MEMORANDUM

Joyner, J.

Before the Court are Defendants' Motions to Dismiss and Memorandums in Support thereof (Doc. Nos. 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43) and Plaintiff's Opposition thereto (Doc. No. 50). We stay Defendants' Motions for ninety days to allow for limited jurisdictional discovery.

I. BACKGROUND [*2]

This case arises from an antitrust action brought by Plaintiff Spring Pharmaceuticals, LLC ("Spring") against Defendants Retrophin, Inc. ("Retrophin"), Martin Shkreli ("Shkreli"), Mission Pharmacal Company ("Mission"), and Alamo Pharma Services, Inc. ("Alamo") (collectively, "Defendants") for allegedly anticompetitive practices in the pharmaceutical market for the tiopronin branded product that Defendants manufacture and market, Thiola. Thiola is off-patent and currently the only FDA-approved tiopronin product for treatment of the rare genetic disease cystinuria, which causes recurring kidney stones. Compl. ¶¶1, 2, 49. The practices at issue are embodied by a business model in which Defendants remove Thiola from normal distribution channels and refuse to deal samples of Thiola which are necessary for any generic seeking FDA approval through the "Abbreviated New Drug Application" regulatory process. Id. ¶8, ¶29. Spring's principal claim is that Defendants violated federal antitrust laws by engaging in anticompetitive conduct to preclude Plaintiff from developing a generic competitor to Thiola and charging supracompetitive prices for its drug. Id. ¶¶9, 40, 45, 65, 67, 70, 71.

Under consideration [*3] is Defendant Retrophin's and Defendants Mission and Alamo's Motions to Dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), in which they are challenging Spring's constitutional standing, Defendant Shkreli's joinder thereto, and Plaintiff's Opposition thereto. The Court has considered the parties' submissions and decides this matter without oral argument. Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; Loc. R. Civ. P. 7.1 (f).

II. Alleged Facts

Spring alleges that it is a new pharmaceutical company, formed with the intention of developing a generic drug to compete with the subject medication in this litigation, Thiola, the branded drug manufactured and marketed by Defendants. Thiola is an off-patent, prescription pharmaceutical product, not subject to regulations restricting generic development, with active ingredient tiopronin. Compl. ¶2. Thiola is used to treat patients with a chronic genetic disease, cystinuria, which causes recurring kidney stones. Id. ¶¶2, 88. Cystinuria affects approximately 1 in every 10,000 people with approximately 20,000 cases in the United States at present. Id. ¶ 82. Based on Retrophin's own reports, sales of Thiola have increased from nearly $55 million in 2015 to $71 million in 2016, and $82 million in 2017. Id. ¶87 n.49 [*4] (citing Retrophin Inc., Annual Report 46 (Form 10-K) (Feb. 27, 2018)).

Currently, Thiola is the only tiopronin drug with FDA approval. Id. ¶2. Plaintiff alleges that "there are no substitutes for Thiola," Id. ¶83, making demand for the drug inelastic. Other drugs, including Cuprimine (active ingredient, penicillamine) and Depen (a branded generic of penicillamine) have been FDA approved for treating cystinuria, yet they are "primarily indicated for a different disease," and have been "targeted" as less effective and safe than Thiola for treating cystinuria. Id.; Def. Retrophin Br. at 13, n. 3, Bansal Decl. Ex. A.

With the intention of ensuring the availability of "low-cost, generic drugs for millions of Americans," see 21 U.S.C.S. § 355, in 1984 Congress enacted the Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act ("Hatch-Waxman Act" or "Hatch-Waxman"), which provided a streamlined process for regulatory approval of generic drugs. Unlike the lengthy clinical trials necessary for "New Drug Applications" ("NDAs"), the alternative "Abbreviated New Drug Applications" ("ANDAs") allow generic manufacturers to "rely on the FDA's previous finding of safety and effectiveness with respect to the brand product [*5] — so long as the firm is able to demonstrate that the proposed generic is biologically equivalent to, and has the same active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, labeling, and conditions of use as, that brand drug." Compl. ¶30; see 21 U.S.C.S. §§ 355(j)(2)(A)(i)-(v). This showing is also referred to as "bioequivalence." The ANDA regulatory shortcut, by "allowing the generic to piggyback on the pioneer's approval efforts, 'speed[s] the introduction of low-cost generic drugs to market,' [and] thereby further[s] drug competition. FTC v. Actavis, Inc., 570 U.S. 136, 143, 133 S. Ct. 2223, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343 (2013) (citing Caraco Pharm. Labs., Ltd. v. Novo Nordisk A/S, 566 U.S. 399, 405, 132 S. Ct. 1670, 182 L. Ed. 2d 678 (2012)).

Central to Plaintiff's Complaint in this litigation, a generic drug manufacturer seeking to enter the pharmaceutical market through the abbreviated ANDA process must acquire samples of the listed drug[1] in order to demonstrate bioequivalence. The FDA has instructed, "[g]eneric manufacturers need anywhere from 2,000 to 5,000 doses of the branded drug in order to run studies to prove their generic medicine is the same [i.e. as safe and effective] as the branded drug." Compl. ¶33.[2] Once a manufacturer demonstrates bioequivalence, the generic may be subject to "substitution" laws adopted by most states, including Pennsylvania. Id. ¶35. These state Drug Product Selection [*6] ("DPS") laws allow, and sometimes require, pharmacists to substitute generic versions of branded prescriptions, unless a doctor provides otherwise.[3]

With this regulatory framework in mind, we turn to the parties in this litigation. Mission manufactured and marketed Thiola since 1988, id. ¶¶7-9, until it entered an agreement with Retrophin in 2014, granting Retrophin an exclusive license to market, sell, and commercialize Thiola in the United States. ¶¶7, 19. Defendant Shkreli, CEO of Retrophin until October, 2014, ¶13, signed the exclusive licensing agreement between Retrophin and Mission, ¶¶20-22, that extends through May 2029. ¶63. Defendant Alamo is a "wholly-owned subsidiary of Mission and provides exclusive sales services to Retrophin under the [licensing] Agreement." ¶¶20, 22.

At the heart of Plaintiff Spring's Complaint are allegations that Defendants acted in concert to block Spring's access to samples of Thiola that it needs [*7] to develop a generic competitor. ¶8. Defendants challenge the factual basis for Spring's constitutional standing. See Def. Retrophin Br. at 20-23 (Doc. No. 42); Defs. Mission and Alamo Br. at 13-15 (Doc. No. 41); Def. Shkreli Br. (Doc. No. 40). Therefore, before we may address the merits of Spring's allegations, we must address whether Spring has constitutional standing to sue.

III. Legal Standard

A party may assert the defense of lack of subject-matter jurisdiction on motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1). There is a "crucial distinction, often overlooked, between 12(b)(1) motions that attack the complaint on its face and 12(b)(1) motions that attack the existence of subject matter jurisdiction in fact, quite apart from any pleadings." Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 891 (3d Cir. 1977). See Gould Elecs., Inc. v. United States, 220 F.3d 169, 176 (3d Cir. 2000) ("[a] Rule 12(b)(1) motion may be treated as either a facial or factual challenge to the court's subject matter jurisdiction.").

A facial attack provides similar procedural protections to a Rule 12(b)(6) "determination on the merits," which affords "the safeguard of having all its allegations taken as true" and all inferences drawn in favor of the plaintiff. Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891. On a factual attack by contrast, "there is substantial authority that the trial court is free to weigh the evidence and satisfy itself as to [*8] the existence of its power to hear the case. In short, no presumptive truthfulness attaches to plaintiff's allegations," because the court's "very power to hear the case" is in issue. Id.[4] See also S.D. v. Haddon Heights Bd. of Educ., 722 F. App'x 119, 124 n. 7 (3d Cir. 2018) (citing Constitution Party v. Aichele, 757 F.3d 347, 358 (3d Cir. 2014 (internal citations omitted))(supporting the Third Circuit's view that since "a factual challenge 'concerns the actual failure of a plaintiff's claims to comport factually with the jurisdictional prerequisites,'" we are permitted to "independently evaluate all the evidence to resolve disputes over jurisdictional facts."). E.g., CNA, 535 F.3d at 139 (quoting United States ex rel. Atkinson v. Pa. Shipbuilding Co., 473 F.3d 506, 514 (3d Cir. 2007)) (holding we have authority to 'make factual findings which are decisive to the issue.'"). On a factual attack under Rule 12(b)(1), the "burden of proving subject matter jurisdiction [is] on the plaintiff." Id.

A factual challenge under Rule 12(b)(1) may be made prior to service of an answer. Berardi v. Swanson Mem'l Lodge No. 48 of Fraternal Order of Police, 920 F.2d 198, 200 (3d Cir. 1990). [*9] Although Plaintiff contends that a defendant's factual attack on jurisdiction may not be made "until after answering the complaint," Pl. Opp. at 51 n. 40, the Third Circuit has clarified, "[a]lthough dictum in Mortensen seems to support [Spring's] argument, we are convinced that the argument is wrong." Id. See id. ([T]he requirement in [Rule] 12(b) that a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction must be made before pleading if a further pleading is required would make little sense if the factual basis for subject matter jurisdiction could not be contested until after an answer is filed.").

IV. Discussion

Plaintiff Spring asserts that it has constitutional standing to bring this antitrust cause of action against Defendants. In short, Spring argues it is a pharmaceutical company that has taken substantial steps toward developing a generic version of Defendants' drug, Thiola, and that but for Defendants' refusal to sell samples of Thiola to distributors, wholesalers, or Plaintiff, Plaintiff is precluded from developing a generic competitor, and Defendant continues to unlawfully monopolize the tiopronin market.

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), Defendant Retrophin mounts a factual attack to Plaintiff Spring's constitutional standing. Accordingly, Retrophin seeks "limited discovery to test Spring's assertions." Def. Retrophin Br. at 20.

Constitutional standing and antitrust standing are distinct. Phila. Taxi Ass'n v. Uber Techs., 886 F.3d 332, 343 (3d Cir. 2018) (citing Ethypharm S.A. Fr. v. Abbott Labs., 707 F.3d 223, 232 (3d Cir. 2013). "In order to establish an actionable antitrust violation, a plaintiff must plead a basis for both Article III and antitrust standing." *Schuylkill Health Sys. v. Cardinal Health 200, LLC, No. 12-7065, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103663 at 8 (E.D. Pa. July 30, 2014). "While [*10] '[h]arm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact,' courts must also consider 'whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.'" Phila. Taxi Ass'n v. Uber Techs., 886 F.3d 332 (3d Cir. 2018) (quoting Associated Gen. Contractors v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n. 31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)). "Because antitrust standing is prudential, we are not bound to address it first, because it 'does not affect the subject matter jurisdiction of the court, as Article III standing does.'" Phila. Taxi Ass'n v. Uber Techs., 886 F.3d 332 n. 7 (3d Cir. 2018) (quoting Ethypharm S.A. Fr., 707 F.3d at 232). Furthermore, the Third Circuit has indicated that antitrust standing is "one of the prudential limitations" on constitutional standing and is part of the merits analysis. Ethypharm S.A. Fr., 707 F.3d at 232.[5] "Regardless of any additional requirements applicable to a particular type of action, a plaintiff Waiting to resolve standing until as late as trial is permissible under the Supreme Court's approach to standing analyses as set forth in Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). However, "[b]y deferring resolution of the standing issue, courts force defendants into a Hobson's choice—either incur the expense of litigation or settle the case—without having conclusively established the existence of a valid case or controversy.").

Second, Plaintiff's allegations must show a "causal connection" between their injury and Defendants' allegedly illegal conduct. "[T]hat is, the injury must be fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant, and not the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court." Id. (quoting Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976)). "These requirements ensure that plaintiffs have a 'personal stake' or 'interest' in the outcome of the proceedings, 'sufficient to warrant . . . [their] invocation of federal-court jurisdiction and to justify exercise of the court's remedial powers on . . .[their] behalf.'" Joint Stock Soc'y v. UDV N. The "imminence" inquiry focuses on whether Plaintiffs can show "sufficient facts" to support the conclusion that they are "likely [*12] to suffer future injury;" McNair v. Synapse Grp. Inc., 672 F.3d 213, 223 (3d Cir. 2012)(citation omitted); or, in other words that future injury is "certainly impending and [will] proceed with a high degree of certainty." McCray v. Fid. Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 682 F.3d 229, 243 (3d Cir. 2012). "Vague" assertions of desire [to enter the relevant pharmaceutical market] "without any descriptions of concrete plans," are insufficient to support a finding of actual or imminent injury." ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 301 (citing Summers, 555 U.S. at 496). Additionally, to have constitutional standing, a plaintiff seeking an injunction must show "'continuing, present adverse effects'" of defendant's challenged conduct." Id. (quoting O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 495-96, 94 S. Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974)). The party "invoking federal jurisdiction[,] bears the burden of establishing" the elements of standing. Id. at 561.

"It is well settled that standing cannot be 'inferred argumentatively from averments in the pleadings,' but rather must affirmatively appear in the record (internal citations omitted)." Askew, 776 F. Supp. at 28 (quoting Grace v. Am. Cent. Ins. Co., 109 U.S. 278, 284, 3 S. Ct. 207, 27 L. Ed. 932 (1883)). As in Askew, "[b]ecause defendants present factual evidence of [Spring's] lack of standing, we will treat this motion accordingly." Id.

Defendants argue Spring lacks constitutional standing. In their "factual attack," Defendants assert that "Spring is not a generic pharmaceutical company; it has not developed, is not developing, and is not 'ready to [*13] begin development' of a generic version of tiopronin. Rather, it is a company apparently formed by a former associate of Winston & Strawn (litigation counsel in this lawsuit), and his wife, a CPA, as a vehicle to bring this litigation." Def. Retrophin Br. at 20. To support their theory, Defendants contend that Spring does not have an office, only a "'virtual' and shared workspace," Bansal Decl. Ex. M; that their co-founder, Mr. Li, has been kept "apprised of developments in antitrust law," by virtue of his background as a lawyer, Def. Retrophin Br. at 14, and that Spring lacks the financial and scientific capabilities to develop a generic and submit an ANDA for FDA approval. Defendants Mission and Alamo additionally argue that Spring is not authorized under state or federal law to be sold prescription drugs. Defs. Mission and Alamo Br. at 14, Doc. No. 41.

Plaintiff rebuts Defendants' factual attack, putting forth three arguments. First, Plaintiff asserts it is a new pharmaceutical company formed with the intent of developing a generic version of Thiola. Second, Plaintiff asserts it has taken substantial steps to develop a generic version of Defendants' drug, which can be completed once [*14] it is able to acquire Thiola samples for bioequivalence testing. Third, Plaintiff asserts it has communicated with consultants to help navigate the regulatory process of filing an abbreviated new drug application, and that it has secured financing to bring its generic product to market, pending access to Thiola samples. See Pl. Opp. at 49-50, Doc. No. 50.

To support its claim of standing, Plaintiff alleges that in November, 2017, Spring Pharmaceuticals "was formed as a family-run business" with the "mission . . . to develop lower-priced pharmaceutical products to compete with off-patent and off-exclusivity brand drugs." Li Decl. ¶¶2, 8; Doc. No. 50, Ex. 1. Plaintiff avers that it is "currently . . . developing a generic version of Thiola." Id. Plaintiff disputes Defendants' assertion that Spring was formed only as a pretext for filing this litigation, and that Mr. Li's background in antitrust litigation indicates that Spring is a shell-company. Plaintiff attests that before his legal career, Mr. Li worked for "seven years on projects for Aventis ([a] pharmaceutical manufacturer), Cytyc ([a] medical device manufacturer), and AstraZeneca ([a] pharmaceutical manufacturer)." Id. ¶4. Notably, [*15] Mr. Li asserts that his background in the pharmaceutical industry includes having worked at SPH Sine Pharmaceutical Laboratories Co., LTD. ("Sine Pharma"), an eminent Chinese-based pharmaceutical company, which manufactures a tiopronin product with the same "active ingredient" as Thiola. Id. ¶6-7.

Next, to dispute Defendants' allegation that "the only two individuals Retrophin has been able to identify as being affiliated with Spring in any way are 'its CEO,' Mr. Li. . .and his wife, Ms. Hua," "who according to publicly available materials is a Certified Public Accountant ('CPA') employed by Freddie Mac," Def. Retrophin Br. at 11 and 14, Plaintiff asserts that "[t]he other co-founder of Spring Pharmaceuticals, also one of [Mr. Li's] family members, had more than 30 years of experience in the pharmaceutical industry in China before he retired from SPH Sine Pharmaceutical Laboratories Co., Ltd." Li. Decl. ¶6. This co-founder has yet to be named in the parties' pleadings. Additionally, Plaintiff asserts that its "Chief Scientific Officer," Pl. Opp. at 51, although not named, is a partner in the consulting firm with which Spring has an agreement to "oversee the development work and prepare [*16] Spring's ANDA submission." Id.; Compl. ¶12.

In rebuttal to Defendants' attack on Plaintiff's preparedness, Spring asserts it is "ready and able" to compete, "except for its lack of access to samples." Compl. ¶68; Li. Decl. ¶10. Specifically, in accordance with a "well-developed business model in the pharmaceutical industry" of partnering with contract development and manufacturing organizations ("CDMOs"), to avoid capital-intensive costs of drug development, Plaintiff asserts it has "an agreement" with a CDMO experienced in launching generic drugs; Li. Decl. ¶11; and that it has "an agreement with a consulting firm" to assist it in navigating the regulatory requirements of submitting an ANDA. Id. ¶12.

Additionally, Plaintiff disputes Defendant Mission's argument that Spring is "not registered in the FDA database of 'drug establishments,'" nor authorized by the relevant state and federal authorities to receive prescription drugs (were Mission to sell Plaintiff Thiola samples). Def. Mission Br. at 14, Doc. No. 41 (citing 25 Tex. Admin. Code § 229.429(f)(2) (2010)). In rebuttal, Plaintiff asserts that the CDMO with which it has an "agreement" is registered as a 'drug establishment' with the FDA, Li. Decl. ¶11, and that it [*17] is "commonplace with pharmaceutical outsourcing [for] all product samples, active pharmaceutical ingredients, and other chemical products [to] be shipped directly to the CDMO's facilities." Id.

Although Plaintiff has not named the CDMO, the consulting firm, nor the Chief Scientific Officer with whom it alleges it has entered agreements as part of its preparation for developing a generic competitor to Thiola, Plaintiff attests that it has not revealed the identity of its partners due to "confidentiality agreements. . .which prohibit the disclosure of confidential contract terms and/or its partners' identities without a court order requiring such disclosure and/or without the benefit of a protective order entered by the court." Id. ¶11 n. 8.

Finally, with regard to its financial preparedness to enter the pharmaceutical market as a generic competitor to Thiola, Plaintiff alleges that it "has received funding from Vannin Capital LLC ("Vannin")" as well as from "other investors," and that Mr. Li, a co-founder of Spring, has "contributed personal funds to the company." Id. ¶13. Defendants retort that "[t]he only public record of Spring's funding sources" is the Vannin lien, "filed on August [*18] 10, 2018, two months before" this lawsuit. Bansal Decl., Ex. N.

Considering that Spring has rebutted Defendants' jurisdictional challenge, we stay Defendants' motions for a period of ninety days to allow for discovery limited to the question of whether Plaintiff Spring has standing to sue under Article III. See Askew, 776 F. Supp. 2d at 28 (ordering "standing-related discovery and den[ying] defendants' motion to dismiss without prejudice pending the completion of that discovery).[6] That being said, we note that Mortensen warns that "the 'concededly rigorous standard' [applied by Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1976)], would apply equally in dismissals pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) [as they would to motions under 12(b)(6)] and that dismissals of Sherman Act claims prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motions to Dismiss are stayed. An appropriate Order will follow.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 9th day of April, 2019 upon consideration of Defendants' Motions to Dismiss and Memorandums in Support thereof (Doc. Nos. 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43) and Plaintiff's Opposition thereto (Doc. No. 50), it is hereby ORDERED:

1. Defendants' Motions are STAYED for ninety days from the [*19] date of this order to allow for discovery limited to the jurisdictional issue raised on Defendants' Motions under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1).
2. On conclusion of limited discovery, the Parties may submit supplemental briefing to bring this matter back before the Court.

ORDER

INTRODUCTION

Dakota Territory Tours ACC ("Dakota") is a company that offers helicopter tours in northern Arizona. For years, Dakota subleased space at the Sedona Airport and ran its tours from that location. In 2014, Dakota became embroiled in litigation concerning its lease with the Sedona Oak-Creek Airport Authority, Inc. ("SOCAA"), the non-profit entity that operates the airport on behalf of Yavapai County ("the County"). In 2017, the parties entered into settlement agreement to resolve that litigation. [2] Among other things, the settlement agreement terminated Dakota's sublease but required SOCAA to issue a request for proposal ("RFP") so that interested parties, including Dakota, could submit new bids to use space at the airport. Dakota submitted a bid in response to the RFP but its bid wasn't accepted. Instead, SOCAA accepted a competing bid from Guidance [*888] Air Service, LLC ("Guidance"), a rival helicopter tour operator that already leased other space at the airport.

In their amended complaint, which was filed in August 2018, Dakota and Solid Edge Aviation (collectively, "Plaintiffs") allege the RFP process was a "sham" designed to exclude Dakota from the airport. Among other things, Plaintiffs allege that SOCAA altered the selection criteria at the last moment in an effort to disadvantage them, accepted Guidance's bid even though it was 32% lower than theirs, refused to produce Guidance's full bid during a subsequent bid protest, presented false testimony during a state-court hearing related to the bid protest, conducted a pretextual audit of their taxes, and lodged a false complaint about their operations with the Federal Aviation Administration.

Although Plaintiffs have raised troubling [3] allegations about how the RFP process was conducted, this case does not involve a challenge to that process in the traditional sense (ordinarily, bid protests alleging improprieties in RFP processes are governed by state law and brought in state court). Instead, the amended complaint asserts antitrust claims against four different defendants: SOCAA, SOCAA's former director Amanda Shankland ("Shankland"), Guidance, and the County (collectively, "Defendants").

Plaintiffs have now voluntarily dismissed their claims against SOCAA, Shankland, and Guidance (Doc. 115), but their claims against the County remain pending. The County has moved for judgment on the pleadings (Doc. 79) and, as discussed below, its motion will be granted for two independent reasons. First, time and again over the last half-century, plaintiffs have attempted to bring antitrust claims against airports and airport operators under the theory that the airport's refusal to provide a lease (or similar concession) amounted to anticompetitive conduct and/or contributed to monopolization. The courts have, almost without exception, rejected such lawsuits because (1) municipal airports generally enjoy immunity from antitrust [4] liability in this context pursuant to the so-called "state action" doctrine, which was first established in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), and (2) run-of-the-mill bid protests can't, in any event, be repackaged as antitrust claims. These principles generally doom Plaintiffs' attempt to transform their dissatisfaction with the RFP process into an antitrust lawsuit.

Second, the amended complaint is devoid of any plausible allegation that the County was responsible for transforming the RFP process into a sham. Thus, although the County perhaps could have exercised more care in overseeing how SOCAA was administering the RFP process, Plaintiffs have not articulated facts that would permit the County to be sued under a conspiracy theory. It is a tertiary player in this dispute—Plaintiffs' true dispute lies with SOCAA, and that dispute doesn't sound in antitrust law.

BACKGROUND

I. Procedural Background

In August 2017, Dakota filed its original complaint. (Doc. 1.)

In July 2018, the Court issued a pair of orders rejecting Dakota's claims against the County and Guidance. (Docs. 68, 69.) First, the Court concluded the County was entitled to judgment on the pleadings because its "only involvement in this matter is as owner of [5] the Sedona Airport and landlord to SOCAA. . . . [Dakota] has not demonstrated that Yavapai County meaningfully participated in the RFP process that awarded the sublease to Guidance. . . . Yavapai County was not involved in SOCAA's decision-making process and [*889] was a passive lessor during the RFP process." (Doc. 69 at 4-5.)[1] Second, as for Guidance, the Court similarly concluded that although Dakota "alleges that SOCAA came up with the plan to replace [Dakota] with Guidance . . . at no point does [Dakota] allege that Guidance colluded with SOCAA to do so." (Doc. 68 at 3-5.) The Court further concluded that Dakota's allegations "demonstrate that Guidance was not involved in SOCAA's decision-making process and was a passive bidder during the RFP process" and that Dakota was seeking to improperly "blame[] Guidance for actions that, even if taken as true, could only have only been plausibly committed by SOCAA." (Doc. 68 at 3-5.)

In August 2018, Dakota, along with new plaintiff Solid Edge, filed an amended complaint alleging violations under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act against all Defendants. (Doc. 72.)

In September 2018, Defendants filed a trio of dispositive motions: the County filed a renewed [6] motion for judgment on the pleadings (Doc. 79), Guidance filed a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) (Doc. 80), and SOCAA and Shankland filed a separate motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) (Doc. 81).

In October 2018, this case was transferred to the undersigned judge. (Doc. 94.)

In November 2018, the three dispositive motions became fully briefed. (Docs. 85, 88, 89, 99, 100, 101.)

On April 4, 2019, the Court issued an order setting oral argument on the dispositive motions on April 10, 2019. (Doc. 110.)

On April 9, 2019, Plaintiffs filed a stipulation dismissing their claims against SOCAA, Shankland, and Guidance without prejudice. (Doc. 115.)

On April 10, 2019, the Court heard oral argument on the County's motion. During the argument, Plaintiffs asked the Court to defer ruling on the motion because the parties were hoping to finalize a settlement within the next week. The County disagreed and asked the Court to rule on the motion because the potential settlement was still tentative.

II. Factual Allegations In The Amended Complaint

A. The Parties

Dakota operates helicopter and fixed wing air tours out of the Sedona Airport. (Doc. 72 ¶ 5.) Solid Edge has common ownership with Dakota and serves as Dakota's Part 135 [7] Operating Company. (Id. ¶ 6.)

Guidance, like Dakota, operates air tours out of the airport and "is a direct competitor of . . . Dakota." (Id. ¶ 10.)

SOCAA is a non-profit corporation that "purports to be an independent airport authority and is empowered to operate, manage and oversee the Sedona Airport pursuant to a long-term written lease agreement with Yavapai." (Id. ¶ 7.) SOCAA maintains subleases on buildings, aircraft parking pads, and facilities on the airport premises. (Id.) It also owns and operates the airport's only fixed base operator, Red Rock Aviation. (Id.) The airport is operated according to a Master Plan. (Id. ¶¶ 15-16.)

Shankland was the General Manager and/or Airport Director of the airport acting on behalf of SOCAA since at least 2016. (Id. ¶ 9.)

The County, which owns the airport, has a long-term contract with SOCAA under which SOCAA must manage the airport [*890] for the "public good" and in a prudent and businesslike manner. (Id. ¶ 8.)

B. Dakota's Sublease with SOCAA and Litigation Involving the Sublease

[1] The Court also concluded that, to the extent Dakota was asserting a claim for money damages against the County, that claim was barred by the Local Government Antitrust Act. (Doc. 69 at 3-4.)

Plaintiffs had a sublease with SOCAA that originally ran until August 2014 and was later extended until April 2017. (Id. ¶ 24.) Plaintiffs ran their air tour operations out [8] of the subleased on-airport space. (Id. ¶ 25.)

In November 2014, Plaintiffs and SOCAA became involved in litigation over, among other things, SOCAA's breach of the sublease. (Id. ¶ 30.)

On April 27, 2017, the parties settled the litigation. (Id. ¶ 34.) The settlement agreement provided that SOCAA would prepare and issue an RFP to sublease on-airport operational space that had been occupied by Plaintiffs. (Id. ¶ 35.)

While the lawsuit was pending, there were email communications between SOCAA and certain County officials. On March 14, 2017, SOCAA's President Giorgio Cagliero ("Cagliero") sent an email to County Supervisor Randy Garrison ("Garrison") in which he suggested a meeting to address SOCAA's "problem tenant," which presumably referred to Dakota. (Id. ¶ 32.) The email stated there had been "developments in the litigation that [] could be better addressed by a joint Airport Authority/Yavapai County team." (Id.) The email further suggested that Cagliero, Shankland, and two SOCAA board members meet with Garrison, another individual, and the County Attorney sometime in the following two weeks. (Id.)

C. The "Sham" Bidding Process

Although SOCAA had represented to Plaintiffs that they could [9] have input into drafting the RFP, the day after settlement, SOCAA transmitted an RFP to a County official, Assistant Administrator Jack Fields ("Fields"), for review. (Id. ¶¶ 37, 40.) Fields suggested some general language and SOCAA issued the RFP later that same day. (Id. ¶ 40.)

The RFP was for a different modular building than had been indicated in the settlement agreement. (Id. ¶ 46.) It also lacked information necessary for valid RFPs. (Id. ¶ 47.) And, during the meeting at which voting on the RFP took place, SOCAA altered the selection criteria in a way that disadvantaged Plaintiffs. (Id. ¶ 67.)

Guidance was awarded the RFP (the "SOCAA-Guidance Sublease") even though Guidance did not intend to use the subleased space within two months of the RFP's publication, as required by the RFP. (Id. ¶ 50.) Also, Guidance's bid was 32% lower than Plaintiffs' bid. (Id. ¶ 55.)

The County and the FAA did not participate in the initial award decision, and no one from either entity was present at the meeting awarding the RFP to Guidance. (Id. ¶ 73.)

In approving the SOCAA-Guidance Sublease, the County ignored material terms of the Master Lease. (Id. ¶¶ 88, 89.)

Within seven minutes after the meeting [10] awarding the RFP to Guidance, SOCAA's counsel sent a letter demanding that Dakota vacate its leased space at the airport. (Id. ¶ 71.)

D. Subsequent Activity

SOCAA told Plaintiffs that the County and the FAA approved the RFP, so Plaintiffs requested the names of the individuals involved in the approval. (Id. ¶ 60.) SOCAA claimed it didn't know the names, but Plaintiffs located Fields, who denied any involvement beyond a partial review and suggestion of general language. (Id.)

SOCAA has refused to produce Guidance's full bid, in violation of the law, [*891] falsely claiming that Guidance and Plaintiffs had agreed to keep this information secret. (Id. ¶ 68.)

Plaintiffs discovered after the bid-selection meeting that even before the RFP had been awarded, SOCAA had discouraged employees from applying to work for Plaintiffs. (Id. ¶ 69.)

Plaintiffs submitted a written protest on July 20, 2017. (Id. ¶ 74.) In her written decision denying this protest, Shankland asserted the airport could not support more than one operator, which directly contradicted the Master Plan. (Id. ¶ 76.)

On July 21, 2017, Plaintiffs sued SOCAA and Shankland in Arizona state court. (Id. ¶ 78.) The court in that case granted a temporary [11] restraining order ("TRO") prohibiting Dakota's eviction. (Id.) At a later hearing to determine whether to leave this TRO in place, SOCAA contended that Plaintiffs were not qualified to bid on the sublease because they were not authorized to conduct Part 135 operations. (Id. ¶ 81.) To support this argument, SOCAA presented an alleged independent consultant to provide expert testimony on compliance. (Id. ¶ 82.) Neither the expert nor SOCAA revealed that the expert worked for Guidance. (Id. ¶ 83.)

SOCAA has also subsequently engaged in other conduct favoring Guidance over Plaintiffs, including bringing a forcible entry and detainer action to eject Solid Edge from the subleased space, but not bringing a similar action against any related businesses that Guidance uses. (Id. ¶ 90.) SOCAA also audited Plaintiffs for certain taxes but did not audit Guidance in the same way. (Id. ¶ 94.)

"SOCAA and/or Guidance" called the FAA hotline to complain that Plaintiffs were not authorized to conduct Part 135 operations, which resulted in an investigation and a decision that the complaints were unsubstantiated. (Id. ¶ 93.)

E. Effect of the SOCAA-Guidance Sublease

The amended complaint alleges that the relevant [12] product/service market for antitrust purposes in this case is on-airport air tours originating from and returning to the Sedona Airport. (Id. ¶¶ 101, 117.) The relevant geographic market is the Sedona area. (Id. ¶¶ 101, 117.)

The amended complaint further alleges that significant and high barriers to market entry exist in the form of regulations, licensing, insurance premiums, and high capital investment, which discourage new entry into the market. (Id. ¶ 106.)

Shankland has indicated that SOCAA would charge Plaintiffs a fee for every takeoff and landing, which at the moment would require Plaintiffs to pay at least an additional $45,000 per month to conduct business as an off-airport air tour provider, which effectively excludes Plaintiffs from conducting air tours from the Sedona airport. (Id. ¶ 22.)

LEGAL STANDARD

"[T]o survive a motion to dismiss, a party must allege 'sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" In re Fitness Holdings Int'l, Inc., 714 F.3d 1141, 1144 (9th Cir. 2013) (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678). [13] "[A]ll well-pleaded allegations of material fact in the complaint are accepted as true and are construed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party." Id. at 1144-45 (citation omitted). However, the court need not accept legal conclusions couched as factual allegations. [*892] Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679-80. Moreover, "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id. at 679. The court also may dismiss due to "a lack of a cognizable legal theory." Mollett v. Netflix, Inc., 795 F.3d 1062, 1065 (9th Cir. 2015) (citation omitted).

A motion for judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12(c) is "functionally identical" to a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Cafasso v. Gen. Dynamics C4 Sys., 637 F.3d 1047, 1055 n.4 (9th Cir. 2011) (citations omitted); see also Harris v. Cty. of Orange, 682 F.3d 1126, 1131 (9th Cir. 2012) ("Iqbal applies to Rule 12(c) motions") (citation omitted). Therefore, a motion for judgment on the pleadings "is properly granted when, taking all the allegations in the non-moving party's pleadings as true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fajardo v. Cty. of L.A., 179 F.3d 698, 699 (9th Cir. 1999); see also Elvig v. Calvin Presbyterian Church, 375 F.3d 951, 955 (9th Cir. 2004) (when ruling on a Rule 12(c) motion, the court must "accept as true all allegations in [the plaintiff's] complaint and treat as false those allegations in the answer that contradict [the plaintiff's] allegations").

ANALYSIS

I. Background On Antitrust Claims Against Airport Operators [14]

Over the last half-century, plaintiffs have frequently attempted to assert antitrust claims against airports and airport operators after unsuccessfully bidding for a lease or concession at the airport. Accordingly, before addressing Plaintiffs' claims against the County, it is helpful to provide an overview of some of the relevant caselaw.

A. Appellate Decisions

1. Airline Lease Cases

In E.W. Wiggins Airways v. Massachusetts Port Authority, 362 F.2d 52 (1st Cir. 1966), the plaintiff was a company that had, "[f]or many years," conducted operations at Logan Airport pursuant to a lease. Id. at 54. Following the expiration of the lease in December 1959, the Massachusetts Port Authority—the government entity responsible for operating the airport on behalf of the state—solicited bids for a new lease. Id. Although the plaintiff expressed interest in renewing the lease, the Port Authority awarded it to a competitor under murky circumstances. Id. at 54-55.[2] In response, the plaintiff sued the Port Authority and the competitor, asserting claims under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 53. The district court dismissed for failure to state a claim and the First Circuit affirmed. First, the court held the Port Authority was immune from suit under the Parker state-action doctrine because it "was acting as an instrumentality [15] or agency of the state" at the time of the challenged conduct and the conduct was undertaken "pursuant to the legislative mandate imposed upon it to operate and manage the airport and establish rules and regulations for its use." Id. at 55-56. Second, and alternatively, the court held that an antitrust conspiracy was not "sufficiently alleged in the complaint" because "[a]ll that the plaintiff alleges is that the Authority agreed . . . [to] make [the competitor] the sole and exclusive fixed base [*893] operator at Logan . . . [and] entered into a lease with [the competitor] under which the [competitor] was to become the sole operator. These facts do not make out a case of conspiracy nor from them can any conspiracy be reasonably inferred. This was a simple agreement or arrangement. The fact that it was exclusive does not under these circumstances necessarily make it a conspiracy or illegal." Id. at 56.

The Tenth Circuit addressed a similar situation in Pueblo Aircraft Service, Inc. v. City of Pueblo, Colo., 679 F.2d 805 (10th Cir. 1982). Between 1970 and 1977, the plaintiff conducted operations at a municipal airport, which was operated by the city of Pueblo, pursuant to a lease with the City. Id. at 806-07. Several months before the lease was set to expire, the City initiated a "public bidding" process. [16] Id. Although the plaintiff submitted a bid to extend its lease, the City accepted a bid from a competitor. Id. Afterward, the plaintiff brought an antitrust lawsuit against the City, the City's aviation director, and the competing company whose bid was accepted. Id. at 805-06. The district court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment and the Tenth Circuit affirmed. Although the court acknowledged that municipalities are not automatically exempt from the antitrust laws under Parker, it held that the City was entitled to immunity because "the State of Colorado has specifically authorized the City to acquire and operate a municipal airport and [declared] that such acquisition and operation [qualify as] 'public, governmental functions, exercised for a public purpose and matters of public necessity.'" Id. at 807-08 (citations omitted). This statute, the court concluded, qualified as an "affirmative legislative action" by the state of Colorado that "granted City an exemption from operation of federal antitrust laws." Id. at 809.

A few years later, in Montauk-Caribbean Airways, Inc. v. Hope, 784 F.2d 91 (2d Cir. 1986), the Second Circuit reached a similar result. In 1979, the plaintiff entered into a 10-year lease with the town of East Hampton to conduct operations at a municipal [17] airport owned by the town. Id. at 93. During the first few years of the lease, the plaintiff only operated during the summer. Id. In 1984, the plaintiff sought to begin offering off-season service, too, but the town board refused to allow the change. Id. In response, the plaintiff brought an antitrust lawsuit against the town, various town officials, and a competing airline that was allowed to operate during the off-season. Id. The district court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss and the Second Circuit affirmed, holding that the town enjoyed immunity under Parker's state-action doctrine because the New York legislature had enacted various statutes that "confer authority upon municipalities to operate local airports" and these statutes amounted to a "delegation of authority . . . that municipal airport operators may enter into exclusive lease arrangements." Id. at 95-96. The court further noted that, given this conclusion "that the state action doctrine bar[s] the antitrust claims against the Town of East Hampton, there is no basis for holding that [the competitor airline] conspired with the Town to violate the antitrust laws." Id. at 97.

[2] Specifically, the alleged murky circumstances were that "early in 1960 the Authority, acting through one of its members, contacted [the competitor] and as a result of subsequent meetings the Authority and [the competitor] entered into a conspiracy under which the Authority would refuse to allow the plaintiff to remain at Logan . . . and that [the competitor] would then take over their operations and become the sole and exclusive fixed base operator at Logan." Id. at 54-55.

The next relevant decision is California Aviation, Inc. v. City of Santa Monica, 806 F.2d 905 (9th Cir. 1986). In 1966, the plaintiff entered into [18] a 30-year lease with the city of Santa Monica to lease space at the Santa Monica municipal airport. Id. at 907. The lease included a provision that forbade the plaintiff from selling certain petroleum products for lower prices than the City charged. Id. The plaintiff brought an antitrust lawsuit against the City, arguing this contractual term amounted to "unlawful [*894] price fixing and unfair competition," but the district court granted the City's motion for summary judgment and the Ninth Circuit affirmed, holding that the City was entitled to immunity under the Parker state-action doctrine, even though "no state statute articulates and affirmatively expresses a state policy of allowing municipalities to fix the minimum price of fuel at airports," because the California legislature had enacted other statutes that generally authorized municipalities to enter into exclusive contracts when operating airports. Id. at 907-08 (citation omitted).

Finally, in 2010, the First Circuit decided Rectrix Aerodrome Ctrs. v. Barnstable Mun. Airport Comm'n, 610 F.3d 8 (1st Cir. 2010). There, the plaintiff was a company that entered into a lease in 2002 to operate a hangar at a municipal airport owned by the town of Barnstable. Id. at 9. The counterparty to the lease was the Barnstable Municipal Airport Commission, an [19] entity that had been created by the town and was vested under state law with "various powers relating to airport operations, including, among other things, the power[s] to lease land." Id. at 9 n.1. After the Commission refused to allow the plaintiff to sell jet fuel, the plaintiff asserted antitrust claims against the Commission, several of its managers and executives, and its outside counsel. Id. at 9. The district court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss and the First Circuit affirmed. The court began by noting that, "[a]lthough not automatically treated as states, municipal entities (like BMAC) can invoke state action immunity—as can municipal officials acting for them—if they act pursuant to a 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed' state policy to displace competition with regulation." Id. at 13 (citations omitted). The court concluded that Massachusetts had enacted such a state policy by passing a statute that authorized airport commissions to "adopt rules and regulations for the use of municipal airports." Id. (citation omitted). The court explained that, although "[t]his may seem a rather bland basis for attributing to the state legislature a purpose to allow the suppression of competition, [20] . . . the case law has interpreted the protection hospitably." Id. The court further noted that "[c]ases from other circuits have similarly found that municipal airports can benefit from state action immunity" and the "operative [statutory] language was in many cases similar." Id.

2. Taxicab Concession Cases

In Padgett v. Louisville & Jefferson County Air Board, 492 F.2d 1258 (6th Cir. 1974), a group of independent taxicab operators brought antitrust claims against the Louisville and Jefferson County Air Board—a "quasi-governmental agency" responsible for operating an airport in Kentucky—after the agency rejected their bids for a taxicab concession at the airport and awarded the concession to a competing company. Id. at 1258. The district court granted the agency's motion to dismiss and the Sixth Circuit affirmed, holding that the agency was immune from suit under Parker because Kentucky had "legislatively created [the agency] whose charge is, inter alia, to operate the airport. There is no question in our own minds but that the regulation of ground transportation services is necessarily incident to the management and operation of the airport facilities." Id. Thus, the court "conclude[d] that the Board in contracting for cab service at the airport was exercising a valid governmental [21] function to which the antitrust laws do not apply." Id.

Similarly, in Independent Taxicab Drivers' Employees v. Greater Houston Transportation Co., 760 F.2d 607 (5th Cir. 1985), a group of independent taxicab operators, who had submitted an unsuccessful bid to the city of Houston for an exclusive concession over passenger service at the [*895] Houston airport, brought an antitrust lawsuit against the City and the competitor who'd been awarded the concession. Id. at 609-10. The district court granted summary judgment to the defendants and the Fifth Circuit affirmed, holding that "the City of Houston is immune from federal antitrust liability for its treatment of taxicabs at [the Houston] Airport" because the Texas legislature had enacted a statute that "specifically authorized its municipalities to grant contracts for the provision of goods and services at their airports." Id. at 610 (citation omitted). Although this statute did not specifically mention how cities should regulate the provision of taxicab services at airports, the court concluded its "broad phrasing is a strong indication of the state's desire to abdicate in favor of municipal prescience with regard to airport management." Id.

B. District Court Decisions

In Hillman Flying Service, Inc. v. City of Roanoke, 652 F. Supp. 1142 (W.D. Va. 1987), the plaintiff conducted operations at a municipal airport owned by the city of Roanoke pursuant [22] to a lease with the City. Id. at 1144. Although a competing business at the airport was allowed to sell aviation fuel, the City forbade the plaintiff from doing so. Id. In response, the plaintiff brought an antitrust lawsuit against the City and four of its officials, as well as the competitor and one of its vice presidents, alleging that the fuel-sale prohibition was the product "of an illicit conspiracy between [the competitor] and the city" and infusing its complaint "with very serious charges of bribery, strong arm tactics, and impropriety by the defendants." Id. The district court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss, holding (as relevant here) that they were entitled to immunity from the plaintiff's Sherman Act claims under the Parker state-action doctrine. Id. at 1145-46. In reaching this conclusion, the court emphasized that the Virginia legislature had enacted statutes that afforded municipalities "the general authority" to operate airports. Id. Although these statutes did "not expressly anticipate exclusive or anticompetitive arrangements," the court concluded that "a legislature's express endorsement of anticompetitive behavior is unnecessary for a municipality's immunity under the antitrust [23] laws." Id.

Queen City Aviation, Inc. v. City of Allentown, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9042, 1992 WL 131148 (E.D. Pa. 1992), involved similar allegations. There, the plaintiff conducted operations at a municipal airport owned by the city of Allentown pursuant to a lease with the City. *1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9042, [WL] at 1. When the lease expired, the City "made public a proposal package for Request for Proposals to lease" the space and ultimately accepted a bid submitted by one of the plaintiff's competitors. Id. In response, the plaintiff filed an antitrust lawsuit against the City, arguing—just as Plaintiffs argue here—that "[t]he bid specifications and procedures . . . were inconsistent, ambiguous, vague and contrary to law for a variety of reasons" and that the City had "exhibited an animus toward the plaintiff and . . . acted in an unfair and discriminatory manner." Id. The district court granted the City's motion to dismiss, noting that "plaintiff's complaint is nothing more than an expression of its disappointment that city officials, after inviting bids, decided to offer its franchise . . . to someone else." *1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9042, [WL] at 2. The court elaborated that "the circumstances plaintiff alleges simply do not give rise to the level of a violation of the Sherman Act §§ 1 and 2." *1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9042, [WL] at 4.

Finally, in Deak-Perera Hawaii, Inc. v. Department of Transportation, State of Hawaii, 553 F. Supp. 976 (D. Haw. 1983), the plaintiff was a company that provided exchange services [24] for foreign currency. Id. at 978-79. For 20 years, the plaintiff was granted an exclusive concession by the Hawaii [*896] State Department of Transportation to provide such services at the Honolulu International Airport. Id. However, in 1982, after the plaintiff's concession expired, the department awarded the concession to a competitor, rejecting the plaintiff's bid. Id. In response, the plaintiff brought an antitrust lawsuit against the department and several of its executives. Id. at 977. The district court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, holding that they qualified for immunity under the Parker state-action doctrine because (1) the department was "legally an instrumentality of the State of Hawaii" (2) even if it were merely considered a political subdivision of the state, the state had enacted statutes authorizing the department to enter into the type of exclusive-dealing contract being challenged. Id. at 982-89.

II. The County Is Entitled To Judgment On The Pleadings

A. Immunity Under The State-Action Doctrine

In their motion to dismiss, SOCAA and Shankland argued, among other things, that they are entitled to immunity under the Parker state-action doctrine. Specifically, they argued that Parker is applicable [25] here because various provisions of Arizona law authorize SOCAA to operate the Sedona Airport. (Doc. 81 at 8-10). In their response, Plaintiffs argued the state-action doctrine is inapplicable because (1) "the Arizona statutes do not state or imply that SOCAA may engage in anti-competitive conduct in administering the Sedona Airport," (2) the state of Arizona doesn't supervise SOCAA's operation of the airport, and (3) state supervision is necessary under Parker because SOCAA itself isn't a municipality. (Doc. 89 at 8-9.) In their reply, SOCAA and Shankland argued that (1) SOCAA qualifies as an instrumentality of the County under Arizona statutory law and caselaw, so state supervision isn't required under Parker, and (2) the state statutes authorizing it to run the airport don't need to specifically authorize anticompetitive behavior in order to trigger immunity under Parker. (Doc. 101 at 3-6.)

Although Plaintiffs have now dismissed their claims against the SOCAA defendants (Doc. 115), the potential availability of immunity under the state-action doctrine remains a relevant consideration. This is because Plaintiffs are asserting conspiracy claims against the County predicated on an agreement [26] between the County and SOCAA to violate the antitrust laws. Thus, if the SOCAA defendants are entitled to immunity under Parker, Plaintiffs' claims against the County also must fail. Montauk-Caribbean Airways, 784 F.2d at 97 (given the conclusion "that the state action doctrine bar[s] the antitrust claims against the Town of East Hampton, there is no basis for holding that [the competitor airline] conspired with the Town to violate the antitrust laws"); see also E.W. Wiggins Airways, 362 F.2d at 56.[3]

The Court concludes that the SOCAA defendants are, in fact, entitled to immunity under the state-action doctrine. As noted in Part A above, courts have repeatedly invoked this doctrine when rejecting antitrust claims against airports and airport operators. When the entity responsible for operating an airport is a literal arm of the state—as was the case in [*897] Deak-Perera Hawaii (the Hawaii Department of Transportation)—the doctrine's applicability is obvious. In contrast, when the entity is a town, city, or county, the analysis becomes more complicated and requires consideration of whether the municipality's "anticompetitive activities were authorized by the State 'pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.'" [27] Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 39, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) (quoting Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 413, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978)).

Such a state policy exists here. Arizona law specifically provides that "[t]he governing body of a city or town or the board of supervisors of a county may . . . [a]cquire, establish, construct, own, control, lease, equip, improve, maintain, operate and regulate airports for the use of aircraft within or outside the limits of the city, town or county." A.R.S. § 28-8411(A)(1). The only limitation on this power is that the town, city, or county may not "restrict or limit the length or width of an airstrip or runway used for the landing and takeoff of aircraft." Id. § 28-8411(B)(1).

Plaintiffs argue these statutes are insufficient to trigger immunity under Parker because they don't expressly authorize municipalities to engage in anticompetitive behavior when operating airports. This argument is unavailing. As the Supreme Court has explained, a state legislature need not "expressly state in a statute or its legislative history that the legislature intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effects." Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 43. Instead, the statute need only "clearly contemplate that a city may engage in anticompetitive conduct" or render such anticompetitive conduct a "foreseeable result" of what it authorizes. Id. at 42. See also City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advert., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 372-73, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991) [28] ("We have rejected the contention that this requirement can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition . . . . It is enough, we have held, if suppression of competition is the 'foreseeable result' of what the statute authorizes . . . .") (quoting Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42)). Because the statutory provisions at issue here vest Arizona municipalities with such broad authority to operate airports, they contemplate anticompetitive conduct on the part of municipal airport operators and render such conduct foreseeable. These provisions are functionally identical to many of the statutory provisions that were deemed sufficient to trigger Parker immunity in the cases identified in Part A above. See, e.g., Rectrix Aerodrome Ctrs., 610 F.3d at 13 (Massachusetts law was sufficient under Parker, even though it only "adopt[ed] rules and regulations for the use of municipal airports," because although "[t]his may seem a rather bland basis for attributing to the state legislature a purpose to allow the suppression of competition, . . . the case law has interpreted the protection hospitably") (citations omitted); Pueblo Aircraft, 679 F.2d at 807-08 (Colorado law was sufficient under Parker because it "specifically authorized the City to acquire and operate a municipal airport and [declared] that such acquisition and operation [qualify as] 'public, governmental functions, exercised for a public purpose and matters of public necessity'"); Indep. Taxicab Drivers' Emps., 760 F.2d at 610 (Texas law was sufficient under Parker, even though it didn't specifically mention how cities should regulate taxicab services at airports, because the statutes' "broad phrasing is a strong indication of the state's desire to abdicate in favor of municipal prescience with regard to airport management"); [*898] Hillman Flying Serv., 652 F. Supp. at 1145-46 (Virginia law was sufficient under Parker, even though the relevant statutes did "not expressly anticipate exclusive or anticompetitive arrangements," because they afforded municipalities "the general authority" to operate airports).

[3] Additionally, although the County didn't raise the issue of Parker immunity in its renewed motion for judgment on the pleadings, it seems to the Court that the County would have an even stronger claim under Parker than SOCAA. As noted infra, one of Plaintiffs' arguments here is that SOCAA doesn't qualify for immunity because it's a non-governmental entity. That argument obviously wouldn't apply to the County.

Finally, Plaintiffs are also incorrect in their assertion that the immunity analysis requires an additional step here (i.e., proof of active supervision by the state) because SOCAA is a private organization, not a town or county. Under Arizona law, SOCAA is considered a "body politic" that is "exercising its powers for the benefit of the people, for the improvement of the people's health and welfare and for the increase of the people's traffic and prosperity." A.R.S. § 28-8424(A). The courts have treated such entities as functionally identical to cities, towns, and counties for purposes of the Parker immunity analysis. See, e.g., Rectrix Aerodrome Ctrs., 610 F.3d at 9 & 9 n.1, 13 (treating as a "municipal entity" and granting immunity [29] to the Barnstable Municipal Airport Commission, an entity that had been created by the town and was vested under state law with "various powers relating to airport operations, including, among other things, the power[] to lease land"); Padgett, 492 F.2d at 1258 (granting immunity to the Louisville and Jefferson County Air Board, a "quasi-governmental agency" responsible for operating an airport in Kentucky).

B. Plausibility

Plaintiffs' claims against the County also fail for an independent reason. The Court previously rejected those claims because "Plaintiff simply does not allege facts sufficient to demonstrate that Yavapai County did anything more than own the Sedona Airport during the RFP process." (Doc. 69 at 5.) In its renewed motion for judgment on the pleadings, the County argues the new factual allegations in the amended complaint remain insufficient to show it was part of any illicit agreement. (Doc. 79 at 9-10, 12.)[4] In their response, Plaintiffs argue their new allegations are sufficient and emphasize the allegations concerning the "communications between SOCAA's president and County Supervisor Garrison," which they contend "evidence an agreement to oust Dakota and install Guidance." (Doc. 85 at 8-11.) [30]

The Court agrees with the County that the amended complaint remains deficient. For example, one of the new factual allegations pertaining to the County is that, on March 14, 2017, SOCAA's president (Cagliero) sent an email to a County representative (Garrison) to suggest a meeting to address SOCAA's "problem tenant." (Doc. 72 ¶ 32.) The email stated there had been "developments in the litigation that [] could be better addressed by a joint Airport Authority/Yavapai County team." (Id.) Plaintiffs then allege that "[i]n furtherance of the 'Airport Authority/Yavapai County team's' goal of dealing with the 'problem tenant,' on March 24, 2017, ten days after Cagliero emailed Garrison, SOCAA attorney Tony Cullum transmitted a letter to Dakota beginning the process of terminating the

[4] The County also seeks judgment on the pleadings because (1) Plaintiffs fail to allege it possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, as required for a section 2 claim and (2) Plaintiffs fail to allege a plausible "antitrust injury," as required for both a section 1 and section 2 claim. (Doc. 79 at 7-13.) Additionally, the County argues that Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief is improper because (1) Plaintiffs have not stated a valid claim under the Sherman Act and (2) the amended complaint doesn't identify any ongoing conduct by the County that is causing or threatens to cause future harm. (Id. at 13.) The Court declines to reach these arguments because it is ruling in the County's favor on alternative grounds.

Dakota Lease." (Id. ¶ 33.) [*899] According to Plaintiffs, "[w]ith SOCAA and Yavapai's plan in place, SOCAA began negotiating a 'settlement' of the Litigation with Dakota." (Id. ¶ 34.)

But Plaintiffs also acknowledge in the amended complaint that "despite the purported requirements of the RFP, the Yavapai County Board of Supervisors . . . did not participate in the initial award decision. No one from [Yavapai County] [31] was present at the June 26, 2017 meeting, although Yavapai County officials provided input to the RFP process and later approved the sublease." (Id. ¶ 73.) Plaintiffs' main allegation against the County, thus, seems to be that it "ignored a material term of the Master Lease and approved the Guidance sublease." (Id. ¶ 88.)

Such allegations do not plausibly suggest an illegal agreement or conspiracy between the County and any other defendants. Plaintiffs have pleaded facts showing only that an officer of SOCAA sent an email to a County official suggesting a meeting and that the County later approved the SOCAA-Guidance Sublease. Although Plaintiffs include the phrases "SOCAA and Yavapai's plan" (id. ¶ 34) and "Airport Authority/Yavapai County team" (id. ¶¶ 33, 39), they fail to include any concrete factual allegations regarding what this plan was or what this team did. Moreover, it is unremarkable that SOCAA might refer to Dakota as a "problem tenant" at the time this email was sent, given that SOCAA and Dakota were embroiled in pending civil litigation at the time. The fact such an email was sent to a County representative (who had a legitimate need to be apprised of the status of ongoing [32] litigation), coupled with a request for a future meeting, does not give rise to a legitimate inference that the purpose of the requested meeting was to hatch a plan to violate the antitrust laws by creating a sham RFP process. Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1049 (9th Cir. 2008) ("Allegations of facts that could just as easily suggest rational, legal business behavior by the defendants as they could suggest an illegal conspiracy are insufficient to plead a violation of the antitrust laws.").

In sum, Plaintiffs have not pleaded "enough fact[s] to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement" involving the County, given that Plaintiffs have not alleged the County had any other involvement or interaction with the other defendants regarding the sublease. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. No allegations in the complaint plausibly suggest that the County's ultimate approval of the SOCAA-Guidance Sublease resulted from any conspiracy or agreement between the County and the other defendants.

III. Scope of Dismissal

"[L]eave to amend may be denied . . . if amendment of the complaint would be futile." Albrecht v. Lund, 845 F.2d 193, 195 (9th Cir. 1988). "An amendment is futile when 'no set of facts can be proved under the amendment to the pleadings that would constitute a valid and sufficient [33] claim or defense.'" Missouri ex rel. Koster v. Harris, 847 F.3d 646, 656 (9th Cir. 2016) (citation omitted). Moreover, when a court has already granted the plaintiff leave to amend, the court has "particularly broad" discretion in deciding whether to grant further leave to amend. Chodos v. W. Publ'g Co., 292 F.3d 992, 1003 (9th Cir. 2002) (citation omitted).

The Court denies further leave to amend here. There are no new factual allegations Plaintiffs could offer to overcome the deficiencies identified above.

Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that:

[*900] 1. The County's motion for judgment on the pleadings (Doc. 79) is granted;

2. The Amended Complaint (Doc. 72) is dismissed with prejudice as to the County; and

3. The Clerk of Court shall enter judgment accordingly and terminate this action. Dated this 10th day of April, 2019.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND IN PART AND WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND IN PART

[Re: ECF 53]

Before the Court is Defendants FinishMaster, Inc. ("FinishMaster") and Uni-Select, Inc.'s ("Uni-Select") motion to dismiss Plaintiff Nicolosi Distributing, Inc.'s ("Nicolosi") First Amended Complaint. Mot., ECF 53. The Court held a hearing on the motion on March 7, 2019. For the reasons stated on the record and as set forth below, the motion is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND IN PART AND WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND IN PART.

I. BACKGROUND

In its order denying Plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction and granting Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint, the Court detailed the factual background of this case. See MTD Order, ECF 49. In brief, Nicolosi is a small distributor of automotive paints and supplies [*2] in the San Francisco Bay Area. First Am. Compl. ("FAC") ¶¶

29, 38, ECF 50. FinishMaster, a wholly owned subsidiary of Uni-Select, is a large automotive paint and supplies distributor and a direct competitor of Nicolosi. FAC ¶¶ 30-32. In this action, Nicolosi accuses Defendants of various antitrust violations resulting from FinishMaster's alleged use of exclusive dealing contracts with autobody shops (including huge up-front payments by FinishMaster and super-deep price discounts for the customer), its acquisition of smaller competitor-distributors, and its unlawful tying of products. See generally FAC. Nicolosi also accuses Defendants of unlawful discriminatory pricing.

The Court previously granted with leave to amend Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint ("MTD Order"). The Court first details that order and then describes the new allegations in Plaintiff's FAC aimed at remedying the deficiencies the Court identified in its MTD Order.

A. The Court's MTD Order

In its MTD Order, the Court held that Nicolosi failed to state a claim for any of its four causes of action (under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and related state law claims) and that Nicolosi failed to allege that the Court [*3] has personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select.

The Court first analyzed Nicolosi's cause of action under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Court held that Nicolosi had, for several reasons, failed to demonstrate that FinishMaster's exclusive dealing contracts "sufficiently foreclosed competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected," as required to state a claim under Section 1. MTD Order at 6.

First, Nicolosi failed to plausibly allege that Bay Area A-list shops who purchase Axalta paint constitute the relevant market. Geographically, Nicolosi failed to demonstrate why the nine-county Bay Area constituted the appropriate "area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply." Id. at 6-7 (quoting Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1490 (9th Cir. 1991)). Nicolosi also had improperly defined the market based on the type of customer—namely the list level of body shops—as opposed to based on the products sold. Id. at 7 (citing Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008)). Because Nicolosi had not distinguished A-, B-, and C-list shops in terms of their ability or desire to purchase paint, it had not properly alleged that B- and C-list shops should be excluded from the relevant market. Similarly, Nicolosi failed to allege why Axalta paint did not have economic substitutes in [*4] the market that should be included in the market definition. Id.

Second, Nicolosi failed to demonstrate that FinishMaster had foreclosed a substantial share of the market because it had alleged that Finishmaster had at most 33% of the market share, but even that amount was dubious given the allegation that other major distributors exist in the market and potentially share in the unaccounted-for 33% of the market. Id.

Third, and finally, Nicolosi failed to allege that FinishMaster's activities had any anti-competitive effects in the market, such as reduced economic output or increased prices for consumers. Id. at 7-8.

The Court then held that these deficiencies also barred Nicolosi's Section 2 claim. Nicolosi's failure to plausibly allege an appropriate relevant market, what percentage of the market FinishMaster had captured, and any anti-competitive impacts on the market caused by FinishMaster's acts doomed its Section 2 claim. Because the Court dismissed both federal law claims, it also dismissed Nicolosi's derivative state law claims. Id. at 8-9.

The Court then held that Nicolosi failed to plausibly allege that the Court has personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select. Nicolosi did not rely on general jurisdiction, but instead [*5] alleged that the Court had specific jurisdiction over Uni-Select seemingly based on Uni-Select's status as FinishMaster's parent company (and thus based on FinishMaster's actions in the state) and based on Uni-Select's actions in the state through its provision of funds directly to FinishMaster. The Court rejected both sets of allegations as insufficient to allege personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select.

B. The First Amended Complaint

In its First Amended Complaint, Nicolosi attempts to remedy the deficiencies identified in this Court's MTD Order and brings additional claims against Defendants. See Opp. at 1-2, ECF 54 (chart setting forth new allegations and deficient areas they attempt to address).

Nicolosi includes new allegations aimed at more clearly delineating the relevant market. As to geography, it reduces the size of the market from a nine-county Bay Area market to a four-county Bay Area market. See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 40, 106. Nicolosi supports this geographic limitation by alleging that customers generally require delivery of the paint on a same-day basis. FAC ¶ 105. As such, distributors, including FinishMaster, have a "pattern and practice" of having distribution centers "in close proximity [*6] to the auto body shop customers," leading to shops throughout each county. FAC ¶¶ 105, 107, 110. Moreover, the distributors have agreements that are granted on a "county-by-county basis," based on "long-established custom and practice of the paint manufacturers." FAC ¶ 105. Nicolosi alleges that each of these facts indicates that the market should be defined as a "local county-by-county geographic market." FAC ¶ 110. Nicolosi also added allegations to support its argument that Axalta paint does not have economic substitutes in the market. Though Nicolosi admits that paint brands are "more or less interchangeable" and that a "shop can switch" the paint brand it purchases, Nicolosi alleges that "it's a hugely complicated process that is in fact rarely done." FAC ¶ 162. By contrast, Nicolosi did not add new allegations to further delineate the A-, B-, and C-list shops in terms of their willingness or ability to purchase paint. Though at times Nicolosi appears to allege that the relevant market is A- and B-list shops, elsewhere he clearly limits the market to A-list shops only. See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 66, 101.

As to FinishMaster's market share, Nicolosi alleges that FinishMaster has approximately [*7] 85% of the A-list body shop market. FAC ¶¶ 66, 101, 143. Elsewhere, Nicolosi alleges that smaller distributors "account for selling approximately two-thirds of the Bay Area Market." FAC ¶ 66.

As to the anti-competitive impacts on the market, Nicolosi alleges that FinishMaster's vertical exclusive supply and tying restraints do not enhance Interbrand competition or provide other market efficiencies because they have not improved FinishMaster's provision of services to customers. FAC ¶¶ 44-47, 112. FinishMaster's exclusive dealing contracts, which come with deep up-front payments and discounts to the customer, in tandem with FinishMaster's purchasing of small distributors in the area, has kept other smaller distributors from selling to A-list customers, and leads to a cycle of FinishMaster purchasing smaller distributors and gaining more of the market. FAC ¶¶ 66, 125. Nicolosi alleges that, at least as to one business, if FinishMaster were not allowed to use exclusive supply agreements, Nicolosi could "provide a matching or better offer" to the customer. FAC ¶ 92.

As to the Court's personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select, Nicolosi alleges that Uni-Select funds FinishMaster's actions, intending [*8] as part of its business strategy for FinishMaster to use the money to purchase smaller distributors and fund the up-front discounts to the A-list customers in California. FAC ¶¶ 8, 31, 34, 51-55, 78, 233-34, 247, 264. It also alleges that Uni-Select has substantial contacts with California because FinishMaster has activities throughout California, and Uni-Select is FinishMaster's parent company. FAC ¶¶ 32, 33.

As with the original Complaint, based on these alleged actions, Nicolosi asserts the following causes of action: (1) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, for entering into agreements in restraint of trade; (2) violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, for unlawful monopolization and/or attempted monopolization; (3) violation of the Cartwright Act, California Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726; and (4) violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, et seq.

Nicolosi also asserts the following new causes of action against Defendants, supported by new allegations: (5) price discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(f); (6) secret rebates in violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045; (7) tying in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; and (8) tying in violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16727.

To support its Robinson-Patman Act claims, Nicolosi alleges that Defendants knowingly induce and receive discriminatory price discounts [*9] from Axalta, the paint manufacturer, that are not offered to Nicolosi and other small distributors. FAC ¶¶ 202-240. First, Nicolosi alleges that Axalta gives FinishMaster a $10 million discount on its purchases, but this discount was never offered to Nicolosi. FAC ¶¶ 205-10. Defendants allegedly knew that Nicolosi never received this discount because they purchased all of the distributors large enough to make a similar $10 million order, and because the discount is offered in rush circumstances and FinishMaster knows it is the "go-to entity" in such circumstances because other smaller distributors cannot qualify for such purchases so quickly. FAC ¶¶ 208-09. Second, Nicolosi alleges that Axalta helps FinishMaster provide the up-front discounts offered to the body shops. FAC ¶¶ 223-26. Nicolosi alleges it was never offered similar discounts, FAC ¶ 229; however, it also alleges that Axalta offers it the "top-level of discounts in exactly the same way and level as are similarly available to FinishMaster" and that Axalta "has a corporate policy of giving all distributors the same discount packages." FAC ¶¶ 85-86; see also FAC ¶¶ 91-92 (alleging Axalta gave Nicolosi "special discounting [*10] arrangements").

These same allegations underpin Nicolosi's secret rebate claim. See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 245, 247 (alleging $10 million discount and up-front discount are not offered to Nicolosi on same terms). Nicolosi claims that both the $10 million discount and the up-front monies discount are kept secret. FAC ¶¶ 247-48. Nicolosi is injured by these acts because Axalta is helping its competitor and keeping it out of the market. See, e.g., FAC ¶ 250-57.

Finally, Nicolosi alleges that in FinishMaster's exclusive supply agreements with body shops, it unlawfully ties the purchase of paint to the purchase of all nonpaint supplies. FAC ¶¶ 258-84. As proof, Nicolosi quotes portions of an exclusive supply agreement FinishMaster uses that says that the customer "shall purchase 100% of its paint and material requirements exclusively" from FinishMaster. FAC ¶ 272. These tying arrangements have excluded Nicolosi from selling even nonpaint products to A-list autobody shops. See, e.g., FAC ¶ 267.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

"A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted 'tests the legal sufficiency of a claim.'" Conservation Force v. Salazar, 646 F.3d 1240, 1241-42 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001)). When determining whether a claim has been stated, [*11] the Court accepts as true all well-pled factual allegations and construes them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Reese v. BP Exploration (Alaska) Inc., 643 F.3d 681, 690 (9th Cir. 2011). However, the Court need not "accept as true allegations that contradict matters properly subject to judicial notice" or "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). While a complaint need not contain detailed factual allegations, it "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A claim is facially plausible when it "allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

If the Court concludes that the complaint should be dismissed, it must then decide whether to grant leave to amend. Under Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, leave to amend "shall be freely given when justice so requires," bearing in mind "the underlying purpose of Rule 15 . . . [is] to facilitate decision on the merits, rather than on the pleadings or technicalities." Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1127 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Nonetheless, a district court may deny leave to amend a complaint [*12] due to "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, [and] futility of amendment." See Leadsinger, Inc. v. BMG Music Publ'g, 512 F.3d 522, 532 (9th Cir. 2008).

III. DISCUSSION

After reviewing the relevant briefing and hearing argument on the record, the Court finds that Nicolosi has failed to (1) state a claim for any of its eight causes of action; and (2) to demonstrate that this Court has personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select.

The Court first revisits Nicolosi's four original causes of action, and then discusses each new cause of action in turn. The Court then discusses personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select.

A. Claims 1-4: Sherman Act Sections 1 and 2; Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726; and California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, et seq.

The FAC defines the relevant product and geographic markets as "a submarket of distribution of Axalta-made automotive paint lines and 3M sandpaper, tape, masking paper, and other related non-paint auto body supplies to A- List auto body shops located in either of San Mateo County, Santa Clara County, Alameda County or San Francisco County." FAC ¶ 40. Nicolosi's FAC goes some way toward [*13] remedying the deficiencies from its Complaint with respect to the relevant market, such as the geographic scope and the limitation to Axalta paint. However, Nicolosi has made no modification to the limitation to A-list customers, as opposed to A-, B-, and C- list customers. In any event, on all three points Nicolosi has not plausibly alleged that FinishMaster has foreclosed a substantial enough portion of the relevant market to be liable under the Sherman Act and related state laws.

First, Nicolosi has narrowed its alleged geographic market from the nine-county Bay Area to only four counties—San Mateo, Santa Clara, Alameda, San Francisco—alleging that the market is defined by same-day delivery requirements. See, e.g., FAC ¶ 105. Although same-day delivery may factually support a narrow geographic market, Nicolosi's inclusion of four neighboring counties is not plausible because there is no reason to exclude other neighboring counties, even under Plaintiff's own reasoning. For example, Plaintiff's market would exclude an autobody shop in Orinda (Contra Costa County) purchasing from a distributor in Oakland (Alameda County), where the distance between the two is only 8.6 miles. See Google [*14] Maps, maps.google.com (Oakland, CA to Orinda, CA). At the same time, Plaintiff's market would include an autobody shop in Livermore (Alameda County) purchasing from the same Oakland distributor, where the distance is 33 miles. Id. (Livermore, CA to Oakland, CA). Or more expansively, it would include an autobody shop in Gilroy (Santa Clara County) purchasing from a distributor in Livermore (Alameda County), where the distance is over 60 miles. Id. (Gilroy, CA to Livermore, CA). Because Nicolosi does not allege why these discrepancies make sense given the market, Nicolosi's narrow market is simply not plausible. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. Though Nicolosi defines the geographic market in terms of its own customer base, see FAC ¶ 106, and alleges that distributors have stores on a "county-by-county" basis, FAC ¶ 105, these limitations do not explain the discrepancies above and thus are not enough to allege a plausible market. See Sidibe v. Sutter Health, 4 F. Supp. 3d 1160, 1175 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (holding complaint insufficiently alleged relevant geographic market in part because "Plaintiffs provide[d] no factual allegations to support drawing lines at [] county borders"); see also Concord Assocs., L.P. v. Entm't Properties Tr., 817 F.3d 46, 53-55 (2d Cir. 2016) (affirming dismissal of complaint because it did not plausibly allege that geographic market [*15] for racing/gambling market should be limited to the Catskills).

Second, Nicolosi seeks to limit the relevant market to a single paint brand, Axalta. But it acknowledges that paint brands are interchangeable and offers only a conclusory reason to limit the market to a single brand. The totality of Plaintiff's allegations is set forth in FAC ¶ 162, which states: "Paint brands are more or less interchangeable; yes a shop can switch, but it's a hugely complicated process that is in fact done rarely." This allegation simply is not sufficient to make Plaintiff's claim of lack of interchangeability plausible. See Apple, Inc. v. Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1190, 1198 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (holding complaint did not plausibly allege single-brand market because "[s]ingle-brand markets are, at a minimum, extremely rare" and the complaint "fail[ed] to allege facts plausibly supporting the counterintuitive claim that Apple's operating system is so unique that is suffers no actual or potential competitors").

Third, Nicolosi asks this Court to find that A-list customers constitute a "customer-type submarket," and thus can be a relevant market. Opp. at 3-5. But black-letter law dictates that to define the relevant market, courts look to the geographic market and the product market, not [*16] the customer market. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) ("The 'area of effective competition' must be determined by reference to a product market (the 'line of commerce') and a geographic market (the 'section of the country')."); Oltz v. St. Peter's Cmty. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1446 (9th Cir. 1988) ("The term 'relevant market' encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description."). The product market is not defined in terms of the customer, but rather "includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446; see also United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956) ("[N]o more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce', monopolization of which may be illegal."). As the Ninth Circuit has made clear, "the relevant market must be a product market. The consumers do not define the boundaries of the market; the products or producers do." Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008) (emphasis in original) (footnote omitted) (citing Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325). Put another way, "[t]he relevant market . . . includes the full range of selling opportunities reasonably open to rivals, namely, all the product and geographic sales they may readily compete for, using easily convertible plants and marketing [*17] organizations." Omega Envt'l., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1162 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting 2A Philip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 570b1 at 278 (1995)).[1]

Here, Nicolosi has not alleged why B-list and C-list shops should not be "include[d] in the full range of selling opportunities reasonably open" to Nicolosi as a rival of FinishMaster. Because Nicolosi fails to allege why B- and C-list shops would not desire to or cannot purchase paint from Nicolosi or why Nicolosi could not otherwise sell to these shops, it has failed to show that these consumers should be excluded from the relevant market, particularly where there is only a single product at issue with no alleged differentiation. In fact, at the hearing on the motion, Nicolosi's counsel conceded that he created the term "A-list, and that "A-list" is not an accepted industry term.

With B- and C-list shops included in the market, Nicolosi alleges at most that FinishMaster has 33% of the market, see FAC ¶ 66(f), but even that is not a plausible inference because Nicolosi alleges that the "smaller" distributors have two-thirds of the market share, leaving the three larger distributors (one of which is FinishMaster) and the manufacturers themselves to share the remaining 33%. FAC ¶¶ [*18] 62, 66, 96. An allegation that the defendant has less than 33% market share is not sufficient to establish a Section 1 or Section 2 claim, particularly in light of the fact that the FAC does not provide any details concerning the exclusivity agreements themselves, such as the duration of the agreements or what proportion of FinishMaster's sales are a result of such agreements. See Feitelson v. Google Inc., 80 F. Supp. 3d 1019, 1029-30 & n.8 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (substantial share is "40-50% of the relevant market"); Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1438 (9th Cir. 1995) (50% and 30% market shares are presumptively insufficient to establish market power for actual and attempted monopolization claims, respectively). What's more, Nicolosi still fails to plausibly allege that any of FinishMaster's actions, be it buying up smaller distributors or entering into exclusive supply agreements, has an anticompetitive effect on the market, such as reduced output or increased prices. See Coal. for Icann Transparency Inc. v. Verisign, Inc., 464 F. Supp. 2d 948, 964 (N.D. Cal. 2006). Quite the contrary, Nicolosi alleges that these acts have led to price discounts for customers. See FAC ¶¶ 66, 88, 93.

For these reasons, Nicolosi's Sherman Act 1 and 2 claims fail. Because Nicolosi has already had the opportunity to amend as to these same deficiencies, further amendment would be futile. And because Nicolosi's state law claim under the Cartwright [*19] Act, California Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726, is based on the same underlying actions as its federal antitrust claims, its state law antitrust claim similarly fails. See Opp. at 15-17; Eastman v. Quest Diagnostics Inc., 724 F. App'x 556, 559 n.2 (9th Cir. 2018). Likewise, to the extent Nicolosi's claim under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, et seq., is premised on this conduct, it too fails.

For the foregoing reasons, Nicolosi's claims 1-4 are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

[1] Nicolosi's reliance on CACI 3414, see Opp. at 5, is misplaced, as that jury instruction pertains to defining the geographic market, not the product market.

B. Claim 5: Price Discrimination, Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(f)

Nicolosi's next claim is for unlawful price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act ("RPA"), 15 U.S.C. § 13(f) based on Axalta allegedly giving FinishMaster 10% discounts on $10 million purchases and Axalta's sharing in FinishMaster's up-front rebates to body shops. See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 85-86, 91-92, 202-240.

The RPA "prohibits sellers from discriminating on price in the sale of like goods, and thereby reducing competition, unless the price differential can be justified by savings to the seller." Gorlick Distribution Centers, LLC v. Car Sound Exhaust Sys., Inc., 723 F.3d 1019, 1021 (9th Cir. 2013). The RPA contains a counterpart provision that makes it unlawful for buyers "knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section." Id. (quoting 15 U.S.C § 13(f)). A buyer can only be liable under the RPA were "the seller is in violation of the Act as well." Klamath-Lake Pharm. Ass'n v. Klamath Med. Serv. Bureau, 701 F.2d 1276, 1283 (9th Cir. 1983); accord Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. F.T.C., 440 U.S. 69, 77, 99 S. Ct. 925, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1979) ("[B]uyer liability under § 13(f) is dependent on seller liability [*20] under § 13(a)."). Thus, Nicolosi must allege a violation of the RPA by Axalta under Section 13(a) by pleading the following four elements: "(1) the relevant sales were made in interstate commerce; (2) the products sold were of the same grade and quality; (3) that [the seller] discriminated in price as between [the plaintiff] and another purchaser; and (4) the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition." *High Tek USA, Inc. v. Heat & Control, Inc., No. 12-CV-00805 YGR, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100538, 2012 WL 2979051, at 4 (N.D. Cal. July 18, 2012) (citing Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 556, 110 S. Ct. 2535, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1990)). Moreover, to be liable for the seller's price discrimination, the buyer (FinishMaster) must know "both that (1) [it] was receiving a lower price than a competitor and (2) the seller would have 'little likelihood of a defense' for offering that price." Gorlick, 723 F.3d at 1022. Nicolosi fails to plausibly allege several of these elements.

First, Nicolosi has not plausibly alleged that Axalta discriminated in price as between Nicolosi and FinishMaster. In fact, Nicolosi's FAC alleges in several places that Nicolosi receives the same discounts as FinishMaster and that this equality is pursuant to Axalta policy. See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 85-86, 91-92. Though elsewhere Nicolosi alleges it was never offered the $10 million discount, FAC ¶¶ 217, 229, these allegations [*21] are contradicted by the FAC's other allegations. Without some additional evidence of discrimination, use of a volume discount does not plausibly imply price discrimination where there may be a legitimate reason that the seller is using such a discount. See Automatic Canteen Co. of Am. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 71, 73 S. Ct. 1017, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 49 F.T.C. 1763 (1953). Nicolosi also fails to allege that there was price discrimination between "two completed, substantially contemporaneous sales by the same seller." Design & Office Concepts, Inc. v. Haworth, Inc., No. C-94-20905 PVT, 1995 WL 325986, at *1 (N.D. Cal. May 25, 1995). As to the 10% discount, the FAC is sparse on information regarding when and how Axalta offered the discounts to FinishMaster, and, equally importantly, what discounts it did or did not offer to Nicolosi around the same time for the same goods. As to the up-front rebates, the FAC is similarly deficient and does not clearly allege what up-front rebate help Axalta was or was not offering to Nicolosi when it was allegedly offering such help to FinishMaster. Moreover, Nicolosi has failed to demonstrate how such up-front rebates are tied to the sale of "tangible goods" to FinishMaster, considering the up-front rebates are offered to body shops (not distributors) and the rebate sharing is not otherwise allegedly related to FinishMaster's [*22] purchase of paint from Axalta. See May Dep't Store v. Graphic Process Co., 637 F.2d 1211, 1214 (9th Cir. 1980). All of these deficiencies also make Nicolosi's allegations that it suffered injury because of such price discrimination implausible.

Second, Nicolosi has not plausibly alleged that FinishMaster knew that Axalta was engaging in any alleged price discrimination. Nicolosi's allegations of knowledge are largely conclusory. At most, Nicolosi factually alleges that FinishMaster knew that Axalta would go to it instead of other distributors to get quick $10 million revenues and that FinishMaster has bought up everyone big enough to make a similar $10 million order. FAC ¶¶ 206, 207, 209, 226. But such facts do not support a plausible inference that FinishMaster knew that Axalta was not offering such discounts to other distributors contemporaneously or would not offer such discounts to other distributors should they be able to qualify. Indeed, Nicolosi indicates it may have been able to qualify, but it itself does not know if Axalta would offer it the discount on certain payment terms. FAC ¶ 208. Without more facts about the price discrimination itself, and how FinishMaster would have known it was anything other than a lawful volume discount, the Court cannot [*23] plausibly infer that FinishMaster knowingly received or induced any alleged discriminatory prices. Cf. Gorlick, 723 F.3d at 1021 (affirming grant of summary judgment because there was no evidence that the superior prices and discounts "resulted from anything other than the significant differences in how the two companies did business").

Because Nicolosi may be able to cure these deficiencies, and because Nicolosi has not previously had an opportunity to amend on this claim, claim 5 is DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

C. Claim 6: Secret Rebates, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045

Nicolosi next claims that Axalta's $10 million discount and rebate-sharing constitutes a secret rebate under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045. Section 17045 states that "[t]he secret payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions, or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, or secretly extending to certain purchasers special services or privileges not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions, to the injury of a competitor and where such payment or allowance tends to destroy competition, is unlawful." A claim under Section 17045 has three elements: "(1) there must be a secret allowance of an unearned discount; (2) there must be injury to a competitor; and (3) the allowance [*24] must tend to destroy competition." *PHL Variable Ins. Co. v. Crescent Fin. & Ins. Agency, Inc., No. 16-CV-01307-CAS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52210, 2018 WL 1577709, at 5 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 26, 2018) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

This claim fails for many of the same reasons as Nicolosi's RPA claim fails. Because Nicolosi's allegations are internally inconsistent with respect to whether it received similar discounts as FinishMaster, these facts bely the argument that the $10 million discount was secret. Nicolosi also does not adequately allege that these discounts were "unearned," including by distinguishing the discount and the up-front rebates from lawful volume discounts. And as with its RPA claim, Nicolosi does not allege that these discounts were "not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions" because it does not allege any contemporaneous purchase by Nicolosi for a different price. But see Packaging Sys., Inc. v. PRC-Desoto Int'l, Inc., 268 F. Supp. 3d 1071, 1087 (C.D. Cal. 2017) (holding that a court can plausibly infer a tendency to destroy competition from allegations of discriminatory pricing).

Because Nicolosi may be able to cure these deficiencies, and because Nicolosi has not previously had an opportunity to amend on this claim, claim 6 is DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

D. Claims 7 & 8: Tying under Sherman Act Section 1 and Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16727

Finally, Nicolosi alleges that FinishMaster has unlawfully tied [*25] the sale of paint to the sale of related automotive products. At the hearing, Nicolosi's counsel confirmed that the only evidence Nicolosi has of this tying is that FinishMaster's exclusive dealing agreement with the body shops says that the body shops will purchase all of their paint and supplies from FinishMaster. See FAC ¶ 272. The contract does not say that FinishMaster required the body shops to purchase the supplies in order to purchase the paint. But to state a valid tying claim, Nicolosi must plausibly allege that FinishMaster "condition[ed] the sale of one product (the tying product) on the buyer's purchase of a second product (the tied product)." Aerotec Int'l, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171, 1178 (9th Cir. 2016) (citation omitted). A tie only exists where "the defendant improperly imposes conditions that explicitly or practically require buyers to take the second product if they want the first one." Id. (quoting 10 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1752b (3d ed. 2011)). "Even when a defendant sells two distinct products and its customers buy them both, we must still ask whether the two products were tied together." Areeda & Hovenkamp, Fundamentals of Antitrust Law § 17.11B at 17-132 (4th ed. 2018). The contract alone does not [*26] raise any plausible inference that the shops had to buy the supplies in order to also buy the paint from FinishMaster. Because Nicolosi does not, and admittedly cannot, allege that FinishMaster conditioned the body shops' purchase of paint on their purchase of supplies, Nicolosi's tying claims fail as a matter of law.

As such, Nicolosi's claims 7 and 8 are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

E. Personal Jurisdiction Over Uni-Select

Nicolosi has also failed to plausibly allege that the Court has personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select. Nicolosi does not challenge the Court's ruling that Uni-Select is not subject to general jurisdiction here. MTD Order. at 9-10. As to specific jurisdiction, the FAC still asserts personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select based on its status as FinishMaster's parent company, its provision of funds to FinishMaster to fund up-front rebates to body shops, and its alleged involvement in FinishMaster's business strategy of purchasing smaller distributors and offering up-front rebates. See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 8, 31, 32, 78, 141. And Nicolosi again relies on the same evidence submitted in support of its opposition to Defendants' original motion to dismiss, including Uni-Select's annual reports, FinishMaster's [*27] press releases, excerpts from depositions of various individuals, and exemplar contracts. See Opp. at 23 (citing Franck Decl., Exhs. A-O, ECF 28-3). However, Nicolosi does not point to any specific information in this evidence that would bolster its personal jurisdiction argument. See Opp. 23-25 (citing evidence as a whole).

These three bases fail to establish personal jurisdiction. As the Court noted in its MTD Order, Uni-Select's role as a parent corporation is insufficient without allegations or evidence that Uni-Select has pervasive control over FinishMaster. See Ranza v. Nike, Inc., 793 F.3d 1059, 1070-71 (9th Cir. 2015); see also Holland Am. Line Inc. v. Wartsila N. Am., Inc., 485 F.3d 450, 459 (9th Cir. 2007). Likewise, Nicolosi still does not allege or provide evidence to show that provision of funds to FinishMaster by Uni-Select was "purposefully direct[ed]" at California, or FinishMaster's exclusive agreements therein. See Williams v. Yamaha Motor Co., 851 F.3d 1015, 1023 (9th Cir. 2017). Nicolosi, who bears the burden of demonstrating personal jurisdiction, does not cite to a single case in which a parent corporation's mere funding of a subsidiary corporation or aiding in corporate strategy was sufficient to establish minimum contacts with the forum state. Thus, these alleged facts and the accompanying evidence are insufficient to establish personal jurisdiction over Uni-Select. Because [*28] Nicolosi has had the opportunity to amend on this point before, further amendment would be futile.

As such, all claims against Uni-Select are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE for lack of personal jurisdiction. Plaintiff may refile its claims against Uni-Select in a proper forum.

IV. ORDER

For the foregoing reasons and those stated on the record at the hearing, Defendants' motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim and for lack of personal jurisdiction as to Defendant Uni-Select is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND IN PART AND WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND IN PART as follows:

1. Claims 1-4 are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.
2. Claims 5 and 6 are DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.
3. Claims 7 and 8 are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.
4. All claims against Uni-Select are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE to Uni-Select's refiling them in a proper forum.

Nicolosi's second amended complaint is due on or before May 13, 2019. Plaintiff may not add parties or claims without leave of the Court.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reviews the district court's grant of defendants' motion for summary judgment de novo, and applies the same criteria employed by the district court. Summary judgment is proper only when it appears that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. On summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts contained in the affidavits, depositions, and exhibits of record must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Credibility determinations have no place in summary judgment proceedings because non-movants' summary judgment evidence must be taken as true. Moreover, when state of mind is an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim, it is less fashionable to grant summary judgment because a party's state of mind is inherently a question of fact which turns on credibility.

Louisiana's public bribery statute, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 14:118, defines public bribery as the giving or offering to give, directly or indirectly, anything of apparent present or prospective value to any public official, with the intent to influence his conduct in relation to his position, employment, or duty. Louisiana courts interpreting this statute have found that the defendant must have "specific intent" to commit the crime of bribery. The inquiry under the Louisiana statute, then, is whether the gift is made with the intent to influence the conduct of the public servant in relation to his position, employment, or duty. Specific intent to bribe may be determined from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case.

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) creates a private civil action to be brought by any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962, which contains RICO's criminal provision, makes it unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity. Conspiracy to violate § 1962 is also unlawful. And bribery is a predicate offense and enumerated as a "racketeering activity" under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(1). The U.S. Supreme Court requires plaintiffs to establish both but for cause and proximate cause in order to show injury by reason of' a RICO violation. Proximate cause should be evaluated in light of its common-law foundations and requires some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. When a court evaluates a RICO claim for proximate cause, the central question it must ask is whether the alleged violation led directly to the plaintiff's injuries.

[*961] W. EUGENE DAVIS, Circuit Judge:

This appeal challenges the district court's order granting partial summary judgment in favor of Defendants River Birch, Inc., Albert Ward, Frederick Heebe and Highway [2] 90, L.L.C (hereinafter sometimes collectively referred as "River Birch"). Plaintiff Waste Management alleged that Defendants bribed former New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin to shut down a landfill opened in the city in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. Plaintiff was the operator of the shuttered landfill, and Defendants owned and operated competing landfills. Plaintiff alleged that the closure of its Chef Menteur landfill caused it to lose business that accrued to the benefit of its competitor, the River Birch landfill. On summary judgment, the district court concluded that the Rule 56 evidence presented no jury question regarding the essential causation element to Plaintiff's civil action under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) and (d). Specifically, the district court, without considering whether Defendants' $20,000 campaign contribution was a bribe, held that the summary judgment evidence failed to create a genuine issue of material fact to allow a jury to find that this payment was the but for and proximate cause of Nagin's decision to shut down Plaintiff's landfill at Chef Menteur Highway.

Upon careful review of the summary judgment record, however, we disagree. [3] We are persuaded that the evidence, which is primarily circumstantial in nature, is sufficient for a jury to make positive findings on both Plaintiff's claim that the $20,000 payment to Nagin was a bribe and that the bribe was causally related to Nagin's action in shuttering the Chef Menteur landfill. We therefore vacate the district court's judgment and remand this case for further proceedings.

I. Background

In August 2005, after the passage of Hurricane Katrina, which devastated large portions of New Orleans, there was an urgent need for additional landfill capacity in which to deposit the extensive waste. Given the scope of the damage, Mayor Ray Nagin[1] declared a state of emergency on August 31, 2005 and renewed that emergency declaration fifteen times. The final renewal was issued on November 3, 2006, and it expired thirty days later.

In November 2005, Waste Management submitted a proposal to open a landfill on [*962] Chef Menteur Highway in New Orleans East. Although authorization for such a landfill would ordinarily require a conditional use permit from the New Orleans City Council, Mayor Nagin believed that the city had an immediate need for additional landfill capacity. On February [4] 9, 2006, Nagin, pursuant to his emergency declaration, issued Executive Order CRN 06-03 to suspend provisions of the comprehensive zoning ordinance for six months to authorize the construction and operation of a landfill at the Chef Menteur location. The City of New Orleans then entered into a written agreement with Waste Management to open the landfill; this agreement, however, did not mention an end date. On February 14, 2006, Nagin submitted an emergency disaster cleanup site request for approval to the Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality ("LDEQ") to open the landfill at Chef Menteur for "the duration of the Hurricane Katrina disaster cleanup efforts, at this time estimated to be 12 months." It is uncontested that Nagin had authority to extend the six-month suspension of the zoning ordinance at least until his emergency powers expired on December 3, 2006.

Mayor Nagin's order authorizing the landfill was not well-received by residents of New Orleans East or by the City Council. On April 6, 2006, the City Council passed a resolution condemning Nagin's February 9 executive order based on community opposition to the Chef Menteur landfill.

Around this time, Mayor Nagin was engaged [5] in a hotly contested campaign for re-election. A runoff was scheduled for May 20, 2006. Two weeks before the runoff election, Mayor Nagin called Defendant Ward and asked for a campaign contribution. Ward discussed this request with Heebe, and they decided to make a $20,000 contribution through four shell corporations established by Defendants—each donating $5,000.[2] The contribution was made on May 16, 2006. According to Nagin, however, he did not remember the conversation with Ward and was not aware of the contribution. Nagin was subsequently re-elected mayor.

[1] Nagin was the Mayor of the City of New Orleans from May 2002 to May 2010. In 2013, a federal grand jury returned a 21-count indictment against Nagin, charging him with one count of conspiracy to commit honest-services wire fraud and bribery; six counts of bribery; nine counts of honest-services wire fraud; one count of conspiracy to commit money laundering; and four counts of filing false tax returns. After trial, the jury returned guilty verdicts on all counts of the indictment, except for one count of bribery. The district court sentenced Nagin to ten years in prison. See United States v. Nagin, 810 F.3d 348 (5th Cir. 2016).

[2] Under Louisiana election law, donating to campaigns "through or in the name of another, directly or indirectly" is illegal. LA. R.S. § 18:1505.2(A)(1). Moreover, the campaign contribution limit per individual in this election was $5,000. See id. § 18:1505.2.

On July 13, 2006, Nagin announced in a court affidavit—in a lawsuit secretly financed by Defendants—that he would not extend his February 9 executive order authorizing the Chef Menteur landfill and would allow it to expire on August 14, 2006. On August 14, the City sent a cease and desist letter to Waste Management, ordering the closure of the landfill.

II. Procedural History

Waste Management filed the instant RICO action in September 2011. In its first amended complaint, Plaintiff alleged that Defendants bribed Henry Mouton,[3] a former commissioner for the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, to influence Nagin to [6] shut down the Chef Menteur landfill. The district court dismissed the claims without prejudice because [*963] the amended complaint did not allege how Mouton's conduct was the but for and proximate cause of Nagin's decision.

Waste Management next filed a second amended complaint, alleging that (1) Mouton's lobbying and (2) Defendants' campaign contribution to Nagin led to the landfill's closure. On March 27, 2015, the district court dismissed the action insofar as the alleged bribery of Mouton was concerned. But the court did not dismiss the claims based on allegations concerning the $20,000 campaign contribution to Nagin.

In its third amended complaint, Waste Management included all of the factual allegations regarding the Defendants' conduct with respect to both Mouton and Nagin. Defendants filed another motion to dismiss and a motion to strike the allegation relating to Mouton's role in the scheme to shut down the landfill. The district court denied their motions. Over a year of discovery then followed, including depositions of Mouton and Nagin.

After discovery, Defendants moved for partial summary judgment, arguing that Plaintiff failed to establish that the campaign contribution to [7] Nagin constituted bribery. Defendants further argued that, even if it was bribery, it was not the but for and proximate cause of Nagin's decision to close down the Chef Menteur landfill. The district court agreed and dismissed Plaintiff's RICO claims, stating that "the circumstantial evidence on which Waste Management relies is far too speculative and conclusory to permit a reasonable trier of fact to find the requisite causal connection." We now consider the issues presented in this appeal below.

III. Rule 12(b)(6) Dismissal as Related to Henry Mouton

A. Standard of Review

Before examining the summary judgment evidence, we briefly address Waste Management's appeal of the district court's March 27, 2015 order granting Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) motion, which dismissed Plaintiff's suit "insofar as those claims are predicated on Defendants' alleged bribery of Mouton." HN1[] We review the district court's grant of a motion to dismiss de novo.[4] Dismissal is appropriate when the plaintiff has failed to allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face."[5]

[3] On February 25, 2011, Mouton was charged with one count of conspiracy to receive illegal payoffs by an agent of a program receiving federal funds, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371; three counts of receipt of illegal payoffs by an agent of a program receiving federal funds, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 666(a)(1)(B); and four counts of making false statements to federal agents, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2). On June 1, 2011, Mouton pled guilty to conspiracy to receive illegal payoffs, pursuant to a plea agreement with the Government. See *United States v. Mouton, No. 11-CR-48, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79070, 2013 WL 2455934, at 1-2 (E.D. La. June 5, 2013).

B. Analysis

Here, Plaintiff's second amended complaint alleges that Mouton—who pled guilty to accepting bribes from Defendants for attempting to [8] close down other landfills—was also bribed by Defendants to assist in persuading Nagin to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill. According to Plaintiff, this scheme was "part of a well-orchestrated campaign to unlawfully and unfairly influence the approval, permitting, and operations of the River Birch Defendants' landfill competitors." Based on the pleadings, we find that the second amended complaint alleged a plausible claim of Mouton's involvement in the instant case. The allegations, if true, warrant relief under RICO.[6] We therefore vacate the district court's Rule 12(b)(6) ruling insofar as it precludes consideration of Defendants' alleged bribery of Mouton and his efforts to [*964] further Defendants' alleged scheme to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill.

IV. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

On appeal, Defendants argue that Plaintiff failed to put forth competent evidence that their $20,000 campaign contribution to Nagin's re-election campaign was a bribe under Louisiana law, and even if it was a bribe, it did not cause Nagin to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill.

A. Standard of Review

We consider the district court's grant of Defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing Plaintiff's RICO claims against Defendants. HN2[] We [9] review this de novo,[7] and we apply the same criteria employed by the district court.[8] "Summary judgment is proper only when it appears that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law."[9] "On summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts contained in the affidavits, depositions, and exhibits of record must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion."[10] "Credibility determinations have no place in summary judgment proceedings" because "non-movants' summary judgment evidence must be taken as true."[11] Moreover,

B. Analysis

We turn first to Plaintiff's argument that the $20,000 contribution by Defendants to Nagin was a bribe and a "predicate act" under RICO. HN3[] An act of "racketeering activity," commonly referred as a "predicate act,"[13] includes "any act or threat involving . . . bribery . . . which is chargeable under State law and punishable by imprisonment [10] for more than a year."[14]

We look to Louisiana law for the definition of a bribe. HN4[] Louisiana's public bribery statute, Revised Statute § 14:118, defines public bribery as "the giving or offering to give, directly or indirectly, anything of apparent present or prospective value to any [public official], with the intent to influence his conduct in relation to his position, employment, or duty."[15] Louisiana courts interpreting this statute have found that the defendant must have "specific intent" to commit the crime of bribery.[16] "The inquiry under the Louisiana [*965] statute, then, is whether the gift is made . . . with the intent to influence the conduct of the public servant in relation to his position, employment, or duty."[17] Specific intent to bribe may be determined from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case.[18]

HN5[] RICO creates a private civil action to be brought by "[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter . . . ."[19] Section 1962, which contains RICO's criminal provision, makes it "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate . . . [11] commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity."[20] Conspiracy to violate section 1962 is also unlawful.[21] And relevant here, bribery is a predicate offense and enumerated as a "racketeering activity" under 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1).

Under this causation standard, the resolution [12] of this appeal requires us to examine, in detail, the summary judgment evidence to determine whether that evidence, along with the inferences that a jury could draw from that evidence, would create a fact question on these issues.HN6[] A plaintiff need not rely on direct evidence; causation can be proven with circumstantial evidence.[27]

[*966] 1. The Evidence Relied Upon by Defendants in Support of Summary Judgment.

River Birch argues first that no evidence supports Waste Management's theory that the $20,000 campaign contribution it made through related shell corporations was intended as a bribe—that is, to intentionally influence Mayor Nagin to shut down the Chef Menteur landfill. River Birch points to the lack of evidence of a quid pro quo agreement between Defendants and Mayor Nagin or indeed that Defendants asked Nagin to do anything for them.

Moreover, Defendants emphasize that it is neither illegal nor unusual for them to make a campaign contribution because they rely on the goodwill of political entities in large part for their business. They also assert that they must make campaign contributions to level the playing field and to give them access to political decision-makers. Defendants also [13] point out that no evidence was produced of any conversation or other communication between them and Nagin around the time of the alleged bribe.

2. The Evidence Relied Upon by Plaintiff in Opposition to Summary Judgment.

Waste Management argues that a jury could reasonably conclude from circumstantial evidence that the $20,000 contribution by River Birch's shell corporations to Nagin was a bribe. Plaintiff bases its argument on the circumstances surrounding Defendants' alleged bribery of Mouton and other circumstances around the payment to Nagin. Moreover, Plaintiff points out that the district court failed to address evidence on Mouton in its summary judgment opinion.

Mouton was a former commissioner for the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries. Waste Management argues that Mouton played a large role in Defendants' underlying scheme to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill. In 2011, Mouton pled guilty to violating 18 U.S.C. § 371, admitting that he received bribes for using his official position to assist Defendants by influencing public officials to help Defendants shutter landfill competitors. Relevant here, Mouton's factual basis supporting his guilty plea provides:

> Shortly after [14] Hurricane Katrina made landfall in August of 2005, Co-conspirator "A" and other Co-conspirators recognized the potential to obtain millions of dollars in revenue for the collection and disposal of storm debris from storm ravaged areas. . . . Co-conspirator "A" conspired with Mouton to shutter the competition. The plan was to eliminate the competition and increase the revenue of Co-conspirator "A" by increasing the amount of storm debris deposited in the landfills owned by Co-conspirator "A."

Mouton confirmed at his deposition in this case that Co-conspirator "A" was Defendant Heebe and that the Chef Menteur landfill was one of the landfills that was targeted as part of the scheme he had with Heebe. Moreover, as part of the campaign of Defendants to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill, Mouton testified that Heebe and Ward, or their attorneys, wrote or assisted in drafting a letter for Mouton to send to the Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality, as well as federal agencies, urging the closure of the Chef Menteur landfill for alleged environmental reasons.[28] Mouton, presumably for the benefit [*967] of Defendants, also sent copies of the letter to the City of New Orleans.

Under Rule 56, we construe [15] Waste Management's summary judgment evidence as true;[29] this includes statements made in Mouton's factual basis and deposition. Defendants and Mouton knew that Nagin was the critical decision-maker who had authority to either extend or decline to extend the temporary order allowing the Chef Menteur landfill to continue operations. A jury could therefore conclude that Mouton's communication of allegedly false environmental concerns about the landfill to state and federal agencies was designed to have these government agencies influence Nagin to shut down the landfill. Because Mouton's action in this respect could be seen as part of the overall plan to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill, evidence of Defendants' conduct in bribing Mouton to participate is intrinsic to this case.

In United States v. Rice, we explained that HN7[] evidence that is intrinsic to the case is not limited by Federal Rule of Evidence 404(b),[30] such that "other act" evidence may be used to show that the actor acted similarly in the case before the court.[31] We stated that "'other act' evidence is 'intrinsic' when the evidence of the other act and the evidence of the crime charged are 'inextricably intertwined' or both acts are part of a 'single criminal episode' [16] or the other acts were 'necessary preliminaries' to the crime charged."[32] Moreover, "[i]ntrinsic evidence is admissible to 'complete the story of the crime by proving the immediate context of events in time and place,' and to [28] On April 6, 2006, Mouton sent this letter and notice of intention to file a citizen's suit regarding the Chef Menteur landfill, alleging violations of the Clean Water Act, 33 U.S.C. § 1251 et seq. This letter was addressed to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and forwarded to, among others, the Regional Administrator of the EPA, the U.S. Attorney General, the Louisiana Attorney General, Secretary of LDEQ, U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Louisiana, and Criminal Division of the Internal Revenue Service.

'evaluate all of the circumstances under which the defendant acted.'"[33] We explained that "[i]ntrinsic evidence does not implicate [R]ule 404(b), and 'consideration of its admissibility pursuant to [that rule] is unnecessary.'"[34]

Although Rice is a criminal case, the same rationale applies in the civil context.[35] This is particularly true here, where the elements in the criminal-RICO context overlap with the elements of a civil-RICO case.[36] So, in this case, based on Mouton's testimony that there was a scheme to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill, the evidence suggesting Defendants' intent to bribe Mouton can be considered by the jury in determining Defendants' motive and intent [*968] in connection with their contribution to Nagin's campaign.[37]

Waste Management also points to the additional fact that these contributions in the amount of $5,000 each were made not in Defendants' names, but rather by four shell corporations owned by Defendants. [17] The parties do not dispute that River Birch, Heebe and Ward funded these contributions. And these contributions, in fact, violated Louisiana law, which prohibits a party from making political contributions in the names of others.[38] Plaintiff argues that Defendants' attempt to conceal the true source of the contributions raises an inference that their contributions were intended to cover up evidence of wrongdoing. Moreover, one of the shell corporations that made a $5,000 campaign donation to Nagin—Westside Construction Services—was the same entity Heebe used to pay Mouton.

Mouton also assisted Defendants in other ways to achieve the scheme's objective. On April 6, 2006, at Defendants' request, Mouton threatened the City with a lawsuit seeking an injunction to close the Chef Menteur landfill for environmental reasons. Mouton did not follow through with this threat, but Defendants recruited certain plaintiffs who resided in the area of the landfill and, again using the shell corporation Westside Construction Services, financed a lawsuit against the City seeking closure of the landfill. All along, Defendants remained in the background and concealed their role in the litigation.

Moreover, [18] Waste Management points out that Mayor Nagin was convicted of public bribery in a totally different scheme in 2013,[39] which would serve as strong impeachment material to undermine all of Nagin's testimony, including his denial that he was paid by Defendants to close the landfill.

Plaintiff also points to the timing of Defendants' $20,000 payment to Nagin, on the eve of the expiration of the emergency order, as support for Plaintiff's position that the payment was to influence Nagin to close the landfill. Plaintiff considers it relevant that when Heebe and Ward became concerned that Nagin may not have been fully aware of their $20,000 contribution, Ward sent a letter, delivered to Nagin's campaign by Ward's chauffeur, just three days before the expiration of the emergency order reminding Nagin of the campaign payment and Defendants' earlier support of him.

HN9[] It is rare in public bribery cases that there is definitive "smoking gun" evidence to show a payment was made to an official to influence the official to perform some act—and there is no such evidence here.[40] It is critical in cases such as this that inferences from circumstantial evidence about intent and motives about which reasonable [19] minds could differ be sorted out by the jury.[41]

[*969] b. Causation

Defendants argue next that even if the question of whether their $20,000 payment was a bribe must go to the jury, they are still entitled to summary judgment because there is no evidence that the payment proximately caused Mayor Nagin to close the landfill. Defendants' principal argument—that the evidence does not support any causal connection between Defendants' $20,000 payment and Nagin's ultimate decision to shut down the Chef Menteur landfill—rests on the executive order itself and Nagin's deposition testimony. The executive order authorized the Chef Menteur landfill to operate for six months from the date it was signed on February 9, 2006. Nagin testified that when he signed the executive order, he never intended to extend it or to allow the landfill to remain open after that date.

But a jury could reasonably find otherwise. As indicated above, Mayor Nagin's felony conviction for public bribery in a different scheme provides abundant fodder for impeaching his testimony. It is also obvious that Nagin had an interest in avoiding further criminal or civil jeopardy for participating in another bribery scheme. Moreover, [20] a jury could infer that Nagin's acceptance of bribes, while holding public office, was a part of his "pattern of conduct" or "modus operandi."

There was also other evidence tending to undermine Mayor Nagin's testimony that he never intended to authorize the landfill to operate past August 2006, when the emergency order was set to expire. This is reflected by the request signed by Nagin, which was submitted to LDEQ (five days after Nagin signed the emergency order) seeking approval of the City's plan to open the Chef Menteur landfill "for the duration of the Katrina cleanup."

Also, Mayor Nagin, in an apparent effort to quash environmental concerns of his constituents who lived in the area of the landfill, announced on June 30, 2006, the favorable results of environmental testing. Nagin then announced two weeks later, on July 13, 2006, his decision to shutter the landfill. This tends to support Waste Management's argument that Nagin suddenly reversed his position about extending authorization to leave the landfill open. In other words, a jury could question why Nagin made the positive announcement on June 30, 2006, unless he planned to allow the landfill to remain open.

In addition to Waste [21] Management's surprise about the closing of the landfill in August, federal and state officials also testified that they were taken aback at the abrupt closure of the landfill. In particular, Dr. Chuck Carr Brown, who oversaw the Katrina debris cleanup at LDEQ, testified by deposition that he understood the City had planned to keep the Chef Menteur landfill open as long as LDEQ needed it for the disaster cleanup. Dr. Brown was surprised and confused when he learned of the Mayor's decision not to extend the authorization of the Chef Menteur landfill, particularly given the Mayor's recent announcement of the environmental testing of the landfill. Dr. Brown immediately sought a clarification from the City as to why it had changed its position, and he sought to explain the dire need for the landfill and the adverse consequences from its closing. The apparent sudden reversal of Nagin's position on whether to close the landfill, which was contrary to the understanding held by the environmental agencies, supports the inference that Mayor Nagin's original intention was for the Chef Menteur landfill to operate for the duration of the Katrina cleanup.

Even though Defendants argue that the City [22] Council had exclusive regulatory authority over zoning, Nagin could have renewed his executive order while his general [*970] emergency declaration was in effect,[42] which would have allowed the Chef Menteur landfill to continue operations without a conditional use permit.

In summary, Mayor Nagin in February 2006 signed the executive order, the agreement with Waste Management, and the LDEQ form seeking approval to open and maintain the Chef Menteur landfill until the Katrina cleanup was complete. Nagin was re-elected on May 20, 2006, with the Chef Menteur landfill operating and no indication that he would no longer support it. After extensive environmental testing with LDEQ confirmed that there were no environmental hazards at the Chef Menteur landfill, on June 30, 2006, Nagin publicly announced those results, stating the test results "should ease the concerns of the citizens." Then, on July 10, 2006, Ward wrote to remind Nagin's associates of Defendants' large financial contributions ($20,000 in 2006 and $40,000 in 2005) that Defendants had made "on a direct basis with Mayor Nagin." Only three days later, by affidavit filed in a litigation secretly financed by Defendant River Birch, Nagin [23] announced that he would not renew the executive order. This chain of events, if accepted by the jury, supports the inference that Defendants' bribery of Mayor Nagin influenced his actions in refusing to extend the executive order. A reasonable jury could also infer causation from Mayor Nagin's disregard of the evidence that the Chef Menteur landfill was safe and badly needed in the City's disaster cleanup. Accordingly, we hold that Plaintiff has provided sufficient evidence to survive a summary judgment challenge in this case.

The dissent is correct that this case is a close call. Evidence here—along with the reasonable inferences drawn from this evidence—could reasonably show either political pressure or pay-to-play bribes that motivated Nagin to shutter the Chef Menteur landfill. But the dissent is wrong to suggest that Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp.[43] alters the summary judgment standard in this RICO case to preclude the jury from evaluating this evidence and deciding what inferences to draw from the evidence it accepts.

We begin with a recap. Matsushita was an antitrust case that challenged Japanese television manufacturers' lowering of prices as anti-competitive. [24] [44] The Supreme Court held that "a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 [of the Sherman Act] must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently."[45] The Court found that the plaintiffs' substantive claim of conspiracy to engage in predatory pricing made no economic sense because such a scheme was risky and self-deterring as it was too costly to the conspirators.[46] The Court held that the general summary judgment rule applied: "[I]nferences to be drawn from the underlying facts . . . must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the [summary judgment] motion."[47] And the Court recognized that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case."[48] So considered altogether, in this antitrust context, the Court concluded that if a plaintiff relies on circumstantial [*971] evidence of an agreement rather than express acts, and if the claim against a defendant appears implausible, a plaintiff has an additional evidentiary burden to survive a summary judgment attack:

> [T]he absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a 'genuine issue [25] for trial' exists within the meaning of Rule 56(e). Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy.[49]

Put differently, if it appears that a defendant lacks a plausible motive for engaging in anticompetitive conduct, in order to survive summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff must present evidence that "show[s] that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [plaintiffs]."[50] Matsushita confines courts from drawing inferences in antitrust cases that are at odds with economic theory (specifically, predatory pricing).[51]

The Matsushita Court's antitrust lesson on summary judgment is not applicable here.[52] The dissent falls into error by extending it to our civil-RICO case. Using circumstantial evidence to conclude that a [*972] bribe occurred is [51] Matsushita built upon Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) by holding that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. "The Court's rationale for awarding summary judgment to the defendants in Matsushita, then, turned to a large extent on its rejection of a substantive theory of antitrust law—implausible theories of predatory pricing were now disfavored as a matter of substantive law." EDWARD J. BRUNET ET AL., SUMMARY JUDGMENT: FEDERAL LAW AND PRACTICE § 9.5, at p. 423 (2019).

[52] The summary judgment standard, as applied in Matsushita, was predicated on substantive antitrust law. As Professor Brunet states:

> Standing on its own, however, apart from the [1986 summary-judgment] trilogy, Matsushita functions best as a model for antitrust summary judgment. The Court's discussion on the summary judgment process repeatedly refers to substantive antitrust doctrine. For example, the Court's statement that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 [Sherman Act] case" was a response to the plaintiffs' contention that all inferences "must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the [summary judgment] motion." Moreover, the Supreme Court framed the burden placed on the nonmovant in a specific antitrust factual context.

Id. at 425 (citations omitted).

Other scholars share a similar characterization of the Matsushita opinion. See, e.g., JAMES WM. MOORE ET AL., 11 Moore's Federal Practice § 56.22[2][c] (3d ed. 2018). Specifically, they recognize:

> The [Supreme] Court found the plaintiff's theory of a long-running predatory pricing scheme implausible because it would require defendants to incur substantial losses jointly for years without an intervening opportunity to recoup monopoly profits.
> The Supreme Court then incorporated the substantive evidentiary standard applicable in [27] antitrust cases into its analysis, noting that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 [of the Sherman Act] case." Under substantive antitrust law, conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Therefore, to survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiffs had to present evidence that tended to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

not at odds with economic [26] theory. Both Nagin and River Birch allegedly sought monetary gains; Waste Management's argument does not defy settled economic principles.[53]

The dissent, without citation, insists that "[i]n RICO conspiracies, like antitrust ones, the plaintiff has an affirmative obligation to negate other innocent explanations for the defendants' conduct." The dissent goes further: "To carry [plaintiff's] burden, Waste Management must produce evidence that 'tends to exclude the possibility' Mayor Nagin was motivated by politics rather than bribes." We have not imposed such a heightened burden on a RICO plaintiff.[54] Rather, we have maintained, [28] and our precedent holds, that HN10[] a RICO plaintiff:

> does not need to disprove [a defendant's] explanation of the situation in order to survive summary judgment. [A RICO plaintiff] need only present evidence that would permit a reasonable finder of fact to accept his interpretation of the facts. . . . The decision as to whether to believe [plaintiff's or defendant's] explanation of the facts requires the type of credibility determination by the court that is plainly inappropriate on motion for summary judgment.[55]

We have been reminded by the Supreme Court since Matsushita that, on summary judgment, "[t]he evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his [or her] favor."[56] In Tolan v. Cotton, though recognizing [*973] that it "is not equipped to correct every perceived error coming from the lower federal courts," the Supreme Court "intervene[d]" to summarily reverse our Rule 56 dismissal, calling it "a clear misapprehension of summary judgment standards. . . ."[57] We need not repeat this rebuke.

This close case—where the evidence could support a verdict [29] for either side, depending upon the evidence the jury credits and the reasonable inferences drawn from that evidence—is tailor-made for a trial, not summary

Rev. 982, 1044-68 (2003)* (concluding that Matsushita "seems specific to the antitrust context").

[53] It is telling that River Birch has never thought the instant case has anything to do with Matsushita and that case's point about economic rationality. Defendants never raised it. Nagin's and Mouton's history of receiving bribes shows there is nothing economically irrational about that conduct.

[54] The dissent cites a number of cases, see post, at 31 (opinion of OLDHAM, J.), that "apply Matsushita in non-antitrust cases." That's not surprising, considering that Matsushita is one of the most-cited Supreme Court cases. But in non-antitrust context, courts apply Matsushita for its statement of the general Rule 56 standard: "When the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. . . . Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586-87 (citations omitted). The cases cited by the dissent show precisely that.

The dissent argues that Waste Management, in response to a summary judgment motion, has an affirmative duty to negate River Birch's argument that Nagin shuttered the landfill due to political pressure. In taking this position, the dissent refuses to accept the reading of Matsushita by courts, scholars and civil procedure treatise authors who recognize that this part of the Matsushita holding was governed by substantive antitrust law that required the plaintiff to show a plausible economic motive for plaintiff's predatory acts to prevail in that § 1 antitrust case. Application of the dissent's rule, based on an extended reading of Matsushita, on RICO and other civil cases would turn summary judgment on its head.

judgment. A question that "turns on state of mind," that is, Nagin's reasoning for shuttering the Chef Menteur landfill and River Birch's decision to discreetly transfer and donate funds to Nagin through shell corporations, is "often inappropriate for resolution at the summary judgment stage."[58] We hold that the correct disposition of this civil-RICO appeal is to remand it for trial so that a jury can sort out the facts and decide what appropriate inferences should be drawn from those facts.[59]

V. Conclusion

For the above reasons, we are satisfied that the record reflects genuine issues of material fact as to both whether the Defendants' campaign contribution to Nagin was a bribe and whether the payment was the but for and proximate cause of Nagin's decision to close the Chef Menteur landfill. We therefore VACATE the district court's judgment and REMAND for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. We also VACATE the district court's March 27, 2015 order of dismissal insofar as that order bars consideration [30] of evidence related to Mouton.

VACATED AND REMANDED.

Dissent

ANDREW S. OLDHAM, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

"[Bad] facts make bad law." Wyeth v. Levine, 555 U.S. 555, 604, 129 S. Ct. 1187, 173 L. Ed. 2d 51 (2009) (Alito, J., dissenting). Ray Nagin accepted bribes. So did Henry Mouton. But the question is not whether Nagin and Mouton are crooks. The question is whether Waste Management can use civil RICO against a competitor with zero evidence of causation. With greatest respect for my colleagues and their views on this difficult case, I'd say no.

I.

Long ago, we worried that summary judgment could be a "catch penny contrivance to take unwary litigants into its toils and deprive them of a trial." Whitaker v. Coleman, 115 F.2d 305, 307 (5th Cir. 1940). That view was common at the time. In the years following the adoption of Rule 56 in 1938, "the courts [were], if anything, overhesitant [*974] in granting the relief." Charles E. Clark, Summary Judgments—a Proposed Rule of Court, 2 F.R.D. 364, 366 (1943); see also Charles E. Clark & Charles U. Samenow, The Summary Judgment, 38 YALE L.J. 423 (1929) (explaining the need for a summary judgment rule). The hesitancy was rooted in an institutional concern that summary judgment would transgress the sanctity of the jury room. See, e.g., Avrick v. Rockmont Envelope Co., 155 F.2d 568, 571 (10th Cir. 1946) ("The power to pierce the flimsy and transparent factual veil should be temperately and cautiously used lest abuse reap [31] nullification.").

[58] See Krim v. BancTexas Group, Inc., 989 F.2d 1435, 1449 (5th Cir. 1993); Int'l Shortstop, 939 F.2d at 1265.

[59] To the extent the dissent is concerned about chilling First Amendment rights, our decision today does no such thing. We recognize that Supreme Court precedent safeguards political speech. See Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 339-40, 130 S. Ct. 876, 175 L. Ed. 2d 753 (2010). But such protection, afforded by the First Amendment, does not extend to certain illegal activities. See, e.g., McCutcheon v. FEC, 572 U.S. 185, 192, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 188 L. Ed. 2d 468 (2014) (noting First Amendment does not protect quid pro quo corruption). Under Louisiana law, political donations, like the ones by Defendants, cannot be made in disguise and veiled by shell corporations to bypass campaign-contribution limits. The First Amendment is therefore not implicated here. Indeed, the dissent's point about the First Amendment is again one River Birch did not think worth making. And rightly so.

Then came 1986. In a trilogy of summary-judgment opinions, the Supreme Court told us we had it all wrong. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Each was a landmark in its own right. And each held the lower federal courts were unduly penurious in meting out summary judgment.

Take Matsushita, for example. American television manufacturers sued Japanese competitors for predatory pricing. The plaintiffs alleged their Japanese competitors had conspired to drive down prices and put the Americans out of business. The Third Circuit found myriad material factual disputes that precluded summary judgment for the defendants. For example, it highlighted evidence the Japanese companies entered "formal agreements" to fix minimum prices, undercut those agreements through "a variety of rebate schemes," and concealed the rebates from both the American and Japanese governments. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 581. And it was undisputed the Japanese companies entered other price-fixing conspiracies. See id. at 595-96 (conceding "direct evidence" of such). Obviously, in the abstract, one could believe the Japanese conspirators had conspired once again.

Still, the Supreme Court reversed the denial of summary judgment. Two of its reasons apply directly here. First, [32] the Court held the American plaintiffs "must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action." Id. at 588. Put differently, the plaintiffs must present evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility" their competitors acted innocently. Ibid. (quotation omitted). Second, and crucially, the Court held evidence of other conspiracies is insufficient to bridge that gap. Sure, the Court conceded, it's possible the Japanese companies were up to their old conspiratorial tricks. But "their conduct [was also] consistent with other, equally plausible explanations"—including a non-conspiratorial desire to gain market share by driving down prices. Id. at 596-97. That the Japanese companies conspired in the past would not allow a jury to reasonably infer they conspired again.

We've generally heeded the Supreme Court's admonishment. We've recognized that the Celotex-Anderson-Matsushita "trilogy . . . made it clear that our earlier approach to Rule 56 was wrong-headed because it was simply inconsistent with the plain language of the rule." Little v. Liquid Air Corp., 37 F.3d 1069, 1075 (5th Cir. 1994) (en banc) (per curiam) (citations omitted); see also Douglass v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n, 79 F.3d 1415, 1423 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) (noting "the growing judicial recognition of the many benefits [33] of summary judgment"), superseded by statute on other grounds, 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1); Calpetco 1981 v. Marshall Expl., Inc., 989 F.2d 1408, 1415 (5th Cir. 1993) (similar). And we've held "[t]estimony [*975] based on conjecture or speculation is insufficient to raise an issue of fact to defeat a summary judgment motion." Ruiz v. Whirlpool, Inc., 12 F.3d 510, 513 (5th Cir. 1994) (following Anderson). Put differently, "summary judgment is appropriate in any case where critical evidence is so weak or tenuous on an essential fact that it could not support a judgment in favor of the nonmovant." Little, 37 F.3d at 1075 (quotation omitted); accord Anderson News, L.L.C. v. Am. Media, Inc., 899 F.3d 87, 98 (2d Cir. 2018) ("The question is not whether the plaintiff's inferences are so far fetched that a trier of fact should not be allowed to consider them, but whether the evidence, though not far-fetched, sufficed to meet the plaintiff's burden of proof." (alterations and citation omitted)).

II.

This case certainly smells fishy. River Birch made campaign donations to Mayor Nagin, who refused to reauthorize the landfill of River Birch's competitor, Waste Management. But if Matsushita teaches us anything, it's that foul-smelling facts don't preclude summary judgment. We should be especially careful to heed that lesson in civil RICO cases like this one. Before asking a jury to separate official acts motivated by bribery from those motivated by the [34] public interest, we should be quite sure there is some evidence that could satisfy the plaintiff's burden of proof.

A.

The dispute at the heart of this case is why Mayor Nagin refused to reauthorize a landfill. There's an innocent explanation: The landfill was politically unpopular, and Nagin did not want to continue taking political heat for authorizing it. Then there's a sinister explanation: River Birch bribed him.

A straightforward application of Matsushita precludes asking a jury to choose between them. As in Matsushita, it's the plaintiff's burden to connect its injuries to its competitors' alleged conspiracy. To carry that burden, Waste Management must produce evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility" Mayor Nagin was motivated by politics rather than bribes. 475 U.S. at 588 (quotation omitted). Evidence that is "as consistent with" politics as it is with bribes does not suffice because it does nothing to help the jury choose between "competing inferences." Ibid.

The evidence of Nagin's political motivations is undisputed and overwhelming. Waste Management attempts to overcome that evidence in various ways. They make all involved look, well, trashy. But they fail to create a jury question. [35]

Let's start with the undisputed evidence of Nagin's independent motivation to close the landfill. This landfill was wildly unpopular. Everyone hated it. Waste Management's predecessor in interest attempted to open it in the mid-1990s. The New Orleans City Council rejected the effort. Waste Management purchased an option to try again in 2001 and 2002. It too failed.

Then came Hurricane Katrina. That catastrophe made the politically impossible possible—at least temporarily. On February 9, 2006, Mayor Nagin issued an emergency executive order. It allowed Waste Management to open the landfill immediately and secure Council approval for it later. Even in the immediate aftermath of Katrina—when the need for new landfills was patent—the political backlash was swift and vicious.

Before the landfill could open on an emergency basis, the City Council issued a scathing rebuke of the project. In a unanimous resolution, the Council noted "a great majority" of the affected residents voiced "vehement opposition" to the landfill. [*976] New Orleans City Council Resolution R-06-156, at 1 (Apr. 6, 2006). It noted the Mayor had bypassed all "public input" in unilaterally issuing the emergency order. Ibid. It [36] noted the federal government had not determined the levee system surrounding the landfill was "safe." Id. at 1. Moreover, the Mayor had not determined his chosen landfill was the best of the "environmentally sound alternatives." Id. at 2. The Council therefore unanimously and "strongly urge[d]" the Mayor to revoke his order "immediately." Id. at 2. And it again emphasized its resolution was "based upon overwhelming community opposition" to the landfill. Id. at 1.

The political opposition was so strong it was literally national news. See, e.g., Leslie Eaton, A New Landfill in New Orleans Sets Off a Battle, N.Y. TIMES (May 8, 2006). There's not a scintilla of evidence this political fury was fake. This was not some "AstroTurf" campaign financed by the defendants. For example, Councilwoman Cynthia Hedge-Morrell opposed the landfill because it "would harm the environment and lessen the possibility that people would return to New Orleans East." By all accounts, this was genuine grassroots outrage about the prospect of an eighty-foot trash tower in a poor neighborhood populated predominantly by people of color. There is no dispute this outrage gave Nagin ample political motivation not to renew the landfill's emergency authorization. [37]

Nor is there a scintilla of evidence that anyone thought the Mayor's emergency order was anything other than temporary. The order suspended the zoning laws "for a period of six months unless earlier rescinded by [the Mayor] or other operation of law." As an expressly bargained-for condition of the order, Waste Management "stated its plan to file" the same zoning application required of every other landfill operator in New Orleans. The Mayor also expressly bargained for Waste Management's help in creating political support for the landfill through "the appropriate neighborhood meetings." So as things stood on February 9, 2006, Waste Management had up to six months to get its ducks in a row—to open the landfill, sell the plan to affected citizens, win support for it on the City Council, and finish its paperwork. And Waste Management had a maximum of six months to do all that. By its terms, after all, the order could be rescinded at any time.

So how could Waste Management think—but for any intervening bribery—it was in the clear? Well, it didn't. According to its emails, Waste Management knew it had a maximum of six months to complete a task list that had proved impossible for a decade. [38] And it also knew the effort would require heavy political lifting. That's why Waste Management had a "Gov Affairs Strategy Meeting" to discuss both "How do we keep [the landfill] open beyond [the] 6 month order?" and "How do we manage [the situation] politically?"

Waste Management apparently wanted to manage this politically by convincing Mayor Nagin to extend his emergency order—and continue shouldering political blame for the landfill. But there is no evidence Mayor Nagin wanted to continue facing criticism for unilaterally authorizing the landfill. When pressed at its Rule 30(b)(6) deposition to identify anything to suggest it ever convinced the Mayor to be the political fall-guy (again), Waste Management could say only that some unidentified person who may or may not work for some government entity may or may not have "implied" it at some unspecified time in some unspecified way.

Of course, it's possible that—but for the defendants' campaign contributions—Nagin wanted to continue shouldering the political blame for an eight-story garbage [*977] pile in voters' backyards. It's possible Nagin wanted to repeat the decision that earned him a unanimous rebuke from the City Council, scathing coverage in the [39] New York Times, and vehement opposition back home. Anything is possible. But there's no evidence of it. Much less is there evidence the Mayor changed his mind and opposed a politically unpopular landfill because of River Birch's four campaign contributions.[1]

But wait, says Waste Management: These are not ordinary campaign contributions because Nagin took bribes in other instances. Therefore, they say, the jury could find he did so here.

It's true Nagin is in prison for accepting unrelated bribes. It's also legally irrelevant.

In Matsushita, the Third Circuit relied on "direct evidence" the Japanese television makers had engaged in price-fixing conspiracies in Japan. In re Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig., 723 F.2d 238, 305 (3d Cir. 1983), rev'd sub nom. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). It held evidence of these other conspiracies "may be circumstantial evidence of a broader conspiracy." Ibid. And it further held such circumstantial evidence precluded summary judgment because, after all, a reasonable jury could infer once a conspirator, always a conspirator. It's also easy to see how documented, direct proof of [40] conspiracies back in Japan would powerfully impeach any denial of conspiracies in the United States.

I likewise agree with my esteemed colleagues "a jury could infer that Nagin's acceptance of bribes, while holding public office, was a part of his 'pattern of conduct' or 'modus operandi.'" Ante, slip op. at 15. And I agree Nagin's bribery conviction would serve as powerful impeachment of his testimony. Ibid. But that sort of evidence did not change the propriety of summary judgment in Matsushita. Nor should it here.

That's because surviving summary judgment requires more than character evidence and impeachment material. In RICO conspiracies, like antitrust ones, the plaintiff has an affirmative obligation to negate other innocent explanations for the defendants' conduct. And the Supreme Court could not have been clearer in holding other bad acts won't do the trick:

> The "direct evidence" on which the court [of appeals] relied was evidence of other combinations, not of a predatory pricing conspiracy. . . . Evidence that tends to support any of these collateral conspiracies thus says little, if anything, about the existence of a conspiracy to charge below-market prices in the American market over a period of [41] two decades.

[1] The entirety of defendants' alleged bribes are four publicly reported campaign contributions of $5,000, all made on May 16, 2006. To put these numbers in perspective, Nagin reported $590,747.00 in contributions for the seven-week period between May 1 and June 19, 2006. See Candidate's Report, Report Number 10056, LA. ETHICS ADMIN. PROGRAM, 1-2 (filed June 27, 2006), http://ethics.la.gov/CampaignFinanceSearch/ShowEForm.aspx?ReportID=10056. The defendants' $20,000 constitutes a mere 3% of that seven-week total. And across the 2006 primary and general election, Nagin spent $2,491,147.95. See Brian Brox, Elections and Voting in Post-Katrina New Orleans, SOUTHERN STUDIES: AN INTERDISCIPLINARY JOURNAL OF THE SOUTH, Fall/Winter 2009, at 8, 15. The defendants' $20,000 is 0.8% of that total. The record does not reveal a reason to think these relatively small sums of money loomed larger in Mayor Nagin's calculus than the obvious political implications of reauthorizing the landfill.

[*978] This was no fleeting thought. It was a thoroughly reasoned response to the principal basis for the dissent, which criticized the majority for "mak[ing] assumptions that invade the factfinder's province." Id. at 601 (White, J., dissenting). Justice White explained:

> [A]fter reviewing evidence of cartel activity in Japan, collusive establishment of dumping prices in this country, and long-term, below-cost sales, the Third Circuit held that a factfinder could reasonably conclude that the [illegal horizontal agreement] was not a simple price-raising device. . . . I see nothing erroneous in this reasoning.

Id. at 605. Justice White's understanding of the summary judgment standard would obviously necessitate reversal here. But "[t]his is one of those instances in which the dissent clearly tells us what the law is not. It is not as if the proposition had not occurred to the majority of the Court." Kobach v. U.S. Election Assistance Comm'n, 772 F.3d 1183, 1188 (10th Cir. 2014).[2]

The majority responds that Matsushita is irrelevant because this is not an antitrust case. See ante, slip op. at 19-20. But Matsushita "did not introduce a special burden . . . in antitrust cases"; it "merely articulated" a requirement applicable to all cases under Rule 56. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). That's why courts routinely apply Matsushita in [42] non-antitrust cases. See Ricci v. DeStefano, 557 U.S. 557, 586, 129 S. Ct. 2658, 174 L. Ed. 2d 490 (2009); Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 167 L. Ed. 2d 686 (2007); NLFC, Inc. v. Devcom Mid-Am., Inc., 45 F.3d 231, 235 (7th Cir. 1995); Sylvia Dev. Corp. v. Calvert Cty., 48 F.3d 810, 818 (4th Cir. 1995); Leonard v. Dixie Well Serv. & Supply, Inc., 828 F.2d 291, 294 (5th Cir. 1987). "[T]he universal applicability of the Supreme Court's analysis in Matsushita" is well established. In re Managed Care Litig., 430 F. Supp. 2d 1336, 1345 (S.D. Fla. 2006). That's because Matsushita requires summary judgment anytime the evidence is "as consistent with" lawful conduct as with unlawful conduct.

True, other parts of Matsushita's reasoning are not relevant here. For example, no one argues that Nagin "lack[ed] a plausible motive for" accepting a bribe or that the alleged bribery scheme "ma[kes] no economic sense." Ante, slip op. at 18-19 (characterizing Matsushita). But the "economic rationality" of the alleged conduct, ante, slip op. at 20 n.53, does not justify a trial in this case, just as it wouldn't have in Matsushita. The Matsushita Court expressly denied that "a plausible reason to conspire" combined with "ambiguous conduct could suffice to create a triable issue of conspiracy." 475 U.S. at 597 n.21. Regardless of economics, "conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy." Ibid.

Other lower courts have attempted the majority's move, and it did not end well. In *Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, [979] 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), the Supreme Court issued another landmark procedural ruling in an antitrust case. Some argued Twombly [43] 's reading of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 should be limited to "the context of an antitrust dispute." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 684, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). But the Court emphatically rejected that argument. Twombly—like Matsushita—"interpret[ed] and appli[ed]" the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which govern "all civil actions and proceedings in the United States district courts." Ibid. (quotation omitted). So Matsushita—like Twombly—applies to all cases, not just antitrust ones.

But even if that weren't true, Matsushita would remain applicable to civil RICO cases like this one. "Antitrust cases are particularly instructive in the civil RICO context because, as the Supreme Court has observed, 'the civil action provision of RICO was patterned after the Clayton Act.'" In re Managed Care Litig., 430 F. Supp. 2d at 1345 (quoting Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assocs., Inc., 483 U.S. 143, 150, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1987)). The majority simply cannot ignore Matsushita as just "an antitrust case."

[2] Given that prior-crimes evidence doesn't help with Nagin, it definitely doesn't help with Mouton. Mouton regulated shrimping. The only evidence tying him to the landfill is a letter he sent to the EPA regarding a citizen suit. He never met Nagin, never worked for him, never talked to him (about the landfill or anything else), and never had any influence over him. Accordingly, Waste Management cannot show Mouton was connected in any way to Nagin, much less that he caused Nagin to refuse to reauthorize the landfill. Cf. Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 947 n.4, 129 S. Ct. 2237, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265 (2009) (individuals who act "independently and without coordination" are not part of RICO association). Mouton is irrelevant.

Waste Management also claims to have three pieces of evidence tending to show the defendants' campaign contributions caused the Mayor to change his mind. They tend to show no such thing.

The first is an "Emergency Disaster Cleanup Site Request" filed by the Mayor's office on February 14, 2006. The Mayor's office filed it five days after Nagin signed his emergency order. Through it, Nagin asked the Louisiana Department [44] of Environmental Quality ("LDEQ") to provide emergency state approval for the landfill. And in it, Nagin requested state approval for "the duration of the Hurricane Katrina disaster cleanup efforts, at this time estimated to be 12 months." But that says nothing about whether Nagin was willing to wage political war against his City Council for 12 months. There's nothing illegal about wanting the State to approve a landfill for 12 months and demanding political buy-in from the City Council in half that time. Moreover, the LDEQ request was filed almost two months before the Council formally excoriated Nagin for authorizing the landfill. To the extent the LDEQ request shows Nagin changed his mind, it is perfectly consistent with his doing so in response to a bruising political fight. As we know from Matsushita, that consistency precludes this case from reaching a jury.

The second piece of evidence is a city press release from June 30, 2006. That release was headlined "Lab Results Show No Air or Water Contaminations at Chef Hwy Landfill." And it attributes a quote to Nagin, who hoped the sampling results would "ease the concerns of the citizens." But environmental concerns were only one [45] of the reasons the landfill was a political mess. The city's leaders also worried the landfill would displace a community of color. See, e.g., Affidavit of Councilwoman Cynthia Hedge-Morrell. No amount of lab sampling would change that. And in all events, the landfill was a political albatross around the Mayor's neck. There is nothing illegal about an elected official using favorable test results to defend against a political liability. Nor is there anything irrational about making the best of a bad political situation in June before cutting bait in August.

The third piece of evidence is a letter from the LDEQ dated July 14, 2006. In it, LDEQ officials said they "were surprised" to learn of Nagin's decision not to renew his emergency authorization for the landfill. [*980] "It has been our understanding and impression," they wrote, "that you supported the use of the Chef Menteur site to dispose of" hurricane debris. The city attorney responded that the city is not "oppos[ed]" to the landfill. To the contrary, the city attorney expressly stated the LDEQ would be "justified" in authorizing the landfill at the state level. Nagin simply refused to continue waging a lone-ranger political war against [46] his City Council at the local level. In short, if the State was willing to take the blame, all the better—but Nagin was not going to take it himself. Far from supporting an inference Nagin was motivated by bribes from River Birch, this last piece of evidence suggests he was motivated by politics.

B.

Make no mistake. Like my colleagues, I am convinced post-Katrina local politics were odiferous. And sometimes criminal. Still, that does not mean Waste Management's civil RICO claim against River Birch is the proper remedy.

"Civil RICO is an unusually potent weapon—the litigation equivalent of a thermonuclear device." Miranda v. Ponce Fed. Bank, 948 F.2d 41, 44 (1st Cir. 1991). The statute punishes defendants with treble damages, attorney's fees, and the "stigmatizing" label "racketeer." Ibid. That alone gives even "spurious claims" tantalizing "in terrorem settlement value." Haroco, Inc. v. Am. Nat'l Bank & Tr. Co. of Chi., 747 F.2d 384, 399 n.16 (7th Cir. 1984), aff'd, 473 U.S. 606, 105 S. Ct. 3291, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437 (1985).

But that's not the worst of it. "RICO has been interpreted so broadly that it has been used more often against respected businesses with no ties to organized crime, than against the mobsters who were the clearly intended target of the statute." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 526, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985) (Powell, J., dissenting); see also id. at 499 (majority op.) ("It is true that private civil actions under the statute are being brought [47] almost solely against [respected businesses], rather than against the archetypal, intimidating mobster."). The predicate acts for civil RICO are so broad that racketeering claims are de riguer in commercial litigation. In the words of Abner Mikva—who voted against RICO as a member of Congress before applying it as a judge on the D.C. Circuit—civil RICO is "a weapon against legitimate businessmen in ordinary commercial disputes. The civil RICO count today has become boilerplate in commercial lawsuits." Abner Mikva & G. Robert Blakey, RICO and its Progeny: Good or Bad Law?, 12 Notre Dame J.L. Ethics & Pub. Pol'y 369, 372 (1986).[3]

To be clear, I am not saying any particular person involved in this commercial dispute is or is not a legitimate businessman. What I am saying is equal justice under the law applies equally to crook and cherub. [*981] Cf. Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 380, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305 (1986) ("The constitutional rights of criminal defendants are granted to the innocent and the guilty alike."); Tenn. Valley Auth. v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 195, 98 S. Ct. 2279, 57 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1978) ("Yes, I'd give the Devil benefit of law, for my own safety's sake." (quoting ROBERT BOLT, A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS, Act I, p. 147 (Three Plays, Heinemann ed. 1967)). And regardless of the merits in this case, we must worry the rules we devise today will ensnare innocent civil RICO defendants tomorrow. [48] Cf. Haroco, 747 F.2d at 399 n.16 ("After all, the line between fraud and mistake or misunderstanding can be a very fine one. It is, therefore, important that, in the further development of civil RICO, criminal fraud be clearly distinguished from less egregious conduct.").

The error costs are particularly high here because this case combines civil RICO with the First Amendment. The First Amendment protects political speech. See Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 339-40, 130 S. Ct. 876, 175 L. Ed. 2d 753 (2010). That includes large donations to candidates and committees. See McCutcheon v. FEC, 572 U.S. 185, 203-04, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 188 L. Ed. 2d 468 (2014) (plurality); id. at 230-31 (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment). Of course, the First Amendment does not protect "'quid pro quo' corruption." Id. at 192. But if we're not careful, our efforts to carve out unprotected speech can run headlong into the core of the First Amendment. See, e.g., United States v. Alvarez, 567 U.S. 709, 723, 132 S. Ct. 2537, 183 L. Ed. 2d 574 (2012) (noting Congress can criminalize some kinds of lying, but it must be careful not to "chill" protected speech). If we are unwilling to rigorously apply Rule 56, future would-be speakers may remain silent rather than risk a civil RICO trial.

Again, 1986's summary-judgment trilogy provides a way out of this box. The Supreme Court directs us to consider "the actual quantum and quality of proof necessary to support liability." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 254. That means a summary-judgment court must consult the underlying substantive law. See ibid.; Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 597-98. Here, [49] the underlying law includes both the First Amendment (as in Anderson) and conspiracy (as in Matsushita). It also includes the line between political speech and corruption (as in McCutcheon). Putting all of that together, Waste Management can survive summary judgment only by pointing to some evidence of "'quid pro quo' corruption." McCutcheon, 572 U.S. at 207. This, the majority concedes, Waste Management cannot do. See ante, slip op. at 14.

This is a tough case. We have not one but two individuals who were convicted of taking bribes. We have the rough-and-tumble local politics of post-Katrina New Orleans. And we have fierce competitors in the landfill industry. The majority and I disagree about whether all of this belongs in front of a civil RICO jury. But I think our disagreement is driven more by this case's facts than by a fundamental disagreement about the post-1986 summary judgment

[3] At a debate hosted by Notre Dame, Mikva explained:

In preparing for my appearance here today, I went through some of the cases in which a civil RICO claim has been filed. And the range of cases boggle[s] the mind. These are not cases against Mafia figures. These have nothing to do with some poor merchant who has been squeezed by the mafiosi in a loan transaction. RICO makes its appearance in everything from divorce suits to religious disputes, to suits against one of the national candidates for President, to a major political party, and to just about every kind of garden variety of contractual and securities dispute that you could imagine between businessmen, to corporate raids, to defenses against corporate raids, to state efforts to collect state sales taxes from local businessmen.

If you find it hard to relate that potpourri to organized crime or racketeering, you are not alone.

standard. And I don't read the majority to allow any of these issues to reach the jury—including, for example, whether the Mayor "disregard[ed]" his policy advisors, ante, slip op. at 17—without the totality of the facts presented in this highly unusual case.

No one finds these facts more troubling than I do. But as Justice Scalia once said, "[t]he judge who always [50] likes the results he reaches is a bad judge." Clare Kim, Justice Scalia: Constitution Is "Dead," MSNBC (Oct. 2, 2013, 10:03 PM), [*982] http://www.msnbc.com/the-last-word/justice-scalia-constitution-dead. I don't like granting summary judgment to campaign-finance violators. Nor do I like giving the benefit of the doubt to disgraced ex-government officials. But, in the absence of evidence, it's what the law commands. I respectfully dissent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

HN1[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Market power is the ability to raise price profitably by restricting output. A defendant firm has market power if it can raise price without a total loss of sales. The substantial market power that concerns antitrust law arises when the defendant (1) can profitably set prices well above its costs and (2) enjoys some protection against rivals' entry or expansion that would erode such supracompetitive prices and profits. For antitrust purposes, therefore, market power is the abilities (1) to price substantially above the competitive level and (2) to persist in doing so for a significant period without erosion by new entry or expansion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN2[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

A market is the group of sellers or producers who have the actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business. To define a market is to identify those producers providing customers of a defendant firm (or firms) with alternative sources for the defendant's product or service. A market for antitrust purposes includes both a product market and a geographical market. The relevant product market must encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product. The relevant geographic market is the area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply. A properly defined market excludes other potential suppliers (1) whose product is too different (product dimension) or too far away (geographic dimension) and (2) who are not likely to shift promptly to offer defendant's customers a suitably proximate (in both product and geographic terms) alternative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is a device used by a seller with market power in one product market to extend its market power to a distinct product market. To accomplish this objective, the seller conditions the sale of one product (the tying product) on the buyer's purchase of a second product (the tied product). The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. Tying arrangements are forbidden on the theory that, if the seller has market power over the tying product, the seller can leverage this market power through tying arrangements to exclude other sellers of the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN4[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

In all cases involving a tying arrangement, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant has market power in the tying product. In the context of a tying claim under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, whether a defendant has market power cannot be evaluated unless the court first defines the relevant market. In cases involving allegations of horizontal restraints (imposed by agreements between competitors), courts might not need to precisely define the relevant market to conclude that these agreements were anticompetitive, but in cases involving allegations of vertical restraints (involving agreements between firms at different levels of distribution), courts must first define the relevant market. Congress has prescribed a pragmatic, factual approach to the definition of the relevant market and not a formal, legalistic one. An element of fuzziness would seem inherent in any attempt to delineate the relevant geographical market. The boundaries of a relevant geographic market need not be defined with scientific precision, or by metes and bounds as a surveyor would lay off a plot of ground, Rather, the relevant geographic market should correspond to the commercial realities of the industry and be economically significant. Thus, although the geographic market in some instances may encompass the entire Nation, under other circumstances it may be as small as a single metropolitan area.

HN5[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

A common method to determine the relevant geographic market in the context of a tying claim under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act is to find whether a hypothetical monopolist could impose a small but significant nontransitory increase in price (SSNIP) in the proposed market. This hypothetical-monopolist test asks what would happen if a single firm became the only seller in a candidate geographical region. If that hypothetical monopolist could profitably raise prices above competitive levels, the region is a relevant geographical market. But if customers would defeat the attempted price increase by buying from outside the region, it is not a relevant market; the test should be rerun using a larger candidate region. Courts have recognized that a hypothetical monopolist's ability to impose a SSNIP of five percent may satisfy the hypothetical-monopolist test.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN6[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The court must grant a motion for summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). Material facts are those that may affect the outcome of the case. A dispute about a material fact is genuine if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN7[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

The party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden of informing the court of the basis for the motion, and identifying portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions, or affidavits that demonstrate the absence of a triable issue of material fact. To meet its burden, the moving party must either produce evidence negating an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim or defense or show that the nonmoving party does not have enough evidence of an essential element to carry its ultimate burden of persuasion at trial. If the moving party meets its initial burden, then the burden shifts to the non-moving party to produce evidence supporting its claims or defenses. The non-moving party may not rest upon mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's evidence, but instead must produce admissible evidence that shows there is a genuine issue of material fact for trial. If the non-moving party does not produce evidence to show a genuine issue of material fact, the moving party is entitled to summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN8[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the court does not make credibility determinations or weigh conflicting evidence. Instead, it views the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and draws all factual inferences in the non-moving party's favor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN9[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Defining the relevant geographic markets in an antitrust case is generally a question for the jury. The plaintiffs bear the ultimate burden of defining the relevant geographic markets. On a motion for summary judgment, if the plaintiff's evidence cannot sustain a jury verdict on the issue of market definition, summary judgment is appropriate. On a summary-judgment motion, the court must view the evidence and draw all inferences with respect to defining the relevant geographic market in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. While the plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating a relevant market at trial, the moving party has the burden on summary judgment of demonstrating that there is no genuine issue of material fact. If there is a dispute of material fact regarding the proper geographic markets, summary judgment must be denied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > Expert Witnesses

HN10[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

The absence of expert testimony on the issue of relevant market and like issues is not, per se, fatal to a plaintiff's antitrust claims. In other words, expert testimony is not required, but in its absence a plaintiff must show by other evidence sufficient facts from which a jury could infer market share, market power, relevant market, monopolization, dangerous probability of monopolization, and the like.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN11[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Defining the relevant markets in an antitrust case is typically a question of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN12[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The U.S. Supreme Court has recognized that an element of fuzziness would seem inherent in any attempt to delineate the relevant geographical market in an antitrust case, and thus the boundaries of a relevant geographic market need not be defined with scientific precision,, or by metes and bounds as a surveyor would lay off a plot of ground.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN13[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Courts have recognized that a hypothetical monopolist's ability to impose a significant nontransitory increase in price of five percent may satisfy the hypothetical-monopolist test to determine the relevant geographic market in an antitrust case.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > Qualifications

HN14[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

A witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if: (a) the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue; (b) the testimony is based on sufficient facts or data; (c) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods; and (d) the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts of the case. Fed. R. Evid. 702. Under Daubert, the trial court must act as a gatekeeper to exclude junk science that does not meet Rule 702's reliability standards by making a preliminary determination that the expert's testimony is reliable. Daubert does not require a court to admit or to exclude evidence based on its persuasiveness; rather it requires a court to admit or exclude evidence based on its scientific reliability and relevance. Thus, an expert's inference or assertion must be derived by the scientific method to be admissible. A trial court has broad latitude not only in determining whether an expert's testimony is reliable, but also in deciding how to determine the testimony's reliability.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN15[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Where experts' opinions are not the junk science Fed. R. Evid. 702 was meant to exclude, the interests of justice favor leaving difficult issues in the hands of the jury and relying on the safeguards of the adversary system — vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof — to attack shaky but admissible evidence.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

In this putative class action, seven plaintiffs (five individuals who enrolled in health insurance from the health plans Aetna, Anthem Blue Cross, and Blue Shield, and two companies that paid for health insurance for their employees) are suing Sutter Health, which owns and operates [*6] a network of hospitals and medical-service providers in Northern California, for violations of the federal Sherman Antitrust Act, the California Cartwright Act, and the California Unfair Competition Law.

The plaintiffs allege that Sutter has "market power" in eight specific "geographic markets" (the "Candidate Tying Markets") in Northern California, where Sutter's hospitals are either the only hospital in the market (i.e., a monopoly) or the predominant provider in the market.[1] The plaintiffs allege that in order for health plans like Aetna, Anthem Blue Cross, and Blue Shield to assemble health-insurance products that are commercially marketable to individuals and to employers purchasing insurance for their employees, health plans must have those Sutter hospitals in their provider networks.[2] The plaintiffs allege that Sutter imposes "all or nothing" terms on health plans, telling health plans that they cannot include those hospitals as in-network providers unless they also accept as in-network providers Sutter's hospitals in four other geographic markets (the "Candidate Tied Markets") at the prices that Sutter dictates.[3] The plaintiffs allege that Sutter charges supra-competitive rates [*7] at its hospitals in the Candidate Tied Markets.[4] Because Sutter has tied access to the "must have" hospitals in the Candidate Tying Markets to acceptance of its supra-competitive rates for its hospitals in the Candidate Tied Markets, Sutter forces health plans to pay higher rates for hospital services than they otherwise would pay but for this tying arrangement[5] — higher rates that in turn are passed downstream to individuals and employers who buy health insurance.[6]

Sutter moves for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiffs have not met their burden of establishing that their proposed Candidate Markets are properly defined "geographic markets" for antitrust purposes.[7] In their complaint, the plaintiffs define their Candidate Markets by reference to "Hospital Service Areas" ("HSAs") as set out in an industry source called the Dartmouth Atlas of Health Care ("Dartmouth Atlas").[8] Sutter argues that Dartmouth Atlas HSAs do not define geographic markets for antitrust purposes, citing the report of its expert Dr. Gautam Gowrisankaran. The plaintiffs respond that documents and testimony (from health plans and from Sutter) and the competing report of their expert Dr. Tasneem Chipty [*8] support their position that their Candidate Markets are relevant geographic markets for antitrust purposes. Both sides have filed cross-motions to exclude the other side's expert.[9]

The court holds that there are disputes of material fact about whether the plaintiffs can establish that their Candidate Markets are properly defined geographic markets for antitrust purposes.[10] The court grants summary judgment with respect to the Davis HSA Candidate Tying Market and otherwise denies Sutter's motion for summary judgment. The court denies in part and denies as moot in part Sutter's motion to exclude Dr. Chipty and denies as moot the plaintiffs' motion to exclude Dr. Gowrisankaran.

BACKGROUND

1. Antitrust and Markets Generally

1.1 "Market Power"

HN1[] "Market power is the ability to raise price profitably by restricting output." Ohio v. Am. Express Co., 138 S. Ct. 2274, 2288, 201 L. Ed. 2d 678 (2018) (emphasis removed) (quoting Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application ¶ 5.01 (4th ed. 2017)). "A defendant firm has market power if it can raise price without a total loss of sales." Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application ¶ 5.01 (4th ed. [*9] 2018) (Areeda & Hovenkamp). "[T]he substantial market power that concerns antitrust law arises when the defendant (1) can profitably set prices well above its costs and (2) enjoys some protection against rival[s'] entry or expansion that would erode such supracompetitive prices and profits." Id. "For antitrust purposes, therefore, market power is the abilities (1) to price substantially above the competitive level and (2) to persist in doing so for a significant period without erosion by new entry or expansion." Id. (emphasis removed).

[10] The court does not address whether HSAs are geographic markets for antitrust purposes generally, only that there are disputes of material facts as to whether the specific Candidate Markets that the plaintiffs propose — which here are defined by reference to HSAs — are geographic markets for antitrust purposes here.

1.2 "Market"

HN2[] "'[A] market is the group of sellers or producers who have the actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business.'" Saint Alphonsus Med. Ctr.-Nampa Inc. v. St. Luke's Health Sys., Ltd., 778 F.3d 775, 784 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir 1995)). "To define a market is to identify those producers providing customers of a defendant firm (or firms) with alternative sources for the defendant's product or service." Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 530a.

1.4 Requirement to Define the Relevant Market

[11] In cases involving allegations of horizontal restraints (imposed by agreements between competitors), courts might not need to "precisely define the relevant market to conclude that these agreements were anticompetitive," but in cases involving allegations of vertical restraints (involving agreements between firms at different levels of distribution), courts must "first define[] the relevant

1.5 The "Hypothetical Monopolist" Test for Defining a Relevant Geographic Market

HN5[] "A common method to determine the relevant geographic market . . . is to find whether a hypothetical monopolist could impose a 'small but significant nontransitory increase in price' ('SSNIP') in the proposed market." St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784; accord FTC v. Advocate Health Care Network, 841 F.3d 460, 468 (7th Cir. 2016); FTC v. Penn State Hershey Med. Ctr., 838 F.3d 327, 338 (3d Cir. 2016). This hypothetical-monopolist test "asks what would happen if a single firm became the only seller in a candidate geographical region." Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 468 (citing FTC v. Whole Foods Mkt., Inc., 548 F.3d 1028, 1038, 383 U.S. App. D.C. 341 (D.C. Cir. 2008)). "If that hypothetical monopolist could profitably raise prices above competitive levels, the region is a relevant geographical market." Id. (citing Kenneth G. Elzinga & Anthony W. Swisher, Limits of the Elzinga-Hogarty Test in Hospital Mergers: The Evanston Case, 18 Int'l J. of the Econ. of Bus. 133, 136 (2011)). "But if customers would defeat the attempted price increase by buying from outside the region, it is not a relevant market; the test should be rerun using a larger candidate region." Id. (citing St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784; In re Se. Milk Antitrust Litig., 739 F.3d 262, 277-78 (6th Cir. 2014)) [*13] . Courts have recognized that a hypothetical monopolist's ability to impose a SSNIP of five percent may satisfy the hypothetical-monopolist test. Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 338 nn.1-2 (citing U.S. Dep't of Justice & Fed. Trade Comm'n, Horizonal Merger Guidelines § 4.1.2 (2010); St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 n.9).

Analyzing how buyers would respond to a hypothetical-monopolist seller's imposing a SSNIP requires defining the buyers and sellers in the relevant market.

2. Health-Care Buyers, Sellers, and Markets

"The market for hospital services and medical care is complex." Cascade Health, 515 F.3d at 891. There are at least three transactions involved in providing hospital services and health care in connection with health insurance.

2.1 Hospitals Sell Hospital Services to Health Plans

First, hospitals sell hospital services to health-insurance plans. Hospitals and health plans negotiate whether a given hospital will be included in the health plan's network and negotiate the rates that the health plan will pay the hospital for its hospital services. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 & n.10 (citing Gregory Vistnes, Hospitals, Mergers, and market." Am. Express, 138 S. Ct. at 2285 n.7. Tying is a vertical restraint. Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 675 F.3d 1192, 1198-99 (9th Cir. 2012).

The plaintiffs argue that market definition is not a required element of their state-law Cartwright Act claims. Pls. Mot. for Summary J. ("MSJ") Opp'n - ECF No. 494 at 8. Because the court holds that there are disputes of material fact regarding the plaintiffs' geographic-market definitions that are sufficient to defeat summary judgment, the court need not decide whether market definitions are a necessary element of a Cartwright Act claim.

Two-Stage Competition, 67 Antitrust L.J. 671, 672, 674 (2000)). These negotiations are highly price-sensitive. Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 465 (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 674-75). All else being equal, hospitals prefer higher rates and health plans prefer lower rates. Cascade Health, 515 F.3d at 892 ("Insurers are usually commercial health insurance companies that seek [*14] to buy medical services from hospitals on the best terms possible. . . . It follows that hospitals prefer high reimbursement rates and insurers prefer low reimbursement rates, as each group pursues its own economic interest.").

While hospital services are delivered to the health plan's enrollees (i.e., patients), the health plan negotiates whether a hospital will be included in the health plan's provider network and buys the services that the hospital sells. Cascade Health, 515 F.3d at 892 ("Hospitals . . . provide services to patients and sell services to insurers."); see St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 ("the vast majority of health care consumers are not direct purchasers of health care — [(1)] the consumers purchase health insurance and [(2)] the insurance companies negotiate directly with the providers," such as hospitals); Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 470 ("[C]onsumers do not directly pay the full cost of hospital care. Instead, insurance companies cover most hospital costs.") (citing Elzinga & Swisher, 18 Int'l J. of the Econ. of Bus. at 138); Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 342 ("[P]atients, in in large part, do not feel the impact of price increases. Insurers do. And they are the ones who negotiate directly with the hospitals to determine both reimbursement rates and the hospitals that will be included in their networks.").[12]

2.2 Health Plans [*15] Sell Health Insurance to Individuals and Employers

Second, health plans sell health insurance to consumers. The consumers are individuals (who directly purchase health insurance for themselves or their families) and employers (which purchase health insurance for their employees). Cascade Health, 515 F.3d at 892; St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784. Health plans' selling of insurance to employers may be further divided into two transactions. Gregory S. Vistnes & Yianis Sarafidis, Cross-Market Hospital Mergers: A Holistic Approach, 79 Antitrust L.J. 253, 266 (2013). First, health plans compete to be one of a limited number of health plans that employers offer to their employees. Id. at 266-67. Second, after employers select them, health plans compete to be chosen by employees. Id. at 267; accord Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 678 ("A health plan must ensure not only that employees will choose the plan if offered, but also that employers will choose to offer it.").

An important way that health plans compete for consumers is their provider networks: the hospitals, physicians, and ancillary providers that the health plan offers "in network" and that enrollees are encouraged to use. Vistnes & Sarafidis, 79 Antitrust L.J. at 267. All else being equal, a health plan with a more comprehensive provider network will be more attractive to consumers. Id. At the same [*16] time, health plans that have high-priced providers in their networks have higher costs. Id. Thus, in choosing how inclusive their provider network is, health plans balance the benefit of more comprehensive networks with the costs of paying more to providers in their networks. Id.

2.3 Hospitals Attract Health-Plan Enrollees

Third, hospitals seek to attract health-plan enrollees who need hospital services to come to them (as opposed to other hospitals). St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 n.10 (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 681-82); Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 460 (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 672); Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 342 (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 672).

Unlike health plans, which are sensitive to the prices that hospitals charge for their services, enrollees "are 'largely insensitive' to price" because the prices that hospitals charge are largely borne by the enrollees' health plans, not by the enrollees. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 n.10 (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 682); accord Advocate Health,

[12] In some instances, a hospital might sell hospital services directly to an individual patient (e.g., an uninsured patient who directly pays the hospital out-of-pocket). This case, however, relates only to enrollees in health-insurance plans. See 4AC - ECF No. 204 at 3 (¶¶ 1-2).

841 F.3d at 471 ("Insured patients are usually not sensitive to retail hospital prices, while insurers respond to both prices and patient preferences.") (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 677, 680); Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 342 ("Patients are largely insensitive to healthcare prices because they utilize insurance, which covers the majority of their healthcare costs."). Instead of taking price into account, enrollees choose hospitals "based mostly on non-price factors, [*17] such as location or quality of services." Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 341; accord St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 n.10 (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 682); Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 465 (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 677, 682).[13]

2.4 The Relevant Product Market Is the Market for Hospitals Selling Inpatient Hospital Services to Health Plans

The plaintiffs plead in their complaint both (1) a relevant product market for hospitals selling inpatient hospital services to commercial health plans[14] and (2) a relevant product market for health plans selling health insurance to individuals and employers.[15]

Sutter moves for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiffs have not established the relevant geographic markets for the first product market: the market for hospitals selling inpatient hospital services to health plans.[16] In this motion, Sutter does not challenge any product-market definition or the geographic markets for health plans selling health insurance to individuals and employees.[17]

STATEMENT

In their complaint, the plaintiffs propose twelve Candidate Markets: eight Candidate Tying Markets and four Candidate Tied Markets.[18] The eight Candidate Tying Markets are:

1. the Antioch HSA, as defined in the Dartmouth Atlas,[19]

2. the Auburn HSA, as defined in the Dartmouth Atlas,[20]

3. the Crescent City HSA, as defined in the Dartmouth [*18] Atlas,[21]

4. the Davis HSA, as defined in the Dartmouth Atlas,[22]

At the hearing on Sutter's motion for summary judgment, the plaintiffs stipulated that summary judgment should be granted with respect to the Davis HSA.[33]

1. The Dartmouth Atlas of Health Care and "Hospital Service Areas"

The plaintiffs define their Candidate Markets by reference to "Hospital Service Areas," or "HSAs," set out in the Dartmouth Atlas, an industry source compiled by the Dartmouth [*19] Institute for Health Policy & Clinical Practice and available at http://www.dartmouthatlas.org.[34] The following summarizes the Dartmouth Atlas's identification of HSAs.[35]

In 1996, the Center for the Evaluative Clinical Sciences at Dartmouth Medical School published the first edition of the Dartmouth Atlas.[36] The Dartmouth Atlas defined 3,436 "Hospital Service Areas," or "HSAs," that (according to the Dartmouth Atlas group) represented "'the geographic boundaries of naturally occurring health care markets in the United States.'"[37] The Dartmouth Atlas identified these HSAs through a three-step process that used the location of acute-care hospitals in the United States in 1992 and Medicare patient-discharge data for 1992 and 1993.[38]

[35] Sutter's expert Dr. Gowrisankaran discusses the Dartmouth Atlas and how the Dartmouth Atlas group construed the "Hospital Service Areas," or "HSAs." The plaintiffs and their expert Dr. Chipty do not contend that Dr. Gowrisankaran's discussion about how the Dartmouth Atlas group constructed HSAs is inaccurate. See generally Chipty Dep. - ECF No. 479-2 at 56-57 (pp. 55-56). The court thus recounts a portion of Dr. Gowrisankaran's discussion as background about what HSAs are. The court does not adopt Dr. Gowrisankaran's discussions on this topic as a fact finding and instead summarizes his discussions to provide background on HSAs.

First, each acute-care hospital in the United States in 1992 was assigned to the town or city where it was located.[39] The 3,953 towns or cities that contained at least one acute-care hospital were defined as "candidate HSAs."[40]

Second, using Medicare patient-discharge data for 1992 and 1993, each zip code in the country was assigned to one of the 3,953 candidate HSAs.[41] All zip codes were assigned [*20] to the candidate HSA where the plurality of Medicare discharges for residents from that zip code had been hospitalized.[42] If a plurality of a candidate HSA's residents' Medicare hospitalizations took place in another candidate HSA, then the first HSA was eliminated as a candidate HSA, and its zip codes were reassigned to other HSAs.[43] Approximately 500 candidate HSAs were eliminated in this way.[44]

Third, the Dartmouth Atlas group visually examined the boundaries of each HSA and performed manual adjustments to reach contiguous HSAs (including reassigning "island" zip codes, which had been assigned to a non-contiguous HSA, to the HSA that surrounded them).[45]

In constructing HSAs, the Dartmouth Atlas group did not use patient-discharge data from commercial-health-plan enrollees; it used only Medicare-patient-discharge data.[46] The Dartmouth Atlas group has not redefined HSAs since they were first constructed, meaning that HSAs are still defined based on patient-discharge data from 1992-1993.[47] The plaintiffs' expert Dr. Chipty and Sutter's expert Dr. Gowrisankaran agree that HSAs were not created to delineate antitrust markets and that not all HSAs are antitrust markets.[48]

[*21] 2. The Candidate Tying Markets

In their complaint, the plaintiffs alleged seven Candidate Tying Markets (excluding the Davis HSA). The following gives an overview of each Candidate Tying Market and then summarizes evidence relevant to the markets and Sutter's motion for summary judgment. There are three categories of evidence that are relevant: (1) evidence relating to the application of California's Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1985, Cal. Health & Safety

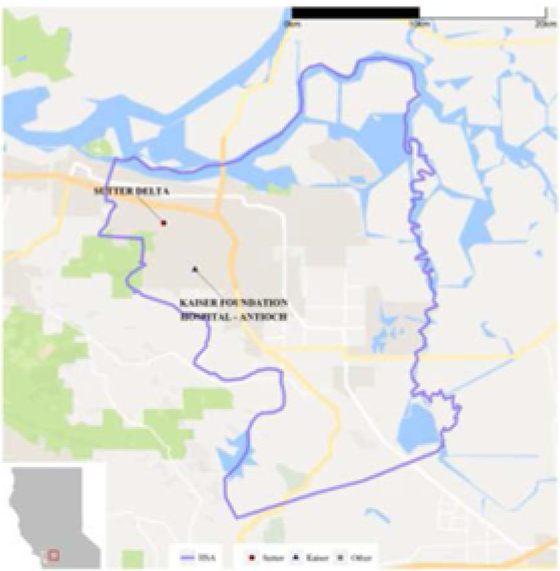
2.1 The Antioch HSA

2.1.1 Overview

The Antioch HSA includes the city of Antioch in Contra Costa County, California. There are approximately 172,000 residents in the Antioch HSA.[49] Excluding a hospital operated by Kaiser Permanente ("Kaiser"),[50] there is one hospital in the Antioch HSA: Sutter Delta Medical Center ("Sutter Delta").[51]



[52]

Between 40 and 45 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the Antioch HSA stay in the Antioch HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining 55 to 60 percent travel out of the Antioch HSA [*22] for inpatient hospital services.[53] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the Antioch HSA drive an average of 17 minutes for their care and the patients who travel out of the Antioch HSA drive an average of 44 minutes for their care.[54]

[49] Chipty Decl. - ECF No. 494-1 at 82-83 (¶ 107).

[50] Kaiser Permanente is another large hospital system in Northern California. 4AC - ECF No. 204 at 10-11 (¶ 32). Kaiser operates in a "closed system," where (other than in emergencies) its hospitals offer inpatient hospital services only to Kaiser health plans and not to other health plans. Id. The plaintiffs therefore allege that Kaiser's hospitals do not compete with Sutter's hospitals with respect to selling inpatient hospital services to non-Kaiser health plans. Id. Sutter does not challenge the exclusion of Kaiser in its motion for summary judgment. Def. MSJ - ECF No. 272 at 19 n.7 ("[T]his Motion generally focuses on data that exclude Kaiser in keeping with Plaintiffs' approach to market definition in this case.").

