[7] The Defendants also presented an argument in opposition to Arkansas Carpenters' request for additional time, pursuant to Rule 56(f), to review certain documents produced by its Administrator. As discussed in note 5, supra, this request has since been withdrawn by Arkansas Carpenters. Therefore, because this issue is now moot, it is unnecessary to address the Defendants' response in opposition to this alternate relief.

D. Analysis

1. Standard of Review

Defendants have moved for summary judgment on the Arkansas Carpenters' class action complaint (the "Complaint"). Motions for summary judgment are specifically governed by Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Although only the Defendants attempted to articulate a standard of review on a Rule 56 motion, it is well-settled that the standard of review articulated [*26] on pages 4 and 5 of this Report is the appropriate standard for adjudicating a motion brought under Rule 56(c) and it is this standard that will govern my resolution of this Motion.

2. Local Rule 56.1

The Local Rules of the District Court for the District of New Jersey also govern motions brought pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Under Rule 56.1 of the Local Rules of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, "[o]n motions for summary judgment, each side shall furnish a statement which sets forth material facts as to which there exists or does not exist a genuine issue." D.N.J. L. Civ. R. 56.1.

Consistent with Local Rule 56.1, Defendants submitted a Statement of Undisputed Facts in Support of their Motion for Summary Judgment Against Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund (the "Statement") (Docket No. 398). Defendants also provided a "Summary of Undisputed Facts" in Defendants' Memo. of Law. (Defs.' Memo. of Law, at 1-3.) In response, Arkansas Carpenters provided a "Counterstatement of Facts" in its Memo. of Law. (ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 1.) Specifically, Arkansas Carpenters claims that the only fact in [*27] dispute that is relevant to the instant motion is whether Arkansas Carpenters either paid for, or reimbursed payments for branded or generic K-Dur. To this end, Arkansas Carpenters claims that it did make such payments and that this fact is reflected in the Declaration filed contemporaneously with its Memo. of Law. (Id.) I shall, therefore, treat the issue of Arkansas Carpenters' payment of branded and generic K-Dur as a genuine issue of material fact that is in dispute.

Arkansas Carpenters does not, however, appear to challenge any of the other "undisputed facts" contained in Defendants' Statement or summary. Accordingly, I find the remaining "undisputed facts" to have been admitted by Arkansas Carpenters. See SEC v. Chester Holdings, Ltd., 41 F.Supp.2d 505, 516 n.7 (D.N.J. 1999) (holding that where non-movant failed to specifically challenge certain material facts identified in movant's Rule 56.1 statement, those undisputed facts would be deemed admitted); see also *Hutchinson v. Bennigan's/Metromedia Restaurant, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10489, 4 (D.N.J. Feb. 28, 2006) ("A number of courts in this district have held that when a party has failed to submit a statement of facts, as is required by Local Civ. R. 56.1, [*28] those facts that are not disputed are deemed admitted"); Longoria v. New Jersey, 168 F.Supp.2d 308, 312 n.1 (D.N.J. 2001) (same).

3. The Claims for Relief

Although the issue of whether Arkansas Carpenters, in fact, made payments for branded and generic K-Dur raises a genuine issue of material fact that is disputed, the existence of this single disputed fact does not carry the day in opposition to Defendants' Motion.

a. The burden of proof

In its Complaint, Arkansas Carpenters seeks two distinct forms of relief against the Defendants. Specifically, Arkansas Carpenters seeks injunctive relief under federal antitrust law and also seeks damages on the grounds of unjust enrichment. In order for these respective claims to survive summary judgment, Arkansas Carpenters must, at this juncture, provide concrete evidence in support of each element underlying those claims, notwithstanding Arkansas Carpenters' belief to the contrary. (See ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 2-3.) [8] In Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, the United States Supreme Court held that:

> [T]he plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a [*29] showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden at trial. In such a situation, there can be no 'genuine issue as to any material fact,' since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial.

477 U.S. 317, 322-323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986) (emphasis added). The plain language of Celotex requires that, after adequate time for discovery has been allowed, if a non-moving party is incapable of proving any element essential to their case or claim, summary judgment is appropriate. See Heffron v. Adamar of New Jersey, 270 F.Supp.2d 562, 575 (D.N.J. 2003) (noting that in order to defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment "plaintiff 'must point to concrete evidence in the record which supports each essential element' of a claim on which he will bear the burden of proof at trial") (quoting Herbert v. Newton Memorial Hosp., 933 F.Supp. 1222, 1229 (D.N.J. 1996); *Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Equity Fin. Group, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91534, 2006 WL 3752547, at 1 (same, citing Heffron); Tozzi v. Union R.R. Co., 722 F.Supp. 1236, 1239 (W.D. Pa. 1989) [*30] (in order to withstand a motion for summary judgment, "[p]laintiff must point to concrete evidence in the record which supports each essential element of his case"). Therefore, the burden placed on Arkansas Carpenters under Rule 56 with respect to each of its claims is plain.

b. The elements of proof

On summary judgment, therefore, Arkansas Carpenters must make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of each element essential to their antitrust and unjust enrichment claims. In the case of a claim brought under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, Arkansas Carpenters must demonstrate evidence sufficient to support each of the following elements:

> (1) that the defendants contracted, combined, or conspired among each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the [*31] objects of and the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy."

Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 722 (3d Cir. 1991). Conversely, "to survive [defendants'] motion for summary judgment [on a Section 1 claim], [plaintiff] must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether petitioners entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused [plaintiff] to suffer a cognizable injury." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (emphasis added). [9] For a claim brought under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, Arkansas Carpenters must demonstrate evidence sufficient to support each of the following elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 380 (3d Cir. 2005). Thus, "to survive a summary judgment motion on [a] Sherman Act § 2…claim, [plaintiff has] [*32] to show that (1) [defendants] possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, and that (2) [defendants] willfully acquired and maintained monopoly power and did not acquire its monopoly share due to 'growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.'" Ideal Dairy Farms v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 749 (3d Cir. 1996) (citation omitted).

---

[8] "Although Defendants argue that it is not their burden to subpoena third parties to find evidence supporting a plaintiff's claim, see Def. Mem. at 5 n.6, it is not plaintiff's burden either at this time. Clearly, Indirect Purchasers will need, at the time of trial, to meet its burden of persuasion and proof…."

[9] See also Intervest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 159 (3d Cir. 2003) (noting that under the "rule of reason" standard, in order for an antitrust plaintiff to survive summary judgment, they must show "concerted action, antitrust injury, evidence that the conspiracy produced 'adverse, anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets,' and evidence 'that the objects of and the conduct pursuant' to that conspiracy were illegal").

Further, in order to state a claim for unjust enrichment, Arkansas Carpenters must demonstrate that: "(1) at plaintiff's expense (2) defendant received a benefit (3) under circumstances that would make it unjust for defendant to retain benefit without paying for it." In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F. Supp. 2d 517, 544 (D.N.J. 2004); see [*33] also *Osio v. DeMane, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40880, 2006 WL 2129460, at 18 (D.N.J. June 19, 2006) ("To succeed on an action for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must establish that a defendant received a benefit, and that the defendant's retention of that benefit would be unjust") (quoting Stearns & Foster Bedding Co. v. Franklin Holding Corp., 947 F.Supp. 790, 812 (D.N.J. 1996)). Therefore, in order to survive summary judgment on an unjust enrichment claim, a plaintiff has to present evidence that: "(1) at plaintiff's expense (2) defendant received a benefit (3) under circumstances that would make it unjust for defendant to retain benefit without paying for it." In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., at 544.

Consequently, in order to withstand summary judgment, Arkansas Carpenters must provide record evidence in support of each element of its claims. Moreover, Arkansas Carpenters, in effect, concedes that it bears the burden for proving each element of these claims. (See ACHWF Memo. of Law at 2-3.) [10]

c. The facts of record

In Celotex, the Supreme Court clearly stated that only [*34] after "adequate time for discovery" has been allowed may the entry of summary judgment be appropriate. See Celotex, at 477 U.S. at 322. In this case, I find that more than "adequate time for discovery" has been allowed. The undisputed procedural history underlying the Motion reflects that Arkansas Carpenters has had adequate opportunity both to acquire and serve responsive discovery in support of the claims asserted in its Complaint.

The undisputed factual record on the Motion [11] reflects that: (1) Arkansas Carpenters filed a class action complaint against Schering, Upsher and Wyeth on May 24, 2001; (2) on July 1, 2004, Schering served its First Set of Interrogatories (the "Interrogatories") and First Set of Document Requests (the "Document Requests") upon the Indirect Purchasers, including Arkansas Carpenters; (3) over the next twenty-two (22) months, Arkansas Carpenters did not provide a response to that discovery; (4) on May 22, 2006, Schering filed a motion to compel responses from Arkansas Carpenters; (5) on July 21, 2006, I ordered Arkansas Carpenters to provide "full and complete answers" to Schering's discovery within thirty (30) days; [12] (6) on August 21, 2006, Arkansas Carpenters [*35] served Arkansas Carpenters' Health & Welfare Fund's Consolidated Objections and Responses to Schering-Plough Corporation's First Set of Interrogatories and Requests for Production of Documents (the "Consolidated Objections and Responses"); (7) Arkansas Carpenters produced two documents in response to the Document Requests: (a) the Trust Agreement of the Oklahoma/Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund (ACHWF 1-41); and (b) the Plan Document for the Oklahoma/Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund (ACHWF 42-97); (8) neither document produced by Arkansas Carpenters reflected payments for or reimbursement of payments for branded or generic K-Dur; (9) Arkansas Carpenters did not produce any other documents in response to the Document Requests; (10) on November 6, 2006, Schering served its First Set of Requests for Admission (the "Requests") on Arkansas Carpenters; (11) on December 6, 2006, Arkansas Carpenters served its responses to Schering's Requests for Admission; (12) Arkansas Carpenters' responses to the Requests revealed, inter alia, that Arkansas Carpenters had no documents: (a) showing any payments for branded or generic K-Dur; and (b) from which payments or reimbursements [*36] for branded or generic K-Dur could be calculated; and (13) Arkansas Carpenters' Interrogatory responses did not provide any facts from which any of the foregoing information could be determined. (Defs.' Memo. of Law, at 2-3; Defs.' Statement, at 1-4.)

[10] Arkansas Carpenters dispute, however, the procedural juncture at which it must satisfy its burdens in this regard. (See ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 2-3.)

[11] This determination is based upon Arkansas Carpenters' Memo. of Law in which it submitted a "Counterstatement of Facts" with respect to only one factual issue. (ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 1.)

[12] See Special Master's Report and Recommendation on Schering-Plough Corporation's May 22, 2006 Letter Motions to Compel Discovery from Indirect Purchaser Class Representatives Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund and Great Lakes Health Plan (Docket No. 336) (the "Report"), at 8; see also Order, at 1 (Docket No. 337).

Arkansas Carpenters did not appeal my Report and Order of July 21, 2006. Accordingly, Arkansas Carpenters was required to provide "full and complete answers" to Schering's discovery within thirty (30) days of the date of the Order. (Report, at 8.) Importantly, in its response to four of the individual document requests, Arkansas Carpenters admitted that "upon information and belief, additional documents regarding potassium chloride [*37] products for which reimbursements have been made may be in the possession of the third-party administrator responsible for handling the plan, OBA Midwest, to the extent they exist." (See Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health & Welfare Fund's Consolidated Objections and Responses, at 4-9.)

Notwithstanding Arkansas Carpenters' "information and belief" in this regard and my express Order requiring "full and complete answers" to Schering's discovery requests, Arkansas Carpenters did not acquire any such documents from its third-party administrator and serve copies of such documents upon Schering within thirty (30) days of the entry of the Order. In addition, at no time prior to Defendants' filing of the Motion -- on January 17, 2007 -- did Arkansas Carpenters supplement the record in this regard. In fact, despite Arkansas Carpenters' "information and belief" about the documents in the possession of OBA Midwest, counsel for Arkansas Carpenters made no effort to subpoena the records of OBA Midwest until February 9, 2007 (See Rosemergy Declaration, at 3, P 13.) However, because Arkansas had a legitimate belief that OBA Midwest may have had responsive documents in its possession that were responsive [*38] to Schering's discovery requests at the time it filed its responses thereto, it arguably had an affirmative obligation to attempt to acquire that documentation and serve the same upon Schering within thirty (30) days of the issue of the Order. [13] Alternatively, if it were not possible to obtain these documents within the allotted thirty (30) day period, then Arkansas Carpenters should have, at least, made a concerted effort to rapidly acquire and serve any responsive documents pursuant to its obligation to "seasonably amend" responses to discovery under Rule 26(e)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Instead, it was not until over four months later that Arkansas Carpenters, through counsel, actually confirmed that any such documents were even in the possession of OBA Midwest. (Rosemergy Declaration, at 2, P 10.) Further, it may have taken as long as an additional month before those documents were subpoenaed by Arkansas Carpenters. (Id. at P 13.)

Under Rule 37(c)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, "[a] party that without substantial justification fails to disclose information required by Rule 26(a) or 26(e)(1), or to amend a prior response to discovery as required by Rule 26(e)(2), is not, unless such failure is harmless, permitted to use at trial, at a hearing, or on a motion any…information not so disclosed." Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1). In this case, Arkansas Carpenters has failed to provide any "substantial justification" for its failure to "seasonably amend" its responses to Schering's discovery. Arkansas Carpenters' failure to "seasonably amend" is even more inexplicable given that its discovery responses were preceded by a motion to compel, and the filing of the Report which clearly placed [*40] Arkansas Carpenters on notice that its failure to "fully and completely answer" discovery could result in "the possible imposition of sanctions, up to and including…dismissal." (Report, at 8-9.) Further, contemporaneous with filing its discovery responses, Arkansas Carpenters was aware (or, certainly had reason to believe) that responsive information was in the hands of its third-party administrator. Thus, at a minimum, I conclude that Arkansas Carpenters' acts or omissions in this regard are not a "harmless" failure. Indeed, given Arkansas Carpenters' dilatoriness prior to the filing of the motion to compel, its failure to reasonably amend demonstrates a conscious indifference to the express language of the Report and accompanying Order.

---

[13] See *Nobles v. Jacobs IMC, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24083, 2003 WL 23198817, at 2 (D.V.I. July 7, 2003) ("A party must produce all discoverable information or things responsive to a request that are in the party's possession, custody or control. Documents are deemed [*39] to be within the possession, custody or control of a party if the party has actual possession, custody, or control, or the legal right to obtain the documents…."); see also *Bhagwandass v. Hovensa, L.L.C., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27059, 2002 WL 32349814, 2 (D.V.I. Oct. 29, 2002) (same); *Frieman v. USAir Group, Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16994, 1994 WL 675221, at 4 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 23, 1994) (same); Camden Iron and Metal, Inc. v. Marubeni Am. Corp., 138 F.R.D. 438, 441 (D.N.J. 1991) (same).

Therefore, I conclude, consistent with Rule 37(c)(1), that the imposition of a sanction is appropriate. Accordingly, I shall exclude the Rosemergy Declaration from the summary judgment record in deciding the Motion. This sanction is consistent with the express language of the Rule and appropriate given the tortured history underlying Defendants' attempts to obtain discovery from Arkansas Carpenters. Therefore, the summary judgment record on which I [*41] shall rely for purposes of deciding this Motion are the discovery responses submitted by Arkansas Carpenters on August 21 and December 6, 2006, respectively, and the "undisputed facts" submitted by the parties to the Motion. I shall exclude the Rosemergy Declaration from the summary judgment record.

d. The evidence of record

In Arkansas Carpenters' Memo. of Law, Arkansas Carpenters argues that the only disputed fact relevant to the Motion is whether Arkansas Carpenters paid for or reimbursed payments for purchases of branded or generic K-Dur. (ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 1.) Arkansas Carpenters further argues that certain documents reflect that it did, and rely upon the Rosemergy Declaration in support of this claim. (Id.) While it is debatable whether the Rosemergy Declaration and the documents appended thereto actually reflect that Arkansas Carpenters paid for or reimbursed payments for K-Dur or its generic equivalent, [14] Arkansas Carpenters' reliance on the Rosemergy Declaration is to no avail, because, for the reasons stated above, I have excluded the Rosemergy Declaration from the summary judgment record in this case.

Had Arkansas Carpenters made some effort to "seasonably amend" or otherwise supplement its responses to Schering's Interrogatories and Document Requests in advance of the filing of the Motion, it might have been appropriate to consider the Rosemergy Declaration. However, Arkansas Carpenters had over two years to produce documents in support of its respective claims and it simply failed to do so. Admittedly, counsel for Arkansas Carpenters was aware of the existence of documents comprising Exhibit "1" of the Rosemergy Declaration three years prior to the service of Defendants' discovery. [15] Arkansas Carpenters patent inability to square this fact with the two-year delay in responding to discovery, and the actual content of the discovery responses submitted on August 21, and December 6, 2006, respectively, [*43] is fatal to Arkansas Carpenters' attempts to rely upon the Rosemergy Declaration [16] and the documents appended thereto to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact.

---

[14] Indeed, as Defendants argue in Defs. Reply Memo. (see Defs.' Reply [*42] Memo. at 2), the documents submitted as Exhibit "1" to the Rosemergy Declaration, purportedly pharmacy records, do not reflect who, in fact, paid for the prescriptions identified in the records and, apparently, do not reflect payment for or reimbursement of payments for generic K-Dur. Thus, it is unclear what, if any, conclusions or "reasonable inferences" can be drawn from these documents.

[15] "On or about July 11, 2006 and again on August 21, 2006 (to attempt to address legibility issues with the original transmission), Mr. Youngdahl forwarded to me copies of these documents, including a cover memo dated April 11, 2001, near the outset of the litigation, which indicates, 'I am enclosing copies of the K-Dur claims reimbursed by the Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund.' True and accurate copies of those documents are attached hereto as Exhibit 1, redacted to safeguard protected health information." (Rosemergy Declaration, at 2, P 6).

[16] THE SPECIAL MASTER: "Wasn't Arkansas Carpenters, though, subject to an Order I entered a couple of weeks ago or whenever it was?" MR. LIEVERMAN: "I believe it was last July about providing their documents. That's correct your Honor. And they did provide everything in their possession. Unfortunately, they did not have any of the records showing reimbursement or payments for the drugs. Those were in the hands of the third party payers [sic]. They just could [*44] not get cooperation from them. We finally subpoenaed them as -- co-leads subpoenaed them as a last effort to represent the interests of the named plaintiffs. I think as your Honor understands -- I think as all of us understand in an MDL you don't get to choose necessarily everyone on your side as co-leads. We have an obligation to act on behalf of all of the named plaintiffs. But when there is something that then harms the interests of the class, we have to try to resolve that. And we spoke with counsel for Arkansas Carpenters and he's agreed that in the interests of the class as a whole, it is better for them to withdraw their claim. So yes, there was an Order, and I believe they obeyed that Order, with the possible exception of the few pages demonstrating reimbursement that, as Mr. Rosemergy said, he believed, erroneous as it turned out, those had been provided. That was simply a mistake on our part and we apologize. But with that exception, what they had was turned over. What they didn't have was in the hands of the third-party payers [sic]. We subpoenaed it. Now having seen it, there is just nothing that makes this goes [sic]

In the absence of the Rosemergy Declaration, any support for Arkansas Carpenters' lone "disputed" fact -- i.e., that it "paid for or reimbursed plan participants for purchases of K-Dur or generic equivalents" (ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 1) -- is simply lacking, leaving Arkansas Carpenters incapable of proving each element of their respective claims for relief. Under these circumstances, there are no genuine issues of material fact in dispute and, as such, Defendants would be entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Alternatively, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment because Arkansas Carpenters is incapable of proving the element of "injury" or loss for its respective claims. In its Memo. of Law and its Reply Memo., Defendants argue that Arkansas Carpenters' claims are subject to dismissal because it is incapable of proving that it suffered the element of "injury" inherent in each claim. (See Defs.' Memo. of Law, at 4-5; Defs.' Reply Memo, at 2.) For its part, Arkansas Carpenters concedes that "an antitrust plaintiff must show injury, or 'impact,' as an element of its claim, [*46] which is separate from damages." (ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 2.) See Pennsylvania v. Milk Indus. Mgmt. Corp., 812 F.Supp. 500, 507 (E.D. Pa. 1992) ("[I]t has been said that to establish liability under the various provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, proof must be provided that the Defendants' conduct violated the Sherman Act and that the plaintiffs suffered an actual anti-trust injury as a result…."); Prima v. Darden Restaurants, Inc., 78 F.Supp.2d 337, 355 (D.N.J. 2000) (quoting Eli Lilly and Co. v. Roussel Corp., 23 F.Supp.2d 460, 496 (D.N.J. 1998) ("[T]he tort of unjust enrichment rests on the equitable principle that a person shall not be allowed to enrich himself unjustly at the expense of another") (emphasis added). Even if the Rosemergy Declaration were part of the record in this case, the fact of payment or reimbursement by Arkansas Carpenters alone is insufficient to demonstrate "injury," loss or "impact." In order to satisfy its burden in this regard, at a minimum, Arkansas Carpenters must be able to demonstrate, for example, that it paid more for branded, than generic K-Dur, or that an artificially inflated price for branded K-Dur had a detrimental "impact" on Arkansas [*47] Carpenters. Presenting record evidence in support of this element of Arkansas Carpenters' claims is clearly part of Arkansas Carpenters' burden on summary judgment. See Heffron, 270 F.Supp.2d at 575 (noting that in order to defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment, "plaintiff 'must point to concrete evidence in the record which supports each essential element' of a claim on which he will bear the burden of proof at trial"). However, this is a burden that Arkansas Carpenters cannot satisfy because record evidence in support of this element of each claim is simply lacking.

Moreover, even if Arkansas Carpenters had an opportunity to supplement the record in this regard, it is questionable whether it could even provide adequate evidence of "injury" or "impact." Indeed, counsel for Arkansas Carpenters virtually conceded that, even with the benefit of additional time, Arkansas Carpenters will be incapable of filing a proof claim if and when the case settles or is otherwise resolved in the Plaintiffs' favor. (See Hrg. Tr. at 12-13.) [17] [18] Uncertainty, however, in the face of a motion for summary judgment is simply not good enough. See forward as a practical matter. I don't want to turn [*45] over confidential health information in violation of HIPA [sic] to the defendants, frankly." (Hrg. Tr. at 14-15.)

---

[17] THE SPECIAL MASTER: "First of all, you're saying they're still a named plaintiff in their own case?" MR. LIEVERMAN: "They are, but they want to withdraw that as well. It goes back to the documents." THE SPECIAL MASTER: "Well, maybe I'm not understanding this. They want to withdraw entirely from the case?" MR. LIEVERMAN: "Yes." THE SPECIAL MASTER: "Do they want to remain a member of the class?" MR. [*49] LIEVERMAN: "They'd like to remain a member of the class although, frankly, it will be difficult for them to file a proof of claim when the case is settled because of the way in which they now keep their documents. As I tried to describe in my letter -- and I think you got a flavor of it in the exhibit to Mr. Rosemergy's declaration. There is no rhyme or reason to these records. There are 68 boxes of medical receipts from doctors, from pharmacies, from hospitals and they got stamps on them that show they've been reimbursed, although I don't think the stamps says that. And they're stuck in boxes randomly. To produce those to Mr. -- to defendants right now, the boxes we've looked through, would require a page-by-page review by our lawyers and a redaction of the protected health information as required by HIPA [sic], federal regulations. That is a monumental undertaking and one that doesn't advance anyone's interests, including Arkansas Carpenters at this point. On that basis alone there is really no reason to have their case go forward at all. That is why, now that we've had the chance to look at the documents, I wrote the letter and said we don't need the extra time. We've looked through [*50] it and we know that really -- out of fairness to all the parties as well as to the class, the claims of Arkansas Carpenters are actually going to impede the claims of the class." (Hrg. Tr. at 12-14.)

*e.g., Borough of Olyphant, Pennsylvania v. PP&L, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8958, 2004 WL 1091037, at 11 (E.D. Pa. May 14, 2004) [*48] (noting that on summary judgment, "failure to produce sufficient evidence to allow a reasonable jury to find in plaintiff's favor on any one facet of [a]…Sherman Act claim is fatal to the entire claim"). Arkansas Carpenters has an affirmative obligation to present whatever evidence it has to support each and every element of its claims in this case. See e.g., Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 322-323. If Arkansas Carpenters' own counsel is not confident that, upon settlement or judgment in Plaintiffs' favor, Arkansas Carpenters would have sufficient records to file a "competent proof of claim," (see note 18, infra), then not only is summary judgment appropriate for the claims brought by Arkansas Carpenters, but they arguably lack standing to even be a plaintiff in the consolidated class action.

Therefore, since I conclude that Arkansas Carpenters has not, [*51] and is incapable of providing adequate evidence in support of each element of its claims for relief, as is its obligation in opposing a motion for summary judgment, I conclude that there are no genuine issues of material fact material sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Accordingly, I find that summary judgment is appropriate as to each claim asserted in Arkansas Carpenters' Complaint.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, I conclude that the Motion of Defendants, Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle, for summary judgment on the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund's class action complaint should be granted. Further, Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund shall be dismissed as a party from the consolidated action and shall not be permitted to participate as a member of the class of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs in the consolidated action should that class be certified.

As provided in the Order entered by Magistrate Judge Arleo in this matter, the Special Master's decision on any motion can be appealed to Judge Greenaway in the manner, and subject to the standards [*52] of review set forth in Rule 53 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and applicable Local Rules.

ENTERED this 19th day of April, 2007

/s/ Stephen M. Orlofsky

STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY

SPECIAL MASTER

ORDER

The Special Master having considered the Motion of Defendants, Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle, for Summary Judgment against Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund, the briefs filed by all parties in support of

---

[18] THE SPECIAL MASTER: "Let me ask you a question?" MR. LIEVERMAN: "Yes." THE SPECIAL MASTER: "Let's assume I would allow them to remain in the class. Where does this problem get solved? What you're telling me is that their records are virtually impossible to put together; that it requires, you know, a page-by-page analysis. Even if the class were to be certified -- MR. LIEVERMAN: "Correct." THE SPECIAL MASTER: -- you, yourself, have conceded that they would have difficulty preparing and filing a proof of claim." MR. LIEVERMAN: "From what I've seen, that's correct. Now, they may find -- that they may have records, depending on the class period. They may have certain records that are good enough that they can file a competent proof of claim and get some money back. I don't think so, frankly, from what I've seen. But I'm just a little loathe to, you know, foreclose them from filing any proof of claim later on." (Hrg. Tr. at 16.)

and in opposition to the Motion, as well as the oral argument of counsel, for the reasons set forth in the foregoing Report and Recommendation;

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, this 19th day of April, 2007, that:

(1) the Defendants' motion for summary judgment is hereby GRANTED; and

(2) Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund shall be dismissed as a party from the consolidated action and shall not be permitted to participate as a member of the class of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs in the consolidated action should such a class be certified.

ENTERED this 19th day of April, 2007

/s/ Stephen M. Orlofsky

STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY

SPECIAL MASTER

S&M Brands, Inc. v. Summers

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

April 19, 2007, Filed

File Name: 07a0283n.06

No. 06-5148

Reporter

228 Fed. Appx. 560 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 9218 ; 2007 FED App. 0283N (6th Cir.); 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,673

S&M BRANDS, INC., and INTERNATIONAL TOBACCO PARTNERS, LTD., Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. PAUL G. SUMMERS, in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Tennessee, Defendant-Appellee.

Notice: [1] CONSULT 6TH CIR. R. 32.1 FOR CITATION OF UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS AND DECISIONS.

Prior History: ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

S&M Brands, Inc. v. Summers, 393 F. Supp. 2d 604, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23216 (M.D. Tenn., 2005)

Core Terms

Tobacco, antitrust, district court, Sherman Act, dormant, manufacturers, preempted

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must allege facts which, if proved, would entitle them to relief. A court construes the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept the plaintiff's factual allegations as true, and determines whether the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claims that would entitle the plaintiff to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Scope

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in part that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. State statutes that authorize or compel private parties to act anticompetitively can violate § 1 of the Sherman Act; however, not all state statutes that restrain competition violate the Act. To bring a valid claim, a plaintiff must show, among other things, that the Sherman Act preempts the state statute in question.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > En Banc Determinations

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN3[] Appeals, En Banc Determinations

In the Sixth Circuit, a panel of a United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit cannot overrule the decision of another panel. The prior decision remains controlling authority unless an inconsistent decision of the United States Supreme Court requires modification of the decision or the Sixth Circuit sitting en banc overrules the prior decision. 6th Cir. R. 206(c) states that reported panel opinions are binding on subsequent panels. Thus, no subsequent panel overrules a published opinion of a previous panel.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN4[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

Issues which were raised in the district court, yet not raised on appeal, are considered abandoned and not reviewable on appeal.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > General Overview

HN5[] Appeals, Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions

An appellate court will not consider arguments raised for the first time on appeal unless our failure to consider the issue will result in a plain miscarriage of justice.

Counsel: For S & M BRANDS, INC., INTERNATIONAL TOBACCO PARTNERS, LTD., Plaintiffs - Appellants: Jennifer S. Ghanem, Lassiter, Tidwell & Hildebrand, Nashville, TN; David F. Dobbins, Patterson, Belknap, Webb & Tyler, New York, NY.

For PAUL G. SUMMERS, in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Tennessee, Defendant - Appellee: Russell T. Perkins, Asst. Atty. General, Daniel W. Champney, John H. Sinclair, Jr., Asst. Atty. General, Office of the Attorney General, Nashville, TN.

Judges: BEFORE: KENNEDY, MOORE, and McKEAGUE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: McKEAGUE

Opinion

[*561] McKEAGUE, Circuit Judge. S&M Brands, Inc. and International Tobacco Partners, Ltd. ("ITP") sued Paul G. Summers in his official capacity as the Attorney General of the State of Tennessee. [1] They claim [2] that the State of Tennessee has violated federal antitrust law and the U.S. Constitution in its implementation and application of the Master Settlement Agreement ("MSA") between various states and major tobacco manufacturers. The district court dismissed all but one of their claims under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). [2] As explained below, we affirm the district court's dismissal in favor of the Attorney General.

[3] I

The Appellants' claims arose in connection with the MSA executed in November 1998 by and among forty-six states (including Tennessee) and six territories as well as the four largest domestic cigarette manufacturers (Philip Morris USA, Inc., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Brown & Williamson Tobacco Company, and Lorillard Tobacco Company). S&M Brands is a tobacco product manufacturer and ITP is an importer of tobacco products. Neither company has joined the MSA.

In their complaint, the Appellants challenge the validity of certain statutes enacted by Tennessee pursuant to the terms of the MSA, including the Tennessee Tobacco Manufacturers' Escrow Fund Act of 1999, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-31-101 et seq. ("Escrow Act") (as amended), and the tax laws passed to aid in the enforcement of the Escrow Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 67-4-2601 et seq. (collectively, the "Tobacco Statutes"). Specifically, the Appellants claim that the enactment and enforcement of the Tobacco Statutes have had the effect of implementing an illegal combination or "output cartel" created by the settling states and the participating manufacturers in the [4] MSA, and that this implementation constitutes a per se restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. They further contend that the enforcement of the Tobacco Statutes violates their rights under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment as well as their First Amendment [*562] rights of freedom of speech and freedom to petition. Finally, in their response to the Attorney General's motion to dismiss, the Appellants assert that the Tobacco Statutes violate their rights to substantive and procedural due process under the Fourteenth Amendment. [3]

On the Attorney General's motion, the district court dismissed the claims. The district court held that Tennessee's Tobacco Statutes were not preempted by the Sherman Act. S&M Brands, Inc. v. Summers, 393 F. Supp. 2d 604, 629-30 (M.D. Tenn. 2005). On the constitutional claims, the district court concluded that [5] the Appellants failed to state any valid claim for relief. Id. at 630-38.

The Appellants timely appealed.

II

A. Standard of Review

HN1[] We review de novo a dismissal for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). Se. Tex. Inns. Inc. v. Prime Hospitality Corp., 462 F.3d 666, 671 (6th Cir. 2006). To survive a motion to dismiss, the Appellants' complaint must allege facts which, if proved, would entitle them to relief. Id. We construe the complaint in the light most favorable to [1] On November 1, 2006, Robert E. Cooper, Jr., was sworn in as the Attorney General for the State of Tennessee.

[2] On the Appellants' remaining claim--Tennessee's enforcement of a recent amendment to its tobacco legislation had an impermissible retroactive effect--the district court granted partial summary judgment to both parties. S&M Brands, Inc. v. Summers, 420 F. Supp. 2d 840 (M.D. Tenn. 2006); S&M Brands, Inc. v. Summers, No. 05-171, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31138, 2005 WL 3160869 (M.D. Tenn. Nov. 28, 2005). They have sought review of the ruling in a separate set of appeals. S&M Brands v. Summers, Nos. 06-5828/5829. Accordingly, the Appellants' retroactivity claim is not before us today in this appeal.

[3] These claims are separate from the retroactivity claim. See supra note 2.

the Appellants, accept their factual allegations as true, and determine whether they can prove no set of facts in support of their claims that would entitle them to relief. Id.

B. Antitrust Claims

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. State statutes that authorize or compel private parties to act anticompetitively can violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act; however, not all state statutes that restrain [6] competition violate the Act. To bring a valid claim, a plaintiff must show, among other things, that the Sherman Act preempts the state statute in question. Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 659, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982); McNeilus Truck & Mfg. Co. v. Ohio, 226 F.3d 429, 440 (6th Cir. 2000).

After the parties filed their briefs, another panel of this court issued a published decision in a case similar to the present one. In Tritent International Corp. v. Kentucky, 467 F.3d 547 (6th Cir. 2006), the court considered whether the State of Kentucky violated the federal antitrust laws in connection with its implementation and application of the MSA. The court held that Kentucky's tobacco legislation was not preempted by the Sherman Act because the legislation did not "mandate[] or authorize[] conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or . . . place[] irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute." Id. at 554 (quoting Rice, 458 U.S. at 661). The manufacturers' failure to establish that the Sherman Act preempted [7] Kentucky's tobacco legislation was fatal to their antitrust claims. Id. at 558-59.

Because Tennessee's Tobacco Statutes are identical in all material respects to the Kentucky legislation at issue in Tritent, we asked the parties to submit supplemental briefs on the impact of that decision on the present appeal. The Appellants concede in their supplemental brief that "the antitrust issues raised on that appeal [Tritent] . . . are the same as those involved here." Plaintiffs-Appellants Supp. Br. at 1. Our own review confirms that Tritent is directly on-point to the antitrust claims in this appeal.

[*563] HN3[] " A panel of this Court cannot overrule the decision of another panel. The prior decision remains controlling authority unless an inconsistent decision of the United States Supreme Court requires modification of the decision or this Court sitting en banc overrules the prior decision." Salmi v. Sec'y of Health & Human Servs., 774 F.2d 685, 689 (6th Cir. 1985) (citing Timmreck v. United States, 577 F.2d 372, 376 n.15 (6th Cir. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 441 U.S. 780, 99 S. Ct. 2085, 60 L. Ed. 2d 634, on remand, 600 F.2d 1228 (6th Cir. 1979)); [8] see also 6th Cir. R. 206(c) ("Reported panel opinions are binding on subsequent panels. Thus, no subsequent panel overrules a published opinion of a previous panel."). Under the reasoning of Tritent, we hold that the Sherman Act does not preempt Tennessee's Tobacco Statutes; therefore, we affirm the dismissal of the Appellants' antitrust claims.

C. Constitutional Claims Raised Before the District Court

The Appellants have not raised any issues in this appeal involving their Equal Protection, Due Process, or First Amendment claims. HN4[] "Issues which were raised in the district court, yet not raised on appeal, are considered abandoned and not reviewable on appeal." Renkel v. United States, 456 F.3d 640, 642 n.1 (6th Cir. 2006) (quoting Robinson v. Jones, 142 F.3d 905, 906 (6th Cir. 1998)). Accordingly, we will not address those claims on appeal.

D. Dormant Commerce Clause

Finally, in their supplemental brief, the Appellants argue that a claim under the dormant Commerce Clause survives Tritent. They are correct that Tritent did not involve a claim brought under the dormant Commerce Clause. U.S. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3 [9] . Yet, the Appellants did not assert a dormant Commerce Clause claim in their complaint. Nor does it appear that they otherwise brought such a claim to the attention of the district court. See, e.g., Plaintiffs-Appellants Final Br. at 56 n.21 ("In the event of a reversal [of the district court], plaintiffs will amend their complaint to plead this dormant Commerce Clause violation.").

"It is well-settled that this HN5[] court will not consider arguments raised for the first time on appeal unless our failure to consider the issue will result in a plain miscarriage of justice." Overstreet v. Lexington-Fayette Urban County Gov't, 305 F.3d 566, 578 (6th Cir. 2002) (quoting Bailey v. Floyd County Bd. of Educ., 106 F.3d 135, 143 (6th Cir. 1997)); see also Renkel, 456 F.3d at 642 n.1 (same). As the Appellants have not shown that failure to consider their dormant Commerce Clause argument will result in a plain miscarriage of justice, we will not consider it for the first time on appeal.

III

Accordingly, we AFFIRM.

Olde Monmouth Stock Transfer Co. v. Depository Trust & Clearing Corp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

April 23, 2007, Decided ; April 23, 2007, Filed

07 Civ. 990 (CSH)

Reporter
485 F. Supp. 2d 387 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29938 ; 2007-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,948

OLDE MONMOUTH STOCK TRANSFER CO., INC., Plaintiff, -against- DEPOSITORY TRUST & CLEARING CORPORATION and DEPOSITORY TRUST COMPANY, Defendants.

Core Terms

allegations, transfer agent, stock transfer, compete, stock, monopolization, relevant market, motion to dismiss, cause of action, Sherman Act, competitor, antitrust, preliminary injunction, airline, depository, plaintiff's claim, monopoly, communications, certificates, customers, terminated, ski, anticompetitive, transactions, issuers, malice, tortious interference, monopoly power, defendants', probability

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN1[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

When a plaintiff moves for preliminary injunctive relief, it does so on the basis and in aid of its previously filed complaint. The objective of a plaintiff moving for a preliminary injunction is to obtain relief pendente lite with respect to the claims plaintiff pleads in its complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding a motion to dismiss a complaint, a court looks only to the well-pleaded allegations in the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss a complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a district court's function is merely to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint, not to assay the weight of the evidence which might be offered in support thereof. In reviewing a motion to dismiss, a court must accept the material facts alleged in the complaint as true and construe all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. While the pleading standard is a liberal one, bald assertions and conclusions of law will not suffice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

A complaint must contain allegations concerning each of the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under a viable legal theory. An antitrust plaintiff cannot create a cause of action by pleading conclusory allegations which merely recite the litany of antitrust. Rather, a plaintiff's complaint must adequately allege facts establishing the required elements of an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The U.S. Supreme Court has explained that the offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power. To state an attempted monopolization claim, a plaintiff must allege (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has explained that it is axiomatic that a firm cannot monopolize a market in which it does not compete and that there can be no "dangerous probability" of monopolization--a necessary element of an attempted monopoly claim--where defendants do not even compete in that the relevant market and there is no indication that they ever sought to do so.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > Opposing Memoranda

HN7[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

It is long-standing precedent in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit that parties cannot amend their pleadings through issues raised solely in their briefs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A claim of monopoly leveraging requires that a defendant (1) possessed monopoly power in one market; (2) used that power to create a dangerous probability of monopolizing another market; and (3) caused injury by such anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The "dangerous probability" of monopolization factor is usually assessed by a defendant's current market share--not by the possibility that the defendant might enter the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

The elements of an essential facility claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, are: (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility. The essential facility doctrine is intended to prevent a competitor from obtaining an unfair advantage in a market by denying to its actual or potential competitors access to a facility essential for use of that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN11[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Courts have recognized that the New Jersey state antitrust statutes shall be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes and that New Jersey looks to federal jurisprudence to guide its interpretation of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-1 to 19.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits contracts, combinations, or conspiracies that unreasonably restrain trade in the relevant market. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Absent an actual agreement, a plaintiff's claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, must fail. there can be no liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act in the absence of agreement between separate entities.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN14[] Intentional Interference, Elements

Under New Jersey law, a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage requires: (1) a reasonable expectation of economic advantage to plaintiff, (2) interference done intentionally and with "malice," (3) causal connection between the interference and the loss of prospective gain, and (4) actual damages.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN15[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The New Jersey Supreme Court has explained that in a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, malice is not used in its literal sense to mean "ill will"; rather, it means that harm was inflicted intentionally and without justification or excuse.

Counsel: [1] For Olde Monmouth Stock Transfer Co., Inc., Plaintiff: Edward Roland Gallion, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gallion & Spielvogel(New York), New York, NY, Steven Spielvogel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gallion & Spielvogel, Garden City, NY.

For Depository Trust & Clearing Corporation, Depository Trust Company, Defendants: Gregg M. Mashberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Proskauer Rose LLP (New York), New York, NY, Karen Deborah Coombs, LEAD ATTORNEY, Proskauer Rose LLP (New York), New York, NY.

Judges: CHARLES S. HAIGHT, JR., Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: CHARLES S. HAIGHT, JR.

Opinion

[*388]

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

HAIGHT, Senior District Judge:

In this action, plaintiff Olde Monmouth Stock Transfer Co., Inc. ("Olde Monmouth") alleges that defendants Depository Trust & Clearing Corporation ("DTCC") and Depository Trust Company ("DTC") violated federal and state antitrust laws by unreasonably excluding Olde Monmouth from DTC's Fast Automated Securities Transfer ("FAST") Program. Plaintiff also alleges that DTC tortiously interfered with Olde Monmouth's economic relationships with existing and potential future customers by contacting some of plaintiff's clients and undermining Olde Monmouth's business relationships. Furthermore, [2] plaintiff suggests that DTC may have publicized Olde Monmouth's exclusion from the FAST Program to the stock issuing community.

Plaintiff moved for a preliminary injunction, requesting that this Court affirmatively order DTC immediately to approve Olde Monmouth's application for participation [*389] in the FAST Program. [1] Defendants filed a cross-motion to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P., for failure to state an actionable claim for relief.

I. BACKGROUND

A. [3] Factual Summary

Defendant DTC is a clearing agency, registered with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") under Section 17A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which provides central securities depository services for the nation's securities industry. [2] DTC acts as a depository for trillions of dollars worth of physical securities certificates, which are maintained in a central location; and it operates an automated, centralized system for book-entry transfers of securities among its participants, the beneficial owners of securities deposited at DTC. It describes itself as a "utility" for the securities industry that facilitates prompt and accurate settlement of securities transactions, and aims to increase the efficiency of such transactions by reducing the need for actual physical transfer of individual stock certificates. DTC charges its participants fees for services, but operates on a cost basis; revenues in excess of operating costs and reserves are refunded to participants. Olde Monmouth asserts that DTC enjoys a monopoly over the entire securities depository industry, as demonstrated by the fact that DTC is the stock custodian for some 2.5 million [4] issuers, valued at more than $28 trillion.

Plaintiff Olde Monmouth is a stock transfer agent duly and properly registered with the SEC, pursuant to Section 17A(c) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. [3] As a transfer agent, Olde Monmouth performs various services for its clients, which are companies that issue publicly-traded shares of stock. For example, transfer agents issue new stock certificates in withdrawal by transfer transactions when an owner seeks to obtain a physical certificate for his or her shares. In addition, transfer agents process deposits of physical securities and maintain books and records on the securities issued by their clients. Olde Monmouth keeps track of the constantly shifting ownership rolls of its clients' stocks and acts as an intermediary between its clients and DTC. As a stock [5] transfer agent, Olde Monmouth is paid transaction fees by its clients, as well as by DTC.

Under DTC's FAST Program, some transfer agents can be appointed to act as DTC's agents. The purpose of the program is to eliminate the movement of physical securities by allowing transfer agents to hold one balance certificate for each issuing company--and to adjust the balance on that certificate--rather than issuing multiple stock certificates. The program is intended to reduce the cost of creating, transporting, and storing stock certificates. Transfer agents appointed as [*390] FAST agents enter into a contractual relationship with DTC governing the treatment of stock ownership records for their FAST stock issues. A transfer agent may become a FAST agent by submitting an application and obtaining approval from DTC.

---

[1] Initially, Olde Monmouth also sought a preliminary injunction restraining DTC from its allegedly tortious communications with Olde Monmouth's clients. After defendants agreed not to initiate any further unsolicited communications with clients about Olde Monmouth's fees, plaintiff withdrew this request for preliminary injunctive relief. In consequence, Olde Monmouth's present motion for a preliminary injunction depends entirely upon the viability of its antitrust claims.

[2] Defendant DTC is a wholly-owned subsidiary of defendant DTCC. Both defendants are incorporated under the laws of the state of New York with their principal place of business located in New York City.

[3] Olde Monmouth is incorporated under the laws of New Jersey with its principal place of business located in New Jersey.

The present dispute arises out of Olde Monmouth's efforts to become a FAST agent in order [6] to participate in DTC's Direct Registration System ("DRS"). Under DRS, individual investors have the ability to establish a direct book entry position with the issuer, either through the issuer's transfer agent or the investor's broker, without having to hold a physical certificate. The major stock exchanges in the United States--including the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, and the NASDAQ--have made or will soon make DRS participation a listing requirement for their exchanges. To be eligible for DRS, the issuing company must have a transfer agent that has been approved for the FAST Program.

Olde Monmouth believes that participation in the FAST Program is of critical importance for retaining its existing clients and attracting new ones. Accordingly, Olde Monmouth has made vigorous efforts to join the FAST program. In March 2006, Olde Monmouth began inquiring with DTC about participating in the FAST program. After obtaining the necessary application materials, Olde Monmouth submitted an application to become a FAST agent on May 19, 2006. On June 22, 2006, DTC advised Olde Monmouth that it had determined not to use Olde Monmouth's services as a FAST agent, noting [7] that Olde Monmouth had been cited for certain operational deficiencies in SEC reviews. After this rejection notice, Olde Monmouth made numerous written and telephone inquiries to DTC about its application, and attempted to show that it had cured the deficiencies cited by the SEC and that it was otherwise in complete compliance with all of the FAST Program's requirements, as well as DTC's proposed--and not yet enacted--criteria for eligibility. However, despite these efforts, DTC did not approve Olde Monmouth's application for the FAST Program.

Beginning in July 2006, Olde Monmouth also decided to raise the fees that it charged DTC in an effort to pressure DTC to process and approve Olde Monmouth's FAST application. Olde Monmouth instituted a series of steep fee increases, such that by October 8, 2006, the charge for a single withdrawal by transfer--originally $35--was now $700. Olde Monmouth represented that it would revert to the original fee schedule if DTC approved its FAST application. DTC estimates that, as of the time of the present litigation, it had paid Olde Monmouth approximately $1.1 million in excessive fees.

After the fee increases, DTC contacted several of Olde [8] Monmouth's clients, complained about the fees Olde Monmouth was charging DTC, intimated that it might stop processing physical transactions for Olde Monmouth's clients, [4] and suggested that the clients should consider using a different stock transfer agent. Olde Monmouth claims that these communications were malicious attempts to injure Olde Monmouth by disrupting its business relationships. DTC contends that, in light of the exorbitant transaction fees charged by Olde Monmouth (which were passed on to participants), it was reasonable for DTC to notify participants of the fee increases and to advise those issuers that DTC was considering "chilling" the issues for companies using Olde Monmouth as their transfer agent.

[*391] Finally, Olde Monmouth suggests that DTC has publicized Olde Monmouth's exclusion from the FAST Program to the stock issuing community at large, and thus hindered Olde Monmouth's ability to attract new clients.

[9] B. Plaintiff's Claims

Plaintiff's Verified Complaint asserts seven causes of action: claims for actual and attempted monopolization pursuant to Section 2 of the Sherman Act (plaintiff's First and Second Causes of Action), attempted monopolization pursuant to Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Third Cause of Action), companion claims pursuant to New Jersey antitrust statutes (Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Causes of Action), and a common law claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage (Seventh Cause of Action). Plaintiff seeks compensatory, punitive, exemplary, and treble damages, as well as injunctive relief requiring DTC to enroll Olde Monmouth in the FAST Program.

Based on these claims, Olde Monmouth moves for a preliminary injunction which if granted would compel DTC to approve Olde Monmouth's application to the FAST Program. [5] DTC opposes that motion and cross-moves to dismiss Olde Monmouth's complaint.

---

[4] A stop on physical processing is known in the industry as "chilling" the issue.

[10] II. DISCUSSION

A. Procedural Analysis

While DTC's cross-motion to dismiss Olde Monmouth's complaint was filed after Olde Monmouth moved for a preliminary injunction, I will consider it first, for the following reasons.

Every federal civil case begins with the filing of a complaint. HN1[] When a plaintiff moves for preliminary injunctive relief, it does so on the basis and in aid of its previously filed complaint. The objective of a plaintiff moving for a preliminary injunction is to obtain relief pendente lite with respect to the claims plaintiff pleads in its complaint.

Given these procedural realities, the Court properly considers DTC's motion to dismiss Olde Monmouth's complaint before considering plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction. DTC moves to dismiss the complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) on the ground that it fails to state a claim upon which relief--any form of relief--can be granted. If DTC's motion is well founded, Olde Mountain's complaint falls and its motion for a preliminary injunction necessarily falls with it.

Moreover, HN2[] in deciding DTC's motion to dismiss the complaint, the Court looks only to the well-pleaded allegations in the complaint. [11] Olde Monmouth, in support of its motion for a preliminary injunction, has submitted affidavits and briefs. Their contents fall outside the four corners of the complaint and I do not consider them in deciding DTC's motion to dismiss the complaint. See the cases cited in Part II.C., infra.

B. Standard of Review on a Motion to Dismiss

HN3[] On a motion to dismiss a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), the district court's function "is merely to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint, not to assay the weight of the evidence which might be offered in support thereof." Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639 (2d Cir. 1980). In reviewing [*392] a motion to dismiss, "the court must accept the material facts alleged in the complaint as true and construe all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor." Hernandez v. Coughlin, 18 F.3d 133, 136 (2d Cir. 1994). But "[w]hile the pleading standard is a liberal one, bald assertions and conclusions of law will not suffice." Leeds v. Meltz, 85 F.3d 51, 53 (2d Cir. 1996).

HN4[] "[T]he complaint must contain allegations concerning each of the material elements necessary to sustain recovery [12] under a viable legal theory." *Yurman Design Inc. v. Chaindom Enters., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9243, 2000 WL 897141, at 4 (S.D.N.Y. July 5, 2000). Thus, "[a]n antitrust plaintiff cannot create a cause of action by pleading conclusory allegations which merely recite the litany of antitrust." Doron Precision Sys., Inc. v. FAAC, Inc., 423 F. Supp. 2d 173, 179 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (quotations and citation omitted). Rather, the plaintiff's complaint must adequately allege facts establishing the required elements of an antitrust violation. Id.

C. Plaintiff's Claims Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act

HN5[] The Supreme Court has explained that "[t]he offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power . . . ." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). To state an attempted monopolization claim, a plaintiff must allege "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly [13] power" in the relevant market. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). In the case at bar, Olde Monmouth asserts that "[t]he relevant market in each antitrust claim . . . is the market for stock transfer agent services." Compl. P 43.

---

[5] As noted above, Olde Monmouth initially also moved for a preliminary injunction to restrain DTC from further allegedly tortious communications with Olde Monmouth's clients and potential clients, but plaintiff withdrew this request after an agreement was reached between the parties.

The complaint alleges that DTC "enjoys a monopoly over the entire securities depository industry." Compl. P 42. But this industry is distinct from the stock transfer agent industry, in which Olde Monmouth competes, and the complaint fails to allege that DTC actually competes in the relevant market. [6] See Compl. P 42 (alleging that DTC competes in the securities depository market and that it exerts influence on "the very closely related stock transfer agency industry"). Because DTC does not compete in the relevant market--the market for stock transfer agents in which Olde Monmouth competes--plaintiff cannot, as a matter of law, state a claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization of that market by DTC. HN6[] The Second Circuit has explained that "it is axiomatic that a firm cannot monopolize a market in which it does not compete" and that there can be no "dangerous probability" of monopolization--a [14] necessary element of an attempted monopoly claim--where the defendants "do not even compete in that [the relevant] market and there is no indication that they ever sought to do so." Discon, Inv. v. NYNEX Corp., 93 F.3d 1055, 1062 (2d Cir. 1996), rev'd on other grounds, 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998).

Plaintiff argues that DTC's "influence" over the transfer agent industry, which it exerts from its monopoly position in the closely related securities [*393] depository industry, "is precisely the type of market power the antitrust laws were enacted to protect the consuming public [from]." Pl.'s Br. at 12. But Olde Monmouth offers no legal authority for the proposition that market power under Section 2 of the Sherman Act encompasses "influence" [15] by a non-competitor over the relevant market. In fact, the Second Circuit rejected a similar theory in the context of the antitrust provisions in Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in Official Airline Guides, Inc. v. FTC, 630 F.2d 920 (2d Cir. 1980). The petitioner in Official Airline Guides published an airline guide that provided detailed information on flight connections and fares. At the time, the guide was considered the "bible" of the industry, and was the "standard reference for airline ticket officers, travel agents, businesses, and the public generally." Id. at 921-22. The publisher's arbitrary failure to list the connecting flight schedules of commuter airlines (as it did for certified airlines) hindered the commuter airlines' ability to compete with certified airlines. Although the guide injured competition among air carriers, the Court of Appeals emphasized that the defendant, "though possibly a monopolist in the airline schedule publishing industry, admittedly had no anticompetitive motive or intent with respect to the airline industry and is engaged in a different line of commerce from that of the air carriers." Id. at 926. [16] Thus, the court held that the publisher had no duty "not to discriminate unjustifiably between certified air carriers and commuter airlines so as to place the latter at a significant competitive disadvantage." Id. at 921. [7]

Thus, plaintiff's legal theories for monopolization and attempted monopolization are fundamentally flawed because the complaint fails to allege that DTC competes in the [17] relevant market. Plaintiff attempts to remedy this defect by raising new factual allegations in its briefing papers. But HN7[] "[i]t is long-standing precedent in this circuit that parties cannot amend their pleadings through issues raised solely in their briefs." Fadem v. Ford Motor Co., 352 F. Supp. 2d 501, 516 (S.D.N.Y. 2005). See also Lazaro v. Good Samaritan Hosp., 54 F. Supp. 2d 180, 184 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) ("it is axiomatic that the Complaint cannot be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss" (quoting O'Brien v. Nat'l Prop. Analysts Partners, 719 F. Supp. 222, 229 (S.D.N.Y. 1989)); Jacobson v. Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., 445 F. Supp. 518, 526 (S.D.N.Y. 1977) ("a party is not entitled to amend his pleading through statements in his brief").

Even if I were to consider these new factual allegations, they fail to demonstrate a viable monopoly claim against DTC. First, plaintiff suggests that DTC might be planning to enter the stock transfer agency market. John Troster, President of Olde Monmouth, states: "Notwithstanding the fact that I have no personal knowledge suggesting that

---

[6] In addition, stock transfer agents must be registered with the SEC pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 78q-1(c). Olde Monmouth has not alleged that DTC is registered, or has sought to register, as a transfer agent with the SEC.

[7] In Official Airline Guides, the Second Circuit also rejected the FTC's suggestion that "if the only supermarket in town decides to stock Birdseye vegetables but not Green Giant vegetables, the FTC would be able to require it to stock Green Giant vegetables if it were to find Green Giant competitively disadvantaged." Id. at 927. Rather, it concluded that "even a monopolist" had the right to exercise its discretion as to the parties with whom it would deal, so long as it "had no purpose to restrain competition or to enhance or expand [its] monopoly." Id. at 927-28.

Defendants actively [18] or overtly participate or engage in the stock transfer agency industry, it is abundantly clear that Defendants could at any time, and quite conceivably might be preparing to, participate or so engage." Troster Decl. P 36. This assertion is purely speculative, and does not adequately allege that DTC competes in the relevant market. Second, plaintiff contends that [*394] "many DTCC Board members are employed by companies that are transfer agents or affiliated with companies that are FAST-approved transfer agents," Troster Decl. P 36, and that some of DTC's participants (the shareholder/owners of DTCC and DTC) "own outright or otherwise control stock transfer agency affiliates that vie with and compete directly against Olde Monmouth to provide stock transfer agent services to securities issuers," Pl.'s Reply Br. at 2. But plaintiff cites no legal authority that could impute competitor status in the relevant market to DTC merely on the basis that some members of its Board of Directors and some of its shareholders are involved in the transfer agent industry. [8] Thus, these allegations fail to show that DTC is a competitor in the relevant market. Third, plaintiff notes an "irrefutable and unmistakable [19] trend toward complete ownership of all issuers' outstanding shares in the name of Defendants' nominee, Cede & Co." and that "the shares go in but they never come out." Pl.'s Reply Br. at 10-11. But DTC's nominal ownership of shares merely facilitates book-entry settlement of security transactions; the participants remain the beneficial owners of the stock. DTC's nominal ownership of shares is not relevant to whether it competes in the transfer agent market. Fourth, plaintiff notes that over the past thirty years the number of FAST-eligible stock issues has increased by a much greater magnitude than the number of FAST-approved stock transfer agents, and that "[i]n recent years, the number of small stock transfer agents has decreased at a much higher rate than the rate at which the number of stock transfer agents has decreased overall." Pl.'s Reply Br. at 3. These trends within the transfer agent market are not relevant to whether DTC actually competes in that market. [9]

[20] Because DTC is not a competitor in the relevant market, Olde Monmouth's alternative theories for monopolization--based on monopoly leveraging, the essential facility doctrine, and the Supreme Court's Aspen Skiing decision--also fail as a [10] matter of law.

HN8[] [*395] A claim of monopoly leveraging requires that "defendant (1) possessed monopoly power in one market; (2) used that power to create a dangerous probability of monopolizing another market; and (3) caused injury by such anticompetitive conduct." A.I.B. Express, Inc. v. FedEx Corp., 358 F. Supp. 2d 239, 246-47 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (citing Verizon Commc'ns, Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004)). As described above, the complaint fails to allege that DTC even competes or seeks to compete in the "another market" of transfer agent services--much less that there is a dangerous [21] probability of DTC monopolizing that market. [11] Cf. A.I.B. Express, 358 F. Supp. 2d at 250-51 (refusing to dismiss monopoly leveraging claim where AIB sufficiently alleged dangerous probability that FedEx would monopolize "facilitation market," in which both FedEx and AIB competed).

[8] For example, plaintiff has not attempted to formally pierce the corporate veil of DTC.

[9] Plaintiff's reply papers contain additional allegations based on the historical development of the DRS program. Specifically, Dr. Susanne Trimbath, a former DTC employee now employed as the Chief Executive Manager and Chief Economist of STP Advisory Services, LLC, submits an affidavit on behalf of Olde Monmouth which discusses a proposal presented by the transfer agent industry fifteen years ago that would have expanded their business into the market for securities intermediaries (the market for providing direct services to consumers for the purchase and sale of stock), and argues that DTC developed the DRS program to compete with the transfer agents' proposal. See Trimbath Decl. I do not consider Dr. Trimbath's allegations because they involve completely new facts and legal theories from those asserted in the complaint. First, the complaint challenges Olde Monmouth's exclusion from the FAST program--not DTC's original development of the DRS program. (Thus, the relief sought by Olde Monmouth is admission to the FAST program, not the dismantling of DRS.) Second, the historical background discussed by Dr. Trimbath is not relevant to the current market for transfer agent services. The proposal advanced by the transfer agent industry fifteen years ago was not adopted. There is no indication in the complaint that the transfer agent industry presently involves direct services to consumers for purchase and sale of stock, or that Olde Monmouth engages in such services. See Compl. P 13 (describing how plaintiff acts as an intermediary between its clients and DTC and maintains records of the ownership of its customers' shares of stock). Thus, the historical background presented in plaintiff's reply papers does not speak to whether DTC competes in the relevant market identified in the complaint.

[10] Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985).

[22] HN10[] The elements of an essential facility claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act are: "(1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility." New York Mercantile Exch., Inc. v. Intercontinental Exch., Inc., 323 F. Supp. 2d 559, 568 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (quoting Twin Labs., Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 569 (2d Cir. 1990)). Here, Olde Monmouth alleges that DTC controls stock depository mechanisms that are "essential" to the stock transfer industry, and that DTC has been denying Olde Monmouth access to the FAST Program. But the essential facility doctrine is intended to prevent a competitor from obtaining an unfair advantage in a market by denying to its actual or potential competitors access to a facility essential for use of that market. See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law*: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application* (2d ed. 2002) § 772 ("the primary use of the so-called essential facility [23] doctrine has been in cases where a monopolist refuses to share some important input with actual or potential competitors"). The doctrine is inapplicable here because DTC is not a competitor of Olde Monmouth in the transfer agent industry. See Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port. Auth., 816 F.2d 9, 12 (1st Cir. 1987) ("The [essential facility] doctrine aims to prevent a firm with monopoly power from extending that power from one stage of production into another and from one market to another . . . . But it is difficult to see how denying a facility to one who, like [plaintiff], is not an actual or potential competitor [of the defendant] could enhance or reinforce the monopolist's market power.") (dismissing essential facility claim brought by charter airline operator against Port Authority for denying access to a particular airport terminal). Put another way, DTC's denial of Olde Monmouth's FAST [*396] application does not enhance or reinforce DTC's monopoly power in the securities depository industry--because Olde Monmouth does not compete in that market.

Finally, plaintiff contends that under the Supreme Court's decision in Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985), [24] a willingness to forgo short-term profits in favor of achieving a long-term anticompetitive result and a refusal to continue a profitable prior course of dealing reveal anticompetitive conduct. In Aspen Skiing, the Supreme Court found actionable an improper "refusal to deal" where the defendant ski resort operator suddenly departed from a long-standing profitable arrangement with its competitor pursuant to which they had joined together to sell multi-area ski lift tickets that gave customers the flexibility to patronize any of the area's ski resort facilities at a discounted price. But this decision does nothing to diminish the fundamental requirement that DTC compete in the relevant market against Olde Monmouth. And although plaintiff claims that there are "striking similarities between the underlying factual predicate" in Aspen Skiing and the case at bar, Pl.'s Br. at 19, the cases are plainly distinguishable-because the parties in Aspen Skiing were competitors in the same market for ski resort operations.

In sum, the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint is that DTC unfairly and unreasonably denied Olde Monmouth's application to the FAST Program. Although plaintiff strains [25] to connect this allegation to legal theories of monopolization, these theories are fundamentally flawed because DTC does not compete with Olde Monmouth in the relevant market for transfer agent services. Thus, plaintiff's claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act and the equivalent New Jersey antitrust statute (plaintiff's First, Second, Fourth, and Fifth Causes of Action) fail as a matter of law and must be dismissed. [12] Allegations that DTC has been arbitrary and capricious in excluding Olde

---

[11] Troster's speculation that DTC might enter the relevant market is completely insufficient to show a "dangerous probability" of monopolization. HN9[] That factor is usually assessed by the defendant's current market share--not by the possibility that the defendant might enter the market. See, e.g., H.L. Hayden Co. v. Siemens Med. Sys., Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1017 (2d Cir. 1989) (40 market share between two alleged conspirators, in the context of a widely diversified and competitive market, insufficient to demonstrate "dangerous probability of success"). Cf. A.I.B. Express, 358 F. Supp. 2d at 251 (allegation in complaint that defendant "will simply take over" the other market sufficient to withstand motion to dismiss plaintiff's claim based on monopoly leveraging). Olde Monmouth's complaint nowhere alleges that DTC has plans to enter the other market of transfer agency services, let alone that it will "take over" that market.

Monmouth from the FAST Program are properly addressed to the SEC, which oversees DTC's activities as a registered clearing agency.

[26] D. Plaintiff's Claims Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act

HN12[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits contracts, combinations, or conspiracies that unreasonably restrain trade in the relevant market. See 15 U.S.C. § 2; Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006).

Plaintiff's Third Cause of Action alleges "attempted monopolization" in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. But Section 1 does not address "attempt" claims. Compare 15 U.S.C. § 1 (prohibiting contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade) with 15 U.S.C. § 2 (prohibiting monopolization or attempted monopolization). Plaintiff must allege an actual agreement to restrain trade, and it has not done so.

Plaintiff claims that "DTC coerced and/or attempted to coerce such third parties [actual New Jersey and potential customers of Olde Monmouth] into forming a combination, contract, or conspiracy with DTC for the purpose of furthering DTC's anticompetitive scheme to restrain trade in the [*397] relevant market." Compl. P 57. But the apparent factual bases in the complaint for this claim are allegations that DTC contacted [27] several of Olde Monmouth's clients, complained about the fees Olde Monmouth was charging DTC, intimated that it might stop processing physical transactions for Olde Monmouth's clients, and suggested that the clients should consider using a different stock transfer agent. Compl. PP 34-38. Nothing in these allegations indicates that any third party actually agreed to form a combination, contract, or conspiracy with DTC. HN13[] Absent an actual agreement, plaintiff's Section 1 claim must fail. See Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986) ("there can be no liability under § 1 [of the Sherman Act] in the absence of agreement" between separate entities). [13] [28] Thus, plaintiff's claims for "attempted monopolization" under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the equivalent New Jersey antitrust statute (plaintiff's Third and Sixth Causes of Action) fail as a matter of law and must be dismissed. [14]

E. Plaintiff's Claim for Tortious Interference

HN14[] Under New Jersey law, a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage requires: "(1) a reasonable expectation of economic advantage to plaintiff, (2) interference done intentionally and with 'malice,' (3) causal connection between the interference and the loss of prospective gain, and (4) actual damages." Varrallo v. Hammond, Inc., 94 F.3d 842, 848 (3d Cir. 1996) (citing Printing Mart-Morristown v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 116 N.J. 739, 563 A.2d 31, 37 (N.J. 1989)).

---

[12] HN11[] courts have recognized that the New Jersey state antitrust statutes "shall be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable Federal antitrust statutes" and that New Jersey "look[s] to federal jurisprudence to guide our interpretation of the [New Jersey Antitrust] Act." Patel v. Soriano, 369 N.J. Super. 192, 848 A.2d 803, 826 (N.J. App. Div. 2004) (citations omitted). Thus, Olde Monmouth's New Jersey monopolization claims fail for the same reasons the federal claims fail.

[13] In its reply brief, plaintiff suggests that "it hardly strains credulity to suspect that Defendants' own shareholder/owner Participants with DRS-approved transfer agency facilities might well have conspired with Defendants improperly to apportion unto themselves an ever increasing share of the market for transfer agency services . . . ." Pl.'s Reply Br. at 18. I do not consider this speculated conspiracy--between DTC and major transfer agents--because it is completely different from the conspiracy theory alleged in the complaint--between DTC and Olde Monmouth's clients. And as explained above, "the Complaint cannot be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss." Lazaro v. Good Samaritan Hosp., 54 F. Supp. 2d 180, 184 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (citation omitted).

[14] As described supra n.12, the New Jersey antitrust statutes are construed in accordance with the comparable federal antitrust statutes. Thus, Olde Monmouth's New Jersey claim fails for the same reason the federal claim under Section 1 fails.

Olde Monmouth alleges that DTC tortiously interfered with Olde Monmouth's economic relationships with existing and potential future customers in two ways. First, plaintiff alleges that DTC contacted several of Olde Monmouth's clients, complained about the fees Olde Monmouth was [29] charging DTC, intimated that it might "chill" the issues for Olde Monmouth's clients, and suggested that the clients should consider using a different stock transfer agent. Second, Olde Monmouth suggests that DTC has publicized Olde Monmouth's exclusion from the FAST Program to clients and the stock issuing community, and thus hindered Olde Monmouth's ability to attract new clients. Defendants argue that these allegations are deficient because they do not sufficiently allege "malice" or that actual damages were caused by DTC's communications.

HN15[] The New Jersey Supreme Court has explained: "Malice is not used here in its literal sense to mean 'ill will;' rather, it means that harm was inflicted intentionally and without justification or excuse." *Lamorte Burns & Co. v. Walters, 167 N.J. 285, [398] 770 A.2d 1158, 1170 (N.J. 2001); see also Printing Mart, 563 A.2d at 37 (defining "malice" in this context as "the intentional doing of a wrongful act without justification or excuse"). Plaintiff's complaint acknowledges that Olde Monmouth implemented fee increases on DTC, Compl. P 31, but alleges that DTC's communications with plaintiff's customers were undertaken [30] "solely to injure Olde Monmouth," Compl. P 82. Construing the complaint liberally and accepting its factual allegations as true for the purposes of a motion to dismiss, I conclude that Olde Monmouth has sufficiently alleged that DTC acted with malice when it contacted Olde Monmouth's clients and allegedly pressured them to use a different transfer agent. [15] However, to the extent that plaintiff's tortious interference claim is based on DTC's general publication of lists of institutions that have been approved as DRS-eligible, plaintiff has not adequately alleged malice. There are plain business justifications for the general publication of such lists, and plaintiff cannot plausibly contend that these publications were made solely to injure Olde Monmouth.

[31] DTC argues that plaintiff has failed to allege any specific business relationships that were terminated as a result of defendants' communications. And it is true that plaintiff's specific allegations of DTC's communications with Olde Monmouth's customers--PAID, Inc. and ERF Wireless Company--do not allege that either of those customers actually terminated their relationships with plaintiff as a result of DTC's communications. Compl. PP 34-37. However, the complaint later asserts that: "As a proximate result of the conduct alleged herein [DTC's allegedly tortious communications with plaintiff's actual and potential customers], these actual and potential customers terminated or are contemplating the termination of their prospective economic relationships with Olde Monmouth and did not do further business with Olde Def Monmouth." Compl. P 81. The mere contemplation of terminating a business relationship would not suffice to show actual damages, but actual termination would. Once again construing the complaint liberally and accepting its factual allegations as true for the purposes of a motion to dismiss, I conclude that Olde Monmouth has sufficiently alleged that DTC's communications [32] caused actual damages. Therefore I deny defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Seventh Cause of Action.

Whether plaintiff can prove all the elements of a tortious interference claim is, of course, a different question, which will no doubt be explored in discovery.

F. Plaintiff's Motion for a Preliminary Injunction

As noted supra, plaintiff's present motion for a preliminary injunction depends entirely upon its antitrust claims. Since those claims will be dismissed, it necessarily follows that plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction must be denied.

III. CONCLUSION

---

[15] endants' submissions assert that Olde Monmouth instituted exorbitant fee increases--such that the charge for a single withdrawal by transfer increased from $35 to $700--and that DTC's communications with Olde Monmouth's customers were entirely reasonable under these circumstances. Defs.' Opp'n Br. at 9-10. Although plaintiff does not appear to dispute the magnitude of the fee increases, I do not presently address the justifications asserted by DTC because a motion to dismiss deals only with the sufficiency of the complaint.

For the foregoing reasons, defendants' motion to dismiss plantinff's First through Sixth Causes of Action in the complaint [*399] under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) is granted.

Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction is denied.

Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Seventh Cause of Action is denied. With respect to that cause of action only, counsel for the parties are directed to meet and draft a proposed discovery plan pursuant to Rule 26(f). Counsel are further directed to file that with the Court not later than May 23, 2007.

[33] The foregoing is SO ORDERED.

Dated: New York, New York

April 23, 2007

CHARLES S. HAIGHT, JR.

SENIOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Roberson v. Medtronic, Inc.

United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division

April 23, 2007, Decided; April 23, 2007, Filed

Case No. 04-2183 D/P

Reporter

494 F. Supp. 2d 864 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50779 **

TIMOTHY ROBERSON AND GWENDOLYN A. ROBERSON, for themselves and as representatives of a class, Plaintiffs, MEDTRONIC, INC.; MEDTRONIC SOFAMOR DANEK USA, INC.; MICHAEL F. DEMANE; TODD N. SHELDON; GREG SELLERS; JEFF MOORE; MIKE HARRAH; LAURENCE FAIREY; RON PICARD; TED BIRD; HANK PELLEGRIN; LISA BUCKLER; DAVID MILLER; ROBERT A. COMPTOM; KEVIN FOLEY; CLAUDIO FELER; MAURICE M. SMITH; and SEMMES-MURPHEY CLINIC, a Professional Corporation, Defendants.

Core Terms

Defendants', motion to dismiss, antitrust, conspiracy, cognizable, injuries, statute of limitations, antitrust violation, anti trust law, notice, consumer protection, alleged violation, antitrust claim, predicate act, time barred, anticompetitive, allegations, grounds, repose

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) enables a defendant to file a motion to dismiss for a plaintiff's failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Motions to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) are designed to test whether a cognizable claim has been pleaded in the complaint. Dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is appropriate when no set of facts exists which would entitle the plaintiff to recover. Essentially, it allows the court to dismiss meritless cases which would otherwise waste judicial resources and result in unnecessary discovery.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In reviewing a defendant's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a district court should construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and determine whether the plaintiff undoubtedly can prove no set of facts in support of her claims that would entitle her to relief. If an allegation is capable of more than one inference, it must be construed in the plaintiff's favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court may not grant a defendant's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss based on its disbelief of the plaintiff's factual allegations. It is not the court's function to weigh evidence or evaluate the credibility of witnesses. A court will not consider any disputed questions of fact at this stage. Rather, the court should accept all well-pleaded facts as true and not consider matters outside the pleadings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The United States Supreme Court has held that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Thus, the standard to be applied when evaluating a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is very liberal in favor of the party opposing the motion. Even if the plaintiff's chances of success are remote or unlikely, a motion to dismiss should be denied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN5[] State Regulation, Claims

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-109(a)(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN6[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Physicians are not immune from claims under the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act (TCPA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-101 et seq., and allegations of unfair, unconscionable, or deceptive methods, acts, or practices in the conduct of the entrepreneurial, commercial, or business aspect of a physician's practice may properly be brought under the TCPA.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN7[] Standing, Requirements

To be cognizable, an antitrust claim must assert injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. According to the United States Supreme Court, merely alleging violations of the antitrust laws is not enough to sustain a private antitrust claim. A plaintiff must also establish antitrust injury. The Supreme Court has explained that the antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN8[] Bribery, Commercial Bribery

The Anti-Kickback Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 1320a-7b, provides only criminal penalties for its violation and provides no private right of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN9[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Damages under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, are generally measured by the harm resulting from the predicate acts of the offenders. Recovery for physical injury or mental suffering is not allowed under RICO because it is not an injury to business or property.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN10[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Antitrust violations are not predicate acts under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Repose

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN11[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-110.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Repose

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN12[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Tennessee Supreme Court has interpreted statutes of repose like Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-110's five-year limit as absolute time limits within which action must be brought. The statute of repose in the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-101 et seq., runs from the date of the relevant consumer transaction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN13[] Clayton Act, Defenses

The Clayton Act provides in part that any action to enforce any federal antitrust cause of action shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b, plus any additional number of years during which the statute of limitations was tolled. Generally, a cause of action under federal antitrust laws accrues when the defendant commits an act which injures the plaintiff's business. In the context of an ongoing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, the cause of action accrues anew each time the plaintiff is injured.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN14[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

While the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, does not provide an express statute of limitations for actions brought under its civil enforcement provision, the United States Supreme Court has concluded that the appropriate statute of limitations to be applied in RICO actions is the four-year statute of limitations applicable to Clayton Act civil enforcement actions. A civil RICO cause of action begins to accrue as soon as the plaintiff discovers, or reasonably should have discovered, both the existence and source of his injury and that the injury is part of a pattern.

Counsel: [1] For Timothy Roberson, Gwendolyn A. Roberson, for themselves and as representatives of a class, Plaintiffs: Duncan E. Ragsdale, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, LAW OFFICE OF DUNCAN E. RAGSDALE, Memphis, TN.

For Medtronic, Inc., Medtronic Sofamor Danek USA,Inc., Michael F. Demane, Todd N. Sheldon, Greg Sellers, Jeff Moore, Mike Harrah, Laurence Fairey, Ron Picard, Ted Bird, Hank Pellegrin, Lisa Buckler, David Miller, Robert A. Compton, Defendants: Corey W Roush, Mitchell E. Zamoff, LEAD ATTORNEYS, HOGAN & HARTSON LLP, Washington, DC; Douglas F. Halijan, Nathan A. Bicks, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BURCH PORTER & JOHNSON, Memphis, TN; Mary Alison Hale, LEAD ATTORNEY, BURCH PORTER & JOHNSON PLLC, Memphis, TN.

For Dr Kevin T Foley, Claudio Feler, Maurice M. Smith, Semmes-Murphey Clinic, a Professional Corporation, Defendants: Buckner Wellford, Jennifer A. Sink, BAKER DONELSON BEARMAN CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, Memphis, TN.

Judges: Bernice B. Donald, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Bernice B. Donald

Opinion

[*866]

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Before the Court are Defendants' motions (D.E. ## 6, 10) to dismiss the above-captioned case, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Plaintiffs assert that Defendants entered into a nationwide [2] conspiracy "for the purpose of monopolizing the sale [] and controlling the prices" of medical equipment, in violation of the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101; the Federal Anti-Kickback Act, 42 U.S.C. 1320a-7b; the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7; and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961-68. [1] This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1367. For the following reasons, the Court grants Defendants' motions to dismiss.

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) enables a defendant to file a motion to dismiss for a plaintiff's failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Motions to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) are designed to test "whether a cognizable claim has been pleaded in the complaint." Scheid v. Fanny Farmer Candy Shops, Inc., 859 F.2d 434, 436 (6th Cir. 1988). Dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is appropriate when no set of facts exists which would entitle the plaintiff to recover. Hammond v. Baldwin, 866 F.2d 172, 175 (6th Cir. 1989). Essentially, it allows the court to dismiss meritless cases which would otherwise waste judicial resources and result in unnecessary discovery. See, e.g., Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 326-27, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1989).

HN2[] In reviewing a defendant's Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a district court should construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and determine whether the plaintiff undoubtedly can prove no set of facts in support of her claims that would entitle her to relief. Meador v. Cabinet for Human Res., 902 F.2d 474, 475 (6th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 867, 111 S. Ct. 182, 112 L. Ed. 2d 145 (1990). [4] If an allegation is capable of more than one inference, it must be construed in the plaintiff's favor. Sinay v. Lamson & Sessions Co., 948 F.2d 1037, 1039-40 (6th Cir. 1991).

HN3[] A district court may not grant a defendant's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss based on its disbelief of the plaintiff's factual allegations. In re Sofamor Danek Group, Inc., 123 F.3d 394 (6th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, Murphy v. Sofamor Danek Group, Inc., 523 U.S. 1106, 118 S. Ct. 1675, 140 L. Ed. 2d 813 (1998). It is not the court's function to weigh evidence or evaluate the credibility of witnesses. Miller v. Currie, 50 F.3d 373, 377 (6th Cir. 1995). A court will not consider any disputed questions of fact at this stage. Barnes v. Winchell, 105 F.3d 1111, 1114 (6th Cir. 1997). Rather, the court should accept all well-pleaded facts as true and not consider matters outside the pleadings. Hammond, 866 F.2d at 175.

HN4[] The United States Supreme Court has held that "a complaint should not be dismissed [*867] for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); see also Neitzke, 490 U.S. at 326-27; Lewis, 135 F.3d at 405 (6th Cir. 1997). [5] Thus, the standard to be applied when evaluating a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is very liberal in favor of the party opposing the motion. Westlake v. Lucas, 537 F.2d 857, 858 (6th Cir. 1976). Even if the plaintiff's chances of success are remote or unlikely, a motion to dismiss should be denied. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974).

[1] Claims of conspiracy in violation of the above referenced federal and state statutes are all contained in Count I of the complaint. Counts II and III of the complaint are vaguely worded accusations of "misrepresentation," and do not set forth any clearly discernible causes of action. While Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 requires only a "short and plain statement of the claim" and "simple, concise, and direct" allegations, Counts II and III fail to satisfy even these minimal requirements and do not provide Defendants with fair notice of their alleged misconduct in order to prepare an appropriate responsive pleading. Accordingly, the Court will not consider Counts II and III in its ruling [3] on the instant motions to dismiss.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND [2]

On July 7, 2000, Defendant Kevin T. Foley, M.D., an employee of the Semmes-Murphey Clinic, advised Plaintiff Timothy Roberson that he had a ruptured disc. (Compl. P 31.) Dr. Foley recommended that Mr. Roberson allow Dr. Foley to purchase for him the TSRH Spinal System, manufactured by Defendants Medtronic, Inc. and/or Medtronic Sofamor Danek USA, Inc. (collectively "Medtronic"), to fuse his back. Id. PP 30, 34. Mr. Roberson contends that Dr. Foley's diagnosis of a ruptured disc was false. Id. P 31. Mr. Roberson further contends [6] that the use of the Medtronic device was not needed and did not meet the FDA and Medtronic criteria for its use. Id. P 30.

Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Foley's misrepresentations were part of a conspiracy created by Medtronic to monopolize the sale of medical devices and to control the prices thereof by inducing physicians, in Tennessee and nationwide, to exclusively purchase, order for, or recommend to their patients, Medtronic devices, including the TSRH Spinal System. (Compl. PP 26-29.) The alleged conspiracy involved overt acts by Medtronic, which included paying for travel, resort/hotel accommodations, recreation activities, and car rentals for physicians and their families, and paying physicians for unearned commissions, royalties and consulting contracts. Id. P 26.

III. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On November 13, 2006, Plaintiffs filed the instant complaint in Shelby County Circuit Court, on behalf of themselves and as representatives of a class of persons injured as a result of the alleged conspiracy, against Medtronic, Inc., Medtronic Sofamor Danek USA, and their employees Michael DeMane, Todd Sheldon, Greg Sellers, Jeff Moore, Mike Harrah, Laurence Fairey, Ron Picard, Ted Bird, Hank [7] Pellegrin, Lisa Buckler, David Miller, and Robert Compton (collectively, "the Medtronic Defendants"); and Semmes-Murphey Clinic and its employees Kevin Foley, M.D., Claudio Feler, M.D., and Maurice Smith, M.D. (collectively, "the Semmes-Murphey Defendants"). On December 22, 2006, Defendants removed the case to federal court on federal question and Class Action Fairness Act grounds.

On December 28, 2006, Plaintiff filed a notice of voluntary dismissal pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 41, attempting to excise from the complaint all federal and class action issues. On January 3, 2007, Defendants filed objections to Plaintiffs' notice of voluntary dismissal on grounds that "Rule 41(a) provides for the dismissal of 'actions,' not individual allegations or claims." (Def.'s Resp. Pl.'s Notice Voluntary Dismissal 1.)

[*868] Also on January 3, 2007, the Medtronic Defendants filed their answer to Plaintiffs' complaint and moved to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). On January 4, 2007, the Semmes-Murphey Defendants filed their own answer and motion to dismiss. In their motion to dismiss, the Semmes-Murphey Defendants adopted and incorporated the arguments of the Medtronic Defendants' motion to [8] dismiss. They also argued that any medical malpractice claims by Plaintiffs are barred by the statute of repose provided under Tennessee medical malpractice law. [3]

On January 10, 2007, Plaintiffs, in apparent response to the aforementioned objections raised by Defendants and prior to any ruling by the Court on their first notice, filed a second notice of voluntary dismissal without prejudice as to the entire complaint. Defendants objected on grounds that Plaintiffs had failed to seek or obtain Defendants' consent to the dismissal as required after a defendant has answered under Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(a).

[2] The complaint's "Statement of Fact" consists chiefly of legal citations and conclusions of law and very little in the way of factual detail. The few factual allegations provided by Plaintiffs are summarized herein and are presumed to be true for purposes of the instant motion only.

[3] The Court finds that Plaintiff has not stated a discernible medical malpractice claim. Consequently, the Court will not discuss this argument by the Semmes-Murphey Defendants.

In a status conference held on February 1, 2007, this Court affirmed Defendants' reading of Rule 41, finding Plaintiffs' second notice of dismissal improper and declaring its intention to rule on the merits of Defendants' 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. [4]

IV. ANALYSIS

A. Injury

Defendants argue that all of Plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed because personal injury is not cognizable under any of the statutes relied upon in Plaintiffs' complaint. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 4.) Defendants support this argument with the assertion that the "only injury alleged here is the bodily physical injury that Roberson purportedly suffered as a result of surgery," citing paragraphs 33 and 34 of the complaint. Id.

The Court has reviewed the cited paragraphs and finds Defendants' assertion as to the nature of Plaintiffs' injury unsubstantiated. In fact, the complaint offers little clue as to the type of injury Plaintiffs are claiming. Paragraph 33 of the complaint states that "[a]s a direct, proximate, factual, and legal result [of Dr. Foley's misrepresentation regarding the need for Medtronic's medical device], Mr. Roberson was injured." Similarly, paragraph 34 states that "[a]s a result of Mr. Roberson's reliance upon the truth of [Dr. Foley's] representation, Mr. Roberson was injured." Other than placing a $ 10 million dollar value [10] on the "injuries and damages suffered by Timothy J. Roberson", (Compl. 12), there is no information in the complaint as to the nature or extent of Mr. Roberson's alleged injuries or how they occurred. [5] Since bodily harm, pain and suffering, medical expenses, and lost earnings are all types of injury that might conceivably result from the wrongdoing Plaintiffs allege, Defendants' general conclusion that Plaintiffs have suffered only "personal, non-economic" harm, (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 5), is [*869] premature and unsupported by the language of the complaint.

1. Tennessee Consumer Protection Act (TCPA)

Plaintiffs allege violation of the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-101, et seq. (Compl. P 32.) Defendants counter that the TCPA does not provide a private right of action for the type of injury claimed by Plaintiffs. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 8-9.)

Tenn. Code. Ann. § 47-18-109(a)(1) provides that

> HN5[] Any person who suffers an ascertainable [11] loss of money or property, real, personal, or mixed, or any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situated, as a result of the use or employment by another person of an unfair or deceptive act or practice declared to be unlawful by this part, may bring an action individually to recover actual damages.

As noted supra, Plaintiffs have not specified whether their injuries are bodily, psychological, or pecuniary, or a combination thereof. Since an action for pecuniary damage, i.e., "an ascertainable loss of money," is available under § 47-18-109, dismissal on grounds that the TCPA does not cover the type of injury claimed is inappropriate.

Defendants further assert that Plaintiffs' claim is invalid because medical malpractice claims cannot be brought under the TCPA. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 9.) Defendants cite Constant v. Wyeth, 352 F. Supp.

---

[4] Given that the motions to dismiss of the Medtronic and Semmes-Murphey Defendants are virtually identical, the Court will treat the two motions as one for the purposes [9] of this order and will hereinafter refer to the two groups of defendants collectively as "Defendants."

[5] The complaint also seeks $ 2 million for Plaintiff Gwendolyn Roberson's injuries, although the complaint contains no additional mention of Ms. Roberson, her involvement in the case, or the nature of her injury.

2d 847 (M.D. Tenn. 2003), for the proposition that "medical malpractice claims may not be recast as consumer protection act claims." Id. However, the Constant court made clear that HN6[] physicians are not immune from TCPA claims and that "allegations of unfair, unconscionable, or deceptive methods, acts, or practices in the [12] conduct of the entrepreneurial, commercial, or business aspect of a physician's practice" may properly be brought under the TCPA. Constant, 352 F. Supp. 2d at 854 n.10 (citation omitted).

Applying this concept to the case at hand, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' allegations against Dr. Foley, and his alleged co-conspirators, implicates Dr. Foley's business practices rather than his medical services, specifically his inducement of Mr. Roberson to buy a medical device he did not need. Accordingly, the Court finds dismissal of Plaintiffs' TCPA claim on this ground to also be inappropriate.

Finally, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' TCPA claim should be dismissed because the claim is based on allegations of antitrust violations which do not fall within the scope of the TCPA. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 9.) Defendants base their argument on a Tennessee Court of Appeals decision, *Sherwood v. Microsoft Corp., No. M20000-01850-COA-R9-CV, 2003 Tenn. App. LEXIS 539, 2003 WL 21780975, at 33 (Tenn. Ct. App. July 31, 2003), holding that "claims based upon anticompetitive conduct are not cognizable under the TCPA."

While Plaintiffs do allege a "conspiracy to attempt to monopolize the sale of medical devices [13] and to control the prices thereof," (Compl. P 26), the alleged deception by Dr. Foley, which is at the heart of Plaintiffs' complaint, is quite independent of any anticompetitive effect resulting from the alleged conspiracy. Consequently, the Court disagrees with Defendants' basic premise that Plaintiffs' TCPA claim is "based upon" anticompetitive conduct. Accordingly, the Court finds Defendants' argument unavailing and the case law cited by Defendants to be inapplicable to the claim at issue. Thus, the Court rejects [*870] dismissal of Plaintiffs' TCPA claim on "anticompetitive injury" grounds.

2. Antitrust Violations

Plaintiffs allege violation of the Tennessee Antitrust Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101, and the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7. (Compl. P 32.) Defendants counter that to bring an antitrust suit Plaintiffs must not only allege antitrust violations, but also must assert an injury to the Plaintiffs' business or property flowing from the alleged antitrust violations. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 5.) Defendants maintain that since Plaintiffs only allege "personal bodily harm," they lack standing to bring federal or state antitrust law claims. Id. The Court has [14] rejected supra Defendants' premise that Plaintiffs have alleged only bodily harm. Consequently, the Court finds that dismissal on such basis is unwarranted.

Defendants further argue that dismissal is appropriate because Plaintiffs' alleged injuries do not flow from the alleged anticompetitive behavior. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 6.) Citing Supreme Court precedent, Defendants assert that, HN7[] to be cognizable, an antitrust claim must assert injury "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id. (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Matic, 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

According to the Supreme Court, merely alleging violations of the antitrust laws is not enough to sustain a private antitrust claim. Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). Plaintiff must also establish antitrust injury. Id. The Court has explained that the "antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 344, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) [15] (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Foley, induced by the favors extended by Medtronic to participating doctors, misdiagnosed Plaintiff and persuaded him to authorize the purchase of medical equipment which was not needed. Again, the Court is confronted with the ambiguity as to the nature of Plaintiffs' injury. If the injury is solely bodily in nature, then the Court would have to conclude that such injury is unrelated to "competition-reducing aspects" of the alleged conspiracy. On the other hand, if Plaintiffs' injury is pecuniary, and such pecuniary loss stems from Medtronic's inducement of Dr. Foley to favor its products over those of its competitors, then such loss would arguably fall within the ambit of the antitrust statutes.

At this juncture the Court lacks the necessary information to determine whether Plaintiffs have a viable antitrust claim. Accordingly, the Court finds that dismissal on the basis of lack of "antitrust injury" is inappropriate at this time.

3. Federal Anti-Kickback Act

Plaintiffs allege violation of the Federal Anti-Kickback Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7b. (Compl. P 32.) Defendants argue that the anti-kickback statute is a criminal statute, and provides no [16] private right of action. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 10.)

The language of the statute and relevant case law support Defendants' position that HN8[] the Anti-Kickback Act provides only criminal penalties for its violation and provides no private right of action. See West Allis Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Bowen, 852 F.2d 251, 255 (7th Cir.1988); United States ex [*871] rel. Barrett v. Columbia/HCA Health Care Corp., 251 F.Supp.2d 28, 37 (D.D.C. 2003); Donovan v. Rothman, 106 F.Supp.2d 513, 516 (S.D.N.Y.2000). Accordingly, the Court grants Defendants motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' Anti-Kickback Act claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

4. Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO)

Plaintiffs allege violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68. (Compl. P 32.) Defendants respond with its now familiar argument that Plaintiffs lack standing to seek remedy under RICO because they have alleged only personal injuries. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 7.)

HN9[] Damages under RICO are generally measured by the harm resulting from the predicate acts of the offenders. Fleischauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290, 1299 (6th Cir. 2002). [17] Recovery for physical injury or mental suffering is not allowed under RICO because it is not an injury to business or property. Id. at 1300. However, as the Court has noted, it is unsettled whether Plaintiffs allege property damage as well as bodily harm. Consequently, dismissal on this basis of this argument is inappropriate.

Defendants further argue that Plaintiffs' RICO claims fail because they contain no allegation of a cognizable predicate act under RICO. (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 8.) Defendants note that the only predicate act alleged in the complaint is "Defendants' violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act." (Mem. Supp. Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 8.) (quoting Compl. P 21). Because a violation of antitrust law is not a predicate act under RICO, Defendants argue, Plaintiffs' claim must fail.

The language of the RICO statute and relevant case law support Defendants' position that HN10[] antitrust violations are not RICO predicate acts. See Jennings v. Emry, 910 F.2d 1434, 1438 (7th Cir. 1990); Prince Heaton Enterprises, Inc. v. Buffalo's Franchise Concepts, Inc., 117 F. Supp. 2d 1357, 1363 (N.D. Ga. 2000). Accordingly, the Court grants Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' [18] RICO claims.

B. Statutes of Limitation and Repose

In addition to the foregoing arguments as to why Plaintiffs' claims are not cognizable, Defendants further argue that the claims are time barred because they were filed more than six years after Plaintiffs' alleged injuries. (Mem. Supp.

Medtronic Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 11.) Plaintiffs do not address the issue of statutes of limitations or repose in the complaint, nor have they filed a response to Defendants' assertions. [6]

1. Tennessee Consumer Protection Act (TCPA)

Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-110 provides that

> HN11[] Any action commenced pursuant to § 47-18-109 [7] shall be brought within one (1) year from a person's discovery of the unlawful act or practice, but in no event shall an action under § 47-18-109 be brought more than five (5) years [*872] after the date of the consumer transaction giving rise to the claim for relief.

HN12[] The Tennessee Supreme Court has interpreted statutes of repose [19] like § 47-18-110's five-year limit as "absolute time limit[s] within which action must be brought." Penley v. Honda Motor Co., Ltd., 31 S.W.3d 181, 184 (Tenn. 2000).

The statute of repose in the TCPA runs from the date of the relevant consumer transaction. See *Bolden v. Aames Funding Corp., No. 03-2827, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44091, 2005 WL 948592, 4 (W.D. Tenn. Feb. 25, 2005). Because Plaintiffs filed their complaint well over five years from the July 7, 2000 and August 16, 2000 transaction dates cited by Plaintiffs, the Court must conclude that Plaintiffs' TCPA claims are time barred. Accordingly, the Court grants Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' TCPA claims.

2. Antitrust Violations

HN13[] The Clayton Act provides in pertinent part that "[a]ny action to enforce any [federal antitrust] cause of action [] shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued," 15 U.S.C. § 15b (2000), "plus any additional number [20] of years during which the statute of limitations was tolled." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). Generally, a cause of action under federal antitrust laws accrues when the defendant commits an act which injures the plaintiff's business. Id. In the context of an ongoing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, the cause of action accrues anew each time the plaintiff is injured. Id.

Plaintiffs set forth two dates on which injury is alleged to have occurred: July 7, 2000 and August 16, 2000. Both of these dates fall outside the statutory period. Since the complaint was filed well beyond the statutory deadline and Plaintiffs have presented no argument as to why the limitation period should commence on a different date or why the statute of limitations should be tolled, the Court finds Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims time barred. Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims is granted.

3. Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO)

HN14[] While RICO does not provide an express statute of limitations for actions brought under its civil enforcement provision, the Supreme Court has concluded that the appropriate [21] statute of limitations to be applied in RICO actions is the four-year statute of limitations applicable to Clayton Act civil enforcement actions. Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Associates, Inc., 483 U.S. 143, 147, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121

---

[6] In the February 1, 2007 status conference, Plaintiffs' counsel stipulated that its presentation in that hearing was to serve as response to Defendants' motion to dismiss. Plaintiffs' counsel did not respond to Defendants' statute of limitations/repose assertions in that hearing.

[7] Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-109 is the provision of the TCPA providing for a private cause of action for unfair or deceptive acts or practices. Although not specifically mentioned in the complaint, it is the provision under which Plaintiff presumably makes her TCPA claim.

(1987). "[A] civil RICO cause of action begins to accrue as soon as the plaintiff discovers, or reasonably should have discovered, both the existence and source of his injury and that the injury is part of a pattern." Agristor Financial Corp. v. Van Sickle, 967 F.2d 233, 241 (6th Cir.1992).

Plaintiffs' complaint does not raise the issue of when their injuries were discovered, nor have they filed a response to Defendants' statute of limitations argument. As the Court has previously noted, the complaint was filed well beyond the statutory deadline and Plaintiffs have presented no argument as to why the statutory period should commence on a different date or why the statute of limitations should be tolled. Consequently, in addition to its conclusion that Plaintiffs have not made a cognizable RICO claim, the Court further concludes that Plaintiffs' federal RICO claims are time barred.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' claims [22] against [*873] Defendants are either invalid or time barred. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

IT IS SO ORDERED this 23rd day of April, 2007.

s/ Bernice B. Donald

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

[Southwire Co. v. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co.]

United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin

April 24, 2007, Decided

MDL Docket No. 1303, 02-C-707-C, 03-C-314-C, 03-C-316-C, 03-C-317-C, 03-C-318-C, 03-C-368-C, 06-C-169-C

Reporter

528 F. Supp. 2d 908 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30294 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,708

SOUTHWIRE COMPANY, GASTON COPPER RECYCLING CORPORATION, ASARCO INC., n/k/a ASARCO LLC, KENNECOTT UTAH COPPER CORP., LEVITON MANUFACTURING CO., INC., AMERICAN INSULATED WIRE CORPORATION, ESSEX ELECTRIC, INC., n/k/a EXEON INC., MUELLER COPPER TUBE CO., INC., MUELLER COPPER TUBE PRODUCTS, INC., SUPERIOR TELECOM, INC., n/k/a SUPERIOR ESSEX INC., AETNA INSULATED WIRE; CERRO E.M.S. LIMITED, CERRO FABRICATED PRODUCTS, INC., CERRO FLOW PRODUCTS, INC., CERRO METAL PRODUCTS COMPANY, CERRO WIRE & CABLE CO., INC., COMTRAN CORPORATION, HENDRIX WIRE & CABLE, INC., THE KERITE COMPANY, ROCKBESTOS-SURPRENANT CABLE CORP. and OWL WIRE AND CABLE INC., Plaintiffs, v. J.P. MORGAN CHASE & CO., as successor to J.P. MORGAN & CO., INC. and MORGAN GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Defendants.

Prior History: Southwire Co. v. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7418 (W.D. Wis., Apr. 23, 2004)

Core Terms

copper, defendants', purchases, producers, transactions, integrated, manipulation, plaintiffs', trading, Metal, cathode, calculating, antitrust, merchants, damages, documents, conspiracy, Wire, prices, Products, vendor, tons, Commodities, positions, equation, hedging, options, variable, parties, records

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN1[] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, makes illegal every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations and subjects persons found guilty of such conspiracies to criminal penalties. Section 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, gives persons injured by anything forbidden in the antitrust laws the right to sue for relief in federal court. To prove the elements of a claim under § 4 of the Sherman Act of knowing participation in a conspiracy, a plaintiff must come forward with evidence showing that the defendant had a conscious commitment to a common scheme to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Ordinarily, when a court decides a motion for summary judgment, it must view the facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. But antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. To defeat a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case, the opponent of the motion must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN3[] Private Actions, Remedies

To bring suit for an antitrust violation, a plaintiff must have antitrust standing (as distinguished from Article III standing), a component of which is antitrust injury. To qualify as an antitrust injury, an injury must be proximately caused by the direct purchase of a product whose price has been affected by anti-competitive behavior.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > Qualifications

HN4[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

See Fed. R. Evid. 702.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN5[] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

Fed. R. Evid. 702 imposes a special obligation upon a trial judge to ensure that any and all scientific testimony is not only relevant, but reliable. The trial judge's gate keeping obligation applies not only to testimony based on scientific knowledge, but also to testimony based on technical and other specialized knowledge.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN6[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

When determining whether expert testimony is admissible, district courts employ a two-step inquiry. First, the court examines the expert's testimony to determine whether it is reliable, that is, whether it is grounded in scientific evidence or in subjective belief or unsupported speculation. Second, the court must determine whether the testimony will assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact in issue.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN7[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

When an expert proposes to give testimony that is scientific (whether derived from the natural or social sciences), courts engage in a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue. A number of factors bear on the scientific validity of the expert's testimony, including whether the theory or technique can be and has been tested; whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review or scientific scrutiny within the scholarly community; and the reliability of the technique, including the potential rate of error and the general acceptance it enjoys. The evidentiary inquiry is meant to be flexible and fact specific, and a court should use, adapt, or reject Daubert factors as the particular case demands. There is no single requirement for admissibility as long as the proffer indicates that the expert evidence is reliable and relevant.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

HN8[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In deciding whether an expert's opinion is admissible under Daubert, a district court must determine whether the evidence is genuinely scientific, as distinct from being unscientific speculation offered by a genuine scientist. The supposed uniqueness of a market does not justify substituting a guess for careful analysis. Essentially, an expert must adhere to the same standards of intellectual rigor that are demanded in their professional work. The expert's work must be reasoned and founded on data, and the expert must explain his conclusions.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Expert Witnesses > Credibility of Witnesses > General Overview

HN9[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

In serving its gatekeeping function, the court must be careful not to cross over into the role of factfinder. It is not the job of the court to insure that the evidence heard by the jury is error-free, but to insure that it is not wholly unreliable. Whether the expert is credible or whether his or her theories are correct given the circumstances of a particular case is a factual one that is left for the jury to determine after opposing counsel has been provided the opportunity to cross-examine the expert.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Documentary Evidence > Writings > General Overview

HN10[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

A statistical study that fails to correct for salient explanatory variables, or even to make the most elementary comparisons, has no value as causal explanation and is therefore inadmissible in a federal court.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Documentary Evidence > Writings > General Overview

HN11[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Although some regression analyses may be so incomplete as to be inadmissible, in most cases, failure to include variables will affect the analysis' probativeness, not its admissibility. A statistical study is not inadmissible merely because it is unable to exclude all possible causal factors other than the one of interest.

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Summaries

HN12[] Documentary Evidence, Summaries

Although Fed. R. Evid. 1006 permits a party to introduce in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation the contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court, such evidence remains subject to all evidentiary objections.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Summaries

HN13[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B) does not preclude counsel from providing assistance to experts in preparing the reports, and indeed this assistance may be needed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B). Although an expert report should be written in a manner that reflects the testimony to be given by the witness and must be signed by the witness, it need not be drafted by him.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN14[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Under Fed. R. Evid. 703, the facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to the expert at or before the hearing.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN15[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Experts may rely on data and other information supplied by third parties. Analyzing data assembled by others is neither illicit nor unusual, even if the data were prepared for litigation by an interested party. Unless the expert's opinion is too speculative, it should not be rejected as unreliable merely because the expert relied on the reports of others.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN16[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

As a general rule, questions relating to the bases and sources of an expert's opinion affect only the weight to be assigned that opinion rather than its admissibility.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Expert Witnesses > Credibility of Witnesses > General Overview

HN17[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Mistakes and miscalculations are not grounds for excluding evidence. Vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN18[] Private Actions, Standing

In an antitrust action, the stakes are too high to permit plaintiffs to recover damages that may duplicate damages awarded to other plaintiffs. Therefore, the best-situated plaintiff is the plaintiff closest to the antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN19[] Private Actions, Standing

When Party A, the antitrust violator, sells to Party B, and then Party C, a down-stream purchaser from B, seeks to recover the implicit overcharges that B passed on to C, C has no standing to bring an antitrust claim. Party B does.

Counsel: [1] For IN RE: KENNECOTT UTAH COPPER CORPORATION, SOUTHWIRE COMPANY (02-C-707), KENNECOTT UTAH COPPER CORPORATION (03-C-316-C), LEVITON MANUFACTURING CO., INC. (03-C-316-C), AMERICAN INSULATED WIRE CORPORATION (03-C-316-C), ESSEX ELECTRIC INC. (03-C-317-C), MUELLER COPPER TUBE COMPANY INC. (03-C-318-C), MUELLER COPPER TUBE PRODUCTS INC. (03-C-318-C), SUPERIOR TELECOM INC. (03-C-368-C), ASARCO INCORPORATED (03-C-314-C), GASTON COPPER RECYCLING CORPORATION (02-C-707), CERRO FLOW PRODUCTS, INC. (06-C-169-C), CERRO METAL PRODUCTS COMPANY (06-C-169-C), CERRO WIRE & CABLE, INC. (06-C-169-C), COMTRAN CORPORATION (06-C-169-C), THE KERITE COMPANY (06-C-169-C), ROCKBESTOS-SURPRENANT CABLE CORP. (06-C-169-C), OWL WIRE AND CABLE, INC. (06-C-169-C), Plaintiffs: WILLIAM R. STEINMETZ, REINHART, BOERNER, VAN DEUREN, MILWAUKEE, WI; JAMES H. BRATTON, JR., SMITH GAMBRELL & RUSSELL, LLP, ATLANTA, GA; BRYAN NOWICKI, REINHART BOERNER VAN DEUREN, MADISON, WI; DANIEL W. HILDEBRAND, DEWITT, ROSS & STEVENS, MADISON, WI; ALLEN D. BLACK, FINE, KAPLAN & BLACK RPC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; JOSEPH GOLDBERG, FREEDMAN, BOYD, DANIELS & HOLLANDER, ALBUQUERQUE, NM; MARK A. GLICK, PARSONS, BEHLE & LATIMER, SALT LAKE CITY, UT; SARA [2] K. BERGER, SMALL BUSINESS LAW CENTER, LLC, ALBUQUERQUE, NM; STANLEY M. GROSSMAN, POMERANTZ HAUDEK BLOCK GROSSMAN & GROSS, NEW YORK, NY; DAVID H. WEINSTEIN, WEINSTEIN KITCHENOFF & ASHER LLC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MICHAEL J. GUZMAN, KELLOGG, HUBER, HANSEN, ET AL., WASHINGTON, DC; REBECCA A. BEYNON, KELLOGG, HUBER, HANSEN, TODD, EVANS & FIGEL, P.L.L.C., WASHINGTON, DC.

For COPPER ANTITRUST LITIGATION, J.P. MORGAN & COMPANY, MORGAN GUARANTY TRUST CO. OF NEW YORK, Defendants: JAMES H.R. WINDELS, DAVIS, POLK & WARD WELL, NEW YORK, NY; MICHAEL D. LEFFEL, FOLEY & LARDNER LLP, MADISON, WI.

Judges: BARBARA B. CRABB, District Judge.

Opinion by: BARBARA B. CRABB

Opinion

[*910] OPINION AND ORDER

This civil antitrust action for money damages is before the court on the motion of defendants J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. and Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York for summary judgment on the claims of plaintiffs Southwire Co., Gaston Copper Recycling Corp., ASARCO LLC, Kennecott Utah Copper Corporation, American Insulated Wire Corporation, Leviton Manufacturing Co., Inc., Exeon Inc., Mueller Copper Tube Co., Inc., Mueller Copper Products, Inc., Superior Essex, Inc., Cerro Flow Products, Inc., Cerro Metal Products Company, [3] Cerro Wire & Cable Co, Inc., Comtran Corporation, The Kerite Company, Rockbestos-Surprenant Cable Corp and Owl Wire and Cable Inc. (Plaintiffs Aetna Insulated Wire, Cerro E.M.S. Limited, Cerro Fabricated Products, Inc., and Hendrix Wire & Cable, Inc., have stipulated that they did not purchase copper cathode or copper rod during the years 1993-1996 and for that reason are not claiming damages in this action. They will be dismissed as parties.)

Plaintiffs contend that defendants violated section 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, and section 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by conspiring with Sumitomo Corporation's chief copper trader, Yasuo Hamanaka to "squeeze" the copper market and raise prices for Sumitomo's copper holdings. (A "squeeze" is a "market situation in which the lack of supplies tends to force shorts to cover their positions by offset at higher prices." CFTC Glossary: A Guide to the Language of the Futures Industry, available at http://www.cftc.gov/opa/glossary/opaglossary_s.htm [*911] (last visited Apr. 23, 2007). Plaintiffs' theory is that defendants were aware that Sumitomo was manipulating copper futures [4] prices and that they provided services and loans to finance and hide Sumitomo's illegal activity. Plaintiffs allege that defendants' deals were structured as individual option and forward transactions but that they were in fact financing arrangements supporting Hamanaka's market manipulations.

Although trial in the case is scheduled to begin on May 29, 2007, defendants believe that trial will not be necessary because plaintiffs lack sufficient evidence from which a jury could find that defendants knowingly agreed with Hamanaka to take actions that would result in a manipulation of the copper market. In addition, defendants argue that plaintiffs cannot establish that they have suffered an antitrust injury because their own damages expert has acknowledged that the econometric model he employed does not attempt to discern whether defendants' allegedly manipulative transactions had any actual effect on the price of copper traded on the New York and London metal exchanges. Defendants maintain that without this information plaintiffs cannot show a connection between the transaction and the price of physical copper. Further, defendants argue, even if plaintiffs can prove a conspiracy between [5] defendants and Hamanaka that affected the price of exchange-traded copper, they lack standing to sue for nearly half the purchases they claim were affected by the conspiracy. Finally, defendants have moved in limine to exclude the reports of plaintiffs' expert witnesses, Christopher Gilbert, Roy Henry and Marianne DeMario.

I conclude that the evidence is sufficiently disputed to allow a jury to find reasonably that defendants "knew that Sumitomo intended to restrain trade, intended that trade be restrained, and materially contributed to that restraint," Loeb Industries, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., 306 F.3d 469, 497 (7th Cir. 2002), that the econometric model that plaintiffs' expert has employed is not obviously inadequate to identify the effect of the allegedly manipulative transactions on the price of exchange-traded copper and that although plaintiffs have established their antitrust standing to bring suit, the question of what damages they may receive at trial is not one that can be decided on the present record. Therefore, defendants' motion for summary judgment will be denied in its entirety. In addition, because the expert testimony of Christopher Gilbert, Roy Henry [6] and Marianne DeMario qualifies as expert under Fed. R. Evid. 702 and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), defendants' motions in limine to exclude the testimony of these experts will be denied.

From the parties' proposed findings of fact, I find the following facts to be material and undisputed.

UNDISPUTED FACTS

A. The Cast of Characters

Plaintiffs are either integrated producers of copper or manufacturers of copper wire or copper tubing. With the exception of plaintiffs Aetna Insulated Wire, Cerro E.M.S. Limited, Cerro Fabricated Products, Inc., and Hendrix Wire & Cable, Inc., all of them purchased copper cathode, rod or ingot during the period 1993-1996. Defendant J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. is a leading global financial services firm and one of the largest banking institutions in the United States. Defendant Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York is a wholly owned subsidiary of defendant J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. (For the purposes of litigation, defendants have been [*912] treating themselves as one entity and I will do the same.) J.P. Morgan Securities Ltd. is a securities dealer incorporated in England [7] and Wales and a member of the London Metal Exchange.

Sumitomo Corporation is one of Japan's oldest trading houses, with interests that include banking, computer manufacturing, chemicals, mining and machinery. It is a major metals trader in Japan and in other parts of the world. In the early 1990s, it handled approximately 500,000 metric tons of copper a year, or about 5% of the world's total annual copper production.

Yasuo Hamanaka began working for Sumitomo Corporation in Japan in 1970. In 1985, when he was working as a copper trader in the non-ferrous metal department, he lost $ 6.5 billion yen on Sumitomo's copper transactions. Not wanting to disclose the losses, he began taking steps to cover them up by engaging in a variety of financial transactions, including derivative transactions in the copper future markets that continued into 1996.

Hamanaka was authorized to deal in derivatives and other kinds of financial transactions, but he ignored Sumitomo's internal regulations in the way he carried out the transactions and the purposes for which he pursued them. To give his actions verisimilitude, he counterfeited documents and forged signatures.

In 1993, Keith Murphy was head [8] of defendants' base metal activities, which had their headquarters in London. From 1993 until 1996, he was responsible for direct marketing to existing and prospective global clients with the goal of generating revenue and market share for defendants.

B. Physical Copper

Copper producers extract ore from a mine and crush or mill it into a gravel-like substance known as concentrate. Smelters separate out the nonferrous metals in the concentrate, producing one-meter square plates of anode, which are approximately 90% copper. That anode is refined electrolytically to create sheets of cathode, which are fed into a furnace at a mill and melted into rod or wire. Loeb Industries, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., 306 F. 3d at 475. Refined copper can also be made from copper scrap, which is recycled and reintroduced into the refining process.

Participants in the physical copper market include integrated producers, smelters, semi-fabricators, merchants and traders, manufacturers, retailers and scrap dealers, all of whom buy and sell copper at each state of the production process. Integrated producers are mining companies engaged in the extraction and refining of copper. They both [9] buy and sell refined and pre-refined products. In the event of a production shortfall, an integrated producer might purchase cathode or rod from a third party, rather than refining copper itself. A consumer cannot tell the specific origin of a particular sheet of cathode from looking at it or at the documentation accompanying delivery.

C. Copper Transactions in General

Copper transactions take place in three markets: the physical copper market, the futures market and the over-the-counter derivatives market. In the physical copper market, customers buy copper in its physical form for further refining, for use in a product or for resale. From October 1993 to December 1996, plaintiffs purchased copper cathode or rod from numerous integrated producers and from merchants. (Although purchases of rod pay a premium over and above that paid for cathode, the court of appeals held that the additional premium does not render the purchaser's injury direct. The premium is small and ends to increase as the Comex price increases. Loeb Industries, 306 F.3d at 495.

In the futures market, copper is traded on commodities exchanges through warrants [*913] and futures contracts traded on [10] either the London Metal Exchange (LME) or the New York Mercantile Exchange (known as Comex) on a principal-to-principal basis. The London Metal Exchange contracts assume an eventual delivery of physical copper on a prompt date. In reality, such deliveries rarely do not occur because the majority of the LME business is carried out for trade hedging, that is, for minimizing the risks of price fluctuations in the market at the time of delivery.

On the over-the-counter market, copper derivative transactions are negotiated privately between dealers and end-users.

D. Defendants' Copper Transactions with Sumitomo

In 1992 and early 1993, defendants began to focus on their base metals trading business. To that end, Kevin Murphy and another employee of defendants, Brian Harmon de Clare, approached Yasuo Hamanaka in August 1993, to discuss setting up a copper trading relationship with Sumitomo.

Defendants engaged in a number of transactions with Sumitomo between 1993 and 1996, five of which are of particular significance in the parties' eyes importance to the suit. In September 1993, Sumitomo, through Hamanaka, proposed a large copper derivatives transaction to Murphy. Although the proposal [11] raised concerns among defendants' managers, who declined the transaction as proposed, they approved it after Sumitomo changed its timing. As proposed originally, Sumitomo was to sell defendants over-the-counter put options for 600,000 metric tons at a strike price of $ 2000 per metric ton, along with three financially settled forward transactions under which defendants would buy 585,000 metric tons of copper at prices between $ 1740 and $ 1750 per metric ton, with both transactions to be settled in cash. The premium for the options was $ 145.8 million. After amendment, to allay defendants' concerns about Sumitomo's use of the transaction to beef up its midyear earnings, the metric tons of copper were increased to 1 million.

In the process of considering Sumitomo's proposals, defendants asked Kazutaka Suzuki, one of defendants' senior credit officers in Tokyo, to discuss the proposed transaction with Sumitomo senior management. In a memorandum, Suzuki reported that he had called Takehiko Yonezu, a member of Sumitomo's executive committee and a senior managing director. Suzuki wrote that he described the proposed deal to Yonezu as one involving a sale of copper put options covering [12] as much as 1 million metric tons for a premium payment to Sumitomo's Hong Kong subsidiary of $ 280 million to $ 300 million. According to Suzuki, Yonezu confirmed the company's awareness of the transaction and told Suzuki that the transaction was related to one of Sumitomo's clients located near Hong Kong.

In March 1994, Hamanaka approached defendants about entering into a copper option transaction involving put and call options and forward contracts. Defendants' Tokyo Management Committee met on March 29 to discuss the Sumitomo proposal, which was to close before March 31 and would involve 1.8 million metric tons of copper and a premium payment to defendants of $ 253.8 million. The deal was to provide funding at an effective price of 570 bp (basis points) over libor (the London InterBank Offered Rate), within a copper price range of $ 1900 to $ 2000 per metric ton on maturity. Defendants were aware that Sumitomo had access to ten year funds at 10 bp below libor. The committee was concerned that such a large deal so close to Sumitomo's fiscal year end might be used to manipulate reported earnings, particularly in light of the company's effort to obtain a similar deal two days before [13] its [*914] September 1993 interim period end. The committee was worried about "the substantial market risk involved in obtaining funding in this manner." Handley Decl., dkt. # 776, exhs. ## 121-28, 130. Seeking further clarification of the company's motivation for the deal, the committee learned from Price Waterhouse that Japan's Generally Accepted Accounting Procedures would not allow Sumitomo to take the premium on the deal as income or use the deal in any other way to manipulate earnings. Japan's procedures required capitalization until expiration of premiums on commodity options. Sumitomo told the committee that its motivation was to obtain funding without drawing down other credit lines and that the substantial market risk of obtaining funding in this way was not a concern because it had offsetting options purchased from a client. The committee concluded that it had no reason to withhold approval for the transaction. Although it would have preferred to do the deal after Sumitomo's fiscal year end, it did not insist on this condition. The deal went ahead on March 30, 1994.

On April 4, 1994, Hamanaka transferred defendants' entire premium payment back to defendants, where the deposit [14] earned overnight interest rates, pending further instructions from Sumitomo. Defendants did not consider the deposit unusual; clients left funds with defendants on occasion.

On August 24, 1994, Murphy arranged a meeting with Sumitomo's senior management. One of the purposes of the meeting was "to glean understanding as to the extent that Immamura [sic] is aware and briefed on the business completed and the relationship, etc." Duncan Decl., dkt. # 767, exh. # 93.

In October 1994, when David Pryde was defendants' Global Head of Commodities. he met briefly with Akio Imamura, General Manager of Sumitomo's Non-Ferrous Metals Division and Hamanaka's superior, and discussed the copper derivatives transactions between defendants and Sumitomo. Imamura told Pryde, "[Y]ou are not seeing the whole deal. There are a couple of legs to this and you are only seeing part of the deal." Polland Decl., dkt. # 679, Vol. I, exh. # 23.

Four days later, Pryde traveled with Murphy to China, where they met with the president of CNIEC, a major state run copper producer, who told Pryde that he had entered into a large transaction with a large copper trader in the region. This led Pryde to believe that [15] CNIEC was Sumitomo's customer.

In a faxed letter dated November 14, 1994, Murphy wrote Hamanaka to tell him that defendants were executing some "forward producer" selling around the $ 2745 level. He added, "If you have an interest, we must borrow this material 3's to the average of 95." Id., exh. # 162. On November 15, Hamanaka thanked Murphy for his useful information and comments, "which were greatly valuable." Duncan Decl., dkt. # 767, # 153. On November 16, 1994, Sumitomo Hong Kong paid defendants $ 421,308,500.00 to settle transactions dated November 19, 1993 and March 30, 1994.

In December 1994, Murphy wrote Hamanaka to propose a potential action in the cash copper market and three-month trading strategies. On December 21, 1994, defendants paid Sumitomo $ 31.92 million for put options on 240,000 tons of copper and an additional forward position of 153,600 tons. The positions were to expire in the fourth quarter of 1995.

Defendants executed additional large cash and copper futures trades on Sumitomo's behalf throughout 1995. Sumitomo purchased more than 1 million tons of copper and sold an additional 858,000 tons in trades executed by defendants. These [*915] volumes exceeded [16] Sumitomo's 500,000-ton requirements for physical copper. Its total volume of copper transactions on the exchanges for the year was 2.4 to 2.5 million tons and its total volume of copper-related transactions may have been as much as 50 million tons.

On March 28, 1995, Sumitomo and defendants entered into another large financing transaction immediately before the March 31 end of Sumitomo's fiscal year. Defendants purchased call options and went short a forward, making a premium payment to Sumitomo of $ 90 million. (A forward contract is a "cash transaction common in many industries, including commodity merchandising, in which a commercial buyer and seller agree upon delivery of a specified quality and quantity of goods at a specified future date." CFTC Glossary, available at http://cftc.gov/opa/glossary/opaglossary_f.htm (last visited Apr. 23. 2007).

On September 29, 1995, defendants entered into a copper derivatives transaction with Sumitomo. Their next large transaction took place in March 1996 and involved put and call options, forwards and a total premium payment to Sumitomo of approximately $ 49.5 million. Although defendants' management had concerns about market manipulation, [17] it found no reason not to engage in the Sumitomo transaction. It believed that the "deal in no way involves Sumitomo trying to squeeze the price as per the allegations. In fact it is delta neutral." Polland Decl., dkt. # 679, Vol. 1, exh. # 59. ("Delta" is "the expected change in an option's price given a one-unit change in the price of the underlying futures contract or physical commodity. For example, an option with a delta of 1.5 would change $ .50 when the underlying commodity moves $ 1.00." "Delta neutral" "[r]efers to a position involving options that is designed to have an overall delta of zero." CFTC Glossary, available at http://www.cftc.gov/opa/glossary/opaglossary_d.htm (last visited Apr. 23, 2007). The transaction earned defendants the approximate revenue of $ 20.5 million on a $ 49,596 million transaction.

Between November 1993 and June 1996, defendants executed 149 trades on the London Metal Exchange trading copper on Sumitomo's behalf.

In its copper trading business, defendants' role was that of a dealer. As a financial institution, it was required to, and did run a delta neutral copper book, otherwise known as keeping a "square book." As a general rule, defendants [18] kept their option book "delta neutral" on a portfolio basis, although not necessarily on intraday trading

E. Audits

At the beginning of 1995, defendants' audit department became concerned about the base metals trading in the London office. The department undertook a review of defendants' base metals business, including its copper trading operations and the copper derivations transactions between defendants and Sumitomo. In a report issued December 21, 1995, the auditors identified a number of control and procedural problems within the base metals business, but found no evidence of fraud.

In the fall of 1995, defendants engaged Arthur Andersen to undertake an independent confirmation of all transactions in base metals in London. In response to the auditors' report, defendants made changes in the London office, after which they were confident that they had taken appropriate action and that they had found no evidence of fraud.

F. The Unraveling of Hamanaka's Schemes

On April 11 and 12, 1996, Hamanaka was deposed by the Commodities Futures [*916] Trading Commission. On May 20, he was removed by Sumitomo from day-to-day trading. On June 5, 1996, he disclosed his unauthorized trading [19] to Sumitomo, precipitating his dismissal and accelerating the sharp decline in the copper market, which fell from highs of around $ 2,800 a ton to below $ 2,000 a ton.

On June 14, Hamanaka issued a statement taking responsibility for the disgrace he had caused Sumitomo and explaining the methods he had used to carry out his scheme, which included his insistence on receiving trade confirmations directly so that Sumitomo did not find about them. The same day, Sumitomo announced that it had suffered a loss of $ 1.8 billion as a result of allegedly unauthorized copper trading by Hamanaka over a ten-year period and that it was terminating Hamanaka's employment. In September 1996, Sumitomo revised its losses upward to $ 2.6 billion. Hamanaka admitted he was guilty of fraud and forgery, was sentenced to eight years in prison and served a little more than seven years' incarceration.

When word circulated of the confession, defendants' audit/risk management department expressed concern that Murphy might flee the country or even commit suicide. Traders in the London office did not share those concerns. Defendants reassigned Murphy to the New York office and demoted him to a marketing role.

[20] G. Investigations of Market Manipulation

After Sumitomo disclosed Hamanaka's activities, a number of regulatory investigations of Sumitomo and its trading partners were instigated; others had begun before the disclosure was made. For example, on November 8, 1995, the London Metal Exchange wrote to all members, including J.P. Morgan Securities, Ltd., requesting information on their clients' large copper positions, including "futures, options and their delta equivalent and off-Exchange products, where any such position exceeds 300 lots (7500 metric tonnes)." On November 17, 1995, Kieran Sykes, Vice President, Global Brokerage, for J.P. Morgan Securities, wrote the exchange to say that its only copper-related activity was limited to clearing exchange contracts for one client, defendant Morgan Guaranty Trust. Attached to the letter was a chart showing client contracts beneficially owned by Morgan Guaranty Trust for its own account. These included futures, puts and calls. Duncan Decl., dkt. # 768, exh. # 240.

On November 24, the exchange thanked J.P. Morgan Securities for its November 17 letter, but reiterated that "client" means "the ultimate position holder." Id., exh. # 233. [21] The exchange asked the company again to go through its house accounts, brokers and parent company omnibus accounts to determine the ultimate client, his positions, the dates thereof and the tonnages involved. Sykes responded on November 28, saying that J.P. Morgan Securities had previously informed the exchange that its client was Morgan Guaranty Trust and that the trust company did not act as a broker or keep a parent company omnibus account at J.P. Morgan Securities.

The exchange tried again to elicit information from J.P. Morgan Securities on December 6, when it wrote Sykes to say that one of the purposes of its inquiry was "to identify the beneficial owners of OTC or off-Exchange contracts, which have the effect of creating an on-Exchange hedge of exactly the type you have described in your letter." Duncan Decl., dkt. # 768, # 243. Alan Wethered, Managing Director and Chief Executive of J.P. Morgan Securities, wrote the exchange on December 8, to say that Morgan Guaranty Trust was a client of J.P. Morgan Securities, that it maintained an account with J.P. Morgan [*917] Securities for the purpose of clearing London Metal Exchange contracts, that the account was strictly an arm's length [22] account and that Morgan Guaranty Trust was the "ultimate position holder." Wethered stated his belief that J.P. Morgan Securities had been entirely forthcoming in reporting the positions of Morgan Guaranty Trust to the exchange. Id., exh. # 244. At some point, because defendants had concerns about the confidentiality of the London Metal Exchange, they suggested that it ask the Securities and Investment Board in London to make requests for information.

On January 18, 1996, the Securities and Investment Board began an investigation of J.P. Morgan Securities, Ltd. and its activities in the copper market. On January 31, J.P. Morgan Securities provided the board with the information it had requested. It gave the board the details of its positions in "any form of contract or holdings of warrants based on copper as of 11 December 1995" and "details of all JPSML's positions in any form of contract or holdings of warrants based on copper as of 12 January 1996." Id., exh. # 245. It added that defendant Morgan Guaranty Trust was "the ultimate position holder in respect of all positions identified in the attachments [to the letter]." Id. The board requested details from defendant [23] Morgan Guaranty Trust of all of its open positions in London Metal Exchange contracts; defendant provided the details immediately, including details of all positions with Sumitomo. Id., exh. # 247.

Starting in the summer of 1996, the Federal Reserve Board and the New York State Banking Department reviewed defendants' copper trading activities. During this review, the two agencies maintained offices at defendants' headquarters in New York City, where they had access to defendants' employees and records. More than twenty of defendants' employees spoke with representatives of the board or the banking department or both.

The Federal Reserve confirmed that Hamanaka enjoyed a close personal relationship with Murphy and that during the 1993-1996 period, Sumitomo had accounted for 75-80% of the revenue earned by defendants' commodities business. Defendants reviewed with the Federal Reserve its 1995 audit and analysis of the London base metal trading. In its investigative findings, the Federal Reserve expressed "serious concerns about the general level and content of management oversight of the Global Base Metals Business" and about Murphy's "business practices and conduct." Duncan Decl. [24] , dkt. # 767, exh. # 129. It found that although management was aware of Murphy's conduct, "no steps were taken to limit his authority or provide him with additional management oversight" and that "within the context of [defendants'] relationship with Sumitomo, there were a large number of warning signs that all was not well. . . . Along the same lines, we have also noted a troubling lack of forthrightness in the context of [defendants'] dealings with regulatory authorities." Id. These included Murphy's testimony to the Federal Reserve that he had dealt with several traders at Sumitomo, which was not true, and his testimony to the Securities and Investment Board that Sumitomo had never asked defendants to facilitate trading by a third party through Sumitomo's account with defendants. In fact Hamanaka had made such a request and Murphy had sent a power of attorney to Hamanaka to facilitate the third party trading. Id.

On December 11, 1996, the Federal Reserve and the New York State Banking Department entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with defendants. The memorandum addressed improvements in defendants' control structure but made no [*918] reference to Sumitomo, to market [25] manipulation or fraud. However, the parties did agree that defendants would "address and consider" "the effectiveness of the due diligence process, including: (A) policies and procedures for determining that the business purposes of transactions executed with customers are reasonably transparent to both parties, that transaction structures are appropriate for the business purpose intended, that potential legal, market and reputational risks have been identified, and that documentation and legal risks have received appropriate legal review." Duncan Decl., dkt. # 767, exh. # 128.

Sumitomo and Merrill Lynch were investigated by the Commodities Futures Trading Commission in connection with an alleged manipulation of the copper markets. On May 11, 1998, the commission issued an order against Sumitomo and made several findings. The commission found that Sumitomo had established a dominant position on the London Metal Exchange, acting through various agents, and that it had done so for the purpose of manipulating the price of copper and copper futures upwards. In a separate proceeding, it found that Merrill Lynch had aided and abetted the Sumitomo conspiracy. It concluded that "the manipulators' [26] warrant-taking operation was not motivated by any genuine commercial need" and this knowledge and intent supported the finding of aiding and abetting. Polland Decl., dkt. # 679, Vol. I, exh. # 69, at 4. The commission found that Merrill Lynch had "realized profits from the increased backwardation in spreads created by the manipulators' activities." Id. Sumitomo paid $ 150 million and Merrill Lynch paid $ 15 million to settle the matter.

In the summer of 1996, the Commodities Futures Trading Commission began an investigation of defendants. Defendants produced documents to the commission and their employees testified before the commission. (Some of these same employees or others testified before other regulatory agencies.). The commission never brought any charges or sought any sanction against defendants related to their copper trading relationship with Sumitomo. The Financial Services Authority advised defendants on April 16, 1998 and August 14, 1998, that it would not "seek to have its investigators make further inquiries." Id., exhs. ## 71 & 72.

H. Murphy's Status

In February 1997, defendants ended market making activity in base metals and closed the doors on its copper [27] trading business. In January 1997, Murphy left defendant's employ. He received no bonus and forfeited his options.

In April 1997, Murphy wrote defendants' managing director, asking for renegotiation of his severance agreement that would include his 1996 bonus and his stock options. In July 1997, Murphy talked with Barbara Hack, an employee of defendants, and told her he believed his option forfeiture was not fair after what he had contributed to revenue for 1996. He added that he had been the "good corp. citizen" and had taken calls from the press and The Wall Street Journal, baiting him for information and had called defendants immediately. Duncan Decl., dkt. # 771, exh. # 300. Defendants declined Murphy's request to reinstate his stock options.

On November 23, 1998, Murphy entered into a settlement agreement and general release in which he agreed that he would not "directly or indirectly, use or disclose, or permit or aid the use by or disclosure . . . of any privileged, confidential or proprietary business information relating to" defendants' business. Id. exh. # 302. Murphy agreed to give defendants notice of any subpoenas and the opportunity to resist them. Under the [28] agreement, Murphy received a "special payment of [*919] $ 225,000 and the reinstatement of approximately $ 700,000 in stock options forfeited on his termination." Id.

I. Damages

Throughout the period of the alleged conspiracy, plaintiffs were parties to contracts under which they were obligated to sell cathode or rod to various purchasers. When they were unable to produce enough cathode or rod to fill their contractual obligations, they purchased cathode or rod from other sources, including other integrated producers and merchants. The integrated producers from whom plaintiffs purchased cathode and rod did not themselves produce all the cathode and rod they sold. The parties dispute the percentage of cathode and rod sold for the first time by each producer.

From 1993-1996, plaintiffs American Insulated Wire, Leviton Manufacturing Company and Superior Telecom purchased cathode and rod exclusively from integrated producers. During the same period, plaintiffs Kennecott, Asarco, Essex Group, Mueller Copper Tube Company, Mueller Copper Tube Products and Southwire purchased cathode through merchants when they were unable to obtain the product from integrated producers. These merchants [29] included AICO Corp., BAL Metals International, Inc., Billiton Metals Inc., Brandeis Ltd., Cerro Sales Corp., Conversion Resources, Inc., Essex, Gerald Metals, Glencore Ltd., Heisei Minerals Corp., International Metals, J. Aron & Co., Kataman Metals, Inc., Kobe Copper Products, Kojemi Corp., Manitoba Corp., Metal Commodities, MG Metal and Commodity Co., Miles Metal Company, Minemet Inc., Minorco, Mitsubishi Materials America Corp., Mitsui & Co., Outokumpu, Pechiney World Trade Inc., PMX Industries, Inc., Samsung America, Inc. and Southwire Company. (In making this finding, I have disregarded the statements of plaintiffs' employees to the extent they conflicted with the sworn statements of the merchants themselves about their sales of cathode or copper rod when plaintiffs' employees did not explain how they would have had personal knowledge of the sources of the products sold, when they did not make it clear that the purchases were made within the relevant time period or when plaintiffs' own admissions of those of its experts classified the source as a merchant rather than a producer.) The parties dispute the terms and conditions under which these sales were made, whether the merchants [30] ever took possession of the copper and when and how payments were exchanged among plaintiffs, the merchants and the integrated producers.

OPINION

A. Evidence of Defendants' Knowing Participation in Conspiracy

HN1[] Section 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, makes illegal "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations" and subjects persons found guilty of such conspiracies to criminal penalties. Section 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, gives persons injured "by anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" the right to sue for relief in federal court. To prove the elements of a claim under § 4 of the Sherman Act of knowing participation in a conspiracy, a plaintiff must come forward with evidence showing that the defendant "'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)(quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 111 (3d Cir. 1980)). In this case, plaintiffs [31] must prove that defendants "knew that Sumitomo [*920] intended to restrain trade, intended that trade be restrained, and materially contributed to that restraint." Loeb Industries, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., 306 F.3d 469, 497 (7th Cir. 2002)(citing Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application, P 1474a (1986)).

HN2[] Ordinarily, when a court decides a motion for summary judgment, it must view the facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). "But antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Id. at 588. To defeat a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case, the opponent of the motion "must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. (quoting Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764).

Eleven years after the public first learned of Yasuo Hamanaka's misconceived schemes to recoup his copper trading losses, it remains unproven whether defendants conspired with [32] Hamanaka or Sumitomo or both to manipulate the copper market. Defendants contend that this is because they were never part of any conspiracy with Hamanaka. In their view, plaintiffs have failed to adduce any evidence that is not as consistent with legitimate transactions on defendants' part as it is with conspiratorial actions, that is, they have not come forward with evidence that excludes the possibility that defendants' dealings with Sumitomo and Hamanaka were entirely proper.

Plaintiffs contend that their evidence is more than sufficient to exclude any possibility that defendants' dealings were proper, asserting to the contrary that the evidence establishes that defendants knew of Sumitomo's intent to restrain trade, that defendants had the same intent and that they materially contributed to the restraint.

1. Defendants' knowledge of Sumitomo's intent to manipulate the market

Plaintiffs have adduced evidence that it was public knowledge in August and September 1993 that Sumitomo was involved in market manipulation. Articles had appeared describing a copper squeeze, naming Sumitomo and reporting that the London Metal Exchange had issued several regulatory warnings concerning [33] copper manipulation to its members, including J.P. Morgan Securities. In addition, plaintiffs cite defendants' assessment of the September 30, 1993 transaction proposed by Sumitomo. Plaintiffs acknowledge that defendants declined Sumitomo's first proposal, but assert that the deal's significance lies in the fact that it would have alerted defendants to Sumitomo's willingness to engage in improper financing transactions.

Plaintiffs claim additional support from a series of internal memoranda defendants prepared, discussing the possibility of defendants' internal copper hedge positions having an effect on the liquidity of the physical copper market. These memoranda did not relate to defendants' over the counter transactions with Sumitomo, but to defendants' attempts to predict the effect of the transactions on defendants' risks. The authors noted that if defendants were forced to enter into separate hedging transactions in the future, those transactions might affect the price of copper. However, plaintiffs cite the memoranda as showing defendants' awareness of the possibility that the size of their transaction with Sumitomo might have an adverse effect on the market's liquidity at some [34] time. Finally, plaintiffs note that when The Wall [*921] Street Journal published an article in 1995 concerning squeeze rumors, Murphy sent it to Hamanaka.

2. Defendants' intent to manipulate the market

On the necessary element of defendants' intent, plaintiffs have a considerable amount of circumstantial evidence. Most of it is ambiguous, such as evidence of the confidentiality that defendants promised Sumitomo in their dealings. (It is as plausible to believe that confidentiality is a critical criterion for winning clients in the competitive world of metals trading as it is to believe that confidentiality means concealment of improper activities.)

Plaintiffs cite evidence showing that defendants allowed Hamanaka to handle his own confirmations and allowed Murphy to handle all confirmations and payments on defendants' end. Defendants have produced evidence that although they sent trade confirmations directly to Hamanaka, they did so because they had what they thought was authorization from Sumitomo for doing so. Defendants' evidence shows, moreover, that they took steps to talk with Hamanaka's superiors to insure that the company knew of the nature and scope of Hamanaka's [35] transactions. As for Murphy's handling of confirmations, the evidence shows that defendants did not sign off on the handling of confirmations and payments but allowed Murphy to mail those on to Sumitomo (in care of Hamanaka) after the back office had reviewed and approved them.

Plaintiffs assert that defendants kept Sumitomo's management in the dark about the conspiracy. They cite Murphy's discouragement of any contact between defendants' Tokyo office and Sumitomo, Hamanaka's "beating up" of Murphy when any representative of defendants approached Sumitomo's management and Murphy's promise to Hamanaka that no one from the Tokyo office would "bother" Sumitomo. According to plaintiffs, this led to a remark from an exasperated Toyko employee that he was not allowed to conduct due diligence on the Sumitomo transactions.

Plaintiffs ignore the contradictory evidence that defendants adduced of their efforts to ascertain from Sumitomo officials both that the officials knew of Hamanaka's trading and that the trades were for a legitimate hedging purpose. Defendants dispatched a Toyko employee to check with a Sumitomo employee on the good faith basis of the proposed September 1993 transaction [36] and David Pryde met personally with Imamura to talk with him about Sumitomo's copper trading. Defendants set up at least two luncheon meetings with top Sumitomo officials during this period to discuss the copper trading, among other topics, and they obtained information from a large Chinese corporation that it was engaged in large scale business with a prominent Asian trader. If the Chinese were dealing with Sumitomo, it would explain Sumitomo's need for the derivatives transactions it sought with defendants.

On the question of concealing information from regulators, the undisputed facts seem to show that the alleged "stonewalling" consisted merely of J.P. Securities' refusal to turn over to the London Metal Exchange records about the clients of defendant Morgan Guaranty Trust. Plaintiffs have not established what J.P. Securities' legal obligations were in this regard, that is, whether it had a legal obligation to defendant Morgan Guaranty Trust and its clients not to turn over this information or conversely, whether it had a legal obligation to turn over the information to the exchange. Moreover, it is significant that even now, after plaintiffs have gained access to all the information [37] that could bear on the alleged conspiracy, neither they nor [*922] any regulatory body has identified any incriminating information that defendants did not provide to the regulators. Plaintiffs have not shown that there is any evidence in defendants' possession that would have prevented any additional market manipulation if it had been turned over earlier.

It is hard to imagine that a jury would place much weight on defendants' special payment to Murphy and reinstatement of his stock options in 1998. Plaintiffs try to put a spin on the actions by linking them to the "looming copper litigation." This effort would be more successful if defendants had made the payment and reinstatement in connection with Murphy's termination in July 1996. Instead defendants released him without any severance pay and held his stock options forfeited. Between then and November 23, 1998, when the payments were made, Murphy had talked to a number of regulators and had had ample opportunity (and potential motivation arising from defendants' treatment of him) to disclose information that would be harmful to defendants. Of course, he had his own reasons to refuse to disclose information harmful to him personally, [38] but these were independent of any payments or lack of payments from defendants.

Nothing about the agreement that Murphy entered into is out of the ordinary for companies dealing with departing employees who have had access to confidential business information. In suggesting that the payment was made because Murphy had told defendants he had been the "good corp. citizen" and remained silent rather than disclose relevant evidence to regulators, plaintiffs misstate Murphy's actual statement. He told defendants that he had been a good corporate citizen by refusing to talk to the press. He did not say, and the evidence does not show, that he ever refused to talk to regulators or failed to respond to a subpoena issued in any lawsuit.

Plaintiffs argue that the intimate and conspiratorial relationship between Murphy and Hamanaka is evidence of defendants' knowledge of the entire conspiracy and defendants' part in it. Setting aside the tautological error in saying that the conspiratorial relationship is evidence of the conspiracy, plaintiffs have produced no evidence that would require a jury to find that Murphy was conspiring with Hamanaka on behalf of defendants. Brokers and traders speak [39] on the telephone frequently and use the telephone to discuss specific matters; such activity is as consistent with innocent behavior as it is with conspiracy. The same is true of Murphy's close personal relationship with his biggest client, including sending Hamanaka articles about the price of copper and giving him advance notice of a proprietary commodities index that defendants were developing.

Plaintiffs look for support from Murphy's November 14, 1994 message to Hamanaka about defendants' copper-producer clients taking a bearish position on the London Market Exchange. It is difficult to tell from the message whether Murphy was simply talking to Hamanaka about buying "forward producers selling around the 2745 level," passing on confidential information about defendants' clients or acting to give Hamanaka a chance to take more copper off the market.

Finally, plaintiffs point to defendants' concern about Murphy's possible reaction to the news of the market collapse and the realization that his friend and client might be going to prison. As the evidence shows, although defendants were sufficiently concerned to place Murphy under surveillance to insure against self-harm or flight, [40] their concerns were misplaced. Their concern is not evidence of their guilt or Murphy's; it was not unreasonable for [*923] them to be concerned about the effect on Murphy when he learned of Hamanaka's firing and the resulting effect on the copper market.

If this were all the evidence that plaintiffs had, Matsuishita Electric might compel the conclusion that defendants were entitled to summary judgment. Much of plaintiffs' evidence is ambiguous and subject to two meanings, one of which favors defendants' position that no conspiracy existed.

There is, however, additional evidence in the form of the transactions themselves. It is possible that these transactions should be viewed as entirely innocent, as defendants maintain they are. It is also the case that the transactions could be seen reasonably as part of a conspiracy. Before a jury could find that defendants' acts have an innocent explanation, it must sort out a plethora of disputed issues of fact. Both sides have retained highly qualified experts to analyze the nature of the transactions. The experts have expressed radically different opinions about whether these transactions should be characterized as having rational economic purposes [41] and therefore are presumptively legitimate, or whether they are deals that neither defendants nor Sumitomo would have entered into but for the knowing purpose of providing financing to Sumitomo to manipulate the market at great profit to defendants.

From defendants' perspective, the major transactions were typical transactions for market makers and dealers in derivatives such as defendants during this period. The transactions were purchases of over the counter put and call options on copper, combined in some instances with the purchase or sale of forward contracts that reduced the risk of the transactions to defendants "by creating a initial delta hedge of the net option position," Polland Decl., dkt. # 679, vol. III, exh. # 84, MacKay Expert Report, at 5, and priced in accordance with [defendants'] internal pricing policies and recommended dealer practices at the time. Id. According to defendants' expert, Robert MacKay, defendants managed the market risks of the positions by "dynamically delta hedging almost of the directional copper price risk in their overall copper portfolio with forward contracts on the London Metal Exchange and by partially hedging other option related [42] risks, such as volatility risk, with offsetting put and call options traded either on the exchange on over the counter. Id. Because defendants hedged the directional price risk in their copper portfolio, "[they] would not have profited from nor would [they] have expected to profit from an attempted price manipulation by Sumitomo designed to increase or decrease copper prices. In fact, it can be shown for certain [of defendants'] transactions with Sumitomo that any profit to [defendants] attributable to rising prices was largely offset by specifically identified hedges while dynamic hedging at the portfolio level would have offset much, if not all, of the remaining profit from rising prices." Id. at 6.

Three of MacKay's conclusions raise interesting questions for trial. First, he says that "[t]he profitability of any particular transactions cannot be determined on a stand-alone basis. Profitability must be adjusted for offsetting gains or losses on hedges." Id. at 5. Second, he asserts that it is error to infer defendants' knowing participation in the conspiracy from merely looking at a transaction "without considering the fact that [defendants] hedged the transaction [43] with other forwards and options." Id. at 6. Such an analysis "results in a large overstatement of [defendants'] potential profits. In other words, argue defendants, it is necessary to look at the profits that defendants expected to earn at the outset of the transaction, not what [*924] defendants did earn by subsequent hedging and market movement. Only then can a factfinder have any sense of how defendants would have assessed the transaction and thus determine whether the transaction would have alerted any reasonable dealer to the probability if not the certainty that it was a bogus transaction, intended only for financing. Third, MacKay challenges plaintiffs' expert's assertion that defendants' profits on the Sumitomo transactions were excessive because the experts do not provide any "supporting empirical analysis based on comparisons to appropriate benchmarks." Id.

Defendants contend that the evidence shows that because it ran a "square book" on copper, it had no reason to conspire with Sumitomo to manipulate the price of copper upward; doing so would have run counter to its business strategy. As MacKay has indicated, in a squeezed market, defendants would have lost money on [44] many of their hedging transactions because they would have had to buy copper at a higher price than it could have obtained for the copper it had to sell. Defendants ask why, if their goal was to manipulate the price of copper upward, they would have declined to enter into the September 1993 scheme that Sumitomo proposed and documented their awareness of the possibility that the transaction was designed to help Sumitomo squeeze the market?

On the other hand, plaintiffs are adamant in their position that the transactions with Sumitomo were so unusual in their nature that any reasonable dealer, let alone entities as sophisticated as defendants, would recognize the transactions as having no purpose other than providing Sumitomo financing for its conspiracy. Plaintiffs cite the high profits that the transactions promised defendants, which should have raised a red flag, given Sumitomo's high credit rating and the competition for its business. Why would Sumitomo need to make the deal so profitable to defendants when it could borrow on more advantageous terms and when other dealers were competing with defendants to do business with Sumitomo?

Moreover, plaintiffs ask, why would defendants [45] think it normal to be offered transactions that not only raised no downside price risk to them but provided a large profit they could book immediately and the prospect of higher profits if copper prices rose. If this were not enough, they say, the size of the deals should have been a warning to defendants; they and Sumitomo were dealing in quantities far in excess of the amounts traded on the London Metal Exchange.

Plaintiffs rely on the report of Anthony Saunders, one of their expert witnesses. According to Saunders, defendants had no risk of losing money in the March 1994 transaction; Sumitomo could not have realized a gain that would have offset any potential loss it might incur as a result of an underlying risk; and defendants' expected and realized profit from the transaction was "extraordinary." Duncan Decl., dkt. # 766, exh. # 68, at 37, P 58. In addition, defendants entered into a transaction that would allow Sumitomo to transfer back to defendants funds obtained from defendants a week earlier and leave them on deposit for several months at below-market interest.

Finally, plaintiffs argue that it is suspicious that defendants carried out significant copper trading above and [46] beyond the large financing deals, including manipulative trades executed on the London Metal Exchange during a known market squeeze, and that the trading often followed suspicious communications between Murphy and Hamanaka.

[*925] 3. Defendants' contribution to the market manipulation

On the issue of defendants' contribution to the conspiracy, there is little to discuss. If plaintiffs can prove that defendants' transactions with Sumitomo were made knowingly for the purpose of financing Sumitomo's market manipulation, they will have proved defendants' contribution to the illegal restraint of trade.

I conclude that if the jury were to find plaintiffs' experts more believable than defendants', if it were to find that defendants knew the Sumitomo transactions were so commercially irrational as to be obvious disguises for financing manipulative conduct, and if it were to disbelieve defendants' evidence of the steps they took to confirm Sumitomo's awareness of the scope and volume of Hamanaka's dealings, it could find reasonably for plaintiffs on the question of defendants' involvement in Sumitomo's scheme to manipulate the market. As the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit remarked [47] in In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litigation, 295 F.3d 651, 661 (7th Cir. 2002), in discussing the evidence in that case of an actionable conspiracy to fix prices: "The evidence is not conclusive by any means -- there are alternative interpretations of every bit of it -- but it is highly suggestive of the existence of an explicit though of course covert agreement to fix prices." So too in this case. The evidence is suggestive of an agreement between defendants and Sumitomo to "fix" the copper market. Therefore, defendants' motion for summary judgment will be denied with respect to plaintiffs' claim that defendants conspired with Sumitomo to manipulate the price of copper.

B. Antitrust Standing

HN3[] To bring suit for an antitrust violation, a plaintiff must have "antitrust standing" (as distinguished from Article III standing), a component of which is antitrust injury. To qualify as an antitrust injury, an injury must be proximately caused by the direct purchase of a product whose price has been affected by anti-competitive behavior. Loeb Industries, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., 306 F.3d 469, 481 (7th Cir. 2002). In Loeb Industries, the court [48] of appeals held that in the context of this litigation, plaintiffs may demonstrate their antitrust standing by proving that (1) they were the first purchasers of copper from integrated producers and (2) the price of their first-purchased copper was inflated artificially by the alleged conspiracy between defendants and Sumitomo.

Defendants contend that even if plaintiffs are able to prove that defendants conspired with Sumitomo, plaintiffs have failed to adduce reliable evidence from which it may be inferred that they made purchases that qualify as compensable antitrust injuries. Defendants' attack on the adequacy of plaintiff's evidence takes two forms: their motion for summary judgment and their motions in limine, dkt. ## 793 & 795. In both motions, defendants contend that the testimony of expert witnesses Christopher Gilbert, Marianne DeMario and Roy Henry is inadmissible. According to defendant, Gilbert's econometric model fails to draw a causal connection between plaintiffs' alleged injury (in the form of inflated copper prices) and the defendants' alleged wrongdoing. Moreover, defendants contend, the methods employed by DeMario and Henry in calculating the amount of plaintiffs' [49] alleged damages is so flawed that it should be excluded, a result that would leave plaintiffs with no proof of the antitrust injuries they have allegedly sustained.

1. Testimony of Christopher Gilbert

Each plaintiff relies on the testimony of Christopher Gilbert to establish a connection between the alleged conspiracy and [*926] the allegedly inflated prices it paid for copper during the period of the conspiracy. Therefore, I begin with the question whether Gilbert's testimony is admissible.

a. Summary of the relevant testimony

Christopher Gilbert is Professor of Economics at the University of Trento, Italy, where he is the academic director of the doctoral program in economics and management. Gilbert has created an econometric model to forecast the price of copper "but for" the alleged manipulation. (Econometrics is the "application of statistical and mathematical techniques in solving problems as well as in testing and demonstrating theories." Random House Webster's Unabridged Dict. (2d ed. 2001).

In creating his model, Gilbert determined that certain accounts between defendants and Sumitomo had been established for wholly "non-commercial and manipulative reasons." These [50] accounts included the RADR transactions, the GMMC transactions and the Merrill Lynch B Account transactions. Gilbert included all transactions from these accounts in his "non-commercial position" variable, which is the "single most important variable" for determining whether the price of copper was influenced by defendants' alleged manipulation. Gilbert used a multiple regression model to determine whether a relationship existed between the price of copper and a number of variables, including the non-commercial position and various competitive forces in the market.

In constructing the model, Gilbert chose to employ a two-step technique known as the Engle-Granger model. The first step of the model is called the equilibrium equation; the second step of the model is the adjustment equation. Used together, these equations are designed to test whether a relationship exists between non-commercial positions and the price of copper and, if so, the degree to which the non-commercial positions affected the price. Gilbert estimated that the alleged conspiracy raised the price of copper by 12-16 cents a pound during the period of the alleged conspiracy.

The equilibrium equation in Gilbert's [51] model exhibits serial correlation. Defendants' expert, Duncan Cameron, asserts that if the equilibrium equation is adjusted to correct for serial correlation, the model shows that the alleged conspiracy had no effect on the price of copper. However, Gilbert asserts that one would expect to see serial correlation in the equilibrium equation and that the adjustment equation corrects for any errors in his model. Gilbert maintains that no further adjustment for serial correlation is necessary.

Unlike Cameron's model, Gilbert's model does not use the price of aluminum as a variable that may have affected the price of copper during the period of the alleged conspiracy.

b. Admissibility of the testimony

In both their motion in limine and motion for summary judgment, defendants contend that Gilbert's testimony is inadmissible under Fed. R. Evid. 702 and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), because the foundation for his testimony is unreliable.

Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence provides:

> HN4[] If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the [52] trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) that testimony is the product of reliable [*927] principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case.

In Daubert, 509 U.S. at 583, the Supreme Court held that HN5[] Rule 702 imposes a special obligation upon a trial judge to "ensure that any and all scientific testimony . . . is not only relevant, but reliable." The trial judge's gate keeping obligation "applies not only to testimony based on 'scientific' knowledge, but also to testimony based on 'technical' and 'other specialized' knowledge" such as the economic testimony Gilbert has proffered in this case. Kumho Tire Co., Ltd. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 141, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999).

HN6[] When determining whether expert testimony is admissible, district courts employ a two-step inquiry. E.g., United States v. Hall, 165 F.3d 1095, 1101-02 (7th Cir. 1999); Ancho v. Pentek, 157 F.3d 512, 515 (7th Cir. 1998). [53] First, the court examines the expert's testimony to determine whether it is reliable, that is, whether it is grounded in scientific evidence or in subjective belief or unsupported speculation. Porter v. Whitehall Laboratories, Inc., 9 F.3d 607, 614 (7th Cir. 1993). Second, the court must determine whether the testimony will assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact in issue. Id. at 616.

Defendants contend that Gilbert's econometric model fails the first prong of the Daubert inquiry because it contains methodological flaws so pervasive they render the model wholly unreliable. According to defendants, the econometric model upon which Gilbert's testimony rests suffers from three key defects: (1) the model includes all transactions from designated "non-commercial" accounts, instead of only transactions that can be characterized as non-commercial; (2) the first stage of the model (the equilibrium equation) exhibits serial correlation; and (3) the price of aluminum is not included as a variable that may have affected the price of copper.

Before turning to defendants' specific critiques of Gilbert's work, several "meta-points" [54] bear mentioning. HN7[] When an expert proposes to give testimony that is scientific (whether derived from the natural or social sciences), courts engage in "a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592-93. A number of factors bear on the scientific validity of the expert's testimony, including whether the theory or technique can be and has been tested; whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review or scientific scrutiny within the scholarly community; and the reliability of the technique, including the potential rate of error and the general acceptance it enjoys. Id. at 593-94. The evidentiary inquiry is meant to be flexible and fact specific, and a court should use, adapt, or reject Daubert factors as the particular case demands. Kumho Tire Co, 526 U.S. at 141-42. There is no single requirement for admissibility as long as the proffer indicates that the expert evidence is reliable and relevant. Unrein v. Timesavers, Inc., 394 F.3d 1008, 1011 (8th Cir. 2005).

Significantly, [55] defendants do not question Gilbert's credentials or the model upon which he based his expert opinions. They do not suggest that the Engel-Granger model is not accepted among economists. Therefore, it does not appear that they take issue with the scientific model that forms the foundation of Gilbert's opinion. Rather, they question Gilbert's decision to include and exclude specific factors from his model and the effect of those [*928] choices on the reliability of his ultimate conclusions.

i) inclusion of all transactions from designated non-commercial accounts

Defendants assert first that in calculating the non-commercial position variable, Gilbert erred in deeming whole accounts of individual trades either manipulative or legitimate without considering whether the individual trades were manipulative. By doing so, defendants contend, Gilbert's calculations are overinclusive, unreliable and not on a par with the standards demanded in his professional work.

HN8[] In deciding whether an expert's opinion is admissible under Daubert, a district court "must determine whether the evidence is genuinely scientific, as distinct from being unscientific speculation offered by a genuine scientist." [56] Rosen v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 78 F.3d 316, 318 (7th Cir. 1996); see also Zenith Electronics Corp. v. WH-TV Broadcasting Corp., 395 F.3d 416, 419 (7th Cir. 2005)("The supposed 'uniqueness' of a market does not justify substituting a guess for careful analysis."). Essentially, an expert must "adhere to the same standards of intellectual rigor that are demanded in their professional work." Id. The expert's work must be reasoned and founded on data, Lang v. Kohl's Food Stores, Inc., 217 F.3d 919, 924 (7th Cir. 2000), and the expert must explain his conclusions, Zenith, 395 F.3d at 419.

Plaintiffs argue that after investigating and analyzing the market, Professor Gilbert used his professional judgment to make a conservative determination whether certain accounts were manipulative. As plaintiffs note, Gilbert devoted several pages of his report to explaining his rationale for deeming certain accounts non-commercial or manipulative. In his deposition, Gilbert stated that although he could have analyzed the accounts on a transaction-by-transaction basis (as he has done in other prior work), it would have been impossible to [57] determine the individual intent behind the large number of daily transactions in this case. Further, he explained that although certain transactions in manipulative accounts may appear to have legitimate commercial purposes, he proceeded on the assumption that the overall account was set up for a non-commercial (or manipulative) purpose, and any transaction undertaken within it was in furtherance of the manipulation. Gilbert's methods are well articulated and do not rest on mere speculation.

HN9[] In serving its gatekeeping function, the court must be careful not to cross over into the role of factfinder. It is not the job of the court to insure that the evidence heard by the jury is error-free, but to insure that it is not wholly unreliable. Smith v. Ford Motor Company, 215 F.3d 713, 719 (7th Cir. 2000)("[W]hether the expert is credible or whether his or her theories are correct given the circumstances of a particular case is a factual one that is left for the jury to determine after opposing counsel has been provided the opportunity to cross-examine the expert. . ."). Gilbert's decision to include all transactions within the accounts that he conservatively estimated [58] to be non-commercial was an exercise of professional judgment subject to cross-examination. It is not a ground for excluding his testimony altogether.

ii) serial correlation

Defendants' second contention is their most adamant: they argue that because Gilbert concedes that the equilibrium equation in his model exhibits serial correlation (the cumulative effect of unexplained price variations over time), he cannot show that the alleged conspiracy caused inflated prices within the physical market for copper during the relevant period. Defendants contend that if Gilbert had used the correction technique employed by their expert, [*929] Dr. Cameron, his model would have revealed that defendants' alleged misconduct had no discernible effect on copper prices.

At his deposition (and in his report), Gilbert conceded that the equilibrium equation he used exhibits serial correlation. However, despite defendants' assertions to the contrary, that is not the end of the story. Gilbert used the Engel-Granger error correction form of a multiple regression model. The Engel-Granger form uses two equations to estimate the effect of various factors on the price of copper: the equilibrium equation and the adjustment [59] equation. According to Gilbert, serial correlation is always present in the residuals of the equilibrium equations; this is expected and accounted for in the adjustment equations. Given that Gilbert accounted for the existence of serial correlation and the need to correct for it, his method is not so inherently flawed as to preclude him from establishing whether defendants' alleged wrongdoing had any effect on the price of copper. Defendants will have ample opportunity to cross-examine Gilbert at trial and present competing expert evidence on whether defendants' alleged misconduct had any discernible effects on the price of copper in the physical market. In the end, however, whether Gilbert erred in applying his model and whether he failed to properly correct for serial correlation are jury questions not amenable to resolution on summary judgment.

iii) aluminum variable

Finally, defendants contend that Gilbert's model is unreliable because it does not include aluminum as a variable affecting the price of copper. Defendants argue that aluminum is comparable to copper and can serve as a proxy for otherwise omitted variables in measuring the impact of defendants' alleged wrongdoing [60] on the price of copper futures. In support of their argument, defendants point to the report of their expert, Dr. Cameron, who found that the effects of the alleged misconduct diminished significantly when the price of aluminum was included as an explanatory variable. Defendants argue that Gilbert's failure to capture this salient explanatory variable makes his opinion unreliable. See, e.g., People Who Care v. Rockford Board of Education, School District No. 205, 111 F.3d 528, 537-38 (7th Cir. 1997)(HN10[] "A statistical study that fails to correct for salient explanatory variables, or even to make the most elementary comparisons, has no value as causal explanation and is therefore inadmissible in a federal court.").

In his revised affirmation, Gilbert states that he used a multiple regression model to estimate the overcharge and considered several factors that may have affected the price of copper. Dkt. # 802, exh. C at 31-35, PP 65-73 and 41. Gilbert explained in the supplement to his report that he rejected the inclusion of aluminum as a proxy for a number of reasons: 1) aluminum and copper are produced under different conditions and have different cost structures; 2) [61] the aluminum market was flooded with exports in 1991-1993, skewing the normal relationship between copper and aluminum; and 3) the comparison is not valid given the type of informational manipulation that occurred because demand for aluminum may also have been affected by the alleged misconduct. Id. at 65-66, P 3.

HN11[] Although some regression analyses may be so incomplete as to be inadmissible, in most cases, "failure to include variables will affect the analysis' probativeness, not its admissibility." Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 400, 106 S. Ct. 3000, 92 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1986); see also Cullen v. Indiana University Board of Trustees, 338 F.3d 693, 702 n. 4 (7th Cir. 2003)(citing [*930] Bazemore, 478 U.S. at 400). A "statistical study is not inadmissible merely because it is unable to exclude all possible causal factors other than the one of interest." People Who Care, 111 F.3d at 537-38. Because Gilbert considered and rejected the use of aluminum as a proxy and factored in other explanatory variables, his method is not so incomplete or lacking in foundation as to be unreliable. Although Gilbert's judgment may not be correct, his errors are fodder for [62] cross-examination, not summary judgment. Consequently, I will deny defendants' motion in limine to exclude Gilbert's testimony and deny their motion for summary judgment with respect to defendants' claim that Gilbert's testimony is insufficient to establish a causal link between the alleged conspiracy and the price of copper in the physical market.

2. Testimony of Roy Henry and Marianne DeMario

Plaintiffs have employed three damage experts in this lawsuit: Roy Henry (for the Marmon plaintiffs), Marianne DeMario (for the Asarco plaintiffs) and David Hoffman (for the Southwire plaintiffs). Defendants do not challenge the admissibility of Hoffman's testimony; however, they contend that Henry and DeMario's testimony is inadmissible on several grounds.

Before assessing whether Henry's and DeMario's testimony meets the requirements of Fed. R. Evid. 702, I note as an initial matter, plaintiffs' contention that Henry's and DeMario's tabulations of copper purchases are admissible under Fed. R. Evid. 1006. HN12[] Although Rule 1006 permits a party to introduce in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation "[t]he contents [63] of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court," such evidence remains subject to all evidentiary objections. United States v. Milkiewicz, 470 F.3d 390, 396 (1st Cir. 2006)("Evidence admitted under Rule 1006 must be otherwise admissible and remains subject to the usual objections under the rules of evidence and the Constitution.") In this case, defendants are challenging the foundation for Henry's and DeMario's decision to include the records they did in their summary. Therefore, it is not the summaries themselves, so much as the conclusions being drawn from them, that are the subject of defendants' attack. Because Henry and DeMario are qualified to draw those conclusions only by virtue of their specialized training and experience, defendants' challenge to their testimony falls under Rule 702, not Rule 1006.

a. Summary of relevant testimony

i) Henry

Roy Henry has an undergraduate degree in accounting and a masters degree in business administration. After several years of working in finance and as a president-general manager for metal fabricating businesses, Henry joined Marmon in 1993 as corporate controller. [64] In 2000, Henry became the Vice President of Finance for Cerro Wire & Cable and Vice President of Finance and Controller for Marmon Wire and Cable Companies. As a result of his tenure with Marmon, Henry is generally familiar with the copper purchasing and use patterns, document management systems and document retention policies of all of the Marmon plaintiffs. From his work in the industry, Henry possesses an understanding of how integrated producers operate and how copper is priced.

The Marmon plaintiffs (plaintiffs Cerro Wire & Cable, Inc., Cerro Flow Products, Inc., Cerro Metal Products Company, Comtran Corporation, The Kerite Company, Owl Wire and Cable, Inc. and Rockbestos-Suprenant Cable Corp.) asked Henry to calculate the amount of copper cathode, rod, ingot and billet that they purchased [*931] between 1993 and 1996 from integrated producers. Henry supervised the collection and review of all documents relating to the Marmon plaintiffs' purchases during the relevant period. He provided guidance to the Marmon employees on what qualified as a purchase according to the guidelines set by plaintiffs' counsel and oversaw the record gathering process and insured that the purchase documents [65] were relevant.

Invoices and other documents reflecting purchases of copper were separated from other documents, and duplicate invoices were removed. In addition, non-invoice documents, including contracts and purchase summaries, were reviewed to insure that the best available documentation was used to determine the pounds purchased by the Marmon plaintiffs. Copper purchases were assigned to the month best representing the month in which the copper was priced, based on the pricing month as noted on the invoice, the shipment date, the date the shipment was received, the invoice date or other available dates. The results were tabulated to create several spreadsheets. Henry verified personally more than 10% (400-500 documents) of the roughly 3600 documents used to calculate the total purchase volumes contained in the tabulations attached to his declarations.

Although Henry stated in his deposition that he identified which vendors were integrated producers in reliance on information from Marmon employees and his own knowledge of the vendor's operations, in some instances he relied on plaintiffs' discussions with Bill Rickher for this information. Henry explained that Rickher is an expert [66] in the copper buying field, who was helpful in determining the relevancy of more unique copper purchases made by a number of companies that no longer had a management team in place.

Henry concluded that the Marmon plaintiffs purchased 1.16 billion pounds of copper from integrated producers during the period of the conspiracy; defendants' damage expert, Paul Wazzan, concluded that the Marmon plaintiffs had purchased 1.04 billion pounds during the relevant period.

Although Henry's short declarations were drafted by plaintiffs' counsel, he reviewed the documents before signing them and believes they express his findings accurately.

ii) DeMario

Marianne DeMario is a certified public accountant with more than fifteen years of substantial experience in complex forensic accounting investigation. She is the managing director of Spectrum Consulting Partners LLC, a financial and economic consulting firm. Her assignment was twofold: to compile an accounting of the Asarco plaintiffs' copper purchases and to determine, on behalf of all plaintiffs, the percentage of cathode and rod sales from integrated producers that were first-time sales of those products.

DeMario calculated copper cathode [67] purchases made by the following Asarco plaintiffs between September 1, 1993 and May 31, 1996: American Insulated Wire Corporation; ASARCO Incorporated; Kennecott Utah Copper Corporation; Leviton Manufacturing Company, Inc.; Mueller Copper Tube Products, Inc.; Mueller Copper Tube Company; Superior TeleCom, Inc. and Essex Electric, Inc. This work was a continuation and completion of work initiated by Grant Thornton LLP, a large, well-known public accounting firm.

DeMario and her staff obtained 130,000 pages of invoices, vendor statements and other business records from the Asarco plaintiffs, which they reviewed and analyzed. In addition, she and her staff reviewed vendor statements and other business [*932] records to find relevant and sufficient information regarding the purchases by the Asarco plaintiffs and extracted the relevant information regarding the number of pounds of copper purchased, the month the purchases were made and from whom the copper was purchased. DeMario independently verified 88% of the data entries performed by her staff.

In calculating the percentage of sales from integrated producers that could be considered first time sales of cathode and rod (a number the parties [68] call the "integrated producer percentage"), DeMario identified seven integrated producers for whom she was able to calculate an integrated production percentage: Asarco, Codelco, Cyprus, Kennecott, Phelps Dodge, Cominco, Inco and Magma/BHP. To calculate an average integrated producer percentage for remaining integrated producers for whom no records were available (Mexicana de Cananea, Minera Mexico, Noranda, Minera Escondida, Compania Minera Quebrada Blanca, Cox Creek Refining and Empresa Minera de Mantos Blancos), DeMario calculated an average integrated production percentage by taking the simple average of the other producers, excluding Kennecott, because she thought that its unusual production problems during the Damages Period . . . increased its reliance on third party purchases" and made it an "outlier."

Defendants' expert relied on much of the same data as DeMario did in calculating his version of the integrated producer percentage. Although Wazzan (1) used a weighted average rather than a straight average to calculate the average percentage; (2) did not exclude data from Kennecott when calculating the average integrated producer percentage; and (3) did not calculate an integrated [69] production percentage for Cominco because he could not identify any invoices for it, he agreed with DeMario that Asarco, Codelco, Cyprus, Inco, Kennecott, Magma and Phelps Dodge are each integrated producers who produced more than half of the copper they provided to plaintiffs.

b. Admissibility of the testimony

When assessing the admissibility of Henry's and DeMario's testimony, it is important to remember the purpose of the experts' reports. Neither purports to be a legal specialist. Although Henry attempted to distinguish between integrated producers and other vendors in his calculation of purchases made by the Marmon plaintiffs, DeMario made no similar distinction when tabulating the purchases made by the Asarco plaintiffs. DeMario and Henry have offered their testimony for the limited purpose of (1) quantifying how much copper cathode and rod the Asarco and Marmon plaintiffs purchased from 1993-1996 and (2) determining from whom they purchased it. In addition, DeMario has provided an opinion regarding the percentage of sales from each producer from whom plaintiffs purchased copper that can be labeled a first-time sale of cathode or rod. Because the experts are offering their [70] testimony for no purpose other than the accuracy of those calculations, it is with respect to those matters only that the testimony's admissibility must be assessed.

Defendants raise several Daubert challenges to the admissibility of Henry's and DeMario's testimony. First, they contend that Henry's report should be excluded because he relied too heavily on plaintiffs' counsel. Second, they contend that both Henry's and DeMario's testimony should be excluded because the experts relied on others to assist them in collecting and analyzing data and because the reports are "riddled with errors." (In addition, defendants raise several other challenges to the data included in the reports that are relevant to determining how much plaintiffs [*933] may recover in damages but not to the admissibility of the reports. I will address those matters separately in section C, below.)

i) reliance on others

First, defendants contend that Henry relied improperly on plaintiffs' counsel in forming his opinions and preparing his expert reports. Defendants assert that Henry relied on counsel to draft his reports and to define the parameters of his inquiry into plaintiffs' purchases during the relevant time [71] period, resulting in a work product that is effectively not his own.

Despite defendants' assertions to the contrary, the fact that plaintiffs' counsel drafted Henry's initial and revised declarations is not a ground for excluding his report and testimony. As plaintiffs note, HN13[] "Rule 26(a)(2)(B) does not preclude counsel from providing assistance to experts in preparing the reports, and indeed . . . this assistance may be needed." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B) advisory committee's note (1993). Although an expert report "should be written in a manner that reflects the testimony to be given by the witness and . . . must be signed by the witness," it need not be drafted by him.

Henry's revised declaration is quite short, describing the process used to collect the purchase information. Apart from incorporating by reference several summary tables of copper purchases, the report does not express opinions or conclusions. Instead, the conclusions are contained in the summary data, which were prepared under Henry's direct supervision. Moreover, Henry testified in his deposition that he reviewed both declarations before signing them. Henry did not merely [72] parrot the arguments of counsel; he reached his own conclusions after a lengthy process of collecting and reviewing purchase documents. Indiana Insurance v. Hussey Seating Co., 176 F.R.D. 291, 293 (S.D. Ind. 1997)(expert report not excluded where expert had prepared the attachments, consisting of the expert's opinions and work papers). Consequently, his report will not be excluded as the work of anyone other than himself.

Defendants assert that both Henry and DeMario deferred too much to plaintiffs' counsel by allowing counsel to set the parameters for their reports by specifying the relevant date range, product type and vendor classification for the purchases to be calculated. HN14[] Under Fed. R. Evid. 703, the "facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to the expert at or before the hearing." See also Dura Automotive Systems of Indiana, Inc. v. CTS Corp., 285 F.3d 609, 613 (7th Cir. 2002)(citing Fed. R. Evid. 703); Tuf Racing Products, Inc. v. American Suzuki Motor Corp., 223 F.3d 585, 591 (7th Cir. 2000) [73] (expert relied on financial information supplied by plaintiff and assumptions given by counsel). With respect to both Henry and DeMario, plaintiffs' counsel provided information to limit the scope of the experts' analysis; however, the lawyers did not formulate the experts' ultimate opinions. DeMario and Henry both supervised the collection of data they themselves determined were relevant to calculating the amount of copper plaintiffs purchased from 1993-1996. They verified a portion of the data that were collected and concluded that the end product was a reliable compilation of the data they were asked to assess. Although defendants remain free to argue that counsel set improper parameters, there was nothing improper about Henry's and DeMario's decision to perform the work they were asked to do in the manner they were asked to do it.

Next, defendants contend that in constructing their expert testimony, Henry and DeMario relied on the ad hoc judgments [*934] of others to determine the relevancy of purchase documents, without setting any objective guidelines. Specifically, defendants assert that Henry farmed out all of his work to Marmon employees, who determined on a document-by-document [74] basis which transactions to include and then relied on plaintiffs' counsel to tabulate the data and to determine for him which vendors should be classified as integrated producers. Defendants contend that DeMario relied solely on data collected by another accounting firm and documents determined relevant and provided by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs argue that the opinions of Henry and DeMario are based on reliable methods and their reliance on others in preparing their reports is permissible.

HN15[] As explained above, experts may rely on data and other information supplied by third parties. Dura Automotive Systems, 285 F.3d at 609 ("An expert witness is permitted to use assistants in formulating his expert opinion, and normally they need not themselves testify."); NutraSweet Company v. X-L Engineering Company, 227 F.3d 776, 789-90 (7th Cir. 2000); Tuf Racing, 223 F.3d at 591. Analyzing data assembled by others is neither illicit nor unusual, even if the data were prepared for litigation by an interested party. Loeffel, 372 F. Supp. 2d at 1119. Unless the expert's opinion is too speculative, it should not be rejected as unreliable [75] merely because the expert relied on the reports of others. Walker v. Soo Line Railroad Co., 208 F.3d 581, 588 (7th Cir. 2000). Defendants argue that "[a]nalysis becomes more complicated if the assistants aren't merely gofers or data gatherers but exercise professional judgment that is beyond the expert's ken." Dura Automotive Systems, 285 F.3d at 613. Here, however, both experts were positioned to supervise and independently evaluate the data collection being done by others who assisted them.

Henry had extensive experience working in the industry, including personal knowledge of many copper vendors. He personally coordinated the collection of documents by asking his financial staff members to gather relevant purchase documents and provided guidance on what qualified as a purchase according to the guidelines set by plaintiffs' counsel. In light of his continued oversight and experience, the fact that Henry relied in part on plaintiffs' counsel and another consultant to identify certain integrated producers does not render his report inadmissible. Given his expertise in the copper industry, it was permissible for him to assess the information provided [76] to him by others in formulating his opinion. NutraSweet, 227 F.3d at 789-90; Walker, 208 F.3d at 588-89.

Once again, defendants remain free to question the weight that should be given to Henry's testimony. They have not shown, however, that the testimony is inherently unreliable. Loeffel Steel Products, Inc. v. Delta Brands, Inc., 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 1119-20 (N.D. Ill. 2005)(citation omitted)(HN16[] "As a general rule, questions relating to the bases and sources of an expert's opinion affect only the weight to be assigned that opinion rather than its admissibility.").

With respect to DeMario, the Asarco plaintiffs provided her with business records detailing their copper cathode, rod and ingot purchases, including accounting records, purchase contracts, invoices and vendor statements. Although the accounting firm of Grant Thornton LLP was initially responsible for the data collection, DeMario continued and completed its work. She and her staff tested Grant Thornton's initial compilations for accuracy by comparing them with the supporting documentation. DeMario stated in her deposition that she reviewed the method [*935] used by Grant Thornton and [77] reached her own conclusion, asserting that she would have gone back and changed what Grant Thornton had done if she had disagreed with its approach. For those purchases not yet calculated by Grant Thornton, DeMario reviewed the business records to determine which records contained relevant and sufficient information; noted the number of pounds, month and vendor for each purchase; and verified the existence, accuracy and completeness of the records by comparing them to other records or summary schedules provided by plaintiffs.

Defendants have not shown that the opinions of Henry and DeMario are based on unreliable methods or amount to unsupported speculation. Hall, 165 F.3d at 1101-02; Ancho, 157 F.3d at 515. Henry and DeMario explained the methods that they used to collect and summarize the documents. Although these methods may not be the most rigorous, they are not obviously flawed either. Whether the experts employed competent assistants, properly instructed them or ultimately relied on faulty judgments of others goes to the weight and not the admissibility of their opinions. Therefore, I decline to grant defendants' motion in limine with respect to their [78] assertion that in forming their expert opinions Henry and DeMario relied impermissibly on the opinions and assistance of others.

ii) compilation errors

In a final attempt to exclude the testimony of Henry and DeMario, defendants point to numerous alleged miscalculations and errors in the work of both experts to show that their resulting opinions are unreliable. Defendants assert that Henry's report includes purchases by non-Marmon entities, double-counts purchases by using the provisional and final invoice for the same purchase and improperly includes unrefined copper purchases and non-purchase transactions in his calculations (such as tolling arrangements to turn copper into wire, wire purchases, shipping costs, amounts listed in credit memos, and swap transactions). According to defendants, DeMario includes in her calculation copper purchases from non-integrated producers and includes duplicate purchases totaling millions of pounds.

Certainly, the alleged errors and inconsistencies are grounds for impeaching the credibility of the experts and the reliability of their ultimate findings; however, HN17[] mistakes and miscalculations are not grounds for excluding evidence. E.g., Daubert, 509 U.S. at 596 [79] ("Vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence."). Defendants do not challenge the methods employed by plaintiffs' experts. Instead, they allege that mistakes were made in implementing the experts' chosen methods. Whether certain types of transactions should have been included as purchases or how well the experts checked their work and the work of others can be explored fairly through cross-examination.

As I will discuss in more detail below, it is true that plaintiffs may not recover damages for any purchases that were not first time purchases of copper from an integrated producer. That point should have been clear to plaintiffs from the time the court of appeals issued its decision in Loeb Industries, 306 F.3d 469. Given that fact, it is difficult to understand why plaintiffs chose to have their experts go through the fruitless task of tabulating many purchases for which they will not be able to recover damages and failed to take more care in separating out qualifying purchases from nonqualified ones (more on that later). [80] However, the fact that some of the purchases itemized by plaintiffs' Henry and [*936] DeMario cannot be recovered does not mean that all of the purchase information itemized in the reports is useless or inadmissible.

Both Henry and DeMario utilized well-recognized methods for tabulating the quantities of copper plaintiffs purchased from 1993-1996. Assuming the jury finds them to be credible witnesses, their calculations will assist the jury in determining how much damages, if any, to award plaintiffs for their alleged antitrust injuries. Because I find that Henry's and DeMario's testimony meets the basic requirements of Fed. R. Evid. 702, defendants' motion in limine to exclude their testimony will be denied.

3. Evidence of antitrust injury

In their motion for summary judgment, defendants suggest that without the testimony of Gilbert, Henry and DeMario, plaintiffs would be unable to show that they were harmed by defendants' alleged conspiracy. Because I have found that the expert testimony is admissible, the next question is whether the experts' testimony, if believed, would permit a jury to find that plaintiffs suffered any antitrust injury [81] for which they could recover damages under antitrust law.

Although the parties' proposed facts are less than clear on this point, defendants do not appear to contend that any one plaintiff failed to make at least one first-time purchase of cathode or rod from an integrated producer. Therefore, even if it is true that plaintiffs will be unable to recover damages for many of the purchases their experts have tabulated because those purchases do not qualify as first-time purchases under Loeb Industries, each plaintiff has demonstrated that it has antitrust standing to bring suit against defendants. Consequently, defendants' motion for summary judgment will be denied with respect to defendants' contention that plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to pursue their claims.

C. Damages

Having established that the reports and calculations of plaintiffs' damage experts are admissible and that those reports, if believed, are sufficient to establish plaintiffs standing to bring suit, I turn to several remaining questions. Although the answers to these questions do not affect the disposition of defendants' pending motions, they will affect the duration and organization of the trial and therefore [82] must be addressed at this time.

In their motion for summary judgment, defendants identify three problems with plaintiffs' experts' reports. First, each of plaintiffs' experts failed to distinguish clearly between purchases made from integrated producers and from other vendors, complicating the assessment of potential damages. Second, although plaintiffs are barred as a matter of law from recovering for any purchases they made through copper merchants, they have nevertheless included such purchases in their damage assessment. Finally, plaintiffs' experts failed to apply a reduction to purchases of cathode and rod from integrated producers to account for the portion of those purchases that were not first-time sales. In response to these objections, plaintiffs assert that it is the jury's job to determine which purchases are first purchases, whether purchases made through merchants are recoverable and what percentage reduction should be applied to plaintiffs' purchases from integrated producers. I am not persuaded that plaintiffs' laissez faire approach to damages is fair to defendants, the court or the jury.

1. Identity of integrated producers

From the parties' proposed findings [83] of fact and the reports of their damages experts, [*937] it appears the parties agree that Asarco, Codelco, Cyprus, Kennecott, Phelps Dodge, Inco, Magma/BHP, Cominco, Empresa Minera de Mantos Blancos, Minera Mexico Internacional, Noranda, Mexicana de Cananea SA Minera Escondida Limitada, Compania Minerva Quebrada Blanca S.A. and Cox Creek Refining are each integrated producers of copper that refined at least a portion of the cathode and rod they sold to plaintiffs between 1993 and 1996. It is entirely unclear whether there are additional integrated producers from whom plaintiffs purchased cathode or rod during the relevant period.

Having studied the parties' proposed findings, briefs and expert reports, I remain uncertain whether the parties have identified all integrated producers. It is difficult to imagine that the lay jury will not find itself confused as well. Rather than wait until trial to sort out the identity of integrated producers, I will hold a hearing on May 16 to address this and other matters. The parties to produce a list of the vendors who qualify as integrated producers and, at the hearing, plaintiff should be prepared to make a proffer of proof with respect to any vendor [84] whose status as integrated producer is disputed.

2. Role of merchants

In Loeb Industries, 306 F.3d 469, the court of appeals made it explicit that plaintiffs could recover damages only for first-time purchases of cathode and rod from integrated producers. The reason behind this rule is simple: HN18[]

in an antitrust action, the stakes are too high to permit plaintiffs to recover damages that may duplicate damages awarded to other plaintiffs. Therefore, the best-situated plaintiff is the plaintiff closest to the antitrust injury. Id. at 481 (citing Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 729, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977)("[T]he direct purchaser from the alleged antitrust violator(s) is the one with the right of action; those further removed from the illegal arrangement may not (under the federal antitrust laws, at least) bring their own actions.").

In Loeb Industries, 306 F.3d at 490, the court held that in this case the proper plaintiffs are those who first-purchased cathode or rod at an inflated price as a result of defendants' alleged conspiracy. Implicit in the decision was the finding that all purchases of non-scrap copper [85] could be classified either as (1) purchases of an original product manufactured by an integrated producer for direct sale or (2) purchases of a product previously sold by an integrated producer or reseller to a buyer "downstream" from the original vendor. Under that framework, only initial sales are properly compensable as antitrust injuries; money expended on the purchase of previously sold copper cannot be recouped in damages.

Now, however, plaintiffs have identified a third category of sales not mentioned in the court of appeals' decision: sales arranged through vendors known as merchants. According to plaintiffs, merchants are neither producers nor resellers. Instead, they are service providers who arrange for the order and delivery of products from an original producer directly to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs contend that they should be permitted to recover treble damages for all copper they purchased through merchants. (The merchants identified by the parties include AICO Corp., BAL Metals International, Inc., Billiton Metals Inc., Brandeis Ltd., Cerro Sales Corp., Conversion Resources, Inc., Exeon, Gerald Metals, Glencore Ltd., Heisei Minerals Corp., International Metals, J. Aron [86] & Co., Kataman Metals, Inc., Kobe Copper Products, Kojemi Corp., Manitoba Corp., Metal Commodities, MG Metal and Commodity Co., Miles Metal Company, Minemet Inc., Minorco, Mitsubishi Materials America Corp., Mitsui & Co., Outokumpu, Pechiney [*938] World Trade Inc., PMX Industries, Inc., Samsung America, Inc. and Southwire Company.)

