Date and Time: Monday, October 23, 2023 10:34:00 AM CST

Job Number: 208659556

Documents (100)

1. [Nat'l Black Expo v. Clear Channel Broad., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9783]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

2. [Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 476 F.3d 1337]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

3. [Silicon Servs. Consortium v. Applied Materials, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117588]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

4. [In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Dram Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107598]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

5. [Gaines v. Strayhorn, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11856]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

6. First Am. Title Co. v. Devaugh, 480 F.3d 438

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

7. Abbott Labs. v. Mylan Pharms., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12839

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

8. Wholesale Electricity Antitrust Cases I & II, 147 Cal. App. 4th 1293

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

9. Marin v. Evans, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13492

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

10. Smith Wholesale Co. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 477 F.3d 854

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

11. Gibson v. Office of the AG of Cal., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105204

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

12. In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100238

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

13. Flowers v. Exxonmobil Corp., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112966

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

14. Paul v. Intel Corp. (In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig.), 476 F. Supp. 2d 452

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

15. Amado v. Microsoft Corp., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96487

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

16. [In re Tableware Antitrust Litig., 484 F. Supp. 2d 1059]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

17. [Del Junco v. Hufnagel, 2007 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 2134]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

18. [Correa Miranda v. Caribbean Petro. Corp., 2007 TSPR 48]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

19. [Kinderstart.com, LLC v. Google, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22637]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

20. [Person v. Google, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22499]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

21. [Waters v. Sigmon, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105073]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

22. Wilson v. General Motors Corp., 190 N.J. 336

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

23. In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 241 F.R.D. 77

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

24. Lori Rubinstein Physical Therapy, Inc. v. PTPN, Inc., 148 Cal. App. 4th 1130

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

25. Washington v. Haupert, 481 F.3d 543

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

26. Vitacost.com, Inc. v. Gaia Herbs, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22266

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

27. United States v. SBC Communs., Inc., 489 F. Supp. 2d 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

28. Am. Steel Erectors, Inc. v. Local Union No. 7, Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental & Reinforcing Iron Workers, 480 F. Supp. 2d 471

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

29. Fox Hollow of Turlock Owners' Ass'n v. Sinclair, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27762

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

30. Jim Hood ex rel. Miss. v. Microsoft Corp., 2007 Miss. Trial Order LEXIS 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

31. Stolfa v. Arnold Sales Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114969

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

32. In re Bulk Extruded Graphite Prods. Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25070

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

33. Rhino Sports v. Sport Court, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25687

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

34. Bartholomew v. Bail Bonds Unlimited, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25506

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

35. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25633

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

36. Gibson v. Office of the AG of Cal., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105205

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by

Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

37. [Reilly v. Medianews Group, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29419]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

38. [Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26611]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

39. [FTC v. Foster, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34203]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

40. [Capital City Cab Serv. v. Susquehanna Area Reg'l Airport Auth., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28527]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

41. [In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97508]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

42. S&M Brands, Inc. v. Summers, 228 Fed. Appx. 560

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

43. Olde Monmouth Stock Transfer Co. v. Depository Trust & Clearing Corp., 485 F. Supp. 2d 387

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

44. Roberson v. Medtronic, Inc., 494 F. Supp. 2d 864

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

45. Southwire Co. v. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., 528 F. Supp. 2d 908

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

46. Freightliner of Knoxville, Inc. v. DaimlerChrysler Vans, LLC, 484 F.3d 865

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

47. Catch Curve, Inc. v. Venali, Inc., 519 F. Supp. 2d 1028

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

48. Midland Glass Co. v. Aluma Spec, Inc., 2007 Minn. App. Unpub. LEXIS 397

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

49. Flying J Inc. v. TA Operating Corp., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32518

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

50. Static Control Components, Inc. v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 487 F. Supp. 2d 861

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

51. Recetas Por Menos, Inc. v. Five Dev. Corp., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57974

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

52. Moore v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 520 F. Supp. 2d 815

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

53. Teague v. Bayer AG, 2007 NCBC 12

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

54. In re Rubber Chems. Antitrust Litig., 486 F. Supp. 2d 1078

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

55. Jones v. City of McMinnville, 244 Fed. Appx. 755

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

56. In re Ditropan XL Antitrust Litig., 529 F. Supp. 2d 1098

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

57. Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 513 F. Supp. 2d 322

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by

Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

58. Borough of Lansdale v. PP&L, Inc., 503 F. Supp. 2d 730

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

59. Silicon Image, Inc. v. Analogix Semiconductor, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39599

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

60. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

61. Merck & Co. v. Apotex, Inc., 488 F. Supp. 2d 418

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

62. One Indus. v. Jim O'Neal Distrib., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112738

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

63. [Dailyedeals.com, Inc. v. Ecoupons Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106872]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

64. [In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Antitrust Litig., 516 F. Supp. 2d 1072]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

65. [LiveUniverse, Inc. v. MySpace, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43739]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

66. [Cole v. Champion Enters., 496 F. Supp. 2d 613]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

67. [Kessel v. Monongalia County Gen. Hosp. Co., 220 W. Va. 602]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

68. [Belton v. Comcast Cable Holdings, LLC, 151 Cal. App. 4th 1224]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

69. The People ex rel. Edmund G. Brown v. Powerex Corp., 2007 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 4656

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

70. County of Milwaukee v. Williams, 2007 WI 69

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

71. Shane v. Humana, Inc., 228 Fed. Appx. 927

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

72. In re Netflix Antitrust Litig., 506 F. Supp. 2d 308

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

73. Credit Suisse Sec. (USA) LLC v. Billing, 551 U.S. 264

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

74. Craftsmen Limousine, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 491 F.3d 380

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

75. Republic of Colom. v. Diageo N. Am. Inc., 531 F. Supp. 2d 365

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

76. United States v. Stanko, 491 F.3d 408

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

77. In re Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, 491 F.3d 638

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

78. Southard v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 734 N.W.2d 192

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by

Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

79. Deich-Keibler v. Bank One, 243 Fed. Appx. 164

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

80. Lucas v. Citizens Communs. Co., 244 Fed. Appx. 774

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

81. Leegin Creative Leather Prods. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

82. Jabo's Pharm., Inc. v. Becton Dickinson & Co. (In re Hypodermic Prods. Antitrust Litig.), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47438

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

83. Medstar Health, Inc. v. Becton Dickinson & Co. (In re Hypodermic Prods. Antitrust Litig.), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47439

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by

Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

84. Nat'l Recycling v. Waste Mgmt. of Mass., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107664

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

85. Am. Needle, Inc. v. New Orleans La. Saints, 496 F. Supp. 2d 941

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

86. Paul v. Intel Corp. (In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig.), 496 F. Supp. 2d 404

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

87. Meyers v. Bayer AG, 2007 WI 99

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

88. Austrian v. United Health Grp., Inc., 2007 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1949

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

89. Invacare Corp. v. Respironics, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52321

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

90. In re Polyester Staple Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52525

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

91. Linzer Prods. Corp. v. Sekar, 499 F. Supp. 2d 540

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

92. Jennings v. Auto Meter Prods., 495 F.3d 466

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

93. Champagne Metals v. Ken-Mac Metals, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88773

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

94. P&G Co. v. Stone Container Corp. (In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig.), 497 F. Supp. 2d 666

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

95. Been v. O.K. Indus., 495 F.3d 1217

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

96. In re Endosurgical Prods. Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103725

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

97. Lorix v. Crompton Corp., 736 N.W.2d 619

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

98. U.S. Info. Sys. v. IBEW Local Union No. 3, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56229

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

99. Klickads, Inc. v. Real Estate Bd. of N.Y., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57305

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

100. Nilavar v. Mercy Health System-Western Ohio, 244 Fed. Appx. 690

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 26, 2004 to Dec 31, 2022

Nat'l Black Expo v. Clear Channel Broad., Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

February 8, 2007, Decided

No.03 C 2751

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9783 *; 2007 WL 495307

THE NATIONAL BLACK EXPO, Plaintiff, vs. CLEAR CHANNEL BROADCASTING, INC., et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

statute of limitations, expo, defendants', motion to dismiss, relevant market, allegations, fraudulent concealment, monopolize, plaintiff's claim, discovery rule, equitable tolling, market power, Sherman Act, anti-competitive, antitrust, concealed, violations, tolled, equitable estoppel, franchise tax, advertising, due diligence, radio station, Additionally, discovery, venture, attempt to monopolize, motion to strike, limitations, conspiracy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) states that on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, any matters outside the pleadings that are presented to and not excluded by the court require the court to convert the motion to one for summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, and the court must then allow both parties to present all relevant evidence in its support.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss, the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint must be accepted as true. The court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff. Dismissal is only proper when it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of plaintiff's claim that would entitle plaintiff to relief.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Finance > Franchise Tax > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Capacity of Parties > General Overview

HN3[] Corporate Finance, Franchise Tax

Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(b) provides that the capacity of a corporation to sue or be sued shall be determined by the law under which it was organized. Fed. R. Civ. P 17(b). Illinois law requires all domestic corporations to pay various taxes, including franchise taxes, for the privilege of operating in the state. 805 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/15.35 (2001). The relevant statute provides: No corporation required to pay a franchise tax, license fee or penalty under this Act shall maintain any civil action until all such franchise taxes, license fees, and penalties have been paid in full. 805 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/15.85 (2001). Illinois courts have held, however, § 15.85 does not require dismissal of a suit for failure of the corporation to pay taxes. Instead, if a corporation, which is delinquent in the payment of franchise taxes, has started a suit, it may, by subsequent compliance with the statute, continue prosecution of that suit.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

HN4[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

A complaint is not required to allege all or any of the facts entailed in the claim, nor is it required to anticipate or attempt to defuse potential defenses. However, a plaintiff may plead herself out of court by pleading facts which show that her claim is barred by the statute of limitations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Claims for violations of the Sherman Act and the Roberston-Patman Act must be brought within four years of the alleged antitrust injury. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b. Generally, the statute of limitations begins to run at the time the alleged injury occurs.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Equitable Estoppel

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN6[] Statute of Limitations, Equitable Estoppel

There are three ways that the statute of limitations can be tolled: the discovery rule, equitable tolling, and equitable estoppel.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Antitrust law provides that, in the case of a continuing violation, say a price fixing conspiracy that brings about a series of unlawfully high priced sales over a period of years, each overt act that is part of the violation and that injures the plaintiff, e.g., each sale to the plaintiff, starts the statutory period running again, regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN8[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Application of the discovery rule alters the moment that the claim actually accrues, thereby altering when the statute of limitations begins to run. The discovery rule is based on the general rule that accrual occurs when the plaintiff discovers that he has been injured and who caused the injury, and it is at that point that the statute of limitations begins to run.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN9[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Equitable tolling allows the plaintiff to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations if despite all due diligence she is unable to obtain vital information bearing on the existence of her claim. This differs from the discovery rule in that the plaintiff is assumed to know that she has been injured, but she cannot obtain information necessary to decide whether the injury is due to wrongdoing and caused by or due to the defendant. This determination is made on an objective basis using a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position exercising due diligence. Furthermore, the plaintiff can only suspend the statute of limitations under this doctrine for such time as is reasonably necessary to conduct the necessary inquiry into a possible (but not certain) claim. The notion of possibility is key because a need for certainty would require the statute of limitations to be tolled infinitely.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Equitable Estoppel

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN10[] Statute of Limitations, Equitable Estoppel

Equitable estoppel, also called fraudulent concealment, presupposes that the plaintiff has discovered or, as required by the discovery rule should have discovered, that the defendant injured her. Fraudulent concealment denotes efforts by the defendant, above and beyond the wrongdoing upon which the plaintiff's claim is founded, to prevent, by fraud or deception, the plaintiff from suing in time. Any deliberate or otherwise blameworthy conduct by the defendant which causes the plaintiff to miss the statutory deadline to file her claim may be the basis for asserting the equitable estoppel defense. However, just as with equitable tolling, here plaintiff must show that he neither knew nor, in the exercise of due diligence, could reasonably have known of the offense.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN11[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Under the discovery rule, the statute of limitations begins when the plaintiff knows that it was injured and who injured it.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN12[] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

To qualify for equitable tolling, a plaintiff must demonstrate that it exercised due diligence in discovering the necessary information to file a claim, and in promptly filing the claim thereafter.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN13[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A federal complaint does not fail to state a claim simply because it omits facts that would defeat a statute of limitations defense.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN14[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Unlike the other doctrines, fraudulent concealment must be pled with particularity in compliance with Fed. R. Civ. P. R. 9(b). A complaint should distinctly state what the discovered fraud actually was and when the plaintiff discovered it, so that the court may evaluate whether he could have discovered it through the exercise of due diligence.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN15[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

The Illinois Supreme Court has held that the discovery rule postpones the commencement of the relevant statute of limitations until the injured plaintiff knows or reasonably should know that he has been injured and that his injury was wrongfully caused. This differs from the federal discovery rule in that in the Illinois rule the injury does not accrue until the plaintiff knows that the injury was wrongly caused, not just that she was injured and who injured her. However, the term "wrongfully caused" does not denote knowledge of negligent conduct or knowledge of the existence of a cause of action. A plaintiff is deemed to know that his injury is wrongfully caused when she possesses sufficient information concerning the injury and its cause to put a reasonable person on inquiry to determine whether actionable conduct is involved. Thus, this standard appears very similar to the federal standard for equitable tolling.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Equitable Estoppel

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN16[] Statute of Limitations, Equitable Estoppel

Equitable tolling in Illinois is more akin to equitable estoppel and has been defined as a rule that, like equitable estoppel, works to suspend the limitations period when the defendant has actively misled the plaintiff, or if the plaintiff has been prevented from asserting his or her rights in some extraordinary way. Similarly, equitable estoppel tolls the statute of limitations during any period in which the defendant took certain active steps to prevent the plaintiff from suing. Examples of this include where the defendant has "lulled" the plaintiff into delaying suit, either by promising not to plead a limitations defense or by concealing evidence that the plaintiff needed to determine the existence of her claim. Plaintiff must both plead and prove affirmative acts by the defendant designed to prevent discovery of the action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN17[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Illinois has codified fraudulent concealment under 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/13-215. The statute states that if a person liable to an action fraudulently conceals the cause of such action from the knowledge of the person entitled thereto, the action may be commenced at any time within five years after the person entitled to bring the same discovers that he or she has such cause of action, and not afterwards. To plead fraudulent concealment, a party must allege (1) there was concealment of a material fact; (2) the concealment was intended to induce a false belief, under circumstances creating a duty to speak; (3) the innocent party could not have discovered the truth through a reasonable inquiry or inspection and relied upon the silence as a representation that the fact did not exist; (4) the concealed information was such that the injured party would have acted differently had she been aware of it; and (5) reliance by the person from whom the defendant concealed the fact led to her injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN18[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In the context of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, while a plaintiff need not plead facts or legal theories, and specifying an incorrect theory is not fatal, the court need not strain to find inferences favorable to the plaintiff which are not apparent on the face of the complaint, nor need the court accept plaintiff's legal conclusions as true. If the facts do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN20[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To allege an attempt to monopolize, plaintiff must show (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anti-competitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power. The elements for conspiracy to monopolize are similar: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, (3) an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce, and (4) the existence of specific intent to monopolize. Both claims require plaintiff to define the relevant market that defendant is attempting, or conspiring, to monopolize. The relevant market is defined as the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchasers can practicably turn for supplies. Then the complaint must allege facts sufficient to create an inference that the defendant has the market power to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN21[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

The relevant market contains both product and geographical components.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN22[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Whether the market described is the relevant one or not is a determination of fact not proper for disposal on a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN23[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory conduct may be broadly defined as conduct that is in itself an independent violation of the antitrust laws or that has no legitimate business justification other than to destroy or damage competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN24[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The rule-of-reason standard contains a threshold requirement where plaintiff must first show defendants' market power. If plaintiff fails to do so, then the inquiry is ended.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN25[] Sherman Act, Scope

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN26[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to state a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must first show that defendants had market power. There are some § 1 violations that do not require a showing of market power, such as horizontal price-fixing between actors in the same market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN27[] Sherman Act, Claims

One fundamental requirement for showing a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation is a sufficient allegation of anti-competitive effects that would result or have resulted from the defendants' actions; the absence of such allegations is ordinarily fatal to the existence of a cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN28[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The purpose of the Sherman Act is to rectify injuries to consumers caused by diminished competition. Therefore, it follows that plaintiff must allege an injury, not only to itself, but to the market as well.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

HN29[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

The Robinson-Patman Act's prohibition on price discrimination extends only to transactions involving commodities. Courts have strictly construed this term, holding that it denotes only "tangible products of trade," and advertising has been explicitly excluded from this definition.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

HN30[] Preliminary Considerations, Removal

28 U.S.C.S. § 1367 grants a court jurisdiction to hear pendent state claims. A court may decline to exercise this jurisdiction for several reasons, including instances such as this, where the court has dismissed all claims over which it exercises original jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1367(c)(4). When the district court dismisses all federal claims before trial, the usual and preferred course is to remand the state claims to the state court unless there are countervailing considerations. These exceptions include the running of the state law cause of action's statute of limitations, and instances where sending the case to another court will cause a substantial duplication of effort.

Counsel: [*1] For National Alliance of Black Expo, Plaintiff: Beauregard Maximally Harvey, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Harvey Law Group, Toledo, OH.

For National Black Expo, Inc., Plaintiff: Beauregard Maximally Harvey, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Harvey Law Group, Toledo, OH; Arlene Yvette Coleman, Arlene Y. Coleman & Associates, Chicago, IL; Sabrina R Wilkins-Brown, Law Office of Sabrina R. Wilkins-Brown, Chicago, IL.

For Clear Channel Communications, Inc., WVAZ, AM/FM, Marv Dyson, individually, Clear Channel Broadcasting, Inc., Clear Channel Radio, Inc., Merry Green Promotions Group, Inc., Merry Green, individually, Defendants: Beverly Cassandra Bryant, LEAD ATTORNEY, Peters, Brown & Bonner LLC, Chicago, IL; Jessica Tovrov, R. Delacy Peters, Jr., Shekar Adiga, Arnstein & Lehr, Chicago, IL.

For WGCI, Defendant: Beverly Cassandra Bryant, LEAD ATTORNEY, Peters, Brown & Bonner LLC, Chicago, IL; R. Delacy Peters, Jr., Shekar Adiga, Arnstein & Lehr, Chicago, IL.

For Chris Augmon, individually, Defendant: Jessica Tovrov, Shekar Adiga, Arnstein & Lehr, Chicago, IL.

Judges: JAMES B. MORAN, Senior Judge.

Opinion by: JAMES B. MORAN

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff National Alliance of Black Expos, [*2] Inc. ("NBE"), instituted the present action in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois, on April 3, 2003 (03 L 4044), and defendant Clear Channel Communications subsequently removed it to this court invoking diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Plaintiff then added other defendants: non-diverse parties. Plaintiff having alleged violations of federal law, we retain jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. It filed its first amended complaint on May 28, 2003; its second amended complaint on October 1, 2003; and its third amended complaint on March 27, 2006. Defendants thereafter filed a motion to dismiss the third amended complaint, and, additionally, filed a motion to strike an exhibit attached to plaintiff's response to defendants' motion to dismiss. For the reasons set forth below, we grant defendants' motion to strike and their motion to dismiss.

BACKGROUND

Since its removal, this case has developed a long and complicated history, much of which is not relevant to this motion. For our present purposes, we will discuss the background only to the extent that it relates to plaintiff's third amended complaint. The following [*3] facts are taken from that complaint and are considered true for the purposes of this motion. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984).

In 1990, plaintiff NBE organized and debuted a large African American-centered trade exposition, the Chicago "Black Expo" ("BE"), which was modeled after an earlier exposition created by Rev. Jesse Jackson and Operation PUSH in the 1970s. The plaintiff worked with numerous vendors and sponsors, including a number of radio stations with heavy African-American listenership in Chicago. One of those radio stations was defendant WVAZ, owned by defendant Clear Channel Communications. At this time, defendant Merry Green was a consultant to the then president and CEO of NBE, Suzanne Stantly.

Following the success of BE, plaintiff and WVAZ entered into discussions as to how to increase WVAZ's role in BE. Eventually, WVAZ became a full partner and joint venturer in BE. WVAZ was responsible for numerous facets of BE, including making sales calls, contacting previously contracted vendors, providing client development assistance and providing radio air time for advertising BE locally and nationally. Plaintiff provided defendant WVAZ [*4] with contact information for numerous clients who had previously worked with NBE, and held meetings with WVAZ to discuss plaintiff's vision for the future of BE.

The 1991 BE was very successful, and generated over $ 700,000 in gross revenue. WVAZ was given a prominent place at BE -- its logo was placed on the entryway to the exhibit, and it was given as much floor space as it desired to gain visibility in the hall.

At the same time, without plaintiff's knowledge, defendant WVAZ was working to create a competing African-American-targeted consumer trade expo. During the continued partnership with plaintiff, defendants WVAZ and Clear Channel created "An Expo for Today's Black Woman" ("ETBW"). WVAZ worked with defendants Merry Green and her promotion company, Merry Green Promotions Group, Inc. ("MGPG"), to place an African-American face on the expo. This expo debuted in 1992 and contained the same elements as BE. Additionally, WVAZ used the confidential information and contacts gained from its partnership with plaintiff to secure sponsors and vendors for ETBW. Using its partnership with plaintiff, WVAZ claimed that ETBW was a spin-off from BE, when in fact it was in competition with [*5] BE.

WVAZ, backed by Clear Channel, used its influence in the media to entice plaintiff's sponsors and vendors to sever tics with plaintiff and begin supporting ETBW. As a result, numerous sponsors and vendors declined to renew their relationship with BE and began working with ETBW.

WVAZ began providing air time at discounted rates to ETBW - rates that were lower than the rates they were charging BE. Additionally, it only provided plaintiff air time at periods of low listenership, and air time for ETBW at times of high listenership.

In its third amended complaint, plaintiff claims defendants' actions constitute illegal restraint of trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, and conspiracy and attempt to monopolize, in violation of section 2 the Act. Plaintiff also alleges illegal price discrimination and discrimination of discounts, rebates, or advertising service charges in violation of the Robinson-Patman Antidiscrimination Act, as well as interference with prospective business advantage, intentional interference with contractual relations, breaches of contract and fiduciary duty, unjust enrichment and fraudulent concealment.

Plaintiff claims that defendants committed [*6] these violations when they acquired the confidential information while present at meetings with plaintiff, and then exploited that information to create and sustain ETBW. Plaintiff further alleges that defendants, with the specific intent of monopolizing the expo market, illegally discriminated against plaintiff in the sale of air time on WVAZ. Additionally, plaintiff claims that while these actions occurred in 1992, defendants continue to conspire to monopolize the expo market. Finally, plaintiff alleges it did not discover the violations until a later date -- a date that is not specifically alleged in the complaint -- and that as a result of defendants' fraudulent concealment its claims are not barred by the statute of limitations.

Defendants subsequently filed a motion to dismiss the third amended complaint. Defendants put forth four arguments: (1) plaintiff does not have the capacity to maintain this suit because it has been involuntarily dissolved by the State of Illinois for failure to pay its franchise taxes; (2) all of plaintiff's claims are time-barred by the relevant statutes of limitations and plaintiff has not sufficiently plead fraudulent concealment in order to toll [*7] the limitation periods; (3) plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged an antitrust injury, relevant market, or made a sufficient showing of monopolization; and (4) the Robertson-Patman Act does not apply to the sale of radio advertising time.

Plaintiff's response to defendants' motion contained an exhibit not originally a part of the pleadings, and which defendants move to strike.

ANALYSIS

Motion to Strike

Defendants attached an exhibit to their motion to dismiss referring to plaintiff's dissolved corporate status. This exhibit was in support of defendants' contention that plaintiff could not maintain a suit because it was not current on its franchise taxes. Plaintiff's response to defendants' motion to dismiss contains an exhibit as well, which plaintiff claims is evidence of defendants' specific intent to monopolize, in violation of the Sherman Act. Defendants then filed a motion to strike plaintiff's exhibit.

HN1[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b) states that on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, any matters outside the pleadings that are presented to and not excluded by the court [*8] require the court to convert the motion to one for summary judgment under Rule 56, and the court must then allow both parties to present all relevant evidence in its support.

Here, both parties' briefs contain exhibits which are neither part of plaintiff's complaint nor referred to within it. The defendants, but not the plaintiff, have filed a motion to strike the exhibit. Regardless, we deem both exhibits as outside the pleadings and decline to consider either of them as part of the motion to dismiss. Berthold Types Ltd. v. Adobe Sys. Inc., 242 F.3d 772, 775 (7th Cir. 2001).

Motion to Dismiss

HN2[] On a motion to dismiss, the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint must be accepted as true. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984); McMillan v. Collection Prof'ls, Inc., 455 F.3d 754, 758 (7th Cir. 2006). We must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff. McMillan, 455 F.3d at 758. Dismissal is only proper when it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of plaintiff's claim that would entitle plaintiff to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); [*9] McCready v. eBay, Inc., 453 F.3d 882, 888 (7th Cir. 2006).

Plaintiff's Capacity to Sue

Defendants first claim that plaintiff does not have the capacity to maintain this suit against defendants because NBE has been involuntarily dissolved by the State of Illinois for failure to pay its franchise taxes. In support of this allegation, defendants attach an exhibit to their motion to dismiss, which is a matter outside the pleadings, and which, if we were to consider it, would convert this motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment. We need not consider this exhibit, however, because plaintiff has conceded the fact of its involuntary dissolution in its response to the motion to dismiss. Plaintiff contends, however, that the proper action in this instance under Illinois law is not to dismiss the complaint, but merely to stay the proceedings until plaintiff pays its taxes.

HN3[] Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 17(b) provides that "[t]he capacity of a corporation to sue or be sued shall be determined by the law under which it was organized." Fed. R. Civ. P 17(b). Illinois law requires [*10] all domestic corporations to pay various taxes, including franchise taxes, for the privilege of operating in the state. 805 ILCS 5/15.35 (2001). The relevant statute provides: "No corporation required to pay a franchise tax, license fee or penalty under this Act shall maintain any civil action until all such franchise taxes, license fees, and penalties have been paid in full." 805 ILCS 5/15.85 (2001). Illinois courts have held, however, § 15.85 does not require dismissal of a suit for failure of the corporation to pay taxes. Lease Ptnrs. Corp. v. R & J Pharms., Inc., 329 Ill. App. 3d 69, 73, 768 N.E.2d 54, 56, 263 Ill. Dec. 294 (Ill. App. Ct. 2002). Instead, "if a corporation, which is delinquent in the payment of franchise taxes, has started a suit, it may, by subsequent compliance with the statute, continue prosecution of that suit." Merchants Environmental Industries, Inc. v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 252 Ill. App. 3d 906, 911, 625 N.E.2d 689, 692, 192 Ill. Dec. 534 (Ill. App. Ct. 1993)(quoting Jorgensen v. Baker, 21 Ill. App. 2d 196, 203, 157 N.E. 2d 773, 777 (Ill. App. Ct. 1959).

On the facts before [*11] us, then, it would seem that we should stay these proceedings. However, upon this court's investigation, we found that plaintiff had been reinstated as a corporation in good standing by the State of Illinois on September 29, 2006, which must mean that it brought its franchise taxes up to date. Therefore, we find that plaintiff has the capacity to maintain this suit.

Statutes of Limitations

Defendants assert that all of plaintiff's claims are time-barred. Plaintiff counters that the various statutes of limitations have been tolled by plaintiff's failure to discover the injury during the relevant time frame, and/or by defendants' alleged fraudulent concealment. We first deal with the federal antitrust claims, followed by the state claims.

Federal Law Claims

HN4[] A complaint is not required to allege all or any of the facts entailed in the claim, nor is it required to anticipate or attempt to defuse potential defenses. Kolupa v. Roselle Park Dist., 438 F.3d 713, 714 (7th Cir. 2006); Doe v. Smith, 429 F.3d 706, 709 (7th Cir. 2005). However, a plaintiff may plead herself out of court by pleading facts which show that her claim is barred by [*12] the statute of limitations. United States v. Lewis, 411 F.3d 838, 842 (7th Cir. 2005).

HN5[] Claims for violations of the Sherman Act and the Roberston-Patman Act must be brought within four years of the alleged antitrust injury. 15 U.S.C. § 15b. Generally, the statute of limitations begins to run at the time the alleged injury occurs. In re Copper Antitrust Litigation, 436 F.3d 782, 789 (7th Cir. 2006). In the instant case, this would be sometime in 1992, and therefore the statute of limitations would have run in 1996, seven years prior to the commencement of this litigation.

However, HN6[] there are three ways that the statute of limitations can be tolled: the discovery rule, equitable tolling, and equitable estoppel. [1] These three common law doctrines are read into every federal statute of limitations

---

[1] Plaintiff also argues that its claims are not barred by the statute of limitations because of the continuing violation doctrine.HN7[] "Antitrust law provides that, in the case of a continuing violation, say a price fixing conspiracy that brings about a series of unlawfully high priced sales over a period of years, each overt act that is part of the violation and that injures the plaintiff, e.g., each sale to the plaintiff, starts the statutory period running again, regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times." Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (U.S. 1997). Plaintiff claims that it is suffering a continuing violation because defendants "continue to conspire" and continue "to claim ownership" of ETBW, and that the defendants "continue to profit" from ETBW. (plf. response to def. motion at 6). However, because we find, as discussed below, that none of these alleged actions constitutes an antitrust violation, we find that the continuing violation doctrine does not apply to these facts.

in the absence of a contrary directive from Congress. Cada v. Baxter Healthcare Corp., 920 F.2d 446, 450-51 (7th Cir. 1991).

[*13] HN8[] Application of the discovery rule alters the moment that the claim actually accrues, thereby altering when the statute of limitations begins to run. In re Copper Antitrust Litig., 436 F.3d at 789. The discovery rule is "based on the general rule that accrual occurs when the plaintiff discovers that he has been injured and who caused the injury," and it is at that point that the statute of limitations begins to run. Id.

The second doctrine, equitable tolling, is slightly different. HN9[] It allows the plaintiff to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations if despite all due diligence she is unable to obtain vital information bearing on the existence of her claim. Cada, 920 F.2d at 451. This differs from the discovery rule in that the plaintiff is assumed to know that she has been injured, but she cannot obtain information necessary to decide whether the injury is due to wrongdoing and caused by or due to the defendant. Id. This determination is made on an objective basis using a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position exercising due diligence. Id.; Shropshear v. Corp. Counsel of the City of Chicago, 275 F.3d 593, 595 (7th Cir. 2001). [*14] Furthermore, the plaintiff can only suspend the statute of limitations under this doctrine for such time as is reasonably necessary to conduct the necessary inquiry into a possible (but not certain) claim. Cada, 920 F.2d at 451. The notion of possibility is key because a need for certainty would require the statute of limitations to be tolled infinitely. Id.

The third doctrine, HN10[] equitable estoppel, also called fraudulent concealment, "presupposes that the plaintiff has discovered or, as required by the discovery rule should have discovered," that the defendant injured her. Shropshear, 275 F.3d at 595. Fraudulent concealment "denotes efforts by the defendant, above and beyond the wrongdoing upon which the plaintiff's claim is founded, to prevent, by fraud or deception, the plaintiff from suing in time." Id. Any deliberate or otherwise blameworthy conduct by the defendant which causes the plaintiff to miss the statutory deadline to file her claim may be the basis for asserting the equitable estoppel defense. Id. at 597. However, just as with equitable tolling, here plaintiff must show "that he neither knew nor, in the exercise [*15] of due diligence, could reasonably have known of the offense." In re Copper Antitrust Litig., 436 F.3d at 791.