2.1.2 Knox-Keene Act

A former Senior Vice President of the health plan Blue Shield stated in a sworn declaration that California's Knox-Keene Act "requires Blue Shield to create a network with access to health care providers such that 'all enrollees have a residence or workplace within 30 minutes or 15 miles of a contracting or plan-operated hospital[.]'"[55] The former Senior Vice President explained, "[f]or example, if one of Blue Shield's self-funded customers has an employee living in a rural area of Northern California, and the only hospital within 30 minutes or 15 miles of his residence or workplace was a Sutter hospital, the law mandates that Sutter's hospital be included in the network."[56]

At the end of 2014, Blue Shield's then-effective agreement with Sutter was scheduled to automatically terminate (absent a renewal).[57] Blue Shield had to file "transition disengagement plans" with the California Department of Managed Health Care ("DMHC").[58] The [*23] DMHC reviewed Blue Shield's proposed termination of Sutter Delta as an in-network hospital and whether the termination complied with the Knox-Keene Act.[59] The DMHC sent a notice to Blue Shield that it effectively had to keep Sutter Delta in its network for certain hospital services, and allow its enrollees to use Sutter Delta, because there were no other alternative hospitals that complied with Knox-Keene Act requirements.[60]

Dr. Gowrisankaran stated that 51 percent of patients discharged from a non-Kaiser hospital in the Antioch HSA (i.e., Sutter Delta) live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital in another HSA.[61] That means that 49 percent of patients do not live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital.[62]

2.1.3 Blue Shield redirection analysis

A former Senior Vice President of the health plan Blue Shield of California stated in a sworn declaration that "consumer demand dictated the geographic 'footprint' of Blue Shield's networks. Many self-funded payors and insured employers who contract with Blue Shield have members throughout Northern California. Therefore, providing broad geographic coverage for members is important. In addition, [*24] certain Sutter hospitals and physician groups are 'must have' providers because particular Blue Shield customers insist that they be included in the network."[63] The former Senior Vice President stated that "Sutter's 'all or nothing' negotiation strategy, and [61] Gowrisankaran Decl. Ex. 8 - ECF No. 272-3 at 68. Dr. Gowrisankaran referred to discharges from hospitals within the Antioch HSA, excluding Kaiser hospitals. Because Sutter Delta is the only non-Kaiser hospital in the Antioch HSA, these discharges necessarily are discharges from Sutter Delta.

[62] Dr. Gowrisankaran referred to whether patients live within 30 minutes of a non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital in another HSA. Because there are no other non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospitals in the Antioch HSA, patients who do not live within 30 minutes of a non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital in another HSA necessarily do not live within 30 minutes of any non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital other than Sutter Delta.

leveraging of its market position in multiple counties (where they are dominant) to demand higher rates across the board has forced Blue Shield to accept Sutter's significantly higher pricing."[64] The former Senior Vice President stated that "Sutter's prices were 'materially higher' than the average prices in Northern California and across the state[.]"[65]

Blue Shield conducts "redirection analyses" whenever its contract with Sutter comes up for renewal, because it has to determine the cost of terminating its contract with Sutter.[66] As Blue Shield's Director of Provider Contracting for Northern California testified, when Blue Shield's contract with Sutter comes up for renewal, "one of those reports we have run is, okay, if Sutter's out of network, what can be redirected elsewhere, where are their alternatives, what our cost implications are."[67] The redirection analysis that Blue Shield conducted in 2014 ("Blue Shield Redirection Analysis") [*25] included an estimate that if Blue Shield were to terminate its contract with Sutter and Sutter Delta became an out-of-network hospital, then [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of Blue Shield enrollees who used Sutter Delta could be "redirected" to other hospitals ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]) and [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of enrollees would stay with Sutter Delta, even if Sutter were out of network and they had to pay higher costs.[68]

The Director acknowledged that "[t]here [wa]s no, you know, set criteria" for coming up with the redirection percentages listed in the Blue Shield Redirection Analysis (for Sutter Delta or for any other hospital).[69] He testified that, "you have got to use your experience of the marketplace and understanding of which hospitals are compl[e]mentary, how far apart they are from one another, preferences of members."[70] He acknowledged that he did not look at any patient-admission patterns or data and did not test his assumptions and that there was no way for a third party to replicate his analysis.[71]

2.1.4 Other evidence

In a 2008 internal email ("UnitedHealthcare Email"), the Director of Provider Services for Northern California [*26] for the health plan UnitedHealthcare wrote to several of her colleagues that Sutter "ha[s] geographic monopolies for hospital services in the following submarkets — . . . Antioch . . . ."[72] The UnitedHealthcare director further stated that "[d]espite widespread Broker acknowledgement of the high cost of Sutter, it is not feasible to present an HMO [health-maintenance organization] or FFS [fee-for-service] network in Northern CA that does not include them. In addition, many of our largest national accounts require Sutter network participation to retain and grow business."[73]

2.2 The Auburn HSA

2.2.1 Overview

The Auburn HSA includes the city of Auburn in Placer County, California. There are approximately 69,000 residents in the Auburn HSA.[74] The is one hospital in the Auburn HSA: Sutter Auburn Faith Hospital ("Sutter Auburn").[75]

[76]

Between 30 and 37 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the Auburn HSA stay in the Auburn HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining 63 to 70 percent travel out of the Auburn HSA for inpatient hospital services.[77] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the Auburn HSA drive an average of 18 minutes for their care and the [*27] patients who travel out of the Auburn HSA drive an average of 45 minutes for their care.[78]

2.2.2 Knox-Keene Act

Dr. Gowrisankaran stated that 44 percent of patients discharged from a non-Kaiser hospital in the Auburn HSA (i.e., Sutter Auburn) live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital in another HSA.[79] That means that 56 percent of patients do not live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital.[80]

2.2.3 Blue Shield redirection analysis

The Blue Shield Redirection Analysis estimated that if Blue Shield were to terminate its contract with Sutter and Sutter Auburn became an out-of-network hospital, then [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of Blue Shield enrollees who used Sutter Auburn could be "redirected" to [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]) and [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of enrollees would stay with Sutter Auburn, even if Sutter were out of network and they had to pay higher costs.[81]

2.2.4 Other evidence

The UnitedHealthcare Email stated that Sutter "ha[s] geographic monopolies for hospital services in the following submarkets — Auburn . . . . Despite widespread Broker acknowledgement of the high cost [*28] of Sutter, it is not feasible to present an HMO or FFS network in Northern CA that does not include them. In addition, many of our largest national accounts require Sutter network participation to retain and grow business."[82]

The Vice President for Network Management in Northern California at the health plan Aetna testified that "using my definition of monopoly meaning a must-have from a marketability standpoint, ... there are some rural hospitals where Sutter hospitals are really it for a given area," including Sutter Auburn.[83] The Vice President explained, "[s]o my own terms, a monopoly, it's really the must-have from a marketability or a member perception standpoint."[84]

[79] Gowrisankaran Decl. Ex. 8 - ECF No. 272-3 at 68. Dr. Gowrisankaran referred to discharges from hospitals within the Auburn HSA, excluding Kaiser hospitals. Because Sutter Auburn is the only hospital in the Auburn HSA, these discharges necessarily are discharges from Sutter Auburn.

The Crescent City HSA also extends into Oregon.[85] There are approximately 35,000 residents in the Crescent City HSA.[86] There is one hospital in the Crescent City HSA: Sutter Coast Hospital ("Sutter Coast").[87]

Between 72 and 77 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the Crescent City HSA stay in the Crescent City HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining 23 [*29] to 28 percent travel out of the Crescent City HSA for inpatient hospital services.[89] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the Crescent City HSA drive an average of 32 minutes for their care and the patients who travel out of the Crescent City HSA to another California hospital drive an average of 275 minutes for their care.[90]

Dr. Gowrisankaran stated that zero percent of patients discharged from a non-Kaiser hospital in the Crescent City HSA (i.e., Sutter Coast) live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital in another HSA.[94] — which means that 100 percent of patients do not live [*30] within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital.[95]

2.3.3 Blue Shield redirection analysis

The Blue Shield Redirection Analysis included an estimate that if Blue Shield were to terminate its contract with Sutter and Sutter Coast became an out-of-network hospital, then percent of Blue Shield enrollees who used Sutter Coast would stay with Sutter Coast, even if Sutter were out of network and they had to pay higher costs.[96]

2.3.4 Other evidence

The Vice President for Network Management in Northern California at Aetna testified that "using my definition of monopoly meaning a must-have from a marketability standpoint, ... there are some rural hospitals where Sutter hospitals are really it for a given area," including Sutter Coast.[97]

Sutter maintained an internal "model amendment" ("Sutter Model Amendment") that it used as a proposal in negotiating contracts with health plans.[98] The Sutter Model Amendment included a term, "Rural Hospitals," defined as "a designation given by Sutter Health to any facility which acts as a sole practical resource for acute care and emergency care within the community it serves."[99] Sutter's Chief Contracting Officer explained that "Rural Hospital" was "a term to describe a rural hospital that in all [*31] practical reality was the hospital, the local hospital in that community, typically a more rural community[that d]oesn't have other hospitals in the local vicinity."[100] The Sutter Model Amendment identified Sutter Coast as a "Rural Hospital."[101]

In 2001, Sutter entered into an amendment agreement with the health plan Blue Cross of California ("Sutter Blue Cross Amendment"). The Sutter Blue Cross Amendment included a term, "Rural Hospitals," defined as "a designation given by Sutter Health to any facility which acts as a sole practical resource for acute care and emergency care within the rural community it serves, and the next closest facility is at least 30 miles away from the

The Jackson HSA includes the city of Jackson in Amador County, California. There are approximately 34,000 residents in the Jackson HSA.[105] There is one hospital in the Jackson HSA: Sutter Amador [*32] Hospital ("Sutter Amador").[106]

Between 43 and 65 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the Jackson HSA stay in the Jackson HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining 35 to 57 percent travel out of the Jackson HSA for inpatient hospital services.[108] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the Jackson HSA drive an average of 21 minutes for their care and the patients who travel out of the Jackson HSA drive an average of 71 minutes for their care.[109]

2.4.2 Knox-Keene Act

At the end of 2014, Blue Shield's then-effective agreement with Sutter was scheduled to automatically terminate (absent a renewal).[110] The DMHC reviewed Blue Shield's proposed termination of Sutter Amador as an in-network hospital and whether the termination complied with the Knox-Keene Act.[111] The DMHC sent a notice to Blue Shield that it effectively had to keep Sutter Amador in its network for certain hospital services, and allow its enrollees to use Sutter Amador, because there were no other alternative hospitals that complied with Knox-Keene Act requirements.[112]

Dr. Gowrisankaran stated that 29 percent of patients discharged from a non-Kaiser hospital in the Jackson HSA (i.e., Sutter [*33] Amador) live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital in another HSA.[113] That means that 71 percent of patients do not live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital.[114]

2.4.3 Blue Shield redirection analysis

The Blue Shield Redirection Analysis included an estimate that if Blue Shield were to terminate its contract with Sutter and Sutter Amador became an out-of-network hospital, [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of Blue Shield enrollees who used Sutter Amador would choose to stay with Sutter Amador even if Sutter were out of network and they had to pay higher costs.[115]

2.4.4 Other evidence

The UnitedHealthcare Email stated that Sutter "ha[s] geographic monopolies for hospital services in the following submarkets — . . . Amador . . . . Despite widespread Broker acknowledgement of the high cost of Sutter, it is not feasible to present an HMO or FFS network in Northern CA that does not include them. In addition, many of our largest national accounts require Sutter network participation to retain and grow business."[116]

114 Dr. Gowrisankaran referred to whether patients live within 30 minutes of a non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital in another HSA. The Sutter Model Amendment identifies Sutter Amador as a "Rural Hospital" that "acts as a sole practical resource for acute care and emergency care within the community it serves" and a hospital "that in all practical reality was the hospital, the local hospital in that community, typically a more rural community[that d]oesn't have other hospitals in the local vicinity."[118] The Sutter Blue Cross Amendment similarly identifies Sutter Amador as a "Rural Hospital" that "acts as a sole practical resource for acute care and emergency care within the rural community it serves, and [where] the next closest facility is at least 30 miles away from the Rural Hospital."[119] Anthem Blue Cross's former Director of Network Development for Northern California and Vice President of Provider Engagement and Contracting for California acknowledged in testimony that Sutter Amador was a rural hospital and agreed that it was "essentially the only game in town."[120]

The Berkeley HSA includes the city of Berkeley in Alameda County, California. The Oakland HSA includes the city of Oakland [*40] in Alameda County, California. There are approximately 506,000 residents in the combined Berkeley-Oakland HSAs.[146] Excluding one Kaiser hospital, there are two hospitals in the combined Berkeley-Oakland HSAs: Sutter Alta Bates Medical Center ("Sutter Alta Bates") (which has three campuses: Alta Bates in Berkeley and Herrick in Berkeley, collectively "Alta Bates Main," and Alta Bates Summit in Oakland) and a non-Sutter hospital, Alameda County Medical Center.[147]

2.7.3 Other evidence

The UnitedHealthcare Email stated that Sutter "ha[s] geographic monopolies for hospital services in the following submarkets — . . . Berkeley, Oakland . . . . Despite widespread Broker acknowledgement of the high cost of Sutter, it is not feasible to present an HMO or FFS network in Northern CA that does not include them. In addition, many of our largest national accounts require Sutter network participation to retain and grow business."[155]

Aetna's Vice President for Network Management in Northern California testified that "using my definition of monopoly meaning a must-have from a marketability standpoint, one would be Alta Bates Summit Medical Center, which it's — it's the only hospital really for Oakland and Berkeley for commercial business, yeah, you have got — you have got either to cross the bridge or go through the tunnel or drive to Alameda [*43] to really get to the next hospital. So from a marketing standpoint it's a must have."[156]

3. The Candidate Tied Markets

The plaintiffs in their complaint alleged four Candidate Tied Markets. The following gives an overview of each Candidate Tied Market and then summarizes certain analyses of the Candidate Markets by the plaintiffs' expert Dr. Chipty.

For the Candidate Tied Markets, Dr. Chipty conducted a "diversion analysis" to study the question of where patients would go if they could no longer go to their first-choice hospital and, based on diversion ratios and data on hospital prices and margins, analyzed how much a profit-maximizing hypothetical monopolist that controlled all non-Kaiser hospitals in each Candidate Tied Market could raise prices at the Sutter hospital in the market.[157]

Dr. Chipty first constructed a patient-level model of non-Kaiser hospitals that patients choose based on factors including (1) patient characteristics, such as age, gender, income, and distance (in minutes) from different hospital choices, (2) patient medical needs, and (3) hospital characteristics, including whether the hospital is a teaching hospital, whether it is a designated trauma facility, and whether [*44] it offers the medical services that the patient needs.[158] She used these results to estimate the "utility" that each patient would obtain from each hospital.[159]

Dr. Chipty then conducted a diversion analysis, a counterfactual experiment where she removed the predicted first-choice hospital from each patient's choice set and asked where the patient would go instead.[160] She computed for each area resident the probability of that resident's choosing each alternative hospital.[161] She also computed "aggregate diversion" levels of the share of all area residents choosing alternative hospitals.[162]

Dr. Chipty then conducted an analysis to calculate the profit-maximizing price increase that a hypothetical monopolist could impose on hospitals in each Candidate Tied Market based on a model of the bargaining framework between hospitals and health plans that takes into account the diversion ratio of hospitals to other in-area or out-of-area hospitals and the hospitals' prices and contribution margins.[163]

3.1 The Modesto HSA

3.1.1 Overview

The Modesto HSA includes the city of Modesto in Stanislaus County, California. There are approximately 342,000 residents in the Modesto HSA.[164] Excluding one Kaiser hospital, there [*45] are two hospitals in the Modesto HSA: Sutter Memorial Medical Center Modesto ("Sutter Modesto") and a non-Sutter hospital, Doctors Medical Center.[165]

166

Between 81 and 84 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the Modesto HSA stay in the Modesto HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining 16 to 19 percent travel out of the Modesto HSA for inpatient hospital services.[167] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the Modesto HSA drive an average [163] Id. at 43-44 (¶¶ 58-59). Dr. Chipty stated that she was unable to conduct a similar diversion analysis for the Candidate Tying Markets because, with respect to six of the proposed Candidate Tying Markets, there are no non-Kaiser hospitals in the Candidate Tying Markets where patients at the Sutter hospitals could be diverted, so the in-area diversion ratio would necessarily be zero percent. Id. at 41 (¶ 54). For the seventh Candidate Tying Market —the combined Berkeley-Oakland HSAs — Dr. Chipty stated that the one non-Sutter hospital (Alameda County Medical Center) was perceived to be of lower quality and thus there were "effectively" no other non-Kaiser hospitals in combined Berkeley-Oakland HSAs where patients at Sutter Alta Bates could be diverted. Chipty Decl. — ECF Nos. 311-3 at 71-72 (under seal), 494-1 at 71-72 (redacted version) (¶¶ 93-94). Dr. Chipty notes, however, that Alameda County Medical Center was among the highest recipients of patients diverted from Sutter Alta Bates. Chipty Decl. — ECF No. 494-1 at 72 n.184 (¶ 94 n.184).

of 18 minutes for their care and the patients who travel out of the Modesto HSA drive an average of 71 minutes for their care.[168]

3.1.2 Dr. Chipty's analyses

Dr. Chipty conducted a diversion analysis to ask where patients would go if Sutter Modesto were removed from each patient's choice set.[169] She estimated that 61 percent of patients would go to another hospital inside the Modesto HSA and that 39 percent of patients would go to a hospital outside the Modesto HSA.[170] She then conducted an analysis to calculate the profit-maximizing price increase that a hypothetical monopolist could impose and estimated that a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all of the non-Kaiser hospitals in the Modesto HSA would find it profitable [*46] to raise Sutter Modesto's price between 12 and 20 percent over Sutter Modesto's actual prices from 2010 to 2012.[171]

3.2 The Sacramento HSA

3.2.1 Overview

The Sacramento HSA includes the city of Sacramento in Sacramento County, California. There are approximately 879,000 residents in the Sacramento HSA.[172] Excluding two Kaiser hospitals, there are four hospitals in the Sacramento HSA: Sutter Medical Center, Sacramento ("Sutter Sacramento") and three non-Sutter hospitals, University of California Davis Medical Center, Methodist Hospital of Sacramento, and Mercy General Hospital.[173]

168 Chipty Decl. — ECF No. 494-1 at 61 (¶ 79). Dr. Gowrisankaran did not analyze the percentage of patients discharged from a non-Kaiser hospital in the Candidate Tied Market HSAs who live within a 30-minute drive of a non-Sutter hospital in another HSA, Gowrisankaran Decl. Ex. 8 — ECF No. 272-3 at 68, and thus those numbers are not included for the Candidate Tied Markets.

Between 78 and 82 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the Sacramento HSA stay in the Sacramento HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining 18 to 22 percent travel out of the Sacramento HSA for inpatient hospital services.[175] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the Sacramento HSA drive an average of 17 minutes for their care and the patients who travel out of the Sacramento HSA drive an average of 38 minutes for their care.[176]

Dr. Chipty conducted a diversion analysis to ask where patients would go if Sutter Sacramento were removed from each [*47] patient's choice set.[177] She estimated that 61 percent of patients would go to another hospital inside the Sacramento HSA and that 39 percent of patients would go to a hospital outside the Sacramento HSA.[178] She then conducted an analysis to calculate the profit-maximizing price increase that a hypothetical monopolist could impose and estimated that a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all of the non-Kaiser hospitals in the Sacramento HSA would find it profitable to raise Sutter Sacramento's price between 11 and 12 percent over Sutter Sacramento's actual prices from 2010 to 2012.[179]

The San Francisco HSA includes the City and County of San Francisco. There are approximately 740,000 residents in the San Francisco HSA.[180] Excluding one Kaiser hospital, there are seven hospitals in the San Francisco HSA: Sutter's California Pacific Medical Center ("CPMC") (which has four campuses: Davies, Pacific, and California, collectively "CPMC Main," and St. Luke's) and six non-Sutter hospitals (Chinese Hospital, Laguna Honda Hospital and Rehabilitation Center, San Francisco General Hospital Medical Center, St. Francis Memorial Hospital, St. Mary's Medical Center-San [*48] Francisco, and University of San Francisco Medical Center).[181]

Between 95 and 98 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the San Francisco HSA stay in the San Francisco HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining three to four percent travel out of the San Francisco HSA for inpatient hospital services.[183] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the San Francisco HSA drive an average of 16 minutes for their care and the patients who travel out of San Francisco HSA drive an average of 45 minutes for their care.[184]

3.3.2 Dr. Chipty's analyses

Dr. Chipty conducted a diversion analysis to ask where patients would go if CPMC Main and CPMC St. Luke's were removed from each patient's choice set.[185] She estimated that 65 percent of patients would go to another hospital inside the San Francisco HSA and that 35 percent of patients would go to a hospital outside the San Francisco HSA.[186] She then conducted an analysis to calculate the profit-maximizing price increase that a hypothetical monopolist could impose and estimated that a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all of the non-Kaiser hospitals

3.4 The Santa Rosa HSA

3.4.1 Overview

The Santa Rosa HSA includes the city of Santa Rosa in Sonoma County, California. There are approximately 256,000 residents in the Santa Rosa HSA.[188] Excluding one Kaiser hospital, there are two hospitals in the Santa Rosa HSA: Sutter Santa Rosa Regional Hospital ("Sutter Santa Rosa") and one non-Sutter hospital, Santa Rosa Memorial Hospital.[189]

Between 75 and 83 percent of the non-Kaiser, commercially insured patients residing in the Santa Rosa HSA stay in the Santa Rosa HSA for inpatient hospital services, and the remaining 17 to 25 percent travel out of the Santa Rosa HSA for inpatient hospital services.[191] Dr. Chipty stated that the patients who stay in the Santa Rosa HSA drive an average of 20 minutes for their care and the patients who travel out of the Santa Rosa HSA drive an average of 67 minutes for their care.[192]

Dr. Chipty conducted a diversion analysis to ask where patients would go if Sutter Santa Rosa were removed from each patient's choice set.[193] She estimated that 73 percent of patients would go to another hospital inside the Santa Rosa HSA and that [*50] 27 percent of patients would go to a hospital outside the Sutter Rosa HSA.[194] She then conducted an analysis to calculate the profit-maximizing price increase that a hypothetical monopolist could impose and estimated that a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all of the non-Kaiser hospitals in the Santa Rosa HSA would find it profitable to raise Sutter Santa Rosa's price between seven and ten percent over Sutter Santa Rosa's actual prices from 2010 to 2012.[195]

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN6[] The court must grant a motion for summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). Material facts are those that may affect the outcome of the case. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. A dispute about a material fact is genuine if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the non-moving party. Id. at 248-49.

HN7[] The party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden of informing the court of the basis for the motion, and identifying portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions, or affidavits that demonstrate the absence of a triable issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). To meet its burden, [*51] "the moving party must either produce evidence negating an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim or defense or show that the nonmoving party does not have enough evidence of an essential element to carry its ultimate burden of persuasion at trial." Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Cos., 210 F.3d 1099, 1102 (9th Cir. 2000); see Devereaux v. Abbey, 263 F.3d 1070, 1076 (9th Cir. 2001) ("When the nonmoving party has the burden of proof at trial, the moving party need only point out 'that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case.'") (quoting Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325).

If the moving party meets its initial burden, then the burden shifts to the non-moving party to produce evidence supporting its claims or defenses. Nissan Fire & Marine, 210 F.3d at 1103. The non-moving party may not rest upon mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's evidence, but instead must produce admissible evidence that shows there is a genuine issue of material fact for trial. See Devereaux, 263 F.3d at 1076. If the non-moving party does not produce evidence to show a genuine issue of material fact, the moving party is entitled to summary judgment. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323.

HN8[] In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the court does not make credibility determinations or weigh conflicting evidence. Instead, it views the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and draws all factual inferences [*52] in the non-moving party's favor. E.g., Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587-88, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Ting v. United States, 927 F.2d 1504, 1509 (9th Cir. 1991).

1. Framing the Issues

---

Before addressing the specifics of the parties' arguments, the court frames the issues relating to Sutter's limited motion for summary judgment.

First, as applied here to the product market of hospitals selling inpatient hospital services to health plans, the hypothetical-monopolist test for defining geographic markets focuses on the responses of health plans, as opposed to patients, to a price increase by hypothetical-monopolist hospitals.

Second, on this limited motion, the plaintiffs do not have to establish definitively that their Candidate Markets are in fact relevant geographic markets for antitrust purposes. In that vein, at this juncture, the plaintiffs do not need to exclude definitively all other possible geographic markets. If there is a dispute of material fact about whether the Candidate Markets could be relevant geographic markets, then the court must deny Sutter's summary-judgment motion.

Third, on this limited motion, there is no per se requirement that the plaintiffs present expert testimony or an econometric analysis in support of their Candidate Markets. If non-expert evidence raises a dispute of [*53] material fact, then the court must deny Sutter's summary-judgment motion.

The next sections address in more detail these three issues.

1.1 As Applied Here, the Hypothetical-Monopolist Test Focuses on How Health Plans, as Opposed to Patients, Would Respond to a Monopolist Hospital

As discussed above, the hypothetical-monopolist test for defining geographic markets "asks what would happen if a single firm became the only seller in a candidate geographical region." Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 468 (citing Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1038). The test then asks whether that hypothetical monopolist could profitably impose a small but significant nontransitory increase in price, or whether consumers would respond to a SSNIP by buying the product from outside the proposed geographic region (i.e., by buying from a seller other than the hypothetical monopolist), thus making the hypothetical monopolist's SSNIP unprofitable. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784.

Here, the consumers responding to a hypothetical-monopolist hospital's SSNIP are health plans, not the health-plan enrollees (i.e., patients), because health plans (not enrollees) directly pay the hospital's price increases. As the Third Circuit explained:

> Imagine that a hospital raised the cost of a procedure from $1,000 to $2,000. The patient [*54] who utilizes health insurance will still have the same out-of-pocket costs before and after the price increase. It is the insurer who will bear the immediate impact of that price increase. Not until the insurer passes that cost on to the patient in the form of higher premiums will the patient feel the impact of that price increase. And even then, the cost will be spread among many insured patients; it will not be felt solely by the patient who receives the higher-priced procedure. This is the commercial reality of the healthcare market as it exists today.

Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 342; see Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 336 (geographic markets must "correspond to the commercial realities of the industry"). Thus, as the Ninth Circuit has recognized, because "the vast majority of health care consumers are not direct purchasers of health care — the consumers purchase health insurance and the insurance companies negotiate directly with the providers, the . . . correct[] focus[is] on the likely response of insurers to a hypothetical demand by all the [hospitals] in a particular market for a SSNIP." St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 (internal quotation marks omitted); see id. at 784 n.10 (because patients are "largely insensitive" to price, antitrust analysis focuses on the interactions between hospitals [*55] and health plans, not hospitals and patients) (citing Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 678, 681-82, 692). Citing the Ninth Circuit's decision in St. Luke's, the Third and Seventh Circuits similarly have held that "when we apply the hypothetical monopolist test, we must also do so through the lens of the insurers," Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 342, and that "[t]he geographic market question is therefore most directly about 'the likely response of insurers,' not patients, to a price increase," Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 471.[196]

[196] Sutter cites ProMedica Health System, Inc. v. FTC, 749 F.3d 559 (6th Cir. 2014), to argue that distinguishing between health plans versus patients as the relevant consumers is "an argument about semantics." Def. MSJ — ECF No. 272 at 16. ProMedica does not hold that distinguishing between health plans and patients is "semantics" in all contexts. That case involved a merger between two of the four hospital systems in Lucas County, Ohio: ProMedica and St. Luke's. Id. at 561. The FTC challenged the merger as adversely affecting competition in violation of the Clayton Act. Id. There was no dispute about the relevant geographic market. Id. at 565. Instead, the main issue was whether ProMedica had rebutted the presumption that the merger would affect competition adversely. Id. at 568 (noting that the merger resulted in a Herfindahl-Hirschman market-concentration index between 4,391 to 6,854, far above the threshold of 2,500 where a merger is presumed to be anticompetitive), 571-72 (addressing ProMedica's arguments that it rebutted the presumption). The Sixth Circuit noted that what was "more remarkable is what ProMedica does not argue. By way of background, the goal of antitrust law is to enhance consumer welfare. . . . But ProMedica did not even attempt to argue before the [Federal Trade] Commission, and does not attempt to argue here, that this merger would benefit consumers (as opposed to only the merging parties themselves) in any way. To the contrary, St. Luke's CEO admitted that a merger with ProMedica might 'harm the community by forcing higher rates on them.'" Id. at 571 (internal brackets omitted). ProMedica argued that the FTC erred in addressing whether the two merging hospitals were substitutes for each other from the perspective of patients, rather than health plans. Id. at 572. The Sixth Circuit rejected that argument as "an argument about semantics. [Health plans] assemble networks based primarily upon patients' preferences, not their own; and thus the extent to which an MCO regards ProMedica and St. Luke's as close substitutes depends upon the extent to which the [health plan]'s members do." Id. But this statement does not mean that the Sixth Circuit endorsed a view that distinguishing between health plans and patients is "semantics" in all contexts, such as in the context of a hypothetical-monopolist test (a test the ProMedica court never addressed) to define a geographic market for hospitals' selling hospital services to health plans. Even if it were, this out-of-circuit pronouncement would not be controlling in light of the Ninth Circuit's more recent, binding opinion in St. Luke's on this issue.

It may be proper to focus on the response of patients, as opposed to health plans, in other contexts, such as in antitrust cases brought by medical providers alleging that they have been shut out of competing for patients. Sutter cites a number of these cases. Def. MSJ — ECF No. 272 at 15, 24-25. For example, one of the cases that Sutter cites, Little Rock Cardiology Clinic PA v. Baptist Health, 591 F.3d 591 (8th Cir. 2009), involved allegations by cardiologists that a large hospital system and a health plan conspired to shut them out from competing to attract patients to their clinic (instead of the hospitals). Id. at 597. In the context of the doctors' claims that they were shut out from competing for patients, it made sense to examine from where doctors draw their patients. Id. at 599; see Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57, 67 (1st Cir. 2004) ("the concern in an ordinary exclusive dealing claim by a shut-out supplier is with the available market for the supplier," as opposed to the buyer) (emphasis in original). Other cases that Sutter cites are similar. See Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 198 (3d Cir. 2005) (ophthalmologist alleging that hospital attempted to prevent him from competing to obtain or retain patients); Surgical Care Ctr. of Hammond, L.C. v. Hosp. Serv. Dist. No. 1, 309 F.3d 836, 838 (5th Cir. 2002) (outpatient surgery clinic alleging that large hospital attempted to monopolize the outpatient-surgery market); Minn. Ass'n of Nurse Anesthetists v. Unity Hosp., 208 F.3d 655, 658-59 (8th Cir. 2000) (nurse anesthetists alleging that hospitals and doctors conspired to shut them out of competing with doctor anesthesiologists); Doctor's Hosp. of Jefferson, Inc. v. Se. Med. All., Inc., 123 F.3d 301, 304 (5th Cir. 1997) (hospital alleging that rival hospital and health plan conspired to monopolize the hospital market); Novak v. Somerset Hosp., 625 F. App'x 65, 67 (3d Cir. 2015) (surgeon alleging that hospital terminated his privileges to perform surgery on patients at the hospital); Brown v. Our Lady of Lourdes Med. Ctr., 767 F. Supp. 618, 620 (D.N.J. 1991) (cardiothoracic surgeon alleging that hospital denied him medical-staff privileges).

None of those medical-provider shut-out cases addresses the hypothetical-monopolist test. And this is not a medical-provider shut-out case. The Ninth Circuit has recognized that competition between medical providers to be included as in-network providers in health plans is a separate stage of competition than competition between medical providers to attract patients. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 n.10 ("This 'two-stage model' of health care competition is 'the accepted model.' In the first stage, providers compete for inclusion in insurance plans. In the second stage, providers seek to attract patients enrolled in the plans.") (citing John J. Miles, 1 Health Care & Antitrust L. § 1:5 (2014); Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 674, 681-82); accord Gowrisankaran Decl. — ECF No. 272-3 at 14-16 (¶¶ 19-22) (Sutter's expert agreeing these stages of competition are different). With respect to negotiations between medical providers and health plans and the hypothetical-monopolist test, the focus is on the response of health plans, as opposed to patients. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 & n.10; accord Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 471; Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 342.

This is of course not to suggest that the response of patients is irrelevant. Cf. id. at 343. For example, "[i]n assessing the impact of dropping a hospital from its network . . ., a [health] plan must consider both how individual employees are likely to react and how the loss might affect the employer's willingness to offer that plan to its employees." Vistnes, 67 Antitrust L.J. at 678; accord Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 475. But the response of health plans may not mirror the response of patients, which is why the Ninth Circuit (and the Third and Seventh Circuits) distinguish between the two. For example, if health plans believe — rightly or wrongly — that their potential customer base would react negatively to their dropping a hospital from their networks, [*56] they might respond to the hospital's imposing a SSNIP by paying the price increase. That response might satisfy the hypothetical-monopolist test regardless of whether the belief that drove them to pay the price increase ultimately was inaccurate or misguided in some way. Thus, courts distinguish the responses, and it is the latter response — the response of health plans — that is the focus of the hypothetical-monopolist test here.

1.2 At Summary Judgment, the Plaintiffs Do Not Have to Establish Definitively That Their Candidate Markets Are Relevant Geographic Markets or Exclude All Other Possible Geographic Markets

HN9[] Defining the relevant geographic markets is generally a question for the jury. Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045 ("the validity of the 'relevant market' is typically a factual element rather than a legal element") (citing High Tech. Careers v. San Jose Mercury News, 996 F.2d 987, 990 (9th Cir. 1993)); *Dooley v. Crab Boat Owners Ass'n, No. C 02-0676 MHP, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7117, 2004 WL 902361, at 9 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 26, 2004) ("The definition of the relevant market — both product and geographic — is generally a question of fact reserved for the jury.") (citing High Tech. Careers, 996 F.2d at 990; Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Res. Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 363 (9th Cir. 1988)).

The plaintiffs bear the ultimate burden of defining the relevant geographic markets. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 (citing Conn. Nat'l Bank, 418 U.S. at 669-70). On a motion for summary judgment, "[i]f the [plaintiff]'s [*57] evidence cannot sustain a jury verdict on the issue of market definition, summary judgment is appropriate." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435.

On a summary-judgment motion, the court must view the evidence and draw all inferences with respect to defining the relevant geographic market in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435 (citing Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249-52, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)); County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1159 & n.9 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250). "While the [plaintiff] bear[s] the burden of demonstrating a relevant market at trial, [the moving party] has the burden on summary judgment of demonstrating that there is no genuine issue of material fact." *Hynix Semiconductor Inc. v. Rambus Inc., No. CV-00-20905 RMW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123822, 2008 WL 73689, at 9 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 5, 2008). If there is a dispute of material fact regarding the proper geographic markets, summary judgment must be denied.

At summary judgment, the plaintiffs do not need to establish definitively that their Candidate Markets are relevant geographic markets for antitrust purposes. It is enough to raise a dispute of material fact about whether their Candidate Markets could be relevant geographic markets to overcome a summary-judgment motion. In that vein, at summary judgment, the plaintiffs do not need to exclude definitively all other possible relevant geographic markets. The fact that the plaintiffs might not have [*58] foreclosed all other possible geographic-market definitions does not mean that they have failed to raise a dispute of material fact regarding their Candidate Markets and does not, without more, entitle Sutter to summary judgment.[197]

1.3 At Summary Judgment, There Is No Per Se Requirement for the Plaintiffs to Present Expert Testimony or an Econometric Analysis in Support of Their Candidate Markets

[197] The court expresses no opinion here as to whether the plaintiffs must exclude other possible geographic markets to prevail at trial. It holds only that the plaintiffs need not do so at summary judgment.

Sutter argues that "courts routinely hold that 'construction of the relevant market and a showing of monopoly power must be based on expert testimony,'" citing an Eleventh Circuit case, Bailey v. Allgas, Inc., 284 F.3d 1237, 1246 (11th Cir. 2002).[198] Sutter has not identified any court in the Ninth Circuit that has held that a plaintiff must base its market definition on expert testimony to withstand summary judgment.[199] Cf. AFMS LLC v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 696 F. App'x 293, 294 (9th Cir. 2017) (Nguyen, J., concurring in the result) ("AFMS was not required, as the district court suggested, to provide expert testimony regarding the relevant market.") (citing United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 549, 86 S. Ct. 1665, 16 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1966) ("Certainly the failure of the Government to prove by an army of expert witnesses what constitutes a relevant 'economic' or 'geographic' market is not an adequate ground on which to dismiss a [Clayton Act § 7] case.")); *see also Hynix Semiconductor Inc. v. Rambus Inc., No. CV-00-20905 RMW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123822, 2008 WL 73689, at 10 n.13 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 5, 2008) (describing [*59] the Eleventh Circuit as having "gone farther" than the Ninth Circuit in holding that construction of the relevant market must be based on expert testimony).

To the contrary, in St. Luke's, for example, the Ninth Circuit focused on testimony from health-industry participants — about how health plans had to include Nampa-based primary-care physicians ("PCPs") in their network in order for their health-insurance products to be marketable to Nampa residents — to affirm the trial-court finding that Nampa was a geographic market. See St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 785 ("Evidence was presented that insurers generally need local PCPs to market a health care plan, and that this is true in particular in the Nampa market. For example, Blue Cross of Idaho has PCPs in every zip code in which it has customers, and the executive director of the Idaho Physicians Network testified that it could not market a health care network in Nampa that did not include Nampa PCPs.");[200] accord Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 345-46 (similarly focusing on testimony from health plans about which hospitals they needed to include in network in order for their health-insurance products to be marketable, as opposed to expert testimony, to define a geographic market); see also [*60] Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 538 ("The profitability of a hypothetical increase in the price of a hypothetical monopolist of product A depends, of course, on the reactions of customers and of other suppliers. To predict those reactions and their impact on the hypothetical monopolist's profitability, we look to[, among other things,] testimony by customers or alternative suppliers of how they would respond to the hypothetical price increase."). To take another counterexample, in a case from this district involving antitrust claims relating to crab fishing, the court held on a motion for summary judgment that (non-expert) declarations by the plaintiff fisherman and a third-party seafood buyer that consumers prefer San Francisco crab to other crab were sufficient to raise a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether the relevant geographic market for the crab product market should be defined as being the San Francisco Bay Area. *Dooley, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7117, 2004 WL 902361, at 10.[201]

[199] Hr'g Tr. — ECF No. 611 at 137. Sutter points to Hammer v. Clear Channel Communications (In re Live Concert Antitrust Litigation), 863 F. Supp. 2d 966 (C.D. Cal. 2012) (cited by Def. MSJ Reply — ECF No. 436 at 17; Hr'g Tr. — ECF No. 611 at 139), but that case is inapposite. In that case, the plaintiffs relied solely on their expert to provide an evidentiary basis for their product (not geographic) market definition. See Live Concert, 863 F. Supp. 2d at 1000 ("Plaintiffs do not argue . . . that there is an adequate evidentiary basis in the record, absent [their expert's] testimony, for a jury to find that Plaintiffs have defined an economically significant product market."). The court excluded the plaintiffs' expert, and then granted the defendants partial summary judgment because the plaintiffs offered no evidence besides their expert in support of their market definition. Id. But that case does not stand for the principle that plaintiffs must always base their market definition on expert testimony if — unlike the Live Concert plaintiffs — the plaintiffs also have non-expert evidence that supports their market definition.

[201] Additionally, even where parties rely on expert opinion to support their market definitions, there is no requirement that the expert conduct an econometric analysis, as opposed to basing the expert opinion on other facts. *In re Apple iPod iTunes Antitrust Litig., No. 05-CV-0037 YGR, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136437, 2014 WL 4809288, at 7 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 26, 2014)

In the absence of any Ninth Circuit authority holding that a geographic-market definition must be based on expert testimony, the court does not adopt that rule here. Cf. Lantec, Inc. v. Novell, Inc., 146 F. Supp. 2d 1140, 1148 (D. Utah 2001) (HN10[] "The absence of expert testimony on the issue of [*61] relevant market and like issues is not, per se, fatal to a plaintiff's antitrust claims. In other words, expert testimony is not required, but in its absence a plaintiff must show by other evidence sufficient facts from which a jury could infer market share, market power, relevant market, monopolization, dangerous probability of monopolization, and the like.") (citing Gen. Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 806 (8th Cir. 1987)), aff'd, 306 F.3d 1003 (10th Cir. 2002); accord Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 531f ("Courts have disagreed about whether expert testimony is necessary to establish a relevant market. We do not believe a categorical rule is necessary.").[202]

2. Selecting Initial Candidate Markets for the Hypothetical-Monopolist Test

The parties agree that the hypothetical-monopolist test is the "well-established test," and neither argues that any other test should be used here to define the relevant geographic markets.[203] The parties also agree that the hypothetical-monopolist test begins by selecting at an initial "candidate" geographic market.[204]

The parties disagree about the initial candidate markets. The plaintiffs argue that their HSAbased Candidate Markets are appropriate initial candidate markets.[205] Sutter argues that HSAs are not appropriate initial candidate markets.[206] Sutter [*62] does not propose appropriate initial candidate markets, other than to suggest "a wide variety of other markets, counties or regions, or just looking at maps."[207] Sutter does not offer a methodology for determining whether a given geographic market is an appropriate initial candidate market.

As noted above, HN11[] defining the relevant markets is typically a question of fact. Absent a showing that the plaintiffs may not use HSA-based markets as initial candidate markets as a matter of law — a showing that Sutter has not made here[208] — the question of what initial candidate markets to use in the hypothetical-monopolist test to define the relevant geographic market is a question of fact. On a summary-judgment motion, all inferences must be drawn in the non-moving party's favor, and thus at this juncture, the court adopts the plaintiffs' approach of using (denying defendant's motion to exclude an expert opinion on market definition that was based on "internal Apple documents, employee testimony, and discovery responses, third-party information such as contemporaneous financial analysis and press coverage . . ., and his own experience," and holding that the defendant's argument that an expert opinion on market definitions must be based on an econometric analysis "lacks legal support").

[202] The court does not suggest that non-expert declarations are sufficient in all instances to raise a genuine dispute of material fact regarding geographic market-definitions on a summary-judgment motion. Cf. Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs, 924 F.2d at 1490 (defining geographic markets can be a "highly technical economic question"). But it also is not the case that non-expert evidence is per se insufficient to raise a genuine dispute of material fact.

[208] Sutter argues that the plaintiffs are starting with initial candidate markets "that we've now pretty much all agreed were not created with antitrust geographic markets in mind[.]" Id. at 8; see also Def. MSJ - ECF No. 272 at 7-8 ("HSAs were not constructed for antitrust purposes or with hospital competition in mind."). But Sutter has not identified any proposed initial candidate markets that were constructed with antitrust geographic markets in mind. Other courts have defined geographic markets in terms of cities, counties, etc., which were no more created with antitrust geographic markets in mind than were HSAs.

their HSA-based Candidate Markets as initial candidate markets for the purposes of the hypothetical-monopolist test.[209]

3. The Candidate Tying Markets

In six of the seven Candidate Tying Markets (the Antioch, Auburn, Crescent City, [*63] Jackson, Lakeport, and Tracy HSAs), there is only one non-Kaiser hospital (Sutter Delta, Sutter Auburn, Sutter Coast, Sutter Amador, Sutter Lakeside, and Sutter Tracy, respectively). Using the Candidate Tying Markets as initial candidate markets, the hypothetical-monopolist test for each candidate market is this: if the Sutter hospital in that candidate market imposed a SSNIP, would health plans respond by (1) paying the Sutter hospital's price increases (thereby keeping it in network) or (2) refusing to pay the Sutter hospital's price increases (thereby rendering it out of network) and instead buying from other hospitals?[210]

In the seventh Candidate Tying Market, the combined Berkeley-Oakland HSA, there are Sutter hospitals (the Sutter Alta Bates campuses) and one non-Sutter, non-Kaiser hospital (Alameda County Medical Center). Using the combined Berkeley-Oakland HSA as an initial candidate market, the hypothetical-monopolist test reduces to the following: if a single firm controlled Sutter Alta Bates and Alameda County Medical Center and imposed a SSNIP at those hospitals, would health plans respond by (1) paying the price increases (thereby keeping the hospitals in network) [*64] or (2) refusing to pay the price increases (thereby rendering the hospitals out of network) and instead buying from other hospitals? If health plans would pay the hospitals' price increases, the proposed candidate markets are geographic markets for antitrust purposes.

[209] It is worth noting that Sutter is not complaining that that the plaintiffs' Candidate Markets are too broad. An initial candidate market might pass the hypothetical-monopolist test despite being too broad. (For example, an initial candidate market of the entire United States would pass the hypothetical-monopolist test because if a hypothetical monopolist controlled every hospital in the United States and imposed a SSNIP, health plans would respond by paying it instead of buying hospital services only from hospitals outside the market (i.e., hospitals in other countries). But this would not exclude the possibility that that candidate market is too broad to be a properly defined relevant geographic market.) Instead, Sutter is complaining that the plaintiffs' initial candidate markets are too narrow. See Def. MSJ - ECF No. 272 at 22-23 (arguing that geographic markets should be larger than HSAs), 26 ("the proffered HSAs are too narrow to constitute relevant geographic markets"). The hypothetical-monopolist test accounts for the scenario where initial candidate markets are too narrow: if the candidate market is too narrow and buyers thus would turn to alternate sellers outside of the candidate market, broaden the candidate market to include those alternate sellers and rerun the test. Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 468; accord St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784. If buyers would not turn to alternate sellers outside of the candidate market, that does not mean that the initial candidate market was too narrow. Indeed, it may mean the opposite.

Sutter cites Little Rock Cardiology, 591 F.3d 591, in which the Eighth Circuit cautioned against plaintiffs delineating arbitrarily narrow geographic markets. Def. MSJ Reply - ECF No. 436 at 10-11. As discussed above, Little Rock Cardiology was a medical-provider shut-out case, which does not present its issues in the same context as this case. See supra note 196. The Little Rock Cardiology court looked to the response of patients (not health plans) and did not address the hypothetical-monopolist test (which accounts for the scenario where initial candidate markets are too narrow).

Sutter also claims that the asserted geographic markets in the Third Circuit's Penn State Hershey case and the Seventh Circuit's Advocate Health case spanned eleven and nine HSAs, respectively, to suggest that HSA-based markets are too narrow to be relevant geographic markets for antitrust purposes. Def. MSJ - ECF No. 272 at 22. Sutter conspicuously does not address the Ninth Circuit's St. Luke's case and does not say whether the geographic market there — the city of Nampa, Idaho — supports its theory that geographic markets should be broader than a single HSA. See id.

[210] As discussed above, the parties agree to exclude Kaiser hospitals for the purposes of this summary-judgment motion. See supra note 50. In any event, it is not clear that including Kaiser hospitals would substantially change the outcome. The hypothetical-monopolist test requires one to assume that a single firm becomes the only seller in the candidate market and imposed a SSNIP, so if the Kaiser hospital were included, the hypothetical-monopolist test would require one to assume that the SSNIPimposing hypothetical monopolist controlled the Kaiser hospital, in addition to the Sutter hospital.

The Blue Shield Redirection Analysis, the application of the Knox-Keene Act, and other evidence from health plans and from Sutter raise disputes of material fact about whether, if hypothetical-monopolist hospitals in the Candidate Tying Markets imposed a SSNIP, health plans would respond by paying the price increases. They thus raise disputes of material fact as to whether the hypothetical-monopolist test is satisfied and, therefore, whether the plaintiffs' Candidate Tying Markets are geographic markets for antitrust purposes.[211]

Blue Shield's Director of Provider Contracting for Northern California testified that Blue Shield conducts redirection analyses when its agreements with Sutter come up for renewal, specifically to assess "okay, if Sutter's out of network, what can be redirected elsewhere, what are their alternatives, what our cost implications are."[212] The Blue Shield Redirection [*65] Analysis conducted in 2014 estimated that if Sutter were to go out of network, [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of Blue Shield enrollees that use the Sutter hospitals in the Candidate Tying Markets would not be willing to use other hospitals.[213] A former Blue Shield Senior Vice President said in a sworn declaration that "providing broad geographic coverage for members is important. In addition, certain Sutter hospitals and physician groups are 'must have' providers because particular Blue Shield customers insist that they be included in the network."[214] The former Senior Vice President further attested that Sutter's "leveraging of its market position in multiple counties (where they are dominant) to demand higher rates across the board has forced Blue Shield to accept Sutter's significantly higher pricing."[215]

This raises a dispute of material fact about whether, if a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all of the hospitals in each of the respective Candidate Tying Markets (i.e., the Sutter hospitals) imposed a SSNIP, health plans like Blue Shield would pay those price increases (rather than refusing to pay and losing those hospitals from their networks, and thereby running the risk [*66] that a significant percentage of enrollees might in turn stop buying their health-insurance products because they no longer offered their hospitals-of-choice as in-network providers). And if there is a dispute of material fact about whether buyers (i.e., health plans like Blue Shield) would pay a hypothetical monopolist's price increases, then there is a dispute of material fact about whether the hypothetical-monopolist test is satisfied and thus whether the Candidate Tying Markets are geographic markets for antitrust purposes.

Sutter argues that there was "nothing scientific" about the Blue Shield Redirection Analysis and that it was a "back-of-the-envelope product" that was "not the result of the sort of economic rigor that a court would expect to see [from an expert witness]."[216] Sutter argues that the Blue Shield network-management team "provided the hospital redirection numbers, adjusting them if the team thought they were 'too much' or 'not enough'" and "[w]hen determining how many patients would move from one hospital to another, Blue Shield was 'just looking at assumptions,' not 'any numbers,' admission patterns, or data, and there 'was no testing' of the assumptions on which it [*67] relied."[217] Sutter argues that the Blue Shield Redirection Analysis does not accurately describe how Blue Shield enrollees would in fact react to Sutter's hospitals going out of network and that one of Blue Shield's customers criticized the Redirection Analysis as "relying on 'assumptions in some regions [that] did not make sense'" and as being "in need of reworking."[218] Sutter argues that "far from being an unbiased, scientific exercise, the Redirection Analysis was 'one of the levers' Blue Shield used to determine the plan designs it wanted to sell."[219] Sutter argues that more Blue Shield enrollees might be willing to be redirected to other non-Sutter hospitals than the Redirection Analysis estimated.[220]

[211] Because this non-expert evidence raises disputes of material fact with respect to the Candidate Tying Markets, the court does not address whether Dr. Chipty's report also raises disputes of material fact. The court denies as moot Sutter's motion to exclude Dr. Chipty's opinions regarding the Candidate Tying Markets.

Sutter's arguments attacking the accuracy or reliability of the Redirection Analysis are misplaced on this narrow motion for summary judgment. As discussed above, the hypothetical-monopolist test focuses not on how patients would respond to a hypothetical-monopolist hospital's imposing a SSNIP but on how health plans would respond. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 & n.10; accord Advocate Health, 841 F.3d at 471; Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 342. The hypothetical-monopolist test thus does not solely turn on whether [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of Blue Shield enrollees who [*68] use the Sutter hospitals could not be redirected to other hospitals (as the Blue Shield Redirection Analysis estimated). What the test might turn on is whether Blue Shield concluded that [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] percent of its enrollees could not be redirected, and thus would respond by paying a price increase to keep those hospitals in network. Blue Shield conducted these redirection analyses to determine the repercussions of its terminating its agreement with Sutter. Sutter's arguments — that the Blue Shield Redirection Analysis's estimates were unscientific, based on unverifiable assumptions, contradicted by other analyses, or just plain wrong — do not demonstrate an absence of material fact about whether Blue Shield concluded from those estimates that it could not afford to terminate its agreement with Sutter and thus would pay a price increase rather than lose Sutter hospitals from its network.

Sutter also argues that the Redirection Analysis conflicts with Blue Shield's real-world experience with narrower provider networks and Blue Shield's representations to California regulators about what substitute hospitals were available.[221] Sutter cites to the district-court decision in [*69] Advocate Health and argues that there, "the district court 'shared some of defendants' concerns about the credibility of the insurers' testimony, which may indeed be self-serving,' but set those concerns aside because that 'there [wa]s no inconsistency in the insurers' testimony,"[222] whereas here, by contrast, "the inconsistency of Blue Shield's own positions regarding substitutable hospitals is overwhelming, and the record as a whole contradicts the redirection analysis."[223]

This argument is misplaced on this narrow motion for summary judgment. Advocate Health was before the court on a preliminary-injunction motion, where the court had to weigh the evidence to determine the likelihood of the plaintiff's success on the merits. This is a summary-judgment motion, where the court does not weigh evidence and instead draws all inferences in the non-moving party's favor. Contradictions in Blue Shield's positions at most raise disputes of fact. They do not provide a basis for discounting the Blue Shield Redirection Analysis, much less for granting Sutter summary judgment.

For each of the Candidate Tying Markets, the Blue Shield Redirection Analysis raises disputes of material fact as to whether [*70] the hypothetical-monopolist test is satisfied, and thus, whether the Candidate Tying Markets are geographic markets for antitrust purposes.

3.1.2 Knox-Keene Act

A former Blue Shield Senior Vice President stated in a sworn declaration that if a Blue Shield enrollee "liv[es] in a rural area of Northern California, and the only hospital within 30 minutes or 15 miles of his residence or workplace was a Sutter hospital, the [Knox-Keene Act] mandates that Sutter's hospital be included in the network."[224]

Sutter's expert Dr. Gowrisankaran stated that for the patients discharged from Sutter Delta, Sutter Auburn, Sutter Coast, Sutter Amador, and Sutter Lakeside, 49 to 100 percent of them do not live within a 30-minute drive of another non-Kaiser hospital. Additionally, the DMHC sent Blue Shield notices that it effectively had to keep Sutter Delta, Sutter Coast, Sutter Amador, and Sutter Lakeside in network for certain hospital services because there were no other alternative hospitals available that complied with Knox-Keene Act requirements. This raises a dispute of material fact as to whether, if a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all of the hospitals in the Antioch, Auburn, Crescent City, [*71] Jackson, and Lakeport HSAs (i.e., Sutter Delta, Sutter Auburn, Sutter Coast, Sutter Amador, and Sutter Lakeside) imposed a SSNIP, health plans would pay those price increases (rather than refusing to pay and losing those hospitals from their networks, and thereby losing a significant portion of that potential-enrollee customer base because they would no longer have Knox-Keene Act compliant hospitals to offer). And if there is a dispute of material fact about whether buyers (i.e., health plans) would pay a hypothetical monopolist's price increases, then there is a dispute of material fact about whether the hypothetical-monopolist test is satisfied and thus whether the Antioch, Auburn, Crescent City, Jackson, and Lakeport HSAs are geographic markets for antitrust purposes.

Sutter argues that the Knox-Keene Act 30-minute regulations are only "presumptively reasonable standards" and that "health plans can comply with California's reasonable accessibility requirements after taking into account a range of other factors, including whether the community is rural or urban."[225] Again, Sutter's argument is misplaced on this narrow motion for summary judgment. Whether health plans might have exceptions [*72] to the Knox-Keene Act 30-minute requirement that might be applicable in certain situations does not demonstrate an absence of material fact about whether health plans understood that the Knox-Keene Act generally would bar them from being able to sell health-insurance products to a significant percentage of their customer bases.

Sutter also argues that several of its hospitals are within a 30-minute drive of a non-Sutter hospital.[226] But the Knox-Keene Act does not require health plans to offer in-network hospitals within a 30-minute drive of other hospitals; it requires them to offer in-network hospitals within a 30-minute drive of their enrollees. The fact that a non-Sutter hospital may be within a 30-minute drive of a Sutter hospital does not mean that the non-Sutter hospital is within a 30-minute drive of the enrollees who currently use that Sutter hospital.[227]

For the Antioch, Auburn, Crescent City, Jackson, and Lakeport HSAs, the application of the Knox-Keene Act raises a dispute of material fact as to whether the hypothetical-monopolist test is satisfied, and thus, whether the Antioch, Auburn, Crescent City, Jackson, and Lakeport HSAs are geographic markets for antitrust [*73] purposes.

3.1.3 Other evidence

[227] For example, that there might be a non-Sutter hospital 30 minutes east of a particular Sutter hospital does not mean that the non-Sutter hospital is within a 30-minute drive of the enrollees who currently use that Sutter hospital, such as enrollees who live to the west of the Sutter hospital.

According to the UnitedHealthcare Email, UnitedHealthcare's Director of Provider Services for Northern California believed that Sutter had monopolies in a number of submarkets, including Auburn, Amador, Tracy, Antioch, Berkeley, Oakland, and Clearlake, and that it was "not feasible" to present a health-maintenance-organization or fee-for-service insurance network that did not include Sutter.[228] This raises a dispute of material fact as to whether, if a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all hospitals in the Antioch, Auburn, Jackson, Lakeport, Tracy, and combined Berkeley-Oakland HSAs (i.e., Sutter Delta, Sutter Auburn, Sutter Amador, Sutter Lakeside, Sutter Tracy, and Sutter Alta Bates) imposed a SSNIP, health plans like UnitedHealthcare would pay those price increases (rather than refusing to pay and losing those hospitals from their networks).

Aetna's Vice President for Network Management in Northern California testified that "there are some rural hospitals where Sutter hospitals are really it for a given area," including Sutter Alta Bates, Sutter Amador, Sutter Auburn, Sutter Lakeside, and Sutter Coast, and that such hospitals were "really the must-have [*74] from a marketability or a member perception standpoint."[229] This raises a dispute of material fact as to whether, if a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all hospitals in the Auburn, Crescent City, Jackson, Lakeport, and combined Berkeley-Oakland HSAs (i.e., Sutter Auburn, Sutter Coast, Sutter Amador, Sutter Lakeside, and Sutter Alta Bates) were to impose a SSNIP, health plans like Aetna would pay those price increases, rather than refusing to pay and losing those hospitals from their networks.

The Sutter Model Amendment designated Sutter Amador, Sutter Coast, and Sutter Lakeside as "rural hospitals," which Sutter's Chief Contracting Officer testified meant a hospital "that in all practical reality was the hospital, the local hospital in that community, typically a more rural community[that d]oesn't have other hospitals in the local vicinity."[230] The Sutter Blue Cross Amendment similarly designated Sutter Amador, Sutter Coast, and Sutter Lakeside as "Rural Hospitals," defined as a designation for a hospital "which acts as the sole practical resource for acute care and emergency care within the rural community it serves, and the next closest facility is at least 30 miles away[.]"[231] Anthem's former Director of Network Development for Northern [*75] California and Vice President of Provider Engagement and Contracting for California agreed that these hospitals were "essentially the only game in town" in their rural areas.[232] This raises a dispute of material fact as to whether, if a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all hospitals in the Crescent City, Jackson, and Lakeport HSAs (i.e., Sutter Coast, Sutter Amador, and Sutter Lakeside) imposed a SSNIP, health plans would pay those price increases (rather than refusing to pay and losing those hospitals from their networks).

Sutter argues that "[o]ffhand comments that certain Sutter hospitals are 'monopolies' or 'must have hospitals' say nothing of the actual boundaries of a market, which could just as readily be a multi-county area or a two-block radius of the hospital as an HSA."[233] But on a summary-judgment motion, that this evidence might also support other geographic-market definitions does not demonstrate an absence of material fact about the plaintiffs' Candidate Markets. HN12[] The Supreme Court has recognized that "[a]n element of 'fuzziness would seem inherent in any attempt to delineate the relevant geographical market,'" Conn. Nat'l Bank, 418 U.S. at 669, and thus the boundaries of a relevant geographic market [*76] "need not . . . be defined with scientific precision," id., or "by metes and bounds as a surveyor would lay off a plot of ground," Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. at 549. As Sutter's expert Dr. Gowrisankaran testified, "[a] market analysis does not always yield only one market definition that is accurate. It might yield a couple of different market definitions that could each be plausible."[234] That the plaintiffs' evidence might not foreclose all other possible geographic-market definitions does not mean that it fails to raise a dispute of material fact in support of the plaintiffs' Candidate Markets and does not entitle Sutter to summary judgment.[235]

There are disputes of material fact about whether the plaintiffs can establish that the Candidate Tying Markets are geographic markets for antitrust purposes. The court denies Sutter's motion for summary judgment with respect to the Candidate Tying Markets.

4. The Candidate Tied Markets

HN13[] Courts have recognized that a hypothetical monopolist's ability to impose a SSNIP of five percent may satisfy the hypothetical-monopolist test. Penn State Hershey, 838 F.3d at 338 nn.1-2 (citing U.S. Dep't of Justice & Fed. Trade Comm'n, Horizonal Merger Guidelines § 4.1.2 (2010); St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 n.9)). The plaintiffs' expert Dr. Chipty [*77] conducted diversion analyses for the Candidate Tied Markets (the Modesto, Sacramento, San Francisco, and Santa Rosa HSAs) and estimated that a hypothetical monopolist that controlled all of the hospitals in each such market could profitably impose a SSNIP of between seven and twenty percent at the Sutter hospital in the market. This raises a dispute of material fact as to whether the hypothetical-monopolist test is satisfied for the Candidate Tied Markets and thus, whether they are relevant geographic markets for antitrust purposes.

[234] Gowrisankaran Dep. - ECF No. 311-4 at 14 (under seal).

[235] In his deposition testimony, Dr. Gowrisankaran raised the prospect of whether, in the context of a product market of hospitals selling inpatient hospital services to health plans, geographic markets can be defined as a set of sellers in a geographic region — i.e., that the market can be defined by listing what hospitals are part of the market and what hospitals are outside of it — rather than by trying to draw precise "metes and bounds" on a map. Dr. Gowrisankaran testified that the courts in Advocate Health defined their geographic market solely by specifying which hospitals were inside the market and which hospitals were outside and did not define the precise boundaries of the market. Gowrisankaran Dep. - ECF No. 311-4 at 34-35 (pp. 237-38) (under seal) ("[W]hat the courts accepted in this case was not the geographic markets that I've outlined there in the shape files. . . . Rather what they accepted is that, or what they stipulated was that the following hospitals are in the geographic market. . . . There w[ere] no precise geographic boundaries for which — which residents lived inside the market. There were precise boundaries for — there are precise definitions of which hospitals were inside the market."). As Dr. Gowrisankaran explained, "what really needs to happen in an antitrust setting is — is understanding what are the sets of potential competitors and the likely set of potential competitors and using that as the basis for a market analysis. A market analysis does not always yield only one market definition that is accurate. It might yield a couple of different market definitions that could each be plausible. And what these — what these sentences [that relevant markets need not have precise metes and bounds] are pointing out is that what's important here is not saying well, we want to have an airtight definition of a market, but rather that it's the process of market analysis that identifies likely potential competitors to any firm[.]" Id. at 14 (p. 110). Taking into account the "the commercial realities of the industry," Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 336-37 (internal quotation marks omitted) — including the fact that in a market between hospitals and health plans, both the seller and the buyer are stationary and cannot move — Dr. Gowrisankaran's testimony raises the question of whether it is sufficient to define the market by listing which sellers are in the market and which sellers are out, as opposed to trying to engage in "metes and bounds" line-drawing on a map in the spaces between hospitals. Cf. St. Luke's, 778 F.3d at 784 (markets, ultimately, are just "groups of sellers"); Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 530a ("To define a market is to identify those producers providing customers of a defendant firm (or firms) with alternative sources for the defendant's product or service."). Under that framework, a geographic market of the Crescent City HSA and Sutter's hypothetical two-block radius around the Sutter Coast hospital would be functionally equivalent: each would clearly and concretely define which sellers are in the market (Sutter Coast) and which sellers are not (hospitals other than Sutter Coast). The court expresses no opinion here on this approach, other than to say that these questions further demonstrate why, at this juncture, Sutter has not established that there are no disputes of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Sutter moves to exclude Dr. Chipty's opinions with respect to the plaintiffs proposed geographic markets, including the Candidate Tied Markets, under Daubert v. Merrill Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993).[236]

HN14[] "A witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if: (a) the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue; (b) the testimony is based on sufficient facts or data; (c) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods; and (d) the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts [*78] of the case." Fed. R. Evid. 702. "Under Daubert, the trial court must act as a 'gatekeeper' to exclude junk science that does not meet Federal Rule of Evidence 702's reliability standards by making a preliminary determination that the expert's testimony is reliable." Ellis v. Costco Wholesale Corp., 657 F.3d 970, 982 (9th Cir. 2011) (citing Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 145, 147-49, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999)). "Daubert does not require a court to admit or to exclude evidence based on its persuasiveness; rather it requires a court to admit or exclude evidence based on its scientific reliability and relevance." Id. (citing Daubert, 509 U.S. at 589-90). "Thus, an expert's 'inference or assertion must be derived by the scientific method' to be admissible." Id. (citing Daubert, 509 U.S. at 590). "A trial court has broad latitude not only in determining whether an expert's testimony is reliable, but also in deciding how to determine the testimony's reliability." Id. (citing Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 152).

Sutter does not dispute that Dr. Chipty has the knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education to render an expert opinion.[237] Instead, Sutter raises two main objections why Dr. Chipty's report is unreliable with respect to the Candidate Tied Markets.

First, Sutter argues that Dr. Chipty created a "brand new methodology" to analyze the Candidate Tied Markets that has never been used in any prior antitrust case and that (so Sutter argues) [*79] was not subject to peer review and publication.[238] The Ninth Circuit recently reversed a district-court decision excluding expert reports for placing undue weight on arguments akin to those that Sutter makes here. The Ninth Circuit explained:

> [T]he district court was wrong to put so much weight on the fact that the experts' opinions were not developed independently of litigation and had not been published. While independent research into the topic at issue is helpful to establish reliability, its absence does not mean the experts' methods were unreliable. Where "the proffered expert testimony is not based on independent research," the experts can instead present "other objective, verifiable evidence that the testimony is based on 'scientifically valid principles.'" To be sure, 'one means of showing that the testimony is based on scientifically valid principles is by proof that the research and analysis supporting the proffered conclusions have been subjected to normal scientific scrutiny through peer review and publication.' However, expert testimony may still be reliable and admissible without peer review and publication.

Wendell v. GlaxoSmithKline LLC, 858 F.3d 1227, 1235 (9th Cir. 2017) (citations and internal brackets omitted). Dr. Chipty's report [*80] explains the formulas that she used and cites the articles and sources that support her opinion. Further, she testified that "my sense from reading the materials written — including by the testifying expert in [the Advocate Health] case — I believe this type of approach has been used recently in the Advocate [Health] matter."[239] To the extent that Sutter believes that Dr. Chipty's formulas are incorrect or that she failed to consider important facts, it can challenge her on cross-examination. Cf. id. at 1237 (HN15[] "Where, as here, the experts' opinions are not the 'junk science' Rule 702 was meant to exclude, the interests of justice favor leaving difficult issues in the hands of the jury and relying on the safeguards of the adversary system — 'vigorous cross-

Milk Antitrust Litig., 739 F.3d 262, 281 (6th Cir. 2014)* (reversing district-court decision excluding expert opinion on hypothetical-monopolist test and holding that "[i]ncluding some facts while admitting others goes to the accuracy of the conclusions, not to the reliability of the testimony") (citations and internal quotation [*81] marks omitted).

Second, Sutter argues that Dr. Chipty did not use her diversion analysis for the Candidate Tying Markets, and her failure to use a common methodology for the Candidate Tied and Tying Markets renders her opinions unreliable. The court disagrees. That a hospital in a given region may have so few competitors that there are no other hospitals where its patients can be diverted — and hence a diversion analysis cannot be applied — does not render unreliable a diversion analysis for hospitals that have closer competitors.

The court denies Sutter's motion to exclude Dr. Chipty's opinions with respect to the Candidate Tying Markets.

There are disputes of material fact about whether the plaintiffs can establish that the Candidate Tied Markets are geographic markets for antitrust purposes. Sutter's motion for summary judgment with respect to the Candidate Tied Markets is denied.

CONCLUSION

The court grants summary judgment with respect to the Davis HSA Candidate Tying Market and otherwise denies Sutter's motion for summary judgment.

Because Dr. Chipty's opinions about the Candidate Tying Markets and Dr. Gowrisankaran's opinions generally do not affect the outcome of Sutter's summary-judgment [*82] motion, the court denies as moot Sutter's motion to exclude Dr. Chipty's opinion with respect to the Candidate Tying Markets and the plaintiffs' motion to exclude Dr. Gowrisankaran. The court denies Sutter's motion to exclude Dr. Chipty's opinions with respect to the Candidate Tied Markets.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[*1018] ORDER:

(1) DENYING PLAINTIFFS' RULE 12(c) MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANTS' ANTITRUST AND UNFAIR COMPETITION COUNTERCLAIMS; AND

[Doc. No. 56.]

(2) GRANTING PLAINTIFFS' RULE 12(c) MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANTS' UNENFORCEABILITY COUNTERCLAIM

[Doc. No. 61.]

On February 1, 2019, Plaintiffs Wi-LAN Inc., Wi-LAN USA, Inc., and Wi-LAN Labs, Inc. filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) to dismiss Defendants LG Electronics, Inc., LG Electronics U.S.A., Inc., and LG Electronics Mobilecomm U.S.A., Inc.'s antitrust and unfair competition counterclaims. (Doc. No. 56.) On February 22, 2019, LG filed its response in opposition to Wi-LAN's motion related to its antitrust and unfair competition counterclaims. (Doc. No. 60.) On March 1, 2019, Wi-LAN filed its reply. (Doc. No. 62.)

On February 27, 2019, Plaintiffs filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) to dismiss LG's infectious unenforceability counterclaim. (Doc. No. 61.) On March 25, 2019, LG filed its response in opposition to Wi-LAN's motion related to its infectious [3] unenforceability counterclaim. (Doc. No. 74.) On April 1, 2019, Wi-LAN filed its reply. (Doc. No. 75.)

On April 3, 2019, the Court took Wi-LAN's motion to dismiss LG's antitrust and unfair competition counterclaims under submission. (Doc. No. 76.) On April 8, 2019, the Court held a hearing on Wi-LAN's [*1019] motion to dismiss LG's infectious unenforceability counterclaim. Victor M. Felix and Christopher M. First appeared for Wi-LAN. Richard D. Harris appeared for LG. For the reasons below, the Court denies Wi-LAN's motion to dismiss LG's antitrust and unfair competition counterclaims, and the Court grants Wi-LAN's motion to dismiss LG's infectious unenforceability counterclaim.

Background

On July 11, 2018, Wi-LAN filed a complaint for patent infringement against LG, alleging infringement of U.S. Patent Nos. 8,787,924, 8,867,351, 9,226,320, and 9,497,743. (Doc. No. 1.) Specifically, Wi-LAN alleges that LG's wireless communication products that are compliant with the 3rd Generation Partnership Project 4G LTE standard directly infringe the patents-in-suit. (Id. ¶¶ 37, 40, 53, 66, 79.)

On October 10, 2018, LG filed an answer to Wi-LAN's complaint along with counterclaims for: (1) declaratory judgments of non-infringement and invalidity of the patents-in-suit; [4] (2) declaratory judgment of unenforceability for failure to disclose to standard setting organizations; (3) declaratory judgment of unenforceability of the '351 patent; (4) declaratory judgment that LG is entitled to license the patents-in-suit on FRAND/RAND terms and conditions; (5) breach of contract; (6) monopolization and attempted monopolization in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act; and (7) unfair business practices under California Business and Profession Code § 17200 et seq. (Doc. No. 17.) On November 13, 2018, the Court issued a scheduling order in the action. (Doc. No. 36.) By the present motions, Wi-LAN moves pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) for judgment on the pleadings to dismiss: (1) LG's counterclaim for monopolization in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) LG's counterclaim for attempted monopolization in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act; (3) LG's counterclaim for unfair business practices under California Business and Profession Code § 17200 et seq.; and (4) LG's counterclaim for unenforceability of the '351 patent. (Doc. Nos. 56-1, 61-1.)

Discussion

I. Legal Standards for a Rule 12(c) Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

In patent cases, a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) is governed by the "the procedural law of the regional circuit." Amdocs (Israel) Ltd. v. Openet Telecom, Inc., 841 F.3d 1288, 1293 (Fed. Cir. 2016). Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), "[a]fter the pleadings are closed—but early enough not to delay [5] trial—a party may move for judgment on the pleadings." "'Judgment on the pleadings is properly granted when[, accepting all factual allegations in the complaint as true,] there is no issue of material fact in dispute, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.'" Chavez v. United States, 683 F.3d 1102, 1108 (9th Cir. 2012). The Ninth Circuit has explained that the standard for deciding a Rule 12(c) motion "is 'functionally identical'" to the standard for deciding a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Cafasso, U.S. ex rel. v. Gen. Dynamics C4 Sys., Inc., 637 F.3d 1047, 1055 n.4 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting Dworkin v. Hustler Magazine Inc., 867 F.2d 1188, 1192 (9th Cir. 1989)); accord Chavez, 683 F.3d at 1108.

A complaint will survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss if it contains "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads [*1020] factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "A pleading that offers 'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). "Nor does a complaint suffice if it tenders 'naked assertion[s]' devoid of 'further factual enhancement.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). Accordingly, dismissal for failure to state a claim is proper where the claim "lacks a cognizable [6] legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory." Mendiondo v. Centinela Hosp. Med. Ctr., 521 F.3d 1097, 1104 (9th Cir. 2008).

In reviewing a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a district court must accept as true all facts alleged in the complaint, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. See Retail Prop. Trust v. United Bhd. of Carpenters & Joiners of Am., 768 F.3d 938, 945 (9th Cir. 2014). But, a court need not accept "legal conclusions" as true. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). In addition, "[a]lthough the complaint's factual allegations generally must be treated as true in evaluating a motion for judgment on the pleading, courts may consider documents incorporated into the complaint by reference, and matters properly subject to judicial notice." *Lee v. City of San Diego, No. 18CV0159 W (BLM), 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2725, 2019 WL 117775, at 3 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 7, 2019) (citing Tellabs, Inc. v. Makor Issues & Rights, Ltd., 551 U.S. 308, 322, 127 S. Ct. 2499, 168 L. Ed. 2d 179 (2007)); see Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 998 (9th Cir. 2018); Coto Settlement v. Eisenberg, 593 F.3d 1031, 1038 (9th Cir. 2010).

II. Analysis of LG's Counterclaims

A. LG's Counterclaim for Monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act

In its answer and counterclaims, LG alleges a counterclaim for monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 284-339.) Wi-LAN argues that this counterclaim should be dismissed because LG has failed to adequately allege a claim for monopolization. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 4-14.)

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other persons, to monopolize [7] any part of the trade or commerce . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 15 U.S.C. § 2. To state a claim for monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant: "(1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power through exclusionary conduct and (3) caused antitrust injury." MetroNet Services Corp. v. Quest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124, 1130 (9th Cir. 2004); accord Somers v. Apple, Inc., 729 F.3d 953, 963 (9th Cir. 2013). The Court addresses each of these elements in turn below.

i. Monopoly Power

Wi-LAN argues that LG has failed to plausibly plead that Wi-LAN has monopoly power. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 4-5.) "In order to state a valid claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant has market power within a 'relevant market.'" Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 (9th Cir. 2008). "That is, the plaintiff must allege both that a 'relevant market' exists and that the defendant has power within that market." Id. "Because the validity of the 'relevant market' is typically a factual element rather than a legal element, alleged [*1021] markets may survive scrutiny under Rule 12(b)(6)." *Apple Inc. v. Samsung Elecs. Co., No. 11-CV-01846, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67102, 2012 WL 1672493, at 4 (N.D. Cal. May 14, 2012) (citing Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045). "Thus, an antitrust complaint survives a Rule 12(b)(6) motion that attacks the definition of the relevant market unless it is apparent from the face of the complaint that the alleged market suffers a fatal legal defect." [8] Id. (citing Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045).

In its counterclaims, LG alleges that the relevant markets for purposes of its monopolization claim "are the various markets for technologies that—before the IEEE 802.16 standard and the 3GPP LTE standard were implemented—were competing to perform each of the various functions covered by each of Wi-LAN's purported essential patents for the IEEE 802.16 standard and the 3GPP LTE standard (collectively, the relevant 'Wireless Technologies Markets')."[1] (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶ 306.) LG further alleges: "WI-LAN holds monopoly power in the relevant Wireless Technologies Markets, assuming that the Patents-in-Suit are—as Wi-LAN claims—essential to the IEEE 802.16 and 3GPP LTE standards, valid, and enforceable." (Id. ¶ 309.)

LG explains in its allegations that:

> If Wi-LAN in fact has patents covering technologies that have been incorporated into the relevant standards, it has the power to raise prices and exclude competition with respect to each of the technologies covered by its patents and incorporated in the relevant standards. . . . Barriers to entry into these markets are high because, among other reasons, the poststandardization [9] lock-in effect means that other technologies are no longer viable substitutes for the technologies the standards specify to perform functions included in the standards.

(Id. ¶ 308.) LG alleges that: "by asserting the Patents-in-Suit, Wi-LAN can (and has) extracted royalties or other licensing terms for those patents that greatly exceed what it could have obtained before the IEEE and 3GPP standardized the technologies that Wi-LAN claims are covered by the Patents-in-Suit." (Id. ¶ 309.)

[1] Wi-LAN notes that this allegation is contradicted elsewhere in LG's monopolization counterclaim when LG's alleges that the patents-in-suit are not infringed by products having components designed based upon the IEEE 802.16 standard or the 3GPP LTE standard. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 4-5 (citing Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶ 285).) But this inconsistent allegation is of no consequence because Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 allows parties to plead inconsistent factual allegations in the alternative. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d)(2) ("A party may set out 2 or more statements of a claim or defense alternatively or hypothetically, either in a single count or defense or in separate ones. If a party makes alternative statements, the pleading is sufficient if any one of them is sufficient."); Molsbergen v. United States, 757 F.2d 1016, 1018 (9th Cir. 1985) ("[T]he Federal Rules of Civil Procedure . . . explicitly authorize litigants to present alternative and inconsistent pleadings."); Cellars v. Pac. Coast Packaging, Inc., 189 F.R.D. 575, 578 (N.D. Cal. 1999) ("A party may plead alternative theories of liability, even if those theories are inconsistent or independently sufficient. Further, a party may allege inconsistent factual allegations."); *Dong Ah Tire & Rubber Co. v. Glasforms, Inc., No. C 06-3359 JF (RS), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24089, 2009 WL 667171, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 2009) (same).

These allegations are sufficient to plead that Wi-LAN had monopoly power within the relevant market. See *Apple, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67102, 2012 WL 1672493, at 5-6 (finding the plaintiff had adequately alleged that the defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market where: (1) the complaint defined the relevant market as "the various markets for technologies that—before the standard was implemented—were competing to perform each of the various functions [*1022] covered by each of [defendant]'s purported essential patents for UMTS;" (2) plaintiff alleged that defendant "has obtained 'the power to raise prices and exclude competition' in the relevant [market];" and (3) plaintiff alleged that "it has been locked-in to the technology standard"); Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 315 (3d Cir. 2007) (finding the plaintiff [10] had adequately alleged that the defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market where: (1) "[t]he [c]omplaint defined the relevant market as the market for [defendant's] proprietary WCDMA technology, a technology essential to the implementation of the UMTS standard;" (2) the complaint alleged "adherents to the UMTS standard have become locked in;" and (3) the complaint alleged the defendant "had the power to extract supracompetitive prices").

ii. Anticompetitive Conduct

Wi-LAN argues that LG has failed to plausibly plead antitrust conduct. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 6-12.) In response, LG argues that it has sufficiently pled anticompetitive conduct by Wi-LAN under its failure to disclose IPR theory, its false FRAND theory, and its sham litigation theory. (Doc. No. 60 at 10-13.)

a. Failure to Disclose IPR Theory

In order to establish anticompetitive conduct based a failure to disclose intellectual property rights theory, a plaintiff "must show that the patent holder's failure to disclose its intellectual property rights induced the SSO to set the standard incorporating the essential patent." *Apple Inc. v. Samsung Elecs. Co., No. 11-CV-01846-LHK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120416, 2011 WL 4948567, at 5 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 18, 2011) (citing Rambus Inc. v. FTC, 522 F.3d 456, 466, 380 U.S. App. D.C. 431 (D.C. Cir. 2008)). "In other words, [the plaintiff] must [11] allege that there was an alternative technology that the SSO was considering during the standard setting process and that the SSO would have adopted an alternative standard had it known of the patent holder's intellectual property rights." Id.

Further, because allegations of anticompetitive conduct based on a failure to disclose intellectual property rights theory sound in fraud, a plaintiff must satisfy the heightened pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). See id. Under Rule 9(b), a plaintiff must plead fraud with particularity. "Averments of fraud must be accompanied by 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003). Rule 9(b) is satisfied if the allegations of fraud are "specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct . . . so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007).

Wi-LAN agues that LG's allegations that the SSOs could have chosen a different technology instead of the standards adopted are insufficient. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 10-11.) The Court disagrees. In its counterclaims, LG alleges: "Wi-LAN's non-disclosure excluded viable alternative technologies from the relevant Wireless Technologies Markets. Had [12] Wi-LAN properly disclosed the existence of its IPR, the IEEE and 3GPP would have decided to standardize alternative technologies to perform the relevant functions." (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶ 315.) LG then alleges in detail for each of the patents-in-suit the specific alternative technology that the SSOs could have adopted. (Id.) These allegations are sufficient to allege that there was an alternative technology and that the SSO would have adopted an alternative standard even under Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard. See *Apple, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67102, 2012 WL 1672493, at 8.

Wi-LAN also argues that it cannot be liable under antitrust law for the alleged [*1023] actions of the prior owners of the patents-in-suit. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 11-12.) Wi-LAN explains that LG's claims are based on the conduct of prior owners of the patents-in-suit, not Wi-LAN, and, therefore, Wi-LAN cannot be held liable for this prior conduct. (Id.) But a review of LG's counterclaims shows that this is not correct. In the counterclaims, LG alleges specific conduct and specific representations made by Wi-LAN to the SSOs, not just representations by the prior patent owners. (See, e.g., Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 115, 127, 188, 267-69.) In sum, LG has adequately alleged antitrust [13] conduct by Wi-LAN based on a failure to disclose intellectual property rights theory in support of its monopolization claim.

b. Fraudulent FRAND Declarations Theory

"Courts have recognized that fraudulent FRAND declarations that are used to induce SSOs to adopt standards essential patents can be monopoly conduct for the purposes of establishing a Section 2 claim." *Apple, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120416, 2011 WL 4948567, at 4 (citing Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 310-11, 314). Allegations of anticompetitive conduct based a fraudulent FRAND declaration theory also must satisfy Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard. See *Apple, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120416, 2011 WL 4948567, at 4.

Wi-LAN argues that LG's allegations are insufficient because LG has failed to specifically identify what statements it claims were misrepresentations. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 12.) In its counterclaims, LG alleges specific facts providing the who, what, when, where and which patents of the alleged false FRAND declarations. (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 267-73.) These allegations are sufficient to satisfy Rule 9(b).

Wi-LAN also argues that LG's allegations regarding Wi-LAN's subjective intent are insufficient. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 12.) In its counterclaims, LG alleges: "Wi-LAN's failure to inform the IEEE, ETSI, and 3GPP that, contrary to its undertakings, it in fact would not meet its commitments under its [14] FRAND declarations was intentional and made with deceptive intent in order to induce the IEEE and 3GPP to include in the IEEE 802.16 and 3GPP LTE standards technologies that Wi-LAN claims are covered by the Patents-in-Suit." (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶ 318.) These allegations are sufficient to allege intent. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) ("[I]ntent . . . may be alleged generally.").

Finally, Wi-LAN argues that LG's allegations in support of this antitrust theory conflict with LG's allegations regarding its failure to disclose intellectual property rights theory. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 12.) But Rule 8 allows parties to plead inconsistent factual allegations in the alternative. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d)(2) ("A party may set out 2 or more statements of a claim or defense alternatively or hypothetically, either in a single count or defense or in separate ones. If a party makes alternative statements, the pleading is sufficient if any one of them is sufficient."); Molsbergen, 757 F.2d at 1018; Cellars, 189 F.R.D. at 578. As such, LG may permissibly plead its alternative theories of antitrust liability. See *Apple, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67102, 2012 WL 1672493, at 7-8 (N.D. Cal. May 14, 2012) (permitting plaintiff to allege both a false FRAND theory of anticompetitive conduct and a failure to disclose IPR theory of anticompetitive conduct). In sum, LG has adequately alleged antitrust [15] conduct by Wi-LAN based on a false FRAND declaration theory in support of its monopolization claim.[2]

[*1024] iii. Antitrust Injury

Wi-LAN argues that LG has failed to adequately allege an antitrust injury. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 13-14.) In order for a plaintiff to properly plead that it has suffered an antitrust injury, "it must allege injury to competition." *Apple, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120416, 2011 WL 4948567, at 6; see also Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of California, 190 F.3d 1051, 1055 (9th Cir. 1999) (A plaintiff may only pursue an antitrust action if it can show "'antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.").

In its counterclaims, LG alleges:

> Wi-LAN's conduct more broadly has and continues to threaten unlawfully to exclude other LG competitors from, and increase royalties and other costs associated with, the manufacture and sale of downstream wireless communications devices that implement the IEEE 802.16 and 3GPP LTE standards and chill competition to > develop and sell innovative new IEEE 802.16 and/or 3GPP LTE-compliant products, resulting in increased prices and decreased quality and innovation in downstream product markets and complementary innovation markets.

[2] Wi-LAN also argues that LG has failed to properly plead sham litigation as part of its antitrust conduct allegations in support of its monopolization counterclaim. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 6-10.) Because LG's allegations of deceptive conduct before the SSOs are sufficient to allege antitrust conduct in support of its monopolization counterclaim, the Court declines to address these additional allegations at this time.

(Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶ 333.) These allegations [16] are sufficient to allege antitrust injury. See *Apple, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120416, 2011 WL 4948567, at 6 (finding similar allegations sufficient to "plead harm to competition"). In sum, LG has adequately alleged a claim for monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, and the Court declines to dismiss LG's counterclaim for monopolization.

B. LG's Counterclaim for Attempted Monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act

In its answer and counterclaims, LG alleges a counterclaim for attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 340-44.) In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must allege facts demonstrating the following four elements: "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving 'monopoly power'; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988)).

Wi-LAN argues that LG's attempted monopolization counterclaim should be dismissed because this counterclaim suffers from the same pleading defects as LG's counterclaim for monopolization. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 14.) But LG has adequately alleged a claim for monopolization [17] in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. See supra. As such, the Court rejects this argument.

Wi-LAN also argues that LG has failed to adequately allege specific intent in support of its counterclaim for attempted monopolization. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 14-15.) In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege "specific intent to control prices or destroy competition." Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v. Codding, 615 F.2d 830, 845 (9th Cir. 1980); accord Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433. The Ninth Circuit has explained that "(specific intent) can be satisfied 'by inference drawn [*1025] from proof of predatory or anticompetitive conduct which constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade.'" Ernest W. Hahn, 615 F.2d at 845; see Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 926 (9th Cir. 1980) ("Specific intent to monopolize will normally be proved by inference from conduct.").

LG's counterclaims contain sufficient allegations of anticompetitive conduct by Wi-LAN. See supra. Further, LG alleges: "Wi-LAN has willfully engaged in the anticompetitive conduct described above with the specific intent to acquire and maintain market power in a relevant antitrust market—namely, the relevant Wireless Technologies Market—and destroy competition therein." (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶ 341.) These allegations combined are sufficient to infer the specific intent necessary to support LG's [18] counterclaim for attempted monopolization. See Hunt-Wesson, 627 F.2d at 926 (holding that plaintiff had adequately alleged a claim for attempted monopolization where plaintiff "alleged that [defendant] engaged in acts resulting in anticompetitive effects, 'with the specific intent to eliminate plaintiff and others as competitors" and "described in detail the allegedly anticompetitive acts"). In sum, the Court declines to dismiss LG's counterclaim for attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

C. LG's Counterclaim for Unfair Business Practices Under California Business & Professions Code § 17200 et seq.

In its answer and counterclaims, LG alleges a counterclaim for unfair business practices under California Business & Professions Code § 17200 et seq. (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 345-49.) Wi-LAN argues that because LG's antitrust allegations fail, LG's counterclaim for unfair business practices also fails to state a claim. (Doc. 56-1 at 15.)

The California Supreme Court has explained that the "unfair" prong of section 17200 "means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-

Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Thus, a plaintiff that adequately [19] alleges a claim for violation of the Sherman Act also adequately alleges a claim for violation of California's UCL under the "unfair" prong. See, e.g., *Apple, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67102, 2012 WL 1672493, at 8 ("Because Apple has adequately alleged a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, Apple has also stated a claim that Samsung's conduct violates the California UCL."); Toranto v. Jaffurs, 297 F. Supp. 3d 1073, 1100 (S.D. Cal. 2018).

Here, LG has properly alleged counterclaims for monopolization and attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See supra. As such, LG has adequately alleged a counterclaim for unfair business practices under Section 17200, and the Court declines to dismiss that counterclaim. See *Apple, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67102, 2012 WL 1672493, at 8.

D. Wi-Lan's Motion for Severance of LG's Antitrust Counterclaims

Wi-LAN argue that if the Court declines to dismiss LG's antitrust counterclaims, the Court should bifurcate and stay those counterclaims to conserve judicial economy and reduce jury confusion. (Doc. No. 56-1 at 16.) In response, LG argues that the Court should deny Wi-LAN's bifurcation request because, among other reasons, the [*1026] request is premature at this stage of the litigation. (Doc. No. 60 at 17.)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42(b) provides:

> For convenience, to avoid prejudice, or to expedite and economize, the court may order a separate trial of one or more separate [20] issues, claims, crossclaims, counterclaims, or third-party claims. When ordering a separate trial, the court must preserve any federal right to a jury trial.

"Courts have broad discretion under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42(b) to bifurcate and stay counterclaims." *Fitbit, Inc. v. Aliphcom, No. 5:15-CV-04073-EJD, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69993, 2016 WL 7888033, at 1 (N.D. Cal. May 27, 2016); see Jinro Am. Inc. v. Secure Investments, Inc., 266 F.3d 993, 998 (9th Cir.), opinion amended on denial of reh'g, 272 F.3d 1289 (9th Cir. 2001). "Bifurcation of patent and antitrust claims is not mandatory, but is common." Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 742 F. Supp. 2d 492, 496 (D. Del. 2010)

Nevertheless, the Court agrees with LG that Wi-LAN's motion for bifurcation is premature. This case is in its initial stages: fact discovery has just begun, the Court has not held a claim construction hearing, expert discovery has not begun, and the trial date is a year away. As such, the Court, exercising its sound discretion, declines to bifurcate and stay LG's antitrust counterclaims at this time. See Actividentity Corp. v. Intercede Grp. PLC, No. C 08-4577 VRW, 2009 WL 10691373, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 30, 2009) ("The decision whether separate trials are appropriate may 'be better informed after all discovery is taken and the expert reports are disclosed.'"); *Netflix, Inc. v. Blockbuster, Inc., No. C06-02361 WHA, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63154, 2006 WL 2458717, at 10 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 22, 2006). The Court denies Wi-LAN's motion to bifurcate LG's antitrust counterclaims without prejudice [21] to Wi-LAN renewing its motion to bifurcate at a later stage in these proceedings.

E. LG's Counterclaim for Unenforceability of the '351 Patent

In its answer and counterclaims, LG alleges a counterclaim for unenforceability of the '351 patent. (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 190-260.) Specifically, LG alleges that one or more persons involved in the prosecution of the '351 patent's parent patent, U.S. Patent No. 7,333,435, committed inequitable conduct during the prosecution of the '435 patent. (Id. ¶¶ 191-92, 241-55.) LG further alleges that because the '351 patent claims priority and/or is related to the '435 patent, the '351 patent is unenforceable under the doctrine of infectious unenforceability. (Id. ¶¶ 193, 256-60.) Wi-LAN argues that the Court should dismiss LG's infectious unenforceability counterclaim because LG has failed to properly allege inequitable conduct during the prosecution of the '435 patent. (Doc. No. 61-1 at 1-2.)

i. Legal Standards for Pleading Inequitable Conduct

"Inequitable conduct is an equitable defense to patent infringement that, if proved, bars enforcement of a patent." Therasense, Inc. v. Becton, Dickinson & Co., 649 F.3d 1276, 1285 (Fed. Cir. 2011) (en banc). A finding of inequitable conduct as to "any single claim renders the entire patent unenforceable." Id. at 1288.

The elements of a claim for "inequitable conduct are: (1) an individual associated with [22] the filing and prosecution of a patent application made an affirmative misrepresentation of a material fact, failed to disclose material information, or submitted false material information; and (2) the individual did so with a specific intent to deceive the PTO." Exergen Corp. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 575 F.3d 1312, 1327 (Fed. Cir. 2009). The Federal Circuit has [*1027] explained a claim for inequitable conduct requires a finding of both materiality and intent to deceive. Therasense, 649 F.3d at 1287. They are separate requirements, and a "a district court may not infer intent solely from materiality." Id. at 1290.

In addition, the Federal Circuit has explained that to meet the standard for materiality, the misrepresentation or omission must be "but-for material." Id. at 1291. A misrepresentation or omission is but-for material "[i]f the PTO would not have allowed a claim had it been aware" of the undisclosed information or the falsity of the representation. Id. Further, in order to establish inequitable conduct, "the specific intent to deceive must be 'the single most reasonable inference able to be drawn from the evidence.'" Id. at 1290. "[W]hen there are multiple reasonable inferences that may be drawn, intent to deceive cannot be found." Id. at 1290-91.

An inequitable conduct counterclaim must be pled with "particularity" under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). Exergen, 575 F.3d at 1326. Rule 9(b) [23] provides: "In alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Therefore, a claim of inequitable conduct must be pled with particularity, i.e., it must be pleaded in detail. Exergen, 575 F.3d at 1327. Specifically, the counterclaim "must identify the specific who, what, when, where, and how of the material misrepresentation or omission committed before the PTO. Id. at 1328.

> Moreover, although "knowledge" and "intent" may be averred generally, a pleading of inequitable conduct under Rule 9(b) must include sufficient allegations of underlying facts from which a court may reasonably infer that a specific individual (1) knew of the withheld material information or of the falsity of the material misrepresentation, and (2) withheld or misrepresented this information with a specific intent to deceive the PTO.

Id. at 1328-29. "A reasonable inference is one that is plausible and that flows logically from the facts alleged, including any objective indications of candor and good faith." Id. at 1329 n.5.

ii. Failure to Disclose

Wi-LAN argues that LG's allegations of withholding of material information that LG uses to support its infectious unenforceability counterclaim are false and contradicted by a review of the prosecution history. (Doc. No. 61-1 at 1, 8-9.) In order to properly state a claim for unenforceability due to inequitable conduct, LG must allege, among other requirements, that "an individual associated with the filing and prosecution of a patent application made an affirmative misrepresentation of a material fact, [24] failed to disclose material information, or submitted false material information." Exergen, 575 F.3d at 1327.

Here, LG alleges that during the prosecution of the '435 patent, the named inventor and his counsel failed to disclose the International Search Report at issue, the Emanuel reference (U.S. Patent Pub. No. 2002/032788), Emanuel's foreign counterparts, a First Examination Report, and a Second Examination Report. (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶ 241.)

Wi-LAN argues that a review of the prosecution history for the '435 patent shows that the International Search Report at issue was indeed disclosed to the PTO. (Doc. No. 61-1 at 5-6, 9.) The Court agrees. "When considering a motion for judgment on the pleadings, [a] court may consider facts that 'are contained in materials of which the court may take judicial notice.'" Heliotrope Gen., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 189 F.3d 971, 981 (9th Cir. 1999). "Judicial notice is appropriate for records and 'reports of administrative bodies.'" [*1028] United States v. 14.02 Acres of Land More or Less in Fresno Cty., 547 F.3d 943, 955 (9th Cir. 2008). This includes documents issued by the PTO, such as a patent's prosecution history. See *NetFuel, Inc. v. Cisco Sys. Inc., No. 5:18-CV-02352-EJD, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 159412, 2018 WL 4510737, at 2 n.1 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 18, 2018); *IPS Grp., Inc. v. Duncan Sols., Inc., No. 15-CV-1526-CAB (MDD), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 190168, 2016 WL 9023432, at 1 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 18, 2016); *Audionics Sys., Inc. v. AAMP of Fla., Inc., No. CV1210763MMMJEMX, 2013 WL 12129652, at 2 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 19, 2013); Coinstar, Inc. v. Coinbank Automated Sys., Inc., 998 F. Supp. 1109, 1114 (N.D. Cal. 1998). As such, the Court takes judicial notice of [25] the '435 patent's prosecution history.[3]

A review of the prosecution history for the '435 patent reflects that the inventor and his counsel did disclose the International Search Report to the PTO, and the search report identifies the Emanuel reference and Emanuel's foreign counterparts. (Doc. No. 61-2, Ex. A at 38-39, 111, 114-16.) Indeed, LG's own allegations acknowledge that the named inventor and his counsel submitted a copy of the International Search Report to the PTO, and the PTO issued an "acceptance of application" form indicating that the International Search Report was included in the file. (Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 215, 217.) Thus, both the prosecution history, and LG's own allegations contradict LG's assertion that the International Search Report was not disclosed to the PTO.

In response, LG argues that this is not fatal to its counterclaim because the counterclaim is also based on the inventor's failure to disclose the Emanuel reference itself along with Emanuel's foreign counterparts and two examination reports. (Doc. No. 74 at 8-11.) But a review of the prosecution history shows that the inventor and his counsel disclosed the International Search Report to the PTO, and the search report [26] specifically identified the Emanuel reference as a published U.S. patent application, listed the relevant portions of the Emanuel reference, and stated what claims in the application for which it is relevant. (Doc. No. 61-2, Ex. A at 114.)

LG argues that under the PTO's Manual of Patent Examining Procedure ("MPEP") rules, the mere submission of a search report is insufficient to satisfy an applicant's duty to disclose in a national stage application. (Doc. No. 74 at 8-9.) In making this argument, LG specifically relies on MPEP § 609.03 and 1893.03(g). (Id.) MPEP § 609.03 provides: "The examiner will consider the documents cited in the international search report in a PCT national stage application when the Form PCT/DO/EO/903 indicates that both the international search report and the copies of the documents are present in the national stage file." MPEP § 609.03; accord MPEP § 1893.03(g). LG notes that in the "notice of acceptance of application" form (the Form PCT/DO/EO/903) for the '435 patent, the PTO examiner only noted that [*1029] a copy of the international search report itself was present. (Doc. No. 74 at 10.)

LG is correct. In the Form PCT/DO/EO/903 at issue, the PTO examiner only notes that the international search report is present in the file. (Doc. No. 61-2, [27] Ex. A at 38-39.) The form does not mention any copies of references being present. (Id.) Nevertheless, a further review of section 609.03 reveals that the listing of the Emanuel in the international search report was still sufficient to disclose that reference for consideration by the PTO.

MPEP § 609.03 provides a list of three scenarios "regarding references listed in the search report of the international application." MPEP § 609.03. The third scenario concerns references listed in an international search report that will not be considered by the PTO absent further action by the applicant. MPEP § 609.03 ¶ 6.55. Section 609.03 instructs the examiner, when appropriate to notify the applicant that: "The listing of references in the PCT international search report is not considered to be an information disclosure statement (IDS) complying with 37 CFR 1.98. 37 CFR 1.98(a)(2) requires a legible copy of [certain references]. . . . Therefore, the references cited in the

[3] In addition, the Court notes that it may also consider the '435 patent's prosecution history in ruling on LG's Rule 12(c) motion under the "incorporation by reference doctrine" because LG's counterclaim allegations extensively reference and rely on the prosecution history as the basis for LG's unenforceability counterclaim. See Coto Settlement, 593 F.3d at 1038 ("We have extended the doctrine of incorporation by reference to consider documents in situations where the complaint necessarily relies upon a document or the contents of the document are alleged in a complaint, the document's authenticity is not in question and there are no disputed issues as to the document's relevance."); United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Even if a document is not attached to a complaint, it may be incorporated by reference into a complaint if the plaintiff refers extensively to the document or the document forms the basis of the plaintiff's claim.").

international search report have not been considered."[4] Id. But section 609.03 explains that this third scenario does not apply if the missing reference is a "U.S. Patent [or] U.S. patent application publication[]." This make sense because 37 C.F.R. § 1.98 does not require applicants to provide copies of U.S. patents or U.S. patent applications to [28] the PTO. See 37 C.F.R. § 1.98(a)(2) (listing the types of references that require the submission of "a legible copy"). The international search report at issue specifically identifies the Emanuel reference as a published U.S. patent application. (Doc. No. 61-2, Ex. A at 114.)

The first and second scenarios listed in section 609.03 pertain to situations "where copies of [the] references are not required under 37 CFR 1.98," such as for U.S patent application publications like the Emanuel reference. MPEP § 609.03 ¶¶ 6.53, 6.54. In both of these scenarios, section 609.03 explains that the reference will be considered. See id. Thus, the submission of the international search report listing the Emanuel reference as a published U.S. patent application should have been sufficient to disclose that reference to the PTO and for the PTO to consider it under section 609.03.

In response, at the hearing, LG noted that the examiner did not list Emanuel as one of the references considered on the PTO-892 form for the '435 patent. (See Doc. No. 61-2, Ex. A at 29.) But this is of no consequence because section 609.03 explains that if a reference is properly disclosed through an international search report "[t]here is no requirement that the examiner list the documents on a PTO-892 form." MPEP § 609.03.

LG also noted [29] that its inequitable conduct counterclaim is also based on the inventor and his counsel's failure to disclose Emanuel's foreign counterparts and two examination reports. But LG has failed to adequately allege or explain how these additional references would not be cumulative of the Emanuel reference itself. (See Doc. No. 17, Counterclaims ¶¶ 247-51.) See 37 C.F.R. § 1.56(b) ("[I]nformation is material to patentability [only] when it is not cumulative to information already of record or being made of record in the application."); [*1030] Baxter Int'l, Inc. v. McGaw, Inc., 149 F.3d 1321, 1328 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("[A] patentee need not cite an otherwise material reference to the PTO if that reference is merely cumulative or is less material than other references already before the examiner.") Halliburton Co. v. Schlumberger Tech. Corp., 925 F.2d 1435, 1443 (Fed. Cir. 1991) (a patentee "ha[s] no obligation to disclose cumulative references"). In sum, in light of a review of the prosecution history, which is both judicially noticeable and incorporated by reference, LG has failed to adequately allege the "failure to disclose material information" element in support of its inequitable conduct allegations.

iii. Specific Intent

Further, LG has failed to adequately allege intent in support of its inequitable conduct allegations. In order to properly allege "intent" to support [30] of an inequitable conduct claim, the pleading must contain "sufficient allegations of underlying facts from which a court may reasonably infer that a specific individual . . . withheld or misrepresented th[e] information with a specific intent to deceive the PTO." Exergen, 575 F.3d at 1328-29. "A reasonable inference is one that is plausible and that flows logically from the facts alleged, including any objective indications of candor and good faith." Id. at 1329 n.5.

Here, a review of the prosecution history shows that the inventor and his counsel disclosed the International Search Report, which included a description of the Emanuel reference (a published U.S. patent application), to the PTO. (Doc. No. 61-2, Ex. A at 38-39, 111, 114-16.) The inventor was not required to submit a separate copy of the Emanuel reference under 37 C.F.R. § 1.98 in order for the reference to be considered by the examiner. See 37 C.F.R. § 1.98; MPEP § 609.03. And the examiner never notified the inventor and his counsel that the Emanuel reference would not be considered or that they needed to submit an information disclose statement even though section 609.03 provides examiners with express notification language to use in that circumstance. See MPEP § 609.03 ¶ 6.55. It cannot be reasonably inferred from these facts that [31] the inventor and his counsel withheld the Emanuel reference from the PTO with a specific intent to deceive to the PTO. As such, LG has failed to adequately allege the specific intent element in support of its inequitable conduct allegations.

[4] The Court notes that a review of the prosecution history does not show that the examiner ever provided the inventor of the '435 patent with this specific notice under MPEP § 609.03 ¶ 6.55. (See generally Doc. No. 61-2, Ex. A.)

iv. Conclusion

In sum, LG has failed to properly state a counterclaim for unenforceability of the '351 patent, and the Court dismisses LG's counterclaim for a declaratory judgment of unenforceability of the '351 patent due to infectious unenforceability. Further, because the defects in counterclaim cannot be cured through amendment of the pleadings, particularly in light of the contents of the judicially noticeable prosecution history of the '435 patent, the Court dismisses LG's unenforceability counterclaim with prejudice. See Telesaurus VPC, LLC v. Power, 623 F.3d 998, 1003 (9th Cir. 2010) ("'A district court may deny a plaintiff leave to amend if it determines that 'allegation of other facts consistent with the challenged pleading could not possibly cure the deficiency,' or if the plaintiff had several opportunities to amend its complaint and repeatedly failed to cure deficiencies." (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)).

Conclusion

For the reasons above, the Court denies Wi-LAN's Rule 12(c) motion to dismiss LG's antitrust and unfair competition [32] counterclaims, and the Court grants Wi-LAN's Rule 12(c) motion to dismiss LG's infectious unenforceability counterclaim. The Court dismisses LG's counterclaim for a declaratory judgment of unenforceability of the '351 patent due to infectious unenforceability with prejudice. The action will [*1031] proceed on the remaining claims and counterclaims.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

ORDER

Now before the Court is the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Motion for Order Determining Jurisdiction on Remand. (Doc. # 306). Defendants UGI Corporation; AmeriGas Partners, LP; AmeriGas Propane, Inc.; and AmeriGas Propane, LP[1] Ferrellgas Partners, LP; and Ferrellgas, LP[2] (collectively, "Defendants") have submitted their briefing on the jurisdictional issue. (Docs. ## 315, 317). Also before the Court is Defendant AmeriGas's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. (Doc. # 309). Defendant Ferrellgas has filed a Motion to Join Defendant AmeriGas's Motion. (Doc. # 311).[3] Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs oppose Defendants' Motion for Judgement on the Pleadings. (Doc. # 316). For the reasons provided below, the Court finds that it has jurisdiction over Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' state-law claims. Further, for the reasons provided below, Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings is DENIED.

[1] UGI Corporation; AmeriGas Partners, LP; AmeriGas Propane, Inc.; and AmeriGas Propane, LP will be collectively referred to as "AmeriGas."

[2] Ferrellgas Partners, L.P. and Ferrellgas, L.P. will be collectively referred to as "Ferrellgas." Ferrellgas does business under the name Blue Rhino.

DISCUSSION

I. BACKGROUND

Defendants are the leading distributors of pre-filled propane exchange tanks. (Doc. # 198, ¶ 1). Beginning in 2006, Defendants entered into co-packing agreements wherein each company agreed to refurbish and refill propane [*6] tanks for the other company. (Id. at ¶ 40). Before 2008, the tanks were filled with seventeen pounds of propane. (Id. at ¶ 4). However, propane costs spiked in 2008. (Id.). In the summer of 2008, Defendants reduced the fill level of the tanks from seventeen to fifteen pounds of propane per tank while maintaining the same price per tank. (Id. at ¶¶ 4-6).

In 2009, a group of plaintiffs filed suit against Ferrellgas and AmeriGas alleging that they had acted in concert to reduce the amount of propane contained within the tanks and thus, artificially increase the price of the tanks.[4] (Case No. 09-02086-MD-W-GAF, Doc. # 79, ¶¶ 1-4). The In re Propane I plaintiffs alleged that the actions of Ferrellgas and AmeriGas were in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and state antitrust and consumer protection laws. (Id.). On December 8, 2009, the plaintiffs moved for preliminary approval of settlement agreements. (Id., Doc. # 37). The settlement agreements were granted final approval on October 6, 2010. (Id., Doc. # 166).

On March 27, 2014, the Federal Trade Commission (the "FTC") issued a complaint against Defendants (the "FTC Action") alleging that Defendants had restrained price competition because [*7] of their 2008 decision to decrease the fill level of the propane tanks. (Doc. # 198, ¶¶ 167-68). The FTC Action resulted in Consent Orders wherein Defendants agreed to cease and desist from any conspiracy between them to raise, fix, stabilize, or maintain prices of the tanks through any means. (See Docs. ## 211-1, 211-2 (collectively "FTC Consent Orders"), p. 4). Defendants also agreed to refrain from communicating competitively sensitive information to any competitor with some limited exceptions for propane refilling agreements. (Id.).

Shortly thereafter, the present lawsuit was filed. (See Docket Sheet). Lawsuits were filed on behalf of Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs of the propane (Doc. # 102) and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs. (Doc # 105). Both Plaintiff groups alleged that the 2008 reduction in fill level was due to improper collusion between Defendants who conspired to force sellers of propane to accept the fill reduction and agreed not to compete with one another. (Docs. ## 102, ¶¶ 4-9; 198, ¶¶ 4-9). Plaintiffs alleged that these actions were a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and state antitrust laws. (See id.).

The first complaint in the present action (the "Ortiz Complaint") was filed on [*8] May 30, 2014, which included allegations that Defendants' 2008 conduct violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act and state-antitrust laws, including the laws of Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin. (Case No. 14-00917-CV-W-GAF, Doc. # 1). The Ortiz Complaint was consolidated with a number of other similar actions into a multidistrict litigation and transferred to this Court on October 16, 2014. (Doc. # 1). Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs filed a Consolidated Class Action Complaint on January 29, 2015. (Doc. # 105). Defendants jointly moved to dismiss both the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' complaints. (Docs. ## 135, 137).

[3] For the reasons stated in its Motion, Defendant Ferrellgas's Motion to Join is GRANTED.

[4] This 2009 case will be referred to as In re Propane I.

On July 2, 2015, this Court granted in part Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. *In re: Pre-Filled Propane Tank Antitrust Litig., 14-02567-MD-W-GAF, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193932, 2015 WL 12791756, at 1 (W.D. Mo. July 2, 2015), reversed by 860 F.3d 1059 (8th Cir. 2017). This Court determined that all Plaintiffs' antitrust claims were barred by the four-year federal antitrust statute of limitations. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193932, [WL] at 9-10. However, this Court determined that the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' injunctive relief claim, as a claim in equity, was not governed by the statute of limitations and was instead governed by the doctrine of laches. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193932, [WL] at 11. This Court concluded that Defendants failed to meet their burden under the doctrine of laches because they failed to establish the [*9] existence of prejudice. Id. As such, the Court granted Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' complaint in its entirety. Id. The Court granted Defendants' Motion to Dismiss on the Indirect Purchase Plaintiffs' federal and antitrust claims, Counts II and III respectively. Id. The Court denied the Motion as to Count I, injunctive relief for a violation of Section I of the Sherman Act, of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193932, [WL] at 11.

The Eighth Circuit, sitting en banc, reversed the Court's dismissal of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' complaint. In re Pre-Filled Propane Tank Antitrust Litig, 860 F.3d 1059, 1062 (8th Cir. 2017) (en banc), cert denied 138 S.Ct. 647 (Jan. 8, 2018) [hereinafter Propane En Banc]. The Eighth Circuit reversed due to its conclusion that the statute of limitations did not bar the claims. Id. at 1071. The Eighth Circuit stated: "Under Klehr, 'each sale to the plaintiff[s]' in a price-fixing conspiracy 'starts the statutory period running again.'" Id. at 1068 (quoting Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997)). After that determination, the Eighth Circuit, evaluating the sufficiency of the Amended Complaint, stated: "The allegations that the conspiracy continued into the class period are sufficient." Id. at 1069. In analyzing the sufficiency of the allegations, the court provided the following discussion[5]:

> The allegations that the conspiracy [*10] continued into the class period are sufficient. Plaintiffs plead that "Defendants' anticompetitive conduct lasted at least from July 21, 2008 through January 9, 2015" and "as a result of the [ir] anticompetitive conduct . . . Defendants have charged Plaintiffs and members of the proposed Class supracompetitive prices for Filled Propane Exchange Tanks throughout the Class Period." Amended Complaint, at ¶¶ 120-21. See id. at ¶¶ 122-23. Despite the settlement agreement with indirect purchasers in 2010, they plead that "Defendants maintained their illegally agreed-upon fill levels rather than resuming competition, preserving the unlawfully inflated prices that their conspiracy had produced." Id. at ¶ 108. See id. at ¶ 124. Plaintiffs also plead that "[t]hrough at least the end of 2010, Defendants regularly communicated to assure compliance with the conspiracy," "monitor[ing] the market to ensure that neither cheated on their anticompetitive agreement by offering a price reduction or competing for one another's customers or geographic markets." Id. at ¶ 92. See id. at ¶ 125. More specifically, they plead that in 2008, AmeriGas's Director of National Accounts Ken Janish told Blue Rhino's [*11] President Tod Brown that "it would follow closely behind Blue Rhino if it successfully implemented its fill reduction, and that it would not sell both 15-pound and 17-pound tanks" and "Janish had similar conversations with employees of Blue Rhino on numerous occasions from at least as early as 2007 until at least late 2010." Id. at ¶ 60. Additionally, "during calls and meetings with AmeriGas executives occurring at least as late as 2010, Janish repeatedly dismissed concerns that Blue Rhino might undercut AmeriGas on price or fill levels with words to the effect of, 'I talked to Blue Rhino, and that's not going to happen.'" Id. at ¶ 13. See id. at ¶ 62.
> Some of these allegations are "naked assertion[s] devoid of further factual enhancement," Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937 (internal quotation marks omitted), that do not "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955. See, e.g., Amended Complaint, at ¶¶ 120, 125. Others, however, list relevant individuals, acts, and conversations, providing "factual content" to support "the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937. See, e.g., Amended Complaint, at ¶¶ 13, 60, 92. Defendants argue these allegations are "impermissibly vague [*12] and conclusory." But Plaintiffs "need not provide specific facts in support of their allegations."

[5] Due to the varying interpretations and selected quotes provided by the parties in their briefing, the Court deems it appropriate to quote the at-issue language from Propane En Banc in its entirety to avoid ambiguity.

> Schaaf v. Residential Funding Corp., 517 F.3d 544, 549 (8th Cir. 2008) (emphasis added), citing Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S.Ct. 2197, 167 L.Ed.2d 1081 (2007) (per curiam). Rather, they need only provide "sufficient factual information to provide the 'grounds' on which the claim rests, and to raise a right to relief above a speculative level." Id., quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 555 n.3, 127 S.Ct. 1955. "[C]onstru[ing] the complaint liberally in the light most favorable to" Plaintiffs, Eckert v. Titan Tire Corp., 514 F.3d 801, 806 (8th Cir. 2008), these allegations "plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679, 129 S.Ct. 1937.

Id. at 1069-70. Based on the discussion of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, the Eighth Circuit emphasized that "the issue is whether the amended complaint alleges that the conspiracy continued when the sales took place." Id. at 1070. The court concluded: "The amended complaint alleges sufficient factual matter, accepted as true to show a continuing violation to restart the statute of limitations, and, therefore, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 1071 (quotation omitted). Thus, the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' claims were remanded to this Court and are currently pending.

Before the issuance of Propane En Banc, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs moved for leave to amend their complaint [*13] to add three new subclasses asserting damages: 1) a six-year statue-of-limitations subclass, for violations of Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin law; and 2) a new-purchaser subclass, for violations of Kansas antitrust law; and 3) a new-purchaser subclass for laws of "Illinois Brick repealer states." (See Doc. # 173-1, Count III, Count IV, Count V). The Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs also proposed another federal-disgorgement claim. (Id. at Count II). This Court ruled that the amendments to add the federal-disgorgement claim and the new-purchaser subclasses would be futile because the claims were time-barred. (Doc. # 197, p. 12). Conversely, the Court did allow the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs to add the six-year statute of limitations subclass. (Id.). As such, the Ortiz Amended Complaint, filed on October 16, 2015, retained the federal-injunctive claim and added the six-year statute of limitations subclass's state-law claim. (Doc. # 198, Count I, Count II). Thus, only Plaintiffs' state-law claims under the laws of Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin remained in addition to the federal injunctive-relief claim. (Doc. # 198, Count II).

Defendants then moved for Judgment on the Pleadings on Indirect [*14] Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. (Doc. # 210). The Court granted Defendants' Motion as to Count I of the complaint. In re Pre-Filled Propane Antitrust Litig., No. 14-02567-MD-W-GAF, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, 2016 WL 6963059, at *11 (W.D. Mo. Jan. 13, 2016) [hereinafter Ortiz I]. The Court found that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs lacked standing to assert Count I because the alleged injury was not redressable by court order as the relief sought was cumulative of the FTC Action. 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, [WL] at *5-6. However, the Court denied Defendants' Motion as to Count II, which alleged violations of state antitrust laws. 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, [WL] at *11. The Court found that this Count was not barred by the statute of limitations and that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs had standing to assert their claims. Id. Regarding standing, the Court determined that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs had sufficiently alleged they suffered an actual injury because they alleged they had purchased propane at a supra-competitive price. 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, [WL] at *8. The Court also found that Plaintiffs demonstrated a causal connection between the actual injury and the alleged wrongdoing of the Defendants. 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, [WL] at *8. The Court rejected Defendants' argument that because the alleged conduct occurred in 2008, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs failed to demonstrate a causal connection to their injury. Id. In determining that [*15] the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs plausibly established a causal connection to their injury, the Court stated: "Taking the pleadings as true, there are no facts that would indicate the injury is the result of some other party or factor as opposed to the actions of Defendants." Id. After this decision, only Count II of the Amended Complaint remained.

Meanwhile, on July 21, 2016, an additional complaint by another group of indirect purchasers,[6] was filed. (16-00809-CV-MD-GAF, Doc. # 1). The Orr Complaint, which was consolidated into the same multidistrict litigation proceeding as Ortiz, included a federal injunctive-relief claim, a federal-disgorgement claim, the new-purchaser subclasses the Ortiz Plaintiffs tried to add to their Complaint, and a six-year statute of limitations subclass damages claim. (Id.).

Defendants then moved for Summary Judgment for the remaining Ortiz claims. (Doc. # 232). The Court granted that motion by finding that the state-law claims were barred by statute of limitations and, in the alternative, the named Plaintiffs lacked standing to assert claims under the laws of Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin. *In re Pre-Filled Tank Antitrust Litig., No. 14-0256-MDW-GAF, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 167724, 2016 WL 6963058, at 5 (W.D. Mo. Sept. 2, 2016) [hereinafter Ortiz II]. The Court likewise dismissed the remaining [*16] state-law claims of the Orr Plaintiffs. (Doc. # 245). Both the Ortiz and Orr Plaintiffs appealed to the Eighth Circuit. (Doc. # 249; Case No. 16-00809-MD-WGAF, Doc. # 11). The Eighth Circuit consolidated the Ortiz and Orr appeals. (Case No. 16-00809-MD-W-GAF, Doc. # 13).

On appeal, the Eighth Circuit affirmed the Court's dismissal of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' federal injunctive claims. In re Pre-Filled Propane Tank Antitrust Litig., 893 F.3d 1047, 1051 (8th Cir. 2018) [hereinafter Ortiz III]. In analyzing whether Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs had standing to seek injunctive relief, the Eighth Circuit focused on whether Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs sufficiently pled the need for injunctive relief as non-cumulative of the FTC Action. See id. at 1056. The court stated: "The indirect purchasers . . . must adequately plead that Defendants are, post-January 2015, conspiring to charge supra-competitive prices, resulting in some cognizable danger of recurrent violation of the FTC orders." Id. The Eighth Circuit then summarized its discussion of the facts pled in Propane En Banc, reiterating that some of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' claims echoed those found insufficient to plausibly support the factual assertion of a conspiracy in the previous case. Id. at 1056-57. In comparing the facts [*17] pled in both cases, the court stated the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' "complaints contain allegations detailing events in 2008 and through 2010 like those found sufficient in Propane En Banc to plead that the conspiracy continued into the class period." Id. at 1057 (emphasis in original) (internal quotations omitted). The Eighth Circuit explained that those assertions were insufficient to support "the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged, that Defendants are conspiring to charge supra-competitive prices and are engaging in recurrent violations of the January 7, 2015 consent orders. The indirect purchasers have not even adequately pleaded that Defendants are currently charging supra-competitive prices, let alone a conspiracy." Id. (emphasis in original) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The court emphasized that the FTC Action was not at issue in Propane En Banc because the direct purchasers sought monetary damages rather than injunctive relief. Id. The Eighth Circuit concluded that because Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs failed to plead actual injury, they lacked standing to pursue their injunctive relief claims. Id. After affirming the Court's [*18] dismissal of the federal-injunctive-relief claims, the Eighth Circuit remanded the case to this Court to consider the threshold issue of "whether the state-law-damages claims should remain in federal court." Id. at 1059-60. The Eighth Circuit further instructed: "This court remands to the district court to analyze under [28 U.S.C.] § 1367(c) whether it should exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state-law claims." Id. at 1060.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

After the pleadings have closed, any party may move to have the Court enter judgment on the pleadings. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). "A motion for judgment on the pleadings should be granted when, accepting all facts pled by the nonmoving party as true and drawing all reasonable inferences from the facts in favor of the nonmoving party, the movant has clearly established that no material issue of fact remains and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Schnuck

Mkts., Inc. v. First Data Merch. Servs. Corp., 852 F.3d 732, 737 (8th Cir. 2017). Generally, a Rule 12(c) motion for judgment on the pleadings is reviewed under the same standard as a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Ginsburg v. InBev NV/SA, 623 F.3d 1229, 1233 n.3 (8th Cir. 2010). Therefore, conclusory statements lacking any factual support should be ignored. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Instead, the Court may only consider properly pled facts and determine whether the complaint states "a claim for relief that is plausible on [*19] its face." Id.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Jurisdiction

"Federal Courts are courts of limited jurisdiction." Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 511 U.S. 375, 377, 114 S. Ct. 1673, 128 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1994). Federal courts "possess only that power authorized by Constitution and statute." Id. "The Constitution extends the judicial power of the federal courts to controversies 'between Citizens of different States.'" Eckerberg v. Inter-State Studio & Pub. Co., 860 F.3d 1079, 1084 (8th Cir. 2017) (quoting U.S. Const. art. III § 2). "Congress enacted legislation to give federal courts original jurisdiction of all civil actions between citizens of different states." Id. (internal quotations omitted). The burden of establishing jurisdiction is on the party asserting jurisdiction. Kokkonen, 511 U.S. at 377. Further, "parties may not expand the limited jurisdiction of the federal courts by waiver or consent[.]" 4:20 Commc'ns, Inc. v. Paradigm Co., 336 F.3d 775, 778 (8th Cir. 2003).

Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs assert that the Court need not determine if it will retain supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims because it has original jurisdiction pursuant to the Class Action Fairness Act ("CAFA"). "CAFA grants broad federal jurisdiction over class actions and establishes narrow exceptions to such jurisdiction." Westerfied v. Indep. Processing, LLC, 621 F.3d 819, 822 (8th Cir. 2010). CAFA is codified, in part, at 28 U.S.C. § 1332, the statutory provision that grants federal courts original jurisdiction on the basis of diversity of citizenship. Under CAFA, "federal [*20] courts have jurisdiction over class actions in which the amount in controversy exceeds $5,000,000 in the aggregate; there is minimal (as opposed to complete) diversity among the parties, i.e., any class member and any defendant are citizens of different states; and there are at least 100 members in the class." Westerfield v. Indep. Processing, LLC, 621 F.3d 819, 822 (8th Cir. 2010) (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)).

Both Defendants assert that the Court can exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims. (Docs. ## 315, p. 1; 317, p. 2). Defendant Ferrellgas contends that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs cannot assert jurisdiction based on CAFA because it was not pleaded in their operative complaints. (Doc. # 317, pp. 10-12). However, "[t]he general rule is that where a basis for federal court jurisdiction appears clearly from an examination of the face of the complaint, the court may sustain the suit even if the plaintiff has not relied upon that basis." Raus v. Bhd. Ry. Carmen of U.S. & Can., 663 F.2d 791, 796 (8th Cir. 1981). As such, despite Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs not pleading jurisdiction based on CAFA (Doc. # 198, ¶ 11), the Court will examine the Complaint in its entirety to determine if jurisdiction clearly exists.

First, the face of the complaint shows that there are more than 100 class members. (See id. at ¶¶ 2-3, [*21] 99-101, 108 (alleging claims on behalf of thousands of class members)). Next, minimal diversity is apparent because this case was pleaded on behalf of a nationwide class and multi-state subclasses (Id. at ¶¶ 99-101) and brought against defendants from particular states. (See id. at ¶¶ 21 (Defendant AmeriGas is a citizen of Pennsylvania and Delaware); 18-19 (Defendant Ferrellgas is citizen of Kansas and Delaware)). Finally, the face of the complaint shows that the amount in controversy exceeds $5,000,000. (See id. at ¶¶ 10 ("[C]onsumers were and continue to be cheated out of hundreds, if not thousands if not millions of pounds of propane[.]"); 91-92 (explaining that "Plaintiffs and other class members were deprived of approximately two pounds of propane in each tank they purchased" and "Plaintiffs and class members paid more and continue to pay more for propane than they would have paid in a competitive market"). From the face of the complaint, Plaintiffs have pled that there are more than 100 class members, minimal diversity exists, and the amount in controversy exceeds $5,000,000. Because the statutory requirements of CAFA are satisfied, jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(2) is apparent from [*22] the face of the Complaint. Therefore, the Court has original jurisdiction over Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' statelaw claims.

B. Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

Defendants' challenge to the sufficiency of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' pleading primarily rests on the argument that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have failed to plead that an ongoing conspiracy occurred after 2010. (Docs. ## 309, pp. 1-2; 311, pp. 1-2). Defendants assert that Ortiz III shows the Eighth Circuit found that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs had only pled the existence of a conspiracy through late 2010. (Docs. ## 309, pp. 4-5; 311, pp. 5-6). Defendants then identify that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs in this case are seeking damages for purchases that occurred after the Propane I settlements in 2011. (Docs. ## 309, pp. 5-6; 311, pp. 4-5). As such, Defendants argue that because the purchases occurred after the conspiracy had ended, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have not suffered an injury. (Docs. ## 309, pp. 8-10; 311, pp. 7-8). Because of the alleged lack of injury, Defendants contend that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs lack standing to bring their state-law claims. (Docs. ## 309, p. 10; 311, p. [*23] 8).

In Ortiz I, the Court found that sales at supra-competitive prices are injuries in fact, and the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs had also sufficiently plead a causal connection between the injury and the complained-of action of Defendants. *Ortiz I, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, 2016 WL 6963059, at 8. Lastly, the Court determined that the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs had satisfied the redressability requirement. Because all three requirements were satisfied, the Court found that the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs had standing to pursue their state-law claims.

Defendants urge the Court to reach the opposite conclusion because the Eighth Circuit's holdings in Propane En Banc and Ortiz III establish that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have only alleged an ongoing conspiracy through late 2010. (Docs. ## 309, pp. 4-5; 311, pp. 5-6). First, it is important to note that the lack of standing that warranted the dismissal of Count I was due to the injunctive relief sought by Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs. See Ortiz III, 893 F.3d at 1057; *Ortiz I, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, 2016 WL 6963059, at 5-6. For their state-law claims, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs seek monetary damages as well as injunctive relief. The Eighth Circuit's ruling in Ortiz III governs the conclusion that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue injunctive [*24] relief in their state-law claims for the same reasons they lacked standing to pursue their now-dismissed federal claim.

The remaining issue before the Court is whether the Eighth Circuit's rulings in Propane En Banc and Ortiz III compel the conclusion that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue monetary damages for their state-law claims. The Court rejects Defendants' assertion that the Eighth Circuit conclusively found that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs only pled a conspiracy as of 2010. In Propane En Banc, the Court identified provisions of the Amended Complaint that show acts "through at least the end of 2010," were sufficient to "plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." 860 F.3d at 1069-70 (internal quotations and alterations omitted). Nowhere in the opinion did the Eighth Circuit state that the Plaintiffs had only plausibly pled a conspiracy through the end of 2010. While it is true that the class period of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, which began July 21, 2008, is different from the indirect purchasers, which began December 1, 2009 as to AmeriGas and October 14, 2011 as to Ferrellgas, there is no indication from Ortiz III that the Eighth Circuit limited the timeframe [*25] of the alleged conspiracy to end before those class periods.

This conclusion is reinforced by the Eighth Circuit's direction "to consider the impact of Propane En Banc on the timeliness of the state-law claims." Ortiz III, 893 F.3d at 1060. Defendants do not assert timeliness arguments related to the statute of limitations in their current Motion, but the Eighth Circuit's discussion of timeliness in Propane En Banc is nonetheless instructive to the current analysis. The Eighth Circuit determined that "each sale to the plaintiffs in a price-fixing conspiracy starts the statutory period running again." Propane En Banc, 860 F.3d at 1068 (internal quotations and alteration omitted). The court analyzed whether the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs alleged: "(1) a price-fixing conspiracy; (2) that brings about a series of unlawfully high priced sales during the class period; and (3) sales to the plaintiffs during the class period." Id. (internal quotations and alterations omitted). The Eighth Circuit concluded that the plaintiffs sufficiently pled all three requirements, thus resolving the issue of "whether the amended complaint alleges that the conspiracy continued when the sales took place" in favor of the plaintiffs. Id. at 1070. As such, the Eighth Circuit's analysis [*26] in Propane En Banc does not compel a conclusion that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs only alleged a conspiracy through late 2010. Rather, its conclusion shows that the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs did allege a conspiracy into the class period and they suffered an actual injury by purchasing propane tanks at supra-competitive prices.

Additionally, Defendants misconstrue Ortiz III to support their argument that the Eighth Circuit found that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs only alleged a conspiracy until late 2010. As previously stated, the analysis in Ortiz III was to determine whether the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs sufficiently pled a threat of recurring harm, such that Count I was not cumulative of the FTC Action. Ortiz III, 893 F.3d at 1056. Defendants identify the quote, "[o]ther allegations, however, sufficiently list[ed] relevant individuals, acts, and conversations in 2008 and 2010 to plead that the conspiracy continued into the class period," id. at 1058 (quotations omitted), as proof that the Eighth Circuit only found a conspiracy sufficiently alleged as of late 2010. (Docs. ## 309, p. 10; 311, p. 6). However, the emphasis of this sentence is not that the relevant allegations occurred in 2008 and 2010, but rather that [*27] these allegations sufficiently pled "that the conspiracy continued into the class period." Ortiz III, 893 F.3d at 1057 (quotation omitted). While these allegations were found insufficient to support the claim that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs were in danger of recurrent violations of the FTC Action, this does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have failed to plausibly allege injury for Count II. Therefore, the Court concludes that the Eighth Circuit's holding in Ortiz III does not compel a conclusion that the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs only alleged a conspiracy into late 2010.

In Ortiz I, this Court already analyzed the issue of whether Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have standing to assert their state-law claims. *2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, 2016 WL 6963059, at 7. The rulings of the Eighth Circuit in Propane En Banc and Ortiz III do not show cause for the previous analysis to be altered. As such, the Court finds, based off its previous ruling in Ortiz I, that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have established all three of the requirements of standing: injury in fact; causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of; and redressability. See *2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194545, [WL] at 8. As standing is a constitutionally mandated requirement, Indirect [*28] Purchaser Plaintiffs must have standing to sue at every stage in the case. See Preiser v. Newkirk, 422 U.S. 395, 401, 95 S. Ct. 2330, 45 L. Ed. 2d 272 (1975) ("[A]n actual controversy must be extant at all stages of review, not merely at the time the complaint is filed."). However, at this stage in the proceedings, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have demonstrated standing to bring their state-law claims.

As to the Orr Plaintiffs, The Eighth Circuit's ruling in Ortiz III affirms the Court's dismissal of Count I and Count II, as both are federal-injunctive-relief claims. For the reasons provided above regarding the Ortiz Plaintiffs, the Court retains jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims in the Orr case. Further, given the procedural posture of Orr and Ortiz, the Court believes that the Eighth Circuit's discussion of standing and timeliness of state-law claims in both Propane En Banc and Ortiz III apply with equal force to both cases. As such, the Court finds that the Orr Plaintiffs have demonstrated standing to bring Count III and Count IV, their state antitrust claims.

CONCLUSION

CAFA grants the Court jurisdiction over Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' state-law claims. Additionally, the Eighth Circuit's rulings in Propane En Banc and Ortiz III do not support the [*29] conclusion that Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs only pled a conspiracy as of 2010. As such, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have standing to pursue their state antitrust claims. Accordingly, for these reasons and those provided above, Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

In ruling on a motion to dismiss, a court accepts as true all well-pleaded facts in a complaint and construes them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

HN3[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction challenges a court's authority to hear the matter brought by a complaint. Under Article III of the United States Constitution, the judicial power of the United States extends only to cases and controversies. A case becomes moot—and therefore no longer a case or controversy for purposes of Article III—when the issues presented are no longer live or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome. No matter how vehemently the parties continue to dispute the lawfulness of the conduct that precipitated the lawsuit, the case is moot if the dispute is no longer embedded in any actual controversy about the plaintiff's particular legal rights. Accordingly, a court's subject matter jurisdiction depends on the existence of an actual case or controversy. Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), the plaintiff bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, the existence of subject matter jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction

HN4[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A challenge to jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) may proceed either as a facial challenge, asserting that the allegations in the complaint are insufficient to establish subject matter jurisdiction, or a factual challenge, asserting that the jurisdictional allegations of the complaint are not true. In a facial challenge, a court will grant a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction where a claim fails to allege facts upon which the court may base jurisdiction. Where the challenge is factual, however, the district court is entitled to decide disputed issues of fact with respect to subject matter jurisdiction. The court, therefore, may regard the pleadings as mere evidence on the issue and may consider evidence outside the pleadings without converting the proceeding to one for summary judgment.

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), a complaint must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) procedure authorizes the dismissal of a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The purpose of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is to test the sufficiency of a complaint and not to resolve contests surrounding the facts, the merits of a claim, or the applicability of defenses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN6[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint must contain facts sufficient to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Under the plausibility standard, a complaint must contain more than labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action. A complaint need not include detailed factual allegations. A complaint must, however, set forth enough factual matter taken as true to suggest a cognizable cause of action, even if the actual proof of those facts is improbable and recovery is very remote and unlikely. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice to plead a claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN7[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In reviewing a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, a court must accept as true all of the factual allegations contained in the complaint and must draw all reasonable inferences from those facts in favor of the plaintiff. Legal conclusions drawn from those facts, however, are not afforded such deference.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > Voluntary Cessation Exception

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Mootness > Conduct Capable of Repetition

HN8[] Mootness, Voluntary Cessation Exception

The voluntary cessation doctrine refers to situations that do not deprive a federal court of its power to hear and determine a case, even when a defendant has voluntarily ceased the challenged practice, because the allegedly wrongful behavior could reasonably be expected to recur.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions

HN9[] Protection of Rights, Section 1983 Actions

The good-faith defense refers to a protection from liability under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 by private citizens who have relied in good faith on then-existing laws that were presumptively valid.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

To plausibly allege an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must first plead an agreement to restrain trade. A plaintiff must plausibly allege: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) that imposed an unreasonable restraint of trade. Importantly, the complaint must contain sufficient factual allegations regarding each defendant; a plaintiff in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case cannot assemble some collection of defendants and then make vague, nonspecific allegations against all of them as a group.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN11[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

An affirmative defense can be considered by the court on a motion to dismiss if the face of the complaint includes all necessary facts for the defense to prevail.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction

HN12[] Judges, Discretionary Powers

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C.S. § 1367(c)(3), the court has the discretion to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction if the court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction. Needless decisions of state law should be avoided both as a matter of comity and to promote justice between the parties, by procuring for them a superfooted reading of applicable law. If the federal law claims are dismissed before trial the state claims should be dismissed as well.

Plaintiffs Ruth Akers ("Ms. Akers") and Sharon Moesel ("Ms. Moesel") (collectively, "Plaintiffs") bring this putative class action against the following Defendants: Maryland State [3] Education Association ("MSEA"), a labor union; Teachers' Association of Baltimore County and Teachers' Association of Anne Arundel County, local union chapters affiliated with MSEA, sued as representatives of the class of all chapters and affiliates of MSEA; National Education Association ("NEA"), a labor union affiliated with MSEA; Verletta White, interim superintendent of the Board of Education of Baltimore County, and George Arlotto, superintendent of Anne Arundel County, sued in their official capacities as representatives of the class of all superintendents of Maryland school districts; Larry Hogan, as Governor of Maryland, in his official capacity; Brian Frosh, Attorney [*567] General of Maryland, in his official capacity; and Elizabeth Molina Morgan, Robert I. Chanin, John A. Hayden III, Donald W. Harmon, and Ronald S. Boozer, members of the Maryland Public School Labor Relations Board, in their official capacities. (Am. Compl., ECF No. 59.) Plaintiffs are public school teachers who were not members of the teachers' union but were required to pay representation fees to the union as a condition of employment. (Id.) Plaintiffs allege violations of their constitutionally-protected rights [4] and various state-law torts, and they seek injunctive and declaratory relief under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 2201. (Id.)

Currently pending before this Court are State-Defendants'[1] Motion to Dismiss Amended Complaint (ECF No. 74) and Motion to Dismiss Amended Complaint of Defendants Maryland State Education Association, Teachers' Association of Baltimore County, Teachers' Association of Anne Arundel County, and National Education Association [(collectively, "the Union Defendants")] (ECF No. 75). Shortly after the filing of this action, the United States Supreme Court issued its opinion in Janus v. Am. Fed'n of State, Cty, and Mun. Emps., Council 31, __ U.S. __, 138 S. Ct. 2448, 201 L. Ed. 2d 924 (2018), holding that HN1[] "[s]tates and public-sector unions may no longer extract agency fees from nonconsenting employees." 138 S. Ct. at 2459. Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive and declaratory relief are now moot. Furthermore, consistent with many other courts, this Court holds that collection of fees in good-faith reliance on then-valid law bars the Plaintiffs' refund claims. Accordingly, for the reasons that follow, both Motions to Dismiss (ECF Nos. 74, 75) are GRANTED.

BACKGROUND

HN2[] In ruling on a motion to dismiss, this Court "accept[s] as true all well-pleaded facts in a complaint and construe[s] them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Wikimedia Found. v. Nat'l Sec. Agency, 857 F.3d 193, 208 (4th Cir. 2017) (citing [5] SD3, LLC v. Black & Decker (U.S.) Inc., 801 F.3d 412, 422 (4th Cir. 2015)). This dispute involves the payment of compulsory union dues. Ms. Akers is a public-school teacher who works for the Baltimore County Public Schools, and Ms. Moesel teaches at Annapolis High School in the Anne Arundel County Public Schools. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 14, 18; ECF No. 59.) Ms. Akers does not approve of the MSEA or its affiliates and refused to become a member, but she was required to pay "representation fees" (also referred to as "agency fees")[2] to the MSEA as a condition of her employment. (Id. at ¶ 15-16, 26.) Ms. Moesel was an active member of MSEA and the Teachers Association of Anne Arundel County until she was expelled in May 2017,[3] but the union continued taking representation fees from her pay without her consent. (Id. at ¶¶ 19-20.) The MSEA was authorized under Md. Code. Education §§ 6-407(c)-(f) [*568] to extract these fees from non-union members as a condition of

[1] State-Defendants are identified as Defendants Governor Larry Hogan, Attorney General Brian E. Frosh, and the members of the Maryland Public School Labor Relations Board (Elizabeth Molina Morgan, Robert I. Chanin, John A. Hayden III, Donald W. Harmon, and Ronald S. Boozer). (Mot. 1, ECF No. 74.)

[2] These fees were intended to compensate the union for its efforts on behalf of non-members in the collective-bargaining process since the union represents all public-school employees, not just members. See Md. Code Ann., Education §§ 6-407(b)(1), 6-407(c), 6-504(b), 6-509(b).

[3] Ms. Moesel alleges that she was expelled for actively opposing the union's efforts to eliminate her salary bonuses. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 39-41.)

their employment. (Id. at ¶ 23.) Plaintiffs assert that by taking these fees from public-school employees, Defendants committed the torts of conversion, trover, detinue, and trespass to chattels. (Id. at ¶ 25.)

Plaintiffs also allege that under the recently-enacted[4] Maryland House Bill 811 ("HB 811"), public-school employers are required to provide [6] the MSEA and its affiliates with the name, home address, home telephone numbers, and personal cell-phone numbers of each newly-hired school employee, regardless of whether the employee consents to the disclosure. (Id. at ¶¶ 28-32.) Additionally, Ms. Moesel alleges that public-school teachers should not be forced to accept the union as their exclusive bargaining representative and that forcing a non-union teacher to accept union-negotiated terms of employment violates anti-trust laws as well as their First Amendment right of freedom of association. (Id. at ¶¶ 43-48.)

Ms. Akers initially filed the purported class-action Complaint (ECF No. 1) on June 18, 2018. A Motion for Preliminary Injunction (ECF No. 13) was filed on June 29, 2018, seeking to prevent the enforcement of certain provisions in HB 811 from taking effect on July 1, 2018. Plaintiffs later agreed to withdraw the motion on the basis that HB 811 had already taken effect. (See ECF No. 105.) Plaintiffs filed the operative Amended Complaint on September 7, 2018,[5] adding Ms. Moesel as a Plaintiff and adding Verletta White and George Arlotto as Defendants. (ECF No. 59.) Both Verletta White and George Arlotto filed Motions to Dismiss (ECF Nos. 80, [7] 83), to which Plaintiffs did not respond and later agreed could be granted. (ECF No. 105.) The Amended Complaint contains the following requests: (1) a declaration under the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201, that the requirement for non-union members to pay representation fees is unconstitutional; (2) all representation fees that have been collected must be refunded under 42 U.S.C. § 1983; (3) a declaration that the compelled disclosure of personal information under HB 811 is unconstitutional; (4) a declaration that the union's exclusive representation in the bargaining process is unconstitutional and a claim against MSEA and its local affiliates that exclusive representation violates federal antitrust law; and (5) State-law tort claims of conversion, trover, detinue, and trespass to chattels, invoking supplemental jurisdiction.

The State-Defendants and the Union Defendants filed motions to dismiss under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and (6) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim. (ECF Nos. 74, 75.) For the following reasons, Defendants' motions shall be GRANTED. Specifically, Plaintiffs' constitutional challenges to the representation fee provision shall be DISMISSED AS MOOT, and the request for a refund [8] of fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 shall be DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE as barred by Defendants' good-faith defense. Further, the remaining claims shall be DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE: the challenge to exclusive representation is foreclosed by United States Supreme Court precedent; Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently plead that their constitutional right of association and freedom of speech have been implicated by the disclosure of their contact information to the union under HB 811; Ms. [*569] Moesel fails to allege a plausible antitrust claim; and with the dismissal of the federal claims, this Court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims.

STANDARDS OF REVIEW

I. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

HN3[] A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for lack of subject matter jurisdiction challenges a court's authority to hear the matter brought by a complaint. See Davis v. Thompson, 367 F.Supp.2d 792, 799 (D. Md. 2005). Under Article III of the United States Constitution, the judicial power of the United States extends only to "cases" and "controversies." Already, LLC v. Nike, Inc., 568 U.S. 85, 90, 133 S. Ct. 721, 184 L. Ed. 2d 553 (2013). "A case becomes moot—and therefore no longer a 'Case' or 'Controversy' for purposes of Article III—'when the issues presented are no longer "live" or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome.'" Id. at 91 (quoting Murphy v. Hunt, 455 U.S. 478, 481, 102 S. Ct. 1181, 71 L. Ed. 2d 353 (1982)). "No matter how vehemently [9] the parties continue to dispute the lawfulness of the conduct that precipitated the lawsuit, the case is moot if the dispute 'is no longer embedded in any actual controversy about the plaintiff's particular legal rights.'" Id. (quoting Alvarez v. Smith, 558 U.S. 87, 92, 130 S. Ct. 576, 175 L. Ed. 2d 447 (2009)).

[4] HB 811 was enacted on July 1, 2018. (Am. Compl. ¶ 31, ECF No. 59.)

Accordingly, a court's subject matter jurisdiction depends on the existence of an actual case or controversy. S.C. Coast Conservation League v. U.S. Army Corps. of Eng'rs, 789 F.3d 475, 482 (4th Cir. 2015). Under Rule 12(b)(1), the plaintiff bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, the existence of subject matter jurisdiction. Demetres v. East West Constr., Inc., 776 F.3d 271, 272 (4th Cir. 2015); Lovern v. Edwards, 190 F.3d 648, 654 (4th Cir. 1999).

HN4[] A challenge to jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(1) may proceed either as a facial challenge, asserting that the allegations in the complaint are insufficient to establish subject matter jurisdiction, or a factual challenge, asserting "that the jurisdictional allegations of the complaint [are] not true." Kerns v. United States, 585 F.3d 187, 192 (4th Cir. 2009) (citation omitted). In a facial challenge, a court will grant a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction "where a claim fails to allege facts upon which the court may base jurisdiction." Davis, 367 F. Supp. 2d at 799. Where the challenge is factual, however, "the district court is entitled to decide disputed issues of fact with respect to subject matter jurisdiction." Kerns, 585 F.3d at 192. The court, therefore, "may regard the pleadings as mere evidence [10] on the issue and may consider evidence outside the pleadings without converting the proceeding to one for summary judgment." Velasco v. Gov't of Indonesia, 370 F.3d 392, 398 (4th Cir. 2004); see also Cunningham v. Gen. Dynamics Info. Tech., Inc., 888 F.3d 640, 650 (4th Cir. 2018).

II. Failure to State a Claim

HN5[] Under Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a complaint must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Rule 12(b)(6) procedure authorizes the dismissal of a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The purpose of Rule 12(b)(6) is "to test the sufficiency of a complaint and not to resolve contests surrounding the facts, the merits of a claim, or the applicability of defenses." Presley v. City of Charlottesville, 464 F.3d 480, 483 [*570] (4th Cir. 2006); see also Goines v. Valley Cmty. Servs. Bd., 822 F.3d 159, 165-66 (4th Cir. 2016).

HN6[] To survive a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint must contain facts sufficient to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl., Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 684, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Under the plausibility standard, a complaint must contain "more than labels and conclusions" or a "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555; see Painter's Mill Grille, LLC v. Brown, 716 F.3d 342, 350 (4th Cir. 2013). A complaint need not include "detailed factual allegations." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555; Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. A complaint must, however, set forth "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest" a cognizable cause of action, "even if . . . [the] actual proof of those facts is improbable and . . . recovery is very remote and unlikely." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 (internal quotations [11] omitted). "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice" to plead a claim. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678; see A Society Without a Name v. Virginia, 655 F.3d 342, 346 (4th. Cir. 2011).

HN7[] In reviewing a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court "must accept as true all of the factual allegations contained in the complaint" and must "draw all reasonable inferences [from those facts] in favor of the plaintiff." E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., 637 F.3d 435, 440 (4th Cir. 2011) (citations omitted); Hall v. DirectTV, LLC, 846 F.3d 757, 765 (4th Cir. 2017). Legal conclusions drawn from those facts, however, are not afforded such deference. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

In 1977, the United States Supreme Court issued a decision upholding the constitutionality of representation fees paid to unions. Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Ed., 431 U.S. 209, 97 S. Ct. 1782, 52 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1977). In Abood, the Court concluded that, although compulsory agency fees impinge employees' First Amendment rights to some extent, the mandatory fees were nevertheless justified by the State's compelling interest in "labor peace"; i.e., the logistical and managerial benefits that accrue when an employer negotiates only with one exclusive representative. 431 U.S. at 232-37. This is the very behavior about which the Plaintiffs complain. However, shortly after the filing of this lawsuit, on June 27, 2018, the United States Supreme Court decided Janus v. Am. Fed'n of State, Cty, and Mun. Emps., Council 31, U.S. , 138 S. Ct. 2448, 201 L. Ed. 2d 924 (2018), which expressly overturned Abood, holding that "States and public-sector unions may no longer [12] extract agency fees from nonconsenting employees." 138 S. Ct. at 2459. Janus reaffirmed that labor peace is a compelling state interest, but it overruled Abood's holding that labor peace justifies requiring non-union members to pay agency fees. Id. at 2465-66.

Maryland and other states that had allowed unions to charge representation fees under Abood's guidance, recognized that the law of the land had changed and responded accordingly. Regardless, Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief, stating that Defendants' voluntary cessation of unconstitutional actions does not moot their lawsuit. In addition, Plaintiffs also request this Court to order repayment of all representation fees that had been previously [*571] collected. Plaintiffs also seek relief related to HB 811's requirement for disclosure of contact information, and Ms. Moesel challenges the principle of exclusive representation by the union. Each of these claims shall be addressed in turn.

I. Constitutional Claims are Moot

Plaintiffs' claims for declaratory and injunctive relief are moot. On the same day that Janus was decided, the Teachers' Association of Baltimore County and the Teachers' Association of Anne Arundel County contacted the Boards of Education [13] of Baltimore County and Anne Arundel County, respectively, to notify them of the Janus decision and to instruct them immediately to cease deducting representation fees from their employees' paychecks. (See Galante Decl. ¶ 16, Ex. A, ECF No. 47-1; Jones Decl. ¶ 16, Ex. B, ECF No. 75-6.) The two Boards complied with that instruction. (Galante Decl. ¶ 17; Jones Decl. ¶ 17.) The Teachers' Association of Baltimore County and the Teachers' Association of Anne Arundel County have not subsequently received any representation fees. (Id.)

Further, the Maryland State Education Association ("MSEA") sent letters to every representation-fee payer, including Plaintiffs, explaining the Janus decision, informing the feepayers that no further representation fees would be deducted from their paychecks, and informing them that MSEA would promptly be refunding to them any fees that might have been pre-paid for the period after June 27, 2018. (Helfman Decl. ¶ 7, Ex. A., ECF No. 47-2.) Refund checks were issued for all such pre-collected fees. (Id. at ¶ 9.) Based upon these actions, combined with the declaration that they will not be resuming the deduction of representation fees from employees' paychecks, [14] the Union Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' request for declaratory and injunctive relief is moot. (Defs.' Mot. Mem. 5, ECF No. 75-1.) The Union Defendants also assert a good-faith defense to liability for refunding fees collected prior to the Janus decision. (Id. at 11.) The State-Defendants also move to dismiss as moot the injunctive and declaratory relief claims in light of the decision in Janus. (Defs.' Mot. Mem. 4, ECF No. 74.)

Plaintiffs argue that their claims for prospective relief are not moot based on the voluntary cessation doctrine. (Pls.' Resp. 1, ECF No. 87.)[6] They also argue that the "good-faith defense" does not warrant dismissal of the refund claims at this stage of the litigation. (Id. at 14.)[7] [6] HN8[] The voluntary cessation doctrine refers to situations that do not deprive a federal court of its power to hear and determine a case, even when a defendant has voluntarily ceased the challenged practice, because the allegedly wrongful behavior could reasonably be expected to recur. See Porter v. Clarke, 852 F.3d 358, 360 (4th Cir. 2017) (citing Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 190, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000)).

Since the Janus decision, multiple courts have had an opportunity to address similar claims and arguments in their jurisdictions and have uniformly held that plaintiffs' prospective claims were rendered moot under similar circumstances, and the good-faith defense bars refund claims. See, e.g., *Lee v. Ohio Educ. Ass'n., 366 F. Supp. 3d 980, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49403, 2019 WL 1323622, at 1 (N.D. Ohio Mar. 25, 2019) ("[T]he Court joins an ever-growing number of courts that have found that causes of action seeking to enjoin collection of fair-share [*572] fees and recoup damages based on prior collection of those fees [15] must be dismissed in light of Janus . . . ."); *Carey v. Inslee, 364 F. Supp. 3d 1220, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38742, 2019 WL 1115259, at 1 (W.D. Wash. Mar. 11, 2019)(holding that the requests for prospective injunctive and declaratory relief were moot, and agency fees were collected in good-faith reliance on then-valid law); Cook v. Brown, 364 F. Supp. 3d 1184, Case No. 6:18-cv-01085-AA, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32217, 2019 WL 982384 (D. Or. Feb. 28, 2019) (same); *Mooney v. Illinois Educ. Ass'n, 372 F. Supp. 3d 690, Case No. 1:18-cv-1439, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62955, 2019 WL 1575186, at 2 (C.D. Ill. Apr. 11, 2019) (recognizing the growing consensus concluding that fees collected prior to Janus may not be recovered).

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has not yet had an opportunity to weigh in, nor have other district courts in this Circuit. However, this Court agrees with the reasoning in these decisions and incorporates it herein. In sum, Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief is moot because the union's communications are reliable evidence of a permanent shift in policy and the challenged conduct cannot be reasonably expected to recur, and declaratory relief is moot because there is no immediate legal controversy. Further, this Court shall dismiss with prejudice Plaintiffs' claim for a refund of the representation fees that had been paid prior to the Janus decision. The collection of those fees was authorized by state statute and pursuant to Supreme Court precedent, and the good-faith defense bars Plaintiffs' claim. [16] See Williams v. Johnson, 386 F. Supp. 280, 288-89 (D. Md. 1974).

Accordingly, the declaratory and injunctive claims shall be dismissed as moot. The refund claims shall be dismissed with prejudice because Defendants may assert the good-faith defense, having complied with and relied upon presumptively-valid state law and controlling Supreme Court precedent.

II. HB 811 Claim

Defendants also move to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim that the disclosure of their contact information to the union without their consent violates their First Amendment rights. (Defs.' Mot. Mem. 24, ECF No. 75-1; Defs.' Mot. Mem. 13, ECF No. 74-1.) Defendants assert that the disclosure of Plaintiffs' contact information by their employer to the union that is statutorily obligated to represent them does not implicate Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights. (Defs.' Mot. Mem. 14, ECF No. 74-1.) Defendants add that no expressive speech is involved in the disclosure, and Plaintiffs' associational choices are not implicated. (Id. at 19-20.)

HB 811 requires public school employers to provide their employees' contact information to the unions that represent them. (See HB 811, ECF No. 59-3.) This requirement does not reveal any expressive activity on the part of either the employer or the employees whose contact information is provided [17] to the union. Unlike the disclosure in NAACP v. State of Alabama, cited by Plaintiffs, the disclosure at issue here does not reveal an affiliation with a union to the State's Attorney General. 357 U.S. 449, 463, 78 S. Ct. 1163, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1488 (1958). Nor is the disclosure at issue like that in Brown v. Socialist Workers '74 Campaign Committee, cited by Plaintiffs, in which contributors to a minor political party were required to be disclosed for public inspection, thus subjecting them to the reasonable probability of threats, harassment or reprisals. 459 U.S. 87, 101-102, 103 S. Ct. 416, 74 L. Ed. 2d 250 (1982). Further the United States Supreme Court and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit have upheld the provision of personal contact information to union [*573] representatives in related contexts. See

[7] HN9[] The good-faith defense refers to a protection from liability under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 by private citizens who have relied in good faith on then-existing laws that were presumptively valid. See Wyatt v. Cole, 504 U.S. 158, 168, 112 S. Ct. 1827, 118 L. Ed. 2d 504 (1992).

NLRB v. Wyman-Gordon Co., 394 U.S. 759, 767, 89 S. Ct. 1426, 22 L. Ed. 2d 709 (1969); NLRB v. J. P. Stevens & Co., 409 F.2d 1207, 1209 (4th Cir. 1969).

The disclosure of all employees contact information to the union does not implicate an association with the union, it does not reveal any affiliation, nor does it prevent employees' anonymous speech or the employees' right to decline joining the union. Indeed, Plaintiffs' allegations are clear that "all" employees contact information is provided, regardless of union membership or political views. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 29-33, ECF No. 59.) Plaintiffs do not argue that the union should be prevented from contacting [18] them, but rather they assert their desire to protect their privacy by potentially redirecting work email or by setting up virtual contact information. (Pls.' Resp. 15-16, ECF No. 89.) Accordingly, the Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently plead that their constitutional right of association and freedom of speech have been implicated by the disclosure of their contact information to the union. Therefore, this claim shall be dismissed without prejudice.

III. Exclusive Representation

Plaintiff, Ms. Moesel, also challenges the principle of exclusive representations, asserting that she has a constitutional right to reject union representation and to negotiate her own salary and other terms of employment. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 44-45, ECF No. 59.) However, Plaintiffs have agreed with Defendants that this claim is foreclosed by Supreme Court precedent in Minnesota State Board for Community Colleges v. Knight, 465 U.S. 271, 104 S. Ct. 1058, 79 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984). (Pls.' Resp. 19-20, ECF No. 89.) Plaintiffs agree that this claim should be dismissed without prejudice to them seeking to reopen the challenge if the Supreme Court grants certiorari in Bierman v. Dayton, 900 F.3d 570 (8th Cir. 2018).[8] (Id. at 20-21.) Accordingly, this Court shall dismiss this claim without prejudice.

Plaintiff Ms. Moesel, however, continues to argue that she has an antitrust [19] claim against the Union Defendants. (Pls.' Resp. 40, ECF No. 87.) Ms. Moesel alleges that the unions have violated federal antitrust laws by negotiating and entering into collective bargaining agreements. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 46-47, ECF No. 59.) Although not stated, presumably this claim is based on Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

HN10[] To plausibly allege an antitrust claim, a plaintiff "must first plead an agreement to restrain trade." SD3, LLC v. Black & Decker (U.S.) Inc., 801 F.3d 412, 424 (4th Cir. 2015) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556); see also Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 202 (4th Cir. 2002) (stating that a plaintiff must plausibly allege "(1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) that imposed an unreasonable restraint of trade."). Importantly, the complaint must contain sufficient factual allegations regarding each defendant; "[a] plaintiff in a § 1 case cannot assemble some collection of defendants and then make vague, nonspecific allegations against all of them as a group." SD3, 801 F.3d at 422. Ms. Moesel makes only a conclusory assertion that "[c]ollective-bargaining agreements that command uniform salaries for teachers regardless of subject matter are anti-competitive," and that "compelling entry-level teachers to accept [*574] exceedingly low salaries negotiated by a bargaining unit that they do not belong to—and by forbidding entry-level teachers [20] to negotiate better deals with the school district" is a "pernicious and anti-competitive feature of collective bargaining." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 46-47, ECF No. 59.) She adds that "[t]here is no basis in any federal labor statute for exempting public-employee unions from the antitrust laws." (Id. at ¶ 48.)

Plaintiff does not address her failure to plead the requisite elements of an antitrust claim, and simply argues that the Union Defendants' affirmative defenses are not relevant to defeat a motion to dismiss. However,HN11[] an affirmative defense can be considered by this Court on a motion to dismiss "if the face of the complaint includes all necessary facts for the defense to prevail." Leichling v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 842 F.3d 848, 850-51 (4th Cir. 2016) (citing Goodman v. Praxair, Inc., 494 F.3d 458, 464 (4th Cir. 2007)). Defendants assert the state-action exception,[9]

[8] Following Knight, every Circuit court to address the constitutionality of exclusive bargaining arrangements has concluded that these provisions do not violate the First Amendment. *Mentele v. the Noerr-Pennington[10] exception, and the statutory labor exception set forth in Section 6 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 17. This Court does not find it necessary to analyze these defenses at this time because Plaintiff has failed to plead a plausible antitrust cause of action. Therefore, Ms. Moesel's antitrust claim shall be dismissed without prejudice.

IV. State Law Claims

Plaintiffs are also suing the Maryland State Education Association and its local affiliates "under the [21] state-law torts of conversion, trover, detinue, trespass to chattels, and any other state-law cause of action that offers relief for this unlawful seizure of [their] personal property." (Compl. ¶ 51, ECF No. 59.) Plaintiffs invoke the supplemental jurisdiction of this Court over these pendent state-law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367. However, HN12[] pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3), this Court has the discretion to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction if the court "has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction . . . ."

In United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966), the Supreme Court cautioned that "[n]eedless decisions of state law should be avoided both as a matter of comity and to promote justice between the parties, by procuring for them a superfooted reading of applicable law." The Gibbs Court went on to say that "if the federal law claims are dismissed before trial . . . the state claims should be dismissed as well." Id. With no federal claims remaining in this case, this Court declines, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3), to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims.

Therefore, Plaintiffs' state-law claims shall be dismissed without prejudice.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons:

[*575] 1. State-Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Amended Complaint [22] (ECF No. 74) is GRANTED.
2. Motion to Dismiss Amended Complaint of Defendants Maryland State Education Association, Teachers' Association of Baltimore County, Teachers' Association of Anne Arundel County, and National Education Association (ECF No. 75) is GRANTED.
3. Plaintiffs' declaratory and injunctive claims are DISMISSED AS MOOT.
4. Plaintiffs' claim for a refund of fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.
5. All remaining claims in Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint (ECF No. 59) are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFFS' [*2] FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT

Re: Dkt. No. 51

Before the Court is the "Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint," filed January 15, 2019, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, by defendants VIP Petcare Holdings, Inc. ("VIP") and PetIQ, Inc. ("PetIQ"). On January 29, 2019, plaintiffs Med Vets Inc. ("Med Vets") and Bay Medical Solutions Inc. ("Bay Medical") filed opposition, to which defendants, on February 5, 2019, replied.

Having read and considered the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the Court rules as follows.[1]

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs are wholesale distributors who specialize in the distribution of pet products, namely, prescription medications and certain over-the-counter ("OTC") medications. Plaintiffs have access to such products despite a policy whereby major animal-health manufacturers claim to limit the sale thereof to veterinary practices and pharmacies. In particular, a "secondary distribution system" exists, whereby plaintiffs and other wholesale distributors obtain these ostensibly restricted items and resell them to retailers. (See First Am. Compl., filed Dec. 14, 2018 ("FAC"), ¶ 6.)[2]

VIP "operates veterinary clinics" and "has served as an important independent wholesale [*3] source for distributors." (See id. ¶ 3.) PetIQ is a wholesale distributor of OTC pet products "to virtually every significant retailer in the U.S." (See id.)[3] On January 17, 2018, PetIQ acquired VIP.

According to plaintiffs, defendants "are using VIP's veterinarian status to acquire large quantities" of the above-referenced products "for the purpose of re-selling . . . them to PetIQ for sale to retailers" (see id.), thereby "remov[ing] an independent competitor, VIP, from the market" (see id. ¶ 1) and "foreclosing competition from other wholesaler/distributors" such as themselves (see id. ¶ 3).

Based on the above, plaintiffs bring the instant action, which has proceeded as follows.

On April 4, 2018, plaintiffs filed their initial complaint, challenging the above-described merger, and asserting claims under the Clayton Act and Sherman Act. In said pleading, plaintiffs identified two "relevant . . . product markets," namely, "the wholesale markets for prescription and restricted pet parasiticides for distribution to non-veterinary retailers (the secondary distribution system for prescription and restricted OTC pet parasiticides, respectively)." (See Compl., filed Apr. 4, 2018, ¶ 29.)

[*4] On June 1, 2018, defendants moved to dismiss the complaint. Thereafter, on August 3, 2018, the Court granted the motion, finding plaintiffs had not "pled a plausible market" (see Tr. of Proceedings for Aug. 3, 2018, at 44:20), and, in light of plaintiffs' request for sixty days to conduct additional investigation, gave plaintiffs leave to file, by October 5, 2018, an amended complaint.

On October 3, 2018, plaintiffs, rather than filing an amended complaint, filed a "Motion for Limited Expedited Discovery," whereby plaintiffs sought to obtain "a copy of defendants' Notification and Report Form[] submitted to the DOJ/FTC [Department of Justice/Federal Trade Commission] Pre-Merger Notification Office" prior to the merger (see Mot. for Ltd. Expedited Disc., filed Oct. 3, 2018, at 6:22-23), which notification, plaintiffs asserted, would provide relevant market information not otherwise available to plaintiffs (see id. at 11:26-28 (stating "HSR Notification and Report Form" requires defendants to identify their competitors and product markets, estimate market concentration, and explain anticipated competitive effects of merger)). In connection with said motion,

[1] By order filed February 26, 2019, the Court took the motion under submission.

[2] Unless otherwise noted, the court, like the parties, uses the term "retailers" to refer to non-veterinary retailers.

[3] PetIQ also manufactures and distributes a line of generic pet medications and products (see FAC ¶ 18), an aspect of its business that is not at issue in the instant case.

plaintiffs attached a proposed [*5] First Amended Complaint ("PFAC"), in which they defined the "relevant . . . markets" in essentially the same terms as in their original complaint. (See PFAC, filed Oct. 3, 2018, ¶ 32.)

On October 26, 2018, in response to defendant's opposition, plaintiffs filed a reply accompanied by a "Restated" proposed First Amended Complaint ("RPFAC") (see RPFAC, filed Oct. 26, 2018), in which plaintiffs defined the relevant markets by reference to services provided, rather than by the above-referenced products themselves. In particular, plaintiffs identified the "relevant . . . markets" as "the distributing and wholesaling services involved in distributing prescription and restricted pet parasiticides." (See id. ¶ 32.)

By order filed November 28, 2018, the Court denied plaintiffs' motion for expedited discovery, and extended to December 14, 2018, the deadline to file an amended complaint, whether "with or without modification of the most recently proposed version." (See Order Den. Pls.' Mot., filed Nov. 28, 2018, at 5:16-17.)

On December 14, 2018, plaintiffs filed a third document titled First Amended Complaint, this time focusing on the distribution channel, omitting the limitation to pet parasiticides, [*6] and identifying a single "relevant . . . market," namely, "the wholesale distribution to non-veterinary retailers of unmeasured veterinary wellness and medication products." (See FAC ¶ 24.)[4]

By the instant motion, defendants seek an order dismissing the FAC with prejudice.

LEGAL STANDARD

Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure "can be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." See Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). Rule 8(a)(2), however, "requires only 'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)). Consequently, "a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations." See id. Nonetheless, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." See id. (internal quotation, citation, and alteration omitted).

In analyzing a motion to dismiss, a district court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See NL Indus., Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint [*7] must contain sufficient factual material, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level[.]" Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

Generally, a district court, in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, may not consider any material beyond the complaint. See Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n.19 (9th Cir. 1990). Documents whose contents are alleged in the complaint, and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading, however, may be considered. See Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994). In addition, the Court may consider matters that are subject to judicial notice. See Mack v. South Bay Beer Distribs., Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 (9th Cir. 1986). Notably, a court "need not . . . accept as true allegations that contradict matters properly subject to judicial notice or by exhibit." See In re Gilead Sci. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation and citation omitted).

[4] As discussed below, plaintiffs use the term "unmeasured" to refer to products that are carried by retailers, but for which sales to consumers are "not tracked" by "retail measurement firms." (See FAC ¶ 4.)

DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs challenge defendants' merger on the theory its effect "may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." (See FAC ¶ 1.) In particular, plaintiffs bring three claims, namely: (1) "Unlawful Merger," in violation of Section 7 of [*8] the Clayton Act (see id. at 13:26); (2) "Monopolization," in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act (see id. at 14:9); and (3) "Attempted Monopolization," in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act (see id. at 14:20).