As explanation why they should be permitted to recover damages for purchases made through vendors, plaintiffs have invoked the "control/agency" and "cost-plus" exceptions to the direct purchaser rule established in Illinois Brick and reiterated in Loeb Industries. Even if the exceptions on which plaintiffs rely were viable in this circuit (and there is serious reason to doubt that they are, see, e.g., State of Illinois, ex rel. Burris v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 935 F.2d 1469, 1478 (7th Cir. 1991)(noting "questions about the viability of the cost-plus exception in any context")(citing Calkins, The October 1989 Supreme Court Term and Antitrust: Power, Access, and Legitimacy, 59 Antitrust L.J. 339, 363 n. 135 (1991)) plaintiffs' reliance on those theories is misguided.

As the court of appeals explained in [87] Loeb Industries, 306 F.3d at 482, HN19[] when "Party A, the antitrust violator, sells to Party B, and then Party C, a down-stream purchaser from B, seeks to recover the implicit overcharges that B passed on to C," C has no standing to bring an antitrust claim. Party B does. In this case, if the merchants stood in the place of Party B, they would have standing to bring their own claim and plaintiffs would be barred under the antitrust laws from recovering damages for cathode purchased from the merchants.

At its root, then, the question before the court is a simple one: Did the merchants purchase the cathode they passed along to plaintiffs? If so, it is they who have standing to recover for those purchases, not plaintiffs. However, if the arrangement between the merchants and plaintiffs was nothing more than a service contract in which the merchants merely placed orders on plaintiffs' behalf and arranged for delivery while plaintiffs paid the bill, then plaintiffs are the first purchasers and may recover for the cathode purchases they made from the integrated producers with the assistance of the merchants.

Unfortunately, the facts the parties have proposed do little to [88] assist the court in determining the answer to this dispositive question. The facts proposed by plaintiffs are disputed by defendants and relate only to the generalities of how merchant purchases "typically" and "often" work. Once again, I am concerned that the jury not be presented with unnecessarily complicated information regarding the peripheral question whether the merchants or plaintiffs were the actual first purchasers of the cathode and rod in question. Therefore, I will take up this matter in advance of trial, together with the question of identification of the integrated producers. At the May 16 hearing, plaintiff should be prepared to make a detailed proffer of proof with respect to the role played by each merchant with respect to each purchase for which plaintiffs are seeking damages.

3. "Integrated Producer Percentage" reduction

In Loeb Industries, 306 F.3d 469, the court of appeals reversed this court's finding that the complexity of apportioning damages in this case counseled against finding that plaintiffs had standing to bring suit under the antitrust laws. In doing so, the court explained that > tracking every pound of cathode refined [89] or purchased by [plaintiffs'] suppliers, and locating every cathode contract Viacom entered into over a six-year span will not be easy. But complex litigation is hardly new for the federal courts, whether it is in the field of antitrust, environmental clean-ups, pension law, or accounting frauds. . . . [O]ne need only determine through available records what percentage of cathode bought by [*939] [plaintiffs] represents first purchases. This is not speculative or complex, only time-consuming, and we are confident that the parties and their counsel are up to the task.

Id. The court reinstated plaintiffs' claims and reiterated its holding that plaintiffs would "have the burden of ascertaining what percentage of the cathode sold by these [integrated] producers was refined by them and not purchased from third parties," id. at 495, in order to prove their damages.

Plaintiffs do not deny that their damages are subject to reduction by the "integrated producer percentage" referred to in the court of appeals' decision. In fact, as mentioned in Section B, above, DeMario calculated an integrated producer percentage for each integrated producer identified to her [90] by plaintiffs. Wazzan, defendants' damage expert, has done the same. Nevertheless, for reasons that are not entirely clear, defendants object strenuously to the failure of plaintiffs' experts to apply their integrated producer percentage reduction to the final tally of the damages they are seeking.

In their defense, plaintiffs point out that DeMario and Wazzan calculated the integrated provider percentage in slightly different ways. (DeMario used a straight average and Wazzan used a weighted average; DeMario excluded Kennecott's percentages when calulating the "average"percentage; Wazzan did not.) Recognizing that the dispute regarding percentages needs to be resolved before any final damages estimate can be reliable, plaintiffs' experts have provided their underlying damages figures without applying the integrated producer percentage reduction. Plaintiffs assert that once the jury has determined which purchases qualify as first purchases and which percentage reductions are more reliable, the court or the parties need only engage in a "simple arithmetic calculation" to determine the ultimate damages due them. I agree.

At trial, the jury will undoubtedly hear testimony from DeMario [91] and Wazzan regarding their reasons for calculating the initial producer percentage in the manner they did. The jury will have to weigh the credibility of the experts and determine which approach is the more reasonable one. Once it has chosen a set of figures on which to rely (DeMario's or Wazzan's, or some amalgamation of the two), applying the percentage reductions to the qualifying purchases will be a simple matter.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that

1. The motion for summary judgment of defendants J.P. Morgan Chase & Company and Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York is DENIED;

2. Defendants' motion in limine to exclude the reports and testimony of Roy Henry and Marianne DeMario is DENIED.

3. Defendants' motion in limine to exclude the report and testimony of Christopher Gilbert is DENIED.

FURTHER, IT IS ORDERED that

4. Plaintiffs Aetna Insulated Wire, Cerro E.M.S. Limited, Cerro Fabricated Products, Inc. and Hendrix Wire & Cable, Inc. are DISMISSED from this lawsuit.

5. A hearing will be held on Wednesday, May 16, 2007, at 7:30 a.m. At that time, plaintiff should be prepared to make a detailed proffer of proof with respect to (1) any vendor whose status as integrated producer [92] is disputed; and (2) the role played by each merchant with respect to [*940] each purchase for which plaintiffs are seeking damages.

Entered this 24th day of April, 2007.

BY THE COURT:

BARBARA B. CRABB

District Judge

Freightliner of Knoxville, Inc. v. DaimlerChrysler Vans, LLC

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

April 19, 2007, Submitted ; April 26, 2007, Decided ; April 26, 2007, Filed

File Name: 07a0147p.06

No. 06-6054

Reporter

484 F.3d 865 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 9452 ; 2007 FED App. 0147P (6th Cir.) ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,676

FREIGHTLINER OF KNOXVILLE, INC.; CARROLL PROPERTIES, L.P.; and BUDDIE E. CARROLL, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. DAIMLERCHRYSLER VANS, LLC, Defendant-Appellee, FREIGHTLINER, LLC, Defendant.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee at Knoxville. No. 05-00339--Thomas Varlan, District Judge.

Freightliner of Knoxville, Inc. v. DaimlerChrysler Vans, LLC, 438 F. Supp. 2d 869, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51610 (E.D. Tenn., 2006)

Core Terms

Vans, dealers, retail, customer, alleges, brand, dealerships, terminated, amended complaint, terms, distributes, circumstances, trucks, district court, advertising, facilities, offering, resale, seller, motor vehicle, heavy-duty, processing, purchasers, discovery, package, selling, sales

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When reviewing a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss a court must accept the plaintiff's allegations as true even if the defendant vehemently denies such allegations.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a district court's decision to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. An appellate court must accept all facts in the complaint as true and construe the complaint liberally in favor of the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN3[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Tennessee Trade Practices Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-1301 et seq., states that no supplier may terminate, cancel, fail to renew or substantially change the competitive circumstances of a retail agreement without good cause. Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-1302.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN4[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Tennessee Trade Practices Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-1301 et seq., defines a "retailer" as a person, firm or corporation engaged in the business of selling and retailing farm implements and machinery, construction, utility and industrial equipment, outdoor power equipment, attachments or repair parts and shall not include retailers of petroleum products. Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-1301.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

HN5[] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

The parol evidence rule does not permit contracting parties to use extraneous evidence to alter, vary, or qualify the plain meaning of an unambiguous written contract. Furthermore, to allow a party to a contract to admit that the party signed the contract but to deny that the terms of the contract express the party's agreement would destroy the value of contracts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN6[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

The Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act (RPA) amends portions of the Clayton Antitrust Act and is codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), (d), and (e). Section 13(d) and (e) of the RPA deal with discrimination in the field of promotional services made available to purchasers who buy for resale.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN7[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

The language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13 provides as follows: (d) Payment for services or facilities for processing or sale. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities. (e) Furnishing services or facilities for processing, handling, etc. It shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN8[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

Under the Robinson-Patman Act, if the seller pays the retailer to perform the promotional service, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(d) applies. Whereas if the seller itself provides the promotional service to the retailer, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(e) applies. This is often a fine distinction and thus the two sections tend to be considered together as a "harmonious whole." At bottom, the aim of both sections is to eliminate devices by which preferred buyers obtain discriminatory preferences under the guise of promotional allowances.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN9[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

There is no duty on the part of the trial court or the appellate court to create a claim which an appellant has not spelled out in his pleading.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN10[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

The "services or facilities" envisioned by the Robinson-Patman Act are not explicitly defined within the text of the Act, but they have been construed to include any kind of advertising, catalogs, demonstrators, display and storage cabinets, display materials, hand bills, special packaging or package sizes, warehouse facilities, accepting returns for credit, prizes or merchandise for conducting promotional contests, and "monetary awards" paid by the seller to clerks, salesmen, and other employees of the customer for special sales or promotional efforts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN11[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

Section 2(d) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(d), has been applied to a broad range of promotional payments, including cooperative advertising programs, rebates that a retailer must pass to consumers, payments for customer mailings, payments for preferred shelf space, payments for institutional advertising (i.e., advertising the buyer's business generally), and unjustified off-invoice deductions for promotional allowances. "Services" and "facilities" covered by § 2(e) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(e), have been held to include handbills, demonstrators, catalogues, cabinets, display racks, prizes or merchandise for conducting promotional contests, point-of-sale materials, advertising services, providing personnel whose salaries are paid in whole or in part by the seller, background music with periodic advertisements, letters announcing a new distributor but not mentioning competing distributors, special packaging or package sizes, and marketing support. The list is not exhaustive, however, for many incentives have been held not to be within the prohibitions of § 13(d) and (e), such as a supplier's offering favorable credit terms or authorizing the extension of credit to select customers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN12[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

With regard to the Robinson-Patman Act, the extension of credit is a practice incident to the original sale rather than to the subsequent resale of the product, and, therefore, outside the coverage of § 2(d) and (e) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(d) and (e).

Counsel: ON BRIEF: Robert S. Stone, Jr., Katherine M. Hamilton, YOUNG, WILLIAMS, KIRK & STONE, Knoxville, Tennessee, for Appellants.

George W. Mykulak, Boston, Massachusetts, for Appellee.

Judges: Before: MERRITT and MARTIN, Circuit Judges; FORESTER, District Judge. *

Opinion by: BOYCE F. MARTIN, JR.

Opinion

[*867]

[*1] BOYCE F. MARTIN, JR., Circuit Judge. Plaintiffs appeal from the district court's dismissal of their claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). For the reasons outlined below, we AFFIRM in part and REVERSE in part.

[*2] I

Plaintiff-Appellant Freightliner of Knoxville, Inc. ("FOK") is a Tennessee corporation authorized to sell and service the Freightliner brand of medium- and heavy-duty trucks. Plaintiff-Appellant Carroll Properties, L.P. is a Tennessee partnership that built and leased the FOK facility to Plaintiff-Appellant Buddie E. Carroll. Carroll, a Tennessee [2] resident who is the sole shareholder of FOK and its president, then leased the facility to FOK.

Defendant-Appellee DaimlerChrysler Vans, LLC ("DC Vans") is a Delaware company wholly owned by DaimlerChrysler, AG. DC Vans distributes a line of commercial vans known as the "Sprinter." Defendant Freightliner, LLC ("FLLC") is a Delaware company also wholly owned by the parent DaimlerChrysler, AG. FLLC manufactures vehicles marketed under the Freightliner brand.

FOK alleges that in February 2000, the president of FLLC presented it and a select group of Freightliner dealers with the opportunity to sell what was to be called the "Freightliner Sprinter," a medium-size commercial van which could also be customized for passengers. Although it was to be marketed in the United States under the Freightliner brand, the Sprinter was virtually identical to a van that had been sold in Europe for many years, with tremendous success, under the Mercedes-Benz brand. FOK believed that if it became a Freightliner Sprinter franchisee, "it would be able to sell a great deal of product for a long time."

The catch, according to FOK, was that a dealer would only be selected to sell the Sprinter if it were to [3] upgrade its facility in a variety of ways, including (among other things): creation of a separate showroom for Sprinter vans, so as to "segregate potential Sprinter corporate customers from heavy-duty truck customers who frequent every Freightliner dealership for sales and service." FOK took the bait and accordingly changed the design plans for its planned Knoxville facility by adding designated space for the Sprinter vans. FOK estimates that it paid $ 800,000 in "additional construction costs" in order to build the new space. FOK was rewarded for its efforts: sometime after May 2001 FLLC notified FOK that it had been approved for a Sprinter retail sales and service agreement. At the same time, FLLC told FOK that DC Vans, and not FLLC, would be the distributor of the Sprinter vans. This appears to have been a mere hiccup in the negotiations, however, as on September 26, 2001, FOK entered into a dealer agreement with DC Vans for the sale of Sprinters.

* The Honorable Karl S. Forester, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Kentucky, sitting by designation.

FOK alleges that regardless of who its distributor was (FLLC or DC Vans), it had always operated under the unwritten assumption that the Sprinter vans would be distributed exclusively to Freightliner [*868] dealers (such as FOK), and sold [4] exclusively under the Freightliner brand. As FOK states in its amended complaint, "DC Vans stepped seamlessly into the shoes of FLLC. It parroted and confirmed the distinct impression of exclusivity fostered by FLLC's representations." This assumption proved mistaken, however: sometime in 2002, FOK was informed that the Sprinter van would also be sold through Dodge dealers under the Dodge brand, i.e., as a " Dodge Sprinter." [1] To add insult to injury, on July 19, 2002, FOK was informed that not only would the Sprinter be concomitantly sold as a Dodge product, but also that Freightliner dealers would only be permitted to sell Sprinter vans until 2005, at which point the vans would be sold exclusively as a Dodge product. DC Vans has since pulled back from this hard-line stance, and has in fact amended the record to note that it will not terminate its Sprinter agreements with Freightliner dealers, and that the Sprinter van will simply be "dual branded" for the foreseeable future. Indeed, despite the instant litigation, FOK and DC Vans continue to do business in Freightliner Sprinter vans pursuant to their [3] dealer agreement, an agreement which has now been extended [5] through the 2007 model of Freightliner Sprinter. D. Ct. Op. at 4.

DC Vans' concession notwithstanding, FOK claims that the damage was done by the mere fact of having the rug pulled out from what it thought was an exclusive dealership agreement. Essentially, FOK claims that it would never have entered into the dealer agreement in the first place, nor invested $ 800,000 in its facility, had it known that DC Vans intended to distribute the Sprinter under both the Dodge and Freightliner brands. [2] Furthermore, FOK maintains that DC Vans has engaged in discriminatory pricing by offering Dodge dealers "special incentives with respect to sales of the Sprinter product." Due to these incentives and "discounts," Dodge dealers were allegedly "able to offer the vans to the public at a significantly lower price than FOK was able to offer and still make a profit."

[6] FOK filed suit in federal court against FLLC and DC Vans on October 11, 2005, bringing a total of eleven claims, some against both defendants and some only against DC Vans. Jurisdiction was proper on the basis of diversity; additionally, because one of the claims arose under federal antitrust law, federal question jurisdiction was properly invoked. All eleven claims were dismissed on the pleadings by the district court. FOK now only requests that we review the following two aspects of its original claims, both of which are directed solely at DC Vans, not at FLLC: (1) whether it was proper for the district court to dismiss FOK's claims under the Tennessee Trade Practices Act, Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 47-25-1301 to 1314; and (2) whether it was proper for the district court to dismiss FOK's claims under the federal Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13 (d) and (e).

II

HN2[] We review de novo a district court's decision to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). *Adika v. Smith, 466 F.3d 503, 505 [869] (6th Cir. 2006). "[A] complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless [7] it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Kottmyer v. Maas, 436 F.3d 684, 688 (6th Cir. 2006) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41,

---

[1] Dodge is yet another subsidiary of DaimlerChrysler, AG.

[2] DC Vans strenuously maintains that it does not distribute, nor has it ever distributed, the Dodge Sprinter van. Appellee's Br. at 3 ("The only motor vehicle that DC Vans has ever distributed is the Freightliner Sprinter van.") (emphasis added). HN1[] When reviewing a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, however, we must accept the plaintiff's allegations as true even if the defendant vehemently denies such allegations. Here, FOK alleges that DC Vans distributed not just the Freightliner Sprinter, but also the Dodge Sprinter. See Amended Compl. PP 53, 114-21.

45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). This Court "must accept all facts in the complaint as true and construe the complaint liberally in favor of the plaintiff." Adika, 466 F.3d at 505.

A. Claims under the Tennessee Trade Practices Act

HN3[] The Tennessee Trade Practices Act ("TTPA") states that "[n]o supplier . . . may terminate, cancel, fail to renew or substantially change the competitive circumstances of a retail agreement without good cause." Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-1302. FOK's claims under the TTPA are twofold. First, it alleges that by dual-branding the Sprinter van and by selling the van through Dodge dealerships, DC Vans has effected a "substantial[] change in the competitive circumstances of a retail agreement." Second, it claims that DC Vans constructively terminated the retail agreement, both by stating its intent to withdraw the van from Freightliner dealers and by providing [8] competing Dodge dealers with the same Sprinter product on better terms than those offered to FOK.

In dismissing FOK's claims, the district court ruled that the TTPA does not apply to motor vehicles. HN4[] The TTPA defines a "retailer" as a "person, firm or corporation engaged in the business [4] of selling and retailing farm implements and machinery, construction, utility and industrial equipment, outdoor power equipment, attachments or repair parts and shall not include retailers of petroleum products." T.C.A. § 47-25-1301. FOK continues to assert that the Sprinter van qualifies as "industrial equipment" under the TTPA, as it is designed ostensibly for industrial use. DC Vans vigorously counters that the Sprinter is quite simply a motor vehicle, distinguishable from the common understanding of "industrial equipment," and that the presence of another Tennessee statutory scheme which provides for the licensing and regulation of motor vehicle sales, T.C.A. § 55-17-101 et seq., suggests that the state legislature did not intend to include motor vehicles within the ambit of the TTPA. There are apparently no Tennessee authorities [9] that definitively address whether "industrial equipment" includes motor vehicles used for industrial purposes under the TTPA.

We frankly find the language of the TTPA to be rather vague and unhelpful, and are disinclined to endorse the district court's sweeping interpretation of this statute without more guidance from the Tennessee legislature or courts. We find it unnecessary to resolve this dispute, however, because even assuming that the TTPA governs the distribution and sale of the Sprinter van, FOK has failed to allege facts that would amount to a violation of the statute.

First, FOK's claim that DC Vans has "substantially change[d] . . . the competitive circumstances of [the] retail agreement," is undercut by the plain terms of the retail agreement itself, which FOK quoted in relevant part in the Amended Complaint. In the retail agreement, DC Vans "retains all rights and discretion with respect to the manufacture, distribution, sales and service of motor vehicles, . . . including the rights (a) to sell and service Contract Goods in the Primary Market Area . . . (b) to appoint other dealers in the Primary Market Area on terms and conditions deemed appropriate . . . . [10] " Amended Compl. P 36 (emphasis added). This provision explicitly contemplates the sale of Sprinter vans through other dealers. Consequently, DC Vans's decision to [*870] sell the vans through Dodge dealers was actually provided for in the retail agreement. Neither the Amended Complaint nor FOK's brief identifies any portion of the retail agreement that precludes DC Vans from dual-branding the Sprinter van or from specifically selling it through Dodge. Nor does any portion of the amended complaint indicate that the retail agreement speaks to how the terms of the agreement between DC Vans and FOK should compare to the terms offered to any other dealers. [3] A straightforward reading of the agreement belies FOK's argument that DC Vans's business relationship with Dodge amounted to a change in the competitive circumstances of the retail agreement under the TTPA, as this relationship is explicitly anticipated in the agreement itself.

---

[3] This is not to say that other forms of relief that are based on differences between the terms offered to respective dealers and that find their source outside the contract, such as FOK's Robinson-Patman Act claim, are necessarily precluded by the retail agreement. Unlike other such forms of statutory relief, however, the TTPA incorporates the retail agreement by reference, and by so doing would appear to render unavailable a claim based on changed competitive circumstances to the agreement where the agreement itself provides such rights to the supplier.

[11] FOK makes a number of factual allegations pertaining to representations made by DC Vans prior to the execution of the retail agreement. The Amended Complaint alleges that based on these representations FOK was led to believe that Freightliner would be the exclusive dealer of the Sprinter van. See Amended Compl. P 18. Even taken as true, the allegations of such representation are not enough for FOK's claim of changed competitive circumstances to survive, as they stand in stark contrast to the terms that were eventually included in the retail agreement. See Staubach Retail Services-Southeast, LLC v. H. G. Hill Realty Co., 160 S.W.3d 521, 525 (Tenn. 2005) (HN5[] "The parol evidence rule does not permit contracting parties to 'use extraneous evidence to alter, vary, or qualify the plain meaning of an unambiguous written contract.' Furthermore, to allow a party to a contract to admit that the party signed the contract but to deny that the terms of the contract express the party's agreement would destroy the value of contracts." (internal citations omitted)). Moreover, [5] DC Vans cannot be said to have somehow pulled a fast one on FOK by memorializing different terms [12] than the parties discussed, as it had FOK sign a Release that discharged any prior obligations owed to FOK by DC Vans, including claims based upon any prior "agreement" or "representation." The retail agreement itself also stated that it "constitute[s] the Parties' entire agreement relating to selling and servicing Contract Goods," and "supercedes all prior negotiations, understandings and agreements, written or oral, relating to its subject matter." If FOK had any doubts about whether it maintained an exclusive right to sell the Sprinter van based on prior discussions between the parties, despite the contrary language in the retail agreement, the explicit provisions of the release and the retail agreement should have cleared them up. Any such representations were clearly and intentionally excluded from the retail agreement, and FOK cannot now rely on them to support its claim that DC Vans changed the agreement's competitive circumstances.

FOK also fails to allege facts to support its claim that DC Vans terminated the retail agreement. Although the complaint alleges that DC Vans constructively terminated the agreement by dual-branding the Sprinter vans and distributing them through [13] Dodge, such distribution [*871] was specifically contemplated in the agreement. We would be hard-pressed to read FOK's factual allegations to include a claim of constructive termination of the agreement based on actions taken by DC Vans that were provided for by the very terms of the agreement itself.

Additionally, FOK contends that DC Vans terminated the agreement by advising FOK that it would stop distributing Sprinter vans under the Freightliner brand after 2005. This allegation could be read to present a claim for anticipatory breach, presenting us with the potentially interesting legal question of whether anticipatory breach amounts to "termination" under the TTPA. Yet FOK now concedes that DC Vans has decided not to withdraw the Freightliner Sprinter from the market and to offer an extension of the dealer agreement, effectively terminating its termination claim. This concession forces FOK to put all its eggs in the "changed competitive circumstances" basket based on the dual-branding of the vans, an argument which we reject under the terms of the contract as discussed above.

For these reasons, we affirm, albeit on different grounds, the district court's dismissal of FOK's claims under [14] the TTPA.

B. Claims under the Robinson-Patman Act

HN6[] The Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act ("RPA") amends portions of the Clayton Antitrust Act and is codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 13(a), (d), and (e). FOK's amended complaint, however, alleges violations of §§ 13(d) and (e) only. [4] These two sections of the RPA "deal with discrimination in the field of promotional services made available to purchasers who buy for resale." Lewis v. Philip Morris Inc., 355 F.3d 515, 521-22 (6th Cir. 2004). HN7[] The language of the sections provides as follows:

---

[4] Nowhere in FOK's original or amended complaint is § 13(a) even mentioned, and Count XI--which outlines the RPA claims--refers exclusively to §§ 13(d) and (e). Thus, to the extent that FOK now argues that its complaint should be construed so as to encompass alleged § 13(a) violations as well, Appellant's Br. at 21-23, this argument comes too late. See Clark v. National Travelers Life Ins. Co., 518 F.2d 1167, 1169 (6th Cir. 1975) (HN9[] "[T]here is no duty on the part of the trial court or the appellate court to create a claim which appellant has not spelled out in his pleading.") (internal quotation marks and parentheses omitted).

> (d) Payment for services or facilities for processing or sale
>
> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the [6] course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally [15] equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.
>
> (e) Furnishing services or facilities for processing, handling, etc.
> It shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

[*872] 15 U.S.C. § 13 (emphasis added). As this Court has said, HN8[] if the seller (here, DC Vans) pays the retailer (here, Dodge dealerships) to perform the promotional service, § 13(d) applies. Lewis, 355 F.3d at 522. Whereas if the seller itself provides the promotional service to the retailer, § 13(e) applies. Id . This is often a fine distinction and thus the two sections "tend to be considered together" as a "harmonious whole." Id . At bottom, "[t]he aim of both sections is to eliminate devices by [16] which preferred buyers obtain discriminatory preferences under the guise of promotional allowances." Bouldis v. U.S. Suzuki Motor Corp., 711 F.2d 1319, 1327 (6th Cir. 1983) (citing Federal Trade Comm. v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 390 U.S. 341, 349-50, 88 S. Ct. 904, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1222 (1968)).

HN10[] The "services or facilities" envisioned by the RPA are not explicitly [17] defined within the text of the Act, but they have been construed to include "any kind of advertising, catalogs, demonstrators, display and storage cabinets, display materials, hand bills, special packaging or package sizes, warehouse facilities, accepting returns for credit, prizes or merchandise for conducting promotional contests, and 'monetary awards' paid by the seller to clerks, salesmen, and other employees of the customer for special sales or promotional efforts." Lewis, 355 F.3d at 522 (quoting Cecil Corley Motor Co. v. General Motors Corp., 380 F. Supp. 819, 851 (M.D. Tenn. 1974)); see also Barbara O. Bruckman, Discounts, Discrimination, and Exclusive Dealing: Issues under the Robinson-Patman Act, 68 ANTITRUST L.J. 253, 278 (2000) (HN11[] "Section 2(d) has been applied to a broad range of promotional payments, including cooperative advertising programs, rebates that a retailer must pass to consumers, payments for customer mailings, payments for preferred shelf space, payments for institutional advertising (i.e., advertising the buyer's business generally), and unjustified off-invoice deductions for promotional allowances. 'Services' [18] and 'facilities' covered by Section 2(e) have been held to include handbills, demonstrators, catalogues, cabinets, display racks, prizes or merchandise for conducting promotional contests, point-of-sale materials, advertising services, providing personnel whose salaries are paid in whole or in part by the seller, background music with periodic advertisements, letters announcing a new distributor but not mentioning competing distributors, special packaging or package sizes, and marketing support.") (citations omitted). The list is not exhaustive, however, for many incentives have been held not to be within the prohibitions of §§ 13(d) and (e), such as "a supplier's offering favorable credit terms or authorizing the extension of credit to select customers." Cecil Corley Motor Co., 380 F. Supp. at 851 (internal citations omitted).

In its amended complaint, FOK states that because the Sprinter vans distributed by DC Vans to FOK and Dodge dealers were "of like grade and quality," and because the relevant consumer markets of the FOK and Dodge dealerships were geographically equivalent, DC Vans violated §§ 13(d) and (e) of the RPA by offering "incentives" to the Dodge dealers [19] that it did not make available to FOK. Amended Compl. at PP 111-18. Specifically, FOK alleges that "DC Vans offers, [7] or has offered while FOK is a retailer of Freightliner Sprinter vans, the Dodge Sprinter van to Dodge dealerships in FOK's area of responsibility or market area with incentives that grant to Dodge dealerships the right to receive greater allocation of high demand Dodge brand heavy duty trucks." Id. at P 118. Paragraph 53 of the amended complaint, which is incorporated by reference into the RPA count via paragraph 111, further states:

> FOK has suffered the effects of unfair competition from Dodge dealers with incentive [*873] packages not offered to FOK. Upon information and belief, DC Vans commenced selling the Sprinter vans through the Dodge Business Link program providing direct customer benefits such as first service bay priority and first service technician priority. These sales benefits were not available to Freightliner Sprinter customers. These benefits are valuable sales incentives and make a substantial difference as to where or from whom a potential customer will purchase a Sprinter product.

The "incentives" that FOK alleges were offered [20] to Dodge dealers--and not to FOK--are thus twofold: (1) the right to receive more Dodge heavy-duty trucks, and (2) incorporation of Dodge Sprinters into the Dodge "Business Link" program, a service which apparently would give end users of a Dodge Sprinter some form of priority when having their van serviced at Dodge dealerships.

As to the first alleged incentive, it is unclear how close a nexus exists between DC Vans and the Dodge heavy-duty trucks -- for while FOK alleges that DC Vans distributes the Dodge Sprinter, it does not allege that DC Vans distributes Dodge vehicles generally. Thus it is unclear how DC Vans would even have the power to provide those Dodge dealers that elected to market the Sprinter van with a "greater allocation of high demand Dodge brand heavy duty trucks." Appellee's Br. at 25. Furthermore, the alleged allocation of Dodge heavy-duty trucks would not appear to be a discriminatory practice under §§ 13(d) or (e). Even if true, it is a practice incident to the original sale of the Sprinter (i.e., the sale of the Sprinter from DC Vans to Dodge dealers) rather than incident to its subsequent resale (i.e., the resale of the Sprinter from a Dodge dealer [21] to an end user). See Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1328 (noting that HN12[] "the extension of credit is a practice incident to the original sale rather than to the subsequent resale of the product, and, therefore, outside the coverage of §§ 2(d) & 2(e)"). While Bouldis dealt with a seller's extension of credit to various dealers, we see no reason why the same principles should not also apply to the seller's extension, as here, of a greater allocation of vehicles totally unrelated to the Sprinter.

As to the second alleged incentive, however, we cannot affirm the district court's decision, because our standard of review of a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss requires that we "construe the complaint liberally in favor of the plaintiff." Adika, 466 F.3d at 505. In fact, the district court seems to have entirely passed over FOK's allegation that DC Vans violated the RPA by participating with its Sprinter vans in the Dodge "Business Link" program. While DC Vans likely did not create the Dodge "Business Link" program, a program which presumably predates by some time the introduction of the Sprinter van to Dodge dealerships, we cannot exclude the possibility that DC Vans somehow [22] tied the distribution of the Sprinter van to this alleged incentive. And unlike the greater-allocation-of-heavy-duty-trucks incentive, the Business Link incentive may well be incident to resale of the Sprinter vans. See Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1328. If end users who buy a Sprinter van from a Dodge dealer are, for example, given priority at that dealership in getting their van serviced (which is what "first service bay priority" and "first service technician priority" would seem to indicate), this is a promotional service provided directly to the consumer.

The critical question is likely to be whether DC Vans payed for these extra services with Dodge dealers and yet did not offer the same payments or equivalent incentives to FOK, or whether Dodge dealers already had the "Business Link" program in place and simply offered, of their [*874] own [8] accord, to provide these incentives to customers who purchased the Sprinter van. Without the benefit of discovery, however, it would seem virtually impossible for FOK to answer this question; for without discovery, we have no way of knowing exactly what the incentive structure was between DC Vans and its Dodge dealers, or if in fact [23] such an incentive structure existed at all. See also Appellant's Br. at 20 ("Count XI should not have been dismissed without an opportunity for FOK to conduct discovery into the scope and manner in which the Dodge Business Link program benefits were provided to the Dodge Sprinter dealers."). FOK's claims under the RPA may well be highly speculative, and discovery may well reveal that they are futile, but we cannot--nor can the district court-make such a determination based on the pleadings alone. [5]

[24] III

Based on the above discussion, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED in full, except as to FOK's claims under the Robinson-Patman Act, which we REVERSE and REMAND for further proceedings. Specifically, FOK's allegation that DC Vans violated § 13(d) and (e) of the RPA should be allowed to proceed to discovery with respect to the theory asserted in Paragraph 53 of its amended complaint.

[5] We note that this Court's Bouldis decision, on which both the district court and DC Vans so heavily rely in rejecting FOK's claims under the RPA, was decided at the summary judgment stage, not the 12(b)(6) stage. There, a determination of which practices were "incident to the original sale" versus "incident to the subsequent resale" of a product was only made after the parties had "engaged in extensive discovery, including interrogatories, requests for documents and depositions." 711 F.2d at 1323. Only after discovery was the district court in Bouldis able to discern the true relationship between distributor, retailer, and consumer, and thus only after discovery was the court able to state with confidence that the plaintiff's §§ 13(d) and (e) claims were meritless. Id. at 1328-29.

Catch Curve, Inc. v. Venali, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

April 30, 2007, Decided; May 3, 2007, Filed, Entered

Case No. CV 05-04820 DDP (AJWx)

Reporter

519 F. Supp. 2d 1028 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84389 ; 2008-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,097

CATCH CURVE, INC., Plaintiff, v. VENALI, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Patent interpreted by Catch Curve, Inc. v. Venali, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93667 (C.D. Cal., May 11, 2007)

Prior History: Catch Curve, Inc. v. Venali, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96379 (C.D. Cal., Feb. 27, 2006)

Core Terms

alleges, patents, monopolization, motion to dismiss, sham, antitrust, tortious interference, baseless, Counts, counterclaim, competitors, lawsuits, infringement, anti-competitive, third party, failure to state a claim, anticompetitive conduct, business relationship, third party complaint, patents-in-suit, patent infringement, tied product, probability, predatory, immunity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is appropriate when it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proven consistent with the allegations set forth in the complaint. A court must view all allegations in the complaint in the light most favorable to the non-movant and must accept all material allegations--as well as any reasonable inferences to be drawn from them--as true.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim are disfavored, and Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissals are proper only in "extraordinary" cases. In dismissing for failure to state a claim, a district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleadings was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, states that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN4[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN5[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

Anticompetitive conduct alone can satisfy the specific intent requirement if the conduct forms the basis for a substantial claim of restraint of trade, or is clearly threatening to competition or clearly exclusionary. Unfair tactics can suffice to prove intent to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Neither monopoly power nor a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power can exist absent evidence of barriers to new entry or expansion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7[] Private Actions, Remedies

In order to demonstrate that it suffered an antitrust injury, a plaintiff must show that its injury was caused by anticompetitive or predatory aspects of the defendants' conduct, not by competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN8[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege that the defendants have engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization. The question of whether a particular course of conduct is predatory of anticompetitive (also referred to as exclusionary) cannot be answered by simply considering its effect on the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN9[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

With regard to a claim of attempted monopolization, it is relevant to consider the impact on consumers and whether it has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way. If a firm has been attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency, it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory. The word "exclusionary" comprehends at the most behavior that not only (1) tends to impair the opportunities of rivals, but also (2) either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine does protect parties from antitrust liability predicated on acts of petitioning the government. However, these activities are not protected if the petitioning act is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. In analyzing whether the conduct of bringing a lawsuit is protected, the United States Supreme Court holds that litigation cannot be deprived of immunity as a sham unless the litigation is objectively baseless. The Supreme Court has created a two-part test for determining when a suit is "objectively baseless": First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of the definition a court should focus on whether the baseless suit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with a competitor's business relationships through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon. The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has adopted this framework and applies it in determining whether patent litigation is a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN11[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

With regard to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit holds that whether something is a genuine effort to influence governmental action, or a mere sham, is a question of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit holds that there is a policy disfavoring the pre-trial dismissal of antitrust actions because the proof lies largely in the hands of the defendants.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN13[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has indicated that district courts should employ Federal Circuit law to determine whether a patent case is sham litigation eviscerating the protection of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN14[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

With regard to a motion to dismiss, when dealing with a series of lawsuits, the question is not whether any one of them has merit--some may turn out to, just as a matter of chance--but whether they are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN15[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

In order to show that a tying arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must establish: (1) two distinct products or services; (2) a sale or agreement to sell the tying product conditioned upon the purchase of the tied product; (3) market power in the relevant market for the tying product; and (4) the tied product involves a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit also requires that the defendant have an economic interest in the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To state a claim for tying a plaintiff must allege two distinct products and two distinct markets.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN17[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To state a claim for tortious interference with existing business relationships a plaintiff must plead facts that if true, would establish: (1) a valid contract between the plaintiff and a third party, (2) the defendant's knowledge of the contract, (3) the defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship, (4) actual breach of the contractual relationship, and (5) resulting damage.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN18[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To state a claim for tortious interference with prospective business relationships a plaintiff must plead: (1) an economic relationship between it and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant.

Counsel: [1] For Catch Curve Inc, Plaintiff: John C Carey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carey Rodriguez Greenberg and Paul, Miami, FL; Matthew S Warren, Robert A Sacks, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Sullivan and Cromwell, Los Angeles, CA.

For Venali Inc, Defendant: John C Carey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carey Rodriguez Greenberg and Paul, Miami, FL; Robert A Sacks, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sullivan and Cromwell, Los Angeles, CA; Steven M Goldsobel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steven M Goldsobel Law Offices, Los Angeles, CA.

For Venali Inc, Counter Claimant: Steven M Goldsobel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steven M Goldsobel Law Offices, Los Angeles, CA; John C Carey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carey Rodriguez Greenberg and Paul, Miami, FL.

For Catch Curve Inc, Counter Defendant: Robert A Sacks, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Sullivan and Cromwell, Los Angeles, CA.

For Venali Inc, ThirdParty Plaintiff: John C Carey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carey Rodriguez Greenberg and Paul, Miami, FL.

Judges: DEAN D. PREGERSON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DEAN D. PREGERSON

Opinion

[*1032] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF AND COUNTERCLAIM-DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

[Motion filed on February 16, 2007]

This matter is before the Court on plaintiff Catch Curve, Inc. and third party defendant j2 Global Communications, Inc.'s motion to [2] dismiss counts two through six and count eight of defendant Venali, Inc.'s amended counterclaim and third party complaint. After reviewing the parties' arguments, the Court grants in part and denies in part the motion to dismiss and adopts the following order.

I. BACKGROUND

A. The Infringement Suite

On July 1, 2005, Plaintiff Catch Curve, Inc. ("Catch Curve"), brought this suit against Defendant Venali, Inc. ("Venali"), alleging patent infringement. Catch Curve is the owner by assignment of the following patents: U.S. Patent No. 6,785,021 (the "'021 Patent"), U.S. Patent No. 6,643,034 (the "'034 Patent"), U.S. Patent No. 5,459,584 (the "'584 Patent"), U.S. Patent No. 5,291,302 (the "'302 Patent"), U.S. Patent No. 4,994,926 (the "'926 Patent"). (Compl. PP 31-54.) These patents are all entitled "Facsimile Telecommunications System and Method". (Id. PP 5,7,9,11,13.) Venali provides a fax-to-email service that Catch Curve argues infringes these patents under 35

U.S.C. § 271. (Id. PP 18, 31-54.) Catch Curve also requests injunctive relief, an award of reasonable attorneys fees under 35 U.S.C. § 285, and costs and interest. (Id. at 9.)

On December 5, 2005, Venali filed an answer to the complaint [3] and a counterclaim against Catch Curve. On December 27, 2006, Venali filed an answer, amended counterclaim, and third-party complaint against j2 (Catch Curve's parent company). On January 8, 2007, Venali filed a corrected answer to the complaint, amended counterclaim and third party complaint.

In its answer, Venali contends that it is not infringing, and will not infringe, directly or indirectly, any claim of the '021, '034, '584, '302, or '926 patents ("patents-in-suit"). (Countercl. and Third Party Compl. PP 56, 58, 60, 62, 64.) Venali also asserts a number of affirmative defenses: (1) The patents-in-suit are invalid for failure to comply with the requirements of 35 U.S.C. § 101, et seq. (Id. PP 57, 59, 61, 63, [*1033] 65.) (2) Claims under the patents-in-suit are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrines of laches, waiver and estoppel. (Id. PP 66-75.) (3) Catch Curve has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). (Id. P 76.) (4) Catch Curve's claims for injunctive relief are barred by the existences of an adequate remedy at law. (Id. P 77.) (5) Catch Curve is precluded by the doctrine of prosecution history estoppel and/or prior art [4] from asserting any construction of the claims in the patents-in-suit that would cover Venali's accused products and/or services. (Id. P 78.) (6) Catch Curve is precluded from enforcing the patents-in-suit due to patent misuse. (Id. P 79.) (7) Catch Curve's conduct related to the patents-in-suit constitutes unclean hands and renders the patents unenforceable. (Id. P 80.)

B. The Counterclaim and Third Party Complaint

In its amended counterclaim and third party complaint, Venali alleges that j2 and Catch Curve have engaged in an illegal scheme to unfairly compete with Venali and other competitors in the consumer/small office/home office ("SOHO") Internet facsimile services industry in violation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, the Lanham Act and California Unfair Competition Law. (Id. P 82.) Venali alleges that the following conduct by Catch Curve and j2 supports its claims: (1) harassment of competitors generally, and Venali in particular, by bringing baseless patent infringement suits, (2) tortious interference with Venali's business relations based on a campaign of threats of patent infringement lawsuits targeting Venali's customers, (3) willful infringement of competitors' trademarks, [5] (4) dissemination of false information about the validity and applicability of the Audio Fax patent portfolio, and (5) other unfair, anti-competitive, and illegal actions.

Venali also alleges that j2 was instrumental in the creation of Catch Curve, that Catch Curve is a wholly owned subsidiary of j2 and at all relevant times has been the alter ego of j2. (Id. PP 90, 102.) Venali asserts that in furtherance of its anti-competitive scheme j2 has sought to conceal its relationship with Catch Curve. (Id. PP 93, 99, 100, 101.)

Counts Two through Six and Eight are the subject of the instant motion to dismiss. Counts Two, Three, and Four each allege that j2 and Catch Curve have engaged in conduct that may qualify as anti-competitive to form the basis of a claim of monopolization under Section Two of the Sherman Act. Count Two addresses j2 and Catch Curve's conduct in the instant litigation, characterizing the litigation as a sham. Count Three addresses j2 and Catch Curve's license pooling practices, characterizing these practices as tying. Count Four addresses j2 and Catch Curve's institution of numerous patent suits against j2 competitors - characterizing this conduct as a pattern of baseless [6] litigation intended to stifle competition in the relevant market.

Counts Five and Six allege that Catch Curve and j2 engaged in tortious interference with existing and prospective business relationships in violation California common law. Count Eight alleges that Catch Curve and j2 have violated the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq., on the basis of the same conduct that allegedly supports Counts Two through Six.

C. Motion to Dismiss

On February 16, 2007, Catch Curve and j2 filed a motion to dismiss Counts Two through Six and Count Eight of Venali's counterclaim under Rule 12(b)(6). Catch [*1034] Curve and j2 first argue that the attempted monopolization claims in Counts Two and Four should be dismissed under the Noerr Pennington doctrine, which protects parties from antitrust liability for litigation brought to enforce their legal rights. Contending that the Noerr Pennington doctrine also bars tortious interference claims predicated on protected conduct related to litigation, j2 and Catch Curve suggest that Counts Five and Six also fail to state a claim.

Next, j2 and Catch Curve argue that the Court should strike the tortious interference claims in Counts [7] Five and Six under California's Anti-SLAPP Statute, Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16, which requires early-dismissal of lawsuits aimed at chilling First Amendment activity. Catch Curve and j2 also argue that the cease-and-desist letters that form the basis of the tortious interference claims are protected under California's litigation privilege codified in Cal Civ. Code § 47(b). Catch Curve and j2 finally contend that the tortious interference claims also fail because they were not pled with particularity.

Catch Curve and j2 also argue that Count Three, the tying claim, fails in light of a recent Federal Circuit holding that vindicates the practice of patent pooling as not anti-competitive. Finally, they argue that Count Eight, the § 17200 claim, should be dismissed because it is based on the conduct underlying the other causes of action. They assert that if the other counts are dismissed, § 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code should not allow Venali to circumvent the rationale that defeats the other causes of action.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standard For 12(b)(6)

HN1[] Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is appropriate when it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of [8] facts that could be proven consistent with the allegations set forth in the complaint. Newman v. Universal Pictures, 813 F.2d 1519, 1521-22 (9th Cir. 1987). The Court must view all allegations in the complaint in the light most favorable to the non-movant and must accept all material allegations -- as well as any reasonable inferences to be drawn from them -- as true. North Star Int'l v. Arizona Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 581 (9th Cir. 1983).

HN2[] Motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim are disfavored, see Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997), and 12(b)(6) dismissals are proper only in "extraordinary" cases. United States v. City of Redwood City, 640 F.2d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 1981). In dismissing for failure to state a claim, "a district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleadings was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Doe v. United States, 58 F.3d 494, 497 (9th Cir. 1995)

B. Sherman Act § 2

HN3[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act states: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other persons, to monopolize any [9] part of the trade or commerce . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Venali's counterclaim seems to allege attempted monopolization by j2 and Catch Curve, invoking the "dangerous probability" language. HN4[] To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust [*1035] injury." SmileCare Dental Group v. Delta Dental Plan, 88 F.3d 780, 783 (9th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1028, 117 S. Ct. 583, 136 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1996)(quoting Pacific Express. Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 959 F.2d 814, 817 (9th Cir. 1992)).

1. Market Definition

Venali alleges that the relevant product market is the "consumer/small office/home office ('SOHO') internet facsimile services market in the United States". (Countercl. and Third Party Compl. P 112.) Without adopting Venali's market definition, the Court evaluates the allegations of attempted monopolization in relation to this alleged market.

2. Specific Intent

Venali alleges j2 and Catch Curve intended to gain monopoly power for j2 by engaging in the potentially [10] anticompetitive conduct that is the basis for the claim. (Id. PP 121, 130.) At the pleading stage, facts to support allegations about j2 and Catch Curve's intent are likely in the possession of j2 and Catch Curve and may be discovered by Venali at a later stage in the litigation. Furthermore, HN5[] anticompetitive conduct alone can satisfy the specific intent requirement if the conduct "form[s] the basis for a substantial claim of restraint of trade" or is "clearly threatening to competition or clearly exclusionary." Twin City Sportservice. Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., Inc., 676 F.2d 1291, 1309 (9th Cir.1982); see Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) (stating that unfair tactics can suffice to prove intent to monopolize). Therefore, Venali's allegations of specific intent are sufficiently stated to survive a motion to dismiss.

3. Dangerous Probability of Success

Venali also alleges that j2 and Catch Curve control more than 80% of the relevant product market. (Id. P 115.) The Ninth Circuit has held that a 44% market share was sufficient as a matter of law to support a finding of market power for attempted monopolization. See Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1438 (9th Cir. 1995). [11] HoweverHN6[] , "neither monopoly power nor a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power can exist absent evidence of barriers to new entry or expansion." Am. Prof'l Testing Serv. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Prof'l Publ'ns, Inc., 108 F.3d 1147, 1154 (9th Cir. 1997). Venali has alleged that "there are substantial barriers to entry into the relevant product market" including without limitation those created by the allegedly anticompetitive conduct. (Countercl. and Third Party Compl. P 113.) Venali has alleged that j2 and Catch Curve's litigation and licensing strategy creates additional capital costs for new entrants into the market. (Id. PP 106, 131, 133) Viewed in the light most favorable to Venali, it has pled facts to support the conclusion that Catch Curve and j2 have a dangerous probability of creating a j2 monopoly.

4. Antitrust Injury

Venali has alleged that as a result of the violations of antitrust law, it has been damaged in its business or property. (Id. PP 128, 134.) HN7[] In order to demonstrate that it suffered an antitrust injury, Venali must show that its injury was caused by anticompetitive or predatory aspects of Catch Curve and j2's conduct, not by competition. Pacific Express, 959 F.2d at 818(noting [12] that the purpose of the antitrust laws is "the protection of competition, not competitors." (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). Venali has alleged that j2 and Catch Curve's conduct has "rendered competitors less competitive" and has a dangerous probability of [*1036] "stifl[ing] innovation" in the market. (Countercl. and Third Party Compl. PP 132, 133.) Viewed in the light most favorable to Venali, these allegations support the conclusion that Venali has suffered causal antitrust injury.

5. Anticompetitive Conduct

HN8[] In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization, Venali must allege that Catch Curve and j2 have engaged in "predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization." SmileCare Dental Group, 88 F.3d at 783. The question of whether a particular course of conduct is predatory of anticompetitive (also referred to as exclusionary) "cannot be answered by simply considering its effect on" Venali. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (U.S. 1985).

> In addition, HN9[] it is relevant to consider its impact on consumers and whether it has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way. If a firm has been 'attempting [13] to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency,' it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory . . . [The word] 'exclusionary' comprehends at the most behavior that not only (1) tends to impair the opportunities of rivals, but also (2) either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way.

Id. (citing 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law 78 (1978); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 138 (1978)).

i. Noerr Pennington and Sham Litigation

Catch Curve and j2 have moved to dismiss Venali's antitrust claims, arguing that Noerr Pennington immunity bars a claim of antitrust liability based on conduct petitioning the government. Venali has alleged that the instant litigation is a sham, therefore, it does not deserve the protection of the Noerr Pennington doctrine.

HN10[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine does protect parties from antitrust liability predicated on acts of petitioning the government. See Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). However, these activities are not protected if the petitioning act is "a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to [14] interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144. In analyzing whether the conduct of bringing a lawsuit is protected, the Supreme Court has held: "litigation cannot be deprived of immunity as a sham unless the litigation is objectively baseless." Professional Real Estate Investors v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 508 U.S. 49, 51, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). The Court created a two-part test for determining when a suit is "objectively baseless":

> First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of the definition a court should focus on whether the baseless suit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with a competitor's business relationships through the use [of] the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon.

Id. (citations omitted). The Federal Circuit has adopted this framework and applies it in determining whether patent litigation is a sham. See Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1072.

[*1037] ii. Venali's [15] Allegations

In its counterclaim, Venali alleges that j2 and Catch Curve have engaged in a course of conduct aimed at damaging competition in the relevant product market. Venali alleges that this course of conduct includes: (1) a pattern of acquiring competitors, (2) a pattern of vexatious litigation brought by j2 and Catch Curve aimed at injuring j2's market rivals (including this patent infringement suit), (3) a pattern of using the litigation to coerce competitors to pay for "unnecessary" licenses as a means of extracting money from competitors to stifle competition, (4) sending cease and desist letters in bad faith to Venali's customers threatening to sue these entities for patent infringement, (5) offering licenses to relevant patents in a pool (a tying claim), (6) disseminating false information to the industry regarding the validity and applicability of their patents to the relevant product market. (Venali's Counterclaim and Third Party Complaint PP 82, 91, 92, 121, 126, 131.)

Catch Curve and j2 argue that the attempted monopolization actions fail to state a claim because Venali argues for antitrust liability based on patent litigation and litigation-related activity, all of which [16] j2 and Catch Curve contend is protected by the Noerr Pennington doctrine. Venali contends that the litigation at issue is a sham, piercing the protection of Noerr Pennington. Venali's central argument is that Catch Curve relies on an objectively unreasonable construction of the claims in the Audio Fax patents to support its infringement case against Venali. Venali asserts that Catch Curve's advocated claim construction exceeds the scope of the right granted under the AudioFax patents, ignores the prosecution history that bars it from arguing this construction, and is objectively baseless, meaning no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on these arguments on the merits.

HN11[] The Ninth Circuit has stated that "[w]hether something is a genuine effort to influence governmental action, or a mere sham, is a question of fact." Clipper Exxpress v. Rocky Mountain Motor Tariff Bureau, Inc., 690 F.2d 1240, 1253 (9th Cir. 1982). At present, the Court cannot rule out the possibility that the claim construction arguments advocated by Catch Curve are objectively unreasonable. See Hoffman La Roche Inc. v. Genpharm Inc., 50 F. Supp. 2d 367, 380 (D.N.J. 1999) (declining to find Noerr [17] Pennington immunity on a motion to dismiss because "reasonableness is a question of fact, and the Court cannot make such factual determinations on a factual controversy roiled by a motion to dismiss.") The claim construction hearing in this case is scheduled for May 11, 2007, so these construction arguments will be directly before the Court in a matter of weeks. After that hearing, the Court will be better situated to evaluate the objective reasonableness of the arguments to decide the applicability of Noerr Pennington immunity.

iii. Venali's Allegations Satisfy the Pleading Standard

HN12[] The Ninth Circuit has noted that "there is a policy disfavoring the pre-trial dismissal of antitrust actions because the proof lies largely in the hands of the defendants." Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v. Codding, 615 F.2d 830, 835 (9th. Cir 1980) (citing Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962)); see also Hydranautics v. FilmTec Corp., 70 F.3d 533, 537 (9th Cir. 1995)(determining whether particular litigation was a sham "could not properly be resolved against Hydranautics on the basis of the pleadings. The outcome [would] depend on evidence.")

[*1038] Venali alleges that the instant litigation is "objectively [18] baseless in that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits". (Venali's Counterclaim and Third Party Complaint P 131.) This contention is predicated on the allegation that there is no support in the patents or the law for Catch Curve's claim construction argument. Venali also alleges that the suit was brought in bad faith with the intention of interfering with Venali's ability to service existing customers and compete for new ones. (Id. PP 121, 132.) Because Venali has sufficiently pled the requisite elements of sham litigation to defeat Noerr Pennington protection, the Court cannot conclude that Venali has failed to state an antitrust claim on this basis.

In detailing the pattern of litigation, Venali alleges that j2 and Catch Curve have brought numerous cases similar to this one that are objectively baseless and that serve their bad faith purpose of injuring competition in the relevant market. (Id. PP 106, 107, 130-132.) Venali cites lawsuits brought by Catch Curve against Call Wave, EasyTel Communications, Protus IP Solutions, and Mijanda as examples of this pattern. (Id. P 107.) To support the allegation that these suits were brought in bad faith, Venali [19] notes that three of the lawsuits were filed within weeks of the defendants' objecting to j2's efforts to trademark the term "efax". (Id.) Venali has pled enough of a basis to overcome dismissal on its attempted monopolization claim. Catch Curve will, of course, be entitled to raise its arguments again on summary judgment. Resolution of these claims at this juncture, however, is premature.

iv. Applicable Law

The parties have devoted substantial portions of their briefs to arguing about how the Court should analyze the pattern of allegedly baseless lawsuits brought with anticompetitive intent. These arguments address an unresolved conflict between the Ninth Circuit cases that place greater importance on the subjective intent of the actor in analyzing whether the institution of a series of lawsuits operates as a restraint on trade [1] and the objectively baseless standard discussed above. HN13[] The Federal Circuit has indicated that district courts should employ Federal Circuit law to determine whether a patent case is sham litigation eviscerating the protection of Noerr Pennington. Nobelpharma Ab v. Implant Innovations, 141 F.3d 1059, 1067 (Fed. Cir. 1998). However, the Federal Circuit has not [20] yet addressed a situation where a district court is presented with a pattern of patent lawsuits that may be deemed an illegal restraint on trade under that circuit's law, even without a showing that each individual suit is objectively baseless. Without deciding whether the Court will require Venali to prove that each litigation in the alleged pattern is baseless, the Court is satisfied that Venali has sufficiently stated a claim of sham litigation in the instant case to overcome the motion to dismiss.

D. Tying

HN15[] In order to show that a tying arrangement violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Venali must establish: 1) two distinct products or services; 2) a sale or agreement to sell the tying product conditioned upon the purchase of the tied product; [*1039] 3) market power in the relevant [21] market for the tying product; and 4) the tied product involves a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12-18, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). See also Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 464, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992); County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp.,

---

[1] See USS-POSCO Indus. v. Contra Costa County Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 31 F.3d 800, 811 (9th Cir. 1994) ("HN14[] When dealing with a series of lawsuits, the question is not whether any one of them has merit - some may turn out to, just as a matter of chance - but whether they are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival").

236 F.3d 1148, 1157 (9th Cir. 2001). The Ninth Circuit also requires that the defendant have an economic interest in the tied product. See County of Tuolumne, 236 F.3d at 1158.

HN16[] To state a claim for tying Venali must allege two distinct products and two distinct markets. Venali's complaint fails to define two distinct markets mentioning a "Relevant Innovation Market" only one time and providing no details to support this market definition. (Complaint P 126). Although one might conclude that Venali contends that the AudioFax patents are the tying product and that some "unwanted j2 patents" are the tied product, this essential allegation is not obvious from the claims. Furthermore, Venali has failed to allege that the tied product involves a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce, or to plead facts which if true support the conclusion that Catch Curve or j2 have an economic [22] interest in the "unwanted j2 patents." As a result, the Court dismisses the tying cause of action for failure to state a claim, with leave to amend.

E. Tortious Interference

i. Failure to State a Claim

Venali alleges that j2 and Catch Curve have committed the torts of interference with existing and prospective business relationships under California common law.

HN17[] To state a claim for tortious interference with existing business relationships Venali must plead facts that if true, would establish: (1) a valid contract between Venali and a third party, (2) j2 and Catch Curve's knowledge of the contract, (3) j2 and Catch Curve's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship, (4) actual breach of the contractual relationship, and (5) resulting damage. Tuchscher Development Enterprises, Inc. v. San Diego Unified Port Dist., 106 Cal.App.4th 1219, 1239, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 57 (2003). In the complaint, Venali did not identify the particular contract(s) with which Catch Curve allegedly interfered. However, as Venali noted at oral argument, at the time it filed its complaint, it was still determining which contracts definitely fell within this claim. Through discovery and the parties' [23] supplemental responses, Venali has now identified these contracts. As the notice pleading standard under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is liberal, the Court finds that Catch Curve will not be prejudiced if the tortious interference claim is permitted to remain. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8.

HN18[] To state a claim for tortious interference with prospective business relationships Venali must plead: (1) an economic relationship between it and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to Venali; (2) j2 and Catch Curve's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the j2 and Catch Curve designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to Venali proximately caused by the acts of j2 and Catch Curve. See Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1153, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003); Buckaloo v. Johnson, 14 Cal.3d 815, 827, 122 Cal. Rptr. 745, 537 P.2d 865 (1975). For the same reason identified above, the [*1040] Court permits this claim to stand. Thus, the motion to dismiss the tortious interference claims is denied.

ii. Anti-SLAPP and Litigation Privilege

The Court notes that it has not ruled out the possibility that the infringement lawsuit is a [24] sham. If the Court is persuaded, after the claim construction hearing, that the infringement action meets the requirements for sham litigation, the related conduct of sending cease-and-desist letters to Venali's customers will not be protected as an act in furtherance of the Catch Curve's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution. Accordingly, an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike the tortious interference claims will fail. At this time, however, the Court declines to rule on this argument.

F. California Business and Professions Code § 17200

Catch Curve argues that the Court should dismiss Venali's § 17200 claim because this type of claim is derivative of Venali's other claims and should fail if the others fail. Because Venali has adequately alleged an attempted monopolization claim, however, the Court does not dismiss the "tag along" § 17200 claim.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, the Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part, as follows:

(1) Catch Curve and j2's motion to dismiss the Second, Fourth, and Eighth Counts on the basis of Noerr-Pennington immunity is DENIED. The extent to which the infringement litigation may constitute a sham [25] based on objectively unreasonable claim construction arguments is more properly decided after the claim construction hearing.

(2) Catch Curve and j2's motion to dismiss the Third Count of tying, for failure to state a claim is GRANTED with leave to amend.

(3) Catch Curve and j2's motion to dismiss the Fifth and Sixth Counts of tortious interference for failure to state a claim is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: 4-30-07

/s/ Dean D. Pregerson

DEAN D. PREGERSON

United States District Judge

Midland Glass Co. v. Aluma Spec, Inc.

Court of Appeals of Minnesota

May 1, 2007, Filed

A06-765

Reporter
2007 Minn. App. Unpub. LEXIS 397 *

Midland Glass Co., Inc., Appellant, vs. Aluma Spec, Inc., Respondent, EFCO Corporation, Respondent, Minneapolis Public Schools, Special School District No. 1, Respondent, C. L. Paulson & Associates, Inc., Respondent, Rozeboom Miller Architects, Inc., Defendant.

Notice: [*1] THIS OPINION WILL BE UNPUBLISHED AND MAY NOT BE CITED EXCEPT AS PROVIDED BY MINNESOTA STATUTES.

Subsequent History: Review denied by Midland Glass Co. v. Aluma Spec, Inc., 2007 Minn. LEXIS 406 (Minn., July 17, 2007)

Prior History: Hennepin County District Court File No. 27-CV-04-016555. Hon. Isabel Gomez.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

products, summary judgment, conspiracy, contractor, allegations, antitrust, promissory estoppel, bid, restrained, conspired

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Need for Trial

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Need for Trial

When appealing from summary judgment, appellate courts ask whether there are any genuine issues of material fact and whether the lower courts erred in their application of the law. Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

The party resisting summary judgment must do more than rest on mere averments.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Legal Entitlement

Summary judgment is mandatory against a party who fails to establish an essential element of its claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN4[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Courts construe Minnesota antitrust law consistently with the federal court's interpretation of analogous federal antitrust provisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN5[] State Regulation, Claims

Although inferences on summary judgment must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence. To survive a motion for summary judgment a plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Minn. Stat. § 325D.51 (2006).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN7[] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

See Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 1 (2006).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN8[] State Regulation, Claims

Because a single entity cannot contract, combine, or conspire with itself, to withstand summary judgment on a restraint of trade action, an appellant must provide evidence that respondents acted together.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

HN9[] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

A private business generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it chooses, as long as it does so independently.

Public Contracts Law > Bids & Formation > Competitive Proposals

HN10[] Bids & Formation, Competitive Proposals

An antitrust violation occurs when a contract, combination, or conspiracy in the letting of any public contract restrains competition. Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 1(2)(c).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN11[] Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Allegations alone are not sufficient to withstand summary judgment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN12[] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

The elements of promissory estoppel are: (1) a clear and definite promise; (2) that the promissor intended to induce reliance and did induce reliance; and (3) enforcement of the promise is necessary to prevent injustice.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN13[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To establish a prima facie case for intentional interference with contractual relations, a plaintiff must show: (1) the existence of a contract, (2) knowledge of the contract by the alleged wrongdoer, (3) intentional procurement of the contract's breach, (4) absence of justification, and (5) damages caused by the breach.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN14[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A business may deal or refuse to deal with any party as long as it does so independently.

Counsel: For Appellant: Floyd E. Siefferman, Jr., Boris Parker, Saliterman & Siefferman, P.C., Minneapolis, MN.

For Hon. Isabel Gomez, Respondent: Philip J. Young, Moss & Barnett, P.A., Minneapolis, MN.

For EFCO Corporation, Respondent: Kevin R. Coan, Parsinen Kaplan Rosberg & Gotlieb, P.A., Minneapolis, MN.

For Minneapolis Public Schools, Special School District No. 1, Respondent: Alan I. Silver, David A. Turner, Jeffery S. Brockmann, Bassford Remele, P.A., Minneapolis, MN.

For Respondent: C. L. Paulson & Associates, Inc., St. Michael, MN.

Judges: Considered and decided by Halbrooks, Presiding Judge; Kalitowski, Judge; and Collins, Judge. *

Opinion by: KALITOWSKI

Opinion

UNPUBLISHED OPINION

KALITOWSKI, Judge

Appellant Midland Glass Co., Inc. challenges the district court's grant of summary judgment on its antitrust, promissory [*2] estoppel, and intentional interference with contractual relations claims against respondents Aluma Spec, Inc., EFCO Corp., C.L. Paulson & Associates, and Minneapolis Public Schools, Special School District No. 1. We affirm.

FACTS

Appellant Midland Glass Co., Inc. (Midland) is a glazing contractor. Appellant was awarded a subcontract to replace windows for a project of Minneapolis Public School District, Special District No. 1 (MPSD), but was subsequently removed from the project after appellant was unable to obtain products that met MPSD's specifications. Appellant was unable to obtain these materials because respondents Aluma Spec, Inc., (Aluma Spec), EFCO Corporation (EFCO), and C.L. Paulson (Paulson) refused to sell the specified products to appellant.

After reviewing several window products, MPSD specified two manufacturers of the specified products for use in the project: EFCO and Duracraft. Aluma Spec is EFCO's exclusive distributor in Minnesota. Duracraft is exclusively distributed through Paulson.

Appellant did not obtain a price quote for either the EFCO or Duracraft products before submitting its bid, but intended to use the EFCO products for the project. Instead [*3] of obtaining a price quote for the products from Aluma Spec, appellant estimated the cost of the specified EFCO products based on the cost of other EFCO products. Appellant was awarded the subcontract based on this bid.

In mid-February 2003, after appellant learned it was the winning bidder, appellant called a representative of Aluma Spec to inquire about the purchase of EFCO products for the project. The representative informed appellant that Aluma Spec would not sell the specified EFCO products to appellant because appellant had not requested a quote before the bid deadline. The representative stated that he considered it unethical to sell the products to appellant because the other glazing contractors > were competing for the Project based on real product costs for EFCO products whereas [appellant] competed based on product costs which might have been completely wrong. As many of the glazing contractors which had requested a quote from Aluma Spec before the bid deadline were significant customers of Aluma Spec, I was concerned that those contractors would think it improper for Aluma Spec to sell to a contractor which had not . . . obtained actual product cost information [*4] before submitting a bid. I felt that selling to [appellant] under these circumstances could affect my future sales with these larger customers.

* Retired judge of the district court, serving as judge of the Minnesota Court of Appeals by appointment pursuant to Minn. Const. art. VI, § 10.

Appellant then sought to purchase the other specified product, Duracraft, from respondent Paulson. Paulson informed appellant that it would not sell the Duracraft product to appellant for the same reason cited by Aluma Spec. On approximately March 17, 2003, appellant contacted EFCO and requested EFCO to force Aluma Spec to sell to appellant. EFCO declined appellant's requests.

Appellant attempted to use a substitute product, but failed to follow the required procedure for getting approval and the attempt failed. After failing to obtain the specified products, appellant submitted shop drawings to the project architect using products from another supplier not specified in the project manual. When appellant was unable to obtain either of the specified products, the general contractor terminated appellant's subcontract.

Appellant brought suit against all respondents. Respondents EFCO and MPSD filed motions for summary judgment and Aluma Spec filed a memorandum in support of summary judgment in favor of respondents.

DECISION

Appellant [*5] alleges that (1) Aluma Spec, EFCO, and Paulson conspired unlawfully in their refusal to sell the specified products to appellant under Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 1(3) (2006); (2) MPSD conspired with Aluma Spec and Paulson to specify EFCO and Duracraft products in the project manual, knowing that Duracraft was not a commercially available product and therefore restrained competition in the letting of a public contract under Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 1(2)(c) (2006); (3) Aluma Spec, EFCO, and Paulson were estopped from declining to sell to appellant under appellant's theory of promissory estoppel; and (4) Aluma Spec, EFCO, MPSD, and Paulson intentionally and unjustifiably interfered with appellant's contractual relationship with the general contractor.

HN1[] "When appealing from summary judgment, we ask whether there are any genuine issues of material fact and whether the lower courts erred in their application of the law." Howard v. Minn. Timberwolves Basketball Ltd. P'ship, 636 N.W.2d 551, 555 (Minn. App. 2001), review denied (Minn. Feb. 19, 2002). "Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational [*6] trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Id. at 556 (quotation omitted). HN2[] "[T]he party resisting summary judgment must do more than rest on mere averments." Id. HN3[] Summary judgment is "mandatory against a party who fails to establish an essential element" of its claim. Lloyd v. In Home Health, Inc., 523 N.W.2d 2, 3 (Minn. App. 1994).

HN4[] We construe Minnesota antitrust law consistently with the federal court's interpretation of analogous federal antitrust provisions. Keating v. Philip Morris, Inc., 417 N.W.2d 132, 136 (Minn. App. 1987). The United States Supreme Court addressed the standards governing motions for summary judgment in the antitrust context in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., Ltd., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). The court instructed that HN5[] although inferences on summary judgment must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence." Id. at 588, 106 S. Ct. 1356. "To survive a motion for summary judgment . . . a plaintiff . . [*7] . must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. (quotation marks omitted). The court further noted that "conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy." Id. at 597, 106 S. Ct. at 1361 n.21.

Pursuant to Minnesota's antitrust statute, HN6[] "[a] contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons in unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce is unlawful." Minn. Stat. § 325D.51 (2006). The definition of "unreasonable restraint" and "unlawful combination or conspiracy" is clarified in Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 1 (2006), which states:

> HN7[] [T]he following shall be deemed to restrain trade or commerce unreasonably and are unlawful:
> . . . .
> (2) A contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons whereby, in the letting of any public contract, (a) the price quotation of any bid is fixed or controlled . . . or (c) competition is in any other manner restrained.
>
> (3) A contract, combination, or conspiracy [*8] between two or more persons refusing to deal with another person.

HN8[] Because a single entity cannot contract, combine, or conspire with itself, to withstand summary judgment appellant must provide evidence that respondents acted together. See Howard, 636 N.W.2d at 559 (affirming summary judgment when nonmoving party failed to establish that the actors to an alleged conspiracy were economically independent entities and failed to establish collusion or conspiracy with any other entity). Here, the district court correctly determined that appellant failed to introduce any evidence showing that any combination of respondents acted in concert.

I. Refusal to Deal

HN9[] A private business generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it chooses, as long as it does so independently. See United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 468, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919); see also Steele v. City of Bemidji, 114 F. Supp. 2d 838, 849 (D. Minn. 2000) (under Minnesota law, "[i]t is the right . . . of a trader engaged in an entirely private business, 'freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to the parties with [*9] whom he will deal'"), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 257 F.3d 902 (8th Cir. 2001).

Appellant relies on its owner's inference that an MPSD employee seemed surprised that appellant was awarded the contract as evidence of a conspiracy whereby MPSD communicated to Paulson, Aluma Spec, and EFCO not to sell the specified products to appellant. But representatives of MPSD, Aluma Spec, and Paulson testified that they never communicated with one another regarding the sale of the specified products to appellant. And appellant's owner testified that he did not have any evidence that anyone instructed Aluma Spec not to sell the product to appellant.

Moreover, the record indicates that EFCO did not know that appellant was the subcontractor on the project until appellant sought to purchase the specified products directly from EFCO, after Aluma Spec and Paulson refused to supply the specified products. The record contains no evidence of any communication between EFCO and either MPSD or Paulson. Although the record indicates that EFCO supported Aluma Spec's decision not to sell to appellant, it was not EFCO's usual business practice to sell directly to subcontractors. [*10] Because EFCO's decision to support its distributor is at least as consistent with permissible competition as with an impermissible conspiracy, appellant has failed to produce evidence sufficient to warrant an inference of conspiracy and avoid summary judgment.

Appellant also claims that MPSD's specification of Duracraft products, which according to appellant failed to meet project specifications, is evidence of MPSD's involvement in the alleged conspiracy. But even if MPSD should have specified different products or allowed substitutions, appellant has the burden of producing evidence from which an inference can be made that the respondents acted in concert. Appellant has failed to meet this burden.

Absent evidence of collusion, or even communication, among the respondents, appellant has failed to show that a genuine issue of material fact exists. See Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 1(3) (requiring collusion); Howard, 636 N.W.2d at 559. We conclude that summary judgment for respondents is appropriate on this claim.

II. Restraint of Competition in a Public Contract

HN10[] An antitrust violation occurs when a contract, combination, [*11] or conspiracy in the letting of any public contract restrains competition. Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 1(2)(c). Appellant alleges that MPSD, EFCO, Paulson, and Aluma Spec conspired to ensure that EFCO products were the only specified products available and thereby ensured that only EFCO products would be used in the project, restraining competition. The basis for this argument is appellant's allegation that Duracraft, the other specified products of choice, were not commercially available and did not meet the project specifications. But appellant has failed to produce any evidence in support of these allegations, and HN11[] allegations alone are not sufficient to withstand summary judgment. See Howard, 636 N.W.2d at 556. We conclude that the district court did not err in granting respondents summary judgment on this claim.

III. Promissory Estoppel

Appellant argues that Aluma Spec is promissorily estopped from refusing to sell the specified EFCO products. We disagree.

HN12[] The elements of promissory estoppel are: (1) a clear and definite promise; (2) that the promissor intended to induce reliance and did induce reliance; and (3) enforcement [*12] of the promise is necessary to prevent injustice. Hous. & Redev. Auth. of Chisholm v. Norman, 696 N.W.2d 329, 336 (Minn. 2005).

Appellant's promissory estoppel claims rests upon three allegations: (1) "Aluma Spec's interactions with [MPSD] in fixing and limiting the allowed manufacturer constituted a clear promise . . . that Aluma Spec would sell the EFCO products to the successful bidder"; (2) Aluma Spec "put itself in a position, by its dealings with [MPSD], to be the only possible product supplier"; and (3) Aluma Spec intended that the successful bidder of the project would rely on its promise to supply EFCO products.

Assuming, but not deciding, that these allegations would support a claim of promissory estoppel, appellant has failed to produce any evidence supporting any of the allegations and may not withstand summary judgment by resting on "mere averments." Howard, 636 N.W.2d at 556. We affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment on this claim.

IV. Intentional Interference with Contractual Relations

Appellant argues that MPSD, Aluma Spec, and EFCO intentionally interfered with appellant's contract with the general [*13] contractor. We disagree.

HN13[] To establish a prima facie case for intentional interference with contractual relations, a plaintiff must show: (1) the existence of a contract, (2) knowledge of the contract by the alleged wrongdoer, (3) intentional procurement of the contract's breach, (4) absence of justification, and (5) damages caused by the breach. Kjesbo v. Ricks, 517 N.W.2d 585, 588 (Minn. 1994).

Appellant alleges that because each respondent acted deliberately in refusing to sell, respondents intentionally procured the contract's breach. But HN14[] a business may deal or refuse to deal with any party as long as it does so independently. Steele, 114 F. Supp. 2d at 849. Here, Aluma Spec, EFCO, and Paulson were each entitled to refuse to sell to appellant absent an illegal agreement. Appellant has not produced any evidence that the respondents' refusals to sell were unjustified or were intended to procure the breach of appellant's contract with the general contractor. Therefore appellant has failed to produce evidence sufficient to withstand summary judgment on this claim.

We affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment with respect to all of appellant's [*14] claims.

Affirmed.

End of Document

Flying J Inc. v. TA Operating Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Utah

May 2, 2007, Decided ; May 2, 2007, Filed

Case No: 1:06-CV-30 TC

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32518 *; 2007 WL 1302756

FLYING J INC., et al., Plaintiffs, vs. TA OPERATING CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by Flying J Inc. v. TA Operating Corp., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55567 (D. Utah, July 30, 2007)

Core Terms

Interrogatories, responses, discovery, damages, boycott, response to interrogatory, motion to compel, antitrust, market power, supplemental, calculated, horizontal, objected, temporal, asserts, definition of the term, court concludes, requests, answers, economic relations, allegations, contends, vague

Counsel: [*1] For Flying J Inc, a Utah corporation, TCH, a Utah limited liability company, Transportation Alliance Bank, a Utah corporation, TON Services, a Utah corporation, Plaintiffs: Gregory J. Kerwin, LEAD ATTORNEY, GIBSON DUNN & CRUTCHER (CO), DENVER, CO; Jonathan A. Dibble, LEAD ATTORNEY, RAY QUINNEY & NEBEKER (SLC), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Katrina Casey Lewis, LEAD ATTORNEY, GIBSON DUNN & CRUTCHER (CO), DENVER, CO; Justin T. Toth, RAY QUINNEY & NEBEKER (SLC), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Keith A. Kelly, RAY QUINNEY & NEBEKER (SLC), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; T. Michael Crimmins, GIBSON DUNN & CRUTCHER (DC), WASHINGTON, DC; Taggart Hansen, GIBSON DUNN & CRUTCHER (CO), DENVER, CO.

For TA Operating, a Delaware corporation doing business as TravelCenters of America, Defendant: Jane E. Willis, LEAD ATTORNEY, ROPES & GRAY (BOSTON), BOSTON, MA; Michael D. Zimmerman, LEAD ATTORNEY, SNELL & WILMER (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Amy B. Auth, ROPES & GRAY (BOSTON), BOSTON, MA; Todd M. Shaughnessy, SNELL & WILMER (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Troy L. Booher, SNELL & WILMER (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

For Pilot Travel Centers, a Delaware limited liability company, Defendant: Alan M. Grimaldi, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOWREY SIMON ARNOLD [*2] & WHITE, WASHINGTON, DC; Gary F. Bendinger, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Charles A. Stormont, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; John H. Bogart, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Scott D. McCoy, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Zachary J. Weyher, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

For Pilot, a Tennessee corporation, Defendant: Alan M. Grimaldi, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOWREY SIMON ARNOLD & WHITE, WASHINGTON, DC; Gary F. Bendinger, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Charles A. Stormont, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; John H. Bogart, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Scott D. McCoy, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT; Zachary J. Weyher, HOWREY LLP (UT), SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

Judges: Tena Campbell, District Judge, David Nuffer, Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: David Nuffer

Opinion

MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER GRANTING IN PART & DENYING IN PART MOTION TO COMPEL

Defendant Pilot Travel Centers LLC ("Pilot Travel") has filed a motion to compel supplemental responses to its First Set of Interrogatories. [1] On August 29, 2006, Pilot Travel served its First Set of Interrogatories on Plaintiffs. [*3] On October 30, 2006, plaintiffs served their responses and objections on Pilot Travel. [2] On December 1, 2006, counsel for Pilot Travel sent a letter to Plaintiffs' counsel noting what they considered to be numerous deficiencies in Plaintiffs' responses. [3] Thereafter, the parties exchanged correspondence and held a telephone conference, but were unable to come to an agreement on the disputed discovery requests. [4] For the reasons discussed below, the court grants the motion to compel in part, and denies it in part. The court will discuss each disputed request in turn.

[*4] DISCUSSION

A. Interrogatories 1, 2, & 3.

Interrogatory no. 1 asks plaintiffs to describe in detail the basis for the allegation in paragraph 48 of the complaint that there is a continuing horizontal group boycott. [5] Plaintiffs responded to this interrogatory in part by stating that the factual basis for the allegation is set forth in paragraphs 1-60 of the complaint. [6]

Interrogatory no. 2 asks Plaintiffs to describe in detail the basis for the contention that Pilot Travel has participated in the alleged boycott. [7] Interrogatory no. 3 asks the same question with regard to Pilot Corp. [8] In response to Interrogatory no. 2, Plaintiffs incorporated by reference their response to Interrogatory no. 1. In addition, they stated:

> [T]here is direct evidence of Pilot Travel's participation in the group boycott with TA through the conversations between Mike Hinderliter (of TA) and Mark Hazelwood (of Pilot) [*5] documented in the email attached as Exhibit 5 to the Complaint, as well as Pilot's actions with respect to Irving Oil in furtherance of the boycott after those conversations. [9]

---

[1] Motion to Compel, docket no. 82, filed February 8, 2007.

[2] Memorandum in Support of Motion to Compel ("Supporting Memorandum") at iii, docket no. 83, filed February 8, 2007. Copies of Pilot Travel's First Set of Interrogatories and plaintiffs' responses are attached to the Supporting Memorandum as Exhibits 1 and 2, respectively.

[3] Supporting Memorandum at iv; Letter from John Bogart to Jonathon Dibble and Gregory Kerwin, dated December 1, 2006, attached to Supporting Memorandum as Exhibit 3.

[4] Supporting Memorandum at iv; Letters attached to Supporting Memorandum as Exhibits 4 & 5; Plaintiffs' Response to Pilot Travel Center's Motion to Compel ("Plaintiffs' Response") at 1, 2 n.1, docket no. 90, filed February 23, 2007; Letters attached to Plaintiffs' Response as Exhibits A & B.

[5] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 6.

[6] Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 7.

[7] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 7.

[8] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 7.

[9] Exhibit 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 8.

In response to Interrogatory no. 3, Plaintiffs incorporated by reference their response to Interrogatory no. 2. The response further stated: "As detailed in Plaintiffs' briefing and exhibits in response to Pilot's motion to dismiss in this case, public records confirm that Mark Hazelwood has served as an executive for both Pilot Travel and Pilot Corp. during the time period relevant to Plaintiff's claims, as have other Pilot employees." [10]

Defendants contend that these responses are [*6] inadequate and that Plaintiffs should be required to provide a more detailed factual statement. In response to the motion to compel, Plaintiffs state that they have not withheld any information, and in fact, have provided all currently known information in support of the identified contentions. Plaintiffs state: "Having provided all known information in response to the contention interrogatories, Plaintiffs cannot do any more." [11]

The court concludes that Plaintiffs should provide a more detailed statement of the facts supporting the allegations in the complaint. "An interrogatory may properly inquire into a party's contentions in the case and the factual basis therefor." [12] A defendant "must be allowed to require the accusing party to set forth, with particularity, what he is accused of doing, not doing, or both." [13] Although it is true, as one court has observed, that the allegations in the complaint shed some light on the role defendants apparently played, a general reference [*7] to the allegations in the complaint is not a proper response to an interrogatory. [14] Similarly, vague references to conversations between Mr. Hinderliter and Mr. Hazelwood and to Pilot's actions with respect to Irving Oil are not appropriate responses to the interrogatories. If Plaintiffs do not have the "necessary information to make a full, fair and specific answer to an interrogatory, [they] should so state under oath." [15] Accordingly, Plaintiffs are directed to supplement their responses to Interrogatories 1, 2, and 3.

[*8] B. Interrogatories 6 & 7.

Interrogatories 6 and 7 ask the basis for the contention in Paragraph 69 of the complaint that Pilot Travel and Pilot Corp., respectively, possess market power. [16] In response to Interrogatories 6 and 7, Plaintiffs repeated allegations in the complaint relating to the market shares of the so-called "boycotting firms," and their exclusive access to the Trendar POS System. [17] They further stated that "Plaintiffs believe the combined market share of these two companies and possibly others, in the circumstances and context alleged in the Complaint, gives these boycotting firms 'market power' as defined in applicable antitrust law for purposes of their horizontal group boycott." [18]

Pilot Travel contends that this answer is insufficient. It states that Interrogatories 6 and 7 "asked whether Pilot Travel or Pilot Corp. possesses market power, not whether some other [*9] persons or group possesses market power." [19] Pilot Travel states that in the meet and confer process, Plaintiffs admitted that they do not contend that

---

[10] Exhibit 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 9.

[11] Plaintiffs' Response at 2.

[12] Cont'l Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago v. Caton, 136 F.R.D. 682, 684 (D. Colo. 1991).

[13] Id. at 689.

[14] Id. at 688 (stating that "all references in plaintiff's Interrogatory Responses to the allegations in the Complaint amount to nothing more than claims or allegations that the allegations are true.").

[15] Id. at 684 (quoting Miller v. Doctor's Gen. Hosp., 76 F.R.D. 136, 140 (W .D. Okla. 1977).

[16] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 7.

[17] Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 10-12.

[18] Id. at 12.

Pilot Travel and Pilot Corp. have market power, but they refused to provide supplemental responses indicating their position. [20]

In response to the motion to compel, Plaintiffs explain that "Paragraph 69 contends that the boycotting firms possess market power collectively, not that each individual boycotting firm possesses market power by itself." [21] The court concludes that Plaintiffs' answers to Interrogatories 6 and 7 are sufficient to apprise Pilot Travel of Plaintiffs' contentions with regard to the issue of "market power."

[*10] C. Interrogatories 8 & 9.

Interrogatories 8 and 9 ask Plaintiffs to describe the basis for their contention in Paragraph 84 of the complaint that Pilot Travel and Pilot Corp. have interfered with Plaintiffs' economic relations other than through the alleged horizontal boycott. [22] In answer to these interrogatories, Plaintiffs pointed out that the allegations in Paragraph 84 of their complaint refer to Defendant TA, not the Pilot defendants. They state, however, that they believe that "evidence developed through discovery in this case will reveal instances in which Pilot has engaged in other acts intended to interfere with Plaintiffs' economic relations, besides the actions described in Paragraph 83 of the complaint, but they have not yet alleged such actions by Pilot." [23]

Pilot Travel asserts that Plaintiffs' responses to these interrogatories say both "yes and no, the paradigm of [*11] evasion." [24] Pilot Travel asserts that it is entitled to know whether Plaintiffs contend that either Pilot Travel or Pilot Corp. interfered with Plaintiffs' economic relations, and if so, the factual basis for such contentions. [25]

In response to the motion to compel, Plaintiffs state that they "made clear in their responses that they have not alleged that Pilot has engaged in such 'other acts.'" [26] However, they then repeat their response to the interrogatories that they believe evidence developed through discovery will reveal instances in which Pilot engaged in such "other acts," but they have not yet alleged such actions by Pilot. Plaintiffs contend that this response is clear and direct. [27]

The court concludes that Plaintiffs should [*12] supplement their answers to Interrogatories 8 and 9 to state whether they contend that Pilot Travel or Pilot Corp. has interfered with their economic relations other than through the alleged horizontal boycott. If so, Plaintiffs should provide detailed factual statements supporting the contention. If Plaintiffs have no facts supporting this contention, they should so state under oath. [28]

D. Interrogatories 10, 11, & 12.

---

[19] Pilot Travel's Reply Memorandum in Support of Motion to Compel Supplemental Answers to Interrogatories ("Reply") at 4, docket no. 98, filed March 8, 2007.

[20] Supporting Memorandum at viii.

[21] Plaintiffs' Response at 3; see Ex. 4 to Supporting Memorandum at 6-7.

[22] Supporting Memorandum at 4, Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 7-8.

[23] Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 13.

[24] Reply at 4.

[25] Supporting Memorandum at 4.

[26] Plaintiffs' Response at 4.

[27] Id.

[28] See Cont'l Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 136 F.R.D. at 684.

Interrogatories 10, 11, and 12 ask whether Plaintiffs contend that Plaintiffs TON Services, Inc. ("TON"), Transportation Alliance Bank, Inc. ("TAB"), or Flying J, Inc. are direct participants in the trucker fuel card market, and if so, the basis for each such contention. [29] Plaintiffs objected that the interrogatories are "vague as to the term 'direct participant.'" [30] Subject to the objection, Plaintiffs provided a brief description, as alleged in their complaint, of the general nature [*13] of the businesses engaged in by TON, TAB, and Flying J. [31]

Pilot Travel contends that the objection is unfounded for three reasons. First, Pilot Travel asserts that Plaintiffs' failure to explain how the term is vague or how they understood the term constitutes a waiver of the objection. Second, Pilot Travel contends that there is nothing vague about the term. Pilot Travel notes that direct participation in the relevant market is a factor to be considered in determining standing. It further points out that Plaintiffs have long involvement in antitrust cases, and are represented by experienced antitrust counsel, who may be presumed to understand the standing requirements for antitrust claims. Finally, it states that during the meet and confer process, Plaintiffs conceded that they understood the term. [32]

[*14] In response to the motion to compel, Plaintiffs state that while objecting to their responses, counsel for Pilot Travel "declined to provide a definition of the term 'direct participant' as used in the interrogatories but clarified their belief that the term is 'well-defined in the law of the Tenth Circuit.'" [33] In subsequent communications, they have "refused to provide a definition of the term or to identify the 'Tenth Circuit case law' purportedly supplying the definition." [34] Plaintiffs contend that this refusal "is evidence of the fact that the term is susceptible of many interpretations and nuances and that [Pilot Travel's] insistence upon a response using the undefined term can be viewed as an effort to catch Plaintiffs in a legalistic trap." [35]

The court believes that Pilot Travel [*15] should provide a definition of the term or identify the case law supplying the definition. If it does so, Plaintiffs will be required to supplement their responses to the interrogatories.

E. Interrogatory 13.

Interrogatory 13 asks Plaintiffs to describe their alleged damages in detail. [36] Plaintiffs declined to provide a response to this interrogatory. Instead, they stated that they have not yet analyzed or calculated their damages. They further stated that they will retain an expert to identify and quantify each category of damages. Since initial expert reports are not due until May 30, 2008, Plaintiffs asserted that it is premature for them to disclose any analysis or computation of damages. [37]

In opposition to the motion to compel, Plaintiffs state that antitrust damages must be proven by a complex economic analysis which requires an expert. They state that any opinion about damages that could be offered [*16] at this time by their non-expert representatives would be unsupported by expert analysis and calculation and might even be misleading as it might be inconsistent with the ultimate opinions offered by their antitrust expert. Plaintiffs state

---

[29] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 8.

[30] Ex 2. to Supporting memorandum at 13-15.

[31] Id.

[32] Supporting Memorandum at ix, 5-6.

[33] Plaintiffs' Response at 5 (quoting Letter, dated Dec. 1, 2006, from John Bogart to Jonathon Dibble & Gregory Kerwin at 4, attached as Ex. 3 to Supporting Memorandum.

[34] Plaintiffs' Response at 6.

[35] Id.

[36] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 8.

[37] Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 15-16.

that they have already agreed to produce the financial data and other information that their expert will use to conduct the analysis. In Plaintiffs' view, Pilot Travel will have ample opportunity during expert discovery to evaluate the basis for their damages calculation and to attempt to refute those calculations with their own expert analysis. [38]

In response, Pilot Travel states that much of the information it now seeks should have been provided in initial disclosures. Pilot Travel points out that Plaintiffs' expert report will not be served until long after the close of fact discovery. Pilot Travel states:

> Until then, according to Plaintiffs, Pilot Travel should rely on its own guesses about what Plaintiffs might claim as damages, [*17] and hope for the best in framing discovery requests. This is not the process contemplated by the Rules of Civil Procedure, and it is [a]n invitation to wasteful and contentious document and deposition discovery. [39]

Pilot Travel also note notes that "Plaintiffs have already twice calculated damages they think attributable to an alleged boycott of the TCH card" in litigation in other cases. [40] Pilot Travel asserts that "[w]ith two expert reports already in their files, they should be in a position to say something substantive about their damage claims." [41]

The court agrees that Plaintiffs should provide a description of their damages so that Pilot Travel may frame its discovery requests in an efficient manner. Accordingly, Plaintiffs will be required to answer this interrogatory.

F. Interrogatory 14.

Interrogatory 14 is as follows: "State whether you contend that point-of-sale systems comprise a relevant antitrust market [*18] in this case, and if so, describe in detail the claims you assert in that market." [42] Plaintiffs objected to this interrogatory as "vague as to the term 'relevant antitrust market in this case.'" [43] Subject to the objection, Plaintiffs answered the interrogatory as follows: "Yes, as Plaintiffs understand the term 'relevant antitrust market in this case.'" [44] In addition, Plaintiffs provided an explanation of the basis for this contention as outlined in the complaint. [45] However, Plaintiffs did not describe any claims they assert in that market.

Pilot Travel argues that "Defendants are entitled to know what claim, if any, is asserted for that market. If no claim is being asserted, Defendants are entitled to know that now so that further discovery and argument are not wasted on diversions." [46] In their response to the motion to compel, Plaintiffs state in a footnote that "the Complaint [*19] does not assert 'claims in that market.'" [47]

As discussed, Plaintiffs have indicated in their response to Interrogatory 14 that they contend that point-of-sale systems constitute a relevant antitrust market. Also, it seems clear from Plaintiffs' memorandum that they do not

---

[38] Plaintiffs' Response at 8-9.

[39] Reply at 6.

[40] Id. at 7.

[41] Id.

[42] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 8.

[43] Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 16.

[44] Id.

[45] Id.

[46] Reply at 8.

[47] Plaintiffs' Response at 6 n.3.

assert any claims in that market. However, the answer to the interrogatory does not make this clear. The court thus concludes that Plaintiffs should supplemental their response to Interrogatory 14 to state unequivocally whether they assert any claims in that market, and if so, to describe them in detail.

G. Failure to Differentiate Between Pilot Travel and Pilot Corp.

Pilot Travel complains that Plaintiffs "generically refer to 'Pilot' without distinguishing between Pilot Travel and Pilot Corp." [48] For example, Interrogatories 4 and 5 ask whether Plaintiffs contend that Pilot Travel and Pilot Corp., respectively, discuss and share information with horizontal competitors. [*20] Plaintiffs responded by referring only to "Pilot" making it impossible for Pilot Travel to determine whether the response was directed at Pilot Travel, Pilot Corp. or both. [49] During the meet and confer process, Plaintiffs explained that their answers described actions by individuals, and Plaintiffs did not know whether those actions were taken on behalf of Pilot Travel, Pilot Corp., or someone else. However, Plaintiffs refused to supplement their responses to provide this clarification even though the interrogatories related to specific companies. [50] Plaintiffs have not addressed this issue in their response to the motion to compel.

The court concludes that Plaintiffs should supplement their responses to distinguish between the two entities as requested by the interrogatories. Where the answer concerns actions by an individual, and Plaintiffs are not sure on which company's behalf [*21] the individual was acting, they should so state in their response.

H. Plaintiffs' Objections to the Instructions and Definitions

Pilot Travel asserts that Plaintiffs improperly objected to virtually every definition and instruction in its First Set of Interrogatories. In particular, they complain about Plaintiffs' objections to (1) the term "describe in detail," (2) the temporal scope of the interrogatories, and (3) the definition of "you," "your," and "plaintiff." [51]

1. Describe in Detail

Pilot Travel asserts that Plaintiffs' objection to this instruction is meritless because a party is required to describe in reasonable detail the factual basis for any contention when asked to do so in an interrogatory. [52] [*22] Pilot Travel requests that the court order Plaintiffs to state the definition of "describe in detail" that they used in their interrogatory responses. [53]

In response, Plaintiffs state that "they did attempt to honor a common sense view of that phrase by providing reasonable detail to explain the facts supporting their contentions." [54] The court takes Plaintiffs at their word that they attempted to provide reasonable detail to explain the facts, as they are required to do, [55] and declines to enter an order requiring Plaintiffs to state a definition of the term at this time.

---

[48] Supporting Memorandum at 8.

[49] Id.; see Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 9-10.

[50] Supporting Memorandum at 8.

[51] Id. at 8-9.

[52] Id. at 9 (citing Cont'l Ill., 136 F.R.D. at 684).

[53] See Pilot Travel's Proposed Order G ranting Motion to Compel, attached to its Motion to Compel.

[54] Plaintiffs' Response at 9.

[55] See Cont'l Ill., 136 F.R.D. at 684.

2. Temporal Scope of Responses

The instructions for Pilot Travel's First Set of Interrogatories requested Plaintiffs to provide information beginning in 1996. [56] Plaintiffs objected to the date "as overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. [*23] " [57] Pilot Travel asserts that this objection is "both surprising and bizarre," since Plaintiffs' complaint refers to events occurring as early as 1985, and appears to allege that the boycott began in 1996. [58] Pilot Travel contends that Plaintiffs' objection should be overruled, and to the extent it is not overruled, Plaintiffs should be required to state the temporal scope of their answers. [59]

In response, Plaintiffs state that all parties in this case have sought at least some information dating back to 1996, and all parties including Pilot Travel have objected to this temporal scope. Plaintiffs also describe their efforts in trying to resolve this issue. [60] Plaintiffs concede that temporal scope "remains an important issue that will need to be clarified in the context of document requests." [61] They assert, however, that temporal scope is not relevant to their [*24] interrogatory responses because they "provided information on their contentions concerning certain subjects rather than an account of particular events occurring at certain dates in the past." [62]

Plaintiffs' interrogatory responses do not deal with events occurring on specific dates. Since Plaintiffs' interrogatory responses are the only discovery requests presently before the court, the court concludes that it is not necessary at this time to enter an order setting the temporal scope of discovery. The court encourages the parties to reach an agreement on this issue.

3. Definition of "you," "your," and "plaintiff."

In their response to Pilot Travel's First Set of Interrogatories, Plaintiffs objected to Pilot Travel's definition of "you," "your," and "plaintiff" in that it required Plaintiffs "to review and provide information from their 'parent, subsidiaries, directors, officers, employees, agents and attorneys. . . .'" [63] Subsequently, [*25] in a December 11, 2006 letter, Plaintiffs stated that they would adopt the definition used by Pilot Travel in its discovery responses. Under this definition, Plaintiffs interpreted the terms as "the named Plaintiffs and their agents and employees acting within the scope of their employment or agency." [64]

In support of its motion to compel, Pilot Travel states that any claim that plaintiffs have adopted a definition based on Pilot Travel's definition of a similar term is disingenuous because Pilot Travel served its responses more than a month after Plaintiffs served their responses. [65] In response, Plaintiffs reaffirm that they already have adopted the definition suggested by Pilot Travel, and confirmed that the definition does not change their answers to Pilot

---

[56] Ex. 1 to Supporting Memorandum at 5.

[57] Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 5.

[58] Supporting Memorandum at 9.

[59] Id. at 10.

[60] Plaintiffs' Response at 9-10.

[61] Id. at 10.

[62] Id.

[63] Ex. 2 to Supporting Memorandum at 3.

[64] Letter dated December 11, 2006 from M ichael Crimmins to John Bogart at 3, attached as Exhibit 4 to Supporting Memorandum.

[65] Supporting Memorandum at xi.

Travel's interrogatories. [66] The court concludes that Plaintiffs have made their [*26] definition of the terms sufficiently clear.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Pilot Travel's Motion to compel [67] is GRANTED IN PART as follows:

Plaintiffs shall provide supplemental responses to Pilot Travel's Interrogatory Nos. 1, 2, and 3 that include detailed statements of facts supporting the allegations of the Complaint that (a) there is a continuing horizontal boycott by TA, Pilot, and Petro Stopping Centers, LP of Flying J, the Trucker Fuel Card of Flying J's subsidiary TCH, and any other Trucker Fuel Card processed by TCH; (b) that Pilot Travel has participated in or taken steps in furtherance of any alleged boycott of TCH; and (c) that Pilot Corporation has participated in or taken [*27] steps in furtherance of any alleged boycott of TCH.

Plaintiffs shall provide supplemental responses to Pilot Travel's Interrogatory Nos. 8 and 9 that state whether Plaintiffs contend that either Pilot Travel or Pilot Corporation have intentionally interfered with Plaintiffs' economic relations other than through the alleged horizontal boycott, that include detailed statements of facts supporting such contentions;

Plaintiffs shall provide a supplemental response to Pilot Travel's Interrogatory No. 13 that includes a detailed statement of any and all theories of damages, the elements of such damages, the amount of damages for each such element, and the method of calculation of such damages;

Plaintiffs' response to Interrogatory 14 indicates that they contend that point-of-sale systems constitute a relevant antitrust market. Plaintiffs shall supplement their response to Interrogatory 14 to state whether they assert any claims in that antitrust market, and if so, to describe them in detail.

For all supplemental responses, including Interrogatories 4 and 5, Plaintiffs shall separately state answers with respect to Pilot Travel and Pilot Corporation, and to the extent Plaintiffs are [*28] unable to do so, Plaintiffs shall so state and provide a detailed explanation of why they are unable to do so.

The motion to compel is DENIED IN PART. Specifically, the court denies the motion as to Interrogatory Nos. 6 and 7, and with regard to the instructions and definitions discussed in Section H of this order. Plaintiffs are not required to provide a supplemental response to Interrogatory Nos. 10, 11, and 12 at this time. If Pilot Travel provides a definition of the term "direct participant," Plaintiffs will be required to supplement their responses.

This Order in no way relieves Plaintiffs of their duty to supplement their answers to discovery materials pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(e).

May 2, 2007.

BY THE COURT:

s/ David Nuffer

U.S. Magistrate Judge

[66] Plaintiffs' Response at 9; Exhibit 4 at 3.

[67] Motion to Compel, docket no. 82, filed February 8, 2007.

Static Control Components, Inc. v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, Central Division

May 2, 2007, Decided ; May 2, 2007, Filed

CONSOLIDATED CIVIL ACTION NOS. 5:02-571 AND 5:04-84

Reporter

487 F. Supp. 2d 861 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32489 ; 2007-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,773

STATIC CONTROL COMPONENTS, INC., Plaintiff/Counterclaim Defendant, v. LEXMARK INTERNATIONAL, INC., Defendant/Counterclaim Plaintiff, v. NER DATA PRODUCTS, INC., ET AL., Counterclaim Defendants.

Subsequent History: As Amended May 3, 2007.

Partial summary judgment denied by Static Control Components, Inc. v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 487 F. Supp. 2d 891, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34224 (E.D. Ky., 2007)

Prior History: Static Control Components, Inc. v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 487 F. Supp. 2d 830, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31445 (E.D. Ky., 2007)

Core Terms

cartridges, Remanufacturers, Prebate, market power, summary judgment, antitrust, recycling, customers, patent, anticompetitive, Sherman Act, Lanham Act, deceptive, printer, toner, monopoly power, environmental, single-use, Repair, argues, label, attach, prices, restraint of trade, manufacturer, literally, rule of reason, consumers, antitrust violation, monopolization

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) provides that judgment for the moving party is appropriate when the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. While all inferences are drawn in favor of the non-moving party, that party still must present some affirmative evidence supporting its position to defeat an otherwise appropriate motion for summary judgment. Stated alternatively, the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

There is no special burden placed on an antitrust plaintiff at the summary judgment stage. In the context of antitrust, just as in all cases, the non-movant's version of any issue of fact is presumed correct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN3[] Sherman Act, Scope

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides, in pertinent part: every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN4[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Scope

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Patent Law > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Asserted tensions between the antitrust and patent laws have been the subject of extensive commentary. In the case of patent antitrust cases, it is possible for manufacturers to draft specific patent license terms so as to insure the cooperation of licensees in effecting anticompetitive ends.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN7[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market, and it entails the ability of one seller to restrict output or raise prices. In order for a Sherman Act claim to lie against a defendant, there must be a finding of market power. Determining market power is critical to the court's inquiry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN8[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

In order for a plaintiff to succeed on a Kodak-type theory--that a lack of market power in the equipment market does not necessarily preclude market power sufficient for a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim--there must be some evidence that the defendant has changed its policy after locking-in customers and that the defendant has not been otherwise forthcoming about its pricing structure and service policies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN9[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

There are two standards for determining whether actions violate 15 U.S.C.S. § 1: (1) per se violations and (2) violations subject to the rule of reason. Per se violations do not require a finding that the defendant's actions were anticompetitive, but they do require the plaintiff to show that the defendant possesses market power or unique access to a business element necessary for effective competition. If the facts do not sustain a finding of a per se violation, the court will apply the rule of reason approach. There is an automatic presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard. A rule of reason analysis involves, inter alia, a study of consequences of the conduct on the affected market before imposition of antitrust sanctions. While the rule of reason and per se analysis have merged over time, courts still tend to separate the two.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Typically, per se violations are seen within the context of a boycott of supplies or customers. The per se rule should be applied only in clear cut cases of trade restraints that are so unreasonably anticompetitive that they present straightforward questions for reviewing courts. A refusal to deal may qualify as a per se restraint, by the mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN11[] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

A per se tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. In a tying claim, a party is able to exclude competitors from a market because of its power or leverage in another market. at 6. In order to present a per se tying claim, a seller must possess substantial market power in the tying product market. If there is appreciable power in the tying market, then a court must determine whether the defendant's conduct is procompetitive or anticompetitive. Determining whether a party's actions have an anticompetitive effect requires use of the Sixth Circuit's three step analysis: (1) the seller must have power in the tying product market; (2) there must be a substantial threat that the tying seller will acquire market power in the tied-product market; and (3) there must be a coherent economic basis for treating the tying and tied products as distinct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

When looking to whether a contract in restraint of trade is anticompetitive under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the key issue is whether that contract addresses a horizontal or vertical market. Horizontal conspiracies are agreements among competitors at the same level of market structure to stifle trade, such as agreements among manufacturers or among distributors to fix prices for a given product. Vertical conspiracies are agreements among actors at different levels of market structure to restrain trade, such as agreements between a manufacturer and its distributors to exclude another distributor from a given product and geographic market. While horizontal restrains of trade fall under per se analysis, a vertical restrain will be analyzed pursuant to the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN13[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

When applying the rule of reason, an agreement limiting consumer choice by impeding the ordinary give and take of the market place cannot be sustained. The general test for whether there is an antitrust violation under the rule of reason is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN14[] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

In order to prevail on a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim, defendant must demonstrate (1) the possession of monopoly power in a relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition, maintenance, or use of that power by anti-competitive means as opposed to growth or development resulting from a superior product, business acumen, or historical. accident. Section 2 claims are examined under a fact specific analysis, and in proving its claim, a plaintiff must first define the relevant product and geographic markets in which it competes with the alleged monopolizer, and with respect to the monopolization claim, to show that the defendant, in fact, possesses monopoly power. To establish the offense of monopolization a plaintiff must demonstrate that a defendant either unfairly attained or maintained monopoly power. To have monopoly power, a defendant must have the power to control prices or exclude competition. When a competitor, with a dangerous probability of success, engages in anti-competitive practices the specific design of which are, to build a monopoly or exclude or destroy competition, there is an attempted monopolization. Section 2 monopoly power requires something greater than market power under § 1. the standard for monopoly power is, in fact, very high, and is typically defined by the market share.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN15[] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

While market share might, in many instances, lead to an inference of monopoly power, it is not, in and of itself, the only factor to consider. Within the context of an aftermarket monopolization, there are special factors to consider. When there is an allegation of aftermarket monopolization, the analysis is more complex, because market share data standing alone is not necessarily a reliable proxy for monopoly power. It is to be expected that a company will supply a large percentage of its aftermarket parts and services. It is only when there are significant information and switching costs, that the link between the primary market-and the aftermarket is severed for monopolization purposes. In sum, only a careful factual analysis of the market in question will reveal whether monopoly power, in fact, exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act addresses the legality of exclusive dealing contracts. An exclusive dealing contract is formed when a good is sold on the condition that the buyer not deal with competitors of the seller. 15 U.S.C.S. § 14. In order to be an illegal exclusive dealing contract, a court must engage in a three-part inquiry. First, a court must determine line of commerce, i.e. the type of goods that are involved. Second, the court must determine that there is a relationship between the anti-competitive actions and the market. Third, the competition foreclosed by the contract must be found to constitute a substantial share of the relevant market. Under the Clayton Act, the relevant market is the prime factor in relation to which the ultimate question, whether the contract forecloses competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce involved, must be decided. Clayton Act claims are generally analyzed in conjunction with a Sherman Act §1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, discussion, and the same facts are relevant to a market power determination under both statutes.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN17[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

The court, in determining whether an issue may properly be considered at the summary judgment stage, must rely on actual evidence. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. Arguments requiring a court's speculation, and going well beyond the submitted evidence, are insufficient means for granting summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > False Designation of Origin

HN18[] Likelihood of Confusion, False Designation of Origin

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Initial Burden of Persuasion

HN19[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

In order to prove liability for false advertising under the Lanham Act, a plaintiff must satisfy the follow five-element test: 1) the defendant has made false or misleading statements of fact concerning his own product or another's; 2) the statement actually deceives or tends to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; 3) the statement is material in that it will likely influence a deceived consumers' purchasing decisions; 4) the advertisements were introduced into interstate commerce; 5) there is some causal link between the challenged statements and harm to the plaintiff. A plaintiff seeking monetary damages must either show that a statement is literally false or that it is true yet misleading or confusing. For literally false statements, no evidence that consumers were mislead is necessary for recovery, i.e., there is a presumption of actual deception. The initial determination concerning whether a statement is ambiguous is a matter of law, while the determination as to whether facts exist so as to justify the statement is a question of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

HN20[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

Where statements are literally true, yet deceptive, or too ambiguous to support a finding of literal falsity, a violation can only be established by proof of actual deception. For deceptive statements, a plaintiff cannot obtain monetary relief by arguing how consumers would react; it must show how consumers actually do react. If seeking monetary relief, there must be evidence from which a jury could determine that a substantial portion of the audience was deceived in order to support a determination that the statement has a tendency to deceive. Concern or confusion of the audience does not amount to deception. While common sense and personal experience serve as useful aids for the deception determination, they are not substitutes for other, harder evidence, such as consumer surveys.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > General Overview

HN21[] Civil Procedure, Remedies

A court cannot require disgorgement unless there is some proof that plaintiff lost sales or profits, or that defendant gained them, the principles of equity do not warrant an award of defendant's profits.

Counsel: [1] For Lexmark International, Inc. (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Plaintiff: Binal J. Patel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher J. Renk, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jason S. Shull, LEAD ATTORNEY, Timothy C. Meece, LEAD ATTORNEY, Banner & Witcoff, Ltd. - IL, Chicago, IL; Charles E. Shivel, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Hanly A. Ingram, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steven Brian Loy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stoll Keenon Ogden, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY; David A. Shirlen, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Morrow, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark N. Poovey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice PLLC - NC, Winston-Salem, NC; Joseph M. Potenza, LEAD ATTORNEY, Banner & Witcoff, LTD - DC, Washington, DC US; William L. Montague, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Dinsmore & Shohl LLP - Lexington, Lexington, KY.

For Static Control Components, Inc. (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Defendant: Ann M. Brose, LEAD ATTORNEY, John R. Fuisz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Melise R. Blakeslee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stefan M. Meisner, LEAD ATTORNEY, William H. Barrett, LEAD ATTORNEY, McDermott, Will & Emery - Washington, Washington, DC; Matthew F. Weil, LEAD ATTORNEY, McDermott, Will & Emery, Irvine, CA; Mickey T. Webster, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steven L. Snyder, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Craig Robertson, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, William [2] H. Hollander, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wyatt, Tarrant & Combs LLP - Lexington, Lexington, KY; Seth D. Greenstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Constantine Cannon, PC, Washington, DC US.

Bernt W. von Grabe (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus, Pro se, Fort Orange, FL.

Computer & Communications Industry Association (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus, Pro se, Washington, DC.

International Imaging Technology Council (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus, Pro se, Las Vegas, NV.

Amici Law Professors (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus, Pro se, Washington, DC.

For Automotive Parts Rebuilders Association (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus: Michael J. Conlon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Conlon, Frantz, Phelan, Pires LLP, Washington, DC.

Grassroots Recycling Network (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus, Pro se, Madison, WI.

Silicon Valley Toxics Coalition (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus, Pro se, San Jose, CA.

Basel Action Network (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus, Pro se, Seattle, WA.

For Automotive Aftermarket Industry Association (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Amicus: George W. Keeley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Keeley, Kuenn & Reid, Automotive Aftermarket Industry, Chicago, IL.

For Static Control Components, Inc. (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Counter Claimant, [3] Counter Defendant: Mickey T. Webster, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wyatt, Tarrant & Combs LLP - Lexington, Lexington, KY.

For Lexmark International, Inc. (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Counter Defendant: David A. Shirlen, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Morrow, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark N. Poovey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice PLLC - NC, Winston-Salem, NC; Charles E. Shivel, Jr., Stoll Keenon Ogden, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY.

For Lexmark International, Inc. (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Counter Claimant: David A. Shirlen, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Morrow, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark N. Poovey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice PLLC - NC, Winston-Salem, NC; Hanly A. Ingram, Stoll Keenon Ogden, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY.

For Pendl Companies, Inc. (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Counter Defendant: Daniel E. Danford, LEAD ATTORNEY, Elizabeth L. Thompson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jack A. Wheat, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joel T. Beres, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stites & Harbison, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY.

For Wazana Brothers International, Inc., d/b/a Micro Solutions Enterprises (5:02-cv-00571-GFVT), Counter Defendant: A. Steven Dotan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Darren S. Enenstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Richardson & Patel [4] LLP, Los Angeles, CA US; Andrew D. DeSimone, LEAD ATTORNEY, Douglas L. McSwain, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sturgill, Turner, Barker & Moloney PLLC, Lexington, KY; Ira M. Siegel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Blakely, Sokoloff, Taylor & Zafman, Los Angeles, CA; James M. Gilbert, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey R. Glassman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kimberly D. Lewis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steven E. Moyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Moldo Davidson Fraioli Seror & Sestanovich, LLP - LA, Los Angeles, CA.

For Static Control Components, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Plaintiff: Allison W. Freedman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher D. Landgraff, LEAD ATTORNEY, James B. Heaton, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP - Chicago, Chicago, IL; Jennifer E. Heisinger, LEAD ATTORNEY, John M. Hughes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph C. Smith, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP - Denver, Denver, CO; John J. Dabney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Melise R. Blakeslee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul E. Poirot, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stefan M. Meisner, LEAD ATTORNEY, William H. Barrett, LEAD ATTORNEY, McDermott, Will & Emery - Washington, Washington, DC; Kevin M. Bolan, LEAD ATTORNEY, McDermott, Will & Emery - Boston, Boston, MA; Mickey T. Webster, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. [5] Craig Robertson, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sharon L. Gold, Wyatt, Tarrant & Combs LLP -Lexington, Lexington, KY; Seth D. Greenstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Constantine Cannon, PC, Washington, DC US; Stanley L. Amberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chappaqua, NY; William L. London, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Static Control Components, Sanford, NC.

For Lexmark International, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Defendant: Allen E. Hoover, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bradley Rademaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark T. Banner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew P. Becker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael L. Krashin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert H. Resis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Binal J. Patel, Christopher J. Renk, Jason S. Shull, Timothy C. Meece, Banner & Witcoff, Ltd. - IL, Chicago, IL; Christopher B. Roth, LEAD ATTORNEY, Frederic M. Meeker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert F. Altherr, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph M. Potenza, Banner & Witcoff, LTD - DC, Washington, DC US; Hada V. Haulsee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jason C. Hicks, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark N. Poovey, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Andrew Copenhaver, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice, PLLC - NC, Winston-Salem, NC; Adrian M. Mendiondo, Charles E. Shivel, Jr., Hanly A. Ingram, Steven Brian Loy, Stoll Keenon Ogden, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY.

For [6] Quality Manufacturing Company, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Respondent: John H. Rompf, LEAD ATTORNEY, Nanci Marian House, LEAD ATTORNEY, White, McCann & Stewart, Winchester, KY.

For NER Data Products, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Cross Claimant, Counter Claimant: Jay Edward Ingle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jackson & Kelly PLLC - LEXINGTON, Lexington, KY; Martin J. O'Donnell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael R. Reinemann, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thomas C. O'Konski, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cesari & McKenna, LLP, Boston, MA.

For American Family Mutual Insurance Company (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Intervenor: Amy E. Wochos, LEAD ATTORNEY, Terry J. Booth, LEAD ATTORNEY, Piper & Schmidt, Milwaukee, WI US.

For Lexmark International, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Claimant: Adrian M. Mendiondo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Charles E. Shivel, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Hanly A. Ingram, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steven Brian Loy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stoll Keenon Ogden, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY; Allen E. Hoover, LEAD ATTORNEY, Binal J. Patel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bradley Rademaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher J. Renk, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jason S. Shull, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark T. Banner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew P. Becker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael L. Krashin, LEAD ATTORNEY, [7] Robert H. Resis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Timothy C. Meece, LEAD ATTORNEY, Banner & Witcoff, Ltd. - IL, Chicago, IL; Christopher B. Roth, LEAD ATTORNEY, Frederic M. Meeker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph M. Potenza, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert F. Altherr, LEAD ATTORNEY, Banner & Witcoff, LTD - DC, Washington, DC US; Hada V. Haulsee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jason C. Hicks, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Andrew Copenhaver, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice, PLLC - NC, Winston-Salem, NC.

For NER Data Products, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Defendant: Andrew C. Oatway, LEAD ATTORNEY, Morisi & Oatway, Quincy, MA; Jay Edward Ingle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jackson & Kelly PLLC - LEXINGTON, Lexington, KY; Martin J. O'Donnell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael R. Reinemann, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thomas C. O'Konski, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cesari & McKenna, LLP, Boston, MA.

For Static Control Components, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Defendant: Alison G. Wheeler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP, Denver, CO US; Allison W. Freedman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher D. Landgraff, LEAD ATTORNEY, James B. Heaton, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP - Chicago, Chicago, IL; Jennifer E. Heisinger, LEAD [8] ATTORNEY, John M. Hughes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph C. Smith, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP - Denver, Denver, CO; John J. Dabney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul E. Poirot, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stefan M. Meisner, William H. Barrett, McDermott, Will & Emery - Washington, Washington, DC; Kevin M. Bolan, LEAD ATTORNEY, McDermott, Will & Emery - Boston, Boston, MA; Mickey T. Webster, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sharon L. Gold, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Craig Robertson, III, Wyatt, Tarrant & Combs LLP - Lexington, Lexington, KY; Stanley L. Amberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chappaqua, NY; William L. London, III, Static Control Components, Sanford, NC; Seth D. Greenstein, Constantine Cannon, PC, Washington, DC US.

For Lexmark International, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Claimant, Counter Defendant: Adrian M. Mendiondo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Charles E. Shivel, Jr., Hanly A. Ingram, Steven Brian Loy, Stoll Keenon Ogden, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY; Allen E. Hoover, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bradley Rademaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark T. Banner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew P. Becker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael L. Krashin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert H. Resis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Binal J. Patel, Christopher J. Renk, Jason S. Shull, Timothy C. [9] Meece, Banner & Witcoff, Ltd. - IL, Chicago, IL; Christopher B. Roth, LEAD ATTORNEY, Frederic M. Meeker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert F. Altherr, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph M. Potenza, Banner & Witcoff, LTD - DC, Washington, DC US; Hada V. Haulsee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jason C. Hicks, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Andrew Copenhaver, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice, PLLC - NC, Winston-Salem, NC.

For Static Control Components, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Defendant, Cross Defendant: Alison G. Wheeler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP, Denver, CO US; Allison W. Freedman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher D. Landgraff, LEAD ATTORNEY, James B. Heaton, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP - Chicago, Chicago, IL; Jennifer E. Heisinger, LEAD ATTORNEY, John M. Hughes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph C. Smith, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, LLP - Denver, Denver, CO; John J. Dabney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul E. Poirot, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stefan M. Meisner, William H. Barrett, McDermott, Will & Emery - Washington, Washington, DC; Kevin M. Bolan, LEAD ATTORNEY, McDermott, Will & Emery - Boston, Boston, MA; Sharon L. Gold, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mickey T. [10] Webster, W. Craig Robertson, III, Wyatt, Tarrant & Combs LLP - Lexington, Lexington, KY; Stanley L. Amberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chappaqua, NY; Seth D. Greenstein, Constantine Cannon, PC, Washington, DC US; William L. London, III, Static Control Components, Sanford, NC.

For Pendl Companies, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Defendant: Alexandra MacKay, LEAD ATTORNEY, James R. Michels, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stites & Harbison, PLLC - Nashville, Nashville, TN US; Carol Dan Browning, LEAD ATTORNEY, Daniel E. Danford, LEAD ATTORNEY, Elizabeth L. Thompson, LEAD ATTORNEY, John M. Famularo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stites & Harbison PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY; David H. Weber, LEAD ATTORNEY, Liebman, Conway, Olejniczak & Jerry, S.C., Green Bay, WI US; Jack A. Wheat, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey A. Haeberlin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jennifer L. Kovalcik, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joel T. Beres, LEAD ATTORNEY, John A. Jeziorski, LEAD ATTORNEY, John William Scruton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Julie Marie McDonnell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew A. Gillies, LEAD ATTORNEY, William Charles Ferrell, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Stites & Harbison, PLLC - Louisville, Louisville, KY; Michael Peter Foley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rendigs, Fry, Kiely & Dennis, LLP, Cincinnati, [11] OH.

For Wazana Brothers International, Inc., doing business as Micro Solutions Enterprises (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Defendant: A. Steven Dotan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Darren S. Enenstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Geronimo Perez, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Ned Gelhaar, LEAD ATTORNEY, O. Andrew Wheaton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Richardson & Patel LLP, Los Angeles, CA US; Andrew D. DeSimone, LEAD ATTORNEY, Douglas L. McSwain, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sturgill, Turner, Barker & Moloney, PLLC, Lexington, KY; Elizabeth L. Swanson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Swanson & Associates, Beverly Hills, CA US.

For Wazana Brothers International, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Claimant: A. Steven Dotan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Geronimo Perez, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Ned Gelhaar, LEAD ATTORNEY, O. Andrew Wheaton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Darren S. Enenstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Richardson & Patel LLP, Los Angeles, CA US; Elizabeth L. Swanson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Swanson & Associates, Beverly Hills, CA US.

For Pendl Companies, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Claimant: Alexandra MacKay, LEAD ATTORNEY, James R. Michels, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stites & Harbison, PLLC - Nashville, Nashville, TN US; Carol Dan Browning, LEAD ATTORNEY, John M. Famularo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stites & [12] Harbison PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY; David H. Weber, LEAD ATTORNEY, Liebman, Conway, Olejniczak & Jerry, S.C., Green Bay, WI US; Jeffrey A. Haeberlin, LEAD ATTORNEY, John A. Jeziorski, LEAD ATTORNEY, John William Scruton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Julie Marie McDonnell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew A. Gillies, LEAD ATTORNEY, William Charles Ferrell, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Joel T. Beres, Stites & Harbison, PLLC -Louisville, Louisville, KY; Michael Peter Foley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rendigs, Fry, Kiely & Dennis, LLP, Cincinnati, OH.

For Lexmark International, Inc. (5:04-cv-00084-GFVT), Counter Defendant: Adrian M. Mendiondo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Charles E. Shivel, Jr., Hanly A. Ingram, Steven Brian Loy, Stoll Keenon Ogden, PLLC - Lexington, Lexington, KY; Allen E. Hoover, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bradley Rademaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark T. Banner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew P. Becker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael L. Krashin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert H. Resis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Binal J. Patel, Christopher J. Renk, Jason S. Shull, Timothy C. Meece, Banner & Witcoff, Ltd. - IL, Chicago, IL; Christopher B. Roth, LEAD ATTORNEY, Frederic M. Meeker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert F. Altherr, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph M. Potenza, Banner & Witcoff, LTD - [13] DC, Washington, DC US; Hada V. Haulsee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jason C. Hicks, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Andrew Copenhaver, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark N. Poovey, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice, PLLC - NC, Winston-Salem, NC.

Judges: Gregory F. Van Tatenhove, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Gregory F. Van Tatenhove

Opinion

[*869] AMENDED MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Court on Lexmark International, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment on the Remanufacturers' Claims of affirmative antitrust and Lanham Act violations. [R. 529]. Also before the Court is Wazana Brothers International, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment on three of its Lanham Act claims. [R. 534].

Lexmark's Motion must be largely denied. It is granted only to the extent that the Remanufacturers have failed to produce sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could find that certain distribution contracts at issue are horizontal, per se restraints on trade and on the issue of the per se tying claim. Wazana's Motion is granted only to the extent that the Court holds that, as a matter of law, the allegedly false or deceptive statements at issue are not ambiguous. The remainder of Wazana's Motion must be denied since [14] Lexmark has presented sufficient facts from which a reasonable jury could find that the statements were not false or deceptive.

I.

BACKGROUND

A. FACTS

Defendant, Lexmark International, Inc. ("Lexmark"), is a manufacturer of laser printers. [R. 531 at 1]. It controls approximately 10%-15% of the national and international laser printer market, whereas its largest competitor, Hewlett-Packard ("HP") controls between 50%-75% of the national and international markets. [Id.]. In addition to being in the laser printer business, Lexmark also manufactures and sells the toner cartridges for its printers. Sometimes these toner cartridges are sold under Lexmark labels. [Id.]. Other times, Lexmark sells its cartridges to resellers, and the cartridges are sold under those companies' labels. [R. 540, attach. A; R. 680 at 14 n.21; R. 678, attachs. 22-27]. One of these resale agreements is with IBM, under which IBM and Lexmark entered into "a multinational procurement relationship under which Lead Buyer[, IBM,] and its Affiliates may purchase or license from Lead Supplier[, Lexmark]." [R. 540, attach. A at 3]. The procurement contract was not limited [15] simply to the cartridges, but also includes equipment. [Id.]. Under the IBM-Lexmark contract, if IBM, while selling Lexmark products, sold compatible cartridges or re-fill cartridge kits, IBM would face contractual penalties. [R. 540, attach. A, (First) Amendment 003 To the Statement of Work under Transaction Attachment # 4997S23861 at P 4.3; [*870] Id. at Amendment 006 To the Statement of Work under Transaction Attachment # 4997S23861 at P 4.2].

Lexmark is not only engaged in the sale, either directly or through resellers, of Lexmark equipment and toner cartridges, but Lexmark also sells remanufactured toner cartridges. [R. 531 at 1-2]. Lexmark's only competition for the sale of printer cartridges is in this remanufacturing market. [R. 628 at 2-3]. An industry has been built up around this remanufacturing process in which remanufacturers purchase parts from a supplier, take used toner cartridges, repair them, refill the toner, and resell the cartridges to end-user consumers. [Id.]. The Plaintiff, Static Control Components, Inc. ("SCC"), is "a leading supplier to toner cartridge remanufacturers." [R. 172 at 16, Case No. 5:02-571]. The Counterclaim Defendants, [16] Pendl Companies, Inc. ("Pendl"), and Wazana Brothers International, Inc. ("Wazana"), are toner cartridge remanufacturers (collectively "Remanufacturers"). [R. 628 at 2-3].

Lexmark runs what it at one time called the "Prebate Program" and what now is referred to as the "Lexmark Return Program." [R. 594 at 3 n.4]. The program began with the new 1997 printer models [R. 593 at 1-2], and in that program, Lexmark's customers buy printer cartridges at an up-front discount in exchange for the customer agreeing to use the cartridge only once and then returning the empty cartridge only to Lexmark. [R. 594 at 3 n.4]. According to Lexmark, Lexmark offers "'[r]egular' toner cartridge[s] for those customers who do not choose the Prebate/Cartridge Return Program toner cartridge[s] with [their] terms." [R. 2 at 8]. Therefore, "Prebate" is temporally the reverse of a rebate. Roughly 90% of Lexmark's new cartridges are "Prebate cartridges" and 10% are non-prebate or "Regular cartridges." [R. 520 at 7].

When Lexmark sells a cartridge subject to Prebate, it labels the package as follows: [1]

RETURN EMPTY CARTRIDGE TO LEXMARK FOR REMANUFACTURING AND RECYCLING

---

[1] Lexmark has not always used this exact wording but has used a close estimation of it. [See, R. 573 at 3].

> Please read before [17] opening. Opening this package or using the patented cartridge inside confirms your acceptance of the following license agreement: This patented Return Program cartridge is sold at a special price subject to a restriction that it may be used only once. Following this initial use, you agree to return the empty cartridge only to Lexmark for remanufacturing and recycling. If you don't accept these terms, return the unopened package to your point of purchase. A regular price cartridge without these terms is available.

[R. 531 at 2]. According to Lexmark, the Prebate program is further explained in the cartridge's packaging materials, and "if the customer does not agree to these terms, a regular price cartridge with no restrictions is available." [Id.]. However, there is evidence that Lexmark does not make regularly priced cartridges available for at least five of its cartridge models. [R. 534 at 9-10]. Because of the Prebate program, Lexmark has been able to achieve a 90% loyalty among toner cartridge customers, i.e. 90% of customers purchase Lexmark manufactured or remanufactured cartridges. [R. 628 at 4]. Prior to Prebate, Lexmark only had a 60% loyalty among cartridge [18] purchasers. [Id.]. Lexmark's remanufactured cartridges, [*871] which sell for $ 41.00, are $ 10 more than the Defendants' remanufactured cartridges, which sell for $ 31.00. [Id. at 10]. The Remanufacturers contend that the Prebate program has resulted in an increase in the remanufactured toner cartridge price. [Id.]. This increase is due to the share of the market that Lexmark has been able to take from the Remanufacturers. [Id.]. This increase allegedly represents approximately 7% of the Lexmark toner cartridge market. [Id.].

Under the Prebate program, customers have three options for their empty cartridges: keep them, throw them in the trash, or return them to Lexmark. According to the Remanufacturers, though contested by Lexmark, in order to ensure that customers do not resell the cartridges, Lexmark has installed a "lock-out" microchip on its cartridges. [R. 628 at 4]. [19] The alleged "lock-out" microchip prevents the toner from properly putting toner on the paper. [See R. 831]. The Remanufacturers present evidence that Lexmark included this microchip on both its Prebate and Non-Prebate labels, and the true purpose of installing the microchip on all of the printers was to "reduce manufacturing." [R. 628 at 4]. The microchips are not sold separately from the cartridges, and thus remanufacturing of used cartridges containing a lock-out microchip is theoretically foreclosed. [Id.]. SCC, however, has been able to create a microchip that enables the Remanufacturers to continue to remanufacture the cartridges. [Id. at 12].

As a result of the Prebate program, Lexmark, over time, accumulated a large number of empty cartridges. [Id. at 6]. Lexmark does not remanufacture all of these cartridges [id.], and due to cost concerns, when it does remanufacture the cartridges, it does not remanufacture all of the parts. [R. 534 at 9]. Hundreds of thousands of cartridges have been and continue to be incinerated, [R. 628 at 6], and the ash from these cartridges goes to a landfill. [R. 534 at 7]. Incineration is sometimes called [20] "thermally recycling." [R. 628 at 6]. Lexmark's prebate cartridge boxes contain the following label concerning Lexmark's "Environmental Program": "We manage resources today to ensure a beautiful tomorrow. Small steps can have big rewards. Thank you for your ongoing support, together we have recycled millions of toner cartridges, one cartridge at a time. See details inside about how you can continue to participate in this important environmental initiative." [R. 534 at 4].

Consumers who look to Lexmark's website for information concerning the prebate or environmental programs are informed that "Return Prebate cartridges are a great choice for the environment." [Id. at 2]. They can also read that "Lexmark Return Prebate Program Cartridges are sold at a discount in exchange for the customer's agreement to use the cartridge only once and return it only to Lexmark for remanufacturing or recycling" and that "Lexmark recycles Return Program Cartridges, keeping them out of the waste stream." [Id. at. 5]. A question and answer section on Lexmark's website gives the following exchange: "Q. What happens to the empties I return? A. Lexmark remanufacturers and/or recycles the cartridges. [21] " [Id.].

Lexmark's market research examined the effects of this label language. [R. 622, attach. B]. Lexmark's survey included "managers who are involved in making the laser printer purchase decision," and "[p]articipants responsible for 20+ printers in the organization." [Id. at 7]. These participants were not only the people responsible for the purchase of the printers, but were also, primarily, the people responsible for physically replacing used cartridges with new or repaired cartridges. [Id. at 17-18]. When asked about the [*872] "environmentally friendly message" of the prebate program, the responses included the following:

> The manufacturer may not dispose of the cartridge, but do something with it to have recycling.
> I think you want to know that things are disposed of in an environmentally friendly way.

> …
>
> It makes everybody look good because they are recycling. The green environmental label gives you a better conscience.
>
> …
>
> You want it to be green. You don't want this stuff out in the street. You want it to be recycled; you want it to be treated properly.

[Id. at 15]. When asked about their concerns regarding the prebate label, [22] one participant replied: "It's not readily apparent that this box is to return the cartridge. The label is missing the whole point that the program is a simple/convenient way to use the box to recycle." [Id. at 21]. When the focus groups were pushed to create their own names for the prebate program, the names suggested included "HP's Recycle Program," [2] "Save the Toner Tree," "Responsible Use of Resources," "Environmental Express (so that people get the impression that it speeds up the process)," "Different Users for the Sake of the Environment," "Envirosave," "Save $ and the Environment," and "Stewardship of Resources." [Id. at 25].

B. RELEVANT PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The lead case in this action was brought by SCC. [R. 1]. SCC seeks declaratory relief against Lexmark on various [23] issues related to the toner cartridges. [Id.]. Lexmark filed its current Second Amended Counterclaim on November 8, 2004, in which it asserted counterclaims against the Remanufacturers. [R. 67]. Lexmark makes allegations of patent violations, which are predicated on the Prebate Program. [Id.; see also R. 1008 (explaining in detail the patent and prebate claims)]. Lexmark's counterclaims also accuse the counterclaim-defendants, SCC and the Remanufacturers, of interfering with Lexmark's business and contractual relations and conspiring to do the same, presumably by causing end users of Lexmark's cartridges to breach the Prebate agreement by sending spent cartridges to entities other than Lexmark. [R. 67]. Since filing its counterclaim, these state law claims have been dismissed. [R. 1020 (granting Lexmark's Motion to Dismiss its state law claims)].

Wazana asserted several of its own counterclaims against Lexmark, including violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, which it states is "a [c]ontract, [c]ombination or [c]onspiracy in [r]estraint of [t]rade," [R. 175 at 54]; violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, which is described as an "[a]ttempted [24] [m]onopolization and [m]onopolization," [id. at 55]; violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act, which is an exclusive dealing contract lessening competition, [id. at 57]; and, violations of section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, which Wazana label's as "[f]alse [a]dvertising, [p]roduct [l]ibel, and [u]nfair [c]ompetition," [id. at 58]. Pendl has asserted the same counterclaims under the Sherman Act, sections 1 and 2, [R. 144 at 19, 22], and the Clayton Act, section 3 [id. at 23], but it has not asserted the Lanham Act claims.

[*873] II.

DISCUSSION

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) provides that judgment for the moving party is appropriate when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." See also Browning v. Dep't of Army, 436 F.3d 692, 695 (6th Cir. 2006). While all inferences are drawn in favor of the non-moving party, that party still must [25] present some affirmative evidence supporting its position to defeat an otherwise appropriate motion for summary judgment. See id.; see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (non-movant must "do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts") (citations omitted); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324-325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). Stated alternatively, "[t]he mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

---

[2] The focus group was never told which printer cartridge company sponsored the focus group. Many of them assumed that HP was sponsoring the group, and they were never informed otherwise. [R. 622, attach. B at 6].

HN2[] There is no special burden placed on an antitrust plaintiff at the summary judgment stage. PSI Repair Servs., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811, 814 (6th Cir. 1997). In the context of antitrust, just as in all cases, the non-movant's "version of any issue of fact … is presumed correct …." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 456, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992).

B. ANTITRUST CLAIMS

1. Relevant Antitrust [26] *Law

Wazana and Pendl have asserted three separate, statutory antitrust claims against Lexmark. The first of these, HN3[] Sherman Act section 1, provides, in pertinent part: "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

The second claim asserted is a violation of HN4[] Sherman Act section 2, which makes it unlawful to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations …." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Finally, Pendl and Wazana argue that Lexmark has violated section 3 of the Clayton Act:

> HN5[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession [27] or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen [*874] competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

15 U.S.C. § 14.

In addition to meeting the various tests for recovery under these three statutory schemes, an antitrust plaintiff must also prove antitrust injury. Valley Prods. Co. v. Landmark, a Div. of Hospitality Franchise Sys., Inc., 128 F.3d 398, 402 (6th Cir. 1997). Proving antitrust injury simply requires a plaintiff to prove that the defendant's conduct causes the type of market-based injury that antitrust laws are designed to prevent. Id.

2. Specific Claims Asserted

Lexmark makes three arguments supporting summary judgment on the claims made [28] under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. First, Lexmark argues that its patents render prebate valid as a matter of law, and even if not valid, any misuse was in good faith and precludes a finding of anticompetitive behavior. [See R. 531]. It next argues that, in light of little evidence of market imperfections and information costs, the lack of a "lock-in," low switching costs, an inability to exploit ignorant customers, and an inability to charge supracompetitive prices, there is insufficient evidence for finding that Lexmark possesses market power. [Id.]. Finally, Lexmark argues that the alleged antitrust violation cannot be traced to an antitrust injury. [Id.].

The Court, taking these arguments in turn, will first turn to what effect, if any, Lexmark's patent rights have on the antitrust claims. Second, the Court must determine whether there has been a sufficient showing of market power under each of the antitrust statutes. Third, the Court will examine whether, assuming that there is an antitrust violation, there are sufficient facts from which a jury could conclude that there is an antitrust injury.

In addressing these arguments, the Court notes that the [29] Remanufacturers have taken the position that Lexmark's Motion addresses only Sherman Act section 2 claims. [R. 628 at 16 n.29]. The Court disagrees. Market power and antitrust injury are critical to all of the Remanufacturers' antitrust claims, and this issue was extensively briefed by Lexmark. Furthermore, the Court notes that the Remanufacturers stated that they would seek leave to file an additional response if it was clear in Lexmark's Reply that Lexmark was seeking summary judgment on all antitrust claims. It was clear, [R. 680 at 13 ("IV. The Remanufacturers Do Not State Any Section 1 Claims.")], and Pendl did not move to file an additional response.

Lexmark's Motion, therefore, will be construed to encompass exactly what the Court has understood it to include--any and all antitrust allegations. To the extent that there may be discrete points relevant to a Section 1 inquiry and those points were briefed by Lexmark, those arguments are refined within the applicable section.

3. Effect of Patent Validity on Antitrust Claims

HN6[] "Asserted 'tensions' between the antitrust and patent laws have been the subject of extensive commentary." Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700, 706 n. 5 (Fed. Cir. 1992) [30] (citations omitted). In the case of patent antitrust cases, "it is possible for manufacturers to draft specific patent license terms so as to insure the cooperation of licensees in effecting anticompetitive ends." Moraine Prods. v. ICI Am., Inc., 538 F.2d 134, 144 (7th Cir. 1976). Cf.Lexmark Int'l v. Static Control Components, Inc., 387 F.3d 522, 551 (6th Cir. 2004) (Merritt, J., concurring) ("We should make clear that in the future companies like Lexmark cannot use the DMCA in conjunction with copyright law to create [*875] monopolies of manufactured goods for themselves just by tweaking the facts of this case ….").

Lexmark argues that the Remanufacturers' antitrust claims fall within the line of case law explaining and ruling on this very tension. [3] Specifically, Lexmark maintains that 35 U.S.C. § 271(d) protects it from antitrust liability. [R. 531 at 13-14 (citing, among others, Axis v. Micafil, Inc., 870 F.2d 1105, 1111 (6th Cir. 1989)], for the proposition that "a lawfully acquired patent creates a monopoly that does not violate the antitrust laws," and Mallinckrodt, Inc., 976 F.2d 700 [31] for the holding that a post-sale "single-use" restriction on reuse of a patented medical device to be lawful under patent law). To the extent that Lexmark argues that it cannot be held liable for any antitrust liability because it refuses to license its otherwise valid patents, its argument must fail. Holding valid patents might make it more difficult to act in an anticompetitive manner, but it does not, conversely, necessarily preclude an antitrust violation or prevent a finding of anticompetitive behavior. Moraine Prods., 538 F.2d at 144. Lexmark cannot, therefore, rely on any potential finding of patent validity when defending the antitrust claims. [4]

[32] 4. The Relevant Market, Market Power, and Other Factors: Sherman Act *Section 1

i. Market Power

[3] The Court notes that it has already addressed the related issue of patent validity. [R. 1008].

[4] The Court notes, however, that the issue of holding patents will come up again in this Opinion, at which point it becomes a valid reason for granting summary judgment on the discrete issue of a per se tying agreement. In order to avoid confusion, the Court has not delved into that discussion at this point.

HN7[] "'Market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market,'" and it entails the ability of one seller to restrict output or raise prices. PSI Repair Servs., Inc., 104 F.3d at 817 (quoting Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 464). In order for a Sherman Act claim to lie against a defendant, there must be a finding of market power. Hand v. Cent. Transp., Inc., 779 F.2d 8, 11 (6th Cir. 1985). Determining market power is, thus, critical to this Court's inquiry. A toner cartridge is nothing more than a part which is purchased in order to make a machine function. As such, this Court must begin its market power examination with the line of case law examining market power in the context of a machine repair market.

The line of on-point cases traces back to Eastman Kodak. In Eastman Kodak, the Supreme Court looked to whether Kodak affected an illegal tying agreement when it entered into a contract with its copy machine parts suppliers. 504 U.S. at 458. The contract [33] was formed after Kodak sold the original copiers, and it prevented the parts suppliers from selling replacement parts to copy machine repairmen. Id. This prohibition essentially allowed Kodak to corner the repair market through its control of the parts markets. Id. The issue in Eastman Kodak was whether the service market could be tied to the parts market, not whether the service or parts markets were tied to the equipment market. Id. at 459. The Court distinguished between two possible markets within an aftermarket, one for service and the other for parts, id. at 461, and it left to the jury the issue of whether these two aftermarkets were separate. Id. at 463. Ultimately, the Court held that a company need not have market power in the primary, i.e., copier, market [*876] in order to have market power in the tying, i.e., copy machine parts, market. [5] Id. at 477.

[34] Out of this broad holding grew a Sixth Circuit case, which at first seems analogous to the current action. In PSI Repair Service, Inc., the issue was whether Honeywell, an industrial control equipment manufacturer, should be allowed to prevent customers from seeking outside service repair by requiring that customers purchase a repair part, a circuit board, from Honeywell. 104 F.3d at 813-14. Only a small percentage of the parts on the circuit board were made exclusively by Honeywell, and the rest of the board was made for Honeywell by outside contractors. Id. In effect, Honeywell's policy devastated the third party repair industry by cutting off the supply of replacement parts. Id.

The Sixth Circuit took a two step approach to determine if Honeywell possessed market power sufficient to support Sherman Act claims. First, the court decided that the primary equipment market was the relevant market for an antitrust analysis. Id. at 821 ("Since PSI has not alleged or shown that Honeywell has market power in the relevant market--the primary equipment market--summary judgment is appropriate in favor of Honeywell on PSI's § 1 claim." (emphasis [35] added)). Second, the court decided that Honeywell could not, as a matter of law, have sufficient power within the primary market to support Sherman Act claims. Id..

In distinguishing the holding in Eastman Kodak from that of PSI Repair Services, the Sixth Circuit set out the following language, which is instructive to this Court's query:

> We likewise agree that the change in policy in Kodak was the crucial factor in the Court's decision. By changing its policy after its customers were "locked in," Kodak took advantage of the fact that its customers lacked the information to anticipate this change. Therefore, it was Kodak's own actions that increased its customers' information costs. In our view, this was the evil condemned by the Court ....
>
> ... [W]e thus hold that an antitrust plaintiff cannot succeed on a Kodak-type theory when the defendant has not changed its policy after locking-in some of its customers, and the defendant has been otherwise forthcoming about its pricing structure and service policies....

---

[5] The Court notes that in Kodak, the parts market was a tying market whereas the service market was a tied market. To clarify the terms, in the patent context, a tying product is the patented product, and the secondarily purchased product is a tied product. See Ill. Tool Works, Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 1284, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006) ("This presumption of market power, applicable in the antitrust context when a seller conditions its sale of a patented product (the "tying" product) on the purchase of a second product (the "tied" product), has its foundation in the judicially created patent misuse doctrine." (citing United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 83 S. Ct. 97, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, (1962))).

> …. If there were any evidence in the record that Honeywell took advantage of its customers' imperfect information in order to reap supracompetitive [36] profits in the aftermarkets for its equipment, we would not hesitate to allow a Kodak-type theory to be submitted to the jury.

Id. at 820.

The factual underpinnings of PSI Repair Services elucidate the Sixth Circuit's reasoning. There were "no allegations that Honeywell changed its parts-restrictive policy," and the seller's policy was generally known. Id. Prior to sale, there were lengthy negotiations, during which various service plans were offered and estimates [*877] of service costs and parts' failure rates were provided upon request. Id. The evidence of information availability, specifically information provided and limited by the manufacturer as opposed to the general information costs imposed by a functioning marketplace, was the crucial distinction from Kodak which lead the court to ultimately determine that there was insufficient market power as a matter of law. Id. at 820-21. Under this Sixth Circuit precedent, HN8[] in order for a plaintiff to succeed on a Kodak-type theory--that a lack of market power in the equipment market does not necessarily preclude market power sufficient for a section 1 claim--there must be some [37] evidence that the defendant has changed its policy after locking-in customers and that the defendant has not "been otherwise forthcoming about its pricing structure and service policies." Id.

Though the Motion before the Court involves a myriad of alleged anticompetitive behavior going well beyond the scope of the PSI Repair Service and Kodak holdings (i.e., tying), these cases remain relevant to the determination of market power. First, the Court notes that implicit in both parties' discussions of the instant motion was the assumption that the cartridge and printer markets are separate. However, even if the parties' were to contest this issue, their dispute would leave a question of fact. See PSI Repair Servs., Inc., 104 F.3d at 817. Second, it is clear under both Eastman Kodak and PSI Repair Services that the printer market is, at least initially, the relevant market for the determination of market power. See PSI Repair Servs., Inc., 104 F.3d at 821.

The seminal question, then, is whether Lexmark possesses sufficient market power when applying the rule of PSI Repair Services. It is undisputed that Lexmark does not hold a [38] sufficient grasp on the printer market such that an inference of market power can be drawn. See id. at 818 (citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 26-29, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984) ("A thirty-percent share of the market, standing alone, provides an insufficient basis from which to infer market power."), abrogated on other grounds by Ill. Tool Works, Inc., 126 S. Ct. at 1291 (holding patent grant does not lead to automatic presumption of market power)). Thus, the issue becomes whether the Remanufacturers have submitted sufficient evidence of a change in Lexmark's policy such that market power may still be present. See PSI Repair Servs., 104 F.3d at 820-821.

The Remanufacturers have presented several pieces of evidence in favor of a finding of market power. [R. 628 at 13-15]. Especially important to the disposition of this Motion are the following facts: (1) imperfect ability to determine life-time, or life-cycle, costs for printers, [id.]; (2) Lexmark was able to increase the price of remanufactured cartridges, [id. at 10]; and (3) Lexmark did not actually always provide non-prebate cartridges, [R. [39] 534 at 21-22]. To the extent that Lexmark argues that these facts are incorrect, there is a disputed issue of fact that, for the purposes of summary judgment, must be resolved in favor of the Remanufacturers. When the Remanufacturers' facts are taken as true, they are sufficient under the Kodak-theory, as developed by PSI Repair Services, to create a genuine issue of fact best left for the jury. Stated alternatively, a reasonable jury could find that the Remanufacturers have presented more than a mere scintilla of evidence that Lexmark misled customers into believing that non-prebate cartridges would be available; lifetime costs were impossible to calculate; and that Lexmark caused an increase in the overall price of available cartridges. To wit, the Remanufacturers' have presented evidence which falls squarely within [*878] the factors outlined and decried by Kodak and PSI Repair Services. See PSI Repair Servs., Inc., 104 F.3d at 820 (holding that a change in policy or otherwise not being forthcoming in a policy can allow a party to succeed on a Kodak-type theory). If a jury finds that Lexmark did, in fact, not provide non-prebate cartridges when it claimed [40] that those cartridges were available, the jury could also find that Lexmark used market power to take advantage of its customers' imperfect knowledge in order to corner the remanufactured cartridge market. In sum, this Court cannot determine, at this stage, that Lexmark does not possess market power. Summary judgment on Sherman Act section 1 cannot be granted based on an absence of market power.

The Court should caution, however, that situations such as this, wherein market power does not automatically flow from market share, are difficult to prove. The Supreme Court's cautionary language is instructive:

> [i]n the end, of course, [the defendant]'s … argument[] may prove to be correct. It may be … that the equipment market does discipline the aftermarkets so that [both] are priced competitively overall, or that any anti-competitive effects of [the defendant]'s behavior are outweighed by its competitive effects. But [this Court] cannot reach these conclusions as a matter of law on [this] record ….

Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 486. The disputed issues of fact must first go to the jury.

ii. Remaining Section 1 Factors

[41] While the Court has concluded its analysis under the market share argument made by Lexmark, it has by no means addressed all the arguments raised by Lexmark. Lexmark makes specific arguments under both a per se and a rule-of-reason approach. For the purposes of analysis under those approaches, the Court assumes that there is sufficient market power.

Several additional reasons supporting summary judgment were woven into Lexmark's argument on market power. Specifically, Lexmark argues that there is insufficient evidence for finding anticompetitive behavior under any of the Sherman Act section 1 standards. HN9[] There are two standards for determining whether actions violate section 1 of the Sherman Act: (1) per se violations and (2) violations subject to the rule of reason. Per se violations do not require a finding that the defendant's actions were anticompetitive, but they do require the plaintiff to show that the defendant "possesses market power or unique access to a business element necessary for effective competition." Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationary & Printing, 472 U.S. 284, 298, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985).

If the facts do not sustain a finding of a [42] per se violation, then the Court will apply the rule-of-reason approach. Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700, 708 (Fed. Cir. 1992). ("Anticompetitive effects that are not per se violations of law are reviewed in accordance with the rule of reason."). "There is an automatic presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard." Care Heating & Cooling, Inc. v. Am. Standard, Inc., 427 F.3d 1008, 1012 (6th Cir. 2005). A rule-of-reason "analysis involves, inter alia, a study of consequences of the conduct on the affected market before imposition of antitrust sanctions." Moraine Prods., 538 F.2d at 144; PSI Repair Servs., Inc., 104 F.3d at 815 n. 2 ("Under rule-of-reason analysis, the antitrust plaintiff must show, inter alia, an adverse effect on competition."). While the rule of reason and per se analyses have merged together over time, PSI Repair Servs., Inc., 104 F.3d at [*879] 815 n.2, courts still tend to separate the two. See, e.g., Care Heating & Cooling, 427 F.3d at 1013-14 (separating discussion of per se and rule of reason analysis). [43]

(a) Per Se Violations

HN10[] Typically, per se violations are seen within the context of a boycott of supplies or customers. See generally, Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1012 (6th Cir. 1999) (explaining that the Supreme Court's precedent seems to suggest that a boycott of supplies or customers is often present in per se antitrust violations but is not present in a rule-of-reason case). "[T]he per se rule should be applied only in 'clear cut cases' of trade restraints that are so unreasonably anticompetitive that they present straightforward questions for reviewing courts." Care Heating & Cooling, Inc., 427 F.3d at 1012. A refusal to deal may qualify as a per se restraint, but "[t]he mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive." Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc., 472 U.S. at 298; see also Windsurfing Int'l, Inc. v. AMF, Inc., 782 F.2d 995, 1001-02 (Fed. Cir. 1986) ("To sustain a misuse defense involving a licensing arrangement not held to have been per se anticompetitive [44] by the Supreme Court, a factual determination must reveal that the overall effect of the license tends to restrain competition unlawfully in an appropriately defined relevant market.").

(1) Tying

HN11[] A per se tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). In a tying claim, a party is able to exclude competitors from a market because of its "power or leverage in another market." Id. at 6. In order to present a per se tying claim, a "seller must possess substantial market power in the tying product market." PSI Repair Servs., Inc., 104 F.3d at 815 n.2. If there is appreciable power in the tying market, then a court must determine whether the defendant's conduct is procompetitive or anticompetitive. Id. Determining whether a party's actions have an anticompetitive effect requires use of the Sixth Circuit's three step analysis: "(1) the seller must have power in the tying product [45] market; (2) there must be a substantial threat that the tying seller will acquire market power in the tied-product market; and (3) there must be a coherent economic basis for treating the tying and tied products as distinct." Hand, 779 F.2d at 11.

As to the first prong, the Supreme Court reexamined the market power of patent holders within the context of a tying claim. Ill. Tool Works, Inc., 126 S. Ct. at 1284-93. The issue before the Court was whether there was an automatic presumption of market power with patented goods. 126 S. Ct. at 1289-91. The Supreme Court rejected a per se approach to patented good tying claims and held that patented products should be examined under a case-by-case, market based approach. Id. at 1291.

Lexmark is seeking summary judgment on the issue of whether the Remanufacturers can prove that there is impermissible tying between Lexmark's printers and its printer cartridges. [R. 680 at 14]. Regardless of any Kodak-PSI theory that might ultimately lead to a finding of market power, the per se approach is no longer an appropriate means by which a patented good can be found to be [46] an illegal tying agreement. Ill. Tool Works, Inc., 126 S. Ct. at 1291. The means [*880] available to the Remanufacturers is through applying the rule of reason. To the extent that Lexmark seeks summary judgment on the issue of a per se tying arrangement, this Court will grant the Motion.

(2) Contracts

The next issue before the Court is whether Lexmark's distribution contracts are per se restraints of trade. HN12[] When looking to whether a contract in restraint of trade is anticompetitive under section 1 of the Sherman Act, the key issue is whether that contract addresses a horizontal or vertical market. Care Heating & Cooling, Inc., 427 F.3d at 1013 (citing Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802, 805 (6th Cir. 1988)). Horizontal conspiracies are "agreements among competitors at the same level of market structure to stifle trade, such as agreements among manufacturers or among distributors to fix prices for a given product … Care Heating & Cooling, Inc., 427 F.3d at 1013 (citations omitted). Vertical conspiracies are "agreements among actors at different levels of market structure [47] to restrain trade, 'such as agreements between a manufacturer and its distributors to exclude another distributor from a given product and geographic market.'" Id. (quoting Crane & Shovel Sales Corp., 854 F.2d at 805). While horizontal restraints of trade fall under per se analysis, a vertical restraint will be analyzed pursuant to the rule of reason. Id.

The Remanufacturers state that Lexmark's contracts with certain resellers, specifically Dell and IBM, are horizontal restraints of trade, which are per se anticompetitive. [R. 628 at 18 n.30]. The Remanufacturers do not, however, cite to any evidence submitted in support of this position. [Id.]. In contrast, Lexmark has submitted examples of six separate resale agreements, none of which are with Dell or IBM, [R. 680 at 14 n.21; R. 678, attachs. 22-27], and has referred the Court to a copy of the IBM agreement, which was submitted by SCC. [R. 540, attach. A]. Though this Court must presume that the Remanufacturers' version of the facts are correct, see Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 456, they must still present some affirmative evidence to support their position. See [48] Browning, 436 F.3d at 695; see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 586-587 (non-movant must "do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts") (citations omitted); Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 324-325. Because the Remanufacturers have not presented any evidence in support of their allegation of a horizontal restraint of trade, Lexmark's evidence must be taken as true.

A review of the contracts provided by Lexmark reveals that these are not horizontal restraints of trade. They go well beyond "'naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling competition,'" Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 132 (2d. Cir. 1978) (quoting White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 83 S. Ct. 696, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1963)), and move into the realm of agreements that are "combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, such as manufacturers and distributors." Oreck Corp., 579 F.2d at 132 (citing United States v. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972)); see also Crane & Shovel Sales Corp., 854 F.2d at 805 (quoting [49] Oreck). The contracts are specifically designated as "resale" agreements that provide for sale of goods under the purchaser's label. [R. 678, attachs. 22-27]. The IBM contract is "for a multinational procurement relationship." [R. 540, attach A at 3]. Lexmark's agreements, therefore, "involve agreements among actors at different levels of market structure [*881] to restrain trade." Care Heating & Cooling, Inc., 427 F.3d at 1013. To the extent that Lexmark seeks summary judgment that the agreements between it and IBM, Dell, and any other reseller are not horizontal restraints of trade which are per se anticompetitive, summary judgment is appropriate. As vertical trade agreements, they are subject to the rule of reason. Care Heating & Cooling, Inc., 427 F.3d at 1013.

(b) The Rule of Reason

HN13[] When applying the rule of reason, "'an agreement limiting consumer choice by impeding the 'ordinary give and take of the market place' cannot be sustained.'" Re/Max Int'l, Inc., 173 F.3d at 1014 (quoting FTC v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 459, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986)). The general test for whether there is an antitrust [50] violation under the rule of reason "'is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.'" Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. at 458 (quoting Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918)).

The parties do not clearly distinguish between the rule of reason and the per se arguments within Lexmark's Motion. Because Lexmark is clearly seeking summary judgment on the tying and contract claims, regardless of whether Lexmark is clear in its rule-of-reason argument, this Court will address both of those issues.

(1) Tying

As already addressed, whether a patented good has created an illegal tying agreement under section 1 of the Sherman Act is a question to be analyzed under a case-by-case, rule-of-reason analysis. Here, the issue of market power cannot be decided on summary judgment because there remain disputed issues of fact. See, supra, § (11)(B)(4)(I). Because Lexmark relies only on market power, [R. 680 at 14], and the issue of market power cannot be decided at this stage of the litigation, [51] Lexmark's Motion must be denied insofar as it relates to the Remanufacturers' tying claim under the rule-of-reason, case-by-case, analysis articulated by the Supreme Court in Illinois Tool Works, Inc.

(2) Contract

The IBM contract cited by Lexmark contains the following clause:

> In addition, if Buyer promotes or sells non-Supplier business printer cartridges or re-fill kits that function in Eligible Printers, Buyer will notify Supplier, in which case Supplier will not be required to pay any Consideration for the annual period in which the non-Supplier inkjet cartridge or re-fill kits were promoted or sold by Buyer.

[R. 540, attach. A, (First) Amendment 003 To the Statement of Work under Transaction Attachment # 4997S23861 at P 4.3]. The contract later adds the following at the end of that clause: "and Supplier shall have the right to immediately terminate this Appendix G." [Id. Amendment 006 To the Statement of Work under Transaction Attachment # 4997523861 at P 4.2].

This record is very limited, but it is the only evidence that the Court has before it. This contract prohibits the reseller from also selling or promoting non-Lexmark cartridges, [52] albeit inkjet cartridges, and its enforcement tool is the threat of lost consideration. On this very limited record, this prohibition might ultimately be found to be a device through which trade was suppressed. That is to say, it is not clear that the Lexmark-IBM contract simply dictates the methods whereby trade will be effectuated. Therefore, the Court cannot hold as a matter of law that Lexmark did not unreasonably destroy competition [*882] through unreasonable, contractual market restraints.

5. The Relevant Market and Monopoly Power: Sherman Act Section 2

HN14[] In order to prevail on a Section 2 claim, the Remanufacturers must demonstrate "(1) the possession of monopoly power in a relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition, maintenance, or use of that power by anti-competitive means as opposed to 'growth or development resulting from a superior product, business acumen, or historical. accident.'" Conwood, Co. v. U.S. Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 782 (6th Cir. 2002) (quoting Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 595-96, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). Section 2 claims [53] are examined under a fact specific analysis, and in proving its claim, a plaintiff must first "define the relevant product and geographic markets in which it competes with the alleged monopolizer, and with respect to the monopolization claim, to show that the defendant, in fact, possesses monopoly power." Conwood Co., 290 F.3d at 782.

"To establish the offense of monopolization a plaintiff must demonstrate that a defendant either unfairly attained or maintained monopoly power." Potters Med. Ctr. v. City Hosp. Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 574 (6th Cir. 1986). To have monopoly power, a defendant must have "the power to control prices or exclude competition." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. "[W]hen a competitor, with a dangerous probability of success, engages in anti-competitive practices the specific design of which are, to build a monopoly or exclude or destroy competition," there is an attempted monopolization. Smith v. N. Mich. Hosps., Inc., 703 F.2d 942, 954 (6th Cir. 1983). Section 2 monopoly power "requires … something greater than market power under § 1." Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 481.

The standard [54] for monopoly power is, in fact, very high, and is typically defined by the market share. See Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570. For example, in Eastman Kodak, the Supreme Court held that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether Kodak held monopoly power when Kodak controlled 80% to 95% of the service market and 100% of the parts market. Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 481. In Grinnell, the Court held that 87% of market power could constitute monopoly power, see Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 571 (determining that 87% of market constitutes a monopoly), and in American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946), the Court determined that control of over two-thirds of the market could amount to monopoly power. See id. at 797.

HN15[] While market share might, in many instances, lead to an inference of monopoly power, it is not, in and of itself, the only factor to consider. Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 185 F.3d 606, 623 (6th Cir.1999) ("[M]arket share is only a starting point for determining whether monopoly power [55] exists, and the inference of monopoly power does not automatically follow from the possession of a commanding market share."). Within the context of an aftermarket monopolization, there are special factors to consider.

When there is an allegation of aftermarket monopolization, the analysis is more complex, "because market share data standing alone is not necessarily a reliable proxy for monopoly power." Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 381 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing SMS Sys. Maintenance Servs. v. Digital Equip. Corp., 188 F.3d 11, 16 (1st Cir.1999)). It is to be [*883] expected that a company will supply a large percentage of its aftermarket parts and services. Harrison Aire, Inc., 423 F.3d at 381. It is only when there are "significant information and switching costs," Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 473, that the "link between the primary market-and the aftermarket" is severed for monopolization purposes. Harrison Aire, Inc., 423 F.3d at 382. In sum, "[o]nly a careful factual analysis of the market in question will reveal whether monopoly power, in fact, exists." Byars, 609 F.2d at 851. [56]

The Remanufacturers have presented a triable issue of fact as to whether Lexmark enjoyed monopoly power. Summary judgment in Eastman Kodak was inappropriate because questions of fact remained regarding supracompetitive pricing, indeterminate lifecycle costs, and high switching costs. Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 469-75, 477, 480. The Remanufacturers have submitted evidence that would satisfy three of these factors: that Lexmark controlled, at a minimum, 75% of the market for remanufactured sales and 80% of the overall market for Lexmark-compatible toner cartridges, [R. 628 at 8, 10]; that Lexmark was able to charge a higher price for its remanufactured cartridges than the remanufacturers charged, [R. 628 at 10]; and that determining a life-cycle cost for a printer is nearly impossible. [R. 628 at 14]. As a result, this Court cannot, at this stage of litigation, hold that the market reality was such that Lexmark was not able to gain monopoly power.

Lexmark appears to have rested its entire section 2 argument on the issue of monopoly power. [R. 680]. Since Lexmark does not argue whether the Remanufacturers have presented sufficient evidence that it willfully [57] acquired, maintained, or used potential monopoly power through the use of anti-competitive means, this Court need not address this issue. Even if addressed, there is evidence that Lexmark engaged in the Prebate program in order to achieve total control over the remanufactured cartridge market. [R. 628 at 3]. Suffice it to say, neither prong one or prong two under a Sherman Act § 2 analysis is sufficient to grant summary judgment for Lexmark.

6. The Relevant Market and Market Power: Clayton Act

HN16[] The Clayton Act addresses the legality of exclusive dealing contracts. An exclusive dealing contract is formed when a good is sold on the condition that the buyer not deal with competitors of the seller. See 15 U.S.C. § 14. In order to be an illegal exclusive dealing contract, a court must engage in a three-part inquiry. First, a court must determine "line of commerce, i.e. the type of goods ..." that are involved. Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). Second, the court must determine that there is a relationship between the anti-competitive actions and the market. Id. ("[T]he area of effective competition [58] in the known line of commerce must be charted by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies."). Third, "the competition foreclosed by the contract must be found to constitute a substantial share of the relevant market." Id. at 328.

Under the Clayton Act, "the relevant market is the prime factor in relation to which the ultimate question, whether the contract forecloses competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce involved, must be decided." Id. at 329. Clayton Act claims are generally analyzed in conjunction with a Sherman Act section 1 discussion, see Ill. Took [*884] Works, Inc., 126 S. Ct. at 1286, and the same facts are relevant to a market power determination under both statutes. See U.S. v. Dairymen, Inc., 758 F.2d 654 (6th Cir. 1985) (per curiam). As the Court has previously discussed, see supra § (II)(B)(4)(i), the Remanufacturers have presented sufficient evidence to proceed on the question of whether Lexmark has used its power in the market to foreclose a significant amount of competition. Summary judgment is [59] inappropriate on this issue.

7. Antitrust Injury

Lexmark's final argument in favor of summary judgment is that the Remanufacturers have failed to prove an injury predicated on an antitrust violation. This discussion assumes that there is an antitrust violation. In other words, it poses the following question: Assuming that there is an antitrust violation, may the Remanufacturers recover for that violation? In order to recover, the Remanufacturers "must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes [Lexmark's] acts unlawful." Valley Prods. Co., 128 F.3d 398, 402 (6th Cir. 1997). Whether there is an antitrust injury rests on whether the Remanufacturers can satisfy the "necessary predicate" test. This test requires the Remanufacturers to demonstrate "facts showing that [Lexmark's] alleged anticompetitive conduct was a 'necessary predicate' to their antitrust injury; i.e., that [summary judgment] is required unless [the Remanufacturers prove] facts showing that the alleged antitrust injury could not possibly have occurred absent [Lexmark's] alleged anticompetitive [60] conduct?" In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 332 F.3d 896, 900 (6th Cir. 2003).

Because Lexmark does not attempt to summarize its antitrust injury argument, [see R. 531], this Court attempts to concisely state Lexmark's position as follows: No antitrust injury can flow from the Prebate Program, since in the absence of that program, Lexmark would continue to attempt to obtain empty cartridges. [Id.]. Lexmark's argument fails for three reasons: (1) it compares analytically distinct situations; (2) it requires reliance on speculation; and (3) it ignores the Remanufacturers' Sherman Act section 1 and Clayton Act claims, i.e., whether Lexmark's resale contracts unreasonably restrain trade.

Lexmark's argument compares analytically distinct injuries. It states that the injury alleged by the Remanufacturers--cutting off the stream of cartridges via a prebate program (the "prebate-based injury")--is the same injury as would result if there were no prebate program--where there would be a market-based competition which in turn would lesson the supply of cartridges (the "market-based hypothetical"). The former, prebate-based injury results from an alleged antitrust [61] violation, whereas the later, market-based hypothetical is an injury outside of any antitrust violation. Additionally, the alleged injury based on prebate falls within the type of harm for which antitrust statutes seek to remedy. Specifically, it forecloses competition and increases prices. The market-based hypothetical is based on the opposite type of injury; it is injury resulting from open competition. Because two situations are not analogous, Lexmark's argument must fail.

Second, there are evidentiary concerns with Lexmark's argument. HN17[] This Court, in determining whether an issue may properly be considered at the summary judgment stage, must rely on actual evidence. Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 56. Arguments requiring a court's speculation, and going well beyond the submitted evidence, are insufficient means for granting summary judgment. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., [*885] 475 U.S. at 586-587 (non-movant must "do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts"); see also Browning, 436 F.3d at 695 (requiring that some evidence be submitted to avoid summary judgment). Lexmark's argument is [62] based on its speculation that it is more efficient than its competitors. The Court will not rely on such speculation.

Finally, Lexmark's argument ignores whether there is an antitrust injury as a result of its contracts with the Resellers. The injury argument, cannot, therefore, be grounds for granting summary judgment on the Sherman Act section 1 or Clayton Act claim.

For these three reasons, the Court must deny summary judgment on the issue of whether there is an antitrust injury.

C. LANHAM ACT CLAIMS

At issue is whether Lexmark violated section 43(a) of the Lanham Act:

> HN18[] [a]ny person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which--
> (A) is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person, or as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person, or
>
> (B) [63] in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities,
> shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a).

1. Wazana's Motion

Wazana is only seeking summary judgment on three of its Lanham Act allegations: (1) that Lexmark is falsely assuring customers that all prebate cartridges will be remanufactured or recycled; (2) that Lexmark falsely represents that the cartridges will be disposed of in a manner different from regular household waste; and (3) that Lexmark has falsely represented that regularly priced cartridges, or non-prebate cartridges, are available for purchase. [R. 534]. Wazana's Motion for Summary Judgment argues that all three of these statements are literally false. [Id.].

HN19[] In order to prove liability for false advertising under the Lanham Act, a plaintiff must satisfy the follow five-element test:

> 1) the defendant has made false or misleading statements of fact concerning his own product [64] or another's; 2) the statement actually deceives or tends to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; 3) the statement is material in that it will likely influence a deceived consumers' purchasing decisions; 4) the advertisements were introduced into interstate commerce; 5) there is some causal link between the challenged statements and harm to the plaintiff.

Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons, Inc., 185 F.3d at 613; Balance Dynamics Corp. v. Schmitt Indus., 204 F.3d at 689. A plaintiff seeking monetary damages must either show that a statement "is literally false or that it is true yet misleading or confusing." *Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians [886] & Surgeons, 185 F.3d at 614. For literally false statements, no evidence that consumers were mislead is necessary for recovery, i.e., there is a presumption of actual deception. Id. "[T]he initial determination concerning whether a statement is ambiguous is a matter of law, while the determination as to whether facts exist so as to justify the statement is a question of fact." Id. at 615 n.2.

Lexmark contests Wazana's [65] position that the statements at issue are clear and false, i.e., Lexmark argues that these statements are subject to multiple meanings and that it possessed sufficient factual underpinnings to support its statements. Therefore, as to each of the three statements presented by Wazana, this Court must first determine if the statements are ambiguous. Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons, 185 F.3d at 615 n. 2. If unambiguous, then a jury could find that the statements are either literally false or true but deceptive. In order to proceed to the jury, there must be sufficient facts to justify Lexmark's statement as true or as not deceptive. If those disputed issues of fact exist, then the Court cannot make a determination as to falsity or deception, but must present this issue to a jury. Id.

i. Ambiguity of Statement

The first representation at issue states: "Following this initial use, you agree to return the empty cartridge only to Lexmark for remanufacturing and recycling." [R. 531 at 2]. Lexmark argues that this statement does not mean that it will recycle or remanufacture 100% of each returned cartridge. [R. 613 at 18-19]. This [66] argument goes to whether the facts support the statement, not to whether the statement is clear. To state the representation alternatively, Lexmark is simply letting customers know that they are agreeing to return the empty cartridge to Lexmark so that the cartridges can be recycled or remanufactured. In sum, this statement is unambiguous.

The second statement at issue states, "Lexmark recycles Return Program Cartridges, keeping them out of the waste stream." [R. 534 at 5]. Lexmark seems to argue that this statement has never been explicitly made but could be inferred by other statements. [R. 613 at 21]. The Court is not quite clear as to exactly what Lexmark means when it states that the statement is "implicit," and can only assume that Lexmark is contesting whether the statement ever appeared on its website. Lexmark has not submitted any evidence supporting this claim, and therefore the Court need not consider Lexmark's blanket denial in light of Wazana's evidence that the statement appeared, explicitly, on Lexmark's website. [R. 534 at 5. See Browning, 436 F.3d at 695 (noting that while all inferences are drawn in favor of the non-moving party, that party [67] still must present some affirmative evidence supporting its position to defeat an otherwise appropriate motion for summary judgment); see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 586-587 (non-movant must "do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts")]. Therefore, in the absence of any disputed, material facts, the Court holds that this statement was, in fact, made and is unambiguous. As to its meaning, the statement simply represents that Lexmark is recycling the returned prebated cartridge and that this recycling is keeping the returned cartridge out of the waste stream.

Finally, Lexmark argues that its statement regarding the validity of the prebate agreement is susceptible to different meanings. Lexmark is wrong. The statement at issue reads, "Regular cartridges without this license/agreement sold at regular prices are available." [R. 534 at 21]. In its Response, Lexmark stated that [*887] certain "kits," [6] consisting of a cartridge and parts, contained the statement at issue. [R. 613]. Wazana did not counter Lexmark's assertion that this statement was contained on a kit containing more than just a prebate cartridge. The [68] statement means that if a customer does not want to accept the prebate terms placed on the kit, it may choose to buy a non-prebate cartridge (not kit), which Lexmark has available. Like the others, this statement is unambiguous.

ii. Facts Supporting Statement

Having determined that the three statements at issue in Wazana's Motion are unambiguous, the next step is to determine if there are disputed issues of facts as to the falsity or deceptiveness of those statements. If so, the issue of whether the statements are false or are true yet deceptive must go to a jury.

(a) Waste Stream, Recycling, [69] and Remanufacturing

As set out by Lexmark in its Response [R. 613], there are significant disputed facts as to whether the products were recycled, remanufactured, or placed in the waste stream. Specifically, the dispute seems to involve Lexmark's incineration of the cartridges, or as identified by Lexmark, its "thermal recycling." There appears to be significant factual disputes as to whether technically or effectively incineration would support a claim that Lexmark recycles its returned cartridges. [Compare R. 531, with R. 534]. There is also a dispute as to whether the facts support Lexmark's claim that it is recycling or reusing the cartridges when only part of the returned cartridges are reused or recycled. [R. 613 at 20]. The resolution of these disputed issues of fact must be reserved for the trial phase and left to the province of the jury. Wazana's Motion must, therefore, be denied as to the statement that Lexmark is recycling or remanufacturing the used cartridges and as to whether these cartridges are placed in the waste stream.

(b) Availability of Regularly-Priced Cartridges

The Court notes that when determining whether Wazana should receive summary [70] judgment on this issue, it must construe all disputed issues in favor of Lexmark and must take as true all proper evidence submitted by Lexmark. Lexmark submits several pieces of evidence that it made regularly priced cartridges available to customers who did not want to purchase the cartridge kits. [R. 613]. Therefore, summary judgment cannot be granted on this issue.

iii. Injury and Damages

Having determined that there is conflicting evidence regarding the falsity of the statements at issue, the Court need not reach the issue of whether Wazana has met its burden for proving any injury or damages.

2. Lexmark's Motion

Due to a dispute between the parties, the Court must first determine the scope of Lexmark's Motion for Summary Judgment with regard to the Lanham Act claims. Lexmark states that > falsely advertised that Prebate cartridges [71] are more environmentally friendly than non-Prebate cartridges and that Lexmark remanufactures or recycles Prebate cartridges ....

> [Wazana] asserts two distinct Lanham Act claims against Lexmark, based on two different types of allegedly false advertising. First, [Wazana] contends [*888] that Lexmark falsely advertised that Prebate-labeled cartridges are sold subject to a valid single-use patent license ….Second, [Wazana] contends that Lexmark

[6] The Court notes that Lexmark identifies these kits as labels. In order to avoid confusing the general cartridge packaging from the cartridge itself from the cartridge packaged within a kit, the use of word label will be used when referring to the actual packaging of all cartridges and the word cartridge kit will be used when referring to the sale of cartridges in conjunction with various other parts.

[R. 531 at 30 (citations omitted)]. Lexmark, in its Memorandum, seeks summary judgment as to all Lanham Act claims but it only argues for summary judgment as to three Lanham Act issues: (1) the Prebate statement; (2) the Environmental claims; and (3) the measure of damages available. [Id.]. Wazana noted, in its Response, that there are more than three statements at issue under the Lanham Act in this litigation, and it sets out all of the statements that it purports to assert. [R. 638 at 11-14]. Lexmark, in turn, attempts in its Reply to address each of these additional Lanham Act claims. [R. 679 at 10-15]. Local Rule 7.1 requires parties to state precisely the relief requested and allows a court to rest its denial of a motion on the failure to submit an accompanying memorandum. It seems clear that, based on the Motion and Memorandum, Lexmark is only seeking summary judgment on the three statements originally mentioned. [See R. 531]. To the extent that Lexmark failed, when submitting its Motion, to specifically address any additional [72] Lanham Act claims, its effort to address them in its Reply will be disregarded. After all, what purpose does a Motion and its Memorandum serve but to inform the Court and the other parties of relief requested therein? Therefore, to the extent that Lexmark seeks summary judgment on specific Lanham Act claims via its Reply, as opposed to its actual Motion, it must be denied.

Only three claims are before the Court pursuant to Lexmark's Motion. First, whether the prebate label correctly stated the single-use restriction. [Id.]. Second, whether the environmental claims were false or misleading. [Id.]. Finally, whether Wazana can prove, under the applicable standard, an amount for which it is entitled. [Id.].

i. Valid Single-Use Restriction

Wazana has asserted a Lanham Act claim regarding Lexmark's statement that all prebate cartridges are sold subject to a valid, single-use restriction. The Court need not go into the details of the single-use restriction in this Order, since there is a lengthy discussion of the single-use restriction elsewhere in the record. [See R. 1008]. Lexmark argues that there are three reasons why the single-use restriction representation [73] cannot support a Lanham Act claim: (1) the cartridges were subject to a single-use restriction; (2) there is no evidence of damages to Wazana; and (3) Wazana's response that the statement is merely deceptive, not false, is a new theory not properly considered on summary judgment. [R. 679 at 10].

The first and third arguments are quickly disposed of. As to the first argument, the Court did not hold that all prebate cartridges were, in fact, sold subject to a valid, single-use restriction. [See R. 1008 at 38]. Therefore, Lexmark cannot place reliance on this proposition. As to the third argument, this Court need not address whether the statement is deceptive since given the Court's earlier holding regarding the single-use restrictions [id.], facts exist that could lead a reasonable jury to conclude that the statement is literally false. [See generally R. 531 at 34 (Lexmark's memorandum states, "Assuming that the Prebate single-use license is not valid and enforceable, and therefore the representations are literally false....")]. [7]

[74] [*889] The second argument is slightly more complex. As cited, Lexmark's Motion states the argument as follows: "Assuming that the Prebate single-use license is not valid and enforceable, and therefore the representations are literally false, [Wazana] must nevertheless come forward with evidence that the representations about the enforceability of Prebate caused Lexmark to gain sales at the expense of MSE." [R. 531 at 41]. In its Response, Wazana asserts that its expert "opined that [Wazana] lost approximately $ 2,200,000 - 2,400,00 as a result of Lexmark's prebate program." [R. 622 at 30]. Lexmark's Reply simply argues that this evidence from Wazana "fails because [Wazana] has produced no evidence of materiality, i.e. customers purchased remanufactured cartridges because they are sold subject to the single use restriction ...." [R. 679 at 10].

As to Lexmark's first argument, Wazana has met the burden. It has submitted expert evidence that Lexmark gained sales through prebate while Wazana lost sales. [R. 622 at 30]. Specifically, once one assumes that not all Prebate was valid, [See R. 1008 at 38 (explaining that cartridges that were originally sold unrestricted in [75] the United States but to which Prebate later attached were not actually subject to Prebate)], it is easy to see how Lexmark could, allegedly, gain sales at Wazana's expense through its requiring, under the guise of Prebate, those cartridges to which Prebate did not validly attach.

---

[7] The Court notes that both parties seem to imply that their positions rest on the single-use restriction being only within the context of a patent license.

Wazana has also met its burden on Lexmark's second argument: that customers purchased the cartridges because of the single-use restriction. While Wazana did not submit direct evidence that customers purchased the cartridges because they were sold subject to a valid, single-use restriction, it would seem reasonable to infer that the single-use restriction was, in fact, valuable to the customer. Without that restriction, the price of the cartridge could be significantly higher. Therefore, none of the arguments put forth by Lexmark are sufficient grounds for granting summary judgment in favor of Lexmark on this issue.

ii. Environmental Benefit of Prebate and Cartridge Disposal

As defined by Lexmark, the "environmental benefits" Lanham claim includes both the environmental benefits of the Prebate program and whether the returned cartridges were recycled or remanufactured upon return to Lexmark. [76] These two arguments have already been discussed in the context of literal falsity. See supra §§ II(C)(1)(i)-(ii). As explained in the previous section, there are significant disputed material facts making these statements improper for granting summary judgment. Even if this Court were to construe all facts in favor of Wazana, which would be required on a Motion by Lexmark, summary judgment remains inappropriate as to whether these statements are literally false. Wazana has presented evidence that incineration is not considered, or defined as, recycling and that the clear language of Lexmark's label states that the purpose of returning cartridges is so that they may be recycled or remanufactured. [R. 622]. These are sufficient facts from which a jury could conclude that Lexmark stated it was recycling or reusing the cartridges and that incineration does not qualify as either of those two end results.

A remaining issue in Lexmark's motion is whether, assuming that the statements are literally true but deceptive, Wazana has presented evidence that they are actually deceptive.HN20[] "Where statements are literally true, yet deceptive, or [*890] too ambiguous to support a finding of literal falsity, [77] a violation can only be established by proof of actual deception . . . ." Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons, 185 F.3d at 614. For deceptive statements, a plaintiff "cannot obtain [monetary] relief by arguing how consumers could react; it must show how consumers actually do react." Sandoz Pharm. Corp. v. Richardson-Vicks, Inc., 902 F.2d 222, 229 (3d Cir. 1990). Wazana is seeking both monetary and injunctive relief for the alleged Lanham violations. [R. 175 at 59].

If seeking monetary relief, there must be evidence from which a jury could determine that a substantial portion of the audience was deceived in order to support a determination that the statement has a "tendency to deceive." Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons, 185 F.3d at 616. The deceived audience must be the intended audience for the statement. U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 898 F.2d 914, 922 (3d. Cir. 1990). Concern or confusion of the audience does not amount to deception. See Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons, 185 F.3d at 617. While [78] common sense and personal experience serve as useful aids for the deception determination, they are not substitutes for other, harder evidence, such as consumer surveys. Id. at 617-18.

Wazana relies on Lexmark's own survey for support of its deception claim. [R. 622 attach. B]. Lexmark's survey included those people who were involved in the cartridge purchase decisions and those people responsible for replacing used cartridges with new or repaired cartridges. [Id. at 7, 17-18]. When asked about the "environmentally friendly message" of the Prebate program, the survey participants touted the benefits of helping the environment and recycling and also noted the importance of conveying that message on the cartridge label. [Id. at 15, 21]. The participants even went so far as to suggest names for the program that necessarily conveyed the importance of the environmental effects of Prebate. [Id. at 25]. This evidence is sufficient to send the issue of actual deception to the jury. To the extent that the methods of this survey are attacked, that is within Lexmark's province to present on cross. To conclude, for the purposes of summary judgment and with [79] all conflicting facts resolved in favor of Wazana, the evidence presented by Wazana is enough that a reasonable jury could find in favor of Wazana. Thus, as to whether monetary damages might be recovered on the two environmental statements at issue, Lexmark's Motion must be denied.

The standard for receiving injunctive relief is lower than that for monetary relief. Because the claims for monetary relief must be submitted to a jury, so too must the claims for injunctive relief. See Max Daetwyler Corp. v. Input Graphics, Inc., 608 F. Supp. 1549, 1551 (E.D. Penn. 1985) (stating that in contrast with money damages, if injunctive relief is sought, a plaintiff need only show that "the defendant's representations about its product have a tendency to deceive consumers ...."); see also Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons, 185 F.3d at 618. ("Although plaintiff need not present consumer surveys or testimony demonstrating actual deception, it must present evidence of some sort demonstrating that consumers were misled."). The aforementioned facts would also satisfy this lower standard.

In sum, Wazana has met its burden under both the injunctive [80] and monetary relief standards. Thus, this Court must deny Lexmark's Motion for Summary [*891] Judgment regarding the Lanham Act claims.

iii. Profit Disgorgement

The final issue for which Lexmark seeks summary judgment regards the measure of damages, specifically whether profit discouragement is an appropriate remedy. Profit disgorgement is an equitable remedy available under the Lanham Act, and it cannot be used as a penalty. Balance Dynamics Corp., 204 F.3d at 695.HN21[] A court cannot require disgorgement "unless there is some proof that plaintiff lost sales or profits, or that defendant gained them, the principles of equity do not warrant an award of defendant's profits." Id. Thus, assuming that Wazana is successful on its Lanham Act claims, the question is whether there is sufficient evidence to support a claim that Lexmark unfairly profited from its statements. Given the number of Lanham Act statements that will be decided at trial but which were not briefed in Lexmark's original Memorandum, and the amount of disputed expert evidence [Compare R. 622 at 30-32, with 679 at 3-5], this Court declines to make a decision which will become either moot or [81] clearer after trial. Therefore, Lexmark's Motion, as it relates to profit disgorgement, is denied.

III.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, for the foregoing reasons and being sufficiently advised, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. that Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [R. 529] is DENIED in part and GRANTED in part;

2. that Counterclaim-Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [R. 534] is DENIED in part and GRANTED in part;

3. that Counterclaim-Defendant's Motion for Hearing [R. 564] on its Motion for Summary Judgment is DENIED as moot; and

4. this Memorandum Opinion and Order is entered as an erratum to, replace Docket Entry 1035, and it contains no substantive changes from the previously entered order. The clerk of court is directed to strike Docket Entry Number 1035 from the docket.

This 3nd day of May, 2007.

Signed By:

Gregory F. Van Tatenhove

United States District Judge

[Recetas Por Menos, Inc. v. Five Dev. Corp.]

United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico

May 3, 2007, Decided; May 3, 2007, Filed

Civil No. 02-1935(SEC)

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57974 *

RECETAS POR MENOS, INC., et al. Plaintiffs v. FIVE DEVELOPMENT CORP., et al. Defendants geographic, shopping center, lease, relevant market, antitrust, anti trust law, Defendants', nonmovant, summary judgment, pharmacy, renew, sites, summary judgment motion, material fact, genuine, vendor, instant case, Sherman Act, competitors, injunctive, space, food, mall

Core Terms

Counsel: [*1] For Recetas Por Menos, Inc., Plaintiff: Edward M. Borges, LEAD ATTORNEY, Borges Law Center, San Juan, PR; Jane A. Becker-Whitaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jane Becker Whitaker, PSC, San Juan, PR.