Although not in so many words, plaintiff argues that its claims should survive the statute of limitations under either the discovery rule or equitable tolling because plaintiff has not alleged a date when the injury was discovered. Defendants argue that by not pleading a date of discovery, plaintiff has artfully plead its complaint to avoid the statute of limitations, and while it need not anticipate affirmative defenses, it must sufficiently plead averments of time and place, which it has not done. Defendants further argue that, even drawing all inferences in favor of plaintiff, it is impossible to conclude that plaintiff discovered the alleged wrongdoing as late as 1999, allowing plaintiff to file its complaint in 2003.

We believe that plaintiff cannot utilize the discovery rule to alter the date its injury accrued. HN11[] Under the discovery rule, the statute of limitations begins when the plaintiff knows that it was injured and who injured it. In re Copper Antitrust Litig., 436 F.3d at 789. By plaintiff's own complaint, it knew that it was [*16] injured in 1992, when ETBW debuted, marketing itself in exactly the same way as BE. Further, by its complaint, plaintiff knew who injured it at that very same time, because that is when WVAZ cancelled its relationship with plaintiff and Merry Green moved from being the assistant to the director of NBE to being the face of ETBW. Therefore, at the latest, plaintiffs injury accrued in 1992, which started the running of the statute of limitations.

Plaintiff does, however, find relief in the equitable tolling doctrine. HN12[] To qualify for equitable tolling, plaintiff must demonstrate that it exercised due diligence in discovering the necessary information to file a claim, and in promptly filing the claim thereafter. Ashafa v. City of Chicago, 146 F.3d 459, 464 (7th Cir. 1998). We take as true, as we must in a motion to dismiss, plaintiff's allegation in its complaint that it exercised due diligence in all aspects of its dealings with the defendants, including the discovery of the operative facts which led to the filing of the complaint. Furthermore, plaintiff has not alleged when it discovered the injury, nor need it have.HN13[] "[A] federal complaint does not fail to state a claim [*17] simply because it omits facts that would defeat a statute of limitations defense." Hollander v. Brown, 457 F.3d 688, 692 n.1 (7th Cir. 2006). Through this accident of pleading, we therefore cannot infer from this omission a lack of due diligence on the part of plaintiff to bring this claim within a reasonable time. See Clark v. City of Braidwood, 318 F.3d 764 (7th Cir. 2003) (plaintiff's failure to plead date of discovery of injury not fatal to complaint because the possibility existed that a potential set of facts, if proven, would establish defense to the statute of limitations). Therefore, at this time plaintiff has sufficiently plead an equitable tolling defense to the federal antitrust statute of limitations. [2]

The reasons that allow plaintiff to survive the statute of limitations by way of equitable tolling, by contrast, [*18] force plaintiff's claim of fraudulent concealment (equitable estoppel) to fail. HN14[] Unlike the other doctrines, fraudulent concealment must be pled with particularity in compliance with Fed. R. Civ. P. R. 9(b). *Spann v. Cmty. Bank of N. Va., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5148, 2004 WL 691785, 8 (N.D. Ill. 2004); *Triple Canopy, Inc. v. Moore, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14219, 2005 WL 1629768, 12 (N.D. Ill. 2005). "A complaint should distinctly state what the discovered fraud actually was and when the plaintiff discovered it, so that the Court may evaluate whether he could have discovered it through the exercise of due diligence." *Greer v. Bank One, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13715, 2002 WL 1732366, 3 (N.D. Ill. 2002). Plaintiff here has merely alleged the bare conclusion that "defendants wrongfully concealed their actions against the Plaintiff." Plaintiff has not alleged any detail regarding the alleged fraudulent concealment, such as which defendants took part in the concealing, how they concealed their actions, when the concealing took place, or when plaintiff discovered defendants' alleged fraud. Because plaintiff fails to allege fraudulent concealment with the required particularity, the statutes [*19] of limitations cannot be tolled on that basis. [3]

[*20] State Law Claims

Plaintiff's other claims arise out of contract and tort and are thereby governed by Illinois statutes of limitations and Illinois tolling provisions. Reed v. Mokena Sch. Dist. No. 159, 41 F.3d 1153, 1155 (7th Cir. 1994). Illinois courts acknowledge the existence of the tolling doctrines discussed above, but define them in a slightly different manner, and thus those provisions apply differently to the case before us.

HN15[] The Illinois Supreme Court has held that the discovery rule "postpone[s] the commencement of the relevant statute of limitations until the injured plaintiff knows or reasonably should know that he has been injured and that his injury was wrongfully caused." Hollander, 457 F.3d at 692 (citing Golla v. Gen. Motors Corp., 167 Ill.2d 353, 657 N.E.2d 894, 898, 212 Ill. Dec. 549 (Ill. 1995)). This differs from the federal discovery rule in that in the Illinois rule the injury does not accrue until the plaintiff knows that the injury was wrongly caused, not just that she was injured and who injured her. However, the term "wrongfully caused" does not denote knowledge of negligent conduct or knowledge of the existence [*21] of a cause of action. Knox College v. Celotex Corp., 88 Ill. 2d 407, 430 N.E.2d 976, 980-81, 58 Ill. Dec. 725 (Ill. 1981). A plaintiff is deemed to know that his injury is wrongfully caused when she possesses "sufficient information concerning [the] injury and its cause to put a reasonable person on inquiry to determine whether actionable conduct is involved." Id. Thus, this standard appears very similar to the federal standard for equitable tolling.

HN16[] Equitable tolling in Illinois, however, is more akin to equitable estoppel and has been defined as "a rule that, like equitable estoppel, works to suspend the limitations period when 'the defendant has actively misled the

---

[2] We note that though plaintiff has survived the statute of limitations at the pleading stage, its likelihood of survival past this point is remote.

[3] Plaintiff claims that its failure to plead fraudulent concealment with particularity should not prove fatal to its claim. Plaintiff relies on Fine v. Jansen, 1986 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21991, 1986 WL 8731 (N.D. Ill. 1986), for this proposition. In Fine, the court held that a plaintiff alleging corporate fraud could survive a motion to dismiss, where the plaintiff made a number of the fraud allegations upon information and belief. The court reasoned that in situations such as this, where most of the information necessary will be in the hands of the defendants, the plaintiff cannot be required to know all the details of the alleged fraudulent scheme. The court found that the plaintiff had alleged sufficient facts within its knowledge to support the fraud claim, and therefore, the pleading of the specifics of the scheme upon information and belief was sufficient to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. That case is inapposite here. Plaintiff here has not alleged any of the facts deemed to be within its knowledge, nor has it alleged any of the specifics of the fraudulent concealment scheme, upon information or belief, or otherwise. Therefore, plaintiff's claim must fail.

plaintiff, or if the plaintiff has been prevented from asserting his or her rights in some extraordinary way.'" Hollander, 457 F.3d at 694 n.3 (citing Clay v. Kuhl, 189 Ill. 2d 603, 727 N.E.2d 217, 244 Ill. Dec. 918 (Ill. 2000)). Similarly, equitable estoppel tolls the statute of limitations "during any period in which the defendant took certain active steps to prevent the plaintiff from suing." Examples of this include "where the defendant has 'lulled' the plaintiff into delaying suit, either by [*22] promising not to plead a limitations defense or by concealing evidence that the plaintiff needed to determine the existence of her claim." Id. Plaintiff must both plead and prove affirmative acts by the defendant designed to prevent discovery of the action. Clay, 727 NE 2d at 223.

Additionally, HN17[] Illinois has codified fraudulent concealment under 735 5/13-215. The statute states that "[i]f a person liable to an action fraudulently conceals the cause of such action from the knowledge of the person entitled thereto, the action may be commenced at any time within five years after the person entitled to bring the same discovers that he or she has such cause of action, and not afterwards." To plead fraudulent concealment, a party must allege "(1) there was concealment of a material fact; (2) the concealment was intended to induce a false belief, under circumstances creating a duty to speak; (3) the innocent party could not have discovered the truth through a reasonable inquiry or inspection and relied upon the silence as a representation that the fact did not exist; (4) the concealed information was such that the injured party would have acted differently had she been [*23] aware of it; and (5) reliance by the person from whom the defendant concealed the fact led to her injury." Jones v. Hoosman, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31807, 2006 WL 1302524 (N.D. Ill. 2006).

Under Illinois law, then, it appears that the discovery rule, rather than equitable tolling, allows the plaintiff here to avoid the statutes of limitations for the various tort and contract claims alleged. Because plaintiff has not alleged the date when it discovered the injury, we cannot infer that plaintiff reasonably should have known of it earlier, and therefore, at this stage, the discovery rule applies, which defers the date of accrual to the point of discovery. Equitable tolling, equitable estoppel and the fraudulent concealment statute would not apply because plaintiff has not alleged sufficient facts, nor plead those theories with the required specificity. *Schacht v. Baccala & Shoop Ins. Services, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16093, 1993 WL 469909, 7 (N.D. Ill. 1993); Feng v. Sandrik, 636 F.Supp. 77, 84 n.8 (N.D. Ill.1986); Curry v. A.H. Robins Co., 775 F.2d 212, 218 (7th Cir. 1985); Bush v. Continental Casualty Co., 116 Ill. App. 2d 94, 253 N.E.2d 619, 622 (Ill. App. Ct. 1969). [*24] Therefore, plaintiff's claims survive the defense of the statute of limitations, but plaintiff's fraudulent concealment claim (count XI) is dismissed. [4]

Sufficiency of Antitrust Claims

Finding that at this stage plaintiff's claims are not barred by the statute of limitations, we turn to whether plaintiff has sufficiently plead a claim for violations of the Sherman Act and the Robertson-Patman Act. We remain mindful that HN18[] while a plaintiff need not plead facts or legal theories, (Nance v. Vieregge, 147 F.3d 589, 590 (7th Cir. 1998)), and specifying an incorrect theory is not fatal, (Bartholet v. Reishauer A.G., 953 F.2d 1073, 1078 (7th Cir. 1992)), we need not strain to find inferences favorable to the plaintiff which are not apparent on the face of the complaint, (Coates v. Illinois State Bd. of Ed., 559 F.2d 445, 447 (7th Cir. 1977)), [*25] nor need we accept plaintiff's legal conclusions as true. R.J.R. Services, Inc. v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 895 F.2d 279, 281 (7th Cir. 1989). If the facts "do not at least outline or adumbrate" a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff "will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Cos., 727 F.2d 648, 654 (7th Cir. 1984).

Sherman Act Violations

Defendants take issue with plaintiff's allegations and argue that plaintiff has not adequately plead a claim under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. We discuss each of these sections in turn.

---

[4] Again we note, as above, that plaintiff's chances of survival beyond the pleading stage are remote, based on these allegations.

We begin with section 2. It states that HN19[] "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony…," 15 U.S.C. § 2. Plaintiff here has alleged defendants conspired and attempted to monopolize the African-American trade and consumer expo market. HN20[] To allege an attempt to monopolize, plaintiff must show (1) that the defendant has engaged [*26] in predatory or anti-competitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, Inc. V. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). The elements for conspiracy to monopolize are similar: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, (3) an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce, and (4) the existence of specific intent to monopolize. *Goodloe v. Nat. Wholesale Co., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13630, 2004 WL 1631728, 6 (N.D. Ill. 2004). Both claims require plaintiff to define the relevant market that defendant is attempting, or conspiring, to monopolize. *Goodloe, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13630 2004 WL 1631728 at 6. The relevant market is defined as "the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchasers can practicably turn for supplies." Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). Then the "complaint must allege facts sufficient to create an inference that the defendant has the market power to create a monopoly." *Goodloe, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13630, 2004 WL 1631728, at 5.

Defendants argue that plaintiff's delineation [*27] of the relevant market to this action is not sufficiently plead. HN21[] The relevant market contains both product and geographical components. Nobody in Particular Presents, Inc. v. Clear Channel Communications, 311 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1075 (D.Co. 2004). Plaintiff's complaint alleges that the relevant product market is "those consumer trade shows and exhibitions that target 'urban' African-American audiences, communities or businesses." This is a sufficient allegation of a relevant product market. See Seabury Management v. Professional Golfers' Ass'n of Am, 878 F. Supp. 771, 779-80 (D. Md. 1994) (golf trade shows constituted a relevant market - their appeal to buyers and the products and services offered differ from those of other marketing and distribution methods) aff'd in part, rev'd & remanded in part on other grounds 52 F.3d 322 (4th Cir.)).

Plaintiff has also sufficiently alleged a relevant geographical market "in several states and metropolitan areas that boast high or significant concentrations of 'urban' or African-American listeners, including but not limited to Chicago, Illinois and portions of Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Houston, Texas; Norfolk, Virginia; [*28] Memphis, Tennessee; and Raleigh, North Carolina, St. Louis and Pittsburgh." While this description is broad as compared with plaintiff's factual allegations in the complaint, HN22[] whether the market described is the relevant one or not is a determination of fact not proper for disposal on a motion to dismiss. AG Fur Industrielle Elektronik Agie v. Sodick Company Ltd., 748 F. Supp. 1305, 1316 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (conclusory allegations of relevant market are sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss). Therefore, we find plaintiff has sufficiently plead the relevant market.

Both allegations also require a specific intent to monopolize. The Great Escape. Inc. v. Union City Body Co., Inc., 791 F.2d 532, 541 (7th Cir. 1986). We take as true plaintiff's allegation that defendants' conduct was specifically intended to monopolize.

Additionally, both claims require a showing that "the alleged monopolist possess[es] enough power or potential power in this relevant market in order to harm competition." Spanish Broadcasting System of Florida, Inc. v. Cleark Channel Communications, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065 (11th Cir. 2004). Plaintiff must show both defendants' [*29] market power, and that there is a dangerous probability of monopolization of the relevant market. *Goodloe, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13630, 2004 WL 1631728, at 6. Plaintiff has failed to allege that defendants possess market power in the relevant market, or that there is a dangerous probability of defendants acquiring monopoly power. Plaintiff has made no allegation in its complaint regarding these elements. It claims, in its response to defendant's motion to dismiss, that it sufficiently alleged these elements when it pointed out that Clear Channel owned 1200 radio stations in 300 markets. [5] Even drawing the inference in favor of the plaintiff, creating an allegation out of this statement suffers from two flaws. First, the market that plaintiff claims defendant is dominant in, the national market, is not the relevant market that plaintiff itself delineated. Plaintiff has made no allegations as to Clear Channel's radio dominance in the relevant market. [6] However, even if it had made such allegations, Clear Channels' radio dominance is irrelevant. Plaintiff is not alleging that the injury stems from market power of radio stations, but from an attempt to monopolize the African-American trade exposition [*30] industry. Plaintiff has made no allegation that defendants have market power over this industry in the relevant market. Plaintiff has alleged nothing which allows us to infer that Clear Channel owns any other expos in other parts of the relevant market, or that other expos have been driven out by defendants' actions. Plaintiff's only fact regarding such market power deals solely with the metropolitan Chicago area, where, since plaintiff's expo ceased doing business, ETBW is the only expo left standing. Therefore, plaintiff has failed to allege market power, or a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power.

[5] Plaintiff extracts this statement from a portion of the complaint introducing the parties generally, and does not reference this act anywhere in its claims.

[*31] Although we find from the above analysis that plaintiff has not sufficiently plead either conspiracy or attempt to monopolize, we turn to the remaining factor of attempt to monopolize, specifically, anti-competitive conduct. Plaintiff has also failed to allege that defendants engaged in predatory or anti-competitive conduct. HN23[] "Predatory conduct may be broadly defined as conduct that is in itself an independent violation of the antitrust laws or that has no legitimate business justification other than to destroy or damage competition." The Great Escape, Inc., 791 F.2d at 541. Plaintiff makes conclusory statements of law that the conduct alleged is anti-competitive, but we need not accept plaintiff's conclusions of law as true.

Plaintiff first claims that defendants Clear Channel and WVAZ misappropriated confidential information acquired at meetings with plaintiff, and then conspired with defendants Merry Green and MGPG to create ETBW. It is clear that regardless of the spin plaintiff attempts to place on this conduct, defendants working together to create a competing expo to BE is not anti-competitive conduct. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). [*32] It is in fact pro-competitive conduct in that it is creating competition between expos not previously present. Id.

Secondly, plaintiff alleges defendants conspired to and did sell advertising space to ETBW at a discount, and at better listening hours than awarded BE. As a preliminary note, it is not clear from the pleadings who actually owns ETBW. [7] Regardless, the outcome is the same. If Merry Green does not have any ownership in ETBW, and the expo is simply a client of hers, then the money paid for advertising goes from ETBW to Clear Channel, which is also the owner of the radio station. This is merely a case of a company using its own resources to promote a new product. Even if Merry Green claims some ownership in ETBW, she is at most a joint venturer with Clear Channel, and the use of one joint venturer's resources (in this case, a radio station) to promote the joint venture, is not illegal conduct, but merely part of the definition of a joint venture. See Scandinavian Airlines Sys. Denmark-Norway-Sweden v. McDonald's Corp., 947 F. Supp. 1257, 1259 (N.D. Ill. 1996)(one factor determining existence of joint venture is a joint interest, as shown by contribution [*33] of property, natural resources, effort, skill, or knowledge). [8]

---

[6] In para. 21 of plaintiff's third amended complaint it notes that five radio stations were involved in the planning of the black expo, two of which allegedly belonged to defendants. Plaintiff does not allege that these five stations are the only ones in the Chicago metropolitan area with heavy African-American listenership, nor allege misconduct by defendants' other radio station not a party to this action.

[7] At one point plaintiff's complaint alleges that defendant Merry Green and MGPG "continue to count WVAZ and [ETBW] as clients," but three paragraphs later states that "Merry Green continues to conspire with WVAZ and the Clear Channel Defendants to claim ownership of [ETBW]."

[8] We have found no cases that hold that using one party's resources to promote a joint venture constitutes anti-competitive conduct or an antitrust violation. However, even if such conduct was considered anti-competitive, at most it would be evaluated under the rule-of-reason standard. See Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1108. HN24[] This standard contains a threshold requirement where plaintiff must first show defendants' market power. Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers. Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 666 (7th Cir. 1987). If plaintiff fails to do so, as plaintiff here has, then the inquiry is ended. Id.

An analogy can be drawn here. A clothier [*34] operates a store offering a number of brands of clothes. The clothier decides to design clothes of her own, and, once produced, places her clothes in the front of the store. This requires her to move other competing clothes to the back of the store. Can she do this? We believe so. She owns the store. Can she display her line of clothing in her store, without paying a fee, while other designers have to pay? Again, we believe so because the money paid by her as the designer would simply remain with the same entity. We think this would be true even if she was designing the clothes in a joint venture with another.

Plaintiff alleges that through Clear Channel's media leverage in the radio market, it coerced NBE's sponsors to abandon NBE and begin sponsoring ETBW. Plaintiff makes no specific allegation regarding how Clear Channel effected this coercion, nor how this coercion affected competition in the relevant market. Plaintiff's allegations relate solely to its own injury. Even if Clear Channel's conduct in this arena would be deemed unfair, "an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws." Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 225, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993). [*35] Therefore, we dismiss counts II and III of plaintiff's complaint.

Plaintiff's section 1 allegations fare no better. Section 1 of the Sherman Act proscribes HN25[] "every contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

HN26[] In order to state a claim under this Act, plaintiff must first show that defendants had market power. The Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., Inc., 791 F.2d 532, 537 (7th Cir. 1986). While there are some section 1 violations that do not require a showing of market power, such as horizontal price-fixing between actors in the same market, we do not believe this is one of those per se violations. As stated above, plaintiff has failed to allege defendants have market power in the relevant market. Plaintiff's factual claims center solely around the Chicago metropolitan area, and its sole claim regarding defendants' market power is on a nationwide scale and refers to defendants' control of radio stations, not of expos.

HN27[] The other fundamental requirement for showing a section 1 violation is a "sufficient allegation [*36] of anti-competitive effects that would result or have resulted from the defendants' actions; the absence of such allegations is ordinarily fatal to the existence of a cause of action." Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107 (7th Cir. 1984). These anti-competitive effects must necessarily come from anti-competitive conduct, which plaintiff has failed to allege, as demonstrated above. Even if plaintiff had shown actionable anti-competitive conduct, it could not make a claim under this Act. HN28[] The purpose of the Sherman Act is to rectify injuries to consumers caused by diminished competition. Id. Therefore, it follows that plaintiff must allege an injury, not only to itself, but to the market as well. Id. Plaintiff has failed to do this. All of plaintiff's factual allegations merely show injury that defendants committed on plaintiff's expo. Plaintiff has made no allegations as to how this alleged anti-competitive conduct has affected the market as a whole. Plaintiff makes vague statements about the injury to the African-American community when the money from these expos is filtered out to a conglomerate such as Clear Channel, rather than staying [*37] in the community. This may be true. However, it is not the type of injury that Congress sought to remedy with the antitrust laws. Car Carriers, Inc., 745 F.2d at 1107 ("purpose of the Sherman Act is to rectify the injury to consumers caused by diminished competition"). There are no allegations that defendants' dominance in the expo market has had any effect on the prices consumers pay for admittance to the expo, or for goods purchased therein. The inferences we draw in favor of plaintiff can only be drawn so far. We are unable to bridge the giant chasm left by plaintiff's pleadings. Therefore, plaintiff's section 1 claim must fail and we dismiss count I of the complaint. [9]

---

[9] Plaintiff claims, in its response to defendants' motion to dismiss, that it has sufficiently alleged an antitrust violation, and that it has consistently alleged that Clear Channel and its radio stations fixed prices and interfered with sponsorships in order to make non-Clear Channel expos unappealing to vendors, sponsors and consumers. We first note that a complaint may not be amended by the brief in opposition of the motion to dismiss. Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1107. However, even if we were to look at these statements as being consistent with the well-pleaded allegations in the complaint, none of plaintiff's allegations is evidence of price-fixing. At most, plaintiff has alleged price discrimination, an allegation that falls under the Robertson-Patman Act, which we discuss below.

[*38] By our holding here we do not say that defendants' conduct was honorable, nor do we say that plaintiff has no avenues of relief from other areas of law, such as tort and contract. We merely hold, consistent with the cases in our circuit and the Supreme Court, and consistent with Congress' intent that tortious conduct (here in the form of unfair competition) that does not otherwise contravene the antitrust laws, is not actionable under the Sherman Act.

Robertson-Patman Act Violations

Plaintiff also asserts violations of the Robertson-Patman Act, specifically illegal price discrimination under 15 U.S.C. § 13, and discrimination in rebates, discounts, or advertising service charges under 15 U.S.C. § 13a. These claims fail as a matter of law.

HN29[] The Robinson-Patman Act's prohibition on price discrimination extends only to transactions involving commodities. Baum v. Investors Diversified Services, Inc., 409 F.2d 872, 873 (7th Cir. 1969). Courts have strictly construed this term, holding that it denotes only "tangible products of trade," and advertising has been explicitly excluded from this definition. See Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc, 295 F.2d 375 (7th Cir. 1961); [*39] Ambook Enterprises v. Time, Inc., 612 F.2d 604 (2nd Cir. 1979); Advo Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191, 1195 n.3 (3rd Cir. 1995); National Tire Wholesale, Inc. v. Washington Post Co., 441 F. Supp. 81, 85-86 (D. D. C. 1977). Therefore, plaintiff's allegations of discrimination in the sale of radio advertising time do not fall under the Act, and counts IV and V are dismissed.

Supplemental Jurisdiction

Plaintiff's remaining claims are pendent state law claims. HN30[] 28 U.S.C. § 1367 grants this court jurisdiction to hear these pendent state claims. We may decline to exercise this jurisdiction for several reasons, including instances such as this, where we have dismissed all claims over which we exercise original jurisdiction. § 1367(c)(4). In Payne for Hicks v. Churchich, the Seventh Circuit stated that when the district court dismisses all federal claims before trial, "the usual and preferred course is to remand the state claims to the state court unless there are countervailing considerations." 161 F.3d 1030, 1043 (7th Cir. 1998). These exceptions include the running of [*40] the state law cause of action's statute of limitations, and instances where sending the case to another court will cause a substantial duplication of effort. Williams v. Seniff, 342 F.3d 774, 793 (7th Cir. 2003). Because plaintiff has not plead a date of discovery of its injury, we cannot say that the state claims' statutes of limitations have expired. Additionally, just as in Williams, discovery has been completed and transfer to state court would not permit plaintiff to uncover additional facts to support its claims. Id. Consequently, we dismiss the pendent state law claims.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we grant defendants' motion to strike plaintiff's exhibit, and grant defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs complaint.

JAMES B. MORAN

Senior Judge, U. S. District Court

Feb. 8, 2007.

End of Document

Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey

United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit

February 9, 2007, Decided

2005-1330, -1582

Reporter

476 F.3d 1337 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 2909 ; 81 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1633 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,590

DIPPIN' DOTS, INC. and CURT D. JONES, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. THOMAS R. MOSEY, DOTS OF FUN, INTERNATIONAL LASER EXPRESSIONS, INC. (also known as I.L.E., Inc.), Defendants-Cross Appellants, and NICHOLAS ANGUS, Defendant/Counterclaimant-Cross Appellant, and FROSTY BITES DISTRIBUTION LLC, Defendant-Appellee, and FROSTY BITES DISTRIBUTOR OF FLORIDA, INC., FROSTY BITES DISTRIBUTOR OF GEORGIA, INC., FROSTY BITES OF MICHIGAN, INC., J&J CONCESSIONS OF NEW JERSEY, INC., FROSTY BITES ICE CREAM COMPANY, LLC, FROSTY BITES SOUTH, INC., INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF AMUSEMENT PARKS AND ATTRACTIONS, FROSTY BITES OF NEW YORK, LLC, and FROSTY BITES ICE CREAM DEVELOPMENT, LLC, Defendants, v. F. ROBERT ESTY, JR., BARRY JAY BASS, VICTOR BAUER, JACK MILLER, DANIEL KILCOYNE, SHAWN P. KILCOYNE, and DANIEL DOPKO, Counterclaim Defendants, and FROSTY BITES, INC. (now known as Mini Melts, Inc.), Counterclaim Defendant-Cross Appellant.

Subsequent History: Rehearing denied by Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 9603 (Fed. Cir., Apr. 6, 2007)

Rehearing denied by, Rehearing, en banc, denied by Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 9604 (Fed. Cir., Apr. 6, 2007)

US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Mosey v. Dippin' Dots, Inc., 552 U.S. 948, 128 S. Ct. 375, 169 L. Ed. 2d 260, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 11329 (U.S., 2007)

US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 552 U.S. 948, 128 S. Ct. 391, 169 L. Ed. 2d 260, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 11457 (U.S., 2007)

On remand at, Costs and fees proceeding at Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80553 (N.D. Tex., Oct. 30, 2007)

Prior History: [1] Appealed from: United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. Judge Thomas W. Thrash, Jr.

Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39623 (N.D. Tex., Aug. 4, 2005)
In re Dippin' Dots Patent Litig., 249 F. Supp. 2d 1346, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8516 (N.D. Ga., 2003)
Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39652 (N.D. Tex., Aug. 4, 2005)

Disposition: AFFIRMED-IN-PART, REVERSED-IN-PART, VACATED-IN-PART, AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

patent, sales, inequitable conduct, antitrust, district court, beads, prior art, omission, ice cream, temperature, steps, counterclaim, patentee, infringement, fraudulent, serving, unenforceability, summary judgment, attorney's fees, critical date, Clayton Act, noninfringement, invalid, comprising, practiced, disclose, misrepresentation, free-flowing, alimentary, deceptive

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > General Overview

HN1[] Inferences & Presumptions, Presumptions

The term "comprising" raises a presumption that a list of elements is nonexclusive. However, "comprising" is not a weasel word with which to abrogate claim limitations.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Ordinary Skill Standard

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Prior Art

Patent Law > ... > Elements & Tests > Graham Test > Secondary Considerations

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

When reviewing a district court's judgment notwithstanding the verdict determination as to obviousness in a patent, an appellate court reviews a jury's conclusions on obviousness, a question of law, without deference, and the underlying findings of fact, whether explicit or implicit within the verdict, for substantial evidence. Those factual underpinnings include the scope and content of the prior art, differences between the prior art and the claims at issue, and the level of ordinary skill in the art. Precedent requires that the party urging obviousness demonstrate a teaching, suggestion, or motivation to combine references. This test is a flexible one which may find motivation to combine in the knowledge of one skilled in the art or in the nature of the problem to be solved. Secondary indicia of nonobviousness, such as commercial success, long-felt need, or failure of others are also relevant.

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > On Sale Bar > Elements

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

HN3[] On Sale Bar, Elements

The public sale of goods produced by a process more than one year before a patent is filed places that process in the 35 U.S.C.S. § 102(b) prior art. Prior art under the § 102(b) on-sale bar is also prior art for the purposes of obviousness under 35 U.S.C.S. § 103.

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > On Sale Bar > Elements

HN4[] On Sale Bar, Elements

The experimental use exception to 35 U.S.C.S. § 102(b) does not include market testing where the inventor is attempting to gauge consumer demand for his claimed invention.