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits persons "engaged in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce" from acquiring "the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital . . . of another person engaged also in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce, where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce . . ., the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." See 15 U.S.C. § 18. Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it a felony to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, . . . any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." See 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Where, as here, plaintiffs bring claims under Section 7 of the Clayton Act and Section 2 of the Sherman Act, they must allege a relevant market in which defendants have market power. See United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 (1957) (holding, for claim under Clayton Act § 7, "determination of the relevant market is a necessary predicate"); Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding, "[i]n order to state a valid claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege . . . both that a 'relevant [*9] market' exists" and that the defendant has power within that market"); see also United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 458, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1964) (holding Clayton Act § 7 is "design[ed] to prevent undue concentration"; noting "[m]arket shares are the primary indicia of market power"); Golden Gate Pharm. Servs., Inc. v. Pfizer, Inc., 433 Fed. App'x 598, 598 (9th Cir. 2011) (holding, in case with claims under both Clayton Act and Sherman Act, "[i]n order to state an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must identify a relevant market within which the defendant has market power").

Defendants challenge all three claims against them on the basis that plaintiffs have failed to allege "market power in a relevant market." (See Defs.' Mot. to Dism. Pls.' FAC at 8:22.)

A. Relevant Market

Although "the validity of the 'relevant market' is typically a factual element rather than a legal element," see Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045, "[a] complaint may be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) if the complaint's 'relevant market' definition is facially unsustainable," see id. "First and foremost, the relevant market must be a product market." See id. (emphasis in original) (explaining "consumers do not define the boundaries of the market; the products or producers do").[5] The product market "must encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product," see id.; see also Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) (holding "[t]he [*10] outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it").

Here, as noted above, plaintiffs, in the instant complaint, allege a single market, namely, "the wholesale distribution to non-veterinary retailers of unmeasured veterinary wellness and medication products." (See FAC ¶¶ 1, 24.)[6] According to plaintiffs, "[m]easured products are those that are tracked by retail measurement services" (see id. ¶

[5] Antitrust law also requires allegation of "a geographic market." See Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 n.4. As defendants do not dispute plaintiffs' alleged geographic market, namely, "the United States" (see FAC ¶ 25), the Court does not address such issue further herein.

[6] Although defendants contend "the end user pet owner[] is the appropriate customer" (see Mot. to Dism. at 11:1), the Court, for purposes of the instant analysis, assumes the appropriate customer is, as plaintiffs contend, the non-veterinarian retailer.

2), and "[u]nmeasured products are available in retail stores . . ., but sales of these products are not tracked" by such services (see id.).[7] As also noted above, however, a relevant market is defined by the products themselves or their producers. See Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045. A market definition based on whether one or more business entities find it economically advantageous to collect and publish certain types of sales data is facially unsustainable.

Moreover, the FAC, absent some other modifier or means of delineation, provides no meaningful way to otherwise identify a product market. First, as to "veterinary wellness and medication products," one cannot determine what [*11] types of products are encompassed by the term "wellness," which plaintiffs do not define and which could include products ranging from pet food and exercise equipment to training aids. Similarly, as to "medication," although, as plaintiffs allege, the FTC identified, in a 2015 report, four categories of "pet medications,"[8] it did not, contrary to plaintiffs' allegation, identify those products as "unmeasured." (See FAC ¶ 26.) Indeed, the FTC did not even limit pet medications to those four categories or define them in the same way as plaintiffs. (Compare id. (describing four categories as follows: "Parasiticides, Vaccines, Antibiotics, and Analgesics") with Defs.' Req. for Jud. Not., filed Jan. 15, 2019 ("RJN"), Ex. 2 (FTC report) at 17 (noting "[m]ost of the pet medications available to U.S. consumers can be classified into four areas: (1) parasiticides (e.g., flea/tick/heartworm); (2) vaccines; (3) anti-infectives (e.g., antibiotics); and (4) anti-inflammatory (e.g., non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, 'NSAIDs')" (emphasis added)); see also id. at 1 n.2 (noting "[t]his report does not purport to identify any relevant product market for antitrust law enforcement purposes").[9]

Further, elsewhere in the FAC, plaintiffs allege "two product categories comprise the relevant product market" (see FAC ¶ 33), namely, "Rx in Retail" and "'direct purchasing from animal health suppliers' for delivery to retailers" (see id.). Even assuming the first such category corresponds to prescription products, the second has no meaningful boundaries.

In addition, apart from the above-referenced deficiencies in plaintiffs' product definition, plaintiffs define the market too narrowly with respect to its participants, whether actual or potential. See Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 (holding relevant market "must include the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business") (internal quotation and citation omitted). In particular, plaintiffs allege the secondary distribution system is the "only mechanism through which retailers can obtain unmeasured veterinary wellness and medication products." (See FAC ¶ 24.) The FAC does not, however, include any factual allegations to support such conclusory assertion. Further, as set forth below, plaintiffs' exclusion of veterinarians and manufacturers conflicts with various allegations in [*13] their FAC, as well as with allegations in their prior pleadings and statements in the FTC report on which plaintiffs have relied.

First, as to veterinarians, given that, in the FAC, plaintiffs identify VIP, which operates veterinary clinics, as a pre-merger "horizontal competitor" in the market (see id. ¶ 11) and as having "competed with both PetIQ and plaintiffs" (see id. ¶ 17), it is not tenable to exclude veterinarians from the alleged market. See, e.g., United States v. Topco, 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972) (referring to "competitors at the same level of the market" as "horizontal").

[7] The Court finds it unnecessary to address herein defendants' contention that, contrary to plaintiffs' allegations, "measured" and "unmeasured" are not used in connection with "products," but, rather, with "accounts" (see Mot. to Dism. at 12-13), i.e., retailers, who, according to defendants, "themselves determine whether or not to share sales data with measurement firms" (see id. at 13:3-4).

[8] While it appears plaintiffs use "veterinary" and "pet" interchangeably (see, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 1, 21), the two terms ordinarily are not interchangeable, the former encompassing a wide variety of animals not ordinarily kept as "pets," and, consequently, plaintiffs' use of both terms introduces into plaintiffs' market definition an additional measure of ambiguity.

[9] Defendants' unopposed Request for Judicial Notice is hereby GRANTED as to the above-cited report, as well as each of the other documents attached thereto, namely: (1) a copy of "PetIQ's June 19-20, 2018 Jefferies Consumer Conference presentation" (see RJN at 1:5-6 & Ex. 1); and (2) a copy of "PetIQ's May 15, 2018 Quarter 1 earnings call transcript" (see id. [*12] at 1:10-11 & Ex. 3).

Next, plaintiffs' exclusion of manufacturers conflicts with factual allegations in each of the prior iterations of their complaint, specifically, allegations that retailers also obtain pet medications from manufacturers and their approved distributors. (See Compl. ¶ 3 (alleging "retail outlet[s]" are "supplied" both "directly by a manufacturer or its distributor" and "by the 'secondary distribution system'"); PFAC ¶ 3 (same); RPFAC ¶ 3 (same)); see also *Royal Primo Corp. v. Whitewater West Indus., Ltd., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57529, 2016 WL 1718196, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 29, 2016) (holding court "may look to prior pleadings in determining the plausibility of an amended complaint"). Further, the exclusion of manufacturers is inconsistent with other allegations in the FAC and with [*14] the FTC report. (See FAC ¶ 30 (alleging Bayer, a "major veterinary pharmaceutical manufacturer, . . . support[s] the sales of its pet medications by retailers, pharmacies, and on-line merchants"); see also RJN Ex. 2 (FTC report) at 4 (stating "some manufacturers . . . supply . . . non-veterinary retailers"); id. at 20 (noting "[s]ome stakeholders report that . . . large retail pharmacies and stores have been able to purchase pet medications directly from the manufacturers").

In sum, for all of the above reasons, the Court finds plaintiffs' proposed market is not facially sustainable and, consequently, the FAC is subject to dismissal. See Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045; see also Hicks v. PGA Tour, Inc., 897 F.3d 1109, 1123 (9th Cir. 2018) (affirming dismissal of antitrust complaint where proposed markets were "facially unsustainable") (internal quotation and citation omitted).

B. Market Power

As noted above, in addition to alleging a relevant market, plaintiffs must also 9 allege defendants have market power in such market. "Market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 464, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (explaining market power "has been defined as the ability of a single seller to raise price and restrict output") (internal quotations and citations omitted). [*15] "A failure to allege power in the relevant market is a sufficient ground to dismiss an antitrust complaint." Rick-Mik Enterprises, Inc. v. Equilon Enterprises LLC, 532 F.3d 963, 972 (9th Cir. 2008).

"Market power may be demonstrated through either of two types of proof": (1) "direct evidence of the injurious exercise of market power"; or (2) "circumstantial evidence pertaining to the structure of the market." See Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995). Direct evidence includes "evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices." See id.; see also Oltz v. St. Peter's Cmty. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1448 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding "proof of actual detrimental effects such as a reduction of output can obviate the need for elaborate market analysis"; noting "the finding of actual harm to competition suffices") (internal quotation and alterations omitted). To show market power circumstantially, a plaintiff must: "(1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and . . . that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434; see also Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (defining market power as "the ability of a single seller to raise price and restrict output"; holding "[t]he existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant [*16] share of the market") (internal quotation and citation omitted). Here, even assuming, arguendo, plaintiffs have alleged a plausible market, plaintiffs, as set forth below, have failed to allege facts sufficient to show, either directly or circumstantially, that defendants possess the requisite market power.

Plaintiffs allege PetIQ, as a result of the merger, "has come to dominate the secondary distribution market and forced other secondary distributors to exit by virtue of its acquired market power." (See FAC ¶ 11.) To the extent plaintiffs rely on direct evidence, such reliance is unavailing. Plaintiffs have not alleged any output restriction or supracompetitive pricing; indeed, as to price, plaintiffs do not allege any increase at all. Nor have plaintiffs alleged any other "actual harm" to competition, see Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1448; other than plaintiff Bay Medical, the FAC identifies no wholesale distributor as having been "foreclosed from the market" (see FAC ¶ 32),[10] and, in any event, such "foreclosure" appears to be limited to a single product, "Frontline Plus" (see id.).

Plaintiffs' effort to show market power circumstantially likewise fails. Plaintiffs allege defendants "claim[] to [*17] control over 90%" of the alleged market (see id. ¶ 3; see also ¶ 37),[11] an allegation that is based on a PetIQ presentation slide, which, plaintiffs allege, shows "PetIQ now claims to distribute . . . 90% of 'direct purchasing from animal health suppliers' for delivery to retailers" (see id. ¶ 33). Plaintiffs have submitted, however, only a portion of the slide (see id. at 11:1-15), whereas a review of the entire slide, titled "Significant Improvements in Our Supply Chain," makes clear the 90% figure pertains to the source of PetIQ's own supply of products for distribution, not its share of the alleged wholesale market. (See RJN Ex. 3 at 12; see also id. Ex. 1 at 12 (reporting "roughly 90% of our distribution business is through a direct relationship with the animal health manufacturers").) Plaintiffs' reliance on said exhibit is, consequently, misplaced. See In re Gilead Sci. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d at 1055; see also Roth v. Garcia Marquez, 942 F.2d 617, 625 n.1 (9th Cir. 1991) (holding, "when the allegations of the complaint are refuted by an attached document, the Court need not accept the allegations as being true").

Next, relying on a different slide, plaintiffs allege PetIQ "claims to distribute a '95% Share of Rx in Retail.'" (See FAC ¶ 33.) Such allegation, although an accurate characterization [*18] of the slide's content, does not correspond to the alleged market, which encompasses "unmeasured pet wellness and medication products," a different, and much broader, array of products than prescription products. Notably, plaintiffs have not provided any figures corresponding to PetIQ's share of ostensibly restricted OTC products or its share of prescription and such restricted OTC products combined, nor provided any figures as to what share of the market either defendant possessed prior to the merger. See, e.g., Continental Can, 378 U.S. at 460 (analyzing market power of acquiring firm by reference to market shares possessed, prior to merger, by acquirer and acquiree; finding violation of Clayton Act § 7, where acquisition both "added significantly to [acquirer's] position" and "reduced from five to four the most significant competitors").[12]

Lastly, with respect to the two parts of the final element required for a circumstantial showing of market power, "barriers to entry and barriers to expansion," see Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1439, plaintiffs' allegations are wholly conclusory as to the former and absent as to the latter. As to barriers to entry, plaintiffs allege that "[o]ffering . . . distribution services [in the secondary market] [*19] requires veterinary licensing and other regulatory authorizations and appropriate relationships with manufacturers and retailers." (See FAC ¶ 39.) In connection therewith, however, plaintiffs provide no factual elaboration. Plaintiffs do not, for example, include any allegation as to the degree of difficulty involved in obtaining such authorization, nor do they explain their assertion that it would be "practically impossible" to cultivate the above-referenced business relationships. (See id.) In any event, given plaintiffs' failure to include any allegation bearing on barriers to expansion, the requisite showing has not been made. See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434.

[10] Plaintiffs allege the other wholesale distributors include, along with plaintiffs, "Southeastern Veterinary Exports, Lambert Vet Supply, Rainbow Vet Supply, Pet Vet Supplies, and other distributors not known to plaintiffs" (see FAC ¶ 37), and then allege, in conclusory and imprecise fashion, such entities "are being foreclosed from the retail customer base and have been or may be forced to exit the market" (see id.) (emphasis added).

[11] Plaintiffs also allege the merger "establishes a single distributor for several competing veterinary pharmaceutical manufacturers" (see FAC ¶¶ 12, 38), but do not identify those manufacturers or provide factual support for said allegation.

[12] Plaintiffs' effort to connect the 95% figure, which pertains solely to prescription products, with their alleged market (see Opp'n at 17:21-18:1) (contending "nearly all of the unmeasured products flowing through the secondary distribution channel are prescription" products) is not consistent with their contention that Frontline Plus, an OTC product, "contributes significantly to defendants' dominance over the relevant market" (see id. at 18 n.7), nor is it supported by their citations to the FAC (see, e.g., FAC ¶ 2 (alleging "[m]ost or all of the products served by the relevant market in this case are preventative medications, . . ., both prescription and non-prescription")).

In light of the foregoing, the Court finds the FAC is subject to dismissal for failure to allege market power in a relevant market. See Rick-Mik Enters., 532 F.3d at 972.[13]

C. Leave to Amend

In their opposition, plaintiffs, without providing any additional facts they could allege, request another opportunity to amend.

As discussed above, however, the operative pleading, notwithstanding its title, is in fact the fourth iteration of plaintiffs' complaint, over the course of which filings plaintiffs have repeatedly changed their definition of the relevant market. Last August, at the hearing [*20] on defendants' first motion to dismiss, plaintiffs asked the Court for sixty days to amend their complaint. At this point, having been granted not only the requested sixty days, but an additional extension as well, the instant complaint fares no better than its predecessors, and, as noted, plaintiffs have not identified any factual allegations that could be added to cure the above-described deficiencies. In short, it appears plaintiffs have pleaded all the facts they have, and those facts are not sufficient to support their claims. Under such circumstances, the Court finds further leave to amend would be futile. See Dougherty v. City of Covina, 654 F.3d 892, 901 (9th Cir. 2011) (finding leave to amend would be futile where plaintiff failed to allege facts sufficient to state claim and did not identify any additional facts that could be pled); see also Simon v. Value Behavioral Health, Inc., 208 F.3d 1073, 1084 (9th Cir. 2000) (affirming denial of leave to amend antitrust complaint; explaining "[a]lthough it is theoretically possible for [plaintiff] to allege more specific facts, his failure to do so after the district court had given him three opportunities to amend his original complaint and had discussed with him the substantive problems with his claims suggests the futility of further amendment"), overruled on other [*21] grounds by Odom v. Microsoft Corp., 486 F.3d 541 (9th Cir. 2007) (en banc).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, defendants' Motion to Dismiss is hereby GRANTED and the FAC is DISMISSED without further leave to amend.

The Clerk is directed to close the file.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS [Dkt. 32]

I. INTRODUCTION & BACKGROUND

On December 31, 2018, Plaintiff Fireworks Lady & Co., LLC ("Fireworks Lady") filed this putative class action against Defendant Firstrans International Co. ("Firstrans"), an American company that transports fireworks from the People's Republic of China ("PRC") to the United States. (Dkt. 1 [Complaint, hereinafter [*2] "Compl."].) Plaintiff, a Florida fireworks merchant, purchases its fireworks from unidentified manufacturers in the PRC. (Dkt. 37 at 6-7.) Those manufacturers then contract with nonparty Shanghai Huayang International Logistics Co. ("Huayang") to ship the fireworks to the United States. (Id.) The PRC requires any company that ships fireworks to obtain a special permit in light of the safety hazards involved. According to Plaintiff, Huayang is the only company legally permitted to conduct inland transport of fireworks from the PRC manufacturers' warehouses to the PRC seaports. (Compl. ¶¶ 22-23.) Huayang purportedly requires its customers to then use Defendant Firstrans to ship the fireworks from the PRC seaports to the United States. (Id. ¶ 2.)

Plaintiff alleges that Firstrans violated federal antitrust law by unlawfully tying the purchase of PRC fireworks to its shipping services, enabling it to charge "grossly supracompetitive shipping prices." (Id. ¶¶ 2, 48.) On behalf of itself and all entities who relied on Firstrans to ship fireworks from the PRC to the United States, Plaintiff seeks damages and injunctive relief pursuant to Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. (Id. [*3] ¶ 39.) Before the Court is Firstrans's motion to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). (Dkt. 32 [hereinafter "Mot."].) For the following reasons, the motion is GRANTED.[1]

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in the complaint. The issue on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is not whether the claimant will ultimately prevail, but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims asserted. Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997). Rule 12(b)(6) is read in conjunction with Rule 8(a), which requires only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). When evaluating a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the district court must accept all material allegations in the complaint as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Moyo v. Gomez, 32 F.3d 1382, 1384 (9th Cir. 1994). The district court may also consider additional facts in materials that the district court may take judicial notice, Barron v. Reich, 13 F.3d 1370, 1377 (9th Cir. 1994), as well as "documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading," Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled in part on other grounds by Galbraith v. Cty. of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2002).

However, "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of [*4] the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009); see also Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (stating that while a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation" (citations and quotes omitted)). Dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim is not proper where a plaintiff has alleged "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. In keeping with this liberal pleading standard, the district court should grant the plaintiff leave to amend if the complaint can possibly be cured by additional factual allegations. Doe v. United States, 58 F.3d 494, 497 (9th Cir. 1995).

III. ANALYSIS

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To establish liability under Section 1, a plaintiff must prove (1) the existence of an agreement, and (2) that the agreement was an unreasonable restraint of trade. Aerotec Int'l, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171, 1178 (9th Cir. 2016). Plaintiff asserts that Firstrans restrained trade by unlawfully "tying" the sale of PRC fireworks to the purchase of Firstrans's shipping services. [*5]

[1] Having read and considered the papers presented by the parties, the Court finds this matter appropriate for disposition without a hearing. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; Local Rule 7-15. Accordingly, the hearing set for April 29, 2019, at 1:30 p.m. is hereby vacated and off calendar.

In a tying arrangement, a "seller conditions the sale of one product (the tying product) on the buyer's purchase of a second product (the tied product)." Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 912 (9th Cir. 2008). "Tying arrangements are forbidden on the theory that, if the seller has market power over the tying product, the seller can leverage this market power through tying arrangements to exclude other sellers of the tied product." Id. To establish Section 1 liability based on a tying arrangement, a plaintiff must allege "(1) that the defendant tied together the sale of two distinct products or services, (2) that the defendant possesses enough economic power in the tying product market to coerce its customers into purchasing the tied product, and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a 'not insubstantial volume of commerce' in the tied product market." Id. at 913 (quoting Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1159 (9th Cir. 2003)).

Firstrans moves to dismiss on the ground that Plaintiff has not pled the first element of a tying arrangement: a tie between two distinct products or services. To establish a tie between "distinct products or services," a plaintiff must allege facts that show "a sufficient demand for the purchase of the tied product separate from the tying product." Rick-Mik Enters. Inc. v. Equilon Enters., LLC, 532 F.3d 963, 974 (9th Cir. 2008). Plaintiff argues that there are several [*6] tying arrangements at issue here. The Court addresses each one in turn.

Plaintiff at times alleges that Firstrans conditioned the sale of fireworks (tying product) on the purchase of Firstrans's shipping services (tied product). (Compl. ¶ 52.) This theory fails for two reasons. First, Plaintiff fails to plausibly allege that U.S. customers want to purchase the shipment or transport of fireworks without also purchasing the fireworks themselves. See Rick-Mik Enters., 532 F.3d at 974 (stating that a plaintiff must allege "a sufficient demand for the purchase of the tied product separate from the tying product"). Second, Plaintiff never alleges that Firstrans sells fireworks—only that it arranges for their transport from the PRC seaports to the United States. (See Compl. ¶ 12 ["Firstrans specializes in arranging the shipment of fireworks from the PRC to the U.S."].) Accordingly, even if the fireworks and their shipment are "distinct products or services," Plaintiff has failed to offer any facts indicating that Firstrans has conditioned the sale of one on the purchase of the other.[2] Firstrans seemingly has no involvement in the sale of the tying product.

Plaintiff next asserts in its moving papers that the various segments [*7] of Firstrans's shipping process constitute separate and distinct products and services. (See Dkt. 37 [Pl.'s Opp'n] at 9 [dividing Firstrans's shipping process into "freight forwarding, in-land river transport, ware-housing and storage, specialized local trucking, and marine cargo handling"].) This theory likewise fails. The fact that a shipping company controls the discrete segments of its shipping process does not indicate the presence of distinct products or services. Under Plaintiff's theory, any shipping company would potentially face antirust liability whenever it transports a product through multiple modes of transportation or uses a storage facility in the course of delivering its goods. Further, the Complaint contains no allegation that suggests that demand for one segment of Firstrans's shipping process is separate from demand for the other segments. Nor does it allege that Firstrans conditions the sale of one aspect of its shipping services on the purchase of another.

Plaintiff has failed to allege any facts that plausibly suggest Firstrans has engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement. Plaintiff offers no other basis for asserting antitrust liability. Accordingly, Firstrans's [*8] motion to dismiss is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies in the Complaint could be cured by amendment, the Complaint is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

For the foregoing reasons, Firstrans's motion is GRANTED. Plaintiff's Complaint is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

[2] At other points in the Complaint, Plaintiff alleges a tie between "the acceptance of fireworks imported" and "the shipping services provided by [Firstrans]." (Compl. ¶ 48.) The "acceptance of fireworks" is not a product or service. It is an action on the part of U.S. customers. In any event, customers do not purchase Firstrans's shipment of fireworks without also "accepting" the fireworks themselves.

ORDER

THIS CAUSE comes before the Court upon Defendants' Zausner Food Corp. ("Zausner") and ZNHC, Inc.'s ("ZNHC") Motion to Transfer Venue to the United States District Court for the District of Delaware (the "Motion"). D.E. 5. The Court has considered the pertinent portions of the record and is otherwise fully advised in the premises.

I. Factual Background

A. Parties

Plaintiffs ECB [*2] USA ("ECB"), and Atlantic Ventures Corp. ("AV"), are Florida corporations doing business in Miami-Dade County Florida. D.E. 1 ¶¶ 2-3. Defendant Savencia S.A., is a French corporation. Id. ¶ 5. Defendant

Zausner Foods Corp., is a Delaware corporation doing business in Miami-Dade County Florida. Zausner is a corporation within the Savencia group and is fully controlled by Savencia. D.E. 1 ¶ 5, 11. ZNHC is a Delaware corporation doing business in Miami-Dade County and a wholly-owned subsidiary of Zausner. Nonparty Schratter Foods Incorporated ("SFI") is a Delaware corporation doing business in Miami-Dade Florida, and at the time of the Stock Purchase Agreement, was a subsidiary of ZNHC, and ultimately a subsidiary of Savencia. Id. ¶ 4.

B. Purchase of SFI & Stock Purchase Agreement

On December 6, 2014, Zausner and ZNHC entered into a Stock Purchase Agreement (the "SPA") to sell SFI to ECB and nonparty Voss Enterprises, Inc.[1] D.E. 1-1. In the SPA, ZNHC made numerous representations and warranties, such as:

> To the knowledge of [ZNHC], Schratter Foods has all necessary governmental licenses and permits to operate the Business as it is presently being operated and has passed all inspections ancillary [*3] to the operation of the business in the various jurisdictions where Schratter foods has been and is conducting its business.

D.E. 1 ¶ 30. Although not a party to the SPA, SFI relied heavily on sales of Savencia's goods for its profitability. D.E. 1 ¶ 65. According to Plaintiffs, the SPA required Savencia to price its products sold to SFI after closing of the SPA, at pre-determined rates that would enable SFI to have a ten percent profit margin on the distribution of such products. Id. ¶ 66.

The SPA also contained a forum-selection clause, stating:

> Any action or proceeding in connection with this Agreement shall be brought in a court of record of the State of Delaware in and the City of Wilmington or in the United States District Court in such county, the Buyer and the Seller consenting to the exclusive jurisdiction thereof.

D.E. 1 at 102 (Section XIII.5 "Applicable Law and Attorneys' Fees").

According to Plaintiffs, Defendants made numerous misrepresentations and engaged in fraudulent conduct relating to the value of SFI before, during, and after the execution of the SPA. After discovering that many of Defendants' representations in the SPA were false and that SFI was not as valuable [*4] as was represented, Plaintiffs brought suit, arguing that they did not receive the benefit of the SPA.

II. Procedural Background

On October 24, 2018, Plaintiffs filed this action in the Eleventh Judicial Circuit in and for Miami-Dade County. D.E. 1. In their complaint, Plaintiffs bring Six Counts: (1) breach of contract against ZNHC; (2) fraud in the inducement against Savencia and ZNHC arising out of misrepresentations made during the negotiation of the SPA; (3) fraud against Savencia and ZNHC arising out of misrepresentations made during the negotiation of the SPA; (4) violations of the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA") arising out of Savencia and ZNHC's frauds and unconscionable business practices; (5) guaranty liability against Zausner, alleging that Zausner, as ZNHC's guarantor under the SPA, is liable for ZNHC's breach of contract and non-performance; and (6) violation of the Florida Antitrust Act of 1980 arising out of Savencia's alleged increase in price of goods sold to SFI post-SPA, in violation of the SPA. D.E. 1. On November 14, 2018 Defendants ZNHC and Zausner removed the instant Complaint to this Court. D.E. 1

Defendants Zausner and ZNHC subsequently [*5] moved to transfer venue under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a), arguing that the mandatory forum selection clause in the SPA requires that suits "in connection with" the SPA be brought in Delaware. D.E. 5. The Motion is fully briefed and ripe for disposition.

[1] ECB and Voss Enterprises assigned portions of their equity in SFI to AV, then owned by ECB and VEI in the same proportions as their prior direct ownership of SFI. D.E. 1 at 19 n.1; see D.E.1 at 125.

III. Legal Standard

28 U.S.C. § 1404 states, in relevant part: "For the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought or to any district or division to which all parties have consented." § 1404(a). "Although a forum-selection clause does not render venue in a court 'wrong' or 'improper' within the meaning of § 1406(a) or Rule 12(b)(3), the clause may be enforced through a motion to transfer under § 1404(a)." Atl. Marine Const. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Texas, 571 U.S. 49, 59 (2013). 28 U.S.C. Section 1404(a) provides that "[f]or the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought or to any district or division to which all parties have consented." Id. "Unlike § 1406(a), § 1404(a) does not condition transfer on the initial forum's being 'wrong.' And it permits transfer to any district where venue is also proper (i.e., "where [the case] might have been brought") or to any [*6] other district to which the parties have agreed by contract or stipulation." Atl. Marine Const. Co., 571 U.S. at 59. "Section 1404(a) therefore provides a mechanism for enforcement of forum-selection clauses that point to a particular federal district." Id. "A valid forum-selection clause is given controlling weight in all but the most exceptional cases." Stewart Org., Inc. v. Ricoh Corp., 487 U.S. 22, 33, 108 S. Ct. 2239, 2246, 101 L. Ed. 2d 22 (1988) (Kennedy, J., concurring).

IV. Discussion

A. The Forum Selection Clause is Valid

The forum selection clause at issue, provides:

> Any action or proceeding in connection with this Agreement shall be brought in a court of record of the State of Delaware in and the City of Wilmington or in the United States District Court in such county, the Buyer and the Seller consenting to the exclusive jurisdiction thereof.

D.E. 1 at 102 (Section XIII.5 "Applicable Law and Attorneys' Fees").

In the instant Motion, Defendants move to transfer the action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) to the United States District Court for the District of Delaware, arguing that the forum selection clause is valid, and that the action before this Court is a "proceeding in connection with this Agreement" under the forum-selection clause. D.E. 5. "The validity of a forum selection clause is determined under the usual rules governing the enforcement [*7] of contracts in general." P & S Bus. Machines, Inc. v. Canon USA, Inc., 331 F.3d 804, 807 (11th Cir. 2003). "Forum selection clauses are presumptively valid, and the burden of proving their unreasonableness is a heavy one." See Marco Forwarding Co. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 430 F. Supp. 2d 1289, 1293 (S.D. Fla. 2005). Plaintiffs do not challenge the validity of the forum selection clause, arguing instead that this action is not encompassed by the forum selection clause and that its enforcement would be unreasonable. P & S Bus. Machines, Inc., 331 F.3d at 807 ("The burden is on the party opposing the enforcement of the forum selection clause to show that the contractual forum is sufficiently inconvenient to justify retention of the dispute."). Thus, the Court agrees that the forum-selection clause is valid and turns to Defendants' arguments against its enforcement.

B. The Forum Selection Clause Encompasses All Claims

Plaintiffs argue that their claims are "outside the scope of the contract, so . . . the forum selection clause is not applicable." D.E. 15 at 3. Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that the majority of their claims are not "in connection with" the SPA because they allege fraud, violation of the Florida Antitrust Claim of 1980, and violations of the FDUTPA, which arise not out of the SPA, but out of "egregious pre-contractual fraud committed by both signatories and non-signatories to the [*8] SPA." D.E. 15 at 5.

In support, Plaintiffs rely almost exclusively on *Newco Energy Acquisitions Holdings, LLC v. Shulgen, No. 12-81249-CIV, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 195631, 2013 WL 12149763, at 3 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 28, 2013). In Newco, the plaintiff alleged "fairly lengthy fraudulent pre-contractual conduct," and the forum selection clause only encompassed claims "in connection with" the contract. Id. The court found that "the phrase 'in connection with' encompasse[d] fewer situations than a broad 'in any way related to' clause" and therefore given the plaintiff's significant allegations of fraudulent pre-contractual conduct, the court found that those claims were not encompassed by the forum selection clause. See also Armco, Inc. v. N. Atlantic Ins. Co. Ltd., 68 F.Supp.2d 330 (S.D.N.Y.1999) (holding that allegations of fraudulent scheme before execution of SPA were not encompassed by forum-selection clause).[2]

There are numerous problems with Plaintiffs' argument. First, neither Newco nor Armco are binding precedent. Second, Newco's interpretation of forum selection clauses, that those referencing [*9] actions "in connection with" a contract encompass fewer situations than more broadly worded forum selection clauses, is not echoed in the law in this circuit; particularly where the forum selection clause, as in this case, references "[a]ny action or proceeding." For example, in Ricoh, the Eleventh Circuit held that the plaintiff's fraud and antitrust claims were subject to the forum selection clause because the language of the forum selection clause read "any case or controversy arising under or in connection with this agreement" and the transfer of entire cases, including fraud claims, "promotes a more orderly and efficient disposition of the case . . . [and] encourage[s] commercial reliance on forum selection clauses and thus keep[s] intact the usefulness of these agreements." 810 F.2d at 1070 (emphasis added). This interpretation is borne out in cases throughout this circuit. See Am. Residential Equities, LLC v. Del Mar Datatrac, Inc., No. 08-20014-CIV, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128560, 2008 WL 11333097, at *3 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 13, 2008) (Ungaro, J.) ("Clauses referencing 'any lawsuit regarding this agreement' have been broadly construed to include extra-contractual claims.") (citation omitted); see also Pods, Inc. v. Paysource, Inc., No. 8:05-CV-1764-T-27EAJ, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31838, 2006 WL 1382099, at *2 (M.D. Fla. May 19, 2006) ("Broadly construing the forum selection clause in the Agreement, the reference to "any lawsuit" is sufficiently broad as to apply to Plaintiff's claims [*10] in this lawsuit.") (emphasis added); Picken v. Minuteman Press Intl., Inc., 854 F. Supp. 909 (N.D.Ga.1993) (holding that franchisee's claims for fraud were covered by forum selection clause applying to "any litigation commenced by either party hereunder."); Vernon v. Stabach, No. 13-62378-CIV, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63055, 2014 WL 1806861, at *4 (S.D. Fla. May 7, 2014) ("A federal court should construe forum selection clauses broadly."). Accordingly, given that this forum selection clause encompasses "any action in connection with [the SPA]" the Court finds that it encompasses all of Plaintiffs' claims, requiring transfer to Delaware.

Third, even if, as Newco suggests, this forum selection clause were somehow more limited in scope, Plaintiffs' claims are all encompassed by the forum selection clause because they are overwhelmingly "in connection with"

[2] Plaintiffs also rely on Newco's narrow interpretation of forum selection clauses to briefly argue that the forum selection clause is merely permissive. D.E. 15 at 4. This is important because the Eleventh Circuit "enforce[es] only those clauses that unambiguously designate the forum in which the parties must enforce their rights under the contract." Florida Polk County v. Prison Health Servs., Inc., 170 F.3d 1081, 1084 n. 8 (11th Cir.1999). "A mandatory clause designates a specific forum as the exclusive forum in which to litigate the dispute. A permissive clause merely consents . . . to jurisdiction in the designated forum and does not foreclose litigation in an alternative forum. Cardoso v. Coelho, 596 F. App'x 884, 885-86 (11th Cir. 2015). "An action is only subject to dismissal based on a forum selection clause if the import of the language of the clause as a whole is to provide a particular court or courts with "exclusive jurisdiction," although the clause need not include the word "exclusive." Wai v. Rainbow Holdings, 315 F. Supp. 2d 1261, 1270 (S.D. Fla. 2004). Here, the Court agrees with Defendants that the forum selection clause is plainly mandatory because it provides for exclusive jurisdiction in Delaware or Wilmington and provides no alternative forum for suit. See D.E. 1 at 102 (Section XIII.5 "Applicable Law and Attorneys' Fees") (any action "shall be brought in a court of record of the State of Delaware in and the City of Wilmington or in the United States District Court in such county, the Buyer and the Seller consenting to the exclusive jurisdiction thereof.") (emphasis added). In addition, the forum selection clauses uses the word "shall," which the Eleventh Circuit has held is an indicator that the clause is mandatory. See Slater v. Energy Servs. Grp. Int'l, Inc., 634 F.3d 1326, 1330-31 (11th Cir. 2011) (holding "that the forum designation in the clause is not permissive, but mandatory," because the clause stated "all claims or causes of action relating to or arising from this Agreement shall be brought in a court in the City of Richmond, Virginia," and "the use of the term 'shall' is one of requirement.") (emphasis added); Walker v. Hallmark Bank & Tr., Ltd., 707 F. Supp. 2d 1322, 1325 n.1 (S.D. Fla. 2010) (concluding forum selection clause was mandatory "based on the use of the terms 'shall' and 'exclusive.'") (emphasis added); see also Snapper, Inc. v. Redan, 171 F.3d 1249, 1260-1262 n. 24 (11th Cir.1999) (stating that a selection clause is mandatory when "it dictates an exclusive forum for litigation under the contract" and finding forum selection clause stating that an action "may be brought in the courts of the State of Georgia or the United States District Court, Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division, all as Creditor may elect" to be permissive) (emphasis added).

the SPA. As an initial matter, two of these claims are literally connected to the SPA: Count One's breach of contract claim and Count Five's Guaranty liability claim.[3] As to the remaining fraud and antitrust claims, the Court agrees with Defendants that Plaintiffs drastically mischaracterize these claims in response to Defendants' Motion as allegations of "a wide ranging conspiracy to defraud," D.E. 15 at 6, in an attempt to avoid the forum selection clause. This they cannot do. See Stiles v. Bankers Healthcare Grp., Inc., 637 F. App'x 556, 559 (11th Cir. 2016) ("While Plaintiffs contend that [*11] the loan agreement itself is void due to Defendant's allegedly fraudulent conduct, they do not argue that these general allegations of fraud render the forum-selection clause unenforceable . . . a plaintiff seeking to avoid enforcement of a forum-selection clause based on fraud must show that the choice clause itself was included in the contract due to fraud, not simply that there is a dispute regarding fraud arising from the transaction.") (quotations omitted).

In reality, each misrepresentation upon which Plaintiffs' fraud claims rely is the obverse of a representation or warranty in the SPA. For example, in Count Two, Plaintiffs bring a claim for fraudulent inducement based on the alleged misrepresentations contained in paragraphs 1 through 71 of the complaint. D.E. 1 ¶¶ 79-84. Almost half of these paragraphs reflect the following structure:

> In the SPA, ZNHC made the following representations, warranties, commitments and assurances, inter alia:
> To the knowledge of the [ZNHC], Schratter Foods has all necessary governmental licenses and permits to operate the Business as it is presently being operated and has passed all inspections ancillary to the operation of [*12] the Business in the various jurisdictions where Shcratter Foods has been and is conducting its Business . . . this representation was false.

Id. at 30-31 (emphasis added); see also id. at ¶¶ 32-39, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47, 48.

The Complaint also contains seven pages of alleged misrepresentations "upon which ECB USA relied in entering into the SPA" D.E. 1 ¶ 63(a)-(hh). Each of these misrepresentations relates to a term of the SPA, for example, "Savencia and ZNHC misrepresented the condition of SFI's subsidiaries, as required under Exhibit "A" Sect. III.6 [the SPA]." D.E. 1 ¶ 63(f). Even the fraudulent misconduct that is alleged to have occurred after the SPA is framed in terms of its violation of the SPA: "Savencia and its affiliated entities charged SFI prices that were not only in violation of the pricing policies set forth in the SPA but that were up to three times higher than the prices previously charged to SFI when SFI was under the control of Savencia/ZNHC." D.E. 1 ¶ 67.

As Defendants put it:

> it is manifestly clear from the allegations in the Complaint that all of Plaintiffs' Fraud-Based Claims here did in fact arise "in connection with" the transaction established and evidenced in the SPA. Plaintiffs' [*13] fraud-based allegations are identical to their contractual allegations, detailing the same violations, referencing the same representations and warranties, and arising from the same contractual relationship.

D.E. 20 at 5. And as this Court previously put it: "[a]s for the fraud in the inducement and negligent misrepresentation claims, because these claims arose out of the contract, they are governed by the parties' agreement concerning venue." *Am. Residential Equities, LLC, No. 08-20014-CIV, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128560, 2008 WL 11333097, at 2 (emphasis added); Ricoh, 779 F.2d. at 650 ("It is difficult to imagine a commercial case where contractual issues could not and would not be intertwined with claims in tort or criminal or antitrust law.").

Accordingly, the Court finds that this action constitutes "any action or proceeding in connection with [the SPA]," and pursuant to the forum selection clause is subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the District of Delaware or a court in the State of Delaware. Stiles, 637 F. App'x at 561 ("the forum-selection clause clearly applies to Plaintiffs' fraud and negligence claims, which claims are based on the same core facts and essentially the same legal argument as the TILA claims."); see Digital Envoy, Inc. v. Google, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 2d 1377, 1380 (N.D. Ga. 2004) ("Digital Envoy contends that this action is not governed by the [*14] forum selection clause because the tort claims it asserts are independent of the license agreement and would exist even if there were no agreement between the parties. This argument is misguided. While Digital Envoy might assert the same claims against Google in the absence of a contractual agreement between the parties, the fact remains that in this instance, there is an agreement; and one of the central issues in this case—if not the central issue in this case—is whether that agreement extends to Google's current use of Digital Envoy's technology. Moreover, the forum selection clause in the license agreement is not limited . . . to claims that are dependent upon the agreement or to those that allege breach of the agreement. Rather, it encompasses '[a]ny lawsuit regarding this Agreement.' Digital Envoy's claims in this case clearly 'regard' the license agreement, as they regard alleged activities that may or may not be covered by the agreement and, indeed, they will almost certainly fail if Google's use of its technology is found to be within the scope of the agreement."); Picken, 854 F. Supp. at 911 ("the mere allegation of fraud in the complaint should not determine the enforceability of a forum selection [*15] clause. Plaintiffs allege fraud in the inducement. This type of fraud attacks the underlying transaction as having been deceitful. It does not attack the language of the contract itself. This is to be distinguished from fraud in factum in which a party is tricked into assenting without understanding the significance of his action. Plaintiffs are not arguing that they did not understand what the contract itself stated. They are alleging only that Defendant made various misrepresentations as to profitability, services to be provided, and the general viability of the Kennesaw franchise."); Smith v. Prof'l Claims, Inc., 19 F. Supp. 2d 1276, 1282 (M.D. Ala. 1998) ("[Plaintiffs]" asserted claims for fraud, misrepresentation, and deceptive trade practices. The crux of their complaint is that the products and services which they received were not the same ones that had been represented to them before the purchase. The plaintiffs attack the underlying transaction as fraudulent. This court adopts the rationale of Picken and finds that the forum selection clause covers the tort claims in this case."); Stephens v. Entre Computer Centers, Inc., 696 F. Supp. 636, 638 (N.D. Ga. 1988) ("Plaintiffs' tort claims are that defendants' fraudulent misrepresentations caused them to enter the agreement in the first instance, and then to invest significant funds [*16] to continue operating the computer center after the business was not as successful as they had anticipated. All these claims arise either "directly or indirectly from the business relationship evidenced by the contract," and are therefore subject to the forum selection clause.").

[3] Plaintiffs do not dispute that these claims are subject to the forum selection clause, but argue that these two claims should not be transferred to Delaware because "public interest factors" justify maintaining this action in this Court. As discussed in more detail infra, the public interest factors do not justify maintaining suit in this Court. See infra pp. 11-12.

C. No Public Interest Factors Prohibit Transfer

Plaintiffs spend much of their response arguing that a variety of public and private interest factors preclude this Court from transferring the case. See Motorola Mobility, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 804 F.Supp.2d 1271, 1275-76 (S.D. Fla. 2011). But, much of this analysis only applies in the absence of a forum selection clause. As the Supreme Court has explained:

> a court evaluating a defendant's § 1404(a) motion to transfer based on a forum-selection clause should not consider arguments about the parties' private interests. When parties agree to a forum-selection clause, they waive the right to challenge the preselected forum as inconvenient or less convenient for themselves or their witnesses, or for their pursuit of the litigation. A court accordingly must deem the private-interest factors to weigh entirely in favor of the preselected forum.

Atl. Marine Const. Co., 571 U.S. 49, 64, 134 S. Ct. 568, 187 L. Ed. 2d 487 (emphasis added). "A district court may consider arguments about public-interest factors only . . . Because those factors [*17] will rarely defeat a transfer motion, the practical result is that forum-selection clauses should control except in unusual cases." Id. Accordingly, the Court does not consider any private factors in ruling on whether to transfer this case pursuant to § 1404(a).

A brief review of the public-interest factors reveals that this case is not the "unusual case" the Supreme Court had in mind. "Public-interest factors may include the administrative difficulties flowing from court congestion; the local interest in having localized controversies decided at home; [and] the interest in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is at home with the law." Id. at 63 n.6. (quotations and internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs additionally argue that their choice of forum is to be accorded significant deference and that there are related cases in Florida state court.

Administrative difficulties flowing from court congestion militates in favor of transfer as this Court is currently without four judges and faces a record case volume. This is not a "localized controversy" based in Florida. To be sure, the SPA was executed here, there are two related cases in Florida state court, and Plaintiffs are [*18] Florida companies. However, Defendants are either Delaware companies or French companies and a substantial portion of the action involves Savencia and its dealings in France. Further, only one of the related state court cases involves the defendants in this case and Plaintiffs have not explained what efficiencies would be realized by proceeding in this Court as opposed to federal court in Delaware. As to Plaintiff's choice of forum, the Supreme Court has expressly stated that where there is a binding forum selection clause, "the plaintiff's choice of forum merits no weight." Atl. Marine Const. Co., 571 U.S. 49, 63. Lastly, the Court agrees with Plaintiffs that there is some interest in having a trial in Florida where a Plaintiff asserts FDUTPA and Florida Antitrust claims. However, this Court is not a Florida state court and "Federal courts today, however, are often called upon to apply state laws, especially on common legal issues such as breach of contract, misrepresentation, fraud, indemnification and punitive damages. . . ." Thayer/Patricof Educ. Funding, L.L.C. v. Pryor Res., Inc., 196 F. Supp. 2d 21, 35 (D.D.C. 2002); see also Coker v. Bank of America, 984 F. Supp. 757, 766 (S.D.N.Y.1997) ("[T]he fact that the law of another jurisdiction governs the outcome of the case is a factor accorded little weight on a motion to transfer . . . especially in an instance such as this [*19] where no complex questions of foreign law are involved.") (ellipses in original).

Accordingly, the Court is not persuaded that any public interest factors suggest that the Court should disregard the parties' bargained-for forum selection clause, particularly given the Supreme Court's emphasis on the importance of enforcing forum selection clauses and upholding the parties' contractual expectations:

> [w]hen parties have contracted in advance to litigate disputes in a particular forum, courts should not unnecessarily disrupt the parties' settled expectations. A forum-selection clause, after all, may have figured centrally in the parties' negotiations and may have affected how they set monetary and other contractual terms; it may, in fact, have been a critical factor in their agreement to do business together in the first place. In all but the most unusual cases, therefore, "the interest of justice" is served by holding parties to their bargain.

Atl. Marine Const. Co., 571 U.S. 49, 66. Accordingly, the Court will hold the parties to their bargain and transfer the case to the United States District Court for the District of Delaware.

D. The Forum Selection Clause Binds Savencia

The final issue the Court must resolve is whether Savencia, [*20] a non-signatory to the SPA, can be bound by its forum selection clause. In order to bind a non-party to a forum selection clause, that party "must be closely related to the dispute such that it becomes foreseeable that [it] will be bound." Lipcon v. Underwriters at Lloyd's, London, 148 F.3d 1285, 1299 (11th Cir.1998); see also Manetti—Farrow, Inc. v. Gucci America, Inc., 858 F.2d 509, 514 n. 5 (9th Cir.1988) ("[A] range of transaction participants, parties and non-parties, should benefit from and be subject to forum selection clauses."). "A third party is bound by a forum-selection clause where the party's rights are 'completely derivative of those of the [signing party]—and thus 'directly related to, if not predicated upon' the interests of the [signing party].'" Stiles, 637 F. App'x at 562 (quoting Lipcon, 148 F.3d at 1299.

Here, Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts or provided any legal argumentation as to Savencia that is in any way distinct from the claims against the signatory parties or the SPA. To the contrary, Plaintiffs allege that Savencia is the parent company of signatory Zausner and that it had a duty under the SPA to sell its products to SFI at a certain price. See D.E. ¶ 66 (As a customer of SFI, Savencia was bound by certain contractual provisions in the SPA . . . ."). Accordingly, the Court concludes that Savencia's rights and obligations are directly related to [*21] the interests of its signatory subsidiaries and Savencia is therefore so closely related to the dispute that it is "foreseeable that it will be bound" by the forum selection clause. See Smith v. Prof'l Claims, Inc., 19 F. Supp. 2d 1276, 1282 (M.D. Ala. 1998) ("Ms. Burke was not a signatory to the agreements . . . Ms. Burke has not alleged any facts or theories for relief other than those asserted by Ms. Smith. She was a joint venturer with Ms. Smith in this endeavor. As such, she was so closely related to the dispute that she is bound by the forum selection clause."); *Gonzalez v. Watermark Realty Inc., No. 09-60265-CIV, 571 U.S. 49, 2010 WL 1299740, at 4 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 30, 2010) ("Here, it is foreseeable that Prudential and its agent Ms. Castro would be bound by the Sales Contract. Ms. Castro's participation was integral to the transaction. She even signed the Sales Contract, albeit on behalf of Mr. Noreiga, but such action betrays a likelihood that the document will apply to her."); Stephens v. Entre Computer Centers, Inc., 696 F. Supp. 636, 639-40 (N.D. Ga. 1988) ("the Court finds that the instant clause applies to all the parties to this action whether or not they signed the contract. As discussed, all the claims arise directly or indirectly from the franchise agreement; that single document . . . connects all the plaintiffs with all the defendants."); Coastal Steel Corp. v. Tilghman Wheelabrator Ltd., 709 F.2d 190, 203 (3d Cir. 1983) (enforcing forum selection clause against nonparty whose "only significant status in the [*22] case is as [signatory]'s parent."); Stiles, 637 F. App'x at 562 (11th Cir. 2016) ("[A]ssuming that [non signatory Plaintiff] has some viable claim against Defendant under TILA, any such claim is predicated on the same facts as her husband's claims. Therefore, her claims are derivative of and directly related to her husband's, and she is bound by the forum-selection clause.") (emphasis added); Friedman v. World Transportation, Inc., 636 F.Supp. 685, 691 (N.D.Ill.1986) (explaining that plaintiff "cannot escape his resulting contractual obligations under the forum clause simply because he happened to join additional parties who did not sign that contract."); cf. Cooper v. Meridian Yachts, Ltd., 575 F.3d 1151, 1170 (11th Cir. 2009) ("Here, the Vulcan appellants' third-party claims arise out of an independent right of indemnity and contribution and do not derive from the agreement. Thus, even in the absence of the agreement, Vulcan manager and Vulcan employer would still have a viable third-party action against De Vries based on their underlying liability to Cooper.").

V. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed supra, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Defendants' Motion to Change Venue, D.E. 5, is GRANTED. It is further

ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that the Clerk of Court is DIRECTED TO TRANSFER this action the United States District Court for the District of Delaware. It is further ORDERED [*23] AND ADJUDGED that the following transfer to the proper jurisdiction, the Clerk of Court SHALL administratively close this case on this Court's docket. All future hearings are CANCELLED and all pending motions are DENIED AS MOOT.

DONE AND ORDERED in Chambers at Miami, Florida, this 24th day of April, 2019.

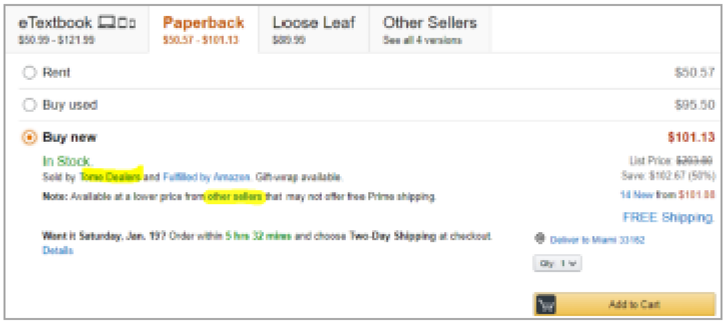
MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Amazon.com is an online market that allows multiple sellers to offer the same product. When multiple sellers offer the same product, they compete to be listed in the "Buy Box"—a box on the product's page from which customers add items to their online shopping cart:



In the example above, a seller would rather be in Tome Dealers's shoes—the winner of the Buy Box—than be lumped with a list of "other sellers." When a customer clicks "Add to Cart" without browsing the list of other sellers, the customer adds a product sold by the Buy Box winner. A seller thus increases its chances of selling a given product by winning that product's Buy Box. The seller cannot win, however, [*2] unless it has the product in stock and prices it competitively.

Plaintiff BookXchange FL, LLC ("BookXchange") and defendant Book Runners, LLC ("Book Runners") are rival textbook sellers on Amazon, and they compete for the Buy Box. Plaintiff alleges that Book Runners manipulates the Buy Box using fraudulent transactions. Book Runners allegedly orders books from plaintiff using false shipping addresses and false payment information. The scheme "locks up" plaintiff's inventory: if the shipping address is false, the book cannot be delivered; if the payment information is false, Amazon places the book on hold for days. Both methods temporarily reduce plaintiff's inventory. During that time, if a customer tries buy a textbook and plaintiff apparently (but falsely) does not have the book in stock, plaintiff cannot win the Buy Box. By ousting plaintiff, Book Runners eliminates a competitor and enjoys a greater chance of winning the Buy Box for itself, thus increasing its chance of making a sale.

That is, at least, what plaintiff alleges in its first amended complaint, which purports to state five claims: (1) conspiracy to restrain trade, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) [*3] conspiracy to restrain trade, in violation of the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10/3(2); (3) fraud at common law; (4) fraud and deceptive practices, in violation of the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act, 815 ILCS 505/1 et seq. ("Consumer Fraud Act"); and (5) breach of the parties' prior settlement agreement, in which Book Runners agreed not to manipulate the Buy Box. Book Runners moves to dismiss the case under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and moves to dismiss the complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim, except that Book Runners does not challenge the claim that it breached the settlement agreement.

The motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction is denied. The amount in controversy here has four components: (1) lost profits; (2) pre-litigation attorney's fees; (3) injunctive relief; and (4) punitive damages. Because it does not appear to a legal certainty that the sum of these four components is $75,000 or less, and because the parties are citizens of different states, this court has diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332.

The motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, however, is granted without prejudice. Plaintiff's federal and state antitrust claims fail because [*4] the complaint alleges that Book Runners conspired to restrain trade with defendants Tobias Kaplan and Andrew McCotter—Book Runners' own co-founders and members. A conspiracy among parties with identical economic interests does not violate the antitrust laws.

As for plaintiff's common law fraud and Consumer Fraud Act claims, they have not been pleaded with the particularity demanded by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Nor does plaintiff fall under Rule 9(b)'s exception. That exception applies only when the plaintiff lacks access to the facts underlying the fraud and explains the grounds for its suspicion. Plaintiff's own pleadings suggest that it has access to enough sales and shipping information to allege the fraudulent orders with particularity. And although plaintiff might lack access to facts underlying its other theory of fraud—that Book Runners places orders with the intent to cancel them—plaintiff's explanation for its suspicion is inadequate. If pleaded with particularity, however, the common law fraud and Consumer Fraud Act claims would likely avoid dismissal. Plaintiff is therefore granted leave to file a second amended complaint.

DIVERSITY JURISDICTION

The court has jurisdiction over this case if it arises under [*5] federal law, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, or if it involves citizens of diverse states and the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000, 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Because plaintiff alleges that Book Runners violated a federal law—the Sherman Act—this court has federal question jurisdiction. Book Runners argues, however, that plaintiff fails to state a claim under the Sherman Act—and argues that the court, if it agrees, should, (1) find that it lacks diversity jurisdiction because the amount in controversy does not exceed $75,000, and (2) decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiff's state law claims, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3).

The court agrees that plaintiff fails to state a claim under the Sherman Act, but finds that the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000. The proponent of federal jurisdiction need establish only by "a preponderance of the evidence facts that suggest the jurisdictional amount has been satisfied." Carroll v. Stryker Corp., 658 F.3d 675, 680 (7th Cir. 2011). Once those facts have been established by the proponent of federal jurisdiction, "[i]t must appear to a legal certainty that the claim is really for less than the jurisdictional amount to justify dismissal." St. Paul Mercury Indemnity Co. v. Red Cab Co., 303 U.S. 283, 288-89, 58 S. Ct. 586, 82 L. Ed. 845 (1938). This jurisdictional inquiry allows the court to go beyond the complaint. Apex Digital, Inc. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 572 F.3d 440, 443-44 (7th Cir. 2009).

The amount in controversy here has four components: [*6] (1) lost profits; (2) pre-litigation attorney's fees; (3) injunctive relief; and (4) punitive damages. The last component, punitive damages, is key—Illinois law allows punitive damages for common law torts and for violations of the Consumer Fraud Act, Kirkpatrick v. Strosberg, 385 Ill. App. 3d 119. 132-33, 894 N.E.2d 781, 323 Ill. Dec. 755 (Ill. App. 2008), and allows "single-digit ratio[s] between punitive and compensatory damages." International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 150 v. Lowe Excavating Co., 225 Ill. 2d 456, 483-84, 870 N.E.2d 303, 312 Ill. Dec. 238 (2006), quoting State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. v. Campbell, 538 U.S. 408, 424-25, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 (2003). "[P]articularly egregious conduct" can warrant ratios that are even higher. International Union, 225 Ill. 2d 456 at 486 (reversing a punitive damages award at a 75 to 1 ratio, and commenting that a $50,000 award at "a double-digit ratio of approximately 11 to 1, would be reasonable and constitutional," given that the defendant's "conduct was minimally reprehensible . . . ."); see also, e.g., Mathias v. Accor Economy Lodging, Inc., 347 F.3d 672, 678 (7th Cir. 2003) (affirming, in a diversity suit governed by Illinois law, punitive damages of $186,000 and compensatory damages of $5,000 for each plaintiff—a ratio of 37.2 to 1—when the defendant hotel had misled its guests about bedbugs and had refused to fumigate the building).

Even if Book Runners' conduct was only "minimally reprehensible," and thus warranted punitive damages at a ratio of 11 to 1, International Union, 225 Ill. 2d 456 at 486, plaintiff would need to allege compensatory damages exceeding just $6,250 (one-twelfth of $75,000) to satisfy the [*7] amount in controversy requirement. With that target amount in mind, the court assumes, for determining jurisdiction (as does Book Runners, begrudgingly), that plaintiff lost, at most, $1,828.09 in profits. What remains is the difference between $6,250 and $1,828.09—$4,421.91. That amount must be exceeded by the sum of two categories of damages: (1) plaintiff's pre-litigation attorney's fees, and (2) the value of an injunction barring Book Runners from ordering plaintiff's books.

Attorney's fees + injunction	$4,421.91
Compensatory damages	$6,250.00
Punitive damages (11 to 1 ratio)	$68,750.00
Amount in controversy	$75,000.00

The complaint's allegations suggest that plaintiff's pre-litigation attorney's fees, plus the value of an injunction, would exceed $4,421.91. Although Book Runners persuasively argues that the value of an injunction might well be zero—it has a record of placing hundreds of legitimate and presumably profitable orders with plaintiff—Book Runners concedes that, "[p]erhaps BookXchange incurred a few thousand dollars in attorney's fees before filing the complaint . . . ." $4,422 is all plaintiff needs to satisfy the [*8] jurisdictional amount. Plaintiff's claims, of course, may have no merit—and if so, plaintiff may never recover any fees—but "[d]istrict courts should not get bogged down . . . in evaluating claims on the merits to determine if jurisdiction exists." Carroll, 658 F.3d at 681.

Because it does not appear to a legal certainty that the amount in controversy is $75,000 or less, and because the parties are citizens of different states, this court has diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332 and cannot relinquish jurisdiction over plaintiff's state law claims. Quackenbush v. Allstate Insurance Co., 517 U.S. 706, 716, 116 S. Ct. 1712, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1996) ("[F]ederal courts have a strict duty to exercise the jurisdiction that is conferred upon them by Congress."). Book Runners' motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction—which, properly construed, is a motion for this court to decline supplemental jurisdiction if it dismisses plaintiff's Sherman Act claim—is therefore denied.

DISCUSSION

Book Runners' next challenge is to the legal sufficiency of plaintiff's complaint. Book Runners moves to dismiss plaintiff's claims for: (1) conspiracy to restrain trade under the Sherman Act and the Illinois Antitrust Act; (2) fraud at common law; and (3) fraud and deceptive practices under the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive [*9] Practices Act. To survive the motion to dismiss, the complaint must allege facts that state a "plausible" claim. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009), citing Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A claim is plausible if the court, taking the alleged facts as true, can reasonably infer that the defendant is liable. Id.

1 Sherman Antitrust Act and Illinois Antitrust Act

Book Runners first moves to dismiss plaintiff's claim that Book Runners violated section 1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff alleges that Book Runners conspired to restrain trade with defendants Tobias Kaplan and Andrew McCotter—co-founders and members of Book Runners. Kaplan, McCotter, and Book Runners, however, are the same economic actors and have the same economic interests. A conspiracy among them does not violate the Sherman Act.

Under the Sherman Act, economic actors can conspire to restrain trade only when their economic interests are independent. When independent economic actors so conspire, they "deprive the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). Economic actors do not, however, conspire to restrain trade when they have "a complete unity of interest." Id. at 771. Because Book Runners is a legal entity composed of its members—Kaplan and McCotter—the three [*10] of them are economic actors with a unity of interest. They cannot conspire to restrain trade.

In opposing dismissal, plaintiff does not argue otherwise. Instead, plaintiff raises an alternative theory that does no better: Book Runners conspired with unnamed software developers that supplied the tools Book Runners needed for its anticompetitive scheme. This alternative theory has many problems. First, plaintiff does not identify who these software developers are or how their programs furthered Book Runners' scheme; second, developers who supply automated pricing programs do not compete in the textbook market. The theory's most basic problem, however, is that its underlying facts appear nowhere in plaintiff's complaint, and facts outside of the complaint cannot be considered on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Powe v. Chicago, 664 F.2d 639, 642 (7th Cir. 1981).

Plaintiff thus fails to state a claim under the Sherman Act. That, in turn, dooms its claim under the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10 et seq. Both the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10/3(2), forbid conspiracies to restrain trade—and Illinois courts "use the construction of federal antitrust law by federal courts to guide their construction of those state antitrust [*11] laws that are substantially similar to federal antitrust law." Illinois v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 935 F.2d 1469, 1480 (7th Cir. 1991), citing 740 ILCS 10/11. The Illinois Antitrust Act claim falls with the Sherman Act claim.

2 Common law fraud

Next, Book Runners moves to dismiss plaintiff's claim for common law fraud. A fraud claim has five elements: (1) the defendant made a false statement of a material fact; (2) the defendant knew the statement was false; (3) the defendant intended for the statement to induce the plaintiff to act; (4) the plaintiff relied on the truth of the statement; and (5) the plaintiff was damaged by relying on the statement. Connick v. Suzuki Motor Co., 174 Ill. 2d 482, 496, 675 N.E.2d 584, 221 Ill. Dec. 389 (Ill. 1996). The complaint alleges that when Book Runners ordered plaintiff's books on Amazon, Book Runners gave Amazon false shipping addresses and false payment information. Book Runners argues that the fraud allegations: (1) have not been pleaded with the particularity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); (2) raise no inference of a false statement; and (3) raise no inference that plaintiff relied on the truth of a false statement.

2.1 Particularity

For the most part, the fraud claim fails because plaintiff has not stated the fraud's circumstances with particularity. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Plaintiff identifies six "fake purchases" made by Book Runners—and, for each purchase, [*12] lists the date, order number, title, order quantity, unit price, and total order amount—but does not identify: the false statements on which those purchases relied; who made the false statements; and which purchases used false shipping addresses and which used false payment information. Those details are mandatory. See, e.g., Rocha v. Rudd, 826 F.3d 905, 911 (7th Cir. 2016) (affirming the dismissal of a fraud claim under Rule 9(b) because the plaintiff "fail[ed] to provide the specific names, dates, times, or content of the misrepresentations or omissions that give rise to the alleged fraud.").

True enough, Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements are relaxed when the plaintiff lacks access to the facts underlying the fraud and explains the grounds for its suspicion. Pirelli Armstrong Tire Corp. Retiree Medical Benefits Trust v. Walgreen Co., 631 F.3d 436, 443 (7th Cir. 2011). That plaintiff lacks access to the underlying facts, however, is implausible. Attached to plaintiff's complaint is a declaration from one of its employees, Zachary Langstein. Langstein, who analyzes Amazon sales data: (1) states that Book Runners "appear[s] to have used false shipping addresses"; (2) gives an example of an order that "was shipped but returned as 'Undeliverable'"; and (3) attaches an exhibit showing the allegedly false shipping address. If plaintiff can supply such [*13] details for one order, it can do so for other orders. The declaration shows that plaintiff has access to the facts underlying Book Runners' alleged fraud from the shipping and payment information for Book Runners' allegedly fraudulent orders. The exception to Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements thus does not apply, and plaintiff's fraud claim turns on the sole order pleaded with particularity.

Although the order described in Langstein's declaration is alleged with enough particularity to satisfy Rule 9(b), it raises no plausible inference of fraud. That order was placed on October 14, 2018, and listed defendant Andrew McCotter, a member of Book Runners, as recipient. As stated in the complaint, Book Runners' address is 4050 N. Rockwell, Chicago, IL 60618. The order described by Langstein, however, listed an address that did not quite match:

Shipping service	Standard
Ship by	Thu, Oct 25, 2018
Ship to	Andrew McCotter 4050 N ROCKWELL ST UNIT 1 UNIT 1 CHICAGO, IL 60618-3721
Purchase date	Sun, Oct 14, 2018, 12:27 PM PT

Plaintiff alleges that this order was shipped but returned as "Undeliverable." According to plaintiff, this is an example of Book Runners using "false shipping addresses" to "lock up" plaintiff's inventory. To sustain a fraud claim, however, the false statement must be [*14] material—yet, as plaintiff's own complaint alleges, the street address, city, and zip code were all accurate. Although the court could possibly infer that erroneously duplicating "Unit 1" makes the shipping address materially false, that inference would not be plausible.

Fraud also requires intent. If Book Runners intended to lock up plaintiff's inventory by sending packages to false addresses, those addresses were false in ways that apparently were inexplicably subtle. Did Book Runners hope that the Amazon delivery driver would go to 4050 N Rockwell and give up because he could find no building unit labeled "Unit 1 Unit 1"? Perhaps so, but evaluating a claim for plausibility requires the court to use "judicial experience and common sense," Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679, and doing so here makes it implausible to infer an intent to defraud.

Rule 9(b) "screen[s] against spurious fraud claims" by encouraging plaintiffs to conduct "a careful pretrial investigation," Fidelity National Title Insurance Co. of New York v. Intercounty National Title Insurance Co., 412 F.3d 745, 749 (7th Cir. 2005), and a careful pretrial investigation has not been done here. Plaintiff could have provided other examples of Book Runners placing orders using false shipping addresses; it did not do so. Because the only allegedly fraudulent order stated with particularity fails [*15] to raise a plausible inference of fraud, the court is left with the fraud's "how"—but without the fraud's "what" or "when." DiLeo v. Ernst & Young, 901 F.2d 624, 627 (7th Cir. 1990). Plaintiff's failure to allege those details contravenes Rule 9(b) and requires dismissal of its fraud claim.

2.2 False statement

Although plaintiff's Rule 9(b) deficiencies are reason enough to dismiss the fraud claim, those deficiencies might be cured in an amended complaint. The court therefore addresses Book Runners' other arguments for dismissal.

Book Runners contends that the complaint fails to allege false payment information. The court disagrees. Paragraph 13 of the complaint alleges that Book Runners, "ensure[s] that Amazon's systems are not able to complete the transaction," by "providing bad information, such as an incorrect credit card number or a wrong address . . . ." If Book Runners used an "incorrect" credit card number, it made a false statement. Even so, argues Book Runners, the credit card numbers "must have been valid or else the orders would not have posted in the first place." That assumption—although reasonable—is neither alleged in the complaint, nor raised in a request for judicial notice. Without that assumption, it is reasonable to infer that orders can [*16] post even when placed using incorrect credit card numbers.

2.3 Reliance

Book Runners also argues that that it was not plaintiff that relied on the allegedly false statements—it was Amazon—and the complaint does not allege that Amazon was plaintiff's agent. Although the court agrees that the complaint contains no such allegations of agency, that is not dispositive: "traditional privity [is] not a requirement in fraud actions," Shannon v. Boise Cascade Corp., 208 Ill. 2d 517, 526, 805 N.E.2d 213, 281 Ill. Dec. 845 (Ill. 2004); "[i]t is enough that the statements by the defendant be made with the intention that it reach the plaintiff and influence his action and that it does reach him and that he does rely upon it, to his damage." Id., quoting St. Joseph

Hospital v. Corbetta Construction Co., 21 Ill. App. 3d 925, 954, 316 N.E.2d 51 (Ill. App. 1974). Book Runners' allegedly false payment information and false shipping addresses fit that requirement. Book Runners ordered plaintiff's books on Amazon using false information; Amazon marked those books "sold"; plaintiff, relying on Amazon's marking of those books as "sold," did not cancel Book Runners' orders; those orders depleted plaintiff's inventory; plaintiff's depleted inventory made plaintiff ineligible to win the Buy Box. That is reliance.

3 Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act

Last, Book Runners moves to dismiss [*17] plaintiff's claim under the Consumer Fraud Act, which prohibits "unfair or deceptive acts or practices . . . ." 815 ILCS 505/2. According to Book Runners, plaintiff, (1) has again failed to plead with particularity, and (2) lacks standing to sue.

3.1 Particularity

As discussed, plaintiff must replead its claim for common law fraud because it can likely uncover enough about Book Runners' use of false information to plead the fraud's "who, what, when, where, and how . . . ." DiLeo, 901 F.2d at 627. A claim under the Consumer Fraud Act, which sounds in fraud, must likewise meet Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements. See, e.g., Camasta v. Jos. A. Bank Clothiers, Inc., 761 F.3d 732, 736-37 (7th Cir. 2014). Plaintiff's failure to plead with particularity might appear to defeat plaintiff's Consumer Fraud Act claim as surely as it defeats plaintiff's claim for common law fraud.

The Consumer Fraud Act, however, gives plaintiff an additional opportunity to meet Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement. Unlike fraud at common law, the Consumer Fraud Act broadly prohibits "unfair or deceptive acts or practices," 815 ILCS 505/2; no false statement is required. Martin v. Heinold Commodities, 163 Ill.2d 33, 49-52, 643 N.E.2d 734, 205 Ill. Dec. 443 (Ill. 1994). Book Runners allegedly ties up a competitor's inventory by placing orders with the intent that those orders end up unfulfilled. Placing such orders, even using genuine shipping [*18] addresses and payment information, plausibly is unfair or deceptive. Cf. 7 U.S.C. § 6c(a)(5)(C) (making it a criminal offense to place a bid or offer on a futures contract "with the intent to cancel the bid or offer before execution"). By placing orders using genuine information, Book Runners ties up plaintiff's inventory without leaving a paper trail of false shipping addresses and payment information. That leaves plaintiff unable to identify the orders that Book Runners intended always to cancel, and the orders that Book Runners placed honestly, but later canceled for legitimate reasons.

Plaintiff's inability to identify Book Runners' deceptive orders suggests that plaintiff lacks access to the scheme's underlying facts. Still, plaintiff must then explain the grounds for its suspicion. To do so, plaintiff alleges two facts: (1) although "[t]ypical transaction[s] on Amazon clear and ship within minutes or hours of the original order," six orders placed by Book Runners were "'pending' for a significant length of time"—and were "ultimately canceled"; and (2) while those six orders were pending, Book Runners held "the lead position in the 'Buy Box.'"

As pleaded, these facts raise no plausible inference of suspicion. [*19] Why is it suspicious for the six orders to have pended for a "significant" time? How much longer were they pending compared to similar orders? How unusual is it for some orders to pend longer than others—is the distribution of pend times normal, or uniform? If the pend times were unusually long, were innocent explanations possible? The complaint fails to answer these questions. Plaintiff's second fact raises yet more questions that go unanswered: Why is it suspicious for Book Runners to have won the Buy Box while the six orders pended? After all, although plaintiff alleges that Amazon "typically" lists its books in the Buy Box before listing those sold by Book Runners, plaintiff does not allege that for these six orders, Book Runners' scheme caused plaintiff to lose the Buy Box. Without context, plaintiff's two facts fail to explain the grounds for its suspicion. See Pirelli, 631 F.3d at 444-45 (affirming the dismissal of a price-gouging claim sounding in fraud and rejecting the plaintiff's grounds for suspicion because the drug reimbursement data on which the plaintiff relied were "not placed . . . in context," and "their free-floating nature stymie[d] any meaningful understanding of what the numbers mean[t]"). [*20]

At best, plaintiff's allegations may be consistent with a scheme to place deceptive orders—but equally consistent with bad lines of code in Amazon's inventory management system, or with orders mistakenly placed by a bumbling Book Runners employee. Equivocal inferences make for implausible claims. Cf. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 554 (holding that a complaint failed to state a plausible claim for Sherman Act conspiracy because of "the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market"); Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679 ("[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not shown—that the pleader is entitled to relief.") (citation, alteration, and quotation marks omitted). Plaintiff must do more—gather more data, place them in context, and explain why they raise suspicion—to justify falling short of Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements. Fidelity, 412 F.3d at 749.

3.2 Standing

Failure to plead with particularity warrants dismissal of plaintiff's Consumer Fraud Act claim. That failure, however, is curable. The court thus considers—and [*21] rejects—Book Runners' challenge to plaintiff's standing to sue.

When a business sues under the Consumer Fraud Act, it "must show a nexus between the complained of conduct and consumer protection concerns"; it must satisfy the "consumer nexus test." Community Bank of Trenton v. Schnuck Markets, Inc., 887 F.3d 803, 822-23 (7th Cir. 2018). Not every business dispute satisfies that test. Broken promises, for example, are not actionable, for "[t]hat type of 'misrepresentation' occurs every time a defendant breaches a contract." Avery v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co., 216 Ill. 2d 100, 169-70, 835 N.E.2d 801, 296 Ill. Dec. 448 (Ill. 2005) (citation and quotation marks omitted). Nor can a business satisfy the consumer nexus test by disguising a breach of contract claim as a consumer fraud claim. See, e.g., *Classic Bus. Corp. v. Equilon Enters., LLC, No. 09 C 7735, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7817, 2011 WL 290431, at 4-5 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 27, 2011) (dismissing a Consumer Fraud Act claim for lack of standing because the defendants' alleged plan "to drive [the plaintiffs] out of business" was "simply a restatement" of the plaintiffs' breach of contract claim).

Plaintiff has standing to sue under the Consumer Fraud Act. Book Runners' scheme plausibly affects consumer prices for textbooks: by deposing a seller from the Buy Box, Book Runners artificially reduces the supply of textbooks, thus causing prices to rise, and consumers to pay above-market prices. See Walsh Chiropractic, Ltd. v. StrataCare, Inc., 752 F. Supp. 2d 896, 913 (S.D. Ill. 2010) (recognizing a business's standing to sue under the Consumer Fraud Act [*22] when the defendant allegedly helped a healthcare network administrator submit fraudulent claims for discounted healthcare rates, reasoning that "patients of medical providers (i.e. actual consumers at large) may be affected by [the defendant's] alleged fraudulent claims . . . via fee increases needed to cover their providers decreased income"). A successful Consumer Fraud Act action might well "serve the interests of consumers," Brody v. Finch Univ. of Health Sciences/The Chicago Medical School, 298 Ill. App. 3d 146, 160, 698 N.E.2d 257, 232 Ill. Dec. 419 (Ill. App. 1998), by restoring prices to their competitive equilibrium, and by deterring Book Runners—and other textbook sellers—from engaging in inventory lockup schemes. Unlike courts deciding contract disputes disguised as fraud claims, this court need not speculate to infer that the deceptive practices alleged here implicate consumer protection concerns. Plaintiff satisfies the consumer nexus test and has standing to sue under the Consumer Fraud Act.

CONCLUSION

Defendant Book Runners' motion to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction (Doc. 9) is denied. Book Runners' motion to dismiss Count I (fraud), Count II (Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act), Count IV (Sherman Antitrust Act), and Count V (Illinois Antitrust Act) for failure to state [*23] a claim (Doc. 12) is granted.

Plaintiff BookXchange is granted leave to file a second amended complaint by May 23, 2019. The hearing previously set for May 1, 2019, is continued to May 30, 2019, at 9:00 a.m.

To be per se illegal under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., a defendant's conduct has to be so obviously anticompetitive that it has no plausibly procompetitive features—a high hurdle for plaintiffs claiming restraint of trade. Once they clear it, however, plaintiffs receive a corresponding reward: they need not undergo the often arduous process of showing that the challenged conduct was anticompetitive. As one of the other circuits has described it, the per se rule is the trump card of antitrust law. When an antitrust plaintiff successfully plays it, he need only tally his score.

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, states that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Because virtually every agreement between parties has the potential to be considered a restraint of trade, antitrust jurisprudence limits the range of restraints within the reach of antitrust law to agreements that unreasonably restrain trade. A restraint on trade may be found to be unreasonable per se or under the rule of reason.

Although a motion for summary judgment against a per se claim involves underlying facts, the propriety of per se treatment is normally a question of legal characterization that can often be resolved by the judge on a motion for summary judgment. There is a presumption against applying the per se rule unless the restraint falls squarely into a per se category. A plaintiff must satisfy each element of the per se test in its allegations in order to survive pre-trial termination. At the summary judgment phase, the right question to ask regarding per se claims is whether the plaintiff has shown that the challenged restraint is so obviously anticompetitive that it should be condemned as per se illegal. If, in spite of the plaintiff's efforts, the record indicates that the challenged restraint is plausibly procompetitive, then summary judgment for the defendants is appropriate.

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Because joint ventures often have procompetitive efficiencies, when a joint venture is itself challenged as anticompetitive, that claim is reviewed under the rule of reason. But when the conduct of the joint venture is challenged, the relationship of the challenged conduct to the joint venture is analyzed to see if the conduct is reasonably related to the joint venture's procompetitive features (and therefore should be judged under the rule of reason), or is a naked restraint lurking beneath the veneer of a legitimate joint venture (and therefore deserves per se condemnation). A naked restraint, subject to the per se rule, can exist even though it is contained in a joint venture agreement that is, overall, quite competitive. The U.S. Supreme Court has distinguished three categories of restraints: (1) restraints that are core to the joint venture's efficiency enhancing purpose; (2) restraints that are ancillary to the joint venture's efficiency enhancing purpose; and (3) restraints that are nakedly unrelated to the purpose of the joint venture. Only the last of these three justifies per se treatment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Core activity is activity that is integral to the running of the venture. The U.S. Supreme Court has rejected a per se claim against horizontal price-setting by two competitors on the ground that the price-setting involved the core activity of the joint venture itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Restraints that are ancillary to the legitimate and competitive purposes of the business association fall between core activity and naked restraints. These are restraints by a joint venture that are not integral to the running of the joint venture, but may contribute to the success of a cooperative venture. A restraint is ancillary if it bears a reasonable relationship to the joint venture's success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The question of what relationship a challenged restraint must have to a joint venture in order to qualify as ancillary splits the Circuits—the Eleventh Circuit on the one hand, and the Second, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits on the other. The Sixth Circuit follows the majority of Circuits and holds that a joint venture's restraint is ancillary and therefore inappropriate for per se categorization when, viewed at the time it was adopted, the restraint may contribute to the success of a cooperative venture. That approach better accords with U.S. Supreme Court guidance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule

HN11[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The U.S. Supreme Court generally has treated as per se illegal joint efforts by firms to disadvantage a competitor by persuading customers to deny that competitor relationships the competitor needs in the competitive struggle. But in these cases, the practices generally were not justified by plausible arguments that the practices enhanced overall efficiency and made markets more competitive. This is so because plausible arguments that a practice is procompetitive make us unable to conclude the likelihood of anticompetitive effects is clear and the possibility of countervailing procompetitive effects is remote.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule

HN12[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Rule Tests

Condemning as per se illegal restraints that, while not necessary to achieving a joint venture's efficiency-enhancing purpose nevertheless plausibly relate to that purpose, would run counter to the U.S. Supreme Court's instruction to avoid applying the per se rule to situations where efficiencies are being served. Per se treatment is inappropriate where it cannot be stated with any degree of confidence that the challenged restraint always or almost always tends to restrict competition and decrease output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

The rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition. For a per se claim, however, whether challenged conduct belongs in the per se category is a question of law. And it is a question of law where certain presumptions apply. The plaintiff must satisfy each element of the per se test in its allegations in order to survive pre-trial termination. The U.S. Supreme Court has likewise held that because a plaintiff failed to make a threshold showing that the challenged conduct had the characteristics necessary to justify per se condemnation, rule of reason analysis should apply instead. A plaintiff seeking application of the per se rule must present a threshold case that the challenged activity falls into a category likely to have predominantly anticompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN14[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

If the record in a case reveals a plausible way in which the challenged restraints contribute to the procompetitive efficiencies of the joint venture, then the possibility of countervailing procompetitive effects is not remote and per se treatment is improper.

HN16[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Sixth Circuit has held that in the absence of a showing by the plaintiff that allegedly anticompetitive communication was (1) false and (2) difficult or costly for the plaintiff to counter, that court would apply a presumption that speech has de minimis effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN17[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The Sixth Circuit, as well as the common law, have long recognized that legitimate reasons exist to uphold noncompetition covenants even though by nature they necessarily restrain trade to some degree. It is the plaintiff's burden to show that per se treatment of allegedly anticompetitive conduct is justified. In this context, a plaintiff's failure to produce any on-point precedent is damning, as the court will refuse to apply the per se rule in the absence of judicial experience with the challenged restraint. It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations.

The appellate court will review for abuse of discretion the district court's decision to deny a motion to amend the complaint to add additional claims. The appellate court will overturn the district court's decision only if the appellate court has a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error in judgment in the conclusion it reached upon a weighing of the relevant factors. The standard for a motion to amend is governed by the general principle that cases should be tried on their merits rather than the technicalities of pleadings, which is in turn moderated by the exception that judges should allow amendment only when doing so does not cause prejudice to the defendants or undue delay.

[*718] [*2] ALICE M. BATCHELDER, Circuit Judge. This is a case about competition among hospitals in Dayton, Ohio. When Medical Center at Elizabeth Place, LLC ("MCEP") opened in 2006, it was an acute care, for-profit hospital owned by 60 physicians and one [2] corporate shareholder. By 2009, MCEP's existence as a physician-owned enterprise came to an end when it sold an ownership interest to Kettering Health Network, a competitor in the Dayton healthcare market. MCEP alleges that it failed because of the anticompetitive actions of Premier Health Partners ("Premier"), a dominant healthcare network in the Dayton area. MCEP alleges that Premier contracted with area physicians and payers (insurers and managed-care plan providers) on the condition that they did not do business with MCEP. Because payers provide patients and physicians provide services, it is difficult to run a viable hospital when one, let alone both, is in short supply.

So, whether by licit or illicit means, Premier won that competition. In this litigation, the parties competed again. This time, MCEP pushed all its chips to the center of the table on one hand of cards: a claim that Premier had engaged in conduct so devoid of benefit to the market as to be per se illegal under the Sherman Act. Such claims apply only to a limited range of conduct. HN1[] To be per se illegal, a defendant's conduct has to be so obviously anticompetitive that it has no plausibly procompetitive features—a [3] high hurdle for plaintiffs claiming restraint of trade. Once they clear it, however, plaintiffs receive a corresponding reward: they need not undergo the often arduous process of showing that the challenged conduct was anticompetitive. As one of our sister circuits has described it, "[t]he per se rule is the trump card of antitrust law. When an antitrust plaintiff successfully plays it, he need only tally his score." United States v. Realty Multi-List, Inc., 629 F.2d 1351, 1362-63 (5th Cir. 1980).[1]

[*3] [*719] The question before us is whether MCEP successfully played its hand. The district court from which MCEP appeals found that MCEP's per se claim failed because the record showed that Premier's contracts with payers and physicians had plausibly procompetitive features. That holding says nothing about whether Premier's conduct was on balance procompetitive or anticompetitive. This opinion likewise reaches no decision on the ultimate economic merits of Premier's actions because to do so would go beyond our charge. We must address only the question of per se illegality, and as to that, we agree with the district court that MCEP failed to meet the high standard required for per se claims. We AFFIRM.

I.

MCEP alleges a conspiracy between the Premier hospitals that implicates, [4] without naming as defendants, payers and physicians in the Dayton area. During the course of this multi-year litigation, various legal issues raised in this case have been ruled on by U.S. District Judge Black, a Sixth Circuit appellate panel, and then, after the matter was remanded and Judge Black recused himself, District Judge Rice, who granted the motion for summary judgment presently before us.

Factual Background

MCEP is an acute-care hospital located in Dayton, Ohio, that opened in September 2006 with 60 physician owners and one corporate shareholder, Regent Surgical Health. Defendants in this case comprise four hospitals—Miami Valley Hospital (owned by MedAmerica Health), Good Samaritan Hospital (owned by Catholic Health Initiatives), Atrium Medical Center (owned by Atrium Health Systems), and Upper Valley Medical Center—as well as a joint operating company, Premier Health Partners ("Premier"), formed through a joint operating agreement among those four hospitals.[2] This joint operating agreement merged some of the hospitals' healthcare functions but allowed them to retain control of others. Med. Ctr. at Elizabeth Place v. Atrium Health Sys. ("MCEP I"), 817 F.3d 934, 936-37 (6th Cir. 2016). Hospital Defendants

In spite [5] of its dominant market position, the record leaves no doubt that Hospital Defendants felt threatened by the possibility of MCEP's presence in the Dayton medical market. Five months before MCEP opened for business, Hospital Defendants held a board meeting at which, "[b]y consensus, the Board supported management's efforts" to oppose MCEP. Executives from Premier told an MCEP shareholder that Hospital Defendants "would do whatever they needed to do in order to stop [MCEP] from opening."

Hospital Defendants' underlying concern appears to have been that MCEP's for-profit, physician-owned model of healthcare would "bankrupt" their hospitals. A letter written by primary care physicians (most of whom were affiliated with Hospital Defendants), addressed to physicians in the Dayton healthcare market, expressed the dynamic they found worrisome:

[1] The other approach to determining whether a restraint of trade is "unreasonable" is the "rule of reason." In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litigation, 739 F.3d 262, 270 (6th Cir. 2014). "If the rule of reason is used, plaintiffs must additionally show that the restraint produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets, while the per se rule is reserved for restraints that are so clearly unreasonable that their anticompetitive effects within geographic and product markets are inferred." Id.

[2] In this opinion, we refer to the four hospitals and the joint operating company collectively as "Hospital Defendants" except where otherwise noted. [4] comprise a dominant healthcare network in the Dayton area, with more than a 55% share of Dayton's inpatient surgical services.

> There is currently widespread opposition among not-for-profit community hospitals across the country toward physician owned inpatients [sic] hospitals such as this. The physician investors are doing so for reasons of profitability. MVH and GSH offer the range of services and the quality of care necessary [*720] to enable surgeons to care for their patients. A [6] physician owned specialty hospital will take the better-insured and more profitable patients away from Premier (along with ancillary services), leaving our local hospitals with only the more complex and underinsured patients.

MCEP, for its part, wrote a "Dear Colleague" letter the next month, responding:

- While MCEP's business model will "create a competitive environment to deliver better and more efficient healthcare in Dayton," it will not drive hospitals out of business;
- MCEP "will not turn away patients on the basis of payor classification";
- "Premier generates about $1 billion in revenues and currently has a cash reserve of over $1 billion. As a non-profit, Premier pays no taxes. . . . [MCEP] will have revenues that are a fraction of Premier's, and our physician-owned hospital will pay corporate, personal and property taxes";
- "[C]omprehensive studies have confirmed that physician-run hospitals have fewer medical errors, shorter turnover times, fewer infections and greater cost efficiencies."

[*5] Citing Hospital Defendants' board-meeting consensus and their letter to physicians, MCEP alleges that Hospital Defendants blocked MCEP from gaining meaningful access to the Dayton market [7] through a series of anticompetitive acts that amounted to a group boycott of MCEP. In its Amended Complaint, MCEP made only a per se claim; MCEP made no claim under the rule of reason. MCEP's Amended Complaint alleges that Hospital Defendants:

- financially coerced commercial health insurers or managed care plan providers (such as Anthem, UnitedHealthcare, Private Healthcare Systems, etc.) "to refuse to permit [MCEP] full access to their respective networks";
- financially coerced commercial health insurers or managed care plans to reimburse MCEP at suppressed rates far below what Hospital Defendants demanded for the same services;
- threatened retributive financial consequences to physicians who affiliated with MCEP, and followed through on threats, "including terminating leases that the physicians had with the Defendants for office space";
- offered payments to physicians "who agreed not to work with or at [MCEP]; and who agreed to divest ownership in the Medical Center";
- financially coerced physicians affiliated with Hospital Defendants from "admitting patients to [MCEP] or referring patients to physicians who treated patients at [MCEP]"; and
- deliberately poached physicians from MCEP [8] who made up a "disproportionately high number of admissions and then prohibited them from admitting patients to [MCEP]."

Beyond these allegations, MCEP claims that, in the course of litigation, it discovered two additional agreements that comprised part of the actionable group boycott.[3] First, MCEP alleges an agreement among the payers, induced by Hospital Defendants, not to offer MCEP a managed care contract. Second, MCEP alleges an [*721] agreement among primary care physicians not to do business with physicians who invested in MCEP (Hospital Defendants refer to this as the "physician conspiracy"). Hospital Defendants describe the relationship of these agreements to the original allegation using the metaphor of a hub, spoke, and rim. For these claims, the Hospital Defendants form the hub; the vertical agreements the Hospital Defendants made with [6] payers and physicians to exclude MCEP are the spokes; and the discrete agreements to boycott MCEP, among the payers and among the physicians, are at the rim.

MCEP alleged only the "hub" agreement in its Amended Complaint. Hospital Defendants argue that the "rim conspiracy" claim is a new, and untimely, Sherman Act Section 1 claim. MCEP, for its part, maintains [9] that the additional agreements are simply evidence of the overarching Section 1 conspiracy alleged in their Amended

[3] While there is some dispute about exactly when these claims were first brought to Hospital Defendants' attention, there does not appear to be any dispute that the claims were raised (though the Complaint was not amended to reflect the new claims) in MCEP's opposition to Hospital Defendants' initial motion for summary judgment before Judge Black.

Complaint. Regardless of the exact scope of the alleged boycott, MCEP alleges that one existed, that it was orchestrated by Hospital Defendants, and that it prevented MCEP from succeeding as a going concern. MCEP claims that, but for Hospital Defendants' conduct, it would have been able to contract with payers and physicians, which would have, in turn, increased competition in the Dayton healthcare market for consumers of general inpatient surgical services.

Procedural History

This case was before Judge Black in Cincinnati from January 30, 2012, to April 19, 2017. During that time, Judge Black granted Hospital Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that the MCEP's antitrust claim lacked the necessary plurality of actors.

On appeal to this court, a divided panel reversed Judge Black and rejected Hospital Defendants' motion for summary judgment. The panel held that a reasonable juror could find that Premier comprised multiple competing entities and, therefore, could engage in concerted action. MCEP I, 817 F.3d at 945. The panel did not address other issues raised before it, such as whether [10] MCEP's additional rim conspiracy claims were untimely. Id. at 939.

On remand, Hospital Defendants moved again for summary judgment arguing, among other things, that MCEP's allegation of a per se antitrust violation failed as a matter of law. Hospital Defendants argued that their alleged restraints on trade were plausibly procompetitive which, they argued, is sufficient to defeat a per se antitrust claim. Because MCEP pleaded only a per se claim, if Hospital Defendants had succeeded in this argument, the case would have been dismissed. Judge Black denied Hospital Defendants' renewed motion for summary judgment, rejecting Hospital Defendants' argument on two alternative bases: first, the claimed procompetitive effects of the challenged conduct are subject to genuine dispute and are therefore [7] an improper basis for summary judgment, and second, Hospital Defendants "failed to evidence that their joint contracting has any efficiency-enhancing purpose to which such an agreement is necessary." *Med. Ctr. at Elizabeth Place v. Premier Health Partners, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 192269, 2016 WL 9460026, at 5 (S.D. Ohio Oct. 6, 2016).

The case was set for trial. But on April 19, 2017, Judge Black recused himself and the case was re-assigned to Judge Rice.[4] Before Judge Rice, Hospital Defendants moved to "Clarify Issues for Trial," which all [11] parties now agree amounted to a motion [*722] for reconsideration of Judge Black's October 6, 2016, order denying Hospital Defendants' motion for summary judgment. Less than a week before trial was set to begin, Judge Rice granted Hospital Defendants' motion for summary judgment and dismissed the Amended Complaint with prejudice. Judge Rice declined to apply the "law of the case" doctrine, holding that Judge Black had clearly erred. He found that while Judge Black correctly articulated the standard for a per se claim—that the challenged conduct must have no plausible procompetitive effect—Judge Black failed to acknowledge that the record showed that the Hospital Defendants' challenged restraints had such plausible procompetitive effects. Judge Rice also rejected MCEP's argument that the Amended Complaint implicitly included claims of rim conspiracies among the payers and among the physicians—claims that all agree, if proven, would constitute a per se violation—explaining that those claims were not contained in the Amended Complaint, that MCEP's attempt to "wedge this new claim into the existing allegations" was improper, and that the Hospital "Defendants would be severely prejudiced if MCEP [12] were permitted to amend its Complaint [again] at this late date." MCEP asks us to reverse Judge Rice's decision granting Hospital Defendants' motion for summary judgment and to remand the case for trial.

HN2[] Summary judgment is warranted if, viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, no material fact is subject to a genuine dispute. [8] Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S.

[4] Judge Black explained that, as a "Cincinnati duty-stationed Judge," he could not preside over a trial in Dayton.

574, 585-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).[5] We review de novo grants of summary judgment. Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone Cty., 440 F.3d 336, 341 (6th Cir. 2006).

The parties dispute what de novo review should entail in this case. MCEP claims that Judge Rice's decision to not apply the "law of the case" doctrine was critical to his decision to grant Hospital Defendants' motion for summary judgment, and therefore we must review Judge Rice's "law of the case" decision de novo. According to MCEP, Judge Rice could reconsider Judge Black's denial of summary judgment only by finding that Judge Black clearly erred. So, MCEP says, if Judge Rice was wrong that Judge Black committed clear error, then we must reverse his "law of the case" judgment. For their part, Hospital Defendants argue that we should simply review de novo Judge Rice's substantive legal conclusions, separate and apart from Judge Rice's "law [13] of the case" conclusion.

Ultimately, the Hospital Defendants have the better of this argument. First, HN3[] we review for abuse of discretion Judge Rice's decision to reconsider Judge Black's pre-transfer order. See United States v. Todd, 920 F.2d 399, 403 (6th Cir. 1990). MCEP argues that abuse of discretion is not the proper standard of review in [*723] a case transferred from one district court to another, in which a pre-transfer ruling of one judge is altered by a post-transfer decision of a different judge. We have foreclosed this argument by holding—in precisely the scenario identified by MCEP—that abuse of discretion remains the proper standard of review. See Gillig v. Advanced Cardiovascular Sys. Inc., 67 F.3d 586, 590 (6th Cir. 1995).[6] [*9] Second, HN4[] we can find that Judge Rice abused his discretion in disturbing Judge Black's denial of summary judgment only if we have a "definite and firm conviction that [Judge Rice] committed a clear error in judgment" such as "rel[ying] upon clearly erroneous factual findings, appl[ying] the law improperly, or us[ing] an erroneous legal standard." See Garner v. Cuyahoga Cty. Juvenile Ct., 554 F.3d 624, 634 (6th Cir. 2009) (citation and quotation marks omitted). Of these potential bases for abuse of discretion, MCEP argues only that Judge Rice improperly applied the law, a question that we review de novo.

III.

MCEP's raises two substantive claims [14] on appeal. First, MCEP argues that the district court erred by declining to apply the per se rule to Hospital Defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct. Second, MCEP argues that the district court erred in rejecting MCEP's "horizontal rim claims" due to untimeliness. Neither argument has merit.

[5] If a presumption against summary judgment in antitrust cases is ever appropriate, it is not here. This circuit has applied a presumption against summary judgment in antitrust actions only when the case demanded a fact-intensive inquiry under the rule of reason into issues of intent and motive. In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., 739 F.3d 262, 270 (6th Cir. 2014) (quoting Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone Cty., 440 F.3d 336, 341 (6th Cir. 2006)); but see In re ATM Antitrust Litigation, 554 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1010 (N. D. Cal. 2008) (opining that "any presumption against the granting of summary judgment in complex antitrust cases has now disappeared") (citation omitted). Unlike in a rule of reason claim, in a per se claim intent and motive are not critical determinations. See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 1910a (3rd ed. 2011).

[6] MCEP cites Jimkoski v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 247 F. App'x 654 (6th Cir. 2007), for the proposition that Judge Rice's "law of the case" decision—specifically his finding that Judge Black committed clear error—should be reviewed de novo. This misapplies Jimkoski. Read in context, Jimkoski simply acknowledged that where a motion for reconsideration concerns summary judgment, we do not review the district court's decision to grant summary judgment for abuse of discretion. Id. at 659. To do so would insulate the district court's merits decision from the proper standard of review—de novo—simply because the motion that the district court ruled on was a motion for reconsideration. That concern is not present in this case because we review for abuse of discretion the decision to grant a motion for reconsideration (here that means we review the "law of the case" decision for abuse of discretion). But we still review de novo the merits of the district court's grant of summary judgment.

Per se claim

HN5[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Because virtually every agreement between parties has the potential to be considered a restraint of trade, antitrust jurisprudence limits the range of restraints within the reach of antitrust law to agreements that unreasonably restrain trade. In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., 739 F.3d 262, 270 (6th Cir. 2014). A restraint on trade may be found to be unreasonable per se or under the "rule of reason." Id. As MCEP makes only a per se claim, the question before us is whether Judge Rice erred in granting Hospital Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the grounds that Hospital Defendants' conduct falls outside per se illegality. Judges Black and Rice did not agree in their answer to the underlying question and the prior [15] Sixth Circuit panel declined to address it. [10] MCEP I, 817 F.3d at 939 (explaining that "[t]his appeal looks only at . . . whether defendants' conduct is the result of two or more entities acting in concert").

[*724] HN6[] Although a motion for summary judgment against a per se claim involves underlying facts, the propriety of per se treatment "is normally a question of legal characterization that can often be resolved by the judge on a motion . . . for summary judgment." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 373 F.3d 57, 61 (1st Cir. 2004). There is a presumption against applying the per se rule "[u]nless the restraint falls squarely into a per se category." Southeastern Milk, 739 F.3d at 271. As explained in Expert Masonry, "a plaintiff must satisfy each element of the per se . . . test[] . . . in its allegations in order to survive pre-trial termination." 440 F.3d at 344 (emphasis added). In Southeastern Milk, the court held that, even where a factual dispute exists between the parties over whether a challenged restraint is obviously anticompetitive—and therefore deserving of per se treatment—the defendants producing "evidence that the agreement at issue may have had procompetitive aspects . . . indicate[s] that this situation would not fall into the categories of per se unreasonable restraints on trade." 739 F.3d at 274. The court concluded [16] that "[t]herefore, especially at the summary judgment stage, this is not a 'clear cut' case of an obviously anticompetitive trade restraint, and thus the district court was correct to apply the default standard of the rule of reason." Id. Hence, at the summary judgment phase, the right question to ask regarding per se claims is whether the plaintiff has shown that the challenged restraint is so obviously anticompetitive that it should be condemned as per se illegal. If, in spite of the plaintiff's efforts, the record indicates that the challenged restraint is plausibly procompetitive, then summary judgment for the defendants is appropriate.

Per se claims against joint ventures

The question before us is further delineated by the fact that the challenged restraints exist within a joint venture, which the Supreme Court has noted "hold the promise of increasing a firm's efficiency and enabling it to compete more effectively." Copperweld Corp v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). At the same time, joint ventures often superficially resemble horizontal concerted action because they involve horizontal competitors joining together to restrain trade in some way, such as by coordinating prices. [11] See Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 4, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006) (denying [17] a per se horizontal price fixing claim brought by a plaintiff against a joint venture created by Texaco and Shell Oil that unified their respective gasoline refining and marketing operations in the western United States under two brands).

HN7[] Because joint ventures often have procompetitive efficiencies, when a joint venture is itself challenged as anticompetitive, that claim is reviewed under the rule of reason. Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 768. But when the conduct of the joint venture is challenged, the relationship of the challenged conduct to the joint venture is analyzed to see if the conduct is reasonably related to the joint venture's procompetitive features (and therefore should be judged under the rule of reason), or is a naked restraint lurking beneath the veneer of a legitimate joint venture (and therefore deserves per se condemnation). See Nat. Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 113-15, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (observing that a "naked" restraint, subject to the per se rule, can exist even though it is contained in a joint venture agreement that is, overall, quite competitive). The Supreme Court has distinguished three categories of restraints: (1) restraints that are core to the [*725] joint venture's efficiency enhancing purpose; (2) restraints that are ancillary to the joint venture's [18] efficiency enhancing purpose; and (3) restraints that are nakedly unrelated to the purpose of the joint venture. See Dagher, 547 U.S. at 7-8. Only the last of these three justifies per se treatment. Id.

Core activity

HN8[] Core activity is activity that is "integral to the running" of the venture. Id. at 7-8. In Dagher, the Supreme Court rejected a per se claim against horizontal price-setting by two competitors on the ground that the price-setting "involve[d] the core activity of the joint venture itself." Id. at 7.

Hospital Defendants claim that the challenged panel limitation—but not the other challenged restraints—qualifies as core activity. They argue that because Dagher described price setting as a core activity for the joint venture in that case, and because panel limitations are a "pricing term" in Hospital Defendants' contracts with payers, the panel limitations are "core activity."

[*12] This argument is not persuasive. Dagher does not stand for the general proposition that restraints in contracts that are price related are always core activity for joint ventures. Dagher's holding was tailored to the specific joint venture before it. Id. at 5-6. This argument may be dismissed simply by noting that the definition of "core activity" provided [19] by Dagher, "integral to the running" of the joint venture, id. at 7-8, cannot seriously be argued of Hospital Defendants' panel limitations. Hospital Defendants continue to operate as a joint venture today even though the panel limitation clauses have been removed from their contracts with payers.

Joint venture's ancillary restraints

HN9[] Restraints that are "ancillary to the legitimate and competitive purposes of the business association" fall between "core" activity and "naked" restraints. Id. at 7. These are restraints by a joint venture that are not "integral to the running" of the joint venture, id. at 8, "but may contribute to the success of a cooperative venture." Polk Bros., Inc. v. Forest City Enters., Inc., 776 F.2d 185, 189 (7th Cir. 1985). A restraint is ancillary if it bears a reasonable relationship to the joint venture's success. See Major League Baseball Props., Inc. v. Salvino, 542 F.3d 290, 339-40 (2d Cir. 2008) (Sotomayor, J., concurring).

Predictably, the parties spill considerable ink contesting what counts as "reasonable." MCEP urges the panel to accept Judge Black's version of the ancillary-restraints doctrine. We decline to do so because Judge Black framed the ancillary-restraints inquiry incorrectly in two ways: by applying too high a standard to determine what qualifies as "reasonable" and by placing an evidentiary burden on Hospital Defendants to [20] meet that standard. Judge Black rejected Hospital Defendants' argument that their restraints bore a reasonable relationship to the joint venture's success, holding that they "failed to evidence that their joint contracting has any efficiency-enhancing purpose to which such an agreement is necessary." Under this standard, only restraints that are necessary to a joint venture's efficiency-enhancing purposes qualify as ancillary. Further, Judge Black held that Hospital Defendants must provide "undisputed proof" that the restraint is necessary to prevent a per se claim from proceeding to trial.

Judge Black's sole source of authority for this version of the ancillary-restraints doctrine is a guidance document put out by [*726] the Federal Trade Commission and the United States [13] Department of Justice on collaboration among competitors. See Dep't of Justice & FTC, Antitrust Guidelines for Collaborations Among Competitors § 3.3, at 10-25 (Apr. 2000). But the citation is of dubious relevance to the ancillary-restraints doctrine because the cited section deals with joint ventures only under the rule of reason, not the per se rule.

To bolster Judge Black's approach, MCEP cites NaBanco v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 779 F.2d 592, 601 (11th Cir. 1986), and In re Sulfuric Acid Antitrust Litig., 743 F. Supp. 2d 827, 872 (N.D. Ill. 2010), for the proposition that an ancillary restraint must be necessary to achieve the joint venture's efficiency-enhancing [21] purpose. NaBanco supports MCEP's preferred formulation, but In re Sulfuric Acid does not. In re Sulfuric Acid echoes the ancillary-restraints inquiry articulated by the Seventh Circuit in Polk Brothers: "A court must ask whether an agreement promoted enterprise and productivity at the time it was adopted. If it arguably did, then the court must apply the Rule of Reason to make a more discriminating assessment." 743 F. Supp. 2d at 872 (quoting Polk Bros., 776 F.2d at 189) (emphasis added).

Hospital Defendants, on the other hand, describe the standard as whether there exists a plausible procompetitive rationale for the restraint.[7] The Second, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits adopt this approach.[8]

Perhaps most destructive to MCEP's argument is then-Judge Sotomayor's concurrence in MLB Properties, 542 F.3d at 338. Although MCEP cites that concurrence five times in its briefing, Judge Sotomayor categorically rejected the position MCEP asks this court to adopt. She described ancillary restraints as requiring "a reasonable procompetitive justification, related to the efficiency-enhancing purposes of the joint venture." Id. at 339 (emphasis added). Then, in [14] defining what qualifies as "reasonable," she expressly rejected the formulation that MCEP argues here: "Under [22] the ancillary restraints doctrine, a challenged restraint need not be essential, but rather only reasonably ancillary to the legitimate cooperative aspects of the venture." Id. at 340 n.11 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted); see also Polk Bros., 776 F.2d at 189 (explaining that a restraint is ancillary if it may promote the success of a joint venture).

HN10[] The question of what relationship a challenged restraint must have to a joint venture in order to qualify as ancillary splits the Circuits—the Eleventh Circuit [*727] on the one hand, and the Second, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits on the other. We follow the majority of Circuits and hold that a joint venture's restraint is ancillary and therefore inappropriate for per se categorization when, viewed at the time it was adopted, the restraint "may contribute to the success of a cooperative venture." Polk Bros., 776 F.2d at 189. That approach better accords with Supreme Court guidance. As the Ninth Circuit in Paladin Associates explained:

> HN11[] The Supreme Court generally has treated as per se illegal joint efforts by firms to disadvantage a competitor by persuading customers to deny that competitor relationships the competitor needs in the competitive struggle. But in these cases, the practices generally [23] were not justified by plausible arguments that the practices enhanced overall efficiency and made markets more competitive.

328 F.3d at 1154-55. In a footnote that follows the court elaborated:

> This is so because plausible arguments that a practice is procompetitive make us unable to conclude "the likelihood of anticompetitive effects is clear and the possibility of countervailing procompetitive effects is remote."

Id. at 1155 n.8 (quoting Stationers, 472 U.S. at 294).

Paladin faithfully applies the Supreme Court's holding in Stationers. HN12[] Condemning as per se illegal restraints that, while not necessary to achieving a joint venture's efficiency-enhancing purpose nevertheless plausibly relate to that purpose, would run counter to the Supreme Court's instruction to avoid applying the per se rule to situations where efficiencies are being served. See Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551

[7] Hospital Defendants, at one point, argue that the correct legal standard for determining whether a restraint is ancillary or naked is whether the challenged restraint is "completely unrelated to the purpose of a lawful joint venture." But this mischaracterizes the ancillary-restraints doctrine. "The per se rule would collapse if every claim of economies from restricting competition, however implausible, could be used to move a horizontal agreement not to compete from the per se rule to the Rule of Reason category." Gen. Leaseways, Inc. v. Nat'l Truck Leasing Ass'n, 744 F.2d 588, 595 (7th Cir. 1984).

[8] See MLB Properties, 542 F.3d at 338-39 (Sotomayor, J., concurring); Craftsmen Limo,, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 363 F.3d 761, 776 (8th Cir. 2004) ("When determining whether to apply the rule of reason analysis to non-price advertising restrictions related to product safety, the issue is not whether the restrictions were procompetitive, but whether they could be."); Paladin Assocs. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1154-55 (9th Cir. 2003) ("When a defendant advances plausible arguments that a practice enhances overall efficiency and makes markets more competitive, per se treatment is inappropriate, and the rule of reason applies."); Polk Bros., 776 F.2d at 189.

U.S. 877, 894, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (holding that per se treatment is inappropriate where "it cannot be stated with any degree of confidence that [the challenged restraint] 'always or almost always tends to restrict competition and decrease [15] output'") (quoting Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988)).

MCEP's second but related argument, which was adopted by Judge Black, is that Hospital Defendants bear the burden of proving that a challenged restraint is procompetitive, and therefore [24] ancillary, because the question of the procompetitiveness of a restraint is "quintessentially one of fact." Judge Black's inclination to defer to the fact finder has an intuitive appeal in the summary judgment context. And it would be correct had MCEP brought a claim under the rule of reason. See Perceptron, Inc. v. Sensor Adaptive Machs., Inc., 221 F.3d 913, 919 (6th Cir. 2000) HN13[] ("[T]he rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.") (citation omitted). For a per se claim, however, Judge Black's conclusion is erroneous. Whether challenged conduct belongs in the per se category is a question of law. See Ariz. v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Socy., 457 U.S. 332, 337 n.3, 354, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982) (characterizing the per se rule as a "rule of law"); MM Steel, L.P. v. JSW Steel (USA) Inc., 806 F.3d 835, 847 (5th Cir. 2015) ("The decision to analyze the conspiracy under a per se theory of liability is a question of law that we review de novo."). In Craftsmen Limousine, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., the Eighth Circuit likewise found that whether a given restraint falls within the per se category is a question of law, citing a well-respected treatise on antitrust law for the proposition that "although a court's determination that the per se rule applies 'might involve many fact questions, the selection of a mode of [25] analysis is entirely a [*728] question of law.'" 363 F.3d 761, 772 (8th Cir. 2004) (citing Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 1909b (1998)). And it is a question of law where certain presumptions apply. As we explained in Expert Masonry, the "plaintiff must satisfy each element of the per se . . . test[] . . . in its allegations in order to survive pre-trial termination." 440 F.3d at 344 (emphasis added). The Supreme Court has likewise held that because a plaintiff failed to make a threshold showing that the challenged conduct had the characteristics necessary to justify per se condemnation, rule of reason analysis should apply instead. Stationers, 472 U.S. at 298 ("A plaintiff seeking application of the per se rule must present a threshold case that the challenged activity falls into a category likely to have predominantly anticompetitive effects.").

> (1) To provide a broad scope and a continuum of health care services with a focus upon community health benefit.
> (2) To improve cost effectiveness and efficiencies in the delivery of health care services.
> (3) To increase the quality of health care services in the greater Miami Valley Region.
> (4) To integrate physicians and other health care providers with the JOC Network.
> (5) To have the capacity to assume and manage financial risk.
> (6) To improve the health status of the greater Miami Valley Region.

We analyze Hospital Defendants' challenged restraints in light of these goals.[9]

MCEP challenges two kinds of conduct on the part of Hospital Defendants. First, MCEP argues that Hospital Defendants restrained trade through "panel limitations," wherein Hospital Defendants stipulated to payers that if they added MCEP to their networks, Hospital Defendants would be able to renegotiate prices. Second, MCEP alleges that Hospital Defendants took direct concerted action against MCEP by cutting off patient referrals to MCEP-affiliated physicians, evicting MCEP-affiliated physicians from office space owned by Hospital Defendants, and agreeing with third parties to refuse to deal with [27] MCEP-affiliated physicians.

[9] The challenged conduct evaluated in this section is limited to MCEP's claim of illegal concerted action among the Hospital Defendants, not the additional "rim conspiracy" claims. The reason for this is that we conclude in the next section that Judge Rice did not abuse his discretion by ruling that MCEP's effort to plead those claims was untimely.

Panel limitations. Courts have found such restraints of trade supported by procompetitive justifications. Stop & Shop Supermarket Co v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 373 F.3d 57, 62 (1st Cir. 2004) (finding that closed networks can allow payers to reduce customer premiums because providers will exchange better rates for guaranteed volume). Likewise in [17] Methodist Health Servs. Corp. v. OSF Healthcare Sys., where the Seventh Circuit addressed panel limitations as a mere variant on the accepted restraint of exclusive dealing arrangements:

> [*729] But what is more common than exclusive dealing? It is illustrated by requirements contracts, which are common, and legal, and obligate a buyer to purchase all, or a substantial portion of, its requirements of specific goods or services from one supplier. [The Hospital Defendants'] deals with the health insurance companies are a form of requirements contract, for the deals require the companies to limit the network of providers from which they obtain the health care that their insurance contracts obligate them to obtain for their insureds. And an insurance company may get better rates from a hospital in exchange for agreeing to an exclusive contract, as exclusivity will drive a higher volume of business to the hospital. [28]

859 F.3d 408, 410 (7th Cir. 2017).

MCEP claims that Hospital Defendants' argument that panel limitations help ensure volume is a pretext. In support of this claim, MCEP points to evidence showing that Premier's contract with insurer Aetna had a volume-based discount that automatically lowered Premier's rates when billing volume increased past certain benchmarks. Thus, even without panel limitations, Hospital Defendants had financially incentivized insurers to maintain a high volume of patients getting services from Hospital Defendants. To MCEP, this evidence reveals that the only possible purpose of the panel limitation in Hospital Defendants' contract with Aetna was "purely punitive."

We are not persuaded. A panel limitation and a price schedule are two distinct methods directed toward the common goal of keeping patients (customers) coming through the doors. A pricing schedule is a discount that incentivizes payers to keep volume up. A panel limitation, meanwhile, forces payers to confront the risk of renegotiating their contract with Hospital Defendants if they choose to send their insureds (customers) to a competing provider. Moreover, it is plausible that Hospital Defendants would deploy a "belt and suspenders" approach [29] to a matter as crucial for a hospital system as maintaining patient (customer) volume. It is plausible that panel limitations, by lowering the cost of Hospital Defendants' services, contribute to the efficiency-enhancing purposes of the joint venture, specifically improving "cost effectiveness and efficiencies in the delivery of health care services."

[*18] Concerted action regarding physicians. MCEP's claims concerning Hospital Defendants' direct concerted action toward physicians can be divided into two categories: (1) threatened loss of patient referrals; and (2) non-compete agreements.

1. Threatened loss of patient referrals[10]

This alleged restraint centers around evidence found in a letter sent by [*730] Hospital Defendants to Dayton-area doctors informing them of Hospital Defendants' opposition to MCEP. The letter, signed by 94 primary care physicians, discusses the consequences that MCEP's presence could have on the Dayton healthcare market. The primary concern expressed in the letter was that the profit-driven MCEP "will take the better insured and more

[10] MCEP also argues that Hospital Defendants waived the right to move for summary judgment on this theory of liability because they failed to argue before Judge Black that their direct concerted action should be viewed under the rule of reason. Likely, MCEP intends to say that Hospital Defendants' forfeited the argument.HN15[] "Whereas forfeiture is the failure to make the timely assertion of a right, waiver is the intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right." United States v. Olano, 507 U.S. 725, 733, 113 S. Ct. 1770, 123 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1993). Under forfeiture doctrine, "parties are not limited to the precise arguments they made below." Yee v. Escondido, 503 U.S. 519, 534, 112 S. Ct. 1522, 118 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1992). At worst, MCEP is claiming that Hospital Defendants are making a "new argument to support what has been [their] consistent claim." Lebron v. Natl'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 513 U.S. 374, 379, 115 S. Ct. 961, 130 L. Ed. 2d 902 (1995). Hospital Defendants did not forfeit the right to move for summary judgment on MCEP's claim that Hospital Defendants' direct concerted action is per se illegal because Hospital Defendants have consistently argued that MCEP's per se claim does not apply to the challenged conduct.

profitable patients away from Premier" and leave "local hospitals with only the more complex and underinsured patients." At the conclusion [30] of the letter, the physicians wrote:

> We, the primary care network of physicians for Premier, strongly oppose [MCEP]. We believe it will have only negative impacts on our community, our hospitals and our network. We do not support the physicians who invest in these inpatient hospitals. We do look forward, however, to our continued efforts to work with the specialists of our hospital medical staffs and do our part within Premier to continue to improve the delivery of cost-effective, highest quality healthcare to the people of our community.

MCEP claims that doctors who signed the letter "understood [it] to mean that signatories would stop referring patients to anyone who invested in MCEP."

Hospital Defendants argue that the letter, in expressing the opinion of Premier and its affiliated physicians, does not constitute a restraint, and therefore cannot qualify as illegal conduct under antitrust laws. They are right. In Am. Council of Podiatrists v. Am. Bd. of [19] Podiatric Surgery, Inc., we held that, HN16[] in the absence of a showing by the plaintiff that allegedly anticompetitive communication was (1) "false" and (2) "difficult or costly for the plaintiff to counter," we would apply a presumption [31] that speech has "de minimis effect on competition." 323 F.3d 366, 370-72 (6th Cir. 2003). MCEP's claim fails under both of these prongs. MCEP has not shown that Hospital Defendants' "Dear Physician" letter was untrue, and MCEP countered the "Dear Physician" letter, without any apparent difficulty, with a "Dear Colleague" letter of its own.

2. Non-compete agreements

MCEP claims that Hospital Defendants terminated the leases of multiple MCEP-affiliated doctors who rented space in Hospital Defendants' hospitals. Judge Rice rejected this argument on the grounds that Hospital Defendants have a legitimate interest as a joint venture in preventing free riding by physicians who will reap the benefits of training and convenient office space at their hospitals and "then refer their patients elsewhere or invest in other hospitals." Hospital Defendants had a plausible concern that, without these contracts, physicians who invested in MCEP could rent office space at a Premier-associated hospital, free ride on the reputation and facilities of that hospital, and then refer patients out to MCEP. Preventing such a misalignment of incentives is plausibly related to Hospital Defendants' goal of "integrat[ing] physicians and other health care [32] providers with the JOC Network."

MCEP also alleges that Hospital Defendants' non-compete agreements with physicians in the Dayton area qualify as concerted conduct subject to per se condemnation. Hospital Defendant Good Samaritan purchased the Dayton Heart Hospital in 2008. As characterized by MCEP, a condition of the purchase by Good Samaritan Hospital was that individual owners of Dayton Heart Hospital were paid in [*731] full only if they agreed "(i) not to invest in MCEP, and (ii) if they already owned shares, they would divest if MCEP began to offer cardiac services" over the next five years. MCEP cites no case law holding that vertical non-compete contracts entered into by joint ventures qualify as conduct that is anticompetitive per se.[11] HN17[] And this circuit, as well as [20] the common law,[12] have long recognized that "[l]egitimate reasons exist to uphold noncompetition covenants even though by nature they necessarily restrain trade to some degree." Perceptron, Inc., 221 F.3d at 919 (quoting Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255, 265 (7th Cir. 1981)). It is MCEP's burden to show that per se treatment of allegedly anticompetitive conduct is justified. Stationers, 472 U.S. at 298. In this context, MCEP's failure to produce any on-point precedent is damning, as we refuse to apply the per se rule in the absence of [33] judicial experience with the challenged restraint. See Broad. Music, Inc., v. Columbia Broad. Sys. Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979) (concluding that "it is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations") (quoting United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607-08, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972)).

[11] Instead MCEP cites to E. States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assoc. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 34 S. Ct. 951, 58 L. Ed. 1490 (1914), and United States v. Coop. Theatres of Ohio, Inc., 845 F.2d 1367, 1373 (6th Cir. 1988) (per curiam). Neither case concerns joint ventures or the ancillary-restraints doctrine. Coop. Theatres of Ohio is inapposite, as it concerns market allocation rather than a group boycott. 845 F.2d at 1368.

[12] "It must have been obvious from the beginning that the flat ban against such restraints of trade covered more than the rationale of the rule required. The rule might prevent desirable transfers of property. The most valuable asset of a business might be the good will of the public toward its owner. Should he wish to sell the business the owner could not get a price reflecting the asset of good will or the true going concern value of his business unless he could promise the purchaser not to return to compete with the business sold." Robert Bork, Ancillary Restraints & the Sherman Act, 15 ABA Section of Antitrust Law Proceedings 211, 213 (1959) (footnote omitted).

MCEP's other arguments in support of its per se claim. First, MCEP argues that we are bound by precedent to find that Hospital Defendants' restraints qualify for per se treatment. To that end, MCEP cites to Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). Klor's, however, did not concern a legitimate joint venture, so its approach to alleged horizontal restraints does not bear on the legal framework established above. Id. at 208-09. MCEP also argues that Com-Tel, Inc. v. DuKane Corp., 669 F.2d 404 (6th Cir. 1982), which followed Klor's approach, controls. But Com-Tel, like Klor's, does not contain ancillary-restraints analysis because it does not concern a joint venture.

Second, MCEP argues that we are bound by "law of the case" to find in its favor because, in MCEP I, we implicitly rejected a number of the arguments that Hospital Defendants make here. We need not guess at the contours of MCEP I's holding—we said expressly that it concerned "only . . . whether defendants' conduct is the result of two or more entities acting in [21] concert [34] or whether defendants, based on their participation in the joint operating agreement, function as a single entity in the market place." MCEP I, 817 F.3d at 939.

B.

Rim Conspiracy claims

MCEP argues that Judge Rice erred in dismissing its Section 1 claims of [*732] concerted action based on "rim" conspiracies—that is, agreements (induced by Hospital Defendants) to boycott MCEP made among the payers as well as independent physicians. The rim conspiracies are distinct from the alleged conspiracy among the Hospital Defendants. MCEP argues that Hospital Defendants orchestrated two additional conspiracies—one among payers to collectively "hold the line" against MCEP by excluding it from their market, the other a "physician conspiracy" in which Hospital Defendants induced Dayton-area physicians to collectively refuse to refer patients to MCEP. As Judge Rice noted, this issue is significant. Hospital Defendants "conceded that, if MCEP could prove that the payers agreed among themselves not to offer MCEP a managed care contract and that Premier orchestrated that agreement, the per se rule would apply to that claim." If the district court erred by precluding these rim conspiracy claims, then even if Judge Rice was correct that MCEP [35] has no triable per se claim of concerted action among Hospital Defendants (the "hub" claim), the case would need to be remanded and set for trial on MCEP's rim conspiracy claim.

MCEP argues that the rim conspiracy claims are not new. Instead, MCEP characterizes the rim agreements as additional evidence found through discovery that supports the overarching group boycott claim advanced in the Amended Complaint. MCEP undermines that position, however, by claiming simultaneously that "[t]he payer agreement and physician agreement . . . represent additional horizontal concerted action that independently requires imposition of the per se rule whether the jury finds the Defendants to be a single entity or multiple actors."

But MCEP's Amended Complaint includes neither an allegation of an agreement among the payers nor an agreement among the physicians.[13] Instead, the Amended Complaint alleges [22] an agreement among the Hospital Defendants to financially induce payers and physicians to boycott MCEP. HN18[] There is no "rim"

[13] MCEP's counsel acknowledged this fact in the course of a deposition, asserting: "I'll represent to you [to the deponent] that there was not an allegation of an outer rim in the complaint, but that MCEP contends that the evidence developed through discovery establishes the existence of an outer rim, meaning an understanding among two or more payers that each had agreed with the defendants not to expand their hospital panel."

conspiracy without alleged agreement among the parties at the rim (among the payers and physicians, respectively). See Total Benefits Planning Agency, Inc. v. Anthem Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430, 436 (6th Cir. 2008). Because the Amended Complaint lacks an essential element for [36] MCEP's "rim" conspiracy claims, the Amended Complaint does not include those claims.

Faced with that omission, MCEP claims that Judge Rice erred by not permitting MCEP to submit a Second Amended Complaint to add the rim conspiracy claims. HN19[] We review for abuse of discretion the district court's decision to deny such a motion. Super Sulky, Inc. v. U.S. Trotting Ass'n, 174 F.3d 733, 740 (6th Cir. 1999). We will overturn the district court's decision only if we have a "definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error in judgment in the conclusion it reached upon a weighing of the relevant factors." Taylor v. United States Parole Comm'n, 734 F.2d 1152, 1155 (6th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted); see also John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 459 (6th Cir. 2008). The standard for a motion to amend is governed by the general principle that "cases should be tried on their merits rather than the technicalities of [*733] pleadings," which is in turn moderated by the exception that judges should allow amendment only when doing so does not "cause prejudice to the defendants" or undue delay. Tefft v. Seward, 689 F.2d 637, 639 (6th Cir. 1982).

The district court found that Hospital Defendants "would be severely prejudiced if MCEP were permitted to amend its Complaint at this late date" primarily for the reason that a proper adjudication of the rim conspiracy claims would require [37] a new round of discovery that could last well over a year. The district court was unmoved by MCEP's arguments that amending its complaint would not cause prejudice because Hospital Defendants had been "on notice" of the rim conspiracy claims since MCEP filed its Omnibus Opposition to Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment.

The district court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that its allowing MCEP to amend its complaint for a second time would require a new round of discovery that would cause [23] undue delay and prejudice Hospital Defendants by significantly extending litigation that began in 2012. Tefft does not save MCEP on this point. In that case, it was "obvious that the facts as set forth in Tefft's original complaint would support [the new] cause of action . . . as well as [the original cause of action]." Id. at 639. That is not the case here, where the facts as set forth in MCEP's Amended Complaint do not support MCEP's different rim conspiracy claims. This case is more like Super Sulky, where a plaintiff moved to amend his complaint to add an additional Section 1 theory that was absent from the original complaint, but had been raised in response to a motion for summary judgment—in short, [38] the circumstance here. The district court denied that plaintiff's motion to amend and we affirmed. Super Sulky, 174 F.3d at 740-41.

Judge Rice did not abuse his discretion when he denied MCEP's motion to amend its complaint.[14]

IV.

Because Judge Rice was correct to find that the challenged restraints do not fall within the circumscribed categories of per se condemnation, we AFFIRM the district court's grant of summary judgment.

Concur

[*24] SUTTON, Circuit Judge, concurring. I join Judge Batchelder's thoughtful opinion in full. I write separately to discuss the law-of-the-case doctrine and to explain why it does not apply to the prior panel's decision.

[14] MCEP raised two additional claims on appeal—that the district court erred in dismissing Catholic Heath Initiatives and that the case should be remanded to Judge Black rather than Judge Rice. Both arguments are mooted because we affirm the district court's summary judgment in favor of Hospital Defendants.

What we call law of the case has two parts. The first part, known as the "mandate rule," is vertical. A lower court "is bound by the decree [of a higher court] as the law of the case, and must carry it into execution according to the mandate." In re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U.S. 247, 255, 16 S. Ct. 291, 40 L. Ed. 414 (1895). The rule springs from the hierarchical structure of our judicial system and leaves no room for discretion. If the U.S. Supreme [*734] Court resolves an issue in a case and remands the matter to us, we are duty bound to follow the mandate of the superior court. So too at the trial level. If we decide an issue and remand the case, the trial court [39] must carry out its duties in accordance with that mandate. See Bryan A. Garner et al., The Law of Judicial Precedent 459-60 (2016).

The second part, the part implicated by this case, is horizontal. It "expresses the practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided" by an earlier panel of the same court in the same case. Messenger v. Anderson, 225 U.S. 436, 444, 32 S. Ct. 739, 56 L. Ed. 1152 (1912) (Holmes, J.). Unlike its upward counterpart, the sideways version of the law of the case is "not a limit to [a court's] power." Id. A later panel of an appellate court, like a district court, "has the power to revisit prior decisions of its own or of a coordinate court in any circumstance." Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 486 U.S. 800, 817, 108 S. Ct. 2166, 100 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1988). That is what happened when Judge Rice took over this case, reconsidered Judge Black's opinion, came to a different conclusion, and granted summary judgment to Premier. See supra at 7; Garner, supra, at 474, 487-88.

Today, we sit in essentially the same position as Judge Rice. A prior panel of our court decided that Premier was not a single entity under the Sherman Act. See Med. Ctr. at Elizabeth Place, LLC v. Atrium Health Sys., 817 F.3d 934, 936 (6th Cir. 2016). One judge dissented. Id. at 945 (Griffin, J., dissenting). Now the case has returned.

[*25] As I see it, the dissent got it right. Section 1 of the Sherman Act "does not reach conduct that is wholly unilateral." Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (quotation omitted). Officers and divisions [40] within a single entity cannot collude in a way that violates § 1. Single-entity status depends on economic realities rather than labels. Whether or not they keep their separate corporate identities, participants in a joint venture merge into a single entity if (1) their agreement creates a "complete unity of interest," id. at 771, and (2) they receive orders from a single decisionmaking center, Am. Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 194, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010).

Premier qualified as a single entity.

Complete unity of interest? Check. The hospitals shared profits and losses according to a distribution schedule that did not change based on any one hospital's performance. That means that each hospital in the joint venture benefited when another hospital succeeded even if that other hospital drew patients and profits away.

Single decisionmaking center? Check again. Premier served as the "operator" for all the joint venture's health system activities and had the power to negotiate managed care contracts, fire hospital executives, dictate their budgets, and plot the strategic course each hospital took. Med. Ctr., 817 F.3d at 950 (Griffin, J., dissenting).

The law-of-the-case doctrine does not prohibit us from reviewing that ruling. And I would suggest we do so in this case save for one reality: [41] It makes no difference to the outcome. Either way, Premier rightfully prevails.

No doubt, it's often said that courts at all levels should be "loathe" to overturn their earlier opinions unless they are "clearly erroneous" and cause a "manifest injustice." Christianson, 486 U.S. at 817 (quotations omitted). But what does that mean? Surely, a legal ruling does not become more insulated from [*735] reversal by a senior court every time the junior court refuses to reconsider a prior ruling. The "clear error" and "manifest injustice" phrases must refer to something else. They instead are a reminder that courts should not lightly reconsider prior rulings in the same case—lest we scramble the expectations of the parties and encourage serial efforts to revisit prior rulings. These are, in other words, self-enforced standards, not the [26] standard a senior court uses to review a reconsidered ruling. There is no such thing as upholding an erroneous, but not clearly erroneous, legal ruling in this setting. Accordingly, if a court revisits a prior legal ruling, that does not transform the standard of review from de novo to clear error. See Garner, supra, at 447.

Dissent by: HELENE N. WHITE

Dissent

[*27] HELENE N. WHITE, Circuit Judge, dissenting in part. I agree with the majority's [42] conclusion that the rule of reason applies to the alleged conspiracy involving concerted action by the Hospital Defendants. However, I disagree with the majority's determination regarding the rim conspiracy involving the payers.

The majority acknowledges that there is evidence of horizontal concerted action among the payers, orchestrated by Defendants, not to provide MCEP a managed-care contract (i.e., the "rim conspiracy"), and that the per se rule would apply to that conspiracy. The majority nevertheless concludes that MCEP cannot present that evidence to a jury because (1) it constitutes a separate, unpled claim from the conspiracy claim that MCEP pled; and (2) Judge Rice did not abuse his discretion in determining that allowing MCEP to amend its complaint to include this claim would prejudice Defendants. Because the allegations in MCEP's Amended Complaint encompass this rim conspiracy; the evidence was known by Defendants early in the proceedings; this court discussed the evidence of a rim conspiracy in the first appeal; Judge Black relied on the evidence of a rim conspiracy in denying Defendants' summary judgment motions after remand; and Defendants failed to seek the purported [43] necessary additional discovery in a timely fashion, I would reverse the grant of summary judgment and remand for trial. Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

The majority's recitation of the procedural history of this case omits important details that bear on whether the rim conspiracy should proceed to trial. After Defendants moved for summary judgment on the basis that they were a single entity and thus incapable of conspiring, MCEP affirmatively raised the rim conspiracy, arguing in opposition to Defendants' motion that evidence of concerted action by the payers—what MCEP called "an additional facet to th[e] conspiracy" it pled (R. 139, PID 10136)—meant that the plurality requirement was met and that the alleged conspiracy would still be subject to per se treatment even if Defendants were a single entity. In reply, Defendants did not argue that the rim conspiracy constituted a separate and untimely alleged conspiracy; and they did not argue that they needed additional discovery [28] regarding this concerted action. Rather, they argued only that there was insufficient evidence of the rim conspiracy, forfeiting any timeliness argument.

It was not until the first appeal that Defendants challenged [44] the rim-conspiracy claim as not encompassed within MCEP's Amended Complaint, and therefore untimely. Defendants also argued that they would be prejudiced by adding this new theory to the case, and stressed at oral argument in the first appeal that they would need additional discovery to defend [*736] against the allegation of horizontal concerted action by the payers. Despite Defendants' argument, the prior panel expressly considered evidence of the rim conspiracy in its majority opinion:

> Plaintiff has submitted evidence that each insurer knew that the other insurers had included this [panel] limitation in their contracts, as demonstrated by the excerpt below from a Dayton industry publication:
> > Premier has threatened to revoke privileges for physicians participating in [plaintiff hospital] and contracts with health plans such as Anthem and UnitedHealth are known to be contingent on excluding [plaintiff hospital] from the network.
> In addition to this published account, plaintiff also offered evidence from insurance company emails and defendant hospitals' Board of Directors meetings that, in addition to demonstrating knowledge among the insurers of the restriction on adding new hospitals to their [45] networks in their managed-care contracts with defendant hospitals, the insurance companies regularly monitored each other to ensure that the other insurance companies were complying with the contract restriction on dealing with a new hospital.

Med. Ctr. at Elizabeth Place, LLC v. Atrium Health Sys., 817 F.3d 934, 941-42 (6th Cir. 2016) (hereafter MCEP I) (second and third alterations in original) (internal citation omitted).

After remand, Judge Black issued an order requesting briefing regarding the effects of the opinion in MCEP I on Defendants' previously filed summary judgment motions. In their reply brief, Defendants summarily argued, for the first time before the district court, that the horizontal concerted action by the payers was not pled and that adding that theory to the case would prejudice them. Defendants did not request additional discovery on that issue, however.

In denying Defendants' remaining summary judgment motions, to support his conclusion that the per se rule applies to MCEP's antitrust claim, Judge Black discussed and relied on [29] evidence that at the behest of Defendants, the payers joined in an agreement not to deal with MCEP.[1]

After Judge Black denied Defendants' remaining summary judgment motions, and despite this court's [46] and Judge Black's opinions indicating that the rim conspiracy was part of the case and Defendants' representation to this court that they would need additional discovery to defend against that theory, Defendants still did not request additional discovery. Instead, more than seven months later, after Judge Black recused himself and only a couple of months before trial was scheduled to begin, Defendants made the same untimeliness [*737] argument to Judge Rice, arguing that they would be prejudiced if the rim conspiracy was included at trial and that they would need 12-18 months of additional discovery. As the majority explains, Judge Rice accepted those arguments, finding that the rim conspiracy was not alleged in the Amended Complaint and that MCEP could not file a Second Amended Complaint because Defendants would be prejudiced by the delay.

Given this chronology, I would reverse the district court's grant of summary judgment and allow the rim conspiracy, which all agree is subject to the per se rule, to proceed to trial. This conclusion is not dependent on whether the law of the case applies, but rather on whether the issue was fairly included in the case. First, MCEP's Amended Complaint expressly [47] alleges a group boycott subject to per se condemnation involving Defendants and the payers. The horizontal concerted action by the payers, orchestrated and monitored by Defendants, can reasonably be construed as part of this single, overarching conspiracy. This conclusion is reinforced by Defendants' failure to argue in their summary judgment briefs before the first appeal that the rim conspiracy was not encompassed within the Amended Complaint; and this [30] court's and Judge Black's express reliance on evidence of the rim conspiracy when discussing the merits of this case.

Second, Defendants' prejudice argument is unavailing in light of their failure to (1) argue prejudice in their initial summary judgment briefing, and (2) seek the discovery they told this court they would need in October 2015, despite the opportunity to do so for months. Rather than seek the discovery they claimed to need, Defendants moved forward with trial preparations before deciding to try their untimeliness argument a third time on a different judge after it failed to persuade either this court or Judge Black.

More fundamentally, the majority's affirmance of the dismissal of the rim conspiracy deprives MCEP of any [48] remedy based on a pleading technicality even though all agree that there is sufficient evidence that Defendants and the payers conspired to exclude MCEP from the market in a way that is per se illegal—i.e., in a way that is "so inherently anticompetitive that [the agreement] is illegal per se without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused." Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (citation omitted). Because "cases should be tried on their merits rather than the technicalities of pleadings," Tefft v. Seward, 689 F.2d 637, 639 (6th Cir. 1982), I would remand the rim conspiracy for trial.

[1] Because Judge Black construed MCEP's claim as encompassing the rim conspiracy, his conclusion that the per se rule applied to MCEP's claim is reasonable. Further, despite the majority's conclusion "that then-Judge Sotomayor's concurrence in MLB Properties" is "[p]erhaps most destructive to" Judge Black's framing of the ancillary-restraints doctrine (Maj. Op. at 13), then-Judge Sotomayor's concurrence in MLB Properties stated at several points that the restraint must be "reasonably necessary" to the efficiency-enhancing benefits of the joint venture. See, e.g., 542 F.3d at 338 (explaining that a per se approach may apply to joint ventures where "a particular challenged restraint is not reasonably necessary to achieve any of the efficiency-enhancing benefits of a joint venture and serves only as naked restraint against competition"). Thus, the majority's critique of Judge Black's formulation of the ancillary-restraints doctrine—requiring the restraint to be necessary to an efficiency-enhancing purpose of the joint venture—is not entirely fair given the broader context of his ruling.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The standard of review on a motion for summary judgment is well-settled. A motion for summary judgment is reviewed by the Delaware Superior Court under Del. Super. Ct. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

The burden is on the moving party to demonstrate its prayer for summary judgment is supported by undisputed facts or an otherwise adequate factual record to support a legal judgment. If the motion is properly supported, then the burden shifts to the non-moving party to demonstrate that there are material issues of fact for resolution by the ultimate fact-finder.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The Court may grant a motion for summary judgment when: (1) the record establishes that, viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue of material fact; and (2) in light of the relevant law and those facts, the moving party is legally entitled to judgment. But the Court cannot grant a motion for summary judgment if the record reveals that material facts are in dispute, or if the factual record has not been developed thoroughly enough to allow the Court to apply the law to the factual record.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN4[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

A fact is material for summary judgment purposes if it might affect the outcome of the pled claim under the law governing such a claim. In considering a motion for summary judgment, the Court's principle function is to examine the record to determine whether genuine issues of material fact exist, but not to decide such issues. At bottom, a claim should be disposed of by summary judgment whenever an issue of law is involved and a trial is unnecessary.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Intent

HN5[] Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

Under Delaware law, the proper construction of any contract is purely a question of law. The objective is to give effect to the parties' mutual intent at the time of contracting. Absent ambiguity, contract terms should be accorded with their plain, ordinary meaning. A contract term is not ambiguous merely because the parties dispute its meaning. Ambiguity exists when the disputed term is fairly or reasonably susceptible to more than one meaning.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Intent

HN6[] Contract Interpretation, Intent

Whether a contract's material terms are sufficiently defined is mostly, if not entirely, a question of law. The interpretation of contractual language is a question of law. Construing a contract's language should adhere to what would be understood by an objective, reasonable third party.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Affirmative Defenses

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > Relief

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > State Declaratory Judgments > Scope of Declaratory Judgments

HN7[] Contract defenses do not apply to equitable claims, only legal claims. But a declaratory judgment action is not per se equitable. So there is occasion where the Court must determine whether a given declaratory judgment action is one in law or one in equity. That determination turns on factors such as the nature of the underlying claim, other accompanying requested relief, and the essence of the declaration sought. A declaratory judgment is a creature of statute and 'not a purely equitable remedy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Conditions Precedent

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Standards of Performance > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance

HN8[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Conditions Precedent

The general rule concerning a condition precedent is that one has no duty to perform until the condition occurs. And under the "prevention doctrine" a duty to perform is excused if the other promisor party wrongfully prevented the condition from occurring. The key operative language is "wrongfully prevented." Because there is no prevention claim where the contract, in effect, authorizes prevention, the essential inquiry is whether or not the contract allocated the risk of the condition's nonoccurrence. The assumption of risk exception recognizes that "there are some cases in which some sort of prevention or interference is contemplated by the parties as quite proper and within the privileges of the promisor.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Conditions Precedent

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Standards of Performance > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance

HN9[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Conditions Precedent

Delaware and other courts have long-recognized the prevention doctrine and its assumption-of-risk exception. Courts have found that contracts may authorize prevention via explicit language such as for any reason, for any reasons whatsoever, regardless of the circumstances giving rise to such condition, or nothing therein requires the agreed-upon condition precedent be consummated.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Standards of Performance > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance

HN10[] Contracts, Standards of Performance

The fact that both contracting sides are sophisticated parties experienced in their industry, weighs in favor of finding an assumption of risk in contract terms. But where assumption of risk is found in a contract, courts caution that the specific risk assumed must be distinguished from some "blanket" assumption of risk claimed. For only a specific risk clearly assumed by a party will preclude that party's defensive claim of prevention. And absent clear contractual authorization of prevention, a court will not judicially imply such a term.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Impossibility of Performance

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Impracticability

HN11[] Standards of Performance, Impossibility of Performance

Under Delaware law, an impracticability/impossibility defense requires the showing of: (1) the occurrence of an event, the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption of the contract; (2) the continued performance is not commercially practicable; and (3) the party claiming impracticability did not expressly or impliedly agree to performance in spite of impracticability that would otherwise justify nonperformance. Where the party has assumed the risk that the "impracticable/impossible" event might occur, the defense does not apply. There can be no invocation of the impossibility defense if the supervening events were 'reasonably foreseeable, and could and should have been anticipated by the parties and provision made therefor within the four corners of the agreement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Standards of Performance > Impossibility of Performance > Frustration of Purpose

HN12[] Impossibility of Performance, Frustration of Purpose

The doctrine of commercial frustration does not apply if at the time of contracting the supervening events were reasonably foreseeable, and could and should have been anticipated by the parties and provision made therefor within the four corners of the agreement.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Intent

HN13[] Contract Interpretation, Intent

The role of a court is to effectuate contracting parties' intent. Absent textual ambiguity, the Court accords the contract's language its plain, ordinary meaning. The Court takes a holistic view, reading the given instrument as a whole, giving effect to all of its terms, and reconciling or harmonizing all of its provisions. The meaning which arises from a particular portion of an agreement cannot control the meaning of the entire agreement where such inference runs counter to the agreement's overall scheme or plan. And the Court must, when construing a contract's terms, avoid absurd, irrational, and illogical results.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation

HN14[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Delaware courts traditionally honor the express language of a contract. And contract construction resulting in superfluous verbiage is strongly disfavored. When interpreting contracts, the Court gives meaning to every word in the agreement, and avoids interpretations that would result in superfluous verbiage.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation

HN15[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Specific language in a contract controls over general language, and where specific and general provisions conflict, the specific provision ordinarily qualifies the meaning of the general one.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN16[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Noerr-Pennington immunity is rooted in the First Amendment to the United State Constitution, U.S. Const. amend. I, which insures one's right to petition the government for a redress of grievances. Noerr-Pennington first emerged in the antitrust law to immunize individual or concerted activity designed to influence legislation that might result in trade restrictions or monopolies as a consequence of legislative activity. The motive for such communication to the government was deemed by the Court to be irrelevant. And Noerr-Pennington immunity has since been extended to administrative and judicial actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN17[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

The Noerr-Pennington immunity is not limitless. Noerr-Pennington applies only to petitioning efforts seeking governmental, not private, action. Petitioning activities that employ unlawful means, or consist of false statements to the government, are not protected. Noerr-Pennington immunity is also subject to a "sham litigation" exception. A petitioning activity, although ostensibly directed to influence governmental action, is a "sham" if it is actually designed to interfere with a competitor's business relationships.

HN18[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The determination of whether a petitioning activity is a "sham" under Noerr-Pennington follows a two-step inquiry. First, the litigation must be "objectively baseless" that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If challenged litigation is objectively meritless, the court moves to the second-step inquiry to examine the litigant's subjective motivation to determine if the baseless suit conceals an attempt to interfere with a competitor's business through the use of the governmental process - as opposed to the outcome of that process - as an anticompetitive weapon.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN19[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Noerr-Pennington doctrine is federally based. Florida state courts have not adopted Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law

HN20[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Choice of Law

Under Delaware's conflict-of-law jurisprudence, Delaware courts are compelled to apply the foreign law as the state courts of the foreign jurisdiction would.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN21[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Florida appellate courts have not yet recognized any absolute privilege assigned to petitioning activities under the First Amendment. U.S. Const. amend. I. Instead, the Florida Supreme Court has observed no need to do so given the "qualified privilege" or "conditioned privilege" under Florida common law that provides wholly adequate protection of the First Amendment rights of speech, association, and petitioning activities. In doing so, the Florida Supreme Court expressly rejected the "sham" test and made it clear that the right to petition decisions should adopt analogous speech and association precedents developed under Florida common law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Need for Trial

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Qualified Privileges

HN22[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Need for Trial

Under Florida law, tort liability for interference with prospective contractual relationships is generally recognized. An interference can be immunized from liability where the action is undertaken to safeguard or promote one's financial or economic interest, but not to purposefully cause a breach of contract. And the claim's target - i.e., he asserting privilege - will bear the burden to show that the claimed interference is privileged or justified. To be immunized on the basis of privilege, the interfering action must be: (1) taken on a privileged occasion; and (2) the privilege may not be abused. Whether an occasion gives rise to a privilege is a question of law. Whether the privilege was abused is one of fact reserved for trial. Under Florida common law principles anyone who publishes defamatory matter is not liable if the remarks are published upon a conditionally privileged occasion and the privilege is not abused. Where a qualified privilege exists, plaintiffs must prove express malice or malice in fact in order to recover. Express malice, or malice in fact, constitutes an abuse of a qualified privilege leaving the defendant liable.

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Privileges

HN23[] Defenses, Privileges

The law of Florida embraces a broad range of the privileged occasions that have come to be recognized under the common law. Several examples of those privileges occasions that have been recognized are the mutuality of interest between the speaker and listener; discussion of former employee's performance with prospective employers; communications for bona fide commercial purposes to protect the recipient's interest; and statements concerning matters of public concern. Anyone who publishes defamatory matter is not liable if the remarks are published upon a conditionally privileged occasion and the privilege is not abused.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN24[] Defamation, Elements

Florida law provides that to establish a cause of action for defamation, a plaintiff must show that: (1) the defendant published a false statement about the plaintiff; (2) to a third party; and (3) the falsity of the statement caused injury to the plaintiff. Determining whether a statement if defamatory is primarily a function of the Court. The Court must view the statement in its entirety. If a statement is capable of more than one meaning, it is for the trier of fact to determine whether the language used was actually understood in its defamatory sense.

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Fair Comment & Opinion

HN25[] Defenses, Fair Comment & Opinion

Florida law indeed shields "statements of pure opinion" from defamation liabilities. But "mixed opinion" that, although ostensibly in the form of an opinion, implies the allegation of undisclosed defamatory facts as the basis for the opinion, is actionable.

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Fair Comment & Opinion

HN26[] Defenses, Fair Comment & Opinion

A "pure opinion" differs from a "mixed opinion" in that pure opinion occurs when the defendant makes a comment or opinion based on facts which are set forth in the article or which are otherwise known or available to the reader or listener as a member of the public. Mixed expression of opinion occurs when an opinion or comment is made which is based upon facts regarding the plaintiff or his conduct that have not been stated in the article or assumed to exist by the parties to the communication. Florida courts have consistently found statements to be non-defamatory "pure opinions" when the recipient of the communication knew, or was reasonably expected to know, the facts and situations surrounding the statements.

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Truth

HN27[] Defenses, Truth

The "substantial truth doctrine" provides a statement does not have to be perfectly accurate if the "gist" or the "sting" of the statement is true. Falsity exists if the publication is substantially and materially false, not just if it is technically false. In addition, a statement is false if it would have a different effect on the reader from what the pleaded truth would have produced. The defense of truth is a question for the factfinder at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN28[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

While Florida courts characterize Noerr-Pennington as an antitrust doctrine, other courts have recognized it as Constitution-based not limited to antitrust claims. Those courts have applied Noerr-Pennington immunity to wide-ranging tort claims rising under state laws.

HN29[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

In contrast to the Florida state courts' approach, the federal courts of Florida have recognized the applicability of Noerr-Pennington immunity to petitioning activities. In petitioning for adjudicative relief, Noerr-Pennington immunizes litigative activity (e.g., commencement of a suit) and pre-litigative activity (e.g., threats of litigation). Later decisions, however, appear to have taken a more cautious, and perhaps limiting, approach that affords Noerr-Pennington immunity only to pre-litigative activity "necessarily preliminary" to the adjudicative proceedings. Unlike other federal courts that have applied the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to a broad spectrum of state tort claims, Florida federal courts seem to adhere to the doctrine's antitrust law origin and are less inclined to extend the immunity to activities unrelated to anticompetitive conduce.

HN30[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Privileged pre-litigation acts that have been recognized by Florida courts under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine share certain commonalities, they: are formalistic (often prepared by attorneys); specify the complained-of conduct and the litigation threatened; and are generally followed by actual lawsuits based on the same subject matter.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

WALLACE, J.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Bobcat North America, LLC ("Bobcat") brings this action against Defendants Inland Waste Holdings, LLC ("Inland Holdings"), RSMDBB Holdings, LLC ("RSMDBB"), Bart A. Begley ("Begley"), Montgomery M. Davison ("Davison"), and Robert A. Smith ("Smith", together with Begley and Davison, [*2] the "Sellers") (Sellers, together with Inland Holdings and RSMDBB, "Inland") for claims arising out of Bobcat's acquisition from Inland of a waste management business consisting of Inland Waste Solutions, LLC ("Inland Solutions"), ABC Leasing Company, LLC ("ABC"), and Inland Service Corporation, LLC ("Inland Service") (together with Inland Solutions and ABC, the "Company"). Bobcat's Complaint is based on Inland's alleged misrepresentation of the Company's financial statement, customer relationships, and assets to inflate the acquisition price. Bobcat brings one count each of fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and breach of contract through which it seeks, inter alia, declaratory judgment and indemnification.

Inland answered the Complaint and, together with intervenors Inland Service and Inland Service of Florida, LLC ("Inland Florida") (where necessary, the reference to Inland also includes "Inland Service" and "Inland Florida"[1]) bring against Bobcat counterclaims via two counts of tortious interference, one count of defamation, a breach-of-contract count, and an indemnification claim.

Now before the Court is Bobcat's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment.[2] For the reasons stated below, [*3] the Court GRANTS Bobcat's Motion, in part, and DENIES it, in part.

II. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

[1] The Court acknowledges that Inland Service and Inland Florida are intervenors. Given the relationship among each of the Inland-affiliated parties, particularly their direct or indirect control by Begley, Davison, and Smith, the Court uses "Inland" to reference all the relevant Inland-related parties, and identifies the specific party where necessary.

[2] After Bobcat filed its Motion for Partial Summary Judgment in October 2018, it sought and obtained the Court's approval for leave to amend its complaint. Bobcat's leave to amend was unopposed by Inland. Bobcat filed its amended complaint (its second) in November 2018 [cited hereinafter as "Second Am. Compl."]. Bobcat's amended complaint asserts additional facts in connection with Inland's alleged breach of contract and misrepresentation. But those additional factual allegations do not affect Bobcat's current motion or Inland's opposition thereto. So the Court finds it unnecessary for the parties to further amend their respective motion papers. Instead, the Court considers the amended complaint's additional factual allegations and those from Inland's amended answer when deciding this motion for partial summary judgment.

The Court summarizes here only the factual background pertinent to this motion. The Court extracts this background from the undisputed facts found in Bobcat's complaint (and its amendments), Inland's counterclaims (and their amendments), and the parties' motion submissions of affidavits and exhibits.

A. The Parties And Inland's Contemplated Sale of the Company.

Bobcat is a limited liability company with its principle place of business in Sarasota, Florida.[3] George W. Dietrich is Bobcat's Chief Executive Officer. His son, William "Billy" Dietrich, is the President.[4]

The Company, founded in 1953, specializes in residential and commercial waste management systems and services.[5] On December 31, 2012, Begley and Davison each acquired 37.5% of the Company's outstanding equity from Smith, who retained 25% of the equity interest.[6] Begley and Davison financed their combined purchase price of $25,000,000 through a loan from Union Bank, N.A., to be repaid in installments of approximately $400,000 per month from the Company's post-acquisition revenues.[7]

At the time of this 2012 purchase, the Company [*4] ran a waste management business in Fort Hood, Texas ("Ft. Hood Business").[8] In 2014, the Company was chosen by Memphis, Tennessee as its waste management contractor.[9] Also in 2014, the Company executed an asset swap agreement with a competitor to obtain the right to service the City of Germantown, Tennessee—a Memphis suburb.[10]

In the Summer of 2015, Inland contemplated the sale of the Company and retained an investment banking firm, Livingstone Partners LLC ("Livingstone"), to help the Company.[11] Later that year, Livingstone complied and Inland issued an Information Memorandum to prospective buyers, including Bobcat.[12] In that Information Memorandum, Inland represented, among other things, that: (1) the Company's model was superior in generating Earnings Before Interest, Tax, Depreciation, and Amortization ("EBITDA"); and (2) the Company had EBITDA margins of 35% from 2011 through 2015.[13]

After receiving the Information Memorandum, Bobcat contacted Inland, and in January 2016, the parties signed a formal letter of intent and commenced negotiations.[14] The acquisition was finalized on May 18, 2016, when Bobcat and Inland entered into a Unit [*5] Purchase Agreement ("UPA"). Through the UPA, Bobcat purchased, at a price of $64,900,000: (a) 100% interest in Inland Solutions from the Sellers; and (b) 100% interest in ABC and Inland Service from Inland Holdings (exclusively owned by the Sellers) (the "Transaction").[15]

At the time of the Transaction, the Company maintained operations in ten states: Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Kansas, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin.[16]

As part of the Transaction, the Sellers collectively received 11.9% equity ownership interest (the "Rollover Equity") of Bobcat through RSMDBB. RSMDBB was formed specifically to hold this Rollover Equity.[17] The Rollover Equity was subject to redemption by Bobcat after Closing if Inland failed to meet certain financial performance targets tied to proposed expanded service contracts with Memphis ("Memphis Expansion").[18]

Under the UPA, Bobcat and Inland were bound by covenants to the other concerning their post-closing arrangements[19] including, at issue here, Inland's obligation of confidentiality and non-disparagement.[20]

C. BOBCAT DISCOVERS INLAND'S ALLEGED MISCONDUCT AND MISREPRESENTATION POST-CLOSING.

Shortly after the closing of the Transaction, [*6] Bobcat says it discovered Inland's misconduct, misrepresentation, fraud, and mismanagement of the Company.[21] Among other things, Bobcat learned that: (1) the Memphis service contracts operated at a loss of over $1 million;[22] (2) numerous claims had been filed against the Company resulting in liquidated damages of $406,000 for uncured violations that occurred in 2016 alone;[23] and, (3) the Company failed to properly maintain its trucks and equipment.[24] Bobcat found too that the Company was faced with liquidated damages in Delaware and had already lost certain Delaware business via reassignment to a competitor.[25] Further, Bobcat discovered what appeared to be intentional irregularities in the Company's pre-closing booking of ordinary expenses.[26]

In September 2016, while Bobcat was investigating the Company's suspected non-compliance with the UPA, Begley and Davison formed Inland Florida in contemplation of bidding for a waste management contract with the Board of County Commissioners for Okaloosa County, Florida.[27] The Okaloosa Board had earlier published a request for proposals.[28] And, on November 10, 2016, Inland Florida, with Begley [*7] and Davison as its founders, submitted a proposal to the Okaloosa Board.[29] Among other complained-of misconduct, Begley and Davison allegedly used UPA-protected confidential information—e.g. pricing, names, addresses, and contract terms and conditions of the Company's customers—to boost Inland Florida's credentials.[30]

Before the Okaloosa Board made its final decision, Billy Dietrich sent its members an email objecting to Inland Florida's use of Bobcat's confidential information.[31] The Okaloosa Board ultimately selected another contractor in February 2017.[32] Four months later, this action ensued. And before the Court now is Bobcat's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment through which seeks to knock out some of Inland's counterclaims.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] "The standard of review on a motion for summary judgment is well-settled."[33] A motion for summary judgment is reviewed by this Court under Superior Court Civil Rule 56(c), which states:

> The judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment [*8] as a matter of law.[34]

HN2[] The burden is on the moving party to demonstrate its prayer for summary judgment is supported by undisputed facts or an otherwise adequate factual record to support a legal judgment.[35] "If the motion is properly supported, then the burden shifts to the non-moving party to demonstrate that there are material issues of fact for resolution by the ultimate fact-finder."[36]

HN3[] The Court may grant a motion for summary judgment when: "(1) the record establishes that, viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue of material fact, and (2) in light of the relevant law and those facts, the moving party is legally entitled to judgment."[37] But the Court cannot grant a motion for summary judgment "[i]f . . . the record reveals that material facts are in dispute, or if the factual record has not been developed thoroughly enough to allow the Court to apply the law to the factual record . . . ."[38]

HN4[] A fact is material if it might affect the outcome of the pled claim under the law governing such a claim.[39] In considering a motion for summary judgment, the Court's principle function is to examine the record to determine whether genuine [*9] issues of material fact exist, but not to decide such issues.[40]

At bottom, a claim "should be disposed of by summary judgment whenever an issue of law is involved and a trial is unnecessary."[41]

IV. DISCUSSION

Bobcat moves for partial summary judgment asking the Court to: (1) declare that that the Rollover Equity has been redeemed; (2) find Inland's breach of the confidentiality agreement of the UPA; and (3) dismiss Inland's counterclaims for tortious interference with prospective business relationship and defamation based on Billy Dietrich's email to the Okaloosa Board.

A. BOBCAT'S COUNT V—DECLARATORY JUDGMENT ON THE ROLLOVER EQUITY.

In Count V, Bobcat claims that because the Memphis Expansion did not occur, Bobcat is entitled to redeem the Rollover Equity and a repayment of $530,000 from RSMDBB.[42] Bobcat moves now for a declaratory judgment on that count.

Bobcat avers that, pursuant to the UPA's Section 6.12, redemption became "automatic" when Inland failed to deliver the Memphis Expansion. According to Bobcat, the Memphis Expansion is an "exclusive" condition triggering redemption "without regard to cause."[43] Inland all but admits that the Memphis Expansion did not occur; and Inland does not contest [*10] Section 6.12's language.[44] But Inland counters with affirmative defenses of prevention of performance and impossibility/impracticability.[45] Inland additionally suggests that the presently incomplete factual record—which it says should be further developed through discovery—prevents entry of such a declaration now.[46] The parties' post-argument submissions have further developed their positions on Inland's affirmative defenses.[47]

1. Construction of Section. 6.12 of the UPA.

Section 6.12 of the UPA, titled "Memphis Expansion—Redemption and Memphis Payment", reads in pertinent part:

> (a) Memphis Expansion
> (i) . . . Begley shall have the authority to exclusively negotiate . . . execute . . . Memphis Contract[;]
> (ii) . . . Davison shall manage the Memphis Expansion in the normal course of business, consistent with past practices . . .[48]

Section 6.12 continues: if the Memphis Expansion does not occur, the Rollover Equity "will automatically and without further deed or action by any party be cancelled and redeemed by [Bobcat]. . ."[49] In addition, "[Begley and Davison] shall pay to [Bobcat] . . . an inversely proportionate amount of the Base Memphis Payment. . ."[50] The "Base Memphis Payment" is $530,000.[51]

Delaware law governs the UPA.[52] And HN5[] under Delaware law, "[t]he [*11] proper construction of any contract is purely a question of law."[53] The objective is to give effect to the parties' mutual intent at the time of contracting.[54] Absent ambiguity, contract terms should be accorded with their plain, ordinary meaning.[55] A contract

47 Bobcat says Inland's affirmative defenses are contract defenses that are inapplicable to a declaratory judgment action. Bobcat goes on that even if those defenses are conceptually applicable, Inland assumed the risk under the UPA—namely, the risk that the Memphis Expansion might not occur. See Pl.'s Reply, at 12-18. During oral argument on this motion Inland brought up cases never mentioned in its briefing to support its position that contract defenses can be applied to declaratory actions. See Official Tr. for Oral Argument held on Jan. 4, 2019, at 41-43, 83 [hereinafter "O.A. Foulds Regarding Bobcat North America, LLC's Response to the Authorities from the Jan. 4, 2019, Oral Argument [hereinafter "Pl.'s Sur Reply"] (D.I. 107). term is not ambiguous merely because the parties dispute its meaning.[56] Ambiguity exists when the disputed term "is fairly or reasonably susceptible to more than one meaning."[57]

Here, the Court finds Section 6.12's language clear and unambiguous and, therefore, accords its terms with their plain and ordinary meaning. That ordinary meaning is: with respect to the Memphis Expansion, "[f]rom and after the Closing," Begley was to exclusively negotiate contracts for the Memphis Expansion, and if a contract is executed, Davison was to manage its operation in the normal course of business.

The deliberately selected word "automatically," and phrase "without further deed or action," unambiguously states that the Rollover Equity is tied to, and only to, the Memphis Expansion.

2. Contract Defenses Can Be Applied to a Declaratory Judgment Action.

Turning to Inland's affirmative defenses, the first question answered must be: Are contract defenses—like [*12] prevention and impossibility/impracticality—available in a declaratory judgment action? They can be.

HN7[] Contract defenses do not apply to equitable claims, only legal claims. But a declaratory judgment action is not per se equitable.[58] So there is occasion where the Court must determine whether a given declaratory judgment action is one in law or one in equity.[59] That determination turns on factors such as the nature of the underlying claim,[60] other accompanying requested relief, and the essence of the declaration sought.[61]

Here, Bobcat's declaratory claim is based solely on a contract provision: the construction and application of Section 6.12. This claim bears little difference, if any, from, for instance, a potential breach-of-contract claim alleging Inland failed to return the Rollover Equity as required by the contract.[62] Bobcat's declaratory judgment claim is legal in nature; Bobcat concedes as much.[63] Therefore, contract defenses, including the prevention and impossibility/impracticality Inland asserts here, are conceptually applicable.

3. Inland's Defense of Prevention of Performance.

Inland's defense of prevention of performance runs as follows: Bobcat's poor performance [*13] with Memphis "prevented" Begley from expanding the Memphis contract. But Bobcat says this prevention defense cannot defeat summary judgment here because Inland assumed the risk that the Memphis Expansion might not occur. Inland disagrees, arguing that assumption of risk requires the contract language to be explicit and Section 6.12's is not.

HN8[] The general rule concerning a condition precedent is that one has no duty to perform until the condition occurs.[64] And under the "prevention doctrine" a duty to perform is excused if the other promisor party wrongfully prevented the condition from occurring.[65] "The key operative language . . . [is] 'wrongfully prevented.'"[66] Because "there is no prevention claim "where the contract, in effect, authorizes prevention."[67] The essential inquiry is whether or not the contract allocated the risk of the condition's nonoccurrence.[68]

HN9[] Delaware and other courts have long-recognized the prevention doctrine and its assumption-of-risk exception. Courts have found that contracts may authorize prevention via explicit language such as "for any reason,"[69] "for any reasons whatsoever,"[70] "regardless of the circumstances giving rise to such condition,"[71] or "nothing [therein] [*14] requires" the agreed-upon condition precedent be consummated.[72]

Frequently, these contract terms condition the consummation of a transaction upon the approval of the other party,[73] or subject one party to the discretion, satisfaction, or decision of the other party or a third-party.[74]

HN10[] The fact that both contracting sides are sophisticated parties experienced in their industry, weighs in favor of finding an assumption of risk in contract terms.[75] But where assumption of risk is found in a contract, courts caution that the specific risk assumed must be distinguished from some "blanket" assumption of risk claimed.[76] For

The court concluded that pursuant to the terms of the contract, Shear assumed the risk "that the Board...would withhold approval despite the unanimous recommendations of the Management Committee," but "did not assume the risk that the Management committee would refuse to recommend the contract, or that the Board would be deprived by a subsequently enacted by-law of [the] authority to approve the contract.").

only a specific risk clearly assumed by a party will preclude that party's defensive claim of prevention.[77] And absent clear contractual authorization of prevention (like that just described above), a court won't judicially imply such a term.[78]

Turning to Inland's prevention defense, the Court finds Inland indeed assumed the risk that the Memphis Expansion might not occur. Section 12.6 of the UPA explicitly provides that if the Memphis Expansion [*15] does not occur, the Rollover Equity "will automatically and without further deed or action by any party be cancelled and redeemed by [Bobcat.]"[79] The ordinary meaning and common understanding of the word "automatically" pertinent here is "in a manner independent of a decision or action"[80] This use of "automatically" in this contract, is reinforced by its next contractual phrase "without further deed or action by any party." And these words and phrases—included in this multimillion-dollar agreement that was forged by sophisticated parties—in all meaningful ways equate to "for any reason whatsoever," and "regardless of the circumstances giving rise to such condition."

In unambiguously and painstakingly drafted language, Section 6.12 confers the automation of the redemption that hinges solely on the nonoccurrence of a predetermined event, here, the Memphis Expansion. By executing the UPA, Inland knowingly consented to the risk that the Memphis Expansion might not occur, and that if it did not occur, the Rollover Equity would automatically be redeemed, without regard to the cause of the nonoccurrence.[81] So Inland's prevention defense is foreclosed by its own knowing assumption [*16] of risk.

4. Inland's Defense of Impossibility / Impracticality

Inland also asserts the defense of impracticability/impossibility of performance on the same basis as the prevention doctrine: Bobcat's poor performance made it impossible to expand the business with Memphis.[82]

HN11[] Under Delaware law, an impracticability/impossibility defense requires the showing of "(1) the occurrence of an event, the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption of the contract; (2) the continued performance is [81] Inland continues to argue, of course, that it did not assume the risk that the Memphis Expansion wouldn't occur. Rather, Inland insists "that the parties assumed the expansion would occur," and it could "not expect[] that Bobcat would change Memphis's mind so quickly." Defs.' Power Point at Slides 23; O.A. Tr. at 48-49. According to Inland, only language as explicit as "if the Memphis Expansion does not occur, the [R]ollover [E]quity is redeemed" would do. See id. Slides 22-23; O.A. Tr. at 45-46 (assumption-of-risk exception "only applies where the contract contains express language authorizing the prevention of performance.") Not so. Having surveyed a broad range of decisions applying Delaware law, the Court observes that finding a party has contractually assumed a risk (and is, therefore, precluded from asserting prevention) is not always based on some set incantation of express contractual authorization. Courts have found contracted risk assumption based on varying contract language, as well as, reasonable commercial common sense. Thus, Inland's argument attempting to so narrow the application of the assumption-of-risk exception is rejected.

not commercially practicable; and (3) the party claiming impracticability did not expressly or impliedly agree to performance in spite of impracticability that would otherwise justify nonperformance."[83]

Where the party has assumed the risk that the "impracticable/impossible" event might occur, the defense does not apply.[84] There can be no invocation of the impossibility defense if "the supervening events were 'reasonably foreseeable, and could and should have been anticipated by the parties and provision made therefor within the four corners of the agreement.'"[85]

Here, the sophisticated commercial parties, Bobcat and Inland, no doubt foresaw that the Memphis Expansion simply might not occur for any number [*17] of reasons or no reason at all. It is the very risk Section 6.12 contractually allocates. Had Inland intended to place any limitation on the "automatic" redemption, it could have done so. Having consented to taking on the potentiality that Memphis would not expand its relationship no matter what, and with no limitation—Inland cannot retroactively avoid the consequence of that now-materialized risk.

Thus, given the simple interpretation of the UPA's unambiguous language, Inland's affirmative defenses of prevention and impracticability/impossibility must be rejected as a matter of law. The Court need not consider Inland's calls for additional discovery or suggestions that material factual disputes exist. The Court GRANTS Bobcat's motion for summary judgment on the claim to redeem the Rollover Equity and the recoupment of the $530,000 Base Memphis Payment.