For Five Development Corp., Rafael Perez-Diez, Defendants: Jose A. Bague-Soto, Rivera Tulla & Ferrer, Hato Rey, PR.

For Farmacias El Amal, Farmacias El Amal, Inc., Defendant: Enrique G. Figueroa-Llinas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Guillermo J. Bobonis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bobonis, Bobonis & Rodriguez Poventud, San Juan, PR.

For Ymas Inventory Management Corp., PMC Marketing Corp., Defendants: Guillermo J. Bobonis LEAD ATTORNEY, Bobonis, Bobonis & Rodriguez Poventud, San Juan, PR.

Judges: SALVADOR E. CASELLAS, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SALVADOR E. CASELLAS

Opinion

AMENDED OPINION AND ORDER

Pending before the Court is Defendants' motion for summary judgment (Docket # 108). Plaintiffs opposed said motion (Docket # 115) and Defendants replied [1] (Docket # 136). After carefully reviewing the parties' filings and the applicable law, for the reasons set herein, Defendants' motion for summary judgment will be GRANTED.

---

[1] Plaintiffs also moved to strike Defendants' reply for being in violation of Local Rule 7.1(c) and this Court's order of November [*2] 8, 2004 (Docket # 153). Defendants opposed Plaintiffs' request (Docket # 164). The Court will not strike Defendants' reply which is ten pages in length (Docket # 136). However, the Court will strike Defendants' supplemental reply which is forty-seven pages long (Docket # 136 - Attachment # 1). Defendants also moved to strike several declarations under perjury and expert reports submitted by Plaintiffs (Dockets ## 137, 138 & 145). Because our ruling on these motions does not alter our disposition of the case, we will DENY Defendants' various motions to strike. However, this does not mean that these documents will automatically be given the weight that Plaintiffs intended. There are some defects in these documents that are worth noting.

Procedural and Factual Background

Plaintiff Recetas Por Menos, Inc. ("RPM") filed the instant action against Defendants Five Development Corp. ("Five Development"); Farmacias El Amal, Inc. ("El Amal"); Rafael Perez Diez, [2] administrator of Five Development; Saleh Yassin, [3] administrator of El Amal; and several unnamed defendants (collectively referred [*4] to as "Defendants") on June 18, 2002 seeking damages (trebled in accordance with the Antitrust Laws), interests, costs, and attorneys' fees, as well as specific performance and injunctive relief (Docket # 1). Plaintiff amended the complaint several times. The last version, the Third Amended Verified Complaint, was filed on March 26, 2004 (Docket # 79). In its last complaint, Plaintiff adds as Defendants PMC Marketing Corp. ("PMC") and YMAS Inventory Management ("YMAS"). [4] Co-plaintiff Puerto Rico Pharmaceutical, Inc. ("PRPI"), Co-plaintiff RPM's supplier, also appears as plaintiff (collectively hereinafter "Plaintiffs"). [5]

Per the Third Amended Verified Complaint, Plaintiffs claim violations to Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, and Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15(a), 26, as well as violations to Puerto Rico's Anti-Monopoly Law, 10 L.P.R.A. §§ 257-276. Plaintiffs also request specific performance and damages under Article 1802 of the Puerto Rico Civil Code, 31 L.P.R.A. § 5141 (Docket # 79).

Plaintiffs' claims arise out Five Development's nonrenewal of Plaintiffs' commercial lease at the Villa Fontana Shopping Center. Plaintiffs allege that Five Development did not renew the lease agreement because it entered into a contract with El Amal Group which requires that no other pharmacy be allowed to operate at the same shopping center (Docket # 79, PP 18, 35-36). Plaintiffs argue that El Amal Group "exercises monopolistic and/or oligopolistic power in the relevant market in which RPM and El Amal Group are located and compete" and that "El Amal Group and FIVE have colluded with the express purpose of putting RPM out of business and eliminating competition in the relevant market." (Docket [*6] # 79, PP 49-50). Furthermore, Plaintiffs allege that "El Amal Group's abuse of its monopolistic power constitutes an unreasonable attempt to monopolize" and that "[t]he efforts of El Amal Group and FIVE constitute a combination of entrepreneurs to harass and deter their competitors from having 'free and unlimited access' to the agencies and courts, to defeat that right by massive, concerted, and purposeful activities of the group as ways of building up El Amal Group's empire and strangling competition by bringing baseless suits to evict plaintiff." (Docket # 79, PP 52 & 57).

Subsequent to filing its action, on June 18, 2002, Co-plaintiff RPM requested a preliminary injunction (Docket # 2). Co-plaintiff renewed its request on January 31, 2003 (Docket # 27). RPM requested that the Court stay a local

---

First, "[a]n expert's opinion that lacks any credible support does not create an issue of fact." Am. Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F. 2d 1569, 1580 (11th Cir. 1985) (citing Merit Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 187 U.S. App. D.C. 11, 569 F.2d 666, 673 n. 27 (D.C. Cir. 1977)). Moreover, with respect to Mr. Mukamal's statement under penalty of perjury, we note that "[c]onstruction of a relevant economic market or a showing of monopoly power in that market cannot, however, [*3] be based upon lay opinion testimony." Id. (citing Forro Precision, Inc. v. Internat'l Bus. Machs. Corp., 673 F.2d 1045, 1059 (9th Cir. 1982)). Therefore, to the extent that Mr. Mukamal's contentions are based on his lay opinion, they are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact precluding the entry of summary judgment. Finally, Mr. Mukamal's second declaration, which is signed, is subscribed to as "Joseph J. Maximal." Furthermore, Appendixes I and II to Plaintiffs' expert's reply report (Docket # 153) are in Spanish. Therefore, the Court cannot consider them. Local Rule 10(b). In addition, the Court notes that, contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion, the expert's report was never amended to include her signature, or, at least, the Court has not been able to locate said alleged correction within Plaintiffs' submitted compiled exhibits.

[2] Plaintiff also sues his wife and their conjugal partnership.

[3] Plaintiff also sues his wife and their conjugal partnership.

[4] El Amal, however, does not appear listed as defendant in this last complaint. Instead, Plaintiffs refer to PMC and YMAS collectively as El Amal or El Amal Group because that is how the entity has been identified to the Puerto Rico Department of State (Docket # 79, P 10). Per the information provided by Defendants, PMC owns a chain of pharmacies known as El Amal and Mr. Saleh Yassin is its Chief Executive Officer (Docket # 108 n. 4).

[5] Joseph J. [*5] Mukamal is the sole shareholder of both RPM and PRPI (Docket # 79, PP 4-5).

injunction proceeding instituted against it by Five Development. RPM's preliminary injunctive request was denied on March 24, 2003. The Court found that Co-plaintiff RPM had failed to show irreparable harm (Docket # 34). Thereafter, on April 3, 2003, the Court of First Instance of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in Carolina rendered a judgment of eviction against RPM. As a result, Co-plaintiff [*7] RPM relocated and opened for business on June 15, 2004 (Docket # 91). The new location, Sanchez-Osorio Ave., 5-BB-9 Villa Fontana Park, is 482.28 meters from the Villa Fontana Shopping Center (Docket # 109, SUF # 21).

In reaching its judgment of eviction, the Court of First Instance expressly determined that: (1) the lease agreement between Five Development and RPM did not contain an automatic right to renew the lease; (2) Five Development, as the lessor, conserved its right to accept or reject RPM's offer to renew the lease and/or terminate the lease upon the expiration of the contract; (3) RPM did not have the unilateral right to renew the contract without the consent of Five Development; (4) Five Development did not breach its obligations under the lease agreement nor rejected Plaintiff's offers to renew the lease in bad faith; and (5) RPM continued to illegally occupy the premises notwithstanding the expiration of the lease. The Court then ordered the eviction of RPM from the premises and ordered RPM to pay Five Development three times the monthly rent payment for the period RPM illegally occupied the leased space in the Villa Fontana Shopping Center ($ 46,200.00, plus a per diem [*8] of $ 140.00 until it vacated the premises), attorneys' fees in the amount of $ 3,000.00, and an annual interest rate of 5.25% for obstinacy calculated from June 1, 2002 until RPM satisfied the judgment (Docket # 109, SUF # 35; Docket ## 142, Exhibits # 12). RPM appealed and said appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction (Docket # 171, Exhibit # 14). RPM then sought certiorari and the Court of Appeals denied RPM's request. (Docket # 171, Exhibit # 13).

Standard of Review

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(b) provides that: "A party against whom a claim . . . is asserted . . . may, at any time, move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part [of the claims asserted against him/her]." The Court may grant the movant's motion for summary judgment when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c); See also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202(1986); NASCO, Inc. v. Pub. Storage, Inc., 29 F.3d 28 (1st Cir. 1994). [*9] "The principal judicial inquiry required by Rule 56 is whether a genuine issue of material fact exists." Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 3d § 2725, p.401.

In this regard, the First Circuit Court of Appeals has noted that for a dispute to be "genuine," there must be sufficient evidence to permit a reasonable trier of fact to resolve the issue in favor of the non-moving party. U.S. v. One Parcel of Real Prop., 960 F.2d 200, 204 (1st Cir. 1992); see also Boston Athletic Ass'n v. Sullivan, 867 F.2d 22, 24 (1st Cir. 1989); Medina-Munoz v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco, 896 F.2d 5, 8 (1st Cir. 1990) ("[a] 'genuine' issue is one that must be decided at trial because the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, would permit a rational factfinder to resolve the issue in favor of either party.") (citations omitted).

By like token, "material" means that the fact is one that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Morris v. Gov't Dev. Bank of P.R., 27 F.3d 746, 748 (1st Cir. 1994). "A fact is material if it tends to resolve any of the issues that have been properly raised by the parties." Wright, Miller & Kane, supra, § 2725 at p. [*10] 419. "Not every genuine factual conflict necessitates a trial. It is only when a disputed fact has the potential to change the outcome of the suit under the governing law if found favorably to the nonmovant that the materiality hurdle is cleared." Martinez v. Colon, 54 F.3d 980, 983-84 (1st Cir. 1995).

In addition, when determining whether to grant summary judgment, the Court may not weigh the evidence. Casas Office Machs., Inc. v. Mita Copystar Am., Inc., 42 F.3d 668 (1st Cir. 1994). Summary judgment "admits of no room for credibility determinations, no room for the measured weighing of conflicting evidence such as the trial process entails." Id. (citing Greenburg v. P.R. Mar. Shipping Auth., 835 F.2d 932, 936 (1st Cir. 1987)). Accordingly, if the facts permit more than one reasonable inference, the court on summary judgment may not adopt the inference least favorable to the non-moving party. Casas Office Machs., 42 F.3d at 684.

While the moving party has the burden of initially establishing that there is "an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case," Maldonado-Denis v. Castillo-Rodriguez, 23 F.3d 576, 581 (1st Cir. 1984); the nonmovant has a "corresponding obligation [*11] to offer the court more than steamy rhetoric and bare conclusions." Lawton v. State Mut. Life Assurance Co. of Am., 101 F.3d 218, 223 (1st Cir. 1996). Furthermore, "the nonmovant must 'produce specific facts, in suitable evidentiary form' sufficient to limn a trialworthy issue. . . . Failure to do so allows the summary judgment engine to operate at full throttle." Id.; see also Kelly v. United States, 924 F.2d 355, 358 (1st Cir. 1991) (warning that "the decision to sit idly by and allow the summary judgment proponent to configure the record is likely to prove fraught with consequence."); Medina-Munoz, 896 F.2d at 8, (quoting Mack v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 871 F.2d 179, 181 (1st Cir. 1989)) (holding that "[t]he evidence illustrating the factual controversy cannot be conjectural or problematic; it must have substance in the sense that it limns differing versions of the truth which a factfinder must resolve.").

Local Rule 56(b), [6] moreover, requires the moving party to file annexed to the motion "a separate, short, and concise statement of material facts, set forth in numbered paragraphs, as to which the moving party contends there is no genuine issue of material fact to be tried." [*12] Unless the non-moving party controverts this statement, all the material facts set forth therein "shall be deemed to be admitted." Id.; Cosme-Rosado v. Serrano-Rodriguez, 360 F.3d 42 (1st Cir. 2004). This is the so-called "anti-ferret rule." See, e.g., Orbi, S.A. v. Calvesbert & Brown, 20 F. Supp. 2d 289, 291 (D.P.R. 1998). While failure to comply with this rule does not automatically warrant the granting of summary judgment, "it launches the nonmovant's case down the road toward an early dismissal." Tavarez v. Champion Prods., Inc., 903 F. Supp. 268, 270 (D.P.R. 1995).

Finally, antitrust cases are not shielded from summary judgment. See e.g., In Re Mun. Bond Reporting Antitrust Litig., 672 F.2d 436, 440 (5th Cir. 1982). "[I]f the facts 'do not at least outline or adumbrate' a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs 'will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust.'" Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984)(quoting Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Cos., 727 F.2d 648, 654 (7th Cir. 1984)).

Applicable Law and Analysis

Defendants assert various grounds in support of their motion for summary judgment. [*13] Namely, (1) that Plaintiffs cannot establish the essential elements of their claims; (2) that the relevant geographic market for the pharmacy business is far broader than the Villa Fontana Shopping Center given the availability of alternate sites for competition; (3) that Plaintiffs cannot prove harm to competition because the Puerto Rico Department of Health already found that competition is served since both El Amal and RPM are competing in the same market; (4) res judicata; (5) lack of monopoly power; and (6) failure to establish a conspiracy claim pursuant to antitrust law (Docket # 108). [7] Plaintiffs, on the other hand, have countered averring that material facts exist as to Defendants'

---

[6] Formerly codified at Local Rule 311(12).

[7] Defendants also filed a motion to dismiss (Docket # 105), which Plaintiffs opposed (Docket # 114). Given the fact that the parties have already engaged in discovery and that Plaintiffs sought to convert the motion to dismiss to one for summary judgment, we only consider in this Opinion Defendants' [*14] motion for summary judgement. Furthermore, since we are granting said motion, Defendants' motion to dismiss (Docket # 105) and all related pending motions (Dockets ## 113 & 153A) are hereby deemed as MOOT. In addition, Plaintiffs' motion to compel discovery (Docket # 90), to change the discovery schedule (Docket # 91), and Plaintiffs' motion submitting sworn statement in support of both motions (Docket # 125), as well as Defendants' motion to strike the reply to its opposition (Docket # 100) and Defendants' motion to strike the motion submitting sworn statement (Docket # 128) and its opposition (Docket # 133) are also deemed as MOOT. We note that the discovery requested in Plaintiffs' motion to compel, to wit, financial data for El Amal, even if granted, would not affect our decision as set forth in this Opinion.

violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (Docket # 115). Because we find it to be dispositive of the case, we will only address Defendants' arguments with respect to the relevant geographic market.

For purposes of this Opinion, we will assume arguendo that there is in fact an exclusive dealing agreement between Five and PMC. [8] As described by the First Circuit, an exclusive dealing contract is "[a] common arrangement that involves an agreement not to deal but is far from unlawful per se." E. Food Servs. v. Pontifical Catholic Univ. Servs. Ass'n, 357 F.3d 1, 4 (2004). [*15] Faced with such an agreement in this case, upon review, we find that the rule of reason governs our analysis. Plaintiffs have admitted as much. See Docket # 115 at p. 7. The alleged combination restraining trade in the instant case is vertical since the alleged agreement is between entities at different market levels. See United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). Vertical restraints are not illegal per se unless they include some agreement as to pricing levels. Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 735-36, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988). No such condition has been alleged, nor is there any evidence submitted on that point. Finally, courts have consistently held that restrictive covenants in shopping center leases are not per se violations of the antitrust laws. See e.g., Harold Friedman, Inc. v. Thorofare Markets, 587 F.2d 127 (3d Cir.1978); Dunafon v. Del. McDonald's Corp., 691 F. Supp. 1232 (W.D. Mo.1988); Child World, Inc. v. S. Towne Ctr., Ltd., 634 F. Supp. 1121 (S.D. Ohio 1986); Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Ctr. Assn., 472 F. Supp. 665 (N.D.N.Y.1979); Borman's, Inc. v. Great Scott Supermarkets, Inc., 433 F. Supp. 343, 348-50 (E.D. Mich. 1975); Dalmo Sales Co. v. Tysons's Corner Reg'l Shopping Ctr., 308 F. Supp. 988, 994 (D. D.C. 1970), [*16] aff'd, 139 U.S. App. D.C. 22, 429 F.2d 206 (D.C. Cir. 1970).

Since the rule of reason governs our analysis, in order to establish an antitrust violation in the instant case Plaintiffs have to show that the alleged arrangement among Defendants has anti-competitive effects outweighing the legitimate economic advantages that it might provide. E. Food Servs., 357 F. 3d at 5 (citing U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 595 (1st Cir. 1993)). [*17] Typically, under the rule of reason, this requires that "the arrangement in question create or enhance market power - meaning the power to control prices or exclude competition" since "absent market power there is ordinarily no detriment and no reason to engage in any weighing." Id. (citing IIA Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P 501 (2d ed. 2002); Oksanen v. Page Mem'l Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 709 (4th Cir. 1991)). Thus, it stems from this discussion that the identification of market power be our first step. See e.g., U.S. v. Visa, U.S.A., Inc., 344 F.3d 229, 238 (2d Cir. 2003); Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 666 (7th Cir. 1987).

In order to assess market power, we must first identify the economic market in which said power can be measured. The plaintiff carries the burden of defining the relevant market. Double D Spotting Serv., Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554 (8th Cir. 1998). Moreover, the relevant market is divided into two components: the product market and the geographic market. Bathke v. Casey's Gen. Stores, Inc., 64 F.3d 340, 345 (8th Cir. 1995)("Antitrust claims often rise or fall on the definition of the relevant market."). See VII Areeda, [*18] Antitrust Law P 1503b, at 376 (1986)("virtually all courts applying the rule of reason require the plaintiff to define the product and geographic market in which competition is allegedly restrained"). The disagreement in the instant case is circumscribed to the geographic market. [9] [8] Defendants reject the existence of an exclusive dealing agreement. To that effect, they have submitted the lease agreement circumscribed by PMC (El Amal) and Five Development. (Docket # 109, Exhibit 11). Upon review, we find that there is no exclusivity clause regarding the operation of a single pharmacy at the Villa Fontana Shopping Center. Instead, the agreement precludes PMC from opening additional El Amal pharmacies within a one mile radius from the mall. Moreover, the agreement states that "all of the agreements made are written in this contract, that no other additional agreements exist, and that any changes should be realized in writing and signed by both parties." Nonetheless, we do not reach the ultimate conclusion proposed by Plaintiffs nor do we find that we need to.

---

[9] At this point, we have to address Plaintiffs' contention that it is for the jury to determine what area comprises the relevant geographic market in any particular case. Having reviewed the relevant precedents, we differ from Plaintiffs' understanding. For example, in Double D Spotting Serv., Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554 (8th Cir. 1998), the Eight Circuit affirmed the district court's grant of the defendants' motion to dismiss, finding that, as a matter of law, the plaintiffs' alleged geographic market was too narrow to support an antitrust claim. Noticeably, in said case, the plaintiffs averred that the relevant geographic market was "The geographic market is defined by considering the commercial realities faced by consumers. It includes the geographic area in which consumers can practically seek alternative sources of the product, and it can be defined as 'the market area in which the seller operates.'" Double D. Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 560 (citations omitted) (quoting Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 ("The area of effective competition in the known line of commerce must be charted by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practically turn for supplies.)).

Plaintiffs contend that the relevant geographic market is the Villa Fontana Shopping Center because it is their understanding that, where pharmacies are concerned, parking is critical (Docket # 115, pp. 10-16). They have submitted their expert's (Heidie Calero) [*20] report to that effect as well their expert's reply to Defendants' expert's report [10] (Docket # 118, Exhibit 3; Docket # 153, Exhibit 4). The Calero report tracks the relationship between the number of prescriptions sold and the number of parking spaces at selected El Amal stores. The analysis yields a positive relationship of .69 (Docket # 118, Exhibit 3, p. 10). However, as pointed out by Defendants and their expert in his report, said analysis fails to consider other relevant variables, such as the flow of traffic in the particular shopping center (Docket # 136, Exhibit # 22). Although we concede that the availability of multiple parking spaces makes a location convenient, the lack thereof does not impede prescription drug clientele from seeking and reaching alternative locations.

The Fifth Circuit has recently considered and rejected the convenience argument. Apani S.W., Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enters., Inc., 300 F.3d 620 (5th Cir. 2002). In said case, the city had granted the defendant [*21] marketer exclusive rights to sell bottled water on facilities owned or operated by the city, which totaled twenty-seven (27). The plaintiff, a manufacturer of purified bottled water, sued alleging illegal combination or conspiracy between the city and the defendant marketer. The plaintiff suggested that the twenty-seven city owned facilities were the relevant geographic market. He defended this definition with the premise that a patron attending an event at a City-owned facility would not likely cross the street to purchase a beverage at a convenience store where competing products may be displayed.

The plaintiff's geographic market definition was found to be legally insufficient as a matter of law. The Fifth Circuit held that:

> Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient . . . .

Id. at 628. In reaching this conclusion, the Fifth Circuit pointed to the district [*22] court's finding that the plaintiff could do business in other locations and in fact had done so. The Fifth Circuit also upheld the district court's conclusion that the injury to competition was not sufficiently significant to rise to the level of an antitrust violation.

In a more extreme case, Elliott v. United Ctr., 126 F.3d 1003 (7th Cir. 1997), a licensed peanut vendor who formerly sold peanuts outside the United Center, an entertainment complex, sued the United Center on the grounds that its policy of prohibiting patrons from bringing food into the complex violated the Sherman Act. According to the vendor, the relevant geographic market was comprised by the "market for food concessions within and around the United Center itself." The district court dismissed the vendor's antitrust claim finding that the vendor failed to adequately identify a relevant geographic market. In affirming the district court's ruling, the Seventh Circuit stated that: the Supervalu warehouse in Urbandale, Iowa. The plaintiffs in Double D Spotting Service, Inc. challenged a contract between the owner of one particular warehouse within the Des Moines metropolitan area and one unloading service provider. The contract gave the unloading [*19] service provider all of the unloading services at that particular warehouse. The Eighth Circuit found that "the market for unloading services would seem to be more properly defined as including all warehouses within, at least, the entire Des Moines, Iowa, metropolitan area, if not an even larger area." Id. at 560-61.

---

[10] Ironically, Plaintiffs' expert also concluded that the Department of Health's criteria of a one mile radius was too narrow to analyze real competition in the market (Docket # 153, Exhibit 4, pp. 199-200).

> The logic of Elliott's argument would mean that exclusive restaurants could no longer require customers to purchase their wines only at the establishment, because the restaurant would be 'monopolizing' the sale of wine within its interior. [*23] Movie theaters, which traditionally (and notoriously) earn a substantial portion of their revenue from the sales of candies, popcorn, and soda, would be required by the antitrust laws to allow patrons to bring their own food.

Id. at 1005.

The First Circuit has similarly rejected narrow market definitions as the one proposed in the instant case. In Eastern Food Services, Inc., the First Circuit affirmed the district court's rejection of the plaintiff's proposed market as "extremely narrow" and not "large enough so as to constitute an economically significant area of commerce." 357 F.3d at 3. The plaintiff, who provided food services, sued the university and a vendor after the vendor and the university entered into an exclusive dealing arrangement for vending machines on campus. The First Circuit noted that "[f]rom the outset, Eastern's description of what happened raises warning flags for anyone familiar with antitrust law. The university, like most landlords, controls who may set up shop on its premises." Id. at 4. Nonetheless, the First Circuit continued and found that foreclosure in the campus segment of the market did not prevent the plaintiff from distributing its products at other [*24] outlets. Thus, the First Circuit highlighted, "except in special circumstances, a contract restricting a small percentage of a larger available market will have no anti-competitive effect on that market." Id. at 7.

Ignoring this precedent, Plaintiffs look to an unpublished opinion to support their arguments, namely, Pay Less Drug Stores Northwest, Inc. v. City Products Corp., 1975 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11847, 1975 WL 906 (D. Oregon 1975). However, in said case, the district court did not make a determination as to the relevant geographic market. In invalidating the exclusivity clause, the district court nonetheless found that "[b]ecause of the physical characteristics of the area, the dynamics of the market and the unavailability of alternate sites in the vicinity, a site within the Oregon City shopping center is the only place from which the plaintiff can compete effectively in the market serviced by the center." *Id.1975 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11847, at *6, [WL] at 2 (emphasis added). This case is clearly distinguishable from the instant case, since RPM has already set up shop at a new location. As noted later by the Northern District of New York:

> It is significant that in the only case in which an exclusivity clause in a shopping center lease was invalidated Pay Less Drug Stores Northwest, Inc. v. City Products Corp., supra [*25] the court found that alternate sites in the area were unavailable, and that a site within the shopping center in question was the only place from which the plaintiff could effectively compete in the market. This is not the case here.

Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Ctr. Assocs., 472 F. Supp. 665, 677 (N.D.N.Y. 1979). After being denied renewal of the lease, RPM was able to open a pharmacy 482.28 meters from the Villa Fontana Shopping Center. In approving RPM's request to transfer its Certificate of Necessity and Convenience ("CNC"), the Puerto Rico Department of Health recognized that there are five other pharmacies - Farmacia Amiga, Farmacia Walgreens, Farmacia Monserrate, Farmacia Puerto de Carolina, and super Farmacia Carolina - within a one mile radius from RPM's location. [11] (Docket # 142, Exhibit # 6). Although this location may not be as ideal as Plaintiffs' original spot at the Villa Fontana Shopping Center, this is not enough to establish antitrust injury. See Double D Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 561 ("Disappointment at not receiving one unloading contract at one particular warehouse is insufficient as a matter of law to rise to the level of an antitrust violation [*26] within a relevant market.").

Plaintiffs also rely on Harold Friedman, Inc. v. Thorofare Markets, Inc., 587 F.2d 127 (3d Cir. 1978). Yet, in said case, there is no analysis of the relevant geographic market. Thus, it has no bearing on our discussion. Noticeably, as cited by Plaintiffs in their opposition to Defendants' instant motion, the Third Circuit recognized that "[a] final conclusion regarding the reasonableness of the restraint in this case must also await some evaluation of the relevant geographic market." Id. at 144.

---

[11] The P.R. Department of Health's studies are limited to a one mile radius.

Finally, Plaintiffs rely on Morales-Villalobos v. Garcia-Llorens, 316 F.3d 51 (1st Cir. 2003). However, they misinterpret the case, representing that the First Circuit recognized that, under appropriate circumstances, a relevant geographic market can be as small as the two hospitals in Arecibo. The plaintiff in said case was foreclosed from providing services in the entire town of Arecibo as a result of the exclusive dealing agreement since there were only two hospitals in the entire municipality. [12] The First Circuit reversed the district court's dismissal for failure to plead a relevant [*27] market finding that the matter could not be resolved on the face of the complaint. The First Circuit stressed the plaintiff's allegation that she was foreclosed from the outlets reasonably available to her and that, as an anesthesiologist, the primary outlets for her services ordinarily are hospitals and clinics. That is clearly not the situation here. [13] Plaintiffs have had an opportunity to conduct discovery as to the geographic market and have submitted their proof to that effect. Moreover, Plaintiffs have not been foreclosed from other outlets; they were able to open a new pharmacy at a different location within the same general area, although not in a shopping center. [14]

We are not treading uncharted waters. Numerous courts have addressed exclusivity clauses in shopping centers. [15] In addressing the specific issue of shopping centers, the Eleventh Circuit has asserted that "[a] precise definition of the geographic market is required, not space within regional shopping centers." Am. Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 n.7 (11th Cir. 1985) (citing Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580(1961)). Additionally, for example, in Dunafon v. Delaware McDonald's Corporation, 691 F. Supp. 1232 (W.D. Mo. 1988), [*29] McDonald's had entered into an exclusive lease agreement with the owner of the mall. The plaintiff, restaurant owner, wanted to lease space in the mall and open a Taco Bell within the shopping center. The court found that the record did not establish that the restriction had any substantial anti-competitive effect. In addressing the specific issue of the relevant geographic market, the court concluded that it included the geographic area within which consumers were able to turn for other food-service and that this area included locations outside the mall in question. The court also found that the plaintiff was free to purchase or lease other parcels of land at other locations and that "[t]he fact that plaintiff cannot place a Taco Bell restaurant at his ideal selection site does not establish that there is a restriction of sites available to competitors generally and thus an exclusion from the relevant market." Id. at 1242.

In sum, the Villa Fontana Shopping Center does not contain an "appreciable segment of the product market." Earl W. Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law: Volume IV, Mergers & Markets § 38.2 (1984). The relevant market is the "area of effective competition" in which competitors generally are willing to compete for the consumer potential, and not

---

[12] The First Circuit also pointed out that the plaintiff would not be able to provide her services at a neighboring municipality since the doctors she serviced did not have any privileges there.

[13] Perhaps if Plaintiffs wanted to track the First Circuit's case and insist on the importance of parking spaces, they should have alleged a wider market, such as all the shopping centers in Carolina, if applicable.

[14] Plaintiffs limited their search for new venues to a 500 meters radius in order to avoid having to obtain a [*28] new CNC (Docket # 118, SUF # 30). Per Defendants' statement of uncontested facts, there are nine (9) shopping strip malls in addition to other commercial leaseable space in the area between 65th Infantry Ave., Sanchez Osorio Ave. and Monserrate Ave. in Carolina, approximately one mile radius from the Villa Fontana Shopping Mall (Docket # 109, SUF # 5). Plaintiffs have countered asserting that of those nine (9) centers, two have El Amal pharmacies (Docket # 118, PP 3- 4). However, this does not mean that Plaintiffs are foreclosed from obtaining a location, as evidenced by the fact that Plaintiffs have moved to a new location which contains five (5) parking spaces (Docket # 118, Exhibit 3, p. 5).

[15] See, e.g., Deauville Corp. v. Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 756 F.2d 1183 (5th Cir. 1985) (finding that the plaintiff had failed to show that the exclusive lease agreement with the anchor tenant adversely affected competition since it failed to show that competition [*30] from alternative mall sites was precluded); Child World, Inc. v. S. Towne Ctr., Ltd., 634 F. Supp. 1121 (S.D. Ohio 1986)(upholding restrictive covenant in shopping center); Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Ctr. Assocs., 472 F. Supp. 665 (N.D.N.Y. 1979) ("The availability of such market alternatives is an important factor that supports a determination that the exclusivity clause here does not unreasonably restrain competition."); Goodman v. Acme Markets, Inc., 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4260, 1989 WL 42484 (E.D. Pa. 1989)("A restrictive covenant which excludes the sale of grocery items within one-half mile of the Acme does not substantially affect the market for grocery items.").

the market area of a single company. Am. Key Corp., 762 F.2d at 1581 (citing Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 327-29). Counting only with one pharmacy, the Villa Fontana Shopping Center is not economically [*31] significant. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 336-37, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)("The geographic market selected must, therefore, both 'correspond to the commercial realities' of the industry and be economically significant."); Apani Southwest, Inc., 300 F.3d at 627. Plaintiffs' suit is geared at gaining access to an ideal location. However, "antitrust claims are concerned not with wrongs directed against the private interest of an individual business but with conduct that stifles competition. E. Food Servs., 357 F.3d at 4 (citing Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 344). "It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Bathke, 64 F.3d at 344 (quoting Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, 509 U.S. 209, 224, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)). Moreover, "harm does not mean a simple loss of business or even the demise of a competitor but an impairment of the competitive structure of the market." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57 (1st Cir. 2004)(citing Brown Shoe Co. 370 U.S. at 344).

Because we find that Plaintiffs have not met their burden of establishing a viable geographic market, we need not go further in our [*32] analysis. Nevertheless, we note El Amal's position of "anchor tenant" at the Villa Fontana Shopping Center [16] and that the relevant jurisprudence has recognized the importance of anchor tenants in regional shopping centers. See Deauville Corp. v. Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 756 F.2d 1183 (5th Cir. 1985)("Successful regional shopping malls require 'anchor tenants.'"). Moreover, "antitrust laws do not compel a company to do business with anyone or to adjust the mix of mall tenants." Am. Key Corp., 762 F.2d at 1578 (citing United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919)).

The inquiry into the relevant geographic market is essential to both Plaintiffs' Section 1 and Section 2 claims under the Sherman Act. Double D Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F. 3d at 560. See Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. 373 F.3d at 66 (finding it "critical to any attack on the exclusive dealing arrangement--and almost any other non-per-se claim one could imagine--that plaintiffs establish a relevant market and harm within it"). Because we have found that Plaintiffs' proposed market is too narrow, [*33] we necessarily GRANT Defendants' motion for summary judgment on Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. Finally, because we are dismissing Plaintiffs' antitrust claims, Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief is MOOT.

Supplemental Claims

Having dismissed all of Plaintiffs' federal claims, we will similarly dismiss Plaintiffs' Commonwealth law claims. See Newman v. Burgin, 930 F.2d 955, 963 (1st Cir. 1991)("[t]he power of a federal court to hear and to determine state-law claims in non-diversity cases depends upon the presence of at least one 'substantial' federal claim in the law suit."). Accordingly, Plaintiffs' supplemental law claims are hereby DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Conclusion

For the reasons set herein, Defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED. Thus, Plaintiffs' federal law claims are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE, and Plaintiffs' supplemental law claims are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Judgment shall be entered accordingly.

SO ORDERED.

In San Juan, Puerto Rico, this 3rd day of May, 2005.

S/ Salvador E. Casellas

---

[16] El Amal leases at Villa Fontana Shopping Center over five times the amount of space which RPM leased (Docket # 118, SUF # 37).

United States District Judge

Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

May 4, 2007, Decided ; May 4, 2007, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NUMBER 03-2390 REF: ALL CASES SECTION "L" (5)

Reporter

520 F. Supp. 2d 815 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33315 **

JAMES HAROLD MOORE, JR., ET AL. VERSUS STATE FARM MUTUAL AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANY, ET AL.

Subsequent History: Partial summary judgment denied by, Summary judgment denied by, Motion denied by Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63574 (E.D. La., Aug. 24, 2007)

Reconsideration denied by Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63576 (E.D. La., Aug. 24, 2007)

Prior History: Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75439 (E.D. La., Oct. 6, 2006)

Core Terms

termination, insureds, injunctive relief, coverage, counterclaim, damages, summary judgment, staff, allegations, appointment, reasons, parties, summary judgment motion, insurance agency, policies, insurance policy, antitrust, insurance company, health insurance, Cross-Motion, injunction, licensed, motions, affirmative defense, seek damages, anticompetitive, restraining, secrets, Vacate

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Nonparties Affected by Judgment

HN1[] Remedies, Injunctions

Although a district court can grant injunctive relief to non-parties, it may only do so if necessary to give the named plaintiffs the continuing relief to which they are entitled.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment will be granted only if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions, together with affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

When considering a motion for summary judgment, a court must review the facts drawing all inferences most favorable to the party opposing the motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN4[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

If the party moving for summary judgment demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, the nonmovant must go beyond the pleadings and designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The per se rule has not been applied to collective refusals to deal where exclusionary or coercive conduct is not present. The United States Supreme Court has made it clear that departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than upon formalistic line drawing. In applying the rule of reason analysis, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. In general, any potential anticompetitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the alleged restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed. However, in an antitrust case summary judgment is still appropriate where the plaintiff does not produce significant probative evidence demonstrating that a genuine issue of (material) fact exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN6[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The United States Supreme Court has stated that with respect to group boycott, the boycotters and the ultimate target need not be in a competitive relationship with each other. Indeed, the Supreme Court has also found the Sherman Act to be applicable to concerted refusals to deal in cases where the target is a customer of some or all of the conspirators who is being denied access to desired goods or services because of a refusal to accede to particular terms set by some or all of the sellers. In these circumstances, however, an antitrust injury must reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has held that as a matter of law, the termination of a dealer by a supplier lacking market power cannot have an adverse effect on competition.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Policy Interpretation > Question of Law

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN8[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

The interpretation of an insurance contract is typically a question of law that can be properly resolved in a motion for summary judgment.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Insurance Law > ... > Policy Interpretation > Ambiguous Terms > Construction Against Insurers

Insurance Law > ... > Policy Interpretation > Ambiguous Terms > Coverage Favored

Insurance Law > ... > Policy Interpretation > Ambiguous Terms > Unambiguous Terms

HN9[] Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

Under Louisiana law, an insurance policy is an agreement between the parties and is interpreted using ordinary contract principles. Therefore, when the words of the policy are clear, unambiguously express the intent of the parties, and lead to no absurd consequences, the contract must be enforced as written. If, however, the words of the policy are ambiguous, the ambiguous provision is to be construed against the drafter and in favor of the insured.

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > Determination

Insurance Law > Liability & Performance Standards > Good Faith & Fair Dealing > Indemnification

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN10[] Amount in Controversy, Determination

In actions seeking declaratory or injunctive relief, it is well established that the amount in controversy is measured by the value of the object of the litigation.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN11[] Measurement of Damages, Foreseeable Damages

La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1997 provides that an obligor who acts in bad faith is liable for all damages, foreseeable or not, that are a direct consequence of his failure to perform. La. Civ. Code. Ann. art. 1997.

Insurance Law > ... > Business Insurance > Commercial General Liability Insurance > Damages

Insurance Law > Liability & Performance Standards > Good Faith & Fair Dealing > Indemnification

HN12[] Commercial General Liability Insurance, Damages

For purposes of an insurer's obligation to pay "damages," such word has an accepted technical meaning in law.

Counsel: [1] For James Harold Moore, Jr, Jim Moore Insurance Agency, Inc., Plaintiffs: Tommy Wood Thornhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chadwick William Collings, Thornhill & Collings, LC, Slidell, LA.

For James Harold Moore, Jr, CA 06-3515, Jim Moore Insurance Agency, Inc., CA 06-3515, Blanche A. Moore, CA 06-3515, Consol Plaintiffs: Tommy Wood Thornhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chadwick William Collings, Mitchell A. Palmer, Thornhill & Collings, LC, Slidell, LA.

For State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company, State Farm Life Insurance Company, Defendants: Mark N. Mallery, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesewetter Wise Kaplan Prather, PLC, New Orleans, LA; Christine M. White, Christopher E. Moore, Coats / Rose, New Orleans, LA; Thomas Landers Watson, II, McGlinchey Stafford, PLLC, New Orleans, LA.

For State Farm General Insurance Company, State Farm Fire and Casualty Company, Defendants: Christine M. White, Christopher E. Moore, Coats / Rose, New Orleans, LA.

For State Farm Mutual Fire & Casualty Company, erroneously sued as State Farm Fire & Casualty Company, State Farm Mutual General Insurance Company, erroneously sued as State Farm General Insurance Company, Defendants: Mark N. Mallery, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesewetter [2] Wise Kaplan Prather, PLC, New Orleans, LA; Christine M. White, Christopher E. Moore, Coats / Rose, New Orleans, LA.

For Mary Bitzer, Vice President of State Farm in her individual capacity, Defendant: Mark N. Mallery, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesewetter Wise Kaplan Prather, PLC, New Orleans, LA; Christopher E. Moore, Coats / Rose, New Orleans, LA.

For Fortis Insurance Company, Defendant: Harry Rosenberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher Michael Capitelli, Christopher K. Ralston, Phelps Dunbar, LLP, New Orleans, LA.

For American Home Assurance Company, CA 06-3515, Consol Defendant: Robert J. David, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Sue Nations, Juneau Law Firm, Lafayette, LA.

For State Farm Fire & Casualty Company, CA 06-3515, Consol Defendant: Thomas Glenn Buck, LEAD ATTORNEY, Brett Wayne Tweedel, John Covington Henry, Blue Williams, L.L.P., Metairie, LA; Thomas Landers Watson, II, McGlinchey Stafford, PLLC, New Orleans, LA.

For State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company, State Farm Life Insurance Company, State Farm Fire and Casualty Company, State Farm General Insurance Company, Counter Claimants: Mark N. Mallery, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesewetter Wise Kaplan Prather, PLC, New Orleans, [3] LA; Christopher E. Moore, Coats / Rose, New Orleans, LA; Thomas Landers Watson, II, McGlinchey Stafford, PLLC, New Orleans, LA.

For Blanche Moore, Moore Insurance Agency, James Harold Moore, Jr, Jim Moore Insurance Agency, Inc., Counter Defendants: Tommy Wood Thornhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chadwick William Collings, Thornhill & Collings, LC, Slidell, LA.

For State Farm Mutual Fire & Casualty Company, erroneously sued as State Farm Fire & Casualty Company, State Farm Mutual General Insurance Company, erroneously sued as State Farm General Insurance Company, Counter Claimants: Mark N. Mallery, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesewetter Wise Kaplan Prather, PLC, New Orleans, LA; Christopher E. Moore, Coats / Rose, New Orleans, LA.

For Blanche A. Moore, CA 06-3515, Counter Defendant: Tommy Wood Thornhill, Thornhill & Collings, LC, Slidell, LA.

Judges: Eldon E. Fallon, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Eldon E. Fallon

Opinion

[*817] ORDER & REASONS

James Harold Moore, Jr. was a State Farm insurance agent for approximately twenty-five years. But Mr. Moore's relationship with State Farm began to sour several years ago, and has since sprawled into a number of lawsuits in courts around the country. [4] The continuing addition of parties to the instant litigation has caused the cases in this District to travel between no fewer than four Sections in the past four years. Having been recently assigned to preside over the dispute, the Court now enters an omnibus order resolving a number of outstanding motions.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Factual History

In 1982, Mr. Moore entered into an individual agent's agreement with State Farm, allowing him to solicit insurance business [*818] on behalf of the company. In 1989, the parties agreed to shift the form of the relationship to one of corporate agency. Accordingly, on March 1, 1989, Mr. Moore and his corporation, Jim Moore Insurance Agency, Inc. (collectively, "Moore"), entered into a corporate agency agreement (known as the "AA4 (Inc.)" agreement) with State Farm, thereby terminating the individual agency agreement. [1]

[5] For more than a decade, Moore's licensed staff members could do everything except bind coverage in their own name and pay claims. In 1995, however, State Farm implemented Clerical Employee ("CE") Agreements for its agents' staff. The CE agreements authorized agents' staff to bind coverage in their own name and pay claims. Moore and his staff took advantage of this arrangement.

[1] The Court has previously held that by virtue of the shift to corporate agency, Mr. Moore cannot assert any rights under the 1982 individual agency agreement. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., No. 03-2390, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75439, 2006 WL 2925445 (E.D. La. Oct. 10, 2006).

In 1999, State Farm attempted to implement a more restrictive program with the "Licensed Staff Agreement" ("LSA"). The LSA is a three-party contract between State Farm, its agents, and the agents' employees who are licensed to sell insurance. Moore alleges that the LSA improperly gives State Farm certain control over his employees, including the contractual power to terminate them at will. The LSA also imposes on agents and their staff an obligation to protect State Farm's trade secrets and includes a one-year restriction on former staff members' ability to have any contact with State Farm policyholders upon their separation of employment from the agent. [2]

[6] The LSA arrangement was purportedly voluntary. However, any licensed staff who failed to sign an LSA by April 1, 2001 would no longer be considered "appointed" by State Farm to transact business. In 2000, Mr. Moore and one of his staff members, Bettye Candies, signed the LSA but reserved their rights pursuant to the AA4 Inc. agency contract. The reservation of rights was rejected by State Farm. Moreover, on February 26, 2001, State Farm terminated the CE agreement of Bettye Candies, and she subsequently resigned, leaving Moore with only one licensed staff member, Cathleen Zuppardo. On August 23, 2002, State Farm placed Moore on "non-submission only" status because Ms. Zuppardo was continuing to provide quotes and assist with applications, activities which are, according to State Farm, reserved for LSA staff only. This has prevented Moore from accepting new business from both existing and new clients. State Farm formally terminated the AA4 Inc. agency agreement with Moore on April 4, 2005.

In addition, in July 2000, State Farm began to market and sell individual health insurance policies underwritten by Fortis Insurance Company. Moore was appointed to sell such policies, but allegedly [7] without his knowledge or consent. In 2003, following the above disputes with State Farm, Fortis terminated Moore's appointment [*819] to sell its products as well. Moore has asserted various claims against both State Farm and Fortis with respect this separate appointment and termination.

B. Procedural History

On August 22, 2003, Moore filed suit in this Court against State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company, State Farm Life Insurance Company, State Farm Mutual Fire & Casualty Company, and State Farm Mutual General Insurance Company (collectively, the "State Farm" defendants). In general, Moore alleges that State Farm has improperly interfered with his insurance business, causing significant economic and noneconomic losses. Specifically, Moore seeks damages for breach of contract, intentional infliction of emotional distress, intentional interference with employment and contractual relationships, antitrust injuries, negligence, and various other state law violations. In January 2004, the bulk of Moore's claims survived State Farm's Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., No. 03-2390, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 815, 2004 WL 137853 (E.D. La. Jan. 21, 2004). [8] [3]

On December 10, 2004, Moore filed a motion for leave to file a Second Amended Complaint, which, according to State Farm, disclosed confidential and propriety information and trade secrets. On December 20, 2004, State Farm's request for a temporary restraining order ("TRO") was granted, sealing Moore's motion for leave to file and requiring that all related filings be sealed as well. The TRO remained in effect until February 14, 2005, when Judge Livaudais (1) dissolved the TRO with respect to all filings except Exhibits C and D to the Second Amended

[2] The issue of whether State Farm breached its AA4 Inc. agency contract with Moore by implementing the LSA program appears to have been fully and finally litigated in California state court. See Patricia Adkins Ins. Agency, Inc. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 146 Cal. App. 4th 526, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 882 (Cal. Ct. App. 2007) (finding that the LSA program breached the AA4 agreement), petition for review denied, 2007 Cal. LEXIS 4071 (Cal. Apr. 18, 2007). However, until the preclusive effect, if any, of the Adkins case on the claims in the instant litigation can be determined, the Court will defer consideration of several outstanding motions that address issues of liability filed by parties that were litigants in the Adkins case.

[3] However, Moore's claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress upon the corporate agency was dismissed.

Complaint, and (2) issued a preliminary injunction sealing Exhibits C and D and prohibiting Moore from disclosing certain proprietary information. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., No. 03-2390, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2444, 2005 WL 399395 (E.D. La. Feb. 14, 2005). The Second Amended Complaint has now been dismissed in its entirety. See Minute Entry [9] dated June 22, 2005 (Rec. Doc. 122); Minute Entry dated April 12, 2006 (Rec. Doc. 250).

On June 22, 2005, Judge Livaudais granted in part Moore's request for injunctive relief (Rec. Doc. 57), enjoining State Farm from interfering with his right to conduct insurance agency business in Louisiana. See Rec. Doc. 122. The next day, the Court also found that the names, addresses, and general policy information of State Farm's insureds are not trade secrets, but did not specifically address Moore's request that State Farm be enjoined from restraining individual insureds from using such information. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., No. 03-2390, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13409 , 2005 WL 1573938 (E.D. La. June 23, 2005). State Farm took an interlocutory appeal and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit vacated part of the June 23, 2005 Order and Reasons and has remanded for consideration of whether Moore has standing to seek injunctive relief on behalf of State Farm's insureds. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 205 F. App'x 218 (5th Cir. 2006). The Fifth Circuit declined to address Judge Livaudais' finding that the policyholder information is not [10] a trade secret.

On June 22, 2005, Moore was also granted leave to file a Third Amended Complaint, which added twenty-eight new factual allegations in support of eight new [*820] counts against State Farm and several new defendants, including Mary Bitzer, a State Farm corporate officer, and Fortis Insurance Company. [4] On June 7, 2006, the Court granted in part State Farm's motion to dismiss certain allegations in the Third Amended Complaint. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 439 F. Supp. 2d 615 (E.D. La. 2006), reconsideration denied, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54560, 2006 WL 2067714 (E.D. La. July 19, 2006).

In response, State Farm has asserted a counterclaim against Mr. Moore, his corporation, and his wife Blanche Moore (collectively, now, "Plaintiffs"). In the counterclaim, State Farm alleges that the Plaintiffs intentionally converted [11] insurance policies written and serviced by State Farm and sold their interest in such policies to an independent insurance agency owned and operated by Mrs. Moore. State Farm further alleges that the Plaintiffs printed and improperly removed copies of thousands of pages of policyholder information to their home. State Farm seeks several declarations that the Plaintiffs breached their contractual obligations by virtue of these activities and requests associated injunctive relief.

Lastly, the Plaintiffs filed a separate action in this District on July 7, 2006, seeking a declaration that they are entitled to indemnity and defense coverage from their insurers American Home Assurance Company and State Farm Fire & Casualty Company for the claims made against them by the other State Farm entities in the underlying consolidated litigation. The Plaintiffs' requests for coverage have repeatedly been denied by both insurers, forcing the Plaintiffs to finance this litigation themselves.

II. LAW & ANALYSIS

There are multiple outstanding motions in this litigation. As noted, the Court will defer consideration of several motions on questions of liability, as the parties are currently [12] briefing the issue of whether the related California state-court litigation has any preclusive effect on the instant cases. [5] However, a number of motions can be resolved at this time. The Court will address these motions separately and issue its respective orders at the end of each subsection. The Court will conclude by summarizing all of its orders in one location.

---

[4] However, the Court struck that portion of the first paragraph of the Third Amended Complaint which sought to add as party defendants unspecified State Farm subsidiaries.

[5] Specifically, the Court defers ruling on the following motions: Rec. Doc. 338, Rec. Doc. 345, Rec. Doc. 359, Rec. Doc. 382, Rec. Doc. 396, Rec. Doc. 413, Rec. Doc. 431, Rec. Doc. 459, and Rec. Doc. 490.

A. Remand of June 23, 2005 Order and Reasons

The Fifth Circuit has remanded Judge Livaudais' Order and Reasons dated June 23, 2005 (Rec. Doc. 123), which discusses, among other things, Moore's Motion for Injunctive Relief (Rec. Doc. 57) and State Farm's Motion to Strike Motion for Injunctive Relief (Rec. Doc. 72). In addition, State Farm has filed two motions with respect to these issues: (1) a Motion to Vacate (Rec. Doc. 433) the preliminary [13] injunction granting the relief requested in Paragraph A of Moore's motion and (2) a Motion to Set Oral Argument (Rec. Doc. 435) concerning Paragraph C of Moore's motion (Rec. Doc. 435). [6]

[*821] 1. Paragraph A

At the original hearing on Moore's motion, Judge Livaudais granted the relief requested in Paragraph A, prohibiting "any interference by State Farm in the right of Moore and/or the Moore Agency to conduct insurance agency business as licensed insurance agents in the state of Louisiana." With respect to Paragraph A, the Fifth Circuit has held that State Farm failed to preserve its objection to the granting of this relief. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 205 F. App'x 218, 219 (5th Cir. 2006). Accordingly, this Court will not revisit Paragraph A of Moore's [14] motion, and instead will allow the preliminary injunction to stay in place pending a final resolution of this case on the merits. Therefore, IT IS ORDERED that State Farm's Motion to Vacate (Rec. Doc. 433) is DENIED.

2. Paragraph C

In Paragraph C, Moore sought to enjoin State Farm from restraining "the use by individual customers of their name, address or policy information which State Farm contends is 'trade secrets' that have been released to third parties, released to Moore for use in the NFIP Insurance Program and are therefore no longer subject to any claim of trade secrecy." Judge Livaudais discussed this request, but found that "the names, addresses and general policy information of State Farms' insureds belong to the insureds. Each insured may disclose that information at will, and to anyone for any purpose." See *Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., No. 03-2390, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13409, 2005 WL 1573938, at 2 (E.D. La. June 23, 2005). Thus, Judge Livaudais "granted in part" Paragraph C of Moore's motion. However, the Fifth Circuit has vacated this ruling and remanded for clarification. See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 205 F. App'x 218, 220-21 (5th Cir. 2006). [15] [7]

As the Fifth Circuit noted, "the only relief Moore sought under paragraph C was to prohibit State Farm from restraining the use by individual customers of their own policy information." See Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 205 F. App'x 218, 220 (5th Cir. 2006). HN1[] Although a district court "can grant injunctive relief to non-parties," it may only do so "if necessary to give the named plaintiffs the continuing relief to which they are entitled." Great W. Directories, Inc. v. Sw. Bell Tel. Co., 63 F.3d 1378, 1391 (5th Cir. 1995). This Court agrees with Judge Livaudais' conclusion that Moore would not have been entitled to injunctive relief even if he had sought to enjoin "State Farm from enforcing the contractual provisions that prohibit plaintiffs from using [16] [customer information] to solicit business from State Farm's insureds." *2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13409, 2005 WL 1573938, at 2 (emphasis added). A fortiori, Moore cannot obtain such relief for non-parties. Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that Moore's Motion for Injunctive Relief (Rec. Doc. 57) is DENIED IN PART with respect to Paragraph C, and that State Farm's Motion to Strike (Rec. Doc. 72) is GRANTED IN PART with respect to Paragraph C. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that State Farm's Motion to Set Oral Argument (Rec. Doc. 435) is DENIED AS MOOT.

[6] To be consistent, the Court will continue to refer to the relief requested in Moore's motion alphabetically by paragraph. To be precise, Moore requests relief in various subparagraphs of section XXVII of his motion.

[7] Judge Livaudais denied Moore's remaining requests for relief in Paragraphs B, D, E, F, and G of his motion by granting State Farm's motion to strike. These rulings have not been challenged and remain in place.

B. Fortis Appointment and Termination

As noted above, in July 2000 State Farm began to market and sell individual health [*822] insurance policies underwritten by Fortis Insurance Company. Moore was appointed to sell such policies, but allegedly without his knowledge or consent. In 2003, following the above disputes with State Farm, Fortis terminated Moore's appointment to sell its products as well. Moore has asserted various claims against both State Farm and Fortis with respect this separate appointment and termination. Fortis now moves for summary judgment on all of Moore's claims against it.

HN2[] Summary judgment will be granted only if the pleadings, depositions, [17] answers to interrogatories, and admissions, together with affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. HN3[] When considering a motion for summary judgment, the Court must "review the facts drawing all inferences most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Gen. Universal Sys., Inc. v. Lee, 379 F.3d 131, 137 (5th Cir. 2004). HN4[] If the party moving for summary judgment demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact "the nonmovant must go beyond the pleadings and designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Willis v. Roche Biomedical Lab., 61 F.3d 313, 315 (5th Cir. 1995).

In Count 11 of Moore's Amended and Restated Complaint, he alleges that State Farm and Fortis violated both federal and state antitrust law:

> State Farm and Fortis Insurance Company committed an act of boycott when it conspired to restrain trade by terminating Moore's agency appointment with Fortis. This termination resulted in an unreasonable restraint of Moore's agency's health [18] insurance sales. Since the termination of Moore's agency's appointment with Fortis, its clients have been denied access to health insurance which has resulted in damage to competition in the health insurance market. Moore's agency can no longer provide health insurance to its clients or prospective clients in his geographical market area.

(Am. & Restated Compl. P EEE.) [8] The only other allegation against Fortis appears in Count 16 of the Third Amended Complaint, which seeks "damages from both State Farm and Fortis for their actions terminating the authority of Moore and/or the Moore Agency to sell health insurance at the direction of State Farm for reasons that are totally unrelated to the contracts comprising the law between the parties." The Court previously found that, taking the allegations in Moore's four complaints together, "his claims against Fortis pass Rule 8(a) muster." See Order and Reasons dated March 15, 2006, at 6 (Rec. Doc. 222).

[19] Moore contends that pursuant to Fashion Originators' Guild of America v. Federal Trade Commission, 312 U.S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949, 32 F.T.C. 1856 (1941), a per se rule of illegality should apply to the allegations of group boycott in this case, presumably because he views the alleged restraint as a horizontal combination, rendering proof of anticompetitive effects unnecessary. However, for the most part, Moore relies on populist era case law that is no longer controlling. Regardless, the Court finds that this case "contains no horizontal aspect, but involves only a vertical action undertaken by suppliers, the insurance company defendants, against [*823] their agent." Blackburn v. Crum & Forster, 611 F.2d 102, 104 (5th Cir. 1980).

Moreover, HN5[] "the per se rule has not been applied to collective refusals to deal" where "exclusionary or coercive conduct" is not present. E.A. McQuade Tours, Inc. v. Consol. Air Tour Manual Comm., 467 F.2d 178, 187 (5th Cir. 1972); see also Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210, 215-16 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (collecting authorities). The United States Supreme Court has made it clear that "departure from the [20] rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than as in [8] Despite these allegations, Moore did not name Fortis as a defendant in the Amended and Restated Complaint. However, Fortis was named in the Third Amended Complaint, which incorporated all prior allegations by reference. Accordingly, the Court addresses Moore's claims against Fortis in Count 11 on their merits.

Schwinn upon formalistic line drawing." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977). Accordingly, the Court finds that Moore's antitrust claims in this case are subject to a rule-of-reason analysis. See, e.g., Hood v. Tenneco Texas Life Ins. Co., 739 F.2d 1012, 1017-19 (5th Cir. 1984).

In applying the rule of reason, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 49. In general, any potential anticompetitive effect "can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the [alleged] restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed." Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978). However, "[i]n an antitrust case . . . summary judgment is still appropriate where the plaintiff does not produce significant probative evidence demonstrating that a genuine issue of (material) fact exists." Carlson Mach. Tools, Inc. v. Am. Tool, Inc., 678 F.2d 1253, 1258 (5th Cir. 1982) [21] (citations omitted).

HN6[] The Supreme Court has stated that with respect to group boycott, "the boycotters and the ultimate target need not be in a competitive relationship with each other." St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 543, 98 S. Ct. 2923, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932 (1978). Indeed, the Supreme Court has also found the Sherman Act to be applicable to "concerted refusals to deal in cases where the target is a customer of some or all of the conspirators who is being denied access to desired goods or services because of a refusal to accede to particular terms set by some or all of the sellers." Id. In these circumstances, however, an antitrust injury must "reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

Here, it is undisputed that Fortis' share of the individual health insurance market in Louisiana was less than five percent during the years 2001 through 2005. (Berquist Aff. Oct. 27, 2006.) HN7[] The Fifth Circuit has held that as a matter of law, "the termination of a dealer by a supplier lacking market power cannot have an adverse [22] effect on competition." Hood, 739 F.2d at 1018. Moore makes no attempt to redefine the relevant market. In these circumstances, it is "simply not an antitrust violation" for Fortis to terminate its relationship with Moore, "even if the effect of the [termination] is to seriously damage" Moore's business. Burdett Sound, Inc. v. Altec Corp., 515 F.2d 1245, 1249 (5th Cir. 1975).

Accordingly, the Court finds that Moore has "failed to provide adequate evidence of anticompetitive effect to raise a material fact issue and to preclude summary judgment under the rule of reason." Hood, 739 F.2d at 1019. For the same [*824] reasons, Moore's antitrust claims also fail under Louisiana state law. See Gulf States Land & Dev., Inc. v. Premier Bank N.A., 956 F.2d 502, 508 (5th Cir. 1992). Lastly, Moore's Rule 56(f) request for further discovery also lacks merit, as he has not identified any factual information that might dictate a different result. [9]

[23] Thus, IT IS ORDERED that Fortis Insurance Company's Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 373) is GRANTED and that all of Moore's claims against Fortis, in both Counts 11 and 16, are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

C. Coverage Issues

As noted above, the Plaintiffs filed a second lawsuit in July 2006 against American Home Assurance Company ("American Home") and State Farm Fire and Casualty Company ("State Farm F&C"). The Plaintiffs seek a declaration that they are entitled to insurance coverage for the defense and indemnity of the claims asserted by the other State Farm defendants in the underlying consolidated litigation. [10] Specifically, the Plaintiffs seek (1) [9] In denying Fortis' earlier motion to dismiss, the Court did not specifically address the breach of contract allegations in Count 16, focusing instead on Moore's antitrust allegations. See Order and Reasons dated March 15, 2006, at 6 (Rec. Doc. 222). However, because Moore has never alleged the existence of a contract with Fortis (indeed the original Fortis appointment is alleged to have been made without Moore's knowledge or consent), the Court finds that the breach of contract claim against Fortis in Count 16 also fails as a matter of law.

---

attorneys' fees and expenses incurred with regard to State Farm's Motion for Injunctive Relief, filed on December 20, 2004 (Rec. Doc. 31), and associated injunction proceedings, and (2) defense and indemnity with regard to the State Farm counterclaim (Rec. Doc. 158) and amended counterclaim (Rec. Doc. 351). The insurers contend that the respective policies do not provide coverage in this case.

[24] The Court has already discussed the applicable standards for granting summary judgment. See supra Part II.B. HN8[] The interpretation of an insurance contract is typically a question of law that can be properly resolved in a motion for summary judgment. See Independent Fire Ins. Co. v. Sunbeam Corp., 99-2182 & 99-2257 (La. 2/29/00), 755 So. 2d 226, 230. HN9[] Under Louisiana law, an insurance policy is an agreement between the parties and is interpreted using ordinary contract principles. See Reynolds v. Select Props., Ltd., 93-1480 (La. 4/11/94), 634 So. 2d 1180, 1183. Therefore, when the words of the policy are clear, unambiguously express the intent of the parties, and lead to no absurd consequences, the contract must be enforced as written. See Cent. La. Elec. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 579 So. 2d 981, 985 (La. 1991). If, however, the words of the policy are ambiguous, the ambiguous provision is to be construed against the drafter and in favor of the insured. See Louisiana Ins. Guar. Ass'n Guar. Ass'n v. Interstate Fire & Casualty Co., 93-911 (La. 1/14/94), 630 So. 2d 759, 763-64.

1. American Home Assurance Company Policy

The [25] parties have filed cross-motions for summary judgment on the issue of coverage under the American Home policy. During the relevant time periods, American Home issued a professional liability "errors & omissions" insurance policy to Jim Moore Insurance Agency, Inc., bearing Policy No. 18-22-1744, which provides in the insuring agreement that American Home will "pay on behalf of the Insured [*825] all sums which the Insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages because of any claim . . . arising out of . . . [a]ny negligent act, error or omission in rendering or failing to render professional services for others in the Insured's capacity as an Insurance Agent." (Ex. A to American Home's Motion.)

American Home argues that there is no coverage because the claims made by State Farm against the Plaintiffs in its motion for injunctive relief and in its counterclaim will not require the Plaintiffs to pay damages, as required by the policy. In addition, American Home argues that State Farm does not allege negligence by the Plaintiffs in the rendering of professional services for others. The Plaintiffs respond that State Farm seeks damages under article 1997 of the Louisiana Civil Code [26] and that State Farm's allegations are sufficient to trigger coverage.

The Court finds, however, that State Farm does not seek damages in this litigation, but only injunctive and declaratory relief. It is undisputed that State Farm did not seek damages by virtue of its Motion for Injunctive Relief, filed on December 20, 2004 (Rec. Doc. 31). Similarly, State Farm does not seek damages in either its counterclaim or amended counterclaim. See Counterclaim PP 18, 29; Amended Counterclaim PP 29, 40. The only mention of damages appears in the jurisdictional statement for the joinder of additional counter-defendants, in which State Farm notes that "the amount in controversy, including the value of injunctive relief," exceeds $ 75,000. See Counterclaim P 22; Amended Counterclaim P 33. HN10[] "In actions seeking declaratory or injunctive relief, it is well established that the amount in controversy is measured by the value of the object of the litigation." Hunt v. Wash. State Apple Adver. Comm'n, 432 U.S. 333, 347, 97 S. Ct. 2434, 53 L. Ed. 2d 383 (1977). State Farm's attempt to value the injunctive relief sought does not transform its counterclaim into one for damages.

Lastly, the Plaintiffs point to State [27] Farm's answer, which asserts as its twenty-seventh defense that "[p]ursuant to La. Civ. Code art. 1997, Defendants are entitled to offset against Plaintiffs' claimed damages any foreseeable or unforeseeable damages that ought to be awarded for Plaintiffs' bad-faith breach of contact." See Answer and Affirmative Defenses at 14 (Rec. Doc. 23); First Amended Answer and Affirmative Defenses at 14

---

[10] The Plaintiffs make an ancillary claim for damages as well, seeking reimbursement of past and future expenses associated with the defense of such claims.

(Rec. Doc. 248). HN11[] Article 1997 provides that "an obligor [who acts] in bad faith is liable for all . . . damages, foreseeable or not, that are a direct consequence of his failure to perform." La. Civ. Code. Ann. art. 1997.

The Court finds, however, that the Plaintiffs cannot "become legally obligated to pay" damages by virtue of State Farm's set-off affirmative defense, and therefore that this affirmative defense does not trigger coverage under the policy. By pleading article 1997 as an affirmative defense in its answer, and by abandoning any claims under article 1997 in its counterclaim, State Farm has limited its relief under this article to a reduction of the Plaintiffs' damages. At most, State Farm may be entitled to a set-off up to, but not exceeding, the amount of the Plaintiffs' [28] claims. See Myers v. Hurley Motor Co., 273 U.S. 18, 27, 47 S. Ct. 277, 71 L. Ed. 515 (1927) ("The defense, in effect, is that the plaintiff was guilty of tortious conduct to the injury of the defendant in the transaction out of which his own cause of action arose. In such case it is well settled that the relief is by way of recoupment--that is, that the amount of defendant's damage can be allowed only in abatement or diminution of plaintiff's claim--and that defendant [*826] cannot, at least in that action, recover any excess.").

Because the plain language of the American Home policy provides coverage only for "sums which the Insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages," the Court finds that the Plaintiffs are neither entitled to reimbursement of fees and costs associated with the injunction proceedings nor to indemnity or defense related to State Farm's counterclaim. See Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Hanna, 224 F.2d 499, 503 (5th Cir. 1955) (HN12[] "The obligation of the insurer to pay is limited to 'damages,' a word which has an accepted technical meaning in law."). [11] Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that American Home's Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 408) is GRANTED and that [29] the Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 418) is DENIED.

2. State Farm Fire and Casualty Company Policies

The parties have also filed cross-motions for summary judgment on the issue of coverage under the State Farm F&C policies. During the relevant time periods, State Farm F&C provided (1) a business office insurance policy to Jim Moore, bearing Policy Number 98-14-6305-2, (2) a commercial liability umbrella policy to Jim Moore Insurance Agency, Inc., bearing Policy Number 98-CW-7308-6F, (3) a business office insurance policy to Blanche Moore d/ba Moore Insurance Agency, bearing Policy Number 98-CW-0906-8, and (4) a commercial liability umbrella policy to Blanche Moore d/ba Moore Insurance Agency, bearing Policy Number 98-CW-7024-3F. These policies contain the same language as the American Home policy discussed above, providing coverage only for "those sums [30] that the insured becomes legally obligated to pay as damages." See Ex. 1-3 to State Farm F& C's Answer (Rec. Doc. 314).

For the reasons discussed above with respect to the American Home policy, the Court also finds that there is no coverage under the State Farm F&C policies. Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that State Farm Fire and Casualty Company's Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 427) is GRANTED, and that the Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 436) is DENIED.

D. Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Testimony

The Plaintiffs move the Court to strike the testimony elicited from Grant Gravois, a State Farm employee who oversaw Moore's geographical region, by State Farm's counsel after stopping Gravois' deposition to allegedly coach the witness. The Plaintiffs argue that this violated Rule 30(d)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and that pages 207:12 through 209:5 of Mr. Gravois' deposition testimony should be stricken. However, the Court finds that whether or not the witness was coached is a matter to be explored on cross-examination and ultimately weighed by the finder of fact. Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that the Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike [31] Testimony (Rec. Doc. 354) is DENIED.

---

[11] Thus, the Court need not address whether or not State Farm's allegations relate to the provision of professional services.

III. CONCLUSION

To summarize, the Court issues the following orders for the foregoing reasons:

(1) IT IS ORDERED that State Farm's Motion to Vacate (Rec. Doc. 433) is DENIED.

[*827] (2) IT IS ORDERED that Moore's Motion for Injunctive Relief (Rec. Doc. 57) is DENIED IN PART with respect to Paragraph C, and that State Farm's Motion to Strike (Rec. Doc. 72) is GRANTED IN PART with respect to Paragraph C. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that State Farm's Motion to Set Oral Argument (Rec. Doc. 435) is DENIED AS MOOT.

(3) IT IS ORDERED that Fortis Insurance Company's Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 373) is GRANTED and that all of Moore's claims against Fortis, in both Counts 11 and 16, are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

(4) IT IS ORDERED that American Home's Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 408) is GRANTED and that the Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 418) is DENIED.

(5) IT IS ORDERED that State Farm Fire and Casualty Company's Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 427) is GRANTED, and that the Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment (Rec. Doc. 436) is DENIED.

(6) IT IS ORDERED [32] that the Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Testimony (Rec. Doc. 354) is DENIED.

New Orleans, Louisiana, this 4th day of May, 2007.

Eldon E. Fallon

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Teague v. Bayer AG

North Carolina Superior Court, Buncombe County

May 7, 2007, Decided

05 CVS 90

Reporter

2007 NCBC 12 *; 2007 NCBC LEXIS 14 **

MITCHELL TEAGUE, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. BAYER AG; BAYER POLYMERS, LLC, n/k/a BAYER MATERIALSCIENCE, LLC; BAYER CORPORATION; CROMPTON CORPORATION; UNIROYAL CHEMICAL COMPANY, INC., n/k/a CROMPTON MANUFACTURING COMPANY, INC.; THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY; E.I. DUPONT DE NEMOURS & COMPANY; DUPONT DOW ELASTOMERS, L.L.C.; DSM COPOLYMER, INC.; DSM ELASTOMERS EUROPE, B.V.; EXXON MOBIL CHEMICAL, a division or subsidiary of EXXON MOBIL CORP., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Reversed by, Remanded by Teague v. Bayer AG, 2009 N.C. App. LEXIS 58 (N.C. Ct. App., Jan. 20, 2009)

Core Terms

purchaser, indirect, settlement, products, manufacturer, cy pres, consumers, distributions, cases, motion to dismiss, chain, factors, courts, Chemical, damages, funds, class member, class action, amended complaint, anti trust law, public policy, Defendants', speculative, rubber, liner, pond, nationwide, retailers, parties, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When ruling on a motion to dismiss under N.C. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court must determine whether, as a matter of law, the allegations of the complaint are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. In making its decision, the court must treat the allegations in the complaint as true. The court must construe the complaint liberally and must not dismiss the complaint unless it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff is entitled to no relief under any state of facts which could be proved in support of the claim. When considering a motion under Rule 12(b)(6), the court is not required to accept as true any conclusions of law or unwarranted deductions of fact in the complaint. When the complaint fails to allege the substantive elements of some legally cognizable claim, or where it alleges facts which defeat any claim, the complaint should be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss a party's claim for lack of standing is tantamount to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted according to N.C. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

HN3[] Standing, Injury in Fact

The doctrine of standing is usually considered in the context of federal jurisdiction under U.S. Const. art. III. State of North Carolina courts use the term standing to refer generally to a party's right to have a court decide the merits of a dispute. A court may not properly exercise subject matter jurisdiction over the parties to an action unless the standing requirements are satisfied. The requirements are as follows: (1) injury in fact, an invasion of a legally protected interest that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN4[] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

The United States Supreme Court holds that states may allow indirect purchaser standing if they so choose in antitrust actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN5[] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-16 (2005).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN6[] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

Factors to recognize indirect purchaser standing in antitrust actions include: 1. Whether the plaintiff is a consumer or competitor in the allegedly restrained market. That inquiry focuses on the market the alleged restraint was designed to impact and the intent of the actor in engaging in the restraint. One key question is whether the plaintiff claims injury in a market collateral to the market in which the alleged restraint took place. 2. The directness of the impact on the plaintiff. Being an indirect purchaser does not preclude standing. The causal connection between the act and the claimed injury cannot be too remote. 3. Whether there exist other indirect purchasers in the distribution chain who are more directly impacted by the alleged violation. 4. The speculative nature of the damage claims. 5.

The risk of duplicative recovery and danger of complex apportionment of damages. The application of those factors is a fact-intensive exercise. The relative importance of any single factor may vary considerably from case to case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN7[] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

Recognizing that the antitrust laws are designed to see that customers in the relevant market get the benefit of price competition, the first step is to identify the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN8[] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

A test to determine the scope of indirect purchaser standing has been established that recognizes that there is a boundary beyond which claims are too remote in antitrust suits. That is similar to the concept of proximate cause in the law of torts. The analysis centers on the length and complexity of the distribution chain. The nature of the item can influence the directness of the impact on the price of the end product at retail. The smaller the component, the less likely there will be impact on the final price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

Examination of the factor of whether other direct purchasers are more directly impacted in an antitrust suit is a factor meant to avoid a double recovery. State courts should focus that inquiry on whether or not the existence of other indirect purchasers in the chain of distribution gives rise to other claims against the fund representing the amount by which the price of the retail item has been artificially inflated. The potential for long distribution chains makes that inquiry easier. In long distribution chains, there are likely to be distributors and retailers who may have a claim that they absorbed some or all of the price increase, rather than passing it along to a plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN10[] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 1-267.10(a)(2005).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN11[] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

N.C. Gen. Stat. § 1-267.10(a)(2005) requires the parties to report to the court the total amount actually paid to class members. After receiving that report, the court shall direct the defendant to pay the sum of the unpaid residue, to be divided and credited equally, to the Indigent Person's Attorney Fund and to the North Carolina State Bar for the provision of civil legal services for indigents. § 1-267.10(b). Although the statute does not directly address cy pres distributions in which there are no payments made to class members, a trial court believes the public policy regarding unpaid residuals is also applicable to cy pres distributions which have no relationship with the class victimized by the violations. When cy pres distributions are approved by judges sitting in distant jurisdictions, there is an acute danger that the settlement funds will not further the purposes of the underlying causes of action or promote justice for all citizens of the State of North Carolina. § 1-267.10(a).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trusts > Trust Administration > Construction & Interpretation of Trusts

HN12[] Trust Administration, Construction & Interpretation of Trusts

In trust law, cy pres is a rule of construction which courts employ to carry out the spirit of a trust's terms when literal application of such terms is not feasible.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN13[] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

In the context of class actions, courts have utilized cy pres distributions where class members are difficult to identify, or where they change constantly, or where there are unclaimed funds. In these cases, the court, guided by the parties' original purpose, directs that the unclaimed funds be distributed for the indirect prospective benefit of the class.

Counsel: [1] Wimer & Jobe by Michael G. Wimer; Forman Rossabi Black, P.A. byAmiel J. Rossabi; Law Offices of Isaac L. Diel by Issac L. Diel; Weinstein, Kitchenoff Scarlato, Karon & Goldman, Ltd. by Daniel R. Karon; Law Office of Krishna B. Narine by Krishna B. Narine; Schriffrin & Barroway, LLP by Stephen E. Connolly; Gunderson, Sharp & Walke, P.C. by Rex Sharp for Plaintiff Mitchell Teague.

Mayer, Brown, Rowe & Maw LLP by Mary K. Mandeville, W.C. Turner Herbert, Gary A. Winters, Andrew S. Marovitz, and Britt M. Miller for Defendants DSM Copolymer, Inc. and DSM Elastomers Europe, B.V.

Nelson, Mullins, Riley & Scarborough, LLP by Joseph W. Eason and Christopher J. Blake; O'Melveny & Myers LLP by Ian Simmons and Benjamin G. Bradshaw for Defendants Chemtura (f/k/a Crompton) Corporation and Uniroyal Chemical Company, Inc.

Pinto, Coates, Kyre & Brown, PLLC by Richard L. Pinto; Weil, Gotschal & Manges, LLP by James W. Quinn, Steven Alan Reiss, and Christopher V. Roberts for Defendant ExxonMobil Chemical Company.

Judges: Tennille, Judge.

Opinion by: Tennille

Opinion

ORDER ON MOTION TO DISMISS SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT AND FOR APPROVAL OF DISMISSAL OF CLASS ACTION CLAIMS

[*1] This case arises [2] out of Plaintiff's suit for damages under sections 75-1 and 75-1.1 of the General Statutes of North Carolina. This matter comes before the Court on certain Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Second Amended Complaint Under Rule 12(b)(6) and Plaintiff's motions to dismiss his North Carolina class action allegations against some defendants as a result of a multistate settlement agreement presided over by the courts of the State of Tennessee.

[*2] After considering the briefs and oral arguments, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss on the grounds that Plaintiff lacks standing to pursue the action. With grave reservations and the firm belief that the class representative and his counsel have done little for the citizens of North Carolina, the Court GRANTS Plaintiff's motions to dismiss his class action allegations against the Bayer, Dow, and DuPont Defendants.

Tennille, Judge.

I.

DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT UNDER RULE 12(b)(6)

A.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

1.

THE PARTIES

[*3] This case involves alleged price fixing of a synthetic rubber known as ethylene propylene diene monomer, or "EPDM." Defendants are all involved in the manufacture, [3] distribution, marketing, or sale of EPDM.

[*4] Plaintiff Mitchell Teague is a citizen and resident of the State of North Carolina. Plaintiff purchased EPDM roofing material and pond liner manufactured, marketed, distributed, or sold by one or more of the Defendants. Plaintiff also purchased at least one vehicle with EPDM components during the relevant time. He brings this claim individually and on behalf of all other North Carolinians who purchased products containing EPDM from 1994 until 2002. He has held himself out to be a person suitable to represent the interests of his fellow citizens. His counsel have likewise held themselves out to be suitable advocates for the interests of the North Carolina class members.

[*5] Defendant Bayer AG is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Federal Republic of Germany, with its principal place of business located in Leverkusen, Germany. Bayer AG is a management holding company that oversees operations for some 350 companies worldwide. The global enterprise operates in the fields of health care, nutrition, and high technology materials.

[*6] Defendant Bayer Polymers, LLC (n/k/a Bayer MaterialScience, LLC) [4] is a limited liability company organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Bayer MaterialScience, LLC is a subsidiary of Bayer AG.

[*7] Defendant Bayer Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with its principal place of business located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Bayer Corporation is a wholly owned subsidiary of Bayer AG.

[*8] Defendant Crompton Corporation merged with Great Lakes Chemical Corporation in 2005 to form Chemtura Corporation. Chemtura is a global enterprise that manufactures and markets specialty chemicals for a variety of uses. The company is headquartered in Middlebury, Connecticut.

[*9] Defendant Uniroyal Chemical Company, Inc. merged with Crompton & Knowles Corporation in 1996, became part of Crompton Corporation in 1999, and is now part of Chemtura.

[*10] Defendant Dow Chemical Company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business in Midland, Michigan.

[*11] Defendant E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Company ("DuPont") [5] is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business in Wilmington, Delaware.

[*12] Defendant DuPont Dow Elastomers, LLC was a joint venture of Defendants DuPont and Dow at times relevant to this action. Dow withdrew from the partnership in 2005. DuPont operates the remaining businesses under the name DuPont Performance Elastomers.

[*13] Defendant DSM Elastomers Europe, B.V. is part of a global operation headquartered in the Netherlands.

[*14] Defendant DSM Copolymer, Inc. is part of the DSM global operation, with its principal place of business in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. [1]

[6] [*15] Defendant ExxonMobil Chemical Company is an entity organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal place of business in Irving, Texas. ExxonMobil Chemical is a division or subsidiary of ExxonMobil Corporation.

2.

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

[*16] Plaintiff filed the Complaint in this action in Buncombe County Superior Court on April 2, 2004. Plaintiff filed the First Amended Complaint on December 23, 2004. The case was designated complex business and assigned to the undersigned Special Superior Court Judge for Complex Business Cases by order of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina dated March 15, 2005.

[*17] Defendants filed motions to dismiss the original and first amended complaints in the summer of 2004 and winter of 2005. The Court heard oral arguments on the motions on November 21, 2005. Following the hearing, the Court entered an order giving Plaintiff an opportunity to plead facts with more precision. (Order, Nov. 22, 2005.) Plaintiff filed the Second Amended Complaint on December 8, 2005. In January of 2006, Defendants renewed their motions to dismiss.

[*18] This order addresses the Motion to [7] Dismiss the Second Amended Complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) of Defendants DSM Copolymer, Inc., Chemtura Corporation (successor by merger to Crompton Corporation and Uniroyal Chemical Company, Inc.), and ExxonMobil Chemical Company. This order also addresses the Motion of Defendant DSN Elastomers Europe B.V. to Dismiss Second Amended Complaint under Rules 12(b)(2) and 12(b)(6).

3.

PLAINTIFF'S ALLEGATIONS

[*19] Plaintiff alleges the following facts in his Second Amended Complaint:

[*20] As noted above, Defendants are involved in the manufacture, distribution, marketing, or sale of EPDM. (2d Am. Compl. PP 1, 25.) EPDM is a synthetic rubber with many and varied applications. (Id. PP 21, 23.) It is a "commodity product that is fungible among grades." (Id. P 24.) EPDM itself is not a consumer product. Rather, it is a component found in many consumer products. The amount of EPDM in a given product varies depending on the nature of the product. For example, "[t]he EPDM roofing material purchased by Plaintiff and other Class Members is believed to contain at least 90% EPDM" and "[t]he tires, window molding, hoses, and other rubber products purchased by Plaintiff and other [8] Class members is [sic] believed to include 1% or more EPDM." (Id. P 36.)

---

[1] DSM Elastomers Holding Company, Inc., DSM Elastomers, Inc. and DSM Elastomers Americas were originally parties to this action. By stipulation filed May 20, 2004, Plaintiff dismissed these three entities and substituted DSM Copolymer, Inc. (Notice of Dismissal Without Prejudice and Stipulation Re: Tolling and Acceptance of Service 1-2.) DSM Copolymer, Inc. and DSM Elastomers Europe, B.V. are the only DSM-related parties currently involved as defendants in this action.

The crux of Plaintiff's allegations is that the Defendants "engaged in a combination, conspiracy and scheme to suppress and eliminate competition by fixing the price of EPDM sold in the United States and elsewhere." (Id. P 27.) The conspiracy "consisted of a continuing agreement, understanding and concerted action among Defendants and co-conspirators." (Id. P 28.) The Defendants allegedly colluded to issue price announcements, allocate markets and customers among themselves, and actively conceal their uncompetitive actions from consumers in North Carolina. (Id. P 30.) These alleged actions are under investigation by antitrust authorities in the United States, Canada, and Europe. (Id. PP 32, 34.)

[*21] As a result of Defendants' conduct, Plaintiff and other consumers "have been forced to pay higher and supracompetitive prices for EPDM and were deceived and treated unfairly and unethically in their purchases of EPDM." (Id. P 44.) Plaintiff paid these "supracompetitive prices" when he "purchased EPDM roofing material and pond liner manufactured, distributed, and/or sold by one or more [9] of the Defendants." (Id. P 35.) Plaintiff also purchased "at least one vehicle, components of which contain Defendants' EPDM." (Id.) Plaintiff claims that he and other North Carolina class members absorbed all of the supracompetitive portion of the price because "middlemen passed on 100% or more of the overcharge from the Defendants." (Id. P 37.)

[*22] In sum, Plaintiff claims that "Defendants were parties to an illegal cartel, agreement, contract, combination, scheme and/or conspiracy designed to fix, raise, stabilize and maintain the price for EPDM" and conceal their conduct from consumers. (Id. P 49.) "Defendants' contract, combination, scheme and/or conspiracy restrained trade or commerce in the State of North Carolina and affected commerce in North Carolina." (Id.) Plaintiff seeks "actual damages, treble damages, plus costs, pre- and post-judgment interest and attorneys' fees" under sections 75-1 and 75-1.1 of the General Statutes of North Carolina. (Id. PP 48, 55.) These provisions make combinations in restraint of trade and unfair methods of competition illegal. N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 75-1, 75-1.1 (2005).

B.

MOTION TO DISMISS

1.

LEGAL STANDARD

[10] [*23] The purpose of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) is to test the legal sufficiency of the pleading against which the motion is directed. Sutton v. Duke, 277 N.C. 94, 99, 176 S.E.2d 161, 163 (1970). In Branch Banking & Trust Co. v. Lighthouse Financial Corp., 2005 NCBC 3 (N.C. Super. Ct. July 13, 2005), http://www.ncbusinesscourt.net/opinions/2005%20NCBC%203.htm, this Court summarized the 12(b)(6) standard as follows:

> HN1[] When ruling on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the court must determine "whether, as a matter of law, the allegations of the complaint . . . are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief may be granted." In making its decision, the court must treat the allegations in the complaint as true. The court must construe the complaint liberally and must not dismiss the complaint unless it appears to a certainty that plaintiff is entitled to no relief under any state of facts which could be proved in support of the claim. When considering a motion under Rule 12(b)(6), the court is not required to accept as true any conclusions of law or unwarranted deductions of fact in the complaint. When the complaint fails [11] to allege the substantive elements of some legally cognizable claim, or where it alleges facts which defeat any claim, the complaint should be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6).

Branch Banking & Trust Co., 2005 NCBC 3 P8 (citations omitted). In this case, it is also relevant that "[HN2[] a] motion to dismiss a party's claim for lack of standing is tantamount to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted according to Rule 12(b)(6)." Slaughter v. Swicegood, 162 N.C. App. 457, 464, 591 S.E.2d 577, 582 (2004).

2.

STANDING

[*24] HN3[] The doctrine of standing is usually considered in the context of federal jurisdiction under Article III of the United States Constitution. North Carolina state courts use the term "standing" to "refer generally to a party's right to have a court decide the merits of a dispute." Neuse River Found., Inc. v. Smithfield Foods, Inc., 155 N.C. App. 110, 114, 574 S.E.2d 48, 52 (2002). A court may not properly exercise subject matter jurisdiction over the parties to an action unless the standing requirements are satisfied. Aubin v. Susi, 149 N.C. App. 320, 324, 560 S.E.2d 875, 878 (2002). [12] The requirements are as follows:

> (1) "injury in fact"--an invasion of a legally protected interest that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). With its concern over conjectural injuries and speculative damage awards, standing is frequently an issue in indirect purchaser cases such as this one. [2] The goal of the detailed analytical framework described below is to determine if indirect purchaser plaintiffs meet the broad standing requirements.

[13] 3.

INDIRECT PURCHASER CASES IN FEDERAL COURT

[*25] In Hanover Shoe Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968), and Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), the United States Supreme Court addressed the issue of standing for indirect purchasers under federal antitrust law. Hanover Shoe was a suit by a shoe manufacturer against a manufacturer of shoe machinery. 392 U.S. at 483. In defending the treble damage suit, United argued that Hanover suffered no injury because it simply passed the illegal overcharges on to its customers. Id. at 487-88. The Supreme Court rejected this "passing-on" defense, and held that a direct purchaser was entitled to damages regardless of the actual injury. Id. at 488.

[*26] In Illinois Brick, the State of Illinois brought suit as an indirect purchaser against a manufacturer and distributor of concrete block. 431 U.S. at 726. The issue was whether the "pass on" theory "may be used offensively by an indirect purchaser plaintiff against an alleged violator." Id. Justice White, writing for the Court as he did in Hanover [14] Shoe, declined to construe the federal antitrust laws to allow for indirect purchaser suits. Id. at 736. With these two cases, the federal judiciary has decided "that the direct purchaser suit is on balance a more effective instrument for enforcement of the antitrust rule prohibiting price fixing than the indirect purchaser suit." Crouch v. Crompton Corp., 2004 NCBC 7 P30 (N.C. Super. Ct. Oct. 26, 2004), http://www.ncbusinesscourt.net/OtherRefdocs/2004%20NCBC%207.htm; see also William Landes & Richard Posner, Should Indirect Purchasers Have Standing to Sue Under the Antitrust Laws? An Economic Analysis of the Rule of Illinois Brick, 46 U. Chi. L. Rev. 602, 634-35 (1979).

4.

INDIRECT PURCHASER CASES IN STATE COURTS

[*27] Dissatisfied with the federal policy, some states enacted new statutes or interpreted existing statutes to allow indirect purchasers to recover under state antitrust laws. See Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P31. These state policies favoring indirect purchaser recovery were challenged, but in California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 109 S.

---

[2] Indirect purchaser causes of action are generally based upon claims that the defendants conspired to fix prices in violation of the antitrust laws. They are indirect in the sense that the plaintiff did not purchase the price-fixed product directly from a defendant but rather purchased the product further down in the distribution chain or purchased a product in which the price-fixed product was either used as a component or consumed in the manufacturing process.

Ct. 1661, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86 (1989), HN4[] the Supreme Court held that states [15] may allow indirect purchaser standing if they so choose. Id. at 105-06. As this Court has previously discussed, the differences in the federal and state policies regarding indirect purchasers create a number of problems. See Adams v. Aventis, S.A., 2003 NCBC 7 P23 (N.C. Super. Ct. Aug. 26, 2003), http://www.ncbusinesscourt.net/opinions/2003%20NCBC%207.htm. Despite these problems, this system of dual enforcement is the law today, and the Court must work within it.

5.

INDIRECT PURCHASER CASES IN NORTH CAROLINA

[*28] The section of North Carolina's General Statutes that gives rise to a number of indirect purchaser cases is 75-16, which states as follows:

> HN5[] If any person shall be injured or the business of any person, firm, or corporation shall be broken up, destroyed, or injured by reason of any act or thing done by any other person, firm or corporation in violation of the provisions of this Chapter, such person, firm, or corporation so injured shall have a right of action on account of such injury done, and if damages are assessed in such case judgment shall be rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for treble the [16] amount fixed by the verdict.

N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-16 (2005). In Hyde v. Abbott Lab., 123 N.C. App. 572, 473 S.E.2d 680 (1996), the North Carolina Court of Appeals interpreted section 75-16 to allow indirect purchasers to sue manufacturers for antitrust violations. Id. at 584, 473 S.E.2d at 688. Hyde was a class action against manufacturers of infant formula alleging violations of state antitrust laws. Id. at 573, 473 S.E.2d at 681. Plaintiffs were consumers who purchased the formula from retailers and distributors. Id. at 574, 473 S.E.2d at 681-82. The trial court granted defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of standing, but the Court of Appeals reversed. Id. at 584, 473 S.E.2d at 688. Although Hyde established indirect purchaser standing in North Carolina, it did not delineate the scope and breadth of standing under the statute. In Crouch v. Crompton Corp., this Court noted several important developments since Hyde and set certain boundaries for indirect purchaser standing. The most important of these developments was a 1996 amendment to the North Carolina antitrust [17] statutes revising those provisions to be "internally consistent and consistent with federal antitrust laws." Act of June 3, 1996, ch. 550, 1995 N.C. Sess. Laws 550. This legislative signal required the Court to reconcile the indirect purchaser standing statute with federal standing requirements. Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P49.

[*29] The leading federal case on standing in cases such as this is Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (AGC). In AGC, the United States Supreme Court adopted a five factor standing test. In Crouch, this Court modified the AGC HN6[] factors to recognize indirect purchaser standing. See Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 PP66-74. Those factors were described in Crouch as follows:

> 1. Whether the plaintiff is a consumer or competitor in the allegedly restrained market. This inquiry focuses on the market the alleged restraint was designed to impact and the intent of the actor in engaging in the restraint. One key question is whether the plaintiff claims injury in a market collateral to the market in which the alleged restraint [18] took place. This factor recognizes that the antitrust laws are designed to see that customers in the relevant market get the benefit of price competition. This factor would have supported standing in Hyde.
>
> 2. The directness of the impact on the plaintiff. This factor is modified to eliminate the restriction of Illinois Brick against indirect purchaser standing. Being an indirect purchaser does not preclude standing. However, the causal connection between the act and the claimed injury cannot be too remote. Purchasers in the direct chain of distribution are more likely to be able to show sufficiently direct injury than those outside the chain of distribution. Purchasers who buy the product which is the subject of the restraint are more likely to be able to show sufficiently direct injury than those who purchase a product with a component which is the subject of the restraint. Purchasers of products whose manufacture was impacted by the restraint face significant hurdles showing sufficiently direct impact. Within the chain of distribution, the relative positions of the purchaser and the actor can be significant, depending on the length and complexity of the distribution [19] chain. Even though a purchaser is removed from the direct restraint, he or she may still show direct injury. See Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 478-81, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982). This factor would have supported standing in Hyde.

3. Whether there exist other indirect purchasers in the distribution chain who are more directly impacted by the alleged violation. The nature of the market is significant here. Courts must look at the nature of the product and the market for the product as well as the chain of distribution to determine the likelihood of direct pass through of the cost of the restraint or inflated price. The nature of the restraint must also be considered. Double recovery among indirect purchasers should be avoided. This factor would have supported standing in Hyde where the distribution chain was short.

4. The speculative nature of the damage claims. As damage claims move from direct to indirect and the distribution chain becomes more complex, the possibility of factors intervening to affect causation and price multiplies, and claims become more speculative. It is appropriate for purposes of determining indirect purchaser standing "to consider [20] whether a claim rests at bottom on some abstract conception or speculative measure of harm." McCready, 457 U.S. at 475 n.11. In McCready the Court noted that the courts were required to be cautious when dealing with speculative, abstract and impractical damage theories. Id. This factor would not have prevented standing in Hyde. This factor focuses on sound economic analysis. Important factors would include reliable demand and supply curve studies and sufficient regression analysis to eliminate other factors in pricing.

5. The risk of duplicative recovery and danger of complex apportionment of damages. While these factors are limited by the General Assembly's creation of indirect purchaser standing, they should not be totally eliminated when considering the state claims. The courts still have the same interest in keeping the scope of a complex antitrust trial within judicially manageable limits. AGC, 459 U.S. at 543. The factors are simply taken down a level and the Hanover Shoe/Illinois Brick restrictions eliminated. State cases may present apportionment issues which are simply too complex and for which there exists no measure [21] of recovery which is not speculative. It is clear that the General Assembly did not intend that every purchaser in the distribution chain have a right of recovery or that there be duplicative recovery among indirect purchasers. Such an interpretation would be contrary to the clear guidance to follow federal precedent and harmonize state antitrust law with federal law. Rather, it should be clear that the General Assembly intended that those who can show with some degree of certainty that they were directly impacted by the alleged acts in restraint of trade should be able to recover even though they are indirect purchasers. The courts must be cognizant that the problems between direct and indirect purchaser cases replicate themselves in state indirect purchaser cases where there are multiple levels in the distribution chain and multiple distribution chains. There should only be one fund constituting the amount of the alleged overcharge to North Carolina residents, and the courts must guard against multiple liability for the fund and prejudice to absent victims or non-class members. The complexity of the distribution chain and the variety of consumers in Bruggers [Bruggers v. Eastman Kodak Co., 2000 NCBC 3 (N.C. Super. Ct. Mar. 17, 2000), [22] http://www.ncbusinesscourt.net/opinions/2000%20NCBC%203.htm.] highlight the issues this factor would implicate. As the Supreme Court noted in AGC and Illinois Brick, massive and complex damages litigation undermines the effectiveness of treble damage suits. The poor results obtained in settlement in the North Carolina cases confirms this view.

Id. P73(1)-(5). The application of these factors is a fact-intensive exercise. The relative importance of any single factor may vary considerably from case to case. This Court's decision in Crouch was not appealed and no appellate court has addressed the standing question.

6.

ANALYSIS

[*30] The Court now turns to the facts of the case at bar. Before applying the AGC factors, the Court notes that this case presents the same problems encountered in Crouch. Crouch involved price fixing of rubber processing chemicals used in the manufacture of automobile tires. Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P15. In Crouch, the Court faced several problems:

> First, the price-fixed item is a product consumed or altered in the manufacturing process. Accordingly [23] its use will vary with the type of . . . product being made. It may also vary with the nature of the product . . . being used and how it is used in the manufacturing process. Different direct purchasers . . . might use the various [products] in various ways in differing products.

Id. at P78. The EPDM at issue here is similar to the rubber processing chemicals in Crouch. As noted previously, EPDM is a component of many consumer products. The use of EPDM varies with the type of product being made. Some products, such as roofing material or pond liners, contain a high percentage of EPDM. Others, such as automobiles, have only a small amount of EPDM. As such, the role of EPDM varies with the nature of product being used.

[*31] However, this case differs from Crouch in the number of consumer products at issue. The only products at issue in Crouch were tires, and the Court was able to determine at the motion to dismiss stage that "the recovery per tire sold in North Carolina will be in the range of $ 0.01 to $ 0.11." Id. P79. The Court concluded that this "would not represent a meaningful recovery for consumers" and that "the [24] costs associated with litigation and administration of any settlement would far outweigh the benefits to consumers." Id. Here, there are multiple consumer products at issue. Plaintiff alleges he purchased EPDM roofing material, pond liner, and at least one vehicle containing EPDM. (2d Am. Compl. P 35.) The EPDM components in an automobile include "tires, window molding, hoses, and other rubber products." (Id. P 36.) It is clear to the Court that EPDM may well be present in hundreds of consumer products, resulting in an enormous class of plaintiffs and many subclasses. Plaintiff does not seek to limit his claims to pond liners or products which might have a substantial component of EPDM. Perhaps the market and damages would be too small to make the case attractive. The Second Amended Complaint seeks to recover for every product which was made using EPDM. The Court's ruling is based upon the Second Amended Complaint before it. The costs of litigation and administration of such a settlement far outweigh the benefits to consumers. Indeed, the settlements reached with the Bayer, Dow, and DuPont defendants in this matter demonstrate that recovery on behalf of individual [25] consumers of EPDM would be miniscule and distribution administratively impossible. The funds from these settlements are destined to end up in the hands of the lawyers, a handful of named plaintiffs, and a small number of charities selected by the approving court pursuant to the cy pres doctrine. In no way do these settlement funds compensate North Carolina consumers who purchased products that contained overpriced EPDM. See infra Part II.C. As a preliminary matter, the Court thus notes that the challenges here appear to be even greater than those in Crouch.

[*32] Preliminary considerations aside, the Court must determine whether Plaintiff has standing to pursue this action, and therefore turns to the AGC factors as harmonized with North Carolina law in Crouch.

a.

THE RELEVANT MARKET

[*33] Here the Court must consider "whether the plaintiff claims injury in a market collateral to the market in which the alleged restraint took place." Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P73. HN7[] Recognizing that "[t]he antitrust laws are designed to see that customers in the relevant market get the benefit of price competition," the first step is to identify the "relevant [26] market." In this case, as in Crouch, there are two relevant markets. The first is the market for EPDM itself. In this first market, the sellers are EPDM manufacturers and the buyers are manufacturers of products that contain EPDM. For example, an automobile manufacturer may purchase EPDM for use in its cars. Plaintiff is not part of this first market. Rather, Plaintiff is a buyer in a second, collateral market. In this second market, the sellers are manufacturers, distributors, or retailers of products that contain EPDM and the buyers are consumers who purchase these items. In the case of automobile parts or other small component parts of larger products, the consumer is even further removed from the primary sale. As a purchaser at retail of a product that contains EPDM, Plaintiff is in a market at least secondarily affected by the restraint in the original EPDM-only market. The antitrust laws primarily seek to protect buyers in the first market, who are most directly affected by artificially high prices for EPDM. Plaintiff purchased products the price of which may or may not have been influenced by the illegal restraint. Thus, this factor weighs against standing as to most products.

[27] [*34] The situation here is similar to that in Crouch, where the plaintiff purchased products that contained the price-fixed rubber additive, rather than the rubber additive itself. The Court found that this weighed slightly against standing in Crouch. Both Crouch and the case at bar are distinguishable from Hyde, in which the plaintiff was a participant in the market for baby formula. See Hyde, 123 N.C. App. at 574, 473 S.E.2d at 681-82. Although the Hyde plaintiffs did not purchase baby formula directly from the manufacturer, they purchased baby formula, not a product comprised of baby formula and a number of other ingredients. For this reason, this factor would have supported standing in Hyde. If the product at issue in Hyde was an ingredient in baby formula, rather than the formula itself, this first factor would not have supported standing. Since Plaintiff in this case is a participant in a collateral market--the market for products that contain EPDM rather than the market for EPDM itself--this factor works against standing.

b.

DIRECTNESS OF IMPACT

[*35] As the Court of Appeals made clear in Hyde, being an indirect [28] purchaser in North Carolina does not preclude standing. See id. at 584, 473 S.E.2d at 688. In Crouch, this Court fashioned HN8[] a test to determine the scope of indirect purchaser standing and recognized that there is a boundary beyond which claims are too remote. See Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P96. This is similar to the concept of proximate cause in the law of torts. See Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99 (N.Y. 1928). The analysis centers on the length and complexity of the distribution chain. See Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P73. Furthermore, "[t]he nature of the item can influence the directness of the impact on the price of the end product at retail . . . . The smaller the component, the less likely there will be impact on the final price." Id. P85. In Crouch, however, the Court knew that "the chemicals only comprise 1% of the value of a tire, reducing the likelihood that total final price was significantly affected." Id.

[*36] The Court does not have the benefit of such knowledge here. Plaintiff is not claiming damage based on one product. Rather, Plaintiff claims damage based on his [29] purchase of roofing material, pond liner, and "at least one vehicle." (2d Am. Compl. P 35.) The list of products at issue may grow even longer, for "[d]iscovery may reveal that Plaintiff purchased other goods containing Defendants' EPDM, but which are not known to him at this time." (Id. P 36.) The fact that there are multiple products at issue makes analysis of the directness of impact rather difficult. Some products, such as roofing material or pond liner, contain a high percentage of EPDM. The price paid for these items is more likely to have been affected by price fixing because EPDM is a significant component. But other products, such as the vehicle, may contain little EPDM, and their final prices are not as likely to have been influenced by price fixing in the EPDM market.

[*37] The presence of multiple end products also presents the Court with distribution chains of varying length and complexity. Some products may have relatively short distribution chains. For example, a chain might run from an EPDM manufacturer to a pond liner manufacturer to the customer. There is also the potential for long distribution chains. A longer chain might run from an EPDM [30] manufacturer to a rubber hose manufacturer to a hose distributor to an automobile manufacturer to a retailer, and finally to the customer.

[*38] Given the great number of products, the varying amount of EPDM in those products, and the varying length and complexity of the distribution chains, the Court cannot determine the directness of impact on these facts. This factor is inconclusive and weighs neither for nor against standing. But as the Court will discuss later, the complexity inherent in multiple distribution chains weighs against standing. See infra Part I.B.6.d & e.

c.

OTHER DIRECT PURCHASERS MORE DIRECTLY IMPACTED

[*39] HN9[] Examination of this factor is meant to avoid a double recovery. "State courts should focus this inquiry on whether or not the existence of other indirect purchasers in the chain of distribution gives rise to other claims against the fund representing the amount by which the price of the retail item has been artificially inflated." Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P85. The potential for long distribution chains makes this inquiry easier. In long distribution chains, there are likely to be distributors and retailers who may have a claim that [31] they absorbed some or all of the price increase, rather than passing it along to Plaintiff. For example, a retailer who sold pond liners containing EPDM would also be an indirect purchaser (since it did not purchase raw EPDM), but would have a more direct claim than Plaintiff by virtue of its higher position on the distribution chain. The antitrust laws favor recovery on behalf of these purchasers, and their existence increases the likelihood of double recovery if Plaintiff is allowed to recover. Even though no claims have currently been filed on behalf of these distributors and retailers, this factor nevertheless weighs against standing. The Court reached the same conclusion in Crouch on similar facts. See id. P 85.

d & e.

SPECULATIVE NATURE OF DAMAGE CLAIMS AND COMPLEXITY

[*40] Earlier, the Court noted that analysis of the modified AGC factors is a fact-intensive exercise and that "different factors might be important in different cases." Id. P 74. In this case, the fourth and fifth factors are extremely important and weigh heavily against standing. These factors are interrelated and share an overarching concern for practicality and [32] wise use of judicial resources.

[*41] Calculation of damages in this case would be a daunting task. First, Plaintiff would have to establish prices for products containing EPDM both before and after the alleged conspiracy period. However, this process is complicated by the fact that EPDM is only a component in these products. Thus, "a regression analysis would be required to disaggregate any effect of other changes in the manufacturing process for each manufacturer for each product category." Id. P 80. It would not be enough to simply establish that cars, roofing material, pond liner, and other products cost more after the alleged conspiracy than before. There are many factors which could cause a price increase in these products--inflation, prices of other inputs, transport costs, product demand, and market conditions just to name a few. Such an analysis would have to be carried out at each link in the distribution chain in order to determine whether the allegedly illegal price increase was borne in whole or in part by consumers such as Plaintiff. Economists would require huge amounts of information before they could embark on such an analysis. Nonparties will [33] almost certainly consider some of this information to be confidential or subject to trade secret protection, resulting in a protracted and contentious discovery process that would burden the Court. Even if the information were readily available, "the demand and supply curves must then be calculated for this myriad of products and suppliers and the prices determined by the intersections of those curves tested against rigorous regression analysis to insure that no external factors affected the pricing and pass through at the manufacturer level." Id. P 81. This rigorous economic analysis is necessary to determine whether increased prices were the result of the alleged price fixing, or were the result of some other factor. If, at the end of this process, it is determined that none of the increased price was passed on to the Plaintiff, then there are no damages and there can be no recovery. [3]

[34] [*42] The potentially large number of products containing EPDM adds to the complexity. The analysis described above would have to be carried out for each product in order to accurately calculate damages. In Crouch, the Court found that carrying out this type of analysis for a single product, tires, "would be a Herculean task and one which the Court believes would not be free from speculation given the enormous number of disaggregating factors to be considered in the process." Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P80. The present case, with its multiple products, manufacturers, markets, externalities, and disaggregating factors, would cause even Hercules to question his legendary abilities. Given these variables, the issues surrounding allocation of the alleged price fixing in this case would be enormously complex and would render the results of any economic analysis speculative.

---

[3] This is similar to the "loss causation" requirement found in the federal securities laws, which itself is rooted in the common law of torts. See, e.g., Dura Pharm., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 346, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (noting "Congress' intent to permit private securities fraud actions for recovery where, but only where, plaintiffs adequately allege and prove the traditional elements of causation and loss").

[*43] The Court notes again that each case must be analyzed separately. It is not difficult to imagine "other examples where a component, such as a computer chip, is price fixed, and its costs passed through directly to purchasers of the product in which it is incorporated." Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7 P84. [35] In the example, the required economic analysis would be relatively straightforward. But here, it is clear from the pleadings that the analysis would be unmanageably difficult and unreliable. Thus, it is to the benefit of all parties for the Court to rule on standing early in the litigation process, before substantial resources are expended gathering information for an economic analysis that would prove unreliable in the end.

[*44] Considering all factors, Plaintiff lacks standing to pursue indirect purchaser claims. Due to this lack of standing, the law will not grant him relief. Accordingly, Plaintiff's claims against the moving Defendants are subject to dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6).

II.

PLAINTIFF'S MOTIONS FOR LEAVE TO DISMISS CERTAIN DEFENDANTS

[*45] Plaintiff moves for leave to voluntarily dismiss the Bayer, Dow, and DuPont defendants under Rule 41(a). These defendants are parties to EPDM antitrust lawsuits in other states and have entered into a multistate settlement agreement which Plaintiff contends includes resolution of all claims asserted in the litigation before this Court. Settlements as to both the Bayer and the Dow and DuPont Defendants were approved by [36] the Honorable John McAfee, Circuit Court Judge for Claiborne County, Tennessee.

A.

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO DISMISS WITH PREJUDICE DEFENDANTS BAYER CORPORATION, BAYER MATERIALSCIENCE, LLC, AND BAYER AG

[*46] Plaintiff moves to dismiss Defendants Bayer Corporation, Bayer MaterialScience, LLC, and Bayer AG (collectively "Bayer defendants") pursuant to Rule 41(a) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure, subject to Rule 23(c), which requires court approval of the dismissal or compromise of a class action. Claims against the Bayer defendants have been compromised and settled for $ 2,250,000 as part of a multistate settlement agreement. Plaintiffs and Bayer AG submitted the multistate settlement, along with three others, to the Honorable John McAfee, Circuit Judge of Claiborne County, Tennessee. On March 3, 2006, Judge McAfee approved the settlement, which "provides for a fluid recovery or cy pres distribution in lieu of a claims-made process." (Order P 11, Mar. 3, 2006.) The following amounts were deducted from the gross settlement amount:

$ 818,500 -- Attorney fees and expenses for Plaintiffs' counsel
$ 55,303 -- Notice costs

$ 14,500 -- Incentive [37] payments to named plaintiffs

This left $ 1,361,696.30 plus interest available for cy pres distribution.

[*47] On May 15, 2006, Judge McAfee entered a Corrected Supplemental Order consolidating the settlement funds from the four settlements and approving the following cy pres awards:

$ 700,000 -- East Tennessee Children's Hospital of Knoxville, Tennessee
$ 700,000 -- Special Operations Warrior Foundation of Tampa, Florida
$ 250,000 -- Baker Cancer Center of Harrogate, Tennessee
$ 1,400,000 -- St. Jude Children's Research Hospital of Memphis, Tennessee

These payments were to be made from the consolidated settlement funds, which included the $ 2,250,000 Bayer settlement.

B.

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANTS DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY, E.I DUPONT DE NEMOURS & COMPANY and DUPONT DOW ELASTOMERS, LLC

[*48] Plaintiff also moves to dismiss Defendants Dow Chemical Company, E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Company, and DuPont Dow Elastomers, LLC (collectively "Dow/DuPont Defendants") under Rule 41(a) and subject to Rule 23(c). These claims have been settled for $ 2,000,000 as part of a multistate settlement agreement. On June 21, 2005, Judge McAfee [38] approved the settlement. The following amounts were deducted from the gross settlement amount:

$ 746,771.26 -- Attorney fees and expenses for Plaintiffs' counsel

$ 101,000.00 -- Notice Costs

$ 6,000.00 -- Incentive payments for named plaintiffs

This left $ 1,156,982.15 available for cy pres distribution. On July 1, 2005, Judge McAfee entered a Supplemental Order approving the following cy pres awards:

$ 800,000.00 - Special Operations Warrior Foundation of Tampa, Florida

$ 356,982.15 - East Tennessee Children's Hospital of Knoxville, Tennessee

C.

ANALYSIS

[*49] In considering these motions, the Court is mindful of the clear public policy of this state regarding unpaid residuals in class action litigation. The General Assembly codified this policy in section 1-267.10 of the General Statutes, which states as follows:

> HN10[] It is the intent of the General Assembly to ensure that the unpaid residuals in class action litigation are distributed, to the extent possible, in a manner designed either to further the purposes of the underlying causes of action or to promote justice for all citizens of this State. The General Assembly finds that [39] the use of funds collected by the State courts pursuant to this section for these purposes is in the public interest, is a proper use of the funds, and is consistent with essential public and governmental purposes.

N.C. Gen. Stat. § 1-267.10(a)(2005). The statute goes on to HN11[] require the parties to report to the court the total amount actually paid to class members. After receiving this report, the court "shall direct the defendant to pay the sum of the unpaid residue, to be divided and credited equally, to the Indigent Person's Attorney Fund and to the North Carolina State Bar for the provision of civil legal services for indigents." Id. § 1-267.10(b). Although the statute does not directly address cy pres distributions in which there are no payments made to class members, the Court believes the public policy regarding unpaid residuals is also applicable to cy pres distributions which have no relationship with the class victimized by the violations. Indeed, the citizens of North Carolina are at even greater risk of injustice in nationwide cy pres settlements than they are when there is money left over after class members have been paid. When cy pres distributions are approved [40] by judges sitting in distant jurisdictions, there is an acute danger that the settlement funds will not "further the purposes of the underlying causes of action or . . . promote justice for all citizens" of North Carolina. See id. § 1-267.10(a).

[*50] The term "cy pres" is most commonly associated with trust law. It "appears to derive from the Norman-French term 'cy pres comme possible,' meaning 'as near as possible.'" Susan Beth Farmer, More Lessons from the Laboratories: Cy Pres Distributions in Parens Patriae Antitrist Actions Brought by State Attorneys General, 68 Fordham L. Rev. 361, 406 n.212 (1999). HN12[] In trust law, "[c]y pres is a rule of construction which courts employ to carry out the spirit of a trust's terms when literal application of such terms is not feasible." Id. An example of the proper application of the cy pres concept in North Carolina can be found in Board of Trustees v. Heirs of Prince, 311 N.C. 644, 319 S.E.2d 239 (1984). In that case, the testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate in trust to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill for the purpose of building a theatre. Id. at 649, 319 S.E.2d at 243. [41] When the University eventually built a new theater, it used funds from the General Assembly instead of the trust funds. Id. at 654, 319 S.E.2d at 246. The Supreme Court affirmed an order of the trial court amending the trust to provide for "activities that enhance the production, development, maintenance, and student participation in theatrical productions" at the University, reasoning that this amendment carried out Mrs. Prince's general charitable intent to promote dramatic art. Id. at 656, 319 S.E.2d at 247.

[*51] HN13[] In the context of class actions, "[c]ourts have utilized cy pres distributions where class members are difficult to identify, or where they change constantly, or where there are unclaimed funds. In these cases, the court, guided by the parties' original purpose, directs that the unclaimed funds be distributed for the indirect prospective benefit of the class." 3 Alba Conte & Herbert Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions § 10:16, at 513 n.1 (4th ed. 2002).

[*52] The cy pres distributions here are all going to respectable medical or charitable organizations. However, the injured class in this case consists of consumers who [42] were overcharged for a variety of products as the result of an alleged conspiracy between manufacturers of synthetic rubber. The funds distributed are in no way "for the indirect prospective benefit of the class." Such distributions are contrary to the very definition of "cy pres." The National Association of Consumer Advocates suggests that "[c]lass counsel should recommend cy pres remedies which will provide indirect benefit to absent members of the class or which will further the purposes of the underlying litigation." Nat'l Ass'n of Consumer Advocates, Standards and Guidelines for Litigating and Settling Consumer Class Actions § 7.C., at 32 (rev. 2006), available at http://www.naca.net/_assets/media/RevisedGuidelines.pdf. The purpose of this litigation was to protect consumers from collusion among manufacturers. The organizations receiving funds from these settlements engage in many praiseworthy activities for the benefit of the sick and injured, but they do not work to protect consumers. The distribution of these settlement funds is clearly not "as near as possible" to the purposes of the litigation or the benefit of class members.

[*53] In this case, the settlements [43] approved by Judge McAfee are prima facie evidence of the fact that there can be no administratively economical distribution to the class and that the cy pres distribution will result in less than fifty percent of the settlement being distributed to anyone in need. Of that amount, there is no demonstrable showing that any citizen of North Carolina will benefit and a clear indication that citizens of states which do not have indirect purchaser statutes (a majority) will benefit as much as, if not more than, citizens of states that recognize such causes of action. Approximately $ 150,000 will be spent on "notices" to tell class members who probably will never recognize that they are class members that they will receive nothing from the settlement.

[*54] The indirect purchaser cases present a real contradiction. Usually the defendants have been charged with or pleaded guilty to a federal antitrust violation. They are not entitled to any sympathy. The nature of the cases makes proof and defense practically or economically impossible. The Court is not aware of any indirect purchaser case ever being tried in North Carolina, or nationally for that matter. Settlement is virtually certain. [44] Because the individual class members' damages are usually so small that administration of distribution of a fund is impossible or impractical, a cy pres settlement is the norm. This case is a classic example. Since the states with indirect purchaser standing are limited, defendants want them all settled at once. Plaintiffs' counsel are happy to agree as the settlement fund from which they claim a fee is larger. Simultaneous settlement ensures that multistate distributions to individuals are practically impossible. That leads to forum shopping to get a nationwide class action settlement approved. The parties have a common interest in making the selected judge happy.

[*55] These motions present the flip side of the coin if there is no standing requirement for indirect purchaser cases in North Carolina. In the event there is no standing requirement, most cases will involve individual clams for which it would be impossible to economically distribute small sums to consumers. These cases will result in cy pres distributions such as those proposed in this case. The economics of litigation dictate that defendants resolve all the individual state litigation at one time. Hence, there has [45] developed the practice of counsel for plaintiffs and defendants choosing a state where they can get court approval of a nationwide settlement that encompasses claims from all states which recognize indirect purchaser status. Such distributions have the salutary benefit of not permitting the guilty price fixer to escape from paying state law claims in addition to the direct claims for which they are liable under federal law. The question raised in light of the realities of this kind of litigation is what responsibilities lawyers for the North Carolina class and North Carolina judges have to see that these "nationwide" settlements are fair to North Carolinians.

[*56] Here the parties chose Tennessee. [4] The reason for that selection is not obvious from the facts of the case. It is obvious that local institutions in Tennessee will benefit disproportionately to other states. It is arguable that some North Carolina residents may go to St. Jude's Children's Hospital for treatment and that some North Carolina residents may receive scholarships from the Special Operations Warrior Fund. All the recipients are worthy charities, and the Court is sure Judge McAfee was conscientious in his [46] selection.

[*57] The Court has reached two conclusions based upon its experience with these cases. First, if a nationwide settlement is approved in another state, it is unlikely that North Carolina residents will benefit in any significant way and the public policy embodied in section 1-267.10 will be ignored. Local judges selected by the lawyers get to decide where the cy pres money goes.

[*58] Second, no money goes to people who have allegedly been injured. The lawyers benefit directly, and the fees and expenses often consume fifty percent of the settlement funds. Indirect purchaser cases have become a means of generating legal fees without any corresponding value to the persons allegedly [47] injured. If we are to punish those who are guilty of antitrust violations, it seems appropriate that the funds generated by such suits be distributed to victims, a fund they have a connection to, or at least in a manner consistent with the established public policy set by the Legislature. This settlement distributes funds in a manner totally unrelated to the alleged victims and without regard to North Carolina public policy.

[*59] This area of the law is in serious need of attention. The appellate courts may find that there is no standing requirement. If so, some guidance to trial judges about their obligations to protect the public from settlements that only benefit the lawyers and the citizens of other states would be useful. This Court has attempted to discern the public policy indicated by the Legislature in section 1-267.10 in a manner to make the settlement of North Carolina claims comport with North Carolina public policy. The Legislature itself could clarify the situation by amending the statute to make clear that if injured persons do not receive any distribution, cy pres funds, whether generated by state or nationwide settlement, should be dispersed to a fund with some [48] beneficial relationship to the victims or as a default as directed in the statute. Judges should not be making those decisions. As the Financial Times noted in an article critical of cy pres class action settlements, "[g]overnments, Legislatures and elected representatives should look after society as a whole; courts and lawyers should stick to the task of compensating victims." Patti Waldmeir, Charitable Giveaway That Cheats Justice: Microsoft's Offer to Settle a Legal Case by Giving Computers to Poor Children Illustrates a Disturbing Tendency for US Courts to Assume the Role of Social Policy Arbiters, Fin. Times, Nov. 29, 2001, at 19.

[*60] The dangers inherent in and problems created when the parties join in selection of one state forum for settlement of nationwide claims underlie the rationale for the federal Class Action Fairness Act. See Class Action Fairness Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-2, 119 Stat. 4 (codified in scattered sections of 28 U.S.C.); see also Anna Andreeva, Comment, Class Action Fairness Act of 2005: The Eight-Year Saga Is Finally Over, 59 U. Miami L. Rev. 385, 393-94 (2005) (describing congressional concern with forum shopping [49] in class action litigation). One need only look at the outcome for North Carolina residents of Moody v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2007 NCBC 13 (N.C. Super. Ct. May 7, 2007), to see the impact locally. Moody involved a nationwide class action settlement administered in Illinois in which North Carolina citizens received a total of $ 66 in cash and coupons and the entire nationwide class received cash and coupons totaling only $ 2,402, while the lawyers got close to a million dollars in cash. Id. P 2. North Carolina courts should not abdicate to judges in foreign jurisdictions the determination of cy pres distributions of settlement funds which belong in part to North Carolina residents and should ensure that North Carolina public policy is followed. The even more difficult question is whether the North Carolina courts should permit dismissal of North Carolina class actions where, as here, no allocation of damages has been made among the states having indirect purchase standing. It can be done. See Thai Holding of Charlotte, Inc. v. Archer Daniels Midland Co., 2007 NCBC 11 (N.C. Super. Ct. May 7, 2007).

---

[4] In another case pending before this Court the parties selected New Mexico. See Thai Holding of Charlotte, Inc. v. Archer Daniels Midland Co., No. 03 CVS 15096 (N.C. Super. Ct. Sept. 3, 2003). The use of nationwide class action settlements presided over by state judges can be troublesome. See infra P 60.

[*61] The message from this decision should [50] be clear. If North Carolina lawyers and class representatives undertake the representation of North Carolina citizens, they must ensure that the state's interests and the interests of its injured citizens come first. North Carolina courts will and should be reluctant to approve dismissal of any purported North Carolina class action where the North Carolina share of the settlement proceeds is not disbursed to its injured citizens or for their benefit in a cy pres fund related to North Carolina victims or in conformity with the public policy established in section 1-267.10. That is especially true where North Carolina is in the minority of states which recognize indirect purchaser standing.

[*62] Class representatives and class counsel should see that (1) a fair share of damages is allocated to North Carolina, (2) victims receive damages if possible, (3) cy pres funds bear some relation to the class of victims, or (4) the North Carolina funds are distributed in accordance with section 1-267.10. At least in the fallback position, the statute promotes access to the court system by North Carolina citizens.

[*63] This Court reluctantly approves the dismissal of this action. It [51] does so because it has held that there is no standing and therefore no reason not to approve the payment of funds by the other defendants. Neither Mr. Teague nor his counsel have adequately represented the class in this action. Had they secured a settlement that distributed funds to North Carolina victims of the alleged violation or secured a cy pres distribution in conformity with the interests of the North Carolina class or North Carolina public policy as embodied in section 1-267.10 they would have fulfilled their obligation even if it was in the context of a multistate settlement.

[*64] The Court hopes that in the future class counsel will become more attuned to the interests of the class members and that either the appellate courts or the Legislature will bring some rationality to a flawed process.

III.

CONCLUSION

[*65] Based upon the foregoing, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, and DECREED as follows:

1. Defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED. Plaintiff's complaint against Defendants Crompton Corporation, Uniroyal Chemical Company, DSM Copolymer, Inc., DSM Elastomers Europe, B.V., and ExxonMobil Chemical Company is hereby dismissed.

2. Plaintiff's Motion [52] for Leave to Dismiss with Prejudice Defendants Bayer Corporation, Bayer MaterialScience, LLC, and Bayer AG is GRANTED.

3. Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss Defendants Dow Chemical Company, E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Company and DuPont Dow Elastomers, LLC is GRANTED.

4. Within sixty days from the date of entry of this Order, Plaintiff's counsel shall file with the Court an affidavit showing publication on two successive Sundays of a legal notice in the Citizen-Times of Asheville and The News & Observer of Raleigh. The notice published in these newspapers shall be four columns wide and printed in ten-point font. The notice shall detail the following:

   a. The total amount of the settlement.
   b. The recipients of the settlement distribution.
   c. The benefit to North Carolina class members.
   d. The amount of fees and expenses paid to counsel representing the North Carolina class.
   e. The total amount of fees paid to class counsel.
   f. The costs of notice and other administrative expenses.

IT IS SO ORDERED, this the 7th day of May, 2007.

In re Rubber Chems. Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

May 9, 2007, Decided ; May 9, 2007, Filed

No. C04-1648 MJJ (BZ) (Lead Case)

Reporter

486 F. Supp. 2d 1078 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35589 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,721

IN RE: RUBBER CHEMICALS ANTITRUST LITIGATION, This document relates to: C07-1057 MJJ (BZ)

Subsequent History: Dismissed by, in part In re Rubber Chems. Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62734 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 13, 2007)

Prior History: In re Rubber Chems. Antitrust Litig., 232 F.R.D. 346, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39808 (N.D. Cal., 2005)

Core Terms

documents, comity, discovery, investigations, conspiracy, antitrust, sovereign, Leniency

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Comity Doctrine Procedures > Discretion Regarding Procedures

HN1[] Civil Procedure, Discovery & Disclosure

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure authorize party-initiated discovery of any evidence that is relevant to any party's claims or defenses. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1). However, Rule 26 grants the court discretion to limit discovery on several grounds, including international comity. American courts, in supervising pretrial proceedings, should exercise special vigilance to demonstrate due respect for any sovereign interest expressed by a foreign state.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN2[] Courts, Judicial Comity

Comity, in the legal sense, is neither a matter of absolute obligation, on the one hand, nor of mere courtesy and good will, upon the other. It is the recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial acts of another nation, having due regard both to international duty and convenience, and to the rights of its own citizens or of other persons who are under the protection of its laws.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Tribunals

HN3[] Dispute Resolution, Comity Doctrine

The European Commission is the executive and administrative organ of the European communities. The Commission exercises responsibility over the wide range of subject areas covered by the European Union Treaty; those areas include the treaty provisions, and regulations thereunder, governing competition. While the U.S. Supreme Court has not expressly held that the European Union is a sovereign who should be accorded comity, the analysis it has conducted in concluding that the European Commission is a tribunal within the meaning of 28 U.S.C.S. § 1782(a) is in significant part a comity analysis. Nothing in the Supreme Court's opinion suggests that the European Union should not be treated as a sovereign.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN4[] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

The Directorate-General for Competition, operating under the European Commission's aegis, is the European Union's primary antitrust law enforcer.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Comity Doctrine Procedures > Discretion Regarding Procedures

HN5[] Courts, Judicial Comity

In undertaking a comity analysis, a court must balance five competing factors: (1) the importance to the litigation of the documents or other information requested; (2) the degree of specificity of the request; (3) whether the information originated in the United States; (4) the availability of alternative means of securing the information; and (5) the extent to which noncompliance with the request would undermine important interests of the United States, or compliance with the request would undermine important interests of the state where the information is located.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Comity Doctrine Procedures > Discretion Regarding Procedures

HN6[] Courts, Judicial Comity

Courts are less inclined to ignore a foreign state's concerns where the outcome of litigation does not stand or fall on a discovery order, or where the evidence sought is cumulative of existing evidence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Foreign Discovery

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Comity Doctrine Procedures > Discretion Regarding Procedures

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Evidence > General Overview

HN7[] Methods of Discovery, Foreign Discovery

As to the specificity of a discovery request and its relation to international comity, generalized searches for information whose disclosure is prohibited under foreign law are discouraged.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Comity Doctrine Procedures > Discretion Regarding Procedures

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Evidence > General Overview

HN8[] Courts, Judicial Comity

The fourth factor in the international comity analysis is whether the information sought can be obtained through alternative means. If the information sought can easily be obtained elsewhere, there is little or no reason to offend foreign law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Foreign Discovery

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Comity Doctrine Procedures > Discretion Regarding Procedures

HN9[] Methods of Discovery, Foreign Discovery

A court must determine the extent to which noncompliance with a request would undermine important interests of the United States, or compliance with the request would undermine important interests of the state where the information is located. This requires a balancing of comity with the underlying policies of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Counsel: [1] For Rubber Engineering & Development Company, Plaintiff: Joseph M. Barton, Paul F. Bennett, LEAD ATTORNEYS, C. Andrew Dirksen, Steven O. Sidener, Gold Bennett Cera & Sidener LLP, San Francisco, CA; Richard Alexander Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY, Saveri & Saveri Inc., San Francisco, CA; Yvonne M. Flaherty, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Joseph Bruckner, Lockridge Grindal Nauen PLLP, Minneapolis, MN; Karen Dixon Fineran, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, Palo Alto, CA; Linda Phyllis Nussbaum, Kaplan Fox & Kilsheimer, LLP, New York, NY; Michael D. Hausfeld, Cohen Milstein Hausfeld & Toll, Washington, DC; Richard Adam Koffman, Cohen, Milstein, Hausfeld & Toll, P.L.L.C., Washington, DC.

For Percision Associates, Inc., Plaintiff: Guido Saveri, Richard Alexander Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Lisa Saveri, Saveri & Saveri Inc., San Francisco, CA; Yvonne M. Flaherty, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Joseph Bruckner, Lockridge Grindal Nauen PLLP, Minneapolis, MN.

For Monmouth Rubber & Plastics Corp., Plaintiff: Richard Alexander Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY, Saveri & Saveri Inc., San Francisco, CA; H. Laddie Montague, Jr., Ruthanne Gordon, Berger & Montague PC, Philadelphia, PA.

For Polymerics Inc., Plaintiff: Richard Alexander [2] Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY, Saveri & Saveri Inc., San Francisco, CA; Yvonne M. Flaherty, LEAD ATTORNEY, W. Joseph Bruckner, Lockridge Grindal Nauen PLLP, Minneapolis, MN; Michael Paul Lehmann, Furth Lehmann & Grant LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For RBX Industries, Inc., Plaintiff: Dianne M. Nast, LEAD ATTORNEY, Roda & Nast PC, Lancaster, PA; Michael G. Nast, Roda & Nast, Lancaster, PA; Michael L. Roberts, Roberts Law Firm, Little Rock, AR.

For Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, The, Plaintiff: Jack Morrison, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Thomas R. Houlihan, Amer Cunningham, Akron, OH; Michael R. Rickman, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, OH; Richard A. Arnold, Kenny Nachwalter, Miami, FL; William J. Blechman, Kenny Nachwalter PA, Miami, FL.

For Industrial Rubber Products, L.L.C., Plaintiff: Susan Gilah Kupfer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Parker Hannifin Corporation, PolyOne Corporation, Plaintiffs: Edmund Wilson Searby, LEAD ATTORNEY, Walter W. Noss, Scott & Scott LLC, Chagrin Falls, OH.

For Globe Manufacturing Co., Inc., North American Rubber Thread Co., Inc., Plaintiffs: Joseph M. Barton, Gold Bennett Cera & Sidener LLP, San [3] Francisco, CA.

For Caterpillar Inc., Plaintiff: Daniel Simon Mason, Attorney at Law, San Francisco, CA.

For Chemtura Corporation, Plaintiff: Mark A. Racanelli, O'Melveny & Meyers LLP, New York, NY US.

For Bridgestone Americas Holding Inc, Bridgestone Firestone North American Tire, LLC, Pirelli Tire LLC, Plaintiffs: A. Scott Ross, LEAD ATTORNEY, Neal & Harwell, Nashville, TN US; Alexandre De Gramont, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC; Aubrey B. Harwell, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Neal & Harwell, , Nashville, TN; Daniel Allen Sasse, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA; Kent A. Gardiner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Roger Scott Feldmann, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA usa.

For Bandag Incorporated, Plaintiff: A. Scott Ross, LEAD ATTORNEY, Neal & Harwell, Nashville, TN US; Alexandre De Gramont, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC; Aubrey B. Harwell, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Neal & Harwell, Nashville, TN; Daniel Allen Sasse, LEAD ATTORNEY, Van-Dzung Vu Nguyen, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA; Kent A. Gardiner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Roger Scott Feldmann, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell [4] & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA usa.

For Akzo Nobel N.V., Defendant: Michael A. Sitzman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Akzo Nobel Inc., Defendant: Michael A. Sitzman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam Joseph Di Vincenzo, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Washington, DC.

For Flexsys N.V., Defendant: Michael A. Sitzman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam Joseph Di Vincenzo, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Washington, DC; Andrew Zachary Edelstein, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Flexsys America L.P., Defendant: Michael A. Sitzman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam Joseph Di Vincenzo, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Washington, DC; Andrew Zachary Edelstein, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, Los Angeles, CA; D. Jarrett Arp, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher, Washington, DC.

For Solutia, Inc., Defendant: John Guyler White, Richard Allen Jones, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA.

For Bayer A.G., Defendant: Julie E. McEvoy, Jones Day, Washington, DC US; Kerry C. White, Jones Day, Los Angeles, CA; Matthew P. Vandall, Kauff McClain & McGuire, San Francisco, [5] CA; Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Bayer Corporation, Defendant: Julie E. McEvoy, Jones Day, Washington, DC US; Matthew P. Vandall, Kauff McClain & McGuire, San Francisco, CA; Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Rhein Chemie Corporation, Defendant: Caroline N. Mitchell, Susan Q Haines, Thomas A. Rector, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA; Matthew P. Vandall, Kauff McClain & McGuire, San Francisco, CA.

For Crompton Corporation, Uniroyal Chemical Company, Inc., Defendants: Michael F. Tubach, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Bayer Corp., Defendant: Amy K. Pohl, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Pittsburgh, PA; Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Bayer AG, Bayer Corporation, Rhein Chemie Corporation, Defendants: Susan Q Haines, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Azko Nobel Chemicals, Inc., Defendant: Robert Anthony Klein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Conrad O'Brien Gellman & Rohn, Philadelphia, PA; Andrew Zachary Edelstein, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Flexsys N.V., Defendant: Robert Anthony Klein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Conrad O'Brien Gellman & Rohn, Philadelphia, PA.

For Crompton Corporation, [6] Uniroyal Chemical Company, Inc., Defendants: Debra H. Dermody, LEAD ATTORNEY, Reed Smith, Pittsburgh, PA.

For Bayer A.G., Defendant: Melissa J. Nandi, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Cleveland, OH; Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Rhein Chemie Corporation, Defendant: Melissa J. Nandi, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Cleveland, OH; Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Uniroyal Chemical Co., Inc., Crompton Corporation, Defendants: Thomas M. Parker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Parker Leiby Hanna & Rasnick, Akron, OH; Benjamin G. Bradshaw, Charles E. Borden, Ian T Simmons, Richard G. Parker, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Washington, DC.

For Bayer AG, Bayer Corporation, Rhein Chemie Corporation, Defendants: Caroline N. Mitchell, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Rhein Chemie Rheinau GmbH, Rhein Chemie GMBH, Defendants: Caroline N. Mitchell, Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Bay MaterialScience LLC, Defendant: Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Crompton Corporation, Defendant: Steven Ellis Conigliaro, O'Melveny & Myers, San Francisco, CA.

For Chemtura Corporation, Defendant: Ian T Simmons, LEAD ATTORNEY, O'Melveny & Myers [7] LLP, Washington, DC.

For Joseph B. Eisenberg, Defendant: Jason M. Koral, William J. Schwartz, Cooley Godward Kronish LLP, New York, NY.

For Michael J. Duchesne, Defendant: Rachel J Nash, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jason Brown, Ropes & Gray, New York, NY.

For Peter D. Welch, Defendant: Barry A. Bohrer, E. Scott Schirick, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Morvillo Abramowitz Grand Iason Anello & Bohrer PC, New York, NY US.

For Akzo Nobel Chemicals International B.V., Defendant: Andrew Zachary Edelstein, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Rhein Chemie Corporation, 3rd party defendant: Caroline N. Mitchell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Rhein Chemie Rheinau GBMH, 3rd party defendant: Caroline N. Mitchell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA; Susan Q Haines, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Chemtura Corporation, Uniroyal Chemical Company, Inc., 3rd party defendants: Steven Ellis Conigliaro, LEAD ATTORNEY, O'Melveny & Myers, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: Bernard Zimmerman, United States Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: Bernard Zimmerman

Opinion

[*1080]

ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY

May plaintiff discover communications between a defendant's [8] affiliate and the European Commission that were made pursuant to the Commission's Leniency Program? Based on the particular facts of this case, I conclude it may not and DENY plaintiff's motion to compel.

In 2002, attorneys representing defendant Flexsys N.V. met with officials of the European Commission. Flexsys N.V. disclosed the existence of anti-competitive practices in the rubber chemicals industry and solicited immunity from fines for Flexsys N.V. pursuant to the Commission's Leniency Program. [1] Decision of the European Commission dated December 21, 2005 attached as Exhibit D to the Forman Supplemental Declaration filed February 12, 2007 (hereafter "Decision") P 46. Over the next three years the Commission, through its Directorate-General for Competition ("DG-Competition") carried out an extensive investigation during which there were communications between the Commission and its counsel and Flexsys N.V. and its counsel. At the conclusion of its investigation, the Commission issued its 106-page Decision containing highly detailed findings of fact based on specific evidence, including evidence that was submitted by Flexsys N.V.

[9] In 2006, Plaintiff Korea Kumho Petrochemical Co., Ltd. ("Kumho"), filed this complaint against defendant Flexsys America L.P. ("Flexsys"), its affiliate Flexsys N.V., and others, alleging that defendants engaged in unlawful conduct to exclude Kumho from the U.S. rubber chemicals market. Kumho then served Flexsys, but not Flexsys N.V., with requests for documents related to investigations of suspected antitrust violations in the rubber chemicals industry that were conducted by the governments of the United States, Canada, and the European Union.

Flexsys objected to the requests on various grounds. Over the ensuing months, the parties resolved many of the objections. Flexsys produced documents with [*1081] respect to the U.S. and Canadian investigations and produced all the business documents that had been produced in Europe. Flexsys refuses to produce the communications between the Commission and Flexsys N.V. which were generated under the Leniency Program (hereafter collectively referred to as the EC documents). Flexsys objects on the principal ground that production would conflict with the policies of a foreign sovereign, which is entitled to comity. Flexsys has submitted a letter from [10] the Commission opposing discovery of the EC documents. [2]

---

[1] "The European Commission's 'Leniency Program' allows 'cartel participants [to] confess their wrongdoing' in return for prosecutorial leniency." Intel Corp. v. Advanced Micro Devices, Inc., 542 U.S. 241, 266 n.18, 124 S. Ct. 2466, 159 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2004).

[2] The Commission feels so strongly about this issue that it has filed briefs amicus curiae in two other cases in which similar issues have arisen. In In re Methionine Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 00-1311 CRB, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27122 (N.D. Cal. July 17, 2002), Judge Breyer affirmed a special master's report which denied plaintiff's motion to compel. The special master, a retired former judge of this court, had conducted a comity analysis and concluded that "the balance tips strongly in favor of" respecting the Commission's interests, largely because, as here, the documents at issue were not seen as that important and alternative sources for the information existed. Order on Plaintiff's Motion to Compel at 13. In In re Vitamin Antitrust Litig., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26490 (D.D.C. Jan. 23, 2002) and 25815 (Dec. 18, 2002), the court adopted a special master's report which recommended that the documents be produced after the master conducted a comity analysis. While the master's report was sealed, in balancing the comity factors the court concluded that the information there sought did not all originate outside the U.S. and could not be obtained from other sources. The court also doubted that production of the documents would undermine [11] HN1[] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure authorize party-initiated discovery of any evidence that is relevant to any party's claims or defenses. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1). However, Rule 26 grants the court discretion to limit discovery on several grounds, including international comity. See Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. United States Dist. Court for Southern Dist., 482 U.S. 522, 544, 107 S. Ct. 2542, 96 L. Ed. 2d 461 (1987). American courts, in supervising pretrial proceedings, should exercise special vigilance to demonstrate due respect for any sovereign interest expressed by a foreign state. Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 546.

HN2[] "Comity, in the legal sense, is neither a matter of absolute obligation, on the one hand, nor of mere courtesy and good will, upon the other." Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 544 (citing Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S. 113, 163-64, 16 S. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95 (1895)). It is the recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial acts of another nation, having due regard both to international duty and convenience, and to the rights of its own citizens or of other persons who [12] are under the protection of its laws." Id.

As a threshold matter, Kumho doubts the position the Commission has taken in this case is even entitled to comity. It first questions whether the European Union is a sovereign entity. As the Supreme Court recognized in Intel v. Advanced Micro Devices, Inc., 542 U.S. 241, 124 S. Ct. 2466, 159 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2004), HN3[] "'The European Commission is the executive and administrative organ of the European communities' . . . The Commission exercises responsibility over the wide range of subject areas covered by the European Union Treaty; those areas include the treaty provisions, and regulations thereunder, governing competition." Id. at 250. While the Supreme Court did not expressly hold that the European Union is a sovereign who should be accorded comity, the analysis it conducted in [*1082] concluding that the European Commission is a tribunal within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1782(a) is in significant part a comity analysis. Id. at 261-62. Nothing in the Supreme Court's opinion suggests that the European Union should not be treated as a sovereign. Kumho has cited no authority in support of its position and the [13] only authority of which I am aware accords the European Union comity. [3]

Kumho next questions whether the letter directed to the court and signed by Kirtikumar Mehta, Director of DG-Competition, accurately states the views of the Commission. Once again, the Supreme Court has recognized that HN4[] "DG-Competition, operating under the Commission's aegis, is the European Union's primary antitrust law enforcer." Intel Corp. v. Advanced Microdevices, Inc., 542 U.S. at 250. Far from being a mere "bureaucrat," as Kumho has characterized him, Mr. Mehta seems analogous to the head of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division. His letter states that it "reflects the views of D.G. Competition" [14] and that the Commission will seek leave to act as amicus curiae if desired. Moreover, he has attached to his letter a position paper filed by the Commission with the United States Antitrust Modernization Commission which amplifies the Commission's views. Under these circumstances I conclude that the views expressed in Mr. Mehta's letter and its attachment are the views of the Commission.

HN5[] In undertaking a comity analysis, a court must balance five competing factors:

> "(1) the importance to the … litigation of the documents or other information requested; (2) the degree of specificity of the request; (3) whether the information originated in the United States; (4) the availability of alternative means of securing the information; and (5) the extent to which noncompliance with the request would undermine important interests of the United States, or compliance with the request would undermine important interests of the state where the information is located."

Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 544 (citing Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the U.S. § 442 (1987)). Applying this analysis, I conclude that [15] principles of comity outweigh the need for production of the EC documents.

---

important interests of the Commission based in part on expert testimony not offered in this case. *2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26490 at 127-28.

[3] See Empagaran S.A. v. Hoffman-LaRoche Ltd., 453 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2006). See also Methionine, MDL No. 00-1311 CRB, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27122 (N.D. Cal. July 17, 2002), and *Vitamins, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25815 at 33 ("the concerns of the EC should be addressed out of respect for the EC as a foreign Sovereign").

First, HN6[] courts are less inclined to ignore a foreign state's concerns where the outcome of litigation "does not stand or fall on the present discovery order," or where the evidence sought is cumulative of existing evidence. See Richmark Corp. v. Timber Falling Consultants, 959 F.2d 1468, 1475 (9th Cir. 1992). Here, plaintiff has failed to persuade me of the importance of the EC documents. Plaintiff asserts that they are "highly relevant" to its claim, in that Flexsys N.V. admitted its participation in one or more conspiracies to restrain trade. (See Memorandum in Support of Motion to Compel at 5). However, the Commission was investigating whether Flexsys N.V. had entered into a conspiracy to restrain trade and monopolize in Europe. It is not clear how relevant or important any admissions Flexsys N.V. made while seeking leniency from the Commission would be in this case in which plaintiff claims that Flexsys engaged in a conspiracy to exclude plaintiff from the U.S. rubber chemicals market. It is even less clear [*1083] for documents generated by the Commission.

Flexsys has already produced all [16] the business records Flexsys N.V. turned over to the Commission. It also produced documents relating to the investigation by the U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ"), including all documents relating to any actual or proposed amnesty, agreement, or plea. Thus, I fail to see the importance or relevance of the EC documents to this litigation in which plaintiff claims that Flexsys sought to exclude it from the U.S. market, not the European market, and plaintiff already has the documents relating to the DOJ investigation of a conspiracy in the U.S. [4] This factor weighs against production.

HN7[] As to the specificity of the request, generalized searches for information whose disclosure is prohibited under foreign law are discouraged. Richmark Corp., 959 F.2d at 1475. [17] Flexsys has not objected on these grounds, and the request for the EC documents seems sufficiently specific. This factor favors production.

As to the third factor, the EC documents did not originate in the United States. According to Flexsys, they were prepared by European counsel for Flexsys N.V. and by officials of the Commission, which sits in Belgium. In its letter the Commission states that the documents requested by Kumho include confidential Commission documents that were provided to the parties to allow them to exercise their rights of defense in the Commission's proceedings. (See Mehta Letter dated April 17, 2007, at 2). The fact that Flexsys has access to these documents in the U.S. is not dispositive. The documents were created, transmitted, and used only in Europe and in conjunction with the European enforcement proceedings. This factor weighs against production.

HN8[] The fourth factor in the comity analysis is whether the information sought can be obtained through alternative means. See Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 544. If the information sought can easily be obtained elsewhere, there is little or no reason to offend foreign law. Here, Flexsys has produced [18] the documents exchanged with the DOJ in the course of its investigation, including any amnesty or plea agreement. This information is likely to be more relevant to Kumho that the EC documents, since Kumho asserts that Flexsys conspired to keep it out of the U.S. market and any admission made to DOJ likely involves an admission of wrongdoing within the U.S.

In addition, Kumho admits that the Commission issued a lengthy Decision detailing the entire alleged price-fixing conspiracy "communication-by-communication"; an opinion that, according to Kumho, "recites the entire file which was provided to Flexsys"; an opinion to which Kumho has access and has submitted to this Court. (Memorandum in Support of Motion to Compel at 8-9). Since Kumho's request is, in large part, cumulative of information it already has, I find that the available alternative means of obtaining the information Kumho needs weighs against production. [5] [19] Finally, HN9[] a court must determine the extent to which noncompliance with the request would undermine important interests [*1084] of the United States, or compliance with the request would undermine important interests of the state where the information is located. Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 544. This requires a balancing of comity with the underlying policies of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

---

[4] In an abundance of caution, I reviewed the EC documents in camera. My review confirmed their lack of importance to this litigation. Specifically, I found no reference to Kumho or to any conduct aimed at excluding anyone from the U.S. market.

[5] Disavowal by Flexsys N.V. in this litigation of the admissions it made in Europe might alter the analysis of this factor.

The Commission states that given the crucial investigative and evidentiary value of corporate statements and voluntary submissions, the protection of these documents is "indispensable to ensure the viability and efficacy of the Leniency Programme," which the Commission has described as the E.U.'s most effective tool in combating illegal cartels. (See Mehta Letter dated April 17, 2007, at 2). The Commission also states that "any response to a discovery request covering [the information sought by Kumho] would conflict with Flexsys' obligations under E.C. law." Id. Although this investigation is completed, the Commission argues that production of the EC documents would undermine its ability to initiate and prosecute future investigations by creating disincentives to cooperate [20] with the Commission and would prejudice future investigations.

Taken as a whole, the Commission's letter is a strong objection to the production of the statements sought by Kumho, and raises some concerns that discovery of the EC documents could impact U.S. - E.U. cooperation in the enforcement of the antitrust laws. It seems that any marginal benefit that the plaintiff would gain from disclosure is outweighed by the impact that disclosure will have on the Commission's interests in the effective enforcement of its competition laws and its cooperation with the U.S. to enforce those laws internationally, especially considering that the other factors substantially disfavor production.

In this case, a foreign entity has taken a clear position and articulated reasons why it believes production of the requested documents would harm its interests. Comity is a sensitive balance, but having balanced the conflicting interests of comity and discovery, I find that in this case the principles of comity outweigh the policies underlying discovery. It is therefore ORDERED that the Motion to Compel is DENIED.

Dated: May 9, 2007

Bernard Zimmerman

United States Magistrate Judge

End of Document

Jones v. City of McMinnville

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

March 8, 2007, Argued and Submitted, Portland, Oregon ; May 9, 2007, Filed

No. 05-35523

Reporter

244 Fed. Appx. 755 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 11235 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,693

DON JONES; VJ-2 DEVELOPMENT, INC., an Oregon corporation, Plaintiffs - Appellants, v. CITY OF MCMINNVILLE, OREGON, an Oregon municipal corporation, Defendant - Appellee.

Notice: [1] PLEASE REFER TO FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE RULE 32.1 GOVERNING THE CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS.

Subsequent History: US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Jones v. City of McMinnville, 552 U.S. 890, 128 S. Ct. 311, 169 L. Ed. 2d 152, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 10718 (Oct. 1, 2007)

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Oregon. D.C. No. CV-04-00047-ALA. Ann L. Aiken, District Judge, Presiding.

Jones v. City of McMinnville, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60560 (D. Or., Apr. 25, 2005)

Core Terms

Appellants', district court, state law, ripe, equal protection claim, properly dismiss, annexation, municipal, regulations, antitrust, substantive due process claim, statute of limitations, antitrust claim, immunity, prong, procedural due process claim, due process claim, anti trust law, state court, time barred, decisions, urban

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Postremoval Remands > Motions for Remand

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews de novo a district court's denial of a motion to remand.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > General Overview

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court subjects ripeness issues to de novo review.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > Tests for Ripeness

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Eminent Domain & Takings

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > Ripeness

HN3[] Ripeness, Tests for Ripeness

Under Williamson, an as-applied takings claim is ripe only if the plaintiff can establish that (1) the government entity charged with implementing the regulations has reached a final decision regarding the application of the regulations to the property at issue, and (2) the claimant has sought compensation through the procedures the state has provided for doing so.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > Tests for Ripeness

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Eminent Domain & Takings

Real Property Law > Inverse Condemnation > Procedures

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > Ripeness

HN4[] Ripeness, Tests for Ripeness

Under Oregon law, a state law takings claim is an action for inverse condemnation. Williamson's second prong does not mandate that available state law remedies be pursued in state court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > Tests for Ripeness

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Eminent Domain & Takings

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > Ripeness

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

HN5[] Ripeness, Tests for Ripeness

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has held that the final decision requirement of Williamson's first prong is applicable to substantive due process and equal protection claims brought to challenge the application of land use regulations, and is most likely applicable to related procedural due process claims. However, the Ninth Circuit has limited Williamson's second prong to takings claims and their equivalents.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Real Property Law > Zoning > Annexation

Governments > Local Governments > Boundaries

HN6[ ] Zoning, Annexation

The Oregon Court of Appeals has held that the decision by a city or other governing body that proposes an annexation is an act of planning that must comply with the land use laws; however, the subsequent acts that are necessary to finally adopt or reject the proposal, generally a popular vote under the Or. Rev. Stat. ch. 222 procedures, are not controlled by or subject to the land use laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN7[ ] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Although the Oregon courts have not expressly resolved the issue, it is doubtful that the state courts would veer from federal antitrust law and adopt a "conspiracy exception" to municipal immunity from state law antitrust claims. The United States Supreme Court firmly rejected such an exception to federal antitrust law in Omni Outdoor Advertising. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has previously noted that the Oregon antitrust statutes under Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 646.725, 646.730 are almost identical to the federal antitrust statutes under 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2. In fact, Oregon courts look to federal antitrust decisions for "persuasive" guidance in interpreting the state antitrust laws. Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.715(2). Indeed, Oregon has adopted by statute the same test for municipal immunity applied by the federal courts. Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.740. Also, the Oregon state courts have not mentioned the potential exception despite finding municipal immunity in a number of antitrust cases since City of Columbia.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

HN8[ ] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The appellate court reviews for an abuse of discretion a district court's grant of a motion to strike.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN9[ ] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The appellate court reviews de novo a district court's order granting summary judgment to determine whether, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, any genuine issue of material fact exists and whether the court correctly applied the relevant substantive law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN10[ ] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A municipality is immune from federal antitrust liability where its actions restricting competition are authorized by state policy. The court applies a two-part test to determine whether a clearly articulated state policy has authorized a municipality's anticompetitive actions. First, a court must determine whether the legislature authorized the challenged actions of the city. Second, the court must determine whether the legislature intended to displace competition with regulation.

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

Real Property Law > Zoning > General Overview

HN11[] Local Governments, Duties & Powers

Or. Rev. Stat. chs. 195-197 and 222 grant municipalities broad authority to engage in comprehensive land use planning, zoning, and annexation. Further, Oregon requires municipalities to make land use decisions in compliance with a state-acknowledged plan. Or. Rev. Stat. § 197.175(2).

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Eminent Domain & Takings

HN12[] Fundamental Rights, Eminent Domain & Takings

Or. Const. art. I, § 18 provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. The Oregon Court of Appeals has held that a regulation may constitute a taking under the state constitution if it is a step in a plan to acquire the property for public use and denies the owner an economic use of the property pending its eventual acquisition.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations

HN13[] Procedural Matters, Statute of Limitations

Because the statute of limitations for federal constitutional claims under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 is determined by the forum state's statute of limitations for personal injury actions, a federal equal protection claim in Oregon is subject to a two-year statute of limitations. Oregon's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, Or. Rev. Stat. § 12.110(1), applies to actions under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983. An Oregon state law equal protection claim is also subject to a two-year statute of limitations.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN14[] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has held that, although a successful equal protection claim may be brought by a class of one, the plaintiff still bears the burden of proving that she has been intentionally treated differently from others similarly situated and that there is no rational basis for the difference in treatment.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Eminent Domain & Takings

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN15[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

Federal substantive due process claims are barred where the claimant could seek equivalent relief under constitutional provisions that provide more specific guarantees. A more general substantive due process claim cannot be brought if the claim is based on governmental conduct which implicates an enumerated constitutional right. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has broadly applied Armendariz in actions involving takings, holding that a plaintiff is precluded from asserting a substantive due process claim instead of, or in addition to, a takings claim. Also, the Ninth Circuit has clarified that these substantive due process claims should be dismissed with prejudice.

Counsel: For DON JONES, VJ-2 DEVELOPMENT, INC., an Oregon corporation, Plaintiffs - Appellants: John W. Shonkwiler, Esq., LAW OFFICES, Tigard, OR.

For CITY OF MCMINNVILLE, OREGON, an Oregon municipal corporation, Defendant - Appellee: James P. Martin, Esq., Marjorie A. Speirs, Esq., Kari A. Furnanz, Esq., HOFFMAN HART & WAGNER, LLP, Portland, OR.

Judges: Before: GOULD, PAEZ, and RAWLINSON, Circuit Judges. Rawlinson, Circuit Judge, concurring.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM *

Before: GOULD, PAEZ, and RAWLINSON, Circuit Judges.

[*756] Don Jones and VJ-2 Development, Inc. ("Appellants") appeal the district court's [*757] denial of their motion to remand and grant of summary judgment [2] to the City of McMinnville ("City"). We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we affirm. Because the parties are familiar with the background of this case, we do not recite it here.

1. Motion to Remand

Appellants argue that their federal claims were unripe, and, therefore, that the district court should have dismissed these claims without prejudice, declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state claims, and remanded the case to Oregon state court.

HN1[] We review de novo a district court's denial of a motion to remand. Harris v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 425 F.3d 689, 692 (9th Cir. 2005). HN2[] We also "subject ripeness issues to de novo review." Traweek v. City and County of San Francisco, 920 F.2d 589, 593 (9th Cir. 1990). We conclude that the district court properly denied Appellants' motion to remand. Because five of Appellants' claims arose under federal law, the City properly removed the case to federal court. Further, because at least three of these federal claims were ripe, the district court properly declined to dismiss those claims and retained supplemental jurisdiction over Appellants' [3] state law claims, which were also ripe.

Under the two-prong test set forth by the Supreme Court in Williamson County Regional Planning Commission v. Hamilton Bank of Johnson City, 473 U.S. 172, 105 S. Ct. 3108, 87 L. Ed. 2d 126 (1985), Appellants' federal takings claim was not ripe:

---

* This disposition is not appropriate for publication and is not precedent except as provided by Ninth Cir. R. 36-3.

> HN3[] Under Williamson, an as-applied takings claim is ripe only if the plaintiff can establish that (1) "the government entity charged with implementing the regulations has reached a final decision regarding the application of the regulations to the property at issue," and (2) the claimant has sought "compensation through the procedures the State has provided for doing so."

Carson Harbor Vill., Ltd. v. City of Carson, 353 F.3d 824, 826 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Williamson, 473 U.S. at 194).

The parties agree that the City issued numerous final decisions, such that Appellants' claims satisfy Williamson's first prong, but Appellants concede that they have not sought just compensation for the alleged taking through available state procedures under Oregon law, which allows for inverse condemnation actions. See Dodd v. Hood River County, 59 F.3d 852, 859-61 (9th Cir. 1995). [4] Thus, their federal takings claim was not ripe under Williamson's second prong, and the district court properly dismissed it without prejudice.

However, as the district court properly concluded, Appellants' state law takings claim was ripe. HN4[] Under Oregon law, Appellants' state law takings claim is an action for inverse condemnation. See Vokoun v. City of Lake Oswego, 335 Ore. 19, 56 P.3d 396, 400-01 (Or. 2002). Thus, Appellants sought compensation through the available state procedure for obtaining relief, exactly as Williamson requires. Contrary to Appellants' argument, Williamson's second prong does not mandate that available state law remedies be pursued in state court. Cf. Macri v. King County, 126 F.3d 1125, 1129-30 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that the district court properly remanded appellants' state law inverse condemnation claim, not because it was unripe, but because the court did not abuse its discretion in declining to exercise supplemental jurisdiction after dismissing all of appellants' federal claims); *Sinclair [758] Oil Corp. v. County of Santa Barbara, 96 F.3d 401, 408 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that the district court properly [5] dismissed appellant's state law inverse condemnation claim as unripe because it was barred under Williamson's first prong).

Appellants' federal and state equal protection and procedural due process claims, and state law substantive due process claim, were also ripe. HN5[] We have held that "the final decision requirement [of Williamson's first prong] is applicable to substantive due process and equal protection claims brought to challenge the application of land use regulations, and is most likely applicable to related procedural due process claims." Hoehne v. County of San Benito, 870 F.2d 529, 532 (9th Cir. 1989) (citations omitted). However, we have limited Williamson's second prong to takings claims and their equivalents. See Sinclair, 96 F.3d at 405.

Here, Appellants' equal protection claims, alleging that the City "intentionally treated [them] differently from others similarly situated" by "exten[ding] public facilities" to similar parcels of land, are not mere reformulations of their federal takings claim. Likewise, to the extent Appellants set forth cognizable procedural due process claims, and a cognizable state law substantive [6] due process claim, they are distinct from their federal takings claim.

Lastly, as explained below, it is immaterial whether Appellants' federal substantive due process claim was ripe or not, because the claim was barred under Armendariz v. Penman, 75 F.3d 1311 (9th Cir. 1996). In sum, the district court properly declined to remand Appellants' case to state court. Although Appellants' federal takings claim was not ripe, their federal procedural due process, equal protection, and antitrust claims were ripe, and, hence, the district court properly declined to dismiss those claims and exercised its discretion to maintain supplemental jurisdiction over Appellants' state law claims, which were also ripe.

2. Abstention

Because we can resolve Appellants' remaining claims without addressing doubtful issues of state law, the district court did not abuse its discretion in declining to exercise Pullman abstention. See Smelt v. County of Orange, 447 F.3d 673, 681-82 (9th Cir. 2006).

First, contrary to Appellants' argument, there is no unresolved issue of state law regarding the alleged conflict between the City's Charter Amendment, which allows [7] the City's voters to veto proposed annexations, and Oregon's land use statutes, which require the City to comply with certain land use goals in making land use decisions. As the Oregon Court of Appeals has held:

> HN6[] The decision by a city or other governing body that proposes an annexation is an act of planning that must comply with the land use laws; however, the subsequent acts that are necessary to finally adopt or reject the proposal, generally a popular vote under the ORS chapter 222 procedures, are not controlled by or subject to the land use laws.

Bear Creek Valley Sanitary Auth. v. City of Medford, 130 Ore. App. 24, 880 P.2d 486, 489 (Or. App. 1994) (emphases in original).

Second, HN7[] although the Oregon courts have not expressly resolved the issue, it is doubtful that the state courts would veer from federal antitrust law and adopt a "conspiracy exception" to municipal immunity from state law antitrust claims. The Supreme Court firmly rejected such an exception to federal antitrust law in City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 374-79, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991), and, as we have previously noted:

> [*759] The Oregon antitrust statutes are [8] almost identical to the federal antitrust statutes. Compare 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 with Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 646.725, 646.730. In fact, Oregon courts look to federal antitrust decisions for "persuasive" guidance in interpreting the state antitrust laws. See Willamette Dental Group, P.C. v. Oregon Dental Serv. Corp., 130 Or. App. 487, 882 P.2d 637, 640 (1994) (citing Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.715(2)).

Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 185 F.3d 957, 963 n.4 (9th Cir. 1999). Indeed, Oregon has adopted by statute the same test for municipal immunity applied by the federal courts. See Pre-Hosp. Med. Servs., Inc. v. Malheur County, 134 Ore. App. 481, 896 P.2d 585, 592 (Or. App. 1995) (citing Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.740). Also, the Oregon state courts have not mentioned the potential exception despite finding municipal immunity in a number of antitrust cases since City of Columbia. See, e.g., id.

3. Motion to Strike

Appellants also argue that the district court erred by granting the [9] City's motion to strike, in part, an affidavit from Appellant Jones. HN8[] We review for an abuse of discretion a district court's grant of a motion to strike. Hambleton Bros. Lumber Co. v. Balkin Enters., Inc., 397 F.3d 1217, 1224 n.4 (9th Cir. 2005).

Because Jones' affidavit contradicted his deposition testimony and made conclusory allegations without establishing personal knowledge, the district court did not abuse its discretion in granting the City's motion to strike portions of the affidavit.

4. Summary Judgment

HN9[] We review de novo a district court's order granting summary judgment to determine whether, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, any genuine issue of material fact exists and whether the court correctly applied the relevant substantive law. F.T.C. v. Gill, 265 F.3d 944, 954 (9th Cir. 2001).

a. Antitrust Claims

The district court properly dismissed Appellants' antitrust claims. HN10[] A municipality is immune from federal antitrust liability where its actions restricting competition are authorized by state policy. See City of Columbia, 499 U.S. at 370. We apply a two-part test [10] "to determine whether a 'clearly articulated' state policy has authorized a municipality's anticompetitive actions." Traweek, 920 F.2d at 591. "First, a court must determine whether the legislature authorized the challenged actions of the city. Second, the court must determine whether the legislature intended to displace competition with regulation." Id. at 591-92. Here, the district court properly reviewed the relevant state statutes and correctly determined that HN11[] they grant municipalities broad authority to engage in comprehensive land use planning, zoning, and annexation. See Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 195-197, 222. Further, Oregon requires municipalities to make land use decisions in compliance with a state-acknowledged plan. See id. § 197.175(2). The State has acknowledged the City's Land Use Plan, which expressly prohibits urban development of land not annexed to the City and precludes the City from extending urban services to such unincorporated land.

In light of these state policies, the City was entitled to immunity from Appellants' federal antitrust claim: the State authorized the City to make annexation decisions and limit urban development [11] and services to annexed land, and anti-competitive conduct is a foreseeable result of this broad grant of land use planning authority. See Traweek, 920 F.2d at 593.

For the same reasons, the district court properly dismissed Appellants' state law [*760] antitrust claims. As noted, Oregon's antitrust statutes are identical to the federal antitrust statutes, Oregon's test for municipal immunity is the same as the federal test, and Oregon's courts look to federal antitrust law for persuasive guidance in interpreting state antitrust law. [1]

[12] b. State Law Takings Claim

The district court also properly dismissed the City's state law takings claim. HN12[] Article I, section 18 of Oregon's constitution provides that "Private property shall not be taken for public use . . . without just compensation." On facts very similar to the instant case, the Oregon Court of Appeals held that a regulation may constitute a taking under the State constitution if it "is a step in a plan to acquire the property for public use and denies the owner an economic use of the property pending its eventual acquisition." Schoonover v. Klamath County, 105 Ore. App. 611, 806 P.2d 156, 158 (Or. App. 1991).

Here, there is no evidence that the City's regulations are "a step in a plan to acquire [Appellants'] property for public use." See id. ("Nothing in the record suggests, even remotely, that Klamath County imposed the contested condition as a step in a plan to acquire the property for public use. It merely regulated the private use of land by requiring annexation into a fire district as a condition to the development of the property as a subdivision."). Cf. Suess Builders Co. v. City of Beaverton, 294 Ore. 254, 656 P.2d 306, 310 (Or. 1982) ("The [13] issue in this case, however, arises from a governmental plan to acquire private land for public ownership.").

c. Equal Protection Claims

We agree with the district court that Appellants' equal protection claims are largely time barred, and that the City did not intentionally discriminate against Appellants by denying their request to extend urban services to their unannexed property.

HN13[] Because the statute of limitations for federal constitutional claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 is determined by the forum state's statute of limitations for personal injury actions, Appellants' federal equal protection claim is subject to a two-year statute of limitations. See Sain v. City of Bend, 309 F.3d 1134, 1139 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Oregon's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions applies to actions under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.") (citing Or. Rev. Stat. § 12.110(1)). Appellants' state law equal protection claim is also subject to a two-year statute of limitations. See Medo-Bel Creamery, Inc. v. State By and Through Kunzman, 65 Ore. App. 614, 673 P.2d 537, 542-43 (Or. App. 1983). Thus, the district [14] court correctly determined that Appellants' equal protection claims are time barred to the extent they are based on the City's denials of their annexation proposals from 1995 to 2001, but are not time barred insofar as they allege injury from the City's denial of their request to extend urban services in 2003.

[1] Appellants also argue that the "sham exception," which the Supreme Court has recognized in certain antitrust cases, precludes immunity. However, the Court has not recognized this exception in the context of state or municipal immunity, known as "Parker" immunity; it has only recognized the exception in the context of "Noerr-Pennington" immunity, which applies to private parties and is based on distinct, First Amendment considerations. See City of Columbia, 499 U.S. at 380.

Appellants' timely claims, however, are without merit. The parties agree that the analysis of Appellants' equal protection claims is the same under state and federal law. Appellants argue that they are members of a "class of one." HN14[] We have held that, although a "successful equal protection [*761] claim may be brought by a class of one, the plaintiff still bears the burden of proving that she has been intentionally treated differently from others similarly situated and that there is no rational basis for the difference in treatment." Thornton v. City of St. Helens, 425 F.3d 1158, 1167 (9th Cir. 2005) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Appellants provide no evidence that the City intentionally discriminated against them in refusing to extend services to their unannexed property. Appellants allege that the City "approved extraterritorial extension of public facilities [15] and services to property owned by [another private developer] and the McMinnville School District." Viewed in the light most favorable to Appellants, however, the record demonstrates only that the City considered extending services outside of city limits in order to support property already annexed to the City. Therefore, even assuming the City decided to extend services to these other property owners, Appellants were not similarly situated. In any event, the City had a rational basis for treating Appellants differently: the City's voters rejected each of Appellants' annexation proposals that the City Council had approved.

d. Due Process Claims

To the extent Appellants set forth a cognizable procedural due process claim, it is based exclusively on the City's and the voters' denials of Appellants' annexation proposals; Appellants do not allege that the City denied them procedural due process in rejecting their request to extend services in 2003. Because the statute of limitations analysis for Appellants' due process claims is the same as for their equal protections claims, Appellants' procedural due process claim is time barred. See Medo-Bel Creamery, 673 P.2d at 542-43 [16]

Further, HN15[] federal substantive due process claims are barred where the claimant could seek equivalent relief under constitutional provisions that provide more specific guarantees. See Armendariz, 75 F.3d at 1318-20; see also Macri, 126 F.3d at 1130 ("[A] more general substantive due process claim cannot be brought if the claim is based on governmental conduct which implicates an enumerated constitutional right."). We have broadly applied Armendariz in actions involving takings. See, e.g., Buckles v. King County, 191 F.3d 1127, 1137 (9th Cir. 1999) ("[A] plaintiff is precluded from asserting a substantive due process claim instead of, or in addition to, a takings claim."). Also, we have clarified that these substantive due process claims should be dismissed with prejudice. See Sinclair, 96 F.3d at 407 ("[T]he district court should amend its order to reflect that this count is dismissed with prejudice."). Because Appellants' federal substantive due process claim merely restates their takings and equal protections claims, the district court properly dismissed the claim with prejudice.

Finally, to the extent [17] it is not time barred, the district court properly dismissed Appellants' state law substantive due process claim, for the same reasons it dismissed Appellants' equal protection claims.

e. Civil Rights Claims

Appellants argue that they are entitled to relief for alleged civil rights violations claims only if they prevail on their other claims. In light of our disposition of Appellants' other claims, we also conclude that the district court properly dismissed their civil rights claims.

AFFIRMED.

Concur by: Rawlinson

Concur

[*762] Rawlinson, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur in the result.

In re Ditropan XL Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

May 11, 2007, Decided ; May 11, 2007, Filed

CASE NO. M:06-CV-01761-JSW, MDL No. 1761

Reporter

529 F. Supp. 2d 1098 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38068 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,737

IN RE: DITROPAN XL ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Order Relates to: ALL CASES

Subsequent History: Complaint dismissed at In re Ditropan Xl Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78423 (N.D. Cal., Oct. 11, 2007)

Core Terms

Purchaser, Indirect, restitution, motion to dismiss, Plaintiffs', profits, disgorgement, antitrust claim, funds, ownership interest, class action, antitrust, damages, unfair, generic, cases, unfair competition, Donnelly Act, misrepresentations, competitor, fraudulent, patent, unfair business practice, unjust enrichment, named plaintiff, state law, unilateral, premised, argues, prong

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN1[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Non-California resident plaintiffs may bring a Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 claim based on misconduct that occurs within California.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN2[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Damages cannot be recovered pursuant to a Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 unfair competition law claim. A plaintiff bringing such a claim is limited to injunctive relief and restitution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN3[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

An order for "restitution" is defined as one "compelling a Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 unfair competition law (UCL) defendant to return money obtained through an unfair business practice to those persons in interest from whom the property was taken, that is, to persons who had an ownership interest in the property or those claiming through that person. "Disgorgement" is a broader remedy. Disgorgement may include a restitutionary element, but it is not so limited. An order for "disgorgement" is defined as: (1) compelling a defendant to surrender all money obtained through an unfair business practice even though not all is to be restored to the person from whom it was obtained or those claiming under those persons, or (2) compelling a UCL defendant to surrender all profits earned as a result of an unfair business practice regardless of whether those profits represent money taken directly from persons who were victims of the unfair practice. Disgorgement of profits is allowed in UCL claims only to the extent it constitutes restitution, i.e., profits unfairly obtained to the extent they represent money in which the plaintiff has an ownership interest.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN4[] Remedies, Restitution

The object of restitution is to restore the status quo by returning to the plaintiff funds in which he or she has an ownership interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN5[] State Regulation, Claims

"Direct victims" of unfair competition may obtain restitution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN6[] State Regulation, Claims

Restitution under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 must be of a measurable amount to restore to the plaintiff what has been acquired by violations of the statutes, and that measurable amount must be supported by evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN7[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Pursuant Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, there are three varieties of unfair competition: practices which are unlawful, unfair or fraudulent. To state an unfair competition law (UCL) claim, a plaintiff must establish that the practice is either unlawful (i.e., is forbidden by law), unfair (i.e., harm to victim outweighs any benefit) or fraudulent (i.e., is likely to deceive members of the public).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN8[] State Regulation, Claims

Proposition 64, which was approved by California voters on November 2, 2004, amended the unfair competition law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, to limit the standing of private plaintiffs to bring UCL claims to those who "suffered injury in fact and has lost money as a result of such unfair competition. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. The UCL, as amended by Proposition 64, thus requires a person seeking to represent claims on behalf of others to show (1) she has suffered actual injury in fact, and (2) such injury occurred as a result of the defendant's alleged unfair competition or false advertising. Thus, a showing of causation is required as to each representative plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN9[] State Regulation, Claims

It is logical to require reliance on misrepresentations when an unfair competition law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, claim is premised on allegations that the defendants engaged in fraudulent business practices.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Burdens of Proof

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN10[] Standing, Burdens of Proof

To demonstrate standing named plaintiffs who represent a class must allege and show that they personally have been injured, not that injury has been suffered by other, unidentified members of the class to which they belong and which they purport to represent. Moreover, at least one named plaintiff must have standing with respect to each claim the class representatives seek to bring. A claim cannot be asserted on behalf of a class unless at least one named plaintiff has suffered the injury that gives rise to that claim.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN11[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., does not require courts to consider class certification before standing.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Burdens of Proof

HN12[] Standing, Burdens of Proof

Plaintiffs bear the burden of demonstrating standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

New York law firmly disallows a Donnelly, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340, class action by private plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 901 sets forth the prerequisites to class action suits, provides in part that unless a statute creating or imposing a penalty, or a minimum measure of recovery specifically authorizes the recovery thereof in a class action, an action to recover a penalty, or minimum measure of recovery created or imposed by statute may not be maintained as a class action. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 901(b). The Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340, in turn provides in part: any person who shall sustain damages by reason of any violation of this section, shall recover three-fold the actual damages sustained thereby. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(5). The statute is silent as to class actions. Cases applying New York law have construed the Donnelly Act in light of N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 901 and hold that class actions cannot be maintained under the Donnelly Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The Tennessee Trade Practices Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq., prohibits all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend, to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article. Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101.

Counsel: [1] For City of Fargo Health Trust Fund, Plaintiff: Anne K. Mandt, Charfoos & Christensen, P.C., Detroit, MI US; Gregory P. Sautter, Zimmerman Reed, Minneapolis, MN; Jason John Thompson, J. Thompson & Associates PLC, Southfield, MI; Mike Miller, Solberg Stewart Miller Johnson & Tjon, Fargo, ND; Timothy J. Becker, Zimmerman Reed PLLP, Minneapolis, MN.

For United Food and Commercial Workers Unions and Employers Midwest Health Benefits Fund, Plaintiff: Mark J. Tamblyn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wexler Toriseva Wallace, LLP, Sacramento, CA; Andrae P Reneau, The Wexler Firm LLP, Chicago, IL US; Curtis Brooks Cutter, Kershaw Cutter & Ratinoff LLP, Sacramento, CA; Edward A. Wallace, Kenneth A. Wexler, The Wexler Firm LLP, Chicago, IL; William Alter Kershaw, Kershaw, Cutter & Ratinoff, Sacramento, CA.

For Teamsters Local No. 35 Health Plans, Plaintiff: Elaine T. Byszewski, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hagens Berman LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jay S. Cohen, Jeffrey L. Kodroff, Patrick Howard, Theodore M. Lieverman, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Spector, Roseman & Kodroff, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Steve C. Richman, Markowitz & Richman, Philadelphia, PA.

For Local 28 Sheet Metal Workers, on behalf of itself and all others similarly [2] situated, Plaintiff: Ann K. Mandt, Charfoos & Charistensen, P.C., Detroit, MI; Gregory P. Sautter, Zimmerman Reed, Minneapolis, MN; Jason John Thompson, J. Thompson & Associates PLC, Southfield, MI; Timothy J. Becker, Zimmerman Reed PLLP, Minneapolis, MN.

For Jabo's Pharmacy, Inc., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated in the States of TN, AL, AR, FL, HI, IA, KS, ME, MA, MI, MN, MS, NB, NV, NM, NY, NC, ND, SC, SD, VT, WV, WI and the District of Columbia, Plaintiff: Gordon Ball, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ball & Scott, Knoxville, TN.

For American Sales Co., Inc., SAJ Distributers, Inc., Stephen L LaFrance, Plaintiffs: Elaine T. Byszewski, Hagens Berman LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Lee M. Gordon, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Alza Corporation a California corporation, Defendant: Taggart Hansen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, Denver, CO US; Aileen Y. Mo, San Francisco, CA; Joshua Lipton, M. Sean Royall, Washington, DC US; Michael A. Sitzman, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Johnson & Johnson, Defendant: Melinda Meador, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bass, Berry and Sims, Knoxville, TN US; Michael A. Sitzman, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher [3] LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Ortho-McNeil Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Defendant: Melinda Meador, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bass, Berry and Sims, Knoxville, TN US.

For Stephen L. LaFrance, Holiday, Inc., 3rd party defendant: Lee M. Gordon, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 572 Health and Welfare Fund, Interested Party: Mark J. Tamblyn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wexler Toriseva Wallace, LLP, Sacramento, CA.

Judges: JEFFREY S. WHITE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JEFFREY S. WHITE

Opinion

[*1099] ORDER (1) GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS DIRECT PURCHASER'S COMPLAINT AND (2) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART ALZA'S MOTION TO DISMISS INDIRECT PURCHASERS' COMPLAINT

Now before the Court are Defendants' motions to dismiss the two consolidated class action complaints filed by plaintiff American Sales Company ("ASC" or "Direct Purchaser Plaintiff") [1] and by City of [*1100] Fargo Health Trust Fund, Local 28 Sheet Metal Workers Fund, United Food & Commercial Workers Union & Employers Midwest Health Fund, Plumbers & Pipefitters Local 572 Health & Welfare Fund, and Teamsters Local No. 35 Health Plans (collectively, "Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs"). Defendants [4] Alza Corporation ("Alza") and Johnson & Johnson (collectively, "Defendants") move jointly to dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's action. Alza is the only named defendant in the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' action, and thus, only Alza moves to dismiss their complaint. Having considered the parties' arguments, relevant legal authority, and having had the benefit of oral argument, the Court hereby grants the motion to dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's complaint and grants in part and denies in part the motion to dismiss the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' complaint.

BACKGROUND

This is an antitrust action. In essence, the Direct and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs allege that Defendants filed a baseless complaint to preclude a competitor from producing a [5] generic version of the drug Ditropan XL, as well as other anti-competitive conduct. They further allege that through such anti-competitive conduct, Alza was able to maintain a monopoly and charge supra-competitive prices Ditropan XL. According to the Direct and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, Defendants' conduct in delaying or preventing the sale of a generic version of the drug caused them to pay more than they otherwise would have paid for the drug.

[1] Although the Direct Purchaser Plaintiff class action complaint was filed by Stephen L. LaFrance Holdings ("LaFrance") and SAJ Distributors ("SAJ") as well, LaFrance and SAJ recently submitted a notice of voluntary dismissal. (Docket No. 60.)

Direct Purchaser Plaintiff brings the following two claims: (1) a claim premised on Section 2 of the Sherman Act and (2) a claim for restitution, disgorgement and constructive trust. Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs assert the following three claims: (1) a claim under the California Cartwright Act; (2) a claim for violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17200; and (3) a claim for violation of the antitrust statutes of twenty-eight different states - Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, California, District of Columbia, Florida, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North [6] Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

The Court will address additional specific facts as required in the analysis.

ANALYSIS

A. Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's Complaint.

1. Antitrust Claim.

Admittedly, Direct Purchaser Plaintiff did not purchase Ditropan XL from Alza or Johnson & Johnson. Rather, Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's claims are premised on Cardinal Health, Incorporated's ("Cardinal") purchases of Ditropan XL from Ortho-McNeil Pharmaceutical, Incorporated ("Ortho-McNeil"), a wholly owned subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson. Direct Purchaser Plaintiff asserts that Cardinal purportedly assigned its antitrust claims to it. (Declaration of Michael A. Sitzman ("Sitzman Decl."), Ex. 1.) It is undisputed that Direct Purchaser Plaintiff did not directly purchase Ditropan XL from Defendants and that its ability, if any, to maintain a direct purchaser action against Defendants, arises out of its purported assignment from Cardinal. However, Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's complaint fails to allege the existence of the assignment from Cardinal. Without such allegations, any antitrust claims by Direct Purchaser Plaintiff are insufficient. [7] Accordingly, the Court dismisses the Direct [*1101] Purchaser Plaintiff's antitrust claim with leave to amend. [2]

[8] 2. Unjust Enrichment.

At the hearing on Defendants' motion to dismiss, Direct Purchaser Plaintiff clarified that its unjust enrichment claim is based on state law, but it has not plead under which state or states laws it is based. In fact, Direct Purchaser Plaintiff admitted it is not yet aware of which state or states' laws it is moving under. Its ability to plead a claim for unjust enrichment may vary from state to state, and unless and until Direct Purchaser Plaintiff clarifies under what state law it is moving, neither Defendants nor the Court can address whether the claim or claims have been adequately plead. Accordingly, the Court dismisses the unjust enrichment claim without prejudice.

---

[2] The Court notes that Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's complaint may suffer from another defect. Direct Purchaser Plaintiff does not dispute that neither Alza nor Johnson & Johnson sold Ditropan XL during the class period. Rather, its antitrust claim against these defendants is premised on the sales by Ortho-McNeil. In response to the Court's concern regarding the validity of a direct purchaser action that fails to name the direct seller, Direct Purchaser Plaintiff cited to Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), Royal Printing Co. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 621 F.2d 323, 326 (9th Cir. 1980) (holding that "Illinois Brick does not bar an indirect purchaser's suit where the direct purchaser is a division or subsidiary of a co-conspirator"), and In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Ligit., 497 F. Supp. 218, 227 (C.D. Cal. 1990) (concluding "that an indirect purchaser that purchases from an entity owned or controlled by the wrongdoer may sue to recover passed-on overcharges and is excepted from the general rule of Illinois Brick. …[T]he plaintiffs will be allowed to seek recovery only as to direct purchases from a defendant, a co-conspirator, sellers with whom the plaintiffs had pre-existing, fixed-quantity, cost-plus contracts, or an entity controlled by a conspirator.") If Direct Purchaser Plaintiff intends to pursue this action, it should be careful to plead facts that demonstrate a basis to maintain a direct purchaser action against both Johnson & Johnson and Alza based on sales by Ortho-McNeil.

B. Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Complaint.

Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs concede they are not bringing an antitrust claim under New Jersey law. (Indirect Purchasers' Opp. at 13.) Accordingly, the Court grants Alza's motion as to the New Jersey antitrust claim.

1. Unfair Competition Law Claim.

Alza moves to dismiss Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' unfair competition law claim under California Business and Professions Code § 17200 ("UCL") [9] on the following grounds: (1) the remedy Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs seek is precluded under the UCL and (2) Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs failed to allege reliance. [3]

[*1102] [10] i. The Remedy is not Precluded.

HN2[] Damages cannot be recovered pursuant to a UCL claim. Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1144, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003). A plaintiff bringing such a claim is limited to injunctive relief and restitution. Id. Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs do not dispute that they cannot obtain damages for their UCL claim. Instead, they argue that the relief they are seeking is restitutionary. Alza, on the other hand, contends that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs do not and cannot state a UCL claim because any money lost by them was not taken directly by Alza, and thus, does not qualify as restitution.

In support of its argument, Alza relies primarily on language from the California Supreme Court opinion in Korea Supply. In Korea Supply, the court addressed when disgorgement of a defendant's profits qualifies as restitution and, thus, is recoverable under UCL claims. Korea Supply, 29 Cal. 4th at 1140. The court explained the meaning of the terms "restitution" and "disgorgement." HN3[] An order for "restitution" is defined as one "compelling a UCL defendant to return money obtained through an unfair business practice [11] to those persons in interest from whom the property was taken, that is, to persons who had an ownership interest in the property or those claiming through that person." Id. at 1144-45 (quoting Kraus v. Trinity Management Services, Inc., 23 Cal. 4th 116, 126-27, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 485, 999 P.2d 718 (2000)). "Disgorgement" is a broader remedy. "Disgorgement 'may include a restitutionary element, but it is not so limited.'" Id. at 1145 (quoting Kraus, 23 Cal. 4th at 127). An order for "disgorgement" is defined as: (1) "compel[ling] a defendant to surrender all money obtained through an unfair business practice even though not all is to be restored to the person from whom it was obtained or those claiming under those persons," or (2) compelling a UCL defendant "to surrender … all profits earned as a result of an unfair business practice regardless of whether those profits represent money taken directly from persons who were victims of the unfair practice." Id. at 1145 (quoting Kraus, 23 Cal. 4th at 127). Thus, the court clarified that disgorgement of profits is allowed in UCL claims only to the extent it constitutes restitution, i.e., profits [12] unfairly obtained to the extent they represent money in which the plaintiff has an ownership interest. Id. at 1145, 1148; see also Colgan v. Leatherman Tool Group, Inc., 135 Cal. App. 4th 663, 699, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 36 (2006) (a plaintiff can seek money or property as restitution where such "money or property identified as belonging in good conscience to the plaintiff could clearly be traced to particular funds or property in the defendant's possession") (citation omitted).

