provide electric service to customers on an exclusive basis.

MidAmerican purchases the other electricity at wholesale, which is an entirely different market from retail.¹⁰ Moreover, the retail wheeling pilot program supports the district court's finding that the state legislature has displaced competition in the electric industry. That program required specific Board approval, which indicates pervasive regulation, and only permits a limited amount of competition in the industry. The pilot program supports the conclusion that there is a clearly articulated policy that does not [*739] generally allow competition for retail customers. We note that this interpretation is consistent with the Eleventh Circuit's decision in Municipal Utilities Bd. v. Alabama Power Co., 934 F.2d 1493, 1502 (11th Cir. 1991). In that case the court found that the Alabama legislature had clearly articulated a policy to displace competition in the retail electric market despite allowing some competition for industrial customers. See id.

[20] The second prong of the Midcal test requires the state to actively supervise its regulatory policy that displaces competition. We hold that the district court did not err in finding that the Board actively supervises the exclusive service territories. Contrary to North Star's argument, the Board does more than regulate rates. See IOWA CODE § 476.8 (1997) (Board is statutorily mandated to ensure that the exclusive service providers supply "reasonably adequate service and facilities" at "reasonable and just" rates). Since establishing the exclusive service areas, the Board has continued to implement the state policy of displacing competition by assigning new customers to exclusive service providers and determining the assigned exclusive service provider in cases of doubt or conflict. Moreover, on numerous occasions the Board has issued administrative decisions applying the exclusive service area statutes to effectuate the policy that provides one retail electric supplier for each customer. See, e.g., Lamda Energy Marketing Co. v. IES Utilities., Inc., Docket No. FCU-96-8 (I.U.B. Aug. 25, 1997). The Board has repeatedly held that violation of the exclusive service territory [21] statutes for the purpose of providing electric service is illegal. See, e.g., Harlan Municipal Utilities v. Nishnabotna Valley Rural Electric Coop., Docket No. SPU-93-16 (I.U.B. July 27, 1994).

Moreover, even less pervasive regulatory regimes have been held to satisfy the active supervision prong under the state action immunity doctrine. For example, Florida law permits utilities to enter into territorial agreements, if they choose, and requires that their agreements be submitted to the Florida Public Service Commission (FPSC) for approval. Unlike Iowa's statutes, however, Florida law does not empower the FPSC to assign exclusive territories without a territorial agreement between the suppliers. Nevertheless, the Eleventh Circuit held that the FPSC's 1965 approval of an agreement between two utilities dividing service areas satisfied the second prong of the Midcal test pursuant to the state's policy of regulating electric service. See Praxair, Inc. v. Florida Power & Light Co., 64 F.3d 609, 613-14 (11th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1190, 134 L. Ed. 2d 781, 116 S. Ct. 1678 (1996). In TEC Cogeneration, Inc. v. Florida Power & Light Co., 76 F.3d 1560 (11th Cir. [22] 1996), modified, 86 F.3d 1028, the Eleventh Circuit specifically upheld a utility's refusal to wheel power for cogenerators in its service territory, under the state action immunity doctrine. The court held that the state satisfied the active supervision requirement because it "played an active and substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy" pursued by the utilities. Id. at 1029.

Finally, North Star argues that the district court erred in granting summary judgment because there were disputed issues of material fact concerning the nature of the electric industry, including the deregulation that has recently taken place. As noted, the Board decided that the electric industry was unitary and the state court affirmed that decision. North Star is collaterally estopped from disputing the nature of the electric industry with respect to Iowa's exclusive service territory statute. Because Iowa has a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy displacing competition in the provision of retail electric service, including generation, and the Board actively supervises that policy, there are no disputed issues of material fact that would preclude judgment [23] as a matter of law in favor of MidAmerican [*740] under the state action immunity doctrine.

Conclusion

¹⁰ In contrast with wholesale purchases, where the consumer buys electricity for the purpose of resale, retail purchases are meant for actual use by the buyer.

For the reasons stated, we hold that the district court did not err in granting summary judgment in favor of MidAmerican. The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

End of Document

Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit

July 7, 1999, Decided

98-1288

Reporter

182 F.3d 1340 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15003 ; 51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1337 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,571

ZENITH ELECTRONICS CORPORATION, Plaintiff, and ELO TOUCHSYSTEMS, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v.
EXZEC, INC., Defendant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: [1] As Corrected July 12, 1999.

Prior History:Appealed from: United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. Judge Blanche M. Manning.

Disposition: AFFIRMED AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

patent, Touch, infringement, bad faith, patent law, patentee, anti trust law, unfair competition, district court, preempted, inequitable conduct, Lanham Act, marketplace, alleges, preemption, decisions, patent infringement, antitrust, federal law, counterclaims, customers, unenforceable, competitor, invalid, tortious interference, manufacture, potential customer, state tort, notice, rights

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN1[] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

A patentee's allegedly false representation of patent infringement is not actionable under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\), but a patentee's allegedly false representation that it is the exclusive source of a certain type of product because of its patent is so actionable.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN2 False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

False patent claims are not the kind of unfair competitive activity at which the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\), is directed. However, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\) does reach a seller who, by exaggerating the scope of a patent, creates a false impression that he is the exclusive source of the product. In other words, the law distinguishes between a patentee's representation that a competitor's product infringes and his representation that the competitor cannot effectively design around the patent. Exclusive-source claims blow a greater chill on competition and are less vital to the patentee's effort to vigorously protect his legitimate interests. The patentee who asserts such claims, therefore is liable for their falsity, regardless of his good faith.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN3 Jurisdiction Over Actions, Exclusive Jurisdiction

The exclusive jurisdiction of the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit over matters arising in whole or in part under the patent laws is not defeated by the fact that the patent claims have been dismissed with prejudice. The path of appeal is determined by the basis of jurisdiction in the district court, and is not controlled by the district court's decision or the substance of issues that are appealed.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4 Legislation, Interpretation

It is a cardinal principle of construction that when there are two acts upon the same subject, the rule is to give effect to both if possible. Unless Congress clearly indicates which of two statutes is to prevail in event of conflict, our responsibility is to interpret and apply them in a way that preserves the purposes of both and fosters harmony between them.

182 F.3d 1340, *1340LÁ1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15003, 1LÁ51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1337, 1337

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\).

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

HN6 [down] Defenses, Inequitable Conduct

As relevant, to show a Lanham Act § 43(a) claim, the plaintiff must allege and ultimately prove: (1) that the defendant made a false or misleading statement of fact in commercial advertising or promotion about the plaintiff's goods or services; (2) that the statement actually deceives or is likely to deceive a substantial segment of the intended audience; (3) that the deception is material in that it is likely to influence purchasing decisions; (4) that the defendant caused the statement to enter interstate commerce; and (5) that the statement results in actual or probable injury to the plaintiff.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

In order to successfully assert a violation of federal law, a party must cite a specific statutory provision that he claims has been violated and prove that violation. The only basis for a federal unfair competition claim is the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > Attorney Fees

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN8 [blue download icon] Inequitable Conduct, Effect of Inequitable Conduct

The established remedy for inequitable conduct is unenforceability of the patent.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Inequitable Conduct, Effect of Inequitable Conduct

A patent procured through inequitable conduct is not invalidated thereby, but the courts refuse to enforce such a patent as a matter of equitable principle.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

Under the patent laws, an infringement notice is closely related to, and often a precursor of, a suit for infringement, because the failure to provide such a notice can limit the damages recoverable in a patent suit. It makes little sense to say that filing a bad faith patent infringement suit does not violate the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\) but sending a bad faith infringement notice prior to suit does.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

HN11 [blue download icon] Inequitable Conduct, Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Though the differences between the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\) and the patent laws may not appear as sharp as those between the patent and antitrust laws, there is a tension. The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has on several occasions recognized that a patentee's statements regarding its patent rights are conditionally privileged under the patent laws, so that such statements are not actionable unless made in bad faith.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN12 [💡] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

A patent owner has the right to enforce its patent, and that includes threatening alleged infringers with suit.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN13 [💡] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

Federal precedent is that communications to possible infringers concerning patent rights is not improper if the patentholder has a good faith belief in the accuracy of the communication.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN14 [💡] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

A patentee must be allowed to make its rights known to a potential infringer so that the latter can determine whether to cease its allegedly infringing activities, negotiate a license if one is offered, or decide to run the risk of liability and/or the imposition of an injunction

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN15 [💡] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

Patents would be of little value if infringers of them could not be notified of the consequences of infringement, or proceeded against in the courts. Such action, considered by itself, cannot be said to be illegal.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN16 [💡] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

It is not an actionable wrong for one in good faith to make plain to whomsoever he will that it is his purpose to insist upon what he believes to be his legal rights, even though he may misconceive what those rights are.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Marking

HN17 [blue document icon] Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

The privileged right of a patentee to notify the public of its patent rights is statutorily rooted in the patent laws at 35 U.S.C.S. § 287, which authorizes patentholders to "give notice to the public" of a patent by marking its patented articles and makes marking or specific notice to the accused infringer a prerequisite to the recovery of damages.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

HN18 [blue document icon] Defenses, Inequitable Conduct

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal circuit concludes that, before a patentee may be held liable under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\), for marketplace activity in support of its patent, and thus be deprived of the right to make statements about potential infringement of its patent, the marketplace activity must have been undertaken in bad faith. This prerequisite is a function of the interaction between 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\) and patent law, and is in addition to the elements required by 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\) itself, as 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\) alone does not require bad faith.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Grounds

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Bad Faith

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN19 [blue document icon] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

Exactly what constitutes bad faith remains to be determined on a case by case basis. Obviously, if the patentee knows that the patent is invalid, unenforceable, or not infringed, yet represents to the marketplace that a competitor is infringing the patent, a clear case of bad faith representations is made out. Furthermore, statements to the effect that a competitor is incapable of designing around the patent are inherently suspect. They are suspect not only because with sufficient effort it is likely that most patents can be designed around, but also because such a statement appears nearly impossible to confirm a priori. For these reasons, the bad faith element may be much easier to satisfy for statements of this type.

Counsel: Vincent L. Johnson, Legal Strategies Group, of Emeryville, California, argued for plaintiff-appellant.

Robert E. Browne, Altheimer and Gray, of Chicago, Illinois, argued for defendant-appellee. With him on the brief was Michael G. Kelber.

Judges: Before PLAGER, Circuit Judge, SKELTON, Senior Circuit Judge, and GAJARSA, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: PLAGER

Opinion

[1338] [*1342] PLAGER, Circuit Judge.

This case raises issues of priorities among conflicting federal laws, as well as federal preemption of state law. Specifically, the questions raised are whether a federal unfair competition claim irreconcilably conflicts with and is therefore barred by federal patent or antitrust law, and whether, under the same or similar circumstances, the federal law preempts state unfair competition claims.

Exzec, Inc. ("Exzec") alleged that Elo Touchsystems, Inc. ("Elo Touch") had made statements to potential customers of Exzec to the effect that Exzec's product infringes certain Elo Touch patents and that Exzec could not manufacture a noninfringing [2] product, and that these statements were false. On the basis of that allegation, Exzec alleged violations by Elo Touch of § 43 of the federal Lanham Act, and of the state's unfair competition laws.

In response to the claims, Elo Touch moved pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) to dismiss the two claims for failure to state a [1339] claim upon which relief can be granted. Elo Touch argued that its activities in support of its patent rights were governed by federal patent law and applicable antitrust rules, and thus the Lanham Act and state unfair competition laws are in effect "preempted." The U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois denied the motion. See Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20762, No. 93-C-5041, 1997 WL 798907 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 24, 1997) (unreported memorandum and order) ("Zenith I"). However, the court agreed to certify its order for immediate appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\). See Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1377, No. 93-C-5041, 1998 LEXIS 13431 WL 59570 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 9, 1998) (unreported memorandum and order) ("Zenith II"). This court granted Elo Touch's petition for permission to appeal the order. [3] See Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 152 F.3d 946, 1998 WL 171429 (Fed. Cir. 1998) (Table; text of unpublished order in Westlaw) ("Zenith III"); 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\)-\(c\)\(1\) \(1994\).

We conclude that Exzec's claims, alleging that Elo Touch's conduct in support of its patent rights violate the Lanham Act and state unfair competition laws, are not absolutely barred by the patent or antitrust laws. This is because the protection otherwise afforded by the patent laws to a patentee's conduct in enforcing its patent may be lost if the patentee acts in bad faith. The question of whether Exzec can prove bad faith by Elo Touch remains for the trial court to determine; on the question presented by the appeal, we affirm the judgment of the district court denying the motion to dismiss the claims.

BACKGROUND

In this action, Zenith Electronics Corporation ("Zenith") and Elo Touch sued Exzec for infringement of patents directed to touch panel systems for computers, i.e., systems that include screens that respond to touching to operate and control a computer. Zenith is the assignee of the patents (the "Zenith patents"), and Elo [4] Touch is its exclusive licensee which has in turn sublicensed the patents.¹ Zenith and Elo Touch alleged that Exzec's competing touch panel system, known as the "SureTouch" system, infringes the patents.

¹ For purposes of this appeal, we consider Elo Touch as the patentholder, as neither the parties nor the district court have suggested that the outcome should depend upon Elo Touch's status as an exclusive licensee.

In response, Exzec brought the two claims at issue here. Specifically, Exzec asserted two counterclaims against Elo Touch for "unfair competition": one under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\), and the other under Illinois common law. In support of its counterclaims, Exzec alleges that Elo Touch knew or should have known that the Zenith patents are limited to touch panels that utilize surface acoustic wave ("SAW") technology, and that Exzec's SureTouch system, utilizing shear technology, does not infringe the Zenith patents. Notwithstanding, according to Exzec, [5] Elo Touch falsely stated to potential customers of Exzec that Exzec's SureTouch system infringes the Zenith patents and that Exzec could not manufacture or sell a noninfringing acoustic touch panel system.

In particular, in paragraph 24 of its second amended pleading, Exzec alleges:

On information and belief, Elo Touch falsely stated to its licensees, which were potential customers of Exzec, that Exzec's shear touch technology infringed Zenith's SAW patents when Elo Touch knew, or should have known, that the scope of the Zenith SAW patents was limited to touch panels which utilized SAW technology. On information and belief, Elo Touch falsely stated to its licensees, which were potential customers of Exzec, that Exzec could not manufacture and/or sell an acoustic touch panel or system which did not infringe Zenith's SAW patents when Elo Touch knew, or should have known, that the scope of the Zenith SAW patents was limited to touch panels which utilized SAW technology.

With specific respect to its § 43(a) counterclaim, Exzec alleges in paragraph 48 of its pleading:

The aforesaid false representations of patent infringement and threats of legal action created and [6] were intended to create confusion, mistake and deception among potential licensees, customers in the trade and to divert prospective licensees and customers of Exzec [and] were made willfully by Zenith and Elo Touch and with the intent to deceive.

And, with specific respect to its state unfair competition claim, Exzec alleges in paragraph 53 of its pleading, "The aforesaid [*1344] bad faith conduct of . . . Elo Touch . . . constitutes unfair competitive acts and trade practices in Illinois and elsewhere."

In response to Exzec's federal Lanham Act § 43(a) claim, Elo Touch argued that "a charge of patent infringement (without more) does not state a claim for unfair competition [1340] under Section 43(a)." Elo Touch cited in support the district court decisions in Chromium Industries, Inc. v. Mirror Polishing & Plating Co., 448 F. Supp. 544 \(N.D. Ill. 1978\), Brandt Consolidated, Inc. v. Agrimar Corp., 801 F. Supp. 164 \(C.D. Ill. 1992\), and Publications International, Ltd. v. Western Publishing Co., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 558, No. 93- C-3074, 1994 WL 23008 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 25, 1994) (unreported memorandum and order).

Together, these decisions stand for the proposition [7] that HN1 [↑] a patentee's allegedly false representation of patent infringement is not actionable under § 43(a), but that a patentee's allegedly false representation that it is the exclusive source of a certain type of product because of its patent is so actionable. This distinction was first drawn in Chromium Industries, 448 F. Supp. at 556-57, and was followed in Brandt Consolidated, 801 F. Supp. at 174, and Western Publishing, 1994 WL 23008, at *1. In Western Publishing, the district court described the distinction as, on the one hand, representations of infringement and, on the other hand, representations that a competitor cannot effectively design around the patent (what the court referred to as "exclusive source" representations):

"HN2 [↑] False patent claims are not the kind of unfair competitive activity at which the Lanham Act is directed." Chromium Industries, Inc. v. Mirror Polishing & Plating Co., Inc., 448 F. Supp. 544, 557 \(N.D. Ill. 1978\). However, § 43(a) does reach a seller who, by exaggerating the scope of a patent, creates a false impression that he is the exclusive source of the product. Id. at 557. [8] In other words, the law distinguishes between a patentee's representation that a competitor's product infringes and his representation that the competitor cannot effectively design around the patent. Exclusive-source claims blow a greater chill on competition and are less vital to the patentee's effort to vigorously protect his legitimate interests. The patentee who asserts such claims, therefore is liable for their falsity, regardless of his good faith.

1994 WL 23008, at *1 (emphasis added).

Contrary to Elo Touch's assertion that these decisions supported dismissal of Exzec's § 43(a) claim because, according to Elo Touch, the claim is based only on infringement representations, the district court concluded that, under these decisions, Exzec's pleading alleges a viable § 43(a) claim. See Zenith I, 1997 WL 798907, at *12. In particular, the court referred to the allegation that Elo Touch had falsely stated to its licensees, which were potential customers of Exzec, that Exzec could not manufacture a device that would not infringe the Zenith patents. See id.

With respect to Exzec's state common law unfair competition claim, Elo Touch [9] argued that in essence the claim is one for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage and that "the privilege of competition" is an affirmative defense to such a claim. Id. at *14. The district court agreed. Id. at *14-15. However, the court determined that Exzec had adequately pled the elements of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. See id. Furthermore, the court determined that Elo Touch could not rely on the defense of "privilege" because the defense is not available to a defendant (with respect to this claim, Elo Touch) that has "acted in bad faith," and Exzec's pleading sufficiently alleges that Elo Touch had acted in bad faith. Id.

After having its motion to dismiss denied, Elo Touch moved for reconsideration. In its motion for reconsideration, Elo Touch argued, inter alia, that the § 43(a) and state unfair competition claims are "pre-empted by Federal Patent and Antitrust Law." Zenith II, 1998 WL 59570, at [*1345] *2-3, 5. Elo Touch based this argument on this court's decision in Pro-Mold and Tool Co. v. Great Lakes Plastics, Inc., 75 F.3d 1568, 37 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1626 (Fed. Cir. 1996), and the [10] unpublished decision of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin in Schreiber Foods, Inc. v. Beatrice Cheese, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22241, No. 97-C-11 (E.D. Wis. Nov. 26, 1997), which relied heavily on our Pro-Mold decision.

The district court denied Elo Touch's motion for reconsideration, reasoning that Exzec's allegations "are distinguishable from those in Schreiber and Pro-Mold." Zenith II, 1998 WL 59570, at *4. The court noted in particular Exzec's allegation that Elo Touch made false representations to potential Exzec customers that Exzec could not manufacture or sell a noninfringing acoustic touch panel system. See id.

The district court also rejected Elo Touch's alternative argument that Exzec's counterclaims are, in the least, "preempted" because of the absence of bad faith. In particular, Elo Touch argued that Exzec's counterclaims are "pre-empted because 'statements concerning a valid patent are not actionable under the Lanham Act or under any other law, at least where such statements are made in good faith.'" Id. at *5. The district court found it unnecessary to decide [1341] whether this is a [11] correct statement of the law because it determined that Exzec's "allegations reflect that Elo Touch employed bad faith." Id.

After addressing Elo Touch's other arguments, which are not relevant here, the district court denied Elo Touch's motion for reconsideration. The court, however, granted Elo Touch's alternative motion to certify its order for immediate appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), which allows such certification when the district court is "of the opinion that [the] order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion." The district court was of the opinion that the "preemption" issue is such a "controlling question of law." In particular, the district court was concerned that Exzec's § 43(a) and state unfair competition claims may be "preempted" by the federal patent or antitrust laws under the rationale of the Pro-Mold or Schreiber decisions:

The rationale in Schreiber, largely based on Pro-Mold, is that a federal or state unfair competition claim based on the assertion of an invalid patent is pre-empted because Patent and Antitrust laws provide an adequate [12] remedy. Here, the unfair competition counterclaims against Elo Touch are based on the allegations that Elo Touch falsely and in bad faith represented to potential customers that ExZEC could not manufacture or design a product around Zenith's patent. It appears that an Antitrust claim could provide a remedy in this case and therefore the rationale in Pro-Mold and Schreiber might be deemed applicable.²

Zenith II, 1998 WL 59570, at *7.

² From the last sentence of this quote it appears that the district court was primarily concerned with a possible conflict with the federal antitrust laws. However, possible conflict with the patent laws was also at issue; indeed, that is Elo Touch's principal argument on appeal. Accordingly, we consider both possible conflicts.

Pursuant to the procedure mandated by 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\), Elo Touch subsequently petitioned us for permission to immediately appeal the district court's decision, and we, in turn, granted the petition. [13] See Zenith III, 1998 WL 171429.

DISCUSSION

I. Overview and Jurisdiction

The issue presented is whether Exzec's counterclaims, alleging anticompetitive conduct by Elo Touch, are "preempted" by the federal patent or antitrust laws. Another way to state the question is: if a patentee informs a competitor's customers that the competitor is an infringer (and implicitly or explicitly that the customer who deals with the competitor may become [*1346] one as well), is the patentee protected from the usual standards for unfair trade practices, imposed by federal and state unfair competition laws, on the theory that the rights accorded a patentee to protect and enforce the patent supersede the usual anticompetition rules? The "rights" accorded a patentee are those understood to be available under patent law, and those defined by court-created limitations on antitrust liability. (We note that Elo Touch attempts to raise several issues in addition to the "controlling question" of "preemption" which prompted the district court to certify its decision for immediate appeal. We do not consider these other issues in this interlocutory appeal; nor, of course, do we foreclose Elo Touch from [14] raising these issues after a final decision on remand, see 28 U.S.C. § 1295\(a\) \(1994\).)

Before considering the merits of this interlocutory appeal, we lay to rest a question regarding our jurisdiction. See Zenith III, 1998 WL 171429. The case comes to us in a somewhat unusual posture. The patent claims and defenses (i.e., the claims and defenses regarding infringement, invalidity, and unenforceability of the Zenith patents) raised by the pleadings are no longer at issue in the case. These claims and defenses have fallen by the wayside as a result of the district court entering a joint stipulation and proposed order by the parties dismissing the patent claims "with prejudice." This occurred prior to the district court's decision on Elo Touch's motion to dismiss Exzec's counterclaims.

This series of events raises the question of whether the appeal on the issue before us is properly lodged in this court, or whether it should have been taken to the regional circuit. We readily conclude that we have jurisdiction over this interlocutory appeal, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1292\(c\)\(1\) and 1295\(a\)\(1\). HN3 Our exclusive jurisdiction [15] over matters arising in whole or in part under the patent laws is not defeated by the fact that the patent claims have been dismissed with prejudice. "The path of appeal is determined by the basis of jurisdiction in the district court, and is not controlled by the district court's decision or the substance of issues that are appealed." Abbott Lab. v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346, 1349-50, 21 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1192, 1195 \(Fed. Cir. 1991\). Because the complaint contained patent infringement claims, [1342] the district court's jurisdiction arose under 28 U.S.C. § 1338\(a\). This established the path of appeal, giving exclusive jurisdiction in this court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1292\(c\)\(1\) and 1295\(a\)\(1\). See Abbott Lab., 952 F.2d at 1349-50, 21 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) at 1195.

Our decision in Gronholz v. Sears, Roebuck and Co., 836 F.2d 515, 5 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1269 \(Fed. Cir. 1987\), is not to the contrary. In Gronholz we held that the dismissal of a patent infringement claim without prejudice operated as an amendment of the complaint, leaving in that case only a trade secrets claim. 836 F.2d at 516, 518, 5 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) at 1269, 1271. [16] Thus the suit, so amended, did not arise under 28 U.S.C. § 1338\(a\). See id. Here, in contrast, the dismissal of the patent infringement, invalidity, and unenforceability claims with prejudice constitutes an adjudication of the claims on the merits, not an amendment of the complaint. See Hartley v. Mentor Corp., 869 F.2d 1469, 1473, 10 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1138, 1141 \(Fed. Cir. 1989\). The jurisdiction of the district court over the cause, and the remaining issues, is undisturbed; the statutes mandate that the appeal resides exclusively in this court.

II. The Lanham Act § 43(a) Claim

We turn first to Elo Touch's argument that Exzec does not have a viable cause of action for unfair trade practices under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act. As already noted, the district court was concerned that this claim may be "preempted" by the patent or antitrust laws. However, preemption is not the issue with respect to the § 43(a) claim. The concept of preemption originates in the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution, and focuses on the conflict between state and federal [*1347] law. See, e.g., United States v. Palumbo Bros., 145 F.3d 850, 862 n.6 (7th Cir. [17]), cert. denied, 142 L. Ed. 2d 310, 119 S. Ct. 375 (1998). Instead, the § 43(a) claim presents the question of a potential conflict between federal statutes--the constitutional issue of preemption is not implicated. See 145 F.3d at 862.

Our task is to determine whether there is a conflict between the applicable federal laws, and if so, to resolve it. This involves the application of traditional principles of statutory construction. The first principle in a case such as this is to give effect to each federal law. Each has equal standing, and equal claim for recognition. HN4 [↑] "It is a cardinal principle of construction that . . . when there are two acts upon the same subject, the rule is to give effect to both if possible." United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198, 84 L. Ed. 181, 60 S. Ct. 182 (1939). Unless Congress clearly indicates which of two statutes is to prevail in event of conflict, our responsibility is to interpret and apply them "in a way that preserves the purposes of both and fosters harmony between them." Vornado Air Circulation Sys., Inc. v. Duracraft Corp., 58 F.3d 1498, 1507 (10th Cir. 1995).

With this [18] principle in mind, we consider whether the availability of a § 43(a) claim here conflicts with the patent or antitrust laws, and if so, how that conflict can be resolved in a manner that permits each law a proper scope. This issue impacts directly on the patent laws, implicating our area of exclusive jurisdiction, as the context involves statements as to the infringement and scope of patents. Accordingly, we decide the question as a matter of this circuit's law. See Midwest Indus., Inc. v. Karavan Trailers, Inc., 175 F.3d 1356, , 50 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1672, 1676 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (holding en banc that Federal Circuit law governs question of whether patent law conflicts with trade dress action under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act or preempts such an action under state law); Pro-Mold, 75 F.3d at 1574, 37 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1631 (declining to defer to regional circuit law on the issue of whether inequitable conduct constitutes unfair competition). For the same reasons, we apply our law in deciding, below, whether, in the present context, Exzec's state unfair competition claim is preempted by the patent or antitrust laws. See id.

A. The nature of the § 43(a) [19] claim

The district court recognized Exzec's § 43(a) claim only with respect to Exzec's allegation that Elo Touch falsely stated to potential Exzec customers that Exzec could not manufacture a noninfringing product. See Zenith II, 1998 WL 59570, at *4. However, in the same paragraph of Exzec's pleading in which this allegation is made (paragraph 24, ante), Exzec also alleges that Elo Touch falsely stated to these same potential customers that Exzec's product infringes the Zenith patents, when, it is alleged, Elo Touch knew or should have known that there is no infringement. To paraphrase, Exzec alleges that Elo Touch made false representations (1) of patent infringement and (2) of Exzec's inability to design around the patents. As we earlier noted, the differences between these two allegations have been thought to be significant to the question before us, and we shall consider each of these allegations in turn.

HN5 [↑] With respect to these allegations, the most relevant portion of § 43(a) provides: 1343

- (1) Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services . . . uses in commerce . . . any . . . false or misleading description of fact, or false or [20] misleading representation of fact, which--
 - ...
 - (B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities,
- shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1) (1994). This portion of § 43(a) provides the basis for what are generally known as "false advertising," [*1348] "trade libel," and "product disparagement" claims. 4 J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 27:10, at 27-19 to 27-20 (4th ed. 1998).

There is substantial agreement among the circuits as to the elements of such claims, though the precise wording used varies. See, e.g., B. Sanfield, Inc. v. Finlay Fine Jewelry Corp., 168 F.3d 967, 971 (7th Cir. 1999); Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1139 (9th Cir. 1997); Seven-Up Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 86 F.3d 1379, 1383 n.3 (5th Cir. 1996); Diti v. Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc., 954 F.2d 869, 872 (3d Cir. 1992); [21] Alpo Petfoods, Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 286 U.S. App. D.C. 192, 913 F.2d 958, 964 (D.C. Cir. 1990); see also 4 McCarthy § 27:24, at 27-39. HN6[↑] As relevant here, the plaintiff (with respect to this claim, Exzec) must allege and ultimately prove: (1) that the defendant (Elo Touch) made a false or misleading statement of fact in commercial advertising or promotion about the plaintiff's goods or services; (2) that the statement actually deceives or is likely to deceive a substantial segment of the intended audience; (3) that the deception is material in that it is likely to influence purchasing decisions; (4) that the defendant caused the statement to enter interstate commerce; and (5) that the statement results in actual or probable injury to the plaintiff. See id. For purposes of this interlocutory appeal, in which we decide whether recognizing Exzec's § 43(a) claim presents a conflict with the patent or antitrust laws, we assume (without deciding) that the conduct alleged here is within the scope of § 43(a), and that Exzec has sufficiently pled the necessary elements for such a claim.³

[22] B. The case law that concerned the district court

We first consider the prior decisions that gave rise to the district court's concerns-our Pro-Mold decision and the unreported district court Schreiber decision. We shall also consider our decision in Concrete Unlimited Inc. v. Cementcraft, Inc., 776 F.2d 1537, 227 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 784 (Fed. Cir. 1985), because Elo Touch argues so strenuously that that decision, like Pro-Mold, indicates that Exzec's § 43(a) claim is not viable.

In Pro-Mold, the patentee ("Pro-Mold") sued another company ("Great Lakes") for patent infringement. Great Lakes counterclaimed for unfair competition, alleging that Pro-Mold "acted in bad faith by filing its lawsuit knowing that the patent was [unenforceable] because of inequitable conduct." Pro-Mold, 75 F.3d at 1571, 37 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1628. This court concluded that the allegations did not give rise to a § 43(a) claim, stating:

The basis for Great Lakes' assertion of unfair competition was inequitable conduct. However, there is no legal basis for a holding that inequitable conduct, or the assertion of a patent procured through inequitable conduct, constitutes [23] unfair competition. HN7[↑] In order to successfully assert a violation of federal law, a party must cite a specific statutory provision that he claims has been violated and prove that violation. Great Lakes has not done so here. The only basis for a federal unfair competition claim is Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1) (1994). That provision prohibits false designations [1344] of origin or false or misleading descriptions of [*1349] goods or services which are likely to cause confusion. Obtaining a patent through inequitable conduct does not violate this statute.

HN8[↑] The established remedy for inequitable conduct is unenforceability of the patent. If a trial court considers that the case is an exceptional one, which is often found when the patent has been improperly procured, attorney fees can be awarded. Moreover, the Supreme Court has held that "enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of § 2 of the Sherman Act provided the other elements necessary to a § 2 case are present." Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 174, 86 S. Ct. 347, 349, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 147 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 404, 406 (1965). [24] Thus, there are adequate remedies to deal with inequitable conduct when it is found. Resort to federal unfair competition law is not one of them.

³ At this stage of the case it appears that neither the parties nor the district court have explicitly analyzed the relevant text of § 43(a), or the required elements of a claim arising therefrom, to determine whether § 43(a) reaches Exzec's allegations. We note in passing, without any assessment of the merits, that several district courts in recent years have recognized particular § 43(a) claims involving marketplace representations of patent infringement. See, e.g., Wicker Group v. Standard Register Co., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20236, 33 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1678, 1680 (E.D. Va. 1994); Minebea Co. v. Papst, 13 F. Supp. 2d 35, 44 (D.D.C. 1998); Laser Diode Array, Inc. v. Paradigm Lasers, Inc., 964 F. Supp. 90, 95, (W.D.N.Y. 1997); Brandt Consol., 801 F. Supp. at 174. We leave it to the parties and the district court to more fully consider whether Exzec's particular allegations in its pleading state the necessary elements of a § 43(a) claim.

Id. at 1575, 37 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1631.

Pro-Mold must be understood in the context of general patent law. HN9 A patent procured through inequitable conduct is not invalidated thereby, but the courts refuse to enforce such a patent as a matter of equitable principle. Pro-Mold tells us that the remedy under federal law available to a defendant who is made the subject of an infringement suit, when the defendant alleges that the suit is based on a patent procured through inequitable conduct in dealing with the Patent Office, is the traditional remedy of having the patent adjudged unenforceable, or perhaps, in appropriate circumstances, holding the patentee liable for an antitrust violation. The remedy for such an insupportable patent suit is not a suit for unfair trade practices under the Lanham Act.

Here, in contrast, Exzec's § 43(a) claim is not premised on a suit by Elo Touch for patent infringement and a defense that the patent is unenforceable for inequitable conduct before the Patent Office. Rather, the counterclaim against Elo 25 Touch is based on alleged marketplace statements, i.e., the alleged Elo Touch statements to potential Exzec customers that Exzec's product is infringing and that Exzec is unable to design around the patents. The gravamen of Exzec's claim is marketplace misconduct, not abuse of the administrative and judicial process.

In the unreported district court Schreiber opinion, cited in the arguments in this case, the district court, based on its view of the import of Pro-Mold, dismissed a § 43(a) claim against a patentee that was based in part on the patentee sending letters to the § 43(a) claimant's customers, accusing the claimant of patent infringement, when allegedly the patentee knew there was no infringement. 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22241, at *3, 17-18. The Schreiber court opined that the above quoted Pro-Mold language applies equally to the filing of a lawsuit and the sending of an infringement notice [to customers of the accused infringer.] Indeed, HN10 under the patent laws, an infringement notice is closely related to, and often a precursor of, a suit for infringement, because the failure to provide such a notice can limit the damages recoverable 26 in a patent suit. 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\)&\(b\)\(5\). It makes little sense to say that filing a bad faith patent infringement suit does not violate the Lanham Act but sending a bad faith infringement notice prior to suit does.

Id. at *18.

The Schreiber court observation, that sending infringement notices to a party's customers can be closely related to a suit for infringement, is correct. The difference, however, is that the initiation of an infringement suit is clearly not covered by the text of § 43(a), while a communication to the customers of the accused infringer, in certain circumstances, may be. We cannot agree with the Schreiber court's conclusion, which fails to adequately take that difference into account.

The statement in Pro-Mold that "there are adequate remedies [in patent law] to deal with inequitable conduct," 75 F.3d at 1574, 37 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) at 1631, does not indicate 1350 that a claim under § 43(a) for marketplace misconduct involving a patent is barred by the patent or antitrust laws. That statement says no more than that Great Lakes was not without a remedy under patent law for the claim it brought; the court was not 27 stating a general principle for determining priority among federal laws.

Indeed, the fact that certain conduct is actionable under one federal law, and, in conjunction with other additional conduct, is also actionable under another federal law, does not, without more, create an impermissible conflict between the federal acts. To the contrary, as previously discussed, the overriding principle for resolving apparent conflicts among federal laws is to give appropriate effect to each.

Nor is Exzec's § 43(a) claim foreclosed by this court's decision in Concrete Unlimited. In that case, Cementcraft, Inc. ("Cementcraft"), in response to being sued for patent infringement, counterclaimed that the patentee ("Concrete Unlimited") "competed" 1345 unfairly by attempting to enforce its patent because it was fraudulently obtained." Concrete Unlimited, 776 F.2d at 1538, 227 U.S.P.Q. \(BNA\) at 785. The district court agreed, holding that Concrete

Unlimited had competed unfairly by enforcing its invalid patent, and awarding $ 150,000 therefor. See id. at 1537, 227 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) at 784. We however disagreed, and reversed the unfair competition judgment, stating (in entirety):

The [28] district court concluded that Concrete Unlimited's actions during the present litigation "may be considered in regard to unfair competition" and that Concrete Unlimited is "guilty of acts of unfair competition by taking business away from the Defendant by threats and infringement actions based on the fraudulently obtained patent." That conclusion, asserted by Cementcraft, effectively means that Concrete Unlimited should not have enforced its patent rights during the course of this litigation because its patent was later held invalid.

The '028 patent carried a presumption of validity into this litigation that placed the burden of persuasion by clear and convincing evidence to the contrary upon the challenger. 35 U.S.C. § 282; SSIH Equipment, S.A. v. United States International Trade Commission, 718 F.2d 365, 375, 218 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 678, 687 (Fed. Cir. 1983). Concrete Unlimited had the right to exclude others from making, using, and selling the invention and to enforce those rights until the '028 patent was held invalid. Concrete Unlimited did only what any patent owner has the right to do to enforce its patent, and that includes threatening alleged [29] infringers with suit. See 35 U.S.C. § 281. Concrete Unlimited's actions in this case were not unfair competition, and we reverse the district court's holding to the contrary.

Id. at 1539, 227 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) at 785.

Thus, Concrete Unlimited, like Pro-Mold, dealt with threats of and actual infringement suits; it did not involve marketplace assertions of infringement and inability to design around. Furthermore, the specific question of the applicability of § 43(a) was not considered; the court merely spoke of "unfair competition" generally. Accordingly, Concrete Unlimited did not address or resolve the question before us.

In sum, neither Pro-Mold nor Concrete Unlimited mandate that Exzec's § 43(a) claim be held barred by the patent or antitrust laws. We note that this conclusion is supported by our recent decisions in Dow Chemical Co. v. Exxon Corp., 139 F.3d 1470, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1120 (Fed. Cir. 1998), and Hunter Douglas, Inc. v. Harmonic Design, Inc., 153 F.3d 1318, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1769 (Fed. Cir. 1998). Those decisions do not address directly the question of whether Exzec's federal unfair competition claim [30] under § 43(a) is barred by the patent or antitrust laws, because the decisions considered whether state unfair competition claims were preempted by the patent laws rather than the issue of conflict among different federal laws. The decisions are, however, analogous because they [*1351] addressed conflict between the patent laws and unfair competition claims premised on a patentee's marketplace conduct, albeit from the perspective of federal preemption of state law.

Significantly, in those decisions we held that the state law claims were not preempted by the patent laws and that our prior decision in Concrete Unlimited was not to the contrary. In particular, in Dow Chemical we held that state unfair competition claims asserted against a patentee for tortious interference with actual and prospective contractual relations were not preempted by the patent laws, despite the fact that the claims relied on proving that the patent was obtained through inequitable conduct. 139 F.3d at 1473, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1123. The court reasoned that the claims are not preempted by the patent law remedy for inequitable conduct--i.e., unenforceability of the patent--because the state law [31] causes of action did not clash with the objectives of the patent laws, and because they included additional elements not found in the patent law remedy. See id. at 1473, 1475, 1477, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1123-26. In reaching this decision, we distinguished Concrete Unlimited on the ground that that case involved "good faith enforcement of a patent," whereas the claims in Dow Chemical were premised on bad faith patent enforcement, the patentee allegedly having known that the patent was unenforceable due to inequitable conduct. Id. at 1476, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1126. We emphasized that the state tort claims at issue were premised on "bad faith misconduct in the marketplace." Id. at 1477, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1126. Bad faith marketplace conduct played a central role in our Hunter Douglas decision as well. In that case we opined that there is no conflict-type preemption of various state law claims based on publicizing an allegedly invalid and unenforceable patent in the marketplace as long as the claimant can show that the patent holder acted in bad faith in publication of the patent. See Hunter Douglas, 153 F.3d at 1336-37, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) at 1782. [1346] [32]

C. The conflict analysis

Since nothing in our prior case law dictates the answer to the question of whether recognizing a § 43(a) claim in the context here would present an irreconcilable conflict with the patent or antitrust laws, we address the issue as a matter of first impression.

1. Antitrust laws

We first turn to the question of whether Exzec's § 43(a) claim may be barred by the federal antitrust laws. In this regard, the district court stated, "It appears that an Antitrust claim could provide a remedy in this case and therefore the rationale in Pro-Mold . . . might be deemed applicable." Zenith II, 1998 WL 59570, at *7. The court appears to be referring to the latter part of the above-quoted passage in Pro-Mold:

The Supreme Court has held that "enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of § 2 of the Sherman Act provided the other elements necessary to a § 2 case are present." Thus, there are adequate remedies to deal with inequitable conduct when it is found. Resort to federal unfair competition law is not one of them.

75 F.3d at 1575, 37 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) at 1631 (citation omitted). The [33] point of this statement is simply that there is in federal law established remedies for infringement suits wrongfully brought, and that this includes, in addition to remedies provided under patent law, remedies within the ambit of the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1068, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1097, 1104 (Fed. Cir.), cert. denied, 142 L. Ed. 2d 145, 119 S. Ct. 178 (1998).

The issue is not whether Exzec has adequate remedies under the antitrust laws. Rather, the question is whether allowing Exzec to pursue a § 43(a) claim under the facts of this case would somehow conflict with the purpose and scope of that body of law. There is no conflict. First, rather [1352] than conflicting, the Lanham Act and the antitrust laws share a common purpose--fostering fair and unfettered competition. See Park 'N Fly, Inc. v. Dollar Park and Fly, Inc., 469 U.S. 189, 198, 83 L. Ed. 2d 582, 105 S. Ct. 658 \(1985\) (noting that Congress enacted the Lanham Act to "foster competition"); Loctite Corp. v. Ultraseal Ltd., 781 F.2d 861, 877, 228 U.S.P.Q. \(BNA\) 90, 101 (Fed. Cir. 1985) ("the underlying goal of the [34] antitrust laws is to promote competition").

Second, the elements of a federal antitrust claim and a § 43(a) claim are substantially different. For example, unlike a § 43(a) claim, a Sherman Act § 2 antitrust claim requires, among other things, identification of the relevant market and establishment of monopoly power in that market. See, e.g., United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\) ("The offense of monopoly power under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."). See also Loctite Corp., 781 F.2d at 875, 228 U.S.P.Q. \(BNA\) at 100 (noting that to establish an illegal attempt to monopolize the claimant must establish a specific intent to monopolize and a dangerous probability of success). We need not belabor the point. Recognizing a § 43(a) claim in the context here will in no way thwart the congressional purpose embodied in the antitrust laws.

2. Patent laws

[35] We turn now to the question of whether Exzec's § 43(a) claim may be barred by the patent laws. That is, we consider the potential conflict between the patent laws and the federal proscription against unfair trade practices contained in the Lanham Act. Our task in this regard is not unlike that which this and other courts encountered in resolving the tension between the federal patent and antitrust laws, when an accused infringer seeks to impose antitrust liability on a patentee in response to the patentee seeking judicial enforcement of the patent. The patent and antitrust laws are complementary in purpose in that they each promote innovation and competition, see Loctite Corp., 781 F.2d at 876-77, 228 U.S.P.Q. \(BNA\) at 100-01, yet a conflict seemingly arises when an accused infringer attempts to use "the long reach of antitrust law" to frustrate an honest patentee's right to enforce a patent. See Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 601 F.2d 986, 996 (9th Cir. 1979).

Decisions in this area have aimed at achieving a suitable accommodation between the differing mechanisms of the patent and antitrust laws. The accommodation has been achieved by erecting certain [36] barriers to antitrust suits against a patentee attempting to enforce its patent. For example, in Handgards the plaintiff based its antitrust action upon its contention that the antitrust defendant had earlier initiated a series of patent infringement suits against the plaintiff in bad faith, that is, with knowledge that the patents, though lawfully-obtained, were invalid. Id. at 987, 994. To accommodate the [1347] tension such an action presented with the patent laws, the Ninth Circuit required proof of bad faith by clear and convincing evidence. See id. at 996. Similarly, for an antitrust counterclaim premised on the patentee allegedly having brought suit on its patent without any belief in infringement, we have required clear and convincing proof of bad faith by the patentee. See Locite Corp., 781 F.2d at 876-77, 228 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) at 100-01. More recently, this court stated that a patentee who brings an infringement suit may be stripped of its exemption from the antitrust laws and "subject to antitrust liability . . . if the alleged infringer (the antitrust plaintiff) proves [among other things] (1) that the asserted patent was obtained through [37] knowing and willful fraud . . . , or (2) that the infringement suit was 'a mere sham' Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1068, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1104.

HN11[[↑]] Though the differences between the Lanham Act and the patent laws may not [*1353] appear as sharp as those between the patent and antitrust laws, there is a tension. We have on several occasions recognized that a patentee's statements regarding its patent rights are conditionally privileged under the patent laws, so that such statements are not actionable unless made in bad faith. In Hunter Douglas we recently stated that "federal patent law bars the imposition of liability for publicizing a patent in the marketplace unless the plaintiff can show that the patentholder acted in bad faith." 153 F.3d at 1336, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1782. Similarly, in Concrete Unlimited we recognized that HN12[[↑]] a "patent owner has the right to . . . enforce its patent, and that includes threatening alleged infringers with suit." 776 F.2d at 1538, 227 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) at 785.

We have made similar statements in a number of other cases. See, e.g., Mikohn Gaming Corp. v. Acres Gaming, Inc., 165 F.3d 891, 897, 49 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1308, 1312 (Fed. Cir. 1998) [38] ("HN13[[↑]] Federal precedent is that communications to possible infringers concerning patent rights is not improper if the patentholder has a good faith belief in the accuracy of the communication."); Virginia Panel Corp. v. MAC Panel Co., 133 F.3d 860, 869, 45 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1225, 1232 (Fed. Cir. 1997) HN14[[↑]] ("[A] patentee must be allowed to make its rights known to a potential infringer so that the latter can determine whether to cease its allegedly infringing activities, negotiate a license if one is offered, or decide to run the risk of liability and/or the imposition of an injunction."), cert. denied, 142 L. Ed. 2d 40, 119 S. Ct. 52 (1998); Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700, 709, 24 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1173, 1180 (Fed. Cir. 1992) (stating that a patentholder "that has a good faith belief that its patents are being infringed violates no protected right when it so notifies infringers"). See also Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 227 U.S. 37-38, 57 L. Ed. 393, 33 S. Ct. 202 (1913) ("HN15[[↑]] Patents would be of little value if infringers of them could not be notified of the consequences of infringement, or proceeded against in the courts. [39] Such action, considered by itself, cannot be said to be illegal."); Kaplan v. Helenhart Novelty Corp., 182 F.2d 311, 314, 85 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 285, 287 (2d Cir. 1950) ("HN16[[↑]] It is not an actionable wrong for one in good faith to make plain to whomsoever he will that it is his purpose to insist upon what he believes to be his legal rights, even though he may misconceive what those rights are.").

HN17[[↑]] This privileged right of a patentee to notify the public of its patent rights is statutorily rooted in the patent laws at 35 U.S.C. § 287, which authorizes patentholders to "give notice to the public" of a patent by marking its patented articles and makes marking or specific notice to the accused infringer a prerequisite to the recovery of damages. See Hunter Douglas, 153 F.3d at 1336, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1782.

The previously-described principles for resolving conflict among federal acts require us to recognize this precept of patent law. See Palumbo Bros., 145 F.3d at 862. HN18[[↑]] Accordingly, we conclude that, before a patentee may be held liable under § 43(a) for marketplace activity in support of its patent, and thus be deprived of the right to [40] make statements about potential infringement of its patent, the marketplace activity must have been undertaken in bad faith. This prerequisite is a function of the interaction between the Lanham Act and patent law, and is in addition to the elements required by § 43(a) itself, as § 43(a) alone does not require bad faith, see, e.g., Seven-Up Co., 86 F.3d at 1383 n.3; Brandt Consol., 801 F. Supp. at 174 ("bad faith is not an element of this [§ 43(a)] cause of action"); Procter & Gamble Co. v. Chesebrough-Pond's, Inc., 747 F.2d 114, 119 (2d Cir. 1984) (plaintiff need not prove bad faith to establish § 43(a) liability).

Requiring bad faith in this context is closely analogous to the conclusion we reached in Hunter Douglas--i.e., that, to impose state tort liability against a patentee for publicizing its patent, bad faith in publication of the patent must be established to avoid preemption by patent law, regardless of whether the state cause of [*1354] action otherwise requires bad faith. See Hunter Douglas, 153 F.3d at 1336-37, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1782. [1348]

By adding a bad faith requirement to a § 43(a) claim in [41] the context of this case, we give effect both to the rights of patentees as protected by the patent laws under ordinary circumstances, and to the salutary purposes of the Lanham Act to promote fair competition in the marketplace. As thus understood, there is no conflict between the demands of the Lanham Act and the Patent Act, and a patentee is easily able to comply with both Acts. Furthermore, patent law is not frustrated because bad faith marketplace statements concerning patents do not further the purposes of the patent law. Cf. Handgards, 601 F.2d at 993 ("Infringement actions initiated and conducted in bad faith contribute nothing to the furtherance of the policies of either the patent law or the antitrust law.").

Indeed, recognizing a § 43(a) claim for such conduct should have no discernible effect on the three objectives of the patent laws identified by the Supreme Court in Kewanee Oil Co. v. Bicron Corp., 416 U.S. 470, 480-81, 40 L. Ed. 2d 315, 94 S. Ct. 1879 (1974), namely, providing an incentive to invent, promoting the full disclosure of inventions, and ensuring that ideas in the public domain remain there. Cf. Dow Chem., 139 F.3d at 1475, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1124 [42] (opining that the three objectives of patent law are not adversely affected by recognizing a state tort remedy for a patentee threatening to sue on a patent obtained through inequitable conduct).

On the other hand, with respect to the Lanham Act, recognizing a § 43(a) claim in this context will further the statutory purposes of § 43(a) of "preventing deception and unfair competition" in the marketplace, Two Pesos, Inc. v. Taco Cabana, Inc., 505 U.S. 763, 773, 120 L. Ed. 2d 615, 112 S. Ct. 2753 (1992), and requiring bad faith will not unduly thwart those purposes. In sum, imposing § 43(a) liability on a patentee for marketplace statements regarding infringement and scope of its patent, assuming such statements otherwise satisfy the elements of § 43(a), does not impermissibly conflict with the patent laws as long as the statements are proven to have been made in bad faith.

In the case before us, there are two allegedly false statements at issue: (1) that Exzec's product infringes the Zenith patents; and (2) that Exzec could not manufacture a noninfringing product (which we read as stating that Exzec could not design around the patents). Only statements of the [43] latter type would be actionable under § 43(a) if we were to follow the distinction drawn in the previously discussed district court opinions in Western Publishing, 1994 WL 23008, at *1, Brandt Consolidated, 801 F. Supp. at 174, and Chromium Industries, 448 F. Supp. at 556-57. However, we decline to draw that distinction. Both statements, if made in bad faith, are damaging to competition and are not the type of statements protected by the patent laws. Furthermore, such line drawing would unnecessarily complicate the law, creating the issue as to whether a particular statement falls in the former or latter category. Thus either or both such statements, if made in bad faith, can be reached by § 43(a) (assuming the elements of such a claim are otherwise made out) without conflicting with the patent or antitrust laws.

HN19 Exactly what constitutes bad faith remains to be determined on a case by case basis. Obviously, if the patentee knows that the patent is invalid, unenforceable, or not infringed, yet represents to the marketplace that a competitor is infringing the patent, a clear case of bad faith representations is made out. Furthermore, [44] statements to the effect that a competitor is incapable of designing around the patent are inherently suspect. They are suspect not only because with sufficient effort it is likely that most patents can be designed around, but also because such a statement appears nearly impossible to confirm a priori. For these reasons, the bad faith element may be much easier to satisfy for statements of this type. See Mikohn [*1355] Gaming, 165 F.3d at 897, 49

U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1312 (noting that "bad faith" may encompass subjective as well as objective considerations, and that the patentee's particular statements themselves are not irrelevant to determining bad faith).

III. The State Unfair Competition Claim

Finally, we address the question of whether Exzec's state-law tortious interference claim may be preempted by the patent or antitrust laws. The issue of preemption by patent law has been substantially resolved by our recent Dow Chemical and Hunter Douglas decisions. As noted previously, in Dow Chemical we held that state tortious interference with contractual relations claims were not preempted by the patent laws (despite the fact that the claims relied on proving inequitable [45] conduct), in part because the claims involved allegations of bad faith marketplace conduct by the patentee (i.e., asserting its patent in the marketplace allegedly having known that the patent was unenforceable due to inequitable conduct). 139 F.3d at 1476-77, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1126. While the tortious interference claims in Dow Chemical involved inequitable conduct, we also noted that a holder of a valid and enforceable patent who knowingly makes baseless infringement [1349] assertions against a competitor's customers may also be subject to such liability. Id.

In Hunter Douglas, we concluded that state tort claims, including tortious interference claims, based on publicizing a patent in the marketplace are not preempted by the patent laws if the claimant can show that the patentholder acted in bad faith in its publication of the patent. 153 F.3d at 1322, 1336-37, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1771, 1782. Thus, under the Hunter Douglas analysis, to avoid patent law preemption of such state law tort claims, bad faith must be alleged and ultimately proven, even if bad faith is not otherwise an element of the tort claim. Id. at 1336-37, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1782. [46]

Guided by our Dow Chemical and Hunter Douglas decisions, and consistent with the analysis previously set forth with regard to the application of federal unfair trade practice law, we hold that bad faith is a prerequisite to Exzec's state-law tortious interference claim; without it, the claim is preempted by patent law.

With regard to possible preemption of Exzec's state tort claim by federal antitrust law, for the reasons discussed above regarding the relationship of federal antitrust law and federal unfair trade law, we conclude that the state tort claim is not preempted by federal antitrust law. Preemption can occur in any one of three ways--explicit, field, or conflict preemption. See Hunter Douglas, 153 F.3d at 1332, 47 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) at 1779. We perceive no preemption in any of these ways. Cf. California v. Arc Am. Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 100, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 (1989) (holding state law claim for price fixing not preempted by federal antitrust laws based in part on presumption against preemption in areas such as unfair business practices traditionally regulated by states). Indeed, Elo Touch has not even attempted to explain how the [47] antitrust laws preempt Exzec's state tort claim. The antitrust laws are not at issue in the context here.

IV. Summary

We have considered, in this interlocutory appeal, the specific issue of whether, under the facts and circumstances of this case, Exzec's § 43(a) and state unfair competition claims are barred by the patent or antitrust laws. We conclude that they are not, but that the right of a patentee afforded by patent law to assert that a competitor is engaged in wrongful conduct with respect to the patent requires that a complaining competitor allege and prove bad faith for each such claim. The district court, assuming that bad faith might be required, determined that Exzec had adequately alleged bad faith. The correctness of that determination is not before us. Based on the assumption that the district court was correct, we affirm the district court's decision on the issue presented.

[*1356] CONCLUSION

The judgment of the district court denying the motion to dismiss is affirmed, and the matter is remanded to the court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

AFFIRMED AND REMANDED

COSTS

Each party shall bear its own costs.

End of Document

Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

February 1, 1999, Argued and Submitted, Pasadena, California ; July 8, 1999, Filed

No. 97-56042

Reporter

182 F.3d 1096 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15055 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,577; 99 Cal. Daily Op. Service 5431; 99 Daily Journal DAR 6939

BIG BEAR LODGING ASSOCIATION; SLEEPY FOREST RESORTS, a California corporation; ROBERT POOL, dba Cathy's Country Cottages; MARK TWAIN HANNAH, dba Front Desk Vacation Rentals, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. SNOW SUMMIT, INC., a California corporation; RICHARD KUN, an individual; FRITZ UPPENLATZ, dba Forest Shores Estates (Inn); JOYCE REED, dba Grey Squirrel Resort; GERRY TAYLOR, dba Bear Mountain Trading Co.; BRUCE VOIGHT, dba Alpine Slide at Magic Mountain; LOREN HAFFEN, dba Boulder Creek Resort, dba Holloway's Marina & RV Park, dba North Shore Landing; ROBERT MCDONALD, dba Shores Acres Lodge & Vacation Rentals; BIG BEAR LAKE RESORT ASSOCIATION; BEAR MOUNTAIN, INC., dba Bear Mountain Ski Resort, a business entity, form unknown, and DOES 1-500, Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California. D.C. No. CV-97-00451-R. Manuel L. Real, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

Resort, lodging, tickets, lift, antitrust, discount, leave to amend, anticompetitive, ski, price-fixing, non-members, effects, district court, ski resort, monopolization, allegations, conspiracy, packages, referral, accommodations, Defendants', Practices, antitrust violation, Sherman Act, clarification, competitors, sanctions, Commerce, Mountain, markets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews a dismissal of a complaint without leave to amend de novo. All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A court may dismiss a complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. The allegations in the complaint, however, must give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN3[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

A complaint may be dismissed without leave to amend only when it is clear that the complaint cannot be saved by further amendment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits agreements that unreasonably restrain trade. Certain kinds of agreements will so often prove so harmful to competition and so rarely prove justified that the antitrust laws do not require proof that an agreement of that kind is, in fact, anticompetitive in the particular circumstances. An agreement of such a kind is unlawful per se. Horizontal price-fixing, market division, and certain types of group boycotts are unlawful per se. Other alleged violations are subject to rule of reason analysis to determine whether particular concerted conduct unreasonably restrains competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Rule of reason analysis is a case-by-case study in which the fact finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case. Proving injury to competition in a rule of reason case almost uniformly requires a claimant to prove the relevant market and to show the effects upon competition within that market. Elaborate market analysis and case-by-case evaluation are unnecessary in cases involving per se antitrust violations because the anticompetitive effects of the practice are presumed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN6 [] Private Actions, Standing

To have standing to bring an antitrust case, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the harm the plaintiff has suffered or might suffer from the practice is an antitrust injury, that is, an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury must be attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Because price-fixing is a per se antitrust violation, price inflation is presumed if price fixing is established. Courts do not evaluate the reasonableness of the price when determining whether price-fixing agreements are unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN8 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

An agreement among competitors for the purpose of coercing more favorable terms of trade from third parties than they could obtain through the normal play of competitive forces violates antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN9 [] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Group boycotts that cut off competitors' access to essential competitive inputs are often deemed per se unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN10 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Monopolization claims can only be evaluated with reference to properly defined geographic and product markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN11 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Two essential elements of an attempted monopolization claim are (1) intent to monopolize, and (2) a dangerous probability of success of achieving monopoly power in a particular market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN12 [L] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

California's Unfair Practices Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17000 et seq., prohibits several specific anticompetitive practices, but chiefly prohibits selling articles below cost, or giving them away, for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN13 [L] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Except when alleging a per se antitrust violation, a plaintiff bringing an antitrust lawsuit must identify the relevant geographic and product markets in which the plaintiff and the defendant competes, and must allege facts demonstrating that the defendant's conduct has an anticompetitive effect on those markets. Market definition is also essential to establish a monopolization claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

HN14 [L] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\) specifies that when litigation is still in its early stages, leave should be liberally granted unless amendment would be futile.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN15 [L] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

Issues appealed but not briefed are deemed abandoned.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN16 [blue icon] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

Issues raised in a brief which are not supported by argument are deemed abandoned.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN17 [blue icon] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

After a federal district court concludes that a plaintiff has failed to state valid federal antitrust claims, it is free to decide in its discretion, per 28 U.S.C.S. § 1367\(c\)\(3\), whether to continue to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over any state claims or to dismiss those claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. If the district court dismisses the state claims for lack of jurisdiction, those claims are not res judicata and the plaintiff may pursue them in state court.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN18 [blue icon] Sanctions, Baseless Filings

C.D.Cal. L. Civ. R. 7.19 authorizes a court to sanction parties who file frivolous motions, and C.D.Cal. L. Civ. R. 27(b) authorizes an award of costs and attorneys' fees to opposing counsel if the court finds that the conduct rises to the level of bad faith and/or a willful disobedience of a court order.

Counsel: James G. Allen, Allen & Pappas, Thousand Oaks, California, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Patrick M. Kelly, Wilson, Elser, Moskowitz, Edelman & Dicker, Los Angeles, California, for the defendants-appellees.

Douglas L. Day, Crowe & Day, Santa Monica, California, for the defendants-appellees.

Evan Eickmeyer and Timothy M. Smith, McKinley & Smith, Sacramento, California, for the defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: Procter Hug, Jr., Chief Judge, James R. Browning and John T. Noonan, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Browning.

Opinion by: JAMES R. BROWNING

Opinion

[*1099] OPINION

BROWNING, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs are lodge operators and lodging referral services in a ski resort area in Southern California. They allege antitrust violations by other lodge operators and two ski resorts in the area, allegedly injuring Plaintiffs. The district court dismissed the complaint without leave to amend. We affirm in part and reverse in part.

I

Plaintiffs base their claims on the following [2] allegations, which we accept as true for purposes of reviewing dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a valid claim. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6); Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996).

Plaintiffs provide lodging accommodations and lodging referral services in the Big Bear Valley recreational area in the San Bernardino mountains of Southern California. For years, the two ski resorts [*1100] in the area, Snow Summit, Inc., and Bear Mountain, Inc., offered bulk discounts on ski lift tickets to lodges and tourist businesses, including several Plaintiffs. By virtue of these discounts, Plaintiffs were able to offer "ski packages," combinations of lodging and lift tickets, at attractive prices. Sales of such "ski packages" constituted a substantial portion of the business done by some Plaintiffs.

In about January 1994, Richard Kun, president of Snow Summit, helped form the Defendant Big Bear Lake Resort Association. Kun asked the City of Big Bear Lake to refrain from enacting a tax on Snow Summit or Bear Mountain in exchange for the Resort Association's commitment to collect funds from the lodges and ski resorts in Big Bear Valley and to use said funds [3] to promote Big Bear Valley. He also asked the city to reduce its transient occupancy tax on local lodges from eight to six percent. The Resort Association eventually entered into an agreement with the Big Bear Chamber of Commerce, providing that the organizations would grant reciprocal memberships to each other at no cost, and that inquiries for lodging received by the Chamber of Commerce would be referred to the Resort Association.

Kun advised Plaintiff Robert Pool that Snow Summit would continue to sell discount lift tickets to Pool and Plaintiff Sleepy Forest Resorts only if Pool joined the Resort Association. Plaintiffs Pool, Sleepy Forest, Mark Twain Hannah, and members of the Big Bear Lodging Association joined the Resort Association. Because their businesses were located within the city of Big Bear Lake, Plaintiff lodges paid 2.5% of their lodging accommodation income as dues to the Association. Lodges located outside the city were charged only 0.5% of their income as dues.

Since its formation, the Resort Association has engaged in activities discriminatory to certain members, including some Plaintiffs. The Resort Association favored friends of directors of the Association [4] by providing them with choice lodging referrals and preferential advertising, and removed advertisements purchased by Pool and Sleepy Forest from magazines the Resort Association mailed to potential customers. In the fall of 1995, Pool and Sleepy Forest quit the Resort Association because of these discriminatory practices. In October 1995, Kun advised Pool that, unless Pool and Sleepy Forest rejoined the Resort Association, neither Snow Summit nor Bear Mountain would sell them discount lift tickets nor would they honor any tickets purchased by them. Moreover, he said Snow Summit would no longer supply discount lift tickets to Sleepy Forest. Snow Summit and Bear Mountain agreed that they would refuse to sell discount lift tickets to non-members of the Resort Association. Kun advised Resort Association members that they were prohibited from selling, trading or conveying Snow Summit discount lift tickets to Pool or Sleepy Forest.

In 1996, the Resort Association adopted rules prohibiting members from belonging to other local referral services in which non-members participated, and from referring any business to non-members. In about 1996, the Resort Association suspended Doc's Getaway, [5] which is operated by Sleepy Forest, because Sleepy Forest allegedly referred a call received by Doc's Getaway to a non-member. The Resort Association terminated Hannah's membership in November 1996 because he refused to remove a listing for the Big Bear Lake Area Chamber of Commerce, a referral service established by Hannah, from the local phone directory. The Resort Association objected to the listing because Hannah was receiving calls that might otherwise go to the Resort Association per its agreement with the Chamber of Commerce. Some Plaintiffs were threatened or denied membership in the Resort Association because of their personal relationships with Resort Association members who violated Resort Association rules.

Resort Association members also engaged in a price-fixing conspiracy, agreeing [*1101] on uniform rates and charges for lodge accommodations, ski packages and resort services; publishing and disseminating advertising materials reflecting the agreed-upon rates; communicating for the purpose of implementing this conspiracy; and charging and collecting the agreed-upon rates.

Plaintiffs assert the Defendants' alleged conduct violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and California's [6] Cartwright Act, and breached Plaintiffs' subscription agreements with the Resort Association. The district court dismissed Plaintiffs' complaint without leave to amend, stating only: "This is not an antitrust case, period." Plaintiffs filed a timely appeal.

II

HN1[] We review dismissal of a complaint without leave to amend de novo.¹ See Cahill, 80 F.3d at 337 (dismissal for failure to state a claim); Dumas v. Kipp, 90 F.3d 386, 389 \(9th Cir. 1996\) (dismissal without leave to amend). "All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Cahill, 80 F.3d at 337-38. "HN2[] A court may dismiss a complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 \(1984\); see also Cahill, 80 F.3d at 338. The allegations in the complaint, however, must "give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). HN3[] A complaint may be dismissed without [7] leave to amend only "when it is clear that the complaint cannot be saved by further amendment." Dumas, 90 F.3d at 389.

A. Antitrust Claims

HN4[] Sherman Act § 1 prohibits agreements [8] that unreasonably restrain trade. See 15 U.S.C. § 1; NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510, 119 S. Ct. 493, 497 \(1998\).² "Certain kinds of agreements will so often prove so harmful to competition and so rarely prove justified that the antitrust laws do not require proof that an agreement of that kind is, in fact, anticompetitive in the particular circumstances. An agreement of such a kind is unlawful per se." NYNEX, 119 S. Ct. at 497 (citations omitted). Horizontal price-fixing, market division, and certain types of group boycotts are unlawful per se. See id. Other alleged violations are subject to "rule of reason" analysis to determine "whether particular concerted conduct unreasonably restrains competition." Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1445 \(9th Cir. 1988\).

¹ Defendants, citing Janicki Logging Co. v. Mateer, 42 F.3d 561, 566 \(9th Cir. 1994\), argue that the district court's decision to deny leave to amend should be reviewed for abuse of discretion. The motion in Janicki involved the court's management of its own docket: the plaintiff sought to name an additional defendant eighteen months after it had filed its complaint, a year after the deadline for naming additional parties in the court's scheduling order had expired, and eighteen months after plaintiff's separate action against the proposed defendant had been dismissed by a different court. See id. In contrast, the motion to amend in this case turns on the merits: whether Plaintiffs have alleged valid causes of action. We therefore review both the motion to dismiss and the motion for leave to amend de novo.

² California's Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-16770, is patterned after the Sherman Act. California courts look to federal case law interpreting the Sherman Act for guidance in interpreting the Cartwright Act. See Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Fin. Corp., 69 Cal. 2d 305, 315, 70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481 \(1968\).

[9] HN5

Rule of reason analysis "is a case-by-case study in which the fact finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). "Proving injury to competition in a rule of reason case almost uniformly requires a claimant to prove the relevant market and to show the effects upon competition within that market." 861 F.2d at 1446. Elaborate [\[*1102\]](#) market analysis and case-by-case evaluation are unnecessary in cases involving per se antitrust violations because the anticompetitive effects of the practice are presumed. See id. at 1445.

HN6 To have standing to bring an antitrust case, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the harm the plaintiff has suffered or might suffer from the practice is an "antitrust injury," that is, an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\) (internal quotation marks omitted). The injury must be "attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Id.

1. Price Fixing

Plaintiffs sufficiently allege a conspiracy [\[10\]](#) to fix prices of lodging accommodations, lift tickets, and ski packages, a per se antitrust violation. Plaintiffs, however, have failed to allege antitrust injury resulting from all aspects of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy.

Certain Plaintiffs have alleged antitrust injury resulting from the alleged price-fixing of lift tickets. Pool, Sleepy Forest, and Plaintiff Lodging Association purchase lift tickets and thus suffer injury due to the presumably inflated price ³ of those tickets. ⁴ The remaining Plaintiffs should be granted leave to amend to allege, if they are able to do so, that they too purchase resort services at prices fixed by Defendants or were otherwise injured by Defendants' price-fixing.

[\[11\]](#) Plaintiffs have not alleged antitrust injury resulting from the price-fixing of ski packages and lodging accommodations. They are competitors to, rather than customers of, Defendants in the sale of these services. Thus, Plaintiffs stand to benefit from the fact that prices for those services are inflated. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 583, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\) (competitors stand to gain from conspiracy to charge supracompetitive prices); 2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law Par. 373b (1995). Competitors, however, may have standing to challenge practices used to enforce a price-fixing conspiracy. See id. Par. Par. 373d, 373e. Plaintiffs have alleged injuries resulting from their exclusion from the Resort Association, but have not alleged that these injuries resulted from the price-fixing conspiracy. Plaintiffs allege the Resort Association favored certain members in advertising and referrals, and that some Plaintiffs quit the Resort Association because they refused "to participate in the wrongful acts versus and discriminatory treatment of lodge owners." However, Plaintiffs attribute this favoritism [\[12\]](#) to personal relations rather than participation or non-participation in an antitrust conspiracy. Plaintiffs should be granted leave to amend to allege, if they are able to do so, injury resulting from practices used to enforce the alleged price-fixing conspiracy.

We reverse the district court's dismissal of the claims of Plaintiffs Pool, Sleepy Forest and Plaintiff Lodging Association for price fixing of lift tickets in violation of Sherman Act § 1 and the Cartwright Act. We affirm the dismissal of the remaining Plaintiffs' claim for price-fixing of lift tickets and of all Plaintiffs' claims for price-fixing of lodging accommodations and ski packages, but reverse the district court's [*1103] denial of leave to amend the complaint to state such claims, if Plaintiffs are able to do so.

³ HN7 Because price-fixing is a per se antitrust violation, price inflation is presumed. Courts do not evaluate the reasonableness of the price when determining whether price-fixing agreements are unlawful. See Arizona v. Maricopa County Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 350 & n.22, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 \(1982\).

⁴ Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have standing to bring an antitrust action only if they compete with Defendants. This is incorrect. Consumers have standing to challenge antitrust violations that cause them injury. Indeed, purchasers are preferred antitrust plaintiffs in price-fixing cases. See 2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law Par. 370 (1995).

2. Agreement by Snow Summit and Bear Mountain to Sell Discount Lift Tickets on Fixed Terms

Plaintiffs allege that the ski resorts agreed to sell discount lift tickets to lodge operators only if they joined the Resort Association. HN8[] An agreement among competitors "for the purpose of coercing more favorable terms of trade from third parties than they could obtain through the normal play of competitive forces" [13] violates antitrust law. De Jong Packing Co. v. United States Dep't of Agric., 618 F.2d 1329, 1336 (9th Cir. 1980) (meat packers' agreement to purchase cattle from stockyards only on "subject to inspection" basis was unlawful restraint of trade); see also Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30, 41-42, 75 L. Ed. 145, 51 S. Ct. 42 (1930) (film distributors' agreement that they will only do business with exhibitors according to the terms of a standard contract requiring arbitration violated Sherman Act). Plaintiffs allege that the condition that lodges must belong to the Resort Association is a "more favorable term of trade" for the ski resorts, because it permits the resorts to shift the costs of promoting tourism in the region from themselves (imposed through a threatened city tax) to the broader tourism business community (imposed through Resort Association dues).

Pool, Sleepy Forest and Plaintiff Lodging Association purchased lift tickets for resale and thus allege sufficient antitrust injury to challenge this agreement. As to these Plaintiffs, we reverse the district court's dismissal of the claim that the ski resorts have unlawfully conspired to sell [14] discount lift tickets only to Resort Association members in violation of Sherman Act § 1 and the Cartwright Act. The court should grant the remaining Plaintiffs leave to amend the complaint to allege antitrust injury with respect to this claim, if they can do so.

3. Group Boycott

Plaintiffs have alleged a (group boycott by the Resort Association ⁵ and its members against non-members. Resort Association rules allegedly bar members from belonging to any other referral associations, and from forwarding lodging referrals to non-members. The ski resorts also allegedly refuse to sell discount lift tickets to non-members and at least Snow Summit allegedly informed Resort Association members that they cannot resell discount lift tickets to certain non-members. Thus, the boycott restricts non-members' access to customers (by blocking referrals) and supplies (by withholding discount ski lift tickets) that may be necessary for effective competition. Cf. Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 294, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985) HN9[] (group boycotts that cut off competitors' access to essential competitive inputs are often deemed [15] per se unlawful). Plaintiffs are all non-members of the Resort Association and thus suffer an antitrust injury as the direct targets of the boycott.⁶

[16] [*1104] We reverse the district court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants participated in a group boycott in violation of Sherman Act § 1 and the Cartwright Act.

4. Dues Differential Between City and Non-City Businesses

⁵ Defendants argue that the Resort Association cannot be liable for antitrust violations because it is a nonprofit association. A nonprofit organization that engages in commercial activity, however, is subject to federal antitrust laws. See Dedication and Everlasting Love to Animals v. Humane Soc'y of the United States, Inc., 50 F.3d 710, 713 (9th Cir. 1995) (dictum); 1A Areeda & Hovenkamp Par. 261a; cf. Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 787-88, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 (1975) (learned professions are subject to antitrust laws). The RA provides its members with access to discount lift tickets and lodging referrals and markets its members' services, all of which are commercial activities.

⁶ Plaintiff referral associations that allege a loss of membership due to the RA's policies may establish standing in their own right, cf. Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1571 (11th Cir. 1991), and otherwise may be able to establish standing to sue on behalf of their members, see 2 Areeda & Hovenkamp Par. 379b.

Plaintiffs allege Defendants "joined together . . . to preclude lodge owners in the city from competing in [the ski package] market unless they paid 2.5% of their gross income" in dues to the Resort Association, which was five times the dues rate for lodge owners outside the city. This dues differential does not fit within any category of per se antitrust violation and Plaintiffs have not alleged anticompetitive effects. See infra Part II(A)(7). Absent allegations of anticompetitive effects, it is impossible to determine whether Plaintiffs have alleged an antitrust violation or antitrust injury.

We affirm the district court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' claim that the dues differential violates Sherman Act § 1 and the Cartwright Act, but reverse the district court's denial of leave to amend the complaint to allege such a claim, if Plaintiffs have a factual basis for doing so.

5. Monopolization

Plaintiffs allege Defendants monopolized or attempted [\[17\]](#) to monopolize commerce. HN10[↑] Monopolization claims can only be evaluated with reference to properly defined geographic and product markets. See Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1373 \(9th Cir. 1989\). Plaintiffs do not sufficiently identify the markets affected by Defendants' alleged antitrust violations. See infra Part II(A)(7). Plaintiffs also fail to allege HN11[↑] two essential elements of an attempted monopolization claim: (1) intent to monopolize, and (2) a dangerous probability of success of achieving monopoly power in a particular market. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\). However, these deficiencies may be curable by amendment.

We affirm the district court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' Sherman Act § 2 and Cartwright Act monopolization and attempted monopolization claims, but reverse the court's denial of leave to amend to state such claims, if Plaintiffs are able to do so.