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > On Sale Bar > Elements

Patent Law > ... > Elements & Tests > Graham Test > Secondary Considerations

HN5[] On Sale Bar, Elements

The asserted commercial success of a product must be due to the merits of the claimed invention beyond what was readily available in the prior art.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN6[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A patent may be rendered unenforceable for inequitable conduct if an applicant, with intent to mislead or deceive the examiner, fails to disclose material information or submits materially false information to the Patent and Trademark Office during prosecution. The party urging unenforceability must show by clear and convincing evidence that the applicant met thresholds of both materiality and intent. Where those factual findings were made by the district court, an appellate court reviews them for clear errors. The ultimate determination of inequitable conduct is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. The appellate court reviews for abuse of that discretion.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN7[] Defenses, Inequitable Conduct

The "reasonable examiner" standard remains sufficient ground for inequitable conduct materiality even after 1992 amendment of 37 C.F.R. § 1.56.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN8[] Inferences & Presumptions, Inferences

Smoking gun evidence is not required in order to establish an intent to deceive. Rather, this element of inequitable conduct must generally be inferred from the facts and circumstances surrounding an applicant's overall conduct.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Failure to Fulfill Duties

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

HN9[] Inequitable Conduct, Failure to Fulfill Duties

Absent explanation, the evidence of a knowing failure to disclose sales that bear all the earmarks of commercialization reasonably supports an inference that the inventor's attorney intended to mislead the Patent and Trademark Office. The concealment of sales information can be particularly egregious because, unlike an applicant's failure to disclose, for example, a material patent reference, the examiner has no way of securing the information on his own.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

HN10[] Inequitable Conduct, Elements

Once threshold findings of materiality and intent are established, a court must weigh them to determine whether the equities warrant a conclusion that inequitable conduct occurred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN11[] Sherman Act, Claims

Proof that a patentee has obtained the patent by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting facts to the Patent and Trademark Office is sufficient to strip the patentee of its exemption from the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN12[] Sherman Act, Claims

A party who asserts such a fraudulently obtained patent may be subject to an antitrust claim. If a patentee asserts a patent claim and the defendant can demonstrate the required fraud on the Patent and Trademark Office, as well as show that the other elements necessary to a § 2 of the Sherman Act case are present, a defendant-counterclaimant is entitled to treble damages under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

The first barrier for a Walker Process claimant to clear is the requirement that the patent be obtained through actual fraud upon the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO). This question is governed by Federal Circuit law. A finding of inequitable conduct does not by itself suffice to support a finding of Walker Process fraud, because inequitable conduct is a broader, more inclusive concept than the common law fraud needed to support a Walker Process counterclaim. To demonstrate Walker Process fraud, a claimant must make higher threshold showings of both materiality and intent than are required to show inequitable conduct. A Walker Process claimant must make a greater showing of scienter and materiality than when seeking unenforceability based on conduct before the PTO. Furthermore, a finding of Walker Process fraud cannot result from an equitable balancing between the two factors; a strong showing of one cannot make up for a deficiency in the other. The difference in breadth between inequitable conduct and Walker Process fraud admits the possibility of a close case whose facts reach the level of inequitable conduct, but not of fraud before the PTO.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

The heightened standard of materiality in a Walker Process case requires that the patent would not have issued but for the patent examiner's justifiable reliance on the patentee's misrepresentation or omission.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

HN15[] Sherman Act, Claims

While Walker Process intent may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of a case, a mere failure to cite a reference to the Patent and Trademark Office will not suffice. This is not to say that an omission always reduces to mere failure to cite. Omissions, as well as misrepresentations, may in limited circumstances support a finding of Walker Process fraud because a fraudulent omission can be just as reprehensible as a fraudulent misrepresentation. To find a prosecution omission fraudulent there must be evidence of intent separable from the simple fact of the omission. A false or clearly misleading prosecution statement may permit an inference that the statement was made with deceptive intent. For instance, evidence may establish that a patent applicant knew one fact and presented another, thus allowing the factfinder to conclude that the applicant intended by the misrepresentation to deceive the examiner. That is not the case with an omission, which could happen for any number of nonfraudulent reasons-the applicant could have had a good-faith belief that disclosure was not necessary, or simply have forgotten to make the required disclosure.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

HN16[] Sherman Act, Claims

Weighing intent and materiality together is appropriate when assessing whether the patentee's prosecution conduct was inequitable. However, when Walker Process claimants wield that conduct as a sword to obtain antitrust damages rather than as a mere shield against enforcement of the patent, they must prove deceptive intent independently.

Counsel: Daniel J. Warren, Sutherland Asbill & Brennan LLP, of Atlanta, Georgia, argued for plaintiffs-appellants, Dippin Dots, Inc. and Curtis D. Jones. With him on the brief were Candice C. Decaire, Erin C. Witkow, and Troy R. Covington. Of counsel was Todd Stockwell, Stockwell & Associates, of Lexington, Kentucky.

Robert G. Oake, Jr., Oake Law Office, of Allen, Texas, and Rudolf O. Siegesmund, Siegesmund & Associates, of Dallas, Texas, argued for defendants-cross-appellants, Thomas R. Mosey et al., defendant/counterclaimant-cross appellant, Nicholas Angus, and counterclaim defendant-cross appellant, Frosty Bites, Inc. (now known as Mini Melts, Inc.).

Keith E. Broyles, Alston & Bird LLP, of Atlanta, Georgia, argued for defendant-appellee. With him on the brief were Stacey A. Mollohan and William R. Hubbard.

Judges: Before MAYER, RADER, and GAJARSA, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: GAJARSA,

Opinion

[*1634] [*1339] GAJARSA, Circuit Judge.

This is a patent infringement and antitrust case dealing with a unique ice cream product. [2] Plaintiffs Dippin' Dots, Inc. and Curt D. Jones (collectively "DDI") appeal from the district court's claim construction and summary judgment of noninfringement of U.S. Patent No. 5,126,156 ("the '156 patent") and from the judgment following jury trial that all claims of [1635] that patent are obvious, that the patent is unenforceable due to inequitable conduct during prosecution, and that DDI violated the antitrust laws by asserting a patent that had been procured through fraud on the Patent Office. We affirm the judgments of noninfringement, obviousness, and unenforceability, but reverse as to the antitrust counterclaim.

[*1340] I. BACKGROUND

A. The Technology and Patent

The '156 patent, covering subject matter invented by plaintiff Jones and exclusively licensed to plaintiff Dippin' Dots, is directed to a process for making a form of cryogenically prepared novelty ice cream product. Claim 1, the only independent claim, reads:

> A method of preparing and storing a free-flowing, frozen alimentary dairy product, comprising the steps of:
>
> [(1)] preparing an alimentary composition for freezing;
>
> [(2)] dripping said alimentary composition into a freezing chamber; [3]
>
> [(3)] freezing said dripping alimentary composition into beads;
>
> [(4)] storing said beads at a temperature at least as low as -20 degrees F. so as to maintain said beads free-flowing for an extended period of time;
>
> [(5)] bringing said beads to a temperature between substantially -10 degrees F. and -20 degrees F. prior to serving; and
>
> [(6)] serving said beads for consumption at a temperature between substantially -10 degrees F. and -20 degrees F. so that said beads are free flowing when served.

'156 patent col.6 ll.41-57 (numbering added for reference). DDI has commercialized this process. The ice cream it produces, sold under the Dippin' Dots brand, is known to patrons of amusement parks, stadiums, shopping malls, and the like.

The initial application that eventually issued as the '156 patent, filed on March 6, 1989, omitted the final "serving" step from Claim 1. The examiner rejected all of the claims as obvious in light of Canadian Patent No. 964,921, of Aref et al. DDI appealed the rejections to the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences ("Board"), which affirmed the rejection. DDI then filed a continuation application, amending Claim 1 by [4] adding the "serving" step. The examiner again rejected over the Aref reference, noting that "dependent on the food product being served," it would be obvious to serve the product in a cold, free-flowing state. DDI then submitted a declaration pursuant to 37 C.F.R. § 1.132 in which it submitted evidence of the significant commercial success of its method. It argued that its commercial success should weigh against a finding of obviousness. See Graham v. John Deere Co., 383 U.S. 1, 17-18, 86 S. Ct. 684, 15 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1966) (noting that commercial success is one of the "secondary considerations" that may serve as "indicia of . . . nonobviousness"). The examiner agreed and the '156 patent issued in June 1992.

B. The Festival Market Sales

Much of the debate in this case centers on the import of sales made at the Festival Market mall in Lexington, Kentucky, more than a year before DDI filed its patent application. Sales made more than one year before the patent's priority date implicate the on-sale bar of 35 U.S.C. § 102(b). For the '156 patent, this critical date is March 6, 1988. Starting on July 24, 1987, Jones sold cryogenically-prepared, [5] largely beaded ice cream at the Festival Market. During Jones's time at Festival Market, which lasted at least until July 29th, over 800 customers purchased his beaded ice cream and others received free samples. The customers were permitted to leave with the product and were not restricted by any kind of confidentiality agreement. Jones later testified that his main goal at the Festival Market was to "get . . . test-marketing information" and not to further develop technical aspects of his product such as particular temperature ranges for storage and service.

It is undisputed that the Festival Market sales were never disclosed to the Patent [*1341] and Trademark Office ("PTO") during prosecution of the '156 patent. The declaration of commercial success which ultimately persuaded the examiner to grant the patent contained a sworn statement by Jones that "[t]he initial sales were in March of 1988," which was on or after the critical date.

Jones testified that at Festival Market he only practiced the first three steps of the claimed method, not the storing, bringing, or serving steps. He testified that he considered the evidence of what had happened at Festival [1636] Market to be irrelevant to [6] patentability. The attorney who prosecuted the '156 patent, Warren Schickli, testified that he considered the sales to have been experimental since the process as practiced at Festival Market could not be feasibly commercially exploited. He also testified that the Festival Market ice cream was not sold for "direct consumption" under the meaning of Claim 1, because the ice cream was too cold to eat comfortably when initially given to the consumer.

C. Prior Litigation

The controversy in this case began when several of DDI's distributors severed their relationship, found alternative manufacturing sources, and entered into competition against DDI. DDI initiated a series of patent infringement lawsuits against its new competitors in various judicial districts. In this appeal, the defendants fall into two primary categories: the "manufacturing parties" who make the competing ice cream product and the "distributing parties" who sell it to consumers. [1] [8] The defendants counterclaimed for violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act due to DDI's allegation of patent infringement based on a fraudulently acquired patent. This type of antitrust claim has become known as a "Walker Process [7] " claim, named for the Supreme Court's decision in Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). The various suits were consolidated by the Judicial Panel on Multi-District Litigation for pretrial proceedings before the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, with Judge Thomas W. Thrash presiding. That court adopted in large part an earlier-recommended claim construction by a special master. In re Dippin' Dots Patent Litig., 249 F. Supp. 2d 1346, 1366 (N.D. Ga. 2003). It issued summary judgment of noninfringement both literally, id. at 1368, and via the doctrine of equivalents, id. at 1370-71. It refused to grant summary judgment to any party on invalidity, id. at 1362, 1364, or on inequitable conduct, id. at 1365. [2]

After the pretrial proceedings in the Northern District of Georgia were completed, the case was remanded to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. Judge Thrash, sitting by designation, continued to preside over the Northern District of Texas proceedings. [*1342] That court conducted a jury trial on the issues of invalidity, unenforceability, and antitrust violations by DDI. By special verdict, the jury found that the sales by Jones prior to March 1988 could be asserted against the patent as prior art and that all claims of the '156 patent were invalid as obvious. The jury also found that both Jones and Schickli had, with [9] intent to deceive, made material misrepresentations or omissions in violation of the duty of candor to the PTO. It also determined that defendants Mini Melts, Inc. and Frosty Bites Distribution had proven all required elements of their antitrust counterclaim, including the requisite fraud on the PTO. However, it found no antitrust damages, granting the counterclaim plaintiffs zero dollars in damages on their Sherman Act counterclaim. The district court denied DDI's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JMOL), finding that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to find all claims obvious and that DDI had withheld a material reference with the deceptive intent required for Walker Process liability. The district court then weighed that same evidence of intent and materiality itself and found the patent unenforceable due to inequitable conduct before the PTO. In its final judgment dated February 28, 2005, it awarded attorney fees under the Clayton Act to defendant Frosty Bites Distribution ("FBD") in the amount of $ 676,675.46.

The defendants appealed to this court on March 25, 2005. After the notice of appeal was filed, the district court made two additional rulings. [10] On August 4, 2005, it granted defendant Mosey's motion for attorney fees [1637] under the Clayton Act, which had been outstanding at the time of the final judgment. On August 18,

---

[1] The manufacturing parties are Defendants Thomas Mosey, Dots of Fun, International Laser Expressions, Inc., Nicholas Angus, and Frosty Bites, Inc. (now known as Mini Melts, Inc.). Defendant Frosty Bites Distribution, its various local affiliates, and individuals such as founder Victor Bauer are the distributing parties. The issues in this case are not generally resolved in a manner unique to particular defendants, so we refer collectively to "the defendants" where appropriate.

[2] The district court also granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants as to claims of trade dress infringement, id. at 1374-75, and trade secret violations, id. at 1376. It granted summary judgment to the plaintiffs on a minor contract issue. Id. at 1378. These issues are not before us on appeal. The trade dress issue was appealed separately to the Eleventh Circuit, which affirmed. Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Frosty Bites Distrib., 369 F.3d 1197 (11th Cir. 2004).

2005, FBD moved for an amendment of the attorney fee order to add fees under 35 U.S.C. § 285, the patent statute's fee-shifting provision. We deactivated the appeal while that motion was pending. On October 13, 2005, the district court granted FBD's motion and awarded it an additional $ 504,158.16 in fees under § 285. On November 18, 2005, this court reactivated the appeal and set a briefing schedule. DDI's opening brief included challenges to the August 4 and October 13 fee awards. A motions panel of this court ruled that, since DDI had failed to amend its March 25 notice of appeal to include references to the later district court orders, we lacked jurisdiction to hear DDI's challenge to those later orders. Dippin' Dots v. Mosey, No. 05-1330, slip op. at 3 (Fed. Cir. May 1, 2006). DDI was directed to file a replacement brief omitting the arguments held to be jurisdictionally barred. Id., slip op. at 4.

In its amended brief, DDI appeals the claim construction and summary judgment [11] of noninfringement, the refusal to overturn the jury verdict of obviousness and liability under the antitrust laws, the finding of inequitable conduct, and the award of attorneys' fees under the Clayton Act granted to FBD. We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(1).

II. DISCUSSION

A. Claim Construction and Infringement

DDI challenges the summary judgment of noninfringement on the grounds that the district court [3] construed the claims of the '156 patent erroneously. Its primary arguments relate to the appropriate reach of the term "beads" in Claim 1, which the district court construed to mean "small frozen droplets . . . which have a smooth, [*1343] spherical (round or ball shaped) appearance." The district court's construction also excluded processes which produce any "irregular or odd shaped particles such as 'popcorn.'" The district court correctly found that the claim steps mentioning "beads" were limited to covering processes that produce beads and only beads. The accused process produces both spheres and irregular particles, so under this construction, the defendants do not infringe. DDI objects both to the definition of "beads" and to [12] the district court's refusal to use the word "comprising" to extend the coverage of the claim beyond a beads-only process. As to the definition of "beads," the district court correctly noted that the written description specifically describes "beads" as having a "smooth, spherical appearance." '156 patent col.5 ll.22-23. Indeed, DDI argued to the Special Master before whom the construction issue was originally presented that a "bead" was "a small round ball or round drop." There is no error in the district court's definition of this term.

As to DDI's second argument, we acknowledge that HN1[] the term "comprising" raises a presumption that the list of elements is nonexclusive. See Genentech, Inc. v. Chiron Corp., 112 F.3d 495, 501 (Fed. Cir. 1997). However, "'[c]omprising' is not a weasel word with which to abrogate claim limitations." Spectrum Int'l, Inc. v. Sterilite Corp., 164 F.3d 1372, 1380 (Fed. Cir. 1998). [13] "Comprising" appears at the beginning of the claim-"comprising the steps of"-and indicates here that an infringing process could practice other steps in addition to the ones mentioned. Those six enumerated steps must, however, all be practiced as recited in the claim for a process to infringe. The presumption raised by the term "comprising" does not reach into each of the six steps to render every word and phrase therein open-ended-especially where, as here, the patentee has narrowly defined the claim term it now seeks to have broadened. The district court's limitation of the claim scope to exclude processes that produce some irregularly shaped particles is correct.

DDI also objects to the district court's definition of "free flowing," but the court did not rely on that definition to support its summary judgment ruling. Dippin' Dots, 249 F. Supp. 2d at 1367 ("Since Defendants' process produces beads and irregularly shaped particles of ice cream, Defendants' method does not literally infringe the '156 patent."). Since that basis of the district court's decision was based on a properly construed claim term, we affirm the summary judgment of no literal infringement. [14] DDI does not appeal the summary judgment of noninfringement under the doctrine of [1638] equivalents, so the court need not consider the doctrine of equivalents.

[3] As described supra, the claim construction and summary judgment phases of this litigation were handled by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia. "The district court" as used in this section refers to that court.

B. Obviousness

The case was transferred to the Northern District of Texas and tried to a jury, which found all claims of the '156 patent to be obvious. HN2[↑] When reviewing a district court's JMOL determination as to obviousness, "[t]his court reviews a jury's conclusions on obviousness, a question of law, without deference, and the underlying findings of fact, whether explicit or implicit within the verdict, for substantial evidence." LNP Eng'g Plastics, Inc. v. Miller Waste Mills, Inc., 275 F.3d 1347, 1353 (Fed. Cir. 2001). Those factual underpinnings include the scope and content of the prior art, differences between the prior art and the claims at issue, and the level of ordinary skill in the art. Graham, 383 U.S. at 17. Our precedent requires that the party urging obviousness demonstrate a teaching, suggestion, or motivation to combine references. C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Sys., Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1351 (Fed. Cir. 1998). This test is a flexible one [*1344] which may find motivation [15] to combine in the knowledge of one skilled in the art or in the nature of the problem to be solved. Alza Corp. v. Mylan Labs., Inc., 464 F.3d 1286, 1291 (Fed. Cir. 2006). Secondary indicia of nonobviousness, such as commercial success, long-felt need, or failure of others are also relevant. Graham, 383 U.S. at 17-18.

To find obviousness in light of the Festival Market sales requires two conclusions: first, those sales must have been in the prior art; second, the process practiced at Festival Market combined with any other relevant prior art must render the claims of the '156 patent obvious. Substantial evidence existed for the jury to find the facts necessary to support both conclusions.

The first question is whether the sales at Festival Market constitute prior art that can be asserted against the '156 patent claims in an obviousness analysis. It is undisputed that those sales occurred before the patent's critical date of March 6, 1988. Sales made before the critical date would render invalid any claims that they anticipate, but the defendants do not allege here that the Festival Market sales embodied every element of any claim of the '156 patent. [16] Instead, they argue that the claims are obvious in view of the Festival Market sales combined with the prior art cited by the examiner during prosecution. Those sales may indeed be considered when determining whether the claims are invalid for obviousness. HN3[↑] The public sale of goods produced by a process more than one year before a patent is filed places that process in the § 102(b) prior art. See Invitrogen Corp. v. Biocrest Mfg., 424 F.3d 1374, 1382 (Fed. Cir. 2005) (citing Metallizing Eng'g Co. v. Kenyon Bearing & Auto Parts Co., 153 F.2d 516, 520 (2d Cir. 1946) (Learned Hand, J.)). Prior art under the § 102(b) on-sale bar is also prior art for the purposes of obviousness under § 103. See LaBounty Mfg. v. United States ITC, 958 F.2d 1066, 1071 (Fed. Cir. 1992) ("Section 102(b) may create a bar to patentability . . . in conjunction with [§ 103], if the claimed invention would have been obvious from the on-sale device in conjunction with the prior art."). DDI argues that the sales at Festival Market were experimental in nature and therefore avoid the on-sale bar. In light of Jones's testimony that his purpose was to determine [17] the marketability of his ice cream product and not to improve it technically, the jury could have found facts supporting a conclusion that the sales were not experimental. See In re Smith, 714 F.2d 1127, 1135 (Fed. Cir. 1983) (HN4[↑] "The experimental use exception . . . does not include market testing where the inventor is attempting to gauge consumer demand for his claimed invention."); see also Paragon Podiatry Lab, Inc. v. KLM Labs., Inc., 984 F.2d 1182, 1193 (Fed. Cir. 1993). The Festival Market sales are therefore prior art citable against the patent claims for obviousness purposes.

The second question is whether the Festival Market sales, considered as prior art to the '156 patent, render its claims invalid for obviousness. We conclude that they do. The first three steps of the patented process (preparing, dripping, and freezing) were concededly practiced at Festival Market. The last two-bringing to a higher temperature and then serving at that temperature for direct consumption-were at least very closely approximated. No evidence of the exact temperature of any product served at Festival Market has been presented, but it would have been obvious in [18] light of the activity there to measure that temperature and serve the product within an easily determined range of palatability. [1639] The fourth step, "storing" at a very cold temperature for an extended period of time, may not have been present, but extended cold storage was an obvious [*1345] elaboration on the Festival Market sales in order to distribute and retail the product. The motivation for DDI to make these trivial modifications is readily apparent from the problem to be solved. Someone of ordinary skill in the art of ice cream retailing, seeking to commercially develop the inventive kernel found at Festival Market, would immediately seek the appropriate temperature ranges within which to store and serve the product. See Alza, 464 F.3d at 1291 (noting that teaching, motivation, or suggestion can come from nature of problem to be solved).

The jury could reasonably have found that the secondary factor of commercial success advanced by Jones to obtain the '156 patent was obviated by the Festival Market sales. If the factors that led to DDI's later commercial success were largely present at Festival Market, later changes to the process encompassed by the '156 patent could [19] reasonably be seen as not improving the prior art's commercial appeal much, if at all. See J.T. Eaton & Co. v. Atlantic Paste & Glue Co., 106 F.3d 1563, 1571 (Fed. Cir. 1997) (HN5[] "the asserted commercial success of the product must be due to the merits of the claimed invention beyond what was readily available in the prior art.").

The factual underpinnings implicit in the jury's verdict are supported by substantial evidence, and based on those facts, we affirm the judgment of obviousness.

C. Inequitable Conduct

We have stated that HN6[] "[a] patent may be rendered unenforceable for inequitable conduct if an applicant, with intent to mislead or deceive the examiner, fails to disclose material information or submits materially false information to the PTO during prosecution." Digital Control Inc. v. The Charles Mach. Works, 437 F.3d 1309, 1313 (Fed. Cir. 2006). The party urging unenforceability must show by clear and convincing evidence that the applicant met "thresholds of both materiality and intent." Molins PLC v. Textron, 48 F.3d 1172, 1178 (Fed. Cir. 1995). Where, as here, those factual findings were made by the district court, [20] we review them for clear error. Id. The ultimate determination of inequitable conduct is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. We review for abuse of that discretion. Union Pac. Res. Co. v. Chesapeake Energy Corp., 236 F.3d 684, 693-94 (Fed. Cir. 2001).

The first prong of the inequitable conduct test, materiality, is clearly met here. As discussed supra, the Festival Market sales render the '156 patent invalid for obviousness. Had those sales been disclosed to the PTO, the patent may or may not have issued. At the very least, the existence of such sales prior to the critical date is a matter that "a reasonable examiner would have considered. . . important in deciding whether to allow the . . . application." Dayco Prods., Inc. v. Total Containment, Inc., 329 F.3d 1358, 1363 (Fed. Cir. 2003); see also Digital Control, 437 F.3d at 1316 (holding that HN7[] "reasonable examiner" standard remains sufficient ground for inequitable conduct materiality even after 1992 amendment of 37 C.F.R. § 1.56).

The question of deceptive intent is a more difficult one, but we find no clear error in the district [21] court's determination on this point. HN8[] "'Smoking gun' evidence is not required in order to establish an intent to deceive . . . . Rather, this element of inequitable conduct[] must generally be inferred from the facts and circumstances surrounding the applicant's overall conduct." Paragon Podiatry Lab, Inc. v. KLM Labs., Inc., 984 F.2d 1182, 1189 (Fed. Cir. 1993). We have noted that omission of sales made before the critical date is especially problematic:

> HN9[] [*1346] Absent explanation, the evidence of a knowing failure to disclose sales that bear all the earmarks of commercialization reasonably supports an inference that the inventor's attorney intended to mislead the PTO. The concealment of sales information can be particularly egregious because, unlike the applicant's failure to disclose, for example, a material patent reference, the examiner has no way of securing the information on his own.

Id. at 1193. While DDI wholly neglected to disclose the Festival Market sales to the PTO, it enthusiastically touted sales made after the critical date as evidence of the commercial appeal of its process. That combination of action and omission permits [22] an inference of the minimum, threshold level of intent required for inequitable conduct. The evidence to support [1640] a finding of intent may not be particularly strong here (a point we discuss further in Part II.D, infra.) However, the district court was permitted to balance the relatively weak evidence of intent together with the strong evidence that DDI's omission was highly material to the issuance of the '156 patent and to find that on balance, inequitable conduct had occurred. [4] Such a finding, as an exercise of the district court's equitable powers, is within its discretion. See Molins, 48 F.3d at 1178 (HN10[] "Once threshold findings of materiality and intent are established, the court must weigh them to determine whether the equities warrant a conclusion that inequitable conduct occurred."). We perceive no abuse of discretion here. The district court's inequitable conduct finding is correct.

[23] D. Walker Process Antitrust Claim

The defendants in this case counterclaimed against DDI for violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, and the same jury that found the patent obvious found DDI liable on that counterclaim. HN11[] Proof that a patentee has "obtained the patent by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting facts to the Patent Office . . . [is] sufficient to strip [the patentee] of its exemption from the antitrust laws." Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). HN12[] A party who asserts such a fraudulently obtained patent may be subject to an antitrust claim. If a patentee asserts a patent claim and the defendant can demonstrate the required fraud on the PTO, as well as show that "the other elements necessary to a § 2 case are present," the defendant-counterclaimant is entitled to treble damages under the antitrust laws. Id. at 175.

HN13[] The first barrier for a Walker Process claimant to clear is the requirement that the patent be obtained through actual fraud upon the PTO. This question is governed by Federal Circuit law. Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1068 (Fed. Cir. 1998) [24] (en banc in relevant part). A finding of inequitable conduct does not by itself suffice to support a finding of Walker Process fraud, because "inequitable conduct is a broader, more inclusive concept than the common law fraud needed to support a Walker Process counterclaim." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1069. To demonstrate Walker Process fraud, a claimant must make higher threshold showings of both materiality and intent than are required to show inequitable conduct. Id. at 1070-71; C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Sys., Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1364 (Fed. Cir. 1998) (Walker Process [*1347] claimant "must make a greater showing of scienter and materiality than when seeking unenforceability based on conduct before the Patent Office"). Furthermore, a finding of Walker Process fraud cannot result from an equitable balancing between the two factors; a strong showing of one cannot make up for a deficiency in the other. Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1071. The difference in breadth between inequitable conduct and Walker Process fraud admits the possibility of a close case whose facts reach the level of inequitable conduct, but [25] not of fraud before the PTO. This is such a case.

HN14[] The heightened standard of materiality in a Walker Process case requires that the patent would not have issued but for the patent examiner's justifiable reliance on the patentee's misrepresentation or omission. C.R. Bard, 157 F.3d at 1364. The defendants have established materiality even under this strict threshold, since the evidence supports a finding that the patent would not have issued if DDI had disclosed the Festival Market sales to the PTO. The difficulty comes in establishing that the omission of those sales was done with fraudulent intent. DDI did make certain statements to the PTO that would have been more completely accurate had it included information about the Festival Market sales. For instance, it suggested that its method was "the first method to allow serving of a completely free flowing frozen alimentary dairy product for direct consumption by consumers." That statement would have been more helpful to the PTO if it had also disclosed that the first free-flowing sales had arguably happened at Festival Market, but the statement was not actually false. Likewise, DDI argued against obviousness by [26] pointing out that none of the cited references taught free-flowing service. Again, this statement would have better informed the PTO if it had clarified that elsewhere in the prior art, such service arguably existed, but again, the statement was true. The [1641] problem was not with its falsity but with its incompleteness.

Ultimately, the defendants' fraud case here is built only upon DDI's omission of the Festival Market sales from the prosecution record. HN15[] While Walker Process intent may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of a case, "[a] mere failure to cite a reference to the PTO will not suffice." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1071. This is not to say that an omission always reduces to "mere failure to cite." We acknowledged in Nobelpharma "that omissions, as well as misrepresentations, may in limited circumstances support a finding of Walker Process fraud . . . because a fraudulent omission can be just as reprehensible as a fraudulent misrepresentation." 141 F.3d at 1070. We believe, though, that to find a prosecution omission fraudulent there must be evidence of intent separable from the simple fact of the omission. A false or clearly [27] misleading prosecution statement may permit an inference that the statement was made with deceptive intent. For instance, evidence may establish that a patent applicant knew one fact and presented another, thus allowing the factfinder to conclude that the applicant intended by the misrepresentation to deceive the examiner. That is not the case with an omission, which could happen for any number of nonfraudulent reasons-the applicant could have had a good-faith belief that disclosure was not necessary, or simply have forgotten to make the required disclosure. In this case, DDI argues that it did not disclose the Festival Market sales to the PTO because it believed that the product there was made without practicing the "storing," "bringing," or "serving" steps of the claim within the specified temperature ranges, and that therefore the Festival Market sales were merely cumulative to other prior [*1348] art references which also lacked those three steps. The jury was of course allowed to disbelieve or discount evidence tending to support this claim. However, the defendants submitted no evidence of their own-aside from the absence of the Festival Market sales from the prosecution record-which [28] affirmatively shows DDI's fraudulent intent. That intent cannot be shown merely from the absence of evidence which would come about from the jury's discounting DDI's explanation.

[4] The district court characterized DDI's intent to deceive as "of a high nature." We disagree, but believe that in light of the high materiality of the nondisclosure, inequitable conduct can still be found here even though the evidence reveals less than an egregiously willful intent to deceive.

Nobelpharma serves as a good example of the sort of facts that do prove Walker Process fraud by omission. In that case, the inventors had transmitted to their Swedish patent agent a draft patent application which included a citation to a book written by the patentee in 1977. 141 F.3d at 1062. That book was eventually held to anticipate the patent. Id. at 1072. The agent "deleted all reference to the 1977 Book from the patent application that was ultimately filed in Sweden" and then also failed to mention the book in the U.S. application that led to the patent at issue. Id. at 1062. When pressed on the issue at trial, the agent "could not explain, even in retrospect, why he deleted all reference to the 1977 Book." Id. at 1072. We found that the evidence of actual deletion by the patent agent gave the jury reasonable ground to find intent to defraud by the patentees. Id.

There is no similarly strong evidence that the omission in this [29] case was fraudulent. It might be argued that because the omitted reference was so important to patentability, DDI must have known of its importance and must have made a conscious decision not to disclose it. That argument has some force, but to take it too far would be to allow the high materiality of the omission to be balanced against a lesser showing of deceptive intent by the patentee. HN16[] Weighing intent and materiality together is appropriate when assessing whether the patentee's prosecution conduct was inequitable. Molins, 48 F.3d at 1178. However, when Walker Process claimants wield that conduct as a "sword" to obtain antitrust damages rather than as a mere "shield" against enforcement of the patent, Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1070, they must prove deceptive intent independently. The defendants have not done so here to the extent necessary for a reasonable jury to find Walker Process fraud. The finding of fraud on the PTO is therefore reversed.

DDI also argues that the antitrust judgment must be reversed because the jury was not presented with sufficient evidence of the definition of the relevant market. Fraudulent acquisition of the asserted [30] patent strips the Walker Process defendant [5] of its antitrust immunity, but that is the beginning, not the end, of the inquiry. The counterclaimant must also show the basic elements of an antitrust violation defined by the regional circuit's law, including that the patentee's behavior was directed [1642] to a relevant product market. Unitherm Food Sys., Inc. v. Swift-Eckrich, Inc., 375 F.3d 1341, 1363 (Fed. Cir. 2004), rev'd on other grounds, 546 U.S. 394, 126 S. Ct. 980, 163 L. Ed. 2d 974 (2006). [6] In this case, DDI's antitrust immunity remains intact due to insufficient evidence of fraud. We therefore reach neither DDI's argument on this point nor the defendants' argument that DDI [*1349] waived the market definition issue by failing to raise it below.

---

[5] Here that defendant is the plaintiff DDI, which is defending against a Walker Process counterclaim.

[6] Unitherm applied Tenth Circuit antitrust law. Id. (citing United States v. AMR Corp., 335 F.3d 1109, 1113 (10th Cir. 2003); Telecor Communs., Inc. v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 305 F.3d 1124, 1130-31 (10th Cir. 2002)). Fifth Circuit law also requires proof of a relevant market. Doctor's Hosp. v. Se. Med. Alliance, 123 F.3d 301, 311 (5th Cir. 1997).