[3] Even though Alza did not move to dismiss Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' UCL claim on the grounds of lack of standing, the Court questioned Alza at the hearing on its motion as to whether its standing argument would apply to this claim as well. In response, Alza argued it would. However, HN1[] non-California resident plaintiffs may bring a UCL claim based on misconduct that occurs within the California. Northwest Mortgage, Inc. v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 4th 214, 222, 224-25, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18 (1999) (citing Diamond Multimedia Syst., Inc. v. Superior Court, 19 Cal. 4th 1036, 1063-64, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 968 P.2d 539 (1999)). Because Alza's principal place of business is in California, it is reasonable to infer the alleged misconduct occurred within California. At this procedural stage, the Court will not dismiss Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' UCL claim for lack of standing. However, this ruling is without prejudice to Alza raising this argument again if it appears that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs do not have any evidence that demonstrates that the alleged misconduct actually occurred in California.

In Korea Supply, a plaintiff who alleged a lost business opportunity due to the unfair practices of a competitor sought to obtain disgorgement of the competitor's profits. Korea Supply, 29 Cal. 4th at 1140. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant's unfair business practices caused a company the plaintiff represented to lose a contract with the Republic of Korea. When the Republic of Korea awarded the contract to the defendant, the plaintiff lost the opportunity to obtain a commission it would have earned if the Republic of Korea had awarded the contract to the plaintiff's client. Id. The plaintiff then sought to obtain the profits the defendant gained from the contract with the Republic [13] of Korea. The Court held that the plaintiff was not [*1103] entitled to disgorgement of the defendant's profits under the UCL because the profits were neither money taken from the plaintiff nor funds in which the plaintiff had an ownership interest. Thus, the plaintiff's requested remedy was nonrestitutionary. Id. at 1140, 1149.

The court reasoned that HN4[] "[t]he object of restitution is to restore the status quo by returning to the plaintiff funds in which he or she has an ownership interest." Id at 1149. The court noted that "it [was] clear that plaintiff [was] not seeking the return of money or property that was once in its possession. [The plaintiff had] not given any money to [the defendant]; instead it was from the Republic of Korea that [the defendant] received its profits." Id. In light of these facts, the court found that "[a]ny award that plaintiff would recover from defendants would not be restitutionary as it would not replace any money or property that defendants took directly from plaintiff." Id.

Alza places great weight on the word "directly" in the preceding sentence, and argues argues that because Plaintiffs, as indirect [14] purchasers, did not pay any money directly to Alza, Plaintiffs cannot recover restitution under the UCL. However, as noted above, it was clear in Korea Supply that the plaintiff did not pay any money, even indirectly, to the defendant. In Korea Supply, the defendant's conduct merely caused the plaintiff to lose an opportunity to obtain a commission it would have received if a third party had awarded a contract to its client. Although the court mentions that HN5[] "direct victims" of unfair competition may obtain restitution, id. at 1152, the issue of whether someone who pays money to a defendant through an intermediary would be precluded from seeking restitution was not before the court in Korea Supply. Therefore, this Court will not read such a limitation into the holding of Korea Supply.

Nor do the other cases relied on by Alza convince the Court that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs are precluded from recovering restitution as a matter of law. See Madrid v. Perot Systems Corp., 130 Cal. App. 4th 440, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 (2005); National Rural Telecommunications Cooperative v. DIRECTV, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 2d 1059 (C.D. Cal. 2003). In these [15] cases the issue of whether indirect purchasers could recover restitution was not before the court. As in Korea Supply, it was clear that the plaintiffs were seeking to recover funds that they never paid to defendants or in which they ever had an ownership interest. Madrid, 130 Cal. App. 4th at 456 (affirming summary judgment where "even assuming [the defendant] sold confidential information, plaintiff fail[ed] to show that such profit, received from third parties, would qualify as money taken from plaintiff or money in which plaintiff had a vested ownership interest, so as to be recoverable as restitution in this UCL action"); National Rural Telecommunications, 319 F. Supp. 2d at 1079 (granting summary judgment on UCL claim finding "Plaintiffs [were] not seeking the return of money that was once in their possession").

Alza's reliance on In re First Alliance Mortgage Co., 471 F.3d 977 (9th Cir. 2006), a case it brought to the Court's attention as recent authority, similarly is misplaced. [4] This case involved a complicated financial scheme in which any funds paid by the plaintiffs were not traceable to those eventually funds [16] paid to the defendant. The plaintiffs were borrowers of First Alliance Mortgage Company ("First Alliance") who sought to impose liability on the defendant for aiding and abetting a fraudulent [*1104] scheme engaged in by First Alliance. Id. at 983. Pursuant to the scheme, First Alliance persuaded borrowers to assume loans with high interest rates and hidden "junk" fees. Id. at 985. First Alliance used a credit line provided by the defendant to fund and secure the loans. The defendant profited by earning interest from the credit line and fees for underwriting the securitizations. Id. at 986. The court affirmed summary judgment on the plaintiffs' UCL claim because it determined the relief the plaintiffs were seeking under this claim was more akin to "nonrestitutionary disgorgement" prohibited by Korea Supply. Id. at 997. The plaintiffs were seeking to disgorge all of the defendant's profits earned by the unfair business practice, "regardless of whether those profits represent money taken directly from persons who were victims of the unfair practice." Id. The court found that:

[4] The Court grants Alza's request for leave to submit this decision.

> [T]he [plaintiffs] in this case [17] cast their claim under section 17200 as one for equitable relief by asking the court to disgorge [the defendant's] "ill-gotten gains," asserting that [the defendant] unlawfully acquired money and property directly and indirectly from the [plaintiffs] and has been unjustly enriched at their expense. They do not, however, specify the amount of these "ill-gotten gains" to which they have an actual ownership interest.

Id. at 997. Significantly, the plaintiffs "did not actually claim an ownership interest in funds in [the defendant's] possession, nor explain the basis of their purported ownership interest in those funds." Id. at 997 n. 7. Therefore, the court found that their equitable claim under the UCL would be left largely to the court's speculation and thus, affirmed summary judgment against the plaintiffs. Id. at 997-98. In contrast, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs here do allege an ownership interest in funds received by Alza, namely, the profits Alza obtained by allegedly inflating the price of Ditropan XL.

[18] Although the parties did not cite to, and the Court did not find, any authority applying California law that squarely addresses whether indirect purchaser plaintiffs may recover restitution under the UCL, [5] the Court notes that one district court refused to dismiss a UCL claim in a factually analogous situation. *See Trew v. Marx, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4890, 2006 WL 306904, 2-3 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 8, 2006). In Trew, Volvo moved to strike the plaintiffs' claim for disgorgement under the UCL because, it argued, plaintiffs' damages could not be traced to funds acquired by it. *Trew, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4890, 2006 WL 306904, at 2. The plaintiffs were owners of Volvo cars. They alleged that Volvo installed defective electronic throttle modules ("ETMs") in their [*1105] cars. Volvo asserted that the "plaintiffs paid dealerships or independent mechanics to service their ETMs and that these monies did not go to Volvo." Id. The plaintiffs responded that Volvo, as the producer of the ETMs, profited from the sale of ETMs to car owners who had to have them replaced. *2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4890, [WL] at 3. The court denied the motion to strike the claim for disgorgement because the plaintiffs could recover as restitution Volvo's profits [19] from owners who replaced defective ETMs. Id.

[20] In light of the reasoning of Korea Supply, as well as that of Trew, the Court concludes that as long as Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs are ultimately able to prove traceability, California law authorizes this Court to award them restitution under the UCL. Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs are seeking to recover funds that they overpaid to Alza. [6] That Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs allege such funds were paid to Alza through an intermediary does not change the fact that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs are seeking funds in which they have an ownership interest. If Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs can demonstrate that the amount they overpaid for Ditropan XL was the amount that Alza overcharged, and that any intermediaries merely passed on the overcharge from Alza to the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs as end-paying customers, they may recover such funds as restitution under the UCL.

---

[5] Both parties assert that Colgan, 135 Cal. App. 4th 663, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 36 supports their position. However, the Court finds it does not assist either. In Colgan, the court struck down a restitution award to indirect purchaser plaintiffs who brought an antitrust action. Id. at 700. The court noted that the Korea Supply "made clear that the 'object of restitution is to restore the status quo by returning to the plaintiff funds in which he or she has an ownership interest.'" Colgan, 135 Cal. App. 4th at 697 (citing Korea Supply, 29 Cal. 4th at 1149). Restitution HN6[] under § 17200 "must be of a measurable amount to restore to the plaintiff what has been acquired by violations of the statutes, and that measurable amount must be supported by evidence." Id at 698. The court struck down the restitution award, not because the court was not authorized to award restitution to the customers, but because there was "no evidence concerning the amount of restitution necessary to restore purchasers to the status quo ante." Id. at 700 (emphasis in original). Because there was insufficient evidence to support the award, the court did not address the issue of whether restitution could be awarded to indirect purchasers.

[6] The Court notes that Defendants contend Ortho-McNeil, not Alza, sold Ditropan XL during the class period. If true, Plaintiffs may be precluded from seeking any restitution because the money they are seeking to recover was not actually paid to Alza. Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs may need to proffer the existence of facts and authority demonstrating that the money paid to Ortho-McNeil may be attributed to Alza for purposes of the UCL claim and that Ortho-McNeil should not be considered a separate entity. However, because Alza did not raise this point in its motion, and because the facts upon which the Court could decide this issue are not yet before it, the Court declines to dismiss Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' UCL claim at this stage.

[21] ii. Plaintiffs Need Not Allege Reliance.

Alza also argues that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff's UCL claim should be dismissed because they have not alleged reliance on any misrepresentations. HN7[] Pursuant Section 17200, "there are three varieties of unfair competition: practices which are unlawful, unfair or fraudulent." See Daugherty v. American Honda Motor Co., Inc., 144 Cal. App. 4th 824, 837, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118 (2006); see also Albillo v. Intermodal Container Services, Inc., 114 Cal. App. 4th 190, 206, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 350 (2003) (to state a UCL claim, a "plaintiff must establish that the practice is either unlawful unlawful (i.e., is forbidden by law), unfair (i.e., harm to victim outweighs any benefit) or fraudulent (i.e., is likely to deceive members of the public)"). Alza has not proffered any authority that demonstrates reliance on misrepresentations, as opposed to causation more generally, is required for UCL claims which fall under the unfair or unlawful prongs.

HN8[] Proposition 64, which was approved by California voters on November 2, 2004, amended the UCL to limit the standing of private plaintiffs to bring UCL claims to those who "suffered injury in fact and has lost money [22] as a result of such unfair competition." Laster v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 407 F. Supp. 2d 1181, 1193 (S.D. Cal. 2005) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204). The UCL, as amended by Proposition 64, thus requires a person seeking to represent claims on behalf of others to show "(1) she has suffered actual injury in fact, and (2) such injury occurred as a result of the defendant's alleged unfair competition or false advertising." Id. at 1194. Thus, "a showing of causation is required as to each [*1106] representative plaintiff." Id., (emphasis in original); see also Doe v. Texaco, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53930, 2006 WL 2053504 (N.D. Cal. July 21, 2006) (dismissing UCL claim for failure to sufficiently allege causation).

In Laster, the plaintiffs' UCL claim was brought under the fraudulent prong of Section 17200 and was premised on alleged false advertising by a phone company. According to the plaintiffs, the phone company falsely advertised that cell phones were free or substantially discounted but charged customers sales tax based on the phones' full retail value. Id. at 1194. However, the plaintiffs failed to allege that they [23] actually relied on any false or misleading advertising in entering into the transactions and, thus, failed to adequately allege causation. Id.

Similarly, in Texaco, the plaintiffs' UCL claim was based on alleged misrepresentations. *Texaco, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53930, 2006 WL 2053504 at 1-3. The plaintiffs alleged that pollution by Texpet raised the average risk of cancer. Texpet then merged with Chrevron. The plaintiffs brought a UCL claim against Chevron based on misrepresentations denying that Texpet's conduct was responsible for environmental and health problems in the region. *Texaco, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53930, 2006 WL 2053504 at 1. The court noted that "[f]or plaintiffs to prevail, they would have to claim that their cancer or increased risk of cancer caused them to lose money or property and that the false statements caused the cancer or increased risk thereof. Such a contention would be patently absurd and appears no where in the complaint." *2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53930, [WL] at 3.

ItHN9[] is logical to require reliance on misrepresentations when a UCL claim is premised on allegations that the defendants engaged in fraudulent business practices. However, where, as here, plaintiffs allege that they were harmed by [24] other types of misconduct actionable under the UCL the Court finds no basis for requiring reliance on misrepresentations.

In essence, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs allege that Alza filed a baseless complaint to preclude a competitor from producing a generic version of Ditropan XL, as well as other anti-competitive conduct. (Indirect Purchaser Compl., PP 92-98.) They further allege that through such anti-competitive conduct, Alza was able to maintain a monopoly and charge supra-competitive prices. (Id., P 246.) According to Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, Alza's conduct in delaying or preventing the sale of a generic version caused them to pay more than they otherwise would have for the drug. (Id., P 251.) Thus, at the very least, they allege a UCL claim premised on the unfair prong. Because Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have alleged facts sufficient to state a claim under the unfair prong, the Court need not determine on a motion to dismiss whether they have also alleged sufficient facts to maintain their UCL claim under the fraudulent prong.

3. Standing To Bring Various Antitrust State Law Claims

Except for the antitrust claims based on Tennessee, New York, North Dakota, [25] and New Jersey law, Alza moves to dismiss all of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' state law antitrust claims brought under their third cause of action on the grounds of lack of standing. Under their third cause of action, in addition to the antitrust claims based on Tennessee, New York, North Dakota, and New Jersey law, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs allege that Alza's conduct violates the antitrust laws of the following twenty-four states: Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, California, District of Columbia, Florida, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Dakota, Vermont, [*1107] West Virginia, and Wisconsin. (Indirect Purchaser Compl., P 280.) Alza argues that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' lack standing because none of the named plaintiffs reside in or are alleged to have personally purchased Ditropan XL in any of these twenty-four states.

HN10[] To demonstrate standing "named plaintiffs who represent a class must allege and show that they personally have been injured, not that injury has been suffered by other, unidentified members of the class to which they belong and which they purport to represent. [26] " Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 347, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996) (internal quotes omitted). Moreover, at least one named plaintiff must have standing with respect to each claim the class representatives seek to bring. Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476, 1483 (11th Cir. 1987) ("a claim cannot be asserted on behalf of a class unless at least one named plaintiff has suffered the injury that gives rise to that claim."); see also In re Salomon Analyst Level 3 Litig., 350 F. Supp. 2d 477, 496 (S.D.N.Y. 2004); In re Terazosin Hydrocholoride Antitrust Litig., 160 F. Supp. 2d 1365, 1370-71 (S.D. Fla. 2001) (dismissing based for lack of standing the state law antitrust claims in which none of the named plaintiffs resided or purchased the drug at issue).

Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs do not assert there is basis to confer standing on them to bring claims based on the state law of states in which they do not reside, but rather, argue that the determination of standing is premature prior to class certification. (Indirect Purchasers' Opp. at 11-12 (citing Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 831, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999).) However, the Ninth Circuit has rejected [27] this exact argument. See Easter v. American West Financial, 381 F.3d 948, 962 (9th Cir. 2004). The Ninth Circuit reasoned that "[a]though the court in Fibreboard examined class issues before the question of Article III standing, it did so in the very specific situation of a mandatory global settlement class. HN11[] Fibreboard does not require courts to consider class certification before standing." Id. Thus, the court held that the "district court correctly addressed the issue of standing before it addressed the issue of class certification." Id.

HN12[] Plaintiffs bear the burden of demonstrating standing. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). They have not done so here. Accordingly, the Court dismisses for lack of standing the claims based on the antitrust law of the following twenty-four states: Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, California, [7] District of Columbia, Florida, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin without prejudice.

[28] 4. Donnelly Act.

Alza moves to dismiss Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' claim under New York General Business Law § 340, known as the "Donnelly Act," which is New York's antitrust statute. *See Leider v. Ralfe, 387 F. Supp. 2d 283, 287 [1108] (2005). Alza argues that the Court should dismiss this claim because New York law does not permit private class actions under the Donnelly Act. See id. ("HN13[] New York law firmly disallows a Donnelly class action by private plaintiffs."). This Court agrees.

---

[7] The Court notes that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs allege a claim under California's antitrust law, the Cartwright Act, under both their second and third causes of action. Although Alza only raised its standing argument with respect to Plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claim under the third cause of action, the Court's finding that Plaintiffs failed to demonstrate standing as to this claim necessarily applies to the same claim pled under the second cause of action. Accordingly, the Court need not address the parties' arguments as to whether Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs sufficiently alleged coercive conduct actionable under the Cartwright Act.

HN14[] New York Civil Practice Law and Rules § 901 ("CPLR 901"), which sets forth the prerequisites to class action suits, provides in pertinent part that "[u]nless a statute creating or imposing a penalty, or a minimum measure of recovery specifically authorizes the recovery thereof in a class action, an action to recover a penalty, or minimum measure of recovery created or imposed by statute may not be maintained as a class action." N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 901(b). The Donnelly Act in turn provides in pertinent part: "any person who shall sustain damages by reason of any violation of this section, shall recover three-fold [29] the actual damages sustained thereby. …" N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(5) (emphasis added). The statute is silent as to class actions. Cases applying New York law have construed the Donnelly Act in light of CPLR 901 and, thus, have held that class actions cannot be maintained under the Donnelly Act. See Leider, 387 F. Supp. 2d at 287-88; see also Asher v. Abbott Laboratories, 290 A.D.2d 208, 737 N.Y.S.2d 4, 4-5 (2002).

In opposition to the motion to dismiss, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs argue that Alza "ignores the New York Supreme Court's Appellate Division holding entitling a plaintiff to bring a class action for antitrust activities pursuant to N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 if the plaintiff foregoes any demand for punitive damages." (Indirect Purchasers' Opp. at 15.) In support of their argument, they cite to Cox v. Microsoft Corp., 8 A.D.3d 39, 778 N.Y.S.2d 147, 149 (2002), which allows a class action to go forward under New York General Business Law § 349 ("Section 349"). Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff's reliance on Section 349, and the case law interpreting this statute, is misplaced [30] because section 349 is part of a different statute. "General Business Law article 22-A, of which section 349 is a part, is entitled 'Consumer Protection from Deceptive Acts and Practices.'" Feinberg v. Federated Dept. Stores, Inc., 15 Misc. 3d 299, 832 N.Y.S.2d 760, 764 (2007). Significantly, Section 349 provides in pertinent part that "any person who has been injured by reason of any violation of the section may bring an action … to recover his actual damages or fifty dollars, whichever is greater." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(h). In Cox, the court found CPLR 901 was inapplicable because the plaintiffs expressly sought only their actual damages in their complaint. Cox, 778 N.Y.S.2d at 149. Accordingly, the Court dismisses Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Donnelly Act claim. To the extent Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs seek to allege a claim under a different law, this ruling is without prejudice to their seeking leave to amend to add a new claim.

5. Tennessee Law.

Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs plead an antitrust claim under Tennessee Trade Practices Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq. "(TTPA"). [31] Alza moves to dismiss this claim on the basis that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff's complaint only pleads unilateral conduct, which is not covered by the TTPA. HN15[] The TTPA prohibits "all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend, to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article." See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 (emphasis added).

The only authority cited by the parties analyzing the language of the TTPA and whether it applies to unilateral conduct is In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 221 F.R.D. 260, 284 [*1109] (D. Mass. 2004). In re Relafen is factually analogous to the Indirect Purchasers Plaintiffs' action before this Court. In that case, the defendant received a patent for a drug. When other companies sought approval from the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") to market a generic version of the drug, the defendant filed lawsuits to enforce its patent and to preclude approval of the generic drugs. The courts in the underlying patent litigation found that the patent was unenforceable based on prior [32] art and inequitable conduct. Id. at 264. In the antitrust action, the plaintiffs argued that the defendant wrongfully filed patent lawsuits to preclude its competitors from selling generic versions of the drug. Id. The court found that the plaintiffs alleged unilateral, not concerted, action. Id. at 282-83. The court then analyzed the plain language of the Tennessee statute, emphasizing the terms "between persons or corporations" in the TTPA, and concluded that it only applied to unilateral conduct. Id. at 284.

In their brief in opposition to the motion to dismiss and at the hearing, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs rely on the plain language of the TTPA to argue that the statute encompasses Alza's conduct as alleged in their complaint. At the hearing, they argued that the language "all arrangements" is broad. However, they ignore the modifying language "between persons or corporations." The cases cited to by Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs at the hearing do not assist them because those cases did not address whether a defendant's unilateral activity to exclude competitors from the market would be prohibited by the TTPA. See [33] In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 105 F.Supp.2d 618, 667 (E.D. Mich. 2000) (addressing whether TTPA is limited to transactions that are wholly or predominantly within the state); *Duke v. Browning-Ferris Indus. of Tenn., Inc., 2006-1 Trade Cases P 75-323, 2006 Tenn. App. LEXIS 355, 20-21 (Tenn. App. Ct. 2006) (affirming denial of TTPA claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization where there were no barriers to entry into the market); *Sherwood v. Microsoft Corp., 2003-1 Trade Cases P 74,109, 2003 Tenn. App. LEXIS 539, 2003 WL 21780975, at 1 (Tenn Ct. App. 2003) (determining whether indirect purchasers could bring an action for damages under the TTPA and whether the TTPA applies to activity with substantial effects on commerce within the state).

Upon review of the plain language of the Tennessee statute, and in the absence of any authority demonstrating that Tennessee courts would construe this language to apply to the conduct alleged in this action, the Court finds that the TTPA does not encompass the conduct the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have alleged. Accordingly, the Court grants Alza's motion to dismiss as to Plaintiff's antitrust claim under [34] Tennessee law. This ruling is without prejudice to Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' seeking leave to amend if they are aware of additional facts they could allege which would be sufficient to demonstrate covered conduct between persons or corporations.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court ORDERS as follows:

(1) Defendants' motion to dismiss Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's complaint is GRANTED;

(2) Alza's motion to dismiss Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' complaint is GRANTED as to their claims under the antitrust laws of New Jersey, New York, Tennessee, Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, California, District of Columbia, Florida, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin; and

(3) Alza's motion to dismiss Indirect Purchaser [*1110] Plaintiffs' complaint is DENIED as to their UCL claim.

This ruling is without prejudice to Direct and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs filing amended complaints in compliance with this Order. Direct and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs shall file any amended complaints within twenty-one days of [35] the date of this Order. If Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs do not file an amended complaint within twenty-one days, its action shall be dismissed. If necessary, Defendants shall file their answers or move to dismiss within twenty days of service of any amended complaint or the deadline to amend has expired, whichever is earlier.

IT IS SO ORDERED

Dated: May 11, 2007

JEFFREY S. WHITE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

May 14, 2007, Decided ; May 15, 2007, Filed; May 16, 2007, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. 02-7676

Reporter

513 F. Supp. 2d 322 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35899 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,722

BRADBURN PARENT TEACHER STORE, INC., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated v. 3M (MINNESOTA MINING AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY)

Prior History: Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15815 (E.D. Pa., July 29, 2005)

Core Terms

Settlement, class member, Notice, tape, settlement agreement, attorney's fees, final approval, expenses, parties, settlement fund, transparent, class action, damages, approve, invisible, factors, incentive award, cases, risks, district court, calculated, antitrust, label, proposed settlement, common fund, multiplier, Estoppel, lodestar, reimbursement, subsidiaries

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN1[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The decision of whether to approve a proposed settlement of a class action is left to the sound discretion of the district court. While the law generally favors settlement in complex or class action cases for its conservation of judicial resources, the court has an obligation to ensure that any settlement reached protects the interests of the class members. Consequently, prior to approving a settlement, the court must determine whether the notice provided to class members was adequate. The court must also scrutinize the terms of the settlement to ensure that it is fair, adequate and reasonable.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Notice of Class Action

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN2[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The due process demands of the Fifth Amendment and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require adequate notice to class members of a proposed settlement. In the class action context, the district court obtains personal jurisdiction over the absentee class members by providing proper notice of the impending class action and providing the absentees with the opportunity to be heard or the opportunity to exclude themselves from the class. The due process requirements of the Fifth Amendment are satisfied by the combination of reasonable notice, the opportunity to be heard and the opportunity to withdraw from the class. The notice must be reasonably calculated under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Notice of Class Action

HN3[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

In a settlement class maintained under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3), class notice must meet the requirements of both Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2) and 23(e). Rule 23(c)(2) provides that class members must receive the best notice practicable under the circumstances, including individual notice to all members who can be identified through reasonable effort. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(B). Rule 23(c)(2) also requires that the notice indicate an opportunity to opt out, that the judgment will bind all class members who do not opt out and that any member who does not opt out may appear through counsel.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Notice of Class Action

HN4[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

In addition to the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2), Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e) requires that notice of a proposed settlement must inform class members: (1) of the nature of the pending litigation; (2) of the settlement's general terms; (3) that complete information is available from the court files; and (4) that any class member may appear and be heard at the Fairness Hearing. The court should consider both the mode of dissemination and its content to assess whether notice was sufficient. Although the notice need not be unduly specific the notice document must describe, in detail, the nature of the proposed settlement, the circumstances justifying it, and the consequences of accepting and opting out of it.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Notice of Class Action

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

HN5[] Class Actions, Notice of Class Action

In the usual situation first-class mail and publication in press fully satisfy the notice requirements of both Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 and the due process clause.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN6[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e) requires that the court must approve any settlement of a class action and states that the court may only approve a settlement after a hearing and on finding that the settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise is fair, reasonable, and adequate. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(1). The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has determined that a court should accord a presumption of fairness to a settlement if the court finds that: (1) the negotiations occurred at arms length; (2) there was sufficient discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN7[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit developed a nine factor test in Girsh, which provides the analytic structure for determining whether a class action settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e). The nine factors are: (1) the complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; and (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN8[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The first Girsh factor, the complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation, captures the probable costs, in both time and money, of continued litigation. An antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute as the legal and factual issues involved are always numerous and uncertain in outcome.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN9[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The second Girsh factor, the reaction of the class, attempts to gauge whether members of the class support the settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN10[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The utter absence of objections from a class itself militates strongly in favor of approval of settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN11[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The third Girsh factor, the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed, enables the court to determine whether counsel had an adequate appreciation of the merits of the case before negotiating.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN12[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The fourth Girsh factor, the risks of establishing liability, enables the court to examine what the potential rewards (or downside) of litigation might have been had class counsel decided to litigate the claims rather than settle them. When considering this factor, the court should avoid conducting a mini-trial. Rather the court may give credence to the estimation of the probability of success proffered by class counsel, who are experienced with the underlying case, and the possible defenses which may be raised to their causes of action. Antitrust actions are among the most high risk, complex cases to litigate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

In order to succeed on its claim that defendant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must establish that defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and that it willfully acquired or maintained that power as distinguished from achieving growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN14[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The fifth Girsh factor, the risks of establishing damages, attempts to measure the expected value of litigating the action rather than settling it at the current time. In conducting this inquiry, courts consider the potential damage award if the case were taken to trial against the benefits of immediate settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Certification of Classes > Decertification

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN15[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The sixth Girsh factor, the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial, allows the court to weigh the possibility that, if a class were certified for trial in this case, it would be decertified prior to trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) provides that a district court may decertify or modify a class at any time during the litigation if it proves to be unmanageable, and proceeding to trial would always entail the risk, even if slight, of decertification. There will always be a risk or possibility of decertification, and consequently the court can always claim this factor weighs in favor of settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN16[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The seventh Girsh factor, the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment, is concerned with whether the defendants could withstand a judgment for an amount significantly greater than the settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN17[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The eighth and ninth Girsh factors, the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery and the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of all the attendant risks of litigation, ask whether the settlement is reasonable in light of the best possible recovery and the risks the parties would face if the case went to trial. In making this assessment, courts compare the present value of the damages plaintiffs would likely recover if successful, appropriately discounted for the risk of not prevailing with the amount of the proposed settlement. The damages estimates should generate a range of reasonableness (based on size of the proposed award and the uncertainty inherent in these estimates) within which a district court approving (or rejecting) a settlement will not be set aside. The primary touchstone of this inquiry is the economic valuation of the proposed settlement. In making this assessment, the evaluating court must recognize that settlement represents a compromise in which the highest hopes for recovery are yielded in exchange for certainty and resolution and guard against demanding too large a settlement based on the court's own view of the merits of the litigation.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN18[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Approval of a plan of allocation of a settlement fund in a class action is governed by the same standards of review applicable to approval of the settlement as a whole: the distribution plan must be fair, reasonable and adequate. Courts generally consider plans of allocation that reimburse class members based on the type and extent of their injuries to be reasonable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN19[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Attorneys who create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to reimbursement of reasonable litigation expenses from the fund.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

HN20[] Class Attorneys, Fees

District courts approving class action settlements must thoroughly review fee petitions for fairness. Although the ultimate decision as to the proper amount of attorneys' fees rests in the sound discretion of the court, the court must set forth its reasoning clearly. Thorough review of fee arrangements is critical in the context of a class action settlement because of the danger that the lawyers might urge a class settlement at a low figure or on a less-than optimal basis in exchange for red-carpet treatment for fees, and because the parties to the action might lack sufficient incentive to object to the arrangement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN21[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Courts typically use one of two methods for assessing attorneys' fees, either the percentage of recovery method or the lodestar method. The percentage of recovery method is generally favored in common fund cases because it allows courts to award fees from the fund in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit recommends that courts use the lodestar method to cross-check the percentage fee award, in order to verify that the fee award is not excessive.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN22[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, when a district court uses the percentage of recovery method, it first calculates the percentage of the total recovery that the proposal would allocate to attorneys fees by dividing the amount of the requested fee by the total amount paid out by the defendant; it then inquires whether that percentage is appropriate based on the circumstances of the case. The percentage will be based on the net settlement fund after deducting the costs of litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN23[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit directed district courts to consider the following seven factors when determining whether a percentage of recovery fee award is reasonable: (1) the size of the fund created and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or the fees requested by counsel; (3) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (4) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (5) the risk of nonpayment; (6) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel; and (7) the awards in similar cases. Since this is a flexible and fact-driven determination, district courts are not limited to the Gunter factors in their analysis of the fee request's reasonableness.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN24[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, the list of Gunter factors is not intended to be exhaustive. Three other factors that may be relevant and important to consider: (1) the value of benefits accruing to class members attributable to the efforts of class counsel as opposed to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations; (2) the percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee agreement at the time counsel was retained; and (3) any innovative terms of the settlement. In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, a district court should consider the Gunter factors, the Prudential factors, and any other factors that are useful and relevant with respect to the particular facts of the case. While the district courts should engage in robust assessments of the fee award reasonableness factors when evaluating a fee request, these factors need not be applied in a formulaic way because each case is different, and in certain cases, one factor may outweigh the rest.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN25[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, the skill and efficiency of Class Counsel are measured by the quality of the result achieved, the difficulties faced, the speed and efficiency of the recovery, the standing, experience and expertise of the counsel, the skill and professionalism with which counsel prosecuted the case and the performance and quality of opposing counsel.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN26[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, the awards in similar cases factor requires the court to compare the percentage of recovery requested as a fee in this case against the percentage of recovery awarded as a fee in other common fund cases in which the percentage of recovery method, rather than the lodestar method, was used.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN27[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, the first Prudential factor is intended to measure whether the entire value of the benefits accruing to class members is properly attributable to the efforts of class counsel, or if some of those benefits are more properly attributed to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN28[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has suggested that, in addition to reviewing the fee award reasonableness factors, it is sensible for district courts to cross-check the percentage fee award against the lodestar method. The lodestar is calculated by multiplying the number of hours worked by the normal hourly rates of counsel. The court may then multiply the lodestar calculation to reflect the risks of nonrecovery, to reward an extraordinary result, or to encourage counsel to undertake socially useful litigation. The lodestar cross-check serves the purpose of alerting the trial judge that when the multiplier is too great, the court should reconsider its calculation under the percentage-of-recovery method, with an eye toward reducing the award. The cross-check, however, does not trump the primary reliance on the percentage of common fund method. Moreover, the lodestar cross-check calculation need entail neither mathematical precision nor bean-counting. The district courts may rely on summaries submitted by the attorneys and need not review actual billing records. The resulting multiplier need not fall within any pre-defined range, provided that the district court's analysis justifies the award. It is appropriate for the court to consider the multipliers utilized in comparable cases.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN29[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has recognized that multipliers ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied. A multiplier of 2.5 is within this range of normal awards.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN30[] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

Courts routinely approve incentive awards to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of the class action litigation. It is particularly appropriate to compensate named representative plaintiffs with incentive awards when they have actively assisted plaintiffs' counsel in their prosecution of the litigation for the benefit of the class.

Counsel: [1] For BRADBURN PARENT/TEACHER STORE, INC., ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiff: CHARLES M. JONES, LEAD ATTORNEY, JONES OSTEEN JONES & ARNOLD, HINESVILLE, GA; GREGORY BARUCH, LEAD ATTORNEY, J. DANIEL LEFTWICH, ROBERT STEPHEN BERRY, BERRY & LEFTWICH, WASHINGTON, DC;

For PUBLIX SUPER MARKETS, INC., Plaintiff: ANTHONY J. BOLOGNESE, BOLOGNESE & ASSOCIATES, LLC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; PAUL E SLATER, CHICAGO, IL.

For 3M (MINNESOTA MINING AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY), Defendant: BRENT N. RUSHFORTH, LEAD ATTORNEY, KIT A. PIERSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, MARTINA M. STEWART, LEAD ATTORNEY, PAUL ALEXANDER, LEAD ATTORNEY, HELLER EHRMAN LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID W. ENGSTROM, LEAD

ATTORNEY, ELEANOR MORRIS ILLOWAY, LEAD ATTORNEY, JOHN G. HARKINS, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, HARKINS CUNNINGHAM LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; DEAN RINGEL, LEAD ATTORNEY, CAHILL, GORDON & REINDEL, NEW YORK, NY; ERIC R. OLSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, BARTLIT BECK HERMAN PALENCHAR & SCOTT LLP, DENVER, CO; JAIDEEP VENKATESAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HELLER EHRMAN LLP, MENLO PARK, CA; MARK S. OUWELEEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, PAUL J. SKIERMONT, LEAD ATTORNEY, BARTLIT BECK HERMAN PALENCHAR & SCOTT LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

For HENKEL CORPORATION, Movant: [2] ELIZABETH S. CAMPBELL, LEAD ATTORNEY, JOANNA J. CLINE, LEAD ATTORNEY, MURRAY S. LEVIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For MEIJER DISTRIBUTION, INC., MEIJER, INC., Movants: BRENT W. LANDAU, LEAD ATTORNEY, COHEN, MILSTEIN, HAUSFELD & TOLL, PLLC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; DANIEL A. SMALL, LEAD ATTORNEY, COHEN, MILSTEIN, HAUSFELD AND TOLL, WASHINGTON, DC; IRA NEIL RICHARDS, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS LLC, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For HENKEL CONSUMERS ADHESIVES, INC., Movant: JOANNA J. CLINE, LEAD ATTORNEY, MURRAY S. LEVIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Judges: Hon. John R. Padova, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: John R. Padova

Opinion

[*324] MEMORANDUM

Padova, J.

May 14, 2007

Plaintiff Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. ("Bradburn") has brought this class action antitrust lawsuit against Defendant 3M for damages arising out of 3M's allegedly anti-competitive conduct. Plaintiffs have reached a settlement with 3M, which we preliminarily approved on October 24, 2006. Presently before the Court are Plaintiff's Motion for Final Approval of Settlement (Docket No. 350) and Class Counsel's "Application for Attorneys' Fee, Expenses, and [3] Class Representative Incentive Award" (Docket No. 355). After a Final Approval Hearing held on April 18, 2007, and for the reasons that follow, we grant the Motion for Final Approval and the "Application for Attorneys' Fee, Expenses, and Class Representative Incentive Award" as described in our Final Approval Order and Judgment below.

I. BACKGROUND

Bradburn brings this action against 3M on behalf of itself and other members of a class, which was approved on August 18, 2004 and includes persons who purchased invisible or transparent tape from 3M at any time from October 2, 1998 to the present, who have not purchased for resale under the class member's own label, any "private label" invisible or transparent tape from 3M or any of 3M's competitors from October 2, 1988 to the present. Bradburn alleges one count of monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, claiming that 3M unlawfully maintained monopoly power in the invisible and transparent tape markets in the United States. (Compl. PP 29-33.)

[*325] A. Litigation History

The conduct of 3M that forms the basis of this class action lawsuit was the subject of a prior lawsuit [4] before the Court, LePage's Inc. v. 3M, Civ. A. No. 97-3983 (E.D. Pa.). In that suit, LePage's, a competing supplier of transparent tape, sued 3M alleging, inter alia, unlawful maintenance of monopoly power in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. The jury found in favor of LePage's on its claim, and we denied 3M's Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law. See LePage's Inc. v. 3M, Civ. A. No. 97-3983, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3087, 2000 WL 280350 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 14, 2000), aff'd, 324 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc), cert. denied, 542 U.S. 953, 124 S. Ct. 2932, 159 L. Ed. 2d 835 (2004).

On March 1, 2004, we denied Bradburn's initial motion for class certification on the grounds that the inclusion of direct purchasers of transparent tape who had also purchased private label tape (from 3M or elsewhere) could create conflicts in damage theories with class members, such as Bradburn, who had not purchased private label tape, because the private label tape purchasers might benefit from pursuing a "lost profit" rather than an overcharge theory of damages. Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3347, 2004 WL 414047 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 1, 2004).

Bradburn [5] then sought certification of the following modified class:

> All persons who directly purchased invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company between October 2, 1998 and the present, who have not purchased, for resale under the class member's own label, any "private label" invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company or any of 3M Company's competitors at any time from October 2, 1988 to the present.

We granted certification of Bradburn's modified class on August 18, 2004. Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store v. 3M, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16193, 2004 WL 1842987 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 18, 2004). In the same order we appointed the following individuals to serve as Class Counsel: R. Steven Berry, J. Daniel Leftwich, Gregory Baruch, and Charles M. Jones.

Following certification, Bradburn sought to apply estoppel to many of the liability findings of the LePage's jury, with some success. In our Order of March 30, 2005, we granted collateral estoppel to Bradburn on several issues (the "Estoppel Order"). Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5315, 2005 WL 736629 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 30, 2005). Following a Motion for Reconsideration by 3M pertaining to the Estoppel Order, which we granted [6] in part and denied in part, we deemed the following issues to be established for the purposes of this action: (1) for the time period from June 11, 1993 to October 13, 1999, the relevant market in this matter is the market for invisible and transparent tape for home and office use in the United States; and (2) for some time period from June 11, 1993 to October 13, 1999, 3M possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, including the power to control prices and exclude competition in the relevant market, 3M willfully maintained such monopoly power by predatory or exclusionary conduct, and 3M's predatory or exclusionary conduct harmed competition (the "Amended Estoppel Order"). Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11375, 2005 WL 1388929 (E.D. Pa. June 9, 2005). 3M then sought leave to file an interlocutory appeal of the Amended Estoppel Order. We certified the issue for interlocutory appeal. Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15815, 2005 WL 1819969 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 2, 2005). However, the Third Circuit denied 3M's petition to allow an interlocutory appeal on September 27, 2005.

Following the class and estoppel proceedings, the parties proceeded to full fact [*326] and [7] expert discovery, including dozens of depositions and production and review of more than 1 million pages of documents from 3M and third parties. (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support at 4-5.) The parties participated in mediation with Jonathan Marks on November 8-9, 2005, but were unable to reach agreement. (Id. at 5.) As trial was scheduled to begin on May 30, 2006, the parties filed pretrial memorandum, witness lists, exhibit lists, deposition designation, and motions in limine; and conducted the last round of depositions of experts on the opinions set forth in their supplemental reports. (Id. However, on May 5, 2006, they reached a settlement agreement after another mediation session with Mr. Marks. (Id.

On September 8, 2006, Bradburn filed a Motion for Preliminary Approval of Settlement. We preliminarily approved the Settlement on October 24, 2006. This Order also authorized the dissemination of Notice of Proposed Settlement, scheduled a Final Approval Hearing for April 18, 2007, and set February 7, 2007 as the deadline for objections to the Settlement.

On January 18, 2007, Bradburn filed the instant Motion for Final Approval of the Settlement and Class Counsel's "Application [8] for Attorneys' Fee, Expenses, and Class Representative Incentive Award." The Motion and Application were supported by the following: Declaration of Charles G. Hunter ("Hunter Declaration"); Declaration of Richard Bithell ("Bithell Declaration"); Declaration of Gregory Baruch ("Baruch Declaration"); and Declaration of Geoffrey C. Hazard ("Hazard Declaration"). Bradburn subsequently filed a Corrected Memorandum in Support of Motion for Final Approval of Settlement ("Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support"); Class Counsel's Corrected Application for Attorneys' Fee, Expenses, and Class Representative Award ("Corr. Application"); Memorandum in Further Support of the Motion and Application ("Pl. Mem. in Further Support"); Second Declaration of Gregory Baruch ("Second Baruch Decl."); Second Declaration of Bithell ("Second Bithell Decl."); and Third Declaration of Bithell ("Third Bithell Decl.").

B. The Settlement Agreement

1. The Class Definition

The Class certified by the Court, and clarified in the Preliminary Approval Order as to the time period for the Class is defined as follows:

> all persons who directly purchased invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company between October 2, 1998 and [9] February 10, 2006, who have not purchased, for resale under the Class Member's own label, any "private label" invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company or any of 3M Company's competitors at any time from October 2, 1988 to February 10, 2006; but excluding the following: (i) 3M Company, its subsidiaries, affiliates, officers, directors, and employees; (ii) those Persons that timely and validly requested exclusion from the Class in response to the Notice of Pendency of Class Action dated November 29, 2004, provided pursuant to the Court's November 12, 2004 Order; and (iii) any other Person that may be excluded by order of the Court.

2. Terms of the Settlement Agreement

The Settlement Agreement provides for payment into a common fund of $39,750,000.00 in cash (the "Settlement Consideration"). Following payment of the attorneys' fees, expenses, and any class representative incentive award from the Settlement Consideration, all of the remaining funds are to be distributed to the Class. The Settlement Agreement does not require class members to file [*327] proof of claim forms. Therefore, all class members that can be located will receive a distribution from the common fund. The Settlement [10] Consideration equals between 41 and 48 percent of the damages calculated by Plaintiff's expert Dr. Morton Kamien. (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support at 7.) The Settlement Consideration results in an award of more than 18.5 percent of the Class's transparent tape purchases during the more than seven year damage period. (Id.) In return for the Settlement Consideration, the parties agree to dismiss the case with prejudice and the Class members agree to release and discharge 3M from any and all claims asserted, or which could have been asserted, in the litigation. The release includes all claims and potential claims concerning any 3M discount, rebate, offer, promotion or other sales program or practice (including, without limitation, programs claimed to involve the bundling of products or volume growth rebates) relating in any way to the sale, promotion, or distribution of invisible or transparent tape for home or office use in effect from January 1, 1993 to the Settlement Agreement Date, September 5, 2006.

C. Final Approval Hearing

On April 18, 2006, we held a Final Approval Hearing to address the Motion for Final Approval and the Application for Fees, Expenses, and Class Representative [11] Incentive Award. At the Final Approval Hearing, Class Counsel reported that no objections or requests for entry of appearance through separate counsel have been filed, and no correspondence has been received that would indicate a Class Member's interest in raising an objection in response to the Notices mailed before or after the original objections deadline. The parties agreed to an extension until May 3, 2007 to allow time for 71 Class Members, whose addresses had only recently been identified and who were sent a Notice of the proposed Class Settlement on or before April 9, 2007, to file any objections. Class

Counsel subsequently reported to the Court on May 3, 2007, that no objections have been filed by these 71 remaining Class Members.

II. MOTION FOR FINAL APPROVAL OF SETTLEMENT

HN1[] "The decision of whether to approve a proposed settlement of a class action is left to the sound discretion of the district court." Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 156 (3d Cir. 1975). "While the law generally favors settlement in complex or class action cases for its conservation of judicial resources, the court has an obligation to ensure that any settlement reached protects [12] the interests of the class members." *In re Aetna Inc. Sec. Litig., MDL No. 1219, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 4 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 4, 2001) (citing In re General Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 784 (3d Cir. 1995)). Consequently, prior to approving a settlement, the Court must determine whether the notice provided to class members was adequate. Id. (citations omitted). The Court must also "scrutinize the terms of the settlement to ensure that it is 'fair, adequate and reasonable.'" Id. (quoting In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 785).

A. Adequacy of Notice

HN2[] The due process demands of the Fifth Amendment and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require adequate notice to class members of a proposed settlement. *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 5. "In the class action context, the district court obtains personal jurisdiction over the absentee class members by providing proper notice of the impending class action and providing the absentees with the opportunity to be heard or the opportunity to exclude themselves from the class." *In re Prudential [328] Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practice Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 306 (3d Cir. 1998) [13] (citing Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 811-12, 105 S. Ct. 2965, 86 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1985)). The due process requirements of the Fifth Amendment are satisfied by the "combination of reasonable notice, the opportunity to be heard and the opportunity to withdraw from the class." Id. The notice must be "'reasonably calculated under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections.'" Lachance v. Harrington, 965 F. Supp. 630, 636 (E.D. Pa. 1997) (quoting Mullane v. Cent. Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 314, 70 S. Ct. 652, 94 L. Ed. 865 (1950)).

Moreover, HN3[] "in a settlement class maintained under Rule 23(b)(3), class notice must meet the requirements of both Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(c)(2) and 23(e)." In re Diet Drugs (Phentermine, Fenfluramine, Dexfenfluramine) Prod. Liab. Litig., 226 F.R.D. 498, 517 (E.D. Pa. 2005) (citing Carlough v. Amchem Prods., Inc., 158 F.R.D. 314, 324-25 (E.D. Pa. 1993)). Rule 23(c)(2) provides that class members must receive the "best notice practicable under the circumstances, including [14] individual notice to all members who can be identified through reasonable effort." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(B). Rule 23(c)(2) also requires that "the notice indicate an opportunity to opt out, that the judgment will bind all class members who do not opt out and that any member who does not opt out may appear through counsel." In re Diet Drugs, 226 F.R.D. at 517 (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)).

HN4[] In addition to the requirements of Rule 23(c)(2), Rule 23(e) "requires that notice of a proposed settlement must inform class members: (1) of the nature of the pending litigation; (2) of the settlement's general terms; (3) that complete information is available from the court files; and (4) that any class member may appear and be heard at the Fairness Hearing." Id. at 517-18 (citation omitted). The court should consider both "the mode of dissemination and its content to assess whether notice was sufficient." Id. Although the "notice need not be unduly specific . . . the notice document must describe, in detail, the nature of the proposed settlement, the circumstances justifying it, and the consequences of accepting and opting out of it." Id. at 518 [15] (citing In re Diet Drugs (Phentermine/Fenfluramine/Dexfenfluramine) Prods. Liab. Litig., 369 F.3d 293, 308-10 (3d Cir. 2004)).

We find that the Notice provided in this case satisfies the requirements of due process and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Pursuant to the Settlement Agreement and the Court's Preliminary Approval Order, Poorman-Douglas Corp. ("PDC") was authorized and appointed to serve as Settlement Administrator in this matter, and was responsible for assisting with the administration of the Settlement by, among other things, mailing the Class Notice to Class Members, and identifying Class Members whose initial Notices were returned as undeliverable. (Bithell Decl. P 4.) The Settlement Class consists of 3,574 Class Members identified in the 3M data provided to Plaintiff and PDC. (Second Bithell Decl. P 5.) PDC mailed the Notice of the Proposed Class Settlement to each Class Member on the Class Member list on January 8, 2007. (Bithell Decl. P 6.) Included in the notice was a special insert sheet that calculated each class member's approximate percentage share of the Net Settlement Amount. (Id.) For undeliverable Notices, PDC performed a database [16] search for a new address for the Class Members using an address search database owned and operated by Lexis/Nexis. (Second Bithell Decl. P 6.) New addresses [*329] were found for 952 Class Members, and a Notice was re-mailed to them on or before January 18, 2007. (Bithell Decl. P 7.) PDC performed additional searches using the Internet and telephone contacts for those Class Members whose Notices were undeliverable and who had award amounts of $1,000 or more. (Second Bithell Decl. P 7.) Ninety-three Class Members met this criteria. (Id. PDC located a new address for 48 of them and mailed Notices to them on or before March 30, 2007. (Id. Finally, PDC performed additional searches using the Internet and telephone contact for those Class Members whose Notices were undeliverable and who had award amounts of $100 or more. (Third Bithell Decl. P 4.) One hundred and sixty-four Class Members met this criteria. (Id. PDC located a new address for 71 of them and mailed Notices to them on or before April 9, 2007. (Id. PDC also hosted a website, www.bradburntapesettlement.com, as well as a dedicated toll free telephone line for claimant access. As a result of PDC's efforts to locate valid [17] addresses for the Class Members, the total number of Class Members for whom Notice was undeliverable is just 257 out of the 3,574 Class Members identified in 3M's sales data. (Id. P 8). The percentage of tape sales during the damage period (and the percentage of proposed settlement funds) represented by these undeliverable Notices in 2.86 percent. (Id. We find that these efforts to disseminate notice were the best practicable. See Zimmer Paper Prods., Inc. v. Berger & Montague, 758 F.2d 86, 90 (3d Cir. 1985) (noting that HN5[] "in the usual situation first-class mail and publication in press fully satisfy the notice requirements of both Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 and the due process clause").

We also find the content of the Notice to be adequate under the due process clause and Rule 23. The Notice describes the nature and background of this action and defines the Class, Class claims, and consequences of Class Membership. (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support, Ex. B.) It summarizes the terms of the Settlement, including information relating to the size of the Settlement Fund; the release provisions of the Settlement; and the attorneys' fees, expenses, and incentive award for which [18] Bradburn may apply. (Id. The Notice also describes the proposed Distribution Plan. (Id. The Notice informs Class Members of the time and date of the Final Approval Hearing, and advises them of the nature and purpose of the Hearing, of their rights to object to the Settlement and appear at the Hearing, and of the procedure for asserting those rights. (Id. The Notice includes the contact information of the relevant attorneys and of the Settlement Administrator, and also directs Class Members to the dedicated website where additional information pertaining to the case maybe found. (Id. After reviewing the Notice, we conclude that the substance, like the method of dissemination, is sufficient to satisfy the concerns of due process and Rule 23. See In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 328; *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 5 (citing In re Ikon Office Solutions, Inc. Sec. Litig., 194 F.R.D. 166, 175 (E.D. Pa. 2000)).

B. Presumption of Fairness

HN6[] Rule 23(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires that the Court must approve any settlement of a class action and states that the Court may only approve a settlement "after [19] a hearing and on finding that the settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise is fair, reasonable, and adequate." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(1). The Third Circuit has determined that a court should accord a presumption of fairness to a settlement if the court finds that: "(1) the negotiations occurred at arms length; (2) there was sufficient [*330] discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected." In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 232 n.18 (3d Cir. 2001) (citing In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 785).

The Settlement in this case is entitled to a presumption of fairness. The Settlement resulted from arm's-length negotiations that occurred both during the Court-suggested mediation and in the months following mediation. (Pl. Corr. Mem in Support at 8.) This case was settled only after all discovery, lasting more than one year, was completed. (Hazard Decl. P 11.) Class Counsel has extensive experience litigating complex actions such as the one at hand. (Baruch Decl. P 3.) Lastly, no Class Members filed objections to the Settlement. Accordingly, we will apply a presumption [20] of fairness in analyzing the Settlement.

C. The Girsh Factors

HN7[] The Third Circuit developed a nine factor test in Girsh, "which provides the analytic structure for determining whether a class action settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate under Rule 23(e)." In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 231 (citation omitted). The nine factors are:

> (1) the complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; and (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

Id. at 232 (citing Girsh, 521 F.2d at 157). Upon consideration of these factors, we find that the proposed Settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate.

1. Complexity, expense, [21] and likely duration of the litigation

HN8[] "This factor captures 'the probable costs, in both time and money, of continued litigation.'" Id. at 233 (quoting In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 812). An antitrust class action, such as this one, is "arguably the most complex action to prosecute" as "[t]he legal and factual issues involved are always numerous and uncertain in outcome." In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 296 F. Supp. 2d 568, 577 (E.D. Pa. 2003) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

The parties to this action have spent nearly four years litigating these claims. This litigation has included two class certifications, several hearings on the court's estoppel rulings, more than a full year of discovery, and virtually complete trial preparation. Whatever the disposition of the case on the merits, litigation likely would have continued for some time thereafter through post-trial motions and appeal. See In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. 166, 179 (E.D. Pa. 2000) ("[T]he extremely large sums of money at issue almost guarantee that any outcome, whether by summary judgment or trial, would be appealed."). The time [22] and resources saved by the avoidance of these costs benefit all parties. See In re Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 536 ("[I]t was inevitable that post-trial motions and appeals would not only further prolong the litigation but also reduce the value of recovery to the class."); In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at *6 (noting that "[t]he risk of delay could have deleterious effects on any future recovery due to the time value of [*331] money"). Thus we find that the complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation favor settlement. See In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 318 ("[T]he trial of this class action would be a long, arduous process requiring great expenditures of time and money on behalf of both the parties and the court. The prospect of such a massive undertaking clearly counsels in favor of settlement.").

2. The reaction of the class

HN9[] This factor "attempts to gauge whether members of the class support the settlement." Id. As stated above, Notice of this Settlement was disseminated thoroughly by means of publication and first-class mail, and informed potential Class Members of their rights to object to the Settlement and to request [23] exclusion from the Class. The deadline for filing objections and requesting exclusion was originally February 7, 2007. As of the Final Approval Hearing on April 18, 2007, no objections had been filed. (Pl. Mem. in Further Support at 7.) At the Final Approval Hearing, the parties suggested and we agreed to extend the deadline for the filing of objections until May 3, 2007 for the additional 71 Class Members who had recently been sent their Notices of Settlement. As of May 6, 2007, Class Counsel reported to the Court that no objections have been filed.

This total absence of objections argues in favor of the proposed Settlement. See Sala v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 721 F. Supp. 80, 83 (E.D. Pa. 1989) ("HN10[] The utter absence of objections from the class itself militates strongly in favor of approval of the settlement."). The lack of objections is also particularly notable in this case as "these are sophisticated businesses with, in some cases, large potential claims, and they could be expected to object to a settlement they perceived as unfair or inadequate." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 212 F.R.D. 231, 254-55 (D. Del. 2002), aff'd, 391 F.3d 516 (3d Cir. 2004). [24] Accordingly, we find that the reaction of the Class in this case strongly favors approval of the Settlement.

3. Stage of proceedings and amount of discovery completed

HN11[] This factor enables the Court to "'determine whether counsel had an adequate appreciation of the merits of the case before negotiating.'" In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 235 (quoting In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 813). This case was on the eve of trial, with all discovery having been completed, when settlement was reached through arm's-length negotiations with the assistance of a mediator. (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support at 11.) All of the pertinent liability and damages issues had been analyzed by Plaintiff's counsel and experts. (Id. Prior to agreeing to a settlement, the parties had taken 42 depositions, completed expert reports, and conducted extensive partial summary judgment motion practice. (Id. 3M had also produced more than one million pages of documents for review and copying; produced large amounts of computer date on tape sales, rebates, and margins covering at least a seven year period, all of which was analyzed an used to support the expert reports submitted by Bradburn's [25] testifying expert; and responded to several sets of Bradburn's interrogatories. (Id.) Third party discovery in this matter took more than one year due to motions to compel and for protective orders filed in several other district courts by third parties and 3M. (Id. In total, more than 60,000 pages of documents were produced by third parties, and 3M and Bradburn took 10 depositions of third party witnesses. (Id. Moreover, prior to reaching the Settlement, the parties had engaged in several face-to-face settlement negotiations, during which each side's potential strengths and weaknesses [*332] were presented and evaluated. (Id. We conclude, therefore, that the parties had "an adequate appreciation of the merits" of this case at the time they negotiated the Settlement. In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 235 (citation omitted).

4. Risks of establishing liability

HN12[] This factor enables the Court to examine "'what the potential rewards (or downside) of litigation might have been had class counsel decided to litigate the claims rather than settle them.'" In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 237 (quoting In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 814). "When [26] considering this factor, the court should avoid conducting a mini-trial. Rather the court may 'give credence to the estimation of the probability of success proffered by class counsel, who are experienced with the underlying case, and the possible defenses which may be raised to their causes of action.'" *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 9 (quoting In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 181).

Antitrust actions are among the most high risk, complex cases to litigate. *Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., Civ. A. No. 03-4578, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, at 11 (E.D. Pa. May 19, 2005); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 296 F. Supp. 2d 568, 577 (E.D. Pa. 2003); In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 475 n.10 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) ("Recurrently, when some of the largest members of the antitrust classes have opted out of the class to try to do better than the class, they have failed to establish impact or other elements of liability, and have lost their cases at trial."). HN13[] In order to succeed on its claim that 3M violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, Bradburn "must establish that [3M] possessed monopoly [27] power in the [relevant] market and that it willfully acquired or maintained that power as distinguished from achieving growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." In re Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 529 n.11 (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)).

Bradburn's risks of establishing liability in this case are diminished by the LePage's verdict and the Amended Estoppel Order. However, the Amended Estoppel Order left many issues unresolved and Bradburn, therefore, still faced numerous challenges in establishing 3M's liability in this case. For example, the Amended Estoppel Order left intact Bradburn's obligation to prove injury and damages. Even if 3M had monopolized the market and harmed competition for some period between 1993 and 1999, 3M could still argue that this did not affect purchases of transparent and invisible tape. Additionally, the market definition rulings extended only into 1999. Therefore, the market definition could be re-litigated for the period from October 13, 1999 to the present, and 3M had argued that the market had substantially [28] changed since the time of the LePage's trial, and had become international. (Pl. Corr. Mem in Support at 13-14.) Thus, while the Amended Estoppel Order provided some potential efficiencies at trial, substantial trial risk remained for the Bradburn class. We concluded that, given these challenges, this factor favors settlement.

5. Risks of establishing damages

"Like the fourth factor, HN14[] 'this inquiry attempts to measure the expected value of litigating the action rather than settling it at the current time.'" In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 238-39 (quoting In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 816). In conducting this inquiry, we consider the "potential damage award if the case were taken to trial against the benefits of immediate settlement." In re Warfarin, 212 F.R.D. at [*333] 256 (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 319). Plaintiff's damage expert, Dr. Kamien, calculated overcharge damages to be in the range of $82,693,181 to $96,449,176. (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support at 15.) 3M's experts, however, contended that, contrary to Class Plaintiff's overcharge damage theory, prices were declining or stable in real terms, and also [29] challenged other aspects of Class Plaintiff's damage methodology. (Id. at 16.) Particularly in complex antitrust actions, the parties' efforts to dispute damages at trial undoubtedly would result in a "'battle of the experts,' with each side presenting its figures to the jury and with no guarantee whom the jury would believe." In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 239. For these reasons, we conclude that the risks of establishing damages weigh in favor of settlement in this case.

6. Risks of maintaining class action status through trial

HN15[] This factor allows the Court to weigh the possibility that, if a class were certified for trial in this case, it would be decertified prior to trial. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) provides that "a district court may decertify or modify a class at any time during the litigation if it proves to be unmanageable, and proceeding to trial would always entail the risk, even if slight, of decertification." In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 239 (citation and internal quotations omitted). In this action, class certification was denied initially. See *Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3347, 2004 WL 414047, at 1. [30] The class was certified only after a second motion for class certification. See *Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16193, 2004 WL 1842987, at 1. "There will always be a 'risk' or possibility of decertification, and consequently the court can always claim this factor weighs in favor of settlement." In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 321. Consequently, we find that this factor weighs in favor of approving the Settlement.

7. Ability of defendants to withstand greater judgment

HN16[] This factor "is concerned with whether the defendants could withstand a judgment for an amount significantly greater than the Settlement." In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 240. As we noted in the Meijer case, "3M, with 2005 annual net sales of $21.2 billion (3M 2005 Annual Report), likely can withstand a judgment significantly greater than the Settlement Amount [of approximately $28 million]. Even so, this determination in itself does not carry much weight in evaluating the fairness of the Settlement." *Meijer, Inc. v. 3M, Civ. A. No. 04-5871, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56744, 2006 WL 2382718, 16 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 14, 2006) (citing Perry v. FleetBoston Fin. Corp., 229 F.R.D. 105, 116 (E.D. Pa. 2005) [31] ("Fleet could certainly withstand a much larger judgment as it has considerable assets. While that factor weighs against approving the settlement, this factor's importance is lessened by the obstacles the class would face in establishing liability and damages.")). Accordingly, we find that this factor disfavors settlement, albeit very slightly.

8 & 9. Range of reasonableness (in light of best possible recovery and risks of litigation)

HN17[] The eighth and ninth Girsh factors "ask whether the settlement is reasonable in light of the best possible recovery and the risks the parties would face if the case went to trial." *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 11 (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 322). In making this assessment, we compare "'the present value of the damages plaintiffs would likely recover if successful, appropriately discounted for the risk of not prevailing'" with "'the amount of the proposed settlement.'" In [*334] re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 806 (quoting Manual for Complex Litigation 2d § 30.44). The damages estimates should "generate a range of reasonableness (based on size of the proposed award and the uncertainty [32] inherent in these estimates) within which a district court approving (or rejecting) a settlement will not be set aside." Id. (citation omitted). "The primary touchstone of this inquiry is the economic valuation of the proposed settlement." Id. "In making this assessment, the evaluating court must recognize that settlement represents a compromise in which the highest hopes for recovery are yielded in exchange for certainty and resolution and guard against demanding too large a settlement based on the court's own view of the merits of the litigation." *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 11 (citing In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 806).

Pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, Class Members will receive immediate monetary relief in accordance with their relevant purchases of 3M tape, without undertaking the risks, costs, and delays of further litigation. The proposed Settlement provides between approximately 41 and 48 percent of the damages calculated by Plaintiff's expert economist. (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support at 19.) This result is significantly above the typical antitrust settlement, and courts routinely grant approval to settlements that involve [33] recoveries that represent a much lower percentage of the actual damages. See *Stop & Shop Supermarket Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, 9 (holding that a recovery of 11.4 percent of actual damages "compares favorably with the settlements reached in other complex class action lawsuits"); *Nichols v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., Civ. A. No. 00-6222, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, 16 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 22, 2005) (approving settlement for between 9.3 and 13.9 percent of actual damages); *In re Ravisent Techs., Inc. Sec. Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6680, 2005 WL 906361, 9 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 18, 2005) (finding that 6 to 12 percent of potential recovery generally reasonable); Lazy Oil Co. v. Witco Corp., 95 F. Supp. 2d 290, 339 (W.D. Pa. 1997) (noting cases approving settlements for 0.2 to 16 percent of potential recovery).

The Settlement Consideration also represents more than 18.5 percent of 3M sales to Class Members. (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support at 19.) This is also far above settlements approved in other cases. See *Meijer Inc. v. 3M, Civ. A. No. 04-5871, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56744, 2006 WL 2382718, 20 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 14, 2006) (approving settlement where the settlement fund represented [34] 2% of the sales to class members, and which the Court observed "compares favorably with other class action antitrust settlements"); *In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29161, 2004 WL 1068807 at 2 (settlement approved for 2% of sales). Moreover, there is no indication that this Settlement Amount has been reached inappropriately, or should otherwise be considered suspect; both parties have demonstrated willingness and ability to litigate this action, have engaged in mediation, and have reached an agreement that provides Class Members with monetary relief that is immediate, significant, and in line with or better than other comparable settlements. See *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 11 ("Additionally, the hallmarks of a questionable settlement are absent. Plaintiffs will receive a significant monetary settlement, and there is no suggestion of collusion between Defendants and Plaintiffs' counsel.") (internal quotation marks omitted). Accordingly, we find that the Settlement represents a reasonable compromise in light of both the best possible recovery and the risks of litigation.

Thus, of the nine Girsh factors, we find that only factor seven (the [35] ability of 3M to withstand greater judgment) weighs against approving the Settlement. This [*335] one factor is outweighed by the other Girsh factors favoring the Settlement. We, therefore, conclude that the Settlement Agreement is fair, adequate, and reasonable.

D. Fairness of the Distribution Plan

In addition to analyzing the terms of the Settlement Agreement, the Court must also examine the fairness of the proposed Distribution Plan. HN18[] "'Approval of a plan of allocation of a settlement fund in a class action is governed by the same standards of review applicable to approval of the settlement as a whole: the distribution plan must be fair, reasonable and adequate.'" In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 184 (quoting In re Computron Software Inc., 6 F. Supp. 2d 313, 321 (D.N.J. 1998)). "Courts generally consider plans of allocation that reimburse class members based on the type and extent of their injuries to be reasonable." *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 12 (citing In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 184).

The proposed Distribution Plan allocates the Settlement Fund among Class Members based upon their pro rata share of the Class's [36] total transparent tape purchases from 3M during the damage period, net of invoice adjustments and rebates paid as of the date of the settlement. (Hunter Decl. PP 8-10.) The Distribution Plan provides a straightforward method for determining each Class Member's pro rata share of the net Settlement Fund. The calculations and distribution methodology were overseen by the Leaf Group, consulting experts on computer data and damages issues throughout this litigation, as well as Class Counsel and PDC. (Hunter Decl. P 2, Bithell Decl. P 6.) We find that the proposed distribution methodology is fair, reasonable, and adequate. See In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., Civ. A. No. 03-0085, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, 11 (D.N.J. Nov. 9, 2005)* ("Plaintiffs propose to allocate the Settlement funds, net of Court approved attorneys' fees, incentive award, and expenses . . . in proportion to the overcharge damages incurred by each Class member due to Defendants' alleged conduct in restraint of trade. Such a method of allocating the Net Settlement Fund is inherently reasonable."); see also In re Corel Corp. Inc. Securities Litig., 293 F. Supp. 2d 484, 493 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 4. 2001) [37] (noting that courts "generally consider plans of allocation that reimburse class members based on the type and extent of their injuries to be reasonable.").

In sum, we find that the content and dissemination of Notice in this case satisfies the requirements of due process and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and we also find that the Settlement Agreement is fair, adequate and reasonable in light of all relevant considerations. We therefore grant final approval to the Settlement. We further find that the proposed Distribution Plan is fair, reasonable and adequate, and approve the Plan.

III. APPLICATION FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES, EXPENSES, AND INCENTIVE AWARD

Class Counsel request that the Court grant the following, to be distributed from the common fund established by the Settlement: (1) a class representative incentive award of $75,000 to Bradburn/Teacher Store; (2) an award of attorneys' fees of $13,912,500, or 35% of the Settlement common fund; and (3) an award of costs and expenses of $1,011,375 for reimbursement of expenses incurred by counsel on behalf of the class.

A. Expenses

HN19[] "Attorneys who create a common fund for the benefit of a class are [38] entitled [*336] to reimbursement of reasonable litigation expenses from the fund." *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 13 (citing In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 192). Class Counsel request reimbursement for expenses in the amount of $ 1,011,375. This consists of $ 983,463 for expenses that have been incurred since the beginning of this litigation in 2002, and includes costs incurred in connection with the prosecution and settlement of the litigation for items such as: expert fees; travel; document production; depositions and transcripts; settlement administration; mediation; document storage; on-line legal research; and class notice. (Baruch Decl. P 6). The remainder of the requested expenses, i.e. $27,912, represents estimated future expenses. (Baruch Decl. PP 6-8, Second Baruch Decl. PP 2-3.) The estimated future expenses consist of $23,662 for claims administration, $3,500 in travel expenses for the April 18, 2007 Hearing, and $750 in off-site document storage through June 2007. (Baruch Decl. P 8.) As Class Counsel notified Class Members that they would seek reimbursement of up to $1,400,000 in litigation and settlement expenses, (Pl. Corr. Mem. in Support, Ex. [39] B at 3.), the total amount of expenses for which they now seek reimbursement is within that amount. Moreover, no objections have been filed in response to this request for reimbursement. Accordingly, we find that the litigation expenses enumerated by Class Counsel are reasonable and we grant Class Counsel's request for reimbursement. See *In re Remeron End-Payor Antitrust Litig., Civ. A. No. 02-2007, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27011, at 92 (D.N.J. Sept. 13, 2005) (approving reimbursement of expenses which "reflect costs expended for purposes of prosecuting this litigation, including substantial fees for experts; substantial costs associated with creating and maintaining an electronic document database; travel and lodging expenses; copying costs; and the costs of deposition transcripts").

B. Attorneys' Fees

HN20[] "District courts approving class action settlements must thoroughly review fee petitions for fairness. Although the ultimate decision as to the proper amount of attorneys' fees rests in the sound discretion of the court, the court must set forth its reasoning clearly." *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 13 (citations omitted). Thorough review of fee [40] arrangements is critical in the context of a class action settlement because of "'the danger . . . that the lawyers might urge a class settlement at a low figure or on a less-than optimal basis in exchange for red-carpet treatment for fees,'" In re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 820 (quoting Weinberger v. Great N. Nekoosa Corp., 925 F.2d 518, 524 (1st Cir. 1991)), and because the parties to the action might lack sufficient incentive to object to the arrangement. In re AT&T Corp. Sec. Litig., 455 F.3d 160, 168 (3d Cir. 2006).

HN21[] Courts typically use one of two methods for assessing attorneys' fees, either the percentage of recovery method or the lodestar method. In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 300 (3d Cir. 2005). We utilize the percentage of recovery method in this case as it is "generally favored in common fund cases because it allows courts to award fees from the fund 'in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure.'" Id. (quoting In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 333). As the Third Circuit recommends, however, we use the lodestar method "to 'cross-check' the [41] percentage fee award," in order to verify that the fee award is not excessive. Id. at 305 (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 333).

Class Counsel have requested attorneys' fees of $ 13,912,500, or 35% of the Settlement [*337] Fund. HN22[] When a district court uses the percentage of recovery method, it "first calculates the percentage of the total recovery that the proposal would allocate to attorneys fees by dividing the amount of the requested fee by the total amount paid out by the defendant; it then inquires whether that percentage is appropriate based on the circumstances of the case." In re Cendant, 264 F.3d at 256. "The percentage will be based on the net settlement fund after deducting the costs of litigation." *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 14 (citing In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 193); see also *Meijer, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56744, 2006 WL 2382718, at 19 (calculating the percentage recovery based on the net settlement fund). In this case, Class Counsel appear to have erroneously calculated the requested award based on the gross settlement amount, rather then the net settlement amount. Because Class Counsel [42] argue in their Corrected Application for Attorneys' Fee, Expenses, and Class Representative Award that 35% of the settlement amount is reasonable under the percentage of recovery method of assessing attorneys' fees, we will consider whether the requested attorney award of 35% of the net settlement amount (i.e. $ 13,558,518) is reasonable.

In Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190 (3d Cir. 2000), HN23[] the Third Circuit directed district courts to consider the following seven factors when determining whether a percentage of recovery fee award is reasonable:

> (1) the size of the fund created and the number of persons benefitted;
>
> (2) the presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or the fees requested by counsel;
>
> (3) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (4) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (5) the risk of nonpayment;
>
> (6) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel; and
>
> (7) the awards in similar cases.

Id. at 195 n.1; see also In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 301. "Since this is a flexible and fact-driven determination, [43] " *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 14, district courts are not limited to the Gunter factors in their analysis of the fee request's reasonableness. As the Third Circuit recently noted:

> HN24[] This list [of Gunter factors] was not intended to be exhaustive. . . . In Prudential, we noted three other factors that may be relevant and important to consider: (1) the value of benefits accruing to class members attributable to the efforts of class counsel as opposed to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations; (2) the percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee agreement at the time counsel was retained; and (3) any 'innovative' terms of the settlement. . . . In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, a district court should consider the Gunter factors, the Prudential factors, and any other factors that are useful and relevant with respect to the particular facts of the case.

*In re AT&T Corp. Secs. Litig., 455 F.3d 160, 2006 WL 2021033, at 4 (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 338-340). While the district courts should "engage in [44] robust assessments of the fee award reasonableness factors when evaluating a fee request," In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 302, these factors "'need not be applied in a formulaic way' because each case is different, 'and in certain cases, one factor may outweigh the rest.'" *In re AT&T, 455 F.3d 160, 2006 WL 2021033, at 4 (quoting In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 301); see also In re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 736 (3d Cir. 2001) ("[A] district court may not rely on a formulaic application of the appropriate [*338] range in awarding fees but must consider the relevant circumstances of the particular case.").

1. Size of fund created and number of persons benefitted

Class Counsel have obtained for the class a common fund of $39,750,000 in cash, less expenses, attorneys' fees, and incentive award, benefitting more than 3000 Class Members. As discussed above, the Settlement Consideration represents 18.5 percent of what Class Members paid to 3M for invisible and transparent tape during the damage period, and amounts to 41 to 48 percent of the total single damages claimed by the class. As the Settlement does not require Class Members [45] to file proof of claim forms, all Class Members that can be located will receive a distribution from the common fund. Therefore, this factor weighs in favor of finding that the percentage of the settlement fund requested is appropriate.

2. Presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class

There have been no objections either to the Settlement Agreement or to the requested attorneys' fees. The absence of objections to the requested attorneys' fees in this case is particularly notable given the sophisticated nature of the absent Class Members. See *In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, at 13 n.1 ("When a class is comprised of sophisticated business entities that can be expected to oppose any request for attorney fees they find unreasonable, the lack of objections 'indicates the appropriateness of the [fee] request.'" (alteration in original) (quoting *Cimarron Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. National Council on Compensation Ins., Civ. A. Nos. 89-822, 89-1186, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19969, 1993 WL 355466, at 1-2 (W.D. Ok. June 8, 1993))); *Stop & Shop Supermarket Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, at 10 (finding that this factor weighs in [46] favor of approval because, "[a]lthough the Settlement Class in this case is relatively small and consists of sophisticated businesses, not one member of the Settlement Class objected to the requested fee"). We find that the total absence of objections to the requested fees weighs in favor of finding that the percentage of the settlement fund requested is appropriate. See *In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1261, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, at 5 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) ("The absence of objections supports approval of the Fee Petition."); In re Rent-Way Secs. Litig., 305 F. Supp. 2d 491, 515 (W.D. Pa. 2003) ("[T]he absence of substantial objections by other class members to the fee application supports the reasonableness of Lead Counsels' request."); *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 15 ("[T]he Class members' view of the attorneys' performance, inferred from the lack of objections to the fee petition, supports the fee award.").

3. Skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved

HN25[] The skill and efficiency of Class Counsel are "measured by the quality of the result achieved, the difficulties faced, the speed and efficiency of the recovery, [47] the standing, experience and expertise of the counsel, the skill and professionalism with which counsel prosecuted the case and the performance and quality of opposing counsel." In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 194 (citation omitted). Class Counsel are experienced in complex class action litigation (Baruch Decl. P 3), and have obtained a significant settlement for the Class despite the complexity and challenges of this case. Accordingly, this factor favors finding that the percentage of the settlement fund requested is appropriate.

4. Complexity and duration of the litigation

As mentioned above, courts have stated that antitrust class action are perhaps the [*339] most complex cases to litigate. *Stop & Shop Supermarket Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, 11; In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 296 F. Supp. 2d 568, 577 (E.D. Pa. 2003). This action was filed more than four years ago, and involved litigation over class certification and collateral estoppel, expert testimony on both class certification and the merits, and numerous depositions. At the time of settlement, the parties had submitted pretrial memoranda, completed expert depositions, and were ready [48] for trial. Though Plaintiff benefitted from our estoppel ruling, there remained complex challenges in establishing liability and damages in this case, as discussed above. Accordingly, this factor weighs in favor of finding that the percentage of the settlement fund requested is appropriate.

5. Risk of nonpayment

Class Counsel's compensation for their services in this case was wholly contingent on the success of the litigation. (Hazard Decl. P 25.) Given the risks of establishing liability and damages discussed above, the possibility of non-payment has been present throughout this litigation. Accordingly, this factor weighs in favor of finding that the percentage of the settlement fund requested is appropriate.

6. Amount of time devoted to the case by Plaintiffs' counsel

Class Counsel spent more than four years, more than 9,000 hours in attorney time, and approximately 2,000 hours in paralegal time working on this case. (Baruch Decl. P 2.) Due to the significant number of hours devoted to this litigation and the duration of this litigation, this factor weighs in favor of finding that the percentage of the settlement fund requested is appropriate.

7. Awards in similar [49] cases

HN26[] This factor requires the Court to compare the percentage of recovery requested as a fee in this case against the percentage of recovery awarded as a fee in other common fund cases in which the percentage of recovery method, rather than the lodestar method, was used. In re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d at 737. Class Counsel request attorneys' fees that produce a percentage of recovery of 35%. This percentage of recovery is slightly above the typical range of common fund attorneys' award in securities and antitrust litigation. See 4 Herbert B. Newberg & Alba Conte, Newberg on Class Actions § 14:6 (4th ed. 2006) ("In the normal range of common fund recoveries in securities and antitrust suits, common fee awards fall in the 20 to 33 per cent range."). In In re Rite Aid, the Third Circuit noted three studies which found that fee awards ranging between 25-33% of the common fund were not unusual. In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 303 ("[O]ne study of securities class action settlements over $10 million . . . found an average percentage fee recovery of 31%; a second study by the Federal Judicial Center of all class actions resolved [50] or settled over a four-year period . . . found a median percentage recovery range of 27-30%; and a third study of class action settlements between $100 million and $200 million . . . found recoveries in the 25-30% range were 'fairly standard.'") (citations omitted). Several decisions have awarded one-third of the fund as a fee though the settlements in those cases were substantially less successful than here. See *Ravisent Technologies, Civ. A. No. 001014, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6680, 2005 WL 906361, *9, *10-12 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 18, 2005) (granting one-third of the settlement fund in attorneys' fees where the settlement fund totaled 12.2% of the maximum possible damages); In re Gen. Instrument Sec. Litig., 209 F. Supp. 2d 423, 431, 433-34 [*340] (E.D. Pa. 2001) (granting one-third of settlement fund in attorneys' fees where settlement fund totaled 11% of damages). Because the requested fee percentage is only slightly higher than the percentages awarded in those cases and the settlement in this case provides a common fund that represents a much higher percentage share of the Class Members' damages than did the common funds in those cases, this factor supports a finding that the [51] percentage of the settlement fund requested is appropriate.

We conclude that each of the seven Gunter factors favors the requested award of attorneys' fees in this case. Accordingly, we find that, under the Gunter analysis, the percentage of recovery requested as attorneys' fees in this case is reasonable.

8. The Prudential factors

Our assessment of Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees in light of the three Prudential factors is consistent with our finding of reasonableness under the Gunter factors. HN27[] The first Prudential factor is intended to measure whether "the entire value of the benefits accruing to class members is properly attributable to the efforts of class counsel," *In re AT&T, 455 F.3d 160, 2006 WL 2021033, at 11, or if some of those benefits are more properly attributed "to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations." *455 F.3d 160, [WL] at 4 (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 338). While Class Counsel were not aided in their prosecution of this case by a government investigation, Class Counsel did have the benefit of prior litigation which assigned liability to 3M for the same sort of [52] anti-competitive conduct that has been alleged here. Compare *Stop & Shop Supermarket Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, at 12 ("[T]his action was riskier than many other antitrust class actions because there was no prior government investigation, or prior finding of civil or criminal liability based on antitrust violations, in this case."). However, in comparison to the Meijer litigation, which similarly benefitted from the prior litigation and settled for an amount equaling 2 percent of the class members purchases, the proposed Settlement Consideration in this action represents 18.5 percent of the Class Members purchases. Consequently, we find that this factor supports the conclusion that the percentage of recovery requested by Class Counsel for attorneys' fees in this case is reasonable.

As for the second Prudential factor, we find that a percentage of recovery of 35 percent is comparable to the likely "percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee agreement at the time counsel was retained." *In re AT&T, 455 F.3d 160, 2006 WL 2021033, at 4 (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 340). See [53] *In re Remeron, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, 16 ("Attorneys regularly contract for contingent fees between 30% and 40% with their clients in non-class, commercial litigation."); see also In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 194 ("[I]n private contingency fee cases, particularly in tort matters, plaintiffs' counsel routinely negotiate agreements providing for between thirty and forty percent of any recovery.").

With respect to the third Prudential factor, the Settlement Agreement here contains no particularly "innovative" terms to argue in favor of the requested award of attorneys' fees. *In re AT&T, 455 F.3d 160, 2006 WL 2021033, at 4 (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 339).

In sum, we find that both the Prudential factors and the Gunter factors support our conclusion that the percentage of recovery requested by Class Counsel for attorneys' fees in this case is reasonable.

[*341] 9. Lodestar cross-check

HN28[] The Third Circuit has suggested that, in addition to reviewing the fee award reasonableness factors, "it is 'sensible' for district courts to 'cross-check' the percentage fee award against the 'lodestar' method." In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 305 [54] (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 333). The lodestar is calculated by "multiplying the number of hours worked by the normal hourly rates of counsel. The court may then multiply the lodestar calculation to reflect the risks of nonrecovery, to reward an extraordinary result, or to encourage counsel to undertake socially useful litigation." *In re Aetna, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, 2001 WL 20928, at 15 (citing In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 195). "The lodestar cross-check serves the purpose of alerting the trial judge that when the multiplier is too great, the court should reconsider its calculation under the percentage-of-recovery method, with an eye toward reducing the award." In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 306. The cross-check, however, "does not trump the primary reliance on the percentage of common fund method." Id. at 307. Moreover, "[t]he lodestar cross-check calculation need entail neither mathematical precision nor bean-counting. The district courts may rely on summaries submitted by the attorneys and need not review actual billing records. . . . [T]he resulting multiplier need not fall within any pre-defined range, provided [55] that the District Court's analysis justifies the award." Id. at 306-07 (footnotes and citations omitted). It is appropriate for the court to consider the multipliers utilized in comparable cases. Id. at 307 n.17.

The total lodestar amount submitted to the Court by Class Counsel in this case is $5,476,800 for 10,957.5 hours of attorney and paralegal time. (Baruch Decl. P 2.) The lodestar amount covers work done from the inception of the claims in this action through January 18, 2007 and is calculated at current rates. (Id. The hours worked were recorded contemporaneously in the books and records that the firms maintained in the ordinary course of business. (Id. P 5.) The lodestar amount, taken against the requested fee award, results in a lodestar multiplier of approximately 2.5.

HN29[] The Third Circuit has recognized that multipliers "'ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied.'" In re Cendant PRIDES, 243 F.3d at 742 (quoting In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 341). A multiplier of 2.5 is within this range of normal awards. See *In re Linerboard, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, at 16 [56] (noting that "during 2001-2003, the average multiplier approved in common fund class actions was 4.35"). Moreover, the lack of objections by this Class of sophisticated parties to Class Counsel's request for fees supports the resulting multiplier. See *Stop & Shop Supermarket Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, at 18 (noting that "the high lodestar multiplier (15.6) which results from the Court's award of attorneys' fees in this case is neutralized . . . by the extraordinary support Plaintiffs have shown for counsels' request for fees. Not one member of the Settlement Class, which is made up of approximately 90 sophisticated businesses, objected."). Accordingly, we find that, given the facts of this case, the requested lodestar multiplier of approximately 2.5 is acceptable and does not call for a reduction in Class Counsel's requested attorneys' fees award.

Having thoroughly reviewed Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees, we conclude that the percentage of recovery requested by Class Counsel is reasonable, and that the lodestar cross-check is consistent with a finding of reasonableness. Accordingly, we approve Class Counsel's request, and award Class Counsel [*342] $ 13,558,518 [57] in attorneys' fees to be paid from the Settlement Fund.

C. Incentive Award to Representative Plaintiffs

Bradburn has asked the Court to approve an incentive award in the amount of $75,000 to be paid from the Settlement Fund, because Bradburn has spent a significant amount of its own time litigating this case for the absent members of the Settlement Class. HN30[] "'Courts routinely approve incentive awards to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of the class action litigation.'" Cullen v. Whitman Med. Corp., 197 F.R.D. 136, 145 (E.D. Pa. 2000) (quoting In re S. Ohio Corr. Facility, 175 F.R.D. 270, 272 (S.D. Ohio 1997)). It is particularly appropriate to compensate named representative plaintiffs with incentive awards when they have actively assisted plaintiffs' counsel in their prosecution of the litigation for the benefit of the class. See *Tenuto v. Transworld Sys., Civ. A. No. 99-4228, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1764, 2002 WL 188569, at 5 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 31, 2002); see also *In re Linerboard, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, at 18 ("Like the attorneys in this case, the class representatives [58] have conferred benefits on all other class members and they deserve to be compensated accordingly.") (citing In re Plastic Tableware Antitrust Litig., Civ. A. No. 94-3564, 2002 WL 188569 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 4, 1998)).

Bradburn has worked closely with Class Counsel throughout the four years of investigation, prosecution and settlement of the claims in this litigation. (Corr. Application at 6.) Although it is a small business, Bradburn's representatives underwent nine depositions, in addition to providing testimony at the class certification hearing, and at the time of settlement, Bradburn's representatives were preparing to attend and give testimony at the trial. (Id. In opposing class certification, 3M interrogated Bradburn at length on internal family quarrels and allegations of misconduct, and claimed that these allegations disqualified Bradburn from being an adequate representative. (Id. Furthermore, the Notice advised Class Members that Bradburn would apply for an incentive award up to this amount and there were no objections to the award. See *In re Remeron, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, at 18. Accordingly, we approve the requested incentive award.

[59] IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the Settlement Agreement and Distribution Plan are fair, adequate and reasonable, and we approve them. The Court further concludes that Class Counsel's requested reimbursement of expenses in the amount of $1,011,375 and requested award of attorneys' fees representing 35 % of the Settlement Fund (or $13,558,518) are fair and reasonable, and we approve them. Lastly, the Court approves Bradburn's request to be paid an incentive award in the amount of $75,000.

An appropriate Order follows.

FINAL APPROVAL ORDER AND JUDGMENT

WHEREAS Plaintiff Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. ("Bradburn"), on behalf of itself and each Class Member, as defined herein, by and through its counsel of record in the Litigation, has asserted claims for damages and injunctive relief against 3M Company ("3M"), alleging violations of federal antitrust law;

WHEREAS, the Court entered an order on August 18, 2004 certifying a class of Plaintiffs comprising "all persons who directly purchased invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company between October 2, 1998 and the present, who have not [*343] purchased, for resale under the class member's own label, [60] any 'private label' invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company or any of 3M Company's competitors at any time from October 2, 1988 to the present"; and

WHEREAS, the Court has appointed R. Stephen Berry, J. Daniel Leftwich and Gregory Baruch, of the law firm of Berry & Leftwich, and Charles M. Jones, of the law firm of Jones, Osteen, Jones & Arnold, to serve as Class Counsel; and

WHEREAS, the Court directed on November 12, 2004 that potential class members be given notice of the class certification and afforded an opportunity to exclude themselves from the class; and

WHEREAS, Class Counsel certified on December 7, 2004 that such notice had been provided; and

WHEREAS the Plaintiff and 3M, desiring to resolve any and all disputes in this action, executed a Settlement Agreement dated as of September 5, 2006, which was filed with the Court on September 8, 2006; and

WHEREAS the Settlement Agreement does not constitute, and shall not be construed as or deemed to be evidence of, an admission of any fault, wrongdoing or liability by 3M or by any other person or entity; and

WHEREAS Plaintiff and 3M have agreed to entry of this Final Approval Order and Judgment (hereinafter, the "Order"); [61] and

WHEREAS Plaintiff, on behalf of itself and each Class Member, has agreed to the release of claims specified in the Settlement Agreement; and

WHEREAS, on October 24, 2006, this Court confirmed and updated the class certification granted in its Order dated August 18, 2004, granted preliminary approval to the Settlement Agreement and directed that Notice be given to the Class as defined in the Court's Order dated August 18, 2004 and updated in the Preliminary Approval Order; and

WHEREAS, pursuant to the Preliminary Approval Order, Notice of the Settlement was given to Class Members, in accordance with Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(c)(2) and 23(e) and the requirements of due process (which Notice is incorporated herein by reference); and

WHEREAS an opportunity to be heard was given to all persons requesting to be heard in accordance with this Court's Orders; the Court has reviewed and considered the terms of the Settlement Agreement, and the submissions of the parties in support thereof; and after holding a hearing on April 18, 2007 at which all interested parties were given an opportunity to be heard; and

WHEREAS there is no just reason for delay;

NOW, THEREFORE, before [62] the taking of any testimony, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, without any admission of liability or wrongdoing by 3M Company, and upon the consent of the Settling Parties,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED:

I.

JURISDICTION

1.1. The Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action and the parties hereto. Plaintiff brought this action asserting an claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Jurisdiction lies in this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337. Venue is proper in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

[*344] II.

DEFINITIONS

As used in this Final Approval Order and Judgment, the following definitions shall apply:

2.1. "3M" or "Defendant" means 3M Company and all of its predecessors, successors and past and present affiliates, subsidiaries, directors, officers, employees and agents.

2.2. "Class" means all Persons who directly purchased invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company between October 2, 1998 and February 10, 2006, who have not purchased, for resale under the Class Member's own label, any "private label" invisible [63] or transparent tape from 3M Company or any of 3M Company's competitors at any time from October 2, 1988 to February 10, 2006; but excluding the following: (i) 3M Company, its subsidiaries, affiliates, officers, directors, and employees; (ii) those Persons that timely and validly requested exclusion from the Class in response to the Notice of Pendency of Class Action dated November 29, 2004, provided pursuant to the Court's November 12, 2004 Order; and (iii) any other Person that may be excluded by order of the Court.

2.3. "Class Counsel" means R. Stephen Berry, J. Daniel Leftwich, and Gregory Baruch of the law firm of Berry & Leftwich, and Charles M. Jones, of the law firm of Jones, Osteen, Jones & Arnold.

2.4. "Class Member" means any Person, including but not limited to the individual representative Plaintiff, that satisfies all of the requirements for inclusion in the Class as set forth in paragraph 2.2 herein, and that has not validly requested exclusion therefrom.

2.5. "Distribution Plan" means the plan that sets forth the process for the allocation and distribution of the Net Settlement Fund, which was submitted to the Court simultaneously with the Final Approval Motion.

[64] 2.6. "Effective Date" means the first date by which all of the events and conditions specified in paragraph 7.1 of the Settlement Agreement have been met and have occurred.

2.7. "Invisible or transparent tape" means invisible or transparent tape sold within the United States for home and office use, including such products as Scotch (R) Magic TM tape, Scotch (R) transparent tape, Highland TM tapes and other invisible or transparent tapes for home and office use, but not including such products as packaging tapes, sealing tapes or masking tapes.

2.8. "Judgment" refers to this Final Approval Order and Judgment.

2.9. "Litigation" means the action pending in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania titled Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M (Minnesota, Mining and Manufacturing Company), Civil Action No. 02-7676 (JP).

2.10. "Notice of Proposed Settlement" means, collectively, the communications by which the Class was notified of the existence and terms of the Settlement.

2.11. "Notice Plan" means the plan approved in the Preliminary Approval Order for notifying the Class of the Settlement.

2.12. "Plaintiff" means Bradburn Parent Teacher [65] Store, Inc. and each of its parents, subsidiaries, affiliates, assignees, predecessors, successors, officers, directors, employees, agents, and attorneys.

2.13. "Released Claims" means the release and discharge of 3M and each of its parents, subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, assignors, assignees, predecessors, successors, [*345] officers, directors, employees, agents and attorneys, from any and all claims asserted, or which could have been asserted, in the Litigation and any and all claims and potential claims, demands, rights, liabilities and causes of action which have arisen or could arise hereafter, whether known or unknown, whether asserted or that could have been or could hereafter be asserted by any Class Member or any parent, affiliate or subsidiary of any of such Class Member against 3M and any of its subsidiaries, affiliates, directors, officers, employees and/or agents, concerning or relating in any way to or arising in any way from any 3M discount, rebate, offer, promotion or other sales program or practice (including without limitation, programs claimed to involve the bundling of products or volume or growth rebates) concerning, including or relating in any way to the sale, [66] promotion or distribution of invisible or transparent tape for home or office use in effect from January 1, 1993 to September 5, 2006, including without limitation claims arising under any federal and/or state antitrust laws, unfair competition laws, consumer protection laws or deceptive trade practices acts or any similar statutory or common law provisions, but excluding from this release claims relating to any alleged product defect, personal injury or breach of contract. With the exception of claims relating to any alleged product defect, personal injury or breach of contract, this release is a "general release" as that term is used in Section 1542 of the Civil Code of the State of California and all Class Members that have not opted out will expressly waive any rights under that statute or any similar law of any state or territory of the United States or any principle of common law that is similar, comparable, or equivalent to Section 1542 of the California Civil Code.

2.14. "Settlement" means the settlement contemplated by the terms, conditions and provisions set forth in the Settlement Agreement.

2.15. "Settlement Agreement" means the Settlement Agreement dated as of September 5, 2006 by [67] and between Plaintiff Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc., on behalf of itself and each Class Member, and Defendant 3M Company, including all exhibits thereto.

2.16. "Settlement Agreement Date" means September 5, 2006, the date as of which the Settling Parties entered into the Settlement Agreement.

2.17. "Settlement Consideration" means the amount that will be paid by 3M to or on behalf of the Class in exchange for the settlement and release of all Released Claims, as defined in paragraph 2.13 herein.

2.18. "Settling Parties" means, collectively, the Plaintiff, on behalf of itself and each Class Member, and 3M.

III.

FINAL APPROVAL OF SETTLEMENT

3.1. In its Order dated August 18, 2004, as confirmed and updated in the Preliminary Approval Order dated October 24, 2006, the Court certified the following Class which it now reconfirms:

> all persons who directly purchased invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company between October 2, 1998 and February 10, 2006, who have not purchased, for resale under the Class Member's own label, any "private label" invisible or transparent tape from 3M Company or any of 3M Company's competitors at any time from October 2, 1988 to [68] February 10, 2006.

3.2 Attached hereto as Exhibit 1 is the list of Persons that have timely excluded themselves from the Class, in response to [*346] the Notice of Pendency of Class Action dated November 29, 2004, which was provided pursuant to the Court's Order dated November 12, 2004, and for which this Final Approval Order and Judgment has no force or effect.

3.3 The Court finds that the Notice and the Notice Plan were reasonably calculated to apprise the Class of all material elements of the proposed settlement, constituted the best notice practicable under the circumstances, and constituted due and sufficient notice. The Court finds that all Class Members were afforded the opportunity to object to or comment on the Settlement, and to appear at the Final Approval Hearing. Accordingly, the Court determines that all Class Members that have not excluded themselves from this Litigation are bound by this Final Approval Order and Judgment.

3.4 The terms of the Settlement Agreement are hereby approved. The Court finds that the Settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate and in the best interests of Plaintiff and the Class as a whole. The Settlement is the product of arm's-length, serious [69] and informed negotiations among experienced and knowledgeable counsel. The Settlement Agreement has the full force and effect of an order of this Court, and the Settling Parties are directed to implement the Settlement Agreement in accordance with its terms and conditions.

3.5. The Distribution Plan is adjudged to be fair, reasonable and adequate and is hereby approved. Class Counsel are directed to proceed with the implementation of the Distribution Plan.

3.6 No objections have been filed with respect to the Settlement and/or the Distribution Plan.

3.7. No part of the Settlement Consideration to be provided by 3M pursuant to the Settlement Agreement shall constitute, nor shall it be construed or treated as constituting, a payment in lieu of treble damages, fines, penalties, forfeitures or punitive recoveries under any state or federal laws, rules or regulations, or any other applicable statute or provision.

IV.

DISMISSAL OF ACTION AND RELEASES OF CLAIMS

4.1. This action is dismissed with prejudice and, except as provided in paragraph 5.1 of this Order, without costs.

4.2. The Court hereby finds that the Released Claims which Plaintiff and the Class Members, on behalf [70] of themselves and, with respect to individuals or individually owned businesses, on behalf of each of their heirs, predecessors, successors, representatives or assigns, and, with respect to corporate entities, on behalf of each of their parents, subsidiaries, affiliates, assignees, predecessors, successors, officers, directors, employees and agents, shall fully and forever release, relinquish and discharge, by operation of this Final Approval Order and Judgment are as defined in paragraph 2.13 of this Order, i.e., > the release and discharge of 3M and each of its parents, subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, assignors, assignees, predecessors, successors, officers, directors, employees, agents and attorneys from any and all claims asserted, or which could have been asserted, in the Litigation and any and all claims and potential claims, demands, rights, liabilities and causes of action which have arisen or could arise hereafter, whether known or unknown, whether asserted or that could have been or could hereafter be asserted by any Class Member or any parent, affiliate or subsidiary of any of such Class Member against 3M and any of its subsidiaries, affiliates, directors, officers, [71] employees and/or [*347] agents, concerning or relating in any way to or arising in any way from any 3M discount, rebate, offer, promotion or other sales program or practice (including without limitation, programs claimed to involve the bundling of products or volume or growth rebates) concerning, including or relating in any way to the sale, promotion or distribution of invisible or transparent tape for home or office use in effect from January 1, 1993 to September 5, 2006, including without limitation claims arising under any federal and/or state antitrust laws, unfair competition laws, consumer protection laws or deceptive trade practices acts or any similar statutory or common law provisions, but excluding from this release claims relating to any alleged product defect, personal injury or breach of contract. With the exception of claims relating to any alleged product defect, personal injury or breach of contract, this release is a "general release" as that term is used in Section 1542 of the Civil Code of the State of California and all Class Members that have not opted out will expressly waive any rights under that statute or any similar law of any state or territory of the United States [72] or any principle of common law that is similar, comparable, or equivalent to Section 1542 of the California Civil Code.

4.3. Upon the Effective Date, each Class Member, on behalf of itself and, with respect to individuals or individually owned businesses, on behalf of each of their heirs, predecessors, successors, representatives or assigns, and, with respect to corporate entities, on behalf of each of their parents, subsidiaries, affiliates, assignees, predecessors, successors, officers, directors, employees and agents, shall have, shall be deemed to have and by operation of this Judgment shall have fully, finally and forever released, relinquished and discharged 3M and its attorneys from any and all Released Claims and shall be deemed to have covenanted and agreed not to sue 3M or its attorneys with respect to the Released Claims.

4.4. Upon the Effective Date, 3M shall be deemed to have, and by operation of the Final Judgment shall have fully, finally and forever released, relinquished and discharged each and all of the Plaintiff and Class Counsel from all claims arising out of, relating to, or in connection with the institution, prosecution, assertion, settlement or resolution [73] of the Litigation, other than claims for breach of the Settlement Agreement.

V.

FEES AND EXPENSES AND PLAINTIFF INCENTIVE AWARD

5.1 The Court approves the award of $13,558,518 to pay Class Counsel's fees plus $1,011,375 to reimburse Class Counsel for payment of costs and expenses reasonably incurred in prosecuting and settling this action.

5.2 The Court approves the award of $75,000 as an incentive award for Plaintiff Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc.

5.3 No objections have been filed with respect to attorneys' fees and/or costs and expenses or with respect to Plaintiff's incentive award.

5.4 The fee award represents a multiplier of approximately 2.5 of Class Counsel's lodestar of $5,476,800, which multiplier is reasonable under the circumstances.

VI.

FINALITY OF JUDGMENT

6.1 The Court finds that this Final Approval Order and Judgment adjudicates all the claims, rights and liabilities of the parties to the Settlement Agreement and is [*348] final and shall be immediately appealable. Neither this Order nor the Settlement Agreement shall constitute any evidence or admission of liability by 3M, nor shall either document or any other document relating to the [74] Settlement be offered in evidence or used for any other purpose in this or any other matter or proceeding except as may be necessary to consummate or enforce the Settlement Agreement or the terms of this Order or if offered by 3M in responding to any action purporting to assert Released Claims.

VII.

RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

7.1. Without affecting the finality of this Order, the Court retains jurisdiction for the purposes of enforcing the terms of the Settlement Agreement, to supervise the Settlement and to bar class members that have not opted out from instituting, maintaining or otherwise pursuing claims encompassed within the Released Claims. The Court also retains jurisdiction to allow any of the Settling Parties to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary and appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the Settlement Agreement and this Final Approval Order and Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions of this Final Approval Order and Judgment, and for the enforcement of compliance herewith.

7.2. If this Settlement is terminated or reversed or overturned on appeal (except as to attorneys' fees, [75] expenses, or incentive awards), then: (a) this Final Approval Order and Judgment will have no force or effect, and all negotiations, proceedings, and statements made in connection with the Settlement Agreement will be without prejudice to the right of any persons or entities, and shall not be deemed admissions as to any issue; (b) the Settling Parties expressly reserve all of their rights and preserve all applicable defenses; and (c) the Settling Parties shall be restored to their respective positions in this Litigation as of May 5, 2006, and proceed as if the Settlement Agreement, and all other related orders and papers, had not been executed.

7.3. Under Rule 54 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court, in the interests of justice, there being no just reason for delay, expressly directs the Clerk of the Court to enter this Final Approval Order and Judgment, and hereby decrees that upon entry, it be deemed a final judgment and appealable with respect to all claims by Class Members, in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement.

7.4. The Court directs the Clerk of the Court to maintain for a period of five (5) years the record of those members of the Class listed [76] on Exhibit 1 that timely excluded themselves from the Class.

So Ordered.

Dated this 14th day of May, 2007.

s/ John R. Padova

United States District Judge

EXHIBIT 1

LIST OF PERSONS THAT HAVE TIMELY EXCLUDED THEMSELVES FROM THE CLASS

Advantage Office Prods, 8930 Western Way, Jacksonville FL 32256

All Printing Resources, 140 W Lake Dr, Glendale Hts IL 60139

Benjamin Office Supply, 5022 Cook Rd, Beltsville MD 20705

Bobels Office Plus, 1953 C Coopr Fostr, Amherst OH 44001

Borden Office Equipment, 141 N 5th St, Steubenville OH 43952

Bowmans Stationers Inc., 322 Parker St, Vacaville CA 95688

Brotherton Ofc Products, 130 S College Ave, Fort Collins CO 80524

[*349] Campbell Sply Co, PO Box 1464, Sioux Falls SD 57101

Crown Products Company, PO Box 696, 450 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers NY 10701

Data Essentials Inc, 3150 Mercier St, Kansas City MO 64111

Evans Drug Co, 102 W Randolph Ave, Enid OK 73701

F & L Country Store, 55883 Cnty Rd 43, Middlebury IN 46540

Foleys Inc, PO Box 2768, 1116 Foust Ave., High Point NC 27260

Frameware Inc, 25 Sherwood Ln, Fairfield NJ 07004

Fraternal Enterprises, 4100 Baldwin Rd, Holly MI 48442

Hearn Paper Co Inc, 556 N Meridian [77] Rd, Youngstown OH 44509

J R Freeman Co Inc, 123 S D St Ste A, San Bernardino CA 92401

Johnson Wholesale Co., Inc., 2226 Mustang Way, Madison WI 53718

Joshen Paper Packaging, 5808 Grant Ave., Cuyahoga Heights, OH 44105

Kelly Paper Co., 288 Brea Canyon Rd, City Industry CA 91789

Latschs Inc, 200 Oakcreek Dr, Lincoln NE 68528

Markus Inc, 3646 Werk Rd, Cincinnati OH 45248

Marshfield Book & Stationery Inc, M111 W McMillan St, Marshfield WI 54449

Maurer Industrial Supply, Inc, 3940 Lexington Pk, Elkhart IN 46514

Maxi Aids, 42 Executive Blvd, Farmingdale NY 11735

Meyers Sply Co, 191 Sheridan Dr, Naugatuck CT 06770

Motive Parts & Supply, Po Box 708, Rapid City SD 57709

Nashville Office Interiors, Inc., PO Box 330399, 1621 Church St., Nashville TN 37203

Office Church School Spl, 780 S. Pike W., Sumter SC 29150

Office Supply Services, 2139 Supply Ct NW, Concord NC 28027

Peters Office Supply, 338 NW 9th Ave, Portland OR 97209

Publix Super Markets Inc., 2600 County Line, Lakeland FL 33811

Ray Engel Packaging Supp, 12060 Lackland Rd, St Louis MO 63146

Roanoke Moulding Design, 1715 Granby Street, Roanoke VA 24012

Rogards Office Prods, 214 S Walnut St, Champaign IL 61820

Schwarz, [78] 8338 Austin Avenue, Morton Grove IL 60053

Schwegmans Office Supply, 502 W Broadway St, PO Box 616, West Plains MO 65775

Ship-Pac, Inc., 3000 Covington Rd, Kalamazoo MI 49001

Signcraft Screenprint, 100 A J Harle Dr, Galena IL 61036

Southwestern Bus Systems (now Southwestern Office Plus), 1007 N 8th St, Garden City KS 67846

Stephens Office Supply, 1201 West Loop N, Houston TX 77055

Stinson Stationers, 1108 Baker Street, PO Box 3399, Bakersfield CA 93305

Student Book Store, 421 E. Grand River Ave., East Lansing MI 48823

Sundry Distributors, Inc., 110 E Washington St., PO Box 1166, Athens AL 35611

Swartz & Watson (dba Accurate Office Equipment & Stebbins Office Systems), 1248 Lincoln Way East, Massillon OH 44646

[*350] Technical Library Service Inc., dba Talas, 20 W. 20th Street, New York NY 10011

Tharco, 10900 Painter Avenue, Santa Fe Springs CA 90670

TSRC, Inc. (T/a The Supply Room Companies), 14140 N. Washington Hwy., PO Box 1810, Ashland VA 23005

Total Office Products, 9452 Philips Hwy, Ste. 7, Jacksonville FL 32256

Unique Novelties, 61741 Campground, Washington MI 48094

Variety Distributors, PO Box 728, Harlan IA 51537

Wuzburg Inc., 710 S. Fourth St., PO Box 710, Memphis [79] TN 38101

Borough of Lansdale v. PP&L, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

May 16, 2007, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 02-8012

Reporter

503 F. Supp. 2d 730 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35867 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,718

BOROUGH OF LANSDALE, BOROUGH OF BLAKELY, BOROUGH OF CATAWISSA, BOROUGH OF DUNCANNON, BOROUGH OF HATFIELD, BOROUGH OF KUTZTOWN, BOROUGH OF LEHIGHTON, BOROUGH OF MIFFLINBURG, BOROUGH OF OLYPHANT, BOROUGH OF QUAKERTOWN, BOROUGH OF SCHUYLKILL HAVEN, BOROUGH OF ST. CLAIR, BOROUGH OF WATSONTOWN, BOROUGH OF WEATHERLY, PENNSYLVANIA, Plaintiffs, v. PP&L, INC., PPL ELECTRIC UTILITIES CORP., PPL ENERGY PLUS, L.L.C., and PPL GENERATION, L.L.C., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Summary judgment granted by, Judgment entered by Borough of Lansdale v. PP&L, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65371 (E.D. Pa., Sept. 4, 2007)

Prior History: Borough of Lansdale v. PP&L, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 2d 264, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29469 (E.D. Pa., 2006)

Core Terms

squeeze, rates, filed rate doctrine, wholesale, plaintiffs', anticompetitive, electricity, antitrust, summary judgment, retail rate, interaction, reconsideration motion, regulated, Sherman Act, Reconsideration, damages, retail, regulatory agency, anti trust law, customers, tariffs, defendants', immunity, district court, manifest, non-rate, effects, alternative grounds, Counterclaim, monopolize

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Newly Discovered Evidence

HN1[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

Reconsideration is proper where the moving party demonstrates one of three grounds: (1) an intervening change in the controlling law; (2) the availability of new evidence that was not available when the court granted the motion for summary judgment; or (3) the need to correct a clear error of law or fact or to prevent manifest injustice.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

HN2[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

A district court may properly refuse to consider evidence presented in a motion for reconsideration when the evidence was available prior to summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

HN3[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, sanctions those who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations. Conduct that constitutes a "price squeeze" may violate the Sherman Act § 2. It is generally accepted that a price squeeze involves a defendant who as a monopolist supplies the plaintiff at one level (e.g., wholesale), competes at another (e.g., retail), and seeks to destroy the plaintiff by holding up the wholesale price to the plaintiff while depressing the retail price to common customers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN4[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The filed rate doctrine bars antitrust suits based on rates that have been filed and approved by federal agencies and state agencies. Under the filed rate doctrine, a plaintiff may not sue the supplier of electricity based on rates that, though alleged to be the result of anticompetitive conduct, were filed with the federal agency responsible for overseeing such rates. The doctrine operates as a defense to both federal and state law actions based on the regulated rates. The form or details of the filed rate are not relevant to the application of the doctrine; the rate need only be filed with an agency responsible for overseeing such rates.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

There can be no doubt about the proposition that the federal antitrust laws are applicable to electrical utilities, and past precedent cautions that the courts should be reluctant to imply antitrust immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The United States Supreme Court has held that an implied exemption from the antitrust laws by regulatory legislation would be found only if the exemption is necessary in order to make the regulatory act work and even then only to the minimum extent necessary. Thus the filed rate doctrine may only apply as an exemption to the antitrust laws to the minimum extent necessary for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and the state Public Utility Commission to fulfill their functions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > General Overview

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The United States Supreme Court has found that electric utilities that are regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission are not immune from the antitrust laws, largely on the grounds that the regulation is not sufficiently "pervasive."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

A court's determination that a defendant is immune from the antitrust laws is an assertion of jurisdiction that is separate from the calculation of damages, at which point the court has already determined that it has jurisdiction. An award of damages in an antitrust suit based on a court's estimate of what a hypothetical rate would have been if there had been no anticompetitive behavior does not prevent the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission or the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission from performing its regulatory duties of approving or proscribing rates that a regulated entity may charge. Additionally, such a justification for the filed rate doctrine is offset by the specifics raised by a price squeeze claim where the alternative is to have no regulatory agency with the power to affect an anticompetitive rate differential. Nothing indicates that a court should not fill in the gap created in such a situation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Retail Rates

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Wholesale Rates

HN9[] Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices, Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

Wholesale electricity rates are controlled by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC); the retail rates are controlled by the state Public Utility Commission (PUC). Neither FERC nor the PUC has jurisdiction over the interaction between wholesale and retail rates; each agency has authority over only one end of the alleged price squeeze. Though FERC can take the possibility of a price squeeze into account when reviewing the reasonableness of a rate, it can do nothing to force a state commission to change the retail electricity rates. The same truth exists for the PUC. Plus, the federal and state regulatory systems do not work in perfect harmony, so it is possible for a utility to time or manipulate its rate filings in a way that causes a price squeeze. Even though FERC and the PUC might review rates for the possibility of a price squeeze, because simultaneous approval of retail and wholesale rates by the agencies is not required and rates can change with a later filing, it is very difficult for the agencies to predict a price squeeze.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > General Overview

HN10[] Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices, Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

There is no indication that district court antitrust review of rates, at least with regard to price squeeze allegations involving the interaction of state and federally approved rates, is repugnant to any regulatory scheme. Though the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission may lower wholesale rates and the the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission may raise retail rates to compensate for a price squeeze, neither entity has the power to adjust both rates at the same time. Nor does the court have the power to revise agency-approved rates. Applying antitrust review to the interaction between these two rates is not inconsistent with the federal and state regulatory regimes because the resulting interaction falls outside the regulatory scheme.

Counsel: [1] For BOROUGH OF LANSDALE, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF BLAKELY, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF CATAWISSA, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF DUNCANNON, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF HATFIELD, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF KUTZTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF LEHIGHTON, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF MIFFLINBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF OLYPHANT, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF QUAKERTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF SCHUYLKILL HAVEN, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF ST. CLAIR, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF WATSONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA, BOROUGH OF WEATHERLY, PENNSYLVANIA, Plaintiffs: C. J. MUSTACCHIO, LEAD ATTORNEY, SCRANTON, PA; CHARLES F. WHEATLEY, JR., JOHN F. WOODS, LEAD ATTORNEYS, WHEATLEY & RANQUIST P.A., ANNAPOLIS, MD; JONATHAN B. YOUNG, LEAD ATTORNEY, DISCHELL BARTLE YANOFF & DOOLEY, LANSDALE, PA.

For PP&L, INC., PPL CORPORATION, PPL ENERGY PLUS, L.L.C., PPL CORPORATION 1, PPL GERNERATION, Defendants: CHRISTOPHER D. OATWAY, EDWARD H. RIPPEY, JAMES R. ATWOOD, LEAD ATTORNEYS, COVINGTON & BURLING, WASHINGTON, DC; JOHN G. HARKINS, JR., STEVEN A. REED, LEAD ATTORNEYS, HARKINS CUNNINGHAM, PHILADELPHIA, PA; KARIN E. DAVIS, LEAD ATTORNEY, HARKINS CUNNINGHAM LLP, PHILA, PA; CHARLES F. WHEATLEY, JR., WHEATLEY & RANQUIST P.A., ANNAPOLIS, MD.

Judges: William [2] H. Yohn Jr., Judge.

Opinion by: William H. Yohn Jr.

Opinion

[*732]

MEMORANDUM and ORDER

YOHN, J.

The Boroughs of Lansdale, Blakely, Catawissa, Duncannon, Hatfield, Kutztown, Leighton, Mifflinburg, Olyphant, Quakertown, Schuylkill Haven, St. Clair, Watsontown, and Weatherly, Pennsylvania ("the Boroughs") bring this action against PP&L, Inc., PPL Electric Utilities Corp., PPL Energy Plus, L.L.C., and PPL Generation, L.L.C. (collectively, "PPL") alleging various antitrust violations and asserting a claim for breach of contracts approved by [*733] the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC"). (Compl. PP 14-19, 20-22.) Defendants asserted counterclaims for breach of contract as to all plaintiffs, (Countercl. PP 19-24), and tortious interference with existing and ongoing contractual relations as to Olyphant, (Countercl. PP 25-36). On March 30, 2006, I granted defendants summary judgment as to liability only on defendants' breach of contract counterclaims as to each plaintiff, except the Borough of Olyphant. See Borough of Lansdale v. PP&L, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14972 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 30, 2006). On April 5, 2006, I granted defendants summary judgment on many of plaintiffs' [3] claims. See Borough of Lansdale v. PP&L, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 2d 264 (E.D. Pa. 2006).

Now before me are the Boroughs' motions for reconsideration of both orders, defendants' responses, and the Boroughs' replies. The Boroughs contend that there were clear errors of law in the decisions and that reconsideration is necessary to prevent manifest injustice. For the reasons stated herein, the Boroughs' motions for reconsideration will be granted in part and denied in part.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

"The purpose of a motion for reconsideration is to correct manifest errors of law or fact or to present newly discovered evidence." Harsco Corp. v. Zlotnicki, 779 F.2d 906, 909 (3d Cir. 1985). HN1[] Reconsideration is proper where the moving party demonstrates one of three grounds: "(1) an intervening change in the controlling law; (2) the availability of new evidence that was not available when the court granted the motion for summary judgment; or (3) the need to correct a clear error of law or fact or to prevent manifest injustice." Max's Seafood Cafe ex rel. Lou-Ann, Inc. v. Quinteros, 176 F.3d 669, 677 (3d Cir. 1999) (citing N. River Ins. Co. v. CIGNA Reinsurance Co., 52 F.3d 1194, 1218 (3d Cir. 1995)); [4] see also Local Rule 7.1(g).

DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs argue pursuant to the third ground for reconsideration that this court overlooked certain law and facts and that these deficiencies resulted in manifest errors of law and fact. Plaintiffs ask this court to grant their motions for reconsideration and to vacate the March 31 and April 5, 2006 orders. [1]

I. March 31, 2006 Order - Summary Judgment on Defendants' Counterclaim

Plaintiffs argue that the court did not take into consideration evidence on record that indicated the existence of genuine issues of material fact regarding whether or not they breached the dispute resolution clause of the power supply contracts. (Pl. Mot. Reconsideration Mar. 31 Order 2.) However, they fail to demonstrate grounds under which the court may [5] properly grant reconsideration.

First, without arguing any intervening change in the controlling law, plaintiffs provide new evidence with their motion for reconsideration. Plaintiffs' evidence consists of a letter PPL produced in discovery, which was also the subject of deposition testimony. (Pl. Mem. Supp. Reconsideration Mar. 31 Order 7 n.4; Pl. Ex. 1.) Plaintiffs also present a fax sent by PPL to the Boroughs on October 17, 2002. (Pl. Ex. 2.) Though these exhibits [*734] were available to plaintiffs at the time the court granted summary judgment, the Boroughs did not provide these documents as part of the record. As such, these exhibits do not constitute "newly discovered evidence" and the court will not consider them. See Bailey v. United Airlines, 279 F.3d 194, 201 (3d Cir. 2002) HN2[] ("A district court may properly refuse to consider evidence presented in a motion for reconsideration when the evidence was available prior to summary judgment.").

---

[1] For the purposes of this opinion, the court will assume a familiarity with the facts underlying this case. See Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 269-74 (laying out the factual background behind the case).

Second, plaintiffs' contention that the prior order contains manifest errors of law or fact is unpersuasive. The remainder of plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration presents nothing convincing to controvert this court's grant of [6] summary judgment and merely seeks to rehash the same issues by citing different case law. The court already considered these arguments in the motion for summary judgment and will not revisit them again here. Accordingly, plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration of this court's order of March 30, 2006 will be denied.

II. April 5, 2006 Order - Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs' Claims

Plaintiffs request that this court reconsider its order of April 5, 2006, granting in part and denying in part defendants' motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims. See Borough of Lansdale v. PP&L, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 2d 264 (E.D. Pa. 2006).

A. Plaintiffs' Price Squeeze Claim under Sherman Act § 2

Plaintiffs alleged two claims under Sherman Act § 2 in their complaint: 1) that defendants "monopolized the sale of electric power in the wholesale power market available to the Boroughs . . . resulting in increases in the cost of power to the Boroughs," and 2) that defendants created a "price squeeze" by requiring plaintiffs "to pay wholesale prices for electric power substantially higher than the retail prices Defendants charge for comparable service to its commercial [7] and industrial customers, based on the charge demanded of Plaintiffs by Defendants." (Compl. PP 14, 15, 18.)

In the April 5, 2006 memorandum and order, I found that defendants were immune under the filed rate doctrine from antitrust liability on plaintiffs' Sherman Act § 2 claims. Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 283-89. I explained that plaintiffs' price squeeze claim was barred by the filed rate doctrine because both the wholesale rate and retail rates were filed with and approved by the federal and state government agencies. Id. at 283-84. Therefore, I found that a claim based on the interaction between the two rates was barred. Id. With regard to plaintiffs' second, more general monopolization claim, I also found that the claim was barred by the filed rate doctrine because PPL's alleged monopolistic behavior took place in the FERC and PJM-approved ICAP market. Id. at 284.

Plaintiffs contend that the court erred in finding that their price squeeze claim is barred by the filed rate doctrine. First, plaintiffs claim that the court erred in not recognizing that their price squeeze claim falls within an exception to the filed rate [8] doctrine for non-rate activities. Second, plaintiffs argue that the court was incorrect to rely on Utilimax.com, Inc. v. PPL Energy Plus, LLC, 273 F. Supp. 2d 573 (E.D. Pa. 2003), aff'd, 378 F.3d 303 (3d Cir. 2004), because the plaintiff in that case did not assert a price squeeze claim.

In response, defendants maintain that the court's April 5, 2006 ruling is consistent with applicable authority, and that "the filed rate doctrine precludes a court from entertaining damage claims that are predicated on challenges to the level of rates filed with and subject to the jurisdiction [*735] of federal and state regulatory agencies." (Def. Opp'n Reconsideration Apr. 5 Order 3 (citing Utilimax.com, 378 F.3d 303).) Defendants argue that because FERC and the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission ("PUC") may consider the interaction of the wholesale and retail rates in deciding upon a reasonable rate, the filed rate doctrine should apply to the price squeeze claim. (Def. Opp'n Reconsideration Apr. 5 Order 3.) Defendants also argue that plaintiffs' price squeeze claim falls within the heart of the filed rate doctrine because plaintiffs seek antitrust [9] damages in the form of a trebling of the alleged overcharges stemming from the FERC-approved rates, rather than profits on retail sales lost due to the alleged price squeeze. (Id. at 4.) Finally defendants claim that even if the filed rate doctrine does not apply, their "summary-judgment papers demonstrated a multitude of alternative grounds for dismissal of plaintiffs' § 2 claims." (Id. at 5.)

1. Application of the Filed Rate Doctrine to Price Squeeze Claims

HN3[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act sanctions those "who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Conduct that constitutes a "price squeeze" may violate the Sherman Act § 2. United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 437-38 (2d Cir. 1945). It is generally accepted that a "price squeeze involves a defendant who as a monopolist supplies the plaintiff at one level (e.g., wholesale), competes at another (e.g., retail), and seeks to destroy the plaintiff by holding up the wholesale price to the plaintiff [10] while depressing the retail price to common customers." Utilimax.com, 273 F. Supp. 2d at 582 (quoting Town of Norwood v. New England Power Co., 202 F.3d 408, 418 (1st Cir. 2000)).

HN4[] The filed rate doctrine "bars antitrust suits based on rates that have been filed and approved by federal agencies" and state agencies. Utilimax.com, 378 F.3d at 306 (citations omitted); see also Keogh v. Chicago & N. R. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 (1922). "Under the filed rate doctrine, a plaintiff may not sue the supplier of electricity based on rates that, though alleged to be the result of anticompetitive conduct, were filed with the federal agency responsible for overseeing such rates." Utilimax.com, 378 F.3d at 306 (citing Montana-Dakota Utils. Co. v. Northwestern Pub. Serv. Co., 341 U.S. 246, 251-52, 71 S. Ct. 692, 95 L. Ed. 912 (1951)). The doctrine operates as a defense to both federal and state law actions based on the regulated rates. See Ark. La. Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 578, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1981) (finding that under the filed rate doctrine, "courts lack authority to impose a different rate than the one approved by the Commission"). The [11] purpose of the filed rate doctrine is to preserve the regulatory agency's authority to determine the reasonableness of rates and to insure that the regulated entities charge only those rates that the agency has approved. Id. at 577-78. The form or details of the filed rate are not relevant to the application of the doctrine; the rate need only be filed with an agency responsible for overseeing such rates. See AT&T v. Central Office Tel., 524 U.S. 214, 222, 118 S. Ct. 1956, 141 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1998) (stating the doctrine applies even if it results in the application of the filed rate when a defendant intentionally misrepresented the promised rate).

Plaintiffs' price squeeze claim rests on the combined effect of two different tariffs: the retail rates PPL was required to [*736] charge provider of last resort ("POLR") customers and the wholesale rates offered to the Boroughs pursuant to the Power Supply Agreements. Plaintiffs allege that PPL purposely increased the price of wholesale electricity to the Boroughs in the last two years of the Power Supply Agreements, while the retail rates PPL charged its POLR customers were locked in under the Joint Petition. FERC approved the wholesale [12] rates charged by PPL when it approved the Power Supply Agreements between the Boroughs and PPL. Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 273. The PUC approved PPL's POLR retail rates. Id.

Plaintiffs argue that the filed rate doctrine does not bar their price squeeze claim because the claim is based on non-rate activity, which is unrelated to the rates filed with FERC and the PUC. See In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1159 (3d Cir. 1993) (stating that the filed rate doctrine "does not preclude liability based on non-rate anticompetitive activity"). Plaintiffs claim that because neither FERC nor the PUC has "jurisdiction over the interaction of the wholesale and retail rates as manipulated by the defendants, the interaction between the rates that creates the price squeeze cannot properly be said to be a rate-making activity." (Pl. Mem. Supp. Reconsideration Apr. 5 Order 6.)

However, as this court stated in its April 5, 2006 opinion, the non-rate anticompetitive activity exception does not apply to plaintiffs' price squeeze claim because the claim is based specifically on the interaction of the retail and wholesale rates. [2] [13] Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 288-89. As the Third Circuit explained in Utilimax.com, the

---

[2] Plaintiffs incorrectly claim that the court required them to calculate actual damages to avoid summary judgment. In the April 5 decision, this court reviewed plaintiffs' damage request as evidence as to whether their price squeeze claim was an example of non-rate anticompetitive activity exception applies when a defendant's activities are "wholly separate from rates," rather than activities that are closely tied to the rates themselves, such as a defendant positioning "itself in the wholesale capacity market to be able to charge exorbitant rates for capacity." 378 F.3d at 308. The interaction between the FERC-approved and PUC-approved rates is intrinsically tied to the rates themselves and thus cannot be said to be anticompetitive activity that is wholly separate from rate-based activity.

[14] Though the non-rate anticompetitive activity exception does not apply the Seventh and Eighth circuits, as described below, have developed a separate, limited exception to the filed rate doctrine in situations where no regulatory agency can afford full relief. These courts have found that price squeeze claims are not barred by the filed rate doctrine where the challenge falls "within a lacuna of state and federal regulation." IA Areeda, Hovenkamp, & Elhauge, Antitrust Law P 244e (2d ed. 2004). However, the First Circuit has rejected the exception created by the Seventh and Eight Circuits and has been reluctant to recognize price squeeze antitrust violations. The Third Circuit has yet to address whether an antitrust claim asserting that the interaction of two properly filed and approved rates resulted in an anticompetitive price squeeze is barred by the filed rate doctrine.

In City of Mishawaka v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Co. (Mishawaka I), 560 F.2d 1314 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 922, [*737] 98 S. Ct. 2274, 56 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1978), on facts involving a virtually identical dual rate structure creating a price squeeze between the wholesale and retail sale of electric power, [15] the Seventh Circuit concluded that antitrust immunity against the plaintiff's price squeeze claim was not necessary to the functioning of the regulatory process because the Federal Power Commission ("FPC"), the predecessor of FERC, did not control both ends of the alleged discriminatory conduct. Id. at 1321. Though the FPC controlled the wholesale rates, only the state energy commissions had jurisdiction over the retail rates. Id. The opinion never mentions the filed rate doctrine; however, the reasoning behind the Seventh Circuit's decision takes into account the considerations underlying the doctrine. The court found that if the plaintiff proved it was entitled to relief on the price squeeze claim, the FPC's "regulatory process would not be disturbed by the court's awarding damages for past anti-competitive conduct or by enjoining future anti-competitive conduct by [the] defendant in making and promoting its rate applications. Thus relief could be granted without the district court's actually becoming involved in the process of setting rates." Id.

In City of Kirkwood v. Union Electric Co., 671 F.2d 1173 (8th Cir. 1982), the Eighth Circuit [16] followed the Seventh Circuit's analysis in Mishawaka I and was the first to adopt a dual rate interaction exception to the filed rate doctrine for price squeeze claims. Id. at 1178-79. In Kirkwood, the plaintiff brought a price squeeze claim under Sherman Act § 2, asserting that the FERC-approved wholesale rate the plaintiff paid to the defendant exceeded the state-approved retail rate paid by the defendant's large retail customers. Id. at 1176. The court noted that "the Supreme Court has announced that 'since our decision in Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, [410 U.S. 366, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1973),] HN5[] there can be no doubt about the proposition that the federal antitrust laws are applicable to electrical utilities,'" Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1177, and recognized that "past precedent cautions that the courts should be reluctant to imply antitrust immunity," id. at 1178 (citing Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 596 n.35, 96 S. Ct. 3110, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141 (1976)). The Eighth Circuit held that the filed rate doctrine did not preclude the City of Kirkwood's price squeeze claim because > Kirkwood does not quarrel [17] with the reasonableness determinations of the FERC and PSC as to any individual wholesale or retail rate. Instead, Kirkwood complains of anti-competitive effects resulting from the interaction of rates which, taken separately, may be reasonable. As discussed above, neither the FERC nor the [state administrative agency] has plenary authority over the interaction of wholesale and retail rates, because each commission can affect only one category of those rates. Thus, neither an award of antitrust damages nor the granting of properly conditioned injunctive relief for the price squeeze would interfere with either commission's regulatory authority.

---

non-rate anticompetitive behavior and thus the filed rate doctrine applied. Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 288 n.18. Review of plaintiffs' alleged damages only reinforced the court's view that plaintiffs' price squeeze claim was rate-related. Id.

Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1179. Therefore, the Eighth Circuit concluded that the plaintiff's price squeeze claim was not barred "because the question is not whether the rates themselves are anti-competitive, but whether the defendant utility acted illegally in proposing a certain anti-competitive combination of rates." Id. [3]

[18] [*738] The First Circuit has taken the opposite approach to the Seventh and Eighth Circuits and has invoked the filed rate doctrine to bar a price squeeze claim against an electric utility. Norwood, 202 F.3d at 420. In Norwood, the local municipality's price squeeze claim rested on the combined effect of two different tariffs, both of which were approved by FERC. Id. at 418. The First Circuit found that the filed rate doctrine barred the price squeeze claim. Id. at 420. The court found the Town of Norwood's situation was distinguishable from Kirkwood and Mishawaka I because FERC actively regulated both of the tariffs in question, thus there was no concern that a regulatory agency could not afford full relief. Id. at 418. However the court said that the filed rate doctrine applied even though one of the tariffs filed with FERC was a market-based rate, reasoning that, "[i]t is the filing of the tariffs, and not any affirmative approval or scrutiny by the agency, that triggers the filed rate doctrine." Id. at 419. The court also held that the filed rate doctrine applied to both equitable relief [19] and damages claims because > any meaningful relief as to the price squeeze would require the alteration of tariffs--and not merely tariffs subject to regulation but tariffs actually scrutinized repeatedly by FERC in the companion-case proceedings. In part, the rationale for the filed rate doctrine is to protect the exclusive authority of the agency to accept or challenge such tariffs.

Id. at 420 (citing Ark. La. Gas Co., 453 U.S. at 577-78). Though the First Circuit found the law "extremely creaky," the court affirmed the district court's dismissal of the price squeeze claim under the filed rate doctrine. Norwood, 202 F.3d at 420.

Two district courts in this circuit, in cases with virtually identical facts to Kirkwood, came to opposite conclusions about the application of the filed rate doctrine to a price squeeze created by properly filed and approved state and federal electricity rates. In Ellwood City v. Pennsylvania Power Co., 462 F. Supp. 1343, 1348 (W.D. Pa. 1979), the Western District of Pennsylvania came to the same conclusion as the Eighth Circuit in Kirkwood; however, the court did [20] not explicitly base its decision on the filed rate doctrine. The court concluded that > [b]ecause, however, no regulatory agency has jurisdiction over the complete rate structure complained of by plaintiffs, it is improper to accord antitrust immunity to the rate related complaints raised here . . . . There is no mechanism which accords overall review of ratemaking and its potential anticompetitive effect. There is no indication that overall district court antitrust review of rates (at least with regard to price squeeze [*739] allegations) is in any way repugnant to any regulatory scheme.

Id. at 1350.

Four days later, the District Court of Delaware came to the opposite conclusion and applied the filed rate doctrine to bar a price squeeze claim. City of Newark v. Delmarva Power & Light Co., 467 F. Supp. 763, 771 (D. Del. 1979). In Newark, the plaintiffs raised the same argument as in Kirkwood, claiming that antitrust relief for their price squeeze claim must be available to fill the gap where "neither the FPC nor the [state energy commission] has full authority over the relationship between a utility's retail and wholesale rates. [21] " Id. at 768. In concluding that antitrust

---

[3] Plaintiffs also argue that the Second Circuit's decision in City of Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 662 F.2d 921 (2d Cir. 1981) supports their claim that the filed rate doctrine does not bar a price squeeze claim based on the interaction of FERC and state approved rates. However, there is no indication that the retail rates at issue in Groton were ever approved by a state energy commission. Id. Additionally, the Second Circuit did not base its decision on the absence of FERC's ability to relieve the price squeeze. Rather, the court found that the filed rate doctrine did not bar plaintiff's price squeeze claims because the filed rates were later disapproved by FERC, thus the rates at issue were not "filed and approved," as required by the doctrine. Id. at 931. The court also found the competitor exception to the filed rate doctrine applied because the litigants were competitors under the definition adopted by the Second Circuit. Id. at 929. As noted in the April 5, 2006 memorandum, under Third Circuit precedent, the competitor exception does not apply in the instant case. Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 286 n.15 (citing Utilimax.com, 378 F.3d at 308).

damages were not available to the plaintiffs, the court focused on whether such an award might undermine Congressional intent with respect to the work of the FPC and the work of the state regulatory agencies. Id. at 769. The court noted that this inquiry was distinguishable from Mishawaka I, where the court had focused on the unprovided-for gap in regulatory authority. Newark, 467 F. Supp. at 769. The Newark court determined that imposition of damages in a situation where the plaintiffs had alleged a price squeeze resulting from rates set by two regulatory agencies "would constitute no less of an interference with the [state] regulatory program . . . than it would in a suit where [the plaintiffs] had attacked only the state regulated rate." Id. Similarly, Congress could not have intended a federal court to impose liability on a public utility for charging wholesale rates authorized by the FPC because, "[a]t the heart of the [Federal Power Act] is the concept that no one has a right to pay or to receive any price other than a price fixed or accepted by the FPC." Id. at 770. [22] The court found that a wholesale customer in a price squeeze situation still has the remedy of intervening "when a rate is proposed" and the customer may "seek to have it become effective subject to a refund after the Commission has had the opportunity to pass upon the price squeeze allegations." Id. at 771. Accordingly, the court held "that an award of antitrust damages measured by the difference between the filed rate and whatever rate this Court might determine would have prevailed but for a defendant's anticompetitive conduct is foreclosed." [4] Id. However, the court found that other possible forms of damage relief may be available to plaintiffs. Id.

[23] Though the law on the filed rate doctrine has not been settled by Third Circuit, I am now persuaded that plaintiffs' price squeeze claim is not barred by the filed rate doctrine. Overall district court review of the interaction between FERC-approved and PUC-approved rates, at least with regard to allegations of price squeezes in violation of the antitrust laws, may not be repugnant to the regulatory scheme. HN6[] The Supreme Court has held that an implied exemption from the antitrust laws by regulatory legislation would be found only if the "exemption was necessary in order to make the regulatory Act work 'and even then only to the minimum extent necessary.'" Cantor, 428 U.S. at 597 (quoting Otter Tail, 410 U.S. at 389). Thus the filed rate doctrine may only apply as an exemption [*740] to the antitrust laws to the minimum extent necessary for FERC and the PUC to fulfill their functions.

HN7[] The Supreme Court has found that electric utilities that are regulated by FERC are not immune from the antitrust laws, largely on the grounds that the regulation was not sufficiently "pervasive." Otter Tail, 410 U.S. at 374. If regulation of the electricity industry [24] was not sufficiently pervasive when Otter Tail was decided in 1973, it has become even less so today, creating more opportunities for anticompetitive behavior to occur. Since 1978, Congress and FERC have taken numerous steps toward deregulating the electricity industry. See Public Utility Regulatory Policy Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-617, 92 Stat. 3117 (1978) (codified as amended at scattered sections of title 16 of the United States Code) (permitting new, non-regulated parties to enter the electric generation market); Energy Policy Act of 1992, Pub. L. No. 102-486, 106 Stat. 2776 (1992) (codified in scattered sections of 15 U.S.C. and 16 U.S.C.) (allowing FERC to force regulated electric utilities to grant other parties access to their transmission systems); FERC Order No. 888, 61 Fed. Reg. 21,540 (May 10, 1996) (codified at 18 C.F.R. pt. 35-385) (acting upon the Energy Policy Act's mandate to promote wholesale competition through open access non-discriminatory transmission services). Effective January 1, 1997, Pennsylvania adopted the Electric Generation Customer Choice and Competition Act, which effectively deregulated the business of generating electricity [25] in the state. See 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 2802 (declaring the policy behind the act). With the advent of deregulation in the electricity industry, the antitrust laws play a larger role in dealing with anticompetitive pressures that arise.

One justification for the filed rate doctrine is that to establish injury plaintiffs must prove that hypothetically lower wholesale rates or higher retail rates would have prevailed but for the anticompetitive behavior. Keogh, 260 U.S. at 163-64. The question of predicting administrative approval of public utility rates is a question best left to the agency itself, rather than the courts. Utilimax.com, 273 F. Supp. 2d at 580 (citing Keogh, 260 U.S. at 162-64.) A court's lack of institutional expertise in determining electricity rates may interject an element of speculation into a plaintiff's damage calculation, but it is difficult to see how this threatens FERC's authority. HN8[] A court's determination that a defendant is immune from the antitrust laws is an assertion of jurisdiction that is separate from the calculation of damages, at which point the court has already [26] determined that it has jurisdiction. See Steven E. Bunnell, The Use of Hypothetical Rates in Antitrust Damages Calculations: Reforming the Keogh Doctrine, 38 Stan. L. Rev. 1141, 1147-48 (1986). An award of damages in an antitrust suit based on a court's estimate of what a hypothetical rate would have been if there had been no anticompetitive behavior does not prevent FERC or the PUC from performing its regulatory duties of approving or proscribing rates that a regulated entity may charge. Additionally, such a justification for the filed rate doctrine is offset by the specifics raised by a price squeeze claim where the alternative is to have no regulatory agency with the power to affect an anticompetitive rate differential. Nothing indicates that a court should not fill in the gap created in such a situation.

[4] The court did find that injunctive relief could be granted in this case without interfering with the state and federal regulatory scheme because plaintiffs did not "seek injunctive relief against [the defendant]'s charging the filed rate, but rather against multifaceted anticompetitive activities of [the defendant] which are unrelated to its conduct at the time of sale." Newark, 467 F. Supp. at 768. However, as discussed in the April 5, 2006 opinion, the Boroughs' basis for injunctive relief is now moot and their only available relief is in the form of money damages. Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 285 n.14.

As described above, in Kirkwood, the Eighth Circuit stated that an exception to the filed rate doctrine is necessary where no regulatory mechanism accords overall review of rate making and its potential anticompetitive effects. HN9[] Wholesale electricity rates are controlled by FERC; the [*741] retail rates are controlled by the PUC. Neither FERC nor the PUC has jurisdiction [27] over the interaction between wholesale and retail rates; each agency has authority over only one end of the alleged price squeeze. Though FERC can take the possibility of a price squeeze into account when reviewing the reasonableness of a rate, it can do nothing to force a state commission to change the retail electricity rates. [5] [29] See FPC v. Conway, 426 U.S. 271, 96 S. Ct. 1999, 48 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1976); 18 C.F.R. § 2.17 (dealing with the anti-competitive effects of price squeezes). The same truth exists for the PUC. Plus, the federal and state regulatory systems do not work in perfect harmony, so it is possible for a utility to time or manipulate its rate filings in a way that causes a price squeeze. [6] Even though FERC and the [5] PPL argues that since FERC may consider an alleged price squeeze in the setting of wholesale rates, and the PUC is sensitive to maintaining competitive retail rates, the interaction between the two rates is monitored by the agencies. (Def. Opp'n Reconsideration Apr. 5 Order 3-4.) PPL bases part of its argument upon FPC v. Conway Corp., 426 U.S. 271, 96 S. Ct. 1999, 48 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1976). In Conway, the Supreme Court held that the FPC had a duty to consider price squeeze allegations when deciding whether a proposed wholesale rate was just, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory. Id. at 279. Though the FPC could not order an increase in the state-supervised retail rate when a price squeeze was found to exist, the FPC could afford relief by fixing the wholesale rate in "the lower range of the zone of reasonableness" and directing a refund of the charges previously collected subject to refund. Id. On March 21, 1977, FERC issued regulations to comply with the Conway decision. See 18 C.F.R. § 2.17 (dealing with the anti-competitive effects of price squeezes).

---

Conway does not bar a district court's review of a plaintiff's price squeeze claim. "[T]he mere fact that FERC may consider arguments based on antitrust concepts does not preclude later antitrust review," because "[t]here is no certainty that use of the limited powers of [] FERC can fully remedy an antitrust violation." Ellwood City, 462 F. Supp. at 1349-1350. "[T]he only remedy [] FERC can grant is to reduce the wholesale price . . . which, depending on where the retail price is set, may or may not be enough to eliminate a price squeeze." Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1178. FERC does not provide a mechanism equivalent to the antitrust laws "to safeguard a strong public interest in free and open competition." Ellwood City, 462 F. Supp. at 1349 (citing Gordon v. N. Y. Stock Exch., Inc., 422 U.S. 659, 692, 95 S. Ct. 2598, 45 L. Ed. 2d 463 (1975)). District court review is necessary to preserve the more extensive remedies a court can provide, including equitable relief and awarding damages. Id. at 1350.

With regard to state regulation of the rate interaction, though the PUC considers questions that arise regarding the effect of retail rates on competition, this does not prevent this court from also reviewing such claims. Therefore, this court cannot conclude that the PUC and FERC's ability to review the interaction between the retail and wholesale rates was an intended substitute for the antitrust laws in a situation involving the alleged monopolizing effect of a dual price structure.

[6] The facts in this case counsel against application of the filed rate doctrine. FERC approved the wholesale rate structure in the Settlement Agreement (which resulted in the five-year Power Supply Agreements) on May 29, 1998. Lansdale, 426 F. Supp. 2d at 273. The Joint Petition, which specified PPL's POLR retail rates, was approved by the PUC on August 27, 1998. Id. Thus, because the Settlement Agreement was approved before PPL's POLR retail rates were approved, FERC could not have considered the potential of a price squeeze with the rates that later became effective. Also, because the Settlement Agreement and Power Supply Agreements provided for wholesale rate changes from February 1, 2002 to January 31, 2004 and the Joint Petition provided a variable fixed retail rate range as of 2002, it would be impossible for the agencies to predict the movement of the energy markets and the possibility of a price squeeze situation arising.

PUC might review rates for the possibility of a price squeeze, because simultaneous approval of retail and wholesale rates by the agencies is not required and rates can change with a later filing, it is very difficult for the agencies to predict a price [*742] squeeze. This court's ruling is thus not inconsistent with the reasoning of the court in Norwood because, unlike the price squeeze claim asserted by plaintiffs in this case, the claim in Norwood [28] was based on the interaction of two rates, both of which were approved by FERC, thus the full mechanism of the price squeeze was under federal control. 202 F.3d at 418. Here only the wholesale rate is approved by FERC; the retail rate is controlled by the PUC. Therefore neither regulatory agency could afford full relief. [7]

[30] As such, the court believes that the concerns addressed by the filed rate doctrine, involving the possibility of incompatibility between the antitrust laws and a statutory scheme charging regulatory agencies with fixing reasonable rates, are not implicated here. Though there is no question that PPL is subject to regulation by both FERC and the PUC, because neither agency has "jurisdiction over the complete rate structure complained of by plaintiffs, it is improper to accord antitrust immunity" to the price squeeze claim raised here. Ellwood City, 462 F. Supp. at 1350. If the filed rate doctrine applied, there would be no mechanism to review overall ratemaking and its potential anticompetitive effects. HN10[] There is no indication that district court antitrust review of rates, at least with regard to price squeeze allegations involving the interaction of state and federally approved rates, is repugnant to any regulatory scheme. Though FERC may lower wholesale rates and the PUC may raise retail rates to compensate for a price squeeze, neither entity has the power to adjust both rates at the same time. Nor does the court have the power to revise agency-approved rates. However, [31] this court could award damages if the relationship between the wholesale and retail rates, rather than the unreasonableness of either the wholesale or the retail rates standing alone, was found to result in an antitrust violation. Applying antitrust review to the interaction between these two rates is not inconsistent with the federal and state regulatory regimes because the resulting interaction falls outside the regulatory scheme. For these reasons, the court now concludes that plaintiffs' price squeeze claim is not barred by the filed rate doctrine.

2. Alternative grounds for summary judgment

Although the court has determined that plaintiffs' price squeeze claim under the Sherman Act § 2 is not barred by the filed rate doctrine, defendants have asserted several alternative grounds for granting summary judgment against plaintiffs on that claim. (See Def. Opp'n Reconsideration Apr. 5 Order 5.) Because those alternative grounds were not briefed fully, the court will give the parties the opportunity to brief them at this juncture. The briefs may be by page reference to previous briefs filed in this action or, if necessary, by filing a new brief.

B. All Other Claims [32] in April 5, 2006 Opinion

Plaintiffs request that the court reconsider its decision with regard to their [*743] Sherman Act § 1, Clayton Act § 2, and breach of contract claims. However, the Boroughs' motion for reconsideration does not meet the standard required by our Court of Appeals. There has been no intervening change of controlling law since April 5, 2006. Also, no new evidence is available that could not easily have been previously provided to the court.

Plaintiffs' contention that the prior order contains manifest errors of law or fact is unpersuasive. Plaintiffs' Sherman Act § 1 claims are barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and, even if they were not, the evidence provided by plaintiffs does not show the existence of a contract to fix prices or allocate markets. Sales between PPL's two subsidiaries may not form the basis of a Clayton Act § 2 claim. With regard to the breach of contract claims, the [7] Though the court finds that plaintiffs' price squeeze claim is not barred by the filed rate doctrine, plaintiffs' second Sherman Act § 2 claim, that PPL monopolized the ICAP market, is still barred by the doctrine. The filed rate doctrine bars antitrust claims "based on rates that have been filed and approved by federal agencies," thus the monopolization of the ICAP market itself may not be the basis for a Sherman Act § 2 claim because FERC had power to oversee the rates. See Utilimax.com, 378 F.3d at 306. The problems that arise where a plaintiff asserts a price squeeze based on the interaction of a federally-approved wholesale rate and state-approved retail rate are not an issue where a single administrative agency is charged with oversight.

---

Boroughs, other than Catawissa, failed to provide evidence that created a genuine issue of material fact. Accordingly, the plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration of the remainder of this Court's order of April 5, 2006 will be denied.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, [33] the motions for reconsideration are granted in part and denied in part. An appropriate order follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this __ day of May, 2007, upon consideration of plaintiffs' Motion for Reconsideration of Summary Judgment in favor of Defendants on Defendants' Breach of Contract Counterclaim and Motion for Reconsideration of the Courts' Granting in Part and Denying in Part Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs' Claims, defendants' responses, and plaintiffs' replies, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration of summary judgment in favor of defendants on defendants' breach of contract counterclaim (Doc. No. 105) is DENIED.

2. Plaintiffs motion for reconsideration of the court's granting in part and denying in part summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims (Doc. No. 106) is GRANTED to the extent that the plaintiffs' price squeeze claim under the Sherman Act § 2 is not barred by the filed rate doctrine. The balance of the motion is denied.

3. Defendants shall file a brief within 20 days of the date hereof with reference to their alternative grounds for seeking summary judgment on plaintiffs' Sherman Act § 2 claims. Plaintiffs shall file [34] a response within 20 days thereafter. Both briefs may be submitted by page references to prior briefs only or, if necessary, they may be briefed in full.

s/ William H. Yohn Jr., Judge

Silicon Image, Inc. v. Analogix Semiconductor, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

May 16, 2007, Decided ; May 16, 2007, Filed

No. C-07-0635 JCS

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39599 *; 2007 WL 1455903

SILICON IMAGE, INC., Plaintiff, v. ANALOGIX SEMICONDUCTOR, INC., Defendant.

Subsequent History: Injunction denied by Silicon Image, Inc. v. Analogix Semiconductor, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96073 (N.D. Cal., Dec. 20, 2007)

Core Terms

software, allegations, preempted, Copyright Act, trade secret, customers, chips, false advertising, contractual relationship, tortious interference, unfair competition, intentional interference, license agreement, semiconductor, advertising, misappropriation, asserts, unfair, misleading, business practice, theory of liability, configuration, competitor, violations, notice, copyright infringement, misrepresentation, disseminate, threatens, designs

Counsel: [*1] For Silicon Image, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff: David Douglas Schumann, Jedediah Wakefield, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Fenwick & West LLP, San Francisco, CA.; J. David Hadden, Saina Sason Shamilov, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Fenwick & West LLP, Mountain View, CA.

For Analogix Semiconductor, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Defendant: Ryan James Padden, LEAD ATTORNEY, Luann Loraine Simmons, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: JOSEPH C. SPERO, United States Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: JOSEPH C. SPERO

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART ANALOGIX'S MOTION TO DISMISS SILICON IMAGE'S UNFAIR COMPETITION CLAIM AND DISMISSING UNFAIR COMPETITION CLAIM WITH LEAVE TO AMEND [Docket No. 9]

I. INTRODUCTION

On January 31, 2007, Plaintiff Silicon Image, Inc. ("Silicon Image") filed this action against Analogix Semiconductor ("Analogix"), asserting claims for copyright infringement, trade secret misappropriation and unfair competition. Analogix brings a Motion to Dismiss Silicon Image's Unfair Competition Claim ("the Motion"), which came on for hearing on Friday, May 11, 2007. For the reasons stated below, the Motion is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. Plaintiff's Unfair [*2] Competition Claim is dismissed with leave to amend.

II. BACKGROUND

A. The Complaint

Silicon Image is a "leading provider of semiconductor solutions for the secure storage, distribution and presentation of high-definition content in the consumer electronics and personal computing markets." Complaint at 2. Analogix also provides semiconductor solutions for HDTV products and is a competitor of Silicon Image. Id at 4. Silicon Image alleges that it enjoys a competitive advantage in the marketplace, in part, as a result of its semiconductor layout designs, which it has developed "[a]t great expense and effort" and which account for the "high performance" of Silicon Image's semiconductor chips. Id. at 3. These layout designs include "register maps that identify locations of registers within its chip designs." Id. The layout designs and register maps are trade secrets. Id. Silicon Image further alleges that "[a]long with its chips, Silicon Image has developed at substantial expense its configuration software that interoperates with its semiconductor chips." Id. This software is subject to copyright protection. Id. According to the Complaint, Analogix, [*3] without authorization, copied and used Silicon Image's register maps and configuration software in order to create semiconductor chips that mirror those that are made by Silicon Images. Id. Allegedly, Analogix markets these chips as "drop-in replaceable" with Silicon Image's chips, even though use of Analogix's chips with Silicon Image's configuration software violates the terms of Silicon Image's Software License Agreement. Id. According to Silicon Image, the Software License Agreement "specifies that Silicon Image's configuration software can only be used with Silicon Image chips and no other products." Id at 3. Silicon Image alleges that "[s]uch a restriction is common in the industry." Id. Silicon Image also alleges that it contacted Analogix and "placed it on notice of Silicon Image's intellectual property rights [but that] Analogix has continued its unlawful activities." Id. at 4.

Based on these allegations, Silicon Image asserts three claims: 1) Copyright Infringement in violation of the Copyright Act (17 §§ U.S.C. 101 et seq.); 2) Trade Secret Misappropriation in violation of California's Uniform Trade Secrets Act (California Civil Code §§ 3426 et seq.); [*4] and 3) Unfair Competition in violation of California's Business and Professions Code §§ 17200 et seq. ("the UCL Claim"). The UCL Claim incorporates by reference all of Silicon Image's factual allegations. Id. at 7. In addition, Silicon Image specifically alleges in the UCL Claim that:

> Analogix's actions described herein constitute an (sic) unlawful, unfair and fraudulent business acts and practices in violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq. The unlawful business acts include, without limitation, violations of the Copyright Act, including, but not limited to, inducing customers to infringe Silicon Image's intellectual property rights by encouraging use of Silicon Image configuration software with Analogix chips, and theft of trade secrets.

Id.

B. The Motion

In the Motion, Analogix asserts that Silicon Image's UCL Claim is preempted by the federal Copyright Act and the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act. In support of this position, Analogix points to the fact that Silicon Image expressly alleges in its UCL Claim that that claim is based on violations of the [*5] Copyright Act and theft of trade secrets.

In its Opposition brief, Silicon Image does not dispute that the UCL Claim is preempted to the extent it is based on alleged violation of the Copyright Act and theft of trade secrets. [1] Instead, it argues that its UCL Claim should not be dismissed because it is based on unlawful and unfair conduct that is independent from and extends beyond the alleged violation of the Copyright Act and theft of trade secrets. In particular, it asserts that its UCL Claim is based on Analogix's intentional interference with contractual relations and misleading advertising, both of which are unlawful business practices under the UCL. Silicon Image further asserts that Analogix's alleged conduct threatens competition, which is an unfair business practice under the UCL. Finally, Silicon Image asserts that it should be given the opportunity to amend the claim if the Court finds that it is defective.

---

[1] At oral argument, Silicon Image stipulated that the UCL Claim is preempted to the extent it is based on alleged violations of the Copyright Act and theft of trade secrets.

[*6] In its Reply brief, Analogix argues that Silicon Image has not adequately pleaded intentional interference with contractual relations or misleading advertising, and that even if it had, the UCL Claim would still be preempted because this alleged unlawful conduct is based on the same nucleus of facts as the Copyright violation and the trade secret theft. Analogix further asserts that Silicon Image does not sufficiently allege unfair business practices under the UCL because "Silicon Image has not tied [its] allegations to any alleged violation of an antitrust law or policy or any alleged Analogix conduct that 'threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law.'" Id. at 9.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Legal Standard Applicable to Rule 12(b)(6) Motions

A claim should not be dismissed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Parks Sch. of Bus., Inc. v. Symington, 51 F.3d 1480, 1484 (9th Cir. 1995). Dismissal can be based on the lack of cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient [*7] facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). On a motion to dismiss, the court accepts the facts alleged in the complaint as true. Id. Where a court dismisses for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), it "should grant leave to amend . . . unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Cook, Perkiss & Liehe v. N. Cal. Collection Serv., 911 F.2d 242, 247 (9th Cir.1990).

B. Sufficiency of Allegations

California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq., defines unfair competition as any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice." Silicon Image asserts that it has alleged violations of the UCL based on two unlawful business practices, namely, intentional interference with contractual relations and misleading advertising. In addition, Silicon Image asserts that it has alleged that Analogix has engaged in unfair business practices by threatening competition. Silicon Image argues that none of these three theories is adequately pleaded. The [*8] Court finds that while the allegations in the Complaint as a whole are sufficient to support all three of these theories of liability under the UCL, the UCL Claim is nonetheless deficient to the extent that it fails to articulate any of these theories.

1. UCL Claim Based on Intentional Interference With Contractual Relations

In a recent decision addressing the types of conduct that are prohibited under the UCL, the Ninth Circuit noted that "[t]he California Supreme Court has given the word 'unlawful' a straightforward and broad interpretation:

> The UCL covers a wide range of conduct. It embraces anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law. . . . Section 17200 "borrows" violations from other laws by making them independently actionable as unfair competitive practices."

CRST Van Expedited, Inc. v. Werner Enters., Inc., 479 F.3d 1099, 1107 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1143, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003)). Here, the alleged interference by Analogix with the Software License Agreement between Silicon Image and its customers is a business [*9] practice. See CRST, 479 F.3d at 1107 (holding that alleged interference by corporate competitor with plaintiff's employment contracts was a business practice). Moreover, "intentional interference with contract is a tortious violation of duties imposed by law." Id. Therefore, so long as the underlying claim for interference with contractual relations is adequately pleaded, so is the UCL Claim to the extent that it is based on the tortious interference claim.

While the elements of the UCL Claim derive from state substantive law, the degree of specificity required is governed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Taylor v. U.S., 821 F.2d 1428, 1432 (9th Cir. 1987). Under Rule 8(a), a plaintiff is required to provide only a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). The Supreme Court has admonished that "the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). Rather, the allegations are sufficient so long as [*10] they provide "fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Id. The UCL Claim fails to expressly allege that it is based on tortious interference with contract and therefore fails to meet the "fair notice" requirement under Rule 8(a). On the other hand, the factual allegations in the Complaint would be sufficient to support allegations of tortious interference, were they to be articulated in the UCL Claim, as discussed below.

To state a claim for intentional interference with contractual relations, a plaintiff must allege the following elements: (1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of the contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990). Analogix argues that Silicon Image's interference with contract claim is deficient because the Complaint fails to allege adequately the first three elements of such a claim. Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor [*11] of Silicon Image, as the Court is required to do at this stage of the proceeding the Court concludes that the allegations are sufficient to support a claim for intentional interference with contract.

First, Silicon Image has adequately alleged the existence of a contract between itself and a third party by alleging that its customers are required to enter into a Software License Agreement which provides that Silicon Image's configuration software can only be used with Silicon Image chips. While Silicon Image does not identify the customers by name, its allegations are sufficiently specific to place Analogix on notice of the contractual relationship at issue.

The decisions cited by Analogix do not support a contrary result because in those cases, the allegations regarding the existence of a contract with a third party were so vague that they failed indicate even the nature of the contract at issue, in contrast to the allegations here. See Accuimage Diagnostics Corp. v. Terarecon, Inc., 260 F. Supp. 2d 941 (N.D. Cal. 2003) (holding that allegation that "valid contracts" existed between the plaintiff and an unspecified third party were insufficient because the plaintiff [*12] failed to give the defendants notice of "some facts surrounding the type or nature of the contracts their conduct allegedly interfered with"); Brown v. Allstate Ins. Co., 17 F. Supp. 2d 1134 (S.D. Cal. 1998) (allegation regarding existence of valid contract with third party found insufficient where allegation was conclusory and contained no description of the nature of the existing relationship); Bradley v. Google, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94455, 2006 WL 3798134 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 22, 2006) (same). The Court also finds that Silicon Image's allegations are sufficient to allege knowledge of the Software License Agreement on the part of Analogix. In particular, Silicon Image alleges that Analogix is a competitor and that such licensing agreements are common in the industry. Based on these allegations, one could reasonably infer that Analogix knew that sale of its product to Silicon Image customers violated the Software License Agreement. In contrast, the allegations in Beverly v. Network Solutions, Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20453, 1998 WL 917526 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 30, 1998), on which Analogix relies, did not support a similar inference. In that case, the plaintiff asserted a claim for tortious interference [*13] with contract against Network Solutions, Inc. ("NSI"), the entity that registers top level internet domain names; alleging that by enforcing its dispute resolution policy against the plaintiff -- which resulted in a hold being placed on the plaintiff's domain name registration -- NSI interfered with the plaintiff's existing economic relationship with a "Mr. Ross." *1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20453, [WL] at 1, 3. The plaintiff did not allege that NSI knew or should have known of the plaintiff's economic relationship with Mr. Ross and there were no facts alleged that would have supported such an inference. To the contrary, the court noted that the domain name registration process was entirely automated and therefore, there would have been no reason NSI would have been aware of the Plaintiff's relationship with Mr. Ross. *1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20453, [WL] at 10.

Summit Mach. Tool, Mfg. Corp. v. Victor CNC Sys., Inc., 7 F.3d 1434, (9th Cir. 1993), another case cited by Analogix, is also inapposite. In that case, the court dismissed the plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with contractual relations following a bench trial during which the plaintiff admitted there was no evidence showing that the defendant knew about [*14] the contractual relationship with which it had allegedly interfered. 7 F.3d at 1436, 1442.

Finally, by alleging that Analogix markets its product as "drop-in replaceable" with Silicon Image's product, Silicon Image has adequately alleged that Analogix has engaged in intentional acts designed to induce a breach of contract. Family Home & Fin. Ctr., Inc. v. Fed. Home Loan Mortgage Corp., 461 F. Supp. 2d 1188, 1193 (C.D. Cal. 2006), cited by Analogix, has no bearing on this question because it was decided on summary judgment on the basis that there was no evidence that the defendant intended to induce a breach of contract.

Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiff's UCL Claim is deficient as to the tortious interference theory of liability only to the extent that the Claim fails to expressly allege that it is based on such a theory.

2. False or Misleading Advertising

California's false advertising law provides as follows:

> It is unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association, or any employee thereof with intent directly or indirectly to dispose of real or personal property or to perform services, professional or otherwise, [*15] or anything of any nature whatsoever or to induce the public to enter into any obligation relating thereto, to make or disseminate or cause to be made or disseminated before the public in this state, or to make or disseminate or cause to be made or disseminated from this state before the public in any state, in any newspaper or other publication, or any advertising device, or by public outcry or proclamation, or in any other manner or means whatever, including over the Internet, any statement, concerning that real or personal property or those services, professional or otherwise, or concerning any circumstance or matter of fact connected with the proposed performance or disposition thereof, which is untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading, or for any person, firm, or corporation to so make or disseminate or cause to be so made or disseminated any such statement as part of a plan or scheme with the intent not to sell that personal property or those services, professional or otherwise, so advertised at the price stated therein, or as so advertised.

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 [*16] . This provision has been "interpreted broadly to embrace not only advertising which is false, but also advertising which although true, is either actually misleading or which has a capacity, likelihood or tendency to deceive or confuse the public." Leoni v. State Bar, 39 Cal. 3d 609, 626, 217 Cal. Rptr. 423, 704 P.2d 183 (1985). Whether the public actually has been or will be misled for purposes of a claim under the false advertising law is a factual question that cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss. Cairns v. Franklin Mint Co., 24 F. Supp. 2d 1013, 1037 (C.D. Cal. 1998). It is established that a violation of the false advertising law is also a violation of the UCL. Comm. on Children's Television, Inc. v. Gen. Foods Corp., 35 Cal.3d 197, 210, 197 Cal. Rptr. 783, 673 P.2d 660 (1983).

Here again, Silicon Image's Complaint is deficient to the extent that the UCL Claim fails to provide Analogix "fair notice" that the UCL Claim is based on a false advertising theory. On the other hand, the allegations in the Complaint would be sufficient to support such a theory if it were expressly alleged in the UCL Claim. In particular, Silicon Image has alleged that Analogix has told customers of Silicon Image [*17] that they can replace their Silicon Image chips with those of Analogix. Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of Silicon Image, one could reasonably infer based on this allegation that the statements were likely to mislead the public to the extent they suggested that use of the Analogix chip with Silicon Image software was permissible under the Software License Agreement. Therefore, this theory of liability is adequately pleaded except insofar as Silicon Image has failed to identify the theory in its UCL Claim.

3. Unfair Business Practices

As noted above, the UCL defines unfair competition as any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. §§ 17200 et seq. In Cel-Tech Communications v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., the California Supreme Court clarified the test for determining what business practices fall under the "unfair prong" in the context of suits by competitors:

> to guide courts and the business community adequately and to promote consumer protection, we must require that any finding of unfairness to competitors under section 17200 be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened [*18] impact on competition. We thus adopt the following test: When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word 'unfair' in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

Here, Silicon Image asserts that Analogix's promotion of "drop-in replaceability" is unfair because, as alleged in the Complaint, its development of both its semiconductor layout designs and the configuration software used with its chips has involved "substantial expense." See Complaint at 3. Further, the layout designs are, allegedly, the source of Silicon Image's competitive advantage in the marketplace. Drawing all reasonable inferences in Silicon Image's favor, these allegations could support the inference that Analogix conduct, which creates a disincentive for semiconductor manufacturers to invest in the development of semiconductor chips and related [*19] software, threatens to harm competition. Silicon Image must, however, provide adequate notice in the UCL Claim itself that it is proceeding on such a theory.

While Analogix is correct that Silicon Image will be required to establish that Analogix's conduct harms competition as a whole and not just Silicon Image, Analogix has not cited any case that persuades the Court that dismissal of the claim is appropriate at the pleading stage. Indeed, neither of the cases on which Analogix relies were decided on the pleadings. See RLH Industries, Inc. v. SBC Communications, Inc., 133 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1286, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 469 (2005) (holding that there was no evidence of harm to competition and on that basis granting summary judgment); Watson Labs., Inc. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F. Supp. 2d 1099 (C.D. Cal. 2001) (holding that evidence of harm to competition was not sufficient to survive summary judgment). Accordingly, the Court concludes that Silicon Image's allegations of unfair business practices under the UCL are sufficient except to the extent that the UCL Claim does not identify this theory of liability.

C. Preemption

Analogix asserts that even if Silicon Image [*20] has adequately alleged tortious interference and false advertising, its UCL Claim is, nonetheless, preempted to the extent it is based on this alleged unlawful conduct, both by the Copyright Act and the California Uniform Trade Secret Act. [2] The Court concludes that although Silicon Image will be required to amend its Complaint to identify these theories of liability, the UCL Claim based on tortious interference and false advertising is not preempted.

---

[2] Analogix stipulated at oral argument that it does not challenge the "unfair" business practices 28 alleged by Silicon Image on the basis of preemption.

1. Preemption Under the Copyright Act

The Copyright Act preempts a state law cause of action when two requirements are met. First, the rights asserted under state law must be "'rights that are equivalent' to those protected by the Copyright Act." Kodadek v. MTV Networks, Inc., 152 F.3d 1209, 1212 (9th Cir. 1998) (quoting 1 Nimmer, § 1.01[B] at 1-11). [*21] "Second, the work involved must fall within the 'subject matter' of the Copyright Act as set forth in 17 U.S.C. §§ 102 and 103." Id. Here, the Court concludes that the first prong is not met either as to the intentional interference claim or the false advertising claim. Silicon Image's UCL Claim, to the extent it is based on these theories of liability, is not preempted by the Copyright Act.

The determination of whether state law rights are "equivalent" to those protected by the Copyright Act "involves determining whether the state law claim contains an element not shared by the federal law." Summit Mach. Tool Mfg. Corp. v. Victor CNC Sys., 7 F.3d 1434, 1440 (9th Cir. 1993). The Copyright Act provides copyright owners with the exclusive rights of reproduction, distribution, performance, display and preparation of derivative works. 17 U.S.C § 106. "If a state law claim includes an 'extra element' that makes the right asserted qualitatively different from those protected under the Copyright Act, the state law is not preempted by the Copyright Act." Altera Corp. v. Clear Logic, 424 F.3d 1079, 1089 (9th Cir. 2005) [*22] (internal citation omitted). Here, both the false advertising allegation and the tortious interference allegation include the required extra element necessary to avoid preemption by the Copyright Act.

a. False Advertising

The false advertising allegation requires that Silicon Image establish that Analogix has made representations that are false or misleading. A number of courts have held that claims that involve the element of misrepresentation or deception -- including false advertising -- are not equivalent to any exclusive right protected by the Copyright Act, and therefore are not preempted. See, e.g., Baekert Progressive Composites v. Wave Cyber Ltd., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25817, 2007 WL 1110736 (S.D. Cal. April 5, 2007) (holding that California state law claim for false advertising was not preempted by Copyright Act because claim included element of misrepresentation) (citing Valente-Kritzer Video v. Pinckney, 881 F.2d 772 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that fraud claim was not substantially equivalent to any right protected under Copyright Act because it required proof of misrepresentation)); Tracy v. Skate Key, Inc., 697 F. Supp. 748, 750-51 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) [*23] (holding that claim for trademark dilution was not preempted because it involved the "additional element" of misrepresentation or deception); Brignoli v. Balch, Hardy & Scheinman, Inc., 645 F. Supp. 1201, 1205 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (holding that fraud claim was not preempted by the Copyright Act because it contained the "extra element" of misrepresentation). The Court finds these cases persuasive and therefore concludes that the UCL Claim is not preempted to the extent it is based on false advertising.

The Court concludes that Motown Record Corp. v. George A. Hormel & Co., 657 F. Supp. 1236 (C.D. Cal. 1987), cited by Analogix, is distinguishable. In that case, the defendant was alleged to have produced and aired a television advertisement for its product, Dinty Moore Stew, in which a modified version of the Supremes song "Baby Love" was performed by three women who were made to look like the members of the Supremes. Id. at 1237. The plaintiff alleged that the advertisement constituted unfair competition in violation of California's UCL because the advertisement falsely implied that the image of the Supremes was used with the permission [*24] of the plaintiff, who owned the copyright to the song. Id. at 1239. The court held that the Copyright Act preempted the UCL claim because "the essence of the plaintiff's claim derived from defendants' unauthorized use of a copyrighted work." Id. at 1240. In contrast, the alleged misrepresentation here is independent of the alleged copyright violation: Silicon Image does not allege that Analogix has created the false impression that its reproduction of the Silicon Image software is authorized -- which would amount to copyright infringement claim -- but rather, that Silicon Image customers may use the Silicon Image software in combination with the Analogix chip without violating the Silicon Image Software License Agreement. Because of this additional element that is not present in Motown Records, the holding in that case does not apply here.

b. Intentional Interference with Contractual Relations

The Court concludes that the tortious interference allegation is based on rights not protected by the Copyright Act and therefore, that the claim is qualitatively different from a copyright infringement claim. In reaching this conclusion, the Court [*25] finds persuasive the reasoning in Altera Corp. v. Clear Logic, 424 F.3d 1079, 1089 (9th Cir. 2005).

In Altera, plaintiff Altera and defendant Clear Logic were competitors in the semiconductor industry. Id. at 1081. Altera manufactured chips called "programmable logic devices" ("PLDs"), which customers tailored to their specific needs using a software program that was also developed and sold by Altera. Id. Clear Logic manufactured a different kind of chip called an Application-Specific Integrated Circuit ("ASIC"). ASIC chips usually use less power than PLDs and are often cheaper than PLD's. Id. Traditionally, customers who wanted to replace PLDs with ASICs had to go through a lengthy and difficult process to develop an ASIC that worked. Id. at 1082. However, Clear Logic developed a technique that was much faster and more dependable to create ASIC chips to replace Altera PLDs: Clear Logic would have Altera customers send it the "bitstream" file that was generated during the programming of the PLD. Id. Using that bitstream, Clear Logic could create a compatible ASIC chip in just a few weeks. Id.

Altera asserted that [*26] Clear Logic, in having Altera customers send it the bitstreams, was intentionally interfering with Altera's contractual relations with its customers because the software license agreement which all Altera's customers must accept prohibits use of the Altera software for any purpose other than development of PLDs by Altera. Id. at 1082. Clear Logic, on the other hand, argued that this claim was preempted by the Copyright Act because the alleged conduct really amounted to reproduction of Altera's software in violation of the copyright infringement. Id. at 1090. The Ninth Circuit held that the claim was not preempted, explaining its conclusion as follows:

> Altera's customers use software to create a bitstream (which is essentially information) and provide that information to Clear Logic, despite the terms of the agreement that restrict the customers to using that information for programming Altera products. The right at issue is not the reproduction of the software as Clear Logic argues, but is more appropriately characterized as the use of the bitstream.

Id. at 1089.

Here, as in Altera, the right at issue is not the [*27] reproduction of Silicon Image's semiconductor chip -- a right that is protected under the Copyright Act -- but rather, the use of Silicon Image's software in a manner that is in violation of the Software License Agreement. The latter provides the "extra element" necessary to avoid preemption.

Accordingly, to the extent the UCL claim is based on tortious interference with contract, the claim is not preempted by the Copyright Act.

2. Preemption Under the UTSA

California's Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("UTSA") explicitly states that it does not preempt claims which derive from "(1) contractual remedies, whether or not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret, (2) other civil remedies that are not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret, or (3) criminal remedies, whether or not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret." Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7(b). Courts have held that where a claim is based on the "identical nucleus" of facts as a trade secrets misappropriation claim, it is preempted by UTSA. See Digital Envoy, Inc. v. Google, Inc., 370 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1033 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (holding that unfair competition claim was preempted [*28] by UTSA because it was based on same nucleus of facts as trade secret misappropriation claim); cf. *Postx Corp. v. Secure Data In Motion, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24260, 2004 WL 266 3518 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 20, 2004) at * 3* (holding that unfair competition claim was not preempted by UTSA where the claim was based on "an alternative theory of liability as well as new facts").

Here, both the false advertising and tortious interference allegations are based on new facts that go beyond the alleged misappropriation of trade secrets, namely facts relating to the Software License Agreement. Further, neither the false advertising claim nor the tortious interference claim is based on the theory that the wrong for which redress is sought is the misappropriation of trade secrets. In contrast, in Ernest Paper Products, Inc. v. Mobil Chemical Co., Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21781, 1997 WL 33483520 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 2, 1997), on which Analogix relies, a claim for intentional interference with contractual relations was found to be preempted by UTSA because the wrongful conduct on which the tortious interference claim was based was the alleged misappropriation by the defendant of the plaintiff's confidential customer lists. The [*29] Court also rejects Analogix's reliance on Samsung Electronics America, Inc. v. Bilbruck, 2006 WL 301287 (Cal. Super. Ct. Oct. 19, 2006). In that case, the court held that a claim for intentional interference with contract was preempted by UTSA because the claim was based on misappropriation of trade secrets but the court did not describe the facts on which either claim was based.

The Court concludes that the UCL Claim is not preempted by the UTSA.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Motion is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. In particular, the Unfair Competition Claim is deficient to the extent it fails to identify any specific theories in the Claim other than copyright infringement and trade secret theft, both of which are preempted. On the other hand, the factual allegations in the Complaint are sufficient to support the theories of liability on the UCL Claim identified by Plaintiff in its Opposition brief. Further, to the extent that the UCL Claim is based on those theories, it is not preempted. Plaintiff shall be given leave to amend the Complaint, within ten (10) days of the date of this Order, to expressly allege in the UCL Claim [*30] the theories identified in its Opposition brief.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: May 16, 2007

JOSEPH C. SPERO

United States Magistrate Judge

End of Document

Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly

Supreme Court of the United States

November 27, 2006, Argued ; May 21, 2007, Decided

No. 05-1126

Reporter

550 U.S. 544 *; 127 S. Ct. 1955 ; 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 ; 2007 U.S. LEXIS 5901 *; 75 U.S.L.W. 4337; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,709; 68 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 661; 20 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 267; 41 Comm. Reg. (P & F) 567

BELL ATLANTIC CORPORATION, et al., Petitioners v.WILLIAM TWOMBLY, et al.

Prior History: [1] ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Twombly v. Bell Atl. Corp., 425 F.3d 99, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 21390 (2d Cir., 2005)

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

conspiracy, discovery, allegations, antitrust, set of facts, pleadings, markets, district court, federal rule, Sherman Act, territory, network, cases, local telephone, Telecommunications, compete, resist, factual allegations, motion to dismiss, civil procedure, antitrust case, competitors, entitle, decisions, appears, survive, summary judgment stage, alleged conspiracy, internet service, legal conclusion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN1[] Sherman Act, Scope

Liability under § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act requires a contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Scope

15 U.S.C.S. § 1 prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN3[] Sherman Act, Scope

Because § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act does not prohibit all unreasonable restraints of trade, but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy, the crucial question is whether challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express. While a showing of parallel business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement, it falls short of conclusively establishing agreement or itself constituting a Sherman Act offense. Even conscious parallelism, a common reaction of firms in a concentrated market that recognize their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions is not in itself unlawful. The inadequacy of showing parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN4[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires only a short and plain statement of a claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, in order to give a defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

While a complaint attacked by a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6[] Sherman Act, Scope

Stating a claim under § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement. And, of course, a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of those facts is improbable, and that a recovery is very remote and unlikely. In identifying facts that are suggestive enough to render a § 1 conspiracy plausible, courts have the benefit of the prior rulings and considered views of leading commentators that lawful parallel conduct fails to bespeak unlawful agreement. It makes sense to say, therefore, that an allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN7[] Sherman Act, Scope

The need at the pleading stage for allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement in violation of § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act reflects the threshold requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) that a plain statement possess enough heft to show that the pleader is entitled to relief. A statement of parallel conduct, even conduct consciously undertaken, needs some setting suggesting the agreement necessary to make out a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act; without that further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory. An allegation of parallel conduct is thus much like a naked assertion of conspiracy in a § 1 complaint: it gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN8[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When the allegations in a complaint, however true, could not raise a claim of entitlement to relief, this basic deficiency should be exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN9[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed.

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN10[] Evidence, Burdens of Proof

Once a claim has been stated adequately, it may be supported by showing any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN11[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When a complaint adequately states a claim, it may not be dismissed based on a district court's assessment that the plaintiff will fail to find evidentiary support for his allegations or prove his claim to the satisfaction of the factfinder.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Decision

[*929] Telephone and Internet service subscribers held to have failed to state claim against local exchange carriers for alleged parallel billing and contracting designed to discourage competition in asserted violation of § 1 of Sherman Act (15 U.S.C.S. § 1).

Summary

Procedural posture: Respondent subscribers to local telephone and Internet services brought an action against petitioner local exchange carriers, alleging that the carriers engaged in parallel conduct to preclude competition in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Upon the grant of a writ of certiorari, the carriers appealed the judgment of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit which held that the subscribers sufficiently stated a claim.

Overview: The subscribers asserted that the carriers were former local monopolies which engaged in parallel billing and contracting misconduct designed to discourage new competitors from entering their markets through sharing of the carriers' networks. The subscribers also alleged that the carriers agreed not to compete outside their own markets. The U.S. Supreme Court held that the subscribers' allegations that the carriers engaged in certain parallel conduct unfavorable to competition, absent some factual context suggesting agreement, were insufficient to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. To state such a violation, allegations of parallel conduct were required to be placed in a factual context which raised a plausible suggestion of a preceding agreement rather than identical independent action. Further, the subscribers' complaint did not indicate that the carriers' resistance to competitors was anything more than the natural, unilateral reaction of each carrier which was intent on keeping its regional dominance. Also, the alleged [930] anti-competitive conduct of the carriers itself indicated that a carrier's attempt to compete in another carrier's market would not be profitable.

Outcome: The judgment finding that the subscribers' complaint stated a claim was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings.

Headnotes

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 5 > SHERMAN ACT LIABILITY > Headnote:
LEdHN[1][] [1]

Liability under § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act requires a contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 5 > SHERMAN ACT PROHIBITIONS > Headnote:
LEdHN[2][] [2]

15 U.S.C.S. § 1 prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 14 RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 15 > SHERMAN ACT -- TRADE RESTRAINTS PROHIBITED -- PARALLEL BUSINESS BEHAVIOR > Headnote:
LEdHN[3][] [3]

Because § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act does not prohibit all unreasonable restraints of trade, but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy, the crucial question is whether challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express. While a showing of parallel business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement, it falls short of conclusively establishing agreement or itself constituting a Sherman Act offense. Even conscious parallelism, a common reaction of firms in a concentrated market that recognize their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions is not in itself unlawful. The inadequacy of showing parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

PLEADING § 130 > PLEADING -- PLAIN STATEMENT > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires only a short and plain statement of a claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, in order to give a defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

[*931]

PLEADING § 103 > COMPLAINT -- MOTION TO DISMISS > Headnote:
LEdHN[5][] [5]

While a complaint attacked by a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES § 63 > SHERMAN ACT -- STATING ANTITRUST CLAIM -- ILLEGAL AGREEMENT -- PARALLEL CONDUCT > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

Stating a claim under § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement. And, of course, a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of those facts is improbable, and that a recovery is very remote and unlikely. In identifying facts that are suggestive enough to render a § 1 conspiracy plausible, courts have the benefit of the prior rulings and considered views of leading commentators that lawful parallel conduct fails to bespeak unlawful agreement. It makes sense to say, therefore, that an allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

PLEADING § 176 > PLEADING -- ANTITRUST ALLEGATIONS -- ENTITLEMENT TO RELIEF > Headnote:
LEdHN[7][] [7]

The need at the pleading stage for allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement in violation of § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act reflects the threshold requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) that a plain statement possess enough heft to show that the pleader is entitled to relief. A statement of parallel conduct, even conduct consciously undertaken, needs some setting suggesting the agreement necessary to make out a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act; without that further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory. An allegation of parallel conduct is thus much like a naked assertion of conspiracy in a § 1 complaint: it gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

[*932]

PLEADING § 106 > FAILURE TO RAISE CLAIM > Headnote:
LEdHN[8][] [8]

When the allegations in a complaint, however true, could not raise a claim of entitlement to relief, this basic deficiency should be exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

PLEADING § 103 > PLEADING -- SPECIFICITY > Headnote:
LEdHN[9][] [9]

A district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

PLEADING § 130 > PLEADING -- CONSISTENT FACTS > Headnote:
LEdHN[10][] [10]

Once a claim has been stated adequately, it may be supported by showing any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

[*933]

PLEADING § 103 > DISMISSAL OF COMPLAINT > Headnote:
LEdHN[11][] [11]

When a complaint adequately states a claim, it may not be dismissed based on a district court's assessment that the plaintiff will fail to find evidentiary support for his allegations or prove his claim to the satisfaction of the factfinder. (Souter, J., joined by Roberts, Ch. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ.)

Syllabus

The 1984 divestiture of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company's (AT&T) local telephone business left a system of regional service monopolies, sometimes called Incumbent Local Exchange Carriers (ILECs), and a separate long-distance market from which the ILECs were excluded. The Telecommunications Act of 1996 withdrew approval of the ILECs' monopolies, "fundamentally restructur[ing] local telephone markets" and "subject[ing] [ILECs] to a host of duties intended to facilitate market entry." AT&T Corp. v. Iowa Utilities Bd., 525 U.S. 366, 371, 119 S. Ct. 721, 142 L. Ed. 2d 834. It also authorized them to enter the long-distance market. [*2] "Central to the [new] scheme [was each ILEC's] obligation . . . to share its network with" competitive local exchange carriers (CLECs). Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 402, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823.

Respondents (hereinafter plaintiffs) represent a class of subscribers of local telephone and/or high speed Internet services in this action against petitioner ILECs for claimed violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." The complaint alleges that the ILECs conspired to restrain trade (1) by engaging in parallel conduct in their respective service areas to inhibit the growth of upstart CLECs; and (2) by agreeing to refrain from competing against one another, as indicated by their common failure to pursue attractive business opportunities in contiguous markets and by a statement by one ILEC's chief executive officer that competing in another ILEC's territory did not seem right. The District Court dismissed the complaint, concluding that parallel business conduct [*3] allegations, taken alone, do not state a claim under § 1; plaintiffs must allege additional facts tending to exclude independent self-interested conduct as an explanation for the parallel actions. Reversing, the Second Circuit held that plaintiffs' parallel conduct allegations were sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss because the ILECs failed to show that there is no set of facts that would permit plaintiffs to demonstrate that the particular parallelism asserted was the product of collusion rather than coincidence.

Held:

1. Stating a § 1 claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. An allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Pp. 6-17

(a) Because § 1 prohibits "only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy," Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 775, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, "[t]he crucial question" is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct "stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement," Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. [934] Ed. 273.

While [*4] a showing of parallel "business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which" agreement may be inferred, it falls short of "conclusively establish[ing] agreement or . . . itself constitut[ing] a Sherman Act offense." Id., at 540-541, 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273. The inadequacy of showing parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the behavior's ambiguity: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market. Thus, this Court has hedged against false inferences from identical behavior at a number of points in the trial sequence, e.g., at the summary judgment stage, see Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538.

(b) This case presents the antecedent question of what a plaintiff must plead in order to state a § 1 claim. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires only "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests," Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80. [*5] While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, ibid., a plaintiff's obligation to provide the "grounds" of his "entitle[ment] to relief" requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of a cause of action's elements will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all of the complaint's allegations are true. Applying these general standards to a § 1 claim, stating a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter to suggest an agreement. Asking for plausible grounds does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement. The need at the pleading stage for allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement reflects Rule 8(a)(2)'s threshold requirement that the "plain statement" possess enough heft to "sho[w] that the pleader is entitled to relief." A parallel conduct allegation gets the § 1 complaint close to stating a claim, but without further factual enhancement [*6] it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility. The requirement of allegations suggesting an agreement serves the practical purpose of preventing a plaintiff with "'a largely groundless claim'" from "'tak[ing] up the time of a number of other people, with the right to do so representing an in terrorem increment of the settlement value.'" Dura Pharms., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577. It is one thing to be cautious before dismissing an antitrust complaint in advance of discovery, but quite another to forget that proceeding to antitrust discovery can be expensive. That potential expense is obvious here, where plaintiffs represent a putative class of at least 90 percent of subscribers to local telephone or high-speed Internet service in an action against America's largest telecommunications firms for unspecified instances of antitrust violations that allegedly occurred over a 7-year period. It is no answer to say that a claim just shy of plausible [935] entitlement can be weeded out early in the discovery process, given the common lament that the success of judicial supervision in checking discovery abuse has been modest. Plaintiffs' main [*7] argument against the plausibility standard at the pleading stage is its ostensible conflict with a literal reading of Conley's statement construing Rule 8: "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." 355 U.S., at 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80. The "no set of facts" language has been questioned, criticized, and explained away long enough by courts and commentators, and is best forgotten as an incomplete, negative gloss on an accepted pleading standard: once a claim has been stated adequately, it may be supported by showing any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint. Conley described the breadth of opportunity to prove what an adequate complaint claims, not the minimum standard of adequate pleading to govern a complaint's survival.