6. Unfair Practices Act

Plaintiffs allege Defendants violated HN12[↑] California's Unfair Practices Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17000-17101. This statute prohibits several specific anticompetitive practices, but [\[18\]](#) "chiefly prohibits selling articles below cost, or giving them away, for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition." 5 B.E. Witkin, Summary of California Law § 591 (9th ed. 1987). Plaintiffs do not allege that Defendants sold products or services below cost. The statute bars price discrimination in sales to different geographic locations, see Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17031, 17040, which might seem to apply to the difference in Resort Association dues charged to lodge operators in and outside the city. Such discrimination is unlawful, however, only if accompanied by anticompetitive intent. See id. § 17040. Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts that would support an inference that the Resort Association acted with anticompetitive intent when it adopted its two-tiered dues structure. None of the other specific prohibitions in the Unfair Practices Act are clearly implicated in the complaint. We cannot say, however, that Plaintiffs can allege no set of facts that might entitle them to relief under this statute. We affirm the district court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' Unfair Practices Act claim, but reverse the denial of leave to amend.

7. Anticompetitive [\[19\]](#) Effects: Market Definition

HN13[↑] Except when alleging a per se antitrust violation, Plaintiffs must identify the relevant geographic and product markets in which Plaintiffs and Defendants compete and allege facts demonstrating that Defendants' conduct has an anticompetitive [\[*105\]](#) effect on those markets. See supra Part II(A)(4); Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446. Market definition is also essential to establish a monopolization claim. See supra Part II(A)(5).

Plaintiffs' complaint refers to the geographic market of Big Bear Valley and to product markets for lodging accommodations and ski packages. Plaintiffs do not, however, allege that Big Bear Valley is the area of effective competition in which buyers of these products can find alternative sources of supply, or that there are no other goods or services that are reasonably interchangeable with lodging accommodations or ski packages within this geographic market. See Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446. Nor have Plaintiffs alleged that Defendants' conduct resulted in anticompetitive effects within appropriately defined markets. Plaintiffs should be granted leave to amend their complaint to allege anticompetitive effects within a particular [20] market, if they are able to do so.

B. State-Law Breach of Contract and Tortious Interference Claims

Plaintiffs allege Defendants breached certain Plaintiffs' subscription agreements with the Resort Association. Although Defendants did not address this claim in their briefs supporting their motion to dismiss, the district court dismissed the claim without explanation and without providing Plaintiffs an opportunity to be heard on the issue. We reverse and remand for the court to consider and decide the sufficiency of the breach of contract allegations after affording the parties an opportunity to submit argument.

In their appellate brief, Plaintiffs assert a claim for breach of the Resort Association's contract with the Chamber of Commerce and state-law claims for tortious inducement of breach of contract, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and negligent interference with contractual relations. None of these claims appears in the current complaint. On remand, Plaintiffs may seek leave to amend their complaint to state these additional claims, if they wish to do so. HN14[↑] Because this litigation is still in its early stages, leave should be liberally granted [21] unless amendment would be futile. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\).

III

Plaintiffs' complaint contained class allegations, and allegations that the ski resorts violated the terms of their Special Use Permits issued by the United States Forest Service. Defendants moved to strike these allegations as immaterial. The district court granted the motion without explanation.

Although Plaintiffs appealed this order, their appellate brief does not address it. HN15[↑] Issues appealed but not briefed are deemed abandoned. Pierce v. Multnomah County, 76 F.3d 1032, 1037 n.3 \(9th Cir. 1996\). Plaintiffs mention that they brought a breach of contract claim based the ski resorts' alleged violation of the Special Use Permits, but offer no supporting argument or citations to authority. HN16[↑] "Issues raised in a brief which are not supported by argument are deemed abandoned." Acosta-Huerta v. Estelle, 7 F.3d 139, 144 \(9th Cir. 1993\) (quoting Leer v. Murphy, 844 F.2d 628, 634 \(9th Cir. 1988\)).

IV

Plaintiffs moved for reconsideration or clarification of the order of dismissal. The court denied the motion as frivolous and ordered Plaintiffs to pay a total of $ 4,000 in attorneys' fees and costs to Defendants. [22] Plaintiffs timely appealed.

Plaintiffs' motion was a reasonable attempt to clarify whether the district court had ruled on Plaintiffs' state law claims, and, if so, whether they were dismissed on the merits or for lack of jurisdiction. It was reasonable for Plaintiffs to seek clarification to ensure that the court had considered all of Plaintiffs' claims when ruling on Defendants' motion to dismiss and had not neglected or overlooked their state claims. Such a motion was [*1106] appropriate under Rule 60\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure⁷ or Local Rule 7.16(c).⁸

⁷ The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide that "clerical mistakes in judgments, orders or other parts of the record and errors therein arising from oversight or omission may be corrected by the court at any time of its own initiative or on the motion of any party . . ." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60\(a\) (emphasis added). The United States District Court for the Central District of California has no local rules recognizing or governing motions for modification or clarification.

⁸ The United States District Court for the Central District of California permits parties to file motions for reconsideration on the grounds, inter alia, of "a manifest showing of a failure to consider material facts presented to the Court before such decision." C.D. Cal. L. Civ. R. 7.16(c).

[23] Plaintiffs' request to be relieved of the res judicata effects of the court's ruling also was reasonable. The district court had federal question jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' federal claims and supplemental jurisdiction over their state claims. HN17[↑] After the court concluded that Plaintiffs had failed to state valid federal antitrust claims, it was free to decide in its discretion whether to continue to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' state claims or to dismiss those claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\). If the court dismissed the state claims for lack of jurisdiction, those claims would not be res judicata and Plaintiffs could pursue them in state court. Because the district court did not explain the basis for its rulings, it was appropriate for Plaintiffs to seek clarification, and to specifically request that the court dismiss the state claims without prejudice.⁹

[24] In light of our holding that the district court erred in its initial order dismissing Plaintiffs' complaint without leave to amend, we need not review the court's ruling on the merits of Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration or clarification. It was an abuse of discretion, however, to impose sanctions on Plaintiffs for filing the motion. HN18[↑] Local Rule 7.19 authorizes the court to sanction parties who file frivolous motions and Local Rule 27 authorizes an award of costs and attorneys' fees to opposing counsel "if the Court finds that the conduct rises to the level of bad faith and/or a willful disobedience of a court order." C.D. Cal. L. Civ. R. 27(b); see also Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 45-46, 115 L. Ed. 2d 27, 111 S. Ct. 2123 \(1991\). For the reasons stated, Plaintiffs' motion was not frivolous. The district court also made no finding of bad faith or vexatious conduct, and the record would not support such a finding.

We reverse the district court's order imposing sanctions on Plaintiffs for filing the motion for reconsideration or clarification.

V

Defendants have noted serious deficiencies in Plaintiffs' briefs.¹⁰ While we do not condone these deficiencies, we decline [25] to impose the sanctions requested by Defendants. Because Plaintiffs failed [*1107] to identify standards of review, Defendants urge us to adopt Defendants' statements of the standards of review, regardless of whether they are legally correct. This sanction would never be appropriate. They also urge dismissal of Plaintiffs' appeal. This court has imposed the ultimate sanction of dismissal only in egregious cases of noncompliance, primarily where parties failed to cite to the record. See N/S Corp. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 127 F.3d 1145, 1146 \(9th Cir. 1997\); Mitchel v. General Elec. Co., 689 F.2d 877, 878-79 \(9th Cir. 1982\); see also Fed. R. App. P. 28-2 Ninth Circuit advisory committee's note (citing Mitchel and providing that sanctions may be imposed for failure to comply with the briefing rules, "particularly with respect to record references"). Here, Plaintiffs cited to the record extensively and their appeal is largely meritorious. We therefore decline to dismiss the appeal; we trust Plaintiffs' counsel will faithfully comply with our rules if he continues to practice before this court.

[26] CONCLUSION

The order dismissing Plaintiffs' complaint without leave to amend is reversed in part and affirmed in part. Plaintiffs have abandoned their appeal of the district court's order striking portions of the complaint as immaterial. The district court's order sanctioning Plaintiffs for filing their motion for reconsideration or clarification is reversed. We decline to impose sanctions for Plaintiffs' noncompliance with this court's briefing rules.

⁹ At oral argument, Plaintiffs stated they would still prefer to dismiss their federal claims and have the case remanded to state court. On remand, the district court may, in its discretion, grant Plaintiffs leave to amend their complaint to eliminate their federal claims, decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims, and remand the case to state court.

¹⁰ Although it contains a section entitled, "Appellate Court Jurisdiction," Plaintiffs' brief does not identify the source of the court's jurisdiction in this section, as required by Fed. R. App. P. 28\(a\)\(4\) and 9th Cir. R. 28-2.2. The brief also fails to identify the standard of review for any of the issues raised on appeal, as required by Fed. R. App. P. 28\(a\)\(9\)\(B\) and 9th Cir. R. 28-2.5. Finally, the brief does not contain a statement of issues, as required by Fed. R. App. P. 28\(a\)\(5\). Plaintiffs' failure to comply with the briefing rules is all the more unjustified because we had already rejected Plaintiffs' initial brief as deficient: it did not include a certificate of compliance, Fed. R. App. P. 32\(a\)\(7\)\(c\); 9th Cir. R. 32-1, a statement of related cases, 9th Cir. R. 28-2.6, or excerpts of record, 9th Cir. R. 30-1.

182 F.3d 1096, *1107 (1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15055, 26

Each side shall bear its own costs.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

End of Document

Den Norske Stats Oljeselskap A.S. v. Heeremac Marine Contrs.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Houston Division

July 9, 1999, Decided; July 12, 1999, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. H-98-4274

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23595 *; 1999 WL 34997094

DEN NORSKE STATS OLJESELSKAP A.S., Plaintiff VS. HEEREMAC, v.o.f.; HEEREMAC MARINE CONTRACTORS; HEEREMA OFFSHORE SERVICES U.S., INC.; HEEREMA OFFSHORE CONSTRUCTION GROUP, INC.; JAN MEEK; PIETER HEEREMA; McDermott International Inc.; McDermott Incorporated; J. RAY McDermott, Inc. S.A.; McDermott Engineers & Constructors (USA), Inc.; McDermott Engineering Houston, L.L.C.; J. RAY McDermott Gulf Contractors, Inc.; SAIPEM SpA; SAIPEM International BV; SAIPEM UK LIMITED; and SAIPEM (PORTUGAL) -- COMERCIO MARITIMO, SOCIEDADE UNIPESSOAL, S.A., Defendants

Subsequent History: Affirmed by Den Norske Stats Oljeselskap As v. HeereMac v.o.f., 241 F.3d 420, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 1522 \(5th Cir. Tex., 2001\)

Core Terms

commerce, conspiracy, Sherman Act, anti trust law, antitrust, subject matter jurisdiction, projects, courts, motion to dismiss, foreseeable, Petroleum, marine, extraterritorial, rigging, bid

Counsel: [*1] For Den Norske Stats Oljeselskap A S, Plaintiff: Craig B Glidden, LEAD ATTORNEY, McFall Sherwood et al, Houston, TX; Jacob Dweck, Karen L Grimm, Rebecca L Hirsch, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Sutherland Asbill et al, Washington, DC; James R McGibbon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sutherland Asbill et al, Atlanta, GA.

For Heerema Marine Contractors, Heerema Offshore Services U S Inc, Heerema Offshore Construction Group Inc, Defendants: William J Linklater, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker McKenzie, Chicago, IL.

For McDermott International Inc, McDermott Inc, J Ray McDermott SA, J Ray McDermott Inc, Defendants: Charles Alan Gilman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cahill Gordon et al, New York, NY; Innes A Mackillop, LEAD ATTORNEY, White Mackillop Gallant, P.C., Houston, TX.

For J Ray McDermott Gulf Contractors Inc, McDermott Engineers & Constructors (USA) Inc, McDermott Engineering Houston LLC, McDermott-ETPM Inc, Defendants: Innes A Mackillop, LEAD ATTORNEY, White Mackillop Gallant, P.C., Houston, TX.

For Saipem SpA, Saipem International BV, Saipem UK Limited, Saipem (Portugal)-Comercio Maritimo, Sociedade Unipessoal, SA, Defendants: Robin C Gibbs, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibbs & Bruns, Houston, TX.

Judges: MELINDA HARMON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: MELINDA [*2] HARMON

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER OF DISMISSAL

Pending before the Court in the above referenced action, alleging violations of United States antitrust law, specifically Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and common law causes of action for fraud and fraudulent inducement, tortious interference with prospective business advantage, and civil conspiracy arising out of a global conspiracy and attempted monopolization of heavy-lift marine construction and installation services and related services, involving unlawful market allocation, price fixing, and bid rigging, are the following motions:

- (1) Defendants Saipem SpA, Saipem International, B.V., Saipem UK Limited, and Saipem (Portugal) -Comercio Maritimo, Sociedade Unipessoal, S.A.'s (collectively, "Saipem Defendants") motion to dismiss under Federal Rule 12(b) (instrument # 26);
- (2) Defendants McDermott International, Inc., J. Ray McDermott, Inc., J. Ray McDermott, S.A., McDermott Engineers and Constructors (USA), Inc., McDermott Engineering Houston, L.L.C, J. Ray McDermott Gulf Contractors, Inc., and McDermott-ETPM, Inc.'s (collectively, "the McDermott Defendants") motion to dismiss pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b) (6) (# 27);
- (3) Defendants [*3] Heerema Marine Contractors Nederland B.V., Heerema Offshore Services U.S., Inc., and Heerema Offshore Construction Group, Inc.'s (collectively, "Heerema Defendants") motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12 (b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (# 28);
- (4) Plaintiff Den norske stats oljeselskap's ("Statoil's") ¹ motion to stay (# 30) proceedings until resolution of the motions to dismiss;
- (5) McDermott Defendants' cross-motion for immediate dismissal or acceleration (# 32), joined by Heerema Defendants (# 35);
- (6) Saipem Defendants' motion to accelerate (# 34);
- (7) Heerema Defendants' motion for immediate dismissal (# 35).

According to Statoil's first amended complaint (# 21), pursuant to its business of exploring for, producing, refining, transporting and selling crude oil, natural gas, and other petroleum products, since 1988 Statoil has contracted with Defendants to design, engineer, fabricate, transport, and install or remove offshore structures required for offshore production and transportation [*4] of these petroleum products. Statoil emphasizes that the global market for the provision of heavy lift derrick barges and related marine construction and transport services has been dominated by a handful of companies, Defendants here, during the period at issue (approximately 1993-1997 ²), with fewer than ¹ Statoil is proceeding individually and on behalf of each of the ventures and other participants in oil and gas ventures located in the North Sea, of which Statoil is the operator.

² In 1993 a criminal complaint was filed against Defendants HeereMac and Jan Meek alleging that they and unnamed others had combined and conspired "to suppress and eliminate [*5] competition by rigging bids for the sale of heavy-lift derrick barge and related marine construction services in the United States and elsewhere" from "at least as early as 1993 and continuing until May 1997." Criminal Information, Ex. A to First Amended Complaint. HeereMac and Jan Meek pled guilty to the criminal information on December 23, 1997 and agreed to pay fines of $ 49 million and $ 100,000 respectively. Ex. B, Transcript of guilty plea hearing. Plaintiffs here and in Phillips claim that only when the criminal case became public did they learn of the conspiracy.

HeereMac provided heavy-lift marine construction services to customers in three distinct geographic markets--the Mahogany platform in the Gulf of Mexico, several platforms in the North Sea, and the Xijiang platform off the coast of China in the Far East. The plea agreement addressed separately issues related to commerce affected by HeereMac's conduct in the Gulf of Mexico and commerce affected by HeereMac's conduct in the North Sea and Far East. Thus issues regarding price fixing activities in the Gulf of Mexico and in the North Sea were treated separately. Moreover, in the plea agreement HeereMac contended that the [*6] Department of Justice would not be able to establish (1) how conduct related to foreign commerce violated the United States antitrust laws and (2) how this foreign conduct affected United States commerce for purposes of the Federal Sentencing Guidelines. The Department of Justice, moreover, admitted establishing liability for foreign conduct would be difficult. The plea agreement makes no reference to the Hewett or Judy projects in the North Sea, does not suggest that those projects were part ten of the much needed heavy-lift derrick barges existing in the world, most or all of which are owned or controlled by Defendants. Although holding themselves out as competitors in the relevant market, Defendants allegedly have conspired and illegally combined outside the United States to eliminate or lessen competition and exert monopoly power throughout the world, including the North Sea, the United States, and the Gulf of Mexico, by price fixing, bid rigging, dividing markets, and allocating customers, resulting in higher prices and limited alternative access to such services. Thus Defendants' bids on projects worldwide were not competitive, but were rigged and were substantially and artificially inflated.

Relevant to the issue of subject-matter jurisdiction here, Statoil is a Norwegian corporation with its principal place of business in Norway and is the operator of and working interest owner in several oil and gas production facilities in the North Sea. While the first amended complaint conclusorily asserts that this global conspiracy was intended to and did have a foreseeable and substantial effect on United States foreign and interstate commerce, including that of the state of Texas³, it makes clear that Statoil's business was exclusively in the North Sea and that Statoil's injuries and "damages have been incurred in connection with projects in the Norwegian Sector of the North Sea" First Amended Complaint at 2. There is no direct, substantial connection between the United States commerce and Statoil's claims. It has not alleged that it has any United States subsidiaries, any platforms [*8] in United States waters, or any business in the United States.

The instant action is one of several pending in this district that have arisen out of the same alleged conduct of conspiracy and attempted monopolization in [*9] the heavy-lift marine construction industry. One of these suits, Phillips Petroleum Company et al. v. HeereMac, v.o.f., et al., H-98-CV-1697 (consolidated with H-98-CV-1698), is also on the undersigned judge's docket. The Defendants in Phillips are the same as those here with a few additions, while counsel for Statoil represented the Phillips plaintiffs in H-98-CV-1697. The jurisdictional allegations are very similar in the two suits. Furthermore the parties here have referenced their briefs and the Court's order of January 22, 1999 (# 128) in Phillips in support of their arguments in this suit. At issue in both cases inter alia is the scope of extraterritorial subject-matter jurisdiction of United States antitrust law, specifically the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2.⁴ Because the Court's ruling in Phillips is dispositive of this case, the Court addresses only that of any conspiracy, does not admit that activity or projects in the North Sea had a "direct, substantial and foreseeable" effect on United States commerce, and alone does not establish the existence of a conspiracy.

In Phillips, this Court concluded that the collateral estoppel effect of the guilty plea is limited to HeereMac's admission that it was a participant in a price-fixing conspiracy involving heavy lift marine construction services in the major oil producing regions of the world (the Gulf of Mexico, the North Sea, and the Far East) from 1993 through 1997 and that $ 65,000,000 in commerce in the Gulf of Mexico was affected. The guilty plea and conviction do not establish the extent of the [*7] Court's jurisdiction here, that liability exists as to the Phillips jobs at issue here or that other Defendants here were involved in the conspiracy. It does not establish that the conspiracy caused antitrust injury to these named Defendants, nor, if it did, what damages are appropriate.

³ Statoil, referring to the complaint (# 21) that it amended after the Court's order issued in Phillips, asserts at p. 4 of its Consolidated Response to Defendants' Motions to Dismiss (# 41),

. . . Defendants' conspiracy had a substantial effect on U.S. foreign and interstate commerce by reducing the supply of crude oil production in the North Sea, which in turn increased the prices paid by U.S. consumers for North Sea crude oil, a significant source of U.S. supply. Complaint at PP 52, 78. Further, many of the licensees of the affected North Sea projects of which Statoil is the operator include subsidiaries of U.S. oil companies.

Preamble to Complaint; Statoil's Supplemental Disclosure of Interested Persons dated February 4, 1999. These subsidiaries have suffered their pro rata share of applicable damages as a result of the increase in prices of heavy lift services and they will enjoy a corresponding share of Statoil's recovery in this litigation. Complaint at PP 70-81.

⁴ Sections 1 and 2 of [*10] the Sherman Act, prohibit restraints of trade, monopolization and attempts to monopolize.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act reads, jurisdictional matter, reiterates its ruling, applies it to the facts here, and explains the reasons why, as a matter of law, it concludes that Defendants' motions to dismiss in the instant case should be granted.

A foreign party may sue for damages under the Sherman Act for antitrust conduct occurring outside the United States only where the conduct is meant to produce and does produce a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" within the United States. Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 ("FTAIA"), 15 U.S.C. § 6a⁵; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 769, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993).

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding ten million dollars if a corporation, or, if any other person, three hundred fifty thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides,

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding ten million dollars if a corporation, or, if any other person, three hundred fifty [*11] thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

15 U.S.C. § 2.

⁵The FTAIA was added to the Sherman Act in 1982. Although the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, prohibits monopolization and attempted monopolization of any line of interstate or foreign commerce, section 1 of the FTAIA, 15 U.S.C. § 6a, restricts and makes it inapplicable to certain kinds of commerce. The FTAIA provides in relevant part,

[Section 1-7 of the Sherman Act] shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless--

(1) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect--

- (A) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import [*12] trade or import commerce with foreign nations; or
- (B) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States; and

(2) such effect gives rise to a claim under the provisions of [this Act], other than this section.

According to an additional proviso, if sections 1 to 7 of this title apply to such conduct only because of the operation of 1 (B), then sections 1-7 of this title shall apply to such conduct only for injury to export business in the United States.

Here, clause 1\(A\), rather than 1\(B\), of the FTAIA governs, so the location of the Defendants as suppliers of services is not relevant to the question of whether the alleged conspiracy directly, substantially and reasonably foreseeably affected United States commerce.

The FTAIA was intended to exempt from United States antitrust law any conduct that lacks the requisite domestic effect, even where such conduct originates in the United States or involves United States-owned entities operating abroad. Eurim-Pharm GmbH v. Pfizer, Inc., 593 F. Supp. 1102, 1106 (S.D.N.Y. 1984); McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802, 813 (9th Cir. 1988) (finding allegations of refusal [*13] to deal in foreign markets which injured only foreign customers and plaintiff insufficient to confer antitrust jurisdiction under the FTAIA); The "In" Porters, S.A. v. Hanes Printables, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 494, 498-99 (M.D.N.C. 1987) (finding that French garment distributor had no cause of action under United States antitrust laws absent evidence of injury in the United States); Liamuiga Tours v. Travel Impressions, 617 F. Supp. 920, 924 (E.D.N.Y. 1985) (finding lack of jurisdictional nexus under the FTAIA where restraint of trade and conspiracy claims involved lost business and anti-competitive effects exclusively in St. Kitts); P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 236a (1993 Supp.).

The Court quotes the following relevant sections from its memorandum and order in Phillips, pp. 174-81:

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction, which encompasses only cases authorized by the Constitution and laws of the United States. Coury v. Prot. 85 F.3d 244, 248 (5th Cir. 1996).

Because the reach of United States antitrust statutes is a matter of law, the Court can address the matter now. "A conspiracy to monopolize or restrain the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States is not [*14] outside the reach of the Sherman Act just because part of the conduct complained of occurs in foreign countries." Continental Ore, 370 U.S. at 704.

There is not a clear, rigid test for determining extraterritorial subject matter jurisdiction under the federal antitrust statutes. A brief review of the modern development of the case law reveals the general scope and factors applied in determining whether jurisdiction exists. Although the Sherman Act by its own terms applies to commerce with foreign nations, originally the statute was interpreted as not providing for jurisdiction based solely on conduct taking place abroad. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, 29 S. Ct. 511, 53 L. Ed. 826 (1909). In United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 444 (2d Cir. 1945)(holding that the Sherman Act applies to agreements made in foreign jurisdictions outside of the United States "[i]f they were intended to affect imports and did affect them"), Judge Learned Hand laid the groundwork for what became known as the "effects" test applied today. The test was gradually adopted in some version by most courts.

Because of its expansive scope, considerations of international comity in the face of protest by [*15] other countries came to bear on the assertion of extraterritorial jurisdiction. In Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Ass'n, 549 F.2d 597, 613 (9th Cir. 1976), the Ninth Circuit in an influential opinion established a balancing test including comity factors for defining the scope of jurisdiction over foreign defendants: a court must find "some effect--actual or intended--on American foreign commerce," must decide whether that effect is "sufficiently large to present a cognizable injury," and must determine "whether the interests of, and links to, the United States--including the magnitude of the effect on American foreign commerce--are sufficiently strong vis-a-vis those of other nations, to justify an assertion of extraterritorial authority." For the third prong, the Ninth Circuit set out seven factors to aid in determining whether subject matter jurisdiction should be found: (1) the degree of conflict with foreign law or policy; (2) the nationality, location and principal places of business of the parties; (3) the extent to which enforcement by either country can achieve compliance; (4) the relative significance of effects on the United States as compared [*16] with those elsewhere; (5) the existence of intent to harm or affect American commerce; (6) the foreseeability of such effect; and (7) the relative importance to the violations charged of conduct within the United States as compared with conduct abroad. Id. at 614-15. Other courts, including the Fifth Circuit, adopted similar comity-informed analyses regarding subject matter jurisdiction. Industrial Inv. Dev. Corp. v. Mitsui & Co., 671 F.2d 876 (5th Cir. 1982), vacated on other grounds, 460 U.S. 1007, 103 S. Ct. 1244, 75 L. Ed. 2d 475 (1983)(remanded for review of standing issues in light of Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723), on remand, 704 F.2d 709 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 961, 104 S. Ct. 393, 78 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1983); Montreal Trading, Ltd. v. Amax, Inc., 661 F.2d 864 (10th Cir. 1981); In re Uranium Antitrust Litigation, 617 F.2d 1248 (7th Cir. 1980); Mannington Mills, Inc. v. Congoleum Corp., 595 F.2d 1287 (3d Cir. 1979). See also American Rice, Inc. v. Arkansas Rice Growers Co-op. Ass'n, 701 F.2d 408, 413 (5th Cir. 1983) (citing Timberlane, Mannington Mills, and In re Uranium for examinations of the extraterritorial reach of the Sherman Act). Actually, distinguishing its view from that of the Ninth Circuit and agreeing with [*17] the Third Circuit majority in Mannington Mills and the Seventh Circuit In re Uranium, the Fifth Circuit did not read the Timberlane test as a test for subject matter jurisdiction, but stated that "[a] district court should not apply the antitrust laws to foreign conduct or foreign actors if such application would violate principles of comity, conflicts of law, or international law," which, "when applicable, prevents the court from entertaining a claim." 671 F.2d at 884 and n.7. In doing so, it emphasized the definition of subject matter jurisdiction established by Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 66 S. Ct. 773, 90 L. Ed. 939 (1946), which does not embrace "[t]he wide-ranging inquiry suggested by Timberlane and its progeny." Id. The Fifth Circuit made clear that, unlike the panel in In re

Uranium, it did not conclude that the trial judge has discretion in deciding whether to entertain an antitrust suit and that the decision not to utilize the antitrust laws "must be based on solid legal ground." Id.

Other courts have rejected any comity restrictions. Laker Airways v. Sabena Belgium World Airlines, 731 F.2d 909, 235 U.S. App. D.C. 207 (D.C. 1984); National Bank of Canada v. Interbank Card Ass'n, 666F.2d 6 (2d Cir. 1981)(requiring only proof of [*18] actual anticompetitive effects in the United States). In actual practice, subject matter jurisdiction is rarely declined by United States Courts when there is more than a de minimis effect on United States Commerce. Irving Scher, ed., I Antitrust Advisor 6-10 (4th ed., West 1998).

Thus the Sherman Act . . . can apply to projects outside the United States as long as there is a direct, substantial, reasonably foreseeable effect on United States commerce. The Supreme Court in 1993 observed that it is well established that the Sherman Act "applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." Hartford Fire Ins., 509 U.S. at 796. It further noted that "[t]he only substantial question in this case is whether 'there is a true conflict between domestic and foreign law.'" [It then concluded there was no actual conflict because there was no showing of conflict between United States and the relevant foreign countries' laws.]

After reviewing the pleadings and the applicable law, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have alleged a conspiracy, within the ambit of the Sherman Act, of a number of foreign and domestic entities that had [*19] a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on United States commerce, i.e., on consumers in the United States, including Phillips Petroleum Company, relating to the Mahogany project in the territorial waters of the United States in the Gulf of Mexico, where a significant part of the conspiracy targeted restraints on competition over heavy lift marine construction services. Indeed, HeereMac was allegedly given exclusive rights to service this area by the conspiracy. Phillips has made allegations that the McDermott Defendants, headquartered in New Orleans, Louisiana, and Heerema and Saipem Defendants, with offices in Texas and Louisiana from which they conducted significant business related to heavy lift marine services, participated in the conspiracy, as did the wholly owned, foreign-based subsidiaries of Phillips Petroleum Company, with resulting antitrust injury to Phillips Petroleum Company in regard to the Mahogany Platform job. . . .

Nevertheless, and this matter relates to the jurisdictional reach of the United States antitrust laws and to standing, while the Court finds that the allegations of Phillips Petroleum Company, a substantial, United States-based corporation, [*20] sufficiently state a claim that it has suffered actual injury, antitrust injury proximately caused by the conspiracy, and proper plaintiff status because it was allegedly directly and substantially injured by the conspiracy, the Court does not find that the claims of the foreign-based, wholly-owned Phillips subsidiaries (Phillips U.K., Phillips Norway, and Phillips China) regarding injuries sustained in relation to the foreign platforms (the Judy, the Hewett, the Ekofisk 2/4 J and 2/4 X, and the Xijiang Platforms) have a direct and substantial effect on United States commerce. Although Phillips Norway was incorporated under the law of Delaware, the mere fact that an injured party might be a United States citizen or corporation is not enough to establish jurisdiction; the primary injury to that party must be caused in the United States and substantially affect United States commerce. Therefore the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over these claims under federal . . . antitrust law and they should be dismissed. [emphasis added]

In the instant case, Norwegian corporation Statoil's damages arise from its projects in the Norwegian sector of the North Sea. While the alleged foreign, [*21] global anticompetitive conspiracy to fix prices, rig bids, and allocate markets in the North Sea and resulting injuries to Statoil's projects in the North Sea may have very indirectly had an attenuated effect on projects in the United States and in its waters in the Gulf of Mexico, they did not have a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable anticompetitive effect on United States trade or commerce. Statoil's claims are therefore not within the ambit of the United States antitrust law. Statoil, a foreign corporation, works exclusively in the North Sea and alleges no United States subsidiary or business conduct in the United States.⁶ Because it does not trade in and because it was allegedly injured outside the United States by Defendants' bid rigging on jobs located in the Norwegian sector of the North Sea having no direct, substantial effect on United States commerce, Statoil lacks standing to bring a claim under United States antitrust laws because its alleged injuries are not of the type that the antitrust statute was intended to redress. United States antitrust laws do not extend to protect foreign markets from anticompetitive effects and "do not regulate the competitive [*22] conditions of other nations' economies." Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\). Thus this Court concludes that it does not have subject-matter jurisdiction over Statoil's claims of injury and damages based on Norwegian projects.

⁶ Even if the injured party is a United States citizen or corporation, that fact is not sufficient to establish jurisdiction. McGlinch v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802 (9th Cir. 1988). Furthermore, a court should not exercise jurisdiction when the primary injury caused by the alleged anticompetitive activity occurs outside the United States. The "In" Porters, S.A. v. Hanes Printables, Inc.,

Because there is no federal question jurisdiction, the Court in its discretion also dismisses without prejudice the common law claims over which it had supplemental jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(c\)\(3\)("The district courts may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim under subsection (a) if . . . (3) [*24] the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction"). Bass v. Parkwood Hosp., 180 F.3d 234, 246 \(5th Cir. July 1, 1999\).

Accordingly, the Court

ORDERS that Defendants' motions to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction are GRANTED and that this case is DISMISSED without prejudice. All remaining pending motions are MOOT.

SIGNED at Houston, Texas, this 9th day of July, 1999.

/s/ Melinda Harmon

MELINDA HARMON

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

663 F. Supp. 494, 499-500 \(M.D.N.C. 1987\)(French garment distributor has no cause of action under federal antitrust laws without evidence of injury within the United States and to United States interests operating abroad); S. Megga Telecommunications, Ltd. v. Lucent Technologies, Inc., No. 96-357-SLR, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2312, 1997 WL 86413 \(D. Del. Feb. 14, 1997\); Coors Brewing Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 889 F. Supp. 1394, 1397 \(D. Colo. 1995\)(FTAIA interpreted by cases "to mean that with the exception of claims brought by domestic importers, the Sherman [*23] Act will not apply to conduct affecting foreign markets, consumers or producers unless there is also a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on the domestic market (subsection \(1\) \(A\) or on opportunities to export from the United States (\(1\) \(B\)"); Optimum, S.A. v. Legent Corp., 926 F. Supp. 530 \(W.D. Pa. 1996\) (standard applies even when antitrust conduct involves United States-owned entities operating abroad); Caribbean Broadcast System, Ltd. v. Cable and Wireless P.L.C., No. 93-2050, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19225, 1995 WL 76164, *2 \(D.D.C. Dec. 21, 1995\)(FTAIA "makes clear that the concern of the antitrust laws is protection of American consumers and American exporters, not foreign consumers or producers"). Thus Statoil's argument that a number of licensees on the North Sea projects are subsidiaries of United States Oil companies is not enough to establish jurisdiction.

Sea-Land Serv. v. Atlantic Pac. Int'l

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

July 12, 1999, Decided ; July 12, 1999, Filed

CV. NO. 98-00369 DAE

Reporter

61 F. Supp. 2d 1092 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10915 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,669; 2000 AMC 233

SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., Plaintiff, vs. ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL, INC.; A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC.; FLEMING COMPANIES, INC.; JOHN DOES 1-25, Defendants. and FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., Defendant/Third-Party Plaintiff, vs. JACK BORJA and HEIDI L. BORJA, Third-Party Defendants, and ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL, INC., Defendant/Third-Party Plaintiff, vs. MATSON NAVIGATION SERVICES, INC., a Hawaii corporation; COSTCO WHOLESALE CORPORATION, a Washington corporation; WAL-MART STORES, INC. dba SAM'S CLUB, a Delaware corporation; TAG/ICIB SERVICES, INC., a Delaware corporation, Third-Party Defendants, and SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., Plaintiff/Fourth-Party Plaintiff, vs. JACK BORJA and HEIDI L. BORJA, Fourth-Party Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Sea-Land Service, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on Fleming Companies, Inc.'s Counterclaim GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

Core Terms

containers, purchaser, customer, summary judgment, market power, counterclaim, tied product, transportation, antitrust, shipping, products, tying arrangement, charges, seller, genuine issue of material fact, carriers, tariff, cargo, rates, market share, commerce, indirect, supplier, argues, concerted action, antitrust claim, consumer demand, alleges, freight, economic interest

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1 Supporting Materials, Discovery Materials

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Implausible Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2 Burdens of Proof, Implausible Claims

A material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing versions of the truth. The substantive law defines which facts are material. A genuine issue of material fact requires more than some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. Only disputes over outcome determinative facts under the applicable substantive law will preclude the entry of summary judgment. If the factual context makes a respondent's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

HN3 Supporting Materials, Affidavits

The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Once the movant's burden is met by presenting evidence which, if uncontested, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial. In meeting this burden, parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN4 Judgments, Summary Judgment

The summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN5 Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The direct purchaser rule serves, in part, to eliminate the complications of apportioning overcharges between direct and indirect purchasers. It also serves to eliminate multiple recoveries. Finally, the rule provides the direct purchasers, those in the best position to observe an alleged violator's conduct, with incentives to bring private antitrust actions and thus promotes the vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws. The rule applies to suits alleging an illegal tying arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Purchasers

The Supreme Court has declined to carve out any exceptions to the direct purchaser rule: The possibility of allowing an exception, even in rather meritorious circumstances, would undermine the rule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Standing

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 prohibits unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the practice of any trade or commerce. Only consumers may maintain a private action under this section. § 480-2(d). A consumer is defined as a natural person who, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, purchases, attempts to purchase, or is solicited to purchase goods or services or who commits money, property, or services in a personal investment. § 480-1. A party that does not meet the definition of a consumer lacks standing to sue for deceptive practices under § 480-2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

61 F. Supp. 2d 1092, *1092 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10915, 1

HN8 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4(a) provides as follows: Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in the state, or in any section of this state is illegal. In this sense, § 480-4(a) mirrors § 1 of the Sherman Act, which likewise prohibits joint action that impairs competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN9 Private Actions, Standing

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-3 provides: This chapter shall be construed in accordance with judicial interpretations of similar federal antitrust statutes, except that lawsuits by indirect purchasers may be brought as provided in this chapter. Therefore, even though a party is an indirect purchaser, it has standing to bring antitrust claims under § 480-4.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Pursuant to Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-3, § 480-4 is to be construed in accordance with § 1 of the Sherman Act. Section 1 declares illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Tying arrangements have long been considered per se unlawful under § 1. To establish a tying arrangement that is illegal per se, the plaintiff must show: (1) the tying of two products, (2) that defendant had sufficient economic power in the tying product market to affect the tied product market, and (3) an effect on a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. A tying arrangement exists when a seller refuses to sell one product, the tying product, unless the purchaser agrees to purchase another product, the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN11 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To prevail on a tying claim, a plaintiff must first show that the scheme involves two separate products. To be considered two distinct products, there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide one product separately from the other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

61 F. Supp. 2d 1092, *1092 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10915, 1

HN12 [blue document icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Before concluding that a link between two products constitutes a tying arrangement, a plaintiff must show that the buyer is required to purchase or lease the unwanted product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Tying arrangements are per se illegal where the seller has market power. Market power is the ability to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. Market definition is the first step in the assessment of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Patent Law > Ownership > Federal Government Inventions

HN14 [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The Supreme Court has identified three sources of market power. First, when the government has granted the seller a patent or similar monopoly over a product, it is fair to presume that the inability to buy the product elsewhere gives the seller market power. The second is when the seller's share of the market is high. The third is when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN15 [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Lower courts have used the 30 percent market share as a minimum threshold for showing market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN16 [blue document icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A defendant's economic interest is sufficient where the seller of the tying product is also the seller of the tied product. Only when the tied product is sold by a separate company must the seller of the tying product have an economic interest in the sale of the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN17 [blue document icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In a per se tying violation, a not insubstantial amount of commerce in the tied product market must be affected by the tie. The not insubstantial requirement can be satisfied by the foreclosure of a single purchaser, so long as the purchaser represents a not insubstantial dollar-volume of sales.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN18 [+] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Because a conspiracy cannot usually be established by direct evidence, antitrust plaintiffs may rely upon circumstantial evidence from which a violation may be inferred. For example, a plaintiff may satisfy the concerted action requirement by demonstrating that the conspirators acted in the same fashion and that their conduct was against their own self-interest, or that a high-level of interfirm communication existed in conjunction with the parallel actions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Memoranda of Law

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN19 [+] Supporting Materials, Memoranda of Law

Where a party does not purport to have personal knowledge regarding the contents of a brief, it cannot be considered as evidence on a summary judgment motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\).

Counsel: For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., plaintiff: Gregory W. Kugle, Damon Key Bocken Leong & Kupchak, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., plaintiff: Deborah E. Barack, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Honolulu, HI.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC., defendants: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, HI.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., defendant: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., counter-claimant: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., counter-defendant: Gregory W. Kugle, Damon Key Bocken Leong & Kupchak, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., counter-defendant: Gary G. Grimmer, Deborah E. Barack, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Honolulu, HI.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., cross-claimant: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., third-party plaintiff: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita [2] & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC., cross-defendants: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, HI.

For JACK BORJA, HEIDI L. BORJA, third-party defendants: David C. Farmer, Ashford & Wriston, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., fourth party plaintiff: Gregory W. Kugle, Damon Key Bocken Leong & Kupchak, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., fourth party plaintiff: Deborah E. Barack, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Honolulu, HI.

For JACK BORJA, HEIDI L. BORJA, fourth party defendants: Paul B. Shimomoto, Ashford & Wriston, Honolulu, HI.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC., third-party plaintiffs: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, HI.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1092, *1092/1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10915, 2

For TAG/ICIB SERVICES, INC., third-party defendant: Kenneth A. Remson, Jones Day Reavis & Pogue, Los Angeles, CA.

For TAG/ICIB SERVICES, INC., third-party defendant: Jeffrey S. Portnoy, Cades Schutte Fleming & Wright, Honolulu, HI.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., counter-claimant: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., counter-defendant: [3] Deborah E. Barack, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Honolulu, HI.

For JACK BORJA, HEIDI L. BORJA, third-party defendants: David C. Farmer, Paul B. Shimomoto, Ashford & Wriston, Honolulu, HI.

Judges: DAVID ALAN EZRA, CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: DAVID ALAN EZRA

Opinion

[*1093] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC.'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND/OR FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON FLEMING COMPANIES, INC.'S COUNTERCLAIM

The court heard Sea-Land's motion on May 18, 1999. Gary G. Grimmer, Esq., and Deborah E. Barack, Esq., appeared at the hearing on behalf of Sea-Land Service, Inc.; Bert T. Kobayashi, Jr., Esq., and Craig K. Shikuma, Esq., appeared at the hearing on behalf of Defendant Fleming Companies, Inc. After reviewing the motion and the supporting and opposing memoranda, the court GRANTS in part [*1094] and DENIES in part Sea-Land Service, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on Fleming Companies, Inc.'s Counterclaim.

BACKGROUND

On May 7, 1998, Plaintiff Sea-Land Service, Inc. ("Sea-Land") filed a Complaint against Defendants Atlantic Pacific International, Inc. ("API"), A & A Consolidators, Inc. ("A & A"), and Fleming Companies, Inc. ("Fleming") [4] (collectively "Defendants"), seeking to recover unpaid ocean freight charges. In response, Fleming asserted a counterclaim against Sea-Land, alleging state and federal antitrust violations.

API, a freight consolidator, arranged with Sea-Land, a common carrier, to ship cargo from the West Coast to Hawaii on behalf of Fleming, a wholesale food marketer and distributor. Sea-Land provides transportation services based on rates contained in tariffs. These tariffs are published and filed with the Surface Transportation Board ("STB"). Although Sea-Land does not assess a separate charge for the use of its cargo containers during transportation, the cost of the containers is included in the cost of shipping. Once the cargo reaches its destination, Sea-Land charges a detention fee for continued use of the containers after the period of time ("free time") allowed by the tariff. Essentially, customers have a specified period of time in which to unload their cargo and return the containers to Sea-Land before Sea-Land will impose the detention fee.

Rule 884 of Freight Tariff No. 486 allows shippers to transport goods on Sea-Land's vessels in shipper-owned or leased containers, provided that such [5] containers meet Sea-Land's construction and size specifications. At least two of Sea-Land's customers use shipper-owned containers. Sea-Land charges the same shipping rates regardless of whether a customer employs shipper-owned containers or uses Sea-Land's containers.

TAG/ICIB Services, Inc. ("TAG") is an independent contractor which inspects cargo on behalf of carriers to ensure tariff compliance. TAG obtains information from the carriers that customers furnish regarding their cargo. TAG may open and examine the contents of shipments to verify the accuracy of that information. If TAG determines that the cargo has been misdeclared by the customer, TAG will rebill the customer the difference, if any, between the freight charges for the actual type, origin and quantity of the commodity shipped, and the freight charges for the type, origin and quantity declared by the customer. TAG may also bill the customer a misdeclaration charge provided by the tariff. If the customer owes any charges, TAG will impound the shipment until the charges are paid. When cargo containers are detained by the customer beyond the free time authorized by Sea-Land's tariff, TAG will bill and collect the detention [6] charges according to the tariff.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1092, *1094 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10915, 5

On January 20, 1999, Sea-Land filed the instant Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on Fleming's Counterclaim. Because matters outside the pleadings were relied upon and cited to the court, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\), Sea-Land's motion will be treated as one for summary judgment.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes. Brinson v. Linda Rose Joint Venture, 53 F.3d 1044, 1050 (9th Cir. 1995). HN2[] A material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing versions of the [*1095] truth. S.E.C. v. Seaboard Corp., 677 F.2d 1301, 1305-06 [<7] (9th Cir. 1982)]. The substantive law defines which facts are material. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). A genuine issue of material fact requires more than some "metaphysical doubt" as to the material facts. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Only disputes over outcome determinative facts under the applicable substantive law will preclude the entry of summary judgment. Id. If the factual context makes the respondent's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

HN3[] The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Metro Indus., Inc. v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839, 847 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 868, 136 L. Ed. 2d 120, 117 S. Ct. 181 (1996). Once the movant's burden is met by presenting [8] evidence which, if uncontested, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 250. In meeting this burden, parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient. Keenan v. Allan, 91 F.3d 1275, 1278 (9th Cir. 1996).

The Supreme Court cases cited above establish that HN4[] the "summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed 'to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.'" Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 327 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1).

DISCUSSION

Fleming's counterclaim alleges that:

1. Sea-Land engaged in an illegal tying arrangement in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1;
2. Sea-Land contracted, conspired and combined [9] with others for the purpose of restraining competition in the marketplace for shipping container-related services, in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1;
3. Sea-Land engaged in unfair competition, in violation of Hawaii Revised Statute ("H.R.S.") § 480-2; and

4. Sea-Land violated H.R.S. § 480-4.

Sea-Land argues that each of Fleming's allegations either fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted or fails to raise a genuine issue of material fact. The court addresses each in turn.

I. Federal Antitrust Claims

Because API's and Fleming's counterclaims alleging antitrust violations are duplicative, Sea-Land argues that the "direct purchaser" rule precludes Fleming, as an indirect purchaser, from pursuing these claims. The undisputed facts show that during the relevant period of time, API purchased transportation services from Sea-Land and resold them to Fleming.¹ Fleming has not alleged that it purchased transportation directly from Sea-Land after 1994.

[10] The United States Supreme Court described the "direct purchaser" doctrine:

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), . . . the State of Illinois sued Illinois Brick and other concrete block manufacturers for conspiring to raise [*1096] the cost of concrete blocks in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1. We ruled that the State had suffered no injury within the meaning of § 4 [of the Clayton Act] because Illinois Brick had not sold any concrete blocks to it. . . . We decided that . . . it would risk multiple liability to allow suits by indirect purchasers. See 431 U.S. at 730-31.

Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 (1990). In Kansas, the Supreme Court reaffirmed its commitment to the rule, holding that when natural gas suppliers and power companies violate antitrust laws by overcharging a public utility for natural gas and the utility passes on the overcharge to its customers, only the utility has an antitrust cause of action, as it alone suffered an antitrust injury. Id.

[11] The Supreme Court explained the rationale behind the rule: "HN5" The direct purchaser rule serves, in part, to eliminate the complications of apportioning overcharges between direct and indirect purchasers." Kansas, 497 U.S. at 208. It also "serves to eliminate multiple recoveries." Id. at 212. Finally, the rule provides the direct purchasers, those in the best position to observe an alleged violator's conduct, with incentives to bring private antitrust actions and thus promotes the vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws. Id. at 214-15 (citations omitted).

The rule applies with equal force to suits alleging an illegal tying arrangement. For example, in Summerwood Corp. v. CADO Systems Corp., 1986 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19615, 1986 WL 308 (E.D. Pa. 1986), Summerwood sued under § 4 of the Clayton Act for damages resulting from the alleged antitrust violations of defendants. Summerwood alleged that the defendants violated the Sherman and Clayton Acts by tying together the sale of computer hardware and software. The court applied the reasoning of Illinois Brick and granted the defendant suppliers' motion to dismiss Summerwood's antitrust claims with [12] prejudice:

Summerwood's allegations that [the supplier] adjusted its software program so that it could only function with CADO hardware and that [the supplier] required the two be sold together suggest that [the distributor] may have suffered some anticompetitive injury of its own. A distributor forced to pay inflated prices for the tied good and prevented from selling products separately to meet consumer demands clearly has standing to sue the supplier who illegally shielded the tied product from the market forces. . . . Allowing Summerwood to sue [the supplier] for the same violation for which it is vulnerable to suit by [the distributor] would clearly expose [the supplier] to duplicate liability.

Summerwood, 1986 WL at *2. The Summerwood court recognized that in the tying context, a court is also faced with the difficulty of apportioning damages:

Determining what part of the inflated price [the distributor] absorbed and what part was passed on to each indirect purchaser of the tied good would involve economic calculations so elusive that they would amount to little more than guesswork. . . . It would be no more appropriate to entangle [13] a factfinder in these elusive calculations in the context of an alleged tying scheme than the [United States Supreme] Court found it in the context of price-fixing.

¹ Any claims by Fleming arising before API took over its transportation functions in 1994 are barred by the 4-year statute of limitations applicable to antitrust claims. See 15 U.S.C. § 15b.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1092, *1096 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10915, 13

Summerwood, 1986 WL at *2 (citing Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 742).

Moreover, HN6 the Supreme Court has declined to carve out any exceptions to the rule: "The possibility of allowing an exception, even in rather meritorious circumstances, would undermine the rule." Kansas, 497 U.S. at 216.

The process of classifying various market situations according to the amount of pass-on likely to be involved and its susceptibility of proof in a judicial forum would entail the very problems that the Hanover Shoe rule was meant to avoid. The litigation over where the line should [\[*1097\]](#) be drawn in a particular class of cases would inject the same massive evidence and complicated theories into treble-damages proceedings, albeit at a somewhat higher level of generality.

Kansas, 497 U.S. at 216-17 (citing Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. 720 at 744-45). Thus, because the court concludes that the Illinois Brick "direct purchaser" rule applies, Fleming cannot [\[*14\]](#) maintain its federal antitrust claims.

II. State Statutory Claims

a. H.R.S. § 480-2

HN7 Section 480-2 prohibits "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the practice of any trade or commerce." Only "consumers" may maintain a private action under this section. H.R.S. § 480-2\(d\). A "consumer" is defined as "a natural person who, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, purchases, attempts to purchase, or is solicited to purchase goods or services or who commits money, property, or services in a personal investment." H.R.S. 480-1. Because Fleming does not meet the definition of a consumer, it lacks standing to sue for deceptive practices under H.R.S. § 480-2.

b. H.R.S. § 480-4

HN8 Section 480-4\(a\) provides as follows:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in the State, or in any section of this State is illegal.

In this sense, § 480-4\(a\) mirrors § 1 of the Sherman Act, which likewise prohibits joint action that impairs competition.

The United States Supreme Court held, in California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 (1989), [\[*15\]](#) that the "direct purchaser" doctrine does not preempt state antitrust statutes that expressly allow suit by indirect purchasers. HN9 H.R.S. § 480-3 provides:

This chapter shall be construed in accordance with judicial interpretations of similar federal antitrust statutes, except that lawsuits by indirect purchasers may be brought as provided in this chapter.

H.R.S. § 480-3. Therefore, even though Fleming is an indirect purchaser, it has standing to bring antitrust claims under § 480-4.

Within the purview of § 480-4, Fleming asserts two claims against Sea-Land: (1) that it engaged in an illegal tying arrangement; and (2) that it works in concert with Matson to impair competition.

1. Tying Claim

HN10 Pursuant to H.R.S. § 480-3, § 480-4 is to be construed in accordance with Section 1 of the Sherman Act. H.R.S. § 480-3. Section 1 declares illegal "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Tying arrangements have long been considered per se unlawful under Section 1.

Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). To establish [16] a tying arrangement that is illegal per se, the plaintiff must show (1) the tying of two products; (2) that defendant had sufficient economic power in the tying product market to affect the tied product market, and (3) an effect on a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1411 (9th Cir. 1991). A tying arrangement exists when a seller refuses to sell one product (the tying product) unless the purchaser agrees to purchase another product (the tied product). Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 5; Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1411.

In this case, Fleming alleges that Sea-Land tied the purchase of its shipping services (the tying product) to the purchase of the use of Sea-Land's containers (the tied product). Fleming contends that it only wanted to purchase Sea-Land's shipping services. Because, however, Sea-Land's shipping rates include the cost of the containers, Fleming maintains that it was also forced to purchase the use of Sea-Land's containers. Although the record [*1098] clearly demonstrates that Rule 884 of Tariff 486 did not require API or any other shipper to use Sea-Land's containers, Sea-Land [17] charged the same rate to API regardless of whether the customer used Sea-Land's or its own containers. Fleming alleges that API then passed along to it the cost of using Sea-Land's containers.

(a). Separate Tied Product

HN11 [+] To prevail on a tying claim, a plaintiff must first show that the scheme involves two separate products. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992); Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 18-25, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). Sea-Land argues that the use of containers is a functional part of the ocean transportation of goods, rather than a separate product. In developing an approach to determine if two products are separate for tying purposes, the United States Supreme Court rejected a test based upon the functional relationship between the products. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21 ("We have often found arrangements involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices."). In Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court concluded that products are separate if "two [18] distinguishable product markets [are] involved." Id. Subsequently, the Court refined this approach in Eastman Kodak Company v. Image Technical Services, Inc.: "To be considered two distinct products, there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide [one product] separately from [the other]." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462.

Thus, under Jefferson Parish and Kodak, Fleming must show that there is "sufficient consumer demand" in the Hawaii-Mainland ocean transportation market to make it efficient for carriers to offer a lease of containers as a service separate from the carriage. Fleming relies on the evidence adduced by API. This evidence shows that at least two of Sea-Land's Hawaii-Mainland customers regularly use their own containers, and that other shippers may do so sporadically. Evidence also demonstrates that containers are interchangeable with other forms of transportation, including motor and rail transport, and that they can be used solely as a means to store goods. In addition, API clearly demanded separate services, as demonstrated by its attempts to negotiate with Sea-Land for reduced rates that would reflect [19] the cost of shipping without the cost of using Sea-Land's containers. Simply because Sea-Land refused to sever the cost of the services does not mean that demand for separate services did not exist. As further "evidence" of lack of demand, Sea-Land points to the fact that even shippers who use their own containers pay the same rate as customers who elect to use containers provided by Sea-Land. Rather than establish an absence of consumer demand, this fact merely bolsters Fleming's claim that shippers who choose to use their own containers are still forced to pay for services that they do not want or need.

The court concludes that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether there is "sufficient consumer demand" for separate transportation and container services. Enough doubt is cast on Sea-Land's claim of a unified market that it should be resolved by the trier of fact. Before denying Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment, however, the court must examine the other elements of a tying claim.

(b). Sale of the Tied Product/Coercion

HN12 [↑] Before concluding that a link between two products constitutes a tying arrangement, a plaintiff must show that the buyer is required to purchase [20] or lease the unwanted product. Kellam Energy, Inc. v. Duncan, 668 F. Supp. 861, 881 (D. Del. 1987). Sea-Land argues that because it does not assess a separate charge for the use of its containers, neither API nor Fleming was forced to purchase anything. Sea-Land characterizes the use of its containers [*1099] as a free service provided to its customers. Other courts, however, have rejected similar contentions, holding that to do otherwise would permit escape from antitrust laws prohibiting illegal tie-ins, by the simple device of offering both products as a unit at a single price, while claiming that one of the two is a "free giveaway." See, e.g., Hill v. A-T-O, Inc., 535 F.2d 1349 (2nd Cir. 1976). This court agrees. Thus, Sea-Land's inclusion of the cost of containers in its shipping rates belies its claim that there was no sale of container services.

Moreover, Sea-Land's pricing scheme may also establish the requirement of "coercion." "When a buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem even though the seller may also offer the two items as a unit at a single price." Northern Pacific Ry., 356 U.S. at 5-6. In [21] this case, however, Sea-Land does not offer the products separately. Because Sea-Land charges one price, which includes both products, there is evidence customers may be coerced through their purchase of the first product to also purchase the second unwanted product.

(c). Market Power

HN13 [↑] Tying arrangements are per se illegal where the seller has market power. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14. "Market power is the ability 'to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.'" Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. 2 at 14). Market definition is the first step in the assessment of market power. Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 868, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139, 113 S. Ct. 196 (1992) (relevant market was all automobiles, not just Chrysler automobiles). Both Sea-Land and Fleming apparently agree that the relevant market in this case is Hawaii-Mainland ocean carriage of goods in containers.

HN14 [↑] The Supreme Court has identified three sources of market power. First, when the government has granted [22] the seller "a patent or similar monopoly over a product, it is fair to presume that the inability to buy the product elsewhere gives the seller market power." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16 (citing United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45-47, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 (1962)). The second is when "the seller's share of the market is high." Id. (citing Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611-13, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953)). The third is when "the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer." Id.

Sea-Land contends that its share of this market is 33%, while Matson controls the other 66%. Sea-Land argues that its 33% market share is insufficient, as a matter of law, to constitute "market power." In Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court held that a 30% market share did not give rise to the inference of market power necessary for application of the per se rule against tying. 466 U.S. at 27. HN15 [↑] Lower courts have subsequently used the 30% market share as a minimum threshold for showing market power. See Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 11 F.3d 660 [23] (6th Cir. 1993) (11% market share cannot confer market power); A.I. Root Co. v. Computer/Dynamics, Inc., 806 F.2d 673 (6th Cir. 1986) (2-4% insufficient); Will v. Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665 (7th Cir. 1985) ("pygmy among large, national firms" had no market power), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1129, 90 L. Ed. 2d 201, 106 S. Ct. 1659 (1986); M. Leff Radio Parts, Inc. v. Mattel Inc., 706 F. Supp. 387 (W.D. Pa. 1988) (30% market share of home video games sufficient to demonstrate market power).

In this case, Fleming disputes Sea-Land's calculation of its market share. Evidence proffered by API shows that Sea-Land operates seven vessels in the Hawaii-Guam market and that, as of January 1999, Matson had reduced its Hawaii-Mainland [*1100] fleet to six ships. The record is unclear as to whether the number of Sea-Land ships in the Hawaii-Guam market is the same as those in the Hawaii-Mainland market. The court need not pursue this mystery further, however, as the evidence relied upon by API is inadmissible pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(e). The information regarding Matson was apparently taken from [24] Matson's website. Although incorporated into API's counsel's affidavit, counsel does not purport to have any personal knowledge of the underlying facts. Moreover, this evidence would be inadmissible as hearsay.

Nevertheless, the court finds that Sea-Land's now undisputed 33% market share, coupled with the unique factors that 1) the market consists of only two participants, and 2) the Jones Act may prevent entry of new competitors into the market, renders the existence of Sea-Land's market power a question of material fact for the jury.

(d). Economic Interest

Sea-Land argues that no tying arrangement exists because it does not have an economic interest in the tied product market, that is, the container market. Relying on Robert's Waikiki U-Drive, Inc. v. Budget Rent-A-Car Systems, Inc., 491 F. Supp. 1199, 1209 (D. Haw. 1980), aff'd, 732 F.2d 1403 (9th Cir. 1984), Sea-Land maintains that Fleming must show that Sea-Land "participates for profit" in the tied product market. Sea-Land's reliance on Robert's is misplaced. The Robert's decision made it clear that HN16[↑] the defendant's economic interest is sufficient where, as here, the seller of [\[25\]](#) the tying product is also the seller of the tied product. Only when the tied product is sold by a separate company must the seller of the tying product have an economic interest in the sale of the tied product. Robert's, 732 F.2d at 1407-08. Thus, Fleming need not demonstrate that Sea-Land has an economic interest in the container market.

(e). Effect on Commerce

The final requirement HN17[↑] in a per se tying violation is that a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce in the tied product market must be affected by the tie. "The 'not insubstantial' requirement can be satisfied by the foreclosure of a single purchaser, so long as the purchaser represents a 'not insubstantial' dollar-volume of sales." Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett Packard Co., 60 F.3d 1421 (9th Cir. 1995). In this case, API has established that approximately $ 3.4 million dollars worth of containers were not purchased as a result of Sea-Land's tying arrangement. Clearly, this arrangement has more than an insubstantial effect on commerce.

Because the court concludes that genuine issues of material fact exist with respect to 1) whether there is "sufficient consumer demand" in the market for [\[26\]](#) separate transportation and container services, and 2) whether Sea-Land has "market power," Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment on the tying claim is DENIED.

2. Concerted Action

Fleming alleges that Sea-Land works in concert with Matson to impair competition. HN18[↑] Because a conspiracy cannot usually be established by direct evidence, Souza v. Estate of Bernice Pauahi Bishop, 821 F.2d 1332, 1334-35 (9th Cir. 1987), antitrust plaintiffs "may rely upon circumstantial evidence from which a violation may be inferred." Id. at 1335. For example, a plaintiff may satisfy the concerted action requirement by demonstrating that the conspirators acted in the same fashion and that their conduct was against their own self-interest, Zoslaw v. MCA Distributing Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 884 (9th Cir. 1982), or that a high-level of interfirm communication existed in conjunction with the parallel actions. See, e.g., Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1242 (3rd Cir. 1993).

Fleming concedes that it has no "smoking gun" evidence of a conspiracy between Sea-Land and Matson. Nevertheless, it contends [\[27\]](#) that Sea-Land's conduct in "charging all customers for use of containers they don't want" is against its self-interest [\[*1101\]](#) and can only be explained by an agreement with Matson. Fleming, however, offers no evidence to support such a theory. Thus, its mere assertion that "the chances that Sea-Land and Matson have acted separately . . . are unlikely[,] fails to raise a genuine issue of material fact where Fleming has not demonstrated that Sea-Land's conduct is against its self-interest.

Fleming next argues that Sea-Land is "so closely tied to Matson that it is impossible to imagine that they could act on their pricing policies without each others' concurrence." Although Fleming identifies two documents as support, neither establishes that Sea-Land and Matson communicated in regards to their parallel actions.

First, Fleming relies on a Space Sharing Agreement between the two carriers. The Space Sharing Agreement merely provides for emergency shipping of cargo on each other's vessels "in the event of a vessel casualty or severe operational problems unrelated to vessel casualty." This Agreement does not implicate antitrust concerns as it does not affect either the freight rate billed to [28] the customer by the original carrier or either carrier's container policy.²

Second, Fleming points to the State of Hawaii's Comments in Response to the U.S. Department of Transportation's Request for Public Comment on Competition in the Noncontiguous Domestic Offshore Trades (the "State Comment"). The State Comment is a brief filed by certain State agencies, unsuccessfully advocating a return to a close regulation of the carriers' rates or at least a repeal of the "zone of reasonableness" provision in the ICC Termination Act, 49 U.S.C. § 13701 [29] \(d\), which established a presumption of validity of the carriers' rates so long as the upward annual increase of the rates did not exceed 7.5%. In that brief, the State agencies opine and argue that there is a concerted action instead of competition between Sea-Land and Matson. Importantly, the State agencies' opinions regarding the alleged concerted action were not the result of any judicial or quasi-judicial administrative fact finding. HN19[↑] Because Fleming does not purport to have personal knowledge regarding the contents of the brief, it cannot be considered as evidence upon this motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\); Kim v. United States, 121 F.3d 1269, 1276-77 \(9th Cir. 1997\); Keenan v. Allan, 91 F.3d 1275, 1278 \(9th Cir. 1996\); Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Natural Beverage Distrib., 69 F.3d 337, 345 n. 4 \(9th Cir. 1995\).

Because the court concludes that Fleming has not raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Sea-Land has engaged in concerted action with Matson, Sea-Land is entitled to summary judgment on this claim.

Of the claims presented in Fleming's counterclaim, only the tying claim under H.R.S. § 480-4 survives summary [30] judgment. Thus, the court briefly considers the issue of federal jurisdiction. Fleming's counterclaim was properly brought before the federal court, either on the basis that 1) it was a compulsory counterclaim within the court's jurisdiction over the original claim, or 2) that it was a permissive counterclaim that presented a federal question under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. If Fleming's counterclaim is compulsory, the court has federal jurisdiction because it has jurisdiction over the original claim. However, even if the counterclaim is permissive, the court, in its discretion, may exercise supplemental jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367.

Section 1367 provides that a district court may decline to exercise supplemental [*1102] jurisdiction over a state claim if the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction. In this case, the court concludes that Fleming lacks standing to pursue the federal antitrust claims. Nevertheless, because the court must proceed with API's identical tying claim, considerations of judicial economy and convenience of the parties and witnesses persuade the court to retain jurisdiction. [31] Thus, Fleming may proceed before this court on the tying claim.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Sea-Land Service, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on Fleming Companies, Inc.'s Counterclaim. Fleming lacks standing to bring its federal antitrust claims because it is not a "direct purchaser" of Sea-Land's services. Fleming also lacks standing to pursue its H.R.S. § 480-2 claim, as it does not meet Hawaii's definition of a "consumer." Finally, although Fleming has presented no genuine issue of material fact with respect to its H.R.S. § 480-4 claim for concerted action, Fleming does present a viable claim under § 480-4 for an illegal tying arrangement. Therefore, Sea-Land is entitled to summary judgment on all claims presented in Fleming's Counterclaim except the tying claim.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: Honolulu, Hawaii, JUL 12 1999.

² In fact, the Agreement is pro-competitive because it enables either carrier to compete with the other notwithstanding unexpected operational problems. For example, if a Sea-Land vessel were disabled, a prospective shipper would still have the option of shipping under Sea-Land's tariff and its Bill of Lading, although the cargo would actually be carried on board Matson's vessel. Without the Agreement, the shipper could only ship under Matson's terms.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1092, *1102 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10915, 31

DAVID ALAN EZRA

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Sea-Land Serv. v. Atlantic Pac. Int'l

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

July 12, 1999, Decided ; July 12, 1999, Filed

CV. NO. 98-00369 DAE

Reporter

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,670

SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., Plaintiff, vs. ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL, INC.; A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC.; FLEMING COMPANIES, INC.; JOHN DOES 1-25, Defendants. and FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., Defendant/Third-Party Plaintiff, vs. JACK BORJA and HEIDI L. BORJA, Third-Party Defendants, and ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL, INC., Defendant/Third-Party Plaintiff, vs. MATSON NAVIGATION SERVICES, INC., a Hawaii corporation; COSTCO WHOLESALE CORPORATION, a Washington corporation; WAL-MART STORES, INC. dba SAM'S CLUB, a Delaware corporation; TAG/ICIB SERVICES, INC., a Delaware corporation, Third-Party Defendants, and SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., Plaintiff/Fourth-Party Plaintiff, vs. JACK BORJA and HEIDI L. BORJA, Fourth-Party Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Sea-Land Service, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on Atlantic Pacific International, Inc. and A & A Consolidators, Inc.'s First Amended Counterclaim GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

Core Terms

containers, enterprise, cargo, carriers, alleges, shipping, transportation, shippers, customer, vessels, tariff, rates, predicate act, continuity, summary judgment, market power, racketeering activity, racketeering, tied product, commerce, charges, counterclaim, products, court concludes, market share, seller, maritime lien, Sherman Act, freight, summary judgment motion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Supporting Materials, Discovery Materials

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Implausible Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2 [down arrow] Burdens of Proof, Implausible Claims

A material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing versions of the truth. The substantive law defines which facts are material. A genuine issue of material fact requires more than some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. Only disputes over outcome determinative facts under the applicable substantive law will preclude the entry of summary judgment. If the factual context makes a respondent's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

HN3 [down arrow] Supporting Materials, Affidavits

The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Once the movant's burden is met by presenting evidence which, if uncontested, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial. In meeting this burden, parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN4 Judgments, Summary Judgment

The summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.

Administrative Law > Sovereign Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

HN5 Administrative Law, Sovereign Immunity

There is no private cause of action for violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act declares illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Tying arrangements have long been considered per se unlawful under § 1. To establish a tying arrangement that is illegal per se, the plaintiff must show: (1) the tying of two products, (2) that defendant had sufficient economic power in the tying product market to affect the tied product market, and (3) an effect on a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. A tying arrangement exists when a seller refuses to sell one product, the tying product, unless the purchaser agrees to purchase another product, the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To prevail on a tying claim, a plaintiff must first show that the scheme involves two separate products.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1102 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Before concluding that a link between two products constitutes a tying arrangement, a plaintiff must show that the buyer is required to purchase or lease the unwanted product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Tying arrangements are per se illegal where the seller has market power. Market power is the ability to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. Market definition is the first step in the assessment of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Patent Law > Ownership > Federal Government Inventions

HN10 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The Supreme Court has identified three sources of market power. First, when the government has granted the seller a patent or similar monopoly over a product, it is fair to presume that the inability to buy the product elsewhere gives the seller market power. The second is when the seller's share of the market is high. The third is when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Lower courts have used the 30 percent market share as a minimum threshold for showing market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A defendant's economic interest is sufficient where the seller of the tying product is also the seller of the tied product. Only when the tied product is sold by a separate company must the seller of the tying product have an economic interest in the sale of the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN13 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1102 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 1

In a per se tying violation, a not insubstantial amount of commerce in the tied product market must be affected by the tie. The not insubstantial requirement can be satisfied by the foreclosure of a single purchaser, so long as the purchaser represents a not insubstantial dollar-volume of sales.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN14 [+] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

The federal statute that generally prohibits price discrimination, that is, § 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by § 1 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, applies only to the sale of commodities, and not to services such as transportation. In fact, federal legislation that governs water carriers in the non-contiguous domestic trade does not expressly prohibit rate discrimination; to the contrary, it allows carriers to engage in price discrimination under certain circumstances. For example, water carriers can discriminate among shippers based on the volume of cargo offered over time. 49 U.S.C.S. § 13702\(b\)\(4\).

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Surface Transportation Board

HN15 [+] Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

The Interstate Commerce Commission Termination Act, 49 U.S.C.S. §§ 13701\(c\), 13702\(b\)\(6\), provides expressly that a shipper may bring claims regarding the reasonableness of rates before the Surface Transportation Board (STB). Under the primary jurisdiction doctrine, the issue of reasonableness requires preliminary resort to the STB. Rate reasonableness is one area where uniformity and agency knowledge are essential to a proper result. Thus, district courts should refrain from deciding issues related to the reasonableness or claimed discriminatory effect of a filed rate when the STB has primary jurisdiction to do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1102 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN16 [L] Sherman Act, Claims

Claims for violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, must allege two key elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power. To establish a Sherman Act § 2 violation for attempted monopolization, a private plaintiff seeking damages must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition, (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose, (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power, and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Memoranda of Law

HN17 [L] Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

Where a brief does not meet the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\), it cannot be considered as evidence upon a summary judgment this motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\).

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN18 [L] Admiralty & Maritime Law, Shipping

The elements of a RICO claim are: (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. The failure to establish any of these elements is fatal to a RICO claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1102 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

RICO defines the term pattern of racketeering activity as requiring at least two acts of racketeering activity, the last of which occurred within 10 years after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(5\). Aside from the minimal requirement of showing two predicate acts existed, RICO nowhere addresses the meaning of the term pattern as used throughout the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Coercion & Harassment > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

To prove a pattern of racketeering activity a plaintiff or prosecutor must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. Thus, the determination of whether a RICO plaintiff is able to establish a pattern of racketeering activity necessarily entails an initial determination of whether the defendants committed two or more predicate acts within the meaning of the RICO statute and, if so, whether the predicate acts were related in a manner such that they created a threat of continued unlawful activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Robbery > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Robbery > Unarmed Robbery > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Extortion > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Hobbs Act, Elements

The Hobbs Act makes it illegal to obstruct, delay or affect commerce by robbery or extortion; by an attempt or a conspiracy to rob or extort; or by committing or threatening physical violence to a person or property in furtherance of a plan to violate the statute. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1951\(a\). The Hobbs Act defines robbery as the unlawful taking or obtaining of personal property from the person or in the presence of another, against his will, by means of actual or threatened force, or violence, or fear of injury, immediate or future, to his person or property. § 1951\(b\)\(1\). The use of actual or threatened force or violence is an essential element of robbery pursuant to the Hobbs Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Extortion > General Overview

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1102 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > General Overview

HN22 [L] Pleadings, Counterclaims

Extortion is defined by the Hobbs Act as the obtaining of personal property from another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence or fear, or under color of right. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1951\(b\)\(2\). A plaintiff cannot state a claim of extortion pursuant to the Hobbs Act unless it shows that it parted with property with its consent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Theft & Related Offenses > Larceny & Theft > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Theft & Related Offenses > Larceny & Theft > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN23 [L] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 659 prohibits theft from interstate shipments by carrier. Only felonious violations of § 659 constitute racketeering activity under RICO. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\)\(A\). Theft under § 659 is a felony only if the amount or value of the stolen goods exceeds $ 1,000.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

HN24 [L] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

To establish a RICO pattern it must be shown that the predicates themselves amount to, or that they otherwise constitute a threat of, continuing racketeering activity. There are two alternative ways to satisfy the continuity prong: Continuity is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN25 [L] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time. This formulation raises the question of how long a substantial period of time is. The Supreme Court has declined to draw a bright line of substantiality. The Supreme Court did state, however, that a few weeks or months is not enough. The Ninth Circuit is in accord as it has found no case in which a court has held the requirement to be satisfied by a pattern of activity lasting less than a year. A pattern of activity lasting only a few months does not reflect the long term criminal conduct to which RICO was intended to apply.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN26 [down] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

Continuity may be demonstrated if the predicate acts constitute a threat of continuing racketeering activity: past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition. In such cases, liability depends on whether the threat of continuity is demonstrated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN27 [down] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

In assessing whether a threat of continuity exists, courts look first to the nature of the predicate acts alleged or to the nature of the enterprise at whose behest the predicate acts were performed. Thus, an inherently unlawful act performed at the behest of an enterprise whose business is racketeering activity would automatically give rise to the requisite threat of continuity. Where the nature or conduct of the enterprise does not by itself suggest that the racketeering acts will continue, a plaintiff must point to other external factors.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN28 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\) prohibits not the engagement in racketeering acts to conduct an enterprise affecting interstate commerce, but rather the use or investment of the proceeds of racketeering acts to acquire, establish or operate such an enterprise. Therefore, a § 1962\(a\) claim must include allegations of injury from the use and investment of racketeering proceeds, not merely injury from the predicate acts of racketeering themselves.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN29 [down] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(b\) prohibits engaging in a racketeering activity to acquire or maintain an interest in or control of an enterprise. Thus, it requires a specific nexus between the control of the enterprise and the racketeering activity.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1102 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN30 [] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) renders unlawful the direct or indirect conducting of or participation in a RICO enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity by any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in interstate commerce. This section of RICO contains strict pleading requirements: For the purposes of § 1962(c), RICO plaintiffs must allege a defendant -- the person or persons -- who is distinct from the enterprise whose business the defendant is conducting.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Employers > General Overview

HN31 [] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

Ninth Circuit law is clear that a RICO person may not be held directly liable under § 1962(c), when it and the RICO enterprise are identical. Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit has recognized that: it would be inconsistent with the language and purpose of section 1962(c) to allow plaintiffs to circumvent this rule by naming an employee of the enterprise as the person that conducts the affairs of the enterprise, who is also the employer, and then resorting to the doctrine of respondeat superior to make his employer liable. Respondeat superior and agency liability is inappropriate when the person is the RICO enterprise.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Maritime Contracts > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > General Overview

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Practice & Procedure > Jurisdiction

HN32 [] Admiralty & Maritime Law, Maritime Contracts

In order for a contract to fall within the federal admiralty jurisdiction, it must be wholly maritime in nature, or its non-maritime elements must be either insignificant or separable without prejudice to either party. To qualify as maritime, the elements of a contract must pertain directly to and be necessary for commerce or navigation upon navigable waters. Contracts involving cargo are maritime only to the extent that cargo is on a ship or being loaded on or off a ship. Consistent with this rule, courts have repeatedly held that shoreside cargo handling, including trucking, drayage, and container handling, is not of a maritime nature.