B. Bobcat's Count III—Breach of the Confidentiality and Non-Disclosure Obligations by Inland Under § 6.4(A) Of The Upa.

Bobcat next moves for summary judgment on its claim that Inland breached the confidentiality obligation found in Section 6.4(a) of the UPA. Bobcat says Inland Florida improperly used "confidential information" without authorization in its bid for the waste management contract [*18] with the Okaloosa Board.[86] Specially, Bobcat claims that Inland Florida improperly (and misleadingly) used the names, addresses, and other contract information of the Company's customers.[87]

Section 6.4(a) consists of four sentences. They are broken down as follows:

> First sentence: (a) . . . for a period of five (5) years after the Closing Date, [Inland Holding] and each Member shall not . . . disclose to any person any confidential information concerning the Business, Facilities, Equipment, Material Contracts, customers, Permits or the Company Group.

> Second sentence: [Inland Holding] and each Member[88] further agrees that [Inland Holding] and such Member will not disclose the pricing information, cost structure, customer names or addresses or the terms or conditions...
> Third sentence: If [Inland Holding] or any Member becomes legally compelled to disclose such confidential information, [Inland Holding] and/or such Member shall provide [Bobcat] with prompt advance written notice . . .
> Fourth sentence: "confidential information" means and includes, without limitation, all Trade Rights . . . all customer lists . . . all other information concerning the Business . . . the Company Group's services, clients, customers [*19] , acquisition prospects, subcontractors, costs, profits, markets, sales, trade secrets, processes, programs, products, marketing and distribution methods, but shall exclude any (x) knowledge, data and information that is (i) generally known or becomes known to the public (other than as a result of a breach of this Agreement) . . .[89]

The first sentence references "confidential information;" the second sentence uses "further agrees," and specifies five categories of information (namely, pricing, cost structure, customers' names, addresses, and contracts' terms or conditions); the third sentence describes the procedure of giving notice when disclosure is legally compelled; and the fourth sentence provides a definition of "confidential information" and exemptions therefrom, e.g., "public information."

Bobcat acknowledges the "public information" exception, and concedes that municipal contract information is largely public.[90] According to Bobcat, the "public information" exception only applies to the "confidential information" referenced in the first sentence, and not the specified categories of information described in the second sentence.[91] So then, says Bobcat, because Inland Florida used [*20] items listed in the second sentence, Inland Florida disclosed that not subject to Section 6.4(a)'s "public information" exception.[92] In essence, Bobcat urges the Court to read the first and second sentences as creating and imposing two independent, distinct and unrelated confidentiality obligations.[93]

Inland does not dispute that Inland Florida used the Company's customers' names, addresses, and municipal contract information without Bobcat's prior consent.[94] But Inland does contest Bobcat's isolationist reading of Section 6.4(a)'s first two sentences. Inland urges, instead, that the "public information" exception applies to both and its use fell within that exception.[95]

Factually, there is no dispute regarding Inland Florida's use without Bobcat's authorization of information that could "become[] known to the public." But the dispositive question for summary judgment on this claim is narrow and solely one of law: whether Section 6.4(a)'s second sentence imposes a confidentiality obligation unexcepted by the same section's "public information" exception. It does not. As explained below, the second sentence is most naturally read to further describe certain types of protected or "confidential information." In turn, [*21] disclosure of that described in the second sentence might—depending on the circumstances—fall under Section 6.4(a)'s "public information" exception.

1. The First and Second Sentences Create Somewhat Distinguishable but Congruous Confidentiality Obligations.

HN13[] "The role of a court is to effectuate [contracting] parties' intent."[96] Absent textual ambiguity, the Court accords the contract's language its plain, ordinary meaning.[97] The Court takes a holistic view, reading the given instrument as a whole, giving effect to all of its terms, and reconciling or harmonizing all of its provisions.[98] "[T]he meaning which arises from a particular portion of an agreement cannot control the meaning of the entire agreement where such inference runs counter to the agreement's overall scheme or plan."[99] And the Court must, when construing a contract's terms, avoid absurd, irrational, and illogical results.[100]

Section 6.4(a) is unambiguous so the Court can accord its terms their plain and ordinary meaning. Section 6.4(a)'s first sentence reads "not. . . disclose to any person any confidential information concerning the Business . . ." The second sentence requires that the Inland entities "not disclose the [five categories of information] [*22] to any person, firm, corporation, association or other entity related to the Business." That second sentence uses the conjunctive phrase "further agrees," indicating something that is in addition to what has already been said in the first sentence. HN14[] Delaware courts traditionally honor the express language of a contract. And contract construction resulting in superfluous verbiage is strongly disfavored.[101] Interpreting the second sentence's non-disclosure obligation as fully encompassed within that described in the first sentence would effectively read the second sentence out of Section 6.4(a) all together. The Court will not do so.

Feb. 28, 2017)* ("When interpreting contracts, this Court...gives meaning to every word in the agreement[,] and avoids interpretations that would result in superfluous verbiage.") (internal quotation omitted).

As observed before, the UPA was negotiated and prepared by commercially savvy parties. Their deliberately chosen words in the contract language must be given effect. Thus, reading each sentence individually, and the entire Section 6.4(a) holistically, the Court finds that the second sentence does create a confidentiality obligation that is to some degree distinguishable from that of the first sentence. But that does not end the matter.

2. The Confidentiality Obligation Imposed by the Second Sentence is Not Free from the "Public Information" Exception.

Recognizing the difference between the [*23] first and second sentences, however, does not mean they are completely isolated and independent. To the contrary, their relationship is that of a general provision and a specific one; between a broad confidentiality obligation and its specific subset.

HN15[] "Specific language in a contract controls over general language, and where specific and general provisions conflict, the specific provision ordinarily qualifies the meaning of the general one."[102]

Here, the Court finds the specific provision (the second sentence) wholly consistent with the general provision (the first sentence), and in essence, is a subset of the general provision. The first sentence's "confidential information" is inclusive of the specified categories of information enumerated in the second sentence.[103]

The second sentence specifically applies to certain categories of persons and information. Under the circumstances where those criteria are met, a claim can be based on the second sentence. The first sentence is a "catch-all" that sets forth a general confidentiality obligation.

Furthermore, the third sentence uses "such" confidential information to reference the aforementioned information that immediately precedes "such"—that [*24] is, the specific information set out in the second sentence. Given these structural relationships and the plain language of Section 6.4(a), the only reasonable interpretation is that the specific information enumerated in the second sentence further describes, and is exemplary of, some of the "confidential information" referenced more than once elsewhere throughout Section 6.4(a).

It only follows that any exception to the general provision must apply to its subset, i.e., the second sentence's confidentiality obligation is subject to the fourth sentence's "public information" exception to the same extent the first sentence's confidentiality obligation is.

Given this construction, Bobcat's motion can only be granted if Bobcat can show on the present record, that Inland Florida used wholly confidential non-public information in violation of Section 6.4(a). Bobcat hasn't done so.

The present record demonstrates that Inland Florida used names, addresses, or other contact information of certain of the Company's municipal customers. Bobcat concedes that at least some of that information is public.[104] And Bobcat provides no affidavits, exhibits, or evidence that otherwise demonstrates what information (if any) is non-public, thus, protected [*25] under the confidentiality agreement.

Rather, Bobcat's sole argument rests on its interpretation of Section 6.4(a)—that the second sentence creates an entirely independent confidentiality obligation that cannot be excepted under the fourth sentence. That

C. COUNTERCLAIM COUNT I (TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH PROSPECTIVE BUSINESS RELATIONS) AND COUNT III (DEFAMATION) WITH RESPECT TO INLAND FLORIDA.

Bobcat next seeks summary judgment on Inland Defendants' counterclaims of tortious interference and defamation. Both counterclaims arise out of Billy Dietrich's email to the Okaloosa Board concerning Inland Florida's bid proposal.[106] Bobcat invokes the First Amendment-based Noerr-Pennington doctrine, claiming that Billy's email is constitutionally privileged petitioning activity.[107] Alternatively, Bobcat contends that summary judgment is warranted under Florida law.[108]

The parties agree that Florida law governs this substantive claim.[109] Even if there was disagreement, the Court would apply Florida law under Delaware's "most significant relationship" test.[110]

1. Noerr-Pennington *Doctrine Would Likely Not be Applied in a [26] Florida State Tort Action.

Bobcat first relies on the Constitution-based Noerr-Pennington doctrine, contending that Billy's email is protected petitioning activity. Inland contests that the email does invoke the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

i. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine Overview

HN16[] Noerr-Pennington immunity is rooted in the First Amendment to the United State Constitution which insures one's "right to petition the government for a redress of grievances."[111] Noerr-Pennington first emerged in the antitrust law to immunize individual or concerted activity designed to influence legislation that might result in trade restrictions or monopolies as a consequence of legislative activity.[112] The motive for such communication to [105] Inland furthers alternative arguments to oppose summary judgment, including: (1) Section 6.4(a) does not prohibit disclosure of information to the Okaloosa Board; (2) the language of Section 6.4(a) is ambiguous; and (3) Bobcat fails to allege facts supporting damages. Defs.' Opp'n, at 24, 32-34; O.A. Tr., at 57-69. The Court need not address these alternative arguments.

[106] Inland's tortious interference claim also includes another count based on Billy's email to the Ft. Hood workforce. Bobcat's present motion does not seek summary judgment on that count.

the government was deemed by the Court to be irrelevant.[113] And Noerr-Pennington immunity has since been extended to administrative and judicial actions.[114]

HN17[] That immunity, however, is not limitless.[115] Noerr-Pennington applies only to petitioning efforts seeking governmental, not private, action.[116] Petitioning activities that employ unlawful means,[117] or consist of false statements to the government,[118] are not protected. Noerr-Pennington immunity is also subject to a "sham litigation" exception.[119] A petitioning [*27] activity, although ostensibly directed to influence governmental action, is a "sham" if it is actually designed to interfere with a competitor's business relationships.[120]

HN18[] The determination of whether a petitioning activity is a "sham" follows a two-step inquiry.[121] First, the litigation must be "objectively baseless" that "no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits."[122] "[I]f challenged litigation is objectively meritless," the court moves to the second-step inquiry to examine

ii. Inapplicability of Noerr-Pennington Doctrine to Inland Defendants' Florida Common Law Based Counterclaims.

HN19[] Noerr-Pennington doctrine is federally based. Bobcat concedes that Florida state courts have not adopted Noerr-Pennington doctrine, but urges that this Court should apply it under the federal Constitution's Supremacy Clause.[124]

HN20[] Under Delaware's [*28] conflict-of-law jurisprudence, Delaware courts are compelled to apply the foreign law as the state courts of the foreign jurisdiction would. And Florida law simply has not adopted—in fact, it has somewhat resisted—the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

HN21[] Florida appellate courts have not yet recognized any absolute privilege assigned to petitioning activities under the First Amendment.[125] Instead, the Florida Supreme Court has observed no need to do so given the "qualified privilege" or "conditioned privilege" under Florida common law that provides wholly adequate protection of the First Amendment rights of speech, association, and petitioning activities.[126] In doing so, the Florida Supreme Court expressly rejected the "sham" test and made it clear that "the right to petition decisions should adopt analogous speech and association precedents" developed under Florida common law.[127] And so, on Inland Florida's law-based tortious interference and defamation claims, this Court will not (and need not) announce such an unnecessary adoption for Florida state courts, but instead follows first the qualified privilege analysis utilized by them.

2. Inland's Counterclaims for Tortious Interference and [*29] Defamation under Florida Law.

Under Florida law, Bobcat says, Billy's email is conditionally privileged because (i) the communication is to protect Bobcat's legitimate contractual rights, and (ii) is not defamatory.[128] Inland maintains that the email is not privileged, and existing factual disputes preclude summary judgment.[129]

i. The Court Cannot Find on the Present Record that Billy's Email is Privileged Communication Immune from Liability for Tortious Interference.

With respect to Inland's tortious interference claim, Bobcat contends that the email is privileged because it asserts Bobcat's right under Section 6.4(a) because Inland breached the confidentiality agreement.[130] Inland contends that no valid contract rights were asserted, and alternatively, factual disputes with respect to Bobcat's malice and employment of improper means preclude summary judgment.[131] Given the record at this point, the Court must agree with Inland.

HN22[] Under Florida law, "[t]ort liability for interference with prospective contractual relationships is generally recognized."[132] An interference can be immunized from liability where the action "is undertaken to safeguard or promote one's financial or economic interest,"[133] but not to purposefully [*30] cause a breach of contract.[134] And the claim's target—i.e., he asserting privilege—will bear the burden to show that the claimed interference is privileged or justified.[135]

To be immunized on the basis of privilege, the interfering action must be (1) taken on a privileged occasion, and (2) the privilege may not be abused.[136] Whether an occasion gives rise to a privilege is a question of law.[137] Whether the privilege was abused is one of fact reserved for trial.[138]

Florida law "embraces a broad range of the privileged occasions."[139] But there is an inadequate factual record for the Court to find as a matter of law that Billy's email was communicated on any of the recognized occasions giving 138 Fla. Fern Growers Ass'n, 616 So. 2d at 569-70 ("[F]actual questions remain whether the mode, manner, or purpose of their communication amounted to abuse or forfeiture of the privilege.").

139 The Nodar court noted that HN23[] "[t]he law of Florida embraces a broad range of the privileged occasions that have come to be recognized under the common law," and recognized several examples of those privileges occasions, such as the rise to privilege under Florida's common law. Moreover, even if the Court could find the email was privileged activity, factual issues exist as to whether Bobcat abused such privilege.[140] Thus, Bobcat's motion for summary judgment on this counterclaim must be DENIED.

ii. Bobcat's Summary Judgment Motion on Inland's Counterclaim for Defamation Must Also be Denied.

Turning to Inland's counterclaim for defamation, Bobcat again relies on qualified privilege. And the Court again must [*31] find that that privilege-based argument fails here.

Bobcat next argues that Billy's email is not defamatory because it is merely an opinion, and to the extent any factual statements are contained, they are substantially true.[141]

HN24[] Florida law provides, "No establish a cause of action for defamation, a plaintiff must show that (1) the defendant published a false statement about the plaintiff, (2) to a third party, and (3) the falsity of the statement caused injury to the plaintiff."[142] Determining whether a statement if defamatory is primarily a function of the Court.[143] The Court must view the statement in its entirety.[144] If a statement is capable of more than one meaning, it is for "the trier of fact [to] determine whether the language used was actually understood in its defamatory sense."[145]

Here, Billy's email is open to multiple meanings or interpretations; though the tone and tenor of it hardly lost on the average reader. The Court simply cannot say that a reasonable reading of the email precludes a finding that it is defamatory. Thus, it must be submitted to more thorough factfinding at trial to determine if the email's language is understood in a defamatory sense.

Turning to Bobcat's argument [*32] that the email is an opinion, HN25[] Florida law indeed shields "statements of pure opinion" from defamation liabilities.[146] But "mixed opinion" that, "although ostensibly in the form of an opinion, implies the allegation of undisclosed defamatory facts as the basis for the opinion, is actionable."[147]

HN26[] A "pure opinion" differs from a "mixed opinion" in that:

> "Pure opinion occurs when the defendant makes a comment or opinion based on facts which are set forth in the article or which are otherwise known or available to the reader or listener as a member of the public. Mixed expression of opinion occurs when an opinion or comment is made which is based upon facts regarding the plaintiff or his conduct that have not been stated in the article or assumed to exist by the parties to the communication."[148]

Florida courts have consistently found statements to be non-defamatory "pure opinions" when the recipient of the communication knew, or was reasonably expected to know, the facts and situations surrounding the statements.[149]

In part, Billy's email reads:

> It seems that the company (Inland Services of Florida, LLC) bidding your refuse collection contract is in direct violation of our purchase [*33] and sale agreement of 5/31/16 as well as the noncompete agreement that goes hand in hand with that PSA. Bart Begley and Monty Davison sold Inland to us in May of 2016 and have no RIGHT to use the references that would allow them to bid your contract making this a VERY legal, sticky situation if they were awarded this contract. Having said that I wanted you to know where we stand, we will proceed with ANY and ALL legal recourse if those references were used in the Okaloosa Bid. Which I know they were used because it is the only way they would be QUALIFIED!!!! Our attorneys have already been prepped and ready to proceed as we have been monitoring your bid closely.
> Feel free to contact me anytime, thank you and have a great day.[150]

There is no record evidence the Okaloosa Board knew, or could be reasonably expected to have known, the facts or situations surrounding Billy's claims. Nothing in the record suggests the Okaloosa Board was in any way privy to the private transactional arrangements between Bobcat and Inland. Unlike those found to have received statements of "pure opinion," nothing here suggests the Okaloosa Board knew, or could reasonably be expected to know, whether Inland Florida [*34] and Begley/Davison violated the UPA. At most, Billy's statements are a mixture of his opinions, what he believes to be facts, his strongly held feelings, and his threats of litigation. The Court can't say here, on this record, that judgment as a matter of law on the defamation counterclaim is warranted.

Bobcat's last attempt to gain summary judgment on the defamation counterclaim is its suggestion that even if the email does contain factual content, those statements are true under Florida's "substantial truth doctrine."[151]

HN27[] The "substantial truth doctrine" provides "a statement does not have to be perfectly accurate if the 'gist' or the 'sting' of the statement is true."[152] Falsity exists if the publication is "substantially and materially false, not just if it is technically false."[153] In addition, a statement is false if it would have a different effect on the reader from what the pleaded truth would have produced.[154] The defense of truth is a question for the factfinder at trial.[155]

Under the substantial truth doctrine, the "gist" of Billy's email is that Inland Florida breached the UPA's confidentiality agreement, and Begley and Davison used the protected references without Bobcat's authorization. [*35] As the Court noted before, the alleged breach of the UPA has not been determined, yet the Board could have read the email to mean that the breach was indeed real. Thus, a trial factfinder could find that those statements have a different effect on the reader or that they are not "substantially and materially true."

3. The Same Outcome Under the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine.

Having concluded the qualified privilege analysis under Florida law, Bobcat's Noerr-Pennington arguments nevertheless bear on the question of Noerr-Pennington immunity's application to tort claims arising under state law. This question is implicated by the federal Constitution's Supremacy Clause.[156] Florida's declination to adopt the Noerr-Pennington analysis has not been without criticism.[157] And Florida's application of its recognized qualified privilege to petitioning activities has been seemingly sparse. So, if for nothing more that the sake of completeness, this Court cannot simply ignore Bobcat's attempt to invoke Noerr-Pennington immunity.

HN28[] While Florida courts characterize Noerr-Pennington as an antitrust doctrine,[158] other courts have recognized it as Constitution-based [*36] not limited to antitrust claims.[159] Those courts have applied Noerr-Pennington immunity to wideranging tort claims rising under state laws.[160]

HN29[] In contrast to the Florida state courts' approach, the federal courts of Florida have recognized the applicability of Noerr-Pennington immunity to petitioning activities.[161] In petitioning for adjudicative relief, Noerr-Pennington immunizes litigative activity (e.g., commencement of a suit) and pre-litigative activity (e.g., threats of litigation).[162] Later decisions, however, appear to have taken a more cautious, and perhaps limiting, approach that affords Noerr-Pennington immunity only to pre-litigative activity "necessarily preliminary" to the adjudicative proceedings.[163]

Of note also is the fact that, unlike other federal courts that have applied the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to a broad spectrum of state tort claims, Florida federal courts seem to adhere to the doctrine's antitrust law origin and are less inclined to extend [*37] the immunity to activities unrelated to anticompetitive conduce.[164]

On multiple occasions, the email used words and phrases in all capitalized letters, presumably to express threat. A reasonable reader can't even discern whether the litigation is threatened against Okaloosa, Inland Florida, Begley, [*38] Davison, or all the above.

Accordingly, the Court concludes on the present record that even under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine Bobcat is not due summary judgment on Inland's tortious interference and defamation counterclaims. And so, Bobcat's motion on those counterclaims must be DENIED.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed, Bobcat's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment is GRANTED, in part, and DENIED, in part.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

ORDER ON GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES IN THE AMOUNT OF $8,041,102

The history of this case is well documented by both counsel in their respective pleadings on Plaintiff's Motion for Attorneys' fees. After 12 years of litigation, which included three motions for summary judgment, two appeals and a five week trial, the jury rendered a verdict of $1,250,000, which when trebled by law,[1] awarded a total judgment for the Plaintiff of $3,750,000. The Cartwright Act further provides for unilateral fee-shifting awarding reasonable attorneys' fees to the prevailing Plaintiff.[2] The general purpose of the one-sided attorneys' fee provision is to insulate treble damages recoveries from expenditures for legal fees thus encouraging private persons to pursue otherwise costly and complex antitrust cases.[3]

There is no dispute that Plaintiff is entitled to attorneys' fees. The focused challenge is to the reasonableness of the amount of attorneys' fees sought ---$21,700,672.98.[4]

[4] Lodestar of $15,500,480.70 with a 1.4 multiplier, Flagship Reply, 33:11-13

Plaintiff's Position

Plaintiff correctly argues that private enforcement of the Cartwright Act in and of itself serves an important public interest. In order [*2] to attract qualified counsel to accept such risky and expensive cases, attorneys' fees are mandatory. "Antitrust plaintiffs are 'entitled to recover a reasonable attorney's fee for every item of service which, at the time rendered, would have been undertaken by a reasonable and prudent lawyer...to protect his client's interest in pursuit of a successful recovery... ."[5] Depending on the facts of each case, an enhancement multiplier is sometimes applied to balance the risk and expense against the important public interest benefit.

Lead counsel, Tom Boeder, is a highly qualified antitrust litigator and one of only a few attorneys in the United States with experience in movie industry antitrust matters and knowledge of circuit dealing disputes.[6] Mr. Boeder explains that he originally took the case on "hourly rate plus disbursements basis,"[7] but as the case dragged on the firm agreed to a contingency fee agreement, the terms of which were not disclosed by Plaintiff in its motion. As revealed by the Defendants, however, a March 7, 2012 contingency fee agreement provides for Perkins Coie to recover the past due/pre-contingency amount of $870,279, plus 40% of any additional money recovered in [*3] the lawsuit. The remaining 60% of the recovery, including attorneys' fees, would go to Flagship.[8] Over the 12 years of litigation, Mr. Boeder was ably assisted by several other attorneys and paralegals both in Seattle and Los Angeles, most significantly by Elvira Castillo and Donald Kula.

Plaintiff addresses its lodestar analysis seeking to recover all hours reasonably spent to establish and defend a fee claim.[9] Due to the length of the litigation and the difficulty in accounting for the many timekeepers who worked on the case (some of whom may no longer be employed at the firm) counsel opted to use "timekeeper historical rates, i.e., the rates in place at the time the work was done."[10] According to Mr. Kula, the "Perkins Coie timekeepers used in the lodestar calculation presented in this motion are comparable to, or lower than, the prevailing rates for such services of the kind and quality of the services provided by Perkins Coie to Flagship in this case."[11] Counsel argues that the "lean" staffing approach in this case was designed to be efficient and cost effective by delegating work to lower rate timekeepers, devoting only two partners to the case, and maintaining a core team as consistently [*4] as possible throughout the litigation.[12] Finally, Mr. Boeder reviewed the billing and wrote off a total of $163,651.75,[13] in addition to applying historical hourly rather than current hourly rates, in further support of counsels' conservative billing approach.[14] Plaintiff values its lodestar at $15,500,480.70. Plaintiff's billing expert, Kenneth Moscaret, opines that, "Perkins has exercised billing judgment in both the manner in which it has handled, managed, staffed, and billed the current action, but also in submitting the instant fee motion.."[15]

[15] Moscaret Decl., 4:3-4

Plaintiff seeks a 1.4 enhancement multiplier to its lodestar for several reasons. In light of the complexity of the case, the challenges posed during the 12 years of litigation and Defendants' aggressive litigation tactics, Plaintiff urges that the public interest benefits for independent theaters and movie goers goes far beyond the Plaintiff's monetary recovery. Mr. Boeder advises that this is one of only two private movie industry antitrust circuit dealing cases that an independent movie theater plaintiff has actively litigated through verdict, and further that Flagship 1[16] resulted in an important Cartwright Act jurisprudence. [*5] Although Flagship I alone is significant, "the most enduring measure of success in this case....are the public interest benefits that pursuit of the litigation by Flagship has generated," which include increased access by independent movie theater goers to desirable first run commercial films.[17] As of 2016, at least three major Hollywood movie studios have publicly announced or implemented a policy of no longer honoring any exhibitor requests for clearance/exclusivity on the movies they distribute. Based on that, Mr. Boeder opines that the results of this case are changing the industry standard. Plaintiff relies on Kenneth Moscaret's expert opinion in support of the reasonableness of both the lodestar and multiplier. Plaintiff values the attorneys' fees, with the 1.4 multiplier, at $21,700,672.98.

Defendants' Position

Defendants take issue with various aspect of Plaintiff's lodestar. The following are Defendants' main criticisms based on counsels' own analysis and that of their billing expert, Clement L. Glynn:

- Block Billing/Modified Block Billing - Perkins Coie regularly "block billed" (or "modified block billed") entries [*6] that lump all tasks performed during a given day into a single "block" of time, making it impossible to assess the reasonableness of that time on a per-task basis.[18] Block-billing is generally disfavored[19] and warrants a percentage reduction.
- Inflated hours post 2012 contingency fee agreement - During the first six years of litigation Plaintiff billed 3,000 for approximately $1,200,000 in fees. After counsel and Flagship reached a contingency fee agreement, Plaintiff billed 30,000 hours for approximately $13,600,000 in fees.[20] Defendants attribute this significant increase to lack of reasonable billing supervision and restraint.[21]
- Spoliation of evidence - Counsel billed 2,761 hours, nearly $1,300,000, defending its own spoliation of evidence, which resulted in Plaintiff's loss of two years' worth of evidence/damages at trial and a mutually costly four-year delay in the case.[22]
- Fees for numerous non-lawyers - Counsel seeks to include non-lawyer tasks, such as a jury consultant, as attorney fees.

Defendants correctly argue that the Plaintiff bears the burden of proving the reasonableness of its proffered lodestar. Although Perkins Coie's rates may have been reasonable, the time [*7] spent on various tasks allegedly is not.[23] Defendants' urge a further downward adjustment to the lodestar due to Flagship's limited success at trial: "[A] reduction in the fee amount is 'appropriate if the relief, however significant, is limited in comparison to the scope of the litigation as a whole'"[24] Defendants' recommend that the court adopt a "holistic approach" and reduce Plaintiff's fee award by "at least" 50%, or $7,395,740.[25] Defendants concludes that a maximum fee of $3,679,870 is appropriate.[26]

Similarly, Defendants dispute that any multiplier is appropriate. This case did not have a wide-ranging effect on the film exhibition industry, independent theaters, or movie goers according to the Defendants.[27] Flagship's attempt to take credit for ending clearances is allegedly misguided because the case was not about clearances but rather about circuit dealing.[28] Further, it is temporally impossible to attribute the 2018 verdict in this case to the 2016 decision by a few distributors to no longer honor clearances.[29] Aside from the lack of evidence to support Plaintiff's claim that this lawsuit is causally related to any policy change in the Coachella Valley or anywhere else, Defendants [*8] artfully suggest that, "[i]t is a bridge too far for Flagship to urge that a case not challenging clearances somehow ended all clearances nationwide."[30] Finally, Defendants conclude that the Flagship I decision is not significant in light of other more significant State and Federal opinions,[31] and that the case has only been cited once since 2011 for an issue not related to circuit dealing or any antitrust proposition.[32]

Discussion

Introduction

Plaintiff's lodestar is patently irreconcilable when comparing the pre-contingency and post-contingency hours and fees. During the first six years of this case, prior to the March 7, 2012 contingency fee agreement, Perkins Coie billed $1,193,442.45 based on 3,000 hours of work utilizing 23 time keepers. During the second six years of this case, Perkins Coie billed $13,598,038, based on 30,000 hours of work utilizing 78 timekeepers. In other words, counsel actually billed 10 times the number of hours and over 11 times the amount of fees in the second half of the litigation. These numbers alone defy any sense [*9] of reasonableness. Flagship attributes the extreme differential in hours and fees during the second half of the litigation to Norton Fulbright's entry into the case by, "ratcheting up the tone, tenor and tenaciousness of the litigation."[33] Plaintiff questions what Defendants' billed during the litigation and implies that their own fees would be viewed favorably in comparison.[34] The second half of the litigation included a second trip to the Court of Appeal over the spoliation issue (Flagship II)[35] which Plaintiff's urge was more complicated than Flagship I. As for the two years spent litigating the spoliation issue, Plaintiff blames Norton Fulbright's overreaching in seeking terminating sanctions instead of lesser evidentiary and damages sanctions ultimately imposed by the Court of Appeal.[36] Plaintiff and its expert conclude that the time expended was reasonable and necessary, and that any reduction in an antitrust case based on a reduced jury award is improper, merely inviting error.

Objectively, the first half of this case was litigated just as strenuously as the second half, but for the actual trial. During the first six years the parties engaged in written discovery, deposition of [*10] all principle players, Defendants' successful motion for summary judgment, a successful appeal of that summary judgment ruling and trial preparation. Flagship I was an intricate decision addressing not only the appropriate scope of discovery, but a discussion of all relevant antitrust cases. Plaintiff proudly describes this decision as significant for Cartwright Act jurisprudence and even more significant with respect to the law on circuit dealing: "Flagship I is the most detailed analysis of which Plaintiff is aware of the law on circuit dealing claims by any court, state or federal, in the context of private antitrust action."[37] It is disingenuous for Plaintiff to tout the importance of Flagship I when discussing its contribution to antitrust jurisprudence and to later minimize the complexity of the appeal when justifying magnified post-contingency fees for the Flagship II.

Comparison of time spent pre and post-contingency

The relative time spent on equivalent tasks during the first and second halves of the case shows a tremendous disparity in billing practices. Defendants' expert, Mr. Glynn, presented some glaring comparisons in this regard. For example, Mr. Tabor and Mr. Mason were [*11] each deposed during both periods of the case. In 2008, three timekeepers spent approximately 30.6 hours preparing for and presenting Mr. Tabor and Mr. Mason for deposition, which equated to $12,883 in fees. In 2013, seven timekeepers spent roughly 306 hours preparing for and presenting them for second depositions, which equated to $108,212 in fees.[38] In 2008, ten timekeepers spent 768.7 hours on the appeal of the Motion for Summary Judgment, resulting in Flagship I, which equated to $343,325 in fees. In 2014, 19 timekeepers spent 1,944 hours on the spoliation appeal, which equated to $958, 862 in fees.[39] In 2008, timekeepers spent 37.8 hours preparing for and taking two Cinemark depositions, an average of 19 hours per deposition, which equated to $17,696 in fees. In 2017, timekeepers spent 428 hours preparing for and taking four short Cinemark deposition, which equated to $246,889 in fees, or an average of 107 hours per deposition.[40] Plaintiff's explanation for what appears to be grossly inflated hours is Norton Fulbright tenacious litigation tactics, such as attacking the Flagship principals personally, and that the broadened scope of discovery required more deposition preparation. While [*12] both may be true, the explanation rings hollow in light of the massively disproportionate billing practices between the first and second halves of the litigation.

[40] Glynn Decl., ¶25(d)

Whether it is equitable for a Plaintiff to recover fees for its own unintentional spoliation of material evidence has not been addressed by a published opinion.[41] Mr. Glynn opines that the approximately $1.3 million Flagship incurred in, "litigating the spoliation issue should not be awarded, as they were the result of Plaintiff's improper conduct."[42] Defendants' correctly note that the case was set for trial just weeks after the trial court's issuance of terminating sanction, and that the parties had largely prepared for trial.[43] The spoliation issue delayed the trial for four years, which resulted in repeated trial preparation for both sides.

It makes little sense for Defendants to pay all Flagship's fees to correct a mistake created by Flagship itself. Mr. Tabor admittedly, although unintentionally, destroyed nearly two years' worth of email that were critical to the litigation. Email exchanged between the Flagship principals, as well as with the Defendants and other distributors, were the keystone of proving Plaintiff's [*13] circuit dealing claims. The destruction of two years' worth of emails was a weighty event worthy of an equally weighty response by any competent attorney. Norton Fulbright cannot be blamed for seeking the sanction most beneficial to their clients, which was then granted by an experienced trial judge. For a second time, Flagship rose from the ashes after their successful appeal, but at a cost. Flagship was precluded from presenting any evidence or seeking any damages from the nearly two year period of the lost emails. This result ultimate impacted the recovery available to Flagship and thus the success of the case.

Plaintiff's success

The result a Plaintiff obtains at trial is significant when evaluating reasonable attorneys' fees. The Supreme Court in Hensley v. Eckart holds: "The product of reasonable hours times a reasonable rate does not end the inquiry. There remain other considerations that may lead the district court to adjust the fee upward or downward, including the important factor of the 'results obtained.' ....[D]id the plaintiff achieve a level of success that makes the hours reasonably expended a satisfactory basis for making a fee award?"[44] Later, the Supreme Court in *Farrar [14] v. Hobby followed this analysis to its logical extension: "When a plaintiff recovers only nominal damages because of his failure to prove an essential element of his claim for monetary relief, the only reasonable fee is usually no fee at all."[45] In Chavez v. City of Los Angeles, the California Supreme Court, citing Hensley and Farrar found, '"under state law as well as federal law, a reduced fee award is appropriate when a claimant achieves only limited success.'"[46]

Flagship takes issue with Defendants' reliance on Hensley and Farrar because both are civil rights and not anti-trust cases: "Because the fee-shifting provision of antitrust law, like the Cartwright Act, are designed to 'encourage the detection and cessation of anticompetitive behavior' and to 'encourag[e] private parties to bring antitrust action,' Flagship should recover its attorney's fees regardless of the amount of damages awarded."[47] Rather, Flagship urges the court to reject the Hensley and Farrar analysis and rely on U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League. However, even in that case the Court held: "That the [Plaintiff] only received nominal damages is relevant in determining the amount of fees allowed and may be a factor used in reducing a fee [*15] award, but it does not affect the entitlement to an award."[48] The trial court in Nat'l Football League did reduce the Plaintiff's attorneys' fee award by 20% due to the nominal recovery, which was undisturbed on appeal.

Flagship asked the jury for a minimum of $9.1 million in damages, which is significantly less than it envisioned before Flagship II. The jury awarded $1.25 million - about 14% of Plaintiff's request. Although significantly more than nominal, even the Plaintiff is hard-pressed to consider this reward a monetary success. Plaintiff emphasizes that the monetary award is only one measure of its success. In addition to two successful appeals, Mr. Boeder notes that this is only one of only two private movie industry antitrust circuit dealing cases that an independent movie theater plaintiff has actively litigated through verdict.[49] And as discussed above, Plaintiff urges that the "most enduring measure of success" is the public benefits, including increased access by independent movie theaters to first-run movies and the agreement by three major Hollywood movie studios rejecting clearances.[50]

In contrast, Defendants underrate any result Plaintiff's may have achieved. [*16] Over the course of the case, Plaintiff abandoned its claim for unfair competition and interference with prospective economic advantage and pursued circuit dealing exclusively. Plaintiff's initial assertion of a conspiracy theory among dozens of distributors was slowly abandoned as the trial progressed.[51] Defendants' minimize the impact of Flagship I on antitrust jurisprudence and give Plaintiff no credit for a few distributors rejection of clearances.

Three distributors did stop honoring clearances 10 years into the litigation. Whether each distributor's individual decision was the result of this litigation is a matter of speculation. Their decision is just as likely to have been based purely on a profit analysis. Similarly, it is impossible to attribute the benefit to the public of increased access to first run films based on this case or to quantify that benefit based on Mr. Boeder's opinion alone. However, Flagship I is unique given the dearth of antitrust decisions regarding circuit dealing since the 1948 U.S. Supreme Court decision of United States v. Paramount Pictures.[52] Flagship I provides a valuable summary of the case law on circuit dealing from 1948 through the 1988 decision [*17] in Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enters., Inc.[53]

Plaintiff bears the burden of proving the fees it seeks are reasonable.[54] When awarding fees, it is incumbent upon the court to calculate the lodestar by carefully compiling the time spent and reasonable hour rate for each attorney.[55] Once the lodestar is calculated, that figure may be adjusted upward or downward to account for various factors, including the novelty and difficulty of the issues, the skill in presenting them, the risk associated with a contingent fee arrangement and the Plaintiff's success in the litigation.[56] One critical factor is arriving at a reasonable attorney fee is the degree of success obtained by the prevailing party.[57]

It is difficult to overlook the huge disparity of hours, timekeepers and tasks billed between the pre and post-contingency fee period. When Perkins Coie had a client reviewing the bills and bearing the responsibility for paying them, the bills were seemingly reasonable and conservative. After entry of the contingency fee agreement, every second of every timekeeper's breathing moment spent on the case appears to be included. And why not? When a client is reviewing and paying the [*18] bills an attorney exerts discipline to warrant that the fees are reasonable, or else the client will complain. The opposite is true when Flagship benefits directly from as many hours Perkins Coie can include in the fee request. Rather than having to pay money to its lawyer, Flagship actually reaps a significant financial reward from an inflated bill.

As was mentioned at the hearing, Plaintiff's billing presentation was exceedingly disappointing, particularly in light of the tremendous respect this court has for Mr. Boeder and his colleagues. Because the post-contingency fee hours appeared bloated by a factor often and the fees by a factor of 11, it was tempting to simply reduce the post contingency fees by 90%. In addition, non-recoverable costs were included as fees[58] and block-billing or modified block-billing was deemed an acceptable practice by both the firm and its expert.[59] Finally, Plaintiff's failure to take any responsibility, either factually or financially, for its role in its own spoliation of evidence is baffling. These issues cast a negative shadow over the legitimacy of the lodestar Plaintiff proposed.

In analyzing the fee request, the pre-contingency fees were used as [*19] a benchmark. Plaintiff's billing rate was not challenged by the Defendant and has been accepted without change. The fees initially charged to Flagship are reasonable given the unique nature of the litigation, the complexity of the issues and specialized skill involved in litigating these claims. The full pre-contingency fee request is awarded in each "category" as defined by and based on the figures provided by Perkins Coie.[60] Pre-contingency fees requested for certain tasks, such as deposition preparation or a summary judgment motion, were used as a guide in determining a reasonable amount of post-contingency fees for similar tasks. Due consideration was given to increased billing rates associated with the passage of time. Given the billing presentation, an entry-by-entry review was impossible to determine the reasonable time spent on a task or group of tasks - and fortunately, not required.[61] Consequently, a percentage

[60] Decl. Boeder, Exhs. C, D. Exhibit D defines the "phases" of the litigation broken down by time periods.

[61] "The fee applicant (whether a plaintiff or a defendant) must, of course, submit appropriate documentation to meet the burden of establishing entitlement to an award.' But trial courts need not, and indeed should not, become green-eyeshade accountants. The essential goal in shifting fees (to either party) is to do rough justice, not to achieve auditing perfection. So trial courts may reduction on a group of tasks was the only way to determine a reasonable lodestar, while giving full deference to pre-contingency fee requests.

At all times, recognition is given to Plaintiff prevailing in a 12-year, hard-fought litigation which dealt with complex issues [*20] at great risk. Perkins Coie has waited six years to see any money and although the jury award was significantly less than hoped, Flagship indeed prevailed. These factors were balanced with billing deficiencies and an apparent lack of billing restraint after March 7, 2012.

Fee Analysis

The following analysis follows Perkins Coie's categories of fees:[62]

1. Case Investigation/Development
    - Requested amount $828,839
    - Amount awarded $369,446
        - Rational: During the first 6 years of the case, Perkins Coie billed $122,080 for this category of work. During the second 6 years of the case, $706,759 was billed. Since there are separate categories for pleadings and discovery, it is unclear exactly what justifies incurring six times the fees for this category during the same number of years. The bills do not provide illumination on this point. The full $122,080 is awarded for the first 6 years. 35% of the remaining requested fees, or $247,366, is awarded for the second 6 years. ($122,080+$247,366=$369,446)
2. Pleadings
    - Requested amount $127,463.00
    - Amount awarded $127,463.00
        - Rational: The number of hours spent appear reasonable given the complexity and uniqueness of the issues involved. The hours spent [*21] post-contingency (65.9) do not appear inflated.
3. Discovery
    - Requested amount $5,203,389
    - Amount awarded $3,246,124
        - Rational: During the first 6 years of the case, Perkins Coie billed $438,126. This full amount is awarded. During the second 6 years of the case, $4,765,263 was billed. When comparing similar depositions taken before and after the contingency fee agreement, it is impossible to reconcile the increased hours spent by the many additional timekeepers. I.e. Fees for the Tabor/Mason depos taken in 2008 ($12,883) and 2013 ($108,212)[63]; Fees for two Cinemark depos taken in 2008 ($17,696) and four short Cinemark depos in 2017 ($246,889). In reply, Mr. Boeder explains that the depositions were longer, the case increased in complexity, the examples Defendants' cited were cherry-picked, and the time spent was reasonable and necessary to defend against Defendants' personal attacks.[64] Mr. Boeder's explanation does not adequately explain the significant increase in time spent on preparation for depos that may have taken twice as long but consumed more than twice the number of hours by many multiples. Additionally, the fees requested for discovery included $255,799 related to the spoliation [*22] of emails by Mr. Tabor.[65] Only 25% of the $255,799 related to spoliation is awarded, or $63,950, leaving a requested balance of $4,509,464. The breadth of discovery increased after Flagship I, but that does not account for the gross time differential spent before and after the contingency agreement. 60% of the remaining requested balance is awarded, or $2,744,048 is awarded. ($438,126+$63,950+$2,744,048=$3,246,124)

4. Motions
  - Amount requested $882,976
  - Amount awarded $340,777

    ○ Rationale: During the first 6 years of the case, Perkins Coie billed $48,823 in this category. This full amount is awarded. During the second 6 years of the case $834,153, was billed. Although Plaintiff created the categories of work performed, none of the declarations or billing sheets provided a break-down of which motions or types of motions are included in this category. Given the billing as presented, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to cull through the billing sheets to ferret out whether the time spent was reasonably. In short, Plaintiff has not met its burden in this category to show that the hours billed are reasonable. What is known is that nearly one-third of the billings are block-billings [*23] and that the time spent on pre-contingency fee motions, which include all motions prior to the final preparation for trial before April 2014, is significantly less than time spent on post-contingency motions. Of note, pretrial motions do not include Summary Judgment motions or Motions In Limine, which will be discussed below. 35% of the post-contingency fee request, or $291,954 is awarded. ($48,823+291,954=$340,777)

5. Summary Judgement
  - Amount requested $882,976
  - Amount awarded $494,690

    ○ Rationale: Plaintiff responded to three Summary Judgment Motions. The first motion, and arguably the most complex, involved the scope of discovery which relied on an in-depth analysis of circuit dealing in antitrust cases. The requested fees for this motion are $115,587, and this full amount is awarded. The second MSJ equated to fees of $423,250, more than three time the cost of the first, without any explanation other than that it occurred post-contingency. The reasonable fee for the second MSJ is $169,300. The third MSJ equated to fees of $630,956, more than four times the cost of the first, and one-third more than the second, again without any explanation. In fact, the third MSJ heard before this [*24] court, largely overlapped with the first MSJ. The reasonable fee for the third MSJ is $209,803. ($115,587+$l 69,300+$209,803=$494,690)

6. Appeals
  - Amount requested $1,302,188
  - Amount awarded $499,068

    ○ Rationale: Flagship I was billed at $340,876, and this full amount is awarded. Flagship II was billed at $958,740. The fee differential between these two is irreconcilable. The reasonable fee for Flagship II should be 50% of that amount, or $479,370. The spoliation issue is completely attributable to Plaintiff's unintentional conduct. As a result, only one-third of the reasonable appeal costs, $158,192, is awarded for the Flagship II appeal. ($340,876+$158,192=$499,068)

7. Settlement/Mediation
  - Amount requested $234,547
  - Amount awarded $121,382

    ○ Rationale: The pre-contingency fee request in this category is $45,939; the post-contingency fee request is $188,607. No explanation is provided for this substantial increase in expenditure for settlement. Specifically, $163,356 was spent in Phase 4, without any justification. 40% of the post contingency fees, or $75,443, is awarded. ($45,939+$75,443=$121,382)

8. Pre-Trial
  - Amount requested $3,098,122
  - Amount Awarded $1,555,795

    ○ Rationale: During [*25] the first 6 years of the case, Perkins Coie billed $13,469. This full amount is awarded. Post-contingency but pre-spoliation, when both counsel agree that the case was nearly ready for trial, $948,070 was billed. This means that Plaintiff spent an additional $2,136,583 preparing for trial the second time. Many, if not most of the original Motions In Limine were re-purposed for the trial. Of course, counsel needed to reacquaint themselves with the case after a 4 year delay. Regardless, after careful review, the cumulative post-contingency fees appear inflated by a factor of 50%. This conclusion is based not only the experience in dealing with Flagship's bills in general, but also on this court's experience in reviewing attorney's bills from top firms in Los Angeles. As a result, 50% of the remaining requested fees, or $1,542,326, is awarded. ($13,469+$1,542,326=$1,555,795)

9. Trial
   - Amount requested $1,309,301
   - Amount awarded $916,511

     ○ Rationale: Although the Trial fees excessive, they did not appear as inflated as fees requested in other categories. There were an excessive number of timekeepers and hours claimed, particularly towards the end of the trial. Unfortunately, given the previous [*26] billing abuses, it is difficult to ferret out unreasonable from reasonable time spent by performing a line by line analysis.[66] Regardless, the trial was hard- fought with some unexpected turns along the way requiring long days of work. As a result, 70% of the requested amount, or $916,511, is awarded.

10. Post-Trial
   - Amount requested $739,692
   - Amount awarded $369,846

     ○ Rationale: This area became a bit confusing. In Plaintiff's motion, it appears that it was requesting approximately $275,000 for preparation of the instant fee application. In Plaintiff's Reply, Plaintiff attributes $709,000 for the "work expended on Fee Motion,"[67] which is nearly the full amount requested but likely includes time spent on discovery. Preparation of this fee application is indeed time consuming. Even after reviewing the motion, errors were noted and corrected in the reply. Again, given the previous billing abuses and the confusion created by the figures in the reply, 50% of the requested amount, or $369,846, is awarded.

The total award to Flagship for its attorneys' fees is $8,041,102.

Each category was assessed individually with due consideration to the hours expended and the reasonableness of those hours. [*27] No multiplier is awarded as none is appropriate given the factors discussed above. In reducing fees in each category by various percentages, the following factors were taken into account: Billing deficiencies such as block or modified block-billing; Non-attorney hours included as attorney fees; the minor "write-off amount[68] of the recorded time given the gross disparity of hours billed between the pre and post contingency fee period; Risk associated with pursuing a unique antitrust claim; Risk of pursuing such claim partly on a contingent fee basis; Professional stamina required to pursue a 12-year litigation; Limited monetary and speculative public interest success of the lawsuit; and, prior experience with the billing practices of top law firms involved in complex litigation.

The court commends all counsel for their vigorous and professional pursuit of success for their clients. It has been an honor presiding over this case.

MINUTE ORDER

The Court, having taken the above-entitled matters under submission April 26, 2019, and having fully considered the arguments of all parties, both written and oral, now rules as follows:

NOTICE OF RULING:

Defendant Masimo Corporation's demurrer to Plaintiff Shandong Lihong Technology Limited Corp.'s Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") is sustained with 15 days leave to amend.

A demurrer presents an issue of law regarding the sufficiency of the allegations set forth in the complaint. (Lambert v. Carneghi (2008) 158 Cal.App.4th 1120, 1126.) The challenge is limited to the "four corners" of the pleading (which includes exhibits attached and incorporated therein) or from matters outside the pleading which are judicially noticeable under Evidence Code sections 451 or 452. Although California courts take a liberal view of inartfully drawn complaints, it remains essential that a complaint set forth the actionable facts relied upon with sufficient precision to inform the defendant of what plaintiff is complaining, and what remedies are being sought. (Leek v. Cooper (2011) 194 Cal.App.4th 399, 413.)

Fraud/Intentional Misrepresentation (First Cause of Action)

The elements of fraud are "(a) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, [*2] or nondisclosure); (b) knowledge of falsity (or 'scienter'); (c) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (d) justifiable reliance; and (e) resulting damage." (Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal.4th 631, 638.) Every element of fraud must be pleaded with specificity. The particularity requirement for fraud requires the pleading of facts showing how, when, where, to whom, and by what means the representations were made. (Stansfield v. Starkey (1990) 220 Cal.App.3d 59, 73.) This is to provide the defendant with notice and to give the court enough information to assess whether there is a foundation for the charge of fraud. (Committee on Children's Television, Inc. v. General Foods Corp. (1983) 35 Cal.3d 197, 216.)

Plaintiff alleges that the fraudulent misrepresentation was that the Distribution Agreement was between Plaintiff and "Masimo International, SARL," when it was actually between Plaintiff and Defendant "Masimo Corporation." (SAC, 47-48.) Masimo International, SARl is a subsidiary, wholly-owned by Defendant. (SAC, ¶ 17.) If the Distribution Agreement was instead with Defendant, Plaintiff alleges it would not have provided its confidential customer and market information "because the relationship between Defendant and Plaintiff is between manufacturer and distributor, where Plaintiff is compensated by sales commission." (SAC, ¶ 27.)

Plaintiff's claim for fraud [*3] is not pled with the required specificity for fraud claims. There are no facts alleged showing "how, when, where, to whom, and by what means the representations were tendered." (Lazar v. Superior Court, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 645.) Contrary to Plaintiff's assertion in its opposition, the allegations in the SAC and the Distribution Agreement (Exh. C to SAC) do not satisfy the specificity requirement.

Furthermore, Plaintiff's claim for fraud appears to be barred by the three-year statute of limitations. (See Code Civ. Proc., § 338, subd. (d).) Plaintiff has not pled facts to support the application of the delayed discovery rule. (Cansino v. Bank of America (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 1462, 1472.) To do so, a plaintiff is required to "specifically plead facts to show (1) the time and manner of discovery and (2) the inability to have made earlier discovery despite reasonable diligence," to avail itself of the delayed discovery rule and sufficiently plead a fraud claim. (McKelvey v. Boeing North Am., Inc. (1999) 74 Cal.App.4th 151, 160.) Here, Plaintiff alleges the Distribution Agreement was entered into on January 23, 2009, and alleges that it relied upon the Distribution Agreement in numerous instances. (See, e.g., SAC, 50, 52, 58, 92.) But, Plaintiff does not alleged any facts to show that the delayed discovery rule applies. Accordingly, the demurrer as to the first cause of action is sustained [*4] with 15 days leave to amend.

Unfair Business Practices (Second Cause of Action)

In the second cause of action, Plaintiff alleges violation of Business and Professions Code section 17200 (the "UCL"). The UCL prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." A UCL action is equitable in nature and damages cannot be recovered. (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 179-180.) To state a UCL claim, Plaintiff must allege acts or injuries within the terms of Business and Professions Code section 17200. It requires a person to have suffered injury in fact and have lost money or property as a result of unfair competition in order to have standing for a UCL cause of action. (Pfizer Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 182 Cal.App.4th 622, 630.)

The UCL does not proscribe specific activities, but broadly prohibits any unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising. The UCL governs anti-competitive business practices as well as injuries to consumers, and has as a major purpose the preservation of fair business competition. By proscribing "any unlawful business practice," the UCL "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable. Because the UCL is written in the disjunctive, [*5] it establishes three varieties of unfair competition-acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent. In other words, a practice is prohibited as "unfair" or "deceptive" even if not "unlawful" and vice versa. (Puentes v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Inc. (2008) 160 Cal.App.4th 638, 643-644.)

Here, it appears that Plaintiff is proceeding under two varieties of unfair competition - fraudulent business act/practice and unfair business act/practice. The alleged fraudulent business act or practice was that Defendant induced Plaintiff to enter into a Distribution Agreement on January 23, 2009 to obtain confidential customer and market information. (SAC, 63-83.) Plaintiff alleges three deceptive acts: (1) acquiring Plaintiff's confidential customer information via the Distribution Agreement in order to take over the market; (2) fraudulently using "Masimo International, SARL" to enter the Distribution Agreement; and (3) forming two new entities to switch the distribution. (SAC, 69-80.) These allegations do not allege a fraudulent business act or practice. To the extent

Plaintiff is proceeding under the fraudulent business act or practice, that portion of the UCL claim is barred by the statute of limitations. The statute of limitations for this claim is four [*6] years. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17208.) On its face, this portion of the UCL claim appears to be time-barred as the alleged fraudulent business act or practice started in 2009.

Plaintiff also alleges that Defendant's misappropriation of the confidential customer information and subsequent switching business to the other two entities under Defendant's control constitute unfair competition. (SAC, 84-88.) Under the unlawful prong, a violation of law may be actionable as unfair competition under the UCL. (Lueras v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP (2013) 221 Cal.App.4th 49, 81.) "An unfair business practice occurs when that practice offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers... An unfair business practice also means the public policy which is a predicate to the action must be tethered to specific constitutional, statutory or regulatory provisions." (Ibid. [internal citations omitted].) The UCL "was intentionally framed in its broad, sweeping language, precisely to enable judicial tribunals to deal with the innumerable new schemes which the fertility of man's invention would contrive." (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 181 [internal citations and quotations omitted].) While the UCL's scope is broad, it is not unlimited. [*7] In order to give businesses fair notice of what they can and cannot do, the California Supreme Court has cautioned that "[c]ourts may not simply impose their own notions of the day as to what is fair or unfair." (Id. at p. 182.) For this reason, the California Supreme Court developed a test when the plaintiff is commercial competitor whether the conduct or practice is "unfair." "When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word 'unfair' in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." (Id. at p. 187.) In articulating this test, the California Supreme Court was careful to emphasize that harm "to a competitor is not equivalent to [harm] to competition," and that "only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws." (Id. at p. 186.) "The UCL's purpose is to protect both consumers and competitors by promoting fair competition in commercial markets for goods and services." (Kasky v. Nike, Inc. (2002) 27 Cal.4th 939, 949; Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 180.)

Here, the SAC's allegations of Defendant's alleged [*8] use of Plaintiff's customers' names and addresses and Plaintiff's market information does not constitute an unfair conduct or practice. As previously explained in this court's ruling on the demurrer to the First Amended Complaint, "Plaintiff's allegations, if true, allege unfair acts in a more generalized moral sense. However, they fail to allege an unfair act or practice as set forth in Cel-Tech." (1/13/2019 Minute Order.) Plaintiff's allegations merely indicate harm to its commercial interests, rather than harm to competition. Accordingly, the demurrer to the second cause of action is sustained with 15 days leave to amend.

Breach of the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing (Third Cause of Action)

In the third cause of action, Plaintiff alleges a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Defendant argues that this claim is barred by the statute of limitations. Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 337, the statute of limitations for contract-related actions is four years. Defendant contends that because the Distribution Agreement was entered into in 2009, this claim is time-barred. However, Plaintiff appears to be alleging that Defendant unfairly interfered with Plaintiff's right to receive the benefits [*9] of the contract with activity in 2015. (SAC, 33-38, 95.) Accordingly, the statute of limitations does not bar this claim on its face.

To state a claim for a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, Plaintiff must allege all of the following: (1) that plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract; (2) that plaintiff did all, or substantially all of the significant things that the contract required it to do, or that it was excused from having to do those things; (3) that all conditions required for defendant's performance had occurred; (4) that defendant unfairly interfered with plaintiff's right to receive the benefits of the contract; and (5) that plaintiff was harmed from defendant's conduct. (CACI no. 325.) "The covenant of good faith and fair dealing, implied by law in every contract, exists merely to prevent one contracting party from unfairly frustrating the other party's right to receive the benefits of the agreement actually made. It cannot impose substantive duties or limits on the contracting parties beyond those incorporated in the specific terms of their agreement." (Guz v. Bechtel National, Ind. (2000) 24 Cal.4th 317, 349.) "With the exception of bad faith insurance cases, a breach of the covenant of good [*10] faith and fair dealing permits a recovery solely in contract." (Spinks v. Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1054 [internal citations omitted].)

Here, Plaintiff alleged that it entered into the Distribution Agreement with "Masimo International, SARL." (SAC, ¶ 17.) But really, the agreement was between Plaintiff and Defendant. (SAC, ¶ 24.) Plaintiff alleges that it performed all duties under the Distribution Agreement for more than five years. (SAC, ¶ 92.) But, Plaintiff failed to set forth facts to show that all conditions required for Defendant's performance had occurred. (See SAC, at pp. 14-15.) Accordingly, the demurrer as to the third cause of action is sustained with 15 days leave to amend.

The Clerk is ordered to give notice of the ruling.

CIVIL MINUTES — GENERAL

PROCEEDINGS (IN CHAMBERS): ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART COUNTERDEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS [42] [43]

Before the Court is Plaintiffs and Counterdefendants Vestis, LLC ("Vestis") and Ginve Modas SL's ("Ginve Modas") (collectively, "Counterdefendants") Motion to Dismiss Caramel Sales, Ltd. ("Caramel") and David Popeck's ("Popeck") First Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) ("Motion to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim" and "Caramel Amended Counterclaim"); and Counterdefendants' Motion to Dismiss TET APS ("TET") and Thomas Schmidt's ("Schmidt") First Amended Counterclaim ("Motion to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim" and "TET Amended Counterclaim").[1] (Dkt. 43). The Court finds this matter appropriate for resolution without oral argument. Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; L.R. 7-15. To the extent that the Motions to Dismiss discussed near-identical Counterclaims by Caramel & Popeck, and by [*3] TET & Schmidt, the Court addresses those Counterclaims together. Having reviewed the moving papers and considered the parties' arguments, the Court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss.

I. Background

A. Facts

1. Complaint

The following facts are drawn from Plaintiffs' Complaint and Counterclaimants' First Amended Counterclaims. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34); TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 35) (collectively "Amended Counterclaims"). This dispute involves fraud and breach of contract between parties involved in the apparel business. See generally Amended Counterclaims.

Plaintiffs Vestis and Ginve Modas are involved in wholesale and retail apparel business. Vestis is duly organized as a Nevada limited liability company and its principal place of business is in Las Vegas, Nevada. Complaint (Dkt. 1) ¶ 1. Vestis is registered to do business in California and has a place of business in Costa Mesa, California. Id. ¶ 1. Ginve Modas is a duly organized Spanish limited liability company, with its principal place of business in Barcelona, Spain. Id. ¶ 2. Ginve Modas does business in southern California. Id.

[1] Caramel, Popeck, TET, and Schmidt will be referred to collectively as "Counterclaimants" throughout this Order. Similarly, when the Court addresses near-identical Counterclaims by Caramel & Popeck, and TET & Schmidt, the two sets of Counterclaims will be referred to collectively as "Amended Counterclaims."

Defendant Caramel is a United Kingdom limited company [*4] with its principal place of business in Hertfordshire, England. Id. ¶ 3. The managing owner of Caramel is Defendant Popeck who resides in Mougins, France. Id. ¶ 5. Defendant TET is a Denmark limited company with its principal place of business in Karlslunde, Denmark. Id. ¶ 4. Defendant Schmidt is the managing owner of TET and resides in Karlsrunde, Denmark. Id. ¶ 6.

In 2017, Caramel and Popeck acted as a business broker to arrange a business transaction for Plaintiffs with TET and Schmidt. Id. ¶ 12. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants requested access to Plaintiffs' trade secrets and access to Plaintiffs' facilities, products, and information pertaining to Plaintiffs' business dealings with their product suppliers, Levi's and Quetico, LLC, in southern California. Id. Plaintiffs entered into Mutual Non-Disclosure Agreements with each of the Defendants, Caramel & Popeck, and TET & Schmidt; Plaintiffs allege these agreements have been breached by Defendants' wrongdoings. Id. ¶ 13. Plaintiffs allege that each of the Defendants acted as an agent, servant, partner or joint venture of each other. Id. ¶ 9. Popeck and Schmidt allegedly dominate and control the business affairs of their limited [*5] companies for their own personal benefit, and to avoid creditors as well as personal liability for their own wrongdoings. Id. ¶ 10. Further, Plaintiffs allege Popeck and Schmidt purportedly use the limited companies to personally interfere in the contractual and prospective business relationships of others. Id. Plaintiffs also believe Caramel is not adequately capitalized for the business it conducts. Id. ¶¶ 10, 11. Plaintiffs allege that Popeck and Schmidt use the limited liability funds and assets of Caramel and TET as their own, and that Popeck and Schmidt commingle their personal assets with those of the entity Defendants. Id. ¶ 11. Plaintiffs seek damages for Defendants' failure to keep trade secrets, diverting and taking away Plaintiffs' customers and suppliers, and damaging Plaintiffs' business and reputation overall. Id. ¶¶ 60-63.

2. Amended Counterclaims

Counterclaimants filed Counterclaims against Counterdefendants Vestis and Ginve Modas, as well as individual owners of Vestis and Ginve Modas, Serge Recchia ("Serge") and Morgan Recchia ("Morgan"). Morgan resides in California and his citizenship is unknown. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) ¶ 6. Counterclaimants allege [*6] that Morgan is the owner and/or alter ego of Vestis. Id. Counterdefendant Serge resides in Spain and his citizenship is unknown. Id. ¶ 8. Serge is the owner and/or alter ego of Ginve Modas. Id.

a. Burberry Polo Shirt Purchase Agreement

In addition to the claims shared in the Amended Counterclaims, Caramel and Popeck allege an additional breach of contract claim against Plaintiffs arising out of the purchase agreement of Burberry clothing. In July 2017, Caramel entered into an oral agreement, later memorialized in writing, to pay Counterdefendants €280,444.91 for the delivery of 20,163 pieces of clothing by August of 2017. Caramel Amended Counterclaim ¶ 13. The transaction consisted of Burberry brand polo shirts in specified styles and sizes. Id. According to Caramel, it delivered the full payment in July 2017, but Counterdefendants have failed to, and still refuse to, deliver the promised goods. Id. ¶ 14.

b. Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement

At the beginning of 2017, Schmidt and Popeck met with Serge and Morgan Recchia, the individual owners of Vestis and Ginve Modas; Serge and Morgan are father and son, and operate under the umbrella of the trade name "American Brands." Caramel Amended [*7] Counterclaim ¶ 16. At the meeting, Serge and Morgan allegedly proposed to Counterclaimants that Ginve Modas and Vestis would sell certain products to TET and Schmidt, in partnership with Caramel and Popeck. Id. ¶ 17. Ginve Modas and Vestis promised to arrange the purchase in the United States of 180,000 units of Levi's jeans for the subsequent sale of the products in the European Economic Community, under the express authorization of Levi's. Id. Serge and Morgan represented that the proposed sale was possible due to their good relationship with Levi's USA, which would facilitate the authorization to buy and sell Levi's brand jeans. Id. The Levi's jeans stock would be purchased from Hybrid, an American licensee of Levi's in the United States. Id. ¶ 18. Such purchase would be made with the prior authorization of Levi Strauss & Co, given that Vestis and Ginve Modas had a close relationship with Mr. Harmon Kirsch, the Vice President at Levi Strauss & Co. Id.

Counterdefendants assured TET and Caramel that Levi Strauss & Co had authorized the sale of the goods, but stated that the authorization in writing would not be sent until the invoice was issued and the money transferred for the purchase [*8] of the goods. Id. ¶ 19. Popeck and Caramel would act as the partners of TET and Schmidt in relation to the Counterdefendants' sales to Counterclaimants. Id. ¶ 20. TET and Schmidt agreed to participate in a partnership with Popeck and Caramel in connection to the transaction alleged above, and equally share in the profits and debts. Id. In reliance on the assurances and directions provided by Counterdefendants, Schmidt and TET made five transfers for a total amount of € 1,116,513 to Ginve as payment for the first portion of the 180,000 units, representing approximately 63,000 of those units. Id. ¶ 22. As of the opening of the currency market on January 9, 2019, the value of € 1,116,513 was $1,277,402.52 based on the rate of 1.1441 Euros to 1 U.S. Dollar. Id.

On July 8, 2017, once the money had been transferred to Ginve, Morgan sent an email and attached a letter purportedly authorized by Mr. Harmon Kirsch of Levi Strauss & Co., allowing the export of Levi's jeans for sale in Europe. Id. ¶ 23. According to Counterdefendants, the jeans would initially be acquired by Vestis, (controlled by Morgan) who would sell them to Ginve (controlled by Morgan's father, Serge), and TET would receive [*9] the jeans via Ginve. Id. ¶ 23.

In August 2017, Counterdefendants informed TET and Caramel that German customs authorities had blocked the three containers with the first shipment of Levi's jeans at the request of Levi's Europe, which refused to commercialize the goods in Europe despite Counterdefendants' assurances that they had obtained Levi's USA's authorization to do so. Id. ¶ 24. From that time forward, Counterdefendants sent various documents purporting to inform TET and Caramel about steps taken to negotiate with the German customs authorities to unblock the merchandise and deliver the goods to TET. Id. ¶ 25. The efforts did not result in the release of the goods, and the goods were never delivered to either of the Counterclaimants. Id. ¶ 26.

Instead, in late September 2017, Counterclaimants became aware of a letter dated and signed by Harmon Kirsch on September 14, 2017, stating that the "European office" of Levi's would not allow the sale of the goods purchased from Counterdefendants to be sold in Europe. Id. ¶ 27. After further unproductive discussions between the parties, Counterclaimants received a letter from Ginve Modas on November 29, 2017, stating that Counterdefendants [*10] would not be able to deliver the products previously promised because they had not obtained the final authorization from Levi's Europe. Id. ¶ 28. The letter also stated that in order to "fully reimburse [the] funds," Counterdefendants would have to first obtain permission to sell the goods in another region so that [Caramel and TET] could "sell[] the products and settle your open balances." Id. According to Counterdefendants, the approximately 63,000 pairs of Levi's jeans stopped at German customs were available to be shipped to North and Central Africa for sale there, if the Counterclaimants could obtain a distribution agreement to sell there. Id. ¶ 29.

But Counterclaimants state that there never had been any Levi's jeans that Counterdefendants had shipped to Germany. Id. ¶ 30. Instead, Counterdefendants had provided false shipping documents and had made false representations about the supposed goods. Id. Unaware of the truth and led on by Counterdefendants' continuing false representations in regards to the shipment, Counterclaimants coordinated together over several months trying to obtain a distribution agreement in North Africa and to establish and work with clients in the region [*11] in relation to the Levi's jeans. Id. ¶ 31. These were time spent that would otherwise have been spent on servicing their clients, and thus caused injury to Counterclaimants and their businesses. Id. Counterdefendants had never intended to include Counterclaimants in a partnership for sale of Levi's jeans in Africa, and had instead already appointed a different person to runs sales in Africa. Id. ¶ 32.

Suspecting fraudulent behavior by Counterdefendants, Counterclaimants grew suspicious; accordingly, Counterclaimants carried out limited investigations to determine if the facts would concern their concerns. Id. ¶ 33. Popeck contacted Mr. Ignacio Parra, owner and manager of the logistics company, Tempest Logistics, to discern the whereabouts of the merchandise that Counterdefendants claimed had been transported and blocked in. Id. Mr. Parra came into contact with Blanca Lopez of the logistics company, ARCC LOGISTIC SA, a company that appears as an issuer in the bill of lading delivered by the Counterdefendants. Through Lopez, Parra confirmed that this bill of lading was false and that the merchandise had never even been sent by the Counterdefendants. Id. ¶ 34.

A representative of Counterclaimants [*12] also made contact with Mr. Ram Fatingan of Ultra Cargo Consultancy BC, a person who was in contact with Ginve, to inquire about the purported customs blockade of the goods, because the documentary records indicated that the company was an intervener in the transport of the goods. Id. ¶ 35. Mr. Fatingan confirmed to a Spanish counsel for Counterclaimants that everything promised by Counterdefendants was likely false, because neither his company nor ARC Air Logistics, an entity identified on the paper supplied by Counterdefendants, were aware of the shipment in question. Id. ¶ 36. Fatingan stated the shipment had likely not been made, the bill of lading forwarded by Counterdefendants was false (and as he pointed, printed on an air waybill and not the proper form for maritime transport), his company had never been in contact with Counterdefendants for the goods at issue, and the emails sent by Serge on behalf of the Counterdefendants contained falsehoods. Id.

Faced with the new information, Counterclaimants commissioned a handwriting expert to study the signatures that Counterdefendants had sent of Mr. Harmon Kirsch on the documents relevant to the goods at issue: (1) the letter purportedly [*13] from Mr. Kirsch stating that the company had authorized the sale of the goods in European territory; and (2) a second letter from Mr. Kirsch which referred to the blockade of goods in Germany as the basis of Levi's Europe's refusal to authorize the sale in European territory. Id. ¶ 37. The handwriting expert found that at least one of the two signatures was not original because it was transferred to the document through a reproduction system of photomechanical or computer origin, and reported those findings to the Counterclaimants. Id. ¶ 38.

Counterclaimants then made multiple demands asking for a return of the funds they had transferred to Counterdefendants as part of the Levi's Jeans Agreement. Id. ¶ 39. Counterdefendants have not returned any portion of the € 1,116,513 paid to them, nor have any of the 180,000 pairs of Levi's jeans been delivered. Id. ¶ 40. Prior to the activities described in this pleading, Counterclaimants had established an excellent reputation in the clothing industry in Europe over many years. Id. ¶ 41. As a result of this incident, Counterclaimants suffered significant reputational injury in their industry, since the goods at issue could not be resold to vendors [*14] in Europe. Due to Counterdefendants' contractual breach, Counterclaimants were forced to cancel agreements they had entered with other parties to purchase the goods Counterdefendants had promised to deliver. Id. The amount of the reputational injury is under investigation, but the amount of injury is likely to be in excess of the statutory minimum for diversity jurisdiction in this Court, above and beyond the profits lost from those cancelled sales. Id.

B. Procedural History

On September 20, 2018, Plaintiffs Vestis and Ginve Modas initiated the instant action in the Superior Court of Orange County (Dkt. 1). Plaintiffs assert the following seven claims for: (1) breach of written contract against Defendants Caramel, Popeck, and Does 1-10; (2) breach of written contract against Defendants Tet APS, Schmidt, and Does 11-20; (3) intentional misrepresentation against all Defendants; (4) intentional interference with prospective economic advantage against all Defendants; (5) intentional interference with contractual relationships against all Defendants; (6) defamation and libel against all Defendants; and (7) violation of the Uniform Trade Secrets Act pursuant to Civil Code § 3426.3 against all Defendants. [*15] Compl. ¶¶ 14-36. Plaintiffs seek general, special, and consequential damages of $1 million with respect to the first and second claims; $30 million of general, special, and consequential damages plus punitive and exemplary damages as for the third through seventh claims; and reasonable attorneys' fees, and prejudgment fees. Id. at 11-12.

On December 19, 2018, Defendants removed the action to this Court (Dkt. 1). On January 15, 2019, Defendants answered the Complaints (Dkt. 10) (Dkt. 11) and filed Counterclaims against Counterdefendants Vestis, Ginve Modas, Morgan Recchia, and Recchia Serge (Dkt. 12) (Dkt. 15). On February 25, 2019, Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck filed a First Amended Counterclaim ("Caramel Amended Counterclaim") (Dkt. 34) and Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt filed a First Amended Counterclaim ("TET Amended Counterclaim") (Dkt. 35). On March 18, 2019, Plaintiffs/Counterdefendants filed the instant Motion to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) and Motion to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43). On April 8, 2019, Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck opposed ("Caramel Opposition") (Dkt. 46), and Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt opposed ("TET Opposition") (Dkt. [*16] 47). On April 15, 2019, Plaintiffs/Counterdefendants replied (Dkt. 48) ("Reply").

Counterclaimants assert thirteen claims against Counterdefendants for: (1) breach of contract; (2) breach of implied-in-law contract; (3) quantum meruit; (4) conversion and constructive trust; (5) money had and received; (6) for accounting; (7) intentional interference with prospective economic advantage; (8) fraud; (9) aiding and abetting fraud; (10) negligent misrepresentation; (11) aiding and abetting negligent misrepresentation; (12) violation of the Unfair Business Practices under California law pursuant to Business and Professions Code §§ 17200, et seq.; and (13) violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961, et seq. in connection to the Jeans Agreement. TET Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 35) ¶¶ 39-123; Caramel Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 34) ¶¶ 58-142. Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck additionally assert three claims against Counterdefendants for (1) breach of contract, (2) breach of implied-in-law contract, and (3) quantum meruit in connection to the Burberry Agreement. Caramel Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 34) ¶¶ 42-57.

Counterclaimants seek judgment to be rendered jointly and severally [*17] against each Counterdefendant for damages, restitution, treble damages, exemplary and punitive damages, injunctive relief, and prejudgment interest. TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 35) at 24-25; Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) at 27-28.

II. Legal Standard

A. Motion to Dismiss

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a complaint must be dismissed when a plaintiff's allegations fail to set forth a set of facts that, if true, would entitle the complainant to relief. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (holding that a claim must be facially plausible in order to survive a motion to dismiss). The pleadings must raise the right to relief beyond the speculative level; a plaintiff must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). On a motion to dismiss, a court accepts as true a plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations and construes all factual inferences in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Manzarek v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 519 F.3d 1025, 1031 (9th Cir. 2008). A court is not required to accept as true legal conclusions couched as factual allegations. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

In evaluating a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, review is ordinarily limited to the contents of the complaint and material properly submitted with the complaint. Van Buskirk v. Cable News Network, Inc., 284 F.3d 977, 980 (9th Cir. 2002); Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n.19 (9th Cir. 1990). Under the incorporation [*18] by reference doctrine, the court may also consider documents "whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading." Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled on other grounds by 307 F.3d 1119, 1121 (9th Cir. 2002); see also United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir. 2003).

III. Discussion

Counterdefendants move to dismiss the entirety of the counterclaims on the grounds that: (1) Counterclaimants are not the real parties in interest;[2] (2) the entire amended counterclaim is defective because it does not set forth which counterclaimant is asserting each claim;[3] (3) the breach of contract, breach of implied contract, and quantum meruit claims in regards to the Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement fail to state claims; (4) the claims for conversion and constructive trust fail to state claims; (5) the claims for monies had and received and action for accounting fail to state claims; (6) the cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage fails to state a claim; (7) the causes of action for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and aiding and abetting fail to state claims; (8) the cause of action for unfair business practices fails to state a claim; and (9) the cause of action for RICO fails [*19] to state a claim. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 12-35; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) at 12-34.

Counterdefendants additionally move to dismiss Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's claims for breach of contract, breach of implied contract, and quantum meruit claims with regards to the Burberry Polo Shirt Purchase Agreement for failure to state claims. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 13-16; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) at 13-15.

A. Breach of Contract Claims

1. Burberry Polo Shirt Oral Purchase Agreement

Counterdefendants move to dismiss Counterclaimants Caramel/Popeck's First through Third Claims for Breach of Contract, Breach of Implied Contract, and Quantum Meruit for failure to state claims in connection to the Burberry Purchase Agreement. Counterdefendants argue that a breach of oral contract with regards to the Burberry Purchase Agreement for Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's first through third claims cannot be asserted because the two-year statute of limitations under California law bars these claims. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) [*20] at 13-14; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) at 12-14. Counterclaimants state they are bringing a breach of contract claim for "oral agreement(s), confirmed in writing," which are not written agreements, absent any argument addressing the statute of limitations for oral contracts. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 10-11; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 9-11.

Under California law, the statute of limitations for breach of an oral contract is two years. Zecos v. Nicholas-Applegate Capital Mgmt., 42 Fed. Appx. 31, 31-32 (9th Cir. 2002); Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 339. A cause of action for a breach of an oral contract accrues at the time of the breach, i.e., when the party charged with the duty to perform under the contract fails to perform. Zecos, 42 Fed. Appx. at 32 (citing Cochran v. Cochran, 56 Cal. App. 4th 1115. 1124, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 337 (1997).

Viewing the evidence presented in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, the breach of the oral contract with respect to the Burberry Purchase Agreement is not barred by the two-year statute of limitations. Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck allege that they entered into an oral contract with Counterdefendants in or about July of 2017. Caramel Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 34) ¶ 13. Counterclaimants allege they performed by paying for the goods in July 2017, yet Counterdefendants failed and refused to deliver the promised goods. Id. ¶ 14. [*21] Due to Counterdefendants' failure to deliver the goods as promised, Counterclaimants allege that they were unable to sell the products at issue to third parties, causing them harm in the excess of € 455,550.41. Id. ¶ 47. The breach of the oral agreement occurred in or around July 2017, and the cause of action started to accrue when the breach occurred. As a result, the statute of limitations does not terminate until July 2019. Thus, because Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck filed the instant counterclaims on January 15, 2019, well within the time limit proscribed by California law on oral contracts, they are not barred from bringing the breach of contract claim for the Burberry Purchase Agreement.

[2] The Court notes that, while individual Defendants/Counterclaimants Popeck and Schmidt are not real parties in interest to the dispute because joint venturers with ownership interests may not sue for damage to the joint venture, *Bekele v. Ford, No. C11-01640 WHA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108062, 2011 WL 4368566 at 4 (Sept. 17, 2011); Cal. Corp. Code § 1620, the joint venture entities, Caramel and TET, have been correctly identified as real parties in interest. Despite Counterclaimants' error in naming real parties to the dispute, the Court does not find that this constitutes a ground for dismissal absent any allegation that Counterdefendants have been prejudiced by the error entered here. Thus, the Court declines to dismiss the counterclaims on the basis that Counterclaimants are not the real parties in interest.

[3] This claim will be dismissed because the issue does not exist. The causes of actions in the counterclaims are being pursued by all the parties involved in the counterclaim. See generally Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 34) (Dkt. 35).

Accordingly, Counterdefendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck' First through Third Claims for Breach of Contract, Breach of Implied Contract, and Quantum Meruit in connection to the Burberry Agreement is DENIED.

2. Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement

Counterdefendants move to dismiss Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's fourth through sixth claims and TET and Schmidt's first through third claims for Breach of Contract, Breach of Implied Contract, and Quantum Meruit [*22] fail to state claims in connection to the Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement. Counterdefendants assert that Counterclaimants have not sufficiently pleaded facts to make a claim because if a written instrument is the foundation of a cause of action, it must be pleaded by attaching a copy of the contract as an exhibit and incorporating it by proper reference. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 13-16; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) 12-15. Counterdefendants argue that the sales transaction for the jeans was an exchange between Counterdefendants and TET and Schmidt, and no allegation has been made as to whether a contract exists between Counterdefendants and Caramel and Popeck; therefore, standing has not been established for Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck. Id. Counterclaimants contend that the relevant material elements for a breach of contract claim has been pleaded. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 10-11; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 9-11. As a result, other breach of contract related claims such as the breach of implied in law contract and quantum meruit should not be dismissed. Id.

Under California law, "the essential elements for a contract are (1) [*23] "[p]arties capable of contracting;" (2) "[t]heir consent;" (3) "[a] lawful object;" and (4) "[s]ufficient cause or consideration."' United States ex rel. Oliver v. Parsons Co., 195 F.3d 457, 462 (9th Cir. 1999) (quoting Cal. Civ. Code § 1550). The standard elements of a claim for breach of contract are: "(1) the contract, (2) plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) defendant's breach, and (4) damage to plaintiff therefrom." Wall Street Network, Ltd. v. New York Times Co., 164 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 1178 (2008). If a written instrument is the foundation of a cause of action, "it may be pleaded in haec verba by attaching a copy as an exhibit and incorporating it by proper reference." Saldate v. Wilshire Credit Corp., 268 F.R.D. 87, 104 (E.D. Cal 2010) (citing Byrne v. Harvey, 211 Cal. App. 2d 92, 103, 27 Cal. Rptr. 110 (1962). By asserting claims based upon a contract in writing, "and it affirmatively appears that all the terms of the contract are not set forth in hoc verba, nor stated in their legal effect, but that a portion which may be material has been omitted, the complaint is insufficient." Gilmore v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co., 55 Cal. 123, 124 (1880).

a. Breach of Contract Claims

Here, the Court finds that Counterclaimants have sufficiently pleaded facts to establish a breach of contract claim in connection to the Levi's Jeans Agreement. As noted above, Counterclaimants Caramel and TET are joint venture entities and are correctly identified as real parties in interest in the counterclaims. Therefore, Caramel has standing to bring this [*24] breach of contract claim along with Counterclaimant TET.

Moreover, the essential elements for a contract are sufficiently alleged. Caramel and TET willingly entered into the contract with Counterdefendants for the lawful object of purchasing 180,000 total units of Levi's brand jeans for sale in the European Economic Community. Caramel Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 34) ¶ 17. The parties agreed to make the first transaction in July 2017, with TET delivering €1,116,513 to Ginve Modas as payment for approximately 63,000 units of Levi's jeans. Id. ¶¶ 22-23. The contract was breached when Counterdefendants failed to deliver the goods as promised. Lastly, Counterclaimants seek damages in excess of €1,116,513 for the injury suffered. Id. ¶ 63.

With regards to the breach of implied contract and quantum meruit claims, Plaintiff must allege that there was a contract or promise between the parties to pay for the goods. See Unichappell Music, Inc. v. Modrock Production, Inc., No. CV 14-2382 DDP, 2015 WL 546059, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 10, 2015) (holding a complaint must include the essential terms or legal effect of the contract sufficient to provide the defendant with notice of the contract allegedly [*25] breached). Here, Counterclaimants sufficiently established that there was a contract that Counterdefendants breached by failing to deliver the goods.

Thus, the Court DENIES the Motion to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt's First through Third Claims for Breach of Contract, Breach of Implied Contract, and quantum meruit in connection to the Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement. The Court also DENIES the Motion to Dismiss as to Caramel and Popeck's Fourth through Sixth Claims for Breach of Contract, Breach of Implied Contract, and Quantum Meruit in connection to the Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement.

C. Conversion

Counterdefendants move to dismiss Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's seventh claim and TET and Schmidt's fourth claim for conversion. Counterdefendants assert that California law does not recognize a conversion claim if it is based on a breach of contract claim and that the failure to pay money owed does not constitute conversion. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 42) at 17; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaims (Dkt. 43) 16-17. Counterclaimants respond that they are not seeking payment of money from Counterdefendants, but instead rest their conversion [*26] claim on the fact that they were induced by Counterdefendants' fraudulent acts to pay money to them. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 11-12; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 11-12. As such, there is no bar to recovery of money obtained by fraud under a conversion claim. Id.

Conversion is the wrongful exercise of dominion over the property of another. Oakdale Vill. Grp. v. Fong, 43 Cal. App. 4th 539, 543-44, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810 (1996). Under California law, the elements of conversion are: (1) a plaintiff's ownership or right to possession of the property, (2) the defendant's conversion by a wrongful act, and (3) damages. Welco Elec., Inc. v. Mora, 223 Cal. App. 4th 202, 208, 166 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 (2014). A mere contractual right to payment does not entitle the plaintiff to seek immediate possession as a cause of action for the tort of conversion. In re Bailey, 197 F.3d 997, 1000 (9th Cir. 1999); Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Zerin, 53 Cal. App. 4th 445, 452, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 (1997). However, a tortious breach of contract may be found when "the breach is accompanied by a traditional common law tort, such as fraud or conversion." Robinson Helicopter Co., Inc. v. Dana Corp., 34 Cal. 4th 979, 990, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 (2004). California courts have permitted tort damages in contract cases where "the plaintiff was fraudulently induced to enter the contract." *Aqua Connect v. Code Rebel, LLC, No. CV 11-05764 RSWL (MANx), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103078, 2013 WL 3820544, 4 (C.D. Cal. July 23, 2013).

Here, Counterclaimants sufficiently plead a conversion claim, by alleging that Counterdefendants caused fraudulent inducement such that Counterclaimants entered into a contract and paid money to [*27] Counterdefendants. Pursuant to the Levi's Jeans Agreement formed between Counterclaimants and Counterdefendants, TET transferred funds totaling €1,396,957.91 to Ginve Modas in expectation of the delivery of goods. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) ¶¶ 22-23. Not only did Counterdefendants fail to deliver the goods, they did not return the money owed to Counterclaimants despite multiple demands. Id. ¶¶ 39-40. Therefore, Counterclaimants have sufficiently alleged facts demonstrating that Counterdefendants acted in bad faith and possibly misappropriated and converted those monies. A tortious breach of contract is sufficiently alleged due to the fraudulent nature of the contractual breach.

Thus, Counterclaimants have sufficiently stated a claim for conversion. The Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Seventh Claim for Conversion, and Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt's Fourth Claim for Conversion, are DENIED.

D. Money Had & Received, and Accounting

Counterdefendants move to dismiss Caramel's eighth claim and TET's fifth claim for money had & received, and as well as Caramel's ninth claim and TET's sixth claim for accounting. Counterdefendants assert, because the [*28] payment for Levi's Jeans were paid by Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt, Counterclaimants are not entitled to assert the money had & received claims. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 17-19; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) 17-18. Counterclaimants contend that the money had and received claim corresponds to the issue of standing, and that as joint venturers, all of the Counterclaimants are entitled to sue for injuries suffered. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 12-13; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 12-13. Moreover, a claim for accounting is warranted under California law because the elements required to meet the action for accounting are extremely liberal. Id.

A money had and received cause of action may be brought "wherever one person has received money which belongs to another, and which in equity and good conscience, ... should be returned." Mains v. City Title Ins. Co., 34 Cal. 2d 580, 586, 212 P.2d 873 (1949) (internal citations omitted). A cause of action for money had and received is stated if it is alleged that "the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum for money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff." Avidor v. Sutter's Place, Inc., 212 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1454, 151 Cal. Rptr. 3d 804 (2013). To bring a claim for accounting, a plaintiff must show (1) that a relationship [*29] exists between the plaintiff and defendant that requires an accounting; and (2) that some balance is due to the plaintiff that can only be ascertained by an accounting. *See Brosious v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., No. 2:15-CV-00047-KJM, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117957, 2015 WL 5173063, at 3 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 2, 2015) (citing Teselle v. McLoughlin, 173 Cal. App. 4th 156, 179, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 (2009)).

Here, the Court finds that Counterclaimants sufficiently pleaded the claims for money had & received, and accounting. As noted above, joint venture entities TET and Caramel are entitled to sue for injuries as real parties in interest. Further, with regards to the money had and received claim, Counterclaimants assert that Counterdefendants received money that was intended to be used for the benefit of Counterclaimants. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) ¶ 81. However, Counterclaimants allege that sum of money was neither used for the benefit of Counterclaimants nor was the money owed returned, and Counterclaimants sufficiently seek damages as such. Id. ¶¶ 82-83. Furthermore, the accounting claim has been sufficiently alleged; Counterclaimants state that they were in a contractual relationship with Counterdefendants for the purchase of Levi's jeans, and they seek a balance of €1,396,957.91, which can only be ascertained by an accounting. Teselle, 173 Cal. App. 4th at 179. Therefore, [*30] Counterclaimants have sufficiently pleaded the elements of the money had & received claim, and the accounting claim.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Counterdefendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Eighth Claim for Money Had & Received, and Ninth Claims for Accounting. The Court DENIES Counterdefendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt's Fifth Claim for Money Had & Received, and Sixth Claim for Accounting.

E. Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

Counterdefendants move to dismiss Caramel and Popeck's tenth claim and TET and Schmidt's seventh claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, arguing the interference allegations are conclusory and nonspecific with respect to the identifies of lost business customers and a specific opportunity lost. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 19-20; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) 18-20. Counterclaimants contend that the facts have been sufficiently pleaded to notify Counterdefendants of the basis for the claims. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 13-14; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 13-14. Moreover, the information sought [*31] is confidential information that Counterclaimants intend to reveal only under the protection of the Stipulated Protective Order already entered in this case. Id.

The elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are: "(1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant." Westside Ctr. Assoc. v. Safeway Stores 23, Inc., 42 Cal. App. 4th 507, 521-522, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 (1996). A plaintiff must plead and prove that the defendant not only knowingly interfered with the plaintiff's expectancy, but engaged in conduct that was wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself." See Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 11 Cal. 4th 376, 393-94, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436, 902 P.2d 740 (1995). The intent requirement is met by pleading specific intent, but "plaintiff may alternately plead that the defendant knew that the interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of its action." Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1159, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003).

Here, Counterclaimants sufficiently pled the elements of intentional interference with [*32] prospective economic advantage. Counterclaimants allege that they are established apparel businesses that have developed valuable and profitable ongoing businesses and relationships with clients who promise future economic benefit. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) ¶ 89. Counterclaimants also allege Counterdefendants had knowledge that Counterclaimants had long been in this business and had formed business relationships with valuable customers. Id. Moreover, Counterclaimants validly assert that their intent was to keep the identity of the third parties confidential since they were sensitive business information, and would only reveal them under the Stipulated Protective Order, which was granted on March 14, 2019. See Stipulated Protective Order (Dkt. 41).

Additionally, Counterclaimants sufficiently pleaded Counterdefendants knew that interference in Counterclaimants' economic relationship with their clients "was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of its action" by failing and refusing to deliver the 180,000 Levi's jeans previously promised. Korea Supply Co., 29 Cal. 4th at 1159. Counterclaimants alleged that their expected business and corresponding business relationships were disturbed, and that [*33] they not only lost profit that would have been derived from the sales of the Levi's and Burberry goods, but also suffered reputational harm as a result of the contractual breach. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) ¶ 93. Therefore, Counterclaimants have sufficiently pleaded the elements of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

Accordingly, the Court declines to dismiss Counterclaimants' claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Caramel and Popeck's Tenth Claim, and as to TET and Schmidt's Seventh Claim for Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage, is DENIED.

F. Fraud Claims

Counterdefendants move to dismiss Caramel and Popeck's eleventh through fourteenth claims and TET and Schmidt's eighth through eleventh claims (i.e. claims for fraud, aiding and abetting fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and aiding and abetting negligent misrepresentation). According to Counterdefendants, there are at least three fundamental defects with the fraud claims: (1) fraud claims are barred by the economic loss rule; (2) the fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims have been alleged [*34] with requisite specificity under statutory law and case law; and (3) a party cannot aid and abet himself to commit a tort. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 21-23; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) at 20-23.

Counterclaimants respond that the economic loss rule does not bar claims for fraudulent inducement, nor are fraud claims for actions taken after the contract is entered into barred, which can cause the complaining party additional injury beyond the injuries caused by the breach of the purported contract. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 14-16; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 14-15.

To establish a claim for fraud under California law, a plaintiff must allege "(a) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (b) knowledge of falsity (or 'scienter'); (c) intent to defraud; (d) justifiable reliance; and (e) resulting damages. Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1126 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Engalla v. Permanente Med. Grp., Inc., 15 Cal. 4th 951, 974, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 (1997). Rule 9(b)'s particularity standard requires "an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representation, as well as the identifies of the parties to the misrepresentation." Swartz v. KPMG, 476 F.3d 756, 763 (9th Cir. 2007); Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

1. Economic Loss Rule

Counterdefendants argue that fraud claims are barred by the economic loss rule, while Counterclaimants [*35] claim that fraudulent inducement is a well-recognized exception to the rule. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) at 20-21; Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) 14-15.

California's economic loss doctrine "requires a purchaser to recover in contract for purely economic loss due to disappointed expectations, unless he can demonstrate harm above and beyond a broken contractual promise." Robinson Helicopter Co., Inc. v. Dana Corp., 34 Cal. 4th 979, 988, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 (2004). To maintain a fraud claim based on the same factual allegations as a breach of contract claim, a plaintiff must show that "the duty that gives rise to tort liability is either completely independent of the contract or arises from conduct which is both intentional and intended to harm." Id. at 989-90. Therefore, fraudulent inducement is an exception to the economic loss rule. See Lazar v. Super. Ct., 12 Cal. 4th 631, 645, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (1996) ("It has long been the rule that where a contract is secured by fraudulent representations, the injured party may elect to affirm the contract and sue for the fraud.").

Here, the economic loss rule does not bar Counterclaimants' fraud claims. Counterdefendants allegedly represented to Counterclaimants that they had received authorization to resale the Levi's Jeans in the European Economic Community, by sending an email with a purported [*36] authorization from Mr. Harmon Kirsch, the Vice President at Levi Strauss & Co, allowing the export of the Levi's jeans to the E.U. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) ¶ 23. Counterdefendants also represented that the approximately 63,000 pairs of Levi's brand jeans that had been shipped to the E.U. were stopped at German customs, the steps taken to get the German customs authorities to unblock the merchandise were ultimately unsuccessful, and that Mr. Kirsch had sent a second letter claiming that the European office of Levi's does not permit the sale of the goods in Europe. Id. ¶¶ 24-27. Counterclaimants also argue that Counterdefendants had provided false shipping documents and made false representations about those supposed goods, having conducted internal investigations and obtained multiple witnesses claiming that everything promised by Counterdefendants were likely false. Id. ¶¶ 33-36. Counterclaimants even commissioned a handwriting expert to investigate the signatures of Mr. Harmon Kirsch in the letters he purportedly emailed to Counterclaimants, allegedly discovering that at least one of the two signatures is not original because the signature had been transferred to the [*37] document by a reproduction system of photomechanical or computer origin. Id. ¶¶ 37-38. Counterclaimants have sufficiently pleaded Counterdefendants' knowledge of falsity, intent to defraud, and Counterclaimants' justifiable reliance on the misrepresentation. Lastly, Counterclaimants claim damages of €1,116,513 for money paid for the promised Levi's jeans and never returned. Because fraudulent inducement is an exception to the economic loss rule, Counterclaimants have sufficiently pleaded the fraud elements to defeat a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal. Lazar, 12 Cal. 4th at 645.

Therefore, the Court declines to dismiss Counterclaimants' fraud claims under the economic loss rule.

2. Requisite Specificity to Allege Fraud Claims

Viewing the facts specifically alleged, the Court finds that Counterclaimants sufficiently plead facts that meet the higher pleading standard under Rule 9(b). Pursuant to Rule 9(b)'s particularity standard requiring "an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representation, as well as the identifies of the parties to the misrepresentation," Counterclaimants sufficiently alleged details of Counterdefendants' many attempts to mislead and defraud the Counterclaimants. Swartz, 476 F.3d at 763.

Accordingly, the Court declines to dismiss [*38] Counterclaimants' fraud claims, which meet the higher pleading standard under Rule 9(b). Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

3. Sufficiency of the Aiding and Abetting Claim

Counterdefendants move to dismiss the aiding and abetting claim because a party cannot aid and abet himself to commit a tort. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) at 23. Counterclaimants clarify their position, which is that they are accusing Counterdefendants Vestis and Ginve Modas, as well as individual owners Morgan and Serge Recchia, of aiding and abetting each other. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 14-16; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 14-15. California law finds liability for aiding and abetting the commission of an intentional tort in two different ways: if a defendant (1) "knows the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other to so act," or (2) "gives substantial assistance to the other in accomplishing a tortious result and the [entity]'s own conduct, separately considered, constitutes a breach of duty to the third person." *Seaman v. Sedgwick, LLP, No. 11-664, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9917, 2012 WL 254046, at 7 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2012) (quoting Casey v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 127 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1144, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 401 (2005)). Mere allegation that a defendant had "vague suspicion of wrongdoing" or knew of "wrongful or illegal conduct...d[o] not constitute sufficient pleading" [*39] that the defendant had "actual knowledge." In re First Alliance Mortgage Co., 471 F.3d 977, 993 n.4. Aiding and abetting implies an intentional participation with knowledge of the object to be attained. Lomita Land Water Co. v. Robinson, 154 Cal. 36, 47, 97 P. 10 (1908).

Here, Counterclaimants sufficiently pled facts regarding the aiding and abetting claim. Counterclaimants assert that all the Counterdefendants named in the counterclaims are liable for aiding and abetting the commission of an intentional tort because each party knew of the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and substantially assisted or encouraged each other to act so. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 16. The facts alleged show that Counterdefendants had more than a "vague suspicion of wrongdoing" and rise to the level of "actual knowledge," considering that Ginve Modas and Vestis were business partners and both parties entered into the contracts at issue in this dispute. In re First Alliance Mortgage Co., 471 F.3d at 993 n.4.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES the Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Eleventh through Fourteenth Claims, and as to TET and Schmidt's Eighth through Eleventh Claims, for Fraud, Aiding and Abetting Fraud, Negligent Misrepresentation, and Aiding and Abetting Negligent Misrepresentation.

G. Unfair Business Practices

Counterdefendants move to [*40] dismiss Caramel and Popeck's fifteenth claim and TET and Schmidt's twelth claim for violation of the Unfair Business Practices under California's Business and Professions Code § 17200. Counterdefendants state that, absent a showing that the public is likely to be deceived, the claims for violation of the Unfair Business Practices has not been sufficiently alleged. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 24-25; Mot. to Dismiss TET Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 43) 23-24. Counterclaimants argue the requisite elements have been alleged. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 16-17; TET Opp'n (Dkt. 47) at 16.

California's statutory unfair competition laws broadly prohibit unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent business acts. Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAC Corp., 517 F.3d 1137, 1151 (9th Cir. 2008). Unlawful acts are "anything that can properly be called a business practice" and is forbidden by law. Nat'l Rural Telecomm., Co-op v. DIRECTV, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 2d 1059, 1074 & n.22 (C.D. Cal. 2003). Unfair acts among competitors refer to conduct that violates antitrust law, or the spirit or policy of those laws "because its effects are comparable to or at the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 191, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Finally, fraudulent acts are ones where members of the public are likely to be deceived. Sybersound Records, 517 F.3d at 1152. Unless the challenged conduct "targets a particular disadvantaged or [*41] vulnerable group, it is judged by the effect it would have on a reasonable consumer." Aron v. U-Haul Co. of Cal., 143 Cal. App. 4th 796, 806, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 555

(2006). A breach of contract may form the predicate for a section 17200 claim, provided that the claim constitutes conduct that is unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent. Id.

Here Counterclaimants cannot sufficiently state a claim for unfair business practices claim pursuant to California Business and Professions Code § 17200 et seq. Counterclaimants bring this claim under statutes prohibiting unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent business acts, arguing that Counterdefendants' fraudulent acts led to the breach of contracts for the Burberry Agreement and the Levi's Jeans Agreement. However, there are insufficient allegations demonstrating that Counterdefendants' fraudulent business conduct was directed at members of the public likely to be deceived or that the conduct "judged by the effect it would have on a reasonable consumer" is unlawful or fraudulent. Aron, 143 Cal. App. 4th at 806. Counterclaimants are not entitled to the protection of this prong of § 17200, as they are not members of the public or consumers entitled to such protection. See Watson Lab., Inc. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F. Supp. 2d 1099, 1121 (C.D. Cal 2001). One competitor may not proceed against another under the fraudulent prong of § 17200. Id. Moreover, it is not the case that "fraudulent business acts are separately actionable by business [*42] competitors absent a showing that the public, rather than merely the plaintiff, is likely to be deceived." Id.

Thus, the Court GRANTS WITH PREJUDICE Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Fifteenth Claim, and as to TET and Schmidt's Twelve Claim for violation of the California Unfair Business Practices pursuant to California's Business and Professions Code § 17200.

H. RICO Claims

Counterdefendants move to dismiss the RICO cause of action arising under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1964(c) under Caramel and Popeck's sixteenth claim and TET and Schmidt's thirteenth claim. Mot. to Dismiss Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 42) at 25. Counterclaimants contend that Counterdefendants provide no analysis of the actual allegations and therefore the RICO claim should not be dismissed. Caramel Opp'n (Dkt. 46) at 17.

RICO provides a private right of action for "[a]ny person injured in his business or property" by a RICO violation. 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). "To state a civil RICO claim, plaintiffs must allege (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity (5) causing injury to plaintiffs' 'business or property.'" Ove v. Gwinn, 264 F.3d 817, 825 (9th Cir. 2001); see also 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). Moreover, Rule 9(b) provides that in allegations of fraud or mistake, "a party must state with particularity the [*43] circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). To satisfy the rule, a plaintiff must allege the "who, what, where, when, and how" of the charged misconduct. Cooper v. Pickett, 137 F.3d 616, 627 (9th Cir. 1997). The "circumstances constituting the alleged fraud must be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. U.S.A., 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003).

Here, Counterclaimants have not sufficiently pled a RICO claim. Granted, as Counterclaimants state, Counterdefendants Vestis and Ginve Modas are business enterprises engaged in interstate commerce, owned and operated by Serge and Morgan Recchia. Caramel Amended Counterclaim (Dkt. 34) ¶ 137. Counterclaimants also state that Counterdefendants allegedly engaged in fraudulent conduct, which includes but is not limited to providing false statements and representations to Counterclaimants using written representations, misleading and/or fabricated shipping documents, and electronic mail for the purpose of acquiring monies from victims for goods that Counterdefendants never had the right to sell or intended to deliver. Id. ¶ 138. However, Counterclaimants do not establish a "pattern" of racketeering activity. [*44] Counterclaimants' conclusory statements that Counterdefendants engaged in a pattern do not suffice; absent some specific articulation that Counterdefendants engaged in the alleged activity on multiple occasions or as to multiple agreements, such "bare assertions" are not sufficient to plead a civil RICO claim. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 681.

Thus, at this stage the Court GRANTS WITHOUT PREJUDICE Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants' Caramel and Popeck's Sixteenth Claim, and as to TET and Schmidt's Thirteenth Claim for violation of RICO pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 1964(c).

IV. Disposition

For the reasons set forth above, Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss are DENIED IN PART and GRANTED IN PART.

Counterdefendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's first, second, and third claims for breach of contract in connection to the Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement is DENIED.

Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's fourth fifth, and sixth claims, and as to Counterclaimants TET and Popeck's first, second, and third claims, for Breach of Contract, Breach of Implied Contract, and Quantum Meruit in connection to the Levi's Jeans Purchase Agreement, are DENIED.

[*45] Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Seventh Claim, and as to Counterclaimants TET and Popeck's Fourth Claiml for Conversion, are DENIED.

Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Tenth Claim for Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage, and as to Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt's Seventh Claim, for Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage, are DENIED.

Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth claims, and as to Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt's eight, ninth, tenth, and eleventh claims, for Fraud, Aiding and Abetting Fraud, Negligent Misrepresentation, and Aiding and Abetting Negligent Misrepresentation, are DENIED.

Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Sixteenth Claim, and as to Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt's Thirteenth Claim, pursuant to RICO, are GRANTED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Counterdefendants' Motions to Dismiss as Counterclaimants Caramel and Popeck's Fifteenth Claim, and as to Counterclaimants TET and Schmidt's Twelve Claim, under [*46] California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200 et seq., are GRANTED WITH PREJUDICE.

Counterclaimants may file amended counterclaims, if desired, consistent with this Court's Order on or before May 15, 2019.

The Clerk shall serve this minute order on the parties.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff, Kickham Hanley PLLC, appeals as of right the trial court's order granting summary disposition of its claims under MCR 2.116(C)(7) and (8) and denying its motion for leave to amend its complaint. We affirm.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff commenced this action against defendants[1] after the settlement of a class action lawsuit brought by a water and sewer ratepayer against Royal Oak, Michigan. The class representative alleged Headlee Amendment violations, Const 1963, art 9, § 31, and challenged Royal Oak's mandatory debt service charge and mandatory stormwater disposal charge to users of its water and sanitary disposal services. The circuit court in that action dismissed both counts of the complaint and the class representative moved for reconsideration. While that motion pended, the parties settled. judgment. The circuit court approved the settlement and entered a final

During the class action litigation, the class representative came to believe that defendant, the George W. Kuhn Drainage District (GWKDD), inflated Detroit Water and Sewerage Department (DWSD) charges for stormwater disposal and overcharged for several years Royal Oak which [*2] passed on the charges to users. As part of the settlement in the class action lawsuit, Royal Oak paid a settlement to the class and assigned any claims it may have had for refund of the overcharges to plaintiff, as the trustee for a litigation trust. In its assignment, Royal Oak made no warranty or representation that it, in fact, imposed any overcharges or that any refunds were owed. The class members in turn released Royal Oak from any and all claims they had against Royal Oak concerning the city's rates and charges. The circuit court entered a final judgment and order approving the settlement and appointing plaintiff as the trustee of a litigation trust established for the benefit of the class members. The order authorized plaintiff to pursue a claim for refund of the GWKDD's alleged overcharges and ordered that any monetary recovery be distributed to the class members.

In its complaint, plaintiff alleged that Royal Oak's combined sewer system flows through the George W. Kuhn Drain, which is owned and maintained by Oakland County. The GWKDD is a component unit of Oakland County, comprised of several municipalities in the area, including Royal Oak, whose stormwater and sewerage flow [*3] into the Kuhn Drain. The GWKDD's stormwater flow is conveyed for ultimate disposal by Oakland County to a treatment plant operated by DWSD or the Great Lakes Water Authority (GLWA) for ultimate disposal. The DWSD charges the GWKDD a flat annual rate for stormwater disposal based on a formula tied to the amount of rainfall and the volume of surface water that enters the county's system for disposal. The GWKDD, in turn, proportionately allocates DWSD's stormwater charges among the municipalities in the district and charges each municipality that has a combined sewer system, including Royal Oak, a flat rate per month for stormwater disposal based on an apportionment formula stated in a resolution approved and adopted by the Drainage Board for the George W. Kuhn Drain at a public meeting held on April 19, 2005, and specified in the Drainage Board's Final Order of Apportionment issued April 19, 2005, pursuant to the board's resolution. The Final Order of Apportionment provided for the apportionment of the costs of administration, operations, and maintenance of the George W. Kuhn Drain. The Drainage Board allocated 29.7915% of the costs to Royal Oak.

Royal Oak, in turn, passed through the [*4] charges imposed by the GWKDD to its ratepayers by incorporating the charges into its water and sewer rates to recover the entire amount of the GWKDD's charge. The Drainage Board's Final Order of Apportionment provided that the charges to the municipalities, including Royal Oak, were comprised of two components: (1) the DWSD's charges to the George W. Kuhn Drain to treat the total stormwater flow and (2) the administrative costs of operating and maintaining the balance of the George W. Kuhn Drain System.

Plaintiff, as Royal Oak's assignee, filed a two count complaint against Oakland County and the GWKDD alleging a breach of contract claim and an equitable claim in assumpsit for money had and received. Plaintiff alleged that the GWKDD charged Royal Oak in excess of the amount DWSD charged for disposal of the stormwater and that the Drainage Board's resolution contractually obligated the GWKDD to charge Royal Oak only its proportionate share of the DWSD's actual charges to the GWKDD. Plaintiff claimed that, by overcharging Royal Oak, the GWKDD breached the contract causing Royal Oak breach of contract damages. Alternatively, plaintiff alleged that, if no express contract existed, based [*5] on Royal Oak's assignment of its claims, plaintiff had entitlement to recover the GWKDD's overcharges through an action in assumpsit. The GWKDD, in lieu of filing an answer, moved for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(7) and (8). The GWKDD asserted that the Drainage Board's resolution that formed the basis of plaintiff's breach of contract claim did not constitute a contract. The GWKDD also asserted that plaintiff's claims in actuality alleged tort liability from which the GWKDD had governmental immunity. Regarding the assumpsit count, the GWKDD asserted that plaintiff stood in the shoes of Royal Oak as its assignee and had no right to any damages from the alleged overcharges because the city passed through the overcharges to the ratepayers and suffered no compensable loss.

While the GWKDD's summary disposition motion pended, plaintiff filed an amended complaint that added an unjust enrichment claim. Defendant moved to strike plaintiff's amended complaint and the trial court granted the motion prompting plaintiff to file a motion for leave to amend. At the conclusion of a hearing on the parties' motions, the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8), denied plaintiff's [*6] motion for leave to amend, and dismissed plaintiff's lawsuit with prejudice.

II. SUMMARY DISPOSITION UNDER MCR 2.116(C)(8)

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

We review de novo the trial court's grant of summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8) to determine whether the opposing party failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Dalley v Dykema Gossett, PLLC, 287 Mich App 296, 304; 788 NW2d 679 (2010). In Dalley, this Court explained:

> A motion brought under subrule (C)(8) tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint solely on the basis of the pleadings. When deciding a motion under (C)(8), this Court accepts all well-pleaded factual allegations as true and construes them in the light most favorable to the moving party. A party may not support a motion under subrule (C)(8) with documentary evidence such as affidavits, depositions, or admissions. Summary disposition on the basis of subrule (C)(8) should be granted only when the claim is so clearly unenforceable as a matter of law that no factual development could possibly justify a right of recovery. [Id. at 304-305 (quotation marks and citations omitted).

In a contract action the trial court may examine the contract attached to the complaint. Liggett Restaurant Group, Inc v Pontiac, 260 Mich App 127, 133; 676 NW2d 633 (2003). "The existence and interpretation of a contract are questions of law reviewed de novo." Kloian v Domino's Pizza, LLC, 273 Mich App 449, 452; 733 NW2d 766 (2006). Further, whether an [*7] equitable claim can be maintained presents a question of law subject to de novo review. Morris Pumps v Centerline Piping, Inc, 273 Mich App 187, 193; 729 NW2d 898 (2006).

B. BREACH OF CONTRACT

Plaintiff first claims that the trial court erred by granting summary disposition of its breach of contract claim. We disagree.

The party claiming a breach of contract must establish by a preponderance of the evidence (1) the existence of a contract, (2) the other party's breach, and (3) damages to the party claiming breach. Miller-Davis Co v Ahrens Constr, Inc, 495 Mich 161, 178; 848 NW2d 95 (2014). An express contract is "an actual agreement of the parties, the terms of which are openly uttered or declared at the time of making it, being stated in distinct and explicit language either orally or in writing." Benson v Dep't of Mgt and Budget, 168 Mich App 302, 307; 424 NW2d 40 (1988) (quotation marks and citation omitted). In AFT Mich v Michigan, 497 Mich 197, 235; 866 NW2d 782 (2015), our Supreme Court summarized the principles of contract formation as follows:

> A valid contract requires five elements: (1) parties competent to contract, (2) a proper subject matter, (3) legal consideration, (4) mutuality of agreement, and (5) mutuality of obligation. The party seeking to enforce a contract bears the burden of proving that the contract exists. Contracts necessarily contain promises: a contract may consist of a mutual exchange of promises, or the performance of a service in exchange [*8] for a promise. [Citations omitted.]

Further, to create a contract, there must be an offer and acceptance by the parties signifying their unambiguous mutual assent or meeting of the minds on the essential terms. Kloian, 273 Mich App at 452-453 (citations omitted).

In this case, plaintiff alleged one count of breach of contract based on the resolution adopted by the Drainage Board. It argued to the trial court that the resolution coupled with the Drainage Board's Final Order of Apportionment constituted an express contract that the GWKDD breached. The record reflects that plaintiff attached the resolution and the Final Order of Apportionment to its complaint as exhibits making them part of its pleadings and relied on those documents to allege the existence of a contract between the GWKDD and Royal Oak. Therefore, the trial court could properly consider those documents for determination of defendant's summary disposition motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8). Liggett, 260 Mich App at 133.

Plaintiff argues as it did to the trial court that the resolution and the Final Order of Apportionment constituted a binding express contract between the GWKDD and Royal Oak that the GWKDD breached. We disagree.

The language of the Drainage Board's resolution and its Final Order of Apportionment [*9] plainly establish that these two documents neither individually, nor combined, constituted a binding contract between the GWKDD and Royal Oak. The documents expressed no offer or promises made by either party to the other that required acceptance. Nor did the documents express the five elements necessary for the creation of a valid contract in Michigan.

The Drainage Board's resolution and its Final Order of Apportionment expressed independent determinations made by the Drainage Board, as statutorily required under Chapter 20 of Michigan's drain code of 1956, MCL 280.461 et seq. which governs intracounty drains. The GWKDD is a drainage district, a governmental body with powers conferred upon it by law. See MCL 280.5. The drain code authorizes recovery of the costs of county drains necessary for the public health, MCL 280.462, and makes drainage boards responsible for the operation and maintenance of such drains, MCL 280.478.[2] Under the drain code, drainage boards must establish percentages to apportion the costs of operating and maintaining drains to the public corporations assessed for the costs of the drain, considering the benefits that accrue to each public corporation and the extent to which each public corporation contributes to [*10] the conditions which make the drain necessary. See MCL 280.468; MCL 280.469; MCL 280.478. Drainage boards are statutorily required to determine, after notice and a hearing, the apportionment of the costs and confirm their determinations by issuance of a final order of apportionment. See MCL 280.469; MCL 280.478. The drain code, however, nowhere provides that a final order of apportionment issued by a drainage board constitutes a contract with the municipal entities to which the order applies. Nor does the drain code grant a right of action to such entities for an alleged breach of a final order of apportionment.

The resolution and Final Order of Apportionment at issue in this case, therefore, constituted a statutorily required determination that apportioned the costs of stormwater disposal and treatment by the DWSD, and allocated to the municipalities in the GWKDD their proportionate share. Neither the resolution nor the Final Order of Apportionment, nor those documents combined constituted contracts on which Royal Oak could base a breach of contract claim. Plaintiff, therefore, failed and could not meet its burden of establishing the existence of a contract. Accordingly, the trial court properly granted summary disposition of plaintiff's [*11] breach of contract claim under MCR 2.116(C)(8).[3]

C. ASSUMPSIT

Plaintiff next argues that the trial court erred by granting defendant summary disposition because, in the absence of an express contract, it could recover the overcharges on equitable grounds in assumpsit for money had and received. We disagree.

A claim in assumpsit is "an equitable action, and can be maintained in all cases for money which in equity and good conscience belongs to the plaintiff." Hoyt v Paw Paw Grape Juice Co, 158 Mich 619, 626; 123 NW 529 (1909) (quotation marks and citation omitted). The right to bring an action in assumpsit "exists whenever a person, natural or artificial, has in his or its possession money which in equity and good conscience belongs to the plaintiff, and

[2] MCL 280.462 provides: "County drains which are necessary for the public health may be located, established and constructed under the provisions of this chapter where the cost thereof is to be assessed wholly against public corporations." MCL 280.478 provides, in part: "Any necessary expenses incurred in the administration and in the operation and maintenance of the drain and not covered by contract shall be paid by the several public corporations assessed for the cost of the drain."

[3] Defendant also argues that, because plaintiff's claims were premised on the resolution and Final Order of Apportionment, the claims challenged the propriety of the Final Order of Apportionment and the legality of apportioning the costs to Royal Oak. Defendant contends that plaintiff's claims were barred by the limitations period prescribed under MCL 280.483 which governs challenges to orders of apportionment. We find no merit to defendant's argument because plaintiff's complaint plainly did not challenge the apportionment decision. Further, we decline to review this issue because it is not necessary for the disposition of this case. See Fast Air, Inc v Knight, 235 Mich App 541, 549-550; 599 NW2d 489 (1999).

neither express promise nor privity between the parties is essential." Id. at 626 (citation and emphasis omitted); see also Trevor v Fuhrmann, 338 Mich 219, 223-224; 61 NW2d 49 (1953). As our Supreme Court explained in Moore v Mandlebaum, 8 Mich 433, 448 (1860):

> We understand the law to be well settled that an action of assumpsit for money had and received is essentially an equitable action, founded upon all the equitable circumstances of the case between the parties; and if it appear, from the whole case, that the defendant has in his hands money, which, according to the rules of equity and good conscience, belongs, or ought [*12] to be paid, to the plaintiff, he is entitled to recover; and that as a general rule, where money has been received by a defendant under any state of facts which would in a court of equity entitle the plaintiff to a decree for the money, when that is the specific relief sought, the same state of facts will entitle him to recover the money in this action.

"The basis of a common-law action for money had and received is not only the loss occasioned to the plaintiff on account of the payment of the money, but the consequent enrichment of the defendant by reason of having received the same." Trevor, 338 Mich at 224-225.

In this case, plaintiff alleged a claim in assumpsit for money had and received on the ground that the GWKDD improperly overcharged Royal Oak contrary to the Drainage Board's resolution. Plaintiff based that alternative claim on its position as Royal Oak's assignee. Plaintiff did not dispute that Royal Oak passed through the alleged overcharges to its water and sewer ratepayers. The trial court ruled that plaintiff, as Royal Oak's assignee, could not maintain the assumpsit claim because Royal Oak suffered no recoverable loss. The trial court did not err in this regard.

Under Michigan law, an assignee [*13] stands in the shoes of the assignor and acquires only the same rights as the assignor and remains subject to the same defenses as the assignor. Coventry Parkhomes Condo Ass'n v Fed Nat'l Mortg Ass'n, 298 Mich App 252, 256-257; 827 NW2d 379 (2012). Therefore, as Royal Oak's assignee, plaintiff acquired no more rights than Royal Oak had at the time of the assignment and it remained subject to the same defenses as Royal Oak. In this case, plaintiff sought a refund of the alleged overcharges as Royal Oak's assignee. Royal Oak, however, passed through to its water and sewer ratepayers the GWKDD's charges by incorporating them into the water and sewer rates. Royal Oak suffered no loss because the funds it paid to the GWKDD were recovered from its ratepayers who paid their water and sewer bills. The record reflects that plaintiff conceded at the hearing that Royal Oak did nothing wrong and had authority to charge its ratepayers whatever amount the GWKDD charged Royal Oak, including the alleged overcharges, because Royal Oak was "purely a pass-through." Thus, if the GWKDD overcharged and collected fees from Royal Oak for stormwater disposal, plaintiff can claim no right to recover from the GWKDD because Royal Oak suffered no loss from its payment of the alleged overcharges. Royal Oak passed [*14] on the charges and passed on the ratepayers' payments. Royal Oak recouped any excess payments from its water and sewer ratepayers. Royal Oak had no claim against the GWKDD that it had in its possession money which in equity and good conscience belonged to Royal Oak. Royal Oak, therefore, occasioned no compensable loss. Trevor, 338 Mich at 224-225; Hoyt, 158 Mich at 626. The trial court correctly discerned that Royal Oak had no claim in assumpsit. Consequently, plaintiff failed and could not state a claim in assumpsit.

Plaintiff argues that federal antitrust law principles articulated in the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit's decision in Oakland Co v Detroit, 866 F2d 839 (CA 6, 1989) and the Supreme Court's decision in Illinois Brick Co v Illinois, 431 U.S. 720; 97 S Ct 2061; 52 L Ed 2d 707 (1977) should be considered and applied in this case. Both of those cases, however, are distinguishable because in Oakland Co, the Sixth Circuit addressed whether counties had standing to bring a federal antitrust action and seek treble damages under the Racketeering Influence and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), and in Illinois Brick, the Supreme Court addressed who could seek recovery under the Clayton Act in an antitrust action. The courts considered who constituted an injured party within the meanings of RICO and the Clayton Act for federal antitrust [*15] violation claim purposes. The courts based their decisions on concerns that holding otherwise would lead to the filing of numerous antitrust actions and unmanageable antitrust class actions that presented enormous evidentiary complexities and uncertainties. We do not find the rationale for the courts' decisions applicable in this case. Further, neither case involved an equitable action in assumpsit. Accordingly, we decline to apply federal antitrust law principles in this case.

Although the ratepayers may have had viable claims against a government entity for the overcharges they allegedly paid,[4] the class members settled and released Royal Oak from any and all liability for refunds of their alleged overpayments. Under Hoyt, the right to bring an action for assumpsit must be held by the plaintiff who can establish that the defendant has in its possession money which, in equity and good conscience, belonged to the plaintiff. In this case, plaintiff sued as Royal Oak's assignee for recovery of money paid to the GWKDD. The money plaintiff sought did not belong to Royal Oak, its assignor, but to the ratepayers. Therefore, the trial court did not err by granting the GWKDD summary disposition [*16] of plaintiff's claim in assumpsit.[5]

III. GOVERNMENTAL IMMUNITY

Defendant argues that, in the absence of a contract, plaintiff's claims constituted negligence claims subject to government immunity under the Governmental Tort Liability Act (GTLA), MCL 691.1401 et seq. Plaintiff counters by asserting that the trial court correctly decided that government immunity did not apply in this case. We agree that the trial court correctly determined this issue.

Under MCR 2.116(C)(7), "[s]ummary disposition may be granted when, among other things, a claim is barred by governmental immunity." Dybata v Wayne Co, 287 Mich App 635, 637; 791 NW2d 499 (2010). "When considering a motion brought under subrule (C)(7), the trial court must consider any affidavits, depositions, admissions, or other documentary evidence submitted by the parties to determine whether there is a genuine issue of material fact precluding summary disposition." Id. (citations omitted). "If no facts are in dispute, or if reasonable minds could not differ regarding the legal effect of those facts, then the question whether the claim is barred by governmental immunity is an issue of law." Id. at 637. Further, this Court reviews de novo the application of governmental immunity. Id. at 638.

"The [GTLA] provides 'broad immunity from tort liability to governmental [*17] agencies whenever they are engaged in the exercise or discharge of a governmental function.'" Milot v DOT, 318 Mich App 272, 276; 897 NW2d 248 (2016), quoting Ross v Consumers Power Co (On Rehearing), 420 Mich 567, 595; 363 NW2d 641 (1984). There is no dispute that the GWKDD, a unit of Oakland County, a political subdivision of the state of Michigan, is a governmental entity generally immune from tort liability under MCL 691.1407(1). Milot, 318 Mich App at 276. This Court explained in Yellow Freight Sys, Inc v State of Michigan, 231 Mich App 194, 203; 585 NW2d 762 (1998), rev'd on other grounds 464 Mich 21; 627 N.W.2d 236 (2001), rev'd 537 U.S. 36; 123 S Ct 371; 154 L Ed 2d 377 (2002), that "[a]n action in assumpsit for money had and received is not an action in tort." "Therefore, governmental immunity from tort liability under MCL 691.1407 . . . does not apply." Id. Accordingly, we find no merit to defendant's argument that, in the absence of a contract, plaintiff's assumpsit claim should have been construed as a negligence claim barred by governmental immunity. We hold that the trial court did not err in concluding that governmental immunity did not apply in this case.

IV. AMENDED COMPLAINT

Plaintiff also argues that the trial court erred by granting defendant's motion to strike its first amended complaint and by denying its motion for leave to amend under MCR 2.118(A)(2) based on futility. We disagree.

We review for an abuse of discretion a trial court's decision to strike a pleading. Belle Isle Grill Corp v Detroit, 256 Mich App 463, 469; 666 NW2d 271 (2003). We also review for an abuse of discretion a trial court's decision [*18] regarding a motion for leave to file an amended complaint. Kostadinovski v Harrington, 321 Mich App 736, 742-743; 909 NW2d 907 (2017). An abuse of discretion occurs when the court's decision results in an outcome outside the range of principled outcomes. Decker v Trux R US, Inc, 307 Mich App 472, 478; 861 NW2d 59 (2014). A trial court

[5] Defendant also argues that this action improperly imposed against it a certified class from the earlier settled action despite the fact that defendant was not a party to that action. Although defendant raised this issue before the trial court, the trial court did not decide the issue. Therefore, the issue was not preserved for review by this Court and we decline to review it. Further, the issue is not necessary for the disposition of this case. Fast Air, Inc, 235 Mich App at 549-550.

abuses its discretion when it makes an error of law. Kostadinovski, 321 Mich App at 743. We review de novo a trial court's interpretation of a court rule. Acorn Investment Co v Mich Basic Prop Ins Ass'n, 495 Mich 338, 348; 852 NW2d 22 (2014). "[W]hether a claim for unjust enrichment can be maintained is a question of law" subject to de novo review. Morris Pumps, 273 Mich App at 193.

"The principles of statutory construction apply to the interpretation of the Michigan Court Rules." Decker, 307 Mich App at 479. We look to "'the plain language of the court rule in order to ascertain its meaning' and the 'intent of the rule must be determined from an examination of the court rule itself and its place within the structure of the Michigan Court Rules as a whole.'" Id., quoting Henry v Dow Chem Co, 484 Mich 483, 495; 772 NW2d 301 (2009). "'If the rule's language is plain and unambiguous, then judicial construction is not permitted and the rule must be applied as written.'" Decker, 307 Mich App at 479, quoting Jenson v Puste, 290 Mich App 338, 342; 801 NW2d 639 (2010).

In this case, plaintiff filed the complaint on June 20, 2017. In lieu of answering, on August 18, 2017, the GWKDD moved for summary disposition pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(7) and (C)(8). Before responding to the GWKDD's summary disposition motion, plaintiff filed an amended [*19] complaint. That prompted the GWKDD to move to strike plaintiff's amended complaint under MCR 2.115(B) on the ground that its filing of a motion for summary disposition precluded plaintiff from filing an amended complaint without first obtaining leave from the trial court under MCR 2.118(B)(2). At the hearing on the GWKDD's motion to strike, the trial court held in abeyance its ruling. Nevertheless, the trial court later entered an order granting the GWKDD's motion and striking plaintiff's amended complaint.

MCR 2.118 governs amendment of a party's pleadings. Ligons v Crittenton Hosp, 490 Mich 61, 80; 803 NW2d 271 (2011). MCR 2.118(A) provides, in pertinent part:

> (1) A party may amend a pleading once as a matter of course within 14 days after being served with a responsive pleading by an adverse party, or within 14 days after serving the pleading if it does not require a responsive pleading.
> (2) Except as provided in subrule (A)(1), a party may amend a pleading only by leave of the court or by written consent of the adverse party. Leave shall be freely given when justice so requires.

MCR 2.118(A)(1) permits a party to "amend a pleading once as a matter of course within 14 days after being served with a responsive pleading by an adverse party[.]" Ligons, 490 Mich at 80 (quotation marks and citation omitted). MCR 2.110(A) specifies that the term [*20] "pleading" includes only a complaint, a cross-complaint, a counterclaim, a third-party complaint, an answer, and a reply to an answer, and states that "[no] other pleading is allowed." "[W]hen a court rule specifically defines a given term, that definition alone controls." Ligons, 490 Mich at 81 (quotation marks and citation omitted). The GWKDD's motion for summary disposition, therefore, was not a responsive pleading. Huntington Woods v Ajax Paving Indus, Inc, 179 Mich App 600, 601; 446 NW2d 331 (1989). Accordingly, plaintiff's right as a matter of course to amend its complaint under MCR 2.118(A)(1) was not triggered by GWKDD filing of its motion for summary disposition of plaintiff's claims in its original complaint. Plaintiff's filing without leave to amend did not comport with the requirements of MCR 2.118(A)(1). The trial court, therefore, did not abuse its discretion by striking plaintiff's improperly filed amended complaint.

The record reflects that plaintiff then moved for leave to amend its complaint to state two claims in assumpsit and to assert a new count for unjust enrichment. Under MCR 2.118(A)(2), "[a] court should freely grant leave to amend a complaint when justice so requires." Lane v Kindercare Learning Ctrs, Inc, 231 Mich App 689, 696; 588 NW2d 715 (1998). In Lane, this Court explained:

> Ordinarily, a motion to amend a complaint should be granted, and should be denied only for the following particularized [*21] reasons: (1) undue delay, (2) bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, (3) repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, (4) undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, or (5) futility of the amendment.

> An amendment is futile if it merely restates the allegations already made or adds allegations that still fail to state a claim. [Id. at 697 (citations omitted).]

In this case, the record reflects that the trial court considered plaintiff's proposed amended complaint and determined that the amended allegations and proposed unjust enrichment claim failed to overcome plaintiff's original complaint's deficiencies and failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. The trial court concluded that plaintiff's new unjust enrichment claim was futile for the same reasons that plaintiff's assumpsit claim failed.

The equitable right of restitution exists when a person has been unjustly enriched at another person's expense. Morris Pumps, 273 Mich App at 193. The law will imply a contract "to prevent unjust enrichment when one party inequitably receives and retains a benefit from another." Id. at 194; see also Belle Isle Grill, 256 Mich App at 478. To sustain a claim of unjust enrichment, "a plaintiff [*22] must establish (1) the receipt of a benefit by the defendant from the plaintiff and (2) an inequity resulting to the plaintiff because of the retention of the benefit by the defendant." Morris Pumps, 273 Mich App at 195. "In other words, the law will imply a contract to prevent unjust enrichment only if the defendant has been unjustly or inequitably enriched at the plaintiff's expense." Id.

In this case, plaintiff stood in the shoes of Royal Oak as its assignee. It alleged in its proposed amended complaint that the GWKDD was unjustly enriched by overcharging Royal Oak for the costs of stormwater disposal. Although plaintiff alleged that the GWKDD received a benefit and asserted that it would be unjust for the GWKDD to retain the alleged overcharges, plaintiff cannot establish any inequity resulting to Royal Oak from the GWKDD's retention of the overcharges because Royal Oak passed through to ratepayers the alleged overcharges and recouped from them the amount it allegedly overpaid. While the retention of the alleged overcharges collected by the GWKDD may have resulted in an inequity to the ratepayers, Royal Oak suffered no loss. The record reflects that plaintiff did not specifically allege in its proposed amended [*23] complaint that any inequity resulted to Royal Oak. Royal Oak could not state a claim for unjust enrichment under the circumstances presented in this case. Therefore, plaintiff, as Royal Oak's assignee, could not state a claim for unjust enrichment. Because Royal Oak admittedly passed through the charges to its water and sewer ratepayers, the GWKDD was not unjustly enriched at the expense of Royal Oak. Id. at 195. Accordingly, plaintiff's proposed unjust enrichment claim suffered from the same defect as its assumpsit claim and the trial court could properly deny plaintiff's motion to amend on the ground of futility. Therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying plaintiff's motion for leave to amend its complaint.

Affirmed.

ORDER REGARDING MOTION TO DISQUALIFY COUNSEL

Re: Dkt. No. 30

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff SC Innovations, Inc. ("Sidecar"[1]) brings this action against Defendants Uber Technologies, Inc. and several of its subsidiaries (collectively, "Uber") asserting claims under the Sherman Act and California's Unfair Practices Act. Sidecar is represented by the law firm Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, LLP ("Quinn Emanuel"), which previously represented [*2] Uber from 2012 to 2016, including the defense of several antitrust cases. Uber now moves to disqualify Quinn Emanuel from representing Sidecar. The Court held a hearing on April 26, 2019. For the reasons discussed below, Uber's motion is GRANTED.[2]

II. BACKGROUND

A. Sidecar's Complaint

Sidecar and Uber both offered smartphone applications allowing passengers to arrange for transportation, or to use the term favored by the parties, "ride-hailing apps." Compl. (dkt. 1) ¶¶ 2-3. Uber entered this market first in 2009, originally offering only rides with licensed limousine drivers. Id. ¶ 2. Sidecar's competing product, which debuted in 2012, allowed drivers to use their personal vehicles without special licensing. Id. ¶ 3. Uber offered a similar product under the name "UberX" beginning in 2013. Id. ¶ 5. Sidecar alleges that Uber was able to dominate the market and drive Sidecar out of business by subsidizing both its payments to drivers and the fares it charged passengers, such that "the average price paid by a passenger was well below Uber's average variable cost for completing a transaction on its platform," with the intention of raising prices to recoup those losses after competitors exited [*3] the market. Id. ¶¶ 6-7. According to Sidecar, Uber in fact "raised prices to supra-competitive levels" after Sidecar went out of business in December of 2015. Id. ¶¶ 92-93. Since Sidecar left the market for ride-hailing apps, the only two remaining participants have been Uber and Lyft, Inc. Id. ¶ 110.

Sidecar also alleges that Uber maliciously disrupted the operations of its competitors, including Sidecar, by submitting fake requests for rides through competitors' services and canceling them before drivers reached the locations where they expected to pick up passengers, thus "inundating competitors with fraudulent ride requests," "using fraudulently requested trips as an opportunity to convince drivers to work exclusively with Uber instead of its competitors," and frustrating competitors' passengers with longer wait times. Id. ¶¶ 9-10, 101-08. Sidecar contends that such conduct caused both passengers and drivers to switch from Sidecar's product to Uber. Id. ¶ 104.

Based on the alleged conduct described above, Sidecar asserts claims for monopolization under the Sherman Act, id. ¶¶ 116-45, attempted monopolization under the Sherman Act, id. ¶¶ 146-54, and sales below cost for the purpose [*4] of injuring competitors under the California Unfair Practices Act, id. ¶¶ 155-61. Sidecar alleges that the relevant markets for its claims are the cities in which it formerly operated: "San Francisco, Austin, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington DC, New York, Seattle, San Diego, San Jose, and Boston." Id. ¶ 61.

B. Quinn Emanuel's Previous Representations of Uber

Uber relies primarily on several cases in which Quinn Emanuel defended Uber from claims by local taxi operators. Although Uber cites at least nine such cases, it addresses only four of them in detail. See Mot. (dkt. 30) at 4-7, 12-19 & nn.6, 7; see also Yoo Decl. (dkt. 30-2) ¶ 9 ("I am informed that Uber's records reflect that Quinn Emanuel represented Uber in approximately 16 U.S. lawsuits that alleges violations of antitrust and unfair competition laws, as well as a litigation matter in Germany."). Quinn Emanuel ceased representing Uber in 2016 due to a dispute regarding fee structures. Allen Decl. (dkt. 30-4) ¶ 12.

In Yellow Group LLC v. Uber Technologies, Inc., No. 12-cv-7967 (N.D. Ill.), the plaintiff Chicago-area taxi and limousine operators alleged that Uber wrongfully implied a partnership with the plaintiffs [*5] by dispatching vehicles bearing the plaintiffs' colors and trademarks, violated ordinances granting taxis the exclusive right to respond to street hails, violated ordinances requiring flat rates for livery transportation, exceeded the rates permitted for taxi services, and made false representations regarding the quality of its services, among other claims. See generally Yellow Group, ECF Doc. No. 1 (Compl.). The Yellow Group plaintiffs initially brought claims under the Lanham Act, the Illinois Deceptive Trade Practices Act, and the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act, as well as a claim for tortious interference with contractual relations. Id. ¶¶ 86-111. After Uber, represented by Stephen Swedlow[3] of Quinn Emanuel, moved to dismiss, the plaintiffs filed an amended complaint based on similar allegations, and after that complaint was dismissed in part, they filed a second amended complaint again asserting similar claims. See generally Glass Decl. (dkt. 32-3) Ex. B (Yellow Group 1st Am. Compl.); Yellow Group, ECF Doc. No. 77 (2d Am. Compl.). The plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed their complaint in 2015. Yellow Group, ECF Doc. No. 138.

Salle Yoo, who was [*6] Uber's only in-house attorney at the time the Yellow Group case was filed, states that it was the first case naming Uber as a defendant and that Uber retained Quinn Emanuel with the expectation that Quinn Emanuel "could defend potentially similar cases filed elsewhere," "provide advice on compliance with state and federal antitrust and unfair competition laws," and serve as "an important strategic partner to Uber in these matters." Yoo Decl. ¶¶ 5-6. According to Yoo, Quinn Emanuel initially served "as Uber's primary outside litigation counsel and later as a member of [Uber's] 'Preferred Counsel' program," during which time it "advised Uber on many of [Uber's] most sensitive and high-profile litigation matters and legal issues." Id. ¶ 7. Yoo states that Uber sought antitrust compliance advice from attorneys at Quinn Emanuel, including managing partner John Quinn, and that Uber and Quinn Emanuel's collaborative "analysis of competitors and the competitive landscape in various geographic areas, market conditions, pricing, confidential business strategies, and confidential data" included consultation with Swedlow regarding proposed price changes in the Chicago market during the *Yellow [7] Group litigation. Id. ¶¶ 8, 10. Quinn disputes having provided antitrust compliance advice to Uber, Quinn Decl. (dkt. 32-1) ¶ 6, and Swedlow states that Quinn Emanuel was only involved in discussions of "how best to present the 'split' of the total cost to the ride between the driver and Uber," not "how much Uber charged in total for transportation to riders or the competitive price for Ride-Hailing App services," Swedlow Decl. (dkt. 32-2) ¶¶ 17-18. Uber's former in-house counsel Jennifer Ghaussy states that Quinn Emanuel attorneys reviewed confidential discovery documents regarding the Chicago market during the Yellow Group case. Ghaussy Decl. (dkt. 30-3) ¶ 11.

In a similarly named but separate case filed in 2014, Yellow Cab Co. v. Uber Technologies, Inc.,[4] Maryland taxi operators asserted antitrust, unfair competition, and tortious interference claims against Uber under Maryland law, alleging that Uber imposed uniform rates both above and below the allowed taxi meter rates, depending on the tier of service. See Glass Decl. Ex. T (Yellow Cab Compl.). Uber removed the case to federal court, the plaintiffs successfully moved to remand to Maryland state court, and the parties ultimately [*8] stipulated to dismiss the case. See Glass Decl. Ex. S (Yellow Cab state court docket sheet). In its unsuccessful opposition to the plaintiffs' motion to remand, Uber—represented by Quinn Emanuel attorneys Stephen Swedlow and Ben O'Neil, among others—argued that several individual drivers named as defendants were fraudulently joined because the plaintiffs could not state an antitrust claim against them based on the test for predatory pricing under the Sherman Act. Yellow Cab, No. 1:14-cv-02764-RDB, ECF Doc. No. 18 at 15 (D. Md. Oct. 17, 2014) (citing Brooke Grp. Ltd. v.

[3] Swedlow was "the primary Quinn Emanuel partner who managed [the] firm's work for Uber." Swedlow Decl. (dkt. 32-2) ¶ 4; see also Quinn Decl. (dkt. 32-1) ¶ 5. According to Uber's in-house attorneys, Swedlow and Quinn Emanuel touted their familiarity with "every nuance of Uber's business." Ghaussy Decl. (dkt. 30-3) ¶ 19; Allen Reply Decl. (dkt. 33-1) ¶ 7.

[4] This case was assigned case number 24C14004064 in Maryland Circuit Court for Baltimore City where it was initially filed, and case number 1:14-cv-02764-RDB upon removal to the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland.

Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 224, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993), for the rule that "a plaintiff competitor must show defendant had a reasonable probability of later recouping losses from predatory pricing in the form of monopoly profits"). Stephen Swedlow's declaration does not address the Yellow Cab case, nor does the declaration of any other Quinn Emanuel attorney, with the exception that Ethan Glass's declaration attaches documents publicly filed in the case. See Swedlow Decl.; Quinn Decl.; Feldman Decl. (dkt. 32-4); Stern Decl. (dkt. 32-5); Bonanno Decl. (dkt. 32-6); Glass Decl. Exs. S—T. Sidecar has not filed a declaration by Ben O'Neil, a Quinn Emanuel attorney whose signature appears on most [*9] if not all of Uber's filings in Yellow Cab.

In Boston Cab Dispatch v. Uber Technologies, Inc., taxi dispatchers and operators in the Boston area sued Uber for violations of the Lanham Act, Massachusetts unfair competition laws, and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations ("RICO") Act, based primarily on allegations that Uber provided de facto taxi dispatch services without complying with the local regulatory scheme for such services. See Glass Decl. Ex. L (Boston Cab Compl.). The parties litigated a motion to dismiss (filed by an attorney at Littler Mendelson, P.C., with Swedlow and other Quinn Emanuel attorneys listed as "of counsel"), a motion to compel brought by Uber and signed by Swedlow, and multiple motions to compel brought by the plaintiffs. Glass Decl. Exs. M—R. Discovery included issues related to Uber's pricing strategy in the Boston area, and Quinn Emanuel defended a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition of Uber addressing topics including revenue, pricing, and the competitive landscape in Boston. Ghaussy Decl. ¶ 17. As with the Yellow Group case, Swedlow states that to the best of his recollection, any discussion of pricing only concerned the characterization of how Uber divided riders' [*10] payments between itself and drivers. Swedlow Decl. ¶¶ 17-18. Swedlow also states that although Quinn Emanuel produced documents related to Uber's revenue in certain geographic markets to the plaintiffs in some of the taxi cases, Quinn Emanuel merely "acted as a conduit for information regarding revenue" that Uber provided for production, without itself analyzing such information or providing advice related to it. Id. ¶¶ 14-15.

Finally, in Greater Houston Transportation Company v. Uber Technologies, No. 14-941 (S.D. Tex.), Texas taxi operators accused Uber of violating local regulations in Houston and San Antonio governing passenger transportation for hire, and brought claims under the RICO Act, the Lanham Act, and Texas unfair competition law, as well as a claim for declaratory relief. Glass Decl. Ex. C (Greater Houston Compl.). The parties litigated the case through a motion for summary judgment, which some of the plaintiffs' claims survived, and settled less than a week before trial was set to begin in February of 2016. See Glass Decl. Exs. D—K. Quinn Emanuel represented Uber, and Uber's former in-house counsel Ghaussy states that Quinn Emanuel received confidential information regarding [*11] pricing and other topics in the course of discovery, including in preparing for and defending a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition. Ghaussy Decl. ¶ 13. Swedlow states in his declaration that, to the best of his recollection, Quinn Emanuel attorneys were not exposed to "how competitive pricing was determined" in the course of preparing for the Rule 30(b)(6) deposition, and that Quinn Emanuel served only as a "conduit" in producing revenue information during discovery. Swedlow Decl. ¶¶ 14-15, 17.

Swedlow's declaration also includes a number of relatively narrow and specific denials "to the best of [his] recollection," such as that "Quinn Emanuel did not provide Uber with legal advice regarding whether Uber's market share indicates it has market power in the market for ride-hailing software" or "whether Uber exercised market power and harmed competition in the market for ride-hailing software by raising prices starting in 2016," as well as the broader assertion, again to the best of Swedlow's recollection, that "Quinn Emanuel was not exposed to confidential information concerning Uber's pricing, costs, or competitive strategies that would be material to the issues raised in the current Sidecar matter." Swedlow Decl. ¶¶ 7-13. [*12]

Aside from the litigation matters discussed above, Uber also argues that Quinn Emanuel should be disqualified based on its representation of Uber in certain non-litigation matters, as well as a current Quinn Emanuel representation that, Uber cryptically asserts, grants Quinn Emanuel access to relevant confidential information but cannot be disclosed on the record in this case. See Mot. at 8-9, 21-23. Because, as discussed below, Quinn Emanuel's work for Uber in the Yellow Cab taxi litigation matter is sufficient to require disqualification, this order does not address in detail the non-litigation matters cited by Uber or the parties' arguments concerning them.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Legal Standard

This Court's local rules require attorneys to "comply with the standards of professional conduct required of members of the State Bar of California." Civ. L.R. 11-4(a)(1). The Ninth Circuit has recognized that, where a district court has adopted such rules, "California law governs questions of conflicts of interest and disqualification." Radcliffe v. Hernandez, 818 F.3d 537, 541 (9th Cir. 2016). Rule 3-310(E) of the State Bar's Rules of Professional Conduct provides that an attorney "shall not, without the informed written consent of the client or former client, accept employment adverse [*13] to the client or former client where, by reason of the representation of the client or former client, the [attorney] has obtained confidential information material to the employment."

"Where the potential conflict is one that arises from the successive representation of clients with potentially adverse interests, [California] courts have recognized that the chief fiduciary value jeopardized is that of client confidentiality." Flatt v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. 4th 275, 283, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 537, 885 P.2d 950 (1994). There is no "'lifetime prohibition against representation adverse to a former client.'" Khani v. Ford Motor Co., 215 Cal. App. 4th 916, 921, 155 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 (2013) (quoting Farris v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 119 Cal. App. 4th 671, 680, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 618 (2004)); see also TWiT, LLC v. Twitter Inc., No. 18-cv-00341-JSC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92321, 2018 WL 2470942, at *5 (N.D. Cal. June 1, 2018). Nor does an "attorney's acquisition of general information about the former client's 'overall structure and practices,'" "'litigation philosophy' or 'key decision makers'" necessarily disqualify the attorney from future adverse representations, although such knowledge may be grounds for disqualification where the information at issue is "'found to be "material"—i.e., directly in issue or of critical importance—in the second representation.'" Khani, 215 Cal. App. 4th at 921 (quoting Farris, 119 Cal. App. 4th at 680).

A party that has not consented to a conflict of interest may disqualify its former counsel from representing an adversary in one of two ways. First, counsel [*14] will be disqualified if the former client establishes that "the former attorney actually possesses [material] confidential information adverse to the former client." H. F. Ahmanson & Co. v. Salomon Bros., Inc., 229 Cal. App. 3d 1445, 1452, 280 Cal. Rptr. 614 (1991). Confidential information is "material," and thus disqualifying, if it is "directly at issue in, or ha[s] some critical importance to, the second representation." Farris, 119 Cal. App. 4th 671, 680, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 618 (2004). As an alternative, "it is well settled actual possession of confidential information need not be proved in order to disqualify the former attorney," and "it is enough to show a 'substantial relationship' between the former and current representation." H. F. Ahmanson, 229 Cal. App. 3d at 1452. This "substantial relationship" test is rooted in the need to avoid even the "appearance of the possibility[] that the attorney may have received confidential information during the prior representation," as well as in the expectation "that the lawyer will use every skill, expend every energy, and tap every legitimate resource in the exercise of independent professional judgment on behalf of the client." Trone v. Smith, 621 F.2d 994, 998-99 (9th Cir. 1980).

Whether there is a substantial relationship for the purpose of this test "turns on two variables: (1) the relationship between the legal problem involved in the former representation and the legal problem [*15] involved in the current representation, and (2) the relationship between the attorney and the former client with respect to the legal problem involved in the former representation." Jessen v. Hartford Cas. Ins. Co., 111 Cal. App. 4th 698, 709, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 (2003). Where matters "turn on the same issue," they are substantially related. See Farris, 119 Cal. App. 4th at 684. In other words, an attorney will be disqualified where the available record "supports a rational conclusion that information material to the evaluation, prosecution, settlement or accomplishment of the former representation given its factual and legal issues is also material to the evaluation, prosecution, settlement or accomplishment of the current representation given its factual and legal issues." Jessen, 111 Cal. App. 4th at 713.

As part of this test, "courts ask whether confidential information material to the current dispute would normally have been imparted to the attorney by virtue of the nature of the former representation." H. F. Ahmanson, 229 Cal. App.

3d 1445, 1454, 280 Cal. Rptr. 614 (1991). Nevertheless, the inquiry into the actual attorney-client relationship under the second prong of the test is not searching: so long as "the relationship between the attorney and the former client is shown to have been direct—that is, where the lawyer was personally involved in providing legal advice and services to the former [*16] client—then it must be presumed that confidential information has passed to the attorney and there cannot be any delving into the specifics of the communications between the attorney and the former client in an effort to show that the attorney did or did not receive confidential information during the course of that relationship." Jessen, 111 Cal. App. 4th at 709. The precise nature of the former attorney-client relationship only comes into play as a factor to be balanced against the similarity of issues if the relationship "was not direct." City & Cty. of San Francisco v. Cobra Sols., Inc., 38 Cal. 4th 839, 847, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 771, 135 P.3d 20 (2006).

"Where the requisite substantial relationship between the subjects of the prior and the current representations can be demonstrated, access to confidential information by the attorney in the course of the first representation (relevant, by definition, to the second representation) is presumed and disqualification of the attorney's representation of the second client is mandatory; indeed, the disqualification extends vicariously to the entire firm." Flatt, 9 Cal. 4th at 283. "[D]isqualification of the firm is required, even if the firm erects an ethical wall around the attorney who possesses the opponent's confidences . . . ." Pound v. DeMera DeMera Cameron, 135 Cal. App. 4th 70, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 922, (2005) (citing Henriksen v. Great Am. Savings & Loan, 11 Cal. App. 4th 109, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184 (1992)); see also, e.g., Genentech, Inc. v. Sanofi-Aventis Deutschland GMBH, No. C 08-04909 SI, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35867, 2010 WL 1136478, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 20, 2010) [*17] ("Further, California law rejects the use of ethical walls to prevent disqualification by imputed conflicts."); Meza v. H. Muehlstein & Co., 176 Cal. App. 4th 969, 978, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 (2009) ("[A]n 'ethical wall" between an attorney with confidential information and his or her firm will generally not preclude the disqualification of the firm. . . . Instead, there is a presumption that each member of the firm has imputed knowledge of the confidential information."); but see Kirk v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 183 Cal. App. 4th 776, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620 (2010) (discussing circumstances where an ethical wall may be sufficient to avoid imputed conflicts from attorneys moving between law firms, a circumstance not at issue in the present case).[5]

The Ninth Circuit has noted—albeit in the context of disqualification where an attorney may serve as a witness at trial, not disqualification based on adversity to a former client—that "disqualification motions should be subjected to 'particularly strict judicial scrutiny'" due to the potential for tactical abuse. Optyl Eyewear Fashion Int'l Corp. v. Style Companies, Ltd., 760 F.2d 1045, 1050 (9th Cir. 1985). Nevertheless, in determining whether to disqualify counsel based on a prior representation, "the paramount concern must be the preservation of public trust both in the scrupulous administration of justice and in the integrity of the bar." State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Fed. Ins. Co., 72 Cal. App. 4th 1422, 1428, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 (1999) (citing Comden v. Superior Court, 20 Cal. 3d 906, 915, 145 Cal. Rptr. 9, 576 P.2d 971 (1978)); see also People ex rel. Dep't of Corps. v. SpeeDee Oil Change Sys., Inc., 20 Cal. 4th 1135, 1145, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 816, 980 P.2d 371 (1999).

B. Judge [*18] White's Decision Regarding DeSoto Cab

[5] Even if California law permitted the use of ethical walls to limit conflicts from being imputed to lawyers working at the same firm throughout both representations, which it does not appear to, Quinn Emanuel's establishment of such a wall at the recent outset of its representation of Sidecar would not be effective, because no such wall was in place over the years in which it represented Uber, and there is no reason to believe that the attorneys who worked on those matters would have had any reason at that time to hesitate before sharing information with their colleagues. The scope of Quinn Emanuel's ethical wall is also unclear, with no information in the record addressing, for example, any measures put in place to prevent access to documents or efforts to determine whether attorneys other than those who "performed work for Uber" obtained information before the wall was imposed. See, e.g., Glass Decl. ¶ 27 ("The wall has prevented me from having any substantive communication regarding this case or Quinn Emanuel's prior work for Uber with anyone at Quinn Emanuel who performed work for Uber."); cf. Kirk, 183 Cal. App. 4th at 810-11 ("The typical elements of an ethical wall are: [1] physical, geographic, and departmental separation of attorneys; [2] prohibitions against and sanctions for discussing confidential matters; [3] established rules and procedures preventing access to confidential information and files; [4] procedures preventing a disqualified attorney from sharing in the profits from the representation; and [5] continuing education in professional responsibility." (citation omitted)).

As a starting point, the Court rejects Sidecar's argument that the present motion is informed in any way by Judge White's decision that this case is not related to another case between Uber and local taxi companies, DeSoto Cab Co. v. Uber Techs, Inc., No. 16-cv-06385-JSW (N.D. Cal.). See Opp'n (dkt. 32) at 22. Under this Court's local rules, cases are related only if: "(1) The actions concern substantially the same parties, property, transaction or event; and (2) It appears likely that there will be an unduly burdensome duplication of labor and expense or conflicting results if the cases are conducted before different Judges." Civ. L.R. 3-12(a) (emphasis added). Neither element of that test is the same as the test for whether cases are "substantially related" for the purpose of disqualification as discussed above. Moreover, Uber has not argued that any connection between this case and the DeSoto Cab case, which does not involve Quinn Emanuel, would be grounds for disqualification. The decision not to find the cases related is irrelevant to the issue at hand.

C. Substantial Relationship to Adverse Representations

Sidecar's opposition brief makes much of the distinction [*19] between ride-hailing apps and "transportation companies," arguing that this case does not materially overlap with Quinn Emanuel's previous representations of Uber because all of those cases involved litigation with traditional taxi companies, while this case is between two ride-hailing companies that—at least nominally[6]—do not themselves provide transportation. According to Sidecar, this case "involves different markets, different facts, different claims, different statutes, and different legal theories than those at issue in the taxicab cases." Opp'n at 11.

Sidecar analogizes this case to the Eastern District of California's decision in Foster Poultry Farms v. ConAgra Foods Refrigerated Foods Co., No. F 04-5810 AWI LJO, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39648, 2005 WL 2319186 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 22, 2005). Opp'n at 11-12. In that case, the court affirmed a magistrate judge's decision denying a motion to disqualify counsel from representing plaintiff Foster Poultry in an antitrust case involving "the market for browned and smoked turkey," despite counsel having previously represented defendant ConAgra in a different antitrust case concerning the market for chicken. *Foster Poultry, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39648, 2005 WL 2319186, at *2, 7. "The Magistrate Judge determined as a factual matter that ConAgra neither provided [counsel] with detailed information [*20] about the turkey market nor gave it information that would be pertinent in determining whether the various chicken businesses impacted the turkey businesses under relevant market analysis." *2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39648, [WL] at 9. Sidecar argues that, just as the chicken and turkey markets were distinct in Foster Poultry, the taxi market asserted in the earlier cases is separate from the ride-hailing market asserted in this case. See Opp'n at 12 ("Ride-Hailing Apps like Uber do not offer or provide the transportation of persons by motor vehicle or carry passengers.").

Unlike in Foster Poultry, however, this case and the taxi cases all relate to the same services provided by Uber, even if the competitors might be in different markets. Regardless of whether Sidecar is correct as to how the market for those operations should be defined, the earlier cases required at least some degree of discovery into and analysis of the same Uber operations at issue in this case—the provision or facilitation of ride-hailing for passenger transportation. That remains true even if Sidecar is correct that Uber did not participate in the same markets as the taxi companies that previously sued it. Foster Poultry might be on point if, say, earlier [*21] cases addressed Uber's "Uber Eats" food delivery service while the current case addressed its passenger services.[7] With all of the cases at issue addressing the same class of Uber products, however, Foster Poultry has little bearing on this case. Cf. also Human Longevity, Inc. v. J. Craig Venter Inst., No. 18cv1656-WQH-LL, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 191638,

[6] The nature of such companies' business has been and continues to be widely litigated in, for example, disputes regarding drivers' status as employees or independent contractors. The Court need not and does not reach such questions on the present motion.

[7] Conversely, the circumstances of this case might be analogous to a counterfactual version of Foster Poultry where the company only sold turkey but had been sued previously by a chicken seller who argued that the two products were part of the same market. If that had been the case, the Eastern District likely would have found the first lawsuit, concerning both chicken and turkey, to be substantially related to a subsequent lawsuit concerning only turkey.

2018 WL 5840045, at *6 (S.D. Cal. Nov. 8, 2018) (declining to disqualify a law firm from defending a client in a trade secrets case where it had previously opposed the same party in another trade secrets case involving different types of information, a different former employee with a different position, and a different alleged method of misappropriation). Sidecar's assertion that the taxi cases "had nothing to do with Ride-Hailing Apps," Opp'n at 16, is incorrect, because the cases related to Uber.

That is not the end of the inquiry. As Uber correctly notes, many of the claims at issue in the taxi cases, such as claims for false advertising and failure to comply with local taxi regulations, do not directly relate to the subject matter of this case. See, e.g., Opp'n at 12-14. To the extent that Quinn Emanuel would have been called upon to litigate whether, for example, Uber was required to obtain taxi medallions [*22] for its drivers, or whether Uber's advertising regarding its drivers' background checks was accurate, such issues do not substantially overlap with the predatory pricing and tortious interference claims here. At least one of the prior cases, however, bears a sufficient resemblance to the claims at issue here to warrant concern.

In Yellow Cab, Maryland taxi operators alleged, among other claims and theories, that Uber violated Maryland antitrust law by setting "uniform prices so far below the market rate as to constitute illegal predatory pricing with which Plaintiffs . . . are unable to compete." Glass Decl. Ex. T ¶ 110. Sidecar's first argument against disqualification based on Yellow Cab is that Quinn Emanuel had only limited involvement because the case only lasted slightly over a year before voluntary dismissal and Uber never responded to the complaint. Opp'n at 16-17. But while the extent of an attorney's involvement with a case may be relevant in some circumstances, that factor only comes into play "[w]hen the attorney's contact with the prior client was not direct." Cobra Sols., 38 Cal. 4th at 847; see also Jessen, 111 Cal. App. 4th at 709. Quinn Emanuel appeared as Uber's lead counsel in Yellow Cab and performed substantive work on Uber's [*23] behalf, including removing the case to federal court, filing an unsuccessful opposition to the plaintiffs' motion to remand, and preparing to file a motion to dismiss. See, e.g., Glass Decl. Ex. S; Allen Reply Decl. (dkt. 33-1) ¶ 9. Sidecar cites no case where the factor addressing the nature of the attorney-client relationship prevented disqualification for a law firm that served as the former client's lead counsel in the earlier representation at issue.

Somewhat similarly, Sidecar asserts that "Quinn Emanuel's lack of exposure to [material] confidential information in the Yellow Cab engagement . . . is confirmed by the conspicuous absence of any such claim from Uber's declarants." Opp'n at 17. But "the former client need not prove that the attorney possesses actual confidential information" under the "substantial relationship" test. Cobra Sols., Inc., 38 Cal. 4th at 847. It is enough that the former and current matters are substantially similar, and that the attorney had a direct relationship with the former client, with no "'inquiry into the actual state of the lawyer's knowledge' acquired during the lawyers' representation of the former client." Jessen, 111 Cal. App. 4th at 710-11 (quoting Ahmanson, 229 Cal. App. 3d at 1453).

Sidecar also argues that the theory of predatory pricing asserted [*24] in Yellow Cab is distinct from Sidecar's Sherman Act predatory pricing claim here, because unlike the Maryland plaintiffs' claim based on Uber undercutting regulated taxi fares, the Sherman Act requires a competitor bringing such a claim to show that the defendant set a price below the defendant's own costs and posed a dangerous threat of recouping that loss through higher prices after market consolidation. Opp'n at 17-18 (citing Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 222-24, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)). As Uber notes in its reply, however, Quinn Emanuel itself specifically argued on behalf of Uber that the Maryland plaintiffs were required to show antitrust injury as that term is defined under federal law, as well as market power as defined in Brooke Group, including a "reasonable probability of later recouping losses from predatory pricing in the form of monopoly profits." Yellow Cab, ECF Doc. No. 18 (Opp'n to Remand) at 14-15;[8] see Reply (dkt. 33) at 6-7. Uber's brief in Yellow Cab, authored by Quinn

[8] As noted above, Quinn Emanuel presented this argument in an unsuccessful effort to establish diversity jurisdiction by showing that certain individual driver defendants were fraudulently joined. The District of Maryland held that Uber had not established fraudulent joinder because the plaintiffs had met their very low burden to show "a 'glimmer of hope' that their price-fixing claim [would] succeed." *The Yellow Cab Co. v. Uber Techs., Inc., No. RDB-14-2764, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109417, 2015 WL 4987653, at 5 (D. Md. Aug. 19, 2015). The court did not contradict Quinn Emanuel's position that the plaintiffs' claims required antitrust injury, market power, and a danger of recouping losses through later price increases. See id.

Emanuel, quoted Brooke Group for the proposition that "'The plaintiff must demonstrate that' the predators will 'obtain enough market power to set higher than competitive prices, and then sustain those prices long enough to earn in excess profits what they [*25] earlier gave up in below-cost prices.'" Yellow Cab, ECF Doc. No. 18 (Opp'n to Remand) at 15 (quoting Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 225) (emphasis added).

Accordingly, at least in Quinn Emanuel and Uber's view at the time—presumably the most relevant perspective from which to determine the expected scope of attorney-client communications—claims at issue in the Maryland case turned on the issue of whether Uber could be expected to recoup its losses from offering low, purportedly below-cost predatory prices by raising its prices after obtaining a dominant market position. The plaintiffs in that case also alleged that such an outcome was likely. Glass Decl. Ex. T (Yellow Cab Compl.) ¶ 116(b) (alleging that "the Uber Rates [will] become unaffordable even for consumers of average means" after Uber "forces taxicab companies out of the market"). Sidecar alleges similarly in this case, as it must to support a predatory pricing claim under the Sherman Act. Compl. ¶¶ 134-36 (alleging that "[a]fter Sidecar exited the market [due to predatory pricing], Uber imposed price increases on Passengers" and reduced payments to drivers such that it was "likely to recoup the losses it sustained"). [*26]

The question of whether Uber set below-cost prices and employed a strategy in which it expected to recoup losses by raising prices after establishing a dominant position in the market constitutes at least one issue material to both the claims at issue in Yellow Cab and those asserted by Sidecar here. Uber argues that the markets in the two cases differ because this case concerns ride-hailing apps while Yellow Cab concerned taxis, but both cases implicate the same prices offered by Uber to customers seeking transportation. Moreover, the scope of the market is itself a common material issue—whether Uber competed against traditional transportation companies would have been a central dispute of Yellow Cab had the case proceeded further, and might well be at issue in defining the relevant market for this case. As counsel for Uber noted at the hearing on the present motion, the software-only market definition on which Sidecar relies to distinguish Yellow Cab was a legal strategy that Quinn Emanuel pioneered for Uber in the years in which it served as Uber's litigation counsel.

While certain other aspects of the claims differ, "[t]he substantial relationship test does not require that the issues [*27] in the two representations be identical." Trone, 621 F.2d at 1000. The Court concludes that the two cases are substantially related, and that Quinn Emanuel must be disqualified. See Jessen, 111 Cal. App. 4th at 713 ("[S]uccessive representations will be 'substantially related' when . . . information material to the evaluation, prosecution, settlement or accomplishment of the former representation given its factual and legal issues is also material to the evaluation, prosecution, settlement or accomplishment of the current representation . . . .").[9]

Other cases on which Sidecar primarily relies are not analogous to the present circumstances. In TWiT, LLC v. Twitter Inc., Judge Corley denied a motion to disqualify where the law firm Durie Tangri, serving as defense counsel in a trademark dispute brought by TWiT, had previously advised TWiT in connection with a third party's threat of patent litigation, and "[a]ny confidential communications Durie Tangri would have had with [TWiT] regarding the patent litigation threat would be immaterial to the issues in [the trademark] case." *TWiT, LLC v. Twitter Inc., No. 18-cv-00341-JSC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92321, 2018 WL 2470942, at 4 (N.D. Cal. June 1, 2018). That case stands for the noncontroversial rule that familiarity with a former client's [*28] approach to litigation and similarly general knowledge is not disqualifying without a showing that such knowledge is specifically material to the new adverse representation. See *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92321, [WL] at 5-6. Similarly, in a case where the Central District of [9] Other aspects of Quinn Emanuel's past representations of Uber also raise concern. As one example, it seems likely that the revenue information disclosed to Quinn Emanuel in the Boston Cab and Greater Houston cases would be material to the present antitrust claims concerning the same geographic markets, and Quinn Emanuel cites no authority adopting its "conduit" theory of excusing confidential information actually disclosed to counsel so long as the attorneys who received it state that they did not "analyze" such information or provide advice. See Swedlow Decl. ¶¶ 14-15; Ghaussy Decl. ¶ 16. The Court also hesitates to allow attorney declarations attesting to only a limited exchange of information "[t]o the best of [the attorney's] recollection" to trump a former client's declaration that the attorney had access to more extensive information. See Swedlow Decl. ¶¶ 7-13, 15-17; Ghaussy Decl. ¶¶ 7, 24. Because the Yellow Cab representation satisfies the "substantial relationship" test for disqualification, however, the Court does not reach these other issues.

California declined to disqualify counsel, the court determined that each of the former and current representations "involve[d] distinct circumstances regarding the loans at issues, the borrowers who procured the loans, the loan officers who made the loans, the locations of the loans, the defendants who sold the loans . . ., the circumstances constituting the alleged breaches, and the resulting damages," and each of the material disputed issues "turn[ed] on the unique factual circumstances surrounding the individual loans." *Lehman Bros. Holdings Inc. v. Direct Mortg. Corp., No. 2:09-cv-04170-CJC(RNBx), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193940, 2013 WL 12114447, at 4 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 4, 2013). The party seeking disqualification identified "no specific legal issue that was present in the [earlier] cases that is also critical to [the current adverse representation]." *2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193940, [WL] at 5. Neither TWiT nor Lehman Brothers conflict with disqualification in this case, where a necessary element of Sidecar's claims was also at issue in Yellow Cab with respect to the same Uber product [*29] or products, an overlapping time period, and an overlapping (or at least immediately neighboring) geographic market.[10]

IV. CONCLUSION

A lawyer can be expected over time to represent zealously and fairly a wide range of clients whose interests might sometimes be at odds with positions that the lawyer has previously taken. As discussed above, California recognizes that reality by declining to impose a "lifetime prohibition against representation adverse to a former client." Khani, 215 Cal. App. 4th at 921. Here, however, it is reasonable for Uber to expect that Quinn Emanuel would not now serve as counsel to a plaintiff bringing antitrust claims based on Uber's alleged conduct during the same time that Quinn Emanuel served as Uber's sole outside litigation counsel and defended Uber against unfair competition and antitrust claims—including at least some claims turning on factual questions underlying the case at hand. While the Court has no reason to doubt the veracity of the Quinn Emanuel attorneys who have declared their lack of exposure to confidential information, allowing this case to proceed while Uber is left to speculate what information its former attorneys shared with their colleagues [*30] would undermine "the public trust both in the scrupulous administration of justice and in the integrity of the bar." See State Farm, 72 Cal. App. 4th at 1428.

The motion is GRANTED. Quinn Emanuel is disqualified from representing Sidecar in this action, and Sidecar is instructed to retain new counsel.

A case management conference will occur on June 7, 2019 at 2:00 PM. The parties shall file an updated joint case management statement no later than May 31, 2019. The deadline for Uber to respond to the complaint remains stayed pending further order of the Court.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[10] The various plaintiffs in Yellow Cab are described as providing taxi services "in the State of Maryland," "in the City [of Baltimore]," and "in Montgomery County, Maryland." See Glass Decl. Ex. T ¶¶ 9-40. Portions of Maryland, including Montgomery County, are suburbs of Washington, DC, which is one of the geographic markets asserted in Sidecar's present complaint. See Compl. ¶ 61. Although, as discussed above, Sidecar disputes other aspects of the relationship between this case and Yellow Cab, it does not argue that the geographic markets of the two cases are a relevant difference between them. See Opp'n at 16-19.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Procedural History

On August 22, 2018, Plaintiff Western Air Charter, Inc., doing business as Jet Edge International, a California corporation ("Plaintiff" or "Jet Edge") filed this a complaint against Defendants. ("Complaint," Dkt. No. 1.) On December 20, 2018, Plaintiff filed its First Amended Complaint. ("FAC," Dkt. No 26.) Plaintiff brings seven causes of action: (1) Intentional Interference with Contractual Relations; (2) Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage; (3) Negligent interference with Prospective Economic Advantage; (4) Breach of Contract; (5) Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing; (6) Unfair Competition; and (7) Fraud. (Id.)

On January 14, 2019, Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). ("MTD," Dkt. No. 27.) In that same motion, Defendant Elsie Quenga moves to dismiss all claims against her for lack of personal jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(2). (Id.) Quenga [*3] submits a declaration in support of her motion. ("Quenga Decl.," Dkt. No. 27-1.) Plaintiff filed an opposition to this motion on February 7, 2019. ("Opp.," Dkt. No. 30.) Defendants filed a reply on February 18, 2019. ("Reply," Dkt. No. 31.) On March 28, 2019, Defendant Sojitz Jet filed a separate Motion to Dismiss the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(2) and failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). ("Sojitz MTD," Dkt. No. 33.) On April 8, 2019, Plaintiff filed a redacted opposition ("Redacted Opp.", Dkt. No. 37-2) accompanied by an application to file under seal. ("Application", Dkt. No. 37.) Defendants filed a reply to the Sojitz MTD on April 15, 2019. ("Reply to Sojitz", Dkt No 42.)