[31] E. Attorney Fees

With the judgment of antitrust liability reversed, the grant of attorney's fees under § 4 of the Clayton Act must be vacated. As mentioned supra, a motions panel of this court has found that we lack jurisdiction to hear DDI's challenge of that fee grant as to defendant Mosey. Dippin' Dots v. Mosey, No. 05-1330, slip op. at 3 (Fed. Cir. May 1, 2006). However, our vacatur of fees is entirely derivative of our ruling on the merits, not based on an acceptance of DDI's jurisdictionally barred direct challenge to the fee award. The vacatur therefore extends to all defendants, including Mosey. [7]

DDI argued as a separate ground for reversal of the attorney fee award that a jury verdict indicating zero dollars in antitrust damages cannot support a Clayton Act fee award. Since the judgment of liability is reversed, we do not reach this argument.

The district court indicated that if it were to reduce [32] its Clayton Act fee grant, it would increase the fees under the Patent Act to compensate. With the Clayton Act fee grant vacated, the district court may review the award of fees under the patent statute. On remand, the district court may determine whether and to what extent fees under 35 U.S.C. § 285 are appropriate.

III. CONCLUSION

We affirm the findings of noninfringement, obviousness, and unenforceability due to inequitable conduct. We reverse the district court's denial of JMOL as to the antitrust counterclaim, vacate the grants of attorneys' fees under the Clayton Act, and remand for the district court to consider whether an additional fee award under the patent statute is available.

AFFIRMED-IN-PART, REVERSED-IN-PART, VACATED-IN-PART, AND REMANDED

No costs.

---

[7] Defendants move to strike the portions of DDI's amended brief which argue that the fee awards should be vacated if DDI prevails on the merits. Br. of Mosey et al. at 1; Br. of Frosty Bites Distribution LLC at 1. Their objections are denied.

Silicon Servs. Consortium v. Applied Materials

United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, Austin Division

February 16, 2007, Decided; February 16, 2007, Filed

CAUSE NO. A-06-CA-051-LY

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117588 *

SILICON SERVICES CONSORTIUM, INC., SEMICONDUCTOR SUPPORT SERVICES COMPANY, OEM SURPLUS, INC., PRECISION TECHNICIAN INCORPORATED, SEMICONDUCTOR EQUIPMENT SPECIALISTS, INC., PLAINTIFFS, v. APPLIED MATERIALS, INC., DEFENDANT.

Core Terms

tools, relevant market, manufacturing, amended complaint, antitrust, brand, motion to dismiss, microchip, interchangeable, refurbished, monopolization, buyers, Sherman Act, monopoly, products, allegations, tortious, pleaded Counsel: [*1] For Silicon Services Consortium, Inc., Plaintiff: Barry Kent Bishop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Clark, Thomas, & Winters, Austin, TX USA; David M. Gottfried, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Law Office of David M. Gottfried, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Edward William Allred, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Francisco Guerra, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, 4 Dominion Drive, San Antonio, TX USA; Mikal C. Watts, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Pamela J. Madere, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coats, Rose, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Dwayne K. Goetzel, Kowert, Hood, Munyon, Rankin & Goetzel, PC, Austin, TX USA; Eric B. Meyertons, Meyertons, Hood, Kivlin, Kowert & Goetzel, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Ryan Tyler Beard, Akerman LLP, Austin, TX USA.

For Semiconductor Support Services Company, Plaintiff: Barry Kent Bishop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Clark, Thomas, & Winters, Austin, TX USA; David M. Gottfried, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Law Office of David M. Gottfried, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Dwayne K. Goetzel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kowert, Hood, Munyon, Rankin & Goetzel, PC, Austin, TX USA; Edward William Allred, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Francisco Guerra, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, 4 Dominion [*2] Drive, San Antonio, TX USA; Mikal C. Watts, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Pamela J. Madere, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coats, Rose, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Ryan Tyler Beard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Akerman LLP, Austin, TX USA; Eric B. Meyertons, Meyertons, Hood, Kivlin, Kowert & Goetzel, P.C., Austin, TX USA.

For Oem Surplus, Inc., Plaintiff: Barry Kent Bishop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Clark, Thomas, & Winters, Austin, TX USA; David M. Gottfried, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Law Office of David M. Gottfried, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Dwayne K. Goetzel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kowert, Hood, Munyon, Rankin & Goetzel, PC, Austin, TX USA; Edward William Allred, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Francisco Guerra, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, 4 Dominion Drive, San Antonio, TX USA; Mikal C. Watts, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Pamela J. Madere, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coats, Rose, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Ryan Tyler Beard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Akerman LLP, Austin, TX USA; Eric B. Meyertons, Meyertons, Hood, Kivlin, Kowert & Goetzel, P.C., Austin, TX USA.

Precision Technician Incorporated, Plaintiff, Pro se.

For Precision Technician Incorporated, Plaintiff: Barry Kent Bishop, LEAD ATTORNEY, [*3] Clark, Thomas, & Winters, Austin, TX USA; David M. Gottfried, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Law Office of David M. Gottfried, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Edward William Allred, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Francisco Guerra, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, 4 Dominion Drive, San Antonio, TX USA; Lisa A. Shannon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Shannon Law Firm, Phoenix, AZ USA; Mikal C. Watts, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Pamela J. Madere, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coats, Rose, P.C., Austin, TX USA.

For Semiconductor Equipment Specialists, Inc., Plaintiff: Barry Kent Bishop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Clark, Thomas, & Winters, Austin, TX USA; David M. Gottfried, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Law Office of David M. Gottfried, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Dwayne K. Goetzel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kowert, Hood, Munyon, Rankin & Goetzel, PC, Austin, TX USA; Edward William Allred, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Francisco Guerra, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, 4 Dominion Drive, San Antonio, TX USA; Mikal C. Watts, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Pamela J. Madere, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coats, Rose, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Ryan Tyler Beard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Akerman LLP, Austin, TX [*4] USA; Eric B. Meyertons, Meyertons, Hood, Kivlin, Kowert & Goetzel, P.C., Austin, TX USA.

For Applied Materials Inc., Defendant: Alan D Albright, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bracewell LLP, Austin, TX USA; David M. Gottfried, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Law Office of David M. Gottfried, P.C., Austin, TX USA; David J. Miclean, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson, P.C., Redwood City, CA USA; George A. Nicoud, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, LLP, One Montgomery St. 31st Floor, San Francisco, CA USA; Joel S. Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, One Montgomery St., 31st Floor, San Francisco, CA USA; John F. Horvath, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Robert E. Cooper, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, Los Angeles, CA USA; Thomas L. Halkowski, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson P.C., Wilmington, DE USA; W. Thomas Jacks, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson P.C., Austin, TX USA.

For Applied Materials Inc., Counter Plaintiff: Alan D Albright, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bracewell LLP, Austin, TX USA; David J. Miclean, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson, P.C., Redwood City, CA USA; John F. Horvath, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson, P.C., Austin, TX USA; Michael Chibib, LEAD ATTORNEY, [*5] Bracewell LLP, Austin, TX USA; Patrick S. Richter, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jackson Lewis PC, Austin, TX USA; Thomas L. Halkowski, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson P.C., Wilmington, DE USA; W. Thomas Jacks, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fish & Richardson P.C., Austin, TX USA.

For Semiconductor Support Services Company, Counter Defendant: Dwayne K. Goetzel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kowert, Hood, Munyon, Rankin & Goetzel, PC, Austin, TX USA; Ryan Tyler Beard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Akerman LLP, Austin, TX USA.

For Oem Surplus, Inc., Counter Defendant: Dwayne K. Goetzel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kowert, Hood, Munyon, Rankin & Goetzel, PC, Austin, TX USA; Edward William Allred, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watts Guerra LLP, San Antonio, TX USA; Ryan Tyler Beard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Akerman LLP, Austin, TX USA.

For Precision Technician Incorporated, Counter Defendant: Lisa A. Shannon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Shannon Law Firm, Phoenix, AZ USA.

For Semiconductor Equipment Specialists, Inc., Counter Defendant: Dwayne K. Goetzel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kowert, Hood, Munyon, Rankin & Goetzel, PC, Austin, TX USA; Ryan Tyler Beard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Akerman LLP, Austin, TX USA.

Judges: LEE YEAKEL, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: LEE YEAKEL

Opinion

ORDER

Before the Court are Defendant Applied Materials, Inc.'s [*6] ("Applied Materials's") Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint filed April 7, 2006 (Clerk's Document 25), Plaintiffs' Response to Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint filed May 9, 2006 (Clerk's Document 31), and Defendant's Reply to Plaintiffs' Response to Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint filed May 19, 2006 (Clerk's Document 33). A hearing was held before the Court on the motion on August 22, 2006, after which Applied Materials filed a letter brief regarding recent authority (Clerk's Document 39). Having considered the motion, response, reply, arguments of counsel, supplemental briefing, along with the applicable law in this cause, the Court is of the opinion that Applied Materials's motion to dismiss should be denied.

I. Background

Applied Materials makes and sells equipment that is used to manufacture microchips (commonly referred to in the industry as "tools"). Plaintiffs are five independently owned companies that purchase and recondition used tools for the purpose of selling them to microchip manufacturers. Plaintiffs filed this action against Applied Materials on January 19, 2006. Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint makes claims [*7] for antitrust violations under the Sherman Antitrust Act, in addition to tortious interference with prospective business relationships and tortious interference with existing contracts under state law. Plaintiffs claim that Applied Materials's actions amount to monopolization or attempted monopolization in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. Additionally, they allege that Applied Materials has interfered with Plaintiffs' business relations and existing contracts with microchip manufacturers that previously purchased or agreed to purchase Plaintiffs' refurbished tools.

II. Analysis

In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a court must test the formal sufficiency of the statement of the claim for relief. See Doe v. Hillsboro ISD, 81 F.3d 1395, 1401-02 (5th Cir. 1996). All well-pleaded facts must be accepted as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Spivey v. Robertson, 197 F.3d 772, 774 (5th Cir. 1999); Hillsboro ISD, 81 F.3d at 1401-02 (citing Campbell v. City of San Antonio, 43 F.3d 973, 975 (5th Cir. 1995)). The court should dismiss for failure to state a claim only if the court can determine to a certainty that the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts that would allow relief under the allegations in the complaint. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984). The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail, but whether it is entitled to offer evidence to support [*8] its claims. Hillsboro ISD, 81 F.3d at 1401. The court applies this standard equally to antitrust cases, for which there is no heightened pleading requirement. Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 198 (2nd Cir. 2001).

In determining whether a claimant has pleaded sufficient facts, only specific facts, not mere conclusory allegations or unwarranted deductions, are accepted as true and are considered. See Tuchman v. DSC Commc 'ns Corp., 14 F.3d 1061, 1067 (5th Cir. 1994). The court may consider matters subject to judicial notice, as well as the entire contents of documents referred to or incorporated in the complaint. See Lovelace v. Software Spectrum, Inc., 78 F.3d 1015, 1018 (5th Cir. 1996).

Applied Materials seeks dismissal of Plaintiffs' amended complaint on the ground that it fails to allege sufficient facts to state a valid claim. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Specifically, Applied Materials contends that Plaintiffs are required to plead a relevant market in order to make a claim under the Sherman Antitrust Act (the "Sherman Act"), and that Plaintiffs fail to allege an economically plausible relevant market. See 15 U.S.C. § 2; Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 455, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). Applied Materials argues that the market alleged by Plaintiffs is overbroad, because it consists of a variety if noninterchangeable types of tools and the servicing of those tools. Applied Materials also argues that the proposed relevant market is legally insufficient, because it includes only Applied Materials's [*9] brand of tools. Further, as to Plaintiffs' state law claims, Applied Materials contends that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a legal duty to Plaintiffs, other than a duty established under antitrust law. Because the antitrust-law claim fails, it argues, the state-law claims lack a crucial element and must also be dismissed.

Plaintiffs contend that Applied Materials committed antitrust violations by (1) imposing discriminatory conditions on independent refurbishers, such as quantity limits on parts orders, delays in filling and shipping orders, and other requirements that add extra time and burden; followed by (2) almost complete cessation of Applied Materials's longstanding practice of selling parts to independent refurbishers; and (3) implementing policies that discourage customers from dealing with independent refurbishers, such as requiring Plaintiffs' customers to pay Applied Materials a "software license fee" and refusing to sell microchip manufacturers parts to install on tools purchased from independent refurbishers. Plaintiffs claim that these acts are violations of the Sherman Act, because they constitute monopolization or attempted monopolization of "refurbished/reconfigured [*10] Applied Materials microchip manufacturing tools and associated service." In the alternative, Plaintiffs allege that these acts constitute monopolization or attempted monopolization of "new and refurbished/reconfigured Applied Materials microchip manufacturing tools."

In response to Applied Materials's contention that Plaintiffs' relevant market is too broad, Plaintiffs contend that either of these two relevant markets are sufficient under the Sherman Act, because the microchip manufacturing tools described in their complaint are "reasonably interchangeable." See Apani Southwest, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enters., Inc., 300 F.3d 620, 628 (5th Cir. 2002). Specifically, although the parts at issue may be configured in numerous ways, any given tool in the alleged relevant market is interchangeable from the buyer's perspective, because a buyer can have that tool configured in a number of different ways, starting with a core part and adding other components to make it function a specific way.

Further, Plaintiffs argue, even if they have not alleged that each type of tool made by either Plaintiffs or Applied Materials is interchangeable within the relevant market, their claims will succeed based on a "cluster market" theory of various types of microchip manufacturing tools, fulfilling [*11] the applicable standard for such a market. See JBL Enters. v. Jhirmack Enters., 698 F.2d 1011, 1016-17 (9th Cir. 1983).

Additionally, Plaintiffs respond that they have properly alleged a single-brand market by claiming that microchip manufacturers become committed to using Applied Materials tools once they have previously used Applied Materials tools, because of the cost-prohibitive nature of integrating two different brands into the manufacturing process or switching altogether to another brand of tools. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). Plaintiffs also assert that defining the relevant market affected by Applied Materials's actions is a fact-intensive issue that should not be decided based on the pleadings. See Dimmit Agric., Indus. Inc. v. CPC Int 7 Inc., 679 F.2d 516, 525 (5th Cir. 1982).

As to their state-law claims, Plaintiffs recognize that they are dependent upon this Court's determination that Plaintiffs' antitrust claims survive the motion to dismiss.

A. Sherman Act Claims

Section two of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolies, attempts to form monopolies, and combinations and conspiracies to do so. 15 U.S.C. § 2. Attempted monopolization requires proof: (1) the defendant engaged in predatory or exclusionary conduct, (2) with specific intent to monopolize the relevant market, and (3) there was a dangerous probability the defendant would achieve monopoly power. Bell Atl. Corp. v. AT&T Corp., 339 F.3d 294, 302 (5th Cir. 2003). For [*12] a claim of monopoly, Plaintiffs must establish: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Alcatel USA, Inc. v. DGI Techs, Inc., 166 F.3d 772, 781 (5th Cir. 1999). For both claims, proof of the relevant market is an essential element. Spectrum Sports, Inc., 506 U.S. at 459. The relevant market is the field in which meaningful competition is said to exist. United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 449, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1964). It consists of products that are "interchangeable in use" and for which there is a "cross-elasticity of demand" between the product and substitutes for it. Apani Southwest, Inc., 300 F.3d at 626. An antitrust claim will be dismissed because the relevant legal market is legally insufficient if "the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiffs favor." Id at 628.

A single brand's products may constitute a relevant market for purposes of an antitrust violation, but one brand does not necessarily constitute a relevant market [*13] if substitutes are available. Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 481 n. 30. Because the relevant market is determined from the perspective of the buyer, the Court determines if a single brand's products constitute a relevant market by considering if services or parts for the single brand's equipment is interchangeable with the equipment for other brands. Id. Such a relevant market has been upheld where the potential buyers for the product are "locked in" to purchase of a single brand because changing from one brand to another involves prohibitive cost. Id.

The amended complaint alleges that it is unfeasible for buyers of new or refurbished microchip manufacturing tools to change from one brand of tools to another because the cost of such a change would be prohibitive, and further specifies that microchip manufacturers must use only one brand's tools in order for the manufacturing processes to function together "seamlessly." Plaintiffs allege that Applied Materials's service and parts are not interchangeable with the services and parts offered by other manufacturers. See id. at 482.

Construing all factual allegations in the amended complaint in favor of Plaintiffs, this Court holds that the amended complaint specifically alleges a circumstance [*14] in which manufacturers are "locked in" to Applied Materials's product, and whereby Applied Materials's single brand constitutes a relevant market. See id. This Court disagrees with Applied Materials that any language in the amended complaint contradicts this theory, and finds that the validity of the theory will be tested through discovery performed by the parties, rather than through this Court's consideration of dismissal for failure to state a claim.

Plaintiffs have properly alleged their claims with sufficient reference to the standard of "reasonable interchangeability" between the tools offered to buyers by Applied Materials compared to those offered by Plaintiffs. See Apani Southwest, Inc., 300 F.3d at 628. Although the amended complaint does not allege that all tools made by either Applied Materials or Plaintiffs in this market are reasonably interchangeable, such an allegation is not necessary to survive a motion to dismiss. See e.g. United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 595, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 (1957) (upholding relevant market consisting of automotive finishes and fabrics); General Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 805-06 (8th Cir. 1987) (affirming relevant market of "pet supplies," consisting of non-interchangeable goods, as "pragmatic and realistic description of the level at which [antitrust defendant's products and plaintiff's products] [*15] were in competition"). Furthermore, this Court holds that Plaintiffs have properly pleaded a "cluster market" that survives a motion to dismiss. See JBL Enters., 698 F.2d at 1016-17. The Court disagrees that, because Plaintiffs have described each tool as unique, customer demand is necessarily directed at individual tools rather than a cluster of tools. Whether buyers tend to purchase a package of tools rather than individual tools is precisely the type of factual dispute that the parties will develop and resolve as the case progresses. Plaintiffs are entitled to discovery to determine such "commercial realities" of microchip manufacturing. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 572, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966) ("We see no barrier to combining in a single market a number of different products or services where that combination reflects commercial realities"). Plaintiffs' description of a market in which tools are combined with the associated refurbishment services also passes facial muster, for these may constitute a "cluster market" in which buyers seek purchase of both tools and the associated services together.

The Court considers all of Applied Materials's arguments in light of the general rule that definition of the relevant market in antitrust cases is a fact-intensive determination. [*16] Todd, 275 F.3d at 198. Applied Materials's arguments are fact-based and are insufficient to support a motion to dismiss. The Court therefore finds that Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded attempted monopoly and monopoly under Section Two of the Sherman Act and will deny Applied Materials's motion to dismiss.

B. State Law Claims

The elements of a cause of action for tortious interference with an existing contract are "(1) the existence of a contract subject to interference, (2) the act of interference was willful and intentional, (3) such intentional act was a proximate cause of plaintiffs damage and (4) actual damage or loss occurred." Johnson v. Hospital Corp. of Am., 95 F.3d at 394 (citing Victoria Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 811 S.W.2d 931, 939 (Tex. 1991)). Applied Materials does not contest that Plaintiffs have stated a claim under these elements; rather, it argues that the face of the amended complaint establishes the affirmative defense of justification, and that the claim therefore should be dismissed.

The Court declines to find that the amended complaint establishes that Applied Materials acted in accordance with its "own legal rights or a good-faith claim to a colorable legal right, even though that claim ultimately proves to be mistaken." See Texas Beef Cattle Co. v. Green, 921 S.W.2d 203, 211 (Tex. 1996). As Plaintiffs have sufficiently pleaded a claim for a Sherman Act [*17] violation, the Court cannot find that the face of the complaint establishes that Applied Materials acted as a matter of right.

To state a claim for tortious interference with prospective contract or business relationships, Plaintiffs must prove (1) reasonable probability that the parties would have entered into a contractual relationship, (2) an independently tortious or wrongful act by the defendant performed by the defendant with a conscious desire to prevent the relationship from occurring or with knowledge that the interference was certain or substantially likely to occur as a result of its conduct, (3) the defendant lacked privilege or justification to do the act, and (4) actual harm or damage resulted from the defendant's interference." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Sturges, 52 S.W.3d 711, 726 (Tex. 2001); Bradford v. Vento, 48 S.W.3d 749, 757 (Tex. 2001). Applied Materials disputes only whether Plaintiffs have stated a claim as to "independently tortious or wrongful acts" of Applied Materials. Applying the relevant standard to Plaintiffs state law claims and having found that Plaintiffs have stated a claim as to antitrust violations, this Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently pleaded to overcome Applied Materials's Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

III. Conclusion

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that Applied [*18] Materials's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint (Clerk's Document 25) is DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the parties are to submit to the Court a Proposed Agreed Scheduling Order, in accordance with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(f), that follows the form scheduling order of this Court located on the website for the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas (www.txwd.uscourts.gov), the "Forms" tab, "Austin Division," on or before March 16, 2007. The proposed order is to include proposed dates, not general provisions tied to the ultimate date of trial or the date of entry of a scheduling order. The proposed order is not to include, however, a date for the final pretrial conference or for trial of the matter.

SIGNED this 16th day of February, 2007.

/s/ Lee Yeakel

LEE YEAKEL

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Dram Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

February 20, 2007, Decided; February 20, 2007, Filed

No. M 02-1486 PJH

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107598 *

In re DYNAMIC RANDOM ACCESS MEMORY (DRAM) ANTITRUST LITIGATION. This Document Relates to: All Direct Purchaser Actions conspiracy, prices, cost-plus, plaintiffs', purchaser, communications, output, antitrust, contracts, summary judgment, defendants', collusive, alleged conspiracy, direct evidence, emails, pre-existing, circumstantial evidence, competitors, summary judgment motion, manufacturers, participated, overcharge, exhibits, seal, market share, auction, pass-on, price-fixing, Declaration, hearsay

Core Terms

Counsel: [*1] For Charles B. Renfrew, Special Master: Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA. For Internet Integration Inc., on its own behalf and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Cadio R. Zirpoli, LEAD ATTORNEY, Saveri & Saveri, Inc., San Francisco, CA; Fred Taylor Isquith, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman&Herz LLP, New York, NY; Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman Tabacco, San Francisco, CA; Merrick Scott Rayle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lovell Stewart Halebian LLP, Pacific Grove, CA; Adam C Briggs, PRO HAC VICE, Godfrey & Kahn SC, Madison, WI; Allan Steyer, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Anthony J. Gaughan, Godfrey & Kahn, S.C., Madison, WI; Anthony D. Shapiro, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Christopher Lovell, Lovell Stewart Halebian LLP, New York, NY; Donald Scott Macrae, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Eugene A. Spector, Spector Roseman & Kodroff, PC, Philadelphia, PA; Francis A. Bottini, Jr., Bottini & Bottini, Inc., La Jolla, CA; Francis M. Gregorek, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, Symphony Towers, San Diego, CA; Garrett [*2] D. Blanchfield, Jr., Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN; Geoffrey Conrad Rushing, Saveri & Saveri Inc., San Francisco, CA; Guido Saveri, Saveri & Saveri, Inc., San Francisco, CA; Jeffrey J. Corrigan, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Joel Cary Meredith, Meredith & Associates, Philadelphia, PA; John A. Macoretta, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadephia, PA; Kevin J. O'Connor, Godfrey & Kahn, S.C., Madison, WI; Linda S. Schmidt, One East Main Street, Madison, WI; Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf Blanchfiel, St. Paul, MN; Paul J. Stancil, Milwaukee, WI; Richard Alexander Saveri, Saveri & Saveri, Inc., San Francisco, CA; Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Steven J. Greenfogel, Lite DePalma Greenburg, LLC, Philadelphia, PA; Steven A. Kanner, Freed Kanner London & Millen LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Susan Gilah Kupfer, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For William Breck Seiniger, Jr., Plaintiff: Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., Berman Tabacco, San Francisco, CA; Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Craig Ripley Spiegel, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Eugene A. Spector, [*3] Spector Roseman & Kodroff, PC, Philadelphia, PA; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN; Jeffrey J. Corrigan, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Joel Cary Meredith, Meredith & Associates, Philadelphia, PA; John A. Macoretta, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadephia, PA; Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf Blanchfiel, St. Paul, MN; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID; Steven J.

Greenfogel, Lite DePalma Greenburg, LLC, Philadelphia, PA; Steven A. Kanner, Freed Kanner London & Millen LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Susan Gilah Kupfer, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For C3 Information Technology LLC, Midland Solutions Group Inc., Plaintiffs: Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman Tabacco, San Francisco, CA; Steven A. Kanner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Freed Kanner London & Millen LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steven J. Greenfogel, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Eugene A. Spector, Spector Roseman & Kodroff, PC, Philadelphia, PA; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN; Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadelphia, [*4] PA; Joel Cary Meredith, Meredith & Associates, Philadelphia, PA; Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf Blanchfiel, St. Paul, MN; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID; Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Susan Gilah Kupfer, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For Continental Promotion Group Inc., Plaintiff: Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman Tabacco, San Francisco, CA; Mark Reinhardt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Reinhardt Wendorf Blanchfiel, St. Paul, MN; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steven J. Greenfogel, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Eugene A. Spector, Spector Roseman & Kodroff, PC, Philadelphia, PA; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN; Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Joel Cary Meredith, Meredith & Associates, Philadelphia, PA; Mark A. Wendorf, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID; Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Steven A. Kanner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Freed Kanner London & Millen LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Susan [*5] Gilah Kupfer, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For Web Ideals LLC, Plaintiff: Eugene A. Spector, LEAD ATTORNEY, Spector Roseman & Kodroff, PC, Philadelphia, PA; Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman Tabacco, San Francisco, CA; Anthony D. Shapiro, Steven J. Greenfogel, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN; Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Joel Cary Meredith, Meredith & Associates, Philadelphia, PA; Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf Blanchfiel, St. Paul, MN; Philip Howard Gordon, Gordon Law Offices Chartered, Boise, ID; Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Steven A. Kanner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Freed Kanner London & Millen LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Susan Gilah Kupfer, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For 5207 Inc., Plaintiff: Daniel W. Krasner, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, New York, NY; Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berman Tabacco, San Francisco, CA; Laurence D. King, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kaplan Fox & Kilsheimer LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mary Jane Edelstein, LEAD [*6] ATTORNEY, Wolf Heldenstein Alder Freeman & Herz, Chicago, IL; Richard Michael Hagstrom, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard L. Voelbel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Thomas Joseph O'Reardon, II, LEAD ATTORNEY, Blood Hurst O'Reardon LLP, San Diego, CA; Anthony D. Shapiro, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Daniel E. Gustafson, PRO HAC VICE, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, Minneapolis, MN; Emilio Eugene Varanini, IV, State Attorney General's Office, San Francisco, CA; Eugene A. Spector, Spector Roseman & Kodroff, PC, Philadelphia, PA; Francis A. Bottini, Jr., Bottini & Bottini, Inc., La Jolla, CA; Garrett D. Blanchfield, Jr., Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, St. Paul, MN; Gary Laurence Specks, Kaplan Fox & Kilsheimer LLP, New York, NY; Jason Allen Zweig, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, New York, NY; Jeffrey J. Corrigan, John A. Macoretta, SPECTOR ROSEMAN & KODROFF, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Joel Cary Meredith, Meredith & Associates, Philadelphia, PA; Lori Sambol Brody, Browne George Ross LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt Wendorf Blanchfiel, St. Paul, MN; Renae Diane Steiner, Heins Mills & Olson, P.L.C., [*7] Minneapolis, MN.

For 5207 Inc., Plaintiff: Richard Jo Kilsheimer, Kaplan Fox And Kilsheimer LLP, New York, NY; Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Steven J. Greenfogel, Lite DePalma Greenburg, LLC, Philadelphia, PA; Steven A. Kanner, Freed Kanner London & Millen LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Susan Gilah Kupfer, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For JEM Electronics Distributors Inc, Plaintiff: Bonny E. Sweeney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For PC Doctor Inc., Plaintiff: Alfred Glenn Yates, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Office of Alfred G. Yates Jr, P.C, Pittsburgh, PA; Stephen E. Connolly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Faruqi & Faruqi, LLP, Jenkintown, PA.

For Network Business Solutions, Plaintiff: Susan Gilah Kupfer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Berkeley, CA; Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr., Berman Tabacco, San Francisco, CA.

For Advanced Technology Distributors Inc., Plaintiff: Fred A. Silva, LEAD ATTORNEY, Damrell Nelson Schrimp Pallios, Pacher & Silva, Modesto, CA; Roger M. Schrimp, LEAD ATTORNEY, Clinton Paul Walker, Damrell, Nelson, Schrimp, Pallios, Pache, Modesto, CA; Anthony D. Shapiro, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Bonny [*8] E. Sweeney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson Simon & Warshaw, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Gene J. Stonebarger, Stonebarger Law, APC, Folsom, CA; Kathy Lee Monday, Damrell, Nelson, Schrimp, Pallios, Pacher & Silva, Modesto, CA; Steven Noel Williams, Joseph Saveri Law Firm, San Francisco, CA.

For Michael Wilkser, Plaintiff: Willem F. Jonckheer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Schubert Jonckheer & Kolbe LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bernard Persky, Robins Kaplan LLP, New York, NY; Juden Justice Reed, Schubert & Reed LLP, San Francisco, CA; Marvin Alan Miller, Miller Law LLC, Chicago, IL.

For Dolphin Consulting Inc., Plaintiff: Kevin Bruce Love, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hanzman Criden & Love, P.A., South Miami, FL.

For Gregory M. Nespole, Plaintiff: Mary Jane Edelstein Fait, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chicago, IL; Fred Taylor Isquith, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman&Herz LLP, New York, NY.

For Onshore Inc., Plaintiff: Francis A. Bottini, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Bottini & Bottini, Inc., La Jolla, CA; Mary Jane Edelstein Fait, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chicago, IL; Francis M. Gregorek, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, San Diego, CA; Fred Taylor Isquith, Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman&Herz LLP, New York, NY. [*9]

For Daniel E. Clement, Plaintiff: Ryan M. Hagan, Alexander Hawes & Audet, LLP, San Jose, CA.

For Dawn Thompson, Plaintiff: Kenneth George Gilman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gilman and Pastor, LLP, Boston, MA.

For Bernard Weisburgh on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Dennis James Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Peter John McDougall, Johnson & Perkinson, South Burlington, VT; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA; Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mike Kinkade, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; C. Dewey Branstetter, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Sherrard Roe Voigt & Harbison, Nashville, TN; Dennis Stewart, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, San Diego, CA; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA; James G. Stranch, III, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, PLLC, Nashville, TN; James Gerard Stranch, IV, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, Nashville, TN; Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Lance Jennings, Plaintiff: C. Dewey Branstetter, [*10] Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Sherrard Roe Voigt & Harbison, Nashville, TN; James Gerard Stranch, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, Nashville, TN; James G. Stranch, III, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, PLLC, Nashville, TN.

For Jeff Lindsey, on behalf of themselves and all, others similarly situated, Plaintiff: C. Dewey Branstetter, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Sherrard Roe Voigt & Harbison, Nashville, TN; James G. Stranch, III, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, PLLC, Nashville, TN; James Gerard Stranch, IV, Branstetter Stranch & Jennings, Nashville, TN.

For Don Greene, on behalf of himself and all others, similarly situated in Tennessee, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Douglas S. Johnston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Barrett, Johnston & Parsley, Nashville, TN; Dennis Stewart, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, San Diego, CA; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA; Jeffrey A. Bartos, Guerrieri EdmondClayman & Bartos PC, Washington, DC; Wyatt B. Durrette, Jr., DurretteBradshaw, Richmond, VA.