2. Under the plausibility standard, plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy in restraint of trade comes up short. First, the complaint leaves no doubt that plaintiffs rest their § 1 claim on descriptions of parallel conduct, not on any independent allegation of actual agreement [*8] among the ILECs. The nub of the complaint is the ILECs' parallel behavior, and its sufficiency turns on the suggestions raised by this conduct when viewed in light of common economic experience. Nothing in the complaint invests either the action or inaction alleged with a plausible conspiracy suggestion. As to the ILECs' supposed agreement to disobey the 1996 Act and thwart the CLECs' attempts to compete, the District Court correctly found that nothing in the complaint intimates that resisting the upstarts was anything more than the natural, unilateral reaction of each ILEC intent on preserving its regional dominance. The complaint's general collusion premise fails to answer the point that there was no need for joint encouragement to resist the 1996 Act, since each ILEC had reason to try to avoid dealing with CLECs and would have tried to keep them out, regardless of the other ILECs' actions. Plaintiffs' second conspiracy theory rests on the competitive reticence among the ILECs themselves in the wake of the 1996 Act to enter into their competitors' territories, leaving the relevant market highly compartmentalized geographically, with minimal competition. This parallel conduct did [*9] not suggest conspiracy, not if history teaches anything. Monopoly was the norm in telecommunications, not the exception. Because the ILECs were born in that world, doubtless liked it, and surely knew the adage about him who lives by the sword, a natural explanation for the noncompetition is that the former Government-sanctioned monopolists were sitting tight, expecting their neighbors to do the same. Antitrust conspiracy was not suggested by the facts adduced under either theory of the complaint, which thus fails to state a valid § 1 claim. This analysis does not run counter to Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N. A., 534 U.S. 506, 508, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1, which held that "a complaint in an employment discrimination lawsuit [need] not contain specific facts establishing a prima facie case of discrimination." Here, the Court is not requiring heightened fact [936] pleading of specifics, but only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Because the plaintiffs here have not nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, their complaint must be dismissed.

425 F.3d 99, reversed and remanded.

Counsel: Michael Kellogg argued the cause for petitioners.

Thomas O. Barnett argued the cause for the United States, as amicus curiae, by special leave of court.

J. Douglas Richards argued the cause for respondents.

Judges: Souter, J., delivered the opinion [*10] of the Court, in which Roberts, C. J., and Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Breyer, and Alito, JJ., joined. Stevens, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which Ginsburg, J., joined, except as to Part IV, post, p. 570.

Opinion by: SOUTER

Opinion

[*548] [1961] Justice Souter delivered the opinion of the Court.

HN1[] LEdHN[1][] [1] Liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, requires a "contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." The question in this putative class action is whether a § 1 complaint can survive a motion to dismiss when it alleges that major telecommunications providers engaged in certain parallel conduct unfavorable to [*549] competition, absent some factual context suggesting agreement, as distinct from identical, independent action. We hold that such a complaint should be dismissed.

I

The upshot of the 1984 divestiture of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company's (AT&T) local telephone business was a system of regional service monopolies (variously called "Regional Bell Operating Companies," "Baby Bells," or "Incumbent Local Exchange Carriers" (ILECs)), and a separate, competitive market for long-distance service from which the ILECs were excluded. More than a decade [*11] later, Congress withdrew approval of the ILECs' monopolies by enacting the Telecommunications Act of 1996 (1996 Act), 110 Stat. 56, which "fundamentally restructure[d] local telephone markets" and "subject[ed] [ILECs] to a host of duties intended to facilitate market entry." AT&T Corp. v. Iowa Utilities Bd., 525 U.S. 366, 371, 119 S. Ct. 721, 142 L. Ed. 2d 834 (1999). In recompense, the 1996 Act set conditions for authorizing ILECs to enter the long-distance market. See 47 U.S.C. § 271.

"Central to the [new] scheme [was each ILEC's] obligation . . . to share its network with competitors," Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 402, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004), which came to be known as "competitive local exchange carriers" (CLECs), Pet. for Cert. 6, n 1. A CLEC could make use of an ILEC's network in any of three ways: by (1) "purchas[ing] local telephone services at wholesale rates for resale to end users," (2) "leas[ing] elements of the [ILEC's] network 'on an unbundled basis,'" or (3) "interconnect[ing] its own facilities with the [ILEC's] network." Iowa Utilities Bd., supra, at 371, 119 S. Ct. 721, 142 L. Ed. 2d 834 (quoting 47 U.S.C. § 251(c) [*12]). Owing to the "considerable expense and effort" required to make unbundled network elements available to rivals at wholesale prices, Trinko, supra, at 410, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823, the ILECs vigorously litigated the scope of the sharing obligation imposed by the 1996 Act, with the result that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) [937] three times [*550] revised [1962] its regulations to narrow the range of network elements to be shared with the CLECs. See Covad Communs. Co. v. FCC, 450 F.3d 528, 533-534 (CADC 2006) (summarizing the 10-year-long regulatory struggle between the ILECs and CLECs).

Respondents William Twombly and Lawrence Marcus (hereinafter plaintiffs) represent a putative class consisting of all "subscribers of local telephone and/or high speed internet services . . . from February 8, 1996 to present." Amended Complaint in No. 02 CIV. 10220 (GEL) (SDNY) P 53, App. 28 (hereinafter Complaint). In this action against petitioners, a group of ILECs,[1] plaintiffs seek treble damages and declaratory and injunctive relief for claimed violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, HN2[] LEdHN[2][] [2]15 U.S.C. § 1, which prohibits "[e]very contract, [*13] combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations."

The complaint alleges that the ILECs conspired to restrain trade in two ways, each supposedly inflating charges for local telephone and high-speed Internet services. Plaintiffs say, first, that the ILECs "engaged in parallel conduct" in their respective service areas to inhibit the growth [*14] of upstart CLECs. Complaint P 47, App. 23-26. Their actions allegedly included making unfair agreements with the CLECs for access to ILEC networks, providing inferior connections to the networks, overcharging, and billing in ways designed to sabotage the CLECs' relations with their own customers. Ibid. According to the complaint, the ILECs' [*551] "compelling common motivatio[n]" to thwart the CLECs' competitive efforts naturally led them to form a conspiracy; "[h]ad any one [ILEC] not sought to prevent CLECs . . . from competing effectively . . ., the resulting greater competitive inroads into that [ILEC's] territory would have revealed the degree to which competitive entry by CLECs would have been successful in the other territories in the absence of such conduct." Id., P 50, App. 26-27.

Second, the complaint charges agreements by the ILECs to refrain from competing against one another. These are to be inferred from the ILECs' common failure "meaningfully [to] pursu[e]" "attractive business opportunit[ies]" in contiguous markets where they possessed "substantial competitive advantages," id., PP 40-41, App. 21-22, and from a statement of Richard Notebaert, chief executive officer [*15] (CEO) of the ILEC Qwest, that competing in the territory of another ILEC "'might be a good way to turn a quick dollar but that doesn't make it right,'" id., P 42, App. 22.

The complaint couches its ultimate allegations this way:

> "In the absence of any meaningful competition between the [ILECs] in one another's markets, and in light of the parallel course of conduct that each engaged in to prevent competition from CLECs within [938] their respective local telephone and/or high speed internet services markets and the other facts and market circumstances alleged above, Plaintiffs allege upon information [1963] and belief that [the ILECs] have entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry in their respective local

[1] The 1984 divestiture of AT&T's local telephone service created seven Regional Bell Operating Companies. Through a series of mergers and acquisitions, those seven companies were consolidated into the four ILECs named in this suit: BellSouth Corporation, Qwest Communications International, Inc., SBC Communications, Inc., and Verizon Communications, Inc. (successor-in-interest to Bell Atlantic Corporation). Complaint P 21, App. 16. Together, these ILECs allegedly control 90 percent or more of the market for local telephone service in the 48 contiguous States. Id., P 48, App. 26.

telephone and/or high speed internet services markets and have agreed not to compete with one another and otherwise allocated customers and markets to one another." Id., P 51, App. 27.[2]

[*552] [*16] The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The District Court acknowledged that "plaintiffs may allege a conspiracy by citing instances of parallel business behavior that suggest an agreement," but emphasized that "while '[c]ircumstantial evidence of consciously parallel behavior may have made heavy inroads into the traditional judicial attitude toward conspiracy[, . . .] "conscious parallelism" has not yet read conspiracy out of the Sherman Act entirely.'" 313 F. Supp. 2d 174, 179 (2003) (quoting Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 541, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954); alterations in original). Thus, the District Court understood that allegations of parallel business conduct, taken alone, do not state a claim under § 1; plaintiffs must allege additional facts that "ten[d] to exclude independent self-interested conduct as an explanation for defendants' parallel behavior." 313 F. Supp. 2d, at 179. The District Court found plaintiffs' allegations of parallel ILEC actions to discourage competition inadequate [*17] because "the behavior of each ILEC in resisting the incursion of CLECs is fully explained by the ILEC's own interests in defending its individual territory." Id., at 183. As to the ILECs' supposed agreement against competing with each other, the District Court found that the complaint does not "alleg[e] facts . . . suggesting that refraining from competing in other territories as CLECs was contrary to [the ILECs'] apparent economic interests, and consequently [does] not rais[e] an inference that [the ILECs'] actions were the result of a conspiracy." Id., at 188.

[*553] The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed, holding that the District Court tested the complaint by the wrong standard. It held that "plus factors are not required to be pleaded to permit an antitrust claim based on parallel conduct to survive dismissal." 425 F.3d 99, 114 (2005) (emphasis in original). Although the Court of Appeals took the view that plaintiffs must plead facts that "include conspiracy among the realm of 'plausible' possibilities in order to survive a motion to dismiss," it then said that "to rule that allegations of parallel anticompetitive conduct [*18] fail to support a plausible conspiracy claim, a court would have to conclude that there is no set of facts that would permit a [939] plaintiff to demonstrate that the particular parallelism asserted was the product of collusion rather than coincidence." Ibid.

We granted certiorari to address the proper standard for pleading an antitrust conspiracy through allegations of parallel conduct, 548 U.S. 903, 126 S. Ct. 2965, 165 L. Ed. 2d 949 (2006), and now reverse.

[1964] II

A

HN3[] LEdHN[3][] [3] Because § 1 of the Sherman Act "does not prohibit [all] unreasonable restraints of trade . . . but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy," Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 775, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984), "[t]he crucial question" is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct "stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express," Theatre Enterprises, 346 U.S., at 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273. While a showing of parallel "business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement," it falls short of "conclusively establish[ing] agreement or . . . itself constitut[ing] a Sherman Act offense." Id., at 540-541, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273. Even "conscious [*19] parallelism," a common reaction of "firms in a concentrated market [that] recogniz[e]

---

[2] In setting forth the grounds for § 1 relief, the complaint repeats these allegations in substantially similar language:

"Beginning at least as early as February 6, 1996, and continuing to the present, the exact dates being unknown to Plaintiffs, Defendants and their co-conspirators engaged in a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry in their respective local telephone and/or high speed internet services markets by, among other things, agreeing not to compete with one another and to stifle attempts by others to compete with them and otherwise allocating customers and markets to one another in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." Id., P 64, App. 30-31.

their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions" [*554] is "not in itself unlawful." Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993); see 6 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1433a, p 236 (2d ed. 2003) (hereinafter Areeda & Hovenkamp) ("The courts are nearly unanimous in saying that mere interdependent parallelism does not establish the contract, combination, or conspiracy required by Sherman Act § 1"); Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655, 672 (1962) ("[M]ere interdependence of basic price decisions is not conspiracy").

The inadequacy of showing parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market. See, e.g., AEI-Brookings Joint Center for Regulatory Studies, Epstein, Motions to Dismiss [*20] Antitrust Cases: Separating Fact from Fantasy, Related Publication 06-08, pp 3-4 (2006) (discussing problem of "false positives" in § 1 suits). Accordingly, we have previously hedged against false inferences from identical behavior at a number of points in the trial sequence. An antitrust conspiracy plaintiff with evidence showing nothing beyond parallel conduct is not entitled to a directed verdict, see Theatre Enterprises, supra; proof of a § 1 conspiracy must include evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action, see Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984); and at the summary judgment stage a § 1 plaintiff's offer of conspiracy evidence must tend to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently, see Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). [940]

B

This case presents the antecedent question of what a plaintiff must plead in order to state a claim under § 1 of the [*555] Sherman Act. HN4[] LEdHN[4][] [4]Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires only "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in [*21] order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests," Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). HN5[] LEdHN[5][] [5] While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, ibid.; Sanjuan v. American Bd. of Psychiatry and Neurology, Inc., 40 F.3d 247, 251 (CA7 1994), a plaintiff's obligation to provide the [1965] "grounds" of his "entitle[ment] to relief" requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do, see Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986) (on a motion to dismiss, courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation"). Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, see 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1216, pp 235-236 (3d ed. 2004) (hereinafter Wright & Miller) ("[T]he pleading must contain something more . . . than . . . a statement of facts that merely creates a suspicion [of] a legally cognizable right of action"),[3] on the assumption that all the allegations [*22] in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact), see, e.g., Swierkiewicz v. [*556] Sorema N. A., 534 U.S. 506, 508, n. 1, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002); Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 327, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1989) ("Rule 12(b)(6) does not countenance . . . dismissals based on a judge's disbelief of a complaint's factual allegations"); Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974) (a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it appears "that a recovery is very remote and unlikely").

---

[3] The dissent greatly oversimplifies matters by suggesting that the Federal Rules somehow dispensed with the pleading of facts altogether. See post, at 580, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 955 (opinion of Stevens, J.) (pleading standard of Federal Rules "does not require, or even invite, the pleading of facts"). While, for most types of cases, the Federal Rules eliminated the cumbersome requirement that a claimant "set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim," Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957) (emphasis added), Rule 8(a)(2) still requires a "showing," rather than a blanket assertion, of entitlement to relief. Without some factual allegation in the complaint, it is hard to see how a claimant could satisfy the requirement of providing not only "fair notice" of the nature of the claim, but also "grounds" on which the claim rests. See 5 Wright & Miller § 1202, at 94, 95 (Rule 8(a) "contemplate[s] the statement of circumstances, occurrences, and events in support of the claim presented" and does not authorize a pleader's "bare averment that he wants relief and is entitled to it").

[23] In applying these general standards to a § 1 claim, we hold that HN6[] LEdHN[6][] [6] stating such a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement.[4] And, of course, a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof [941] of those facts is improbable, and "that a recovery is very remote and unlikely." Ibid. In identifying facts that are suggestive enough to render a § 1 conspiracy plausible, we have the benefit [1966] of the prior rulings and considered views of leading commentators, already quoted, that lawful parallel conduct fails to bespeak unlawful agreement. It makes sense to say, therefore, that an allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without [*557] more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when [*24] allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.

LEdHN[7][] [7] [*25] HN7[] The need at the pleading stage for allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement reflects the threshold requirement of Rule 8(a)(2) that the "plain statement" possess enough heft to "sho[w] that the pleader is entitled to relief." A statement of parallel conduct, even conduct consciously undertaken, needs some setting suggesting the agreement necessary to make out a § 1 claim; without that further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory. An allegation of parallel conduct is thus much like a naked assertion of conspiracy in a § 1 complaint: it gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of "entitle[ment] to relief." Cf. DM Research, Inc. v. College of Am. Pathologists, 170 F.3d 53, 56 (CA1 1999) ("[T]erms like 'conspiracy,' or even 'agreement,' are border-line: they might well be sufficient in conjunction with a more specific allegation--for example, identifying a written agreement or even a basis for inferring a tacit agreement, . . . but a court [*26] is not required to accept such terms as a sufficient basis for a complaint").[5]

We alluded to the practical significance of the Rule 8 entitlement requirement in Dura Pharms., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (2005), when we explained that something beyond the mere possibility of loss causation must be [*558] alleged, lest a plaintiff with "'a largely groundless claim'" be allowed to "'take up the time of a number of other people, with the right to do so representing an in terrorem increment of the settlement value.'" Id., at 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, [942] 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (quoting Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 741, 95 S. Ct. 1917, 44 L. Ed. 2d 539 (1975)). So, HN8[] LEdHN[8][] [8] when the allegations in a complaint, however true, could not raise a claim of entitlement to relief, "'this basic deficiency [*27] should . . . be exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court.'" 5 Wright & Miller § 1216, at 233-234 (quoting Daves v. Hawaiian Dredging Co., 114 F. Supp. 643, 645 (Haw. 1953)); see also Dura, supra, at 346, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577; Asahi Glass Co. v. Pentech Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 289 F. Supp. 2d 986, 995 (ND Ill. 2003) (Posner, J., sitting by designation) ("[S]ome threshold of plausibility must be crossed at the outset before a patent antitrust case should be permitted to go into its inevitably costly and protracted discovery phase").

---

[4] Commentators have offered several examples of parallel conduct allegations that would state a § 1 claim under this standard. See, e.g., 6 Areeda & Hovenkamp P 1425, at 167-185 (discussing "parallel behavior that would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties"); Blechman, Conscious Parallelism, Signalling and Facilitating Devices: The Problem of Tacit Collusion Under the Antitrust Laws, 24 N. Y. L. S. L. Rev. 881, 899 (1979) (describing "conduct [that] indicates the sort of restricted freedom of action and sense of obligation that one generally associates with agreement"). The parties in this case agree that "complex and historically unprecedented changes in pricing structure made at the very same time by multiple competitors, and made for no other discernible reason," would support a plausible inference of conspiracy. Brief for Respondents 37; see also Reply Brief for Petitioners 12.

[5] The border in DM Research was the line between the conclusory and the factual. Here it lies between the factually neutral and the factually suggestive. Each must be crossed to enter the realm of plausible liability.

Thus, it is one thing to be cautious before dismissing an antitrust complaint in advance of discovery, cf. [1967] Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962), but quite another to forget that proceeding to antitrust discovery can be expensive. As we indicated over 20 years ago in Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 528, n. 17, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), HN9[] LEdHN[9][] [9]"a district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy [*28] to proceed." See also Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (CA7 1984) ("[T]he costs of modern federal antitrust litigation and the increasing caseload of the federal courts counsel against sending the parties into discovery when there is no reasonable likelihood that the plaintiffs can construct a claim from the events related in the complaint"); Note, Modeling the Effect of One-Way Fee Shifting on Discovery Abuse in Private Antitrust Litigation, 78 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1887, 1898-1899 (2003) (discussing the unusually high cost of discovery in antitrust cases); Manual for Complex Litigation, [*559] Fourth, § 30, p. 519 (2004) (describing extensive scope of discovery in antitrust cases); Memorandum from Paul V. Niemeyer, Chair, Advisory Committee on Civil Rules, to Hon. Anthony J. Scirica, Chair, Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure (May 11, 1999), 192 F.R.D. 354, 357 (2000) (reporting that discovery accounts for as much as 90 percent of litigation costs when discovery is actively employed). That potential expense is obvious enough in the present case: plaintiffs represent a putative class of at least 90 percent of all [*29] subscribers to local telephone or high-speed Internet service in the continental United States, in an action against America's largest telecommunications firms (with many thousands of employees generating reams and gigabytes of business records) for unspecified (if any) instances of antitrust violations that allegedly occurred over a period of seven years.

It is no answer to say that a claim just shy of a plausible entitlement to relief can, if groundless, be weeded out early in the discovery process through "careful case management," post, at 573, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 951, given the common lament that the success of judicial supervision in checking discovery abuse has been on the modest side. See, e.g., Easterbrook, Discovery as Abuse, 69 B. U. L. Rev. 635, 638 (1989) ("Judges can do little about impositional discovery when parties control the legal claims [943] to be presented and conduct the discovery themselves"). And it is self-evident that the problem of discovery abuse cannot be solved by "careful scrutiny of evidence at the summary judgment stage," much less "lucid instructions to juries," post, at 573, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 951; the threat of discovery expense will push cost-conscious defendants to settle even [*30] anemic cases before reaching those proceedings. Probably, then, it is only by taking care to require allegations that reach the level suggesting conspiracy that we can hope to avoid the potentially enormous expense of discovery in cases with no "'reasonably founded hope that the [discovery] process will reveal relevant evidence'" to support a § 1 claim. *Dura, [560] 544 U.S., at 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (quoting Blue Chip Stamps, supra, at 741, 95 S. Ct. 1917, 44 L. Ed. 2d 539; alteration in Dura).[6]

---

[6] The dissent takes heart in the reassurances of plaintiffs' counsel that discovery would be ""phased"" and "limited to the existence of the alleged conspiracy and class certification." Post, at 593, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 963. But determining whether some illegal agreement may have taken place between unspecified persons at different ILECs (each a multibillion dollar corporation with legions of management level employees) at some point over seven years is a sprawling, costly, and hugely time-consuming undertaking not easily susceptible to the kind of line-drawing and case management that the dissent envisions. Perhaps the best answer to the dissent's optimism that antitrust discovery is open to effective judicial control is a more extensive quotation of the authority just cited, a judge with a background in antitrust law. Given the system that we have, the hope of effective judicial supervision is slim: "The timing is all wrong. The plaintiff files a sketchy complaint (the Rules of Civil Procedure discourage fulsome documents), and discovery is launched. A judicial officer does not know the details of the case the parties will present and in theory cannot know the details. Discovery is used to find the details. The judicial officer always knows less than the parties, and the parties themselves may not know very well where they are going or what they expect to find. A magistrate supervising discovery does not--cannot--know the expected productivity of a given request, because the nature of the requester's claim and the contents of the files (or head) of the adverse party are unknown. Judicial officers cannot measure the costs and benefits to the requester and so cannot isolate impositional requests. Requesters have no reason to disclose their own estimates because they gain from imposing costs on rivals (and may lose from an improvement in accuracy). The portions of the Rules of Civil Procedure calling on judges to trim back excessive demands, therefore, have been, and are doomed to be,

[31] [1968] Plaintiffs do not, of course, dispute the requirement of plausibility and the need for something more than merely parallel behavior explained in Theatre Enterprises, Monsanto, and Matsushita, and their main argument against the plausibility standard at the pleading stage is its ostensible [*561] conflict with an early statement of ours construing Rule 8. Justice Black's opinion for the Court in Conley v. Gibson spoke not only of the need for fair notice of the grounds for entitlement to relief but of "the accepted rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." 355 U.S., at 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80. This "no set of facts" language can be read in isolation as saying that any statement revealing the theory of the claim will suffice unless its factual impossibility may be shown from the face of the pleadings; and the Court of Appeals appears to have read Conley in some such way when formulating its understanding of the proper pleading standard, see 425 F.3d at 106, 114 (invoking Conley's "no set [*32] of [944] facts" language in describing the standard for dismissal).[7]

[33] On such a focused and literal reading of Conley's "no set of facts," a wholly conclusory statement of claim would survive a motion to dismiss whenever the pleadings left open the possibility that a plaintiff might later establish some "set of [undisclosed] facts" to support recovery. So here, the Court of Appeals specifically found the prospect of unearthing direct evidence of conspiracy sufficient to preclude dismissal, even though the complaint [1969] does not set forth a single [*562] fact in a context that suggests an agreement. 425 F.3d, at 106, 114. It seems fair to say that this approach to pleading would dispense with any showing of a "'reasonably founded hope'" that a plaintiff would be able to make a case, see Dura, 544 U.S., at 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (quoting Blue Chip Stamps, 421 U.S., at 741, 95 S. Ct. 1917, 44 L. Ed. 2d 539); Mr. Micawber's optimism would be enough.

Seeing this, a good many judges and commentators have balked at taking the literal terms of the Conley passage as a pleading standard. See, e.g., Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106 ("Conley has never been interpreted literally" and, "[i]n practice, a complaint . . . must contain either direct or [*34] inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory" (internal quotation marks omitted; emphasis and omission in original); Ascon Properties, Inc. v. Mobil Oil Co., 866 F.2d 1149, 1155 (CA9 1989) (tension between Conley's "no set of facts" language and its acknowledgment that a plaintiff must provide the "grounds" on which his claim rests); O'Brien v. Di Grazia, 544 F.2d 543, 546, n. 3 (CA1 1976) ("[W]hen a plaintiff . . . supplies facts to support his claim, we do not think that Conley imposes a duty on the courts to conjure up unpleaded facts that might turn a frivolous claim of unconstitutional . . . action into a substantial one"); McGregor v. Industrial Excess Landfill, Inc., 856 F.2d 39, 42-43 (CA6 1988) (quoting O'Brien's analysis); Hazard, From Whom No Secrets Are Hid, 76 Texas L. Rev. 1665, 1685 (1998) (describing Conley as having "turned Rule 8 on its head"); Marcus, The Revival of Fact Pleading Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 86 Colum. L. Rev. 433, 463-465 (1986) (noting tension between [*35] Conley and subsequent understandings of Rule 8).

We could go on, but there is no need to pile up further citations to show that Conley's "no set of facts" language has been questioned, criticized, and explained away long enough. To be fair to the Conley Court, the passage should be understood in light of the opinion's preceding summary of the complaint's [*563] concrete allegations, which the Court quite reasonably understood as amply stating a claim for [945] relief. But the passage so often quoted hollow. We cannot prevent what we cannot detect; we cannot detect what we cannot define; we cannot define 'abusive' discovery except in theory, because in practice we lack essential information." Easterbrook, Discovery as Abuse, 69 B. U. L. Rev. 635, 638-639 (1989) (footnote omitted).

---

[7] The Court of Appeals also relied on Chief Judge Clark's suggestion in Nagler v. Admiral Corp., 248 F.2d 319 (CA2 1957), that facts indicating parallel conduct alone suffice to state a claim under § 1. 425 F.3d at 114 (citing Nagler, supra, at 325). But Nagler gave no explanation for citing Theatre Enterprises (which upheld a denial of a directed verdict for plaintiff on the ground that proof of parallelism was not proof of conspiracy) as authority that pleading parallel conduct sufficed to plead a Sherman Act conspiracy. Now that Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), and Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), have made it clear that neither parallel conduct nor conscious parallelism, taken alone, raise the necessary implication of conspiracy, it is time for a fresh look at adequacy of pleading when a claim rests on parallel action.

fails to mention this understanding on the part of the Court, and after puzzling the profession for 50 years, this famous observation has earned its retirement. The phrase is best forgotten as an incomplete, negative gloss on an accepted pleading standard: HN10[] LEdHN[10][] [10]once a claim has been stated adequately, it may be supported by showing any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint. See Sanjuan, 40 F.3d at 251 (once a claim for relief has been stated, a plaintiff "receives the benefit of imagination, so long as the hypotheses are consistent with the complaint"); accord, Swierkiewicz, 534 U.S., at 514, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1; National Organization for Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 114 S. Ct. 798, 127 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1994); [*36] H. J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 249-250, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1989); Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984). Conley, then, described the breadth of opportunity to prove what an adequate complaint claims, not the minimum standard of adequate pleading to govern a complaint's survival.[8]

[*946]

[37] [1970] [*564] III

When we look for plausibility in this complaint, we agree with the District Court that plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy in restraint of trade comes up short. To begin with, the complaint leaves no doubt that plaintiffs rest their § 1 claim on descriptions of parallel conduct and not on any independent allegation of actual agreement among the ILECs. Supra, at 550-551, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 937-938. Although in form a few stray statements speak directly of agreement,[9] on fair reading these are merely legal conclusions resting on the prior allegations. Thus, the complaint [*565] first takes account of the alleged "absence of any meaningful competition between [the ILECs] in one another's markets," "the parallel course of conduct that each [ILEC] engaged in to prevent competition from

---

[8] Because Conley's "'no set of facts'" language was one of our earliest statements about pleading under the Federal Rules, it is no surprise that it has since been "cited as authority" by this Court and others. Post, at 577, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 953. Although we have not previously explained the circumstances and rejected the literal reading of the passage embraced by the Court of Appeals, our analysis comports with this Court's statements in the years since Conley. See Dura Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v Broudo, 544 U.S., at 336, 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (2005) (requiring "'reasonably founded hope that the [discovery] process will reveal relevant evidence'" to support the claim (alteration in Dura) (quoting Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 741, 95 S. Ct. 1917, 44 L. Ed. 2d 539 (1975); alteration in Dura)); Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) ("It is not . . . proper to assume that [the plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged"); Wilson v. Schnettler, 365 U.S. 381, 383, 81 S. Ct. 632, 5 L. Ed. 2d 620 (1961) ("In the absence of . . . an allegation [that the arrest was made without probable cause] the courts below could not, nor can we, assume that respondents arrested petitioner without probable cause to believe that he had committed . . . a narcotics offense"). Nor are we reaching out to decide this issue in a case where the matter was not raised by the parties, see post, at 579, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 955, since both the ILECs and the Government highlight the problems stemming from a literal interpretation of Conley's "no set of facts" language and seek clarification of the standard. Brief for Petitioners 27-28; Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 22-25; see also Brief for Respondents 17 (describing "[p]etitioners and their amici" as mounting an "attack on Conley's 'no set of facts' standard")

The dissent finds relevance in Court of Appeals precedents from the 1940s, which allegedly gave rise to Conley's "no set of facts" language. See post, at 580-583, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 955-957. Even indulging this line of analysis, these cases do not challenge the understanding that, before proceeding to discovery, a complaint must allege facts suggestive of illegal conduct. See, e.g., Leimer v. State Mut. Life Assurance Co. of Worcester, Mass., 108 F.2d 302, 305 (CA8 1940) ("'[I]f, in view of what is alleged, it can reasonably be conceived that the plaintiffs . . . could, upon a trial, establish a case which would entitle them to . . . relief, the motion to dismiss should not have been granted'"); Continental Collieries, Inc. v. Shober, 130 F.2d 631, 635 (CA3 1942) ("No matter how likely it may seem that the pleader will be unable to prove his case, he is entitled, upon averring a claim, to an opportunity to try to prove it"). Rather, these cases stand for the unobjectionable proposition that, HN11[] LEdHN[11][] [11] when a complaint adequately states a claim, it may not be dismissed based on a district court's assessment that the plaintiff will fail to find evidentiary support for his allegations or prove his claim to the satisfaction of the factfinder. Cf. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974) (a district court weighing a motion to dismiss asks "not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims").

[9] See Complaint PP 51, 64, App. 27, 30-31 (alleging that ILECs engaged in a "contract, combination or conspiracy" and agreed not to compete with one another).

CLECs," "and the other facts and market circumstances alleged [earlier]"; "in light of" these, the complaint concludes "that [the ILECs] have entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry into their . . . markets and have agreed not to compete with one another." Complaint P 51, App. 27.[10] [*39] The nub of the [1971] complaint, then, is the ILECs' parallel behavior, consisting of steps to keep the CLECs out [*38] and manifest disinterest in becoming CLECs themselves, and its sufficiency turns on the suggestions raised by this conduct when viewed in light of common economic experience.[11]

[*566] We think that nothing contained in the complaint invests either the action or inaction alleged with a plausible suggestion of conspiracy. As to the ILECs' supposed agreement to disobey the 1996 Act and thwart the CLECs' attempts to compete, we agree with the District Court that nothing in the complaint intimates that the resistance to the upstarts was anything more than the natural, unilateral reaction of each ILEC intent on keeping its regional dominance. The 1996 Act did more than just subject the ILECs to competition; it obliged them to subsidize their competitors with their own equipment at [947] wholesale rates. The economic incentive to resist was powerful, but resisting competition is routine market conduct, and even if the ILECs flouted the 1996 [*40] Act in all the ways the plaintiffs allege, see id., P 47, App. 23-24, there is no reason to infer that the companies had agreed among themselves to do what was only natural anyway; so natural, in fact, that if alleging parallel decisions to resist competition were enough to imply an antitrust conspiracy, pleading a § 1 violation against almost any group of competing businesses would be a sure thing.

The complaint makes its closest pass at a predicate for conspiracy with the claim that collusion was necessary because success by even one CLEC in an ILEC's territory "would have revealed the degree to which competitive entry by CLECs would have been successful in the other territories." Id., P 50, App. 26-27. But, its logic aside, this general premise still fails to answer the point that there was just no need for joint encouragement to resist the 1996 Act; as the District Court said, "each ILEC has reason to want to avoid dealing with CLECs" and "each ILEC would attempt to keep CLECs out, regardless of the actions of the other ILECs." 313 F. Supp. 2d, at 184; cf. Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Foundation, 890 F. Supp. 250, 256 (SDNY 1995) (while the [*41] plaintiff "may believe the defendants conspired . . ., the defendants' allegedly conspiratorial actions [*567] could equally have been prompted by lawful, independent goals which do not constitute a conspiracy").[12]

[1972] Plaintiffs' second conspiracy theory rests on the competitive reticence among the ILECs themselves in the wake of the 1996 Act, which was [*42] supposedly passed in the "'hop[e] that the large incumbent local

---

[10] If the complaint had not explained that the claim of agreement rested on the parallel conduct described, we doubt that the complaint's references to an agreement among the ILECs would have given the notice required by Rule 8. Apart from identifying a 7-year span in which the § 1 violations were supposed to have occurred (i.e., "[b]eginning at least as early as February 6, 1996, and continuing to the present," id., P 64, App. 30), the pleadings mentioned no specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies. This lack of notice contrasts sharply with the model form for pleading negligence, Form 9, which the dissent says exemplifies the kind of "bare allegation" that survives a motion to dismiss. Post, at 576, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 953. Whereas the model form alleges that the defendant struck the plaintiff with his car while plaintiff was crossing a particular highway at a specified date and time, the complaint here furnishes no clue as to which of the four ILECs (much less which of their employees) supposedly agreed, or when and where the illicit agreement took place. A defendant wishing to prepare an answer in the simple fact pattern laid out in Form 9 would know what to answer; a defendant seeking to respond to plaintiffs' conclusory allegations in the § 1 context would have little idea where to begin.

[11] The dissent's quotations from the complaint leave the impression that plaintiffs directly allege illegal agreement; in fact, they proceed exclusively via allegations of parallel conduct, as both the District Court and Court of Appeals recognized. See 313 F. Supp. 2d 174, 182 (SDNY 2003); 425 F.3d 99, 102-104 (CA2 2005).

[12] From the allegation that the ILECs belong to various trade associations, see Complaint P 46, App. 23, the dissent playfully suggests that they conspired to restrain trade, an inference said to be "buttressed by the common sense of Adam Smith." Post, at 591, 594, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 962, 963-964. If Adam Smith is peering down today, he may be surprised to learn that his tongue-in-cheek remark would be authority to force his famous pinmaker to devote financial and human capital to hire lawyers, prepare for depositions, and otherwise fend off allegations of conspiracy; all this just because he belonged to the same trade guild as one of his competitors when their pins carried the same price tag.

monopoly companies . . . might attack their neighbors' service areas, as they are the best situated to do so.'" Complaint P 38, App. 20 (quoting Consumer Federation of America, Lessons from 1996 Telecommunications Act: Deregulation Before Meaningful Competition Spells Consumer Disaster, p 12 (Feb. 2000)). Contrary to hope, the ILECs declined "'to enter each other's service territories in any significant way,'" Complaint P 38, App. 20, and the local telephone and high speed Internet market remains highly compartmentalized geographically, with minimal competition. Based on this state of affairs, and perceiving the ILECs to be blessed with "especially attractive business opportunities" in surrounding markets dominated by other ILECs, the plaintiffs assert that the ILECs' parallel conduct was "strongly suggestive of conspiracy." Id., P 40, App. 21.

But it was not suggestive of conspiracy, not if history teaches anything. In a traditionally unregulated industry with low barriers to entry, sparse competition among large firms dominating separate geographical segments of the market could very well signify illegal agreement, [*43] but here we have an obvious alternative [948] explanation. In the decade [*568] preceding the 1996 Act and well before that, monopoly was the norm in telecommunications, not the exception. See Verizon Communs., Inc. v. FCC, 535 U.S. 467, 477-478, 122 S. Ct. 1646, 152 L. Ed. 2d 701 (2002) (describing telephone service providers as traditional public monopolies). The ILECs were born in that world, doubtless liked the world the way it was, and surely knew the adage about him who lives by the sword. Hence, a natural explanation for the noncompetition alleged is that the former Government-sanctioned monopolists were sitting tight, expecting their neighbors to do the same thing.

In fact, the complaint itself gives reasons to believe that the ILECs would see their best interests in keeping to their old turf. Although the complaint says generally that the ILECs passed up "especially attractive business opportunit[ies]" by declining to compete as CLECs against other ILECs, Complaint P 40, App. 21, it does not allege that competition as CLECs was potentially any more lucrative than other opportunities being pursued by the ILECs during the same period,[13] [*45] and [1973] the complaint is replete with indications that any CLEC faced [*44] nearly insurmountable barriers to profitability owing to the ILECs' flagrant resistance to the network sharing requirements of the 1996 Act, id., P 47, App. [*569] 23-26. Not only that, but even without a monopolistic tradition and the peculiar difficulty of mandating shared networks, "[f]irms do not expand without limit and none of them enters every market that an outside observer might regard as profitable, or even a small portion of such markets." Areeda & Hovenkamp P 307d, at 155 (Supp. 2006) (commenting on the case at bar). The upshot is that Congress may have expected some ILECs to become CLECs in the legacy territories of other ILECs, but the disappointment does not make conspiracy plausible. We agree with the District Court's assessment that antitrust conspiracy was not suggested by the facts adduced under either theory of the complaint, which thus fails to state a valid § 1 claim.[14]

---

[13] The complaint quoted a reported statement of Qwest's CEO, Richard Notebaert, to suggest that the ILECs declined to compete against each other despite recognizing that it "'might be a good way to turn a quick dollar.'" P 42, App. 22 (quoting Chicago Tribune, Oct. 31, 2002, Business Section, p 1). This was only part of what he reportedly said, however, and the District Court was entitled to take notice of the full contents of the published articles referenced in the complaint, from which the truncated quotations were drawn. See Fed. Rule Evid. 201. Notebaert was also quoted as saying that entering new markets as a CLEC would not be "a sustainable economic model" because the CLEC pricing model is "just . . . nuts." Chicago Tribune, Oct. 31, 2002, Business Section, p 1 (cited at Complaint P 42, App. 22). Another source cited in the complaint quotes Notebaert as saying he thought it "unwise" to "base a business plan" on the privileges accorded to CLECs under the 1996 Act because the regulatory environment was too unstable. Chicago Tribune, Dec. 19, 2002, Business Section, p 2 (cited at Complaint P 45, App. 23).

[14] In reaching this conclusion, we do not apply any "heightened" pleading standard, nor do we seek to broaden the scope of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9, which can only be accomplished "'by the process of amending the Federal Rules, and not by judicial interpretation.'" Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N. A., 534 U.S. 506, 515, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002) (quoting Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1993)). On certain subjects understood to raise a high risk of abusive litigation, a plaintiff must state factual allegations with greater particularity than Rule 8 requires. Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. 9(b)-(c). Here, our concern is not that the allegations in the complaint were insufficiently "particular[ized]," ibid.; rather, the complaint warranted dismissal because it failed in toto to render plaintiffs' entitlement to relief plausible.

Plaintiffs say that our analysis runs counter to Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N. A., 534 U.S. at 508, 122 S. Ct. 992, [949] 152 L. Ed. 2d 1, which held that "a complaint in an employment discrimination [*46] lawsuit [need] not contain specific facts establishing a prima facie case of discrimination under the framework set forth in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S. Ct. 1817, 36 L. Ed. 2d 668 (1973)." They argue that just as the prima facie case is a "flexible evidentiary standard" that "should not be transposed into a rigid pleading standard for discrimination cases," Swierkiewicz, supra, at 512, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1, "transpos[ing] 'plus factor' summary judgment analysis woodenly into a rigid Rule 12(b)(6) pleading standard . . . would be unwise," Brief for Respondents 39. As the District Court [*570] correctly understood, however, "Swierkiewicz did not change the law of pleading, but simply re-emphasized . . . that the Second Circuit's use of a heightened pleading standard for Title VII cases was contrary to the Federal Rules' structure of liberal pleading requirements." 313 F. Supp. 2d, at 181 (citation and footnote omitted). Even though Swierkiewicz's pleadings "detailed the events leading to his termination, provided relevant dates, and included the ages and nationalities of at least some of the relevant persons involved with his termination," the Court of Appeals dismissed [*47] his complaint for failing to allege certain additional facts that Swierkiewicz would need at the trial stage to support his claim in the absence of direct evidence of discrimination. Swierkiewicz, 534 U.S., at 514, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1. We reversed on the ground that the Court of Appeals had impermissibly applied what amounted to a heightened pleading requirement by insisting that Swierkiewicz allege "specific facts" beyondthose necessary to state his [1974] claim and the grounds showing entitlement to relief. Id., at 508, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1.

Here, in contrast, we do not require heightened fact pleading of specifics, but only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Because the plaintiffs here have not nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, their complaint must be dismissed.

* * *

The judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

Justice Stevens, with whom Justice Ginsburg joins except as to Part IV, dissenting.

In the first paragraph of its 23-page opinion the Court states that the question to be [*48] decided is whether allegations that "major telecommunications providers engaged in certain [*571] parallel conduct unfavorable to competition" suffice to state a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Ante, at 548-549, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 936. The answer to that question has been settled for more than 50 years. If that were indeed the issue, a summary reversal citing Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954), would adequately resolve [950] this case. As Theatre Enterprises held, parallel conduct is circumstantial evidence admissible on the issue of conspiracy, but it is not itself illegal. Id., at 540-542, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273.

Thus, this is a case in which there is no dispute about the substantive law. If the defendants acted independently, their conduct was perfectly lawful. If, however, that conduct is the product of a horizontal agreement among potential competitors, it was unlawful. The plaintiffs have alleged such an agreement and, because the complaint was dismissed in advance of answer, the allegation has not even been denied. Why, then, does the case not proceed? Does a judicial opinion that the charge is not "plausible" provide a legally acceptable reason [*49] for dismissing the complaint? I think not.

Respondents' amended complaint describes a variety of circumstantial evidence and makes the straightforward allegation that petitioners > "entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry in their respective local telephone and/or high speed internet services markets and have agreed not to compete with one another and otherwise allocated customers and markets to one another." Amended Complaint in No. 02 CIV. 10220 (GEL) (SDNY) P 51, App. 27 (hereinafter Complaint).

The complaint explains that, contrary to Congress' expectation when it enacted the 1996 Telecommunications Act, and consistent with their own economic self-interests, petitioner Incumbent Local Exchange Carriers (ILECs) have assiduously avoided infringing upon each other's markets and have [*572] refused to permit nonincumbent competitors to access their networks. The complaint quotes Richard Notebaert, the former chief executive officer of one such ILEC, as saying that competing in a neighboring ILEC's territory "'might be a good way to turn a quick dollar but that doesn't make it right.'" Id., P 42, App. 22. Moreover, respondents allege that petitioners "communicate [*50] amongst themselves" through numerous industry associations. Id., P 46, App. 23. In sum, respondents allege that petitioners entered into an agreement that has long been recognized as a classic per se [1975] violation of the Sherman Act. See Reportof the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 26 (1955).

Under rules of procedure that have been well settled since well before our decision in Theatre Enterprises, a judge ruling on a defendant's motion to dismiss a complaint "must accept as true all of the factual allegations contained in the complaint." Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N. A., 534 U.S. 506, 508, n. 1, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002); see Overstreet v. North Shore Corp., 318 U.S. 125, 127, 63 S. Ct. 494, 87 L. Ed. 656 (1943). But instead of requiring knowledgeable executives such as Notebaert to respond to these allegations by way of sworn depositions or other limited discovery--and indeed without so much as requiring petitioners to file an answer denying that they entered into any agreement--the majority permits immediate dismissal based on the assurances of company lawyers that nothing untoward was afoot. The Court embraces the argument of those lawyers that [*51] "there is no reason to infer that the companies had agreed among themselves to do what was only natural anyway," ante, at 566, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 947; that "there was just no need for joint encouragement [951] to resist the 1996 Act," ibid.; and that the "natural explanation for the noncompetition alleged is that the former Government-sanctioned monopolists were sitting tight, expecting their neighbors to do the same thing," ante, at 568, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 948.

The Court and petitioners' legal team are no doubt correct that the parallel conduct alleged is consistent with the absence [*573] of any contract, combination, or conspiracy. But that conduct is also entirely consistent with the presence of the illegal agreement alleged in the complaint. And the charge that petitioners "agreed not to compete with one another" is not just one of "a few stray statements," ante, at 564, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 946; it is an allegation describing unlawful conduct. As such, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, our longstanding precedent, and sound practice mandate that the District Court at least require some sort of response from petitioners before dismissing the case.

Two practical concerns presumably explain the Court's dramatic departure from settled procedural [*52] law. Private antitrust litigation can be enormously expensive, and there is a risk that jurors may mistakenly conclude that evidence of parallel conduct has proved that the parties acted pursuant to an agreement when they in fact merely made similar independent decisions. Those concerns merit careful case management, including strict control of discovery, careful scrutiny of evidence at the summary judgment stage, and lucid instructions to juries; they do not, however, justify the dismissal of an adequately pleaded complaint without even requiring the defendants to file answers denying a charge that they in fact engaged in collective decisionmaking. More importantly, they do not justify an interpretation of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) that seems to be driven by the majority's appraisal of the plausibility of the ultimate factual allegation rather than its legal sufficiency.

I

Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules requires that a complaint contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." The Rule did not come about by happenstance, and its language is not inadvertent. The English experience with Byzantine special pleading rules [*53] --illustrated by the hypertechnical Hilary rules of [*574] 1834[1] -- made [1976] obvious the appeal of a pleading standard that was easy for the common litigant to understand and sufficed to put the defendant on notice as to the nature of the claim against him and the relief sought. Stateside, David Dudley Field developed the highly influential New York Code of 1848, which required "[a] statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." An Act to Simplify and Abridge the Practice, Pleadings and Proceedings of the Courts of this State, ch. 379, § 120(2), 1848 N. Y. Laws pp. 497, 521. Substantially similar language appeared in the Federal Equity Rules adopted in 1912. See Fed. Equity Rule 25 (requiring "a short and simple statement of the ultimate facts upon which the plaintiff asks relief, omitting any mere statement of evidence").

[54] [952] A difficulty arose, however, in that the Field Code and its progeny required a plaintiff to plead "facts" rather than "conclusions," a distinction that proved far easier to say than to apply. As commentators have noted,

> "it is virtually impossible logically to distinguish among 'ultimate facts,' 'evidence,' and 'conclusions.' Essentially any allegation in a pleading must be an assertion that certain occurrences took place. The pleading spectrum, passing from evidence through ultimate facts to conclusions, is largely a continuum varying only in the degree of particularity with which the occurrences are described." Weinstein & Distler, Comments on Procedural Reform: Drafting Pleading Rules, 57 Colum. L. Rev. 518, 520-521 (1957).

See also Cook, Statements of Fact in Pleading Under the Codes, 21 Colum. L. Rev. 416, 417 (1921) (hereinafter Cook) ("[T]here is no logical distinction between statements which are grouped by the courts under the phrases 'statements of [*575] fact' and 'conclusions of law'"). Rule 8 was directly responsive to this difficulty. Its drafters intentionally avoided any reference to "facts" or "evidence" or "conclusions." See 5 C. [*55] Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1216, p 207 (3d ed. 2004) (hereinafter Wright & Miller) ("The substitution of 'claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief' for the code formulation of the 'facts' constituting a 'cause of action' was intended to avoid the distinctions drawn under the codes among 'evidentiary facts,' 'ultimate facts,' and 'conclusions' . . .").

Under the relaxed pleading standards of the Federal Rules, the idea was not to keep litigants out of court but rather to keep them in. The merits of a claim would be sorted out during a flexible pretrial process and, as appropriate, through the crucible of trial. See Swierkiewicz, 534 U.S., at 514, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 ("The liberal notice pleading of Rule 8(a) is the starting point of a simplified pleading system, which was adopted to focus litigation on the merits of a claim"). Charles E. Clark, the "principal draftsman" of the Federal Rules,[2] put it thus:

> "Experience has shown . . . that we cannot expect the proof of the case to be made through the pleadings, and that such proof is really not their function. We can expect a general statement distinguishing the case from all others, so [*56] that the manner and form of trial and remedy expected are clear, and so that a permanent judgment will result." The [1977] New Federal Rules of Civil Procedure: The Last Phase--Underlying Philosophy Embodied in Some of the Basic Provisions of the New Procedure, 23 A. B. A. J. 976, 977 (1937) (hereinafter Clark, New Federal Rules).

The pleading paradigm under the new Federal Rules was well illustrated by the inclusion in the appendix of Form 9, [*576] a complaint for negligence. As relevant, the Form 9 complaint states only: "On June 1, 1936, in a public highway called Boylston Street in Boston, Massachusetts, defendant negligently drove a motor vehicle against plaintiff who was then [953] crossing said highway." Form 9, Complaint for Negligence, Forms App., Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 28 U.S.C. App., p 829 (hereinafter Form 9). The complaint then describes the plaintiff's injuries and demands judgment. The asserted ground for relief--namely, the defendant's negligent driving--would have been called a "'conclusion of law'" under the code pleading of old. See, e.g., Cook 419. But that bare allegation suffices under a system that "restrict[s] the pleadings to [*57] the task of general notice-giving and invest[s] the deposition-discovery process with a vital role in the preparation for trial."[3] Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 501, 67 S. Ct. 385, 91 L. Ed. 451 (1947); see also Swierkiewicz, 534 U.S., at 513, n. 4, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (citing Form 9 as an example of "'the simplicity and brevity of statement which the rules contemplate'"); Thomson v. Washington, 362 F.3d 969, 970 (CA7 2004) (Posner, J.) ("The federal rules replaced fact pleading with notice pleading").

---

[1] See 9 W. Holdsworth, History of English Law 324-327 (1926).

[2] Gulfstream Aerospace Corp. v. Mayacamas Corp., 485 U.S. 271, 283, 108 S. Ct. 1133, 99 L. Ed. 2d 296 (1988).

II

[58] It is in the context of this history that Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), must be understood. The Conley plaintiffs were black railroad workers who alleged that their union local had refused to protect them against discriminatory discharges, in violation of the National Railway Labor Act. The union sought to dismiss the complaint on the ground that its general allegations of discriminatory treatment by the defendants lacked sufficient specificity. Writing [*577] for a unanimous Court, Justice Black rejected the union's claim as foreclosed by the language of Rule 8. Id., at 47-48, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80. In the course of doing so, he articulated the formulation the Court rejects today: "In appraising the sufficiency of the complaint we follow, of course, the accepted rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Id., at 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80.

Consistent with the design of the Federal Rules, Conley's "no set of facts" formulation permits outright dismissal only when proceeding to discovery or beyond [*59] would be futile. Once it is clear that a plaintiff has stated a claim that, if true, would entitle him to relief, matters of proof are appropriately relegated to other stages of the trial process. Today, however, in its explanation of a decision to dismiss a complaint that it regards as a fishing expedition, the Court scraps Conley's "no set of facts " language. Concluding that the phrase has been "questioned, criticized, and explained away long enough," ante, at 562, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 944, the Court dismisses it as careless composition.

[1978] If Conley's "no set of facts" language is to be interred, let it not be without a eulogy. That exact language, which the majority says has "puzzl[ed] the profession for 50 years," ante, at 563, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 945, has been cited as authority in a dozen opinions of this Court and four separate [954] writings.[4] [*61] In not one of [*578] those 16 opinions was the language "questioned," "criticized," or "explained away." Indeed, today's opinion

---

[3] The Federal Rules do impose a "particularity" requirement on "all averments of fraud or mistake," Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 9(b), neither of which has been alleged in this case. We have recognized that the canon of expressio unius est exclusio alterius applies to Rule 9(b). See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1993).

[4] SEC v. Zandford, 535 U.S. 813, 818, 122 S. Ct. 1899, 153 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002); Davis v. Monroe County Bd. of Ed., 526 U.S. 629, 654, 119 S. Ct. 1661, 143 L. Ed. 2d 839 (1999); Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 811, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993); Brower v. County of Inyo, 489 U.S. 593, 598, 109 S. Ct. 1378, 103 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1989); Hughes v. Rowe, 449 U.S. 5, 10, 101 S. Ct. 173, 66 L. Ed. 2d 163 (1980) (per curiam); McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 246, 100 S. Ct. 502, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1980); Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251 (1976); Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1976); Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974); Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1972) (per curiam); Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 521, 92 S. Ct. 594, 30 L. Ed. 2d 652 (1972) (per curiam); Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411, 422, 89 S. Ct. 1843, 23 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1969) (plurality opinion); see also Cleveland Bd. of Ed. v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 554, 105 S. Ct. 1487, 84 L. Ed. 2d 494 (1985) (Brennan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 587, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984) (Stevens, J., dissenting); United Air Lines, Inc. v. Evans, 431 U.S. 553, 561, n. 1, 97 S. Ct. 1885, 52 L. Ed. 2d 571 (1977) (Marshall, J., dissenting); Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26, 55, n. 6, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976) (Brennan, J., concurring in judgment).

is the first by any Member of this Court to express any doubt as to the adequacy of the Conley formulation. Taking their cues from the federal courts, 26 States and the District of Columbia utilize as their standard for dismissal of a complaint the very language [*60] the majority repudiates: whether it appears "beyond doubt" that "no set of facts" in support of the claim would entitle the plaintiff to relief.[5]

[62] [1979] [*579] Petitioners have not requested that the Conley formulation be retired, nor have any of the six amici who filed [955] briefs in support of petitioners. I would not rewrite the Nation's civil procedure textbooks and call into doubt the pleading rules of most of its States without far more informed deliberation as to the costs of doing so. Congress has established a process--a rulemaking process--for revisions of that order. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 2072-2074 (2000 ed. and Supp. IV).

Today's majority calls Conley's "'no set of facts'" language "an incomplete, negative gloss on an accepted pleading standard: once a claim has been stated adequately, it may be [*580] supported by showing any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint." Ante, at 563, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 945. This is not and cannot be what the Conley Court meant. First, as I have explained, and as the Conley Court well knew, the pleading standard the Federal Rules meant to codify does not require, or even invite, the pleading of facts.[6] The "pleading standard"

---

[5] See, e.g., EB Invs., LLC v. Atlantis Development, Inc., 930 So. 2d 502, 507 (Ala. 2005); Department of Health & Social Servs. v. Native Village of Curyung, 151 P. 3d 388, 396 (Alaska 2006); Newman v. Maricopa Cty., 167 Ariz. 501, 503, 808 P.2d 1253, 1255 (App. 1991*)*; Public Serv. Co. of Colo. v. Van Wyk, 27 P. 3d 377, 385-386 (Colo. 2001) (en banc); Clawson v. St. Louis Post-Dispatch, LLC, 906 A.2d 308, 312 (D. C. 2006); Hillman Constr. Corp. v. Wainer, 636 So. 2d 576, 578 (Fla. App. 1994); Kaplan v. Kaplan, 266 Ga. 612, 613, 469 S. E. 2d 198, 199 (1996); Wright v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., 111 Haw. 401, 406, 142 P. 3d 265, 270 (2006); Taylor v. Maile, 142 Idaho 253, 257, 127 P. 3d 156, 160 (2005); Fink v. Bryant, 2001-CC-0987, p. 4 (La. 11/28/01), 801 So. 2d 346, 349; Gagne v. Cianbro Corp., 431 A.2d 1313, 1318-1319 (Me. 1981); Gasior v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 446 Mass. 645, 647, 846 N.E.2d 1133, 1135 (2006); Ralph Walker, Inc. v. Gallagher, 926 So. 2d 890, 893 (Miss. 2006); Jones v. Montana Univ. System, 337 Mont. 1, 7, 155 P. 3d 1247, 1252 (2007); Johnston v. Neb. Dep't of Corr. Servs., 270 Neb. 987, 989, 709 N.W.2d 321, 324 (2006); Blackjack Bonding v. Las Vegas Munic. Ct., 116 Nev. 1213, 1217, 14 P. 3d 1275, 1278 (2000); Shepard v. Ocwen Fed. Bank, 361 N. C. 137, 139, 638 S. E. 2d 197, 199 (2006); Rose v. United Equitable Ins. Co., 2001 ND 154, P10, 632 N.W.2d 429, 434; State ex rel. Turner v. Houk, 112 Ohio St. 3d 561, 562, 2007-Ohio-814, P5, 862 N.E.2d 104, 105 (per curiam); Moneypenney v. Dawson, 2006 OK 53, P2, 141 P. 3d 549, 551; Gagnon v. State, 570 A.2d 656, 659 (R. I. 1990); Osloond v. Farrier, 2003 SD 28, P4, 659 N.W.2d 20, 22 (per curiam); Smith v. Lincoln Brass Works, Inc., 712 S.W.2d 470, 471 (Tenn. 1986); Association of Haystack Property Owners, Inc. v. Sprague, 145 Vt. 443, 446, 494 A.2d 122, 124 (1985); In re Coday, 156 Wn. 2d 485, 497, 130 P. 3d 809, 815 (2006) (en banc); Haines v. Hampshire Cty. Comm'n, 216 W. Va. 499, 502, 607 S. E. 2d 828, 831 (2004); Warren v. Hart, 747 P.2d 511, 512 (Wyo. 1987); see also Malpiede v. Townson, 780 A.2d 1075, 1082-1083 (Del. 2001) (permitting dismissal only "where the court determines with reasonable certainty that the plaintiff could prevail on no set of facts that may be inferred from the well-pleaded allegations in the complaint" (internal quotation marks omitted)); Canel v. Topinka, 212 Ill. 2d 311, 318, 818 N.E.2d 311, 317, 288 Ill. Dec. 623 (2004) (replacing "appears beyond doubt" in the Conley formulation with "is clearly apparent"); In re Young, 522 N.E.2d 386, 388 (Ind. 1988) (per curiam) (replacing "appears beyond doubt" with "appears to a certainty"); Barkema v. Williams Pipeline Co., 666 N.W.2d 612, 614 (Iowa 2003) (holding that a motion to dismiss should be sustained "only when there exists no conceivable set of facts entitling the non-moving party to relief"); Pioneer Village v. Bullitt Cty., 104 S. W. 3d 757, 759 (Ky. 2003) (holding that judgment on the pleadings should be granted "if it appears beyond doubt that the nonmoving party cannot prove any set of facts that would entitle him/her to relief"); Corley v. Detroit Bd. of Ed., 470 Mich. 274, 277, 681 N.W.2d 342, 345 (2004) (per curiam) (holding that a motion for judgment on the pleadings should be granted only "'if no factual development could possibly justify recovery'"); Oberkramer v. Ellisville, 706 S.W.2d 440, 441 (Mo. 1986) (en banc) (omitting the words "beyond doubt" from the Conley formulation); Colman v. Utah State Land Bd., 795 P.2d 622, 624 (Utah 1990) (holding that a motion to dismiss is appropriate "only if it clearly appears that [the plaintiff] can prove no set of facts in support of his claim"); NRC Mgmt. Servs. Corp. v. First Va. Bank - Southwest, 63 Va. Cir. 68, 70 (2003) ("The Virginia standard is identical [to the Conley formulation], though the Supreme Court of Virginia may not have used the same words to describe it").

[6] The majority is correct to say that what the Federal Rules require is a "'showing'" of entitlement to relief. Ante, at 555, n 3, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 940. Whether and to what extent that "showing" requires allegations of fact will depend on the particulars of the claim. For example, had the amended complaint in this case alleged only parallel conduct, it would not have made the required "showing." See supra, at 570-571, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 949. Similarly, had the pleadings contained only an allegation of agreement, without specifying the nature or object of that agreement, they would have been susceptible to the charge that they label the majority gives to what it reads into the Conley opinion--a statement of the permissible factual support for an adequately [*63] pleaded complaint--would not, therefore, have impressed the Conley Court itself. Rather, that Court would have understood the majority's remodeling of its language to express an evidentiary standard, which the Conley Court had neither need nor want to explicate. Second, it is pellucidly clear that the Conley Court was interested in what a complaint must contain, not what it may contain. In fact, the Court said without qualification that it was "appraising the sufficiency of [1980] the complaint." 355 U.S., at 45, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (emphasis added). It was, to paraphrase today's majority, describing "the minimum standard of adequate pleading to govern a complaint's survival," ante, at 563, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 945.

[64] We can be triply sure as to Conley's meaning by examining the three Court of Appeals cases the Conley Court cited as support for the "accepted rule" that "a complaint should not [*581] be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of [956] facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." 355 U.S., at 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80. In the first case, Leimer v. State Mut. Life Assurance Co. of Worcester, Mass., 108 F.2d 302 (CA8 1940), the plaintiff alleged that she was the beneficiary of a life insurance plan and that the insurance company was wrongfully withholding proceeds from her. In reversing the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion to dismiss, the Eighth Circuit noted that court's own longstanding rule that, to warrant dismissal, "'it should appear from the allegations that a cause of action does not exist, rather than that a cause of action has been defectively stated.'" Id., at 305 (quoting Winget v. Rockwood, 69 F.2d 326, 329 (CA8 1934)).

The Leimer court viewed the Federal Rules--specifically Rules 8(a)(2), 12(b)(6), 12(e) (motion for [*65] a more definite statement), and 56 (motion for summary judgment)--as reinforcing the notion that "there is no justification for dismissing a complaint for insufficiency of statement, except where it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff would be entitled to no relief under any state of facts which could be proved in support of the claim." 108 F.2d at 306. The court refuted in the strongest terms any suggestion that the unlikelihood of recovery should determine the fate of a complaint: "No matter how improbable it may be that she can prove her claim, she is entitled to an opportunity to make the attempt, and is not required to accept as final a determination of her rights based upon inferences drawn in favor of the defendant from her amended complaint." Ibid.

The Third Circuit relied on Leimer's admonition in Continental Collieries, Inc. v. Shober, 130 F.2d 631 (1942), which the Conley Court also cited in support of its "no set of facts" formulation. In a diversity action the plaintiff alleged breach of contract, but the District Court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the contract appeared to be unenforceable under state [*66] law. The Court of Appeals reversed, [*582] concluding that there were facts in dispute that went to the enforceability of the contract, and that the rule at the pleading stage was as in Leimer: "No matter how likely it may seem that the pleader will be unable to prove his case, he is entitled, upon averring a claim, to an opportunity to try to prove it." 130 F.2d at 635.

The third case the Conley Court cited approvingly was written by Judge Clark himself. In Dioguardi v. Durning, 139 F.2d 774 (CA2 1944), the pro se plaintiff, an importer of "tonics," charged the customs inspector with auctioning off the plaintiff's former merchandise for less than was bid for it--and indeed for an amount equal to the plaintiff's own bid--and complained that two cases of tonics went missing three weeks before the sale. The inference, hinted at by the averments but never stated in so many words, was that the defendant fraudulently denied the plaintiff his rightful claim to the tonics, which, if true, would have violated federal law. Writing six years after the adoption of the Federal Rules he held the lead rein in drafting, Judge Clark said that the defendant [*67]

> "could have disclosed the facts from his point of view, in advance of a trial if he [1981] chose, by asking for a pre-trial hearing or by moving for a summary judgment with supporting affidavits. But, as it stands, we do not see how the plaintiff may properly be deprived of his day in court to show what he obviously so [957] firmly believes and what for present purposes defendant must be taken as admitting." Id., at 775.

---

did not provide sufficient notice that the defendants may answer intelligently. Omissions of that sort instance the type of "bareness" with which the Federal Rules are concerned. A plaintiff's inability to persuade a district court that the allegations actually included in her complaint are "plausible" is an altogether different kind of failing, and one that should not be fatal at the pleading stage.

As any civil procedure student knows, Judge Clark's opinion disquieted the defense bar and gave rise to a movement to revise Rule 8 to require a plaintiff to plead a "'cause of action.'" See 5 Wright & Miller § 1201, at 86-87. The movement failed, see ibid.; Dioguardi was explicitly approved in Conley; and "[i]n retrospect the case itself seems to be a [*583] routine application of principles that are universally accepted," 5 Wright & Miller § 1220, at 284-285.

In light of Leimer, Continental Collieries, and Dioguardi, Conley's statement that a complaint is not to be dismissed unless "no set of facts" in support thereof would entitle the plaintiff to relief is hardly "puzzling," ante, at 562-563, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 945. It reflects a philosophy that, unlike [*68] in the days of code pleading, separating the wheat from the chaff is a task assigned to the pretrial and trial process. Conley's language, in short, captures the policy choice embodied in the Federal Rules and binding on the federal courts.

We have consistently reaffirmed that basic understanding of the Federal Rules in the half century since Conley. For example, in Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974), we reversed the Court of Appeals' dismissal on the pleadings when the respondents, the Governor and other officials of the State of Ohio, argued that the petitioners' claims were barred by sovereign immunity. In a unanimous opinion by then-Justice Rehnquist, we emphasized:

> "[W]hen a federal court reviews the sufficiency of a complaint, before the reception of any evidence either by affidavit or admissions, its task is necessarily a limited one. The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims. Indeed it may appear on the face of the pleadings that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test." Id., at 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (emphasis added). [*69]

The Rhodes plaintiffs had "alleged generally and in conclusory terms" that the defendants, by calling out the National Guard to suppress the Kent State University student protests, "were guilty of wanton, wilful and negligent conduct." Krause v. Rhodes, 471 F.2d 430, 433 (CA6 1972). We reversed the Court of Appeals on the ground that "[w]hatever [*584] the plaintiffs may or may not be able to establish as to the merits of their allegations, their claims, as stated in the complaints, given the favorable reading required by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure," were not barred by the Eleventh Amendment because they were styled as suits against the defendants in their individual capacities. 416 U.S., at 238, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90.

We again spoke with one voice against efforts to expand pleading requirements beyond their appointed limits in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1993). Writing for the unanimous Court, Chief Justice Rehnquist rebuffed the Fifth Circuit's effort to craft a standard for pleading municipal liability that accounted for "the enormous expense involved today in litigation," [*70] Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, [958] 954 F.2d 1054, 1057 (1992) (internal quotation marks omitted), by requiring a plaintiff to "state with factual [1982] detail and particularity the basis for the claim which necessarily includes why the defendant-official cannot successfully maintain the defense of immunity," 507 U.S., at 167, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 (internal quotation marks omitted). We found this language inconsistent with Rules 8(a)(2) and 9(b) and emphasized that motions to dismiss were not the place to combat discovery abuse: "In the absence of [an amendment to Rule 9(b)], federal courts and litigants must rely on summary judgment and control of discovery to weed out unmeritorious claims sooner rather than later." Id., at 168-169,113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517.

Most recently, in Swierkiewicz, 534 U.S. 506, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1, we were faced with a case more similar to the present one than the majority will allow. In discrimination cases, our precedents require a plaintiff at the summary judgment stage to produce either direct evidence of discrimination or, if the claim is based primarily on circumstantial evidence, to meet the shifting [*71] evidentiary burdens imposed under the framework articulated in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S. Ct. 1817, 36 L. Ed. 2d 668 (1973). See, e.g., Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Thurston, [*585] 469 U.S. 111, 121, 105 S. Ct. 613, 83 L. Ed. 2d 523 (1985). Swierkiewicz alleged that he had been terminated on account of national origin in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Second Circuit dismissed the suit on the pleadings because he had not pleaded a prima facie case of discrimination under the McDonnell Douglas standard.

We reversed in another unanimous opinion, holding that "under a notice pleading system, it is not appropriate to require a plaintiff to plead facts establishing a prima facie case because the McDonnell Douglas framework does not apply in every employment discrimination case." Swierkiewicz, 534 U.S., at 511, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1. We also observed that Rule 8(a)(2) does not contemplate a court's passing on the merits of a litigant's claim at the pleading stage. Rather, the "simplified notice pleading standard" of the Federal Rules "relies on liberal discovery rules and summary judgment motions to define disputed facts and issues and to dispose of unmeritorious [*72] claims." Id., at 512, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1; see Brief for United States et al. as Amici Curiae in Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N. A., O. T. 2001, No. 00-1853, p 10 (stating that a Rule 12(b)(6) motion is not "an appropriate device for testing the truth of what is asserted or for determining whether a plaintiff has any evidence to back up what is in the complaint" (internal quotation marks omitted)).[7]

As in the discrimination context, we have developed [*73] an evidentiary framework for evaluating claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act when those claims rest on entirely circumstantial evidence of conspiracy. See *Matsushita [959] Elec. Industrial [586] Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Under Matsushita, a plaintiff's allegations of an illegal conspiracy may not, at the summary judgment stage, rest solely on the inferences that may be drawn from the parallel conduct of the defendants. In order to survive a Rule 56 motion, a § 1 plaintiff "must present evidence 'that tends [1983] to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently.'" Id., at 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). That is, the plaintiff "must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action." 475 U.S., at 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538.

Everything today's majority says would therefore make perfect sense if it were ruling on a Rule 56 motion for summary judgment and the evidence included nothing more than the Court has described. But it should go without saying in the wake of Swierkiewicz [*74] that a heightened production burden at the summary judgment stage does not translate into a heightened pleading burden at the complaint stage. The majority rejects the complaint in this case because--in light of the fact that the parallel conduct alleged is consistent with ordinary market behavior--the claimed conspiracy is "conceivable" but not "plausible," ante, at 570, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 949. I have my doubts about the majority's assessment of the plausibility of this alleged conspiracy. See Part III, infra. But even if the majority's speculation is correct, its "plausibility" standard is irreconcilable with Rule 8 and with our governing precedents. As we made clear in Swierkiewicz and Leatherman, fear of the burdens of litigation does not justify factual conclusions supported only by lawyers' arguments rather than sworn denials or admissible evidence.

This case is a poor vehicle for the Court's new pleading rule, for we have observed that "in antitrust cases, where 'the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' . . . dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample [*587] opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1976) [*75] (quoting Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962)); see also Knuth v. Erie-Crawford Dairy Cooperative Asso., 395 F.2d 420, 423 (CA3 1968) ("The 'liberal' approach to the consideration of antitrust complaints is important because inherent in such an action is the fact that all the details and specific facts relied upon cannot properly be set forth as part of the pleadings"). Moreover, the fact that the Sherman Act authorizes the recovery of treble damages and attorney's fees for successful plaintiffs indicates that Congress intended to encourage, rather than discourage, private enforcement of the law. See Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 454, 77 S. Ct. 390, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456 (1957) ("Congress itself has placed the private antitrust litigant in a most favorable position . . . . In the face of such a policy this Court should not add requirements to burden the private litigant beyond what is specifically set forth by Congress in those laws"). It is therefore more, not less, important in antitrust cases to resist the urge to [960] engage in armchair economics at the pleading stage.

---

[7] See also 5 Wright & Miller § 1202, at 89-90 ("[P]leadings under the rules simply may be a general summary of the party's position that is sufficient to advise the other party of the event being sued upon, to provide some guidance in a subsequent proceeding as to what was decided for purposes of res judicata and collateral estoppel, and to indicate whether the case should be tried to the court or to a jury. No more is demanded of the pleadings than this; indeed, history shows that no more can be performed successfully by the pleadings" (footnotes omitted)).

The same year we decided Conley [*76] , Judge Clark wrote, presciently,

> "I fear that every age must learn its lesson that special pleading cannot be made to do the service of trial and that live issues between active litigants are not to be disposed of or evaded on the paper pleadings, i.e., the formalistic claims of the parties. Experience has found no quick and easy short cut for trials in cases generally and antitrust cases in particular." Special Pleading in the "Big Case"? in Procedure--The Handmaid of Justice 147, 148 (C. Wright & H. Reasoner eds. 1965) (hereinafter [1984] Clark, Special Pleading in the Big Case) (emphasis added).

[*588] In this "Big Case," the Court succumbs to the temptation that previous Courts have steadfastly resisted.[8] While the majority assures us that it is not applying any "'heightened'" pleading standard, see ante, at 569, n 14, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 948-949, I shall now explain why I have a difficult time understanding its opinion any other way.

[77] III

The Court does not suggest that an agreement to do what the plaintiffs allege would be permissible under the antitrust laws, see, e.g., Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526-527, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). Nor does the Court hold that these plaintiffs have failed to allege an injury entitling them to sue for damages under those laws, see Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489-490, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Rather, the theory on which the Court permits [*589] dismissal is that, so far as the Federal Rules are concerned, no agreement has been alleged at all. This is a mind-boggling conclusion.

As the Court explains, prior to the enactment of the Telecommunications Act of 1996 the law prohibited the defendants from competing with each other. The new statute was enacted to replace a monopolistic market with a competitive one. The Act did not merely require the regional monopolists [961] to take affirmative steps to facilitate entry to new competitors, see Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 402, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004); it also permitted the existing firms to compete with each [*78] other and to expand their operations into previously forbidden territory. See 47 U.S.C. § 271. Each of the defendants decided not to take the latter step. That was obviously an extremely important business decision, and I am willing to presume that each company acted entirely independently in reaching that decision. I am even willing to entertain the majority's belief that any agreement among the companies was unlikely. But the plaintiffs allege in three places in their complaint, PP 4, 51, 64, App. 11, 27, 30, that the ILECs did in fact agree both to prevent competitors from entering into their local markets and to forgo competition with each other. And as the Court [1985] recognizes, at the motion to dismiss stage, a judge assumes "that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Ante, at 555, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 940.

The majority circumvents this obvious obstacle to dismissal by pretending that it does not exist. The Court admits that "in form a few stray statements in the complaint speak directly of agreement," but disregards those allegations [8] Our decision in Dura Pharms., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (2005), is not to the contrary. There, the plaintiffs failed adequately to allege loss causation, a required element in a private securities fraud action. Because it alleged nothing more than that the prices of the securities the plaintiffs purchased were artificially inflated, the Dura complaint failed to "provid[e] the defendants with notice of what the relevant economic loss might be or of what the causal connection might be between that loss and the [alleged] misrepresentation." Id., at 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577. Here, the failure the majority identifies is not a failure of notice--which "notice pleading" rightly condemns--but rather a failure to satisfy the Court that the agreement alleged might plausibly have occurred. That being a question not of notice but of proof, it should not be answered without first hearing from the defendants (as apart from their lawyers). Similarly, in Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), in which we also found an antitrust complaint wanting, the problem was not that the injuries the plaintiffs alleged failed to satisfy some threshold of plausibility, but rather that the injuries as alleged were not "the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall." Id., at 540, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723; see id., at 526, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 ("As the case comes to us, we must assume that the Union can prove the facts alleged in its amended complaint. It is not, however, proper to assume that the Union can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged").

---

by saying that "on fair reading these are merely legal conclusions resting on the prior allegations" of parallel [*79] conduct. Ante, at 564, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 946. The Court's dichotomy between factual allegations and "legal conclusions" is the stuff of a bygone era, supra, at 574-576, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 938-939. That distinction was a defining feature of code pleading, see generally Clark, The Complaint in [*590] Code Pleading, 35 Yale L. J. 259 (1925-1926), but was conspicuously abolished when the Federal Rules were enacted in 1938. See United States v. Employing Plasterers Ass'n, 347 U.S. 186, 188, 74 S. Ct. 452, 98 L. Ed. 618 (1954) (holding, in an antitrust case, that the Government's allegations of effects on interstate commerce must be taken into account in deciding whether to dismiss the complaint "[w]hether these charges be called 'allegations of fact' or 'mere conclusions of the pleader'"); Brownlee v. Conine, 957 F.2d 353, 354 (CA7 1992) ("The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure establish a system of notice pleading rather than of fact pleading, . . . so the happenstance that a complaint is 'conclusory,' whatever exactly that overused lawyers' cliche means, does not automatically condemn it"); Walker Distributing Co. v. Lucky Lager Brewing Co., 323 F.2d 1, 3-4 (CA9 1963) ("[O]ne purpose of Rule 8 [*80] was to get away from the highly technical distinction between statements of fact and conclusions of law . . ."); Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Int'l Union v. Delta, 277 F.2d 694, 697 (CA6 1960) ("Under the notice system of pleading established by the Rules of Civil Procedure, . . . the ancient distinction between pleading 'facts' and 'conclusions' is no longer significant"); 5 Wright & Miller § 1218, at 267 ("[T]he federal rules do not prohibit the pleading of facts or legal conclusions as long as fair notice is given to the parties"). "Defendants entered into a contract" is no more a legal conclusion than "defendant negligently drove," see Form 9; supra, at [962] 575-576, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 952. Indeed it is less of one.[9]

[81] [*591] Even if I were inclined to accept the Court's anachronistic dichotomy and ignore the complaint's actual allegations, I would dispute the Court's suggestion that any inference of agreement from petitioners' parallel conduct is "implausible." Many years ago a truly great economist perceptively observed that "[p]eople of the same trade seldom meet together, even for merriment and diversion, but the conversation ends in a conspiracy against the public, or in some contrivance to raise prices." A. Smith, An Inquiry Into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, in 39 Great Books of the Western World 55 (R. Hutchins & M. Adler eds. 1952). I am not so cynical as to accept that sentiment at face value, but I need not do so here. Respondents' complaint [1986] points not only to petitioners' numerous opportunities to meet with each other, Complaint P 46, App. 23,[10] but also to Notebaert's curious statement that encroaching on a fellow incumbent's territory "might be a good way to turn a quick dollar but that doesn't make it right," id., P 42, App. 22. What did he mean by that? One possible (indeed plausible) inference is that he meant that while it would be in his company's economic self-interest [*82] to compete with its brethren, he had agreed with his competitors not to do so. According to the complaint, that is how the Illinois Coalition for Competitive Telecom construed Notebaert's statement, id., P 44, App. 22 (calling the statement "evidence of potential collusion among regional Bell phone monopolies to not compete [*592] against one another and kill off potential competitors in local phone service"), and that is how Members of Congress construed his company's behavior, id., P 45, App. 23 (describing a letter to the Justice Department requesting an investigation into the possibility that the ILECs'"very apparent non-competition policy'" was coordinated).

[9] The Court suggests that the allegation of an agreement, even if credited, might not give the notice required by Rule 8 because it lacks specificity. Ante, at 565, n 10, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 946. The remedy for an allegation lacking sufficient specificity to provide adequate notice is, of course, a Rule 12(e) motion for a more definite statement. See Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N. A., 534 U.S. 506, 514, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002). Petitioners made no such motion and indeed have conceded that "[o]ur problem with the current complaint is not a lack of specificity, it's quite specific." Tr. of Oral Arg. 14. Thus, the fact that "the pleadings mentioned no specific time, place, or persons involved in the alleged conspiracies," ante, at 565, n 10, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 946, is, for our purposes, academic.

[10] The Court describes my reference to the allegation that the defendants belong to various trade associations as "playfully" suggesting that the defendants conspired to restrain trade. Ante, at 567, n 12, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 947. Quite the contrary: An allegation that competitors meet on a regular basis, like the allegations of parallel conduct, is consistent with--though not sufficient to prove--the plaintiffs' entirely serious and unequivocal allegation that the defendants entered into an unlawful agreement. Indeed, if it were true that the plaintiffs "rest their § 1 claim on descriptions of parallel conduct and not on any independent allegation of actual agreement among the ILECs," ante, at 564, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 946, there would have been no purpose in including a reference to the trade association meetings in the amended complaint.

[83] Perhaps Notebaert meant instead that competition would be sensible in the short term but not in the long run. That's what his lawyers tell us anyway. See Brief for Petitioners 36. But I would think that no one would know better what Notebaert meant than Notebaert himself. Instead of permitting respondents to ask Notebaert, however, the Court looks to other [963] quotes from that and other articles and decides that what he meant was that entering new markets as a competitive local exchange carrier would not be a "'sustainable economic model.'" Ante, at 568, n 13, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 948. Never mind that--as anyone ever interviewed knows--a newspaper article is hardly a verbatim transcript; the writer selects quotes to package his story, not to record a subject's views for posterity. But more importantly the District Court was required at this stage of the proceedings to construe Notebaert's ambiguous statement in the plaintiffs' favor.[11] See Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 767-768, n. 1, 104 S. Ct. 3315, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1984) (Brennan, J., dissenting). The inference the statement supports--that simultaneous decisions by ILECs not even to attempt to poach customers from one another once the law authorized them to [*593] do so were the product of an agreement--sits comfortably within [*84] the realm of possibility. That is all the Rules require.

To be clear, if I had been the trial judge in this case, I would not have permitted the plaintiffs to engage in massive discovery based solely on the allegations in this complaint. On the other hand, I surely would not have dismissed the complaint [1987] without requiring the defendants to answer the charge that they "have agreed not to compete with [*85] one another and otherwise allocated customers and markets to one another."[12] Complaint, P 51, App. 27. Even a sworn denial of that charge would not justify a summary dismissal without giving the plaintiffs the opportunity to take depositions from Notebaert and at least one responsible executive representing each of the other defendants.

Respondents in this case proposed a plan of "'phased discovery'" limited to the existence of the alleged conspiracy and class certification. Brief for Respondents 25-26. Two petitioners rejected the plan. Ibid. Whether or not respondents' proposed plan was sensible, it was an appropriate subject for negotiation.[13] Given the charge in the [11] It is ironic that the Court seeks to justify its decision to draw factual inferences in the defendants' favor at the pleading stage by citing to a rule of evidence, ante, at 568, n 13, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 948. Under Federal Rule of Evidence 201(b), a judicially noticed fact "must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Whether Notebaert's statements constitute evidence of a conspiracy is hardly beyond reasonable dispute.

---

[12] The Court worries that a defendant seeking to respond to this "conclusory" allegation "would have little idea where to begin." Ante, at 565, n 10, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 946. A defendant could, of course, begin by either denying or admitting the charge.

[13] The potential for "sprawling, costly, and hugely time-consuming" discovery, ante, at 560, n 6, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 943, is no reason to throw the baby out with the bathwater. The Court vastly underestimates a district court's case-management arsenal. Before discovery even begins, the court may grant a defendant's Rule 12(e) motion; Rule 7(a) permits a trial court to order a plaintiff to reply to a defendant's answer, see Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 598, 118 S. Ct. 1584, 140 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1998); and Rule 23 requires "rigorous analysis" to ensure that class certification is appropriate, General Telephone Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982); see In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation, 471 F.3d 24 (CA2 2006) (holding that a district court may not certify a class without ruling that each Rule 23 requirement is met, even if a requirement overlaps with a merits issue). Rule 16 invests a trial judge with the power, backed by sanctions, to regulate pretrial proceedings via conferences and scheduling orders, at which the parties may discuss, inter alia, "the elimination of frivolous claims or defenses," Rule 16(c)(1); "the necessity or desirability of amendments to the pleadings," Rule 16(c)(2); "the control and scheduling of discovery," Rule 16(c)(6); and "the need for adopting special procedures for managing potentially difficult or protracted actions that may involve complex issues, multiple parties, difficult legal questions, or unusual proof problems," Rule 16(c)(12). Subsequently, Rule 26 confers broad discretion to control the combination of interrogatories, requests for admissions, production requests, and depositions permitted in a given case; the sequence in which such discovery devices may be deployed; and the limitations imposed upon them. See 523 U.S., at 598-599, 118 S. Ct. 1584, 140 L. Ed. 2d 759. Indeed, Rule 26(c) specifically permits a court to take actions "to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense" by, for example, disallowing a particular discovery request, setting appropriate terms and conditions, or limiting its scope. In short, the Federal Rules contemplate that pretrial matters will be settled through a flexible process of give and take, of proffers, stipulations, and stonewalls, not by having trial judges screen allegations complaint [*594] --buttressed [964] by the common sense of Adam Smith--I cannot say that the possibility that joint discussions [*86] [1988] and perhaps some agreements played a role in petitioners' decisionmaking process is so implausible that dismissing the complaint before any defendant has denied the charge is preferable to granting respondents even a minimal opportunity [*595] to prove their claims. See Clark, New Federal Rules 977 ("[T]hrough the weapons of discovery and summary judgment we have developed new devices, with more appropriate penalties to aid in matters of proof, and do not need to force the pleadings to their less appropriate function").

[87] I fear that the unfortunate result of the majority's new pleading rule will be to invite lawyers' debates over economic theory to conclusively resolve antitrust suits in the absence of any evidence. It is no surprise that the antitrust defense bar--among whom "lament" as to inadequate judicial supervision of discovery is most "common," see ante, at 559, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 942--should lobby for this state of affairs. But "we must recall that their primary responsibility is to win cases for their clients, not to improve law administration for the public." Clark, Special Pleading in the Big Case 152. As we did in our prior decisions, we should have instructed them that their remedy was to seek to amend the Federal Rules--not our interpretation of them.[14] See Swierkiewicz, 534 U.S., at 515, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. [965] Ed. 2d 1; Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 595, 118 S. Ct. 1584, 140 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1998); Leatherman, 507 U.S., at 168, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517.

[88] IV

Just a few weeks ago some of my colleagues explained that a strict interpretation of the literal text of statutory language [*596] is essential to avoid judicial decisions that are not faithful to the intent of Congress. Zuni Pub. Sch. Dist. No. 89 v. Dep't of Educ., ante, p. 108 (Scalia, J., dissenting). I happen to believe that there are cases in which other tools of construction are more reliable than text, but I agree of course that congressional intent should guide us in matters of statutory interpretation. Ante, at 106 (Stevens, J., concurring). This is a case in which the intentions of the drafters of three important sources of law--the Sherman Act, the Telecommunications Act of 1996, and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure--all point unmistakably in the same direction, yet the Court marches resolutely the other way. Whether the Court's actions will benefit only defendants in antitrust treble-damages cases, or whether its test for the sufficiency of a complaint will inure to the benefit of all civil defendants, is a question that the future will answer. But that the Court has announced a significant new rule that does not even purport to [*89] respond [1989] to any congressional command is glaringly obvious.

---

for their plausibility vel non without requiring an answer from the defendant. See Societe Internationale pour Participations Industrielles et Commerciales, S. A. v. Rogers, 357 U.S. 197, 206, 78 S. Ct. 1087, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1255 (1958) ("Rule 34 is sufficiently flexible to be adapted to the exigencies of particular litigation"). And should it become apparent over the course of litigation that a plaintiff's filings bespeak an in terrorem suit, the district court has at its call its own in terrorem device, in the form of a wide array of Rule 11 sanctions. See Rules 11(b), (c) (authorizing sanctions if a suit is presented "for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation"); see Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Communications Enterprises, Inc., 498 U.S. 533, 111 S. Ct. 922, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1140 (1991) (holding that Rule 11 applies to a represented party who signs a pleading, motion, or other papers, as well as to attorneys); Atkins v. Fischer, 232 F.R.D. 116, 126 (DC 2005) ("As possible sanctions pursuant to Rule 11, the court has an arsenal of options at its disposal").

[14] Given his "background in antitrust law," ante, at 560, n 6, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 943, Judge Easterbrook has recognized that the most effective solution to discovery abuse lies in the legislative and rulemaking arenas. He has suggested that the remedy for the ills he complains of requires a revolution in the rules of civil procedure:

> "Perhaps a system in which judges pare away issues and focus on investigation is too radical to contemplate in this country--although it prevailed here before 1938, when the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure were adopted. The change could not be accomplished without abandoning notice pleading, increasing the number of judicial officers, and giving them more authority . . . . If we are to rule out judge-directed discovery, however, we must be prepared to pay the piper. Part of the price is the high cost of unnecessary discovery--impositional and otherwise." Discovery as Abuse, 69 B. U. L. Rev. 635, 645 (1989).

The transparent policy concern that drives the decision is the interest in protecting antitrust defendants--who in this case are some of the wealthiest corporations in our economy--from the burdens of pretrial discovery. Ante, at 558-560, 167 L. Ed. 2d, at 942-943. Even if it were not apparent that the legal fees petitioners have incurred in arguing the merits of their Rule 12(b) motion have far exceeded the cost of limited discovery, or that those discovery costs would burden respondents as well as petitioners,[15] that concern would not provide an adequate justification for this law-changing decision. For in the final analysis it is only a lack of confidence in the ability of trial judges to control discovery, buttressed by appellate judges' independent appraisal of the plausibility of profoundly [*597] serious factual allegations, that could account for this stark break from precedent.

[90] If the allegation of conspiracy happens to be true, today's decision obstructs the congressional policy favoring competition that undergirds both the Telecommunications Act of 1996 and the Sherman Act itself. More importantly, even if there is abundant evidence that the allegation is untrue, directing that the case be dismissed without even looking at any of that evidence marks a fundamental--and unjustified--change in the character of pretrial practice.

Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

References

15 U.S.C.S. § 1

Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation §§ 11.02, 164.01, 164.02 (Matthew Bender)

Moore's Federal Practice §§ 8.02, 12.03 (Matthew Bender 3d ed.)

L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices § 45

L Ed Index, Sherman Act

Supreme Court's construction and application of Rules 8 and 9 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, concerning general rules of pleading and pleading special matters. 122 L. Ed. 2d 897.

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.). 64 L. Ed. 2d 997.

Applicability of federal antitrust laws as affected by other federal statutes or by Federal Constitution--Supreme Court cases. 45 L. Ed. 2d 841.

End of Document

[15] It would be quite wrong, of course, to assume that dismissal of an antitrust case after discovery is costless to plaintiffs. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 54(d)(1) ("[C]osts other than attorneys' fees shall be allowed as of course to the prevailing party unless the court otherwise directs").

Merck & Co. v. Apotex, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

May 21, 2007, Decided ; May 21, 2007, Filed

C.A. No. 06-230 (GMS)

Reporter

488 F. Supp. 2d 418 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36859 ; 2008-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,244

MERCK & CO., INC., Plaintiff, v. APOTEX, INC., Defendant.

Subsequent History: Affirmed in part and vacated in part by, Remanded by Merck & Co. v. Apotex, Inc., 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 15014 (Fed. Cir., July 16, 2008)

Core Terms

patent, generic, antitrust, covenant, infringed, certification, declaratory judgment, expiration, invalidity, patent infringement, innovator, FDA, circumstances, marketing, motion to dismiss, generic drug, counterclaim, parties, case or controversy, patentee, court's decision, triggering, lack of subject matter jurisdiction, drug company, file suit, pioneer, notice, actual controversy, district court, new drug

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > General Overview

HN1[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Section 505(j) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FD&C Act) has established the abbreviated new drug application (ANDA) approval process, which permits generic versions of previously approved innovator drugs to be approved without submission of a full new drug application (NDA). An ANDA refers to a previously approved new drug application (listed drug) and relies upon the Food and Drug Administration's (FDA) finding of safety and effectiveness for that drug product. The timing of an ANDA approval depends in part on patent protections for the innovator drug. Innovator drug applicants must include in an NDA information about patents for the drug product that is the subject of the NDA. The FDA publishes patent information on approved drug products in the FDA's publication "Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations," otherwise known as the "Orange Book." The FD&C Act requires that an ANDA contain a certification for each patent listed in the Orange Book for the innovator drug. This certification must state one of the following: (i) that the required patent information relating to such patent has not been filed; (ii) that such patent has expired; (iii) that the patent will expire on a particular date; or (iv) that such patent is invalid or will not be infringed by the drug, for which approval is being sought.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN2[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

A certification under paragraph I or II of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act permits the abbreviated new drug application (ANDA) to be approved immediately, if it is otherwise eligible. A certification under paragraph III indicates that the ANDA may be approved on the patent expiration date. A paragraph IV certification begins a process in which the question of whether the listed patent is valid or will be infringed by the proposed generic product may be answered by the courts prior to the expiration of the patent. The ANDA applicant who files a paragraph IV certification to a listed patent must notify the patent owner and the new drug application (NDA) holder for the listed drug that it has filed an ANDA containing a patent challenge. The notice must include a detailed statement of the factual and legal basis for the ANDA applicant's opinion that the patent is not valid or will not be infringed. The submission of an ANDA for a drug product claimed in a patent is an infringing act if the generic product is intended to be marketed before expiration of the patent, and therefore, the ANDA applicant who submits an application containing a paragraph IV certification may be sued for patent infringement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN3[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

If a new drug application sponsor or patent owner files a patent infringement suit against an abbreviated new drug application (ANDA) applicant within 45 days of the receipt of notice, the Food and Drug Administration may not give final approval to the ANDA for at least 30 months from the date of the notice. This 30-month stay will apply unless the court reaches a decision earlier in the patent infringement case, or otherwise orders a longer or shorter period for the stay.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN4[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act provides an incentive of 180 days of market exclusivity to the "first" generic applicant who challenges a listed patent by filing a paragraph IV certification and running the risk of having to defend a patent infringement suit. The statute provides that the first applicant to file a substantially complete abbreviated new drug application containing a paragraph IV certification to a listed patent will be eligible for a 180-day period of exclusivity beginning either from the date it begins commercial marketing of the generic drug product, or from the date of a court decision finding the patent invalid, unenforceable or not infringed, whichever is first. These two events - first commercial marketing and a court decision favorable to the generic - are often called "triggering" events, because under the statute they can trigger the beginning of the 180-day exclusivity period.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN5[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

In some circumstances, an abbreviated new drug application (ANDA) applicant who obtains 180-day exclusivity may be the sole marketer of a generic competitor to the innovator product for 180 days. But 180-day exclusivity can begin to run, with a court decision, even before an applicant has received approval for its ANDA. In that case, some, or all, of the 180-day period could expire without the ANDA applicant marketing its generic drug. Conversely, if there is no court decision and the first applicant does not begin commercial marketing of the generic drug, there may be prolonged or indefinite delays in the beginning of the first applicant's 180-day exclusivity period. Approval of an ANDA has no effect on exclusivity, except if the sponsor begins to market the approved generic drug. Until an eligible ANDA applicant's 180-day exclusivity period has expired, the Food and Drug Administration cannot approve subsequently submitted ANDAs for the same drug, even if the later ANDAs are otherwise ready for approval and the sponsors are willing to immediately begin marketing. Therefore, an ANDA applicant who is eligible for exclusivity is often in the position to delay all generic competition for the innovator product.

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > General Overview

HN6[] The Judiciary, Case or Controversy

The exercise of judicial power under Article III of the United States Constitution requires the existence of a case or controversy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > General Overview

HN7[] Declaratory Judgments, Federal Declaratory Judgments

The Declaratory Judgment Act requires an actual controversy between the parties before a federal court may exercise jurisdiction over an action for a declaratory judgment. The actual controversy requirement is met when, the facts alleged, under all the circumstances, show that there is a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issue of a declaratory judgment. When an actual controversy does exist sufficient to warrant subject matter jurisdiction, however, the district court is not required to exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, but has discretion to decline that jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > General Overview

HN8[] Declaratory Judgments, Federal Declaratory Judgments

The question in each case is whether the facts alleged, under all the circumstances, show that there is a substantial controversy, between the parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment.

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > General Overview

HN9[] The Judiciary, Case or Controversy

The actual controversy must be in existence at all stages of the litigation and cannot merely be present at the filing of the complaint.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN10[] Standing, Elements

Article III standing requires a plaintiff to allege personal injury fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct and likely to be redressed by the requested relief.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN11[] Jurisdiction & Review, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

It is well-established that a trial court may be divested or deprived of subject matter jurisdiction over a particular patent claim if the patentee covenants not to assert an infringement claim against a putative infringer.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN12[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(3) states whenever it appears by suggestion of the parties or otherwise that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, the court shall dismiss the action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN13[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Recognizing that motions to amend shall be granted freely under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a), a court has discretion to deny leave to amend when there is undue delay, bad faith, dilatory motive or undue prejudice to the opposing party, or when the amendment would be futile. In assessing futility, the court applies the same standard of legal sufficiency as applies under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN14[] Standing, Requirements

The United States Supreme Court has outlined the factors that courts should consider when determining whether a party has standing to bring a private action under the antitrust laws: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN15[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

See 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii).

Civil Procedure > Remedies > General Overview

HN16[] Civil Procedure, Remedies

A court cannot remedy every harm or prejudice a party endures. Moreover, not every business disadvantage is appropriately deemed legal injury.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN17[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

The existing law does not provide an absolute right of a generic drug company to enter the market in which a pioneer drug company and a first-filing generic applicant have legally achieved some market exclusivity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Limitations

HN18[] Misuse of Rights, Patent Misuse Defense

A patent is an exception to the general rule against monopolies and to the right to access to a free and open market. Thus, by their nature, patents create an environment of exclusion, and consequently, cripple competition. The anticompetitive effect is already present. When patentees attempt to extend their legal monopoly beyond that which is permitted by their statutory grants, such actions can trigger antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN19[] Misuse of Rights, Patent Misuse Defense

Any adverse effects within the scope of a patent or statutory right to exclude, however, cannot be redressed by antitrust law.

Counsel: [1] Mary B. Graham, Esquire, and James W. Parrett, Jr., Esquire, of MORRIS, NICHOLS, ARSHT & TUNNELL LLP, Wilmington, Delaware, and John DeQ. Briggs, Esquire, John F. Lynch, Esquire, Kenneth W. Donnelly, Esquire, Aaron Myers, Esquire, of HOWREY LLP, Washington, D.C., and Nicholas G. Barzoukas, Esquire, Suzy S. Harbison, Esquire, Jason C. Abair, Esquire, of WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, Houston, Texas, and Paul D. Matukaitis, Edward W. Murray, Gerard M. Devlin, of MERCK & CO., INC., Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Richard L. Horwitz, Esquire, and Kenneth L. Dorsney, Esquire, of POTTER ANDERSON & CORROON, LLP, Wilmington, Delaware, and A. Sidney Katz, Esquire, Robert B. Breisblatt, Esquire, Louise T. Walsh, Esquire, Michael Krol, Esquire, of WELSH & KATZ, LTD., Chicago, Illinois, Attorneys for Defendant.

Judges: Gregory M. Sleet, District Judge.

Opinion by: Gregory M. Sleet

Opinion

[*420] OPINION

May 21, 2007

Wilmington, Delaware

Gregory M. Sleet, District Judge.

I. INTRODUCTION

The plaintiff Merck & Co., Inc. ("Merck") filed suit against the defendant Apotex, Inc. ("Apotex") in the above-captioned matter, alleging that Apotex committed an act of patent infringement under 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(2)(A) [2] . Merck moves to dismiss its complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because, since filing suit, it has given Apotex a comprehensive covenant not to sue, which removed the controversy between the parties. For the reasons that follow, Merck's motion is granted.

II. SUMMARY OF STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

The provisions of the Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of 1984 (the "Hatch-Waxman Amendments") govern the generic drug approval process. [1] The Food and Drug Administration ("FDA" or "Agency"), provides the following summary explanation of the Act's statutory provisions, at http://www.fda.gov/cder/about/smallbiz/generic_exclusivity.htm, which the court incorporates in pertinent part:

[3] The Hatch-Waxman Amendments are intended to balance two important public policy goals. First, drug manufacturers need meaningful market protection incentives to encourage the development of valuable new drugs. Second, once the statutory patent protection and marketing exclusivity for these new drugs has expired, the public benefits from the rapid availability of lower priced generic versions of the innovator drug.

[1] The Hatch-Waxman Amendments were modified by the Medicare Prescription Drug, Improvement, and Modernization Act of 2003. Pub. L. No. 108-173, § 1101(a)(2)(A)(ii), 117 Stat. 2066 (amended 2003). Herein, all references to the Hatch-Waxman Amendments and its regulatory framework include the scope of the provisions as later modified.

The Hatch-Waxman Amendments amended the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic ("FD&C") Act and created [*421] section 505(j). HN1[] Section 505(j) established the abbreviated new drug application ("ANDA") approval process, which permits generic versions of previously approved innovator drugs to be approved without submission of a full new drug application ("NDA"). An ANDA refers to a previously approved new drug application (the "listed drug") and relies upon the Agency's finding of safety and effectiveness for that drug product. The timing of an ANDA approval depends in part on patent protections for the innovator drug. Innovator drug applicants must include in an NDA information about patents for the drug product that is the subject of the NDA. The FDA publishes patent information on approved [4] drug products in the Agency's publication "Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations," otherwise known as the "Orange Book." The FD&C Act requires that an ANDA contain a certification for each patent listed in the Orange Book for the innovator drug. This certification must state one of the following: (i) that the required patent information relating to such patent has not been filed; (ii) that such patent has expired; (iii) that the patent will expire on a particular date; or (iv) that such patent is invalid or will not be infringed by the drug, for which approval is being sought.

HN2[] A certification under paragraph I or II permits the ANDA to be approved immediately, if it is otherwise eligible. A certification under paragraph III indicates that the ANDA may be approved on the patent expiration date. A paragraph IV certification begins a process in which the question of whether the listed patent is valid or will be infringed by the proposed generic product may be answered by the courts prior to the expiration of the patent. The ANDA applicant who files a paragraph IV certification to a listed patent must notify the patent owner and the NDA holder for the listed [5] drug that it has filed an ANDA containing a patent challenge. The notice must include a detailed statement of the factual and legal basis for the ANDA applicant's opinion that the patent is not valid or will not be infringed. The submission of an ANDA for a drug product claimed in a patent is an infringing act if the generic product is intended to be marketed before expiration of the patent, and therefore, the ANDA applicant who submits an application containing a paragraph IV certification may be sued for patent infringement. HN3[] If the NDA sponsor or patent owner files a patent infringement suit against the ANDA applicant within 45 days of the receipt of notice, the FDA may not give final approval to the ANDA for at least 30 months from the date of the notice. This 30-month stay will apply unless the court reaches a decision earlier in the patent infringement case, or otherwise orders a longer or shorter period for the stay.

HN4[] The statute provides an incentive of 180 days of market exclusivity to the "first" generic applicant who challenges a listed patent by filing a paragraph IV certification and running the risk of having to defend a patent infringement suit. The statute provides that [6] the first applicant to file a substantially complete ANDA containing a paragraph IV certification to a listed patent will be eligible for a 180-day period of exclusivity beginning either from the date it begins commercial marketing of the generic drug product, or from the date of a court decision finding the patent invalid, unenforceable or not infringed, whichever is first. These two events--first commercial marketing and a court decision favorable to the generic--are often called "triggering" events, because under the statute they can trigger the beginning of the 180-day exclusivity period.

HN5[] In some circumstances, an applicant who obtains 180-day exclusivity may be the [*422] sole marketer of a generic competitor to the innovator product for 180 days. But 180-day exclusivity can begin to run, with a court decision, even before an applicant has received approval for its ANDA. In that case, some, or all, of the 180-day period could expire without the ANDA applicant marketing its generic drug. Conversely, if there is no court decision and the first applicant does not begin commercial marketing of the generic drug, there may be prolonged or indefinite delays in the beginning of the first applicant's [7] 180-day exclusivity period. Approval of an ANDA has no effect on exclusivity, except if the sponsor begins to market the approved generic drug. Until an eligible ANDA applicant's 180-day exclusivity period has expired, the FDA cannot approve subsequently submitted ANDAs for the same drug, even if the later ANDAs are otherwise ready for approval and the sponsors are willing to immediately begin marketing. Therefore, an ANDA applicant who is eligible for exclusivity is often in the position to delay all generic competition for the innovator product.

III. BACKGROUND

Merck is the owner of nine patents listed in the Orange Book for the drug alendronate sodium, which Merck markets and sells under the trademark Fosamax. [2] On February 24, 2006, Apotex sent Merck a letter informing Merck that Apotex filed ANDA No. 077-982, seeking approval from the FDA to market a generic version of Merck's Fosomax tablets. Apotex certified in its ANDA submission that certain Merck patents were invalid, unenforceable and/or will not be infringed by the commercial manufacture, use, or sale of Apotex's generic version. Apotex was not the first generic filer to challenge Merck's patents on the Fosamax [8] drug.

In the absence of any further information than what Apotex provided in its February 2006 letter, on April 7, 2006, Merck filed this action to protect its rights under the Hatch-Waxman Act. Apotex counterclaimed for a declaratory judgment of invalidity and noninfringement of the nine patents at issue. In August 2006, after receiving more detailed information from Apotex regarding its generic version of Fosamax, Merck granted Apotex a comprehensive covenant not to sue.

IV. LEGAL STANDARD

HN6[] The exercise of judicial power under Article III of the United States Constitution requires the existence of a case or controversy. HN7[] The Declaratory Judgment Act "requires an actual controversy between the parties before a federal court may exercise jurisdiction over an action for a declaratory judgment." EMC Corp. v. Norand Corp., 89 F.3d 807, 810 (Fed. Cir. 1996). [9] The actual controversy requirement is met when, "the facts alleged, under all the circumstances, show that there is a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issue of a declaratory judgment." Id. (quoting Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pacific Coal & Oil Co., 312 U.S. 270, 273, 61 S. Ct. 510, 85 L. Ed. 826 (1941)). When an actual controversy does exist sufficient to warrant subject matter jurisdiction, however, "the district court is not required to exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, but has discretion to decline that jurisdiction." EMC Corp., 89 F.3d at 810.

[*423] V. DISCUSSION

Merck argues that, as a result of its covenant not to sue Apotex on the asserted patents, this action is moot and the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the purported controversy. Conversely, Apotex asks that the court deny Merck's motion for the following reasons: (1) a dismissal without a finding of invalidity and/or noninfringement would operate to deny Apotex "its right to compete with Merck for want of a 'triggering event'" and that Apotex would be injured by delayed entry into the market; (2) [10] the court should not sanction Merck's "manipulating the court's jurisdiction" by filing a patent infringement suit, later presenting a covenant not to sue, and then attempting to dismiss Apotex's counterclaims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction; and (3) the court has subject matter jurisdiction because this case satisfies the Supreme Court's test for determining an actual case or controversy. (D.I. 19 at 2.)

Existence of an Actual Case or Controversy

In Teva v. Novartis, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit ("Federal Circuit") acknowledged that the Supreme Court, in MedImmune v. Genentech, 127 S. Ct. 764, 166 L. Ed. 2d 604 (2007), disagreed with the Federal Circuit's "reasonable apprehension of suit" test, and refocused the declaratory judgment jurisprudence on earlier Supreme Court precedent. Teva Pharm. USA, Inc. v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., 482 F.3d 1330, 1339 (Fed. Cir. 2007). Thus, HN8[] "the question in each case is whether the facts alleged, under all the circumstances, show that there is a substantial controversy, between the parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory [11] judgment." MedImmune v. Genentech, 127 S. Ct. at 771 (citing

---

[2] The patents listed in Merck's NDA, which are the patents-in-suit, are U.S. Patent Nos. 5,358,941; 5,681,590; 5,849,726; 6,008,207; 6,090,410; 6,194,004; 5,994,329; 6,015,801; and 6,225,294.

Maryland Casualty Co., 312 U.S. at 273). In support of its argument that an actual case or controversy exists in this case, Apotex points to the Federal Circuit's observation in Teva v. Novartis:

> A justiciable declaratory judgment controversy arises for an ANDA filer when a patentee lists patents in the Orange Book, the ANDA applicant files its ANDA certifying the listed patents under paragraph IV, and the patentee brings an action against the submitted ANDA on one or more of the patents. The combination of these three circumstances is dispositive in establishing an actual declaratory judgment controversy as to all the paragraph IV certified patents, whether the patentee has sued on all or only some of the paragraph IV certified patents.

482 F.3d at 1344. The court agrees with the Federal Circuit's observation about what establishes a justiciable declaratory judgment controversy in the Hatch-Waxman context. Further, the court recognizes that, when filed, this case also presented a justiciable controversy. A significant distinction between the scenario in [12] Teva v. Novartis and the case here is that Novartis had declined to give Teva a covenant not to sue. Here, after the case was filed, and Merck received further information upon which it could evaluate the infringement action, Merck presented Apotex with a comprehensive covenant not to sue. HN9[] The actual controversy must be in existence at all stages of the litigation and cannot merely be present at the filing of the complaint. Super Sack v. Chase, 57 F.3d 1054, 1058 (Fed. Cir. 1995).

HN10[] Article III standing requires "[a] plaintiff [to] allege personal injury fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct and likely to be redressed by the requested relief." Allen v. Wright, [*424] 468 U.S. 737, 751, 104 S. Ct. 3315, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1984). Here, having received a covenant not to sue, Apotex does not and cannot allege "unlawful conduct" attributable to Merck in connection with its declaratory judgment claim. Further, Apotex's articulated injury--delayed entry to the market--is not fairly traceable to Merck. There is no evidence to conclude that Apotex's delayed entry into the market is any different than what it would have been had Merck never sued it. Thus, Apotex's [13] advancement of this case against Merck becomes merely a means to an end, where the desired "end" is a triggering event but the means to that end, the litigation itself, is not sanctioned under the current legal framework. To proceed to a substantive "court decision" on the merits of Apotex's claims of noninfringement or invalidity would amount to an impermissible advisory opinion. See Preiser v. Newkirk, 422 U.S. 395, 401, 95 S. Ct. 2330, 45 L. Ed. 2d 272 (1975) (holding that courts may not render advisory opinions or decide questions that do not affect the rights of the parties to the case).

Merck's covenant not to sue removes any cause for concern that Apotex could be held liable for infringement of the patents in suit. See Super Sack, 57 F.3d at 1059. Moreover, HN11[] "'[i]t is well-established that a trial court may be divested or deprived of subject matter jurisdiction over a particular patent claim if the patentee covenants not to assert an infringement claim against a putative infringer.'" *Crossbow Tech., Inc. v. Yh Tech., No. C 03-04360, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8028, 2007 WL 174422, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 22, 2007) (quoting Eli Lilly & Co. v. Zenith Goldline Pharms., 101 F. Supp. 2d 1139, 1142 (S.D. Ind. 2000)). [14] HN12[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(h)(3) states "[w]henever it appears by suggestion of the parties or otherwise that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, the court shall dismiss the action." Accordingly, the court must dismiss this action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. [3]

Manipulation of Court Jurisdiction

Notwithstanding the body of law that mandates dismissal, the court is sensitive to Apotex's argument that Merck is manipulating the court's jurisdiction. Indeed, the court must guard its jurisdiction jealously. Apotex highlights an interesting yet troublesome practice that has emerged from the interplay of the Hatch-Waxman regulatory scheme, covenants not to sue, subject-matter jurisdiction, and the typical time cycle of [15] a patent litigation. This lawsuit exposes the ability of pioneer drug companies to potentially hold generics at bay by suing them, as they are authorized to do when a paragraph IV certification is made in an ANDA, and then granting a covenant not to sue, which divests the court of subject-matter jurisdiction. In this way, district courts can be viewed as unwitting agents in a pioneer drug company's ability to defer competition for as long as possible. As unfortunate as it may be for Apotex, this is the framework that the Hatch-Waxman Act created. [4] The legislative [*425] history suggests that, in fact, Congress contemplated the use of covenants not to sue as a means of resolving any controversy created by the filing of an ANDA:

---

[3] Apotex also contends that the collateral consequences doctrine permits the court to retain jurisdiction. The court has considered the parties' arguments and finds Apotex's position to be without merit.

> The provision [a "civil action to obtain patent certainty"] . . . is intended to clarify that Federal district courts are to entertain such suits for declaratory judgments so long as there is a "case or controversy" under Article III of the Constitution. We fully expect that, in almost all situations where a generic applicant has challenged a patent [by filing an ANDA with a paragraph IV certification] and not been sued for patent infringement, a claim [16] by the generic applicant seeking declaratory judgment on the patent will give rise to a justiciable "case or controversy" under the Constitution. We believe that the only circumstance in which a case or controversy might not exist would arise in the rare circumstance in which the patent owner and brand drug company have given the generic applicant a covenant not to sue, or otherwise formally acknowledge that the generic applicant's drug does not infringe.

149 Cong. Rec. S15885 (Nov. 25, 2003) (remarks of Sen. Kennedy, ranking member of Senate HELP committee) (emphasis added)).

[17] ANDA litigation reaches the federal courts through specialized legislation enacted by Congress, perhaps without the prescience of the maze it would be creating, and the ingenuity of motivated business persons and lawyers to capitalize on its imperfections. These cases represent the intersecting roles of all three branches of government and the pharmaceutical industry: the court's interest in interpreting the existing law so that it can provide justice and equity to injured parties; congressional interest in making laws that will encourage research and development, as well as to speed entry of generic drugs into the market; a regulatory agency's interest in advancing the public health by helping to speed innovations that make medicines and foods more effective, safer, and more affordable; and the pharmaceutical industry's interest in protecting its bottom line. This court is without the power, however, to ameliorate the problems that have emerged from this interplay.

Apotex argues that the Federal Circuit, in Teva v. Novartis, recognized that a patentee's actions of only suing on one of its patents frustrated the central purpose behind Hatch-Waxman, and that this court should [18] similarly recognize the gamesmanship behind suing, covenanting not to sue, and moving to dismiss without a decision on the merits. In finding a justiciable controversy in Teva v. Novartis, however, the Federal Circuit found frustration of the Hatch-Waxman Act's purpose to be just one of numerous circumstances, in the "totality of circumstances" analysis, that warranted a finding of an actual controversy. 482 F.3d at 1344. Moreover, in the past, both innovator and generic companies have been accused of "gaming" the Hatch-Waxman regulatory regime to their respective benefit. [5] Congress responded [*426] through legislation. See 149 Cong. Rec. S15882-03, S15885 (Nov. 25, 2003) ("[I]n recent years both brand-name and generic drug companies have exploited certain aspects of the

---

[4] The court is also troubled by the practical realities of a scheme, which in effect, if left as is, enmeshes the district courts in unnecessary, and in this court's opinion, improper involvement in business competition. This cycle not only contributes to court congestion but it wastes the court's valuable time and limited resources by conducting the business it must for these cases, until it reaches the merits of such contested motions to dismiss. The time-triggered provisions of the statute unrealistically presuppose the time in which the district courts are to manage their cases. While the court endeavors to be efficient and expeditious in resolving the matters pending before it, time proscriptions such as those that Congress has assumed in the Hatch-Waxman provisions, and those upon which the litigants press the court, are idealistic at best and unfeasible in practice. The joint effort of the branches of government to balance the interests of consumers with those of innovator and generic drug companies should not be so tunnel-visioned as to facilitate litigants in their attempts to catapult ANDA litigation as a priority in the district courts.

[5] The Federal Trade Commission issued studies in 2002 and 2003 that examined and commented on the conduct of drug companies in the generic drug approval process. Fed. Trade Comm'n, Generic Drug Entry Prior to Patent Expiration: An FTC Study (2002), available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/2002/07/genericdrugstudy.pdf; Fed. Trade Comm'n, To Promote Innovation: The Proper Balance of Competition and Patent Law and Policy, (2003), available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/2003/10/innovationrpt.pdf.

Hatch-Waxman Act to delay generic competition. The changes to the [] Act . . . will stop these abuses.") (remarks of Sen. Kennedy, ranking member of the Senate HELP committee regarding the 'civil action to obtain patent certainty' provision under 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(C)). Likewise, if it is the view of Congress that pharmaceutical companies are abusing the Act in the way [19] that Apotex complains here, Congress can reform the Hatch-Waxman Amendments as it deems necessary.

Right to Competition -- Antitrust Claim

Apotex's argument that a dismissal without a finding of invalidity or noninfringement would operate to deny Apotex "its right to compete with Merck for want of a 'triggering event'" coincides with its proposed antitrust counterclaim presented in its motion to amend. As such, the court will address this argument and Apotex's motion together.

HN13[] Recognizing that motions to amend shall be [20] granted freely under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a), the court has discretion to deny leave to amend when there is undue delay, bad faith, dilatory motive or undue prejudice to the opposing party, or when the amendment would be futile. See Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962); In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1434 (3d Cir. 1997). In assessing futility, the court applies the same standard of legal sufficiency as applies under Rule 12(b)(6). Id. Thus, the court looks to whether Apotex's antitrust claim, if allowed, would survive a motion to dismiss.

HN14[] The Supreme Court has outlined the factors that courts should consider when determining whether a party has standing to bring a private action under the antitrust laws: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the [21] concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. City of Pittsburgh v. West Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 263 (3d Cir. 1998) (citing Associated Gen. Contractors of California v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 537-45, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)).

Apotex argues, both in its opposition to Merck's motion to dismiss and in Apotex's motion to amend, that if the court grants Merck's motion to dismiss, the 30-month stay on Apotex's ANDA application will not be terminated, the 180-day exclusivity period will not be triggered, and Apotex, as well as the other secondary generic applicants, will be prevented from entering the generic market until 180 days after the first generic applicant enters the market. With these consequences in mind, Apotex asserts that Merck's actions of filing suit, covenanting not to sue, and moving to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, [*427] are an unlawfully anticompetitive and monopolistic scheme to delay entry by Apotex [22] and other generic filers into the market for generic alendronate sodium.

One material aspect of this discussion is whether the FDA's 30-month stay on Apotex's ANDA will terminate upon the court's dismissal of the action. The 30-month stay was introduced to give the generic applicant and NDA holder the opportunity to resolve patent issues prior to commercial marketing. Fed. Trade Comm'n, Generic Drug Entry Prior to Patent Expiration: An FTC Study (2002), available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/2002/07/genericdrugstudy.pdf, at 39. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii)(2003) provides:

> HN15[] If such an action is brought before the expiration of [45 days after the date that the paragraph IV notice is received], the approval shall be made effective upon the expiration of the thirty-month period beginning on the date of the receipt of the notice provided under paragraph (2)(B)(i) or such shorter or longer period as the court may order because either party to the action failed to reasonably cooperate in expediting the action, except that--
>
> (I) if before the expiration of such period the district court decides that the patent is invalid or not infringed (including [23] any substantive determination that there is no cause of action for patent infringement or invalidity), the approval shall be made effective on--

(aa) the date on which the court enters judgment reflecting the decision; or

(bb) the date of a settlement order or consent decree signed and entered by the court stating that the patent that is the subject of the certification is invalid or not infringed;

Merck argues that the parenthetical clause of § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii)(I), "(including any substantive determination that there is no cause of action for patent infringement or invalidity)," instructs that a dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction would lift the 30-month stay on an ANDA. Apotex contends that the FDA has not yet construed the provision, and that the FDA's construction of similar, previously disputed language suggests that nothing less than a court decision of invalidity, noninfringement or unenforceability would affect the stay. [6] Neither the parties nor the court can be certain of how the provision will be applied to Apotex. Moreover, the matters pending before the court do not mandate this court's interpretation of the statute. It is noteworthy, [24] however, that the FDA considered a precise answer, by way of a proposed rule, but later withdrew it without comment. The FDA's proposed rule § 314.107(g) provided in pertinent part:

Effect of dismissal of litigation on 30-month stay. If the patent litigation between the ANDA applicant and the patent owner or NDA holder described in paragraph (b)(3)(A) of this section is dismissed without a court decision on the merits of the patent claim, whether the dismissal is with or without prejudice, the agency may immediately approve the ANDA that was the subject of the litigation, if it is otherwise eligible for approval.

180-Day Generic Exclusivity for Abbreviated New Drug Applications, 64 Fed. Reg. 42873, 42886 (1999) (to be codified at 21 C.F.R. pt. 314) (proposed Aug. 6, 1999), withdrawal of proposed rule reflected in 67 Fed. Reg. 66593 (2002).

[*428] [25] Certainly, if the mere filing of a patent infringement suit can result in an irrevocable 30-month stay on an ANDA application, except in the limited circumstances of a "substantive decision" on the merits or other narrower circumstances where a court may shorten the stay, then Apotex has a legitimate concern about how such a policy is susceptible to abuse by pioneer drug companies. Ultimately, however, HN16[] the court cannot remedy every harm or prejudice a party endures. Moreover, not every business disadvantage is appropriately deemed legal injury. The fiercely competitive pharmaceutical industry does not escape these realities. HN17[] The existing law does not provide an absolute right of a generic drug company to enter the market in which a pioneer drug company and a first-filing generic applicant have legally achieved some market exclusivity.

The court understands that Apotex is at a competitive disadvantage, but as to the harm it claims to have endured, and the relief it seeks, the court's hands are tied. In Teva v. Pfizer, the Federal Circuit stated:

The fact that Teva is disadvantaged from a business standpoint by Ivax's 180-day exclusivity period and the fact that Pfizer's [26] decision not to sue Teva creates an impediment to Teva's removing that disadvantage are matters separate and distinct from whether an Article III controversy exists between Teva and Pfizer. The injury about which Teva complains is the product of the Hatch-Waxman scheme and the fact that Pfizer has acted in a manner permitted under that scheme. It is not the product of a threat of suit by Pfizer.

395 F.3d 1324, 1338 (Fed. Cir. 2005), abrogated by MedImmune v. Genentech, 127 S. Ct. 764, 166 L. Ed. 2d 604 (2007). Notwithstanding the Supreme Court's abrogation of the Federal Circuit's reasonable apprehension test, the Federal Circuit's analysis of the distinction between a business disadvantage and an Article III controversy applies with equal force to Apotex's opposition to Merck's motion to dismiss, as well as its motion to add an antitrust counterclaim on the same grounds.

Apotex attempts to distinguish its case from Teva v. Pfizer by emphasizing that, unlike Pfizer, Merck chose to sue Apotex, knowing there was no infringement, and then covenanted not to sue. The court will not engage in fact finding as to the disputed accounts of what Merck knew about the merits [27] of an infringement claim against Apotex at the time it filed suit, and whether and under what circumstances, Merck attempted to glean further information before filing suit. The court does not need to resolve these issues because the mere filing of a paragraph IV certification in an ANDA constitutes infringement. See 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(2)(A). Accordingly, Apotex's filing of its ANDA on Merck's Fosamax drug was an act of infringement that afforded Merck the right to sue. The statutory provisions that allow suit under these circumstances render the patentee's subjective motivations for filing suit irrelevant. [7]

[6] See Apotex, Inc. v. FDA, 449 F.3d 1249 (D.D.C. 2006) (upholding FDA's decision finding that dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction did not qualify as a "court decision" sufficient to trigger the 180-day exclusivity period).

[*429] [28] Intellectual property law and principles foster the creation of market power and antitrust law and principles respond to market power abuses, however, both systems operate to advance consumer welfare by allocating resources, cultivating innovation, and promoting technological progress. See, e.g., Lawrence A. Sullivan & Warren S. Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated Handbook, (West Group 2000), §§ 15.1 at 800-801.HN18[] A patent "is an exception to the general rule against monopolies and to the right to access to a free and open market." See Precision Instrument Mfg. Co. v. Automotive Maintenance Mach. Co., 324 U.S. 806, 816, 65 S. Ct. 993, 89 L. Ed. 1381, 1945 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 582 (1945). Thus, "[b]y their nature, patents create an environment of exclusion, and consequently, cripple competition. The anticompetitive effect is already present." Schering-Plough v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 402 F.3d 1056, 1065-1066 (11th Cir. 2005). When patentees attempt to extend their legal monopoly beyond that which is permitted by their statutory grants, such actions can trigger antitrust liability. Andrx Pharms., Inc. v. Biovail Corp. Intern., 347 U.S. App. D.C. 178, 256 F.3d 799, 813 (D.C. Cir. 2001) ("[E]ven a patent-right [29] holder is not immune from antitrust liability.").

HN19[] Any adverse effects within the scope of a patent or statutory right to exclude, however, cannot be redressed by antitrust law. See United States v. Studiengesellschaft Kohle, m.b.H., 216 U.S. App. D.C. 303, 670 F.2d 1122, 1127 (D.C. Cir. 1981) ("[T]he conduct at issue is illegal if it threatens competition in areas other than those protected by the patent and is otherwise legal.") (emphasis added). The existing body of case law involving antitrust allegations in the context of ANDA litigation tends to fall within two categories: cases in which the parties bilaterally entered into a collusive agreement that exceeded the scope of a patent grant, thus warranting antitrust scrutiny, [8] and cases in which the patentee was considered to have lawfully enforced its patent right, albeit with the consequence of delaying or inhibiting competition. See, e.g., In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 332 F.3d 896 (6th Cir. 2003) and Valley Drug Co. v. Geneva Pharms., 344 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 2003) (involving agreements among innovator and generic drug companies that incurred antitrust liability).

[30] The futility of Apotex's proposed amendment is further demonstrated by previously unsuccessful efforts to attach antitrust liability to pharmaceutical companies acting within the Hatch-Waxman regulatory framework and patent grant. See, e.g., In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 363 F. Supp. 2d 514, 524 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (holding that conduct within the scope of the patent grant is exempt from antitrust scrutiny); In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litig., 466 F.3d 187 (2d Cir. 2006) (affirming district court decision, which held that the claimed injury was not "antitrust injury," which must be caused by something other than the regulatory action limiting entry to the market); Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Copley Pharm., Inc., 144 F. Supp. 2d 21, 23-25 (D. Mass. [*430] 2000)

---

[7] The court is by no means discharging the requirements of Rule 11 in the context of Hatch Waxman litigation. In this case, however, there are no alleged facts from which the court can conclude that, in fact, Merck knew that Apotex's generic version of Fosamax did not infringe Merck's patents at the time it filed suit pursuant to its statutory right to do so upon Apotex's paragraph IV certification. Although the Rule 12(b)(6) standard requires the court to accept all well-pleaded allegations as true, and to view them in the light most favorable to plaintiff, the court will not credit bald and conclusory allegations. See United States v. Vespe, 868 F.2d 1328, 1340 (3d Cir. 1989) (stating conclusory statements need not be credited).

[8] "It is widely understood that the 180-day exclusivity period offers the potential for collusive settlement arrangements between pioneers and generics. A pioneer could initiate a patent infringement suit against a first generic ANDA filer and settle the litigation with a 'non-entry' payment to the generic, under which the generic would delay commercialization of the generic product, thus postponing the commencement of the 180-day exclusivity period and locking other generics out of the market indefinitely." Herbert Hovenkamp et al., Anticompetitive Settlement of Intellectual Property Disputes, 87 Minn. L.Rev. 1719, 1755 (2003).

(dismissing an antitrust counterclaim of second ANDA filer against pioneer drug company because the counterclaimant failed to show antitrust injury where the statutory scheme, and not the pioneer drug company, prevented it from entering the market).

Thus, Merck's challenged conduct--filing suit upon notice of Apotex's paragraph IV certification and covenanting [31] not to sue--are expressly sanctioned by the Hatch-Waxman Amendments or contemplated by its legislative history. Likewise, the consequences to Apotex--delayed entry in the market for alendronate sodium tablets--are specific products of the statute. Having failed to establish antitrust injury and causal connection between Merck's legal actions and Apotex's alleged harm, which are necessary requirements for antitrust standing, the court considers Apotex's requested amendment to be futile.

VI. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, Merck's motion to dismiss (D.I. 15) is granted as Apotex has failed to establish the existence of an actual case or controversy under the current state of the law. The Clerk of the Court shall mark this action closed and all other pending motions are denied.

Dated: May 21, 2007

Gregory M. Sleet

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Merck's motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction (D.I. 15) is GRANTED.
2. Apotex's motion for leave to file a surreply (D.I. 26) is DENIED.
3. Apotex's motion for leave to file its first amended answer, affirmative defenses, and counterclaims (D.I. 28) is [32] DENIED.
4. Apotex's motion for leave to substitute corrected exhibits to its pending motion for leave (D.I. 36) is DENIED as moot.
5. Merck's motion to stay (D.I. 68) is DENIED as moot.
6. All claims in Merck's Complaint (D.I. 1) are DISMISSED.
7. All counterclaims in Apotex's Answer, Affirmative Defenses, and Counterclaims (D.I. 8) are DISMISSED.
8. Each party shall bear its own costs and attorneys' fees.

Dated: May 21, 2007

Gregory M. Sleet

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

One Indus. v. Jim O'Neal Distrib.

United States District Court for the Southern District of California

May 29, 2007, Decided; May 29, 2007, Filed

Civil No.06CV1133 JAH(AJB)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112738 *

ONE INDUSTRIES, LLC, a limited liability company, Plaintiff, v. JIM O'NEAL DISTRIBUTING, INC., a corporation, Defendant. AND ALL RELATED COUNTERCLAIMS AND THIRD PARTY COMPLAINTS.

Subsequent History: Summary judgment granted by, in part, Summary judgment denied by, in part, Request denied by, Motion denied by, As moot, Costs and fees proceeding at One Indus. v. Jim O'Neal Distrib., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140016 (S.D. Cal., Feb. 14, 2008)

Affirmed by One Indus., LLC v. Jim O'Neal Distrib., 578 F.3d 1154, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 18967 (9th Cir. Cal., Aug. 24, 2009)

Core Terms

third party, trademark, motion to dismiss, allegations, counterclaims, definite statement, infringement, marks, unfair competition, cancellation, third party complaint, contends, counts, registration, defendants', trademark infringement, reply, false designation, trade dress, responsive pleading, cause of action, motions, parties, antitrust violation, products, argues, rights, cases

Counsel: [*1] For One Industries, LLC, a limited liability company, Plaintiff: Jonathan Hangartner, LEAD ATTORNEY, X-Patents, APC, La Jolla, CA.

For Jim O'Neal Distributing, Inc., a corporation, Defendant: R Joseph Trojan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lauren M Mirsky, Trojan Law Offices, Beverly Hills, CA.

For Jim O'Neal Distributing, Inc., One Industries LLC, Counter Claimants: R Joseph Trojan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Trojan Law Offices, Beverly Hills, CA.

For Jim O'Neal Distributing, Inc., a corporation, ThirdParty Plaintiff: Lauren M Mirsky, Trojan Law Offices, Beverly Hills, CA.

For Marc Blanchard, Ludovic Boinnard, ThirdParty Defendants: Jonathan Hangartner, LEAD ATTORNEY, X-Patents, APC, La Jolla, CA.

For One Industries, LLC, Counter Defendant: Jonathan Hangartner, LEAD ATTORNEY, X-Patents, APC, La Jolla, CA.

Judges: HON. JOHN A. HOUSTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JOHN A. HOUSTON

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT [DOC. # 11]; AND GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART THIRD PARTY DEFENDANTS LUDOVIC BOINNARD AND MARC BLANCHARD'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT [DOC. # 13]

INTRODUCTION

Currently pending before the Court are the motions filed by [*2] plaintiff One Industries, LLC ("One Industries") and third party defendants Ludovic Boinnard ("Boinnard") and Marc Blanchard ("Blanchard")(collectively "third party defendants") to dismiss, in part, the counterclaims and the third party complaint filed by Jim O'Neal Distributing, Inc. ("O'Neal"). The motions have been fully briefed by all parties. After a careful consideration of the pleadings and relevant exhibits submitted, and for the reasons set forth below, this Court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART One Industries' motion to dismiss and for more definite statement and GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART third party defendants' motion to dismiss and for more definite statement.

BACKGROUND

One Industries markets and distributes motorcycle racing products. O'Neal manufactures and distributes motorcycle and bicycle related products. O'Neal claims ownership of various trademarks for multiple variations of the marks O'Neal and O' that appear on its products. One Industries is a licensee of products that use two marks referred to in the complaint as the "One Icon Mark" and the "One Angular Mark" which are owned by third party defendants Blanchard and Boinnard. In the instant complaint, [*3] filed on May 25, 2006, One Industries seeks a declaratory judgment of non-infringement of O'Neal's trademark rights and a declaration of no unfair competition as it relates to One Industries' marketing.

On August 21, 2006, O'Neal filed an answer to the complaint and alleged six counterclaims for trademark and trade dress infringement and unfair competition. On September 5, 2006, O'Neal filed a third party complaint against Boinnard and Blanchard, alleging nine causes of action. One Industries, on September 13, 2006, filed its motion to dismiss three of O'Neal's counterclaims and for a more definite statement of two other counterclaims. Third party defendants filed their motion to dismiss on September 26, 2006, seeking dismissal of various causes of action alleged in the third party complaint as well as for a more definite statement concerning other causes of action. O'Neal filed its oppositions to each of the motions on October 26, 2006 and the moving parties' replies were filed on November 2, 2006. This Court subsequently took both motions under submission without oral argument. See CivLR 7.1(d.1).

DISCUSSION

Both One Industries and third party defendants move to dismiss the various [*4] counterclaims and causes of action for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) and for a more definite statement pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(e).

1. Legal Standards

a. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6)

A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) tests the sufficiency of the complaint. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001). Dismissal of a claim under this Rule is appropriate only where "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); Navarro, 250 F.3d at 732. Dismissal is also warranted under Rule 12(b)(6) where the complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory. Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 534 (9th Cir. 1984); see Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 326, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1989) ("Rule 12(b)(6) authorizes a court to dismiss a claim on the basis of a dispositive issue of law."). Alternatively, a complaint may be dismissed where it presents a cognizable legal theory yet fails to plead essential facts under that theory. Robertson, 749 F.2d at 534.

In reviewing a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the court must assume the truth of all factual allegations and must construe all inferences from them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Thompson v. Davis, 295 F.3d 890, 895 (9th Cir. 2002); Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). However, legal conclusions need not be taken as true merely because they are cast in the form of factual allegations. Ileto v. Glock, Inc., 349 F.3d 1191, 1200 (9th Cir. 2003); Western Mining Council v. Watt, 643 F.2d 618, 624 (9th Cir. 1981). When ruling on a motion to dismiss, the Court may consider the facts alleged in the complaint, documents attached [*5] to the complaint, documents relied upon but not attached to the complaint when authenticity is not contested, and matters of which the Court takes judicial notice. Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688-89 (9th Cir. 2001).

b. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(e)

Rule 12(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure states, in relevant part:

> If a pleading to which a responsive pleading is permitted is so vague or ambiguous that a party cannot reasonably be required to frame a responsive pleading, the party may move for a more definite statement before interposing a responsive pleading. The motion shall point out the defects complained of and the details desired.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e). Rule 12(e) motions are disfavored and rarely granted. United States v. Sequel Contractors, 402 F. Supp.2d 1142, 1147 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (citing Margarita Cellars v. Pacific Coast Packaging, Inc., 189 F.R.D. 575, 578 (N.D. Cal. 1999)). The Court must evaluate a motion for more definite statement in conjunction with the liberal pleading standards of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Bureerong v. Uvawas, 922 F. Supp. 1450, 1461 (C.D. Cal. 1996). Unless the complaint at issue is unintelligible and not merely lacking in detail, "[the] court will deny the motion where the complaint is specific enough to apprise the defendant of the substance of the claim being asserted." Beery v. Hitachi Home Elecs. (Am.), Inc., 157 F.R.D. 477, 480 (C.D. Cal 1993). Courts will grant a Rule 12(e) motion "only when the pleading is so vague or ambiguous that the opposing party cannot respond, even with a simple denial, in good faith or without prejudice to himself." Delta Educ., Inc. V. Langlois, 719 F. Supp. 42, 50 (D.N.H. 1989). Accordingly, a Rule 12(e) motion "should not be granted [*6] unless the defendant literally cannot frame a responsive pleading." Bureerong, 922 F. Supp. at 1461.

2. Analysis

a. One Industries' Motions

1. Motion to Dismiss

One Industries moves to dismiss O'Neal's counterclaims for trade dress infringement under 15 U.S.C. § 1125 (count three), false designation of origin under 15 U.S.C. § 1125 (count four), and unfair competition (count six) for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). However, One Industries, in its reply brief, withdrew its motion to dismiss count three. See Doc. # 19 at 1n.1. The remaining two counts challenged by One Industries are addressed below.

A. False Designation of Origin

One Industries moves to dismiss O'Neal's counterclaim for false designation of origin under section 42(a)(1)(A) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125, on the grounds that O'Neal does not have standing to allege the claim.[1]

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) provides, in pertinent part, that:

> (1) Any person who . . . uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which - -
>
>> (A) is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or the deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person . . .
>
> shall be [*7] liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is likely to be damaged by such act.

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(A).

One Industries argues that O'Neal must allege "'commercial injury based upon the deceptive use of a trademark or its equivalent to satisfy standing requirements'" to seek relief for false designation of origin under 15 U.S.C. § 1125. Doc. # 11 at 5. One Industries further argues that, because the owners of the One Icon and One Angular Marks are third party defendants Boinnard and Blanchard, they are "the only parties that could possibly suffer injury" based on the facts alleged in this case. Id. at 6. In opposition, O'Neal contends it need not allege its injury stemmed from the deceptive use of a trademark to have standing because the statute does not require it. Doc. # 16 at 6. One Industries responds that the counterclaim at issue is "based exclusively on the allegation that 'One Industries improperly represented itself as a source of [the One Icon and One Angular Marks] in its allegations of infringement against O'Neal.'" Doc. # 19 at 2 (quoting Ans. ¶ 92). One Industries points out that the only factual allegation supporting this claim is O'Neal's reference to a May 16, 2006 letter between counsel for [*8] the parties, which, according to One Industries, "provides no possible basis to allege any commercial injury that could support its counterclaim." Id. at 2-3.

This Court's review of O'Neal's false designation counterclaim reveals One Industries is correct. O'Neal clearly alleges, in its answer and counterclaims, that its damage stemmed solely from private correspondence between counsel. This Court finds that there is no possibility that O'Neal might suffer injury based solely on the representation of counsel in a letter to opposing counsel. Therefore, this Court finds that the facts alleged by O'Neal are insufficient to support standing to sue for false designation of origin under Section 1125. Accordingly, One Industries' motion to dismiss count four of O'Neal's counterclaims is GRANTED.

B. Unfair Competition

One Industries next moves to dismiss O'Neal's sixth counterclaim for unfair competition under California Business and Professions Code § 17200, which is based on allegations of monopoly and restraint of trade. One Industries argues that the counterclaim fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted because O'Neal fails to allege facts to support the claim. Doc. # 11 at 7. Specifically, One Industries explains that an unfair competition claim [*9] must derive from a violation of the antitrust laws and argues O'Neal fails to allege facts to support such a violation. Id. at 7-8 (citing Cel-Tech Com., Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 186, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999)).

---

[1] One Industries also moves for dismissal due to O'Neal's failure to allege all necessary elements of this claim. Because this Court ultimately finds the facts alleged by O'Neal does not support standing to sue on this claim, this Court will not address One Industries' remaining argument.

California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200 defines unfair competition to include "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue, or misleading advertising . . . ." Cal.Bus.& Prof. Code § 17200. Section 17203 provides:

> Any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction. The court may make such orders or judgments, . . . as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition.

Cal.Bus.&Prof. Code § 17203. O'Neal contends its allegations counsel represented, in the May 16, 2006 letter, that One Industries intended to enforce trademarks it does not own nor have standing to sue to enforce is sufficient to state a claim for unfair competition and no further allegation is necessary. Doc. # 16 at 7-8. O'Neal also contends that misuse of trademark is, nevertheless, considered an antitrust violation. Id. at 8.

In reply, One Industries asserts it cannot be held liable under Section 17200 because it never filed an action for infringement or sought to enforce any trademark [*10] rights and, thus, has not attempted enforcement as a matter of law. Doc. # 19 at 4-5. This Court is not persuaded that the representations of counsel in the May 16, 2006 letter cannot be considered an attempt to enforce trademark rights to the marks at issue. This Court must, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), view the facts alleged as true and construe all inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. See Thompson, 295 F.3d at 895; Cahill, 80 F.3d 336 at 337-38. Thus, O'Neal's allegations that counsel's May 16, 2006 representations were an attempt to enforce trademark rights to the marks at issue must be viewed as true. Therefore, One Industries' contention on that basis fails.

One Industries further asserts that, even if the May 16, 2006 letter is considered an attempt to enforce trademark rights, misuse of trademarks can only be an antitrust violation if it is brought as an affirmative defense against anti-competitive behavior. Doc. # 19 at 6 (citing Carl Zeiss Steiftung v. V.E.B. Carl Zeiss, Jena., 298 F.Supp. 1309, 1315 (S.D.N.Y. 1969)). The California Supreme Court defines the word "unfair" as used in Section 17200 to mean "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws ... or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal.4th at 187. Thus, One Industries is correct [*11] in its position that O'Neal must allege an antitrust violation to state a claim under Section 17200. O'Neal claims that trademark misuse is considered an antitrust violation and cites various cases that have found instances where such a consideration is proper. See Doc. # 16 at 8-9. Although One Industries attempts to distinguish the cases cited by O'Neal, again, this Court is required to construe all inferences in the light most favorable to O'Neal. See Thompson, 295 F.3d at 895; Cahill, 80 F.3d 336 at 337-38. This Court, therefore, cannot, at this juncture, find definitively that the facts of this case are not one of the instances where trademark misuse should not be considered an antitrust violation. Accordingly, One Industries' motion to dismiss on this basis is DENIED.

2. Motion for More Definite Statement

One Industries also moves for a more definite statement of count two seeking redress under 15 U.S.C. §§ 1114 and 1125 for trademark infringement of its O' mark and count five seeking redress under the California Business and Professions Code § 17200. According to One Industries, O'Neal's counterclaim describe five different and distinct O' marks used by O'Neal over the past fifteen years. Doc. # 11 at 9. One Industries contends it cannot frame a responsive pleading to the allegations presented in these two claims [*12] because O'Neal fails to identify which of its distinctive marks are alleged to have been infringed. Id. In addition, One Industries contends this identification failure undermines O'Neal's claim for unfair competition, which alleges "One Industries' unlawful use of confusingly similar trademarks . . . constitutes unfair competition . . .," Ans. ¶ 96, presented in count five because "One Industries is left to guess which underlying claim or claims are invoked to support this unfair competition claim." Doc. # 11 at 9.

In opposition, O'Neal takes issue with One Industries' characterization of its O' mark as multiple separate marks, claiming it has used only one O' mark that has "changed slightly over the years." Doc. # 16 at 9. Nevertheless, O'Neal contends that a more definite statement is unnecessary because its claims for trademark infringement of the O' mark and unfair competition "are plainly specific enough to apprise One Industries of the substance of the claim being asserted." Id. at 10. O'Neal further contends that no further statement is necessary given the "well-settled law that a party is entitled to modify a mark over the years if the change neither creates a new mark nor changes the [*13] commercial impression created by the old, especially where the only change concerned is lettering style." Id. at 11.

One Industries, in reply, contends that a trademark infringement claim requires "an assessment of 'whether a reasonably prudent consumer in the marketplace is likely to be confused as to the origin of the good or service bearing one of the marks.'" Doc. # 19 at 7 (quoting AMF Inc. v. Sleekcraft Boats, 599 F.2d 341, 348 (9th Cir. 1979)(additional internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, according to One Industries, the identification of the mark alleged to have been infringed is "crucial" in determining likelihood of confusion Id. One Industries, in support of its contention, provides a table graphically depicting the five "distinct and very different" marks alleged to have been infringed in O'Neal's counterclaims to support its contention that it cannot form a response based on the allegations presented. See id. at 7-8. One Industries argues that "[e]ven a cursory inspection makes clear that, as a matter of law, this is not a single mark," since the "shape, font, orientation, placement, and color of the marks have all changed dramatically over the years" and, given the fact that "O'Neal has sought at least two separate trademark registrations with [*14] respect to the [] identified marks."

This Court agrees with One Industries. A careful review of the counterclaims reveals that it is unclear which of the O'marks identified are alleged to have been infringed. This Court is unpersuaded by O'Neal's claim that it uses only one mark that has been slightly altered over the years because two of the marks alleged to be one have been registered separately and the marks presented appear to this Court to be more than just slightly different. Therefore, this Court finds that, in order for One Industries to form a proper response to the allegations contained in counts two and five, O'Neal must provide a more definite statement concerning the mark alleged to have been infringed. Accordingly, One Industries' motion for a more definite statement of counts two and five of O'Neal's counterclaims is GRANTED.

b. Third Party Defendants' Motion

1. Motion to Dismiss

Third party defendants Blanchard and Boinnard move to dismiss certain portions of O'Neal's third party complaint. Specifically, third party defendant Blanchard moves to dismiss all allegations against him which are contained in counts four through eight and both third party defendants move to dismiss [*15] O'Neals claims for cancellation of trademark registration contained in counts seven and eight for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. In their reply brief, third party defendants withdrew their motion to dismiss O'Neal's trade dress infringement claims presented in count three of the third party complaint. See Doc. # 20 at 1 n.1.[2] This Court address the remaining contentions below.

A. Third Party Defendant Blanchard

---

[2] Third party defendants state, in this footnote, that "One Industries hereby withdraws its motion to dismiss Count III" concerning trade dress infringement based on the clarification made by O'Neal in its opposition. Doc. # 20 at 1 n.1. This Court is mindful that One Industries and third party defendants are represented by the same counsel and filed their respective pleadings simultaneously containing identical footnotes. See id.; compare Doc. # 19 at 1 n.1. This Court is also mindful that third party defendants present no argument in reply concerning count three of the third party complaint which alleges trade dress infringement. This Court assumes the error in third party defendants' reply brief is merely typographical and, therefore, construes the statement as a withdrawal by third party defendants of their motion to dismiss count three of the third party complaint.

Third party defendant Blanchard separately moves to dismiss all claims against him because the complaint does not contain allegations of any individual action by Blanchard in regards to the alleged infringement of the intellectual property at issue. Doc. # 13 at 4-5. Blanchard claims that "[a] corporate officer may be held personally liable for trademark infringement 'in which he participates, notwithstanding that he acted as an agent of the corporation and not on his own behalf'" but a complaint must allege that "individual 'directs, controls, ratifies, participates in, or is the moving force behind the infringing activity . . ." Id. at 4 (quoting Committee for Idaho's High Desert, Inc. v. Yost, 92 F.3d 814, 824 (9th Cir. 1996); Babbit Electronics, Inc. v. Dynascan Corp., 38 F.3d 1161, 1181 (11th Cir. 1994)).

Blanchard explains that, although third party defendant Broinnard, co-founder and current president [*16] of One Industries, is alleged to have "'authorize[d] and direct[ed] One Industries to use'" the marks at bar "'in conjunction with distribution and sales of motocross related products . . .,'" no such allegations are presented in regards to Blanchard. Id. at 2 (quoting TPC[3] ¶¶ 27, 28). Therefore, absent the requisite allegations of individual action on Blanchard's part, Blanchard contends the third party complaint's allegations against him on all causes of action must be dismissed. Id. at 5.

In opposition, O'Neal contends it is sufficient that the third party complaint alleges Blanchard is a co-owner of the infringing marks in order to confer liability upon him. Doc. # 18 at 3. O'Neal claims that, as long as it can reasonably be inferred that "Blanchard knew, or should have known, about the infringing uses of the [marks]" . . . through his co-owner Boinnard," the third party complaint states a claim for trademark and trade dress infringement as well as the related unfair competition claim. Id. Blanchard contends, in reply, there is no authority for O'Neal's proposition that "'mere ownership is enough to confer liability.'" Doc. # 20 at 2 (quoting Doc. # 18 at 3).

Although both parties cite various cases [*17] that purport to support their respective positions, see Doc. # 18 at 3; Doc. # 20 at 2-3, this Court's review of the case authority cited, as well as its own independent research in this area, reveals that Blanchard's position is the correct one. The cases cited by O'Neal do not support the contention that simple ownership is enough to impose liability upon Blanchard absent some concrete action or intentional act on his part. See, e.g., Inwood Laboratories, Inc. v. Ives Laboratories, Inc., 456 U.S. 844, 854, 102 S. Ct. 2182, 72 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1982)(liability may be imposed upon manufacturer if it "intentionally induces another to infringe a trademark, or if it continues to supply its product to one whom it knows or has reason to know is engaging in trademark infringement . . ."); Mini Maid Services Co. v. Maid Brigade Systems, Inc., 967 F.2d 1516, 1522 (11th Cir. 1992)("we hold that the franchisor may be held accountable only if it intentionally induced its franchisees to infringe another's trademark or if it knowingly participated in a scheme of trademark infringement carried out by its franchisees."). The third party complaint here alleges no concrete action or intentional act concerning the alleged infringement of the marks by Blanchard. Therefore, this Court finds that the third party complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted against third party defendant [*18] Blanchard for trademark or trade dress infringement as well as the related claim for unfair competition. Accordingly, third party defendant Blanchard's motion to dismiss the third party complaint's allegations against him in its entirety is GRANTED and the claims against third party defendant Blanchard contained in counts four through eight are DISMISSED without prejudice.

B. Cancellation of Trademark Registration

Third party defendants[4] move to dismiss the allegations concerning cancellation of trademark registration contained in counts four through eight in the third party complaint. See Doc. # 13 at 6-7. Third party defendants point out that O'Neal's allegations are brought under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1064, but that section "'does not authorize suits for cancellation in district courts'" but, instead "authorizes persons to petition the Patent and Trademark Office to cancel registration of those marks." Id. at 7 (quoting Windsurfing International, Inc. v. AMF, Inc., 828 F.2d 755, 758 (Fed.Cir. 1986)). O'Neal, in opposition, contends this Court has "concurrent jurisdiction to trademark cancellation proceedings and routinely consider trademark cancellations under [section 1064]." Doc. # 18 at 7(citing cases). In addition, O'Neal distinguishes the instant case from the Windsurfing case, noting [*19] that, in Windsurfing, the court found no jurisdiction to consider trademark cancellation because there, unlike in this case, no justiciable trademark infringement controversy existed. Id.

[3] The third party complaint is referenced herein as "TPC."

[4] Because this Court dismisses third party defendant Blanchard, the remainder of the order relates only to third party defendant Boinnard even though the Court references both third party defendants as the moving parties.

Third party defendants state, in reply, that they do not dispute O'Neal's basis for cancellation or O'Neal's standing to seek cancellation. Doc. # 20 at 4. Third party defendants also indicate they do not dispute the district courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the United States Patent and Trademark office in regards to cancellation proceedings. Id. Third party defendants contend, however, that the section of the Lanham Act that O'Neal brings its claims under is "limited to authorizing inter partes proceedings and does not establish a cause of action to seek cancellation." Id. at 4-5. Therefore, third party defendants contend that, absent proper amendment, O'Neal's allegations fail to state a claim. Id.

This Court disagrees with third party defendants. As the Windsurfing court explained:

> district courts have the power to cancel registrations, but only in an 'action involving a registered mark. 15 U.S.C. § 1119. 'Involving' cannot mean the mere presence of a registered trademark, but must be read as involving the right to [*20] use the mark and thus the right to maintain the registration. [internal citations omitted]. There must, therefore, be something beyond the mere competitor status of the parties to serve as a basis for the court's jurisdiction. . . Such a basis may, for example, be a suit for trademark infringement . . . or a 'case of actual controversy' referred to in the Declaratory Judgment Act.

828 F.2d at 758. The third party complaint here clearly contains allegations of trademark and trade dress infringement. Third party defendants cannot and do not dispute that there is live case or controversy concerning those issues. Thus, this Court finds it has jurisdiction to consider trademark cancellation under Section 1064. Therefore, third party defendants' motion to dismiss O'Neal's claims concerning cancellation of trademark registration under Section 1064 is DENIED.

2. Motion for More Definite Statement

Lastly, third party defendants move for a more definite statement of O'Neal's second, fourth, fifth, sixth and ninth causes of action for the same reasons presented in support of One Industries' motion under Rule 12(e), that is, that the complaint contains allegations concerning five different and distinct logos identified as the O' mark . The arguments [*21] presented by the parties in support and opposition to One Industries' motion are almost identical to those presented here. After a careful consideration of the arguments and authority presented, this Court is also unpersuaded by O'Neal's claim in response to third party defendants' motion that it uses only one mark for the same reasons presented previously. Therefore, this Court finds that, in order for third party defendants to form a proper response to the allegations contained in counts two, four, five, six and nine of O'Neal's third party complaint, O'Neal must provide a more definite statement concerning the mark alleged to have been infringed. Accordingly, third party defendants' motion for a more definite statement under Rule 12(e) is GRANTED.

CONCLUSION AND ORDER

Based on the foregoing, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. One Industries' motion to dismiss and for a more definite statement is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART as follows:

    a. One Industries' motion to dismiss count four of O'Neal's counterclaims is GRANTED;

    b. One Industries' motion to dismiss O'Neal's sixth counterclaim for unfair competition under California Business and Professions Code § 17200 is DENIED; and

c. One Industries' motion for a more definite statement of counts [*22] two and five of O'Neal's counterclaims is GRANTED.

2. Third party defendants Blanchard and Boinnard's motion to dismiss and for a more definite statement is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART as follows:

a. Third party defendants' motion to dismiss all claims against third party defendant Blanchard is GRANTED and all claims against third party defendant Blanchard are hereby DISMISSED without prejudice;

b. Third party defendants' motion to dismiss O'Neal's claims for cancellation of trademark registration pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1064 is DENIED; and

c. Third party defendants' motion for a more definite statement of counts two, four, five, six and nine of the third party complaint is GRANTED.

3. One Industries' and third party defendants' motions to dismiss O'Neal's trade dress infringement claims are WITHDRAWN based on the parties' representations in their respective reply briefs.

This Court notes that neither One Industries nor third party defendants seek dismissal with prejudice nor indicate that an amendment of the counterclaims or third party complaint is unwarranted. Although a scheduling order has issued, this case is currently in the midst of discovery and the pretrial conference is scheduled to take [*23] place in November 2007. There does not appear, from the record currently before this Court, that any party will be severely prejudiced by allowing O'Neal the opportunity to correct the deficiencies outlined herein through amendment of its pleadings.

Therefore, IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that O'Neal may file amended counterclaims and/or an amended third party complaint within thirty (30) days of the date this Order is filed. Counter-defendants and third party defendants shall file their respective responsive pleadings to any amended pleadings filed by O'Neal in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Local Rules of this District.

Dated: May 29, 2007

/s/ John A. Houston

HON. JOHN A. HOUSTON

United States District Judge

Dailyedeals.com, Inc. v. Ecoupons Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of California

May 31, 2007, Decided; May 31, 2007, Filed

CASE NO. 06-CV-01522 H (JMA)

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106872 *; 2007 WL 9776581

DAILYEDEALS.COM, INC., a California corporation, Plaintiff, vs. ECOUPONS INC, a New York corporation; ECOUPONS INC, a New Jersey corporation; MATTHEW CHENG; MAKSIM RUBIS; ANDREW MILLS; and HTTP://WWW.ECOUPONS.COM, Defendants.ECOUPONS, INC., a New Jersey corporation and MATTHEW CHENG, an individual, Counterclaimants, vs. DAILYEDEALS, INC., a California corporation; AUGUST STUDIO LLC, a Kentucky limited liability company; MICHAEL K. KOVARIK, an individual; BAO T. PHAM, an individual; and TRANG T. PHAM, an individual, Counterdefendants.

Core Terms

eCoupons, retailers', alleges, affiliate, websites, monopolization, trademarks, unfair competition, Counterclaimant, sites, summary adjudication motion, Lanham Act, false designation, relevant market, ranking, unfair, moot, definite statement, motion to dismiss, search engine, misleading, linked, fail to state a claim, false advertising, common law, advertising, manipulate, traffic, Google, anchor

Counsel: [*1] For Dailydeals Inc, a California corporation, Plaintiff: Nathaniel Bruno, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Robert S Gerber, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael R. Murphy, Sheppard Mullin Richter and Hampton, San Diego, CA.

For Ecoupons Inc, a New York corporation, Defendant: Kenneth M. Fitzgerald, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fitzgerald Knaier LLP, San Diego, CA; Robert S Huie, U S Attorneys Office, Southern District of California, San Diego, CA.

For Matthew Cheng, an individual, Maksim Rubis, an individual, Andrew Mills, an individual, HTTP://WWW.Ecoupons.com, Defendants: Kenneth M. Fitzgerald, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fitzgerald Knaier LLP, San Diego, CA.

For Michael K. Kovarik, Counter Defendant: Nathaniel Bruno, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Robert S Gerber, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael R. Murphy, Sheppard Mullin Richter and Hampton, San Diego, CA.

For BAO T. PHAM, TRANG T. PHAM, Counter Defendants: Andrew B. Kaplan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kaplan Ludmer LLP, San Diego, CA.

For Dailydeals Inc, a California corporation, Michael K. Kovarik, Counter Defendants: Robert S Gerber, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheppard Mullin Richter and Hampton, San Diego, CA.

Judges: MARILYN L. [*2] HUFF, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: MARILYN L. HUFF

Opinion

ORDER: (1) GRANTING MOTIONS TO DISMISS AND DISMISSING COUNTERCLAIM WITHOUT PREJUDICE; (2) DENYING MOTION FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT AS MOOT (3) DENYING MOTION FOR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION WITHOUT PREJUDICE; AND (4) DENYING MOTION TO CONTINUE AS MOOT

On January 30, 2007, Dailyedeals.com, Inc., filed a first amended complaint ("FAC") against eCoupons Inc., a New York corporation, eCoupons Inc., a New Jersey corporation, Matthew Cheng Jr., Maksim Rubis, Andrew Mills, and the internet site http://www.ecoupons.com. (Doc. No. 65.) On February 9, 2007, all Defendants filed an answer, and eCoupons, Inc., a New Jersey corporation ("eCoupons") filed a counterclaim. (Doc. No. 66.) In the counterclaim, eCoupons asserts claims against Dailyedeals, Inc., August Studio LLC, Michael K. Kovarik, Bao T. Pham, and Trang T. Pham (collectively "Counterdefendants").[1]

On April 2, 2007, Dailyedeals.com, Inc. ("Dailyedeals") and Michael K. Kovarik filed a motion for summary adjudication regarding two of eCoupons' counterclaims and for dismissal of all the counterclaims. (Doc. No. 83.) On May 21, 2007, eCoupons filed a response in opposition. (Doc. No. 101.) Also [*3] on that date, eCoupons filed a motion seeking a continuance of Dailyedeals and Kovarik's motion for summary adjudication. (Doc. No. 99.) Dailyedeals and Kovarik filed a reply in support of their motion for summary adjudication and for dismissal on May 24, 2007. (Doc. No. 105.)

On April 12, 2007, Counterdefendants Bao T. Pham, Trang T. Pham (collectively "the Phams"), and August Studio, LLC ("August Studio") filed a motion to dismiss eCoupons' counterclaims against them. (Doc. No. 92 & 93.) Additionally, they sought an order requiring a more definite statement from eCoupons. (Id.) On May 21, 2007, eCoupons filed a response in opposition. (Doc. No. 100.) The Phams and August Studio filed a reply on May 25, 2007. (Doc. No. 106-08.)

Pursuant to its discretion under Civil Local Rule 7.1(d)(1), the Court finds this matter appropriate for decision without oral argument. For the reasons stated below, the Court GRANTS Counterdefendants' motions to dismiss. (Doc. Nos. 83, 92.) The Court DISMISSES without prejudice eCoupons' counterclaim. Accordingly, the Court DENIES without prejudice Dailyedeals and Kovarik's motion for summary adjudication. (Doc. No. 83.) The Court DENIES as moot the Phams and August Studio's motion [*4] for a more definite statement. (Doc. No. 93.) Further, the Court DENIES as moot eCoupons' motion to continue the motion for summary adjudication. (Doc. No. 99.)

Background

Counterclaimant eCoupons owns several websites, including www.ecoupons.com. (AC ¶ 10.) Dailyedeals owns and operates several competing websites, such as www.allonlinecoupons.com and www.amazingcounters.com. (Id. ¶ 2.) According to the AC, these websites derive revenue from "affiliate programs," through which retailers pay these websites for increasing website traffic and revenue to the retailers' websites. (Id. ¶ 11.) The more traffic that an affiliate drives to the retailers' sites, the large the revenue garnered by the affiliate. (Id. ¶ 13.) According to eCoupons, as part of the agreement to become an affiliate of a particular retailer, the affiliates must agree not to link the retailers' sites from third party sites. (Id. ¶ 12.) According to the AC, many of the affiliate agreements expressly prohibit affiliates from unfairly competing with the retailers by using the retailers' trademarks or from diluting the trademarks by using any of the retailers' trademarks, directly or indirectly, on their websites. (Id.) Further, [*5] some of the affiliate agreements also expressly prohibit affiliates from engineering their web sites in such a way so as to pull internet traffic away from the retailers' sites. (Id.)

According to eCoupons, internet traffic is driven to retailers' sites through search engines such as Google and Yahoo, which rank web pages based on their relevance to search terms. (Id. ¶ 14.) Higher ranked pages receive more traffic. (Id.) The AC alleges that these rankings may be manipulated through a concept known as "google

---

[1] The caption to the counterclaim designates that Matthew Cheng is also a counterclaimant. The allegations in the counterclaim do not include Matthew Cheng, however, but only state that eCoupons is a counterclaimant. (See AC.)

bombing." (Id. ¶ 15.) Google bombing involves linking to a particular website using specific and allegedly relevant language to describe the link ("anchor text"). (Id.) According to eCoupons, more often than not the anchor text is not at all relevant to the linked site. (Id.)

A. Intentional Manipulation of Search Engine Rankings

The AC alleges that Counterdefendants used their websites to participate in affiliate programs. (Id. ¶ 16.) Using amazingcounters.com, Counterdefendants allegedly distributed hundreds of thousands of incoming links containing retailers' trademarks as anchor text to third party websites that linked to allonlinecoupons.com and numerous other websites that Counterdefendants [*6] allegedly owned. (Id. ¶ 17.) As a result, allonlinecoupons.com and other Counterdefendants' websites together have generated over $500,000 per month in net revenue and constitute one of the largest affiliates. (Id. ¶ 18.) Between March 2006 and May 2006, allonlinecoupons.com was the top search result in Google's index for "joanns," "overtons.com," "spiegel," "oldnavy," "blair.com," "best buy," and "target.com." (Id. ¶ 19.) As of May 2006, Counterdefendants' websites allonlinecoupons.com and amazingcounters.com have been removed from the Google index. (Id. ¶ 20.) The page ranks for these two websites have been set to zero. (Id.) Without these two websites in the Google index, the top search result for each of the various search terms noted above is the official website of each retailer. (Id. ¶ 21.)

Counterclaimant eCoupons alleges that Counterdefendants also use retailers' trademarks in a misleading and unfair way in order to manipulate the search engines into ranking Counterdefendants' websites higher. (Id. ¶ 22.) In particular, the AC alleges that Counterdefendants embed retailers' trademarks as hidden or very small text in their web counters. (Id. ¶ 23.) The AC alleges that Counterdefendants [*7] misleadingly and unfairly use retailers' trademarks as anchor text to manipulate the search engines into ranking Counterdefendants' websites higher. (Id. ¶ 24.) The AC also alleges that Counterdefendants create websites for the sole purpose of linking in order to achieve higher rankings in the search engine results. (Id. ¶ 25.)

B. Intentional Breach of Affiliate Program Agreements

According to eCoupons, Counterdefendants agreed with retailers under the affiliate agreements to refrain from unfairly competing with the retailers by using the retailers' trademarks or from diluting the retailers' trademarks by using the trademarks in metatags, in hidden text or source code, in affiliates' domain or sub domain, or in any other manner. (Id. ¶¶ 26-27.) According to the AC, Counterdefendants agreed under some of the affiliate agreements to refrain from engineering their affiliate sites to pull internet traffic away from the retailers' websites. (Id. ¶ 28.) Counterclaimant eCoupons alleges that Counterdefendants use the retailers' trademarks in a misleading way in conjunction with webcounters. (Id. ¶ 30.) According to the AC, Counterdefendants use retailers' trademarks as anchor text when in fact [*8] the linked site is another site owned or operated by Counterdefendants. (Id. ¶ 31.) According to eCoupons, by misrepresenting that the anchor text is a link to the infringed-upon retailers' site, Counterdefendants engage in misleading advertising. (Id.) Finally, eCoupons alleges that, by using the third party retailers' trademarks on Counterdefendants' linked sites, Counterdefendants infringe upon the retailers' trademarks and unfairly compete with the retailer in violation of the affiliate agreement and state and federal unfair competition law. (Id. ¶ 32.)

C. Counterclaims

Based upon these allegations, eCoupons brings four counterclaims against Counterdefendants. First, eCoupons alleges a claim for false designation of origin and false advertising against all Counterdefendants under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). Second, eCoupons brings a claim for monopolization and attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C. § 2 against Dailyedeals and Kovarik. Third, eCoupons alleges a claim of common law unfair competition against all Counterdefendants. Fourth, eCoupons brings a claim for unfair competition against all Counterdefendants under California Business and Professions Code § 17200.

Discussion

A. Legal Standard for Motion to Dismiss

Rule 12(b)(6) permits dismissal of a claim [*9] either where that claim lacks a cognizable legal theory, or where insufficient facts are alleged to support the plaintiff's theory. See Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). In resolving a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the court must: (1) construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff; (2) accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true; and (3) determine whether plaintiff can prove facts to support a claim that would merit relief. See Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). While a plaintiff need not give "detailed factual allegations," he must plead sufficient facts that, if true, "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." *Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 5901 at 21 (2007).

Dismissal for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted is proper if a complaint is vague, conclusory, and fails to set forth any material facts in support of the allegation. See North Star Int'l v. Arizona Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 583 (9th Cir. 1983). Furthermore, a court may not "supply essential elements of the claim that were not initially pled." Ivey v. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. of Alaska, 673 F.2d 266, 268 (9th Cir. 1982). If a complaint fails to state a claim, the court should grant leave to amend unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts. See Doe v. United States, 58 F.3d 494, 497 (9th Cir.1995).

B. Lanham Act Claims

In its first counterclaim, eCoupons brings a claim against all Counterdefendants for false designation of origin and false [*10] advertising. Counterdefendants argue that eCoupons has failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim.

Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1), provides in pertinent part:

> Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which--
>
> > (A) is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person, or as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person, or
> >
> > (B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities,
>
> shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

1. False Designation of Origin

To state a claim for false designation of origin under § 1125(a)(1)(A), a plaintiff must allege five elements:

> (1) defendant uses a [*11] designation (any word, term, name, device, or any combination thereof) or false designation of origin;
> (2) the use was in interstate commerce;
> (3) the use was in connection with goods or services;
> (4) the designation or false designation is likely to cause confusion, mistake, or deception as to (a) the affiliation, connection, or association of defendant with another person, or (b) as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of defendant's goods, services, or commercial activities by another person; and
> (5) plaintiff has been or is likely to be damaged by these acts.

Summit Tech., Inc. v. High-Line Med. Instruments, Co., 933 F. Supp. 918, 928 (C.D. Cal. 1996) (citing J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 27.03[1][a]). "A likelihood of confusion exists when consumers 'are likely to assume that a product or service is associated with a source other than its actual source because of similarities between the two sources' marks or marketing techniques.'" Metro Publishing, Ltd. v. San Jose Mercury News, 987 F.2d 637, 640 (9th Cir.1993) (quoting Nutri/System, Inc. v. Con-Stan Indus., Inc., 809 F.2d 601, 604 (9th Cir. 1987) and Shakey's Inc. v. Covalt, 704 F.2d 426, 431 (9th Cir. 1983)).

Examining the allegations in the AC, eCoupons has failed to allege facts sufficient to state a claim for false designation of origin. While eCoupons alleges that "Counterdefendants have used retailers' trademarks . . . in a manner likely to cause confusion or mistake in the consumer market for online [*12] goods," it has not alleged a single mark or a single retailer. (AC ¶ 34.) Similarly, eCoupons alleges that "many" or "some" of the affiliate agreements prohibit certain uses of retailers' marks. (Id. ¶ 12.) Further, eCoupons has not pleaded sufficient facts regarding why consumers are likely to be confused regarding Counterdefendants' affiliation with retailers or the origin of goods purchased through Counterdefendants' websites. Instead, eCoupons' claim consists of conclusory and vague language. As the Supreme Court has recently observed, "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above a speculative level." Bell Atlantic Corp., 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 5901 at *21. Accordingly, eCoupons has failed to state a Lanham Act claim for false designation of origin.

2. False Advertising

To state a claim for false advertising under § 1125(a)(1)(B), a plaintiff must allege five elements:

1) in advertisements, defendant made false statements of fact about its own or another's product;

2) those advertisements actually deceived or have the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of their audience;

3) such deception is material, in that it is likely to influence the purchasing decision;

4) defendant caused its falsely advertised goods to enter interstate [*13] commerce; and

5) plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as the result of the foregoing either by direct diversion of sales from itself to defendant, or by lessening of the goodwill which its products enjoy with the buying public.

Rice v. Fox Broad. Co., 330 F.3d 1170, 1180 (9th Cir. 2003).

Looking at the AC, eCoupons does not allege that Counterdefendants made false statements of fact about their own products or any retailers' products. Moreover, eCoupons has not pleaded sufficient facts as to the remaining elements of a false advertising claim, but instead simply recites the statutory language of § 1125(a)(1)(B). (AC ¶ 35.) Accordingly, eCoupons has failed to state a claim for false advertising under the Lanham Act.

C. Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization

In its second claim, eCoupons alleges a claim against Dailyedeals and Kovarik for monopolization and attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C. § 2. Dailyedeals and Kovarik move to dismiss this claim.

"The offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident." [*14] United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); High Tech. Careers v. San Jose Mercury News, 996 F.2d 987, 989-90 (9th Cir. 1993). Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition in the relevant market. High Tech. Careers, 996 F.2d at 990. Monopoly power "exists whenever prices can be raised above competitive market levels." Id.

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). To determine whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts consider the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in the market. Id.

Looking at the AC, eCoupons alleges that the relevant market is the "Affiliate Programs' online coupon market." (AC ¶ 40.) Further, because Dailyedeals and Kovarik used the internet to conduct business, eCoupons alleges that "there are at least two relevant geographical markets: (1) North America [U.S.] and (2) international (i.e., outside of North America [U.S.])." (Id.) With regard to market share, eCoupons alleges:

> Daily eDeals has market power in the relevant market and a substantial or monopoly share of the relevant market as evidenced by its more than $500,000 [*15] net per month. Daily eDeals and Kovarik monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, each of these markets in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. To the extent that Daily eDeals and Kovarik have not yet monopolized the relevant markets, there is a dangerous probability that they will successfully do so.

(Id. ¶ 42.) These allegations fail to state a claim for either monopolization or attempted monopolization. In particular, Counterclaimant eCoupons has not pleaded any facts regarding the size of the relevant market or Dailyedeals' share of the market. Further, eCoupons has not pleaded facts showing a dangerous probability that Dailyedeals and Kovarik will monopolize the market. Instead, eCoupons simply recites the elements of a claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization. Accordingly, eCoupons has not pleaded facts sufficient to state a claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization.

D. Common Law Unfair Competition

In the third claim for relief, eCoupons brings a claim against all Counterdefendants for common law unfair competition. All Counterdefendants move to dismiss this claim.

Under California law, a plaintiff must allege four elements to state a claim for common law unfair [*16] competition: (1) the plaintiff has invested substantial time, skill, or money in developing its property; (2) the defendant appropriated and used the plaintiff's property at little or no cost; (3) the defendant's appropriation was without authorization or consent of the plaintiff; and (4) the plaintiff was injured by the defendant's conduct. See, e.g., City Solutions, Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 365 F.3d 835, 842 (9th Cir. 2004); see also Balboa Ins. Co. v. Trans Global Equities, 218 Cal. App. 3d 1327, 1342, 267 Cal. Rptr. 787 (1990). "The common law tort of unfair competition is generally thought to be synonymous with the act of 'passing off' one's goods as those of another . . . [or] acts analogous to 'passing off,' such as the sale of confusingly similar products, by which a person exploits a competitor's reputation in the market." Bank of the West v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. 4th 1254, 1264, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 538, 833 P.2d 545 (1992); Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1147 (9th Cir. 1997) (same).

In its common law unfair competition claim, eCoupons alleges that Counterdefendants' "conduct . . . in manipulating search engine results and the deceptive and misleading way that 'free' webcounters are used constitute unfair competition with eCoupons, in violation of the common law of the United States and California." (AC ¶ 46.) All of eCoupons allegations relate to Counterdefendants' use of third party retailers' marks and goodwill. Thus, eCoupons fails to allege that it has invested substantial time, skill, [*17] or money in developing any property. Further, eCoupons does not allege that any Counterdefendant appropriated any of eCoupons' property. Thus, eCoupons has failed to allege that Counterdefendants exploited eCoupons' reputation in the market. Moreover, eCoupons has not alleged actions analogous to passing off the goods of another. Finally, eCoupons has not directed the Court to any authority supporting a common law unfair competition claim against a defendant for appropriating and using a third party's trademarks. Accordingly, eCoupons' common law unfair competition claim fails.

E. Statutory Unfair Competition

In its fourth claim for relief, eCoupons brings a claim against all Counterdefendants for unfair competition under California Business & Professions Code § 17200. Section 17200 provides, in pertinent part, "unfair competition shall mean and include any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." The California Supreme Court has provided guidance with regard to § 17200 claims in which a competitor alleges anticompetitive practices:

> When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's "unfair" act or practice invokes section 17200, the word "unfair" in that section [*18] means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Cal-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 & n.12 (1999). For an act to be unfair within the meaning of the statute, the unfairness must "be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition." Id. at 186-87. Moreover, the Ninth Circuit has observed that unfair competition claims pursuant to § 17200 are "substantially congruent" to claims made under the Lanham Act. See, e.g., Cleary v. News Corp., 30 F.3d 1255, 1262-63 (9th Cir. 1994) (affirming dismissal of § 17200 claim for same reasons as dismissal of Lanham Act claim).

In its fourth claim, eCoupons relies largely on allegations made with regard to its other claims. Additionally, eCoupons concludes that "Counterdefendants' conduct relating to search engine manipulation, intentional breach of Affiliate Agreements, and infringement of retailers' trademarks, has intentionally caused a likelihood of confusion among online shopping consumers and has unfairly competed with eCoupons in violation" of § 17200. According to Counterdefendants, like its three previous claims, [*19] eCoupons' § 17200 claim fails to state facts upon which relief may be granted. In opposition, eCoupons argues that it has alleged violations of the Lanham Act and the Sherman Act, as well as other unfair practices, and thus, it has made out a claim for relief under § 17200.

The Court has already concluded that eCoupons has failed to state a claim under either the Lanham Act or the Sherman Act, and likewise, it has failed to state a claim for common law unfair competition. Thus, the Ninth Circuit's observation that § 17200 claims are largely congruous with Lanham Act claims weighs in favor of dismissal here. Moreover, eCoupons provides few additional facts in support of its § 17200 claim. Examining the AC, other than stating the legal standard, eCoupons has not alleged that Counterdefendants' actions threaten an incipient violation of an antitrust law or that they otherwise significantly harm competition. See Cal-Tech Commc'ns, Inc., 20 Cal. 4th at 187. Therefore, eCoupons fails to state a claim under § 17200 against any of the Counterdefendants.

F. The Phams and August Studio's Motion for More Definite Statement

Besides moving to dismiss all three claims alleged against them, the Phams and August Studio ask the Court to require a more definite statement from eCoupons. [*20] Given that the Court has dismissed all of eCoupons' claims, the Court DENIES as moot the Phams and August Studio's motion for more definite statement.

G. Dailyedeals and Kovarik's Motion for Summary Adjudication

As the Court has dismissed all of the claims pending against Dailyedeals and Kovarik, the Court DENIES Dailyedeals and Kovarik's motion for summary adjudication without prejudice. Further, the Court DENIES as moot eCoupons' motion to continue the motion for summary adjudication.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the Court GRANTS Counterdefendants' motions to dismiss. (Doc. Nos. 83, 92.) Therefore, the Court DISMISSES without prejudice eCoupons' counterclaim in its entirety. Accordingly, the Court DENIES without prejudice Dailyedeals and Kovarik's motion for summary adjudication. (Doc. No. 83.) The Court

DENIES as moot the Phams and August Studio's motion for a more definite statement. (Doc. No. 93.) Further, the Court DENIES as moot eCoupons' motion to continue the motion for summary adjudication. (Doc. No. 99.) Counterclaimant eCoupons shall file any amended complaint addressing the deficiencies noted above within 30 days of the date this order is filed.

IT IS SO ORDERED. [*21]

DATED: May 31, 2007

/s/ Marilyn L. Huff

MARILYN L. HUFF, District Judge

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

June 1, 2007, Decided

No. M 02-1486 PJH

Reporter

516 F. Supp. 2d 1072 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44354 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,736

In re DYNAMIC RANDOM ACCESS MEMORY (DRAM) ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates to: All Indirect Purchaser Actions

Subsequent History: Request denied by In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101249 (N.D. Cal., July 9, 2007)

Motion granted by In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66785 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 17, 2007)

Prior History: In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20570 (N.D. Cal., Mar. 6, 2007)

Core Terms

purchaser, plaintiffs', indirect, antitrust, defendants', pleadings, allegations, antitrust statute, factors, class action, consumer protection, price-fixing, cases, motion for judgment, antitrust violation, products, reasons, unfair, Cartwright Act, deceptive, tolling, anti trust law, state law, damages, conspiracy, practices, consumers, cause of action, interpreting, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) provides that any party may move for judgment on the pleadings after the pleadings are closed, but within such time as not to delay the trial. A motion for judgment on the pleadings challenges the legal sufficiency of the opposing party's pleadings, and the allegations contained therein.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The standard applied by the court in treating a motion for judgment on the pleadings is the same as that applied by the court in considering motions to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In short, judgment on the pleadings is appropriate when, even if all material facts in the pleading under attack are true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The United States Supreme Court, in passing on the Rule 12(b)(6) standard in the antitrust context recently, also noted that while a complaint attacked by a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiffs obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN3[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) does not mention leave to amend; however, courts generally have discretion in granting 12(c) motions with leave to amend, particularly in cases where the motion is based on a pleading technicality. There is a strong policy in favor of allowing amendment, unless amendment would be futile, results from bad faith or undue delay, or will unfairly prejudice the opposing party. Courts also have discretion to grant dismissal on a 12(c) motion, in lieu of judgment, on any given claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN4[] Standing, Requirements

The concept of antitrust standing has its roots in federal law. It refers to the standing requirements that a plaintiff must satisfy in all private antitrust suits seeking monetary damages under the federal antitrust statutes. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a). A plaintiff seeking monetary damages for antitrust violations must prove that he or she has been (1) injured in his business or property; (2) by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a). Under the first element, a plaintiff must demonstrate injury--or the fact of damage--to his or her business or property interests, which injury is causally linked to an antitrust violation. Generally speaking, allegations that plaintiff consumers have paid higher prices for goods purchased for personal use due to defendants' conduct have satisfied this element. Under the more critical second element, referred to as antitrust injury, a plaintiff must also demonstrate injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. In other words, a plaintiff must connect any alleged injury to the purposes of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN5[] Standing, Requirements

Even assuming that a plaintiff is able to make a showing of antitrust injury, the antitrust standing inquiry is not at an end. This is because a plaintiff's right to sue for money damages is nonetheless subject to certain limitations, based upon policies found by the courts to be inherent in the structure and purpose of the antitrust laws. Where a plaintiff's injury, for example, is derivative of a more direct injury to some other person, and that person would have a strong motivation to pursue its own antitrust claim against the defendant, standing is likely to be denied. This is the rationale underlying Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois in which the United States Supreme Court held that indirect purchasers are too remote to suffer true antitrust injury, and therefore do not have standing under federal antitrust law to pursue antitrust claims. In recognition of this and other concerns that impact the antitrust standing analysis, the Supreme Court has fashioned a general balancing test to be used in determining whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

The AGC test, as it is called, enumerates a variety of factors that are employed in evaluating the plaintiffs harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them, in order to determine standing. These factors include the nature of the injury alleged, the directness of the injury, the speculative nature of the harm, the risk of duplicative recovery, and the complexity in apportioning damages. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has embraced this test, announcing its commitment to the AGC factors in American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN7[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Cartwright Act prohibits unlawful restrictions on competition, and grants any person who is injured in his or her business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by the Act the right to bring a civil action for treble damages, regardless of whether such injured person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726, 16750.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN8[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

California's Cartwright Act is an Illinois Brick repealer statute, under which indirect purchaser standing is permissible in private actions alleging violations of antitrust law. However, while the Cartwright Act directly contradicts federal law insofar as indirect purchaser standing is generally concerned, it does not follow from this either that indirect purchaser status is itself sufficient under California law to establish antitrust standing, or that California law necessarily eschews the general test for antitrust standing as set forth in AGC.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Standing, Requirements

The federal antitrust standing inquiry is based on consideration of more than merely a plaintiff's status as direct or indirect purchaser. This reasoning - which underscores the federal courts' determination that antitrust standing must be affirmatively demonstrated with regard to other factors - logically should apply to consideration of the Cartwright Act, as well.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN10[] Private Actions, State Regulation

The Cartwright Act's, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720, grant of indirect purchaser standing, while ensuring that plaintiffs' status as indirect purchasers cannot bar their claim under the Cartwright Act, does not in actuality set forth the sum total of what a given plaintiff must establish in order to satisfy antitrust standing generally.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN11[] Private Actions, Remedies

A plaintiff may only pursue an antitrust action if it can show antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has identified four requirements for antitrust injury, which serve as a helpful guide here: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. A central concern of the antitrust injury analysis is in protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market. To that end, antitrust standing is granted only where the plaintiff is a participant in the relevant market - e.g., a consumer or competitor in the relevant market alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN12[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Ohio Supreme Court has expressly stated that it adopts and follows Illinois Brick's direct-purchaser requirement and holds that an indirect purchaser of goods may not assert a Valentine Act claim for alleged violations of Ohio antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN13[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Federal decisional law interpreting the Sherman Act is to be applied in interpreting West Virginia's parallel antitrust statute. However, while this would seem to suggest that the Illinois Brick doctrine also extends to indirect purchaser actions brought under West Virginia's state antitrust statute, this conclusion is called into question by the fact that the West Virginia attorney general has promulgated a legislative rule expressly permitting antitrust suits brought by indirect purchasers. The attorney general's ability to promulgate such a rule is contemplated by the state's antitrust statute itself, which explicitly grants the state attorney general the right to adopt rules and regulations interpreting and, enforcing West Virginia's antitrust statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN14[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

South Dakota's antitrust statute should be read to cover unlawful anticompetitive conduct, as long as any part of it is within South Dakota--i.e., as long as any part of it takes place or has an effect within the state. S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-3.1. A contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons in restraint of trade or commerce any part of which is within this state is unlawful. This reading is supported by the literal language of the statute.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN15[] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

The class tolling doctrine holds that the commencement of a class action stops the running of statutes of limitations as to all claims that might be asserted by all members of the class. The United States Supreme Court has held that the doctrine helps to safeguard the principal purposes of the Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 class action procedure - promotion of efficiency and economy of litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN16[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

La. Rev. Stat. § 51:1409(A) provides that plaintiffs may bring an action individually but not in a representative capacity to recover actual damages under the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN17[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Mont. Code Ann. § 30-14-133(1) provides that consumers may bring an individual but not a class action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN18[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

N.Y. CPLR 901(b) presents no bar to class action suits seeking actual damages pursuant to N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN19[] Legislation, Interpretation

Where no controlling state law cases are available, the court has looked to state legislative history - where available and relied on by the parties - as persuasive authority regarding proper statutory interpretation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN20[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Alaska's Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act (AUTPCPA) provides: A person who suffers an ascertainable loss of money or property as a result of another person's act or practice declared unlawful under AUTPCPA may bring a civil action to recover for each unlawful act or practice three times the actual damages or $ 500, whichever is greater. Alaska Stat. § 45.50.531. There is nothing in the statute's wording or definitions, however, that specifically defines either direct or indirect purchasers as persons, or that distinguishes between the two. Nor is there any guidance provided by the language of the statute as to whether, more generally, indirect purchaser standing in the antitrust context suffices under the AUTPCPA.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN21[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-315(b), does not limit suits by indirect purchasers expressly to the state attorney general. It merely provides an affirmative right of action for the attorney general, which the attorney general may, in his or her discretion, exercise.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

HN22[] Effect & Operation, Retrospective Operation

Under Hawaii case law, a statute has retroactive effect only if the language of the statute itself or the legislative history expressly indicate that the statute should be applied retroactively.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN23[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Any person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section. Haw. Stat. Ann. § 480-2(e). Thus, it is the bringing, or filing, of an action to which the statute applies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN24[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Idaho Supreme Court has explicitly held that indirect purchasers of price-fixed products cannot sue under Idaho's consumer protection statute, the Consumer Protection Act, Idaho Code Ann. § 48-601 et seq., since the statute specifically lists the types of conduct that are unlawful, and price-fixing is not one of them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN25[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Price-fixing is not listed in Idaho Code § 48-603 as conduct that constitutes either an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive act or practice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN26[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act's, Mont . Code Ann. § 30-14-101 et seq., consumer protection provisions provide that the proper source of analogous federal law is the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN27[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

As a general matter, a claim under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 may be predicated on allegations of antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN28[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

New York's state antitrust statute, the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(6), expressly repeals Illinois Brick and allows for indirect purchaser standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN29[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

In order to state a claim under section 349, plaintiffs must allege first, that the challenged act or practice was consumer-oriented; second, that it was misleading in a material way; and third, that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN30[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Oregon Unfair Trade Practices Act expressly states that no action or suit may be brought under Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.608(1)(u) unless the Attorney General has first established a rule in accordance with the provisions of Or. Rev. Stat. ch. 183 declaring the conduct to be unfair or deceptive in trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN31[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Rhode Island Supreme Court has construed the Rhode Island Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act, R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-1 et seq., to require that only natural persons are permitted to bring private rights of action under the statute, which natural persons must have purchased or leased goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN32[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The West Virginia Consumer Credit and Protection Statute, W. Va. Code § 46A-6-101 et seq., prohibits unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce. The statute also purports to define what is meant by unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, and does so by enumerating a list of various acts and practices that the statute defines as unfair or deceptive.