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

Plaintiff alleges the following facts which are assumed to be true for purposes of this motion.

Jet Edge is a provider of jet charter, maintenance, and management services, with operations around the world and a principal place of business in Van Nuys, California. (FAC ¶ 1.) Sojitz is a Japanese corporation with a principal place of business in Tokyo, Japan that has offices and subsidiaries throughout the world, including Los Angeles. (Id. ¶ 3.) Sojitz engages in a wide range [*4] of businesses, including purchasing, selling, managing and operating commercial aircraft and business jets. (Id.) Yohei Sakurai is citizen and resident of Japan who is an officer of Sojitz's aerospace department and is also an officer of ACP Jet Charters, Inc. dba Phenix Jet International, LLC ("ACP"). (Id. ¶ 4.) Elsie Quenga is a citizen and resident of Guam. (Id. ¶ 5.) Quenga is and was an employee, officer, and/or director of ACP. (Id.) Hiroshi Naito is a citizen and resident of Japan who is and was an officer of Sojitz's aerospace department and a director of Tropical Sky Investments, Inc. a wholly owned subsidiary of Sojitz. (Id. ¶ 6.) Tropical Sky Investments, Inc. ("TSI") is a Guam Company and a wholly owned subsidiary of Sojitz. (Id. ¶ 7.)

On July 18, 2013, Jet Edge entered into a Memorandum of Understanding ("MOU") with Sojitz in which the parties contemplated Sojitz's purchase of an equity stake in Jet Edge. (FAC ¶ 30.) The confidential MOU stated both parties were to act in good faith while negotiating and drafting the equity purchase and allowed Sojitz to work as a liaison between Jet Edge and its customers. (Id.) However, the equity purchase never occurred, as the parties [*5] never reached an agreement. (Id. ¶ 31.) Jet Edge contends that these negotiations were the first part of a conspiracy by Sojitz to steal confidential information from Jet Edge, to establish ACP as a competing business, and to steal Jet Edge's Asian business operations. (Id. ¶ 32.)

The second part of Sojitz's conspiracy involved Sojitz convincing Jet Edge to hire Paul Schembari ("Schembari") as a pilot.[1] (Id. ¶ 40.) Jet Edge and Schembari entered into an employment agreement on or about February 14, 2014. (Id. ¶ 42.) Sojitz planted Schembari within Jet Edge so he could access valuable and confidential information of the workings of Jet Edge's business in order to compete with Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 43.) Jet Edge promoted Schembari to Assistant Director of Operations for Jet Edge, a position which allowed him to access confidential information regarding Jet Edge's operations, customers, business practices, and structure. (Id.)

Sakurai, Quenga, and Schembari planned to create their own company, YEP, to compete with both Jet Edge and Sojitz. (Id. ¶ 44.) On April 8, 2015, Quenga sent an email to Sakurai and Schembari regarding such plans. (Id.) [*6] However, YEP failed to secure funding and never materialized. (Id.) Sakurai, Quenga, and Schembari then pivoted back to acting as agents of Sojitz, using information obtained in planning for YEP to help Sojitz launch ACP, a new aircraft management and operations company that would compete with Jet Edge. (Id.)

While Schembari was still employed at Jet Edge, Defendants took action to launch ACP (Id. ¶ 45). On November 29, 2015, Sakurai emailed Schembari a Bank of America form regarding a request to finance ACP. (Id. ¶ 46.) On or about December 3, 2015, Schembari and Quenga met with a Guam-based business consultant to develop a business plan for ACP. (Id. ¶ 47.) Sakurai, Schembari, and Quenga discussed plans to persuade Jet Edge customers to instead work with ACP. (Id. ¶ 51.) Sakurai told Jet Edge customers of Sojitz's plan to enter into a new venture with ACP and provided them with many reasons to leave Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 50.) Sakurai also told Jet Edge customers he would not serve as a liaison between them and Jet Edge if they elected to stay with Jet Edge. (Id.) Further, Schembari and Sakurai/Sojitz diverted the management of a Global 6000 MSN 9685 aircraft with tail number N2020 toward [*7] ACP instead of Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 49.) Sakurai subsequently created projections for the new company based on management of aircrafts that were under contract as Jet Edge clients and shared these projections with Schembari. (Id. ¶ 53.)

On or about March 8, 2016, Sojitz acquired ACP. Schembari's holding company, Cosa Di Famiglia Holdings, LLC, was paid for brokering the deal between ACP and Sojitz. (Id. ¶ 51.) Schembari resigned from his position at Jet Edge on March 14, 2016. (Id. ¶ 58.) On May 5, 2016, Sojitz broke off negotiations for the equity purchase of Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 59.) Plaintiff alleges Sakurai, Sojitz, and the other Defendants along with Schembari were responsible for convincing Jet Edge's clients to break their aircraft charter management agreements (ACMAs) with Jet Edge, which was accomplished, in part, by making disparaging comments about Jet Edge to Jet Edge customers. (Id. ¶¶ 50, 61.) Between March and December 2016, five companies terminated their ACMAs with Jet Edge and entered into agreements with ACP for operation and management services for their aircrafts, including (1) Sam Cayman, Inc., (2) Fast Retailing Co., LTD., (3) Sega Sammy Holdings, Inc., (4) Pocket Corporation, [*8] and (5) Hideyuki Busujima. (Id. ¶¶ 61-66.) Defendants also copied Jet Edge's confidential information, including its ACMAs, employee handbook, and employment contracts in order to set up ACP. (Id. ¶ 78.) Plaintiff has suffered damages because of Defendants' conduct due to lost clients. (Id. ¶ 80.)

III. APPLICATION TO FILE UNDER SEAL

On April 8, 2019, Plaintiff Jet Edge submitted an application to file documents under seal in support of its Opposition to the Sojitz MTD ("Application," Dkt. No. 38) and a sealed declaration in support of the Application. ("Plaintiff Decl.," Dkt. No. 39.) On April 12, 2019, Defendants filed a sealed declaration in support of the Application ("Defendants' Decl.," Dkt. No. 40) along with a Declaration of Sojitz Jet Vice President Yohei Sakurai ("Sakurai Decl.," Dkt No 40-1).

A. Legal Standard

[1] Jet Edge sued Schembari in the related action Western Air Charter, Inc., v. Schembari, No. 2:17-cv-00420JGB(KSx) (C.D. Cal 2017), so he is not a Defendant here. All Citations to filings in the Schembari Action will appear as "Schembari Dkt. No. __."

There is a strong presumption of public access to judicial records and documents. Nixon v. Warner Commc'ns, Inc., 435 U.S. 589, 597 n.7, 98 S. Ct. 1306, 55 L. Ed. 2d 570 (1978) ("It is clear that the courts of this country recognize a general right to inspect and copy public records and documents, including judicial records and documents."); Pintos v. Pac. Creditors Ass'n, 605 F.3d 665, 677 (9th Cir. 2010). The presumption applies to pleadings filed with the court and extends to discovery material attached to those pleadings. [*9] Foltz v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 331 F.3d 1122, 1134 (9th Cir. 2003). Although a request to seal judicial records offends the presumption in favor of public access, the right of access "is not absolute." Id. at 1135.

Generally, two standards govern requests to seal documents: the "compelling reasons" standard and the "good cause" standard. Pintos, 605 F.3d 665, 677. A party seeking to seal judicial records relating to a dispositive motion must overcome the strong presumption of public access by satisfying the compelling reasons standard. Kamakana v. City and Cty of Honolulu, 447 F.3d 1172, 1178 (9th Cir. 2006). "That is, the party must articulate compelling reasons supported by specific factual findings that outweigh the general history of access and the public policies favoring disclosure." Id. at 1178-79 (internal citation of quotation marks omitted). "[C]ompelling reasons sufficient to outweigh the public's interest in disclosure and justify the sealing of court records exist when such court files might have become a vehicle for improper purposes, such as the use of records to gratify private spite, promote public scandal, circulate libelous statements, or release trade secrets." Id. (citing Nixon, 435 U.S. at 598). However, "[t]he mere fact that the production of records may lead to a litigant's embarrassment, incrimination, or exposure to further litigation will not, without more, compel [*10] the court to seal its records." Id. (citing Foltz, 331 F.3d at 1136).

While the presumption of public access is the starting point of a court's analysis for dispositive motions, the presumption does not apply to non-dispositive motions. Id. at 1179; see also Pintos, 565 F.3d at 678-79. "[T]he public has less of a need for access to court records attached only to non-dispositive motions because those documents are often unrelated, or only tangentially related, to the underlying cause of action." Kamakana, 447 F.3d at 1179 (internal citation omitted). In such instances, a party moving to seal judicial records need only meet the good cause standard. Foltz, 331 F.3d at 1135; Phillips ex rel. Estates of Byrd v. General Motors Corp., 307 F.3d 1206, 1213 (9th Cir. 2002).

The good cause standard, defined by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(c), is the same good cause standard that applies to the entry of a protective order: "The court may, for good cause, issue an order to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense ...." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c). Pursuant to the good cause standard, a court must determine whether "good cause exists to protect th[e] information from being disclosed to the public by balancing the needs for discovery against the need for confidentiality." Pintos, 605 F.3d at 678 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). Notably, only a particularized showing of good cause satisfies the standard. Kamakana, 447 F.3d at 1180. [*11] A blanket protective order on its own is insufficient to establish good cause for purposes of an application to seal. Foltz, 331 F.3d at 1133.

B. Discussion

A motion to dismiss is a dispositive motion. See In re PPA Products Liability Litig., 460 F.3d 1217, 1231 (9th Cir. 2006). Accordingly, Defendant must meet the "compelling reasons" standard. See Pintos, 605 F.3d 665 at 677.

The following documents are the subject of Plaintiff's Application:

1. Exhibit 1 of the Declaration of Robert Estrin in Support of Plaintiff's Opposition to Sojitz Jet Corporation's Motion to Dismiss
2. Exhibit 2 of the Declaration of Robert Estrin in Support of Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss
3. Exhibit 3 of the Declaration of Robert Estrin in Support of Plaintiff's Opposition to Sojitz Jet Corporation's Motion to Dismiss
4. Plaintiff's Opposition to Sojitz Jet Corporation's Motion to Dismiss at 6:1-6:27

Local Rule 79-5.2.2(b), provides:

> "At least 3 days before seeking to file under seal a document containing information previously designated as confidential by another pursuant to a protective order,[2] the Filing Party must confer with the person that designated the material confidential (the "Designating Party") in an attempt to eliminate or minimize the need for filing under seal by means of redaction. If the document cannot be suitably redacted [*12] by agreement, the Filing Party may file an application pursuant to subsection (a), but the supporting declaration must identify the material previously designated as confidential, as well as the Designating Party, and must describe in detail the efforts made to resolve the issue. The declaration must be served on the Designating Party of the same day it is filed, and proof of this service must be filed with the declaration."

Pursuant to this L.R. 79-5.2.2, Plaintiff's counsel conferred with Defendants' counsel on April 5, 2019, three days prior to the filing of this application. (Appl. at 1.) Plaintiff's then filed the application on April 8, 2019. (Id.) Four days later, on April 12, 2019, Defendants filed a declaration narrowing the request for sealing to items Exhibits 1 and 2 of the Declaration of Robert Estrin in Support of Plaintiff's Opposition to Sojitz Jet Corporation's Motion to Dismiss. (Defendants' Decl. at 2.) Defendants do not seek to seal Exhibit 3 nor any portion of the Opposition. Defendants also submitted a declaration by Sojitz Manager and Sojitz Jet Vice President Yohei Sakurai to support sealing Exhibits 1 and 2 of the Declaration. (Sakurai Decl. ¶ 4.)

Protecting [*13] proprietary business information can be a compelling reason to permit the filing of a document under seal. See *Morawski v. Lightstorm Entertainment, Inc., 2013 WL 12122289, at 2 (C.D. Cal. Jan 14, 2013); see also *Bauer Bros. LLC v. Nike, Inc., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72848, 2012 WL 1899838, at 1 (S.D. Cal. May 24, 2012). A compelling reason exists where public disclosure of proprietary business information could harm competitive standing and/or result in the improper use of the information by others who might circumvent investing their own time and resources. See *Morawski, 2013 WL 12122289, at 2; *Bauer Bros., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72848, 2012 WL 1899838, at 1.

The Court finds that Defendants, as the designating party, have satisfied the compelling reasons standard such that sealing is appropriate. The Sakurai Declaration discusses how Exhibits 1 and 2 contain a copy of a March 31, 2017 Stock Purchase Agreement by and among Sojitz Corporation, ACP Jet Charters, Inc, and Cosa di Famiglia Holdings, LLC ("Stock Purchase Agreement") and a copy of a July 3, 2017 Escrow Agreement between Sojitz Corporation, Sojitz Jet Corporation, ACP Jet Charters, Inc. and Cosa di Famiglia Holdings, LLC ("Escrow Agreement") respectively. (Sakurai Decl. ¶¶ 3-4.) Sakurai notes Sojitz treats the key economic terms for both the Stock Purchase Agreement and the Escrow Agreement as "non-public, confidential, and commercially sensitive information" because they are unavailable to the public and would [*14] be of value to a competitor or future counterparty of Sojitz or Sojitz Jet. (Id.) Here, the Court finds public disclosure of the Stock Purchase Agreement and the Escrow Agreement would harm Sojitz's standing in negotiations. The economic terms contained in the Stock Purchase and Escrow Agreements represent the final product of negotiations, and their public dissemination would give Sojitz's future business partners the upper-hand in negotiations of similar deals. Defendants also submitted a copy of the relevant sealable material with the proposed redactions highlighted as required by the Local Rules.

The Court finds Defendants have established a compelling reason to seal portions of the Stock Purchase and Escrow Agreements. These documents contain economic terms which could provide an advantage to Sojitz's business partners or competitors if publicized. Thus the Court also finds Plaintiff has met the requirements of L.R. 79-5.2.2(b). Thus, the Court GRANTS IN PART Plaintiff's Application with respect to Exhibits 1 and 2.

It appears Defendants invoke the protective order from the Schembari action to prevent Plaintiff from alleging facts or presenting evidence in this action. The protective order in the [*15] Schembari action extended to the commencement of trial and does not govern the action here. If parties seek to protect any information in this matter, the parties must stipulate to a new protective order.

[2] Although there is no Protective Order in this action, the parties, in light of the Protective Order in Western Air Charter, Inc., v. Schembari, No. 2:17-cv-00420JGB(KSx) (C.D. Cal 2017) have prepared the Application and relevant declarations pursuant to Local Rule 79-5.2.2(b). The Court will analyze the Application under section b of the L.R. 79-5.2.2 but advises the parties to either seek a Protective Order in this matter prior to filing a similar application in the future or to apply pursuant to L.R. 79-5.2.2(a), for Documents Not Designated as Confidential Pursuant to a Protective Order in future cases.

IV. LEGAL STANDARD

A. Personal Jurisdiction

"The general rule is that personal jurisdiction over a defendant is proper if it is permitted by a long-arm statute and if the exercise of that jurisdiction does not violate federal due process." Pebble Beach Co. v. Caddy, 453 F.3d 1151, 1154-55 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Nat. Bank of Coops., 103 F.3d 888, 893 (9th Cir. 1996)). Because California authorizes jurisdiction to the fullest extent permitted by the Constitution, see Cal. Code Civ. P. § 410.10, the only question the Court must ask is whether the exercise of jurisdiction over Defendants would be consistent with due process. Harris Rutsky & Co. Ins. Servs., Inc. v. Bell & Clements Ltd., 328 F.3d 1122, 1129 (9th Cir. 2003).

The Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause permits courts to exercise personal jurisdiction over any defendant who has sufficient "minimum contacts" with the forum such that the "maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945). There are two recognized bases for exercising personal jurisdiction over a non-resident defendant: (1) "general jurisdiction," which arises where defendant's activities in the forum state are sufficiently "substantial" or "continuous and systematic" to justify the exercise [*16] of jurisdiction over him in all matters; and (2) "specific jurisdiction," which arises when a defendant's specific contacts with the forum give rise to the claim in question. See Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 414-16, 104 S. Ct. 1868, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1984).

Where, as here, a court decides a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction without an evidentiary hearing, the plaintiff need only make a prima facie showing of jurisdictional facts to withstand the motion to dismiss. Ballard v. Savage, 65 F.3d 1495, 1498 (9th Cir. 1995); Doe v. Unocal Corp., 27 F. Supp. 2d 1174, 1181 (C.D. Cal. 1998), aff'd,248 F.3d 915 (9th Cir. 2001). Plaintiff's version of the facts is taken as true for purposes of the motion if not directly controverted, and conflicts between the parties' affidavits must be resolved in plaintiff's favor for purposes of deciding whether a prima facie case for personal jurisdiction exists. AT&T v. Compagnie Bruxelles Lambert, 94 F.3d 586, 588 (9th Cir. 1996); Unocal, 27 F. Supp. 2d at 1181.

B. Failure to State a Claim

A Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in a complaint. "Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is appropriate only where the complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory." Mendiondo v. Centinela Hosp. Med. Ctr., 521 F.3d 1097, 1104 (9th Cir. 2008). Factual allegations must be enough to "raise a right to relief above a speculative level." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).

Rule 12(b)(6) must be read in conjunction with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a), which requires a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that a pleader is entitled to relief," in order to [*17] give the defendant "fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Id.; see also *Horosny v. Burlington Coat Factory, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 179419, 2015 WL 12532178, at 3 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 26, 2015). In considering a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a court accepts the plaintiff's factual allegations in the complaint and construes the pleadings in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. See Shwarz v. United States, 234 F.3d 428, 435 (9th Cir. 2000). Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief is "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

V. DISCUSSION

A. Elsie Quenga and Sojitz Jet

Quenga and Sojitz Jet seek dismissal of all claims against them for lack of personal jurisdiction. (MTD at 3; Sojitz MTD at 3.)

1. General Personal Jurisdiction

Elsie Quenga is a citizen of and domiciled in Guam. (FAC ¶ 15.) She does not have a mailing address, bank account, property, or telephone number in California. ("Quenga Decl.," Dkt. No. 27-1 at 3.) She has only been to California for the purposes of visiting her sister. (Id.) Unquestionably, Elsie Quenga is not domiciled in California and general jurisdiction is not proper. See Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A., 564 U.S. 915, 131 S. Ct. 2846 at 2851, 180 L. Ed. 2d 796. Similarly, Defendant Sojitz Jet is incorporated in Guam and has its principal place of business in Guam. (Sojitz MTD at 5.) Thus, it is also not subject to general jurisdiction. [*18]

2. Specific Personal Jurisdiction

Specific jurisdiction arises when a defendant's specific contacts with the forum give rise to the claim in question. See Helicopteros, 466 U.S. at 414-416. In the Ninth Circuit, courts apply a three-part test to determine whether specific jurisdiction exists:

> (1) the non-resident defendant must purposefully direct his activities or consummate some transaction with the forum or resident thereof; or perform some act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws;
> (2) the claim must be one which arises out of or relates to the defendant's forum-related activities; and
> (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must comport with fair play and substantial justice, i.e. it must be reasonable.

Yahoo! Inc. v. La Ligue Contre Le Racisme Et L'Antisemitisme, 433 F.3d 1199, 1205-06 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing Schwarzenegger v. Fred Martin Motor Co., 374 F.3d 797, 802 (9th Cir. 2004)).

The plaintiff bears the burden of satisfying the first two prongs of this test. Schwarzenegger 374 F.3d at 802. If it does, "the burden then shifts to the defendant[s] to 'present a compelling case' that the exercise of jurisdiction would not be reasonable." Id. (quoting Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476-78, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 (1985)).

"Purposeful availment analysis examines whether the defendant's contacts with the forum are attributable to his own actions or are solely the actions of the plaintiff." [*19] Sinatra v. Nat'l Enquirer, 854 F.2d 1191, 1195 (9th Cir. 1988). To demonstrate purposeful availment, plaintiffs must show that Quenga "engage[d] in some form of affirmative conduct allowing or promoting the transaction of business within the forum state." Gray & Co. v. Firstenberg Mach. Co., 913 F.2d 758, 760 (9th Cir. 1990) (citing Shute v. Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc., 897 F.2d 377, 381 (9th Cir. 1990)); see also Burger King, 471 U.S. at 475 ("This 'purposeful availment' requirement ensures that a defendant will not be haled into a jurisdiction solely as a result of 'random,' 'fortuitous,' or 'attenuated' contacts, . . . or of the 'unilateral activity of another party or a third person . . . ."). Quenga's contacts must be such that he should "reasonably [have] anticipate[d] being haled into court [ ]here." World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (1980).

Courts distinguish between contract and tort cases in assessing whether a defendant has purposefully availed itself of the benefits of conducting activities in the forum. See Roth v. Garcia-Marquez, 942 F.2d 617, 621 (9th Cir. 1991); see also Schwarzenegger, 374 F.3d at 802 (noting that "purposeful availment" is often used "in shorthand fashion, to include both purposeful availment and purposeful direction[, the jurisdictional test in tort cases.] [B]ut availment and direction are, in fact, two distinct concepts").

"[P]urposeful availment analysis is most often used in suits sounding in contract." Schwarzenegger, 374 F.3d at 802. The fact that the defendant entered into a contract with a forum resident, standing alone, is [*20] not sufficient to establish purposeful availment. See Burger King, 471 U.S. at 478; Gray, 913 F.2d at 760; Sher v. Johnson, 911 F.2d 1357, 1362 (9th Cir. 1990). Rather, the court must utilize "a 'highly realistic' approach that recognizes that a 'contract' is 'ordinarily but an intermediate step serving to tie up prior business negotiations with future consequences which themselves are the real object of the business transaction.' . . . It is these factors—prior negotiations and contemplated future consequences, along with the terms of the contract and the parties' actual course of dealing—that must be evaluated in determining whether the defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum." Burger King, 471 U.S. at 479.

In tort cases, by contrast, courts exercise jurisdiction over defendants who have engaged in an act that is purposefully directed at, and has an effect in, the forum state, even if the act itself takes place outside state boundaries. See Schwarzenegger, 374 F.3d at 802-03. The Supreme Court clarified that "although physical presence in the forum is not a prerequisite to jurisdiction, physical entry into the State—either by the defendant in person or through an agent, goods, mail, or some other means—is certainly a relevant contact." Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 134 S. Ct. 1115, 1125, 188 L. Ed. 2d 12 (2014). As a result, it stated, "a 'mere injury to a forum resident is not a sufficient [*21] connection to the forum.' Rather, 'an injury is jurisdictionally relevant only insofar as it shows that the defendant has formed a contact with the forum State.'" Picot v. Weston, 780 F.3d 1206, 1214 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Walden, 134 S. Ct. at 1122). This is because "'minimum contacts' analysis looks to the defendant's contacts with the forum State itself, not the defendant's contacts with persons who reside there." Walden, 134 S. Ct. at 1122 (emphasis added); id. at 1123 ("Due process requires that a defendant be haled into court in a forum State based on his own affiliation with the State, not based on the 'random, fortuitous, or attenuated' contacts he makes by interacting with other persons affiliated with the State"). Thus, "a defendant's relationship with a plaintiff or third party, standing alone, is an insufficient basis for jurisdiction." Id. at 1123.

Applying this general principle, the Walden Court explained that the purposeful direction or "effects test" enunciated in Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 (1984), reflected the fact that > the reputation-based 'effects' of the alleged libel [in that case] connected the defendants to California, not just to the plaintiff. The strength of that connection was largely a function of the nature of the libel tort. However scandalous a newspaper article might be, it can lead to a loss of reputation [*22] only if communicated to (and read and understood by) third persons. Accordingly, the reputational injury caused by the defendants' story would not have occurred but for the fact that the defendants wrote an article for publication in California that was read by a large number of California citizens. Indeed, because publication to third persons is a necessary element of libel, the defendants' intentional tort actually occurred in California. In this way, the 'effects' caused by the defendants' article—i.e., the injury to the plaintiff's reputation in the estimation of the California public-connected the defendants' conduct to California, not just to a plaintiff who lived there. That connection, combined with the various facts that gave the article a California focus, sufficed to authorize the California court's exercise of jurisdiction.

Walden, 134 S. Ct. at 1123 (citations omitted). All of the claims alleged against Quenga and Sojitz Jet sound in tort. The court must therefore examine whether Quenga and Sojitz Jet purposefully directed their activities toward California such that those contacts make it proper to exercise personal jurisdiction over them in this forum.

"In analyzing whether a court has specific [*23] personal jurisdiction over a tort claim, [the Ninth Circuit applies a] three-part 'effects' test derived from Calder[, ...] 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804.... Under this test, a defendant purposefully directed his activities at the forum if [s]he: '(1) committed an intentional act, (2) expressly aimed at the forum state, (3) causing harm that the defendant knows is likely to be suffered in the forum state.'" Picot, 780 F.3d at 1213-14 (citations omitted). As both the Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit have clarified, "applying this test, [courts] must 'look[ ] to the defendant's contacts with the forum State itself, not the defendant's contacts with persons who reside there.'" Id. at 1214 (quoting Walden, 134 S. Ct. at 285).

a. Quenga

Plaintiff argues Quenga is subject to specific personal jurisdiction in California because of her interference with Jet Edge's ACMAs. ("Opp.," Dkt. No. 30 at 5.)

The effects test from Calder is appropriate here, as Plaintiff alleges the following torts: intentional interference of contractual relations, intentional and negligent interference with prospective business advantage, unfair business practices, and fraud. With respect to the first prong of the Calder test, Plaintiff alleges Quenga committed intentional acts. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges [*24] Quenga joined a conspiracy to intentionally interfere with contracts between Jet Edge and its customers, stole Jet Edge's customers, and used confidential information to launch a new company. (FAC ¶ 7.) Plaintiff further contends Quenga was involved in creating a business plan based on the management of 6 jets which she knew were managed by Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 51(d).) The Court finds these allegations sufficient to satisfy the first prong.

The second prong, "express aiming," asks whether the defendant's allegedly tortious action was "expressly aimed at the forum." Picot, 780 F.3d 1206 (quoting Brayton Purcell LLP v. Recordon & Recordon, 606 F.3d 1124, 1129 (9th Cir. 2019). Jet Edge argues this requirement is satisfied because Quenga's acts were targeted at Jet Edge, a California Corporation who felt the effects of her actions in California. (Opp. at 5 (citing CE Distribution, LLC v. New Sensor Corp., 380 F.3d 1107, 1111 (9th Cir. 2004)).)

"[A]n injury is jurisdictionally relevant only insofar as it shows that the defendant has formed a contact with the forum State." Picot, 780 F.3d 1206, 1214 (9th Cir. 2015) (emphasis added). In Walden, the Supreme Court explained that personal jurisdiction analysis must focus on the defendant's contacts with the forum state, not the defendant's contacts with a resident of the forum. 134 S. Ct. at 284. Plaintiff's argument ignores the effect of Walden and Picot on the purposeful direction analysis. "[T]he [*25] plaintiff cannot be the only link between the defendant and the forum." Id. Here, Plaintiff anchors its analysis of Quenga's California contacts on Jet Edge's status as a California corporation. For example, Plaintiff states Quenga "interfered with these contracts by conspiring with Defendants to interfere with Jet Edge's California contracts. . ." and "caused harm that she knew was likely to occur in California." (FAC ¶ 27.) The FAC alleges no other contacts Quenga formed with California. Accordingly, Plaintiff does not satisfy the second Calder prong, and the FAC fails to satisfy the effects test overall. Quenga is not subject to specific personal jurisdiction, and the Court GRANTS her Motion to Dismiss as to all claims against her.

b. Sojitz Jet

Plaintiff alleges Defendant Sojitz Jet is subject to specific personal jurisdiction because it is the alter ego of Sojitz, for whom jurisdiction is not challenged. (Redacted Opp. at 5.) In order to meet the alter ego test, a plaintiff "must make out a prima facie case (1) that there is such unity of interest and ownership that the separate personalities [of the two entities] no longer exist and (2) that failure to disregard [their separate identities] would [*26] result in fraud or injustice.'" Doe v. Unocal Corp., 248 F.3d 915, 926 (9th Cir. 2001) (alterations in original) (quoting AT & T Co. v. Compagnie Bruxelles Lambert, 94 F.3d 586, 591 (9th Cir.1996)), abrogated on other grounds by Williams v. Yamaha Motor Co. Ltd., 851 F.3d 1015 (9th Cir. 2017). The"unity of interest and ownership" prong requires "a showing that the parent controls the subsidiary to such a degree as to render the latter the mere instrumentality of the former." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). "This test envisions pervasive control over the subsidiary, such as when a parent corporation 'dictates every facet of the subsidiary's business—from broad policy decisions to routine matters of day-to-day operation.'" Ranza v. Nike, Inc., 793 F.3d 1059, 1073 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Unocal, 248 F.3d at 926). Complete ownership and shared management personnel are, by themselves, insufficient to establish the required pervasive control. See Harris Rutsky & Co. Ins. Servs. v. Bell & Clements Ltd., 328 F.3d 1122, 1135 (9th Cir. 2003).

In Unocal, the Ninth Circuit held a plaintiff fails to meet the "unity of interest and ownership" prong when the evidence shows only "an active parent corporation involved directly in decision-making about its subsidiaries' holdings," but each entity "observe[s] all of the corporate formalities necessary to maintain corporate separateness." 248 F.3d at 928. Courts have identified a number of factors that may bear on whether there is a unity of interest and ownership. A list of non-dispositive factors includes:

> the commingling [*27] of funds and other assets; the failure to segregate funds of the individual and the corporation; the unauthorized diversion of corporate funds to other than corporate purposes; the treatment by an individual of corporate assets as his own; the failure to seek authority to issue stock or issue stock under existing authorization; the representation by an individual that he is personally liable for corporate debts; the failure to maintain adequate corporate records; the intermingling of individual and corporate records, the ownership of all the stock by a single individual or family; the domination or control of the corporation by the stockholders; the use of a single address for the individual and the corporation; the inadequacy of the corporation's capitalization; the use of the corporation as a mere conduit for an individual's business; the concealment of the ownership of the corporation; the disregard of formalities and the failure to maintain arm's-length transactions with the corporation; and the attempts to segregate liabilities to the corporation.

Butler v. Adoption Media, LLC, 486 F. Supp. 2d 1022, 1067 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (quoting Mid—Century Ins. Co. v. Gardner, 9 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 1213 n.3, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918 (1992)); see also id. at 1077 (finding no personal jurisdiction under an alter ego theory because plaintiffs did not establish alter ego [*28] liability). Because there is no single dispositive factor, the Court should look at the totality of circumstances to determine whether application of the alter ego doctrine is appropriate. Id. (citing Sonora Diamond Corp. v. Superior Court, 83 Cal. App. 4th 523, 539, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 824 (2000)).

Here, Sojitz Jet is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Sojitz. However, this, by itself, is not enough show unity of interest, as Plaintiff must also show Sojitz sufficiently controls the actions of Sojitz Jet. Plaintiff alleges the information and circumstances of the Stock Purchase Agreement provides evidence of Sojitz's control over Sojitz Jet. For example, Plaintiff argues the fact that Sojitz Jet was created a month before the Stock Purchase Agreement, then subsequently purchased 75% of ACP as part of the agreement suggest Sojitz created Sojitz Jet for the purpose of carrying out the Stock Purchase. (Redacted Opp. at 6.) Plaintiff further points to language from the Stock Purchase agreement that states "Sojitz shall cause Sojitz Jet to use commercially reasonable efforts to enter into, execute, and deliver the PJI MIPA" to further show Sojitz's control over Sojitz Jet. (Stock Purchase at PHX004469). Finally, Plaintiff also points to the Escrow Agreement to support its theory of unity of interest. The Escrow Agreement shows [*29] Sojitz and Sojitz Jet share a common address and a common officer in Yohei Sakurai. (Escrow Agreement at PHX004939.) The Court finds Plaintiff presents compelling evidence showing a unity of ownership and interest.

However, Plaintiff fails to establish the second prong of the alter ego test, as it cannot show alter ego liability is necessary to prevent fraud or injustice where all the alleged wrongful conduct giving rise to this action happened well before Sojitz Jet's formation. The events alleged in the FAC took place between July 2013, when Sojitz entered into an MOU with Jet Edge, and March 2016 when Sojitz acquired ACP. (FAC ¶¶ 30-73.) Plaintiff does not allege any of the former Jet Edge customers at issue terminated their contract with Jet Edge after Sojitz Jet formed in February 2017. Even if the Court were to impute Sojitz's contacts with the forum state to Sojitz Jet under an alter-ego theory, only those Sojitz contacts that occurred during the alter-ego relationship (i.e. during the existence of Sojitz Jet) would be attributable to Sojtz Jet. See Young v. Actions Semiconductor Co., 386 F. App'x 623, 628 (9th Cir. 2010) (declining to exercise specific personal jurisdiction over a company that acquired shares of another company whose conduct gave [*30] rise to action in question where the acquisition took place after the alleged wrongdoing.) Because none of Sojitz's alleged forum contacts took place after the formation of Sojitz Jet, none can be attributed to Sojitz Jet here.[3] Thus, declining to exercise jurisdiction over Sojitz Jet creates no fraud or injustice. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Sojitz Jet.

B. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim [4]

1. Plaintiff Adequately Pleads Defendants' Conspiracy

Civil conspiracy is not a separate cause of action; it merely "imposes liability on persons whom, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its preparation." Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal. 4th 503, 510-11, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994). And "[p]ersonal liability, if otherwise justified, may rest upon a 'conspiracy' among officers and directors to injure third parties through the corporation." Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co., 24 Cal. 3d 773, 785, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 (1979). To establish a civil conspiracy, Plaintiff must allege: "(a) an agreement among the alleged conspirators to commit a tortious act (formation and operation of the conspiracy); (b) the tortious act(s) committed pursuant to the agreement; and (c) resulting damage to the Plaintiffs." Woodard v. Labrada, 2017 WL 1018307, *9 (C.D. Cal. March 10, 2017) (citing Wyatt, 24 Cal. 3d 773, 157 Cal. Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45). Courts apply Rule 9(b)'s heightened [*31] pleading standard to claims of civil conspiracy where the object of the conspiracy is to commit fraud. See Wasco Prods., Inc., v. Southwall Techs., Inc., 435 F.3d 989, 990-91 (9th Cir. 2006). Yet, "there is no absolute requirement that where several defendants are sued in connection with an alleged fraudulent scheme, the complaint must identify false statements made by each and every defendant." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007).

Rule 9(b) requires a party alleging fraud to "state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Particularity means the pleader should state the "who, what, where, when, and how of the misconduct charged." Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). At its core, Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement exists to give defendants fair notice of the alleged misconduct "so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Id. If a complaint alleges fraudulent conduct by multiple defendants, it may not "lump multiple defendants together," because Rule 9(b) obligates plaintiffs to "identify the role of each defendant in the alleged fraudulent scheme." Swartz, 476 F.3d at 764-65 (9th Cir. 2007) (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). Rule 9(b), by its terms, does not apply to allegations of a defendant's state of mind (e.g., a defendant's knowledge of the falsity of a misrepresentation), [*32] which may be pleaded generally. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) ("Malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally."); see also Swingless Golf Club Corp. v. Taylor, 679 F. Supp. 2d 1060, 1067 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (citing Zucco Partners, LLC v. Digimarc Corp., 552 F.3d 981, 990 (9th Cir. 2009)); Shinde v. Nithyananda Found., No. EDCV 13-363, 2015 WL 12732434, at *4 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 23, 2015).

Here, Plaintiff adequately pleads conspiracy based on its allegations that the remaining Defendants[5] aided Schembari in his tortious interference with contractual relations and his breaches of contract and his duty of loyalty. (FAC ¶ 61.) The FAC alleges Defendants, along with Schembari, planned to commit and committed these wrongful actions in order to steal Jet Edge's customers, including "copying Jet Edge's confidential information, including its ACMAs, employee handbook, employment contracts and more.[. .] by pretending that it was interested in developing a long term relationship with Jet Edge." (Id. ¶ 87.) In a related case, Schembari was found liable for breach of contract, breach of his duty of loyalty, intentional interference with contractual relations, and a jury found

[3] The Court also declines Plaintiff's request for jurisdictional discovery as it would be fruitless.

[4] Defendant Sojitz Jet filed a separate Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim (Dkt. No. 33) that echoes the arguments in the other Defendants' Motion (Dkt. No. 27). For the purposes of efficiency, all citations in this section will be to Defendants' MTD (Dkt. No. 27.)

[5] The remaining Defendants will hereby be referred to as "Defendants" and will no longer include Quenga or Sojitz Jet for purposes of this motion.

that he, along with his co-defendants ACP, Cosa Di Famiglia, and Phenix Jet LLC, acted with malice, oppression of fraud. (Schembari Dkt. No. 302.)

Plaintiff's FAC provides detail as to each Defendants' actions in [*33] furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. Plaintiff alleges Sojitz planted Schembari inside Jet Edge to start planning a new business to disrupt Jet Edge's contracts, meeting with Schembari on December 18, 2014 to discuss the plan to set up ACP, and inducing Jet Edge's customers to leave Jet Edge and join ACP. (FAC ¶¶ 40, 50.) As part of this scheme, Plaintiff alleges Sakurai planned a competing company with Schembari while Schembari was still employed by Jet Edge and diverted jet N2020 away from Jet Edge's management. (FAC ¶¶ 44, 49.) Plaintiff alleges Quenga met with Schembari in December 2015 to create a business plan for ACP to compete with and steal customers from Jet Edge while Schembari was still employed by Jet Edge and assisted in acquiring an aircraft operators certificate (AOC) for ACP. (Id. ¶¶ 46-47.) Plaintiff alleges TSI entered into a broker agreement with Schembari's wholly owned company in violation of Schembari's employment agreement and payed Schembari thousands of dollars pursuant to the agreement. (Id. ¶¶ 51.) Naito allegedly met with Bob Seidel of Alerion on March 8, 2016 to discuss the purchase of an AOC for ACP. (Id.) These allegations sufficiently establish with [*34] particularity each Defendant's role in aiding Sojitz's efforts to interfere with contracts and steal confidential information. Thus the Court finds Plaintiff has adequately plead conspiracy to commit fraud under the heightened Rule 9 standards.

2. CUTSA Preemption Generally

Section 3426.7(b) of the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("CUTSA" "preempts common law claims that are 'based on the same nucleus of facts as the misappropriation of trade secrets claim for relief.'" K.C. Multimedia, Inc. v. Bank of Am. Tech. & Operations., Inc., 171 Cal. App. 4th 939, 958, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 247 (2009) (quoting Digital Envoy, Inc. v. Google, Inc, 370 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1035 (N.D. Cal. 2005)). The statute is broad and "supersedes claims based on the misappropriation of confidential information, whether or not that information meets the statutory definition of a trade secret." Mattel, Inc. v. MGA Entm't, Inc., 782 F. Supp. 2d 911, 987 (C.D. Cal. 2011.) CUTSA even preempts a common law tort claim seeking "'something more' than trade secret relief[.]" Id. at 958. This rule precludes a plaintiff from asserting claims that "do not genuinely allege 'alternative legal theories' but are a transparent attempt to evade the strictures of CUTSA by restating a trade secrets claim as something else." Silvaco Data Sys. v. Intel Corp., 184 Cal. App. 4th 210, 240, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27 (2010), disapproved on other grounds in Kwikset v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 337, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011).

However, a common law tort is not preempted by CUTSA where its allegations "[are] not based on the existence of a trade secret." Angelica Textile Servs., Inc, v. Park, 220 Cal. App. 4th 495, 508, 163 Cal. Rptr. 3d 192 (2013); see also [*35] Western Air Charter, Inc., v. Schembari, No. 2:17-cv-00420JGB(KSx), Dkt. No. 166 at *5 (C.D. Cal 2017) (finding a sufficient basis for an intentional interference with contractual relations claim on a basis independent from trade secrets). "The test for whether a claim overlaps with the CUTSA involves 'a factual inquiry, one that examines the conduct alleged in the claim.'" *GeoData Sys. Mgmt., Inc. v. Am. Pac. Plastic Fabricators, Inc., No. 5:15-cv-04125VAP(JEMx), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 184789, 2016 WL 6601656, at 7 (C.D. Cal. 2016) (quoting *Lifeline Food Co. v. Gilman Cheese Corp., No. 5:15-CV-00034-PSG, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64155, 2015 WL 2357246, 1 (N.D. Cal. 2015)). "To avoid CUTSA preemption, therefore, a claim must be based on 'sufficient independent facts to be viable after the trade secret facts are removed.'" *GeoData Sys., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 184789, 2016 WL 6601656 at 13 (quoting *Jardin v. DATAllegro, Inc., No. 10-cv-2552IEG(WVGx), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84509, 2011 WL 3300152, 2 (S.D. Cal. July 29, 2011) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

3. Related Issues from the Schembari Action

In Schembari, both this Court and Judge Birotte weighed similar issues in analyzing whether Plaintiff Jet Edge's claims against defendants Schembari, ACP, and Cosa Di Famiglia, LLC were preempted by CUTSA. (Schembari Dkt. No. 166 at 1.) These opinions are instructive given the relationship between the two cases. In Schembari, which involved much of the same underlying conduct as here, Plaintiff [*36] explicitly alleged a trade secret misappropriation claim under CUTSA. (Schembari Dkt. No. 87.) In the Schembari action, Defendants argued Plaintiff's intentional interference with contractual relations, interference with prospective economic advantage, negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, and unfair competition claims should be preempted under CUTSA. (Id. at 4-8.) Judge Birotte ruled all four of those claims were preempted by CUTSA due to having a common nucleus of facts with Plaintiff's misappropriation of trade secrets claim because the additional claims relied on Schembari's alleged use of confidential client lists. (Id.)

The Schembari case was transferred to this Court on June 19, 2018. (Schembari Dkt. No 142.) On July 2, 2018, Plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration of Judge Birotte's decision to dismiss its intentional interference with contractual relations claim in light of new information uncovered during discovery. (Schembari Dkt. No. 144 at 10.) This information included evidence that Schembari diverted jet N2020 from Jet Edge management to ACP management. (Id. at 8.) On August 3, 2018, the Court granted Plaintiff's motion for reconsideration because this new fact [*37] regarding the diversion of jet N2020 provided Plaintiff with a factual basis for its claim that Schembari interfered with Jet Edge's contract with Sojitz which was not premised on the allegation of Schembari's use of Jet Edge's client information. (Schembari Dkt. 166 at 5.) However, Plaintiff did not argue the new information had any effect on Judge Birotte's rulings that CUTSA preempted Plaintiff's interference with prospective economic advantage, negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, and unfair competition claims. Thus, the Court did not consider the effect of this new fact on the preemption analysis concerning those claims.

4. Claims Six and Seven: Fraud and Unfair Competition

Plaintiff alleges Defendants Sojitz and Naito are liable for fraud and that each Defendant is liable under California's unfair competition law ("UCL," Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code Section 17200, et seq.). (FAC ¶¶ 113-126.) Defendants argue Plaintiff fails to satisfy Rule 9(b)'s pleading requirements because it has not sufficiently identified the particular circumstances of any fraudulent conduct. (MTD at 16.) Defendants further argue CUTSA preempts Plaintiff's claims for fraud and UCL violation because they are each premised on the alleged misuse of trade [*38] secret client lists stolen from Jet Edge. (MTD at 10-11.)

The elements of fraud under California law are: (1) a misrepresentation (which may include a false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of its falsity; (3) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. *Barefield v. HSBC Holdings PLC, No. 118-cv-00527LJO(JLT), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130193, 2018 WL 3702307, at 7 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 2, 2018). Plaintiff also seeks relief under the UCL, which prohibits any unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Under the statute there are three varieties of unfair competition: business acts or practices which are unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent. Tucker v. Pacific Bell Mobile Services, 208 Cal. App. 4th 201, 225, 145 Cal. Rptr. 3d 340 (2012) (citing In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 311, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009)). To state a claim under the UCL, a plaintiff must "(1) establish a loss or deprivation of money or property sufficient to qualify as injury in fact, i.e., economic injury, and (2) show that that economic injury was the result of, i.e., caused by, the unfair business practice or false advertising that is the gravamen of the claim." In re Turner, 859 F.3d 1145, 1151 (9th Cir. 2017) (quoting Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal.4th 310, 322, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011) (emphasis in original)). The causation requirement fails if the plaintiff would have suffered "the same harm whether or not a defendant complied with the law." Daro v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. App. 4th 1079, 1099, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 716 (2007).

The Court finds Plaintiff successfully alleges its fraud claim. [*39] Plaintiff alleges Sojitz and Naito contracted an MOU with Jet Edge by fraudulently misrepresenting its intention to establish a long-term mutually beneficial relationship between Sojitz and Jet Edge. (FAC ¶ 118.) Citing testimony from the Schembari action, Plaintiff alleges Sojitz never intended to enter into a joint venture, despite their contrary representations. (Id. ¶¶ 31-32, 118-120.) Rather, Defendants and Schembari allegedly intended to induce Jet Edge's reliance, persuading them to hire Schembari as a pilot and allowing Sojitz to act as a liaison between Jet Edge and its customers. (Id. ¶¶ 120-121.) This put Defendants in the position to disparage Jet Edge to its customers, thus providing the customers with reason to leave Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 50.) Jet Edge alleges this caused its customers to leave, resulting in monetary damages due to lost business. (Id. ¶ 123.) Thus, Plaintiff alleges the necessary elements of its fraud claim.

CUTSA does not preempt Plaintiff's fraud claim because the fraud claim can survive without relying on the same nucleus of facts as a potential trade secret claim.[6] As alleged, Defendants acted fraudulently to "steal Jet Edge's confidential information and [*40] customers." In the Schembari action, Judge Birotte ruled that facts regarding Schembari's use of confidential information were grounds for preemption under CUTSA. (Schembari Dkt. No. 88 at 7.) The Court agrees that using confidential information and client lists falls within the purview of CUTSA preemption. Plaintiff cannot pursue its fraud claim on the basis that Defendants used stolen confidential information. However, Plaintiff states a claim for fraud even when ignoring allegations concerning the use of confidential information. Defendants did not use confidential information to enter into an MOU with Jet Edge. (FAC ¶ 118.) Nor did they use confidential information to induce Jet Edge to hire Schembari. (Id.) Schembari used his position within Jet Edge to divert the N2020 contract and to disparage Jet Edge to its own customers. (Id. ¶¶ 49-50.) These independent acts allowed Defendants to gain access to Jet Edge's clients, resulting in harm to Jet Edge. Thus, Plaintiff alleges fraudulent acts that do not share a common nucleus of fact with a trade secret misappropriation. Plaintiff's fraud claim is not preempted by CUTSA. The Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's [*41] fraud claim because it can survive without allegations concerning theft of confidential information.

Turning to the UCL claim, Plaintiff specifically alleges its cause of actions under the unfair and fraudulent prongs. (Id. ¶ 114.) Plaintiff alleges Defendants and Schembari engaged in unfair and fraudulent competition when they persuaded Jet Edge to sign the MOU and then to hire Schembari with the intent of defrauding Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 119.) A cause of action under the "unfair" prong requires that a plaintiff suffer injury from a direct competitor's unfair act, which means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Levitt v. Yelp! Inc., 765 F.3d 1123, 1136 (9th Cir. 2014). Plaintiff's complaint does not detail how Defendants' acts harm competition, but rather focus on harm to Jet Edge as a competitor, thus failing under the unfair prong. See Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 196, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

To state a claim under the UCL's fraudulent practice prong, a plaintiff must show that "members of the public are likely to be deceived" by the alleged fraudulent conduct. Schnall v. Hertz Corp., 78 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 1167, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 (2000). However, Plaintiff's [*42] allegations focus on how it, not members of the public, were deceived by Defendants' conduct. Thus, it is not clear from the FAC how Defendants inducing Plaintiff to sign the MOU and hire Schembari can be construed as acts that would deceive the public. Accordingly, the Court finds Plaintiff fails to allege a fraudulent practice violation of the UCL. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's UCL claim.[7]

5. Claim One: Intentional Interference with Contractual Relations

Plaintiff alleges Defendants are liable for intentional interference with contractual relations because they acted intentionally to disrupt Jet Edge's contractual relationships with its customers Sam Cayman, Fast Retailing, Sega Sammy, Pocket Corporation, Private Wings, and Busujima. (FAC ¶ 78.) Plaintiff contends its claim is not preempted by CUTSA because they rely on facts independent from the misappropriation of trade secrets. Plaintiff argues it relies on other allegations including: (1) "Sojitz used the MOU merely as a vessel to accomplish its well thought out conspiracy to defraud and harm Jet Edge and steal its Asian business operations, among other things" (Id. ¶ 31);

[6] Although Plaintiff does not expressly allege any trade secrets claim, including a trade secret claim is not required for CUTSA pre-emption. See Silvaco Data Sys. v. Intel Corp., 184 Cal. App. 4th 210, 240, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27 (2010), disapproved on other grounds in Kwikset v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 337, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011).

[7] Although Plaintiff's briefing mentioned a potential action under the UCL's unlawful prong, such an action was absent from the FAC. (Opp. at 24.)

and (2) Defendants "aided and [*43] abetted Schembari to unlawfully breach his duty of loyalty to Plaintiff and intentionally interfere with Plaintiff's contractual relations, all while Schembari was still employed by Jet Edge." (Opp. at 13 (citing FAC ¶¶ 31, 45-55).)

A claim for intentional interference with contractual relations requires a plaintiff to establish: "(1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage." Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990).

As a preliminary matter, Plaintiff alleges the ACMAs were valid contracts and that Defendants had knowledge of these contracts. (FAC ¶¶ 76-77.) The Court first addresses whether the at-will ACMAs are proper subject for this claim. Courts have upheld tortious interference claims regarding at-will contracts. "We have affirmed that interference with an at-will contract is actionable interference on the theory that a contract 'at the will of the parties, respectively does not make it one at the will of others.'" Pac. Gas & Elec., 50 Cal. 3d at 1127 (citations omitted). "The actionable wrong lies in the inducement [*44] to break the contract or to sever the relationship, not in the kind of contract or relationship so disrupted, whether it is written or oral, enforceable or not enforceable." Zimmerman v. Bank of America. 191 Cal. App. 2d 55, 57, 12 Cal. Rptr. 319 (1961).

Defendants cite Reeves v. Hanlon, 33 Cal. 4th 1140, 1152, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 289, 95 P.3d 513 (2004), to argue that the facts alleged are properly pleaded as an intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, not as intentional interference with contractual relations. (MTD at 12.) In Reeves, the California Supreme Court explained that because parties to an at-will employment contract have the right to terminate, tortious interference disrupts the future relationship between two contracted parties. Reeves, 29 Cal. 4th at 1152. However, the Reeves court explicitly noted that plaintiffs can plead intentional interference with an at-will employment contract if they plead and prove an independent wrongful act—i.e. "an act 'proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard'—that induced an at-will employee to leave the plaintiff." Id. at 1153 (quoting Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1156, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003). Although this case does not arise in the context of an at-will employment contract, the Court finds that an independent wrongful act may similarly enable a plaintiff to plead intentional interference with other at-will contracts. [*45]

Here, Plaintiff contends it has pleaded several independent wrongful acts, including its claims Defendants acted fraudulently in entering into an MOU with Jet Edge and induced Schembari to breach his duty of loyalty. (Opp. at 18-19 (citing FAC ¶ 78).) Although the ACMAs from which this claim arises were at-will contracts, Defendants' alleged fraud is an independent wrongful basis on which Plaintiff's claim may rest. See SuperGuide Corp. v. Gemstar Dev. Corp., 2010 WL 11463159, at *13 (C.D. Cal. June 3, 2010) (stating fraud constitutes an "independently wrongful" act for the purposes of a tortious interference claim). Thus, the Court concludes the AMCAs are a proper subject for Plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with contractual relations. Plaintiff further alleges Defendants knew of the existing ACMAs and that Defendants' fraud, which induced Jet Edge to hire Schembari, involved intentional actions, e.g., Schembari's wrongful conduct while employed by Jet Edge, and disrupted the contractual relations the ACMAs embodied. (FAC ¶¶ 76-78.) Plaintiff suffered damages because of this disruption. (FAC ¶¶ 80-81.) Thus, Plaintiff pleads all elements of its intentional interference with contractual relations claim.

i. CUTSA Preemption

Defendants argue CUTSA preempts Plaintiff's claim for [*46] intentional interference with contractual relations because the claim is premised on the alleged misuse of trade secret client lists stolen from Jet Edge. (MTD at 11.)

In the Schembari action, the Court, relying on the new factual allegation that Schembari diverted jet N2020 away from Jet Edge, found Plaintiff's intentional interference with contractual relations claim was not be preempted by CUTSA. (Schembari Dkt. No. 166 at 5.) The Court reasoned Schembari's diversion of jet N2020 alone constituted interference in Jet Edge's contractual relationship with Sojitz and did not involve the stolen client lists that were the subject of Plaintiff's trade secrets claim. Id. Thus, Plaintiff had a basis for alleging intentional interference with contractual relations based on a different nucleus of facts than their trade secrets claim. Id.

Like in Schembari, Plaintiff's aforementioned allegations here state a claim for intentional interference with contractual relations without relying on the alleged misuse of the stolen client lists or other confidential information that might be considered trade secrets. Here, Plaintiff alleges Defendants committed fraud by inducing Plaintiff into signing an MOU and hiring Schembari [*47] while falsely representing an intention to establish a long-term relationship between Sojitz and Jet Edge. (Id. ¶¶ 120-123.) Plaintiff further alleges Defendants disparaged Jet Edge to convince companies to abandon their ACMA's with Jet Edge. (Id. ¶ 50.) Plaintiff contends this disrupted contractual relations, causing Jet Edge damage in the form of the lost contracts. (Id. ¶ 78.)

Viewing the allegations in a light most favorable to Plaintiff, it is reasonable to infer that Defendants interfered with Jet Edge's ACMAs without relying on client lists or other confidential information. Defendants used fraud as an avenue to make disparaging comments that interfered with Jet Edge's contractual relations with aircraft owners.[8] (Id. ¶ 120.) These disparaging comments are wrongful acts which form an independent basis to find interference with contractual relations, even when ignoring other bases that would trigger CUTSA preemption. Thus, Plaintiff's intentional interference with contractual relations claim is not preempted. The Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with contractual relations.

6. Claim Two: Intentional Interference [*48] with Prospective Economic Advantage

Plaintiff alleges Defendants are liable for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. (Id. ¶ 82.) Like the intentional interference with contractual relations claim, Plaintiff bases this claim on Defendants' alleged interference with Plaintiff's business arrangements with Sam Cayman, Fast Retailing, Sega Sammy, Pocket Corporation, Private Wings, and Busujima. (Id.)

To plead a claim for intentional interference with prospective business advantage, a plaintiff must allege:

> (1) a specific economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third person containing the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff;
> (2) knowledge by defendant of the existence of the relationship;
> (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship;
> (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and

Panavision Int'l, L.P. v. Toeppen, 945 F. Supp. 1296, 1305 (C.D. Cal. 1996) (citing Eichman v. Fotomat Corp., 871 F.2d 784, 800 (9th Cir. 1989); Youst v. Longo, 43 Cal. 3d 64, 71 n.6, 233 Cal. Rptr. 294, 729 P.2d 728 (1987); Buckaloo v. Johnson, 14 Cal. 3d 815, 826-29, 122 Cal. Rptr. 745, 537 P.2d 865 (1975)).

The factual allegations supporting Plaintiff's intentional interference with contractual relations claim apply to Plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. (FAC ¶¶ 82.) This includes Defendants' knowledge of the [*49] ACMAs Plaintiff contracted with Sam Cayman, Fast Retailing, Sega Sammy, Pocket Corporation, Private Wings, and Busujima. (FAC ¶¶ 82-100.) Plaintiff further alleges Defendants "conspired to and did intentionally interfere with and destroy Jet Edge's relationships with its customers" and, as a result, caused damage to Jet Edge in the form of the disrupted relationships and loss of economic benefit reasonably expected from these relationships. (FAC ¶¶ 86-89.) Plaintiff alleges these five companies broke off their ACMAs with Plaintiff (FAC ¶ 86.) Thus, Plaintiff provides sufficient allegations to support its intentional interference with prospective economic advantage claim. The Court further finds that this claim is not preempted by CUTSA for reasons identical to Plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with contractual relations. See supra Section IV.B.5. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

[8] This inference is particularly reasonable given the events in Schembari, where a jury found Schembari tortiously interfered with Jet Edge's contracts based partially on evidence regarding disparaging comments he made to Jet Edge customers. (Schembari Dkt. No. 144 at 12.) The Court takes judicial notice of these proceedings.

7. Claim Three: Negligent Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

Plaintiff alleges Defendants acted negligently in their actions to setup a competing venture, in part, by using [*50] Jet Edge's confidential information, representing that Sojitz intended to establish a long-term relationship with Jet Edge, and planting Schembari within Jet Edge to facilitate in the creation of ACP. (FAC ¶ 96.) Defendants argue that Plaintiff fails to state a claim for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage because it fails to allege Defendants' duty of care. (MTD at 14.) To plead a claim for negligent interference with prospective business advantage a plaintiff must allege:

> (1) an economic relationship existed between the plaintiff and a third party which contained a reasonably probable future economic benefit or advantage to plaintiff;
> (2) the defendant knew of the existence of the relationship and was aware or should have been aware that if it did not act with due care its actions would interfere with this relationship and cause plaintiff to lose in whole or in part the probable future economic benefit or advantage of the relationship;
> (3) the defendant was negligent; and
> (4) such negligence caused damage to plaintiff in that the relationship was actually interfered with or disrupted and plaintiff lost in whole or in part the economic benefits or advantage reasonably expected [*51] from the relationship.

UMG Recordings, Inc. v. Glob. Eagle Entm't, Inc., 117 F. Supp. 3d 1092, 1118 (C.D. Cal. 2015) (citing N. Am. Chem. Co. v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. App. 4th 764, 786, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 466 (1997)).

Citing to J'aire Corp. v. Gregory, 24 Cal. 3d 799, 803, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 (1979), Plaintiff contends Sojitz's duty of care is established by a special relationship between Plaintiff created through the July 18, 2013 MOU between Jet Edge and Sojitz. (Opp. at 19; "MOU," Dkt. No. 1-1 ¶ 6.) The relevant portions of the MOU explicitly state it is nonbinding and that it only represents an intention to create a relationship in the future. (See MOU ¶ 6.) Additionally, Plaintiff's FAC alleges no facts concerning Defendants' duty of care under the MOU, nor does it allege that the MOU creates such a "special relationship." Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the negligent interference claim.

8. Claim Four: Breach of Contract

Plaintiff a brings claim for breach of contract against Sojitz based on the MOU. (FAC ¶¶ 101-112.) The MOU contemplated Sojitz's potential purchase of an equity stake in Jet Edge and creation of a jointly owned jet charter entity in Asia. (MOU at 5.) Plaintiff claims Sojitz breached the MOU by failing to negotiate or otherwise act in good faith because when it acted in bad faith by conspiring with the other Defendants to form a competing business and steal Jet Edge's clients. (FAC. ¶ 104.) Defendants argue Plaintiff fails to allege a [*52] breach of contract because the MOU explicitly states it is non-binding. (MTD at 14-15.)

According to Paragraph 7(a) of the MOU, Delaware law governs its terms. "In order to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state claim for breach of contract, a plaintiff must demonstrate: first, the existence of the contract, whether express or implied; second, the breach of an obligation imposed by that contract; and third, the resultant damage to the plaintiff." VLIW Tech., LLC v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 840 A.2d 606, 612 (Del. 2003).

Section 6 of the MOU signed by Sojitz and Jet Edge states that the MOU:

> is intended to express only a mutual indication of interest in the Proposed Transaction and does not represent any legal binding commitment or obligation on the part of Sojitz or Jet Edge with respect to the Proposed Transaction, except with respect to Section 4 (Confidentiality), this Section 6 (No Commitment) and Section 7 (Miscellaneous) and no party hereto will assert otherwise.

MOU ¶ 6. Based on this section of the MOU, the Court finds the MOU is binding with respect to Sections 4, 6, and 7. Plaintiff cites *Gillenardo v. Connor Broadcasting Delaware Co., 2002 Del. Super. LEXIS 402, 2002 WL 991110, at 6 (April 30, 2002), to argue it sufficiently alleges that Defendants breached the MOU. However, in Gillenardo, the court held a good faith obligation existed because the contract in question "ha[d] absolutely no express or explicit provision [*53] limiting liability for a bad-faith failure to negotiate," leaving it to the court to determine whether the parties intended to be bound by a good faith requirement. Id. Here, the language of the MOU leaves no similar uncertainty, as its explicit terms state the agreement is non-binding save for three expressly-listed provisions-Sections 4, 6, and 7. (MOU ¶ 6.) The MOU does not enumerate such an exception for , which contains the good faith provision in question. (Id. ¶¶ 2, 6.) Given the expressly non-binding nature of the MOU and the limited exceptions enumerated in paragraph 6, the Court cannot find that Jet Edge and Sojitz intended to be bound by the good faith provision in Section 2. See, e.g., Newharbor Partners, Inc. v. F.D. Rich Co., Inc., 961 F.2d 294, 300 (1st Cir. 1992) (holding a good faith provision in a non-binding letter of intent is unenforceable where it was not included as an exception to the letter's non-binding nature). Section 2For these reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's claim for breach of contract.

9. Claim Five: Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Plaintiff also brings a cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing based on the MOU. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges Sojitz denied Plaintiff [*54] the benefits of the MOU by setting up a competing venture to Jet Edge by using confidential information. (Id. ¶ 106.)

All contracts are subject to an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Wilgus v. Salt Pond Investment Co., 498 A.2d 151, 159 (Del. Ch. 1985). In order to plead successfully a breach of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the plaintiff must allege a specific implied contractual obligation, a breach of that obligation by the defendant, and resulting damage to the plaintiff. *Fitzgerald v. Cantor, 1998 Del. Ch. LEXIS 212, 1998 WL 842316, at 1 (Del. Ch. Nov. 10, 1998) (footnote omitted). Because a court "can only imply a contractual obligation when the express terms of the contract indicate that the parties would have agreed to the obligation had they negotiated the issue, the plaintiff must advance provisions of the agreement that support this finding in order to allege sufficiently a specific implied contractual obligation." Id. (footnote omitted).

The Court finds Plaintiff fails to plead breach of an implied contractual obligation based on the contract encompassed in Sections 4, 6, and 7 of the MOU. Plaintiff bases its allegation of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim on Section 2, which, as discussed above, is non-binding. (FAC ¶ 108.) The Court finds that MOU Section 6 renders portions of the MOU non-binding, [*55] making those portions of the agreement improper bases of a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. This does not foreclose the possibility that Plaintiff may allege a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing based on an implied contractual obligation grounded in the binding sections of the MOU. However, Plaintiff's FAC and Opposition do not raise such arguments. Accordingly, Plaintiff does not state a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

VI. LEAVE TO AMEND

Generally, a "district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by allegation of other facts." Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1127 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Here, the Court identifies specific factual deficiencies which may be cured by amendment as to Plaintiff's claims for negligent interference with prospective business advantage (claim 3), the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (claim 5), and [*56] violation of the UCL (claim 6). Accordingly, Court GRANTS Plaintiff LEAVE TO AMEND as to claims 3, 5, and 6. However, given the terms of the MOU, the Court finds Plaintiff will be unable to amend its claims concerning its breach of contract claim (claim 4). The Court DENIES LEAVE TO AMEND as to claim 4.

VII. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Court GRANTS Quenga's Motion to Dismiss the claims against her for lack of personal jurisdiction. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Sojitz Jet for lack of personal jurisdiction. The Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to claims one, two, and seven. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to claims three, four, five, and six. Plaintiff shall file an amended complaint, if any, by May 27, 2019.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER

Express Scripts Holding Co.; Express Scripts, Inc.; United Biosource Corp.; Accredo Health Group, Inc.; and Curascript, Inc.'s motion for reconsideration, or, in the alternative, to certify an interlocutory appeal [190] is denied.

STATEMENT

On February 22, 2019, defendants—Express Scripts Holding Co.; Express Scripts, Inc.; United Biosource Corp.; Accredo Health Group, Inc.; and Curascript, Inc. (collectively "Express Scripts")—filed this motion for [*4] reconsideration of the court's January 25, 2019 order granting in part and denying in part Express Scripts' and Mallinckrodt's[1] motion to dismiss the second amended complaint ("the MTD Order").[2] In the alternative, Express Scripts moves for certification of an interlocutory appeal.[3] For the reasons stated below, the court denies both motions.

I. Motion for Reconsideration[4]

A motion for reconsideration is appropriate where a court has "patently misunderstood a party, or has made a decision outside the adversarial issues presented to the court by the parties, or has made an error not of reasoning but of apprehension." Bank of Waunakee v. Rochester Cheese Sales, Inc., 906 F.2d 1185, 1191 (7th Cir. 1990). Motions for reconsideration are not to be used to "rehash" arguments previously made in the underlying motion. Vesely v. Armslist LLC, 762 F.3d 661, 666 (7th Cir. 2014).

Express Scripts advances four arguments in its motion. The court addresses each in turn. First, Express Scripts argues that "[t]here is no allegation anywhere in the [second amended complaint] that an Express Scripts Entity

[1] The court refers to both Mallinckrodt plaintiffs, Mallinckrodt plc and Mallinckrodt ARD, Inc. (including its acquisition of Questcor Pharmaceuticals, Inc.), as "Mallinckrodt" for purposes of this opinion.

[2] Since the MTD Order was issued, Acument has voluntarily withdrawn from the case. Therefore, the claims referred to in this opinion refer to Rockford's claims only.

[3] Express Scripts also requests oral argument. The court has determined that it can resolve the disputed issues on the briefs and therefore denies that request. See L.R. 78.3 ("Oral argument may be allowed in the court's discretion.").

[4] Express Scripts does not specify what Federal Rule of Civil Procedure they move under. However, the court has inherent authority to reconsider its own orders entered prior to final judgment. *VBR Tours, LLC v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., No. 14-CV-00804, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130455, 2015 WL 5693735, at 5 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 28, 2015) (citing Moses H. Cone Mem. Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 12, 103 S. Ct. 927, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1983)).

was involved in the Synacthen Acquisition." (emphasis in original). The court has determined that, as it must, drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff and accepting all well-pleaded allegations as true, plaintiff has alleged [*5] the factual circumstances which follow.

Express Scripts has come to play a dominant role in the prescription drug industry and wields great influence in the manufacturing and distribution of prescription drugs to the public. Express Scripts has an agreement with Mallinckrodt that enables it to exclusively control all aspects of Acthar distribution from manufacturer to patient. The court can reasonably infer from the allegations of the second amended complaint that, as a major participant in the prescription drug business, Express Scripts would keep apprised of all the significant developments in the field. As Express Scripts' chief medical officer is alleged to have said, "We are constantly trying to be vigilant and chase the bad actors out of the marketplace." It stands to reason that this would especially be true as to any business activity that concerns Acthar, an extremely profitable drug for which Express Scripts was the exclusive distributor. As such, the court surmises that Express Scripts would have been aware of such developments, including Mallinckrodt's acquisition and shelving of Synacthen as well as the Federal Trade Commission's action against Mallinckrodt. See also MTD [*6] Order at 24 ("Plaintiffs allege that Mallinckrodt was acting in concert with Express Scripts in an exclusive dealing arrangement well before the Synacthen Acquisition, and thus, plaintiffs plausibly alleged that defendants' conspiracy encompassed and facilitated the Acquisition."). Knowing what actions Mallinckrodt was taking in connection with Synacthen, Express Scripts brought its power, expertise and influence to the aid of Mallinckrodt. Express Scripts continued as the exclusive distributor of Acthar, all the while sharing in the enormous profits generated by its sale to the public. Mallinckrodt benefitted by Express Scripts' cooperation in eliminating any interference by other distributors allowing Mallinckrodt to optimize its ability to act in an unrestrained manner to raise the price of Acthar to unconscionable levels.

As to the legal landscape in which we are operating it is worth noting that the Seventh Circuit's holding in Paper Systems Inc. v. Nippon Paper Industries Co. stands apart from other circuits in its understanding of the "co-conspirator" exception. There, the Seventh Circuit held that allowing downstream purchasers to sue the various entities that conspire to restrain [*7] trade is consistent with, and not an exception to, the principles of Illinois Brick:

> The right to sue middlemen that joined the conspiracy is sometimes referred to as a co-conspirator 'exception' to Illinois Brick, but it would be better to recognize that Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick allocate to the first non-conspirator in the distribution chain the right to collect 100% of the damages. . . . Thus our plaintiffs are entitled to collect damages from both the manufacturers and their intermediaries if conspiracy and overcharges can be established. . . . Nothing in Illinois Brick displaces the rule of joint and several liability, under which each member of a conspiracy is liable for all damages caused by the conspiracy's entire output.

Paper Systems, 281 F.3d 629, 631-32 (7th Cir. 2002). Other Seventh Circuit opinions remind us that "[i]t is helpful to recall that at common law a conspiracy was unlawful if the conspirators used unlawful means to a lawful end or lawful means to an unlawful end." Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Bldg., Inc., 737 F.2d 698, 709-10 (7th Cir. 1984) (citing United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271, 293 (6th Cir. 1898)). Also, "[a]n express agreement among all the conspirators is not a necessary element of a civil conspiracy. The participants in the conspiracy must share the general conspiratorial objective, but they need not know all the details of [*8] the plan designed to achieve the objective or possess the same motives for desiring the intended conspiratorial result." Lenard v. Argento, 699 F.2d 874, 882 (7th Cir. 1983). Finally, "[a] plaintiff seeking redress need not prove that each participant in a conspiracy knew the exact limits of the illegal plan or the identity of all participants therein. . . . To demonstrate the existence of a conspiratorial agreement, it simply must be shown that there was a single plan, the essential nature and general scope of which was known to each person who is to be held responsible for its consequences." Cameo Convalescent Ctr., Inc. v. Senn, 738 F.2d 836, 841 (7th Cir. 1984).

Express Scripts need not have been sitting in the board room contributing to Mallinckrodt's plan to acquire Synacthen for this court to find that it was "involved" in the scheme to exorbitantly raise the price of Acthar. Express Scripts' decision to cooperate with Mallinckrodt, a lawful act in and of itself, can be a part of a scheme if there was an understanding between the two sides as to how they could facilitate Mallinckrodt's monopoly and its effort to raise the price of Acthar. In order to be counted as a member of the conspiracy Express Scripts did not have to be an integral participant in the Synacthen Acquisition; it just needed to know [*9] about it and assist in achieving the ultimate aim of eliminating Synacthen as a competitive drug. In the court's view the complaint plausibly implicates both Mallinckrodt and Express Scripts as part of the purported scheme to increase Acthar's price and prevent potential competition from entering the relevant market. The court did not misapprehend this issue; it carefully considered the alleged relationship and concluded that plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an antitrust conspiratorial arrangement between Mallinckrodt and Express Scripts.

Second, Express Scripts argues that the exclusive distribution arrangement could not have harmed competition. Express Scripts cites E & L Consulting, Ltd. v. Doman Industries Ltd., 472 F.3d 23 (2d Cir. 2006) to argue that monopolists "can control its own pricing and output to the same extent regardless of distributors it employs." But central to the Second Circuit's finding was the fact that the manufacturer in that case could have distributed the product themselves and did not have to rely on the intermediary. Id. at 29. The complaint in this case does not suggest that Mallinckrodt had the ability to act as its own distributor. As pled, Mallinckrodt needed Express Scripts so that it could sell Acthar without meddling from competing [*10] distributors who might impede Mallinckrodt's ability to cement its control of the price of the drug.

The Court in E & L also made a point to note that the complaint in that case "simply does not allege . . . 'that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market.'" Id. at 31. Unlike in E & L, the complaint here does allege an "actual adverse effect on competition." (emphasis in original). In the court's MTD Order it found that plaintiff had plausibly alleged the ability of both Mallinckrodt and Express Scripts through their arrangement to keep prices high in large part because patients' options were limited as a result of the sequestration of Synacthen from the market. Thus, as the allegations go, Mallinckrodt with the aid of Express Scripts had unfettered ability to raise the price to whatever it chose, as parents would not allow their children to suffer from infantile spasms. Express Scripts' exclusive distribution arrangement effectively kept other distributors from interfering in Mallinckrodt's plan, and in doing so helped both its and Mallinckrodt's businesses. This is enough for Rockford to have standing to sue. Cf. In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litigation 686 F.3d 741 (9th Cir. 2012); Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193 (4th Cir. 2002).[5]

Third, in a [*11] related argument, Express Scripts contends that the exclusive dealing arrangement cannot have prevented another pharmaceutical manufacturer from developing an alternative to Acthar. Express Scripts quotes language from the complaint which stated "[t]he goal of this strategy was to lock patients into receiving Acthar through one channel and prevent a competitive product from entering the market." Compl. P 222. The "competitive product" alleged in the complaint and referenced in the court's order was Synacthen, not some unknown pharmaceutical manufacturer. As the court has already set forth, Express Scripts aided Mallinckrodt in keeping Synacthen from seeing the light of day which inured to the benefit of both. As stated in the MTD Order, antitrust law is intended to prevent consumers from suffering the adverse effects of lessened competition. See Agnew v. NCAA, 683 F.3d 328, 334-35 (7th Cir. 2012) ("The purpose of the Sherman Act is to protect consumers from injury that results from diminished competition."). The court rejects Express Scripts' contention at this stage of litigation.

Finally, Express Scripts argues that it "owes no affirmative duty to 'force competition' or to 'push back' on price increases." However as the court's order [*12] states, Express Scripts plausibly aided Mallinckrodt. The exclusive dealing arrangement allowed Mallinckrodt to market and sell Acthar, unhampered by any interference from other distributors. Express Scripts is alleged to be in a "unique position" to negotiate lower Acthar prices, and that the exclusive dealing arrangement played a role in their decision not to do so. Whether or not Express Scripts had an affirmative duty to force competition, what matters is that Express Scripts' arrangement with Mallinckrodt kept other distributors at bay.

The court finds that it has not misapprehended the issues of this case and that, to the extent Express Scripts' arguments do not constitute simply "rehashing," these arguments do not persuade the court to alter its reasoning as to these issues. To be sure, further proceedings in this case may debunk the allegations of the second amended complaint and the inferences to be made therefrom. But in the court's assessment, at this stage of the case

[5] While the court found that Express Scripts conspired with Mallinckrodt to "restrict" the output of Acthar, the court used the term "restrict" in the sense of confining Acthar to the control of Mallinckrodt with the aid of Express Scripts.

Rockford should not be deprived of an opportunity to prove its remaining causes of action. Accordingly, the court denies Express Scripts' motion for reconsideration.

II. Motion to Certify an Interlocutory Appeal [*13] Under § 1292(b)

The Express Scripts defendants also move for certification of an interlocutory appeal to the Seventh Circuit under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). For the reasons stated below, the court denies their request.

Section 1292(b) enumerates four criteria for granting a petition for interlocutory appeal: (1) there must be a question of law; (2) it must be controlling; (3) it must be contestable; and (4) its resolution must promise to speed up the litigation. Ahrenholz v. Bd. of Trs. of Univ. of Ill., 219 F.3d 674, 675 (7th Cir. 2000). "Unless all these criteria are satisfied, the district court may not and should not certify its order to us for an immediate appeal under section 1292(b). To do so in such circumstances is merely to waste our time and delay the litigation in the district court, since the proceeding in that court normally grinds to a halt as soon as the judge certifies an order in the case for an immediate appeal." Id. at 676. Plaintiffs do not dispute that there is a question of law—there is: whether plaintiffs have plausibly alleged a conspiracy between all the defendants to price-fix and unlawfully maintain a monopoly—or whether those questions are controlling—they are: this case would likely be over if the Seventh Circuit found that plaintiffs did not state a claim.

On the third prong, whether these questions [*14] are contestable, the court finds that they are not. An issue is contestable within the meaning of § 1292(b) if there is a "difficult central question of law which is not settled by controlling authority" and a "substantial likelihood" exists that the district court's ruling will be reversed on appeal. In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 878 F. Supp. 1078, 1081 (N.D. Ill. 1995). The court is satisfied, even after a review and consideration of defendants' briefings here as well as in their underlying motions to dismiss, that there is not a "substantial likelihood" that its rulings will be reversed on appeal.

A matter qualifies for appeal under the fourth prong if its resolution could "head off protracted, costly litigation." Ahrenholz, 219 F.3d at 677. Here, even if the Seventh Circuit were to find for Express Scripts, there are still claims under federal and state laws that will proceed against Mallinckrodt and thus the litigation will not be quickly concluded. In the court's mind it would be improper to seriously disrupt the progress of this already two-year-old case by sending the case to the Court of Appeals. Accordingly, the court denies the Express Scripts defendants' request under § 1292(b).

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Express Scripts defendants' motion for reconsideration, or, [*15] in the alternative, to certify an interlocutory appeal is denied.

ORDER

Non-Party Porky Products, Inc.'s Amended Motion to Quash Subpoenas [ECF No. 1436] is denied without prejudice. In light of its filing of an Amended Motion to Quash [ECF No. 1436], Porky Products, Inc.'s initial Motion to Quash Subpoenas [ECF No. 1426] is denied as moot. This matter is referred to the Special Master to convene a meet and confer with the parties to discuss ways to facilitate production of the information sought by the subpoenas at issue and to minimize any potential burden on Porky Products. See Statement below for further details.

STATEMENT

This matter is before the Court on Non-Party Porky Products, Inc.'s Amended Motion of to Quash Subpoenas [ECF No. 1436] served by End-User Plaintiffs ("EUPs"), the Commercial and Institutional Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("CIIPPs") and the Koch Defendants. The Motion was withdrawn as to the Koch Defendants. [*34] [1] The EUPs and CIIPPs (collectively, the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs or "IPPs") seek structured and transactional data from Porky Products, including its purchase and sales data, its contracts relating to those purchases and sales, its rebate and discounts terms (if any), and any market analysis Porky Products conducted, as evidence to establish that any alleged overcharge for the purchase of Broilers was passed through the distribution chain to the IPPs.

Porky Products opposes the subpoenas arguing the information IPPs are seeking is: (1) irrelevant; (2) confidential trade secret and business information; and (3) not proportional to the needs of this case because it would be unduly burdensome for Porky Products to produce the information sought by the subpoenas. The Court will address each of these arguments in turn.

I. Relevance

[1] Pursuant to the Joint Status Report Regarding Porky Products, Inc.'s Amended Motion to Quash Subpoenas [ECF No. 1940], Porky Products and Koch Defendants have reached a compromise, and the Amended Motion to Quash is withdrawn as to the Koch Defendants.

The information the IPPs are seeking from Porky Products as a large distributor of Broilers is relevant to the claims being made by the EUPs and CIIPPs in the indirect purchaser actions and to Defendants' defenses to those claims. To the extent Porky Products argues the Court already has determined that information is irrelevant, it is mistaken.

Under different [*35] circumstances in connection with motion practice involving different interested parties earlier in this case, the Court did not allow some other downstream discovery to proceed. See [ECF Nos. 749, 1060]; In re Broiler Chicken Antitrust Litigation, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116658, 2018 WL 3398141 (N.D. Ill. July 12, 2018); 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27155. 2018 WL 999899 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 21, 2018). In none of its previous opinions and orders, however, did the Court address whether the IPPs are entitled to the information they now are seeking from Porky Products. Indeed, to the extent the Court referenced the type of sales data the IPPs are seeking from Porky Products in its earlier orders, the Court recognized that such information may be relevant and discoverable by IPPs from third parties like Porky Products. See, e.g., *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116658, 2018 WL 3398141, at 2 ("[C]ourts have held that downstream discovery of direct purchasers may be relevant for certain purposes in indirect purchaser actions."); *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116658, 2018 WL 3398141, at 4 ("Defendants also acknowledge that sales data produced by other direct purchasers, some of whom are larger than DPPs, which was subpoenaed by the IPP classes from those direct purchasers . . . will be available to Defendants [and] will help them understand how some larger direct purchasers determine prices and pass-through price increases."); *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27155. 2018 WL 999899, at 4 ("DPPs are relatively smaller players in the distribution chain, and Defendants [*36] may be able to obtain sufficient discovery to address the commonality and predominance issues in the IPP cases from other sources, to the extent those issues need to be addressed at all.").

Further, when the Court previously distinguished cases in which courts had allowed some downstream discovery of direct purchasers to go forward, it did so on grounds that are not germane to the IPPs' subpoenas now before the Court. The IPPs' subpoenas seek information that is directly relevant to whether Defendants' allegedly anticompetitive prices were passed through to the IPPs by direct purchasers. The cases the Court previously distinguished allowed discovery from direct purchasers under certain circumstances in anti-trust cases including for the reasons the IPPs now are seeking that discovery from Porky Products. See *In re Aftermarket Filters, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105108, 2010 WL 3909502, at 2 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 1, 2010) (noting that in an antitrust case "it is undisputed that discovery from direct purchasers is necessary on the issue of certifying an indirect purchaser class"); In re Cathode RayTube (CRT)Antitrust Litig., 301 F.R.D. 449, 452-54 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (overruling direct purchaser plaintiff's objection and allowing downstream discovery related to direct purchaser's pricing because it was "directly relevant to the question of how, and in what amount, any potential overcharges [*37] were passed through to other plaintiffs").

The IPPs are in a materially different position than were Defendants in seeking downstream discovery from the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") in this case, which was the context in which the Court's prior opinions were written. To show impact on the indirect purchaser classes, the IPPs will have to establish that any overcharge due to the alleged conspiracy was passed through to the EUPs and CIIPPs. The transaction data and information being sought from Porky Products is directly relevant to the EUPs' and CIIPPs' efforts to show that any alleged overcharge for the purchase of Broilers was passed through the distribution chain to the IPPs.

II. Burden and Proportionality

Based on an undeveloped record, the Court is not persuaded by Porky Products' burden arguments at this time. Specifically, Porky Products has not convinced the Court that production of the information sought by the IPPs is unduly burdensome or not proportional to the needs of this case.

Porky Products' burden arguments are very general and, in some instances, a bit hyperbolic. See, e.g., Declaration of Robert Melloy, Jr. [ECF No. 1428], at ¶ 24 (characterizing as "a massive [*38] undertaking" the work that would be required to "compile [the] mountain of information" that would result from "finding every scrap of paper related to each of the millions of orders [Porky Products] has had in the last 8.5 years"). In addition, Mr. Melloy speaks fairly generally in his Declaration without much in the way of specifics. He says, for example, that "[t]here is no simple way to quickly isolate all purchases and sales of Defendants' products" in its archived data ([ECF No. 1428], at ¶¶ 16-18), but simplicity and speed may not be the target standard. And he suggests the only way to obtain the data the IPPs are seeking would be to hire an SAP consultant "to write a computer program to cull and filter the data" ([ECF No. 1428], at ¶ 22), but that presupposes Porky Products knows what data the IPPs ultimately will be seeking.

Although the subpoenas are broad as drafted, the Court doubts the IPPs want "every scrap of paper" that Porky Products has in its possession that relates to its sales of Broilers over an almost 10-year period. Further, while it may or may not be necessary for Porky Products to hire a consultant to assist it in responding to the subpoenas, much of what Porky [*39] Products has to say about the burden of responding to the IPPs' subpoenas does not take into account that the EUPs and CIIPPs have offered to narrow the scope of their subpoenas to accommodate Porky Products' objections and to help streamline the production of information sought. IPPs' Joint Opposition [ECF No. 1526], at 13. From the briefs submitted, however, it does not appear that Porky Products has engaged seriously with the IPPs to try to right-size the information being sought by the subpoenas and its response to them. That, in turn, prevents Porky Products from estimating the cost of responding to the subpoenas which is a highly relevant consideration on burden and proportionality. See Declaration of Brian D. Penny in Support of IPPs' Joint Opposition [ECF No. 1527] at ¶ 8 ("While discussing production of data [with Porky Products], I explained that often the first step is to obtain a sample of data from the producing party. From that sample, plaintiffs can often streamline their requests, excluding superfluous data fields and perhaps otherwise narrowing the scope of production. Although Porky Products apparently pulled a sample of one day's worth of transactional data, it refused [*40] to produce that sample to CIIPPs.")

There may be ways to extract the information the IPPs are requesting or some categories of that information that would be less time-consuming and less expensive than Porky Products surmises and that still would satisfy the IPPs' legitimate need in the case. At this juncture, however, the Court does not have enough information to determine the actual burden on Porky Products if it had to comply with the IPPs' subpoenas. Porky Products, therefore, has not met its burden on a critical foundational piece of its Amended Motion to Quash.

Moreover, although Porky Products argues that it is a non-party to these proceedings and, therefore, any burden imposed upon it by the IPPs' subpoenas is particularly undue, Porky Products also is a potential member of the putative DPP class as a large distributor of Broilers. Thus, Porky Products potentially could benefit from a recovery by the DPPs in this case and it is not a completely disinterested party in the classic sense. Regardless, even putting that aside, without more specifics from Porky Products on its alleged burden and hardship, particularly if the subpoenas can be narrowed, the discovery sought even from [*41] a third party seems proportional to the needs of the case.

Fortunately, the Court has appointed a Special Master in this case to help with this exact situation. See [ECF No. 491], at ¶ 1 ("The Special Master is appointed to address and resolve, by mediation or otherwise, issues and disputes that may arise between the parties in relation to electronic discovery, including, but not limited to, identification preservation, processing, search, review, and production of electronically stored information ("ESI") in this matter ("eDiscovery matters") and to assist and advise the Court concerning those matters."). Because a good deal of the information the IPPs are seeking is stored electronically, this is a matter that falls within the expertise of the Special Master. See [ECF No. 491], at ¶ 1. The Special Master has been particularly effective in assisting the parties to this case in resolving a number of thorny disputes and the Court believes this dispute also is one that could benefit from her attention.

For these reasons, this matter is referred to the Special Master to convene a meet and confer with the parties to discuss ways to facilitate production of the information sought by the IPPs [*42] and to minimize any burden on Porky Products from complying with the subpoenas.

III. Confidentiality

Although some of the data the IPPs are seeking from Porky Products contains sensitive business and financial information that is confidential, the Court is not persuaded by Porky Products' argument that such information should not be produced in this case or that the Agreed Confidentiality Order entered in this case would not protect Porky Products' interests once it is produced.

Confidentiality orders routinely are entered in cases like this to protect sensitive and confidential material. The Agreed Confidentiality Order in this case allows documents to be designated "Confidential" and "Highly Confidential." [ECF No. 202], at ¶¶ 2-4. The Order further provides that "Confidential or Highly Confidential Information shall not be used or disclosed by the parties, counsel for the parties or any other persons identified in subparagraph (b) for any purpose whatsoever other than the prosecution or defense of claims, or the settlement of, this litigation, including any appeal thereof." [ECF No. 202], at ¶ 6.

Porky Products argues that the Agreed Confidentiality Order in this case is inadequate [*43] because it "allows for disclosure of confidential information or highly confidential information to, among others, named Plaintiffs, the parties' in-house and outside counsel, contractors, consultants, experts and witnesses for various purposes." Porky Products' Amended Memorandum in Support of its Motion to Quash [ECF No. 1437], at 14. It is not clear to the Court that information Porky Products produces will need to be disclosed to employees of any named Plaintiff or Defendant as opposed to only outside counsel and expert consultants or witnesses. And if that information is disclosed to party employees, whether the information will be attributable to Porky Products. For example, the information the IPPs are seeking may be part of a large mix of information they will give to their experts, and Porky Products' data may be largely anonymized by the time it is disclosed in any attributed way. Therefore, this may not be a situation in which party employees are going to pour through Porky Products' confidential business information. To the extent real risk exists that will occur and jeopardize Porky Products' legitimate business interests, however, it may be that IPPs or Defendants will [*44] agree to additional procedures designed to guard against potential harm or prejudice to Porky Products.

Porky Products also speculates there is a potential risk of inadvertent disclosure of confidential information by the IPPs based upon an earlier filing that Porky Products says contained such information. Porky Products' speculation is not persuasive evidence that the confidentiality order in this case is inefficacious based on the one example it cites. *JAB Distribs., LLC v. London Luxury, LLC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109178, at 9 ("[T]he mere possibility of an inadvertent disclosure of confidential information [does not] fatally undermine[] the operation of a protective order.") See also *In re Dealer Management Systems Antitrust Litigation, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 206588, 2018 WL 6413199, at 4 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 6, 2018) ("If a party or non-party were able to bar an opponent's litigation counsel from having access to confidential or highly confidential information on the basis of speculation and unsupported supposition that counsel would misuse that information and violate a court order in the process, the already high cost of federal litigation would increase astronomically . . . .").

In short, the Court believes that Porky Products' confidentiality concerns can be protected adequately within the context of the Agreed Confidentiality Order in this case. If, however, Porky Products has a more [*45] specific concern about particular information that actually will be produced, it can raise the issue first with the IPPs, who represent they offered to revise the Agreed Confidentiality Order to further restrict access to Porky Products' production, then with the Special Master, and eventually with the Court, if necessary, with respect to any dispute as to which the IPPs and Porky Products reach an impasse. It will be easier to resolve a focused dispute than the more amorphous one now before the Court with Porky Products broadly asserting that all the information being sought by the subpoenas is so confidential that its disclosure even in accordance with the Agreed Confidentiality Order threatens Porky Products' business to the core.

IV. Allocation of Costs

Finally, Porky Products argues if the Court were inclined to deny its Amended Motion to Quash and to order production of the information the IPPs are seeking, then the Court should shift the cost of production to the requesting parties. As a non-party, Porky Products contends that it should not have to bear the cost of production. The Court, however, does not have enough information at this time to evaluate this request. Porky Products [*46] has not offered any specific information that would allow the Court to begin to evaluate whether cost shifting, or possibly cost sharing, would be appropriate in this case. The Court would need to hear more from Porky Products, the parties, and the Special Master after the parties and Porky Products have completed their meet and confer process. Accordingly, the Court denies, without prejudice, Porky Products' request to shift the cost of its production in response to the subpoenas at this time, and the matter of whether cost shifting and/or cost sharing is appropriate when the burden is placed properly in perspective also is referred to the Special Master.

V. Conclusion

For all these reasons, Non-Party Porky Products, Inc.'s Amended Motion to Quash Subpoenas [ECF No. 1436] is denied without prejudice. This matter is referred to the Special Master to convene a meet and confer with the parties to discuss ways to facilitate production of the information sought by the subpoenas at issue and to minimize any potential burden on Porky Products. If necessary, the Court can revisit any issues that need to be decided after that process has taken place with much better information with respect [*47] to cost and burden than it has now.

It is so ordered.

OPINION AND ORDER

VALERIE CAPRONI, United States District Judge:

These consolidated cases concern an alleged conspiracy to manipulate the price of gold and gold-denominated instruments during the class period of January 1, 2004 to December 31, 2012. See Third Amended Complaint (Dkt. 266) ¶ 406; Dkt. 377 at 1. Defendants are multinational financial institutions ("Fixing Banks") that perceive a conflict between their discovery obligations in this litigation and the bank secrecy laws in France, Singapore, England, and Wales. See Def. Letter (Dkt. 362) at 1, 3-4. In an ostensible effort to avoid disclosing any customer identifying information ("CII") in violation of foreign law, Defendants propose producing documents during discovery in pseudonymized or redacted form. Plaintiffs contend that foreign law does not conflict with Defendants' discovery obligations and, even if a conflict does exist, that this Court should not defer to foreign law under a comity analysis. See Pl. Opp. (Dkt. 366) at 3, 5. Defendants' motion for a protective [*15] order is granted in part and denied in part as set forth below.

I. Background

The Court will not recount the full history of this litigation here and will instead briefly describe the context of the discovery issues currently in contention.[1]

[1] For a detailed description of the underlying allegations and factual background, see In re Commodity Exch., Inc., 213 F. Supp. 3d 631 (S.D.N.Y. 2016).

After much negotiation, the parties are now largely in agreement as to the appropriate scope of Defendants' document production. See Def. Letter (Dkt. 362) at 1.[2] The anticipated document production contains customer information, including customers' identities and their transaction data. See Def. Letter at 1. Defendants, however, argue that disclosure of CII would violate bank secrecy statutes in France and Singapore and common law obligations in England and Wales. Id. at 3-4.

Defendants have proposed what they view as a compromise that would allow them to meet their discovery obligations without violating foreign laws. Specifically, Defendants seek permission to pseudonymize customer names where possible and to redact identifying information where pseudonymization is impracticable. Id. at 2. Pseudonymization is not always feasible, because only electronically tabulated data, typically in the form of spreadsheets, contain CII that can be readily manipulated in a consistent [*16] way. See id. The electronically tabulated data in this case largely consists of transaction data, whereas other documents are a mix of emails, chat histories, and other materials that contain sporadic, non-uniform references to CII. See id.

Plaintiffs object to Defendants' proposed compromise, in part because pseudonymization and redaction may deprive readers of important context. Pl. Opp. at 1. Specifically, they argue that the combination of pseudonymization and redaction would prevent Plaintiffs from piecing together different documents that reference the same customer or account. Pl. Opp. at 2. Plaintiffs also object because pseudonymization would hinder their ability to demonstrate class-wide impact and provide class-wide notices. Pl. Opp. at 2-3. As to class-wide impact, Plaintiffs' primary concern appears to be that any given class member would be assigned a different pseudonym by each Defendant, preventing Plaintiffs from being able to compare or de-duplicate across datasets, including those obtained from other sources.[3] See id. at 3. Based on these concerns, Plaintiffs essentially argue that their interest in full production outweighs Defendants' interest in complying with foreign law, [*17] to the extent that such a conflict exists at all.

II. Discussion

A. Legal Framework

When foreign law is invoked as the basis for resisting discovery, the party resisting discovery bears the burden of "proving what the [foreign] law is and demonstrating why it impedes production." *S.E.C. v. Gibraltar Glob. Sec., Inc., No. 13-CV-2575, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43773, 2015 WL 1514746 at 2 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (collecting cases). To meet that burden, the party must "provide the Court with information of sufficient particularity and specificity." Alfadda v. Fenn, 149 F.R.D. 28, 34 (S.D.N.Y. 1993).

If a court finds that there is an actual conflict between the discovery request and foreign law, the court must then perform a comity analysis to decide "the weight to be given to the foreign jurisdiction's law," balancing this country's national interests against those of the foreign jurisdiction. Laydon v. Mizuho Bank, Ltd., 183 F. Supp. 3d 409, 413 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (quotation marks and citations omitted). Courts in the Second Circuit consider a wide range of factors as part of the balancing test:

(1) the importance to the investigation or litigation of the documents or other information requested;

(2) the degree of specificity of the request;

[2] The Court expresses its appreciation to the attorneys for all parties who have worked together cooperatively and collegially to resolve among themselves the logistics of the discovery in this case. The Court trusts that their successful collaboration will continue throughout the discovery in this matter.

[3] At the Court's direction, the parties have explored ways of generating consistent pseudonyms, which would enable Plaintiffs to track customer activity across datasets. Dkts. 390, 391. The available means of doing so appear to be prohibitive in terms of time and cost and would not enable Plaintiffs to cross-reference data provided by the Fixing Banks with documents obtained from third parties. See Tr. (Apr. 25, 2019 Hearing) at 6-10.

(3) whether the information originated in the United States;
(4) the availability of alternative means of securing the information;

B. Application

1. Conflict with Foreign Law

Defendants claim conflicts with bank secrecy laws in France, Singapore, England, and Wales. As detailed below, the Court concludes that Defendants have adequately demonstrated that disclosure of CII would violate bank secrecy requirements in France and, in at least some circumstances, Singapore, but they have not demonstrated that disclosure would violate common law obligations in England and Wales.

a. France

Defendant Société Générale (SG) has demonstrated with sufficient particularity and specificity that, as a French bank, it cannot disclosure CII during civil discovery without violating French law. Specifically, Article L. 511-33 of the French Monetary and Financial Code imposes [*19] a duty of "professional secrecy" on any person who "is employed by" or "participates in the management or administration of" a French credit institution. Parleani Decl. (Dkt. 362, Ex. A) ¶ 10. This duty of secrecy applies to any non-public information that would divulge the nature of an identifiable customer's business with a French bank. See id. ¶¶ 54-57. Protected information therefore includes transaction data, customer lists, account balances, and internal communications concerning customer activity that is connected to a customer's identity. Id. ¶ 52-53. Accordingly, there is no serious dispute that SG's document production will contain at least some information that is subject to the French duty of secrecy.

The French statute does contain exceptions, including for French criminal proceedings and French regulatory and tax authorities—but no exception exists for civil lawsuits, whether French or foreign. Id. ¶ 22. In addition to civil liability and regulatory discipline, a breach of the duty of secrecy is also punishable under the French Criminal Code, which provides for penalties of one year's imprisonment and a fine of €15,000. Id. ¶¶ 12-13, 39, 41 (quoting Article L. 571-4 and [*20] Article 226-13 of French Criminal Code). While Plaintiffs dispute the weight that this Court should give to French law under the comity analysis, such as by pointing out that the risk of actual prosecution and liability is low, Pl. Opp. at 5, there is no genuine dispute that SG has adequately supported its position that disclosure would violate French law.[4] Indeed, at the most recent hearing on this issue after the submission of letter briefs, Plaintiffs conceded that SG may violate "the [French] law on its face" if SG were to comply with Plaintiffs' discovery demands. See Tr. (Hearing on Apr. 25, 2019) at 43.

[4] Plaintiffs mischaracterize a case in which, purportedly, a court in the Second Circuit "[found] no conflict with the French Bank Secrecy Statute." See Pl. Opp. at 5. In Strauss v. Credit Lyonnais, S.A., 242 F.R.D. 199 (E.D.N.Y 2007), the district court ruled in favor of disclosure but only after concluding that the French bank had "adequately supported its position that the discovery sought is indeed prohibited by foreign law." 242 F.R.D. at 207 (internal quotations and citation omitted).

b. Singapore

Defendants have demonstrated with sufficient particularity and specificity that disclosure of CII would violate the Singapore Banking Act under limited circumstances. Specifically, the Singaporean prohibition applies only to disclosures by a bank's Singaporean branch or office (collectively "branch"), and to disclosures by a non-Singaporean branch if the disclosed information originated in a Singaporean branch and was transferred to the non-Singaporean branch via Part II of the Third [*21] Schedule of the Banking Act. Defendant Barclays has made an adequate showing that a subset of its documents is entitled to protection under Singaporean law; no other Defendant has done so.

Section 47 of the Singapore Banking Act prohibits the disclosure of "customer information" by "a bank in Singapore." Hai Decl. (Dkt. 362, Ex. B) ¶ 9; Bull Decl. (Dkt. 368) ¶ 13. Under Section 40A, "customer information" includes "any information relating to, or any particulars of, an account of a customer of the bank," a definition that clearly includes the customer identities and transaction data sought in this case. Hai Decl. ¶ 11 (noting exceptions for "deposit information" and "information that is not referable to any named customer or group of named customers"). Section 2(1) defines a "bank in Singapore" as either "a bank incorporated in Singapore" or the Singaporean branches of a bank incorporated outside Singapore. Id. ¶ 10; Bull Decl. ¶ 14. In this case, because no Defendant is incorporated in Singapore, the Court is only concerned with the documents that originate in one of Defendants' Singaporean branches. Bull Decl. ¶ 15. Based on the parties' supplemental joint letter, the Court agrees with Plaintiffs that such documents [*22] will likely make up only a very small portion of the expected production and cannot justify wholesale redaction of documents regardless of origin.[5] See Dkt 382 at 4.

The Singapore Banking Act does not expressly contain an exception for compulsion by a foreign court order. Hai Decl. ¶¶ 22(g), 25-26. Plaintiffs' declaration also concedes that a confidentiality order preventing further disclosure, like the protective order already entered in this case, would not immunize a Singaporean bank from liability. Bull Decl. ¶ 36 ("Disclosure pursuant to the terms of a confidentiality order is not an exception to bank secrecy under Singapore law."). A breach of the statute is criminally punishable, by a fine up to S$125,000 or a term of imprisonment of up to three years. Hai Decl. ¶ 33.

Plaintiffs also cite a line of cases holding that the French duty of secrecy does not apply to cases in which the bank is a party. See *Alfadda v. Fenn, No. 89-CV-6217, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1092, 1993 WL 33445, at 3 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 1, 1993); see also Bodner v. Paribas 202 F.R.D. 370, 376 n.6 (E.D.N.Y. 2000). In this Court's view, SG has sufficiently demonstrated that this carveout applies only if the customer whose information is at issue is the bank's adversary in the relevant litigation. Parleani Decl. ¶ 28. Such a distinction makes imminent sense: a bank customer, to whom the bank owes a duty of confidence, could waive that duty in order to litigate a claim against the bank. See Bodner, 202 F.R.D. at 376 n.6 (noting that French bank secrecy law does not apply when bank is "party to the action brought against it by the beneficiaries of the principle of banking secrecy rule" (quoting expert declaration) (emphasis added)). Additionally, a bank, to defend itself against an adversarial customer, could in fairness rely on information concerning subject matter that the client has placed at issue, in the same way that an attorney may use privileged communications to defend against a malpractice action. In contrast, there is no apparent rationale for a broader carveout that would apply to every case in which a bank is a party to litigation, whether as a plaintiff or as a defendant.

[5] The Singaporean production will likely consist of documents from one Barclays custodian for a period of one year, a slice of transaction data for orders placed in Singapore, and incidental communications related thereto. See Dkt. 382 at 1-4. As Defendant Barclays has noted, most of its custodians are not based in Asia. Dkt. 382 at 2. Defendant Bank of Nova Scotia (BNS) further indicated that its branch in Singapore does not execute trades of precious metals and instead channels precious metals orders to its Hong Kong office, which suggests that a relatively small share of its gold-related activity actually originates in Singapore. Id. at 2. Additionally, Defendants BNS, SG, and HSBC do not anticipate any document collection efforts in Singapore, and SG and HSBC are not able to speak with specificity and certainty as to their Singaporean customers and their processes for executing their gold orders. Id. Consequently, the share of documents likely to be impacted by Singaporean law is minimal.

If, however, a document otherwise protected from disclosure has been transferred out of Singapore, the Singapore Banking Act may not prohibit further disclosure by the non-Singaporean recipient. The parties' competing declarations agree that a recipient of a protected document transferred pursuant to Part I of the Third Schedule of the Banking Act may retransmit that document without risk of liability, whereas [*23] a recipient of a protected document transferred pursuant to Part II may not. Hai Decl. ¶¶ 21-23; Bull Decl. ¶ 16, 36. Defendant Barclays has represented that its transaction data pertaining to Singaporean customers were transferred to London under Part II, which would prevent further disclosure absent another exception; other Defendants are silent as to how their Singaporean CII has come to reside outside of Singapore. Dkt 382 at 1-3.

Based on the foregoing, only Barclays has demonstrated with particularity and specificity that production of at least a subset of its anticipated responsive documents is prohibited by the Singapore Banking Act. Specifically, Barclays has met its burden as to the documents obtained from Singapore associated with the options trader referenced in the parties' joint letter, for the time that the trader was based in Singapore. See Dkt. 382 at 1. Barclays has also met its burden as to the transaction data or other documents transferred out of Singapore pursuant to Part II of the Third Schedule of the Banking Act. See id. Defendants' request to redact or pseudonymize in accordance with Singaporean law is denied in all other respects.

c. England and Wales

Defendants [*24] have failed to show that the disclosure of materials from England and Wales would violate foreign law. Although Defendants have shown that the common law of England and Wales creates an implied contractual term of secrecy between a banker and a customer, they are unable to show that disclosure in this case would fall outside of recognized exceptions to the duty of secrecy; nor do they show that disclosure subject to a protective order would be inconsistent with that duty. See Tomlinson Decl. (Dkt. 367) at ¶ 3.

All parties agree that the common law duty of confidentiality has four exceptions. They are: customer consent, public duty, interests of the bank, and compulsion of law. Def. Letter at 4 (citing Tournier v. Nat'l Provincial & Union Bank of England [1924] 1 KB 461); Tomlinson Decl. ¶ 3 (citing Halsbury's Laws of England (Vo. 48, 2008, § 229)). Most relevant here are the public duty and compulsion of law exceptions. Defendants argue, without a supporting declaration, that ordinary civil lawsuits do not give rise to a public duty and that a foreign subpoena is inadequate to constitute compulsion of law. Def. Letter at 4. On the other hand, Plaintiffs' declaration asserts that it is essentially hornbook law that a court order, including a foreign one, [*25] is sufficient to trigger both exceptions. Tomlinson Decl. ¶ 4-6. Plaintiffs' declaration further represents that, under the common law, the duty of confidentiality is separate from a legal claim of privilege, which is necessary to resist discovery, and that the common law duty of confidentiality would be adequately safeguarded by a protective order. Id. ¶ 6-8.

The Court agrees with Plaintiffs. The Court finds Defendants' argument that no public duty is triggered because this private litigation does not pertain to "massive international fraud" to be disingenuous. See Def. Letter at 4. If the allegations in this case are true, Defendants have engaged in a decade-long antitrust conspiracy to manipulate the global price of gold, distorting the free market to the detriment of potentially tens of thousands (if not hundreds of thousands) of individuals across the world. In terms of public interest, the scale is easily comparable to that of a "massive international fraud." Defendants have also failed to establish that a federal court order necessarily falls short of the legal compulsion exception. See Tomlinson Decl. ¶ 5 (noting that Defendants' only authority on this point, X Ag v. A Bank [*26] [1983] 2 All ER 464, is distinguishable on due process grounds). Nor have Defendants demonstrated that the customers' interest in confidentiality would not be adequately preserved by the protective order in this case.

In short, Defendants have not met their burden to demonstrate, with "particularity and specificity," that their discovery obligations are in conflict with English or Welsh common law. See Fenn, 149 F.R.D. 28 at 34. As such, Defendants must proceed with discovery without regard to any duty of confidentiality created by the common law of England and Wales.

2. Comity Analysis

Because Defendants have adequately demonstrated a conflict between French law and SG's discovery obligations and between Singaporean law and a small subset of Barclays' document production, the Court must next determine whether to accommodate the relevant foreign laws under the comity analysis. As a starting point, the Court notes that Defendants are not seeking to block discovery altogether, but merely to pseudonymize where possible, or redact where pseudonymization is infeasible, their clients' identity. Plaintiffs' primary contention is that Defendants' risk of prosecution and liability in a foreign jurisdiction is likely to [*27] be low, which reduces Defendants' hardship of compliance with discovery. While that may be accurate, this Court will not require Defendants, who are acting in good faith, to mass-produce CII held in foreign jurisdictions in violation of foreign law, unless Plaintiffs demonstrate a specific need for that information.

Several of the comity factors weigh in Defendants' favor. First, there is no dispute that most of the information at issue in this case is of foreign origin, which favors deference to the law of the jurisdiction in which the information was created or is currently being held. Pl. Opp. at 7 ("Plaintiffs concede that much of the information they seek originates outside of the United States. Thus, this factor may weigh in favor of granting deference to foreign laws."). Second, as to the specificity of Plaintiffs' request, the Court finds it difficult to characterize the requests in this matter as "highly specific." See Pl. Opp. at 6. While it may be true that, ordinarily, a request for unredacted versions of agreed upon production may be considered a specific request, the Court cannot ignore the fact that the requests in this case likely sweep in thousands of customers and [*28] essentially all of those customers' account information over a decade-long period; to engage in massive understatement, the production of documents in this case is likely to include enormous amounts of otherwise private information that is irrelevant to the case. See Minpeco, 116 F.R.D. at 528, 530 (declining to compel production in part because "given the wide scope of plaintiffs' requests and interrogatories, compliance by [the bank] is very likely to yield much material that plaintiffs will not find useful in this litigation); cf. *Royal Park Investments SA/NV v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Tr. Co., No. 14-CV-4394, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 217165, 2017 WL 7512815, at 10 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 29, 2017). Third, there is no indication that Defendants are acting in bad faith. See Pl. Opp. at 10.

The balance of national interests, ordinarily the most important factor, is not dispositive here. France and Singapore clearly have an interest in the application of their laws to banks operating within their jurisdictions; compliance with local laws provides certainty and predictability to those who do business with said banks.[6] See Laydon, 183 F. Supp. 3d at 423 (noting that foreign nations have interest in protecting privacy rights of their citizens); see also Minpeco, 116 F.R.D. at 523 (finding that codification of secrecy obligations into criminal law was indicative of substantial foreign interest). On the other hand, the United States also has [*29] an obvious interest in the application of federal law to discovery in its courts; compliance with federal procedural rules provides certainty and predictability to litigants in this country. See Laydon, 183 F. Supp. 3d at 423. Additionally, even in private litigation in which the United States government is not a party, the United States generally has a strong national interest in combatting antitrust and price manipulation conspiracies. Minpeco, 116 F.R.D. at 523-24 ("The strength of the congressional policies behind the antitrust and commodities laws is not open to question."); In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., 278 F.R.D. 51, 54 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) ("[E]nforcement through private civil actions . . . is a critical tool for encouraging compliance with the country's antitrust laws."). The strength of the United States' interest in this case, however, depends substantially on whether Defendants' customer names are actually material to Plaintiffs' efforts to enforce this nation's antitrust and commodities laws and, if so, whether that information can be obtained through alternative means. Laydon, 183 F. Supp. 3d at 423 (noting that interest of United States grows stronger when "the discovery sought is vital to the litigation" (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)); In re

[6] Plaintiffs argue that the Court should discount French and Singaporean interests because they have not raised an objection to production in this case. While it is true that courts do often consider foreign governments' opposition or acquiescence to disclosure in particular cases, the lack of an apparent objection from France or Singapore is not especially probative here, because nothing in the record indicates that the governments were informed of this litigation (by either party) or otherwise had an opportunity to weigh in. See Alfadda, 149 F.R.D. at 34-35 (noting that defendants gave Swiss government opportunity to express view on disclosure and that Swiss government declined to take position).

*Payment Card Interchange Fee & Merch. Disc. Antitrust Litig., No. 05-MD-1720, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89275, 2010 WL 3420517, at 9 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 2010) [*30] (noting that "strength of the national interest in disclosure depends largely on . . . the importance of the contested documents to this litigation" when interest of United States is primarily private enforcement of antitrust law).

The outcome of the comity analysis therefore turns on the relevance of the CII and its importance to this action. See Milliken & Co. v. Bank of China, 758 F. Supp. 2d 238, 247 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) ("[I]t is necessary [] to judge the degree of importance of the information—where it falls on the spectrum between merely relevant at one end and crucial at the other—and then weigh this along with all the other factors."). The affected documents, generally transaction data and bank communications regarding gold or gold-related trades, are clearly relevant, but to overcome the comity factors in Defendants' favor, Plaintiffs must show specifically that the identities of customers, which is the only information that Defendants intend to withhold, are relevant and important to the case. And in particular, Plaintiffs must show that they have a need for the customer names contained in SG's document production and Barclays' Singaporean documents, notwithstanding the voluminous, unredacted production that Plaintiffs are otherwise receiving. [*31] See Trade Dev. Bank v. Cont'l Ins. Co., 469 F.2d 35, 41 (2d Cir. 1972) (affirming decision not to compel disclosure of customer identities and noting that "the relative unimportance of the information as to the clients' identity in the present proceeding was entitled to be considered").

Plaintiffs object to Defendants' proposed pseudonymization of tabulated data and anonymization of other documents because the proposal interferes with Plaintiffs' ability to cross-reference potential evidence.[7] In particular, a pseudonym provided by one bank cannot be matched against a pseudonym generated by another bank, even when they refer to the same person or entity; nor can a pseudonym in a spreadsheet be linked to a redacted communication. See Pl. Opp. at 2-3.

The Court agrees with Plaintiffs that, generally speaking, the ability to piece together different documents about the same customer or account may lead to relevant evidence, and that de-duplicating class members across datasets may aid in determining the percentage of class members affected by Defendants' actions. See Pl. Opp. at 3; *In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., No. 06-MD-1175, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 180914, 2014 WL 7882100, at 55 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 15, 2014) ("Though Rule 23 permits the possibility that some class members went un-impacted, the court still needs some assurance [*32] that these putative class members are relatively few in number."). Nonetheless, there are indications that Plaintiffs' need for customer names in this case is less than compelling. First, the parties in the sister case involving silver trading, which is also before this Court and is premised on essentially the same circumstances as in this case, have agreed to proceed with discovery without disclosure of CII. See Tr. at 19. Additionally, as Defendants have pointed out, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice closed its Fixing-related investigations without requiring the Fixing Banks to disclose CII. See Tr. at 36; Def. Letter at 8-9.

Under the circumstances of this case, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' stated interests in obtaining CII do not justify wholesale disclosure of SG's client names or Barclays' Singaporean customers. First, to the extent that Plaintiffs are interested in the customer information referenced in SG's and Barclays' non-tabulated documents, which consist largely of chat transcripts and other communications, Plaintiffs will already have access to a majority

[7] Plaintiffs also claim that CII is necessary for purposes of providing class notices under Federal Rule 23(c)(2)(B) of Civil Procedure. The Court finds any dispute over notice to be premature. If a class is certified in this case, the parties can work together on devising a method to provide notice to potential class members.

Similarly, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants may have an unfair advantage in this litigation if Defendants oppose class certification on the basis that Plaintiffs cannot show that class members suffered a net loss as a result of Defendants' manipulation of gold prices. See Pl. Opp. at 2 n.2. As the parties have described it, this netting issue could arise if a potential class member has multiple accounts across different banks, generating gains and losses that may need to be offset to determine the class member's actual injury. If and when Defendants make such an argument, the comity analysis would of course change, as Plaintiffs' need for non-anonymized transaction data would increase. The Court, however, finds no need to require, at this time, disclosure on the basis of a hypothetical response to a potential argument that Defendants have not yet tried to make.

of those documents in unredacted form, because the recipients of those messages, e.g., other [*33] Fixing Banks, have no basis to redact or pseudonymize the customer information communicated to them by SG or Barclays. To the extent that there are internal communications that reference specific customers, those are unlikely to be probative of an inter-bank conspiracy—or, if Plaintiffs do identify redacted documents that are particularly probative, they can request SG or Barclays to provide the unredacted version of those documents.[8]

Second, as to Plaintiffs' professed need to de-duplicate customers across all Defendants to determine class-wide impact, the Court finds that wholesale disclosure of CII by Barclays (as to Singaporean customers) and SG is unnecessary in light of the other CII to which Plaintiffs have full access. Because Plaintiffs will have unredacted materials from Bank of Nova Scotia, HSBC, and Barclays (minus Singaporean accounts), Plaintiffs' experts can already perform much if not most of the desired de-duplication. Based on those results, the parties' experts can likely estimate the number of duplicates that would be found if SG's clients and Barclay's Singapore clients were added to the mix.

Finally, to the extent that Plaintiffs encounter redacted, non-tabulated [*34] documents of particular interest that need to be matched with pseudonymized transaction data, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs may make a reasonable number of requests to Defendants SG and Barclays to provide the pseudonym(s) associated with the customer(s) referenced in the non-tabulated document(s). Given the nature of the discovery in this case, the Court finds it too burdensome to require Defendants to pseudonymize every account reference contained in each and every document, particularly because the vast majority of customer and account references are likely to be of no utility to Plaintiffs.

In sum, the Court finds that, under the comity analysis, Defendants SG and Barclays should not be required to disclose CII in violation of foreign law unless Plaintiffs demonstrate a particular need for the disclosure. Although the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to articulate a sufficient need for the wholesale disclosure of CII, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs may make specific requests for disclosure after receiving the partially pseudonymized and partially redacted production from SG and Barclays. The parties must meet-and-confer in good faith to resolve any disputes over [*35] any targeted disclosures and to bring any intractable disputes to the Court's attention.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed above, as to electronically tabulated data, Defendant SG is GRANTED leave to pseudonymize customer identity information from such datasets; Defendant Barclays is GRANTED leave to pseudonymize customer identity information from such datasets, to the extent that such information originated in Singapore and was transferred outside of Singapore pursuant to Part II of the Third Schedule of the Singapore Banking Act. As to the remaining documents that are not available in tabulated form, Defendants Barclays (only as to Singaporean documents produced by the sole Singapore-based custodian or transferred outside of Singapore pursuant to Part II of the Third Schedule of the Singapore Banking Act) and SG are GRANTED leave to redact customer identity information from their production, subject to a reasonable number of requests from Plaintiffs for disclosure of the pseudonym(s) associated with the customer(s) referenced in those documents. If after reviewing a pseudonymized or redacted document, Plaintiffs can articulate a specific need for the disclosure of the customer's [*36] identity, Plaintiffs may request that Defendants SG or Barclays produce the unredacted version of the document. Such requests must be reasonable in number, and the parties are directed to bring any disputes to the Court's attention if they cannot be resolved after a good-faith meet-and-confer.

As to all other documents, Defendants' request to redact or pseudonymize, including for purposes of complying with the common law of England and Wales, is DENIED.

[8] As to these targeted requests, the balancing of the comity factors may weigh in Plaintiffs' favor. First, when making such requests, Plaintiffs will presumably be able point to specific documents and concrete circumstances that make clear the relevance of the particular customer's identity to the case. Additionally, a bank's limited disclosure of information for selected accounts is far less likely to result in prosecution or liability than wholesale disclosure of CII.

At the oral argument on this motion, the parties informed the Court that, despite their best efforts, the discovery schedule previously entered in this case, Dkt. 327, needs to be adjusted. The parties are directed to meet and confer and to submit an agreed-upon modification of the schedule by May 17, 2019.

The Clerk of Court is respectfully directed to close the open motion at docket entry 362.

SO ORDERED.

In deciding a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), courts must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations in a complaint. Furthermore, courts must draw all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. However, courts are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation. The complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Although a complaint does not need detailed factual allegations, the factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. Thus, a complaint must: (1) contain sufficient allegations of underlying facts to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively; and (2) plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief, such that it is not unfair to require the opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > Protected Rights

HN5[] Elements, Protected Rights

Principles of equity and fairness may suggest that private citizens who rely unsuspectingly on state laws they did not create and may have no reason to believe are invalid should have some protection from liability pursuant to the good faith defense in 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > Protected Rights

HN6[] Elements, Protected Rights

Although not entirely consistent in their approaches, every circuit court to address the question has held that some type of good faith defense in 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 is available to private parties sued for constitutional violations.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > Protected Rights

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations

HN7[] Elements, Protected Rights

Every district court to consider whether unions that collected agency fees prior to Janus have a good-faith defense to 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 liability have answered in the affirmative.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > Protected Rights

HN8[] Elements, Protected Rights

Clement gives no indication that courts must analyze a common law analogue to apply the good-faith defense. Further, insofar as courts have analyzed the common law analogue to a plaintiff's 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 claim, none have done so to bar the good faith defense.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses

Affirmative defenses need not relate to or rebut specific elements of an underlying claim.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Qualified Immunity

HN10[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

In the qualified immunity context, state officials are entitled to rely on Supreme Court precedent even if that precedent's reasoning has been questioned; applying a higher standard to private individuals would be inequitable.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Qualified Immunity

HN11[] Protection of Rights, Section 1983 Actions

Even assuming the rule from qualified immunity cases applies to the good-faith defense in 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, a plaintiff may not circumvent qualified immunity or the good faith defense simply by labeling a claim for legal damages as one for equitable restitution.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity

HN12[] Preliminary Considerations, Equity

A personal claim against the defendant's general assets is a legal remedy, not an equitable one.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN13[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

When the United States Supreme Court applies a rule of federal law to the parties before it, that rule is the controlling interpretation of federal law and must be given full retroactive effect.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > Jurisdiction

HN14[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

The Educational Employment Relations Act (EERA) expressly authorizes the collection of agency fees. Cal. Gov't Code §§ 3543(a), 3546(a). Challenges to agency fees, even on constitutional grounds, are subject to the Public Employment Relations Board's (PERB) exclusive jurisdiction. The California Supreme Court has held that EERA broadly preempts state tort claims that allege conduct that is even arguably protected or prohibited under EERA. What matters is whether the underlying conduct on which the suit is based — however described in the complaint — may fall within PERB's exclusive jurisdiction.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Judicial Review

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > Jurisdiction

HN15[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Judicial Review

The California courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the Public Employment Relations Board's (PERB) over breach of collective bargaining agreement claims pursuant to Cal. Lab. Code § 1126.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Judicial Review

HN16[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Judicial Review

The purpose of Cal. Gov't Code § 1159 is explicit: to provide certainty to public employers and employee organizations that relied on state law, and to avoid disruption of public employee labor relations, after the Supreme Court's decision in Janus. Cal. Gov't Code § 1159(e)(2). Further, § 1159 declares that application of this section to pending claims and actions clarifies existing state law rather than changes it. § 1159(e)(1). Public employees who paid agency or fair share fees as a condition of public employment in accordance with state law and Supreme Court precedent prior to June 27, 2018, had no legitimate expectation of receiving that money under any available cause of action. Thus, application of this section to pending claims will preserve, rather than interfere with, important reliance interests.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

HN17[] Fundamental Rights, Procedural Due Process

In both federal and California due process analysis, the threshold question in determining retroactive application is whether the legislation changed or clarified the law. A statute that merely clarifies, rather than changes, existing law does not operate retrospectively even if applied to transactions predating its enactment because the true meaning of the statute remains the same.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN18[] Labor & Employment, Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

The California legislature was explicit that Cal. Gov't Code § 1159 clarifies existing state law rather than changes it, because public employees who paid agency or fair share fees as a condition of public employment in accordance with state law and Supreme Court precedent prior to Janus, had no legitimate expectation of receiving that money under any available cause of action. § 1159(e)(1). At the time agency fees were collected, the Unions could not be held liable under any state law theory for collection of such fees, and § 1159 merely reinforces this point. A clarified law is simply a statement of what the law has always been. Further, although a legislative declaration of an existing statute's meaning is neither binding nor conclusive on the courts in construing the statute, the Court may give due consideration to the Legislature's views.

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN19[] Legislation, Types of Statutes

Clarifying statutes can be remedial in nature and intended by the Legislature to be applied at the earliest possible time, including application to all cases not then finally decided.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities

HN20[] Fundamental Rights, Procedural Due Process

Under both the federal and state constitutions, when a law creates a substantive rule of law granting immunity to certain parties against certain types of claims, the legislative determination provides all the process that is due.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

HN21[] Fundamental Rights, Procedural Due Process

Under the California constitution, the legislature can provide for retroactive application of a statute if it has a reasonable basis for doing so. In determining whether a retroactive law contravenes the due process clause, a court considers such factors as the significance of the state interest served by the law, the importance of the retroactive application of the law to the effectuation of that interest, the extent of reliance upon the former law, the legitimacy of that reliance, the extent of actions taken on the basis of that reliance, and the extent to which the retroactive application of the new law would disrupt those actions.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process

HN22[] Labor & Employment, Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

Cal. Gov't Code § 1159 serves the significant state interests of providing certainty to public employers and employee organizations that relied on state law, and avoiding disruption of public employee labor relations after Janus. Cal. Gov't Code §1159(e)(2).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process

HN23[] Labor & Employment, Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

Where Congress has expressed its clear intent that the legislation be retroactive, the constitutional impediments to retroactive civil legislation are now modest. The potential unfairness of retroactive civil legislation is not a sufficient reason for a court to fail to give a statute its intended scope. It has been squarely held that, although a cause of action is a species of property, a party's property right in any cause of action does not vest until a final unreviewable judgment is obtained. Thus, Cal. Gov't Code § 1159 is subject to rational basis review and its retroactive application must be upheld so long as the California legislature's decision was not irrational or arbitrary.

Governments > Legislation > Initiative & Referendum

HN24[] Legislation, Initiative & Referendum

The single subject rule of the California Constitution provides that a statute shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. Cal. Const. art. IV, § 9. An initiative measure does not violate the single-subject requirement if, despite its varied collateral effects, all of its parts are reasonably germane to each other, and to the general purpose or object of the initiative.

Cal. Gov't Code § 3558 provides that public school districts must provide unions that serve as exclusive representatives of bargaining units with the name, job title, department, work location, work, home, and personal cellular telephone numbers, personal email addresses on file with the employer, and home address of any newly hired employee within 30 days of the date of hire or by the first pay period of the month following hire, and with a list of that information for all employees in the bargaining unit at least every 120 days unless more frequent or more detailed lists are required by an agreement with the union. An employee may opt out of having such information shared with the union.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

HN27[] Labor & Employment, Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

Cal. Gov't Code § 3558 codifies a California Supreme Court's decision which held that disclosure of public employees' contact information to a union does not violate their privacy rights under California's constitution. The Court explained that because the union's duty of fair representation extends to all employees in the bargaining unit, regardless of union membership, the union must have the means of communicating with all employees. Thus, direct communication between unions and all bargaining unit employees is essential to ensure that nonmembers' opinions are heard. Giving the unions "this contact information will not coerce employees into joining the union. An employee who chooses not to join a union still enjoys the benefits of union representation.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

HN28[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Unfair Labor Practices

At least in the context of organized labor, the impingement of First Amendment rights must, at a minimum, satisfy exacting scrutiny; i.e., it must serve a compelling state interest that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

HN29[] Labor & Employment, Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

Cal. Gov't Code § 3558 serves a compelling government interest. A union has an obligation to communicate with members and non-members pursuant to their duty of representation, so the Union must have the means of communicating with all employees. This direct communication between unions and all bargaining unit employees is essential to ensure that nonmembers' opinions are heard. Thus, California has a compelling interest in ensuring that unions can communicate directly with employees.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

HN30[] Labor & Employment, Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

A union must be able to communicate directly with all employees, and access to employee contact information is fundamental to the entire expanse of a union's relationship with the employees, permitting the union to perform its broad range of statutory duties in a truly representative fashion and in harmony with the employees' desires and interests.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations

HN31[] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Association

Regarding unions, any associational freedom restriction presented by Cal. Gov't Code § 3558 is significantly minimized by the fact that employees can opt out of the disclosures.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine

HN35[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state-action doctrine immunizes a union from antitrust liability because federal antitrust laws do not restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. To establish state-action immunity, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy and be actively supervised by the State.

In Knight, the Supreme Court has held that a system of exclusive union representation does not violate the speech or associational rights of individuals who are not members of the union. Janus essentially reaffirmed Knight because it distinguished between financial support for a union and the underlying system of exclusive representation. Indeed, Janus explicitly noted that states can keep their labor-relations systems exactly as they are—only they cannot force nonmembers to subsidize public-sector unions.

I. BACKGROUND

On June 27, 2018, the Supreme Court decided Janus and overruled Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, 431 U.S. 209, 97 S. Ct. 1782, 52 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1977) HN1[] and its progeny, holding that no form of payment to a union, including agency fees, can be deducted or attempted to be collected from an employee without the employee's affirmative consent. Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2486.

The Plaintiffs in Babb are current or former public-school teachers who refused to join teachers' unions because they disapproved of their political advocacy and collective-bargaining activities. (Babb Third Amended Complaint ¶¶ 14-20, [10] Doc. 90.) Prior to Janus, the Plaintiffs were required to pay agency fees to the unions as a condition of their employment. (Id.) See Cal. Gov. Code § 3546(a). Plaintiffs allege that the compulsory collection of agency fees violates Janus. (Babb Third Amended Complaint ¶ 21.) Plaintiffs bring federal claims for relief for violation of the First Amendment pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201, and California state law claims for conversion, trespass to chattels, replevin, unjust enrichment, and restitution. (Id. ¶¶ 41-42.) Plaintiffs seek two forms of relief: (1) that compulsory agency fees be declared unconstitutional and enjoined; and (2) that the Union Defendants be required to repay all agency fees they received before Janus. (Id. ¶ 43 c-j.) The Union Defendants move to dismiss all claims. (See Babb Mem. at 1.)

Wilford is, for the purposes of the pending motions, identical to Babb. The Wilford Plaintiffs are also non-union teachers who allege that the compulsory collection of agency fees is unconstitutional after Janus. (Wilford First Amended Complaint ¶¶ 1-7, 25-29, Doc. 155.) They also bring federal claims for violation of the First Amendment pursuant to § 1983 (id. ¶¶ 41-47), [*868] and state law claims for conversion (id. ¶¶ 48-51) [11] and restitution (id. ¶¶ 52-57). Further, as in Babb, the Wilford Plaintiffs seek an order enjoining the future collection of agency fees (id. Demand for Relief ¶ C) and requiring the Union Defendants to repay all agency fees received prior to Janus (id. ¶ D). The Union Defendants move to dismiss all claims. (See Wilford Mem. at 1.)

Matthews is very similar to Wilford and Babb, as the Matthews Plaintiffs are non-union teachers who allege that compulsory collection of agency fees is unconstitutional after Janus. (Matthews Complaint ¶¶ 16, 18-19, Doc. 1-1.) However, the Matthews Plaintiffs bring no federal claims for relief, but rather claims for unfair competition under California's Unfair Competition Law ("the UCL") (id. ¶¶ 35-45); conversion (id. ¶¶ 46-51); trespass to chattels (id. ¶¶

52-57); unjust enrichment (id. ¶¶ 58-61); and money had and received (id. ¶¶ 62-65). As with Babb and Wilford, the Matthews Plaintiffs seek to enjoin the future collection of agency fees (id. Prayer for Relief ¶ 6) and to order the Union Defendants to repay all agency fees received prior to Janus (id. ¶ 2). The Union Defendants move to dismiss all claims. (See Matthews Mem. at 1.)

Martin is different from [12] Matthews, Wilford, and Babb in significant respects. Plaintiffs are public-school teachers who were union members prior to Janus but resigned thereafter. (See Martin First Amended Complaint at 2-3, Doc. 47.) The Martin Plaintiffs' first claim is, similar to Babb, Wilford, and Matthews, that compulsory collection of agency fees violates the First Amendment. (Id. ¶¶ 15-26.) Some Plaintiffs allege that they would not have joined the union or would have resigned earlier if not for the agency fee requirement, while others claim that "they were led to believe that union membership was a mandatory condition of their employment" and "were never informed of their constitutional right to quit the union." (Id. ¶¶ 17-19.) As part of first claim, Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief to prevent the future collection of agency fees (id. ¶ 84) as well as "refunds equal to the amount of the [agency fees] that [the Union Defendants] extracted from [Plaintiffs] regardless of whether they stayed in the union or resigned" (id. ¶ 24). Plaintiffs' second claim is that their First Amendment rights were violated because, while they were union members, they had to opt out of making a $20 annual payment to the Union Defendants [13] if they did not wish to make the payment. (Id. ¶¶ 27-42.) Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief to prevent the Union Defendants from continuing to charge the $20, as well as retrospective relief for the funds paid while they were members. (Id. ¶¶ 39-42.) With their third claim, Plaintiffs challenge the federal and state constitutionality of California Government Code § 3558, which provides for public school employers to share with unions that represent their employees the contact information of bargaining unit employees whom the unions represent, unless the employee has requested that his or her contact information not be shared. (Id. ¶¶ 43-56.) The fourth claim is asserted only by Plaintiff Martin and alleges that California Education Code § 45060 violates the First Amendment because it provides that a union member must send a letter to the union, rather than to the employer, if the union member wishes to terminate membership dues deductions. (Id. ¶¶ 57-64.) Plaintiffs' fifth claim alleges that collective bargaining through an exclusive representative violates the First Amendment. (Id. ¶¶ 65-74.) Finally, the sixth claim is asserted only by Plaintiff Martin and alleges that the collective bargaining agreements between California school districts and the Union Defendants [*869] violate [14] federal antitrust laws. (Id. ¶¶ 75-81, 89.)

The Union Defendants move to dismiss all of the Martin Plaintiffs' claims except the portion of the second claim that seeks retrospective monetary relief. (Martin Union Mem. at 1.) Plaintiffs have consented to dismissal of their fifth claim, as well as to dismissal of the prospective portions of their first and second claim. (Martin Union Opp. at 4, 23, 35.) Further, the State Defendants separately move to dismiss claims one and four. (Martin State Mem. at 1.)

Finally, the Plaintiff in Few is a public-school teacher in the Los Angeles Unified School District. (Few First Amended Complaint ¶ 14, Doc. 38.) Few brings two claims for relief, and United Teachers of Los Angeles seeks to dismiss only his second claim, which alleges that collective bargaining through an exclusive representative violates the First Amendment. (See id. ¶¶ 53-64; Few Mem. at 1.) Few's second claim is identical to the Martin Plaintiffs' fifth claim.

On February 13, 2019, the Court granted the California Attorney General's request to intervene in Wilford, Babb, and Matthews to defend the constitutionality of California Government Code § 1159. (Intervention Order in Babb, Doc. 72.) While the constitutionality of § 1159 is also relevant to Martin, the Attorney [15] General was already a party to Martin, as noted above. Pursuant to the Court's Order, the Attorney General filed opening briefs in Wilford, Babb, Matthews, and Martin, the Plaintiffs in each case filed a response, and the Attorney General and Union Defendants filed replies. (See id.) However, the parties essentially filed one set of briefs in Wilford and simply incorporated those briefs by reference in their briefs in Babb, Matthews, and Martin. Thus, for ease of reference, to the extent the Court refers to the briefs filed pursuant to the Intervention Order, the Court will simply refer to the Wilford briefs. (See AG Opening Brief, Doc. 174; Plaintiffs' Opposition to AG, Doc. 175; AG Reply, Doc. 180; Union AG Reply, Doc. 181.)

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN2[] In deciding a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), courts must accept as true all "well-pleaded factual allegations" in a complaint. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Furthermore, courts must draw all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. See Daniels-Hall v. Nat'l Educ. Ass'n, 629 F.3d 992, 998 (9th Cir. 2010). However, "courts 'are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.'" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). The complaint must contain "sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim [16] to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). Although a complaint "does not need detailed factual allegations," the "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . ." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Thus, a complaint must (1) "contain sufficient allegations of underlying facts to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively[,]" and (2) "plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief, such that it is not unfair to require the [*870] opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation." Starr v. Baca, 652 F.3d 1202, 1216 (9th Cir. 2011).

III. DISCUSSION

First, as is relevant to Wilford, Babb, Matthews, and Martin, the Union Defendants argue that the Plaintiffs' claims for prospective relief from the compulsory collection of agency fees are moot because Defendants are fully complying with Janus and have no intention of doing otherwise. (See Babb Mem. at 3.)

Second, as is relevant to Wilford, Babb, and Martin, the Union Defendants argue that they are entitled to a good-faith [17] defense to Plaintiffs' § 1983 claims for a refund of agency fees because the Union Defendants "received the fees in compliance with California statutes and then-controlling and directly on-point United States Supreme Court precedent that expressly authorized [agency] fees." (See Wilford Mem. at 1.)

Third, as is relevant only to Martin, the Union Defendants argue that the membership dues the Martin Plaintiffs paid while union members were voluntarily paid and thus not compelled pursuant to Janus. (Martin Union Mem. at 8.)

Fourth, as is relevant to Wilford, Babb, Matthews, and Martin the Union Defendants argue that the Plaintiffs' state law claims are preempted by the Educational Employment Relations Act ("EERA") and California Government Code § 1159. (See Wilford Mem. 11, 13.)

Fifth, as is relevant only to Martin, the Union Defendants argue that Government Code § 3558, which requires school districts to disclose all of their employees' contact information to the Union Defendants, does not violate the First Amendment. (Martin Union Mem. at 22.)

Sixth, as is relevant only to Martin, the Union and State Defendants argue that Martin does not have standing to challenge Education Code § 45060, which requires employees to direct their resignation requests to [18] the union, rather than their employers, because his resignation has already been processed. (Martin Union Mem. at 30; Martin State Mem. at 7.)

Seventh, as is relevant only to Martin, the Union Defendants argue that Martin's antitrust claim must be dismissed because, for multiple reasons, the "purportedly anticompetitive conduct here falls entirely outside the scope of federal antitrust law." (Martin Union Reply at 13.)

Finally, as is relevant only to Few,[8] United Teachers Los Angeles argues that Few's claim that exclusive representation violates the First Amendment is foreclosed by Minnesota State Board for Community Colleges v. Knight, 465 U.S. 271, 104 S. Ct. 1058, 79 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984). (Few Mem. at 6.)

[8] As noted above, although the Martin Plaintiffs bring an identical claim, they consent to its dismissal pursuant to Knight. (Martin Union Opp. at 35.)

A. Mootness of Claims for Prospective Relief (Babb, Wilford, Martin, and Matthews)

HN3[] This Court has twice held that claims for prospective relief to prevent the collection of agency fees post-Janus are moot. See Yohn v. California Teachers Ass'n, Case No. SACV 17-202-JLS-DFM, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 209944, 2018 WL 5264076 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2018); Babb v. California Teachers Ass'n, Case No. 8:18-cv-00994-JLS-DFM, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 223418, 2018 WL 7501267 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 7, 2018) (dismissing claims for prospective relief against state defendants as moot). The claims for prospective relief in Wilford, Babb, Matthews, and Martin are indistinguishable, [*871] and the Union Defendants have again submitted declarations attesting to their commitment to no [19] longer enforce California Government Code § 3546 and to fully comply with Janus.[9] Indeed, the Martin Plaintiffs admit that their claims for prospective relief are moot "in light of the [Union Defendants'] demonstrated compliance with Janus and their iron-clad promise to comply with Janus going forward." (Martin Union Opp. at 4.) Further, every other district court to consider this issue has found claims for prospective relief moot after Janus. See, e.g., Cook v. Brown, 364 F. Supp. 3d 1184, 1188 (D. Or. 2019); Carey v. Inslee, 364 F. Supp. 3d 1220, 1225-27 (W.D. Wash. 2019); Danielson v. Inslee, 345 F. Supp. 3d 1336, 1339-40 (W.D. Wash 2018).

Accordingly, the Union Defendants' Motions to Dismiss the Plaintiffs' claims for prospective relief are GRANTED.[10]

B. Section 1983 Good-Faith Defense (Babb, Wilford, and Martin)

HN4[] "The threshold question of whether the good faith defense is available to private parties in § 1983 actions has been answered affirmatively by the Ninth Circuit." Cook v. Brown, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1190. In Clement v. City of Glendale, 518 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir. 2008), the court held that the defendant towing company could assert a good faith defense to § 1983 liability where the plaintiff alleged that the towing company unconstitutionally seized her vehicle without notice. Id. at 1097. Clement "acknowledged that the Supreme Court in Wyatt v. Cole and again in Richardson v. McKnight had held open whether private defendants could avail themselves [20] of the good faith defense in a § 1983 action." Cook, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1190-91 (citing Clement, 518 F.3d at 1096-97; Wyatt v. Cole, 504 U.S. 158, 169, 112 S. Ct. 1827, 118 L. Ed. 2d 504 (1992) ("[W]e do not foreclose the possibility that private defendants faced with § 1983 liability . . . could be entitled to an affirmative defense based on good faith."); Richardson v. McKnight, 521 U.S. 399, 413-14, 117 S. Ct. 2100, 138 L. Ed. 2d 540, (1997) ("Wyatt explicitly stated that it did not decide whether or not the private defendants before it might assert, not immunity, but a special 'good-faith' defense . . . we do not express a view on this last-mentioned question.")). HN5[] Wyatt recognized that "principles of equity and fairness may suggest . . . that private citizens who rely unsuspectingly on state laws they did not create and may have no reason to believe are invalid should have some protection from liability." 504 U.S. at 168.

In Clement, the Ninth Circuit held that "the facts of this case justify allowing [the towing company] to assert such a good faith defense." Clement, 518 F.3d at 1097. Specifically, the court noted that the towing company "did its best to follow the law" and that the "tow was authorized by the police department, conducted under close police supervision and appeared to be [*872] permissible under both local ordinance and state law." Id. HN6[] Further, "[a]lthough not entirely consistent in their approaches, every circuit court to address the question [21] has held that some type of good faith defense is available to private parties sued for constitutional violations." Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1228 (citing Pinsky v. Duncan, 79 F.3d 306, 311-12 (2d Cir. 1996); Vector Research, Inc. v. Howard & Howard Attorneys, P.C., 76 F.3d 692, 698-99 (6th Cir. 1996); Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1275-78 (3d Cir. 1994)).

[9] See Pan Decl. in Babb ¶¶ 3-4, 7-10, Doc. 63-9; Mar Decl. in Babb ¶¶ 4-15, Doc. 63-6; Pan Decl. in Wilford ¶¶ 3-4, 7-10, Doc. 163-8; Schneiderman Decl. in Wilford ¶¶ 2-6, Doc. 163-6; Pan Decl. in Matthews ¶¶ 3-4, 7-10, Doc. 27-5; Mar Decl. in Matthews ¶¶ 4-15, Doc. 27-8; Pan Decl. in Martin ¶¶ 3-4, 7-10, Doc. 61-7.

[10] The Wilford Plaintiffs suggest that their refunds for fees paid prior to Janus for post-Janus pay periods were incorrectly calculated. (See Wilford Opp. at 3-4.) The Pan Reply Declaration (Doc. 170-1) appears to answer their questions regarding the refund process, and regardless, whether the refunds were properly calculated is "not properly before the Court." See Lamberty v. Conn. St. Police Union, No. 3:15-CV-378 (VAB), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 179805, 2018 WL 5115559, at *9 (D. Conn. Oct. 19, 2018).

HN7[] On indistinguishable facts, every district court to consider whether unions that collected agency fees prior to Janus have a good-faith defense to § 1983 liability have answered in the affirmative. See, e.g., Danielson v. AFSCME Council 28, 340 F. Supp. 3d 1083, 1084-87 (W.D. Wash. 2018); Cook, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1190-94; Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1227-1233; Crockett v. NEA-Alaska, 3:18-CV-00179 JWS, 367 F. Supp. 3d 996, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *3-6 (D. Alaska March 14, 2019); Janus v. AFSCME Council 31, Case No. 15 C 1235, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43152, 2019 WL 1239780, at *1-3 (N.D. Ill. March 18, 2019); Hough v. SEIU Local 521, No. 18-CV-04902-VC, 2019 WL 1785414 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 16, 2019); Lee v. Ohio Education Association, et al., No.1:18CV1420, 366 F. Supp. 3d 980, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49403, 2019 WL 1323622, *2-3 (N.D. Ohio Mar. 25, 2019). The Court finds these courts' reasoning persuasive and applicable here.

The Union Defendants argue that they collected agency fees from Plaintiffs "at a time when California [statutes] and controlling U.S. precedent expressly allowed the collection of such fees." (See Babb Mem. at 9.) Indeed, this Court has acknowledged that "prior to Janus, [the Unions] were merely following the 40-year-precedent of Abood." Yohn, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 209944, 2018 WL 5264076, at *4. Plaintiffs argue that the good-faith defense should not apply because: (1) the most analogous common law tort to their § 1983 claims, conversion, rejects any consideration of the tortfeasor's state of mind; (2) the good-faith defense extends only to individuals and not entities; (3) Union Defendants cannot establish good faith unless they present evidence [22] of their subjective states of mind; (4) the Union Defendants must prove that they complied with Abood to avail themselves of the good-faith defense; (5) the good-faith defense is inapplicable to claims for equitable relief such as backpay, restitution, and unjust enrichment; and (6) they are seeking the return of unconstitutionally seized property (the agency fees they paid prior to Janus) and not "collateral" damages stemming from the seizure. (See Babb Opp. at 1-2.)

1. Common Law Tort Analogy

Plaintiffs argue that Wyatt "compels courts to look to the most analogous common-law tort, and it allows courts to recognize a defense only if that tort would have conferred similar immunities when section 1983 was enacted." (Babb Opp. at 3-4.) Plaintiffs claim that "[t]he common-law tort most analogous to the union's unconstitutional confiscation of wages is conversion, and conversion is a strict-liability tort that is unconcerned with whether the defendant acted in good faith." (Id. at 4.) Plaintiffs' argument fails for a number of reasons.

First, as the Union Defendants note, the portion of Wyatt from which Plaintiffs derive their "rule" dealt with immunity from § 1983 liability, not the good-faith defense. (See Babb Reply at 4.) See Wyatt, 504 U.S. at 164 ("If parties [23] seeking immunity were shielded from tort liability when Congress enacted [§ 1983] we infer from legislative silence that Congress did not intend to abrogate such immunities when it imposed liability for actions taken [*873] under color of state law.") (emphasis added); see also Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1229 ("[W]hile [Wyatt] did discuss common law analogues in dicta, that discussion was largely in reference to the history of qualified immunity.")

HN8[] Second, "Plaintiffs' construction of the good faith defense lacks precedent in the Ninth Circuit." Danielson, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 1086. Clement gives no indication that courts must analyze a common law analogue to apply the good-faith defense. See Clement, 518 F.3d at 1097. Further, "[i]nsofar as courts have analyzed the common law analogue to a plaintiff's § 1983 claim, none have done so to bar the good faith defense." Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1229-30 (citing Pinsky, 79 F.3d at 312 (discussing Wyatt and finding that the § 1983 claim was analogous to malicious prosecution)); Franklin v. Fox, No. C 97-2443 CRB, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19651, 2001 WL 114438, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 22, 2001) (noting that the claim for violation of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel "is not easily analogized to the common law torts of malicious prosecution or abuse of process" for purposes of determining which party bears the burden but applying the good faith defense anyway)).[11]

Third, even assuming "the 'common law analogue' requirement from Wyatt does [24] apply, conversion is not the most closely analogous common law claim." Danielson, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 1086. Indeed, conversion "does not account for the fact that Plaintiffs' constitutional claim is rooted in the First Amendment." Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1230. "Conversion involves taking another's property, regardless of intent, whereas the gravamen of the First Amendment claim in this case is that the Union Defendant[s] expended compelled agency fees on political and ideological activities that Plaintiffs oppose." Danielson, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 1086. In other words, Plaintiffs' First Amendment claim turns not upon the Union Defendants' receipt of Plaintiffs' property, but upon the dignitary harm resulting from being compelled to support speech with which they disagree. See id. Thus, the Court agrees with the other courts that have held that Plaintiffs' claims are most similar to dignitary torts, such as defamation, or to abuse of process because the Union Defendants used government processes to collect agency fees. Id.; Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1230; Cook, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1191; *Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at 5. "Because these torts do have scienter requirements," even under Plaintiffs' proposed rule, the good-faith defense is available to the Union Defendants. Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1230.

2. Application of Good-Faith Defense to Entities

Plaintiffs next argue that the good-faith defense applies only to individuals, not entities such as [25] the Union Defendants. (See Babb Opp. at 9.) Plaintiffs again conflate qualified immunity with the good-faith defense and argue that because qualified immunity applies only to individual officials, not government entities, the Union Defendants cannot avail themselves of the good-faith defense. (Id. at 9-10.) However, the controlling case law in this Circuit - Clement - allowed a private towing company to assert the good-faith defense. See 518 F.3d at 1097. Accordingly, the Court rejects Plaintiffs' argument.

3. Subjective Belief

Plaintiffs next argue that, if the good-faith defense applies, the Union Defendants [*874] have the burden to show their subjective state of mind, and Plaintiffs should be given the opportunity for discovery on this issue. (Babb Opp. at 14.) Further, Plaintiffs argue that the Union Defendants cannot rely on Abood to establish their belief that agency-fee collection was lawful because the Supreme Court issued "warnings" that collecting agency fees was "constitutionally dubious." (Id. at 16.) See also Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2485 ("[A]ny public-sector union seeking an agency-fee provision in a collective-bargaining agreement must have understood that the constitutionality of such a provision was uncertain.") Indeed, as Danielson notes, "the subjective state of [26] mind of a party asserting good faith is a common inquiry in cases discussing the defense." 340 F. Supp. 3d at 1086; see Clement, 518 F.3d at 1097 (concluding that towing company "did its best to follow the law and had no reason to suspect that there would be a constitutional challenge to its actions").

Although the Supreme Court may have hinted in dicta that it would eventually overrule Abood, "reading the tea leaves of Supreme Court dicta has never been a precondition to good faith reliance on governing law." Cook, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1192. For the 40 years prior to Janus, agency fee collection was constitutional pursuant to Abood. Thus, "[a]ny subjective belief [the Union Defendants] could have had that [Abood] was wrongly decided and should be overturned would have amounted to telepathy." Danielson, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 1086. HN10[] Further, even assuming that the Union Defendants did expect Abood to be overruled, "such an expectation cannot produce subjective belief in unconstitutionality when [they are] also aware that the prior holding has not been overruled." Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1229. Moreover, in the qualified immunity context, state officials are entitled to rely on [11] HN9[] Plaintiffs' proposed rule also fails "because affirmative defenses need not relate to or rebut specific elements of an underlying claim." Cook, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1191 (citing Jarvis v. Cuomo, 660 F. Appx. 72, 75-76 (2d Cir. 2016)).

Supreme Court precedent even if that precedent's reasoning has been questioned; applying a higher standard to private individuals would be inequitable. [27] See Cook, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1193 (citing Davis v. United States, 564 U.S. 229, 241, 131 S. Ct. 2419, 180 L. Ed. 2d 285 (2011) (declining to apply exclusionary rule to evidence generated in searches that were consistent with then-binding case law because police were entitled to rely on that precedent, even though its reasoning had been questioned); Pinsky, 79 F.3d at 313 ("[I]t is objectively reasonable to act on the basis of a statute not yet held invalid.")); see also Wyatt, 504 U.S. at 168 (finding that good-faith defense is based on "principles of equity and fairness").

Thus, the Court concludes that the Union Defendants need not produce evidence of their subjective belief that agency fee collection was constitutional.

4. Compliance with Abood

Next, Plaintiffs argue that the Union Defendants must prove that they complied with Abood in order to assert a good-faith defense and that Plaintiffs are entitled to take discovery on this issue. (Babb Opp. at 20.) The Union Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not alleged that they failed to comply with Abood and, regardless, a claim "that [the Union Defendants] received fees not permitted by Abood would be a different claim on behalf of a different class." (Babb Reply at 12.)

The Court agrees with the other district courts that have found this argument unavailing. See Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *6; Carey, 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1232. Here, just as in Carey, the Babb Plaintiffs [28] have amended their Second Amended Complaint to "re-state the legal argument contained in their Opposition brief." 364 F. Supp. 3d at 1232. (See Babb Third Amended Complaint ¶ 29.) However, even with the amendment, [*875] the Babb Plaintiffs still do not allege that the Union Defendants failed to comply with Abood. (See Babb Third Amended Complaint ¶ 29 ("[The Union Defendants' must [] show that they complied with pre-Janus case law.") Further, even if they had alleged failure to comply, the Third Amended Complaint provides no facts to support such an allegation.

In short, Plaintiffs' lawsuits are not about whether the Union Defendants complied with Abood. Thus, "[t]heir argument that discovery is needed on a different claim for different relief on a different class before the court can apply the good-faith defense simply does not track." Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *6.

5. Application to Equitable Claims

Plaintiffs also argue that the good-faith defense does not apply to their equitable claims for relief. (Babb Opp. at 22.) Plaintiffs again rely on cases involving qualified immunity, not the good-faith defense, for this argument. (Id.) HN11[] Even assuming the rule from qualified immunity cases applies to the good-faith defense, "[a] plaintiff may not circumvent qualified [29] immunity or the good faith defense simply by labeling a claim for legal damages as one for equitable restitution." Carey, 364 F. Supp. at 1232 (citing Lenea v. Lane, 882 F.2d 1171, 1178-79 (7th Cir. 1989) ("Regardless of what label is placed on the monetary relief which Lenea wants, 'equitable' or 'legal damages,' it remains a personal monetary award out of the official's own pocket.")).

The Court agrees with Crockett and Carey, both of which concluded that Plaintiffs' demand that the Union Defendants "refund" their agency fee payments sounds in law, not equity. HN12[] The Plaintiffs' agency fees "paid for [the] ongoing costs of representation" and "[t]here is no segregated fund to which Plaintiffs' payments can now be traced, and therefore any relief would be paid from the Union Defendants' general assets." Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *5. A "personal claim against the defendant's general assets . . . is a legal remedy, not an equitable one." Id. (quoting Montanile v. Board of Trustees, 136 S. Ct. 651, 658, 193 L. Ed. 2d 556 (2016)).

6. Return of Unconstitutionally Seized Property

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that the monetary relief they seek is qualitatively different from what they term "collateral damages" and more akin to the return of unconstitutionally seized property. As such, Plaintiffs argue that a good faith defense is unavailable, and that whenever property is unconstitutionally [30] taken, even if in good-faith reliance on a long-standing decision of the United States Supreme Court, it must be returned. (See Martin Opp. at 1.) Although mentioned only briefly in their Opposition (id.), at oral argument, Plaintiffs relied on Harper v. Virginia Department of Taxation, 509 U.S. 86, 113 S. Ct. 2510, 125 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1993) for support. HN13[] Harper announced the general rule that "[w]hen this Court applies a rule of federal law to the parties before it, that rule is the controlling interpretation of federal law and must be given full retroactive effect." Id. at 97. This rule is of no assistance to Plaintiffs in the present context; in arguing a good faith defense to a § 1983 claim, the Union Defendants assume, without conceding, that Janus applies retroactively.

The question here - one not addressed by Harper -is whether Union Defendants are precluded from asserting a good faith defense in this context, where Plaintiffs made payments for agency fees later determined to be unconstitutional. For the most part, the cases Plaintiffs cite have [*876] nothing to say about a good faith defense to a § 1983 claim. More significantly, the cases cited involve the return of discrete and identifiable property, not a refund of fees paid. See, e.g., Wyatt v. Cole, 994 F.2d 1113, 1115 (5th Cir. 1993) (involving § 1983 damages from unconstitutional seizure of cattle); Clement, 518 F.3d at 1090 (involving [31] § 1983 damages from unconstitutional seizure of vehicle); United States v. Rayburn House Office Building Room 2113 Washington DC 20515, 497 F.3d 654, 656, 378 U.S. App. D.C. 139 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (ordering return of documents seized from a congressman's office in violation of the Speech and Debate clause despite good faith reliance on search warrant). In that sense, Plaintiffs' argument here is a refrain of their claim that the most analogous state law claim is one for conversion; a wrong for which the remedy might be replevin — the return of the specifically stolen property. As the Court noted above, that is not the gist of this case. It cannot be overlooked that the pre-Janus regime consisted of an obligation by the Plaintiffs to pay fees to the Union Defendants, and a concomitant obligation by the Union Defendants to use those fees to bargain on Plaintiffs' behalf. While the Supreme Court has determined that such an arrangement violated Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights, it is not the case that the agency fees remain in a vault, to be returned like a seized automobile. As the Union Defendants cannot retract their performance on this implied contract, it would be inequitable to force them to repay Plaintiffs' agency fees.

In short, the cases before the Court present a fundamentally [32] different issue than those cited by the Plaintiffs. The Union Defendants did not merely rely on a presumptively valid state statute; they relied on the 40-year-precedent of Abood. The Court agrees with the Honorable Judge Chhabria who noted, "there is a strong argument that when the highest judicial authority has previously deemed conduct constitutional, reversal of course by that judicial authority should never, as a categorical matter, result in retrospective monetary relief based on that conduct." Hough, 2019 WL 1785414, at *1.

Accordingly, the Court rejects all of Plaintiffs' arguments against application of the good-faith defense. The Court agrees with every other district court to have decided this question and concludes that "[t]he good faith defense should apply here as a matter of law." Danielson, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 1086. Thus, the Babb, Wilford, and Martin Plaintiffs' § 1983 claims are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

C. Voluntariness of Membership Dues (Martin)

As noted above, the Martin Plaintiffs were dues-paying members of their respective unions prior to Janus. They seek recovery of an amount equal to the agency fees that non-members were required to pay based on the theory that they "chose to join the union and pay the difference between full [33] membership dues and [agency fees] that they would have otherwise paid." (Martin Union Opp. at 5.) Essentially, though the Martin Plaintiffs did not actually pay agency fees, they argue that such fees were subsumed within their membership dues. (Id.) Thus, "they had no choice in whether to pay the mandatory portion of the dues that was imposed on every member of their bargaining unit." (Id.)

First, because the Court concludes that the Union Defendants have a good-faith defense to retroactive monetary relief based on Janus, the Martin Plaintiffs' claim fails as a matter of law. Further, the Court agrees with Crockett, which held that an indistinguishable claim failed. See [*877] *2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at 7. In short, the Martin Plaintiffs voluntarily chose to pay membership dues in exchange for certain benefits, and "[t]he fact that plaintiffs would not have opted to pay union membership fees if Janus had been the law at the time of their decision does not mean their decision was therefore coerced." Id.

D. State Law Claims for Refund of Agency Fees (Wilford, Babb, Matthews, and Martin)

1. EERA Preemption

First, the Union Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' state law claims for relief are preempted by the Educational Employment Relations Act ("EERA"), [34] which "completely displaced any common law claims related to the collection of [agency fees]." (Wilford Mem. at 11-13.)

HN14[] The EERA expressly authorizes the collection of agency fees. Cal. Gov. Code §§3543(a), 3546(a); see Cumero v. Public Employment Relations Bd., 49 Cal. 3d 575, 587, 262 Cal. Rptr. 46, 778 P.2d 174 (1989) ("EERA . . . contains provisions expressly. . . allowing . . . for compulsory nonmember service fees"). Challenges to agency fees, even on constitutional grounds, are subject to the Public Employment Relations Board's ("PERB") exclusive jurisdiction. See Link v. Antioch Unified School Dist., 142 Cal. App. 3d 765, 769, 191 Cal. Rptr. 264 (1983) ("Looking beyond the constitutional label given to plaintiffs' grievances herein, the substance of conduct complained of may also constitute unfair practices which arguably could be resolved by a PERB ruling." (internal citation omitted)). The California Supreme Court has held that EERA broadly preempts state tort claims that allege conduct that is even "arguably protected or prohibited under EERA." El Rancho Unified School Dist. v. Nat'l Educ. Ass'n, 33 Cal.3d 946, 960, 192 Cal. Rptr. 123, 663 P.2d 893 (1983). "[W]hat matters is whether the underlying conduct on which the suit is based — however described in the complaint — may fall within PERB's exclusive jurisdiction." Id. at 954 n.13.

In Crockett, the court found that the plaintiffs' state law claims (indistinguishable from those asserted here) failed as a matter of law "because there can be no common law liability for [35] conduct authorized by state statute." *2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at 7. Crockett involved Alaska's version of the EERA and PERB, but the Court finds Crockett's reasoning persuasive and applicable here. "Janus does not change the fact that [the EERA] displaced any state common law tort claims that could have been brought with regard to [agency fees] collected prior to Janus." *2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, [WL] at 7. Plaintiffs argue that "statutes authorizing the collection of agency fees are to be treated as though they never existed." (Babb Opp. at 24.) However, the Court "cannot ignore the fact that the Union Defendants' collection of [agency fees] prior to Janus was authorized by state statute that was constitutional under controlling precedent. The court cannot now go back and impose tort liability under common law for that conduct." *Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at 8.

Plaintiffs also argue unpersuasively that EERA does not encompass their state law claims. (See Wilford Opp. at 12.) Plaintiffs argue that their state law claims require the Court to determine "the proper ownership of the money the Unions received from the Plaintiffs," whereas "PERB would consider whether the collection of fees constituted an unfair practice, which is wholly unrelated to ownership." (Id. at 13.) However, Link rejected this [*878] precise argument and [36] concluded that the claims were preempted because "the substance of conduct complained of may also constitute unfair practices which arguably could be resolved by a PERB ruling." Link, 142 Cal. App. 3d at 769. Plaintiffs' citations to San Lorenzo Education Association v. Wilson, 32 Cal. 3d 841, 187 Cal. Rptr. 432, 654 P.2d 202 (1982) and California Association of Professional Scientists v. Schwarzenegger, 137 Cal. App. 4th 371, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354 (2006) ("CAPS") are inapposite and unavailing. In San Lorenzo, no preemption was found because PERB does not have jurisdiction over disputes arising from contracts between unions and public employers. See 32 Cal. 3d at 853 ("[A]t issue is whether the union, under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement, can file a civil suit against a noncomplying employee."). In CAPS, the plaintiffs' claim was that a state law "impermissibly conflicts with the terms of the [collective bargaining agreement] and therefore violates the state and federal constitutional prohibitions against impairing the obligations of contracts." 137 Cal. App. 4th at 381. HN15[] As the Union Defendants note, the California courts have concurrent jurisdiction with PERB over breach of collective bargaining agreement claims pursuant to California Labor Code § 1126. See Fresno Unified Sch. Dist. v. Nat'l Educ. Assn., 125 Cal. App. 3d 259, 274, 177 Cal. Rptr. 888 (1981) ("[A]s to the contract cause of action the trial court had concurrent jurisdiction pursuant to Labor Code section 1126.").

Accordingly, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' common law tort claims are preempted by the EERA.

2. Government [37] Code *§ 1159

Furthermore, even assuming that Plaintiffs' claims are not preempted by the EERA, the Court concludes that Government Code § 1159 is an independent and adequate grounds upon which to dismiss Plaintiffs' state law claims.

Enacted on September 14, 2018, and effective immediately, California Government Code § 1159 provides:

> (a) The Controller, a public employer, an employee organization, or any of their employees or agents, shall not be liable for, and shall have a complete defense to, any claims or actions under the law of this state for requiring, deducting, receiving, or retaining agency or fair share fees from public employees, and current or former public employees shall not have standing to pursue these claims or actions, if the fees were permitted at the time under the laws of this state then in force and paid, through payroll deduction or otherwise, prior to June 27, 2018.
> (b) This section shall apply to claims and actions pending on its effective date, as well as to claims and actions filed on or after that date.
> (c) The enactment of this section shall not be interpreted to create the inference that any relief made unavailable by this section would otherwise be available.

Cal. Gov. Code § 1159(a)-(c).

HN16[] The purpose of § 1159 is explicit: "to provide [38] certainty to public employers and employee organizations that relied on state law, and to avoid disruption of public employee labor relations, after the Supreme Court's decision in [Janus]." Id. §1159(e)(2). Further, § 1159 declares that "[a]pplication of this section to pending claims and actions clarifies existing state law rather than changes it." Id. § 1159(e)(1). "Public employees who paid agency or fair share fees as a condition of [*879] public employment in accordance with state law and Supreme Court precedent prior to June 27, 2018, had no legitimate expectation of receiving that money under any available cause of action." Id. Thus, "[a]pplication of this section to pending claims will preserve, rather than interfere with, important reliance interests." Id.

Because § 1159 clearly precludes their state law claims for relief, Plaintiffs argue primarily that it is unconstitutional in that its retroactive application violates their due process rights. (See Wilford Opp. at 18.) Plaintiffs also briefly argue that § 1159 effectuates an unlawful taking; violates the California Constitution's single-subject rule; and violates the "separation of powers" doctrine. (See Plaintiffs' Opp. to AG at 14-17.) The Court addresses each issue below.

i. Due Process [39]

HN17[] In both federal and California due process analysis, the threshold question in determining retroactive application is whether the legislation changed or clarified the law. See McClung v. Emp't Dev. Dept., 34 Cal. 4th 467, 471, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428, 99 P.3d 1015 (2004); Beverly Community Hosp. Ass'n v. Belshe, 132 F.3d 1259, 1265 (9th Cir. 1997). "A statute that merely clarifies, rather than changes, existing law does not operate retrospectively even if applied to transactions predating its enactment because the true meaning of the statute remains the same." McClung, 34 Cal. 4th at 471 (internal alterations and quotations removed); see also Beverly, 132 F. 3d at 1265 (explaining that whether statute clarifies or changes the law is a "key threshold issue" and that there would be retroactive application issues only if the statute changed the law).

HN18[] Here, the California legislature was explicit that § 1159 "clarifies existing state law rather than changes it," because "[p]ublic employees who paid agency or fair share fees as a condition of public employment in accordance with state law and Supreme Court precedent prior to [Janus], had no legitimate expectation of receiving that money under any available cause of action." § 1159(e)(1). As the Union Defendants note, at the time agency fees were collected, the Unions could not be held liable under any state law theory for collection of such fees, and § 1159 merely reinforces this point. [40] (Wilford Reply at 12.) "A clarified law is simply a statement of what the law has always been." In re Marriage of Walker, 138 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1426, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 325 (2006). Further, although "a legislative declaration of an existing statute's meaning is neither binding nor conclusive on the courts in construing the statute," the Court may give "due consideration to the Legislature's views." Id.; see also Beverly, 132 F.3d 1265-66 (deferring to legislature's description of legislation as a "clarification"). In response, Plaintiffs argue that, if it were true that § 1159 merely clarified the law and they could not pursue their state law claims even in its absence, § 1159 is "superfluous." (See Wilford Opp. at 19.) HN19[] However, clarifying statutes can be "remedial in nature and intended by the Legislature to be applied at the earliest possible time, including application to all cases not then finally decided." City of Redlands v. Sorensen, 176 Cal. App. 3d 202, 212, 221 Cal. Rptr. 728 (1985).

Thus, the Court concludes that §1159 merely clarifies rather than changes the law. However, even assuming that § 1159 changes the law, Plaintiffs' procedural and substantive due process arguments fail under California and federal law, as discussed below.

a. State and Federal Procedural Due Process

HN20[] Under both the federal and state constitutions, when a law "creates a [*880] substantive rule of law granting immunity to certain parties [41] against certain types of claims . . . 'the legislative determination provides all the process that is due.'" Ileto v. Glock, Inc., 565 F.3d 1126, 1142 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. 422, 433, 102 S. Ct. 1148, 71 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1982)); see also Jenkins v. County of L.A., 74 Cal. App. 4th 524, 537, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 (1999) (rejecting federal and state due process challenges to retroactive application of a statute barring certain negligence claims and explaining that "the legislative determination provides all the process that is due" (quoting Logan, 455 U.S. at 433)). Plaintiffs argue against the application of Illeto to no avail. They rely on Logan and related California cases to argue that "a plaintiff must be given some opportunity to present her claim. Section 1159 violates this principle by purporting to cut off Plaintiffs' rights of action with no opportunity to present them." (Wilford Opp. at 23.)

However, Logan and the California cases upon which Plaintiffs rely involved changing the procedures through which a plaintiff could pursue his or her claims, not creating a substantive rule of law granting immunity to certain parties against certain types of claims, as is the case here. For example, Logan examined whether a change in a state administrative agency's procedures comported with due process. As Illeto noted, Logan "explicitly limited its holding to 'a procedural limitation on the claimant's ability to assert his [42] rights, not a substantive element of the [underlying] claim.'" Ileto, 565 F.3d at 1142 (quoting Logan, 455 U.S. at 433) (alteration in original). Indeed, Logan noted that "the State remains free to create substantive defenses or immunities for use in adjudication—or to eliminate its statutorily created causes of action altogether," and in such cases "the legislative determination provides all the process that is due." Logan, 455 U.S. at 432-33.[12] Here, if § 1159 changes the law, it grants the [12] Plaintiffs also argue, based on Callet v. Alioto, 210 Cal. 65, 290 P. 438 (1930), that Illeto does not apply because it involved statutory causes of action instead of common law causes of action, such as those asserted by Plaintiffs here. (See Wilford Opp.