For Chiengthong Kongkham, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, [*11] San Francisco, CA; Brooke Elizabeth West, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gergosian & Gralewski, San Diego, CA; Edward M. Gergosian, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gergosian & Gralewski LLP, San Diego, CA; James F. Wyatt, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wyatt & Blake LLP, Charlotte, NC; Robert J. Gralewski, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Kirby McInerney LLP, San Diego, CA; Ian Otto, Timothy D. Battin, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.

For John G. Elias, on behalf of himself and all other, similarly situated in Tennessee, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Brooke Elizabeth West, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gergosian & Gralewski, San Diego, CA; Edward M. Gergosian, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gergosian & Gralewski LLP, San Diego, CA; Matthew Patrick Maniscalco, LEAD ATTORNEY, Straus & Boies LLP, Davis, CA; David Boies, Boies Schiller and Flexner, Armonk, NY; Dennis Stewart, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, San Diego, CA; Hal Hardin, Nashville, TN; Ian Otto, Timothy D. Battin, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA; Michael N. Widener, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Signal Mountain, TN; Robert J. Gralewski, Jr., Kirby McInerney LLP, San Diego, CA; Van Bunch, Bonnett Fairbourn, et al., Phoenix, [*12] AZ.

For Petro Computer Systems, Inc., Plaintiff: Christine Pedigo Bartholomew, LEAD ATTORNEY, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, San Francisco, CA; Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; John Dmitry Bogdanov, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Adam C. Belsky, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; Alan R. Plutzik, Bramson Plutzik Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Alexander Michael Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA; Allan Steyer, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Anna C. Conley, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Chad M. McManamy, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA; Christopher Le, Straus & Boies, LLP, Fairfax, VA; Christopher L. Lebsock, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel S. Glaser, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Daniel Jay Mogin, MoginRubin LLP, San Diego, CA; Douglas Graham Thompson, Jr., Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, DC; Francis Onofrei Scarpulla, [*13] Law Offices of Francis O. Scarpulla, San Francisco, CA; Jenelle Welling, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Joseph Mario Patane, Lauren Clare Capurro, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Laura Ann Guillen, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Jean Frisella, FRISELLA LAW APC, San Diego, CA; Lynnette D. Chen, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mark Punzalan, Chan Punzalan LLP, San Mateo, CA; Michael Paul Lehmann, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mila F Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, DC; Monique Van Yzerlooy Alonso, Messing Adam and Jasmine LLP, San Francisco, CA; Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA; Richard Michael Hagstrom, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX; Richard L. Voelbel, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel [*14] Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Robert S. Green, Green & Noblin, P.C., Larkspur, CA; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA; Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy LLP, Eureka, CA.

For Gary Petersen, Plaintiff: Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; Henry A. Cirillo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Smith Dollar PC, Santa Rosa, CA; Kimberly Ann Kralowec, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kralowec Law, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Robert C. Schubert, LEAD ATTORNEY, Schubert Jonckheer & Kolbe LLP, San Francisco, CA; Thomas Patrick Dove, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Furth Firm LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam C. Belsky, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; Alan R. Plutzik, Bramson Plutzik Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Alexander Michael Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA; Anna C. Conley, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Chad M. McManamy, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA; Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; [*15] Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Jenelle Welling, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Douglas Graham Thompson, Jr., Mila F Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, DC; Francis Onofrei Scarpulla, Law Offices of Francis O. Scarpulla, San Francisco, CA; John Dmitry Bogdanov, Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Joseph Mario Patane, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Jean Frisella, FRISELLA LAW APC, San Diego, CA; Lynnette D. Chen, Janssen Malloy

Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Paul Lehmann, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Monique Van Yzerlooy Alonso, Messing Adam and Jasmine LLP, San Francisco, CA; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA; Richard Michael Hagstrom, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX; Richard L. Voelbel, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Robert S. Green, Green & Noblin, P.C., Larkspur, CA; Scott [*16] Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA; William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy LLP, Eureka, CA.

For Pamela Uglem, Dale Dickman, Michael Juetten, Plaintiffs: Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam C. Belsky, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; Alan R. Plutzik, Bramson Plutzik Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Alexander Michael Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA; Anna C. Conley, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Chad M. McManamy, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA; Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Jenelle Welling, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Daniel Jay Mogin, MoginRubin LLP, San Diego, CA;Douglas Graham Thompson, Jr., Mila F Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, DC; Francis Onofrei Scarpulla, Law Offices of Francis O. Scarpulla, San Francisco, CA; John Dmitry Bogdanov, LEAD ATTORNEY, Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, [*17] P.C., San Francisco, CA; Joseph Mario Patane, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Jean Frisella, FRISELLA LAW APC, San Diego, CA; Lynnette D. Chen, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Paul Lehmann, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA; Richard Michael Hagstrom, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX; Richard L. Voelbel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Robert S. Green, Green & Noblin, P.C., Larkspur, CA; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA; William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy LLP, Eureka, CA.

For Blumenthal & Associates, Heather Delaney, Plaintiffs: Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam C. Belsky, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; Alan R. Plutzik, Bramson [*18] Plutzik Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Alexander Michael Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA; Anna C. Conley, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Chad M. McManamy, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA; Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Jenelle Welling, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Daniel Jay Mogin, MoginRubin LLP, San Diego, CA;Douglas Graham Thompson, Jr., Mila F Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, DC; Francis Onofrei Scarpulla, Law Offices of Francis O. Scarpulla, San Francisco, CA; John Dmitry Bogdanov, LEAD ATTORNEY, Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Joseph Mario Patane, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Jean Frisella, FRISELLA LAW APC, San Diego, CA; Lynnette D. Chen, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Paul Lehmann, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA; Richard Michael Hagstrom, [*19] LEAD ATTORNEY, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX; Richard L. Voelbel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Robert S. Green, Green & Noblin, P.C., Larkspur, CA; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA; William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy LLP, Eureka, CA.

For Ben Stewart, Plaintiff: Adam C. Belsky, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; Alan R. Plutzik, Bramson Plutzik Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Alexander Michael Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA; Anna C. Conley, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Chad M. McManamy, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA; Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel S. Glaser, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Daniel Jay Mogin, MoginRubin LLP, San Diego, CA; Douglas Graham Thompson, Jr., Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, [*20] DC.

Francis Onofrei Scarpulla, Law Offices of Francis O. Scarpulla, San Francisco, CA; John Dmitry Bogdanov, LEAD ATTORNEY, Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Joseph Mario Patane, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Jean Frisella, FRISELLA LAW APC, San Diego, CA; Lynnette D. Chen, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Paul Lehmann, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA; Richard Michael Hagstrom, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX; Richard L. Voelbel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Robert S. Green, Green & Noblin, P.C., Larkspur, CA; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA; William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy LLP, Eureka, CA.

For Melissa Barron, Johnson & Jennings, Plaintiffs: Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher [*21] Thomas Micheletti, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam C. Belsky, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; Alan R. Plutzik, Bramson Plutzik Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Alexander Michael Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA; Anna C. Conley, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Chad M. McManamy, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA; Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Jenelle Welling, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Daniel Jay Mogin, MoginRubin LLP, San Diego, CA;Douglas Graham Thompson, Jr., Mila F Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, DC; Francis Onofrei Scarpulla, Law Offices of Francis O. Scarpulla, San Francisco, CA; John Dmitry Bogdanov, LEAD ATTORNEY, Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Joseph Mario Patane, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Jean Frisella, FRISELLA LAW APC, San Diego, CA; Lynnette D. Chen, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, [*22] San Francisco, CA; Michael Paul Lehmann, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA; Richard Michael Hagstrom, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX; Richard L. Voelbel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Robert S. Green, Green & Noblin, P.C., Larkspur, CA; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore & Ames, Los Angeles, CA; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA; William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy LLP, Eureka, CA.

For G.C.A. Strategies, Inc., Plaintiff: Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam C. Belsky, Terry Gross, Gross & Belsky P.C., San Francisco, CA; Alan R. Plutzik, Bramson Plutzik Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Alexander Michael Schack, Law Offices of Alexander M. Schack, San Diego, CA; Anna C. Conley, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Chad M. McManamy, The Mogin Law Firm, PC, San Diego, CA; Daniel Edward Birkhaeuser, Jenelle Welling, Bramson, [*23] Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel S. Glaser, Peter J. McNulty, McNulty Law Firm, Bel Air, CA; Daniel Jay Mogin, MoginRubin LLP, San Diego, CA;Douglas Graham Thompson, Jr., Mila F Bartos, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, Washington, DC; Francis Onofrei Scarpulla, Law Offices of Francis O. Scarpulla, San Francisco, CA; John Dmitry Bogdanov, LEAD ATTORNEY, Josef Deen Cooper, Tracy R. Kirkham, Cooper & Kirkham, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Joseph Mario Patane, Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lisa Jean Frisella, FRISELLA LAW APC, San Diego, CA; Lynnette D. Chen, Janssen Malloy Needham Morrison & Reinholtsen, LLP, Eureka, CA; Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Paul Lehmann, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Ralph B. Kalfayan, Krause Kalfayan Benink & Slavens, San Diego, CA; Richard Michael Hagstrom, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hellmuth & Johnson, PLLC, Edina, MN; Richard G. Urquhart, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Dallas, TX; Richard L. Voelbel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN; Robert S. Green, Green & Noblin, P.C., Larkspur, CA; Scott Ames, Steven J. Serratore, Serratore [*24] & Ames, Los Angeles, CA; Shannon P. Cereghino, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, San Francisco, CA; William Timothy Needham, Janssen Malloy LLP, Eureka, CA.

For Leonard Kaplan, Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; William F. Patterson, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Forman Rossabi Black P.A., Greensboro, NC; Dennis Stewart, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, San Diego, CA; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA; Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Microprocessor Designs, Inc., Plaintiff: Allan Steyer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel R. Karon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Karon LLC, Cleveland, OH; Dennis Stewart, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, San Diego, CA; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA; Lisa Marie Black, Steyer Lowenthal Boodrookas Alvarez & Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mary Gilmore Kirkpatrick, Lisman Webster Kirkpatrick & Leckerling, P.C., Burlington, VT.

For Centerprise International, Ltd., Plaintiff: Kevin Peter Roddy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilentz Goldman & Spitzer, PA, Woodbridge, NJ; Gary Kostow, Media, PA; Henry Huntington Rossbacher, [*25] The Rossbacher Firm, Los Angeles, CA; Ira Neil Richards, PRO HAC VICE, Sscnader Harrison Segal & Lewis LLP, Philadelphia, PA; James Edward Miller, Shepherd Finkelman Miller & Shah, LLP, Chester, CT; James Craig Shah, Media, PA; Natalie Finkelman Bennett, Shepherd, Finkelman, Miller & Shah, LLP, Philadelphia, PA; Scott Rhead Shepherd, Shepherd, Finkelman, Miller Shah, LLP, Media, PA.

For Geraldine Brown, Plaintiff: Charlene Haught Johnson, Jeremiah F. Hallisey, John St. John, Hallisey and Johnson, San Francisco, CA.

For Franza Giffen, Linda Harrington, Mary McDevitt, Plaintiffs: John St. John, Hallisey & Johnson, San Francisco, CA.

For Lawrence Alder, Ashley Pritchett, Anna Underwood, Brighid Flaherty, Kimberly Moore, Sandra Sardinha, Jeromi Quade, Edward Battitori, Andrew James Maclenna, John McKinnon, Vincent Fagan, Donna Siler, Jacqueline Bendoraitif, Derek Patterson, John Brushia, Prokofiew, Julie J. Vargas, Ingrid Gomez, Charles Draughn, Kevin O. Denver, David Meyer, Bethanne Hasson, Monica Browne, Laura Stewart, Kimberly Shea Dowden, GeorgeValton Jones, Donna McCann, Joseph Batwinus, Mark B. Richards, Frank Pasvola, Plaintiffs: Robert J. Bonsignore, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bonsignore Trial [*26] Lawyers, PLLC, Las Vegas, NV.

For John McKinnon individually and on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Todd Hill individually and on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs: D. Michael Noonan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Dover, NH; Robert J. Bonsignore, Bonsignore Trial Lawyers, PLLC, Las Vegas, NV; Steven M. Gordon, Concord, NH.

For Shelly Smith on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: D. Michael Noonan, LEAD ATTORNEY, LEAD ATTORNEY, Dover, NH; William Shaheen, Shaheen & Gordon, Dover, NH.

For Donna McCann on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: D. Michael Noonan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Dover, NH.

For Thomas K. Maher on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated in North Carolina, Plaintif: Adam Stein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ferguson Stein Wallas Adkins Gresham & Sumter, PA, Chapel Hill, NC; Jeffrey A. Bartos, Guerrieri Edmond Clayman & Bartos PC, Washington, DC; Wyatt B. Durrette, Jr., DurretteBradshaw, Richmond, VA.

For Michael Solomon, Notice of Motion for Administrative Relief to Determine That the Instant Case Is A Related Case, Plaintiff: Lingel Hart Winters, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Lingel H. Winters, [*27] San Francisco, CA.

For Corabell B. Arps, Plaintiff: Brett D Baber, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lanham & Blackwell & Baber P.A., Bangor, ME; Samuel W. Lanham, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Lanham & Blackwell, Bangor, ME; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.

For Gayle Helwani, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated and the public, Plaintiff: Lingel Hart Winters, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Lingel H. Winters, San Francisco, CA.

For Maritza Mass-Carrero, Plaintiff: Arturo Luciano-Delgado, LEAD ATTORNEY, Arturo Luciano Law Office, San Juan, PR; David Boies, III, Straus & Boies, LLP, Fairfax, VA; Ian Otto, Timothy D. Battin, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA. Kenneth G. Walsh, Kirby McInerney LLP, New York, NY.

For Sandra Bishop, On Behalf of Herself and All Others Similarly Situated in Mississippi, Plaintiff: LeRoy Davis Percy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Tollison Law Firm P.A., Oxford, MS.

For Jason Neeley, on behalf of themselves and all others similary situated in the State of Utah, Aaron Stobbe, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated in the State of Utah, Plaintiffs: Allan O. Walsh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeremy C. Sink, McKay Burton & Thurman, Salt Lake City, UT.

For Stuart Schupler, On [*28] behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Scott Alan George, LEAD ATTORNEY, Seeger Weiss LLP, Philadelphia, PA; Marc Howard Edelson, Edelson & Associates, LLC, Doylestown, PA.

For Honeywell International, Inc., Plaintiff: James M. Lockhart, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lindquist & Vennum, P.L.L.P., Minneapolis, MN; James J. Ficenec, Newmeyer & Dillion LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Mark Alan Jacobson, Cozen O'Connor, Minneapolis, MN.

For State of California et al, Plaintiff: Emilio Eugene Varanini, IV, State Attorney General's Office, San Francisco, CA; Paul Andrew Moore, LEAD ATTORNEY, Attorney at Law, San Francisco, CA; Charles M. Kagay, Spiegel Liao & Kagay, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Kathleen E. Foote, Office of the Attorney General, San Francisco, Laura Ann Guillen, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For State of Oregon, Plaintiff: Tim David Nord, LEAD ATTORNEY, Oregon Department of Justice, Financial Fraud/Consumer Protection, Salem, OR.

For State of New York, Plaintiff: Jay L. Himes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Labaton Sucharow LLP, New York, NY; Richard Leonard Schwartz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of NY Atty Gen'l, New York, NY; Craig C. Corbitt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel & Mason LLP, [*29] San Francisco, CA; Jeremy Raphael Kasha, Office of NY Attorney General, New York, NY; Laura Ann Guillen, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For State of Alaska, Plaintiff: Clyde E Sniffen, Jr, LEAD ATTORNEY, State of Alaska, Department of Law, Anchorage, AK.

For State of Michigan, Dram Claims Liquidation Trust, Plaintiffs: D. J. Pascoe, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michigan Department of Attorney General, Lansing, MI.

For Mega Comm Technologies, Inc., Plaintiff: Stephen Thomas Erb, Stephen Thomas Erb, APC, San Diego, CA.

For Alan Preis, Plaintiff: Anthony D. Shapiro, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Guido Saveri, Richard Alexander Saveri, Saveri & Saveri, Inc., San Francisco, CA.

For Oracle America, Inc., Plaintiff: David Daniel Cross, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Suzanne E. Rode, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chemical Valley Pension Fund of West Virginia, Charter Township of Clinton Police & Fire Retirement System, Intervenor Plas: Brian P. Murray, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, New York, NY; Christopher Martin Wood, John K. Grant, Robbins Geller Rudman & Dowd LLP, San Francisco, CA; Marc Schiefer, TILP PLLC, New York, NY; Michael J Vanoverbeke, [*30] Vanoverbeke Michaud & Timmony, P.C., Detroit, MI; Thomas C. Michaud, Vanoverbeke Michaud and Timmony, P.C., Detroit, MI.

For Kimball Electronics Tampa, Inc. FKA Reptron Electronics, Inc., Intervenor Pla: Lance Burrow, LEAD ATTORNEY, Burrow $ Shimane, San Jose, CA; Ryan M Hurley, Indianapolis, IN.

For Micron Technology Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC Charlotte, NC; Joel Steven Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Rebecca Justice Lazarus, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, San Francisco, CA; Christine Hart Clay, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Christopher James Flack, Arnold & Porter LLP, Washington, DC; Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC Charlotte, NC; Jonathan L Stern, Arnold Porter LLP, Washington, DC; George

Charles Nierlich, III, Michael Cecchini, Rachel S. Brass, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Ronald Charles Redcay, Arnold & Porter LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los [*31] Angeles, CA; William J. Baer, Arnold and Porter Kaye Scholer LLP, Washington, DC; Wilson D. Mudge, Arnold and Porter LLP, Washington, DC.

For Micron Semiconductor Products Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Joel Steven Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Rebecca Justice Lazarus, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, San Francisco, CA; Christine Hart Clay, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Christopher James Flack, Arnold & Porter LLP, Washington, DC; George Charles Nierlich, III, Michael Cecchini, Rachel S. Brass, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jonathan L Stern, Arnold Porter LLP, Washington, DC; Joshua David Hess, Dechert LLP, San Francisco, CA; Ronald Charles Redcay, Arnold & Porter LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA; William J. Baer, Arnold and Porter Kaye Scholer LLP, Washington, DC; Wilson D. Mudge, Arnold and Porter LLP, Washington, DC.

For Infineon Technologies AG, Defendant: Christopher [*32] J. Heck, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kirkland & Ellis, Los Angeles, CA; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Jim D. Cooley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Aton Arbisser, Tanja K. Shipman, Kaye Scholer LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Joshua Stewart Stambaugh, Costell & Cornelius Law Corporation, Santa Monica, CA; Julian Brew, Kaye Scholler LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Karen Walker, Tefft W. Smith, Kirkland & Ellis LLP, Washington, DC; Sarretta McDonough, Kirkland & Ellis LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Infineon Technologies North America Corp., Defendant: Alexander Fraser MacKinnon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Christopher J. Heck, Eileen Barish, Kirkland & Ellis, Los Angeles, CA; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Aton Arbisser, Tanja K. Shipman, Kaye Scholer LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey Scott Davidson, Sarretta McDonough, Kirkland & Ellis LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Joshua Stewart Stambaugh, Costell & Cornelius Law Corporation, Santa Monica, CA; Julian Brew, Kaye Scholler LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Karen Walker, Tefft W. Smith, [*33] Kirkland & Ellis LLP, Washington, DC; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Hynix Semiconductor Inc., Defendant: Albert J. Boro, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, San Francisco, CA; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Jane Yang Chang, Kenneth Ryan O'Rourke, Michael Frederick Tubach, Peter Bruce Nemerovski, Timothy Michael Martin, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Steven H. Bergman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Richards Brandt Miller Nelson, Salt Lake City, UT; Cecil S. Chung, Terrence A. Callan, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel Lee Alexander, Los Angeles, CA; Paul R. Griffin, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Peter Manfred Bransten, Glaser Weil Fink Howard Avchen & Shapiro LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hynix Semiconductor Inc., Defendant: Timothy Michael Martin, LEAD ATTORNEY, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Cecil S. Chung, Terrence A. Callan, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel Lee Alexander, Los Angeles, CA; Paul R. Griffin, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Peter Manfred Bransten, Glaser Weil Fink Howard Avchen & Shapiro LLP, [*34] San Francisco, CA; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.

For Hynix Semiconductor America Inc., Defendant: Albert J. Boro, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, San Francisco, CA; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Jane Yang Chang, Peter Bruce Nemerovski, Timothy Michael Martin, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Kenneth Ryan O'Rourke, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael Frederick Tubach, LEAD ATTORNEY, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, San Francisco, CA; Steven H. Bergman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Richards Brandt Miller Nelson, Salt Lake City, UT; Cecil S. Chung, Terrence A. Callan, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel Lee Alexander, Los Angeles, CA; Ian T Simmons, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Washington, DC; Paul R. Griffin, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Peter Manfred Bransten, Glaser Weil Fink Howard Avchen & Shapiro LLP, San Francisco, CA; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.

For Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Mona Solouki, [*35] LEAD ATTORNEY, James Landon McGinnis, Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; David A. Donohoe, Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld LLP, New York, NY; David Sohn, SOHN LEGAL GROUP, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Gary L. Halling, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jonathan M. Jacobson, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Stephen Albert Mansfield, Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Semiconductor Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; David A. Donohoe, Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld LLP, New York, NY; David Sohn, SOHN LEGAL GROUP, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Gary L. Halling, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; James Landon McGinnis, Michael W. Scarborough, Mona Solouki, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jonathan M. Jacobson, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Stephen [*36] Albert Mansfield, Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Nanya Technology Corporation USA, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Robert E. Freitas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Freitas Angell & Weinberg LLP, Redwood Shores, CA; Cynthia Wickstrom Zuniga; E. Anne Hawkins, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Howard Mark Ullman, Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Na'il Benjamin, Benjamin Law Group, P.C., Hayward, CA; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Elpida Memory USA Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Gabriel Neil Rubin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jackson Lewis P.C., San Francisco, CA; James Glenn Kreissman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Simpson Thacher and Bartlett, Palo Alto, CA; Robert Bernard Pringle, LEAD ATTORNEY, [*37] Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Harrison J. Frahn, IV, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, Palo Alto, CA; Jonathan Edward Swartz, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Kevin J. Arquit, Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, New York, NY; Peter Bach-y-Rita, Chapman and Cutler LLP, San Francisco, CA; Peter F. Burns, Thelen Reid & Priest LLP, San Francisco, CA; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Mosel Vitelic Corporation USA, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; David C. Brownstein, Farmer Brownstein Jaeger & Goldstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.

For Winbond Electronics, Corporation America, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Steven H. Morrissett, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner LLP, Palo Alto, CA; William [*38] S Farmer, Farmer Brownstein Jaeger & Goldstein LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For NEC Electronics America Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Paul R. Griffin, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Robert Bernard Pringle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jonathan Edward Swartz, Laura Ann Guillen, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.

For Crucial Technology Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.

For NEC Electronics Corporation, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Paul R. Griffin, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Robert Bernard Pringle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT.

For Mosel Vitelic Inc., Defendant; R. Dale Grimes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew J. Sinback, Bass Berry & Sims PLC, Nashville, TN; David C. Brownstein, Farmer Brownstein [*39] Jaeger & Goldstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; David R. Esquivel, Bass Berry & Sims, Nashville, TN; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Elpida Memory Inc., Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; James Glenn Kreissman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Simpson Thacher and Bartlett, Palo Alto, CA; R. Dale Grimes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew J. Sinback, Bass Berry & Sims PLC, Nashville, TN; Robert Bernard Pringle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; David R. Esquivel, Bass Berry & Sims, Nashville, TN; Harrison J. Frahn, IV, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, Palo Alto, CA; Jonathan Edward Swartz, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Kevin J. Arquit, Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, New York, NY; Paul R. Griffin, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Peter Bach-y-Rita, Chapman and Cutler LLP, San Francisco, CA; Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Nanya Technology Corporation, Defendant: Catherine Yunshan Lui, LEAD ATTORNEY, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, [*40] San Francisco, CA; Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; R. Dale Grimes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew J. Sinback, Bass Berry & Sims PLC, Nashville, TN; Robert E. Freitas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Freitas Angell & Weinberg LLP, Redwood Shores, CA; Cynthia Wickstrom Zuniga; David R. Esquivel, Bass Berry & Sims, Nashville, TN; E. Anne Hawkins, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA. Howard Mark Ullman, Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA; Na'il Benjamin, Benjamin Law Group, P.C., Hayward, CA; Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Winbond Electronics Corporation, Defendant: Debra L. Bouffard, LEAD ATTORNEY, R. Jeffrey Behm, Sheehey Furlong & Behm PC, Burlington, VT; David R. Esquivel, Bass Berry & Sims, Nashville, TN; Steven H. Morrissett, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner LLP, Palo Alto, CA; William S Farmer, Farmer Brownstein Jaeger & Goldstein LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mosel Vitelic Corporation, Defendant: David C. Brownstein, Farmer Brownstein [*41] Jaeger & Goldstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; Timothy Michael Martin, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Hitachi, Ltd., Defendant: Craig P. Seebald, LEAD ATTORNEY, Vinson & Elkins LLP, Washington, DC; Matthew J. Jacobs, LEAD ATTORNEY, Vinson & Elkins LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Electronics America, Inc., Defendant: Jonathan M. Jacobson, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY.

For NEC Corporation, Defendant: Jonathan Edward Swartz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Paul R. Griffin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Electronics, Inc., Ltd., Defendant: Jonathan M. Jacobson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY David Sohn, SOHN LEGAL GROUP, P.C., San Francisco, CA; Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC.

For Hynix Semi., Inc., Defendant: G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; Ian T Simmons, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Washington, DC; Kenneth Ryan O'Rourke, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Steven H. Bergman Richards Brandt Miller Nelson, Wells Fargo Center, Salt Lake City, UT.

For Winbond Electronics [*42] Corporation, Defendant: G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; William S Farmer, Farmer Brownstein Jaeger & Goldstein LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Winbound Electronics Corporation America, Defendant: G. Michael Barnhill, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jim D. Cooley, Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice PLLC, Charlotte, NC; William S Farmer, Farmer Brownstein Jaeger & Goldstein LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Micron Technology Puerto Rico Inc., Defendant: Edward W. Hill-Tollinche, LEAD ATTORNEY, Humberto Guzman-Rodriguez, San Juan, PR.

For Mortgage Ramp, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated in the State of Utah, Defendant: Allan O. Walsh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeremy C. Sink, McKay Burton & Thurman, Salt Lake City, UT.

For Toshiba America Electronic Components, Inc., Toshiba Corporation, Defendants: Belinda S Lee, Brendan Andrew McShane, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Latham & Watkins LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chip-Tech, Ltd., Respondent: Joseph Michael Barton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Joseph M. Barton, Ross, CA.

For Sun Microsystems, Inc., Movant: Christine Elaine Cwiertny, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA; Jerome A. Murphy, Kathryn D. Kirmayer, [*43] Kent A. Gardiner, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC.

For Unisys Corporation, JACO Electronics, Inc, Edge Electronics, Inc., Movants: Christine Elaine Cwiertny, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA.

For All American Semiconductor Inc., Movant: Christine Elaine Cwiertny, Crowell & Moring LLP, Irvine, CA; Scott N. Wagner, Bilzin Sumberg Baena Price & Axelrod LLP, Miami, FL.

For Oak Point Partners, Inc., Claimant: Janice A. Alwin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Palatine, IL.

For Erwin Bruder, Richline Technical Services, Objectors: Edward Frank Siegel, Attorney at Law, Cleveland, OH.

For Mike Richline, doing business as Richline Technical Services, Objector: Christopher Andress Bandas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bandas Law Firm, P.C., Corpus Christi, TX; Frank Christian Liuzzi, Liuzzi, Murphy & Solomon, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Thomson Inc., Objector: Richard A. Huser, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thomson Inc., Indianapolis, IN.

For Sean Hull, Objector: Timothy Ricardo Hanigan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lang Hanigan & Carvalho, LLP, Woodland Hills, CA.

For Bryan Marcus, Barbara Cochran, James Glase, Objectors: John Jacob Pentz, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Sudbury, MA.

For Shannon Cashion, Objector: Steve A Miller, LEAD ATTORNEY, Steve A. Miller, [*44] P.C., Denver, CO.

For norman d palmer, Objector: Joseph Darrell Palmer, Carlsbad, CA.

For David C. Marlow, Objector: W. Allen McDonald, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lacy,Price and Wagner, Knoxville, TN.

For Norman D. Palmer, Estate of Fern Cook, Objectors: Joseph Darrell Palmer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carlsbad, CA.

For Mitsubishi Electric and Electronics USA, Inc., Mitsubushi Electric Corporation, Miscellaneouss: Michael T. Brody, Jenner & Block LLP, Chicago, IL.

For IBM Corporation, Miscellaneous: David Eiseman, IV, Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, San Francisco, CA.

For Hewlett-Packard Company, Miscellaneous: Kenneth M. Vorrasi, Robert A. Skitol, Rodney Michael Hudson, Tracie C. Militano, Drinker Biddle & Reath LLP, Washington, DC.

For Dell, Inc., Miscellaneous: Daniel Tadeusz Dobrygowski, Peter Nels Larson, Jessica Lynn Repa, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For United States of America, Intervenor: Niall Edmund Lynch, LEAD ATTORNEY, Latham & Watkins LLP, San Francisco, CA; Charles Philip Reichmann, Law Offices of Charles Reichman, Kensington, CA; May Lee Heye, United States Department of Justice, San Francisco, CA; Nathanael M. Cousins, United States Attorney's Office, Northern District of California, [*45] San Jose, CA.

Byron Farrington, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Jonathan Lee Riches, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Patrick J. Simpson, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Daniel Anthony Weymouth, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Andre Cowley, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Richard Galietti, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Jermod Holmes, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Justin Laube, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Jeffrey Pierre, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Maurice Shelly, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Isong Akpan, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Mario Alvarado, Intervenor, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

Judges: PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN PART AND DENYING SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN PART

Defendants' motions for summary judgment came on for hearing on January 10, 2007 before this court. Plaintiffs, the direct purchaser class ("plaintiffs"), appeared through their class counsel, Guido Saveri, Anthony Shapiro, Fred T. Isquith, R. Alexander Saveri, Frank A. Bottini, Bruce L. Simon, George W. Sampson, Geoffrey C. Rushing, and Clinton P. Walker. Defendants appeared through their counsel, Paul R. Griffin, Robert B. [*46] Pringle, Robert E. Freitas, Na'il Benjamin, Howard Ullman, Joel S. Sanders, Ronald C. Redcay, William M. Goodman, Stephen V. Bomse, Harrison J. Frahn, William S. Farmer, and Steven H. Morrissett. Having read all the papers submitted and carefully considered the relevant legal authority, the court hereby GRANTS the motions for summary judgment in part and DENIES the motions for summary judgment in part, for the reasons stated at the hearing, and as follows.

BACKGROUND

The instant action is part of a larger multidistrict litigation proceeding, and arises under section 1 of the Sherman Act.

A. Background Facts

Dynamic random access memory ("DRAM") is an electronic memory microchip that is used to store digital information and provide high-speed storage and retrieval of data. DRAM is commonly used in a wide assortment of electronic devices, including personal computers, printers, digital cameras, and wireless telephones. It is also the most common kind of random access memory chip sold in both new computers and computer upgrades in the United States. DRAM is primarily sold in two forms, component and module, both of which come in different densities, speeds, and frequencies. The defendants[1] in the instant [*47] action are all engaged in the manufacture and/or sale of DRAM on the worldwide market.