Counsel: [1] For Internet Integration Inc. on its own behalf and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Cardio Zirpoli, LEAD ATTORNEY, Geoffrey C. Rushing, Guido Saveri, Richard Alexander Saveri, Saveri & Saveri Inc., San Francisco, CA.; Fred Taylor Isquith, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, New York, NY, US.; Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman DeValerio Pease Tabacco Burt & Pu, San Francisco, CA.; Merrick Scott Rayle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lovell Stewart Halebian LLP, Pacific Grove, CA.; Allan Steyer, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Anthony J. Gaughan, Madison, WI, US.; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steve W. Berman, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Christopher Lovell, Lovell Stewart Halebian LLP, New York, NY.; D. Scott Macrae, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Eugene A. Spector, Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, Spector Roseman & Kodroff PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Francis A. Bottini, Jr., Johnson Bottini, LLP, San Diego, CA.; Francis M. Gregorek, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, San Diego, CA.; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, [2] St. Paul, MN.; Joel Cary Meredith, Steven J. Greenfogel, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Kevin J. O'Connor, Linda S. Schmidt, Madison, WI, US.; Paul J. Stancil, Milwaukee, WI, US.; Steven A. Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg & Ament PC, Chicago, IL.; Susan G. Kupfer, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For William Breck Seiniger, Jr., Plaintiff: Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman DeValerio Pease Tabacco Burt & Pu, San Francisco, CA.; Steve W. Berman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Anthony D. Shapiro, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Craig R. Spiegel, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Eugene A. Spector, Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, Spector Roseman & Kodroff PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN.; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID.; Joel Cary Meredith, Steven J. Greenfogel, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Steven A. Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg & Ament PC, Chicago, IL.; Susan G. Kupfer, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For C3 Information Technology LLC, Midland Solutions [3] Group Inc., Plaintiffs: Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman DeValerio Pease Tabacco Burt & Pu, San Francisco, CA.; Steven A. Kanner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg & Ament PC, Chicago, IL.; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steve W. Berman, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Eugene A. Spector, Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, Spector Roseman & Kodroff PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN.; Joel Cary Meredith, Steven J. Greenfogel, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID.; Susan G. Kupfer, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Continental Promotion Group Inc., Plaintiff: Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman DeValerio Pease Tabacco Burt & Pu, San Francisco, CA.; Mark Reinhardt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Mark A. Wendorf, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN.; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steve W. Berman, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Eugene A. Spector, Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, Spector Roseman & Kodroff PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Joel Cary [4] Meredith, Steven J. Greenfogel, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID.; Steven A. Kanner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg & Ament PC, Chicago, IL.; Susan G. Kupfer, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Web Ideals LLC, Plaintiff: Eugene A. Spector, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, Spector Roseman & Kodroff PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman DeValerio

Pease Tabacco Burt & Pu, San Francisco, CA.; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steve W. Berman, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN.; Joel Cary Meredith, Steven J. Greenfogel, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID.; Steven A. Kanner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg & Ament PC, Chicago, IL.; Susan G. Kupfer, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For 5207 Inc., Plaintiff: Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman DeValerio Pease Tabacco Burt & Pu, San Francisco, CA.; Laurence D. King, LEAD [5] ATTORNEY, Kaplan Fox & Kilsheimer LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Mary Jane Edelstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wolf Heldenstein Alder Freeman & Herz, Chicago, IL.; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steve W. Berman, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Daniel E. Gustafson, Renae Diane Steiner, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, Minneapolis, MN.; Emilio Eugene Varanini, IV, California Office of the Attorney General, Los Angeles, CA.; Eugene A. Spector, Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, Spector Roseman & Kodroff PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Francis A. Bottini, Jr., Johnson Bottini, LLP, San Diego, CA.; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN.; Gary L. Specks, Kaplan Fox & Kilsheimer, LLP, Chicago, IL, US.; Joel Cary Meredith, Steven J. Greenfogel, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick PC, Philadelphia, PA.; Steven A. Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg & Ament PC, Chicago, IL.; Susan G. Kupfer, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For JEM Electronics Distributors Inc, Plaintiff: Bonny E. Sweeney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lerach Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman & Robbins LLP, San Diego, CA.

For PC Doctor Inc., Plaintiff: Alfred Glenn Yates, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Office [6] of Alfred G. Yates Jr, P.C, Pittsburgh, PA.; Stephen E. Connolly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Schiffrin & Barrowy, LLP, Radnor, PA.

For Network Business Solutions, Plaintiff: Susan G. Kupfer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Glancy & Binkow LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., Berman DeValerio Pease Tabacco Burt & Pu, San Francisco, CA.

For Advanced Technology Distributors Inc., Plaintiff: Roger M. Schrimp, LEAD ATTORNEY, Clinton P. Walker, Gene J. Stonebarger, Damrell, Nelson, Schrimp, Pathos, Pache, Modesto, CA.; Anthony D. Shapiro, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA.; Bonny E. Sweeney, Lerach Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman & Robbins LLP, San Diego, CA.; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson, Simon, Soter, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Steven Noel Williams, Cotchett Pitre & McCarthy, Burlingame, CA.

For Michael Wilkser, Plaintiff: Willem F. Jonckheer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Schubert & Reed LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Bernard Persky, Goodkind Labaton Rudoff & Sucharow, New York, NY.; Juden Justice Reed, Schubert & Reed LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Marvin Alan Miller, Miller Law LLC, Chicago, IL.

For Dolphin Consulting Inc., Plaintiff: Kevin Bruce Love, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hanzman Criden & Love, [7] P.A., South Miami, FL.

For Gregory M. Nespole, Plaintiff: Mary Jane Edelstein Fait, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman Herz LLP, Chicago, IL.; Fred Taylor Isquith, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, LEAD ATTORNEY, New York, NY, US.

For Onshore Inc., Plaintiff: Francis A. Bottini, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Johnson Bottini, LLP, San Diego, CA.; Mary Jane Edelstein Fait, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wolf Heldenstein Alder Freeman & Herz, Chicago, IL.; Francis M. Gregorek, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, San Diego, CA.; Fred Taylor Isquith, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, LEAD ATTORNEY, New York, NY, US.

For Daniel E. Clement, Plaintiff: Ryan M. Hagan, Alexander Hawes & Audet, LLP, San Jose, CA.

For Dawn Thompson, Plaintiff: Kenneth George Gilman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gilman and Pastor, LLP, Boston, MA.

For Bernard Weisburgh, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Dennis James Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Peter John McDougall, Johnson & Perkinson, South Burlington, VT. Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.; Lisa Marie Williams, [8] Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mike Kinkade, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Williams, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; C. Dewey Branstetter, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Branstetter Kilgore Stranch & Jennings, Nashville, TN.; Dennis Stewart, Hulett Harper Stewart LLP, San Diego, CA.; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.; James G. Stranch, III, James G. Stranch, IV, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, Nashville, TN.

For Lance Jennings, Jeff Lindsey, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs: C. Dewey Branstetter, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, James G. Stranch, IV, James G. Stranch, III, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, Nashville, TN.

For Don Greene, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated in Tennessee, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Williams, Steyer Lowenthal Broodrookas Alvarez, & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Douglas S. Johnston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Barrett, Johnston & Parsley, Nashville, TN.; Dennis Stewart, Hulett Harper Stewart LLP, San Diego, CA.; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.; Jeffrey A. Bartos, Guerrieri Edmond [9] & Clayman PC, Washington, DC.; Wyatt B. Durrette, Jr., Durrette Bradshaw, Richmond, VA.

For Chiengthong Kongkham, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Williams, Steyer Lowenthal Broodrookas Alvarez, & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; James F. Wyatt, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wyatt & Blake LLP, Charlotte, NC.; Ian Otto, Timothy D. Battin, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.

For John G. Elias, on behalf of himself and all other similarly situated in Tennessee, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Williams, Steyer Lowenthal Broodrookas Alvarez, & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Matthew Maniscalco, LEAD ATTORNEY, Timothy D. Battin, David Boles, Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.; Hal Hardin, Nashville, TN.; Michael N. Widener, Van Bunch, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Signal Mountain, TN.

For Petro Computer Systems, Inc., Plaintiff: Christine Pedigo Bartholomew, LEAD ATTORNEY, Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA.; Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Anna C. Conley, Christopher T. Micheletti, Francis O. Scarpulla, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA.; John J. Bogdanor, LEAD ATTORNEY, [10] Josef D. Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA.; Adam C. Belsky, Monique Alonso, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Alan R Plutzik, Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA.; Alexander M. Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA.; Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Williams, Steyer Lowenthal Broodrookas Alvarez, & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Chad M. McManamy, Daniel J. Mogin, Lisa J. Frisella, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA.; Christopher Lee Lebsock, Michael P. Lehmann, Furth Lehmann & Grant LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA.; Douglas G. Thompson, Jr., Mila Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.; Jenelle Welling, Robert S. Green, Green Welling LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Patane, Law Office of Joseph M. Patane, San Francisco, CA.; Lauren Clare Russell, Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Lynnette D. Chen, William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA.; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink [11] & Slavens, San Diego, CA.; Richard M. Hagstrom, Richard L. Voelbel, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN.; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX.; Scott Ames, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA.; Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA.

For Gary Petersen, Dale Dickman, Plaintiffs: Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Anna C. Conley, Christopher T. Micheletti, Francis O. Scarpulla, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Adam C. Belsky, Monique Alonso, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Alan R Plutzik, Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler &, Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA.; Alexander M. Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA.; Chad M. McManamy, Daniel J. Mogin, Lisa J. Frisella, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA.; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA.; Douglas G. Thompson, Jr., Mila Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.; Douglas G. Thompson, Jr., Mila Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.; John J. Bogdanor, Josef D. Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., [12] San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Patane, Law Office of Joseph M. Patane, San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Patane, Law Office of Joseph M. Patane, San Francisco, CA.; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Michael P. Lehmann, Furth Lehmann & Grant LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Jenelle Welling, Robert S. Green, Green Welling LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Lynnette D. Chen, William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA.; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA.; Richard M. Hagstrom, Richard L. Voelbel, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN.; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX.; Scott Ames, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA.; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA.

For Pamela Uglem, Plaintiff: Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Anna C. Conley, Christopher T. Micheletti, Francis O. Scarpulla, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Adam C. Belsky, Monique Alonso, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Alan R Plutzik, Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler [13] & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA.; Alexander M. Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA.; Chad M. McManamy, Daniel J. Mogin, Lisa J. Frisella, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA.; Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA.; Douglas G. Thompson, Jr., Mila Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.; Douglas G. Thompson, Jr., Mila Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.; John J. Bogdanor, Josef D. Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Patane, Law Office of Joseph M. Patane, San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Patane, Law Office of Joseph M. Patane, San Francisco, CA.; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Michael P. Lehmann, Furth Lehmann & Grant LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Jenelle Welling, Robert S. Green, Green Welling LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Lynnette D. Chen, William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA.; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA.; Richard M. Hagstrom, Richard L. Voelbel, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN.; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann [14] Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX.; Scott Ames, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA.; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA.

For Michael Juetten, Ben Stewart, Melissa Barron, Plaintiffs: Craig C. Corbitt, Anna C. Conley, Francis O. Scarpulla, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Adam C. Belsky, Monique Alonso, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Alan R Plutzik, Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA.; Alexander M. Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA.; Chad M. McManamy, Daniel J. Mogin, Lisa J. Frisella, The Mogin Law Firm P.C., San Diego, CA.; Christopher Lee Lebsock, Michael P. Lehmann, Furth Lehmann & Grant LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA.; Douglas G. Thompson, Jr., Mila Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.; John J. Bogdanor, Josef D. Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Patane, Law Office of Joseph M. Patane, San Francisco, CA.; Lynnette D. Chen, William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & [15] Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA.; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA.; Richard M. Hagstrom, Richard L. Voelbel, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette, Minneapolis, MN.; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX.; Robert S. Green, Green Welling LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA.; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA.

For Blumenthal & Associates, Heather Delaney, Johnson & Jennings, G.C.A. Strategies, Inc., Plaintiffs: Craig C. Corbitt, Anna C. Conley, Francis O. Scarpulla, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Jenelle Welling, Robert S. Green, Green Welling LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Adam C. Belsky, Monique Alonso, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Alan R Plutzik, Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA.; Alexander M. Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA.; Chad M. McManamy, Daniel J. Mogin, Lisa J. Frisella, The Mogin Law Firm P.C., San Diego, [16] CA.; Christopher Lee Lebsock, Michael P. Lehmann, Furth Lehmann & Grant LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA.; Douglas G. Thompson, Jr., Mila Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.; John J. Bogdanor, Josef D. Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Patane, Law Office of Joseph M. Patane, San Francisco, CA.; Lynnette D. Chen, William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA.; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA.; Richard M. Hagstrom, Richard L. Voelbel, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel

Mason & Gette, Minneapolis, MN.; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX.; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA.; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA.

For Leonard Kaplan, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; William F. Patterson, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Forman Rossabi Black P.A., Greensboro, NC.; Dennis [17] Stewart, Hulett Harper Stewart LLP, San Diego, CA.; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.; Lisa Marie Williams, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Microprocessor Designs, Inc., Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Daniel R. Karon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Goldman Scarlato and Karon, PC, Cleveland, OH.; Dennis Stewart, Hulett Harper Stewart LLP, San Diego, CA.; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.; Lisa Marie Williams, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Mary Gilmore Kirkpatrick, Lisman Webster Kirkpatrick & Leckerling, RC., Burlington, VT.

For Centerprise International, Ltd., Plaintiff: Kevin Peter Roddy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilentz Goldman & Spitzer, PA, Woodbridge, NJ.; Gary Kostow, James C. Shah, Scott R. Shepherd, Media, PA.; Henry H. Rossbacher, The Rossbacher Firm, Los Angeles, CA.; Ira Neil Richards, Trujillo Rodriguez & Richards LLC, Philadelphia, PA.; James E. Miller, Shepherd, Finkelman, Miller & Shah, LLC, Chester, CT, US.; Natalie Finkelman Bennett, Attorney at Law, Media, PA.

For Geraldine Brown, Plaintiff: Charlene Haught Johnson, [18] Jeremiah F. Hallisey, John St. John, Hallisey and Johnson, San Francisco, CA.

For Franza Giffen, Linda Harrington, Matthew Lynch, Mary McDevitt, Plaintiffs: John St. John, Hallisey and Johnson, San Francisco, CA.

For Lawrence Alder, Ashley Pritchett, Anna Underwood, Brighid Flaherty, Kimberly Moore, Sandra Sardinha, Jeromi Quade, Edward Battitori, Andrew James Maclenna, John McKinnon, Vincent Fagan, Donna Siler, Jacqueline Bendoraitif, Dereck Patterson, John Brushia, Prokofiew, Julie J. Vargas, Ingrid Gomez, Charles Draughn, Kevin O. Denver, David Meyer, Bethanne Hasson, Monica Browne, Laura Stewart, Kimberly Shea Dowden, George Valton Jones, Donna McCann, Joseph Batwinus, Mark B. Richards, Frank Pasvola, Plaintiffs: Robert J. Bonsignore, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bonsignore & Brewer, Medford, MA.

For John McKinnon, individually and on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Todd Hill, individually and on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs: D. Michael Noonan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Shaheen & Gordon, PA, Dover, NH.; Robert J. Bonsignore, Bonsignore & Brewer, Medford, MA.; Steven M. Gordon, Concord, NH.

For Shelly Smith, on behalf of herself [19] and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: D. Michael Noonan, LEAD ATTORNEY, William Shaheen, Shaheen & Gordon, P.A., Dover, NH.

For Donna McCann, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: D. Michael Noonan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Shaheen & Gordon, PA, Dover, NH.

For Thomas K. Maher, on behalf of himself and all others, similarly situated in North Carolina, Plaintiff: Adam Stein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ferguson Stein Wallas Adkins Gresham & Sumter, PA, Chapel Hill, NC.; Jeffrey A. Bartos, Guerrieri Edmond & Clayman PC, Washington, DC.; Wyatt B. Durrette, Jr., Durrette Bradshaw, Richmond, VA.

For Michael Solomon, Notice of Motion for Administrative Relief to Determine That the Instant Case Is A Related Case, Gayle Helwani, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated and the public, Plaintiffs: Lingel H. Winters, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lingel H. Winters, Esq., San Francisco, CA, U.S.A.

For Corabell B. Arps, Plaintiff: Samuel W. Lanham, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Cuddy & Lanham, Bangor, ME, US.; Ian Otto, Starus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.

For Maritza Mass-Carrero, Plaintiff: Arturo Luciano-Delgado, LEAD ATTORNEY, Arturo Luciano Law Office, San Juan, [20] PR, US.; David Boles, III, Ian Otto, Timothy D. Battin, Straus & Boies, LLP, Fairfax, VA.; Kenneth G. Walsh, Barrett, Gravante, Carpinello & Stein, New York, NY, US.

For Sandra Bishop, On Behalf of Herself and All Others Similarly Situated in Mississippi, Plaintiff: LeRoy Davis Percy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Tollison Law Firm P.A., Oxford, MS, US.

For Jason Neeley, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated in the State of Utah, Aaron Stobbe, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated in the State of Utah, Plaintiffs: Allan O. Walsh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeremy C. Sink, McKay Burton & Thurman, Salt Lake City, UT, US.

For Stuart Schupler, On behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Scott Alan George, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheller, Ludwig & Badey, Philadelphia, PA.

For Honeywell International, Inc., Plaintiff: James M. Lockhart, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark Alan Jacobson, Lindquist & Vennum, P.L.L.P., Minneapolis, MN, U.S.; James J. Ficenec, Sellar Hazard McNeely & Manning, Walnut Creek, CA.

For State of California et al, Plaintiff: Emilio Eugene Varanini, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, California Office of the Attorney General, Los Angeles, CA. [21] ; Kathleen E. Foote, Office of the Attorney General, San Francisco, CA.

For State of Oregon, Plaintiff: Tim David Nord, LEAD ATTORNEY, Oregon Department of Justice, Financial Fraud/Consumer Protection, Salem, OR.

For State of New York, Plaintiff: Jay L. Himes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Attorney General of New York, New York, NY.

For State of Alaska, Plaintiff: Clyde E Sniffen, Jr, LEAD ATTORNEY, State of Alaska, Department of Law, Anchorage, AK.

For State of Michigan, Plaintiff: D. J. Pascoe, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michigan Department of Attorney General, Lansing, MI, US.

State of Maryland, Plaintiff, Pro se.

For Dram Claims Liquidation Trust, Plaintiff: James J. Ficenec, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sellar Hazard McNeely & Manning, Walnut Creek, CA.

For Micron Technology Inc., Defendant: G. Michael Barnhill, Jim D. Cooley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Joel S. Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christine Hart Clay, Joshua David Hess, Michael Cecchini, Rachel Brass, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Christopher James Flack, Jonathan L. Stern, William J. Baer, Wilson D. Mudge, Arnold & Porter LLP, Washington, DC, US.; [22] Debra L. Bouffard, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Ronald C. Redcay, Arnold & Porter LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Micron Semiconductor Products Inc. Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Joel S. Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christine Hart Clay, Joshua David Hess, Michael Cecchini, Rachel Brass, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Christopher James Flack, Jonathan L. Stern, William J. Baer, Wilson D. Mudge, Arnold & Porter LLP, Washington, DC, US.; Ronald C. Redcay, Arnold & Porter LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Infineon Technologies AG, Defendant: Christopher J. Heck, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sarretta McDonough, Kirkland & Ellis, Los Angeles, CA.; Karen Walker, Tefft W. Smith, Kirkland & Ellis, Washington, DC.; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Jim D. Cooley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Aton Arbisser, Joshua Stewart Stambaugh, Julian Brew, Tanja K. Shipman, Kaye Scholer LLP, Los Angeles, [23] CA, US.

For Infineon Technologies North America Corp., Defendant: Alexander F. MacKinnon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher J. Heck, Eileen Barish, Jeffrey S. Davidson, Sarretta McDonough, Kirkland & Ellis, Los Angeles, CA.; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Aton Arbisser, Joshua Stewart Stambaugh, Julian Brew, Tanja K. Shipman, Kaye Scholer LLP, Los Angeles, CA, U.S.; Karen Walker, Tefft W. Smith, Kirkland & Ellis, Washington, DC.

For Hynix Semiconductor Inc., Defendant: Albert J. Boro, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Cecil S. Chung, Peter Manfred Bransten, Terrence A. Callan, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Peter Bruce Nemerovski, Steven H. Bergman, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Daniel Lee Alexander, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.; Paul R. Griffin, Thelen Reid Brown Raysman & Steiner LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hynix Semiconductor America Inc., Defendant: Albert J. Boro, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Cecil S. Chung, Peter Manfred Bransten, Terrence A. Callan, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA.; G. [24] Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Peter Bruce Nemerovski, Steven H. Bergman, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Daniel Lee Alexander, Kenneth R. O'Rourke, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.; Ian T Simmons, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Washington, DC.; Paul R. Griffin, Thelen Reid Brown Raysman & Steiner LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Mona Solouki, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gary L. Hailing, James L. McGinnis, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA.; David A. Donohoe, Steven A. Mansfield, Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld LLP, New York, NY.; David Dong-In Sohn, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Jonathan M. Jacobson, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY.

For Samsung Semiconductor Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge [25] & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Gary L. Hailing, James L. McGinnis, Mona Solouki, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA.; David A. Donohoe, Steven A. Mansfield, Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld LLP, New York, NY.; David Dong-In Sohn, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Jonathan M. Jacobson, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY.

For Nanya Technology Corporation USA, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Robert E. Freitas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cynthia A. Zuniga, Nail Benjamin, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, Menlo Park, CA.; E. Anne Hawkins, Howard Mark Ullman, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Elpida Memory USA Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Robert B. Pringle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jonathan E. Swartz, Thelen Reid Brown Raysman & Steiner LLP, San Francisco, [26] CA.; Harrison J. Frahn, IV, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, Palo Alto, CA.; Kevin Arquit, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP, New York, NY, US.; Peter F. Burns, Thelen Reid & Priest LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mosel Vitelic Corporation USA, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.

For Winbond Electronics Corporation America, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Steven H. Morrissett, LEAD ATTORNEY, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Stanford Research Park, Palo Alto, CA.; William S Farmer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Collette Erickson Farmer & O'Neill LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For NEC Electronics America Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Robert B. Pringle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jonathan E. Swartz, Thelen Reid Brown Raysman & Steiner LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Peter F. Burns, Thelen [27] Reid & Priest LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Crucial Technology Inc., NEC Electronics Corporation, Defendants: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.

For Mosel Vitelic Inc., Defendant: R. Dale Grimes, LEAD ATTORNEY, David R. Esquivel, Matthew J. Sinback, Bass Berry & Sims PLC, Nashville, TN.; David C. Brownstein, Heller Ehrman White & McAuliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Elpida Memory Inc., Defendant: G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC. R. Dale Grimes, LEAD ATTORNEY, David R. Esquivel, Matthew J. Sinback, Bass Berry & Sims PLC, Nashville, TN.; Robert B. Pringle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jonathan E. Swartz, Thelen Reid Brown Raysman & Steiner LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Debra L. Bouffard, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Harrison J. Frahn, IV, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, Palo Alto, CA.; Kevin Arquit, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP, New York, NY, US.; Paul R. Griffin, Thelen Reid Brown Raysman & Steiner LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Nanya Technology Corporation, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm [28] PC, Burlington, VT.; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; R. Dale Grimes, LEAD ATTORNEY, David R. Esquivel, Matthew J. Sinback, Bass Berry & Sims PLC, Nashville, TN.; Robert E. Freitas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cynthia A. Zuniga, Nail Benjamin, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, Menlo Park, CA.; E. Anne Hawkins, Howard Mark Ullman, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Winbond Electronics Corporation, Defendant: David R. Esquivel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bass Berry & Sims PLC, Nashville, TN.; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.; Steven H. Morrissett, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Stanford Research Park, Palo Alto, CA.; William S Farmer, Collette Erickson Farmer & O'Neill LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mosel Vitelic Corporation, Defendant: David C. Brownstein, Heller Ehrman White & McAuliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Electronics America, Inc., Defendant: Jonathan M. Jacobson, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY.

For Samsung Electronics, Inc., Ltd., Defendant: Jonathan M. Jacobson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilson Sonsini [29] Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY.; David Dong-In Sohn, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.

For Hynix Semi., Inc., Defendant: G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; Ian T Simmons, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Washington, DC.; Kenneth R. O'Rourke, Steven H. Bergman, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Winbound Electronics Corporation, Winbound Electronics Corporation America, Defendants: G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.; William S Farmer, Collette Erickson Farmer & O'Neill LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Micron Technology Puerto Rico Inc., Defendant: Edward W. Hill-Tollinche, LEAD ATTORNEY, Humberto Guzman-Rodriguez, San Juan, PR, US.

For Mortgage Ramp, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated in the State of Utah, Defendant: Allan O. Walsh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeremy C. Sink, Mckay Burton & Thurman, Salt Lake City, UT, US.

For Chip-Tech, Ltd., Respondent: Joseph M. Barton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gold Bennett Cera & Sidener LLP, [30] San Francisco, CA.

For Sun System, Inc., Movant: Christine Elaine Cwiertny, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA.; Jerome A. Murphy, Kathryn D. Kirmayer, Kent A. Gardiner, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC, US.

For Unisys Corporation, All American Semiconductor Inc., JACO Electronics, Inc., Edge Electronics, Inc., Movants: Christine Elaine Cwiertny, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA.

For Celestica Corporation, Interested Party: Servando R. Sandoval, Pahl & Gosselin, APC, San Jose, CA.

For United States of America, Miscellaneous: Nathaniel M. Cousins, LEAD ATTORNEY, United States Attorney, San Francisco, CA.; Charles Philip Reichmann, San Francisco, CA.; May Lee Heye, Niall E. Lynch, United States Department of Justice, San Francisco, CA.

For IBM Corporation, Miscellaneous: David Eiseman, Quinn Emanuel Urquhart Oliver & Hedges, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON

Opinion

[*1082] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

Defendants' motions for judgment on the pleadings came on for hearing on December 6, 2006 before this court. Plaintiffs, indirect [31] purchasers ("plaintiffs"), appeared through their counsel, Allan Steyer, Josef D. Cooper, Tracy B. Kirkham, Daniel E. Gustafson, Christopher L. Lebsock, Terry Gross, Michael P. Lehman, Francis O. Scarpula, Daniel J. Mogin, and Jill M. Manning. Defendants appeared through their counsel, Julian Brew, Kenneth R. O'Rourke, Peter Nemerovski, Joshua Stambaugh, Jonathan Houden, Ronald C. Redcay, Joel S. Sanders, Steven H. Bergman, Andrew P. Deshazo, and Alejandro Steyer. Having read all the papers submitted and carefully considered the relevant legal authority, the court hereby GRANTS the, motions for judgment on the pleadings in part and DENIES the motions for judgment on the pleadings in part, for the reasons stated at the hearing, and as follows.

BACKGROUND

The actions before the court are part of a larger antitrust MDL action, in which plaintiffs generally allege a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy carried out by numerous defendants, in violation of various state and federal antitrust laws.

Plaintiffs in the instant action before the court allege that they indirectly purchased dynamic random access memory ("DRAM") from defendants. [1] DRAM is a type of semiconductor chip [32] used in computers and other electronic equipment. Defendants are either foreign corporations, or U.S. subsidiaries of foreign corporations, who manufacture and sell DRAM in the United States. [2]

[*1083] Specifically, plaintiffs - on behalf of themselves [33] and all others similarly situated - allege that they either (1) indirectly purchased DRAM from one or more of the defendants for use in manufacturing electronic devices for resale; or (2) indirectly purchased DRAM from one or more of the defendants for end use and not for resale. See Petro Class Action Complaint ("Complaint"), PP 7-17. Regardless whether plaintiffs purchased DRAM for end use or for resale, plaintiffs allege that they were forced to pay artificially high prices for DRAM, as a result of defendants' unlawful conspiracy and agreement to raise, fix, maintain, and/or stabilize prices for DRAM in the United States. See, e.g., Complaint, PP 71, 74.

Plaintiffs' complaint, styled as a class action, alleges five causes of action against defendants: (1) violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act; (2) violation of the California Cartwright Act; (3) violation of California Business and

---

[1] For purposes of pretrial proceedings, all parties in the indirect purchaser cases have agreed to litigate under one lead case - Petro Computer Sys., Inc. v. Micron Technology et al., No. C 05-2472 PJH.

[2] The specific defendants at issue are as follows: Micron Technology, Inc.; Micron Semiconductor Products, Inc.; Infineon Technologies AG; Infineon Technologies North America Corporation; Mosel Vitelic Corporation; Mosel Vitelic Corporation USA; Nanya Technology Corporation; Nanya Technology Corporation USA; Elpida Memory, Inc.; Elpida Memory (USA), Inc.; Hynix Semiconductor, Inc.; Hynix Semiconductor America, Inc.; Winbond Electronics Corporation; Winbond Electronics Corporation America, Inc.; and NEC Electronics America, Inc. (collectively "defendants").

Professions Code §§ 16720 et seq.; (4) violation of various state antitrust and unfair competition laws; and (5) violation of state consumer protection and unfair competition laws. See id. at PP 70-142. The latter two causes of action, however, are each in [34] turn comprised of numerous individual state law claims: the fourth cause of action alleges violations of 22 states' antitrust and unfair competition laws, and the fifth cause of action alleges violations of 22 states' consumer protection and unfair competition laws.

Defendants now move for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' complaint. They have filed two separate motions: the first seeks judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' second and fourth causes of action. The second seeks judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' fifth cause of action. [3]

[35] DISCUSSION

I. Legal Standard

HN1[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) provides that any party may move for judgment on the pleadings "after the pleadings are closed, but within such time as not to delay the trial." See Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 12(c). A motion for judgment on the pleadings challenges the legal sufficiency of the opposing party's pleadings, and the allegations contained therein.

HN2[] The standard applied by the court in treating a motion for judgment on the pleadings is the same as that applied by the court in considering motions to dismiss under FRCP 12(b)(6). In short, judgment on the pleadings is appropriate when, even if all material facts in the pleading under attack are true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See, e.g., Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1550 (9th Cir. 1989). The Supreme Court, in passing on the 12(b)(6) standard in the antitrust context recently, also noted that while a complaint attacked by a motion to dismiss for failure to state a [36] claim upon which relief can be granted does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiffs obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." See *Bell [1084] Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929, 2007 WL 1461066 (2007). Although Twombly dealt with a motion to dismiss a section 1 conspiracy claim, given the similarity in standards to be applied on motions to dismiss and motions for judgment on the pleadings, the court finds Twombly's language instructive here.

HN3[] Rule 12(c) does not mention leave to amend; however, courts generally have discretion in granting 12(c) motions with leave to amend, particularly in cases where the motion is based on a pleading technicality. See, e.g., Swanson v. United States Forest Serv., 87 F.3d 339, 343 (9th Cir.1996)(Leave to amend generally within discretion of trial court). There is a strong policy in favor of allowing amendment, unless amendment would be futile, results from bad faith or undue delay, or will unfairly prejudice the opposing party." Kaplan v. Rose, 49 F.3d 1363, 1370 (9th Cir.1994). [37]

Courts also have discretion to grant dismissal on a 12(c) motion, in lieu of judgment, on any given claim. See, e.g., Amersbach v. City of Cleveland, 598 F.2d 1033, 1038 (6th Cir. 1979), disapproved on other grounds in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528, 105 S. Ct. 1005, 83 L. Ed. 2d 1016 (1985); see also McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802, 810 (9th Cir. 1988)(affirming dismissal of plaintiffs' antitrust claim by judgment on pleadings).

---

[3] Plaintiffs have also filed two separate requests for judicial notice, and defendants have submitted at least one set of objections thereto. Plaintiffs specifically ask the court to grant judicial notice as to 23 different orders and pleadings that were entered in various cases throughout the country, as well as three different class action complaints filed in California state courts. Having considered the requests, and defendants' objections, the court hereby GRANTS plaintiffs' request for judicial notice, as it finds the subject matter proper for judicial notice pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 201.

II. Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings re Second and Fourth Claims for Relief

Defendants bring two motions for judgment on the pleadings. The first attacks plaintiffs' second and fourth causes of action as pled in the complaint. Plaintiffs' second cause of action alleges a violation of California's state antitrust statute - the Cartwright Act. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720. Plaintiffs' fourth cause of action alleges a violation of twenty-two individual state antitrust laws, although defendants challenge plaintiffs' claims under only fourteen of those laws.

Generally speaking, defendants' challenge to both causes of action is rooted in the [38] same argument: that plaintiffs cannot allege antitrust standing under any of the state laws in question, and their claims under each are accordingly barred.

1. Antitrust Standing Principles

HN4[] The concept of "antitrust standing" has its roots in federal law. It refers to the standing requirements that a plaintiff must satisfy in all private antitrust suits seeking monetary damages under the federal antitrust statutes. See 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). A plaintiff seeking monetary damages for antitrust violations must prove that he or she has been (1) "injured in his business or property;" (2) "by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws…". See 15 U.S.C. § 15(a).

Under the first element, a plaintiff must demonstrate injury - or the fact of damage - to his or her business or property interests, which injury is causally linked to an antitrust violation. Generally speaking, allegations that plaintiff consumers have paid higher prices for goods purchased for personal use due to defendants' conduct have satisfied this element. See, e.g., Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 342, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979)("where petitioner alleges a [39] wrongful deprivation of her money because the price of the [good] she bought was artificially inflated by reason of respondents' anticompetitive conduct, she has alleged an injury in her "property" under § 4"). Under the more critical second element, referred to as "antitrust injury," a plaintiff must also demonstrate "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." In other words, a plaintiff must connect any [*1085] alleged injury to the purposes of the antitrust laws. See Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum, 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990); American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co., 190 F.3d 1051, 1055 (9th Cir. 1999).

HN5[] Even assuming, however, that a plaintiff is able to make this showing, the antitrust standing inquiry is not at an end. This is because a plaintiff's right to sue for money damages is nonetheless subject to certain limitations, based upon policies found by the courts to be inherent in the structure and purpose of the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986)(although showing of antitrust injury is necessary, it still is "not always sufficient to establish [40] standing under section 4 because a party may have suffered antitrust injury but may not be the proper plaintiff under section 4 for other reasons"). Where a plaintiff's injury, for example, is derivative of a more direct injury to some other person, and that person would have a strong motivation to pursue its own antitrust claim against the defendant, standing is likely to be denied. This is the rationale underlying Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), in which the Supreme Court held that indirect purchasers are too remote to suffer true "antitrust injury," and therefore do not have standing under federal antitrust law to pursue antitrust claims.

In recognition of this and other concerns that impact the antitrust standing analysis, the Supreme Court has fashioned a general balancing test to be used in determining whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust claim. See Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)("AGC"). HN6[] The AGC test, as it is called, enumerates a variety of factors that are employed in "evaluat[ing] the plaintiffs harm, the alleged wrongdoing by [41] the defendants, and the relationship between them," in order to determine standing. Id. These factors include the nature of the injury alleged, the directness of the injury, the speculative nature of the harm, the risk of duplicative recovery, and the complexity in apportioning damages. The Ninth Circuit has embraced this test, announcing its commitment to the AGC factors in American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co., 190 F.3d 1051, 1054-55 (9th Cir. 1999).

Although this discussion highlights federal antitrust standing principles, these federal principles - and in particular, federal concern over the remoteness of a plaintiff's injury - are central to defendants' arguments and the court's discussion here. For although defendants' motion challenges the viability of plaintiffs' state antitrust claims and does not directly invoke the federal antitrust scheme, the gist of defendants' motion is (1) that even under state law, plaintiffs must independently prove antitrust standing; (2) that antitrust standing under state law should be assessed using the federal AGC factors; and (3) that plaintiffs cannot meet the ACG requirements in any event.

With these [42] principles and background in mind, the court turns to the two claims that defendants challenge.

2. Cartwright Act

Defendants challenge plaintiffs' ability to bring their second claim for relief alleging a violation of California's antitrust statute, the Cartwright Act. [4] HN7[] The Cartwright [*1086] Act prohibits unlawful restrictions on competition, and grants "[a]ny person who is injured in his or her business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by [the Act]" the right to bring a civil action for treble damages, "regardless of whether such injured person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant." See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726, 16750. Defendants essentially argue that, although California is an Illinois Brick repealer state that allows indirect purchasers to sue under the Cartwright Act, plaintiffs still cannot allege the requisite antitrust standing, since even as indirect purchasers, they cannot satisfy the AGC factors. Defendants presume, as a matter of course, that the AGC standing test applies to claims arising under the state's Cartwright Act.

[43] Plaintiffs, by contrast, contend that California law is much broader than federal law relating to antitrust standing, and the fact that the Cartwright Act expressly repeals Illinois Brick and allows indirect purchasers to sue is dispositive of defendants' standing arguments, without need of recourse to the AGC factors. While plaintiffs do not go on to specifically address the question whether the AGC antitrust standing factors employed under federal law are satisfied here, they do assert that, contrary to defendants' contention, there are no concerns that are raised here with respect to duplicative or speculative damages.

Preliminarily, the court notes that at the hearing on the instant motions, defendants clarified for the court that they do not actually seek dismissal on standing grounds of all plaintiffs' claims. Rather, their motion is targeted only at those plaintiffs who allege that they paid artificially inflated prices "for personal computers and other products in which DRAM is a component...". See Complaint, P 74. Defendants did not further clarify whether this means that their motion is targeted at all plaintiffs who allege they paid higher prices for [44] products in which DRAM is a component - regardless whether they also made other purchases of DRAM that was not in component form - or only at plaintiffs' specific claims based on purchases in which DRAM is a component. [5] Without further clarification, therefore, it is impossible to tell whether defendants seek judgment as to the former, or the latter.

Given defendants' silence on this issue, however, the court interprets defendants' arguments as reaching the narrower issue only, and specifically targeted, therefore, only at those claims raised by plaintiffs that are based on purchases of products in which DRAM is [45] a component. Accordingly, the issues actually before the court, and which the court must decide, are (a) whether the AGC standing factors apply to Cartwright Act claims; and (b) if so, whether those factors are satisfied with respect to plaintiffs' claims based on indirect purchases, of products in which DRAM is a component.

a. whether AGC factors apply

---

[4] Defendants' briefs are somewhat confusing on this point, since they include discussion of the Cartwright Act within the broader discussion of antitrust standing as to all fourteen states at issue.

[5] The possibility that plaintiffs may be alleging claims based on purchases of both component DRAM and non-component DRAM is evidenced by the ambiguity of plaintiffs' allegations. See, e.g., Complaint, PP 9-17 (stating only that plaintiffs indirectly purchased DRAM "for end use and not for resale," without distinguishing between purchases of DRAM, and purchases of DRAM as a product component).

Plaintiffs urge the court to conclude that because California's Cartwright Act expressly allows indirect purchasers to sue, no other factors need be satisfied in order for antitrust standing to be found. In other words, plaintiffs argue that they have standing here by virtue of their indirect purchaser status, and need not separately [*1087] prove standing under the general AGC factors or otherwise.

As a general matter, plaintiffs are correct - and defendants concede - that HN8[] California's Cartwright Act is an Illinois Brick repealer statute, under which indirect purchaser standing is permissible in private actions alleging violations of antitrust law. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750; see also Union Carbide v. Superior Court, 36 Cal.3d 15, 20, 201 Cal. Rptr. 580, 679 P.2d 14 (1984). However, while the [46] Cartwright Act directly contradicts federal law insofar as indirect purchaser standing is generally concerned, it does not follow from this either that indirect purchaser status is itself sufficient under California law to establish antitrust standing, or that California law necessarily eschews the general test for antitrust standing as set forth in AGC. For as defendants point out, the question whether indirect purchasers have standing under state law, and the question whether antitrust plaintiffs - which may include indirect purchasers - have antitrust standing for a particular claim, are two "analytically distinct" issues. An affirmative answer to the former simply does not compel an affirmative finding of the latter.

While neither party has cited any conclusive state authority on this point, the conclusion that indirect purchaser standing is distinct from antitrust standing under California state law is nonetheless warranted, in view of persuasive federal and state authority. First, and as noted above, consideration of federal authorities reveals that HN9[] the federal antitrust standing inquiry is based on consideration of more than merely a plaintiff's status as direct or [47] indirect purchaser. Standing may be found lacking, for instance, for reasons separate and apart from the fact that plaintiffs are indirect purchasers. See, e.g., Pool Water Prods. v. Olin Corp., 258 F.3d 1024, 1034 (9th Cir.2001)(if plaintiff's injury stems from, e.g., "aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition," there is no antitrust injury and as a result, no antitrust standing). This reasoning - which underscores the federal courts' determination that antitrust standing must be affirmatively demonstrated with regard to other factors - logically should apply to consideration of the Cartwright Act, as well. See, e.g., Mailand v. Burckle, 20 Cal.3d 367, 376, 143 Cal. Rptr. 1, 572 P.2d 1142 (1978)(federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable in construing [California] state laws"). And it counsels in favor of concluding that the Cartwright Act's mere recognition that indirect purchasers may sue is distinct from an automatic grant of antitrust standing generally, and that antitrust standing must be determined with reference to other factors aside from purchaser status.

Second, consideration of California state authorities compels [48] the same conclusion. For even though no case law answers the question directly, the case law that does exist - and which even plaintiffs rely on - does not suggest that a finding of indirect purchaser standing is tantamount to a finding of antitrust standing. Plaintiffs rely, for example, on Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court of San Diego County, 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 (1993). While they are correct that the Cellular Plus court noted that the concept of "antitrust injury" - a component of antitrust standing - is broader than under federal case law, and further cited to California's Illinois Brick repealer statute as proof of this fact, the court also expressly noted that "[t]he exact parameters of 'antitrust injury' under [the Cartwright Act] have not yet been established through either court decisions or legislation." See 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1234. The Cellular Plus court then held that indirect purchasers of cellular services had alleged sufficient antitrust injury to maintain [*1088] actions for wholesale and retail price-fixing, by only generally concluding that the plaintiffs alleged "injuries of the type [the Cartwright Act] seeks [49] to prevent and which stem from the 'anticompetitive aspect' of [defendants'] alleged conduct." See 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1234. Accordingly, while Cellular Plus properly took note of the Cartwright Act's express provision allowing indirect purchasers to seek private remedies, it did not actually hold that indirect purchaser status is all that must be demonstrated in order to satisfy antitrust injury or standing. Indeed, the Cellular Plus court did not even consider the question whether the AGC factors apply in determining antitrust standing, thereby leaving the question open.

In short, and in view of the above, the court is of the opinion that HN10[] the Cartwright Act's grant of indirect purchaser standing, while ensuring that plaintiffs' status as indirect purchasers cannot bar their claim under the Cartwright Act, does not in actuality set forth the sum total of what a given plaintiff must establish in order to satisfy antitrust standing generally.

Naturally, this begs the question what precise showing must affirmatively be made by plaintiffs - both direct and indirect purchasers - to satisfy antitrust standing requirements under the Cartwright Act. For [50] the reasons that follow, defendants have persuaded the court that the AGC test originally set forth by the Supreme Court in interpreting antitrust standing under the federal antitrust statutes, is the appropriate guide to follow.

Once again, there is no California case directly on point that conclusively sets forth the parameters of antitrust standing under the Cartwright Act. However, while California state courts have not specifically weighed in on the issue, the Ninth Circuit has. In Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., the Ninth Circuit undertook an exhaustive analysis of the antitrust standing doctrine in relation to both federal law and the Cartwright Act. See 232 F.3d 979 (9th Cir. 2000). The Ninth Circuit acknowledged that distinctions exist between both laws, and the limited role that federal law provides in furnishing precedent under the Cartwright Act. Nonetheless, the court still found that "[a]ntitrust standing is required under the Cartwright Act." See id. at 987. The court simply reconciled the differences in California law by stating that, within the framework of the antitrust standing inquiry, "California law affords [51] standing more liberally than does federal law." Id. The Ninth Circuit then proceeded to analyze the case within the framework of the AGC factors, and when the time came to consider the "directness of injury" factor, took into account the broader principles relating to indirect purchasers provided by state law.

At least one California court has also applied the AGC antitrust standing factors to antitrust claims under the Cartwright Act, although it did not engage in a detailed discussion of the issue. In Vinci v. Waste Mgmt. Inc., 36 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 337 (1995), a state appellate court applied the AGC factors in determining whether the particular plaintiff before it had standing. While plaintiff is correct that the case is distinguishable on its facts (since plaintiff was not an indirect purchaser, there were no price-fixing allegations, and the case arose in the employment context), the relevant point is that the state court applied the broader antitrust standing test under AGC to the Cartwright Act.

In conclusion, then, and in view of the Ninth Circuit and California authorities discussed above, the court finds that plaintiffs here proceeding [52] under the Cartwright Act are required to satisfy general antitrust [*1089] standing requirements enunciated by the Supreme Court in AGC, and embraced by the Ninth Circuit in Knevelbaard. Plaintiffs cannot satisfy antitrust standing requirements by simply invoking their status as indirect purchasers.

b. whether AGC factors are satisfied

In view of the court's conclusion that plaintiffs alleging claims based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component are required to satisfy the relevant AGC factors to establish antitrust standing, the final issue to be addressed is whether these plaintiffs have, in fact, done so. In deciding the issue, the court must "evaluate the plaintiff[s]' harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them." See Knevelbaard, 232 F.3d at 987. The factors relevant to this evaluation are, once again: (1) the nature of the plaintiffs' injury; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative nature of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages. See id.; see also American Ad Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1054-55.

Defendants argue [53] that standing under the AGC factors should be held lacking here, for the following reasons: the plaintiffs here were not participants in the relevant market for the DRAM at issue, since many only purchased the DRAM in question in end products like computers, or as end users; the distribution chain is long and complicated; calculating and apportioning damages would be complex, and the economic analysis speculative; more direct victims exist and have sought relief (i.e., the related direct purchaser litigation); and it would be difficult to determine a non-duplicative measure of damages. Defendants rely on recent case law in the rubber tires ("rubber tire cases") and the credit card industries ("credit card cases"), in which similar indirect purchasers' claims were dismissed for lack of standing at the pleading stage. See, e.g., Crouch v. Crompton Corp., 2004 NCBC 7, 2004 WL 2414027 (N.C. Super. Ct., 2004); Stark v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2004 WL 1879003 (Mich. Cir. Ct. 2004).

Plaintiffs, for their part, challenge defendants' reliance on the credit card cases and the rubber tire cases, arguing their facts are distinguishable from the present facts. They contend, [54] furthermore, that it is irrelevant whether plaintiffs purchased DRAM standing alone, or as part of an ultimate product (e.g., computers). The seminal point, according to plaintiffs, is that where they are a link in the chain of distribution for an overcharged product, then standing exists. Plaintiffs invoke the "Microsoft cases," a line of cases in which plaintiffs assert that standing was found to exist. See, e.g., Gordon v. Microsoft Corp., 2001 WL 366432 (D. Minn. 2001).

The issues raised by the parties are complicated, and devoid of ready or simple answer. Ultimately, however, in view of the AGC factors that are applied and considered below, the court believes that it is defendants who present the more persuasive arguments. See, e.g., Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723; Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co., 190 F.3d at 1054-55 (setting forth AGC factors).

1. antitrust injury

HN11[] A plaintiff may only pursue an antitrust action if it can show antitrust injury, which is to say "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes [55] defendants' acts unlawful." See American Ad. Mgmt, 190 F.3d at 1055. The Ninth Circuit has identified four requirements for antitrust injury, which serve as a helpful guide here: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that [*1090] flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Id.

Plaintiffs here have satisfactorily alleged both unlawful conduct - by way of defendants' conspiracy to horizontally restrain trade - and that such conduct caused plaintiffs to suffer injury in the form of having paid artificially high prices for DRAM. See, e.g., Complaint, PP 80, 81, 83; see also American Ad. Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1056 (allegations of injury caused by unlawful conduct sufficient if they allege that plaintiff suffered from defendants' participation in alleged conspiracy). Similarly, the injury that plaintiffs allege - i.e., payment of artificially high prices for DRAM - flows directly from the alleged conspiracy to fix and raise the price of DRAM. The more troubling issue for the court, however, centers on the fourth element identified by the Ninth Circuit [56] above - i.e., whether plaintiffs' injury is "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent."

In passing on this question, both the Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit have noted that a central concern of the antitrust injury analysis is in "protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." See Assoc. Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 538; American Ad. Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1057. To that end, antitrust standing is granted only where the plaintiff is a participant in the relevant market - e.g., a consumer or competitor in the relevant market alleged. See id.

Here, defendants assert that, since plaintiffs purchased DRAM as a component of other products - such as computers - these plaintiffs are not participants in the alleged market for DRAM. Rather, they are participants in separate, albeit related, markets for products that include DRAM. As such, defendants claim that plaintiffs have not alleged antitrust injury, since they do not have grounds from which to argue that they are participants in the allegedly restrained market.

This argument is persuasive. As defendants point out, cases that have considered similar price-fixing [57] claims and other section 1 claims in the rubber tire and credit card industries have found that indirect purchasers are not participants in the relevant market where the ultimate goods they purchased - and which were the alleged source of artificially raised prices - were part of a market that was secondary to the allegedly price-tied market. See, e.g.. *Crouch v. Crompton Corp., 2004 NCBC 7, 2004 WL 2414027 at 24 (noting that plaintiff, as purchaser of rubber product rather than rubber chemicals, was in "market secondarily affected by the restraint in the original chemical market"); Stark v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2004 WL 1879003 at *2 (no standing where "plaintiff is not a consumer or competitor in the allegedly restrained market").

Indeed, the Visa debit card cases, typified by the Stark case and others like it, are instructive. In these cases, the indirect purchasers were ultimate consumers of various "goods" that they purchased from merchants who were themselves the alleged victims of defendants' conspiracy to illegally tie products in violation of section 1. The numerous courts considering antitrust standing in this context generally found that, although [58] an artificially raised price had been passed down from defendants to merchants in the market for credit card services, the indirect purchasers were not participants in the actual market for credit card services, just for goods sold by those merchants. See, e.g., Stark, 2004 WL 1879003 at *2; Strang v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2005 WL 1403769, *4 (Wis. Cir. Ct. Feb. 8, 2005). Similarly, with respect to the rubber chemical case relied on by defendants, the court found that there were [*1091] two relevant markets - one for rubber chemicals, which was the price-fixed market, and a second one for the tires that were made with the price-fixed chemicals. In holding that antitrust standing was lacking, the court held that the indirect purchasers - who had purchased the allegedly price-fixed tires from retailers - were not participants in the market, and were only secondarily affected. See *Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7, 2004 WL 2414027 at 24.

These factual scenarios are analogous to the situation before the court here. Plaintiffs are indirect purchasers and consumers who purchased DRAM as a component in computers and other electronic products, for "end use and not for resale. [59] " See Complaint, PP 9-17, 74. However, the market that plaintiffs allege as the source for the purportedly illegal price-fixing conspiracy was the general market for DRAM, a market that is distinct from the market for electronic products that include DRAM. See, e.g., Complaint, P 41. As such, plaintiffs who are purchasing products in which DRAM is a component, rather than DRAM itself, are participating in a secondary market that is incidental to the primary price-fixed market (i.e., the market for DRAM modules themselves).

Plaintiffs urge the opposite conclusion with reliance on several Microsoft cases, but these cases are inapposite. The Microsoft cases they rely on deal with class certification, and fail to frame their inquiry in terms of antitrust standing. See, e.g., Gordon, 2001 WL 366432 at *11; Bellinder v. Microsoft Corp., (D. Kan. Sept. 7, 2001). For that reason, these class certification decisions, while they may undoubtedly be relevant at the class certification stage, are of limited relevance now.

In sum, for all the above reasons, the court believes that this first factor - i.e., the nature of plaintiffs' antitrust injury - weighs against [60] standing.

2. Directness of the injury

This factor looks to whether plaintiffs' alleged injury was the direct result of defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct. To assess the directness of plaintiffs' injury, the court must look "to the chain of causation between [plaintiffs'] injury and the alleged restraint in the [alleged] market." See American Ad. Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1058; Assoc. Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 540. The fact that plaintiffs are indirect purchasers does not, as mentioned previously, have negative bearing on this factor, as plaintiffs have explicitly been granted indirect purchaser standing pursuant to state law. Accordingly, the court must simply consider whether, as indirect purchasers, there is a direct link in the causation chain between defendants' alleged conspiracy to restrain prices, and the artificially high prices paid by plaintiffs who purchased products in which DRAM is a component.

On balance, the court finds that this is not the case. To be sure, in most instances, some portion of a price-fixed cost gets passed directly along to the ultimate consumer, and this could readily apply to a DRAM component that was [61] eventually incorporated into an end product. However, as the Crouch court accurately noted, "the directness can be impacted by the nature of the item subject to price-fixing, be it a component, labor cost, or something used in the manufacturing process." See *2004 NCBC 7, 2004 WL 2414027 at 24. This is because the nature of the item "can influence the directness of the impact on the price of the end product at retail." Id.

Here, DRAM's nature as a ubiquitous component in all manner of personal electronic devices that are purchased for end use, lessens the directness of its impact on price. For example, while plaintiffs have alleged that one example of an electronic device containing DRAM might be a personal [*1092] computer, they have simultaneously alleged that personal computers are but one of many examples of electronic devices containing DRAM, and they have furthermore failed to allege the precise type of electronic device that any given plaintiff purchased for end use. See, e.g., Complaint at 15 (DRAM "means the memory chip most commonly used in electronic devices, such as personal computers, around the world")(emphasis added). As such, it is possible and even [62] likely that plaintiffs have purchased DRAM not only in computers, but in other products. It requires no leap of logic to conclude that each product in which DRAM is a component, contains numerous other components, all of which collectively determine the final price actually paid by plaintiffs for the final product. In other words, the price for the actual product paid by plaintiffs is reflective of much more than just the component price for DRAM. Yet plaintiffs' complaint sets forth no allegations that demonstrate that, within the final purchase price of a given product purchased by plaintiffs for "end use," the ultimate cost of the DRAM component is somehow directly traceable and/or distinguishable. Seen from this viewpoint, the directness of plaintiffs' injury - with respect to those who purchased DRAM as a component product - is too remote to warrant tipping this factor in favor of standing. See also, e.g., Crouch, 2004 NCBC 7, 2004 WL 2414027 at *24 ("[t]he smaller the component, the less likely there will be impact on the final price.").

For these reasons, this factor also weighs against standing.

3. Speculative Nature of the Harm, Risk of Duplicative Recovery, [63] Complexity in Apportioning Damages

The final three factors can be considered together - the speculative nature of the harm, the risk of duplicative recovery, and the complexity in apportioning damages. See, e.g., Assoc. Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535; Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co., 190 F.3d 1051, 1054-55 (9th Cir. 1999).

First, with respect to the first and third of these factors, the court's consideration of them overlaps. Defendants justly point out that the injury suffered by the indirect purchaser plaintiffs is unduly speculative, and that damages would be difficult to apportion, in view of the fact that the plaintiffs in question purchased their DRAM in the form of a component product. There are a variety of factors, for example, that could have influenced the price that each plaintiff paid for their computer (or other products) - the cost of various other components, whether those costs were themselves artificially high, etc. In such a situation, as defendants note, courts have found that these two factors weigh against standing. See, e.g. Weaver v. Cabot Corp., 2004 WL 3406119 (N.C. Super Ct. 2004). Indeed, as the [64] Weaver court - which considered allegations of price-fixing in the rubber chemical industry - stated, plaintiffs who are in secondary markets in which they purchase the price-fixed product as a component, would need to allege that the secondary market sellers themselves were in an oligopoly and fixing prices, in order to demonstrate non-speculative damages. See id. at *1. In Weaver, plaintiffs who had purchased rubber tires as part of the secondary market - the market for rubber chemicals used to make the tires was the primary restrained market - were held to lack standing. So here. Plaintiffs, who have purchased DRAM as a component in products such as personal computers and other devices, would need to allege that the market for personal computers and other secondary markets was itself restrained as a result of defendants' conduct, in order to establish that the damages ultimately suffered [*1093] by them are sufficiently concrete, and capable of determination. These two factors, therefore, weigh against standing.

As for the risk of duplicative recovery, however, plaintiffs have the better argument. States such as California, which have repealed Illinois Brick and allowed [65] indirect purchasers to sue for antitrust violations, have necessarily made the policy decision that duplicative recovery may permissibly occur. Duplicative recovery is, in many if not all cases alleging a nationwide conspiracy with both direct and indirect purchaser classes, a necessary consequence that flows from indirect purchaser recovery. Accordingly, it is no bar against standing, and this factor does not weigh against standing.

In sum, however, after consideration of all the AGC factors, and for all the above reasons, the court ultimately concludes that there are more reasons to deny standing in the instant case. Accordingly, the court finds that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs whose claims are based on the purchase of products in which DRAM is a component, lack standing to assert a claim under California's Cartwright Act. As such, defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, with respect to these particular claims, is GRANTED.

3. State Antitrust Claims

Defendants also challenge plaintiffs' fourth claim for relief, which alleges violations of twenty-two different states' antitrust laws. As with plaintiffs' second claim for relief under the Cartwright Act, defendants [66] argue that, with respect to thirteen [6] of these state antitrust laws, no antitrust standing exists for those plaintiffs whose claims are based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component. The thirteen states are: Arizona, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin. Defendants additionally argue that, with all plaintiffs' claims under five state laws - Ohio, West Virginia, Alabama, South Dakota, and Pennsylvania - judgment on the pleadings is also warranted for other reasons.

a. antitrust standing

Defendants contend that plaintiffs' [67] claims under the thirteen state antitrust statutes at issue fail for lack of antitrust standing. Their arguments mimic those made in connection with plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claim. In essence, defendants argue that, although each state is an Illinois Brick repealer state, antitrust standing must still be determined under each state statute with reference to the AGC factors. Defendants claim further that plaintiffs with claims based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component cannot satisfy those factors. In response, plaintiffs rely on numerous cases as part of a broad argument that standing exists with respect to all the above mentioned states.

Preliminarily, the court must first resolve, as it did with respect to California's antitrust statute, whether antitrust standing under the laws of all thirteen states at issue must be determined with reference to the AGC factors. The issue is whether the thirteen states themselves would support application of the AGC test in assessing antitrust standing.

[*1094] With respect to eight of the thirteen states, the court finds that they would. As defendants point out, state courts in each of these eight states have concluded [68] not only that antitrust standing is distinct from the issue of indirect purchaser standing, but that application of the AGC factors is a proper means of determining antitrust standing. See Wrobel v. A Very Dennison Corp., et al., No. 05-CV-1 296 (Ks. Dist. Ct., Feb. 1 2006)(Kansas)("the Court finds that this AGC standing test may be applied to this action even though the [Kansas Restraint of Trade Act] specifically contemplates indirect purchaser suits"); Orr v. Beamon, 77 F. Supp. 2d 1208, 1212 (D. Kan. 1999)(Kansas)(federal district court in Kansas concluded "that standing under the Kansas antitrust statutes requires an antitrust injury similar to that required under the Sherman and Clayton Acts"); *Knowles v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2004 Me. Super. LEXIS 227, 2004 WL 2475284, 5 (Me. Super. Ct. 2004)(Maine)("It is probable that the Maine Law Court, if presented with this issue, would look to the [AGC] factors in determining standing under Maine's antitrust laws and would apply those factors except to the extent that those factors cannot be reconciled with the legislature's adoption of the Illinois Brick repealer"); Stark v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2004 WL 1879003, 2-3 (Mich. Cir. Ct. 2004) [69] (Michigan)(applying AGC factors to determine antitrust standing under Michigan antitrust statute); *Gutzwiller v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2004 WL 2114991, 6 (Minn. Dist. Ct. 2004)(Minnesota)("Utilizing factors (1), (4) and (5) of the [AGC] case in assessing the issue of standing [under Minnesota antitrust statute], is consistent with the concerns addressed by the state legislators who debated the 1984 amendment prior to its passage, and consistent with federal law"); *Crouch v. Crompton, 2004 NCBC 7, 2004 WL 2414027, 18 (N.C. Superior Ct. 2004)(North Carolina)("North Carolina courts would apply a multi-factor test to determine standing in indirect purchaser cases. The requirements would recognize indirect purchaser standing, but engraft upon the statute the requirements of standing enunciated in AGC, modified to recognize the right to recover for injury created by statute for indirect purchasers"); Beckler v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2004 WL 2115144, 2-3 (N.D. Dist. 2004)(North Dakota)(finding indirect purchaser claims too remote and implying reliance on AGC factors in determining lack [70] of standing); Cornelison v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. CIV 03-1350 (S.D. Cir. Ct. 2004), Ex. A to Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings re Second and Fourth Claims for Relief [7] (South Dakota)(hearing transcript noting state trial court's bench ruling employing AGC factors and granting dismissal based on lack of antitrust

[6] Plaintiffs' fourth claim for relief also re-states a claim under California's antitrust statute, the Cartwright Act, which defendants have targeted on this motion. See Complaint, P 97. Since standing under California's Cartwright Act has already been discussed in connection with plaintiffs' second claim for relief, however, the court omits discussion of that statute here.

[7] Plaintiffs do not appear to have objected to defendants' submission of this material.

standing); Strang v. Visa, 2005 WL 1403769, *3 (Wis. Cir. Ct. 2005)(Wisconsin)("our appellate courts would look to AGC factors for guidance in assessing an indirect or remote purchaser's standing"). [8]

[71] The court finds these authorities persuasive, and has relied on them as helpful guidance in concluding that application of [*1095] the AGC factors to the instant case is appropriate. While the cases do not emanate from the states' highest courts, they do emanate from courts with jurisdictional authority over the individual states in question, which courts are called upon to interpret the individual state laws at issue with more frequency and regularity than this court. Moreover, plaintiffs have failed to come forward with any contrary authority from the states in question. As such, the court concludes that plaintiffs' antitrust standing under the antitrust statutes of Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, is to be determined with reference to the AGC factors.

As for the remaining five states - Arizona, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada and New Mexico - the court's analysis is different, as the court is unaware of any case law from these states that specifically considers and determines whether the AGC antitrust standing factors generally apply. However, as defendants point out, almost all of these states have harmonization [72] provisions contained within their antitrust statutes calling for the statutes to be construed in accordance with federal law. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-1412 ("in construing this article, the courts may use as a guide interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable federal antitrust statutes"); Neb. Rev. Stat. § 59-829 ("the courts of this state in construing [Nebraska's antitrust statute] shall follow the construction given to the federal law by the federal courts"); Nev. Rev. Stat. § 598A.050 ("The provisions of this chapter shall be construed in harmony with prevailing judicial interpretations of the federal antitrust statutes"); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-15 ("the Antitrust Act shall be construed in harmony with judicial interpretations of the federal antitrust laws"). While Mississippi is the sole state without a harmonization provision, its Supreme Court has previously looked to federal law in interpreting the state's antitrust statute. See, e.g., Harrah's Vicksburg Corp. v. Pennebaker, 812 So. 2d 163 (Miss. 2002)(relying on federal [73] interpretation of Noerr-Pennington doctrine to determine applicability of same under state antitrust statute). Collectively, this suggests, and the court concludes, that the antitrust statutes of these five states are to be applied with federal antitrust principles in mind. As such, and looking to those federal principles insofar as antitrust standing is concerned, the court furthermore concludes that application of the AGC multi-factor test is appropriate in determining plaintiffs' antitrust standing under the antitrust statutes of Arizona, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada and New Mexico. Once again, this conclusion is further buttressed by the fact that plaintiffs offer no relevant state legal authority holding directly to the contrary.

In sum, then, taking all the above into account, and consistent with the discussion set forth above in connection with the Cartwright Act claim, the court finds that, even though the thirteen states at issue allow for indirect purchaser standing, plaintiffs here must still-satisfy the general antitrust standing requirements with reference to the multi-factor test set forth in AGC. Application of this multi-factor test, naturally, shall [74] be applied in a fashion that takes into account the broader standing principles that each state adheres to with respect to indirect purchasers.

Having concluded that antitrust standing requirements as set forth in AGC should apply, the question before the court is now whether a consideration of those factors demonstrates that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs at issue have adequately alleged antitrust standing.

With respect to this question, the parties' arguments are identical to those made [*1096] in connection with the court's discussion of antitrust standing under the Cartwright Act, supra. Accordingly, the court's analysis of these factors is the same. For the same reasons, therefore, that the court found antitrust standing to be lacking pursuant to the Cartwright Act claim, the court also finds that antitrust standing is lacking with respect to the thirteen [8] Many of the cases included in the preceding string cite were included as part of plaintiffs' lodging of relevant opinions, which occurred after briefing on the instant motions was complete, but before the hearing. Similarly, after the hearing, defendants also filed an application for leave to lodge a recent opinion, which the court granted on April 18, 2007. To the extent that many of the cases - and others included in plaintiffs' accompanying requests for judicial notice - are unpublished and/or not included in any electronic database, the court has considered the cases only to the extent relevant on an issue directly before the court.

remaining state law claims, for those plaintiffs with claims based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component.

As such, the court similarly GRANTS defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to these particular claims brought under the thirteen state laws at issue.

b. remaining five states

[75] In addition to challenging the above claims under the thirteen state laws, defendants argue that with respect to five of the twenty-two states whose antitrust statutes are invoked in plaintiffs' fourth claim for relief - Ohio, West Virginia, Alabama, South Dakota, and Pennsylvania - plaintiffs lack antitrust standing as a matter of law, for reasons in addition to failure to adequately satisfy the AGC factors. Defendants' arguments here, unlike those made heretofore, do not appear to be limited only to those plaintiffs with claims based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component. Rather, defendants appear to argue that all plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to bring their claims under the five state laws discussed below, as a matter of law.

1. Ohio and West Virginia

Defendants contend that both Ohio and West Virginia have laws that prohibit indirect purchaser standing for private actions. With respect to Ohio's Valentine Act, defendants argue that the Ohio Supreme Court expressly held as much in Johnson v. Microsoft Corp., 106 Ohio St. 3d 278, 2005 Ohio 4985, 834 N.E.2d 791 (Ohio 2005), and that decision should control here. With respect to West Virginia, defendants assert that [76] its antitrust statute contains a harmonization provision, which West Virginia state courts have construed as requiring them to "apply the federal decisional law interpreting the Sherman Act to [West Virginia's] own parallel anti-trust statute." Gray v. Marshall County Bd. of Educ., 179 W. Va. 282, 367 S.E. 2d 751, 755 (W. Va. 1988). According to defendants, this mandates that the court apply Illinois Brick's prohibitions to West Virginia law, and prohibit the indirect purchasers from bringing suit here.

With respect to Ohio's antitrust statute, defendants are correct. HN12[] The Ohio Supreme Court has expressly stated that it "adopt[s] and follow[s] Illinois Brick's direct-purchaser requirement and hold[s] that an indirect purchaser of goods may not assert a Valentine Act claim for alleged violations of Ohio antitrust law". Johnson, 834 N.E.2d at 798. Plaintiffs, for their part, "concur" that Ohio's Valentine Act has been construed "not to afford a cause of action to indirect purchasers…". See Pl. Opp. Br. Re Second and Fourth Claims for Relief, at 20:8-10. While they profess that they may nonetheless sue under Ohio common law, as alleged in a separate [77] related action currently before the court brought by various state attorneys general, the court does not address that complaint by way of the instant order, and plaintiffs arguments in this regard are therefore irrelevant. Accordingly, in view of the Ohio Supreme Court's express holding in Johnson, and plaintiffs' recognition and concession regarding that holding, the court finds that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs' claim pursuant to the Ohio Valentine Act is barred as a matter of law. The court hereby GRANTS judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim.

This leaves West Virginia for consideration. Generally speaking, defendants [*1097] are correct thatHN13[] federal decisional law interpreting the Sherman Act is to be applied in interpreting West Virginia's parallel antitrust statute. See W. Va. Code § 47-18-16; Gray, 179 W. Va. 282, 367 S.E. 2d 751. However, while this would seem to suggest that the Illinois Brick doctrine also extends to indirect purchaser actions brought under West Virginia's state antitrust statute, this conclusion is called into question by the fact that the West Virginia attorney general has promulgated a legislative rule [78] expressly permitting antitrust suits brought by indirect purchasers. The attorney general's ability to promulgate such a rule is contemplated by the state's antitrust statute itself, which explicitly grants the state attorney general the right to adopt rules and regulations interpreting and, enforcing West Virginia's antitrust statute. See W. Va. Code § 47-18-20 ("[t]he attorney general may make and adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement and administration of [the statute]").

Moreover, as plaintiffs point out, at least two federal courts have found that the West Virginia legislative rule allowing indirect purchaser standing is valid, and should be given effect. See In re New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d 160, 173-75 (D. Me 2004); In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 160 F. Supp. 2d 1365, 1376, n.8

(S.D. Fla. 2001). While neither case emanates from a court with jurisdictional authority over West Virginia, they are nonetheless instructive. In re New Motor Vehicles is particularly helpful. The federal court there dealt with the precise issue now before the [79] court - i.e., whether indirect purchaser standing is granted under West Virginia law, in the face of apparent conflict between the state attorney general's rule, and the harmonization provision of the state antitrust statute. After engaging in a fairly comprehensive overview of West Virginia rules of statutory interpretation and the relevant legislative history, the In re New Motor Vehicles court concluded that, since the harmonization provision at issue did not speak to indirect purchaser standing specifically, but was more broadly worded to provide for a "liberal" general interpretive approach, the state attorney general's subsequent rule interpreting the statute to allow for indirect purchaser standing was a "permissible" reading of the statute, and entitled to deference. See id.

The court applies that reasoning here. Moreover, unless and until this issue is raised and resolved by West Virginia state courts, the West Virginia attorney general - who is expressly granted the authority to interpret the very antitrust statute at issue here - is entitled to some deference.

Accordingly, the court finds that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs' claim pursuant to West Virginia's [80] state antitrust statute is not barred by incorporation of the Illinois Brick doctrine, and defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' claim under West Virginia law is hereby DENIED.

2. Alabama

Defendants contend that plaintiffs' state antitrust claim under Alabama's Unfair Trade Practices Act ("UTPA") is barred by the statute of limitations, since (1) the statute of limitations required plaintiffs to file their UTPA claim within two years of the 2002 time frame in which plaintiffs allege they discovered defendants' violations, and (2) plaintiffs filed their complaint in 2005, well more than two years after plaintiffs concede that they knew of their potential claims. Defendants argue, in the alternative, that plaintiffs' claim is barred because the UTPA applies solely to intrastate activities, which are not properly alleged here.

In response, plaintiffs do not dispute the timing discrepancy highlighted by defendants [*1098] but argue that, under the doctrine of class tolling, the statute of limitations was tolled by the filing of prior class actions in California state court in 2002 and 2003, both of which were filed on behalf of a nationwide class [81] that included Alabama residents. With respect to defendants' alternative argument, plaintiffs contend that the complaint may reasonably be inferred to state anticompetitive effects on both interstate and intrastate commerce.

The parties' arguments regarding the timeliness of plaintiffs' UTPA claim overlap with those raised by the parties in conjunction with defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings as to plaintiffs' fifth cause of action, and are discussed in detail below. While the court will not repeat that analysis here, it holds that for the same reasons as those highlighted below, and consistent with the court's decision therein, the doctrine of class tolling does not apply to plaintiffs' antitrust claim under the UTPA. As such, the court finds that plaintiffs' antitrust claim pursuant to the UTPA is barred by the two-year statute of limitations, and defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim is therefore GRANTED.

In view of this holding, it is unnecessary for the court to consider whether the UTPA applies to intrastate activity.

3. South Dakota

Defendants assert that plaintiffs cannot bring their claim under South Dakota's antitrust [82] statute because the statute requires an allegation that the alleged conduct affected "trade or commerce wholly within the state," an allegation that plaintiffs do not and cannot make. Plaintiffs, in response, argue that defendants are relying on an older version of the statute, and that the current statute applies to any conspiracy "in restraint of trade or commerce any part of which is within this state," which means that the statute applies to any interstate conduct, so long as it has an intrastate component as well. And since plaintiffs allege a national conspiracy here, they argue that allegations as to this national conspiracy presume the requisite effects within the state of South Dakota.

Turning first to the language of the statute itself, the court agrees with plaintiffs that HN14[] South Dakota's antitrust statute should be read to cover unlawful anticompetitive conduct, as long as any part of it "is within [South Dakota]" - i.e., as long as any part of it takes place or has an effect within the state. See S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-3.1 ("A contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons in restraint of trade or commerce any [83] part of which is within this state is unlawful"). This reading is supported by the literal language of the statute, and defendants have submitted no South Dakota case law that holds differently. Indeed, neither party has submitted any relevant South Dakota case law interpreting this provision of the statute. To be sure, defendants' differing view that the statute reaches conduct that is "wholly within the state" and therefore, exclusively within the state - is premised upon South Dakota case law. However, that case law predates the current version of the antitrust statute. See State v. Fullerton Lumber, 35 S.D. 410, 152 N.W. 708, 712 (S.D. 1915). And while defendants are correct that no case relied on by plaintiffs - nor any case unearthed by the court - expressly overrules Fullerton Lumber, that case was nonetheless issued more than sixty years prior to 1977, the year in which South Dakota's antitrust statute was amended to state, as it does currently, that the statute covers unlawful conspiracies to restrain trade or commerce as long as any, part of it is "within the state." See, e.g., S.D. Codified Laws §§ 37-1-1 to 37-1-3 (repealed in 1977).

[84] [*1099] As such, and since no South Dakota case has been cited or discovered that interprets the current language of the statute, or more particularly, its effect on the type of interstate/intrastate conduct that a plaintiff is required to allege, the current operative language of the statute controls. Plaintiffs are therefore able to state a claim under the statute as long as they allege an unlawful conspiracy to restrain trade or commerce, any part of which is within the state of South Dakota.

The court notes, however, that plaintiffs complaint does not specifically allege any conduct or conspiracy that takes place, or has any effect within South Dakota. At most, plaintiffs have alleged only that defendants' activities had "a substantial effect on the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States." See Complaint, 14. This is insufficient, in the court's view, to allege the requisite activity or effects within the state of South Dakota that the statute requires.

Accordingly, for this reason, the court GRANTS defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' claim pursuant to South Dakota's antitrust statute. In view of the fact that judgment is [85] being granted with respect to a technical pleading deficiency that might be cured by amendment, however, the court also grants plaintiffs leave to amend their complaint in order to cure the above pleading deficiency.

The court notes that leave to amend is granted only with respect to those plaintiffs who do not have claims under this statute based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component. For as discussed above, plaintiffs who have purchased products in which DRAM is a component cannot assert claims based on those purchases under South Dakota's antitrust statute, as they lack antitrust standing. In view of this fundamental deficiency, therefore, any amendment here would be futile.

4. Pennsylvania

Plaintiffs bring a claim for unlawful "restraint of trade" in violation of "the Pennsylvania common law." See Complaint, P111. Defendants argue, however, that Pennsylvania does not recognize either statutory or common law actions for restraint of trade. Plaintiffs, in response, assert that there are "conflicting authorities" on this point, and that certain "pronouncements" from both the state's highest court and several federal courts suggest that a remedy is, indeed, [86] available under Pennsylvania common law.

Defendants' arguments are more persuasive. They have relied on two separate state court opinions, in which the courts expressly stated that neither statutory nor common law actions exist in Pennsylvania for claims seeking money damages for antitrust violations. See, e.g., XF Enters. v. BASF Corp., 47 Pa. D. & C.4th 147, 150-51 (Pa. Comm. Pl. 2000)("No court to date has held that a private remedy is available for damages under Pennsylvania's common law on antitrust violations"); *Stutzle v. Rhone-Poulenc S.A., 2003 Phila. Ct. Com. Pl. LEXIS 74, 2003 WL 22250424, 2 (Pa. Comm. Pl. 2003)(same). As these cases noted, no state court has ever held to the contrary, nor has the state legislature provided residents of Pennsylvania with a private right of action authorizing a suit for damages.

Plaintiffs rely on contrary state authorities for support in arguing that Pennsylvania has recognized common law actions for antitrust violations in the past. See, e.g., Schwartz v. Laundry & Linen Supply Drivers' Union, 339 Pa. 353, 14 A.2d 438, 440 (Pa. 1940); Collins v. Main Line Bd. Of Realtors, 452 Pa. 342, 304 A.2d 493, 498 (Pa. 1973). These authorities, [87] however, are [*1100] inapposite, and of limited relevance here. For none of these cases held that Pennsylvania common law supports a cause of action for antitrust damages. To the extent that the cases discussed the availability of a common law cause of action, they dealt specifically with injunctive, or equitable relief. Moreover, and as the XF Enterprises court pointed out when it considered the Collins case, the language in that opinion, and upon which plaintiffs rely, "is dicta and is ambiguous at best." See XF Entperprises, 47 Pa. D & C 4th 147 at 150.

In light of the fact that no Pennsylvania state court has ever affirmatively held that a common law cause of action for antitrust damages may lie, and furthermore in light of the existence of cases based on state law expressly stating that no such cause of action may lie, the court declines plaintiffs' invitation to hold that such an action is permissible. To that end, the court hereby GRANTS defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' claim, based solely on Pennsylvania common law.

III. Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings re Fifth Claim for Relief

Defendants' second [88] motion seeks judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' fifth claim for relief. Like defendants' fourth claim for relief, the fifth claim also alleges the violation of twenty-two different state statutes, but whereas defendants' fourth claim alleged violations of state antitrust statutes, defendants' fifth claim alleges violations of consumer protection and unfair competition statutes. Of the twenty-two consumer protection statutes at issue, defendants challenge only thirteen, arguing that they do not as a matter of law provide a vehicle for bringing plaintiffs' antitrust claims. See Complaint, PP 118-142. The thirteen states whose statutes are challenged are: Alaska, Arkansas, Hawaii, Idaho, Louisiana, Montana, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

Specifically, defendants assert that four grounds, either separately or in combination, support dismissal of plaintiffs' claims under the thirteen state laws at issue: (1) the statutory claims are barred by applicable statutes of limitations; (2) the statutes contain limitations that prohibit class actions; (3) plaintiffs should not be allowed to circumvent separate state antitrust [89] laws that prohibit indirect purchaser standing; and/or (4) the statutes do not apply to the allegations in the instant case.

The court addresses defendants' first two grounds individually. However, because the latter two grounds go to the actual substance of plaintiffs' claims under the individual statutes, the court will address the latter two grounds together, in a state by state analysis.

1. Statutes of Limitations

Defendants contend that claims brought pursuant to the consumer protection and unfair protection statutes of seven states are barred pursuant to the relevant statutes of limitations applicable in those states. Specifically, defendants point out that both Louisiana and Oregon have a one year statute of limitations applicable to claims brought under their consumer protection and unfair competition laws, while Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Wyoming all have two-year statutes of limitations. Defendants then note that, while plaintiffs' complaint alleges that plaintiffs "did not discover, and could not have discovered" the alleged conspiracy in question "until shortly before class action litigation was commenced against the Defendants in 2002," the complaint itself [90] was not filed until June 17, 2005. See Complaint, P 68. Defendants argue that, since the complaint establishes 2002 as the general time frame during which plaintiffs became aware of [*1101] their claims and from which the statute of limitations therefore began running on those claims, the claims brought under the laws of all seven states are accordingly barred.

Plaintiffs invoke the class tolling doctrine in response. [9] They argue that, as of 2002, the various statutes of limitations on their claims have been tolled, by virtue of three related class actions filed in California state courts on behalf of plaintiff classes that include residents of the seven states at issue. Those state class actions, which were filed in 2002 and 2003, remain pending, with no decision yet issued as to either certification or the merits. Since those actions tolled the limitations period for all claims that could have been brought by any class member, and since plaintiffs in the instant case were part of those earlier classes, plaintiffs assert that their challenged claims here are timely.

[91] HN15[] The class tolling doctrine holds that the commencement of a class action stops the running of statutes of limitations as to all claims that might be asserted by all members of the class. See Am. Pipe & Constr. Co. v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538, 554, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713 (1974)("[T]he commencement of a class action suspends the applicable statute of limitations as to all asserted members of the class who would have been parties had the suit been permitted to continue as a class action."); see also Crown, Cork & Seal Co. v. Parker, 462 U.S. 345, 350, 103 S. Ct. 2392, 76 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1983)(same). The Supreme Court has held that the doctrine helps to safeguard the "principal purposes of the [Rule 23] class action procedure - promotion of efficiency and economy of litigation … See Crown. Cork & Seal, 462 U.S. at 349.

The Ninth Circuit has had a few occasions on which to consider the class tolling doctrine. In Tosti v. City of Los Angeles, for example, the Ninth Circuit applied class tolling to a plaintiff's subsequent individual action alleging sex discrimination - filed outside the limitations period - where the plaintiff had opted out of an earlier class action lawsuit involving the [92] same allegations. See 754 F.2d 1485 (9th Cir. 1985). The Ninth Circuit held that the doctrine applied, even though plaintiffs individual claims - alleging violations of the fourteenth amendment and 42 U.S.C. § 1983 - were slightly different than the prior class action claims, which alleged Title VII violations in addition to claims under section 1983 and the fourteenth amendment. See id. at 1489 (finding "no persuasive authority for a rule which would require that the individual suit must be identical in every respect to the class suit").

Then, in Robbin v. Fluor Corp., the Ninth Circuit considered whether the pendency of an earlier class action tolled the applicable statutes of limitations for a subsequently filed class action, in addition to a subsequently filed individual action. See 835 F.2d 213 (9th Cir. 1987). The Ninth Circuit held that the class tolling doctrine did not apply to the subsequently filed class action (although it allowed the individual action to go forward). Central to the court's ruling was the fact that the district court had denied class certification [*1102] in the earlier class action, [93] which denial the subsequent class action sought to re-litigate, and thereby circumvent. The court reasoned that the policy considerations underlying the tolling doctrines of American Pipe and Crown, Cork & Seal did not support application of the class tolling doctrine in such circumstances. Id. at 214.

The Ninth Circuit arrived at a different conclusion, however, in Catholic Social Servs. v. INS, 232 F.3d 1139 (9th Cir. 2000). There, the court applied class action tolling and allowed a subsequent class action to go forward. The court distinguished its decision from Robbin on grounds that plaintiffs in Catholic Social Serv., unlike the plaintiffs in Robbin, were not attempting to re-litigate an earlier denial of class certification. See 232 F.3d at 1149. Nor were they attempting to correct a procedural deficiency in an earlier would-be class, a factor that other, out-of-circuit authorities have relied on as a basis for refusal to apply class tolling. Id. While distinguishing the case before it from those other cases, however, the Ninth Circuit appeared to cite with approval the language employed by those [94] other authorities - including the US Supreme Court - stating that plaintiffs may not "piggyback one class action onto another … and thereby engage in endless rounds of litigation…". See id. at 1148.

As these cases demonstrate, the Ninth Circuit has thus far applied class tolling in situations where plaintiffs in the subsequently filed class action have opted out of an earlier certified class, or where plaintiffs are not seeking to [9] Plaintiffs also argue, in conclusory fashion, that "[w]here, as here, the timeliness of the claims depends on an examination of fact-intensive issues such as concealment, discovery and tolling, the issue cannot properly be resolved in a judgment on the pleadings." See Pl. Opp. Br. at 2:18-3:1. Aside from this brief statement, however, plaintiffs make no showing as to why or how the issues of concealment, discovery, and/or tolling are fact-intensive as applied to this case, such that resolution of the statute of limitations issue - via 12(c) motion - is improper. Accordingly, plaintiffs' argument in this regard is unpersuasive.

---

circumvent an earlier denial of class certification, or to otherwise correct procedural deficiencies that formed the basis for such a denial.

The Ninth Circuit has never had occasion, however, to pass on the particular situation before the court here - i.e., where plaintiffs seek application of class tolling to a subsequently filed class action, where no decision as to certification has yet been made in the earlier filed class action. Unsurprisingly, the parties disagree as to the import of the above cases on this issue, and rely on varying persuasive authority in pressing their arguments upon the court.

Plaintiffs, for example, read the Catholic Social Serv. holding, permitting class action tolling, expansively. They read [95] it as setting forth the proposition that, unless a decision on the merits or on class certification has issued in the earlier filed class action, class tolling applies. They further invoke In re Linerboard, 223 F.R.D. 335, 351 (E.D. Pa. 2004), for the proposition that application of class tolling is particularly appropriate in cross-jurisdictional class actions, such as those at issue here, since it prevents courts around the country from being flooded with substantially similar class actions "anytime a nationwide class action is filed."

Defendants, on the other hand, point to the policy reasons behind the class tolling doctrine and argue that these reasons counsel against applying class tolling to later-filed actions where no decision on certification or the merits has been reached in the earlier filed action. They specifically rely on In re Heritage Bond Litig., 289 F. Supp. 2d 1132 (C.D. Cal. 2003), a district court case that considered the identical issue before the court here, and which declined to apply class tolling. The In re Heritage Bond court noted that the class tolling doctrine as originally set forth in American Pipe, promotes [96] judicial efficiency: for if tolling were withheld for subsequently filed claims, putative class members would be forced to prematurely file their own actions prior to a determination on certification in the earlier class action, in order to preserve their claims - 'precisely the multiplicity of activity which Rule 23 was designed to avoid…". See In re Heritage Bond, 289 F. Supp. 2d at [*1103] 1150. The In re Heritage Bond court then went on to reason that, in view of these policy considerations, the doctrine "does not apply to individuals who would not be parties to the earlier filed class action if it continued as a class action." Id. Indeed, the class tolling doctrine, continued the court, "was never intended to apply to plaintiffs 'who file separate suits prior to a decision being reached on the class certification issue,' because none of the judicial efficiency purposes of the doctrine [would be] served by applying it to plaintiffs who voluntarily pursue their individual claims even before the court determines whether the class is viable…". See id. As such, the court held that class action tolling did not apply to a subsequent class action filed prior [97] to a certification decision in the earlier filed action. Id.

While the issue is far from clear cut, the court is nonetheless persuaded that class tolling should not be applied to plaintiffs' state law claims here. Both the Ninth Circuit's reasoning in Catholic Social Serv., which appears to cite with approval other courts' concerns for the potential multiplicity of actions that could result from allowing subsequent classes of plaintiffs to unfairly "piggyback" on prior class actions, and the court's own view that the policy reasons behind the class tolling doctrine are better served by declining to apply class tolling under the facts of this case, urge this result. The court is particularly concerned, for example, that if it were to conclude otherwise, and class tolling were held to apply, then plaintiffs would essentially be permitted to file class action after class action, until the state court class actions finally decide either the merits of the earlier cases, or the class certification issue.

For these reasons, the court declines to apply the class tolling doctrine to plaintiffs' claims brought under the seven state statutes at issue. Accordingly, since no tolling [98] applies, defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' claims under the laws of Alaska, Idaho, Louisiana, Montana, Oregon, Utah, and Wyoming, as stated in plaintiffs' fifth claim for relief, is hereby GRANTED.

2. State Limitations on Class Actions

Defendants also contend that the consumer protection statutes of Louisiana, Montana, New York, and South Carolina, all prohibit plaintiffs from bringing a class action suit, and require dismissal of plaintiffs' claims under those statutes. Defendants' arguments with respect to Louisiana, Montana, and South Carolina are similar, while they make a separate argument with respect to New York. The court therefore groups its discussion of these states accordingly.

a. Louisiana, Montana, South Carolina

With respect to these states, defendants make two general arguments. First, they point out that their consumer protection statutes expressly prohibit representative actions for damages, such as the one filed by plaintiffs here. Second, defendants note that plaintiffs also have no individual claims under any of the state statutes at issue that could support any representative claims - no plaintiff is a resident [99] of any of the three states in question, nor do plaintiffs allege that they have bought any affected goods in the relevant states. Accordingly, defendants argue that plaintiffs' claims under those statutes are not viable.

Defendants are correct. First, as they point out, the statutes cannot be enforced by way of a class action suit. The clear language of all three statutes expressly states as much. See La. Rev. Stat. § 51:1409(A)(HN16[] plaintiffs "may bring an action individually but not in a representative capacity to recover actual damages" under statute"); Morris v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 765 So. 2d 419, 421 (4th [*1104] Cir. 2000)(Louisiana statute "expressly prohibits a private class action");HN17[] Mont. Code Ann. § 30-14-133(1)(consumers "may bring an individual but not a class action"); S.C. Code Ann. § 39-5-140(persons bringing suit under statute "may bring an action individually, but not in a representative capacity, to recover actual damages"). Moreover, other federal courts have also read the express language of the statutes in question to prohibit class actions. See, e.g., Hamilton v. United Healthcare of La., 310 F.3d 385, 393 (5th Cir. 2002) [100] (district court "[c]onclud[ed], correctly, that the [Louisiana consumer protection statute] does not allow class action claims"); In re Pharm. Indus. Average Wholesale Price Litig., 230 F.R.D. 61, 84 (D. Mass. 2005)(stating that under Louisiana and Montana law, "there is no right to bring a class action to enforce the consumer protection statutes"); Gunnells v. Healthplan Servs., 348 F.3d 417, 423 (4th Cir. 2003)(impliedly affirming district court's refusal to certify class under South Carolina consumer protection statute in statutory prohibition on representative actions to recover monetary damages).

Plaintiffs attempt to avoid the above conclusion by arguing that the statutory limitations set forth in each of the three statutes constitute across-the-board limits on class adjudication that are inconsistent with Rule 23, and must therefore be disregarded. Plaintiffs rely specifically on three out of circuit district court cases for support of their argument. See O'Keefe v. Mercedes-Benz, USA, LLC, 214 F.R.D. 266, 285-86 (E.D. Pa. 2003); In re Bridgestone/Firestone Inc., 205 F.R.D. 503, 514-15 (S.D. Ind. 2001), [101] rev'd in part on other grounds, 288 F.3d 1012 (7th Cir. 2002); Kristiansen v. John Mullins & Sons, Inc., 59 F.R.D. 99, 109-110, n. 113 (E.D. N.Y. 1973). As defendants point out, however, none of these cases actually addresses the three specific state statutes in question, or otherwise provides a basis for refusing to follow both the express statutory language contained therein prohibiting private class actions for monetary damages, and decisional authority from relevant jurisdictions confirming this interpretation. As such, plaintiffs' representative claims under these three statutes fail.

Second, and significantly, defendants are also correct that plaintiffs have not, in the first instance, laid the proper groundwork for a representative claim. No named plaintiff is a resident of any of the three states in question, nor is there any allegation of any conduct or activity taking place within the targeted states that sets forth a basis for connecting plaintiffs' individual claims with representative claims under Louisiana, Montana, or South Carolina statutes. Plaintiffs, for their part, fail to argue otherwise, thereby conceding the issue.

In sum, [102] and for the above reasons, the court concludes that defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings as to plaintiffs' representative claims under the consumer protection statutes of Louisiana, Montana, and South Carolina must be, and are hereby is, GRANTED, as the statutes prohibit private class action suits for money damages, and plaintiffs have furthermore failed to set forth any allegations allowing such representative claims to go forward.

b. New York

Defendants also target plaintiffs' claim pursuant to New York's consumer protection statute, General Business Law § 349 et seq. Specifically, they argue that a separate state statute - New York C.P.L.R. § 901(b) - prohibits plaintiffs' representative claim under General Business Law § 349. Section 901(b) prohibits any class action "to recover a penalty, or a minimum measure of recovery created or imposed by statute." Defendants assert that this prohibition extends to plaintiffs' [*1105] claim under section 349, since that statute permits plaintiffs to seek "actual damages or fifty dollars, whichever is greater," as well as treble damages for willful violations. See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(h) [103] . According to defendants, plaintiffs' claim under section 349 therefore improperly seeks recovery of a "penalty" by way of a representative claim, and must be dismissed.

In response, plaintiffs argue that they do not seek treble damages or penalties under section 349, but only actual damages, thereby making C.P.L.R. § 901(b) inapplicable. Plaintiffs further noted at the hearing that the complaint expressly requests that relief in the form of damages be awarded only "as provided by federal and state antitrust laws…". See Complaint, at 28:7-9. As such, plaintiffs contend that they are only seeking those damages that are permissible under any given state's laws.

Plaintiffs' arguments are more persuasive. As the controlling state cases they rely on hold, section 901(b) only proscribes class actions that seek to recover either statutory penalties, or statutory minimum damage awards; it does not proscribe class actions that seek recovery of actual damages. See, e.g., Cox v. Microsoft Corp., 8 A.D.3d 39, 778 N.Y.S. 2d 147, 148-49 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dep't 2004)(rejecting defendant's argument that plaintiffs were not entitled to class action relief under § 349 based on fact [104] that statutorily prescribed $ 50 minimum damages constitutes a "penalty" under C.P.L.R. 901(b)); Super Glue Corp. v. Avis Rent a Car Sys., Inc., 132 A.D.2d 604, 517 N.Y.S. 2d 764, 767 (N.Y. App. Div. 2nd Dep't 1987)("a class action may be maintained to recover actual damages and injunctive relief pursuant to [section] 349(h)"). These cases are directly on point, since they considered the very same issue before the court here - i.e., whether C.P.L.R. § 901(b) prohibits class action claims brought under Gen. Bus. Law § 349. Furthermore, the court is compelled to defer to the New York state courts' interpretation of their own state law. Accordingly, the court concludes that there is no bar to plaintiffs' class action claim under section 349, provided that plaintiffs are seeking only actual damages.

On this point, the court is persuaded that plaintiffs' complaint does indeed set forth a claim for actual damages only. For, as plaintiffs pointed out at the hearing on the instant motions, the complaint's prayer for relief seeks damages only "as provided by federal and state antitrust laws." See Complaint at 28:7-9. Although defendants respond by stating that this allegation is [105] contradicted by a subsequent allegation of the complaint, which states that plaintiffs are seeking judgment "in an amount to be trebled in accordance with such laws," the court does not believe that this allegation undermines plaintiffs' argument. For it still remains true, as alleged, that plaintiffs are limited to seeking judgment "in accordance with" the laws pursuant to which they seek relief. And, as just explained above, the statute pursuant to which plaintiffs seeks relief via a representative claim allows for only actual damages.

In sum, and for all these reasons, the court concludes (1) thatHN18[] C.P.L.R. § 901(b) presents no bar to class action suits seeking actual damages pursuant to Gen. Bus. Law § 349; and (2) that plaintiffs' complaint sufficiently alleges that plaintiffs are seeking actual damages only under section 349, in accordance with New York law. Accordingly, the court DENIES defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings in connection with plaintiffs' representative claim pursuant to New York's Gen. Bus. Law § 349. Plaintiffs' claim under the statute remains valid. [10]

[106] [*1106] 3. Substantive State by State Analysis

[10] The court notes that there is a larger potential problem suggested by plaintiffs' complaint, which the parties have not addressed. Notwithstanding their arguments regarding the fact that plaintiffs are only seeking damages that are consistent with "federal and state antitrust laws," plaintiffs have not actually alleged that they are seeking any damages pursuant to any of the consumer protection statutes alleged in the complaint. See Complaint, Prayer for Relief at 28:27:19-28:27. Accordingly, and based on their failure to allege as such, there is an argument to be made that plaintiffs are unable to recover any damages pursuant to the consumer protection statutes alleged in their complaint, in the event those statutes provide for damages. Since the parties have not raised this argument, however, the court refrains from making a final determination as to this issue.

Defendants' remaining arguments are targeted at the consumer protection statutes of eleven states: Alaska, Arkansas, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Utah, West Virginia, and Wyoming. Defendants urge the court to dismiss plaintiffs' claims brought pursuant to these statutes on two grounds. First, that plaintiffs' indirect purchaser claims under these state statutes are improper, because each state specifically prohibits or limits - whether by operation of separate statute or other laws - indirect purchasers from bringing antitrust suits, pursuant to Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). According to defendants, since these states follow Illinois Brick's general prohibition on indirect purchaser suits alleging antitrust violations, allowing plaintiffs to seek the same relief by way of consumer protection statutes would be improper. Second, and in a closely related argument, defendants assert that plaintiffs' consumer protection claims are improper because the consumer protection statutes pursuant to which the claims are brought are truly intended to cover allegations of false advertising, [107] and deceptive or fraudulent conduct - i.e., classic consumer protection violations - and do not cover plaintiffs' antitrust allegations.

In essence, the gist of defendants' arguments with respect to the substance of the consumer protection claims at issue here, is simply that the statutes pursuant to which plaintiffs bring their claims are aimed solely at true consumer protection violations actually suffered by injured parties - i.e., they are not meant to cover, and cannot be interpreted to cover; antitrust violations brought by indirect purchasers of goods.

Preliminarily, the court notes that defendants' arguments touch upon areas of law that are unsettled in the majority of the states at issue. While the court has attempted, for example, to construe the individual state statutes at issue with reference to the actual state courts' interpretation of their own law state laws, the court has not always found case law that is both directly on point and which constitutes controlling legal authority within the given state in question, as discussed more thoroughly below. For that reason, the court has construed the statutes in question with reference to certain overriding principles. [108] First, where possible, the court has relied on controlling state law cases. Second, andHN19[] where no controlling state law cases are available, the court has looked to state legislative history - where available and relied on by the parties - as persuasive authority regarding proper statutory interpretation. In the event neither of these preceding sources proved helpful, the court has looked to other, persuasive jurisdictions that interpret the specific statute in question.

Moreover, and particularly with respect to the issue whether indirect purchaser standing exists under the consumer protection statutes in question, where there is no state law authority regarding the issue, the court's approach to statutory interpretation [*1107] is conservative in nature. Where possible, the court has avoided making affirmative pronouncements regarding state law that would have the effect of substantially broadening the legal rights available pursuant to that law.

With these guidelines in mind, the court turns to each individual state at issue, and evaluates the arguments with respect to each, as follows.

a. Alaska

Plaintiffs assert a representative claim pursuant to Alaska's Unfair Trade Practices [109] and Consumer Protection Act ("AUTPCPA"). See Alaska Stat. § 45.50.531. Defendants argue that, since Alaska's antitrust statute expressly prohibits indirect purchasers from bringing private suits for antitrust violations and limits such actions to those brought by only the state attorney general, plaintiffs should not be allowed to circumvent that prohibition by proceeding under the AUTPCPA. In response, plaintiffs argue that the AUTPCPA applies broadly to any "persons" who have been injured, regardless whether they are indirect or direct purchasers, and that the Alaska Supreme Court has previously held that private parties may sue under AUTPCPA for conduct that also violates Alaska's antitrust statute - as is the case here. Plaintiffs also assert that the AUTPCPA was modeled after the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTCA"), which has been held to apply to antitrust violations, and that both state and federal courts have consistently granted indirect purchaser standing where those indirect purchasers bring suit under statutes that are modeled after the FTCA.

HN20[] The AUTPCPA provides: "A person who suffers an ascertainable loss of money or property as a [110] result of another person's act or practice declared unlawful [under AUTPCPA] may bring a civil action to recover for each unlawful act or practice three times the actual damages or $ 500, whichever is greater." See Alaska St. § 45.50.531. There is nothing in the statute's wording or definitions, however, that specifically defines either direct or indirect purchasers as "persons," or that distinguishes between the two. Nor is there any guidance provided by the language of the statute as to whether, more generally, indirect purchaser standing in the antitrust context suffices under the AUTPCPA. Furthermore, neither party has submitted any controlling case authority - or, for that matter, any persuasive case authority - directly on point as to this issue. Defendants merely assert that the absence of any case law expressly allowing indirect purchasers to sue under the AUTPCPA requires the conclusion that no indirect purchaser standing exists under it, while plaintiffs assert that the absence of any case law disallowing indirect purchasers to sue requires the conclusion that such standing does exist.

Recognizing the absence of authority that is directly on point, the parties extrapolate [111] from non-controlling authority to support their positions. Defendants rely on Alaska's amended antitrust statute, for example, to establish that prior to July 2003, indirect purchaser suits alleging antitrust violations were flatly prohibited. See Alaska Statute § 45.50.577 (amended to state that, after July 2003, "only the attorney general" may sue under the antitrust statute on behalf of violations alleged by indirect purchasers). Based on the statute's amendment permitting the attorney general to sue after July 2003, defendants reason that permitting indirect purchaser claims under the AUTPCPA would frustrate the purpose and goals of the state legislature as set forth in the amended state antitrust statute. Plaintiffs, by contrast, rely on legislative history that expresses no opinion about indirect purchaser standing, and the Supreme Court's decision in *Odom v. Fairbanks Mem. [1108] Hosp., 999 P.2d 123, 131-32 (Alaska 2000), a controlling state court case in which the court held that certain conduct may give rise to violations under both Alaska's state antitrust statutes and the AUTPCPA, but made no pronouncement on the issue of indirect [112] purchaser standing.

None of these authorities is obviously directly on point. As such, and furthermore recognizing that this court is not in the best position to decide unresolved legal issues for the state of Alaska, the court chooses to adopt the interpretation that will wreak the least amount of havoc on the existing law in Alaska. To that end, the court therefore declines to read the AUTPCPA to permit indirect purchaser standing, since no court has affirmatively found to the contrary, and since, under the current status of the law in Alaska, only the attorney general may sue for money damages on behalf of indirect purchasers as a result of antitrust violations.

Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim is GRANTED.

b. Arkansas

Plaintiffs' representative claim under Arkansas law is brought under the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("ADTPA"). See Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-113. As with Alaska, defendants first argue that antitrust standing should be denied to indirect purchaser plaintiffs under ADTPA, because indirect purchaser standing would be denied to them under the Arkansas antitrust statute. Second, [113] defendants contend that the ADTPA does not cover plaintiffs' allegations of antitrust price-fixing at any rate, since the statute only prohibits "unconscionable, false or deceptive acts or practices," none of which are alleged here.

In support of these arguments, defendants point out that Arkansas' antitrust statute does not permit indirect purchasers to bring private actions for money damages, as plaintiffs seek to do here. This is because the antitrust statute permits only the state attorney general to bring actions for money damages. See Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-315(b). Defendants point out further that the Arkansas legislature went so far as to reject a proposed amendment in 2001 that would have allowed private plaintiffs to bring antitrust suits for monetary damages. All of which means, according to defendants, that the legislature has expressly made clear not only that antitrust standing should be denied to indirect purchaser plaintiffs under the Arkansas antitrust statute, but that it should also be denied to indirect purchaser plaintiffs under ADTPA.

Plaintiffs, however, correctly point out that, contrary to defendants' argument, HN21[] the ADTPA does [114] not limit suits by indirect purchasers expressly to the state attorney general, as Alaska's statute does. It merely provides an affirmative right of action for the attorney general, which the attorney general "may," in his or her discretion, exercise. See Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-315. Indeed, even defendants concede in their reply that Arkansas allows some indirect purchaser suits for money damages. Moreover, unlike with the court's review of Alaska's statute, here there is at least persuasive authority directly on point that provides some guidance suggesting that indirect purchaser suits alleging antitrust violations can also state claims under ADTPA. [11]

[115] [*1109] Plaintiffs specifically point to In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 350 F. Supp. 2d 160, 178-79 (D. Me. 2004), in which the court considered the precise issue here, and stated that it "find[s] no support in the ADTPA or Arkansas case law for a ban on indirect purchaser suits. The ADTPA provides a private cause of action for damages for any person injured by a violation of the ADTPA, and is not limited to a cause of action for direct purchasers." The court also noted that Arkansas "does not prohibit indirect purchaser suits under its antitrust laws." See id.

Defendants take issue with plaintiffs' reliance on this case, particularly in light of the fact that the ADTPA does not contain language specifically prohibiting "unfair competition" - the language in the analogous federal consumer protection statute (i.e., the FTCA) that has been interpreted to cover antitrust violations. However, defendants present no controlling legal authority supporting their claim. They, too, rely on persuasive authority, in which other states' judicial tribunals hold that other states' consumer protections statutes that fail to address "unfair competition" [116] do not cover antitrust claims generally or price-fixing claims. Given, however, that In re Motor Vehicles is the only cited case that actually construes the application of actual antitrust conspiracy claims to the ADTPA specifically, the court finds it more persuasive here. For these reasons, and in view of the fact that Arkansas' antitrust statute allows for indirect purchaser standing in certain circumstances, and the absence of state law authority holding otherwise, the court concludes that plaintiffs' claim under the ADTPA is viable, and may proceed.

Accordingly, the court DENIES defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim.

c. Hawaii

Plaintiffs assert a representative claim pursuant to Haw. Rev. Stat § 480-2 et seq. Both parties apparently concede that Hawaii's consumer protection statute - section 480-2(e) - allows "any person" to bring an act under the statute, and that this would apply to indirect purchasers. They dispute, however, whether the statute - which was amended on June 28, 2002 to allow private suits by indirect purchasers alleging unfair competition - applies to plaintiffs' claim. Defendants assert [117] that the statute has no retroactive effect and does not cover the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint, which are based on conduct that occurred prior to adoption of the amendment in June 2002. Plaintiffs, for their part, allege that it is the timing of the complaint's filing that counts, and that the amended statute applies, since it had already been enacted by the time plaintiffs' suit was actually filed.

Defendants are generally correct that, HN22[] under Hawaii case law, a statute has retroactive effect only if the language of the statute itself or the legislative history expressly indicate that the statute should be applied retroactively. See, e.g., Dash v. Wayne, 700 F. Supp. 1056, 1059 (D. Haw. 1988)(holding that subsection (d) of same statute does not apply retroactively). However, even if the statute applies only prospectively as of the June 2002 date of enactment, it still remains the case that plaintiffs' complaint was not filed until June 17, 2005, nearly three years later. Thus, the critical question is not whether the statute itself takes effect retroactively or prospectively, it is whether the statute, once enacted in June 2002, applied - and continues [118] to apply - according to the date of alleged conduct, or according to filing date. If the statute applies with reference to the former, then defendants are correct that plaintiffs' claim, which is based on [*1110] allegations of conduct that occurred prior to June 2002, does not benefit from the rule permitting indirect purchaser standing. If the statute applies with reference to the latter, by contrast, plaintiffs are correct that their claim stands, since the filing date came well after the date of the amended statute's enactment.

---

[11] Plaintiffs also point to Arkansas state law authority that purportedly expressly ruled that indirect purchasers may bring antitrust claims under the ADTPA. See Pl. Opp. Br. Re Fifth Claim for Relief at 11:6-8. However, that decision has not been attached, and the court was unable to procure it from the standard electronic publishing databases. Accordingly, the court takes note of the existence of this authority, but does not rely on it.

Turning to the language of the statutory provision at issue, the court finds that it is the date of filing that should control, and which determines whether the amended section 480-2(e) applies. Looking at the amended statute, it simply states that HN23[] "[a]ny person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section." See Hi. Stat. Ann. § 480-2(e)(emphasis added). Thus, it is the bringing - or filing - of an action to which the statute applies. Defendants' arguments to the contrary, asserting that the statute applies to conduct, overreach. Furthermore, defendants provide no legal authority in support of their reading [119] of the statute.

Accordingly, the court concludes that the amended statutory language should control, that it applies prospectively to claims filed pursuant to the statute on or after the June 2002 date of enactment, and that plaintiffs' claim under the statute is therefore proper. As such, defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to the instant claim is DENIED.

d. Idaho

Plaintiffs' complaint asserts a claim pursuant to the Idaho Consumer Protection Act ("ICPA"). See Idaho Code Ann. § 48-601 et seq. Defendants argue that HN24[] the Idaho Supreme Court has explicitly held that indirect purchasers of price-fixed products cannot sue under Idaho's consumer protection statute - the CPA - since the statute specifically lists the types of conduct that are unlawful, and price-fixing is not one of them.

Defendants are correct, and Wasden v. Daicel Chemical Indus., 141 Idaho 102, 106 P.3d 428 (Idaho 2005), is dispositive. Wasden expressly held that allegations of antitrust price-fixing do not qualify as a type of prohibited conduct under the CPA. See id. at 434-35. The Idaho Supreme Court's finding in this regard was explicit: [120] HN25[] "[p]rice-fixing is not listed in § 48-603 as conduct that constitutes either an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive act or practice." Id. at 434. In setting forth its reasoning, the Wasden court specifically noted that the legislative intent behind the CPA required the court to give due consideration and weight to federal interpretation of the FTCA, but held that the CPA was distinct from the FTCA in that it specifically "defines what constitutes an unfair method of competition," and excludes price-fixing from that definition. See id. at 433-34. Wasden is directly on point, and compels the conclusion here that plaintiffs' claim pursuant to the CPA, based on similar allegations of price-fixing and horizontal price restraints, must fail.

Plaintiffs' reliance on alternative case law does persuade otherwise. The majority of the case law that plaintiffs rely on predates the Wasden opinion that explicitly construes the statute in question, or it constitutes only persuasive authority. See, e.g., In re Western Acceptance Corp., 117 Idaho 399, 788 P.2d 214, 216 (Idaho 1996); State ex rel. Lance v. Hobby Horse Ranch Tractor and Equip. Co., 129 Idaho 565, 929 P.2d 741, 743 (Idaho 1996); [121] In re New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 184-85; DBSI Signature Place, LLC v. BL Greensboro, L.P., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30387, 2006 WL 1275394 (D. Idaho 2006). Moreover, DBSI Signature Place, which plaintiffs take particular note of for the proposition that it both distinguishes Wasden and suggests that plaintiffs' allegations are covered as a practice that is "otherwise misleading, false or deceptive" [*1111] under enumerated provision 603(17) of the CPA, is off-point. To begin with, DBSI Signature Place did not distinguish Wasden, as plaintiffs contend, but rather reaffirmed its principal holding that the CPA defines the sum total of actionable conduct under it. Second, the case did not consider traditional horizontal restraint violations such as those alleged by plaintiffs here - which Wasden specifically holds are excluded under the CPA.

In sum, in view of Wasden, which constitutes dispositive and controlling legal authority directly on point, and in view of plaintiffs' failure to controvert Wasden, the court concludes that plaintiffs' claim pursuant to the Idaho CPA is barred. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to [122] this claim is accordingly GRANTED.

e. Montana

Plaintiffs' claim under Montana law is brought pursuant to that state's Unfair Trade Practices Act ("MUTPA"). See Mont. Code Ann. § 30-14-101 et seq. Defendants argue that judgment on the pleadings is warranted with respect to this claim, for two reasons. First, while Montana courts have not directly addressed the indirect purchaser standing issue, the Montana Supreme Court has held that consideration should be given to federal antitrust law when interpreting similar portions of MUTPA. See, e.g., Smith v. Video Lottery Consultants. Inc., 260 Mont. 54, 858 P.2d 11, 13 (Mont. 1993). Accordingly, since federal law prohibits indirect purchaser standing by virtue of Illinois Brick, so should MUTPA. Second, defendants contend that only "consumers" may bring actions under the MUTPA, which the act specifically defines as "persons" who purchase or lease goods or services "primarily for personal, family, or household purposes." Since some of the plaintiffs here are business entities, they have no standing as consumers. Furthermore, standing as to the individual plaintiffs is lacking because they have not [123] alleged any use for personal, family, or household purposes.

In response, plaintiffs first point out that MUTPA is modeled after the FTCA, which has been interpreted to allow indirect purchaser standing for antitrust violations. Plaintiffs argue that MUTPA should be interpreted the same way. Second, and in response to defendants' arguments regarding plaintiffs' standing as "consumers", plaintiffs refrain from addressing defendants' challenge to the business entity plaintiffs, but argue that the individual plaintiffs' claims should effectively be read to support the inference that plaintiffs' use was for personal, family, or household purposes, since the complaint does not allege to the contrary.

With respect to whether Illinois Brick's prohibition on indirect purchaser standing should extend to claims under MUTPA, the parties in essence agree that consideration of analogous federal law is useful in interpreting Montana law, but disagree on which federal law is analogous - the Sherman Act, which adopts Illinois Brick, or the FTCA, which plaintiffs contend permits indirect purchasers to sue. Defendants rely primarily on Smith v. Video Lottery Consultants. Inc., 260 Mont. 54, 858 P.2d 11 (Mont. 1993) [124] for proof that federal interpretation of the Sherman Act controls, while plaintiffs rely primarily on In re New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 192 for proof that FTCA interpretation controls.

Defendants' reliance on Smith is misplaced. While Smith issued from Montana's highest court and is controlling authority regarding interpretation of Montana law, that case did not construe the particular consumer protection provision of MUTPA that is at issue here. Rather, that case construed the provisions of MUTPA that specifically deal [*1112] with unlawful restraints of trade. See, e.g., Mont. Code Ann. §§ 30-14-205(2)(c, g)(prohibiting horizontal restraints of trade and monopolies); Smith, 858 P.2d at 12-14 (comparing MUTPA restraint of trade provisions with sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act). This is why, in looking to federal law for guidance, the Smith court turned to the federal courts' interpretation of the Sherman Act; the Sherman Act is the analogous federal statute that deals specifically with unlawful restraints of trade. The consumer protection provisions of MUTPA, by contrast, prohibit "[u]nfair methods [125] of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices" in the conduct of trade or commerce, rather than unlawful restraints of trade. See Mont. Code Ann. §§ 30-14-103. These provisions are therefore not analogous to the Sherman Act, and their construction is not aided by interpretation of the Sherman Act, as suggested by the Montana Supreme Court in Smith.

Rather, HN26[] MUTPA's consumer protection provisions provide that the proper source of analogous federal law is, as plaintiffs, attest, the FTCA. See id. at § 30-14-104(1)("It is the intent of the legislature that in construing 30-14-103 due consideration and weight shall be given to the interpretations of the federal trade commission and the federal courts relating to section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act"). Accordingly, the court looks to federal interpretation of the FTCA, and not the Sherman Act, for guidance. Since there is no Montana authority directly on point construing MUTPA's consumer protection provisions specifically, and in light of the FTCA, plaintiff's reliance on In re New Motor Vehicles - which, although persuasive authority only, is directly on point - is [126] appropriate and helpful.

In New Motor Vehicles, the court considered various plaintiffs' ability to bring a claim alleging an unlawful group boycott - a traditional antitrust claim - under MUTPA. The court held that since MUTPA is modeled after the FTCA, and since MUTPA further directs that the statute be interpreted in accordance with federal law, the real question was simply whether the antitrust violations alleged by plaintiffs had been interpreted as actionable under the FTCA. If so, then they would be actionable under MUTPA. See 350 F. Supp. 2d at 192-93. After taking stock of several federal cases interpreting the FTCA, the court concluded that Sherman Act violations, such as the section 1 violations alleged by plaintiffs there, did state claims under the FTCA, and were accordingly valid under MUTPA - even as to indirect purchasers. See id.

The court finds the reasoning of In re New Motor Vehicles instructive. For it is true that allegations of Sherman Act violations - including price-fixing such as that alleged by plaintiffs here have been interpreted by federal authorities to state a claim under the FTCA. See Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 68 S. Ct. 793, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 44 F.T.C. 1460 (1948) [127] (price-fixing can violate both FTCA and Sherman Antitrust Act). As such, the only question is whether indirect purchasers may bring such a claim under the FTCA and/or MUTPA, and In re New Motor Vehicles provides useful guidance in answering this question in the affirmative. Moreover, and significantly, defendants have not introduced any Montana authority establishing that indirect purchasers have no standing under Montana's antitrust provisions. As such, a finding that plaintiffs here have standing to bring their claim under MUTPA does not represent an undue expansion of existing law prohibiting indirect purchasers from suing in Montana. Accordingly, and for the above reasons, the court concludes that plaintiffs' claim under MUTPA is viable.

[*1113] Even if plaintiffs' claim is viable, however, defendants next argue that plaintiffs have no standing as "consumers" under MUTPA, since they are either business entities, or individuals who have failed to allege that they purchased DRAM for personal, family, or household purposes. MUTPA defines a "consumer" as a "person who purchases or leases goods, services, real property, or information primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. [128] " See Mont. Code Ann. § 30-14-102(1). "Person" is in turn defined as "natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entity." See id. at § 30-14-102(6).

The term "person" accordingly includes both individuals and businesses in its definition, and the provision of MUTPA that specifically authorizes individual suits incorporates this definition, as it allows all "consumers" to bring suit, without distinction as to natural persons or otherwise. It is true, however, that plaintiffs have failed to allege that the DRAM they purchased, even as "end users," was primarily for "personal, family, our household purposes." As such, and since MUTPA expressly contemplates this requirement for all qualifying consumers, the court GRANTS defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings as to plaintiffs' claim under MUTPA, on the ground that the claim, as stated, is deficient.

Ordinarily, the court would grant plaintiffs leave to amend in order to cure the deficiency discussed above. However, since the court has granted judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' MUTPA claim on the [129] additional grounds that the statute of limitations bars the claim and class action suits are furthermore prohibited under MUTPA, see discussion supra, any amendment here would be futile. As such, judgment on the pleadings is granted without leave to amend.

f. New York

Plaintiffs assert a claim under New York's General Business Law § 349. See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 et seq. In challenging this claim, defendants make two arguments. First, that no indirect purchaser standing exists for antitrust claims under New York's consumer protection statute because, as the legislative history and New York case law illustrate, antitrust claims are simply not meant to come within the purview of New York's consumer protection statute. Second, that section 349 is limited to deceptive practices in the conduct of trade or commerce occurring in New York itself, and only covers deceptive practices personally directed at plaintiffs by defendants - which plaintiffs have not alleged.

In response, plaintiffs first contend that the court must look to the FTCA for guidance under section 349, and since the FTCA prohibits antitrust violations such as those alleged [130] here, the statute covers plaintiffs' claim - something that several New York state courts have already recognized. Second, plaintiffs respond that, contrary to defendants' challenge under section 349 itself, plaintiffs need not allege conduct or activity within New York State, but need only allege conduct that is consumer oriented and affects the public interest in New York, which the complaint does.

Plaintiffs are correct that, HN27[] as a general matter, a claim under New York's General Business Law § 349 may be predicated on allegations of antitrust violations. See, e.g., Cox v. Microsoft Corp., 8 A.D.3d 39, 778 N.Y.S.2d 147, 148 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004)(allegations that defendant entered into secret agreements with competitors to inhibit competition and artificially inflate prices for defendant's products are sufficient to state a claim under § 349); New York Jets LLC v. Cablevision [*1114] Sys. Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23763, 2005 WL 2649330 (S.D. N.Y. 2005)(anticompetitive conduct violating section 2 qualifies as deceptive business practice under New York consumer protection statute); New York v. Feldman, 210 F. Supp. 2d 294, 300-01 (S.D. N.Y. 2002)(collusive activity alleged [131] under section 2 of the Sherman Act qualifies as deceptive activity under § 349). While defendants argue that contrary New York case law has held that price-fixing claims are outside the ambit of section 349, they appear to have misconstrued those cases. The claims alleged in the cited cases failed, not because they were based on anticompetitive conduct falling outside the scope of the statute, but because the conduct, as alleged, did not sufficiently set forth any materially deceptive activity or otherwise satisfy the requisite allegations under the statute. See, e.g., Paltre v. Gen. Motors, 26 A.D.3d 481, 810 N.Y.S.2d 496, 498 (N.Y. App. Div. 2006).

Plaintiffs have not cited, and the court has not found, a case that expressly holds that a claim under section 349 may be predicated on anticompetitive conduct alleged specifically by indirect purchasers. However, the court notes thatHN28[] New York's state antitrust statute, the Donnelly Act, expressly repeals Illinois Brick and allows for indirect purchaser standing. See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(6)(the "fact that the state, or any political subdivision or public authority of the state, or any person [132] who has sustained damages by reason of violation of this section has not dealt directly with the defendant shall not bar or otherwise limit recovery"). Accordingly, in view of the fact that New York courts and statutory authority support both the invocation of section 349 as a remedy for allegations of anticompetitive conduct, as well as a policy allowing indirect purchasers to bring suit, the court concludes that plaintiffs' claim here pursuant to section 349 is viable.

Even if the claim is viable, however, defendants contend that plaintiffs have failed to set forth the requisite allegations under the statute. HN29[] In order to state a claim under section 349, plaintiffs must allege "first, that the challenged act or practice was consumer-oriented; second, that it was misleading in a material way; and third, that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act." See *New York Jets, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23763, 2005 WL 2649330 at 11. Plaintiffs are therefore generally correct in stating that they need only allege deceptive activity that constitutes consumer-oriented conduct implicating the public interest in New York. See, e.g., Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank, N.A., 85 N.Y. 2d 20, 25, 647 N.E.2d 741, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529 (N.Y. 1995). [133] Here, however, defendants are right to point out that plaintiffs' complaint fails to do so. It nowhere mentions any conduct by defendants that is consumer-oriented and aimed at affecting the public interest in New York. Nor does it state in any concrete terms that defendants' conduct was misleading in a material way, or injured plaintiffs. Plaintiffs would have the court "reasonably infer" these facts from the allegations stating that two New York residents indirectly purchased DRAM, and were forced to pay supra-competitive prices for DRAM as a result of defendants' unlawful practices. See, e.g., Complaint at PP 13-14, 47-48. This is insufficient, however. Indeed, these allegations do not come close to setting forth the requisite allegations for a claim under section 349. On this basis, therefore, plaintiffs' claim pursuant to section 349 is deficient.

As such, the court GRANTS judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim. Plaintiffs are given leave to amend their complaint, however, in order to cure the deficiencies noted above, and to set forth [*1115] allegations properly pleading a claim under section 349.

g. Oregon

Plaintiffs assert a claim under Oregon's Unfair Trade [134] Practices Act ("OUTPA"). See Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.605. Defendants argue that Oregon's consumer protection statute - the OUTPA - defines unlawful acts under the statute as those appearing in a specifically enumerated list of practices, or as violations of other specified Oregon statutory provisions - neither of which covers antitrust price-fixing. Defendants also argue that, although one of the OUTPA's enumerated provisions is a catch-all provision that states that "other unfair or deceptive conduct in trade or commerce" may qualify as an unlawful practice under the act, an action may only be brought under that provision if the state attorney general first establishes a rule declaring the conduct alleged to be unfair or deceptive in trade or commerce - something that the attorney general has not done with respect to price-fixing. In response, plaintiffs acknowledge the attorney general rule requirement, but argue that the catch-all provision permitting suit for "other unfair or deceptive conduct in trade or commerce" is satisfied as long as plaintiffs allege a likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding, which plaintiffs have sufficiently done.

[135] Neither party relies on Oregon case law that is directly on point, or dispositive of the issue before the court - i.e., whether the OUTPA extends to indirect purchaser suits alleging price-fixing activity. Nor have the parties cited any persuasive authority that is directly on point. As such, the court turns directly to the language of OUTPA itself.

Review of the statute suggests that defendants have the better argument. To begin with, plaintiffs do not really dispute either that OUTPA specifically enumerates the type of activity that can qualify as an unlawful practice, or the fact that price-fixing such as that alleged by plaintiffs here is not one of those enumerated activities. To the extent plaintiffs do contend that their allegations nonetheless state a claim under OUTPA, since they allege conduct likely to cause "confusion or misunderstanding" or "false and misleading representations," the court finds that this is not so. None of the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint specifically allege false and misleading representations made by defendants to plaintiffs, or set forth conduct that caused plaintiffs confusion or misunderstanding, as is intended by OUTPA. While plaintiffs [136] for the first time, at the hearing on the instant motions, identified paragraphs 68, 72, 80, 88, and 119 of the complaint as setting forth such allegations, review of these paragraphs does nothing to highlight for the court the actual nature of the conduct undertaken by defendants that constitutes false and misleading activity or activity that is likely to cause confusion or misunderstanding.

Rather, the argument before the court boils down to the narrower issue of whether plaintiffs' allegations may be covered by OUTPA's catch-all provision prohibiting a person from engaging in "any other unfair or deceptive conduct in trade or commerce." See Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.608(1)(u). And as defendants correctly note, HN30[] OUTPA expressly states that no action or suit "may [] be brought under subsection (1)(u) of this section unless the Attorney General has first established a rule in accordance with the provisions of OR chapter 183 declaring the conduct to be unfair or deceptive in trade or commerce." See id. at § 646.608(4). Here, plaintiffs neither point to nor rely on any rule proscribed by the attorney general pursuant to Oregon Revised Statute chapter [137] 183 that establishes price- fixing as an unfair or deceptive practice.

[*1116] As such, and in accordance with the language of OUTPA, plaintiffs' claim pursuant to section 646.608(1)(u) fails. The court thereby GRANTS defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim.

h. Rhode Island

Plaintiffs bring a representative claim under Rhode Island's Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act ("UTPCPA"). See R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-1 et seq. [*1117] Defendants argue that, as with Montana and Oregon, Rhode Island's UTPCPA allows only natural persons to sue who "purchase or lease goods primarily for personal, family or household purposes," and furthermore to sue only when they are alleging that a defendant engaged in conduct that truly creates "a likelihood of confusion" or that is otherwise unfair or deceptive, as expressed under the terms of the UTPCPA. Defendants assert that no such allegations are present here.

Defendants are correct. First, HN31[] the Rhode Island Supreme Court has construed the UTPCPA to require that only natural persons are permitted to bring private rights of action under the statute, which natural persons must have [138] "purchase[d] or lease[d] goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes." See ERI Max Entertainment, Inc. v. Streisand, 690 A.2d 1351, 1354 (R.I. 1997)("plaintiff, a Rhode Island corporation doing business as a video store, plainly does not have standing to bring a private action under this statute."). Since at least four of the named plaintiffs here are business entities, they therefore do not come within the statute's definition of "person," and have no standing to sue. As for the remaining plaintiffs, there is no allegation that they purchased goods "primarily for personal, family, or household purposes." Although plaintiffs assert that the court should reasonably infer this allegation from the complaint's allegation that the plaintiffs purchased DRAM "for end use and not for resale," it is not necessarily true that just because a plaintiff has purchased DRAM for "end use," he or she has purchased DRAM for any of the above named purposes. As such, the court finds plaintiffs' claim barred as to the business entity plaintiffs, and deficient with respect to the remaining individual plaintiffs.

Second, even if plaintiffs' individual claims [139] were not deficient for the above reason, the claim is also deficient because, as defendants argue, the complaint does not allege conduct on defendants' part that creates "a likelihood of confusion" or that is otherwise unfair or deceptive, as expressed under the terms of the UTPCPA. Preliminarily, the court does not find that plaintiffs' allegations of price-fixing and conspiracy fall within the enumerated list of conduct and activity that the UTPCPA defines as "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices." See R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-1(6). With respect to whether plaintiffs' allegations otherwise illustrate conduct causing a "likelihood of confusion" or that is deceptive or fraudulent under the terms of the UTPCPA, the court finds that plaintiffs' allegations do not, for the same reasons as discussed above in connection with plaintiffs' claim under Oregon's consumer protection statute.

Accordingly, for all the above reasons, the court hereby GRANTS judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim. Leave to amend is granted to the individual plaintiffs, however, so that they may attempt to cure the deficiencies noted [140] above.

i. Utah

Plaintiffs' claim under Utah law is brought pursuant to that state's Consumer Sales Practices Act ("CSPA"). See Utah Code Ann. § 13-11-1 et seq. Defendants argue that the Utah CSPA prohibits only "deceptive" and "unconscionable" acts, which are expressly enumerated in the statute, and none of which include antitrust violations. Defendants also point to the regulations issued by the Utah Division of Consumer Protection, which additionally specify the deceptive and unconscionable acts prohibited by the CSPA - again, none of which include antitrust violations. In response, plaintiffs counter that the CSPA was meant to be interpreted in accordance with the FTCA, and therefore covers price-fixing claims such as those alleged here.

Plaintiffs are correct that one of the goals of the drafters of the, CSPA was to model the FTCA. See Utah Code Ann. § 13-11-2(4)(purpose of the CSPA is, in part, "to make state regulation of consumer sales practices not inconsistent with the policies of the Federal Trade Commission Act relating to consumer protection"). Defendants, however, are also correct that, unlike the FTCA [141] upon which the CSPA is modeled, the CSPA does not include any provision directly analogous to section 5 of the FTCA, which specifically prohibits "unfair competition." See 15 U.S.C. § 45 ("[u]nfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are hereby declared unlawful"). For that reason, and since federal case law that has interpreted the FTCA to cover antitrust price-fixing allegations, has done so pursuant to section 5 of the FTCA specifically, see, e.g., FTC v. Cement Inst., 333 U.S. at 690, the FTCA's prohibition on antitrust price-fixing should not be read into the CSPA here, despite the fact that the CSPA is admittedly to be construed broadly. Accordingly, and since plaintiffs have not cited to authority - controlling or otherwise - that is expressly on point on the question whether allegations of price-fixing constitute actionable conduct pursuant to the CSPA, the court refrains from unnecessarily enlarging the scope of the CSPA, and declines to hold that plaintiffs' antitrust claim, as alleged in the complaint, may be asserted under the statute.

[142] Moreover, to the extent that plaintiffs assert that the allegations of the complaint independently set forth "deceptive" and "unconscionable" conduct, the court has been unable to determine where this is so. Plaintiffs rely upon paragraph 68 of the complaint, which sets forth allegations of active concealment on defendants' part. Plaintiffs therein allege that defendants "publicly provided pre-textual and false justifications regarding their price increases." This single statement is the strongest allegation of deception that plaintiffs' rely on, both in their papers and at the hearing on the instant matter. However, the court is of the opinion that this bare allegation is insufficient to set forth an adequate basis from which plaintiffs can assert qualifying "deceptive" and "unconscionable" conduct pursuant to the CSPA. Plaintiffs must provide more facts that demonstrate that defendants have undertaken specific and identifiable conduct, or acts of a deceptive, fraudulent and/or unconscionable nature, that have harmed plaintiffs in a fashion contemplated by the CSPA.

Accordingly, the court hereby GRANTS defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim. [143] As noted in connection with other claims before the court, the court would ordinarily grant plaintiffs leave to amend in order to cure the deficiencies discussed above. However, since the court granted judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' claim under the CSPA on the additional ground that the statute of limitations bars the claim, see discussion supra, any amendment here would be futile. As such, judgment on the pleadings is granted without leave to amend.

[*1118] j. West Virginia

Defendants also target plaintiffs' claim pursuant to West Virginia's Consumer Credit and Protection Statute ("WVCCP"). See W. Va. Code § 46A-6-101 et seq. Defendants argue that the WVCCP cannot be employed, as plaintiffs purport to do here, as an end-run around West Virginia's prohibition on indirect purchaser standing. This is so, say defendants, for two reasons. First, the WVCCP specifically enumerates the practices and conduct that constitute unfair competition or deceptive and unfair practices, and antitrust violations are not included in that enumerated list. Second, defendants contend that plaintiffs have failed to allege that they are natural persons [144] who purchased goods for household, personal, or family purposes, as required by the WVCCP.

HN32[] The WVCCP prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." See id. at § 46A-6-104. As defendants point out, the statute also purports to define what is meant by "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices," and does so by enumerating a list of various acts and practices that the statute defines as "unfair" or "deceptive." See id. at § 46A-6-102(7). Neither party points to any case law that addresses this list, or otherwise establishes the meaning of unfair or deceptive practices under the statute. Nonetheless, reading the list literally, nothing on the list targets what might be called traditional antitrust conduct - e.g., price-fixing and market allocation such as that alleged by plaintiffs here, or conduct otherwise constituting a horizontal or vertical restraint on trade or commerce. Rather, the list is aimed at conduct that, in one way or another, "creates a likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding" with respect to goods, services or businesses, or involves deceptive, [145] false, or misleading statements and representations in connection with goods, services and businesses. See id. at § 46A-6-102(7)(A-P). While the WVCCP expressly states that the list of enumerated acts and practices is not meant to be exclusive, it is nonetheless clear that the statute is aimed at conduct different from the allegations of price-fixing asserted by plaintiffs here. And since the provision of the WVCCP that authorizes plaintiffs' private action expressly states that any such action may only be brought by a person or persons injured as a result "of the use or employment by another person of a method, act or practice prohibited or declared to be unlawful by the provisions of this article," it is also clear that no such qualifying action has been asserted by plaintiffs here, there being no allegations of a method, act or practice that the court believes may be deemed "unlawful" under the statute.

It is true, as plaintiffs point out, that the WVCCP also contains a provision providing for the court's liberal construction of the statute, and setting forth a legislative declaration that the statute should be construed in accordance with similar federal statutes [146] dealing with unfair competition and deceptive practices, and with "the interpretation given by the federal courts to the various federal statutes dealing with the same or similar matters" as the WVCCP. See W. Va. Code § 46A-6-101. However, plaintiffs have failed to set forth any legal authority that actually stands for the proposition that this provision of the WVCCP justifies allowing allegations of antitrust price-fixing brought by indirect purchasers to go forward. Similarly, while plaintiffs rely on several district court decisions - FTC v. Mylan Labs, Inc., and In re Pharm. Indus. Average Wholesale Price Litig. - as support for their point, those decisions are not helpful here. See 99 F. Supp. 2d 1, 10 (D. D.C. 1999); *233 F.R.D. [1119] 229 (D. Mass. 2006). While it is true that those courts may have ultimately allowed indirect purchaser claims to go forward under the WVCCPA, the decisions do not contain any detailed rationale for finding indirect purchaser standing under the statute, or how price-fixing allegations fall within the purview of the statute. Mylan, which provided the more in-depth discussion of the [147] two, simply cites four different provisions of the statute, before concluding without discussion that they compelled the result therein. See 99 F. Supp. 2d at 10.

For these reasons, the court finds that the motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' claim for antitrust violations under WVCCP must be, and hereby is, GRANTED. The court does not read the WVCCP to cover the allegations of anti-trust price-fixing in question.

The court is also of the view that plaintiffs have failed to allege that they are natural persons who purchased goods for household, personal, or family purposes, as required pursuant to the WVCCP. Any amendment to cure this deficiency would prove futile, however, since judgment on the pleadings is nonetheless granted here on grounds that the WVCCP fails to cover plaintiffs' allegations in any event. [12] Accordingly, no leave to amend is granted.

[148] k. Wyoming

Plaintiffs assert a claim under Wyoming's Consumer Protection Act ("CPA"). See Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 40-12-101 et seq. Defendants argue that the CPA does not extend to price-fixing. As with many of the other statutes under discussion herein, defendants point out that the CPA proscribes only specified conduct, none of which constitutes price-fixing. Moreover, defendants assert that no court has ever extended the CPA to antitrust claims, and that the Wyoming Supreme Court has expressly stated that the CPA's purpose is to protect against "fraudulent marketing practices" that are simply not at issue here. In response, plaintiffs invoke the statute's broad language, and point out that no case has limited the CPA's reach.

The court is of the view that the CPA was not intended to create a private cause of action for plaintiffs to sue for antitrust violations such as those at issue here. While plaintiffs are correct that no controlling state authority - or even persuasive authority - has expressly excluded antitrust violations from the ambit of the CPA, the controlling authority that does exist suggests otherwise. For as defendants point out, the [149] Wyoming Supreme Court had occasion to pass on the CPA in Herrig v. Herrig. See 844 P.2d 487, 495 (Wyo. 1992). Although the court considered the CPA in the insurance context rather than the antitrust context, the court nonetheless made clear its view that the CPA "was drafted primarily to protect consumers from unscrupulous and fraudulent marketing practices." See id. The court then declined to allow a third-party claimant action to go forward against a third-party liability insurer, noting that the state legislature had addressed the insurance issues between the parties when it enacted Wyoming's Insurance Code. Id.

[*1120] In the court's view, the Wyoming Supreme Court would be of a similar mind set here, and if given the opportunity, would hold that plaintiffs' claim pursuant to the CPA, which is based on allegations of antitrust violations, is not cognizable under the statute. The CPA is targeted at "unscrupulous and fraudulent marketing practices" that are distinguishable from allegations of antitrust violations, and moreover, the Wyoming legislature has seen fit to provide a scheme to redress antitrust violations through enactment of a separate antitrust statute. [150] See Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 40-4-114 et seq.

Further, plaintiffs' complaint nowhere alleges "unscrupulous and fraudulent marketing practices." Although plaintiffs have professed reliance on various paragraphs of the complaint already discussed herein, none of those paragraphs even mention defendants' marketing practices, let alone do they detail the way in which such marketing practices are fraudulent or unscrupulous. See, e.g., Complaint at PP 68, 72, 80, 88, 119.

In sum, and for all the above reasons, the court declines to permit plaintiffs' claim to go forward as pled under the CPA. The CPA does not extend to antitrust violations as alleged by plaintiffs in the first instance, and in the second, plaintiffs have failed to otherwise allege the type of "fraudulent" or "unscrupulous" marketing practices contemplated by the CPA. According, the court hereby GRANTS judgment on the pleadings with respect to this claim.

IV. Conclusion

In sum, and for all the above reasons, the court holds as follows:

---

[12] Moreover, defendants are also correct, and plaintiffs do not dispute, that the WVCCP defines "consumer" to mean "a natural person to whom a sale or lease is made … for a personal, family, household or agricultural purpose." W. Va. Code § 46A-6-102(2). And since the only provision pursuant to which plaintiffs may bring their claim is entitled, "Actions by consumers," it is correct that the instant claim can only be brought by natural persons who purchased the goods in question for a personal, family, household or agricultural purpose.

1. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' second claim for relief under the Cartwright Act is GRANTED for [151] lack of antitrust standing, with respect to those claims based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component.

2. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' fourth claim for relief is GRANTED for lack of antitrust standing as to plaintiffs' claims pursuant to the laws of Arizona, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, North. Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin. Judgment on the pleadings on this ground is limited, as above, to those claims based on purchases of products in which DRAM is a component.

The court additionally GRANTS, for other reasons as noted, defendants' motion with respect to all plaintiffs' claims pursuant to the laws of Ohio, Alabama, South Dakota, and Pennsylvania - regardless whether those claims are based on purchases of non- component DRAM, or products in which DRAM is a component. Leave to amend is granted with respect to plaintiffs' claim under South Dakota law, but only with respect to plaintiffs whose claims are based on non-component DRAM purchases (i.e., purchases of free-standing DRAM).

The court DENIES defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with [152] respect to plaintiffs' claim pursuant to West Virginia's antitrust statute.

3. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiffs' fifth claim for relief is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. The motion is GRANTED on statute of limitations grounds with respect to plaintiffs' claims under the laws of Alaska, Idaho, Louisiana, Montana, Oregon, Utah, and Wyoming. The motion is furthermore GRANTED as to plaintiffs' claims under the statutes of Louisiana, Montana, and South Carolina, as the statutes prohibit private class action suits for money damages, [*1121] but DENIED as to plaintiffs' claim under New York's consumer protection statute. Finally, the motion is GRANTED, for failure to set forth a viable claim, as to plaintiffs' claims under the statutes of Alaska, Idaho, Montana, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Utah, West Virginia, and Wyoming, and DENIED as to plaintiffs' claims under the statutes of Arkansas, and Hawaii. Plaintiffs are given leave to amend their claims under New York and Rhode Island law, however, in order to cure the deficiencies noted herein.

Leave to amend is permitted only as specified above. Amendment as to additional matters is not permitted [153] without prior leave of court. As such, and in the event plaintiffs wish to amend their prayer for relief, based on the court's discussion herein, plaintiffs must first seek leave of court in order to do so.

Any amended complaint shall be filed no later than June 29, 2007.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: June 1, 2007

PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON

United States District Judge

LiveUniverse, Inc. v. MySpace, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

June 4, 2007, Decided

Case No. CV 06-6994 AHM (RZx)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43739 *; 2007-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,782; 2007 WL 6865852

LIVEUNIVERSE, INC. v. MYSPACE, INC.

Subsequent History: Affirmed by Liveuniverse, Inc. v. Myspace, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 27141 (9th Cir., Dec. 22, 2008)

Core Terms

MySpace, networking, alleges, websites, sites, users, monopolization, advertising, antitrust, relevant market, consumers, vidiLife, Internet, competitors, profiles, motion to dismiss, Sherman Act, barriers, effects, causal, monopoly power, anticompetitive, rival, products, links, anticompetitive conduct, operating system, anti trust law, reasons, Online

Counsel: [*1] For LiveUniverse Inc, a California corporation, Plaintiff: Daryl M Crone, Jaime W Marquart, Ryan G Baker, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Baker Marquart Crone and Hawxhurst, Los Angeles, CA.

For MySpace Inc, a Delaware corporation, Defendant: David R Singer, Richard L Stone, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hogan & Hartson, Los Angeles, CA.

Judges: The Honorable A. HOWARD MATZ, U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: A. HOWARD MATZ

Opinion

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff LiveUniverse, Inc. ("LiveUniverse") and Defendant MySpace, Inc. ("MySpace") operate online "social networking" websites at www.vidilife.com and www.myspace.com, respectively. Social networking websites allow visitors to create personal profiles containing text, graphics, and videos, as well as to view profiles of their friends and other users with similar interests. LiveUniverse alleges that MySpace prevents users from watching vidiLife videos that they or other users previously loaded onto their MySpace webpage, deletes references to "vidilife.com" on MySpace, and prevents MySpace users from mentioning "vidilife.com." LiveUniverse alleges that this conduct violates Section 2 of the Sherman Act ("Section 2") and California Business & Professions Code § 17200 [*2] . On November 22, 2006, MySpace filed a motion to dismiss LiveUniverse's Complaint. This Court conducted a hearing on December 18, 2006, in which it granted that motion, with leave given to plaintiff to amend to clarify the "network effects" premise on which LiveUniverse relies. (See below).

On January 16, 2007, LiveUniverse filed a First Amended Complaint ("FAC") that again alleges that MySpace's conduct violates Section 2 of the Sherman Act and Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Specifically, the FAC alleges claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization in both the market for Internet-based social networking sites and in the market for advertising on Internet-based social networking websites.

On February 5, 2007, MySpace filed the present motion to dismiss the FAC. A hearing on that motion was held on March 5, 2007. MySpace argues that LiveUniverse's claim for violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act should be dismissed, because LiveUniverse has failed to allege: (1) a relevant antitrust market; (2) monopoly power or the probability of monopoly power in a relevant market; (3) any cognizable predatory or anticompetitive conduct to maintain or [*3] acquire a monopoly; and (4) any cognizable causal antitrust injury. MySpace further argues that LiveUniverse's claim for violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 should be dismissed, because it is derivative of LiveUniverse's defective antitrust claims.

As to the antitrust claims, I GRANT MySpace's motion, and this time with prejudice, because the conduct that LiveUniverse alleges to be exclusionary and hence anticompetitive is not actionable and because it has not alleged causal antitrust injury. As a consequence, its monopolization claims as to both markets are deficient. For much the same reasons, I find that LiveUniverse fails to sufficiently allege an attempted monopolization claim in either market. Finally, I also dismiss LiveUniverse's remaining Section 17200 cause of action, because it fails to state a claim for violation of that provision in the Business and Professions Code. (As to the Section 17200 claim, the dismissal is with leave to amend.)

II. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

A. Motion to Dismiss

On a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for [*4] failure to state a claim, the allegations of the complaint must be accepted as true and are to be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Wyler Summit P'ship v. Turner Broad. Sys., Inc., 135 F.3d 658, 661 (9th Cir. 1998). A Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in the complaint. Thus, if the complaint states a claim under any legal theory, even if the plaintiff erroneously relies on a different legal theory, the complaint should not be dismissed. Haddock v. Bd. of Dental Examiners, 777 F.2d 462, 464 (9th Cir. 1985).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires

> "only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests[.]" . . . While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations . . ., a plaintiff's obligation to provide the "grounds" of his "entitle[ment] to relief" requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements [*5] of a cause of action will not do . . . . Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level."

*Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929, 2007 WL 1461066, 8 (2007) (internal citations omitted).

"Generally, a district court may not consider any material beyond the pleadings in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. . . . However, material which is properly submitted as part of the complaint may be considered" on a motion to dismiss. Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n.19 (9th Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). Similarly, "documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading, may be considered in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss" without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994). If the documents are not physically attached to the complaint, they may be considered if their "authenticity … is not contested" and "the plaintiff's complaint necessarily relies" [*6] on them. Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 705-06 (9th Cir. 1998). "The district court will not accept as hue pleading allegations that are contradicted by facts that can be judicially noticed or by other allegations or exhibits attached to or incorporated in the pleading." 5C Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. and Pro. § 1363 (3d ed. 2004).

Where a motion to dismiss is granted, a district court should provide leave to amend unless it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by any amendment. Chang v. Chen, 80 F.3d 1293, 1296 (9th Cir. 1996).

B. Applicable Antitrust Pleading Standards

An antitrust claim may be dismissed "only if proof of no set of facts outlined by the complaint would justify relief." Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1989). The Ninth Circuit has stated that "summary dismissals of antitrust actions are disfavored." Western Concrete Structures Co., Inc. v. Mitsui & Co., Inc., 760 F.2d 1013, 1016 (9th Cir. 1985) (internal citations omitted) (reversing dismissal of antitrust claims). However, "if the facts do not at least outline or adumbrate [*7] a violation of the Sherman Act, the [plaintiff] will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987) (internal citations omitted) (granting a motion to dismiss antitrust claims).

The Court is aware that many of the cases cited below are final judgments or rulings on summary judgment motions. Although the legal standards for such judgments and motions differ from those of a motion to dismiss, these cases define what is required to satisfy the elements of a Sherman Act claim as a matter of law.

C. Elements of a Claim Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act states: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. LiveUniverse alleges a violation of Section 2 based on two theories: (1) monopolization and (2) attempted monopolization.

1. Monopolization

The elements of a monopolization [*8] claim are: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident;" and (3) causal antitrust injury. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (internal citations omitted); Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995) (causal antitrust injury is an element of all antitrust suits brought by private parties seeking damages).

2. Attempted Monopolization

In determining whether a plaintiff has pled an attempted monopolization claim, the Court must first define the relevant market. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 455-56, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). The plaintiff must then allege four elements in that market: "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433 [*9] (internal citations omitted).

III. "MONOPOLIZATION" ALLEGATIONS IN MARKET CONSISTING OF "INTERNET-BASED SOCIAL NETWORKING SITES"

A. Relevant Market

"A relevant market has two dimensions: (1) the relevant product market, which identifies the products or services that compete with each other, and (2) the relevant geographic market, which identifies the geographic area within which competition takes place." America Online, Inc. v. GreatDeals.Net, 49 F.Supp.2d 851, 857-58 (E.D.Va. 1999) [hereinafter "America Online"], citing Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). "The outer boundaries of a relevant market are determined by reasonable interchangeability of use." America Online, 49 F.Supp.2d at 858, citing Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 482. "Reasonable interchangeability of use" refers to consumers' practicable ability to switch from one product or service to another. America Online, 49 F.Supp.2d at 858, citing ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 500 (4th ed. 1997). "The test of reasonable interchangeability… [requires] the District Court [*10] to consider only substitutes that constrain pricing in the reasonably foreseeable future, and only products that can enter the market in a relatively short time can perform this function." United States v. Microsoft Corp., 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330, 253 F.3d 34, 53-54 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (internal citations omitted), cert. denied 534 U.S. 952, 122 S. Ct. 350, 151 L. Ed. 2d 264 (2001) (hereinafter, "Microsoft").

The geographic market extends to the 'area of effective competition' . . . where buyers can turn for alternative sources of supply. The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand. Failure to identify a relevant market is a proper ground for dismissing a Sherman Act claim." Tanaka v. Univ. of Southern Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001) (internal citations omitted) (granting a motion to dismiss an antitrust claim for failure to allege a relevant market).

The FAC defines the first relevant market as "Internet-based social networking in the geographic region of the United States." (FAC P 19). This market consists of websites that create a "virtual community to bring people together in a central [*11] location to chat, gossip, share ideas, share interests, make new friends, and engage in other social activities." (FAC P 11). Although anyone with Internet access may visit these websites, users not only can visit, but can also create a unique personal profile on one or more site, as well as provide links to other users' personal profiles. (FAC P 12). These personal profiles are publicly accessible on the social networking website and are intended to be shared with other users. (FAC P 14). Users may incorporate text, audio, and video elements into their profiles, including streaming videos and links that can take visitors to other Internet websites not affiliated with MySpace. (FAC PP 14, 16). The FAC alleges that "the overwhelming majority of the content accessible through social networking websites is generated by users. The sites themselves merely provide the means for generating and/or displaying the content . . . ." (FAC P 13).

According to a November 2006 "U.S. Consumer Generated Media Report" published by Hitwise USA (hereinafter, the "Hitwise Report"), "[s]ocial networking websites have emerged to become an integral part of web activity for many Internet users - in September [*12] 2006, one in every 20 Internet visits went to one of the top 20 social networks." (FAC P 17; Hitwise Report, p. 29). [1]

The FAC also alleges that:

> Social networking websites offer a set of unique products and services that competing media cannot offer. The interactive, user-generated aspects of Internet-based social networking offer consumers an unprecedented degree of control over their experience, allowing them to collectively determine both the content and structure of networks of friends that [*13] they and others create. Passive internet media sites and other communication products such as e-mail do not possess these organic, interactive qualities.

(FAC P 19).

---

[1] Hitwise describes itself as "the leading online competitive intelligence service." (Opp'n, Ex. A ("Hitwise Report"), p. 28). According to Hitwise, "[t]hrough relationships with [Internet Service Providers] around the world, Hitwise's patented methodology captures the anonymous online usage, search, and conversion behavior of 25 million Internet users." (Id.). In this order I cite this report frequently because it is specifically referred to in the FAC and MySpace attached it in support of its motion.

MySpace argues that the market consisting of "Internet-based social networking sites" is not a "plausible" market for purposes of the Sherman Act. It claims that LiveUniverse has failed to account for other kinds of social networking that are interchangeable and has also failed to address differences in network sites' products, qualities, prices, etc. MySpace's main argument, however, is that its allegedly anticompetitive conduct consists only of the exclusion of LiveUniverse - - more accurately, the exclusion of the words "vidilife.com" and links to it - - from its own website. MySpace argues that a defendant's product alone cannot constitute the entire relevant market, citing TV Communications Network, Inc. v. Turner Network Television, Inc., 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir. 1992). In that case, the plaintiff alleged that defendant Turner Network Television ("TNT") had monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, "the market for the TNT channel in Metropolitan Denver." Id. at 1025-26. [*14] The Tenth Circuit dismissed that claim for failure to allege a relevant market, because "a company does not violate the Sherman Act by virtue of the natural monopoly it holds over its own product." Id. at 1025, citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 393, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956) [hereinafter "du Pont"]. [2] TV Communications and other cases like it are inapposite, because LiveUniverse simply does not allege that the MySpace site alone is the relevant market. Instead, LiveUniverse alleges that the MySpace site is one of many Internet-based social networking websites that compete with each other.

[*15] MySpace further argues that the proposed market is implausible, because there are "minimal limits to the number and scope of social networking sites." This argument is based on America Online, where the court dismissed defendants' antitrust counterclaim for failure to allege a relevant market. 49 F.Supp.2d at 859. The defendants in that case counter-claimed that America Online ("AOL") violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by attempting to block the transmission to AOL subscribers of unsolicited bulk e-mail advertising. Id. at 854. [3] The court rejected the defendants' proposed relevant market of "e-mail advertising" and their proposed sub-market of Internet subscribers who are "accessed" through AOL, because it found that defendants could have advertised via numerous other means, including other advertising on the Internet, direct mail, and billboards. Id. at 857-58. The America Online court further found that the Internet could not be the relevant geographic market, because the Internet "cannot be defined with outer boundaries. It is not a place or location; it is infinite." Id. at 858. The court concluded that [*16] because the relevant market that counterclaimants alleged did not include interchangeable substitutes, their counterclaim should be dismissed.

America Online does not affect the "plausibility" of the relevant market that LiveUniverse has alleged here. Social networking websites have become, by now, an economic and social phenomenon. There is no mystery as to what they are, how they work, how they position themselves vis-a-vis other networks, or how they make money. Furthermore, LiveUniverse has alleged that the United States, rather than the worldwide Internet, is the relevant geographic market, and MySpace does not challenge the geographic scope of the proposed market.

MySpace cites Tanaka v. University of Southern California, 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001), for the additional proposition that an allegation of a relevant market requires more than a conclusory assertion [*17] that the proposed market is "unique." In Tanaka, the plaintiff was a college soccer player who claimed that a rule that prevented her from playing for one year following her transfer to another university violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 1061. The complaint alleged that the relevant product market was the University of California, Los Angeles ("UCLA") women's soccer program. Id. at 1063. In trying to justify why the market was limited to only that soccer program, rather than encompassing other college soccer programs or athletic conferences, the plaintiff simply stated that the UCLA program was "unique" and "not interchangeable with any other program in Los Angeles." Id. The Ninth Circuit upheld the district court's dismissal of her claim, finding that "the very existence of any given intercollegiate athletic program is predicated upon the existence of a field of competition composed of

---

[2] See also, Futurevision Cable Systems of Wiggins, Inc. v. Multivision Cable TV Corp., in which the court dismissed an antitrust claim for failure to state a relevant market. 789 F.Supp. 760 (S.D. Miss. 1992). The court found that the only markets in which the defendant television stations, The Learning Channel and ESPN, possibly had market power were the markets for their own programs. Id. at 776. Thus, the plaintiff had not alleged a relevant market, because a manufacturer's natural monopoly over its own product is not a basis for antitrust liability under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id.

[3] AOL's suit sought damages and an injunction to prohibit the sending of such e-mail. Id. at 854.

other, similar programs," and that these other programs were interchangeable with the UCLA program for antitrust purposes. Id. at 1063-64.

Unlike the plaintiff in Tanaka, LiveUniverse's allegation that the proposed market is [*18] unique is not conclusory; it alleges that the market has "unique products and services" and that the "interactive, user-generated aspects" give users "an unprecedented degree of control over their experience, allowing them to collectively determine both the content and structure of networks of friends that they and others create." (FAC P 19). The FAC also alleges that because other websites and means of communication, such as e-mail, do not contain these "organic, interactive qualities," they are not reasonably interchangeable substitutes for Internet-based social networking websites. (FAC P 19). MySpace nevertheless argues that even these allegations are insufficient, because they do not "distinguish online dating sites and Internet connectivity services like America Online." The Court disagrees. Internet connectivity services are not reasonable substitutes, because their primary function is simply to give users the ability to access the Internet. As to online dating sites, although they do have similar "organic, interactive qualities" to social networking websites, their dominant function and purpose is to enable users to meet potential dates. Online dating sites are not reasonable [*19] substitutes for social networking websites, because the latter websites have significantly more functions and appeal than do online dating sites. For example, social networking websites are used to get in touch with old friends and to keep current friends informed about what's new and exciting. Although social networking websites may also be used for dating, if MySpace suddenly were to shut down, its members would not fill the social void by turning to online dating sites. Instead, they would likely set up profiles on a different social networking website.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that LiveUniverse sufficiently alleges a relevant antitrust market of Internet-based social networking websites.

B. Monopoly Power

"Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition." du Pont, 351 U.S. at 391. It may be demonstrated through either direct evidence or circumstantial evidence. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434. LiveUniverse alleges that MySpace's market power may be inferred from its having a dominant share of the market (social networking websites) and from its being protected from competition by entry barriers. This requires [*20] that plaintiff: "(1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Id. (internal citations omitted).

1. LiveUniverse Adequately Alleges That Myspace Owns The Dominant Share of the Market

The FAC alleges that "[a]ccording to comScore Media Metrix, a leading Internet traffic measurement service, approximately 55.8 million of the more than 62.7 million individuals who frequented social networking sites in the United States in September 2006 visited MySpace, equal to 89% of the market." (FAC P 24). "According to Hitwise, another leading Internet traffic measurement service, in September 2006, MySpace accounted for nearly '82% of visits to the leading social networking websites. . . .'" (FAC P 25).

Courts have consistently found that an 80 percent share of the market constitutes a dominant share, with the Supreme Court having found that even a two-thirds share of the market can be considered dominant. American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946). [*21] In United States v. Grinnell Corp., the Supreme Court found that an 87-percent share of the central stations that monitored fire and security alarms was sufficient to establish monopoly power. 384 U.S. 563, 571, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). More recently, the Supreme Court found that Kodak's control of 80 percent to 95 percent of the photocopier and micrographic equipment service market "easily resolved" the requirement of monopoly power. Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481.

Even MySpace does not argue that, assuming that visits and visitors are a permissible indicator, the alleged percentages are not large enough to constitute a dominant share of the market.

MySpace does argue that the percentage of visits or visitors cannot be used to measure market share, because the "appropriate measure of a firm's share is the quantity of goods or services actually sold to consumers." US. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 999 (11th Cir. 1993). Carried to its logical conclusion, MySpace's argument would mean that a company offering a free product, such as a social networking website, could never acquire market power, but MySpace offers no basis in antitrust [*22] law, much less logic, for this conclusion. Indeed, market share can be measured by figures other than just sales or revenue. For example, in *Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 590, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467*n.8 (1985), the Supreme Court used the number of skier visits to particular ski mountains to measure market share, because that number was correlated to revenue. Consistent with that approach, the FAC alleges that "[t]he primary source of revenue for MySpace -- and, on information and belief, for the overwhelming majority of all United States social networking web sites -- is advertising revenue generated from the number of visitors to the personal profiles and networks of friends generated with and contained within the social networking web platform." (FAC P 18). "According to press reports, shortly after it purchased MySpace, News Corporation sold certain rights regarding ad-based searching of MySpace user profiles to Google in a deal whereby Google agreed to pay at least $ 900 million to MySpace over the first three years of the deal . . . ." Id.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that Live Universe sufficiently alleges that MySpace has a dominant [*23] share of the market.

2. Live Universe Adequately Alleges Barriers to Entry

"A mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient [for an antitrust violation]. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the [market leader's anticompetitive conduct]." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1439. LiveUniverse's allegations of barriers to entry are based on the concept of "network effects" in the market for Internet-based social networking websites.

In Microsoft, supra, the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals characterized "network effects" as follows: "In markets characterized by network effects, one product or standard tends towards dominance, because the utility that a user derives from consumption of the good increases with the number of other agents consuming the good." 253 F.3d at 49 (internal citations omitted). For example, an individual consumer's demand for and benefit from a telephone network increases if there are more people using that network whom the consumer can [*24] call or from whom she can receive calls. Id. "Once a product or standard achieves wide acceptance, it becomes more or less entrenched. Competition in such industries is 'for the field' rather than 'within the field.'" Id.

The FAC alleges that in the market for Internet-based social networking websites, network effects occur largely due to the "user-generated nature" of the content on those websites. (FAC P 21). Quoting the Hitwise Report, the FAC alleges that "[t]he network effect in relation to social networking websites means that the more people use a website by adding profiles and content, the more valuable it becomes to each of its users. These users will be more likely to find content that interests them and connect with people they know. Thus more new people want to join it because they know they can be further assured of finding friends and interesting content." (FAC P 22). Based on these network effects, LiveUniverse alleges that it is "difficult for new entrants to acquire any more than a very small market share without an enormous capital investment." (FAC P 23).

In Microsoft, the plaintiffs argued that network effects were the basis for the alleged barriers [*25] to entry in the market for Intel-compatible PC operating systems. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 49-50, 55. The Court of Appeals agreed that there was an "applications barrier to entry" and consequently upheld the district court's finding that Microsoft possessed monopoly power in that market. Id. at 55. This conclusion stemmed from "two characteristics of the software market: (1) most consumers prefer operating systems for which a large number of applications have already been written; and (2) most developers prefer to write for operating systems that already have a substantial consumer base." Id. The court explained that "[t]his 'chicken-and-egg' situation ensures that applications will continue to be written for the already dominant Windows, which in turn ensures that consumers will continue to prefer it over other operating systems." Id. The court also noted that this applications barrier to entry leads consumers to prefer the dominant operating system, even if they do not need all the available applications, because the consumers want an operating system that can run the types of applications in which they might later develop an interest. [*26] Id.

In Microsoft, the Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's judgment that Microsoft violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by using anticompetitive means to maintain the monopoly of its Windows operating system. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 46. However, the court reversed the district court's additional judgment that Microsoft violated Section 2 by attempting to monopolize the internet browser market. Id. The Court found that plaintiffs failed to prove that network effects could create barriers to entry in that market, rejecting the opposite conclusion of the district court because the district court "did not make two key findings: (1) that network effects were a necessary or even probable, rather than merely possible, consequence of high market share in the browser market and (2) that a barrier to entry resulting from network effects would be 'significant' enough to confer monopoly power." Id. at 83.

MySpace does not dispute that the phenomenon of network effects applies to the proposed market of Internet-based social networking websites. Instead, it argues that LiveUniverse fails to allege how these network effects result in barriers [*27] to entry in the relevant market. It stresses that the Microsoft court cautioned that "[s]imply invoking the phrase 'network effects' without pointing to more evidence does not suffice to carry plaintiffs' burden in this respect." Id. at 84.

The Court rejects MySpace's contention on this point; the allegations of barriers to entry in the FAC are adequate, not only because Microsoft was decided after a trial, and hence the court held the plaintiffs to a higher standard than applicable for a motion to dismiss, but also because in addition to alleging "network effects," LiveUniverse alleges other characteristics of the market that combine with network effects to create barriers to entry. Quoting the Hitwise Report, for example, the FAC alleges that social networking websites rely on users to create profiles and content that, in turn, attract new users and visitors. (FAC P 22). Just as the Microsoft court noted that an operating system requires developers to write applications for it, Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 55, social networking websites require a large number of profiles, content, and potential friends. (FAC PP 13, 19, 22.) Just [*28] as "most developers prefer to write for operating systems that already have a substantial consumer base," Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 55, users of social networking websites prefer to create their profiles and add content to a website where they are likely to be viewed by a greater number of users. (FAC PP 13, 19, 22.)

MySpace goes on to argue that notwithstanding "network effects," the dynamic nature of the market and the constant entry and exit of competitors undermine plaintiff's allegations about barriers to entry. It contends that "anyone with a computer and Internet access can start his or her own network and . . . there is no limit (other than time) to the number of websites a user can access." There is some merit to this argument. MySpace itself quickly overtook the former market leader, Friendster, despite the same alleged barriers to entry in the market. (Hitwise Report, p. 31). In addition, as the Hitwise Report points out, four social networking websites experienced market growth that outpaced the category between March and September 2006. (Id. at p.32) Moreover, social networking websites with special niches have shown the capacity to compete with MySpace. [*29] For example, Facebook became the preferred network among college students, because it was closed to non-students and thus appeared safer than MySpace. (Id. at p.31). (According to the Hitwise Report, Facebook has the second highest market share among social networking websites. (Id.)). Furthermore, at the March 5, 2007 hearing, this Court mentioned a then-recent New York Times article stating that "[s]ocial networks are sprouting on the Internet these days like wild mushrooms." Brad Stone, Social Networking's Next Phase, N.Y. Times, March 3, 2007, at B 1, B9 [hereinafter "Social Networking's Next Phase"]. [4]

---

[4] In the short interval since the hearing on this motion, other articles have appeared in the print media about the mounting increase in the popularity of social networking sites. E.g., Patrick Day, MySpace competition? The world is big enough, Los Angeles Times, April 1, 2007, at E15 (noting that in internet social websites created in foreign countries, which are not within the [*30] Although the fluidity that currently characterizes this industry does beg the question as to just how long MySpace can retain its market power, that there are many new entrants does not necessarily mean that LiveUniverse's allegations about barriers to entry are deficient. [5] "The fact that entry has occurred does not necessarily preclude the existence of 'significant' entry barriers. If the output or capacity of the new entrant is insufficient to take significant business away from the [monopolist], they are unlikely to represent a challenge to the [monopolist's] market power." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1440 (internal citations omitted). The article "Social Networking's Next Phase" itself notes that although there are many new social networking websites entering the market, at least some of the new entrants are finding it difficult to attract users when there are only a relatively few other members at the outset. Social Networking's Next Phase, at 89. For example, Google helped Nike design a soccer community site, but the site "does not appear to have significantly attracted users." Id. at B9. If two companies having the size, power and reputation of [*31] Google and Nike are encountering such difficulties, it is likely that other new entrants would, too.

The Hitwise Report concludes that "[w]hether or not [*32] any of these websites or other emerging websites erode MySpace's dominance is dependent on the ability to harness the network effect." (Hitwise Report, p.32). Data showed that in September 2006, 24% of the visits to the 19 other social networking websites with the highest market share came directly from MySpace. (Id.). This gives MySpace control over almost one in every four visits to its biggest potential competitors.

The recent and rapid growth of other social networking websites does not necessarily prove their ability to challenge MySpace's dominant share of the market. The four social networking websites whose growth outpaced that of the market combined for only 2.19% of the total market share, even after their rapid growth between March and September 2006. (Hitwise Report, pp. 31-32). The market share of visits to MySpace increased by 51% during the same period and increased by 129% between September 2005 and September 2006. (Id., at p.32). As the Hitwise Report points out, the "growth of other social networking websites has not yet chipped away at MySpace's dominance in the category" and the potential for any website to challenge MySpace's dominance will depend on its [*33] "ability to harness the network effect." (Id.).

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds, LiveUniverse sufficiently alleges that MySpace has monopoly power in the relevant market.

C. Exclusionary Conduct

To establish monopolization, plaintiff must allege and prove that MySpace acquired or maintains monopoly power by engaging in exclusionary conduct, "as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). "The [Sherman Act] directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). "[T]o be condemned as exclusionary, a monopolist's act market LiveUniverse alleges to be part of, MySpace is encountering formidable competition); Brad Stone & Matt Richtel, One Call to Tell the World All about You, N.Y. Times, April 30, 2007, at Cl (noting the growth of social networking via cell phones); Brad Stone, Facebook Goes off the Campus, N.Y. Times, May 25, 2007, at Cl (describing expansion of "Facebook" into MySpace's "turf").

---

[5] In Microsoft, the Court of Appeals observed that "Once a product or standard achieves wide acceptance, it becomes more or less entrenched. Competition in such industries is 'for the field' rather than 'within the field.' . . . In technologically dynamic markets, however, such entrenchment may be temporary, because innovation may alter the field altogether. . . . Rapid technological change leads to markets in which firms compete through innovation for temporary market dominance, from which they may be displaced by the next wave of product advancements. . . . [T]here is no consensus among commentators on the question of whether, and to what extent, current monopolization doctrine should be amended to account for competition in technologically dynamic markets characterized by network effects." 253 F.3d at 49-50 (internal citations omitted).

must have an 'anticompetitive effect.' That is, it must harm the competitive process and thereby harm consumers. In contrast, harm to one or more competitors will not suffice." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58.

LiveUniverse alleges that MySpace committed three anticompetitive acts. First, MySpace destroyed [*34] users' ability to load and display their vidiLife videos on the MySpace system by redesigning its platform so that "all links to vidiLife video content embedded by MySpace users in their online profiles no longer function." (FAC P 32) (emphasis in original). Second, MySpace deleted all references to "vidilife.com." Third, MySpace has blocked users not only from mentioning "vidiLife.com" on the MySpace system, but also from embedding links to the vidiLife website in their personal profiles. (FAC P 33). MySpace also has allegedly blocked users from using social networking services offered by stickam.com, another Internet-based social networking service, and it deleted all references to yet another social networking site, revver.com. (FAC P 36).

LiveUniverse alleges that this conduct is "part of a pattern and practice of anticompetitive behavior" against other social networking websites. (FAC P 36). It alleges that MySpace's design changes "have no legitimate business purpose" and are "solely intended to maintain and extend [MySpace's] monopoly in Internet-based social networking and advertising on Internet-based social networking sites in the United States by stifling competition [*35] and enlarging existing barriers to entry." (FAC P 35).

LiveUniverse further alleges that MySpace's behavior "discourages and effectively precludes new competitors from entering the market for social networking services, which also harms the consumer public." (FAC P 37). "[C]onsumers who might otherwise have preferred the applications of rivals such as vidiLife to those of MySpace" must now "maintain their MySpace personal profiles without using rivals' products, or they may use rival's [sic] products but be cut off from the overwhelming majority of the content and viewers in the market." (FAC P 37). MySpace has allegedly "diminished the quality of the consumer experience, thus injuring consumers and competition as a whole." (FAC P 38). [6]

[*36] MySpace proffers several arguments why its conduct is not anticompetitive as a matter of law. The Court will deal with the two that are appropriate for determination on a motion to dismiss: First, that MySpace has the right to refuse to deal with a rival in the promotion of its own products and services, and second, that it has the right to prevent plaintiff from "free riding" off its investment and innovation.

1. Refusal to Deal and "Free Riding"

A company generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). As the Supreme Court stated in Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407-08, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004):

> Firms may acquire monopoly power by establishing an infrastructure that renders them uniquely suited to serve their customers. Compelling such firms to share the source of their advantage is in some tension with the underlying purpose of antitrust law, since it may lessen the incentive for the monopolist, the rival, or both to invest in those economically beneficial facilities. Enforced sharing also requires antitrust [*37] courts to act as central planners, identifying the proper price, quantity, and other terms of dealing-a role for which they are ill suited. Moreover, compelling negotiation between competitors may facilitate the supreme evil of antitrust: collusion. Thus, as a general matter, the Sherman Act "does not restrict the long recognized right of [a] trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal." . . . However, "[t]he high value that we have placed on the right to refuse to deal with other firms does not mean that the right is unqualified." Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing

---

[6] It remains to be seen whether causing this alleged "injury" to consumers will in fact backfire against MySpace. With Internet users being only (at most) a few clicks away from other sites on the Web, if MySpace's users/members react with hostility to these measures, they may choose to use and visit rival sites.

> Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 601, 105 S.Ct. 2847, 86 L.Ed.2d 467 (1985). Under certain circumstances, a refusal to cooperate with rivals can constitute anticompetitive conduct and violate § 2.

In Aspen Skiing, the defendant owned three of the four Aspen, Colorado ski areas. 472 U.S. at 587-88, n.204. The plaintiff owned the fourth. They had cooperated for years in selling a joint ski ticket that allowed skiers to visit all four areas. The defendant ultimately cancelled the [*38] joint ticket after repeatedly seeking a larger share of the revenue. The plaintiff attempted to re-create the joint ticket, even offering to buy the defendant's tickets at retail price, but the defendant refused. The Supreme Court upheld the jury's finding of monopolization and its verdict for the plaintiff, finding that "[t]he jury may well have concluded that [the defendant] elected to forgo these short-term benefits because it was more interested in reducing competition in the Aspen market over the long run by harming its smaller competitor." Id. at 608. In other words, the defendant revealed an anticompetitive motive by refusing to continue the joint ticket, even if compensated at retail price.

In Verizon, in contrast, the Supreme Court unanimously held that a complaint alleging a breach of Verizon's statutory duty to share its telephone network with competitors did not state a monopolization claim under Section 2. Verizon, 540 U.S. at 416. The Telecommunications Act of 1996 attempted to facilitate the entry of competitors into the telecommunications market by imposing such a duty on incumbent phone companies. Id. at 402. [*39] The complaint alleged that Verizon filled rivals' service orders in a discriminatory manner as part of an anticompetitive scheme to discourage customers from using the competing phone companies. Id. at 404. Stating that Aspen "is at or near the outer boundary of § 2 liability," Id. at 409, the Supreme Court distinguished that case from Verizon. It noted that in Verizon the complaint did not allege that Verizon had ever voluntarily engaged in a course of dealing with its rivals or that it would have done so absent statutory compulsion. Id. at 409. "Here, therefore, the defendant's prior conduct sheds no light upon the motivation of its refusal to deal . . .." Id. In Verizon, in short, there was no indication that the defendant's refusal to deal with competitors was "prompted not by competitive zeal but by anticompetitive malice." Id.

In MetroNet Services Corp. v. Qwest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124 (9th Cir. 2004), the Ninth Circuit, too, rejected a Sherman Act Section 2 claim based on the Telecommunications Act's requirement that incumbent local exchange carriers ("ILEC's") provide access to competitors. [*40] Qwest, the ILEC, initially had a pricing structure for sales of phone services under which plaintiff MetroNet could resell phone services at a profit. Id. at 1127. When Qwest adopted a new pricing structure that eliminated Metronet's ability to resell the services at a profit, MetroNet filed suit, alleging that Qwest illegally maintained a monopoly over the market for small business local telephone services in the Seattle/Tacoma area. Id. at 1126. In light of Verizon, the Ninth Circuit granted summary judgment in favor of Qwest. It ruled that MetroNet did not present circumstances that Verizon found significant to give rise to a refusal to deal claim under Aspen Skiing. For example, there was no evidence that Qwest sacrificed short-term profits for long-term exclusion of competition. Id. at 1132-33. The Court also stressed that Qwest did not refuse to provide the service to MetroNet, but merely imposed the same terms that it charged direct consumers. Id. at 1133.

Here, the FAC alleges that MySpace's previous "practice of allowing users the unfettered ability to reference other websites, including rival [*41] websites, was a prior course of dealing in the market. . . ." (FAC P 32). LiveUniverse argues that this "prior course of dealing" distinguishes this case from Verizon and brings it within Aspen Skiing. This argument is flawed and unpersuasive. What was missing in Verizon and in MetroNet is missing here, too. In Aspen Skiing, the parties formally agreed to share revenues and expenses in a joint venture that lasted for more than 15 years. Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 589-93. Moreover, as the Verizon court stressed, the Aspen defendant's "unilateral termination of a voluntary (and thus presumably profitable) course of dealing" was evidence of predatory intent. Verizon, 540 U.S. at 409 (emphasis in original). Here, the "course of dealing" that the FAC alleges concerns the relationship of LiveUniverse and its users; the FAC contains no allegations of an affirmative decision or arrangement between MySpace and LiveUniverse to cooperate in any way, not even an informal agreement relating to their respective websites.

MySpace also argues that it has a right to prevent LiveUniverse from "free-riding" on MySpace's investment in its own [*42] website. In Olympia Equipment Leasing Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 797 F.2d 370 (7th Cir. 1986), the plaintiff won a judgment in district court that the defendant violated Section 2 by changing its policies so that its sales force no longer referred customers to the plaintiff. In an opinion authored by Judge Posner, the Seventh Circuit reversed. Id. at 383. The opinion distinguished Aspen and concluded that the plaintiff had no right under antitrust law to benefit from its competitor's sales force: "Advertising a competitor's products free of charge is not a form of cooperation commonly found in competitive markets; it is the antithesis of competition." Id. at 377-378.

MySpace's allegedly anticompetitive conduct is somewhat similar to the conduct that the court found permissible in Olympia. Social networking websites derive the bulk of their income from advertising displayed on their sites, with revenue directly related to the number of visits to the site. Every time a user "travels" from the MySpace site to the vidiLife site by clicking on a link, vidiLife's advertising revenue stands to grow. Assuming that advertisers' [*43] budgets are not unlimited, that could lead to a diminution in MySpace's revenue. Looked at another way, by eliminating any references to vidiLife.com and by deleting links to that site, MySpace may be viewed as merely preventing LiveUniverse from advertising its website free of charge on the MySpace site.

In Morris Communications Corp. v. PGA Tours, Inc., 364 F.3d 1288, 1290 (11th Cir. 2004), a media company challenged the PGA Tour, Inc.'s ("PGA") alleged monopolization of markets for publication of real-time golf scores on the Internet and the sale of these scores. The PGA had developed a Real-Time Scoring System that quickly recorded players' scores, which it would not allow the plaintiff to re-sell to other Internet website publishers without first buying a license to do so. Plaintiff claimed this constituted an unlawful refusal to deal. The Eleventh Circuit affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the PGA. Id. at 1290. It stated that a "refusal to deal that is designed to protect or further the legitimate business purposes of a defendant does not violate the antitrust laws even if that refusal injures competition." Id. at 1295. [*44] The Court found that the PGA's justification for its conduct was sufficient: it sought to prevent plaintiff from "free-riding" on its technology. Id. at 1295-98. The court stressed that unlike the cases plaintiff relied on, the PGA was not preventing plaintiff from selling a product that plaintiff created and owned. Id. at 1297. Here, too, MySpace has taken no action that prevents plaintiff from promoting and operating its own site, independently of MySpace.

For the foregoing reasons, LiveUniverse fails to state a refusal to deal claim.

2. Product Design Changes

In general, it is not inherently anticompetitive for even a monopolist to make changes to its product design. "A monopolist, no less than any other competitor, is permitted and indeed encouraged to compete aggressively on the merits, and any success it may achieve solely through 'the process of invention and innovation' is necessarily tolerated by the antitrust laws." Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534, 544-45 (9th Cir. 1983) (holding that plaintiff-photofinisher failed to state a Section 2 claim against defendant-manufacturer who allegedly [*45] developed new products that were incompatible with then-existing products and with photofinishing equipment); overruled on other grounds and on another claim by Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 842 F.2d 1034 (9th Cir. 1987). As the Ninth Circuit noted, the defendant had no duty "to constrict[] product development so as to facilitate sales of rival products" or to help competitors "survive or expand." Id. at 545 (internal citations omitted).

Despite these principles, LiveUniverse nevertheless argues that MySpace modified its system so as to delete links to vidiLife.com from the MySpace site, to delete users' references to "vidilife.com" and to prevent users from making any future mention of or links to vidiLife.com. LiveUniverse alleges that these modifications constitute a change of product design that is actionable. For this contention, it relies entirely on Microsoft, supra. In that case, the D.C. Circuit found that Microsoft had a monopoly in the operating systems market and that it violated Section 2 by engaging in conduct that strengthened that monopoly by reducing the market share of Netscape, its primary competitor in a second, separate market, [*46] that of Internet browsers. 253 F.3d at 59-60.

LiveUniverse focuses on that portion of the fact-dependent, lengthy and complex opinion in Microsoft where the Court of Appeals noted that the District Court had found that Microsoft designed its Windows 98 operating system in a manner that "would override the user's choice of a browser other than [Microsoft's] Internet Explorer as his or her default browser." Id. at 65. The Court of Appeals also noted that Microsoft did not deny that "overriding the user's preference prevents some people from using other browsers" and it observed that "[b]ecause the override reduces [browser] rivals' usage share and protects Microsoft's [operating systems] monopoly, it too is anticompetitive." I*d.* [7] [*47] Here, LiveUniverse argues, MySpace engaged in similar conduct: it destroyed links to vidiLife content embedded in user profiles on the MySpace site. [8]

Live Universe's allegations are not sufficient to establish anticompetitive conduct. MySpace's conduct is distinguishable from that of Microsoft, because it in no way prevents consumers from accessing the vidiLife site. It simply prevents them from using the MySpace site to do so. Unlike Microsoft's override of users' choice of default browsers, the destruction of links to vidiLife.com does not "override" users' preferences. Nor is the content of these links converted into MySpace content. Moreover, users are not restricted to MySpace content in the manner that the override restricted [*48] Windows users to Microsoft's browser, Internet Explorer. Users are only prevented from viewing and creating links to the vidiLife site directly through the MySpace site- they may still do so elsewhere. Thus, the only product design change by MySpace was an algorithm that enables it to compete in the relevant market without enabling LiveUniverse to take advantage of MySpace's success. Such behavior even a monopolist has the right to display. Foremost Pro Color, 703 F.2d at 545.

For the foregoing reasons, the FAC fails to state a claim containing justiciable allegations of exclusionary conduct.

D. Causal Antitrust Injury

Given that the FAC does not state a viable claim of anticompetitive, predatory misconduct, in principle it would be unnecessary to address this remaining element of a Sherman Act § 2 monopolization claim. But in order to provide a complete record on appeal, the Court will do so - - briefly.

> "A private plaintiff may not recover damages [for an antitrust violation] merely by showing injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Instead, a plaintiff must prove the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of [*49] the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. . . . [I]njury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition."

Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (internal citations omitted). Phrased another way, antitrust injury is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, (1977) (internal citations omitted).

In addition to the previously-discussed allegations of MySpace's conduct directed toward LiveUniverse, the FAC alleges [*50] similar anticompetitive conduct toward two other competitors in the market. (FAC P 36). LiveUniverse alleges that MySpace's behavior "discourages and effectively precludes new competitors from entering the market for social networking services, which also harms the consumer public. Users of vidiLife and other services that have spent long hours uploading and creating written, audio, and video self expression now find these efforts destroyed

---

[7] Because in the trial court the plaintiffs had not proffered evidence to rebut Microsoft's proffered justification for this conduct, the Court of Appeals reversed the District Court's finding of liability for this design change. 253 F.3d at 67.

[8] This overstates what actually has occurred, evidently. As MySpace argues (without refutation), "Users - including MySpace users - can email, blog and chat with their friends about 'LiveUniverse' and 'vidiLife' to their heart's content. The only thing that has been eliminated - and the only conduct at issue - is the presence of separate active links (i.e., website addresses like 'www.vidiLife.com') on the MySpace.com website that take users directly from MySpace.com to vidiLife.com in a single mouse click."

as they cannot use their content on MySpace." (FAC P 37). "[C]onsumers who might otherwise have preferred the applications of rivals such as vidiLife to those of MySpace" must now "maintain their MySpace personal profiles without using rivals' products, or they may use rival's [sic] products but be cut off from the overwhelming majority of the content and viewers in the market." (FAC P 37). The FAC further alleges that MySpace has "diminished the quality of the consumer experience, thus injuring consumers and competition as a whole." (FAC P 38).

Harm to one or more competitors is not sufficient to constitute antitrust injury unless a plaintiff alleges harm to the competitive process, which in turn harms consumers. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58. [*51] Here, the harm to consumers that Live Universe has alleged is fanciful. The "long hours" that consumers devoted to "self expression" have not been wasted; the content they created is still available, and readily accessible. Internet aficionados easily move from one website to another in seconds. Although purporting to address the impact on competition generally, LiveUniverse really complains about the impact on LiveUniverse itself.

At the hearing, LiveUniverse's counsel analogized the alleged harm to consumers here to the harm in Aspen Skiing. It is unnecessary to go to lengths to show how misplaced that notion is. In Aspen Skiing the joint ticket covering four ski areas provided skiers with convenience and flexibility by expanding the number of runs available and allowing skiers to decide each day on which mountain they preferred to ski. Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 605-06. The Court provided anecdotal evidence of skiers coming to the fourth mountain and being angered when told that the joint ticket did not include this mountain. Id. at 606-07. Skiers were then forced to either (1) purchase an additional ticket and waste one day of their six-day [*52] joint ticket; (2) obtain a refund, which could take all morning and entailed the forfeit of the six-day discount; or (3) leave the mountain and waste time getting to one of the other ski areas. Id. at 607. The harm to these skiers greatly exceeds the harm suffered by patrons of social networking websites. To exit MySpace and visit vidiLife.com presents nothing comparable to the hassles endured by the Aspen skiers. Similarly, MySpace users who have placed links on the MySpace site to content on their vidiLife pages can easily place that content directly onto their MySpace site. In short, LiveUniverse does not sufficiently allege causal antitrust injury.