Union Defendants immunity from all state law causes of action related to agency fee collection, and the California legislature's determination "provides all the process that is due." Illeto, 565 F.3d at 1142.

b. State Substantive Due Process

Plaintiffs' state substantive due process argument also fails. HN21[] Under the California constitution, the legislature "can provide for retroactive application of a statute if it has a reasonable basis for doing so." L.A. Cty. v. Superior Court, 62 Cal. 2d 839, 844, 44 Cal. Rptr. 796, 402 P.2d 868 (1965). "In determining whether a retroactive law contravenes the due process clause, we consider such factors as the significance of the state interest served by the law, the importance of the retroactive application of the law to the effectuation of that interest, the extent of reliance upon the former law, the legitimacy of that [43] reliance, the extent of actions taken on the basis of that reliance, and the extent to [*881] which the retroactive application of the new law would disrupt those actions." In re Marriage of Bouquet, 16 Cal. 3d 583, 592, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371 (1976). The Court concludes that the California legislature had a reasonable basis for retroactively applying § 1159 to bar Plaintiffs' claims. First, Plaintiffs' reliance interest is minimal in that Abood would have prevented them from any recovery of agency fees prior to Janus. HN22[] Further, § 1159 serves the significant state interests of providing "certainty to public employers and employee organizations that relied on state law, and [avoiding] disruption of public employee labor relations" after Janus. See Cal. Gov. Code §1159(e)(2). As noted throughout, the Court finds the Union Defendants' reliance on Abood reasonable and in good faith, and § 1159 seeks to protect these reliance interests. Further, the lawsuits that Section 1159 bars — including those currently before the Court—seek to impose massive retroactive liability on public employers and unions that relied on state law, which would certainly disrupt public employee labor relations.

c. Federal Substantive Due Process

Finally, Plaintiffs' federal substantive due process argument fails. HN23[] "Where, as here, Congress has expressed [44] its clear intent that the legislation be retroactive, 'the constitutional impediments to retroactive civil legislation are now modest.'" Ileto, 565 F.3d at 1138 (quoting Landgraf v. USI Film Prods., 511 U.S. 244, 272, 114 S. Ct. 1483, 128 L. Ed. 2d 229 (1994)). "[T]he potential unfairness of retroactive civil legislation is not a sufficient reason for a court to fail to give a statute its intended scope." Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 267. "We have squarely held that although a cause of action is a species of property, a party's property right in any cause of action does not vest until a final unreviewable judgment is obtained." Ileto, 565 F.3d at 1141. Here, Plaintiffs' claims have not vested because they have not obtained final judgments. Thus, § 1159 is subject to rational basis review and its retroactive application must be upheld so long as the California legislature's decision was not "irrational or arbitrary." See id. at 1140. For the reasons discussed in relation to the California substantive due process argument, the Court concludes that retroactively applying § 1159 is neither arbitrary nor irrational.

ii. Other Constitutional Challenges

Plaintiffs' Fifth Amendment Takings Clause argument is foreclosed by Illeto. As noted above, because Plaintiffs have not obtained a final unreviewable judgment, their rights in their causes of action have not vested and "[t]he Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause prevents the Legislature (and [45] other government actors) from depriving private persons of vested property rights." See Ileto, 565 F.3d at 1141 (quoting Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 266) (emphasis in original)).

at 20.) First, while Callet did distinguish between statutory and common law causes of action, the California Supreme Court has since rejected this proposition, concluding that there is "no constitutional basis for distinguishing statutory from common-law rights merely because of their origin." See L.A. Cty. v. Superior Court, 62 Cal.2d 839, 844, 44 Cal. Rptr. 796, 402 P.2d 868 (1965). Further, Plaintiffs are simply wrong about Illeto, as it upheld a law "intended to preempt common-law claims, such as general tort theories of liability." 565 F.3d at 1135.

HN24[] Plaintiffs also argue that Senate Bill 846, which added § 1159 to the Government Code, violates the single subject rule of the California Constitution, which provides that "[a] statute shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title." Cal. Const., art. IV, § 9. "'[A]n initiative measure does not violate the single-subject requirement if, despite its varied collateral effects, all of its parts are 'reasonably germane' to each other,' and to the general purpose or object of the initiative." Brosnahan v. Brown, 32 Cal. 3d 236, 245, 186 Cal. Rptr. 30, 651 P.2d 274 (1982) (quoting [*882] Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. v. State Bd. Of Equalization, 22 Cal. 3d 208, 230, 149 Cal. Rptr. 239, 583 P.2d 1281 (1978)). "[T]he single subject rule is to be 'construed liberally,'" and "[n]umerous provisions, having one general object, if fairly indicated in the title, may be united in one act." Id. Here, the title of Senate Bill 846 is "Employment." Section 1159 and the rest of the sections identified by Plaintiffs (Plaintiffs Opp. to AG at 16) are "reasonably germane" to employment. Accordingly, the Court concludes that Senate Bill 846 does not violate the single-subject rule.

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that § 1159 "violates the separation-of-powers doctrine." (Plaintiffs' Opp. to AG at 17.) Plaintiffs argue that [46] § 1159 "effectively denies Plaintiffs a judicial forum to assert their state-law claims," and "[f]or the reasons stated in In re National Sec. Agency Telecomm. Records Litig., 671 F.3d 881, 899 (9th Cir. 2011), this violates the separation-of-powers doctrine." (Id.) In re Nat'l Sec. Agency, however, states that separation of powers concerns would be raised if "faced with a situation in which Congress has enacted legislation and simultaneously declared that legislation to be immune from any constitutional challenge by the plaintiff." In re Nat'l Sec. Agency, 671 F.3d at 889 (quoting Bartlett v. Bowen, 816 F.2d 695, 703, 259 U.S. App. D.C. 391 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). Section 1159 does no such thing, and thus In re Nat'l Sec. Agency is irrelevant to Plaintiffs' claims. HN25[] Thus, the Court concludes that § 1159 does not violate the separation-of-powers doctrine.

Accordingly, the Court concludes that § 1159 is constitutional and bars all of Plaintiffs' state law causes of action. Thus, the Court GRANTS the Motions to Dismiss and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE Plaintiffs' state law causes of action.[13]

E. Constitutionality of California Government Code § 3558 (Martin)

HN26[] The Martin Plaintiffs argue that California Government Code § 3558 violates the First Amendment or alternatively that it violates state tort law and their state and federal constitutional rights to privacy. Section 3558 provides that public school districts must provide unions that serve as exclusive representatives of bargaining units with:

> the name, [47] job title, department, work location, work, home, and personal cellular telephone numbers, personal email addresses on file with the employer, and home address of any newly hired employee within 30 days of the date of hire or by the first pay period of the month following hire, and . . . with a list of that information for all employees in the bargaining unit at least every 120 days unless more frequent or more detailed lists are required by an agreement with [the union].

Cal. Gov. Code § 3558. An employee may opt out of having such information shared with the union. See id.; see also § 6254.3.

HN27[] As the Union Defendants explain, § 3558 codifies the California Supreme Court's decision in County of Los Angeles v. L.A. County Employee Relations Committee, 56 Cal. 4th 905, 157 Cal. Rptr. 3d 481, 301 P.3d 1102 (2013), which held that [*883] disclosure of public employees' contact information to a union does not violate their privacy rights under California's constitution. Id. at 931-32; see also § 3558 ("The provision of information under this section shall be consistent with the employee privacy requirements described in County of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles County Employee Relations Com. (2013) 56 Cal.4th 905, 157 Cal. Rptr. 3d 481, 301 P.3d 1102.") There, the Court explained that "[b]ecause the union's duty [of fair representation] extends to all employees in the bargaining unit, regardless of union membership, the union must have the means of communicating with all employees." County of L.A., 56 Cal. 4th at 931. Thus, "[d]irect communication [48] between unions and all bargaining unit employees is essential to ensure that nonmembers' opinions are heard." Id. Further, the court found that giving the unions "this contact information will not coerce employees into joining the union. An employee who chooses not to join a union still enjoys the benefits of union representation." Id.

[13] The Matthews Plaintiffs' UCL claim is also barred by § 1159's broad language. See § 1159 (applying to "any claims or actions under the law of this state"). Furthermore, even if it were not barred by § 1159, the UCL claim fails because the Union Defendants are not a "business" and collecting agency fees in compliance with state law is not a "business act or practice." See That v. Alders Maintenance Ass'n, 206 Cal. App. 4th 1419, 1427, 142 Cal. Rptr. 3d 458 (2012) (holding that homeowners' association was not subject to a UCL claim because it "does not participate as a business in the commercial market, much less compete in it").

The Union Defendants argue that § 3558 does not violate the First Amendment. (Id. at 25.)[14] Plaintiffs allege that §3558 amounts to a "compelled disclosure," to which the Supreme Court applies "exacting scrutiny." (See Babb First Amended Complaint ¶ 51.) HN28[] "At least in the context of organized labor, the impingement of First Amendment rights must, at a minimum, satisfy 'exacting scrutiny'; i.e., it must 'serve a compelling state interest that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms.'"[15] Mentele v. Inslee, 916 F.3d 783, 790 (9th Cir. 2019) (quoting Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2465.)

The Union Defendants argue that § 3558 "does not infringe on Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights—and is not subject to exacting scrutiny—because the content-neutral contact information that is disclosed under the statute (unless Plaintiffs opt out) reveals nothing about their associations and beliefs." (Martin Union Mem. at 25.) Indeed, as the Union Defendants [49] note and Plaintiffs impliedly concede (see Martin Union Opp. at 26-27), every compelled-disclosure case in which the Supreme Court applied exacting scrutiny involved disclosure of information that linked individuals to a cause, an association, or political activity, or identified the individuals' political beliefs. For example, in NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 462-63, 78 S. Ct. 1163, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1488 (1958), the Court held that compelled disclosure of NAACP membership was subject to exacting [*884] scrutiny.[16] The Court focused on the harm stemming from "compelled disclosure of affiliation with groups engaged in advocacy." Id. at 462 (emphasis added). "Inviolability of privacy in group association may in many circumstances be indispensable to preservation of freedom of association, particularly where a group espouses dissident beliefs." Id. (emphasis added). The disclosures here are not disclosures of membership or affiliation, but rather of employees' contact information, which reveals nothing about the employees' beliefs or political views. Plaintiffs cite to no authority providing that content-neutral disclosures such as those required by § 3558 are subject to exacting scrutiny. Plaintiffs argue that § 3558 "will have the undeniable effect of deterring those employees from engaging in anti-union speech." (See [50] Martin Union Opp. at 27.) Plaintiffs allege no facts to support this claim, and further, it is illegal for the Union Defendants to discriminate against employees for not joining their respective unions. See Cal. Gov. Code §3543.6(b).

[14] The Union Defendants also argue that the Martin Plaintiffs lack standing to challenge § 3558 because their respective unions already have their contact information pursuant to § 3558. (Martin Union Mem. at 23.) However, the harm that Plaintiffs identify is the fact that they were allegedly compelled to share the information, and thus the fact that the unions already have such information does not deprive Plaintiffs of standing.

[16] See also Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 66, 96 S. Ct. 612, 46 L. Ed. 2d 659 (1976) (disclosed financial transactions with political candidate or party would "reveal much about a person's activities, associations, and beliefs") (internal quotation marks omitted); John Doe No. 1, 561 U.S.at 194-96 (individual's signature on petition would disclose his views on statute concerning gay rights).

HN29[] However, even assuming that exacting scrutiny applies, the Court concludes that § 3558 survives such scrutiny. Section 3558 serves a compelling government interest. As the California Supreme Court noted in County of L.A., the Union Defendants have an obligation to communicate with members and non-members pursuant to their duty of representation, so the Union Defendants "must have the means of communicating with all employees." County of L.A., 56 Cal. 4th at 931. This "[d]irect communication between unions and all bargaining unit employees is essential to ensure that nonmembers' opinions are heard." Id. (emphasis added). Thus, California has a compelling interest in ensuring that unions can communicate directly with employees.

Further, the Court concludes that this interest cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms. HN30[] The Union Defendants must be able to communicate directly with all employees, and access to employee contact information is "fundamental to the entire expanse of a union's [51] relationship with the employees," permitting the union to "perform its broad range of statutory duties in a truly representative fashion and in harmony with the employees' desires and interests." NLRB v. CJC Holdings, Inc., 97 F.3d 114, 117 (5th Cir. 1996). Plaintiffs quibble that the disclosures are too broad because they include employees' personal addresses and phone numbers. (Martin Union Opp. at 25-26.) However, the Union Defendants must be able to communicate directly with all employees and having employees' personal information furthers this interest. Further, in the context of heated negotiations with school districts, the Union Defendants need a method to communicate with employees outside of work. HN31[] Moreover, any associational freedom restriction presented by § 3558 is significantly minimized by the fact that employees can opt out of the disclosures.

Accordingly, the Court concludes that § 3558 does not violate the Martin Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights. The Martin Plaintiffs admit that their "privacy-tort claims cannot survive unless this Court concludes that section 3558 violates the federal Constitution." (Martin Union [*885] Opp. at 30.) Furthermore, Plaintiffs' claim for violation of California's right to privacy also fails because § 3558 merely codifies the California Supreme Court's ruling in County of L.A. Finally, Plaintiffs' [52] claim for violation of federal privacy rights fails because "the scope and application of the [California] state constitutional right of privacy is broader and more protective of privacy than the federal constitutional right of privacy as interpreted by the federal courts." Am. Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren, 16 Cal. 4th 307, 326, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 (1997). Thus, the Court GRANTS the Union Defendants' Motion and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE Plaintiffs' claim challenging the constitutionality of § 3558.

F. Constitutionality of California Education Code § 45060 (Martin)

The Union Defendants argue that Plaintiff Martin lacks standing to challenge California Education Code § 45060 and, even if he did not, § 45060 does not violate his First Amendment rights. (Martin Union Mem. at 30-31.)

HN32[] Education Code § 45060 provides, in relevant part:

> Employee requests to cancel or change authorizations for payroll deductions for employee organizations shall be directed to the employee organization rather than to the governing board. The employee organization shall be responsible for processing these requests.

Cal. Educ. Code § 45060(e). Further, § 45060 requires school employees to revoke their consent to payroll deductions "in writing." Id. §§ 45060(a),(c).

Martin alleges that §45060 violates his First Amendment rights for two reasons: (1) it requires him to direct his request to cancel membership dues deductions to the union, rather than to his employer; [53] and (2) it requires such requests to be in writing. (Martin First Amendment Complaint ¶¶ 58, 60-62.) Citing to Janus, Martin alleges that "[e]very public employer and every public-employee union must honor and implement the wishes of an employee who has withdrawn his 'affirmative consent' to union fees or assessments—regardless of how a public employee chooses to communicate his instructions." (Id. ¶ 57.) On July 6, 2018, Martin sent an email to his employer, Riverside Unified School district, asking that all union-related payroll deductions cease. (Id. ¶ 60.) However, Martin claims that § 45060(e) "instructs the school district to continue diverting [his] paycheck toward the union—in violation of Janus and in violation of [his] First Amendment rights—because [he] chose to submit his e-mail directly to school officials rather than asking the union to take care of matters." (Id. ¶ 61.)

The Union Defendants argue that Martin does not have standing to challenge § 45060 because his request to cancel membership dues deductions has been processed. (See Martin Union Mem. at 31; Scott Decl. ¶¶ 3-8, Doc. 61-10.) Indeed, while the Union Defendants did not receive Martin's email, upon receipt of the Complaint on July 23, 2018, [54] the Union Defendants wrote Martin a letter explaining that Riverside Unified did not have the authority to terminate the union membership of its employees. (See Scott Decl. ¶ 4.) On August 3, 2018, the Union Defendants informed Martin that they would consider this lawsuit a request to resign his membership and that he would be considered terminated as of July 23, 2018. (Id. ¶ 5.) Though this was fifteen days after Martin sent the email to Riverside Unified, the lapse is irrelevant because "dues deductions would have already ceased for the year as of June 30, and no further deductions were scheduled to be made in July." (Id. ¶ 7.)

[*886] In response, Martin argues that the Union Defendants are attempting to moot his claims by voluntarily deciding to halt payroll deductions after he sued. (Martin Union Opp. at 32.) Further, Martin argues that his claim is not moot "because California law requires the school district and the union to continue taking membership dues from Mr. Martin's paycheck—notwithstanding his resignation from membership—until Mr. Martin submits a request to the union 'in writing' that revokes his previous authorization for payroll deductions." (Id.)

Here, it appears that Martin's claim is moot. HN33[] "A [55] case becomes moot—and therefore no longer a 'Case' or 'Controversy' for purposes of Article III—when the issues presented are no longer live or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome." *Yohn, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 209944, 2018 WL 5264076, at 2 (quoting Rosebrock v. Mathis, 745 F.3d 963, 971 (9th Cir. 2014)). Martin has resigned from his union and it is "absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." Id. Indeed, Martin would have to rejoin his union for his claim to be live, which, given his representations in this lawsuit, seems a remote possibility. Further, as the Union Defendants note, Martin has suffered no damages because of the fifteen-day delay in the processing of his resignation, and Martin does not allege otherwise. Moreover, there is no basis for Martin's contention that the Union Defendants are "required" to continue to deduct dues from his paycheck, nor does he allege that they are doing so.

However, even assuming that Martin's claim is not moot, the Court concludes that his claim fails as a matter of law. Section 45060, on its face, does not violate the First Amendment. Contrary to Martin's contention, Janus does not hold that employees have the right to resign from a union however they want, regardless of state laws that prescribe clear, [56] common-sense procedures for doing so. Submitting a writing to the Union Defendants to halt payroll deductions is not a burdensome requirement. Because the deductions go to the Union Defendants, it makes sense that the halting of such deductions must be communicated to the Union Defendants rather than the school districts. Moreover, as the Union Defendants note, "[m]ost actions of legal significance, including registering to vote, voting itself, filing court papers, and the like, must be done in writing." (Martin Union Reply at 13.)

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the Union Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and DISMISSES Martin's claim WITH PREJUDICE.

G. Antitrust Claim (Martin)

The Union Defendants next argue that Martin's antitrust claim fails. The Crockett court dismissed an indistinguishable claim with prejudice and the Court finds Crockett's reasoning persuasive and applicable here. *See Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at 8-9.

As in Crockett, Martin's antitrust theory is that collective bargaining agreements stemming from California's exclusive representation system are anti-competitive because they "require compensation based on union-imposed pay scales and prevent individual employees from negotiating compensation based on [57] individual performance and merits." *2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, [WL] at 8; see Martin First Amended Complaint ¶¶ 75-76.) HN34[] The Court agrees with Crockett that "[f]ederal antitrust law, which seeks to preserve competition in the private sector, simply does not encompass the way in which a state chooses to set employment [*887] terms for its public employees." 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *8.

HN35[] More specifically, the state-action doctrine immunizes the Union Defendants from antitrust liability because federal antitrust laws do not "restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). To establish state-action immunity, "the challenged restraint . . . [must] be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy. . . [and] be actively supervised by the State." N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs v. FTC, 574 U.S. 494, 135 S. Ct. 1101, 1110, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015). Martin argues that the Union Defendants cannot avail themselves of state-action immunity because he is challenging the actual terms of the collective bargaining agreements, not "the overall enterprise of collective bargaining." (Martin Union Opp. at 38.) Thus, Martin claims that the Union Defendants must show that the specific provisions he challenges have been "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy." (Id.) HN36[] However, "it is indisputable that the challenged [58] restraint—a collective bargaining agreement negotiated by a representative union—is 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy.'" Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *9. Martin further argues that nothing in his First Amended Complaint acknowledges "active supervision" by the state, so this issue cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss. (Martin Union Opp. at 38.) HN37[] "The active supervision requirement, however, is inapplicable here because the other party to the challenged collective bargaining agreement is [a public-school district]." Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *9. "Unlike private parties, local government entities are not subject to the 'active state supervision requirement' because they have less of an incentive to pursue their own self-interest under the guise of implementing state policies." Id. (quoting FTC v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys. Inc., 568 U.S. 216, 226, 133 S. Ct. 1003, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013) (alterations omitted)).

HN38[] Further, "[t]he labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce." 15 U.S.C. §17. "Therefore, 'restraints on the sale of the employee's services to the employer'—those employment terms set forth in a collective bargaining agreement—'are not themselves combinations or conspiracies in the restraint of trade or commerce under the Sherman Act' even if they 'curtail the competition among employees.'" Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *9 (quoting Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 503, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 (1940)); see also Bodine Produce, Inc. v. U.F.W. Organizing Comm., 494 F.2d 541, 558 (9th Cir. 1974) [59] (rejecting interpretation of labor exemption that "would invalidate collective bargaining").

HN39[] Finally, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine — by which efforts to convince the government to act in an anticompetitive manner are protected by the First Amendment — also bars Martin's antitrust claim. "Federal antitrust law . . . does not 'regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government.'" Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at *10 (quoting City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 379-80, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991)).

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the Union Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE Martin's antitrust claim.

[*888] H. Constitutionality of Exclusive Representation (Few)

Finally, United Teachers Los Angeles argues that Plaintiff Few's claim that California's exclusive representation system violates the First Amendment is foreclosed by the Supreme Court's decision in Minnesota State Board for Community Colleges v. Knight, 465 U.S. 271, 104 S. Ct. 1058, 79 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984). Indeed, the Martin Plaintiffs concede that their identical claim is barred by Knight. (See Martin Union Opp. at 35.)

HN40[] In Knight, the Supreme Court held that a system of exclusive union representation does not violate the speech or associational rights of individuals who are not members of the union. Knight, 465 U.S. at 271. As Crockett noted in relation to a claim identical to Few's,[17] Janus essentially reaffirmed Knight because it distinguished between financial [60] support for a union and the "underlying system of exclusive representation." *Crockett, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42923, 2019 WL 1212082, at 8 (citing Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2465-67.) Indeed, Janus explicitly noted that "[s]tates can keep their labor-relations systems exactly as they are—only they cannot force nonmembers to subsidize public-sector unions." Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2485 n.27. Moreover, the Ninth Circuit recently reaffirmed Knight's validity in the wake of Janus. See Mentele, 916 F.3d at 788. Few attempts to distinguish Mentele on the basis that it holds that Knight "continues to apply" only to "partial" state employees, rather than full-fledged public employees such as himself. (Few Opp. at 12.) Mentele's analysis of the impact of exclusive representation on non-member's associational rights contains no such limitation, however, and was based entirely on Knight's analysis, which involved full-fledged public employees. See Mentele, 916 F.3d at 788-90.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS United Teachers Los Angeles' Motion to Dismiss and DISMISSES Few's exclusive representation claim WITH PREJUDICE.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS all of the Motions to dismiss currently before it. As a result, this Order completely disposes of Babb, Wilford, and Matthews, and the Defendants in each case must submit a judgment to the [61] Court no later than five (5) days from the date of this Order. In Few, Few's first claim for relief remains, and in Martin, Plaintiffs' second claim for relief remains.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

MATTHEW F. KENNELLY, District Judge:

Black Bear Sports Group, Inc. and its subsidiary Center Ice Arena, LLC sued the Amateur Hockey Association of Illinois alleging violations of federal and state antitrust law as well as a state-law claim for tortious interference with prospective business relations. The Association has moved to dismiss for lack of standing and for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons described below, the Court grants the motion to dismiss.

Background

For the purposes of this motion, the Court presumes the truth of the facts alleged in the plaintiffs' complaint. Black Bear and Center Ice, to which the Court will generally [*2] refer collectively as Black Bear unless the distinction is relevant, operate ice rinks. Black Bear operates ten rinks across the United States. Four of those rinks are in the Chicago suburbs of Glen Ellyn, Woodridge, Lincolnwood, and Crestwood. Black Bear purchased these four rinks between 2016 and 2018 as part of its strategy of acquiring "undermanaged and underperforming" facilities and investing in capital improvements and professional management in order to create successful businesses. Compl., dkt. no. 1, ¶ 37. Black Bear also manages youth and junior hockey teams. Specifically, it manages teams affiliated with facilities it operates in New Jersey, Ohio, and Maryland. Black Bear's profit model relies on ice rental income from amateur hockey and figure skating, admission fees for public skating at its facilities, and amateur hockey club participation fees.

A brief primer on the structure of youth hockey is necessary. As a matter of federal statute, amateur sports in which the United States competes internationally are subject to a hierarchical regulatory scheme. See Amateur Sports Act, 36 U.S.C. §§ 220501, 220503. Amateur hockey is regulated by USA Hockey, Inc., which in turn sanctions state and regional [*3] affiliates. Since 1975 the Amateur Hockey Association of Illinois has been the affiliate regulator of amateur hockey in the state of Illinois.

The Association organizes amateur hockey by age and skill level. "Youth hockey" includes individuals under the age of 18. Youth players and teams are categorized on three tiers: Tier I teams are made up of the highest-skilled players and travel throughout the United States and Canada to compete with other elite teams; Tier II is intended for competitive but somewhat less skilled players who want to engage in regional competition; and Tier III is made up of beginners and recreational teams. According to the complaint, Tier II teams affiliated with the Association compete in either the Northern Illinois Hockey League or the Central States Developmental Hockey League, with the latter reserved for the most skilled Tier II players.

All youth hockey teams in Illinois are required to affiliate with the Association. Likewise, all participating teams are required to follow the Association's by-laws and rules and regulations. Those teams or players who do not comply with the Association's regulations or who participate in games with teams that are not registered [*4] with the Association or another USA Hockey-sanctioned governing body may face discipline, including loss of eligibility to participate in Association-sponsored tournaments, loss of insurance coverage, and revocation of membership.

Youth hockey is booming in Illinois. Nationally, participation has increased by nearly nine percent since 2013. The growth rate in Illinois has more than doubled that number, with a more than eighteen percent surge in participation during the same period. There are nearly fifty Tier II hockey clubs in what the plaintiffs describe as the "Northern Illinois region," each of which has between ten and thirty teams.[1] Each of these youth hockey clubs has a facility designated as its "home ice."

Black Bear wants the Association to grant it a charter to sponsor a Tier II club that would have its home ice at its Center Ice facility in Glen Ellyn, Illinois. Black Bear's rinks in Woodridge, Lincolnwood, and Crestwood already host Association-affiliated clubs.[2] But its Center Ice facility is underused. The facility has robust learn-to-skate and learn-to-play hockey programs. It does not, however, have a youth hockey club that calls the facility home. Black Bear says that [*5] it has "approached [the Association] about obtaining approval for a new Tier II club." Compl., dkt. no. 1, ¶ 53. But, according to Black Bear, the Association has moved to dash its hopes by "enact[ing] rules and . . . taking other actions to prevent [it] from entry into the relevant market." Id. ¶ 58. Specifically, it says that the Association "has told Black Bear that a Tier II club at Center Ice of DuPage is unnecessary and that there are already enough teams in the relevant market." Id. ¶ 59. Black Bear also alleges that someone—it does not say who—"told [Black Bear] that it cannot start a new Tier II club because it is a for-profit enterprise and [Association] rules require sponsors to be charitable organizations." Id. ¶ 61. According to Black Bear, these allegations, combined with the Association's reluctance to provide Black Bear with a copy of the application for a Tier II club charter, id. ¶ 65, amount to a predetermination by the Association that it will not grant a charter to Black Bear.

[1] The plaintiffs also allege certain facts regarding participation levels in Tier I teams. Those allegations are not directly relevant to this motion because, as discussed below, Black Bear hopes to get a charter to organize a Tier II club.

[2] Importantly, Black Bear does not sponsor these three teams but rather simply provides them its ice rink facilities.

But Black Bear does not allege that its application has been rejected or even that it has actually applied for a Tier II club charter. Nor does Black Bear allege that the Association or relevant [*6] decisionmakers have told it, in so many words, that such an application would be rejected. Rather, Black Bear points to three "requirements" outlined in a publicly available Association document that it says preclude it from getting a charter. First, it points to the Association's requirement that member "club[s] must not be associated with a 'for-profit' organization . . . in accordance with [Association] Rules and Regulations Article 19[] and [the] USA Hockey Affiliate Agreement." Tier 2 Application Requirements, Ex. 2 to Compl., dkt. no. 1-2, ¶ 7. Black Bear also alleges that the Association's requirements that applicants identify any other youth hockey programs that granting a new charter application would affect, id. ¶ 13, and list any players and programs with which they were affiliated in the five years preceding their application, id. ¶¶ 5-6, "demonstrate" that that any attempt by Black Bear to get a Tier II club charter is hopeless, Compl. ¶¶ 67, 68. In Black Bear's view, these regulations preclude any application it might submit from succeeding, harm competition in the relevant market, and cause it injury.

Black Bear also alleges it has been injured by another rule recently adopted by the Association. [*7] Specifically, Black Bear says that it arranged for the Association-affiliated Tier II club that uses its Lincolnwood rink as its home ice to retain the Center Ice facility in Glen Ellyn as "additional ice," for which the team would have paid Black Bear rental fees. But, Black Bear alleges, "upon learning that the [team] intended to use the Center Ice Facility, [the Association] promulgated a new by-law (1.2.5) that prevents a Tier II team from using ice facilities more than fifteen miles from its home rink."[3] Id. ¶ 72. In Black Bear's view, this rule further demonstrates the Association's intent to maintain its monopoly power and to injure Black Bear.

Black Bear filed a four-court complaint. Count 1 alleges monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; count 2 alleges a violation of the corresponding state law provision, 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/3(3); and count 3 alleges Illinois common-law tortious interference with prospective business relations. Count 4 purports to plead a separate request for injunctive relief based on the first two counts.

The Association has filed a motion to dismiss Black Bear's complaint.

Discussion

To survive a motion to dismiss under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6), a plaintiff's complaint "must contain sufficient [*8] factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). For a claim to be plausible on its face, the plaintiff must "plead[] factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. It must provide more than "labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action . . . ." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court is "not obliged to accept as true legal conclusions or unsupported conclusions of fact." St. John's United Church of Christ v. City of Chicago, 502 F.3d 616, 633 (7th Cir. 2007) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Typically, a court's assessment of a motion to dismiss must be made on the complaint alone. See Rosenblum v. Travelbyus.com Ltd., 299 F.3d 657, 661 (7th Cir. 2002). But where, as in this case, significant documents are referenced in the complaint and attached by the defendant to its motion to dismiss, those documents are considered to be incorporated into the pleadings and a court may consider them. See id.; see also Orgone Capital III, LLC v. Daubenspeck, 912 F.3d 1039, 1044 (7th Cir. 2019) ("We may also . . . consider documents incorporated by reference in the pleadings."); Reed v. Palmer, 906 F.3d 540, 548 (7th Cir. 2018) ("A motion under Rule 12(b)(6) can be based only on the complaint itself, documents attached to the complaint, documents that are critical to the complaint and referred [*9] to in it, and information that is subject to proper judicial notice."). And, indeed, "[t]he court is not bound to accept the pleader's allegations as to the effect of the [documents], but can independently examine [them] and form its own conclusions as to the proper construction and meaning to be given the material." Rosenblum, 299 F.3d at 661. In this case, the Association's by-laws, rules and regulations, and "Tier 2 Application Requirements" document—all of which were attached as exhibits to the complaint or the motion or both—are appropriately before the Court to the extent that they "are critical to the complaint and referred to in it." Reed, 905 F.3d at 548.

The Association's motion to dismiss rests principally on its contention that Article III standing is lacking. "The jurisdiction of federal courts is limited by Article III of the Constitution to 'Cases' and 'Controversies.'" Freedom from Religion Found., Inc. v. Lew, 773 F.3d 815, 819 (7th Cir. 2014) (quoting U.S. Const. art. III, § 2.). The Supreme Court has explained that "the irreducible constitutional minimum of standing consists of three elements." Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547, 194 L. Ed. 2d 635 (2016). "The plaintiff must have (1) suffered an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision." Id. At the pleading stage, the [*10] plaintiff "must clearly allege facts demonstrating" each element. Id. (internal quotation marks and alteration omitted).

The Association disputes whether Black Bear has suffered an injury in fact. "To establish injury in fact, a plaintiff must show that he or she suffered 'an invasion of a legally protected interest' that is 'concrete and particularized and 'actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.'" Id. at 1548 (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)). "When an injury is threatened in the future, the risk of harm must be substantial and more than speculative." Otrompke v. Hill, 592 F. App'x 495, 498 (7th Cir. 2014); see also Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 158, 134 S. Ct. 2334, 189 L. Ed. 2d 246 (2014); Freedom from Religion Found., 773 F.3d at 821-22, 824-25.

Black Bear alleges two types of injury. First, it alleges that it has effectively been denied a Tier II club charter by the Association due to the Association's purported requirement that clubs be non-profit organizations. The Court will refer to this as the alleged exclusion injury. Second, Black Bear alleges that it has been injured by the Association's adoption of the additional ice rule in early 2018. The Court addresses each in turn.

A. Exclusion injury

Black Bear's first and primary argument rests on its alleged exclusion by the Association from youth hockey. Specifically, it alleges that the Association has adopted policies [*11] that effectively shut the door to any application Black Bear might make for a youth hockey club charter. Black Bear dedicates most of its argument to the Association's purported requirement that youth hockey "club[s] must not be associated with a 'for-profit' organization." Tier 2 Application Requirements, Ex. 2 to Compl., dkt. no. 1-2, ¶ 7. Black Bear, as a for-profit company, says that this exclusion effectively bars it from receiving a charter—and, indeed, that it so clearly precludes it that any application would be futile and thus unnecessary to establish an injury that is sufficiently concrete and imminent to satisfy Article III's standing requirements.

Because this allegation rests on the interpretation of key documents, the Court undertakes an independent assessment of those documents. See Rosenblum, 299 F.3d at 661. The clearest flaw in the interpretation underlying Black Bear's argument is that it seeks to read the short informational sheet the Association provides prospective applicants in isolation. Critically, however, the document incorporates Association "Rules and Regulations Article 19[] and [the] USA Hockey Affiliate Agreement." Tier 2 Application Requirements, Ex. 2 to Compl., dkt. no. 1-2, ¶ 7. One relevant portion of [*12] Article 19 indeed states that "[e]xcept as set out in the [Association] By-Laws, Rules and Regulations, each Affiliate shall have a corporate structure and at all times maintain a tax exempt status under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code . . . ." Association Rules & Regs., Ex. 2 to Mot. to Dismiss, dkt. no. 20-3, § 19.7.2. But Article 19 then sets out exceptions to this general rule for (1) affiliates associated with for-profit learn-to-skate programs or "house league affiliates" and (2) affiliates that operate a for-profit rink owned by the affiliate. Id. § 19.7.3. Black Bear, as described above, operates multiple for-profit ice rinks and learn-to-skate programs, including at the Center Ice facility where it hopes to organize a new Tier II youth club. Without determining whether these exceptions are necessarily applicable in this situation, the Court observes that they create significant uncertainty about whether the non-profit rule actually would bar Black Bear's application for a club charter.

In addition to Article 19's exceptions, the defendant also points out that the relevant by-law governing applications for Tier II club charters gives the reviewing Association committee nearly boundless discretion. Specifically, by-law 8.3.4 sets out [*13] that, when faced with a request for Tier II membership, "[t]he Tier II Committee may deny the request, postpone consideration of the request, grant probationary status as a Tier II Member Association, grant full status as a Tier II Member Association, or take any other action that it determines to be in the best interest of hockey in Illinois." Association By-Laws, Ex. 1 to Mot. to Dismiss, dkt. no. 20-2, § 8.3.4. This broad discretion suggests that neither the non-profit rule nor the other application "requirements" alleged by Black Bear—that the applicant must identify clubs that would be affected by the grant of a new club charter and list any athletes and programs with which it has previously affiliated—might not doom its application.

Taken together, these provisions of the governing documents render Black Bear's allegations of injury too speculative to confer Article III standing. Cf. Otrompke, 592 F. App'x at 498 (concluding standing was lacking where a plaintiff sought to challenge bar admission criteria but failed to apply for membership). As noted previously, Black Bear has not alleged that the Association or relevant decisionmakers have unequivocally stated that the Association would reject an application by [*14] Black Bear for a Tier II club charter. It has alleged, in relevant part, only that the "Association has told Black Bear that a Tier II club at Center Ice of DuPage is unnecessary," Compl., dkt. no. 1, ¶ 59, and that someone "told [Black Bear] that it cannot start a new Tier II club because it is a for-profit enterprise," id. ¶ 61. Even taking these allegations as true, it is not reasonable to infer—particularly in light of the questions raised by the controlling rules and by-laws—that it is a foregone conclusion that an application would be denied. Black Bear's alleged injury is thus too conjectural to support the injury-in-fact requirement for constitutional standing.

The bottom line is that, on the present allegations, Black Bear cannot proceed with this lawsuit without having actually applied for a Tier II club charter. But, contrary to the Association's contention, Black Bear likely would not need to exhaust the appeals provided for in the Association's rules if it did apply and was rejected. See generally Association Rules & Regs., Ex. 2 to Mot. to Dismiss, dkt. no. 20-3, art. 10. (describing appeals procedures). The language of the rule that sets out the appeals process is precatory; [*15] it states that "[a]ppeals of any [Association] Committee decision . . . may be made" to the Association board of directors. Id. (emphasis added). Nor does it appear that Black Bear would have to pursue the arbitration process outlined in the Association's by-laws. The by-law on dispute resolution applies only to "person[s] and entit[ies] within the jurisdiction of [the Association] . . . by virtue of their membership, affiliation or participation, at any time, in an [Association] program or sponsored event." Association By-Laws, Ex. 2 to Mot. to Dismiss, dkt. no. 20-2, § 14.0.2. If the Association were to deny Black Bear's application for a Tier II club charter—as Black Bear contends is inevitable—then Black Bear likely would not be within the Association's jurisdiction as defined by its own arbitration by-law. The defendant's arguments about mandatory appeals and arbitration therefore appear, at least at this stage, to lack merit.

B. Additional ice injury

Black Bear's other alleged injury arises from the additional ice rule. Specifically, Black Bear alleges that it has lost rental fees it otherwise would have garnered from renting its Center Ice facility in Glen Ellyn as additional ice for [*16] a team that has its home ice at Black Bear's Lincolnwood facility. It alleges that this loss was caused by the Association's adoption in early 2018 of a rule that, in Black Bear's characterization, "prevents a Tier II team from using ice facilities more than fifteen miles from its home rink." Compl., dkt. no. 1, ¶ 72. Black Bear alleges that the adoption of this rule "demonstrates [the Association]'s intent to main its monopoly power and to injure Black Bear." Id. ¶ 73.

Again, however, the Court is not obliged to take Black Bear's interpretation of the Association by-law at face value. See Rosenblum, 299 F.3d at 661. And in fact Black Bear's characterization of the additional ice rule is significantly incomplete. Contrary to Black Bear's allegation, the rule does not categorically "prevent" Tier II teams from using additional ice at facilities more than fifteen miles from their home rink. Rather, it states that rinks within fifteen miles may be used without any prior approval but "[r]inks outside the designated area must be approved by the" relevant Association committee. Association Rules & Regs., Ex. 2 to Mot. to Dismiss, dkt. no. 20-3, § 1.2.5.

As with the exclusion injury discussed above, Black Bear has alleged [*17] neither that it applied for approval of its additional ice arrangement nor that such an application was rejected. Nor does it allege that the Association or any relevant decisionmaker has even so much as suggested that such an application would be rejected or would be a waste of time.[4] Even assuming that Black Bear's allegations regarding this injury provide more than the sort of "labels and conclusions" regularly deemed insufficient to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, see Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570, the additional ice allegation runs afoul of the injury-in-fact requirement for many of same reasons as the exclusion injury, see Otrompke, 592 F. App'x at 498. That is, taking Black Bear's allegations as true, it has not "clearly allege[d] facts demonstrating" that it suffered an injury in fact from the Association's adoption of the additional ice rule. Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1547.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court grants the defendant's motion to dismiss [dkt. no. 18] and directs the Clerk to enter judgment dismissing the case for lack of standing. The status hearing and ruling set for May 14, 2019 is vacated.

[4] The Court also notes that Black Bear has apparently not attempted to allege, as the Seventh Circuit has suggested may be sufficient, that the additional ice rule imposes an "additional burden" unique to particular group of plaintiffs sufficient to satisfy the injury-in-fact requirement. See Freedom from Religion Found., 773 F.3d at 825. That said, it is not clear to the Court that such an allegation [*18] would be sufficient to confer standing under that and subsequent cases. See id.; see also Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1548 (noting that concreteness is a separate requirement distinct from particularity and that the latter does not satisfy the former).

[*844] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Court on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (DN 6). The motion is ripe for decision. For the reasons provided below, the motion is GRANTED.

I. BACKGROUND

This is an action arising under the Sherman Antitrust Act ("the Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., concerning Defendants' alleged conduct at the public auction for the Estate of Lenita Cole ("the Estate") [*845] held on April 21, 2018, for real property located in Scottsville, Kentucky. (Compl. ¶¶ 3-6, DN 1). Plaintiff Valerie Powell ("Plaintiff"), who is the daughter of Lenita Cole and Administratrix of the Estate, alleges that "during the course of the auction, Defendants recognized that there was only one (1) competing bidder, namely Chris Shockley [("Shockley")] who was bidding on behalf of his farm partnership." (Compl. ¶ 8). Plaintiff claims that [2] Defendant Barry Dyer ("Dyer") approached Shockley and demanded that Shockley pay Defendants $40,000 or else they would continue bidding on the property. (Compl. ¶ 8). Shockley and his farming partner, Jason Williams ("Williams"), allegedly agreed to pay $40,000 to acquire the property free of competing bids from Defendants. (Compl. ¶ 9).

Shockley and Williams ultimately paid $492,200 for the property upon placing the highest bid at the auction. (Compl. ¶ 10).

Afterward, "the [E]state investigated the matter and concluded that it was deprived of $158,200 as a result" of Defendants' conduct. (Pl.'s Resp. 2). Plaintiff reaches this conclusion because "Shockley and Williams were prepared to pay up to . . . $650,400" for the property, compared to the $492,200 they ultimately paid. (Compl. ¶ 10). As a result, Plaintiff alleges that she and her brother—who is also a beneficiary of the Estate and a resident of Tennessee—were each deprived of $79,100. (Pl.'s Resp. 2).

Plaintiff initiated the present action pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15 seeking to recover treble damages as well as reasonable attorneys' fees and litigation costs.[1] (Compl. ¶¶ 12-13). Defendants move to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint on two grounds. [3] First, Defendants argue the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction because "Plaintiff must establish a nexus between [Defendants'] conduct and interstate commerce in order to bring a Sherman Act violation case." (Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 2, DN 6). Since the Estate was being probated in Kentucky, and because Defendants, Plaintiff, Shockley and Williams are all residents of Kentucky, Defendants "request this Court to dismiss this case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction [because] the transaction . . . was purely intrastate and did not have a substantial impact on interstate commerce." (Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 3). Second, Defendants contend Shockley and Williams are indispensable parties to this action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(a)(1) whose non-joiner warrants dismissal. (Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 3-4).

In her response, Plaintiff asserts that Defendants' conduct affects interstate commerce "given that the beneficiary residing in Tennessee was deprived of $79,000 or more as a result of Defendants' wrongdoing." (Pl.'s Resp. Defs.' Mot. Dismiss 4, DN 8 [hereinafter Pl.'s Resp.]). Regarding Defendants' motion to join Shockley and Williams as indispensable parties, Plaintiff argues "Defendants have merely made conclusory statements [4] unsupported by any specific facts or legal arguments" and "the law is clear that potential joint tortfeasors are only permissive parties." (Pl.'s Resp. 6).

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Motions to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) fall into two categories: facial attacks and factual attacks. United States v. Ritchie, 15 F.3d 592, 598 (6th Cir. 1994). Facial attacks challenge subject [*846] matter jurisdiction as to the sufficiency of the pleadings, and a Court will consider the material allegations in the complaint as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Id. Factual attacks challenge subject matter jurisdiction as to the facts alleged in the pleadings, and in such situations, courts weigh conflicting evidence and resolve factual disputes in determining whether there is jurisdiction. Id. "Subject matter jurisdiction is always a threshold determination." Am. Telecom Co. v. Republic of Lebanon, 501 F.3d 534, 537 (6th Cir. 2007) (citation omitted). In most circumstances, the plaintiff bears the burden to survive Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) motions to dismiss. See Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 681-82, 66 S. Ct. 773, 90 L. Ed. 939 (1946). "If the court determines at any time that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction, the court must dismiss the action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(3).

III. DISCUSSION

Because Defendants challenge the Court's subject matter jurisdiction over Plaintiff's claim based on the [5] sufficiency of her pleadings, this is a facial attack. See Ritchie, 15 F.3d at 598. The Court will accordingly consider the material allegations in Plaintiff's Complaint as true and construe them in her favor. See id.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15

[1] Kentucky has a similar antitrust law, KRS 367.175, but Plaintiff asserted only a federal claim.

U.S.C. § 1. In conjunction with this, Congress has created a private cause of action for "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). To state such a private cause of action, Plaintiffs must plead facts demonstrating three elements: "(1) the existence of a contract, combination, or conspiracy (2) affecting interstate commerce (3) that imposes an unreasonable restraint on trade." Churchill Downs Inc. v. Thoroughbred Horsemen's Grp., LLC, 605 F. Supp. 2d 870, 887 (W.D. Ky. 2009) (citations omitted).

In this action, Plaintiff has alleged an oral contract formed between Defendants and Shockley in satisfaction of the first element. Plaintiff has also made allegations that satisfy the third element because she accuses Defendants of bid rigging—a practice which has long been barred as an unreasonable, horizontal [6] restraint on trade and a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone Cty., Ky., 440 F.3d 336, 344 (6th Cir. 2006) (citations omitted); United States v. W.F. Brinkley & Son Constr. Co., 783 F.2d 1157, 1161 (4th Cir. 1986) ("[W]here two or more persons agree that one will submit a bid for a project higher or lower than the others or that one will not submit a bid at all, then there has been an unreasonable restraint on trade which violates the Sherman Antitrust Act."); United States v. Koppers Co., 652 F.2d 290, 294 (2d Cir. 1981) ("[I]n cases involving behavior such as bid rigging, which has been classified by courts as a per se violation, the Sherman Act will be read as simply saying: "'An agreement among competitors to rig bids is illegal.'"" (citation omitted)).

In their motion, Defendants do not challenge Plaintiff's allegations under either the first or third prongs but focus instead on the second. Thus, the disputed issue presently before this Court is whether Plaintiff has alleged facts indicating that Defendants' alleged bid rigging conspiracy affected interstate commerce. See McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., [*847] 444 U.S. 232, 241-42, 100 S. Ct. 502, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1980).

"In every federal antitrust case, the critical threshold inquiry is whether a sufficient nexus existed between the parties' activities and interstate commerce, thus bringing the claim within the Sherman Act's parameters." Stone v. William Beaumont Hosp., 782 F.2d 609, 613 (6th Cir. 1986). There are two avenues through which a plaintiff may satisfy [7] this threshold inquiry: "either . . . defendants' activity is itself in interstate commerce or, if it is local in nature, . . . it has an effect on some other appreciable activity demonstrably in interstate commerce." McLain, 444 U.S. at 242 (citation omitted). The first avenue has come to be known as the "in commerce" test, while the second is known as the "effect on commerce" test. Id. at 241.

Plaintiff seems to make arguments under both tests. First, Plaintiff posits that because her brother—who is also a beneficiary of the Estate—is a resident of Tennessee, Defendants' conduct had a direct impact on interstate commerce insofar as they deprived him of $79,100 in auction proceeds that would have crossed state lines. (Pl.'s Resp. 4). Under the "effect on commerce" test, Plaintiff points to McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, Inc. and United States v. Romer, 148 F.3d 359 (4th Cir. 1998) (abrogated on other grounds by United States v. Strassini, 59 F. App'x 550 (4th Cir. 2003)) to support the proposition that Defendant's intrastate conduct "nevertheless substantially affect[s] interstate commerce." (Pl.'s Resp. 3).

A. In Commerce Test

"The conceptual distinction between activities 'in' interstate commerce and those which 'affect' interstate commerce has been preserved in the cases, for Congress has seen fit to preserve that distinction in the antitrust and related [8] laws by limiting the applicability of certain provisions to activities demonstrably 'in commerce.'" McLain, 444 U.S. at 241-42 (citations omitted). Examples of this can be found in provisions of the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act which apply only to activities occurring in commerce, and the Supreme Court has developed its "in commerce" test for the Sherman Act through analyzing these provisions. See, e.g., id.; Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 195, 95 S. Ct. 392, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378 (1974) ("[T]he distinct 'in commerce' language of the Clayton and Robinson-Paton Act provisions . . . appears to denote only persons or activities within the flow of interstate commerce . . . ."); United States v. Am. Bldg. Maint. Indus., 422 U.S. 271, 276, 95 S. Ct. 2150, 45 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1975) (finding Section 7 of the Clayton Act "cannot be satisfied merely by showing that allegedly anticompetitive . . . activities affect commerce." (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Gulf Oil, 419 U.S. at 195)). Therefore, to pass the "in commerce" test, the activity must be directly "within the flow of interstate commerce—the practical, economic continuity in the generation of goods and services for interstate markets and their transport and distribution to the consumer." Gulf Oil, 419 U.S. at 195.

The conduct at issue here—Defendants' alleged bid rigging surrounding the purchase of Kentucky real estate—is entirely intrastate and does not involve "the generation [9] of goods and services for interstate markets." Nor does the auction, sale or purchase of real estate involve "transport and distribution to the consumer" considering that a defining characteristic of real property is that it is immovable. Moreover, Plaintiff's brother is not a consumer [*848] of any goods but rather a beneficiary allegedly denied proceeds from the Estate. Because the auction of real estate does not involve the generation of goods or services transported across state lines for consumers, Defendants activities cannot be said to be within the flow of interstate commerce under the "in commerce" test. See id.

This conclusion is further supported by the Supreme Court's discussion in McLain implicitly accepting the lower courts' conclusions that "[r]ealty [is] viewed as a quintessentially local product, and the brokerage activity described in the pleadings was found to occur wholly intrastate." McLain, 444 U.S. at 240, 242 (citation omitted). Accordingly, Plaintiff's claim fails to satisfy the "in commerce" test for establishing subject matter jurisdiction under the Sherman Act.

B. Effect on Commerce Test

To satisfy the "effect on commerce" test, Plaintiff must plead facts demonstrating that "as a matter of practical [10] economics," Defendants' activities "have a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved." McLain, 444 U.S. at 242 (citations omitted). This does not mean Plaintiff bears the burden of making a "more particularized showing of an effect on interstate commerce caused by the alleged conspiracy," because if there was such a requirement, "jurisdiction would be defeated by a demonstration that the alleged restraint fail[ed] to have its intended anticompetitive effect." Id. (citation omitted). In the Sixth Circuit, a plaintiff cannot merely allege "that some aspects of a defendant's business have a relationship to interstate commerce[]" to establish jurisdiction. Stone, 782 F.2d at 614 (citation omitted). Instead, "[t]he requisite showing will vary with the type of unlawful conduct alleged" and "the allegedly unlawful conduct itself must be shown to 'infect' those general business activities of the defendant which do, or are likely to, effect [sic] interstate commerce." Id. at 613-14 (adopting the Second Circuit's holding in Furlong v. Long Island College Hospital, 710 F.2d 922 (2d Cir. 1983)).

The conduct at issue here is Defendants' alleged bid rigging activity at the subject auction. Plaintiff argues that her brother's status as a resident of Tennessee and his deprivation of $79,100 in proceeds from [11] the estate sale shows that Defendants' conduct had a not insubstantial effect on interstate commerce. Plaintiff contends this is analogous to the conduct deemed to have had a substantial effect on interstate commerce in McLain and Romer.

In McLain, the Supreme Court considered claims against real estate firms and trade associations in the Greater New Orleans area alleging that they had, among other anticompetitive conduct, fixed commission prices in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. McLain, 444 U.S. at 234-35. In determining whether defendants' conduct had an effect on interstate commerce for jurisdiction under the Sherman Act, the Court provided, "it is not sufficient merely to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce." Id. at 242. Instead, a plaintiff must plead a "critical relationship between defendants' conduct and interstate commerce and, if those pleadings are controverted, must submit additional evidence demonstrating defendants' conduct has an effect on an "appreciable activity demonstrably in interstate commerce." Id. (citing Gulf Oil, 419 U.S. at 202).

[*849] The Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiffs there met this threshold in light of [12] several aspects of defendants' brokerage activity that impacted interstate commerce. For one, "an appreciable amount of commerce [was] involved in the financing of residential property in the Greater New Orleans area and in the insuring of titles to such property." Id. at 511. Loans were provided from interstate financial institutions and out-of-state investors contributed funding. Id. "Multistate lending institutions took mortgages insured under federal programs which entailed interstate transfers of premiums and settlements. Mortgage obligations physically and constructively were traded as financial instruments in the interstate secondary mortgage market." Id. When viewing the supplemented pleadings in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, the Supreme Court concluded the facts could support the inference that defendants' activities impacted interstate commerce and accordingly found jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. Id.

In Romer, the Fourth Circuit also found jurisdiction for the United States' bid rigging claims under the Sherman Act. Romer, 148 F.3d at 365. The United States alleged there that the defendants conspired to rig bids at real estate foreclosure auctions. Id. at 363. Although the auctions involved Virginia [13] property, took place entirely within Virginia, and were between Virginian bidders only, the Fourth Circuit found an effect on interstate commerce where "[t]he driving force behind each auction was the financial interest of an out-of-state lender, who initiated the auction to recover the balance of an outstanding debt." Id.

In the present case, although Plaintiff's claims involve real estate transactions like McLain and Romer, her Complaint is devoid of allegations relating the subject transaction to interstate commerce sufficient to establish subject matter jurisdiction. Plaintiff pleads nothing regarding the likes of title insurance, lending institutions or any other aspect of the real estate transaction which have been found in other cases to constitute an adequate nexus between anticompetitive conduct and interstate commerce. See McLain, 444 U.S. at 245; Romer, 148 F.3d at 363.

Moreover, Plaintiff's Complaint contains no allegations relating to Defendants' business activities or how they have been infected by the allegedly anticompetitive conduct. In her reply, Plaintiff mentions in passing that Dyer is a licensed auctioneer and real estate broker, but provides no explanation how this status impacts the connection between Dyer's [14] role and interstate commerce. See Stone, 782 F.2d at 614. Further, the Complaint contains no allegations relating to the interstate features of Dyer's business. Regarding Shelton, Plaintiff has offered absolutely nothing regarding his role in this transaction, how this bid-rigging conduct relates to his general business activities, or even the general nature of his business.

Plaintiff's argument that her brother's status as a citizen of Tennessee is also unavailing for establishing jurisdiction under the Sherman Act because the interstate commerce affected under this argument is undoubtedly insubstantial. In Stone, the Sixth Circuit considered claims that a hospital and various staff members acted in concert to deprive the physician plaintiff of staff privileges in an unreasonable restraint on trade. Stone, 782 F.2d at 610. Because the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint was that he was excluded from using a local facility to perform catheterizations two or three times a month, the Sixth Circuit concluded that any effect on interstate commerce stemming from his denial of staff privileges was de minimis [*850] and insufficient for jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. Id. at 614-15. When viewed in light of the Sixth Circuit's conclusion that the few [15] monthly operations in Stone have an insubstantial effect on interstate commerce, indirectly depriving Plaintiff's brother of auction proceeds as an heir to the Estate has even less of an effect on interstate commerce where the auction transaction at issue was a singular, one-time event. See id.

Where the conduct at issue here involved the auction of real property, Plaintiff has not satisfied the "in commerce" test. See McLain, 444 U.S. at 240, 242. Because Plaintiff fails to identify any aspect of Defendants' businesses that affect interstate commerce and because the gravamen of her Complaint—that her brother in Tennessee was denied $79,100 in auction proceeds—involves a one-time transaction, Plaintiff has failed to plead conduct which has a substantial effect on interstate commerce. See id. at 245; Stone, 782 F.2d at 614-15. With this, Plaintiff has failed to plead facts which could satisfy the "effects on commerce" test for subject matter jurisdiction under the Sherman Act.

Even considering her allegations as true, Plaintiff has failed to plead facts demonstrating Defendants' conduct has a substantial effect on interstate commerce under either the "in commerce" or the "effect on commerce" tests. See McLain, 444 U.S. at 242; see also Bell, 327 U.S. at 681-82. Accordingly, Plaintiff's claim [16] is dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1). In light of this, the Court finds it unnecessary to address Defendants' joinder arguments under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(7).

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (DN 6) is GRANTED, and Plaintiff's Complaint (DN 1) is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

IQ DENTAL SUPPLY, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. HENRY SCHEIN, INC., PATTERSON COMPANIES, INC., BENCO DENTAL SUPPLY COMPANY, Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. No. 17-cv-4834 - Brian M. Cogan, Judge. This case involves allegations that three large dental-supply distributors—Henry Schein, Inc., Patterson Companies, Inc., and Benco Dental Supply Company, Inc. ("the Defendants")—conspired to violate the antitrust laws by engineering the boycott of an online distribution portal, SourceOne, Inc. ("SourceOne"), and dental manufacturers and suppliers associated with SourceOne. The Plaintiff, IQ Dental Supply, Inc. ("IQ"), is a competitor dental-supply distributor that sold dental products through SourceOne's online portals. IQ sued the Defendants in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York alleging violations of federal and state antitrust laws and asserting common law tort claims. The district court (Cogan, Judge) dismissed IQ's antitrust claims for lack of antitrust standing and IQ's tort claims for failure to state a claim. IQ appeals that decision. We affirm the district court's dismissal of IQ's claim that it has antitrust standing to challenge the boycott of SourceOne and the state dental associations ("SDAs") that had partnered with [2] SourceOne. As to IQ's claim that it has standing to challenge injury inflicted by the direct boycott of its business, however, we find that IQ's antitrust and tort claims may go forward on these direct boycott allegations only. Accordingly, we vacate in part the judgment of the district court and remand the case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Standing

HN2[] Private Actions, Standing

To survive the pleading stage, an antitrust plaintiff must demonstrate that it has antitrust standing. The antitrust standing requirement reflects the judgment that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation. To satisfy antitrust standing at the pleading stage a plaintiff must plausibly allege two things: (1) that it suffered a special kind of antitrust injury, and (2) that it is a suitable plaintiff to pursue the alleged antitrust violations and thus is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN3[] Standing, Requirements

A plaintiff raising an antitrust claim must demonstrate antitrust injury to ensure that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN4[] Standing, Requirements

Jurisprudence culminating in Gatt Communications, Inc. v. PMC Associates, L.L.C. establishes a three-part test for determining whether the plaintiff has alleged an antitrust injury: (1) the court must identify the practice complained of and the reasons such a practice is or might be anticompetitive; (2) the court must identify the actual injury the plaintiff alleges which requires courts to look to the ways in which the plaintiff claims it is in a worse position as a consequence of the defendant's conduct; and (3) the court compares the anticompetitive effect of the specific practice at issue to the 'actual injury the plaintiff alleges.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN5[] Standing, Requirements

At the first step of the Gatt analysis, a plaintiff need allege only that the defendants have engaged in unlawful anticompetitive conduct. The bar for such a showing is a low one. Group boycotts have long been held to be in the forbidden category under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN6[] Standing, Requirements

The second Gatt step requires courts to isolate and identify the plaintiff's actual injury or the ways in which the plaintiff claims it is in a worse position as a consequence of the defendant's conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN7[] Standing, Requirements

Plaintiffs must show that their injury is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Antitrust law is concerned with market conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN8[] Standing, Requirements

At Gatt's third step a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendants' anticompetitive behavior caused its actual injury, the plaintiff must show that the injury flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Standing, Requirements

An antitrust plaintiff must also show that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. A four-factor test is employed to determine whether an antitrust plaintiff is an efficient enforcer; thus courts must evaluate: (1) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury, (2) the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement, (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury, and (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN10[] Standing, Requirements

The infliction of a derivative injury does not always render an antitrust plaintiff's injury too indirect under the efficient-enforcer standing test.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN11[] Standing, Requirements

Under the third efficient-enforcer antitrust standing factor courts must consider whether the plaintiff's asserted damages are speculative. Although some degree of uncertainty stems from the nature of antitrust law, a high degree of speculation in a damages calculation suggests that a given plaintiff is an inefficient engine of enforcement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN12[] Standing, Requirements

The efficient-enforcer factors for antitrust standing are concerned with finding the plaintiffs best suited to serve as private attorneys general, and not with identifying every plaintiff who might sue. Whether external or practical considerations, such as the statute of limitations, may eliminate a duplicative damages concern, therefore, is not substantially material. The efficient-enforcer factor asks, in the overall scheme of antitrust enforcement, whether a potential antitrust plaintiff stands within that scheme as someone well positioned to enforce the antitrust laws. The existence of other plaintiffs who could lay claim to precisely the same damages, whether in theory or in actuality, indicates that the would-be antitrust plaintiff might not be well positioned to vindicate the antitrust laws for the benefit of the public.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN13[] Standing, Requirements

Courts decide questions of antitrust standing under both New York and New Jersey antitrust law in conformity with federal antitrust law.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN14[] Intentional Interference, Elements

Under New York law, a plaintiff claiming tortious interference with prospective business relations must show the defendant's interference with business relations existing between the plaintiff and a third party, either with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are dishonest, unfair, or in any other way improper. But where the defendant's interference is intended, at least in part, to advance its own competing interests, the claim will fail unless the means employed include criminal or fraudulent conduct.

[*60] JOHN M. WALKER, JR., Circuit Judge.

This case involves allegations that three large dental-supply distributors—Henry Schein, Inc., Patterson Companies, Inc., and Benco Dental Supply Company, Inc. ("the Defendants")—conspired to violate the antitrust laws by engineering the boycott of an online distribution portal, SourceOne, Inc. ("SourceOne"), and of dental manufacturers and suppliers associated with SourceOne. The Plaintiff, IQ Dental Supply, Inc. ("IQ"), is a competitor dental-supply distributor that sold dental products through SourceOne's online portals. IQ sued the Defendants in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York alleging violations of federal and state antitrust laws and asserting common law tort claims. The district court (Cogan, Judge) dismissed IQ's antitrust claims for lack of antitrust standing and IQ's tort claims for failure to state a claim. IQ appeals that decision.

We affirm the district court's dismissal of IQ's claim that it has antitrust standing to challenge the boycott of SourceOne and the state dental associations ("SDAs") that had partnered with SourceOne. As to IQ's claim that it has standing to challenge [4] injury inflicted by the direct boycott of its business, however, we find that IQ's antitrust and tort claims may go forward on these direct boycott allegations only. Accordingly, we vacate in part the judgment of the district court and remand the case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BACKGROUND

There are only a small number of dental-supply companies that distribute products to dental practices. Three of those companies, the Defendants, occupy approximately [*61] 80% of the dental-supply distribution market.[1] They purchase dental supplies and equipment from different manufacturers, and then sell the products to dental practices nationwide. This one-stop-shop model obviates the need for dental practices to purchase their dental equipment from each manufacturer.

IQ is also a distributor of dental supplies, albeit one with considerably less market share than any of the Defendants. IQ entered the market in 2009. Beginning in 2014, IQ adopted a new distribution model. Instead of distributing dental supplies through the traditional method of deploying on-the-ground sales teams around the country (the model used by the Defendants) IQ distributed dental supplies through an online [5] portal hosted by SourceOne.

SourceOne's online portal is a website where dental practices can purchase their supplies. SourceOne itself does not sell any dental supplies through the website but serves as the platform through which dental-supply distributors, such as IQ, sell products to dental offices. The distributors that used SourceOne's portals pay SourceOne a commission for each sale made through the website. In 2013, SourceOne launched additional distribution websites in partnership with the SDAs in Texas, Arizona, and Nevada. These SDA-specific sites operated much like SourceOne's own portal, but each SDA had its own unique domain name. SourceOne remitted a portion of their commission to the SDA for each sale made through an SDA-specific website.

IQ was not SourceOne's first distribution partner. Two other distributors—DDS Dental Supply and Arnold Dental Supply ("DDS and Arnold")—distributed products through SourceOne before IQ reached its agreement with SourceOne. But sometime around April 2014 both DDS and Arnold stopped selling through SourceOne because the Defendants pressured dental-supply manufacturers to stop supplying DDS and Arnold due to their arrangement with SourceOne. [6] After losing DDS and Arnold as distribution partners, SourceOne tried to enlist a third distributor to supply dental products, but that distributor declined, allegedly because of the same anticompetitive behavior by the Defendants that had caused DDS and Arnold to withdraw.

SourceOne's need for a distributor to supply its online portals opened the door for IQ. In May of 2014, IQ signed a contract to distribute through SourceOne-affiliated websites, and, since then, IQ has supplied 90% of the dental supplies sold through SourceOne's website and its affiliated SDA websites. But IQ soon encountered the same problem that DDS and Arnold had faced: pressure from the Defendants intended to disrupt SourceOne's online sales portals began to affect IQ's business.

[1] As we must at this stage, we take all of IQ's well-pleaded facts as true. See Gelboim v. Bank of Am. Corp., 823 F.3d 759, 769 (2d Cir. 2016).

IQ alleged that the Defendants engaged in this campaign to force SourceOne out of business by conspiring to organize a boycott of: (1) SourceOne and SourceOne-affiliated SDA websites, (2) participating SDAs and SDA trade shows, and (3) IQ directly by pressuring the manufacturers to stop supplying IQ. It also alleged that the Defendants engaged in a price-fixing conspiracy, which is not part of this appeal. These unlawful boycotts allegedly [7] frightened off dental manufacturers, SDAs, and dental practices from doing business with companies connected to SourceOne, and, as a result, ultimately dealing with IQ. These boycotts "severely limited and inhibited [*62] IQ's growth and sales, and has cost IQ many millions of dollars in lost profits." Appellant's Br. at 13.

In August 2017, IQ sued the defendants in the Eastern District of New York, under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and corresponding state antitrust laws—the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 340 et seq., and the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 56:9-1 et seq. IQ also brought common-law claims for tortious interference with prospective business relations, civil conspiracy, and aiding and abetting.

The district court granted the Defendants' motion to dismiss IQ's complaint. It determined that IQ failed to establish antitrust standing because it had neither alleged an antitrust injury, nor shown that it was an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. The remaining state law claims were dismissed for failure to state a claim. IQ now appeals that decision.

DISCUSSION

HN1[] We review the district court's grant of a motion to dismiss de novo; we accept as true all factual claims and draw all reasonable inferences in IQ's favor. Gelboim v. Bank of Am. Corp., 823 F.3d 759, 769 (2d Cir. 2016). Questions of standing [8] are also reviewed de novo. In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 688 (2d Cir. 2009).

I. Antitrust Standing

HN2[] To survive the pleading stage, an antitrust plaintiff must demonstrate that it has "antitrust standing." See Daniel v. Am. Bd. of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 436-37 (2d Cir. 2005). Only antitrust standing is at issue here. The antitrust standing requirement reflects the judgment that "'Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation.'" Id. (quoting Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters (AGC), 459 U.S. 519, 534, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)).

To satisfy antitrust standing at the pleading stage a plaintiff must plausibly allege two things: (1) "that it suffered a 'special kind of antitrust injury,'" and (2) "that it is a suitable plaintiff to pursue the alleged antitrust violations and thus is an 'efficient enforcer' of the antitrust laws." Gatt Commc'ns, Inc. v. PMC Assocs., L.L.C., 711 F.3d 68, 76 (2d Cir. 2013) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Port Dock & Stone Corp. v. Oldcastle Ne., Inc., 507 F.3d 117, 121-22 (2d Cir. 2007)). We address both these antitrust-standing imperatives in turn.

A. Antitrust Injury

HN3[] A plaintiff raising an antitrust claim must demonstrate antitrust injury to "'ensure[] that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place.'" Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76 (quoting Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990)).

HN4[] Our jurisprudence culminating in Gatt Communications, Inc. v. PMC Associates, L.L.C. established a three-part [9] test for determining whether the plaintiff has alleged an antitrust injury: (1) the court "must 'identify[] the practice complained of and the reasons such a practice is or might be anticompetitive,'" Id. (quoting Port Dock, 507 F.3d at 122); (2) the court must "identify the 'actual injury the plaintiff alleges' . . . [which] requires us to look to the ways in which the plaintiff claims it is in a 'worse position' as a consequence of the defendant's conduct," id. (quoting Port Dock, 507 F.3d at 122, and Brunswick [*63] Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl—O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 486, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)); and (3) the court compares the "'anticompetitive effect of the specific practice at issue' to the 'actual injury the plaintiff alleges,'" id. (quoting Port Dock, 507 F.3d at 122). IQ has adequately pleaded an antitrust injury in accordance with our decision in Gatt.

1. Gatt Step One

HN5[] At the first step of the Gatt analysis, IQ need allege only that the Defendants have engaged in unlawful anticompetitive conduct. Id. The bar for such a showing is a low one. See Port Dock, 507 F.3d at 122. IQ has satisfied this requirement by plausibly alleging that the Defendants conspired to boycott the SourceOne-affiliated websites, the SDAs, and IQ itself, and engaged in a price-fixing campaign.[2] These allegations easily satisfy Gatt's initial requirement that IQ allege unlawful [10] anticompetitive conduct by the Defendants. See Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959) ("Group boycotts . . . have long been held to be in the forbidden category [under the antitrust laws].").

2. Gatt Step Two

HN6[] The second Gatt step requires us to isolate and identify IQ's "actual injury" or the "ways in which the plaintiff claims it is in a 'worse position' as a consequence of the defendant's conduct." Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76.

The Defendants argue that IQ is in no "worse position" due to their conduct because the demise of DDS and Arnold provided IQ with the opportunity to do business through SourceOne. But for their alleged anticompetitive behavior, the Defendants claim, IQ would not have made a single sale through SourceOne's online portals—and therefore IQ cannot allege that it has been made any worse off than it would have been absent the Defendants' anticompetitive scheme. Essentially, the argument goes, every sale IQ has made through SourceOne-affiliated websites is a "bonus" sale that IQ would not have made in an undistorted market because DDS and Arnold would still be SourceOne's primary distributors, and IQ has not alleged that it would have partnered with SourceOne were that the case.

To support this argument, the Defendants rely on [11] cases where courts have denied antitrust standing to a competitor that benefitted from a market distorted by anticompetitive conduct, see Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 583, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (no antitrust standing for competitors who would benefit from a price-fixing conspiracy to raise prices); Sprint Nextel Corp. v. AT&T Inc., 821 F. Supp. 2d 308, 319-20 (D.D.C. 2011) (no antitrust standing because an increase in market price did not harm competitors); MacPherson's Inc. v. Windermere Real Estate Services Co., 100 F. App'x 651, 654 (9th Cir. 2004) (no antitrust standing because the alleged price-fixing scheme would increase the plaintiff's profits), and [*64] where courts have denied antitrust standing to a competitor that alleged it would have experienced an increase in its profits but for the anticompetitive conduct, Alberta Gas Chemicals Ltd. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours and Co., 826

[2] The district court dismissed IQ's price-fixing claims because competitors cannot claim injury from supracompetitive prices. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582-83, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) ("Nor can respondents recover damages for any conspiracy by petitioners to charge higher than competitive prices . . . . Such conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act, but it could not injure respondents: as petitioners' competitors, respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market prices . . . " (internal citations omitted)). IQ does not pursue a price-fixing antitrust conspiracy claim on appeal.

F.2d 1235, 1243 (3d Cir. 1987) (no antitrust standing for plaintiffs denied access to "windfall profits" as a result of antitrust conspiracy).

But the plaintiff's position in each of these cases is distinguishable from IQ's. In three of the cases—Matsushita, MacPherson's, and Sprint—the would-be antitrust plaintiffs enjoyed continuing benefits as a direct result of the antitrust violations. The plaintiffs in these cases were competitors benefiting from the supracompetitive pricing that the conspiracy had produced. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 583; MacPherson's, 100 F. App'x at 654; Sprint, 821 F. Supp. 2d at 319-20. IQ, however, is not receiving a continuing benefit from the Defendants' alleged antitrust violations [12] because the Defendants' conduct is not producing an ongoing competitive advantage for IQ.[3] Instead, IQ alleges that the Defendants' actions have decreased the number of sales it has been able to make through SourceOne-affiliated websites.

Alberta Gas is distinguishable for a different reason: in that case the plaintiffs claimed antitrust losses "stemming from the failure of a competitor to bring about an increase in demand and price." Alberta Gas, 826 F.2d at 1243. The Third Circuit held that a lost "windfall profit" is not an antitrust injury. Id. But IQ does not claim an actual injury based on the loss of windfall profits such as that disallowed in Alberta Gas. IQ's alleged losses do not stem from the denial of profits that would have resulted from an increased demand or new market absent the Defendants' anticompetitive conduct.

We agree with IQ that its role as a "replacement supplier" for SourceOne after the demise of DDS and Arnold does not defeat its claim of actual injury under the antitrust laws. Regardless of how IQ entered the market, once IQ was in the market it had a right to do business in a market undistorted by unlawful anticompetitive conduct. See Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489 (HN7[] plaintiffs must show that their injury [13] is "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent").

Antitrust law is concerned with market conditions. See Gelboim, 823 F.3d at 773. Assuming that IQ is operating in a market affected by anticompetitive conduct, the question of actual injury becomes whether IQ is worse off than it would be if the market were free of anticompetitive forces. IQ has alleged that the Defendants' anticompetitive conduct affected the market, and that, after it entered the market, its sales through SourceOne suffered as a result. The manner of IQ's entrance into the SourceOne agreement notwithstanding, it is entitled to conduct its business in a market that is not infected with an anticompetitive distortion. Moreover, this is the type of injury the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. We conclude that IQ has adequately alleged an actual injury.

3. Gatt Step Three

Finally,HN8[] at Gatt's third step IQ must demonstrate that the Defendants' anticompetitive [*65] behavior caused its actual injury. Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76. IQ has satisfied this requirement. Assuming that IQ has suffered an actual injury as we determined in step two, there is no substantial dispute that IQ has adequately alleged that the Defendants' anticompetitive behavior caused the injury. [14] See Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489 (the plaintiff must show that the injury "flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful").

B. Efficient-Enforcer Test

Even if IQ has cleared the antitrust-injury hurdle, there is more to the antitrust standing requirement. HN9[] An antitrust plaintiff must also show that it is an "efficient enforcer" of the antitrust laws. Daniel, 428 F.3d at 443.

[3] The Defendants maintain that because their anticompetitive behavior is the but-for cause of IQ's agreement with SourceOne, any IQ sale made through SourceOne-affiliated websites constitutes an ongoing benefit to IQ. But the cases cited by the Defendants deny standing to plaintiffs who experience an ongoing beneficial market condition as a result of the defendants' conduct—not a one-time market opportunity. By contrast, the Defendants' ongoing boycotts have the continuing effect of restricting the number of sales IQ makes through SourceOne-affiliated websites.

A four-factor test is employed to determine whether an antitrust plaintiff is an efficient enforcer; thus we must evaluate: (1) "the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury," (2) "the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement," (3) "the speculativeness of the alleged injury," and (4) "the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries." Id. (internal quotations marks and citations omitted). These four factors need not be given equal weight: the relative significance of each factor will depend on the circumstances of the particular case. Id.

To determine whether IQ is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws, we must first distinguish the different types of [15] antitrust violations IQ seeks to enforce. There are three types of antitrust violations at issue in this appeal: organizing boycotts of (1) SourceOne-affiliated websites, (2) the SDAs, and (3) IQ. The first two violations allege instances of unlawful pressure placed on IQ's business indirectly due to a boycott of SourceOne and the SDAs ("the indirect boycott allegations"), and the third violation alleges a direct boycott of IQ ("the direct boycott allegations").

1. The Indirect Boycott Allegations

Directness of the injury. The first efficient-enforcer factor requires a direct injury: "Directness in the antitrust context means close in the chain of causation." Gatt, 711 F.3d at 78 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted); see also Paycom Billing Servs., Inc. v. Mastercard Int'l, Inc., 467 F.3d 283, 293 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding the plaintiff's injury too indirect when it "flowed from the injuries" suffered by other parties).

As to IQ's allegations that the Defendants engaged in an unlawful campaign to boycott the SourceOne-affiliated websites and the SDAs themselves, the violation is too remote to satisfy this first factor. We agree with the district court that IQ's claims with respect to these allegations are derivative and indirect: the harm to IQ resulted from injury to SourceOne and [16] the SDAs.

To be sure, HN10[] the infliction of a derivative injury does not always render an antitrust plaintiff's injury too indirect under the efficient-enforcer test. See In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 688 (derivative harm is sufficiently direct when "harming competitors [is] simply a means for the defendants to charge the plaintiffs higher prices"). Thus, in In re DDAVP, the ultimate goal of the anticompetitive scheme to harm competitors was to charge the consumers higher prices. Id. at 682. By contrast, the Defendants here sought to put SourceOne—not IQ—out of business by undermining SourceOne's new and disruptive online sales model. IQ was not the target of annihilation; [*66] it was simply collateral damage.[4] IQ's alleged injury is therefore too indirect.

Sufficiently motivated plaintiff. Under the second efficient-enforcer factor, IQ has failed to adequately allege that it is a sufficiently motivated plaintiff such that it is part of "an identifiable class . . . whose self-interest would normally motivate [it] to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement." Gatt, 711 F.3d at 79 (quoting AGC, 459 U.S. at 542). In this case, several plaintiffs have already sued the Defendants and have alleged these same antitrust violations. See SourceOne Dental, Inc. v. Patterson Cos., Inc., et al., No. 15-cv-05440 (BMC) (E.D.N.Y filed Sept. 21, 2015) (suit brought by SourceOne); [17] In re Dental Supplies Antitrust Litig., No. 16-cv-00696 (BMC) (E.D.N.Y. filed Feb. 9, 2016) (suit brought by dental offices). Although the existence of more-motivated plaintiffs is not dispositive, the presence of plaintiffs who are better situated to vindicate the antitrust laws is relevant to this second factor. See In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 688-89. With respect to the challenged boycotts, SourceOne is a better-positioned plaintiff than IQ because SourceOne has been more directly injured by the alleged antitrust conspiracy than IQ. And SourceOne has in fact sued the Defendants seeking to enforce the antitrust laws.

[4] IQ argues that the district court erred by applying the "target area test." We abandoned that test over thirty years ago in Crimpers Promotions Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290, 292-93 (2d Cir. 1983). In any event, the district court did not apply the "target area test" when it found that IQ had not suffered a direct injury under the first efficient-enforcer factor. The "target area test" used to ask whether a plaintiff was within "that sector of the economy which is endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in the particular industry." Id. at 292 (internal quotation marks omitted). The district court did not ask that question. It properly asked whether IQ was a "target" of the Defendants' unlawful conspiracy in the context of assessing whether that injury was sufficiently direct.

IQ argues that it is sufficiently motivated because none of the parties that have already sued (or could sue) the Defendants stand to recover lost profits. This is IQ's most promising claim that it is a properly motivated plaintiff: while SourceOne and the SDAs earn a commission on the sales, neither earns a profit. But this alone will not qualify IQ as a sufficiently motivated plaintiff. The antitrust laws recognize that "not every victim of an antitrust violation needs to be compensated under the antitrust [18] laws in order for the antitrust laws to be efficiently enforced." Gelboim, 823 F.3d at 779. IQ's (highly speculative, as discussed below) lost profits do not tip the scales.

In short, "[t]he justification for permitting [IQ] 'to perform the office of a private attorney general' is greatly diminished because '[d]enying [IQ] a remedy on the basis of its allegations in this case is not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied.'" Paycom, 467 F.3d at 294 (quoting AGC, 459 U.S. at 542). Given that IQ is further removed from the harm caused by the Defendants than the parties directly affected by the boycott that have already sued the Defendants, the second efficient-enforcer factor weighs against IQ's antitrust standing.

Speculative Damages. HN11[] Under the third efficient-enforcer factor we must consider whether IQ's "asserted damages are speculative." Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76. Although "some degree of uncertainty stems from the nature of antitrust law," a high degree of speculation in a damages calculation suggests that "a given plaintiff is an [*67] inefficient engine of enforcement." Gelboim, 823 F.3d at 779.

The derivative nature of IQ's alleged injuries renders its potential recovery highly speculative. As the district court correctly ascertained, calculating IQ's damages essentially [19] would require the creation of an "alternative universe." *IQ Dental Supply, Inc. v. Henry Schein, Inc., No. 17-cv-4834, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 211070, 2017 WL 6557482, at 10 (E.D.N.Y. Dec. 21, 2017). IQ would have to model far more than basic lost sales and lost profits. It would need to first show how many additional SDAs would have partnered with SourceOne but for the Defendants' conduct, second demonstrate the types of agreements SourceOne and IQ would have had with each of those SDAs, and finally show how many SDA customers would have purchased IQ-supplied products through a SourceOne-affiliated website. Thus, IQ's damages calculation rests on multiple layers of speculation. See id. ("Any damages estimate would require evidence to 'support a just and reasonable estimate of damages,' and it is difficult to see how appellants would arrive at such an estimate, even with the aid of expert testimony." (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1378 (2d Cir. 1988))). No amount of expert testimony can adequately ameliorate the highly speculative nature of IQ's alleged losses.

Duplicative and difficult to apportion damages. The fourth factor, duplicative recovery, also cuts against IQ. The damages to which IQ lays claim—lost profits from sales it would have made through SourceOne-affiliated [20] websites absent the Defendants' anticompetitive conduct—are exactly the same damages SourceOne's initial suppliers, DDS and Arnold, could have claimed.

IQ argues that the potential for duplicative recovery has become irrelevant to the efficient-enforcer analysis because any antitrust claims DDS and Arnold might have against the Defendants are now time-barred. But we reiterate that HN12[] the efficient-enforcer factors are concerned with finding the plaintiffs best suited to serve as "private attorney[s] general," AGC, 459 U.S. at 542, and not with identifying every plaintiff who might sue. Whether external or practical considerations (such as the statute of limitations) may eliminate a duplicative damages concern, therefore, is not substantially material. The efficient-enforcer factor asks, in the overall scheme of antitrust enforcement, whether a potential antitrust plaintiff stands within that scheme as someone well positioned to enforce the antitrust laws. The existence of other plaintiffs who could lay claim to precisely the same damages, whether in theory or in actuality, indicates that the would-be antitrust plaintiff might not be well positioned to vindicate the antitrust laws for the benefit of the public. [21] See id. Indeed, it would be strange and unworkable if new efficient enforcers sprang up simply by operation of the statute of limitations on the other enforcers.

In sum, we agree with the district court that because IQ is not positioned to efficiently enforce the claims that the Defendants harmed it by conspiring to boycott SourceOne-affiliated websites and the SDAs, IQ does not have antitrust standing to bring these claims.

2. The Direct Boycott Allegations

IQ also alleges that the Defendants injured it by means of a direct boycott. IQ claims that the Defendants pressured the manufacturers to stop supplying IQ, frightened manufacturers away from supplying IQ in the first place, and otherwise disparaged IQ's business to its customers and potential customers.

[*68] We find, with respect to these particular allegations, that IQ is an efficient enforcer and thus has antitrust standing to proceed with its direct boycott claim against the Defendants.

Directness of the injury. The direct boycott injury IQ alleges is neither indirect nor derivative. IQ claims that the Defendants directly pressured manufacturers to stop selling their products to IQ, and that the Defendants sought to damage IQ's business [22] reputation with its customers. Because IQ was the Defendants' target, these are direct injuries.

Sufficiently motivated plaintiff. Second, IQ is the most-motivated plaintiff with respect to the Defendants' alleged direct boycott of IQ. See Gatt, 711 F.3d at 78. Unlike the claims of injury from the indirect pressure on SourceOne and the SDAs, IQ is the "immediate victim[]" of any direct boycott of IQ. AGC, 459 U.S. at 541. It has suffered a direct loss of sales. By contrast, none of the plaintiffs best positioned to enforce IQ's claims of indirect boycott are well positioned to enforce IQ's allegations of direct boycott.

Speculative damages. The damages that flow from the Defendants' alleged direct boycott of IQ would not necessarily be speculative—such damages would relate to instances of potentially ascertainable business losses. The value of each lost opportunity might be calculated based on IQ's historical sales data without undue speculation.

Duplicative recovery. IQ's recovery of damages related to the direct boycott of IQ would not be duplicative. See Gatt, 711 F.3d at 79-80. Unlike the indirect claims, any damages in connection with the Defendants' direct boycott of IQ could not also be claimed by Arnold and DDS. These injuries are specific [23] to IQ alone.

The Defendants argue that IQ fails to state plausible claims for relief for direct injury because "the complaint does not contain factual allegations that Defendants engaged in any joint conduct to boycott IQ." Appellees' Br. at 55. This argument fails to recognize that the allegations of direct boycott are part of the Defendants' vast and multipronged attack on SourceOne's platforms, the SDAs, the distributors, and dental offices. In other words, IQ has not alleged that it has suffered an antitrust injury from the Defendants' direct boycott in isolation. Although, as the Defendants note, "complaints about price-cutters are natural—and from the manufacturer's perspective, unavoidable—reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals," Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted), IQ's complaint here is not limited to price cutting. IQ has alleged that the Defendants, as part of their elaborate and extensive scheme to force SourceOne and associated entities out of business, exerted pressure on some of IQ's suppliers to boycott IQ.

In sum, IQ is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws solely with respect to IQ's allegations that it has been directly boycotted [24] by the actions of the Defendants. As to these allegations, we vacate the district court's judgment and remand for further proceedings on IQ's claim.

II. IQ'S STATE LAW CLAIMS

A. New York and New Jersey Antitrust Claims

IQ brought parallel antitrust claims under New York's Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 et seq., and the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 56:9-1 et seq. HN13[] We decide questions of antitrust standing under both New York and New [*69] Jersey antitrust law in conformity with federal antitrust law. Gatt, 711 F.3d at 81-82 (holding that the Donnelly Act should generally be interpreted consistently with federal antitrust law (citing X.L.O. Concrete Corp. v. Rivergate Corp., 83 N.Y.2d 513, 634 N.E.2d 158, 161, 611 N.Y.S.2d 786 (N.Y. 1994))); see also State v. Lawn King, Inc., 84 N.J. 179, 417 A.2d 1025, 1032 (N.J. 1980) ("[T]he New Jersey act is to be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable Federal antitrust statutes and to effectuate, insofar as practicable, a uniformity in the laws of those states which enact it." (internal quotation marks omitted)).

Therefore, our holding with respect to IQ's state law antitrust claims mirrors our federal antitrust holding discussed above. IQ's indirect allegations—the boycott of SourceOne and the SDAs—fail because IQ is not an efficient enforcer. IQ's state-law antitrust claims that the Defendants directly boycotted IQ's business, however, may proceed.

B. IQ's State [25] Law Tort Claims

Our final task is to determine the fate of IQ's remaining state law claims. IQ asserted common-law claims of tortious interference with prospective business relations, civil conspiracy, and aiding and abetting.

1. Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Relations

HN14[] Under New York law, a plaintiff claiming tortious interference with prospective business relations must "show the defendant's interference with business relations existing between the plaintiff and a third party, either with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are dishonest, unfair, or in any other way improper." PPX Enters., Inc. v. Audiofidelity Enters., Inc., 818 F.2d 266, 269 (2d Cir. 1987) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted), abrogated on other grounds by Hannex Corp. v. GMI, Inc., 140 F.3d 194, 206 n.9 (2d Cir. 1998). But where, as it does here, "the defendant's interference is intended, at least in part, to advance its own competing interests, the claim will fail unless the means employed include criminal or fraudulent conduct." Id.

The district court dismissed IQ's tortious interference claim because IQ failed to allege a "viable antitrust claim" and therefore could not plausibly allege that it had suffered criminal or tortious behavior. Second, the district court determined, consistent with the efficient-enforcer [26] analysis, that IQ had not plausibly alleged that the Defendants' conduct was the proximate cause of its injuries because IQ had suffered only indirect harm. Finally, with respect to IQ's allegations that the Defendants directly boycotted its business, the district court found them too "threadbare" to sustain a tortious interference claim.

We agree with the district court that IQ's claims of tortious interference with respect to IQ's allegations of indirect pressure by the Defendants (the boycott of SourceOne and the SDAs) should be dismissed because IQ failed to plausibly allege the underlying criminal or tortious conduct on which the tortious interference claim must be based.

We disagree with the district court, however, that IQ's claims of direct tortious interference are too scant to survive a motion to dismiss. As discussed above, IQ has plausibly alleged that it suffered an antitrust injury resulting from the Defendants causing a direct boycott of its business. Accordingly, this allegation is sufficient to allow IQ's tortious interference claim to proceed. Therefore, to the extent that the district court's dismissal of IQ's tortious interference claim rested on a [*70] misapprehension [27] of the distinction between IQ's claims of indirect and direct pressure on its business by the Defendants, the judgment of the district court is vacated and remanded to allow the tortious interference claims premised on the direct boycott of IQ to proceed.

2. Civil Conspiracy and Aiding and Abetting

IQ also asserted claims for state civil conspiracy and aiding and abetting.[5] Because IQ's civil conspiracy and aiding and abetting claims were derivative of its tortious interference claim, the district court dismissed these claims as tag-along claims. Consistent with our analysis above, we vacate in part the judgment of the district court as to these claims with respect to IQ's direct boycott allegations.

To recap, we conclude that while IQ has alleged an antitrust injury, it is not an efficient enforcer with respect to its allegations that the Defendants unlawfully caused the boycotts of SourceOne and the SDAs. We therefore affirm the judgment of the district court dismissing those claims. With respect to IQ's allegations that the Defendants directly brought about a boycott of IQ, however, we find that IQ is best positioned to enforce those antitrust violations. Accordingly, we vacate the [28] judgment and remand the case to the district court on IQ's allegations of direct boycott only. IQ's state law antitrust claims and common law tort claims are also vacated and remanded, but only to the extent that they rely on IQ's allegations that it suffered harm as a result of the direct boycott.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED in part and VACATED in part. We REMAND this case to the district court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

End of Document

[5] We express no opinion at this stage as to the district court's finding that the existence of an independent tort of civil conspiracy in New Jersey did not raise a question of conflict of laws. IQ has properly pleaded a tortious interference claim from which its claim for civil conspiracy (under the law of either jurisdiction) can be derived.

MARVIN E. ASPEN, District Judge:

Before us is Plaintiff and Counterclaim Defendant Maui Jim, Inc.'s ("Maui Jim") motions to dismiss Defendants and Counterclaimants SmartBuy Guru Enterprises, Motion Global Ltd., SmartBuyGlasses Societá a Responsabilitá Limitata, and SmartBuyGlasses Optical Limited's (collectively "SBG") amended counterclaims. (Dkt. Nos. 184, 196, 278.)[1] Maui Jim also moves to strike two of SBG's affirmative defenses. (Dkt. No. 278.) For the reasons stated below, we grant Maui Jim's motions to dismiss Counts I, III, IV, V, and VI of SBG's second amended counterclaim, grant in part and deny in part Maui Jim's motion to dismiss Count II, and deny Maui Jim's motion to dismiss Count VII. In addition, we grant Maui Jim's motion to strike SBG's first affirmative defense (inequitable restraint of trade) with prejudice and fourth affirmative defense (unclean hands) without prejudice.

BACKGROUND

Much of this case's background can be found in our memorandum and order on Maui Jim's earlier motion to dismiss SBG's prior counterclaims. (Order (Dkt. No. 89).) We assume familiarity with that opinion and repeat here only as necessary. At the motion to dismiss stage, we accept all well-pleaded factual allegations in the counterclaim as true and draw all inferences in the plaintiff's favor. *Cole v. Milwaukee Area [936] Tech. Coll. Dist., 634 F.3d 901, 903 (7th Cir. 2011). Maui Jim is a designer, manufacturer, and provider of prescription and non-prescription sunglasses. (2d Am. Compl. (Dkt. No. 257) ¶ 16.) SBG is an online retailer of luxury designer eyewear. (2d Am. Countercl. (Dkt. No. 259) ¶ 13.) It sells products from more than 180 designer brands, including Maui Jim, on its websites in twenty countries. (Id. ¶¶ 13, 16.)

Maui Jim alleges SBG entities have never been authorized retailers of Maui Jim sunglasses, yet they sold and offered for sale counterfeit sunglasses under Maui Jim's trademarks. (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 2.) Maui Jim brought suit against SBG, asserting (as amended) claims of trademark counterfeiting and infringement, unfair competition, false advertising, and trademark dilution in violation of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1051, et seq. (Counts I—III);

[1] We previously terminated Maui Jim's first two motions to dismiss as moot. (Dkt. No. 310.) We did so because, after Maui Jim filed these motions, SBG filed a second amended counterclaim. (2d Am. Countercl. (Dkt. No. 259).) It is generally black letter law that an "amended pleading supersedes the original pleading." Wellness Cmty.-Nat'l v. Wellness House, 70 F.3d 46, 49 (7th Cir. 1995) (citing Lubin v. Chi. Title and Trust Co., 260 F.2d 411, 413 (7th Cir. 1958); Nisbet v. Van Tuyl, 224 F.2d 66, 71 (7th Cir. 1955); Fry v. UAL Corp., 895 F. Supp. 1018 (N.D. Ill. 1995)). "Once an amended pleading is interposed, the original pleading no longer performs any function in the case." Id. (quoting 6 C. Wright, A. Miller, & Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1476 at 556-57, 559 (1990)). Although Maui Jim refers to its first two motions to dismiss in its latest motion to dismiss, (Dkt. No. 278 at 1), it does not expressly renew its prior motions on what had become superseded pleadings. The parties now jointly move to reinstate Maui Jim's first two motions, either by vacating our earlier termination of the motions, or by treating those motions and the briefing on them as renewed instanter. (Dkt. No. 311 at 4.) The parties argue that SBG's second amended counterclaim was filed "without change" from its previous version, and that Maui Jim incorporated by reference its arguments to dismiss SBG's other counterclaims in its latest motion on the second amended counterclaim. (Id. at 3-4.) Of course, the amended and second amended counterclaims are not identical. (Compare Am. Countercl. (Dkt. No. 131) ¶ 9, with 2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 8 (stating same information at different paragraph number, with discrepancy continuing throughout the remainder of the documents).) While we do not wish to foster "needlessly duplicative pleadings and make-work for district courts" or for litigants, Scott v. Chuhak & Tecson, P.C., 725 F.3d 772, 782 (7th Cir. 2013), the parties' previous submissions on now-superseded claims have required us to hold the various pleadings up to the light to compare their content and ensure accurate exposition of the operative allegations and arguments. However, the parties' general argument is well taken that the issues remain the same and the briefing adequate to address them. Accordingly, we grant the parties' joint motion to reinstate Maui Jim's prior motions to dismiss instanter [3] , and we consider those motions and arguments in this opinion.

copyright infringement [4] in violation of the Copyright Act of 1976, 17 U.S.C. § 101, et seq. (Count IV); unfair trade practices in violation of the Illinois Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act, 815 ILCS 5/10, et seq. (Count V); and tortious interference with contract (Count VI). (Id. ¶¶ 85-127.)

SBG alleges it procures genuine Maui Jim sunglasses primarily through affiliates and distributors that purchase directly from Maui Jim. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 17.) SBG does not contest that it sells Maui Jim prescription sunglasses without the genuine Maui Jim prescription lenses. (Id. ¶ 21.) Instead, SBG asserts that the Maui Jim frames and non-prescription lenses SBG sells are "100% genuine," and that SBG customers also receive prescription lenses "fabricated through [SBG] by a premium optical laboratory." (Id.)

SBG's amended responsive pleading asserts counterclaims against Maui Jim for trade disparagement (Count I); defamation (Count II); violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq. (Count III); violation of California's Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700, et seq. (Count IV), and California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, et seq. (Count V); violation of Article 101 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (Count VI); and in the alternative, unjust enrichment (Count VII). (Id. ¶¶ 33-94.)

[5] SBG alleges it brings its counterclaims "to compensate it for, and put an end to, Maui Jim's ongoing illegal campaign to stifle competition." (Id. ¶ 1.) According to SBG, Maui Jim "seeks to eradicate lawful competition and monopolize control over its worldwide supply chain, allowing it to illegally prop up prices of its eyewear." (Id. ¶ 2.) SBG further alleges Maui Jim's efforts to stifle competition from discount retailers include Maui Jim's alleged attempt to "exploit recent xenophobia by engaging in a negative public relations campaign that painted SmartBuyGlasses as a dishonest, foreign counterfeiter." (Id. ¶¶ 2, 26.) In furtherance of its efforts, SBG alleges Maui Jim issued a press release dated January 23, 2017, which included the following statement from Maui Jim's Vice President of Global Marketing:

> Companies that utilize these types of disingenuous and misleading sales practices undermine the integrity of the Maui Jim brand and the quality and technology it has come to represent . . . . [Maui Jim] simply cannot allow our brand to be harmed by the sale of counterfeit or non-genuine Maui Jim products that do not live up to our— and most importantly our customers'—expectations.

(Id. ¶ 28.) SBG also alleges that Maui Jim's corporate headquarters and customer service representatives falsely instructed potential customers that SBG sells "fake" or inauthentic products, and that [*937] SBG is "not an authentic website." (Id. ¶ 29.) Maui Jim has allegedly made the same claims of inauthenticity to United States customs officials. (Id. ¶ 30.) Moreover, SBG asserts Maui Jim "used this case to discover and then attempt to eviscerate SmartBuyGlasses' supply chain" by cancelling accounts with certain SBG suppliers after they were confidentially disclosed in discovery. (Id. ¶ 31.) SBG alleges that it has been harmed in the marketplace as a result of Maui Jim's actions. (Id. ¶ 32.)

Separately, SBG alleges that Maui Jim has entered into anticompetitive agreements with its distributors to maintain minimum retail prices and to restrict to whom distributors can sell. (Id. ¶ 52.) Maui Jim has allegedly threatened to terminate and has actually terminated retailers that have sold authentic goods to SBG. (Id. ¶¶ 56, 68.) As a result of these agreements, SBG claims that consumers paid artificially high prices for Maui Jim sunglasses and that SBG's business was injured by Maui Jim's efforts to eliminate SBG's supply of Maui Jim sunglasses. (Id. ¶ 58.)

In addition, SBG alleges that it "sources the vast majority of its Maui Jim [6] product from Member States within the European Union, and the alleged restrictive contracts at issue (particularly with respect to Maui Jim's tortious interference with contract claims) all involve retailers in the European Union." (Id. ¶ 88.) SBG claims that these contracts and Maui Jim's "actions to discover and close the accounts of [SBG's] suppliers within the European Union" caused SBG damage and violate European antitrust law. (Id. ¶¶ 89, 90.)

LEGAL STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) governs a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. We accept "the allegations in the complaint as true unless they are 'threadbare recitals of a cause of action's elements, supported by mere conclusory statements.'" Katz-Crank v. Haskett, 843 F.3d 641, 646 (7th Cir. 2016) (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)). The pleading must state a claim that is plausible on its face to survive a motion to dismiss. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S. Ct. at 1949; Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1974, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); St. John v. Cach, LLC, 822 F.3d 388, 389 (7th Cir. 2016). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. The plausibility standard "is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. at 1949 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 127 S. Ct. at 1964-65). That [7] is, while the plaintiff need not plead "detailed factual allegations," the counterclaim must allege facts sufficient "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 127 S. Ct. at 1964-65.

Maui Jim's motion to strike is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f), which states that "[t]he court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Motions to strike are generally disfavored because they "potentially serve only to delay," and so affirmative defenses "will be stricken only when they are insufficient on the face of the pleadings." Heller Fin., Inc. v. Midwhey Powder Co., Inc., 883 F.2d 1286, 1294 (7th Cir. 1989). To survive a motion to strike, an affirmative defense must satisfy a three-part test: "(1) the matter must be properly [*938] pleaded as an affirmative defense; (2) the matter must be adequately pleaded under the requirements of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8 and 9; and (3) the matter must withstand a Rule 12(b)(6) challenge." Sarkis' Cafe, Inc. v. Sarks in the Park, LLC, 55 F. Supp. 3d 1034, 1039 (N.D. Ill. 2014) (citation omitted). We follow the majority view of district court decisions in this circuit, which apply the pleading standard set forth in Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929, and Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, to affirmative defenses. See Edwards v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 310 F.R.D. 382, 386 (N.D. Ill. 2015) ("aligning with the majority of courts in this district" in applying the Twombly-Iqbal standard); Sarkis' Cafe, 55 F. Supp. 3d at 1040; Shield Techs. Corp. v. Paradigm Positioning, LLC, No. 11 C 6183, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134115, 2012 WL 4120440, at *8 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 19, 2012) ("[W]e believe that the test applicable to affirmative defenses should [8] reflect current pleading standards, and therefore adopt the majority view that Twombly and Iqbal apply to affirmative defenses."); Riemer v. Chase Bank USA, N.A., 274 F.R.D 637, 639-40 (N.D. Ill. 2011) (collecting cases).

Maui Jim moves to dismiss with prejudice four counts in SBG's amended counterclaim. Specifically, Maui Jim argues SBG fails to allege the required elements of a trade disparagement claim (Count I); fails to plead defamation (Count II) with particularity or fails to state a claim because some of the allegedly defamatory statements are substantially true or constitute non-actionable opinion statements; does not allege an antitrust injury or a plausible relevant market in its federal antitrust claim (Count III); and fails to identify which counterclaimant has standing to sue under European antitrust law (Count VI). (Dkt. No. 184 at 1.)

In addition, Maui Jim moves to dismiss SBG's counterclaims under California law (Counts IV and V) for failure to allege the requisite elements or connection to California, and argues they are barred by the statute of limitations. (Dkt. No. 278 ¶ 1.) Maui Jim moves to dismiss SBG's European antitrust claim (Count VI) under forum non conveniens and principles of international comity. (Dkt. No. 196 at [9] 1-2.) Maui Jim moves to dismiss SBG's unjust enrichment counterclaim (Count VII) under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. (Dkt. No. 278 ¶ 2.) Finally, Maui Jim moves to strike SBG's first and fourth affirmative defenses. (Id. ¶¶ 3-4.)

I. TRADE DISPARAGEMENT (COUNT I)

SBG alleges Maui Jim published "false, disparaging, and highly damaging messages about the products and services that SmartBuyGlasses sells, namely that SmartBuyGlasses is selling and servicing counterfeit and non-genuine products." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 34.) Maui Jim argues this counterclaim must be dismissed because SBG fails to allege any connection to Illinois—a required element for bringing a trade disparagement claim in this forum. (Mem. in Support of Mot. to Dismiss ("Mem.") (Dkt. No. 186) at 6-10.) Maui Jim contends SBG fails to allege the circumstances related to the disputed transaction occurring "primarily and substantially in Illinois." (Id. at 6-9.) Nor has SBG alleged any injury in Illinois, according to Maui Jim. (Id. at 9-10.)

SBG argues "there are no territorial limits to common law claims." (SBG's Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. to Dismiss Countercls. I—IV in Defs.' Am. Countercl. ("Resp.") (Dkt. No. 231) at 3.) However, as a federal court exercising [10] supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims, we apply the governing state law—here, Illinois. Illinois [*939] has codified the common law tort of trade disparagement in the Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("UDTPA"), 815 ILCS 510/2(8). Am. Wheel & Eng'g Co. v. Dana Molded Prod., Inc., 132 Ill. App. 3d 205, 211, 476 N.E.2d 1291, 1295, 87 Ill. Dec. 299 (1st Dist. 1985) ("Section 2(8) of the Uniform Act substantially embodies the common law tort of commercial disparagement."). Consequently, both common law trade disparagement and statutory UDTPA claims "are subject to the same analysis: in order to state a claim for trade disparagement and under the UDTPA a plaintiff must allege that defendant published untrue or misleading statements that disparaged the plaintiff's goods or services." Morton Grove Pharms., Inc. v. Nat'l Pediculosis Ass'n, 494 F. Supp. 2d 934, 943 (N.D. Ill. 2007).

Furthermore, as Maui Jim correctly observes, many courts have held that claims that a defendant made false and misleading representations concerning the quality of plaintiff's goods must have a nexus to Illinois. *Underground Sols., Inc. v. Palermo, No. 13 C 8407, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132441, 2014 WL 4703925, at 10 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 22, 2014). Thus, as we previously explained, "the circumstances that relate to the disputed transaction [must] occur primarily and substantially in Illinois." Avery v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 216 Ill. 2d 100, 187, 835 N.E.2d 801, 854, 296 Ill. Dec. 448 (Ill. 2005); *Green Light Nat'l, LLC v. Kent, No. 17 C 6370, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156656, 2018 WL 4384298, at 5 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 14, 2018) ("The [U]DTPA does not expressly confine its application to events or circumstances arising in Illinois. However, a 'long-standing rule of construction in Illinois holds that a statute is without extraterritorial [11] effect unless a clear intent in this respect appears from the express provisions of the statute.'" (quoting Avery, 216 Ill. 2d at 184-85, 835 N.E.2d at 852)); *Underground Sols., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132441, 2014 WL 4703925, at 10 (collecting cases applying the reasoning in Avery to UDTPA claims); LG Elecs. U.S.A., Inc. v. Whirlpool Corp., 809 F. Supp. 2d 857, 859 (N.D. Ill. 2011) (holding the rule stated in Avery applies to the UDTPA). There is "no single formula or bright-line test" for determining whether a transaction occurs within Illinois. Avery, 216 Ill. 2d at 187, 835 N.E.2d at 854; accord Phillips v. Bally Total Fitness Holding Corp., 372 Ill. App. 3d 53, 58, 865 N.E.2d 310, 315, 309 Ill. Dec. 947 (1st Dist. 2007). Several factors, however, are relevant to determining whether a transaction occurred "primarily and substantially" in Illinois: "(1) the plaintiff's residence, (2) where the misrepresentation was made, (3) where the damage to the plaintiff occurred, and (4) whether the plaintiff communicated with the defendant in Illinois." Specht v. Google, Inc., 660 F. Supp. 2d 858, 866 (N.D. Ill. 2009); see also *In re Sears Roebuck & Co. Tools Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., No. 05 C 2623, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28064, 2005 WL 3077606, at 1 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 14, 2005).

SBG makes no attempt to show any connection to Illinois, and for the same reasons we previously dismissed its trade disparagement claim, we do so again for failure to allege a nexus to Illinois. It is undisputed that none of the SmartBuy entities are residents of Illinois, but are rather foreign businesses organized and with principal places of business in the Cayman Islands, Hong Kong, and Italy. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 8-11.) While the second amended counterclaim alleges that both this lawsuit and [12] Maui Jim are located in Illinois, SBG fails to connect any of Maui Jim's alleged action forming the basis of its trade disparagement claim to Illinois. Avery, 216 Ill. 2d at 189, 835 N.E.2d at 855 (holding claims of non-Illinois plaintiffs insufficient where the [*940] only connection to Illinois is the headquarters of the defendant and the fact that a scheme "was disseminated" from Illinois); Van Tassell v. United Mktg. Grp., LLC, 795 F. Supp. 2d 770, 782 (N.D. Ill. 2011) (dismissing claim where "Illinois is implicated only because [one defendant] is headquartered in Illinois," despite the fact it was alleged to have carried out its part of the deceptive conduct there); Phillips, 372 Ill. App. 3d at 58, 865 N.E.2d at 315 ("The fact that a scheme to defraud was disseminated from a company's headquarters in Illinois is insufficient."). Furthermore, a plaintiff's claims are insufficient to state a claim under the UDTPA where, as here, the plaintiff "exclusively offers evidence of . . . nationwide, as opposed to Illinois-specific, conduct." LG Elecs., 809 F. Supp. 2d at 862. Nor does the counterclaim contain allegations permitting a plausible inference that SBG has suffered any damage in Illinois. (See 2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 32, 39 (alleging broadly that SBG has been damaged "in the marketplace" or in "global commerce").)

Accordingly, SBG has not alleged facts that, if true, establish a factual nexus [13] with Illinois as required to entitle it to the relief it seeks in its trade disparagement claim. Count I is therefore dismissed, with prejudice.

II. DEFAMATION (COUNT II)

Maui Jim also moves to dismiss SBG's defamation counterclaim. (Mem. at 10-16.) To state a defamation claim in Illinois, a claimant "must present facts showing that the defendant made a false statement about [it], that the defendant made an unprivileged publication of that statement to a third party, and that this publication caused damages." Ludlow v. Nw. Univ., 79 F. Supp. 3d 824, 836 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (quoting Green v. Rogers, 234 Ill. 2d 478, 491, 917 N.E.2d 450, 459, 334 Ill. Dec. 624 (Ill. 2009)). Certain categories of defamatory statements are considered so damaging on their face that a plaintiff need not plead or prove damages. Bryson v. News Am. Publications, Inc., 174 Ill. 2d 77, 87, 672 N.E.2d 1207, 1214, 220 Ill. Dec. 195 (Ill. 1996). Among those categories of defamation per se are defamatory statements that "impute a person is unable to perform or lacks integrity in performing her or his employment duties" and words that "otherwise prejudice[] that person in her or his profession." Solaia Tech., LLC v. Specialty Publ. Co., 221 Ill. 2d 558, 580, 852 N.E.2d 825, 839, 304 Ill. Dec. 369 (Ill. 2006).

SBG identifies five paragraphs in its counterclaim that constitute its claim for defamation per se because they either impute a want of integrity in SBG's professional duties or prejudice SBG's business. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 26-30, 43.)[2] Maui Jim argues SBG fails to plead some of the [14] allegedly defamatory statements with the required specificity and argues the claim is foreclosed because other alleged statements are substantially true or are not defamatory per se under Illinois' innocent construction rule. (Mem. at 10-16.)

A. Paragraphs 29 and 30: Pleading Defamation Per Se

Maui Jim argues that paragraphs 29 and 30 of SBG's defamation per se counterclaim is not pleaded with [*941] the required particularity. (Mem. at 10.)[3] Maui Jim argues that these paragraphs constitute "disjointed snippets" that are insufficient to meet Illinois' standard for pleading defamation per se. (Mem. at 11 (referring to 2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 29, 30).)

A claim in federal court for defamation per se is held to "the usual rules for notice pleading established by Rule 8." Muzikowski v. Paramount Pictures Corp., 322 F.3d 918, 926 (7th Cir. 2003). "The complaint must 'give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" McGreal v. AT & T Corp., 892 F. Supp. 2d 996, 1016-17 (N.D. Ill. 2012) (quoting Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 512, 122 S. Ct. 992, 995, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002)). The complaint need not report the allegedly defamatory statement verbatim, "but its substance must be pleaded with 'sufficient precision and particularity so as to permit initial judicial review of its defamatory content.'" Ludlow v. Nw. Univ., 79 F. Supp. 3d 824, 836 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (quoting Green, 234 Ill. 2d at 492, 917 N.E.2d at 459). This standard does not amount to a heightened [15] pleading requirement, but instead constitutes the requirements to plead substantive elements for defamation per se under Illinois law. Id.

The relevant paragraphs in SBG's counterclaim sufficiently plead defamation per se under the Rule 8 standard. SBG's counterclaim alleges that, in responding to consumer questions about SBG, "Maui Jim's corporate headquarters and customer service representatives have falsely instructed potential SmartBuyGlasses' customers that SmartBuyGlasses sells counterfeit goods, that the Maui Jim sunglasses SmartBuyGlasses sells are 'fake' or 'not authentic,' and that SmartBuyGlasses 'is not an authentic website.'" (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 29.) SBG also alleges that Maui Jim "contacted SmartBuyGlasses' customers directly and claimed that the sunglasses the customers purchased through SmartBuyGlasses are not genuine." (Id.) SBG claims that Maui Jim's communications with SBG consumers cause SBG to "lose substantial business from potential customers and to refund existing customers who returned Maui Jim sunglasses solely because of Maui Jim's false claims that the product SmartBuyGlasses sold was counterfeit." (Id.) These allegations detail who was speaking (Maui Jim representatives), [16] to whom (potential SBG customers), and what made the statements defamatory (that Maui Jim sunglasses sold by SBG are fakes). Similarly, SBG alleges that "Maui Jim has falsely claimed to customs officials that Maui Jim sunglasses shipped by SmartBuyGlasses to U.S. consumers were 'not genuine,' causing the authentic sunglasses to be seized by U.S. customs." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 30.) Here too, SBG pleads who spoke (Maui Jim), to whom (U.S. customs officials), and what was said (sunglasses were "not genuine") with sufficient precision to allow for initial judicial review. Ludlow, 79 F. Supp. 3d at 836.

[2] The parties' briefs refer to paragraph numberings in SBG's amended counterclaim, which are off by one from the paragraph numberings in the second amended counterclaim. (Compare Am. Countercl. (Dkt. No. 131) ¶ 27, with 2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 26 (identical).) This opinion uses the second amended counterclaim, as the operative pleading, see supra n.1, to reference the relevant paragraphs and the parties' arguments pertaining to them.

[3] The parties' arguments center on four paragraphs in SBG's counterclaims. (See 2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 26, 27, 29, 30.) The parties agree that paragraphs 26 and 27 of SBG's second amended counterclaim are not defamatory statements, and we thus do not consider them in our analysis. (See Mem. at 11; Resp. at 3 (clarifying that these paragraphs are not defamatory statements, but provide context in which defamatory statements are made).)

Maui Jim relies primarily on McGreal v. AT & T Corp. to argue that SBG's claims are mere "snippets" of quotes that amount to "words or phrases without any context." (Mem. at 11-12 (quoting McGreal, 892 F. Supp. 2d at 1017).) The comparison is inapposite. In McGreal, the plaintiff generally [*942] alleged the defendant made public statements against her veracity and integrity by stating she made misrepresentations, concealed lies, schemed, had been untruthful, made false statements, engaged in a conspiracy, was disingenuous, and made "dishonest attempt." 892 F. Supp. 2d at 1016. The plaintiff did not otherwise clarify who made these statements or how they were published. Id. at 1017. She also [17] failed to tie the statements to her integrity in performing her employment duties beyond abstractly reciting that "veracity and integrity are two required traits" for her profession. Id. By contrast, SBG alleges who made the defamatory statements, how they were published, and the substance of those statements with enough specificity to provide notice of its claim. See Ludlow, 79 F. Supp. 3d at 836-37. Furthermore, SBG's allegations tie the defamatory statements into categories of defamation per se, namely words that impute lack of integrity in employment duties or that prejudice a person in his or her profession. Green, 234 Ill. 2d at 492, 917 N.E.2d at 459.

Accordingly, SBG's allegations in paragraphs 29 and 30 of its second amended counterclaim are sufficiently pleaded. See *Gehrls v. Gooch, No. 09 C 6338, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44734, 2010 WL 1849400, at 3 (N.D. Ill. May 7, 2010) ("[A]t the motion to dismiss stage, plaintiff is entitled to all reasonable inferences and the exact details and substance of the statements made will be discerned through discovery.") Maui Jim's motion to dismiss SBG's defamation claim is denied as to these paragraphs.

B. Paragraph 28: Innocent Construction

Paragraph 28 of SBG's counterclaim alleges that Maui Jim's Vice President of Global Marketing made defamatory statements in a press release issued by Maui Jim. (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 28.) [18] [4] The press release, which publicized Maui Jim's present suit against SBG, contains five paragraphs. (Press Release (Dkt. No. 131-1).) The first four paragraphs discuss Maui Jim's allegations against SBG. (Id.) The fifth paragraph contains the allegedly defamatory quotes, as follows:

> "Companies that utilize these types of disingenuous and misleading sales practices undermine the integrity of the Maui Jim brand and the quality and technology it has come to represent," said Jay Black, Maui Jim Vice President, Global Marketing. "This lawsuit was filed to protect our brand and the inherent value of its earned

[4] Paragraph 28 indicates that the press release is "[a]ttached hereto as Exhibit A." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 28.) While the full press release was attached as an exhibit to SBG's first amended counterclaim, (see Dkt. No. 131-1), it is not attached to SBG's second amended counterclaim. Nonetheless, "pleadings may incorporate earlier pleadings by reference, Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c)," Macklin v. Butler, 553 F.2d 525, 528 (7th Cir. 1977). Accordingly, we consider the full press release attached to SBG's prior pleading as incorporated by reference in SBG's second amended counterclaim.

> reputation, as well as our customers and our authorized retailers. We simply cannot allow our brand to be harmed by the sale of counterfeit or non-genuine Maui Jim products that do not live up to our—and most importantly, our customers'—expectations."

(Id.)

Maui Jim argues that these statements fall under Illinois' innocent construction rule and thus are not actionable as defamation per se. (Mem. at 14.) In Illinois, a statement that is allegedly defamatory "will not be actionable per se if it is reasonably capable of an innocent construction." Tuite v. Corbitt, 224 Ill. 2d 490, 502, 866 N.E.2d 114, 121, [*943] 310 Ill. Dec. 303 (Ill. 2006); see also Bryson, 174 Ill. 2d at 90, 672 N.E.2d at 1215 ("Only reasonable innocent [19] constructions will remove an allegedly defamatory statement from the per se category."). "Whether a statement is reasonably susceptible to an innocent interpretation is a question of law for the court to decide." Bryson, 174 Ill. 2d at 90, 672 N.E.2d at 1215. In so deciding, "courts must interpret the words 'as they appeared to have been used and according to the idea they were intended to convey to the reasonable reader.'" Tuite, 224 Ill. 2d at 512, 866 N.E.2d at 127 (quoting Bryson, 174 Ill. 2d at 93, 672 N.E.2d at 1217).

The parties agree that the first four paragraphs of the press release are not defamatory because they refer to Maui Jim's allegations against SBG. (Mem. at 14; Resp. at 9 (distinguishing fifth paragraph from remainder of press release).) However, SBG argues that "the fifth paragraph—which includes the defamatory statements—does not signal to the reader that Maui Jim is referring to allegations in its complaint." (Resp. at 9.)

On this score, SBG is incorrect: SBG's second amended counterclaim excises a sentence in the middle of the supposedly offending paragraph that refers to the lawsuit. (Compare Press Release at 1 (including sentence that states "This lawsuit was filed to protect our brand and the inherent value of its earned reputation, as well as our customers and our authorized retailers." (emphasis added), [20] with 2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 28 (replacing this sentence with ellipses).) What is more, the fifth paragraph is devoid of any reference to SBG. The only way the fifth paragraph refers to SBG is if it is read in the context of the entire press release, the remainder of which deals entirely with Maui Jim's lawsuit against SBG. (Id.) When the press release is "read as a whole and the words given their natural and obvious meaning," the statements in the fifth paragraph refer to Maui Jim's lawsuit and its allegations against SBG, instead of a defamatory attack that can be separated from the bulk of the press release. Tuite, 224 Ill. 2d at 502, 866 N.E.2d at 121.

Accordingly, Maui Jim's motion to dismiss SBG's defamation per se counterclaim is granted as to the allegations in paragraph 28 of SBG's second amended counterclaim, with prejudice.

III. ANTITRUST COUNTERCLAIM (COUNT III)

In Count III, SBG alleges Maui Jim has violated Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 47-60.) SBG asserts Maui Jim enters into contracts with authorized distributors, setting minimum retail prices and restricting resale "for the express purpose of eliminating or suppressing price competition among retailers of Maui Jim sunglasses." (Id. ¶¶ 52, 55.) [21] SBG further alleges Maui Jim has threatened to terminate retailers that "failed to adhere to this anticompetitive policy, including retailers that sold authentic products to SmartBuyGlasses." (Id. ¶ 56.) As a result, SBG alleges Maui Jim's anticompetitive conduct caused consumers to pay artificially high prices for Maui Jim sunglasses and be deprived of free and open competition in the market and caused injury to SBG's business through the restriction and elimination of its supply of Maui Jim sunglasses. (Id. ¶ 58.)

"The purpose of the Sherman Act is to protect consumers from injury that results from diminished competition." Agnew v. NCAA, 683 F.3d 328, 334-35 (7th Cir. 2012). "To state a Section 1 claim, a plaintiff must [*944] plead facts plausibly suggesting: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy (meaning, an agreement); (2) a resulting unreasonable restraint of trade in a relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury." In re Dealer Mgmt. Sys. Antitrust Litig., 313 F. Supp. 3d 931, 949 (N.D. Ill. 2018). Maui Jim does not take issue with the first element, but argues that SBG's counterclaim fails the second and third elements as it does not allege a "relevant market" and fails to assert a cognizable injury. (Mem. at 17-21.)

A. Antitrust Injury

Maui Jim argues SBG's Section 1 claim must be dismissed because SBG has not alleged an antitrust [22] injury necessary to bring the claim as a beneficiary of the alleged antitrust violation. (Mem. at 17-19.) To maintain a claim under the Sherman Act, "Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

"A competitor may not 'recover damages for any conspiracy . . . to charge higher than competitive prices," because although "[s]uch conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act," it cannot injure a claimant competitor because competitors "'stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price.'" O.K. Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. Martin Marietta Techs., Inc., 36 F.3d 565, 573 (7th Cir. 1994) (quoting Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 582, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1354, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)); see also JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., 190 F.3d 775, 778 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that there was no injury and stating, "You want your competitors to charge high prices."). SBG squarely characterizes itself as a "direct competitor of Maui Jim." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 54.) SBG's allegations claim that Maui Jim eliminated other competitors that did not adhere to Maui Jim's alleged artificially high price restraints. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 55-56, 58.) SBG's antitrust claim therefore does not allege antitrust injury because, as a "direct competitor of Maui Jim," Maui Jim's alleged contracts resulted in "artificially [23] high prices for Maui Jim sunglasses." (Id. ¶¶ 54, 58.) See In re Dealer Mgmt. Sys. Antitrust Litig., 313 F. Supp. 3d at 954 (finding no antitrust injury where "the alleged market allocation [plaintiff] complains of would have helped [it] by eliminating its alleged competitors and, after they raised prices, allowing it to undercut them"). On this ground alone, SBG's Sherman Act claim should be dismissed.

SBG nevertheless alleges it was harmed "because Maui Jim has unlawfully restricted and seeks to eliminate [SBG's] supply of Maui Jim sunglasses." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 58.) SBG's brief characterizes this injury as impacting SBG's business model and forcing SBG out of the market because SBG "can no longer source [Maui Jim sunglasses] from certain distributors or buy in bulk at a certain price." (Resp. at 14.) SBG's elucidation of this injury conflicts with SBG's clear framing of itself as Maui Jim's direct competitor. (See 2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 54.) O.K. Sand & Gravel, Inc., 36 F.3d 565, 572-73 ("Clearly, price increases could not be considered an antitrust injury to competitors.") Moreover, SBG cites no authority tying its claimed harm to a recognized antitrust injury. (See Resp. at 14-15.) United States v. Cisneros, 846 F.3d 972, 978 (7th Cir. 2017) ("'[P]erfunctory and undeveloped arguments, and arguments that are unsupported by pertinent authority, [24] are waived.'" (quoting United States v. Berkowitz, 927 F.2d 1376, 1384 [*945] (7th Cir. 1991)); see also Dunkin' Donuts Inc. v. N.A.S.T., Inc., 428 F. Supp. 2d 761, 775 (N.D. Ill. 2005) ("It is not this Court's job to make parties' arguments for them, and it will not do so in this case.").

B. Single-Brand Market

In addition, Maui Jim argues that SBG's antitrust claim cannot survive because SBG improperly alleges a single-brand market. (Mem. at 19-21.) SBG identifies the alleged relevant antitrust market as the "Maui Jim sunglasses market, specifically Maui Jim sunglasses that are marketed and sold throughout the United States either online or through retail stores." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 50.) To establish a Section 1 claim, a plaintiff has the burden of identifying the existence of a relevant product market. Agnew, 683 F.3d at 337. A relevant product market is defined by "the reasonable interchangeability of the products and the cross-elasticity of demand for those products." Nucap Indus., Inc. v. Robert Bosch LLC, 273 F. Supp. 3d 986, 1011 (N.D. Ill. 2017) (quoting Ploss v. Kraft Foods Grp., Inc., 197 F. Supp. 3d 1037, 1070 (N.D. Ill. 2016)); see also In re Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc. Cheese Antitrust Litig., 767 F. Supp. 2d 880, 901 (N.D. Ill. 2011) ("In other words, the products in a market must have unique attributes that allow them to be substituted for one another, but make them difficult to replace with substitute products from outside the market.").

"When a complaint limits the relevant market to a 'single brand, franchise, institution, or comparable entity that competes with potential substitutes,' a court should [25] dismiss the complaint unless the complaint contains sufficient factual allegations that make it plausible there is no substitute." *Int'l Equip. Trading, Ltd. v. AB SCIEX LLC, No. 13 C 1129, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123109, 2013 WL 4599903, at 4 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 29, 2013) (quoting Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 200 (2d Cir. 2001)). The requirement that a relevant product market for antitrust purposes comprises more than a single brand "stems from the principle that antitrust law serves to protect competition, not competitors." *House of Brides, Inc. v. Alfred Angelo, Inc., No. 11 C 07834, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1850, 2014 WL 64657, at 6 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 8, 2014) (citing 42nd Parallel N. v. E St. Denim Co., 286 F.3d 401, 405 (7th Cir. 2002) ("Antitrust laws protect competition and not competitors.")). In limited circumstances, a relevant single-brand market has been found where consumers were "locked in" to purchasing a future product or service or where the product is so unique that there is no substitute. Right Field Rooftops, LLC v. Chi. Cubs Baseball Club, LLC, 136 F. Supp. 3d 911, 917 (N.D. Ill. 2015), aff'd, 870 F.3d 682 (7th Cir. 2017) (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461-79, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2079-89, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)); In re Dealer Mgmt. Sys. Antitrust Litig., 313 F. Supp. 3d 931, 961 (N.D. Ill. 2018) ("In rare circumstances, a single brand of a product or service can constitute a relevant market for antitrust purposes." (quoting PSKS, Inc. v. Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc., 615 F.3d 412, 418 (5th Cir. 2010)).

Although a single-brand market may exist, SBG has not pleaded facts demonstrating that Maui Jim's sunglasses are unique and cannot be substituted with other manufacturers' sunglasses. SBG's minimal allegations say nothing regarding cross-elasticities of supply or demand. *Int'l Equip. Trading, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123109, 2013 WL 4599903, at 4; see also *House of Brides, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1850, 2014 WL64657, at * 6* (finding allegations that the brand had "an inelasticity of demand, and little cross-elasticity of demand" between the product and competing [26] products, along with allegations that customers do not consider [*946] other brands suitable substitutes even in the face of a "significant, non-transitory increase in the price," fell short of "rendering it plausible that there exist no interchangeable substitutes"). Consumer preferences do not create a single-brand market. *House of Brides, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1850, 2014 WL 64657, at 6 (citing *Spahr v. Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90079, 2008 WL 3914461 at 9-10 (E.D. Tenn. 2008) ("While Brighton-brands may enjoy some market loyalty, it cannot reasonably be argued that other handbags, wallets, shoes, jewelry and the like do not serve the same purpose and have the same use as Brighton-brand products."); Global Discount Travel Servs., LLC v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 960 F. Supp. 701, 705 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("The plaintiff's argument is analogous to a contention that a consumer is 'locked into' Pepsi because she prefers the taste, or NBC because she prefers 'Friends,' 'Seinfeld,' and 'E.R.' A consumer might choose to purchase a certain product because the manufacturer has spent time and energy differentiating his or her creation from the panoply of products in the market, but at base, Pepsi is one of many sodas, and NBC is just another television network.")). SBG's counterclaim includes no allegation creating a plausible inference that this is the rare case in which a single-brand market is actionable. See, e.g., Nucap Indus., Inc. v. Robert Bosch LLC, 273 F. Supp. 3d 986, 1012 (N.D. Ill. 2017) (dismissing antitrust claim [27] for lack of plausible relevant market, explaining "the counterclaims leave the matter to speculation, which they cannot do"). The asserted single-brand market in Maui Jim sunglasses is all the more implausible in light of SBG's allegation that it sells "products from more than 180 of the world's best-selling designer brands at attractive prices." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 13.) SBG's counterclaim thus "contradicts its narrow market definition" by revealing that upward of 179 other sunglasses brands are competitive alternatives to Maui Jim sunglasses. *Int'l Equip. Trading, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123109, 2013 WL 4599903, at 4. SBG's failure to plead a plausible relevant market renders dismissal appropriate.

SBG argues that we cannot determine there are no interchangeable substitutes for Maui Jim sunglasses without the aid of discovery. (Resp. at 13-14.) In support, SBG points to Maui Jim's allegation in its amended complaint that its sunglasses incorporate "patented, color-infused lens technology" and this proprietary technology "distinguishes [Maui Jim] Sunglasses from its competitors." (Id.; see also Am. Compl. ¶ 20.) SBG's only other allegation that Maui Jim sunglasses constitute a market unto themselves states, "Maui Jim's products are differentiated by virtue [28] of their labeling and design." (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 49.) "Although market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, failure to offer a plausible relevant market is a proper ground for dismissing an antitrust claim." Right Field Rooftops, LLC v. Chi. Baseball Holdings, LLC, 87 F. Supp. 3d 874, 886 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (quotations omitted) (citing Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 199-200 (2d Cir. 2001); Nat'l Hockey League Players' Ass'n v. Plymouth Whalers Hockey Club, 325 F.3d 712, 719-20 (6th Cir. 2003); Tanaka v. Univ. of S. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001); *Int'l Equip. Trading, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123109, 2013 WL 4599903, at 3). "That market definition is often, or even usually, a fact-intensive exercise, however, says nothing about whether the plaintiffs' allegations of a single brand market in this case warrant further discovery." *House of Brides, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 167887, 2014 WL 6845862, at 4. Even though Maui Jim has alleged some basis for the uniqueness of its sunglasses and the proprietary technology used therein, our conclusion remains the [*947] same that the counterclaims do not permit an inference the sunglasses are not interchangeable or that consumers are at all "locked in" to purchasing sunglasses only from Maui Jim.

As SBG's antitrust allegations fail on two essential elements of a Sherman Act claim and further amendment would be futile, we grant Maui Jim's motion to dismiss Count III of SBG's second amended counterclaim with prejudice.

IV. CALIFORNIA COUNTERCLAIMS (COUNTS IV & V)

SBG's second amended counterclaim asserts two violations of California law against Maui Jim. Count IV of SBG's counterclaim alleges [29] that Maui Jim violated California's antitrust law, the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 61-76.) Count V alleges that Maui Jim violated California's unfair competition law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 77-85.) Maui Jim moves to dismiss these counterclaims under Rule 12(b)(6). (Dkt. No. 278 at 1.)

A. Cartwright Act Counterclaim

Count IV of SBG's counterclaims alleges Maui Jim violated California's Cartwright Act. (2d. Am. Countercl. ¶ 71.) Maui Jim argues that SBG has no standing to bring the claim because it has not adequately alleged injury under the Cartwright Act. (Dkt. No. 280 ("MJ Cal. Mem.") at 8-10.) As with the Sherman Act claim, Maui Jim argues that SBG benefits, as a competitor, from allegedly higher prices of Maui Jim's product. (Id. at 9-10.) SBG counters that standing under the Cartwright Act is broader than under the federal Sherman Act. (Dkt. No. 289 ("SBG Cal. Resp.") at 5.)

SBG is correct that federal and California antitrust standing are not coterminous. "Interpretations of federal antitrust law are at most instructive, not conclusive, when construing the Cartwright Act, given that the Cartwright Act was modeled not on federal antitrust statutes but instead on statutes enacted by California's [30] sister states around the turn of the 20th century." Aryeh v. Canon Bus. Solutions, Inc., 55 Cal. 4th 1185, 1195, 151 Cal. Rptr. 3d 827, 292 P.3d 871, 877 (Cal. 2013). The Cartwright Act is broader in that it allows one whose business or property is injured by prohibited conduct to sue "regardless of whether such injured person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750(a); see also Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court, 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1233-34, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 (Cal. Ct. App. 1993) (analyzing Cartwright Act antitrust standing under § 16750(a).) Nonetheless, to establish standing under the Cartwright Act, SBG must still show actionable injury, which has four requirements: "(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 987 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1055 (9th Cir. 1999)).

SBG does not allege that it was overcharged by retailers of Maui Jim sunglasses because of Maui Jim's alleged price fixing, which is a typical form of injury. See, e.g., Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc., 49 Cal. 4th 758, 784, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666, 233 P.3d 1066 (Cal. 2010) (characterizing a purchaser as injured by an initial overcharge, even if that purchaser passed on the overcharge to a downstream consumer); Cellular Plus, Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1234-35 (finding consumers "injured directly by the alleged retail price fixing [*948] and indirectly by the alleged wholesale price fixing"). Nor does SBG allege that it ever tried to purchase Maui Jim sunglasses from its California distributors. [31] Instead, SBG's claimed injury is more tenuous. It first alleges that Maui Jim required its distributors to agree to its General U.S. Policies, which contained within them a policy that Maui Jim retailers may not sell below the manufacturer's suggested retail price. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 65-67.) Then, SBG alleges that Maui Jim threatened to terminate, and did terminate, retailers who failed to adhere to the Policies, including retailers that sold to SBG. (Id. ¶ 68.) As a result, SBG claims it lost revenue from its inability to sell Maui Jim sunglasses. (Id. ¶ 73.)

SBG's claimed injury is insufficient for at least two reasons. First, as discussed above, SBG has alleged that it is Maui Jim's direct competitor (id. ¶ 54), and thus it would stand to gain by an agreement to raise Maui Jim prices. Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc., 190 F.3d at 1056 ("There can be no antitrust injury if the plaintiff stands to gain from the alleged unlawful conduct. Competitors who challenge a rival's price-fixing are often unable to show injury." (citation omitted)). Even that aside, SBG does not claim that Maui Jim terminated retailers because of violations of its alleged price-fixing policy. (See MJ Cal. Reply at 2.) SBG in fact alleges that Maui Jim terminated [32] retailers who sell to SBG for another reason: because of this litigation. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 31 (alleging that Maui Jim closed accounts of SBG suppliers disclosed in this litigation).) Injury under the Cartwright Act must "flow[] from that which makes the conduct unlawful," Knevelbaard, 232 F.3d at 987; see also Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc., 190 F.3d at 1056 (describing this requirement); Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co., 137 Cal. App. 3d 709, 723, 187 Cal. Rptr. 797, 807 (Cal. Ct. App. 1982) (under the Cartwright Act, "[a]n 'antitrust injury' must be proved; that is, the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and which flows from the invidious conduct which renders defendants' acts unlawful."). SBG fails to draw a plausible connection between Maui Jim's alleged price fixing and its reason for terminating retailers that sold product to SBG. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S. Ct. at 1966 (requiring antitrust allegations to cross the plausibility threshold).

Accordingly, we dismiss Count IV of SBG's second amended counterclaim. SBG seeks leave to amend to include additional facts produced in discovery. (SBG Cal. Resp. at 5.) SBG added its California counterclaims without leave of this Court after it had already amended its counterclaims against Maui Jim once. (Dkt. No. 131.) See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) (a party may amend a pleading once as a matter of course, and further "only with the opposing party's [33] written consent or the court's leave"). We see no reason to allow this claim to go to discovery only so that SBG may conduct a "fishing expedition" that may result in a viable antitrust claim. In re Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc. Cheese Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 758, 766 (7th Cir. 2015); see also Thompson v. Ill. Dep't of Prof'l Regulation, 300 F.3d 750, 759 (7th Cir. 2002) ("It is well within the province of the district court to deny leave to amend if, among other things, there is undue delay or undue prejudice would result to the opposing party if the amendment were allowed."). We therefore dismiss Count IV with prejudice.

B. Unfair Competition Law Claim

Count V of SBG's second amended counterclaim asserts violations of California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), Cal. Bus. & Prof.Code § 17200 et seq. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 77-85.) The UCL proscribes both "unlawful" and "unfair" [*949] business practices, and a claimant "can only assert an 'unlawful' practice insofar as it can assert violations of other laws." Orchard Supply Hardware LLC v. Home Depot USA, Inc., 939 F. Supp. 2d 1002, 1011 (N.D. Cal. 2013). The factual allegations of Count V are the same as those of Count IV. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 78 ("The conduct of Maui Jim and the retailers set forth above in [SBG's] Cartwright Act claim (Count III [sic]) constitutes unlawful practices" under the UCL); id. ¶ 80 (same facts supporting "unfair" conduct under the UCL).)

The parties essentially agree that SBG's UCL claim must rise or fall with [34] SBG's Cartwright Act claim. (Compare MJ Cal. Mem. at 14 (arguing failure to establish Cartwright Act claim requires dismissal of UCL claim), with SBG Cal. Resp. at 7 ("Because [SBG] sufficiently alleges a Cartwright Act claim, its UCL claim is proper.") As we have dismissed SBG's Cartwright Act claim, we also dismiss Count V. *See Cascades Computer Innovation LLC v. RPX Corp., No. 12 C 1143 YGR, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10526, 2013 WL 316023, at 15 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 24, 2013) ("[B]ecause [Plaintiff's] UCL claim is not materially different than its federal and state antitrust claims, its UCL claim necessarily fails as well."); Ingels v. Westwood One Broad. Servs., Inc., 129 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1060, 28 Cal.

Rptr. 3d 933 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) ("'If the [underlying] claim is dismissed, then there is no 'unlawful' act upon which to base . . . the derivative Unfair Competition claim.'") (second alteration in original)). For the reasons stated above, we do so with prejudice.

V. EUROPEAN ANTITRUST COUNTERCLAIM (COUNT VI)

Count VI of SBG's counterclaim ("EU Antitrust Claim") alleges that Maui Jim's contracts with "authorized" distributors and its actions to uncover and close accounts of suppliers of Maui Jim sunglasses to SBG violate Article 101(1)(a)-(c) of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union ("TFEU"). (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 87-89.) Maui Jim mounts three attacks on this claim. First, [35] in its Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, Maui Jim argues that SBG fails to plead with specificity which defendant brings the EU Antitrust Claim. (Mem. at 21-22.) Second and third, Maui Jim asserts in a separate motion that the EU Antitrust Claim should be dismissed based on the principle of forum non conveniens, or, in the alternative, international comity. (Dkt. No. 196.) Although principles of international comity are central to this claim, they are best considered within the doctrine of forum non conveniens, which here counsels dismissal. As we grant Maui Jim's motion to dismiss on forum non conveniens grounds, we do not consider its other 12(b)(6) arguments.

A. Forum Non Conveniens Standard

The doctrine of forum non conveniens allows a federal court to dismiss a claim when a foreign jurisdiction would provide a more convenient forum to adjudicate the matter, and dismissal would serve the ends of justice. Sinochem Int'l Co. v. Malaysia Int'l Shipping Corp., 549 U.S. 422, 425, 127 S. Ct. 1184, 1188, 167 L. Ed. 2d 15 (2007); Koster v. (Am.) Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 330 U.S. 518, 527, 67 S. Ct. 828, 833, 91 L. Ed. 1067 (1947). "Stated more simply, a district court may dismiss a case on forum non conveniens grounds when it determines that there are 'strong reasons for believing it should be litigated in the courts of another, normally a foreign, jurisdiction.'" Deb v. SIRVA, Inc., 832 F.3d 800, 805 (7th Cir. 2016) (quoting Fischer v. Magyar Allamvasutak Zrt., 777 F.3d 847, 866 (7th Cir. 2015)). District courts approach the [36] doctrine with caution as it is "an exceptional one that a [*950] court must use sparingly." Id. As such, "[t]he exceptional nature of a dismissal for forum non conveniens means that a defendant invoking it ordinarily bears a heavy burden in opposing the plaintiff's chosen forum." Id. at 806 (citing Sinochem, 549 U.S. at 430, 127 S. Ct. at 1191).

To determine whether dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds is appropriate, a district court must decide whether there is an available and adequate alternative forum to hear the case and evaluate relevant private and public interest factors identified by the Supreme Court. Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 241, 102 S. Ct. 252, 258, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 (1981); Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. 501, 508-09, 67 S. Ct. 839, 843, 91 L. Ed. 1055 (1947); Deb, 832 F.3d at 807 (7th Cir. 2016); Fischer, 777 F.3d at 867. The private interest factors to consider are:

> [1] the relative ease of access to sources of proof; [2] availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling, and [3] the cost of obtaining attendance of willing, witnesses; [4] possibility of view of premises, if view would be appropriate to the action; and [5] all other practical problems that make trial of a case easy, expeditious and inexpensive.

Clerides v. Boeing Co., 534 F.3d 623, 628 (7th Cir. 2008) (quoting Gilbert, 330 U.S. at 508, 67 S. Ct. at 843). The public interest factors to consider are:

> [1] the administrative difficulties stemming from court congestion; [2] the local interest in having localized disputes decided at home; [3] the interest in having the [37] trial of a diversity case in a forum that is at home with the law that must govern the action; [4] the avoidance of unnecessary problems in conflicts of laws or in the application of foreign law; and [5] the unfairness of burdening citizens in an unrelated forum with jury duty.

Id. (citing Gilbert, 330 U.S. at 508-09, 67 S. Ct. at 843). "The forum non conveniens determination is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. . . . [W]here the court has considered all relevant public and private interest factors, and where its balancing of these factors is reasonable, its decision deserves substantial deference." Piper Aircraft Co., 454 U.S. at 257, 102 S. Ct. at 266.

B. Available and Adequate Alternative Forum

As an initial matter, the parties do not dispute that a European Union member state would provide an available and adequate forum to adjudicate SBG's EU Antitrust Claim. (See Dkt. No. 233 ("SBG EU Resp.") at 4 ("SBG does not dispute that there are several available and adequate forums in EU member states that would possess jurisdiction over the TFEU claim.").) Thus, the first step in the forum non conveniens analysis is satisfied, leaving only the requisite balancing of private and public interest factors. Sinochem Int'l Co., 549 U.S. at 429, 127 S. Ct. at 1190; Fischer, 777 F.3d at 867-68.

C. Balancing of Factors

Turning to the balancing of factors, [38] we first observe that, generally, "a plaintiff's choice of forum should be disturbed only if the balance of public and private interest factors strongly favors the defendant." Clerides, 534 F.3d at 628. Typically, the presumption in favor of the plaintiff's choice of forum "applies with less force when the plaintiff or real parties of interest are foreign." Piper Aircraft Co., 454 U.S. at 255, 102 S. Ct. at 266. In this case, Maui Jim's challenge to a sole SBG counterclaim for inconvenient forum is striking given that it was Maui Jim, not SBG, who chose to litigate in this forum. However, the practice is not unprecedented in this district. See, e.g., [*951] *Nalco Co. v. Chen, No. 12 C 9931, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119559, 2013 WL 4501425, at 7 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 22, 2013) (considering and denying plaintiff's motion to dismiss counterclaims on forum non conveniens grounds). Moreover, our analysis of the relevant private interest factors—and in particular the public interest factors—leads us to conclude that dismissal of SBG's EU Antitrust Claim on forum non conveniens is appropriate here.

1. Private Interest Factors

Maui Jim argues that access to sources of proof and the availability of compulsory process in Europe both weigh in favor of dismissal. (Dkt. No. 199 ("MJ EU Mem.") at 8-9.)[5] See Clerides, 534 F.3d at 628. As Maui Jim points out, (MJ EU Mem. at 8-9), SBG's allegations reveal that the EU Antitrust [39] Claim and underlying evidence are centered almost exclusively in Europe. SBG alleges that it "sources the vast majority of its Maui Jim product from Member States within the European Union, and the alleged restrictive contracts at issue . . . all involve retailers in the European Union." (2d Am Countercl. ¶ 88.) It also alleges that "Maui Jim's anticompetitive actions caused the restriction of trade between retailers in the European Union and [SBG]." (Id.)

SBG faults Maui Jim for failing to identify specific witnesses or documents that would be difficult to obtain outside of Europe. (SBG EU Resp. at 5-6.) SBG also argues that the availability of compulsory process in Europe is at best a neutral factor because the subject matter of Maui Jim's affirmative Lanham Act and tortious interference claims cover the same subject matter as SBG's EU Antitrust Claim and would produce overlapping evidence. (Id. at 6-8.) SBG contends further that documents concerning European supply chains and contractual arrangements "are not only accessible but have also been accessed and are being produced." (Id. at 8.)

[5] Maui Jim has filed two versions of its memorandum of law in support of its motion to dismiss SBG's EU Antitrust Claim, one public, the other under seal. (See Dkt. No. 199 (public); Dkt. No. 200 (under seal); see also Dkt. No. 323 (granting filing under seal).) The two versions are identical aside from select redactions in the text of the memorandum and three sealed exhibits. This opinion refers only to the public version unless otherwise specified.

In reply, Maui Jim vigorously disputes that any such production of evidence from SBG has occurred. (Dkt. [40] No. 238 ("MJ EU Reply") at 10; see also Dkt. No. 234 (Order staying antitrust discovery).) Maui Jim also argues that while its tortious interference claim is limited to the United States and Italy, SBG's EU Antitrust Claim has a much wider potential scope covering several European countries or the whole of Europe, while not including the United States. (Id. at 3.) Maui Jim's Lanham Act claims, moreover, do not appear to require application of European law, and SBG does not explain how this subject matter would overlap with its EU Antitrust Claim. (Id. at 6.)

We agree with Maui Jim that, while its affirmative tortious interference claim may require evidence centered in Italy and the United States, the potential reach of SBG's EU Antitrust Claim weighs in favor of dismissal because most of the evidence regarding this claim is likely to be in Europe. SBG's point is well taken that compulsory process in Europe may be a wash, depending on the course of litigation of Maui Jim's claims regarding agreements in European countries. On balance, though, the private interest factors weigh slightly toward dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds.

[*952] 2. Public Interest Factors

Maui Jim and SBG also dispute relevant the [41] public interest factors. Maui Jim contends that congestion in this district warrants dismissal, that Europe's local interest is better vindicated by hearing SBG's EU Antitrust Claim in a European Union member state, and that applying the governing European Union law and burdening a domestic jury with European Union law favors dismissal. (MJ EU Mem. at 10-11.) Maui Jim also advances an extended argument in the alternative that principles of international comity require dismissal. (Id. at 11-15.) SBG counters that Maui Jim does not analyze court congestion appropriately because it provides no information as to how fast a disposition might be reached in a European court. (SBG EU Resp. at 9.) SBG also argues that a domestic jury will be empaneled in any event should this case reach trial, and having that jury decide the additional matter of its EU Antitrust Claim would constitute a de minimis burden. (Id. at 11.) Moreover, SBG contends that its defenses to Maui Jim's counterclaims may require the Court to interpret European law, and that courts routinely apply matters of foreign law when called upon to do so. (Id. at 11-12.)

While we consider all of the above public interest concerns, we find that "the local interest in [42] having localized disputes decided at home," "the interest in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is at home with the law that must govern the action," and "the avoidance of unnecessary problems in . . . the application of foreign law" weigh most heavily in favor of dismissal. Clerides, 534 F.3d at 628.

Maui Jim's persuasive comity arguments implicate each of these public interest factors. (See MJ EU Mem. at 11-15; MJ EU Reply at 11-13.) "Comity refers to the spirit of cooperation in which a domestic tribunal approaches the resolution of cases touching the laws and interests of other sovereign states." Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. U.S. Dist. Court for S. Dist. of Iowa, 482 U.S. 522, 544 n.27, 107 S. Ct. 2542, 2556 n.27, 96 L. Ed. 2d 461 (1987). As usually stated, comity > is neither a matter of absolute obligation, on the one hand, nor of mere courtesy and good will, upon the other. But it is the recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive or judicial acts of another nation, having due regard both to international duty and convenience, and to the rights of its own citizens, or of other persons who are under the protection of its laws.

Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S. 113, 163-64, 16 S. Ct. 139, 143, 40 L. Ed. 95 (1895). Although some circuits consider international comity a form of abstention doctrine when adjudication would implicate sensitive matters of foreign law, e.g., Royal & Sun All. Ins. Co. of Canada v. Century Int'l Arms, Inc., 466 F.3d 88, 92 (2d Cir. 2006), [43] direct authority to decline to exercise jurisdiction on comity grounds has not been so clearly spelled out in this circuit. See, e.g., Fischer, 777 F.3d at 854 (describing comity as incorporating a foreign exhaustion principle). However, the public interest factors of forum non conveniens overlap with many articulated comity concerns. William S. Dodge, International Comity in American Law, 115 Colum. L. Rev. 2071, 2109-10 (2015) ("Because the doctrine of forum non conveniens allows U.S. courts to restrain their exercise of jurisdiction in deference to foreign courts, it is properly considered a doctrine of international comity."). As the Seventh Circuit has opined, "asking a U.S. court to wade into an area of EU law that is fraught with uncertainty risks offending principles of international comity," [*953] and these "concerns can be more generally addressed under the auspices of the doctrine of forum non conveniens." Volodarskiy v. Delta Airlines, Inc., 784 F.3d 349, 356 (7th Cir. 2015).

To our knowledge, no United States court has entertained a claim under the TFEU's antitrust provisions or its equivalent predecessors. See *In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., No. MD 06-1775JGVVP, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, 2008 WL 5958061, at 31-34 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2008), report and recommendation adopted in part, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97365, 2009 WL 3443405 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 21, 2009), aff'd, 697 F.3d 154 (2d Cir. 2012) (reasoning that EU antitrust claims under TFEU predecessor be dismissed [44] on forum non conveniens and international comity grounds, and observing that all other known U.S. courts to consider such claims have refused to exercise jurisdiction over them); In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., 683 F. Supp. 2d 1214, 1223 (D. Kan. 2010) (declining supplemental jurisdiction over EU antitrust claim and reporting the parties were "unable to identify any reported case in which a court in the United States exercised jurisdiction over antitrust claims asserted under European law"); 7 Callmann on Unfair Comp., Tr. & Mono. § 28:5 (4th Ed. Dec. 2018 Update) ("Several private antitrust claims based on EC [European Community] law have been filed in American courts, but those courts in their discretion have declined to exercise jurisdiction.").

Being the first U.S. court to adjudicate a TFEU antitrust claim would "undoubtedly raise unsettled issues of EU antitrust law, because the private enforcement of EU antitrust law is underdeveloped." *In re Air Cargo, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, 2008 WL 5958061, at 33. Concurring with this view, Maui Jim submits by uncontested declaration an opinion on European Union law under Rule 44.1.[6] (Op. of Aidan Robertson, Queens Counsel (Dkt. No. 199-2).) The opinion states that the "interpretation of EU . . . competition law remains in a state of development," particularly because "development of online [45] retailing and online marketplaces has posed questions as to the compatibility of restrictions on online activity imposed by suppliers on distributors and retailers." (Id. ¶ 27.)

Complicating matters is the dual-tiered system of adjudicating European antitrust claims, where unsettled questions of law are determined first in a member state's court, and then, sometimes mandatorily, by recourse to the European Court of Justice ("ECJ"), the highest European Union court. (Id. ¶ 28.) See generally *In re Air Cargo, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, 2008 WL 5958061, at 32 (describing European antitrust litigation framework). As the well-reasoned report and recommendation in In re Air Cargo Shipping Services Antitrust Litigation similarly found, "This court would be forced to fly blind on these unsettled issues, because it does not have a mechanism by which to obtain an opinion from the ECJ on an unresolved issue of EU antitrust law." *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, [WL] at 33. That court also concluded that "adjudication, by this court, or any other United States Courts, of the EU claims asserted by plaintiffs could not operate within the framework described above, would disturb the uniformity of EC competition law, and would undermine the European interest in developing its own European antitrust law." [46] Id.

Applying the foregoing analysis to the relevant forum non conveniens public interest factors, dismissing SBG's EU Antitrust Claim would most saliently avoid [*954] "unnecessary problems in . . . the application of foreign law." Clerides, 534 F.3d at 628. And while there is a marginal interest in a court in this forum determining whether Maui Jim, an Illinois corporation, engaged in anticompetitive practices, the local interest in alleged European Union antitrust violations sits more comfortably in the European Union than here. See id. (enumerating public interest factor of "the local interest in having localized disputes decided at home"). Likewise, "the interest in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is at home with the law that must govern the action" also points toward adjudication in a European Union member state. Id.; see Volodarskiy, 784 F.3d at 353 ("One good reason to dismiss a case based on forum non conveniens is to avoid the administrative or legal complications of interpreting and applying a foreign country's law. Relatedly, the doctrine permits dismissal in deference to a foreign sovereign's superior competence and public interest in adjudicating its own law." (citations omitted)).

Accordingly, because an available [47] and adequate alternative forum for SBG's EU Antitrust Claim exists in European Union member states, and as the balance of private and public interest factors weighs in favor of dismissal, we grant Maui Jim's motion to dismiss this counterclaim on forum non conveniens grounds.

VI. UNJUST ENRICHMENT (COUNT VII)

Count VII of SBG's second amended counterclaim alleges unjust enrichment. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 91-94.) The claim is identical to that included in the first version of SBG's counterclaims (see Dkt. No. 20 ¶¶ 78-81), which we held survived a motion to dismiss in our memorandum opinion and order on an earlier Maui Jim 12(b)(6) motion. (Order at 14-16).

Maui Jim now moves to dismiss SBG's unjust enrichment claim under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. (Dkt. No. 278 ¶ 2; see MJ Cal. Mem. at 21-22.) The Noerr- Pennington doctrine grants immunity from antitrust liability to those who petition the government through courts to enforce trademark laws against their competitors. See E. R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965); BE&K Const. Co. v. N.L.R.B., 536 U.S. 516, 525, 122 S. Ct. 2390, 2396, 153 L. Ed. 2d 499 (2002) ("These antitrust immunity principles were then extended to situations where groups 'use . . . courts to advocate their causes and points of view respecting resolution of their business and economic interests [48] vis-á-vis their competitors.'" (quoting Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 511, 92 S. Ct. 609, 612, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972)). SBG's counterclaim alleges in part that Maui Jim "knowingly and intentionally used the trademark and copyright laws for the improper use of stifling competition in the relevant market and therein enriched itself" to SBG's detriment. (2d Am. Countercl. ¶ 92.) Maui Jim argues that this allegation "seeks to penalize Maui Jim under an antitrust theory for filing this lawsuit" in contravention of Noerr-Pennington. (MJ Cal. Mem. at 21.)

SBG counters that its unjust enrichment counterclaim encompasses conduct well beyond Maui Jim's present suit, including that Maui Jim defamed SBG and thereby caused SBG to suffer harm in the marketplace. (SBG Cal. Resp. at 13; 2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 41.) Indeed, similar allegations in SBG's original counterclaims led us to conclude that its claim for unjust [*955] enrichment could survive the earlier motion to dismiss. As we stated then:

> Taking SmartBuyGlasses' allegations as true, it has set forth a plausible claim that Maui Jim publicized false allegations and commentary regarding SmartBuyGlasses' products in a press release, thereby wrongfully disparaging SmartBuyGlasses' business and falsely asserting it sells counterfeit [49] products. (Counterclaim ¶¶ 2, 29, 34-35.) SmartBuyGlasses alleges it has suffered harm in the marketplace as a result. (Id. ¶ 35.) The counterclaim therefore connects Maui Jim's unjust benefit (increased prices of its products due to its allegedly anti-competitive and fraudulent conduct) to a detriment to SmartBuyGlasses (disparagement of its products as counterfeit). Cleary [v. Philip Morris Inc.], 656 F.3d [511,] 518-20 [(7th Cir. 2011)]. As a result, SmartBuyGlasses' allegations in Count VIII [for unjust enrichment] are sufficient to survive dismissal at this stage.

(Order at 16.) Although, in the present opinion, we grant in part Maui Jim's motion to dismiss SBG's defamation claim based on the press release referenced in the above passage, we also deny in part that motion based on other alleged defamation that goes beyond this suit, see supra Part II(A). "[I]f an unjust enrichment claim rests on the same improper conduct alleged in another claim, then the unjust enrichment claim will be tied to this related claim—and, of course, unjust enrichment will stand or fall with the related claim." Cleary, 656 F.3d at 517. SBG's unjust enrichment claim encompasses all of its allegations, including those that make up its defamation claim and which survive this opinion. ([50] See 2d Am. Countercl. ¶¶ 29-30, 91.) The Noerr-Pennington doctrine thus does not bar this claim, because it covers allegations going beyond the current suit. We therefore deny Maui Jim's motion to dismiss Count VII.

VII. MOTION TO STRIKE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

In addition to its motions to dismiss, Maui Jim also moves under Rule 12(f) to strike two affirmative defenses that SBG pleaded in its answer. (Dkt. No. 278 ¶¶ 3-4.) We consider each argument in turn.

A. First Affirmative Defense

Maui Jim moves to strike SBG's first affirmative defense, "inequitable restraint of trade." (Id. ¶ 3; Answer (Dkt. No. 259) at 31.) This affirmative defense reads:

> Maui Jim's use of its trademarks in violation of the antitrust laws precludes enforcement of the trademarks at issue on both equitable grounds and under § 33(b)(7) of Lanham Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1115(b)(7). Plaintiffs are attempting to misuse their trademarks to acquire a monopoly in violation of U.S. antitrust laws.

(Answer at 31.) Maui Jim argues first that this defense should be stricken because it depends on SBG's deficient Sherman Act claim. (MJ Cal. Mem. at 15.) Maui Jim also argues that under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, SBG is foreclosed from arguing that Maui Jim is using its suit [51] against SBG to violate antitrust laws. (Id. at 16-18.)

SBG agrees that its Sherman Act claim is "coterminous" with its first affirmative defense, and the allegation that Maui Jim is "attempting to misuse their trademarks to acquire a monopoly in violation of U.S. antitrust laws" refers to SBG's Sherman Act claim, not to Maui Jim's lawsuit. (SBG Cal. Resp. at 9; Answer at 31.) As SBG's Sherman Act claim is dismissed, see supra Part III, its "coterminous" defense also fails.

[*956] However, SBG argues that Section 33(b)(7) of the Lanham Act can operate as an independent affirmative defense. (SBG Cal. Resp. at 10-11.) Section 33(b)(7) allows a defense if a "mark has been or is being used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States." 15 U.S.C. § 1115(b)(7). Assuming only for purposes of this opinion that Section 33(b)(7) provides an affirmative defense, SBG has no surviving claim that Maui Jim's use of trademark violates the antitrust laws. SBG's affirmative defense alleges no ground for antitrust violation that we have not already addressed. And SBG implicitly admits that its defense could not be based on Maui Jim's lawsuit. (SBG Cal. Resp. at 9 (arguing Noerr-Pennington not implicated because the defense "relates to [SBG's] Sherman Act claim rather than the mere fact [52] that Maui Jim filed the instant lawsuit" (citation omitted).) BE&K Const. Co., 536 U.S. at 525, 122 S. Ct. at 2396; California Motor Transport Co., 404 U.S. at 511, 92 S. Ct. at 612.

SBG's cited authority is not to the contrary. SBG relies on *Dell, Inc. v. 3K Computers, LLC, No. 08-80455-CIV, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108398, 2008 WL 6600766, at 1 (S.D. Fla. Oct. 7, 2008), for the proposition that Section 33(b)(7) is an affirmative defense. (See SBG Cal. Resp. at 10.) But that case found an affirmative defense under Section 33(b)(7) could not stand because the defendant's only Sherman Act claim derived from the plaintiff's lawsuit, and the Noerr-Pennington doctrine barred the defense. *Dell, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108398, 2008 WL 6600766, at 3 (because defendant's only ground for liability under the Sherman Act against plaintiff failed, "there is no longer a legal basis for [defendant's*] § 1115(b)(7)* affirmative defense"). Similarly, the other case SBG cites, Phi Delta Theta Fraternity v. J.A. Buchroeder & Co., 251 F. Supp. 968, 975 (W.D. Mo. 1966), found that Section 33(b)(7) was an affirmative defense when a violation of antitrust laws had also been established. (SBG Cal. Resp. at 11.) Such is not the case here.

For these reasons, we strike SBG's first affirmative defense for failure to "withstand a 12(b)(6) challenge," with prejudice. Sarkis' Cafe, Inc., 55 F. Supp. 3d at 1039; see also *Thermos Co. v. Igloo Prods. Corp., No. 93 C 5826, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18382, 1995 WL 745832, at 8 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 13, 1995) (adopting Report and Recommendation that affirmative defense based on violation of antitrust laws be stricken because it relied on antitrust counterclaims that failed to state a claim).

B. Fourth Affirmative Defense

Maui Jim also moves to strike [53] SBG's fourth affirmative defense. (Dkt. No. 278 ¶ 4.)[7] This defense reads:

> Maui Jim broadly asserts Lanham Act claims that unfairly and improperly intend to restrain legitimate competition in genuine Maui Jim products sold outside distribution channels that Maui Jim desires and the prosecution of these claims is undertaken with unclean hands, rendering Maui Jim's asserted rights unenforceable.

(Answer at 32.) Maui Jim argues that SBG's unclean hands defense cannot stand because it relies solely on the fact of Maui Jim's suit against SBG. (MJ Cal. Mem. at 20-21.)

"The unclean hands doctrine provides that a party to a lawsuit may not obtain the relief it seeks if it has engaged in wrongful conduct." Smith v. United States, 293 F.3d 984, 988 (7th Cir. 2002). "The bad conduct constituting unclean [*957] hands must involve fraud, unconscionability or bad faith toward the party proceeded against, and must pertain to the subject matter involved and affect the equitable relations between the litigants." Int'l Union, Allied Indus. Workers of Am., v. Local Union No. 589, Allied Indus. Workers of Am., 693 F.2d 666, 672 (7th Cir. 1982) (internal quotations and citations omitted). Although unclean hands is not listed in the Lanham Act, "courts have recognized it as an affirmative defense to claims of trademark infringement." *Sarkis' Cafe, Inc. v. Sarks in the Park, LLC, No. 12 C 9686, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22566, 2016 WL 723135, at 2 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 24, 2016); see also *R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Premium Tobacco Stores, Inc., No. 99 C 1174, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8896, 2001 WL 747422, at 2 (N.D. Ill. June 29, 2001) ("In appropriate cases, 'unclean hands can constitute [54] a bar to some or all of the relief sought for trademark infringement or unfair competition.'" (quoting J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks & Unfair Competition § 31.47 (5th ed. 2001) ("McCarthy on Trademarks"))).

"The allegedly unfair or improper filing of a trademark infringement lawsuit cannot itself constitute a basis for an unclean hands defense to that lawsuit." 6 McCarthy on Trademarks § 31:51 (5th ed. March 2019 Update). This is because "[t]he act of bringing the lawsuit is not the subject matter concerning which plaintiff seeks relief. Unclean hands must relate to the getting or using the alleged trademark rights." Id.; see also Coach, Inc. v. Kmart Corps., 756 F. Supp. 2d 421, 429 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) ("Filing a trademark or trade dress infringement lawsuit, therefore, cannot be a basis for an unclean hands defense to that lawsuit because any bad faith or inequitable conduct in filing the lawsuit is unrelated to the plaintiff's acquisition or use of the trademark or trade dress rights."); Ty, Inc. v. Publ'n Int'l, Ltd., No. 99 C 5565, 2004 WL 1588256, at *1-2 (N.D. Ill. July 16, 2004) (citing McCarthy on Trademarks § 31:51 and finding that a trademark misuse defense based on the plaintiff's filing the present lawsuit could not stand).

SBG contends that its defense is not limited to Maui Jim's filing of the instant suit, but instead refers to Maui Jim's "use" [55] of its trademarks and its "intent" in filing the current suit. (SBG Cal. Resp. at 12.) We do not agree. SBG's defense states that "Maui Jim broadly asserts Lanham Act claims that unfairly and improperly intend to restrain legitimate competition," and that Maui Jim's "prosecution of these claims is undertaken with unclean hands." (Answer at 32.) The defense squarely alleges that Maui Jim has unclean hands because of its law suit, and as such, it fails as a matter of law. Coach, Inc., 756 F. Supp. 2d at 429. We therefore grant Maui Jim's motion to strike this affirmative defense. However, because it may be possible for SBG to adequately plead an unclean hands defense that relates to Maui Jim's use of trademark beyond this suit, we do so without prejudice.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we grant Maui Jim's motion to dismiss Counts I, III, IV, V, and VI of SBG's second amended counterclaim. (Dkt. No. 184, 196, 278.) We grant in part and deny in part Maui Jim's motion to dismiss SBG's Count II. (Dkt. No. 184.) We deny Maui Jim's motion to dismiss Count VII. (Dkt. No. 278.) Finally, we grant Maui Jim's motion to strike SBG's first affirmative defense with prejudice, and fourth affirmative defense (unclean hands) without [56] prejudice. (Id.) It is so ordered.

[7] Two of SBG's affirmative defenses are labeled "Fourth Defense," one for exhaustion and the other for unclean hands. (Answer at 31-32.) Maui Jim's motion to strike is directed at SBG's unclean hands defense. (MJ Cal. Mem. at 20.)

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue the defendant and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a). The broad text of § 4—any person who has been injured by an antitrust violator may sue—readily covers consumers who purchase goods or services at higher-than-competitive prices from an allegedly monopolistic retailer.

Applying § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, the U.S. Supreme Court has consistently stated that the immediate buyers from the alleged antitrust violators may maintain a suit against the antitrust violators. At the same time, incorporating principles of proximate cause into § 4, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that indirect purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the violator in a distribution chain may not sue. The U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Illinois Brick established a bright-line rule that authorizes suits by direct purchasers but bars suits by indirect purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN4[] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The bright-line rule of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Illinois Brick means that indirect purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the antitrust violator in a distribution chain may not sue. By contrast, direct purchasers—that is, those who are the immediate buyers from the alleged antitrust violators—may sue. For example, if manufacturer A sells to retailer B, and retailer B sells to consumer C, then C may not sue A. But B may sue A if A is an antitrust violator. And C may sue B if B is an antitrust violator. That is the straightforward rule of Illinois Brick.

HN5[] Clayton Act, Claims

The U.S. Supreme Court's precedent in Illinois Brick established a bright-line rule where direct purchasers may sue antitrust violators from whom they purchased a good or service. Illinois Brick was not based on an economic theory about who set the price. Rather, Illinois Brick sought to ensure an effective and efficient litigation scheme in antitrust cases. To do so, the Court drew a bright line that allowed direct purchasers to sue but barred indirect purchasers from suing. When there is no intermediary between the purchaser and the antitrust violator, the purchaser may sue. The Illinois Brick bright-line rule is grounded on the belief that simplified administration improves antitrust enforcement. To the extent that Illinois Brick leaves any ambiguity about whether a direct purchaser may sue an antitrust violator, the court should resolve that ambiguity in the direction of the statutory text. And under the text, direct purchasers from monopolistic retailers are proper plaintiffs to sue those retailers.

Decision

[802] Where only place at which owners of particular brand of cell phone lawfully could buy apps for their phones was at brand manufacturer's retail app store, owners were direct apps purchasers who were allowed to sue manufacturer for alleged monopolization.

Summary

Overview: HOLDINGS: [1]-The cellphone owners were proper plaintiffs for an antitrust suit, which alleged that the corporation exercised monopoly power in the retail market for the sale of applications (hereinafter, apps) and had unlawfully used its monopoly power to force cellphone owners to pay the corporation higher-than-competitive prices for the apps, because, under Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois (1977) 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 1977 U.S. LEXIS 105, the owners were direct purchasers who might have sued the corporation for alleged monopolization since the owners bought the apps directly from the corporation.

Outcome: Judgment affirmed. 5-4 Decision; 1 Dissent.