Counsel: For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., plaintiff: Gregory W. Kugle, Damon Key Bocken Leong & Kupchak, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., plaintiff: Deborah E. Barack, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Honolulu, HI.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC., defendants: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, HI.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., defendant: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., counter-claimant: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, Hi.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., counter-claimant: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., counter-defendant: Gregory W. Kugle, Damon Key Bocken Leong & Kupchak, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., counter-defendant: Gary G. Grimmer, Deborah E. Barack, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Honolulu, HI.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., [2] cross-claimant: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For FLEMING COMPANIES, INC., third-party plaintiff: Craig K. Shikuma, Kobayashi Sugita & Goda, Honolulu, HI.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC., third-party plaintiffs: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, Hi.

For ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL INC., A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC., cross-defendants: Timothy J. Hogan, Lynch Ichida Thompson & Kim, Honolulu, Hi.

For JACK BORJA, HEIDI L. BORJA, third-party defendants: David C. Farmer, Paul B. Shimomoto, Ashford & Wriston, Honolulu, Hi.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., fourth party plaintiff: Gregory W. Kugle, Damon Key Bocken Leong & Kupchak, Honolulu, HI.

For SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC., fourth party plaintiff: Deborah E. Barack, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Honolulu, HI.

For JACK BORJA, HEIDI L. BORJA, fourth party defendants: Paul B. Shimomoto, Ashford & Wriston, Honolulu, Hi.

For TAG/ICIB SERVICES, INC., third-party defendant: Kenneth A. Remson, Jones Day Reavis & Pogue, Los Angeles, CA.

For TAG/ICIB SERVICES, INC., third-party defendant: Jeffrey S. Portnoy, Cades Schutte [3] Fleming & Wright, Honolulu, HI.

Judges: DAVID ALAN EZRA, CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: DAVID ALAN EZRA

Opinion

[*1105] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART SEA-LAND SERVICE, INC.'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND/OR FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON ATLANTIC PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL, INC. AND A & A CONSOLIDATORS, INC.'S FIRST AMENDED COUNTERCLAIM

The court heard Sea-Land's motion on May 18, 1999. Gary G. Grimmer, Esq., [*1106] and Deborah E. Barack, Esq., appeared at the hearing on behalf of Sea-Land Service, Inc.; Timothy J. Hogan, Esq., appeared at the hearing on behalf of Defendants Atlantic Pacific International, Inc. and A & A Consolidators, Inc. After reviewing the motion and the supporting and opposing memoranda, the court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Sea-Land Service, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on Atlantic Pacific International, Inc. and A & A Consolidators, Inc.'s First Amended Counterclaim.

BACKGROUND

On May 7, 1998, Plaintiff Sea-Land Service, Inc. ("Sea-Land") filed a Complaint against Defendants Atlantic Pacific International, Inc. ("API"), A & A Consolidators, Inc. ("A & A"), and Fleming Companies, Inc. ("Fleming") (collectively "Defendants"), seeking to [4] recover unpaid ocean freight charges. In response, API and A & A (hereinafter "API") asserted a counterclaim against Sea-Land, alleging (1) federal antitrust violations; (2) violation of the federal racketeering statute ("RICO"); (3) the existence of maritime liens on Sea-Land's vessels; (4) conversion of API's property; and (5) breach of contract.

API, a freight consolidator, arranged with Sea-Land, a common carrier, to ship cargo from the West Coast to Hawaii on behalf of Fleming, a wholesale food marketer and distributor. Sea-Land provides transportation services based on rates contained in tariffs. These tariffs are published and filed with the Surface Transportation Board ("STB"). While Sea-Land does not assess a separate charge for the use of its cargo containers during transportation, the cost of the containers is reflected in the shipping rates. Once the cargo reaches its destination, Sea-Land charges an additional detention fee for continued use of the containers after the period of time ("free time") allowed by the tariff. Essentially, customers have a specified period of time in which to unload their cargo and return the containers to Sea-Land before Sea-Land will impose [5] the detention fee.

Rule 884 of Freight Tariff No. 486 allows shippers to transport goods on Sea-Land's vessels in shipper-owned or leased containers, provided that such containers meet Sea-Land's construction and size specifications. At least two of Sea-Land's customers regularly use shipper-owned containers. Sea-Land charges the same shipping rates regardless of whether a customer employs shipper-owned containers or uses Sea-Land's containers.

TAG/ICIB Services, Inc. ("TAG") is an independent contractor which inspects cargo on behalf of carriers to ensure tariff compliance. TAG obtains information from the carriers that customers furnish regarding their cargo. TAG may open and examine the contents of shipments to verify the accuracy of that information. If TAG determines that the cargo has been misdeclared by the customer, TAG will rebill the customer the difference, if any, between the freight charges for the actual type, origin and quantity of the commodity shipped, and the freight charges for the type, origin and quantity declared by the customer. TAG may also bill the customer a misdeclaration charge provided by the tariff. If the customer owes any charges, TAG will impound [6] the shipment until the charges are paid. When cargo containers are detained by the customer beyond the free time authorized by Sea-Land's tariff, TAG will bill and collect the detention charges according to the tariff.

On January 20, 1999, Sea-Land filed the instant Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on API's First Amended Counterclaim. Because both Sea-Land and API ask the court to consider materials outside the pleadings, the court addresses this motion as one for summary judgment, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1  Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, summary judgment is proper "if [*1107] the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes. Brinson v. Linda Rose Joint Venture, 53 F.3d 1044, 1050 (9th Cir. 1995). [7] HN2  A material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing versions of the truth. S.E.C. v. Seaboard Corp., 677 F.2d 1301, 1305-06 (9th Cir. 1982). The substantive law defines which facts are material. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). A genuine issue of material fact requires more than some "metaphysical doubt" as to the material facts. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Only disputes over outcome determinative facts under the applicable substantive law will preclude the entry of summary judgment. Id. If the factual context makes the respondent's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

HN3 [↑] The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Metro Indus., Inc. v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839, 847 [8] (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 868, 136 L. Ed. 2d 120, 117 S. Ct. 181 (1996). Once the movant's burden is met by presenting evidence which, if uncontested, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 250. In meeting this burden, parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient. Keenan v. Allan, 91 F.3d 1275, 1278 (9th Cir. 1996).

The Supreme Court cases cited above establish that HN4 [↑] the "summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed 'to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.'" Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 327 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1).

DISCUSSION

Although, as noted above, API's First Amended Counterclaim (hereinafter [9] "counterclaim") asserts five causes of action, Sea-Land's summary judgment motion addresses only three: antitrust, RICO, and maritime liens. The court examines each in turn.¹

I. Antitrust Claims

API purports to state claims against Sea-Land under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2), the Clayton Act (alleged as 15 U.S.C. § 15), and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTCA") (15 U.S.C. § 45). This last claim fails from the start, as HN5 [↑] there is no private cause of action for violations of the FTCA. Carlson v. Coca-Cola Co., 483 F.2d 279 (9th Cir. 1973); Morrison v. Back Yard Burgers, Inc., 91 F.3d 1184, 1187 (8th Cir. 1996); Fulton v. Hecht, 580 F.2d 1243, 1248 n. 2 (5th Cir. 1978).

Specifically, API alleges that Sea-Land [10] and Matson Navigation Services, Inc. ("Matson"), another common carrier, conspired [*1108] and created an unlawful cartel which controlled the ocean transportation of goods between Hawaii and the Mainland.² This cartel allegedly:

- (1) Tied the provision of its transportation services to the "purchase of the use of carrier-owned containers" in which the cargo is carried on Sea-Land's vessels;
 - (2) Refused to deal with shippers who wished to provide their own containers;
 - (3) Conspired with TAG to fix the price of shipping in the Hawaii-Mainland market;
 - (4) Provided Costco and Sam's Club with preferential and discriminatory shipping rates, not available to API; and
- (5) Violated § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Because these allegations require individual analysis, the court discusses each separately.

1. Tying Claim

HN6 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman [11] Act declares illegal "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Tying arrangements have long been considered per se unlawful under Section 1. Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). To establish a tying arrangement that is illegal per se, the plaintiff must show (1) the tying of two products; (2) that defendant had sufficient economic power in the tying product market to affect the tied product market, and (3) an effect on a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1411 \(9th Cir. 1991\). A tying arrangement exists when a seller refuses to sell one product (the tying product) unless the purchaser agrees to purchase another product (the tied product). Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 5; Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1411.

¹ The court notes that, for lack of good cause shown, API's request for a Rule 56(f) continuance was denied during the May 18, 1999 hearing.

² Although Matson was originally named as a third-party defendant in API's third-party complaint, all claims against it were dismissed without prejudice.

In this case, API alleges that Sea-Land tied the purchase of its shipping services (the tying product) to the purchase of the use of Sea-Land's containers (the tied product). API contends that it only wanted to purchase Sea-Land's [12] shipping services. Because, however, Sea-Land's shipping rates include the cost of the containers, API maintains that it was also forced to purchase the use of Sea-Land's containers. Although the record clearly demonstrates that Rule 884 of Tariff 486 did not require API or any other shipper to use Sea-Land's containers, Sea-Land charged the same rate regardless of whether the customer used Sea-Land's or its own containers.

a. Separate Tied Product

HN7 To prevail on a tying claim, a plaintiff must first show that the scheme involves two separate products. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\); Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 18-25, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). Sea-Land argues that the use of containers is a functional part of the ocean transportation of goods, rather than a separate product. In developing an approach to determine if two products are separate for tying purposes, the United States Supreme Court rejected a test based upon the functional relationship between the products. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21 ("We have often [13] found arrangements involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices."). In Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court concluded that products are separate if "two distinguishable product markets [are] involved." Id. Subsequently, the Court refined this approach in Eastman Kodak Company v. Image Technical Services, Inc.: "To be considered two distinct products, there must be sufficient consumer [109] demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide [one product] separately from [the other]." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462.

Thus, under Jefferson Parish and Kodak, API must show that there is "sufficient consumer demand" in the Hawaii-Mainland ocean transportation market to make it efficient for carriers to offer a lease of containers as a service separate from the carriage. API has adduced evidence that shows at least two of Sea-Land's Hawaii-Mainland customers regularly use their own containers, and that other shippers may do so sporadically. Evidence also demonstrates that containers are interchangeable with other forms of transportation, including motor and rail transport, and that they [14] can be used solely as a means to store goods. In addition, API clearly demanded separate services, as demonstrated by its attempts to negotiate with Sea-Land for reduced rates that would reflect the cost of shipping without the cost of using Sea-Land's containers. Simply because Sea-Land refused to sever the cost of the services does not mean that demand for separate services did not exist.

Nonetheless, as "evidence" of lack of demand, Sea-Land points to the fact that even shippers who use their own containers pay the same rate as customers who elect to use containers provided by Sea-Land. Rather than establish an absence of consumer demand, this fact merely bolsters API's claim that shippers who choose to use their own containers are still forced to pay for services that they do not want or need.

The court concludes that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether there is "sufficient consumer demand" for separate transportation and container services. Enough doubt is cast on Sea-Land's claim of a unified market that it should be resolved by the trier of fact. Before denying Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment, however, the court must examine the other elements of a [15] tying claim.

b. Sale of the Tied Product/Coercion

HN8 Before concluding that a link between two products constitutes a tying arrangement, a plaintiff must show that the buyer is required to purchase or lease the unwanted product. Kellam Energy, Inc. v. Duncan, 668 F. Supp. 861, 881 \(D. Del. 1987\). Sea-Land argues that because it does not assess a separate charge for the use of its containers, API was not forced to purchase anything. Sea-Land characterizes the use of its containers as a free service provided to its customers. Other courts, however, have rejected similar contentions, holding that to do otherwise would permit escape from antitrust laws prohibiting illegal tie-ins, by the simple device of offering both products as a unit at a single price, while claiming that one of the two is a "free giveaway." See Hill v. A-T-O, Inc., 535 F.2d 1349 \(2nd Cir. 1976\). This court agrees. Thus, Sea-Land's inclusion of the cost of containers in its shipping rates belies its claim that there was no sale of container services.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1109 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 15

Moreover, Sea-Land's pricing scheme may also establish the requirement of "coercion." "When a buyer is free to take either product [16] by itself there is no tying problem even though the seller may also offer the two items as a unit at a single price." Northern Pacific Ry., 356 U.S. at 5-6. In this case, however, Sea-Land does not offer the products separately. Because Sea-Land charges one price, which includes both products, there is evidence customers may be coerced through their purchase of the first product to also purchase the second unwanted product.

c. Market Power

HN9 Tying arrangements are per se illegal where the seller has market power. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14. "Market power is the ability 'to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.'" Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14). [110] Market definition is the first step in the assessment of market power. Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 868, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139, 113 S. Ct. 196 (1992) (relevant market was all automobiles, not just Chrysler automobiles). Both Sea-Land and API apparently agree that the relevant market in [17] this case is Hawaii-Mainland ocean carriage of goods in containers.

HN10 The Supreme Court has identified three sources of market power. First, when the government has granted the seller "a patent or similar monopoly over a product, it is fair to presume that the inability to buy the product elsewhere gives the seller market power." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16 (citing United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45-47, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 \(1962\)). The second is when "the seller's share of the market is high." Id. (citing Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611-13, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 \(1953\)). The third is when "the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer." Id.

Sea-Land contends that its share of this market is 33%, while Matson controls the other 66%. Sea-Land argues that its 33% market share is insufficient, as a matter of law, to constitute "market power." In Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court held that a 30% market share did not give rise to the inference of market power necessary for application of the per se rule against tying. 466 U.S. at 27. HN11 [18] Lower courts have subsequently used the 30% market share as a minimum threshold for showing market power. See Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 11 F.3d 660 \(6th Cir. 1993\) (11% market share cannot confer market power); A.I. Root Co. v. Computer/Dynamics, 806 F.2d 673 \(6th Cir. 1986\) (2-4% insufficient); Will v. Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665 \(7th Cir. 1985\) ("pygmy among large, national firms" had no market power), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1129, 90 L. Ed. 2d 201, 106 S. Ct. 1659 (1986); M. Leff Radio Parts, Inc. v. Mattel Inc., 706 F. Supp. 387 \(W.D. Pa. 1988\) (30% market share of home video games sufficient to demonstrate market power).

In this case, API disputes Sea-Land's calculation of its market share. Evidence proffered by API shows that Sea-Land operates seven vessels in the Hawaii-Guam market and that, as of January 1999, Matson had reduced its Hawaii-Mainland fleet to six ships. The record is unclear as to whether the number of Sea-Land ships in the Hawaii-Guam market is the same as those in the Hawaii-Mainland market. The court need not pursue this mystery further, [19] however, as the evidence relied upon by API is inadmissible pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(e\). The information regarding Matson was apparently taken from Matson's website. Although incorporated into API's counsel's affidavit, counsel does not purport to have any personal knowledge of the underlying facts. Moreover, this evidence would be inadmissible as hearsay.

Nevertheless, the court finds that Sea-Land's now undisputed 33% market share, coupled with the unique factors that 1) the market consists of only two participants, and 2) the Jones Act may prevent entry of new competitors into the market, renders the existence of Sea-Land's market power a question of material fact for the jury.

d. Economic Interest

Sea-Land argues that no tying arrangement exists because it does not have an economic interest in the tied product market, that is, the container market. Relying on Robert's Waikiki U-Drive, Inc. v. Budget Rent-A-Car Systems, Inc., 491 F. Supp. 1199, 1209 \(D. Haw. 1980\), aff'd, 732 F.2d 1403 \(9th Cir. 1984\), Sea-Land maintains that API must show that Sea-Land "participates for profit" in the tied product market. Sea-Land's [20] reliance on Robert's is misplaced. The Robert's decision made it clear that HN12 the defendant's economic interest is sufficient where, as here, the seller of the tying product is also the seller of the tied product. Only when the tied [*1111] product is sold by a separate company must the seller of the tying product have an economic interest in the sale of the tied product. Robert's, 732 F.2d at 1407-08. Thus, API need not demonstrate that Sea-Land has an economic interest in the container market.

e. Effect on Commerce

The final requirement HN13 in a per se tying violation is that a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce in the tied product market must be affected by the tie. "The 'not insubstantial' requirement can be satisfied by the foreclosure of a single purchaser, so long as the purchaser represents a 'not insubstantial' dollar-volume of sales." Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett Packard Co., 60 F.3d 1421 \(9th Cir. 1995\), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1115, 134 L. Ed. 2d 492, 116 S. Ct. 1344 (1996). In this case, API has established that approximately $ 3.4 million dollars worth of containers were not purchased as a result of Sea-Land's alleged [21] tying arrangement. Clearly, this arrangement has more than an insubstantial effect on commerce.

Because the court concludes that genuine issues of material fact exist with respect to 1) whether there is "sufficient consumer demand" in the market for separate transportation and container services, and 2) whether Sea-Land has "market power," Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment on the tying claim is DENIED.

2. Refusal to Deal

API's claim that Sea-Land refused to deal with shippers who wish to ship cargo in their own containers does not survive summary judgment. Although API states that "the evidence shows that Sea-Land refused to allow shipper-owned containers under any circumstances," API has not proffered any of this evidence. In fact, the evidence is clearly to the contrary. Rule 884 of Tariff 486 allows shippers to use their own or leased containers. Moreover, Daniel Downes testified in his deposition that both Agmark and Frito-Lay regularly use shipper-owned containers and that other shippers may use them sporadically. While Rule 884 allows the use of shipper-owned containers, it reserves to Sea-Land the right to furnish containers if certain size and construction specifications [22] are not met. The court finds that this reservation of rights does not create a genuine issue of material fact, as it does not demonstrate a refusal to deal, but merely precludes the use of non-conforming containers. Quite simply, API has failed to meet its burden on this issue. Accordingly, Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment as to the refusal to deal claim is GRANTED.

3. Price-fixing Conspiracy

API alleges that Sea-Land conspired with TAG to fix the price of shipping in the Hawaii-Mainland market. Although API makes numerous allegations and insinuations regarding the "dark side" of TAG, it has offered no evidence to support its claim of price-fixing. In particular, API has not provided support for its statement that TAG acts as a "joint agent" of Sea-Land and Matson and that its knowledge of pricing is "by law, shared by both carriers."

Sea-Land, on the other hand, has offered affidavits demonstrating that TAG is an independent contractor in the performance of its duties, except as to billing and collection of tariff charges, in which respect it acts as an agent of the carrier. While Sea-Land and Matson both employ TAG, they do so separately, not jointly. Sea-Land's affidavits [23] also establish that TAG has no involvement in the development of freight rates and does not gain any benefit from the level of freight rates established in Sea-Land's tariff. Moreover, Sea-Land submitted deposition testimony that expressly contradicts API's contention that TAG obtained financial information from Sea-Land regarding Fleming.

API does not dispute that TAG repeatedly caught it misdeclaring the type, quantity and/or origin of goods shipped in containers on board Sea-Land's vessels. [*1112] TAG billed API and/or Fleming for the difference between the actual cargo and that declared by API. TAG detained the shipments involved until the rebilled charges were paid. API is attempting to make a price-fixing conspiracy out of those charges.

Similar complaints by shippers unhappy with TAG were soundly rejected in Caribbean Shippers Association v. Surface Transportation Board, 330 U.S. App. D.C. 292, 145 F.3d 1362 (D.C. Cir. 1998). There, Caribbean Shippers' Association ("CSA"), an association of non-vessel operating common carriers, claimed that the water carriers that jointly controlled 90% of the transportation market in question used TAG to purposefully delay CSA [24] members' shipments, in order to force customers to deal directly with water carriers. However, the court refused to infer concerted action by the water carriers from the fact that TAG was inspecting cargo on behalf of each of those carriers. 145 F.3d at 1363.

In fact, the Caribbean Shippers' Court noted that it appeared:

[Petitioner's real concern is that so long as TAG performs the inspection service for all three carriers it is more difficult for petitioner to play one against the other. If a shipper is unhappy about the manner in which TAG categorizes its merchandise, for example, it is hard for that shipper to gain more favorable treatment elsewhere because each of the major carriers in the market uses TAG. But competition in inspection efficiency, or more accurately inefficiency, is hardly the sort of competition the statute is designed to protect.]

Id. at 1364-65.

API argues that Caribbean Shippers' is distinguishable because there was no evidence presented in that case that TAG was sharing pricing information or involved in actual coercion and collusion with the carrier. API is unable to distinguish Caribbean Shippers' on that basis as it has [25] not presented any such evidence in this case, either. Thus, because the court again concludes that API has failed to meet its burden, Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment on the price-fixing claim is GRANTED.

4. Preferential/Discriminatory Shipping Rates

API alleges that Sea-Land's tariff includes special freight rates for Costco and Sam's Club that are more favorable than Sea-Land's general tariff, and that Sea-Land has refused to extend comparable tariff treatment to API. Even assuming, arguendo, that Sea-Land's tariff favors those shippers, API has not specified any statutory provision that Sea-Land has allegedly violated.

HN14 [+] The federal statute that generally prohibits price discrimination, that is, § 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by § 1 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13, applies only to the sale of commodities, and not to services such as transportation. See, e.g., Alliance Shippers, Inc. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co., 673 F. Supp. 1005, 1008 (C.D. Cal. 1986), aff'd., 858 F.2d 567 (9th Cir. 1988) ("The Robinson-Patman prohibition against price discrimination between similarly situated purchasers of [26] like commodities does not apply to transportation since transportation is not a commodity.").

In fact, federal legislation that governs water carriers such as Sea-Land in the non-contiguous domestic trade does not expressly prohibit rate discrimination; to the contrary, it allows carriers to engage in price discrimination under certain circumstances. For example, water carriers can discriminate among shippers based on the volume of cargo offered over time. 49 U.S.C. § 13702(b)(4).

Moreover, to the extent that API argues that Sea-Land's rates are unreasonable, such arguments are subject to the primary jurisdiction of the Surface Transportation Board ("STB"), formerly the Interstate Commerce Commission.

HN15 [+] The ICC Termination Act, 49 U.S.C. §§ 13701(c) and 13702(b)(6), provides expressly that a [*1113] shipper "may" bring claims regarding the reasonableness of rates before the STB. Under the "primary jurisdiction" doctrine, the issue of reasonableness requires preliminary resort to the STB. Hargrave v. Freight Distrib. Serv., Inc., 53 F.3d 1019, 1021 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Great N. Ry. Co. v. Merchants Elevator Co., 259 U.S. 285, 291, 66 L. Ed. 943, 42 S. Ct. 477 (1922)). [27]

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1113 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 27

Rate reasonableness is one area where uniformity and agency knowledge are essential to a proper result. Hargrave, 53 F.3d at 1021; RTC Transp., Inc. v. Conagra Poultry Co., 971 F.2d 368 (9th Cir. 1992); Milne Truck Lines, Inc. v. Makita U.S.A., Inc., 970 F.2d 564 (9th Cir. 1992). Thus, district courts should refrain from deciding issues related to the reasonableness or claimed discriminatory effect of a filed rate when the STB has primary jurisdiction to do so. See DeBruce Grain, Inc. v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 149 F.3d 787 (8th Cir. 1998); Baltimore & Ohio Chicago Terminal R.R. Co. v. Wisconsin Cent. Ltd., 154 F.3d 404 (7th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, U.S. , 119 S. Ct. 1254, 143 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1999).

Because API has failed to show a statutory violation with respect to its allegations of price discrimination, Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment on this claim is GRANTED.

5. Section 2 of the Sherman Act

API invokes § 2 of the Sherman Act as one of the bases for its counterclaim:

Defendants unreasonably restrain trade and interstate commerce in violation of Section 1 [28] and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2.

This conclusory allegation is clearly insufficient to state a claim under § 2. The Ninth Circuit has described the requirements of § 2, as follows:

Section 2 claims tend to encompass a narrower range of anticompetitive behavior specifically defined as monopolization and attempts to monopolize. Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any person or persons, to monopolize . . . trade shall be guilty" of an antitrust violation. 15 U.S.C. § 2. HN16[↑] Claims for violation of Section 2 must allege two key elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966) . . . To establish a Sherman Act Section 2 violation for attempted monopolization, a private plaintiff seeking damages must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed [29] at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving "monopoly power"; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1432-33 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988)).

Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1521 (9th Cir. 1996) (as amended Jan. 15, 1997).

API does not allege that Sea-Land has "monopoly power." Monopoly power is the "power to control prices or exclude competition" in the relevant market. High Tech. Careers v. San Jose Mercury News, 996 F.2d 987, 990 (9th Cir. 1993). Because Sea-Land has only a 1/3 share in the Hawaii-Mainland market, it cannot have "monopoly power," as a matter of law. Forro Precision, Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Mach. Corp., 673 F.2d 1045, 1058 (9th Cir. 1982) (35% market share insufficient); Levitch v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 495 F. Supp. 649, 655 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), aff'd, 697 F.2d 495 (2nd Cir. 1983) (33% market share insufficient); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2nd Cir. 1945) [30] (Learned Hand, J.) ("it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four percent would be enough; and certainly thirty-three is not").

While API tries to lump Sea-Land's and Matson's market shares together, it cannot do so because API has [*1114] failed to show concerted action by Sea-Land and Matson. API relies solely on two documents to demonstrate concerted action: 1) a Space Sharing Agreement between the two carriers, and 2) the State of Hawaii's Comments in Response to the U.S. Department of Transportation's Request for Public Comment on Competition in the Noncontiguous Domestic Offshore Trades (the "State Comment"). Neither raises a genuine issue of material fact here.

Matson and Sea-Land's Space Sharing Agreement merely provides for emergency shipping of cargo on each other's vessels "in the event of a vessel casualty or severe operational problems unrelated to vessel casualty." This Agreement does not implicate antitrust concerns as it does not affect the freight rate billed to the customer by the original carrier.³

[31] The State Comment is a brief filed by certain State agencies, unsuccessfully advocating a return to a close regulation of the carriers' rates or at least a repeal of the "zone of reasonableness" provision in the ICC Termination Act, 49 U.S.C. § 13701\(d\), which established a presumption of validity of the carriers' rates so long as the upward annual increase of the rates did not exceed 7.5%. In that brief, the State agencies opine and argue that there is concerted action rather than competition between Sea-Land and Matson. Importantly, the State agencies' opinions regarding the alleged concerted action were not the result of any judicial or quasi-judicial administrative fact finding. Although incorporated in API's counsel's affidavit, counsel does not purport to have personal knowledge of its contents. Thus, HN17[↑] because the brief does not meet the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(e\), it cannot be considered as evidence upon this motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\); Kim v. United States, 121 F.3d 1269, 1276-77 \(9th Cir. 1997\); Keenan v. Allan, 91 F.3d 1275, 1278 \(9th Cir. 1996\); Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Natural Beverage Distrib., 69 F.3d 337, 345 n. 4 \(9th Cir. 1995\). [32]

Moreover, API's allegations of concerted action 2 are conclusively contradicted by the undisputed testimony in the record. API's own officer testified at length that Sea-Land and Matson tried very hard to get API's business by undercutting and/or matching each other's tariff rates. In fact, he admitted that the two carriers were constantly competing against each other.

Furthermore, even if API had alleged "monopoly power," mere possession of monopoly power is not unlawful. Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 273-98 \(2nd Cir. 1979\) (Sherman Act § 2 "does not prohibit monopoly-similiciter"). API must allege overt acts in furtherance of a monopolization scheme to establish a § 2 claim. API does not. Thus, API's § 2 claim fails. See Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 735-36 \(9th Cir. 1987\) (holding that plaintiff's conclusory allegations of specific intent and anticompetitive conduct were insufficient). Therefore, the court GRANTS summary judgment in favor of Sea-Land on the § 2 claim.

II. RICO Claims

API alleges that TAG has been stealing cargo from its interstate shipments during inspections and that [33] Sea-Land should be held vicariously liable for these thefts under RICO. HN18[↑] The elements of a RICO claim are (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\). The failure to establish any of these elements is fatal [*1115] to a RICO claim. See Rae v. Union Bank, 725 F.2d 478, 480-81 \(9th Cir. 1984\) (affirming Rule 12\(b\) dismissal of RICO claim where plaintiff failed to meet the "enterprise" requirement).

The court first examines whether API has adequately alleged a pattern of racketeering activity. HN19[↑] RICO defines the term "pattern of racketeering activity" as requiring "at least two acts of racketeering activity ... the last of which occurred within ten years ... after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(5\). Aside from the minimal requirement of showing two predicate acts existed, RICO nowhere addresses the meaning of the term "pattern" as used throughout the statute. In H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Company, the Supreme Court sought to develop a meaningful concept [34] of that term. 492 U.S. 229, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 \(1989\). Drawing on dicta from a previous opinion in which the issue was considered, Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n. 14, the Supreme Court developed from RICO's legislative history a two-prong framework for analysis: HN20[↑] To prove a pattern of racketeering activity a plaintiff or prosecutor must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity." Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. at 239. Thus, the determination of whether a RICO plaintiff is able to establish a pattern of racketeering activity necessarily entails an initial determination of whether the defendants committed two or more predicate acts within the meaning of the RICO statute and, if so, whether the predicate acts were related in a manner such that they created a threat of continued unlawful activity, Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. at 239-43.

³ In fact, the Agreement is pro-competitive because it enables either carrier to compete with the other notwithstanding unexpected operational problems. For example, if a Sea-Land vessel were disabled, a prospective shipper would still have the option of shipping under Sea-Land's tariff and its Bill of Lading, although the cargo would actually be carried on board Matson's vessel. Without the Agreement, the shipper could only ship under Matson's terms.

1. Predicate Acts

Congress has enumerated the predicate acts which may form a basis for a RICO claim in 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\). Of these, API relies on (a) the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951 [35] (relating to interference with commerce, robbery, or extortion), and (b) 18 U.S.C. § 659 (relating to felonious theft from interstate shipment).

a. Hobbs Act

HN21[] The Hobbs Act makes it illegal to obstruct, delay or affect commerce by robbery or extortion; by an attempt or a conspiracy to rob or extort; or by committing or threatening physical violence to a person or property in furtherance of a plan to violate the statute. See 18 U.S.C. § 1951\(a\). API fails to state a cause of action for either robbery or extortion.

The Hobbs Act defines robbery as "the unlawful taking or obtaining of personal property from the person or in the presence of another, against his will, by means of actual or threatened force, or violence, or fear of injury, immediate or future, to his person or property." 18 U.S.C. § 1951\(b\)\(1\). The use of actual or threatened force or violence is an essential element of robbery pursuant to the Hobbs Act. United States v. Smith, 156 F.3d 1046, 1056 (10th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, U.S. , 119 S. Ct. 844 (1999). Thus, the court in United States [36] v. Smith, vacated a conviction for robbery under the Hobbs Act where there was no evidence either that the defendant brandished the guns he stole from the sporting goods store, or that he threatened the store's employees in any way. Id.

API fails to allege facts to support a claim of robbery as defined by § 1951. In fact, API's allegations contradict such a claim. API does not allege that TAG took property from the person or in the presence of another. Nor does API allege that TAG took property by means of actual or threatened force, violence or fear. Rather, API alleges that TAG took property "under the guise of conducting a neutral body inspection of the cargo." Thus, the court concludes that the clandestine activity described by API does not constitute robbery within the meaning of the Hobbs Act.

HN22[] [*1116] Extortion is defined by the Hobbs Act as "the obtaining of personal property from another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence or fear, or under color of right." 18 U.S.C. § 1951\(b\)\(2\) (emphasis added). A plaintiff cannot state a claim of extortion pursuant to the Hobbs Act unless it shows that it parted [37] with property with its consent. Camelio v. American Federation, 137 F.3d 666, 671 (1st Cir. 1998). API's counterclaim expressly states that TAG removed its property "without consent and unlawfully." Thus, while API's counterclaim alleges reprehensible acts, it does not allege a cause of action for extortion under the Hobbs Act.

b. Section 659

HN23[] Section 659 prohibits theft from interstate shipments by carrier. 18 U.S.C. § 659. Only felonious violations of § 659 constitute "racketeering activity" under RICO. See 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\)\(A\). Theft under § 659 is a felony only if the amount or value of the stolen goods exceeds $ 1,000. Thus, while API alleges 20 specific violations of § 659, only four involve the theft of goods valued at over $ 1,000.

2. Continuity

Because the court concludes that API has alleged four predicate acts, that is, four felonious violations of § 659, it must next determine whether these violations constitute a pattern within the meaning of RICO. According to Northwestern Bell, "HN24[] to establish a RICO pattern it must ... be shown that the predicates themselves amount to, or that [38] they otherwise constitute a threat of, continuing racketeering activity." 492 U.S. at 240. The Northwestern Bell Court also explained that there are two alternative ways to satisfy the continuity prong:

"Continuity' is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition." Id. at 241.

a. Closed-Ended Continuity

[HN25] A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time." Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. at 241. This formulation raises the question of how long a substantial period of time is. The Supreme Court has declined to draw a bright line of "substantiality." Id. at 243. The Supreme Court did state, however, that "a few weeks or months" is not enough. Id. at 242. The Ninth Circuit is in accord:

We have found no case in which a court has held the requirement to be satisfied by a pattern of activity lasting less than a year. A pattern of activity lasting [39] only a few months does not reflect the "long term criminal conduct" to which RICO was intended to apply.

Religious Tech. Ctr. v. Wollersheim, 971 F.2d 364, 366-67 & n. 7 (9th Cir. 1992) (collecting cases). Because the alleged predicate acts occurred over only a ten-week period of time, between February 17, 1998 and April 25, 1998, they do not, as a matter of law, constitute acts "extending over a substantial period of time." Thus, the court concludes that API has not established closed-ended continuity.

b. Open-Ended Continuity

[HN26] Continuity may also be demonstrated if the predicate acts "constitute a threat of continuing racketeering activity": "past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition." Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. at 240-41. This enables a RICO plaintiff to establish a pattern in instances in which the action is brought before the racketeering activity has extended over a period long enough to constitute closed-ended continuity. "In such cases, liability depends on whether the threat of continuity is demonstrated." Id. at 242.

[HN27] In assessing whether a threat of continuity exists, [40] courts have looked first to the [*1117] nature of the predicate acts alleged or to the nature of the enterprise at whose behest the predicate acts were performed. See, e.g., GICC Capital Corp. v. Tech. Finance Group, Inc., 67 F.3d 463, 466 (2nd Cir. 1995). Thus, an inherently unlawful act performed at the behest of an enterprise whose business is racketeering activity would automatically give rise to the requisite threat of continuity. Id. Where the nature or conduct of the enterprise does not by itself suggest that the racketeering acts will continue, a plaintiff must point to other external factors. Id.

In this case, although API alleges that "the acts of these Defendants are a continuing course of criminal conduct and racketeering," it does not identify any external factors to support this conclusion. Although API maintains that TAG has engaged in unlawful activities, TAG also engages in legitimate business activities. Thus, because neither the nature of the conduct nor the enterprise itself suggests a continuing threat, API must allege some external basis for believing that the racketeering acts will continue. API has not done so.

Moreover, the four acts that [41] constitute the alleged pattern took place during a ten-week period. More than eight months elapsed between the last alleged predicate act and the filing of the RICO counterclaim. This is a strong indication that the alleged racketeering activity has come to an end. If the racketeering activity has ended, API cannot show open-ended continuity. Religious Tech. Ctr., 971 F.2d at 366-67.

Because the court concludes that API has not established the requisite continuity of the predicate acts, it cannot maintain a claim under RICO. Even if API had alleged sufficient continuity, its RICO contains additional deficiencies. Not only must a RICO plaintiff plead a pattern of racketeering activity, but it must also plead a violation of one of the prohibited RICO activities, as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 1962, and an injury to business or property by reason of such violation. Lightning Lube, Inc. v. Witco Corp., 4 F.3d 1153, 1188 (3rd Cir. 1993). Again, API has not done so.

3. RICO Activities

a. Section 1962\(a\)

HN28 [+] Section 1962\(a\) prohibits not the engagement in racketeering acts to conduct an enterprise affecting interstate commerce, [42] but rather the use or investment of the proceeds of racketeering acts to acquire, establish or operate such an enterprise.⁴ [43] United States v. Robertson, 73 F.3d 249, 251 \(9th Cir. 1996\). Therefore, a § 1962\(a\) claim must include allegations of injury from the use and investment of racketeering proceeds, not merely injury from the predicate acts of racketeering themselves. Nugget Hydroelectric, L.P. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 981 F.2d 429, 437 \(9th Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 908, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 2336 (1993). API alleges only that "moneys derived from TAG's unlawful conduct has [sic] been received by Sea-Land and Matson." API's RICO Case Statement asserts further that "both Sea-Land and Matson as well as TAG receive benefits from the pattern of racketeering," and they "both receive a tangible benefit." These allegations do not describe what, if any, benefits were received, much less "the use or investment of the proceeds of racketeering acts to acquire, establish, or operate" a racketeering enterprise.⁵ Thus, the [*1118] court concludes that API has failed to state a § 1962\(a\) claim.

b. Section 1962\(b\)

HN29 [+] Section 1962\(b\) "prohibits engaging in a racketeering activity to acquire or maintain an interest in or control of an enterprise." Schreiber Distrib. v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1398 \(9th Cir. 1986\). Thus, it requires a specific nexus between the control of the enterprise and the racketeering activity. No such nexus has been alleged.⁶

Moreover, API's § 1962\(b\) claim cannot be based on the alleged predicate [44] acts of interstate theft in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 659 because API never alleges that Sea-Land controlled TAG with respect to violations of 18 U.S.C. § 659. Instead, API simply seeks to hold Sea-Land vicariously liable for TAG's alleged conduct as Sea-Land's alleged agent. That is not sufficient to raise a RICO claim based on § 1962\(b\). Thus, the court concludes that API's § 1962\(b\) claim fails.

c. Section 1962\(c\)

HN30 [+] Section 1962\(c\) renders unlawful the direct or indirect conducting of or participation in a RICO 'enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity' by any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in interstate commerce. United Energy Owners Comm., Inc. v. U.S. Energy Management Sys., Inc., 837 F.2d 356, 359 n. 5 \(9th Cir. 1988\). This section of RICO contains strict pleading requirements:

For the purposes of section 1962\(c\), RICO plaintiffs must allege a defendant -- the "person" or "persons" -- who is distinct from the "enterprise" whose business the defendant is conducting. Under RICO, an "enterprise" is a being different from, not the same as or part of, the [45] person whose behavior the act was designed to

⁴ Section 1962\(a\) provides, in relevant part:

It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt in which such person has participated as a principal within the meaning of [18 U.S.C. § 2], to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.

⁵ API has also failed to "describe the use or the investment of [racketeering] income" as required in the second part of item 11 of the RICO case statement mandated by Local Rule 9.1. Per LR 9.2, noncompliance with LR 9.1 is an independent ground for dismissal of a RICO claim.

⁶ Notably, API failed to "describe in detail the acquisition or maintenance of any interest in or control of the alleged enterprise" as required by item 12 of the RICO case statement.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1102, *1118 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10922, 45

prohibit. Therefore, for purposes of a single action, a corporate defendant cannot be both the RICO person and the RICO enterprise under section 1962\(c\).

Sever v. Alaska Pulp Corp., 978 F.2d 1529, 1533-34 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (citations omitted). Thus, in order to state a claim under § 1962\(c\), a plaintiff must allege an "enterprise" that is distinct and separate from the "person." Rae v. Union Bank, 725 F.2d 478, 481 \(9th Cir. 1984\).

In this case, API has alleged that TAG is both the RICO enterprise and the RICO person. This allegation is evident in API's RICO Case Statement. Item 13 of the court's RICO case statement requires a response to the following inquiry:

If the complaint alleges a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\), state who is employed by or associated with the alleged enterprise, and state whether the same entity is both the liable "person" and the "enterprise" under § 1962\(c\).

API's response provides:

API does not know the names or identities of the individuals employed or associated by TAG but believes that these entities are liable as [46] person and enterprises under 1962(c).

API further states that TAG conducted or participated in the racketeering activity with "certain of its employees (and others acting in concert with them)." Similarly, API alleges that "further agents of TAG and individuals employed by TAG or under TAG's control have committed predicate acts as further set forth in the section below regarding the RICO claims and are together a racketeering enterprise as defined by RICO." The inclusion of additional unidentified entities does not save API's § 1962\(c\) claim. HN31[]. Ninth Circuit law is clear that a RICO person may not be held directly liable under § 1962\(c\), when it and the RICO enterprise are identical.

[*1119] Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit has recognized that:

It would be inconsistent with the language and purpose of section 1962\(c\) to allow plaintiffs to circumvent this rule by naming an employee of the enterprise as the person that conducts the affairs of the enterprise [who is also the employer] and then resorting to the doctrine of respondeat superior [to make his employer liable].

Brady v. Dairy Fresh Prods. Co., 974 F.2d 1149, 1154 \(9th Cir. 1992\). "Respondeat [47] superior and agency liability is inappropriate when the person is the RICO enterprise." Id. Without a proper allegation of a RICO enterprise, none of API's RICO claims can survive. Chang v. Chen, 80 F.3d 1293, 1301 \(9th Cir. 1996\).

d. Section 1962\(d\)

API's failure to allege the requisite substantive elements of a RICO claim under §§ 1962\(a\), \(b\) or \(c\), precludes its attempt to state a RICO conspiracy cause of action under § 1962\(d\). Religious Tech. Ctr. v. Wollersheim, 971 F.2d 364, 367 n. 8 \(9th Cir. 1992\). API does not allege that Matson and Sea-Land are RICO persons; instead, it only alleges that they "are vicariously liable as co-conspirators and/or for nondelегable duties for all of the amounts of damages" caused by TAG. Because TAG is not liable under §§ 1962\(a\), \(b\) or \(c\), Matson and Sea-Land cannot be held vicariously liable or as alleged "co-conspirators" under § 1962\(d\).

e. Amendment of RICO Claim

Apparently cognizant of the deficiencies in its RICO claim, API requests that "should the court consider in any way limiting API's ability to readdress these criminal violations in a RICO case that it [API] be allowed sufficient [48] opportunity to file an amended RICO claim." The Scheduling Order in effect for this case provided a November 3, 1998 deadline for any motions to amend the pleadings. Pursuant to the Ninth Circuit's decision in Johnson v. Mammoth Recreations, Inc., 975 F.2d 604 \(9th Cir. 1992\), a scheduling order shall not be modified except upon a showing of good cause. Id. at 607-08 (holding that standards of Fed. R. Civ. P. 16 apply). To determine if good cause exists, the court focuses primarily on the diligence of the party seeking amendment. Id. at 609.

In this case, Sea-Land identified the failings of API's RICO claims in its January 20, 1999 summary judgment motion. Rather than respond to these deficiencies in its March 3, 1999 opposition to Sea-Land's motion, API merely reiterated its conclusory allegations. Not only does the court conclude that API has not been diligent in seeking to amend its RICO claim, the court recognizes that Sea-Land would be prejudiced were the court to allow such an amendment at this late stage. Therefore, the court denies API's request to amend its RICO claims.

Because the court concludes that API cannot maintain [49] a claim under RICO, Sea-Land's Motion for Summary Judgment as to the RICO count is GRANTED.

III. Maritime Lien Claims

API alleges that Sea-Land "repudiated its agreement to pay API for certain necessities provided to certain of its ships. This breach of contract has given rise to a maritime liens [sic] pursuant to 46 U.S.C. § 31342. API contends that it stuffed (that is, placed) its or its customers' cargo in Sea-Land's containers in preparation for transportation on board Sea-Land's vessels. API also asserts that it performed some drayage of loaded containers. However, it is undisputed that:

1. API is not a stevedore. API never loaded containers on, or provided any stevedoring services to, any of Sea-Land's vessels.
 2. API did not stuff any cargo into containers for loading onto any of Sea-Land's vessels in the vicinity of any of Sea-Land's vessels, or anywhere within marine terminals where Sea-Land's vessels were berthed.
- [*1120] 3. API did not dray any containers within marine terminals to the piers where Sea-Land's vessels were berthed or otherwise assist or participate in the process of loading the containers on board those vessels.

[50] Assuming for purposes of this motion that stuffing and drayage of containers constitute "necessaries" within the meaning of the statute, the court must still determine whether API's services are maritime in nature. See Inbesa America, Inc. v. M/V Anglia, 134 F.3d 1035, 1036-37 n.2 (11th Cir. 1998). The Anglia Court summarized the governing legal principles as follows:

HN32 In order for a contract to fall within the federal admiralty jurisdiction, it must be wholly maritime in nature, or its non-maritime elements must be either insignificant or separable without prejudice to either party. To qualify as maritime, moreover, the elements of a contract must pertain directly to and be necessary for commerce or navigation upon navigable waters.

134 F.3d at 1036. Accord Simon v. Intercontinental Transp. (ICT) B.V., 882 F.2d 1435, 1442 (9th Cir. 1989). The court then cited the more specific rule that "contracts involving cargo are maritime only to the extent that cargo is on a ship or being loaded on or off a ship." Anglia, 134 F.3d at 1037.

Consistent with this rule, courts have repeatedly held that shoreside [51] cargo handling, including trucking ("drayage") and container handling, is not of a "maritime" nature. Luvi Trucking, Inc. v. Sea-Land Service, Inc., 650 F.2d 371, 373-74 (1st Cir. 1981). The First Circuit, in Luvi, noted that the trucker never came in contact with the ship and that the drayage was entirely separable from the ocean part of the voyage.

Likewise, the Eleventh Circuit, in Anglia, discussed Inbesa's contention that its stuffing of cargo into containers to be carried on board the Anglia, as well as stripping cargo from containers carried on the vessel, should give it a maritime lien. Rejecting this contention, the Eleventh Circuit concluded:

Although such services by Inbesa were no doubt important for [the shipowner's] business, they were not "necessary" for the Anglia's operation. Indeed, all of Inbesa's cargo-handling services took place on land without regard to whether the Anglia was in port; Inbesa could have loaded, stuffed, and secured cargo from trucks into containers before the Anglia arrived, and then stripped cargo from containers into warehouses or onto trucks after the Anglia departed We see no reason to blur the line [52] between stevedoring and shoreside cargo-handling that has long been a useful guide for the district courts in determining the scope of their admiralty jurisdiction.

Anglia, 134 F.3d at 1037-38.

Although one district court has recognized a maritime lien for container stuffing and stripping, in Ceres Marine Terminals, Inc. v. M/V Harmen Oldendorff, 913 F. Supp. 919, 928 \(D. Md. 1995\), that court based its decision on the fact that the contract upon which the lien was based, was between the vessel charterer and a stevedore, and therefore was more than tangentially related to maritime affairs. In this case, API is not a stevedore and thus the court employs the analysis adopted by the court in Anglia.

Applying the maritime/non-maritime approach, the undisputed facts show that the facilities where API stuffed containers are about a thirty-minute drive from the marine terminals. Thus, the court concludes, as did the Eleventh Circuit in Anglia, that because API's labor was not "maritime" in nature, it does not give rise to a maritime lien. Accordingly, the court GRANTS summary judgment in favor of Sea-Land on the maritime lien claims.

[53] CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Sea-Land Service, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss and/or for Summary Judgment on [*1121] Atlantic Pacific International, Inc. and A & A Consolidators, Inc.'s First Amended Counterclaim. Sea-Land is entitled to summary judgment on the maritime lien claims, the RICO claims, and all the antitrust claims except the tying claim. This order does not affect API's claims for breach of contract and conversion.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: Honolulu, Hawaii, JUL 12 1999.

DAVID ALAN EZRA

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

June 9, 1999, Argued ; July 13, 1999, Decided

No. 99-1167

Reporter

186 F.3d 781 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15621 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,576

In Re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation.

Subsequent History: [1] Rehearing Denied August 10, 1999, Reported at: 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 18748.

Certiorari Denied February 22, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 1430.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 94 C 897. Charles P. Kocoras, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed in Part, Vacated in Part, and Remanded.

Core Terms

manufacturers, wholesalers, pharmacies, conspiracy, discounts, prescription drug, market power, collusion, prices, brand, price discrimination, brand name, retailers, drugs, damages, district judge, nursing home, high prices, chargeback, customers, increased price, anti trust law, discriminatory, plaintiffs', hypothesis, selling, service fee, competitors, antitrust, arbitrage

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN1 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Price discrimination implies market power, that is, the power to charge a price above cost (including in cost a profit equal to the cost of equity capital) without losing so much business so fast to competitors that the price is unsustainable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

There is no general rule against the possession of market power or the use of price discrimination to exploit it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Competitors are permitted by the antitrust laws (and certainly by the per se rule) to engage in cooperative behavior, under trade association auspices or otherwise, provided they don't reduce competition among themselves or help their suppliers or customers to reduce competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Circumstantial Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There are two ways in which plaintiffs might be able to prove manufacturers' collusion: by presenting direct evidence (admissions or eyewitness accounts) that the manufacturers had agreed to collude; or by presenting circumstantial evidence, economic in character, that their behavior could better be explained on the hypothesis of collusion than on the hypothesis that each was embarked on an individual rather than a concerted course of action - that each, in other words, was merely exploiting the market power it had, rather than seeking to create or amplify such power through an agreement with competitors not to compete.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Since the unilateral exercise of a firm's individual market power does not violate the antitrust laws, preventing the frustration of that exercise through arbitrage is not a violation either.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A consumer may rationally pay more for a trademarked product than for its physically identical substitute merely for the greater assurance of quality that a trademark conveys.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine exempts from antitrust law collusive efforts to obtain governmental protection against the winds of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennigton doctrine does not authorize anticompetitive action in advance of government's adopting the industry's anticompetitive proposal. The doctrine applies when such action is the consequence of legislation or other governmental action, not when it is the means for obtaining such action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The indirect-purchaser doctrine limits the right to bring antitrust overcharge suits to buyers who buy directly from the overcharging sellers rather than indirectly through middlemen.

Counsel: For HJB, INCORPORATED, ENDLESS PHARMACY, INCORPORATED, BARRY'S CUT RATE STORES, INCORPORATED, BRADY'S PHARMACY, INCORPORATED, BRADY'S ENTERPRISES, INCORPORATED, Illinois corporations doing business as Johnson Pharmacy, Plaintiffs - Appellants: George L. Saunders, Jr., SAUNDERS & MONROE, Chicago, IL USA.

For WHOLESALERS, Defendant - Appellee: J. Thomas Rosch, LATHAM & WATKINS, San Francisco, CA USA.

For MANUFACTURERS, Defendant - Appellee: William F. Cavanaugh, JR., PATTERSON, BELKNAP, WEBB & TYLER, New York, NY USA.

Judges: Before Posner, Chief Judge, and Bauer and Easterbrook, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: POSNER

Opinion

[*783] Posner, Chief Judge. Retail pharmacies brought suit under section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, against manufacturers and wholesalers of brand-name prescription drugs, charging that the defendants had conspired to deny discounts to the pharmacies. An additional claim emerged during the course of the litigation--that the defendants had conspired to peg price increases to changes in the Consumer Price Index. After an earlier decision by this court resolved some of the issues, see 123 F.3d 599 \(7th Cir. 1997\), the plaintiffs settled with a number of the defendants and went to trial before a jury against the rest. At the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case in chief on liability, which took eight weeks to present, the district judge granted judgment as a matter of law for the defendants. The appeal challenges both the judge's "bottom line" and a number of his subsidiary [2] rulings.

The evidence shows that the manufacturers of brand name (as distinct from generic) prescription drugs engage in price discrimination in the economic sense, selling the identical product to different customers at different prices even though the manufacturers' cost of selling to them is the same. The favored customers are primarily hospitals, health maintenance organizations, and nursing homes; the disfavored are pharmacies. HN1 [↑] Price discrimination implies market power, that is, the power to charge a price above cost (including in "cost" a profit equal to the cost of equity capital) without losing so much business so fast to competitors that the price is unsustainable. The reason price discrimination implies market power is that assuming the lower of the discriminatory prices covers cost, the higher must exceed cost. HN2 [↑] There is no general rule against the possession of market power or the use of price discrimination to exploit it, but the plaintiffs argue that the source of the drug manufacturers' market power manifested in their discriminatory pricing is collusion, and if this is right they have a case under section 1.

Manufacturers of brand name prescription drugs generally [3] do not sell directly to the retailers of their drugs, that is, to hospitals, HMO's, nursing homes, and pharmacies, but instead sell to wholesalers for resale to the retailers. A wholesaler is compensated for the warehousing and other functions that he performs in the distribution of his drugs through the difference between the price that he pays his supplier and the price at which he resells to retailers. The danger to a price-discriminating drug manufacturer is that a wholesaler might buy at the discounted price more than he needed to supply his hospital, HMO, and nursing home customers and sell the surplus to pharmacies at a price below the nondiscounted price that the manufacturer wanted them to pay. The industry calls this "diversion" (economists call it "arbitrage") and of course dislikes it. Suppose the manufacturer's profit-maximizing price to an HMO for some drug were [*784] $ 40, his price to a pharmacy for the same drug $ 65, and the wholesaler tacked on $ 10 to compensate him for his services in distribution. Suppose that the HMO wanted 10 units of the drug and the pharmacy 2 units. If the wholesaler sold 10 units to the HMO at $ 50 and 2 units to the pharmacy at $ 75, as the manufacturer [4] intended, the latter's total revenue would be $ 530 and the wholesaler's $ 120 (12 x $ 10). If instead the wholesaler told the manufacturer that he needed 12 units for the HMO and none for the pharmacy, and the manufacturer therefore sold him 12 units at $ 40, two of which the wholesaler resold to the pharmacy at some price between $ 50 and $ 75 (say, $ 60), then although the wholesaler's revenue would increase to $ 140 ($ 120 plus the added profit from selling 2 units to the pharmacy for $ 20 above cost rather than $ 10) and the pharmacy would save $ 30, the manufacturer would be worse off; his revenue would decline to $ 480.

Manufacturers could prevent this evasion of their discriminatory pricing scheme by selling directly to the retailers, thus bypassing the wholesalers. The plaintiffs argue that fear that this would happen led the wholesalers to adopt a chargeback system--the focus of this litigation-- under which the manufacturer sets a uniform price to the retailers, contracts directly with the favored retailers for discount prices to them, and reimburses the wholesaler for the difference between that and the full, uniform price. In the previous example, the price to the wholesaler [5] would be a flat $ 65 regardless of whom he was reselling to. But upon proof by him that he had resold to an HMO at, say, $ 60 ($ 50, the price agreed upon between the manufacturer and the HMO, plus the wholesaler's service fee, negotiated with the retailer, for performing the wholesale function, and assumed in this example consistent with the previous one to be $ 10), the manufacturer would reimburse him $ 15. And so he would net the $ 10 service fee to compensate him for performing the wholesaling function. The chargeback system eliminates diversion (arbitrage) by requiring the wholesaler, in order to avoid a loss when he resells at a discounted price, to report to the manufacturer his sales to that customer, so that the manufacturer can determine whether the customer is indeed one entitled to a discount. With the chargeback system in place, the manufacturers were content to sell through the wholesalers rather than directly to the retailers. The latter prefer, other things being equal, to deal with a single supplier who stocks the drugs of the different manufacturers (namely a wholesaler) than with each manufacturer separately. And if the manufacturers took over the wholesaling function, [6] they would have to charge a higher price to the retailers to recover the cost of performing that function.

The plaintiffs presented evidence that the wholesalers adopted the chargeback system collectively rather than individually. Even so, the system would be a per se violation of the Sherman Act--and only per se violations are charged in this case--only if it were either a device for eliminating competition among wholesalers, which is not charged, or an instrument of a conspiracy among the manufacturers to eliminate or reduce competition among themselves. If, instead, each manufacturer was engaged in lawful, noncollusive price discrimination, it would no more be illegal per se for the wholesalers to devise collectively a system by which each manufacturer could engage in discriminatory pricing while selling through wholesalers than it would be illegal per se for them to agree on a standard form for inventorying drugs or a common method of inspecting drugs to make sure they are safe. HN3↑ Competitors are permitted by the antitrust laws (and certainly by the per se rule) to engage in cooperative behavior, under trade association auspices or otherwise, provided they don't reduce competition [7] among themselves, e.g., National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 100-04, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984); Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, I*7851 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979); Polk Bros., Inc. v. Forest City Enterprises, Inc., 776 F.2d 185, 188-89 (7th Cir. 1985), or help their suppliers or customers to reduce competition. Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 727-30, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988); United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Ass'n v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951 (1914); JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., 179 F.3d 1073, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13802, 1999 WL 415499 (7th Cir. 1999); Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430, 1438 (7th Cir. 1986); Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 462 (3d Cir. 1998). If the wholesalers in this case were merely helping individual manufacturers maximize their profits by methods permitted [8] by antitrust law, which include noncollusive price discrimination, there was no violation of antitrust law at either the manufacturer or the wholesaler level.

The plaintiffs had therefore to prove that the defendant manufacturers agreed to deny discounts to them. When last this case was before us, the district judge had denied summary judgment for the manufacturers and so we were required to assume for purposes of the appeal that the manufacturers had indeed colluded. On remand the assumption fell away and the plaintiffs had to prove that the manufacturers had colluded. HN4↑ There were two ways in which they might have been able to do this: by presenting direct evidence (admissions or eyewitness accounts) that the manufacturers had agreed to collude; or by presenting circumstantial evidence, economic in character, that their behavior could better be explained on the hypothesis of collusion than on the hypothesis that each was embarked on an individual rather than a concerted course of action--that each, in other words, was merely exploiting the market power it had, rather than seeking to create or amplify such power through an agreement with competitors not to compete. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); [9] JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., supra, at *4; Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores, 67 F.3d 591, 599 (7th Cir. 1995); Reserve Supply Corp. v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 971

F.2d 37, 48-49 \(7th Cir. 1992\); Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1171-73 \(7th Cir. 1990\); Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, Inc., 176 F.3d 1055, 1999 WL 280497, at * 4-5 \(8th Cir. 1999\); Petrucci's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1233 \(3d Cir. 1993\).

The direct evidence that the plaintiffs emphasize is testimony about a meeting of wholesalers at which representatives of some drug manufacturers, though none who remain in the case after several settled, were present. The subject was the formation of buying groups by pharmacies that hoped they could obtain discounts by forming leagues which would bargain collectively with manufacturers and wholesalers. The participants in the meeting expressed hostility toward such endeavors and indicated a disinclination to grant these groups any discounts. None of the manufacturer defendants was present, as we have said, [\[10\]](#) and there is no evidence that the manufacturers who were represented at the meeting were acting as agents of the defendants. While the testimony might be evidence that the wholesalers agreed not to discount their own service fees to the buying groups, such an agreement is not among the unlawful acts charged. The complaint is not that the wholesalers were trying to eliminate competition among themselves, by fixing prices or credit terms or other competitive dimensions of the wholesale market, as in Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, 100 S. Ct. 1925 \(1980\) (per curiam), but that they were agents of a manufacturers' conspiracy. The joint adoption of a business method or standard, that is, the chargeback system, independent of any design to reduce competition at either the manufacturer or the [\[*786\]](#) wholesaler level, would not raise questions under the per se rule.

The only other direct evidence of a manufacturers' conspiracy that merits consideration is a scattering of internal company documents indicating anxiety that competitors might decide to grant such discounts. All firms worry about price cutting by their competitors; these worries are [\[11\]](#) not evidence of price fixing. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., supra, 465 U.S. at 763. Here they were, if anything, evidence of the contrary, since there is no indication that anyone employed by a manufacturer thought that such price cutting to pharmacies as occurred was in violation of an agreement among the manufacturers. Most of the anxiety about price, moreover, was expressed not by the manufacturers but by the wholesalers. Remember that there are two kinds of price involved in the distribution of brand name prescription drugs--the prices negotiated between the manufacturers and the retailers, and the wholesalers' service fees. The wholesalers feared the shaving of their service fees by aggressively bargaining buyer groups. That fear has nothing to do with the issues in this case.

The plaintiffs' principal economic evidence was that brand name prescription drugs are indeed priced discriminatorily, to the detriment of the pharmacies; that discrimination requires (and thus demonstrates the existence of) market power; and that the chargeback system facilitates discrimination. The defendants spent days cross-examining the plaintiffs' principal economic witness, [\[12\]](#) Professor Robert Lucas, and ultimately persuaded the district judge to exclude most of his testimony under the rule of Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 \(1993\). But what was objectionable about his evidence actually had nothing to do with Daubert; it was that the evidence mainly concerned a matter not in issue--that the manufacturers of brand name prescription drugs engage in price discrimination, showing that they have market power. Everyone knows this. The question is whether that market power owes anything to collusion. (Even if it did, we remind that to obtain damages the plaintiffs would have to separate the price effects of collusion from the price effects of the plaintiffs' lawful market power. Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin v. Marshfield Clinic, 152 F.3d 588, 593-94 \(7th Cir. 1998\).) On that, Lucas had virtually nothing to say. It is irrelevant, therefore, that, as the plaintiffs point out, the district judge erred in excluding Lucas's testimony on the grounds that he did--that Lucas had not studied the prescription drug industry in depth and had formulated his tentative opinion [\[13\]](#) after working on the case for only 40 hours. His opinion that there is price discrimination in the prescription drug industry is one that an economist of Lucas's distinction should have been able to reach in even less time. Indeed the existence of price discrimination should have been removed as an issue at trial by a stipulation of the parties.

The judge also excluded the evidence of another of the plaintiffs' economic experts, Professor Jeffrey Perloff, on an erroneous ground. Perloff's evidence was that the chargeback system is designed to prevent arbitrage. True--and it should have been stipulated as true--but irrelevant for the reasons explained earlier. The judge thought Perloff had given insufficient weight to the fact that federal law limits the resale of prescription drugs by some of the favored retailers; but we had discussed that law in our previous opinion and explained that it could not be relied upon to prevent arbitrage. 123 F.3d at 603. The important point is that HN5↑] since the unilateral exercise of a firm's individual market power does not violate the antitrust laws, preventing the frustration of that exercise through arbitrage is not a violation either.

[14] Paradoxical as this may seem, market power is found in many highly competitive [*787] markets, for example the markets for scholarly books and journals. (The phenomenon is sometimes referred to as "monopolistic competition.") Publishers of scholarly books commonly publish the same book in hardcover and paperback versions at prices that differ by far more than the difference in costs, and publishers of scholarly journals commonly charge a much higher price to libraries than to individuals even though the cost of making and selling the journal is identical to both classes of purchaser. These price differences are possible because the book, or journal, lacks perfect substitutes (copyright law prevents the sale of identical substitutes without the copyright holder's consent). Brand name prescription drugs ordinarily are patented, and, though the patent may have expired, the physicians who prescribe the drug may continue to prescribe the branded version rather than the generic substitute, whether out of inertia, or because they think the branded version may be produced under better quality control (the rationale for trademarks), or because the patient may feel greater confidence in a familiar [15] brand. The same thing is true if the original brand, whether or not still protected by a patent, now has a therapeutically close substitute sold under a brand name that is less familiar to physicians or patients than the original brand.

It would not be surprising, therefore, if every manufacturer of brand name prescription drugs had some market power. If so, every manufacturer would charge different prices depend on the elasticity of demand of different classes of purchaser with respect to price (that is, the responsiveness of quantity demanded to a change in price). The least elastic demanders are the pharmacies, because they must stock a full range of drugs in order to be able to fill prescriptions. They can therefore be expected to be charged the highest prices. In contrast, a hospital, nursing home, or HMO or other managed-care enterprise has a more elastic demand because it can influence (for example through a "formulary," a list of approved or recommended drugs) the physician's choice of which brand (or no brand--a generic) to prescribe. A slight increase in the price of one brand to such a purchaser might cause the manufacturer's sales of that brand to plummet. That manufacturers [16] of brand name prescription drugs grant discounts to the enterprises we have listed but refuse to grant discounts to pharmacies is thus consistent with unilateral profit-maximizing behavior by the manufacturers.

The alternative hypothesis is that the manufacturers refuse to grant discounts to pharmacies because they have agreed among themselves not to. As there is neither an a priori reason nor direct evidence to suppose this hypothesis more likely than the first, and as the plaintiffs bore the burden of persuasion, it was necessary for them to present economic evidence that would show that the hypothesis of collusive action was more plausible than that of individual action. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587-88, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\); City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chemicals, Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 571-72 \(11th Cir. 1998\).

They did not, however, as the defendant manufacturers rather absurdly argue, have to exclude all possibility that the manufacturers' price discrimination was unilateral rather than collusive. That would imply that the plaintiff in an antitrust case must prove a violation of the antitrust [17] laws not by a preponderance of the evidence, not even by proof beyond a reasonable doubt (as indeed is required in criminal antitrust cases), but to a 100 percent certainty, since any lesser degree of certitude would leave a possibility that the defendant was innocent.

The plaintiffs are equally wide of the mark, however, when they argue that proof of price discrimination shifts to the defendants the burden of proving that the discrimination was unilateral rather than collusive. Because price discrimination is as consistent with individual as with collusive behavior, mere proof that discrimination exists does not support, even weakly, [*788] an inference of collusion. The plaintiffs have the burden of rebutting, by the normal civil standard of a preponderance of the evidence, the hypothesis of individual maximizing action. They failed to come up with any evidence. Lucas did testify that he thought the demand by pharmacies no less elastic than that by hospitals, HMO's, and nursing homes, and if so--if the manufacturers of brand name prescription drugs have no significant market power individually, since they appear to have no significant market power with respect to those other customers--this [18] would suggest that higher prices to pharmacies are the product of collusion. But this part of Lucas's testimony was properly excluded, or alternatively entitled to no weight, because it rested on a demonstrated lack of knowledge about the competitive significance of formularies--the lists of approved or recommended drugs that hospitals, nursing homes, and HMO's and other managed-care enterprises issue. He said that a pharmacy could issue a formulary. It could, but no one would pay any attention to it, because a pharmacy, unlike a hospital, nursing home, or other provider of medical care, has no clout with doctors, the ones who actually order prescription drugs. There is no evidence that pharmacies issue formularies.

The record does contain a study by a consulting firm which found that many branded drugs have close therapeutic substitutes; this of course is true, but most books also have close substitutes, yet individual books are sufficiently distinctive to enable the publisher to price his books on a discriminatory basis even though he is not colluding with any other publisher. HN6[] A consumer may rationally pay more for a trademarked product than for its physically identical substitute [19] merely for the greater assurance of quality that a trademark conveys. 1 J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 2:5, p. 2-8 (4th ed. 1996); Power Test Petroleum Distributors, Inc. v. Calcu Gas, Inc., 754 F.2d 91, 98 \(2d Cir. 1985\); Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. General Mills Fun Group, 611 F.2d 296, 303 \(9th Cir. 1979\). And all that really matters is that physicians, for whatever reason, in writing prescriptions tend to write a brand name rather than the generic (chemical) name. It is this practice that forces pharmacies to carry a full line of brands and thus prevents them from credibly threatening a manufacturer with refusing to stock his brand unless he offers a discount.

Since the market power conferred by a patent or trademark would vary across brands, evidence of uniform discounts (for example, that all HMO's received a 20 percent discount from the full price on all brands) might be indicative of a conspiracy. The plaintiffs contended in rebuttal at the oral argument of the appeal that this was the case here, but their brief does not make the argument or point to evidence in the record that might support it, so it is forfeited.

[20] All this leaves of the plaintiffs' case is their claim that in the early 1990s the defendant manufacturers agreed among themselves to peg future price increases to the Consumer Price Index. There is enough evidence of such an agreement to create a triable fact. For example, an internal memorandum of defendant Burroughs Wellcome, dated September 1993 and entitled "Price Escalation Proposal," states that "the industry has generally agreed to informally keep its prices in line with CPI or CPI plus 1 to 2 %." The document is subject to interpretation (as is the other evidence, unnecessary to describe, that also supports the claim), but the interpretation of ambiguous documentary evidence of collusion is for the jury. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., supra, 465 U.S. at 765-66 and n. 11; In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599, 614 \(7th Cir. 1997\); Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, Inc., supra, at * 5. The district judge threw out the CPI claim not because it was unfounded but because he thought it barred by HN7[] the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which exempts from antitrust law collusive efforts [21] to obtain governmental [*789] protection against the winds of competition. E.g., Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\); Premier Electrical Construction Co. v. National Electrical Contractors Ass'n, Inc., 814 F.2d 358, 371 \(7th Cir. 1987\); Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466, 471 \(7th Cir. 1982\). During the period of the alleged CPI conspiracy, the prescription drug industry was under political pressure to limit price increases. Had the industry wanted to obtain a law that would limit annual increases to the rate of inflation as measured by the CPI, plus modest additions, they could without antitrust liability have negotiated the proposal among themselves even though this would have involved their agreeing on how much to seek from government in the way of permitted price increases.

But they didn't want a law; they wanted (they say) to ward off a price-control law by being good boys and keeping their price increases moderate. The distinction is not [22] critical; opposing legislation is a way of participating in the legislative process just as proposing legislation is. It would not make sense to interpret Noerr-Pennington in such a way as to encourage industries to channel all their legislative activity into proposing laws (here perhaps a law against passing a price-control law!). But HN8[] the doctrine does not authorize anticompetitive action in advance of government's adopting the industry's anticompetitive proposal. The doctrine applies when such action is the consequence of legislation or other governmental action, not when it is the means for obtaining such action (or in this case inaction). FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 425, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct.

768 (1990); Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 503, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988); Sandy River Nursing Care v. Aetna Casualty, 985 F.2d 1138, 1142-43 (1st Cir. 1993). Otherwise every cartel could immunize itself from antitrust liability by the simple expedient of seeking governmental sanction for the cartel after it was up and going.

The district judge thus erred in throwing [23] out the CPI claim on Noerr-Pennington grounds, and he also erred in treating the doctrine as a rule of evidence that forbids the introduction of evidence (specifically, testimony by a corporate executive named David Landslide) relating to efforts to obtain governmental protection to show that the industry has indeed jumped the gun and begun to cartelize before getting governmental sanction for cartelization. United Mine Workers v. Pennington, supra, 381 U.S. at 670 and n. 3; MCI Communications Corp. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1160 (7th Cir. 1983). Such evidence can be excluded under Fed. R. Evid. R. 403 if confusing or unduly prejudicial, Weit v. Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co., 641 F.2d 457, 466-67 (7th Cir. 1981), but there is no blanket rule of inadmissibility.

There is, however, a potential issue of waiver that beclouds the charge of a CPI conspiracy. In one of their briefs the last time this case was here, the plaintiffs told us that none of them intended to assert a claim for damages based on such a charge, that the evidence of the conspiracy would be used only to establish the existence of a "culture [24] of collusion" in the industry. To establish damages the plaintiffs would have to prove that the price of brand name prescription drugs would have been higher (and by how much) had the defendants not agreed to peg price increases to the CPI. Since the defendants may have been seeking to moderate their price increases in order to ward off price controls, the price-fixing conspiracy (if there was one) may have resulted in lower rather than higher prices, in which event the defendants' customers were not harmed and cannot obtain damages. Israel Travel Advisory Service, Inc. v. Israel Identity Tours, Inc., 61 F.3d 1250, 1256-57 (7th Cir. 1995).

[*790] What is more, in our previous opinion we held that HN9 the indirect-purchaser doctrine, which limits the right to bring antitrust overcharge suits to buyers who buy directly from the overcharging sellers rather than indirectly through middlemen, Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), would bar the plaintiffs from recovering damages unless the wholesalers were members of the manufacturers' conspiracy. 123 F.3d at 604-07. The plaintiffs point to no evidence that any [25] of the defendant wholesalers were members of a CPI conspiracy, so it's difficult to see how the plaintiffs could recover any damages even if they could prove that they paid higher prices as a result of such a conspiracy. They did present evidence (albeit insufficient, as we have seen) that the wholesalers were part of a manufacturers' conspiracy to charge discriminatory prices, but that is separate from the alleged CPI conspiracy and anyway the wholesalers are now out of the case.

In the present appeal, however, the plaintiffs argue that the conspiracy did result in higher prices, and the defendants do not let out a peep about the indirect purchaser doctrine. And while reminding us that the plaintiffs had previously foresworn a claim of damages based on that alleged conspiracy they do not argue that the claim is waived, barred by the doctrine of judicial estoppel or by the law of the case doctrine, or otherwise unavailable. They thus have waived waiver. E.g., United States v. Woods, 148 F.3d 843, 849 n. 1 (7th Cir. 1998); Riemer v. Illinois Dept. of Transportation, 148 F.3d 800, 804 n. 4 (7th Cir. 1998); United States v. Layeni, 319 U.S. App. D.C. 291, 90 F.3d 514, 522 (D.C. Cir. 1996). [26] (This is an almost incomprehensible lapse, since several of the district judge's evidentiary rulings, which he'll now have to revisit, indicate that he assumed that there was no CPI price-fixing charge.) They put all their eggs in the Noerr-Pennington basket--mistakenly, because as we have seen there is no tenable defense based on the doctrine of those cases.

The judgment is therefore vacated so far as the CPI charges are concerned, and otherwise affirmed (which means that the wholesalers are dismissed from the case), and the case is remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion. We suggest that before proceeding to trial on the CPI issue, the district judge require the plaintiffs to show that they have (in light of the doubts we've expressed) a viable theory of damages; if they do not, there would be no point in a trial on liability, as they do not appear to be seeking injunctive relief against the alleged CPI conspiracy. But these details remain to be sorted out on remand.

Affirmed in Part, Vacated in Part, and Remanded.

End of Document

United States v. Andreas

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

July 13, 1999, Filed ; July 15, 1999, Docketed

96 CR 762

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11166 *; 1999 WL 515484

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA v. MICHAEL D. ANDREAS; MARK E. WHITACRE; TERRANCE S. WILSON; and KAZUTOSHI YAMADA, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Government's motions for upward enhancement of sentences of Michael D. Andreas and Terrance S. Wilson DENIED. Andreas' and Wilson's motions for downward departures of their sentence DENIED in their entirety. Government's motion to consider alleged citric acid conspiracy as relevant conduct to determine base offense level for Andreas and Wilson DENIED.