E. Conclusion Re Monopolization of Social Network Market

For the foregoing reasons, LiveUniverse has not alleged and cannot allege exclusionary conduct or causal antitrust injury in the market for Internet-based social networking websites. Therefore, the Court GRANTS MySpace's motion to dismiss LiveUniverse's monopolization claim in this market.

IV. "ATTEMPTED MONOPOLIZATION" ALLEGATIONS IN MARKET CONSISTING OF "INTERNET-BASED SOCIAL NETWORKING SITES"

As stated above, LiveUniverse must allege [*53] four elements in the relevant market to plead an attempted monopolization claim: "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433.

In the FAC, LiveUniverse does not differentiate between its allegations of monopolization and attempted monopolization in the market consisting of Internet-based social networking websites. Thus, the Court need not repeat the foregoing analysis. The Court finds that for the same reasons stated above regarding the monopolization claim, LiveUniverse fails to allege the "predatory or anticompetitive conduct" or "causal antitrust injury" required to state an attempted monopolization claim and therefore fails to allege an attempted monopolization claim.

V. ALLEGATIONS RE MARKET CONSISTING OF "ADVERTISING ON INTERNET-BASED SOCIAL NETWORKING SITES"

LiveUniverse also alleges monopolization and attempted monopolization claims in the market for advertising on Internet-based social networking sites. Its allegations of anticompetitive [*54] conduct and causal antitrust injury are insufficient and therefore, without having to make findings regarding the other required elements, the Court dismisses these claims.

A. LiveUniverse's Monopolization Claim

1. Relevant Market

The FAC alleges that the "primary source of revenue for . . . the overwhelming majority of all United States social networking web sites . . . is advertising revenue generated from the number of visitors to the personal profiles and networks of friends generated with and contained within the social networking web platform." (FAC P 18). The FAC alleges that "there are no good substitutes for" advertising on internet social networking sites, because:

> Such sites offer advertisers the unique ability to tap into user-generated content and to establish "buzz" about their products through word of mouth as users comment upon and share the advertising with others, essentially integrating an advertiser's message into the rumor mill. In addition, such sites offer the ability to reach an extremely targeted demographic based upon specific interests that traditional, passive advertising cannot offer. As more and more consumers share the advertiser's [*55] message with their likeminded friends, the message becomes the subject of a conversation detached from its commercial context and the advertiser is capable of targeting and penetrating its desired market in ways that are simply not possible through traditional advertising in passive media. . . . On information and belief, rival advertising media are not sufficiently close substitutes to force the defendant to sell its advertising at a competitive price and the defendant therefore earns monopoly margins on its advertising by charging a premium over prices that would prevail in a healthy competitive market.

(FAC P 20).

Without making a finding as to whether LiveUniverse adequately alleges a relevant market or whether it even has standing as a participant in this alleged market to challenge MySpace's conduct, the Court will assume that this allegation is adequate.

2. Monopoly Power

Without making a finding as to whether LiveUniverse adequately alleges monopoly power, the Court will assume that it does.

3. Anticompetitive Conduct

MySpace argues, and LiveUniverse does not dispute, that the FAC "does not contain a single sentence of exclusionary conduct" in the market [*56] for advertising on Internet-based social networking websites. Assuming that LiveUniverse intended to incorporate by reference its allegations as to MySpace's conduct in the market for websites, the Court finds that LiveUniverse has not sufficiently alleged anticompetitive conduct, for the reasons discussed above.

4. Causal Antitrust Injury

LiveUniverse's allegations of causal antitrust injury in the market for advertising on Internet-based social networking sites also are insufficient. The FAC alleges that advertising is the primary source of revenue for all social networking sites, and that LiveUniverse's advertising revenue has declined due to MySpace's conduct. (FAC P 39). But without adequate allegations of injury to competition itself, an injury suffered by one competitor is not sufficient to establish antitrust injury. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58. In an apparent effort to avoid this pitfall, LiveUniverse further alleges that MySpace reduces users' ability to generate content as they please, which in turn hurts advertisers who would benefit from the "unique ability to . . . establish 'buzz' about their products through word of mouth as users comment upon [*57] and share the advertising with others." (FAC P 20). As stated above, however, the only conduct of MySpace that is alleged to affect users' ability to generate content does not in fact do so; they can generate whatever content they want on vidiLife.com. And advertisers can create or exploit "buzz" on that website. Thus, the Court finds that LiveUniverse does not sufficiently allege causal antitrust injury in the market for advertising on Internet-based social networking sites.

5. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, LiveUniverse cannot allege exclusionary conduct or causal antitrust injury in the market for advertising on Internet-based social networking websites. Therefore, the Court GRANTS MySpace's motion to dismiss LiveUniverse's monopolization claim in this market.

B. LiveUniverse's Attempted Monopolization Claim

Like its allegations in the first relevant market, LiveUniverse does not differentiate between its allegations of monopolization and attempted monopolization in the market for advertising on Internet-based social networking websites. For the same reasons set forth just above, LiveUniverse fails to allege an attempted monopolization claim in the market [*58] for advertising on Internet-based social networking websites.

VI. LIVE UNIVERSE'S STATE LAW CLAIM

The second claim for relief in the FAC alleges that MySpace has engaged in "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practices," in violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, et seq. The Court separately addresses each of these three prongs. Based largely on the preceding analysis concerning the Section 2 claims, the Court finds that LiveUniverse fails to allege a statutory unfair competition claim under § 17200.

A. "Unlawful" Business Act or Practice Prong

"The 'unlawful' practices prohibited by Section 17200 are any practices forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Watson Laboratories, Inc. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F.Supp.2d 1099, 1120 (C.D.Cal. 2001). In the FAC, the only law allegedly violated by MySpace is Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Since this Court has already found that LiveUniverse fails to allege a Section 2 claim, the Court necessarily finds that LiveUniverse fails to allege an "unlawful" business act or practice.

B. [*59] "Unfair" Business Act or Practice Prong

In Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Company, 20 Cal.4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (Cal. 1999), the California Supreme Court adopted the following test for the "unfair" business act or practice prong:

> When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's "unfair" act or practice invokes section 17200, the word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. (emphasis added).

As LiveUniverse points out, this test is disjunctive, meaning that there are three alternative ways to state a claim under this prong. LiveUniverse fails to establish any of these alternatives.

As to the first alternative, the Court has already found that MySpace's conduct does not violate antitrust law. As to the second alternative, requiring effects that are "comparable to or the same as a violation of [antitrust] law," the Court has already found that LiveUniverse [*60] failed to allege that MySpace's conduct caused an anticompetitive effect. Similarly, the third alternative fails because LiveUniverse failed to allege how MySpace's conduct "significantly threaten[ed] or harm[ed] competition," as opposed to harming LiveUniverse. [9]

C. "Fraudulent" Business Act or Practice Prong

"This 'prong' of § 17200 is comparable to the 'unfair' prong at issue in Cel-Tech, supra; just as it is necessary under the 'unfair' prong to show harm not merely to the plaintiff-competitor but also to competition, so, too, should it [*61] be necessary under the 'fraudulent' prong to show deception to some members of the public, or harm to the public interest, and not merely to the direct competitor or other non-consumer party to a contract." Watson Laboratories, 178 F.Supp.2d at 1121. As addressed in detail above, LiveUniverse solely alleges harm to itself, rather than harm to the public interest. The FAC also fails to allege any deception to members of the public. Thus, LiveUniverse fails to allege a "fraudulent" business act or practice.

D. Conclusion re LiveUniverse's State Claim

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that LiveUniverse fails to state a claim under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Therefore, the Court GRANTS MySpace's motion to dismiss this claim. Although the Court doubts that within the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, plaintiff can state a different and viable Section 17200 claim, given that the scope of that section is potentially broad, the Court will permit plaintiff to attempt to do so. Any Second Amended Complaint shall be filed by not later than June 15, 2007. If no such amended complaint [*62] is filed by then, then the dismissal of the Section 17200 claim shall be with prejudice.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS MySpace's motion to dismiss the Sherman Act Section 2 claims with prejudice. [10] The Court GRANTS MySpace's motion to dismiss LiveUniverse's state claim without prejudice.

---

[9] In Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp., 93 Cal.App. 4th 363, 375, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001), the Court of Appeal held that "conduct alleged to be 'unfair' because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers . . . is not 'unfair' if the conduct is deemed reasonable and condoned under the antitrust laws." Although the California Supreme Court has not articulated this principle, it appears to be sound and to be applicable here.

[10] Dkt. No. 17.

A. LiveUniverse's Monopolization Claim

1. Relevant Market

(a) Defining a Relevant Market

(b) Allegations in the FAC

(c) The "Internet-Based Social Networking Sites" Market is Plausible

(d) Conclusion re Relevant Market

2. Monopoly Power

(a) Elements of Market Power

(b) LiveUniverse Adequately Alleges That Myspace Owns Dominant Share of the Market

(c) Barriers to Entry

3. Exclusionary Conduct

(a) Allegations in the FAC

(b) Refusal to Deal

(c) Product Design Changes

4. Causal Antitrust Injury

(a) Allegations in the FAC

(b) No Cognizable Harm to LiveUniverse

D. LiveUniverse's Attempted Monopolization Claim

III. ALLEGATIONS RE MARKET FOR ADVERTISING ON INTERNET-BASED SOCIAL NETWORKING SITES

IV. MOTION TO DISMISS LIVEUNIVERSE'S STATE LAW CLAIM

V. CONCLUSION

[*63]

End of Document

Cole v. Champion Enters.

United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina

June 5, 2007, Decided; June 5, 2007, Filed

1:05CV00415

Reporter

496 F. Supp. 2d 613 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54017 **

M. MARK COLE, Plaintiff, v. CHAMPION ENTERPRISES, INC., SOUTHERN SHOWCASE HOUSING, INC., THE CHAMPION ENTERPRISES, INC. DEFERRED COMPENSATION PLAN, and THE CHAMPION ENTERPRISES, INC. CORPORATE OFFICERS STOCK PURCHASE PLAN, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Adopted by, Summary judgment granted, in part, summary judgment denied, in part by, Motion denied by, Dismissed by Cole v. Champion Enters., 496 F. Supp. 2d 613, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54012 (M.D.N.C., July 23, 2007)

Prior History: Cole v. Champion Enters., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46735, 2005 WL 8167130 (M.D.N.C., Nov. 1, 2005)

Core Terms

terms, parties, severance, terminated, benefits, contends, covenants, shares, retail, negotiations, vesting, salary, bonus, stock, without cause, promise, stock option, Hour Act, executive officer, wages, restraint of trade, anti trust law, antitrust, targeted, compete, rule of reason, retail operations, special assistant, Sherman Act, manufactured

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Governance > Directors & Officers > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Recordkeeping & Reporting Requirements > General Overview

HN1[] Corporate Governance, Directors & Officers

Executive officers of public companies are generally referred to as "Rule 16(b)" officers.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN3[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

A party seeking summary judgment bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the record which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN4[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

Once a moving party has met its summary judgment burden, the non-moving party must then set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Absence of Essential Element

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN5[] Burdens of Proof, Absence of Essential Element

In making a determination on a summary judgment motion, a court views the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, according that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Mere allegations and denials, however, are insufficient to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Judges are not required to submit a question to a jury merely because some evidence has been introduced by the party having the burden of proof, unless the evidence be of such a character that it would warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of that party. Thus, the moving party can bear its burden either by presenting affirmative evidence or by demonstrating that the non-moving party's evidence is insufficient to establish its claim. A complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of a plaintiff's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial.

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > General Overview

HN6[] Contracts Law, Contract Formation

Generally, North Carolina applies the doctrine of lex loci contractus, which means a contract is formed in the place at which the last act was done by either of the parties essential to a meeting of the minds.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

HN7[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

The elements of a claim for breach of contract are the existence of a valid contract and a breach of the terms of that contract. The intentions of the parties may be discerned from both their writings and their actions.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Offers > Definite Terms

HN8[] Offers, Definite Terms

To be enforceable, the terms of a contract must be sufficiently definite and certain. A contract leaving material portions open for future agreement is nugatory and void for indefiniteness.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Offers > Definite Terms

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Acceptance > Meeting of Minds

HN9[] Offers, Definite Terms

In addition to setting forth its terms with the requisite level of certainty, to be enforceable a contract must contain an expression of mutual assent, or a meeting of the minds. There is no contract unless the parties thereto assent, and they must assent to the same thing, in the same sense. A meeting of the minds is judged by an objective standard, looking to the express words of the parties and their visible acts, not their subjective states of mind.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Offers > Definite Terms

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Execution & Delivery

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Oral Agreements

HN10[] Offers, Definite Terms

Where the evidence is sufficient to support a plaintiff's contention that a definite oral agreement was made by the parties, the contract is complete even though the parties contemplated that they would ultimately reduce the agreement to writing. Nevertheless, if it appears that the parties are merely negotiating to see if they can agree upon terms, and that the writing is to be a contract, then there is no contract until the writing is executed. If the parties intend to signal their agreement only by the execution of a written document and do not intend to be bound unless and until all parties sign, no amount of negotiation or oral agreement, no matter how specific, will result in the formation of a binding contract.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Execution & Delivery

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Oral Agreements

HN11[] Contract Formation, Execution & Delivery

Under Michigan law, in determining whether the parties intended to require a written document in order for a contract to be binding, a court applies the following factors: (1) whether the contract is of that class which are usually found to be in writing; (2) whether it is of such nature as to need a formal writing for its full expression; (3) whether it has few or many details; (4) whether the amount involved is large or small; (5) whether it is a common or unusual contract; and (6) whether the negotiations themselves indicate that a written draft is contemplated as a final conclusion of the negotiations.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Wage Payments

Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees

Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Remedies > Judgment Interest

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Liquidated Damages

Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Remedies > Private Suits

HN12[] Wage & Hour Laws, Wage Payments

The North Carolina Wage and Hour Act, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 95-25.1 et seq., provides a private right of action to employees for recovery of unpaid wages owed, interest at the legal rate set forth in N.C. Gen. Stat. § 24-1, liquidated damages, and attorneys fees. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 95-25.22. The Wage and Hour Act defines "wages" as compensation for labor or services rendered by an employee whether determined on a time, task, piece, job, day, commission, or other basis of calculation.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Wage Payments

Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Scope & Definitions > General Overview

HN13[] Wage & Hour Laws, Wage Payments

For the purposes of N.C. Gen. Stat. § 95-25.6 through N.C. Gen. Stat. § 95-25.13 "wage" includes sick pay, vacation pay, severance pay, commissions, bonuses, and other amounts promised when the employer has a policy or a practice of making such payments. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 95-25.2(16).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Wage Payments

Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Scope & Definitions > General Overview

HN14[] Wage & Hour Laws, Wage Payments

See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 95-25.7.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Wage Payments

HN15[] Wage & Hour Laws, Wage Payments

In accordance with N.C. Gen. Stat. § 95-25.13.3, once an employee meets conditions for the receipt of benefits, an employer may not rescind.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Conditions Precedent

Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > General Overview

HN16[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Conditions Precedent

Under Michigan law, where a contract contains a clear condition precedent, and the condition is not met, a plaintiff has no contract claim.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Authorized Acts of Agents > Liability of Principals

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Duties & Liabilities > Third Parties

HN17[] Authorized Acts of Agents, Liability of Principals

A third party acquires no rights against a principal when the third party has either actual or constructive knowledge of what the principal has authorized his agent to do.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Governance > Directors & Officers > General Overview

HN18[] Corporate Governance, Directors & Officers

In July 2002 Congress enacted the Sarbanes Oxley Act, and the New York Stock Exchange later adopted rules for listed companies that, among other things, required stricter oversight by the board of executive management, a compensation committee comprised entirely of independent directors, the adoption of a charter for the compensation committee that specifically set out the committee's authority regarding executive compensation, the required adoption of corporate governance guidelines, and the disclosure of those guidelines and committee charters on the listed company's website.

Business & Corporate Law > Types of Transactions > Transfers of Stock

HN19[] Types of Transactions, Transfers of Stock

A "change in control" generally refers to a transfer of ownership in which a new person or entity obtains a 50 percent or greater ownership interest.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Wage Payments

HN20[] Wage & Hour Laws, Wage Payments

The North Carolina Wage and Hour Act protects employees from being denied payment of earned wages. Thus, the Act only requires an employer to pay those wages and benefits due when the employee has actually performed the work required to earn them.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Offers > Counteroffers

HN21[] Offers, Counteroffers

Under both North Carolina and Michigan law, when a party makes a counteroffer, the original offer has been rejected and ceases to exist.

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

HN22[] Contracts Law, Statute of Frauds

Under Michigan law, contracts that, by their terms, cannot be completed within a year from their making are subject to Michigan's statute of frauds. Mich. Comp. Laws § 566.132(1)(a) applies specifically to an agreement that, by its terms, is not to be performed within one year from the making of the agreement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > ERISA Pension Plan Qualification Requirements > Participation & Vesting > Participation Requirements

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation > Standing

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > ERISA Pension Plan Qualification Requirements > Participation & Vesting > Vesting Requirements

HN23[] Participation & Vesting, Participation Requirements

For a former employee to have standing as a "participant" under an Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 benefits plan, he must expect to return to covered employment or have a colorable claim to vested benefits. Without a definite promise from an employer, the employer is not bound to pay benefits; there is no obligation when the plan contains no statement which could conceivably be read as creating an obligation on the part of the employer to provide benefits.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN24[] Justiciability, Mootness

A declaratory judgment cannot be given, if a matter has become moot.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN25[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

North Carolina's Chapter 75, inter alia, prohibits illegal restraints of trade and provides for treble damages. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-16. More specifically, North Carolina's restraint of trade statute provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in the State of North Carolina is hereby declared to be illegal. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN26[] Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition, Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

A covenant not to compete is basically an agreement in restraint of trade. However, North Carolina courts have recognized the rule that a covenant not to compete is enforceable in equity in some circumstances. A covenant not to compete is generally enforceable and not in restraint of trade only if it is (1) in writing; (2) made part of a contract of employment; (3) based on valuable consideration; (4) reasonable both as to time and territory; and (5) designed to protect a legitimate business interest of the employer. When considering the enforceability of a covenant not to compete, a court examines the reasonableness of its time and geographic restrictions, balancing the substantial right of the employee to work with that of the employer to protect its legitimate business interests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN27[] Sherman Act, Claims

N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1 was based upon § 1 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the body of law applying the Sherman Act, although not binding upon a court in applying N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1, is nonetheless instructive. Consistent with federal antitrust law and in order to recover damages for an unenforceable noncompete under North Carolina antitrust law, a plaintiff must prove both adverse impact and antitrust injury. The requirement of antitrust injury reflects the oft-stated principle that the antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. To prove antitrust injury, an antitrust plaintiff must prove more than mere individual injury. Actionable antitrust violations require broad interference with the interest of the public. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1 requires a prejudice to the public interest on a broad basis, not just action affording a fair protection to the parties, to be actionable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN28[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The rule of reason is the standard for testing the enforceability of covenants in restraint of trade which are ancillary to a legitimate transaction, such as an employment contract. Under the rule of reason, a party must show an adverse effect on competition as a whole within the relevant market. Therefore, a non-competition covenant may be unreasonable between the parties, yet still not violate a state's antitrust laws if the plaintiff cannot show an adverse effect on competition as a whole within the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN29[] Sherman Act, Scope

There can be little doubt that the Sherman Act applies to non-competition agreements. However, it appears that no such noncompetition agreement has ever been held to violate the Sherman Act. One explanation for this absence of precedent may be the difficulty involved in proving that a post-employment noncompetition agreement violates the Sherman Act. Such agreements are not per se violations of the Sherman Act but must be analyzed under the rule of reason. To establish a violation under the rule of reason, one must prove that the agreement has an adverse effect on competition in the relevant market. This is distinguished from the effect a post-employment noncompetition agreement has on the particular employer and employee involved. Rule of reason analysis under antitrust laws must not be confused with reasonableness analysis under the common law. Rule of reason analysis tests the effect of a restraint of trade on competition. By contrast, whether a noncompetition agreement is reasonable depends upon its effect on the parties, the competitors, as it were. The two standards are not directly related. An agreement may be reasonable as between the parties and nevertheless violate antitrust laws. Conversely, an agreement may be unreasonable as between the parties and yet not violate the rule of reason test under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN30[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Even an unreasonable covenant not to compete does not necessarily violate the states' antitrust laws; to constitute such a violation, there must be an adverse effect on the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN31[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The antitrust laws were not intended as a vehicle for converting business tort claims into antitrust causes of action. A plaintiff cannot make out a federal antitrust claim merely by showing that it caused him an economic injury, and if the law were otherwise, many a workplace grievance would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN32[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

An essential aspect of an antitrust claim is that the plaintiff must show an intention and capacity to compete against the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN33[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

A prospective plaintiff cannot simply imagine a venture he might have undertaken in order to recover on an antitrust claim.

Counsel: [1] For M. MARK COLE, Plaintiff: DENA BETH LANGLEY, J. ALEXANDER S. BARRETT, LEAD ATTORNEYS, HAGAN DAVIS MANGUM BARRETT LANGLEY AND HALE, PLLC, GREENSBORO, NC; JASON BENJAMIN BUCKLAND, HAGAN DAVIS MANGUM BARRETT LANGLEY AND HALE, PLLC, GREENSBORO, NC.

For CHAMPION ENTERPRISES, INC., SOUTHERN SHOWCASE HOUSING, INC., Defendants: ANGELIQUE R. VINCENT, BAXTER CHAD EWING, DAVID C. WRIGHT, III, JULIAN HUGH WRIGHT, JR., PEARLYNN G. HOUCK, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ROBINSON BRADSHAW & HINSON, P.A., CHARLOTTE, NC; DIXIE THOMAS WELLS, JAMES DONALD COWAN, JR., SMITH MOORE, L.L.P., GREENSBORO, NC.

For THE CHAMPIOIN ENTERPRISES, INC. CORPORATE OFFICERS STOCK PURCHASE PLAN, Defendants: DAVID C. WRIGHT, III, JULIAN HUGH WRIGHT, JR., LEAD ATTORNEYS, ROBINSON BRADSHAW & HINSON, P.A., CHARLOTTE, NC; ANGELIQUE R. VINCENT, ROBINSON BRADSHAW & HINSON, P.A., CHARLOTTE, NC.

For THE CHAMPION ENTERPRISES, INC. DEFERRED COMPENSATION PLAN, Defendants: ANGELIQUE R. VINCENT,DAVID C. WRIGHT, III , JULIAN HUGH WRIGHT, JR., LEAD ATTORNEYS, ROBINSON BRADSHAW & HINSON, P.A., CHARLOTTE, NC.

Judges: WALLACE W. DIXON, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE.

Opinion by: WALLACE W. DIXON

Opinion

[*614] RECOMMENDATION BY UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

This matter is before the court [2] on a motion for summary judgment (docket no. 113) filed by Defendants Champion Enterprises, Inc. and Southern Showcase Housing, Inc. and on a motion for summary judgment (docket no. 116) filed by Plaintiff M. Mark Cole. The parties have responded to the motions and, in this posture, the matter is ripe for disposition. Furthermore, because the parties have not consented to the jurisdiction of the magistrate judge, I must address the motions by way of recommendation. For the following reasons, it will be recommended that the court grant summary judgment to Champion and Southern Showcase Housing as to all of Plaintiff Cole's claims.

STATEMENT OF CASE AND BACKGROUND

Plaintiff M. Mark Cole filed his initial complaint against Defendants Champion Enterprises, Inc. ("Champion") and Southern Showcase Housing, Inc. ("SSH") in the [*615] Guilford County Superior Court on April 11, 2005. Champion and SSH removed the case to this court on May 12, 2005, based on federal question jurisdiction and filed a motion to dismiss on May 19, 2005. On July 25, 2005, Cole filed an amended complaint and added two of Champion's employee benefit plans, The Champion Enterprises, Inc. Deferred Compensation Plan ("DCP") and [3] The Champion Enterprises, Inc. Corporate Officers Stock Purchase Plan ("SPP"), as parties pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 1132(d). Cole was for years an employee of Champion working on an at-will basis. The gist of Cole's lawsuit against Defendants is that when Champion fired him without cause in October 2004, Champion breached its contract with Cole regarding various terms of his employment and failed to pay him certain wages and benefits owed.

By previous order, the court dismissed DCP and SPP as Defendants; thus, the only remaining defendants are Champion and SSH. Furthermore, the court has dismissed certain ERISA claims as well as an unfair trade practices claim under Chapter 75 of the North Carolina statutes. The claims remaining are a claim for breach of contract/repudiation of contract, a claim under the North Carolina Wage and Hour Act, a claim for restraint of trade under Chapter 75 of the North Carolina statutes, and a claim arising under ERISA regarding an alleged oral severance package. Cole, Champion, and SSH have now moved for summary judgment on the remaining claims, and the motions have been referred to the undersigned. [1]

UNDISPUTED FACTS AND CLAIMS

Cole is a citizen and resident of Greensboro, North Carolina (Am. Compl. P 1.) Defendant Champion, a housing manufacturer, is a Michigan corporation. (Am. Compl. P 2.) Defendant SSH is a North Carolina corporation that is owned by a wholly owned subsidiary of Champion. In or around January 1998, Cole was the majority shareholder and President of SSH. (Id. P 12). Cole sold his shares of SSH to a wholly owned subsidiary of Champion and entered into an "Employment and Non-Competition Agreement" with Champion and SSH on January 8, 1998 (the "January 1998 Agreement"). (Id. P 13 & Ex. 1.) The January 1998 Agreement stated that its terms would expire in five years and that after the initial five-year term the agreement could be extended for additional periods as may be agreed upon in writing by Cole and Champion. (Id. Ex. 1, P 2.) The January 1998 Agreement included, among other things, terms [5] regarding Cole's compensation amount as well as his right to a performance bonus each year during the term of the Agreement, and his right to a severance package and a performance bonus (prorated for the year in which he was terminated) in the event that he was terminated without cause. (Id. P 4.)

Effective September 11, 1998, Champion promoted Cole to President of its retail operations, which was memorialized by a letter agreement dated September 11, 1998 (the "September 1998 Letter Agreement"). (See Letter Agreement, Am. Compl. Ex. 2.) The September 1998 Letter Agreement outlined in bullet-point form the basic terms of Cole's employment with Champion, including his salary and benefits, and made clear that all terms from the January 1998 Agreement remained in full force and effect. (Am. Compl. P 17.) As President, Retail Operations, [*616] Cole was considered an "executive" officer of Champion and was subject to applicable SEC Rules regarding executive compensation and other employment terms. [2] HN1[] Executive officers of public companies

---

[1] The only allegations against SSH concern its alleged [4] violation of restraint of trade by attempting with Champion to enforce certain noncompetition agreements against Cole. Although SSH has joined with Champion in the motion for summary judgment, I will refer primarily to Champion when addressing the parties' respective arguments.

[2] More [6] specifically, during the time that he served as President, Retail Operations, Cole was a "named executive officer" in Champion's proxy materials, as one of the company's "four most highly compensated executive officers other than the CEO." This meant that his compensation and any employment contract or arrangement that he had with Champion was subject to disclosure under various SEC regulations. (See Collins Aff. P 6, docket no. 114.)

are generally referred to as "Rule 16(b)" officers. Cole's position as President, Retail Operations, was based in Greensboro, North Carolina. (Id. Ex. 2.)

In 1999, the mobile home industry faced a major economic downturn, which continued for several years. (Young Dep. 7-8, Pl.'s Ex. B-1, docket no. 119.) Champion's stock price dropped significantly, going from $ 30 a share in 1997 to under $ 2 a share in early 2003. (Id. 7, 10-11.) In response to the downturn, Champion closed over 300 retail locations, which Cole oversaw. As a result of the decline in stock price, Cole and other senior executives were asked in 2000 to voluntarily surrender their stock options. Champion subsequently granted Cole new stock options in separate agreements dated January 2, 2001. (Am. Compl. PP 18, 22, Exs. 3, 4). The stock option agreements contained identical, non-competition provisions, which stated that for two years after [7] termination of employment, Cole could not:

> directly or indirectly . . . as owner, partner, joint venturer, employee, broker, agent, principal, trustee, corporate officer, licensor, consultant, or in any capacity whatsoever, engage in, become financially interested in, or have any connection with, any business located in the United States or Canada engaged in the production, sales, financing, insuring, or marketing of manufactured homes or the development of manufactured housing parks.

(Id.)

In or around April 2003, Cole met with Champion's then Chief Executive Officer, Walt Young ("Young"), and Chief Operating Officer, Philip Surles ("Surles"), in Las Vegas, Nevada to discuss Cole's concerns about his future with Champion. (Young Dep. 38-49, 112-13, Pl.'s Exs. B-1, B-3, docket no. 119; Cole Dep. 56-57, 180-87, Pl.'s Ex. D-1, docket no. 119; Surles Dep. 119-20, Pl.'s Ex. C, docket no. 119; Pl.'s Ex. 75, docket no. 122.) By then, the terms of Cole's January 1998 Agreement had expired, and Cole wanted to obtain written agreements from Young regarding the severance and equity components of his compensation. (Young Dep. 42.) Young told Cole that Champion had been able to work out similar arrangements [8] with other executive officers in the past, but that he would need approval from Champion's Board of Directors ("the Board") to finalize the arrangement. (Young Dep. 43-44, 84-89; see also Pl.'s Exs. 78, 79, docket no. 122.) Young's receipt of approval from Champion's Compensation Committee and Board had not been an issue in the past. According to Cole, the parties orally agreed to a number of terms and conditions concerning Cole's continued employment and Cole consequently relied on the Agreement in continuing his employment, while expecting Champion to reduce the agreements in writing. (Am. Compl. PP 29-32.) More specifically, Cole alleges that Young told him that in the event that Champion fired Cole without cause, he would (1) receive a lump sum severance payment equal to one [*617] year's salary; (2) he would be released from all covenants against competition; and (3) that all forms of deferred compensation, all performance shares, stock grants, and options would fully vest and Cole could hold them until maturity. (Am. Compl. P 29.)

Champion terminated the employment of Young and Surles in June and July of 2003, respectively, and Albert Koch ("Koch") was subsequently appointed as Champion's [9] Interim CEO. Early on in Koch's tenure as Interim CEO, Cole went to Koch and informed Koch about the compensation commitments that Young had agreed to. (Cole Dep. 279-80, Pl.'s Ex. D-2; Koch Dep. 26-29, 34-35, Pl.'s Ex. F-1, docket no. 119.) Koch was not willing at such an early stage in his tenure as Interim CEO to address with the Board Cole's concerns, and Cole agreed to delay final resolution until the 2004 compensation plan was rolled out for him and other Rule 16(b) officers. Due to delays, the 2004 compensation plan for Rule 16(b) officers was not finalized and disseminated until March 15, 2004. (Pl.'s Exs. 96, 97, docket no. 122.) These annual incentive compensation agreements, which were amendments to each Rule 16(b) officer's employment arrangements, were regularly sent out by letter or memorandum after approval by Champion's Board. (Pl.'s Exs. 96, 97, 176, 191, docket nos. 122 & 123.)

Cole was not pleased with certain terms of his incentive compensation arrangements because they were inconsistent with what Young promised him when they met in 2003. On or about March 25, 2004, Cole met with Koch in Detroit to discuss Cole's concerns that the March 15, 2004, incentive compensation [10] arrangements did not address the terms agreed to by Young on behalf of Champion in April 2003. (Cole Dep. 21-25, 287-324, 327-28, Pl.'s Exs. D-1, D-2, D-3; Koch Dep. 35-36, 124-25, Pl.'s Ex. F-1, F-2; Pl.'s Exs. 105-107, docket no. 123.) Cole was very concerned about the equity portions of his compensation being at risk in the event that Champion ever terminated his employment without cause, especially since there was a possibility that Champion might decide to exit the retail business altogether. (Id.; Cole Dep. 28-29, 170-71, 179-81, 184, 186-95, 196-99, 200-03, 244-45, 310-11.) Cole informed Koch of his unwillingness to continue his employment with Champion without confirmation of certain terms and that he would give Koch until March 29 to return to him an agreement that addressed Cole's concerns. (Koch Dep. 36, 52-53; Cole Dep. 290, 293.) Cole informed Koch that if they did not reach an agreement by March 29, he would no longer work for Champion.

By the conclusion of Cole's and Koch's meeting in Detroit on March 25, Koch and Cole had agreed only that Cole would be a participant in the executive severance plan that was being developed by Champion's outside compensation consultant, [11] Edward Graskamp, and which was expected to be finalized and in place by July 2004. (Cole Dep. 72-75, 259-61.) Cole left Koch's office and flew back to Greensboro, making notes of his conversation with Koch during the flight. (Cole Dep. 57-58; Pl.'s Ex. 105, docket no. 123.) As Cole was disembarking the airplane at the Greensboro airport, he received a call on his cell phone from Koch and Collins, Champion's general counsel. According to Cole, in the telephone call, Koch and Collins proposed, and Cole agreed to, the following terms regarding Cole's compensation:

> (1) Cole's salary would be increased by $ 20,000 to $ 300,000 for calendar year 2004 and would be retroactive to January 1, 2004, with the increase triggered upon Champion achieving two consecutive profitable quarters; (2) Cole would enter into a change of control agreement with Champion; (3) Champion would not [*618] waive Cole's noncompete in the event of termination without cause, but would modify it so that in the event Champion exited its retail operations Champion would agree to allow Cole to operate at least one retail center anywhere in the United States as long as Cole operated the location as a "Champion Home Center"; and [12] (4) Champion would protect the equity pieces of Cole's compensation, particularly any unvested portions of stock options or performance shares, by continuing to employ Cole in another capacity for the time necessary for all equity pieces to fully vest.

(Cole Dep. 306-07, 321-22.) Koch informed Cole that he could not get Board approval by March 29, but that he would put the agreement on fast track and obtain Board approval swiftly. (Koch Dep. 53-54; Pl.'s Ex. 107; Cole Dep. 36, 290-93.)

Cole maintains that he remained employed with Champion in reliance on the March 2004 agreement and with the understanding that portions of the agreement were subject to the Board's approval. (Cole Aff. P 59, docket no. 141.) Koch called Cole about a week later and told Cole that both Bob Anestis, Chair of Champion's Compensation Committee, and Graskamp had approved the terms of the Agreement between Cole and Koch. (Koch Dep. 37-38, 54-55; Cole Aff. P 59.) At the Annual Meeting of the Board of Directors held on April 27, 2004, Koch made a presentation to the Board which included details about Cole's current employment contract and details of compensation in the event that his employment were to be terminated. [13] Koch used a Power Point presentation to make the following recommendations to the Board for approval:

APPROVAL REQUEST TO BOARD

> . Increase Mark Cole salary by $ 20,000
> . Salary will increase to $ 300,000 after two profitable quarters (versus 285,000 now)
>
> . Give Mark an option to: Retain current restricted stock (40,000 shares) and target bonus of 80%, or Take restricted stock of 50,000 shares and reduce target bonus to 60%
> . Give Mark a change of control agreement
> . If Cole is removed as President of Retail without cause, then: He may continue as a CHC retailer with a different assignment requiring about 10 days per year. His salary would be reduced to approximately $ 20,000 to $ 30,000 per year. This will preserve Mark's existing restricted stock and option grants. Vesting would occur on targeted dates if he is still employed.

(Pl.'s Ex. 17, docket no. 122.) The redacted minutes from the annual meeting state that the Company's Compensation Committee and the Board approved Koch's proposals regarding Cole's employment terms. Specifically, the minutes state, in part, that at the meeting Koch had > outlined to the Board an approval request to make certain modifications to Mark Cole's compensation [14] arrangement. . . . After discussion, both the Compensation Committee and the Board approved Mr. Koch's request and authorized him to proceed with Mr. Cole, with the understanding that the changes > approved would not trigger an accounting charge based on modifications to the equity components of Mr. Cole's compensation package.

(Pl.'s Ex. 18, docket no. 122.) After the Board meeting, Koch contacted Cole and notified him that the Board had approved the terms of the March 25, 2004, agreement between Koch and Cole. (Cole Aff. P 60.) Koch testified:

> I believe I called Mark and told him that . . . we had made a presentation along the lines that had been discussed and that we would . . . turn the ball over to [*619] John Collins to prepare a contract for his--Mark's review, and I do recall Mark saying in that conversation, I thought maybe we would move pretty quickly, but I remember Mark saying it would need to be reviewed by his advisors and I said that, you know, okay, let's get it done as quick as we can.

(Koch Dep. 88-89.) Koch then instructed Collins to memorialize the terms of the agreement approved by the Board and to provide the confirmation to Cole. (Id.) On May 21, 2004, Koch sent a memo to [15] the Board indicating that Champion's legal department had sent a writing to Cole's "advisors" to "paper the deal" approved by the Board on April 27, 2004. (Pl.'s Ex. 264, docket no. 123, filed under seal.) In fact, by then Collins had still not prepared the paperwork documenting the Board's approval. On June 11, 2004, Champion's in-house counsel Jay Kreindler sent to Cole a draft document of certain employment terms that failed to embody the key components of the agreement approved by the Board on April 27, 2004. On July 20, 2004, Cole's counsel provided to Kreindler a black-lined version of Kreindler's June 11, 2004, draft. In the meantime, Champion had ended Koch's employment as Interim CEO on or about July 14, 2004, and replaced him with William C. Griffiths ("Griffiths") on or about August 1, 2004. (Am. Compl. P 43.) In August, Champion's legal department responded to the July 20, 2004, black-lined document, informing Cole that Champion was not willing to accept certain proposed terms in the black-lined draft. (Kreindler Dep. 111, 151-58, 175-76, Pl.'s Ex. I-1, docket no. 119; Pl.'s Exs. 100-01, docket no. 123.) For the remainder of August, the parties negotiated back and forth [16] through telephone and e-mail over various terms of Cole's employment without reaching a written agreement.

In September 2004, Griffiths announced to Cole and other managers of Champion Retail that Champion needed to exit or sell its retail business because retail was neither Champion's core business nor "a fit for Champion." (Am. Compl. P 44.) Following this announcement, Champion and SSH proposed that Cole purchase certain assets of SSH. In the ensuing discussions and negotiations, Champion and SSH sought to extract concessions from Cole as a condition to the sale of SSH assets concerning his entitlement to salary, bonus, performance shares, stock options, and other benefits of his employment. (Am. Compl. P 45.) On September 30, 2004, Cole's assistant faxed a "letter of intent" to Champion for Champion's review. (Collins Aff. P 45, docket no. 114.) The letter of intent addressed terms relating to many of the severance, noncompete, and benefits issues that had been the subject of negotiations between Cole's counsel and Champion's counsel since June 2004. On or about October 15, 2004, Champion and SSH gave Cole an ultimatum to purchase certain SSH assets on terms requiring him to relinquish [17] certain benefits; Cole declined. (Am. Compl. P 46.)

Champion terminated Cole's employment without cause on or about October 18, 2004. (Am. Compl. P 47.) At the time of his termination, Champion's human resource officers presented Cole with a separation agreement that would have required Cole to release Champion from all obligations, including all of the alleged obligations under Cole's agreement with Koch that the Board approved on April 27, 2004, in exchange for one year's salary. Cole did not sign the separation agreement. Cole notified Champion on or about October 28, 2004, that he was electing to be employed as a special assistant to Champion's Vice President of Marketing pursuant to the March 2004 Agreement. (Am. Compl. P 48, Ex. 5.) By letter dated November 2, 2004, Griffiths wrote back to Cole and told him that there was never an agreement between Cole and Champion. [*620] (Am. Compl. P 49, Ex. 6.) Griffiths also refused to employ Cole as a special assistant to Champion's Vice President of Marketing, and confirmed Cole's termination date. Cole contends that although several promising opportunities in the manufacturing industry were presented to him during the two years after his termination [18] of employment, he abided by the terms of the non-compete agreements and he stayed out of the manufactured housing industry. (Cole Aff. PP 91-93.) Cole maintains that he lost various investment opportunities due to Champion's stated position that it intended to enforce the non-competition agreements.

On the parties' motions for summary judgment, Cole contends: (1) that Champion violated the North Carolina Wage and Hour Act by failing to pay him various entitled compensation; (2) that Champion breached its contract to pay him various entitled compensation; (3) that Champion breached/repudiated its contract to hire and employ him as a special assistant to the Vice President of Marketing until the complete vesting of his benefits, following the termination of his employment without cause; (4) that the covenants not to compete from the 2001 stock option agreements are invalid and unenforceable; (5) that Champion and SSH's attempts to enforce the covenants not to compete constitute illegal restraints of trade for which Cole is entitled to recover treble damages under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1; and (6) that Champion violated ERISA by failing to pay him what was due under an oral severance plan [19] agreement.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN2[] Under Rule 56(c), summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c). HN3[] A party seeking summary judgment "bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the [record] which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). HN4[] Once the moving party has met its burden, the non-moving party must then "set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (quoting FED. R. CIV. P. 56(e)).

HN5[] In making a determination on a summary judgment motion, the court views the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, according that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Bailey v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Va., 67 F.3d 53, 56 (4th Cir. 1995). Mere [20] allegations and denials, however, are insufficient to establish a genuine issue of material fact. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). Judges are not "required to submit a question to a jury merely because some evidence has been introduced by the party having the burden of proof, unless the evidence be of such a character that it would warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of that party." Id. at 251 (citations omitted). Thus, the moving party can bear its burden either by presenting affirmative evidence or by demonstrating that the non-moving party's evidence is insufficient to establish its claim. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 331 (Brennan, J., dissenting). "[A] complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of [a plaintiff's] case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. With these principles [*621] in mind, the court will address the motions for summary judgment.

DISCUSSION

A. Whether Cole is Entitled to Recover on his Claims for Breach of Contract, Repudiation of Contract, and for Unpaid Wages under the North Carolina Wage and Hour Act

Cole claims that Champion violated the North Carolina Wage and Hour Act and breached [21] and repudiated a contract by failing to pay various entitled compensation owed to Cole. Since the Wage and Hour Act claim and the breach of contract/repudiation of contract claim are based on the same alleged facts, I will analyze these claims together. The court must first decide, however, which state's law applies to the breach of contract claim. In deciding non-federal questions, the court must apply North Carolina conflict of laws analysis to Cole's contract claims. Eli Research, Inc. v. United Commc'ns Group, LLC, 312 F. Supp. 2d 748, 754 (M.D.N.C. 2004). HN6[] Generally, North Carolina applies the doctrine of lex loci contractus, which means a contract is formed in the place at which the last act was done by either of the parties essential to a meeting of the minds. Id. Cole argues that the last act essential to the meeting of the minds was Cole's acceptance of the terms of the alleged contract between him and Koch at the Greensboro, North Carolina airport on March 25, 2004. Champion argues, on the other hand, that Michigan law controls because the Board had to give final approval to any compensation package given to Cole and the Board would have made that decision in Michigan. I agree [22] with Champion that Michigan law should control because the parties would not be bound by any terms of an alleged contract until the Board gave its approval, and the Board gave its approval in Michigan. In any event, there is no substantive difference in the law of contracts between North Carolina and Michigan. Thus, I will refer to both Michigan and North Carolina law in analyzing the breach of contract claims.

HN7[] The elements of a claim for breach of contract are the existence of a valid contract and a breach of the terms of that contract. See Johnson v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 173 N.C. App. 365, 369, 618 S.E.2d 867, 870 (2005). The intentions of the parties may be discerned from both their writings and their actions. Arndt v. First Union Nat'l Bank, 170 N.C. App. 518, 522, 613 S.E.2d 274, 278 (2005). HN8[] To be enforceable, the terms of a contract must be sufficiently definite and certain. Lassiter v. Bank of N.C., 146 N.C. App. 264, 269, 551 S.E.2d 920, 923 (2001). A contract leaving material portions open for future agreement is nugatory and void for indefiniteness. Boyce v. McMahan, 285 N.C. 730, 734, 208 S.E.2d 692, 695 (1974). HN9[] In addition to setting forth its terms with the [23] requisite level of certainty, to be enforceable a contract must contain an expression of mutual assent, or a meeting of the minds. See Volumetrics Med. Imaging, Inc. v. ATL Ultrasound, Inc., 243 F. Supp. 2d 386, 400 (M.D.N.C. 2003) ("There is no contract unless the parties thereto assent, and they must assent to the same thing, in the same sense."). "A meeting of the minds is judged by an objective standard, looking to the express words of the parties and their visible acts, not their subjective states of mind." Kamalnath v. Mercy Mem'l Hosp. Corp., 194 Mich. App. 543, 487 N.W.2d 499, 503 (Mich. Ct. App. 1992).

Furthermore, HN10[] where the evidence is sufficient to support plaintiff's contention that a definite oral agreement was made by the parties, the contract is complete even though the parties contemplated that they would ultimately reduce the agreement to writing. Williams v. Jones, 322 N.C. 42, 52, 366 S.E.2d 433, 440 [*622] (1988); *see also Dow Chem. Co. v. GE., No. 04-10275-BC, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40866, 2005 WL 1862418, at 32 (E.D. Mich. Aug. 4, 2005) (stating that a binding oral contract may exist even though the parties intend to reduce their agreement to a fully executed document). Nevertheless, if it appears that the [24] parties are merely negotiating to see if they can agree upon terms, and that the writing is to be a contract, then there is no contract until the writing is executed. Key Motorsports, Inc. v. Speedvision Network, L.L.C., 40 F. Supp. 2d 344, 347 (M.D.N.C. 1999). "If the parties intend to signal their agreement only by the execution of a written document and do not intend to be bound unless and until all parties sign, no amount of negotiation or oral agreement, no matter how specific, will result in the formation of a binding contract." *Dow Chem. Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40866, 2005 WL 1862418, at 32; *see also Manon v. Corp. Solutions, LLC, No. 04-73649, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35465, 2005 WL 3534765, at 6 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 23, 2005) (finding facts that parties worked on preparing final written documents and scheduled a closing to execute those documents demonstrated that no enforceable contract was entered into absent execution of a mutually agreeable and definitive written agreement). [3]

HN12[] The North Carolina Wage and Hour Act, N.C. GEN. STAT. § 95-25.1 et seq. ("Wage and Hour Act"), provides a private right of action to employees for recovery of unpaid wages owed, interest at the legal rate set forth in N.C. GEN. STAT. § 24-1, liquidated damages, and attorneys fees. N.C. GEN. STAT. § 95-25.22. The Wage and Hour Act defines "Wages" as > compensation for labor or services rendered by an employee whether determined on a time, task, piece, job, day, commission, or other basis of calculation . . . . HN13[] For the purposes of G.S. 95-25.6 through G.S. 95-25.13 'wage' includes sick pay, vacation pay, severance pay, commissions, bonuses, and other amounts promised when the employer has a policy or a practice of making such payments.

N.C. GEN. STAT. § 95-25.2(16). Moreover, section 95-25.7 [26] provides:

---

[3] Furthermore, HN11[] under Michigan law, in determining whether the parties intended to require a written document in order for a contract to be binding, a court applies the following factors: (1) whether the contract is of that class which are usually found to be [25] in writing; (2) whether it is of such nature as to need a formal writing for its full expression; (3) whether it has few or many details; (4) whether the amount involved is large or small; (5) whether it is a common or unusual contract; and (6) whether the negotiations themselves indicate that a written draft is contemplated as a final conclusion of the negotiations. *Dow Chem. Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40866, 2005 WL 1862418, at 33.

> HN14[] Employees whose employment is discontinued for any reason shall be paid all wages due on or before the next regular payday either through the regular pay channels or by mail if requested by the employee. Wages based on bonuses, commissions or other forms of calculation shall be paid on the first regular payday after the amount becomes calculable when a separation occurs. Such wages may not be forfeited unless the employee has been notified in accordance with G.S. 95-25.13 of the employer's policy or practice which results in forfeiture. Employees not so notified are not subject to such loss or forfeiture.

N.C. GEN. STAT. § 95-25.7.

Cole contends that Koch's presentation to Champion's Board on April 27, 2004, made clear that the request sought was designed to address Cole's concerns about his compensation and benefits in the event he was terminated without cause. In his summary judgment motion, Cole asserts that Koch sought and received Board approval regarding Cole's "wages" as follows [*623] and that Champion has failed to pay Cole these wages due:

> 1. The Board agreed to increase Cole's grant of restricted shares [performance shares] to 50,000 shares in 2004 if Cole reduced his target [27] bonus to 60%.
> 2. The Board agreed to protect Cole's "financial opportunity loss" of restricted shares [performance shares] and stock options if he was terminated without cause by employing him "in a different capacity" to prevent forfeiture of Cole's benefits and compensation.
> 3. The Board agreed to grant Cole a $ 20,000 salary increase to $ 300,000 after two profitable quarters. [4]

(Pl.'s Br. Supp. Summ. J. at 19-20.) First, with regard to the promise to continue to employ Cole to protect his equity interests, according to Cole, per the Agreement with Champion, in the event Cole was terminated without cause as President of Champion Retail, the equity pieces of his compensation would be due and payable to him on the targeted vesting dates, in order to "give Mark protection against economic equity value loss . . . ." (Pl.'s Ex. 17, docket no. 122.) Cole would continue with Champion in a different capacity for "about 10 days a year" as a mechanism designed to protect Cole's equity interests without having to amend the following equity plans: Champion's Deferred Compensation Plan; Champion's Corporate Officer's Stock Purchase Plan; Champion's 1995 Stock Option Plans (per the 2001 January [28] and September Stock Option Agreements) and the 2003/2004 Performance Share and Incentive Bonus grants. Thus, according to Cole, Champion entered into an Agreement to employ Cole for a definite term--until his equity pieces had vested at their targeted vesting dates. The latest equity component to vest was Cole's 2004 performance shares, which vested when Champion announced its 2006 earnings on a specified date in 2007. Cole contends that Champion cannot repudiate the contract simply because it stalled and failed to "paper" the deal, and Cole argues that all of the components of his compensation were promised "wages" within the meaning of N.C. GEN. STAT. § 95-25.2(16). Furthermore, Cole contends that the letter from CEO Griffiths to Cole in response to Cole's election to remain employed by Champion in a different capacity constituted a retroactive notice of a change in Cole's compensation, which is expressly prohibited by HN15[] N.C. GEN. STAT. § 95-25.13.3. See Hamilton v. Memorex Telex Corp., 118 N.C. App. 1, 11, 454 S.E.2d 278, 283 (1995) (stating that once an employee meets conditions for the receipt of benefits, an employer may not rescind).

Cole further contends that Champion tied Cole's 2004 bonus to the increase in Cole's 2004 performance share grant. According to Cole, Champion calculated Cole's 2004 prorated bonus following his termination without cause, but refused to pay him the amounts owed. (Collins 30(b)(6) Dep. 177-78, Pl.'s Ex. E, docket no. 119; Pl.'s Exs. 52, 53, 54, docket no. 122.) Finally, Cole contends that Champion owes him for a salary increase that was never effectuated. Cole notes that Champion [*624] was profitable during the second and third quarters of 2004.

---

[4] In the Amended Complaint, Cole alleged that [29] Champion failed to pay Cole the following, all of which constitute wages under N.C. GEN. STAT. 95-25.2(16): Cole's increased salary retroactive to January 2004; Cole's additional increases upon Champion experiencing two consecutive profitable quarters; Cole's bonus compensation for 2004 through and including the date of termination; Cole's vested performance shares; Cole's right to hold, as vested and not immediately exercisable, his stock option grants per the terms of the January and February 2001 stock option agreements; and severance benefits pursuant to a March 2004 agreement with Champion. (Am. Compl. P 62.)

(Griffiths Dep. 72, Pl.'s Ex. K, docket [30] no. 119; Knight Dep. 32-33, Pl.'s Ex. G, docket no. 119; Pl.'s Ex. 14, docket no. 122.) Moreover, at a Board meeting on September 14, 2004, while Cole was still employed by Champion, Champion's Board voted to abolish the voluntary salary reductions for executive officers. (Griffiths Dep. 217-19; Pl.'s Ex. 25, docket no. 122.) According to Cole, not only did Champion refuse to reinstate Cole's salary to the pre-reduction amount, Champion also refused to implement the salary increase agreed upon and approved by Champion's Board on April 27, 2004. Cole contends that Champion's willful refusal to pay Cole his agreed-upon compensation is the exact conduct the Wage and Hour Act is designed to prohibit. Cole further argues that Champion has produced no evidence that the Board changed Cole's compensation and provided the requisite notice to Cole after April 27, 2004. Cole contends that he is, therefore, entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this claim. In response, Champion contends that Cole has neither a claim under the N.C. Wage and Hour Act nor a claim for breach of contract.

Applying the above-stated law to the evidence on summary judgment, I find that there was never an enforceable [31] contract between the parties with the terms as alleged by Cole. First, because Cole was a named executive officer subject to the Securities Exchange Act, his compensation was set exclusively by the Board of Directors and the Compensation Committee of the Board. Cole's incentive compensation, which included his stock options, his annual incentive (bonus) and any performance shares, was administered by the Compensation Committee, pursuant to terms of the 1995 Stock Option and Incentive Plan. (Collins Aff. P 31, docket no. 114.) Thus, the Board, and not another executive officer, decided each officer's compensation. [5] Cole has not disputed that the Board is responsible for setting compensation for Champion's executive officers. Indeed, during Cole's employment, the Board, not management, made determinations regarding employment terms such as incentive grants, salary increases, and annual bonuses. (Collins Aff. P 35, docket no. 114.) Therefore, with regard to any of Cole's April 2003 discussions with Walt Young in a Las Vegas hotel room, Young had no authority to reach an agreement with Cole concerning the terms of his compensation. Indeed, Cole has admitted that his purported verbal agreement [32] with Young was "subject to board approval." Because the Board indisputably did not approve the "agreement" between Cole and Young, an express condition to the enforceability of the agreement was never fulfilled. *See BMS Natural Resources v. Krupp Lonrho Mining Corp. 74 F.3d 1230, 1996 WL 7988, at 2 (4th Cir. 1996)(unpublished) (applying HN16[] Michigan law, holding that where a contract contained a clear condition precedent--approval by defendant's board of directors--and where the condition was not met, plaintiff had no contract claim). Furthermore, Cole's claims relating to his discussions with Interim [*625] CEO Koch in 2004 suffer from the same legal deficiencies as his claims relating to discussions with Young in 2003. Koch, as Interim CEO, had no authority to set or revise the terms of Cole's salary, incentive compensation, or benefits and Cole knew this. Indeed, Cole has admitted that Koch told him twice that the Board would have to approve the terms of any compensation package because Cole was an executive officer. Thus, any argument by Cole that he reasonably believed that either Young or Koch had apparent authority to negotiate terms of Cole's employment on Champion's behalf has no [33] merit. See Estate of Redding v. Welborn, 170 N.C. App. 324, 331, 612 S.E.2d 664, 669 (2005) (HN17[] "A third party [Cole] acquires no rights against a principal [Champion] when the third party has either actual or constructive knowledge of what the principal has authorized his agent [Young] to do.").

Next, as to the terms that the Board approved at the April 27, 2004, Board meeting, I agree with Champion that the Board approval did not give rise to an enforceable [34] oral contract between Cole and Champion. First, although Board approval was certainly necessary to alter the terms of Cole's employment, the evidence in this case shows that the Board's approval alone was not sufficient to constitute an enforceable contract without further negotiations for several reasons. First, several of the terms proposed to the Board were simply too indefinite to be enforceable without further negotiations and clarification. Moreover, the alleged contract that Cole now seeks to enforce differs in concept fundamentally from what the Board actually considered and approved. As noted, at the Board meeting, Koch made a Power Point presentation, which contained the following outline of suggested changes to Cole's employment terms.

[5] As Champion notes, in the wake of Enron and other corporate governance scandals, HN18[] in July 2002 Congress enacted the Sarbanes Oxley Act, and the New York Stock Exchange began to consider, and later adopted, rules for listed companies that, among other things, required stricter oversight by the Board of executive management, a compensation committee comprised entirely of independent directors, the adoption of a charter for the compensation committee that specifically set out the committee's authority regarding executive compensation, the required adoption of corporate governance guidelines, and the disclosure of those guidelines and committee charters on the listed company's website. (See Defs.' Br. Supp. Mot. Summ. J. at 5-6, docket no. 121.)

APPROVAL REQUEST TO BOARD

. Increase Mark Cole salary by $ 20,000.
. Salary will increase to $ 300,000 after two profitable quarters (versus 285,000 now).

. Give Mark an option to: Retain current restricted stock (40,000 shares) and target bonus of 80%, or Take restricted stock of 50,000 shares and reduce target bonus to 60%
. Give Mark a change of control agreement

. If Cole is removed as President of Retail without cause, then: He may continue [35] as a CHC retailer with a different assignment requiring about 10 days per year. His salary would be reduced to approximately $ 20,000 to $ 30,000 per year. This will preserve Mark's existing restricted stock and option grants. Vesting would occur on targeted dates if he is still employed.

As for Cole's claim that Champion agreed that his options would be vested if he were fired without cause, this is not what the Board approved. The Board specifically approved the concept of maintaining Cole as an employee in a limited capacity so that his options could vest "on targeted dates if he is still employed." Cole's duties in "assisting" with Champion's "retail program" in a limited capacity as "advisor" or "facilitator" are never spelled out. Nor is the Power Point outline specific as to when or how often Cole would be required to perform this role, stating only that the duties will require "about 10 days per year." Although the Power Point slides speak of Cole choosing a higher cash bonus and a greater number of performance shares, there is no suggestion of when Cole might or must make an election. Finally, although the Board approved a $ 20,000 raise for Cole generally, there is no mention [36] of whether the raise would be retroactive as Cole contends. Thus, even after the Board's April 2004 approval, there were still many issues left [*626] open regarding the terms of Cole's continued employment with Champion. See Volumetrics, 243 F. Supp. 2d at 402 (detailing the lack of definitive terms, including "the parties' respective duties," in a document held not to be a contract and noting the parties' notion of incompleteness of the agreement).

Similarly, Cole's argument that the Board approved a definite term for his limited employment is without merit. Cole contends that the Board approved employing him in a limited capacity until his shares vested, which would occur in 2007. Cole maintains, therefore, that the Board approved retaining him as a Champion employee for a definite term (until 2007) so that his options could vest. The proposed terms that were presented to the Board, however, specifically stated that the Board approved of employing Cole in a limited capacity and that "[v]esting would occur on targeted dates if he is still employed." There is no evidence that the Board approved of retaining Cole as a limited employee for a definite term. See also Braun v. Glade Valley Sch., Inc., 77 N.C. App. 83, 89-90, 334 S.E.2d 404, 408 (1985)(stating [37] that there was no enforceable contract where the parties "never reached a mutual understanding as to salary, fringe benefits, length of employment, duties and responsibilities, or housing arrangements"). Thus, to the extent that Cole contends that the parties reached an agreement regarding a definite term of employment and that his options would vest upon being terminated without cause, the court finds no such agreement as a matter of law. Finally, the approval of a change of control agreement is also too indefinite to be enforced. [6] Beyond approving a change of control agreement generally, the Board specified absolutely no terms of such an agreement.

In addition, Cole contends that Champion is bound to several terms that were either never presented to the Board or that are fundamentally inconsistent with what the Board did approve. For instance, Cole claims that the oral contract [38] with Koch relieved him of his noncompetition agreements, but the Power Point slides are directly to the contrary. Furthermore, Cole contends that he was promised severance, but the Board never discussed

---

[6] HN19[] A "change in control" generally refers to a transfer of ownership in which a new person or entity obtains a fifty percent or greater ownership interest. Senior executive contracts often contain a change in control clause, which provides for certain protections in the event of a change of control in the company.

severance for Cole. Finally, as to Cole's allegations regarding his right to a prorated bonus, the Power Point presentation does not refer to any payment of a pro-rated bonus upon termination, and Cole has not shown that the Board ever approved such a bonus. Moreover, Cole's entitlement to an annual incentive bonus is derived from the 1995 Stock Option and Incentive Plan, which is administered by the Board's Compensation Committee. The Plan, however, clearly provides that employees terminated before the end of a fiscal year are not entitled to an annual incentive for the year. (See Collins Aff. & Ex. O, docket no. 114.) Thus, Cole has simply failed to raise an issue of fact as to whether Champion ever promised him certain benefits that would constitute wages under the North Carolina Wage and Hour Act. [7]

[*627] Moreover, the objective conduct of the parties demonstrates that all parties contemplated that, notwithstanding the Board's approval, the terms of Cole's employment would need to be finalized in a written agreement. For instance, Champion's legal department sent the first draft of an employment [40] agreement to Cole on or around June 11, 2004. (Collins Aff. P 41, docket no. 114.) Upon receiving the draft, Cole's counsel did not reject the draft as an inappropriate modification of an already binding oral agreement. Instead, counsel thanked Champion's counsel for sending him the draft. (Id.) The draft contained a merger clause stating that the written agreement would constitute the "sole agreement" between the parties, and Cole's counsel never objected to that provision. Indeed, at no time during the ongoing negotiations did Cole's counsel Barrett ever take the position that Cole already had an oral contract relating to Cole's benefit and employment claims that would be enforceable without being put into writing and approved by the Board. (Kreindler Aff. P 16, docket no. 115.)

I further note that well after the April 2004 Board approval, the parties continued to negotiate the terms of Cole's employment by sending proposed modifications back and forth, and there is no evidence that Cole behaved as if the Board's approval to his salary increase was effective on the date that the Board gave approval to an increase. That is, after the April meeting, Cole did not go to the payroll department [41] and ask why his salary had not been increased, nor did he inquire as to where his additional performance shares were. Nor did he complain, between April and his termination in October 2004, to anyone at Champion about the implementation of an alleged oral agreement to raise his salary. Rather, in response to the June draft sent by Champion's counsel on July 20, 2004, Cole's counsel submitted a black-lined "revision" and "modification" to Champion's draft. Many of Cole's proposed revisions were not only significant, but also they were irreconcilable with the agreement that he says the Board approved. (See Kreindler Aff. PP 10-13, docket no. 115.) For instance, in the black-lined agreement that Barrett prepared on Cole's behalf and forwarded to Champion's legal department on July 20, 2004, Cole proposed the following changes that were not initially acceptable to Champion: (1) Cole's ability to be an officer of another company while employed with Champion without Champion's prior approval; (2) removing Champion's discretion from the determination of profitability in Section 4(a); (3) removing the reduction in incentive compensation while retaining the increase in performance shares; (4) [42] immediate vesting of Cole's performance shares were he to be removed as President, Retail Operations; (5) modifying the term of Cole's employment as Special Assistant; (6) retaining full benefits during his part-time employment as Special Assistant; (7) the ability to operate one sales location at any location without Champion's approval while employed as Special Assistant; and (8) the removal of the stocking requirement for Champion-built homes. (Kreindler Aff. P 9 & Ex. F, docket no. 115.)

After Champion received the black-lined draft, negotiations between the parties continued, with attorney Kreindler handling [*628] the negotiations with Cole's attorney Barrett. (Collins Aff. P 43, docket no. 114.) By August 31, 2004, Barrett and Kreindler had communicated by telephone and e-mail in an attempt to negotiate Cole's employment agreement. Champion rejected and was not willing to negotiate the following significant changes that Barrett had made to the proposed employment agreement: (1) Cole's ability to be an officer of another company while employed with Champion without Champion's prior approval; (2) removing the reduction in incentive compensation while retaining the increase in performance [43] shares; (3) the immediate vesting of his performance shares were he to be removed as President, Retail Operations; (4) retaining full benefits during his part-time employment as Special Assistant; (5) the ability to operate one sales location at any location without Champion's approval while employed as Special Assistant; and (6) the removal of the stocking requirement for Champion-built homes. (Kreindler Aff. P 10, docket no. 115.) Kreindler communicated to Barrett that these items were unacceptable to Champion, and Barrett and Kreindler discussed alternative proposals for each party to consider. For instance, Champion indicated to Cole that it was willing to discuss five open items, some of which arose from the alternative proposals discussed during negotiations. [8] On September 2, 2004, Kreindler sent an e-mail to Barrett, responding to questions Barrett had asked Kreindler about two of the five open issues that Champion was willing to discuss, including the cost of COBRA benefits and whether Cole's employment as a Special Assistant would constitute employment under the terms of Champion's deferred compensation plans. Kreindler informed Barrett in the e-mail that he was waiting from [44] Collins on two of the other issues Champion was willing to discuss. (Kreindler Aff. P 12, docket no. 115.) Ultimately, the parties never reached a written agreement before Cole was terminated in October 2004.

---

[7] In addition, as Champion notes, as to certain alleged wages, such as his alleged right to a bonus, Cole's Wage and Hour Act claim is fatally deficient because he is attempting to transform [39] alleged contractual damages into a claim for wages under the Act. HN20[] The N.C. Wage and Hour Act protects employees from being denied payment of earned wages. See Hamilton, 118 N.C. App. at 8, 454 S.E.2d at 282. Thus, the Act only requires an employer to pay those wages and benefits due when the employee has actually performed the work required to earn them. Narron v. Hardee's Food Sys., Inc., 75 N.C. App. 579, 583, 331 S.E.2d 205, 208 (1985). Since at the time of his October 18, 2004, termination, Cole had not performed the work required to earn the wages and bonuses he alleges, any possible remedy could only lie in breach of contract, not the Wage and Hour Act. The same is true for his claim under the Act related to his alleged right to "performance shares" and Champion's alleged promise to allow him to continue working for Champion in a limited capacity so that his equity interests could vest.

The black-lined revision of the June draft constituted a counteroffer that operated as a rejection of an offer extended by Champion. HN21[] Under both North Carolina and Michigan law, when a party makes a counteroffer, the original offer has been rejected and ceases to exist. See Normile v. Miller, 313 N.C. 98, 106, 326 S.E.2d 11, 17 (N.C. 1985); Kashat v. Prangs, 16 Mich. App. 76, 167 N.W.2d 603, 604 (Mich. Ct. App. 1969). Moreover, the September 2004 letter of intent from Cole to Champion contained proposals concerning Cole's compensation that were fundamentally inconsistent with the concept approved by the Board at its April 27 meeting. (Collins Aff. P 45, docket no. 114.) For instance, Cole presented the following terms concerning his compensation in the September 30, 2004, letter of intent: (1) a stock grant of 50,000 [*629] shares (in lieu of performance shares vesting over time); (2) immediate exercisability of all stock options; (3) the ability to exercise stock options at any time until the stated expiration date; (4) immediate vesting of deferred compensation; [46] and (5) immediate release from all noncompetition terms. (Kreindler Aff. P 14 & Ex. H, docket no. 115.) Each of these requests was inconsistent with the concept outlined in the Power Point and the "agreement" that Cole contends that the parties had entered into. Furthermore, the proposal included additional terms that were not discussed in the Board materials or presentation from April 2004, including payment of certain retroactive salary amounts, payment of a $ 300,000 severance benefit, and payment of a pro-rated annual incentive based on a 9-month calculation period. (Collins Aff. P 45, docket no. 114.) The letter of intent also specifically stated that "the parties recognize again that this letter is intended to set forth a proposal . . . and . . . does not create any binding obligations." After Cole sent the letter of intent, the parties continued to negotiate on the proposed asset purchase and the various employment issues, with at least one more draft going back and forth, until Champion ultimately decided to terminate Cole's employment in October. (Kreindler Aff. P 15-17, docket no. 115.) Given the ongoing negotiations during the Summer of 2004, Cole's own objective conduct [47] in this case demonstrates that he did not consider the terms that were presented to the Board to constitute a binding oral agreement.

---

[8] These items included the following: (1) as an alternative to the immediate vesting of Cole's performance shares if he were removed as President, Retail Operations, Barrett asked if Champion would consider alternative corporate-based benchmarks to replace the retail benchmarks in Cole's performance shares award; (2) modifying the term of Cole's employment as Special Assistant through early 2007 so that more potential performance shares and other equity compensation could vest; (3) as an alternative to full benefits during his part-time employment as Special Assistant, whether Champion was willing to allow Cole to pay for those benefits under COBRA; (4) as an alternative to no stocking requirement, whether Champion would consider lowering the percentage from 80% to 50%; and (5) as an alternative to the immediate vesting of Cole's performance shares if he were removed as President, Retail Operations, whether Champion would confirm that Cole's employment as Special Assistant would [45] constitute employment under the terms of Champion's compensation plans and would not trigger a distribution. (Kreindler Aff. P 10, docket no. 115.)

In sum, I find that application of the following factors compels a conclusion that the parties intended a written agreement to govern any agreement regarding Cole's employment terms: (1) by virtue of the SEC rules alone, contracts with named executive officers are virtually always in writing; (2) the Power Point presentation was incomplete and the agreements and associated incentive compensation plans were complicated and detailed; (3) the amounts of Cole's incentive compensation, particularly if Champion's stock price rose, were significant; (4) the contract was novel and complicated; and (5) the parties indisputably--and without registering objection--negotiated, albeit unsuccessfully, the written agreements reflecting Cole's new arrangement. Moreover, all of Cole's prior employment agreements with Champion were reduced to writing and signed by Cole; the employment arrangement contemplated by the parties was unusual and "complicated"; Cole has admitted that from the time that discussions began with Champion about compensation, Cole contemplated that [48] the agreements would be put into writing; Cole's own notes reveal that in July 2003, Collins--Champion's general counsel at the time--explained that any agreement about the terms and conditions of Cole's compensation needed to be in writing; Koch informed Cole that Champion's legal department would be preparing a writing for Cole's review; and during negotiations Cole's attorneys sent back substantial and substantive black-lined comments, but they never suggested that some "oral agreement" was already in place. These undisputed facts all demonstrate the existence of ongoing negotiations, rather than a "mere memorial" of an already agreed-upon contract. See, e.g., Key Motorsports, Inc., 40 F. Supp. 2d at 347-48 ("The exchange of letters between the parties here indicates that issues remained open for negotiation after the [alleged oral contract] meeting."). For all these reasons, I find that there was no enforceable contract according to the terms alleged by Cole. [9] In sum, viewed [*630] objectively, neither of the parties' actions evidence an intent to bind Champion to an employment agreement involving millions of dollars in wages, bonuses, and stock options based on a bullet-point sketch [49] in the form of Power Point slides. Thus, it will be recommended that the court grant summary judgment to Champion as to Cole's breach of contract and N.C. Wage and Hour Act claims.

B. Whether Cole is Entitled to Severance Benefits under an Alleged March 2004 Oral Severance Agreement Between the Parties Pursuant to ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B)

In its prior motion to dismiss, Champion sought the dismissal of Cole's North Carolina Wage and Hour Act and breach of contract claims based on grounds of ERISA preemption. The court, in adopting the Recommendation [50] of the undersigned on Champion's motion to dismiss, ruled that Cole had sufficiently alleged that the parties had entered into an oral agreement in 2004 for Champion to provide Cole with a severance plan. The court also ruled that the alleged March 2004 oral severance plan constitutes an employee welfare benefit plan under ERISA. The court further held that the N.C. Wage and Hour Act claim regarding the alleged severance plan was preempted by ERISA, but that it should be treated as a federal claim under ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B). On summary judgment, Champion and SSH now argue that the undisputed facts show that Cole and Champion never entered into an enforceable agreement for a severance plan. Cole argues, on the other hand, that Koch and Cole entered into an oral agreement on March 25, 2004, in which Koch, acting on behalf of Champion, agreed that Cole would receive the same severance benefits that Champion was developing for all of Champion's Rule 16(b) officers. Cole further contends that the severance plan met all the requirements for it to constitute an "informal" severance plan under ERISA. According to Cole, Koch assured him that the severance plan would be in place [51] by July 2004. Cole further contends that Koch also told him that the severance benefits would be comprised of salary continuations for at least one year and probably for longer than a year.

[9] Champion contends additionally that, to the extent there was an oral contract, Michigan's statute of frauds bars Cole's contract claims because Cole has alleged that he was promised to be employed for a term of 3 years. HN22[] Under Michigan law, contracts that, by their terms, cannot be completed within a year from their making are subject to Michigan's statute of frauds. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 566.132(1)(a) (applying specifically to "[a]n agreement that, by its terms, is not to be performed within 1 year from the making of the agreement"). Since there was no oral contract to begin with, there is no need to address the statute of frauds argument.

It is undisputed that Champion's compensation officer Graskamp had been working on putting together severance agreements for Champion's Rule 16(b) officers but, due to Champion's delay, those agreements were not in place in July 2004. The Executive Officer Severance Pay Plan was not ready to go until September 13, 2004, and Graskamp presented the plan to Champion's Compensation Committee and Board in a meeting held on September 14, 2004. (Pl.'s Ex. 235, docket no. 123, filed under seal.) During the September 14 meeting, Graskamp learned that Cole was to be fired and scratched Cole's name off of the list of proposed participants of the severance plan. (Graskamp Dep. 290-92, Pl.'s Ex. H, docket no. 119.) Furthermore, at the same meeting, Griffiths obtained Board approval to terminate Cole's employment. Champion did not adopt the severance plan at the September 14, 2004, meeting. Instead, the plan was not adopted until November 22, 2004, after Cole was fired, with an effective date of December 1, 2004. [52] Cole contends, nevertheless, [*631] that he should have received all of the benefits in the Executive Officer Severance Pay Plan which he was unlawfully deprived of by Champion's termination of his employment without cause on October 18, 2004. Cole contends that the Executive Officer Severance Pay Plan was clearly developed and the terms known at the time of Cole's termination. Cole contends, moreover, that these benefits had been promised to Cole on March 25, 2004, and based on this promise Cole agreed to remain employed by Champion.

The undisputed facts show that Cole is not entitled to any severance benefits. First, Cole's alleged promises about severance benefits came from individuals who had no authority to establish the severance plans. That is, regardless of Koch's alleged promises to Cole in March 2004 about the severance plan, it is undisputed that neither the Board nor the Compensation Committee approved any severance promise made by Koch. Furthermore, although the Board did adopt a severance plan in December 2004, Cole undisputably was not a participant in that plan, as his employment had already been terminated when the plan became operative. [10] Moreover, the "severance promises" [53] that Cole seeks to enforce are far too vague and indefinite to give rise to a colorable claim for ERISA benefits. See generally Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Bruch, 489 U.S. 101, 117, 109 S. Ct. 948, 103 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1989) (stating that HN23[] for a former employee to have standing as a "participant," he must expect to return to covered employment or have a colorable claim to vested benefits); McNabb v. Mich. Consol Gas Co., 656 F. Supp. 866, 868 (E.D. Mich. 1987) (stating that "without a definite promise from" an employer, the employer was not bound to pay benefits; there is no obligation when the plan "contain[s] no 'statement which could conceivably be read as creating an obligation on the part of [the employer] to provide . . . benefits'"). That is, by Cole's own testimony, the terms of the severance plan were not known when Koch made his "severance promise." (See Cole Dep. 305 ("We had not reached agreement on the exact terms of that severance issue." [11])) Cole cannot create an enforceable right to severance benefits simply by relying on Koch's "predictions" as to the amount of severance benefits that would be payable under the plan then being developed by the Board's compensation consultant. Furthermore, Young's [54] alleged brief reference in 2003 to Cole "having" a year's severance--without discussing the way in which the benefits would be paid, the conditions for their receipt, any definition of "cause," and any obligation of mitigation--cannot constitute the kind of definite promise to give rise to a claim for benefits under ERISA. See Wickman v. Northwestern Nat'l Ins. Co., 908 F.2d 1077, 1082 (1st Cir. 1990).

Finally, [55] it is undisputed that Champion offered Cole one year's salary as a severance payment after he was terminated. Although the severance package that was ultimately offered to Cole, but which Cole [*632] rejected, carried with it an obligation to sign a release, the same release is required by the severance benefit plan that Champion adopted for its Rule 16(b) officers in December 2004. For all these reasons, it will be recommended that the court find that the parties had not entered into an enforceable agreement for Cole to participate in a severance plan.

---

[10] Cole argues, alternatively, that Koch promised a severance plan that was independent of the Executive Officer Severance Pay Plan developed by Graskamp. Cole testified in his deposition, however, that Koch told him that he was going to be part of the plan being developed by Graskamp. (Cole Dep. 73.) Cole was clear that he was not being promised some "separate" severance agreement from other senior management. (Cole Dep. 72-73.) Thus, the only "severance benefit plan" that Koch discussed was the plan the Board adopted in December, after Cole's termination.

[11] Indeed, as Champion notes, Cole himself stopped short of claiming that he and Koch had "a deal" regarding severance. Cole testified only that Koch told him he would be included in the plan under development. (Cole Dep. 72.)

C. Whether Champion's Alleged Enforcement of the Noncompete Agreements Constituted an Illegal Restraint on Trade under N.C. GEN. STAT. § 75-1

Next, Cole is seeking a declaratory judgment from the court that the covenants not to compete that Cole entered into in the 2001 stock option agreements are invalid and unenforceable because their terms are unreasonable restraints on trade. When Cole filed his amended complaint in July 2005 seeking a declaratory judgment regarding the enforceability of the covenants, the covenants were still operative. By their own terms, however, both of those covenants expired in October 2006, which was two years after [56] Cole's employment was terminated in October 2004. Thus, the court agrees with Champion that Cole's request for a declaratory judgment regarding the reasonableness of the covenants is moot. See 10B CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & ARTHUR R. MILLER, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2757 (3d ed. 1998) (HN24[] "[A] declaratory judgment cannot be given, if a matter has become moot.").

Cole, nevertheless, has asked the court to find that the covenants were unreasonable in order to further his argument that he is entitled to damages based on Champion's alleged violations of HN25[] North Carolina's Chapter 75, which, inter alia, prohibits illegal restraints of trade and which provides for treble damages. [12] More specifically, North Carolina's restraint of trade statute provides that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in the State of North Carolina is hereby declared to be illegal . . . ." N.C. GEN. STAT. § 75-1. In [57] response, Champion has argued that the terms of the covenants were reasonable and, in any event, Champion is entitled to summary judgment on Cole's Chapter 75 restraint of trade claim. For the following reasons, I agree with Champion.

HN26[] "A covenant not to compete is 'basically an agreement in restraint of trade.'" *Market Am., Inc. v. Rossi, No. 1:97CV891, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9793, 1999 WL 1939247, at 20 (M.D.N.C. Apr. 15, 1999) (quoting Wilmar, Inc. v. Liles, 13 N.C. App. 71, 74, 185 S.E.2d 278, 280 (1971)). "'However, [North Carolina] courts have recognized the rule that a covenant not to compete is enforceable in equity' in some circumstances." Id. (quoting Starkings Court Reporting Servs., Inc. v. Collins, 67 N.C. App. 540, 541, 313 S.E.2d 614, 615 (1984)). A covenant not to compete is generally enforceable and not in restraint of trade only if it is (1) in writing; (2) made part of a contract of employment; (3) based on valuable consideration; (4) reasonable both as to time and territory; and (5) designed to protect a legitimate business interest of the employer. Okuma Am. Corp. v. Bowers, 181 N.C. App. 85, 638 S.E.2d 617, 620 (N.C. Ct. App. 2007). When considering [58] the enforceability of a covenant not to compete, a court examines the reasonableness of its time and geographic restrictions, balancing the substantial right of the employee to work with that of the employer to protect its legitimate business interests. Id. at 618. The covenants at issue state that Cole, for two years after his termination of employment, could not

> [*633] directly or indirectly . . . as owner, partner, joint venturer, employee, broker, agent, principal, trustee, corporate officer, licensor, consultant, or in any capacity whatsoever, engage in, become financially interested in, or have any connection with, any business located in the United States or Canada engaged in the production, sales, financing, insuring, or marketing of manufactured homes or the development of manufactured housing parks.

(Am. Compl. PP 18, 22, Exs. 3,4.) In arguing that the covenants are not enforceable, Cole contends that the covenants do not protect a legitimate business interest and, furthermore, that they are overbroad. Cole notes that Champion completely divested from its traditional retail housing operations in mid-2005 and that Champion divested from its financing company in 2003 and from its manufactured [59] housing development division in 2005. Cole also notes that while working for the company, Cole was President of Champion Retail, and he did not have responsibility for Champion's manufacturing or other divisions. Cole asserts that the covenants are too broad to protect a legitimate business purpose, particularly considering Champion's divestiture of its retail division. See, e.g., VisionAIR, Inc. v. James, 167 N.C. App. 504, 606 S.E.2d 359 (2004) (holding that broad restrictions to areas beyond similar work performed were invalid); Hartman v. W.H. Odell & Assocs., Inc., 117 N.C. App. 307, 317,450 S.E.2d 912, 920 (1994) (holding that a covenant stating that an employee "may not 'own, manage, lease control, operate, participate, consult or assist' any 'entity' that provides 'actuarial services'" was overbroad and therefore not enforceable).

---

[12] See N.C. GEN. STAT. § 75-16 (providing for treble damages).

In response, Champion contends that the terms of the noncompetition agreements were entirely reasonably and the noncompetes were therefore enforceable against Cole. Champion notes that it did not immediately sell all of its traditional retail lots upon Cole's termination in October 2004 and that Champion retained significant traditional retail operations [60] of its own through July 2005. (Collins Aff. PP 14-15, docket no. 114.) Champion further argues that even though it sold the traditional retail operations that it had owned, that Champion still retains a retail business in California with revenues exceeding $ 100 million a year and that Cole, as President of Retail, had direct responsibility for that business. Champion further contends that as a wholesaler it cannot be successful if its retail buyers dry up and that the vast majority of Champion's revenues, even when Company-owned retail was at its zenith, have been through independent dealers. (Id. P 18.) Champion contends that, for these reasons, Champion retained a valid interest in keeping an individual who ran its nationwide retail operations out of the traditional retail market for a reasonable period of time. According to Champion, Cole's entrance into the retail market on behalf of a competitor could easily threaten Champion's core business of selling product to retailers. Champion contends that not only does Cole have substantial resources, but he also has extensive, intimate, and confidential knowledge about virtually all aspects of Champion's business, derived from his receipt [61] of detailed financial information, receipt of regular reports from the Company's CEO and CFO, and his participating in senior management meetings. (Collins Aff. PP 12, 18, 25-29, docket no. 114.) Champion contends that, for this reason alone, the noncompete agreements are enforceable against Cole.

Champion has sufficiently shown that the covenants not to compete were reasonably drafted to protect Champion's legitimate interests and they were, therefore, enforceable before they expired on their [*634] own terms. [13] In any event, Champion is not trying to enforce the covenants not to compete since they have expired on their terms. Rather, the parties have asked for a ruling on the issue of reasonableness on the assumption that it affects Cole's Chapter 75 restraint of trade claim. Even if I were to find, however, that the covenants at issue were unreasonable as to time, territory, etc., for the following reasons I would still find that Cole cannot recover damages for a Chapter 75 claim based on illegal restraint of trade.

HN27[] N.C. GEN. STAT. § 75-1 "was based upon section one of the Sherman Act." Rose v. Vulcan Materials Co., 282 N.C. 643, 655, 194 S.E.2d 521, 530 (1973). Accordingly, "the body of law applying the Sherman Act, although not binding upon [a court] in applying G.S. § 75-1, is nonetheless instructive." Id.; see also Sewell Plastics, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 720 F. Supp. 1196, 1220 (W.D.N.C. 1989) (applying an identical analysis in dismissing both the Sherman Act and N.C. GEN. STAT. § 75-1 claims), aff'd, 912 F.2d 463 (4th Cir. 1990). Consistent with federal antitrust law and in order to recover damages for an unenforceable noncompete under North Carolina antitrust law, Cole must prove both adverse impact and "antitrust injury." The requirement of "antitrust injury" reflects [63] the oft-stated principle that the antitrust laws "were enacted for the 'protection of competition, not competitors.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). To prove "antitrust injury," an antitrust plaintiff must prove "more than mere individual injury." *Patel v. Scotland Memorial Hosp., No. 3:94CV284, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5258, 1995 WL 319213, at 5 (M.D.N.C. Mar. 31, 1995), aff'd, 91 F.3d 132, 1996 WL 383920 (4th Cir. 1996); see also Rose, 282 N.C. at 656, 194 S.E.2d at 530-31 (observing that actionable antitrust violations require "broad . . . interfere[nce] with the interest of the public");

[13] Moreover, the covenants not to compete specifically state that > [i]f any one o[r] more of the terms contained [in the noncompetition agreement] shall for any reason be held [62] to be excessively broad with regard to time, duration, geographic scope, or activity, that term shall be construed in a matter to enable it to be enforced to the maximum extent compatible with applicable law.

Thus, the terms of the noncompetition agreements specifically authorize the court to remove any unreasonable terms in the agreements so that the agreements could, nevertheless, be enforced with the reasonable terms intact.

NORTH CAROLINA LAW OF DAMAGES § 29-5 (5th ed. 2006) ("[N.C. GEN. STAT. § 75-1] was based upon section one of the Sherman Act and requires a prejudice to the public interest on a broad basis, not just action affording a fair protection to the parties, to be actionable.").

Furthermore, because the noncompetition provision that Cole challenges is contained in a stock option agreement, his antitrust claim is necessarily analyzed under a "rule of reason." The United States Supreme Court has stated that HN28[] the rule of reason is the [64] "standard for testing the enforceability of covenants in restraint of trade which are ancillary to a legitimate transaction, such as an employment contract." Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 689, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978); see also Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255, 269 (7th Cir. 1981) (applying rule of reason to antitrust claim based on employee noncompete agreements). Under the rule of reason, a party must show an adverse effect on competition as a whole within the relevant market. See R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Philip Morris Inc., 199 F. Supp. 2d 362, 380 (M.D.N.C. 2002); Stearns v. Genrad, Inc., 564 F. Supp. 1309, 1315 & 1318 [*635] (M.D.N.C. 1983). Therefore, a non-competition covenant may be unreasonable between the parties, yet still not violate a state's antitrust laws if the plaintiff cannot show an adverse effect on competition as a whole within the relevant market. As another state's supreme court has succinctly explained in discussing the rule of reason:

> Until recently, there were few attempts to apply antitrust law to post-employment noncompetition agreements. HN29[] There can be little doubt that the Sherman Act applies to such agreements. However, it appears that [65] no such noncompetition agreement has ever been held to violate the Sherman Act. One explanation for this absence of precedent may be the difficulty involved in proving that a post-employment noncompetition agreement violates the Sherman Act. Such agreements are not per se violations of the Sherman Act but must be analyzed under the rule of reason. To establish a violation under the rule of reason, one must prove that the agreement has an adverse effect on competition in the relevant market. This is distinguished from the effect a post-employment noncompetition agreement has on the particular employer and employee involved. Rule of reason analysis under antitrust laws must not be confused with reasonableness analysis under the common law. Rule of reason analysis tests the effect of a restraint of trade on competition. By contrast, whether a noncompetition agreement is reasonable depends upon its effect on the parties, the competitors, as it were. The two standards are not directly related. An agreement may be reasonable as between the parties and nevertheless violate antitrust laws. Conversely, an agreement may be unreasonable as between the parties and yet not violate the rule of reason [66] test under the antitrust laws.

DeSantis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 687-88 (Tex. 1990) (citations omitted) (emphasis in original); see also 54A AM. JUR. 2d Monopolies § 841 (2007) (stating that HN30[] "[e]ven an unreasonable covenant not to compete does not necessarily violate the [states'] antitrust laws; to constitute such a violation, there must be an adverse effect on the relevant market").

Moreover, as the Fourth Circuit has emphasized, HN31[] "[t]he antitrust laws were not intended . . . as a vehicle for converting business tort claims into antitrust causes of action." Oksanen v. Page Mem'l Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 711 (4th Cir. 1991). In Oksanen, the Fourth Circuit specifically "affirm[ed] the district court's . . . refusal to cloak in federal antitrust law what is in essence a workplace dispute." Id. at 699. The court reasoned that the plaintiff could not make out a federal antitrust claim "merely by showing that it caused him an economic injury" and stated that "[i]f the law were otherwise, many a . . . workplace grievance . . . would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action." Id. at 708. The court went on to hold that "[b]ecause [plaintiff] has failed to establish his restraint [67] of trade and monopoly claims under federal law, his state law antitrust claims likewise fail." Id. at 710. Accord Patel, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5258, 1995 WL 319213, at *5 (where a hospital's actions allegedly "destroyed" the plaintiff's medical practice, dismissing the plaintiff's federal and state antitrust claims because the plaintiff "failed to allege a cognizable antitrust injury" instead of a "mere individual injury," where there was no evidence of an effect of the hospital's actions on competition in the relevant market).

Cole cannot show an adverse effect on competition by merely showing that he was unreasonably restrained from competing with Champion. [14] The court agrees [*636] with Champion that keeping one individual out of the highly competitive and disperse mobile home market does not rise to the level necessary to show an antitrust violation. Rather, Cole must prove an adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market, which he has failed to do; thus, Cole has not established the required antitrust injury. [15] Accord Stearns, 564 F. Supp. 1309, 1315 (granting summary judgment to the defendant on the plaintiff's Sherman Act and section 75-1 claims where the plaintiff "made no attempt to show [68] any adverse effect upon competition in any relevant market. . . . [Plaintiff] made no study or other analysis of the other competitors in the market, or to what extent, if any, overall competition has been impaired as a result of the alleged restrictions."). Finally, I note that Cole's sole claims of damages based on "exclusion" from the market are personal investment losses he supposedly suffered. Cole has not shown, however, that he took any steps to do that which he now claims Champion unlawfully restrained him from doing during the two-year period after termination of his employment. HN32[] An essential aspect of an antitrust claim is that the plaintiff must show "an intention and capacity to compete" against the defendant. United Roasters, Inc. v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 485 F. Supp. 1041, 1049 (E.D.N.C. 1979). To be sure, Cole maintains that he turned down several potentially lucrative investment opportunities during the two-year period before the noncompetes expired, but HN33[] a prospective plaintiff cannot simply imagine a venture he might have undertaken in order to recover on an antitrust claim. See generally Hayes v. Solomon, 597 F.2d 958, 974, 976-77 (5th Cir. 1979) (holding that when [69] facts showed "how far the proposed shopping center was from realization," plaintiffs could not recover antitrust damages for support "frustration of so ethereal a project"). For all these reasons, it will be recommended that the court grant summary judgment to Champion and SSH as to Cole's Chapter 75 restraint of trade claim.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, it is RECOMMENDED that the court GRANT summary judgment to Champion and SSH (docket no. 113) as to all of Cole's claims. It necessarily follows that Cole's own motion for summary judgment (docket no. 116) should be DENIED.

WALLACE W. DIXON

UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

June 5, 2007

End of Document

---

[14] Indeed, as Champion has pointed out, allowing Cole to prove a restraint of trade claim based on single injury alone would not only trivialize the antitrust laws, elevating mere workplace grievances to the status of an antitrust action, but http://vikings.kfan.com/sports/nflguide/default.aspxit would also turn the ever-changing field of noncompete law into a high-stakes gamble for employers, who could potentially face criminal sanctions under federal anti-trust laws for attempting to enforce a noncompete agreement that a court subsequently declares to be overbroad.

[15] Champion argues, alternatively, that North Carolina's restraint of trade statute does not even apply because Michigan, not North Carolina, bears the "most significant relationship" to the covenants not to compete. The court need not delve into the choice of law issue because, even assuming that the Michigan statute applies, Champion is entitled to summary [70] judgment on the restraint of trade claim.

LexisNexis®

Kessel v. Monongalia County Gen. Hosp. Co.

Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia

February 27, 2007, Submitted; June 6, 2007, Filed

No. 33096

Reporter

220 W. Va. 602 *; 648 S.E.2d 366 ; 2007 W. Va. LEXIS 52 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,755

James S. Kessel, M.D., Richard M. Vaglienti, M.D., and Stanford J. Huber, M.D., Plaintiffs Below, Appellants v. Monongalia County General Hospital Company, d/b/a Monongalia General Hospital, a West Virginia non-profit corporation, Mark Bennett, M.D., individually, Bennett Anesthesia Consultants, P.L.L.C. and Professional Anesthesia Services, Inc., Defendants Below, Appellees, Subsequent History: Dissenting Opinion by Justice Starcher Filed June 29, 2007.

Prior History: [*1] Appeal from the Circuit Court of Monongalia County. The Honorable Russell M. Clawges, Jr., Judge. Civil Action No. 00-C-131.

Kessel v. Monongalia County Gen. Hosp. Co., 215 W. Va. 609, 600 S.E.2d 321, 2004 W. Va. LEXIS 32 (2004)

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

anti trust law, Sherman Act, per se violation, federal law, comparable, restraint of trade, antitrust statute, Appellants', provisions, contracts, interpreting, Antitrust, courts, circuit court, legislative rule, anesthesia, prices, Contractor, commerce, competitors, harmony, bid, conspiracy, regulation, partial summary judgment, judicial interpretation, price-fixing, depart, legislative intent, court's decision

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > General Overview

HN1[] State Regulation, Claims

Simply because a public or quasi-public hospital is prohibited, under West Virginia law, from entering into an exclusive contract with certain service providers does not automatically result in that same contract violating West Virginia antitrust laws. Violation of antitrust laws constitutes a separate legal inquiry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN2[] State Regulation, Claims

See W. Va. Code § 47-18-3.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN3[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Appellate review of a partial summary judgment order is the same as that of a summary judgment order, which is de novo. An appellate court will affirm the grant of summary judgment if, from the totality of the evidence presented, the record could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, such as where the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of the case that it has the burden to prove.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Where the issue on appeal is clearly a question of law or involving an interpretation of a statute, an appellate court applies a de novo standard of review.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Pursuant to W. Va. Code § 47-18-16 (1978), the legislature has directed that the West Virginia Antitrust Act, W. Va. Code § 47-18-1 et seq., shall be construed liberally and in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law

The courts of West Virginia are directed by the legislature in W. Va. Code § 47-18-16 (1978) to apply the federal decisional law interpreting the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, to West Virginia's parallel antitrust statute, W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(a) (1978).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Sherman Act, Scope

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (2004).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN8[] Sherman Act, Scope

The primary distinction between W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(a) and 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (2004) is that the West Virginia statute applies to contracts and conspiracies in restraint of trade "in this State" while the federal statute is applicable to contracts and conspiracies "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN9[] Sherman Act, Scope

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (2004) et seq., may only apply to contracts which impact interstate commerce, and, absent a finding that interstate commerce is affected, would not apply to contracts affecting solely state matters. While the federal government may enact legislation declaring certain contracts illegal if they tend to lessen competition and impact interstate commerce, a state is not precluded from legislating as to matters of public policy with reference to contracts in restraint of trade by virtue of its inherent police power.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN10[] Legislation, Interpretation

A statute should be so read and applied as to make it accord with the spirit, purposes and objects of the general system of law of which it was intended to form a part; it being presumed that the legislators who drafted and passed it were familiar with all existing law, applicable to the subject matter, whether constitutional, statutory or common, and intended the statute to harmonize completely with the same and aid in the effectuation of the general purpose and design thereof, if its terms are consistent therewith.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN11[] Legislation, Interpretation

When the legislature enacts laws, it is presumed to be aware of all pertinent judgments rendered by the judicial branch. By borrowing terms of art in which are accumulated the legal tradition and meaning of centuries of practice, the legislature presumably knows and adopts the cluster of ideas attached to each borrowed word in the body of learning from which it was taken and the meaning its use will convey to the judicial mind unless otherwise instructed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law

It is appropriate to consider the status of federal law at the time the West Virginia Antitrust Act, W. Va. Code § 47-18-1 et seq., was enacted and determine whether the provisions of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) evidenced an intent by the legislature to depart from federal antitrust law, or whether the provisions of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) are simply a codification of federal judicial decisions setting forth conduct deemed to be per se violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (2004).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Sherman Act, Scope

Congress did not intend to prohibit all contracts by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (2004) et seq., nor even all contracts that might in some insignificant degree or attenuated sense restrain trade or competition. In lieu of the narrowest possible reading of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (2004), the United States Supreme Court has adopted a "rule of reason" analysis for determining whether most business combinations or contracts violate the prohibitions of the Sherman Act. An analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effects, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption. While the court has utilized the "rule of reason" in evaluating the legality of most restraints alleged to be violative of the Sherman Act, it has also developed the doctrine that certain business relationships are per se violations of the Sherman Act without regard to a consideration of their reasonableness. It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act. One of the classic examples of a per se violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Practices which the courts have heretofore deemed to be unlawful in and of themselves are price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, and tying arrangements. Price-fixing under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 has been defined as a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce. Illegal price-fixing involves the elimination of competition because the power to fix prices, whether reasonably exercised or not, involves the power to control the market and to fix arbitrary and unreasonable prices. An agreement that interferes with the setting of price by free market forces is deemed per se illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Noting the differing tests applicable to alleged per se activities and other violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the United States Supreme Court has explained: certain agreements, such as horizontal price fixing and market allocation, are thought so inherently anticompetitive that each is illegal per se without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused. Other combinations, such as mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements, hold the promise of increasing a firm's efficiency and enabling it to compete more effectively. Accordingly, such combinations are judged under a rule of reason, an inquiry into market power and market structure designed to assess the combination's actual effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN16[] Sherman Act, Scope

The legislature intended to codify certain activities deemed under federal law to be per se violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 as per se violations of the West Virginia Antitrust Act, W. Va. Code § 47-18-1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Consistent with those activities deemed by federal judicial interpretation to be per se violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) (1978) codifies comparable activities as per se violations of West Virginia antitrust law. To the extent W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (1978) utilizes terms which are deemed "terms of art" under federal antitrust law, the meanings attributed to such "terms of art" under federal antitrust law are incorporated into W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (1978) absent contrary statutory definitions set forth in the West Virginia Antitrust Act, W. Va. Code § 47-18-1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN18[] Antitrust & Trade Law

The West Virginia Antitrust Act, W. Va. Code § 47-18-1 et seq., should be construed liberally and in harmony with federal decisional law interpreting comparable federal antitrust law provisions.

Constitutional Law > Separation of Powers

HN19[] Constitutional Law, Separation of Powers

While the legislature may indicate its intention that a statutory enactment be harmonized with federal law, fundamental principles of separations of powers preclude the legislature from requiring the courts of West Virginia to construe or interpret a statutory enactment in a particular manner. W. Va. Const. art. VIII, § 1 vests the judicial power of West Virginia solely in a supreme court of appeals and in the circuit courts, and in such intermediate appellate courts and magistrate courts as shall be established by the legislature, and in the justices, judges, and magistrates of such courts. While the courts of West Virginia may elect to honor legislative enactments in aid of judicial power, they are clearly not bound to do so. The question therefore becomes, when should the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia depart from a direction to look to federal law in interpreting or applying West Virginia law?

Constitutional Law > Separation of Powers

HN20[] Constitutional Law, Separation of Powers

See W. Va. Const. art. V, § 1.

Constitutional Law > Separation of Powers

HN21[] Constitutional Law, Separation of Powers

Direction for the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia may come from legislative enactments or its own precedent.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN22[] Legislation, Interpretation

When presented with a recommendation from the legislature to look to federal law in interpreting a statute or with West Virginia's own precedent looking to federal law for guidance on a particular issue, several factors should guide a court's determination as to whether it should follow the federal courts' direction or whether it should determine that its interpretation of West Virginia law should be unique. For this consideration, a comparison of the specific language of the federal and state provisions at issue must be our primary starting point. A lack of significant distinctive language between the state and federal law at issue should dissuade the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia from proceeding in a distinctive manner. Thus, where there is no significant distinction in the wording of the federal and state provisions, the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia should be guided by federal decisions interpreting or applying the same unless a compelling reason to depart from the federal guidance is demonstrated. Accordingly, the legislative histories of the specific provisions at issue are important factors for the court to consider.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN23[] Legislation, Interpretation

The following factors are relevant to a determination as to when courts should comply with or depart from a specific statutory direction from the legislature to construe a particular statutory scheme in harmony with comparable federal statutes and judicial interpretations thereof: (1) similarity of language between the federal and West Virginia enactments, (2) similarities or distinctions between federal and state precedent interpreting and/or applying the particular enactment, (3) whether the legislative history of the West Virginia enactment evidenced an intent to follow federal law and precedent, (4) the use of terms of art or unique phrases which have gained accepted or uniform judicial interpretations or meanings, (5) the competing or similar interests the federal and state enactments were designed to protect, (6) whether harmonization of federal and state law will facilitate significant policy interests, and (7) such other factors as may serve as compelling considerations under the circumstances presented.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24[] Antitrust & Trade Law

W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(a) is comparable to federal antitrust statutes, specifically 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) is likewise comparable in light of the federal jurisprudence construing 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

HN25[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Both the West Virginia Antitrust Act, W. Va. Code § 47-18-1 et seq., and the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (2004) et seq., appear designed to protect and promote a similar interest-competition in the marketplace.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

HN26[] Separation of Powers, Legislative Controls

A legislative rule can be deemed unenforceable if the regulation was beyond the constitutional or statutory authority extended to the agency involved or if the rule is determined to be arbitrary or capricious.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

HN27[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

Once a disputed regulation in legislatively approved, it has the force of a statute itself. Being an act of the West Virginia legislature, it is entitled to more than mere deference; it is entitled to controlling weight. As authorized by legislation, a legislative rule should be ignored only if the agency has exceeded its constitutional or statutory authority or is arbitrary or capricious.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

HN28[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

To the extent an agency has exceeded its constitutional or statutory authority in promulgating a legislatively approved rule or regulation, the legislative rule "should be ignored."

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > General Overview

HN29[] Administrative Law, Agency Rulemaking

See W. Va. Code § 47-18-20 (1978).

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN30[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

There is no question that when the rules of an agency come into conflict with a statute that the statute must control. Any rules or regulations drafted by an agency must faithfully reflect the intention of the legislature, as expressed in the controlling legislation. Where a statute contains clear and unambiguous language, an agency's rules or regulations must give that language the same clear and unambiguous force and effect that the language commands in the statute.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN31[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

Though the courts have the power to harmonize a rule with an ambiguous statute, the courts must follow the will of the legislature when expressed with clarity.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN32[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

The judiciary is the final authority on issues of statutory construction, and the courts are obliged to reject administrative constructions that are contrary to the clear language of a statute.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN33[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

Even if a rule has the authority of a legislative rule, the deference the courts owe does not change. Even when considering a legislative rule, when a statute is clear, the courts owe no deference to the agency’s rule.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN34[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

The clarity of legislative intent when enacting a statute is a primary consideration in determining the significance with attaches to a legislative rule promulgated thereunder. A court must reject administrative rules that are contrary to legislative intent.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN35[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

Judicial review of an agency's legislative rule and the construction of a statute that it administers involves two separate but interrelated questions, only the second of which furnishes an occasion for deference. In deciding whether an administrative agency's position should be sustained, a reviewing court first must ask whether the legislature has directly spoken to the precise question at issue. If the intention of the legislature is clear, that is the end of the matter, and the agency's position only can be upheld if it conforms to the legislature's intent. No deference is due the agency's interpretation at this stage.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > Rule Application & Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN36[] Agency Rulemaking, Rule Application & Interpretation

The courts are obligated to defer to an agency's view only when there is a statutory gap or ambiguity. However, if the statute is silent or ambiguous with respect to the specific issue, the question for the court is whether the agency's answer is based upon a permissible construction of the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN37[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Tying is a concept distinct from those activities set forth in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b). By specifically setting forth in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) those activities it intended to constitute per se restraints of trade, the legislature triggered use of a fundamental principle of statutory construction, being expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN38[] Legislation, Interpretation

In the interpretation of statutory provisions, the familiar maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, the express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another, applies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN39[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Absent ambiguity in the enabling statute or the need to clarify what activities constitute the per se violations set forth in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b), a legislative rule may not establish another category of per se violations. The legislative rule in W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3 may not reasonably be seen as an attempt to give meaning or clarify conduct satisfying the requirements of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN40[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Illegal price-fixing requires a power to control the market and fix arbitrary prices, including an interference with the setting of prices by market forces. Simply requiring a contractor to set reasonable prices in accordance with prevailing market rates is insufficient as a matter of West Virginia law to establish a violation of West Virginia's antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN41[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Federal antitrust law clearly defines illegal market allocation as the division of territories by competitors at the same level of the market structure to minimize competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

HN42[] Antitrust & Trade Law

An illegal refusal to deal under W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b)(3) is statutorily defined by reference to activities violating W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b)(1), (2).

Syllabus

BY THE COURT

1. "Appellate review of a partial summary judgment order is the same as that of a summary judgment order, which is de novo." Syllabus Point 1, West Virginia Department of Transportation, Division of Highways v. Robertson, 217 W. Va. 497, 618 S.E.2d 506 (2005).

2. "Summary judgment is appropriate if, from the totality of the evidence presented, the record could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, such as where the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of the case that it has the burden to prove." Syllabus Point 2, Williams v. Precision Coil, Inc., 194 W. Va. 52, 459 S.E.2d 329 (1995).

3. "The courts of this state are directed by the legislature in W. Va. Code, 47-18-16 [1978] to apply the federal decisional law interpreting the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, to our own parallel antitrust statute, W. Va. Code, 47-18-3(a) [1978]." Syllabus Point 2, Gray v. Marshall County Board of Education, 179 W. Va. 282, 367 S.E.2d 751 (1988).

4. "A statute should be so read and applied as [2] to make it accord with the spirit, purposes and objects of the general system of law of which it was intended to form a part; it being presumed that the legislators who drafted and passed it were familiar with all existing law, applicable to the subject matter, whether constitutional, statutory or common, and intended the statute to harmonize completely with the same and aid in the effectuation of the general purpose and design thereof, if its terms are consistent therewith." Syllabus Point 5, State v. Snyder, 64 W. Va. 659, 63 S.E. 385 (1908).

5. "'When the Legislature enacts laws, it is presumed to be aware of all pertinent judgments rendered by the judicial branch. By borrowing terms of art in which are accumulated the legal tradition and meaning of centuries of practice, the Legislature presumably knows and adopts the cluster of ideas attached to each borrowed word in the body of learning from which it was taken and the meaning its use will convey to the judicial mind unless otherwise instructed.' Syl. pt. 2, in part, Stephen L.H. v. Sherry L.H., 195 W. Va. 384, 465 S.E.2d 841 (1995)." Syllabus Point 3, CB&T Operations Company, Inc. v. Tax Commissioner of the State of West Virginia, 211 W. Va. 198, 564 S.E.2d 408 (2002).

6. [3] Consistent with those activities deemed by federal judicial interpretation to be per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, West Virginia Code § 47-18-3 (b) (1978) codifies comparable activities as per se violations of West Virginia antitrust law. To the extent W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (1978) utilizes terms which are deemed "terms of art" under federal antitrust law, the meanings attributed to such "terms of art" under federal antitrust law are incorporated into W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (1978) absent contrary statutory definitions set forth in the West Virginia Antitrust Act.

7. Factors relevant to a determination that West Virginia courts should comply with or depart from a specific statutory direction from the Legislature to construe a particular statutory scheme in harmony with federal statutes and judicial interpretations thereof include: (1) similarity of language between the federal and West Virginia enactments; (2) similarities or distinctions between federal and state precedent interpreting and/or applying the particular enactment; (3) whether the legislative history of the West Virginia enactment evidenced an intent to follow federal law and precedent; (4) the use of terms [4] of art or unique phrases which have gained accepted or uniform judicial interpretations or meanings; (5) the competing or similar interests the federal and state enactments were designed to protect; (6) whether harmonization of federal and state law will facilitate significant policy interests; and (7) such other factors as may serve as compelling considerations under the circumstances presented.

8. "Once a disputed regulation in legislatively approved, it has the force of a statute itself. Being an act of the West Virginia Legislature, it is entitled to more than mere deference; it is entitled to controlling weight. As authorized by legislation, a legislative rule should be ignored only if the agency has exceeded its constitutional or statutory authority or is arbitrary or capricious." Syllabus Point 2, West Virginia Health Care Review Authority v. Boone Memorial Hospital, 196 W. Va. 326, 472 S.E.2d 411 (1996).

9. "Judicial review of an agency's legislative rule and the construction of a statute that it administers involves two separate but interrelated questions, only the second of which furnishes an occasion for deference. In deciding whether an administrative agency's position should [5] be sustained, a reviewing court applies the standards set out by the United States Supreme Court in Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 104 S.Ct. 2778, 81 L.Ed.2d 694 (1984). The court first must ask whether the Legislature has directly spoken to the precise question at issue. If the intention of the Legislature is clear, that is the end of the matter, and the agency's position only can be upheld if it conforms to the Legislature's intent. No deference is due the agency's interpretation at this stage. Syllabus Point 3, Appalachian Power Co. v. State Tax Department of West Virginia, 195 W. Va. 573, 466 S.E.2d 424 (1995)." Syllabus Point 4, West Virginia Health Care Review Authority v. Boone Memorial Hospital, 196 W. Va. 326, 472 S.E.2d 411 (1996).

Counsel: Anthony J. Majestro, Powell & Majestro, P.L.L.C., Charleston, West Virginia and C. Michael Bee, Susan B. Tucker, Hill Peterson Carper Bee & Deitzler, P.L.L.C., Charleston, West Virginia, Attorneys for Appellants Richard D. Vaglienti, M.D. and Stanford J. Huber, M.D.

Frank E. Simmerman, Jr., Simmerman Law Office, P.L.L.C., Clarksburg, West Virginia, Attorney for Appellant James W. Kessel, M.D.

Gordon [6] H. Copland, Amy M. Smith, Steptoe & Johnson, P.L.L.C., Clarksburg, West Virginia and John M. Fitzpatrick, LeClair Ryan, Richmond, Virginia, Attorneys for Appellee Monongalia County General Hospital d/b/a Monongalia General Hospital.

Charles T. Berry, Bowles Rice McDavid Graff & Love, L.L.P., Morgantown, West Virginia, Attorney for Appellees Bennett Anesthesia Consultants, P.L.L.C. and Mark Bennett, M.D.

Charles C. Wise, III, Bowles Rice McDavid Graff & Love, L.L.P., Morgantown, West Virginia, Attorney for Appellee Professional Anesthesia Services, Inc.

Brenda Nichols Harper, Charleston, West Virginia, Attorney for Amicus Curiae West Virginia Chamber of Commerce.

Kent J. George, Robinson & McElwee, P.L.L.C., Charleston, West Virginia, Attorney for Amicus Curiae, West Virginia Business and Industry Council.

Judges: JUSTICE BENJAMIN delivered the opinion of the Court. JUSTICE STARCHER dissents and reserves the right to file a dissenting opinion.

Opinion by: BENJAMIN

Opinion

[370] [*606] Benjamin, Justice:

On December 29, 2005, the Circuit Court of Monongalia County entered an order granting partial summary judgment with respect to all claims arising under state antitrust law asserted by James W. Kessel, M.D., Richard D. Vaglienti, M.D. [7] and Stanford J. Huber, M.D. (hereinafter collectively "Appellants") against Monongalia County General Hospital d/b/a Monongalia General Hospital (hereinafter "Monongalia General"), Mark Bennett, M.D., and Bennett Anesthesia Consultants, P.L.L.C. (hereinafter collectively "BAC"), and Professional Anesthesia Services, Inc. (hereinafter "PAS"). [1] In Count III of their complaints, which were consolidated for resolution before the circuit court, Appellants asserted that two "exclusive" contracts, one between Monongalia General and BAC and one between Monongalia General and PAS, for the provision of operative anesthesiology services at Monongalia General constituted a "restraint of trade" in violation of the West Virginia Antitrust Act, W. Va. § 47-18-1, et seq., (hereinafter the "WVATA"). According to the Appellants, the circuit court erred by (1) following federal precedent developed under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq., in interpreting the WVATA; (2) determining that the provisions of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) (1978), were "comparable" [371] [*607] to the Sherman Act; and (3) finding that the contracts at issue do not violate the per se restrictions contained in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) and [8] W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3 (1991). Upon due consideration of the arguments presented by the parties and the pertinent legal authorities, we affirm the circuit court's partial summary judgment order. [2]

I.

---

[1] By order dated March 30, 2006, the Circuit Court of Monongalia County amended its December 29, 2005, order to include language required by Rule 54(b) of the West Virginia Rules of Civil Procedure to permit Appellants to immediately appeal the December 29, 2005, order to this Court without waiting for their remaining claims to be adjudicated.

[2] We also acknowledge and appreciate the contribution of amici curia the West Virginia Chamber of Commerce and the West Virginia Business and Industry Council to the legal arguments presented for our consideration herein.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On March 24, 1975, Monongalia Anesthesia Associates (hereinafter "MAA") entered into a contract with Monongalia General for the exclusive provision of anesthesia services at the hospital. [3] Each of the appellants were shareholders and employees of MAA. In the early 1990's the MAA and Monongalia General began a renegotiation of the contract. Although the result of these negotiations is not clear from the [9] record before this Court, it appears that MAA continued to exclusively provide the anesthesiological services, except for cardio-thoracic surgeries, at Monongalia General until December 30, 1998, when Monongalia General entered the contract with BAC, at issue herein, for the exclusive provision of orthopedic surgical anesthesia. Thereafter, Monongalia General and MAA were unable to reach an agreement regarding MAA's exclusive provision of all non-cardio-thoracic and non-orthopedic surgical anesthesia services at the hospital. Monongalia General then solicited a request for proposal from a number of providers of surgical anesthesia services, including MAA, for the exclusive provision of these remaining surgical anesthesia services. As a result of this solicitation, Monongalia General entered the contract with PAS, at issue herein.

Subsequently, Appellants initiated suit alleging tortious interference with business relationships, due process violation/failure to provide a fair hearing pursuant to medical staff by-laws, restraint of trade, breach of contract and breach of the covenants of good faith and fair dealing. Previously, in Kessel v. Monongalia General Hospital Company, DBA Monongalia General Hospital, 215 W. Va. 609, 600 S.E.2d 321 (2004) (hereinafter "Kessel I"), this Court responded to a question certified by the circuit court regarding Monongalia General's ability to enter into exclusive contracts. Appellants' antitrust claims were not at issue in Kessel I. In Kessel I, this Court examined Monongalia General's legal authority to enter into exclusive contracts in light of its status as a quasi-public hospital. Monongalia General's status as a quasi-public hospital was significant because, subject to compliance with applicable law and hospital rules and regulations, a "physician or surgeon is entitled to [12] practice in the public hospitals of this state" and that "quasi-public hospitals have the same duty as public hospitals to admit regularly licensed [372] [*608] physicians to membership on their medical staffs." Syl. pts. 9 and 11, Kessel I, in part. In light of these findings, this Court held, in syllabus point 12 of Kessel I, that "a public or quasi-public hospital may not enter into exclusive contracts with medical service providers that have the effect of completely excluding other physicians who have regular staff privileges at the hospital from the use of the hospital's medical facilities." An important consideration for the Court in Kessel I was a patient's right to choose his or her physician. Therefore, while prohibiting exclusive contracts in public and quasi-public hospitals, the Court noted that the hospital may still enter into preferential contracts pursuant to which the hospital contracts with primary service providers who then provide the designated service unless a patient requests that another staff physician perform the service. Kessel I, 215 W. Va. at 621, 600 S.E.2d at 333.

Contrary to Appellants' suggestion, this Court's decision in Kessel I does not impact their claims regarding [13] violation of the WVATA. HN1[] Simply because a public or quasi-public hospital is prohibited, under West

[3] Although an actual copy of the 1975 contract does not appear in the record before this Court, various letters written by MAA counsel and representatives are contained within the record and confirm the existence of such a contract. For example, a June 30, 1989, letter written by Michael J. Dempster, counsel for MAA during renegotiation of the contract states [10] "the current agreement, that was signed on March 24, 1975, contemplates anesthesia services being provided exclusively by Mon Anesthesia Associates." Additionally, a June 20, 1987, letter authored by Erdogan Ternan, M.D., MAA President, related to the "provision of anesthesia services for the open heart surgical procedures" by an anesthesia team from West Virginia University Hospital and gave "our consent to this approach as an exception to our otherwise exclusive right to provide anesthesia services at Monongalia General Hospital." (Emphasis added). The June 20, 1987, letter also stated that the consent was "limited to the provision of anesthesia services in connection with open heart surgery. In all other respects, the existing agreement between [MAA] and the Hospital [was to] continue[] in full force and effect." Additionally, a Letter of Agreement was signed by Appellant Huber, as president of MAA, on June 23, 1992, documented a preliminary agreement between MAA and Monongalia General for the provision of anesthesia services through December 31, 1992, and an agreement to work "in good faith to develop and execute, by December 31, 1992, a contract for exclusive anesthesia services, [11] excluding cardio-thoracic (open-heart) surgery services." Further, Monongalia General agreed therein to "not seek a permanent anesthesia services contract from any other group" during that time period.

Virginia law, from entering into an exclusive contract with certain service providers does not automatically result in that same contract violating our antitrust laws. [4] Violation of anti-trust laws constitutes a separate legal inquiry.

Appellants' complaints allege that Monongalia General's contracts with BAC and PAS are a "restraint of trade" which constitute "exclusive dealings." Although their complaints simply assert "restraint of trade," Appellants rely upon W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) and W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3 in support of their claims before both the circuit court and this Court. West Virginia Code § 47-18-3, entitled "Contracts and combinations in restraint of trade," provides:

> (HN2[] a) [14] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this State shall be unlawful.
> (b) Without limiting the effect of subsection (a) of this section, the following shall be deemed to restrain trade or commerce unreasonably and are unlawful:
> (1) A contract, combination or conspiracy between two or more persons:
> (A) For the purpose or with the effect of fixing, controlling, or maintaining the market price, rate or fee of any commodity or service; or
> (B) Fixing, controlling, maintaining, limiting or discontinuing the production, manufacture, mining, sale or supply of any commodity, or the sale or supply of any service, for the purpose or with the effect of fixing, controlling or maintaining the market price, rate or fee of the commodity or service; or
> (C) Allocating or dividing customers or markets, functional or geographic, for any commodity or service.
> (2) A contract, combination or conspiracy between two or more persons whereby, in the letting of any public or private contract:
> (A) The price quotation of any bid is fixed or controlled; or
>
> (B) One or more persons submits a bid intending it to be higher than another bid and thus complementary [15] thereto, submits a bid intending it to be substantially identical to another bid, or refrains from the submission of a bid.
> (3) A contract, combination or conspiracy between two or more persons refusing to deal with any other person or persons for the purpose of effecting any of the acts described in subdivisions (1) and (2) of this subsection.

According to Appellants, the provisions of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) deem contracts which fix prices, allocate markets or create exclusive dealing to be per se illegal. Additionally, Appellants contend that W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3.1, which provides:

> [i]t shall be unlawful under W. Va. Code §§ 47-18-3, 4 for any person or group of persons to enter into tie-in agreements. [373] [*609] Such agreements include, but are not limited to, agreements which condition or have the effect of conditioning the sale of one product or service upon the purchase of another product or service[,] creates another category of practices, i.e., tying arrangements, which are per se illegal under West Virginia law. Relying upon the argued per se designation, Appellants maintain that they are not required to undergo a market analysis to proceed with their claims. Pursuant to this argument, [16] Appellants need only point to contractual provisions which fix prices, allocate anesthesia services at Monongalia General to a particular provider and/or demonstrate an agreement to deal exclusively in order to prevail.

Appellants argue that Monongalia General's contracts with BAC and PAS constitute market allocation and exclusive dealings because they limit the persons who may provide surgical anesthesia services at the hospital. Further, the contracts constitute tying arrangements, according to Appellants, because they tie the availability of surgical procedures at Monongalia General to specific anesthesia providers. Finally, Appellants argue that the contracts at issue constitute price fixing due to specific contractual provisions regarding the fees BAC and PAS will charge for anesthesia services performed. The provision in the BAC contract relied upon by Appellants states:

---

[4] In undertaking this analysis it is significant to remember that the exclusive contracts at issue herein where entered prior to this Court's determination that Monongalia General could not enter into exclusive contracts due to its status as a quasi-public hospital.

> 5.1-1 Schedule(s) of Contractor Charges. Contractor will establish schedule of fees, which fees shall be reasonable in light of those fees prevailing in the Hospital's service area, to be charged to all third party payors and patients for Orthopedic Anesthesiology Services to Patients by Contractor. The fees charged [17] by Contractor on the date of this Agreement shall be the initial schedule of fees for the Contractor. If at any time during the term of this Agreement Contractor desires to revise its schedule of fees, it shall provide Hospital with written notice of its proposed schedule of fees, which notice shall specify the date (at least 45 days after the date of delivery of the notice) on which the new fees are to come into effect. . . .

This contractual provision continues to provide a procedure for Monongalia General to object to the proposed fee change. The BAC contract requires BAC to bill patients separately for its services and to be responsible for its own fee collections. Further, the contract provides that Monongalia General will not compensate BAC for the services provided to patients in the hospital. Similarly, the fee provision in the PAS contract relied upon by Appellants states:

> 5.1-1 Schedule(s) of Contractor Charges. Contractor shall establish a schedule of fees representing Contractor's full compensations for professional services rendered by contractor to patients. Such schedule must, at all times, comply with the applicable laws, rules, regulations, and contractual arrangements [18] with and between Contractor and third party payors. The fees set out therein must, at all times, be reasonable and competitive.

The PAS contract likewise provides that PAS will bill and collect separately for its services and is not entitled to additional compensation from Monongalia General.

Appellees counter that terms such as "price-fixing," "market allocation," "exclusive dealing" and "tying" are terms of art which, pursuant to West Virginia law, require a court to look to well-developed federal precedent to define. Appellees argue that conduct or agreements which constitute the per se violations outlined in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) gain meaning by examination of federal court decisions defining per se violations of the Sherman Act. Further, Appellees argue that a legislative rule cannot create a per se violation which is not set forth within the WVATA where the WVATA enumerates certain per se violations.

After detailed analysis of the parties' arguments, the circuit court granted Appellee's motion for partial summary judgment finding that the Appellants' antitrust claims fail as a matter of law. This appeal followed. For the reasons set forth below, we agree that partial summary [19] judgment was appropriate in this matter. Accordingly, we affirm the decision of the Circuit Court of Monongalia County finding Appellant's antitrust claims fail as a matter of law.

[374] [*610] II.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

We begin by recognizing that the HN3[] "[a]ppellate review of a partial summary judgment order is the same as that of a summary judgment order, which is de novo." Syllabus Point 1, West Virginia Department of Transportation, Division of Highways v. Robertson, 217 W. Va. 497, 618 S.E.2d 506 (2005). See also Syl. Pt. 1*, Painter v. Peavy, 192 W. Va. 189, 451 S.E.2d 755 (1994)* ("[a] circuit court's entry of summary judgment is reviewed de novo."). We will affirm the grant of summary judgment "if, from the totality of the evidence presented, the record could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, such as where the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of the case that it has the burden to prove." Syl. Pt. 2, Williams v. Precision Coil, Inc., 194 W. Va. 52, 459 S.E.2d 329 (1995). However, to the extent this matter may be construed as presenting a question of statutory interpretation, the applicable standard of review is likewise [20] de novo. Syl. Pt. 1, Chrystal R.M. v. Charlie A.L., 194 W. Va. 138, 459 S.E.2d 415 (1995) (HN4[] "Where the issue on appeal is clearly a question of law or involving an interpretation of a statute, we apply a de novo standard of review.").

III.

DISCUSSION

In order to resolve the matter presented herein, we must resolve several legal issues. First, this Court must clarify the extent to which West Virginia courts should look to federal law for guidance in applying the provisions of the WVATA. Additionally, we will address Appellants' argument that a legislative rule may designate practices deemed to be violations of our antitrust laws when the same are not included within those practices specifically set forth within the enabling statute itself. Finally, once the appropriate legal standards are clarified, analysis of Appellants' claims in light of the same is required.

A.

Federal Law as Persuasive Authority

In their first assignment of error, Appellants contend that the circuit court erred in applying federal law when analyzing their claims. HN5[] Pursuant to W. Va. Code § 47-18-16 (1978), the Legislature has directed that the WVATA "shall be construed liberally and in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations [21] of comparable federal antitrust statutes." Moreover, this Court held in Syllabus Point 2 of Gray v. Marshall County Board of Education, 179 W. Va. 282, 367 S.E.2d 751 (1988), that HN6[] "[t]he courts of this state are directed by the legislature in W. Va. Code, 47-18-16 [1978] to apply the federal decisional law interpreting the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, to our own parallel antitrust statute, W. Va. Code, 47-18-3(a) [1978]." Appellants argue that because their claims are based upon subsection (b) of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 and not subsection (a), federal decisional law is irrelevant. Indeed, this Court has noted that it is not bound to apply federal law in determining the scope of the WVATA where the federal and state provisions are not "comparable." State ex rel. Palumbo v. Graley's Body Shop, Inc., 188 W. Va. 501, 507, 425 S.E.2d 177, 183 (1992).

The distinction between subsections (a) and (b) of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 is not as clear as Appellants would argue. As noted above, Appellants simply alleged "restraint of trade" in their complaint. Arguably, subsection (a) which provides that contracts "in restraint of trade or commerce" are deemed unlawful in this State is therefore relevant. [22] In an effort to avoid reference to federal law, however, Appellants contend that their claims are based solely upon W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b), which they deem as a codification of practices deemed to be per se restraints of trade without reference to either subsection (a) or federal law. Arguing that the Sherman Act does not codify similar per se practices deemed to restrain trade, Appellants maintain there is no "comparable" federal law to apply. After consideration of the status of federal law at the time the WVATA was enacted, we reject Appellants' comparability argument.

[375] [*611] i.

Comparability of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) to federal Sherman Act precedent

The crux of Appellants' argument is that W. Va. Code § 47-18-16's direction to construe the WVATA "in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes" applies only to those claims brought under W. Va. Code § 14-18-3(a) because it is that provision which corresponds to the Sherman Act. Specifically, Appellant's argue the only "comparable" federal antitrust statute is 15 U.S.C. § 1 (hereinafter "Section 1 of Sherman Act") which states:

> HN7[] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, [23] in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

15 U.S.C. § 1 (2004). [5] HN8[] The primary distinction between W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (a) and Section 1 of the Sherman Act is that the West Virginia statute applies to contracts and conspiracies in restraint of trade "in this State" while the federal statute is applicable to contracts and conspiracies "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." [6]

The Sherman Act was initially enacted in 1890, eighty-eight years prior to the WVATA. In National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978), the United States Supreme Court recognized that "Congress, . . ., did not intend the text of the Sherman Act to delineate the full meaning of the statute or its application in concrete situations. The legislative history makes it perfectly clear that it [25] expected the courts to give shape to the statute's broad mandate by drawing on common-law tradition." National Soc. of Prof. Eng., 435 U.S. at 688, 98 S. Ct. at 1363. Nearly a century of judicial precedent defining and interpreting the scope of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and conduct constituting a violation thereof was therefore available to the Legislature at the time the WVATA was enacted with its direction that it be construed in harmony with judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes. This Court has long held that:

> HN10[] A statute should be so read and applied as to make it accord with the spirit, purposes and objects of the general system of law of which it was intended to form a part; it being presumed that the legislators who drafted and passed it were familiar with all existing law, applicable to the subject matter, whether constitutional, statutory or common, and intended the statute to harmonize completely with the same and aid in the effectuation of the general purpose and design thereof, if its terms are consistent therewith.

Syl. Pt. 5, State v. Snyder, 64 W. Va. 659, 63 S.E. 385 (1908). See also, Syl. Pt. 1, State v. White, 188 W. Va. 534, 425 S.E.2d 210 (1992) [26] (same). Additionally, this Court has held:

> [376] [*612] HN11[] '[w]hen the Legislature enacts laws, it is presumed to be aware of all pertinent judgments rendered by the judicial branch. By borrowing terms of art in which are accumulated the legal tradition and meaning of centuries of practice, the Legislature presumably knows and adopts the cluster of ideas attached to each borrowed word in the body of learning from which it was taken and the meaning its use will convey to the judicial mind unless otherwise instructed.' Syl. pt. 2, in part, Stephen L.H. v. Sherry L.H., 195 W. Va. 384, 465 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Syl. Pt. 3, CB&T Operations Co., Inc. v. Tax Comm'r, 211 W. Va. 198, 564 S.E.2d 408 (2002). In light of these decisions, we must presume that the Legislature knew the scope of federal antitrust law and the terms of art utilized therein at the time it enacted the WVATA and directed its construction in harmony with federal law. Therefore, HN12[] it is appropriate to consider the status of federal law at the time the WVATA was enacted and determine whether the provisions of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) evidenced an intent by the Legislature to depart from federal antitrust law, as Appellants argue, or whether the [27] provisions of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) are simply a codification of federal judicial decisions setting forth conduct deemed to be per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

---

[5] Although Section 1 of the Sherman Act has been amended since the time that the WVATA was enacted, those amendments do not affect the substantive portion at issue herein, i.e., the first sentence, but, instead, impact the penalty provisions.

[6] Appellants' argument that to construe the WVATA in harmony with federal [24] law creates a redundancy pursuant to which the WVATA is superfluous for the federal act is easily dismissed under fundamental principles of federalism. HN9[] The federal act may only apply to contracts which impact interstate commerce, and, absent a finding that interstate commerce is affected, would not apply to contracts affecting solely state matters. While the federal government may enact legislation declaring certain contracts illegal if they tend to lessen competition and impact interstate commerce, a state is not precluded from legislating as to matters of public policy with reference to contracts in restraint of trade by virtue of its inherent police power. Mathews Conveyer, Co. v. Palmer-Bee, Co., 135 F.2d 73, 82 (6th Cir. 1943).

In United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972), the United States Supreme Court explained the development of law, including per se restrictions, under Section 1 of the Sherman Act as follows:

> On its face, § 1 of the Sherman Act appears to bar any combination of entrepreneurs so long as it is "in restraint of trade." Theoretically, all manufacturers, distributors, merchants, sellers, and buyers could be considered as potential competitors of each other. Were § 1 to be read in the narrowest possible way, any commercial contract could be deemed to violate it. The history underlying the formulation of the antitrust laws led this Court to conclude, however, that HN13[] Congress did not intend to prohibit all contracts, nor even all contracts that might in some insignificant degree or attenuated sense restrain trade or competition. In lieu of the narrowest possible reading of § 1, the Court adopted a "rule of reason" analysis for determining whether most business combinations [28] or contracts violate the prohibitions of the Sherman Act. An analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effects, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption.
>
> While the Court has utilized the "rule of reason" in evaluating the legality of most restraints alleged to be violative of the Sherman Act, it has also developed the doctrine that certain business relationships are per se violations of the Act without regard to a consideration of their reasonableness.
>
> . . .
>
> It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act. One of the classic examples of a per se violation of § 1 is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition.

Topco, 405 U.S. at 606-8, 92 S. Ct. at 1133 (internal citations omitted). Discussing per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the Supreme Court, has recognized that HN14[] "practices which the courts have heretofore deemed to be unlawful [29] in and of themselves are price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, and tying arrangements." Northern Pacific Railway Company v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 518, 2 L.E.2d 545 (1958) (internal citations omitted). [7] Price-fixing under Section 1 of the [377] [*613] Sherman Act has been defined as "a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223, 60 S. Ct. 811, 844, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940). Illegal price-fixing involves the elimination of competition because the "power to fix prices, whether reasonably exercised or not, involves the power to control the market and to fix arbitrary and unreasonable prices." Arizona v. Maricopa Cnty. Med. Soc., 457 U.S. 332, 345,102 S. Ct. 2466, 2473, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982), quoting United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 397-8, 47 S. Ct. 377, 379, 71 L. Ed. 700 (1927). An agreement that "interfere[s] with the setting of price by free market forces"

---

[7] HN15[] Noting [30] the differing tests applicable to alleged per se activities and other violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the Supreme Court has explained:

> Certain agreements, such as horizontal price fixing and market allocation, are thought so inherently anticompetitive that each is illegal per se without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused. See generally Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). Other combinations, such as mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements, hold the promise of increasing a firm's efficiency and enabling it to compete more effectively. Accordingly, such combinations are judged under a rule of reason, an inquiry into market power and market structure designed to assess the combination's actual effect. See, e.g., Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, (1977); Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683, (1918).

Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2740, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984).

is deemed per se illegal. United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 337, 89 S. Ct. 510, 512, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1969).

Likewise, an "agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition" was recognized as a classic example [31] of a per se Sherman Act violation. Topco, 405 U.S. at 608, 92 S. Ct. at 1133. Agreements to control bids submitted during the letting of a contract in an effort to control the price or diminish competition are also deemed per se violations. Addyston Pipe and Steel Company v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 242-5 20 S. Ct. 96, 107-9, 44 L. Ed. 136 (1899) (an agreement between competitors to establish bids to be submitted for letting of a contract, permitting one party to obtain the minimum bid and the others to bid higher constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act); National Soc. of Prof. Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978) (engineering association's canon of ethics that prohibits competitive bidding by its members constituted a per se Sherman Act violation). In Fashion Originators' Guild of America v. Federal Trade Commission, 312 U.S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949, 32 F.T.C. 1856 L. Ed. 2d (1941), the Supreme Court found an agreement which:

> narrows the outlets to which garment and textile manufacturers can sell and the sources from which retailers can buy; subjects all retailers and manufacturers who decline to comply with the Guild's program to an organized boycott; [32] takes away the freedom of action of members by requiring each to reveal to the Guild the intimate details of their individual affairs; and has both as its necessary tendency and as its purpose and effect the direct suppression of competition from the sale of unregistered textiles and copied designs to violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Fashion Originators' Guild, 312 U.S. at 465, 61 S. Ct. at 707 (internal citations omitted). As the Supreme Court further explained:

> Group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category. They have not been saved by allegations that they were reasonable in the specific circumstances, nor by a failure to show that they fixed or regulated prices, parcelled out or limited production, or brought about a deterioration in quality. Even when they operated to lower prices or temporarily to stimulate competition they were banned. For, as this Court [has] said such agreements, no less than those to fix minimum prices, cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell in accordance with their own judgment.

Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 709, 3 [378] [*614] L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959) [33] (internal quotations and citations omitted).

As recognized above, the Legislature is presumed to have known the status of federal antitrust law at the time it enacted the WVATA and directed its construction in harmony therewith. After exhaustive examination and consideration of the United States Supreme Court Sherman Act cases cited above and their progeny, this Court believes that HN16[] the Legislature intended to codify certain activities deemed under federal law to be per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act as per se violations of the WVATA. This conclusion is reinforced by the two jurisdictions noted by the Appellants to have similar per se violation codifications.

In arguing that the per se provisions included in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) should be applied without consideration of federal antitrust law, Appellants point to the inclusion of similar per se statutory violations codified in Illinois and Minnesota law. However, upon examination of Minnesota and Illinois law to determine the position of those jurisdictions upon the consideration of federal antitrust law in applying their statutory per se provision, this Court notes that both Illinois and Minnesota find federal antitrust [34] law relevant and persuasive.

For example, Illinois has codified what are deemed to be per se violations of its antitrust law in 740 Ill.Comp.Stat. 10/3(1) (1982). [8] The bar committee notes accompanying this statutory enactment specifically acknowledge the relevance of federal law. Explaining the purpose of the per se statutory provisions, the Committee stated:

---

[8] This statute states, in pertinent part,

> The basic prohibitions of the [antitrust] statute are found in Section 3. Section 3(1) proscribes certain of the offenses which under federal law are termed "per se" offenses and are commonly deemed to constitute the most serious restraints upon competition. To them, criminal as well as civil penalties are attached. The conduct proscribed by Section 3(1) is violative of the Act without regard to, and the courts need not examine, the competitive and economic purposes and consequences of such conduct.
>
> Section 3(1) is expressly limited to agreements between two classes of persons: (a) those who are competitors and (b) those persons who, but for a prior agreement, would be competitors. This latter class includes agreements between persons who are not currently competitors, but were at some time in the past and subsequently agreed to [35] cease competing. It also includes agreements not to compete between persons who have never been competitors, but who would have become competitors but for such an agreement.
> In general, Section 3(1) is designed to reach the "hard core" conspiratorial offenses of price fixing, limitations on production, and allocation of markets or customers.

(Emphasis added). In People v. Crawford Distributing Company, 53 Ill. 2d 332, 291 N.E.2d 648, 652 (Ill. 1972), the Illinois Supreme Court noted that while not binding, "the Federal antitrust experience under the Sherman Act is applicable to questions arising under the Illinois Antitrust Act and can serve as a useful guide." See also, Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 480 (7th Cir. 1988), cert. denied 488 U.S. 852, 109 S. Ct. 137, 102 L. Ed. 2d 110 (1988) (noting that where state antitrust law claims are based on statutory language which parallels the Sherman [379] [*615] Act, the state law claims will fail where a Sherman Act claim also fails).

Further, in State by Humphrey v. Alpine Air Products, Inc., 490 N.W.2d 888 (Minn. Ct. App. 1992), aff'd, 500 N.W.2d 788 (Minn. 1993), the Minnesota Court of Appeals noted that Minnesota's antitrust act [9] "codified the pre-

---

> § 3. Every person shall be deemed to have committed a violation of this Act who shall:
>
> > (1) Make any contract with, or engage in any combination or conspiracy with, any other [36] person who is, or but for a prior agreement would be, a competitor of such person:
> >
> > a. for the purpose or with the effect of fixing, controlling, or maintaining the price or rate charged for any commodity sold or bought by the parties thereto, or the fee charged or paid for any service performed or received by the parties thereto;
> >
> > b. fixing, controlling, maintaining, limiting, or discontinuing the production, manufacture, mining, sale or supply of any commodity, or the sale or supply of any service, for the purpose or with the effect stated in paragraph a. of subsection (1);
> >
> > c. allocating or dividing customers, territories, supplies, sales, or markets, functional or geographical, for any commodity or service[.]

[9] We note that the Minnesota antitrust statutes at issue in Alpine Air are substantively identical to W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (a) and (b)(1). Minn.Stat. § 325D.51, at issue in Alpine Air provided "a contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons in unreasonable restraint of trade is unlawful." W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (a), by contrast includes the term "every" before contract [38] and includes the phrase "in this State shall" in lieu of the term "is" in the Minnesota statute. Similarly, the statutory per se violations set forth in Minn. Stat. § 325D.53 at issue in Alpine Air were set forth in Subdivision 1 of that statute and state:

> Without limiting section 325D.51, the following shall be deemed to restrain trade or commerce unreasonably and are unlawful:
>
> (1) A contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons in competition:
>
> > (a) for the purpose or with the effect of affecting, fixing, controlling or maintaining the market price, rate, or fee of any commodity or service;

1971 federal case law and follows the provisions of the Sherman Act to a significant degree." Alpine Air, 490 N.W.2d at 893 (internal citations omitted). Therein, the court recognized Minnesota's established practice of interpreting its antitrust law consistently [37] with the construction given federal antitrust law by federal courts. Id. at 894. We tend to agree with the policy considerations outlined by the court in Alpine Air for such interpretation and construction wherein the Minnesota court explained:

> We believe policy considerations suggest following federal precedent for substantive offenses. Without uniform construction between state and federal antitrust laws, businesses will have a difficult time predicting the antitrust implications of their business decisions. Enforcement of state and federal antitrust laws will also be aided by a policy of uniform interpretation. Therefore we conclude Minnesota antitrust law should be interpreted consistently with federal court interpretations of the Sherman Act unless state law is clearly in conflict with federal law.

Id.

Having thoroughly [39] examined the status of federal antitrust law at the time the WVATA was enacted, of which the Legislature is presumed to have been aware, this Court finds that the Legislature intended to incorporate certain activities deemed by federal courts to be per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act into West Virginia antitrust law. Just as W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (a) is comparable to Section 1 of the Sherman Act, W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) is comparable to federal court decisions defining activities deemed to be per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. As such, we now hold that HN17[] consistent with those activities deemed by federal judicial interpretation to be per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, West Virginia Code § 47-18-3 (b) (1978) codifies comparable activities as per se violations of West Virginia antitrust law. To the extent W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (1978) utilizes terms which are deemed "terms of art" under federal antitrust law, the meanings attributed to such "terms of art" under federal antitrust law are incorporated into W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (1978) absent contrary statutory definitions set forth in the West Virginia Antitrust Act.

ii.

Construction of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) [40] in Harmony with Federal Antitrust law

Both W. Va. Code § 47-18-16 and this Court's decision in Graley indicate that HN18[] the WVATA should be construed liberally and in harmony with federal decisional law interpreting comparable federal antitrust law [380] [*616] provisions. Having found that W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) is comparable to Section 1 of the Sherman Act, we must now determine the extent to which this Court is bound to apply federal decisional law relative to per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act in determining the scope of activities constituting per se violations of the WVATA. HN19[] While we acknowledge that the Legislature may indicate its intention that a statutory enactment be harmonized with federal law, fundamental principles of separations of powers [10] preclude the Legislature from requiring the courts of this State to construe or interpret a statutory enactment in a particular manner. Article VIII, Section 1 of our Constitution vests the judicial power of the State "solely in a supreme court of appeals and in the circuit courts, and in such intermediate appellate courts and magistrate courts as shall be hereafter established by > (b) affecting, fixing, controlling, maintaining, limiting, or discontinuing the production, manufacture, mining, sale or supply of any commodity, or the sale or supply of any service, for the purpose or with the effect of affecting, fixing, controlling, or maintaining the market price, rate, or fee of the commodity or service.

---

The only differences between this statutory provision and W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b) (1) (A)-(B), are the inclusion of the phrase "in competition" in the introductory language and the inclusion of the term "affecting" in subdivisions (a) and (b).

[10] Article V, Section 1 of our Constitution provides, in relevant part:

> HN20[] The legislative, executive and judicial departments shall be separate and distinct, so that neither shall exercise the powers properly belonging to the either of the others; nor shall any person exercise the powers of more than one of them at the same time[.]

the legislature, and in the justices, judges and [41] magistrates of such courts." While the courts of this State may elect to "honor legislative enactments in aid of judicial power," we are "clearly not bound to do so." State ex rel. Quelch v. Daugherty, 172 W. Va. 422, 424, 306 S.E.2d 233, 235 (1983). The question therefore becomes, when should this Court depart from a direction [11] to look to federal law in interpreting or applying West Virginia law?

HN22[] When presented with a recommendation from the Legislature to look to federal law in interpreting a statute or with our own precedent looking to federal law for guidance on a particular issue, several factors should guide our determination as to whether we should follow the federal courts' direction or whether we should determine that our interpretation of West Virginia law should be unique. For this consideration, a comparison of the specific language of the federal and state provisions at issue must be our primary starting point. A lack of significant distinctive language between the state and federal law at issue should dissuade this Court from proceeding in a distinctive manner. Thus, where there is no significant distinction in the wording of the federal and state provisions, this court should be guided by federal decisions interpreting or applying the same unless a compelling reason [43] to depart from the federal guidance is demonstrated. Accordingly, the legislative histories of the specific provisions at issue are important factors for us to consider. For example, did our Legislature intend the West Virginia statute to correspond to federal law or to depart therefrom? Does the legislative enactment at issue contain terms of art or unique phrases which have gained accepted or uniform judicial interpretations or meanings? Are there differences in the extent and type of interests which the Federal and the West Virginia provisions are designed to protect? If so, a compelling reason to depart from federal precedent may arise.

Finding that the judges, lawyers, governmental actors and citizens of this State are entitled to guidance from this Court as to when courts should comply with or depart from a specific statutory direction from the Legislature to construe a particular statutory scheme in harmony with comparable federal statutes and judicial interpretations thereof, we now hold that HN23[] the following factors are relevant to such a determination: (1) similarity of language between the federal and West Virginia enactments; (2) similarities or distinctions between federal [44] and state precedent interpreting and/or applying the particular enactment; (3) whether the legislative [381] [*617] history of the West Virginia enactment evidenced an intent to follow federal law and precedent; (4) the use of terms of art or unique phrases which have gained accepted or uniform judicial interpretations or meanings; (5) the competing or similar interests the federal and state enactments were designed to protect; (6) whether harmonization of federal and state law will facilitate significant policy interests; and (7) such other factors as may serve as compelling considerations under the circumstances presented.

Applying these factors to the instant matter, we find no reason to depart from federal precedent when analyzing the viability of Appellants' claims. Appellants do not dispute that HN24[] W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (a) is comparable to federal antitrust statutes, specifically Section 1 of the Sherman Act and we have held herein that W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) is likewise comparable in light of the federal jurisprudence construing Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Our own lack of substantial precedent involving the WVATA favors looking to federal law for guidance in applying and construing these [45] comparable statutes. Further, the Legislature specifically evidenced an intent that the WVATA be harmonized to comparable federal antitrust law through its inclusion of W. Va. Code § 47-18-16 in the statutory scheme. Similarly, the Legislature utilized terms of art in this statutory scheme, terms which have gained wide-spread meaning and acceptance through the development of federal antitrust law. HN25[] Both the WVATA and Sherman Act appear designed to protect and promote a similar interest -- competition in the marketplace. While federal and state law may overlap, incidents may arise where state law would apply when federal law would not, such as where interstate commerce is not effected. Further, we find the policy reasons set forth by the court in Alpine Air, supra, for the harmonization of federal and state antitrust law to be particularly persuasive. Finally, Appellants have put forth no compelling argument which would persuade this Court to depart from the guidance provided by federal law and we have failed to discover such a reason on our own. Accordingly, we find that Appellants' claims should be analyzed under the guidance provided by federal law, including federal application of [46] per se antitrust rules.

[11] HN21[] Such direction may come from Legislative enactments or our own precedent. For example, in State v. Andrews, 91 W. Va. 720, 114 S.E. 257 (1922), this Court held "[t]he provisions of our constitution relating to unreasonable search and seizure and protecting one accused of a crime from being compelled to a be a witness against himself, being substantially the same as the corresponding provisions of the federal constitution and taken therefrom, should be given a construction [42] in harmony with the construction of federal provisions by the Supreme Court of the United States." Syl. Pt. 2, Andrews. See also, State v. Duvernoy, 156 W. Va. 578, 582, 195 S.E.2d 631, 634 (1973) ("this Court has traditionally construed Article III, Section 6 in harmony with the Fourth Amendment.")

B.

W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3

Prior to examining Appellants' individual claims to determine whether they qualify as per se violations of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b), we must briefly address Appellants' argument that a legislative rule, specifically W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3, designates another activity, "tying" [12], as a per se violation of West [382] [*618] Virginia antitrust law. Relying upon this Court's decision in West Virginia Health Care Cost Review Authority v. Boone Memorial Hospital, 196 W. Va. 326, 472 S.E.2d 411 (1996), Appellants argue that, as a legislative rule, W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3 has the force and effect of statutory law and, being enacted after W. Va. Code § 47-18-3, "prevails as the most recent expression of the legislative will" even if it is deemed to be in conflict with W. Va. Code § 47-18-3. We disagree with such an expansive interpretation of our decision in Boone Memorial.

Recently, this court reiterated that HN26[] a legislative rule can be deemed "unenforceable if the regulation was beyond the constitutional or statutory authority extended to the agency involved or if the rule is determined to be arbitrary or capricious." Swiger v. UGI/Amerigas, Inc., 216 W. Va. 756, 763, 613 S.E.2d 904, 911 (2005), citing Syl. Pt. 4, Appalachian Power Co. v. State Tax Department, 195 W. Va. 573, 466 S.E.2d 424 (1995). Similarly, we held in Syllabus Point 2 of Boone Memorial that: > cases have concluded that the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

---

[12] In Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984), abrogated in part by statute as recognized in Illinois Tool Works, Inc. v. Independent Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006) (Illinois Tool found statutory [47] changes necessitated conclusion that fact a tying product is patented does not support presumption of market power), the United States Supreme Court addressed the concept of "tying" under federal antitrust law in a case strikingly similar to the instant action as it involved a hospital's exclusive contract with an anesthesia provider. Therein the Supreme Court recognized that their:

Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12, 104 S. Ct. at 1558. The Supreme Court went on to note that tying arrangements are condemned "when the seller has some special ability -- usually called "market power" to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Further, "Per se condemnation-condemnation without inquiry into actual [48] market conditions-is only appropriate if the existence of forcing is probable. . . . as a threshold matter there must be a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation." Id. at 15-16, 104 S. Ct. at 1560. "Tying" arrangements are not condemned "unless a substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed thereby." Id. Finding the relevant market to be the geographical area and not the specific hospital, the Supreme Court upheld the contract against charges of antitrust violations.

In Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc.,448 F.2d 43 (9th Cir. 1971), the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals summarized the concept of "tying" under the Sherman Act as follows:

> In order to establish that there exists an unlawful tying arrangement plaintiffs must demonstrate First, that the scheme in question involves two distinct items and provides that one (the tying product) may not be obtained unless the other (the tied product) is also purchased. Second, that the tying product possesses sufficient economic power appreciably to restrain competition in the tied product market. Third, that a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce is affected by the arrangement.

Siegel, 448 F.2d at 47 [49] (internal citations omitted). The Ninth Circuit went on to note that "[u]nder the per se theory of illegality, plaintiffs are required to establish not only the existence of a tying arrangement but also that the tying product possesses sufficient economic power to appreciably restrain free competition in the tied product markets." Id. at 49.

> HN27[] Once a disputed regulation in legislatively approved, it has the force of a statute itself. Being an act of the West Virginia Legislature, it is entitled to more than mere deference; it is entitled to controlling weight. As authorized by legislation, a legislative rule should be ignored only if the agency has exceeded its constitutional or statutory authority [50] or is arbitrary or capricious.

Accordingly, HN28[] to the extent the agency has exceeded its constitutional or statutory authority in promulgating a legislatively approved rule or regulation, the legislative rule "should be ignored." Syl. Pt. 2, Boone Memorial. Thus, the first question which must be answered is what, if any, authority the Attorney General had to enact the legislative rule at issue herein, which Appellants argue deems "tying" to be a per se violation of West Virginia antitrust law.

The Attorney General's authority to enact rules and regulations applicable to West Virginia antitrust law is set forth in W. Va. Code § 47-18-20 (1978), which provides that HN29[] "[t]he attorney general may make and adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement and administration of this Article." Thus, we must consider whether the designation of "tying" as an "unlawful" activity in W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3 is necessary to the enforcement and administration of W. Va. Code §§ 47-18-3, 4, (the statutes cited within the rule itself); i.e., whether it clarifies or gives meaning to the specific statutory provisions or whether it conflicts with them.

In Repass v. Workers' Compensation Division, 212 W. Va. 86, 569 S.E.2d 162 (2002), [51] this Court addressed a challenge to a rule[13] arguably at odds with our workers' compensation statutes. In Repass we explained:

> HN30[] There is no question that when the rules of an agency come into conflict with a statute that the statute must control:
>
> > Any rules or regulations drafted by an agency must faithfully reflect the intention of the Legislature, as expressed in the controlling legislation. Where a statute contains clear and unambiguous [383] [*619] language, an agency's rules or regulations must give that language the same clear and unambiguous force and effect that the language commands in the statute.
>
> Or in other words: "Although an agency may have power to promulgate rules and regulations, the rules and regulations must be reasonable and conform to the laws enacted by the Legislature."
> The power of the Legislature is paramount when a court is faced with a conflict between a statute and a rule:
>
> > It is fundamental law that Legislature [sic] may delegate to an administrative agency power to make rules and regulations to implement the statute under which the agency functions. In exercising that power, however, an administrative agency may not issue a regulation which is inconsistent with, or which alters [52] or limits its statutory authority.
>
> HN31[] Though the courts have the power to harmonize a rule with an ambiguous statute, we must follow the will of the Legislature when expressed with clarity. HN32[] "The judiciary is the final authority on issues of statutory construction, and we are obliged to reject administrative constructions that are contrary to the clear language of a statute."
> . . .in those instances where an agency rule addresses some issue that is already the subject of Legislative action, "[i]f the intention of the Legislature is clear, that is the end of the matter, and the agency's position only can be upheld if it conforms to the Legislature's intent."

Repass, 212 W. Va. at 102-03, 569 S.E.2d at 178-9 (internal citations and footnote omitted)

[13] In footnote 7 of the majority opinion in Repass, the Court acknowledged that there was a dispute as to whether or not the rule at issue was a legislative rule. The Court noted, however, that HN33[] even if the rule had the "authority of a legislative rule, the deference we owe does not change. Even when considering a legislative rule, under Appalachian Power Co. v. State Tax Department of West Virginia, 195 W. Va. 573, 466 S.E.2d 424 (1995), and its [53] progeny, when a statute is clear, we owe no deference to the agency's rule."

HN34[] The clarity of legislative intent when enacting a statute is a primary consideration in determining the significance with attaches to a legislative rule promulgated thereunder. This Court has recognized that it must reject administrative "rules that are contrary to legislative intent." Boone Memorial, 196 W. Va. at 335, 472 S.E.2d at 420. In Boone Memorial, this Court explained the initial analysis to be undertaken, stating:

> HN35[] Judicial review of an agency's legislative rule and the construction of a statute that it administers involves two separate but interrelated questions, only the second of which furnishes an occasion for deference. In deciding whether an administrative agency's position should be sustained, a reviewing court applies the standards set out by the United States Supreme Court in Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 104 S. Ct. 2778, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1984). The court first must ask whether the Legislature has directly spoken to the precise question at issue. If the intention of the Legislature is clear, that is the end of the matter, and the agency's position [54] only can be upheld if it conforms to the Legislature's intent. No deference is due the agency's interpretation at this stage. Syllabus Point 3, Appalachian Power Co. v. State Tax Department of West Virginia, 195 W. Va. 573, 466 S.E.2d 424 (1995).

Syl. Pt. 4, Boone Memorial. In Boone Memorial, this Court stated that it will "defer to an agency's reasonable interpretation of a statute it administers unless the intent of the statute is clear. In other words, HN36[] we are obligated to defer to an agency's view only when there is a statutory gap or ambiguity." Boone Memorial, 196 W. Va. at 337, 472 S.E.2d at 422. However, "if the statute is silent or ambiguous with respect to the specific issue, the question for the court is whether the agency's answer is based upon a permissible construction of the statute." Id., quoting, Syl. Pt. 4, Appalachian Power.

As noted above, the Legislature has specifically designated certain activities as "unlawful" restraints of trade under our antitrust laws in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b). [14] Those activities include price-fixing, market allocation, bid-fixing and exclusive dealing as activities which have been defined under federal antitrust law as per se restraints [55] of trade. HN37[] Tying, however, is a concept distinct from those activities set forth in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b). By specifically setting forth [384] [*620] in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) those activities it intended to constitute per se restraints of trade, the Legislature triggered use of a fundamental principle of statutory construction, being expressio unius est exclusio alterius. See, Syl. Pt. 3, Manchin v. Dunfee, 174 W. Va. 532, 327 S.E.2d 710 (1984) (HN38[] "In the interpretation of statutory provisions, the familiar maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, the express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another, applies"). HN39[] Absent ambiguity in the enabling statute or the need to clarify what activities constitute the per se violations set forth in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b), a legislative rule may not establish another category of per se violations. The legislative rule relied upon by Appellants, W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3, may not reasonably be seen as an attempt to give meaning or clarify conduct satisfying the requirements of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b). [15] As such, Appellants' "tying" allegations are insufficient as a matter of law to establish a violation of our antitrust laws because "tying" [56] is not a statutory per se violation. [16]

C.

Propriety of Partial Summary Judgment

Having found that Appellants' allegations of per se restraints of trade must be analyzed in reference to definitions and tests developed under federal law, the Circuit Court of Monongalia County's order granting Appellees' motion

---

[14] We limit our analysis of W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3 herein to its relationship with W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 as W. Va. Code § 47-18-4 (1978) is not at issue in this litigation.

[15] If W. Va. C.S.R. § 142-15-3 could reasonably be deemed an attempt to clarify ambiguity in W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b), then ordinary canons of statutory construction may be used to attempt to resolve any apparent conflict between the legislative rule and the initial statute. See Syl. Pt. 3, Boone Memorial.

[16] Even if this Court were to have recognized "tying" as a type of per se violation of our antitrust law, the allegations herein are insufficient to trigger such per se status as that status has developed under federal law. See note 12, supra.

for partial summary judgment is easily affirmed. Relying exclusively upon their position that federal antitrust law is irrelevant to their claims, Appellants have not explained [57] how their claims constitute price-fixing, market allocation and refusal to deal. However, as we have found, federal law is relevant to give meaning to our antitrust law.

According to Appellants, the contracts between Monongalia General, PAS and BAC constitute per se violations of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b)(1)(A) because they contain terms setting prices and a market analysis is not required. The price provisions of the contracts at issue, quoted above, do not set forth specific prices, but simply required PAS and BAC to set "reasonable" prices in light of the prevailing and competitive market rates. Illegal price-fixing requires more. HN40[] It requires a power to control the market and fix arbitrary prices, including an interference with the setting of prices by market forces. See, Socony-Vacuum, 310 U.S. at 223, 60 S. Ct. at 844; Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. at 345, 102 S. Ct. at 2473; and Container Corp., 393 U.S. at 337, 89 S. Ct. at 512. Simply requiring a contractor to set reasonable prices in accordance with prevailing market rates is insufficient as a matter of West Virginia law to establish a violation of our antitrust law. Accordingly, to the extent Appellants rely upon [58] a theory of per se price-fixing to establish their claims, their claims were properly dismissed by the circuit court.

Similarly, Appellants' market allocation theory fails as a matter of law. Appellants argue that the relevant market is the hospital itself. According to Appellants, the contracts allocate the provision of anesthesia services at the hospital, thus constituting per se violations of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b)(1)(C). However, such a narrow definition of "market" was rejected by the United States Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish, supra. Additionally, HN41[] federal antitrust law clearly defines illegal market allocation as the division of territories by competitors at the same level of the market structure to minimize competition. See Topco, 405 U.S. at 608, 92 S. Ct. at 1133. Because there is no agreement by competitors to allocate a market, Appellants' claims based upon a theory of market allocation fail as a matter of law.

[385] [*621] Finally, because their price-fixing and market allocation claims fail as a matter of law, Appellants' refusal to deal claims likewise also fail. HN42[] An illegal refusal to deal under W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) (3), is statutorily defined by reference to activities [59] violating W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) (1) or (2). Because we have found that Appellants' claims under W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b)(1) fail as a matter of law and that no claims have been properly asserted under W. Va. Code § 47-18-3(b)(2), Appellants' claims for violation of W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b)(3) must also fail. Accordingly, summary judgment as to all of Appellants' antitrust claims was appropriate.

IV.

CONCLUSION

The Circuit Court of Monongalia County did not err in looking to federal law to give meaning to the state antitrust claims asserted by Appellants against Monongalia General, PAS and BAC herein. W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (b) sets forth activities constituting per se violations of our antitrust law which are comparable to those activities deemed to be per se violations of federal antitrust statutes, thereby triggering an analysis of the same in harmony with federal law. The allegations asserted in the instant action do not meet the legal threshold of per se antitrust violations. Appellants admit that their position on appeal is founded solely upon this Court's determination that their claims constitute per se violations of West Virginia law. They do not. Accordingly, we affirm the [60] Circuit Court of Monongalia County's grant of partial summary judgment as to all antitrust claims asserted in this civil action.

Affirmed.

Dissent by: Starcher

Dissent

Starcher, J., dissenting:

The main issue in this case was whether the circuit court was bound to apply federal antitrust precedents to the appellants' case, when the circuit court was interpreting West Virginia antitrust statutes that were markedly different from the federal antitrust statutes.

I dissent because I think the question answers itself: because West Virginia's statutes are different from the federal statutes, then the Legislature must have intended for our statutes to have a different interpretation and reach than the federal statutes. That means that federal antitrust cases shouldn't be relied upon as binding authority by West Virginia courts.

The majority opinion holds otherwise, and in its interpretation of the West Virginia antitrust statutes at issue, almost exclusively parrots federal cases interpreting federal antitrust law. I believe this was a mistake, for several reasons.

First, this Court is duty-bound to operate independently of federal courts, and should not view federal court decisions as a sacred script to be followed [61] by faith and not reason. We made clear in Syllabus Point 3 of Brooks v. Isinghood, 213 W.Va. 675, 584 S.E.2d 531 (2003) that "[a] federal case interpreting a federal counterpart to a West Virginia rule . . . may be persuasive, but it is not binding or controlling." The Court in Brooks - interpreting a state Rule of Civil Procedure that paralleled the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure - unanimously reasoned that the Court should avoid having our legal analysis of West Virginia law "amount to nothing more than Pavlovian responses to federal decisional law." 213 W.Va. at 675, 584 S.E.2d at 531. Likewise, in Stone v. St. Joseph's Hosp. of Parkersburg, 208 W.Va. 91, 538 S.E.2d 389 (2000), this Court recognized that the West Virginia Human Rights Act mirrored federal civil rights statutes in many ways. Still, the Court went on to find that the Act, "as created by our Legislature and as applied by our courts and administrative agencies, represents an independent approach to the law of disability discrimination that is not mechanically tied to federal disability discrimination jurisprudence." 208 W.Va. at 106, 538 S.E.2d at 404.

Second, W.Va. Code, 47-18-16 [1978] says that the West Virginia Antitrust Act is to be (a) "construed liberally" and (b) construed "in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes." The Legislature didn't say West Virginia courts were supposed to mimic [62] federal courts. West Virginia [386] [*622] courts are to harmonize their rulings with federal rulings when the case involves a "comparable federal antitrust statute[]," but do so in a way that liberally and generously accomplishes the remedial goals of the West Virginia Antitrust Act. And if there is no comparable federal antitrust statute, then courts are to construe the Act "liberally." Period. This Court is under no duty to apply federal case law in determining the scope of the Act where the federal and state statutes are not "comparable." See State ex rel. Palumbo v. Graley's Body Shop, Inc., 188 W.Va. 501, 507 n.1, 425 S.E.2d 177, 183 n.1 (1992) ("[A] violation of West Virginia's Antitrust Act may not necessarily give rise to a violation of the federal antitrust laws.")

The majority opinion, however, resigns this Court to being a sock puppet for the federal judiciary, regardless of whether the federal antitrust statute is comparable to West Virginia's antitrust statute.

The federal antitrust statute, the Sherman Act, is written in very general terms. The federal statute declares broadly that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the various States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

The first half [63] of the West Virginia Antitrust Act mirrors the federal statute. W.Va. Code, 47-18-3(a) [1978] states that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this State shall be unlawful." Clearly, without question, W.Va. Code, 47-18-16 is a legislative mandate that W.Va. Code, 47-18-3(a) be interpreted in harmony with federal cases interpreting 15 U.S.C. § 1, because the two statutes are not just "comparable," they are virtually identical.

But the second half of the West Virginia Antitrust Act is found nowhere in the federal antitrust statutes. W.Va. Code, 47-18-3(b) lays out various actions that are defined as per se restraints on trade or commerce. Further, other per se violations are listed in legislative rules enacted by the Legislature, violations which have no corollary in federal antitrust statutes. See 142 C.S.R. § 15.3.1. These provisions were designed by the Legislature to make West Virginia's antitrust law different from federal law. Different means that the statutes are not "comparable."

The majority opinion, however, ignores the mandate of W.Va. Code, 47-18-16, which talks only about "comparable federal antitrust statutes." The majority opinion hinges upon the fact that there was "federal antitrust law," in the form of federal court [64] decisions interpreting the Sherman Act, at the time the Legislature enacted W.Va. Code, 47-18-3(b). Again and again, the majority opinion talks about "the development of law . . . under Section 1 of the Sherman Act," the "status of federal law at the time the WVATA was enacted," and "the status of federal antitrust law at the time [the Legislature] enacted the WVATA."

The end result is that the majority opinion re-interprets the phrase "federal antitrust statutes" in W.Va. Code, 47-18-16 to mean "federal court cases interpreting federal antitrust statutes."

This plainly was not what the Legislature meant when it adopted the West Virginia Antitrust Act. The Legislature created per se categories of restraints of trade and commerce in W.Va. Code, 47-18-3(b), categories that are not found in any federal statute. Accordingly, these categories should be liberally construed to accomplish the goal of free trade and commerce in West Virginia. There might be a federal court case or two that could offer persuasive reasoning to assist in interpreting W.Va. Code, 47-18-3(b). Instead, the majority opinion has decided not to interpret West Virginia's law, but rather has chosen to mechanically tie up and cripple the effect of the West Virginia Antitrust Act with federal decisional jurisprudence. [65]

I therefore respectfully dissent.

Belton v. Comcast Cable Holdings, LLC

Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, Division One

June 8, 2007, Filed

A112591

Reporter

151 Cal. App. 4th 1224 *; 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 631 ; 2007 Cal. App. LEXIS 947 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,765

THOMAS BELTON et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. COMCAST CABLE HOLDINGS, LLC, Defendant and Respondent.

Prior History: [1] Superior Court of Sonoma County, No. 234091, Elaine T. Rushing, Judge.

Core Terms

music, cable, tier, subscribers, trap, undisputed, cable service, package, plaintiffs', consumer, customer, unfair, blind, unfair competition, cause of action, television, signal, tied product, reasons, carte, radio, technical reason, Sherman Act, unconscionable, matter of law, billing, prong, summary adjudication, conscience, cards

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

On review of a summary judgment or summary adjudication favoring the defendant, an appellate court looks at the record anew to determine whether the defendant conclusively has shown that (1) one or more elements of a cause of action cannot be established, or (2) there is a complete defense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN2[] State Regulation, Claims

Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200, establishes three varieties of unfair competition--acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent. In other words, a practice is prohibited as unfair or deceptive even if not unlawful and vice versa. It governs anti-competitive business practices as well as injuries to consumers, and has as a major purpose the preservation of fair business competition. By proscribing any unlawful business practice, § 17200 borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN3[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

Both the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and California's Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, prohibit tying arrangements that operate as unreasonable restraints on trade. A tying arrangement under antitrust laws exists when a party agrees to sell one product (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different product (the tied product), thereby curbing competition in the sale of the tied product. Assuming that separate products in separate markets exist, a plaintiff claiming an illegal tying arrangement must plead: (1) a tying agreement, arrangement or condition existed whereby the sale of the tying product was linked to the sale of the tied product; (2) the party had sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce the purchase of the tied product; and (3) a substantial amount of sale was effected in the tied product. The latter element is sometimes referred to as tied market foreclosure. Under both the Cartwright Act and the Sherman Act, in the absence of evidence of some tied market foreclosure or anticompetitive impact in the tied product market, the plaintiff cannot establish an unlawful tying claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN4[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

The mere sale of products packaged together, or refusal to sell such products separately, does not constitute unlawful tying. Not every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain competition. If each of the products may be purchased separately in a competitive market, one seller's decision to sell the two in a single package imposes no unreasonable restraint on either market, particularly if competing suppliers are free to sell either the entire package or its several parts. Buyers often find package sales attractive; a seller's decision to offer such packages can merely be an attempt to compete effectively--conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Many tying arrangements, even those involving patents and requirements ties, are fully consistent with a free, competitive market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN5[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

When a purchaser is forced to buy a product he or she would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed. Without an adverse impact on competition in the tied product market, there is no harm to competition, and no unlawful tying.

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > Rate Regulation

HN6[] Cable Systems, Rate Regulation

47 U.S.C. § 543(f) prohibits a cable operator from charging a subscriber for any service or equipment that the subscriber has not affirmatively requested by name. For purposes of the subsection, a subscriber's failure to refuse a cable operator's proposal to provide such service or equipment shall not be deemed to be an affirmative request for such service or equipment. 47 U.S.C. § 543(f). The section does not, by its terms, prohibit the practice of packaging cable services in tiers. In fact, the practice of packaging cable services in tiers was recognized and addressed by the federal regulations concerning negative option billing, specifying that in some circumstances a cable provider can drop particular channels from a package and then bill for them separately. Instead, § 543(f) prohibits the practice of providing a service the customer had not affirmatively requested by name, and then charging for it if the customer fails to exercise the negative option of canceling or opting out of the proffered service.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Facilities > Defenses

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Facilities > Scope

HN7[] Public Facilities, Defenses

California's Unruh Act, Civ. Code, § 51, secures equal access to public accommodations and prohibits discrimination by business establishments. It, however, explicitly exempts standards that are applicable alike to persons of every sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, or blindness or other physical disability.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Facilities > Defenses

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Facilities > Scope

HN8[] Public Facilities, Defenses

An adverse impact claim challenges a standard that is applicable alike to all such persons based on the premise that, notwithstanding its universal applicability, its actual impact demands scrutiny. If the legislature had intended to include adverse impact claims, it would have omitted or at least qualified the language in Civ. Code, § 51, of California's Unruh Act that expressly exempts standards that are applicable alike to persons of every sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, or blindness or other physical disability. A policy that is neutral on its face is not actionable, even if it has a disproportionate impact on a protected class.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Protection of Disabled Persons > Americans With Disabilities Act > Scope

HN9[] Protection of Disabled Persons, Americans With Disabilities Act

Civ. Code, § 51, subd. (f), provides that a violation of the right of any individual under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA) shall also constitute a violation of § 51. If a California Unruh Act claim is based upon § 51, subd. (f), the plaintiff need not prove discriminatory intent when such intent is not required to prove the claim under the ADA, because § 51, subd. (f), essentially incorporates the ADA. To state a claim under the ADA, plaintiffs must show that they have been denied access to a place of public accommodation and, as a matter of law, cable services are not such a place.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN10[] State Regulation, Claims

In the context of an unfair competition claim by a competitor, "unfair" has been defined as conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. Any finding of unfairness to competitors under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200, are required to be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition. The question of whether this definition should also apply in the context of unfair competition claims brought by consumers has been left open. The allegedly unfair business practice is required to be tethered to a legislatively declared policy or have some actual or threatened impact on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN11[] State Regulation, Claims

The purpose of federal and state antitrust laws is to protect and promote competition for the benefit of consumers. Antitrust laws are designed to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade, meaning conduct that unreasonably impairs competition and harms consumers. If the same conduct is alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an unfair business act or practice for the same reason--because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers--the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not unfair toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct. In the absence of some restraint upon competition, the mere practice of packaging services together is not inherently anticompetitive or harmful to consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN12[] State Regulation, Claims

To establish an unfair competition claim under the fraudulent prong of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200, plaintiffs must show that these representations were false or were likely to have misled reasonable consumers.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Unconscionability > General Overview

HN13[] Defenses, Unconscionability

A court may deem a contract provision unconscionable, and therefore unenforceable, only if it is both procedurally and substantively unconscionable. The procedural element of unconscionability focuses on two factors: oppression and surprise. Oppression arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice. Surprise involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-upon terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms. The substantive element of unconscionability focuses on the actual terms of the agreement and evaluates whether they create overly harsh or one-sided results as to shock the conscience. The availability of alternative sources from which to obtain the desired service defeats any claim of oppression, because the consumer has a meaningful choice. Moreover, when the challenged term is in a contract concerning a nonessential recreational activity, the consumer always has the option of simply foregoing the activity.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Unconscionability > General Overview

HN14[] Defenses, Unconscionability

A provision is substantively unconscionable if it involves contract terms that are so one-sided as to shock the conscience, or that impose harsh or oppressive terms. The phrases “harsh,” “oppressive,” and “shock the conscience” are not synonymous with “unreasonable.” Basing an unconscionability determination on the reasonableness of a contract provision would inject an inappropriate level of judicial subjectivity into the analysis.

The question instead is whether the terms of the agreement are such an extreme departure from common business practice, and so one-sided as to shock the conscience.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Unconscionability > General Overview

HN15[] Defenses, Unconscionability

It is not uncommon for businesses to package discrete goods or services together, nor is the practice necessarily undesirable from the standpoint of the consumer. To hold that it is unconscionable for a business that has the technical and legal capability to offer a service or good separately, to instead offer it only as part of a package, would be an unwise excursion into an area of economic policy that is better left to the legislature.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

In an action filed by two cable service subscribers, one of whom was blind, the trial court entered judgment in favor of a cable service provider after granting the provider's motion for summary adjudication with respect to the subscribers' causes of action for unfair competition (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200) and violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code, § 51). The trial court also dismissed, pursuant to Civ. Code, § 1781, subd. (c)(3), the remaining cause of action alleging violation of the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA) (Civ. Code, § 1750 et seq.). The amended complaint alleged that the provider's practice of requiring its subscribers to purchase the basic cable tier, which included television programming they did not want, in order to obtain the FM or music cable service that was also included, violated many predicate statutes. (Superior Court of Sonoma County, No. 234091, Elaine M. Rushing, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment. The court found that the provider's practice was not an unlawful tying arrangement. Because the undisputed facts established that neither subscriber was provided or billed for a service he did not order by name, the subscribers could not, as a matter of law, establish that the provider's practice constituted negative option billing in violation of 47 U.S.C. § 543(f). It was undisputed that the blind subscriber was treated exactly the same as sighted subscribers and that the provider applied its policy of requiring its customers to subscribe to the basic cable tier of video service in order to receive music service to all residential subscribers regardless of disability. The contention that the provider's policy, despite its equal application to all subscribers, had an adverse impact on blind persons failed, as a matter of law, to state a violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act. The subscribers' claims that the trial court erred in sustaining the provider's objection to certain evidence they offered and in overruling their [*1225] objections to some of the provider's assertions of undisputed facts failed either on the merits or because any error was harmless. The subscribers also failed to show a violation of the CLRA. Listening to music or FM radio was a nonessential recreational activity that the subscribers could simply have forgone if they disliked the requirement that they purchase the basic cable tier. Moreover, the subscribers had other means of listening to music or the radio, some of which were available for free. Therefore, the provider's requirement that subscribers purchase the basic tier in order to receive FM or music service was not oppressive. The requirement that the subscribers purchase the basic cable tier did not "shock the conscience" simply because it included television programming they did not want. (Opinion by Stein, J., with Marchiano, P. J., and Swager, J., concurring.)

Headnotes

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS HEADNOTES

CA(1)[] (1)

Unfair Competition § 1—Anticompetitive Business Practices—Violations of Other Laws.

Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200, establishes three varieties of unfair competition—acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent. A practice is prohibited as unfair or deceptive even if not unlawful, and vice versa. The law governs anticompetitive business practices as well as injuries to consumers, and has as a major purpose the preservation of fair business competition. By proscribing any unlawful business practice, § 17200 borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.

CA(2)[] (2)

Unfair Competition § 8—Cable Provider's Practice of Packaging Services in Tiers—Illegality, Unfairness, or Fraud.

Under the unlawful prong of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200, the undisputed facts established that a cable service provider's practice of requiring its subscribers to purchase the basic cable tier, which included television programming they did not want, in order to obtain the FM or music cable service that was also included did not violate any predicate statutes and therefore was not illegal or unfair. Furthermore, the provider's practice was not fraudulent or deceptive.

[13 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Equity, § 123; 4 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Sales, § 296; 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Contracts, § 606.]

CA(3)[] (3)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 7.4—Sherman and Cartwright Acts—Tying Arrangements—Elements of Claim—Adverse Impact.

Both the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) and the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720) prohibit tying arrangements that operate as [*1226] unreasonable restraints on trade. A tying arrangement under antitrust laws exists when a party agrees to sell one product (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different product (the tied product), thereby curbing competition in the sale of the tied product. Assuming that separate products in separate markets exist, a plaintiff claiming an illegal tying arrangement must plead: (1) a tying agreement, arrangement or condition existed whereby the sale of the tying product was linked to the sale of the tied product; (2) the party had sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce the purchase of the tied product; and (3) a substantial amount of sale was effected in the tied product. The latter element is sometimes referred to as tied market foreclosure. Under both the Cartwright Act and the Sherman Act, in the absence of evidence of some tied market foreclosure or anticompetitive impact in the tied product market, the plaintiff cannot establish an unlawful tying claim. When a purchaser is forced to buy a product he or she would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed. Without an adverse impact on competition in the tied product market, there is no harm to competition, and no unlawful tying.

CA(4)[] (4)

Telecommunications § 18—Cable Television—Packaging of Services in Tiers—Charges to Subscribers.

47 U.S.C. § 543(f) prohibits a cable operator from charging a subscriber for any service or equipment that the subscriber has not affirmatively requested by name. For purposes of the subsection, a subscriber's failure to refuse a cable operator's proposal to provide such service or equipment shall not be deemed to be an affirmative request for such service or equipment (47 U.S.C. § 543(f)). The section does not, by its terms, prohibit the practice of packaging cable services in tiers. In fact, the practice of packaging cable services in tiers was recognized and addressed by the federal regulations concerning negative option billing, specifying that in some circumstances a cable provider can drop particular channels from a package and then bill for them separately. Instead, § 543(f) prohibits the practice of providing a service the customer had not affirmatively requested by name, and then charging for it if the customer fails to exercise the negative option of canceling or opting out of the proffered service.

CA(5)[] (5)

Civil Rights § 4—Public Accommodations and Services—Unruh Civil Rights Act—Adverse Impact Claims.

The Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code, § 51) secures equal access to public accommodations and prohibits discrimination by business establishments. It, however, explicitly exempts standards that are applicable alike to persons of every sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, or blindness or other [*1227] physical disability. An adverse impact claim challenges a standard that is applicable alike to all such persons based on the premise that, notwithstanding its universal applicability, its actual impact demands scrutiny. If the Legislature had intended to include adverse impact claims, it would have omitted or at least qualified the language in § 51 that expressly exempts standards that are applicable alike to persons of every sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, or blindness or other physical disability. A policy that is neutral on its face is not actionable, even if it has a disproportionate impact on a protected class.

CA(6)[] (6)

Civil Rights § 4—Public Accommodations and Services—American With Disabilities Act As Violation of Unruh Civil Rights Act—Elements of Claim.

Civ. Code, § 51, subd. (f), provides that a violation of the right of any individual under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA) shall also constitute a violation of § 51. If an Unruh Civil Rights Act claim is based upon § 51, subd. (f), the plaintiff need not prove discriminatory intent when such intent is not required to prove the claim under the ADA, because § 51, subd. (f), essentially incorporates the ADA. To state a claim under the ADA, plaintiffs must show that they have been denied access to a place of public accommodation and, as a matter of law, cable services are not such a place.

CA(7)[] (7)

Unfair Competition § 1—Prongs—Unfairness—Fraudulent Representations.

In the context of an unfair competition claim by a competitor, "unfair" has been defined as conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. Any finding of unfairness to competitors under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200, are required to be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition. The question of whether this definition should also apply in the context of unfair competition claims brought by consumers has been left open. The allegedly unfair business practice is required to be tethered to a legislatively declared policy or have some actual or threatened impact on competition. To establish an unfair competition claim under the fraudulent prong of § 17200, plaintiffs must show that these representations were false or were likely to have misled reasonable consumers.

CA(8)[] (8)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 1—Purpose of Federal and State Laws—Packaging of Services Together.

The purpose of federal and state antitrust laws is to protect and promote competition for the benefit of consumers. Antitrust laws are designed to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade, meaning conduct that unreasonably impairs competition and harms consumers. If the same conduct is [*1228] alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an unfair business act or practice for the same reason—because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers—the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not unfair toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct. In the absence of some restraint upon competition, the mere practice of packaging services together is not inherently anticompetitive or harmful to consumers.

CA(9)[] (9)

Contracts § 13.4—Legality—Enforceability—Unconscionable Contracts—Elements.

A court may deem a contract provision unconscionable, and therefore unenforceable, only if it is both procedurally and substantively unconscionable. The procedural element of unconscionability focuses on two factors: oppression and surprise. Oppression arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice. Surprise involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-upon terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms. The substantive element of unconscionability focuses on the actual terms of the agreement and evaluates whether they create overly harsh or one-sided results as to shock the conscience. The availability of alternative sources from which to obtain the desired service defeats any claim of oppression, because the consumer has a meaningful choice. Moreover, when the challenged term is in a contract concerning a nonessential recreational activity, the consumer always has the option of simply forgoing the activity. A provision is substantively unconscionable if it involves contract terms that are so one-sided as to shock the conscience, or that impose harsh or oppressive terms. The terms “harsh,” “oppressive,” and “shock the conscience” are not synonymous with “unreasonable.” Basing an unconscionability determination on the reasonableness of a contract provision would inject an inappropriate level of judicial subjectivity into the analysis. The question instead is whether the terms of the agreement are such an extreme departure from common business practice, and so one-sided as to shock the conscience.

CA(10)[] (10)

Contracts § 13.4—Legality—Enforceability—Unconscionable Contracts—Packaging of Goods or Services Together.

It is not uncommon for businesses to package discrete goods or services together, nor is the practice necessarily undesirable from the standpoint of the consumer. To hold that it is unconscionable for a business that has the technical and legal capability to offer a service or good separately, to instead offer it only as part of a package, would be an unwise excursion into an area of economic policy that is better left to the Legislature.

[*1229]

Counsel: Norbert C. Babin and Michael J. Langston for Plaintiffs and Appellants.

Coblentz, Patch, Duffy & Bass, Richard R. Patch, Virginia A. Crisp and Susan K. Jamison for Defendant and Respondent.

Judges: Stein, J., with Marchiano, P. J., and Swager, J., concurring.

Opinion by: Stein

Opinion

[636] STEIN, J.—Thomas Belton and Larry Hall (hereafter plaintiffs) are subscribers to cable service provided by Comcast Cable Holdings, LLC (Comcast). They appeal from a judgment entered in Comcast's favor after the court granted Comcast's motion for summary adjudication with respect to plaintiffs' causes of action for unfair competition (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200) and violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code, § 51; the Act). The court also dismissed, pursuant to Civil Code section 1781, subdivision (c)(3), the remaining cause of action alleging violation of the Consumers Legal Remedies Act, Civil Code section 1750 et seq. (CLRA).

We shall affirm the judgment.

FACTS

The amended complaint alleged that plaintiffs are residents of Sonoma County and subscribers to Comcast cable services. Larry Hall is legally blind. All of the causes of action were premised upon the common allegation [2] that Comcast offered FM or music services to Sonoma County residents only as a part of a basic cable tier package that included television cable service. Plaintiffs alleged that this practice forced them to purchase television cable services that they did not want because they had no other practicable means of [637] obtaining access to the FM or music services. With respect to Hall, the complaint also alleged Comcast's practice was discriminatory because Hall was blind and could not use the television cable service. Plaintiffs further alleged that Comcast expressly or impliedly falsely represented to the public that it was "technologically or legally necessary" to subscribe to the basic cable tier "in order to receive the FM/music service." Finally, they alleged that Comcast's advertisements did not "conspicuously disclose the actual price of the FM and/or music services."

After deposing plaintiffs, Comcast moved for summary adjudication of the first cause of action for unfair competition (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200), and the third cause of action for a violation of the Act. Comcast also filed a [*1230] motion, pursuant to Civil Code section 1781, subdivision (c)(3), to dismiss the remaining [3] cause of action alleging violation of the CLRA.

As relevant to the issues on appeal, the motions were based upon the following undisputed facts:

When Mr. Belton subscribed, he was informed that a subscription to the basic cable tier, which included television service, was required to receive the FM or music service that was also included in that tier. Belton later asked a Comcast customer service representative whether he could get FM service only, and was told he could not. He did not ask why he had to purchase the basic cable tier because he had asked the same question of several of Comcast's predecessors, and he was always told that it was "technical." Mr. Belton did not want television cable service. He subscribed to it only in order to get the audio. Although Mr. Belton protested the unavailability of FM or music services á la carte, [1] he did ask Comcast to provide the basic cable tier of service, and he has never been billed for a service he did not request.