Syllabus

[*1517] Apple Inc. sells iPhone applications, or apps, directly to iPhone owners through its App Store--the only place where iPhone owners may lawfully buy apps. Most of those apps are created by independent developers under contracts with Apple. Apple charges the developers a $99 annual membership fee, allows them to set the retail price of the apps, and [805] charges a 30% commission on every app sale. Respondents, four iPhone owners, sued Apple, alleging that the company has unlawfully monopolized the aftermarket for iPhone apps. Apple moved to dismiss, arguing that the iPhone owners could not sue because they were not direct purchasers from Apple under Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U. S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. The District Court agreed, but the Ninth Circuit reversed, concluding that the iPhone owners were direct purchasers because they purchased apps directly from Apple.

Held: Under Illinois Brick, the iPhone owners were direct purchasers who may sue Apple for alleged monopolization. Pp. ___ - ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 808-814.

(a) This straightforward conclusion follows from the text of the antitrust laws and from this Court's precedent. Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that "any person who shall [2] be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue." 15 U. S. C. §15(a). That broad text readily covers consumers who purchase goods or services at higher-than-competitive prices from an allegedly monopolistic retailer. Applying §4, this Court has consistently stated that "the immediate buyers from the alleged antitrust violators" may maintain a suit against the antitrust violators, Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., 497 U. S. 199, 207, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, but has ruled that indirect purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the violator in a distribution chain may not sue. Unlike the consumer in Illinois Brick, the iPhone owners here are not consumers at the bottom of a vertical distribution chain who are attempting to sue manufacturers at the top of the chain. The absence of an intermediary in the distribution chain between Apple and the consumer is dispositive. Pp. ___ - ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 808-809.

(b) Apple argues that Illinois Brick allows consumers to sue only the party who sets the retail price, whether or not the party sells the good or service directly to the complaining party. But that theory suffers from three main problems. First, it contradicts statutory text and precedent by requiring the Court to rewrite the rationale of Illinois [3] Brick and to gut its longstanding bright-line rule. Any ambiguity in Illinois Brick should be resolved in the direction of the statutory text, which states that "any person" injured by an antitrust violation may sue to recover damages. Second, Apple's theory is not persuasive economically or legally. It would draw an arbitrary and unprincipled line among retailers based on their financial arrangements with their manufacturers or suppliers. And it would permit a consumer to sue a monopolistic retailer when the retailer set the retail price by marking up the price it had paid the manufacturer or supplier for the good or service but not when the manufacturer or supplier set the retail price and the retailer took a commission on each sale. Third, Apple's theory would provide a roadmap for monopolistic retailers to structure transactions with manufacturers or suppliers so as to evade antitrust [*1518] claims by consumers and thereby thwart effective antitrust enforcement. Pp. ___ - ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 809-812.

(c) Contrary to Apple's argument, the three Illinois Brick rationales for adopting the direct-purchaser rule cut [806] strongly in respondents' favor. First, Apple posits that allowing only the upstream app developers--and not [4] the downstream consumers--to sue Apple would mean more effective antitrust enforcement. But that makes little sense, and it would directly contradict the longstanding goal of effective private enforcement and consumer protection in antitrust cases. Second, Apple warns that calculating the damages in successful consumer antitrust suits against monopolistic retailers might be complicated. But Illinois Brick is not a get-out-of-court-free card for monopolistic retailers to play any time that a damages calculation might be complicated. Third, Apple claims that allowing consumers to sue will result in "conflicting claims to a common fund--the amount of the alleged overcharge." Illinois Brick, 431 U. S., at 737, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. But this is not a case where multiple parties at different levels of a distribution chain are trying to recover the same passed-through overcharge initially levied by the manufacturer at the top of the chain, cf. id., at 726-727, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. Pp. ___ - ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 812-814.

Justice Kavanaugh delivered the opinion of the Court.

In 2007, Apple started selling iPhones. The next year, Apple launched the retail App Store, an electronic store where iPhone owners can purchase iPhone applications from Apple. Those "apps" enable iPhone owners to send messages, take photos, watch videos, buy clothes, order food, arrange transportation, purchase concert tickets, donate to charities, and the list goes on. "There's an app for that" has become part of the 21st-century American lexicon.

In this case, however, several consumers contend that Apple charges too much for apps. The consumers argue, in particular, that Apple has monopolized the retail market for the sale of apps and has unlawfully used its monopolistic power to charge consumers higher-than-competitive prices.

[*1519] A claim that a monopolistic retailer (here, Apple) has used its monopoly to overcharge consumers is a classic antitrust claim. But Apple asserts that the consumer-plaintiffs in this case may not sue Apple because they supposedly were not "direct purchasers" from Apple under our decision in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U. S. 720, 745-746, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). We disagree. The plaintiffs purchased apps directly from Apple and therefore are direct purchasers under [6] Illinois Brick. At this early pleadings stage of the litigation, we do not assess the merits of the plaintiffs' antitrust claims against Apple, nor do we consider any other defenses Apple might have. We merely hold that the Illinois Brick direct-purchaser rule does not bar these plaintiffs from suing Apple under the antitrust laws. We affirm the [807] judgment of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

I

In 2007, Apple began selling iPhones. In July 2008, Apple started the App Store. The App Store now contains about 2 million apps that iPhone owners can download. By contract and through technological limitations, the App Store is the only place where iPhone owners may lawfully buy apps.

For the most part, Apple does not itself create apps. Rather, independent app developers create apps. Those independent app developers then contract with Apple to make the apps available to iPhone owners in the App Store.

Through the App Store, Apple sells the apps directly to iPhone owners. To sell an app in the App Store, app developers must pay Apple a $99 annual membership fee. Apple requires that the retail sales price end in $0.99, but otherwise allows the app developers to set the retail price. [7] Apple keeps 30 percent of the sales price, no matter what the sales price might be. In other words, Apple pockets a 30 percent commission on every app sale.

In 2011, four iPhone owners sued Apple. They allege that Apple has unlawfully monopolized "the iPhone apps aftermarket." App. to Pet. for Cert. 53a. The plaintiffs allege that, via the App Store, Apple locks iPhone owners "into buying apps only from Apple and paying Apple's 30% fee, even if" the iPhone owners wish "to buy apps elsewhere or pay less." Id., at 45a. According to the complaint, that 30 percent commission is "pure profit" for Apple and, in a competitive environment with other retailers, "Apple would be under considerable pressure to substantially lower its 30% profit margin." Id., at 54a-55a. The plaintiffs allege that in a competitive market, they would be able to "choose between Apple's high-priced App Store and less costly alternatives." Id., at 55a. And they allege that they have "paid more for their iPhone apps than they would have paid in a competitive market." Id., at 53a.

Apple moved to dismiss the complaint, arguing that the iPhone owners were not direct purchasers from Apple and therefore may not sue. In Illinois Brick, this Court held that direct [8] purchasers may sue antitrust violators, but also ruled that indirect purchasers may not sue. The District Court agreed with Apple and dismissed the complaint. According to the District Court, the iPhone owners were not direct purchasers from Apple because the app developers, not Apple, set the consumers' purchase price.

The Ninth Circuit reversed. The Ninth Circuit concluded that the iPhone owners were direct purchasers under Illinois Brick because the iPhone owners purchased apps directly from Apple. According to the Ninth Circuit, Illinois Brick means that a consumer may not sue an alleged monopolist who is two or more [*1520] steps removed from the consumer in a vertical distribution chain. See In re Apple iPhone Antitrust Litig., 846 F. 3d 313, 323 (2017). Here, however, the consumers purchased directly from Apple, the alleged monopolist. Therefore, the Ninth Circuit held that the iPhone owners could sue Apple for allegedly monopolizing the sale of iPhone apps and charging higher-than-competitive [808] prices. Id., at 324. We granted certiorari. 585 U. S. ___, 138 S. Ct. 2647, 201 L. Ed. 2d 1049 (2018).

The plaintiffs' allegations boil down to one straightforward claim: that Apple exercises monopoly power in the retail market for the sale of apps and has unlawfully used its monopoly power to force iPhone [9] owners to pay Apple higher-than-competitive prices for apps. According to the plaintiffs, when iPhone owners want to purchase an app, they have only two options: (1) buy the app from Apple's App Store at a higher-than-competitive price or (2) do not buy the app at all. Any iPhone owners who are dissatisfied with the selection of apps available in the App Store or with the price of the apps available in the App Store are out of luck, or so the plaintiffs allege.

The sole question presented at this early stage of the case is whether these consumers are proper plaintiffs for this kind of antitrust suit—in particular, our precedents ask, whether the consumers were "direct purchasers" from Apple. Illinois Brick, 431 U. S., at 745-746, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. It is undisputed that the iPhone owners bought the apps directly from Apple. Therefore, under Illinois Brick, the iPhone owners were direct purchasers who may sue Apple for alleged monopolization.

That straightforward conclusion follows from the text of the antitrust laws and from our precedents.

First is text: HN1[] LEdHN[1][] [1] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade [10] or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. §2. HN2[] LEdHN[2][] [2] Section 4 of the Clayton Act in turn provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue . . . the defendant . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. §15(a) (emphasis added). The broad text of §4—"any person" who has been "injured" by an antitrust violator may sue—readily covers consumers who purchase goods or services at higher-than-competitive prices from an allegedly monopolistic retailer.

Second is precedent: HN3[] LEdHN[3][] [3] Applying §4, we have consistently stated that "the immediate buyers from the alleged antitrust violators" may maintain a suit against the antitrust violators. Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., 497 U. S. 199, 207, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990); see also Illinois Brick, 431 U. S., at 745-746, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. At the same time, incorporating principles of proximate cause into §4, we have ruled that indirect purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the violator in a distribution chain may not sue. Our decision in Illinois Brick established a bright-line rule that authorizes suits by direct [809] purchasers but bars suits by indirect purchasers. Id., at 746, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. [1]

[*1521] The facts of Illinois [11] Brick illustrate the rule. Illinois Brick Company manufactured and distributed concrete blocks. Illinois Brick sold the blocks primarily to masonry contractors, and those contractors in turn sold masonry structures to general contractors. Those general contractors in turn sold their services for larger construction projects to the State of Illinois, the ultimate consumer of the blocks.

The consumer State of Illinois sued the manufacturer Illinois Brick. The State alleged that Illinois Brick had engaged in a conspiracy to fix the price of concrete blocks. According to the complaint, the State paid more for the concrete blocks than it would have paid absent the price-fixing conspiracy. The monopoly overcharge allegedly flowed all the way down the distribution chain to the ultimate consumer, who was the State of Illinois.

This Court ruled that the State could not bring an antitrust action against Illinois Brick, the alleged violator, because the State had not purchased concrete blocks directly from Illinois Brick. The proper plaintiff to bring that claim against Illinois Brick, the Court stated, would be an entity that had purchased directly from Illinois Brick. Ibid.

HN4[] LEdHN[4][] [4] The bright-line rule [12] of Illinois Brick, as articulated in that case and as we reiterated in UtiliCorp, means that indirect purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the antitrust violator in a distribution chain may not sue. By contrast, direct purchasers—that is, those who are "the immediate buyers from the alleged antitrust violators"—may sue. UtiliCorp, 497 U. S., at 207, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169.

For example, if manufacturer A sells to retailer B, and retailer B sells to consumer C, then C may not sue A. But B may sue A if A is an antitrust violator. And C may sue B if B is an antitrust violator. That is the straightforward rule of Illinois Brick. See Loeb Industries, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., 306 F. 3d 469, 481-482 (CA7 2002) (Wood, J.). [2]

In this case, unlike in Illinois Brick, the iPhone owners are not consumers at the bottom of a vertical distribution chain who are attempting to sue manufacturers at the top of the chain. There is no intermediary in the distribution chain between Apple and the consumer. The iPhone owners purchase apps directly from the retailer Apple, who is the alleged antitrust violator. The iPhone owners pay the alleged overcharge directly to Apple. The absence of an intermediary is dispositive. Under Illinois Brick, the iPhone owners are direct purchasers from Apple [13] and are proper plaintiffs to maintain this antitrust suit.

B

All of that seems simple enough. [810] But Apple argues strenuously against that seemingly simple conclusion, and we address its arguments carefully. For this kind of retailer case, Apple's theory is that Illinois Brick allows consumers to sue only the party who sets the retail price, whether or not that party sells the good or service directly to the complaining party. Apple says that its theory accords with the economics of the transaction. Here, Apple argues that the app developers, not Apple, set the retail price charged to consumers, [*1522] which according to Apple means that the consumers may not sue Apple.

[1] Illinois Brick held that the direct-purchaser requirement applies to claims for damages. Illinois Brick did not address injunctive relief, and we likewise do not address injunctive relief in this case.

[2] Thirty States and the District of Columbia filed an amicus brief supporting the plaintiffs, and they argue that C should be able to sue A in that hypothetical. They ask us to overrule Illinois Brick to allow such suits. In light of our ruling in favor of the plaintiffs in this case, we have no occasion to consider that argument for overruling Illinois Brick.

We see three main problems with Apple's "who sets the price" theory.

First, Apple's theory contradicts statutory text and precedent. As we explained above, the text of §4 broadly affords injured parties a right to sue under the antitrust laws. And HN5[] LEdHN[5][] [5] our precedent in Illinois Brick established a bright-line rule where direct purchasers such as the consumers here may sue antitrust violators from whom they purchased a good or service. Illinois Brick, as we read the opinion, was not based on an economic theory about who set the price. Rather, [14] Illinois Brick sought to ensure an effective and efficient litigation scheme in antitrust cases. To do so, the Court drew a bright line that allowed direct purchasers to sue but barred indirect purchasers from suing. When there is no intermediary between the purchaser and the antitrust violator, the purchaser may sue. The Illinois Brick bright-line rule is grounded on the "belief that simplified administration improves antitrust enforcement." 2A P. Areeda, H. Hovenkamp, R. Blair, & C. Durrance, Antitrust Law ¶346e, p. 194 (4th ed. 2014) (Areeda & Hovenkamp). Apple's theory would require us to rewrite the rationale of Illinois Brick and to gut the longstanding bright-line rule.

To the extent that Illinois Brick leaves any ambiguity about whether a direct purchaser may sue an antitrust violator, we should resolve that ambiguity in the direction of the statutory text. And under the text, direct purchasers from monopolistic retailers are proper plaintiffs to sue those retailers.

Second, in addition to deviating from statutory text and precedent, Apple's proposed rule is not persuasive economically or legally. Apple's effort to transform Illinois Brick from a direct-purchaser rule to a "who [15] sets the price" rule would draw an arbitrary and unprincipled line among retailers based on retailers' financial arrangements with their manufacturers or suppliers.

In the retail context, the price charged by a retailer to a consumer is often a result (at least in part) of the price charged by the manufacturer or supplier to the retailer, or of negotiations between the manufacturer or supplier and the retailer. Those agreements between manufacturer or supplier and retailer may take myriad forms, including for example a markup pricing model or a commission pricing model. In a traditional markup pricing model, a hypothetical monopolistic retailer might pay $6 to the manufacturer and then sell the product for $10, keeping $4 for itself. In a commission pricing model, the retailer might pay nothing to the manufacturer; agree with the manufacturer that the retailer will sell the product for $10 and keep 40 percent of the sales price; and then sell the product for $10, send $6 back to the manufacturer, [811] and keep $4. In those two different pricing scenarios, everything turns out to be economically the same for the manufacturer, retailer, and consumer.

Yet Apple's proposed rule would allow a [16] consumer to sue the monopolistic retailer in the former situation but not the latter. In other words, under Apple's rule a consumer could sue a monopolistic retailer when the retailer set the retail price by marking up the price it had paid the manufacturer or supplier for the good or service. But a consumer could not sue a monopolistic retailer when the manufacturer or supplier set the retail price and the retailer took a commission on each sale.

Apple's line-drawing does not make a lot of sense, other than as a way to gerrymander Apple out of this and similar [*1523] lawsuits. In particular, we fail to see why the form of the upstream arrangement between the manufacturer or supplier and the retailer should determine whether a monopolistic retailer can be sued by a downstream consumer who has purchased a good or service directly from the retailer and has paid a higher-than-competitive price because of the retailer's unlawful monopolistic conduct. As the Court of Appeals aptly stated, "the distinction between a markup and a commission is immaterial." 846 F. 3d, at 324. A leading antitrust treatise likewise states: "Denying standing because 'title' never passes to a broker is an overly lawyered approach that [17] ignores the reality that a distribution system that relies on brokerage is economically indistinguishable from one that relies on purchaser-resellers." 2A Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶345, at 183. If a retailer has engaged in unlawful monopolistic conduct that has caused consumers to pay higher-than-competitive prices, it does not matter how the retailer structured its relationship with an upstream manufacturer or supplier—whether, for example, the retailer employed a markup or kept a commission.

To be sure, if the monopolistic retailer's conduct has not caused the consumer to pay a higher-than-competitive price, then the plaintiff's damages will be zero. Here, for example, if the competitive commission rate were 10 percent rather than 30 percent but Apple could prove that app developers in a 10 percent commission system would always set a higher price such that consumers would pay the same retail price regardless of whether Apple's commission was 10 percent or 30 percent, then the consumers' damages would presumably be zero. But we cannot assume in all cases—as Apple would necessarily have us do—that a monopolistic retailer who keeps a commission does not ever cause the consumer to pay a higher-than-competitive [18] price. We find no persuasive legal or economic basis for such a blanket assertion.

In short, we do not understand the relevance of the upstream market structure in deciding whether a downstream consumer may sue a monopolistic retailer. Apple's rule would elevate form (what is the precise arrangement between manufacturers or suppliers and retailers?) over substance (is the consumer paying a higher price because of the monopolistic retailer's actions?). If the retailer's unlawful monopolistic conduct caused a consumer to pay the retailer a higher-than-competitive price, the [812] consumer is entitled to sue the retailer under the antitrust laws.

Third, if accepted, Apple's theory would provide a roadmap for monopolistic retailers to structure transactions with manufacturers or suppliers so as to evade antitrust claims by consumers and thereby thwart effective antitrust enforcement.

Consider a traditional supplier-retailer relationship, in which the retailer purchases a product from the supplier and sells the product with a markup to consumers. Under Apple's proposed rule, a retailer, instead of buying the product from the supplier, could arrange to sell the product for the supplier without purchasing [19] it from the supplier. In other words, rather than paying the supplier a certain price for the product and then marking up the price to sell the product to consumers, the retailer could collect the price of the product from consumers and remit only a fraction of that price to the supplier.

That restructuring would allow a monopolistic retailer to insulate itself from antitrust suits by consumers, even in situations where a monopolistic retailer is using its monopoly to charge higher-than-competitive prices to consumers. We decline to green-light monopolistic retailers to exploit their market position in that way. We refuse to rubber-stamp such a blatant evasion [*1524] of statutory text and judicial precedent.

In sum, Apple's theory would disregard statutory text and precedent, create an unprincipled and economically senseless distinction among monopolistic retailers, and furnish monopolistic retailers with a how-to guide for evasion of the antitrust laws.

C

In arguing that the Court should transform the direct-purchaser rule into a "who sets the price" rule, Apple insists that the three reasons that the Court identified in Illinois Brick for adopting the direct-purchaser rule apply to this case—even [20] though the consumers here (unlike in Illinois Brick) were direct purchasers from the alleged monopolist. The Illinois Brick Court listed three reasons for barring indirect-purchaser suits: (1) facilitating more effective enforcement of antitrust laws; (2) avoiding complicated damages calculations; and (3) eliminating duplicative damages against antitrust defendants.

As we said in UtiliCorp, however, the bright-line rule of Illinois Brick means that there is no reason to ask whether the rationales of Illinois Brick "apply with equal force" in every individual case. 497 U. S., at 216, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169. We should not engage in "an unwarranted and counterproductive exercise to litigate a series of exceptions." Id., at 217, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169.

But even if we engage with this argument, we conclude that the three Illinois Brick rationales—whether considered individually or together—cut strongly in the plaintiffs' favor here, not Apple's.

First, Apple argues that barring the iPhone owners from suing Apple will better promote effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. Apple posits that allowing only the upstream app developers—and not the downstream consumers—to sue Apple would mean more effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. We do not agree. Leaving [813] [21] consumers at the mercy of monopolistic retailers simply because upstream suppliers could also sue the retailers makes little sense and would directly contradict the longstanding goal of effective private enforcement and consumer protection in antitrust cases.

Second, Apple warns that calculating the damages in successful consumer antitrust suits against monopolistic retailers might be complicated. It is true that it may be hard to determine what the retailer would have charged in a competitive market. Expert testimony will often be necessary. But that is hardly unusual in antitrust cases. *Illinois Brick*is not a get-out-of-court-free card for monopolistic retailers to play any time that a damages calculation might be complicated. Illinois Brick surely did not wipe out consumer antitrust suits against monopolistic retailers from whom the consumers purchased goods or services at higher-than-competitive prices. Moreover, the damages calculation may be just as complicated in a retailer markup case as it is in a retailer commission case. Yet Apple apparently accepts consumers suing monopolistic retailers in a retailer markup case. If Apple accepts that kind of suit, then Apple should also [22] accept consumers suing monopolistic retailers in a retailer commission case.

Third, Apple claims that allowing consumers to sue will result in "conflicting claims to a common fund—the amount of the alleged overcharge." Illinois Brick, 431 U. S., at 737, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. Apple is incorrect. This is not a case where multiple parties at different levels of a distribution chain are trying to all recover the same passed-through overcharge initially levied by the manufacturer at the top of the [*1525] chain. Cf. id., at 726-727, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707; Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U. S. 481, 483-484, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). If the iPhone owners prevail, they will be entitled to the full amount of the unlawful overcharge that they paid to Apple. The overcharge has not been passed on by anyone to anyone. Unlike in Illinois Brick, there will be no need to "trace the effect of the overcharge through each step in the distribution chain." 431 U. S., at 741, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707.

It is true that Apple's alleged anticompetitive conduct may leave Apple subject to multiple suits by different plaintiffs. But Illinois Brick did not purport to bar multiple liability that is unrelated to passing an overcharge down a chain of distribution. Basic antitrust law tells us that the "mere fact that an antitrust violation produces two different classes of victims hardly entails that their injuries are duplicative [23] of one another." 2A Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶339d, at 136. Multiple suits are not atypical when the intermediary in a distribution chain is a bottleneck monopolist or monopsonist (or both) between the manufacturer on the one end and the consumer on the other end. A retailer who is both a monopolist and a monopsonist may be liable to different classes of plaintiffs—both to downstream consumers and to upstream suppliers—when the retailer's unlawful conduct affects both the downstream and upstream markets.

Here, some downstream iPhone consumers have sued Apple on a monopoly theory. And it could be that [814] some upstream app developers will also sue Apple on a monopsony theory. In this instance, the two suits would rely on fundamentally different theories of harm and would not assert dueling claims to a "common fund," as that term was used in Illinois Brick. The consumers seek damages based on the difference between the price they paid and the competitive price. The app developers would seek lost profits that they could have earned in a competitive retail market. Illinois Brick does not bar either category of suit.

In short, the three Illinois Brick rationales do not persuade us to remake Illinois [24] Brick and to bar direct-purchaser suits against monopolistic retailers who employ commissions rather than markups. The plaintiffs seek to hold retailers to account if the retailers engage in unlawful anticompetitive conduct that harms consumers who purchase from those retailers. That is why we have antitrust law.

Ever since Congress overwhelmingly passed and President Benjamin Harrison signed the Sherman Act in 1890, "protecting consumers from monopoly prices" has been "the central concern of antitrust." 2A Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶345, at 179. The consumers here purchased apps directly from Apple, and they allege that Apple used its monopoly power over the retail apps market to charge higher-than-competitive prices. Our decision in Illinois Brick does not bar the consumers from suing Apple for Apple's allegedly monopolistic conduct. We affirm the judgment of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

It is so ordered.

More than 40 years ago, in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U. S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), this Court held that an antitrust plaintiff can't sue a defendant for overcharging someone else who might (or might not) have passed [25] on all (or some) of the overcharge to him. Illinois Brick held that these convoluted [*1526] "pass on" theories of damages violate traditional principles of proximate causation and that the right plaintiff to bring suit is the one on whom the overcharge immediately and surely fell. Yet today the Court lets a pass-on case proceed. It does so by recasting Illinois Brick as a rule forbidding only suits where the plaintiff does not contract directly with the defendant. This replaces a rule of proximate cause and economic reality with an easily manipulated and formalistic rule of contractual privity. That's not how antitrust law is supposed to work, and it's an uncharitable way of treating a precedent which—whatever its flaws—is far more sensible than the rule the Court installs in its place.

I

To understand Illinois Brick, it helps to start with the case that paved the way for that decision: Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U. S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). Hanover sued [815] United, a company that supplied machinery Hanover used to make shoes. Hanover alleged that United's illegal monopoly in the shoe-making-machinery market had allowed it to charge supracompetitive prices. As damages, Hanover sought to recover the amount it had overpaid United for machinery. United [26] replied that Hanover hadn't been damaged at all because, United asserted, Hanover had not absorbed the supposedly "illegal overcharge" but had "passed the cost on to its customers" by raising the prices it charged for shoes. Id., at 487-488, and n. 6, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231. This Court called United's argument a "'passing-on' defense" because it suggested that a court should consider whether an antitrust plaintiff had "passed on" the defendant's overcharge to its own customers when assessing if and to what degree the plaintiff was injured by the defendant's anticompetitive conduct. Id., at 488, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231.

This Court rejected that defense. While §4 of the Clayton Act allows private suits for those injured by antitrust violations, we have long interpreted this language against the backdrop of the common law. See, e.g., Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U. S. 519, 529-531, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). And under ancient rules of proximate causation, the "'general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at least, is not to go beyond the first step.'" Hanover Shoe, 392 U. S., at 490, n. 8, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (quoting Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co., 245 U. S. 531, 533, 38 S. Ct. 186, 62 L. Ed. 451 (1918)). In Hanover Shoe, the first step was United's overcharging of Hanover. To proceed beyond that and inquire whether Hanover had passed on the overcharge to its customers, the Court held, would risk the sort of problems traditional principles of proximate cause were designed [27] to avoid. "[N]early insuperable" questions would follow about whether Hanover had the capacity and incentive to pass on to its customers in the shoe-making market United's alleged monopoly rent from the separate shoe-making-machinery market. 392 U. S., at 493, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231. Resolving those questions would, in turn, necessitate a trial within a trial about Hanover's power and conduct in its own market, with the attendant risk that proceedings would become "long and complicated" and would "involv[e] massive evidence and complicated theories." Ibid.

Illinois Brick was just the other side of the coin. With Hanover Shoe having held that an antitrust defendant could not rely on a pass-on theory to avoid damages, Illinois Brick addressed whether an antitrust plaintiff could rely on a pass-on theory to recover damages. The State of Illinois had sued several manufacturers of concrete blocks, alleging that the defendants' [*1527] price-fixing conspiracy had enabled them to overcharge building contractors, who in turn had passed on those charges to their customers, including the State. Recognizing that Hanover Shoe had already prohibited antitrust violators from using a "pass-on theory" defensively, the Court declined to "permit offensive [28] use of a pass-on theory against an alleged violator that could not use the same theory as a defense." 431 U. S., at 735, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. "Permitting the use of pass-on theories under §4," the Court [816] reasoned, would require determining how much of the manufacturer's monopoly rent was absorbed by intermediary building contractors and how much they were able and chose to pass on to their customers like the State. Id., at 737, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. Allowing pass-on theories would, as well, allow "plaintiffs at each level in the distribution chain" to "assert conflicting claims to a common fund," which would require "massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge—from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers." Ibid. Better again, the Court decided, to adhere to traditional rules of proximate causation and allow only the first affected customers—the building contractors—to sue for the monopoly rents they had directly paid.

There is nothing surprising in any of this. Unless Congress provides otherwise, this Court generally reads statutory causes of action as "limited to plaintiffs whose injuries are proximately caused by violations of the statute." Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U. S. 118, 132, 134 S. Ct. 1377, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2014). That proximate [29] cause requirement typically bars suits for injuries that are "derivative of misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts." Id., at 133, 134 S. Ct. 1377, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392 (internal quotation marks omitted). So, for example, if a defendant's false advertising causes harm to one of its competitors, the competitor can sue the false advertiser under the Lanham Act. But if the competitor is unable to pay its rent as a result, the competitor's landlord can't sue the false advertiser, because the landlord's harm derives from the harm to the competitor. Id., at 134, 134 S. Ct. 1377, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392; see also, e.g., Bank of America Corp. v. Miami, 581 U. S. ___, ___-___, 137 S. Ct. 1296, 197 L. Ed. 2d 678, 693-694 (2017); Dura Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U. S. 336, 346, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (2005); Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corporation, 503 U. S. 258, 268-270, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1992). This Court has long understood Illinois Brick as simply applying these traditional proximate cause principles in the antitrust context. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U. S., at 532-535, 544-545, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723. [1]

II

The lawsuit before us depends on just the sort of pass-on theory that Illinois Brick forbids. The plaintiffs bought apps from third-party app developers (or manufacturers) in Apple's retail Internet App Store, at prices set by the developers. The lawsuit alleges that Apple is a monopolist retailer and that the 30% commission it [*1528] charges developers for the right to sell through its platform represents an anticompetitive price. The problem is that the 30% commission falls [30] initially on the developers. So if the [817] commission is in fact a monopolistic overcharge, the developers are the parties who are directly injured by it. Plaintiffs can be injured only if the developers are able and choose to pass on the overcharge to them in the form of higher app prices that the developers alone control. Plaintiffs admitted as much in the district court, where they described their theory of injury this way: "[I]f Apple tells the developer . . . we're going to take this 30 percent commission . . . what's the developer going to do? The developer is going to increase its price to cover Apple's . . . demanded profit." App. 143.

Because this is exactly the kind of "pass-on theory" Illinois Brick rejected, it should come as no surprise that the concerns animating that decision are also implicated. Like other pass-on theories, plaintiffs' theory will necessitate a complex inquiry into how Apple's conduct affected third-party pricing decisions. And it will raise difficult questions about apportionment of damages between app developers and their customers, along with the risk of duplicative damages awards. If anything, plaintiffs' claims present these difficulties even more starkly [31] than did the claims at issue in Illinois Brick.

[1] For this reason, it's hard to make sense of the suggestion that Illinois Brick may not apply to claims for injunctive relief, ante, at ___, n. 1, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 809. Under our normal rule of construction, a plaintiff who's not proximately harmed by a defendant's unlawful conduct has no cause of action to sue the defendant for any type of relief. Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U. S. 118, 135, 134 S. Ct. 1377, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2014) (although a plaintiff that "cannot quantify its losses with sufficient certainty to recover damages . . . may still be entitled to injunctive relief," the requirement of proximate causation "must be met in every case").

Consider first the question of causation. To determine if Apple's conduct damaged plaintiffs at all (and if so, the magnitude of their damages), a court will first have to explore whether and to what extent each individual app developer was able—and then opted—to pass on the 30% commission to its consumers in the form of higher app prices. Sorting this out, if it can be done at all, will entail wrestling with "'complicated theories'" about "how the relevant market variables would have behaved had there been no overcharge." Illinois Brick, 431 U. S., at 741-743, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. Will the court hear testimony to determine the market power of each app developer, how each set its prices, and what it might have charged consumers for apps if Apple's commission had been lower? Will the court also consider expert testimony analyzing how market factors might have influenced developers' capacity and willingness to pass on Apple's alleged monopoly overcharge? And will the court then somehow extrapolate its findings to all of the tens of thousands of developers who sold apps through the App Store at different prices and times over the course of years?

This causation inquiry will be complicated further [32] by Apple's requirement that all app prices end in $0.99. As plaintiffs acknowledge, this rule has caused prices for the "vast majority" of apps to "cluster" at exactly $0.99. Brief for Respondents 44. And a developer charging $0.99 for its app can't raise its price by just enough to recover the 30-cent commission. Instead, if the developer wants to pass on the commission to consumers, it has to more than double its price to $1.99 (doubling the commission in the process), which could significantly affect its sales. In short, because Apple's 99-cent rule creates a strong disincentive for developers to raise their prices, it makes plaintiffs' pass-on theory of injury even harder to prove. Yet the court will have to consider all [818] of this when determining what damages, if any, plaintiffs suffered as a result of Apple's allegedly excessive 30% commission. [2]

[*1529] Plaintiffs' claims will also necessitate "massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge," including both consumers and app developers. Illinois Brick, 431 U. S., at 737, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. If, as plaintiffs contend, Apple's 30% commission is a monopolistic overcharge, then the app developers have a claim against [33] Apple to recover whatever portion of the commission they did not pass on to consumers. Before today, Hanover Shoe would have prevented Apple from reducing its liability to the developers by arguing that they had passed on the overcharge to consumers. But the Court's holding that Illinois Brick doesn't govern this situation surely must mean Hanover Shoe doesn't either. So courts will have to divvy up the commissions Apple collected between the developers and the consumers. To do that, they'll have to figure out which party bore what portion of the overcharge in every purchase. And if the developers bring suit separately from the consumers, Apple might be at risk of duplicative damages awards totaling more than the full amount it collected in commissions. To avoid that possibility, it may turn out that the developers are necessary parties who will have to be joined in the plaintiffs' lawsuit. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 19(a)(1)(B); Illinois Brick, 431 U. S., at 739, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (explaining that "[t]hese absent potential claimants would seem to fit the classic definition of 'necessary parties,' for purposes of compulsory joinder"). [3]

The United States and its antitrust regulators agree with all of this, so how does the Court reach [34] such a different conclusion? Seizing on Illinois Brick's use of the shorthand phrase "direct purchasers" to describe the parties immediately injured by the monopoly overcharge in that case, the Court (re)characterizes Illinois Brick as a

[2] Plaintiffs haven't argued (and so have forfeited in this Court any argument) that Apple's imposition of the 99-cent rule was itself an antitrust violation that injured consumers by raising the price of apps above competitive levels. They didn't mention the 99-cent rule in their complaint in district court or in their briefs to the court of appeals. And, as I've noted, they concede that they are seeking damages "based solely on" the 30% commission. Brief in Opposition 5.

[3] The Court denies that allowing both consumers and developers to sue over the same allegedly unlawful commission will "result in 'conflicting claims to a common fund'" as Illinois Brick feared. Ante, at ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 813. But Apple charged only one commission on each sale. So even assuming for argument's sake that the 30% commission was entirely illegal, Apple can only be required to pay out in damages, at most, the full amount it received in commissions. To their credit, even plaintiffs have conceded as much, acknowledging that because "there is only one 30% markup," any claim by the developers against Apple would necessarily be seeking "a piece of the same 30% pie." Brief in Opposition 12. It's a mystery why the Court refuses to accept that sensible concession.

rule that anyone who purchases goods directly from an alleged antitrust violator can sue, while anyone who doesn't, can't. Under this revisionist version of Illinois Brick, the dispositive question becomes whether an "intermediary in the distribution chain" stands between the plaintiff and the defendant. Ante, at ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 809. And because the plaintiff app purchasers in this case [819] happen to have purchased apps directly from Apple, the Court reasons, they may sue.

This exalts form over substance. Instead of focusing on the traditional proximate cause question where the alleged overcharge is first (and thus surely) felt, the Court's test turns on who happens to be in privity of contract with whom. But we've long recognized that antitrust law should look at "the economic reality of the relevant transactions" rather than "formal conceptions of contract law." [*1530] United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Assn., Inc., 393 U. S. 199, 208, 89 S. Ct. 361, 21 L. Ed. 2d 344 (1968). And this case illustrates why. To evade the Court's test, all Apple must do is amend its contracts. Instead [35] of collecting payments for apps sold in the App Store and remitting the balance (less its commission) to developers, Apple can simply specify that consumers' payments will flow the other way: directly to the developers, who will then remit commissions to Apple. No antitrust reason exists to treat these contractual arrangements differently, and doing so will only induce firms to abandon their preferred—and presumably more efficient—distribution arrangements in favor of less efficient ones, all so they might avoid an arbitrary legal rule. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U. S. 752, 763, 772-774, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (rejecting an "'artificial distinction'" that "serves no valid antitrust goals but merely deprives consumers and producers of the benefits" of a particular business model).

Nor does Illinois Brick come close to endorsing such a blind formalism. Yes, as the Court notes, the plaintiff in Illinois Brick did contract directly with an intermediary rather than with the putative antitrust violator. But Illinois Brick's rejection of pass-on claims, and its explanation of the difficulties those claims present, had nothing to do with privity of contract. Instead and as we have seen, its rule and reasoning grew from the "general tendency of the law . . . not [36] to go beyond" the party that first felt the sting of the alleged overcharge, and from the complications that can arise when courts attempt to discern whether and to what degree damages were passed on to others. Supra, at ___ - ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 815-816. The Court today risks replacing a cogent rule about proximate cause with a pointless and easily evaded imposter. We do not usually read our own precedents so uncharitably.

Maybe the Court proceeds as it does today because it just disagrees with Illinois Brick. After all, the Court not only displaces a sensible rule in favor of a senseless one; it also proceeds to question each of Illinois Brick's rationales—doubting that those directly injured are always the best plaintiffs to bring suit, that calculating damages for pass-on plaintiffs will often be unduly complicated, and that conflicting claims to a common fund justify limiting who may sue. Ante, at ___ - ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 812-814. The Court even tells us that any "ambiguity" about the permissibility of pass-on damages should be resolved "in the direction of the statutory text," ante, at ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 810—ignoring that Illinois Brick followed the well-trodden path of construing the statutory text in light of background common law principles of [820] proximate cause. Last [37] but not least, the Court suggests that the traditional understanding of Illinois Brick leads to "arbitrary and unprincipled" results. Ante, at ___, 203 L. Ed. 2d, at 810. It asks us to consider two hypothetical scenarios that, it says, prove the point. The first is a "markup" scenario in which a monopolistic retailer buys a product from a manufacturer for $6 and then decides to sell the product to a consumer for $10, applying a supracompetitive $4 markup. The second is a "commission" scenario in which a manufacturer directs a monopolistic retailer to sell the manufacturer's product to a consumer for $10 and the retailer keeps a supracompetitive 40% commission, sending $6 back to the manufacturer. The two scenarios are economically the same, the Court asserts, and forbidding recovery in the second for lack of proximate cause makes no sense.

But there is nothing arbitrary or unprincipled about Illinois Brick's rule or results. The notion that the causal chain must stop somewhere is an ancient and venerable one. As with most any rule of proximate cause, reasonable people can debate [*1531] whether Illinois Brick drew exactly the right line in cutting off claims where it did. But the line it drew is intelligible, principled, [38] administrable, and far more reasonable than the Court's artificial rule of contractual privity. Nor do the Court's hypotheticals come close to proving otherwise. In the first scenario, the markup falls initially on the consumer, so there's no doubt that the retailer's anticompetitive conduct proximately caused the consumer's injury. Meanwhile, in the second scenario the commission falls initially on the manufacturer, and the consumer won't feel the pain unless the manufacturer can and does recoup some or all of the elevated commission by raising its own prices. In that situation, the manufacturer is the directly injured party, and the difficulty of disaggregating damages between those directly and indirectly harmed means that the consumer can't establish proximate cause under traditional principles.

Some amici share the Court's skepticism of Illinois Brick. They even urge us to overrule Illinois Brick, assuring us that "modern economic techniques" can now mitigate any problems that arise in allocating damages between those who suffer them directly and those who suffer them indirectly. Brief for State of Texas et al. as Amici Curiae 25. Maybe there is something to these arguments; maybe [39] not. But there's plenty of reason to decline any invitation to take even a small step away from Illinois Brick today. The plaintiffs have not asked us to overrule our precedent—in fact, they've disavowed any such request. Tr. of Oral Arg. 40. So we lack the benefit of the adversarial process in a complex area involving a 40-year-old precedent and many hard questions. For example, if we are really inclined to overrule Illinois Brick, doesn't that mean we must do the same to Hanover Shoe? If the proximate cause line is no longer to be drawn at the first injured party, how far down the causal chain can a plaintiff be and still recoup damages? Must all potential claimants to the single monopoly rent be gathered in a single lawsuit as necessary parties (and if not, why [821] not)? Without any invitation or reason to revisit our precedent, and with so many grounds for caution, I would have thought the proper course today would have been to afford Illinois Brick full effect, not to begin whittling it away to a bare formalism. I respectfully dissent.

[*1310] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND

(Doc. No. 18)

This matter is before the court on defendant Netafim Irrigation, Inc.'s motion to dismiss the first amended complaint. (Doc. No. 18.) On May 7, 2019, that motion came before the court for hearing. Attorney A. Peter Rausch, Jr. appeared on behalf of plaintiffs Jain Irrigation, Inc. ("Jain"), Agri-Valley Irrigation ("AVI"), and Irrigation Design & Construction LLC ("IDC"). Attorneys Kendall H. [2] MacVey and Kenneth Reinker appeared on behalf of defendant. Having considered the parties' briefing, and for the reasons that follow, defendant's motion will be granted with leave to amend.

In the first amended complaint, plaintiffs allege as follows. Jain manufactures and sells a wide variety of drip and micro-irrigation equipment throughout the United States, and as of 2017 has sales of approximately $80,000,000.00. (Doc. No. 14 ("FAC") at ¶ 10.) IDC is in the business of designing, engineering, fabricating, installing, and maintaining agricultural irrigation systems and selling irrigation supplies and parts at seven retail locations serving the Central and Salinas Valleys of California. (Id. at ¶ 11.) AVI does similar work throughout the Central Valley. (Id. at ¶ 12.) Like Jain, defendant Netafim also manufactures and sells drip and micro-irrigation products. (Id. at ¶ 14.)

On or about April 19, 2017, IDC and AVI announced that they had each entered into an agreement to provide equity to a newly formed company, Jain Distribution Holdings, Inc. ("Jain Distribution"), funded by Jain. (Id. at ¶ 13.) Although Jain Distribution became an investor and part owner of AVI and IDC, [3] each continued to be managed and operated as an independent distributor. (Id.) Beginning that same month, plaintiffs allege that Netafim began to form and enter into a conspiracy with other companies to boycott IDC and AVI. (Id. at ¶ 28.) These companies include, but are not limited to, Rivulis Irrigation, Inc. ("Rivulis"), Eurodrip U.S.A., Inc. ("Eurodrip"), The Toro Company ("Toro"), Bowsmith, Inc. ("Bowsmith"), Rain Bird Corporation ("Rain Bird"), Landmark Irrigation, Inc. ("Landmark"), and Hydratec, Inc. ("Hydratec"). (Id. at ¶¶ 15-22, 28.) In furtherance of the conspiracy, each of these companies (collectively, the "Conspiring Manufacturers") terminated their prior business relationships with IDC and AVI and refused to supply any further products to either company. (Id. at ¶ 28.) That same month, and pursuant to the same conspiracy, the Conspiring Manufacturers agreed with an unknown number of distributors (including at least Landmark and Hydratec) that in exchange for the Conspiring Manufacturers' agreement to boycott AVI and IDC, the distributors would boycott Jain by reducing or terminating their purchases of Jain products. (Id. at ¶ 29.)

The FAC describes Netafim as the "instigator" [4] of the conspiracy and alleges that it sought to recruit other manufacturers to join. (Id. at ¶ 30.) The FAC also alleges that following the announcement of Jain Distribution's formation, Netafim's president telephoned an executive of Fresno Valve & Casting ("Fresno Valve"), a manufacturer of irrigation equipment and a direct competitor of both Netafim and Jain, and stated in substance that Jain "broke the rule" prohibiting manufacturers from selling directly to growers. (Id.) The Netafim president then asked Fresno Valve to join Netafim to stop the violation of this "rule." (Id.) Fresno Valve did not agree to join, and after speaking to executives at AVI and IDC confirming their intention and ability to continue to act independently, Fresno Valve's executive advised that Fresno Valve would not cut off sales to them. (Id.) A few days after that phone call, Netafim publicly announced that it was terminating its relationship with IDC and AVI. (Id. at ¶ 31.) In May and June 2017, Rivulis, Toro, Rain Bird, and Bowsmith took similar action. (Id. at ¶¶ 32-35.)

Although Fresno Valve did not join the boycott of AVI and IDC, it remained under significant pressure to do so. (Id. at ¶ 36.) The [5] FAC alleges that various distributors had direct discussions with Fresno Valve executives, stating in substance that "you are either with us or against us." (Id.) Representatives from Bowsmith visited Fresno Valve and suggested to their executives that it would be better to cut off AVI and IDC. (Id. at ¶ 37.) The FAC [*1312] further alleges that there was particular pressure on Fresno Valve because it was virtually the only source of filters for AVI and IDC. (Id. at ¶ 36.) Thus, if Fresno Valve could be persuaded to join the boycott, it would effectively "cripple" AVI and IDC. (Id.)

The FAC also describes an incident in which AVI and Rivulis representatives met over lunch to discuss the boycott. The Rivulis representative revealed that although Rivulis had projected a loss of 20% of its business due to the boycott, it turned out that the boycott had caused much greater losses. (Id. at ¶ 42.) The Rivulis representative went on to state that "Netafim started this whole thing" and was the "ring leader" of the arrangement. (Id.) The representative further stated that Netafim had asked Rivulis to "join them in cutting off Jain" for the purpose of hurting Jain because Jain had "crossed the line" [6] by getting into the distribution market, that Netafim had been calling other "suppliers" and asking them not to sell to AVI or IDC, and that Netafim and Rivulis intended to cost AVI and IDC business. (Id.)

In August 2017, Netafim brought several distributors in California to a meeting in Washington State. (Id. at ¶ 43.) At the meeting, the distributors discussed strategies to "take out" AVI and IDC and agreed that they should work together to damage AVI and IDC. (Id.) The FAC lists numerous companies who had representatives present at this meeting. Ultimately, as a result of the conspiracy, or by reason of threats or pressure from the Conspiring Manufacturers, numerous companies have either reduced or eliminated their purchases from Jain. (Id. at ¶ 50.)

Plaintiffs seek both damages and injunctive relief under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Cartwright Act, California Business and Professions Code §§ 16720 and 16726. In addition, plaintiffs assert that defendants have interfered with prospective economic relations. Defendant moved to dismiss the FAC on February 6, 2019. (Doc. No. 18.) On March 19, 2019, plaintiffs filed an opposition. (Doc. No. 23.) Defendant filed a reply on April 2, 2019. (Doc. No. 24.)

LEGAL STANDARD

The purpose of a motion [7] to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) is to test the legal sufficiency of the complaint. N. Star Int'l v. Ariz. Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 581 (9th Cir. 1983). "Dismissal can be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). A plaintiff is required to allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

In determining whether a complaint states a claim on which relief may be granted, the court accepts as true the allegations in the complaint and construes the allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984); Love v. United States, 915 F.2d 1242, 1245 (9th Cir. 1989). However, the court need not assume the truth of legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations. U.S. ex rel. Chunie v. Ringrose, 788 F.2d 638, 643 n.2 (9th Cir. 1986). While Rule 8(a) does not require detailed factual allegations, "it demands more than an unadorned, the defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." [*1313] Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. A pleading is insufficient if it offers mere "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555; see also Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 676 ("Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported [8] by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice."). Moreover, it is inappropriate to assume that the plaintiff "can prove facts which it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the . . . laws in ways that have not been alleged." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983).

A. Sherman Act and Cartwright Act Claims

Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims are brought pursuant to § 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1; see also United States v. Joyce, 895 F.3d 673, 676 (9th Cir. 2018) (noting that despite the seemingly broad language of this provision, courts have construed § 1 of the Sherman Act as prohibiting only agreements that unreasonably restrain trade) (citations omitted). To state a claim under that provision, a plaintiff must > plead not just ultimate facts (such as a conspiracy), but evidentiary facts which, if true, will prove: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations; (3) which actually injures competition.

Broadly speaking, courts analyze such claims in two ways [9] depending on the nature of the violation alleged. "Typically, the determination of whether a particular agreement in restraint of trade is unreasonable involves a factual inquiry commonly known as the 'rule of reason.'" Joyce, 895 F.3d at 676. The rule of reason "weighs legitimate justifications for a restraint against any anticompetitive effects." Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1156 (9th Cir. 2003); see also Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918) (stating that in determining whether a particular agreement is permissible under the rule of reason, a court "must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable").

"The rule of reason inquiry, however, is inapplicable if 'the restraint falls into a category of agreements which have been determined to be per se illegal.'" Joyce, 895 F.3d at 676 (quoting United States v. Brown, 936 F.2d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 1991)). The per se rule, which "treat[s] categories of restraints as necessarily illegal, eliminates the need to study the reasonableness of an individual restraint in light of the real market forces at work." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007); see also Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988) (noting that "per se rules are appropriate only for conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive, that is, conduct that would always or almost always [10] tend to restrict competition and decrease output") (internal quotation marks and citation [*1314] omitted). But see NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 104 n.26, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) ("There is often no bright line separating per se from Rule of Reason analysis. Per se rules may require considerable inquiry into market conditions before the evidence justifies a presumption of anticompetitive conduct."). The types of agreements or practices recognized by courts as per se unlawful include "horizontal price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, tying arrangements, and output limitations." Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 784 (9th Cir. 1996). When a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act is at issue, courts "do not require evidence of any actual effects on competition because [the] the potential for harm [is] so clear and so great." Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1410 (9th Cir. 1991); accord In re Tableware Antitrust Litig., 363 F. Supp. 2d 1203, 1206 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (holding that in a per se case, "plaintiffs need not plead a relevant market (as they would need to do for a section 2 claim), nor do they need to plead the harm to competition, something which is presumed in a per se case").

The inquiry under the Cartwright Act is similar. The Cartwright Act is California's antitrust law, and the analysis under that statute "mirrors the analysis under Federal Law because the Cartwright Act . . . was modeled after the Sherman Act." County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing [11] Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.).

As stated, whether to utilize a per se analysis or the rule of reason depends on the type of conspiracy alleged. To be sure, some courts have held that the decision of "whether per se or rule of reason analysis applies . . . is more appropriate on a motion for summary judgment." In re High-Tech Emp. Antitrust Litig., 856 F. Supp. 2d 1103, 1122 (N.D. Cal. 2012). Here, however, plaintiffs specifically assert their antitrust claims exclusively on a per se theory of liability. (See FAC at ¶ 6 n.1.) The court will respect plaintiffs' decision and therefore confines its analysis to the question of whether the FAC adequately alleges a per se violation of the Sherman Act. See Bay Area Surgical Mgmt. LLC v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 166 F. Supp. 3d 988, 994 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (declining to analyze the complaint on a per se theory because "[p]laintiffs' Complaint expressly states that 'Defendants' arrangements are unlawful under the antitrust laws when assessed under the Rule of Reason'"); United States v. eBay, Inc., 968 F. Supp. 2d 1030, 1037 (N.D. Cal. 2013) ("A plaintiff is the master of its complaint and may choose which claims to allege."); cf. Northshore Sheet Metal, Inc. v. Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n, Local 66, No. 15-CV-1349 BJR, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 163327, 2018 WL 4566049, at *4 (W.D. Wash. Sept. 24, 2018) (noting that "[i]t is . . . favorable to a plaintiff to allege a per se restraint to avoid the more searching analysis and economic impact requirements of the rule of reason standard"). [12] Plaintiffs' opposition to the pending motion to dismiss fleshes out this theory and describes the alleged conspiracy as of the "hub and spoke" variety, in which Netafim and the Conspiring Manufacturers are the hub, the distributors are the spokes, and the rim is the agreement among the distributors to (a) refuse to make purchases from Jain and (b) to prevent AVI and IDC from obtaining the products of the Conspiring Manufacturers. (Doc. No. 23 at 21 n.3.)

The Ninth Circuit's approach to hub and spoke conspiracies was first discussed in In re Musical Instruments & Equipment Antitrust Litigation, 798 F.3d 1186, 1192 (9th Cir. 2015). Notably, for present purposes, the Ninth Circuit recognized [*1315] that hub-and-spoke conspiracies frequently involve horizontal agreements among competitors (which are generally subject to per se scrutiny) as well as vertical agreements between firms at different levels of a supply chain (which are generally subject to a rule of reason analysis). In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d at 1191-92 ("One conspiracy can involve both direct competitors and actors up and down the supply chain, and hence consist of both horizontal and vertical agreements."). Where a hub-and-spoke conspiracy involves both horizontal and vertical agreements, "the conspiracy is broken into its constituent parts," with the horizontal [13] agreements analyzed under the per se rule and vertical agreements analyzed under the rule of reason. Id. at 1192; see also NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 135, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998) ("[P]recedent limits the per se rule in the boycott context to cases involving horizontal agreements among direct competitors."); *In re NFL Sunday Ticket Antitrust Litig., No. ML 15-02668-BRO(JEMx), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121354, 2017 WL 3084276, at 8 (C.D. Cal. June 30, 2017) ("[T]he Ninth Circuit has instructed that where there are multiple agreements involved, the court is to analyze each separately."); *G.U.E. Tech, LLC v. Panasonic Avionics Corp., No. SACV 15-00789-CJC(DFMx), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 188759, 2016 WL 6138422, at 3 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 4, 2016) ("Vertical refusals to deal—for example, between a manufacturer and a retailer—do not per se violate the Sherman Act and are instead subject to the 'rule of reason,' which examines an agreement for its anticompetitive effects.").

As applied here, this line of cases presents a quandary. On one hand, the structure of the conspiracy alleged appears quite similar to that in In re Musical Instruments since it involves both horizontal agreements between manufacturers (such as Netafim and Rivulis) and vertical agreements between manufacturers and distributors (such as Netafim and RDO). (FAC at ¶¶ 40, 42.) The proper approach under the decision in In re Musical Instruments would appear to be to analyze [14] the horizontal agreements using a per se approach, and the vertical agreements under the rule of reason. On the other hand, plaintiffs in this case are explicit in their briefing that the entire conspiracy as alleged "is per se unlawful," (Doc. No. 23 at 23), and the FAC makes clear that plaintiffs are specifically alleging a per se violation of the Sherman Act. (FAC at ¶ 6 n.1.)

Based on the precedent discussed above, the court finds that the conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs, even if proven, does not amount to a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs' theory of the case is that as part of the conspiracy, "the Conspiring Manufacturers agreed with an unknown number of dealer/distributors . . . that, in exchange for the Conspiring Manufacturers' agreement to boycott AVI and IDC, such dealer/distributors would engage in a group boycott or collective refusal to deal with Jain[.]" (FAC at ¶ 29.) Thus, the conspiracy alleged is premised upon vertical agreements between manufacturers and distributors, in which the manufacturers agree to boycott AVI and IDC in return for the distributors agreeing to boycott Jain.

At oral argument, plaintiffs for the first time advanced a new argument—namely, [15] that rather than one single conspiracy, the FAC in fact alleges two entirely separate conspiracies. In this telling, the FAC alleges one horizontal conspiracy among manufacturers, and a second horizontal conspiracy among distributors, with some nebulous, unspecified connection running between them. This argument is belied by the FAC itself and the allegations therein which repeatedly refers to a single conspiracy. (See, e.g., FAC at ¶¶ 30, 32-34, [*1316] 36-38.) The court is bound to accept the factual allegations of the FAC as true for purposes of resolving the pending motion.

Moreover, the law is clear that vertical agreements involving boycotts must be analyzed under the rule of reason. See NYNEX Corp., 525 U.S. at 135; Calculators Haw., Inc. v. Brandt, Inc., 724 F.2d 1332, 1337 n.2 (9th Cir. 1983) ("The district court properly found per se analysis inappropriate because Brandt and Hallett were not competitors. Any 'group boycott' therefore consisted of a vertical agreement, to which the rule of reason applies."); Orchard Supply Hardware LLC v. Home Depot USA, Inc., 967 F. Supp. 2d 1347, 1357 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (rejecting plaintiff's argument that a conspiracy involving "manufacturers, distributors, and a retailer" was per se unlawful because a manufacturer's agreements with its distributors are vertical agreements, to which per se analysis does not apply). The conspiracy alleged by plaintiff [16] in the FAC simply is not susceptible to per se treatment under controlling law, because of which it must be dismissed. Moreover, because plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claims rise or fall depending on the success of its Sherman Act claim, plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claims must also be dismissed.

B. Claim for Interference with Prospective Economic Relations

Next, the court addresses plaintiffs' state law claim for interference with prospective economic relations. Defendant argues that such a claim requires an underlying violation of law, and that because plaintiffs' antitrust claims must fail, this claim does as well. (Doc. No. 18 at 23.) "[A] plaintiff seeking to recover for an alleged interference with prospective contractual or economic relations must plead and prove as part of its case-in-chief that the defendant not only knowingly interfered with the plaintiff's expectancy, but engaged in conduct that was wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself." Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 11 Cal. 4th 376, 393, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436, 902 P.2d 740 (1995). Plaintiffs do not dispute this point of law but contend that they have satisfied their burden in this regard by adequately alleging violations of the Sherman and Cartwright Acts. (Doc. No. 23 at 25.) Because [17] the court disagrees with plaintiff's contention for the reasons discussed above, this claim will also be dismissed.

C. Leave to Amend

In addition to asserting that the FAC should be dismissed, defendant argues that any dismissal should be with prejudice. (Doc. No. 18 at 23-24.) Defendant argues that because plaintiffs have already filed one amended complaint and have failed to state a claim for relief, any further amendment would be futile. (Id.)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15 instructs courts to "freely give leave when justice so requires" and that rule is "to be applied with extreme liberality." Eminence Capital, LLC v. Aspeon, Inc., 316 F.3d 1048, 1051 (9th Cir. 2003). Nevertheless, leave to amend need not be granted where the amendment: (1) prejudices the opposing party; (2) is sought in bad faith; (3) produces an undue delay in litigation; or (4) is futile. See Amerisource Bergen Corp. v. Dialysist W., Inc., 465 F.3d 946, 951 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing Bowles v. Reade, 198 F.3d 752, 757 (9th Cir. 1999)). "Prejudice to the opposing party is the most important factor." Jackson v. Bank of Haw., 902 F.2d 1385, 1387 (9th Cir. 1990) (citing Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 330-31, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971)).

[*1317] Here, the court does not find that granting further leave to amend would be futile. As discussed above, the undersigned has concluded that the FAC is deficient because of the particular legal theory plaintiffs have elected to proceed under, not necessarily due to the insufficiency of the factual allegations as contained within the FAC to state [18] any cognizable claim. Indeed, while the court expresses no opinion on the matter, it is at least conceivable that the conspiracy alleged in the FAC could survive a motion to dismiss if premised on the rule of reason. Accordingly, plaintiffs will be granted twenty-one days from the date of service of this order in which to file a second amended complaint, should they wish to do so.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above,

1. Defendant's motion to dismiss filed on February 6, 2019 (Doc. No. 18) is granted;
2. Plaintiffs' first amended complaint (Doc. No. 14) is dismissed with leave to amend; and
3. Any amended complaint plaintiffs wish to file shall be due within twenty-one days from the date of service of this order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM RE: DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS

I. Introduction

In this Second Amended Class Action Complaint, Plaintiff Larry G. Dockery alleges the existence of a scheme between an attorney, companies in the [*2] business of purchasing payment streams from Structured Settlement Annuities, and additional persons to obtain annuities from unsuspecting and unsophisticated annuitants without meaningful judicial review, as required by state and federal law. (ECF 99, "SAC"). Plaintiff seeks to represent a class of annuitants who sold their annuities to financial institutions in exchange for lump sum cash payments, and, in so doing, received far less than the present value of their annuities. Defendants 321 Henderson Receivables LLC, J.G. Wentworth Originations LLC, Stephen Heretick, and Seneca One Finance, Inc. have filed Motions to Dismiss pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1), 12(b)(3), and 12(b)(6). (ECF 78-80, 100-02). For the following reasons, Defendants' Motions to Dismiss are GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART.

II. Factual Background

For the purposes of these Motions to Dismiss (the "Motions"), the following facts are taken as true from the SAC.

In March, 1988, Plaintiff's left arm was severed in a piece of machinery. (SAC ¶ 30). Plaintiff brought a tort action against the manufacturer of the equipment, which settled for an initial payment of $407,757, plus periodic payments to Plaintiff throughout his life. (Id.). As a result, Plaintiff [*3] became the beneficiary of a Structured Settlement Annuity ("SSA") which provided for the following future payments:

- Monthly payments in the original amount of $1,200, increasing annually at a rate of 3%, to be paid through the span of Plaintiff's life but in no event for less than 30 years
- A payment of $15,000 in 1994
- A payment of $30,000 in 1999
- A payment of $45,000 in 2004
- A payment of $60,000 in 2009
- A payment of $75,000 in 2014
- A payment of $90,000 in 2019
- A payment of $105,000 in 2024
- A payment of $120,000 in 2029
- A payment of $135,000 in 2034

(Id. ¶ 32). Plaintiff alleges that several of the above payment streams were improperly purchased by Defendants in Virginia commonwealth court proceedings that did not comport with federal and state law.

Defendants 321 Henderson Receivables LLC ("321 Henderson"), J.G. Wentworth Originations LLC ("Wentworth"), Seneca One Finance ("Seneca"), and Structured Settlement Purchaser John Doe Inc. 1-100, are companies that purchase SSA payment streams (altogether "Purchaser Defendants").[1] (Id. ¶¶ 34-37). Each of the Purchaser Defendants purchased payment streams from SSAs issued to Plaintiff. In connection with such purchases,

[1] The SAC alleges that Defendants 321 Henderson and Wentworth maintain their respective principal places of business in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, while Defendant Seneca maintains its principal place of business in Maryland. (Id. ¶¶ 34-36).

Purchaser Defendants [*4] were each represented by Defendant Heretick, an attorney in Virginia who serves in the Virginia House of Delegates. (Id. ¶¶ 33-36).[2]

Several "Nominal Defendants" are also the subject of Plaintiff's lawsuit. New York Life Insurance Company ("New York Life") and MetLife Insurance Company ("MetLife") are Nominal Defendants currently making payments on annuities which are the subject of this case. (Id. ¶¶ 39-41).[3]

Plaintiff further alleges that several persons not named as defendants participated in Heretick's scheme. These persons include attorneys who falsely claimed to have provided independent legal advice to beneficiaries. (SAC ¶¶ 43, 50).

According to the SAC, at the center of the alleged scheme to obtain SSAs was Defendant Stephen E. Heretick, the aforementioned Virginia attorney, who worked with the Purchaser Defendants and others to evade state and federal requirements governing the judicial review of transactions involving SSAs. (Id. ¶¶ 12-16, 42). Specifically, the SAC alleges that SSA annuitants were exploited by Heretick's clients, the Purchaser Defendants, in a process by which:

- The Purchaser Defendants would identify vulnerable SSA beneficiaries through court records and [*5] gain their trust so that the beneficiaries would agree to sell their streams of monthly payments on terms that were as low as possible; (Id. ¶¶ 87-89).

- Heretick would file petitions seeking judicial approval of the SSA payments in Portsmouth Circuit Court, where he had been granted permission to submit his petitions in batches and where he knew that the petitions would not be carefully scrutinized for misrepresentations, errors, or other defaults; (Id. ¶ 98)

- The petitions would include representations by interested persons, paid on a contingent basis by the Purchaser Defendants, who purported to provide independent legal and financial advice to the SSA beneficiaries even though they did not do so; (Id. ¶ 42-50)

- Heretick and the Purchaser Defendants prevented the SSA beneficiaries from obtaining independent legal or professional advice, which was their right, by telling the beneficiaries that the transaction would not occur if they did not waive their right to counsel or by providing a financial adviser who was not, in fact, independent; and (Id. ¶¶ 100-101, 110, 112, 114)

- Heretick then filed petitions and represented to the court, in the absence of an appearance by the SSA beneficiaries, [*6] that each beneficiary had been advised by the Purchaser Defendants to seek independent professional advice and that each beneficiary had either received such advice or knowingly waived such advice in writing. (Id. ¶ 101).

According to the SAC, Defendants would also bring SSA beneficiaries to Virginia from outside the Commonwealth and then arrange for them to execute papers falsely stating that they resided in Virginia so that their petitions could be filed in Portsmouth County. (Id. ¶ 124). The scheme allegedly took place between 2000 and 2016, during which time Heretick filed approximately 375 petitions per year. (Id. ¶¶ 91, 93). Defendants also took steps to prevent their scheme from becoming public, such as sealing cases, preventing the seller's names from appearing on the court docket (instead using only their initials), preventing sellers from retaining counsel or from obtaining independent financial advice, and urging sellers not to appear in court proceedings. (Id. ¶¶ 147-150).

A. Alleged Issues Regarding State Law

[2] The SAC alleges that Defendant Heretick is a "citizen" of the Commonwealth of Virginia. (Id. ¶ 33).

[3] The SAC also names Symmetra Life Insurance Company as a Nominal Defendant, however Symmetra was dismissed by stipulation on April 8, 2019. (ECF 107).

Virginia law requires judicial approval for the transfer of SSA payment streams. Specifically Virginia Code § 59.1-476 requires findings that:

> a. The transfer is in the best interest of the [*7] payee, taking into account the welfare and support of the payee's dependents;
> b. The payee has been advised in writing by the transferee to seek independent professional advice regarding the transfer and has either received such advice or knowingly waived in writing the opportunity to seek and receive such advice; and > c. The transfer does not contravene any applicable statute or order of any court or other government authority

(Id. ¶ 54).

Plaintiff claims that Defendants fraudulently circumvented the above state law requirements designed to protect SSA beneficiaries by inducing the beneficiaries into selling annuity payment streams on terms on which no rational, well-informed, or well-advised person would sell, and with terms that would never be approved of by any court that engaged in any meaningful review of the transaction or in any proceeding in which the beneficiary was represented by counsel. (Id. ¶¶ 66-69).

Among the allegations in the SAC regarding evasion of state law requirements are that: (1) Plaintiff and the putative class members were advised the SSA transfer would not take place if Plaintiff sought independent professional advice, and (2) numerous "anomalies" in the petitions [*8] filed by Heretick would have put a careful reviewer on notice that the transactions were not in the best interest of the beneficiaries. (Id. ¶¶ 114, 145).

B. Alleged Issues Involving Federal Law

Federal law, codified at 26 U.S.C. § 5891, also requires SSA approval consistent with Virginia state law, or else a 40% tax on the sale of the payment stream is imposed. (Id. ¶ 57). Under the regime established by 26 U.S.C. §5891, to avoid the 40% tax penalty, SSA payment transfers must be approved by a court of the state in which the seller of the income stream (e.g., Plaintiff) is domiciled. (Id. ¶ 63). Plaintiff in this case claims in his SAC that the domicile requirement of 26 U.S.C. §5891 was fraudulently circumvented as part of the alleged scheme. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants violated federal law by inducing many SSA beneficiaries to falsely state that they were domiciled in Virginia. (Id. ¶ 66).

Among the allegations in the SAC regarding evasion of federal domiciliary requirements are that: (1) evidence presented to the Virginia court of a beneficiary's domicile was often recently created (such as driver's licenses or leases); and (2) the law in Virginia was changed to require SSA transfers only in the county of [*9] the beneficiary's residence after a Washington Post article in 2015 revealed the "flawed system." (Id. ¶¶ 128, 136).

III. Procedural Background

A. Original Class Action Complaint

Plaintiff first filed this putative class action on September 14, 2017. (ECF 1). The original Complaint alleged a scheme between Heretick, the Purchaser Defendants,[4] and "complicit judges" sitting on the Circuit Court of Portsmouth County, Virginia. The Complaint also named several insurance companies making payments on the annuities as "Nominal Defendants." The Complaint was comprised of the following ten counts:

---

[4] The original Complaint also alleged claims against Defendant Structured Settlement Investments LP ("SSILP"). Plaintiff told the Court that he would not pursue claims against that Defendant and dropped the company as a Defendant in the Amended Complaint. (ECF 75).

Counts I through V of the Complaint alleged violations of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), by SSILP, Seneca, Wentworth, 321 Henderson, and Heretick.

Count VI alleged conspiracy to violate RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) against Defendants. Count VII alleged unjust enrichment against all Defendants.

Count VIII alleged violation of Due Process against Defendants, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Count IX sought a constructive trust against all Defendants and all Nominal Defendants.

Count X alleged breach of fiduciary duty as well as aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty against all Defendants.

Defendants previously filed motions to dismiss in the fall of 2017. (ECF 12, [*10] 22, 24). The Court then ordered Plaintiff to file a RICO Case Statement, which he did in March of 2018. (ECF 36, 37). The Defendants then separately filed new Rule 12 motions (ECF 39, 40, 41), which were fully briefed. Defendants moved pursuant to:

1. FRCP 12(b)(1), arguing that the Court did not have jurisdiction to hear the case because of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, the Anti-Injunction Act, and preclusion and estoppel principles under the Full Faith and Credit Statute;

2. FRCP 12(b)(3), arguing that venue in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania was improper; and

3. FRCP 12(b)(6) and 9(b), arguing that Plaintiff failed to sufficiently state a claim for relief on any of his counts.

The Court held oral argument in August 2018, after which it granted Plaintiff leave to file an Amended Complaint that removed his previous "complicit judges" theory. (ECF 67).

B. Amended Class Action Complaint

Plaintiff filed his Amended Class Action Complaint on October 22, 2018. (ECF 75, "Amended Complaint" or "Am. Compl."). A second RICO Case Statement was filed on November 6, 2018. (ECF 77). The Amended Complaint is largely premised on the same scheme, although Plaintiff removed allegations related to the "complicit judges" and replaced them with allegations [*11] that Heretick and the Purchaser Defendants engaged with "[a]dditional persons, including but not limited to those persons identified herein, . . . including persons who falsely represented themselves to have provided independent advice to the sellers of SSA payments, and at least one other person who falsely portrayed herself as a notary public." Am. Compl. ¶ 185.[5] The Amended Complaint is comprised of the following eight counts:

Count I of the Amended Complaint alleges violations of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), by Seneca, Wentworth, 321 Henderson, and Heretick.

Counts II through IV also allege violations of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), but only against Heretick.

Count V alleges conspiracy to violate RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) against Defendants. Count VI alleges unjust enrichment against Defendants.

Count VII seeks a constructive trust against all Defendants and all Nominal Defendants.

Count VIII alleges breach of fiduciary duty as well as aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty against Defendants.

[5] Plaintiff also names several insurance companies making payments on the annuities as "Nominal Defendants."

Defendants again filed motions to dismiss on November 20, 2018. (ECF 78, "Wentworth Br."; ECF 79, "Heretick Br."; ECF 80, "Seneca Br."; collectively, the "Motions"). The Motions are premised on the same arguments Defendants made in response to the previous [*12] Complaint. Plaintiff responded in opposition on December 4, 2018, (ECF 82, "Opp'n"), and Defendants replied in support on December 10 and 11, 2018. (ECF 84, "Heretick Reply"; ECF 85, "Seneca Reply"; ECF 86, "Wentworth Reply"). The Court again held oral argument on February 19, 2019, and ordered Plaintiff to amend Count I. The Court also allowed the parties to file supplemental letter briefing and allowed supplemental motions to dismiss in response to Plaintiff's amendment. (ECF 91).

C. Second Amended Class Action Complaint

Plaintiff filed the SAC on March 6, 2019. (ECF 99). The SAC amended only Count I, in accordance with the Court's order. (ECF 91).[6] The SAC makes clear that Count I is pled against "all Defendants," and specifies that Plaintiff is alleging three different association-in-fact enterprises (collectively, the "Annuity Fraud Enterprises") between Heretick, each of the three Purchaser Defendants, and "[a]dditional persons, including but not limited to those persons identified herein, . . . including persons who falsely represented themselves to have provided independent advice to the sellers of SSA payments, and others who performed other services, including without limitation [*13] notarization services." (SAC ¶ 184). The SAC also identifies some of those additional persons. (Id.).

In response to the Court's order and the filing of the SAC, the parties filed supplemental letter briefs (ECF 90, 93-96) and supplemental motions to dismiss (ECF 100-102), which largely adopt the arguments made in prior briefing. Plaintiff again responded in opposition on March 26, 2019. (ECF 105).

This Memorandum Opinion takes into account all arguments made in the briefing on the Amended Complaint and SAC, to the extent those arguments remain valid as to the amendments made in the SAC.

IV. Legal Standards

A. Federal Rule 12(b)(1)

In considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1), the court "must grant" the motion if it "lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to hear [the] claim." In re Schering Plough Corp. Intron/Temodar Consumer Class Action, 678 F.3d 235, 243 (3d Cir. 2012). A Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction may present either a facial or a factual attack. CNA v. United States, 535 F.3d 132, 139 (3d Cir. 2008). A facial attack concerns "an alleged pleading deficiency," and a factual attack concerns "the actual failure of [a plaintiff's] claims to comport [factually] with the jurisdictional prerequisites." Id. (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Defendants' challenge here is factual, [*14] not facial, because the Motion challenges whether the district court has actual jurisdiction to hear the case. Id. The fact that the Rule 12(b)(1) motion makes a factual attack has three important procedural consequences for this Court: (1) "no presumption of truthfulness attaches to the allegations of the plaintiff"; (2) the plaintiff has the burden of proving subject matter jurisdiction; and (3) the court has the authority to review evidence outside the pleadings and make factual findings that are decisive to determining jurisdiction. Id. at 139, 145.

B. Federal Rule 12(b)(3)

[6] The SAC also removed a remaining allegation that the Virginia state court judges participated in the alleged fraudulent scheme. (Compare Am. Compl. ¶ 150, with SAC ¶ 150).

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(3), a court must grant a motion to dismiss if venue is improper. Leone v. Cataldo, 574 F. Supp. 2d 471, 483 (E.D. Pa. 2008). When deciding a Rule 12(b)(3) motion, the court must "accept as true all of the allegations in the complaint, unless those allegations are contradicted by the defendants' affidavits." Kimmel v. Phelan Hallinan & Schmieg, 847 F. Supp. 2d 753, 759 (E.D. Pa. 2012) (citing Bockman v. First Am. Mktg. Corp., 459 F. App'x 157, 158 n.1 (3d Cir. 2012)). While the court may consider facts outside the complaint to determine the proper venue, all reasonable inferences must be drawn in the plaintiff's favor. *Fellner ex rel. Estate of Fellner v. Philadelphia Toboggan Coasters, Inc., No. 05-2052, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23839, 2005 WL 2660351, at 1 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 18, 2005)). In a motion to dismiss for improper venue, the defendant bears the burden of showing that venue is improper. MacKay v. Donovan, 747 F. Supp. 2d 496, 502 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (citing Leone, 574 F. Supp. 2d at 483).

C. Federal Rule 12(b)(6)

In considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the Court "accept[s] all factual allegations as true [and] construe[s] the [*15] complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Warren Gen. Hosp. v. Amgen, Inc., 643 F.3d 77, 84 (3d Cir. 2011) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)).

The Court in Iqbal explained that, although a court must accept as true all the factual allegations contained in a complaint, that requirement does not apply to legal conclusions; therefore, pleadings must include factual allegations to support the legal claims asserted. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 684. "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555); see also Phillips v. Cty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 232 (3d Cir. 2008) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 n.3) ("We caution that without some factual allegation in the complaint, a claimant cannot satisfy the requirement that he or she provide not only 'fair notice,' but also the 'grounds' on which the claim rests."). Accordingly, to survive a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff must plead "factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

D. Federal Rule 9(b)

All allegations of fraud must meet Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard [*16] (the "particularity" requirement). Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard not only gives defendants notice of the claims against them, but also provides increased measure for protection of their reputation and reduces the number of frivolous lawsuits brought solely to extract settlements. In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1418 (3d Cir. 1997).

Rule 9(b) may be satisfied by describing "the circumstances of the alleged fraud with precise allegations of date, time, or place, or by using some means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into [the] allegations of fraud." Bd. of Trs. of Teamsters Local 863 Pension Fund v. Foodtown, Inc., 296 F.3d 164, 172 n. 10 (3d Cir. 2002) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Stated another way, the plaintiff must plead the who, what, when, where, and how of the fraud. Institutional Investors Grp. v. Avava, Inc., 564 F.3d 242, 253 (3d Cir. 2009); see *Bonavitacola Elec. Constr. v. Boro Developers, Inc., No. 01-5508, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2190, 2003 WL 329145, at 6 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 12, 2003) (Baylson, J.).

However, "courts should be sensitive to the fact that application of [Rule 9(b)] prior to discovery may permit sophisticated defrauders to successfully conceal the details of their fraud. Accordingly, the normally rigorous particularity rule has been relaxed somewhat where the factual information is peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge or control." In re Burlington, 114 F.3d at 1418 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Thus, plaintiffs may plead certain factual allegations based "upon information and belief" but must allege that the [*17] necessary information lies within the defendant's control, and their allegations must be accompanied by a statement of the facts upon which the allegations are based. Craftmatic Sec. Litig. v. Kraftsow, 890 F.2d 628, 645 (3d Cir. 1989). Boilerplate and conclusory allegations will not suffice. In re Burlington, 114 F.3d at 1418.

V. Threshold Questions

A. Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction—Rooker-Feldman Doctrine

The Rooker-Feldman doctrine engenders the principle that lower federal courts lack subject-matter jurisdiction to adjudicate cases stemming from state-court decisions if exercising jurisdiction would function as an appeal of those decisions. This doctrine receives its name from two United States Supreme Court cases, Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 44 S. Ct. 149, 68 L. Ed. 362 (1923), and District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 103 S. Ct. 1303, 75 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1983). In Feldman, the Supreme Court held that district courts "do not have jurisdiction[] . . . over challenges to state court decisions in particular cases arising out of judicial proceedings even if those challenges allege that the state court's action was unconstitutional." 460 U.S. at 486. A federal statute—28 U.S.C. § 1257—reserves review of final state-court decisions for the Supreme Court itself. Id. The Supreme Court also found the federal claims in Feldman to be "inextricably intertwined" with the state-court decisions at issue, suggesting that a lower federal court [*18] would not have subject-matter jurisdiction to adjudicate the action. Id. at 486-87. In its holding, the Supreme Court distinguished between a plaintiff challenging "the validity of a rule promulgated in a non-judicial proceeding" and "a final state court judgement in a particular case," and held that lower federal courts retain subject-matter jurisdiction over the former, but not the latter. Id. at 486.

Since the Feldman decision, the Supreme Court has refined the scope of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine on two occasions. First, in Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 125 S. Ct. 1517, 161 L. Ed. 2d 454 (2005), the Supreme Court held that the doctrine is "confined" to "cases brought by state-court losers complaining of injuries caused by state-court judgments rendered before the district court proceedings commenced and inviting district court review and rejection of those judgments." 544 U.S. at 284. Second, in Lance v. Dennis, 546 U.S. 459, 126 S. Ct. 1198, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1059 (2006), the Supreme Court reaffirmed the doctrine's underlying jurisdictional nature, warning not to conflate it with the preclusion principles stated in the Full Faith and Credit Act. It held that "Rooker-Feldman is not simply preclusion by another name." 546 U.S. at 466. Thus, while a lower federal court may be precluded from adjudicating an action previously litigated in state court under the principles set forth [*19] in the Full Faith and Credit Act, this does not mean the court would be divested of subject-matter jurisdiction over the claim. Exxon Mobil, 544 U.S. at 293.

In interpreting the Supreme Court's decision in Exxon Mobil, the Third Circuit held in Great Western Mining & Mineral Co. v. Fox Rothschild LLP, 615 F.3d 159 (3d Cir. 2010) that there are four requirements to be met before the Rooker-Feldman doctrine applies:

1. the federal plaintiff lost in state court;
2. the plaintiff complains of injuries caused by the state-court judgments;
3. those judgments were rendered before the federal suit was filed; and
4. the plaintiff is inviting the district court to review and reject the state judgments.

Id. at 166 (citing Exxon Mobil, 544 U.S. at 284) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). In Great Western, similar to the original complaint in this case, the plaintiff alleged a conspiracy among a law firm, an arbitration service provider, and various Pennsylvania state-court judges to engineer the plaintiff's defeat in state court on contract and tort claims filed after a conflict of interest was discovered between the arbitration parties and provider. Id. at 161-63. The Third Circuit explained that Rooker-Feldman does not bar federal jurisdiction when the "federal plaintiff present[s] some independent claim," even if that claim denies a legal conclusion [*20] reached by the state court. Id. at 169 (quoting Exxon Mobil, 544 U.S. at 293). By reaching a conclusion contrary to the state-court judgment "without concerning itself with the bona fides of the prior judgment," a federal court "is not conducting appellate review, regardless of whether compliance with the second judgment would make it impossible to comply with the first judgment." Id. at 169 (quoting Bolden v. City of Topeka, Kan., 441 F.3d 1129, 1143 (10th Cir. 2006)).

The Third Circuit also decided that, in accordance with the Supreme Court's express desire to limit the scope of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, "[t]he phrase 'inextricably intertwined' does not create an additional legal test or expand the scope of Rooker-Feldman beyond challenges to state-court judgments," because "[w]hen a federal plaintiff brings a claim[] . . . that asserts injury caused by a state-court judgment and seeks review and reversal of that judgment, the federal claim is 'inextricably intertwined' with the state judgment." Id. at 170. Ultimately, the Court held that the plaintiff's claim of being forced to litigate in a rigged system, where he could not receive a fair hearing, did not assert an injury caused by state-court judgments, nor did it seek review and rejection of those judgments. Id. at 171. Rooker-Feldman thus did not bar federal [*21] jurisdiction in the case.

In their Motions to Dismiss, Defendants argue that Rooker-Feldman prevents this Court from exercising jurisdiction over Plaintiff's claims. Defendants contend that this case is essentially an improper federal appeal of the Virginia state court's decision to grant the SSA transfer petitions. In analyzing this argument, the Court addresses each of the Great Western elements below, in turn.

1. Plaintiff as state-court loser

The first element of Great Western requires that the federal plaintiff lost in state court. The determination is not straightforward in this case because the state-court proceedings were not adversarial. Pursuant to Virginia Code § 59.1-476, the state-court proceedings at issue here put the Virginia judge in a posture akin to a gatekeeper, ensuring the integrity of a mutually agreed upon private transaction. Plaintiff has not made a claim that was rejected by the state court—rather, he is seeking review of a judicial determination that he himself requested and that was granted by the state court.[7]

Still, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine has been applied to bar jurisdiction over other cases that arise out of non-adversarial state-court proceedings. [*22] For example, in Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Solomon, 910 F. Supp. 2d 1075 (N.D. Ill. 2012) (Grady, J.), which Defendants rely on heavily, an SSA beneficiary sold his annuity stream to 321 Henderson and, after he died, his estate sued in probate court to recover the annuity assets because the transfer was allegedly tainted by misrepresentations. Id. at 1078. Judge Grady concluded that although the underlying proceedings were not adversarial, they were judicial; and although the plaintiff was not a loser in a conventional sense, he qualified as one because his estate was seeking to overturn the state-court order in federal court. Id. at 1081-82. The plaintiff could not seek to voice his second thoughts about the deal he struck with 321 Henderson and at the same time avoid Rooker-Feldman by claiming that he was not a state-court loser. Id. at 1081.

Hartford Life likened the SSA transfer order to an agreed-upon order in Johnson v. Orr, 551 F.3d 564 (7th Cir. 2008), which involved an agreement regarding property taxes that the federal plaintiff later argued was erroneous. The Johnson court—and the Hartford Life court in turn—found that because the federal plaintiff was effectively seeking to overturn the agreed-upon state-court order in federal court, Rooker-Feldman barred the claim. Johnson, 551 F.3d at 569; Hartford Life, 910 F. Supp. 2d at 1082. Other federal courts have similarly applied the Rooker-Feldman [*23] doctrine to bar claims brought over consent orders or agreed-upon orders, even though the underlying state-court cases were not overtly adversarial. See, e.g., *Crawford v. Adair, No. 08-281, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57283, 2008 WL 2952488, at 2 (E.D. Va. July 29, 2008) (holding Rooker-Feldman barred plaintiff's federal claims seeking review and rejection of a consent order agreed to by the parties in an earlier state court proceeding).

[7] Defendants make much ado of the fact that Plaintiff supposedly "admitted" that he was a state-court loser during oral argument on the previous motions to dismiss. At that argument, held on August 22, 2018, the Court asked Plaintiff's counsel whether this element of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine was met. (See ECF 70, Hrg. Tr., Aug. 22, 2018, at 7:5-9). Plaintiff's counsel replied, "I think it's accurate to say that for the purposes of this case, the plaintiff is a loser in the sense that . . . the injury that he sustained would not have been sustained if the court had denied the petition, and the court granted the petition." (Id. at 7:20-8:1). The Court is not persuaded that this response amounted to a concession or waiver of the first Great Western element.

In light of the foregoing, the Court is satisfied that Plaintiff qualifies as a state-court loser for purposes of this proceeding. Plaintiff complains of injuries he allegedly sustained in relation to the non-adversarial, state-court proceeding, which is enough to qualify him as the loser of that proceeding for purposes of this Court's Rooker-Feldman analysis.

The first Great Western element is therefore satisfied.

2. The origin of Plaintiff's injuries

The second element of Great Western requires Plaintiff to complain of injuries caused by the state-court judgment. This element is "closely related" to the fourth Great Western element, discussed below, and the parties' arguments largely conflate the two. Still, "a federal plaintiff who was injured by a state-court judgment is not invariably seeking review and rejection of that judgment," Great Western, 615 F.3d at 168, and the Court must discuss [*24] each element separately.

In Great Western, the Third Circuit concluded that Rooker-Feldman did not bar federal jurisdiction because, although the plaintiff was attacking the state-court judgments, it was not "merely contending that the state-court decisions were incorrect or that they were themselves in violation of the Constitution." 615 F.3d at 172. Rather, the plaintiff was claiming violations of an independent right—the right to an impartial forum. Id. This separate constitutional violation caused the adverse state decision and the plaintiff's harm, and the state-court judgments themselves did not cause the plaintiff's injuries. Id. at 172-73.

The Third Circuit has since made similar determinations in two notable cases. In Williams v. BASF Catalysts LLC, 765 F.3d 306 (3d Cir. 2014), a plaintiff filed a putative class action alleging conspiracy to prevent asbestos-injury victims from obtaining fair tort recoveries for their injuries. The plaintiff alleged that the conspirators—chemical companies and their attorneys—worked together for years to mislead claimants about the presence of asbestos in talc mined and sold by the defendant companies. Through false discovery responses and official representations, they induced class members to dismiss or settle claims that were, [*25] in reality, meritorious. Id. at 311-14. The Third Circuit held that Rooker-Feldman did not apply, finding that the plaintiff's alleged injuries arose from defendants' misconduct, not the state-court judgments themselves. Id. at 315 ("Because this suit does not concern state-court judgments, but rather independent torts committed to obtain them, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine does not apply.").

In Philadelphia Entertainment & Dev. Ptnrs LP v. Dep't of Revenue, 879 F.3d 492 (3d Cir. 2018), a debtor paid $50 million for a license to operate slot machines, which was eventually revoked. Id. at 495-96. In subsequent bankruptcy proceedings, the debtor liked the revocation to a fraudulent transfer and requested the return of the $50 million fee. Id. at 496. The bankruptcy court applied Rooker-Feldman, finding that the claim for the value of the license was barred because "the right to be compensated for the value of the license is the 'functional equivalent' of the right to retain the license." Id. at 497. But the Third Circuit reversed, holding that the fraudulent transfer claim was independent of the state-court revocation orders. Id. at 500-01. The Court explained that "a federal court can address the same issue 'and reach[] a conclusion contrary to a judgment by the first court,' as long as the federal court does not reconsider the legal conclusion [*26] reached by the state court." Id. at 501-02 (quoting Great Western, 615 F.3d at 169). It further held that, although the plaintiff sought to recapture exactly the relief that the state court had denied, the federal claim could be prosecuted so long as the claim arose out of an independent right and was not simply a request that the federal court re-assess the merits of the claim that had been resolved in state court. Id. at 501-02. In so holding, the Third Circuit presumed that "the correct result [was reached] under state law" and therefore found that it did not have to review the merits of the state court's order. Id. at 501.

The question this Court must consider, then, is whether Plaintiff alleges an injury that arises from the state-court orders or from his purportedly independent RICO and state-law claims. Defendants partially argue that Plaintiff's injury must arise from the state-court orders because Plaintiff seeks the return of the exact amounts that were at issue in the transfer petitions. However, that argument is unpersuasive in light of the Third Circuit's decision in Philadelphia Entertainment, which allowed federal jurisdiction over claims that sought to recapture exactly the relief that had been denied by the state court. 879 F.3d at 502-03. Moreover, [*27] like in Williams, this case does not concern the state-court orders themselves, "but rather independent torts"—and the alleged enterprise's racketeering activity—"committed to obtain them." 765 F.3d at 315. Although recent decisions in this district have rejected a fraud exception to Rooker-Feldman, Plaintiff has alleged more than fraud on the state court. He has alleged a full RICO scheme, involving conspiracy and fraud on the state court as well as on Plaintiff and the putative class members. The injuries discussed in the SAC arise from this scheme. This Court will thus defer to the precedential authority, discussed above, that advises a cautious and narrow application of the doctrine.

3. The timing of the state-court orders

The third element of Great Western is that the state-court judgments at issue must have been rendered before the federal suit was filed. The parties do not dispute that the state-court orders approving the transfer of Plaintiff's SSA payments were entered in state court and were entered prior to the commencement of this case. Indeed, the SAC alleges that the last order at issue in Plaintiff's case was entered [*28] by the Portsmouth Circuit Court in 2010, seven years before Plaintiff filed this action.

The third Great Western element is therefore satisfied.

4. Review/rejection of the state-court orders

The final Great Western element requires that Plaintiff seek federal review and rejection of a state-court judgment. Even if Plaintiff had alleged injuries that arose from the state-court orders, in satisfaction of the second Great Western element, the Court would not apply Rooker-Feldman because Plaintiff's claims are not seeking review and rejection of those orders.

As noted above, Great Western states that "a federal plaintiff who was injured by a state-court judgment is not invariably seeking review and rejection of that judgment." 615 F.3d at 168. This fourth element of the Great Western test "seeks to discern whether the plaintiff's suit requires the district court to conduct appellate review of the previous state-court decision." *King v. Burr, No. 17-2315, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135754, 2017 WL 3705872, at 4 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 24, 2017) (Baylson, J.).

In Philadelphia Entertainment, the Third Circuit held that Rooker-Feldman did not apply because the plaintiff's federal claim seeking compensation for the value of an operating license was independent of the plaintiff's state-court claim to retain that same license. [*29] 879 F.3d 492, 500-01. In doing so, the Third Circuit reversed the bankruptcy court, which determined that the doctrine applied because the two claims were functionally equivalent. Id. at 497. The Third Circuit explained that "a federal court can address the same issue 'and reach[] a conclusion contrary to a judgment by the first court,' as long as the federal court does not reconsider the legal conclusion reached by the state court." Philadelphia Entertainment, 879 F.3d at 501-02 (quoting Great Western, 615 F.3d at 169). "[I]f the federal court's review does not concern the bona fides of the prior judgment, the federal court is not conducting appellate review, regardless of whether compliance with the second judgment would make it impossible to comply with the first judgment. In that situation, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine would not apply because the plaintiff is not complaining of legal injury caused by a state court judgment because of a legal error committed by the state court." Id. at 500 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

The thrust of Plaintiff's SAC is that Defendants engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity meant to induce Plaintiff to sell his SSA payment streams for unfair rates and meant to convince the state court that the requirements of Virginia Code § 59.1-476 were met. Plaintiff is not [*30] asking the Court to review the bona fides of the state-court orders, nor is he appealing some legal error committed to obtain them.[8] Rather, his claims turn on a determination of whether Defendants acted in concert to pursue a pattern of racketeering activity that ultimately mistreated Plaintiff, the putative class members, and the state court itself. Although Plaintiff's RICO and state-law claims may raise issues that were considered by the state court, they do not require this Court to decide the state judges' decisions anew. This Court can fairly adjudicate the claims in the SAC without expressly deciding whether the requirements of Virginia Code § 59.1-476 were met. Such review is not barred by Rooker-Feldman under the narrow application espoused by Philadelphia Entertainment.

The fourth and final element of Great Western is also not satisfied. Because both the second and fourth elements have not been satisfied, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine does not apply to this case. The Court may continue to exercise jurisdiction over the claims in Plaintiff's SAC.

B. Anti-Injunction Act

The Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283, was originally passed by Congress as part of the Judiciary Act of 1793 to protect federalism [*31] in the American judiciary. The statute provides that "[a] court of the United States may not grant an injunction to stay proceedings in a State court except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments." 28 U.S.C. § 2283.

In Hill v. Martin, 296 U.S. 393, 403, 56 S. Ct. 278, 80 L. Ed. 293 (1935), the Supreme Court defined the term "proceedings" liberally, stating "[t]hat term is comprehensive. It includes all steps taken or which may be taken in the state court or by its officers from the institution to the close of the final process. It applies . . . not only to an execution issued on a judgment, but to any proceeding supplemental or ancillary taken with a view to making the suit or judgment effective." 296 U.S. at 403 (internal citations omitted). Thus, where a plaintiff asks a federal court to enjoin the enforcement of a state-court judgment, the federal court is barred from doing so unless one of the three statutory exceptions apply. Furthermore, the Supreme Court has reasoned that "[i]t is settled that the prohibition of § 2283 cannot be evaded by addressing the order to the parties [as opposed to the state court] or prohibiting utilization of the results of a completed state proceeding." Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, 398 U.S. 281, 287, 90 S. Ct. 1739, 26 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1970).

Williams, 765 F.3d 306, provides [*32] clear precedent, on which this Court relies to find that the Anti-Injunction Act does not apply to this case. In Williams, as discussed above, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendant manufacturing corporation and its counsel defrauded litigants by suppressing evidence favorable to their state asbestos cases. The Third Circuit allowed the federal case to proceed, despite the fact that a judgment in the plaintiffs' favor would contradict earlier state court judgments regarding the plaintiffs' settlements. The Third Circuit's reasoning, which applies with equal force to the present case, was that "because there are no ongoing proceedings in a state court with which the District Court's judgment would interfere . . . [the Anti-Injunction Act] has no application. . . . [T]he named plaintiffs in this case have no other proceedings pending anywhere." Id. at 325-26 (citation omitted).

[8] Plaintiff is also not claiming that the state-court orders were simply procured by fraud. As noted above, the Third Circuit has yet to adopt a fraud exception to the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. Defendants argue that claims contesting state-court judgments on the basis that those judgments were allegedly procured by fraud are more appropriately brought in state court. See Johnson, 551 F.3d at 569 ("If [the plaintiff] believes the state court was wrong [in its legal determination] or that he was induced fraudulently to sign away his rights . . . , his remedy is to ask the state circuit court to set aside the agreed order [between the parties.]"); *Campbell, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115722, 2017 WL 3142118, at 4 ("[W]hether a state court judgment should be subject to collateral attack or review is an issue best left to the state courts." (citing Fielder v. Credit Acceptance Corp., 188 F.3d 1031, 1035-36 (8th Cir. 1999))). It appears that there is a vehicle to bring such a claim in Virginia state court. See Va. Code § 8:01-428 ("This section does not limit the power of the court to entertain at any time an independent action to relieve a party from any judgment or proceedings, . . . or to set aside a judgment or decree for fraud upon the court."). Plaintiff here has alleged a complicated, years-long scheme meant to take advantage of annuitants and subvert the review of state-court judges. These allegations raise claims wholly separate from an appeal of the state-court orders, and present more for this Court to consider than a plain lie or fraud on the state court.

It is clear that Williams applies to the case now before the Court. Defendants are correct that Plaintiff's SSA payments continue to be paid—albeit not to Plaintiff. However, the state court proceedings determining that such payments should be made to Defendants rather than Plaintiff are already completed. Therefore, because [*33] no state court proceeding remains "ongoing," there is no possibility of this Court issuing any "injunction to stay proceedings in a State court." 28 U.S.C. § 2283.

C. Full Faith and Credit Statute

In their motions to dismiss, Defendants Wentworth, 321 Henderson, and Seneca contend that the Full Faith and Credit statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1738, and Virginia state law on res judicata and collateral estoppel require this Court to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint with prejudice. However, the Court finds that Defendants have not met their burden of establishing that Virginia res judicata law or collateral estoppel law mandate such an outcome.

The Full Faith and Credit statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1738, provides that "[s]uch Acts, records and judicial proceedings or copies thereof, so authenticated, shall have the same full faith and credit in every court within the United States and its Territories and Possessions as they have by law or usage in the courts of such State, Territory or Possession from which they are taken." 28 U.S.C. § 1738. Thus, Virginia state law on res judicata applies to the question of whether the claims outlined in Plaintiff's Complaint are precluded by the previous state-court orders Virginia state law on collateral estoppel applies to the question [*34] of whether this Court may consider issues that were already litigated in the previous state-court proceeding. The Court finds that Virginia law on res judicata and collateral estoppel do not require a finding that Plaintiff's claims are precluded.

There are two different standards for determining the application of res judicata under Virginia state law: The common-law standard (predating the July 1, 2006 effective date of Va. Sup. Ct. R. 1:6), and the transactional standard (resulting from the adoption of Va. Sup. Ct. R. 1:6). In order for the transactional approach to apply, "both the original action yielding final judgment and the subsequent action must have been filed after July 1, 2006." Coleman v. Pascarella, 81 Va. Cir. 167, 169 (Chesapeake Cty., 2010). Plaintiff's allegations make clear that Virginia judges issued several relevant state-court orders prior to July 1, 2006, and several after July 1, 2006. Therefore, analysis under both standards is required.

Under the common-law standard, there are four elements that a defendant must establish in order to demonstrate that a plaintiff's claims are barred by res judicata: "(1) identity of the remedies sought; (2) identity of the cause of action; (3) identity of the parties; and (4) identity of the [*35] quality of the persons for or against whom the claim is made." Rhoten v. Commonwealth, 286 Va. 262, 750 S.E.2d 110, 114 (Va. 2013).

Under the common-law approach, in order to demonstrate that the causes of action of the two (or more) actions are identical, the defendant must demonstrate that the same evidence is required in both (or all) of the actions to establish the claims. Id. This approach was abandoned with the adoption of Virginia Supreme Court Rule 1:6 ("Rule 1:6"), which instead provides that res judicata will bar "any claim or cause of action that arises from the same conduct, transaction or occurrence, whether or not the legal theory or rights asserted in the second or subsequent action were raised in the prior lawsuit, and regardless of the legal elements or the evidence upon which any claims in the prior proceeding depended, or the particular remedies sought." Va. Sup. Ct. R. 1:6(a). Despite the differences between the two approaches, this Court holds that neither bars Plaintiff's claims.

1. For Virginia State-Court Orders Predating July 1, 2006, the Common-Law Res Judicata Standard Does Not Bar Plaintiff's Claims

For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds that Defendants have not established all of the elements under the common-law approach to res [*36] judicata. A party invoking res judicata must, by a preponderance of the evidence, establish four elements: "(1) identity of the remedies sought; (2) identity of the cause of action; (3) identity of the parties; and (4) identity of the quality of the persons for or against whom the claim is made." Rhoten, 750 S.E.2d at 114; see also Mowry v. City of Virginia Beach, 198 Va. 205, 93 S.E.2d 323, 327 (Va. 1956) (holding that "there must be a concurrence of [the] four" elements to succeed in asserting res judicata). Defendants assert that they have demonstrated the existence of all four elements as they pertain to the state-court orders issued before July 1, 2006. Although the Court finds that the fourth element, identity of the quality of the parties, has been satisfied, it also finds that Defendants have failed to establish the first three elements of res judicata.

a. Defendants Fail to Demonstrate an Identity of Remedies

Defendants argue that the remedies in the Virginia state-court orders and in this litigation are identical. The Court disagrees.

Plaintiff's SAC seeks monetary damages for allegedly unlawful conduct violating RICO, facilitating unjust enrichment, and breaching fiduciary duties. It also seeks equitable relief via disgorgement and a constructive trust.

Insofar as the state-court [*37] orders can be considered to constitute a "remedy," the remedy would be the transfer of a right to SSA payment streams. Defendants do not speak to this element of res judicata in their most recent briefing. (See ECF 78-1, at 17-18). However, they reference their previous briefing, where they maintained that the remedies sought by Plaintiff and those provided via the SSA petitions are "functionally the same," because without the conduct of the Purchaser Defendants and Defendant Heretick, "the transfer orders never would have been approved and he would have retained the right to his SSA payment stream." (ECF 22-1, at 23). However, Defendants cited no authority demonstrating that "functionally equivalent" remedies satisfy this first element.

b. Defendants Fail to Demonstrate an Identity of Cause of Action

Under Virginia's common-law approach to res judicata, the second element is satisfied when the invoking party demonstrates that the same evidence is necessary to prove each claim. Brown v. Haley, 233 Va. 210, 355 S.E.2d 563, 567, 3 Va. Law Rep. 2286 (Va. 1987). Here, the evidence proffered in the state-court proceedings was not aimed at establishing unlawful behavior on the part of Defendants. Defendants had the burden in the state court of demonstrating, through affidavits [*38] or other appropriate documentation, compliance with Virginia Code § 59.1-476. In the present case, Plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating, among other things, the existence of an enterprise, a pattern of racketeering activity, the wrongful transfer of a benefit, and the assumption of a fiduciary duty.

c. Defendants Fail to Demonstrate Identity of Parties

To apply res judicata, Defendants must also show that the parties in this case are the same as those in the prior proceedings. However, Defendant Heretick was not a party to the state-court proceedings.

Therefore, this Court is not barred from adjudicating Plaintiff's claims that implicate state-court orders issued prior to July 1, 2006, because Defendants fail as to three elements of the common law res judicata standard.

2. For Virginia State-Court Orders Issued After July 1, 2006, Rule 1:6's Transactional Res Judicata Standard Does Not Bar Plaintiff's Claims

While Virginia state-court orders issued before July 1, 2006 are analyzed under the common-law standard of res judicata, state-court orders issued after that date are analyzed under the standard set out in Rule 1:6, which adopted the transactional approach to res judicata. See Va. Sup. Ct. R. 1:6. Rule 1:6(a) provides that a [*39] plaintiff's claim is precluded when it "arises from that same conduct, transaction or occurrence" previously litigated, "whether or not the legal theory or rights asserted in the second or subsequent action were raised in the prior lawsuit, and regardless of the legal elements or the evidence upon which any claims in the prior proceeding depended, or the particular remedies sought." Id. The question, then, is whether the claims Plaintiff alleges in the Complaint arise out of the same "conduct, transaction or occurrence" addressed by the state-court orders. Id. The Court finds that this is not the case, and thus, Plaintiff's claims pertaining to orders issued after July 1, 2006 are not precluded by res judicata.

Defendants previously asserted that the transaction at issue in the Virginia state-court proceedings is the transfer of rights to SSA income streams, effectuated by the issuance of the state-court orders. (ECF 22-1, at 25). Plaintiff alleges that the unlawful conduct giving rise to the claims occurred when Defendants "induce[d] the annuity beneficiaries to disarm themselves because they believed Defendants' claim that Defendants would protect them—so they did not need a lawyer, [*40] did not need to come to court, did not need independent financial advice, and could instead tell their story to Defendant's counsel in the Virginia proceeding, because all of these people would protect the beneficiaries and their interests." (ECF 82, "Opp'n", at 87). The alleged harm was not that the state court issued the orders leading to the SSA transfer; instead, it was the alleged prior agreement and cooperation among Defendants to reach that outcome, no matter the circumstances. Such conduct is distinct from the mere issuance of an order to that effect. Thus, the Court finds that for the orders issued after July 1, 2006, Plaintiff's claims are not barred by res judicata.

3. Collateral Estoppel Does Not Apply

Under Virginia law, "[t]he doctrine of collateral estoppel precludes the same parties to a prior proceeding from litigating in a later proceeding any issue of fact that actually was litigated and was essential to the final judgment in the first proceeding." Whitley v. Commonwealth, 260 Va. 482, 538 S.E.2d 296, 299 (Va. 2000). The doctrine "applies even when the later proceeding asserts a different claim for relief." Id. The following requirements must be met in order to apply the doctrine: "(1) the parties to the two proceedings must be the [*41] same; (2) the factual issue sought to be litigated must have been actually litigated in the prior proceeding; (3) the factual issue must have been essential to the judgment rendered in the prior proceeding; and (4) the prior proceeding must have resulted in a valid, final judgment against the party to whom the doctrine is sought to be applied." Id.

First, and as addressed in the res judicata analysis above, the parties in this case are not the same as the parties in the state-court proceedings. Moreover, the factual issues presented by this case were not litigated in the state-court proceedings. For example, the following allegations were not litigated previously: how the putative class members were induced to sell their SSA streams; that the putative class members were actually advised against seeking independent counsel; that interested persons, paid on a contingent basis, falsely represented that they provided independent advice to the putative class members; how the petitions were fashioned to avoid meaningful judicial review; that Defendants and additional persons joined together, or conspired together, in order to take advantage of the putative class members; and that Defendants [*42] and additional persons agreed to use the mails in furtherance of their scheme. These are just some of the issues that will be addressed by this Court and that were not litigated in the previous, state-court proceedings.

Because the first two requirements have not been met, Plaintiff's claims are not barred by collateral estoppel.

D. Venue

Defendant Seneca has moved to dismiss for improper venue, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(3). This Court finds that venue is proper under RICO's venue provision, 18 U.S.C. § 1965(a), which states that venue is proper wherever a defendant "resides, is found, has an agent, or transacts his affairs." Defendants Wentworth and 321 Henderson are alleged to be located in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and do not dispute such allegations.

Although venue must generally be established for each cause of action, there is an exception known as "pendent venue," which applies "where claims arise out of the same operative facts." Philadelphia Musical Soc., Local 77 v. Am. Fed'n of Musicians of U.S. & Canada, 812 F. Supp. 509, 517 n.3 (E.D. Pa. 1992); see *Neopart Transit, LLC v. Mgmt. Consulting, Inc., No. 16-3103, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25255, 2017 WL 714043, at 8 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 23, 2017) (Brody, J.). Because all RICO claims in this case are proper under 18 U.S.C. § 1965(a), and the other claims in this case (unjust enrichment, constructive trust, and breach of fiduciary duty) all arise out of the same operative facts, venue is proper.

VI. Merits of the Claims at Issue

A. [*43] Violations of RICO (Counts I through IV)

Counts I through IV of the Complaint allege violations of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), by Seneca, Wentworth, 321 Henderson, and Heretick. Defendants assert in their motions to dismiss that Plaintiff:

1. lacks standing to bring his RICO claim because he fails to plead a concrete injury to business or property
2. fails to allege facts sufficient to plead a purported association-in-fact enterprise;[9]
3. fails to plead the alleged predicate acts of mail and wire fraud with the specificity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); and
4. is barred from bringing RICO claims by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine.

In response, Plaintiff contends that he:

1. properly alleges concrete pecuniary injury to demonstrate standing;
2. properly alleges association-in-fact RICO enterprises;
3. properly alleged mail fraud and other predicate acts; and
4. need not overcome the Noerr-Pennington doctrine because it does not apply here.

1. RICO Standing

A violation of section 1962(c) "requires (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985). To overcome a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a plaintiff must also satisfy RICO's standing provision, which states that "[a]ny person injured in his business [*44] or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter," may file suit. 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). Section 1964(c) requires the plaintiff to allege (1) an injury to the plaintiff's business or property that constitutes a "concrete financial loss," and (2) that the defendant's RICO violations proximately caused the plaintiff's injury. Maio v. Aetna, Inc., 221 F.3d 472, 483 (3d Cir. 2000).

Here, Plaintiff alleges that he was the beneficiary of an SSA and that, as a result of a scheme amongst Defendants, he entered into an unfair settlement on terms substantially worse than he would have obtained if he had access to independent financial or legal advice. Therefore, Plaintiff has alleged (1) a concrete loss, i.e., the difference between a fair settlement and an unfair settlement, and (2) that the scheme caused this loss through a process in which Defendants induced Plaintiff to settle without financial or legal advice and obtained judicial approved in a manner that guaranteed a lack of meaningful judicial review. This suffices for purposes of RICO standing. See, e.g., Mathews v. Kidder, Peabody & Co., Inc., 260 F.3d 239, 247-49 (3d Cir. 2001) (RICO injury was the difference between the purchase price and actual value of the securities that the plaintiff was induced to purchase).

2. Enterprise

Counts I through IV of Plaintiff's complaint also require that [*45] Plaintiff allege the existence of an "enterprise." See Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 129 S. Ct. 2237, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265 (2009). An "enterprise" includes [9] Defendant Heretick also contends that Plaintiff cannot allege that he participated in conducting the affairs of an enterprise because the SAC simply alleges that he was acting in his professional capacity as an attorney.

"two categories of associations." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 581, 101 S. Ct. 2524, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246 (1981). The first category "encompasses organizations such as corporations and partnerships, and other 'legal entities,'" while the second "covers 'any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity.'" Id. at 578-82 (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4)). For an enterprise in the second category to be considered an association-in-fact, the enterprise "must have at least three structural features: a purpose, relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise's purpose." Boyle, 556 U.S. at 946. Such an enterprise "is proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit." Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583.

Counts II through IV of Plaintiff's complaint adequately plead the existence of an enterprise through the first category discussed above, because the three claims pertain to each of the Purchaser Defendants (321 Henderson, Wentworth, and Seneca), which are "legal entities" within the meaning of section 1961.

Count I pleads the existence of three different association-in-fact enterprises [*46] (the "Annuity Fraud Enterprises"), consisting of Heretick, each separate Purchaser Defendant, and "additional persons . . . including persons who falsely represented themselves to have provided independent advice to the sellers of SSA payments, and others who performed other services, including without limitation notarization services." (SAC ¶ 184(a)-(c)). Plaintiff goes on to name some of those "additional persons" involved in two of the three Annuity Fraud Enterprises.

Defendants argue that Count I fails to allege a relationship or common purpose among the members of each Annuity Fraud Enterprise. But Plaintiff alleges that the Annuity Fraud Enterprise members actively participated in a scheme that had the common purpose of exploiting the SSA beneficiaries by inducing them to transfer their payment streams on terms that would not otherwise have been accepted or approved after meaningful judicial review. (Id. ¶¶ 12, 42). Plaintiff also alleges that the additional persons who participated in the Annuity Fraud Enterprises knowingly made false representations that they provided independent counsel and legitimate notarization services and that they were paid by the Purchaser Defendants [*47] on a contingent basis. (Id. ¶¶ 43-44, 46, 184(b)). Each additional person was only paid, according to the SAC, if the transaction received judicial approval and was executed. (Id. ¶ 46). The SAC therefore contains sufficient basis to find a common relationship and purpose among the members of the Annuity Fraud Enterprises. Indeed, the Third Circuit has explained that the conspirators need not know each other's identities or be aware of all the details of the conspiracy to have been found to have agreed to participated in it. United States v. DePeri, 778 F.2d 963, 975 (3d Cir. 1985).

Defendants also argue that the Annuity Fraud Enterprises do not satisfy the "continuing unit" requirement from Turkette because the SAC alleges that the "additional persons" were only involved in a "tiny minority" of cases. (SAC ¶ 50). In the "overwhelming majority" of petitions filed, the beneficiary allegedly did not purport to have received legal or financial advice. (SAC ¶ 49). But Plaintiff alleges that these additional persons were involved in more cases than just the ones where the beneficiaries purported to have received independent advice. (SAC ¶¶ 122-23) (alleging that at least three of Plaintiff's transfer petitions contained documents, signed by individuals [*48] representing themselves to be attorneys, asserting that Plaintiff had received independent legal advice, unbeknownst to Plaintiff). Although the "additional persons" involved may have changed among the various class members' petitions, they all maintained the same role of falsely representing themselves to have provided independent advice and legitimate notarization services. (SAC ¶ 184(a)-(c)). This is enough, at this stage of the proceedings, to satisfy the broad requirements of the RICO statute. See Boyle, 556 U.S. at 944 (explaining that the RICO statute must be "liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes"); *In re Am. Inv'rs Life Ins. Co. Annuity Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., No. 04-2535, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64967, 2007 WL 2541216, at 17 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 29, 2007) (McLaughlin, J.) (finding that enterprise members functioned as a continuing unit because, "[a]lthough the sales agents and attorneys involved in each annuity sale were not identical, their roles in the organizational structure of the alleged enterprise remained the same").

Defendant Seneca further argues that the Annuity Fraud Enterprises are insufficiently pled because the SAC fails to identify all of their members. Although the SAC includes the names of certain individuals who acted as additional persons involved in the Annuity Fraud Enterprises related to 321 Henderson and Wentworth, [*49] it does not identify any additional persons who participated in the Annuity Fraud Enterprise related to Seneca. (SAC ¶ 184(a)-

(c)). Other federal courts have determined that "a nebulous, open-ended description of the enterprise does not sufficiently identify this essential element of the RICO offense." Richmond v. Nationwide Cassel L.P., 52 F.3d 640, 645 (7th Cir. 1995); see also PortionPac Chemical Corp. v. Sanitech Sys., Inc., 210 F. Supp. 2d 1302, 1308 (M.D. Fla. 2002) (quoting Richmond).

Plaintiff admittedly does not yet know each member's identity, but his SAC does more than allege a nebulous enterprise. The SAC specifically alleges that the Annuity Fraud Enterprises are comprised of Heretick, each Purchaser Defendant, and additional persons who falsely represented themselves as having provided independent advice or notarization services to bolster the transfer petitions. Where Plaintiff knows the identity of those additional persons, he specifically alleges it and provides details of how each individual furthered the goals of the enterprise. (SAC ¶¶ 145, 184, 198-99, 203-07). For the Annuity Fraud Enterprise involving Seneca, the SAC alleges that Seneca worked with an unidentified attorney who falsely represented that he or she gave independent advice to annuitants so that Seneca could purchase SSA streams in Maryland. (Id. ¶ 184(c)(i)). [*50] Plaintiff alleges that Seneca and Heretick engaged in the same practice in Virginia. (Id. ¶ 184(c)(ii)). These allegations are sufficient to identify the contours of the three alleged Annuity Fraud Enterprises and put Defendants on notice of the claims they must defend.

Although the Court finds that the Annuity Fraud Enterprises are sufficiently alleged to survive the Motions to Dismiss, Plaintiff should not take this decision as an invitation to expand the scope of these association-in-fact enterprises or to add more defendants to this case.[10] The "additional persons" comprising each Annuity Fraud Enterprise are limited to those persons specifically alleged in the SAC: (1) attorneys (or persons who represented themselves to be attorneys) who falsely represented that they provided independent advice to annuitants in order to bolster the SSA transfer petitions; and (2) persons who provided false or fraudulent notarizations on documents necessary for the passage of the transfer petitions.

3. Predicate Acts Constituting "Racketeering Activity"

To state a claim for RICO, a plaintiff must also allege that the defendants engaged in statutorily-defined "racketeering activity," i.e., "predicate [*51] acts." See 18 U.S.C. § 1961. Here, Plaintiff alleges that the predicate acts are acts of mail fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1341.[11] (SAC ¶ 192).

Defendants assert that Plaintiff has failed to plead mail fraud with the particularity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).[12] The elements of mail fraud are: (1) a scheme to defraud; (2) use of the mails to further that scheme; and (3)

[10] Plaintiff has now had several years to investigate his claims, and the Court will not readily grant any requests to add new defendants as that would only further delay the start of trial.

[11] Plaintiff also alleges that, because the mail fraud statute was violated, the transferred funds violate 18 U.S.C. §§ 1956 and 1957 (money laundering). (SAC ¶¶ 163, 194(c)). However, if Defendants did not violate the mail fraud statute, the other two provisions cannot be predicate acts. Both provisions require that the underlying funds be criminally obtained and the only underlying criminal activity alleged by Plaintiff is mail fraud. Therefore, this Court need only determine whether the predicate acts of mail fraud are adequately pled.

The SAC references Defendants' use of wire transfers to effectuate their scheme. (SAC ¶¶ 162, 177(c), 194(c)). Because Plaintiff does not plead the predicate act of wire fraud, we do not address it here.

[12] Defendant Heretick also argues that the SAC fails to allege that his own mailings were themselves fraudulent or unlawful. But the mail fraud statute does not require that the mailings themselves be fraudulent. Kehr Packages, Inc. v. Fidelcor, Inc., 926 F.2d 1406, 1415 (3d Cir. 1991) ("[C]ompletely 'innocent' mailings can satisfy the mailing element."). Moreover, "the use of the mails need not be an essential element of the scheme," Schmuck v. United States, 489 U.S. 705, 710, 109 S. Ct. 1443, 103 L. Ed. 2d 734 (1989), and "[t]he defendant does not have to send the mailing or wire communication personally." *In re Am Inv'rs Life Ins., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64967, 2007 WL 2541216, at 22 (citing Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1, 8-9, 74 S. Ct. 358, 98 L. Ed. 435 (1954)).

fraudulent intent. United States v. Pharis, 298 F.3d 228, 234 (3d Cir. 2002). When mail fraud is asserted as a basis for RICO liability, "plaintiffs must plead with particularity the circumstances of the alleged fraud in order to place the defendant on notice of the precise misconduct with which they are charged, and to safeguard defendants against spurious charges of immoral and fraudulent behavior." Lum v. Bank of America, 361 F.3d 217, 223 (3d Cir. 2004), abrogated in part on other grounds by Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. A plaintiff may satisfy the heightened pleading requirement of Rule 9(b) "by pleading the date, place or time of the fraud, or through alternative means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into their allegations of fraud." Id. at 224 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). However, "the Third Circuit has cautioned against focusing too narrowly on Rule 9(b)'s particularity language." Mendelsohn, Drucker & Assocs. v. Titan Atlas Mfg., Inc., 885 F. Supp. 2d 767, 786 (E.D. Pa. 2012) (Baylson, J.).

Here, Plaintiff has clearly alleged a fraudulent scheme, the use of the mails to further that scheme, [*52] and fraudulent intent. Although the details of each mailing may not be spelled out day-by-day, Plaintiff describes the mailings at issue as: (1) those notices that were sent out to interested parties, as required by law, at least twenty days prior to each transfer petition hearing; and (2) those payments made by mail or wire transfer to the Purchaser Defendants or their designees pursuant to the state-court orders. (SAC ¶¶ 192-94). Plaintiff alleges the dates that his transfer petitions were approved, the dates that his SSA transfers were scheduled to take place, and the time period that other transfer petitions were approved for members of the putative class. (Id. ¶¶ 165-74, 194(b)). These allegations are sufficient to put Defendants on notice of the contours of Plaintiff's claim for a pattern of racketeering activity and particular enough to meet the requirements of Rule 9(b).[13]

The Motions to Dismiss will be denied as to Counts I through IV.

B. Conspiracy to Violate RICO (Count V)

Count V alleges conspiracy to violate RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) against Defendants. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges that "Defendant Heretick conspired with each of Defendants 321 [*53] Henderson, Wentworth, Seneca One, the other individuals alleged to have been part of the association in fact enterprises alleged herein and who participated in the affairs of the enterprises otherwise alleged herein, and with Structured Settlement Purchaser John Doe Inc. Purchaser Defendants 1-100, and John Doe Individual Defendants 1-100 to violate 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) by creating and operating the Enterprises alleged herein and by committing, or causing the commission of, the predicate acts identified herein." (SAC ¶ 213).

"[A] defendant may be held liable for conspiracy to violate section 1962(c) if he knowingly agrees to facilitate a scheme which includes the operation or management of a RICO enterprise." Smith v. Berg, 247 F.3d 532, 538 (3d Cir. 2001). Each conspirator need not "agree to commit or facilitate each and every part of the substantive offense." Salinas v. United States, 522 U.S. 52, 63, 118 S. Ct. 469, 139 L. Ed. 2d 352 (1997). Rather, the allegations supporting the conspiracy claim "must be sufficient to describe the general composition of the conspiracy, some or all of its broad objectives, and the defendant's general role in that conspiracy." Rose v. Bartle, 871 F.2d 331, 366 (3d Cir. 1989).

[13] Defendant Heretick argues that he is immune from liability because the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which derives from antitrust law, protects "[t]hose who petition government for redress." Prof'l Real Estate Inv'rs, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993); see also *Giles v. Phelan, Hallinan & Schmieg, LLP, No. 11-6239, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78161, 2013 WL 2444036, at 6-8 (D.N.J. June 4, 2013) (applying the Noerr-Pennington doctrine in a RICO context). But Plaintiff's claims are not based solely on Heretick's petitioning activities before the Virginia state court. Rather, the SAC alleges that Heretick took part in an ongoing scheme meant to induce annuitants to sell their SSA streams on unfavorable terms, strip annuitants of their rights to independent counsel, and fashion transfer petitions in such a way that they would be granted despite procedural safeguards. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine therefore does not shield Heretick from Plaintiff's claims.

Here, Plaintiff has alleged a tripartite conspiracy consisting of Heretick, the Purchaser Defendants, and the additional persons discussed in detail above. The parties allegedly joined [*54] together to ensure the approval of SSA transfer petitions on favorable terms for the purchasers, without objection from annuitants, and in a manner that would evade judicial detection. Their scheme was "in every instance consummated using the United States mails." (SAC ¶ 190). There are sufficient allegations to support a claim that the members agreed to facilitate the scheme, (see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 45-48, 88-89, 98, 103, 142-45), and each member's role in the conspiracy is clearly alleged. Plaintiff has therefore satisfactorily alleged a claim for conspiracy to violate § 1962(c).

The Motions to Dismiss Count V are denied.

C. Breach of Fiduciary Duty and Aiding and Abetting Said Breach (Count VIII)

Count VIII alleges breach of fiduciary duty against Purchaser Defendants as well as aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty against Defendants Heretick. To allege a breach of fiduciary duty or aiding and abetting said breach, under either Pennsylvania or Virginia law, Plaintiff must first plead the existence of a fiduciary duty. See *Sun Hotel v. SummitBridge Credit Invs. III, LLC, 86 Va. Cir. 189, 195, 2013 WL 8019584, at 4 (Fairfax Cty. 2013); Basile v. H & R Block, 2001 PA Super 136, 777 A.2d 95, 101 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2001).

Plaintiff contends that he has demonstrated the existence of a fiduciary duty, citing Pennsylvania law. For purposes of this claim, the Court will apply Plaintiff's [*55] choice of law.

Plaintiff relies heavily on Basile for the proposition that "a confidential relationship may be established by evidence of either overmastering influence or of weakness, dependence or trust." Basile, 777 A.2d at 103 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "[T]hose who purport to give advice in business may engender confidential relations if others, by virtue of their own weakness or inability, the advisor's pretense of expertise, or a combination of both, invest such a level of trust that they seek no other counsel." Id. at 102.

In Basile, the defendant, an accounting corporation that advertised heavily on television, was found to have a fiduciary duty to plaintiff, who had sought the defendant's assistance with her taxes. In that case, the Superior Court specifically noted that "[the plaintiff] sought [the defendant's] assistance with her taxes in response to [the defendant's] ads, of which she was keenly aware, because she wanted to get money back as soon as possible." Id. at 105.

In this case, Plaintiff seeks to demonstrate that, because he graduated from high school with the assistance of special education classes, and because Purchaser Defendants advertised heavily, Purchaser Defendants should be viewed [*56] as owing a fiduciary duty to Plaintiff. However, nothing in Plaintiff's complaint has connected Purchaser Defendants' advertising and solicitation materials to Plaintiff. Unlike in Basile, where the plaintiff was "keenly aware" of the defendant's television advertisements, Plaintiff here has not alleged that he was influenced by, or even merely aware of, any Defendant's advertising.

Therefore, no Defendant in this case can be said to have "solicit[ed] another to trust him in matters in which he represents himself to be expert as well as trustworthy." Id. at 102 (citing Burdett v. Miller, 957 F.2d 1375, 1381 (7th Cir. 1992)). As a result, no fiduciary duty existed between the Purchaser Defendants or Heretick and Plaintiff.[14]

Count VIII must be dismissed.

D. Unjust Enrichment (Count VI)

[14] Because Plaintiff has failed to allege the existence of a fiduciary duty, it follows that he has failed to allege "aiding and abetting" the breach of said duty.

Count VI alleges unjust enrichment against all Defendants, and Plaintiff cites Pennsylvania law in his briefs. For purposes of this claim, the Court will apply Plaintiff's choice of law.

Unjust enrichment claims under Pennsylvania law fall into one of two categories: (1) a quasi-contract theory of liability, in which case the unjust enrichment claim is brought as an alternative to a breach of contract claim; or (2) a theory based on unlawful or improper conduct established [*57] by an underlying claim, such as fraud, in which case the unjust enrichment claim is a companion to the underlying claim. See, e.g., Zafarana v. Pfizer, Inc., 724 F. Supp. 2d 545, 561 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (dismissing the plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim because (1) the plaintiff did not allege that the defendant refused to provide a service or good after securing a benefit, and (2) the plaintiff did not "plead a separate tort, the damages from which could be supported by a theory of unjust enrichment"); Torchia v. Torchia, 346 Pa. Super. 229, 233, 499 A.2d 581 (1985) ("To sustain a claim of unjust enrichment, a claimant must show that the party against whom recovery is sought either wrongfully secured or passively received a benefit that it would be unconscionable for her to retain." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). Under either theory, the requisite circumstances do not exist to establish that the defendant has been "unjustly enriched."

As to the first theory, an unjust enrichment claim based on a theory of quasi-contract may be pled as an alternative to a breach of contract claim. Lugo v. Farmers Pride, Inc., 2009 PA Super 5, 967 A.2d 963, 970 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2009). A quasi-contract theory is "typically invoked . . . when [the] plaintiff seeks to recover from [the] defendant for a benefit conferred under an unconsummated or void contract." Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912, 936 (3d Cir. 1999). As such, the doctrine does not apply [*58] where a written or express contract exists. Lackner v. Glosser, 2006 PA Super 14, 892 A.2d 21, 34 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2006). Such is the case here.

With respect to the second theory, an unjust enrichment claim may be pled as a companion, not an alternative, to a claim of unlawful or improper conduct as defined by law—e.g., a tort claim. "in the tort setting, an unjust enrichment claim is essentially another way of stating a traditional tort claim (i.e., if defendant is permitted to keep the benefit of his tortious conduct, he will be unjustly enriched)." Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 936. Where the unjust enrichment claim rests on the same improper conduct as the underlying tort claim, the unjust enrichment claim will rise or fall with the underlying claim. See, e.g., id. at 937 (dismissing the plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim because it was based on the same improper conduct as the plaintiff's traditional tort claims, which were dismissed for lack of proximate cause). In other words, unlike the quasi-contract theory of unjust enrichment, which acts as an equitable stand-in for a failed breach of contract claim, an unjust enrichment claim based on wrongful conduct cannot stand alone as a substitute for the failed tort claim. Zafarana, 724 F. Supp. 2d at 561; see also *In re Avandia Mktg., Sales, Practices & Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 07-md-1871, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96869, 2013 WL 3486907, at 3 (E.D. Pa. July 10, 2013); [*59] *Tatum v. Takeda Pharm. N. Am., Inc., No. 12-1114, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 151031, 2012 WL 5182895, at 4 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 19, 2012).

Here, it is clear that Plaintiff's claim for unjust enrichment is based on an underlying tort claim of breach of fiduciary duty, because there is no allegation of breach of contract. Therefore, because Plaintiff's underlying tort claim for breach of fiduciary duty will be dismissed for the reasons discussed above, Plaintiff's claim for unjust enrichment, Count VI, must also be dismissed.

E. Constructive Trust (Count VII)

Count VII seeks a constructive trust against all Defendants and all Nominal Defendants. "[T]he ultimate test for whether to grant such a trust is whether it is necessary to prevent unjust enrichment." Spinner v. Fulton, 777 F. Supp. 398, 402 (M.D. Pa. 1991) (citing Stauffer v. Stauffer, 465 Pa. 558, 568, 351 A.2d 236, 241 (1976) ("The imposition of a constructive trust . . . is an equitable remedy designed to prevent unjust enrichment.")), aff'd sub nom. Spinner v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co., 947 F.2d 937 (3d Cir. 1991).

As discussed above, Plaintiff's claim for unjust enrichment will be dismissed. Thus, the basis for a constructive trust is absent. Count VII must therefore also be dismissed.

V. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (ECF 78, 79, 80, 100, 101, 102) are GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. An appropriate Order follows.

ORDER RE: DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS, GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART [*60]

AND NOW, this 14th day of May, 2019, upon consideration of Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Plaintiff's Amended Class Action Complaint (ECF 78, 79, 80) and Defendants' Supplemental Motions to Dismiss Plaintiff's Second Amended Class Action Complaint (ECF 100, 101, 102), and all memoranda and letter briefs filed relating to those Motions, after holding oral argument on the Motions on February 19, 2019, and for the reasons set out in the accompanying Memorandum, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. Defendants' Motions are DENIED as to Counts I, II, III, IV, and V; and
2. Defendants' Motions are GRANTED as to Counts VI, VII, and VIII; Plaintiff's claims under Counts VI, VII, and VIII are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Proceedings (In Chambers): The Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendants' motion for summary judgment

Before the Court is Defendants Rosalina Harris, Dean Harris, and Arlani Harris's (collectively "Defendants") motion for summary judgment, or in the alternative, partial summary judgment. See Dkt. # 58 ("Mot."). Plaintiff Crystal Holmes ("Plaintiff") opposes the motion, see Dkt. # 66 ("Opp."), and Defendants replied, see Dkt. # 69 ("Reply"). The Court finds the matter appropriate for decision without oral argument. Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; L.R. 7-15. Having considered the moving papers, the Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part the motion.

I. Background

The Court recounts the facts in this case in the light most favorable to Plaintiff as the non-moving party.[1]

A. Factual History

Defendant Rosalina Harris is a Los Angeles Sheriff's Department ("LASD") Detective. See Defendants' Statement of Uncontroverted Facts, Dkt. # 59 ("Defs. SUF"), ¶ 4. Defendant Dean Harris is her husband, and the two are Defendant [*2] Arlani Harris's parents. Id. ¶ 7. Plaintiff has been a next-door neighbor of Defendants since 1998. Id. ¶ 8. Plaintiff and Defendants have been engrossed in a decade-old feud, which eventually culminated in the incident that gives rise to this lawsuit. The animosity between the neighbors had escalated through the years, and in October 2016, Plaintiff filed a petition seeking a restraining order prohibiting Dean Harris from contacting her, but the petition was denied in January 2017. Plaintiff's Statement of Genuine Disputes of Facts, Dkt. # 67 ("Pl. SGF"), ¶ 75.

At approximately noon on February 25, 2017, Dean and Arlani Harris arrived home in Dean Harris's truck and parked the vehicle directly across the street from their residence. Defs. SUF ¶ 9. Plaintiff, who was driving just a few cars behind Dean and Arlani Harris, drove past Dean Harris's parked vehicle so that she could eventually make a U-turn, drive back past the properties, and back the car into her driveway. See id. ¶ 10.

Dean and Arlani Harris exited the truck after Plaintiff passed the parked vehicle. Id. ¶ 11. First, Dean Harris crossed the street from the truck to his driveway, while Arlani Harris waited by the parked [*3] vehicle for cars to pass. Id. ¶ 12. At this point, Plaintiff had made a U-turn and pulled over to the curb to allow cars to pass her. Id. ¶ 13. As Arlani Harris began to cross the street, Plaintiff began driving back towards her residence. Id. ¶ 14.

What happened next is largely disputed by the parties. The videotape of the incident shows that Plaintiff drove behind Arlani Harris as she walked towards her home. See Exhibits C—E to Declaration of Scott L. Menger, Dkt. # 65 ("Video"), at 12:01:24-12:01:34. Plaintiff contends that she was traveling at approximately 11 miles per hour and decelerating as she passed two to three feet from Arlani Harris. Pl. SGF ¶ 93; Declaration of Douglas Carner, Dkt. # 66-2, ¶ 13. She further contends that Arlani Harris had a smile on her face as she crossed the street and that Dean and Arlani Harris did not display any signs of alarm or concern. Pl. SGF ¶¶ 94-95. Defendants believe that Plaintiff accelerated as she drove within a foot of Arlani Harris. Defs. SUF ¶ 15. Moreover, Defendants contend that the videotape shows that both Dean and Arlani Harris were concerned and "in disbelief" when the incident happened. *Defendants' Response and Objections to [4] Plaintiff's Facts, Dkt. # 70, ¶¶ 94-95.

After successfully crossing the street, Arlani Harris approached Dean Harris on the driveway, and the two watched Plaintiff as she backed her vehicle into her driveway. Id. ¶ 23. Moments after, Arlani Harris called Rosalina Harris to discuss "the gist" of the incident. Pl. SGF ¶ 99. Rosalina Harris instructed Arlani to "call the sheriff." Id.

At 12:03 PM, Dean Harris called the LASD Altadena Station's non-emergency line. Id. ¶ 100. He told the LASD personnel on the phone his name and address, then added, "[m]y wife is Detective Harris." Id. He went on to explain that his family had been having issues with Plaintiff and that when Arlani Harris was crossing the street, Plaintiff "came very, very, very close to hitting her." Id. ¶ 101. He requested that LASD dispatch officers to his home. See id.

[1] To the extent that the Court relies on objected-to evidence, it relies only on admissible evidence, and therefore the objections are OVERRULED. *See Godinez v. Alta-Dena Certified Dairy LLC, No. CV 15-01652 RSWL (SSx), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 187253, 2016 WL 6915509, at 3 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 29, 2016).

At 12:10 PM, Arlani Harris called Rosalina Harris a second time, asking why the officers had not yet appeared. Id. ¶ 102. Rosalina Harris then called the non-emergency line herself and spoke with Deputy Klyver, whom she knew and had worked with a few times. Id. ¶ 103. She identified herself as "Detective Harris, special victims bureau," explained that her [*5] husband had called regarding "[her] neighbor trying to hit [her] daughter," and asked to confirm that LASD personnel were in fact going to respond, to which Deputy Klyver informed her that they would. Id. ¶ 104. Rosalina Harris then immediately called Arlani Harris back, though the details of that conversation are unclear. See id. ¶ 105.

Approximately twenty minutes after the incident, LASD officers arrived at the scene. See Defs. SUF ¶¶ 26-28. Deputy Arthur Evans ("Deputy Evans") arrived first, and Sergeant Thomas Crosswhite ("Sgt. Crosswhite") and Deputy Elizabeth Cano ("Deputy Cano") arrived soon after. Id. The officers investigated the incident by separately interviewing Plaintiff, Dean Harris, and Arlani Harris.

Dean Harris told the officers that he saw Plaintiff's vehicle accelerate towards Arlani and that he believed Plaintiff had intentionally tried to run over her daughter, but also claimed that he had not witnessed the incident. Pl. SGF ¶¶ 108, 112. Arlani Harris stated that Plaintiff "nearly ran her over," that she heard Plaintiff revving her engine as she approached, and that she was scared during the incident. Id. ¶¶ 109-10. Plaintiff alleges that these statements were false [*6] and that Dean and Arlani Harris intentionally embellished the narrative to set her up to be arrested. When Sgt. Crosswhite and Deputy Evans convened to discuss the Harrises' statements, Deputy Evans told Sgt. Crosswhite that he did not think any crime had been committed. Id. ¶ 114.

Rosalina Harris arrived on scene at 12:36 PM. Id. ¶ 117. She did not know Deputy Evans or Sgt. Crosswhite, and only knew Deputy Cano "in passing." Id. ¶ 115. She began to speak with Sgt. Crosswhite and Deputy Evans and explained her history with Plaintiff. Id. ¶ 117. Deputy Evans recalls that she identified herself as a deputy sheriff and told them the station she worked out of and that "she was extremely upset with her neighbor." Id. ¶ 118. At a later point, Sgt. Crosswhite informed Rosalina Harris that he did not intend arrest Plaintiff. See id. ¶ 123.

At 1:13 PM, Sergeant Joel Nebel ("Sgt. Nebel") arrived to relieve Sgt. Crosswhite of his duties. See id. ¶ 125. Sgt. Nebel and Rosalina Harris were acquaintances, though the length of their relationship is in dispute. See id. Before Sgt. Nebel could speak with anyone else at the scene, Rosalina Harris intercepted him on the sidewalk. See id. ¶¶ 126, 132. She [*7] told Sgt. Nebel that "this girl tried [to] run over my daughter," that Plaintiff "swerved" her car at Arlani Harris, and that she was glad Sgt. Nebel showed up because Sgt. Crosswhite was not going to arrest Plaintiff. Id. Sgt. Nebel has testified that he was under the impression from this conversation that Rosalina Harris was physically present and had witnessed the purported incident. Id. ¶ 127. Rosalina Harris further expressed to Sgt. Nebel her frustration that she thought Sgt. Crosswhite was being too cautious because she worked for the LASD. See id. ¶ 130; Deposition of Joel Nebel, Ex. N to Decl. of Scott L. Menger, Dkt. # 64-3 ("Nebel Decl."), 108:25-109:5.

Sgt. Nebel then spoke with Sgt. Crosswhite. Pl. SGF ¶ 113. Based on his interviews of the witnesses at the scene, Sgt. Crosswhite had already decided, before he spoke with Sgt. Nebel, not to arrest Plaintiff, but instead to write an incident report and leave whether to prosecute up to the District Attorney's Office. Id. ¶ 128. Sgt. Nebel told Sgt. Crosswhite what Rosalina Harris had told him and that he believed, based on her statements, that a felony had been committed. Id. ¶ 129. Sgt. Crosswhite eventually agreed with Sgt. [*8] Nebel. Nebel Dep. 110:13-16. At 1:20 PM, Plaintiff was arrested under California Penal Code § 245(a)(1), assault with a deadly weapon. Defs. SUF ¶ 48.

In addition to causing great stress, the arrest caused significant consequences for Plaintiff. On the day of the incident, Plaintiff was about to begin a consulting project in Hawaii, where she was to live full-time for two years. Pl. SGF ¶ 135. After the arrest, Plaintiff spent the rest of the day in jail and missed a deadline related to her new consulting project. Id. ¶¶ 136-37. Her job performance suffered from the stress caused by the arrest, and she was eventually fired by her employer in October 2017. Id. at ¶ 137.

The criminal investigation over the incident was assigned to LASD Detective Derric Taylor ("Det. Taylor"). Id. ¶ 142. He obtained video evidence from Plaintiff, reviewed it, and presented it to Deputy District Attorney Robert Dver ("DDA Dver"). Id. DDA Dver decided not to pursue charges against Plaintiff, stating that the video of the event did not support Defendants' claims. Id. Det. Taylor agreed with Dver's decision. Id.

Plaintiff later petitioned the LASD and the District Attorney's Office to make a finding of factual innocence pursuant to California Penal Code § 851.8(a). Id. ¶ [*9] 143. Both offices opposed the petition, and Plaintiff filed her petition in Los Angeles County Superior Court pursuant to California Penal Code § 851.8(b). Id. On August 11, 2017, the Superior Court reviewed the evidence and granted Plaintiff's petition, declaring her "factually innocent of all charges in the above entitled case." Id. ¶ 145.

B. Procedural History

On May 3, 2018, Plaintiff filed a complaint against Defendants in this Court. See Complaint, Dkt. # 1 ("Compl."), ¶ 1. She asserts three causes of action:

First Cause of Action: Malicious prosecution, against all Defendants. Id. ¶¶ 67-73.

Second Cause of Action: Violation of civil rights, 42 U.S.C. § 1983, against Rosalina Harris. Id. ¶¶ 74-81.

Third Cause of Action: Violation of civil rights, 42 U.S.C. § 1983, against Dean and Arlani Harris. Id. ¶¶ 82-89.

Plaintiff bases both of her § 1983 claims on the theory that Rosalina Harris acted jointly and conspired with Dean and Arlani Harris to act under the color of law to violate Plaintiff's Fourth Amendment right against wrongful arrest and to retaliate against her for exercising her First Amendment right to petition the courts for a restraining order against Dean Harris. See id. ¶¶ 79, 83 & nn.1-2.

Defendants now move for summary judgment on all claims. See generally Mot.

II. Legal [*10] Standard

"A party may move for summary judgment, identifying each claim or defense—or the part of each claim or defense—on which summary judgment is sought. The court shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

A party seeking summary judgment bears the initial burden of informing the court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the pleadings and discovery responses that demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). If the nonmoving party will have the burden of proof at trial, the movant can prevail by pointing out that there is an absence of evidence to support the moving party's case. See id. If the moving party meets its initial burden, the nonmoving party must set forth, by affidavit or as otherwise provided in Rule 56, "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

In judging evidence at the summary judgment stage, the court does not make credibility determinations or weigh conflicting evidence. Rather, it draws all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 630-31 (9th Cir. 1987). The evidence [*11] presented by the parties must be capable of being presented at trial in a form that would be admissible in evidence. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(2). Conclusory, speculative testimony in affidavits and moving papers is insufficient to raise genuine issues of fact and defeat summary judgment. See Thornhill Publ'g Co. v. Gen. Tel. & Elecs. Corp., 594 F.2d 730, 738 (9th Cir. 1979).

III. Discussion

A. First Cause of Action: Malicious Prosecution Claim

"In order to establish a cause of action for malicious prosecution of either a criminal or civil proceeding, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the prior action (1) was commenced by or at the direction of the defendant and was pursued to a legal termination in . . . plaintiff's[] favor; (2) was brought without probable cause; and (3) was initiated with malice." Casa Herrera, Inc. v. Beydoun, 32 Cal. 4th 336, 341, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97, 83 P.3d 497 (2004). Here, Defendants contend that Plaintiff cannot succeed on a malicious prosecution claim because Plaintiff was never prosecuted. The Court agrees.

Van Audenhove v. Perry, 11 Cal. App. 5th 915, 217 Cal. Rptr. 3d 843 (2017), as modified (June 14, 2017), review denied (Aug. 9, 2017), is instructive. Similar to the facts in this case, the defendant in Van Audenhove contacted the Sheriff's Department and falsely accused his neighbor of stalking both him and his wife. Id. at 917. When the officer responded, the defendant made additional false statements with the intent to cause the [*12] plaintiff to be arrested, prosecuted, and convicted. Id. As a result, the police arrested the plaintiff for felony stalking. Id. The plaintiff was booked, held in jail overnight, and then released. Id. Eventually, the district attorney's office declined to prosecute the plaintiff, concluding that the incident involved a neighbor dispute, not a stalking. Id. The plaintiff subsequently sued the defendant for malicious prosecution, but the trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. Id. at 918.

The California Court of Appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling, holding that "a cause of action for malicious prosecution cannot be premised on an arrest that does not result in formal charges (at least when the arrest is not pursuant to a warrant)." Id. at 917. It noted that a malicious prosecution claim requires a prosecution in the form of an "action" or a "proceeding" which must have been first "commenced" and then "favor[ably]" "terminat[ed]." See id. at 920. An arrest alone did not qualify as a prosecution because "an arrest is not a proceeding." Id.

Like the plaintiff in Van Audenhove, Plaintiff cannot bring a malicious prosecution claim under California law because although she was arrested, [*13] charges were never filed against her. See id.

Plaintiff asserts that she should nonetheless be able to present her malicious prosecution claim at trial because she successfully petitioned for a finding of factual innocence in Los Angeles Superior Court. Opp. 14:5-28. Under California Penal Code § 851.8, an arrestee can request to be found factually innocent either by law enforcement, the district attorney, or a judge in the jurisdiction of the arrest. The effect of such a finding is that the arrestee's arrest records are immediately sealed and then destroyed three years after the arrest. Cal. Penal Code § 851.8(b). Plaintiff contends that her finding of factual innocence distinguishes this case from Van Audenhove, because in that case, the plaintiff did not move for a finding of factual innocence and was pursuing his malicious prosecution claim based solely on the prosecutor's decision not to prosecute. Opp. 14:16-28. In support, Plaintiff points to the Van Audenhove court's explanation that whether a proceeding was favorably terminated "turns on whether a court gets involved." 11 Cal. App. 5th at 924. Because a court declared Plaintiff to be factually innocent of the crime that was the basis of her arrest, she asserts that she has satisfied the favorable termination [*14] element of her malicious prosecution claim. Opp. 14:26-28.

However, Plaintiff's finding of factual innocence cannot serve as a favorable termination for purposes of her malicious prosecution claim because there was no proceeding initiated against her in the first place. The Van Audenhove court stated, in no uncertain terms, that an arrest was not a proceeding and that without formal charges filed against a party, there was no proceeding initiated against that party. 11 Cal. App. 5th at 920. Plaintiff's argument that the § 851.8 proceeding qualifies as a prior "action" to establish the prosecution element is unpersuasive, Opp. 15:21-25, because this proceeding was never "commenced by or at the direction of the defendant," see Casa Herrera, 32 Cal. 4th at 341; it was initiated by Plaintiff herself. Plaintiff attempts to sidestep this distinction by characterizing the § 851.8 petition as a "part of the same proceeding as the arrest," see Opp. 15 n.1, but she does not cite to a single case that supports this proposition. Her reliance on the fact that an arrest is a prerequisite of § 851.8 is equally flawed, as having standing to bring a petition for factual innocence after an arrest does not render an arrest a "proceeding," and the § 851.8 petition an extension of that [*15] proceeding, within the meaning of a malicious prosecution claim.

Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiff cannot succeed on a malicious prosecution claim against Defendants because her arrest does not satisfy the "prosecution" element.[2] Accordingly, the Court GRANTS summary judgment in favor of Defendant on the first cause of action for malicious prosecution.

B. Second & Third Causes of Action: § 1983 Claims

In order to prevail on a § 1983 claim, a plaintiff must prove "(1) that a right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States was violated, and (2) that the alleged violation was committed by a person acting under the color of State law." Long v. Cty. of Los Angeles, 442 F.3d 1178, 1185 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 48, 108 S. Ct. 2250, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1988)). A plaintiff must also demonstrate that "the defendant's conduct was the actionable cause of the claimed injury" by establishing both actual and proximate causation. Harper v. City of Los Angeles, 533 F.3d 1010, 1026 (9th Cir. 2008).

Here, Defendants contend that they are entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiff's § 1983 claims because (1) Defendants did not act under color of law, (2) Defendants did not violate Plaintiff's rights, and (3) Defendants' statements to and interactions with the LASD personnel are privileged and non-actionable under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Mot. 13:24-26:8. [*16] The Court addresses each argument in turn.

i. Color of Law

A defendant has acted under color of state law if she has "exercised power 'possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law.'" Atkins, 487 U.S. at 49. Because Rosalina Harris is a law enforcement officer, whereas Dean and Arlani Harris are private citizens, different standards apply when determining whether they acted under the color of law. The Court first discusses Rosalina Harris's conduct, and then moves on to Dean and Arlani Harris's actions.

1. Defendant Rosalina Harris

The Supreme Court has interpreted "color of law" to mean "under pretense of law." Screws v. United States, 325 U.S. 91, 111, 65 S. Ct. 1031, 89 L. Ed. 1495 (1945). Therefore, "acts of officers in the ambit of their personal pursuits are plainly excluded." Id. However, the Ninth Circuit has explained that an off-duty state employee nevertheless acts under color of law when

> (1) the employee purports to or pretends to act under color of law, (2) his pretense of acting in the performance of his duties had the purpose and effect of influencing the behavior of others, and (3) the harm inflicted on plaintiff related in some meaningful way either to officer's governmental status or to the performance [*17] of his duties.

Naffe v. Frey, 789 F.3d 1030, 1037 (9th Cir. 2015). "It is firmly established that a defendant in a § 1983 suit acts under color of state law when he abuses the position given to him by the State." Atkins, 487 U.S. at 49-50.

Defendants contend that Rosalina Harris was not acting under the color of law during the incident because she was not on-duty that day and was instead acting in her capacity as a concerned wife and mother. Mot. 17:11-14. It is undisputed that Rosalina Harris arrived home in her personal vehicle, in civilian clothing, and did not display her badge to Plaintiff. Id. 17:14-15. Further, Rosalina Harris did not arrest, order the arrest, or write or approve any reports pertaining Plaintiff's arrest. Id. 17:17-19.

[2] Because the Court determines that the § 851.8 petition does not qualify as a "proceeding" against Plaintiff, it need not address Defendant's argument that the § 851.8 petition is inadmissible. See Mot. 9:4-10:15

Nonetheless, the Court finds that Plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of triable fact as to whether Rosalina Harris acted under color of law. After Dean Harris had already called the police, Rosalina Harris called the Sheriff's Department and identified herself as "Detective Harris" rather than by name. Pl. SGF ¶¶ 103-05. When she arrived home, she again invoked her rank and status with the responding officers. See id. ¶ 188. A reasonable jury could find that by identifying herself as "Detective [*18] Harris," Rosalina Harris purported to act as a law enforcement officer and that invoking her status had the purpose and effect of influencing the behavior of her fellow officers. See *Jones v. City of Hillsboro, No. 3:14-cv-1934-ST, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131098, 2015 WL 5737647, at 7 (D. Or. Sept. 29, 2015) (holding that a defendant acted under color of law when he identified himself as a deputy and thereby induced other law enforcement officers to make a traffic stop). After she was informed by Sgt. Crosswhite that he did not intend to arrest Plaintiff, Rosalina Harris intercepted Sgt. Nebel, an officer she knew and who came to relieve Sgt. Crosswhite and take over the investigation, and expressed her frustration that Plaintiff was not being arrested. Pl. SGF ¶¶ 126-32. A reasonable jury could find based on the evidence that Rosalina Harris directly intervened in the decision-making process of the officers by "adamantly" insisting that Plaintiff "need[ed] to be arrested," and that Sgt. Crosswhite's decision was wrong. See id.

Defendants object to this inference, arguing that it "assumes that officers are incapable of responding to calls neutrally." See Mot. 17:23-26. They point to Sgt. Nebel's testimony that he instructed the responding officers to "take out the [*19] fact that [Rosalina Harris is] a detective or a deputy working for our department and just weigh the scenes" under the circumstances. Defs. SUF ¶ 47. However, at the motion for summary judgment stage, the Court does not weigh the credibility of the evidence. See T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc., 809 F.2d at 630-31. It is up to the jury to hear Nebel's testimony and weigh it against the conflicting evidence (i.e., that the officers changed their decision not to arrest Plaintiff after Rosalina Harris intervened).

In sum, construing the facts in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, she has presented genuine issues of material fact as to whether Detective Harris purported to act under color of law, her pretense had the purpose and effect of influencing others, and the harm inflicted on Plaintiff was a direct result of her invocation of rank. See Naffe, 789 F.3d at 1037.

2. Defendants Dean and Arlani Harris

Unlike Rosalina Harris, neither Dean nor Arlani Harris are state actors. Even so, private persons can be liable under § 1983 under certain circumstances, including when they "jointly engage[] with state officials in [a] prohibited action." Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 152, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970). A plaintiff can show such concerted action by showing that the private party is a "willful participant" with the state actor [*20] by proving the existence of a conspiracy or by showing that the private party's actions are "inextricably intertwined" with those of the government. See Brunette v. Humane Soc'y of Ventura Cty., 294 F.3d 1205, 1211 (9th Cir. 2002).

Here, Plaintiff theorizes that Dean and Arlani Harris conspired with Detective Harris to invoke her law enforcement status to violate Plaintiff's constitutional rights. For Plaintiff to prevail on her conspiracy claim, she must show "an agreement or meeting of the minds to violate constitutional rights." See Franklin v. Fox, 312 F.3d 423, 441 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing United Steelworkers of Am. v. Phelps Dodge Corp., 865 F.2d 1539, 1540-41 (9th Cir. 1989) (en banc)). Yet she has not presented sufficient facts to create a genuine dispute of fact as to the existence of such conspiracy among Defendants.

Plaintiff first points to the decade-long feud between the parties as support that the entire Harris family "bore a grudge" against Plaintiff. Opp. 22:6-8. However, this fact only serves as evidence that Dean and Arlani Harris had the motive to conspire against Plaintiff, not that they actually conspired against her. Further, although there is enough evidence in the record to lead a reasonable jury to find that Dean and Arlani Harris fabricated accusations against Plaintiff, it is nevertheless insufficient to show a "meeting of the minds" with Rosalina Harris to invoke her [*21] law enforcement status to procure Plaintiff's arrest. The fact that Dean and Arlani Harris called Detective Harris before calling law enforcement, without more, is only indicative of an opportunity for, not the existence of, a conspiracy. Opp. 22:23-26.

Plaintiff arguably has a better claim against Dean Harris. It is undisputed that during his family's escalating feud with Plaintiff, he explicitly told Plaintiff that law enforcement would not protect her because of Rosalina Harris's status as a detective. See Pl. SGF ¶ 74. Further, on the day of the incident, he invoked his wife's status again during his call to the LASD. See id. ¶ 100. However, the fact that Dean Harris, on his own, decided to invoke his wife's status is still insufficient to show that he and Rosalina Harris conspired to get her to act under the color of law.

Even viewing all this evidence as a whole and in the light most favorable to Plaintiff as the non-moving party, the Court finds that a reasonable jury would not be able to find that Dean and Arlani Harris acted as state actors by conspiring with Rosalina Harris to act under the color of law to deprive Plaintiff of her constitutional rights. Therefore, the Court [*22] GRANTS summary judgment in favor of Defendants as to the third cause of action for a § 1983 violation as to Dean and Arlani Harris.

ii. Causation

Defendants argue that Plaintiff's § 1983 claim against Rosalina Harris still fails because she did not violate Plaintiff's constitutional rights or cause the alleged violation. However, the fact that Rosalina Harris did not have direct contact with Plaintiff is irrelevant. Plaintiff's claim is rooted in the theory that if not for Detective's invocation of her law-enforcement status, Plaintiff would not have been unlawfully arrested. Therefore, although it may be true that Rosalina Harris did not directly exercise authority over Plaintiff or personally put the handcuffs on Plaintiff, there remains a genuine issue of fact as to whether Rosalina Harris's involvement induced the officers to arrest Plaintiff and whether she used her authority as a law enforcement officer to so induce them. As such, the Court finds that there remains a triable issue of fact as to whether Rosalina Harris violated Plaintiff's rights.

iii. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Defendants assert that Plaintiff's theory of liability against them is necessarily curtailed by the fact that their [*23] interactions with the LASD are privileged and non-actionable under the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine states that "those who petition the government for redress are immune from statutory liability for their petitioning conduct." Empress LLC v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 419 F.3d 1052, 1056 (9th Cir. 2005). Although originally rooted in antitrust law, the Supreme Court has extended this doctrine to civil suits, see Cal. Motor Transp. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972), and the Ninth Circuit has further clarified that the doctrine applies to § 1983 claims, see Empress LLC, 419 F.3d at 1052.

Having found that there remains a genuine dispute of fact as to whether Rosalina was acting under the color of law, the Court finds that the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine does not apply to the communications and interactions she had with the law enforcement officers. Because she was allegedly acting in her capacity as a law enforcement officer during her interactions with the LASD officers, she was not "petitioning the government for redress" and therefore is not subject to the doctrine. See Empress LLC, 419 F.3d at 1056.

Even if the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine applies here, petitions to the government that involve fraud are not covered by the doctrine under the so-called "sham exception." This exception applies to cases involving bad-faith reports to law enforcement. [*24] See Forro Precision, Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Machines Corp., 673 F.2d 1045, 1061 (9th Cir. 1982) ("If . . . [the defendant] had provided the police with deliberately false information, solely for the purpose of harassing [the plaintiff] or of achieving other ends unrelated to law enforcement, its conduct would unquestionably come within the sham exception."). Defendants claim that there is no allegation that they used the process of reporting a crime as a tool against Plaintiff. To the contrary, Plaintiff has presented enough evidence to create genuine disputes of fact about whether Defendants lied to law enforcement, which deprived the arrest of its legitimacy.

iv. Conclusion

The Court DENIES summary judgment as to Plaintiff's second cause of action for a § 1983 violation against Rosalina Harris. However, the Court GRANTS summary judgment in Defendants' favor as to the third cause of action for § 1983 violations against Dean and Arlani Harris, because they were not acting under the color of law.

IV. Conclusion

The Court GRANTS summary judgment in Defendants' favor as to Plaintiff's malicious prosecution claim and the § 1983 claim against Defendants Dean and Arlani Harris. The Court DENIES summary judgment as to Plaintiff's § 1983 claim against Defendant Rosalina Harris.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[*1139] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Docket No. 15

Plaintiff AlterG, Inc. ("AlterG") brings this action against three of its former employees, Sean Whalen, Thomas Allen, and Michael James Bean (the "Individual Defendants") and the competing company they founded, Boost Treadmills LLC ("Boost") (collectively, "Defendants"). AlterG alleges that Defendants infringed its patents and misused its trade secret information to create Boost products. AlterG's complaint pleads ten causes of action: (1) patent infringement; (2) breach of contract; (3) trade secret misappropriation; (4) breach of fiduciary duty; (5) interference [2] with contract; (6) interference with prospective economic advantage; (7) false advertisement; (8) trade libel; (9) unfair competition; and (10) conspiracy. Pending before the Court is Defendants' motion to dismiss all counts of the complaint. Docket No. 15 ("Mot.").

For the reasons stated on the record at the hearing on May 9, 2019 and discussed below, the motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The complaint alleges the following. Plaintiff AlterG is a "medical device company" that is the "leading provider of impact reduction treadmills," also known as "Anti-Gravity Treadmills," that are used for "orthopedic rehabilitation and training." Docket No. 1 ("Compl.") ¶ 14. "One of the keys [sic] drivers of AlterG's success is its patented Differential Air Pressure ('DAP') technology," which works by "us[ing] a pressurized bag to provide a counterforce to the subject's body weight, reducing their effective weight on the treadmill surface." Id. ¶ 15. From 2012 to 2015, AlterG devoted substantial resources to develop "a lower cost, bare bones AlterG machine" in response to "potential competitors who wanted to develop anti-gravity training and rehab machines using mechanical [3] unweighting and other options, and at a lower price point than AlterG." Id. ¶ 22. AlterG calls this project the "Low-Cost Platform Project," or "LCPP." Id. AlterG ultimately decided not to commercialize or sell any products developed as part of the LCPP. Id. ¶ 23.

The Individual Defendants are three former employees of AlterG. "Whalen was the founder of AlterG" as well as "the initial [*1140] and primary inventor . . . principally involved in developing the technology and products of the company." Id. ¶ 19. He therefore "had intimate access to and knowledge of AlterG products, technology, business plans, intellectual property strategy, marketing strategy, financial data, vendors, suppliers, customers, and confidential research and development." Id. In 2012, Whalen relinquished his former positions at AlterG but continued working for the company as a consultant until he stopped working for AlterG altogether on March 31, 2015. Id. ¶¶ 21, 24. During this consultancy period, "Whalen was the principal consultant and engineer" on the LCPP. Id. ¶ 22.

Allen joined AlterG in 2007 and has "held numerous jobs at AlterG in sales, business development, and in international sales." Id. ¶ 25. Through those [4] positions, he became "intimately familiar with the products of AlterG and specifically the costing, bill of materials (BOM), sales and financial information, customer acquisition, marketing projections, and business strategy for AlterG products." Id. Like Whalen, Allen worked closely with the LCPP team from 2012 through 2015. Id. ¶ 27. Allen was also AlterG's "principal liaison" to Woodway USA ("Woodway"), a longtime supplier of treadmills for AlterG. Id. ¶¶ 25, 28. He resigned from AlterG on April 28, 2015. Id. ¶ 29.

Bean joined AlterG in 2008 and worked in various sales roles at the company. Id. ¶ 34. He resigned from AlterG in April 2017. Id. ¶ 35. "Since Bean's departure from AlterG in April 2017, AlterG has discovered communications between Bean and Allen about Allen's work on a competing anti-gravity unit while Bean was still an employee of AlterG." Id.

Each of the Individual Defendants signed various confidentiality and non-disclosure agreements with AlterG during their employment with the company, which provided that they would "not use or disclose AlterG's proprietary and confidential information in any way contrary to the benefit of AlterG." Id. ¶¶ 20, 25, 34. AlterG and Woodway [5] also "entered into various confidentiality agreements whereby AlterG would provide to Woodway proprietary and confidential information to assist Woodway to build and supply AlterG with anti-gravity units." Id. ¶ 31.

Boost was formed at the end of 2016 and registered in April 2017. Id. ¶ 36. Allen and Bean are founders of Boost, and Whalen worked for the company in product development. Id. AlterG believes that "Defendants conspired almost immediately [upon leaving AlterG] to create a competing machine incorporating AlterG intellectual property," and that "Boost was developing an unweighting treadmill well prior to the company's registration." Id. ¶¶ 36, 39. As part of this process, Whalen and Allen started "secretly" working with Woodway and "utilized confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information from the [LCPP], and other AlterG intellectual property, to shortcut the research and development time to come to market with a lower cost unweighting treadmill." Id. ¶ 33. "At the end of 2017, Boost introduced its first product—the Boost One," which "infringes AlterG patents" and "incorporates numerous technology features developed by AlterG in connection with the [LCPP]." Id. ¶ 38. [6]

AlterG further alleges that Defendants "falsely claim that the problematic Boost One is a superior product over the AlterG DAP systems 'at a fraction of the cost.'" Id. ¶ 44. Defendants have also "told customers and prospects false statements to denigrate AlterG and its superior technology, falsely claiming that AlterG was going out of business, is in poor financial health and will not be able to get Woodway treadmills [*1141] anymore." Id. ¶ 45. The upshot of Defendants' allegedly unlawful practices is that Defendants have been able to "sell over 20 units [of Boost products] to date to customers considering an AlterG unit." Id. ¶ 46.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

For a plaintiff to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss after Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) and Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), his factual allegations "must . . . suggest that the claim has at least a plausible chance of success." Levitt v. Yelp! Inc., 765 F.3d 1123, 1134-35 (9th Cir. 2014). In other words, the complaint "must allege 'factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.'" Id. (citations omitted). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Where a complaint pleads [7] facts that are "merely consistent with" a defendant's liability, it "stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility 'of entitlement to relief.'" Id.

The Ninth Circuit has outlined a two-step process for evaluating pleadings against this standard. "First, to be entitled to the presumption of truth, allegations in a complaint or counterclaim may not simply recite the elements of a cause of action, but must contain sufficient allegations of underlying facts to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively. Second, the factual allegations that are taken as true must plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief, such that it is not unfair to require the opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation." Levitt, 765 F.3d at 1135 (citations omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Patent Infringement

AlterG alleges that Defendants directly, indirectly, and willfully infringed five of AlterG's patents. The '795 and '572 Patents (the "Weight Calibration Patents") relate to systems that adjust the air pressure inside the treadmill chamber in response to the body weight of the user. See Compl. ¶¶ 67-84. The complaint provides the following descriptions of the Weight [8] Calibration Patents:

- [F]eatures of the technology claimed in the '795 Patent provide a system by applying pressure to a portion of a body of an individual in a chamber having an aperture along a vertical axis for receiving the portion of the body of the individual. A pressure sensor is coupled to the chamber for measuring a pressure inside the chamber. A negative feedback control system, calibrates, adjusts, and maintains the pressure inside the chamber. Compl. ¶ 67.
- Broadly speaking, the '572 Patents claims a system by applying pressure to a portion of a body of an individual in a chamber having an aperture along a vertical axis for receiving the portion of the body of the individual. A pressure sensor is coupled to the chamber for measuring a pressure inside the chamber. A negative feedback control system calibrates, adjusts, and maintains the pressure inside the chamber. Compl. ¶ 73.

The '716 Patent, '764 Patent, and '656 Patents (the "Height Adjustment Patents") relate to adjustable mechanisms that allow a treadmill to accommodate users of different [*1142] heights. Compl. ¶¶ 49-66. The complaint provides the following descriptions of the Height Adjustment Patents:

- Broadly speaking, the '716 Patent claims various embodiments of Differential Air [9] Pressure systems and methods of using such systems. Without reference to the particular construction of any claim terms, features of the technology claimed in the '716 Patent include a Differential Air Pressure system that (1) may comprise a chamber configured to receive a portion of a user's lower body; (2) the Differential Air Pressure system may further comprise a user seal that seals the pressure chamber to the user's body; and (3) the height of the user seal may be adjusted to accommodate users with various body heights. Compl. ¶ 49.

• Broadly speaking, the '656 Patents claims various embodiments of Differential Air Pressure systems and components for Differential Air Pressure systems. Without reference to the particular construction of any claim terms, features of the technology claimed in the '656 Patents include (1) various methods and related structures for sealing a user into a pressurizable chamber; (2) various methods and related structures for changing the shape and/or height of the chamber; (3) various types and configurations of chambers and support structures for chambers; and (4) various methods and related systems for treating various conditions using the differential air pressure systems, including [10] but not limited to obesity, cardiac disease, multiple sclerosis, cerebral palsy, or Down Syndrome. Compl. ¶ 55.

• Broadly speaking, the '764 Patent claims various embodiments of Differential Air Pressure systems and methods of using such systems. Without reference to the particular construction of any claim terms, features of the technology claimed in the '764 Patent include a Differential Air Pressure system that may comprise (1) a chamber configured to receive a portion of a user's lower body and to create an air pressure differential upon the user's body; (2) the Differential Air Pressure system may further comprise a user seal that seals the pressure chamber to the user's body; and (3) the height of the user seal may be adjusted to accommodate users with various body heights. Compl. ¶ 61.

1. Direct Infringement

The parties dispute the pleading standard that applies to claims of direct patent infringement. See Mot. at 6-7; Docket No. 19 ("Opp.") at 4. This dispute arises from a conflict between the general pleading standard set forth in Twombly and Iqbal and the more lenient standard formerly applied to direct infringement claims pursuant to Form 18 to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Form 18 was abrogated [11] in December 2015. See *Novitaz, Inc. v. inMarket Media, LLC, No. 16-CV-06795-EJD, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81491, 2017 WL 2311407, at 1 (N.D. Cal. May 26, 2017). Since then, "the majority of district courts"—including this court—"have assessed the sufficiency of claims for direct patent infringement under the standard set forth in Twombly and Iqbal." *2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81491, [WL] at 2 (collecting cases); see Software Research, Inc. v. Dynatrace LLC, 316 F. Supp. 3d 1112, 1116 (N.D. Cal. 2018). The Court will continue to apply the same standard here.

A direct infringement claim "does not satisfy the standards of Twombly and Iqbal where it does not at least [*1143] contain factual allegations that the accused product practices every element of at least one exemplary claim." *Novitaz, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81491, 2017 WL 2311407, at 3. This requirement is animated by the principle that "the failure to meet a single limitation is sufficient to negate infringement of [a] claim." Laitram Corp. v. Rexnord, Inc., 939 F.2d 1533, 1535 (Fed. Cir. 1991).

AlterG does not allege that Boost products practice every element of at least one exemplary claim. In particular, Defendants point out that the complaint contains no allegations that Boost products practice a key limitation of each of the two types of patents. The Weight Calibration Patents describe a mechanism that calibrates the pressure inside the treadmill chamber in response to the body weight of the user. See Compl., Exh. D ('795 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming a method of "generating a relationship [12] between pressure and actual weight of the individual" and "regulating the pressure in the chamber with respect to the weight of the individual based on the relationship"); Exh. E ('572 Patents) (Claim 1 claiming an "exercise apparatus" that "is configured to receive an input of the individual's weight . . ., generate a measured weight and positive pressure relationship for the individual, and . . . to regulate the positive pressure in the chamber by referring to only the generated relationship."). The complaint does not allege that Defendants' products regulate chamber pressure by reference to a measured user weight. In fact, the complaint appears to say the opposite. See Compl. ¶ 44 ("[T]he Boost One [does] not calibrate to specific user's actual weight and volume dimensions like the AlterG DAP systems . . . .").