Core Terms

conspiracy, sentence, lysine, citric acid, departure, downward, co-conspirators, enhancement, base offense, encouragement, relevant conduct, aggressive, calculation, antitrust, guideline, offenses, price-fixing, disparity, contends, adjusted, commerce, culpable, motions, cooperation, convincing, producers, reduction, asserts, upward, acceptance of responsibility

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Presentence Reports

HN1 [down arrow] Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

Under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 6A1.3, a sentencing court may appropriately conduct an inquiry broad in scope, largely unlimited either as to the kind of information it may consider, or the source from which the information may come without regard for the rules of evidence.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Presentence Reports

HN2 [down arrow] Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

Under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2R1.1, a court is allowed to upwardly adjust an offense level based on the amount of affected commerce.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN3 Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

Pursuant to U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.3\(a\)\(2\), district courts must increase a defendant's base offense level to account for relevant conduct, which includes all acts and omissions committed by a defendant that are part of a common scheme or plan as the offense of conviction. It needs only to be proven by a preponderance of the evidence - not beyond a reasonable doubt.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN4 Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

Under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.3\(a\)\(2\), offenses are part of the same course of conduct if they are sufficiently connected or related to each other as to warrant the conclusion that they are part of a single episode, spree, or ongoing series of offenses. Factors to consider in determining whether the purported relevant conduct is part of the common scheme include: the degree of similarity between the offenses, the regularity of the offenses, the time interval between the offenses, and whether the charged and uncharged offenses share common victims, accomplices, common purpose, or similar modus operandi.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN5 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

Participants in an antitrust conspiracy can withdraw or abandon the conspiracy by committing affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicating those acts in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN6 Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

District courts can depart from a relevant guideline provision if there exists an aggravating or mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines that should result in a sentence different from that described. In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, courts apply a three-part test to determine whether to grant motions for downward departure for unmentioned or extraordinary circumstances. The test considers whether an aspect of the case potentially removes it from the prescribed sentencing range, whether the Commission has proscribed any consideration of the factor as a categorical matter, and whether there is an aggravating or mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines that should result in a sentence different from that described.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Departures From Guidelines > Downward Departures > Coercion & Duress

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Entrapment

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN7 [Downward Departures, Coercion & Duress]

Aggressive encouragement of wrongdoing may be used as a basis for departure under the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 5K2.12 where defendants who are predisposed are pressured unduly by the government to go forward with a criminal offense.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Corrections, Modifications & Reductions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN8 [Sentencing, Corrections, Modifications & Reductions]

Downward departures based on disparity in sentences between co-conspirators are available where the disparity is unjustified and results from an improper application of the relevant guideline provisions.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Adjustments & Enhancements > Mitigating Role

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN9 [Adjustments & Enhancements, Mitigating Role]

Where a defendant requests a decrease in his offense level, he has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he is substantially less culpable than the average participant in order to warrant a reduction under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3B1.2.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Adjustments & Enhancements > Aggravating Role

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN10 [Adjustments & Enhancements, Aggravating Role]

In order for U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3B1.1\(a\) to apply, a court must find that the defendant managed or organized a conspiracy that involved five participants or was otherwise extensive, and was substantially more culpable vis-a-vis his co-conspirators over whom he must have had some real and direct influence, aimed at furthering the criminal activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN11[Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

In order to determine whether a defendant was an organizer or leader in a conspiracy, the court must consider the defendant's exercise of decision making authority, the nature of the defendant's participation in the commission of the offense, the degree of the defendant's participation in planning or organizing the offense, if the defendant claimed a right to a larger share of the fruits of the crime, the nature and scope of the illegal activity, and the degree of control and authority exercised over others.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Adjustments & Enhancements > Acceptance of Responsibility

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN12[Adjustments & Enhancements, Acceptance of Responsibility

The U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual provides for a two-point decrease in an offense level if a defendant clearly demonstrates acceptance of responsibility for his offense.

Counsel: For MICHAEL D ANDREAS, defendant (96-CR-762-1): James T. Phalen, John M. Bray, Schwab, Donnenfeld, Bray & Silbert, Washington, DC.

For MICHAEL D ANDREAS, defendant (96-CR-762-1): Kevin M Dinan, John David Shakow, King & Spalding, Washington, DC.

For MICHAEL D ANDREAS, defendant (96-CR-762-1): Joseph J. Duffy, Stetler & Duffy, Ltd., Chicago, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-1): Philip A. Guentert, United States Attorney's Office, Chicago, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-1): Jerry Michael Santangelo, Neal, Gerber & Eisenberg, Chicago, IL.

For MARK E WHITACRE, defendant (96-CR-762-2): Bill T Walker, Attorney at Law, Granite City, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-2): Philip A. Guentert, United States Attorney's Office, Chicago, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-2): Jerry Michael Santangelo, Neal, Gerber & Eisenberg, [*2] Chicago, IL.

For TERRANCE S WILSON, defendant (96-CR-762-3): Robert W Fleishman, Mark J. Hulkower, Reid H. Weingarten, Steptoe & Johnson, Washington, DC.

For TERRANCE S WILSON, defendant (96-CR-762-3): Kristina M.L. Anderson, Attorney at Law, Chicago, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-3): Philip A. Guentert, United States Attorney's Office, Chicago, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-3): Jerry Michael Santangelo, Neal, Gerber & Eisenberg, Chicago, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-4): Philip A. Guentert, United States Attorney's Office, Chicago, IL.

U. S. Attorneys (96-CR-762-4): Jerry Michael Santangelo, Neal, Gerber & Eisenberg, Chicago, IL.

Judges: BLANCHE M. MANNING, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: BLANCHE M. MANNING

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This matter is before the court on the parties' motions regarding the imposition of sentences for defendants Michael D. Andreas, Mark E. Whitacre,¹ and Terrance S. Wilson. HN1[[↑]] A sentencing court "may appropriately conduct an inquiry broad in scope, largely unlimited either as to the kind of information she may consider, or the source from which it may come . . . without regard for the rules of evidence." U.S.S. [*3] G. § 6A1.3; United States v. Gerstein, 104 F.3d 973, 978 \(7th Cir. 1997\); see also United States v. Taylor, 72 F.3d 533, 543 \(7th Cir. 1995\).

I. Base offense levels proposed in the defendants' [*4] presentence investigation reports²

In a presentence investigation report (PSI) prepared by the United States Probation Office, applying the 1998 edition of the sentencing guidelines, Andreas has a proposed base offense level of 10 under the U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1 for the one-count violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN2[[↑]] Under § 2R1.1, the court is allowed to upwardly adjust the offense level based on the amount of "affected commerce" - here, [*5] dry domestic lysine. In a prior pretrial ruling, the court adopted the definition of "affected commerce" established in United States v. Hayter Oil Co., 51 F.3d 1265 \(6th Cir. 1995\), meaning that defendants were per se liable for all domestic dry lysine sales during the conspiracy period which, according to the PSI, was approximately $ 168 million which easily exceeds the $ 100 million adjustment level in the table at § 2R1.1\(b\)\(2\)\(G\). Thus, the adjusted sentence based solely on the antitrust offense alone, stands at a level 17.

The PSI also concluded that Andreas deserved a 4-level upward adjustment, pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1\(a\), for his role as a manager, organizer, and leader of the lysine conspiracy. Specifically, the PSI noted that the evidence adduced at trial had shown that co-defendants Wilson and Whitacre had reported to Andreas who, himself, had actively negotiated and represented ADM at several important price and volume allocation meetings, particularly the 1993 Irvine, California meeting. After combining the § 2R1.1\(b\)\(2\)\(G\) & § 3B1.1\(a\) upward adjustments, the PSI concluded that Andreas' total offense level is 21, placing Andreas in Zone D of [*6] the sentencing table with a sentence ranging from 37 to 46 months, but with a statutory maximum, under 15 U.S.C. § 1, of three years (36 months).

Likewise, Whitacre's PSI recommends an adjusted base offense level of 14. Whitacre, unlike Andreas, cooperated with the government and, as a matter of law, was no longer a member of the conspiracy on and after October 1992, once Whitacre began his cooperation with the government's investigation of the conspiracy. Like Andreas, the PSI recommends no downward adjustment for acceptance of responsibility stating that "[Whitacre] has not demonstrated an affirmative acceptance of responsibility for his criminal activity." Whitacre Presentence Investigation Report at 7. Due to Whitacre's position as manager of ADM's BioProducts Division, the PSI reasoned that Whitacre deserved an upward adjustment, under § 3B1.1\(b\) for supervising five or more co-conspirators (ADM salespersons) involved.

Wilson's PSI calculates his base offense level to be 10 upwardly adjusted by 7 levels for the amount of affected commerce. The PSI further reasons that Wilson arguably deserves an upward adjustment, pursuant to § 3B1.1\(b\), for his role [*7] in the conspiracy, namely, establishing a phony trade association to conceal the conspiracy meetings and training his co-conspirators how to manipulate sales volume to regulate the price agreement. Noting Wilson's confidence, demeanor and knowledge demonstrated in surreptitiously recorded videotapes of several conspiracy meetings, the PSI concludes that Wilson was clearly a top organizer and leader of the conspiracy.

¹ To date, the court has received no motions or objections from Whitacre or his counsel concerning sentencing other than his motion to waive his physical appearance and to be sentenced via videoconferencing. Whitacre's motion is denied in part since amazingly the state-of-the-art Edgefield Federal Correctional Institute in South Carolina, Whitacre's current penal institution, has no video link with the U.S. Courts. Hence, his sentencing must be performed via telephonic conference call. Whitacre rode on the coat tails of the successful joint motion of Andreas and Wilson with respect to the imposition of the alternative fine provision under 18 U.S.C. § 3571\(d\). However, absent filing his own motions, such will not be the case for any remaining sentencing issues.

² The court pauses to commend the thorough and professional presentence investigation reports prepared by the U.S. Probation Office. This case presented highly complex sentencing issues involving antitrust law never confronted by any court, or its probation officers, in the Northern District of Illinois. The detailed synthesis of the facts and applicable sentencing guidelines provided invaluable assistance to the court and promoted the speedy resolution (when compared to the sheer girth of the case) of this prolonged sentencing phase.

II. Relevant Conduct: Citric Acid

During oral argument on his post-trial motions, Andreas argued that it would be fundamentally unfair and offensive to due process to punish him for conduct - participating in a sales volume allocation agreement - which has never been expressly adjudicated an illegal act. The court disagreed since Andreas' claim ignored a critical factual predicate - that the sales volume allocation was used in furtherance of price-fixing agreements that are clearly illegal.

Andreas again rings the due process bell and this time he is absolutely correct. Andreas' asserts that the government, under the cover of U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3, is attempting to unfairly inflate his sentence by tacking on his purported conduct in the alleged citric acid conspiracy [*8] as "relevant conduct" to calculate the base offense level for the lysine conviction.³ Andreas contends that the government is unfairly casting the citric acid conspiracy as "relevant conduct" in order to circumvent another criminal trial and punish him for uncharged and unproven allegations with the aid of a lower burden of proof.

HN3 U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3\(a\)\(2\) is popular with prosecutors since district courts must increase the defendant's base offense level to account for "relevant conduct" which includes "all acts and omissions committed . . . by the defendant," U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3\(a\)\(1\)\(A\), that are "part of . . . a common scheme or plan as the offense of conviction," which needs only to be proven by a preponderance of the evidence - not beyond a reasonable doubt. U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3\(a\)\(2\); United States v. Crockett, 82 F.3d 722, 729 (7th Cir. 1996); United States v. Duarte, 950 F.2d 1255, 1263 (7th Cir. 1991). HN4 Offenses [*9] are part of the same course of conduct if they are 'sufficiently connected or related to each other as to warrant the conclusion that they are part of a single episode, spree, or ongoing series of offenses.' United States v. Patel, 131 F.3d 1195, 1203 (7th Cir. 1997). Factors to consider in determining whether the purported "relevant conduct" is part of the common scheme include: (1) the degree of similarity between the offenses; (2) the regularity of the offenses; (3) the time interval between the offenses; and (4) whether the charged and uncharged offenses share common victims, accomplices, common purpose, or similar modus operandi. Taylor, 72 F.3d at 548; United States v. Acosta, 85 F.3d 275, 281 (7th Cir. 1996). These factors are limited by the fact that U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3\(a\)\(2\) "must not be read to encompass any offense that is similar in kind to the offense of conviction but that does not bear the required relationship to that offense." United States v. Bacallao, 149 F.3d 717, 720 (7th Cir. 1998); United States v. Beler, 20 F.3d 1428, 1432 (7th Cir. 1994); see also Duarte, 950 F.2d at 1263. [*10] The obvious unfairness of this practice has been lamented in numerous Seventh Circuit opinions, but has been held perfectly legal by the Supreme Court. See United States v. Grayson, 438 U.S. 41, 57 L. Ed. 2d 582, 98 S. Ct. 2610 (1978).

Here, the government asserts that the degree of similarity weighs in their favor since the price-fixing involved in the lysine conspiracy and as alleged with respect to citric acid conspiracy, are antitrust violations involving complex economic and business principles. This argument is frequently raised in drug conspiracy cases where the government moves to enhance a pusher's sentence based on evidence of prior drug purchases made in close temporal proximity to the indicted offense. See, e.g., United States v. Cedano-Rojas, 999 F.2d 1175 (7th Cir. 1993) (prior drug quantities included); Acosta, 85 F.3d at 281-82 (same); but see Patel, 131 F.3d at 1203-05; Beler, 20 F.3d at 1432; Duarte, 950 F.2d at 1263-64 (no relevant conduct enhancement).

At best, however, the evidence shows that Andreas and Wilson might have learned some tricks from past conduct [*11] which they apparently put to use in the lysine conspiracy. Hence, citric acid is an "offense that is similar in kind" but not necessarily part of the common lysine scheme or plan. Crockett, 82 F.3d at 730 ("it is not, of course, enough that the conduct in question merely involved drugs"). The record provides precious little details about the precise scope of the alleged citric acid conspiracy. We do know that, with the possible exception of Wilson and Andreas, the government has never linked any of the other lysine conspirators with citric acid. Nor is it likely to do so since, none of the foreign lysine producers are in the citric acid market. There was no communication or interaction between the lysine producers and the alleged citric acid conspirators. Moreover, the two conspiracies involved different markets with different victims, and the lysine conspiracy did not depend on the citric acid conspiracy for its success.

³ The court's analysis applies equally to defendant Wilson.

Nothing in the record even remotely suggests that the lysine conspiracy and the alleged citric acid conspiracy - the existence of which remains unproven, uncharged, and unadmitted by both Andreas and Wilson - are part of a single "crime spree." The [*12] government asserts that the court can merely conclude that fact based on the unrebutted testimony of ADM executive Barrie Cox. Recall, Cox testified that Andreas and Wilson were involved in an alleged conspiracy to fix the prices of citric acid. Just to be clear, despite the government's assertions to the contrary, the court never conclusively held that the lysine conspiracy was, as a matter of fact, patterned after the citric acid conspiracy. Twice, over vociferous defense objections, the court held that notwithstanding Fed. R. Evid. 404\(b\), the citric acid evidence was admissible for the very narrow purpose of placing the numerous lysine conversations into context and to establish the defendants' knowledge and intent to commit the lysine offense. The jury was instructed not to consider the evidence for any other substantive purpose and therefore, the defendants' conviction for the lysine offense has absolutely no factual bearing, as a matter of law, on the existence of the alleged citric acid conspiracy.

That said, the court agrees that the lysine conspiracy and the alleged citric acid conspiracy share only one proven similarity - they are agricultural products. However, [*13] as Andreas notes, the alleged citric acid conspiracy involved different victims, corporate conspirators, and geography. The only evidence establishing the participation of Wilson and Andreas or when the citric acid conspiracy transpired is Barrie Cox's testimony. Simply put, the court did not find Cox's uncorroborated testimony, by itself, convincing enough to conclude that Andreas and Wilson were involved in an unindicted, let alone, unproven criminal offense of the magnitude alleged.

It is simply ludicrous to conclude that citric acid is "relevant conduct" for Andreas when the government's star witness on the subject freely admits that he did not know if Andreas was ever even involved in the alleged relevant conduct. As for Wilson, the court is reminded by the Seventh Circuit's stern admonitions that § 1B1.3\(a\)\(2\) "should not be applied to offenses [that are] of the same kind, but not encompassed in the same conduct or plan" as the convicted offenses." Belar, 20 F.3d at 1432. Again, with the possible exception of Wilson and Andreas, none of the lysine conspirators were involved in the alleged citric acid conspiracy. The evidence elicited at trial against Wilson [*14] and Andreas was not admitted as substantive evidence of their involvement in the citric acid conspiracy. Apart from Cox's uncorroborated testimony the court has no other reliable evidence that shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that either Wilson or Andreas was involved with the alleged citric acid conspiracy. Absent other corroboration, such as audio and videotapes showing that this alleged conspiracy existed, the court will not assume that one exists (or ever existed) based on the government's promise. Accordingly, the alleged citric acid conspiracy is excluded as relevant conduct for the purposes of calculating the base offense level of any of the defendants. Accordingly, the court will exclude all references and evidence of citric acid from the base offense levels of all the defendants.

To avoid injecting any confusion into the inevitable appeal in this action, the court admits that there is seeming inconsistency to say that Cox's testimony is admissible to prove the existence of the lysine conspiracy, but then disregard it for purposes of aggregating the defendants' sentences. However, as Judge Rovner very recently noted in [United States v. Ruiz, 178 F.3d 877, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 9353, 1999 WL 305062 \[*15\] \(7th Cir. 1999\)](#):

While the terminology is similar to that used in Rule 404\(b\) evaluations, the focus is different. Under Rule 404\(b\), the question is whether the conduct is close enough in time and similar enough in nature to be relevant to a determination of intent, knowledge, etc. In contrast, the issue under sec. 1B1.3 is whether the conduct is close enough in time and character to constitute a single course of conduct or common scheme. . . . conduct which satisfies the Rule 404\(b\) test may nevertheless not constitute relevant conduct for sentencing purposes. (emphasis added).

At times evidence that is admissible despite 404(b) limitations nevertheless is irrelevant for purposes of U.S.S.G. 1B1.3\(a\)\(2\) because the conduct was not, in sum and substance, part of the same common scheme or plan for which the defendants were convicted. Patel, 131 F.3d at 1203-04. For the longest time, the Department of Justice's Antitrust Division has convened at least one grand jury in California to investigate an alleged citric acid conspiracy. According to representations by the government and the testimony of ADM executive Barrie Cox, defendant Wilson is likely [*16] a primary focus of the citric acid investigation. But the court respectfully reminds the government that Cox's testimony regarding citric acid was, over repeated defense objections based on Fed. R. Evid. 404\(b\), admitted for the limited purpose of: (1) placing the co-conspirators' recorded conversations and testimony in context; and (2) proving the defendants possessed the requisite intent to form the price-fixing agreement. That is what the government did and the court is not going to allow the government to do an end run around another trial by aggregating the sentences of Andreas and Wilson for a separate uncharged and unproven offense where there is absolutely no reliable evidence that the citric acid offense was directly part of the lysine scheme. As the record stands, the alleged citric acid conspiracy is merely similar in character, but not part of the same criminal scheme and will not be deemed relevant conduct attributable to the defendants' base offense levels.

III. Scope of the Conspiracy

Since the fine calculation for U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1 depends on the amount of "affected commerce" during the life of the conspiracy, the government has tendered numerous documentary [*17] and testimonial evidence which it believes establishes that the lysine conspiracy began on June 23, 1992 at the Mexico City meeting and ended on June 27, 1995 when the FBI raided the corporate headquarters of ADM and its co-conspirators. Andreas, relying on United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 \(1978\) and United States v. Swiss Valley Farms Co., 912 F. Supp. 401, 403 \(C.D. Ill. 1995\), disputes the government's estimate, arguing that the evidence that lysine sold by ADM below the "agreement price" indicates that Andreas withdrew from the conspiracy.

After thoroughly reviewing the government's charts that capture the major highlights of the evidence elicited at trial regarding the dates, locations, and objectives of the conspiracy meetings, the court agrees that for the purposes of sentencing, the lysine conspiracy existed from June 23, 1992 until June 27, 1995 - the day of the FBI raid.

In United States Gypsum, the Supreme Court held that HN5 participants in an antitrust conspiracy can withdraw or abandon the conspiracy by committing "[affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy [*18] and communicating those acts] in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators" 438 U.S. at 464-65. Andreas, while still denying his participation in the lysine conspiracy, argues that the evidence of prices below the alleged "agreement price" is inconsistent with the goals of the conspiracy and thus, he should be deemed to have abandoned the conspiracy. That argument is flawed, however, since United States Gypsum clearly indicates that the inconsistent act must be communicated to the co-conspirators. Andreas offers a plethora of documentary evidence in the form of business records belonging to the foreign lysine producers expressing concerns that ADM was selling below the "agreement price." Remarkably absent, however, was any communiqué or correspondence from Andreas to the foreign lysine producers informing them that Andreas was leaving the conspiracy. Absent evidence of clearly demonstrated intent, there is no reliable method of knowing whether ADM's lower prices were not simply a fluke or due to ADM's desire to cheat its co-conspirators. Neither of which constitute withdrawal from the conspiracy.

Having failed to present any persuasive evidence [*19] that the defendants intended to withdraw from the lysine conspiracy or to dispute the government's time frame, the court concludes that the lysine conspiracy lasted from June 23, 1992 through June 27, 1995. Hence, the court will impose a fine under U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1 based on ADM's domestic dry lysine sales for that period which, according to undisputed government calculations is $ 193,297,847.61. Since the level of "affected commerce" attributable to Andreas and Wilson exceeds $ 100,000,000.00, they both will receive adjusted base offense levels of 17. U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1\(b\)\(2\)\(G\).

The record shows that on November 4, 1992, defendant Whitacre withdrew from the conspiracy by informing the authorities of the lysine conspiracy and assisting them with the covert investigation that ensued. Hence, Whitacre is liable only for lysine sales occurring between June 23, 1992 and November 4, 1992 which, again according to undisputed government calculations, is $ 18,738,188.65. Because that amount exceeds $ 15,000,000, Whitacre receives an adjusted base offense level of 15. U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1\(b\)\(2\)\(E\). For the reasons set forth in the relevant conduct discussion, the court will not consider the alleged [*20] citric acid conspiracy to calculate the base offense level.

IV. Offense Level Adjustments

A. Andreas

Unsurprisingly, Andreas objects to portions of the PSI and alternatively seeks a reduction in his sentence based on, inter alia, his limited role in the conspiracy, and the government's alleged aggressive encouragement to cause him to participate in the lysine conspiracy (which Andreas still contends never existed).

1. Downward departure under Koon v. United States

The court first turns to Andreas' motion for a downward departure based on Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392, 116 S. Ct. 2035 \(1996\) since its factual bases overlap significantly with Andreas' other arguments in favor of departure or in opposition to the government's motions for upward adjustment. The Guidelines create sentencing "heartlands" - the "set of typical cases embodying the conduct that the [relevant guideline provision] describes." United States v. Santoyo, 146 F.3d 519, 525 \(7th Cir. 1998\), citing U.S.S.G. Ch. 1, Pt. A(4)(b), intro. comment. The parties agree that the relevant guideline is the antitrust provision [*21] of U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1.

The Koon Court held HN6 that district courts can depart from the relevant guideline provision "if there exists an aggravating or mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines that should result in a sentence different from that described." 518 U.S. at 92, citing 18 U.S.C. § 3553\(b\). Rather than leave district courts to their own devices, the Sentencing Commission narrowed the circumstances for departure by established categories of factors - forbidden, encouraged, discouraged, and unmentioned - to determine whether a departure is warranted. Koon, 518 U.S. at 94-95; United States v. Meza, 127 F.3d 545, 548 \(7th Cir. 1996\).

In the Seventh Circuit, courts apply a three-part test to determine whether to grant motions to downward departure for unmentioned or, as Andreas describes them, "extraordinary circumstances," including whether: (1) an aspect of the case potentially removes it from the prescribed sentencing range; (2) the Commission has proscribed any consideration of the factor as [*22] a categorical matter; and (3) "an aggravating or mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines that should result in a sentence different from that described." Meza, 127 F.3d at 549; 18 U.S.C. § 3553 \(b\).

Attempting to find salvation in the arguably vague (but not very) dicta of Koon and its progeny, Andreas asserts that his case is so unusual that it falls outside the heartland of typical antitrust violations governed by U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1. Basically Andreas launches into his familiar diatribe which, after almost three years, the court now affectionately calls the "let's blame Whitacre defense." That is, his conviction falls outside § 2R1.1's heartland because: (1) the government unfairly targeted Andreas for prosecution; (2) that Whitacre "aggressively encouraged" him into conspiring with Messrs. Yamada, Ikeda, Crouy, Wilson, Mimoto, Yamamoto, Kim, Chaudret, and Whitacre himself, to get their companies to intentionally inflate the global price of lysine; (3) the government manipulated his sentence by intentionally prolonging the ADM [*23] investigation by not prosecuting him sooner, and giving co-conspirators immunity and lenient plea agreements creating sentencing disparities; and (4) continued market competition, despite the conspiracy's existence, made the conspiracy less harmful than the typical antitrust violations § 2R1.1 contemplates.

Andreas' theory is supported, in part, by renewed attacks over how the FBI gave Whitacre unfettered discretion to tape conversations which were arguably selectively taped or destroyed in order to distort the evidence and "frame" Andreas and co-defendant Wilson for price-fixing. See generally United States v. Andreas, 39 F. Supp. 2d 1048 \(N.D. Ill. 1998\). Andreas still proclaims his innocence and denies ever joining a conspiracy which, he contends, is evident from ADM's competitive acts during the scope of the conspiracy period. Finally, Andreas contends that the disparity between his prospective sentence and those received by his foreign lysine co-conspirators is, as a matter of law, grounds for a downward departure.

In response, the government argues that Andreas' claim lacks any merit as is evident from surreptitious videotapes showing that Andreas was predisposed [*24] to participate in the conspiracy and freely engaged in the conspiracy without the encouragement of Whitacre or any other government agent. The government, citing numerous Seventh Circuit authority, demonstrates that Andreas' aggressive encouragement and disparate sentencing arguments are not permissible grounds to downwardly depart.

a. Unfair targeting and aggressive encouragement

Andreas invokes the theory of HN7 "aggressive encouragement" recognized in United States v. McClelland, 72 F.3d 717, 725 \(9th Cir. 1995\), where aggressive encouragement of wrongdoing "may be used as a basis for departure under § 5K2.12" where, unlike here, "defendants who are predisposed but who are then pressured unduly by the government to go forward with the offense." 72 F.3d at 725. Aggressive encouragement is a not-so-distant cousin to the entrapment defense which Andreas never raised at trial and, based on the evidence adduced at trial, was not a viable theory of defense for which the court would have given a jury instruction.

Andreas' aggressive encouragement claim, however, is fueled largely by rank speculation that Whitacre somehow coaxed, cajoled, or encouraged [*25] Andreas's participation. As the government notes, the Seventh Circuit has never adopted the Ninth Circuit's aggressive encouragement theory nor, based on the Seventh Circuit's rejection of government misconduct claims as affirmative defenses, United States v. Boyd, 55 F.3d 239, 241 \(7th Cir. 1995\), does the court think aggressive encouragement claims will be warmly welcomed.

Even in the unlikely event that the Seventh Circuit was to adopt McClelland, Andreas has not met McClelland's burden of proving that Whitacre "unduly pressured" Andreas. The court said it before in its December 30, 1998 order and will say it again - the videotape conversation of the 1993 Irvine, California, coupled with all of the other admitted evidence, dispels any doubt that Andreas did not willingly participate in the conspiracy. Andreas had the opportunity to convince the jury that his Irvine meeting with Ikeda and Yamada was innocent, but the jury did not believe that explanation nor does the court now.

Whitacre never pressured Andreas. Nor can Andreas convince this court otherwise by proffering snippets of purported exculpatory conversations where Whitacre allegedly manipulated [*26] Andreas. With all due respect, the video and audiotapes clearly show that Andreas is not easily intimidated by business competitors, let alone an ADM underling of Whitacre's caliber. In other words, this court remains steadfastly convinced that when Andreas decides to do something, Andreas does so freely and willingly and not as the result of coercion or encouragement - aggressive or otherwise. Indeed, the court strongly doubts that Andreas would have been such a successful business person (prior to his poor judgment in this one instance) unless he was the strong-willed individual that he is. Accordingly, Andreas' aggressive encouragement claim is rejected as a basis for a downward departure.

b. Sentencing disparities and sentencing manipulation

Andreas' sentencing manipulation claim fails for two reasons. First, "there is no defense of sentencing manipulation [in the Seventh Circuit]." United States v. Garcia, 79 F.3d 74, 76 \(7th Cir. 1996\). Second, assuming arguendo that the government had insufficient evidence (which it did not), then the government would have had to extend the covert phase of the lysine investigation even longer thereby prolonging [*27] the life of the conspiracy and increasing the ultimate penalties. Andreas cannot have it both ways.

Motions for downward departure due to disparate sentences between co-conspirators fair no better. A disparity in sentences between co-conspirators is not a per se basis for granting a downward departure as an "unmentioned category" under Koon. In United States v. Meza, 127 F.3d 545, 549-50 \(7th Cir. 1996\) the Seventh Circuit held that HN8¹ downward departures based on disparity in sentences between co-conspirators are available where the disparity is "unjustified" and results from an improper application of the relevant guideline provisions.

Andreas claims that an unjustified disparity exists merely because his coconspirators received plea agreements and immunity to avoid prosecution - despite their comparable culpability - but that he received no deals. Yet, Meza rejected the very same argument, noting that U.S.S.G. § 6B1.2 expressly allows coconspirators to receive different sentences where, as here, certain members execute plea agreements under Fed. R. Crim. P. 11\(e\)\(1\) and aid the government in prosecuting the other conspirators. Meza, 127 F.3d at 549; [*28] see also United States v. McClinton, 135 F.3d 1178, 1192 \(7th Cir. 1998\); United States v. Miranda, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4917, No. 94 CR 714-2, 1998 WL 173300 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 10, 1998) (Williams, J.). This case is no different. Almost all of the foreign lysine producers received immunity in exchange for their cooperation in prosecuting the defendants.⁴ This outcome might offend the layperson's sense of justice, but the result is perfectly legal, hardly extraordinary, and clearly not grounds for a downward departure.

c. Limited success of the conspiracy

Andreas essentially renews his motion that global price-fixing and sales volume allocation agreements are not per se illegal. For the reasons previously [*29] stated in the December 30, 1998 order, the court declines further comment. Alternatively, relying on United States v. Stockheimer, 157 F.3d 1082, 1091 \(7th Cir. 1998\), Andreas asserts, without any detailed explanation, that the preliminary numerical dollar value of the amount "affected commerce" for purposes of § 2R1.1 grossly exaggerates the seriousness of the crime. The court disagrees. To be clear, Andreas does not dispute the accuracy of the dollar amount to the extent that it was used to upwardly adjust his base offense level under § 2R1.1's by seven levels. See § 2R1.1\(b\)\(2\)\(G\).

Andreas does not explain what particular aspects of this case take it out of the heartland for antitrust offenses nor does the court see any. As the government argued, this case is no different from the typical antitrust offense, i.e., several large corporations agreed to inflate prices to make some extra cash to feed their own greed. The fact that the participants might have cheated or stabbed one another in the back adds nothing to the analysis since the vast majority of criminal conspiracies - violent, nonviolent, blue-collar or white-collar - involve informants who cooperate [*30] and turn in their former compatriots for immunity. That is life in the criminal fast lane. Hence, this argument is likewise rejected. Having found no basis to consider this case outside the § 2R1.1's heartland, Andreas' motion for downward departure under Koon is denied.

2. Andreas' role in the offense

Andreas contends that, pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 3B1.2, he is entitled to a four level reduction in his offense level because he is "substantially less culpable than the average participant." In contrast, the government moves for a four-point increase in Andreas' offense level under U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1\(a\), arguing that Andreas was "an organizer or leader of the [lysine conspiracy] that involved five or more participants or was otherwise extensive." Govt. Sentencing Memo. at 59.

a. Andreas' § 3B1.2 motion for a four-point downward departure

⁴ It will be interesting to observe whether the government will revoke some of those cooperation agreements in light of some of the foreign co-conspirators' unwillingness to produce documentation necessary to calculate the alternative fine provision under 18 U.S.C. § 3571\(d\).

HN9 [↑] Where a defendant requests a decrease in his offense level, he has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he is "substantially less culpable than the average participant in order to warrant a reduction under [U.S.S.G.] § 3B1.2." United States v. McClinton, 135 F.3d 1178, 1190 (7th Cir. 1998). [*31] Andreas contends that he was a "minimal participant" because Whitacre never told him that the foreign lysine producers wanted to engage in price-fixing and Andreas contends that ADM did not make deals. The court would, for once and for all, like to place Andreas' "we don't make deals" comment into its full context. The court concedes that Andreas told Wilson and Whitacre that ADM does not "make deals." Ironically, Andreas was later captured on videotape at the Irvine meeting with Ikeda and Yamada carving up the global lysine volume in order to stabilize the price agreement. It seems Andreas said one thing and did something completely different. Andreas' sufficiency of the evidence claims have been addressed more than once and any further argument can be made before the court of appeals.

Nothing in the record even remotely suggests that Andreas was less culpable than his co-conspirators, let alone, substantially. He negotiated the sales volume allocation with Ikeda and Yamada which, by all accounts, was absolutely necessary to further the price agreement and further the objectives of the conspiracy. Accordingly, Andreas' motion for a four-point reduction is denied.

2. Enhancement [*32] for Andreas' organizer/leadership role

HN10 [↑] In order for U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(a) to apply, the court must find that the defendant: (1) managed or organized a conspiracy that involved five participants or was otherwise extensive; and (2) was substantially more culpable vis-a-vis his co-conspirators in which he must have had some real and direct influence, aimed at furthering the criminal activity. McClinton, 135 F.3d at 1190 (7th Cir. 1998); United States v. Fones, 51 F.3d 663, 668 (7th Cir. 1995); United States v. Mustread, 42 F.3d 1097, 1103 (7th Cir. 1994); United States v. Brown, 944 F.2d 1377, 1381-82 (7th Cir. 1991). The primary inquiry is relative responsibility - those who play an aggravating role in the offense are to receive sentences that reflect their greater contributions to the illegal scheme as determined by the defendant's relative culpability vis-a-vis other participants in the offense. United States v. Tetzlaff, 896 F.2d 1071, 1074-74 n.4 (7th Cir. 1990).

Besides claiming his innocence, Andreas objects to the four-level enhancement arguing that he never managed or otherwise supervised [*33] five co-conspirators. Andreas concedes that the court can count Andreas himself to satisfy the five person requirement, but notes that even then, arguably only three people were managed - Andreas and Wilson and Whitacre. Andreas contends that Whitacre cannot be counted, as a matter of law, since he was a government agent at the time of the conspiracy. The government, however, argues that Whitacre was not a government agent prior to November 4, 1992, thus he is eligible based on his acts prior to that time. Even if the government were given the benefit of the doubt and Andreas, Whitacre, and Wilson are counted, the government is still two people shy of a four-point enhancement. The void could be filled if, as the government proposes, ADM sales executives are counted too. That proposal does not work since a participant is "a person who is criminally responsible for the commission of the offense," U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1, and the record clearly reveals that none of the ADM sales executive knew, let alone, participated in the conspiracy. One of the government's star witnesses, ADM executive Barrie Cox, said so at trial and the government admitted it during its closing arguments.

Tacitly conceding [*34] that the numbers are not in its favor, the government seeks to circumvent the five person requirement by arguing that, due to its size and scope, the lysine conspiracy was "otherwise extensive" and can be deemed the functional equivalent of a "five person" enterprise led by Andreas for which an enhancement is viable. It is true, § 3B1.1 permits a four-point enhancement where the offense is "otherwise extensive" which the Seventh Circuit defines to include circumstances where the relevant "activity is the functional equivalent of an activity involving five or more participants." United States v. Tai, 41 F.3d 1170, 1173 (7th Cir. 1994).

While the Tai Court remanded the case for re-sentencing because the district court enhanced the defendants' based on the involvement of three participants and two (innocent) outsiders, the Seventh Circuit expanded § 3B1.1's scope to include "the unknowing services of many outsiders." United States v. Mohammad, 53 F.3d 1426, 1437 (7th Cir. 1995). Hence, the government correctly argues that the court may consider how Andreas and his co-conspirators utilized the aid of unwitting corporate underlings to further the [*35] price-fixing scheme. The sheer girth of the lysine conspiracy permits the court to deem it the functional equivalent of a five-person criminal enterprise. The only problem is convincing the court that Andreas' conduct vis-a-vis his foreign competitors was greater to make him the "brains" of the outfit. See McClinton, 135 F.3d at 1191.

The primary purpose of § 3B1.1 is to punish - choose a euphemism - the "chief," "kingpin," "brains," "mastermind." HN11 [Footnote] In order to determine whether the defendant was an "organizer" or "leader," the court must consider: (1) the defendant's exercise of decision making authority; (2) the nature of the defendant's participation in the commission of the offense; (3) the degree of the defendant's participation in planning or organizing the offense; (4) if the defendant claimed a right to a larger share of the fruits of the crime (5) the nature and scope of the illegal activity; and (6) the degree of control and authority exercised over others. United States v. Parmelee, 42 F.3d 387, 399-400 \(7th Cir. 1994\).

Applying those factors to the record, nothing convinces the court that Andreas, was a kingpin or supervisor any greater [*36] than other corporate executives involved in the lysine conspiracy. When compared with Ikeda, Yamada, Crouy, Chaudret, and Yamamoto, Andreas and Wilson were equals. The only thing that makes them worse than their counterparts was their inability to cut a deal with the government to avoid prosecution. A deal, by the way, which was never on the table for Andreas or Wilson. In that limited respect, the court agrees that Andreas and Wilson never made any deals.

The government implies that Andreas was the worst of the bunch because he threatened to flood the market in order to coerce cooperation from the other producers. That is certainly one interpretation of the evidence. Another equally plausible explanation is that the heads of several international corporations met secretly in hotel rooms under the guise of a sham trade association to talk price-fixing and later came to an agreement. They all had authority over their own underlings and exerted their own autonomy. If as the government contends, Andreas was the "big boss," he could have avoided the Irvine Meeting to stabilize the volume allocation by directly calling someone at Ajinomoto, Sewon, Eurolysine, and so forth, and simply ordered [*37] them to sell a specific volume at the set "agreement price." That is not what happened. Andreas had to negotiate with Ikeda and Yamada and they all had to agree or the deal was off. That is hardly what the court would call a "big boss." Equally probative is the fact that the record clearly indicated that the foreign producers have engaged in illegal conduct long before Andreas or Wilson entered the lysine market. Hence, the court does not believe Andreas and Wilson could coerce Ajinomoto and the rest as powerfully as the government claims.

Here, the whole team wanted to play coach and quarterback which inevitably led to cheating amongst the conspirators. The alleged cheating which occurred was under the auspices of Ikeda, Yamada, and others who apparently did not care too much for what Andreas or Wilson had to say until the group collectively realized that the conspiracy would fail without mutual cooperation that could not exist unless all of the "kingpins" (yes, plural) agreed. Hence, the first three Parmelee factors are inconclusive as to Andreas.

While Andreas enjoyed a large share of the lysine profits by virtue of his status as a major ADM shareholder, there is no evidence [*38] that it was substantially greater than that enjoyed by the Koreans, Japanese, French, or Swiss. Accordingly, the fourth Parmelee factor is equally unpersuasive. Finally, as noted above, the lysine conspiracy was large. But its size was the result of several corporate leaders joining together to break the law. Andreas bears no greater culpability than his contemporaries and thus, does not deserve a four-point enhancement. As such, the government's motion for a four-point enhancement under U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1 is denied.

B. Wilson

1. Role in the offense

The government, pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1\(b\), moves for an upward enhancement of Wilson's sentence, claiming that Wilson used his price-fixing expertise to become the de facto "coach" of the lysine conspiracy thereby deserving an enhancement due to his function as a manager/supervisor of the conspiracy. Like Andreas, the record does not establish any convincing evidence that Wilson supervised or managed any of his lysine co-conspirators.

While the numerous audio and videotapes show him taking a prominent role in the discussions to regulate the objectives of the conspiracy, his role did not appear to be any [*39] greater than that of the other foreign lysine competitors or otherwise influenced or controlled their participation in the lysine conspiracy. Rather, the court agrees with Wilson's description of his participation - he was a "coequal" with his co-conspirators - no more or less culpable than the rest of his co-conspirators. Accordingly, the government's motion for an upward enhancement of Wilson's sentence under § 3B1.1\(b\) is denied.

2. Downward departure for exceptional family circumstances, age, and health

Wilson asks the court to reduce his sentence under U.S.S.G. § 5H1.6, due to "exceptional family circumstances." Before addressing the merits of the motion, the court acknowledges Wilson's standing objection to the public disclosure of his family and medical history. Nonetheless, as previously addressed by the court, there is a strong presumption in favor of public access to court proceedings. See generally United States v. Edwards, 672 F.2d 1289, 1294 \(7th Cir. 1982\). "This presumption is rebuttable upon demonstration that suppression 'is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest.'" Grove Fresh Distributors, Inc. v. Everfresh Juice Co., 24 F.3d 893, 897 \(7th Cir. 1994\), [*40] quoting Press-Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court of California, 464 U.S. 501, 510, 78 L. Ed. 2d 629, 104 S. Ct. 819 \(1984\). While the court can appreciate Wilson's desire not to subject his family to further public scrutiny, the fact remains that he opened the door to his family's private life the moment he invoked his family as a basis for a departure.

a. Extraordinary family circumstances

The district court may depart from an applicable guidelines range once it finds that a defendant's family ties and responsibilities or community ties are so unusual that they may be characterized as extraordinary. United States v. Canoy, 38 F.3d 893 \(7th Cir. 1994\). Wilson asserts that incarceration will cause an irreparable harm on his family, particularly his son, Robert Wilson. The court is incredibly sympathetic to the plight that this entire process has imposed on the Wilson family, especially Mrs. Mary Jo Wilson and her son Robert. Nevertheless, after careful consideration of all of the materials submitted on this issue, the court must deny the motion. The potential effect of Mr. Wilson's family is no greater than that of the typical criminal case [*41] to warrant a downward departure and doing so here would deprecate the gravity of the offense. It is unfortunate, but the simple truth is that incarceration will always adversely impact a defendant's family - economically, emotionally, and sometimes physically.

The court agrees that sentences which are not tempered by some degree of compassion for the defendants' family can cause a substantial hardship. At the same time, that hardship must be balanced with the court's fundamental obligation to never implicitly or explicitly disregard the severity of the crime. That is an especially serious concern with "white-collar" offenses in which there is a popular but absolutely erroneous perception that the violation is minor. As the Seventh Circuit so eloquently noted:

We take this opportunity to emphasize to the district judges of this circuit that no "middle class" sentencing discounts are authorized. Business criminals are not to be treated more leniently than members of the "criminal class" just by virtue of being regularly employed or otherwise productively engaged in lawful economic activity . . . it is natural for judges, drawn as they (as we) are from the middle or upper-middle [*42] class, to sympathize with criminals drawn from the same class. But in this instance we must fight our nature. Criminals who have the education and training that enables people to make a decent living without resorting to crime are more rather than less culpable than their desperately poor and deprived brethren in crime. (emphasis added).

United States v. Stefonek, 179 F.3d 1030, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 11337, 1999 WL 356407 at *7 (7th Cir. 1999) (Posner, J.).

Judge Posner's accurate description of the need to avoid double standards for white-collar offenders did not arise in the context of downward departures for family circumstances. Nonetheless, in the past this court has reluctantly but steadfastly refused downward departures in cases far more exceptional than Wilson's. While the court sympathizes with the plight of the Wilson family, the simple truth is that in the long run they will fair far better than the typical criminal defendant that appears before this court. Accordingly, the motion for downward departure based on exceptional family circumstances is denied.

b. Poor Health

Alternatively, Wilson seeks a downward departure claiming that incarceration [*43] will complicate his preexisting heart condition making any incarceration a de facto death sentence. Wilson and the government presented expert testimony and affidavits so divergent as to suggest that the opinions were too biased to make a reliable decision regarding the sentence. As such, the court appointed an independent cardiologist, Dr. Allen S. Anderson, Medical Director of the Heart Failure and Transplant Program at the University of Chicago.

Dr. Anderson's expert report presented a fair and balanced review of Mr. Wilson's health while implicitly addressing the relative strengths and weaknesses of the parties' conflicting opinions. In sum, Dr. Anderson acknowledges that Mr. Wilson does suffer from very serious, but manageable, cardiac problems. Fairly read, Dr. Anderson's report concludes that Wilson is at low risk of suffering from a sudden and lethal heart attack and that, with proper medical monitoring, incarceration poses no greater health risk than managing a Fortune 500 company. Accordingly, Wilson's motion for a downward departure based on his health is denied. The court will make a non-binding recommendation to the Bureau of Prisons to assign Wilson to a BOP medical [*44] facility.

c. Acceptance of responsibility

Following the old adage "you never know unless you ask" Wilson astonishingly moves, pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 3E1.1, for a downward departure for accepting responsibility in the lysine conspiracy. HN12[

The Sentencing Guidelines provide for a two-point decrease in offense level "if the defendant clearly demonstrates acceptance of responsibility for his offense." U.S.S.G. § 3E1.1(a). The commentary to § 3E1.1 provides that a downward adjustment "is not intended to apply to a defendant who puts the government to its burden of proof at trial by denying the essential factual elements of guilt, is convicted, and only then admits guilt and expresses remorse." Application Note 2; see also United States v. Morgano, 39 F.3d 1358, 1377-78 (7th Cir. 1994). Citing United States v. McKittrick, 142 F.3d 1170, 1178 (9th Cir. 1998), Wilson contends that notwithstanding putting the government, not to mention this court, through the burden of an eleven-week trial, he is entitled to a two-point reduction because he was preserving his right to challenge the applicability of the Sherman Antitrust Act to his alleged conduct.

[*45] Wilson, however, does not claim that the Sherman Act is legally inapplicable to his price-fixing misconduct. Instead, he merely asserts that, as a matter of fact, none of his conduct was indicative of Wilson's intent to form the illegal agreement even though the jury did not believe him. This is exactly the type of question that "relate[s] to factual guilt" for which McKittrick does not recognize as grounds for a downward departure under § 3E1.1. Wilson rolled that dice at trial and lost.

The Seventh Circuit precedent on this issue is clear - no two-point downward departures for defendants who deny the charge, go to trial and eventually lose. Any other result is "contrary to the basic system of incentives and disincentives established by the acceptance of responsibility reduction, namely to reward those who plead guilty -- saving the judiciary and government from the time, expense and effort of a trial." United States v. Gomez, 24 F.3d 924, 926 (7th Cir. 1994). Even now, as he asks for a downward departure for acceptance of responsibility, Wilson still insists that he never committed the crime. Granting this motion would undermine the very purpose of § 3E1.1 [*46] and thus, is denied. The court noticed that defendant Andreas implied that he would likewise seek this departure, but failed to formally move for one. The government's response indicates that Andreas might have decided not to seek it. But just in case the motion was somehow lost in the plethora of sentencing memoranda and motions, that motion would also be denied as to Andreas for the exact same reason.

V. Sentences

1. Andreas and Wilson

Having denied all motions for enhancement and downward departure of sentences as to Andreas and Wilson, and excluded citric acid as relevant conduct for purposes of calculating the base offense level, the court finds that both Andreas and Wilson have a total adjusted offense level of 17, and (having no prior convictions) a criminal history category of I, which places them in Zone D of the Sentencing Table with a range of 24 to 30 months. The court, in its discretion, sentences Michael D. Andreas and Terrance S. Wilson to 24 months of incarceration to be served at a facility to be determined by the BOP. However, as previously noted, the court recommends that Wilson serve his sentence at a BOP medical facility.

Because the [*47] volume of affected commerce attributable to defendant Andreas' and Wilson's conduct easily exceeds the statutory maximum of 15 U.S.C. § 1, pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1\(c\)\(1\), Michael D. Andreas and Terrance S. Wilson shall be fined $ 350,000.00.

2. Whitacre

Before the imposing sentence, the court finds it incredibly important to note for the record that Whitacre's counsel diligently represented the best interests of his client and was often forced to make difficult strategic decisions as to how to best represent Whitacre. During the sentencing phase, neither Whitacre nor his counsel have filed a single motion or raised a single objection to the government's version of the offense contained in the PSI or the PSI's sentencing recommendations, especially the request for an enhancement of sentence as a manager of the conspiracy. Given Whitacre's prior criminal history and failure to object, it seems that the government's cooperating witness will actually receive more time than defendants Andreas and Wilson. Again, sentencing disparity is perfectly appropriate where, as here, the sentence is the result of a proper application of the relevant guideline [*48] provisions. The court declines to speculate what might have motivated Whitacre to not object to the PSI and will hold him to his waiver of argument in opposition to the enhancement.

The court previously allowed Whitacre to ride on the coattails of Andreas and Wilson and gave him the benefit of favorable rulings that arguably should apply to all three defendants. That practice stops immediately! At the sentencing hearing, Whitacre and his counsel informed the court that they both read and understood the PSI and sought no corrections or recalculations. If they knowingly and voluntarily consent to the government's proposal to enhance his sentence, then this court will not stand in his way.

After thoroughly reviewing the PSI and considering all of Mark Whitacre's actions before, during, and after the government's investigation of the lysine conspiracy, the court finds that he does not deserve any reduction in sentence for his acceptance of responsibility nor for assisting the government. Whitacre complained that he has received no form of aid from the government since being indicted before this court. Well, quite frankly, he should never have expected any after trying to play both sides [*49] of the fence. Recall, Whitacre lied to everyone about his embezzlement of ADM funds and attempts to extort money from the biotechnology espionage affair commonly referred to as the "Fujiwara Incident." And who could possibly forget about Whitacre's attempts to derail the entire lysine prosecution and save his own neck by claiming that he destroyed exculpatory evidence and/or hid it by sending it to his associate David Hoech.

Needless to say, this court is not persuaded that Whitacre deserves any reduction in sentence for his "aid." Whitacre is the major exception to the basic rule that cooperating witnesses deserve lesser sentences. Time and time again, the government must often rely on the aid of crooks and snitches to convict the guilty. But for the testimony of the other co-conspirators and the videotapes which captured Andreas and Wilson in the act, the court is thoroughly convinced that the jury would have acquitted the defendants. Whitacre helped nobody but himself and prolonged this case to the detriment of the government and this court and now suffers a fate created by his own misguided greed, deceit, and outright theft!

In light of Whitacre's lack of objections to the PSI, [*50] the court adopts the PSI in its entirety. Whitacre has a category II criminal history for his prior fraud conviction before Judge Howard Baker of the Central District of Illinois. His base offense level is 10 under U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1 upwardly adjusted by 4-points for the amount of "affected commerce" and a 3-point enhancement for his role in the offense, totaling 17 points. Under criminal history category II, the court has the discretion of imposing a sentence between 27 to 33 months. Accordingly, defendant Mark E. Whitacre is sentenced to serve 30 months on the instant conviction. Moreover, it is the order of this court that 10 months of that sentence shall be served concurrently with Whitacre's current term of incarceration with the remaining 20 months to be served consecutively. The court declines to impose a fine against Whitacre since it appears he has no financial resources to pay the fine. In addition, defendant Whitacre is ordered to seek the assistance of psychiatric/psychological counseling.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the government's motions for upward enhancement of the sentences of Michael D. Andreas and Terrance S. Wilson are DENIED. Andreas' [*51] and Wilson's motions for downward departures of their sentence are DENIED in their entirety. The government's motion to consider the alleged citric acid conspiracy as relevant conduct to determine the base offense level for Andreas and Wilson is DENIED. The government's calculation of the scope of the lysine conspiracy is accepted and the calculation of "affected commerce" under U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1 will be based on domestic dry lysine sales between June 23, 1992 and June 27, 1995.

ENTER:

BLANCHE M. MANNING

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

DATE: 7/13/99

End of Document

Neo Gen Screening, Inc. v. New England Newborn Screening Program

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

July 14, 1999, Decided

No. 99-1100

Reporter

187 F.3d 24 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 17392 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,591

NEO GEN SCREENING, INC., Plaintiff, Appellant, v. NEW ENGLAND NEWBORN SCREENING PROGRAM, d/b/a NEW ENGLAND REGIONAL NEWBORN SCREENING PROGRAM, UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS MEDICAL CENTER, HOWARD KOH, RALPH TIMPERI, Defendants, Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) As Corrected August 3, 1999.

Certiorari Denied December 13, 1999, Reported at: 1999 U.S. LEXIS 8283.

Writ of certiorari denied Neo Gen Screening, Inc. v. New England Newborn Screening Program, 528 U.S. 1061, 120 S. Ct. 615, 145 L. Ed. 2d 510, 1999 U.S. LEXIS 8283 (1999)

Prior History: APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. George A. O'Toole, Jr., U.S. District Judge.

Neo Gen Screening, Inc. v. New England Newborn Screening Program, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23654 \(D. Mass., Dec. 3, 1998\)

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

Screening, newborn, regulations, testing, state official, monopoly, district court, immunity, injunctive relief, arm, executive branch, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > State Immunity

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > Waiver > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

HN1 [down] State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

Under U.S. Const. amend. XI, a state or an arm of the state is normally immune from suits by citizens in federal court, unless the state waives its immunity, or Congress overrides that immunity as it may do in limited situations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > State Immunity

Governments > Native Americans > Property Rights

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > Federal Judicial Limitations

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

HN2 [down] State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

The Ex Parte Young doctrine removes U.S. Const. amend. XI's bar where the private suit is directed not against the state or a state agency eo nomine but instead against state officials acting in violation of federal law and where, in addition, retrospective damages or property transfers are not sought for official acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > Native Americans > Property Rights

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

HN3 [down] Sherman Act, Defenses

It is quite true that Ex Parte Young avoids the Eleventh Amendment defense where prospective injunctive relief, not involving damages or property transfer, is sought against named state officials for a violation of federal law. Usually, such injunctions are sought to require compliance with the Constitution; but the Ex Parte Young doctrine is equally applicable to compel state officials to comply with a valid federal statute that must be obeyed under the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution.

187 F.3d 24, *24L^A1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 17392, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is clearly established that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., does not itself apply to state action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN5 Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

A regulation or purchase of services made by the state is classic state action immunized from the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Counsel: Kenneth P. McKay with whom Law Offices of K. Patrick McKay was on brief for appellant.

Jane L. Willoughby, Assistant Attorney General, with whom Thomas F. Reilly, Attorney General, was on brief for appellees.

Judges: Before Boudin, Circuit Judge, Campbell, Senior Circuit Judge, and Lipez, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: BOUDIN

Opinion

[*25] BOUDIN, Circuit Judge. The present appeal arises out of a federal antitrust case dismissed by the district court on the ground that it was barred by the Eleventh Amendment. We assume to be true, for purposes of this appeal, the facts as alleged in the complaint. Duckworth v. Pratt & Whitney, Inc., 152 F.3d 1, 3 \(1st Cir. 1998\). However, the district court also considered, as do we, uncontroverted facts furnished by affidavit pertaining to the status of the defendants under the Eleventh Amendment.

The plaintiff-appellant in this case is Neo Gen Screening, Inc., a private, for-profit Pennsylvania corporation whose business is the medical screening of newborn children. In Massachusetts, as elsewhere, [*2] newborns must be tested for specified diseases, some of which can be remedied if promptly detected. Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 111, §§ 4E, 110A; see also id. §§ 3, 5, 6. According to the complaint, Neo Gen provides hospitals in various states with screening services to detect disorders in newborns but is being prevented by the defendants from doing so in Massachusetts.

The principal defendants named in the complaint as currently amended are the University of Massachusetts, a not-for-profit corporation linked to the state through governance and financing, its New England Newborn Screening Program ("the Screening Program"), ¹ and two individuals--Howard Koh and Ralph Timperi--who are or were respectively the Commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Public Health and an Assistant Commissioner responsible for laboratory testing. Several other defendants were named in the original complaint but later dismissed by consent.

[3] The original complaint was filed on March 5, 1998, and contained eleven counts; but it was thereafter amended and reduced to two counts, the second of which was later voluntarily withdrawn. The remaining count (count I) is subcaptioned: "PLAINTIFF CORPORATION VS. DEFENDANTS NENSP AND UMASS VIOLATION OF THE SHERMAN ANTI-TRUST LAWS."; and it expressly charges the Screening Program and University of Massachusetts, in concert with the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, with monopolizing, attempting to monopolize and/or conspiring to monopolize "newborn [*26] screening services" in Massachusetts and surrounding states.

Although there are some collateral allegations, the main thrust of count I is an attack on the University of Massachusetts for seeking and obtaining a monopoly in the provision of the newborn screening services in Massachusetts. The only relief sought by the complaint is injunctive relief, apart from attorneys' fees, and the injunctive relief sought includes a request to bar the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner from issuing permanent regulations that maintain the screening program's monopoly over the provision of the testing services in question. The complaint [4] provides a history, which can be summarized briefly, as to how the supposed monopoly came about.

The Screening Program, a collection of personnel and a laboratory, had at one time been a unit of the Department of Public Health. At some point in the 1980s, the Screening Program was taken over by Tufts University and later, beginning in 1997, by the medical school of the University of Massachusetts. The Screening Program currently operates, under a contract between the University of Massachusetts and the Department of Public Health, to provide screening for specified disorders of newborn infants. A blood sample is taken by the hospital where the child is delivered and submitted to the Screening Program for testing, and a charge is paid by the hospital to the Screening Program.

In the fall of 1997, Neo Gen set about trying to persuade Massachusetts hospitals to let Neo Gen screen their newborns. It solicited hospitals in Massachusetts and purported to offer more modern, comprehensive screening at half the fee charged by the Screening Program. According to the complaint, the University of Massachusetts and its Screening Program responded by seeking adoption of regulations by the Department [5] of Public Health that would give the Screening Program a monopoly in the provision of screening services in Massachusetts.

The complaint charges that the Screening Program "influenced" the Department of Public Health to issue emergency regulations that required testing for nine diseases and required that the blood samples be submitted to the Department itself. See 105 C.M.R. 270.000 "et seq.". Also appended to the complaint is a contract entered into between the Department of Public Health and the University of Massachusetts requiring the latter to provide newborn screening laboratory work, clinical follow-up and research services. The proposed regulations were adopted on an emergency basis in November 1997, accompanied by statements that the Department of Public Health would thereafter study the possibility of allowing other entities to perform the screening.

The defendants moved to dismiss the amended complaint as barred by the Eleventh Amendment, asserting as well that the complaint failed to state a claim under the federal antitrust laws and was barred by various antitrust doctrines. In a decision issued on December 3, 1998, the district court held that the [6] only claim remaining in the case was count I, that this count was directed against the University of Massachusetts and the Screening Program, and that both entities were arms of the state and were entitled to dismissal under the Eleventh Amendment. This appeal followed.

¹ Although named as a defendant, the Screening Program is simply a program at the University of Massachusetts conducted through its medical school, which is also not a separate corporation. However, given our disposition, we need not pursue our doubt whether the screening program is a suable entity.

HN1[] Under the Eleventh Amendment, a state or an arm of the state is normally immune from suits by citizens in federal court, Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 662-63, 39 L. Ed. 2d 662, 94 S. Ct. 1347 (1974); see Chemerinsky, Federal Jurisdiction § 7.4, at 403 (3d ed. 1999), unless the state waives its immunity, Idaho v. Coeur d' Alene Tribe of Idaho, 521 U.S. 261, 267, 138 L. Ed. 2d 438, 117 S. Ct. 2028 (1997), or Congress overrides that immunity as it may do in limited situations, Seminole Tribe v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 57-68, 134 L. Ed. 2d 252, 116 S. Ct. 1114 (1996). Neo Gen has not argued either that there [*27] was any waiver of Eleventh Amendment immunity by defendants or any abrogation of that immunity by Congress.

Whether and when state universities are arms of the state for Eleventh Amendment purposes have long vexed the federal courts. The multi-part tests [7] that we have used are not easy to apply,² and, confusingly, overlap but do not quite duplicate tests that determine whether a university is an independent entity for purposes of diversity jurisdiction. Cf. University of Rhode Island v. A.W. Chesterton Co., 2 F.3d 1200, 1202-05 (1st Cir. 1993). A number of decisions have held that individual state universities are arms of the state for Eleventh Amendment purposes, but the inquiry tends to turn on facts peculiar to each university, and there are cases denying protection. See Chemerinsky, supra, § 7.4, at 407 & nn.33-34 (collecting cases).

In [8] its decision under review, the district court explicitly found that the University in conducting the Screening Program was "acting as an agency or arm of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts." It rested this legal conclusion on a detailed discussion of the University's mission, its governance, its financial relationship to the state and similar matters. Its conclusion that the University is an arm of the Commonwealth accords with the view of another district court involving the University of Massachusetts. Daniel v. American Board of Emergency Medicine, 988 F. Supp. 127, 178-81 (W.D.N.Y. 1997).

On this appeal, Neo Gen has effectively failed to dispute the district court's holding that the University and its Screening Program are covered by the Eleventh Amendment. Since that ruling is at least colorable and certainly not plain error, cf. Beatty v. Michael Business Machines Corp., 172 F.3d 117, 121 (1st Cir. 1999), we treat the dismissal of the case against these two defendants as conceded. However, Neo Gen argues that Koh and Timperi were also intended defendants in count I and that despite the Eleventh Amendment these state officials are subject to injunctive [9] relief under the doctrine of Ex Parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 52 L. Ed. 714, 28 S. Ct. 441 (1908).

Ex Parte Young is one of several major qualifications on Eleventh Amendment immunity. Chemerinsky, supra, §§ 7.5-7.7, at 411-46. Ignoring some refinements, HN2[] the doctrine removes the Eleventh Amendment bar where the private suit is directed not against the state or a state agency eo nomine but instead against state officials acting in violation of federal law and where (in addition) retrospective damages or property transfers are not sought for official acts. Coeur d' Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 269, 277-80; Strahan v. Coxe, 127 F.3d 155, 166-67 (1st Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 142 L. Ed. 2d 63, 119 S. Ct. 81 (1998); Chemerinsky, supra, § 7.5, at 411-30. This exception is Neo Gen's main argument on this appeal.

The Commonwealth replies that the claims in count I were asserted only against the University of Massachusetts and the Screening Program and that no relief was sought under that count against the two named state officers. That is certainly what the district court thought, and its view is supported by [10] the subcaption of the count (quoted above), which referred to those institutional defendants and no others. By contrast, count II, which was voluntarily withdrawn, specifically mentions Koh and Timperi as defendants in the corresponding subcaption.

Neo Gen counters that state officials were named as defendants in the complaint, that the Department of Public Health itself is mentioned in count I, that complaints are liberally construed, and that at worst it is entitled to leave to [*28] amend. The latter claim fails since leave to amend was not requested in the district court, but the construction of count I in its present form is open to reasonable dispute. We think that the injunctive relief against the two state officials is so clearly barred for a substantive reason that we prefer to affirm on that ground rather than because of a possible pleading error.

² E.g., Metcalf & Eddy, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Aqueduct & Sewer Authority, 991 F.2d 935, 939-40 (1st Cir. 1993) (7-factor test); In re San Juan DuPont Plaza Hotel Fire Litigation, 888 F.2d 940, 942 (1st Cir. 1989); Ainsworth Aristocrat Int'l Pty, Ltd. v. Tourism Co. of Puerto Rico, 818 F.2d 1034, 1038 & n.24 (1st Cir. 1987) (collecting cases).

HN3[¹] It is quite true that Ex Parte Young avoids the Eleventh Amendment defense where prospective injunctive relief, not involving damages or property transfer, is sought against named state officials for a violation of federal law. See Coeur d' Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 276-77. Usually, such injunctions are sought to [11] require compliance with the Constitution; but the Ex Parte Young doctrine is equally applicable to compel state officials to comply with a valid federal statute that must be obeyed under the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution. Id. at 273-77. Thus, if the state officials were violating the Sherman Act, in principle the Eleventh Amendment would not bar injunctive relief against them.

The difficulty for Neo Gen is that HN4[¹] it is clearly established that the Sherman Act does not itself apply to state action. In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943), the Supreme Court determined that Congress had not meant to require states to comply with the Sherman Act. Accordingly, a state is free to regulate, or act on its own behalf, in ways that are anti-competitive and would not be permitted to a private individual. Id. This doctrine is so well settled that its rationale and underpinnings are scarcely worth discussing. See I Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, PP 221-222 (1997).

No doubt the emergency regulations, coupled with the ten-year renewable contract already described, create an effective monopoly for [12] the University of Massachusetts in conducting the screening of Massachusetts newborns. By regulation, the blood must be made available to the Department, and the Department has chosen to contract with the University to do the testing. Although a hospital could also choose to engage Neo Gen, no hospital is likely to pay twice for the same service. But HN5[¹] a regulation or purchase of services made by the state is classic state action immunized from the Sherman Act. Cf. Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 567-73, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, 104 S. Ct. 1989 (1984); Tri-State Rubbish, Inc. v. Waste Management, Inc., 998 F.2d 1073, 1076 (1st Cir. 1993).

Neo Gen mistakenly attempts to distinguish Parker v. Brown and the long line of cases that have followed it by arguing that the Massachusetts legislature did not "clearly articulate" a purpose to supplant competition with monopoly. The cases on which Neo Gen relies, such as City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991), and City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978), [13] do impose a requirement of this kind (the details are not important here) where the acts sought to be shielded under Parker v. Brown are those of municipalities or other local public entities. But no such requirement exists where the acts are those of the state itself. Hoover, 466 U.S. at 568.

Whether executive branch action is that of the state is a different issue. The Supreme Court has held that acts of the state legislature or state supreme court are protected under Parker, but it reserved decision as to whether state-level executive branch departments or agencies are entitled to similar treatment. Hoover, 466 U.S. at 568 n.17 (reserving question). However, both circuits that have squarely faced the issue have extended Parker's ordinary protection to actions [*29] of the state executive branch.³ We agree, with possible caveats that do not affect the outcome in this case.

[14] Broadly speaking, the Parker doctrine represents a judgment by the Supreme Court that, in regulating anti-competitive business conduct, Congress was not seeking to regulate the states themselves; and "the states" include their executive branches quite as much as their legislatures and their courts. The municipalities have been given less protection under Parker on the stated ground that technically speaking, they are not "the state," Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 412-13, while the status of state boards or commissions is open to dispute, see Areeda, supra, P 224; id. P 212.2d at 141 & n.48 (1992 Supp.). And there is still less of an analogy to private carriers or utilities, operating under some measure of state supervision, whose protection under Parker is even more restricted. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 57-62, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985).

³ Charley's Taxi Radio Dispatch Corp. v. Sida of Hawaii, Inc., 810 F.2d 869, 875-76 (9th Cir. 1987) (state department of transportation); Deak-Perera Hawaii, Inc. v. Department of Transportation, 745 F.2d 1281, 1282-83 (9th Cir. 1984) (same), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1053, 84 L. Ed. 2d 820, 105 S. Ct. 1756 (1985); Saenz v. University Interscholastic League, 487 F.2d 1026, 1027-28 (5th Cir. 1973) (division of University of Texas); compare Cine 42nd Street Theater Corp. v. Nederlander Org., Inc., 790 F.2d 1032, 1044-46 (2d Cir. 1986); see generally I Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 224b2, at 411-415; id. P 212.2d (1992 Supp.).

The question remains whether and to what extent a plaintiff should be able to pierce the Parker defense on the ground that the state official or agency was acting in excess of his (or its) authority under state law. On the one hand, [15] the Supreme Court has made clear that the Eleventh Amendment is not to be avoided under Ex Parte Young merely in order to enforce state law. Pennhurst State School & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 106, 79 L. Ed. 2d 67, 104 S. Ct. 900 (1984). On the other hand, extreme cases can be imagined: suppose a state executive official entered into an exclusive-dealing contract for the state that would violate the principles of Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961), if done by a private party, and suppose further that the state legislature had expressly banned such a contract.

We need not resolve such conundrums here. Neo Gen argues that the Massachusetts legislature did not expressly approve or authorize the kind of regulation or contract involved in this case; but we have rejected a "clear articulation" test as applied to the state's executive branch, at least where a full-fledged department is concerned. Given the Commonwealth statutes that authorize testing, there is nothing extraordinary or unforeseeable about the Department of Public Health's regulation requiring testing or its decision [16] to do the testing itself or through a chosen instrument. Even if a patent lack of authority could ever be an exception to Parker, it is certainly not so in a case of this kind.

There are a scattering of other allegations in count I in addition to the charge that the University of Massachusetts sought and acquired a monopoly over newborn screening. These include claims that the "defendants" fixed the price of services at $ 42 per infant (whereas Neo Gen offered testing at $ 25), and that the defendants "influenced" the adoption of the regulations.⁴ These undeveloped allegations are not pursued in Neo Gen's brief and deserve no further comment. *King v. [30] Town of Hanover, 116 F.3d 965, 970 (1st Cir. 1997).

[17] It may be, as Neo Gen charges, that the defendants' actions reflect a cozy arrangement that gives newborns inferior screening at higher cost and that everyone--except possibly the Screening Program--would be better off if hospitals could contract competitively for screening services, just as they procure drugs, bandages, and other resources. The state, in turn, says that its contract provides for extra research and follow-up that Neo Gen fails to provide; such cross-subsidy arguments are traditional defenses for monopoly but not invariably without merit. At bottom, this is a policy matter to be resolved by the Commonwealth.

Affirmed.

End of Document

⁴ But cf. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) (coordination within a firm is not "price fixing" prohibited by the antitrust laws), and Eastern R.R. Pres. Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961) (petitions to the government, if not mere "shams," do not give rise to antitrust liability).

Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

May 3, 1999, Argued and Submitted, Portland, Oregon ; July 14, 1999, Filed

No. 98-36024

Reporter

185 F.3d 957 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15711 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,575; 23 Employee Benefits Cas. (BNA) 1906; 99 Cal. Daily Op. Service 5609; 99 Daily Journal DAR 7181

OREGON LABORERS-EMPLOYERS HEALTH & WELFARE TRUST FUND; SCHOOL DISTRICT # 1, HEALTH & WELFARE TRUST FUND; PLUMBERS, STEAMFITTERS, & SHIPFITTERS RETIREE HEALTH & WELFARE PLAN, UNITED ASSOCIATION UNION LOCAL 290; LOCAL 11 OFFICE & PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYEES INTERNATIONAL UNION, HEALTH & WELFARE PLAN; LOCAL 125 INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS, LOCAL 125, EBA-PGE-IBEW LOCAL 125 HEALTH & WELFARE TRUST, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED; RJ REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY; BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION; BRITISH AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY LTD; BAT INDUSTRIES PLC; LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY; LIGGETT GROUP INCORPORATED; AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY; UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY; COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH USA INCORPORATED; TOBACCO INSTITUTE INCORPORATED; SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL INCORPORATED; HILL & KNOWLTON INCORPORATED, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied January 10, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 126.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Oregon. D.C. No. CV-97-01051-MA. Malcolm F. Marsh, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

damages, smokers, plaintiffs', antitrust, smoking, defendants', consumer, anti trust law, injuries, Funds, antitrust claim, proximate cause, cigarettes, ascertain, products, remote, safer, alleged wrongful conduct, personal injury, costs, present case, smoking-related, competitors, expenses, unjust enrichment, civil conspiracy, equitable relief, tobacco product, district court, health risk

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a district court's grant of judgment on the pleadings for failure to state a claim.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN2 Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

A judgment on the pleadings is properly granted when, taking all the allegations in the pleading as true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Standing

HN3 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\) and 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) provide a private right of action for damages only to those individuals injured in their business or property by reason of a violation of the law's substantive provisions. Both statutes also require that the alleged violation of the law be a "proximate cause" of the injury suffered. "Proximate cause" is used to label generically the judicial tools used to limit a person's responsibility for the consequences of that person's own acts. At bottom, the notion of proximate cause reflects ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient. Accordingly, among the many shapes this concept took at common law was a demand for some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4 Private Actions, Remedies

A direct relationship between the injury and the alleged wrongdoing, although not the "sole requirement" of Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) and antitrust proximate causation, is one of its central elements. Thus, a plaintiff who complains of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts is generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover. To determine whether an injury is "too remote" to allow recovery under RICO and the antitrust laws, the court applies the following three-factor "remoteness" test: (1) whether there are more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct who can be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general; (2) whether it will be difficult to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's damages attributable to defendant's wrongful conduct; and (3) whether the courts will have to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Remedies

To recover equitable relief under antitrust laws, a plaintiff has to show antitrust injury, either real or threatened. This requirement ensures that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place. An "antitrust injury" is an injury of the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall. The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. The requirement that the alleged injury be related to anti-competitive behavior requires, as a corollary, that the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors. In other words, the party alleging the injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN6 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Remedies

Injunctive relief is not available to a private party in a civil Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN7 Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Under Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.638\(1\), the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) grants standing to any person who suffers any ascertainable loss of money resulting from a violation of the law. Damages predicated upon "personal injury" are not recoverable under the UTPA.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN8 Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

A plaintiff may not recover for economic loss resulting from negligent infliction of bodily harm to a third person. This rule extends to loss resulting from fraudulent misrepresentation.

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > General Overview

Torts, Business Torts

To state a cause of action for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must show that he conferred a "benefit" on the defendant and that it would be unjust for the defendant to retain that benefit.

Counsel: Steve D. Larson and Scott A. Shorr, Stoll Stoll Berne Lokting & Shlachter, Portland, Oregon, and Michael Spencer, Millberg, Weiss, Bershad, Hynes & Lerach, New York, New York, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Herbert M. Wachtell, Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz, New York, New York, for the defendants-appellees.

Michael D. Reynolds, Assistant Attorney General, Salem, Oregon, for amicus curiae State of Oregon.

Carl R. Schenker, Jr., O'Melveny & Myers, Washington, D.C., for amicus curiae Product Liability Advisory Council.

Jan S. Amundson, National Association of Manufacturers, Washington, D.C., for amicus curiae National Association of Manufacturers.

Judges: Before: William C. Canby, Jr., Thomas G. Nelson, Circuit Judges, and Jeremy Fogel, District Judge.¹ Opinion by Judge T.G. Nelson.

Opinion by: THOMAS G. NELSON

Opinion

[*961] OPINION

T.G. NELSON, Circuit Judge:

The plaintiffs [2] in this action are six Oregon-based employee health and welfare benefit trust plans created to provide comprehensive health care benefits to their participants, who are thousands of union and public-sector workers employed under various collective bargaining agreements. Plaintiffs filed suit against defendants - eight tobacco companies, three non-profit public relations/lobbying/research councils and one public relations firm - under federal RICO, Oregon RICO, federal and state antitrust laws, and other Oregon state laws. Plaintiffs seek to recover the costs they have incurred treating their participants' and beneficiaries' smoking-related illnesses. The district court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants, concluding that plaintiffs had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. We affirm.

I.

Plaintiffs are five health and welfare trust funds that provide health care benefits to their participants and beneficiaries. These funds are formed and operated as legal trusts with each trust's mission being to pay for health care benefits for participating workers, retirees and their [3] families.

¹ Honorable Jeremy Fogel, United States District Court Judge for the Northern District of California, sitting by designation.

In their complaint, plaintiffs allege the following: In the early 1950's, scientific studies linking smoking to health risks surfaced. Defendants concluded that an awareness of the health risks associated with smoking could result in regulation of the tobacco industry and threaten the industry's profitability. To prevent this from happening, defendants began a public relations campaign to persuade the public that the industry would research the health risks from tobacco and make a candid disclosure of the results. Defendants, however, entered into a conspiracy to do just the opposite.

Plaintiffs' complaint cites many examples of this alleged public relations campaign that was being waged at the same time that defendants were allegedly engaged in a covert scheme to defraud the public (including plaintiffs) as to the health risks of smoking. Defendants allegedly sought to conceal the scientific evidence about smoking risks and to maintain the powerful "lie" that the link between smoking and disease was an "open controversy." Defendants' alleged misconduct covered not only the general smoking-disease link, but also the degree of the health risk, the addictiveness of smoking, [4] the feasibility of safer cigarettes, the actual safety of low-tar and filtered cigarettes, and the suppression of comparative safety information about different product designs. Defendants also allegedly sought to impair the development and implementation of smoking cessation programs, and fought efforts to ban smoking in the workplace.

Plaintiffs also allege that defendants conspired to restrain intercompany competition in making and marketing safer cigarettes or alternative products. Defendants allegedly stopped advertising differences in product safety, fixed the quality level of products allowed in the market, suppressed product information, and policed their agreement not to let any manufacturer introduce and market tobacco products that were safer or less hazardous. Plaintiffs allege that this conduct presents a classic case of horizontal conspiracy to fix product quality and that, as a result, cigarettes [*962] are perhaps the only product that has not gotten any safer in the last forty-five years. Finally, plaintiffs allege that defendants targeted teen smokers to replace the adult smokers that died.