Collectively, they are the leading manufacturers of DRAM, and control the majority of the DRAM market. Beginning in May 2002, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice ("DOJ") began investigating the existence of price-fixing in the DRAM industry — specifically, the existence of a conspiracy to restrict supply and raise prices for DRAM among the largest makers and sellers of DRAM globally. Several defendants were targeted by the DOJ as part of this larger investigation. As a result of the investigation, four defendants — Infineon, Hynix, Samsung, and Elpida — have pled guilty to participation in a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of federal antitrust law. In addition, several of their employees and agents have also pled guilty to criminal antitrust violations, and have been sentenced accordingly.

B. The Instant Action

On June 21, 2002, on the heels of the DOJ's antitrust investigation, plaintiffs filed a class action lawsuit in the Southern District of New York, alleging federal antitrust violations by defendants. Plaintiffs are a class comprised of all persons and/or entities who purchased [*48] DRAM in the United States market directly from defendants during the period April 1, 1999 through June 30, 2002 (the "class period"). The original action, along with numerous subsequently-filed actions, was later transferred to this court for consolidated pre-trial proceedings, pursuant to the multidistrict litigation ("MDL") procedures set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1407. After the cases were transferred and consolidated, plaintiffs filed a consolidated class action complaint on October 1, 2003. The most recent and operative complaint — the Third Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint — was filed on June 30, 2005.

In their complaint, plaintiffs generally allege that defendants engaged in a global conspiracy to "fix, raise, maintain and stabilize the prices of, and/or allocate the market for, DRAM they sold in the United States" during the class period, and that plaintiffs were injured by this activity when they were forced to pay artificially inflated prices for DRAM. See, e.g.,Third Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint ("Complaint"), ¶¶ 2, 55, 61-65, 73-74. As part of that conspiracy, plaintiffs allege that the defendants participated in meetings and conversations to discuss the price of DRAM; [*49] agreed to manipulate prices and supply so as to boost sagging DRAM sales; issued price announcements and price quotations in accordance with the agreements reached by defendants; and sold DRAM to customers in the United States at non-competitive prices. See id. at ¶ 64.

Now post-discovery, plaintiffs present these allegations in more concrete form. In sum, they assert that defendants effectuated the alleged price-fixing conspiracy in two ways: first, plaintiffs allege that defendants coordinated an industry-wide reduction in DRAM production, or else created the appearance of such a reduction, in order create an artificial DRAM shortage that would ultimately drive up the price of DRAM on the US market. See, e.g., Pl. Opp. Br. re Nanya MSJ at 2:23-3:8. Second, plaintiffs contend that, in connection with creating a supply shortage that would have the effect of increasing the market price for DRAM, the defendants coordinated with each other — through frequent high-level communications and meetings — to raise and keep the DRAM prices artificially high to all DRAM purchasers. See id. at 3:9-16. All these actions, assert plaintiffs, resulted in harm to DRAM purchasers, and render defendants [*50] liable to those purchasers under the Sherman Act.

C. The Instant Motions

---

[1] Defendants are: Micron Technology, Inc., and Micron Semiconductor Products, Inc. (collectively "Micron"); Infineon Technologies AG, and Infineon Technologies North America Corp. (collectively "Infineon"); Hynix Semiconductor, Inc., and Hynix Semiconductor America, Inc. (collectively "Hynix"); Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd., and Samsung Semiconductor, Inc. (collectively "Samsung"); Mosel-Vitelic Corporation, and Mosel-Vitelic Corporation (USA)(collectively "Mosel-Vitelic"); Nanya Technology Corporation, and Nanya Technology Corporation USA ("NTC" and "NTC USA," respectively); Winbond Electronics Corporation, and Winbond Electronics Corporation America (collectively "Winbond"); Elpida Memory, Inc., and Elpida Memory (USA) Inc. (collectively "Elpida"); and NEC Electronics America, Inc. ("NEC"). To date, however, seven of these nine defendant groupings have entered into settlement agreements with plaintiffs. Accordingly, only two defendant entities remain, and proceed before the court here on the instant motions for summary judgment — Nanya, and Mosel-Vitelic.

The remaining defendants in this action now move for summary judgment. There are four motions in total, as follows: (1) Nanya Technology Corporation's ("NTC") motion to determine liability under the Sherman Act; (2) Nanya Technology Corporation USA's ("NTC USA") companion motion to determine liability under the Sherman Act; (3) defendants' motion for partial summary judgment based on pre-existing cost-plus contract purchases; and (4) defendants' motion for partial summary judgment based on DRAM purchases from April 1, 2001 to November 30, 2001. In addition, the parties have both filed motions to seal certain documents.

DISCUSSION

A. Summary Judgment Standard

Generally speaking, normal summary judgment standards apply. That is to say, summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The court must view the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party [*51] and give it the benefit of all reasonable inferences to be drawn from those facts. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

Where, as here, concerted price-fixing is alleged, the plaintiffs bear the ultimate burden of presenting sufficient evidence to prove that an agreement to fix prices existed. See, e.g., In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1093 (9th Cir. 1999)(noting that price-fixing is a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act). In order for them to survive defendants' motion for summary judgment, therefore, plaintiffs must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendants entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused respondents to suffer a cognizable injury. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 585-86. Plaintiffs can establish a genuine issue of material fact by producing either direct evidence that defendants participated in an agreement to fix prices, or circumstantial evidence from which a reasonable fact finder could conclude the same. See, e.g., Movie 1 & 2 v. United Artists Commc'ns, 909 F.2d 1245, 1251-52 (9th Cir. 1990); United States v. Gen. Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 142-43, 86 S. Ct. 1321, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1966).

With respect to proof by way of circumstantial evidence in section 1 cases, special rules apply. In Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., the Supreme Court noted that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a [section 1] case...". See 475 U.S. at 588. In addressing plaintiff's burden in proving that an issue [*52] of material fact exists on the conspiracy question, the court stated, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy...". See id. In sum, to survive a motion for summary judgment, "a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of [section] 1 must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently ...." Id.

The Ninth Circuit has embraced Matsushita and has outlined a two-part test to be applied whenever a plaintiff rests its case entirely on circumstantial evidence. First, the defendant can rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice. Second, the burden then "shifts back to the plaintiff to provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendant was not engaging in permissible competitive behavior." See, e.g., In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d at 1094.

These standards apply here, to the extent that plaintiffs seek to defeat summary judgment as to section 1 liability on the basis of circumstantial evidence, whether in whole or in part. The court now turns to the four summary judgment motions [*53] before it, and addresses each in turn.

B. NTC's Motion for Summary Judgment

NTC attacks plaintiffs' ability to prove that NTC — as distinguished from its subsidiary, NTC USA — is liable for participation in any agreement to fix prices, reduce output, or engage in any other prohibited activity under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Focusing on its own conduct, NTC argues that plaintiffs cannot prove either (1) that NTC itself is guilty of any unlawful activity, or (2) that NTC is guilty as a co-conspirator, by virtue of its' participation in other defendants' unlawful activities. In response, plaintiffs marshal what they claim is both direct and circumstantial evidence of NTC's participation in the alleged section 1 conspiracy.

Regardless of the parties' differing characterizations of their arguments — i.e., conduct v. nature of evidentiary proof — the fundamental issue raised by the parties is the same: whether there is sufficient direct and/or circumstantial evidence to create a triable issue of fact as to whether NTC participated in the alleged conspiracy to "fix", via output reduction and/or price manipulation, the market for DRAM. In analyzing this issue, the court must consider: (1) the preliminary issue [*54] whether plaintiffs may attempt to create a triable issue as to NTC's participation in the overarching conspiracy vis-a-vis NTC's relationship with its wholly owned subsidiary, NTC USA; (2) the direct evidence of NTC's participation in the alleged conspiracy; and (3) the circumstantial evidence of NTC's participation in the same.

1. NTC's Vicarious Liability Based on Relationship with NTC USA

NTC claims that it has a separate legal existence from its wholly owned subsidiary, NTC USA, and that NTC has not engaged in any direct sales of DRAM within the United States since 1998, the year after NTC USA was incorporated. See Declaration of Kenneth M. Hurley ("Hurley Decl."), ¶ 2. In view of this distinction, NTC asserts that plaintiffs cannot offer evidence of NTC USA's conduct in attempting to create a material dispute with respect to NTC's participation in any unlawful activity. See NTC MSJ Op. Br. at 4:18-7:14. Specifically, NTC argues: (1) that under principles of basic corporate law, a parent corporation is not liable for the acts of its subsidiary; (2) that plaintiffs have not and cannot establish liability through an alter ego theory; (3) that vicarious liability also may not be established [*55] through the "single entity" doctrine applicable to antitrust cases; and (4) that, even assuming that NTC USA participated in any unlawful acts, there is no evidence that NTC knowingly participated in those unlawful acts. Plaintiffs challenge these contentions, asserting that the evidence of NTC's individual participation in the alleged conspiracy is plentiful, but even if it weren't, NTC could still be found vicariously liable based on NTC USA's conduct, since NTC is the alter ego and marketing conduit for NTC USA.

First, NTC is generally correct that corporate law prohibits a parent corporation from being held liable on the basis of its subsidiary's actions. See, e.g., U.S. v. Bestfoods, 524 U.S. 51, 118 S. Ct. 1876, 141 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1998)("It is a general principle of corporate law deeply 'ingrained in our economic and legal systems' that a parent corporation (so-called because of control through ownership of another corporation's stock) is not liable for the acts of its subsidiaries."). However, a parent corporation may be held liable for the acts of its subsidiary "where stock ownership has been resorted to, not for the purpose of participating in the affairs of a corporation in the normal and usual manner, but for the purpose of controlling a subsidiary [*56] company so that it may be used as a mere agency or instrumentality of the owning company." See id. at 62-63. Accordingly, NTC may be held vicariously liable for NTC USA's actions, but only if plaintiffs can establish that NTC USA is a mere 'agency or instrumentality' of NTC's.

This brings the court to NTC's second argument, for plaintiffs have chosen to rely on the alter-ego doctrine as an independent theory that would justify the imposition of vicarious liability here. In order to prove that the alter-ego theory applies, plaintiffs must show that there is "such unity of interest and ownership that the separate personalities [of the two entities] no longer exist." See Doe v. Unocal Corp., 248 F.3d 915 (9th Cir. 2001). An alter ego or agency relationship is specifically proven up by facts that demonstrate "parental control of the subsidiary's internal affairs or daily operations." See Doe, 248 F.3d at 927 (alter ego test also satisfied where the record indicates that the parent dictates "[e]very facet [of the subsidiary's] business - from broad policy decisions to routine matters of day-to-day operation [.]").

Here, plaintiffs attempt to satisfy the alter-ego test by showing that NTC had full operational control over NTC USA and owned 100% of its stock; that NTC manufactured [*57] all the DRAM sold by NTC USA; that certain of NTC USA's officers reported directly to NTC; that two of the three directors on NTC USA's board of directors were from NTC; that NTC had ultimate authority over, and made, all of NTC USA's pricing decisions; and that NTC was merely NTC USA's "marketing conduit" during the alleged time period. See Opp. Br. at 32:23-33:7.

The undisputed evidence that plaintiffs rely on, however, discloses only that NTC USA's president, Kenneth Hurley, reported directly to NTC officers; that NTC USA's executives had orders not to deviate from pricing policies set by NTC; and that NTC in fact set the pricing policies that drove NTC USA's DRAM prices. See Declaration of George Sampson in Support of Oppositions ("Sampson Decl."), Exs. 104 at 22:13-16, 23:17-19, 24:18-27:24; 105 at 14; see also Plaintiffs' Slide Presentation in Opp. to NTC MSJ at 36. Even combining this evidence with NTC's undisputed evidence that NTC USA is, in fact, wholly owned by NTC, this evidence is insufficient to prove that NTC USA is NTC's alter ego. See, e.g., Hurley Decl., ¶ 1. This is because the evidence as a whole does not sufficiently speak to whether NTC actually controls the day to day operations and internal affairs of NTC USA, even [*58] if NTC does control decisions regarding pricing, nor does it demonstrate that NTC dictates "every facet of NTC USA's business." In the absence of evidence establishing these factors, the alter ego theory is unavailable to plaintiffs as a means of holding NTC vicariously liable for NTC USA's actions.[2]

Nor can plaintiffs demonstrate NTC's liability on the basis of NTC USA's conduct through application of the single entity doctrine. That doctrine, announced in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984), holds that parent and subsidiary corporations are to be considered a single collective entity for purposes of conspiracy liability under section 1 of the Sherman Act, and as such, they are incapable of conspiring together under the Act. The doctrine, however, is inapplicable here. Although it deals with the question whether a parent and subsidiary corporation may be charged with conspiring with each other, it says nothing about whether a parent and subsidiary may, collectively or individually, be charged with conspiring with other unaffiliated members of an alleged conspiracy. That is the issue before this court. As such, the doctrine cannot be used to invoke NTC's liability with respect to the global conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs. [*59]

Finally, NTC argues that no liability can possibly exist via NTC USA, because there are no ties connecting NTC to any unlawful activity by NTC USA, to the extent NTC USA engaged in such activity. NTC USA acted independently, posits NTC, and without NTC's participation. In making this argument, NTC preemptively targets the deposition testimony of Steven Hsu, an NTC USA employee, arguing that his testimony — which confirms NTC's influence over NTC USA's pricing policies — cannot be used to demonstrate NTC's participation in NTC USA's allegedly unlawful activity. Plaintiffs, for their part, fail to rebut NTC's argument in this regard, and they rely on Hsu's testimony for proof of alter ego liability only. In the absence of argument by plaintiffs, the court finds, as NTC urges, that Mr. Hsu's testimony standing alone does not form the basis for vicarious liability.

In conclusion, the court finds that plaintiffs have not created a triable issue of material fact with respect to NTC's vicarious liability for the overarching conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs, on the basis of its relationship with NTC USA. NTC's participation in the alleged overarching conspiracy must be independently proven, [*60] either through direct or circumstantial evidence.

2. Direct Evidence of Conspiracy

NTC asserts that there is a general absence of any evidence proving that it (a) participated in a price-fixing agreement with other defendants; (b) reduced its DRAM output in order to drive up prices for DRAM; or (c) engaged in any exchange of price information with any competitor that resulted in an increase or stabilization of market prices.[3] See NTC Op. Br. at 8-13. Plaintiffs, however, assert that there is sufficient direct evidence of NTC's

---

[2] Plaintiffs also drop a footnote in their opposition brief, and further argued at the hearing on this matter, that NTC "could also be held vicariously liable for the acts of [NTC USA] under an agency theory," as distinguished from an alter ego theory. See Opp. Br. at 33 fn. 27. Plaintiffs cited no evidence in support of this assertion, however, relying only on the bald assumption that "without [NTC USA], the parent company [NTC] would have to perform" the marketing and sales functions that Nanya USA engages in. Such conclusory argument, with no supporting evidence, is unpersuasive, and the court declines plaintiffs' invitation to find an agency theory of liability applicable to NTC on the record before it.

[3] NTC also makes the somewhat baffling argument that it does not stand accused of price fixing. Plaintiffs' complaint explicitly charges that defendant — among others — entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to unreasonably restrain trade, the substantial terms of which were to fix and maintain the price for DRAM. See Third Consolidated Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 61, 63. It is difficult to conclude from this that NTC does not stand "accused" of price fixing, for it is clear from the complaint that this participation in the alleged conspiracy to raise a genuine issue of material fact on the issue. See In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d at 1093 (where a plaintiff produces direct evidence that a defendant entered into an illegal price-fixing agreement, summary judgment will be denied).

Direct evidence in a section 1 conspiracy case "must be evidence that is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted." See id. at 1094, citing In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 118 (3d Cir. 1999). Here, plaintiffs contend that they have direct evidence that NTC participated in secret price-fixing meetings with its competitors to discuss DRAM pricing and to coordinate output reduction, and furthermore, that NTC did in fact reduce its DRAM [*61] production.

a. emails

Plaintiffs claim that secret meetings among the defendants, including NTC, took place in June and July 2001. For the June meeting(s), plaintiffs first rely on email communications sent in June 2001 by defendant Micron's Managing Director of International Sales, Linda Turner, in which Ms. Turner reports that "the Taiwanese DRAM dudes are pow-wowing next week on how to set a floor" regarding DRAM price, and notes that "Sammy/Infineon/Hynix have had pricing discussions recently." See Sampson Decl., Ex. 14, 15. With respect to the alleged July 2001 meeting(s), plaintiffs point to a July 2001 bulletin to which all DRAM manufacturers subscribe (forwarded via email), which reported that there was "a secret meeting hosted by Taiwanese DRAM companies in Taipei in early July to coordinate a cut in output or at least try to hold the line on prices." See id. at Ex. 86. Although neither source specifically refers to either NTC or NTC USA, plaintiffs contend by way of a separate article identifying NTC as a "local DRAM die manufacturer" that NTC qualifies as one of the "Taiwanese" entities referred to in the above exhibits. See id. at Ex. 85.

This evidence is neither direct nor [*62] persuasive. Preliminarily, the court notes that NTC has objected to each of the above exhibits submitted by plaintiffs, on grounds that each constitutes impermissible hearsay. NTC is correct. Plaintiffs are seeking to introduce out of court statements contained in individual emails and industry news bulletins, noting the existence of so-called secret meetings between Taiwanese DRAM manufacturers, as proof that the meetings actually took place. This constitutes hearsay under Federal Rule of Evidence 801(c). Plaintiffs attempt to overcome the objections by invoking the co-conspirator provision to Rule 801, which refuses to qualify as hearsay the statements made by co-conspirators of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. See Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E); see also Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 175-81, 107 S. Ct. 2775, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1987). However, as Bourjaily and the Ninth Circuit's subsequent interpretation of that case in United States v. Silverman make clear, in order for such statements to be admissible, there must be evidence beyond the statements in question, that demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence the underlying conspiracy and NTC's connection to it. Silverman, 861 F.2d 571, 576 (9th Cir. 1988); see also United States v. Tamez, 941 F.2d 770 (9th Cir. 1991). Here, plaintiffs do not attempt to argue, and the court does not attempt to scour the record for, the existence of any [*63] such independent evidence that would satisfy the Silverman and Tamez standards. As such, the hearsay objections lodged by NTC to the above exhibits are sustained. Furthermore, to the extent that plaintiffs would attempt to meet their burden in establishing the co-conspirator definition under FRE 801(d)(2)(E) by pointing to other sources of evidence that may itself be subject to hearsay objections, the court would find such attempts similarly unpersuasive.

Moreover, even if the court did not sustain NTC's objections herein, the evidence would still not prove persuasive as direct evidence of NTC's participation in secret meetings to fix DRAM prices. Ms. Turner, for example, was a Micron employee, not an NTC employee, thereby diminishing the directness of the evidence as far as NTC is concerned. But even if her emails were considered as direct evidence of NTC's own actions, the emails are simply not dispositive of NTC's participation in any agreement or conspiracy. Ms. Turner states in one of her emails only that "the Taiwanese DRAM dudes" will be meeting. Sampson Decl., Ex. 15. She never references NTC specifically, but only defendants Samsung, Infineon and Hynix. And in her second email, while Ms. Turner [*64] states that she has "heard rumors from one of the Taiwan DRAM makers that there is a meeting scheduled with all of the Taiwan is precisely what plaintiffs accuse. To the extent, however, that NTC really means simply that plaintiffs have not successfully proven the actual existence of any agreement to actually fix prices, this argument is dealt with in the body of this section.

---

DRAM makers over the next week to discuss raising their pricing," there is again no mention of NTC specifically, just an allegation of a "rumor" told to Ms. Turner by an unnamed "Taiwan DRAM maker." See Sampson Decl., Ex. 14.

In short, this evidence is not explicit, and would require that the court make certain inferences unsupported by the record to conclude that NTC participated in any of the alleged secret meetings, or for that matter in the conspiracy. Accordingly, the court concludes that the emails are not direct evidence sufficient to defeat NTC's motion for summary judgment.

b. Mr. Kau's testimony

Plaintiffs also rely on the deposition testimony of NTC Vice President Charles Kau, as direct evidence that NTC participated in meetings and discussions with its Taiwanese rivals regarding a DRAM production cut. According to plaintiffs, Mr. Kau testified that there was a local conference that took place around 2001, at which he recalls discussing a DRAM production cut with NTC's competitors. See Sampson Decl., Ex. 88 at 107:14-24.

Here, too, however, plaintiffs' [*65] reliance on this testimony as direct evidence of NTC's participation in secret meetings to raise DRAM prices or cut production, is misplaced. For as NTC points out, plaintiffs have completely — and disingenuously — omitted Mr. Kau's follow-up explanation with respect to the very statement upon which plaintiffs rely. To wit, when asked during follow-up deposition questioning about the 2001 conference at which the production cut was discussed, Mr. Kau clarified that, while a discussion was in fact raised about reducing DRAM output, the discussion was also immediately halted when someone present during the discussion noted that cutting production would be illegal. See Benjamin Reply Decl., Ex. A at 160-161. Mr. Kau then went on to testify that, at any rate, NTC did not reduce production following that discussion. Id.

In view of the complete testimony offered by Mr. Kau on the subject, Mr. Kau's statements cannot be considered direct evidence of NTC's involvement in meetings to fix DRAM prices or to cut production of DRAM in order to raise DRAM prices.

c. industry news and articles

Finally, plaintiffs rely on a series of three news articles written in 2001, in which Mr. Kau was quoted, and [*66] that refer to discussions about joint efforts by defendants to cut DRAM production. See Opp. Br. at 10:20-21. First, on August 14, 2001, an EBN article entitled "Taiwan DRAM makers may cut output" was published, in which Mr. Kau is quoted as stating that NTC is "willing to cooperate" in a production cut. See Sampson Decl., Ex. 22. Second, on October 1, 2001, a Financial Times article entitled "Nanya raises the prospect of cuts in DRAM output," quoted Mr. Kau as saying that NTC was "willing to cut production voluntarily, once we have got the right signal." See id. at Ex. 23. Finally, in a separate Financial Times article also dated October 1, 2001, Mr. Kau purportedly stated that "Taiwanese strategies include ... exploring the possibility of joint production cuts...", and he furthermore joked that the DRAM industry might one day be called "D-Pec," like the "Global oil cartel OPEC." See id. at Ex. 24; see also Ex. 88 at 125:6-127:23.

Preliminarily, as with the emails discussed above, NTC has raised hearsay objections to the three articles in question. Plaintiffs seek to use statements in each article attributed to Mr. Kau, to the effect that NTC was willing to participate in joint efforts [*67] to cut DRAM production. In the court's view, plaintiffs offer Mr. Kau's statements for the truth of the matter asserted therein, and as such, the statements uttered by Mr. Kau are inadmissible hearsay. Furthermore, none of the hearsay exceptions relied on by plaintiffs — i.e., co-conspirator or party admission exceptions — apply. The co-conspirator exception fails for the same reasons already enunciated above. As for the party admission exception, while it is true that the statements at issue were made by Mr. Kau in his representative capacity for NTC, the statements as relayed in the newspaper articles simply do not bear sufficient indicia of reliability such that the party admission exception is warranted. The court finds newspaper articles, even the direct quotes contained within them, to be inherently unreliable. Moreover, there is proof of such unreliability here. As Mr. Kau testified, his comments were translated into English from the Chinese language, and the content of the statements as written does not accurately reflect the content of Mr. Kau's statements to the articles' authors. See Benjamin Reply Decl., Ex. A at 112-15. Accordingly, NTC's objections to the articles on [*68] hearsay grounds, are sustained.

Even if Mr. Kau's statements in the newspaper articles in question were to be considered substantively, the court would nonetheless find that they do not constitute direct evidence of NTC's participation in a conspiracy to cut DRAM production or fix DRAM prices. It is true enough that the statements attributed to Mr. Kau in the articles deal with the concept of cutting DRAM production. See Sampson Decl., Exs. 22-24. However, Mr. Kau's statements are not statements that explicitly concede the existence of any actual agreement to limit production of DRAM, nor are they statements that would lead to such a conclusion without need of any inferences. For example, in the first EBN article, Mr. Kau said only that everyone was feeling the need to cut production, but that "as of how to engage in the cut is an issue that needs to be discussed." See id. at Ex. 22. This statement expressly leaves open the question of whether NTC would choose to limit production, and if so, how it would do so. Similarly, in the first Financial Times article, Mr. Kau is referenced as stating that DRAM rivals had approached NTC about coordinating output cuts, but he is also referenced [*69] as stating that any moves would have to be led by other producers, that "leading by example was more important than attempts to coordinate, and that [NTC] would be 'willing to cut production voluntarily, once we have got the right signal.'" See id. at Ex. 23. This, too, expressly leaves open the possibility of a voluntary production cut independent of any joint attempt to coordinate production cuts.[4] Finally, with respect to the last article Financial Times article cited by plaintiffs, while Mr. Kau may have engaged in the unwise strategy of joking about the future existence of a "D-Pec", there is simply nothing in the article that indicates NTC's participation in an actual agreement or conspiracy to limit production or raise prices.

In sum, as with the emails and the evidence of Mr. Kau's deposition testimony, none of the news articles or Mr. Kau's statements therein constitute direct evidence of NTC's participation in the conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs. Accordingly, the court finds that plaintiffs have not presented any direct evidence that successfully defeats NTC's motion for summary judgment.

3. Circumstantial Evidence of Conspiracy

The above conclusion brings the court [*70] to the central issue raised by the parties — whether there is sufficient circumstantial evidence of NTC's participation in an agreement to fix the ultimate price of DRAM, whether via participation in a coordinated output reduction or discussions regarding pricing. Keeping in mind the Matsushita standards enunciated above, the critical question in evaluating this issue is "whether all the evidence considered as a whole can reasonably support the inference that [NTC] conspired with the admitted conspirators to fix prices." See In re Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1097.

Plaintiffs generally point to three categories of evidence that they claim supports an "inference" of collusive conduct sufficient to preclude summary judgment: (a) economic evidence; (b) evidence of NTC's "frequent, high-level communications" correlated to specific collusive behavior; and (c) evidence of several co-defendants' guilty pleas in the DOJ's related criminal antitrust proceedings.

a. economic evidence

Plaintiffs contend that two types of economic evidence in this case demonstrate that a conspiracy makes economic sense and is plausible. First, plaintiffs point to evidence regarding the structure of the DRAM market as a whole, and specifically to their [*71] expert, Dr. Roger Noll, whose report and testimony plaintiffs assert establishes that the conditions of the DRAM market made NTC's participation in the alleged conspiracy economically viable and productive.[5] Second, plaintiffs point to evidence that they claim proves that NTC's behavior was consistently

---

[4] As defendants note, even conscious parallelism — i.e., a company's independent and voluntary decision to track prices and production of competitors — is not unlawful standing alone. See, e.g., Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, 203 F.3d 1028, 1032 (8th Cir.).

[5] Originally, Dr. Noll's report was submitted in connection with the Winbond entity defendants' accompanying motion for summary judgment, and plaintiffs relied on that submission in citing to the report. Winbond withdrew its motion, however, anticompetitive and against its own economic self interest — thereby further supporting the inference of NTC's participation in the conspiracy. See, e.g., Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 884 (9th Cir. 1982)("plaintiff must demonstrate that [allegedly parallel acts] were against each conspirator's self-interest").

i. structure of the DRAM market

Dr. Noll, plaintiffs' expert, analyzed five key characteristics of the DRAM industry — concentration in the industry, defendants' market share, DRAM's commodity status, the size of DRAM buyers/transactions, and the effect of US anti-dumping restrictions on DRAM pricing — and concluded that the DRAM industry was favorable to successful collusion during the relevant class period. See Saveri Decl., Ex. A at 31-46. Although this testimony standing alone does not necessarily implicate NTC's individual participation in any such collusion, plaintiffs also point to the testimony of NTC's expert, Dr. Alan [*72] Cox, on which plaintiffs rely for support of their claim that NTC's increasing technological advantages at the time of the conspiracy provided an economic reason for the top DRAM manufacturers to include NTC in their conspiracy, even if NTC was a smaller player in the market for DRAM. See, e.g., Declaration of Alan Cox in Support of Nanya's Motion for Summary Judgment ("Cox Decl.,"), Ex. A at ¶ 78 (noting that "Nanya/Nanya USA gained a significant advantage" due to "product innovation" in 2001). Given both the DRAM market's receptiveness to collusion and the significance of NTC's position in the market, plaintiffs contend that the economic evidence regarding the structure of the market supports NTC's participation in the alleged conspiracy.

As plaintiffs note, persuasive authority suggests that evidence bearing on the economic structure of the market, and evidence specifically suggesting that particular characteristics of the market are conducive to the creation of, and participation in, an overarching price-fixing conspiracy, can be relevant in supporting an inference that a defendant participated in such a conspiracy. See, e.g., In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360 (3d Cir. 2004)("[e]vidence that the defendant had a motive to enter [*73] into a price-fixing conspiracy means evidence ... that the structure of the market was such as to make secret price-fixing feasible"); In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litigation, 295 F.3d 651, 655-56 (7th Cir. 2002). Nonetheless, while relevant, the economic evidence surrounding the DRAM market is not, in and of itself, a sufficient basis upon which to infer a conspiracy here. See, e.g., In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360 n. 12 ("this type of economic evidence is neither necessary nor sufficient to conclude that sufficient proof of an agreement exists to preclude summary judgment, but it is relevant and courts should as a general matter consider it"). This conclusion is strengthened by the observation that, despite plaintiffs' reliance on Dr. Cox's testimony regarding NTC's technological capacities, Dr. Cox's actual conclusion was that it was unlikely that other defendants would have wanted to include NTC in the conspiracy, since NTC's capacity for DRAM production was never greater than 6% of industry capacity during the class period, and less than 1.5% when the conspiracy purportedly began. See Cox Decl., Ex. A at ¶ 14. Plaintiffs present no other testimony that supports the conclusion that the structure of the market would have been receptive to NTC itself engaging in a conspiracy.

In sum, plaintiffs' [*74] evidence regarding the structure of the DRAM market, even if relevant to the larger question whether an inference of conspiracy may be made on the whole cannot, standing alone, conclusively establish an inference of conspiracy.

ii. anticompetitive behavior

Plaintiffs also claim that the economic evidence discloses that NTC behaved in an anticompetitive manner during the conspiracy period, such that an inference of conspiracy is reasonable. Specifically, plaintiffs assert that during the conspiracy period, NTC reduced its DRAM output in coordination with the top 5 DRAM producers in the industry; that NTC failed to price aggressively and consistently passed up opportunities to undercut its competitors and grow its market share; and that NTC refused to bid in an auction held by Compaq in November 2001. See Opp. Br. at 19:13-22:17.

---

following its settlement with plaintiffs, thereby withdrawing the Noll report from consideration as well. In order to cure this problem, and at the court's request, plaintiffs re-submitted Dr. Noll's report by way of a separate declaration. The Nanya entity defendants have now filed objections to the re-submission of Dr. Noll's expert report, in part based on timeliness issues. The court hereby OVERRULES defendants' objections.

Output reduction. Plaintiffs assert that NTC reduced its DRAM output during the fourth quarter of 2001 ("2001Q4") and the first quarter of 2002 ("2002Q1"), in step with the top DRAM producers and other co-conspirators. They rely specifically on Exhibit 10 of Dr. Cox's expert report, which consists of a chart comparing NTC's DRAM output growth during the conspiracy [*75] period with that of the top 5 DRAM manufacturers (defined as Elpida, Hynix, Infineon, Micron and Samsung). See Cox Decl., Ex. A at Ex. 10. The chart demonstrates that, during 2001Q4 and 2002Q1, NTC's DRAM output growth dropped, at the same time that the top 5 DRAM producers' output growth also collectively dropped. Id. Plaintiffs argue that this supports an inference of conspiracy, since the timing of NTC's output reduction coincided with the conspiracy period.