When Mr. Hall subscribed to Comcast services, [4] he was informed and understood that he had to subscribe to basic cable programming in order to get the audio service that he wanted. [2] Approximately a year after Mr. Hall subscribed to Comcast services, he twice inquired about the availability of the FM audio service á la carte. He informed the representative that he was blind, and that was why he was making the request. He initially testified that he was told Comcast did not have the technology to do that. Yet, later in the deposition he stated he was informed that it was not “possible” to get audio only, but could not recall whether the representative said it was technically not possible. Hall testified Comcast treated him the same as their sighted subscribers. It was also undisputed that Comcast applies its policy of requiring its customers to subscribe to the basic cable tier of service in order to receive FM or music service to all residential subscribers. Hall subscribed to a premium cable package, and placed an order to add a digital video and audio package. He, like Belton, did not want the television service included in the package. Both plaintiffs admitted that they “understood basic cable is required to receive music service.” [5]

[1] For convenience we adopt the parties' use of the phrase "á la carte" to describe the unbundling of the services included in a tier of cable service, and offering them separately.

[2] Plaintiffs cited no evidence to dispute the asserted fact that "Hall … was informed that a subscription to basic cable programming was required to receive cable music service." Instead they objected only that Comcast "misquoted" his testimony because Hall's testimony referred to "certain video services" not to "basic cable." The court overruled this objection.

[638] Both Hall and Belton could obtain FM or music service by listening to remote stations live over the Internet, and they both had computers and [*1231] Internet service. [3] It was undisputed that DIRECTV, a satellite service, also offered digital quality music. Both plaintiffs could also receive a number of FM stations on the radio at home. [4]

With respect to their allegation of misrepresentations or false advertising, both plaintiffs admitted they had not seen any false written statements from Comcast suggesting that music service was offered á la carte. It was also undisputed that the rate cards attached to the complaint did not contain any representations that legal or technical reasons prevented Comcast from offering FM or music service separately from the rest of the basic cable package. Plaintiffs further admitted that the cards stated either that basic cable is required to receive any other services, or that basic service was the minimum level of cable service that could be purchased. They also admitted that all of the rate cards stated the correct price for basic cable service, which included FM service. [5]

With respect to plaintiffs' assertion that representatives of Comcast had orally represented to them there were technical reasons why they could not get FM or music service á la carte, Comcast offered the declarations of James Bordessa, its construction manager, and Shirley I. Gulbransen, its regional vice-president. Bordessa declared that Comcast's basic television service was the service automatically provided when cable service is installed. The signal for all other services must be either “trapped,” i.e., blocked by a physical device installed at the curb, or electronically “scrambled,” for those customers who do not order and pay for them. To receive a trapped service the physical trap is removed by the installer. To receive a scrambled service the customer must obtain and hook up a converter box that “unscrambles the signal.” In order to provide music service without the basic television service, it would be necessary either [8] to install a trap that blocks the basic television signal but allows the music signal through, or to scramble the basic signal. Comcast had not designed or manufactured a trap for, and did not scramble, the basic signal so that it could offer “stand-alone” music service, [*1232] for several reasons. The same expense of installation, customer service, and other costs would still exist whether the customer received the basic cable package or music service alone. Therefore provision of music service alone would not be profitable unless priced at a level close to that charged for the basic cable service package. At the same time, because Comcast also faced extensive competition from other providers [639] of music service, such as local radio stations, Internet-based radio services, and satellite entertainment providers, there was a significant risk that the demand for such “stand-alone” music service would not be high enough to allow it to recoup its “roll-out” costs and the administrative and infrastructure expenses it would incur. Also, scrambling or trapping posed a significant risk of theft of service because a knowledgeable customer can remove the trap, or obtain boxes that will unscramble [9] the signal.

---

[3] Although plaintiffs stated that they disputed this fact, they offered no evidence to dispute the availability of FM stations over the Internet. Instead they simply pointed out that although Belton testified that he knew FM stations were available over the Internet, he also stated he had not gone through the “elaborate process” to use his computer this way.

[4] Although plaintiffs asserted this fact was disputed as to Belton, they cited the same deposition testimony that Comcast relied upon and disputed [6] only the assertion that Belton testified that three stations “are available easily over the air.” In the cited testimony Belton testified that he could get KPFA and KQED with a large outdoor antenna, and KRCB, a local station.

[5] Plaintiffs stated they disputed the additional assertions of fact that the rate cards stated the correct price for FM service, and for DMX music, a digital music service that Hall ordered [7] in addition to basic cable, but cited only the cards themselves as their evidence. Plaintiffs offered no argument to explain how these cards misrepresented the price, and the court therefore concluded that they failed to create a triable issue of fact.

Plaintiffs offered an expert declaration disputing the assertion that reconfiguring Comcast's system to trap out basic cable television would be costly, because another company already manufactured a trap that could trap out the basic television cable, but let the FM or other music service signal through. The expert also challenged the business reasons Comcast's witnesses had stated for Comcast's decision not to implement the technical changes that would allow it to offer FM or music service á la carte. He declared that because a trap that could accomplish this was already being manufactured, it would not be costly for Comcast to deploy such a trap. He further declared that the risk of theft of service would not be any greater than under Comcast's current configuration of its tiers of service because "a savvy customer can learn how to remove any trap."

After ruling on the parties' evidentiary objections, the court, in a detailed order, found that there were no material triable issues of fact, and stated its reasons for concluding that Comcast was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the causes of action for violation of Business and Professions Code section 17200 and for a violation of the [10] Act. In a separate order, the court determined that the cause of action for violation of the CLRA was without merit. It entered judgment in Comcast's favor. Plaintiffs filed a timely notice of appeal.

ANALYSIS

I.

Unfair Competition and the Act

The motion for summary adjudication was directed to the first cause of action for unfair competition based upon Business and Professions Code [*1233] section 17200, and the third cause of action for violation of the Act. HN1[] "On review of a summary judgment [or summary adjudication] favoring the defendant, we look at the record anew to determine whether the defendant conclusively has shown that (1) one or more elements of a cause of action cannot be established, or (2) there is a complete defense." (Van Ness v. Blue Cross of California (2001) 87 Cal.App.4th 364, 371 [104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 511].)

A. Unfair Competition

HN2[] CA(1)[] (1) " 'Business and Professions Code section 17200 … establishes three varieties of unfair competition—acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent. "In other words, a practice is prohibited as 'unfair' or 'deceptive' even if not 'unlawful' and vice versa." ' " (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 180 [83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527] [11] (Cel-Tech).) "It governs 'anti-competitive business practices' as well as injuries to consumers, and has as a major purpose 'the preservation of fair business competition.' [Citations.] By proscribing 'any unlawful' business practice, 'section 17200 "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices' that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable." (Ibid.)

[640] The amended complaint alleged that Comcast's practice of requiring its subscribers to purchase the basic cable tier, which included television programming they did not want, in order to obtain the FM or music service that was also included, violated many predicate statutes. In their opening brief on appeal, however, plaintiffs contend that the court erred in granting Comcast's motion for summary adjudication only with respect to their contentions that Comcast's practice constituted: (1) unlawful tying in violation of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.; the Sherman Act); (2) negative option billing in violation of 47 United States Code section 543(f); and (3) a violation of the Act. [6]

[6] In the proceedings below plaintiffs also alleged Comcast's practice violated other predicate statutes, [12] including Business and Professions Code sections 17509 and 17000, the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. § 12101 et seq.; ADA) and the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720 & 16727). Yet, in their opening brief they did not raise any claim of error

[*1234]

CA(2)[] (2) We shall first review the court's determination under the "unlawful prong" of Business and Professions Code section 17200 that the undisputed facts established that Comcast's [13] practice did not violate any of these predicate statutes and therefore was not illegal. Next we address the court's determination that Comcast was entitled to summary adjudication with respect to the unfairness prong, based upon these same predicate statutes. Third, we review the determination, based upon the undisputed facts, that Comcast's practice was not fraudulent or deceptive. Finally, we address plaintiffs' contention that numerous errors in evidentiary rulings prevented them from creating a triable issue of fact.

1. Unlawful Prong

a. Tying

HN3[] CA(3)[] (3) Both the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720; the Cartwright Act) prohibit tying arrangements that operate as unreasonable restraints on trade. "A tying arrangement under antitrust laws exists when a party agrees to sell one product (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different product (the tied product), thereby curbing competition in the sale of the tied product." (Freeman v. San Diego Assn. of Realtors (1999) 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 183–184 [91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534] (Freeman), citing Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States (1958) 356 U.S. 1, 5–6 [2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514].) "Assuming that separate products in separate markets exist, a plaintiff [14] claiming an illegal tying arrangement must plead: '(1) a tying agreement, arrangement or condition existed whereby the sale of the tying product was linked to the sale of the tied product; (2) the party had sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce the purchase of the tied product; and (3) a substantial amount of sale was effected in the tied product.' " (Freeman, supra, at p. 184.) The latter element is sometimes referred [641] to as "tied market foreclosure." Under both the Cartwright Act and the Sherman Act, in the absence of evidence of some tied market foreclosure or anticompetitive impact in the tied product market, the plaintiff cannot establish an unlawful tying claim. (Morrison v. Viacom, Inc. (1998) 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 540–541 [78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133] (Viacom); Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde (1984) 466 U.S. 2, 16 [80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551] (Jefferson Parish).) [7]

[*1235]

Plaintiffs' unlawful tying theory was that the basic tier of cable television was the "tied" service that they were required to purchase in order to obtain the "tying" service, i.e., music or FM services. The court correctly determined that this claim, whether stated as a violation of the Cartwright Act or as a violation of the Sherman Act, was precluded as a matter of law based upon the undisputed fact that neither plaintiff wanted cable television service. Since plaintiffs would not otherwise have [16] purchased the tied product, i.e., basic cable television programming, the alleged business practice could not have foreclosed or injured competition in the tied product with respect to the court's disposition of these claims. We therefore deem any contention based upon these predicate statutes to have been waived, and shall not consider plaintiffs' contentions based upon predicate violations of Business and Professions Code sections 17509, 16727 and 16720, which they reassert on appeal for the first time in their reply brief. (See, e.g., Neighbours v. Buzz Oates Enterprises (1990) 217 Cal.App.3d 325, 335, fn. 8 [265 Cal. Rptr. 788].)

---

On appeal, plaintiffs also rely on violations of the CLRA as yet another predicate statute for their unfair competition claim. To avoid repetition, we shall address these arguments in the context of review of the motion that the separate cause of action for violation of the CLRA was without merit. (See fn. 17, post.)

[7] HN4[] The mere sale of products packaged together, or refusal to sell such products separately, does not constitute unlawful tying. "[N]ot every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain competition. If each of the products may be purchased separately in a competitive market, one seller's decision to sell the two in a single [15] package imposes no unreasonable restraint on either market, particularly if competing suppliers are free to sell either the entire package or its several parts." (Jefferson Parish, supra, 466 U.S. at pp. 11–12.) "Buyers often find package sales attractive; a seller's decision to offer such packages can merely be an attempt to compete effectively—conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act." (Ibid.) Recently, in Illinois Tool Works Inc. v. Independent Ink, Inc. (2006) 547 U.S. 28 [164 L. Ed. 2d 26, 126 S. Ct. 1281], the court reaffirmed that "[m]any tying arrangements, even those involving patents and requirements ties, are fully consistent with a free, competitive market." (Id. at p. 1292.)

market. HN5[] "[W]hen a purchaser is 'forced' to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed." (Jefferson Parish, supra, 466 U.S. at p. 16; see also Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th at p. 187.)

In Viacom, supra, 66 Cal.App.4th 534, the court applied this principle to hold that a practice similar to Comcast's did not constitute an unlawful tying arrangement. The plaintiffs alleged that Viacom required them to purchase broadcast channels as a prerequisite to purchasing satellite cable channels. (Id. at p. 539.) The court held, among other things, that "devastating to their case is [the] concession in their pleading that, if not for Viacom's business practice, plaintiffs would not buy broadcast channels at all because they are available for free over the airwaves. This concession establishes that the challenged practice [17] has no effect on competition in the tied product market." (Id. at p. 543.) Without an adverse impact on competition in the tied product market there is no harm to competition, and no unlawful tying. (Id. at pp. 543–544.)

Plaintiffs' attempt to distinguish Viacom on the ground that it interpreted and applied the Cartwright Act, not section 1 of the Sherman Act, is unavailing. Although Viacom, supra, 66 Cal.App.4th 534, interprets and applies Business and Professions Code section 16727, this section was patterned after section 1 of the Sherman Act, and the court relied [642] upon United States Supreme Court authority interpreting the Sherman Act in reaching its conclusion that the plaintiff failed to state a claim under the Cartwright Act. (Viacom, p. 541 & fn. 2.)

Based upon the foregoing authorities, the court correctly concluded that the undisputed material facts established that plaintiffs could not show market [*1236] foreclosure in the tied product market, and therefore Comcast's practice was not an unlawful tying arrangement under section 1 of the Sherman Act.

b. Negative Option Billing

CA(4)[] (4) The next statutory predicate for plaintiffs' Business and Professions Code section 17200 claim was that Comcast's [18] practice of providing FM or music service only as part of a basic tier that included television programming constituted "negative option billing" in violation of 47 United States Code section 543(f). HN6[] Section 543(f) prohibits a cable operator from charging "a subscriber for any service or equipment that the subscriber has not affirmatively requested by name. For purposes of this subsection, a subscriber's failure to refuse a cable operator's proposal to provide such service or equipment shall not be deemed to be an affirmative request for such service or equipment." (47 U.S.C. § 543(f).)

This section does not, by its terms, prohibit the practice of packaging cable services in tiers. In fact, the practice of packaging cable services in tiers was recognized and addressed by the federal regulations concerning negative option billing, specifying that in some circumstances a cable provider can drop particular channels from a package and then bill for them separately. (See Time Warner Cable v. Doyle (7th Cir. 1995) 66 F.3d 867, 872–873, 878–882; see also Morrison v. Viacom, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal.App.4th 1514, 1529 [61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544].) Instead, 47 United States Code section 543(f) prohibits the practice of providing a [19] service the customer had not affirmatively requested by name, and then charging for it if the customer fails to exercise the "negative option" of canceling or opting out of the proffered service. Therefore, to establish a violation of this predicate statute plaintiffs had to show that Comcast provided a service to the plaintiffs they had not affirmatively requested by name.

The undisputed facts, however, were that both plaintiffs understood they were purchasing a package or tier of cable service that included television service and FM or music service, as opposed to á la carte FM or music service, and that each plaintiff affirmatively placed an order for the tier of cable services they were billed for. [8] Although plaintiffs disputed defendant's assertion of fact that Belton affirmatively requested "by name" the basic tier of service, the only evidence they cited was Belton's testimony that he requested the basic tier of service "under protest." This evidence does not create a material issue of disputed fact because, whether or not Belton liked the fact that he had

---

[8] Belton testified that he was never charged for a service he did not request. Hall testified that he ordered an additional tier of digital programming, understanding that music was only a part of the programming in that tier.

to order the basic tier of cable service to get the music [*1237] services, it was nonetheless undisputed that he affirmatively placed an order [20] for that tier, understanding that it was a package including television programming and FM or music services. Since the undisputed facts established that neither plaintiff was provided or billed for a service he did not order by name plaintiffs could not, as a matter of law, establish that Comcast's [643] practice constituted negative option billing in violation of 47 United States Code section 543(f).

c. The Act

The third predicate statute we address is plaintiffs' allegation that Comcast's practice of packaging FM or music service together with television programming, or refusing to provide FM or music service by itself, violated the Act.

HN7[] CA(5)[] (5) "[T]he Unruh [Civil Rights] Act secures equal access to public accommodations and prohibits discrimination by business establishments." (Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 Cal.3d 1142, 1150 [278 Cal. Rptr. 614, 805 P.2d 873].) It, however, "explicitly exempts standards that are [*1238] applicable alike to persons of every sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, or [21] blindness or other physical disability.' " (Id. at p. 1172.) It was undisputed that Hall was treated exactly the same as sighted subscribers, and that Comcast applied its "policy of requiring its customers to subscribe to the basic cable tier [of video] service in order to receive music service to all residential subscribers regardless of … disability." Any inference that the policy discriminated against blind persons is precluded by the undisputed fact that both Hall, who was blind, and Belton, who was not, were required to purchase the basic cable tier, which included television programming they did not want. On its face, the policy therefore applied equally to sighted and blind subscribers.

Plaintiffs nonetheless contend that Comcast's practice was discriminatory "in fact" because sighted persons, even if they do not want cable TV, could use it, whereas blind persons could not. In other words, they argue that although the policy is facially neutral, it disproportionately and adversely impacts blind people. The contention that Comcast's policy, despite its equal application to all subscribers, has an adverse impact on blind persons fails, as a matter of law, to state a violation [22] of the Act. In Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV, supra, 52 Cal.3d 1142, the court held, HN8[] "an adverse impact claim challenges a standard that is applicable alike to all such persons based on the premise that, notwithstanding its universal applicability, its actual impact demands scrutiny. If the Legislature had intended to include adverse impact claims, it would have omitted or at least qualified" the language in section 51 of the Civil Code that expressly exempts standards that are applicable alike to persons of every sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, or blindness or other physical disability. (Harris, at pp. 1172–1173.) In Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal.4th 824, 853 [31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212], the court reaffirmed that a policy that is neutral on its face is not actionable, even if it has a disproportionate impact on a protected class. [9]

CA(6)[] (6) Plaintiffs argue that they need not show discriminatory intent because Hall's claim states a violation of subdivision (f) of Civil Code section 51. Subdivision (f) of Civil Code section 51 HN9[] provides that "[a] violation of the right of any individual under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 … shall also constitute a violation of this [644] section." A federal district court, in Presta v. Peninsula Corridor Joint Powers Bd. (N.D.Cal. 1998) 16 F.Supp.2d 1134 (Presta), held that if an Act claim is based upon subdivision (f) of Civil Code section 51, the plaintiff need not prove discriminatory intent when such intent is not required to prove the claim under the ADA, because subdivision (f) essentially incorporates the ADA. (Presta, supra, at pp. 1135–1136.)

Even if we assume arguendo that the Presta court (Presta, supra, 16 F. Supp. 2d 1134) correctly interpreted California law (see Howard Contracting, Inc. v. G. A. MacDonald Construction Co. (1998) 71 Cal.App.4th 38, 52 [83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 590] [decisions of the federal courts on issues of interpretation of California law are not binding precedent]), it is unavailing because plaintiffs cannot show any denial [24] of access to a place of public accommodation in violation of the ADA, and therefore a claim under subdivision (f) of Civil Code section 51 fails as a matter of law. Hall's claim is that, except for the FM or music service, the programming provided in the basic cable tier is “inaccessible” to blind people, and therefore Comcast must accommodate blind individuals by providing FM or music services á la carte. Yet, to state a claim under the ADA, plaintiffs must show that they have been denied access to a place of public accommodation and, as a matter of law, cable services are not such a place. (Torres v. AT&T Broadband, LLC (2001) 158 F. Supp. 2d 1035 (Torres).) In Torres, a blind plaintiff contended that the on-screen channel menu provided by a digital cable service was inaccessible to blind people. The court held that “[t]he ADA includes an exhaustive list of private entities that constitute a public accommodation, and a digital cable system is not one of them.” (Id. at p. 1037.) It also rejected the plaintiff's argument that “when he uses the defendants' digital cable channel menu, his television set becomes a place of exhibition or entertainment. [T]he plaintiff's home cannot reasonably [25] be classified as a place of public exhibition or [*1239] entertainment. Thus, neither the digital cable system nor its on-screen channel menu can be considered a place of public accommodation within the meaning of the ADA.” (Id. at pp. 1037–1038.) Since the undisputed facts did not establish a violation of the right of any individual under the ADA, plaintiffs failed as a matter of law to establish an Act claim under subdivision (f) of Civil Code section 51. Any exception recognized in Presta to the requirement under the Act that plaintiffs show unequal treatment and discriminatory intent was inapplicable.

---

[9] Plaintiffs did not allege or contend below a claim of disparate treatment in the application of a facially neutral policy, which may be cognizable under the Act. (See Koebke v. Bernando Heights County Club, supra, 26 Cal.4th at p. 853.) Moreover, in their separate statement they did not dispute that Comcast treated Hall [23] the same as their sighted subscribers.

The court therefore correctly concluded based upon the undisputed fact that Comcast's practice of requiring all subscribers to purchase the basic cable tier, which included television programming, in order to obtain FM or music service, did not as a matter of law violate the Act. [10]

2. Unfairness Prong

Plaintiffs contend that, even if not unlawful, Comcast's challenged practice is [26] nonetheless actionable under the unfairness prong of Business and Professions Code section 17200. Specifically they argue that the practice of bundling FM radio or music service with video service in the basic tier violates at least “the policy or spirit,” if not the letter, of the Sherman Act's prohibition of unlawful tying.

CA(7)[] (7) They rely upon the definition of “unfair” set forth in Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th [645] 163. In Cel-Tech, the court, HN10[] in the context of an unfair competition claim by a competitor, defined “unfair” as “conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.” (Id. at p. 187.) The Cel-Tech court further required “that any finding of unfairness to competitors under [Business and Professions Code] section 17200 be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition.” (Id. at pp. 186–187.) The court left open the question whether this definition should also apply in the context of unfair competition claims brought by consumers (id. at p. 187, fn. 12), [27] leading to a split of authority on this question among the Courts of Appeal. (See Bardin v. DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2006) 136 Cal.App.4th 1255, 1273–1274 [39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 634] [noting the split of authority and urging the California Supreme Court to resolve it].) This court, however, has followed the line of authority that also requires the allegedly unfair business practice be “tethered” to a legislatively declared policy or has some actual or threatened [*1240] impact on competition. (See Gregory v. Albertson's, Inc. (2002) 104 Cal.App.4th 845, 853–854 [128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389].)

CA(8)[] (8) Plaintiffs' attempt to restate the unlawful tying theory under the unfairness prong fails because the same undisputed facts that establish the absence of any anticompetitive effect in the tied product market preclude a finding that Comcast's practice threatened an incipient violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, or violated its policy or spirit, or otherwise threatens competition. HN11[] “The purpose of federal and state antitrust laws is to protect and promote competition for the benefit of consumers. [Citations.] Antitrust laws are designed to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade, meaning conduct that unreasonably impairs competition and harms consumers. [28] [Citations.] If the same conduct is alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an ‘unfair’ business act or practice for the same reason—because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms

---

[10] This same analysis also supports the court order granting summary adjudication of the separate cause of action for a violation of the Act.

consumers—the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not 'unfair' toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct." (Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 363, 375 [113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175]; see also RLH Industries, Inc. v. SBC Communications, Inc. (2005) 133 Cal.App.4th 1277, 1286 [35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 469].) In the absence of some restraint upon competition, the mere practice of packaging services together is not inherently anticompetitive or harmful to consumers. (See Jefferson Parish, supra, 466 U.S. at pp. 11–12; see also Illinois Tool Works, Inc. v. Independent Ink, Inc., supra, 126 S. Ct. at p. 1292 ["Many tying arrangements, even those involving patents and requirements ties, are fully consistent with a free, competitive market"].) Plaintiff identifies no other anticompetitive effect caused [29] by the packaging of these services together, and identifies no other policy underlying section 1 of the Sherman Act that Comcast's practice violated. Therefore the court correctly concluded that, as a matter of law, Comcast's practice [646] was not unfair. [11]

[*1241]

3. Fraudulent Prong

Plaintiffs alleged two types of misrepresentations or false advertising in support of their unfair competition claim under the fraudulent prong of Business and Professions Code section 17200: [30] (1) those made in "advertisements and/or promotional material," specifically rate cards attached as exhibits to their complaint, and (2) oral statements that there was a legal or technical reason why they were not offered FM or music services separately from the television or video services included in the basic tier, or why it was necessary to subscribe to the basic tier in order to get the FM or music service. HN12[] To establish an unfair competition claim under the fraudulent prong, plaintiffs must show that these representations were false or were likely to have misled "reasonable consumer[s]." (South Bay Chevrolet v. General Motors Acceptance Corp. (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 861, 878 [85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301].)

In support of the fraudulent prong of their unfair competition claim, plaintiffs first relied upon rate cards distributed by Comcast or its predecessors. In their opposition to Comcast's statement of undisputed material facts, plaintiffs admitted that the rate cards upon which they relied did not make any affirmative representations that legal or technological reasons prevented the provision of FM radio or music service á la carte. [12] They also admitted the cards clearly stated that subscription to basic cable [31] "is required" in order to receive any other service. Plaintiffs further conceded that, if Comcast had simply used the active voice and stated, "Comcast requires subscription to basic cable TV in order to obtain any other services," the statement would not be misleading. Nonetheless, they argued that "[b]y saying that subscription to basic cable is 'required' without spelling out that it is only [Comcast's] policy to do so, the unwitting subscriber who wishes only audio services is forced into accepting the unwanted Basic Cable TV." They asserted that the use of the passive voice created a "clear implication that legal or technological reasons require subscription to basic cable" when the truth was that the requirement was "a mere profit strategy of the cable company."

---

[11] In their reply brief plaintiffs also rely upon the ADA and the Act, and the federal law proscribing negative option billing, as a "tether" to a legislatively declared policy that they contend Comcast's practice violated. They assert in conclusory fashion that Comcast's practice was unfair because it violated the spirit, if not the letter, of each of these statutes, but offer no supporting argument or authorities other than for the general assertion that Business and Professions Code section 17200 claims have been based upon the Act and federal consumer protection statutes. We shall not consider this argument because they are raised for the first time in the reply. (Neighbours v. Buzz Oates Enterprises, supra, 217 Cal. App. 3d at p. 335, fn. 8.)

[12] The court ruled that plaintiffs failed to create a triable issue with respect to respondent's asserted fact that these cards did not misrepresent the price for FM and DMX service. Although this fact was disputed, the only evidence they cited was the cards themselves.

We shall not consider plaintiffs' argument that two of the rate cards were confusing concerning the statement charges for digital (DMX) service, because [32] these arguments were not raised below. (See Jordan-Lyon Productions, Ltd. v. Cineplex Odeon Corp. (1994) 29 Cal.App.4th 1459, 1472 [35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200]; Munro v. Regents of University of California (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 977, 989 [263 Cal. Rptr. 878].)

Since the material facts were undisputed, the court may decide as a matter of law whether members of the public were likely to be deceived. (See, e.g., Van Ness v. [647] Blue Cross of California, supra, 87 Cal.App.4th at p. 376.) We [*1242] conclude, as did the court below, that a reasonable consumer would not likely be deceived by the mere use of the passive voice in the statements in the rate cards. In context, any reasonable consumer would understand that the requirement that every subscriber purchase the basic cable service, in order to receive any other service, was imposed by Comcast. Nor would any reasonable consumer infer from the mere absence of any stated reason for the requirement that there were legal or technical reasons why they had to purchase the basic cable tier of service.

The other evidence plaintiffs offered was their own testimony about conversations they had with representatives of Comcast or its predecessors. Nothing in this testimony identifies any oral statement [33] that there were legal reasons why FM or music service was not available á la carte. Generously construed, it did establish that at some point after subscribing, plaintiffs were told by a Comcast employee, or one of its predecessors, that there were technical reasons why music or FM services were not provided á la carte.

Assuming arguendo that this evidence was sufficient to create a triable issue of fact as to whether Comcast made such a representation to the public, the court correctly concluded that there was no triable issue of fact as to whether the statement was false or misleading. Comcast met its burden to show these oral statements were neither false nor misleading by submitting the declaration of its construction manager, James Bordessa. Bordessa declared that at the time any such representations were made, Comcast's system was configured to provide basic cable television service to every subscriber, and did not trap out or scramble the basic television cable signal. He acknowledged that the basic television cable signal could be trapped out, but declared that to do so would entail technical changes in the traps Comcast used, or the provision of converter boxes [34] to unscramble the television signal for all subscribers who wanted that service. Bordessa also explained some of the business reasons why Comcast had not designed, manufactured or deployed a trap in its system to allow only the musci service through.

Plaintiffs' expert, Milan Petrovich, declared that another company already manufactured a trap that could allow the FM or music service signal through while blocking everything else. Petrovich disputed Bordessa's assertion that it would be costly for Comcast to deploy such a trap. He noted that since another company already manufactured the device, there would be no development costs, and Comcast could charge the customer for the cost of installation. Petrovich's declaration failed to create a triable issue that at the time the alleged oral representations were made to plaintiffs they were false or misleading. Nothing in his declaration disputed Bordessa's description of how Comcast's system was then configured and that the system did not deploy such a trap. That it was possible to reconfigure the system to use such [*1243] a trap simply did not create a dispute that until such a trap was deployed there were, in fact, technical reasons why Comcast did not offer FM [35] or music services á la carte. The remainder of plaintiffs' expert's declaration merely disagreed with the business reasons Bordessa and another expert gave for why Comcast had not reconfigured its system to trap or scramble the basic television signal. This dispute was not material to the truth of the statement that there were technical reasons why plaintiffs could not [648] get the music or FM service on a stand-alone basis. [13]

4. Evidentiary rulings

Plaintiffs also argue that the court erred in sustaining Comcast's objection to certain evidence they offered, and in overruling their objections to some of Comcast's assertions of undisputed facts. These contentions fail either on the merits, or because any error was harmless.

Plaintiffs first argue that if the court had not [36] abused its discretion by sustaining Comcast's evidentiary objections to certain declarations filed by Belton and Hall, they could have created a triable issue as to the truth of

---

[13] Of course, a "perfectly true statement couched in such a manner that it is likely to mislead or deceive the consumer, such as by failure to disclose other relevant information, is actionable." (Consumer Advocates v. Echostar Satellite Corp. (2003) 113 Cal.App.4th 1351, 1362 [8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 22].) Yet, in the proceedings below and on appeal plaintiffs fail to articulate in what respect the oral statement, even if truthful, might be misleading.

the oral statements that there were technical reasons why FM or music service was not offered separately from the basic cable television programming. Belton declared that in April of 2005, after the motion for summary adjudication was filed, but before the opposition was due, he spoke to a Comcast supervisor who informed him that FM service was now available on a "stand-alone basis" in Santa Rosa, but had been dropped in Healdsburg, where Belton resided. Hall declared that also in April 2005 he talked to a representative who told him FM service had been cancelled. [14] Any error with respect to this evidentiary ruling is harmless. A decision in March or April 2005 to drop FM service, or unbundle it in a limited area, does not render false the statements of representatives made prior to April 2005 that there were technical reasons why FM service was not offered on a stand-alone basis. (See Stockinger v. Feather River Community College (2003) 111 Cal.App.4th 1014, 1028 [4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385] [error in excluding evidence [*1244] opposing summary [37] judgment is harmless because admission of evidence would not have changed the outcome].)

Plaintiffs also challenge the court's ruling sustaining Comcast's objection to portions of Hall's and Belton's deposition testimony attached as exhibits C, Q and R to the declaration of plaintiffs' counsel, Norbert Babin. Plaintiffs contend this excluded testimony would have created a triable issue because it would have shown that they only wanted FM service and were nevertheless required to purchase basic cable, and that Hall was told Comcast did not have the "technology" to provide FM service alone. We need not address the merits of the evidentiary [38] ruling because, again, any error was harmless. Plaintiffs failed to reference any of the excluded testimony in their separate statement of disputed facts. Nor did they identify which fact or facts this testimony placed in dispute. In the absence of a reference to this evidence in the separate statement, the court was free to disregard it, and plaintiffs are precluded from now contending that it created a triable issue of fact. (See North Coast Business Park v. [649] Nielsen Construction Co. (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 22, 30–31 [21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 104] [it is not enough to create a triable issue of fact to submit a document that may support it without referencing the evidence in the separate statement and identifying facts to which it relates].) Moreover, the legal analysis of whether Comcast's practice was illegal, unfair, or deceptive assumed the truth of plaintiffs' allegation that they had to buy basic cable to get FM or music service and that they did not want video. It also assumed they had been told there were technical reasons why FM or music service was not offered á la carte. Therefore, even if the court had admitted this evidence, it would not have changed the court's ruling on the motions, and any error was [39] therefore harmless.

Finally, plaintiffs assert that the court should have sustained their objection that several of Comcast's asserted undisputed facts "misquoted" plaintiffs' testimony. The court was well within its discretion to conclude it could simply review the testimony itself to determine whether any material discrepancies existed.

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the court did not err in granting the motion for summary adjudication as to plaintiffs' causes of action for unfair competition, and a violation of the Act.

II.

Consumers Legal Remedies Act

The court also granted Comcast's motion, pursuant to Civil Code section 1781, subdivision (c)(3), that plaintiffs' second cause of action was without [*1245] merit. (Consumer Advocates v. Echostar Satellite Corp., supra, 113 Cal.App.4th at p. 1359 [the CLRA does not permit summary judgment motions, and instead provides this alternate, but similar, procedure to establish that the action is without merit].) In their second cause of action, plaintiffs alleged

---

[14] Gulbransen, Comcast's regional vice-president, in a reply declaration, explained that in March 2005, Comcast discontinued FM service in Healdsburg and other northern California communities to free up bandwidth and enable Comcast to offer more high-definition digital and pay-per-view video programming options. She further declared that, in Santa Rosa, "due to certain franchise requirements, FM music service has not been dropped, and it is now offered on a stand-alone basis," at "a price close to what is charged for the basic television tier of service."

that Comcast violated two provisions of the CLRA: First, they alleged that Comcast violated Civil Code section 1770, subdivision (a)(19) by inserting an unconscionable term [40] in its contract, i.e., the requirement that customers buy the basic tier of cable service even when the customer only wanted the music or FM service included in that tier. Second, they alleged Comcast violated Civil Code section 1770, subdivision (a)(14) because this requirement constituted negative option billing and discrimination against visually impaired subscribers, in violation of the Act.

The court properly determined that the contentions based upon negative option billing and the Act were without merit for the same reasons that it granted summary adjudication on the unfair competition cause of action, and there is no need to repeat that analysis here. With respect to the allegation that the requirement that customers purchase the basic tier was unconscionable, the question is "one of law which we consider de novo." (Olsen v. Breeze, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 608, 621 [55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 818].)

HN13[] CA(9)[] (9) A court may deem a contract provision unconscionable, and therefore unenforceable, only if it is both procedurally and substantively unconscionable. (See Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Services, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal.4th 83, 114 [99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669].) "The procedural element of unconscionability focuses on two [41] factors: oppression and surprise. [Citation.] ' "Oppression" arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and "an absence of meaningful choice." ' [Citation.] ' "Surprise" involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-upon terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to [650] enforce the disputed terms.' [Citation.] [¶] The substantive element of unconscionability focuses on the actual terms of the agreement and evaluates whether they create ' "overly harsh" ' or ' "one-sided" ' results as to ' "shock the conscience." ' " (Aron v. U-Haul Co. of California (2006) 143 Cal.App.4th 796, 808 [49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 555].)

The availability of alternative sources from which to obtain the desired service defeats any claim of oppression, because the consumer has a meaningful choice. (See, e.g., Freeman v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2003) 111 Cal.App.4th 660, 670 [3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 860].) Moreover, when the challenged term is in a contract concerning a nonessential recreational activity, the consumer always has the option of simply forgoing the activity. (Olsen v. Breeze, Inc., supra, 48 Cal.App.4th at pp. 621–622 [ski binding adjustment [*1246] company's contract provision releasing [42] company from liability for injury resulting from its work is not unconscionable even though release was alleged to be a standard practice in the industry because skiing is a nonessential recreational activity].) Listening to music or FM radio is also a nonessential recreational activity that plaintiffs could simply have forgone if they disliked the requirement that they purchase the basic cable tier. Moreover, the undisputed facts established that Hall and Belton had other means of listening to music or the radio, some of which were available for free. Broadcast FM programming was available for free from local radio stations, and Hall admitted that he could receive a number of FM stations on the radio at his home and could also listen to music on a compact disc player. Moreover, almost all of the remote stations carried by Comcast in Sonoma County offered live broadcasts of their programming over the Internet, and both Hall and Belton had computers and Internet service. It was also undisputed that DIRECTV, a satellite service, offered digital-quality music. Plaintiffs asserted various reasons why they considered these alternatives less desirable, including that the satellite service [43] was expensive, and that in their opinion the quality of sound when listening to FM radio over the Internet was inferior. These variables may have explained why plaintiffs preferred listening through a cable hookup, but did not create a dispute that these alternatives existed. Plaintiffs did not lack meaningful choice, including obtaining the same service for free over the Internet or radio airwaves, or simply forgoing the nonessential recreational activity. (See, e.g., Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting & Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal.App.4th 1042, 1056 [107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645]; Shadoan v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 97, 103 [268 Cal. Rptr. 207]; Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 758, 771 [259 Cal. Rptr. 789].) Therefore Comcast's requirement that subscribers purchase the basic tier in order to receive FM or music service was not oppressive.

Moreover, there was no element of "surprise," because the requirement that they purchase the basic cable tier was not hidden and plaintiffs admitted that, although they disliked the policy, they understood they had to purchase the basic cable tier, which included television cable programming, to obtain the music or FM service. (See Wayne v.

Staples, Inc. (2006) 135 Cal.App.4th 466, 481–482 [37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 544] [44] [no surprise when terms are clearly disclosed].)

In any event, any factual dispute about the practicability of the alternative ways of listening to FM radio or music is immaterial because the contract term must be both procedurally and substantively [651] unconscionable. We are satisfied that the requirement that plaintiffs purchase the basic cable tier did not "shock the conscience" simply because it included television programming they did not want. HN14[] A provision is substantively unconscionable if it " 'involves contract terms that are so one-sided as to "shock the conscience," or that impose harsh or oppressive terms.' " (Morris v. Redwood Empire [*1247] Bancorp (2005) 128 Cal.App.4th 1305, 1322 [27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 797]. "The phrases 'harsh,' 'oppressive,' and 'shock the conscience' are not synonymous with 'unreasonable.' Basing an unconscionability determination on the reasonableness of a contract provision would inject an inappropriate level of judicial subjectivity into the analysis." (Ibid.) The question instead is whether the terms of the agreement are such an extreme departure from common business practice, and so one-sided as to "shock the conscience." (Id. at p. 1323; see also American Software, Inc. v. Ali (1996) 46 Cal.App.4th 1386, 1391–1393 [54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 477].)

CA(10)[] (10) Plaintiffs [45] argue that this contract term "shocks the conscience" because music or FM services are "discrete services" and "there is no legal or technical reason" why they could not be provided separately. [15] In effect, they argue that if Comcast was legally and technically able to provide the service separately, it "shocks the conscience" for them not to do so. Even if we accept arguendo that it was legally and technically possible to provide these services separately, it does not "shock the conscience" for Comcast to make a business decision to package them together. HN15[] It is not uncommon for businesses to package discrete goods or services together, nor is the practice necessarily undesirable from the standpoint of the consumer. (See Jefferson Parish, supra, 466 U.S. at pp. 11–12 ["Buyers often find package sales attractive"].) [16] To hold that it is "unconscionable" for a business that has the technical and legal capability to offer a service or good separately, to instead offer it only as part of a package, would be an unwise excursion into an area of economic policy that is better left to the Legislature. (See California Grocers Assn. v. Bank of America (1994) 22 Cal.App.4th 205, 218 [27 Cal.Rptr.2d 396] [" 'It [46] is primarily a legislative and not a judicial function to determine economic policy' "].) [*1248]

For the foregoing reasons we also uphold the court's determination that plaintiffs' cause of action for violation of the CLRA should be dismissed as without merit. [17]

[652] CONCLUSION

The judgment is affirmed. Respondent is entitled to costs on appeal.

---

[15] Plaintiffs' contention in their reply brief that Comcast's policy also "shocked the conscience" because it violated the law against negative option billing (47 U.S.C. § 543) and was discriminatory in violation of section 51 of the Act is disposed of by our determination that the court properly granted summary adjudication of their unfair competition cause of action based upon alleged violation of these same predicate laws.

[16] Indeed the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), in two separate reports, one of which was part of the record below, reached different conclusions about whether consumers would benefit from regulations requiring cable services to be provided "á la carte." In a November 18, 2004 report entitled Report on the Packaging and Sale of Video Programming Services to the Public, the FCC stated, among other things, that such regulation could result in less diverse preprogramming and consumers having to pay more for fewer channels. In February 2006, a second report, entitled Further Report on the Packaging and Sale of Video Programming Services to the Public, however, identified [47] substantial benefits in terms of an increase of choices. (<http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DOC-263740A1.pdf> [as of June 8, 2007].)

[17] These same reasons also support the conclusion that Comcast's practice was not "unlawful" within the meaning of Business and Professions Code section 17200, based upon a predicate violation of the CLRA.

Marchiano, P. J., and Swager, J., concurred.

The People ex rel. Edmund G. Brown v. Powerex Corp.

Court of Appeal of California, Third Appellate District

June 11, 2007, Filed

C051868

Reporter
2007 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 4656 *

THE PEOPLE ex rel. EDMUND G. BROWN, Jr., as Attorney General, etc., Plaintiff and Appellant, v. POWEREX CORPORATION, Defendant and Respondent.

Notice: NOT TO BE PUBLISHED IN OFFICIAL REPORTS. CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT, RULE 8.1115(a), PROHIBITS COURTS AND PARTIES FROM CITING OR RELYING ON OPINIONS NOT CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED, EXCEPT AS SPECIFIED BY RULE 8.1115(B). THIS OPINION HAS NOT BEEN CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED FOR THE PURPOSES OF RULE 8.1115.

Prior History: [*1] Superior Court of Sacramento County. No. 04AS05129.

Core Terms

rates, tariffs, filed rate doctrine, energy, market-based, electricity, wholesale, sellers, refunds, regulation, markets, preemption, congestion, violations, transmission, schemes, energy crisis, file a tariff, fraudulently, leave to amend, gaming, grid, district court, trial court, consumers, schedules, intertie, damages, relieve, entity

Judges: MORRISON, J.; BLEASE, Acting P.J., BUTZ, J. concurred.

Opinion by: MORRISON

Opinion

After the collapse of Enron Corporation, the Attorney General concluded wholesale energy companies, including Powerex Corporation, had engaged in schemes damaging California energy consumers. He sued Powerex, alleging violations of the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq., "UCL") and the California Commodity Law of 1990 (Corp. Code, § 29500 et seq., "CCL") seeking damages, penalties and injunctive relief.

The trial court sustained Powerex's demurrer without leave to amend on the ground the claims were barred by the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C.A. § 791 et seq., "FPA") which grants the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") exclusive jurisdiction over the wholesale energy market.

Several Ninth Circuit decisions arising out of the energy crisis have concluded that claims similar to the Attorney General's are barred by the FPA, specifically by implied preemption (field and conflict preemption), and by the filed rate doctrine. Field preemption exists when a federal scheme is comprehensive, leaving no room for state regulation; conflict preemption exists [*2] when state regulation would conflict with federal regulation; the filed rate doctrine bars claims which assume rates different from a federal tariff. (See Public Utility v. Dynegy Power Marketing(9th Cir. 2004) 384 F.3d 756 (Snohomish); Public Util., Grays Harbor, WA v. Idacorp (9th Cir. 2004) 379 F.3d 641 (Grays Harbor); California ex rel. Lockyer v. Dynegy, Inc. (9th Cir. 2004) 375 F.3d 831 (Dynegy).)

We conclude the filed rate doctrine bars all of the Attorney General's monetary and injunctive claims. Further, no injunction is warranted because there is no threat that the misconduct will continue. Because the Attorney General does not explain how his complaint might be amended, we shall affirm.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

We accept the well-pleaded facts alleged in the complaint and matters judicially noticeable, but not rhetoric or conclusions of law. We consider de novo whether the complaint states a viable claim for relief. (Schifando v. City of Los Angeles (2003) 31 Cal.4th 1074, 1081; Faulkner v. Cal. Toll Bridge Authority (1953) 40 Cal.2d 317, 329.)

BACKGROUND

A. The Complaint

"The California Independent System Operator ('ISO') is a not-for-profit corporation established through California's [*3] deregulation legislation. The ISO is responsible for operating the high-voltage transmission grid serving most of California. The area encompassing this transmission grid is known as the ISO control area."

Powerex sells wholesale energy within the ISO control area. It engaged in fraudulent trading (or "gaming") schemes which used false and misleading information.

We quote from a decision summarizing background facts which are also alleged in the complaint:

> "Before 1996, FERC reviewed electricity rates that were cost-based. The primary factor in setting the rate was the cost of producing and transmitting the electricity. Power suppliers proposed rates by adding up their costs and accounting for an expected rate of return. FERC reviewed and approved tariffs that contained detailed breakdowns of costs and specified rates of return. . . .
>
> "In 1996, California changed this cost-based system of setting wholesale electricity rates to a market-based system, where the rate was determined in a structured market. The California legislature passed Assembly Bill 1890, Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 330 et seq., in an effort to reduce the price of electricity by replacing cost-based rate regulation with rates [*4] that were determined by competitive forces. [Citations.] The legislation created two non-governmental entities to operate markets and otherwise manage the sale of electricity: the California Power Exchange ('PX') and the [ISO]. These entities were subject to FERC's regulation. [Citation.]
>
> "The PX operated a market for the purchase and sale of electricity in the 'day-ahead' and 'day-of' markets. The price in these markets was set by evaluating bids submitted by market participants. A seller could submit a series of bids that consisted of price-quantity pairs representing offers to sell (e.g. 5 units at $50 each, but 10 units if the price is $100 each). Similarly, a buyer could submit a series of bids that consisted of price-quantity pairs representing offers to buy. The PX would then establish aggregate supply and demand curves and set the 'market clearing price' at the intersection of the two curves. Then every exchange would take place at the market clearing price, even though some buyers had been willing to pay more and some sellers had been willing to sell for less.
>
> "The ISO managed the transmission network, managing imbalances between supply and demand and maintaining the reliability [*5] of the transmission grid. As part of these responsibilities, it operated a 'real-time' or 'spot' market used to balance supply and demand at precise points in time. For example, if customer demand for a particular hour was not met, then the ISO was required to procure power on the spot market to maintain the stability of the grid. In the markets the PX and ISO managed, rates for wholesale electricity rose dramatically during 2000 and 2001. This caused consumer utilities to pay record high prices to traders and generators." (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d at pp. 758-759; see also Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d at pp. 835-836; United States v. Reliant Energy (N.D. Cal. 2006) 420 F. Supp. 2d 1043, 1045-1046.)

In May 2000 the price of wholesale power rose sharply, buyers "incurred massive losses[,]" and the two largest investor-owned utilities, Southern California Edison and Pacific Gas & Electric, defaulted on payments to the PX and ISO; by March 2001 the PX had declared bankruptcy. Meanwhile, Governor Gray Davis had declared an emergency and "authorized the State, through the California Department of Water Resources" to purchase electricity, which it did to the tune of $10 billion. These costs were [*6] passed on to California consumers.

Beginning in 1999 Powerex had employed fraudulent schemes to justify "'congestive relief' payments for taking actions that did not relieve any congestion, to receive payment for excess generation through the submission of false schedules, and to circumvent the ISO's price cap by falsely representing the source of the energy." These schemes came to light in connection with the collapse of Enron and are "widely known as the 'Enron trading strategies' but were in fact employed by several market participants, including" Powerex.

These schemes acquired colorful names, such as Death Star, Get Shorty, Fat Boy and Ricochet. The details of each scheme are not important, but we will describe two for illustration.

In Ricochet, Powerex exploited an ISO rule which allowed payments above the price cap for power generated outside the state in times of shortage. Powerex would export power outside the ISO area, then import it back to California, representing it as out-of-market power and exempt from the price cap even though "no energy ever left or re-entered the State."

In Death Star, Powerex submitted false energy schedules: "In one schedule, energy is imported into [*7] the ISO control area through a transmission interface. This energy is scheduled to flow in a direction opposite to congestion and is then exported over another transmission interface. The counterflow created by this schedule is supposed to relieve congestion, and the market participant receives a congestion relief payment. However, in a second schedule, the same energy is then circled back to the ISO control area along transmission lines outside of the ISO system. . . . As [a] result . . . no congestion is relieved because no energy is put onto or taken off of the ISO grid."

The Attorney General alleged these and similar schemes were unlawful and unfair business practices proscribed by the UCL and alleged that they represented unlawful artifices and false statements in violation of the CCL. In particular the Attorney General alleged Powerex violated both laws by:

> "(a) willfully and fraudulently offering to sell ancillary services to the ISO without having any physical resources backing up the sale, and collecting payment for ancillary services it did not provide and had no intention of providing;
>
> "(b) willfully and fraudulently misrepresenting 'out-of-market' sales of power to ISO as [*8] 'imports,' and collecting payment for 'out-of-market' sales at prices above the price cap, when in fact the power never left or re-entered California;
>
> "(c) willfully and fraudulently overstating the amount of load it expected to serve, and thereby collecting payment for the 'excess' generation at the market clearing price;
>
> "(d) willfully and fraudulently scheduling non-firm energy in the opposite direction of congestion to a point outside the ISO control area without having any intention of delivering the power, collecting payment for purportedly relieving congestion, and then cutting the schedule before putting any energy on the grid;
>
> "(e) willfully and fraudulently scheduling power in the opposite direction of congestion without having any intention of delivering the power, and collecting payment for purportedly relieving congestion, when in fact no congestion was relieved[.]"

Californians were "subjected to the risks and dangers of power supply interruptions, rolling blackouts and other adverse consequences." The complaint sought an injunction, restitution, disgorgement, civil penalties and damages.

B. Federal Court

Powerex removed the case to federal court, alleging the complaint [*9] raised questions about violations of the FPA, which fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of federal courts. (See 16 U.S.C.A. § 825p.) Powerex also claimed it was an arm of the Canadian government, interposing the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976 (28 U.S.C.A. § 1602 et seq., "FSIA"). The district court remanded the case. The Ninth Circuit dismissed Powerex's appeal. Powerex's petition for writ of certiorari on the FSIA claim is still pending in the United States Supreme Court. (Powerex Corp. v. California, Dkt. No. 05-584.)

C. The Demurrer in State Court

Powerex demurred, claiming preemption and the filed rate doctrine barred the Attorney General's claims. The parties submitted lengthy supporting and opposing papers.

The trial court sustained the demurrer, finding it could not grant "any remedy that would assume a rate different from that determined by FERC. The filed rate doctrine and federal preemption apply to market based rates at issue here."

The Attorney General timely appealed.

DISCUSSION

The Attorney General acknowledges FERC's authority over wholesale energy rates but states this action "at best, has only a tenuous, remote, or peripheral effect on rates," and therefore [*10] it would not "impinge on FERC's jurisdiction." He also asserts he "does not allege unreasonable electricity rates or seek a determination of the reasonableness of rates charged by Powerex." We disagree with these characterizations.

The gist of the complaint is that had Powerex acted fairly the amount charged for wholesale energy would have been less. The propriety of what was charged falls within FERC's bailiwick. Not only did FERC issue tariffs used by Powerex to charge (or overcharge) the ISO, FERC is adjudicating refunds based on its findings of what would have been just and reasonable, amending the tariffs. To impose further amounts would in effect raise those adjusted tariffs beyond what FERC finds is appropriate.

We will first summarize Ninth Circuit cases applying the filed rate doctrine in the context of the FPA, and then apply the doctrine to the Attorney General's claims in this case.

I. The Filed Rate Doctrine

A. TANC

In Transmission Agency, North. Cal. v. Sierra Pacific (9th Cir. 2002) 295 F.3d 918 (TANC), TANC had a deal with the Bonneville Power Administration and others (collectively, BPA) which in part called for TANC to build an "intertie" to move energy between California [*11] and Oregon. BPA then made a deal with Sierra Pacific to build another intertie. TANC protested to FERC, claiming the new intertie would reduce the energy carried by its intertie. FERC approved the new intertie, but began hearings on the issue. Before those hearings were over TANC sued BPA and others, alleging breach of contract and related theories. (Id. at pp. 923-924.) The court concluded some of TANC's claims were preempted by the FPA and others were barred by the filed rate doctrine, which it viewed as a species of preemption:

> "[T]he filed rate doctrine provides that state law, and some federal law (e.g. antitrust law), may not be used to invalidate a filed rate nor to assume a rate would be charged other than the rate adopted by the federal agency in question. . . . [T]he Supreme Court has extended the doctrine to the [FPA] and to electricity rates.
>
> "In Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Northwestern Public Service Co. [(1951) 341 U.S. 246, 251 95 L. Ed. 912], the Supreme Court held that a plaintiff in a case involving electricity rates set by the Federal Power Commission (the precursor to FERC) could 'claim no rate as a legal right that is other than the filed rate, whether fixed [*12] or merely accepted by the Commission, and not even a court can authorize commerce in the commodity on other terms.' The Court has explained that this rule is without exception: 'Congress meant to draw a bright line easily ascertained, between state and federal jurisdiction. . . . This was done in the [FPA] by making [Federal Power Commission] jurisdiction plenary and extending it to all wholesale sales in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the States.' [Citations.]

"As further developed, the filed rate doctrine has prohibited not just a state court (or a federal court applying state law) from setting a rate different from that chosen by FERC, but also from assuming a hypothetical rate different from that actually set by FERC. In Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co. [v. Hall (1981) 453 U.S. 571, 579 69 L. Ed. 2d 856], the Court stated:

> 'It would undermine the congressional scheme of uniform regulation of rate regulation to allow a state court to award as damages a rate never filed with the Commission and thus never found to be reasonable within the meaning of the [Natural Gas] Act. Following that course would permit state courts to grant [*13] regulated sellers greater relief than they could obtain from the Commission itself.'

"The Court has also expanded the reach of the filed rate doctrine beyond just rates. In Nantahala Power [& Light Co. v. Thornburg (1986) 476 U.S. 953 90 L. Ed. 2d 943], the Supreme Court held that 'the filed rate doctrine is not limited to rates per se.' [476 U.S. at 966.] Instead, any allocation of power that directly affects rates is protected by the filed rate doctrine. [Id. at 966-967.] Thus, following Nantahala Power, we recognized that an allocation of natural gas . . . is covered by the filed rate doctrine, just as if the allocation had been a decision on rates. [P] . . . [P]
"In the present case, the common theme in TANC's claims against the utility company defendants for breach of contract, intentional interference with a contractual relationship, and intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage is the contention that TANC is, or would have been, entitled to 4800 MW of transfer capability . . . .

"For a district or state court to conclude that under state contract law the Northwest Parties breached the Agreements . . . by failing to increase the capacity of the Northwest [*14] AC Intertie to 5100 MW, the court would have to hold that under state contract law TANC was entitled to 4800 MW of transfer capacity. Yet, state law can no more assume how FERC would allocate access to interstate transmission capacity than it can assume how FERC would set rates. . . . Although this resolution may leave TANC's state law claims unredressed, such a circumstance is not an unlikely result of preemption." (295 F.3d at pp. 929-932.)

TANC thus establishes that state-law claims which depend on assumptions contrary to rates or allocations approved by FERC are barred by the filed rate doctrine. The fact this may leave claims "unredressed" is no basis to depart from the doctrine.

B. Dynegy

Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d 831, arose from the energy crisis, and the Attorney General was the plaintiff. The gist was that "producers fraudulently sold energy on the spot market from reserve capacity that they had contracted to hold in reserve. . . . According to this theory, the companies' unauthorized sale of ancillary services energy threatened the stability of the grid system and left residents of the state vulnerable to blackouts and other disruptions." (Id. at p. 836.) The complaint sought "injunctions, [*15] restitution, disgorgement, and civil penalties against multiple companies for double-selling reserve generation capacity in violation of" the UCL. (Id. at pp. 836-837.) After holding the claims barred by preemption the court found they were also barred by the filed rate doctrine:

"Under the filed rate doctrine, the terms of the filed tariff 'are considered to be "the law" and to therefore "conclusively and exclusively enumerate the rights and liabilities"' of the contracting parties. [Citations.] As a result, 'the filed rate doctrine bars all claims-state and federal-that attempt to challenge [the terms of a tariff] that a federal agency has reviewed and filed.' [Citations.] Thus, to the extent that California argues that the companies owe 'obligations . . . beyond those set out in the filed tariffs . . . [such claim] is also barred by the filed rate doctrine.' [Citation.]

"'[T]he filed rate doctrine's purpose is to ensure that the filed rates are the exclusive source of the terms and conditions by which the [regulated entity] provides . . . the services covered by the tariff.' [Citation.] To the extent that California is seeking to enforce the penalty provisions of the tariff, or [*16] to have them expanded,[fn.] this conflicts with the filed rate doctrine and the exclusive authority conferred to FERC to enforce its tariff." (375 F.3d at p. 853, italics added.)

In the footnote the court observed:

> "While the State concedes that the tariff prohibits double-selling of reserve capacity, it contends that restitution and disgorgement of the companies' ill-begot gains does not conflict with the filed tariff. But the tariff itself specifies the penalties to which companies are subject for violating their reserve capacity commitments." (375 F.3d at p. 853, fn. 24.)

Thus, Dynegy held that the Attorney General may not base UCL claims on violations of filed tariffs, inasmuch as FERC oversees such violations:

> "16 U.S.C. § 824e provides that upon a determination by FERC that 'any rate, charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, [*17] rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order.'" (Id. at p. 850, fn. 18.)

C. Grays Harbor

Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641 also dealt with claims arising out of the energy crisis. Grays Harbor contracted to buy power at a price to be set by the market. It later sued, seeking contract rescission or reformation. "In essence, the complaint alleges that the market rate of $249 per megawatt hour price was agreed to only because Grays Harbor believed that the rate was based on a properly functioning market, when in fact the price resulted from a dysfunctional, manipulated market." (Id. at p. 646.) Grays Harbor also alleged unjust enrichment, to the extent it paid over what it would have paid in a fair market. After the case was removed the district court dismissed it because "the relief sought would require the court to determine a fair price." (Id. at pp. 645-646.)

After finding field and conflict preemption barred the complaint Grays Harbor addressed the filed rate doctrine:

> "The relief sought by Grays Harbor would require the court to set damages by assuming a hypothetical rate, the 'fair value,' in violation of the filed [*18] rate doctrine. [Citing TANC, supra, 295 F.3d at p. 933.]
> "Grays Harbor describes at length the reasons why the filed rate doctrine should not apply here, but its arguments all center on the market-based nature of the rates at issue in this case. Grays Harbor contends that the $249 per megawatt hour that was charged was not 'filed' with FERC and approved by FERC before it was charged. In short, according to Grays Harbor, FERC simply did not set any rates. Grays Harbor contends that to apply the filed rate doctrine to market-based rates that have not been filed with FERC would be an unwise and unprecedented expansion of the doctrine.
>
> "But, as described above, the market-based rate regime established by FERC continues FERC's oversight of the rates charged. FERC only permits power sales at market-based rates after scrutinizing whether 'the seller and its affiliates do not have, or have adequately mitigated, market power in generation and transmission and cannot erect other barriers to entry.' [Citation.] According to FERC, these conditions assure that the market-based rates charged comply with the FPA's requirement that rates be just and reasonable. [Citations.] This oversight is ongoing, [*19] in this case requiring Idaho Power Company to provide notice of any change in status, to file an updated market analysis every three years, and to file various sales agreements and transaction summaries. [Citation.]
> "Further, FERC contends that such procedures effectively constitute review of rates prior to their implementation. [Citation.] FERC has clearly stated its belief that these procedures 'satisfy the filed rate doctrine for market-based rates. . . .' [Citations.] Grays Harbor, on the other hand, provides no persuasive authority that the filed rate doctrine does not apply to market-based rates. [Citation.]
>
> "Therefore, while market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, we conclude that they do not fall outside of the purview of the doctrine. Therefore, the relief sought by Grays Harbor is barred under the filed rate doctrine." (379 F.3d at pp. 651-652.)

The majority went on to conclude that Grays Harbor should have been given leave to amend, stating, "A complaint that merely seeks declaratory relief as to contract formation issues would not necessarily intrude upon the rate-setting jurisdiction of FERC." (379 F.3d at p. 652.) [*20] Although the court cautioned that an amended complaint "must not require the district court to make a determination as to what the 'fair' rate would have been" (id. at pp. 652-653), the court did not explain how this would be possible, inasmuch as the claimed mistake was that Grays Harbor did not know the market price it paid "resulted from a dysfunctional, manipulated market." (Id. at p. 645.)

Because the claimed mistake hinged on an unfair price, leave to amend should have been denied, as Judge Callahan explained in her separate opinion. (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d at pp. 653-654 [conc. & dis. opn. of Callahan, J.].)

D. Snohomish

In Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756, the court discussed preemption and the filed rate doctrine together. Snohomish sued wholesale energy sellers based on "California state antitrust and consumer protection laws. Snohomish charges that the defendants manipulated the market and restricted electricity supplies in order to cause artificially high prices in the market from which Snohomish purchased power." (Id. at p. 758.) Snohomish upheld market-based rates:

> "Under the system at issue here, FERC has waived many of the requirements that applied under the cost-based [*21] system. For example . . . the utilities do not provide FERC with detailed schedules of their costs. Instead, the price of wholesale electricity is determined in the markets operated by the PX and the ISO.
> "FERC continued to oversee wholesale electricity rates, however, by reviewing and approving a variety of documents filed by the defendants, the PX, and the ISO. First, each seller was to file a market-based umbrella tariff, which 'preauthorizes the seller to engage in market-based sales and puts the public on notice that the seller may do so.' [Citation.] FERC approved these market-based tariffs only upon a showing that the seller lacked or had mitigated its market power. . . . [P]
>
> "Second, FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports, which contained certain required information including the minimum and maximum rate charged and the total amount of power delivered during the quarter. FERC has found this requirement necessary to ensure that rates will be on file as required by FPA § 205(c), 16 U.S.C. § 824d(c), to allow FERC to evaluate the reasonableness of the charges as required by FPA § 205(a), 16 U.S.C. § 824d(a), and to allow FERC to continually monitor the seller's ability [*22] to exercise market power. [Citation.]
> "Third, FERC reviewed and approved detailed tariffs filed by the PX and the ISO, which described in detail how the markets operated by each entity would function. Many of the rules governing market operations were originally submitted by the PX and the ISO for information purposes only, but FERC required that these protocols be filed with and approved by the Commission as part of the PX and ISO tariffs. [Citation.] Each participant in the PX and the ISO markets was required to sign an agreement acknowledging that the tariff filed by either the PX or the ISO would govern all transactions in that market.
> "After the energy crisis unfolded, FERC ordered wholesalers to disgorge profits that resulted from the kinds of practices Snohomish has alleged here. FERC found that many of these practices were prohibited by the protocols that were filed as part of the PX and ISO tariffs. [Citation.]
>
> "This court has rejected Snohomish's argument that the preemption-related doctrines at issue do not apply when market-based rates are involved. Grays Harbor, 379 F.3d 641. . . . We concluded that the district court was precluded from giving [Grays Harbor] the relief [*23] it sought because, to award that relief, the district court would have had to determine a 'fair price.' Id. at 648. We held that this would interfere with FERC's exclusive jurisdiction to set wholesale rates and was therefore barred by field preemption, conflict preemption, and the filed rate doctrine. Id. at 648, 650, 651, 653.
>
> "Snohomish's claims in this case allege violations of state antitrust and unfair competition law rather than the state contract law claims involved in Grays Harbor, but Snohomish's claims also ask the district court to determine the rates that 'would have been achieved in a competitive market.' This is the same determination as > the 'fair price' determination that we held was barred by preemption principles in Grays Harbor. We therefore hold that Snohomish's claims are barred by the filed rate doctrine, by field preemption, and by conflict preemption.

>
> "Snohomish also requests injunctive relief, but our court has also held that this relief is barred by the filed rate doctrine and preemption principles. [Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d at pp. 836-839.] In Dynegy, we held that the State of California's claims for violations of California's [UCL], which included a claim [*24] for injunctive relief, were barred. Id. at 835, 836-39. We said: 'remedies for breach and non-performance of FERC-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC.' Id. at 836. Here, FERC approved tariffs that included the market protocols that governed sales in the PX and ISO markets. FERC has found that most, if not all, of the practices alleged in Snohomish's complaint violated these protocols. [Citation.] Snohomish's claim for injunctive relief is therefore preempted. It 'encroach[es] upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to FERC, both to enforce and to seek remedy.' See Dynegy, 375 F.3d at 836 (citations omitted).
>
> "FERC approved tariffs that governed the California wholesale electricity markets. Therefore, if the prices in those markets were not just and reasonable or if the defendants sold electricity in violation of the filed tariffs, Snohomish's only option is to seek a remedy before FERC." (384 F.3d at pp. 760-762, italics added.)

Snohomish thus reaffirms that FERC tariffs were operative during the crisis, although they were unfairly manipulated.

E. Refund Cases

Recently [*25] the Ninth Circuit issued two decisions which illustrate FERC's prerogatives regarding tariffs.

In Public Utilities Com'n of State, Cal. v. F.E.R.C. (9th Cir. 2006) 462 F.3d 1027 (PUC), in which the Attorney General and Powerex were parties, the court vacated FERC orders which unduly limited the scope of refund proceedings. The court explained that FERC is making orders to correct the unfair payments generated by the colorfully-named schemes. (Id. at pp. 1040-1065.)

In Pacific Gas and Elec. v. F.E.R.C. (9th Cir. 2006) 464 F.3d 861 (PG&E) the court upheld FERC decisions allowing ISO to apply rates found by FERC to be reasonable to billings which had been paid during the crisis. The new rates are referred to as the Mitigated Market Clearing Price, or MMCP.

II. The Attorney General's Claims

A. Existence of a Filed Rate

The Attorney General argues "the filed rate doctrine does not apply because there was 'in effect' no properly filed tariff during the energy crisis." Market-based rate tariffs were approved by FERC and are being retroactively modified to preclude payments for gaming the market. (See PG&E, supra, 464 F.3d at pp. 864-868; PUC, supra, 462 F.3d at pp. 1040-1065; Snohomish, supra, [*26] 384 F.3d at pp. 760-762; see also Town of Norwood, Mass v. New England Power Co. (1st Cir. 2000) 202 F.2d 408, 419 [upholding market-based tariffs] (Norwood).) The Attorney General's argument is based upon snippets of a case that, fairly read, undermines his argument.

In California ex rel. Lockyer v. F.E.R.C. (9th Cir. 2004) 383 F.3d 1006 (Lockyer), the court held FERC had the authority to order refunds to account for the gaming schemes employed by some energy companies, which we have described above. The holding was "that FERC's authorization of market-based tariffs in this case complied with the [FPA], but that FERC abused its administrative discretion by declining to order refunds for violations of its reporting requirements." (Id. at p. 1008.)

The court described FERC's approval of the tariffs:

> "A condition of FERC's approval of an entity's market-based rate authority was a FERC determination that the entity lacked, or had adequately mitigated market power in the California markets. FERC conducted these > inquiries as a means of carrying out its statutory mandate under the [FPA] to ensure 'just and reasonable' wholesale rates for electricity. 16 U.S.C. § 824d(a). FERC approved the utilities' [*27] requests, and granted permission for the utilities to sell electricity at market-based rates in California. FERC also approved the establishment of the ISO and [PX], . . . [P]

>
> "In June 2000, wholesale electricity prices increased dramatically. In August, San Diego Gas & Electric Company filed a complaint under [the FPA], against all sellers of energy and ancillary services into the [PX] and ISO markets. In response, FERC instituted hearing procedures . . . to investigate the justness and reasonableness of the rates of sellers that were subject to FERC jurisdiction into the ISO and [PX] markets." (383 F.3d at p. 1009.)

During the hearings FERC found that the market structure had, contrary to its intent, allowed some sellers to exercise market power, resulting in "'unjust and unreasonable'" rates. "In addition to ordering structural and rule changes, FERC ordered an evidentiary hearing to determine the appropriate refund. However, FERC limited the refund to ISO and [PX] spot market transactions during the period from October 2, 2000 through June 20, 2001." (383 F.3d at p. 1010.) Later, California filed a broader complaint with FERC against all power sellers subject to FERC jurisdiction, [*28] "alleging that FERC's market-based rate filing requirements violated the FPA and that, even if valid, the reports filed by electricity sellers did not contain the transaction-specific information the FPA requires. California claimed that FERC's improper decision to limit the refund period reduced the refunds owed to California purchasers by as much as $2.8 billion." (Ibid.)

The Ninth Circuit rejected California's attack on market-based tariffs. (383 F.3d at pp. 1011-1013.) However, the court agreed that "FERC failed to administer the tariffs in accordance with their terms and abused its discretion in limiting available remedies for regulatory violations." (Id. at p. 1014.) The sellers had reporting requirements to enable FERC to monitor the market and ensure the tariffs were just and reasonable. However, sellers had failed to provide accurate transaction reports, as required by the tariffs. (Id. at pp. 1014-1015.)

In a rhetorical passage the court stated:

> "Thus, the very mechanism that distinguished FERC's tariff from those prohibited by the Supreme Court . . . was, for all practical purposes, non-existent while energy prices skyrocketed and rolling brown-outs threatened California's [*29] businesses and citizens.
>
> "Despite the promise of truly competitive market-based rates, the California energy market was subjected to artificial manipulation on a massive scale. With FERC abdicating its regulatory responsibility, California consumers were subjected to a variety of market machinations, . . ." (383 F.3d at pp. 1014-1015.)

The court then rejected FERC's position that the reporting violations were "technical" and did not authorize refunds:

> "FERC misapprehends its legal authority in this context. In fact, FERC possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior. [Citation.] Indeed, in the past, FERC has ordered refunds in instances where utilities violated FPA § 205, either by violating the terms of an accepted rate, or by charging rates without first seeking approval under FPA § 205. . . . [P]
>
> "Here, because the reporting requirements were an integral part of a market-based tariff that could pass legal muster, FERC cannot dismiss the requirements as mere punctilio. If the ability to monitor the market, or gauge the 'just and reasonable' nature of the rates is eliminated, then effective federal regulation is removed altogether. Without the required filings, [*30] neither FERC nor any affected party may challenge the rate. Pragmatically, under such circumstances, there is no filed tariff in place at all. The power to order retroactive refunds when a company's non-compliance has been so egregious that it eviscerates the tariff is inherent in FERC's authority to approve a market-based tariff in the first instance. FERC may elect not to exercise its remedial discretion by requiring refunds, but it unquestionably has the power to do so. In fact, if no retroactive refunds were legally available, then the refund mechanism under a market-based tariff would be illusory. Parties aggrieved by the illegal rate would have no FERC remedy, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a > direct action against the offending seller. That result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the FPA." (383 F.3d at pp. 1015-1016, italics added.)

Thus, the court was not actually holding that no tariffs existed, as the Attorney General claims, the court was holding that if FERC's position about the triviality of the reporting requirements were upheld, the tariffs would be unenforceable, or "[p]ragmatically," there would be no [*31] tariffs. The passage read in context does not support the Attorney General's claim that the court held no valid tariffs were in place. Indeed, the passage makes the point that FERC alone has the power to enforce the tariffs by awarding refunds where the market machinations resulted in other than "just and reasonable rates," because of the filed rate doctrine. This refutes the claim that the court held no filed tariffs were in place. (See In re Enron Corp. (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005) 327 B.R. 526, 534-535 (Enron) [rejecting California Attorney General's claim that doctrine does not apply because no filed rates existed].)

B. Application of the Filed Rate Doctrine

The Attorney General argues the filed rate doctrine does not apply because "what is at issue . . . is the manner under which Powerex conducted itself in the California energy market during the energy crisis." "[T]he Attorney General's claims neither rely on any filed tariff term, directly affect a filed rate or tariff provision, nor collaterally attack the reasonableness of any filed rate[.]" We disagree.

The complaint sought restitution, disgorgement of profits, civil penalties and damages as a result of Powerex's trading activities, [*32] alleging the gaming of the market resulted in unfair payments to Powerex which harmed California electricity consumers and de-stabilized the power delivery system. Any monetary relief would be in excess of the tariffs eventually applied by FERC and therefore are barred by the filed rate doctrine. (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d at pp. 760-762; Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d at p. 853; Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d at pp. 651-652; TANC, supra, 295 F.3d at pp. 929-932; Enron, supra, 327 B.R. at pp. 535-537 [barring California Attorney General's claims under UCL and CCL based on gaming the market].) Further, civil penalties are regulatory and "to impose a civil penalty upon an incident or event, without regard to whether injury was suffered, is to regulate the activity that gave rise to the incident or event." (People v. Union Pacific Railroad Co.(2006) 141 Cal.App.4th 1228, 1257-1258.) Regulating gaming schemes by imposing penalties would grant relief in excess of the tariffs and conflict with FERC's exclusive regulatory power over the wholesale energy market. (See Duke Energy Trading and Marketing, L.L.C. v. Davis (9th Cir. 2001) 267 F.3d 1042, 1056-1057 [state "commandeering orders directly nullify [*33] the security and default mitigation provisions of the FERC-approved CTS rate schedule, and hence cross the 'bright line' between state and federal jurisdiction established by the FPA"].)

The claim of entitlement to injunctive relief, too, is barred by the filed rate doctrine. (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d at pp. 760-762; Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d at pp. 836-839, 852-853; see Norwood, supra, 202 F.3d at pp. 419-420.) Further, we rejected an injunctive claim arising from the energy crisis, for lack of any "threat that the misconduct to be enjoined is likely to be repeated in the future." (Madrid v. Perot Systems Corp. (2005) 130 Cal.App.4th 440, 465.) The Attorney General's complaint and briefing predicates liability on conduct during the energy crisis. Gaming could not be successfully attempted now, when the ISO, FERC and the Attorney General are all watching the power companies like hawks.

Because the complaint fails to state any good claim for relief the trial court properly sustained the demurrer.

III. Leave to Amend

At the hearing in the trial court the Attorney General sought leave to amend to drop the restitution claim. In a footnote on appeal he suggests leave to amend should have been [*34] given to "amend the complaint in a manner that would address the court's concerns." Later he states "the court may grant relief that will not conflict with the filed rate doctrine and FERC's exclusive regulation of rates and remedies provided in a tariff."

A party may propose amendments on appeal where a demurrer has been sustained, in order to show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying leave to amend. (Code Civ. Proc., § 472c, subd. (a).) However, the vague claim that "concerns" could be "address[ed]" by an amendment or there may be a type of relief "that will not conflict with the filed rate doctrine" does not satisfy an appellant's duty to spell out in his brief the specific proposed amendments on appeal. (Cooper v. Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 Cal.2d 627, 636-637; Paterno v. State of California (1999) 74 Cal.App.4th 68, 110.) The Attorney General has not carried his burden as the appellant to show an abuse of discretion by the trial court in declining to grant leave to amend. (Cf. Code Civ. Proc., § 472c, subd. (a).)

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. The Attorney General shall pay Powerex's costs on appeal. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 8.276.)

MORRISON, J.

We concur:

BLEASE, [*35] Acting P.J.

BUTZ, J.

County of Milwaukee v. Williams

Supreme Court of Wisconsin

March 6, 2007, Oral Argument; June 12, 2007, Filed

Nos. 2005AP2686 & 2005AP2687

Reporter

2007 WI 69 *; 301 Wis. 2d 134 ; 732 N.W.2d 770 ; 2007 Wisc. LEXIS 396 ****

County of Milwaukee, Plaintiff-Respondent, v. Lawrence C. Williams, Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner.

Prior History: [1] REVIEW of a decision of the Court of Appeals. COURT: Circuit Court. COUNTY: Milwaukee. JUDGE: Daniel L. Konkol. (L.C. Nos. 2005FO107 & 2005FO110).

County of Milwaukee v. Williams, 2006 WI App 153, 295 Wis. 2d 389, 720 N.W.2d 177, 2006 Wisc. App. LEXIS 567 (2006).

Disposition: Reversed and cause remanded.

Core Terms

Airport, taxis, Ordinance, permits, prearranged, passengers, regulation, taxicab, transportation, wait, limousines, conflicts, invalid, deprived, pickups, lease, Cab, do business, license, traffic, fares, prereserved, congestion, taxi service, petitioners', municipality, open system, decreased, curbside, pick

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN1[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 prohibits taxis without General Mitchell International Airport permits from making prearranged pickups, conflicts with the requirement under Wis. Stat. § 114.14 (2005-2006) that the public have equal access to airport services, and to that extent is invalid and unenforceable. Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 does not conflict with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, and 194.02 (2005-2006).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN2[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 regulates commercial ground transportation at the General Mitchell International Airport. The ordinance requires that taxis picking up passengers at the airport have a permit from the Airport in addition to the city, town, or village license required under Wis. Stat. § 349.24 (2005-2006). Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(5), 4.05(3)(b)(1). Under Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05, the number of permits issued for taxis to do business is capped at 50, though the Airport is authorized to request additional taxis to meet immediate demand under extraordinary circumstances (for example, large conventions or inclement weather). Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(3)(a). Under an exception to the permit rule, taxis are not required to have permits in order to drop off passengers at the Airport. Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(5).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN3[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Limousines are not subject to permit requirements, but are allowed to take customers only on a prearranged (or in the words of the ordinance, "prereserved") basis. Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(6). Under the ordinance, the limousines have a designated area to meet their prearranged passengers. Non-permitted taxis are prohibited from using that designated area and are excluded from being at the General Mitchell International Airport to meet prearranged passengers.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > De Novo Review > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

HN4[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The interpretation of an ordinance and statute each presents a question of law which is reviewed independently.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN5[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

The authority for counties to regulate the operation of airports derives from Wis. Stat. ch. 114 (2005-2006). Specifically, Wis. Stat. § 114.14(1) provides that the governing body of a county may adopt regulations, and establish fees or charges for the use of its airport. Wis. Stat. ch. 114 does not explicitly provide for the regulation of traffic or ground transportation, it has long been recognized that under the chapter, counties may regulate airport ground transportation.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN6[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

See Wis. Stat. § 114.14(1) (2005-2006).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN7[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

While Wis. Stat. § 114.14 (2005-2006) allows counties to regulate commercial ground transportation at airports, a county may not promulgate regulations that are inconsistent with Wisconsin State Legislation. A county has only such powers as are expressly conferred upon it or necessarily implied from the powers expressly given or from the nature of the grant of power. As a creature of the Legislature, a county must exercise its powers within the scope of authority that the State confers upon it. Where a county promulgates an ordinance that conflicts with its statutory authority, it is an invalid exercise of authority. Where a local governmental body enacts an ordinance pursuant to express statutory authority, all presumptions are in favor of its validity, and any person attacking it must make the fact of its invalidity clearly appear.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN8[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(3)(b) sets forth the requirement that taxis must have an airport permit in order to conduct business at the General Mitchell International Airport.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN9[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

See Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(3)(b).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN10[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 does allow limousines without airport permits to conduct business transporting passengers from the General Mitchell International Airport on a prearranged basis. Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(6)(a)(2).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN11[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.08(2)(b) sets forth the penalties for violating Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN12[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

See Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.08(2)(b).

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN13[] Air & Space Transportation, Airports

See Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3) (2005-2006).

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN14[] Air & Space Transportation, Airports

Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3) (2005-2006) prohibits depriving the public of equal and uniform use of airports. Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3), provides that although contracts may be made with private parties for the operation of municipal airports, they may in no case deprive the public of equal and uniform use of the airports.

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN15[] Air & Space Transportation, Airports

No distinction between private or personal and commercial use can be read into the clear words of the statute. Under Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1 (2005-2006), arbitrarily excluding members of the public (whether private or commercial) from the use of the airport will constitute depriving the public of equal and uniform use of airports.

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN16[] Air & Space Transportation, Airports

In regulating an airport there may be many instances of unequal or non-uniform treatment. Such unequal or non-uniform treatment does not by itself constitute "depriving" members of the public of equal and uniform use under the statute. Rather, it is the arbitrary exclusion, which is to say exclusion without a reasonable justification, that "deprives the public of equal and uniform use" of an airport under Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1 (2005-2006).

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN17[] Air & Space Transportation, Airports

Wis. Stat. § 114.14(2)(a) (2005-2006) provides that the governing body of a city, village, town or county which has established an airport may vest jurisdiction for the construction, improvement, equipment, maintenance and operation of the airport in an airport commission. Once such a governing body has vested jurisdiction for the operation of an airport in an airport commission, the commission shall have complete and exclusive control and management over the airport for which it has been appointed. Wis. Stat. § 114.14(2)(e) (2005-2006). Thus, the Wisconsin Legislature intended that counties and other municipalities could establish commissions with complete control over airports, and that such commissions could not exercise control so as to deprive the public of equal and uniform use of those airports.

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN18[] Air & Space Transportation, Airports

A county's authority to regulate an airport is limited to the power conferred by the statute. Nothing in Wis. Stat. § 114.14 (2005-2006) can be read to confer or imply authority for a county to exercise its power arbitrarily, so as to deprive members of the public of equal and uniform use of airports.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN19[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Arbitrary exclusions conflict with the rule under Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1 (2005-2006) that the public may in no case be deprived of equal and uniform use of an airport. Precluding taxis without airport permits from providing prearranged services conflicts with Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1 and is an invalid exercise of a county's authority. To that extent, Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 is invalid and therefore unenforceable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN20[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Wis. Stat. ch. 133 (2005-2006) is titled "Trusts and Monopolies." The first section of the chapter, Wis. Stat. § 133.01, is captioned "Legislative Intent."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN21[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See Wis. Stat. § 133.01 (2005-2006).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN22[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Wis. Stat. § 133.01 (2005-2006) expressly describes the Wisconsin Legislature's intent as applying to the Wis. Stat. ch. 133 92005-2006), and nowhere states that it is the intent of the section that the entire Wisconsin Code be interpreted in light of Wis. Stat. § 133.01. Rather, the section applies in circumstances in which parties assert violations of antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN23[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Wis. Stat. § 133.01 (2005-2006) applies when a party brings a cause of action in antitrust.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN24[ ] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Under Wis. Stat. § 133.01 (2005-2006), a court should not lightly reach the conclusion that monopoly or restraint of trade is authorized by extraneous statutes that do not quite clearly indicate that intent.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN25[ ] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

If an adverse effect on competition is, in and of itself, enough to render a state statute invalid, the States' power to engage in economic regulation would be effectively destroyed. If a regulation's adverse effect on competition allows an affirmative defense that less restrictive means are available, the State's power to engage in economic regulation would be hobbled. Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 does not conflict with Wis. Stat. § 133.01 (2005-2006).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

HN26[ ] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Under Wis. Stat. § 349.24 (2005-2006), city councils and village and town boards may regulate and license taxis and drivers. Wis. Stat. § 349.24(1). Further, taxis and drivers licensed by any city, village or town may not be required to procure such a license in any other municipality for the purpose of carrying taxi passengers for hire from one municipality to another. Wis. Stat. § 349.24(2).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

HN27[ ] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

See Wis. Stat. § 349.24 (2005-2006).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN28[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Wis. Stat. § 349.24 (2005-2006) makes no mention of counties or airports. Further, Wis. Stat. § 349.01 provides that words used in Wis. Stat. ch. 349 (2005-2006) are used in the same sense as those words are defined in Wis. Stat. § 340.01 (2005-2006). Wis. Stat. § 340.01(36m) states that "municipality" means city, village or town. Neither Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, nor the General Mitchell International Airport is a municipality under this definition. Thus, the restrictions in Wis. Stat. § 349.24(2) that prevent "municipalities" from requiring licenses from taxis and drivers with licenses from other municipalities does not pertain to the permits required under Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05, for neither the County nor the Airport is a municipality in the relevant sense.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN29[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

The purpose of Wis. Stat. § 349.24 (2005-2006) is to allow taxis and drivers to convey passengers through cities, towns, and villages without having to obtain a license in each one. In contrast, the permit requirement of Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(3) is to promote efficient and safe ground transportation at the General Mitchell International Airport. Regulations promoting this goal are within the County's purview under Wis. Stat. § 114.14(1) (2005-2006) and Town of Lake. Wis. Stat. § 349.24 does not conflict with Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

HN30[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

See Wis. Stat. § 194.02 (2005-2006).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

HN31[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

The very first subsection of Wis. Stat. ch. 194 (2005-2006), Wis. Stat. § 194.01(1), specifically excludes taxis from the definition of "common motor carrier."

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

HN32[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

See Wis. Stat. § 194.01(1) (2005-2006).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN33[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 does not conflict with Wis. Stat. § 194.02 (2005-2006).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN34[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

The requirement under Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 that taxis have one of a limited number of permits in order to do business at the General Mitchell International Airport does not conflict with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, or 194.02 (2005-2006). Wis. Stat. § 133.01 does not give rise to an independent cause of action, Wis. Stat. § 349.24 does not apply to counties or airports, and taxis are explicitly excluded from the scope of Wis. Stat. ch. 194.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Constitutionality of Legislation > General Overview

HN35[] Case or Controversy, Constitutionality of Legislation

It is fundamental that a court should not reach a constitutional question unless it is essential to the determination of the case before it.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN36[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

By prohibiting taxis without airport permits from accepting prearranged fares, Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 conflicts with Wis. Stat. § 114.14 (2005-2006) and to that extent is invalid and unenforceable.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

HN37[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, State & Local Regulation

Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05, which prohibits taxis without airport permits from making prearranged pickups, conflicts with the requirement under Wis. Stat. § 114.14 (2005-2006) that the public have equal access to airport services, and to that extent is invalid and unenforceable. Milwaukee, Wis., County Ord. 4.05 does not conflict with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, and 194.02 (2005-2006).

Counsel: For the defendants-appellants-petitioners there were briefs by Peter C. Carstensen & William Rosales and University of Wisconsin Law School, Madison, and Douglas P. Dehler and Shepherd, Finkelman, Miller & Shah, LLC, Milwaukee, and oral argument by Peter C. Carstensen.

For the plaintiffs-respondents there was a brief by Thomas J. McAdams, assistant district attorney and E. Michael McCann, district attorney, Milwaukee, and William J. Domina, Milwaukee County Corporation Counsel and Timothy R. Karaskiewicz, principal assistant corporation counsel, Milwaukee, and oral argument by Timothy R. Karaskiewicz.

An amicus curiae brief was filed by Gwendolyn J. Cooley, assistant attorney general with whom on the brief was J.B. Van Hollen, attorney general.

Judges: ANN WALSH BRADLEY, J. PROSSER, J., dissents. BUTLER, JR., J., joins the dissent.

Opinion by: ANN WALSH BRADLEY

Opinion

[*P1] [138] [772] ANN WALSH BRADLEY, J. The petitioners, Lawrence C. Williams and Russell L. Hegney, seek review of a published court of appeals decision that affirmed judgments of conviction. [*2] The defendants [773] were found guilty of picking up passengers in their taxis at General Mitchell International Airport ("Airport") without an Airport permit, in violation Milwaukee County Ordinance 4.05. [1] They assert that Ordinance 4.05 is invalid on several grounds: (1) that Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with Wis. Stat. § 114.14; [2] (2) that Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, and 194.02; and (3) that the restrictions on prearranged taxi service in Ordinance 4.05 are unconstitutional because they impermissibly interfere with interstate commerce.

[*P2] We determine that HN1[] Ordinance 4.05, which prohibits taxis without Airport permits from making prearranged pickups, conflicts with the requirement under § 114.14 that the public have equal access to airport services, and to that extent [*3] is invalid and unenforceable. However, we determine that Ordinance 4.05 does not conflict with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, and 194.02. Because our decision rests on statutory grounds, we do not reach the question of whether the restrictions on prearranged taxi service in Ordinance 4.05 impermissibly interfere with interstate commerce.

[*P3] Fundamentally, this case is about whether part of a county ordinance conflicts with a state statute [139] passed by the legislature. Ultimately, it is about whether that part of the Ordinance arbitrarily excludes members of the public from equal and uniform use of the Airport.

[1] See County of Milwaukee v. Williams, County of Milwaukee v. Hegney, 2006 WI App 153, 295 Wis. 2d 389, 720 N.W.2d 177 (affirming judgments of the circuit court for Milwaukee County, Daniel L. Konkol, Judge). The court of appeals granted a motion by Williams and Hegney to consolidate their cases for appeal.

[2] All references to the Wisconsin Statutes are to the 2005-06 version unless otherwise noted.

[*P4] This case, however, is not about requiring the Airport to return to an "open" taxi system where there was no limitation on taxis conducting business at the Airport. The record demonstrates the need for Milwaukee County to regulate commercial ground transportation at the Airport. It recognizes how Milwaukee County has made great strides in reducing congestion, increasing efficiency, and enhancing safety at the Airport.

[*P5] The error here is not remedied by a return to the open system. Rather, it is remedied by the elimination of an arbitrary exclusion. Accordingly, we reverse the court of [*4] appeals, and remand with instructions to vacate the judgments of conviction.

I

[*P6] The factual record is limited in this case. It is based on a stipulation of facts agreed to by the parties together with affidavits incorporated into the stipulation.

[*P7] Until the late 1980s, General Mitchell International Airport had an "open" taxi system that did not limit taxis from conducting business at the Airport. The open system led to a number of problems. Taxis had to wait up to five hours for customers, and because of the long wait they sometimes would refuse "short-haul" fares. The Airport's limited space led to a chaotic taxi staging area, with taxi traffic that spilled onto the Airport's roadway. This created a safety problem for the [140] Airport's non-taxi traffic. The congestion and chaos from taxis jockeying for position led to fights between taxi drivers.

[*P8] In addition to problems created by too many taxis vying for fares, the open system created problems of too few taxis [774] at off-peak times. Passengers seeking curbside taxi pickups endured long waits for rides.

[*P9] In the late 1980s, Milwaukee County ("County") addressed these problems by adopting HN2[] Ordinance 4.05, which regulates commercial ground transportation [*5] at the Airport. The Ordinance requires that taxis picking up passengers at the Airport have a permit from the Airport in addition to the city, town, or village license required under Wis. Stat. § 349.24. Milw. County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(5), 4.05(3)(b)(1). Under Ordinance 4.05, the number of permits issued for taxis to do business is capped at 50, though the Airport Director is authorized to request additional taxis to meet immediate demand under extraordinary circumstances (for example, large conventions or inclement weather). Milw. County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(3)(a). Under an exception to the permit rule, taxis are not required to have permits in order to drop off passengers at the Airport. Milw. County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(5).

[*P10] HN3[] Limousines are not subject to permit requirements, but are allowed to take customers only on a prearranged (or in the words of the Ordinance, "prereserved") basis. Milw. County Ord. 4.05(6). Under the Ordinance, the limousines have a designated area to meet their prearranged passengers. [3] Non-permitted [141] taxis are prohibited from using that designated area and are excluded from being at the Airport to meet prearranged passengers.

[*P11] Since the adoption of Ordinance 4.05, the problems of the open system have abated. The time that taxis must wait for fares has decreased, and the time that passengers must wait for curbside taxi service has decreased. The cap on taxi permits has reduced the congestion problems, and taxis no longer spill into the Airport roadway to create a hazard for other Airport traffic. The limited number of taxis also allows Airport staff to inspect periodically the taxis servicing the Airport, which has resulted in taxis that are better maintained and cleaner than under the open system.

---

[3] The Ordinance defines "luxury limousine" as:

> [A] [*6] for-hire ground transportation vehicle, regularly engaged in the business of carrying passengers for hire, having a maximum seating capacity of six (6) persons, unless the size of the group dictates a larger vehicle, behind the driver and which is a top of the line American or foreign production or custom automobile designated by its manufacturer as a limousine and which has custom nonproduction features.

Milw. County Ord. 4.05(6)(a)(2).

[*P12] Taxis provide service using two distinct methods. The first is curbside service, which is on-demand service where passengers get taxis without having made a prior agreement to [*7] meet the taxi. The second is "prearranged" or "prereserved" service. It involves a prior agreement to pick up a passenger at a particular time and place. In the case of prearranged airport service, a reservation typically is made prior to the traveler's departure. The requirement that taxis have an Airport permit to "do business" at the Airport encompasses both curbside and prearranged pickup services. [4]

[*P13] [142] [775] Williams and Hegney were taxi drivers for Quality Cab Company, which is based in Fond du Lac. Quality Cab has relationships with individuals and businesses in the Fond du Lac area [*8] that request Quality Cab provide transportation to and from the Airport. As of January 2005, Quality Cab did not have a valid Airport permit, and thus Williams and Hegney did not possess valid permits pursuant to Ordinance 4.05(3)(b)(5).

[*P14] On different dates in January 2005, Williams and Hegney traveled to the Airport to pick up passengers who had made prior arrangements for pickups by Quality Cab. After ignoring warnings that they could not accept departing taxi fares from the Airport, Williams and Hegney were issued citations for violating Ordinance 4.05(3)(b)(5).

[*P15] The petitioners did not dispute that they lacked the appropriate permits under Ordinance 4.05. Rather, they moved the circuit court to dismiss the citations, arguing that the Ordinance is invalid because it conflicts with Wis. Stat. §§ 349.24, 194.02, and 133.01. After the circuit court denied the motion, Williams and Hegney stipulated to facts and received fines of $250. The court of appeals affirmed, holding that Wis. Stat. § 114.14 provides Milwaukee County the authority to regulate taxis at the Airport, that Wis. Stat. §§ 349.24, 194.02, and 133.01 are consistent with Ordinance 4.05, and that Ordinance 4.05 was therefore [*9] valid.

[143] II

[*P16] In this case we address Milwaukee County's ability to enact an ordinance that prohibits taxis without Airport permits from making prearranged pickups of customers, where the same ordinance allows limousines without permits to make such pickups. [5]

[*P17] We examine whether Milwaukee County Ordinance 4.05 is in part invalid and unenforceable because it conflicts with a state statute. Resolution of this inquiry involves HN4[] the interpretation of the Ordinance and the statute. Each presents a question of law which we review independently. State ex rel. Teunas v. County of Kenosha, 142 Wis. 2d 498, 504, 418 N.W.2d 833 (1988); Milwaukee Police Ass'n v. Hegerty, 2005 WI 28, P11, 279 Wis. 2d 150, 693 N.W.2d 738.

III

[*P18] At oral argument, the petitioners aptly described the case [*10] as follows.

> This case is about the validity of an absolute ban on my clients' providing prereserved service to arriving travelers at Milwaukee Airport just because they drive taxis rather than limousines . . . . In other words, if they drove a limousine, they could have met their passengers and taken them back to Fond du Lac. The basic

---

[4] The petitioners appear to assert that Ordinance 4.05 creates an "absolute" ban on taxis providing prearranged service. There is nothing in the record that supports this claim, and they do not cite a provision in the Ordinance (or elsewhere) that sets forth such a prohibition. In fact, the Ordinance explicitly contemplates prearranged service by permitted taxis: "Where prereserved (reservation) business is engaged in, driver shall check in with the ground transportation coordinator and provide the name(s), flight number(s) and arrival time(s) for the reserved passenger(s)." Milw. County Ord. 4.05(3)(f)(7).

[5] The petitioners do not argue that this case is about the County's ability to enact an ordinance that prohibits taxis without Airport permits from making prearranged pickups where that ordinance allows taxis with Airport permits to make such pickups. As noted above in footnote 4, they appear to assert without citation or support in the record that all taxis are prohibited from providing prearranged service at the Airport.

> [144] question in this case is why does the Ordinance impose this restraint on taxi drivers and taxi companies? . . .
> No one disputes the authority of Milwaukee County to regulate traffic and other aspects of the Airport. Petitioners do challenge the County's claim that it has unfettered discretion to impose any regulation it sees fit, regardless of the public interest.

[*P19] [776] The petitioners contend that the restriction is problematic in two respects. First, they argue that it is not within the County's authority to treat them (taxis without Airport permits) differently from limousines (which are not required to have Airport permits) with respect to providing prearranged service at the Airport. Second, they argue that it is not within the County's authority to require taxis to have one of a limited number of Airport permits in order to do business at the Airport.

[*P20] [*11] HN5[] The authority for counties to regulate the operation of airports derives from chapter 114. Specifically, Wis. Stat. § 114.14(1) provides that the "governing body of a . . . county may adopt regulations, and establish fees or charges for the use of [its] airport." [6] While [145] the petitioners correctly note that chapter 114 does not explicitly provide for the regulation of traffic or ground transportation, it has long been recognized that under that chapter, counties may regulate airport ground transportation.

[*P21] In Milwaukee County v. Town of Lake, for example, the court examined contracts between airlines and General Mitchell Field which allowed the airlines to provide ground transportation between the air field and Milwaukee. 259 Wis. 208, 48 N.W.2d 1 (1951). The Town of Lake, adjacent to the airport, passed an ordinance prohibiting taxis not licensed by the Town from operating within its limits, and began ticketing taxis without such a license as they passed through the Town. Id. at 227. This court determined that the ordinance impermissibly interfered with Milwaukee County's authority to regulate the air field. It affirmed the circuit court's determination that under chapter 114, as the owner of General Mitchell Field, Milwaukee County "has the exclusive right to manage said field, including the right to regulate the ground transportation to be furnished [*13] to airline passengers arriving at and departing from General Mitchell Field." Id. at 231.

[*P22] Further, the Town of Lake court determined that, beyond having the authority to regulate the air field, the county must regulate the field to assure the field's efficient and safe operation:

> The county . . . was bound to regulate the matters affecting the use of the field so as to produce efficiency and good order and to prevent confusion which necessarily would arise at an airfield where hundreds of thousands of passengers are annually passing through [146] the gates, and which if left without regulation would hobble operations and seriously interfere with the safety and comfort of the traveling public.

Id. See also Courtesy Cab Co. v. Johnson, 10 Wis. 2d 426, 431-32, 434, 103 N.W.2d 17 (1960).

[*P23] [777] The petitioners argue, however, that the ability of the County to regulate commercial ground transportation at the Airport is limited by Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1. It provides that "[t]he public may in no case be deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport." Citing to this court's decision in Wussow v. Gaida, 251 Wis. 328, 29 N.W.2d 42 (1947), they assert that the "equal and uniform use" requirement under [*14] § 114.14(3)(b)1

---

[6] Wis. Stat. § 114.14(1) states:

> HN6[] The governing body of a city, village, town or county which has established an airport or landing field, or landing and take-off strip, and acquired, leased or set apart real property for such purpose may construct, improve, equip, maintain and operate the same, or may vest jurisdiction for the construction, improvement, equipment, maintenance and operation thereof in any suitable officer, board or body of such city, village, town or county. The expenses of such construction, improvement, equipment, maintenance and operation shall be a city, village, town or county charge as the case may be. The governing body of a city, village, town or county may adopt [*12] regulations, and establish fees or charges for the use of such airport or landing field, or may authorize an officer, board or body of such village, city, town or county having jurisdiction to adopt such regulations and establish such fees or charges, subject however to the approval of such governing body before they shall take effect.

applies to commercial entities as well as to non-commercial entities. They contend that prohibiting taxis without Airport permits from making prearranged pickups at the Airport deprives the public of equal and uniform use of the Airport. Thus, because Ordinance 4.05 has such a prohibition, it conflicts with state law, and therefore is invalid.

[*P24] HN7[] While § 114.14 allows counties to regulate commercial ground transportation at airports, a county may not promulgate regulations that are inconsistent with state legislation. A county "has only such powers as are expressly conferred upon it or necessarily implied from the powers expressly given or from the nature of the grant of power." Teunas, 142 Wis. 2d at 504 (quoting Town of Vernon v. Waukesha County, 102 Wis. 2d 686, 689, 307 N.W.2d 227 (1981)). "As a creature of the legislature, a county must exercise its powers within the scope of authority that the State confers upon it." Mommsen v. Schueller, 228 Wis. 2d 627, 634-35, 599 N.W.2d 21 (Ct. App. 1999)(citation omitted). Where a [147] county promulgates an ordinance that conflicts with its statutory authority, it is an invalid exercise of authority. Teunas, 142 Wis. 2d at 515-16. [*15] Where a local governmental body enacts an ordinance pursuant to express statutory authority, "all presumptions are in favor of its validity, and any person attacking it must make the fact of its invalidity clearly appear." State ex rel. B'nai B'rith Found. v. Walworth County Bd. of Adjustment, 59 Wis. 2d 296, 307, 208 N.W.2d 113 (1973) (quoting Newman v. Pagels, 212 Wis. 475, 479, 250 N.W. 430 (1933)).

[*P25] In determining whether Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with the statute, and is therefore not within the County's authority, we examine both the language of the Ordinance and the relevant provisions of the statute. HN8[] Ordinance 4.05(3)(b) sets forth the requirement that taxis must have an Airport permit in order to conduct business at the Airport:

> HN9[] 4.05(3)(b) License, permits, fees.
>
> . . . .
>
> (3)(a) On and after September 1, 1990, taxicab owner permits will be issued only to those owners who whose vehicles(s) have been permitted during the period October 1, 1989, through July 5, 1990. Taxicab owner permits must be renewed and remain in full force and effect on a continuous basis . . . . In the event an owner does not renew the taxicab owner permit prior to the annual dates prescribed herein below, [*16] that owner shall forfeit his/her privilege to operate at the airport. . . .
>
> (5) Any person who is not in possession of the necessary permits required under this section and who operates a taxicab at General Mitchell International Airport in such a manner as to constitute doing business, or who attempts to do business thereon shall, without limitation [148] because of enumeration, be deemed to be in violation of chapter 4 of the Code. . . . [7]

[*778] At the same time, however, HN10[] Ordinance 4.05 does allow limousines without Airport permits to conduct business transporting passengers from the Airport on a prearranged basis. Milw. County Ord. 4.05(6)(a)(2). [8]

[*P26] HN11[] Milwaukee County Ordinance 4.08(2)(b) [*17] sets forth the penalties for violating section 4.05(3)(b):

> HN12[] (b) Commercial ground transportation violations. Persons violating section 4.05 of this chapter . . . shall, upon conviction of the violation, forfeit to the county a sum not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than five hundred dollars ($500.00) as the court in its discretion shall determine, together with the

---

[7] A taxi that drops off passengers at the Airport is not doing business under the meaning of 4.05(3):

> A taxicab driver entering upon General Mitchell International Airport for the sole purpose of discharging a taxicab patron at said airport shall not be deemed to be doing business thereon if, after discharging said passenger, he/she shall immediately leave the airport premises.

Milw. County Ord. 4.05(3)(b)(5).

[8] "[L]imousines must operate on a pre-reserved (reservation) basis only . . . ." Milw. County Ord. 4.05(6)(a)(2).

> costs of the action to collect such forfeiture, and upon default of payment thereof, such persons shall be imprisoned in the county jail or the house of correction in the county for a period of not less than five (5) days nor more than ninety (90) days in the discretion of the court.

[*P27] Section 114.14(3) provides in relevant part:

> HN13[] (3)(a) Except as provided in par. (b), in carrying out its duties the airport commission may do any of the following:
> . . . .
>
> [149] (b) The exercise of authority by the airport commission under par. (a) shall be subject to all of the following conditions:
> 1. The public may in no case be deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport.

[*P28] In Wussow, this court examined § 114.14(3) and focused on the provision that the public may not be "deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport." Wussow [*18] leased the Shawano Municipal Airport from the Shawano County airport committee. Under the lease, Wussow was to operate the airport and receive the income from concessions and rentals. 251 Wis. at 329-30. Gaida operated a business adjacent to the airport that sold aircraft, gave flying instruction, and provided a taxi service. He had used the airport for two years prior to Wussow's lease, and continued to use the airport after the lease had been executed. Id. at 330.

[*P29] Wussow sought to enjoin Gaida's use of the airport on the grounds that giving flying lessons and providing taxi services impinged on Wussow's rights under the contract and caused him to lose profits. Id. at 330-31. The circuit court granted the injunction. On review, this court determined that the lease did not provide Wussow with the right to exclusive commercial use of the airport because HN14[] § 114.14(3) prohibits depriving the public of equal and uniform use of airports:

> The lease itself does not attempt to give [Wussow] the right to arbitrarily exclude members of the public from the use of the airport, as indeed it could not, for sec. 114.14(3), Stats., clearly precludes the granting of such a right. That section provides [*19] that although contracts may be made with private parties for the operation of municipal airports, they may in no case deprive the public of equal and uniform use of the airports.

[*779] [150] Id. at 331 (emphasis added). [9]

[*P30] Further, the Wussow court declined to adopt the argument that § 114.14(3) requires equal and uniform use only for private use. Rather, it determined that HN15[] "no distinction between private or personal and commercial use can be read into the clear words of the statute." Id. Wussow makes clear that under *§ 114.14(3)(b)*1, arbitrarily excluding members of the public (whether private or commercial) from the use of the Airport will constitute depriving the public of equal and uniform use of airports.

[*P31] We recognize that HN16[] in regulating an airport there may be many instances of unequal or non-uniform treatment. Such unequal or non-uniform treatment does not by itself constitute "depriving" members [*20] of the public of equal and uniform use under the statute. Rather, according to Wussow, it is the arbitrary exclusion, which is to say exclusion without a reasonable justification, that "deprive[s] the public of equal and uniform use" of an airport under § 114.14(3)(b)1. Thus, in order to determine whether Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with

---

[9] The wording of Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3) was amended by 1999 Wis. Act 83, §§ 187-188. The changes do not affect the meaning of the statute for the purposes of the analysis here, and the language requiring that "[t]he public may in no case be deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport" was unchanged.

§ 114.14(3)(b)1, we must examine whether the exclusion is arbitrary, or whether there exists a reasonable justification for the unequal and non-uniform use of the Airport pertaining to the pre-reserved pickup. [10]

[*P32] [151] In determining whether Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with § 114.14, we are limited by a sparse record. Nonetheless, the record before us indicates that under the open taxi system, there were problems of congestion, long waits for both taxis and customers, taxis refusing to provide short rides, traffic hazards, and fights among taxi drivers.

[*P33] [152] The record also indicates that under Ordinance 4.05, these problems have abated [780] and that the taxis servicing the Airport are better maintained. The effect of the Ordinance on the problems that attended the open system is explained in an affidavit by the Airport Director, which was incorporated by reference into the stipulation of facts. [11]

[*P34] The affidavit provides [*23] that the cap on the number of Airport taxi permits has decreased the wait time for both taxis and passengers:

> 4. Since the adoption of Mil. County Ord. 4.05, the number of permits issued to taxicabs has been capped at 50. Consequently, the wait time for fares has decreased to two to three hours and passenger wait time for a taxi has decreased to one to two minutes. Under the previous system, wait times were longer and passengers were less certain because there were often fewer cabs during off-peak hours and cabs often refused fares. The new system ensures enough business for the taxis so that they receive fares within a reasonable amount of time and gives them the incentive to return immediately to the airport, even during off-peak hours.

[*P35] Further, the affidavit asserts that the cap on Airport taxi permits allows for greater inspection of taxis, relieves traffic congestion, and reduces traffic hazards.

> 5. . . . The limited number of cabs makes it possible for the staff to inspect periodically the permitted taxis. . . .
>
> 6. Capping the number of taxis at 50 has also reduced congestion problems. The staging area in front of the [153] terminal can only accommodate four taxis, and there is not enough [*24] room for taxis to double park. Under the "open" system, taxis would frequently clog the staging area by double parking, and fights between taxi drivers would break out due to the congestion and aggression caused by drivers cutting in line

---

[10] The County argues that the express language of § 114.14(3) subjects only the exercise of authority by the airport commission to the condition that the public may not be deprived of equal and uniform use. Because Ordinance 4.05 is an exercise of the County's authority, rather than an exercise of an airport commission's authority, the County contends that the requirement that the public not be deprived of equal and uniform use is not applicable. This is incorrect.

HN17[] Section 114.14(2)(a) provides that the "governing body of a city, village, town or county which has established an airport may vest jurisdiction for the construction, improvement, equipment, [*21] maintenance and operation of the airport in an airport commission. . . ." Once such a governing body has vested jurisdiction for the operation of an airport in an airport commission, "[t]he commission shall have complete and exclusive control and management over the airport for which it has been appointed." Wis. Stat. § 114.14(2)(e). Thus, the legislature intended that counties and other municipalities could establish commissions with complete control over airports, and that such commissions could not exercise control so as to deprive the public of equal and uniform use of those airports.

Here, the County has vested authority in an airport commission to operate the airport with "complete and exclusive" control. At the same time, however, it has promulgated a rule which arbitrarily deprives the public of equal and uniform airport use. The promulgation of such a rule allows the County to circumvent the statutory protection of the public's equal and uniform use of the Airport afforded by Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1. Further, HN18[] the County's authority to regulate the Airport is limited to the power conferred by the statute. Mommsen v. Schueller, 228 Wis. 2d 627, 634-35, 599 N.W.2d 21 (Ct. App. 1999)(citations [*22] omitted). Nothing in § 114.14 can be read to confer or imply authority for the County to exercise its power arbitrarily, so as to deprive members of the public of equal and uniform use of airports.

[11] There is nothing in the stipulated facts that would counter the County's claim that the Ordinance has resolved the problems of the open system. The affidavits submitted by the petitioners address only the way that Quality Cab conducts its business and ways in which Ordinance 4.05 is anticompetitive.

> and jockeying for position. The limited space would also cause taxis to spill over into the roadway and create a hazard for passenger traffic. Under the current system the problems relating to overflow and double parking have been greatly reduced. . . .

[*P36] Moreover, the affidavit contends that allowing taxis without Airport permits would add to congestion problems, but at the same time would not aid in providing reliable and efficient transportation for most of the Airport's customers.

> 7. There are good reasons for granting permits only to cabs that will base themselves at the Airport to provide a constant supply of cab services for arriving passengers. For example, since a Fond du Lac cab would not transport a customer who wanted to travel from the Airport to another location within the City of Milwaukee, the Fond du Lac cab would have less incentive to wait in the staging area for a fare. That would mean that the Fond du Lac cab would add to the congestion [*25] when it did appear but could not be relied upon to provide a steady supply of services to arriving passengers.

[*P37] The County argues that these are precisely the kinds of benefits that justify regulation under § 114.14 and Town of Lake. By decreasing wait times, assuring adequate business, minimizing traffic hazards, and allowing inspections, the regulations ensure "good order," "efficiency," "prevent[ion of] confusion," and the "safety [781] and comfort of the traveling public." Town of Lake, 259 Wis. at 231.

[*P38] [154] We agree that the record supports the County's argument that some regulation of taxi traffic comports with § 114.14. However, the Airport Director's affidavit does not proffer any sort of justification for prohibiting taxis without Airport permits from providing prearranged service, despite limousines being able to provide such service. Rather, the proffered justifications reflect reasons for limiting only taxis that provide curbside service. [12]

[*P39] Taxis picking up prearranged fares need not wait in line with [*26] taxis offering curbside pickups, thereby contributing to congestion. Similarly, if taxis meeting prearranged fares are not in line with the curbside taxis, they would not contribute to taxi traffic spilling onto the Airport's roadway. Because prearranged taxi service must by definition have been arranged ahead of time, there is no reason to suspect that the wait time for customers would increase if non-permitted taxis could retrieve prearranged fares from the Airport. Finally, were some passengers to use taxis for prearranged service, it would not affect the ability of the Airport to inspect its permitted taxis regularly to assure that they are well-maintained.

[*P40] Thus, the County's proffered justifications for Ordinance 4.05 relate only to the Ordinance's restrictions on taxis' ability to provide curbside service, and provide no justification for precluding taxis without permits from providing prearranged service. However, under the Ordinance only limousines may provide prearranged service without Airport permits.

[*P41] [155] Similar to Wussow, a commercial enterprise has been arbitrarily excluded from using an airport, depriving it of equal and uniform use under § 114.14(3)(b)1. 251 Wis. at 331. [*27] More importantly, the Ordinance arbitrarily limits the options of the general public--the people who need to make the transportation arrangements. They do not have the option of choosing a taxi without a permit for prearranged pick-ups from the airport. [13]

---

[12] The dissent asserts that the majority is forcing Milwaukee County to return to an open system. Dissent, P83. This assertion is incorrect and should not be allowed to cause confusion.

[13] Milwaukee County Ordinance 4.05(5)(a) also provides that "out-of-county shuttle services" may operate on a prearranged basis from the Airport:

> "Out-of-county" shuttle service, under this subsection shall mean a company, partnership or person which operates on a prereserved basis from General Mitchell International Airport to destinations beyond the county limits.

[*P42] The County contends that passengers wanting pre-arranged taxi service from the petitioners may take a shuttle to an off-Airport location and meet the taxi for a prearranged ride there, and that the petitioners could offer prearranged service by providing limousine services. These arguments miss the mark. The issue is whether prohibiting taxis without permits from making prearranged pickups, and depriving the public from meeting prearranged [782] taxis at the Airport, is justified [156] in the first instance. The possibility that the petitioners could expand their business to include a limousine service or meet passengers at other locations does not provide a justification for prohibiting taxis without Airport permits from providing prearranged pickups.

[*P43] The County also asserts, based on an affidavit, that it "does not limit the number of limousine operators due to a federal law applicable to interstate limousine transports." [14] However, the question in this [157] case is whether the limitation on taxis without Airport permits providing prearranged pickups is justified by the benefits outlined in the County's affidavits, [*29] not whether the County has the power to restrict the number of limousines providing services at the Airport. The County has provided nothing in the record to support the claim that allowing taxis without permits to make prearranged pickups would create the problems associated with the open system, even though prearranged service by limousines does not cause such problems.

[*P44] As the Wussow court noted, such HN19[] arbitrary exclusions conflict with the rule under § 114.14(3)(b)1 that "[t]he public may in no case be deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport." We therefore determine that precluding taxis without Airport permits from providing prearranged services conflicts with § 114.14(3)(b)1 and is an invalid exercise of the County's authority. To that extent, Ordinance 4.05 is invalid and therefore unenforceable.

IV

[*P45] We consider next Williams and Hegney's arguments that by requiring taxis to have one of a limited number of permits in order to do business at the Airport, Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, [*31] and 194.02.

[*P46] The essence of their argument under § 133.01 is that every single Wisconsin statute that affects economic competition must be interpreted through the lens of § 133.01. They argue that the section "establish[es] a clear

---

> The vehicle(s) which make up "out-of-county" shuttle service(s) shall be van(s) regularly engaged in the business of carrying passengers for hire, having a maximum seating capacity of twenty-two (22) persons behind the driver, with heating and air conditioning and be in good operating condition.

Milw. County Ord. 4.05(5)(a). The record does not provide details about such services. It is unclear from the record whether such service operates in Fond du Lac. However, the possibility of prearranged van services does not affect the analysis here, for it does not provide a reason [*28] for excluding taxis without Airport permits from providing prearranged services.

[14] Neither the affidavit nor the briefs cite to a statute or case law on this point. The County may be referring to Executive Town & Country Servs., Inc. v. City of Atlanta, 789 F.2d 1523, 1525-26 (11th Cir. 1986). In that case, the Eleventh Circuit determined that while taxis generally do not operate in the stream of interstate commerce, a limousine service that received the vast majority of its business from an international airport, received many of its incoming calls on 800 number lines, and served multi-national corporate clients was within the stream of interstate commerce. Id. at 1525-26. See also Charter Limousine, Inc. v. Dade County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 678 F.2d 586 (Former 5th Cir. 1982); United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 231-32, 67 S. Ct. 1560, 91 L. Ed. 2010 (1947).

The dissent posits that the County is instead referring [*30] to 49 U.S.C. § 14501(d). This seems unlikely because that statute clearly states that it does not limit airports from providing preferential access to providers of pre-arranged ground transportation services:

> (3) Matters not covered. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed-
>
> . . .
>
> (B) as prohibiting or restricting an airport, train, or bus terminal operator from contracting to provide preferential access or facilities to one or more providers of pre-arranged ground transportation service . . . . 49 U.S.C. § 14501(d)(3) (2006).

public policy governing all regulatory agencies in this state that requires maximizing [158] economic competition, including commercial ground transportation, subject only to those limits necessary to achieve the legislature's goals." They contend that the decision in Cedarhurst Air Charter, Inc. v. Waukesha County, 110 F. Supp. 2d 891 (E.D. Wis. 2000), and this [783] court's decision in American Med. Transp. of Wisconsin, Inc. v. Curtis-Universal, Inc., 154 Wis. 2d 135, 452 N.W.2d 575 (1990), warrant a broad application of § 133.01. Thus, they argue, any regulation must "employ the least anticompetitive means to achieve any legislatively mandated goal."

[*P47] The petitioners' view is supported by neither the language of § 133.01 nor the cases cited. Further, the petitioners' view would subject the enforcement of any regulation affecting competition to litigation regarding the regulation's effect on competition. We therefore decline to adopt it here.

[*P48] HN20[] Chapter 133 of the Wisconsin [*32] Code is titled "Trusts and Monopolies." The first section of the chapter, § 133.01, is captioned "Legislative Intent" and states:

> HN21[] The intent of this chapter is to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition by prohibiting unfair and discriminatory business practices which destroy or hamper competition. It is the intent of the legislature that this chapter be interpreted in a manner which gives the most liberal construction to achieve the aim of competition. It is the intent of the legislature to make competition the fundamental economic policy of this state and, to that end, state regulatory agencies shall regard the public interest as requiring the preservation and promotion of the maximum level of competition in any regulated industry consistent with the other public interest goals established by the legislature.

(Emphasis added). HN22[] The section expressly describes the legislature's intent as applying to this chapter (that is, [159] chapter 133), and nowhere states that it is the intent of the section that the entire Wisconsin Code be interpreted in light of § 133.01. Rather, the section applies in circumstances in which parties [*33] assert violations of antitrust law.

[*P49] The petitioners' contention that case law supports the view that § 133.01 should be used to interpret all state actions regulating competition is incorrect. The case law cited by the petitioners supports the view that HN23[] § 133.01 applies when a party brings a cause of action in antitrust. American Medical Transport involved a complaint filed by three private ambulance companies alleging that the City of Milwaukee and four other private ambulance companies had violated § 133.03 of the state antitrust law. 154 Wis. 2d at 138. The complaint concerned a system that gave the four defendant companies primary responsibility for the city's ambulance service and relegated the plaintiff companies to providing backup service. Id. at 139.

[*P50] The circuit court granted the defendants' motions to dismiss on the ground that the city was authorized to implement such a system under home-rule authority pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 62.11(5). Id. at 141. This court relied upon § 133.01 in considering whether § 62.11(5) did in fact authorize such "anticompetitive, monopolistic regulation." Id. at 151. It determined that HN24[] under § 133.01, "we should not lightly reach the conclusion [*34] that monopoly or restraint of trade is authorized by extraneous statutes that do not quite clearly indicate that intent." Id. at 151-52. Thus, it allowed the plaintiffs' antitrust suit to move forward. [15]

[*P51] [160] [784] In Cedarhurst, the plaintiff claimed that Waukesha County had conspired with the operator of Waukesha County Airport to monopolize the market for aircraft fuel, in violation of federal antitrust laws, specifically 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2. 110 F. Supp. 2d at 892-93. The county moved to dismiss, asserting that the claims were barred by state action immunity. Id. (citing Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943)). Specifically, the county stated that it was immune on the ground that § 114.14 gave it wide authority to engage in anticompetitive conduct. In its consideration of whether the legislature intended that § 114.14 authorize the county's conduct, the court recognized that § 133.01 requires that courts liberally interpret statutes to promote competition. Id. at 895. The court determined that § 114.14 did not provide the "'clear articulation of a [*35] state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct' needed to support [the county's] defense of state action immunity." Id. at 895 (quoting City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 372, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991)).

---

[15] Wis. Stat. § 133.03 no longer applies "to ambulance service contracted for under ss. 59.54(1), 60.565, 61.64 and 62.133." Wis. Stat. § 133.03(4).

[*P52] Both American Medical Transport and Cedarhurst involved causes of action under antitrust law. In each case, § 133.01 was used as an interpretive tool in determining whether a statute had authorized the regulation that formed the basis of the antitrust action. In contrast to American Medical Transport, in which plaintiffs alleged violations of § 133.03, and in contrast to Cedarhurst, where plaintiffs alleged violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act, Williams and Hegney's only assertion of a violation of antitrust laws comes from its invocation of § 133.01. [16]

[*P53] [161] The petitioners concede that their view of § 133.01 does not give rise to an independent cause of action. However, that assertion belies the potential sweep of their interpretation of § 133.01. In the petitioners' view, because there is some less restrictive [*36] alternative to the Ordinance consistent with the goals of the statutes that authorize the Ordinance, the Ordinance conflicts with the statutes as a matter of law.

[*P54] As the Attorney General notes in an amicus brief, every form of economic regulation restrains trade to some degree. However, the petitioners' theory would allow as a defense to any enforcement action of any such regulation the claim that there is a less restrictive alternative consistent with the statute authorizing the regulation. Thus, even if § 133.01 does not give rise to a cause of action in its own right, the petitioners' theory has the potential to precipitate litigation across every area of economic regulation in the state. In their view, any time a party is cited for a violation of a regulation, that party could assert that the regulation is unenforceable because there is a less restrictive alternative consistent with the goals of the statute authorizing the Ordinance.

[*P55] The Supreme Court noted in Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland that HN25[] "if [*37] an adverse effect on competition were, in and of itself, enough to render a state statute invalid, the States' power to engage in economic regulation would be effectively destroyed." 437 U.S. 117, 133, 98 S. Ct. 2207, 57 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1978). As a corollary, we could add that if a regulation's adverse effect on competition allowed an affirmative defense that less restrictive means were available, this state's power to engage in economic regulation would be hobbled. We therefore determine that Ordinance [785] 4.05 does not conflict with § 133.01.

[*P56] [162] The petitioners' argument that Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with Wis. Stat. § 349.24 is also unavailing. HN26[] Under that section, city councils and village and town boards may regulate and license taxis and drivers. Wis. Stat. § 349.24(1). [17] Further, taxis and drivers licensed by any city, village or town may not be required to

---

[16] We note, too, that § 133.01 expressly applies to "state regulatory agencies." We decline to address whether Milwaukee County is a state regulatory agency under § 133.01.

[17] Wis. Stat. § 349.24 [*38] provides in relevant part:

> HN27[] Authority to license taxicab operators and taxicabs. (1) The council of any city and every village or town board may:
>
> (a) Regulate and license chauffeurs and operators of taxicabs used for hire;
>
> (b) Regulate and license the taxicab business by licensing each taxicab used for hire;
>
> (c) Prohibit any person from operating any motor vehicle for taxicab purposes upon the highways of the city, village or town unless the person is licensed as a chauffeur and operator and unless the taxicab business is licensed by the licensing of each taxicab;
>
> (d) Revoke any license mentioned in this section when in its judgment the public safety so requires.
>
> (2) Any person licensed by any city, village or town as a chauffeur and operator shall not be required to procure either a chauffeur's and operator's license or a taxicab license in any other municipality for the purpose of carrying taxicab procure such a license "in any other municipality for the purpose of carrying taxi passengers for hire from one municipality to another." Wis. Stat. § 349.24(2). The petitioners argue that the requirement under Ordinance 4.05(3)(b)(3) that taxis doing business at the Airport have an Airport permit conflicts with § 349.24(2), and is therefore unenforceable.

[*P57] The petitioners' view is contrary to the very words of the [*39] statute. As the court of appeals here [163] explained, HN28[] § 349.24 makes no mention of counties or airports. 2006 WI App 153, 295 Wis. 2d 389, P21, 720 N.W.2d 177. Further, Wis. Stat. § 349.01 provides that words used in chapter 349 are used in the same sense as those words are defined in Wis. Stat. § 340.01. Section 340.01(36m) states that "'[m]unicipality' means city, village or town." Neither the county nor the Airport is a municipality under this definition. Thus, the restrictions in § 349.24(2) that prevent "municipalities" from requiring licenses from taxis and drivers with licenses from other municipalities do not pertain to the permits required under Ordinance 4.05, for neither the County nor the Airport is a municipality in the relevant sense.

[*P58] We also agree with the court of appeals that HN29[] the purpose of § 349.24 is to allow taxis and drivers to convey passengers through cities, towns, and villages without having to obtain a license in each one. 2006 WI App 153, 295 Wis. 2d 389, P21, 720 N.W.2d 177. In contrast, the permit requirement of Ordinance 4.05(3)(b)(3) is to promote efficient and safe ground transportation at the Airport. Regulations promoting this goal are within the County's purview under § 114.14(1) and Town of Lake. 259 Wis. at 231. Thus, [*40] we determine that § 349.24 does not conflict with Ordinance 4.05.

[*P59] The petitioners' final statutory argument is based on § 194.02. That section states:

> HN30[] It is the intent of the legislature to remove the economic regulations which limit motor carrier operations in the state. The legislature intends to let the market promote competitive and efficient transportation services, while maintaining the safety regulations necessary to protect the welfare of the traveling [786] and shipping public. It is the intent of the legislature that this chapter be interpreted in a manner which gives the [164] most liberal construction to achieve the aim of a safe, competitive transportation industry.

The petitioners maintain that the statement of intent to promote "competitive and efficient transportation services" in § 194.02 extends to the regulation of taxis. They argue that the language of § 194.02 requires that regulation of any transportation services be "the minimum necessary to achieve the other goals the legislature has adopted." Because Ordinance 4.05 is not the minimum regulation necessary to achieve other legislative goals, the petitioners claim that the Ordinance is unenforceable on the ground that it contradicts [*41] § 194.02.

[*P60] Their argument, however, is belied by the express scope of chapter 194. HN31[] The very first subsection of the chapter, § 194.01(1), specifically excludes taxis from the definition of "common motor carrier." It states:

> HN32[] "Common motor carrier" means any person who holds himself or herself out to the public as willing to undertake for hire to transport passengers by motor vehicle between fixed end points or over a regular route upon the public highways or property over regular or irregular routes upon the public highways. The transportation of passengers in taxicab service . . . shall not be construed as being that of a common motor carrier.

(Emphasis added.) The other two types of vehicles covered by the section ("contract motor carrier" and "private motor carrier") do not include taxis, for both are defined as transporting property rather than passengers. [18] passengers for hire from one municipality to another, but this exception does not permit the chauffeur or operator to operate a taxicab wholly within the limits of any municipality in which the chauffeur or operator is not licensed.

---

[18] Wis. Stat. §§ 194.01(2), (11).

[*P61] The petitioners argue that § 194.02's statement of intent "to let the market promote competitive and efficient transportation services" is not specific to [165] motor carriers, and therefore applies to regulations regarding taxis. However, that statement follows a sentence specifically stating that the [*42] intent of the legislature is to remove regulations "which limit motor carrier operations" (emphasis added). Thus, one sentence in a statement of legislative intent refers to "transportation services," while the rest of the chapter expressly excludes taxis from its scope. This is simply not a sufficient foundation to conclude that any regulation of taxis must be the least restrictive to competition consistent with legislative goals, as the petitioners claim. We therefore determine that the HN33[] Ordinance does not conflict with § 194.02.

[*P62] Accordingly, we conclude that HN34[] the requirement under Ordinance 4.05 that taxis have one of a limited number of permits in order to do business at the Airport does not conflict with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, or 194.02. Section 133.01 does not give rise to an independent cause of action, § 349.24 does not apply to counties or airports, and taxis are explicitly excluded from the scope of chapter 194.

[*P63] Finally, the petitioners assert that the restriction on prearranged taxi service in Ordinance 4.05 is an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce. However, HN35[] it is fundamental that a court should not reach a constitutional question unless it is essential [*43] to the determination of the case before it. Kollasch v. Adamany, 104 Wis. 2d 552, 561, 313 N.W.2d 47 (1981). Because we determine that HN36[] by prohibiting taxis without Airport permits from accepting prearranged fares, Ordinance 4.05 conflicts with [787] § 114.14 and to that extent is invalid and unenforceable, we do not reach the constitutional question.

[166] V

[*P64] In sum, we determine that HN37[] Ordinance 4.05, which prohibits taxis without Airport permits from making prearranged pickups, conflicts with the requirement under § 114.14 that the public have equal access to airport services, and to that extent is invalid and unenforceable. However, we determine that Ordinance 4.05 does not conflict with Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01, 349.24, and 194.02. Because our decision rests on statutory grounds, we do not reach the question of whether the restrictions on prearranged taxi service in Ordinance 4.05 impermissibly interfere with interstate commerce. Accordingly, we reverse the court of appeals, and remand the cause to the circuit court with instructions to vacate the judgments of conviction.

By the Court.--the decision of the court of appeals is reversed and the cause is remanded to the circuit court.

Dissent by: DAVID T. PROSSER

Dissent

[*P65] [*44] DAVID T. PROSSER, J. (dissenting). This case interprets Milwaukee County's power to regulate ground transportation at General Mitchell International Airport. Although I might seek changes to Milwaukee County's Ordinance 4.05 if I were a member of the Milwaukee County Board, this court should not force changes to the ordinance unless there is very clear proof that the ordinance is invalid. Because I am not persuaded that the petitioners have satisfied their burden to establish invalidity, I respectfully dissent.

I

[*P66] The Wisconsin Legislature has given local governments broad powers to "construct, improve, equip, maintain and operate" an airport. Wis. Stat. § 114.14(1). "The governing body of a city, village, town or county may adopt regulations, and establish fees or charges for the use of such airport." Id.

[*P67] [167] Pursuant to the authority granted to Milwaukee County by this statute, the County Board adopted Milwaukee County Ordinance 4.05. The ordinance provides in part:

(1) Purpose. The purpose and intent of this section is to regulate all commercial ground transportation including prereserved (reservation) service, by the issuance of permit(s) to both those owning or operating a commercial [*45] ground transportation service and those driving commercial ground transportation vehicles at General Mitchell International Airport. Prereserved (reservation) service means ground transportation that is contracted for prior to the actual time passengers are picked up.

. . . .

(3) Taxicabs.

(a) Definition. "Taxicab" under this section is a motor vehicle regularly engaged in the business of carrying passengers for hire, with heating and air conditioning, be in good operating condition, metered, and not operated on an affixed route.

(b) License, permits, fees.

(1) An owner or operator of a taxicab shall not do business or attempt to do business on General Mitchell International Airport unless such owner or operator has been licensed as owner or operator of a taxicab business by any city, village or town consistent with Wis. Stats. § 349.24, and unless such license remains in full force and effect.

. . . .

[*788] (3)(a) On and after September 1, 1990, taxicab [168] owner permits will be issued only to those owners whose vehicle(s) have been permitted during the period October 1, 1989, through July 5, 1990. Taxicab owner permits must be renewed and remain in full force and effect on a continuous basis, in [*46] accordance with subparagraph (b) below. In the event an owner does not renew the taxicab owner permit prior to the annual dates prescribed herein below, that owner shall forfeit his/her privilege to operate at the airport. At such time that the total number of taxicab permits issued decreases below fifty (50), additional permits, to maintain the total issued at fifty (50), will be issued to those taxicab owners who are on the waiting list. Permits will be issued based upon date of request on the waiting list. In the event of extraordinary circumstances, i.e. large conventions, inclement weather or inability of the permitted taxicab fleet to meet immediate passenger demand, the airport director or his/her designated representative is authorized to request temporary taxicab service from local providers in order to meet such extraordinary demand. Additional taxicabs will follow all policies, rules and regulations pertaining to the operation of taxicabs at General Mitchell International Airport.

. . . .

(5) Any person who is not in possession of the necessary permits required under this section and who operates a taxicab at General Mitchell International Airport in such a manner as to constitute [*47] doing business, or who attempts to do business thereon shall, without limitation because of enumeration, be deemed to be in violation of chapter 4 of the Code. A taxicab driver entering upon General Mitchell International Airport for the sole purpose of discharging a taxicab patron at said airport shall not be deemed to be doing business thereon if, after discharging said passenger, he/she shall immediately leave the airport premises.

[169] Milwaukee County, WI, Code of General Ordinances, ch. 4 (2006) (emphasis added).

[*P68] Persons challenging this ordinance have a heavy burden. The police power of the state, exercised by municipalities under the authority of the legislature, extends to the public safety, health, morals, and general welfare. Highway 100 Auto Wreckers, Inc. v. City of West Allis, 6 Wis. 2d 637, 643, 96 N.W.2d 85 (1959), rehearing denied, 6 Wis. 2d 637, 97 N.W.2d 423 (1959). The police power embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or general prosperity. Courtesy Cab Co. v. Johnson, 10 Wis. 2d 426, 432, 103 N.W.2d 17 (1960). "This court has often recognized the principle that the court will not interfere with the exercise of police power by a municipality [*48] unless the illegality of the exercise is clear." Highway 100 Auto Wreckers, 6 Wis. 2d at 643. "If there are any reasons which can fairly have weight, the reasons for a given ordinance are for the legislative body and not for the courts." Courtesy Cab, 10 Wis. 2d at 432.

[*P69] The county "does not have the burden of proving the validity of its ordinance . . . . Rather, [a challenger] has the burden of showing its invalidity." State ex rel. B'nai B'rith Found. v. Walworth County Bd. of Adjustment, 59 Wis. 2d 296, 307, 208 N.W.2d 113 (1973). "[W]here a municipal body enacts regulations pursuant to authority expressly granted, all presumptions are in favor of its validity, and any person attacking it must make the fact of its invalidity clearly appear." State ex rel. Newman v. Pagels, 212 Wis. 475, 250 N.W. 430 (1933).

[*P70] [789] The majority opinion carefully explains the history and purpose of the County ordinance. See majority op., PP7, 8, 9, 11, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37. This is summarized well in the following sentences:

> [170] Since the adoption of Ordinance 4.05, the problems of the open system have abated. The time that taxis must wait for fares has decreased, and the time that passengers must wait for [*49] curbside taxi service has decreased. The cap on taxi permits has reduced the congestion problems, and taxis no longer spill into the Airport roadway to create a hazard for other Airport traffic.

Id., P11.

[*P71] Surprisingly, the majority invalidates the ordinance in part in spite of this success.

II

[*P72] To support their attack on Ordinance 4.05, petitioners point to Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1.: "(b) The exercise of authority by the airport commission under par. (a) shall be subject to all of the following conditions: 1. The public may in no case be deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport." (Emphasis added.) They contend that Ordinance 4.05(3)(b)(5), prohibiting the operation of a taxicab at General Mitchell International Airport without a permit, violates the statutory rule on "equal and uniform use of the airport" if the taxicab merely picks up passengers on a "prearranged" or "prereserved" basis. They argue that it is not within the County's authority to treat taxis without permits differently from luxury limousines (which are not required to have airport permits) with respect to providing prearranged service at the Airport. See majority op., P19.

[*P73] They also argue that it is not within [*50] the County's authority to require taxis to have one of a limited number (50) of Airport permits to do business at the Airport. Id. According to petitioners, "[f]orbidding the provision of [prereserved] service [by taxis without [171] permits] serves only to protect the favored 50 Milwaukee taxis and the providers of more expensive prereserved services from competition."

[*P74] Before responding to these arguments, it is helpful to understand the history of the language at issue. The present sentence, "The public may in no case be deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport," Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1., first appeared in our statutes in slightly different form in 1943. See § 15, ch. 269, Laws of 1943. Newly created § 114.14(3) gave airport commissions certain powers, including the power to "contract with private parties for the operation of the airport, including all necessary arrangements for the improvement and equipment and successful operation thereof. Provided, that in no case shall the public be deprived of equal and uniform use of the airport." Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3) (1943).

[*P75] Legislative Reference Bureau drafting records for 1943 S.B. 123, the source of Chapter 269, do not explain this [*51] proviso. Although the drafting records are incomplete, they show that the bill went through significant drafting changes before introduction. At some point, the bill drafter appears to have borrowed language from the Uniform Airports Act, promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1935.

[*P76] For instance, Section 5 of the Uniform Airports Act reads in part:

> Section 5. Authority to Equip, Improve, Establish Fees and Charges and Lease.--Counties, municipalities, or other political subdivisions of this state which have established or may hereafter establish airports or landing fields, or [790] which acquire, lease, or set apart real property for such purpose or purposes, are hereby authorized:

> [172] (a) to construct, equip, improve, maintain, and operate the same, or to vest authority for the construction, equipment, improvement, maintenance, and operation thereof, in an officer, board or body of such political subdivision. . . .
> . . . .
>
> (c) to lease for a term not exceeding [ ] years such airports or landing fields to private parties for operation, or to lease or assign for a term not exceeding [ ] years to private parties for operation space, area, improvements, and [*52] equipment on such airports or landing fields, provided in each case that in so doing the public is not deprived of its rightful, equal and uniform use thereof.

Handbook of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and Proceedings of the Forty-Fifth Annual Conference, Uniform Airports Act 216-17 (1935) (emphasis added). [19] The underscored words were substantially incorporated into Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3) (1943).

[*P77] Admittedly, the language of our statute is somewhat broader than the language of the uniform law. This helps to explain the comment in Wussow v. Gaida, 251 Wis. 328, 331, 29 N.W.2d 42 (1947), that "no distinction between private or personal and commercial use can be read into the clear words of the statute." Yet, the Wussow decision--which is vital to petitioners' argument--was influenced by more than the language of the statute. Both the statute and Wussow were influenced by contemporary practices.

[*P78] In a 1941 article, John M. Hunter, Jr., an attorney for the Civil Aeronautics Administration of the United States Department of Commerce, [*53] wrote:

> [173] The principal legal developments of interest in the field of airport operation during the last year [1940] were with regard to the leasing of municipal airports or airport facilities to private persons and the grant by cities of airport operating privileges. These developments included the adoption of several city resolutions authorizing airport leases and grants of privileges and concessions . . . .
> In addition to these developments, there have been three cases in which informal complaint has been made to the Civil Aeronautics Authority of violation of the exclusive right provision of Section 303 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, which reads: "There shall be no exclusive right for the use of any landing area or air navigation facility upon which Federal funds have been expended." In all of these cases the complaint was that the city in question had granted a private operator an exclusive right to conduct commercial flying activities at the municipal airport, including operation of a flying school and a charter flying service.

John M. Hunter, Jr., Airport Legal Developments of Interest to Municipalities--1940, The Journal of Air Law and Commerce 153 (Vol. XII, 1941) (citation [*54] omitted).

[*P79] Hunter's article was prescient, for it anticipated the very facts of the Wussow case. Wussow entered into a lease to operate the Shawano Municipal Airport and to "have sole charge of said airport." Wussow, 251 Wis. at 329-30. [791] Gaida, who owned an aircraft sales company on adjacent land and had regularly used the airport for landing and taking off, continued to use the airport to give "flying instructions and taxi service" (likely meaning air charter service). Id. at 330. Wussow sought an injunction to bar such use, claiming that Gaida was forceably taking Wussow's rights under the contract and causing him "great loss in profits and [174] earnings." Id. This court reversed the circuit court and denied the injunction. It cited the procedural posture of the case as well as the language of the statute, then added: "The final answer to the immediate question must be arrived at in the light of this determination that [Wussow's] right to equitable relief does not exist. We do not decide whether a cause of action at law may exist." Id. at 331 (emphasis added).

[*P80] Thus, close examination of the Wussow case suggests that petitioners may be reading too much into it. A 1958 opinion of the Wisconsin [*55] Attorney General presents a more balanced discussion of the law on airport contracts. The Attorney General concluded in summary:

---

[19] See also Ga. Code Ann. § 6-3-25(3) (1995); S.C. Code Ann. § 55-9-190(3) (1992); Utah Code Ann. § 72-10-207(1)(c) (2001).

> Where the county is the owner and operator of an airport it can lawfully lease space in its terminal building to a car rental agency upon the condition that it will not lease space to any other car rental agency, but it is doubtful whether it can lawfully exclude other rental agencies from soliciting business in the airport or terminal unless such regulation can be shown to be necessary for the convenience of the flying public or the efficiency of the operation of the airport.

47 Op. Att'y Gen. 29 (1958).

[*P81] An annotation at 40 A.L.R.2d 1060 (1955) ("Validity, construction, and operation of airport operator's grant of exclusive or discriminatory privilege or concession") cites several cases upholding exclusive ground transportation service contracts at public airports. Thus, it is difficult to believe that the Wisconsin Legislature intended to hamstring the operation of Wisconsin airports by prohibiting the reasonable regulation of competition.

[*P82] This background has a direct relationship to petitioners' argument that a 50-permit limit on taxicabs at the Airport [*56] violates Wis. Stat. § 114.14(3)(b)1. If [175] Milwaukee County may not limit the number of taxicab permits at its Airport, it is hard to see how it can limit the number of other service providers and vendors by regulation or contract.

[*P83] Clearly, Quality Cab, which employs Williams and Hegney, is not the only taxicab company in the region that may wish to conduct a prereserved pick up and return business if an Airport permit is not required. Hence, the majority opinion appears to be forcing Milwaukee County to return to an open system. This would be a substitution of judicial policy for county regulation.

[*P84] Milwaukee County Ordinance 4.05 is a comprehensive, detailed ordinance. It governs taxicabs (subsection 3), in-county shuttle service (subsection 4), out-of-county shuttle service (subsection 5), luxury limousines (subsection 6), courtesy cars (subsection 7), and buses (subsection 8), as well as car and truck rentals (subsection 9). The ordinance addresses prereserved service for taxicabs (4.05(3)(f)(7)), out-of-county shuttle service (4.05(5)(a)), and luxury limousines (4.05(6)(a)(2)).

[*P85] The kind of prereserved taxicab service, without permit, contemplated by the majority will be in direct [*57] competition against (1) taxicabs with permits; (2) in-county shuttle service under negotiated contract and permit; and (3) out-of-county shuttle services that have paid for permits. Traffic congestion, fairness to permit holders, reliable service to the public, and revenue [792] to the County all factor into the present regulatory scheme.

[*P86] Unaccountably, the majority opinion faults the County for not anticipating and countering every argument the majority adduces in favor of open competition for prereserved taxicab service. See, e.g., majority op., P39. After all, the County does not have the [176] burden of proving the validity of its ordinance. The majority's assumption that there will be no longer wait time if non-permitted taxis are able to retrieve prearranged fares at the Airport is, frankly, unrealistic. Passengers get out of their taxicabs when the cabs arrive at the Airport. Passengers get into their taxicabs after their planes arrive at the Airport and after they have picked up any luggage. No extra wait time? Even the residents of Lake Wobegon would smile at the suggestion that planes are never late and luggage is never delayed or lost at General Mitchell International Airport.

[*P87] As for [*58] arbitrary discrimination, petitioners make much of the fact that luxury limousines are not required to have permits. This distinction appears to be based upon federal law, which prohibits local governments from requiring a license or fee for certain motor vehicles providing prearranged ground transportation service. See 49 U.S.C. § 14501(d). [20] Complying with federal law is not being arbitrary.

---

[20] 49 U.S.C. § 14501(d) (1955), reads as follows:

> (d) Pre-arranged ground transportation.--
>
> (1) In general.--No State or political subdivision thereof and no interstate agency, or other political agency of 2 or more States shall enact or enforce any law, rule, regulation, standard or other provision having the force and effect of law

[*P88] [177] Milwaukee County Ordinance 4.05(3) is defensible as applied in these citations. Because the majority holds otherwise, I respectfully dissent.

[*P89] I am authorized to state that Justice LOUIS B. BUTLER, JR., joins this opinion.

---

requiring a license or fee on account of the fact that a motor vehicle is providing pre-arranged ground transportation service if the motor carrier providing such service--

(A) meets all applicable registration requirements under chapter 139 for the interstate transportation of passengers;

(B) meets all applicable vehicle and intrastate passenger licensing requirements of the State or States in which the motor carrier is domiciled or registered to do business; and

(C) [*59] is providing such service pursuant to a contract for--

(i) transportation by the motor carrier from one State, including intermediate stops, to a destination in another State; or

(ii) transportation by the motor carrier from one State, including intermediate stops in another State, to a destination in the original State.

Shane v. Humana, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

June 13, 2007, Decided ; June 13, 2007, Filed

Nos. 06-14222 & 06-14497

Reporter

228 Fed. Appx. 927 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 13813 **

CHARLES B. SHANE, M.D., JEFFREY BOOK, D.O., H. ROBERT HARRISON, M.D., GLENN L. KELLY, M.D., LEONARD J., KLAY, M.D., MARTIN MORAN, M.D., MANUEL PORTH, M.D., THOMAS BACKER, M.D., SUSAN HANSEN, M.D., ANDRES TALEISNIK, M.D., JULIO TALEISNIK, M.D., ROGER WILSON, M.D., MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OF GEORGIA, FLORIDA MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, LOUISIANA STATE MEDICAL SOCIETY, Plaintiffs-Appellants, versus HUMANA, INC., COVENTRY HEALTH CARE, INC., HUMANA HEALTH PLAN, INC., PACIFICARE HEALTH SYSTEMS, INC., PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [1] PLEASE REFER TO FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE RULE 32.1 GOVERNING THE CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS.

Subsequent History: Related proceeding at Grider v. Keystone Health Plan Cent., Inc., 500 F.3d 322, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 20633 (3d Cir. Pa., Aug. 28, 2007)

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida. D. C. Docket Nos. 04-21589-CV-FAM & 00-01334-MD-FAM.

In re Managed Care Litig., 430 F. Supp. 2d 1336, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40846 (S.D. Fla., June 19, 2006)

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Judges: Before CARNES and WILSON, Circuit Judges, and WALTER, [*] District Judge.

Opinion

[*928] PER CURIAM:

The judgment of the district court is affirmed for the reasons set out in the district court's order granting summary judgment, which was filed on June 19, 2006, except that we do not reach the issue of whether the "plus factors" requirement from antitrust law is applicable in civil RICO cases. Even if that requirement is not applicable, the district court's judgment is still due to be affirmed under the facts and circumstances of this case.

AFFIRMED.

---

[*] Honorable Donald E. Walter, United States District Judge for the Western District of Louisiana, sitting by designation.

In re Netflix Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

June 14, 2007, Decided; June 14, 2007, Filed

No. C 07-00643 WHA Related to: No. C 07-01266 WHA, No. C 07-01978 WHA

Reporter
506 F. Supp. 2d 308 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45207 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,749

IN RE NETFLIX ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates To: ALL ACTIONS

Core Terms

patent, antitrust, competitors, consumers, plaintiffs', allegations, pleaded, discovery, federal patent law, references, preempted, motion to dismiss, anti trust law, relevant market, state-law, deterred, standing to bring, district court, prior art, patentee, damages, exited, online, enforcement activity, restraint of trade, lack standing, patent-infringement, counterclaims, particularity, infringement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) tests for legal sufficiency of the claims alleged in the complaint. While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the "grounds" of his "entitlement to relief" requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to a plaintiff. However, conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN2[] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

As a general rule, behavior conforming to the patent laws oriented towards procuring or enforcing a patent enjoys immunity from the antitrust laws. But this immunity is hardly absolute. An inventor who obtains a patent by defrauding the patent office deserves no immunity. Such antitrust claims are known as Walker Process claims, refer to the United States Supreme Court's decision in Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp. In order to achieve a suitable accommodation in this area between the differing policies of the patent and antitrust laws, a distinction must be maintained between patents procured by "deliberate fraud" and those rendered invalid or unenforceable for other reasons.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN3[] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

To succeed on a claim for Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., fraud, the antitrust claimant must show: (1) that the asserted patent was obtained by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting the facts to the United States Patent and Trademark Office; (2) that the party enforcing the patent was aware of the fraud when bringing suit; (3) independent and clear evidence of deceptive intent; (4) a clear showing of reliance, i.e., that the patent would not have issued but for the misrepresentation or omission; and (5) the necessary additional elements of an underlying violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Generally, the law of the circuit in which the district court sits governs issues in antitrust law. The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit law controls as to matters within its jurisdiction. More specifically, whether conduct in procuring or enforcing a patent is sufficient to strip a patentee of its immunity from the antitrust laws is to be decided as a question of Federal Circuit law. When a courts consider a patentee's behavior under Federal Circuit law and determines that it involved either an inappropriate attempt to procure a patent or an inappropriate attempt to enforce a patent, the remainder of the antitrust inquiry must proceed under the law of the regional circuit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN5[] Standing, Requirements

A plaintiff must be a "proper party" to have standing to bring an antitrust action, regardless of whether they have suffered an antitrust injury in fact. A plaintiff must show five factors to demonstrate antitrust standing: (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Scope

Antitrust injury, consists of the following elements: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and (5) that the plaintiff be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN7[] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

The harm in a Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., claim comes not from fraudulently obtaining a patent, it comes from creating or maintaining an unlawful monopoly using that patent. Even though Walker Process claims are predicated on enforcement of a fraudulently-obtained patent, the harm still accrues directly to consumers. Competitors are excluded from the market allowing the patentee to create or maintain an unlawful monopoly.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN8[] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

Like all fraud-based claims, Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., allegations are subject to the pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally. Rule 9(b). For Walker Process claims, a party must allege that but for the fraud the affected patents would not have issued. A party need not plead the intent element of its Walker Process claim with particularity. Instead, it is the "circumstances" constituting the fraud that must be alleged with specificity.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN9[] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

To plead a claim of Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., fraud, plaintiffs must plead that the fraudulently-procured patent was enforced; merely procuring a patent by fraud is not sufficient. If a plaintiff cannot plead the minimum level of enforcement necessary to sustain a declaratory judgment action, the plaintiff likewise cannot plead a Walker Process claim.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > General Overview

HN10[] Case or Controversy, Standing

Where a patentee asserts rights under a patent based on certain identified ongoing or planned activity of another party, and where that party contends that it has the right to engage in the accused activity without a license, an U.S. Const. art. III case or controversy will arise and the party need not risk a suit for infringement by engaging in the identified activity before seeking a declaration of its legal rights. In the context of conduct prior to a existence of a license, declaratory judgment jurisdiction generally will not arise merely on the basis that a party learns of the existence of a patent owned by another or even perceives such a patent to pose a risk of infringement, without some affirmative act by the patentee.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > General Overview

HN11[] Patent Law, Jurisdiction & Review

United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit law governs whether federal patent law preempts a state law claim. Claims that are predicated on no more than bad-faith misconduct or fraud before the United States Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) or that are identical in scope to an inequitable conduct defense are preempted by federal patent law. Tort claims under state law are not preempted by federal patent law where they include additional elements not found in federal patent law claims.

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > General Overview

HN12[] Patent Law, US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings

Conduct in front of the United States Patent and Trademark Office is regulated by federal patent laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN13[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

California's Cartwright Act makes unlawful any agreements or trusts having the effect of restraining trade. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726. By the statute's own terms, a trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720. Attorneys and employees are generally considered agents and not co-conspirators, however, an attorney is not immune from antitrust liability if he becomes an active participant in formulating policy decisions with his client to restrain competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN14[] State Regulation, Claims

California Cartwright Act claims are properly dismissed where the complaint makes conclusory allegations of a combination and does not allege with factual particularity that separate entities maintaining separate and independent interests combined for the purpose to restrain trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

HN15[] Antitrust & Trade Law

District courts have broad discretion to stay discovery pending the resolution of a potentially dispositive motion, including a motion to dismiss. Staying discovery may be particularly appropriate in antitrust cases, where discovery tends to be broad, time-consuming and expensive.

Counsel: [1] For Mr. Dennis Dilbeck, an individual, on his own behalf and on behalf of all similarly situated, Plaintiff: Alan Himmelfarb, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Himmelfarb & Himmelfarb, Vernon, CA.; Ethan Mark Preston, New York, NY.; Rachele R. Rickert, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, San Diego, CA.; Richard A. Lockridge, Robert K. Shelquist, Yvonne M. Flaherty, Lockridge Grindal Nauen, Minneapolis, MN.; Scott A Kamber, Kamber and Associates, LLC, New York, NY.

For Melanie Polk-Stamps, individually, and on behalf of themselves and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Barbacar Diene, Plaintiffs: Betsy Carol Manifold, Francis M. Gregorek, Mary Jane Edelstein Fait, Rachele R. Rickert, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, San Diego, CA.

For Steven Dassa, an individual, on his own behalf and on behalf of all similarly situated, Plaintiff: Jayne Arnold Goldstein, Mager & Goldstein LLP, Weston, FL.; Jenelle Welling, Robert S. Green, Green Welling LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Netflix, Inc., a Declaware corporation, Defendant: Anthony J Weibell, Attorney at Law, Palo Alto, CA.; Keith E. Eggleton, Maura Lea Rees, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, Palo Alto, CA.

Judges: WILLIAM ALSUP, UNITED [2] STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: WILLIAM ALSUP

Opinion

[*311] ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

INTRODUCTION

In this putative antitrust class action, defendant Netflix, Inc., moves to dismiss plaintiffs' antitrust claims for lack of [*312] standing and for failure to state a claim. Plaintiffs have demonstrated that they have standing to bring a Walker Process claim. Defendant has shown, however, that plaintiffs have not pleaded a sufficient level of patent enforcement against Netflix's potential competitors, so plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims fail. Plaintiffs also bring state-law claims. To the extent that they are based on defendant's conduct before the Patent and Trademark Office, they are preempted by federal patent law. Plaintiffs' state-law claims fail because they have not pleaded any injury resulting from defendant's enforcing its patents. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED. Limited discovery will be permitted, and plaintiffs will be given leave to file an amended complaint.

STATEMENT

Plaintiff [3] Dennis Dilbeck resides in Los Angeles and has been a Netflix subscriber since October 2002 (Compl. P 8). Plaintiffs in the two other actions consolidated with this action are also current Netflix subscribers.

Netflix operates an online DVD-rental service that claims 5.2 million subscribers (Compl. P 9). It is headquartered in Los Gatos, California. Netflix obtained two patents on its online DVD-rental service that describe methods of ordering DVDs via the internet, but not transmitting them via the internet. Its first patent, United States Patent No. 6,584,450 (the '450 patent), issued on June 23, 2003. Its second patent, United States Patent No. 7,024,381 (the '381 patent), issued on April 4, 2006.

Netflix filed an application for the '450 patent on April 28, 2000. During prosecution, Netflix allegedly did not disclose any prior art references to the Patent and Trademark Office in connection with the application (id. at P 19). While the '450 application was still pending, Netflix filed a continuation application on May 14, 2003. It ultimately issued as the '381 patent (id. at P 17). After the '450 patent issued on June 23, 2003, Netflix allegedly flooded the PTO with over 100 references [4] in support of the '381 application, none of which Netflix had disclosed in prosecuting the '450 patent (id. at P 20). Plaintiffs allege that both maneuvers were done for the purpose of concealing material, non-cumulative prior art.

Plaintiffs also allege that Netflix purposefully withheld some material prior art references in conjunction with both applications (id. at P 27). These included several patents owned by NCR Corporation, four of which issued prior to the filing of the '450 application, describing methods such as "Ordering and Downloading Resources from Computerized Repositories" and "Mechanism for Dependably Organizing and Managing Information for Web Synchronization and Tracking Among Multiple Browsers" (id. at 28). Netflix initiated a declaratory-judgment action against NCR seeking a declaration of non-infringement in March of 2006. Netflix, Inc. v. NCR Corp., CV No. 06-1892 EDL. That action was dismissed on June 23, 2006. Plaintiffs allege that Netflix was aware of these patents at least as of 2003 and had a reasonable apprehension of suit sufficient to sustain a declaratory-judgment action. Plaintiffs also allege that Netflix withheld other material, non-cumulative prior [5] art references from the PTO, including references describing subscription libraries, pay television services, and other prior art drawn to selecting and ordering items on the internet (id. at P 30).

One of Netflix's competitors, Blockbuster, Inc., launched its own online DVD-rental service in August 2004, after the '450 patent had issued and while the application for the '381 patent was still pending (id. at P 58). In January 2005, Reed Hastings, Netflix's chief executive officer, and [*313] Edward Stead, Blockbuster's then-executive vice president, purportedly met. During that meeting, Hastings allegedly "praised Blockbuster's competitive position in the online rental business and asked Stead when he had figured out that Netflix's '450 patent was a 'joke'" (id. at P 45). Netflix then filed a patent-infringement action against Blockbuster when the '381 patent issued on April 4, 2006. Netflix allegedly knew that the litigation was objectively and subjectively a sham (id. at P 48--49). Plaintiffs also allege that Blockbuster was "ready, willing, and able" to enter the market before August 2004, but "delayed entering into the Relevant Market after learning of the '450 patent until August 2004" [6] (id. at P 59).

Allegedly, Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., competed in the online DVD-rental market from June 2004 to June 2005 (id. at P 60). Dilbeck's counsel inquired about Wal-Mart's exit from the market with an attorney in Wal-Mart's legal department. The only answer received was that the company does not publicly discuss its business dealings (ibid.). On information and belief, Dilbeck alleges that Wal-Mart withdrew from the relevant market after Netflix alerted it to the '450 patent to induce it to exit the market (id. at 61). He bases this belief on his allegation that "Wal-Mart is not the shrinking violet of our national economy" and that it is unlikely that Wal-Mart would withdraw of its own accord (ibid.).

Plaintiffs also allege that Amazon.com, Inc. could have entered the market but was induced not to enter. Hastings' announcement that Amazon planned to enter the market in October 2004 led to a 41% drop in Netflix's stock valuation (id. at P 62). Amazon did not end up entering the market in the United States; it instead introduced a similar service in the United Kingdom and Germany starting in August 2006 (ibid.). As with Wal-Mart, Amazon's legal department did not respond to plaintiffs' [7] inquiries (ibid.). Based on these circumstances, "[o]n information and belief, Dilbeck alleged that 1) Amazon learned of Netflix's '450 Patent either by its own efforts or by Netflix's effort, and 2) made the decision to enter the Relevant Market outside the United States, but 3) discarded its plans to enter the Relevant Market in the United States in August 2004 because of the '450 Patent" (id. at P 63).

On April 4, 2006, the same day that the '381 patent issued, Netflix filed an action for patent infringement against Blockbuster. Blockbuster's answer included defenses of inequitable conduct and patent misuse and counterclaims for monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Dilbeck filed a motion to intervene as a consumer in Blockbuster's antitrust counterclaims on October 11, 2006. His motion was denied on December 7, 2006. On April 26, 2007, Netflix and Blockbuster filed a notice of stipulated dismissal of Blockbuster's antitrust counterclaims.

On January 31, 2007, plaintiff Dennis Dilbeck filed this action alleging violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, California's Cartwright Act, and California's unfair competition law. Two additional complaints [8] were later filed by plaintiff Melanie Polk-Stamps on March 2, 2007, and by plaintiff Steven Dassa on April 6, 2007. All three actions were consolidated. On April 20, 2007, plaintiffs designated Dilbeck's complaint as the operative consolidated complaint. Discovery was stayed on April 26, 2007. Defendant was allowed to proceed with its motion to dismiss.

ANALYSIS

HN1[] A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) tests for legal sufficiency of the claims alleged in the complaint. "While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion [*314] to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1964--65, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (May 21, 2007). "All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff. However, conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim." Epstein v. Wash. Energy Co., 83 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1996).

1. WALKER PROCESS CLAIM.

HN2[] "As a [9] general rule, behavior conforming to the patent laws oriented towards procuring or enforcing a patent enjoys immunity from the antitrust laws." Unitherm Food Sys., Inc. v. Swift Eckrich, Inc., 375 F.3d 1341, 1356 (Fed. Cir. 2004), rev'd in part on other grounds, 546 U.S. 394, 126 S. Ct. 980, 163 L. Ed. 2d 974 (2006). "But this immunity is hardly absolute. Nearly forty years ago, the Supreme Court recognized that an inventor who obtains a patent by defrauding the patent office deserves no immunity." Ibid. Such antitrust claims are known as Walker Process claims, referring to the Supreme Court's decision in Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 176, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). In order to "'achiev[e] a suitable accommodation in this area between the differing policies of the patent and antitrust laws,' a distinction must be maintained between patents procured by 'deliberate fraud' and those rendered invalid or unenforceable for other reasons." Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1069 (Fed. Cir. 1998) (quoting Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 178-79 (Harlan, J., concurring)).

HN3[] To succeed on a claim for Walker Process fraud, the antitrust claimant must show:

> (1) that the asserted patent [10] was obtained by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting the facts to the PTO;
> (2) that the party enforcing the patent was aware of the fraud when bringing suit;
> (3) independent and clear evidence of deceptive intent;
>
> (4) a clear showing of reliance, i.e., that the patent would not have issued but for the misrepresentation or omission; and
>
> (5) the necessary additional elements of an underlying violation of the antitrust laws.

Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1068-71.

HN4[] Generally, the law of the circuit in which the district court sits governs issues in antitrust law. Federal Circuit law controls as to matters within its jurisdiction. More specifically, "whether conduct in procuring or enforcing a patent is sufficient to strip a patentee of its immunity from the antitrust laws is to be decided as a question of Federal Circuit law." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1068. "When . . . the courts consider a patentee's behavior under Federal Circuit law and determine that it involved either an inappropriate attempt to procure a patent or an inappropriate attempt to enforce a patent, the remainder of the antitrust inquiry must proceed under the law of the regional circuit." Unitherm, 375 F.3d at 1357.

A. Standing.

HN5[] A [11] plaintiff must be a "proper party" to have standing to bring an antitrust action, regardless of whether they have suffered an antitrust injury in fact. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110--11, nn. 5, 6, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). A plaintiff must show [*315] five factors to demonstrate antitrust standing: "(1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages." Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1507 (9th

Cir. 1996) (citing Assoc. Gen. Contractors v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983).

The first factor, HN6[] antitrust injury, consists of the following elements: "(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to plaintiffs, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent" and (5) that the plaintiff "be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors." Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 352 F.3d 367, 372 (9th Cir. 2003). Here, plaintiffs have [12] alleged that Netflix fraudulently obtained a patent, which it then used to keep competitors out of the market. Plaintiffs were injured by the monopolistic overcharges Netflix could exact absent competition. Consumers were participants in the same market because they purchased Netflix's products. Assuming plaintiffs successfully plead unlawful conduct, they have shown that they have suffered an antitrust injury.

Defendant argues that consumers' injuries would be too remote from the alleged patent fraud, that is, the fraud's true target was competitors, not consumers. Where the defendant's actions were targeted at its competitors, however, consumers still may have standing to sue for their antitrust injuries. See, e.g., Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 478--79, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982). Here, plaintiffs have alleged that their injuries flow from Netflix's having asserted its patents to keep competitors out of the market. Absent Netflix's enforcement of its fraudulently-procured patents, plaintiffs would not be harmed, or so the argument goes. This alleged injury is not so remote as to bar the courthouse doors against consumers.

As to the remaining factors, the speculative measure of the [13] harm is quite straightforward, at least for pleading purposes. Netflix exacted a monopolistic overcharge from its subscribers. Netflix allegedly dropped its prices by a significant amount when Blockbuster entered the market as a competitor. The risk of duplicative recovery is small because consumers have a different measure of damages than competitors. Consumers' damages come from paying a supracompetitive price, while competitors' damages are measured by foregone profits. Andrx Pharm., Inc. v Biovail Corp. Int'l, 347 U.S. App. D.C. 178, 256 F.3d 799, 817 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Because measures of damages are different, complexity in apportioning damages becomes minimal.

Netflix argues that consumers, even where they are direct purchasers, do not have standing to bring Walker Process claims. Consumers' injuries, defendant contends, are simply too far removed from the fraud allegedly committed by the defendant on the patent office and defendant's subsequent enforcement of the patent. The Ninth Circuit has recognized the rule that only those potential competitors who are ready to enter the market may have standing to bring Walker Process claims. Bourns, Inc., v. RayChem Corp., 331 F.3d 704, 711--12 (9th Cir. 2003). [14] In that decision, the plaintiff lacked standing because it had not shown that it was prepared to enter the market at the time the patent was asserted against it. The plaintiff in Bourns did not suffer injury because it was not in the market or prepared to enter the market. The Bourns decision did not squarely address the question of [*316] consumer standing. Neither party presents any appellate authority on the precise question of whether purchasers have standing to assert a Walker Process claim, and the Court found none. Nor has any decision from this Court been found on the subject.

Defendant cites several district court decisions. All involve allegedly anti-competitive practices, such as collusive patent-infringement settlements or attempts to game the FDA's generic drug approval process, in connection with pharmaceutical patents. In In re DDAVP Direct & Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-2237, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96201 at *21 (S.D.N.Y. 2006), a district court dismissed the consumers' Walker Process claims for lack of standing. The Court held that since the patents were not asserted or threatened to be asserted against them, they lacked standing. A similar conclusion was reached in In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 363 F. Supp. 2d 514, 547 (E.D. N.Y. 2005), [15] however, the holding to dismiss the consumers' Walker Process claims was actually predicated on a failure to allege enforcement activity. Two additional decisions reached the conclusion that consumers lacked standing to bring Walker Process claims because consumers did not suffer the kind of antitrust injury that Walker Process claims were meant to address. In re Remeron Antitrust Litig., 335 F. Supp. 2d 522, 529 (D. N.J. 2004); In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 01-1652, slip op. at 24--30 (D. N.J. Mar, 1, 2007) (Netflix's App. Exh. 5). Finally, Judge Posner, sitting by designation, held that because the fraud at issue in a Walker Process claim was directed at a patentee's competitors, suppliers of inactive pharmaceutical ingredients for those competitors lacked standing. Asahi Glass Co. v. Pentech Pharm., Inc., 289 F. Supp. 2d 986, 995 (N.D. Ill. 2003). The supplier's injuries were too remote to support standing.

A single district court decision has held that consumers had standing to bring Walker Process claims. That decision held that Walker Process claims are properly viewed as antitrust claims, so standing under them should be viewed in the same way as well. Molecular Diagnostics Labs. v. Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc., 402 F. Supp. 2d 276, 280 (D. D.C. 2005). [16] In reaching this conclusion, the district court stated that "[i]f one believes that one of the primary purposes of a treble damages action is deterrence, then increasing the number of parties scrutinizing the actions of potential monopolists will further that goal." Id. at 281. Furthermore, that decision also recognized that HN7[] the harm in a Walker Process claim comes not from fraudulently obtaining a patent, it comes from creating or maintaining an unlawful monopoly using that patent. This order finds Molecular Diagnostics persuasive. Even though Walker Process claims are predicated on enforcement of a fraudulently-obtained patent, the harm still accrues directly to consumers. Competitors are excluded from the market allowing the patentee to create or maintain an unlawful monopoly. Accordingly, if plaintiffs can plead the other elements of their Walker Process claim, they have standing.

B. Fraud and Rule 9(b).

HN8[] "Like all fraud-based claims, Walker Process allegations are subject to the pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)." Medimmune, Inc. v. Genentech, Inc., 427 F.3d 958, 967 (Fed. Cir. 2005). "In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake [17] shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally." FRCP 9(b); see also Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003). Plaintiffs must identify with particularity the reference or group of references [*317] that, but for their omission from Netflix's patent applications, the PTO would not have granted the applications. See, e.g., Grid Sys. Corp. v. Texas Instruments Inc., 771 F. Supp. 1033, 1039 (N.D. Cal. 1991) (for Walker Process claims, a party must allege that "but for the fraud the affected patents would not have issued"). A party need not plead the intent element of its Walker Process claim with particularity. Instead, "it is the 'circumstances' constituting the fraud that must be alleged with specificity." Competitive Techs. v. Fujitsu Ltd., 286 F. Supp. 2d 1118, 1149 (N.D. Cal. 2003).

Here, plaintiffs have identified the references that Netflix allegedly withheld from the PTO in prosecution -- the NCR patents. For purposes of this motion, plaintiffs have alleged that Netflix was aware of the NCR patents' existence. Indeed, Netflix filed a declaratory-judgment action against NCR. In that complaint, [18] Netflix alleged that NCR had sent notice as early as January 2003 that Netflix infringed some of NCR's patents (Compl. P 34). Plaintiffs have also pleaded that but for the NCR references being withheld, the '450 patent and the '381 patent would not have issued. In doing so, they have identified parallels between the NCR patents and Netflix's applications that indicated that the NCR patents were material. Plaintiffs also point out that Netflix submitted no prior art references to the examiner in connection with the '450 patent. Plaintiffs have pleaded with sufficient particularity that but for the fraud, the patents would not have issued.

C. Level of Enforcement.

HN9[] To plead a claim of Walker Process fraud, plaintiffs must plead that the fraudulently-procured patent was enforced; merely procuring a patent by fraud is not sufficient. Unitherm, 375 F.3d at 1355. If a plaintiff cannot plead the minimum level of enforcement necessary to sustain a declaratory judgment action, the plaintiffs likewise cannot plead a Walker Process claim. Id. at 1357--58. To determine standing in declaratory judgment actions, the Federal Circuit formerly used a "reasonable apprehension of suit" standard. Id. at 1358. [19] The Supreme Court recently criticized this standard in Medimmune Inc. v. Genentech, Inc., 127 S.Ct. 764, 771-72, 166 L. Ed. 2d 604 (Jan. 9, 2007). Thereafter, the Federal Circuit held that HN10[] "where a patentee asserts rights under a patent based on certain identified ongoing or planned activity of another party, and where that party contends that it has the right to engage in the accused activity without a license, an Article III case or controversy will arise and the party need not risk a suit for infringement by engaging in the identified activity before seeking a declaration of its legal rights." SanDisk Corp. v. STMicroelectronics, Inc., 480 F.3d 1372,1381 (Fed. Cir. Mar. 26, 2007). "In the context of conduct prior to a existence of a license, declaratory judgment jurisdiction generally will not arise merely on the basis that a party learns of the existence of a patent owned by another or even perceives such a patent to pose a risk of infringement, without some affirmative act by the patentee." Id. at 1380--81.

Plaintiffs allege that Netflix deterred three of its potential competitors from entering the market using the '450 patent: Wal-Mart, Amazon, and Blockbuster. Plaintiffs' allegations as to Wal-Mart [20] and Amazon are similar. Wal-Mart introduced its own online DVD-rental service in June 2004. It exited the market in June 2005. Amazon announced plans to start its own service in October 2004, but ended up not doing so. It later started a similar service in the United Kingdom and Germany in August 2006. As to both companies, plaintiffs allege that they either exited the market or declined to enter the market, [*318] the '450 patent was in existence at the time, so they must have known about it. The '450 patent must have deterred them from competing.

Plaintiffs' allegations as to Wal-Mart and Amazon fail for two reasons. First, plaintiffs' bare-bones allegations that Wal-Mart and Amazon were aware of the '450 patent do not support the inference that they declined to enter the market or exited the market because Netflix threatened to assert it against them. They may have decided that barriers to entry were too high, they may have decided to focus on other parts of their business, or they may have decided not to enter the market for any number of other reasons. Simply pleading that the '450 patent was in existence, so Wal-Mart and Amazon surely must have known about it, does not support the inference [21] that they exited because Netflix was threatening enforcement against them. Plaintiffs have pleaded no facts supporting an inference of any action taken by Netflix toward Wal-Mart or Amazon, so they have not pleaded a sufficient level of enforcement. Second, taking plaintiffs allegations as true, defendant's "alerting" Amazon and Wal-Mart to the existence of the '450 patent is not sufficient under the standards set out by the Federal Circuit. Merely notifying them to the existence of the patent, without any threat or implication at all that they must either stop practicing the patented method or risk Netflix's filing suit, would not meet the minimum standard for sustaining an action for declaratory judgment. In turn, these allegations could not form the basis of a Walker Process claim. Enforcement requires some affirmative act which is lacking in the pleadings.

As to Blockbuster, plaintiffs first allege that because Blockbuster did not enter the market until August 2004, the presence of the '450 patent must have delayed Blockbuster's entry. Specifically, plaintiffs allege (Compl. P 58):

> The only reasonable inference drawn from Blockbuster's allegation [in its antitrust counterclaim against [22] Netflix] that Netflix's CEO asked Blockbuster's general counsel when he "figured out" that the '450 patent was a "joke" is that Blockbuster delayed its entry into the relevant market because of the '450 Patent, at least for as long as it took Blockbuster to "figure[] out" that the '450 Patent was "a joke."

Plaintiffs attempt to draw the inference from the meeting between Blockbuster's general counsel and Netflix's CEO that there was enforcement activity at some time before that meeting. The timing does not work. That meeting allegedly took place in January 2005. Blockbuster had already entered the market in August 2004. Hastings' alleged statements are not sufficient to support an inference of enforcement activity nearly two years before those statements were made. At most, this allegation supports an inference that Blockbuster knew of the '450 patent, not an inference that Netflix attempted to enforce it against Blockbuster. Additionally, Blockbuster, in its own antitrust counterclaims against Netflix, alleged that Netflix had given it no warning that Netflix believed that Blockbuster infringed their patents until Netflix filed a complaint.

Next, plaintiffs identify the patent-infringement [23] action Netflix filed against Blockbuster on April 4, 2006, as enforcement action. It is undisputed that actually filing a patent-infringement complaint constitutes sufficient enforcement activity. Also undisputed is that Blockbuster entered the market in August 2004. Plaintiffs so pleaded (Compl. P 58). Thus, to the extent that plaintiffs allege that the lawsuit delayed Blockbuster's entry into the market, they cannot do so. Blockbuster [*319] had already entered the market nearly two years before the action was filed and has never left it.

Plaintiffs next argue that their claim is based Netflix's action against Blockbuster deterring other competitors from entering the relevant market. Other than its previous allegations regarding Amazon and Wal-Mart, plaintiffs do not identify who these potential competitors might have been or what actions Netflix took against them. Perhaps plaintiffs could have pleaded that Amazon's decision to enter the European market but not the domestic market could have been based on Netflix's actions. They would still have to plead, however, that Netflix took some kind of enforcement action against Amazon to maintain a Walker Process claim. Plaintiffs could possibly [24] plead that Netflix's lawsuit against Blockbuster may have deterred Blockbuster from fully entering the market or practicing all aspects of the patented method. This in turn could have prevented Blockbuster from competing effectively with Netflix. This theory is not developed in the pleadings. Plaintiffs simply allege that potential competitors' awareness of Netflix's patents deterred competition. Plaintiffs have not alleged that Netflix enforced or attempted to enforce its patents to unlawfully create or maintain a monopoly. Accordingly, defendant's motion to dismiss is GRANTED, and this claim must be DISMISSED. Plaintiffs will be granted leave to amend.

2. STATE-LAW CLAIMS.

Plaintiffs' complaint includes claims for violations of California's Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720 and 16726, and for injunctive and restitutionary relief under California's unfair competition law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Defendant first argues that plaintiffs lack standing to bring these claims. Because this order has already determined that plaintiffs have standing under the federal antitrust laws if plaintiffs can demonstrate antitrust injury, consumers such as plaintiffs have standing [25] to bring these claims under California law.

A. Preemption.

Netflix first argues that plaintiffs' state law claims are preempted by federal patent law. HN11[] "Federal Circuit law governs whether federal patent law preempts a state law claim." Ultra-Precision Mfg., Ltd. v. Ford Motor Co., 411 F.3d 1369, 1376 (Fed. Cir. 2005) (citing Midwest Indus., Inc. v. Karavan Trailers, Inc., 175 F.3d 1356, 1361 (Fed. Cir. 1999)). Claims that are predicated on no more than bad-faith misconduct or fraud before the PTO or that are identical in scope to an inequitable conduct defense are preempted by federal patent law. Semiconductor Energy Lab. Co. v. Samsung Elecs. Co., 204 F.3d 1368, 1382 (Fed. Cir. 2000). Tort claims under state law are not preempted by federal patent law where they include additional elements not found in federal patent law claims. Dow Chemical Co. v. Exxon Corp., 139 F.3d 1470, 1473 (Fed. Cir. 1998).

Plaintiffs may not predicate their state-law claims solely on Netflix's allegedly having obtained its patents through fraud. HN12[] Conduct in front of the PTO is regulated by federal patent laws. To the extent that plaintiffs so plead, their claims are preempted by federal patent law. Plaintiffs [26] contend that they "would recover under their California-law claims if the jury found they had proved . . . that Netflix's conduct before the Patent Office was inequitable and in bad faith, but their evidence fell short of actual fraud" (Opp. at 19-20). Plaintiffs are wrong. Absent proof of some other element, plaintiffs would merely be showing that Netflix engaged in misconduct before the PTO. At most, that would be a claim for inequitable conduct. [*320] Such claims are preempted by federal patent law. For the state-law claims to survive, some element other than misconduct or fraud before the PTO is needed.

Plaintiffs then argue that they have met the requirement for an additional element because they have alleged that Netflix "deterred" its potential competitors from entering the market using its ill-gotten patents. As with the federal claims, plaintiffs have failed to plead conduct by Netflix that would have deterred its competitors from entering. Plaintiffs have failed to allege any enforcement activity against potential competitors Wal-Mart or Amazon. As to Blockbuster, plaintiffs have perhaps alleged that Netflix's patent-infringement action against them was brought in bad faith, however, [27] they have failed to plead any antitrust injury as a result of that action. Blockbuster entered the market in August 2004, it never left the market, and plaintiffs have not pleaded that there was any adverse effect on the market from defendant's actions to Blockbuster. Accordingly, at this point, plaintiffs have failed to plead state-law claims that are not preempted by federal law. For purposes of plaintiffs' Section 17200 claim, they have failed to plead conduct outside of fraudulently obtaining a patent that would constitute unfair competition.

B. Cartwright Act Claim.

Plaintiffs assert a claim under HN13[] California's Cartwright Act, which makes unlawful any agreements or trusts having the effect of restraining trade. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726. By the statute's own terms, a trust is a "combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code 16720. Attorneys and employees are generally considered agents and not co-conspirators, however, "[a]n attorney is not immune from antitrust liability if he becomes an active participant in formulating policy decisions with his client to restrain competition." Pinhas v. Summit Health, Ltd., 894 F.2d 1024, 1033 (9th Cir. 1989).

Allegedly, [28] the "Netflix Patent Applicants," including Netflix, its employees, and its patent counsel Edward A. Becker and Hickman Palermo Truong & Becker LLP, formed a trust for the purpose of restraining trade (Compl. PP 100-102). As discussed above, these allegations of conspiracy are preempted by federal patent law to the extent that this alleged conspiracy was created solely to commit fraud on the PTO. There is no allegation that Becker or the Hickman firm helped Netflix actually assert its fraudulently-obtained patents. Nor is such an inference supported by the pleadings. Furthermore, plaintiffs have not pleaded facts that would support the inference that Becker or the Hickman firm was an active participant in formulating policy decisions related to enforcing the patents. In the pleadings, Becker's involvement is limited to patent prosecution. Accordingly, plaintiffs' theory that Netflix and its patent prosecution counsel were in a conspiracy fails.

HN14[] Cartwright Act claims are properly dismissed "where the complaint makes conclusory allegations of a combination and does not allege with factual particularity that separate entities maintaining separate and independent interests combined for the [29] purpose to restrain trade." Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 77 Cal. App. 4th 171, 189, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 (1999). In their opposition brief, plaintiffs for the first time advance the theory that Netflix and its competitors were in a tacit but unwilling conspiracy to restrain trade. Specifically, plaintiffs point to their allegation that "[w]hen Wal-Mart discontinued offering services in the Relevant Market, it referred its customers to Netflix and marketed (and continues to market) Netflix's services" (Compl. P 60). In their opposition, plaintiffs argue that this allegation [*321] would lead to the inference that there was an unlawful agreement between the two entities. This allegation is simply too conclusory. Plaintiffs' allegation does not support the conclusion that Netflix and Wal-Mart entered into an agreement to restrain trade. The complaint hints at the possibility, but that is not sufficient even at the pleading stage. Furthermore, it is not clear whether plaintiffs allege that Netflix used its patent position to get Wal-Mart to agree to leave the market, or if plaintiffs allege that Wal-Mart just agreed to stay out of the market.

Because plaintiffs have failed to plead state-law claims, this [30] order does not reach the issue of whether plaintiffs' claims were barred by California's litigation privilege. Accordingly, defendant's motion to dismiss is GRANTED as to plaintiffs' Cartwright Act and unfair competition claims. Plaintiffs will be granted leave to amend.

3. STAY OF DISCOVERY.

An order dated April 26, 2007, stayed discovery in this action. HN15[] District courts have broad discretion to stay discovery pending the resolution of a potentially dispositive motion, including a motion to dismiss. Jarvis v. Regan, 833 F.2d 149, 155 (9th Cir. 1987). Recently, the Supreme Court has recognized that staying discovery may be particularly appropriate in antitrust cases, where discovery tends to be broad, time-consuming and expensive. Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1967, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (May 21, 2007). The Supreme Court pointed out that "determining whether some illegal agreement may have taken place between unspecified persons at different [companies] . . . at some point over seven years is a sprawling, costly, and hugely time-consuming undertaking . . . ." Id. at n.6.

In this action, discovery could indeed prove expansive if allowed to proceed. Plaintiffs' claims have been dismissed because [31] they have failed to plead the requisite level of enforcement to sustain a Walker Process claim. At this stage, however, discovery should remain stayed except for a specific narrowly-tailored request. Unlike in Twombly, the players are known at least in the general sense -- Netflix, Wal-Mart, Amazon, and Blockbuster. The subject-matter of communications relevant to plaintiffs' Walker Process allegations is narrow as well -- communications regarding the '450 patent and the '381 patent. Accordingly, narrowly-tailored discovery will be permitted to go forward.

Discovery in this action remains stayed with the following exception. Netflix is ordered to disclose all documents summarizing, describing, referring to or constituting written or oral communications between Netflix (or a representative), on one hand, and Wal-Mart or Amazon (or a representative), on the other hand, on the subject of the patents in suit (or either or them) from the date of issuance of the patents in suit (or either or them) to the filing of the complaint in this action. These are to be produced no later than JULY 2, 2007. Plaintiffs should file their amended complaint no later than JULY 16, 2007.

CONCLUSION

For all of [32] the above-stated reasons, defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED. Plaintiffs will be granted leave to amend their complaint. Discovery remains stayed except for the narrow request described above.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: June 14, 2007.

WILLIAM ALSUP

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Credit Suisse Sec. (USA) LLC v. Billing

Supreme Court of the United States

March 27, 2007, Argued ; June 18, 2007, Decided

No. 05-1157

Reporter

551 U.S. 264 *; 127 S. Ct. 2383 ; 168 L. Ed. 2d 145 ; 2007 U.S. LEXIS 7724 *; 75 U.S.L.W. 4449; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,738; Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P94,334; 20 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 369

CREDIT SUISSE SECURITIES (USA) LLC, fka CREDIT SUISSE FIRST BOSTON LLC, et al., Petitioners v. GLEN BILLING et al.

Prior History: [1] ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

Billing v. Credit Suisse First Boston Ltd., 426 F.3d 130, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 21019 (2d Cir. N.Y., 2005)

Disposition: Reversed.

Core Terms

antitrust, underwriters, securities law, shares, anti trust law, investors, syndicate, practices, remedies, regulations, saving clause, complaints, courts, commissions, marketing, lawsuit, prices, rights, forbid, rates, customer, buy, immunity, Stock, incompatible, respondents', precludes, securities-related, anticompetitive, provisions

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Where regulatory statutes are silent in respect to antitrust, courts must determine whether, and in what respects, they implicitly preclude application of the antitrust laws. Those determinations may vary from statute to statute, depending upon the relation between the antitrust laws and the regulatory program set forth in the particular statute, and the relation of the specific conduct at issue to both sets of laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Scope of Provisions > Statutory Application & Interpretation

HN2[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

Where possible, courts should reconcile the operation of both antitrust and securities statutory schemes rather than holding one completely ousted. The United States Supreme Court has set forth a standard, namely that repeal of the antitrust laws is to be regarded as implied only if necessary to make the Securities Exchange Act work, and even then only to the minimum extent necessary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Exchanges & Other Markets > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Scope of Provisions > Statutory Application & Interpretation

HN3[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

The United States Supreme Court has noted that the Securities and Exchange Commission lacks jurisdiction under the securities law to review particular instances of enforcement of exchange rules and that nothing has been built into the regulatory scheme which performs the antitrust function of insuring that rules that injure competition are nonetheless justified as furthering legitimate regulatory "ends."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Scope of Provisions > Statutory Application & Interpretation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Regulators > US Securities & Exchange Commission > Rules & Regulations

HN4[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

An "implied repeal" of the antitrust laws will be found only where there is a plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions. The securities law gives the Securities and Exchange Commission direct regulatory power over exchange rules and practices with respect to the fixing of reasonable rates of commission.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Scope of Provisions > Statutory Application & Interpretation

HN5[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

The United States Supreme Court has found that the securities law precludes antitrust liability even in respect to a practice that both antitrust law and securities law might forbid.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Securities Law > Civil Liability Considerations > Securities Litigation Reform & Standards > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Scope of Provisions > Statutory Application & Interpretation

HN6[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

It is wrong to regard 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 77p(a) and 78bb(a) as saving clauses so broad as to preserve all antitrust actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Scope of Provisions > Statutory Application & Interpretation

HN7[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