The Height Adjustment Patents describe adjustable mechanisms that accommodate treadmill users of various heights. See Compl., Exh. A ('716 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming "a height adjustment assembly attached to the chamber adjacent to the seal interface"); Exh. B ('656 Patents) (Claim 1 claiming "a height adjustable structure having a plurality of height adjustment slots in a front of the chamber and a plurality [13] of height adjustment slots in a rear of the chamber"); Exh. C ('764 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming "a movable assembly comprising . . . a height adjustment bar attached to the seal frame . . . configured to provide a vertical position adjustment of the height of the user seal by vertically moving the seal frame"). The complaint does not allege that the Boost One contains any height adjustment mechanism. AlterG's direct infringement claim is therefore inadequately pled. See *Atlas IP LLC v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., No. 15-CV-05469-EDL, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60211, 2016 WL 1719545, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 9, 2016) (dismissing a direct infringement claim where "the complaint entirely fails to address [a] necessary element of claim 1").

2. Indirect Infringement

"[L]iability for indirect infringement of a patent requires direct infringement." In re Bill of Lading Transmission & Processing Sys. Patent Litig., 681 F.3d 1323, 1333 (Fed. Cir. 2012). Because AlterG's direct infringement claims have not been adequately pled, its indirect infringement claims fail as well.

3. Willful Infringement

AlterG alleges that Defendants' infringement of its patents is willful and therefore warrants enhanced damages under 35 U.S.C. § 284. However, this willful infringement claim must be dismissed because a finding of direct infringement is a prerequisite for willful infringement. See Halo Elecs., Inc. v. Pulse Elecs., Inc., 136 S. Ct. 1923, 1930, 195 L. Ed. 2d 278 (2016).

[*1144] Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's patent [14] infringement claims is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend its direct infringement claim.

B. Trade Secret Misappropriation

AlterG's third cause of action is trade secret misappropriation. To state a claim for trade secret misappropriation under the DTSA, a plaintiff must allege that: "(1) the plaintiff owned a trade secret; (2) the defendant misappropriated the trade secret; and (3) the defendant's actions damaged the plaintiff." Alta Devices, Inc. v. LG Elecs., Inc., 343 F. Supp. 3d 868, 877 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (citation omitted); see 18 U.S.C. § 1839(5) (defining "misappropriation" in the context of trade secrets).

1. Alleging Trade Secrets with Sufficient Particularity

Defendants argue that AlterG fails to identify its allegedly misappropriated trade secrets with sufficient particularity to state a claim under the DTSA. Mot. at 13-15. The Court agrees.

"A plaintiff need not spell out the details of the trade secret," but must "describe the subject matter of the trade secret with sufficient particularity to separate it from matters of general knowledge in the trade or of special persons who are skilled in the trade, and to permit the defendant to ascertain at least the boundaries within which the secret lies."[1] Alta Devices, 343 F. Supp. 3d at 881 (citations, internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). Alta Devices [15] provides helpful guidance as to the degree of particularity that is required. The court there found that the plaintiff, a manufacturer of thin-film solar technology, adequately pleaded its trade secret claim based on a combination of factors. First, the plaintiff identified "the exact technology in question: thin-film GaAs solar technology." Id. Second, the plaintiff listed with specificity the types of trade secrets relating to the "thin-film GaAs solar technology": "[m]ethods of[] high throughput thin-film deposition; epitaxial lift-off of the thin-film; and GaAs substrate maintenance and re-use," as well as "confidential cost analysis; proofs and tests of manufacturing concepts and techniques; tool roadmaps; manufacturing process flows; and identification of equipment and

[1] Plaintiff asserts that the "sufficient particularity" pleading standard applies only to claims under the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("CUTSA"), and not the DTSA. See Opp. at 9. Not so. The majority of courts in this district have held that the same standard is applied to both DTSA and CUTSA claims because "[t]he elements of misappropriation under the DTSA are similar to those under the CUTSA." Alta Devices, 343 F. Supp. 3d at 877; see id. at 880-81 ("Courts have held that the DTSA and the CUTSA share the same pleading requirements for the identification of trade secrets."). But see *Physician's Surrogacy, Inc. v. German, No. 17CV0718-MMA (WVG), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135325, 2017 WL 3622329, at 9 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 23, 2017).

equipment vendors; and information related to the foregoing." Id. In addition to the fact that the technology was described with specificity, a non-disclosure agreement between the parties described with further particularity the confidential information that was imparted to defendants, for example, "CVD technology and its commercial viability," including the "CVD (Alta 2T) chamber scheme," "growth rate," "thin [16] film quality," "uniformity," "gas utilization efficiency," and "scalability and short cycle time feasibility." Id. Because the plaintiff's trade secret claims were based on the confidential information exchanged pursuant to the non-disclosure agreement, the court concluded that the defendant had fair notice of the scope of the trade secrets asserted. Id.

[*1145] In contrast, the court in Vendavo, Inc. v. Price f(x) AG, No. 17-CV-06930-RS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48637, 2018 WL 1456697 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 23, 2018) found that the plaintiff failed to allege its trade secret claim with sufficient particularity. The plaintiff, a provider of business software, claimed that the defendant had misappropriated trade secrets including "source code, customer lists and customer related information, pricing information, vendor lists and related information, marketing plans and strategic business development initiatives, 'negative know-how' learned through the course of research and development, and other information related to the development of its price-optimization software, including ideas and plans for product enhancements." *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48637, [WL] at 3. The court determined that the plaintiff had "set out its purported trade secrets in broad, categorical terms, more descriptive [17] of the types of information that generally may qualify as protectable trade secrets than as any kind of listing of particular trade secrets [it] has a basis to believe actually were misappropriated here." *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48637, [WL] at 4 (emphasis in original).

Here, AlterG alleges that Defendants misappropriated the following trade secrets:

- "[N]umerous learnings from AlterG's Low-Cost Platform Project that explored market alternatives that included positive and negative learnings of low cost mechanical unweighted systems, air pressure systems, and Differential Air Pressure systems under strict confidentiality and non-disclosure agreements. Compl. ¶ 40.

- Trade secrets "related to AlterG's development of anti-gravity rehabilitation products" and "mechanical unweighting mainframes," including "technology and negative information and learnings." Id. ¶¶ 95-96.

- "[T]rade secret information related to AlterG's design and development of its anti-gravity rehabilitation and training units, including, but not limited to its marketing and product strategy, cost strategies, customer needs, material selection and fabrication techniques, engineering and structural technology, selection and qualification of components, knowledge [18] of vendors with appropriate, specialized skills, and technology innovation." Id. ¶ 102.

These allegations more closely resemble the broad categories of information in Vendavo than the specific descriptions provided in Alta Devices. The references in paragraphs 40 and 95-96 to "positive and negative learnings" and "technology and negative information and learnings" are vague. The types of information listed in paragraph 102 are somewhat more concrete, but are not tethered to a specific technology; it cannot be discerned which aspects of AlterG's "anti-gravity rehabilitation and training units" the information pertains to. And although AlterG, like the plaintiff in Alta Devices, has alleged that the trade secrets at issue are covered by confidentiality agreements between the parties, AlterG only summarizes rather broadly the categories of information protected by the agreements. See Compl. at 5 n.2 (defining "Confidential Information" to include "techniques, sketches, drawings, models, inventions, know-how, processes, apparatus, equipment, algorithms, software programs, software source documents, and formulae related to the current, future and proposed products and services of the Company, [19] and includes, without limitation, its respective information concerning research, experimental work, development, design details, and specifications, engineering, financial information, procurement requirements, purchasing [*1146] manufacturing, customer lists, business forecasts, sales, and merchandising and marketing plans and information"). AlterG has not attached the agreements to the complaint, and its allegations fail to "describe the subject matter of the trade secret with sufficient particularity to separate it from matters of general knowledge in the trade or of special persons who are skilled in the trade." Alta Devices, 343 F. Supp. 3d at 881.

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's trade secret claim is GRANTED. AlterG is granted leave to amend its complaint to allege with greater specificity the types of trade secrets that were misappropriated and the exact technology to which they pertain. Such allegations may be enhanced if the confidentiality agreements between the parties detail the protected information that AlterG imparted to Defendants. In amending its trade secret claim, AlterG should also take care to delineate the boundaries between its trade secrets and its information that has been made public [20] through patents and patent applications. See Aqua-Lung Am., Inc. v. Am. Underwater Prods., 709 F. Supp. 2d 773, 788 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (explaining that "a plaintiff has a viable trade secret claim that would protect his proprietary unpatented technology[] only if he reveals implementation details and techniques beyond what was disclosed in his patent.") (emphasis in original) (citation omitted).

2. Standing under DTSA

Defendants separately argue that AlterG's DTSA claim must be dismissed because AlterG only alleges acts of misappropriation that took place prior to May 11, 2016, the effective date of the DTSA. Mot. at 15. The DTSA applies to "any misappropriation of a trade secret . . . for which any act occurs on or after the date of the enactment of [the] Act." Defend Trade Secrets Act of 2016, Pub. L. No. 114-153, § 2(e), 130 Stat. 376, 381 (2016). The complaint alleges that "Defendants conspired almost immediately [after resigning from AlterG] to create a competing machine incorporating AlterG intellectual property." Compl. ¶ 39. Defendants seize upon the "almost immediately" language to suggest that the alleged acts of misappropriation must have started as early as April 2015, when Whalen and Allen resigned from AlterG, and before the DTSA was enacted. Mot. at 15.

AlterG counters that, although Defendants may have initially [21] disclosed its trade secrets in 2015, they used the secret information in 2017, when they were developing the Boost One. Opp. at 9-10; see Compl. ¶ 38. This allegation is sufficient to support liability under the DTSA because "misappropriation" is defined as the "disclosure or use of a trade secret." 18 U.S.C. § 1839(5) (emphasis added). Relying on § 1839(5), courts have generally held that the continued use of a trade secret after the effective date of the DTSA is actionable, even if the secret was initially disclosed prior to May 11, 2016. *See, e.g., Cave Consulting Grp., Inc. v. Truven Health Analytics Inc., No. 15-CV-02177-SI, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62109, 2017 WL 1436044, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 24, 2017); *AllCells, LLC v. Zhai, No. 16-CV-07323-EMC, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44808, 2017 WL 2929380, at 1 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 27, 2017).[2]

[*1147] The Court therefore finds that AlterG has standing to bring its trade secret claim.

C. Breach of Contract

AlterG's second cause of action alleges that each Individual Defendant entered into confidentiality agreements with AlterG and breached those agreements "by integrating and using AlterG's proprietary and confidential information into the Boost treadmill products." Compl. ¶ 91. The elements of a breach of contract claim are: (1) the existence of a contract, (2) performance or excuse for [22] nonperformance, (3) defendant's breach, and (4) damages. Oasis West Realty, LLC v. Goldman, 51 Cal. 4th 811, 821, 124 Cal. Rptr. 3d 256, 250 P.3d 1115 (2011). Defendants argue that AlterG fails to adequately plead three of these four elements.

1. Existence of a Contract

First, Defendants argue that the complaint does not describe with specificity the terms of the contracts that were allegedly breached. Mot. at 16. A plaintiff can state a claim for breach of contract by quoting verbatim the terms of the contract or attaching the contract to the complaint, but he is not required to do so. "[A] complaint for breach of contract must include the contract itself or plead its essential terms." *Gross v. Symantec Corp., No. C 12-00154 CRB, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107356, 2012 WL 3116158, at 11 (N.D. Cal. July 31, 2012).

[2] It is true, as Defendants note, that the court in Avago Techs. U.S. Inc. v. Nanoprecision Prod., Inc., No. 16-CV-03737-JCS, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13484, 2017 WL 412524 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 31, 2017) ruled the other way. However, Avago Techs pre-dates cases like AllCells and Cave Consulting, and its holding was informed in part by the plaintiff's inability to "cite[] any authority suggesting that the DTSA allows a misappropriation claim to be asserted based on the continued use of information that was disclosed prior to the effective date of the statute." *2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13484, [WL] at 9. Since then, cases have consistently endorsed just that view.

Here, AlterG has not pleaded all of the essential terms of the relevant contracts. While the complaint states clearly that the contracts at issue require Individual Defendants to "keep confidential and not use or disclose AlterG's proprietary and confidential information in any way contrary to the benefit of AlterG," Compl. ¶¶ 20, 25-26, 34, it does not allege with sufficient particularity what the "proprietary and confidential information" is. The complaint merely lists broad categories of information covered by the agreements. See id. ¶ 34; id. at 5 n.2. As explained above, these broad categories are insufficient [23] to put Defendants on notice of the scope of the trade secrets that are the subject of AlterG's DTSA claim. AlterG's breach of contract claim is also predicated on Defendants' alleged disclosure of trade secrets, and AlterG must allege with more specificity the types of information protected by its confidentiality agreements.

Two other arguments Defendants make are easily disposed of. The first is that AlterG references multiple confidentiality agreements but does not specify which particular ones were breached. Mot. at 16. But the complaint indicates that Defendants breached all of the agreements. See Compl. ¶ 91; Opp. at 11. The second argument is that the complaint does not explicitly state whether the confidentiality agreements continued to have effect after Defendants' employment with AlterG terminated. Mot. at 17. The complaint alleges, however, that an agreement signed by Whalen provided that he would not disclose AlterG's confidential information during his work with AlterG "or at any time thereafter." Compl. ¶ 21. The allegations with respect to Allen's and Bean's agreements are not so explicit, but the complaint states that the agreements required Allen and Bean to "not disclose any [24] of AlterG's confidential and proprietary information without AlterG's permission" without mentioning any time limitation. Id. ¶ 88. It is therefore reasonable to infer that the duty of confidentiality imposed by Defendants' agreements extended beyond their periods of employment.

[*1148] 2. Defendants' Breach

Next, Defendants argue that AlterG "failed to plead specifically how each individual has breached his respective contract(s)" because AlterG nowhere mentions "what specific confidential information or trade secrets were in fact integrated into the Boost One." Mot. at 17-18. The complaint currently alleges that the Boost One utilized "an anti-gravity unit that derived directly from the technology Whalen and other AlterG engineers developed for AlterG in the Low Cost Platform Project"; that Bean, while still employed at AlterG, "disclosed confidential and proprietary information about AlterG technology, marketing strategy, and prospective and actual customers and test sites to his friends at Boost"; and that "Defendants have taken technology and negative information and learnings from the [Low Cost Platform] Project . . . and applied them to the Boost One product." Id. ¶¶ 33, 36, 95. Once [25] AlterG amends the complaint to describe the terms of its confidentiality agreements and the substance of its trade secrets with more particularity, it will be able to allege the specific trade secrets incorporated into the Boost One in violation of the confidentiality agreements.

3. Damages

Finally, Defendants claim that AlterG has failed to explain how the alleged breaches caused it to suffer damages, given that AlterG admits the LCPP was "not commercialized." Compl. ¶ 43. Defendants misapprehend AlterG's damages theory. The complaint states that Defendants used AlterG's confidential information to "unfairly compete with AlterG and sell over 20 units to date to customers considering an AlterG unit," causing "monetary damages" to AlterG. Compl. ¶ 46. It is well-established that non-speculative lost sales or profits can constitute contractual damages. See *Illumina, Inc. v. Ariosa Diagnostics, Inc., No. C 14-01921 SI, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109531, 2014 WL 3897076, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 7, 2014); Grupe v. Glick, 26 Cal. 2d 680, 692, 160 P.2d 832 (1945). AlterG may not have brought LCPP-derived products to market, but it has nevertheless alleged that it has lost potential sales of its treadmills as a result of Defendants' exploitation of its confidential information from the LCPP. Allegations of "lost sales or profits" caused by [26] a competitor's contractual breach are sufficient to establish damages at the pleadings stage. *Openwave Messaging, Inc. v. Open-Xchange, Inc., No. 16-CV-00253-WHO, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 150713, 2016 WL 6393503, at 9 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 28, 2016).

Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's breach of contract claim is GRANTED. AlterG is granted leave to amend its complaint to either attach the relevant confidentiality agreements or to allege their essential terms.

D. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

AlterG's fourth cause of action alleges that Whalen breached the fiduciary duty he owed to AlterG by using AlterG's proprietary and confidential information to benefit Boost. Compl. ¶¶ 115-19. To state a claim for breach of fiduciary duty, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the existence of a fiduciary duty; (2) breach of the fiduciary duty; and (3) damage proximately caused by the breach. Pierce v. Lyman, 1 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1101, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 236 (1991). Here, Defendants do not dispute that Whalen owed a fiduciary duty to AlterG while he was serving as its director, but contends that the duty ended when he joined Boost, because by that point he was no longer a director of AlterG. Mot. at 18-19.

Defendants are correct that, as a general matter, an officer's fiduciary duty to their employer ends upon their [*1149] resignation. See GAB Bus. Servs., Inc. v. Lindsey & Newsom Claim Servs., Inc., 83 Cal. App. 4th 409, 421, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665 (2000), disapproved of on other grounds by [27] Reeves v. Hanlon, 33 Cal. 4th 1140, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 289, 95 P.3d 513 (2004). However, "[c]ourts addressing the issue have rejected an expansive reading of the decision in GAB Bus. Servs. and appropriately recognized that officers are also charged with a continuing duty to protect privileged and confidential information, which continues even after they leave the company." *Sonoma Pharm., Inc. v. Collidion Inc., No. 17-CV-01459-EDL, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 199088, 2018 WL 3398940, at 7 (N.D. Cal. June 1, 2018) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Indeed, the Restatement of Agency makes clear that, post termination, an agent continues to have "a duty to the principal not to use or to disclose to third persons . . . trade secrets, written lists of names, or other similar confidential matters given to him only for the principal's use." Restatement (Second) of Agency § 396(b). This means that Whalen owed a continuing fiduciary duty to AlterG not to use its confidential information to its detriment, even after he joined Boost. *See Language Line Servs., Inc. v. Language Servs. Assocs., LLC, No. C 10-02605 JW, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28170, 2011 WL 13153247, at 8 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 15, 2011) (finding breach of fiduciary claim adequately pled where plaintiff alleged that defendant "used his access to Plaintiff's proprietary customer information to further his own anti-competitive agenda during his subsequent employment with [a competitor]").

However, the breach of [28] fiduciary duty claim arises from the same confidentiality agreements underlying AlterG's breach of contract claim. As explained above, AlterG needs to describe the terms of the confidentiality agreements and the trade secrets they protect with more particularity so that it can be ascertained whether Whalen's disclosures constituted a breach of his fiduciary duty. Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's breach of fiduciary duty claim is GRANTED, and AlterG may amend its complaint to either attach the relevant confidentiality agreements or to allege their essential terms.

E. Interference with Contract

AlterG's fifth cause of action is interference with contract. Compl. ¶¶ 121-27. "The elements which a plaintiff must plead to state the cause of action for intentional interference with contractual relations are (1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage." Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990). Here, the complaint alleges that Defendants interfered with three sets [29] of contracts: the confidentiality agreements between AlterG and Woodway; contracts between AlterG and its vendors, suppliers, and customers; and the confidentiality agreements between each Individual Defendant and AlterG. Compl. ¶¶ 121-124. Defendants argue that AlterG's allegations are deficient as to all three.

1. Confidentiality Agreements between AlterG and Woodway

Defendants claim that the complaint fails to specify what agreements between AlterG and Woodway were interfered with. Mot. at 20. Defendants also argue that the complaint "presents no facts that support a possible breach of such agreements." Id.

[*1150] The first argument in unpersuasive. The complaint specifies that the contracts at issue are two confidentiality agreements between AlterG and Woodway: "a Master Agreement signed May 30, 2007, and a subsequent agreement signed in 2012." Compl. ¶ 32. The essential terms of the agreements are also specified:

"AlterG would provide to Woodway proprietary and confidential information to assist Woodway to build and supply AlterG with anti-gravity units," including "all specifications, drawings, files, instructions, and other documents," and this information was "not to be shared or used [30] with or on behalf of any other person or entity." Id. ¶¶ 30-31.

However, Defendants' second argument has merit. The complaint states that "Whalen and Allen started secretly working with Woodway on developing a low-cost anti-gravity unit," and "utilized confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information from the [LCPP], and other AlterG intellectual property, to shortcut the research and development time to come to market with a lower cost unweighting treadmill utilizing a Woodway treadmill." Compl. ¶ 33. This does not mean, however, that Whalen and Allen induced or caused Woodway to disclose AlterG's confidential information to them. In fact, the complaint does not even allege that Woodway in fact disclosed any information; it merely states that Whalen and Allen "utilized" information. It is difficult to imagine that Woodway possessed any confidential information from the LCPP that Whalen and Allen did not already have, given that "Whalen was the principal consultant and engineer" on the LCPP and Allen was also heavily involved in the LCPP. Id. ¶¶ 22, 27. If anything, as AlterG's "principal liaison" to Woodway, Allen may have been the one who conveyed AlterG's information to Woodway [31] in the first place. Id. ¶¶ 25, 28.

Thus, AlterG has failed to adequately allege that Defendants induced Woodway to breach its contracts with AlterG.

2. Contracts with Vendors, Suppliers, and Customers

AlterG's allegations with respect to its vendors, suppliers, and customers are wholly lacking. The complaint states only that "[c]ontracts existed between AlterG . . . and AlterG vendors, suppliers, and customers" and that "Defendants have . . . interfered with contracts between AlterG and its vendors, suppliers, and customers." Compl. ¶¶ 121, 124. AlterG does not identify any of these "vendors, suppliers, and customers," nor provide any details about the contracts and contractual provisions with which Defendants allegedly interfered. AlterG has therefore failed to state a claim with respect to these contracts. See AccuImage Diagnostics Corp v. Terarecon, Inc., 260 F. Supp. 2d 941, 956 (N.D. Cal. 2003) (dismissing interference with contract claim because plaintiff merely made "conclusory allegations that valid 'contracts' exist between itself and an unspecified third party" and provided no "facts surrounding the type or nature of the 'contracts' [defendants'] conduct allegedly interfered with").

3. Confidentiality Agreements between Individual Defendants and AlterG

AlterG alleges [32] that Defendants interfered with each other's confidentiality agreements with AlterG. Compl. ¶ 124. Defendants counter that "[t]here is not a single statement, allegation, or fact set forth in the complaint regarding Defendant inducing another Defendant to breach" these agreements. Reply at 11. It is true that while the complaint alleges that the Individual Defendants disclosed confidential information to each other, it stops short of explicitly stating that they [*1151] intentionally induced each other to disclose this information. See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 36 ("Bean . . . disclosed confidential and proprietary information about AlterG technology, marketing strategy, and prospective and actual customers and test sites to his friends at Boost" while he was still working at AlterG.). Nevertheless, a reasonable inference in AlterG's favor can be drawn that Defendants encouraged each other's disclosure. The allegation that they "conspired . . . to create a competing machine incorporating AlterG's intellectual property" undercuts the possibility that Whalen, Allen, and Bean each made the independent decision to disclose AlterG's information to each other without any prompting. Compl. ¶ 39.

However, because [33] AlterG needs to allege with more specificity the essential terms of the confidentiality agreements underlying this contractual interference claim, the Court will dismiss this claim pending AlterG's amendment.

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss the interference with contract claim is GRANTED with leave to amend.

F. Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

AlterG's sixth cause of action alleges that Defendants interfered with its prospective economic advantage with Woodway and with AlterG's vendors, suppliers, and prospective and current customers. Compl. ¶¶ 129-33. The elements of a claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are: "(1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third person containing the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) knowledge by the defendant of the existence of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) damages to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant." Blank v. Kirwan, 39 Cal. 3d 311, 330, 216 Cal. Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58 (1985). "The chief practical distinction between interference with contract and interference with prospective [34] economic advantage is that a broader range of privilege to interfere is recognized when the relationship or economic advantage interfered with is only prospective." Pac. Gas, 50 Cal. 3d at 1126. Nevertheless, courts have made clear that "[t]he law precludes recovery for overly speculative expectancies by initially requiring proof" that it is "reasonably probable that the prospective economic advantage would have been realized but for defendant's interference." Westside Ctr. Assocs. v. Safeway Stores 23, Inc., 42 Cal. App. 4th 507, 522, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 (1996) (emphasis in original) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

AlterG's vague allegations are insufficient to state a claim for interference of prospective economic advantage. With respect to Woodway, the complaint explains that Woodway supplies treadmills to AlterG and has long worked with AlterG to build treadmills "using AlterG's proprietary designs." Compl. ¶ 30. Thus, it can be reasonably inferred that this established commercial relationship contains the probability of future economic benefit to AlterG as Woodway continues to supply AlterG with treadmills. However, AlterG wholly fails to explain how Defendants' actions have jeopardized the ongoing supplier relationship between Woodway and AlterG.[3] [*1152] The complaint does not allege that Defendants [35] intentionally acted to disrupt Woodway's supply of treadmills to AlterG, or that the supply was actually disrupted. Indeed, "[t]o this day, Woodway continues to supply treadmills to AlterG." Compl. ¶ 30.

The allegations are even more lacking when it comes to AlterG's relationship with its "vendors, suppliers, and prospective and current customers." Compl. ¶¶ 131. Nowhere does the complaint identify these entities or allege any facts to explain their economic relationship with AlterG, much less suggest that such relationships contain[s] the probability of future economic benefit to [AlterG]." Blank, 39 Cal. 3d at 330. Without any facts, it is impossible for the Court to determine whether it is reasonably probable that the prospective economic advantage would have been realized but for Defendants' interference. See *Buxton v. Eagle Test Sys., Inc., No. C-08-04404 RMW, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29190, 2010 WL 1240749, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 26, 2010) (dismissing interference claim because the complaint did "not contain factual allegations about the existence of any specific economic relationships with identifiable third parties").

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's interference with prospective economic advantage claim is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend.

G. False Advertisement [36]

AlterG's seventh cause of action alleges that Defendants engaged in false advertising in violation of § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). A false advertising claim under § 43(a) has five elements: "(1) a false statement of fact by the defendant in a commercial advertisement about its own or another's product; (2) the statement actually deceived or has the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (3) the deception is material, in that it is likely to influence the purchasing decision; (4) the defendant caused the false statement to enter interstate commerce; and (5) the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to defendant or by a lessening of the goodwill associated with its products." Skydive Arizona, Inc. v. Quattrocchi, 673 F.3d 1105, 1110 (9th Cir. 2012) (citing 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B)).

Because AlterG alleges that "Defendants' false and misleading statements were made in bad faith, willfully, knowingly, and intentionally," Compl. ¶ 136, its false advertising claim sounds in fraud and is subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). See TransFresh Corp. v. Ganzerla &

[3] AlterG alleges Defendants induced Woodway to breach its confidentiality agreements with AlterG, but the complaint does not indicate that any such breach in confidentiality disrupted Woodway's supply of treadmills to AlterG.

Assoc., Inc., 862 F. Supp. 2d 1009, 1017-18 (N.D. Cal. 2012). Accordingly, the complaint must allege "'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the fraud." Id. at 1017 (quoting Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003)).

AlterG's false advertising claim does not [37] meet the Rule 9(b) pleading standard. The complaint adequately alleges "what" the content of the alleged false statements were and "how" they were false:

> (1) [T]he Boost One claims to adjust air pressure to allow specific body weight calibration at any body weight, between full weight and 20% of body weight, and can be adjusted in 1% increments of body weight. In fact, the Boost One, as tested, does not calibrate to a specific user, does not unweight in precise [*1153] 1% of body weight increments, and cannot even distinguish an over 50 lb. weight difference between three different users that happen to use the same shorts and same rack height adjustment;
> (2) Boost claims the Boost One is safe and precise. But, not only does the Boost One not calibrate to specific user's actual weight and volume dimensions like the AlterG DAP systems, but the Boost One, as tested, did not record an error or stop when the air pressure dropped during a session when the shorts were unzipped. The Boost One air pressure also oscillates up and down during a session and does not remain stable — though no difference in calibration or pressure was noted on the machine;
> (3) Booast also implies that the Boost One is suitable for [38] use in medical markets or is approved for hospital and clinic use so that it may be "prescribe[d]" for "patients" under the heading "Therapy & Rehabilitation" under product features at woodway.com. On information and belief, the Boost One has not been FDA approved like the AlterG DAP system, and Boost is actively deceiving consumers in their Boost One specification sheet; [and]
> (4) Boost also falsely implies that the Boost One has enjoyed wide market adoption by imputing the Woodway 4Front market to Defendants' Boost One. While the Woodway 4Front is a popular and widely distributed treadmill, on information and belief, the Boost One that incorporates a Woodway 4Front has not enjoyed such widespread acceptance or use by "top athletes" and "Hollywood stars."

Compl. ¶ 44 (line breaks added).

But the complaint does not specify "when" and "where" these statements were made. It merely asserts that "Defendants have disseminated" these statements. Id. This is not enough. See TransFresh Corp. v. Ganzerla & Assoc., Inc., 862 F. Supp. 2d 1009, 1020 (N.D. Cal. 2012) (dismissing false advertising claim where plaintiff did not "allege specific facts as to when or where these statements were made").[4] Without information about where and when Defendants made the alleged false statements, [39] the Court cannot determine whether the statements were "disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constitute 'advertising' or 'promotion'" within the meaning of the Lanham Act. Coastal Abstract Serv., Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 173 F.3d 725, 734-35 (9th Cir. 1999) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B)); see, e.g., Prager Univ. v. Google LLC, No. 17-CV-06064-LHK, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51000, 2018 WL 1471939, at *10 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 26, 2018) (dismissing false advertising claim because the complaint lacked enough detail from which the court could determine whether the challenged representations were sufficiently disseminated).

The complaint similarly fails to identify the "who." "[W]ithin the realm of Rule 9(b), 'everyone did everything' allegations are not countenanced. Prime Media Grp. LLC v. Acer Am. Corp., No. 5:12-CV-05020 EJD, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22437, 2013 WL 621529, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 19, 2013) (citing Destfino v. Reiswig, [*1154] 630 F.3d 952, 958 (9th Cir. 2011)). But that is exactly what AlterG has alleged here. The complaint's allegations regarding false advertising are completely undifferentiated, merely asserting that "Defendants" are responsible for the statements. See Compl. ¶ 44. Although "there is no absolute requirement that where several defendants are sued in connection with an alleged fraudulent scheme, the complaint must identify false statements made by each and [4] The only specific fact AlterG alleges in this regard is that Defendants' misrepresentation that the "Boost One is suitable for use in medical markets or is approved for hospital and clinic use" is displayed at "woodway.com." Compl. ¶ 44. However, as Defendants point out, AlterG has alleged no facts to suggest that this statement made on Woodway's website is attributable to Defendants.

every defendant," and, "at a minimum, identif[y] the role of [each] defendant[] in the alleged fraudulent scheme." [40] Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007) (emphasis removed). AlterG has failed to do so.

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's false advertisement claim is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend.

H. Trade Libel

AlterG's eighth cause of action is trade libel, based on Defendants' "false, disparaging, and defamatory statements regarding AlterG's business and products to several AlterG customers and potential AlterG customers." Compl. ¶¶ 142-45. "Trade libel is defined as 'an intentional disparagement of the quality of property, which results in pecuniary damage.'" Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Centennial Ins. Co., 838 F.2d 346, 351 (9th Cir. 1988) (quoting Erlich v. Etner, 224 Cal. App. 2d 69, 73, 36 Cal. Rptr. 256 (1964)). A trade libel claim requires: (1) a publication, (2) which induces others not to deal with plaintiff, and (3) special damages." Id. (citing Polygram Records, Inc. v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. App. 3d 543, 548-49, 216 Cal. Rptr. 252 (1985)). Moreover, "a plaintiff must allege: (1) who made the statements, (2) to whom the statements were made, (3) the time and place of publication, and (4) the substance of the statements." *NPK Indus. v. Hunter, No. 15-CV-00811-SI, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123824, 2015 WL 5461667, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 16, 2015) (citations omitted).

Here, AlterG has adequately alleged who made the statements and the substance of the statements. The complaint specifies that "each of" the Individual Defendants told AlterG customers that "AlterG was going out of business, is in poor financial health and will not [41] be able to get Woodway treadmills anymore," and that "AlterG DAP technology is inferior to that of Boost and that Boost is an equal or better system than AlterG DAP technology, but at a lower cost." Compl. ¶¶ 45, 142.

In contrast, AlterG has not adequately alleged when, where, and to whom the statements were made. It only asserts vaguely that the false statements were made to "several AlterG customers and potential AlterG customers," without identifying any of the customers. Id. ¶ 142. The trade libel claim is thus insufficiently pled. Compare *NPK Indus., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123824, 2015 WL 5461667, at 5 (finding a trade libel claim adequately pled where the complaint specified "that defendants . . ., through phone calls, visits and emails, made disparaging statements about [plaintiff] to [plaintiff]'s customers and business partners, several of whom [plaintiff] identifies by name," and that "these activities took place beginning in July 2013 and November 2013").

AlterG has also failed to plead the "special damages" element of its trade libel claim. To establish this element, a plaintiff "may not rely on a general decline in business arising from the [alleged] falsehood, and must instead identify particular customers and transactions of which [42] it was deprived as a result of the libel." Mann v. Quality Old Time Serv., Inc., 120 Cal. App. 4th 90, 109, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 (2004), disapproved of on other grounds by Baral v. Schnitt, 1 Cal. 5th 376, 385, 205 Cal. Rptr. 3d 475, 376 P.3d 604 (2016). Here, [*1155] AlterG asserts that Defendants have "s[old] over 20 units to date to customers considering an AlterG unit," causing "monetary damages" to AlterG. Compl. ¶ 46. However, AlterG has not identified any particular customers associated with these sales, nor explained whether these customers' decision to purchase Boost products in lieu of AlterG products was attributable to Defendants' trade libel. See *Heartland Payment Sys., Inc. v. Mercury Payment Sys., LLC, No. C 14-0437 CW, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9078, 2016 WL 304764, at 11 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2016) (dismissing trade libel claims because "[plaintiff] does not identify any customer who refused to do business with it as a result of [defendant]'s allegedly libelous statements"); Piping Rock Partners, Inc. v. David Lerner Assocs., Inc., 946 F. Supp. 2d 957, 981 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (dismissing trade libel claim where "it is not even clear if this allegation [of lost sales] is connected to counterdefendants' [libel]").

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's trade libel claim is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend.

I. UCL Claim

AlterG's ninth cause of action is unfair competition, brought under California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"). Compl. ¶¶ 147-53. The UCL prohibits [43] "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

1. "Unlawful" Prong

Under the "unlawful" prong, "[t]he UCL 'borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.'" Wilson v. Hewlett—Packard Co., 668 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999)). Although AlterG's claims are not properly pled at this juncture, it may be able to cure its pleading deficiencies through amendment and establish violations of other laws that serve as a predicate for its "unlawful" claim. Accordingly, AlterG's claim under the "unlawful" prong of the UCL is DISMISSED without prejudice.

2. "Unfair" Prong

The "unfair" prong of the UCL prohibits a business practice that "violates established public policy or if it is immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous and causes injury to consumers which outweighs its benefits." McKell v. Wash. Mut., Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1473, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227 (2006). The California Supreme Court has held that "[w]hen a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word 'unfair' in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or [44] spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 186-87, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

Here, AlterG describes Boost as "a direct competitor to AlterG." Compl. ¶ 117. However, nowhere in its complaint or briefing does AlterG allege or attempt to argue that the misconduct it describes with respect to Defendants threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law or has effects comparable to a violation of an antitrust law. Indeed, case law suggests that the misconduct of a direct competitor must rise to significantly more serious levels than what has been alleged here to [*1156] sustain a finding of unfairness under the UCL. *See, e.g., In re Acacia Media Techs. Corp., No. C 05-01114 JW, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37009, 2005 WL 1683660, at 5 (N.D. Cal. July 19, 2005) (repeated filings of "objectively baseless patent infringement lawsuits" in "bad faith" are covered by antitrust law).

In response, AlterG argues that the false claims made by Defendants have also harmed consumers, Opp. at 18-19, and such harm supports its claim under the unfair prong. For this proposition, Defendants rely on Luxul Technology Inc. v. Nectarlux, LLC, 78 F. Supp. 3d 1156 (N.D. Cal. 2015), in which the court determined that the plaintiff had stated a claim under the unfair prong by alleging that the defendant "wrongfully [45] and unfairly represented to third parties that [plaintiff]'s business and/or products are affected by legal issues that do not exist." Id. at 1174. But the parties in Luxul Technology were not direct competitors. Rather, the defendant was a sales representative for the plaintiff. Id. at 1165. That case is therefore inapposite.

3. "Fraudulent" Prong

To state a claim under the fraudulent prong of the UCL, "it is necessary only to show that members of the public are likely to be deceived" by the business practice or advertising at issue. In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 312, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Before evaluating the substance of AlterG's claim under this prong, however, the Court must ensure that AlterG has standing to bring the claim. The UCL limits standing to those individuals who had "suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. The California Supreme Court has interpreted this standing provision as "impos[ing] an actual reliance requirement on plaintiffs prosecuting a private enforcement action under the UCL's fraud prong." In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 326. Thus, "courts have recognized that UCL fraud plaintiffs must allege their own reliance—not the reliance of third parties—to have standing [46] under the UCL." O'Connor v. Uber Techs., Inc., 58 F. Supp. 3d 989, 1002 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (emphasis in original); see Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 327, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d

877 (2011) (holding that the "plaintiff must allege he or she was motivated to act or refrain from action based on the truth or falsity of a defendant's statement").

AlterG's fraud claims here are predicated on the allegedly false statements Defendants made "to customers and prospects" about AlterG's financial situation and product quality. Compl. ¶¶ 45-46. While the complaint explains that AlterG was harmed by Defendants' fraud because customers relied on the misrepresentations and avoided AlterG's products, there is no allegation that AlterG itself relied on Defendants' statements. AlterG's opposition brief does not dispute this. Accordingly, AlterG does not have standing under the UCL to pursue a claim under the fraudulent prong. See 23andMe, Inc. v. Ancestry.com DNA, LLC, 356 F. Supp. 3d 889, 911 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (dismissing claim under the fraudulent prong of the UCL where plaintiff alleged a competitor's misrepresentations deceived consumers).

4. Restitution

Damages cannot be recovered through a UCL claim. Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1144, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003). A plaintiff who prevails on such a claim is limited to injunctive relief and [*1157] restitution. Id. Defendants insist that AlterG is not entitled to UCL relief because "restitution under the UCL . . . is limited to money [47] or property that defendants took directly from a plaintiff or in which a plaintiff has a vested interest.'" L.A. Taxi Coop., Inc. v. Uber Techs., Inc., 114 F. Supp. 3d 852, 867 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (citation and alterations omitted). Defendants' argument would carry the day if AlterG were seeking to recover money that Defendants made from sales to customers who would otherwise have purchased treadmills from AlterG. In that case, AlterG would not be asking for money that Defendants took directly from AlterG or in which AlterG has a vested interest. L.A. Taxi Coop., 114 F. Supp. 3d at 867. But that is not AlterG's theory of relief. Rather, AlterG clarifies in its opposition brief that it is seeking to recover the value of the proprietary and confidential information Defendants misappropriated from AlterG. See Opp. at 19. That information is property in which AlterG "had an ownership interest." Korea Supply, 29 Cal. 4th at 1144-45. AlterG is thus entitled to restitution.

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's UCL claim is GRANTED as to the unfair and fraudulent prongs. Dismissal of the unfair and fraudulent prong claims is with prejudice because AlterG has not demonstrated that Defendants' alleged conduct threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law or that AlterG relied on Defendants' false statements.

J. Conspiracy

AlterG's tenth cause [48] of action alleges that Defendants entered into a conspiracy "to interfere with and damage AlterG's business and misappropriate AlterG's intellectual property and confidential information." Compl. ¶¶ 155-62. Defendants argues this claim must be dismissed because conspiracy cannot be pled as a standalone cause of action.

Defendants are correct that "[c]onspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration." Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal. 4th 503, 510-11, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994). A conspiracy allegation must be "activated by the commission of an actual tort." Swipe & Bite, Inc. v. Chow, 147 F. Supp. 3d 924, 936 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (citing Applied Equipment, 7 Cal. 4th at 511). Here, AlterG may be able to state viable tort claims, such as for breach of fiduciary duty and interference with contract, via amendment. Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss the conspiracy claim as an independent cause of action is GRANTED, but AlterG can amend its complaint to state the viable tort claim and to make clear that it is alleging that the Individual Defendants conspired to commit tortious acts and are therefore each liable for those acts under a theory of conspiracy liability.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the [49] foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss. The following causes of action are dismissed with prejudice:

- Ninth (UCL claim under the unfair and fraudulent prongs);
- Tenth (conspiracy as an independent cause of action).

The following causes of action are dismissed without prejudice, with leave to amend within 30 days of the date of this Order:

- First (patent infringement);

[*1158] • Second (breach of contract);

- Third (trade secret misappropriation);
- Fourth (breach of fiduciary duty);
- Fifth (interference with contract);
- Sixth (interference with prospective economic advantage);
- Seventh (false advertisement);
- Eighth (trade libel);
- Ninth (UCL claim under the unlawful prong).

This order disposes of Docket No. 15.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This matter is before the Court on plaintiff Monsanto Company's motion to partially dismiss defendant Hensel Seed Solution LLC's First Amended Counterclaims and to strike from Hensel's First Amended Answer its Second, Third, Fifth, and Sixth Affirmative Defenses.

I. Factual Background

Plaintiff manufactures crop seeds which it sells to farmers through dealers. Defendant is or was a seed dealer for plaintiff. Plaintiff and defendant entered into Monsanto Brand Seed Dealer Agreement ("MBSD") that sets forth the terms of the parties' relationship. Plaintiff filed this lawsuit seeking damages for defendant's alleged breach of the MBSD and of the parties' credit agreement and for unjust enrichment.

Defendant filed an answer with affirmative defenses and counterclaims. The first counterclaim is for price discrimination under Section 2(a) the Robinson Patman Act, and the second count is for breach of contract, including the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Plaintiff seeks dismissal of the second [*2] count. Plaintiff also seeks an order striking the defendant's affirmative defenses of set-off and recoupment, illegality, impossibility, and frustration of purpose.

II. Motion to Dismiss Counterclaim

The purpose of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss is to test the legal sufficiency of a complaint so as to eliminate those actions "which are fatally flawed in their legal premises and designed to fail, thereby sparing litigants the burden of unnecessary pretrial and trial activity." Young v. City of St. Charles, 244 F.3d 623, 627 (8th Cir. 2001) (quoting Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 326-27, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1989)). A complaint must be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted if it does not plead "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (abrogating the prior "no set of facts" standard set forth in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). Courts "do not require heightened fact pleading of specifics, but only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 555. A complaint must set forth factual allegations which are enough to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id. at 555. However, where a court can infer from those factual allegations no more than a "mere possibility of misconduct," the complaint must be dismissed. Cole v. Homier Distributing Co., Inc., 599 F.3d 856, 861 (8th Cir. 2010) (citing Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)).

To state a claim for breach of contract in [*3] Missouri, counterclaim-plaintiff Hensel Seed must allege

> 1) the existence and terms of a valid and enforceable contract between the [counterclaim-]plaintiff and [counterclaim-]defendant; 2) the rights of the [counterclaim-]plaintiff and the obligations of the [counterclaim-]defendant under the contract; 3) breach of the contract by the [counterclaim-]defendant; and 4) damages suffered by the [counterclaim-]plaintiff due to the breach.

Reitz v. Nationstar Mortg., LLC, 954 F. Supp. 2d 870, 884 (E.D. Mo. 2013). Here, Monsanto argues that Hensel has failed to allege a breach. Hensel alleges that > Monsanto breached the Monsanto Brand Seed Dealer Agreement...by providing excessive and discriminatory discounts to the Large Chain Retailers on [Dekalb Corn Seed] while lying to Hensel Seed about and concealing the reasons why the Large Chain Retailers were able to sell Dekalb Corn Seed at retail to farms and farmers at prices lower than Hensel Seed's wholesale price from Monsanto.

(#25 at 22.) Further, Hensel claims that the price discrimination made it impossible for Hensel to perform profitably under and realize the benefits of the MBSD Agreement.

Monsanto points out that no term in the MBSD precludes differential pricing among dealers or require disclosure of other [*4] dealers' pricing. Hensel counters that, because the Agreement is a contract for the sale of goods, the Uniform Commercial Code imposes a covenant of good faith and fair dealing, § 400.1-304 RSMo, and that sellers who have the ability to set open prices must do so in good faith, § 400.2-305(2) RSMo.

Monsanto argues, however, that the Agreement is a dealership or distributorship agreement, is not a contract for the sale of goods, and is thus not subject to the UCC's covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The parties cite conflicting law. Each of Monsanto's authorities can be traced back to Tile-Craft Products Co. v. Exxon Corporation, 581 S.W.2d 886, 889 (Mo. App. E.D. 1979), which merely observed that a distributorship entity was not itself a good under Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code. See Vigano v. Wylain, Inc., 633 F.2d 522, 525 (8th Cir. 1980) and *Kansas City Trailer Sales v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 92-0377-CV-W-6, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1698, 1994 WL 49932, at 5 (W.D. Mo. Feb. 16, 1994) (both citing id.).

More recent law supports plaintiff's position that "that section of the Uniform Commercial Code provides that 'every contract or duty within this chapter imposes an obligation of good faith in its performance or enforcement.'" Conoco Inc. v. Inman Oil Co., Inc., 774 F.2d 895, 908 (8th Cir. 1985) (quoting ABA Distributors, Inc. v. Adolph Coors Co., 542 F. Supp. 1272, 1285 (W.D. Mo. 1982)). Conoco, which addressed a breach of contract claim on a distributorship agreement, observed that "this implied covenant imposes upon each party the duty to do nothing destructive of the other party's right to enjoy the fruits [*5] of the contract and to do everything that the contract presupposes they will do to accomplish its purpose." Id. The Eighth Circuit noted, in a footnote, that "there is no dispute that the [distributorship agreements] were contracts for the sale of goods and thus governed by the Uniform Commercial Code." Id. at 908 n.10. Monsanto thus insists that Conoco is inapplicable because the parties there did not dispute that the contracts were for the sale of goods. Tellingly, however, Monsanto's own pleading states that it sold seeds to Hensel pursuant to the terms of the MBSD. (#6 at ¶ 13.) Accordingly, this Court holds that Hensel has sufficiently pleaded that its contract falls within the Missouri UCC.

Monsanto next argues that even if the UCC applies, the good faith requirement does not add a term to the agreement that the parties did not include. See Centerre Bank of Kansas City, N.A. v. Distribs., Inc., 705 S.W.2d 42, 48-49 (Mo. Ct. App. 1985). Where a contract expressly provides a pricing formula, Missouri courts will not "implicitly inject additional terms governing this issue." Massey v. Tandy Corp., 987 F.2d 1307, 1309 (8th Cir. 1993). The MBSD's pricing formula sets forth dealer-specific and grower-specific differential pricing. Thus, Monsanto argues, § 400.2-305(2) RSMo's good-faith requirement does not apply because the price was settled. Hensel's claim, however, [*6] is based on Monsanto's extra-contractual actions involving the pricing it set for other parties. This case is unlike the Massey case, upon which Monsanto relies, in which the Eighth Circuit explicitly noted that the plaintiffs' claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing did not include that the defendant "charged them more than it charged other franchises; rather, they contend the formula used by [defendant] was irrational...". Id. at 1309. Regardless of which section of the UCC applies, for purposes of Monsanto's motion to dismiss, Hensel has adequately alleged that Monsanto breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Next, Monsanto argues that Hensel has not pleaded fraud with particularity as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). Rule 9(b) states that "in alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." But, as this Court understands Hensel's pleading, Hensel does not bring a standalone counterclaim for fraud. Rather, as Hensel explains in its response memorandum, his breach of contract count is based on Monsanto's breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing when it "fraudulently induce[d] Hensel Seed to buy corn [*7] seed at grossly inflated and excessive prices." (#31 at 5.) Hensel adds simply that Monsanto "lied about and concealed" the price discrimination.

"Asserting claims premised on fraudulent conduct can trigger the obligation to plead with particularity." 5A Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller, & Mary Kay Kane, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 1297 (4th ed.) (collecting cases). For example, "[f]raudulent inducement claims will often arise in contract disputes under state law and are thus similarly subject to Rule 9(b) when brought in federal court." Id. "[C]onclusory allegations that a defendant's conduct was fraudulent and deceptive are not sufficient to satisfy the rule." Drobnak v. Andersen Corp., 561 F.3d 778, 783 (8th Cir. 2009) (internal quotations omitted). Such claims must allege the "who, what, where, when, and how" of the alleged fraud. Id. Here, Hensel alleged nothing more than Monsanto "lied about" and "concealed" critical facts and provided no "who, what, where, when, and how" details required by Rule 9(b). Although the allegations are insufficient at this point, Hensel will be permitted to replead this claim with particularity.

Finally, with respect to the breach of contract claim, Monsanto argues that Hensel has not sufficiently alleged its own performance of [*8] contractual obligations. Hensel alleges that it purchased, marketed, and sold seed from Monsanto as an exclusive dealer from 2013 through 2017. For purposes of Monsanto's motion to dismiss, Hensel has sufficiently pleaded its own performance of the contract.

III. Motion to Strike

As for the plaintiff's motion to strike, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f) states that the Court "may strike from a pleading ... any ... immaterial ... matter ... on motion made by a party." Because they propose a drastic remedy, motions to strike are not favored and are infrequently granted. Stanbury Law Firm, P.A. v. Internal Revenue Service, 221 F.3d 1059, 1063 (8th Cir. 2000).

> As courts have observed, motions to strike can be nothing other than distractions. If a defense is clearly irrelevant, then it will likely never be raised again by the defendant and can be safely ignored. If a defense may be relevant, then there are other contexts in which the sufficiency of the defense can be more thoroughly tested with the benefit of a fuller record-such as on a motion for summary judgment.

*Shirrell v. St. Francis Med. Ctr., 1:13-CV-42 SNLJ, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95237, 2013 WL 3457010, at 1 (E.D. Mo. July 9, 2013) (internal quotations omitted).

Resolution of a motion to strike lies within the broad discretion of the Court. Stanbury Law Firm, 221 F.3d at 1063. "In ruling on a motion to strike, the [*9] Court views the pleadings in the light most favorable to the pleader." *Speraneo v. Zeus Tech. Inc., No. 4:12cv578-JAR, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80263, 2012 WL 2117872, at 1 (E.D.Mo. June 11, 2012) (citing *Cynergy Ergonomics, Inc. v. Ergonomic Partners, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70995, 2008 WL 2817106, at 2 (E.D.Mo. July 21, 2008)). "A motion to strike an affirmative defense should not be granted 'unless, as a matter of law, the defense cannot succeed under any circumstances or is immaterial in that it has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief.'" Id. (quoting *Cynergy Ergonomics, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70995, 2008 WL 2817106, at 2, and citing FDIC v. Coble, 720 F. Supp. 748, 750 (E.D.Mo. 1989)). A motion to strike should not succeed unless the party shows that it is prejudiced by the inclusion of a defense or that a defense's inclusion confuses the issues. *Cynergy Ergonomics, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70995, 2008 WL 2817106, at 2. "The prejudice requirement is satisfied if striking the defense would, for example, prevent a party from engaging in burdensome discovery, or otherwise expending time and resources litigating irrelevant issues that will not affect the case's outcome." Id.

Monsanto contends that Hensel's affirmative defenses purporting to employ the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13-13a, as a shield against Monsanto's debt collection efforts are foreclosed as a matter of law. The Robinson-Patman Act prohibits "any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different [*10] purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). Here, Hensel claims Monsanto sold seed to large chain retailers at prices far below the prices for which it sold seed to small retailers like Hensel. Although Monsanto's complaint seeks to recover money allegedly owed by Hensel for seed purchased on credit, Hensel's affirmative defenses include set-off and recoupment, illegality, impossibility, and frustration of purpose—all based on Hensel's price discrimination claim. Monsanto argues that these defenses must be stricken because, "even if the sale prescribed in the contract did give rise to a Robinson-Patman violation, ... the contract is nevertheless enforceable." Delta Marina, Inc. v. Plaquemine Oil Sales, Inc., 644 F.2d 455, 458 (5th Cir. 1981). "The general rule is that an antitrust violation is a defense to enforcement of a contract only if the judgment of the Court (enforcing the contract) would itself be enforcing the precise conduct made unlawful by the Act." Id. (quoting Kelly v. Kosuga, 358 U.S. 516, 520, 79 S. Ct. 429, 3 L. Ed. 2d 475 (1959)). Although a contract can be intrinsically illegal under other antitrust statutes, "no single sale can violate the Robinson-Patman Act. At least two transactions must take place in order to constitute a discrimination." Bruce's Juices v. Am. Can Co., 330 U.S. 743, 755, 67 S. Ct. 1015, 91 L. Ed. 1219 (1947). A "violation, if there was one, is not inherent in the contract [*11] sued upon." Id. Moreover, "courts should be reluctant to allow litigation over speculative, complex antitrust issues to infiltrate simple breach-of-contract claims when the contract on its face does not violate antitrust law." Hemlock Semiconductor Operations, LLC v. SolarWorld Indus. Sachsen GmbH, 867 F.3d 692, 701-02 (6th Cir. 2017), reh'g denied (Sept. 19, 2017) (citing Nat'l Souvenir Ctr., Inc. v. Historic Figures, Inc., 728 F.2d 503, 516, 234 U.S. App. D.C. 222 (D.C. Cir. 1984)).

As a result, violation of the Robinson-Patman Act is not a defense to Monsanto's breach of contract claim. See *Capital City Distribution v. Classics Int'l Entertainment, 95 C 5018, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13707, 1996 WL 535314, at 3 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 18, 1996) ("violation of the Robinson-Patman Act is not an affirmative defense to a claim for breach of contract"). In any event, Hensel brought a separate counterclaim for violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. Thus, the affirmative defenses based on the Act complicate matters unnecessarily and will be stricken.

Accordingly,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that plaintiff Monsanto's motion to dismiss counterclaims and strike affirmative defenses (#27) is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Hensel's breach of contract counterclaim is DISMISSED without prejudice for failure to plead fraud with particularity.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Hensel is granted leave to file any amended counterclaim by June 10, 2019.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Hensel's affirmative defenses of set-off and recoupment, illegality, impossibility, and frustration of purpose [*12] are STRICKEN.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Monsanto's motion to stay discovery (#18) is DENIED as moot.

IT IS FINALLY ORDERED that Monsanto's first motion to dismiss (#16) is DENIED as moot.

[*668] FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

[*669] Plaintiff Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") brings suit against Defendant Qualcomm Incorporated ("Qualcomm") for allegedly violating Section 5(a) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a), and seeks permanent injunctive relief. Specifically, the FTC claims that Qualcomm has harmed competition in two markets for baseband processors, also called modem chips, through a set of interrelated Qualcomm practices. The FTC Act prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition," which include violations of the Sherman Act. The FTC asserts that Qualcomm's conduct violates (1) Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; and (3) Section 5 of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a). ECF No. 966.

On April 3, 2017, Qualcomm moved to dismiss the FTC's Complaint. ECF No. 69. On June 26, 2017, the Court denied Qualcomm's motion to dismiss. ECF No. 134.

On August 30, 2018, the FTC moved for partial summary judgment on the question of whether Qualcomm's commitments to two standard setting organizations ("SSOs"), the Alliance for Telecommunications Industry Solutions ("ATIS") and the Telecommunications Industry Association ("TIA"), [10] require Qualcomm to license to other modem chip suppliers on fair, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory terms Qualcomm's patents that are essential to practicing the ATIS and TIA standards. ECF No. 792. On November 6, 2018, the Court granted the FTC's motion for partial summary judgment. ECF No. 931.

The Court held a 10-day bench trial in this matter beginning on January 4, 2019. The parties gave closing arguments on January 29, 2019. Having considered the evidence and arguments of counsel, the relevant law, and the record in this case, the Court hereby enters the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

I. STIPULATED FACTS

The parties stipulated to the following facts:

1. Qualcomm is headquartered in San Diego, California. ECF No. 1326 at 1.

2. Since at least 1989, Qualcomm has been, and is now, a corporation. Id.

3. Since at least 1989, Qualcomm has been, and is now, engaged in interstate and international commerce. Id.

4. Qualcomm's operating segment relating to its chip and software business is called Qualcomm CDMA Technologies [*670] ("QCT"). Qualcomm's operating segment relating to the licensing of its patents is called Qualcomm Technology Licensing ("QTL"). Id.

5. In 2012, Qualcomm [11] created Qualcomm Technologies, Inc. ("QTI"), a wholly owned subsidiary of Qualcomm. QTI operates substantially all of Qualcomm's products and services business, including QCT, as well as substantially all of Qualcomm's engineering, research, and development functions. Qualcomm continues to operate QTL. Id.

6. Qualcomm CDMA Technologies Asia-Pacific Pte. Ltd. ("QCTAP"), a Singapore company, is a wholly owned indirect subsidiary of Qualcomm. Id.

7. Cellular communications depend on widely distributed networks that implement cellular communications standards. Id.

8. Some original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs") have purchased multimode modem chips for use in Cellular Handsets intended for operation on the major U.S. wireless networks. Id. at 2.

9. Cellular Handsets are designed, marketed, and sold by OEMs such as Samsung, Huawei, Apple, Xiaomi, OPPO, VIVO, Google, Lenovo/Motorola Mobility, and LGE. Id.

10. Consumers purchase Cellular Handsets for a variety of reasons, including for (a) their ability to transmit and receive data at high speeds over cellular networks, such as those implementing Long Term Evolution ("LTE"), the highest-speed cellular standard which has widely commercialized to date, [12] and (b) their ability to perform voice calls. Id.

11. The Third Generation Partnership Project ("3GPP") and the Third Generation Partnership Project 2 ("3GPP2") are global collaborative partnerships of standards development/standards-setting organizations ("SDOs" or "SSOs")[1] and other industry participants that develop technical specifications for cellular standards. Id.

12. The current "organizational partners" of 3GPP are seven regional SSOs, specifically: the European Telecommunications Standards Institute ("ETSI"), the Alliance for Telecommunications Industry Solutions ("ATIS"), the Association of Radio Industries and Businesses, Japan ("ARIB"), the Telecommunication Technology Committee, Japan ("TTC"), the China Communications Standards Association ("CCSA"), the Telecommunications Standards Development Society, India ("TSDSI"), and the Telecommunications Technology Association, Korea ("TTA"). Id.

13. The current organizational partners of 3GPP2 are five regional SSOs, specifically: the Telecommunications Industry Association ("TIA"), ARIB, TTC, CCSA, and TTA. Id.

14. Cellular communications standards have evolved over "generations," including second-generation ("2G"), third-generation [13] ("3G"), and fourth-generation ("4G") standards. Id.

15. 2G cellular standards include the Global System for Mobile ("GSM") and cdmaOne (also sometimes called "TIA/EIA/IS-95" or "IS-95"). Id.

16. ETSI adopted GSM as a cellular standard. ETSI also adopted General Packet Radio Service ("GPRS") and Enhanced Data Global Evolution ("EDGE") [*671] as improvements to GSM. These are considered 2G standards. Id. at 2-3.

17. GSM uses time division multiple access ("TDMA") technology. Id. at 3.

[1] Consistent with the Court's prior orders, see ECF No. 931 at 3 n.2, the Court refers to these standards organizations as SSOs.

18. TIA adopted cdmaOne as a cellular standard. TIA also adopted IS-95A and IS-95B as improvements to cdmaOne. These are considered 2G standards. Id.

19. cdmaOne uses code division multiple access ("CDMA") technology. Id.

20. 3G cellular standards include the Universal Mobile Telecommunications System ("UMTS") and CDMA2000. Id.

21. UMTS is an umbrella term for three 3G cellular air interfaces standardized within 3GPP: UTRA-FDD, commonly called Wideband CDMA ("WCDMA"), used worldwide; UTRA-TDD High Chip Rate, having little deployment; and UTRA-TDD Low Chip Rate, commonly called Time Division-Synchronous CDMA ("TD-SCDMA"), used primarily in China. Id.

22. Included within the CDMA2000 family of standards are CDMA2000 1x, often called 1xRTT, [14] and High Rate Packet Data, often called 1xEV-DO or EV-DO. Id.

23. CDMA2000 was standardized by 3GPP2. Id.

24. In the United States, AT&T and T-Mobile have operated WCDMA networks. Verizon and Sprint have operated CDMA2000 networks. Id.

25. All four major U.S. carriers (Verizon, AT&T, T-Mobile, and Sprint) have deployed LTE, which also encompasses the LTE Advanced, or "LTE-A" standard, as their 4G standard. Id.

26. LTE uses orthogonal frequency division multiple access ("OFDMA") technology for downlink transmissions and single-carrier frequency division multiple access ("SC-FDMA") technology for uplink transmissions. Id.

27. LTE was standardized by 3GPP. Id. at 4.

BACKGROUND II.

The Court discusses cellular standard setting organizations ("SSOs"), Qualcomm's license agreements, Qualcomm's modem chip business, antitrust investigations into Qualcomm's licensing practices, and the credibility of many Qualcomm witnesses.

A. SSOs and FRAND

Standing setting organizations ("SSOs") are global collaborations of industry participants that develop technical specifications for cellular standards. ECF No. 1326 at 2. These specifications ensure that cellular industry participants—including modem chip suppliers, handset [15] original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs"), infrastructure companies, and carriers—develop standard-compatible devices that can communicate with each other. CX6786-R at 19:6-22. Cellular standards evolve over time. Therefore, although the first generation of LTE was standardized in 2008, there have been several new LTE releases as standards contributors develop new features. Tr. at 1320:19-1321:2.

Cellular standards may incorporate patented technology. Patents that are essential to a standard are called standard essential patents ("SEPs"). Tr. at 1396:3-7. Because a SEP holder could prevent other industry participants from implementing a cellular standard, SSOs require patent holders to commit to license their SEPs on fair, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory ("FRAND") terms before SSOs will incorporate the patent into the cellular standard. QX2776-001. For example, under the intellectual property policy of the Telecommunications Industry Association ("TIA"), a SSO, a SEP holder must commit to TIA that: "A license under any Essential Patent(s), [*672] the license rights which are held by the undersigned Patent Holder, will be made available to all applicants under terms and conditions that are reasonable [16] and nondiscriminatory." *Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Qualcomm, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 190051, 2018 WL 5848999, at 3.

This promise to license SEPs on FRAND terms is generally referred to as a SEP holder's FRAND commitment. Tr. at 1423:23-25. At summary judgment, the Court held that Qualcomm's FRAND commitments to SSOs, TIA and ATIS, require Qualcomm to license its modem chip SEPs to rival modem chip suppliers. *Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Qualcomm Inc., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 190051, 2018 WL 5848999, at 1.

B. Qualcomm License Agreements

Qualcomm Technology Licensing ("QTL") is the division of Qualcomm that grants licenses to Qualcomm's patent portfolio. CX7257-007. QTL holds and licenses three broad categories of patents: (1) cellular standard essential patents ("SEPs"); (2) non-cellular SEPs; and (3) non-SEPs, which also are known as implementation patents. Tr. at 1537:20-1538:4; CX7257-007. Cellular SEPs are patents necessary to practice a particular cellular standard. QX2776-042 to -043.[2] By contrast, non-cellular SEPs are necessary to the practice of a non-cellular standard. Tr. at 1537:24-1538:1. Non-SEPs are patents not necessary to the practice of any standard. Id. at 1538:2-4. Liren Chen (QTL Senior Vice President of Engineering and Legal Counsel) estimated at trial that Qualcomm held approximately 140,000 granted patents and pending patent applications as of March [17] 2018. Tr. at 1540:14-17.

Qualcomm primarily licenses its patents on a "portfolio basis," which means that a licensee pays for and receives rights to all three categories of Qualcomm patents—cellular SEPs, non-cellular SEPs, and non-SEPs. Tr. at 1972:19-24. Qualcomm occasionally offers separate licenses to its SEPs. Tr. at 1991:13-18; CX7257-014. Qualcomm stated in its 2017 10-K filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") that SEP-only licenses "negatively impact" Qualcomm's licensing revenues because Qualcomm receives higher royalty rates for portfolio licenses than for SEP-only licenses. CX7257-027.

In 1990, Qualcomm began licensing its CDMA patents. According to Dr. Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder and former CEO)[3], Qualcomm first licensed its patents to generate funds for continued research and development. Tr. at 1265:24-1266:22. On July 24, 1990, Qualcomm entered a patent license agreement with AT&T, in which Qualcomm charged a 4% running royalty rate on handset sales and no royalties on chipset sales. JX0002-006; ECF No. 1326 at 4. Qualcomm entered a similar patent license agreement with Motorola [*673] in July 1990, in which Qualcomm charged a 4% running royalty rate on [18] handset sales and no royalties on chipset sales. Tr. at 216:20-217:3; JX0003-005.

In a 1999 email, Steve Altman (later Qualcomm President) told Marv Blecker (QTL Senior Vice President) that Qualcomm licensed rival modem chip suppliers in exchange for a 3% running royalty rate on chipset sales. CX8177-001. Specifically, Altman's email stated: "Other ASIC licensees pay royalties to Qualcomm at 3% with no minimum dollar amount." Id.

At some point, Qualcomm stopped licensing rival modem chip suppliers and instead started licensing only OEMs at a 5% running royalty on the price of each handset sold. These licenses are called Subscriber Unit License Agreements ("SULA"). See JX0030 (SULA between Qualcomm and BenQ). With a SULA, an OEM may sell handsets that practice Qualcomm's patents without fear of an infringement suit from Qualcomm. Tr. at 1426:2-10. The parties stipulated that in a typical SULA, Qualcomm receives consideration in the form of a running royalty rate calculated as a percentage of the licensee's wholesale net selling price of the end-user device (minus applicable deductions), subject to royalty caps. ECF No. 1326 at 10. An end-user device is a cellular handset, which the parties have stipulated [19] is defined as a mobile phone. ECF No. 1326 at 2.

[2] Exhibits beginning with the letters "CX" are exhibits that the FTC introduced at trial. Exhibits beginning with the letters "QX" are exhibits that Qualcomm introduced at trial. Exhibits beginning with the letters "JX" are exhibits that the parties jointly introduced at trial. The first four numbers after those letters are the exhibit number. The numbers following the dash are the page number. Where the Court cites a page range in an exhibit, the Court uses the word "to" to denote that the Court is citing a range (e.g., QX2776-042 to -043). Where the Court cites multiple pages in an exhibit that are not within a page range, the Court uses a comma to indicate that the Court is citing multiple pages (e.g., QX2776-042, -044).

[3] All the Qualcomm witnesses have or had multiple titles and roles during their time at Qualcomm. Where the Court knows a witness's title at the time of a document or event, the witness is so identified. Where the Court does not know a witness's contemporaneous title, the Court identifies the witness by their current or last title at Qualcomm.

Specifically, Qualcomm charges a 5% running royalty on handset sales for a license to Qualcomm's CDMA patent portfolio, which includes CDMA SEPs and non-SEPs. Tr. at 1399:21-24. For Qualcomm's LTE portfolio, Qualcomm has historically charged a 4% running royalty rate. Id. at 1400:11-16. Qualcomm SULAs grant rights both to the relevant Qualcomm patents existing at the time of the SULA and additional relevant Qualcomm patents issued during the license term. Tr. at 1397:5-8.

Qualcomm has capped the maximum royalty base or net selling price of the handset at $400. Tr. at 1979:19-23; see also JX0122-010 (royalty base cap in SULA between Samsung and Qualcomm). In some SULAs, Qualcomm charges an upfront fee in addition to the running royalty rate on handset sales. See JX0042-011 (upfront license fee in SULA between Wistron and Qualcomm). SULAs also require OEMs to grant cross licenses to their patents to Qualcomm, sometimes on a royalty-free basis. Tr. at 1398:11-13; CX7257-015.

Qualcomm has been forced to alter certain royalty rates and licensing practices after a 2014 investigation of Qualcomm's business practices by China's National Development [20] and Reform Commission ("NDRC"), the government entity responsible for antitrust. Tr. at 1981:9-16. The NDRC issued a "rectification plan," which requires Qualcomm to offer SEP-only licenses to Qualcomm's China patents at specified rates. Id. at 1400:17-25; CX7257-014. The resulting agreements are Chinese Patent License Agreements ("CPLA"). Tr. at 1457:14-1458:3.

In a CPLA, which is a SEP-only license, Qualcomm charges a 5% running royalty rate on sales of handsets that support multiple cellular standards and a 3.5% running royalty rate on sales of LTE-only handsets, although the CPLA charges those rates against 65% of the handset price and the rates apply only to handsets made and sold for use in China. Id. at 1400:17-25; see QX9266-365 (CPLA between Lenovo and Qualcomm). As will be discussed further below, a presentation to a committee of the Qualcomm Board of Directors in 2015 explained that Qualcomm was able to avoid more aggressive rate cuts by making a $150 million contribution to the Chinese government. CX3755-004.

[*674] Qualcomm now charges the same royalty rates in other SEP-only licenses regardless of whether the handsets are made and sold only for use in China. Tr. at 1401:1-4.

Licensing [21] is very profitable for Qualcomm. In 2015, David Wise (Qualcomm Senior Vice President and Treasurer) stated in a presentation shared with Alex Rogers (QTL President) that "QTL represents the vast majority of our value at $50-$70B" and that "1 point of royalty is $16-$20B." CX5953-004. At trial, Wise agreed that QTL has historically "represented at least two thirds of the value of Qualcomm." Tr. at 91:14-17. Qualcomm's 2017 strategic plan indicates that QTL earned $7.7 billion in 2016. CX7122-026. That figure exceeded the combined 2016 licensing revenue of twelve other patent licensors, including Ericsson, Nokia, and Interdigital. Id. A 2012 Bain Consulting presentation that Qualcomm introduced into evidence concluded that in 2011, "Qualcomm has 25% of global patent licensing revenue" in the cellular handset space and that Qualcomm earned more than 50% of all modem chip patent licensing revenue. QX0121A-009.

C. Qualcomm Sales of Modem Chips

Next, the Court provides a general overview of Qualcomm CDMA Technologies ("QCT"), Qualcomm's modem chip supply division. Qualcomm is a "fabless" modem chip supplier, which means that QCT outsources the actual fabrication of QCT modem chips to third [22] parties. CX7257-013. Modem chips[4] enable handsets to communicate with each other across cellular networks. Tr. at 553:25-554:2. Any OEM manufacturing a cellular handset must purchase and install a modem chip. CX0507-001. Because the OEM must integrate the modem chip into the OEM's handset design process, OEMs may engage with potential modem chip suppliers as many as two years before the OEM plans to commercialize the handset. Tr. at 674:16-21; CX0507-001.

[4] Other terms for modem chips are baseband processors, application specific integrated circuits ("ASICs"), and chipsets. See, e.g., JX0051-004. For ease of reference, and in accordance with the parties' usage, the Court uses the term "modem chip."

Modem chips are either "single-mode" or "multimode." Whereas a single-mode modem chip supports only one cellular standard (like CDMA), a multimode modem chip supports multiple standards in one chip. Tr. at 1352:21-25. For example, Qualcomm's MSM 7600 modem chip supports six different cellular standards. Id. at 1372:8-25. A multimode modem enables global roaming, as carriers in different parts of the world may support different cellular standards. Id. at 1352:24-1353:2.

Modem chips also contain varying features. "Thin modems" are standalone modem chips that provide only the core cellular functionality. Tr. at 1378:7-14. Apple, a major OEM, buys thin modems from external modem chip suppliers and internally develops application [23] processors, which include the multimedia capability necessary for smartphones. Id. Other OEMs have also purchased thin modems and paired them with application processors. Tr. at 457:5-9. By contrast, a "system on a chip" ("SoC") is an integrated chip that includes both a modem's cellular functionality and the application processor. Id. at 1361:6-17; QX9204-015. Qualcomm produces SoCs (its MSM line of chips) and thin modems (its MDM line). CX5551-024; Tr. at 1375:5-21.

Qualcomm first sold commercial quantities of modem chips in 1996. CX1771-022. From fiscal years 2015 to 2017, Qualcomm shipped between 804 million and 932 million modem chips each year. CX7257-012. Although such sales are not relevant to this case, Qualcomm also sells modem [*675] chips to OEMs that manufacture items like smart cars. CX7257-012.

As of March 2018, several other companies were selling modem chips. These companies include MediaTek; HiSilicon, a division of the OEM Huawei; Samsung LSI (also referred to as Exynos), a division of the OEM Samsung; Intel; and Unisoc (formerly known as Spreadtrum). Tr. at 323:25-324:4; CX7257-014. Other modem chip suppliers exited the market between 2006 and 2016, including Freescale, [24] Marvell, Texas Instruments, ST-Ericsson, Broadcom, and Nvidia. CX8292-006, -024; Tr. at 324:5-12. The Court will discuss these rivals and how Qualcomm's practices affected them in more detail below.

D. Government Investigations, Findings, and Fines

The following descriptions of various government investigations and findings are from Qualcomm's 2017 10-K filed with the SEC on November 1, 2017:

The FTC first notified Qualcomm of its investigation related to the instant case in September 2014 and filed its complaint in the instant case in January 2017. CX7257-099.

In September 2009, the Japan Fair Trade Commission ("JFTC") issued a cease and desist order regarding certain of Qualcomm's licenses with Japanese licensees. CX7257-097. The JFTC order concluded that the Japanese licensees "were forced to cross-license patents to [Qualcomm] on a royalty-free basis and were forced to accept a provision under which they agreed not to assert their essential patents against [Qualcomm's] other licensees who made a similar commitment." Id. Qualcomm invoked its right to administrative hearings before the JFTC and the Tokyo High Court stayed the cease and desist order while the JFTC held administrative [25] hearings. Id. As of 2017, the JFTC had held hearings on 37 different dates. Id.

In January 2010, the Korea Fair Trade Commission ("KFTC") found that Qualcomm had violated Korean law "by offering certain discounts and rebates for purchases of its CDMA chipsets and for including in certain agreements language requiring the continued payment of royalties after all licensed patents have expired." CX7257-097. The KFTC imposed a fine, which Qualcomm paid, although Qualcomm has appealed the KFTC's order to the Korea Supreme Court. CX7257-097 to -098.

In March 2015, the KFTC notified Qualcomm that the KFTC was investigating whether Qualcomm's licensing practices violate the Korean monopoly laws. CX7257-098. In January 2017, the KFTC issued a written order that the following practices violate Korean law: "(i) refusing to license, or imposing restrictions on licenses for, cellular communications standard-essential patents with competing modem chipset makers; (ii) conditioning the supply of modem chipsets to handset suppliers on their execution and performance of license agreements with the Company; and (iii) coercing agreement terms." Id. The KFTC also fined Qualcomm $927 million. Id. Qualcomm [26] has appealed the order to the Korea Supreme Court. Id.

In 2015, the European Commission began formal proceedings into a 2010 complaint that Qualcomm had engaged in anticompetitive activity. CX7257-098. The Commission issued a decision in 2015 "expressing its preliminary view that between 2009 and 2011, the Company engaged in predatory pricing by selling certain baseband chipsets to two customers at prices below cost, with the intention of hindering competition." Id. As of 2017, the matter remained ongoing. Id.

[*676] In 2015, the Taiwan Fair Trade Commission ("TFTC") began investigating whether Qualcomm's patent licensing practices violate Taiwan's fair trade laws. CX7257-099. In 2017, the TFTC issued a formal decision that Qualcomm violated Taiwan law by refusing to license modem chip rivals, refusing to supply modem chips to OEMs who are unlicensed, and providing discounts to Apple in exchange for Apple's exclusive purchase of Qualcomm modem chips. Id. The TFTC imposed a $778 million fine. Id.

In addition, China's National Development and Reform Commission ("NDRC") investigated Qualcomm's licensing practices and in 2015 imposed a rectification plan that altered some of Qualcomm's licensing [27] practices in China, as set forth in the licensing background section above. CX7257-027. Presentation notes from a slide deck that Boston Consulting Group ("BCG") presented to the Qualcomm Board of Directors in 2015 explain that Qualcomm was able to avoid caps on non-SEP royalty rates, more aggressive rate cuts, and forced sales to non-licensees due to a $150 million payment to the Chinese government:

> NDRC settlement-Worst penalties were avoided — e.g. caps on non-SEP royalties, more aggressive rate cuts, forced selling of chips to non-licensees, etc. - primarily because of what CalTech[5] [code name for QCT] offered NDRC (agreement with SMIC (Semiconductor Manufacturing International Corporation) to collaborate on production technology + voluntarily contributing ~$150M to Chinese R&D investment fund.

Accordingly, Qualcomm's licensing practices have been the subject of government investigations in the United States since at least 2014 and in Asia and Europe since at least 2009.

E. Credibility Determinations

Before discussing the trial evidence in more detail, the Court observes that Qualcomm's trial presentation relied almost exclusively on trial testimony and ignored Qualcomm's [28] own contemporaneous documents. Qualcomm introduced only 16 of its own documents at trial, as compared to the more than 125 Qualcomm documents that the FTC introduced—not counting license and supply agreements. ECF No. 1458-1. At closing argument Qualcomm relied primarily on expert testimony and demonstratives, and largely ignored Qualcomm's own documents. Most of Qualcomm's experts did not even review Qualcomm's own documents.

The Court finds Qualcomm's internal, contemporaneous documents more persuasive than Qualcomm's trial testimony prepared specifically for this antitrust litigation. See In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litig., 289 F.R.D. 555, 576 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (finding contemporaneous documents more persuasive than the defendants' "litigation driven" declarations).

Specifically, many Qualcomm executives' trial testimony was contradicted by these witnesses' own contemporaneous emails, handwritten notes, and recorded statements to the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS"). For example, at trial and at his deposition, Cristiano Amon (Qualcomm President) testified that he had never been informed of Qualcomm threatening to cut off chip supply:

[5] Project Phoenix was a 2015 Qualcomm analysis of whether to split QTL and QCT, and CalTech was the Project Phoenix code name for QCT. Tr. at 96:20-21.

> [*677] Q: You were asked, 'You have never been informed that QTL threatened to cease supplying chipsets to a customer because of [29] a licensing dispute; is that right?' You answered 'That is correct.' That was a true statement when you said it?
> A: That is correct.

Tr. at 548:3-17 (citing Amon Depo. 50:24-51:2). However, Amon's own handwritten notes from 2015 license negotiations with Motorola's President Rick Osterloh, entitled "12-9-15-Rick & Team-Motorola," state: "(1) Licensing > Eric [Reifschneider, QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager] constantly threatening to cut off chip supply." CX7024-001. Thus, despite Amon's own handwriting acknowledging 2015 chip supply threats, Amon testified under oath at his deposition and trial that he was unaware of QTL threats to cutoff chip supply.

Furthermore, Cristiano Amon himself approved joint QTL and QCT plans to cut off chip supply during patent licensing disputes. For example, in November 2012, Eric Reifschneider (QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager) wrote to Amon (then QCT Co-President), Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President), Derek Aberle (QTL President), and Marv Blecker (QTL Senior Vice President) regarding Chinese OEMs: "Cristiano, This summarizes the conclusions we reached regarding sales of TD-SCDMA [TD-SCDMA is a 3G standard used primarily in China] [30] chipsets to customers that we anticipate will use them in TD-SCDMA/GSM products... 3. If any of these customers refuses or fails to pay royalties on any other (i.e., C2K [CDMA], UMTS, LTE) devices, we will discontinue supply to such customers as necessary." CX5053-002. Amon replied: "This summarizes well the discussion between QMC [Qualcomm Mobile Computing, a division of QCT]/QTL and the agreed plan forward. We will start communicating the plan to the customer base." CX5053-001. Thus, Amon not only approved the plan for QCT to cut off chip supply to Chinese OEMs who refuse to pay patent royalties to QTL, but Amon agreed to start communicating this plan to customers. Amon's trial testimony was not consistent with his contemporaneous emails and handwritten notes.

Likewise, at trial, Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO) testified that he was not aware that Qualcomm had ever cut off an OEM's chip supply:

> Q: "[H]as Qualcomm ever exercised the right to cut off chip supply to a customer that was in dispute about licensing with Qualcomm?
> A: Not that I'm aware of.

Tr. at 809:16-22. Mollenkopf's testimony also was not consistent with his contemporaneous emails.

On February 23, 2012, Sony CEO Bob Ishida [31] (Sony CEO) sent an email with the subject line "urgent" to Steve Mollenkopf (then Qualcomm President). CX7824-002. Ishida wrote that Qualcomm had held all chip shipments to Sony and asked Mollenkopf to intervene:

> QC legal team ordered to your sales to hold any shipment to SOMC due to non existence of QTL license agreement with SOMC after we became 100% subsidiary of Sony. Are you aware of that? We have an individual talking to your legal team diligently to agree on the licensing terms so it was a surprise that your legal team stopped the shipment. Please let me know what you can do on this.

CX7824-002. After the Sony shipment hold, Steve Mollenkopf wrote an email to Derek Aberle (QTL President) and Cristiano Amon (QCT Co-President) stating not that Qualcomm should never cut off chip supply, but only that Mollenkopf wished to [*678] have "visibility" on any future shipment holds: "Let's make sure we have a process to make sure Jim L [Jim Lederer, QCT Executive Vice President] or I have visibility before a stop-ship goes out." CX6522-002.

At trial, Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO) testified that the Sony chip supply cutoff was a mistake: "[O]ur team had mistakenly put in a stop ship for [Sony]." [32] Tr. at 811:23-24. However, two months after Qualcomm cut off Sony's chip supply, Qualcomm hired Eric Reifschneider, the outside counsel who threatened to cut off Sony's chip supply, as QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager. ECF No. 1326 at 15. Then, in an October 27, 2012 email to Jonathan Pearl (Sony General Counsel), Eric Reifschneider again threatened Sony's chip supply and told Pearl that QTL would report to QCT that Sony was not licensed: "[A]t this point I must report to QCT that SMC [Sony Mobile Corp.] appears unwilling to enter into a license agreement with Qualcomm." CX5185-005.

Mollenkopf also participated in the November 2012 emails summarizing the QTL and QCT plan for QCT to cut off chip supply to Chinese OEMs who refuse to pay patent royalties to QTL. CX5053-001 to -002. Moreover, on May 20, 2013, Derek Aberle (QTL President) told Steve Mollenkopf (then Qualcomm President) in an email that "I suggest you make the following points to Huawei's CEO." CX5231-001. Among those points was threatening to cut off Huawei's chip supply: "[I]f they don't extend we will have issues re continued chip supply on C2K. Note that Huawei has been claiming patent exhaustion based on [33] their purchase of chips from QC despite the terms of our supply agreement." CX5231-001. Steve Mollenkopf replied, "I got it. Thanks." Id.

At both his deposition and at trial, Derek Aberle (QTL President in 2012) was asked about a July 2012 Qualcomm presentation to the Qualcomm Board of Directors that stated "If we cease supply of chips to current customers they may assert antitrust claims seeking damages/fines and continued supply" and listed the following strategy: "Develop a plan of communication/action that maximizes our ability to defend against the above claims while ceasing supply when necessary." CX6974-070.

On July 2, 2012, Derek Aberle (QTL President) sent a slide from the presentation to Dr. Paul Jacobs (Qualcomm CEO), Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President), and Steve Altman (Qualcomm Vice Chairman). CX6998-001, -011. On July 9, 2012, Qualcomm presented the same slide—reproduced below—to the Qualcomm Board of Directors, including Dr. Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder and former CEO). CX6974-001.

At his March 2018 deposition, Derek Aberle (former Qualcomm President), who left Qualcomm in January 2018, could not answer any questions about Qualcomm's July 2012 communication plan [34] to defend against antitrust claims: "Actually, as I read that, I don't recall it. I don't actually know what it means." Aberle Depo. 217:25-218:12.

However, at the January 2019 trial, Derek Aberle testified that the July 2012 slide reflected Qualcomm's intent to "come up with a proactive plan to make sure we could get out ahead of situations where there may be a dispute or a license renewal that needed to happen and somebody was buying chips from us." Tr. at 261:7-19. It is odd that Aberle had better recall during the January 2019 trial than nearly a year earlier at his March 2018 deposition. The Court does not find Aberle's prepared for trial testimony credible.

Similarly, Alex Rogers (QTL President), who has worked at Qualcomm since 2001, testified that Qualcomm has "never threatened to cut off chip supply to get a licensee to accept license terms." Tr. at 1994:1-16. However, Rogers received the October 27, 2012 email that Eric Reifschneider (QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager) sent to Sony threatening Sony's chip supply because Sony was not licensed. See CX5185-002. Rogers' testimony was not consistent with his own emails.

Fabian Gonell (QTL Legal Counsel and Senior Vice [35] President, Licensing Strategy) also testified that Qualcomm does not cut off chip supply during license disputes:

> Q: What is Qualcomm's practice with respect to supplying chips to a licensee who is disputing the terms of its license?
> A: If there's a licensee that is disputing the terms of its license, then we continue to supply chips if they want them.

Tr. at 1428:2-5. However, like Rogers, Gonell received the October 27, 2012 Sony email in which Eric Reifschneider (QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager) threatened Sony's chip supply. See CX5185-003. Gonell also received the November 2012 email in which Eric Reifschneider summarized the QTL and QCT plan for QCT to "discontinue supply" to Chinese OEMs who refuse to pay patent royalties to QTL. CX5053-001. Gonell also did not testify credibly when confronted by a recording of a Qualcomm meeting with the IRS, as the Court will discuss later in this order. Gonell's testimony was not consistent [*680] with his own emails and his own recorded statements to the IRS.

In addition to giving testimony under oath at trial that contradicted their contemporaneous emails, handwritten notes, and recorded statements to the IRS, some Qualcomm witnesses [36] also lacked credibility in other ways. For example, Dr. Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder), Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO), and Dr. James Thompson (Qualcomm CTO) gave such long, fast, and practiced narratives on direct examination that Qualcomm's counsel had to tell the witnesses to slow down. For example, Qualcomm's counsel told Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO): "Slow down just a little bit, Mr. Mollenkopf, if you will, please." Tr. at 803:22-23. Qualcomm's counsel also had to tell Irwin Jacobs to slow down: "I'm going to ask you, Dr. Jacobs, to slow down just a little bit. We're trying to take down every word." Tr. at 1259:25-1260:2. By contrast, when cross-examined by the FTC, each witness was very reluctant and slow to answer, and at times cagey.

Similarly, as CTO, James Thompson oversees engineering at Qualcomm. On direct examination, Thompson readily testified about several of Qualcomm's modem chips, identified them by their marketing codes, and discussed the standards each chip practiced:

> Q: Moving over to the next one, the 7600, what was that chip the first of?

A: Okay. So that's — so I mentioned before that we had made a decision to support all modes in the world so our modems [37] could go anywhere in the world, and that was the first chip that supported that.Tr. at 1372:8-13. However, on cross-examination, Dr. Thompson was suddenly unable to answer even basic questions about a modem chip:

> Q: Dr. Thompson, Qualcomm's MSM 8655 modem chip is a CDMA capable modem chip?
> A: That — the MSM 8655, I'm trying to remember. I — you know, off the top of my head, I'm trying to remember which one that is. We use internal code names, and so -
> Q: Does the second digit being a 6 tell you that this has CDMA?
> A: Honestly, I don't — I don't know the marketing codes that are used. I have kind of — I think 9 means it has LTE. But — but I'm not sure. I'm not 100 percent sure.

Tr. at 1384:22-1385:6. Similar examples exist for Dr. Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder) and Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO).

Therefore, the Court largely discounts Qualcomm's trial testimony prepared specifically for this litigation and instead relies on these witnesses' own contemporaneous emails, handwritten notes, and recorded statements to the IRS.

III. THE FTC ACT AND THE SHERMAN ACT

The FTC brings its complaint against Qualcomm under § 5 of the FTCA, which prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce." [38] 15 U.S.C. § 45(a).

"[U]nfair methods of competition" under the FTCA includes "violations of the Sherman Act." Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Cement Inst., 333 U.S. 683, 693-94, 68 S. Ct. 793, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 44 F.T.C. 1460 (1948). In addition, the FTC under § 5 may "bar incipient violations of [the Sherman Act], and conduct which, although not a violation of the letter of the antitrust laws, is close to a violation or is contrary to their spirit." [*681] E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Fed. Trade Comm'n, 729 F.2d 128, 136-37 (2d Cir. 1984) (internal citations omitted); see also Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 321, 86 S. Ct. 1501, 16 L. Ed. 2d 587 ("This broad power of the [FTC] is particularly well established with regard to trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws."). "The standard of 'unfairness' under the FTCA is, by necessity, an elusive one," and the precise contours of the FTC's authority under § 5 are not clearly defined. Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Indiana Fed. of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 454, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986). However, the FTC's authority to proscribe "unfair methods of competition" under § 5 is not unbounded. See E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 729 F.2d at 137 ("When a business practice is challenged by the [FTC], even though, as here, it does not violate the antitrust or other laws and is not collusive, coercive, predatory or exclusionary in character, standards for determining whether it is 'unfair' within the meaning of § 5 must be formulated to discriminate between normally acceptable business behavior [39] and conduct that is unreasonable or unacceptable.").

Here, FTC alleges that Qualcomm's conduct violates § 5 of the FTCA because Qualcomm's conduct violates both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act. Compl. ¶ 147; see also ECF No. 1083 ("FTC Pretrial Brief"), at 3 (arguing that Qualcomm violated § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act). FTC also alleges that, even if Qualcomm's conduct does not violate either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, Qualcomm's conduct nonetheless "constitute[s] unfair methods of competition in violation of [§ 5] of the FTCA." Compl. ¶ 147.

A. Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act

"Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, prohibits [e]very contract, combination ... or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." Allied Orthopedic Appliances, Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Grp. LP, 592 F.3d 991, 996 (9th Cir. 2010). "Unlike Section 2 claims, Section 1 restraint of trade claims need not establish the threshold showing of monopoly control over a relevant market." Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1522 (9th Cir. 1996). "To establish liability under § 1, a plaintiff must prove (1) the existence of an agreement, and (2) that the agreement was an unreasonable restraint of trade." Aerotec Int'l, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171, 1178 (9th Cir. 2016). An agreement is an unreasonable restraint of trade if defendant "plays enough of a role in [the relevant] market to impair competition significantly" and the challenged agreement "is the type that restrains trade." Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th Cir. 1991).

"Section 2 of [40] the Sherman Act makes it unlawful for a firm to 'monopolize.'" United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 50, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001). "The offense of monopolization has two elements: '(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market"; and (2) "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power" through exclusionary conduct "as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" Id. (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)); see also McWane v. Fed. Trade Comm'n, 783 F.3d 814, 828 (11th Cir. 2015) (applying these two elements in a case brought under § 5 of the FTCA). As the D.C. Circuit has explained, "to be condemned as exclusionary, a monopolist's act must have an [*682] 'anticompetitive effect,'" which means that the conduct "must harm the competitive process and thereby harm consumers." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58 (emphasis in original). "The [Sherman Act] directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993).

Thus, the Sherman Act "contains a 'basic distinction between concerted and independent action.'" Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). Whereas § 1 prohibits certain concerted activity between separate entities, § 2 is addressed to the anticompetitive conduct of a single firm. Id. at 767-68. In addition, the showing of monopoly power required under § 2 is "more [41] stringent" than the showing of market power required under § 1. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992).

Nonetheless, once a plaintiff has shown the existence of an agreement under § 1 or shown that a defendant possess monopoly power under § 2, courts apply substantially identical analytical frameworks to determine whether the defendant's conduct actually violated § 1 or § 2. See Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 59 (describing the "similar balancing approach" under both § 1 and § 2, and citing cases).

For example, under § 1, unless a restraint is unreasonable per se, courts apply the "rule of reason" and its three-step, burden-shifting framework. Ohio v. Am. Express Co., 138 S. Ct. 2274, 2284, 201 L. Ed. 2d 678 (2018). The FTC does not argue that Qualcomm entered any agreements that are per se unreasonable. FTC Pretrial Brief at 9. Under the § 1 rule of reason, the plaintiff has the initial burden to show that "the challenged restraint has a substantial anticompetitive effect that harms consumers in the relevant market." Id. If the plaintiff makes that showing of anticompetitive effect, "then the burden shifts to the defendant to show a procompetitive rationale for the restraint." Id. If the defendant shows a procompetitive rationale, "the burden shifts back to the plaintiff to demonstrate that the procompetitive efficiencies could be reasonably achieved [42] through less anticompetitive means." Id.

Under § 2, a court asks whether the defendant possessed monopoly power in a relevant antitrust market. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 51. Monopoly power is "the power to control prices or exclude competition." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. If the court finds that a defendant possessed monopoly power, the court then asks whether the defendant has acquired or maintained its monopoly "by engaging in exclusionary conduct 'as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58 (quoting Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571). The monopolist's conduct "must have an anticompetitive effect." Eastman v. Quest Diagnostics Inc., 108 F. Supp. 3d 827, 834 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (quoting Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58).

If the plaintiff makes a prima facie case under § 2 by showing that the monopolist's conduct has anticompetitive effect, the burden shifts to the monopolist to "proffer a 'procompetitive justification' for its conduct." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 59 (quoting Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 483). If the monopolist shows a procompetitive justification, "the burden [*683] shifts back to the plaintiff to rebut that claim." Id. If the plaintiff cannot rebut the monopolist's procompetitive justification, the plaintiff "must demonstrate that the anticompetitive harm of the conduct outweighs the procompetitive benefit." Id.

Therefore, the inquiry as to whether an [43] agreement is an "unreasonable restraint of trade" in violation of § 1 and the inquiry as to whether conduct is exclusionary under § 2 substantially overlap. See Williams v. I.B. Fischer Nev., 999 F.2d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 1993) (concluding that because conduct underlying both § 1 and § 2 claims was not anticompetitive under § 1, the court need not separately analyze § 2); see also United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224 n.59, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940) (holding that "the two sections overlap in the sense that a monopoly under § 2 is a species of restraint of trade under § 1"). The United States Supreme Court has held that under both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act, "the criteria to be resorted to in any given case for the purpose of ascertaining whether violations of the section have been committed is the rule of reason guided by the established law." Standard Oil Co. of N.J. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 61-62, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911).

As a result, in denying Qualcomm's motion to dismiss the FTC's Complaint, this Court concluded that the analyses of anticompetitive conduct under § 1 and § 2 "are substantially identical." Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Qualcomm, 2017

*U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98632, 2017 WL 2774406, at 9. Similarly, in Microsoft, the D.C. Circuit applied the same three-part burden-shifting analysis to the government's § 1 and § 2 claims. See 253 F.3d at 58, 95-97. Indeed, the FTC relies on the same theories under both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act. See Compl. ¶ 147; FTC Pretrial Brief at 3 ("The legal analysis of Qualcomm's conduct under Sections 1 and 2 of the [44] Sherman Act is similar."). Both Qualcomm and the FTC acknowledge that each of the FTC's claims should be judged under this balancing approach. ECF No. 1322 ("QC Pretrial Brief") at 11; ECF No. 1472, FTC Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Fact ("FTC FOFCOL") at 65.

Accordingly, the Court's analysis proceeds as follows. First, the Court discusses whether the FTC has shown that Qualcomm possessed monopoly power in relevant antitrust markets, and thus satisfied the first element of § 2. Then, the Court discusses whether the FTC has shown that Qualcomm's conduct is an unreasonable restraint of trade under § 1 or exclusionary conduct under § 2. Because the Court concludes that Qualcomm's conduct violates the Sherman Act and thereby violates the FTC Act, the Court does not address the separate argument that Qualcomm's conduct is a standalone violation of the FTC Act.

IV. MARKET SHARE AND MARKET POWER

The Court first addresses Qualcomm's market share and market power in the relevant antitrust markets, the market for CDMA modem chips and the market for premium LTE modem chips.

A. Legal Standard

A relevant antitrust market is bounded both by geography and product. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). An antitrust market is geographically [45] bounded by "where sellers operate and where purchasers can predictably turn for supplies." E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., 637 F.3d 435, 439 (4th Cir. 2011) (citing Tampa Elec Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 332-33, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)).

[*684] The boundaries of an antitrust product market "are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. "The test of reasonable interchangeability . . . require[s] the District Court to consider only substitutes that constrain pricing in the reasonably foreseeable future, and only products that can enter the market in a relatively short time can perform this function." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 53-54. "[T]he definition of the relevant market rests on a determination of available substitutes." Id. at 54 (citation omitted). Other practical indicia of an antitrust product market include "industry or public recognition" of the market and "the product's peculiar characteristics and uses." Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325 (internal citation omitted).

One method that courts have used to apply the above principles and define an antitrust product market is the hypothetical monopolist test. See Theme Promotions, Inc. v. News Am. Mktg. FSI, 546 F.3d 991, 1002 (9th Cir. 2008). Under the hypothetical monopolist test, the court asks "whether a monopolist in the proposed market could profitably impose a small but significant and nontransitory price increase" [46] or "SSNIP." Id. If after the monopolist imposed a SSNIP, customers would purchase products outside the proposed market, the proposed antitrust market definition is too narrow. Saint Alphonsus Med. Center-Nampa Inc. v. St. Luke's Health Sys., Ltd., 778 F.3d 775, 784 (9th Cir. 2015). If customers would not change their behavior even if the monopolist imposed a SSNIP, the market definition is proper. See id. ("Market definition thus perforce focuses on the anticipated behavior of buyers and sellers."); see also *Hynix Semiconductor Inc. v. Rambus Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123822, 2008 WL 73689, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 5, 2008) (applying the hypothetical monopolist test).

Once the relevant antitrust market is defined, the court must then address whether the defendant held monopoly power during the period alleged. Because there is rarely direct proof of a firm's ability to "profitably raise prices substantially above the competitive level," a court may also rely on circumstantial evidence of monopoly power.

Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 51. "The existence of such power ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. The United States Supreme Court held in Kodak that evidence that a defendant holds more than 80% share of the product market "with no readily available substitutes" is sufficient to support a finding of monopoly power. 504 U.S. at 481. Kodak also cited other United States Supreme Court precedent for the proposition [47] that "over two-thirds of the market is a monopoly." Id. (citing Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)). A lesser showing of a "roughly 40% or 50% share" is required to show a § 1 violation. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 70.

However, market share alone is not dispositive. Id. at 54. Rather, "no single factor has been held determinative as to the existence of [monopoly] power," and courts also consider whether "barriers to entry" protect the dominant firm's ability to control prices. Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Res. Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 366 (9th Cir. 1988). Entry barriers are market characteristics "that prevent new rivals from timely responding to an increase in price above the competitive level." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 51. An industry that "requires onerous front-end investments that might deter competition from all but [*685] the hardiest and most financially secure investors" is one with significant entry barriers. United States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 667 (9th Cir. 1990). Moreover, a declining market share does not preclude a finding of monopoly power. Oahu Gas Serv., 838 F.2d at 366.

Thus, the Ninth Circuit has held that to show monopoly power using circumstantial evidence, a plaintiff must: "(1) define the relevant market; (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market; and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 1997) (citation [48] omitted).

B. CDMA Modem Chip Market

First, the FTC contends that from 2006 to 2016, Qualcomm possessed monopoly power in the global market for CDMA modem chips. FTC Pretrial Brief at 4. In around 1996, Qualcomm sold its first CDMA modem chip, defined as a modem chip that supports the CDMA standard. Tr. at 327:21-25. A "CDMA multimode" modem chip is a modem chip that supports CDMA and additional standards. CX7606-028. The Court first defines the CDMA modem chip market and then explains how Qualcomm possessed monopoly power in the CDMA modem chip market.

1. CDMA Modem Chip Market Definition

As an initial matter, the geographic boundaries of the CDMA modem chip market are worldwide, a conclusion that Qualcomm does not contest. An antitrust market is geographically bounded by "where sellers operate and where purchasers can predictably turn for supplies." Kolon Indus., 637 F.3d at 439. A slide in a 2011 strategic plan for QCT, Qualcomm's modem chip division, shows that Qualcomm sells CDMA modem chips in every region of the globe. CX7606-037. In the same 2011 strategic plan, Qualcomm calculates QCT's CDMA modem chip market share on a global basis. CX7606-029.

Defining the relevant product market "rests on a determination [49] of available substitutes." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 54. Industry practice also informs whether a product market is distinct. See Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325 (explaining that practical indicia of an antitrust product market include "industry or public recognition" of the market).

Qualcomm conclusorily disputes that the CDMA modem chip market is a relevant market, but does not cite any evidence. ECF No. 1473, Qualcomm Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law ("QC FOFCOL") at 107 (arguing only that the FTC failed to show that Qualcomm held monopoly power in the CDMA modem chip market).

Because non-CDMA modem chips are not "available substitutes" for CDMA modem chips, and because Qualcomm's own documents show that the CDMA modem chip market is a distinct product market, the Court concludes that the FTC has adequately defined the antitrust market.

First, modem chips that do not comply with CDMA standards are not available substitutes for CDMA modem chips. Under the hypothetical monopolist test, the court asks "whether a monopolist in the proposed market could profitably impose a small but significant and nontransitory price increase" or "SSNIP." Theme Promotions, 546 F.3d at 1002. If after the monopolist imposed a SSNIP, customers would purchase products outside the proposed [50] market, the proposed antitrust market definition is too narrow. Saint Alphonsus, 778 F.3d at 784. If customers would [*686] not change their behavior even if the monopolist imposed a SSNIP, the market definition is proper. See id.

Application of the hypothetical monopolist test shows that the CDMA modem chip market is properly defined. Due to Qualcomm's large market share, Qualcomm has been able to charge a premium on CDMA modem chips, which is a paradigmatic SSNIP. Per Qualcomm's 2012 QCT strategic plan, Qualcomm planned to charge what the strategic plan called a "CDMA Adder" of $4 on CDMA modem chips relative to comparable modem chips without CDMA capability. CX7607-061. At trial, Cristiano Amon (Qualcomm President) agreed that the slide shows that "Qualcomm associates a $4 CDMA adder" with chips sold for premium handsets. Tr. at 503:25-504:5. Two years later, Qualcomm's 2014 QCT strategic plan shows that Qualcomm anticipated charging a $4 "CDMA Adder" on premium handsets through 2018. CX7644-054.

Qualcomm's CDMA adder has been as high as 30% over comparable UMTS chips, as Qualcomm's expert Tasneem Chipty conceded at trial. Tr. at 1747:4-10. For example, a 2015 modem chip pricing agreement between Qualcomm and Apple indicates [51] that Qualcomm charged Apple $3 more—equivalent to a 30% premium—on "CDMA-enabled" modem chips as compared to "non-CDMA" modem chips. JX0107-013. In 2013, Cristiano Amon stated in an email to Derek Aberle (QTL President), Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President), Paul Jacobs (Qualcomm CEO), and other Qualcomm executives that Qualcomm's CDMA adder had been as high as $7: "[T]here is an overall $4.50-7.00 delta between the chipset price of CDMA and its equivalent UMTS." CX5294-002.

Despite the adder, OEMs cannot substitute a non-CDMA modem chip for a CDMA modem chip. Certain carriers, including Verizon in the United States and China Telecom in China, deploy CDMA networks, which means that an OEM who wishes to sell a handset for use with that carrier needs to purchase a CDMA modem chip. Tr. at 581:9-12. Finbarr Moynihan (MediaTek General Manager of Corporate Sales and Business Development) testified, "[I]f somebody needs to support CDMA for a specific network, like Verizon or Sprint or the Chinese operators, there isn't an alternative to that. It's a standard technology." Tr. at 329:23-25.

John Grubbs (BlackBerry Senior Director of Intellectual Property Transactions) also testified that non-CDMA [52] modem chips are not viable substitutes for CDMA modem chips:

> Q: So in order for BlackBerry to sell a phone in to one of these CDMA carriers, the phone had to have a CDMA chipset; is that right?
> A: That's right.

Grubbs Depo. 208:1-4. As a result, there is no evidence that any OEM substituted a non-CDMA modem chip for a CDMA modem chip, "making the SSNIP unprofitable." Saint Alphonsus, 778 F.3d at 784.

Second, Qualcomm documents reflect "industry or public recognition" of the CDMA modem chip market as a distinct product market. See Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325. For example, a slide in a 2011 QCT strategic plan includes charts identifying "QCT Market Share by Technology," including one that tracks Qualcomm's share in CDMA modem chips. CX7606-029. A July 2016 internal Qualcomm presentation titled Qualcomm Technology Licensing: Market Trends includes updated CDMA market share information, and shows that from 2014 to 2016, Qualcomm held at least a 96% share of the worldwide CDMA modem chip market. CX7618-025. Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO), Derek Aberle (Qualcomm President), [*687] and Alex Rogers (QTL President) all received the Market Trends presentation. CX7618-001. Those Qualcomm documents confirm that there is a distinct, identified market for CDMA modem [53] chips.

Therefore, the Court concludes that because non-CDMA modem chips are not "available substitutes" for CDMA modem chips, the CDMA modem chip market is a relevant antitrust product market. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 54.

2. Qualcomm CDMA Modem Chip Market Share and Market Power

To show monopoly power, the FTC must demonstrate that Qualcomm owned a dominant share of the market and "show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Image Tech. Servs., 125 F.3d at 1202. The evidence shows that Qualcomm has maintained a large share of the CDMA modem chip market, that existing competitors have been unable to quickly increase their output to discipline Qualcomm's CDMA adder, and that there are structural barriers to entering the CDMA modem chip market.

Qualcomm's own documents show that Qualcomm has maintained a dominant share of the market. For example, a slide in a 2011 QCT strategic plan includes charts identifying "QCT Market Share by Technology," and indicates that Qualcomm maintained a 95% share of the CDMA modem chip market in 2010. Id. A July 2016 internal Qualcomm presentation titled Qualcomm Technology Licensing: Market Trends includes updated CDMA [54] market share information, and shows that from 2014 to 2016, Qualcomm held at least a 96% share of the worldwide CDMA modem chip market. CX7618-025. The July 2017 version of the Market Trends presentation shows that Qualcomm's CDMA market share remained at least 92% through the end of 2016. CX7629-026.

In addition, that Qualcomm could charge its CDMA adder without price discipline is evidence of Qualcomm's market power. See Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995) (defining market power as the ability "to increase prices above competitive levels, and sustain them for an extended period").

Qualcomm has directly attributed the CDMA adder to Qualcomm's market power. For example, Cristiano Amon (now Qualcomm President) told Sanjay Mehta (now Qualcomm Senior Vice President for Compute Products) and Jim Lederer (later QCT Executive Vice President and General Manager) in a 2008 email that "UMTS prices are now lower than CDMA not to cost or volume but due to competition." CX8257-001.

In another 2008 email, Cristiano Amon proposed to Steve Mollenkopf (now Qualcomm CEO) that Qualcomm charge a 10% price premium on CDMA modem chips as compared to UMTS modem chips simply because Qualcomm could: "There is no justification for the 10 percent, [55] but we think that it resides within the OEM threshold of tolerances." CX5279-003. In the email, Cristiano Amon was explicit that Qualcomm had the market power to charge an even higher premium, but recommended that "Qualcomm will not exercise its CDMA market share dominance to practice uncompetitive prices." CX5279-003.

In 2013, Cristiano Amon again emphasized that Qualcomm prices its CDMA modem chips based on market power, in an email to Derek Aberle (QTL President), Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President), and other Qualcomm executives: "Our price is not based on cost but on value — in reality, cost will allow modest addition in ASP to cover for CDMA RF. This is not a [*688] cost discussion. Present strategy is based on monetizing full value of CDMA." CX5393-001. At trial, Cristiano Amon agreed that Qualcomm has "historically priced CDMA based on value rather than cost." Tr. at 482:21-483:15.

Other evidence at trial also shows that Qualcomm's competitors have lacked the ability "to increase their output in the short run" and discipline Qualcomm's prices. Image Tech. Servs., 125 F.3d at 1202. Although a rival modem chip supplier, VIA Telecom ("VIA"), also sold CDMA modem chips, OEMs did not view VIA's chips as competitive. Todd [56] Madderom (Motorola Director of Procurement) testified, "So there was VIA Technologies in the market. They had CDMA IP. We didn't feel it was capable or competitive, and so we were sole sourced to Qualcomm." Madderom Depo. 157:21-23. John Grubbs (BlackBerry Senior Director of Intellectual Property Transactions) testified that there were "[n]ot viable alternatives" to Qualcomm for CDMA modem chips. Grubbs Depo. 214:4-8.

Although VIA lagged in the market, when VIA introduced a CDMA modem chip in a segment where Qualcomm had already introduced a CDMA modem chip, Qualcomm's prices would fall. An April 2009 presentation created by Mark Davis (former VIA Vice President and Chief Technical Officer) stated, "Q and V prices are similar, where comparable products exist," but that "Q's margins are vastly higher in segments where V provides no similar product." CX1770-002. The presentation gave a specific example of how Qualcomm only reduced its prices once VIA introduced a chip: "When first introduced CBP6 to US market, the price of QSC6055 [a Qualcomm chip] was $18." CX1770-004. Within weeks, "the QSC6055 price was reduced to $10." Id.

Qualcomm, too, has viewed itself as the sole viable option [57] for CDMA modem chips. For example, during 2009 internal Qualcomm discussions regarding how to price CDMA modem chips for Apple, Eric Koliander (QCT Vice President, Sales) wrote to Cristiano Amon (now-Qualcomm President): "Truthfully, we should take a harder line with these issues for CDMA since their options are limited." CX6839-002. Cristiano Amon replied: "Can't imagine Via would be an option." CX6839-002. Five years later, James Thompson (Qualcomm CTO) noted to Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President) in a 2014 email that without Qualcomm's CDMA chips, Apple "would lose big parts of North America, Japan and China. That would really hurt them." CX5402-003.

Thus, the evidence shows that Qualcomm's rivals lacked the ability to increase their output in the short term and discipline Qualcomm's CDMA adder. Rebel Oil Co., 51 F.3d at 1434.

The CDMA modem chip market is also characterized by significant barriers to entry. In Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659, the Ninth Circuit held that industries that require "onerous front-end investments that might deter competition from all but the hardiest and most financially secure investors" are characterized by structural entry barriers. Id. at 667. Modem chips are such a market. Scott McGregor (former Broadcom CEO) testified [58] at trial that "the economics of being in the cellular baseband business are very sensitive to volume of customers" because of the front-end investments necessary to fund research and development. McGregor Depo. 174:19-21.

As a result, rivals have very slowly entered the CDMA modem chip market. In 2013, MediaTek licensed VIA's CDMA patents. Finbarr Moynihan (MediaTek General Manager of Customer Sales and Business [*689] Development) testified that MediaTek was not able to launch a CDMA modem chip until 2015 because of the time necessary to "integrate that into a chipset and produce it." Tr. at 327:13-328:6. Finbarr Moynihan testified that MediaTek did not launch a CDMA modem chip in the United States until "late 2016." Id. at 327:17-22.

In 2015, Intel purchased VIA for [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT][6], according to an Intel presentation. CX1598-004. Aicha Evans (Intel Chief Strategy Officer) testified that because of the significant investment required to develop modem chips, acquiring VIA was the most expedient way to enter the market:

> Q: Why did Intel decide to acquire VIA Technologies instead of developing CDMA in-house?
> A: Because there was — I mean, you need experience, [59] you need talent, expertise, and at this point basically building it from scratch was never — we were not going to make it.

Id. at 585:24-586:1. MediaTek's and Intel's delayed entry into the CDMA modem chip market show that the "onerous front-end investments" required to develop modem chips pose structural entry barriers. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d at 667.

The inquiry into entry barriers focuses on "external factors at work precluding entry into the market," rather than the defendant's conduct. Oahu Gas., 838 F.2d at 367. Therefore, although Qualcomm's anticompetitive conduct has imposed additional entry barriers, the Court reserves that discussion for later in this order.

MediaTek's 2015 entry into the CDMA modem chip market exerted downward pressure on Qualcomm's CDMA adder. A 2015 Qualcomm pricing proposal sent to Will Wyatt (QTI [Qualcomm Technologies, Inc., the Qualcomm subsidiary that operates QCT] Vice President, Finance) demonstrates how Qualcomm shifted its prices to respond to MediaTek's entry. Will Wyatt testified that Cristiano Amon (QCT President) also reviewed the pricing proposal. Tr. at 431:10-15. One slide is titled, "Budget Pricing vs Proposed Pricing Moves," and charts Qualcomm's price responses to two MediaTek modem chips. [60] CX7591-011. Will Wyatt agreed at trial that the slide "shows that

[6] To avoid unnecessary redactions, the Court will refer to sealed information once and then not refer to it again unless necessary.

Qualcomm was proposing to reduce the price of its MSM 8939 chip by $2.21 following MediaTek's introduction of the 6752 chip." Tr. at 433:2-5.

Despite MediaTek's entry, Qualcomm still retains a dominant share of the CDMA modem chip market. In a 2018 Qualcomm strategic plan that Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO) received, Qualcomm forecast that QCT would maintain a 79% share of CDMA modem chips sold to handset OEMs. CX8190-067.

Against that evidence of market share, barriers to entry, and rivals' inability to increase output, Qualcomm argues that Qualcomm lacked market power because large OEMs "could easily retaliate in the much larger non-CDMA segments against any effort by Qualcomm to exercise monopoly power in the far smaller CDMA segment." QC FOFCOL at 105-06. In United States v. Archer-Daniels-Midland Co., 781 F. Supp. 1400 (S.D. Iowa 1991), the district court made the factual finding that a concentration of powerful buyers of high fructose corn syrup exerted downward pressure on syrup prices. Id. at 1416-18. These powerful buyers used various tactics to obtain lower prices from syrup producers, including "[s]winging large volume back and forth among suppliers [*690] to show each supplier that it better quote a lower price to obtain and [61] keep large volume sales," and refusing to purchase syrup until producers acceded to the buyers' demands. Id. at 1418.

Archer-Daniels-Midland is inapposite. Qualcomm identifies no evidence that OEMs organized to attempt to force down Qualcomm's prices, nor any evidence that any powerful OEMs in fact disciplined Qualcomm's prices. In addition, Qualcomm was able to leverage its CDMA modem chip dominance against the most powerful OEMs. For example, during 2009 internal Qualcomm discussions regarding how to price CDMA modem chips for Apple, Cristiano Amon (now-President of Qualcomm) wrote that Apple had no other CDMA modem chip options: "Can't imagine Via would be an option." CX6839-002.

Even for powerful OEMs, Qualcomm's CDMA modem chip dominance meant that OEMs needed to accede to Qualcomm's royalty demands, or risk the critical harm of being unable to sell handsets. Injung Lee (Licensing Lead at Samsung Intellectual Property Center) testified that Samsung's business could not afford any disruption in CDMA modem chip supply because Samsung purchased 100% of its CDMA modem chips from Qualcomm, and could not sell handsets without those modem chips:

> [G]iven the fact that we were being supplied with 100 [62] percent of our chipsets from Qualcomm, were it such that we were not getting provided with those chipsets as per the normal manner and fashion, then Samsung would not have been able to manufacture mobile phones nor sell the same. And as such, it would have had an untold impact on our business.

Lee Depo. 166:14-20. Todd Madderom (Motorola Director of Procurement) testified, "If we are unable to source the modem, we are unable to ship the handset. It's a direct correlation. No modem supply, no phone supply to our customer." Madderom Depo. 147:25-148:3. Unlike in Archer-Daniels-Midland, therefore, an OEM could not refuse to purchase modem chips as leverage against Qualcomm. Nor could an OEM swing large volume back and forth without a viable alternative modem chip supplier.

Qualcomm also argues that the CDMA modem chip market has been characterized by "increasingly competitive conditions." QC FOFCOL at 106. In Syufy Enterprises, the Ninth Circuit concluded that because a competitor had "steadily been eating away" at the dominant corporation's market share and because the government conceded the lack of entry barriers, a defendant's large market share alone did not prove monopoly power. 903 F.2d at 666-67. By contrast, modem [63] chip rivals—as will be discussed later—must fund expensive research and development or acquire other companies to gain a foothold in the CDMA modem chip market, and Qualcomm's practices impose further entry barriers. Further, no rival has "steadily been eating away" at Qualcomm's market share, as Qualcomm enjoyed ten years of almost 100% market share before MediaTek finally commercialized a CDMA multimode chip in 2015. As stated above, despite MediaTek's entry, Qualcomm still retains a dominant share of the CDMA modem chip market. In a 2018 Qualcomm strategic plan that Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO) received, Qualcomm forecast that QCT would maintain a 79% share of CDMA modem chips sold to handset OEMs. CX8190-067.

Therefore, because Qualcomm has owned a dominant share of the CDMA modem chip market, there are significant barriers to entry, and competitors have lacked the ability to discipline Qualcomm's [*691] prices, the Court concludes that Qualcomm has possessed monopoly power in the CDMA modem chip market. Image Tech. Servs., 125 F.3d at 1202.

C. Premium LTE Modem Chip Market

The FTC contends that from 2011 to 2016, Qualcomm possessed monopoly power in the global market for premium LTE modem chips, which the FTC defines as [64] "LTE-compliant handsets used in premium handsets." Id. at 7. Cristiano Amon (Qualcomm President) testified that LTE modem chips are those modem chips compatible with LTE, a 4G cellular standard. Tr. at 479:3-5. The Court first defines the premium LTE modem chip market and then explains how Qualcomm possessed monopoly power in the premium LTE modem chip market.

1. Premium LTE Modem Chip Market Definition

As an initial matter, the geographic boundaries of the premium LTE modem chip market are worldwide, a conclusion that Qualcomm does not contest. An antitrust market is geographically bounded by "where sellers operate and where purchasers can predictably turn for supplies." Kolon Indus., 637 F.3d at 439.

Defining the relevant product market "rests on a determination of available substitutes." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 54. Industry practice also informs whether a product submarket is distinct. See Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325 (explaining that practical indicia of an antitrust product market include "industry or public recognition" of the market).

The evidence shows that Qualcomm and other cellular industry participants view the premium LTE modem chip market as a distinct submarket.

Qualcomm categorizes modem chips into different "tiers" of the market. James Thompson (Qualcomm CTO), [65] who leads Qualcomm's modem chip engineering, testified, "So we have a tier of products, so we do what we would call premium tier, and then we do a number of tiers all the way down to what we call the entry level." Tr. at 1363:16-18. Thus, in a 2018 Qualcomm strategic plan slide deck that Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO) and Cristiano Amon (Qualcomm President) received, Qualcomm organized modem chips into tiers, including "discrete modem" (a thin modem chip), "premium," "high," and "mid/low." CX8190-261. The same strategic plan identifies Qualcomm strategies and market shares specific to all tiers, including the "mobile premium tier." CX8190-260. Cristiano Amon (Qualcomm President) testified that the Snapdragon 800 is "our premium tier" modem chip series. Tr. at 505:16-18.

OEMs concurred that premium LTE modem chips are a distinct segment. Tony Blevins (Apple Vice President of Procurement) testified that premium modem chips are distinct from lower tier modem chips in terms of features like speed, uplink and downlink performance, quality, miniaturization, and power consumption. Tr. at 673:3-17. Blevins testified that because LTE is the latest cellular standard, any premium modem chip must [66] support LTE. Id. at 672:23-24.

Will Wyatt (QTI Vice President, Finance) agreed that "premium tier chipsets typically have a higher product cost and more functionality." Tr. at 434:5-7. QCT's 2016 strategic plan, which Cristiano Amon (QCT President) and Derek Aberle (Qualcomm President) received, shows that Qualcomm proposed to charge, on average, twice as much for a premium LTE modem chip ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]) as a modem chip released the same quarter in the "low-high" [*692] tiers ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]). CX5551-045. That same strategic plan also shows that Qualcomm earns its highest margins—ranging from 47-49%—on premium LTE modem chips. CX5551-013.

Qualcomm documents also show that OEMs sell cellular handsets in tiers that correspond to the modem chip tier. In a 2016 QCT strategic plan sent to Cristiano Amon (QCT President), Qualcomm defined handsets priced at $400 or more as premium tier, between $250 and $400 as high tier, between $110 and $250 as mid tier, and below $100 as low or entry tier. CX8256-112. Cristiano Amon testified that those handset definitions correspond to the modem chip tier:

> Q: It's accurate, sir, that in 2016 Qualcomm continued to view premium tier chips [67] as associated with handset prices of $400 and up; is that right?
> A: In — that's what this slide is saying, that is correct.

Tr. at 506:20-23. The relevant slide in the 2016 QCT strategic plan that Cristiano Amon received shows that Qualcomm plans specific modem chip features for handsets in the premium tier, as distinct from those features planned for modem chips in lower tiers. CX8256-112.

Product plans in Qualcomm documents also identify specific Qualcomm modem chip models as designed for premium handsets. For example, one slide in the 2016 QCT strategic plan that Cristiano Amon (QCT President) and Derek Aberle (Qualcomm President) received includes a chart with a column for "Handset ASP." CX5551-007. "ASP" means average selling price. That column includes rows for "MDM" (thin modem), and the handset prices $400+, $250-$400, $125-$250, and <$100. Id. In the fields to the right of the $400+ row, Qualcomm lists planned modem chip releases for each year. Id. Qualcomm released the MSM 8996 modem chip in 2015 and planned to release the MSM 8998 in 2016. Id. For 2018, Qualcomm lists no model number, but simply "Premium 18" and planned release dates. Id. At trial, Dr. James Thompson (Qualcomm [68] CTO) also referred to a Qualcomm premium modem chip designed for Samsung's line of "premium tier products." Tr. at 1375:15-1376:21. Therefore, Qualcomm's own documents consistently identify a distinct market for LTE-compliant modem chips sold for premium handsets.

Despite Qualcomm's own documents to the contrary, Will Wyatt (QTI Vice President, Finance) testified that some OEMs purchase premium LTE modem chips for use in non-premium handsets: "Xiaomi [an OEM] uses our Snapdragon 800 tier chip in a device that they'll price as low as 2,000 RMB, so that's roughly $300 U.S." Tr. at 451:22-452:2. Will Wyatt also testified that the OEM VIVO "will use our Snapdragon 600 series, and they will sell that in a device that is . . . in the neighborhood of 4- to 500 U.S. dollars." Id. at 452:6-12. However, Qualcomm offered no documents to support Will Wyatt's testimony, not even Qualcomm's sales documents to Xiaomi and VIVO. Wyatt's unsupported testimony is contradicted by Qualcomm's own documents, which clearly demonstrate that as a general matter, premium LTE modem chips are those modem chips sold for use in premium tier handsets.

In addition, courts have concluded that "premium" products may constitute [69] distinct antitrust product markets. In F.T.C. v. Whole Foods Market, Inc., 548 F.3d 1028, 383 U.S. App. D.C. 341 (D.C. Cir. 2008), the FTC sought a preliminary injunction and contended that two merging grocery store chains, Whole Foods and Wild Oats, were part of a submarket of "premium, natural, and organic supermarkets." Id. at 1032. The FTC proffered undisputed evidence that Whole Foods and Wild Oats "provide higher levels [*693] of customer service than conventional supermarkets, a 'unique environment,' and a particular focus on the 'core values'" that certain customers espoused. Id. at 1039. Whole Foods and Wild Oats also sold more natural and organic products than conventional supermarkets as a proportion of inventory. Id. Finally, when a conventional grocery store opened near a Wild Oats, Wild Oats prices stayed static, but Wild Oats dropped its prices when a Whole Foods opened near a Wild Oats. Id. at 1040.

On that evidence, the D.C. Circuit concluded that the FTC could likely show that premium, natural, and organic supermarkets constitute a relevant antitrust submarket. Id. The D.C. Circuit concluded that premium, natural, and organic supermarkets "serve a core consumer base." Id. Whole Foods' own documents "suggested that if a Wild Oats near a Whole Foods were to close, the majority (in some cases nearly [70] all) of its customers would switch to the Whole Foods rather than to conventional submarkets." Id. Therefore, the D.C. Circuit concluded that as a matter of law, "in some situations core consumers, demanding exclusively a particular product or package of products, distinguish a submarket." Id. at 1041.

The district court's decision in United States v. Gillette Co., 828 F. Supp. 78 (D.D.C. 1993), is also on point. In Gillette, the plaintiff argued that there was a separate antitrust product market for "premium" fountain pens priced from $50 to $400. Id. The court concluded that premium fountain pens contained unique features, such that premium fountain pens "afford their users (as well as those who merely put them in their breast pockets) image, prestige, and status." Id. at 82. The court also identified industry recognition of a distinct premium fountain pen submarket, as well as evidence that if a retailer increased the price of a premium fountain pen, "consumers will nonetheless purchase the now-costlier pen rather than substitute a less expensive, less prestigious model." Id. Above $400, pens "become mere collectors items or 'jewelry' pieces," such that a consumer would not substitute a $400-and-up pen for a premium fountain pen. Id. Therefore, the Gillette [71] court concluded that premium fountain pens priced between $50 and $400 were not reasonably interchangeable with pens priced below or above that range, and held that premium fountain pens constituted an appropriate antitrust product market. Id. at 83.

Here, the premium LTE modem chip market is an appropriate antitrust submarket because OEMs producing premium handsets—the core consumers, as in Whole Foods—require premium LTE modem chips. Tony Blevins (Apple Vice President of Procurement) testified that because Apple produces only premium handsets, Apple buys only premium LTE modem chips: "We focus exclusively on premium chips. Our perception is that the iPhone is a premium smartphone, so therefore all of its components need to be the best that we can possibly design or acquire." Tr. at 674:24-675:2.

As in Gillette, even if the price of premium LTE modem chips goes up, a non-premium substitute is not a reasonable substitute. Todd Madderom (Motorola Director of Procurement) testified that Motorola requires a premium LTE modem chip for its premium handsets:

> Q: And how would it impact Motorola's business if it used a nonpremium-tier cellular modem in a premium-tier handset?
> A: We've never considered [72] that because I don't think that's a viable approach. I [*694] think that equates to not being able to sell in a product.

Madderom Depo. 140:13-18.

Finbarr Moynihan (MediaTek General Manager of Customer Sales and Business Development) made the same points when asked whether an OEM could substitute a non-premium modem chip for a premium modem chip: "So generally those things are not negotiable. They're looking for certain feature sets in those price points at those tiers. So generally not substitutable." Tr. at 325:12-23.

Therefore, because a non-premium LTE modem chip is not an "available substitute" for a premium LTE modem chip, the Court concludes that the premium LTE modem chip market is a relevant antitrust market.

2. Qualcomm Premium LTE Modem Chip Market Share and Market Power

To show monopoly power, the FTC must demonstrate that Qualcomm owned a dominant share of the market and "show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Image Tech. Servs., 125 F.3d at 1202. The evidence shows that Qualcomm has maintained a large share of the premium LTE modem chip market, that existing competitors have been unable to quickly increase their [73] output, and that there are structural barriers to entering the premium LTE modem chip market.

At trial, Cristiano Amon (Qualcomm President) testified that Qualcomm was the first to supply premium LTE modem chips and that Qualcomm has been "first to market with every transition of LTE." Tr. at 479:3-14. Since then, Qualcomm has maintained a large share of the premium LTE modem chip market. For example, a 2016 QCT strategic plan that Cristiano Amon and Derek Aberle (then Qualcomm President) received states that Qualcomm held an 89% share of the premium LTE modem chip market in 2014 and an 85% share of the market in 2015. CX5551-010. In the same 2016 QCT strategic plan, Qualcomm projected that it would retain a 77% share in 2016 and a 64% share in 2017. CX5551-010.

Qualcomm documents also show that Qualcomm has faced little competition in the premium LTE modem chip market. A presentation for Qualcomm's Board of Directors in July 2017, which Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm CEO) received, includes a slide on the "Mobile competitive environment" that compares Qualcomm's position to those of other rival modem chip suppliers. CX8191-089. In the rows that indicate suppliers' offerings in the premium [74] LTE modem chip tier, Qualcomm is the only external supplier of premium LTE SoC modem chips. Id. Intel supplies only premium LTE thin modems. Id. MediaTek and Spreadtrum have no premium tier offerings, and Spreadtrum has only low tier offerings. Id. Although Exynos, Samsung's modem chip division (also known as Samsung LSI), has a premium LTE modem chip, Finbarr Moynihan (MediaTek General Manager of Customer Sales and Business Development) testified that MediaTek does not "tend to see Samsung LSI as a supplier much outside of Samsung's own phones." Tr. at 327:14-15. Similarly, Alex Rogers (QTL President) testified that Exynos primarily supplies modem chips to its parent Samsung. Tr. at 1989:5-6.

OEM testimony confirmed that Qualcomm held market power in LTE. John Grubbs (BlackBerry Senior Director of Intellectual Property Transactions) testified that in 2011, "the other chipset manufacturers were at least two years behind on LTE . . . there would not have been any other viable sources for LTE targeting [*695] the early 2013 time frame for release." Grubbs Depo. 215:12-216:1. Similarly, Ira Blumberg (Lenovo Vice President of Intellectual Property) testified that without Qualcomm's premium LTE [75] modem chips, Lenovo's phones would not be viable "at least with respect to the high end of the market." Blumberg Depo. 71:19-72:8.

Qualcomm's ability to charge monopoly prices on premium LTE modem chips over an extended period also shows that competitors were not quickly able to increase output. See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434 (defining market power as the ability "to increase prices above competitive levels, and sustain them for an extended period"). For example, in November 2013, Cristiano Amon (QCT Co-President) informed Apple that "LTE was not a commodity and would therefore have to be priced 'upon value — not cost.'" CX0597-001. Amon similarly alluded to value over cost as to CDMA prices, and specifically identified competition rather than cost or volume as the difference in CDMA over UMTS prices: "UMTS prices are now lower than CDMA not to cost or volume but due to competition." CX8257-001. Therefore, the inference is that Qualcomm could also price its LTE modem chips higher due to a lack of competition.

Like the market for CDMA modem chips, the market for premium LTE modem chips is characterized by significant structural barriers to entry. See Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d at 667 (holding that industries that require "onerous front-end investments [76] that might deter competition from all but the hardiest and most financially secure investors" are characterized by structural entry barriers).

Developing premium LTE modem chips requires even more investment in research and development because premium modem chips contain the most advanced features, according to Finbarr Moynihan (MediaTek General Manager of Corporate Sales and Business Development): "You'd certainly like to see that the higher tiers generate higher profit, higher margins, yeah. It takes more R&D to develop those products." Tr. at 378:18-20. Likewise, Aicha Evans (Intel Chief Strategy Officer) testified that when Intel purchased Infineon in 2011 and aimed to develop a premium LTE modem chip from scratch, Intel had to invest heavily: "Lots of money, billions of dollars, and an army of engineers worldwide." Tr. at 565:4-5.

As such, Finbarr Moynihan testified that MediaTek has not been able to develop into a competitor in premium LTE modem chips: "We haven't really penetrated ever what I would call the premium tiers in the market, the high tiers, the highest tiers of the market." Tr. at 324:25-325:2. In fact, Moynihan testified that because research and development for premium [77] LTE modem chips is so expensive, MediaTek has [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] and "decided to focus our limited R&D in other places." Id. at 378:2-3.

Therefore, because Qualcomm has owned a dominant share of the premium LTE modem chip market, there are significant barriers to entry, and competitors have lacked the ability to discipline Qualcomm's prices, the Court concludes that Qualcomm has possessed monopoly power in the premium LTE modem chip market. Image Tech. Servs., 125 F.3d at 1202. The Court next discusses Qualcomm's anticompetitive conduct and harm.

V. ANTICOMPETITIVE CONDUCT AND HARM

Under the rule of reason, the court "weighs legitimate justifications for a restraint against any anticompetitive effects." Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1156 (9th Cir. 2003). In this three-part, burden-shifting analysis, the FTC has the initial burden to [*696] show that Qualcomm's conduct "has a substantial anticompetitive effect that harms consumers in the relevant market." Am. Express, 138 S. Ct. at 2284. A plaintiff may prove anticompetitive effects either "directly or indirectly." Am. Express, 138 S. Ct. at 2284. Direct evidence includes "proof of actual detrimental effects" on competition, including "reduced output, increased prices, or decreased quality in the relevant market." Id. (quoting F.T.C. v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986)). By contrast, indirect evidence includes "proof of [78] market power plus some evidence that the challenged restraint harms competition." Id. The FTC has satisfied its burden to prove market power, as discussed above, and thus the question is whether Qualcomm's actions harmed competition in the relevant markets.

A. Legal Standard

As the D.C. Circuit observed in Microsoft, "[w]hether any particular act of a monopolist is exclusionary, rather than merely a form of vigorous competition, can be difficult to discern: the means of illicit exclusion, like the means of legitimate competition, are myriad." 253 F.3d at 58. It is not enough for conduct to harm a competitor. Id. Nor is maintenance of monopoly power alone sufficient, if that advantage is "a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. As the United States Supreme Court has explained, "[t]he opportunity to charge monopoly prices—at least for a short period—is what attracts 'business acumen' in the first place; it induces risk taking that produces innovation and economic growth." Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004).

Rather, anticompetitive conduct is conduct that "harm[s] the competitive process and thereby harm[s] consumers." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58 (emphasis in original). Put another way, "[a]nticompetitive conduct is behavior [79] that tends to impair the opportunities of rivals and either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Cascade Health Sols. v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 894 (9th Cir. 2008); see also Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 458 (holding that the Sherman Act "directs itself . . . against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself").

"Although output reductions are one common kind of anticompetitive effect in antitrust cases, a 'reduction in output is not the only measure of anticompetitive effect." O'Bannon v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 802 F.3d 1049, 1070 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1503b(1) (emphasis in original). "Anticompetitive conduct may take a variety of forms." Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 308 (3d Cir. 2007). Further, a court should consider the combined anticompetitive effects of a defendant's challenged actions. City of Anaheim v. S. Cal. Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1373, 1378 (9th Cir. 1992) (holding that "it would not be proper to focus on specific individual acts of an accused monopolist while refusing to consider their overall combined effect"). Finally, "[t]he test is not total foreclosure, but whether the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit." United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 191 (3d Cir. 2005).

Qualcomm argues that the FTC must also show "a causal link between the challenged conduct and the actual, significant competitive harm." QC Pretrial Brief at 13. However, the D.C. Circuit [*697] in Microsoft [80] rejected a similar contention that "plaintiffs must present direct proof that a defendant's continued monopoly power is precisely attributable to its anticompetitive conduct." 253 F.3d at 79. A plaintiff need not "reconstruct the hypothetical marketplace absent a defendant's anticompetitive conduct." Id. Instead, where a government agency seeks injunctive relief—as here—courts should "infer 'causation' from the fact that a defendant has engaged in anticompetitive conduct that 'reasonably appear[s] capable of making a significant contribution to . . . maintaining monopoly power." Id. (alteration in original) (quoting 3 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 651c, at 78 (1996 ed.)). A court "may infer causation when exclusionary conduct is aimed at producers of nascent competitive [products] as well as when it is aimed at producers of established substitutes." Id. Therefore, the Court may infer causation where a defendant has maintained monopoly power and the defendant's anticompetitive conduct "reasonably appears capable" of maintaining monopoly power.

Although the Court's focus is "upon the effect of [the defendant's] conduct, not upon the intent behind it," a monopolist's intent [81] is relevant to "the likely effect of the monopolist's conduct." Id.; see also Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 602, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985) (holding that intent is relevant to the question of anticompetitive effect because "no monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what he is doing"); Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918) ("[K]nowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.").

If the FTC meets its burden to show that Qualcomm's conduct has anticompetitive effects, the burden then shifts to Qualcomm to show that its conduct has "procompetitive justifications." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58. Courts have defined a procompetitive justification as "a nonpretextual claim that [the defendant's] conduct is indeed a form of competition on the merits because it involves, for example, greater efficiency or enhanced consumer appeal." Id.; see also Kodak, 504 U.S. at 483 (holding that a defendant must show "valid business reasons" for its actions). A defendant does not meet its burden with a purported procompetitive justification that is merely pretextual. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 484; see also Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1413 (holding that the defendant "must offer evidence of pro-competitive effects") (emphasis added). Further, "[i]ntellectual property rights do not confer a privilege to violate the antitrust laws." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 63 (quoting In re Indep. Serv. Orgs. Antitrust Litig., 203 F.3d 1322, 1325 (Fed. Cir. 2000)).

If Qualcomm meets its burden to show [82] procompetitive justifications for its conduct and the FTC fails to rebut the justification, the burden returns to the FTC to "show that the anticompetitive harm of the conduct outweighs the procompetitive benefit." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 59.

Below, the Court describes in detail Qualcomm's anticompetitive conduct and the resulting harm to competition.

B. Anticompetitive Conduct Against OEMs and Resulting Harm

First, Qualcomm has used its monopoly power in the CDMA and premium LTE modem chip markets to engage in a wide variety of anticompetitive acts against OEMs.

In a practice that Qualcomm concedes is unique within Qualcomm and [*698] unique in the industry, Qualcomm refuses to sell modem chips to an OEM until the OEM signs a separate patent license agreement. Thus, Qualcomm refuses to sell an OEM modem chips exhaustively. Under the doctrine of patent exhaustion, "the initial authorized sale of a patented item terminates all patent rights to that item." Quanta Comp., Inc. v. LG Elecs., Inc., 553 U.S. 617, 625, 128 S. Ct. 2109, 170 L. Ed. 2d 996 (2008). Thus, patent exhaustion provides that when a consumer purchases a television, the consumer does not have to separately sign a license and pay royalties for any patents practiced by the television.

To avoid exhaustion and to enforce Qualcomm's practice of requiring a [83] separate patent license before selling modem chips, Qualcomm wields its chip monopoly power to coerce OEMs to sign patent license agreements. Specifically, Qualcomm threatens to withhold OEMs' chip supply until OEMs sign patent license agreements on Qualcomm's preferred terms. In some cases, Qualcomm has even cut off OEMs' chip supply, although the threat of cutting off chip supply has been more than sufficient to coerce OEMs into signing Qualcomm's patent license agreements and avoiding the devastating loss of chip supply. Qualcomm has also used the "carrot" of chip incentive funds, which reduce the price of Qualcomm's chips and induce OEMs to agree to Qualcomm's licensing terms. QTL—Qualcomm's licensing division—funds these agreements even though the incentives accrue on OEMs' purchases of QCT chips. These chip incentive funds often function as de facto exclusive deals that foreclose OEMs from purchasing modem chips from Qualcomm's rivals.

In addition, Qualcomm has refused to even provide samples of Qualcomm modem chips, withheld technical support, and delayed delivery of software or threatened to require the return of software until OEMs sign Qualcomm's patent license agreements. [84] In 2018, Qualcomm paid to extinguish Samsung's antitrust claims and to silence Samsung. Qualcomm patent license agreements also include unusual provisions that require OEMs to cross-license their patents—often royalty-free—to QCT, Qualcomm's modem chip division, in exchange for the rights to QTL's patents. Despite this host of unique arrangements, Qualcomm refuses to provide OEMs lists of Qualcomm's patents or patent claim charts during license negotiations.

Qualcomm's practice of refusing to sell modem chips until an OEM signs a patent license agreement, and Qualcomm's associated threats, generate and sustain Qualcomm's unreasonably high royalty rates. Because Qualcomm receives royalties on any handset sale, even when that handset contains a rival's modem chip, Qualcomm's unreasonably high royalty rates impose an artificial and anticompetitive surcharge on the price of rivals' modem chips. At times, Qualcomm has even charged OEMs higher royalty rates when OEMs purchase rivals' chips than when OEMs purchase Qualcomm's chips, which further harms rivals.

To provide a coherent narrative, the Court organizes its discussion of Qualcomm's anticompetitive practices in patent license negotiations [85] around Qualcomm's conduct toward the following OEMs: (1) LGE, (2) Sony, (3) Samsung, (4) Huawei, (5) Motorola, (6) Lenovo, (7) BlackBerry, (8) Curitel, (9) BenQ, (10) Apple, (11) VIVO, (12) Wistron, (13) Pegatron, (14) ZTE, (15) Nokia, and (16) smaller Chinese OEMs.

1. LG Electronics ("LGE")

Qualcomm engaged in anticompetitive conduct by cutting off LGE's chip supply, threatening to withdraw technical support, threatening to require the return of software, charging higher patent royalty rates when LGE used a rival's instead of Qualcomm's [*699] chip, giving LGE chip incentive funds if LGE purchased at least 85% of its chips from Qualcomm, and giving rebates on the price of Qualcomm's chips.

Hwi-Jae Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center) testified that Qualcomm's requirement that an OEM sign a separate patent license agreement before the OEM can purchase a component is unique in the industry:

> Q: Have other suppliers of components to LGE required LGE to execute a separate license agreement in order to obtain access to their components?
> A: No.

Cho Depo. ¶ 15.

On August 31, 1993, Qualcomm entered an Infrastructure and Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement ("1993 CDMA [86] SULA") with Goldstar Information & Communications Ltd., an LGE corporate predecessor. ECF No. 1326 at 6. According to Hwi-Jae Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center), LGE paid Qualcomm a 5.75% running royalty on any LGE handsets that LGE sold outside of Korea under the CDMA SULA. Cho Depo ¶ 38h. Qualcomm and LG Information & Communications, Ltd., an LGE corporate predecessor, entered into an Amendment to Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement, with an effective date of March 17, 1998. Id. Qualcomm and LGE entered into an Amendment to Infrastructure and Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement, with an effective date of March 15, 2000. Id.

On September 1, 2000, QCTAP (QCT's Asia Pacific division) and LGE entered the ASICS Supply Agreement, which governs LGE's purchase of CDMA modem chips. CX6803-001. Hwi-Jae Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center) agreed that the Supply Agreement "prohibit[s] LGE from using Qualcomm baseband processors in unlicensed handsets." Cho Depo. ¶ 14d. The Supply Agreement also provides that Qualcomm can terminate the Supply Agreement if LGE defaults on its royalty obligations: "QUALCOMM may terminate [87] this Agreement if Buyer is in Default under the License and such default is not cured within the cure period specified therein." CX6803-007.

a. 2004 Chip Supply Threats and Cutoff

In December 2003, Qualcomm initiated arbitration against LGE and alleged that LGE had breached LGE's 1993 CDMA SULA by "[f]ailing to report sales of WCDMA products for the purpose of paying royalties to QUALCOMM as required by Section 5." CX8117-007. According to Hwi-Jae Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center), LGE argued in opposition that "WCDMA arose from a different technology, GSM, which is different technology from CDMA," and that "in contrast to CDMA that was developed mainly by Qualcomm, many companies like Nokia, Ericsson, and NTT Docomo, among others, participated to develop WCDMA." Cho Depo. ¶ 38b-d.

Hwi-Jae Cho testified that LGE also argued in the arbitration that Qualcomm's 5.75% royalty rate for its small share of WCDMA technology would make the aggregate royalty for the entire WCDMA patent portfolio 25% of the phone price, which would make it difficult to make any profit on phones. Companies in the industry thought that approximately 5% of the phone price was the proper cumulative royalty rate [88] for all WCDMA SEPs, not just Qualcomm's share of SEPs. Specifically, Hwi-Jae Cho testified:

> If Qualcomm attempted to assert a 5.75% royalty for its small share of WCDMA technology alone, the aggregate royalty for the entire WCDMA patent portfolio would be more than 25% of [*700] handset price, which was far more than what LGE or the industry thought at that time. If the royalty for WCDMA alone was more than 25% of the phone price, it would be impossible to make any profit by selling handsets. Companies in the industry thought that approximately 5% of the phone price was the proper cumulative royalty rate for the entire WCDMA standard essential patents.

Cho Depo. ¶ 38h.

To resolve the patent license dispute, Qualcomm threatened to terminate the Supply Agreement and cut off QCT's supply of modem chips to LGE. On May 6, 2004, Louis Lupin (Qualcomm General Counsel) asserted to Mun-hwa Park (LGE CEO) that "even under LGE's purported interpretation of its license agreements with QUALCOMM, LGE would be in breach of the Supply Agreement" because LGE had not paid any royalties on sales of WCDMA handsets. CX6774-008.

Hwi-Jae Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center) testified that LGE interpreted [89] Qualcomm's actions as a threat to LGE's modem chip supply: "We thought Qualcomm would use whatever leverage it had because Qualcomm often mentioned termination of the Supply Agreement." Cho Depo. ¶ 61.

On May 26, 2004, Louis Lupin (Qualcomm General Counsel) threatened to cut off chip supply in a letter to Mun-hwa Park (LGE CEO): "[P]lease be advised that QUALCOMM, at this time, has terminated only the MOU but reserves the right to terminate the Supply Agreement as well." CX6774-017. Hwi-Jae Cho testified that any loss of chip supply would be devasting to LGE's handset business: "All of LGE's CDMA products used Qualcomm's baseband chipsets and LGE also started to use Qualcomm's WCDMA baseband chips. Therefore, there would be significant negative impact to LGE's business if Qualcomm had terminated the Supply Agreement." Cho Depo. ¶ 67.

Dr. Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder and CEO) then became involved in the chip supply threats. On June 16, 2004, Irwin Jacobs wrote a letter to Ssang Su Kim (LGE Vice Chairman) in which he stated that unless LGE withdrew its arbitration claims and paid past WCDMA royalties, Qualcomm would stop accepting LGE purchase orders for chips, cease all shipments [90] of chips, withdraw all technical support, and require LGE to return all chip software. Specifically, Irwin Jacobs stated:

> 1) QUALCOMM will stop accepting LGE purchase orders for WCDMA ASICs;
> 2) QUALCOMM will cease all shipments of WCDMA ASICs to LGE, beginning with the next-scheduled shipment of 500 units of the MSM 6250 for June 30, and 6000 units of the MSM 6200 scheduled to ship during the first week in July;
> 3) QUALCOMM will withdraw all of its substantial WCDMA engineering resources currently providing technical support to LGE and reassign those resources to our strategic ASIC customers, all of whom are honoring their supply contracts and licensing obligation; and
> 4) QUALCOMM will require that LGE return to QUALCOMM all versions and derivations of our WCDMA ASIC software.

CX6814-022. At trial, Irwin Jacobs testified that Qualcomm then cut off LGE's chip supply: "We did not ship to them the chips that were specified here, the 500 and then 6,000 chips as far as I know at this time." Tr. at 1293:25-1294:2.

[*701] In early July, shortly after the CDMA chip supply threats and WCDMA chip supply cutoff, LGE and Qualcomm reached a set of agreements to resolve their dispute. On July 11, 2004, Qualcomm [91] and LGE entered into (1) a Settlement and Release with Qualcomm, JX0025; (2) an Amendment to Infrastructure and Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement, JX0026 ("2004 SULA Amendment); and (3) a Chipset Purchase and Incentive Agreement ("Chipset Agreement"). CX6809. Hwi-Jae Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center) testified that "[w]hen Qualcomm threatened to terminate the Supply Agreement, LGE had no option but to agree to whatever Qualcomm demanded. LGE's top management did not want to take the risk of endangering LGE's mobile business." Cho Depo. ¶ 91.

Under the 2004 SULA Amendment, LGE paid Qualcomm a 5% running royalty on handsets containing Qualcomm modem chips and a 5.75% running royalty on handsets containing non-Qualcomm modem chips. JX0026-005. Although Hwi-Jae Cho testified that LGE's "assessment of the fairness and reasonability" of Qualcomm's royalty rates had not changed, "LGE accepted such terms because LGE had little chance to evaluate Qualcomm's WCDMA patent portfolio and, most importantly, LGE had to consider the business risks" of a chip supply cutoff. Cho Depo. ¶ 91. Hwi-Jae Cho testified, "During that time period, almost all of the profits of LGE's mobile business were [92] from its CDMA handsets and Qualcomm was the only CDMA chipset supplier. Therefore, if Qualcomm were to suspend the supply of baseband processors, LGE would not have been able to develop or manufacture any CDMA handset products." Id. at ¶ 105.

In the July 2004 Chipset Agreement, Qualcomm offered LGE chip incentive funds as another carrot to purchase Qualcomm chips. Qualcomm rebated LGE 3-5% of the purchase price on each Qualcomm modem chip that LGE purchased, provided that LGE purchased at least 85% of its CDMA modem chips from Qualcomm. CX6809-004. This agreement effectively resulted in exclusivity.

LGE has argued that the handset is an unfair royalty base for Qualcomm's royalty rates. Hwi-Jae Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center) testified that during the 2004 negotiations LGE argued that Qualcomm should deduct the cost of camera modules and mobile television from the royalty base because those features are independent of Qualcomm's SEPs: "LGE argued to deduct the cost of camera modules and DMB (which is the Korean version of mobile TV) modules because, at a minimum, those two features were functionally independent from Qualcomm's standard essential patents at that time." [93] Cho Depo. ¶ 101. Qualcomm rejected LGE's argument. Id.

b. 2007 Chip Incentive Funds

Qualcomm and LGE entered another set of patent license and chip incentive agreements in 2007. On May 14, 2007, Qualcomm and LGE signed an Amendment to the Infrastructure and Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement ("2007 CDMA SULA"), effective January 1, 2007. ECF No. 1326 at 7. On May 14, 2007, Qualcomm and LGE signed a contract titled "Agreement," effective January 1, 2007. ECF No. 1326 at 7.

The two agreements lowered LGE's royalty rate on non-Qualcomm chips, according to a January 2007 email that Steve Altman (Qualcomm President) sent to Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder and former CEO): "They currently pay 5% when they use our chip and 5.75% when they don't. We have agreed to take their rate to 5% regardless of whose chip they [*702] use." CX6722-001. Thus, from 2004 to 2007, LGE was paying a higher royalty rate on handsets containing rivals' modem chips than on those containing Qualcomm modem chips.

Qualcomm also offered LGE additional chip incentives. According to a May 2007 Qualcomm accounting memo, Qualcomm offered LGE a "Strategic Fund," under which Qualcomm rebated LGE 3-4% of the [94] purchase price on each Qualcomm CDMA or WCDMA modem chip that LGE purchased from 2007 to 2014. CX7556-002.

Importantly, the May 2007 Qualcomm accounting memo concluded that although the chip incentives were calculated on LGE's purchase of QCT modem chips, QTL (Qualcomm's licensing division) received the primary benefit because LGE signed a favorable patent license agreement, and QTL would thus provide the rebate funds: "QTL is deemed to be the primary beneficiary of the elements of these agreements, including the expected royalty streams resulting from QC's first OFDM subscriber device license with a major handset manufacturer. Therefore, the amounts under these agreements will be recorded in the QTL business unit." CX7556-005. OFDMA ("orthogonal frequency division multiple access") is a technology used in the LTE standard. ECF No. 1326 at 3.

c. 2016 Chip Incentive Funds

In 2016, Qualcomm again used chip incentive funds to lower LGE's effective royalty rates on Qualcomm chips only. On or about December 11, 2015, LGE filed a Request for Arbitration with the International Chamber of Commerce in a matter captioned LG Electronics Inc. v. Qualcomm Inc. ECF No. 1326 at 8. According to Hwi-Jae [95] Cho (Director of LGE Intellectual Property Center), LGE argued in the arbitration that Qualcomm had not reduced its royalty rate even though Qualcomm's patents had become fully paid up under LGE's existing SULA: "[T]here was no royalty rate adjustment even after the fully paid up rights matured." Cho Depo. ¶ 195. Under a fully paid up agreement, the licensee's royalty obligations may expire after a certain term. On or about February 18, 2016, Qualcomm filed a response to LGE's Request for Arbitration. ECF No. 1326 at 8.

Then, the parties quickly reached three agreements to resolve the royalty dispute before arbitration. On April 16, 2016, Qualcomm and LGE entered (1) a Settlement Agreement and Release, ECF No. 1326 at 8; (2) an Amendment to License Agreements, ECF No. 1326 at 8; and (3) a Strategic Fund and Indemnity Agreement. JX0110-001.

The Strategic Fund and Indemnity Agreement provided that Qualcomm would pay LGE a 7.5% rebate on the price of any Qualcomm modem chips that LGE purchased. JX0110-009. When asked why LGE entered the 2016 agreements, Hwi-Jae Cho testified that although the Amendment to License Agreements did not alter LGE's contractual royalty rates, the chip rebates [96] reduced LGE's effective royalty rate on Qualcomm modem chips: "Although there were many factors, overall, it would reduce LGE's effective royalty rate through the strategic fund and indemnification." Cho Depo. ¶ 206.

In sum, Qualcomm has engaged in anticompetitive conduct toward LGE by cutting off LGE's chip supply, threatening to withdraw technical support, threatening to require the return of software, charging higher patent royalty rates when LGE used a rival's instead of Qualcomm's chip, giving LGE chip incentive funds if LGE purchased at least 85% of its chips from Qualcomm, and giving rebates on the price of Qualcomm's chips.

[*703] 2. Sony

Qualcomm engaged in anticompetitive conduct toward Sony at least twice in 2012 by threatening and delaying Sony's chip supply.

a. February 2012 Chip Supply Threats and Cutoff

In early 2012, Qualcomm concluded that Sony had become unlicensed after a Sony Ericsson joint venture dissolved. CX6522-004.

On February 20, 2012, Eric Reifschneider (then-outside counsel, later QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager) wrote in an email to Jonathan Pearl (Sony General Counsel) and Derek Aberle (QTL President), "As we discussed in New York, we need to get a new [97] license agreement in place quickly so that we can avoid any disruption in supply. . . . I understand that there are several chipset orders scheduled to ship this week, so we need to move quickly on this." CX7650-002 to -003.

Jonathan Pearl took immediate offense at Qualcomm's threat to Sony's chip supply:

> I am sure that in raising the imminent delivery of Q chipsets that you are not threatening to withdraw or delay chip supplies. Sony Mobile is Qualcomm's 3rd largest customer for chipsets and such action would bring this company to a virtual standstill. In the present circumstances this would seem to be a highly questionable tactic and would unlikely be considered as fair, or reasonable.

CX7650-002.

At trial, Derek Aberle (then QTL President) recalled that Eric Reifschneider had threatened Sony's chip supply:

> Q: And at several points through the course of the negotiations, Eric Reifschneider and others reminded Sony that if they did not reach an agreement, that they would be unable to purchase chips; is that correct?
> A: I remember you showing me passages from emails where that was communicated.
> Q: Do you call that — those things being communicated at the time?
> A: Yes.

Tr. at 314:21-315:4.

Internally, [98] Qualcomm continued to view chip supply as leverage against Sony. Derek Aberle (QTL President) wrote in a February 22, 2012 email to Qualcomm executives including Cristiano Amon (QCT Co-President), Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President), and Fabian Gonell (QTL Division Counsel) that Qualcomm needed to maintain its no license, no chips practice: "To my knowledge, we have never shipped commercial quantities of chips to a company without a license. We can't do that here either." CX6522-005. Carol Blubaugh (QCT) stated in an email the same day that QTL had "request[ed] to have us looking at holding chip shipments" to Sony. CX6522-005. On February 23, 2012, Blubaugh stated in another email that "our operations team has been advised to hold all component shipments to SEMC/Sony Mobile." CX6522-003.

At trial, Fabian Gonell testified that QCT only stopped chip shipments because someone at QCT misunderstood a Gonell email: "[I] turns out that they misunderstood my e-mail and did it because of my e-mail and not because somebody else at QTL said that they should do it." The February 16, 2012 Gonell email in question stated only: "SEMC [Sony] is not a licensee w/r/t WCDMA." CX6522-006. Gonell's testimony [99] is contradicted by the record. Carol Blubaugh's (QCT) February 22, 2012 email refers to specific QTL directions regarding the stop shipment: "QTL is working the issue but wanted to bring you up to speed on QTL's request to have us look at [*704] holding chip shipments" and "QTL will advise by tomorrow if we need to hold off on pending shipments." CX6522-005. Thus, the Court finds not credible Gonell's testimony.

Sony responded immediately after learning of the shipment hold. On February 23, 2012, Bob Ishida (Sony CEO) sent an email with the subject line "urgent" to Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President). CX7824-002. Ishida wrote that Qualcomm had held all chip shipments to Sony and asked Mollenkopf to intervene:

> QC legal team ordered to your sales to hold any shipment to SOMC due to non existence of QTL license agreement with SOMC after we became 100% subsidiary of Sony. Are you aware of that? We have an individual talking to your legal team diligently to agree on the licensing terms so it was a surprise that your legal team stopped the shipment. Please let me know what you can do on this.

CX7824-002. Steve Mollenkopf replied, "They mistakenly sent the wrong signal and will immediately work to [100] make right today." CX7824-001. However, Ishida replied, "As of now, your legal team does not seems [sic] to be following your instructions. Could you please confirm? Sorry to bother you but this is really urgent and important." Id. At trial, Steve Mollenkopf testified that Qualcomm then reinstituted chip supply to Sony. Tr. at 813:13-22. After the reinstitution of chip supply, Steve Mollenkopf (Qualcomm President) wrote a February 23, 2012 email to Derek Aberle (QTL President) and Cristiano Amon (QCT Co-President) stating not that Qualcomm should never cut off chip supply, but only that Mollenkopf wished to have "visibility" on such threats: "Let's make sure we have a process to make sure Jim L [Jim Lederer, QCT Executive Vice President] or I have visibility before a stop-ship goes out." CX6522-002.

A week after the chip supply threats, Sony and Qualcomm reached an interim patent license agreement while negotiations continued. On March 1, 2012, Sony and Qualcomm entered into a Temporary Agreement, effective February 29, 2012. ECF No. 1326 at 8. Two months after Qualcomm cut off Sony's chip supply, Qualcomm hired Eric Reifschneider, the outside counsel who threatened to cut off Sony's [101] chip supply, as QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager. ECF No. 1326 at 15.

Then, on May 3, 2012, Sony and Qualcomm entered into a Subscriber Unit Patent License Agreement, effective February 16, 2012 through September 30, 2012 ("May 2012 Sony Interim License"). ECF No. 1326 at 9. Under the May 2012 Sony Interim License, Sony agreed to provisionally pay Qualcomm a 5% royalty on CDMA handsets. JX0063-015. In contemporaneous notes from the interim negotiations with Sony, Eric Reifschneider (QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager) observed that Sony remained concerned about chip supply: "Sony concerned about QC applying pressure thru chip supply." CX8297-041.

b. October 2012 Chip Supply Threats

Sony and Qualcomm did not reach a long-term agreement before the September 30, 2012 expiration of the May 2012 Sony Mobile Interim License. Thus, on October 1, 2012, Sony Mobile and Qualcomm entered into a brief amendment to the May 2012 Sony Mobile Interim License. ECF No. 1326 at 9.

In late October 2012, after the October amendment to the interim license expired, Qualcomm again threatened Sony's chip supply. In an October 20, 2012, email to Derek Aberle (QTL President), Fabian Gonell [102] (QTL Division Counsel), and Eric Reifschneider (QTL Senior Vice President [*705] and General Manager), Marv Blecker (QTL Senior Vice President) recommended that Qualcomm "delay final approval of chip shipment until Tuesday to let them know that we are serious about this." CX5186-001. Reifschneider replied in agreement: "At a minimum, we need to be prepared to stop all chip shipments after Tuesday if [Sony doesn't] sign on Tuesday." CX5186-001. In another email in the same thread, Reifschneider wrote that Qualcomm's primary concern was whether a chip supply threat would get Sony to sign the patent license agreement, and that the most relevant question was "are they more or less likely to sign on Tuesday if we hold the shipment." CX6534-001.

On October 25, 2012, in an email to Derek Aberle (QTL President), Fabian Gonell (QTL Division Counsel), and Marv Blecker (QTL Senior Vice President), Eric Reifschneider (QTL Senior Vice President and General Manager) included a spreadsheet with specific Sony modem chip shipments that Qualcomm could hold: "If I am reading this spreadsheet correctly, it looks like there are shipments scheduled to go out on 10/24 and 10/25, correct? . . . If so, and if they [103] still have not signed the license agreement, I think we need to seriously consider holding those shipments until they do." CX7961-001.

In an October 27, 2012 email, Eric Reifschneider told Jonathan Pearl (Sony General Counsel) that "I must report to QCT that SMC [Sony Mobile Corp.] appears unwilling to enter into a license agreement with Qualcomm," CX5185-005, to which Reifschneider referred at his deposition as "the next step in the escalation process." Reifschneider Depo. 207:6-16. Thus, as in February 2012, QTL again dictated whether QCT would stop Sony's modem chip supply shipments. Fabian Gonell (QTL Division Counsel) and Alex Rogers (current QTL President) each received the email chain including the threats to cut off Sony's chip supply. CX5185-003.

Two weeks after that threat, on November 12, 2012, Sony Mobile and Qualcomm entered into a Subscriber Unit Patent License Agreement, effective beginning October 1, 2012. ECF No. 1326 at 9; JX0072. Under that agreement, Sony paid Qualcomm a 5% royalty on CDMA handsets. JX0072-023.

On September 29, 2015, Qualcomm and Sony Corporation entered into a CDMA Complete Terminal Patent License Agreement, with an effective date of October 1, 2015. [104] ECF No. 1326 at 9; see JX0105. Under the 2015 patent license agreement, Sony pays Qualcomm a 3.5% running royalty on handset sales. JX0105-031. At trial, Fabian Gonell (QTL Legal Counsel and Senior Vice President, Licensing Strategy) testified that Qualcomm granted Sony "a discount from our standard royalty terms" because "Sony granted Qualcomm a very robust cross-license to what we considered a commercially valuable portfolio of patents." Tr. at 1407:12-17.

In sum, Qualcomm engaged in anticompetitive conduct toward Sony by repeatedly delaying and threatening Sony's chip supply.

3. Samsung

Qualcomm has engaged in anticompetitive conduct toward Samsung by threatening Samsung's chip supply, reducing the royalty rate if Samsung purchased at least 85% of its chipsets from Qualcomm, delaying the delivery of software, threatening to withhold technical support, offering Samsung chip incentive funds if Samsung purchased 100% of its premium chips from Qualcomm, and paying to extinguish Samsung's antitrust claims and to silence Samsung.

Moreover, when asked whether any other component supplier requires execution [*706] of a patent license agreement before selling components, Andrew Hong (Samsung Legal [105] Counsel) also testified that Qualcomm's practice of requiring Samsung to sign a patent license agreement before Samsung can purchase modem chips is unique in the industry:

> Q: In any of those negotiations, did Samsung's prospective supplier require that Samsung execute a patent license agreement prior to agreeing to sell their product to Samsung?
> A: No.

Hong Depo. 197:25-198:4. Injung Lee (Licensing Lead at Samsung Intellectual Property Center) agreed. Lee Depo. 132:23-133:12.

On September 3, 1993, Samsung and Qualcomm entered into an Infrastructure and Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement ("1993 CDMA SULA"). ECF No. 1326 at 8. Under the 1993 CDMA SULA, Samsung paid Qualcomm an $8.5 million upfront fee and a running royalty rate of 5.75% on handsets sold outside of Korea and 5.25% on handsets sold in Korea. JX0006-012. Later, Samsung and Qualcomm entered into an Amendment to Infrastructure and Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement, effective November 17, 1997. ECF No. 1326 at 8.

a. 2001 Chip Supply Threats

Qualcomm threatened Samsung's chip supply in 2001. At trial, Steve Altman (former Qualcomm President) agreed that in 2001, Samsung argued "that [106] its existing CDMA license agreement did not apply to its sales of 3G infrastructure and subscriber equipment." Tr. at 186:25-187:3. On August 24, 2001, Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder and CEO) wrote a letter to Ki Tae Lee (Samsung President) threatening to terminate Qualcomm's chip supply to Samsung:

> [I]f Samsung persists in taking the position that its license agreement does not cover 1X and does not pay QUALCOMM the 1X royalties due under the agreement, we will have no choice but to take all action necessary to enforce the terms of our license agreement, including possible termination. Under our agreements, we do not ship ASICs to non-licensees or to licensees who are not performing their obligations.

CX6729-002. A week later, Samsung caved to Qualcomm's royalty demands, as Ki Tae Lee responded to Irwin Jacobs: "I will remit the 1X royalty payment immediately upon completion of the necessary calculations." JX0014-001.

b. 2003 Chip Volume Commitments

In 2003, during patent license renegotiations with Samsung, Irwin Jacobs (Qualcomm Co-Founder and CEO) told Ki Tae Lee (Samsung President) that Qualcomm would only lower Samsung's royalty rate if Samsung committed to purchase 85% of its [107] chips from Qualcomm: "[I]f Samsung maintained our existing partnership agreement and did purchase at least 85% of its ASICs from QUALCOMM (as it is currently doing), then Samsung will receive the benefits of our proposed royalty reduction." CX6719-002. Irwin Jacobs also told Samsung that Qualcomm was offering similar provisions to other OEMs to suppress rivals' market share: "I am compelled to offer this proposal to others as it is important that we maintain good relationships with our other ASIC partners. We are also counting on them to take market share from manufacturers that do not use our ASICs." Id.

Shortly thereafter, Samsung and Qualcomm entered into an Amendment to Infrastructure and Subscriber Unit License and Technical Assistance Agreement, with an effective date of March 29, 2004. ECF No. [*707] 1326 at 8; see JX0024. Under the 2004 SULA amendment, Samsung paid a 5% running royalty rate on CDMA handsets containing Qualcomm chips, subject to a $20 royalty cap. JX0024-002 to -003. Given that Samsung's royalty rate was reduced as Irwin Jacobs had promised if Samsung bought at least 85% of its modem chips from Qualcomm, presumably Samsung agreed to Jacobs' offer.

c. 2008-2009 Chip Sample [108] Software Delay

In 2008, Samsung entered patent license renegotiations with Qualcomm. Injung Lee (Licensing Lead at Samsung Intellectual Property Center), who co-led Samsung's negotiating team, testified that Samsung wanted a lower royalty rate: "[W]e believed that the existing royalty rate was excessively high, which warranted a reduction in it, in our estimation." Lee Depo. 144:6-8. Injung Lee testified that Qualcomm's royalty rates were "rather high in comparison to other patentees," and that Samsung paid Ericsson a lump sum that equated to a [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]% effective royalty rate and paid Nokia a lump sum that equated to a [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]% effective royalty rate. Lee Depo. 145:8-17. According to Injung Lee, Samsung proposed a royalty rate under 1%, but Qualcomm refused. CX2568A-001.

Injung Lee testified that during negotiations, Samsung was concerned about any disruption in chip supply because Samsung depended entirely on Qualcomm CDMA modem chips:

> [G]iven the fact that we were being supplied with 100 percent of our chipsets from Qualcomm, were it such that we were not getting provided with those chipsets as per the normal manner and fashion, then Samsung [109] would not have been able to manufacture mobile phones nor sell the same. And as such, it would have had an untold impact on our business.

Lee Depo. 166:14-20. Although Samsung's March 2008 notes from negotiations with Qualcomm state that "Samsung demanded that Qualcomm's chipset supply and technical support should not be affected by this negotiation, and Qualcomm agreed to this," that only confirms that Samsung was concerned about Qualcomm cutting off chip supply and technical support. QX0551B-161.

Injung Lee (Licensing Lead at Samsung Intellectual Property Center) testified that in 2008, "when the negotiations got prolonged, I was told that at the end of the negotiation process to the effect that there would be some difficulties with the technical support being provided to Samsung." Lee Depo. 72:13-18. Specifically, Injung Lee testified that although Samsung "would receive chip samples and also software to drive the samples of the chipsets . . . I was told that the — receiving the software in that context was getting delayed from Qualcomm." Id. at 74:18-25.