Naturally, NTC disputes the significance of the evidence. NTC points out that NTC's own actual output data — which was not used in compiling Dr. Cox's exhibit 10 — indicates that between October 2001 and March 2002 (e.g., during 2001Q4 and 2002Q1), NTC's output of finished DRAM wafers ("wafer outs") actually increased, with the exception of only November 2001 and February 2002. See Reply Declaration of Vincent O'Brien in Support of Nanya's Motions for Summary Judgment ("O'Brien Reply Decl."), Ex. A, E. Similarly, NTC's sales grew, instead of fell, from the fourth quarter of 2001 to the first quarter of 2002. See id. at Ex. B. To the extent that November 2001 and February 2002 saw any decline in "wafer outs," NTC submits that [*76] the declines were due in part to "yield" issues (i.e., a decline in the amount of viable DRAM chips that NTC was able to produce from raw wafers), as NTC shifted production from 128 Mb of DRAM to 256 Mb of DRAM. See O'Brien Reply Decl., Ex. A.; Ex. C at NTC 65-00006200; Ex. E at NTC 73-00022899-22922; Ex. F at NTC 73-00037436.

Generally speaking, evidence that a defendant reduced production at the same time as other admitted members of an alleged conspiracy may be relevant on the question of conspiratorial conduct. See In re Petroleum Prod. Antitrust Litig., 906 F.2d 432, 460-62 (9th Cir. 1990) (considering conspiracy allegations based in part on supply reduction); see also, e.g., In re Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1102 (evidence of parallel pricing decisions undertaken by defendant also relevant to conspiracy question, in conjunction with other "plus" factors). Here, however, the evidence ultimately does not support the inference of a conspiracy. This is because defendants have articulated a plausible competitive justification for any production cut. As they point out, although there were wafer out production declines in November 2001 and February 2002 — periods that fall within 2001Q4 and 2002Q1 as indicated in exhibit 10 to the Cox report — those production declines appear to be attributable [*77] to root causes. The November 2001 decline, for example, corresponded with NTC's decreased production of 128 Mb DRAM chips, as its second fabrication plant switched over to 256 Mb DRAM chips, and its first fabrication plant, which was focusing on the 128 Mb DRAM chips, experienced yield problems. See O'Brien Reply Decl., A; Ex. C at NTC 64-00006200; Ex. E at NTC 73-00022899-22922; Ex. F at NTC 73-00037436. The February 2002 decline also occurred in tandem with reported yield problems. See id. at Ex. D at NTC 64-00012021; Ex. G at NTC 73-00008704-8709.

Not only does this evidence demonstrate a plausible justification for NTC's 2001Q4 and 2002Q1 decreased wafer out DRAM production, but the justification is made more plausible by Mr. Kau's testimony, noted elsewhere herein, that NTC did not cut its DRAM production pursuant to any agreement to do so. See Benjamin Reply Decl., Ex. A at 160-161.

In the face of this evidence, plaintiffs must "provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendant was not engaging in permissible competitive behavior." See, e.g., In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d at 1094. In other words, as explained in the legal standard section above, plaintiffs' evidence must tend to exclude the possibility [*78] of independent behavior. Id. at 1096. Here, plaintiffs' evidence of output reduction — the sum total of which appears to be evidenced by Exhibit 10 to the Cox report — does not, in the face of the evidence demonstrating a production shift to 256 Mb chips at one of NTC's fabrication plants, and yield problems, tend to exclude the possibility that NTC, acting independently, suffered declines as a result of internal decision-making, rather than a coordinated effort at output reduction.

NTC's failure to price aggressively and grow market share. Plaintiffs also contend that NTC failed to price aggressively during the conspiracy period and consistently passed up opportunities to undercut competitors and grow its market share, something NTC would have done if it had been behaving competitively. See Opp. Br. at 20:23-24. Plaintiffs rely for support on three exhibits produced from non-NTC sources, relaying through emails and spreadsheet notes, NTC's supposed price quotes for DRAM at different points in November and December 2001.

Plaintiffs point out that the prices quoted therein show that NTC's DRAM price was among the highest among competitors, and that NTC would not come down from the price of DRAM [*79] it was quoting to Dell Computers, despite Dell's desire to negotiate a lower price. See Sampson Decl., Exs. 63, 116, 118.

Preliminarily, the court once again confronts NTC's hearsay objections, which NTC has submitted in response to all three exhibits. The court is of the opinion that all three constitute inadmissible hearsay. For the reasons already described in connection with plaintiffs' direct evidence of conspiracy, plaintiffs' invocation of the co-conspirator exception does not save the evidence. See Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). Nor does plaintiffs' invocation of other hearsay exceptions, as the court finds that the statements contained in the exhibits do not bear on the declarants' state of mind, and there is insufficient foundational testimony upon which to base application of the business records exception. See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Summary Responses to Winbond and Nanya Defendants' Objections to Exhibits, Ex. C. Furthermore, none of the documents exhibit any indicia of reliability that would incline the court toward admitting the documents. Accordingly, the court hereby sustains NTC's objections to the documents.

Even if the court were to consider the documents substantively, it would still decline to find [*80] that the evidence supports an inference of collusive behavior. To begin with, none of the documents compel the conclusion that plaintiffs urge upon the court — i.e., that NTC consistently passed up opportunities to grow market share by lowering prices. The statements contained in the documents show only that: (1) on December 19, 2001, David Lin, an Elpida employee, had been told by one of his "buddies" that NTC was quoting a "$21/$42" DRAM price that NTC wanted to raise in January; (2) that Mr. Lin was also aware that back on November 23, 2001, NTC had tried to "increase pricing" but failed; and (3) that earlier still, on November 8, 2001, Mr. Lin had "polled the market" and discovered that NTC would not be moving on price. See Sampson Decl., Exs. 63, 116, 118. These statements indicate, at most, that someone at NTC told Mr. Lin that NTC had a desire to raise prices. But they do not establish or even suggest whether NTC actually did, in fact, raise prices, or, to the contrary, whether NTC refused to raise prices, or refused to compete for Dell's business by lowering price. Nor does the evidence indicate whether NTC had a habit of passing up opportunities to increase market share, as [*81] plaintiffs contend. Indeed, NTC points to evidence that demonstrates the opposite — that, during the same time period, NTC increased both overall DRAM production and total sales of DRAM (accomplished through NTC USA). See O'Brien Decl., Ex. B; O'Brien Reply Decl., Ex. E.

Moreover, plaintiffs do not rely on any legal authority that requires a defendant to have affirmatively engaged in undercutting competitors in order for the court to consider that defendant as having acted competitively. Although plaintiffs cite most persuasively to In re Citric Acid, the Ninth Circuit there did not hold that undercutting competitors is generally evidence of competitive behavior, let alone did it hold that lack of evidence as to a defendant affirmatively undercutting its competitors supports an inference of uncompetitive behavior. It simply held that, in the case before it, evidence that defendant priced aggressively in its actual contracts and had gained market share by consistently underpricing its competitors in the price-fixed market, was sufficient to demonstrate the possibility that defendant acted legally in its pricing decisions. See 191 F.3d at 1103.

Here, by contrast, plaintiffs' evidence — which does not [*82] conclusively indicate whether NTC priced aggressively with respect to Dell, or whether it had a policy of pricing aggressively — fails to exclude the possibility that NTC was acting competitively as a whole, particularly in view of the fact that the evidence does indicate that NTC's sales and production were increasing. As such, it simply cannot be said that, based on the three exhibits relied on by plaintiffs, they have sufficiently excluded the possibility that NTC was acting competitively and in its own self-interest.

Compaq auction. Finally, plaintiffs point to NTC's purported refusal to bid in a DRAM auction held by Compaq, as proof that NTC was engaged in behavior against its own self-interest, and therefore that an inference of conspiratorial activity may be made. See Sampson, Ex. 93 at 173:4-177:2 (deposition testimony of Ken Hurley, Nanya USA's President). On its face, however, this evidence cannot support an inference of collusive activity by NTC. The evidence — which is the sole basis for plaintiffs' claim — refers to NTC USA's refusal to participate in the Compaq auction, not NTC's. And since, as discussed previously, NTC USA's actions here may not be imputed to NTC for [*83] liability purposes, the evidence fails to raise a material dispute of fact with respect to NTC's participation in the alleged conspiracy.

In sum, the court concludes that none of the 'economic' evidence relied on by plaintiffs supports an inference of collusive activity on NTC's part. This is true whether the evidence is viewed independently, or in the aggregate, as the evidence simply does not tend to exclude the possibility that NTC acted in a competitive manner.

b. NTC's "frequent, high-level communications"

Besides the economic evidence, plaintiffs also rely on evidence of NTC's allegedly frequent communications with the other co-defendants as circumstantial evidence that supports an inference of collusive activity. Specifically, plaintiffs point to communications that took place throughout five different periods: summer 2001; fall 2001; November 2001; December 2001/January 2002; and early 2002 through June 2002. All of these communications, argue plaintiffs, corresponded with collusive activity taking place in the DRAM market.

The communications themselves are extensive. For each of the periods mentioned, plaintiffs cite to numerous emails or correspondence between the Nanya defendants [*84] and various other defendants, detailing alleged exchanges of information and meetings between the parties, all of which purportedly track the defendants' alleged production cuts and price increases. See, e.g., Sampson Decl., Exs. 15, 22, 46, 55, 57, 86, 94, 103 Appendix A, 105-112, 114-125, 127-129, 132-34.

Despite its volume, however, there exist fundamental problems with the evidence. Namely, the communications relied on by plaintiffs are largely irrelevant as far as NTC is concerned. For the vast majority of the "high-level" communications relied upon by plaintiffs concern NTC USA, not NTC. See, e.g., id. at Exs. 94, 103 Appendix A, 105, 106, 111-12. Once again, for the reasons already outlined, NTC USA's contacts cannot be imputed to NTC. As such, to the extent this is true, the court disregards those communications dealing with NTC USA.

This leaves the court with exhibits such as 46, 57, and 120 to the Sampson Declaration. These exhibits are communications made within Mosel Vitelic, discussing or reiterating the prices applicable to "Nanya's" DRAM. Preliminarily, it is not clear whether the communications even refer to NTC as opposed to NTC USA, as they by refer only to "Nanya" [*85] generally. More importantly, however, these exhibits do not constitute probative information that tends to exclude the possibility of permissible competitive conduct. At best, they merely repeat pricing information that has presumably been relayed to the sender by a marketing director at NTC. See id. at Ex. 46. But there is nothing inherently wrong with a company's marketing director sharing pricing information with another company. See In re Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1103, citing In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d 112, 126 (3d Cir. 1999)("[C]ommunications between competitors do not permit an inference of an agreement to fix prices unless 'those communications rise to the level of an agreement, tacit or otherwise.'"); Rutledge v. Elec. Hose & Rubber Co., 327 F. Supp. 1267, 1271 (C.D. Cal. 1971)("Absent an agreement to fix prices, there is nothing unlawful about competitors meeting and exchanging price information or discussing problems common in their industry, or even exchanging information as to the cost of their product.").

This same analysis applies to other exhibits relied on by plaintiffs, which constitute communications and correspondence that do not expressly implicate NTC — or even come from NTC — but at most refer to "Nanya" generally. See, e.g., Sampson Decl., Exs. 116-119.

Accordingly, even crediting the three exhibits as [*86] referring to NTC rather than NTC USA as evidence, they still do not provide a basis from which the court may infer conspiratorial activity. Thus the court rejects the evidence of "high-level" communications as circumstantial proof that NTC engaged in collusive activity.

c. guilty pleas

Finally, plaintiffs urge the court take notice of certain guilty pleas that other co-defendants have entered into, as well as the fact that NTC USA's employees invoked the Fifth Amendment during their depositions.

First, as NTC points out, it is improper for the court accept evidence of the co-defendants' guilty pleas as evidence tending to support an inference of NTC's collusive activity when none of those guilty pleas implicated NTC in their criminal activity. Given that NTC was not implicated, the court declines to consider these pleas as evidence bearing on NTC's participation in the alleged unlawful activity.

Second, and with respect to any adverse inferences to be drawn from the testimony of NTC USA's employees, the fact remains, as noted above, that there is simply no basis here upon which to impute NTC USA's actions or testimony to NTC. Accordingly, the court similarly declines to draw an adverse inference as to [*87] NTC's participation in the alleged conspiracy, based on testimony or lack of testimony of NTC USA employees.

Accordingly, the court does not find that the evidence of other co-defendants' guilty pleas, or the invocation of 5th Amendment protection by NTC USA employees, supports an inference of collusive activity with respect to NTC.

* * *

In conclusion, and having considered plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence, individually and in the aggregate, the court simply cannot find that the evidence relied on by plaintiffs supports an inference of collusive activity on NTC's part, under the standard contemplated by Matsushita. Accordingly, the court hereby GRANTS summary judgment in NTC's favor.

C. NTC USA's Motion for Summary Judgment

NTC USA makes the same general argument that NTC made — i.e., that there is no evidence of NTC USA's involvement in the alleged conspiracy to fix the market prices for DRAM. NTC USA's focus, however, is slightly different than NTC. Since NTC USA does not actually manufacture DRAM, but only buys and sells the DRAM manufactured by its parent corporation, NTC USA does not address proof of conspiracy via concerted output reduction. Rather, it focuses on plaintiffs' ability to prove [*88] a section 1 violation via an actual agreement to fix prices, or an exchange of price information among defendants. NTC USA argues that plaintiffs cannot demonstrate NTC USA's participation in either activity. It contends that, not only is the evidence insufficient to prove an agreement or an exchange of information, but the evidence does not even support the conclusion that DRAM pricing was affected by any of NTC USA's actions.

Before weighing the evidence of NTC USA's participation in conspiratorial activity, the court preliminarily addresses two of the arguments raised by NTC USA. First, whether the court should employ a rule of reason analysis. NTC USA relies on Dr. Noll's report and testimony, and argues that the analysis therein demonstrates that plaintiffs have rejected a price-fixing claim in favor of alleging an unlawful exchange of price information. This type of activity, asserts NTC USA, is not subject to per se treatment, but rather to a rule of reason analysis.

The court declines this invitation, however. Plaintiffs have alleged that all defendants participated in an agreement to fix, raise, and maintain the price of DRAM, and that, in order to effectuate that agreement, defendants [*89] engaged in numerous actions, including a coordinated reduction in DRAM output, as well as engaging in meetings and discussions with each other regarding price. See Third Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint, ¶ 61-64. Dr. Noll's expert report is but one of the types of evidence on which plaintiffs rely to support the allegation of collusive activity. See, e.g., Saveri Decl., Ex. A at 2-6. And while NTC USA is correct, as stated in Dr. Noll's report and testimony, that plaintiffs assert that NTC USA unlawfully exchanged price information, such testimony and evidence is consistent with plaintiffs' allegation that NTC USA did so in a manner consistent with an overriding agreement to fix price and reduce supply.[6] And such allegations, if proven, support per se treatment. See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940); see also In re Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 906 F.2d 432, 445-50 (9th Cir. 1990)(proof that competitors shared price information treated as evidence of per se illegal conspiracy to fix prices). In sum, while plaintiffs' ability to prove NTC USA's involvement in the alleged conspiracy remains to be seen, there is simply no basis upon which to deviate from the well-accepted principle that a conspiracy to fix prices — even if effectuated in part by an exchange of information regarding [*90] price — is worthy of per se treatment.

[6] Moreover, contrary to NTC USA's characterization of Dr. Noll's testimony, what Dr. Noll actually said was that plaintiffs' collusion allegations can include the exchange of information regarding price, in addition to "a naked price fixing agreement." See Benjamin Decl., Ex. W at 164:3-17. This supports, rather than undercuts, the application of per se analysis here. To the extent, therefore, that NTC USA's arguments address the need for plaintiffs to establish harm or impact on the market, as part of a rule of reason analysis, NTC USA's arguments are irrelevant. See, e.g., National Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 690, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978)(rule of reason requires analysis of alleged conduct's effect on market).

Second, the court addresses NTC USA's intimation that it cannot be held liable for an unlawful conspiracy to reduce output, as alleged by plaintiffs in their complaint, because it does not actually manufacture any DRAM, but rather buys and sells DRAM obtained from its parent company NTC. While this may be true, it is not exculpatory. It is well-settled, as a principle of co-conspirator liability, that even if NTC USA did not itself engage in a reduction in DRAM output, it may nonetheless be held liable for the actions of other codefendants in reducing their DRAM output, if it is proven that NTC USA otherwise participated in an unlawful conspiracy with those defendants. See, e.g., BBD Transp. Co., Inc. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co., 627 F.2d 170, 173 (9th Cir. 1980)("To be liable as a coconspirator for the anticompetitive acts of [other co-conspirators], the railroads need not have known of or participated in those acts themselves.").

Having dispensed with these preliminary issues, the salient issue as to NTC USA remains: whether there is any direct or circumstantial evidence that NTC USA participated in any unlawful conspiracy to fix, maintain, or stabilize, the price of DRAM.

NTC USA asserts, not only [*91] that the evidence does not support plaintiffs' allegations against it, but that the evidence affirmatively answers this question in the negative. NTC USA points, for example, to the various testimony of other co-defendants' employees, in which every single one states that they had no pricing communications with NTC USA. See Benjamin Decl., Exs. A-S. It also points to the testimony of its expert, Dr. Cox, noting NTC USA's small market share, stating that NTC USA was expanding its business during the relevant time period, rather than restricting it — as would be consistent with anticompetitive behavior — and further opining that NTC USA was committed to aggressive and competitive pricing. See Hurley Decl., ¶ 7. NTC USA even relies on Dr. Hall's testimony, in which he acknowledges that Micron, an admitted co-conspirator, testified that it was unsuccessful in getting Nanya USA President Ken Hurley to go along with it in its bid to raise prices. See Benjamin Decl., Ex. Y. All of which, according to NTC USA, points to an utter lack of evidence tying it to the conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs.

This evidence is sufficient to switch the burden to plaintiffs to come forward with either direct [*92] or circumstantial evidence that creates a material issue of fact regarding NTC USA's involvement in the alleged section 1 conspiracy. Plaintiffs attempt to meet this burden with the same argument and evidence that was submitted in response to NTC's motion. As it did in connection with NTC's motion, the court has attempted to distinguish the evidence where it is clear that it relates to NTC USA specifically.

1. Direct Evidence of Conspiracy

Plaintiffs' "direct" evidence of NTC USA's participation in the overarching DRAM conspiracy is largely the same as that which was discussed in connection with NTC's motion. Namely, that NTC USA participated in "secret" meetings with its fellow Taiwanese manufacturers to discuss cutbacks and price increases.

For support, plaintiffs rely for the most part on the same evidence already discussed — i.e., Micron emails, and news articles in which NTC's president, Mr. Kau, is quoted. See Sampson Decl., Exs. 13-15, 22-24, 86. Substantively, this evidence fails for the same reasons discussed in connection with NTC's motion. In addition, however, the evidence fails because it relates to the actions of NTC and NTC's President, not directly to NTC USA, or NTC USA's president, [*93] Kenneth Hurley. And, as stated above, NTC USA cannot be liable for NTC's acts and events without proving some theory of liability that would allow such a conclusion, which plaintiffs have not done.

This is not to say that plaintiffs have submitted no evidence specific to NTC USA. For plaintiffs also rely on an email that indicates that a meeting was scheduled for November 2001 between Mr. Kau, Mr. Hurley, and Mike Sadler, among others. See Sampson Decl., Ex. 87. Mr. Sadler was a Micron executive, alleged by plaintiffs to be the "ringleader" of the conspiracy.

The court does not find this email, however, to be direct evidence of NTC USA's participation in the alleged conspiracy. To begin with, it requires the court to draw the inference that the alleged meeting actually took place, for the email itself only indicates that such a meeting was scheduled. See In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d at 1093 (direct evidence of conspiracy requires no inferences). Although this deficiency is not critical, given that NTC USA has conceded the meeting's existence, see NTC USA Reply Br. at 3:1-9, the fact that NTC USA points to evidence establishing a legitimate business reason for the meeting is critical. Specifically, NTC USA points to the [*94] deposition testimony of Mr. Kau, Mr. Hurley, and Mr. Appleton — Micron's president who was also at the meeting. All testify that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss the possibility of technological collaboration between the two entities, since NTC USA's original licensor was exiting the DRAM business. See Benjamin Reply Decl., Ex. A at 76-80; Ex. I at 72-75; Ex. K at 187 88. Moreover, none of the deponents recall that any discussions regarding DRAM pricing took place at the meeting. See id. Plaintiffs submit no evidence that actually refutes these facts. In view of this, the court does not find that the email relied on by plaintiffs constitutes direct evidence of NTC USA's participation in the overarching conspiracy.

Accordingly, with no other evidence to rely on, the court concludes that plaintiffs have not submitted sufficient direct evidence of NTC USA's participation.

2. Circumstantial Evidence of Conspiracy

The court next turns to plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence connecting NTC USA to the alleged conspiracy. In turning to this evidence, the court is mindful once again that the principles espoused in Matsushita, as reaffirmed by the Ninth Circuit in In re Citric Acid, apply. [*95]

Preliminarily, NTC USA has come forward with evidence that its participation in the alleged conspiracy would be economically implausible. It points to its small market share, which ranged from 1.4% in 1999 to 5.5% in 2002 at the end of the class period; the fact that with such a small market share NTC USA could not be expected to have had an impact on the market for DRAM by its participation in any conspiracy; Dr. Noll's supporting explanation that price collusion is not possible unless a seller involved in the collusion represents a significant portion of the market share (e.g., 40 to 60 percent); and the fact that NTC USA was pricing aggressively during the time period in question. See, e.g., Cox Decl., Ex. A at 10, ¶¶ 7-11; Benjamin Decl., Ex. Y at 7, Ex. W at 183:16-22; Hurley Decl., ¶ 7. The court finds this evidence sufficient to shift the burden to plaintiffs, who must, in order to defeat summary judgment, come forward with evidence tending to exclude the possibility that NTC USA was engaging in permissible competitive behavior. See In re Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1094. In other words, plaintiffs must introduce evidence sufficient to exclude the possibility of independent conduct by NTC USA, such that an inference [*96] of collusion is reasonable. See id. at 1096.

Here, too, plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence largely overlaps with that already discussed in connection with NTC's motion for summary judgment. This includes plaintiffs' (a) economic evidence; (b) evidence of NTC USA's "frequent, high-level communications" correlated to specific collusive behavior; and (c) evidence of co-defendants' guilty pleas in the DOJ's related criminal antitrust proceedings. Each category, as it relates to NTC USA, is discussed in turn.

a. economic evidence

Generally speaking, plaintiffs rely on the same economic evidence here as they did with NTC — i.e., evidence relating to the structure of the DRAM market, and evidence relating to NTC USA's anticompetitive behavior.

With respect to its evidence relating to the structure of the DRAM market, plaintiffs again rely on Dr. Noll's report and testimony, as well as Dr. Cox's testimony regarding increasing technological advances exhibited by NTC and NTC USA. The merits of the parties' competing arguments on this point — and whether NTC USA's collusion in the market would make economic sense — need not be repeated here. It is sufficient for the court to reiterate only that this evidence, [*97] while relevant, is not in and of itself a sufficient basis upon which to infer a conspiracy. See In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360 n. 12.

With respect to plaintiffs' evidence regarding NTC USA's anticompetitive behavior, however, the arguments and evidence related to NTC USA are slightly different. Contrary to their arguments with respect to NTC, plaintiffs here do not submit evidence that NTC USA reduced its output of DRAM. As already noted, they cannot, since NTC USA did not actually manufacture DRAM, but rather purchased it from NTC.

Plaintiffs do argue that, as with NTC, NTC USA (1) failed to grow its market share by pricing aggressively, and (2) failed to compete by refusing to bid in an auction held by computer manufacturer Compaq. However, the analysis of these two claims is slightly different with respect to NTC USA.

Failure to grow market share/price aggressively. For proof of NTC USA's failure to price aggressively and grow market share during the relevant time period, plaintiffs rely on the same documents as they did with respect to NTC's motion — i.e., the three exhibits produced from non-NTC sources, relaying through emails and spreadsheet notes NTC's supposed price quotes for DRAM at different points in November [*98] and December 2001. Plaintiffs, once again, are seeking to prove that the prices quoted therein show that NTC USA's DRAM price was the highest among competitors, and that NTC USA would not come down from the price of DRAM it was quoting to Dell Computers. See Sampson Decl., Exs. 63, 116, 118.

As the court has already found, these documents constitute inadmissible hearsay, and are therefore inadmissible. Moreover, even if substantively admitted, they would not support an inference of conspiracy, as they do not actually demonstrate NTC USA's failure to price aggressively and grow market share.

Most significantly, however, plaintiffs' argument on this point fails because they have not disputed the most fundamental point argued by NTC USA — that, during the class period, NTC USA actually succeeded in increasing sales and market share. See, e.g., Cox Decl., ¶¶ 13-14. Without disputing this point, plaintiffs cannot demonstrate NTC USA's failure to grow market share, or otherwise support any inference of conspiracy whatsoever. See In re Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1102 (lack of evidence in record establishing that defendant's market share stayed the same required conclusion that inference of conspiracy was "necessarily unreasonable"). [*99]

Accordingly, plaintiffs' lack of evidence on this point does not enable the court to infer that NTC USA conspired with any co-defendants in unlawful section 1 activity.

Compaq auction. Plaintiffs assert that NTC USA's anticompetitive behavior with respect to the Compaq auction supports an inference of conspiracy. Specifically, plaintiffs contend that NTC USA refused to bid in the Compaq auction — which was held in order to attempt to procure DRAM at lower prices — pursuant to the DRAM cartel's goal of ensuring that no competitor bid in the auction, thereby keeping the prices for DRAM high. See Opp. Br. at 21:13-14.

This evidence, too, fails. NTC USA's president, Mr. Hurley, specifically states that NTC USA had a policy in place that forbid it from bidding in auctions, including the Compaq auction. See Hurley Decl.,¶¶ 8-9. Mr. Hurley testified that the no-bid policy was prompted by the potential for market forces to intervene between auction and delivery of DRAM to create a loss for the manufacturer. See id. This is a plausible explanation for NTC USA's refusal to bid in the auction.

In response, plaintiffs contend that the no-bid policy was inherently anticompetitive, but present no authority for [*100] this conclusion. Nor do they submit contrary evidence establishing that Mr. Hurley's explanation is purely pretextual. Indeed, plaintiffs offer only speculation, and a series of rhetorical questions (i.e., why wouldn't Nanya USA make an "exception" in the case of the Compaq auction?), in their attempt to create an issue of material fact on the issue. See Opp. Br. at 21:19-21.

Based on the record before it, the court cannot conclude that plaintiffs' evidence regarding the Compaq auction sufficiently overcomes NTC USA's plausible explanation for its no-bid policy, such that an inference of collusive activity is reasonable.

b. NTC USA's "frequent, high-level communications"

Plaintiffs again rely on proof of numerous communications between and among NTC USA employees and competitors, in their effort to establish an inference of conspiracy. The communications purportedly took place throughout five different periods in 2001 and 2002, and plaintiffs assert that all can be tied to NTC USA's pricing decisions.

As a preliminary matter, the court notes that the evidence of communications relied on by plaintiffs with respect to NTC USA is of a different character than that relied on in connection [*101] with NTC. Whereas plaintiffs' submission of actual evidence with respect to NTC's contacts was slim, this is not the case with respect to NTC USA. Plaintiffs have submitted evidence with respect to the latter that indicates a much higher volume of communication and contact with other defendants.

Having reviewed all evidence submitted by plaintiffs in connection with this issue, the court finds that the evidence can generally be classified into two general categories: (i) communications from or to NTC USA regarding NTC USA's contacts with defendants; and (ii) communications from or to non-NTC USA sources regarding NTC USA's contacts with defendants.

The correspondence from or to NTC USA sources demonstrates that numerous contacts and communications took place during the relevant period between NTC USA executives — namely, Mr. Hurley and North American Sales Director Mike Walsh — and other defendants. See Sampson Decl., Ex. 103 Appendix A, Ex. 105, Exs. 106,109-112, 114, 124; see also Benjamin Reply Decl., Ex. R. While it seems apparent that some of the evidence, when viewed for its substance, conveys only innocent information, it is equally apparent that some of the evidence conveys actions [*102] taken by NTC USA executives that may, in fact, be suggestive of collusive behavior. See, e.g., id. at Ex. 105 at 39 (describing Mr. Hurley's "chance encounter" with alleged co-conspirators), cf. Ex. 130 at 103-05 (Steve Thorsen deposition testimony re discussions with Mr. Hurley re DRAM pricing); see also In re Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1103 (suggesting that specific discussions between competitors regarding price may give rise to inference of conspiracy).

This also holds true with respect to the communications relied from or to non-NTC USA sources regarding NTC USA's communications with defendants. See Sampson Decl., Exs. 15, 22, 46, 55, 57, 86, 107-08, 115-123, 125, 127-129, 132-34. Some of these communications indicate innocent conduct. See id. at Ex. 133 (email from Elpida employee merely noting he had "polled the market place and found that most suppliers have moved to $38 for 128MB SDR"). Some are more suggestive. Id. at Ex. 134 (Hynix notes conveying detailed product information purportedly learned from "Nanya", including price info).[7]

As such, and given the volume of communications present, and the varying degrees to which the communications may suggest collusive activity by NTC USA, the court [*103] finds that plaintiffs have, in fact, successfully met their burden in arguing that the evidence, considered as a whole, might reasonably support the inference that NTC USA conspired with the admitted conspirators in this action, to fix the actual prices for DRAM in the marketplace. The volume of contact and communications, and the presence of at least some discussion regarding pricing, when viewed in the aggregate, and considering the fact that some of the defendants and individuals with whom NTC USA was communicating are admitted conspirators in this action, support this inference.

Accordingly, the court concludes that plaintiffs have presented a disputed issue of fact as to proof of NTC USA's involvement in the overarching conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs.

c. guilty pleas

---

[7] Defendants have lodged numerous objections to the documents discussed herein. The court notes that some of the documents relied on by plaintiffs and objected to by defendants — particularly those belonging to the first category of communications from or to NTC USA — are admissible. See, e.g., Sampson Decl., Exs. 106, 111-12. By contrast, it is unlikely that many of the documents belonging to the category of communications from or to non-NTC USA sources are admissible. See, e.g., Sampson Decl., Exs. 46, 57. The court need not rule on the admissibility of all documents submitted and at issue, however; it is enough that it finds some documents admissible and sufficient to raise a triable issue of material fact, as described above. The parties are, of course, entitled to raise objections to evidence not ruled on herein at trial.

Finally, plaintiffs once again argue that the guilty pleas entered into by other codefendants, and the fact that three of NTC USA's employees invoked the Fifth Amendment at their depositions, further supports an inference of conspiracy. For the reasons already discussed in connection with NTC's motion, the court declines to accept the former — i.e., other co-defendants' guilty pleas — as evidence of conspiracy.