As to damages, plaintiffs allege that defendants' wrongdoing injured them in two [5] causal chains. First, defendants' alleged manipulation of information and suppression of products prevented plaintiffs from obtaining accurate information and safer products in operating their health funds, which in turn prevented plaintiffs from taking action to reduce smoking rates among their participants. This reduction in smoking rates would have led to a reduction in smoking-related disease among the funds' participants which would have in turn led to lowering plaintiffs' expenditures. Second, plaintiffs allege that defendants' wrongful fraud and concealment of information, suppression of safer products, targeting of children and manipulation of nicotine resulted in more smoking, less quitting, and smoking of more hazardous cigarettes among the funds' participants, which in turn resulted in higher incidence of disease and higher expenditures for medical bills by plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs allege that, but for defendants' conduct, plaintiffs would have undertaken stronger anti-smoking measures. Plaintiffs further allege that they have borne the brunt of smoking-related health care costs and that plaintiffs simply seek to replenish trust assets by recovering from defendants the injuries [6] that plaintiffs have suffered as a result of defendants' misconduct.

Plaintiffs have asserted the following claims for relief: federal RICO, Oregon RICO, federal and state antitrust, Oregon's Unfair Trade Practices Act ("UTPA"), fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment, unjust enrichment, negligent breach of a special assumed duty and civil conspiracy. Plaintiffs seek damages as well as equitable and injunctive relief.

Defendants moved the district court for judgment on the pleadings on each of plaintiffs' claims or, alternatively, for dismissal for failure to join necessary parties. The district court granted defendants' motion, finding plaintiffs failed to state a claim on which relief could be granted. See Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 2d 1170 \(D. Or. 1998\).

The district court held (1) that plaintiffs did not meet the standing or proximate cause requirements necessary to maintain either a federal or state antitrust claim; (2) that plaintiffs' injuries were entirely dependent upon injuries sustained by their participants and were thus too far removed from the challenged harmful conduct to support [7]

either a federal or state RICO claim;² (3) that plaintiffs did not meet the standing requirement of Oregon UTPA because they were not "consumers of defendants' products"; (4) that plaintiffs did not meet the proximate cause requirements to maintain a claim for fraud; (5) that the theories of unjust enrichment and indemnity were inapplicable; (6) that plaintiffs failed to allege the elements necessary to maintain a claim for breach of an assumed duty;³ and (7) that plaintiffs' claim for civil conspiracy was entirely dependent on the underlying claims for fraud and UTPA violations and must therefore also fail.

[[8] II.

HN1[We review de novo a district court's grant of judgment on the pleadings for failure to state a claim. Nelson v. City of Irvine, 143 F.3d 1196, 1200 (9th Cir. [*963] 1998). HN2["A judgment on the pleadings is properly granted when, taking all the allegations in the pleading as true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Id.

III.

A. RICO and Antitrust Claims for Damages

The requirements for standing to maintain a civil action under RICO and the antitrust laws are similar.⁴ See Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992). HN3[Both provide a private right of action for damages only to those individuals "injured in [their] business or property by reason of" a violation of the law's substantive provisions. 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (RICO); 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (antitrust). Both also require that the alleged violation of the law be a "proximate cause" of the injury suffered. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268 (RICO); Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) [[9] (antitrust)]. As the Court explained in Holmes:

Here we use "proximate cause" to label generically the judicial tools used to limit a person's responsibility for the consequences of that person's own acts. At bottom, the notion of proximate cause reflects ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient. Accordingly, among the many shapes this concept took at common law was a demand for some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged.

503 U.S. at 268 (citations and quotations omitted) (emphasis added).

[[10] HN4[

A direct relationship between the injury and the alleged wrongdoing, although not the "sole requirement" of RICO and antitrust proximate causation, "has been one of its central elements." 503 U.S. at 269 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters ("AGC"), 459 U.S. 519, 540, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897

²The district court held that plaintiffs also lacked standing under Oregon RICO because they failed to allege that defendants have been convicted of mail or wire fraud as required under Oregon RICO. 17 F. Supp. 2d at 1179 (citing Or. Rev. Stat. § 166.725(7)(a)(A)). Plaintiffs have not appealed the district court's dismissal of their Oregon RICO claim. This claim is therefore waived.

³ Plaintiffs have not appealed the dismissal of their claim for breach of an assumed duty. This claim is therefore waived.

⁴ Plaintiffs assert claims under both federal and state antitrust laws. The Oregon antitrust statutes are almost identical to the federal antitrust statutes. Compare 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 with Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 646.725, 646.730. In fact, Oregon courts look to federal antitrust decisions for "persuasive" guidance in interpreting the state antitrust laws. See Willamette Dental Group, P.C. v. Oregon Dental Serv. Corp., 130 Ore. App. 487, 882 P.2d 637, 640 (Or. Ct. App. 1994) (citing Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.715(2)). The district court and the parties have treated the state and federal antitrust claims as one and the same for purposes of standing analysis. We do the same.

(1983)). "Thus, a plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover."

To determine whether an injury is "too remote" to allow recovery under RICO and the antitrust laws, the Court applies the following three-factor "remoteness" test: (1) whether there are more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct who can be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general; (2) whether it will be difficult to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's damages attributable to defendant's wrongful conduct; and (3) whether the courts will have to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries. See id. at 269-70 (RICO); AGC, 459 U.S. at 545 [11] (antitrust).

Plaintiffs in the present case assert that they have suffered both "direct" injury and "indirect" injury. They claim a "direct" injury based on what they call a "one-link" causation chain. As defendants point out, however, all of plaintiffs' claims rely on alleged injury to smokers - without any injury to smokers, plaintiffs would not have incurred the additional expenses in paying for the medical expenses of those smokers. Thus, there is no "direct" link between the alleged misconduct of defendants and the alleged damage to plaintiffs. See Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit [*964] Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 172 F.3d 223, 233 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that because trust funds' damages "are entirely derivative of the harm suffered by plan participants as a result of using tobacco products," the damages were "indirect" and did not "proximately cause the injuries alleged" by the trusts); see also Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912, 928 (3d Cir. 1999) (holding that it did not matter whether plaintiffs' injuries were "direct" or "indirect" because "the plaintiffs' direct claim comes no closer than [12] their indirect claim to meeting the proximate cause requirement for antitrust standing").

Two circuit courts have addressed the issue of a health trust fund's standing to bring antitrust and RICO actions. Both the Second and the Third Circuits have held that a trust fund's claims are "too remote" to allow recovery and that the actions are therefore barred. See Laborers Local 17, 172 F.3d 223 (addressing only RICO); Steamfitters, 171 F.3d 912 (addressing RICO and antitrust).

Because we determine that the "remoteness" test weighs in favor of barring plaintiffs' action, we agree with the Second and the Third Circuits and hold that plaintiffs' RICO and antitrust claims are "too remote" from defendants' alleged wrongdoing to allow recovery. These claims are therefore barred.

1. Existence of More Direct Victims of Alleged Wrongful Conduct

Plaintiffs argue that their "standing is confirmed" because only they, and not smokers, "can allege injury to business or property for the RICO and antitrust claims at issue here."

Plaintiffs are correct that individuals that suffer personal injury cannot claim medical expenses as "injury to business or property," [*13] and that the smokers are therefore barred from asserting RICO or antitrust claims. See Berg v. First State Ins. Co., 915 F.2d 460, 464 (9th Cir. 1990) (holding that personal injury is not "injury to business or property" and is therefore not compensable under RICO). This inability does not, however, necessarily lead to the conclusion that plaintiffs must therefore have standing.

First, "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." AGC, 459 U.S. at 534. Some injuries caused by an antitrust violation may thus be left unremedied for lack of a proper plaintiff. As we recognized in Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 788 F.2d 574, 580 n.7 (9th Cir. 1986): "The fact that injury has occurred and that other claims have failed does not permit this court to expand the coverage of [antitrust law]."

Second, there is an identifiable group of persons - smokers - whose self-interest will motivate them to seek recovery of the damages caused by defendants' alleged wrongful conduct. Although the smokers cannot "vindicate" [*14] the public interest in antitrust [or RICO] enforcement," see AGC, 459 U.S. at 542, they can "remedy the harm done by defendants' alleged misconduct. Moreover, these actions [by the smokers] will promote 'the general interest in deterring injurious conduct,' which Holmes noted as the objective of this policy factor." Laborers Local 17, 172 F.3d at 235 (quoting Holmes, 503 U.S. 258 at 269).

The existence of the smokers, who are more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct and who can be counted on to vindicate the injury caused by defendants' alleged wrongful conduct, weighs heavily in favor of barring plaintiffs' actions.

2. Difficulty in Ascertaining Damages Attributable to Defendants' Alleged Wrongful Conduct

Although the actual damages attributable to medical payments made by plaintiffs due to smoking-related injuries would be as easy to ascertain in the present case as in a direct action by the smokers, the other damages that plaintiffs allege would [*965] be very difficult to ascertain. As the Third Circuit stated:

The Funds' alleged damages are said to arise from the fact that the tobacco companies prevented [15] the Funds from providing smoking-cessation or safer smoking information to their participants, some of whom would have allegedly quit smoking or begun smoking safer products, reducing their smoking-related illnesses, and thereby lowering the Funds' costs for reimbursing smokers' health care expenditures. In order to calculate the damages - i.e., the costs not lowered due to the antitrust conspiracy - the Funds must demonstrate how many smokers would have stopped smoking if provided with smoking-cessation information, how many would have begun smoking less dangerous products, how much healthier these smokers would have been if they had taken these actions, and the savings the Funds would have realized by paying out fewer claims for smoking-related illnesses.

It is apparent why the Funds argue that they can demonstrate all of this through aggregation and statistical modeling: it would be impossible for them to do so otherwise. Yet we do not believe that aggregation and statistical modeling are sufficient to get the Funds over the hurdle of the AGC factor focusing on whether the "damages claim is . . . highly speculative."

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 929. [16]

The Second Circuit similarly found the damages claim of the trust funds to be highly speculative:

It will be virtually impossible for plaintiffs to prove with any certainty: (1) the effect any smoking cessation programs or incentives would have had on the number of smokers among the plan beneficiaries; (2) the countereffect that the tobacco companies' direct fraud would have had on the smokers, despite the best efforts of the Funds; and (3) other reasons why individual smokers would continue smoking, even after having been informed of the dangers of smoking and having been offered smoking cessation programs. On a fundamental level, these difficulties of proving damages stem from the agency of the individual smokers in deciding whether, and how frequently, to smoke. In this light, the direct injury test can be seen as wisely limiting standing to sue to those situations where the chain of causation leading to damages is not complicated by the intervening agency of third parties (here, the smokers) from whom the plaintiffs' injuries derive.

These concerns become particularly pointed in a case, like the present one, where the injuries are alleged to derive not simply from defendants' [17] affirmative misconduct but also from plaintiffs' fraudulently induced inaction. That is, it is often easier to ascertain the damages that flow from actual, affirmative conduct, than to speculate what damages arose from a party's failure to act. In the latter situation, as in the case at hand, it becomes difficult to distinguish among the multitude of factors that might have affected the damages. Here, for example, plaintiffs' alleged damages might have derived from inefficiencies in the Funds' own management, as well as from non-smoking related health problems suffered by the smokers, and it would be the sheerest sort of speculation to determine how these damages might have been lessened had the Funds adopted the measures defendants allegedly induced them not to adopt.

Laborers Local 17, 172 F.3d at 233-34.

The difficulty of ascertaining the damages attributable to defendants' alleged wrongful conduct and the complexity involved in calculating these damages weigh heavily, if not dispositively, in favor of barring plaintiffs' actions.

3. Potential for Duplicative Recovery or Complex Apportionment of Damages

This third and final factor also weighs in favor [18] of barring plaintiffs' actions. It is [*966] quite likely that if there are not cases by smokers already pending in Oregon, there will likely be many filed as has been seen in other states. Although the smokers cannot recover under either RICO or the antitrust laws, they can seek recovery under other state law theories for personal injury and the associated medical costs - the same damages that plaintiffs seek to recover. Moreover, although there may be some protection from multiple recovery in state law, this safeguard would not cure the ultimate problem - that the courts would be forced "to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiffs at different levels of injury from the violative acts, to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries." See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269 (citing AGC, 459 U.S. 519 at 543-44); Laborers Local 17, 172 F.3d at 230.

All three factors of the "remoteness" test weigh in favor of barring plaintiffs' claims. We therefore hold that plaintiffs lack standing to bring either a RICO or an antitrust claim for damages.⁵

[19] B. RICO and Antitrust Claims for Equitable Relief

In addition to damages, plaintiffs seek equitable relief under RICO and the antitrust laws.

1. Antitrust

Standing analysis for equitable relief under the antitrust laws is not the same as standing analysis for damages. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110-11, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 & nn. 5-6 (1986). As the Court explained in Cargill:

The fact is that one injunction is as effective as 100, and, concomitantly, that 100 injunctions are no more effective than one. Thus, because standing [for damages] raises no threat of multiple lawsuits or duplicative recoveries, some of the factors other than antitrust injury that are appropriate to a determination of standing [for damages] are not relevant [to a determination of standing for equitable relief].

Id. at 111 n.6 (citation and quotation omitted) (emphasis added).

Thus, plaintiffs may not have to meet all three factors in the "remoteness" test to maintain an action for antitrust injunctive relief. HN5 Plaintiffs do, however, still have to show antitrust injury - either real or [20] threatened. See id. at 111-13. This requirement "ensures that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place." ARCO v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\).

An "antitrust injury" is an injury of "the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall." AGC, 459 U.S. at 540. "The antitrust laws . . . were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\) (quotation omitted). "The requirement that the alleged injury be related to anti-competitive behavior requires, as a corollary, that the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors." Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 \(9th Cir. 1985\). "In other words, the party alleging the injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market." Eagle v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538, 540 \(9th Cir. 1987\). [21]

In their complaint, plaintiffs define the antitrust market at issue as the market for cigarettes and tobacco products. [*967] Plaintiffs are neither consumers nor competitors in that market. They are not, therefore, "participants in the same market" as defendants, and they have thus not suffered "antitrust injury." See Bhan, 772 F.2d at 1470; see also Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 926.

⁵ Plaintiffs' argument that their standing to bring RICO and antitrust actions is "confirmed" by state and common law rules governing proximate cause, as well as trust law, ignores the test set out by the Supreme Court for analyzing standing in RICO and antitrust cases. This argument also ignores the fact that there is an alternative route for the trusts to recover the damages alleged in the present action - via subrogation in a non-RICO, non-antitrust action. See Laborers Local 17, 172 F.3d at 235.

Plaintiffs' reliance on McCready to argue that "there is no 'consumer' or market participant requirement," is misplaced. The plaintiff in McCready filed an antitrust action against Blue Shield, claiming that Blue Shield's "practice of refusing to reimburse subscribers for psychotherapy performed by psychologists, while providing reimbursement for comparable treatment by psychiatrists, was in furtherance of an unlawful conspiracy to restrain competition in the psychotherapy market." 457 U.S. at 467. The Court held that the plaintiff, as a subscriber who had employed the services of a psychologist and thus a consumer of psychotherapy services, had standing to maintain the antitrust action. See 457 U.S. at 480-81, 484-85. The Court did [\[22\]](#) not hold that there is no "consumer" or "market participant" requirement.

The present case is distinguishable from McCready in several aspects. First, the plaintiff in McCready was a consumer in the relevant market of "psychotherapeutic services." See 457 U.S. at 483. In contrast, it is undisputed that plaintiffs in the present case are neither "consumers" nor "competitors" in the relevant market of cigarettes and tobacco products.

Second, the Court has explained that the broad language it used in *McCready*⁶ was simply a paraphrase of the antitrust laws and "added nothing to the even broader language that the statute itself contains." See AGC, 459 U.S. at 529 & n.19. In so explaining, the Court noted that the actual plaintiff in McCready was directly harmed by the defendants' unlawful conduct. See id.

[\[23\]](#) In contrast, plaintiffs' own argument in the present case reveals that they were not directly harmed by defendants' allegedly unlawful conduct, but rather that any harm they suffered is derivative of the harm suffered by smokers.⁷ As the Third Circuit stated:

It is true that, drawing on the language from McCready, we have sometimes expressed the injury requirement in terms of the harm being "inextricably intertwined" with the defendant's wrongdoing. The simple invocation of this phrase, however, will not allow a plaintiff to avoid the fundamental requirement for antitrust standing that he or she have suffered an injury of the type - almost exclusively suffered by consumers or competitors - that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 926 n.8 (citations omitted).

[\[24\]](#) Plaintiffs have failed to allege an injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Plaintiffs are neither consumers nor competitors in the relevant market of cigarettes and tobacco products. To the extent they have suffered injury, their claims are entirely derivative of the injuries suffered by smokers. Their injuries are not of a nature to establish standing for equitable relief under the antitrust laws.

2. RICO

HN6  [↑] "Injunctive relief is not available to a private party in a civil RICO action." [\[*968\]](#) Religious Tech. Ctr. v. Wollersheim, 796 F.2d 1076, 1084 \(9th Cir. 1986\).

C. State Law Claims

1. Unfair Trade Practices Act

HN7  [↑] The UTPA grants standing to "any person who suffers any ascertainable loss of money" resulting from a violation of the law. Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.638\(1\). Damages predicated upon "personal injury" are not recoverable under the UTPA. See Gross-Haentjens v. Leckenby, 38 Ore. App. 313, 589 P.2d 1209, 1211 \(Or. Ct. App. 1979\)

⁶ In McCready, the Court stated: "As we have recognized, 'the statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.'" 457 U.S. at 472.

⁷ Plaintiffs argue that their injuries are "inextricably intertwined with that of market participants (smokers deprived of a choice of a safer product) in that the Trust paid the bills resulting from the restraint."

(holding the UTPA does not cover personal injuries). Plaintiffs' damages - expenses to treat smokers' personal injuries - are clearly predicated upon "personal injury" and are therefore [25] unrecoverable under the UTPA.

Moreover, "the UTPA is to be construed consistently with its consumer protective purposes." Cullen v. Investment Strategies, Inc., 139 Ore. App. 119, 911 P.2d 936, 941 (Or. Ct. App. 1996); see also Raudabaugh v. Action Pest Control, 59 Ore. App. 166, 650 P.2d 1006, 1008-09 (Or. Ct. App. 1982) (noting that the purpose of UTPA is to "provide a viable remedy for consumers" and if "there is an ascertainable loss to a consumer, that consumer has a cause of action" under UTPA). This emphasis on direct protection of consumers suggests that the UTPA, like the other statutes that we have discussed, is not intended to provide a cause of action to a non-consumer that is wholly derivative of injury to consumers.

2. Fraud

The Oregon Supreme Court recognizes the prevailing rule "that HN8[↑] a plaintiff may not recover for economic loss resulting from negligent infliction of bodily harm to a third person," Ore-Ida Foods, Inc. v. Indian Head Cattle Co., 290 Ore. 909, 627 P.2d 469, 473 (Or. 1981), and has extended this rule to loss resulting from fraudulent misrepresentation. See Oksenholt v. Lederle Lab., 294 Ore. 213, 656 P.2d 293, 299 (Or. 1982) [26] (holding that claim for indemnity is a claim for recovery for economic loss that results from physical harm to a third person and is barred in both a negligence and fraudulent misrepresentation action under Ore-Ida).

In the present case, plaintiffs seek only to recover medical costs paid on behalf of their beneficiaries. This is a classic claim for indemnity, with plaintiffs attempting to recover for the economic loss they have suffered as a result of the physical harm suffered by third parties - the smokers. Under Ore-Ida and Oksenholt, this claim for damages is barred.

Moreover, for the same reasons that proximate cause did not exist for plaintiffs' RICO and antitrust claims, proximate cause is lacking for their fraud claim. See Oksenholt, 656 P.2d at 299 ("Damages properly recoverable in an action for intentional misrepresentation are those which are a direct and necessary result of defendant's acts or omissions.").

3. Unjust Enrichment

Under Oregon law, HN9[↑] to state a cause of action for unjust enrichment, plaintiffs must show that they conferred a "benefit" on defendants and that it would be unjust for defendants to retain that benefit. [27] See L.S. Henriksen Constr., Inc. v. Shea, 155 Ore. App. 156, 961 P.2d 295, 296-97 (Or. Ct. App. 1998).

Plaintiffs allege that they conferred a "benefit" on defendants by paying the medical bills of the smokers. Plaintiffs do not, however, allege that defendants had any legal obligation to pay the medical expenses of the smokers. Without a legal obligation on the part of defendants to pay, the payment by plaintiffs did not "benefit" defendants.

Moreover, because plaintiffs had an independent obligation to pay the smokers' medical expenses, they cannot maintain an action for unjust enrichment against defendants just because defendants were incidentally benefitted. See Restatement of Restitution § 106 (1936) ("A person who, [*969] incidentally to the performance of his own duty . . . has conferred a benefit upon another, is not thereby entitled to contribution.").

4. Civil Conspiracy

Plaintiffs' claim for civil conspiracy is entirely dependent on their underlying claims for fraud and violations of UTPA. Because these underlying claims fail, plaintiffs' civil conspiracy claim must also fail.

IV.

As the district court stated:

However compelling [plaintiffs'] [28] charges may be, there are very sound judicial policy reasons for limiting legal actions to those parties most directly injured by the harmful conduct. These policies are not new and have lengthy historical roots in our jurisprudence. To allow plaintiffs to maintain actions that are entirely dependent upon the harm suffered by others threatens chaos for the judicial system, especially where others may (and have) filed their own actions and are capable of recovering a full range of damages, including the medical costs sought here.

17 F. Supp. 2d at 1183.

The district court's grant of judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants is AFFIRMED.

End of Document

Robert's Haw. Sch. Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co.

Supreme Court of Hawai'i

July 15, 1999, Decided ; July 15, 1999, Filed

NO. 19044

Reporter

91 Haw. 224 *; 982 P.2d 853 ; 1999 Haw. LEXIS 261 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,582

ROBERT'S HAWAII SCHOOL BUS, INC.; and STUDENT TRANSPORTATION, INC., Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. LAUPAHOEHOE TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, INC.; CENTRAL TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, INC.; DOUBLE K TRANSPORTATION SERVICES, INC.; T & N TRANSPORTATION SERVICES, INC.; and NOBU SHINOHARA, as Personal Representative of the Estate of CHIAKI MATSUO, Defendants-Appellees, and JOHN DOES 1-25 and DOE BUSINESS ENTITIES 26-50, Defendants

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE FIRST CIRCUIT COURT. CIV. NO. 93-1428-04.

Disposition: Affirmed the trial court's judgment, findings, and conclusions.

Core Terms

Double, bid, routes, Island, bidder, school bus, practices, lease, buses, unfair, trial court, Antitrust, alter ego, monopolize, tortious interference, appellants', prospective business advantage, Transportation, courts, insufficient evidence, corporate veil, baseyard, charter, stock, attempt to monopolize, anti trust law, Specification, conspiracy, ownership, shell

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > State Proceedings

HN1[Agency Rulemaking, State Proceedings

Under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 103-11 (1993), Department of Accounting and General Services rules shall have the force of law.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > Fraud & Misrepresentation

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2 Alter Ego, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Generally speaking, the question whether a corporation is a mere agency, instrumentality, or alter ego of another corporation or individual is one of fact. However, when all material facts are undisputed, application of the alter ego doctrine is a question of law. Thus, summary judgment may be granted in a case where no genuine issue of fact is raised or shown. However, it is recognized that the determination of whether there are sufficient grounds for piercing the corporate veil ordinarily should not be disposed of by summary judgment, in view of the complex economic questions often involved, especially if fraud is alleged.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN3 Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

The question whether one's actions amount to unfair methods of competition is one of fact.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN4 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Hawaii appellate courts review conclusions of law de novo, under the right/wrong standard. Under the right/wrong standard, the court examines the facts and answers the question without being required to give any weight to the trial court's answer to it. A conclusion of law will not be overturned if supported by the trial court's findings of fact and by the application of the correct rule of law. However, a trial court's label is not determinative of the standard of review to be applied on appeal.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN5 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The interpretation of a statute is a question of law reviewable de novo.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

The starting point in statutory construction is to determine the legislative intent from the language of the statute itself. The court's foremost obligation when interpreting a statute is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the legislature, which is obtained primarily from the language contained in the statute itself. The court reads statutory language in the context of the entire statute and construes it in a manner consistent with its purpose.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Legislation, Interpretation

When there is doubt, doubleness of meaning, or indistinctiveness or uncertainty of an expression used in a statute, an ambiguity exists. In construing an ambiguous statute, the meaning of the ambiguous words may be sought by examining the context, with which ambiguous words, phrases, and sentences may be compared, in order to ascertain their true meaning. Moreover, the courts may resort to extrinsic aids in determining legislative intent. One avenue is the use of legislative history as an interpretive tool. The court may also consider the reason and spirit of the law, and the cause which induced the legislature to enact it to discover its true meaning. Laws in pari materia, or upon the same subject matter, shall be construed with reference to each other. What is clear in one statute may be called upon in aid to explain what is doubtful in another.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

HN8 Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

An award or denial of punitive damages is within the sound discretion of the trier of fact and will not be reversed absent a clear abuse of discretion. A court abuses its discretion whenever it exceeds the bounds of reason or disregards rules or principles of law or practice to the substantial detriment of a party.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > State Proceedings

HN9 Agency Rulemaking, State Proceedings

Agency regulations affect internal management and do not affect private rights of or procedures available to the public.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN10 Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

Establishing a corporation to limit personal liability is proper and is, alone, an insufficient basis for the application of the doctrines of alter ego or piercing the corporate veil.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN11 Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

The common purpose of statutes providing limited shareholder liability is to offer a valuable incentive to business investment. Although the greatest judicial deference normally is accorded to the separate corporate entity, this entity is still a fiction. Thus, when particular circumstances merit--for example, when the incentive value of limited liability is outweighed by the competing value of basic fairness to parties dealing with the corporation--courts may look past a corporation's formal existence to hold shareholders or other controlling individuals liable for "corporate" obligations. When a corporation is the mere instrumentality or business conduit of another corporation or person, the corporate form may be disregarded.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Corporations > Subsidiary Corporations

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Corporations > General Overview

HN12 Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

The alter ego doctrine has been adopted by the courts in cases where the corporate entity has been used as a subterfuge and to observe it would work an injustice. The rationale behind the theory is that, if the shareholders or the corporations themselves disregard the proper formalities of a corporation, then the law will do likewise as necessary to protect individual and corporate creditors. The rule is designed to give incentives to those using the corporate form to obey the state's laws fully by maintaining the formalities and the legal separateness of the corporation. Thus, those who fail to maintain the corporate formalities cannot expect the state to grant them the limited liability that flows from the corporate form. While the instrumentality doctrine has its origin in the context of parent-subsidiary relationships, it has been suggested that a similar analysis is applicable to an individual shareholder's relationship with a corporation.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN13 Piercing the Corporate Veil, Alter Ego

A claim based on the alter ego theory is not in itself a claim for substantive relief, but rather to disregard the corporation as a distinct defendant is procedural. A finding of fact of alter ego, standing alone, creates no cause of action. It merely furnishes a means for a complainant to reach a second corporation or individual upon a cause of action that otherwise would have existed only against the first corporation. An attempt to pierce the corporate veil is a means of imposing liability on an underlying cause of action, such as a tort or breach of contract. The alter ego doctrine is thus remedial, not defensive, in nature. One who seeks to disregard the corporate veil must show that the corporate form has been abused to the injury of a third person.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN14 Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

Courts apply the alter ego doctrine with great caution and reluctance. In fact, many courts require exceptional circumstances before disregarding the corporate form.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > Fraud & Misrepresentation

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

HN15 [] Alter Ego, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Generally speaking, a corporation will be deemed the alter ego of another where recognition of the corporate fiction would bring about injustice and inequity or when there is evidence that the corporate fiction has been used to perpetrate a fraud or defeat a rightful claim. Before a corporation's acts and obligations can be legally recognized as those of a particular person, and vice versa, it must be made to appear that (1) the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest that the individuality, or separateness, of such person and corporation has ceased, and (2) that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would, under the particular circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action > Misappropriation of Funds

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Finance > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Finance > Initial Capitalization & Stock Subscriptions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN16 [] Piercing the Corporate Veil, Alter Ego

Factors that many courts have weighed in determining whether a corporate entity is the alter ego of another include: (1) commingling of funds and other assets, failure to segregate funds of the separate entities, and the unauthorized diversion of corporate funds or assets to other than corporate uses; (2) the treatment by an individual of the assets of the corporation as his own; (3) the failure to obtain authority to issue stock or to subscribe to or issue the same; (4) the holding out by an individual that he is personally liable for the debts of the corporation; (5) the identical equitable ownership in the two entities; (6) the identification of the equitable owners thereof with the domination and control of the two entities; (7) identity of directors and officers of the two entities in the responsible supervision and management; and (8) sole ownership of all of the stock in a corporation by one individual or the members of a family.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN17 [] Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

Factors that many courts have weighed in determining whether a corporate entity is the alter ego of another include: (9) the use of the same office or business location; (10) the employment of the same employees and/or attorney; (11) the failure to adequately capitalize a corporation; (12) the total absence of corporate assets, and undercapitalization; (13) the use of a corporation as a mere shell, instrumentality or conduit for a single venture or the business of an individual or another corporation; (14) the concealment and misrepresentation of the identity of the responsible ownership, management and financial interest, or concealment of personal business activities; (15) the disregard of legal formalities and the failure to maintain arm's length relationships among related entities; and (16) the use of the corporate entity to procure labor, services or merchandise for another person or entity.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholders > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Personal Liability

HN18 Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

Factors that many courts have weighed in determining whether a corporate entity is the alter ego of another include: (17) the diversion of funds to a stockholder or other person or entity, to the detriment of creditors, or the manipulation of assets and liabilities between entities so as to concentrate the assets in one and the liabilities in another; (18) the contracting with another with intent to avoid performance by use of a corporate entity as a shield against personal liability, or the use of a corporation as a subterfuge of illegal transactions; and (19) the formation and use of a corporation to transfer to it the existing liability of another person or entity.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Pensions & Benefits Law > Governmental Employees > General Overview

HN19 Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

Factors that other courts have weighed in determining whether a corporate entity is the alter ego of another include: (1) incorporation for the purpose of circumventing public policy or statutes; (2) whether the parent finances the subsidiary; (3) whether the subsidiary has no business or assets except those conveyed to it by the parent; (4) whether the parent uses the subsidiary's property as its own; (5) whether the directors of the subsidiary do not act independently in the interest of the corporation but take their orders from and serve the parent; and (6) whether the fiction of corporate entity has been adopted or used to evade the provisions of a statute.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN20 Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

Exclusive ownership and control are not solely determinative on the issue of whether the court should disregard the corporate entity. Indeed, the question is one of control, not merely paper ownership. The mere existence or nonexistence of formal stock ownership is not conclusive.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN21 Conspiracy, Elements

Collusion is defined as an agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain an object forbidden by law. It implies the existence of fraud of some kind, the employment of fraudulent means, or of lawful means for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose; a secret combination, conspiracy, or concert of action between two or more persons for fraudulent or deceitful purpose.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN22[] Piercing the Corporate Veil, Alter Ego

The party claiming that a corporation is an alter ego of another bears the burden of proof.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN23[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Plaintiffs/appellants lack standing to obtain relief under Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-2 and 480-13 insofar as the present matter is a private dispute between competing businesses.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN24[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The "state action immunity" doctrine provides that losing bidders are barred from bringing antitrust claims against either the agency or successful bidder, where the state has exclusive control of a bidding process and creates a monopoly by awarding all contracts to one successful bidder. The challenging bidder must show that: (1) the challenged behavior is sanctioned by a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy, and (2) the state expressly supervises the private anticompetitive conduct at issue.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Unclean Hands

HN25[] Damages, Monetary Damages

The unclean hands defense is precluded in Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13 claims for monetary damages.

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN26 [L] Legislation, Overbreadth

Reading the statutory language of Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-2 and 480-13 in pari materia, the court in the past held that § 480-13 affords a private remedy for any violation of § 480-2. However, those cases involved claims of unfair or deceptive acts or practices, not unfair methods of competition. Their holdings are overbroad, and the court restricts their application to unfair or deceptive acts or practices claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN27 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4 (1993), which prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce, traces, verbatim, the language of Sherman Antitrust Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Similarly, Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-9 (1985 & Supp. 1992) provides that no person shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce, tracing Sherman Antitrust Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

Administrative Law > Sovereign Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HN28 [L] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

The private remedy provision contained in the Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, does not extend to Federal Trade Commission Act §5(a)(1), 15 U.S.C.S. § 45, that is, the "unfair methods of competition" section, and that the Federal Trade Commission Act does not afford a private cause of action.

Administrative Law > Sovereign Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

91 Haw. 224, *224 A.982 P.2d 853, 853 A.999 Haw. LEXIS 261, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Administrative Law, Sovereign Immunity

Federal Trade Commission Act § 5, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45, is not limited to the prohibitions of the Sherman or the Clayton Act. Indeed, § 5 is not confined by antitrust concepts at all. It allows the Commission to condemn conduct that is "unfair" in senses beyond simply those enshrined in the letter or encompassed in the spirit of the antitrust laws.

Administrative Law > Sovereign Immunity

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Administrative Law, Sovereign Immunity

There is no private claim for relief under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13 for unfair methods of competition in violation of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN31 [blue icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Generally speaking, the accepted definition of a conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons or entities by concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-9, like the Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. §2, also condemns those who combine or conspire to monopolize. A conspiracy in violation of § 480-9 requires the same proof needed to prove a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Directors & Officers > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN32 [blue icon] Piercing the Corporate Veil, Alter Ego

It is impossible to conspire with an alter ego. Furthermore, an officer of a corporation cannot conspire with the corporation. Nevertheless, the court recognizes that, when officers of a corporation act for their own personal purposes, they become independent actors, who can conspire with the corporation.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN33[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13\(a\), in order to have standing to bring a claim for relief, a plaintiff must show: (1) a violation of Haw. Rev. Stat. chap. 480, (2) injury to plaintiff's business or property, (3) proof of the amount of damages, and (4) a showing that the action is in the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN34[] Clayton Act, Claims

An attempt to monopolize claim, under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-9, requires proof: (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with, (2) a specific intent to monopolize, and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. For a claim to succeed it must also appear that there is a causal connection between the conduct and the monopoly power.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN35[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Although Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 does not define unfair competition, it was constructed in broad language in order to constitute a flexible tool to stop and prevent unfair competition and fraudulent, unfair or deceptive business practices for the protection of both consumers and honest businessmen and businesswomen. Generally speaking, competitive conduct is unfair when it offends established public policy and when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious to consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Administrative Law > Sovereign Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN36 [blue icon] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Act § 5, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45, specifically dictates that it is an unfair method of competition to violate specific trade regulations, to attempt to circumvent antitrust statutes, or to engage in practices that violate the spirit of antitrust laws. The word "unfair" means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN37 [blue icon] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Regarding the element of a specific intent to monopolize, under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-9, one must do more than show that the defendant had the specific intent to prevail over one's rivals. One must show that the defendant desired, for example, to achieve monopoly power, to accomplish a forbidden monopoly, or to exclude competition. Although anticompetitive conduct may supply sufficient inference of this necessary intent, intent alone is insufficient to establish a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN38 [blue icon] Attempts to Monopolize, State Regulation

With respect to the third and final element, an attempt to monopolize claim under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-9 includes activities embodying the employment of methods, means and practices which would, if successful, accomplish monopolization, and which, though falling short, nevertheless approach so close as to create a dangerous probability of it. In order to determine whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts have found it necessary to consider the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in that market. There is universal agreement that monopoly power is the power to exclude competition or control prices. The existence of such power ordinarily may be inferred from a predominant share of the market.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN39 [blue icon] Inchoate Crimes, Attempt

A subsequent failure to achieve monopoly status cannot itself vitiate a claim of attempted monopoly where other evidence substantially supports the attempt without eviscerating the entire attempt offense.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN40 [blue icon] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Although a predominant share of the relevant market is indirect evidence of monopoly power, the mere existence of a predominant share of the market, alone, does not equal the power to control prices or exclude competition.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN41 [blue icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

The court definitively recognizes the intentional tort of tortious interference with prospective business advantage.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN42 [blue icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

The tort of intentional interference with prospective contractual relation is that one who intentionally and improperly interferes with another's prospective contractual relation (except to marry) is subject to liability to the other for pecuniary harm resulting from loss of the benefits of the relation, whether the interference consists of (a) inducing or otherwise causing a third person not to enter into or continue the prospective relation or (b) preventing the other from acquiring or continuing the prospective relation.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN43 [blue icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

In determining whether an actor's conduct in intentionally interfering with a contract or a prospective contractual relation of another is improper or not, consideration is given to the following factors: (a) the nature of the actor's conduct, (b) the actor's motive, (c) the interests of the other with which the actor's conduct interferes, (d) the interests to be advanced by the actor, (e) the social interests in protecting the freedom of action of the actor and the contractual interests of the other, (f) the proximity or remoteness of the actor's conduct to the interference, and (g) the relations between the parties.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN44 [blue] Legislation, Effect & Operation

The following elements have evolved into the tort of intentional or tortious interference with prospective business advantage: (1) the existence of a valid business relationship or a prospective advantage or expectancy sufficiently definite, specific, and capable of acceptance in the sense that there is a reasonable probability of it maturing into a future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) knowledge of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy by the defendant; (3) a purposeful intent to interfere with the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; (4) legal causation between the act of interference and the impairment of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; and (5) actual damages. There must be a colorable economic relationship between the plaintiff and a third party with the potential to develop into a full contractual relationship. The prospective economic relationship need not take the form of an offer but there must be specific facts proving the possibility of future association.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN45 [blue] Conspiracy, Elements

Civil conspiracy does not alone constitute a claim for relief. Moreover, mere acquiescence or knowledge is insufficient to constitute a conspiracy, absent approval, cooperation, or agreement.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Remedies

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN46 [blue] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Whenever a court disregards rules or principles of law or practice to the substantial detriment of a party, it abuses its discretion.

Counsel: On the briefs:

Paul Alston, David A. Nakashima, and Jade Lynne Holck, of Alston Hunt Floyd & Ing, for Plaintiffs-Appellants Robert's Hawaii School Bus, Inc., and Student Transportation, Inc.

George W. Playdon, Jerrold K. Guben, and Ronald T. Ogomori, for Defendants-Appellees Laupahoehoe Transportation Company Inc., Central Transportation Company, Inc., Double K Transportation Services, Inc., and Nobu Shinohara, as Personal Representative of the Estate of Chiaki Matsuo.

John Francis Perkin and Wayne S. Sakamoto, for Defendant-Appellee T&N Transportation Services, Inc.

Judges: RONALD T.Y. MOON, C.J., ROBERT G. KLEIN, STEVEN H. LEVINSON, PAULA A. NAKAYAMA, MARIO R. RAMIL, JJ. OPINION OF THE COURT BY MARIO R. RAMIL, J.

Opinion by: MARIO R. RAMIL

Opinion

[*230] [859] OPINION OF THE COURT BY RAMIL, J.

The instant appeal arises from the procurement of public school buses for 1991 to 1998 by the School Bus Transportation Branch of the State of Haw. Department of Accounting and General Services (DAGS). Plaintiffs-appellants Robert's Hawaii School Bus, Inc. (RHSB) and Student [*2] Transportation, Inc. (STI)¹ filed a complaint, on April 8, 1993, against defendants-appellees Laupahoehoe Transportation Company, Inc. (Laupahoehoe), Central Transportation Company, Inc. (Central), Double K Transportation Services, Inc. (Double K), T&N Transportation Services, Inc. (T&N), and Chiaki Matsuo² (collectively, appellees or defendants).

The complaint alleged, inter alia, that appellees, acting in concert, created, operated, and/or controlled shell corporations to circumvent DAGS's bidding rules and specifications in order to: (1) gain unfair competitive advantage for Laupahoehoe and Central over other bidders; [*3] (2) attempt to monopolize the school bus industry; and (3) defraud the State and all prospective bidders. The complaint contained claims of: (1) unfair competition and attempted monopolization in violation of Hawai'i Revised Statutes \(HRS\) §§ 480-2\(a\) and 480-9 (1985 & Supp. 1992) brought pursuant to HRS § 480-13\(a\) (Supp. 1992) (Count I); (2) violations of the Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 et seq., as to Laupahoehoe, Central, Matsuo, and Doe Defendants (Count II); (3) civil conspiracy by Laupahoehoe, Central, Double K, and Matsuo with respect to the Oahu Contract (Count III); (4) tortious interference with prospective business advantage by Laupahoehoe, Central, Double K, and Matsuo as to the Oahu Contract (Count IV); (5) civil conspiracy by Laupahoehoe, Central, T&N, and Matsuo with respect to the Big Island Contract (Count V); (6) tortious interference with prospective business advantage by Laupahoehoe, Central, T&N, and Matsuo with respect to the Big Island Contract (Count VI); and (7) punitive damages on all counts (Count VII).

After defendants moved to dismiss counts II, III, and V, the circuit court, on February 16, 1994, dismissed [*4] Count II with prejudice and declined to do so as to Counts III and V, insofar as they asserted a civil conspiracy to [*231] [*860] commit actionable wrongs. Bench trial commenced February 1, 1995 and concluded March 1, 1995. The trial court entered findings of fact (FOFs) and conclusions of law (COLs) on April 26, 1995. In short, the trial court held that there was insufficient evidence to: (1) find or conclude (a) that Double K and T&N were shell corporations or (b) that appellees engaged in unfair competition (with the exception of Matsuo and Laupahoehoe on the Big Island); (2) show a dangerous probability that defendants would successfully monopolize the geographic area of the State of Hawaii or any of its individual islands/counties; (3) establish that any two or more defendants conspired; (4) show that STI sustained injury or damages; and/or (5) show that STI's relationship with DAGS carried with it a future probability of success.

On appeal, appellants contend³ that the trial court ignored substantial evidence in the record that: (1) Double K was operated as a shell corporation of Matsuo and Central, causing injury to RHSB; (2) T&N was operated as a shell corporation of Matsuo and Laupahoehoe, [*5] causing injury to STI; (3) defendants' conduct violated HRS §§ 480-2 and 480-9, causing antitrust injury and damage to RHSB and STI; (4) Central violated DAGS's rules by leasing buses to Ground Transport, Inc. (GTI), thereby causing injury to RHSB; (5) defendants' conduct was designed to disrupt the relationship between RHSB/STI and DAGS and tortiously interfered with appellants'

¹ RHSB and STI are subsidiaries of Robert's Hawaii, Inc. Robert's Hawaii, Inc. incorporated STI in May 1986 and RHSB in late 1990. Robert Iwamoto is President, Secretary, Director, and sole shareholder of Robert's Hawaii, Inc., RHSB, and STI.

² Matsuo passed away on August 13, 1995. Nobu Shinohara was substituted as personal representative for Matsuo's Estate on November 3, 1995.

³ Appellants challenge FOFs Nos. 18, 26, 42, 51, 54, 55, 68, 112, 115, 125, 135, 157, 168, 174, 194, and 195, and COLs Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20, 21, 22, 27, 29, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44.

prospective business advantage; and (6) two or more defendants-appellees conspired to engage in unfair competition and commit tortious interference.⁴

[6] For the reasons discussed below, we affirm in part and vacate in part the circuit court's (1) FOFs and COLs, filed April 26, 1995, and (2) judgment entered May 18, 1995. We remand this matter to the circuit court for further findings and conclusions to be entered consistent with this opinion.

I. BACKGROUND

A. The School Bus Bid Controversy

1. The Oahu Contract

On December 5, 1990, DAGS issued a request for sealed bids to procure student transportation for eighty-two designated Maui and Oahu school bus routes for the period of September 3, 1991 to June 1997 (hereinafter the "Oahu Contract"). The Oahu Contract was the first bid solicitation to include section 3.2.1 of the General Conditions and Special Provisions,⁵ which required successful bidders to "implement and manage" the contract, to refrain from assigning, subcontracting, or selling the contract or its operation for four years, and to maintain its own baseyard "separate and apart from that of another school bus contractor doing business with the State." Section 3.2.1 also restricted the successful bidder from using buses that had been purchased, leased, or supplied by another bidder who had bid on the same [7] routes or groups of routes, unless the losing bidder had lost more than fifty percent of its total routes maintained during the previous school year as the result of the bid proposal. A failure to provide the location of the baseyard and the buses to be used mandated rejection of the bid. Moreover, competing subsidiaries or jointly-owned companies were prohibited from submitting bids for the same routes. If competing subsidiaries or jointly-owned companies submitted bids, section 2.5 of the Purchasing and Supply Division's General Conditions, dated [*232] [861] April 1, 1982, required submission of certificates of non-collusion.

Incorporated into DAGS's bid solicitations since the 1970s, Specification M, entitled "Prevention Against Monopolization of School Bus Routes," also provided:

Inasmuch as the State is the sole customer of school bus services in Hawaii and therefore, school bus service seems to be a unique line of commerce, the State [8] will deem it to be in its best interest to reject all or part of any bid if the effect of awarding part of or the entire bid may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the school bus industry in any one county within the State of Hawaii. Therefore, the State will consider the award of or control of more than 50% of the total routes to transport regular students to and from school in a particular county to have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in that area of the State. The State will, therefore, reject that part of a bid which will allow a bidder to exceed the 50% figure specified herein and award that part of the bid to the next lowest bidder.

However, the State retains the right to award more than 50% of the routes in any one county to a single bidder in those situations where: (1) [the] bidder is the sole bidder on a route or group of routes; (2) in the event that the difference between the lowest bid price and the second lowest bid price is more than ten percent (10%) above the bid price submitted by the lowest price bidder; or (3) the number of routes within the group which is required to exceed the [9] 50% figure constitutes at least 75% of the group.

⁴ Appellants also contest (1) the "order denying in part defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint" and (2) the trial court's denial of their motion for summary judgment; however, they did not include issue (1) in the points of error section in their opening brief and did not advance any argument or analysis on issues (1) or (2). See Associated Engineers & Contractors, Inc. v. State, 58 Haw. 187, 215, 567 P.2d 397, 415, reh'g denied, 58 Haw. 322, 568 P.2d 512 (1977) (burden on party seeking reversal includes "the presentation of an analysis."). Because only issues presented pursuant to Hawai'i Rules of Appellate Procedure (HRAP) Rule 28(b)(6) will be addressed, we decline to address these issues on appeal.

⁵ See HN1 [↑] HRS § 103-11 (1993) (DAGS's "rules shall have the force of law").

Finally, section 2.12(a) of the General Conditions provided that "[a] bidder shall be disqualified and his bid automatically rejected for . . . proof of collusion among bidders, in which case, all bids involved in the collusive action will be rejected and any participant [in] such collusion will be barred from future bidding until reinstated as a qualified bidder."

At trial, George Okano, a contract specialist in DAGS's student transportation branch during the relevant time period, testified that DAGS included the foregoing provisions to guarantee fairness, to prevent collusive bidding practices that DAGS suspected had occurred in the past, to address price fixing, and to insure that bidders were truly independent. Specifically, Okano testified that DAGS suspected prior collusive bidding practices between Laupahoehoe and T&N. Okano explained that Specification M was enacted to maximize competition within the industry and to address potential monopolies, but that, to his knowledge, DAGS had never enforced Specification M. According to Okano, certain defects could be waived, and Specification M was discretionary. However, [10] defects were only waived so long as they did not violate the law, and collusion in violation of section 2.12 could not be waived.

a. The Participants on Oahu

During the relevant times herein, Central was the largest school bus company on Oahu, controlling 207 out of 263 routes, approximately 78.7% of the Oahu market. Central and Laupahoehoe were wholly owned subsidiaries of C.M. Holding Corporation.⁶ In 1990, Chiaki Matsuo owned ninety-four percent of C.M. Holding Corporation's stock; two of his daughters owned the remaining six percent. Matsuo, the former president of Central and Laupahoehoe, served as the chief executive officer of Central.

Sometime in 1990, DAGS held a pre-bid meeting to insure that bidders were aware of the new bid restrictions. Matsuo, Ralph Koga (Matsuo's administrative assistant and Central's vice-president), [11] and Wesley Yamamoto (Laupahoehoe and Central's president and director from March 1987 to March 1992) attended the meeting. Matsuo became concerned over the effect that the new DAGS provisions would have on Central, because the Oahu Contract contained sixty-two of its existing routes. Yamamoto testified that Matsuo originated the idea of forming Double K. Matsuo testified, in deposition, that the primary reason for Double K's creation [*233] [862] was to permit Central to "get around" the 50%/10% rule of Specification M, thereby permitting Central to lease its buses to the successful bidders. Yamamoto testified that he harbored concerns over the legality of Matsuo's idea and that he contacted an attorney.

Yamamoto approached his college friend, Kurt Kaminaka, in December 1990 and suggested forming Double K. Matsuo and Yamamoto assisted in Double K's incorporation. Matsuo's attorney was retained to incorporate Double K, and Matsuo furnished Double K with $ 72,500.00, later characterized by appellees as a "loan between friends." On December 3, 1990, two days before the Oahu Bid Request was published, Kurt and his father, Burt Kaminaka, incorporated Double K, each owning fifty percent of Double K's [12] stock. Yamamoto testified that the Kaminakas were considered "silent or passive investors." They, however, invested no funding in Double K. The articles of incorporation named Kurt as president and director and Burt as vice-president and director. Philip N. Main, Central and Grayline Hawaii's Safety Director from 1972 to 1980 and 1982 to 1992, was named a director and vice-president of operations.⁷

b. The Oahu Bids and Awards

On December 28, 1990, Double K submitted a sealed bid for the Oahu Contract, bidding on sixty-two of the routes operated by Central. Yamamoto and Koga drafted Double K's bid. The Kaminakas did not prepare Double K's bid.

⁶ Prior to 1990, Central was a division of Laupahoehoe, which was a wholly owned subsidiary of C.M. Holding Corporation. In 1990, C.M. Holding Corporation underwent major restructuring.

⁷ Even though Main's name is listed in the articles of incorporation, he never signed them or any other documents associated with Double K.

Central did not bid on the Oahu Contract and, instead, intended to lease buses to the successful bidders. According to Yamamoto, Matsuo intended to have Central lease its buses to Double K, if Double K was awarded routes.

RHSB [13] submitted a bid proposal for the same sixty-two routes. The bids were opened on January 3, 1991. Neither Double K nor RHSB was the lowest bidder for any of the routes. Rather, Gomes School Bus Service was the lowest responsible bidder as to Groups 1, 2, 3, and 7, and Ground Transport, Inc. ("GTI") was the lowest responsible bidder as to Groups 4, 5, and 6. Double K submitted the second lowest bid and RHSB submitted the third lowest bid for Group 4. RHSB was the second lowest bidder as to Groups 5 and 6.

Sometime thereafter, GTI encountered problems in securing financing to acquire buses. RHSB suggested to GTI that it forfeit Groups 5 and 6. Instead, GTI forfeited the Group 4 routes on May 8, 1991 and leased buses for Groups 5 and 6 from Central. DAGS awarded Group 4 to Double K on May 13, 1991.

c. RHSB's Complaints to DAGS

RHSB submitted a complaint to DAGS on May 31, 1991, protesting the award and claiming that Double K was a shell corporation formed by Matsuo and Laupahoehoe to circumvent Specification M. Because RHSB was the next lowest bidder after Double K, RHSB would have been awarded Group 4 if Double K and Central were disqualified.⁸ [15] As a result, DAGS initiated an [14] investigation into Double K and Laupahoehoe's relationship, but DAGS's representatives never inquired into the relationship between Central and Double K.⁹ On July 12, 1991, the state comptroller informed Double K of the allegations and requested, inter alia, lists of all loans within the past year and "copies of all prior agreements (between Laupahoehoe and Double K) for securing common equipment, [*234] [863] maintenance, personnel, facilities, or leases, etc." DAGS explained that, if appellants' protest claims were true, the "award will not be made to Double K but instead to the next lowest bidder." In a responsive letter dated July 17, 1991, Kurt Kaminaka stated that he was "surprised, concerned and upset about [the] unsubstantiated allegations," and informed DAGS that (1) Double K had no outstanding loans and (2) there were no written agreements between Laupahoehoe and Double K at that time.

As part of the initial investigation conducted after the bid opening, but prior to the award, Okano drove to the site Double K identified as its baseyard and examined City and County zoning maps. He discovered a vacant lot with a zoning designation that did not permit it to be used as a baseyard. By letter, Double K was directed to secure a baseyard. It complied. On August 22, 1991, DAGS informed RHSB that, "in response to your client's belief that Double K Transportation, Inc. is a 'shell' corporation of Laupahoehoe Transportation Co., our Office of the Attorney General's investigation turned up no evidence to support the claim." DAGS formally awarded the eight routes of Group 4 to Double K. RHSB again protested.

In 1991, after the award of the contract, DAGS continued to monitor Double K's compliance. Patrick Dela Garza, Double K's operations manager during the relevant time period, denied any relationship between Central [16] and Double K. However, subsequent investigation revealed that Central ran the daily operations of Double K. Double K leased from eight to twelve buses from Central, although, at trial, defendants were unable to produce a lease agreement. Central maintained all Double K buses, including inspection, fueling, and repairs. Central also prepared Double K's bookkeeping, financial records, and payroll and retained custody of and used Kurt's signature stamp. Double K, however, maintained separate bank accounts, filed separate tax returns, and accounted for its profits and losses independently of those of Laupahoehoe and Central.

⁸ For Group 4, RHSB bid the total gross amount of $ 1,120.00 (for eight routes per day) versus Double K's $ 1,118.00. If Double K were a shell of Central, it would have had to bid $ 1,008.00 or less, i.e., 10% less than the next lowest bidder to qualify as the lowest responsible bidder under Specification M, because Central, Double K's alter ego, already operated over fifty percent of the existing bus routes on Oahu. Okano testified that, if Central had bid on Group 4, Central would have been disqualified by the fifty percent rule. Mits Nakatsuka also testified that, in the case of tie-bids, if one bidder already operated over fifty percent of the market routes, DAGS would automatically award the contract to the other bidder.

⁹ Explaining that DAGS apparently did not ask the right questions, Okano testified that the defendants did not "lead [him] astray," but "nobody turned the lights on" either.

During pretrial discovery, Kurt Kaminaka testified in deposition that Double K leased buses from Laupahoehoe and/or Central and that he viewed the two entities (Laupahoehoe and Central) as one and the same. He also remembered the $ 72,500.00 loan from Matsuo but could not explain his failure to inform DAGS of its existence. Apparently, because of a falling out between Yamamoto and Matsuo, Yamamoto left Central and Laupahoehoe in 1992. Upon Yamamoto's departure, Matsuo approached Eugene Obara and asked him to become president of Double K, replacing Kurt Kaminaka. Eugene [17] testified, in deposition, that it was his understanding that Matsuo owned and controlled Double K. Eugene and his brother, Dennis, purchased the Kaminakas' stock in mid-July 1992 with $ 15,000 provided by Koga. According to Eugene, Koga instructed him to deposit the funds into his personal checking account and pay the Kaminakas with a personal check. The Obara brothers thereafter became officers, directors, and shareholders of Double K. Like the Kaminakas, they had no experience in running a school bus company and invested no money in Double K. The Obaras resigned on April 27, 1993. On or about July 2, 1993, the Obaras assigned their stock to Central to pay Double K's outstanding debts to Central. Neither Obara received any consideration for the shares, and a stock purchase agreement was never produced. Koga became the Double K operations manager. Dela Garza, apparently fired and disgruntled, contacted Okano and "changed his tune," admitting that Double K was, in fact, controlled by Central.

2. The Big Island Contract

On January 27, 1992, DAGS issued a request for sealed bids to procure student transportation for designated Hawaii school bus routes for the period of September 1, 1992 to [18] June 1998 (hereinafter the "Big Island Contract"). Similarly to the Oahu Contract, the bid specifications required independence and prohibited collusion and monopolization.

a. The Participants on the Big Island

In 1990, Laupahoehoe was the largest school bus operator on the island of Hawai'i, operating 91 out of 141 routes and controlling approximately 63.8% of the Big Island market. [*235] [864] Matsuo was the chairman, president, and CEO of Laupahoehoe. Yamamoto later succeeded Matsuo as president. STI, by comparison, had never bid on a bus contract. At that time, STI did not have an existing operation on the Big Island.

Similarly to Double K, T&N was conceived by Matsuo. Matsuo's self-described friend of twenty years, Ted Ura, however, incorporated T&N on June 3, 1988. Ura could not recall who prepared or drafted the articles, but he recalled signing them in Laupahoehoe's office. Matsuo approached Nobu Shinohara, the existing CEO of Bacon Universal Co., Inc., and asked him to become an officer and director of T&N. Ura was sole shareholder of T&N and became president, treasurer, and director. His wife also became an officer. T&N never convened any board meetings.

Although Ura testified [19] that he operated T&N out of his home upon its incorporation, he could not recall performing any work for T&N from 1988 until the award of the Big Island Contract in 1991. Ura testified that Matsuo loaned him money to "start-up" T&N, to keep T&N "rolling" until the bid was awarded, and to obtain surety bonds. Ura also stated that Matsuo extended several loans to T&N, none of which were memorialized in writing, and that T&N had repaid Matsuo. Prior to incorporating T&N, Ura was a retired high school football coach and counselor, who worked for Laupahoehoe, sweeping its office and washing buses.¹⁰ Shinohara never participated in the daily operations of T&N, and in October 1992, he resigned, becoming president of Central, Laupahoehoe, and other companies of Matsuo. Although Ura testified that he ran the company, he conceded that T&N could not have been formed without the active assistance of Matsuo and Laupahoehoe.

[20] b. The Big Island Bids and Awards

Matsuo and Dayton Oniwa (Matsuo's administrative assistant) prepared T&N's bid proposal. Ura testified that, because he had no experience in preparing school bus bids, he asked Matsuo to assist him and that Matsuo helped him in any financial matters. Although T&N's bid amount was always lower, Laupahoehoe bid on the same groups of routes, apparently without Ura's knowledge. Ura explained that he only browsed through the contract specifications and that he did not know that T&N was violating any provisions.

¹⁰ After retiring from the DOE in 1985, Ura was unemployed for a year-and-a-half and then worked as personnel director of Suisan for one year.

T&N submitted bids for all Big Island routes. It was the responsible low bidder as to Groups 2 and 3, for which Matsuo supplied the bid guaranties. STI and Laupahoehoe also submitted bids for all routes but were not the lowest bidders as to any group of them. On group 3, STI and Laupahoehoe submitted identical bids, which were the second lowest. V. Bragado Bus Co. (Bragado) was the lowest responsible bidder as to Groups 1 and 4 and was awarded these groups.

Appellees adduced evidence that, after entering into the contract with DAGS for Groups 2 and 3, Ura supervised the daily operations of T&N, often spending twelve or more hours per day [21] at the baseyard. Ura dispatched the buses, supervised the drivers, prepared the daily worksheets and bimonthly billings, handled complaints from parents, and produced a company newsletter. He reviewed T&N's accounting books and checkbook and possessed sole authority to sign T&N checks. However, T&N employed no bookkeepers or accountants on its payroll. Ura received a salary of $ 800.00 per month and had the use of a company car. T&N maintained its own bank accounts and books.

Appellants adduced evidence that, according to Koga, Ura was akin to an operations manager. Moreover, in contravention of bid rules, T&N shared office space with Laupahoehoe, leased its baseyard and all of its buses from Laupahoehoe, and had a standing order for replacement buses in the event of a breakdown. Laupahoehoe also serviced, repaired, and fueled T&N's vehicles, and provided the bus drivers. Laupahoehoe retained custody of T&N's checkbook and performed T&N's administrative work, including [*236] [865] bookkeeping, accounts payable and receivable, driver payroll, and taxes. Matsuo paid T&N's legal fees.

With respect to the lease and servicing agreements, Ura testified that he never negotiated any of the T&N/Laupahoehoe [22] contracts. He relied on Laupahoehoe to give him a fair deal. When asked why he permitted a competitor to prepare T&N's bid, Ura stated that he trusted Matsuo and Laupahoehoe. When asked at trial what he did for T&N in "terms of running the company," Ura testified that he "had to go and scrub, clean the place, cut the grass, poison the grass, pick up rubbish, and clean up the baseyard and today what I do is I make sure that the place is clean, scrub the toilet, mop the place." Ura was also the company cook.

B. The Trial Court's FOFs and COLs

Bench trial commenced on February 1, 1995 and concluded on March 1, 1995. The trial court entered FOFs and COLs on April 26, 1995. The trial court found and concluded, in pertinent part as follows:

DAMAGES

181. RHSB did not realize net profits, but rather sustained net losses for each year during the period from 1992 to 1994.
182. In 1991, Double K sustained a net loss of $ 1,825.00.
183. In 1992, Double K's net income was $ 2,608.00.
184. In 1993, Double K sustained a net loss of $ 3,474.00.
185. For the years 1991-1993, Double K sustained an aggregate net loss of $ 2,691.00.

186. In 1991, T&N's net income was $ 3,104. [23]
187. In 1992, T&N incurred a net loss of $ 11,976.00.
188. In 1993, T&N's net income was $ 3,871.00.
189. For the years 1991-1993, T&N sustained an aggregate net loss of $ 5,001.00,

-
191. As to Plaintiff's claim for lost profit damages, the total revenue Plaintiffs claim they would have received if the forty-one (41) routes in question had been awarded to them, is the sum of the following:
 - (a) Contract revenue for the forty-one (41) routes, calculated at Plaintiff's bid prices, and
 - (b) Charter revenue projected at 40% of contract revenue ("charter revenue ratio").

192. The amount of charter revenue is determined by such factors as price, marketing strategy, service and bus capacity.

193. A company is free to market routes in an area of the State or an island regardless of whether or not it operates any school bus contract routes in that particular area.

194. With regard to the Big Island routes, there is insufficient evidence to show a correlation between charter revenue and contract revenue.

195. Without charter revenue, STI would have sustained a net loss, rather than a net profit, in operating the Big Island routes at its bid price.

....

CONCLUSIONS OF [24] LAW

....

9. There is insufficient evidence to show that Double K was merely an agency, instrumentality, adjunct or alter ego of Central, Laupahoehoe, and/or Matsuo while under the ownership of the Kaminakas.

10. There is insufficient evidence to show that Central, Laupahoehoe or Matsuo dominated the finances, policy and practices of Double K during the Kaminakas' ownership to such an extent that Double K had no separate mind, will or existence of its own but was simply a business conduit for Central, Laupahoehoe, and/or Matsuo.

11. There is insufficient evidence to show that Double K was controlled by and operated solely for the benefit of Central, [*237] [866] Laupahoehoe, and/or Matsuo during the Kaminakas' ownership.

....

13. There is insufficient evidence to show that T&N was controlled by and operated solely for the benefit of Central, Laupahoehoe, and/or Matsuo.

14. There is insufficient evidence to show that T&N was merely an agency, instrumentality, adjunct or alter ego of Central, Laupahoehoe, and/or Matsuo or that these Defendants dominated T&N's finances, policies and practices to such an extent that T&N had no separate mind, will or existence of its own but was simply [25] a business conduit for Central, Laupahoehoe, and/or Matsuo.

15. The Special Provision of both IFB No. F-91-140-MO and IFB No. F-92-250-H prohibited Double K and T&N from using busses [sic] that were "purchased, leased, loaned or in any other way supplied by another bidder who submitted a bid for the same routes or group of routes.". T&N and Tadashi Ura were not aware that Laupahoehoe also bid on IFB No. F-92-250-H, and unknowingly violated this provision by leasing busses [sic] from Laupahoehoe. Double K did not violate this provision.

16. Double K violated the Special Provisions which required a bidder to have its own baseyard "separate and apart from that of another school bus contractor doing business in the State." . . . After Double K entered into the contract with DAGS for the Group 4 routes, however, DAGS notified Double K of the violation and directed Double K to correct the breach. Double K cured the breach to the satisfaction of DAGS.

17. The Special Provisions of IFB NO. F-92-250-H required that: (a) T&N have "its own base of operation from which to perform all substantive administrative requirements of the contract," (b) T&N's base of operation be solely under its [26] control and physically separate and apart from that of any other school bus contractor doing business with the State, and (c) T&N have its own personnel, office space, telephones and whatever else necessary to constitute a business which is separate and apart from any other school bus contractor doing business with the State. . . .

18. After contracting with T&N for the Group 3 routes on the Big Island, DAGS monitored T&N's operation and notified T&N that it must comply with the foregoing requirements. The evidence shows that T&N complied in this regard to the satisfaction of DAGS.

19. T&N violated the Special Provisions of IFB No. F-92-250-H, which prohibited T&N from fueling, servicing, or repairing its busses [sic] at the facility of another school bus contractor doing business with the State.

....

22. Except as provided in paragraphs 38, 39, and 41 of these COL, the evidence is not sufficient to establish that Defendants' conduct constituted unfair competition under Section 480-2, HRS, or that Defendants' conduct was designed to disrupt the relationship between DAGS and the Plaintiffs relative to the claim of tortious interference with prospective business advantage. [27]

23. There are four essential elements of an attempt to monopolize claim: 1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition with respect to a part[icular] commerce; 2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed to accomplishing the unlawful purpose; 3) a dangerous probability of success; and 4) antitrust injury.

The trial court next compared the parties' market shares on Oahu and the Big Island from 1990 through 1993. The trial court noted that, in 1990, Central and Laupahoehoe operated approximately 78.7% of the routes on Oahu and 52.9% of the routes in the State. Double K maintained 3% of the Oahu market, and T&N maintained 10.2% of the Big Island market. Laupahoehoe also operated approximately 63.8% of the routes on the Big Island. By 1993, their shares had declined to 3.2% on Oahu and to 16.9% in the state. During the same time period, RHSB's share of the Oahu market had increased from zero to 39.9% and from 14% to 33.5% in the state. The trial court then ruled that:

[*238]

[867] 34. Whether the geographic market is identified by the physical boundaries of each island or the entire State of Hawai'i, the evidence is insufficient to show a dangerous probability of success [28] by Defendants in these geographic markets to sustain Plaintiffs' attempt to monopolize claim.

....

36. Except as provided in paragraphs 38, 39, and 41 of these COL, the evidence is insufficient to establish Defendants' specific intent to hinder or destroy competition or monopolize the school bus industry in Oahu, the Big Island, or the State of Hawai'i.

37. The evidence is insufficient to establish that any two or more of the Defendants engaged in concerted action to accomplish an unlawful objective. Plaintiffs do not prevail on their claims of conspiracy.

38. Laupahoehoe and Matsuo calculated and designated the bid amounts in the bid proposals submitted by Laupahoehoe and T&N Although Laupahoehoe and Matsuo were aware, T&N and Ted Ura were not aware, that Laupahoehoe intended to bid [on the same contract] . . . when Matsuo and Laupahoehoe assisted T&N with its bid preparation.

39. The conduct of Laupahoehoe and Matsuo operated to hinder competition among bidders and was designed to secure an unfair advantage for Laupahoehoe. Such conduct is contrary to the competitive bidding law and against public policy.

40. However, the evidence is insufficient to show that STI [29] sustained injury or damage as a result of the conduct described in Paragraph 38 of these COL, or that STI would have realized a net profit if DAGS had awarded STI the four (4) Big Island routes of Group 3.

41. The Court concludes that the conduct of Laupahoehoe and Matsuo described in Paragraph 38 of these COL constitutes an unfair method of competition under Section 480-2, HRS. However, as there is insufficient evidence to show actual injury or damage to STI resulting from such wrongful conduct or a dangerous probability of Defendants' success in monopolizing the school bus market in Oahu, the Big Island, or the State of Hawai'i, Plaintiffs do not prevail on their claims under Chapter 480, HRS.

42. The evidence is also insufficient to sustain Plaintiffs' claim against Defendants Matsuo and Laupahoehoe for tortious interference with prospective business advantage, based upon the conduct described in Paragraph 38 of these COL. As a bidder for the routes in IFB No. F-92-250-H [the Hawai'i Bus Contract], Plaintiff STI had an economic relationship with DAGS, of which Matsuo and Laupahoehoe were aware. However, there is insufficient evidence to show that the relationship had the probability [30] of ripening into a future economic benefit for STI, or that the Big Island routes would have been awarded to STI if Laupahoehoe and Matsuo had not engaged in the conduct described in Paragraph 38 of these COL, or that such conduct caused injury or damage to STI.

43. The Court concludes that there is insufficient evidence to sustain any cause of action asserted by Plaintiffs against Defendants.

44. Accordingly, Judgment shall be entered in favor of Defendants . . . and against Plaintiffs . . . as to all claims against Defendants.

Final judgment was entered on May 18, 1995. This appeal ensued.

II. STANDARDS OF REVIEW

HN2[] Generally speaking, the question whether a corporation is a mere agency, instrumentality, or alter ego of another corporation or individual is one of fact. See 1 William M. Fletcher, Fletcher Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations § 41.95, at 699-705 (perm. ed. 1999) (hereafter Fletcher Cyclopedia). However,

When all material facts are undisputed, application of the alterego doctrine is a question of law. Thus, summary judgment may be granted in a case where no genuine issue of fact is raised or shown. However, it is recognized that [31] the determination of whether there are sufficient grounds for [*239] [868] piercing the corporate veil ordinarily should not be disposed of by summary judgment, in view of the complex economic questions often involved, especially if fraud is alleged.

Id. at 699-700 (footnotes omitted).

HN3[] The question whether one's actions amount to unfair methods of competition is also one of fact. We review a trial court's findings of fact under the clearly erroneous standard. See Associates Fin. Services Co., of Hawaii, Inc. v. Mijo, 87 Haw. 19, 28, 950 P.2d 1219, 1228 (1998) (citations omitted). "A finding of fact is clearly erroneous when, despite evidence to support the finding, the appellate court is left with the definite and firm conviction in reviewing the entire evidence that a mistake has been committed." In re Estate of Marcos, 88 Haw. 148, 153, 963 P.2d 1124, 1129 (1998) (citation omitted). Findings of fact that are unchallenged on appeal are the operative facts of a case. See Crosby v. State Dept. of Budget & Finance, 76 Haw. 332, 340, 876 P.2d 1300, 1308 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1081, 130 L. Ed. 2d 635, 115 S. Ct. 731 (1995) (citation omitted). HN4[]

[32] Hawai'i appellate courts review conclusions of law de novo, under the right/wrong standard. See Associates Fin. Services Co. of Hawaii, Inc., 87 Hawai'i at 28, 950 P.2d at 1228. "Under the right/wrong standard, this court 'examine[s] the facts and answer[s] the question without being required to give any weight to the trial court's answer to it.'" Estate of Marcos, 88 Hawai'i at 153, 963 P.2d at 1129 (citation omitted). A conclusion of law will not be overturned if supported by the trial court's findings of fact and by the application of the correct rule of law. See Hilo Crane Service, Inc. v. Ho, 5 Haw. App. 360, 378-79, 693 P.2d 412, 424 (1984), cert. denied, 67 Haw. 685, 744 P.2d 781 (1985). However, a trial court's label is not determinative of the standard of review to be applied on appeal. See Crosby, 76 Haw. at 340, 876 P.2d at 1308.

"HN5[] The interpretation of a statute is [also] a question of law reviewable de novo." Wilson v. AIG Hawaii Ins. Co., 89 Haw. 45, 47, 968 P.2d 647, 649 (1998) (brackets added) (citation omitted). Furthermore,

HN6[] the starting point [33] in statutory construction is to determine the legislative intent from the language of the statute itself. Our foremost obligation when interpreting a statute is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the legislature, which is obtained primarily from the language contained in the statute itself. We read statutory language in the context of the entire statute and construe it in a manner consistent with its purpose.

Id. (quoting Mendes v. Hawaii Ins. Guar. Ass'n, 87 Haw. 14, 17, 950 P.2d 1214, 1217 (1998) (internal citations, quotation marks, and brackets omitted)).

HN7[] When there is doubt, doubleness of meaning, or indistinctiveness or uncertainty of an expression used in a statute, an ambiguity exists. . . .

In construing an ambiguous statute, "the meaning of the ambiguous words may be sought by examining the context, with which ambiguous words, phrases, and sentences may be compared, in order to ascertain their true meaning." HRS § I-15(10) [(1993)]. Moreover, the courts may resort to extrinsic aids in determining legislative intent. One avenue is the use of legislative history as an interpretive tool. . . . This court may also consider [34] "the reason and spirit of the law, and the cause which induced the legislature to enact it . . . to discover its true meaning." HRS § 1-15\(2\) (1993). "Laws in pari materia, or upon the same subject matter, shall be construed with reference to each other. What is clear in one statute may be called upon in aid to explain what is doubtful in another." HRS § 1-16 (1993).

Government Employees Ins. Co. v. Dang, 89 Haw. 8, 12, 967 P.2d 1066, 1070 \(1998\) (quoting Korean Buddhist Dae Won Sa Temple of Hawaii v. Sullivan, 87 Haw. 217, 229-30, 953 P.2d 1315, 1327-28 \(1998\)) (some internal citations omitted).

Finally, HN8 [↑] an award or denial of punitive damages is within the sound discretion of the trier of fact and will not be reversed absent a clear abuse of discretion. See Ditto v. McCurdy, 86 Haw. 84, 91, 947 P.2d 952, 959 \(1997\) (citations omitted). "A court abuses its discretion whenever it exceeds the bounds of reason or disregards rules or principles of law or practice to the substantial detriment of a party." Ho v. Leftwich, 88 Haw. 251, 256, 965 P.2d 793, 798 \(1998\) (citations, internal quotation marks, [35] and ellipses omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Standing under HRS Chapter 103: The Viability of Appellants' Claims within the State Bidding Process

Appellee T&N contends that the Hawai'i Public Procurement Code and DAGS's General Conditions do not provide for a private cause of action against a successful bidder on the part of the disappointed bidder, and, therefore, that appellants' claims are barred. We disagree. The General Conditions, which were adopted on April 1, 1982 pursuant to HRS Chapter 103 (1965 & 1985), did not limit legal remedies. At most, the General Conditions limited the liability of the State and gave broad discretion to the state agency to review bids and to award or terminate contracts. Further, HRS Chapter 103 did not contain the "Exclusivity of Remedies" provision that it contains today. See HRS §§ 103D-704 (1993);¹¹ In re Southern Food Groups. L.P., dba Meadow Gold Dairies, 89 Haw. 443, 974 P.2d 1033 \(1999\). In fact, prior to the 1992 amendments to the Hawai'i Public Procurement Code, an "informal" legal remedy evolved whereby the disappointed bidder sought declaratory relief as a taxpayer. See Brewer Envtl. Indus. Inc. v. A.A.T. Chem., Inc., 73 Haw. 344, 347, 832 P.2d 276, 278 \(1992\); [36] Wilson v. Lord-Young Eng'g Co., 21 Haw. 87, 88, 94 \(1912\). Because this remedy was not binding, neither HRS Chapter 103 (1985) nor the General Conditions precluded appellants' cause of action.

Appellants in the present case challenge the trial court's (1) refusal to disqualify appellees and (2) findings and conclusions regarding DAGS's discretion to enforce bidding rules and to award contracts. Appellants seek equitable relief with respect to contracts between DAGS and the winning bidders. However, DAGS is not a party to the instant action. Appellants cite no authority to support their assertion that a trial court has the authority to disqualify a bidder based upon violations of DAGS's regulations or upon its failure to enforce such regulations when the State of Hawai'i, here DAGS, is not a party. See generally Rose v. Oba, 68 Haw. 422, 425-26, 717 P.2d 1029, 1031 \(1986\) [37] (stating that HN9 [↑] agency regulations affect internal management and do not affect private rights of or procedures available to the public). Insofar as DAGS is not a party, the trial court properly refused to disqualify appellees.

B. The Alter Ego and Piercing the Corporate Veil Doctrines

Appellants advocate for the disregard of Double K and T&N's corporate identities by application of the doctrine known as "piercing the corporate veil." We agree with appellants' characterization of Double K and T&N as shell corporations, yet disagree with appellants' request to pierce the corporate veil.

It is well settled that HN10 [↑] establishing a corporation to limit personal liability is proper and is, alone, an insufficient basis for the application of the doctrines of alter ego or piercing the corporate veil. See 1 Fletcher Cyclopedia, supra, § 41.20, at 596; see generally Henry Waterhouse Trust Co. v. Home Ins. Co. of Hawai'i, 27 Haw. 572, 581-82 \(1927\).

¹¹ We expressly decline to decide whether appellants' claims would be preempted by HRS Chapter 103D (1993). We leave that issue for another day.

HN11[] The common purpose of statutes providing limited shareholder liability is to offer a valuable incentive to business investment. Although the greatest judicial deference normally is accorded to the separate corporate [38] entity, this entity is still a fiction. Thus, when particular circumstances merit--e.g., when the incentive value of limited liability is outweighed by the competing value of basic fairness to parties dealing with the corporation--courts may look past a corporation's formal existence [*241] [870] to hold shareholders or other controlling individuals liable for "corporate" obligations. Labadie Coal Co. v. Black, 217 U.S. App. D.C. 239, 672 F.2d 92, 96 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (citing Dodd, The Evolution of Limited Liability in American Industry, 61 Harv.L.Rev. 1351 (1948)). When a corporation is the mere instrumentality or business conduit of another corporation or person, the corporate form may be disregarded.

HN12[] The alter ego doctrine has been adopted by the courts in cases where the corporate entity has been used as a subterfuge and to observe it would work an injustice. The rationale behind the theory is that, if the shareholders or the corporations themselves disregard the proper formalities of a corporation, then the law will do likewise as necessary to protect individual and corporate creditors. The rule is designed to give incentives to those using the corporate form to obey the state's [39] laws fully by maintaining the formalities and the legal separateness of the corporation. Thus, those who fail to maintain the corporate formalities cannot expect the state to grant them the limited liability that flows from the corporate form. While the instrumentality doctrine has its origin in the context of parent-subsidiary relationships, it has been suggested that a similar analysis is applicable to an individual shareholder's relationship with a corporation.

HN13[] A claim based on the alter ego theory is not in itself a claim for substantive relief, but rather to disregard the corporation as a distinct defendant is procedural. A finding of fact of alter ego, standing alone, creates no cause of action. It merely furnishes a means for a complainant to reach a second corporation or individual upon a cause of action that otherwise would have existed only against the first corporation. An attempt to pierce the corporate veil is a means of imposing liability on an underlying cause of action, such as a tort or breach of contract. The alter ego doctrine is thus remedial, not defensive, in nature. One who seeks to disregard the corporate veil must show that the corporate form has been abused [40] to the injury of a third person.

HN14[] Courts apply the alter ego doctrine with great caution and reluctance. In fact, many courts require exceptional circumstances before disregarding the corporate form.

1 Fletcher Cyclopedia, supra, § 41.10, at 568-581 (emphasis added). ¹²

[41] Accordingly, we must decide whether Laupahoehoe and Central were the alter egos of Double K and T&N and whether the corporate veil ought to be pierced in the instant case.

1. The Alter Ego Doctrine

¹² Hawai'i courts have been reluctant to disregard the corporate entity. See Evanston Ins. Co. v. Luko, 7 Haw. App. 520, 525, 783 P.2d 293, 297 (1989) (piercing corporate veil will "accomplish nothing"); Hilo Crane Service, 5 Haw. App. at 374-75, 693 P.2d at 422 (refusing to disregard corporate entity to apply principle of equitable subordination, stating that "mere control or domination of a corporation is not proscribed by law and is in itself insufficient to justify piercing the corporate veil and subordinating claims"); Chung v. Animal Clinic, Inc., 63 Haw. 642, 645, 636 P.2d 721, 723 (1981) (refusing to pierce corporate veil in order to deny owner/employee's workers' compensation benefits); Cahill v. Hawaiian Paradise Park Corp., 56 Haw. 522, 526, 543 P.2d 1356, 1360 (1975) (refusing to apply alter ego doctrine); Tropic Builders, Ltd. v. Naval Ammunition Depot Lualualei Quarters, Inc., 48 Haw. 306, 326, 402 P.2d 440, 452 (1965) ("We see no valid reason why the corporate veil should be pierced merely to add another string to plaintiff's bow."); Henry Waterhouse Trust Co., 27 Haw. at 582, 586 (refusing to pierce corporate veil and stating that party claiming corporation is mere instrumentality carries the burden of proof); cf. Kahili, Inc. v. Yamamoto, 54 Haw. 267, 269-70, 271-72, 506 P.2d 9, 11-12 (1973) (piercing corporate veil because (1) two shareholders owned all stock, (2) corporation was undercapitalized, and (3) shareholders' behavior in lease negotiations suggested they were acting for their behalf rather than for the corporation).

Appellants argue that the trial court's findings and conclusions that Double K and T & N were not shell corporations of Central, Laupahoehoe, and/or Matsuo were clearly erroneous. We agree with respect to Central and Laupahoehoe.

HN15[¹⁵] Generally speaking, a corporation will be deemed the alter ego of another "where recognition of the corporate fiction would bring about injustice and inequity or [*242] [871] when there is evidence that the corporate fiction has been used to perpetrate a fraud or defeat a rightful claim." Chung v. Animal Clinic, Inc., 63 Haw. 642, 645, 636 P.2d 721, 723 (1981); see also Kahili, Inc. v. Yamamoto, 54 Haw. 267, 271-72, 506 P.2d 9, 11-12 (1973).

Before a corporation's acts and obligations can be legally recognized as those of a particular person, and vice versa, it must be made to appear that [1] the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest . . . that the individuality, [42] or separateness, of such person and corporation has ceased, and [2] that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would, under the particular circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice.

Associated Vendors, Inc. v. Oakland Meat Co., Inc., 210 Cal. App. 2d 825, 26 Cal. Rptr. 806, 813 (Cal. Ct. App. 1962) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). In Oakland Meat Co., 26 Cal. Rptr. at 813-15, the California Court of Appeals catalogued HN16[¹⁶] factors that many courts have weighed in determining whether a corporate entity is the alter ego of another. These include:

[1] Commingling of funds and other assets, failure to segregate funds of the separate entities, and the unauthorized diversion of corporate funds or assets to other than corporate uses; [2] the treatment by an individual of the assets of the corporation as his own; [3] the failure to obtain authority to issue stock or to subscribe to or issue the same; [4] the holding out by an individual that he is personally liable for the debts of the corporation; [5] the identical equitable ownership in the two entities; [6] the identification [43] of the equitable owners thereof with the domination and control of the two entities; [7] identity of . . . directors and officers of the two entities in the responsible supervision and management; [8] sole ownership of all of the stock in a corporation by one individual or the members of a family; HN17[¹⁷] [9] the use of the same office or business location; [10] the employment of the same employees and/or attorney; [11] the failure to adequately capitalize a corporation; [12] the total absence of corporate assets, and undercapitalization; [13] the use of a corporation as a mere shell, instrumentality or conduit for a single venture or the business of an individual or another corporation; [14] the concealment and misrepresentation of the identity of the responsible ownership, management and financial interest, or concealment of personal business activities; [15] the disregard of legal formalities and the failure to maintain arm's length relationships among related entities; [16] the use of the corporate entity to procure labor, services or merchandise for another person or entity; HN18[¹⁸] [17] the diversion stockholder [sic] or other person or [44] entity, to the detriment of creditors, or the manipulation of assets and liabilities between entities so as to concentrate the assets in one and the liabilities in another; [18] the contracting with another with intent to avoid performance by use of a corporate entity as a shield against personal liability, or the use of a corporation as a subterfuge of illegal transactions; and [19] the formation and use of a corporation to transfer to it the existing liability of another person or entity.

Id. (internal citations omitted) (brackets and emphases added).

This list, however, is not exhaustive. For example, HN19[¹⁹] other courts have looked at: (1) incorporation for the purpose of circumventing public policy or statutes; (2) whether the parent finances the subsidiary; (3) whether the subsidiary has no business or assets except those conveyed to it by the parent; (4) whether the parent uses the subsidiary's property as its own; (5) whether the directors of the subsidiary do not act independently in the interest of the corporation but take their orders from and serve the parent; and (6) whether the "fiction of corporate entity . . . has been adopted or used to evade the provisions [45] of a statute." Kavanaugh v. Ford Motor Co., 353 F.2d 710, 717 (7th Cir. 1965); see also Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund v. Sloan, 902 F.2d 593, 596-98 (7th Cir. 1990) (finding that creation of alter ego was motivated by a desire to circumvent federal pension fund laws); *Houston-American Life Ins. Co. v. [243] [872] Tate, 358 S.W.2d 645, 656 (Tex. 1962) (corporate fiction ignored when it is used, inter alia, to "achieve or perpetrate monopoly" or to circumvent the insurance code and usury statutes); United States v. Advance Machine Co., 547 F. Supp. 1085, 1093 \(D. Minn. 1982\) ("The law will not recognize corporate formalities used to circumvent statutory policy or to violate a law."); 1 Fletcher, supra, § 43.20, at 767 ("Shared officers and directors are a strong indication of control by the parent, and may be taken into consideration by a court as inferring domination. Thus, a careful review of the entire relationship between various corporate entities, their directors and officers, may reveal that piercing the corporate veil is warranted.").¹³ Ultimately, no one factor is dispositive.

[46] Appellees contended below that exclusive stock ownership is a prerequisite to a conventional alter ego action. In support of appellees' argument that, at least, "some ownership" interest is required, they cited Evanston Ins. Co. v. Luko, 7 Haw. App. 520, 525, 783 P.2d 293, 297 \(1989\), and Estate of Daily v. Title Guar. Escrow Serv. Inc., 178 B.R. 837, 845 \(D. Haw. 1995\), aff'd, 81 F.3d 167 (9th Cir. 1996). This court has stated that HN20¹⁴ exclusive ownership and control are not "solely determinative on the issue of whether we should disregard the corporate entity" [Chung, 63 Haw. at 646, 636 P.2d at 724. Indeed, "the question is one of control, not merely paper ownership." Labadie Coal Co., 672 F.2d at 97. The mere existence or nonexistence of formal stock ownership is not conclusive. See J.J. McCaskill Co. v. United States, 216 U.S. 504, 515, 54 L. Ed. 590, 30 S. Ct. 386 \(1910\) (looking "beyond the corporate form to the purpose of it"); Wolfe v. United States, 798 F.2d 1241, 1242 \(9th Cir.\), amended on other grounds, 806 F.2d 1410 \(9th Cir. 1986\), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 927, 96 L. Ed. 2d 697, 107 S. Ct. 3210 (1987) [47] (corporation may have separate tax status but be so dominated that it may be regarded as an alter ego); Shades Ridge Holding Co., Inc. v. United States, 880 F.2d 342, 345-46 \(11th Cir. 1989\), amended on other grounds, 888 F.2d 725, cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1027, 108 L. Ed. 2d 609, 110 S. Ct. 1472 (1990); cf. In re Tax Appeal of Ulupalakua Ranch, Inc., 52 Haw. 557, 562, 481 P.2d 612, 615 \(1971\) (stating that to hold a taxable event had occurred under the general excise law would be "to overemphasize form and to ignore the underlying realities of the situation"); 1 Fletcher Encyclopedia, supra, § 41.10, at 581. Therefore, because control is determined by the actual relationship of the parties, formal stock ownership is not dispositive.

Applying the aforementioned legal standards to the instant case, we are led ineluctably to hold that Central was the alter ego of Double K and that Laupahoehoe was the alter ego of T&N. In order to guarantee fairness and to prevent collusive¹⁴ [49] bidding practices and monopolization, the bid solicitations for the Oahu and Big Island Contracts contained special provisions that restricted the successful bidders from purchasing, [48] leasing, or using the buses of another bidder who had bid on the same routes or groups of routes. Successful bidders were also required to: (1) "implement and manage" the contract; (2) refrain from assigning, subcontracting, or selling the contract or its operation for four years; and (3) maintain a separate baseyard, "separate and apart from that of another school bus contractor doing business with the State." Competing subsidiaries and/or jointly-owned companies were not permitted to submit bids for the same routes or groups of routes. Further, Specification M's primary purpose was to maximize competition [*244] [873] within the industry and to address potential monopolies.¹⁵ We reiterate that it is not improper, in and of itself, to form corporations to limit liability; however, it is improper to create or operate another corporate entity in order to circumvent agency rules and regulations carrying the force and effect of law and to contravene clearly enunciated public policy proscribing collusion and monopolization.

¹³ See HRS § 480-8 (1993), which prohibits "interlocking directorates and relationships" that work to eliminate competition by agreement.

¹⁴ HN21¹⁴ Collusion is defined as an agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain an object forbidden by law. It implies the existence of fraud of some kind, the employment of fraudulent means, or of lawful means for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose. Tomiyasu v. Golden, 81 Nev. 140, 400 P.2d 415, 417, cert. denied, 382 U.S. 844, 15 L. Ed. 2d 85, 86 S. Ct. 89 (1965)]. A secret combination, conspiracy, or concert of action between two or more persons for fraudulent or deceitful purpose. See Conspiracy.

Black's Law Dictionary 264 (6th ed. 1990) (brackets added).

¹⁵ As noted earlier, HRS § 103-11 expressly provides that DAGS's "rules shall have the force of law."

With respect to the Oahu Contract, Matsuo and Central created Double K in order to control Double K and its bids, while simultaneously leasing Central's buses to Double K and GTI. Matsuo admitted in deposition, and Yamamoto testified at trial, that Matsuo had conceived the idea of forming Double K to circumvent Specification M's ten percent handicap and DAGS's new bus lease restrictions, rather than risk submitting a losing bid and being precluded from leasing Central's buses. Yamamoto, Central's vice-president, suggested the idea to Kurt Kaminaka. Matsuo's attorney incorporated Double K. Matsuo provided Double K with $ 72,500.00 for start-up. Double K's articles of incorporation authorized the issuance of 250,000 shares of capital stock with a par value of $ 1.00 per share, yet Double K had no assets except for Matsuo's loan. Although called silent investors by Yamamoto, the Kaminakas, as the incorporating shareholders, never personally paid for any of the stock issued to them and never invested [50] any money in Double K. Burt Kaminaka and Philip Main were shocked to discover that they were officers and directors of Double K. Kurt Kaminaka, the president of Double K during the relevant period, did not know: (1) whether Double K had sustained a profit or loss during his ownership of the corporation; (2) the name of the bank where Double K maintained its accounts; or (3) the address or geographical location of its baseyard.

Eugene Obara was asked by Matsuo to become president of Double K and was assured by Matsuo and Koga that he would not have to do any work. Eugene testified that Koga gave him $ 15,000.00 with instructions to deposit the money into his personal checking account and to write a personal check to Kurt Kaminaka. When Double K was sold to the Obaras, Kurt did not negotiate the terms of the sale, yet he received $ 15,000.00 for the outstanding shares of Double K. The Obaras, like Kurt, also did not participate in the sale negotiations. The Obaras and Kaminakas never attended any board meetings, could not identify where Double K's office and baseyard were located, did not know how many buses, drivers, or routes Double K managed, and were unaware whether Double K made [51] a profit or loss between 1991 and 1993. Dennis Obara was also "shocked" to discover that he was an officer and director of Double K. The Obaras did not know when their shares were sold, never received any consideration for them, and could not produce any documents transferring or selling their stock to Central, the subsequent owner of record.

With respect to Double K's school bus operation bids, Matsuo and Koga prepared Double K's bid on the Oahu Contract. Kurt's involvement in the process was limited to signing the bid proposal. Double K shared the same baseyard and office space with Central. Employees of Central performed all of Double K's administrative tasks, including the preparation of financial records, tax returns, and payroll. Central had custody of Kurt's signature stamp, which was used on all checks and other matters. Additionally, Central leased approximately ten or twelve buses to Double K, maintained the vehicles, and provided the drivers. When DAGS conducted its investigation of Double K, Double K concealed evidence of loans and lease arrangements with Central. In fact, during his deposition, Kurt Kaminaka testified that he believed that both the clerical tasks and [52] the bus arrangements were provided pursuant to a lease. Yet Kurt could not explain why he had told the State Comptroller, in his July 17, 1991 letter to DAGS, that no loan agreements or "written" leases existed between Double K and Laupahoehoe, especially in light of the fact that he [*245] [*874] considered Central and Laupahoehoe to be the same entity.

On this record, Double K was so organized and controlled and its affairs conducted in such a manner that it was a mere instrumentality of Central, inasmuch as Central, through Matsuo and other employees, exerted such domination of finances, policies, and practices over Double K that it had no separate mind, will, or existence of its own and merely served as a conduit for Central. Failure to recognize that Central is the alter ego of Double K would sanction a fraud and promote injustice.¹⁶

[53] With respect to the Big Island Contract, we also hold that the trial court's finding that Laupahoehoe was not the alter ego of T&N is clearly erroneous. Although T&N was incorporated well before the Big Island bid request, similarly to Double K, Matsuo was involved in the creation of T&N, providing the money to "start-up" the fledgling corporation. We note that Specification M had been incorporated into DAGS' bids since the 1970s and that section 3.2.1 was incorporated into the new bids because of suspected collusion between Laupahoehoe and T&N.

¹⁶ Furthermore, although appellees argued that the leasing of buses to Double K and T&N was conducted in arms-length transactions, appellants adduced evidence showing that Central and Laupahoehoe leased 1981 model buses to Double K and T&N at $ 150 and $ 160, respectively, yet leased the same buses to GTI at a rate ranging from $ 300 to $ 420.

Laupahoehoe's control over T&N is further evidenced by the fact that Ura, T&N's one hundred percent stock holder, president, and operations manager, contributed no money to T&N's assets and could not recall having performed any work for T&N between 1988 and 1990, the period just prior to the Big Island Contract. Ura also could not recall who prepared or drafted the articles of incorporation even though he signed them.

With respect to T&N's operation, Matsuo and Dayton Oniwa, an employee of Laupahoehoe, calculated and prepared T&N's bid proposal. T&N shared office space with and leased its baseyard from Laupahoehoe. Although Ura possessed [54] sole authority to sign checks, received a salary of $ 800.00 per month, and had use of the company car, Laupahoehoe retained custody of T&N's checkbook and performed its administrative work--including bookkeeping, accounts payable and receivable, driver payroll, and taxes. T&N also leased its buses from Laupahoehoe, with a standing order for replacement buses in the event of a breakdown. Laupahoehoe serviced, repaired, and fueled all T&N's vehicles, and provided its bus drivers. Upon T&N's being awarded the contract, Matsuo extended loans for T&N's bid guaranties.¹⁷ Finally, although Ura proclaimed that T&N was his company, when asked what he did, with respect to running the company, he defined his position to be that of a janitor or handyman.

[55] With regard to the collusive nature of Laupahoehoe and Matsuo's conduct in simultaneously controlling T&N and Laupahoehoe's bids, George Okano testified:

Q [by Mr. Nakashima]: Was there any other reason that [section 3.2.1] was implemented [to prohibit] a bidder [from] leasing buses to the winning bidder, one bidder?

....
A [by Okano]: Okay, there were previous bids whereby T&N and Laupahoehoe had bid and one of the companies would withdraw their bid if both companies were the low bid, allowing the higher bid to win the award.

Q: What would happen if there was a middle bidder between Laupahoehoe and T&N?

A: Then the lower bidder would accept the award of the contract. I think that just happened once.

....

Q: What did you mean by not fully independent?

[*246] [875] A: Companies that would speculate or [were] suspected of being affiliated with another company, we'd suspect.

Q: Would that include T&N and Laupahoehoe?

A: T&N, the emergence of T&N did present a lot of suspicion.

Q: Going back to my original question, in that scenario where an affiliated company would bid one amount and the other affiliated company would bid at a higher amount on the same route, what [56] would you describe that as?

A: Unfair.

Q: That's because--why would that be unfair to have affiliated companies bidding high and low?

A: Essentially putting in two bids and selecting according to your advantage.

Based on the overwhelming weight of the evidence, we hold that T&N was so organized and controlled and its affairs conducted in such a manner that it was, in fact, a mere instrumentality of Laupahoehoe, inasmuch as Laupahoehoe exerted such domination of finances, policies, and practices of T&N that it had no separate mind, will, or existence of its own and merely served as a conduit for Laupahoehoe.¹⁸

¹⁷ Relying mainly upon a lack of commingled assets, the trial court held that there was insufficient evidence to conclude that Double K and T&N were mere instrumentalities or alter egos of Matsuo, Central and/or Laupahoehoe. See FOF No. 117. This lone factor is not dispositive of the issue.

¹⁸ Although appellants presented evidence that Matsuo was a key figure in the shell scheme, i.e., as 94% owner and C.E.O. of C.M. Holding Corporation, as an officer and director of Laupahoehoe and Central, and as a participant in daily operations, the record supports a conclusion that Matsuo was acting as the owner and leader of the corporations, rather than as their alter ego.

[57] 2. Piercing the Corporate Veil

We must now determine whether the corporate veil ought to be pierced. Are the plaintiffs, RHSB and STI, asserting a claim against a second corporation or individual, i.e., Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, or Central, upon a cause of action that otherwise would have existed only against the first corporations, i.e., Double K and T&N? Are plaintiffs attempting to pierce the corporate veil as a means of imposing liability on an underlying cause of action, such as a tort or breach of contract, incurred solely by the shell corporations? The answer to both of these questions is no.

Appellants complaint is lodged directly against Laupahoehoe, Central, and Matsuo, as well as Double K and T&N. Although we acknowledge that it is the "factual" recognition of the scheme that is necessary to the survival of appellants' claims, such claims survive without this court unnecessarily "piercing the corporate veil." Because, as a factual matter, Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, and Central's control over Double K and T&N touches appellants' statutory and common law claims, we hold that Central and Laupahoehoe are alter egos of Double K and T&N, respectively. Insofar as appellants [58] have maintained their claims directly against Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, and Central, we need not "pierce the corporate veil."

C. Claims under HRS Chapter 480

Appellants contend that Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, and Central "secretly acting in concert" incorporated, controlled, and/or operated Double K and T&N as shell corporations, circumventing DAGS's regulations, to gain unfair competitive advantage for Laupahoehoe and Central and to monopolize the school bus industry in violation of HRS §§ 480-2 and 480-9. Appellees contend, as a threshold matter, that HN23 [↑] appellants lack standing to obtain relief under HRS §§ 480-2 and 480-13 insofar as the present matter is a private dispute between competing businesses.¹⁹ We agree.

[59] [*247] [876] 1. Standing to Assert Unfair Methods of Competition under HRS §§ 480-2 and 480-13

HN22 [↑] The party claiming that a corporation is an alter ego of another bears the burden of proof. See Henry Waterhouse Trust Co., 27 Haw. at 582. Thus, in this regard, we affirm the trial court's findings and conclusions.

¹⁹ Appellees also contend that appellants' HRS § 480-2 claims fail because appellees are shielded by the doctrine of "state action immunity." HN24 [↑] The "state action immunity" doctrine provides that losing bidders are barred from bringing antitrust claims against either the agency or successful bidder, where the state has exclusive control of a bidding process and creates a monopoly by awarding all contracts to one successful bidder. See Buckley Constr., Inc. v. Shawnee Civ. & Cultural Dev. Auth., 933 F.2d 853 \(10th Cir. 1991\). The challenging bidder must show that: (1) "the challenged behavior is sanctioned by a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy;" and (2) "the state expressly supervises the private anticompetitive conduct at issue." Lease Lights, Inc. v. Public Serv. Co. of Oklahoma, 849 F.2d 1330, 1333 \(10th Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1019, 102 L. Ed. 2d 807, 109 S. Ct. 817 \(1989\) (citing Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 57, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 \(1985\)); see also California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 104-06, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 \(1980\); 1 Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law. An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P221, at 357 (rev. ed. 1997). Appellees defense in this regard is meritless. It is patently obvious that DAGS intended to foster competition. Without addressing the state immunity doctrine in greater depth, we have serious reservations that it would apply to shield a successful bidder where there is evidence that such bidder attempted to deceive a state agency concerning its independence from another bidder in order to circumvent bidding rules.

Appellees also adduced considerable evidence at trial to prove that RHSB and STI had unclean hands. It is well settled that HN25 [↑] the unclean hands defense is precluded in HRS § 480-13 claims for monetary damages. See Davis v. Wholesale Motors, Inc., 86 Haw. 405, 417-18, 949 P.2d 1026, 1038-39 \(App. 1997\) (citing International Tel. and Tel. Corp. v. General Tel. & Elecs. Corp., 296 F. Supp. 920, 926 \(D. Haw. 1969\)). "The U.S. Supreme Court has explained that 'the plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages [in an antitrust suit] may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition.'" Id. (citing Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 \(1968\), overruled on other grounds by Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 765-66, 716, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\)) (footnote omitted).

HN26[] Reading the statutory language of HRS §§ 480-2 and 480-13 in pari materia, this court, in Ai v. Frank Huff Agency, Ltd., 61 Haw. 607, 612, 607 P.2d 1304, 1308-09 \(1980\), and Island Tobacco Co. Ltd. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 63 Haw. 289, 296-97, 627 P.2d 260, 266 \(1981\), held that HRS § 480-13 affords a private remedy for any violation of HRS § 480-2.²⁰ However, both Ai and Island Tobacco Co. involved claims of unfair or deceptive acts or practices, not unfair methods of competition. The following explains why we must revisit the overly broad holdings of both Ai and Island Tobacco Co. and restrict their application to unfair or deceptive acts or practices claims.

As recognized in Island Tobacco Co., 63 Haw. at 296-97, 627 P.2d at 266, HRS Chapter [60] 480 was first enacted "in 1961 to fill a vacuum created by the advent of statehood." Prior to statehood, federal antitrust laws applied to trade in Hawaii as a territory of the United States. See id. "When the state legislature undertook the task of fashioning Hawaii's antitrust law, it logically followed the federal paradigm." Id. For example, HN27[] HRS § 480-4 (1993), which prohibits "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce[,"] traces, verbatim, the language of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1.²¹ [61] Similarly, HRS § 480-9 (1985 & Supp. 1992) provides that "no person shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce," tracing Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.²²

[*248] [877] HRS § 480-13\(a\)\(1\) (Supp. 1992) was also included within the 1961 enactment and permits any person²³

who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter . . . [to] . . . sue for damages sustained by the person, and, if the judgment is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be awarded a sum not less than $ 1,000 or threefold damages by the plaintiff sustained, whichever sum is greater, and reasonable attorneys fees together with [62] the costs of suit

See also 6 Julian von Kalinowski et al., Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation § 111.07, at 111-18 (2d ed. 1998) (Von Kalinowski on Antitrust). HRS § 480-13 traces the language of Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 15,²⁴ which provides a private cause of action for violations of the antitrust laws, namely the substantive provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

²⁰ See also Paulson, Inc. v. Bromar, Inc., 775 F. Supp. 1329, 1338 \(D. Haw. 1991\).

²¹ In 1890, the Sherman Antitrust Act was enacted to target unreasonable restraints of trade and was intended to codify well recognized principles of the common law. See 2 Philip R. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law. An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application PP302-3, at 2-7 (rev. ed. 1997) (Areeda & Hovenkamp). Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides in part: "Trusts, etc., in restraint of trade illegal; penalty. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. . . ."

²² Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides:

Monopolizing trade a felony; penalty. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

²³ "Person," as defined by HRS § 480-1 (1985 & Supp. 1992), includes a corporation.

²⁴ Enacted in 1914, the Clayton Act was targeted at activities which substantially lessened competition, providing more specific proscriptions to antitrust legislation, as well as a private remedies provision. See 2 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P303, at 2-10. Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides in relevant part:

[63] Hawaii's antitrust law, currently found within HRS Chapter 480, was amended in 1965 to include:

Sec. 205A-1.1. Unfair competition, practices, declared unlawful. Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are hereby declared unlawful.

Sec. 205A-1.2. Interpretation. It is the intent of the legislature that in construing section 205A-1.1 the courts *will be guided by the interpretations given by the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts to Section 5(a)(1)*²⁵ of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

1965 Haw. Sess. L. Act 129, § 1, at 176-77 (emphasis and footnote added). HRS § 480-2 was again amended in 1980 to slightly change the guidance language of Section 480-2(b) and in 1987 to add sections 480-2(c) and (d) (Supp. 1992). The amendments provided:

(b) In construing this section, the courts and the office of consumer protection shall give due consideration to the rules, regulations, and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts interpreting section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(a)(1)), as from time [64] to time amended.

(c) No showing that the proceeding or suit would be in the public interest (as these terms are interpreted under section 5(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act) is necessary in any action brought under this section.

(d) No person other than a consumer, the attorney general or the director of the office of consumer protection may bring an action based upon unfair or deceptive acts or practices declared unlawful by this section.

(Emphases added.)

Whether we are "guided by the interpretations of" or "give due consideration to the rules, regulations, and decisions [65] of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts interpreting section 5(a)(1)," it is apparent that HN28 [↑] the private remedy provision contained in section 4 of the Clayton Act does not extend to Section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA, [*249] [878] i.e., the "unfair methods of competition" section, and that the FTCA does not afford a private cause of action. See Pan American World Airways, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 306, 9 L. Ed. 2d 325, 83 S. Ct. 476 (1963); Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 703 n.12, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 68 S. Ct. 793, reh'g denied, 334 U.S. 839, 92 L. Ed. 1764, 68 S. Ct. 1492 (1948); Amalgamated Utility Workers v. Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, Inc., 309 U.S. 261, 269, 84 L. Ed. 738, 60 S. Ct. 561 (1940); Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, 280 U.S. 19, 25-30, 74 L. Ed. 138, 50 S. Ct. 1 (1929); 2 Philip R. Areeda & Hebert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P305a, at 15 (rev. ed. 1997) (hereafter Areeda & Hovenkamp). In 1914, the FTCA was enacted to supplement the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 to 7, and the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 12 to 27, by empowering the FTC with cumulative remedies against activities detrimental [66] to competition. See Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 283 U.S. 643, 647-48, 75 L. Ed. 1324, 51 S. Ct. 587 (1931); Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 690-93, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 68 S. Ct. 793, reh'g denied, 334 U.S. 839, 92 L. Ed. 1764, 68 S. Ct. 1492 (1948); Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Advertising Serv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394, 97 L. Ed. 426, 73 S. Ct. 361, reh'g denied, 345 U.S. 914, 97 L. Ed. 1348, 73 S. Ct. 638 (1953). In fact, the legislative history to the FTCA provided:

Suits by persons injured. (a) Amount of recovery; prejudgment interest[.] Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. . . .

²⁵ Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 45 (FTCA) provides in relevant part: Declaration of unlawfulness; power to prohibit unfair practices; inapplicability to foreign trade. (1) Unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are hereby declared unlawful."

It is now generally recognized that the only effective means of establishing and maintaining monopoly, where there is no control of a natural resource . . . [without the use] of transportation, is the use of unfair competition. The most certain way to stop monopoly at the threshold is to prevent unfair competition. This can be best accomplished through the action of an administrative body of practical men thoroughly informed in regard to business, who will be able to apply the rule enacted by Congress to particular business situations, so as to eradicate evils with the least risk of interfering with legitimate business operations.

It is impossible to frame definitions which embrace all unfair practices. There is no limit to human [67] inventiveness in this field. Even if all known practices were specifically defined and prohibited, it would be at once necessary to begin over again. If Congress were to adopt the method of definition, it would undertake an endless task. It is also practically impossible to define unfair practices so that the definition will fit business of every sort in every part of this country. Whether competition is unfair or not generally depends upon the surrounding circumstances. What is harmful under certain circumstances may be beneficial under different circumstances.

H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 1142, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., at 18-19 (1914) (brackets and emphasis added); see also 2 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P305a, at 12. Section 5 was amended in 1938 to extend the FTC's jurisdiction to "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." Id. P305c, at 13 n.4. Therefore, Congress enacted section 5 of the FTCA to combat activities in their incipiency that exhibit a strong potential for stifling competition. See Federal Trade Commission v. Texaco, 393 U.S. 223, 225, 21 L. Ed. 2d 394, 89 S. Ct. 429 \(1968\).

It is commonly understood that HN29 [↑] section 5 is not limited to "the prohibitions of the Sherman or the Clayton [68] Act. Indeed, [section] 5 is not confined by antitrust concepts at all. It allows the Commission to condemn conduct that is 'unfair' in senses 'beyond simply those enshrined in the letter or encompassed in the spirit of the antitrust laws.'" Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P307a, at 21-22 (brackets added); see also Federal Trade Commission v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 454, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 \(1986\). In other words, the FTC, as an agency acting within its field of expertise, administers and enforces section 5 of the FTCA to terminate conduct that it deems to have a strong potential of reducing or eliminating legitimate competition in the future.

In light of the decisions of the FTC and federal interpretations of section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA, the statutory language of HRS § 480-2 is ambiguous. We must, therefore, [*250] [879] look to the legislative history of HRS § 480-2 for further guidance.

The 1965 legislative history underlying HRS § 480-2 includes the following:

H.B. No. 136 would amend the Hawaii Antitrust Act by adding a new section declaring unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce unlawful. [69] The purpose of the bill is to provide the Attorney General with much needed authority to bring proceedings to enjoin unfair and deceptive business practices by which consumers are defrauded and the economy of the State is harmed.

There has been established in the Attorney General's Office of a Fair Business Practices Division. That division has been assigned the responsibility for developing and administering an effective fair business program to protect both consumers and honest businessmen from fraudulent, unfair or deceptive business practices. The authority to stop and prevent practices of this nature, which H.B. No. 136 would provide, is essential to an effective fair business program.

....

The Hawaii Antitrust Act now contains appropriate enforcement provisions, including authority to the Attorney General to bring proceedings to enjoin any violations of the provisions of the act. The amendment of the act, as provided by H.B. 136, would make all of its enforcement provisions, except the criminal provisions, applicable *to the amendment.*²⁶ Primarily, as indicated above, it would empower the Attorney General to maintain suits to enjoin the continuation of unfair methods [70] of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of trade and commerce.

....

Hse. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 55, in 1965 House Journal, at 538 (emphases and footnote added); see also Hse. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 267, in 1965 House Journal, at 599-600 ("H.B. No. 136 would authorize the Attorney General to seek an injunction from the courts against continuing particular practices.").

[71] The legislative history relating to the 1987 amendment also stated in relevant part:

The purposes of this bill were to establish definitions of "class action" and "de facto class action" and to make several amendments to Chapter 480, Hawaii Revised Statutes, including the following:

(1) Provided that the $ 1,000 minimum recovery provision is only applicable to consumer suits based upon unfair or deceptive practices brought under Section 480-2, unfair and deceptive practices;

....

(5) Provided that suits based upon unfair or deceptive acts or practices under Section 480-2 may be brought only by consumers, the Attorney General, or the Office of Consumer Protection, in effect precluding its application to private disputes between businessmen.

Your Committee finds that current law is unclear and the procedure confusing. Upon further consideration, your Committee [*251] [880] has made numerous amendments to the bill including the following:

....

2. Amended Section 480-2, Hawaii Revised Statutes, by requiring that the court and Office of Consumer Protection shall be guided by rules, regulations, and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal court[s] and [72] by providing that it shall not be necessary to show that the proceeding or suit brought under this section would be in the public interest and that no other person other than a consumer, the Attorney General or the director of the Office of Consumer Protection may bring an action under this section. The amendment to Section 480-2 is intended to clarify actions of unfair and deceptive acts and is not intended to affect suits based upon unfair methods of competition. . . .

Hse. Conf. Comm. Rep. No. 104, in 1987 House Journal, at 1053 (emphases added). Additional legislative history states:

....

Your Committee has received testimonies from attorneys who have litigated in this area of law.

Presently, Chapter 480 has been interpreted by some courts as allowing individual plaintiffs who can prove that they have been injured because of an antitrust violation to recover a minimum amount of $ 1,000 regardless of the actual amount of damages sustained. Other courts have decided differently. The applicable penalties

²⁶ This court, in Ai, 61 Haw. at 612 n.10, 607 P.2d at 1309 n.10, interpreted this language as establishing conclusively the legislature's intent to create a private cause of action for all violations of Section 480-2. However, as noted above, Ai entailed an unfair or deceptive acts or practices claim, not an unfair methods of competition claim. Furthermore, the Ai court cited, among other cases, Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 454, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390, reh'g denied, 353 U.S. 931, 1 L. Ed. 2d 724, 77 S. Ct. 716 (1957), which is inapposite to private enforcement of unfair competition claims. Radovich, 352 U.S. at 446-47, involved violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, which fall squarely within the private enforcement measures of section 4 of the Clayton Act--unlike section 5 of the FTCA. What is most telling is that (1) nearly all of the legislative history relating to HRS § 480-2 focuses upon consumer protection through unfair or deceptive acts or practices and (2) there is no discussion of the effects that recognizing a private claim for unfair competition would have on competition--when protecting competition is one of the fundamental purposes of antitrust legislation. This leads us to conclude that the legislature did not intend to extend HRS § 480-13 to unfair methods of competition claims. Insofar as Ai, 61 Haw. at 612, 607 P.2d at 1308-09, holds that a private cause of action exists for unfair methods of competition under HRS § 480-2, it is overruled.

91 Haw. 224, *251A 82 P.2d 853, 880A 999 Haw. LEXIS 261, 72

provisions require classification. When this law was enacted, the Legislature did not intend to impose draconian measures upon defendants in the guise of enforcing [73] our antitrust laws. . . .

Hse. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 575, in 1987 House Journal, at 1371 (emphasis added).

We now interpret the legislative history to the 1965 and 1987 amendments not to recognize or create a private claim for relief under HRS § 480-13 for unfair methods of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2.²⁷ This interpretation in no way limits consumer claims for unfair or deceptive acts or practices under HRS § 480-2 or, inter alia, private claims for violations of HRS §§ 480-4 or 480-9. The Hawai'i legislature has made clear pronouncements on these claims, either through the statutory language of HRS § 480-2\(d\) or through the guidance of similar federal antitrust statutes as permitted in HRS § 480-3.

[74] In a similar vein, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit succinctly stated that it is a simple but important truth . . . that our antitrust laws are designed to protect the integrity of the market system by assuring that competition reigns freely. While much has been said and written about the antitrust laws during the last century of their existence, ultimately the court must resolve a practical question in every . . . [antitrust] case: Is this the type of situation where market forces are likely to cure the perceived problem within a reasonable period of time? Or, have barriers been erected to constrain the normal operation of the market, so that the problem is not likely to be self-correcting? In the latter situation, it might well be necessary for a court to correct the market imbalance; in the former, a court ought to exercise extreme caution because judicial intervention in a competitive situation can [*252] [*881] itself upset the balance of market forces, bringing about the very ills the antitrust laws were meant to prevent. See R. Coase, The Firm. The Market, and the Law 117-19 (1988); R. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law 324-25, 338-39 (3d ed. 1986). [75]

United States v. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659, 663 \(9th Cir. 1990\) (addressing claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act) (brackets added).

As one might guess, the broad and flexible language of HRS § 480-2 could prove to have deleterious effects on competition when used as an instrument by private plaintiffs with predominantly private interests. See Holloway v. Bristol-Myers Corp., 158 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 485 F.2d 986, 989-91 \(D.C. Cir. 1973\) ("the breadth of prohibition carried with it a danger that the [FTCA] might become a source of vexatious litigation" (Brackets added.)). Indeed, we must be careful to avoid constructions of HRS § 480-2 "which might chill competition, rather than foster it." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\); see also Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d at 668 ("It can't be said often enough that the antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors." (emphasis in original)); but see Cel-Tech Communications Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 560-565, 973 P.2d 527 \(Cal. 1999\) (clarifying California's Unfair Competition Statute, Bus. & Prof. Code, § [76] 17200, et seq., which recognizes private standing); Inka's S'Coolwear, Inc. v. School Time, L.L.C., 725 So. 2d 496, 501 \(La. Ct. App. 1998\) (recognizing an existing private action for unfair trade practices).

²⁷ This court, in Island Tobacco Co., 63 Haw. at 301, 627 P.2d at 269, stated that HRS § 480-2 is designed to aid "competitors," as much as to protect "competition." And unlike the Federal Trade Commission Act, the policy of Hawaii law, as expressed in HRS § 480-13, is to foster private suits grounded on unfair or deceptive trade practices even where the unlawful acts do not culminate in injury to "competition."

See id. at 301 n.12, 627 P.2d at 269 n.12 (citing Hse. Standing Comm. Rep. No. 735-74, in 1974 House Journal 829, 830; Sen. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 703-74, in 1974 Senate Journal 1020, 1021). As noted above, Island Tobacco Co. did not involve an unfair methods of competition claim. Furthermore, because the legislature specifically limited a competitor's ability to bring an unfair or deceptive acts or practices claim to consumers, see HRS § 480-2\(d\); Cieri v. Leticia Query Realty, Inc., 80 Haw. 54, 61-62, 905 P.2d 29, 36-37 \(1995\), we do not regard Island Tobacco Co. as being dispositive on this issue. Insofar as Island Tobacco Co., 63 Haw. at 301, 627 P.2d at 269, holds that a private cause of action exists for unfair methods of competition under HRS § 480-2, it is also overruled.

Therefore, because the fundamental purpose underlying the FTCA is to empower the FTC with the authority to prevent activities that have the strong potential for lessening or destroying competition and because the legislative history of HRS § 480-2 establishes that the primary purpose of its insertion into HRS Chapter 480 is to empower the Fair Business Practices Division of the Department of the Attorney General with the means and authority to do the same, we hold that HN30[↑]] there is no private claim for relief under HRS § 480-13 for unfair methods of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2. Given the danger of chilling competition and suppressing legitimate business innovations, we decline to deviate from the distinct and well understood statutory policy of section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA, in the absence of a clear pronouncement on the part of the Hawai'i legislature.

2. Violations of HRS § 480-9

Appellants contend that the trial court erred in (1) holding [77] that there was insufficient evidence to conclude that appellees attempted to monopolize the school bus industry and (2) employing a retrospective rather than a prospective test in its analysis of the dangerous probability of success. Although we agree with appellants that the trial court erred in relying solely on appellees' lack of subsequent market success, we affirm the trial court's conclusion that there was insufficient evidence to support appellees' attempt to monopolize claim.

As a threshold matter, we must address the form of appellants' claim. Appellants alleged in their complaint that appellees *conspired*²⁸ [78] to monopolize the school bus industry. Prior to and during trial, appellants conceded that the facts of the case supported an attempt to monopolize claim rather than an actual monopolization claim. We assume that appellants were attempting to allege a concerted attempt to monopolize. Such an allegation implicates both HRS §§ 480-4\(a\) (1993) and 480-9.²⁹

[*253] [882] In Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768-773, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984), the United States Supreme Court explained the distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct for purposes of a single firm under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Focusing upon [79] the singular nature of economic interests within a single firm, the Court stated that it is clear that officers or employees, as well as unincorporated divisions, of the same corporation or business cannot provide the plurality of actors necessary for a section 1 conspiracy. Id. at 769-770. Similarly, the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousness, but one....

Indeed, the very notion of an "agreement" in Sherman Act terms between a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary lacks meaning. A § 1 agreement may be found when "the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 1139, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)....

²⁸ HN31[↑]] Generally speaking, "the accepted definition of a conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons [or entities] by concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means." Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 466, 65 L. Ed. 349, 41 S. Ct. 172 (1921) (citation omitted); see also Island Tobacco Co. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 513 F. Supp. 726, 739 (D. Haw. 1981); Bonds v. Landers, 279 Ore. 169, 566 P.2d 513, 516 (Or. 1977) (citing 15A C.J.S. 599 Conspiracy § 1(2)).

²⁹ HRS § 480-4, like section 1 of the Sherman Act, provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in the State, or in any section of this State[,] is illegal." HRS § 480-9, like section 2 of the Sherman Act, also condemns those who "combine or conspire . . . to monopolize." "The prohibition is curious because, given § 1, it seems entirely redundant." 3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P809, at 370. A conspiracy in violation of HRS § 480-9 requires the same proof needed to prove a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade under HRS § 480-4. See International Distrib. Centers v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987) (addressing sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act).

467 U.S. at 772.

Previously, we have held that Central and Laupahoehoe are [80] alter egos of Double K and T&N, respectively. It would be wholly inconsistent to hold that Double K and Central or T&N and Laupahoehoe could constitute a plurality of actors for purposes of a conspiracy whether construed under HRS §§ 480-4 or 480-9. See Ulrich v. The Security Investment Co., Ltd., 35 Haw. 158, 167 (1939) (stating that HN32[[↑]] it is "impossible" to conspire with an alter ego). Moreover, inasmuch as Laupahoehoe and Central are two wholly owned subsidiaries of the same parent, C.M. Holding Corporation, and inasmuch as they share a singular economic interest (akin to unincorporated divisions of the same corporation), they cannot constitute a plurality of actors for purposes of antitrust conspiracy. See 7 Philip Areeda, Antitrust Law. An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application PP 1463h and 1464a, at 230-233 (1986). In fact, testimony was adduced that Laupahoehoe and Central were perceived as one and the same company. Thus, Laupahoehoe and Central cannot conspire in violation of HRS §§ 480-4 or 480-9.

Furthermore, Matsuo was also unable to conspire for purposes of HRS §§ 480-4 or 480-9. Matsuo was an officer of Laupahoehoe and Central during [81] the relevant time period. It is well recognized that an officer of a corporation cannot conspire with the corporation. See Herrmann v. Moore, 576 F.2d 453, 459 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1003, 58 L. Ed. 2d 679, 99 S. Ct. 613 (1978); Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola, Inc., 200 F.2d 911, 914 (5th Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 925, 97 L. Ed. 1356, 73 S. Ct. 783 (1953). Nevertheless, we recognize that, "when officers of a corporation act for their own personal purposes, they become independent actors, who can conspire with the corporation." Dussouy v. Gulf Coast Inv. Corp., 660 F.2d 594, 603 (5th Cir. 1981) (cited in Rowland v. Union Hills Country Club, 157 Ariz. 301, 757 P.2d 105, 110 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1988), and Benningfield v. City of Houston, 157 F.3d 369, 378 (5th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 143 L. Ed. 2d 543, 119 S. Ct. 1457 (1999)). However, here, Matsuo was also the 94% owner of C.M. Holding Corporation (with his daughters owning the remaining six percent). Insofar as the facts reveal that Matsuo's economic interest, with regard to this case, was the same as that of Laupahoehoe and Central, we hold that Matsuo could not conspire [82] for purposes of HRS §§ 480-4 or 480-9.

[*254] [883] Turning to appellants' claims HN33[[↑]] under HRS § 480-13\(a\),³⁰ [83] in order to have standing to bring a claim for relief, a plaintiff must show: (1) a violation of HRS Chapter 480; (2) injury to plaintiff's business or property;³¹ [84] (3) proof of the amount of damages;³² [85] and (4) a showing that the action is ³⁰ It has been argued that section 480-13\(a\) is an automatic damages provision. The plain language of HRS § 480-13\(a\), however, requires some evidence of damage. Indeed, "while proof of a violation of chapter 480 is an essential element of an action under HRS § 480-13, the mere existence of a violation is not sufficient ipso facto to support the action; forbidden acts cannot be relevant unless they cause [some] private damage." Ai, 61 Haw. at 618, 620-21, 607 P.2d at 1312, 1313 (citing E. Timberlake, Federal Treble Damage Antitrust Actions § 3.04 (1965)) (brackets added); see also, 4 Rudolph Callmann, Unfair Competition, Trademarks and Monopolies, § 22.03, at 10-13 (4th ed. 1997); Sen. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 600, in 1969 Senate Journal, at 1111 (Hawai'i legislature amended HRS § 480-13 to provide a minimum $ 1,000 award to encourage private consumers to bring unfair or deceptive acts or practices suits).

³¹ It is not clear whether the trial court viewed the elements of (1) resulting injury to business or property and (2) damages as one and the same. These are two distinct elements of HRS § 480-13. Indeed, federal case law has interpreted the "injury to business or property" language of section 4 of the Clayton Act as a causation requirement, requiring a showing of "antitrust injury." "Plaintiffs must prove . . . [an] injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent[, one] . . . that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the 'type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (citation omitted); see also Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990); Pacific Exp., Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 959 F.2d 814, 818 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1034, 121 L. Ed. 2d 686, 113 S. Ct. 814 (1992); 1 Callmann on Unfair Competition, supra, § 4.47, at 433-36.

Also known as the "fact of damage" requirement, the antitrust plaintiff need not prove with particularity the full scope of profits that might have been earned. Instead, it requires a showing, with some particularity, of actual damage caused by anticompetitive conduct that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 113, in the public interest.³³ See Ai, 61 Haw. at 612, 607 P.2d at 1311. The following reveals that appellants' claim fails because they failed to prove a violation of HRS Chapter 480.

HN34 [↑] An attempt to monopolize claim, under HRS § 480-9, requires proof: (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with; (2) a specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. See Spectrum Sports, Inc., 506 U.S. at 456 (citation omitted); Bartleys Town and Country Shops, Inc. v. Dillingham Corp., 530 F. Supp. 499 at 512 (placing antitrust injury element within attempt test rather than within elements for relief under Clayton Act, § 4); 1 Von Kalinowski on Antitrust, supra, § 2.03[2], at 2-23 to 2-14.

With respect to the element of predatory or anticompetitive conduct, appellants have alleged that appellees engaged in unfair competition in their circumvention of DAGS's [*255] [884] bidding rules and regulations in order to bid on contracts and lease buses simultaneously. Although appellants do not have standing to bring an unfair methods of competition claim under HRS § 480-2, we agree [86] that appellees' conduct constitutes unfair competition³⁴ for purposes of an attempt to monopolize claim. However, for appellants' claim to succeed, "it must also appear that there is a causal connection between the conduct and the monopoly power." 3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P806c, at 330.

[87] HN37 [↑]

Regarding the element of a specific intent to monopolize, one must do more than show that the defendant had the specific intent "to prevail over one's rivals." 3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P805a, at 322-23. One must show that the defendant desired, for example, "to achieve monopoly power, to accomplish a forbidden monopoly,³⁵ . . . or to 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\); William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. Continental Baking Co., Inc., 942 F.2d 1332, 1339-40 (9th Cir. 1991), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 981 F.2d 1023 \(9th Cir. 1992\).

³² In contrast to the "fact of damage" requirement, the damages element of section 480-13\(a\) is the "amount of damage." See J. Truett Payne Co., Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 565-67, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981); Dolphin Tours, Inc. v. Pacifico Creative Serv., Inc., 773 F.2d 1506, 1511 (9th Cir. 1985) (citing Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 (1946), reh'g denied, 327 U.S. 817, 90 L. Ed. 1040, 66 S. Ct. 815 (1946)). The plaintiff must present "sufficient evidence to permit 'a just and reasonable estimate of the damages[.]'" William Inglis & Sons Baking Co., 942 F.2d at 1340; see also Texaco, Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990), such that "the [trier of fact] is not left to 'speculation or guesswork' in determining the amount of damages to award." Dolphin Tours, Inc., 773 F.2d at 1509-10 (citing Bigelow, 327 U.S. at 263-65); see also Catlin v. Washington Energy Co., 791 F.2d 1343, 1347 (9th Cir. 1986); Houston Mercantile Exchange Corp. v. Dailey Petroleum Corp., 930 S.W.2d 242, 248 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996); 4 Callmann on Unfair Competition, supra, § 22.51, at 443-46.

³³ The public interest requirement is not required for consumer claims of unfair or deceptive acts or practices. See HRS § 480-2\(c\).

³⁴ HN35 [↑] Although HRS § 480-2 does not define unfair competition, it "was constructed in broad language in order to constitute a flexible tool to stop and prevent [unfair competition and] fraudulent, unfair or deceptive business practices for the protection of both consumers and honest businessmen and businesswomen." Han v. Yang, 84 Haw. 162, 177, 931 P.2d 604, 619 (App. 1997) (quoting Ai, 61 Haw. at 616, 607 P.2d at 1311) (footnote omitted) (some brackets added and some omitted); see also 6 Von Kalinowski on Antitrust, supra, § 111.07, at 111-18; 1 Callmann on Unfair Competition, supra, § 2.08, at 27-28; Restatement (Third) of the Law of Unfair Competition § 1, cmt. g, at 9-11 (1995). Generally speaking, competitive conduct "is unfair when it offends established public policy and when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." State ex rel. Bronster v. United States Steel Corp., 82 Haw. 32, 51, 919 P.2d 294, 313 (1996) (citations and brackets omitted). Further, HN36 [↑] section 5 of the FTCA specifically dictates that it is an unfair method of competition to violate specific trade regulations, to attempt to circumvent antitrust statutes, or to engage in practices that "violate the spirit of antitrust laws." Island Tobacco Co. v. R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc., 513 F. Supp. 726, 737 (D. Haw. 1981); see also Cel-Tech Communications Inc., 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 560-565 ("The word 'unfair' . . . means conduct that [(2)] threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or [(2)] violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or [(3)] otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." (Brackets added.)).

exclude competition." Id. (some footnotes omitted and some added). Although anticompetitive conduct may supply sufficient inference of this necessary intent, see generally Spectrum Sports, Inc., 506 U.S. at 454-56; Robert's Waikiki U-Drive, Inc. v. Budget Rent-A-Car Systems, Inc., 491 F. Supp. 1199, 1218 (D. Haw. 1980), aff'd, 732 F.2d 1403 (9th Cir. 1984), intent alone is insufficient to establish a dangerous probability of success. See Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 402, 49 L. Ed. 518, 25 S. Ct. 276 (1905).

[88] HN38[

With respect to the third and final element, an attempt to monopolize claim "includes activities embodying 'the employment of methods, means and practices which would, if successful, accomplish monopolization, and which, though falling short, nevertheless approach so close as to create a dangerous probability of it.'" Bartleys Town and Country Shops, Inc., 530 F. Supp. at 511 (citing American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946)). "In order to determine whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts have found it necessary to consider the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in that market." Spectrum Sports, Inc., 506 U.S. at 456 (brackets added). "There is universal agreement that monopoly power is the power to exclude competition or control prices." Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d at 664 (citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956)). "The existence of such power ordinarily may be inferred from [a] predominant share of the market." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). [89]

When looking at appellees' share of the relevant market (which can be viewed as either several county markets or one state market), appellants urge this court to apply [*256] [885] a prospective rather than a retrospective test, i.e., appellants urge this court to examine only appellees' market share at the time appellees created and submitted bids through Double K and T&N to determine whether a "dangerous probability" existed.³⁶ Appellees counter that subsequent market performance, i.e., appellees' subsequent loss of market share, "is highly relevant in establishing that the defendant lacked the necessary power to raise prices or exclude competition." We agree with appellees that subsequent performance is relevant and admissible; however, subsequent market performance is not dispositive. See Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255, 270-71 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982) ("HN39[ A subsequent failure to achieve monopoly status cannot itself vitiate a claim of attempted monopoly where other evidence substantially supports the attempt without eviscerating the entire attempt offense.") (citing Kearney & Trecker Corp. v. Giddings & Lewis, Inc., 452 F.2d 579 (7th Cir. 1971), [90] cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1066, 31 L. Ed. 2d 796, 92 S. Ct. 1500 (1972)); Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832 (2d Cir. 1980); Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Serv. of America, Inc., 651 F.2d 122, 128 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 968, 70 L. Ed. 2d 384, 102 S. Ct. 512 (1981); United States v. American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114, 1119 (5th Cir. 1984), reh'g denied, 756 F.2d 882 (5th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 474 U.S. 1001, 88 L. Ed. 2d 370, 106 S. Ct. 420 (1985) (applying prospective test); Greyhound Computer Corp., Inc. v. International Bus. Mach. Corp., 559 F.2d 488, 496 n.18 (9th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1040, 54 L. Ed. 2d 790, 98 S. Ct. 782 (1978) (declining market share may reflect lack of power but not foreclose a finding of power); Winter Hill Frozen Foods & Serv. Inc. v. Haagen-Dazs Co., Inc., 691 F. Supp. 539, 547 (D. Mass. 1988).

³⁵ "Monopoly exists when one firm controls all or the bulk of a product's output, and no other firm can enter the market, or expand output, at comparable costs." 2A Philip Areeda, Herbert Hovenkamp, & John Solow, Antitrust Law, An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P403a, at 5 (1995).

³⁶ Appellants rely upon Multiflex, Inc. v. Samuel Moore & Co., 709 F.2d 980, 988-89, reh'g denied, 716 F.2d 901 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1100, 80 L. Ed. 2d 126, 104 S. Ct. 1594 (1984). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit disavowed Multiflex, Inc. in Deauville Corp. v. Federated Department Stores Inc., 756 F.2d 1183, 1192 n.5 (5th Cir. 1985), insofar as it conflicts with Northwest Power Products v. Omak Industries, 576 F.2d 83, 90 (5th Cir.), reh'g denied, 579 F.2d 643 (1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75, 99 S. Ct. 1021 (1979) (holding that to prove an antitrust violation under the rule of reason the plaintiff must show defendants' conduct actually adversely affected competition).

[91] At the time of the alleged violations, Central maintained 78.7% of the Oahu market and Laupahoehoe maintained 63.8% of the Big Island market.³⁷ By 1993, their shares had declined to 3.2% on Oahu, 51% on the Big Island, and 16.9% throughout the state. During the same time period, RHSB's share of the Oahu market had increased from zero to 39.9% and from 14% to 33.5% throughout the state. Insofar as the trial court might have focused solely upon appellees' loss of market share, the trial court erred. This, however, does not rescue appellants' claim. HN40[↑] Although a predominant share of the relevant market is indirect evidence of monopoly power, the mere existence of a predominant share of the market, alone, does not equal the power to control prices or exclude competition. See 3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P807e1, at 358 ("To be sure, market share is only an imperfect proxy for market power.").

Time after time, we have recognized this basic fact of economic life: A high market share, though it may ordinarily raise an inference of monopoly power, will not do so in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendants' inability to control prices or exclude [92] competitors.

Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 366 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 109 S. Ct. 180, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1988) (citation omitted). See also Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 924 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 101 S. Ct. 1369, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1981) ("Blind reliance upon market share, divorced from commercial reality, [can] give a misleading picture of a firm's actual ability to control [*257] [*886] prices or exclude competition."). There is nothing magic about this proposition; it is simple common sense, embodied in the Antitrust Division's own Merger Guidelines:

If entry into a market is so easy that existing competitors could not succeed in raising price for any significant period of time, the Department is unlikely to challenge mergers in that market.

Antitrust Policies and Guidelines, U.S. Dep't of Justice, Merger Guidelines § 3.3, reprinted in 4 Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) P13,103 at 20,562 (1988).

Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d at 664 (brackets in original) (footnote omitted); see also [93] 2A Philip Areeda, Herbert Hovenkamp, & John Solow, Antitrust Law, An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P420b, at 59 (1995).

Here, the trial record does not support a finding that Central or Laupahoehoe had the power to control prices or exclude competition. Although appellees controlled an unusually large share of the school bus markets, the record reveals that there were absolutely no barriers to entry, except those minimally imposed by the state through the bidding process. Moreover, the record shows that no barriers to competition were created by appellees' corporate shell scheme. Three independent competitors, unrelated to appellees (GTI, Gomes, and Bragado), successfully bid on the majority of school bus routes and/or groups contained in the instant bid solicitations. The record also [94] reveals that, although appellees adduced evidence that Laupahoehoe and T&N had engaged in "bid rigging" in the past, appellees' corporate shell scheme apparently proved unsuccessful to control bid prices in the instant case. Appellants have failed to adduce evidence of a causal connection between appellees' "anticompetitive" conduct and appellees' alleged monopoly power. We, therefore, affirm the trial court's conclusions that there was insufficient evidence to show a dangerous probability of success in the relevant county or state school bus markets in order to sustain appellants' attempt to monopolize claim.

D. Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Advantage

Appellants claim that the trial court erred (1) in determining that there was insufficient evidence to find or conclude that appellees tortiously interfered with RHSB and STI's prospective business advantages with DAGS and (2) in concluding that appellees' actions were not designed to interfere with RSHB's business relationship with DAGS. Appellants also contend that the trial court erred insofar as it failed to enter any findings or conclusions with respect to the Oahu Contract. With regard to the Oahu Contract [95] we agree, and we also acknowledge that HN41[[↑]] this court has not yet definitively recognized the intentional tort of tortious interference with prospective business advantage.³⁸ We do so now.³⁹

³⁷ We decline to adopt a bright line rule, at this time, regarding a minimum market share necessary for an attempt to monopolize claim. See 3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P807d, at 353-55.

[96] [*258] [887] 1. Recognition of the Tort

The primary objective of the tort of interference with prospective business advantage or opportunity is the protection of legitimate and identifiable business expectancies.... Weighing against social and individual interests in protection of business expectancies and efforts to acquire property are the interests in legitimate business competition. That is, much of the common law is premised on the theory that competitors should have an opportunity to compete for business until such time as it is cemented by contract or agreement. Public and individual interests in free competition become particularly acute where a plaintiff anticipates, but is not yet assured, that a contractual or firm business relationship will materialize. Where the plaintiff's contractual relations are merely contemplated or potential, the public interest is best served by allowing any competitor the opportunity to divert those prospects to itself, so long as the means used are not themselves improper. Any contrary rule may tend to establish and perpetuate trade monopolies. As the "expectancy" becomes more remote or less firmly established, the interest in free competition [97] among business persons becomes more compelling.

² Joseph D. Zamore, Business Torts § 12.01[2], at 12-5 to 12-6 (1999) (footnotes omitted) (emphasis added).

The Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 766B, at 20 (1979) defines HN42[[↑]] the tort of "Intentional Interference with Prospective Contractual Relation" as follows:

One who intentionally and improperly interferes with another's prospective contractual relation (except to marry) is subject to liability to the other for pecuniary harm resulting from loss of the benefits of the relation, whether the interference consists of
 (a) inducing or otherwise causing a third person not to enter into or continue the prospective relation or
 (b) preventing the other from acquiring or continuing the prospective relation.

The Restatement also provides:

HN43[[↑]] In determining whether an actor's conduct in intentionally interfering with a contract or a prospective contractual relation of another is improper or not, consideration is given to the following factors:

³⁸ See Lesser v. Boughey, 88 Haw. 260, 264 n.3, 965 P.2d 802, 806 n.3 (1998); Kutcher v. Zimmerman, 87 Haw. 394, 399 n.8, 405 n.15, 957 P.2d 1076, 1084 n.8, 1097 n.15 (App. 1998).

³⁹ Appellees contend that a claim of tortious interference with prospective business advantage cannot be maintained within a state bidding framework. We disagree. DAGS encouraged competition in the instant bidding process. Because the former Chapter 103 did not limit private remedies, we hold that appellants' claim of tortious interference is viable. See Hoefer v. Wisconsin Education Ass'n Ins. Trust, 470 N.W.2d 336, 341-42 (Iowa 1991) (implicitly recognizing viability of tortious interference with prospective business advantage in state bidding system); Polote Corp. v. Metric Constructors, Inc., 880 F. Supp. 836, 847-48 (S.D. Ga. 1995) (same); cf. Kahn v. Salomon Brothers Inc., 813 F. Supp. 191, 195-96 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) (holding that violation of state bidding rules promulgated by press release does not constitute improper conduct to support tortious interference claim). We decline to decide whether this claim is viable under HRS § 103D-704 (1993).

Appellees cited several cases in support of their argument. See Perkins v. Lukens Steel Co., 310 U.S. 113, 84 L. Ed. 1108, 60 S. Ct. 869 (1940); Coyne-Delany Co., Inc. v. Capital Dev. Bd. of State of Illinois, 616 F.2d 341 (7th Cir. 1980); Sowell's Meats and Services, Inc. v. McSwain, 618 F. Supp. 140 (D.S.C. 1985) aff'd, 788 F.2d 226 (4th Cir. 1986); ARA Services, Inc. v. School Dist. of Philadelphia, 590 F. Supp. 622 (E.D. Pa. 1984) (mem.); Kasom v. City of Sterling Heights, 600 F. Supp. 1555 (E.D. Mich. 1985) (mem.), aff'd, 785 F.2d 308 (6th Cir. 1986); J.P. Mascaro & Sons, Inc. v. Township of Bristol, 497 F. Supp. 625 (E.D. Pa. 1980); Estey Corp. v. Matzke, 431 F. Supp. 468 (N.D. Ill. 1976) (mem.). Insofar as these cases involved violations of constitutional due process, equal protection, and/or statutory civil rights, they are inapposite.

- (a) the nature of the actor's conduct,
- (b) the actor's motive,
- (c) the interests of the other with which the actor's conduct interferes,
- (d) the interests to be advanced [98] by the actor,
- (e) the social interests in protecting the freedom of action of the actor and the contractual interests of the other,
- (f) the proximity or remoteness of the actor's conduct to the interference[,] and
- (g) the relations between the parties.

Id. § 767, at 25-26 (brackets added).

Based in part upon the foregoing, HN44[⁴⁰] the following elements have evolved into the tort of intentional or tortious interference with prospective business advantage: (1) the existence of a valid business relationship or a prospective advantage or expectancy sufficiently definite, specific, and capable of acceptance in the sense that there is a reasonable probability of it maturing into a future economic benefit to the plaintiff;⁴⁰ (2) knowledge of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy by the defendant; (3) a purposeful intent to interfere with the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; (4) legal causation between the act of interference and the impairment of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; and (5) actual damages. See Locricchio v. Legal Services Corp., 833 F.2d 1352, 1357 \(9th Cir. 1987\); Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1166 \(9th Cir. 1997\), [99] cert. denied, 142 L. Ed. 2d 36, 119 [*259] [888] S. Ct. 46 (1998); see also 2 Business Torts, supra, §§ 12.01[4]-12.03[6], at 12-11 to 12-46.

Here, with respect to the Big Island Contract, the trial court specifically found that STI had an economic relationship with DAGS of which Matsuo and Laupahoehoe were aware and that Laupahoehoe and Matsuo's conduct operated to hinder competition and to obtain an unfair advantage for Laupahoehoe.⁴¹ Nevertheless, the trial court concluded that there was insufficient evidence to show that: (1) such conduct was designed to disrupt appellants' relationship with DAGS; (2) the [100] relationship had the probability of ripening into a future economic benefit for STI; (3) STI would have been awarded the Big Island routes; and/or (4) STI was injured and suffered damages.

Appellants adduced evidence of damage to STI on the basis of gross lost profits which equaled the sum of lost contract revenues and charter revenues.⁴² According to appellants, school bus operators commonly obtained charter revenue which equaled approximately forty percent of their contract revenue. Appellees, however, adduced evidence that charter revenue was not commonly obtained by school bus operators on the Big Island and that RSHB and STI's calculations were based solely on RSHB's financial figures on Oahu. Considering appellants' failure to establish a reasonable correlation between contract and charter revenues on the Big Island and considering that, without any charter revenue, STI would have suffered a loss ranging from $ 14,220 to $ 8,140 if awarded the Big Island [101] contracts, we cannot hold that the trial court erred in concluding that STI suffered no appreciable amount of damage on the Big Island. Appellants' tortious interference claim with respect to STI therefore fails.

Presumably, because the trial court found that Central was not the alter ego of Double K, with respect to the Oahu Contract, the trial court's only COL on the present subject was that "the evidence is insufficient to establish . . . that Defendants' conduct was designed to disrupt the relationship between DAGS and the Plaintiffs to the claim

⁴⁰ "There must be a colorable economic relationship between the plaintiff and a third party with the potential to develop into a full contractual relationship. The prospective economic relationship need not take the form of an offer but there must be specific facts proving the possibility of future association." Locricchio v. Legal Services Corp., 833 F.2d 1352, 1357 \(9th Cir. 1987\).

⁴¹ These findings are not challenged on appeal.

⁴² Charter revenue is obtained between 8:00 a.m. and 3:00 p.m., the time in which buses dedicated for school routes can be used by public and private schools and/or non-profit organizations for field trips or excursions. Mits Nakatsuka, a former DAGS officer of twenty-three years, testified that charter revenue correlates with contract revenue, constitutes a considerable amount of income for school bus operators, and serves as an incentive to obtain contracts.

of [102] tortious interference with prospective business advantage." Considering our holding, supra, that Central is the alter ego of Double K, creating Double K to bid on contracts and lease buses simultaneously in circumvention of Specification M, we hold that there was a basis for the trial court to review whether appellees' conduct was intended to disrupt the reasonable expectancy of future economic relationships of the finite number of bidders, namely RHSB, with DAGS. Appellants adduced evidence showing that DAGS customarily awarded the contract to the next lowest bidder without rebidding the contract and that, but for appellees' conduct, RHSB would have been awarded Group 4. Accordingly, we remand this claim to the circuit court for the entry of new findings and conclusions with respect to the Oahu Contract on all of the elements of tortious interference with prospective business advantage.⁴³

[103] We note, for purposes of guidance, that the standard for assessing an expert's assumptions when calculating lost profits is reasonableness. Here, appellees challenged several of appellants' expert's assumptions, including: the ten-year versus six-year contract [*260] [889] period (based upon two two-year extensions), the forty percent charter revenue on Oahu, the charter drivers and benefits costs (i.e., appellants' projected 32.2% versus appellees' projected 47.3%), fuel and lubricants, repair and maintenance, and driver contact expenses. The test is not whether appellants have supported these assumptions to an absolute certainty. See supra note 32. The test is whether appellants have supported these assumptions with a reasonable estimate of damages, considering, for example, such evidence as: (1) Nakatsuka's testimony that charter revenue is a considerable or substantial percentage of contract revenue; (2) appellees' expert's testimony that Double K, T&N, and STI's actual driver-cost-to-total-revenue-ratio ranged from 34.9%, 30.8%, to 26.5% during the relevant time periods; (3) appellees' expert's testimony regarding RHSB's driver-cost-to-revenue-ratio on charters; and (4) [104] Nakatsuka, Okano, Governs, and Koga's testimony that two two-year extensions are customarily granted.

2. Conspiracy to Commit Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Advantage

Appellants also alleged that appellees engaged in a civil conspiracy to commit tortious interference with their prospective business advantage with DAGS. For similar reasons as those discussed in connection with their conspiracy to attempt to monopolize claim, appellants' civil conspiracy claim fails.⁴⁴

[105] Although addressing the concept of conspiracy for purposes of the Sherman Act, the United States Supreme Court, in Copperweld Corp., explained that "in reality a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary always have a 'unity of purpose or a common design.' They share a common purpose whether or not the parent keeps a tight rein over the subsidiary; the parent may assert full control at any moment if the subsidiary fails to act in the parent's best interests." Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 771-72; cf. Shared Communications Services of 1800-80 JFK Boulevard, Inc. v. Bell Atlantic Properties Inc., 692 A.2d 570, 572-74 (Pa. Super. 1996), appeal denied, 555 Pa. 704 (Pa. 1998) (although a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary may constitute a plurality of actors under concepts of civil conspiracy, "under certain circumstances, the arrangement between a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary could be such that the two legal corporations are not truly separate and are essentially corporate alter egos." (citations omitted)). Although we do not adopt, wholesale, the principles enunciated in Copperweld, because the instant civil [106] conspiracy claim is not premised upon the Sherman Act, we recognize that the "singular enterprise" principle can be applied on a case-by-case, factual basis.

⁴³ We note that "nominal damages may be awarded [for tortious interference with prospective business advantage] when the fact of damage is established but the extent of damage is not proven." 2 Business Torts, supra, § 12.03[6], at 12-44 (brackets added). Furthermore, "punitive damages may be awarded where actual damage is established and actual malice--that is, ill-will, hatred or spite--is shown or where other outrageous or oppressive conduct by the wrongdoer is demonstrated." Id. § 12.03, at 12-45 to 12-46. Such an award is appropriate only so long as the "punitive damages award . . . relate[s] to the wrongdoing within the court's jurisdiction, and the defendant . . . receive[s] fair notice of the severity of the penalty." Id.

⁴⁴ HN45 Civil conspiracy does not alone constitute a claim for relief. See Weinberg v. Mauch, 78 Haw. 40, 49, 890 P.2d 277, 286, reconsideration denied, 78 Haw. 421, 895 P.2d 172 (1995); Ellis v. Crockett, 51 Haw. 45, 57, 451 P.2d 814, 822-23, 51 Haw. 86 (1969); W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 46, at 324 (5th ed. 1984). Moreover, mere acquiescence or knowledge is insufficient to constitute a conspiracy, absent approval, cooperation, or agreement. See Winslow v. Brown, 125 Wis. 2d 327, 371 N.W.2d 417, 419 (Wis. Ct. App.), appeal denied, 126 Wis. 2d 518 (1985); More v. Johnson, 193 Colo. 489, 568 P.2d 437, 440 (Colo. 1977) ("Silent knowledge of an unlawful act is insufficient to establish the requisite agreement.").

Insofar as we have affirmed the circuit court's FOFs and COLs with regard to appellants' claim of tortious interference in the Big Island Contract, we conclude that appellants' conspiracy claim in this regard also fails. With respect to the Oahu Contract, insofar as we have held above that Central is the alter ego of Double K, Central and Double K cannot conspire. See Ulrich, 35 Haw. at 167. Moreover, trial testimony was adduced showing that Laupahoehoe and Central were viewed as one and the same corporation. "The mere formality of separate incorporation is not, without more, sufficient to provide the capability for conspiracy." Island Tobacco Co., 63 Haw. at 308, 627 P.2d at 273; Island Tobacco Co., 513 F. Supp. at 739 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). We note that there was no evidence adduced showing that C.M. Holding [*261] [890] Corporation,⁴⁵ Laupahoehoe, and Central were incorporated for anything other than legitimate corporate purposes, such as allocation of resources [107] and responsibilities. Insofar as Laupahoehoe and Central, without cooperation and agreement between them, might have acted at Matsuo's direction individually, the record supports the trial court's finding and conclusion that "the evidence is insufficient to establish that any two or more of the Defendants engaged in concerted action to accomplish an unlawful objective." In this regard, the trial court's finding/conclusion is not clearly erroneous. Furthermore, insofar as Matsuo (1) was an officer of Laupahoehoe and Central during the relevant time period, (2) was a 94% owner of C.M. Holding Corporation, the parent of Laupahoehoe and Central, and (3) apparently maintained the same economic objective as Laupahoehoe and Central, we cannot say that the circuit court's finding/conclusion in this regard is clearly erroneous. Accordingly, the trial court's finding/conclusion is affirmed.

E. Punitive Damages

[108] Appellants contend that the trial court erred in refusing to award punitive damages. We agree in part.

As noted above, an award or denial of punitive damages is within the sound discretion of the trier of fact and will not be reversed absent a clear abuse of discretion. See *Ditto, 86 Haw. at 91, 947 P.2d at 959. HN46*⁴⁶ Whenever a court disregards rules or principles of law or practice to the substantial detriment of a party, it abuses its discretion. See Ho, 88 Haw. at 256, 965 P.2d at 798. Insofar as the trial court failed to enter sufficient findings regarding appellees' claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage on Oahu, we hold that the trial court abused its discretion with respect to punitive damages. We vacate the trial court's findings and conclusions in this regard and remand with instructions to enter findings of fact and conclusions of law.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we vacate the judgment, entered May 18, 1995, and the findings of fact and conclusions of law, filed April 26, 1995, with respect to issues of: (1) alter ego regarding Central, Double K, Laupahoehoe, and T&N; (2) tortious interference [109] with prospective business advantage against Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, Central, and Double K on the Oahu Contract; and (3) punitive damages regarding tortious interference against Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, Central, and Double K on the Oahu Contract. In this regard, we remand with instructions to enter new findings of fact and conclusions of law consistent with this opinion.

Albeit for somewhat different reasons, we affirm the judgment, entered May 18, 1995, and the findings of fact and conclusions of law, filed April 26, 1995, with respect to the issues of: (1) unfair competition against Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, Central, Double K, and T&N; (2) attempt to monopolize and conspiracy to monopolize against Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, Central, Double K, and T&N; (3) conspiracy in restraint of trade against Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, Central, Double K, and T&N; and (4) conspiracy to commit tortious interference with prospective business advantage against Matsuo, Laupahoehoe, Central, Double K, and T&N. We accordingly affirm the trial court's judgment, findings, and conclusions in all other respects.

Ronald T.Y. Moon, Robert G. Klein, Steven H. Levinson, Paula A. Nakayama, Mario R. Ramil

⁴⁵ Additionally, we note that C.M. Holding Corporation is not named as a party in the instant action.

End of Document

Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

December 4, 1998, Argued ; July 16, 1999, Filed

No. 97-1927

Reporter

184 F.3d 268 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16044 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,581

RICHARD J. ANGELICO, M.D., Appellant v. LEHIGH VALLEY HOSPITAL, INC.; SAINT LUKE'S HOSPITAL OF BETHLEHEM PENNSYLVANIA; EASTON HOSPITAL; PANEBIANCO-YIP HEART SURGEONS; BETHLEHEM CARDIOTHORACIC SURGICAL ASSOCIATES, P.C.; BRIAN M. PETERS, ESQ.; POST & SCHELL, P.C.; Caption amended pursuant to 2/10/98 order

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA. (D.C. No. 96-cv-02861). District Judge: The Honorable J. Curtis Joyner.

Disposition: Affirmed in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

Core Terms

district court, antitrust, antitrust claim, conspiracy, state actor, sanctions, subpoena, anti trust law, anticompetitive, attorney's fees, state official, cardiothoracic, privileges, defendants', competitor, surgeon, Sherman Act, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN1[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. Antitrust standing, however, is narrower than the statute's wording indicates. An antitrust injury is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. The focus is broader than the injury suffered by the potential plaintiff. Although a showing of antitrust injury is necessary, it is not always sufficient to establish standing under section 4, because a party may have suffered antitrust injury but may not be a proper plaintiff under section 4 for other reasons.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

An antitrust injury is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN3 [down arrow] Clayton Act, Claims

The factors to be employed in a standing analysis under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, are: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits contracts, combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade. To establish a section 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim under the rule of reason test, plaintiffs must prove: (1) that the defendants contracted, combined, or conspired among each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy. The second element may be satisfied in two ways: the plaintiff may satisfy this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects, such as reduction of output, increase in price, or deterioration in quality of goods and services.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN5 [down] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal are not always per se violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1; rather, the analysis turns on the facial effects of the challenged practice.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

HN6 [down] Protection of Rights, Section 1983 Actions

If a plaintiff sues private individuals for actions taken in their roles as attorneys under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, he must point to some action that is fairly attributable to the state. To do this, a plaintiff must show (1) that the attorney defendants' acts were the exercise of some right or privilege created by the state or by a rule of conduct imposed by the state or by a person for whom the state is responsible and (2) that the attorney defendants may fairly be said to be state actors.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

HN7 [down] Protection of Rights, Section 1983 Actions

A person may be found to be a state actor when (1) he is a state official, (2) he has acted together with or has obtained significant aid from state officials, or (3) his conduct is, by its nature, chargeable to the state. Without a limit such as this, private parties could face constitutional litigation whenever they seek to rely on some state rule governing their interactions with the community surrounding them.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

Governments > Courts > Court Personnel

HN8 [down] Protection of Rights, Section 1983 Actions

Attorneys performing their traditional functions will not be considered state actors solely on the basis of their position as officers of the court. A lawyer representing a client is not, by virtue of being an officer of the court, a state actor under color of state law within the meaning of 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgments by Confession

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN9 [blue icon] Pretrial Judgments, Judgments by Confession

Before private persons can be considered state actors for purposes of 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, the state must significantly contribute to the constitutional deprivation, e.g., by authorizing its own officers to invoke the force of law in aid of the private person's request.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

HN10 [blue icon] Discovery, Subpoenas

An attorney does not become a state actor simply by employing the state's subpoena laws.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Remedies, Costs & Attorney Fees

Awarding attorney's fees as a means of sanctioning a party is within the district court's inherent power. The district court can assess attorney's fees when a party has acted in bad faith.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Sanctions, Baseless Filings

Although, like other sanctions, attorney's fees certainly should not be assessed lightly or without fair notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record. The concept of due process is flexible and whether a hearing is required depends upon the circumstances.

Counsel: Henry F. Siedzikowski, Esq. (Argued), Elliott, Reihner, Siedzikowski & Egan, Blue Bell, PA, Attorney for Appellant.

Richard F. Stevens, Esq. (Argued), Stevens & Johnson, Allentown, PA. Edward C. Mengel, Jr., Esq., David E. Edwards, Esq., White & Williams, Philadelphia, PA. Wayne A. Mack, Jr., Duane, Morris & Heckscher, Philadelphia, PA. Donald H. Lipson, Esq., Tallman, Hudders & Sorrentino, Allentown, PA. Mark H. Scoblionko, Esq., Scoblionko, Scoblionko, Muir & Bartholomew, Allentown, PA. Frederick B. Buck, III, Esq., Rawle & Henderson, Philadelphia, PA. Jeffrey G. Weil, Esq., (Argued), Dechert, Price & Rhoads, Philadelphia, PA, Attorneys for Appellees.

Judges: BEFORE: SLOVITER, NYGAARD, and WOOD, * Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: NYGAARD

Opinion

[*272] OPINION OF THE COURT

NYGAARD, Circuit Judge.

Dr. Richard Angelico [*2] appeals a summary judgment for the defendants, Lehigh Valley Hospital, St. Luke's Hospital of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, Easton Hospital, the Panebianco-Yip Heart Surgeons, and Bethlehem Cardiothoracic Surgical Associates ("Bethlehem") (collectively, the "hospital defendants") on his antitrust claims. The District Court held that Angelico did not have standing to assert antitrust claims because he had not shown an injury to competition. We will reverse and remand for further proceedings.

Angelico also appeals the dismissal of his due process claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Brian M. Peters, Esq., his law firm Post & Schell, P.C., and the firm's client, Lehigh Valley Hospital (collectively, the "attorney defendants"). Finally, he appeals the District Court's sanction in the form of attorney's fees for Peters. We will affirm the dismissal and attorney's fees award.

I. Facts and Procedural History

Angelico is a cardiothoracic surgeon. The three hospitals are located in the Lehigh Valley area in Pennsylvania. Panebianco-Yip and Bethlehem are physician practice groups specializing in thoracic and cardiothoracic surgery in the same area. Angelico began [*3] his career in the Lehigh Valley area with a group of cardiovascular specialists and became a member of the active medical staff of Lehigh Valley Hospital, where he performed cardiothoracic surgery. Just over a year later, Angelico left his original practice group, joined Panebianco-Yip as that practice group's primary surgeon, and acquired active privileges at St. Luke's.

In 1989, Angelico resigned from Panebianco-Yip and established his own practice. He maintained his privileges at both Lehigh Valley and St. Luke's until January of 1991, when he requested that his active privileges at Lehigh Valley be reduced to "courtesy" privileges, which allowed him to perform only a limited number of operations there each year. He maintained his courtesy privileges at Lehigh Valley until October 15, 1995.

In March 1994, Angelico notified St. Luke's that he was resigning his staff privileges. He then attempted to apply for staff privileges at Easton. Easton, however, informed him that it had adopted a temporary moratorium on applications in its newly established heart program because it was considering whether to award an exclusive contract. Later, Easton informed Angelico that it had awarded [*4] an exclusive contract to another surgeon from outside of the region.

Angelico asserts that he resigned from St. Luke's because the hospital willfully failed to provide him with competent surgical support and that he was therefore constructively terminated. He further contends that the hospital defendants had a sufficient share of the relevant market to control it and that they conspired to eliminate him as a competitor through "various predatory acts," including circulating defamatory remarks regarding his interpersonal and patient care skills. Angelico claims that his courtesy privileges at Lehigh Valley were improperly terminated as a part of this conspiracy and that he has now been "blackballed" by the three hospitals.

* The Honorable Harlington Wood, Jr., Circuit Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, sitting by designation.

[*273] Angelico sued the three hospitals and two practice groups, alleging that they had violated the Sherman Act by conspiring to eliminate him as a competitor. Specifically, he claims that the hospital defendants engaged in exclusive dealing and a group boycott in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and that they control a dominant (monopoly) share of the market in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. [5] He seeks treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. Angelico also argues that the attorney defendants violated his constitutional rights through their use of the state subpoena process and that the District Court improperly assessed attorney's fees against him.

The District Court dismissed Angelico's claims against the attorney defendants and granted the attorney defendants' motion for sanctions. See Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13494, No. Civ.A. 96-2861, 1996 WL 524112 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 13, 1996) ("Angelico I"). On Angelico's antitrust claims, the District Court granted a motion by the hospital defendants for limited discovery on the issues of antitrust standing and antitrust injury. Following discovery, the court granted the hospital defendants summary judgment on the antitrust claims, holding that Angelico had failed to establish standing to pursue them. See Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc., 984 F. Supp. 308 \(E.D. Pa. 1997\) ("Angelico II").

The District Court noted that Angelico suffered significant lost income but held that "an injury to Dr. Angelico personally does not confer standing [6] upon him without a showing that his absence from the relevant product and geographic markets injured competition and/or the consumers of cardiothoracic surgical services in these markets." Id. at 313. Focusing on the effect of Angelico's removal on the market, the court found "no evidence" that there were any fewer competing surgeons or that the quality of cardiothoracic care had been reduced by his absence, see id., and "insufficient evidence of a negative impact on price." Id. at 314. Based on these findings, the District Court concluded that Angelico had not "suffered the type of injury that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent . . . [or] that Dr. Angelico is the most efficient enforcer of those laws." Id.

On appeal, Angelico argues that the District Court erred by: (1) holding that he failed to establish antitrust standing because he could not show an effect on the prices, quantity or quality in the relevant market; (2) failing to declare that the hospital defendants' acts were illegal "per se"; (3) holding that he failed to state a section 1983 claim upon which relief could be granted against the attorneys for Lehigh Valley, [7] and (4) imposing sanctions against him without holding a hearing. We have plenary review of the antitrust standing question, see McCarthy v. Recordex Serv., Inc., 80 F.3d 842, 847 \(3d Cir. 1996\), and of the summary judgment on Angelico's claims against the hospital defendants. See Bixler v. Central Pa. Teamsters Health & Welfare Fund, 12 F.3d 1292, 1297 \(3d Cir. 1993\). We review an assessment of attorney's fees for abuse of discretion if the court applied the correct legal standard. See In re Tutu Wells Contamination Litig., 37 V.I. 398, 120 F.3d 368, 387 \(3d Cir. 1997\).

II. The Antitrust claims

In this case, we must distinguish the antitrust injury that is required for a plaintiff to have standing to bring an antitrust claim from the anticompetitive market effect element of a claim under section 1, which is also generally referred to as "antitrust injury."

A. Antitrust Standing

HN1 [↑] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the [8] United States . . . without respect to the amount in controversy, [*274] and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." Id. Antitrust standing, however, is narrower than the statute's wording indicates. See Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 \(1983\) ("AGC"); II Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P 360, at 192 (rev. ed. 1995)

("The limitations on antitrust standing are only hinted at by the simple and apparently broad language of § 4 of the Clayton Act.").)

HN2 An antitrust injury is an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109, 107 S. Ct. 484, 489, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)); see also In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1163 n.9 (3d Cir. 1993) [9] (standing analysis involves consideration of "the nexus between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's harm" and "whether the harm alleged is of the type for which Congress provides a remedy"). The focus is broader than the injury suffered by the potential plaintiff. Although a showing of antitrust injury is necessary, it is "not always sufficient[] to establish standing under [section] 4, because a party may have suffered antitrust injury but may not be a proper plaintiff under [section] 4 for other reasons." Cargill, 479 U.S. at 110 n.5, 107 S. Ct. at 489 n.5.

Drawing on AGC, we have stated HN3 the factors to be employed in a standing analysis under section 4 of the Clayton Act. These are:

- (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) [10] the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

In re Lower Lake Erie Iron, 998 F.2d at 1165-66 (citing AGC, 459 U.S. at 545, 103 S. Ct. at 912). We hold that, applying these factors, Angelico has standing to challenge the alleged conspiracy, boycott and monopoly.

First, because no discovery was allowed on the issue, we must assume Angelico's allegation that the defendants acted in concert and with an anticompetitive motive, i.e., conspired, is true. Following this assumption, Angelico's harm clearly resulted from the conspiracy that prevented him from competing in the market and thereby earning a living. At this stage, therefore, the causal connection/defendant intent element of the standing analysis is satisfied.

Turning to the second element, whether Angelico's alleged injury is of the type the antitrust laws were meant to redress, we conclude that the injury he suffered, when shut out of competition for anticompetitive reasons, is indeed among those the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. In Brader v. Allegheny General Hospital, 64 F.3d 869 (3d Cir. 1995), [11] a doctor sued a hospital and individual physicians, alleging similar claims under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The district court dismissed the claims, and we reversed, holding that Brader, as a potential competitor shut out of a market by a purported group boycott, had alleged the type of injury protected by the antitrust laws. We stated: "the type of injury alleged by Brader (the loss of income due to an inability to practice in the relevant market [*275] area) is directly related to the illegal activity in which the defendant allegedly engaged: a conspiracy to exclude Brader from the relevant market." Id. at 877.¹ Angelico, like Brader, alleges a concerted effort to exclude him from the market for cardiothoracic surgery and his injury flows directly from this action. See In re Lower Lake Erie, 998 F.2d at 1164 n. 14 ("Because the [plaintiffs] themselves were direct competitors of the [defendants] and because they were injured by the conspiracy's goal to preclude them from market entry, no standing problem is posed by their quest for damages."); Fuentes v. South Hills Cardiology, 946 F.2d 196, 202 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (not addressing 12 standing directly, but noting that similar allegations by a doctor were sufficient to state a claim and to avoid a motion to dismiss).

¹ Appellees assert that only persons with the same interests as consumers have standing under the antitrust laws and cite Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977), in which the Supreme Court stated:

The antitrust laws . . . were enacted for the protection of competition not competitors The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause.

429 U.S. 477, 488-89, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (internal quotes omitted) (emphasis added). Nevertheless, the fact that the antitrust laws are intended to protect competition rather than competitors does not mean that a competitor is never a proper antitrust plaintiff. Indeed, protecting a competitor's ability to compete from a conspiracy, the sole purpose of which is to decrease competition by eliminating that competitor, is clearly in the interest of competition.

13 Angelico also satisfies the third, fourth and fifth elements of the AGC standing analysis. The injury to Angelico from the assumed conspiracy is clearly direct (and substantial). Angelico's injury is the direct result of the alleged conspiracy. In contrast, the harm to consumers is less direct because it will only arise from higher costs or poorer treatment that result from the removal of a strong competitor from the market. A consumer would be highly unlikely to sue for a loss of this type. Finally, there is no potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages, see, e.g., Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 \(1977\), because Angelico's injury has not been passed along to others.

In sum, we hold that Angelico has standing. This is not a case, however, in which we grant standing to a competitor who was simply harmed by strong competition. Rather, Angelico has asserted facts indicating that he was harmed by a conspiracy with an illegal anticompetitive intent. He has standing because he has asserted an injury of "the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent" flowing from "that which makes 14 the defendants' acts unlawful." Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109, 107 S. Ct. at 489. Because the District Court's determination was based on its premise that Angelico did not have standing, we must remand the cause.²

B. Anticompetitive market effect

HN4  Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, prohibits "contracts, combinations or conspiracies 'in restraint of trade.' " City of Pittsburgh v. West Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 267 \(3d Cir. 1998\). 15 To establish a section 1 claim under the rule of reason test,³ plaintiffs must prove,

[*276]

² The District Court erred by incorporating the issue of anticompetitive market effect into its standing analysis, confusing antitrust injury with an element of a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, which prohibits "contracts, combinations or conspiracies 'in restraint of trade.' " The court's approach may have been the result of the similar "antitrust injury" label which is applied to the injury component of antitrust standing analysis and to the marketplace harm element under section 1.

³ We reject Angelico's assertion (citing Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 \(1959\)) that the hospital defendants' acts should be held illegal per se. Courts follow one of two lines of analysis to assess the validity of section 1 claims. See Arizona v. Maricopa County Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 342-47, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 2472-74, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 \(1982\). The first, "rule of reason" analysis, applies in most cases under this section, while the second, "per se" analysis, applies only to "agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality." National Soc'y of Prof. Engl's v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1365, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 \(1978\).

HN5  Group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal are not always per se violations of the Sherman Act; rather, the analysis turns on the facial effects of the challenged practice. See Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1985\). Similar cases involving medical professionals have utilized the "rule of reason" analysis. See Betkerur v. Aultman Hosp. Ass'n, 78 F.3d 1079, 1088-93 & n. 9 \(6th Cir. 1996\) (discussing and rejecting application of per se analysis to a doctor's claims under section 1 and citing, in the footnote, Lie v. St. Joseph Hosp., 964 F.2d 567, 570 \(6th Cir. 1992\), and other cases holding that rule of reason analysis is normally applied to claims by physicians in the position of Angelico). We see no reason to depart from this approach.

(1) that the defendants contracted, combined, or conspired among each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Tunis Bros., 952 F.2d 715 at 722 (citations omitted). The second element may be satisfied in two ways:

The plaintiff may satisfy this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects, such as reduction of output, increase in price, or deterioration in quality of goods and services. Due to the difficulty of isolating the market effects of the challenged conduct, however, such proof is often impossible to make. Accordingly, the courts allow proof of the defendant's "market power" instead. Market power--the ability to raise prices above those that would prevail in a competitive market--is essentially a "surrogate for detrimental effects."

"Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp., 79 F.3d 1358, 1367 (3d Cir. 1996) [16] (citations omitted); see also VII Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P 1511, at 429 (1986).

[17] Although the District Court considered Angelico's proffered evidence of an actual anticompetitive market effect, we will not address that evidence because it is appropriate that the District Court reconsider it within the legal framework we have outlined.⁴ [18] This will give the court the opportunity to address Angelico's claim that he need not show actual anticompetitive market effect in this instance because of the Appellees' alleged market power.

⁵

III. The section 1983 claim

Angelico asserts that the District Court erred by holding that he failed to state a [*277] claim upon which relief could be granted against the attorney defendants under section 1983. This claim arises out of the litigation of a related state court suit that was resolved during the course of this litigation. Geoffrey Toonder, a cardiothoracic surgeon, sued Lehigh Valley Hospital, claiming that it improperly denied [19] Toonder an "active manpower slot" that would have been filled by Angelico. See Toonder v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., No. Civ.A. 94-E-18 (Pa. Ct. of Common Pleas May 31, 1995) [the "Toonder litigation"]. Toonder was represented by the same attorneys who represent Angelico. Lehigh Valley, through its attorneys -- defendants Peters and his firm, Post & Schell, P.C. -- subpoenaed various members of St. Luke's staff, seeking information regarding Angelico's resignation from that hospital. Angelico claims that, through the use of the subpoenas, the attorney defendants violated his constitutionally protected property and liberty interests. The District Court dismissed these claims. See Angelico I, 1996 WL 524112.

⁴ We note in this regard that Angelico's counsel conceded at oral argument that he did not need further discovery into the element of marketplace harm.

We likewise decline the hospital defendants' suggestion that we affirm the District Court's holding on the ground that Angelico failed to properly define or prove the relevant product and geographic markets because the District Court did not address the issue. See Angelico II, 984 F. Supp. at 313 (assuming for the purposes of the limited motion for summary judgment that the relevant product market was "cardiothoracic surgical services" and that the relevant geographic market was "the greater Lehigh Valley consisting of Carbon, Monroe, Lehigh, Northampton and Schuylkill Counties").

⁵ Moreover, a finding of no anticompetitive market effect would not suffice to dispose of Angelico's claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act. See Mahone v. Addicks Util. Dist., 836 F.2d 921, 939 (5th Cir. 1988) ("Proving an injury to competition is not an element of a monopolization-based antitrust claim."). It is sufficient to note that it remains for the District Court to further assess these issues at the summary judgment stage. See Brader, 64 F.3d at 876 ("The adequacy of a physician's contentions regarding the effect on competition is typically resolved after discovery, either on summary judgment or after trial.").

HN6 [↑] Under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, Angelico must show that the attorney defendants acted under the color of state law and denied him a federally protected constitutional or statutory right. See Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 930, 102 S. Ct. 2744, 2750, 73 L. Ed. 2d 482 \(1982\); Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1264 \(3d Cir. 1994\). Because Angelico sued private individuals for [20] actions taken in their roles as attorneys, he must point to some action that is "fairly attributable" to the state. Lugar, 457 U.S. at 937, 102 S. Ct. at 2753. To do this, Angelico must show (1) that the attorney defendants' acts were "the exercise of some right or privilege created by the State or by a rule of conduct imposed by the state or by a person for whom the State is responsible" and (2) that the attorney defendants may fairly be said to be state actors. Id.

HN7 [↑] A person may be found to be a state actor when (1) he is a state official, (2) "he has acted together with or has obtained significant aid from state officials," or (3) his conduct is, by its nature, chargeable to the state. Id. at 937, 102 S. Ct. at 2753-54. The Supreme Court noted that "without a limit such as this, private parties could face constitutional litigation whenever they seek to rely on some state rule governing their interactions with the community surrounding them." Id. at 937, 102 S. Ct. at 2754.

HN8 [↑] Attorneys performing their traditional functions will not be considered state actors solely on the basis of their position as officers of the court. [21] See, e.g., Polk County v. Dodson, 454 U.S. 312, 318, 102 S. Ct. 445, 450, 70 L. Ed. 2d 509 \(1981\) ("[A] lawyer representing a client is not, by virtue of being an officer of the court, a state actor 'under color of state law' within the meaning of § 1983."); Barnard v. Young, 720 F.2d 1188, 1189 \(10th Cir. 1983\) ("Private attorneys, by virtue of being officers of the court, do not act under color of state law within the meaning of section 1983."). Angelico asserts, however, that the attorneys acted as state officers in issuing the subpoenas because the "state subpoena procedures now empower the attorneys, as officers of the state, to use subpoenas to seize property without a hearing before a state court judge and without participation by the sheriff." Appellant's Br. at 44. Angelico, however, offers no authority to support this statement. Nor does Pennsylvania law provide any indication that attorneys have been granted elevated powers to use subpoenas.⁶

[22] [*278] As we said in Jordan, "HN9 [↑] before private persons can be considered state actors for purposes of section 1983, the state must significantly contribute to the constitutional deprivation, e.g., authorizing its own officers to invoke the force of law in aid of the private persons' request." 20 F.3d at 1266. Angelico claims that by issuing a subpoena, private attorneys use "the same compulsive powers of the state." Appellant's Br. at 45. We disagree. In Jordan, attorneys, on behalf of a client, entered a judgment by confession and then executed on that judgment. See id. at 1264-67. We held that an "entry of the judgment is not a state action involving the force of law to an extent sufficient to hold that private persons become state actors." Id. at 1266. Then, focusing on the role of the sheriff, a state official, in the execution of the judgment, we stated:

a private individual who enlists the compulsive powers of the state to seize property by executing on a judgment without pre-deprivation notice or hearing acts under color of law and so may be held liable under [section 1983 if his acts cause a state official to use \[23\] the state's power of legal compulsion to deprive another of property.](#)

⁶The Pennsylvania Rules of Procedure state:

(a) A subpoena is an order of the court commanding a person to attend and testify at a particular time and place. It may also require the person to produce documents or things which are under the possession, custody or control of that person.

(b) A subpoena may be used to command a person to attend and to produce documents or things only at (1) a trial or hearing in an action or proceeding pending in the court, or (2) the taking of a deposition in an action or proceeding pending in the court.

(c) A subpoena may not be used to compel a person to appear or to produce documents or things ex parte before an attorney, a party or a representative of the party.

Id. at 1267 (emphasis added).

In dismissing Angelico's claim, the District Court properly applied Jordan by focusing on the distinction between the potential for state involvement and actual state involvement.

Although plaintiff notes that there are potential legal consequences attached to failure to obey a subpoena which might ultimately involve invoking the assistance of state officials, such possibility serves only to highlight the difference between resorting to an available state procedure and actually using state officials to enforce or carry out that procedure. The potential for involving the coercive power of the state likewise exists when a judgment by confession is entered, yet . . . a private party is not converted into a state actor as long as the assistance of state officials remains merely a potential threat. It is only when, and if, such potential is realized that a private party may be converted into a state actor for purposes of satisfying the state action element of a § 1983 claim.

Angelico I, 1996 WL 524112, at *2. The [24] court's analysis is sound and consistent with the Supreme Court's analysis in Lugar. We hold, therefore, that HN10 an attorney does not become a state actor simply by employing the state's subpoena laws. See Barnard, 720 F.2d at 1189 ("If an attorney does not become a state actor merely by virtue of instigating state court litigation, then the attorney does not become a state actor merely by employing state authorized subpoena power." (citations omitted)). Angelico's section 1983 claim against the attorney defendants therefore fails. ⁷

[25] [*279] IV. Sanctions

In the same order in which it dismissed the section 1983 claims, the District Court agreed to award sanctions to the attorney defendants in the form of attorney's fees. See Angelico I, 1996 WL 524112. In his complaint, Angelico stated his antitrust claims against "all defendants," thereby including the attorney defendants as defendants to the antitrust claims. Angelico declined to dismiss the charges against them despite their verbal request that he do so. Only after the attorney defendants filed their motion to dismiss, addressing the antitrust claims, did Angelico voluntarily dismiss these claims. Angelico's counsel then informed the attorney defendants that the antitrust claims had not been intentionally asserted against them. Following a motion for sanctions and the filing of an affidavit of costs by the defendants, a Motion to Vacate, Reconsider or Certify Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\) by Angelico, and a response thereto by the attorney defendants, the District Court awarded $ 1,000 to attorney Peters for his costs in preparing to defend the withdrawn antitrust claims against him and his firm. ⁸

[26] HN11

Awarding attorney's fees as a means of sanctioning a party is within the District Court's inherent power. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 45, 111 S. Ct. 2123, 2133, 115 L. Ed. 2d 27 \(1991\). The District Court can assess attorney's fees when a party has acted in bad faith. See Chambers, 501 U.S. at 45, 111 S. Ct. at 2133. Here the District Court found that Angelico and his attorneys acted in bad faith by failing to dismiss the antitrust claims

⁷ Because Angelico has not demonstrated that the attorney defendants were state actors, we need not address the balance of the section 1983 analysis. We also reject Angelico's claim that his due process rights were violated by the attorney defendants' actions in regards to the subpoenas. Finally, we reject Angelico's allegation that the District Court engaged in improper fact finding. This allegation apparently refers to the District Court's understanding that no actual state officials were called upon to enforce the subpoenas in the Toonder litigation. However, the District Court was entitled to take judicial notice of the facts of that decision. See Oneida Motor Freight, Inc. v. United Jersey Bank, 848 F.2d 414, 416 n.3 \(3d Cir. 1988\); 5A Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1364, at 479 n.36 (2d ed. 1990).

⁸ The original decision stated that the court would award "modest monetary sanctions" and required the attorney defendants to submit a record of their costs. Upon receiving the submissions, the District Court found that the costs were far greater than it had anticipated and elected to award only the $ 1,000.

against the attorney defendants, by mischaracterizing the defendants' pleadings, and by failing to inform the court of a significant change in the Toonder litigation (its dismissal). See Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., No. Civ.A.96-2861, Order (E.D. Pa. Nov. 1, 1996). The District Court applied the correct legal standard to determine whether sanctions were in order and carefully stated the acts by Angelico's counsel upon which the order is based.⁹

[27] HN12 [↑]

Although, "like other sanctions, attorney's fees certainly should not be assessed lightly or without fair notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record," Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 767, 100 S. Ct. 2455, 2464, 65 L. Ed. 2d 488 (1980), we have not interpreted the "opportunity for a hearing on the record" discussed by the Supreme Court to require an evidentiary hearing in every case. See Rogal v. American Broad. Cos., 74 F.3d 40, 44 (3d Cir. 1996); see also G.J.B. & Assocs. v. Singleton, 913 F.2d 824, 830 (10th Cir. 1990) (while counsel generally deserve an opportunity to brief the issue, the imposition of sanctions does not necessarily mandate an oral or evidentiary hearing). Rather, the concept of due process is flexible and whether a hearing is required depends upon the circumstances. See Rogal, 74 F.3d at 44. Application of this flexible standard is generally left to the District Court's discretion. See Jones v. Pittsburgh Nat'l Corp., 899 F.2d 1350, 1359 (3d Cir. 1990) (noting that this approach "permits some cases to be disposed of on the record").

Here, the District [28] Court decided that further factfinding was unnecessary. Appellant had both fair notice of the charges and an opportunity to respond [*280] because the motion for sanctions was made along with attorney defendants' motion to dismiss. All of the acts by Angelico and his counsel that were at issue were part of the record and could be considered without an evidentiary hearing. We find no abuse of discretion.¹⁰

V. Conclusion

We conclude that the District Court did not err by dismissing the section 1983 claims against the attorney defendants, and that it was well within its considerable discretion when it imposed sanctions. Angelico, however, has standing to assert his antitrust claims, and we will remand the cause for further proceedings.

End of Document

⁹ We reject Angelico's assertion that the attorney defendants should have realized that they were not subject to the antitrust claims because it implies that the nonfiling side should bear the burden of an allegedly inadvertent pleading mistake. The attorney defendants requested that the claims against them be dropped. The fact that the attorney defendants did not specifically address the antitrust claims does not serve as an escape hatch for the defendants.

¹⁰ In addition, the District Court made additional findings of bad faith. In choosing not to sanction Appellant for this other conduct, the court doubtless took into account that it was already sanctioning him for the antitrust claims.

United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co.

United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts

July 16, 1999, Decided

Cr. No. 95-10388-NG

Reporter

62 F. Supp. 2d 173 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11333 ; 1999-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,515

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. NIPPON PAPER INDUSTRIES CO., LTD., formerly JUJO PAPER CO., LTD., Defendant.

Disposition: [1] NPI's renewed motion for acquittal (docket # 260) GRANTED.

Core Terms

conspiracy, prices, manufacturers, price-fixing, thermal, fax, substantial effect, trading, commerce, domestic, argues, fix prices, anti-dumping, customers, increased price, stabilization, rule of reason, limitations period, indictment, houses, co-conspirators, competitors, conspirator, withdrawal, abandoned, attended, anti trust law, paper company, Sherman Act, translation

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Harmless & Invited Error > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Motions for Acquittal

HN1 Standards of Review, Harmless & Invited Error

A motion under Fed. R. Crim. P. 29 should be granted only where the evidence adduced at trial is so insufficient that no rational trier of fact can find proof beyond a reasonable doubt. To be sure, this is a very heavy burden. The trial court must give the prosecution the benefit of all reasonable inferences drawn from the evidence, including circumstantial evidence, and the trial court is required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the government with respect to each offense. In addition, the Court may not weigh the evidence.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Motions for Acquittal

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN2 Trials, Motions for Acquittal

Under Fed. R. Crim. P. 29, the trial court can determine whether the inferences that the government asks the jury to draw are reasonable, or rather inappropriately piling inference upon inference. Thus, a reviewing court must take a hard look at the record and reject those evidentiary interpretations and illations that are unreasonable, insupportable, or overly speculative. This function is especially important in criminal cases, given the prosecution's obligation to prove every element of an offense beyond a reasonable doubt.

62 F. Supp. 2d 173, *173LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11333, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > Prosecution

HN4 [down] Conspiracy, Elements

In a price-fixing case, the government must prove three elements: (1) that the conspiracy to fix prices described in the indictment was knowingly formed and existed at or about the time alleged in the indictment; (2) that the defendant knowingly became a member of the conspiracy to fix prices; and (3) that the conspiracy had an intended and substantial effect on commerce in the United States. Moreover, all of the relevant factual conditions must have existed at the time the limitation period began.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN5 [down] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Manufacturers can lawfully meet to discuss common concerns. Indeed, they can discuss market conditions, and even prices. They can choose to concur in the pricing decisions of others so long as they independently arrive at these decisions. What they may not lawfully do is to agree to fix the prices that they will charge in the American market.

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Party Opponents > General Overview

HN6 [down] Exemptions, Statements by Coconspirators

62 F. Supp. 2d 173, *173LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11333, 1

While the trial court can weigh the statements of co-conspirators made during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy in making threshold determinations under Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E), those statements alone are not sufficient, absent independent evidence.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN7 Conspiracy, Elements

Mere presence at the scene of a crime is insufficient to prove membership in a conspiracy, and even if it is a fair inference that the defendant knew what was going on, that is not enough to establish intent to conspire.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The failure of implementation of an alleged price-fixing agreement suggests that there was no such agreement.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN9 Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

The standard for withdrawal from a conspiracy requires more than mere cessation of activity in furtherance of the conspiracy. In order to withdraw, a conspirator must act affirmatively either to defeat or disavow the purposes of the conspiracy. Typically, there must be evidence either of a full confession to authorities or a communication by the accused to his co-conspirators that he has abandoned the enterprise and its goals.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN10 Conspiracy, Elements

Affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Federal Savings Associations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

HN11 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

62 F. Supp. 2d 173, *173L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11333, 1

The phrase "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states", 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is both an element of the offense of price-fixing and a vital prerequisite for federal court jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN12 [] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The basic standard is the same for proving either jurisdiction and the third element of the offense on the merits under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is the same; the primary concerns of one mirror the concerns of the other. While there may be additional concerns that may be appropriate for the judge to consider in determining jurisdiction, the core question is, or should be, the same. Moreover, this is particularly so where the factual determination necessary for one, overlaps with the factual determination necessary for the other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

HN13 [] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

It is well established by now that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN14 [] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In a domestic price-fixing case, the third prong of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 imposes a minimal standard. Proof of the conspiracy and an overt act are per se proof of a substantial impact on the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN15 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

There are two general templates for evaluating jurisdictional issues involving restraints on trade: a per se test and a rule of reason test.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

62 F. Supp. 2d 173, *173LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11333, 1

HN16 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The per se model is the traditional domestic price-fixing conspiracy in which courts have not required an appraisal of the actual magnitude of the impact in a domestic setting. Price-fixing is the paradigm of an act in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Price-fixing cartels are condemned per se because the conduct is tempting to businessmen but very dangerous to society. The conceivable benefits are few in principle, small in magnitude, speculative in occurrence, and always premised on the existence of price-fixing power which is likely to be exercised adversely to the public. Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The "rule of reason" approach to evaluating jurisdictional issues involving restraints on trade is typically applied to restraints of trade not involving price-fixing or claims of vertical conspiracies. In those cases, proof that a given set of acts took place does not necessarily mean that they had a "substantial effect" on the market. The specific impact has to be proved under a "rule of reason" analysis which considers multiple factors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

To say that domestic per se rules are not necessarily and automatically applicable in the international context is not to say that an antitrust court needs to hesitate very long before condemning restraints with significant and obvious effects on United States commerce, and without any plausible purpose other than the suppression of competition with and in the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The correct approach to a foreign price-fixing conspiracy is something akin to a "per se plus" test, adding to the traditional domestic analysis the requirement that the government show substantial effects by showing a substantial connection to the United States market. Substantial effects could be shown in any of the following ways: (1) whether the volume of commerce affected by the conspiracy was substantial; (2) whether the share of the market allegedly impacted by the alleged conspiracy was substantial; and (3) whether the conspiracy as a whole substantially lessened competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN20[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A substantial effect on United States commerce cannot simply be assumed to continue because it once existed. There is no reason to treat having substantial effects on United States commerce like being a member of a conspiracy, which is held to continue until its goals or membership have been affirmatively abandoned. Rather, because it is a matter of objective fact, rather than subjective intent to agree, the government must prove that the test is met at the relevant time.

Counsel: For NIPPON PAPER INDUSTRIES CO., LTD, Defendant: Ian Simmons, O'Melveny & Myers, Jeffrey W. Kilduff, O'Melveny & Meyers, Washington, DC.

For NIPPON PAPER INDUSTRIES CO., LTD, Defendant: William H. Kettlewell, Dwyer & Collora, Boston, MA.

For NIPPON PAPER INDUSTRIES CO., LTD, Defendant: Alan M. Cohen, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, New York, NY.

For OJI PAPER CO., interested party: Peter E. Ball, Hill & Barlow, Boston, MA.

For OJI PAPER CO., interested party: E. Charles Routh, Garvey, Schubert & Barer, Seattle, WA.

U. S. Attorneys: Lisa M. Phelan, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

Judges: NANCY GERTNER, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: NANCY GERTNER

Opinion

[*176] TABLE OF CONTENTS

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

July 16, 1999

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

II. RULE 29 STANDARD

III. EVALUATING THE MERITS OF A PRICE-FIXING CLAIM

IV. THE FACTS ADDUCED AT TRIAL

A. Background

B. Co-Conspirator Hearsay and Cultural Inferences

C. Failure to Present Sufficient Evidence of a Conspiracy Continuing Through November 15, 1990, of Which Jujo/NPI Was a Member

62 F. Supp. 2d 173, *176LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11333, 1

1. Evidence of a March 1990 Conspiracy [2] to Fix Prices

[*177] 2. Evidence that Jujo Was a Member of a Price-Fixing Conspiracy

3. Evidence that the Conspiracy Had Dissolved Before the Limitations Period

D. Failure to Present Sufficient Evidence that Any Continuing Conspiracy Had Substantial Effects

V. CONCLUSION

This case, in its journey to and from the Court of Appeals, and in the trial before me, has raised important questions concerning the extraterritorial application of American criminal antitrust laws to a foreign corporation. The United States indicted a Japanese corporation, Nippon Paper Industries Co., Ltd. ("NPI"), alleging that NPI's predecessor, Jujo Paper Company, Ltd. ("Jujo"), conspired with other Japanese manufacturers to fix the price of thermal fax paper for export into the United States in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

The charges were first dismissed by the trial court,¹ reinstated by the First Circuit,² then tried before me for over six weeks.³ While the basic jurisdictional issue - whether criminal antitrust charges could be lodged against a Japanese corporation based on the facts as alleged - was resolved by the First [\[3\]](#) Circuit's decision, the trial of the matter proved complex and troubling. Ultimately, after more than six days of deliberation, the jury was unable to come to a decision.⁴

NPI renewed its motion for judgment of acquittal pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P.29 (docket # 260). After review of the entire record of the trial, the exhibits, and lengthy memoranda, I GRANT the motion and hereby direct a verdict of acquittal.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On December 13, 1995, a federal grand jury in Boston returned an indictment against Jujo, and NPI, as Jujo's successor. Jujo/NPI was charged in one count of price-fixing. [\[4\]](#) The allegations were that beginning at least as early as February 1990 and continuing at least through December 1990, NPI and its co-conspirators participated in a price-fixing conspiracy involving the sale of thermal facsimile paper ("fax paper") sold in the United States and Canada ("North America").

NPI moved to dismiss. It alleged that if the conduct occurred at all, it took place entirely in Japan and as such American criminal antitrust laws could not be extraterritorially applied. The government contested both NPI's characterization of the facts - that the conduct at issue took place completely within Japan - and its characterization of the law - the limited nature of American jurisdiction. The government maintained that the case involved a horizontal conspiracy amongst NPI and other manufacturers which it conceded took place on Japanese soil, and, in effect, a vertical conspiracy between those manufacturers and the trading houses which sold their product on American soil. The Japanese conspiracy alone, the government maintained, was supportable under Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 \(1993\), because of its [\[5\]](#) intended and likely impact on American trade. The allegations that United States trading houses took steps to implement the scheme vitiated any concern about the extraterritorial application of American law.

¹ United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 944 F. Supp. 55 \(D. Mass. 1996\).

² United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 109 F.3d 1 \(1st Cir. 1997\).

³ The trial started on June 1, 1998, and after twenty-six trial days, a mistrial was declared on July 13, 1998.

⁴ Jury deliberations started on July 1, 1998, and on July 13, 1998, a mistrial was declared.

[*178] The District Court dismissed. As to the allegation of illegal conduct within the United States, the Court held that the government failed to adequately plead a vertical conspiracy between American trading houses and the Japanese manufacturers with whom they were affiliated. See United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 944 F. Supp. 55, 63 \(D. Mass. 1996\). As to the actions of the Japanese manufacturers, the Court dismissed the indictment on the ground that a criminal antitrust prosecution could not be based on wholly extraterritorial conduct. See Id. at 66.⁵

[6] The First Circuit reversed. In a case of first impression, the court held that the Sherman Act, previously given extraterritorial application only in civil cases, had equal breadth in a criminal case. See United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 109 F.3d 1, 4 \(1st Cir. 1997\), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1044, 118 S. Ct. 685, 139 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1998). Rejecting arguments derived from comity among nations, as well as those hinging on differences between civil and criminal law, the Court found that Hartford Fire "definitively established" that American antitrust laws apply to "wholly foreign conduct which has an intended and substantial effect in the United States." Id. at 9.

The case was reassigned to this Court. While concerns about comity and the exigencies of a criminal prosecution may not have been sufficient to bar the prosecution, they figured prominently in the actual trial. Fundamental issues about language and meaning - which inferences were reasonable and which were not in light of Japanese culture and traditions -- permeated the case. In short order, the Court was obliged to address: To what degree does the international [*7] nature of the investigation affect the discovery obligations of the United States Government? (Memorandum and Order, May 15, 1998) Which country's law governs the question of the liability of a successor corporation?⁶ (Order, May 29, 1998) Should the Court allow the video teleconferencing of a witness from Japan in the middle of the trial when that witness was beyond government process? (Memorandum and Order, July 28, 1998) What procedures should the Court follow when the translator for the defense and the translator for the government disagree on a critical issue (whether the word "Sando" meant agreement, which was illegal, or concurrence, which, arguably, was not)? Should the Court permit the introduction of evidence of price-fixing involving products to be sent to other countries when such activities were not illegal in those countries?

[8] In its original and renewed motions for acquittal, NPI claims that there was no evidence that a conspiracy to set prices existed, or that its predecessor, Jujo, knowingly joined it. It also claims that even if one were to credit the evidence that Jujo was a member of a price-fixing conspiracy, the evidence is clear that it was not a member of any such conspiracy by the time the limitations period began, that is after November 15, 1990.⁷

In addition, NPI would have the Court reexamine jurisdiction, now in the light of [*179] the facts adduced at trial. The First Circuit, it argues, in reinstating this indictment, set a standard for a foreign antitrust conspiracy - even one allegedly involved in price-fixing - that was different from the domestic one, requiring, in addition to the traditional factors, a showing of "conduct which has an intended [*9] and substantial effect in the United States." Nippon, 109 F.3d at 9. While the facts as alleged in the indictment may have passed muster, the facts as proved did not. Moreover, NPI argues even if the conspiracy's contacts with the United States were at some point sufficient to meet a "substantial effects" test, the Japanese manufacturers' complete loss of market share meant that no substantial effects continued into the limitation period.

⁵ A horizontal conspiracy is one that involves defendants in a given market, at the same level of distribution. See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 218, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 \(1940\). By contrast, a vertical conspiracy is an agreement between defendants at different levels of distribution. See Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1988\). Such conspiracies typically involve a manufacturer or supplier dictating the resale price of an item it sold to its distributor or to other customers.

⁶ The government sought to hold NPI responsible for the acts of its predecessor company, Jujo. I treated the issue as a choice of law question and concluded that Japanese law was not inconsistent with holding NPI responsible as a successor. See Memorandum and Order, dated May 29, 1998.

⁷ The indictment in this case was handed down on December 13, 1990, but NPI agrees with the government that the relevant date for the statutory period is November 15, 1990.

NPI's renewed motion for judgment of acquittal pursuant to Rule 29 is ALLOWED.

II. RULE 29 STANDARD

HN1 A motion under Fed. R. Crim. Pro. Rule 29 should be granted only where the evidence adduced at trial is so insufficient that no rational trier of fact can find proof beyond a reasonable doubt.⁸ To be sure, this is a very heavy burden. The Court must give the prosecution the benefit of all reasonable inferences drawn from the evidence, including circumstantial evidence, "and the trial court is required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the Government with respect to each offense." United States v. Mariani, 725 F.2d 862, 865 \(2nd Cir. 1984\). The Court may not weigh the evidence. [\[10\]](#) See United States v. Arache, 946 F.2d 129, 139 \(1st Cir. 1991\)("credibility of witnesses [can] not be assessed in determining the sufficiency of the government's evidence.").

HN2 But the Court can determine whether the inferences that the government asks the jury to draw are reasonable, or rather inappropriately "piling inference upon inference." United States v. DeLutis, 722 F.2d 902, 907 \(1st Cir. 1983\). Thus, a reviewing court must "take a hard look at the record and [reject] those evidentiary interpretations and illations that are unreasonable, insupportable, or overly speculative. This function is especially important in criminal cases, given the prosecution's obligation to prove every element of an offense beyond [\[11\]](#) a reasonable doubt." United States v. Spinney, 65 F.3d 231, 234 \(1st Cir. 1995\).

III. EVALUATING THE MERITS OF A PRICE-FIXING CLAIM

HN3 Section One of the Sherman Act reads: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the Several States, or with foreign nations, is illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN4 In a price-fixing case, the government must prove three elements: (1) that the conspiracy to fix prices described in the indictment was knowingly formed and existed at or about the time alleged in the indictment; (2) that the defendant, NPI, through its predecessor, Jujo, knowingly became a member of the conspiracy to fix prices;⁹ [\[12\]](#) and (3) that the conspiracy had an intended and substantial effect on commerce in the United States.¹⁰ Moreover, all of the relevant factual conditions -- existence of the conspiracy, Jujo/NPI's membership in it, and the conspiracy's having intended and substantial effects on commerce in the United [\[*180\]](#) States -- must have existed at the time the limitation period began, November 15, 1990.

The government has failed on all three elements to show that "a reasonable mind might fairly conclude guilt beyond a reasonable doubt." Curley v. United States, 81 U.S. App. D.C. 389, 160 F.2d 229, 232 \(D.C. Cir. 1947\) (cited in 2 C. Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 467 (1982 and Supp. 1999)). The problem with regard to the first two elements is the same: Even if the government was able to show that a conspiracy to fix prices existed at one time, and included Jujo/NPI, it was unable to demonstrate to any rational trier of fact beyond a reasonable doubt that the conspiracy continued through November 15, 1990. And, with regard to the third element, the government did not present sufficient evidence that the conspiracy, even if it continued to exist on November 15, 1990, still had a substantial effect on commerce in the United States at that time.

IV. THE FACTS ADDUCED [\[13\]](#) AT TRIAL

⁸ Rule 29\(a\) provides that "the court on motion of the defendant or of its own motion shall order the entry of judgment of acquittal. . . after the evidence on either side is closed if the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction." Fed. R. Crim. P. 29\(a\).

⁹ See United States v. All Star Industries, 962 F.2d 465, 474 \(1st Cir. 1992\) (in a per se violation case, the government has the burden to prove "that defendants knowingly and intentionally joined that agreement").

¹⁰ See Nippon, 109 F.3d at 9 (holding "that Section One of the Sherman Act applies to wholly foreign conduct which has an intended and substantial effect in the United States.").

A. Background

The centerpiece of the government's case was a meeting that was held on March 30, 1990, attended by representatives of ten paper companies that manufacture thermal fax paper imported into the United States. They included Kanzaki Paper Manufacturing Co. Ltd. ("KSK"), Mitsubishi Paper Mills ("MPM"), Oji Paper Company ("Oji"), Honshu Paper Company ("Honshu") and Jujo/NPI. The meeting had been called to deal with a threat by an American paper company to charge these Japanese manufacturers with "dumping" paper in the American market, or selling their products at a price below their fair value to the detriment of a domestic industry.¹¹

[14] The Japanese manufacturers made up perhaps thirty percent of the market for thermal fax paper; the American companies, seventy percent. Virtually all witnesses agreed that throughout 1990 there was a substantial downward pressure on prices because of an oversupply of thermal fax paper. Indeed, the entire product line was facing strong competition from "plain paper" fax machines.

The stakes were high: If the dumping charges were proved, the imports of the offending companies would be subject to a tariff. Given the size of their market share, the weakness of the product, and the oversupply of thermal fax paper -- any tariff increasing the cost of thermal fax paper would likely drive these companies out of the American market. They had to walk a fine line - raising prices to avoid a dumping charge, without going so far as to eliminate their market share entirely.¹²

[15] HN5

Manufacturers can lawfully meet to discuss common concerns. Indeed, they can discuss market conditions, and even prices. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). They can choose to concur in the pricing decisions of others so long as they independently arrive at these decisions. Id. What they [*181] may not lawfully do is to agree to fix the prices that they will charge in the American market. And that, the government alleged, is just what they did: The Japanese companies illegally agreed to raise the price at which they sold thermal fax paper to $ 20.00 per hundred square meters.

Implementation, however, was not easy. None of these manufacturing companies had sales divisions in the United States charged with importing the product. Each manufacturer would sell the paper outright to a Japanese trading company. The Japanese trading company, after marking up the product, would then sell it outright to a trading company on United States soil. The United States trading companies, after adding their own markups, would sell the product to converters, companies that would convert the thermal fax rolls into the [16] particular sizes the customers ordered.

However complicated the implementation, the government proved overt acts in furtherance of the agreement -- that some of the conspirators told their affiliated trading houses about the manufacturer's March meeting, directed them to raise the prices, and that some of the trading houses took steps to carry out the increase, at least initially.

¹¹ See 19 U.S.C. § 1673. Dumping is determined by evaluating the price charged in the United States with the price in the home market, suitably adjusting for "costs, charges, and expenses incurred as a result of exporting the goods from the home country to the United States." NSK Ltd. v. United States, 115 F.3d 965, 969 \(Fed.Cir. 1997\).

¹² There was the aroma of a setup in all of this by the American companies seeking not just to eliminate their Japanese rival's competitive edge, but to eliminate their Japanese rivals entirely. One of the attendees at the March 30, 1990, meeting, KSK, was the parent company of Kanzaki Speciality Papers (KSP), an American company. (KSP was considered to be an American corporation for anti-dumping purposes). Hirosuke Fukuda, a KSP vice president, testified that he used KSK to get information about Japanese prices; KSK in turn directed its American company, KSP, to join with Appleton and threaten to file an anti-dumping petition. That, in turn, would force the Japanese companies to raise their prices and push them out of the market.

To be sure, some trading companies strongly resisted any price increases, arguing with the manufacturer's representatives, perhaps even refusing to implement it,¹³ [17] or cutting special deals with customers to mitigate its effects. Indeed, by the end of the trial, the government was obliged to change its theory from price-fixing to price stabilization.¹⁴ But the complexities of implementation according to the government were not critical to their case. A price-fixing agreement, it noted, does not have to be successful to be illegal.

The defense agrees that a meeting was held, agrees that it was in response to an anti-dumping threat, but contends that the meeting was on the permissible side of the line - Japanese manufacturers meeting to discuss a common legal threat. Nothing nefarious was intended; nothing [18] nefarious was accomplished. Documents which it highlighted suggested that the government's characterization of the March 30 meeting was wrong. Some participants had either second thoughts immediately about price increases or no intention of ever going along with it. Some documents suggested that the March 30 meeting was [*182] "all talk." They all had to make noises about price increases to deflect the anti-dumping threat; what they planned to do, however, was another matter.

Indeed, according to the defense, one indication of the innocuous nature of the March 30 meeting was the patchwork quilt of prices that resulted. There were no across-the-board increases; most prices continued to decline. In any event, there was no evidence of Jujo's participation. In a time line presented to the jury, NPI attempted to show that after each critical price-fixing event alleged by the government, Jujo lowered its prices. Whatever public face Jujo may have presented to other Japanese competitors was belied by its actions.

Finally, by November 15, 1990, the government can show neither the continuation of the conspiracy nor its continued "substantial effect" on American commerce. Oversupply of thermal [19] fax paper, the pressures driving down prices, coupled with the strength of the American competitors create a paradox in the core of the government's case: If there had been a conspiracy to fix prices in March of 1990, and prices were raised or even stabilized, that conspirator would immediately lose customers, market share and in short order, any impact on the American market. If, recognizing that, a conspirator jumped ship at the first opportunity, abandoning all efforts to increase or stabilize prices, then it would have abandoned the conspiracy.

Indeed, the record reflects that both happened. Some companies, like Honshu, may well have tried to raise prices or at least hold the line. By November of 1990 - they lost substantial numbers of their American customers. Others, like Jujo and Oji, continued to lower prices - ignoring whatever representations they had made in March. By mid 1990 a price competition resumed - as to those still in the market - that was so vigorous that the American companies threatened a dumping charge again.

B. Co-Conspirator Hearsay and Cultural Inferences

¹³ For example, Mr. Ito of MIC (the American trading house) writes to MC (the Japanese trading house) in June of 1990: "Under the current environment, for whatever reasons this is not a market under which we can accept a price increase. I also don't think there would be a general price increase with the concern for dumping as Mitsubishi explains. If Mitsubishi needed to raise prices somehow (for public consumption) because of dumping, they can find a technical solution that would keep the actual prices with no change . . .".

"Either way, under the current circumstances I have to say that an actual price increase is impossible, and accordingly we must use an actual price <support> measure for at least the July production (if necessary I will consent to a separate public pricing). For August and beyond I would like to meet with Ichida Department Chief [from the manufacturer, Mitsubishi Paper Mills] when he visits the US. Please confirm." Another official of a trading company, Mr. McCall of DaiEi Papers U.S.A., distributor of Honshu products, peppered the manufacturers with letters and faxes urging them not to raise prices because of the market conditions.

¹⁴ NPI claimed that this change represented a material variance between the government's price-fixing indictment, and its price stabilization proof, and moved for a mistrial. While I denied the motion, on reflection I believe the ruling was in error. The indictment suggested a simple theory -- an agreement to increase prices and its implementation. Even the government's opening reflected this approach. The defense defended, in part, on the grounds that may prices in fact declined after the March 30 meeting. A price stabilization theory concedes that, but suggests that prices would have declined more had there been no agreement. In the light of that issue, one can envision a different defense -- significantly with expert witnesses, perhaps different cross examination. The issue, however, is mooted by the instant order.

The evidence on which the government chiefly relied consisted of documents, business [20] records and testimony by co-conspirators -- representatives of other Japanese manufacturers it contended conspired to fix prices, employees of the trading companies who distributed the product between Japan and the United States, and within the States, who allegedly implemented the price plan.

NPI vigorously challenged the testimony under F.R.E. Rule 801\(d\)\(2\)\(E\), claiming that there was inadequate independent evidence to show that these were statements made by co-conspirators "during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy." HN6 While the Court could weigh the statements themselves in making threshold determinations under the Rule, see Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 180-81, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144, 107 S. Ct. 2775 \(1987\), those statements alone are not sufficient, absent independent evidence. See United States v. Sepulveda, 15 F.3d 1161, 1181-82 \(1st Cir. 1993\); United States v. Petrozziello, 548 F.2d 20 \(1st Cir. 1977\). On a preliminary showing by the government, the statements were admitted de bene. See United States v. Ciampaglia, 628 F.2d 632, 638 \(1st Cir. 1980\).

The enterprise of making findings under [21] Petrozziello, as well as making findings under Rule 29, was complicated by the cultural/language divide in this case. There were warring translations of documents and testimony, and warring views of the inferences that could reasonably be drawn from certain acts and statements. NPI attempted to show that acts that may appear nefarious to American eyes, had no such patina in Japan.¹⁵ [22] Where the contested [*183] issues involved language, the translators were urged to resolve their differences; where they could not, the jury was given the evidence of both translations.¹⁶

Understanding full well the problem of bootstrapping - weighing too heavily the contested statements themselves, all the while trying to determine if they are admissible - as well as the problems raised by language, I nevertheless concluded that the statements had been appropriately admitted.¹⁷ But considering all of the evidence, co-conspirator hearsay and otherwise, the government's case faltered.

¹⁵ It is commonplace to talk about how fact finders are asked to draw reasonable inferences from the evidence based on their "shared perceptions" and their common understanding of the "habits, practices, and inclinations of human beings." United States v. Ortiz, 966 F.2d 707, 712 \(1st Cir. 1992\). Here American "shared perceptions" and the common understandings of the significance of particular acts may well be at odds with the meaning given those acts in Japan. To the extent that this was so, it was incumbent upon NPI to present evidence to that effect to the jury.

¹⁶ A government witness, Andy McCall of DaiEi, testified that in Japanese, "sentences often don't have a subject, but at the beginning [of the text] the subject is identified, and then in subsequent sentences . . . the subject would not be repeated." An interpreter would be obliged to infer who the subject is. Moreover, he noted that Japanese history is "longer than our history is. So there's some shared values that the Japanese have and are understood through history, culture and language." Sometimes those values are implied, "written between the lines," and can be difficult to understand for a non-native.

¹⁷ The defense insisted that the co-conspirators under the rule had to be either named in the indictment, or had to have qualified for that designation under the substantive law of conspiracy. Since the Japanese trading houses would not have qualified under Monsanto Company v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\), NPI argues, the statements and faxes from these companies must be excluded.

The law with respect to co-conspirator hearsay, however, is not coterminous with the substantive criminal law. See United States v. Carter 966 F. Supp. 336, 346 \(E.D. 1997\). Under the circumstances, I found that there was sufficient evidence to meet the Petrozziello standard: Many of the documents which tended to prove the existence of a conspiracy had an independent non hearsay basis - records of regularly conducted activity under F.R.E. Rule 803\(6\), or statements against interest under F.R.E. Rule 806\(b\)\(3\). These included the critical memoranda with respect to the March 30, 1990, meeting of the alleged co-conspirators, as well as documents suggesting price increases to at least certain Jujo customers.

In addition, there was testimony concerning non-assertive conduct, notably the presence of a Jujo representative at crucial meetings in February and March, who, according to Mr. Hinoki, made no objections to what was being said. In some instances, the contested co-conspirator statement was not offered for its truth at all. In order to rebut NPI's claim that the prices charged in the United States were the product of independent negotiating between customers and trading houses, and trading houses and the manufacturers, rather than the manufacturers' orders, the government sought to introduce the fact that efforts to increase

[23] [*184] C. Failure to Present Sufficient Evidence of a Conspiracy Continuing Through November 15, 1990, of Which Jujo/NPI Was a Member

1. Evidence of a March 1990 Conspiracy to Fix Prices

The government's most important evidence consists of a single document, a "Report on Thermal Paper Export Manufacturer's Meeting." The report was prepared by Mr. Funabashi of Honshu, a thermal fax paper manufacturer and one of the attendees of the March 30, 1990 meeting. Written the next morning, it described who attended: Honshu, KSK, MPM, Oji, and Jujo along with five other companies. According to the government's translation, the document states that "agreement and approval was obtained from each company to revise prices as given below." The new price for the North American market was to be $ 20.00/100m², to be implemented in May 1990. This was the government's smoking gun.

The government buttressed the document through the testimony of other "downstream" witnesses -- the employees of Japanese and American trading companies "ordered" to implement a price increase, the telexes and faxes between those trading companies, and other message sent between manufacturers and the trading companies.

[24] NPI responds that the government's evidence is insufficient for several reasons. First, Mr. Funabashi's report is squarely contradicted by the only testimony offered at trial of someone present at that meeting. Mr. Hinoki, also of Honshu, who was the government's star witness,¹⁸ denied that any of the manufacturers at that meeting agreed either to increase or to stabilize prices, and indeed, did not recall what if anything was said about price increases in the United States.¹⁹

[25] Second, there is no evidence, according to NPI, that the meeting consisted of anything other than mid-to-lower level employees who discussed, without the authority to bind their respective companies, the threat of an anti-dumping action by competitors in the U.S. Indeed, Mr. Hinoki testified not only that there was no agreement, but that he himself lacked ultimate price authority to bind Honshu. NPI argues that there is no reason to think any of the other attendees had any more authority than he.

prices in some instances followed a communication with the manufacturer or Japanese trading house alerting the American trading companies to the March 30 agreement. Moreover, it was significant that these statements - offered de bene or for a non hearsay statement - corroborated each other as I noted: "Where there are 15 statements from independent co-conspirators[,] one argument is that the facial consistency of all the co-conspirators' statements is independent evidence." See United States v. Garner, 837 F.2d 1404, 1415 \(7th Cir. 1987\) ("The remarkable consistency with which payments were made [to inspectors] and the fact that the inspectors raised the standard fee almost simultaneously from $ 10 to $ 20 suggests that the inspectors were communicating with each other and encouraging each other to raise the fee.") In this regard, I am not specifically weighing the content of the statements -- only that they are consistent with each other.

Where the standard for proving the existence of a conspiracy and the defendant's participation in it is by a preponderance of the evidence, I concluded that the evidence was sufficient. Where the standard is more rigorous, and where the evidence concerns the continuation of that conspiracy into the fall of 1990, I have come to a different conclusion.

¹⁸ Hinoki's testimony was so important to the government that it sought to take his testimony via video teleconferencing. The testimony was taken each evening at 6:00 p.m. Boston time, and 7:00 a.m. Tokyo time. See Memorandum and Order, July 28, 1998.

¹⁹ The government improperly sought to impeach Mr. Hinoki, its own witness, by suggesting that he had earlier given the AUSAs and their paralegals different stories, more favorable to the government. The examination was entirely impermissible. The government refused to allow the defense to use its "rough notes" of its meeting with Mr. Hinoki to cross-examine, but it had no problem using them. The AUSA repeatedly asked Mr. Hinoki questions beginning with, "Didn't you tell me [such and such] when I met with you . . ." See United States v. Shoupe, 548 F.2d 636, 643 \(6th Cir. 1977\)(holding that "recitation by the prosecutor of the entire substance of a witness's disavowed, unsworn prior statements, which, if credited by the jury, would be sufficient to sustain a conviction, abridged defendants' right to a fair trial in violation of the Due Process Clause of the 5th Amendment."). See also United States v. Zackson, 12 F.3d 1178, 1185 \(2d Cir. 1993\), cert. denied 512 U.S. 1224 (1994)(excluding testimony of a government witness where the government's proffer indicated that the witness would offer no probative testimony and was using the witness only as a conduit to get potentially prejudicial hearsay before the the jury.)

Third, NPI contests the translation of the word "Sando" in Mr. Funabashi's report of the March 30, 1990, meeting. According to the government, "Sando" means "agreement"; according to NPI, it means "concurrence." While NPI acknowledges that "agreeing" to revise prices at a certain level would be illegal, it argues that merely concurring with a suggested price [*185] is not. Indeed, it argues that the evidence shows only that someone proposed that a $ 20.00/100m² price would be a good countermeasure to the threatened dumping charge; it claims that there is no evidence that any manufacturer actually agreed not to charge below that figure.²⁰ Indeed, many of the documents suggest that the manufacturers [26] wanted to investigate the matter further before making a decision, consider the market trends, and gauge what other manufacturers were doing. Notwithstanding the tenor of Funabashi's account of the March 30, 1990, meeting, other documents suggested that the participating companies had not, in fact, made up their minds as to the pricing strategy.²¹

[27] Fourth, NPI claims that the record suggests that the companies planned to answer the anti-dumping threat with a response individualized to each customer, rather than with the blanket, across-the-board price increase as alleged in the indictment. In a memorandum that Mr. Hinoki wrote to accompany his transmittal of Mr. Funabashi's report to Honshu's Seattle office, Mr. Hinoki clearly indicated that Honshu itself intended to respond to the dumping threat on a customer-by-customer basis: "Our company is thinking as its response, 'to cooperate with the industry without reducing the amount of orders received,' and [we] would like to plan our responses according to each customer." From this NPI infers that Honshu itself never intended to impose an across-the-board price increase or price stabilization strategy. And if Honshu did not intend either sort of price strategy, there is no reason to think that any others at the meeting did either.²² Indeed, NPI cross-examined virtually each and every trading house employee by showing that for the most part, prices continued to decline during the relevant period, culminating as I describe, infra, in a resumption of competition by mid [28] 1990.

Finally, when the government's theory moved from price-fixing to price stabilization, the evidence was even more tenuous. Given the severe downward pressure on prices, if they stabilized at all during the period immediately following the March 30 meeting -- and as I describe there is reasonable doubt that they did for very long -- it was as likely or more likely to have been the result of the serious threat of Appleton's anti-dumping petition as any conspiracy to fix prices. A reasonable jury could not accept the latter version beyond a reasonable doubt.

The government responds first by trying to account for Mr. Hinoki's profound weakness as a witness. [29] It points out that Mr. Hinoki had reason in 1998 to deny that an agreement was made because his company then faced potential civil antitrust exposure. It argues that since I may not assess the credibility of the witness, see United States v. Arache, 946 F.2d 129, 139 [*186] (1st Cir. 1991), and I am obliged to take the evidence in the light most favorable to the government, see United States v. Mariani, 725 F.2d 862, 865 (2d Cir. 1984), I must accept the government's resolution of the conflict between Mr. Funabashi's report and Mr. Hinoki's testimony. The issue here is not just rejecting Mr. Hinoki's testimony on key points; the government would have me accept an alternative picture, which Mr. Hinoki did not paint. Nevertheless, it is a moot point. There is no question that, quite apart from Mr Hinoki's words, his actions in 1990 on behalf of Honshu, and the actions of others, along with other ²¹ In Mr. Funabashi's report of the March 30 meeting, the government translated one phrase as expressing Honshu's intent to "cooperate" with the industry. The defense offered an alternative - "to keep up with" or "to go along with." The witness conceded that the Japanese translation of that particular word was very ambiguous.

²⁰ NPI tries to advance another legal argument in this context as well, namely that meeting to discuss how to respond to an anti-dumping suit is not illegal. However, NPI misreads the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which only exempts joint efforts to influence political or judicial decision makers from anti-trust laws. See McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1558-59 (11th Cir. 1992). There is no evidence that the meeting on March 30, 1990, was aimed at formulating a litigation strategy or starting a political action campaign. The Funabashi report, according to the inferences the government would have a jury draw, deals only with a price-fixing strategy, and that is not allowed under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

²² On cross-examination of the trading house representatives, NPI showed that the prices actually tended to fall when they were supposed to be rising or at least stabilizing. I deal with this primarily in the context of the general abandonment of the conspiracy, infra, but it could also serve as evidence of competition in what was a buyers' market.

evidence, is consistent with the inference that a price-fixing conspiracy was formed at the March 30 meeting. The corroborating evidence the government offers includes the following:

First, there is evidence of a meeting that predated and set the stage for the March [30] 30 meeting. Mr. Tano of KSK wrote a report memorializing a "Meeting of Four Thermal Paper Companies" that occurred on February 1, 1990 at Jujo's "head office." The purpose of this meeting was reportedly "first, to put a stop [to price decreased], then announce price increases. If possible [the increases should be] 10% up from April production lot." During this meeting, arrangements were made for a follow-up meeting five days later, also to be held at Jujo's office, the purpose of which was to "disclose price levels for each market, [to] try to put a stop to price decreases [and to] prepare the foundation for launching price increases later on." The companies present at the February 1 meeting, Jujo, KSK, MPM, and Oji, all attended the March 30 meeting as well.

Mr. Tano also memorialized the follow-up meeting on February 6, 1990, at which ten thermal fax paper companies, including the four from the meeting on February 1, were in attendance. Again, the discussion indicated that the manufacturers "would like to establish the lowest price and then increase prices 10% from around April." The government plausibly argues that these two meetings "laid the groundwork" for obtaining [31] an "agreement and approval" from each company "to revise prices."

The government also introduced evidence from after the March 30 meeting consistent with the inference that a conspiracy to fix prices was formed at that time. On the very same day as the meeting, Mr. Hinoki and Mr. Funabashi went to the offices of Mitsui-Tokyo, one of the Japanese trading houses that handled thermal fax paper sales for both Honshu and Jujo, and met with Mr. Sato of Mitsui to inform him about the agreement. Mr. Sato memorialized what they told him in a faxed report to Mitsui's offices in the United States. His report stated:

(1) [We] heard that a Japan thermal paper mills export maker meeting was held today, with Jujo as the group leader, and prices were discussed. (2) The result was to increase prices by 10 PCT from the May/90 production lot. That is, to set up a new price level as follows . . . Price: USD 20. 00 PER 100 M2 import duty paid and delivered [emphasis in the original].

Further, Mr. Hinoki twice transmitted, without qualification or correction, Mr. Funabashi's report describing what transpired at the March 30 meeting. First, on March 31, 1990, Mr. Hinoki [32] and Mr. Funabashi gave a copy of the report to Mr. Hinoki's supervisor at Honshu, Mr. Onitsuka. Then, on April 2, 1990, Mr. Hinoki faxed a copy of the report to Mr. Takeyama in Honshu's Seattle office. Mr. Hinoki even attached a report of his own making (referred to above) which said that "[a] thermal paper export manufacturer conference was held, and it was decided to implement price increases from May." These acts of forwarding Mr. Funabashi's report to his boss and his colleague in the United States, along with his own attached report in the second instance, surely permit the inference that Mr. Hinoki thought in 1990 [*187] that an agreement to fix prices had been struck.²³

[33] What was happening at Honshu immediately following the meeting was mirrored by what was happening at MPM. Mr. Oba of Mitsubishi Corporation ("MC"), the Japanese trading house responsible for sales of thermal fax paper manufactured by MPM, testified that he was summoned by Mr. Ishigaki of MPM to come to MPM's office so that Mr. Ishigaki could explain to Mr. Oba the details of a recent manufacturers' meeting. Mr. Ishigaki too was a named attendee at the February 1 meeting; MPM was also represented at the meetings on February 6 and March 30. Mr. Ishigaki related to Mr. Oba that the manufacturers had agreed at their recent meeting to increase prices for the sale of thermal fax paper to the United States and other markets. According to Mr. Oba, Mr. Ishigaki said that the manufacturers "fixed the price by territory." Mr. Ishigaki then instructed Mr. Oba to have MC implement the new price scheme starting from April or May of 1990.

²³ The government also cites a report generated on April 5, 1990, by Mr. Watanabe of "Mr. Fax," one of Honshu's customers. The report said that he was "suddenly" visited by three people, one of whom was Mr. Motoyama, the manager responsible for Oji's sales of thermal fax paper to the United States market. According to Mr. Watanabe, Mr. Motoyama stated that the "mills have decided [on a] new export price at [the] meetings of last week" and that "Oji has announced [a] new price by 10% increase." This report is particularly noteworthy given that Mr. Motoyama was a named attendee at the meeting on February 1, and that his firm, Oji, was represented at both the February 6 and March 30 meetings.

With regard to the claim that the representatives at the March 30 meeting did not have the authority to bind their respective corporations, the government responds that Mr. Hinoki's actions belie that claim as well. When Messrs. Hinoki and Funabashi visited Mr. [34] Sato at Mitsui (Honshu's and Jujo's Japanese trading house), they told him not just that a price increase had been proposed, but that a decision had been reached, the result being "to increase prices by 10 PCT" [emphasis in the original]. Similarly, Mr. Funabashi's March 31 report stated not that Honshu and the other manufacturers were waiting on authorization from higher-ups before committing to the price-fixing agreement, but rather that "agreement and approval was obtained from each company." And shortly thereafter, Mr. Ishigaki of MPM summoned Mr. Oba of his Japanese trading house to confirm the manufacturer's agreement with him as well. As the government argues, "this picture of multiple manufacturer's representatives rushing . . . to advise trading houses and others of the newly-forged agreement eviscerates NPI's position that the representatives needed time after the March 30, 1990 meeting to obtain authority to bind their respective companies to the deal." Furthermore, looking at the March 30 meeting in context with the two meetings in February, it is a reasonable inference that the manufacturers would have sent representatives to the March 30 meeting who had authority [35] to commit their respective companies.

With regard to the claim that Honshu, and presumably others, negotiated their prices according to each customer, rather than setting them across-the-board, the evidence is consistent with the government's price stabilization theory: Honshu was simply planning to be flexible in deciding how to try to raise or stabilize its prices. In other words, Honshu would negotiate distinct contracts with each different customer while simultaneously working on raising its average price 10% or to some other particular level.

Finally, with regard to the claim that prices did not in fact rise, the government notes that it need not prove that a price-fixing conspiracy was successfully implemented, only that the agreement was made and that some substantial steps were taken to try to implement it. In any [*188] event, as I have noted, by the end of the trial, the government changed its theory to address this issue. No longer was it claiming a conspiracy to raise prices; this case involved, they now suggested, a conspiracy to stabilize prices, to fix their fall, an equally impermissible goal.

Given the strictures of the Rule 29 standard, I conclude that the government [36] has established the existence of a conspiracy, at least as of March 30, 1990.

2. Evidence that Jujo Was a Member of a Price-Fixing Conspiracy

The evidence that Jujo joined the conspiracy is somewhat weaker, but still not so weak that a jury could not reasonably find beyond a reasonable doubt that NPI was guilty of having joined the conspiracy, at least at its inception.

The government starts its case referring to two observations in the report of Mr. Funabashi. First, he reports that Jujo was not only at the meeting of ten manufacturers on March 30, 1990, but at the preliminary meeting, held an hour before the main meeting, which Mr. Funabashi described as a meeting of "the five major companies." It would be odd for Jujo to be a "major company" and yet to play a passive or spectator's role. Second, Mr. Funabashi reports that all of the companies in attendance at the main meeting agreed to and approved the collective price revision scheme.²⁴

[37] In addition, the government points out that Jujo was a host for the earlier February meetings, raising the inference that it had a leading role in the formation of the conspiracy. In addition, the government points to a memorandum from Mr. Sato of Mitsui's to Mitsui's offices in the United States, where Jujo's thermal fax paper was distributed, which describes Jujo, based on what Messrs. Hinoki and Funabashi told him, as "the group leader" of the March 30, 1990 meeting.

In a similar vein, the government cites a correspondence faxed by Mr. Ito of Mitsubishi International Corporation, MPM's American trading house in New York, to MC in Tokyo on April 9, 1990. In this document, Mr. Ito relates that he spoke with a representative of Mitsui-New York, the U.S. trading house responsible for sales of thermal fax paper for both Jujo and Honshu. Specifically, he says that "it seems that Jujo talked to [Mitsui-New York] regarding $ 20.00 -- Jujo's deadline is the 15th, therefore no individual PRICE has been presented yet." This suggests according to the government, that Mr. Ito learned from the conversation with the representative from Mitsui-New York that Jujo had already advised Mitsui-New [38] York, that a new $ 20.00 price was in the works, even if not yet finalized.

²⁴ As noted above, NPI contests the translation of "Sando" as "agreement." For purposes of this motion, I am obliged to accept the government's version.

The information that Mr. Ito relayed dovetails with what Mr. Sato of Mitsui-Japan said he would give to Mitsui. In his memorandum to Mitsui-New York, Mr. Sato wrote that "[we] will obtain [information] on the detailed situation separately from JUJO next week and let you know." This memorandum was written ten days before Mr. Ito confirmed that Mitsui-New York had received some preliminary confirmation from Jujo about the agreed-upon $ 20.00 price level. Thus the government infers that Jujo "promptly started in the first week of April of 1990 to notify its trading houses of the agreed-upon price for purposes of implementing the agreement."

Finally, the government cites to a report sent by a representative of Japan Pulp and Paper's ("JPP") Tokyo office to JPP-New York detailing a pricing instruction recently given to JPP-Tokyo over the telephone by a person that seems clearly to be a Jujo representative, someone named Saito (JPP, along with Mitsui, distributed Jujo goods). The inference that Saito is a Jujo representative is grounded in the fact that the rest of the information conveyed by [*189] Saito relates [39] to recent trends in Jujo's production, Jujo's research regarding intellectual property rights, and Jujo's starting to consult with attorneys. The report by the representative at JPP-Tokyo says that, as Saito "explained over the phone the other day, [we] are offering a $ 20.00/100m² price with free delivered duty paid from May." This too indicates that Jujo had taken steps to effectuate the manufacturers' March 30, 1990 agreement.

NPI responds that this data establishes nothing more than guilt by association. The fact that Jujo attended the meetings in February and March does not imply that it joined in the conspiracy. Mr. Funabashi's report characterizes what happened -- that "agreement and approval was obtained from each company to revise prices" -- but it does not indicate that anyone from Jujo did anything in particularly to clearly or affirmatively agree to join the conspiracy. More specifically, NPI argues that the government was unable, throughout the trial, to provide any evidence regarding who from Jujo attended the meetings and whether that person had any binding authority with regard to Jujo's pricing decisions.

With regard to the argument that Jujo must have been a major [40] player because Mr. Sato described it as the "group leader," NPI responds that being a "group leader" means nothing more than that Jujo was the chair or moderator of that meeting, in a system in which the chair rotated from company to company.²⁵ The document does not indicate that Jujo itself made any particular statements. Mr. Sato does indicate that he "will obtain [information] on the detailed situation separately from Jujo actually did or said anything that committed it to the conspiracy as of that date.

NPI also argues that none of the other documents mention any specific acts taken by Jujo which show that it was more than present when price-fixing was discussed. And, as it points out, "HNT" mere presence at the scene of a crime is insufficient to prove membership in a conspiracy," and even if "it is a fair inference that the defendant [41] knew what was going on, . . . that is not enough to establish intent to conspire." United States v. Ocampo, 964 F.2d 80, 82 (1st Cir. 1992).

With regard to the fact that no company at the March 30 meeting spoke up and objected to KSK's $ 20.00/100m² proposal, NPI argues that silence need not imply assent. Indeed, it offers another explanation for the silence, namely that any company that spoke out against KSK's proposal ran the risk of KSK passing that on to the American company that was threatening to bring the anti-dumping lawsuit.

²⁵ Initially, the government's translator suggested "group leader," while NPI's translator suggested "moderator." The government's translator then adopted the latter translation.

62 F. Supp. 2d 173, *189 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11333, 41

Finally, NPI argues that there is no evidence that its prices actually rose at all. While the government argues that there is no requirement of showing that the price-fixing agreement was ever implemented, HN8 plainly the failure of implementation suggests that there was no such agreement. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 592, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). That evidence, while not dispositive during the immediate post-March 30 period, is compelling by the fall of 1990.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the United States, however, it is clear that a 42 reasonable jury could find beyond a reasonable doubt that Jujo joined the conspiracy at or about March of 1990. Whether Jujo's participation continued into the limitations period and indeed, whether the conspiracy itself lasted, is another question.

3. Evidence that the Conspiracy Had Dissolved Before the Limitations Period

While the law on withdrawal from a conspiracy is fairly stringent, there is ample [\[*190\]](#) evidence to meet the Rule 29 standard that the conspiracy had fallen apart well before November 15, 1990, and that, in any event, Jujo was no longer a member as of that date.

HN9 The standard for withdrawal from a conspiracy requires more than "mere cessation of activity in furtherance of the conspiracy." United States v. Juodakis, 834 F.2d 1099, 1102 (1st Cir. 1987). See also United States v. Munoz, 36 F.3d 1229, 1234 (1st Cir. 1994). "In order to withdraw, a conspirator must act affirmatively either to defeat or disavow the purposes of the conspiracy." Juodakis, 834 F.2d at 1102. "Typically, there must be evidence either of a full confession to authorities or a communication by the accused to his co-conspirators that he 43 has abandoned the enterprise and its goals." Id.

But it would be a mistake to read the communication option too narrowly, as if Jujo could successfully withdraw from the conspiracy if, and only if, it made an announcement to all the other manufacturers that it was withdrawing from the conspiracy. In United States v. Gypsum, Co., 438 U.S. 422, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978), for example, the Supreme Court found that the trial judge erroneously instructed the jury that the only way to withdraw from a price-fixing conspiracy was for the defendant to "affirmatively notify each other member of the conspiracy he will no longer participate in the undertaking so they understand they can no longer expect his participation or acquiescence." 438 U.S. at 463-64. Rather, the Court held that HN10 affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment." Id. at 464-65. The clear implication was that "resumption of competitive behavior, such as intensified price cutting or price 44 wars," id. at 464, would be sufficient to communicate withdrawal or general abandonment of a price-fixing conspiracy. See United States v. Swiss Valley Farms Company, Inc., 912 F. Supp. 401, 402 (C.D. Ill. 1995) (citing Gypsum for the proposition "that evidence showing a resumption of competitive bidding by Defendants is also admissible as affirmative action to defeat or disavow the purpose of the bid rigging conspiracy."). Indeed, as in the instant case, the defendants in Gypsum wanted to argue that vigorous competition had returned before the applicable five year statute of limitations period had started to run. 438 U.S. at 465 n.38.

The evidence that Jujo did not follow through as a member of the conspiracy, and surely had withdrawn by November 15, 1990, starts with another document written by Mr. Sato of Mitsui on May 7, 1990. He writes:

Today I obtained the following information from Mr. Takemoto of Jujo:

- 1) They currently are reviewing internally what the future pricing should be in response to the anti-dumping problem, and hope to prepare Jujo's policy and determine the direction for consultation with [Mitsui] 45 within one or two days.
- 2) [He says] basically, the direction is for Jujo to respond with independent pricing, separately from the other makers including Oji, Taio, Mitsubishi and Honshu, as otherwise (because it is conceivable that offering similar price increases [as theirs] would only serve to deepen the problem).

Clearly, Jujo has communicated here to one of its trading houses, one that dealt also with another member of the alleged conspiracy, Honshu, that it was going to make its own independent judgments of how to handle the threat of an anti-dumping suit, and that it was not, or was no longer going to coordinate any prices with other members of the conspiracy. Indeed, another document from Mitsui, recording conversations with two Jujo employees, shows that Jujo was consulting independently [*191] with counsel in Washington D.C. to determine how to respond with pricing to the anti-dumping threat.

Moreover, from the outset following the March 30 meeting, Jujo's response to the anti-dumping threat was clearly to engage in individualized, customer-by-customer price negotiations. Individualized, customer-by-customer price negotiations pave the way for a competitive market. [46] Though, as indicated above, they are compatible with a flexible approach to price-fixing, a pattern of price stabilization, there is a point at which the pattern of pricing proves something totally different. If prices in fact consistently go down, as they did by May, June, and thereafter, individualized negotiations become the mechanism by which real competition takes place. In other words, they are the way in which former conspirators break ranks and start to engage in a price war to save their customer base. And a price war began.

Witness after witness testified that price data from Jujo and their competitors shows that while some prices went up initially to the $ 18/100m² range, some did not change, and some fell. Indeed, by mid 1990, and later, a reasonable fact finder looking only at prices, would be obliged to conclude that the conspiracy had evaporated. Jujo's prices continued to fall. KSK's and Oji's prices dropped from $ 19.00 in March 1990 to $ 15.01 in December 1990, while Mitsubishi's prices to one customer dropped from $ 18.30 in August, to $ 16.68 in December. One government witness admitted that there was a "price war" among all the thermal paper manufacturers beginning [47] July 20, 1990, and lasting through the fall. Another characterized the 1990 market as "wickedly competitive," prices were going "down, down, down." Indeed, by mid 1990, prices were so low that Appleton was still threatening the manufacturers -- including Jujo -- with an anti-dumping petition.²⁶ Oji, in particular, was regularly undercutting its competitors. Competitors knew what each other was charging, had customers in common from whom they obtained price information and were knowingly undercutting each other's prices.

By the fall of 1990, raising prices made no economic sense whatsoever, if it ever did, whatever the justification. Any movement towards raising prices, had precisely [48] the same devastating effect on these manufacturers that an anti-dumping tariff would have had. The American manufacturers had captured so much of the business that the Japanese manufacturers were irrelevant. (See Section D infra on "substantial effects.")

To be sure, the government cites certain specific prices that Jujo charged certain specific customers that did not drop during 1990. But as NPI points out, this is explained by contractual price commitments to those customers. The prices between customers varied and tended to drop over the course of the year in a way that one would not expect in a non-competitive market. And the general pattern of falling prices is particularly impressive given that all the manufacturers were sensitive to the continued threat of an anti-dumping suit, and thus necessarily were wary about lowering their prices.

Finally, while there is a plethora of telexes and memoranda concerning a March 30 meeting ostensibly to "fix prices," there is no credible evidence of subsequent meetings in the fall of 1990 that had the same purpose or the same effect (even for a short time).²⁷

²⁶ KSK (the Japanese parent to KSP, the American company working with Appleton Paper) reported that based on the data it was analyzing, Jujo and the others were "dumping" paper in the American market in June of 1990 -- when Appleton wrote to the Ministry of International Trade and Industry of Japan, as well as in August of 1990.

²⁷ A telex sent from DaiEi Papers, New Jersey, to DaiEi, San Francisco, simply reports a thermal paper manufacturer's meeting at which MPM reported Appleton's threat to file an anti-dumping petition Oji and Daio. The tone of this report and its content is wholly different from the March 30 Funabashi memorandum. Likewise, a fax between Mitsui trading houses, confirms that what was happening was not the lock-step participation in a price-fixing conspiracy, but rather a company struggling to discount prices while avoiding dumping charges. The only evidence the government has for the fall of 1990 is that there was continued talk among manufacturers about a threatened anti-dumping petition, which is hardly illegal. Indeed, to the extent that those threats hung in the air, they suggested that there were no contrived price increase or price stabilization. For the threats to be credible, prices had to be quite low.

[49] [*192] Taking into account all of the evidence presented at trial, even when viewing it in the light most favorable to the government, I conclude that it is clear that whatever agreement had existed in March, had dissolved by mid 1990. Jujo was striking out on its own by May 1990; any conspiracy to fix prices generally collapsed by the summer or early fall of the year. NPI has carried its burden of showing that it withdrew from the conspiracy to fix prices, and that the conspiracy was generally abandoned, before the limitations period. Accordingly, I hold that the government failed to establish the first two elements of Count 1 within the relevant limitations period.

D. Failure to Present Sufficient Evidence that Any Continuing Conspiracy Had Substantial Effects

As an alternative ground for acquittal, even assuming that the conspiracy was ongoing, and that Jujo was still a member of the conspiracy, I hold that the government failed to carry its burden of showing that the conspiracy had substantial effects in the United States after November 15, 1990.

In § 1 of the Sherman Act, the very same phrase conveys both a jurisdictional requirement and a merits requirement. HN11 The phrase [50] "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states", 15 U.S.C. § 1, is "both an element of the offense and a vital prerequisite for federal court jurisdiction." Montensen v. First Federal Savings and Loan Assoc. 549 F.2d 884, 890-91 \(3d Cir. 1977\).

Several questions follow: Is the standard for proving jurisdiction the same as the standard for proving effects on the merits? To what degree is the standard affected by the fact that a price-fixing conspiracy is involved which in a domestic setting is a per se restraint on trade.

Logic suggests that HN12 the basic standard is the same for proving either jurisdiction and the third element of the offense on the merits. The language of § 1 is the same; the primary concerns of one mirror the concerns of the other -- whether the federal law can be applied to NPI's actions. While there may be additional concerns (such as concerns about international comity) that may be appropriate for the judge to consider in determining jurisdiction, the core question is, or should be, the same.

Moreover, this is particularly so where the factual determination necessary for one, overlaps with the factual determination [51] necessary for the other. See id. at 893 (quoting McBeath v. Inter-American Citizens for Decency Committee, 374 F.2d 359 (5th Cir.) cert. denied, 389 U.S. 896, 19 L. Ed. 2d 214, 88 S. Ct. 216 (1967))("Where the factual and jurisdictional issues are completely intermeshed the jurisdictional issues should be referred to the merits, for it is impossible to decide the one without the other.")

The requirement that the First Circuit reaffirmed in its decision in Nippon, that the government prove "intended" as well as "substantial effects" on interstate commerce, reflects the special concerns attendant to prosecuting a wholly foreign conspiracy. As Judge Learned Hand wrote in his seminal opinion in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 443 \(2d Cir. 1945\), "we should not impute to Congress an intent to punish all whom its courts can catch, for conduct which has no consequences within the United States." Hartford Fire since stated the standard for civil suits of foreign defendants, saying that HN13 it is well established [*193] by now that the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and [52] did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." 509 U.S. at 796. The First Circuit's opinion in Nippon extended that same standard to criminal defendants. 109 F.3d at 9.

HN14 In a domestic price-fixing case, the third prong of § 1 imposes a minimal standard. Proof of the conspiracy and an overt act are per se proof of a substantial impact on the market. The question is whether the standard is any different when the government alleges that a foreign entity has engaged in price-fixing, when the concerns about price-fixing meet the concerns about extraterritorial prosecutions.

As I noted during the trial, HN15 there are two general templates for evaluating jurisdictional issues involving restraints on trade: a per se test and a "rule of reason" test.

HN16 [+] The per se model is the traditional domestic price-fixing conspiracy in which courts have not required an appraisal of the actual magnitude of the impact in a domestic setting. Price-fixing is the paradigm of an act in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. As Areeda says, "price-fixing cartels are condemned per se because the conduct is tempting to businessmen but very dangerous to society. The conceivable [53] benefits are few in principle, small in magnitude, speculative in occurrence, and always premised on the existence of price-fixing power which is likely to be exercised adversely to the public." VII Phillip Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1509, at 412 (1997). In line with this, the Supreme Court held that "whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224 n.59, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940).

HN17 [+] The "rule of reason" approach is typically applied to restraints of trade not involving price-fixing or claims of vertical conspiracies. In those cases, proof that a given set of acts took place did not necessarily mean that they had a "substantial effect" on the market. The specific impact had to be proved under a "rule of reason" analysis which considers multiple factors.

The activities of these foreign manufacturers could fit into the first or the second category, depending upon the [54] circumstances. In the abstract, there may well be a foreign analog of a domestic price-fixing conspiracy, where the acts alleged were of such a nature that there was no doubt about the impact, where "the anticompetitive nature and effect" of the practice is "so apparent and so serious that the courts will not pause to assess them in the light of the rule of reason." United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238, 87 S. Ct. 1847 (1967). Alternatively, there may well be the foreign analog of a vertical conspiracy, where the anti-competitive nature of the activity depends upon a number of factors, where the government's proof is less clear, where there is an issue about the relationship between the Japanese acts and the American effect.²⁸

[55] NPI, expressly relying on Metro Industries v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839 (9th Cir. 1996), argues that an international price-fixing, unlike a domestic price-fixing, is subject to different rules in all cases -- i.e. a rule of reason test. The court in Metro Industries relied on the following quotation from Areeda to justify invoking the "rule of reason" analysis:

[*194] The conventional assumptions that courts make in appraising restraints in domestic markets are not necessarily applicable in foreign markets. A foreign joint venture among competitors, for example, might be more "reasonable" than a comparable domestic transaction in several respects: the actual or potential harms touching American commerce may be more remote; the parties' necessities may be greater in view of foreign market circumstances; and the alternatives may be fewer, more burdensome, or less helpful. The fact that foreign conduct would be a per se offense -- one that is condemned without proof of particular effects and with little regard for possible justifications in the particular case -- when entirely domestic does not call for a fundamentally different analysis. Domestic antitrust policy [56] uses per se rules for conduct that, in most of its manifestations, is potentially very dangerous with little or no redeeming virtue. That rationale would be inapplicable to foreign restraints that, in many instances, either pose very little danger to American commerce or have more persuasive justifications than are likely in similar restraints at home. For example, price-fixing in a foreign country might have some but very little impact on United States commerce.

Metro Industries, 82 F.3d at 845 (quoting 1 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 237 (1978)). Based on this quite reasonable awareness of the differences between domestic and foreign economic activity, the court in Metro Industries concluded that whenever "a Sherman Act claim is based on conduct outside the United States, we apply rule of reason analysis to determine whether there is a Sherman Act violation." Id.

²⁸ I warned the government that "it appears that the government is prepared to take its chances . . . that its proof would be . . . so clear that it necessarily produces substantial effects or it will be domestic enough that the jurisdiction issue will be beside the point. If the government wants to take its chances that's the nature of the proof, then I will reserve this issue until trial, until at the conclusion . . . on a directed verdict. . . ."

NPI, in turn, recommends the same reasoning to me. It argues that the government failed to show that there were substantial effects because it "failed to establish any other evidence as to how much, if any, of that market was affected by the alleged conspiracy. [57] "

The problem with NPI's position is that the Metro Industries court was wrong to apply the rule of reason analysis to a price-fixing case just because the defendant is foreign. No such test was implied by Hartford Fire. Indeed, Areeda notes:

Metro Industries's use of the rule of reason treatment for all restraints abroad [] is squarely in conflict with the First Circuit's Nippon decision that a criminal indictment may issue for naked price-fixing occurring abroad but having the United States as its intended target. As a general matter, rule of reason offenses are not the product of criminal prosecutions. At least on the facts of the Nippon case, we are inclined to favor the First Circuit's conclusion over that of the Ninth Circuit.

IA Phillip Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 273b, at 379 (1997).

More substantively, the reason the Metro Industries court was wrong is that it failed to appreciate both the context for the lengthy quotation taken from Areeda, and the underlying justification for use of a per se test in the case of price-fixing. The Areeda quotation concluded with the thought that "price-fixing in a foreign country [58] might have some but very little impact on United States commerce." But this is consistent with the thought that if the conspiracy were intentionally directed at the United States, and if it had the capacity to have substantial effects on the United States, then it would be the sort of activity which would be a matter of serious concern to the United States.

Because price-fixing is the paradigm of a § 1 violation, Areeda is clear to distinguish it from other sorts of anti-competitive action which might be treated more leniently in a foreign country. Thus he says, "HN18[↑] to say that domestic per se rules are not necessarily and automatically applicable in the international context is not to say that an antitrust court needs to hesitate very long before condemning restraints with [*195] significant and obvious effects on United States commerce, and without any plausible purpose other than the suppression of competition with and in the United States." IA Antitrust Law P 273b, at 376 (1997).

HN19[↑] The correct approach to a foreign price-fixing conspiracy, therefore, is what the First Circuit announced, something akin to a "per se plus" test, adding to the traditional domestic analysis the requirement [59] that the government show substantial effects by showing a substantial connection to the United States market.

I instructed the jury on this "per se plus" test by saying that substantial effects could be shown in any of the following ways:

- . whether the volume of commerce affected by the conspiracy was substantial;
- . whether the share of the market allegedly impacted by alleged conspiracy was substantial;
- . whether the conspiracy as a whole substantially lessened competition in the thermal fax paper market.

The government claims that it made sufficient proof of all three. I will acknowledge that the government carried its burden with regard to substantial effects on either of the first two prongs but only around the time the conspiracy allegedly was formed, i.e. around the end of March, 1990. It presented sufficient evidence that Jujo had approximately $ 6 million in sales in the United States at the start of the alleged conspiracy, and that the Japanese thermal fax paper manufacturers as a whole had approximately thirty percent of the market at the time.²⁹

²⁹ NPI claims that "Japanese manufacturers lacked sufficient market power, as a matter of law, to cause a substantial effect on United States commerce." In support of this claim, it offers the following quote from Areeda: "Most recent cases dismiss cases as a matter of law where the defendant's market share is less than 50 percent." This quote is taken from P 801, but P 801 deals with § 2 of the Sherman Act, not § 1. Its concern with "substantial" market share is with what it takes to be a monopoly. This has no bearing on what is required to have a substantial share of the market under the per se plus test for foreign price-fixing.

[60] The problem with the government's position is that the evidence indicates that the Japanese share of the market collapsed during 1990. Witness after witness testified to the fact that any company that did raise its prices lost market share at a precipitous rate. The pattern of prices suggested that by mid 1990, most abandoned the enterprise. Even so, document after document suggested that the market for Japanese thermal fax paper, not too robust at the beginning of 1990, was virtually extinguished by the end of the year. McCall of DaiEi reports that Japanese competitors had become an "insignificant" force in the market place. Appleton and KSP, the American companies continued to aggressively compete with one another, and, although they had captured so much of the market, continued to threaten anti-dumping petitions in order to drive out any of the remaining Japanese manufacturers left standing. The American companies plainly had the capacity to supply the entire demand for thermal fax paper by the fall of 1990. The Japanese conspiracy -- if anything remained by November of 1990 -- could hardly have had a "substantial effect" on American commerce.

It should be emphasized that HN20 [+] a substantial [61] effect on United States commerce cannot simply be assumed to continue because it once existed. There is no reason to treat having substantial effects on United States commerce like being a member of a conspiracy, which, as discussed above, is held to continue until its goals or membership have been affirmatively abandoned. See Juodakis, 834 F.2d at 1102. Rather, because it is a matter of objective fact, rather than subjective intent (to agree), the government must prove that the test is met at the relevant time. Because the government failed to introduce any evidence on this point for the relevant time [*196] period, and has not rebutted the testimony of almost all the witnesses whose conclusions were adverse to the government, it cannot claim to have carried its burden of showing that the alleged conspiratorial conduct produced substantial effects in the United States.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons detailed above, I find that the government has failed to carry its burden of proof on any of the three elements of the price-fixing conspiracy on which NPI charged. That is, the government failed to show that as of November 15, 1990 -- the date marking the start [62] of the period covered by the statute of limitations -- there was a conspiracy to fix prices, that Jujo, NPI's predecessor, was a member of such a conspiracy, or that such a conspiracy had intended and substantial effects on United States commerce. Accordingly, NPI's renewed motion for acquittal (docket # 260) is GRANTED.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: July 16, 1999

NANCY GERTNER, U.S.D.J.

CDC Techs., Inc. v. IDEXX Lab., Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

April 14, 1999, Argued ; July 21, 1999, Decided

Docket No. 98-7626

Reporter

186 F.3d 74 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16785 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,594

CDC TECHNOLOGIES, INC., a Connecticut corporation, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. IDEXX LABORATORIES, INC., a Delaware corporation, Defendant-Appellee.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from an order and judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut (Arterton, J.) granting summary judgment and dismissing antitrust complaint.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

distributors, machine, Sherman Act, Clayton Act, selling, magistrate judge, sales, anti-competitive, veterinarians, competitors', customers, sales contract, market power, district court, rule of reason, termination, hematology, leads

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Clayton Act § 3, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, prohibits only specified "sales" or "contracts for sale." A cognizable transaction is therefore one with both a "seller" and a "purchaser."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The conclusion that a contract does not violate § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, ordinarily implies the conclusion that the contract does not violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act proscribes "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. A handful of practices that are deemed particularly anti-competitive are adjudged illegal "per se." Section 1 claims involving economic practices other than those in the narrow "per se" category are subjected to the "rule of reason."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Exclusive distributorship arrangements are presumptively legal. Only "manifestly anticompetitive" conduct is appropriately designed per se illegal. The majority of allegedly anticompetitive conduct continues to be examined under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the rule of reason, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited. As an initial matter, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the practice it challenges has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A plaintiff that fails to demonstrate adverse effects on competition may nevertheless satisfy its preliminary burden by establishing that the defendant possesses the requisite market power and thus the capacity to inhibit competition market wide. "Market power" is "the ability to raise price significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business."

Counsel: MICHAEL R. BORASKY, Fort Lauderdale, FL (Joseph M. Ramirez, Heather E. Rennie, Pittsburgh, PA, Robert A. Sherman, Boston, MA, Eckert Seamans Cherin & Mellott, LLC; Edward R. Scofield, Zeldes, Needle & Cooper, Bridgeport, CT, on the brief) for Plaintiff-Appellant.

DAVID H. ERICHSEN, Boston, MA (James C. Burling, Vinita Chopra, Hale and Dorr LLP, on the brief), for Defendant-Appellee.

Judges: Before: VAN GRAAFEILAND, JACOBS, and STRAUB, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: JACOBS

Opinion

[*75] JACOBS, Circuit Judge:

In this antitrust case, plaintiff-appellant CDC Technologies, Inc. ("CDC"), which sells blood analysis machines to veterinarians, alleged that its competitor, defendant-appellee IDEXX Laboratories, Inc. ("IDEXX"), illegally entered into exclusive dealing arrangements with CDC's distributors. The distributors had provided CDC with the names of veterinarians potentially interested in purchasing the product. IDEXX, a later entrant in the market (though the leading player in the market for in-clinic [*2] veterinary diagnostic equipment generally) signed up CDC's distributors to play the same role in furnishing the names of likely veterinarians. This is an appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut (Arterton, J.) granting summary judgment to IDEXX, and dismissing the complaint. See CDC Technologies, Inc. v. IDEXX Laboratories, Inc., 7 F. Supp. 2d 119 (D. Conn. 1998).

CDC asserted claims under the Clayton Act and the Sherman Act, with corresponding and derivative state law claims. In dismissing, the district court concluded that CDC could not prove that the exclusive dealing arrangements had anti-competitive effects because: (i) the role of the distributors was so limited; (ii) CDC had successfully used other techniques to reach end-users; and (iii) the exclusive dealing arrangements were of short duration and easily terminable. See id. at 121-22.

As to the claim asserted under § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14 \(1994\), we affirm on the threshold ground that the [*76] Act does not regulate an arrangement with a distributor or middleman unless it involves actual sales, and it is [*3] undisputed here that IDEXX's distributors never purchased the machines or resold them.

As to CDC's claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1994\), we affirm on the ground that CDC failed to demonstrate that there is a triable issue on the anti-competitive effects of the exclusive dealing arrangements.

As to CDC's remaining federal and state claims, we affirm for substantially the reasons stated by the district court.

BACKGROUND

CDC, a Connecticut-based start-up company, manufactures and sells machines that allow veterinarians to analyze animal blood. IDEXX, a firm based in Maine that sells a wide array of products to veterinarians, sells a competing machine.

CDC entered this market first, and sold its hematology machines both through direct marketing and through relationships it established in 1992 and 1993 with four veterinary product distributors. The distributors did not actually sell the machine; in fact, their sales representatives did not even demonstrate it for prospective customers. Their role was limited to providing "qualified leads"--meaning that they passed along to CDC the names of veterinarians who had expressed an interest [4] in the product, and received in exchange from CDC a finder's fee if the lead produced a sale.

In addition CDC employed its own direct sales force to market its product (a method that was more profitable than selling with the assistance of the distributors), as well as "telemarketing, direct mail campaigns, customer lists, advertising, and participation in trade shows." CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 123. By late 1993, half of CDC's equipment sales were catalyzed by distributors.

IDEXX began selling animal-blood analysis machines in 1993, when IDEXX agreed with an existing manufacturer, Becton Dickinson, to use IDEXX's sales and distribution network to resell Becton Dickinson's "Autoread" model. In internal memoranda, IDEXX employees gloated about competitors' having "poor distribution" and about IDEXX's plans to "block [competitors' products] at [the] distribution channel[s]." Other documents referenced plans to "erect barriers to entry" and to "create an environment hostile to competitive entry."

IDEXX had a longstanding unwritten exclusive dealing policy that no IDEXX distributor could market a competing product. When IDEXX began selling Autoread in [5] 1994, the distributors that had been providing qualified leads to CDC ended their relationship with that firm and instead opted to market the Autoread for IDEXX. Their arrangement with IDEXX was the same as their arrangement with CDC: they did not buy the Autoread machine, or sell it; they only provided "qualified leads" to IDEXX. Also in 1994, IDEXX put its exclusive dealing policy in writing. It covered all IDEXX products, including Autoread; its term was one year; but a distributor could pull out of the agreement on 60 days notice, with or without cause. At the time discovery closed in September 1996, IDEXX had approximately half of the "distributor market" sewn up with such agreements.

After some interval, CDC sought out new distributors. By November 1995, it had signed up distributors covering most of the country; by April 1996, CDC's machine was sold through eight (non-IDEXX) distributors. At the same time, CDC greatly increased its direct sales force and its spending on other marketing mechanisms. During the relevant time period, CDC's sales through "third-parties" (including distributors) stayed nearly level (55 machines in 1992-93; 56 in 1994-95), while its direct sales increased [6] dramatically (52 to 402, same years).

[*77] Nonetheless, CDC remained a minor player in the market. IDEXX, on the other hand, had achieved an 80 percent market share by the time discovery closed in this case (September 1996)--approximately a 50 percent increase over the market share of Becton Dickinson at the time IDEXX began reselling Autoread.

Since IDEXX's entry into the market, another company, ZynoCyte, has introduced a machine in competition with those sold by IDEXX and CDC. It has nationwide distribution.

B. Procedural History

In February 1995, CDC sued IDEXX alleging: (i) unlawful exclusive dealing in violation of the Clayton Act and Connecticut statutes; (ii) unlawful restraint of trade under both federal and state antitrust statutes; (iii) monopolization, conspiracy to monopolize, and attempt to monopolize under the Sherman Act and state statutes; (iv) unfair trade practices in violation of state law; (v) civil conspiracy; and (vi) tortious interference with business relations.

IDEXX moved for summary judgment, and on March 2, 1998, Magistrate Judge Garfinkel recommended that the motion be granted. The magistrate judge first concluded that there was a genuine issue [7] of material fact as to the "relevant market": IDEXX defined it broadly to include all chemical and hematological methods for analyzing blood; CDC defined it narrowly as "in-clinic hematology analyzers for use by veterinarians." See id. at 126. The magistrate judge next assumed for the purposes of the summary judgment motion that the relevant area of competition was the United States (as CDC contended), not (as IDEXX contended) the world. See id. at 127.

The magistrate judge concluded that, even if both those issues were decided in CDC's favor, CDC failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether "IDEXX's exclusive dealing contract foreclosed a substantial share of the . . . market." Id. at 128 (citing Tampa Electric v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 628, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1961\)). The market foreclosure analysis required consideration of "the percentage of the market foreclosed, the duration of the exclusive arrangement, the 'notice of termination' period, and the competitive effect of the exclusive dealing contract in the relevant market." Id. (citation omitted). The magistrate [8] judge concluded that there was only "scant evidence" that IDEXX's exclusive arrangements with distributors hindered CDC's "ability to reach the ultimate customers" of its machine:

- . CDC's distributors had played a quite "limited role" (even before IDEXX's entry into the market), providing qualified leads, but not selling the machine or even demonstrating it.

- . CDC had successfully utilized other avenues to reach customers, and its sales increased after IDEXX entered the market.

- . Despite IDEXX's exclusive dealing agreements with its distributors, CDC had been able to sign up eight new distributors, and thereby achieve coverage throughout most of the country.

- . The one-year term of IDEXX's exclusive dealing agreements, and their 60-day termination provision, meant that any distributor that preferred to market CDC's product could do so with relative ease.¹

[*78] .Since IDEXX's 1994 market entry, a third company, ZynoCyte had begun selling a competing machine and had established nationwide distribution.

See 7 F. Supp. 2d at 128-30.

[9]

The magistrate judge decided that CDC's inability to establish the required elements of the Clayton Act claim defeated a a fortiori the more demanding claims under the Sherman Act, and that in any event, those Sherman Act claims were fatally defective. See id. at 130-31. The state civil conspiracy claim failed because it required the establishment of a separate cause of action, and CDC had none. Finally, the magistrate judge summarily rejected CDC's claims for tortious interference and unfair competition. See id. at 131-32.

Judge Arterton adopted the magistrate judge's recommendation in all respects. See id. at 120-22.

DISCUSSION

A. Clayton Act Claim

We affirm the district court's dismissal of CDC's Clayton Act claim, but do so on a threshold question.

HN1 [↑] Section 3 of the Clayton Act reads (in relevant part):

It shall be unlawful for any person . . . to . . . make a sale or contract for sale of goods . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor or competitors of the . . . seller, where the effect of such . [10] . . . sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

¹ The exclusivity was product-limited, meaning that a distributor could agree to sell a competitor's product in one product line while promoting IDEXX product in other lines. According to CDC, distributors feared that IDEXX would retaliate against a CDC distributor by withholding a broad range of other products; but the magistrate judge found "no admissible evidence in the record which would support such a proposition." CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 129.

15 U.S.C. § 14 (emphasis added).

HN2[] Section 3 thus prohibits only (specified) "sales" or "contracts for sale." ² [11] A cognizable transaction is therefore one with both a "seller" and a "purchaser." CDC's Clayton Act claim, based as it is on the exclusive dealing relationship between IDEXX and its distributors, fails because these distributors are not "purchasers." Cf. McElhenney Co. v. Western Auto Supply Co., 269 F.2d 332, 337 (4th Cir. 1959) ("While Congress was aware of other business practices which might also be harmful to the economy, it was attempting to outlaw only those with which the section expressly dealt.") The IDEXX distributors do no more than provide "qualified leads"; they do not buy the hematology machines from IDEXX; and they do not sell them to customers.³

The Supreme Court's last word on this subject is that § 3 by its terms requires a "sale." See Federal Trade Comm'n v. Curtis Publ'g Co., 260 U.S. 568, 581, 43 S. Ct. 210, 213, 67 L. Ed. 408 (1923). In Curtis, a publisher barred its dealers and distributors from dealing in its competitors' magazines. See id. at 574, 43 S. Ct. at 211. [12] The critical feature of the arrangement was that the publisher "consigned" magazines to each agent, retaining title until sale. Id. at 576, 43 S. Ct. at 212. Section 3 was not violated because the contracts thus were "ones of agency, not of sale upon condition, and the record reveals no surrounding circumstances sufficient [*79] to give it a different character." Id. at 581, 43 S. Ct. at 213.

Curtis remains good law and has been cited in those few cases in which exclusive dealing arrangements that involve no sale to the dealer have been asserted under the Clayton Act. See C.B.S. Bus. Equip. Corp. v. Underwood Corp., 240 F. Supp. 413, 424 (S.D.N.Y. 1964) ("If, as the Court finds, the Sales Agreement is an agency contract, and not a contract of sale upon condition, this would appear to dispose of the charge of illegality under Section 3 of the Clayton Act.") (citing Curtis); Preformed Line Prods. Co. v. Fanner Mfg. Co., 225 F. Supp. 762, 789 (N.D. Ohio 1960) ("The Condon Company is not a dealer or distributor. It does not buy and re-sell plaintiff's products. Its relationship to plaintiff is that of sales representative. [13] The selection of an exclusive representative is not within the ban of the antitrust laws. . . .") (citing Curtis), aff'd, 328 F.2d 265 (6th Cir. 1964); see also Grand Union Co. v. FTC, 300 F.2d 92, 97 n.14 (2d Cir. 1962) ("In Curtis, the agency agreement created a set of relationships and responsibilities unlike that which would have resulted from contracts of sale. Under the antitrust laws the difference between a 'sale' and an agency relationship is not simply one of form, but may be 'outcome-determinative.'") (dicta); 11 Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P1800d, at 21 (1998).

Since we dispose of CDC's Clayton Act claim on this threshold ground, we need not reach the question, decided by the district court, of whether the arrangements have anti-competitive effects of the kind and to the degree proscribed by the Clayton Act.

B. Sherman Act Claims

HN3[] The conclusion that a contract does not violate § 3 of the Clayton Act ordinarily implies the conclusion that the contract does not violate the Sherman Act:

² In a portion of the statute not excerpted here, it also proscribes certain leases. See 15 U.S.C. § 14.

³ The distributors do resell IDEXX "consumables," which are the chemical reagents used with each test and proprietary to a given machine. But CDC is not basing its exclusive dealing claim on the sale of these consumables. See CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 126 ("CDC claims that the product-market definition should be comprised solely of in-clinic hematology analyzers for use by veterinarians." (emphasis added)). In any event, CDC concedes that the market for consumables is completely derivative of the analyzer market, see Brief for Plaintiff-Appellant at 15 n.15 (describing "razor and razor blade concept"), and IDEXX did not require its distributors to stop selling CDC's consumables, only its machines.

We need not discuss the respondents' further contention that the contract also violates § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act, [\[14\]](#) for if it does not fall within the broader proscription of § 3 of the Clayton Act it follows that it is not forbidden by those of the former.

Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 335, 81 S. Ct. 623, 632, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1961\) (citing Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 608-609, 73 S. Ct. 872, 880, 97 L. Ed. 1277 \(1953\)). The Supreme Court's reference in Tampa Electric to the "broader proscription" of the Clayton Act, read in context, references the requisite degree of market foreclosure. See id.; see also Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676 F.2d 1291, 1304 n.9 \(9th Cir. 1982\) ("[A] greater showing of anticompetitive effect is required to establish a Sherman Act violation than a section 3 Clayton Act violation in exclusive-dealing cases." (citation omitted)). The ordinary rule does not decide the Sherman Act claims in this case, however, because CDC's Clayton Act claim fails for lack of sale or contract of sale, and there seems to be no such requirement in the relevant portions of the Sherman Act. See 11 Hovenkamp P 1800d, at 21 ("Most courts interpreting [\[15\]](#) the Sherman Act conclude that whether the underlying distribution arrangement is one of sale/resale or of agency has nothing to do with the legality of exclusive dealing.").

1. Sherman Act § HN4 [↑] 1

Section 1 of the Sherman Act proscribes "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. A handful of practices that are deemed particularly anti-competitive are adjudged illegal "per se." Section 1 claims involving economic practices other than those in the narrow "per se" category are subjected to the "rule of reason." See FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 457-58, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2017, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 \(1986\); Bogan v. Hodgkins, 166 F.3d 509, 513-14 \(2d Cir. 1999\).

[\[*80\]](#) a. "Per Se" Violation. CDC alleges that IDEXX and the distributors agreed that the distributors would stop selling CDC's machine and that such concerted action was a "per se" illegal "refusal to deal."

CDC's argument is meritless. We have said that "HN5 [↑] exclusive distributorship arrangements are presumptively legal." Electronics Communications Corp. v. Toshiba America Consumer Prods., Inc., 129 F.3d 240, 245 \(2d Cir. 1997\). [\[16\]](#) CDC offers no persuasive reason why the exclusive distributorship arrangements in this case should be deemed illegal per se. We will therefore examine the arrangements under the "rule of reason." See Bogan, 166 F.3d at 514 ("Only 'manifestly anticompetitive' conduct . . . is appropriately designed per se illegal. The majority of allegedly anticompetitive conduct continues to be examined under the rule of reason." (quoting Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 \(1977\) (internal citation omitted)); see also Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 735-36, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 1525, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 \(1988\) ("Economic analysis supports the view, and no precedent opposes it, that a vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels.").

b. Rule of Reason. HN6 [↑] Under the rule of reason, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited." K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib., Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 127 \(2d Cir. 1995\) [\[17\]](#) (quoting Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 49, 97 S. Ct. at 2557). As an initial matter, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the practice it challenges has had "an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." Id. at 127 (quoting Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 543 \(2d Cir. 1993\)) (internal quotation marks omitted).⁴

⁴ Assuming the plaintiff succeeds in making this showing, the defendant must establish the "pro-competitive redeeming virtues" of the practice. See K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 127 (internal quotation marks omitted). If the defendant is successful, the plaintiff must then demonstrate "that the same pro-competitive effect could be achieved through an alternative means that is less restrictive of competition." Id. Because we conclude that CDC fails to establish a genuine issue of material fact on its initial showing, we do not reach the second and third steps of the analysis.

[18]

CDC has failed to make that initial showing:

. CDC has not shown that there are significant barriers to entry into this market. See CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 129.

. CDC's effort to cast its claim as one involving "outlet foreclosure" is defeated by the fact that the distributors, which do not buy or sell the machines, are not outlets. We agree with the Ninth Circuit's conclusion that "if competitors can reach the ultimate consumers of the product by employing existing or potential alternative channels of distribution, it is unclear whether [exclusive dealing arrangements with distributors] foreclose from competition any part of the relevant market." Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1163 (9th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 812, 142 L. Ed. 2d 36, 119 S. Ct. 46 (1998); see also Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1383-84 (5th Cir. 1994); Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Servs., 823 F.2d 1215, 1234-35 (8th Cir. 1987).

. The distributors have never been critical to CDC's sales strategy. CDC has successfully reached customers by a variety of marketing [19] techniques; after losing its existing distributors to IDEXX, CDC delayed serious pursuit of other available distributors; it eventually achieved distributor coverage almost nationwide [*81] despite the IDEXX exclusive dealing arrangements; indeed, CDC's sales increased after IDEXX entered the market. See CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 128-29.

. Also highly significant is that the IDEXX exclusive dealing contracts were easily terminable on short notice; any distributor that preferred to promote CDC's machine could switch allegiance with ease.⁵ See id. at 129; see also Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 799 (2d Cir. 1994) (noting that exclusive dealing arrangements with reasonable termination provisions "may actually encourage, rather than discourage competition"); Omega Envtl., 127 F.3d at 1163-64; 11 Hovenkamp P 1802g, at 85.

[20]

In short, "there is scant evidence that IDEXX's exclusive dealing contract at the distributor level impeded CDC's ability to reach the ultimate customers of its hematology analyzer." CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 128.

HNT A plaintiff that fails to demonstrate adverse effects on competition may nevertheless satisfy its preliminary burden by establishing that the defendant "possesses the requisite market power and thus the capacity to inhibit competition market-wide." K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 129 (quoting Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 546 (2d Cir. 1993)) (internal quotation marks omitted). "Market power" is "the ability to raise price significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business." Id. (quoting Graphic Prods. Distrib. v. Itek Corp., 717 F.2d 1560, 1570 (11th Cir. 1983)).

CDC offers no direct evidence of market power. Instead, it invokes the rule that "market share may be used as a proxy for market power." K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 129. However, even assuming that CDC's market share evidence were sufficient [21] to create a triable issue as to market power, CDC's claim could not withstand summary judgment. "[A] showing of market power, while necessary to show adverse effect indirectly, is not sufficient. There must be other grounds to believe that the defendant's behavior will harm competition market-wide . . ." K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 129; see also Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 97 (2d Cir. 1998); Clorox Co. v. Sterling Winthrop, Inc., 117 F.3d 50, 59 (2d Cir. 1997). For the reasons discussed above, CDC has failed to create a genuine issue of material fact on its claim that the exclusive dealing agreements "harm competition market-wide." K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 129.

⁵ CDC claims that distributors considering a switch to CDC would be intimidated by fear that IDEXX would cut them off from other IDEXX products (e.g., not just hematology analyzers). The magistrate judge concluded that CDC adduced no admissible evidence on this point, see CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 129, a conclusion that CDC does not challenge on appeal.

2. Sherman Act § 2

We affirm the dismissal of CDC's claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act for substantially the reasons stated by Magistrate Judge Garfinkel. See CDC Technologies, 7 F. Supp. 2d at 130-31.⁶

[22]

C. State Law Claims

We affirm the dismissal of CDC's state claims for substantially the reasons stated by the magistrate judge and Judge Arterton. [*82] See id. at 122, 125 n.5, 130 n.10, 131-32.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

End of Document

⁶The magistrate judge initially noted that CDC's § 2 claim fails a a fortiori because CDC could not establish the less demanding Clayton Act cause of action. See id. at 130 (citing Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 335, 81 S. Ct. at 632). As noted previously, we do not rely on that rule. Notwithstanding the invocation of the Tampa Electric short-cut, however, the magistrate judge went on to provide independent analysis of the § 2 claims. See 7 F. Supp. 2d at 130-31. It is on that portion of the opinion that we affirm.

American Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. American Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

December 17, 1998, Argued ; July 22, 1999, Decided ; July 22, 1999, Filed

Nos. 96-2529/96-2530

Reporter

185 F.3d 606 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861 ; 1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.) ; 51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481 *; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,592

American Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians and Surgeons, Plaintiff-Appellant (96-2529/2530)/ Cross-Appellee, v. American Board of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., Defendant-Appellee; Defendant-Appellant (97-1224), American Podiatric Medical Association, Defendant-Appellee/ Cross-Appellant (97-1223).

Subsequent History: Subsequent appeal at Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 2003 U.S. App. LEXIS 4158 \(6th Cir.\) (6th Cir. Mich., 2003)

Prior History: [1] ; 97-1223/1224 Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan at Detroit. No. 93-72995. Bernard A. Friedman, District Judge.

Disposition: Granted plaintiff's motion to strike portions of the ABPS's brief. Affirmed district court's grant of ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law, the district court's denial of plaintiff's motion for injunctive relief, the district court's denial of the ABPS's motion for attorney's fees, and the district court's denial of the APMA's motion for Rule 11 sanctions. Reversed in part and affirmed in part the district court's grant of summary judgment.

Core Terms

consumers, district court, actual deception, certification, podiatric, monopoly power, Lanham Act, podiatrists, boards, misleading, deceived, certifying, plaintiff's claim, monopolization, deception, literally, conspire, matter of law, ambiguous, injunctive relief, attorney's fees, conspiracy, sanctions, market share, diplomates, mailing, summary judgment motion, present evidence, advertisement, surgery

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Standards of Review, Substantial Evidence

In considering whether sufficient evidence was presented to a jury to support a verdict, a court may not consider evidence not before the jury.

185 F.3d 606, *606 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1481

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

HN2 [down] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\) & \(a\)\(1\)\(B\) \(1994\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

HN3 [down] False Advertising, Lanham Act

To state a cause of action for misleading advertisement under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\)\(B\), a plaintiff must establish the following: 1) the defendant has made false or misleading statements of fact concerning his own product or another's; 2) the statement actually or tends to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; 3) the statement is material in that it will likely influence the deceived consumer's purchasing decisions; 4) the advertisements were introduced into interstate commerce; and 5) there is some causal link between the challenged statements and harm to the plaintiff. The third and fifth elements -- deception and injury -- are both components of causation generally. The deception element asks whether the defendant's misstatements caused the consumer to be deceived. The injury element asks whether the defendant's deception of the consumer caused harm to the plaintiff. The sort of proof of these elements a plaintiff must show varies depending upon whether damages or injunctive relief is sought.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

185 F.3d 606, *606 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1481

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Remedies

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

HN4 [down] False Advertising, Lanham Act

When a plaintiff seeks an award of monetary damages for false or misleading advertisement under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\)\(B\), he may show either that the defendant's advertisement is literally false or that it is true yet misleading or confusing. Where statements are literally false, a violation may be established without evidence that the statements actually misled consumers. Where statements are literally true, yet deceptive, or too ambiguous to support a finding of literal falsity, a violation can only be established by proof of actual deception, that is, evidence that individual consumers perceived the advertisement in a way that misled them about the plaintiff's product. A plaintiff relying upon statements that are literally true yet misleading cannot obtain relief by arguing how consumers could react; it must show how consumers actually do react. In addition, a Lanham Act claim must be based upon a statement of fact, not of opinion.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

HN5 [down] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Judgment as a matter of law is appropriate where there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find on that issue. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(a\)\(1\). The court reviews de novo the motions with the identical standard used by the district court, and the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > Elements of False Advertising

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

HN6 [down] False Advertising, Elements of False Advertising

One of the key elements of a cause of action for misleading advertising under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\)\(B\), is that there is actual deception or at least a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience.

185 F.3d 606, *606 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1481

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

HN7 Consumer Protection, False Advertising

Proof of actual deception requires demonstrating that consumers were actually deceived by the defendant's ambiguous or true-but-misleading statements. Successful plaintiffs usually present evidence of the public's reaction through consumer surveys. There must be evidence that a "significant portion" of the consumer population was deceived.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

HN8 Remedies, Injunctions

Injunctive relief may be obtained by showing only that the defendant's representations about its product have a tendency to deceive consumers while recovery of damages requires proof of actual consumer deception. Although plaintiff need not present consumer surveys or testimony demonstrating actual deception, it must present evidence of some sort demonstrating that consumers were misled.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

HN9 Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The court reviews a challenge to the grant or denial of a request for permanent injunction under an abuse of discretion standard.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN10 [L] Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

The court reviews de novo the district court's grant of a motion for summary judgment. A court ruling on a motion for summary judgment must consider all the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmovant and must give the nonmovant the benefit of every reasonable inference. A grant of a motion for summary judgment is appropriate only if this court determines that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN11 [L] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

§ 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits agreements that result in an unreasonable restraint of trade, while § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 prohibits the willful acquisition of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1994\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [L] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In order to have a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, there must be an agreement, as § 1 does not encompass unilateral conduct, no matter how anticompetitive. § 1 does not prohibit every restraint on trade, but only those agreements that unreasonably restrain trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

185 F.3d 606, *606 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, Cir. 1481, *1481
 (BNA) 1481, *1481

HN14 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The plaintiff in a § 1 Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, case must present evidence excluding the possibility that the defendants acted independently of one another; it is not enough to show actions consistent with either independent or conspiratorial action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

§ 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is concerned only with concerted action among competitors and not the coordinated activities that occur within a single firm.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN16 [blue icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

§ 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, makes it unlawful to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States. To establish a § 2 violation, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

185 F.3d 606, *606 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1481

The relevant market includes those products or services that are reasonably interchangeable with, as well as identical to, defendant's product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Monopoly power is the power to control prices and exclude competition. Because a true determination of whether a firm possesses monopoly power hinges upon an analysis of complicated economic factors, courts often look to market share as a proxy for monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN19 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market share is only a starting point for determining whether monopoly power exists, and the inference of monopoly power does not automatically follow from the possession of a commanding market share.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

HN20 [blue icon] Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

When considering claims based upon state law, a federal court must apply the law of that state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

To establish a claim of interference with prospective economic advantage in Michigan, a plaintiff must show: (1) the existence of a valid business relation, not necessarily evidenced by an enforceable contract, or expectancy; (2) that the defendant knew of the business relationship or expectancy; (3) that the defendant intentionally interfered by improperly inducing or causing a breach or termination of the relationship or expectancy; and (4) that the defendant's improper or unjustified interference resulted in injury to the plaintiff. The third component of this tort requires the plaintiff to demonstrate illegal or unethical conduct on the part of the defendant. An antitrust violation such as illegal monopolization would seem to satisfy this requirement.

185 F.3d 606, *606 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1481

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Business Relationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN22 [] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

The tort of intentional interference with business relations does not require proof of actual deception. It is enough to show that the defendant's conduct interfered with the plaintiff's business expectancy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

HN23 [] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1117\(a\), prevailing Lanham Act defendants are entitled to an award of attorney's fees in "exceptional" cases. The court reviews a district court's grant or denial of attorney's fees under the Lanham Act for an abuse of discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN24 [] Consumer Protection, False Advertising

Where a plaintiff sues under a colorable, yet ultimately losing, argument, an award of attorney's fees is inappropriate.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

185 F.3d 606, *606LÁ999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1LÁ999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), Cir.)LÁ51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1481

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The court reviews a denial of a motion for imposition of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 sanctions for an abuse of discretion.

Counsel: ARGUED: Alan M. Sandals, SANDALS, LANGER & TAYLOR, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for Appellant.

Philip J. Kessler, BUTZEL LONG, Detroit, Michigan, Thomas M. Hitch, McGINTY, JAKUBIAK, FRANKLAND, HITCH & HENDERSON, East Lansing, Michigan, for Appellees.

ON BRIEF: Patricia D. Gugin, BERGER & MONTAGUE, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for Appellant.

Philip J. Kessler, Laurie J. Michelson, BUTZEL LONG, Detroit, Michigan, Thomas M. Hitch, McGINTY, JAKUBIAK, FRANKLAND, HITCH & HENDERSON, East Lansing, Michigan, Gordon J. Walker, BUTZEL LONG, Birmingham, Michigan, [2] for Appellees.

Judges: Before: MERRITT, NORRIS, and GILMAN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: ALAN E. NORRIS

Opinion

[1482] [2] [*611] OPINION

ALAN E. NORRIS, Circuit Judge. Plaintiff American Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians and Surgeons ("ACCPSS") brought claims under the Sherman Act, the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, the Lanham Act, and the common law prohibition against intentional interference with prospective economic advantage against the American Board of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., ("ABPS") and the American Podiatric Medical Association ("APMA"). Plaintiff appeals the district court's partial grant of defendants' motion for summary judgment, the grant of the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law following a jury verdict for plaintiff, and the denial of its request for injunctive relief. The ABPS cross-appeals the district court's denial of its [3] motion for attorney's fees. The APMA cross-appeals the denial of its motion for sanctions pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. Subsequent to the filing of the briefs in this case, plaintiff filed a motion to strike portions of the ABPS's brief.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background.

i. The parties.

The APMA [3] is the oldest and largest organization of podiatrists in the United States. Of the 12,500-13,000 podiatrists in the United States, over 10,000 are members of the APMA. The Council on Podiatric Medical Education ("CPME") is the educational arm of the APMA. The United States Department of Education recognizes the CPME to accredit podiatric colleges, and the CPME accredits the seven colleges of podiatric medicine. The APMA has authorized the CPME to recognize organizations which provide board certification for podiatrists, but the CPME gets no board-recognition authority from the federal government.

The ABPS, which has its origins in the APMA, is the oldest and largest podiatrist certification board in the United States. The CPME has approved the ABPS as a certifying board of podiatric surgeons. Over 4,000 podiatrists are currently certified by the ABPS.

Plaintiff, younger and smaller than the ABPS, also certifies podiatric surgeons. It was created by and is recognized by the American Association of Podiatric Physicians and Surgeons ("AAPPS"). A third board, the American Podiatric Medical Specialties Board ("APMSB"), also certifies podiatrists, but it is not a party to this litigation. [4] The parties spend much time debating which is the more reputable and professional board, but the merits of their positions are irrelevant to this appeal.

[4] ii. The challenged conduct.

Plaintiff bases all of its claims on allegedly false or misleading statements made by the ABPS and the APMA. The ABPS sent out three mass mailings over several years to sectors of the health care community. In 1988, the ABPS sent a letter to between 7,000 and 8,000 hospitals and insurance companies concerning podiatrist certification boards. In the fall of 1991, the ABPS sent a second mass mailing to approximately 6,000 hospitals. A third mailing was sent in October, 1992, to insurance carriers and managed care organizations. Along with these letters, the ABPS included informational brochures. In addition to these ABPS mailings, the APMA allegedly sent out materials of its own which disparaged plaintiff and supported the ABPS. The content of these mailings is discussed in more detail later in this opinion.

[*612] Plaintiff claims that the ABPS and the APMA conspired to issue the challenged statements and thereby to reduce plaintiff's presence as a competitor in the market for podiatrist certification. [5] Not only did the APMA conspire with the ABPS, plaintiff claims, but also it conspired with its own members to falsely disparage plaintiff and [*1483] undermine its reputation as a certifying board. According to plaintiff, before the mass mailings it was a rising competitor in the market for podiatrist certification, but after the mailings, its market share dwindled, benefitting the ABPS.

iii. The ABPS's share of the market.

Plaintiff has provided the following undisputed data concerning the market shares of the three certifying boards.

[5]

Year	Total # of applicants	ABPS	ACCPS	APMSB
1987-88	762	420 (55.1%)	141	201
1988-89	685	368 (53.7%)	210	107
1989-90	565	429 (75.9%)	103	33
1990-91	660	474 (71.8%)	94	92
1991-92	500	339 (67.6%)	95	67
1992-93	564	433 (76.7%)	59	72
1993-94	739	558 (75.5%)	98	83
1994-95	790	600 (75.9%)	111	79

Plaintiff claims that in apparent contradiction to having such a large market share, the ABPS charges approximately twice as much for podiatrists to take its exam than does plaintiff.

B. Prior Proceedings.

In 1991, plaintiff sued the APMA for violations of the Lanham Act and for intentional interference with business relationships. The parties settled, and plaintiff's claims were dismissed with prejudice on April 17, 1992. In July, 1993, plaintiff filed a six-count complaint against the ABPS and the APMA. Plaintiff alleged violations of the Lanham Act, § 1 of the Sherman Act (agreement in restraint of trade), [6] § 2 of the Sherman Act (illegal monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize), corresponding violations of the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, and the common law tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. Defendants moved for summary judgment on all counts, and the district court granted the motion with regard to all claims except the Lanham Act claim against the ABPS. The Lanham Act claim was dismissed against the APMA because, according to the district court, all the events on which the APMA's Lanham Act liability was based occurred before April 17, 1992, and the dismissal of the plaintiff's earlier Lanham Act claims against the APMA precluded the later suit. After being dismissed from the case, the APMA filed a motion for sanctions against the plaintiff, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 11.

[6] The remaining parties proceeded to trial on the Lanham Act claims. After the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, plaintiff requested injunctive relief prohibiting the ABPS from making any further misstatements. Not only did the district court deny plaintiff's request, the court granted the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter [7] of law. In a separate opinion, the district court denied the APMA's request for sanctions. The ABPS subsequently sought attorney's fees, a request that was also denied.

Plaintiff appeals the partial grant of the motion for summary judgment, the grant of the renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law, and the denial of injunctive relief. The APMA cross-appeals the district court's refusal to impose sanctions on plaintiff, and the ABPS cross-appeals the denial of its motion for attorney's fees. Finally, plaintiff asks this court to strike portions of the ABPS's appellate brief.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Plaintiff's motion to strike portions of the ABPS's brief.

Plaintiff complains that, when arguing that the district judge correctly granted the ABPS's motion for judgment as a matter of law, the ABPS cites in its brief affidavits that were not before the jury. HN1[] In considering whether sufficient evidence was presented to a jury to support [*613] a verdict, a court may not consider evidence not before the jury. See United States v. Bonds, 12 F.3d 540, 552 (6th Cir. 1993) ("A party may not by-pass the fact-finding process of the lower court and introduce new facts [8] in its brief on appeal.") (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The ABPS quotes from the affidavit of a Dr. Coles, and cites to three other affidavits, although those materials were not presented to the jury in any manner.

The ABPS relies upon the affidavits in an impermissible manner. Two of the primary issues on this appeal are whether plaintiff [*1484] presented sufficient evidence that health care professionals, such as Dr. Coles, were actually deceived by [7] the alleged misrepresentations of the ABPS, and whether such deception of health care professionals caused injury to plaintiff. These affidavits are cited to persuade this court that there was no such deception and that the challenged statements did not adversely affect plaintiff. The ABPS attempts to justify its reference to these materials by arguing that they were submitted in support of its motion for attorney's fees. The portion of the brief in which the affidavits are cited is clearly directed at proving the insufficiency of the evidence presented to the jury, not the frivolousness of plaintiff's case. Because they were not considered by the jury, we have ignored the references to them in this appeal.

B. [9] The district court's rulings on the Lanham Act claims.

Plaintiff appeals the district court's grant of the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law on the Lanham Act false advertising claim and the denial of its motion for injunctive relief.¹ The Lanham Act provides, in relevant part:

(a)(1). Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which--

...

¹ Plaintiff does not appeal the dismissal, by summary judgment, of its the Lanham Act claims against the APMA.

(B). in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities,

[8]

shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

HN2 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\)\(1\) & \(a\)\(1\)\(B\) \(1994\). 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\)\(1\)\(B\) thus creates a cause of action for false or misleading advertisement.

[10] HN3 [↑]

To state a cause of action for misleading advertisement under the Lanham Act, a plaintiff must establish the following: 1) the defendant has made false or misleading statements of fact concerning his own product or another's; 2) the statement actually or tends to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; 3) the statement is material in that it will likely influence the deceived consumer's purchasing decisions; 4) the advertisements were introduced into interstate commerce; and 5) there is some causal link between the challenged statements and harm to the plaintiff. See U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 898 F.2d 914, 922-23 (3d Cir. 1990); ALPO Petfoods, Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 286 U.S. App. D.C. 192, 913 F.2d 958, 964 (D.C. Cir. 1990). The third and fifth elements -- deception and injury -- are both components of causation generally. The deception element asks whether the defendant's misstatements caused the consumer to be deceived. The injury element asks whether [*614] the defendant's deception of the consumer caused harm to the plaintiff. The sort of proof of these elements a plaintiff must show varies [11] depending upon whether damages or injunctive relief is sought.

i. The grant of the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law.

HN4 [↑] When a plaintiff seeks an award of monetary damages for false or misleading advertisement under the Lanham Act, he may show either that the defendant's advertisement is literally false or that it is true yet misleading or confusing. See, e.g., Castrol, Inc. v. Pennzoil Co., 987 F.2d 939, 943 (3d Cir. 1993). Where statements are literally false, a violation may [9] be established without evidence that the statements actually misled consumers. See, e.g., Johnson & Johnson, Inc. v. GAC Int'l, Inc., 862 F.2d 975, 977 (2d Cir. 1988); PPX Enters., Inc. v. Audiofidelity Enters., Inc., 818 F.2d 266, 272 (2nd Cir. 1987). Actual deception is presumed. See U-Haul Int'l, Inc. v. Jartran, Inc., 793 F.2d 1034, 1040 (9th Cir. 1986). Where statements are literally true, yet deceptive, or too ambiguous to support a finding of literal falsity, a violation can only be established by proof of actual deception (i.e., evidence that individual consumers perceived the advertisement [12] in a way that misled them about the plaintiff's product). A plaintiff relying upon statements that are literally true yet misleading "cannot obtain relief by arguing how consumers could react; it must show how consumers actually do react." Sandoz Pharm. Corp. v. Richardson-Vicks, Inc., 902 F.2d 222, 229 (3d Cir. 1990). In addition, a Lanham Act claim must be based upon a statement of fact, not of opinion. [*1485] Groden v. Random House, Inc., 61 F.3d 1045, 1052 (2d Cir. 1995); Gillette Co. v. Norelco Consumer Prods. Co., 946 F. Supp. 115, 136 (D. Mass. 1996).

The district court ruled that all of plaintiff's claims were based upon statements that were either ambiguous or literally true yet misleading and that plaintiff had failed to introduce sufficient evidence of actual deception. Consequently, plaintiff had not introduced sufficient evidence for a reasonable juror to find in favor of plaintiff to justify an award of damages.

HN5 [↑] Judgment as a matter of law is appropriate where "there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find on that issue." Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(a\)\(1\). We review de novo these motions with [13] the identical standard used by the district court, and we must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Monday v. Oullette, 118 F.3d 1099, 1101-02 (6th Cir. 1997). [10]

1. Literally false v. true-but-misleading or ambiguous statements.

185 F.3d 606, *614-1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 13L-1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 10L-51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1485

Plaintiff bases its Lanham Act claim against the ABPS on seven statements. Two of them are found in mass mailings sent in May, 1988, and October, 1992, where the ABPS wrote:

Recently, the American Board of Podiatric Surgery has received a number of inquiries from hospitals regarding podiatrists presenting credentials from organizations purporting to be certifying boards.

The AMERICAN BOARD OF PODIATRIC SURGERY . . . is the ONLY approved certifying board for podiatric surgery. The American Board of Podiatric Surgery is approved by the Council on Podiatric Medical Education, which is part of the American Podiatric Medical Association (formerly the American Podiatry Association).

First, plaintiff claims the word "purporting" implies that other organizations, such as plaintiff, are not certifying boards, when in fact plaintiff is a certifying board, and thus the statement [14] is literally false. The district court reasoned that because anything "purports" to be what it says it is, the statement was true although misleading, and therefore plaintiff had to [*615] prove actual deception.² To the contrary, we [11] find that when read in context, the word "purported" means nothing other than "falsely claiming to be." "Purport" carries this connotation on its own, and when coupled with the other sentences in the letter, there can be no doubt that anyone reading the message would believe the ABPS to be saying that these other organizations were not certifying boards. While this is true, however, the statement in context is more a statement of opinion than a statement of fact. The ABPS seems to say that only boards approved by the CPME are truly certifying boards, and only the ABPS is approved by the CPME. As noted previously, such a statement is an inactionable statement of opinion.

[15] Second, plaintiff claims that the statement that the ABPS is "the ONLY approved certifying board for podiatric surgery" is literally false. This statement is either ambiguous or true but misleading. It is wholly unclear what it means to be an "approved" board, and so plaintiff must demonstrate that the statement actually deceived consumers into believing something untrue. Alternatively, considering the statement in context, it may mean that only the ABPS is approved by the CPME, which is true. Thus, whether ambiguous or true but misleading, plaintiff must introduce evidence of actual deception to recover damages.

Third, in a mailing to insurance carriers on October 1, 1992, the ABPS stated that it "is the only professionally recognized certifying board for podiatric surgery, being recognized by the" CPME. Like "approved" in the previously discussed passage, the phrase "professionally recognized" is ambiguous. [*1486] [12] To be "professionally recognized," must the ABPS be recognized by most podiatrists? Most people in the medical profession? Some podiatrists? Taken as a whole, the sentence may mean that only boards recognized by the CPME are professionally recognized boards, [16] which is a statement of opinion. Thus, the statement is either opinion or ambiguous, and plaintiff must introduce evidence of actual deception to survive summary judgment.

Fourth, in another mailing to hospitals, the ABPS stated that "there has been a proliferation of 'self-designated' organizations purporting to have the authority to recognize and certify in podiatric surgery." Plaintiff complains that the term "self-designated" is disparaging. It may be disparaging, but it is also ambiguous. At trial, evidence suggested that to those in the medical community, "self-designated" could refer to boards not recognized by the CPME, which would be all boards other than the ABPS. In context, the most reasonable interpretation of "self-designated" is "not approved by another body." Plaintiff may or may not be approved by another body, depending upon how one looks at its relationship with the AAPPS. The AAPPS created and approved plaintiff, and being ² Plaintiff points to evidence in the record where a witness testified that purported meant "not genuine," and the gist of plaintiff's argument is that there was sufficient evidence for a jury to find that the statement was literally false. Whether or not a statement is ambiguous would seem to be a question of law, as it is in contract interpretation. See, e.g., Astor v. International Bus. Mach. Corp., 7 F.3d 533, 539-40 (6th Cir. 1993) (under Ohio law, determination of whether a contractual term is ambiguous is a question of law, not fact). On the other hand, the Second Circuit has held that whether or not a statement is facially false is a question of fact. Johnson & Johnson, Inc. v. GAC Int'l, Inc., 862 F.2d 975, 979 (2d Cir. 1988). These two rules do not conflict because determining what meaning(s) words facially convey requires no weighing of evidence, while determining whether facts exist so as to make a statement true does require weighing evidence. Thus, the initial determination concerning whether a statement is ambiguous is a matter of law, while the determination as to whether facts exist so as to justify the statement is a question of fact. The testimony plaintiff points to concerns the initial determination of ambiguity and is therefore irrelevant to the question of whether "purporting" is ambiguous, a question of law.

185 F.3d 606, *615LÁ1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 16LÁ1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 12LÁ51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1486 approved by the very body that created it might be considered self-designation. [*616] In any event, "self-designated" is ambiguous, and therefore plaintiff must show actual deception to prevail.

Fifth, plaintiff points to the language found in the [17] mass mailings stating that the "CPME is the accrediting agency for podiatric medicine. . . ." Plaintiff claims this is a false statement. However, the statement is too ambiguous to be literally false because it does not say what the CPME accredits. The CPME does, in fact, accredit all of the colleges of podiatric medicine, and it is the only organization that accredits these colleges. Thus, in a sense the statement is true. At worst it is misleading, and plaintiff must present evidence of actual deception.

[13] Sixth, plaintiff challenges the ABPS's statement that "the CPME is the accrediting agency for podiatric medicine, recognized by the U.S. Department of Education and the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation." Plaintiff interprets this passage to mean that the federal government has approved the CPME for recognizing certification boards, which is false. However, this statement does not necessarily stretch as broadly as the plaintiff would have it. The U.S. Department of Education does, in fact, recognize the CPME for the accreditation of postsecondary schools. Thus, the statement is, at worst, true but misleading, and plaintiff must demonstrate actual deception.

Finally, [18] plaintiff complains about the ABPS's statement that the "APMA recognizes only the ABPS for certification in podiatric surgery." Unfortunately, it points to no place in the record where this statement may be found. We have found instances where the ABPS has claimed that it is the only board approved by the CPME, which is a true statement. While it may be that this statement implies that there is some sort of process whereby other boards can apply for CPME approval and that the ABPS is the only board to gain such approval, the statement itself is literally true. Thus, at worst it is true yet misleading, and plaintiff must demonstrate actual deception.

In considering all the above-challenged statements, we have to keep in mind that HN6 one of the key elements of a cause of action for misleading advertising under the Lanham Act is "that there is actual deception or at least a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience." See U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 898 F.2d 914, 922 \(3d Cir. 1990\) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted) (emphasis added). Here, the intended audience is comprised of hospital administrators, [19] insurance companies, and managed care organizations, a sophisticated group of professionals who presumably have familiarity with the issues involved in board certification. Because we conclude that this intended audience would find all of the [14] challenged statements to be, at worst, either ambiguous or true but misleading, the district court correctly reasoned that plaintiff had to present evidence of actual deception in order to survive the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law and collect damages.

2. Evidence of actual deception.

HN7 Proof of actual deception requires demonstrating that consumers were actually deceived by the defendant's ambiguous or true-but-misleading statements. Successful plaintiffs usually present evidence of the public's reaction through consumer surveys. Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharmas. Co. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Pharmas., Inc., 19 F.3d 125, 129-30 \(3d Cir. 1994\). There must be evidence that a "significant portion" of the consumer population was deceived. See, e.g., [William H. Morris Co. v. Group W, Inc., 66 F.3d 255, 258 \[*1487\] \(9th Cir. 1995\)](#).³ [*617] Plaintiff presented no consumer survey or [20] other market

³One of the initial difficulties with plaintiff's case is that the persons allegedly deceived by defendants' statements are not consumers of any podiatrist certification board. The persons who purchase the services of plaintiff and the ABPS are podiatrists, yet plaintiff alleges that hospitals, health care providers, and insurance companies were misled. Plaintiff's focus upon these other entities is logical because how they perceive the plaintiff will have an effect on its ability to attract podiatrists seeking certification. The less respect these entities have for plaintiff's certification, the less likely it will be that podiatrists will seek plaintiff's certification. Because we affirm the district court's grant of the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law on other grounds, we need not decide whether Lanham Act "consumers" may be entities that do not actually purchase plaintiff's product. We will assume, for purposes of argument, that plaintiff has correctly alleged that hospital administrators and insurance companies are its Lanham Act consumers.

185 F.3d 606, *617A 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 20A 1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 14A 51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1487

research demonstrating that consumers were deceived by any ambiguous or true-but-misleading statement made by the ABPS.

[21] The most compelling direct evidence of actual [*1488] deception plaintiff sets forth is found in a letter sent to the ABPS by a [15] Dr. Coles, who was Vice-President of Medical Affairs at a hospital. Coles wrote: "From what you say, we should not give much, if any, credence to the ACCPPS? I will certainly appreciate any further information you can give us." While this letter may demonstrate some confusion by Coles, it does not show that he was tricked into believing an untruth about plaintiff. And even if Coles were deceived, this one letter is a far cry from demonstrating that a "significant portion" of the consumer population was deceived.

Plaintiff argues it presented sufficient evidence of consumer deception in forms other than consumer surveys, market research, or direct evidence that individual consumers were deceived. Plaintiff draws attention to the following evidence:

The CPME sent the ABPS a letter telling it not to tell others that the CPME was recognized by the U.S. Department of Education.

In 1993, the CPME distributed a brochure clarifying its functions and its relation to the federal government.

Evidence was presented suggesting that a member of [22] the California medical licensing board thought that governmental recognition of the CPME extended to regulation of certifying boards.

At most, this evidence indicates concern by the CPME and confusion in the California medical licensing board about the ABPS's representation of the CPME's relationship with the U.S. Department of Education, and thus it speaks to only one of the challenged statements. Even as it relates to this one statement, however, plaintiff has not presented sufficient evidence of actual deception to support a finding that a significant portion of the consumers were deceived. None of this evidence demonstrates that those parties plaintiff labels as its consumers -- hospitals, health care providers, and insurance companies -- were deceived. [16]

Plaintiff points to cases which indicate that common sense and personal experience can enter into determining whether consumers were deceived. However, none of these cases stand for the proposition that common sense or personal experience alone will suffice for plaintiff to establish actual deception. The court in McNeilab, Inc. v. American Home Prods. Corp., 501 F. Supp. 517, 525 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), [23] reasoned that a court as factfinder may use "experience and understanding of human nature" in determining whether market researchers and expert witnesses have established actual deception, but the case cannot be read for the proposition that common sense can substitute for direct evidence. Rather, in McNeilab, common sense acts as a check on evidence tending to establish actual deception, not a substitute for such evidence. Plaintiff relies upon Getty Petroleum Corp. v. Island Transp. Corp., 878 F.2d 650, 656-57 (2d Cir. 1989), for the proposition that common sense may guide the jury's determination without any consumer witnesses or market surveys, but [*618] that was a case concerning literal falsity, not ambiguous or true-but-misleading statements. When statements are literally false, the potential for actual deception is naturally greater. Thus, Getty Petroleum merely reaffirms the general rule that in cases of literally false statements, evidence of actual deception is not required. See also Federal Trade Comm'n v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 250 U.S. App. D.C. 162, 778 F.2d 35, 40-42 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (construing the "false advertising" [24] section of the Federal Trade Commission Act and holding that where deception is self-evident, consumer surveys are not required).

The district court also ruled that plaintiff had failed to present evidence sufficient for a reasonable jury to find that the alleged deception of consumers had caused it injury. Because we hold that plaintiff failed to present sufficient evidence of actual deception to support an award of damages, we need not consider the second causation issue. [17]

ii. The district court's denial of injunctive relief.

Plaintiff appeals the district court's denial of its motion for injunctive relief. As noted above, the evidence of causation a plaintiff must introduce to establish a Lanham Act claim varies depending upon the relief sought.

185 F.3d 606, *618 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 24 U.S. App. LEXIS 1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 17 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1488

Regarding deception, "HN8[↑] injunctive relief may be obtained by showing only that the defendant's representations about its product have a tendency to deceive consumers while recovery of damages requires proof of actual consumer deception." Max Daetwyler Corp. v. Input Graphics, Inc., 608 F. Supp. 1549, 1551 (E.D. Penn. 1985); see also Black Hills Jewelry Mfg. Co. v. Gold Rush, Inc., 633 F.2d 746, 753-54 (8th Cir. 1980). [25] This lower standard has arisen because when an injunction is sought, courts may protect the consumer without fear of bestowing an undeserved windfall on the plaintiff. See Black Hills Jewelry, 633 F.2d at 753 n.7; J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition 27:31, at 27-50 (1998). Although plaintiff need not present consumer surveys or testimony demonstrating actual deception, it must present evidence of some sort demonstrating that consumers were misled.