The court also comes [*104] to the same conclusion with respect to the latter. However, the court's analysis in doing so, is different than before. This is because, whereas it would not have been proper to draw adverse inferences against NTC based on NTC USA employees' invocation of the 5th Amendment, it may be proper draw those inferences against NTC USA.

The seminal case on the issue, Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1976), holds that adverse inferences are permissible in certain situations. However, lower courts interpreting Baxter have been uniform in suggesting that the key to the Baxter holding is that such adverse inference can only be drawn when independent evidence exists of the fact to which the party refuses to answer. See, e.g., LaSalle Bank Lake View v. Seguban, 54 F.3d 387, 391 (7th Cir.1995); Peiffer v. Lebanon Sch. Dist., 848 F.2d 44, 46 (3d Cir.1988). Thus, an adverse inference can be drawn when silence is countered by independent evidence of the fact being questioned, but that same inference cannot be drawn when, for example, silence is the answer to an allegation contained in a complaint. See Nat'l Acceptance Co. v. Bathalter, 705 F.2d 924, 930 (7th Cir.1983). This interpretation is, however, premised on the basic notion that, prior to drawing any adverse inference, there must be, at a minimum, a foundation laid by the party seeking the adverse inference, as to the fact upon which such an inference should be taken.

Here, plaintiffs [*105] have not made a sufficient foundational showing regarding the specific questions and facts upon which they would like adverse inferences to be drawn. Accordingly, the court will not grant them a sort of generic adverse inference based on the mere fact that three of NTC USA's employees asserted the 5th Amendment.

* * *

In conclusion, and based on all the above, the court DENIES NTC USA's motion for summary judgment regarding its liability pursuant to section 1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs have successfully demonstrated that disputed issues of fact are present with respect to NTC USA's participation in the alleged conspiracy, based on circumstantial evidence of NTC USA's contacts and communications with competitors.

D. Motion for Summary Judgment re DRAM Purchases from April 1, 2001 to November 30, 2001

Defendants seek an order declaring that plaintiffs' claims based on DRAM purchases made during the period April 1, 2001 through November 30, 2001, fail as a matter of law. Defendants contend that plaintiffs have admitted they cannot prove impact for this eight month period, and that as a result, all claims based on purchases made during this period are doomed.

Plaintiffs who bring suit for antitrust violations [*106] pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act must satisfy antitrust standing requirements. This standing requirement means that a plaintiff must prove that he or she has been (1) "injured in his business or property; and (2) "by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws...". See 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). The first of these two elements, which is at issue here, refers to 'impact,' whereby plaintiffs must demonstrate the 'fact of damage', or the existence of injury to themselves.

The parties here do not actually dispute the fundamental legal standards applicable for analyzing antitrust 'impact'. Defendants, for instance, note the well-established maxim that impact, or injury itself, is the "sine qua non" for stating a cause of action based on antitrust conspiracy. See, e.g., McClure v. Undersea Indus., Inc., 671 F.2d 1287, 1289 (11th Cir. 1982). Plaintiffs, for their part, cite to legal authority indicating that antitrust impact is satisfied by proof that the antitrust violation alleged is a material and substantial cause of plaintiffs' injury. See, e.g., Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 483 (3d Cir. 1998); see also Supermarkets of Marlinton, Inc. v. Valley Rich Dairy, 161 F.3d 3, 161 F.3d 3, 1998 WL 610648, 2 fn. 18 (4th Cir. Va. 1998)(unpublished opinion)(citing with approval notion that "in order to establish the fact of injury, an antitrust plaintiff must demonstrate that it suffered 'some damage' as a causal result of the defendant's violation"). [*107] Both are accurate statements of the law. For it is true here that, in order to show impact, plaintiffs must demonstrate both that they have been injured, and that their injuries were caused by the alleged antitrust violation in question. See also *In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litigation, 466 F.3d 187, 2006 WL 2401244, 26 (2d Cir. 2006)(injury in fact must "flow[] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful").

Having noted the applicable legal standards, the court must decide whether, in light of certain statements made by plaintiffs' experts, Dr. Noll and Dr. Liu, plaintiffs' claims based on DRAM purchases made from April 1, 2001 to November 30, 2001, fail for plaintiffs' inability to establish impact.

First, the court considers the evidence upon which defendants base their motion. Defendants rely almost entirely on statements made by two of plaintiffs' experts, Dr. Noll and Dr. Liu. To begin with, defendants point to: Dr. Noll's expert report in which he states that "during most of 2001," the defendants were engaged in activity with "a different character" than that which resulted in higher prices for other periods of the alleged conspiracy; Dr. Noll's statement that this activity consisted of defendants' concerted attempt to lower DRAM prices in order to drive co-defendant [*108] Hynix out of the market; and Dr. Noll's statement that during this period, "DRAM buyers did not suffer harm from the price war" because although "[c]oordinated action to set prices below cost in order to drive a firm from the market is a form of collusion, ... an industry's customers are not harmed during the period while the concerted attempt to drive prices down takes place." See Declaration of Ross S. Goldstein in Support of MSJ re DRAM Purchases ("Goldstein Decl."), Ex. A. Second, defendants rely on Dr. Liu's expert report stating that the April 2001 to October 2001 period of the alleged conspiracy was a "predatory" period in which Dr. Liu failed to find "price elevation" and failed to find "damages." See id. at Ex. B.

The question for the court to address is what effect, if any, these statements have on plaintiffs' ability to demonstrate antitrust impact. Defendants argue that the above statements amount to judicial admissions that, for the eight month period in question, not a single member of the class suffered any injury in fact, since there was no artificially raised price at issue that could have harmed plaintiffs. Plaintiffs respond that defendants confuse proof of impact, [*109] which requires only that plaintiffs prove that the conspiracy as a whole caused some damage to plaintiffs, with proof of damages, which requires plaintiffs to demonstrate overpayments for DRAM at artificially high prices in order to recover damages. According to plaintiffs, the above statements are only relevant to the damages issue.

Neither party presents legal authority that is directly on point. Nonetheless, the court finds plaintiffs' arguments more persuasive. To begin with, defendants' request that the court carve out an eight month period from the broader three-year conspiracy period that has always been alleged by plaintiffs is counter-intuitive. See, e.g., Third Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint, ¶¶ 1, 37, 72. As the US Supreme Court has said in the past with respect to Sherman Act antitrust cases, and as plaintiffs point out, "[i]n cases such as [these], plaintiffs should be given the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each.... [T]he character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking [*110] at it as a whole." See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962). Accordingly, the court must view the conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs in its entirety.

Second, viewing the conspiracy in question as a whole, plaintiffs are correct that the question is simply whether plaintiffs can prove 'some damage' as a result of the alleged antitrust violation by defendants — i.e., whether plaintiffs can prove some damage as a result of the alleged three-year conspiracy engaged in by defendants. See, e.g., Supermarkets of Marlinton, Inc. v. Valley Rich Dairy, 161 F.3d 3, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 33534, 1998 WL 610648, 2 fn. 18; *In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litigation, 466 F.3d 187, 2006 WL 2401244, 26 (injury in fact must "flow[] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful"). Here, defendants do not dispute that plaintiffs have done so with respect to the three year conspiracy as a whole. See Def. Reply Br. ISO MSJ re DRAM Purchases at 3 n.1. For purposes of this motion, this satisfies plaintiffs' burden of proving that antitrust impact is present.

Moreover, plaintiffs' expert Dr. Noll also testified that the eight month period in question formed an integral part of the overall 3 year conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs, as it represents the period of time during which defendants conspired in an ultimately unsuccessful attempt to drive Hynix out of the market, in order to decrease total DRAM supply, thereby raising prices for DRAM. [*111] As such, the period in question, even though marked by lower prices on the surface that may not give rise to damages, nonetheless forms a critical part of the conspiracy that led to plaintiffs' actual injury. See, e.g., Declaration of Guido Saveri in Support of the Re-Submission of the Expert Report of Roger G. Noll ("Saveri Decl."), Ex. A at 5, 50-51 (Noll Report).

Indeed, as plaintiffs point out, In re NASDAQ Market -Makers Antitrust Litig. is instructive. There, the court specifically found that even where some class members escape injury altogether, impact may still be found on the basis of the class members' injury as a whole. See 169 F.R.D. 493, 523 (S.D. N.Y. 1996). The district court in that case said that "unless it is clear that no ultimate consumers were damaged, the exact amount each may have sustained is an issue to be treated at the damages phase of the litigation," not at the preliminary stage in deciding whether plaintiffs had adequately made out a prima facie case of impact. See id. This reasoning is relevant here. For when considering the conspiracy as alleged in its entirety, all indications are that there were at least some "ultimate consumers" who were harmed at the end of the conspiracy period by [*112] paying artificially high prices. And since plaintiffs assert that those high prices stem from all conspiratorial acts detailed by their experts — including the strategy to drive Hynix out of the market, even if it involved lower prices for awhile — there is simply no justification for finding, as defendants urge, that no liability can be premised on claims that are based on that "kill Hynix" period.

Moreover, to the extent that — as defendants point out — there are some plaintiffs who made purchases limited only to the eight month period in question and therefore truly did not suffer any impact or injury, the above reasoning is also helpful. In short, this is a factor to be taken into account at the damages phase. In other words, the lack of harm to those individual plaintiffs whose claims are limited to the eight month period at issue does not cause plaintiffs' class claims as a whole to fail where impact is undisputedly present for other class members for the whole conspiracy period. That lack of harm would, however, prevent those plaintiffs whose claims are limited to the eight months in question from recovering any damages on their individual claims, as none are present. Furthermore, [*113] as plaintiffs point out, this is an issue that is specifically contemplated — and dealt with — by Dr. Liu. Accordingly, the issue poses no barrier to allowing plaintiffs' class claims to proceed as alleged.

In conclusion, defendants present no reason for overlooking the more apt principles relied on by plaintiffs, which dictate that defendants' motion for summary judgment as to all claims based on purchases from April 1, 2001 to November 30, 2001 be, and hereby is, DENIED.

E. Motion for Summary Judgment re Purchases Based on Pre-Existing Cost Plus Contracts

Defendants seek summary judgment on all claims brought by direct purchasers who bought DRAM pursuant to pre-existing cost-plus contracts. The gist of defendants' argument is that these purchasers, who buy and then resell DRAM to indirect purchasers at a fixed mark-up over the price paid for the DRAM, have not suffered actual injury for purposes of recovery under section 1. While they acknowledge such argument would normally be ineffective under the Supreme Court's well-established prohibition on the use of "pass-on" defenses in antitrust cases, defendants rely on the narrow exception that the court has specifically carved out for qualifying [*114] cost-plus contracts.

Resolution of defendants' motion requires determination of three issues: (1) the applicable legal standards involved; (2) whether plaintiffs or defendants bear the burden of proof on this issue; and (3) whether there is, in fact, any evidence of claims brought pursuant to pre-existing cost-plus contracts.

1. Legal Standards

The general argument that a direct purchaser plaintiff does not suffer injury where that plaintiff passes on all or part of an illegal overcharge to subsequent purchasers is not new. This is frequently referred to as the "pass-on defense," and was first considered by the Supreme Court in Hanover Shoe, Inc., v. United Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 491 493, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). There, the court held that a pass-on defense cannot be relied on by defendants seeking to prove that a direct purchaser plaintiff was not actually injured by a violation of the antitrust laws. See 392 U.S. at 491-493. The court adhered to the "general principle" that the victim of an overcharge "is damaged within the meaning of [the antitrust standing statute] to the extent of the overcharge." Id. at 491. It ruled against the pass-on defense, in part based on concerns that use of the defense could complicate antitrust litigation (due to problems of proof) and reduce incentives for private [*115] plaintiffs to sue.

The Supreme Court followed this holding with Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, in which it considered the pass-on defense, but this time from a plaintiff's perspective. See 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). In Illinois Brick, plaintiffs were indirect purchasers who argued that they had antitrust standing to sue because the illegal overcharge that resulted from defendants' antitrust conspiracy had been passed on to them by direct purchasers of defendants'. Consistent with its holding in Hanover Shoe, the Supreme Court held that the principles of that earlier case also bar indirect purchasers' claims, in addition to pass-on defenses employed by defendants. The court again expressed concerns with the complexity of proof involved in any contrary rule, as well as the risk of multiple liability for defendants. See id. at 731-35.

Despite having twice rejected the use of pass-on theories — whether to demonstrate lack of injury or to allow indirect purchaser standing — the Supreme Court noted, in both cases, that an exception to the general rule is possible. That exception, at issue here, is contemplated "when an overcharged buyer has a pre-existing 'cost-plus' contract, thus making it easy to prove that he has not been [*116] damaged." See Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 494; see also Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736 (reiterating Hanover Shoe exception for fixed quantity, pre-existing, cost-plus contracts). The theory is that, pursuant to a pre-existing cost-plus contract, it may be possible to easily prove that 100% of an overcharge is directly passed through to an indirect purchaser, pursuant to pre-negotiated terms by which a price-fixed product is charged at cost to the indirect purchaser, the end result of which eliminates any injury borne by the direct purchaser.

The cost-plus contract exception was expressly considered in Kansas v. UtiliCorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990). There, the Supreme Court held that the direct purchaser is the appropriate plaintiff in virtually every case, and that the opening for the cost-plus exception is extremely narrow. The court was dealing with a parens patriae action brought by state attorneys general ("AG"s), who sued defendant utility corporation on behalf of natural gas consumers. The AG plaintiffs argued that state regulations ensured that the utility corporation passed on 100% of the overcharge directly to the state consumers in the form of increased rates — thereby invoking the cost-plus contract exception. The court, however, declined to place the case within the cost-plus [*117] contract exception, holding that in the absence of any such physical contract, the case only "resembled" the cost-plus contract exception, which contemplates that a 100% overcharge may be proven with certainty. See 497 U.S. at 218.

The Kansas court expressly reaffirmed its adherence to the prohibition on pass-on theories, as well as the court's prior precedent regarding availability of the cost-plus contract exception. The court specifically noted and implied that the cost-plus contract exception applies where the contract in question commits the buyer to purchasing "a fixed quantity regardless of price," with the end result that "the effect of the overcharge is essentially determined in advance, without reference to the interaction of supply and demand that complicates the determination" of pass-on cost in the usual situation. Id. at 217. In other words, the court noted that it "might allow indirect purchasers to sue only when, by hypothesis, the direct purchaser will bear no portion of the overcharge and otherwise suffer no injury." Id. at 218.

Since Kansas, some circuit courts have expressed the opinion that it is doubtful whether the cost-plus exception can ever truly be used to get around the prohibition on pass-on [*118] theories. See, e.g., McCarthy v. Recordex Servs., 80 F.3d 842, 855 (3d Cir. 1996)(the "vitality of the pre-existing cost-plus contract exception is doubtful, however, in view of Utilicorp); Illinois ex rel. Burris v. Panhandle E. Pipe Line Co., 935 F.2d 1469, 1478 (7th Cir. 1991)("The Court's interpretation of the cost-plus exception appears so narrow (setting up as it does a demand for rigorous proof of a 100% pass through and then suggesting an unwillingness to consider such detailed evidence) as to preclude its application in any case.").

There is no Ninth Circuit decision directly on point. However, prior Ninth Circuit precedent would appear to indicate that the Ninth Circuit continues to recognize the validity of the pre-existing cost-plus exception to the prohibition on pass-on theories, although this conclusion is to be inferred from dicta, as the court never actually discussed the applicability of the exception. See Lucas Automotive Engineering v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1234 (9th Cir. 1998)(noting existence of exception for pre-existing, "fixed quantity, cost-plus contract[s]", but refusing to discuss it as appellant failed to offer any evidence that any purchases were made pursuant to such a contract)(emphasis added).

Accordingly, based on review of controlling precedent, the court concludes that, while there is a pre-existing cost-plus contract exception that may theoretically be stated, the exception [*119] is to be applied extremely narrowly. It requires proof of a pre-existing cost-plus contract, pursuant to which a subsequent purchaser purchased a fixed quantity of goods. And it should only be applied where it is absolutely clear that the direct purchaser in question will bear no portion of the overcharge and will otherwise suffer no injury as a result of defendants' alleged antitrust violations.

2. Burden of Proof

Having determined that the exception for pre-existing cost-plus contracts is still legally viable, and having established the contours of the exception, the question remains whether plaintiffs or defendants have the burden of burden of proof with respect to the issue. Defendants argue that plaintiffs bear the burden of proof, since the cost-plus contract exception goes to the issue of injury in fact, an essential element for section 1 recovery, upon which plaintiffs undisputably bear the burden. Plaintiffs, by contrast, argue that defendants have it backwards: Hanover Shoe established that plaintiffs make out a prima facie case of injury merely by showing that they have been illegally overcharged, and by demonstrating the amount of the overcharge. Thereafter, it is defendants who bear [*120] both the burden of production and proof as to the exception, and who must come forward here with evidence of any qualifying cost-plus contracts.

The court has found no cases that squarely address the question of who bears the burden of proof in establishing the cost-plus contracts exception. However, the language of the controlling cases themselves suggest that it is defendants, and not plaintiffs, who have the burden here of proving that this exception to the Hanover Shoe/Illinois Brick doctrine applies. A review of Hanover Shoe — the case that considered the defensive use of the pass-on theory — makes clear, even obvious, that the court considered that it would be defendants' burden to meet the "normally ... insurmountable" task of proving that the pass on defense applies. See, e.g., 392 U.S. at 493 (in rejecting use of pass-on defense, noting that, "if the existence of the defense [were to be] generally confirmed, antitrust defendants [would] frequently seek to establish its applicability") (emphasis added). Similarly, since defendants here seek to establish an exception that would allow a narrow form of the pass-on defense, defendants should also bear the burden of establishing its applicability. [*121] [8]

Moreover, as plaintiffs correctly point out, the Hanover Shoe court also expressly held that a plaintiff's "prima facie case of injury and damage" is satisfied "when a buyer shows that the price paid by him for materials purchased for use in his business is illegally high and also shows the amount of the overcharge." See id. at 489. As such, plaintiffs satisfy their prima facie case of injury here by demonstrating simply that plaintiffs paid an illegally inflated amount for DRAM, and by showing the amount of that overcharge. It would step beyond the boundaries of the Hanover Shoe ruling to require plaintiffs to do more than what the court there required — i.e., by forcing plaintiffs to establish [8] The court's conclusion is also guided in part by the fact that the Supreme Court has specifically recognized two types of "pass-on" theories that may be used — defensive, and offensive. The defensive pass-on theory was first discussed in Hanover Shoe, where defendants attempted to use it to demonstrate that the direct purchaser plaintiffs had not established true antitrust injury. See 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231. In Illinois Brick, by contrast, the offensive use of the pass-on theory was utilized by indirect purchaser plaintiffs trying to establish antitrust injury for standing purposes under the Sherman Act. See 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707. As a practical matter, it makes intuitive sense that where — as here — defendants utilize the defensive pass-on theory, they should bear the burden of proof (and where plaintiffs employ offensive use of the pass-on theory, it is plaintiffs who bear the burden).

the absence of any exception to the prohibition on use of the pass-on defense, in addition to demonstrating the amount of any illegal overcharge that was paid due to defendants' unlawful activities.

Furthermore, defendants' reliance on Burkhalter Travel Agency v. MacFarms Int'l, Inc. for the contrary proposition is unpersuasive. See 141 F.R.D. 144 (N.D. Cal. 1991). It is true that in that case, the court considered the cost-plus contract exception post-Kansas, and held that the exception [*122] applied. However, the court did not engage in any discussion related to the burden of proof with respect to its application. Accordingly, it does not aid the analysis here.

In conclusion, the court holds that it is defendants who must prove that the cost-plus contract exception applies. In seeking summary judgment as to this issue, therefore, defendants must produce admissible evidence demonstrating that there are no triable issues of fact regarding application of the exception. It then falls to plaintiffs to overcome defendants' evidence, with proof of materially disputed facts.

3. Evidence of Pre-existing Cost-plus Contracts

This brings the court to the final issue presented by the instant motion: whether defendants have presented sufficient evidence of qualifying cost-plus contracts to warrant application of the exception. In accordance with the standards enunciated above, to be successful, defendants must specifically point to evidence of pre-existing cost-plus contracts, pursuant to which subsequent purchasers purchased a fixed quantity of goods. See Lucas Automotive Eng'g, 140 F.3d at 1234.

Defendants rely on three sources of evidence in their attempt to meet this burden. First, they point to deposition testimony purportedly [*123] demonstrating that "several plaintiffs package DRAM as one item among a bundle of goods and services that they provide to their customers...". See Declaration of Christopher Flack ("Flack Decl."), Exs. A-E. Second, they point to "one example uncovered through discovery," of a purported qualifying cost-plus contract between Apple computer and Solectron Corporation — Solectron directly buys DRAM from entities like defendants and uses it to manufacture products for Apple under a cost-plus pricing formula. See Flack Decl., Ex. H. According to defendants, this single contract demonstrates that Apple, as the final OEM to whom Solectron sells its products, is charged the full cost that Solectron pays for the DRAM it purchases, plus a one-percent margin over that cost. See id. at SOL000196, 163. Finally, defendants also cite to the Declaration of Michael Bokan — a director of sales for Micron — in which Mr. Bokan claims that he knows of numerous customers who purchase DRAM for resale in accordance with "cost-plus" contracts. See Bokan Decl., ¶¶ 3-4.

This evidence, however, is deficient. First, the deposition testimony relied on by defendants do not say what defendants say it does. Presumably, [*124] defendants hope to prove with the testimony that the DRAM packaged as an item can be separately tracked through to the ultimate purchaser of the item — thereby providing a foundation for application of the cost-plus contract rule. But actual review of the deposition testimony demonstrates that the deponents are nearly all testifying as to general job duties and descriptions for what their companies do. See Flack Decl., Exs. A-E. They are in no way affirmatively stating that DRAM is sold, or can be characterized, as a separate item within a bundle of goods and services. Furthermore, even if the testimony did support this interpretation, it would still fall short of establishing the existence of any physical, preexisting, fixed quantity cost-plus contracts that qualify for application of the exception. Indeed, to the contrary, the testimony of one of the deponents, Steven Coraluzzi, expressly states that Mr. Coraluzzi had no contracts whatsoever with Crucial Technologies, a division of defendant Micron. See id. at Ex. A.

Second, with respect to the Apple/Solectron contract, neither Apple nor Solectron are named plaintiffs in the instant action. Assuming, therefore, that defendants attempt [*125] to use the Apple/Solectron contract as evidence of unnamed class members' cost-plus contracts, defendants provide no legal or other authority that would justify imputing the existence of this single agreement to other unnamed class members, or to the class as a whole. Nor is there any reason to assume, based on this one agreement, that other unnamed class members had similar agreements. Moreover, plaintiffs raise valid arguments regarding the agreement itself. Notably, they point out that the contract does not appear to require the purchase of a fixed quantity of DRAM. See Flack Decl., Ex. H.

Defendants, for their part, fail to overcome this with any evidence to the contrary. As such, it simply cannot be said that the Apple/Solectron contract qualifies as a valid pre-existing cost-plus contract.

Finally, to the extent that defendants rely on the Bokan Declaration for added support of its argument that cost-plus contracts exist, the Bokan Declaration is wholly unpersuasive. Mr. Bokan does not affirmatively point to any cost-plus contracts whatsoever. He merely states that he "believe[s] that contract manufacturers frequently agree to take no profit, or to take a fixed, cost-plus profit, [*126] on DRAM purchased for use in an OEM's products." See Bokan Decl., ¶ 3. Not only is this insufficient proof of the existence of any cost-plus contracts, but as plaintiffs point out, most of this testimony is objectionable as inadmissible hearsay. To that end, the court disregards the testimony contained therein.

In sum, it simply cannot be said that defendants have met their burden in pointing to evidence establishing that there are valid pre-existing, fixed quantity, cost-plus contracts that warrant imposition of the exception in this case.

Nor does Burkhalter Travel Agency, discussed above, require a contrary conclusion. In Burkhalter, the court considered a situation in which the plaintiff directly purchased macadamia nuts from defendants, and subsequently passed the entire cost of the macadamia nuts on to a subsequent purchaser pursuant to an existing agreement between them. Defendants argued that the cost-plus contract exception applied, and the court agreed. The court, however, assumed the existence of a qualifying cost-plus agreement. Here, by contrast, as analysis of the above evidence demonstrates, defendants have not proven the existence of any qualifying agreement, either between [*127] a named plaintiff and a subsequent purchaser, or even between an unnamed plaintiff and a subsequent purchaser. As such, there is simply no proof that the exception applies.

Defendants attempt to avoid this inevitable conclusion by arguing that, if they lack sufficient evidence, it is only because plaintiffs thwarted their prior discovery efforts to obtain relevant evidence going to this issue. They note that, despite their seeking information relating to cost-plus contracts during discovery, plaintiffs refused to produce any, and after a motion to compel, the magistrate judge refused to order its production. See Flack Decl., Exs. F, G. To that end, defendants also seek an order from the court "soliciting the information needed to determine whether the cost-plus contract rule applies." Plaintiffs strenuously oppose this request, asserting that discovery has closed, that only one defendant — Micron — ever sought discovery on the cost-plus contracts issue in the first place, and that defendants failed to timely object to the magistrate judge's discovery ruling.

As the court stated at the hearing on this motion, these facts do present cause for concern. The court is particularly troubled [*128] by the fact that plaintiffs' counsel appears to have engaged in the practice of regularly instructing clients and deponents not to answer deposition questions regarding the existence of qualifying cost-plus contracts. See, e.g., Sampson Decl., Ex. 138 at 184. As counsel for plaintiffs is undoubtedly aware, instructions not to answer are not proper in practice before this court, unless made in response to inquiries that would require the disclosure of privileged information. The impropriety of such instructions here is made all the more striking because evidence with respect to the existence of cost-plus contracts is, as demonstrated above, unquestionably relevant to this case. As such, had the issue been properly raised before the court — and there is no indication that the issue as presently framed before the court was even raised with the magistrate judge — the court would have provided defendants with timely relief. As it stands, however, the court is left only with the present discovery record. For having made a strategic decision not to challenge the magistrate judge's earlier decision, or to raise the issue prior to the close of discovery, defendants are bound by their actions, [*129] unfortunate though the result may be.

As such, the court is left with no choice but to conclude, based on the evidence submitted before it, that defendants have failed to present, as is their burden, evidence that there are qualifying cost-plus contracts that warrant application of the exception here. Having failed to so demonstrate, it is irrelevant whether plaintiffs present any facts that materially dispute the exception's application, as the exception itself is not before the court. Accordingly, summary judgment on the issue is DENIED.

F. Motions to Seal

The parties have also filed numerous administrative requests to seal certain documents and portions of briefs filed in connection with the present motions for summary judgment. The court has made a good faith effort to review these requests, alongside the actual exhibits to which the requests purportedly refer. However, after trying unsuccessfully to match each document sought to be filed under seal with a corresponding administrative request referring to the specific document and setting forth good cause, the court concludes that the parties' motions to seal are simply too piecemeal to lend themselves to a satisfactory determination [*130] by the court. Moreover, as the supporting declarations themselves indicate, it is not wholly clear that many of the documents justify a sealing order, under the standard enunciated in Kamakana v. City of Honolulu, 447 F.3d 1172 (9th Cir. 2006).

As such, if the parties wish the court to grant sealing requests covering certain documents or portions thereof in connection with the instant motions, the parties must (1) withdraw all pending administrative requests to seal that have been filed in connection with the instant motions; and (2) each re-file one comprehensive administrative request to seal, which specifically sets forth each individual exhibit, document, or portion thereof that the parties wish to have sealed, and which sets forth, by way of accompanying declaration, a "compelling reason" for the sealing of each individual document. See id. at 1136. Any revised request to seal filed pursuant to these instructions must be filed no later than February 28, 2007.

If the parties' re-filed administrative requests to seal do not comply with the above, the court will deny the parties' sealing request. Alternatively, if the parties do not withdraw their pending motions or file any revised administrative requests to seal by February 28, 2007, it will treat [*131] the pending motions to seal as either denied or moot.

G. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the court hereby GRANTS summary judgment in part and DENIES summary judgment in part, as follows: (1) NTC's motion for summary judgment on liability under the Sherman Act is GRANTED; (2) NTC USA's motion for summary judgment on liability under the Sherman Act is DENIED; (3) defendants' motion for partial summary judgment based on DRAM purchases from April 1, 2001 to November 30, 2001 is DENIED; and (4) defendants' motion for partial summary judgment based on pre-existing cost-plus contract purchases is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: February 20, 2007

/s/ Phyllis J. Hamilton

PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON

United States District Judge

Gaines v. Strayhorn

United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, Austin Division

February 21, 2007, Decided ; February 21, 2007, Filed

A-06-CA-673 LY

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11856 *

BETTY LOU GAINES, v. CAROLE STRAYHORN, ET AL.

Prior History: Gaines v. Strayhorn, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11854 (W.D. Tex., Feb. 21, 2007)

Core Terms

Recommendation, Defendants', license, property interest, conscience, shock, district court, due process, substantive due process, violations, rights, procedural due process claim, shutdown, immunity, camps, motion to dismiss, retaliation claim, deprived, substantive due process claim, foster child, allegations, antitrust, employees, contends, lobbying, grounds, entity, foster

Counsel: [*1] For Betty Lou Gaines, Plaintiff: Susan Henricks, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hull Henricks & MacRae, L.L.P., Austin, TX.

For Carole Strayhorn, Vickie Anderson, Ruthie Ford, Defendants: Christopher D. Sileo, Jane Webre, Stephen E. McConnico, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Scott, Douglass & McConnico, L.L.P., Austin, TX.

For Darla Jean Shaw, Sherry Lloyd, Jan Martin, Charlene Bateman, Diana Spiser, Karen Eells, Thomas Chapmond, Defendants: Kathlyn C. Wilson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Attorney General Of Texas, Austin, TX.; Terrence L. Thompson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Attorney General, Austin, TX.

Judges: ANDREW W. AUSTIN, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE.

Opinion by: ANDREW W. AUSTIN

Opinion

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION OF THE UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

TO: THE HONORABLE LEE YEAKEL

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Before the Court are the Comptroller Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss, filed October 11, 2006 (Clerk's Doc. No. 22); and Motion to Exclude Report filed by Comptroller Defendants, filed December 13, 2006 (Clerk's Doc. No. 40). The District Court referred the dispositive motion to the undersigned Magistrate Judge for a Report and Recommendation as to the merits pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636 (b)(1)(B) [*2] , Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72, and Rule 1(d) of Appendix C of the Local Rules of the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, Local Rules for the Assignment of Duties to United States Magistrate Judges. After reviewing the parties' briefs, relevant case law, as well as the entire case file, the undersigned issues the following Report and Recommendation to the District Court. The Court held a hearing on the motion on January 23, 2007. [1]

I. BACKGROUND

The Comptroller Defendants are Carole Strayhorn, Vicki Anderson, and Ruthie Ford. At the time of the events on which this suit is based, Strayhorn was the Comptroller for the State of Texas, and Anderson and Ford worked for her at the Comptroller's office. The events which precipitated this suit was Woodside Trails (or "the Camp") -- where Plaintiff was Executive Director (and, apparently, [*3] administrator and President) -- being shut down by the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services (TDFPS) [2]. The crux of Defendants' 12(b)(6) motion is whether Plaintiff's Complaint pleads facts sufficient to state a claim that Strayhorn's involvement in the process of shutting down the Camp violated Plaintiff's constitutional rights.

Plaintiff worked at the Camp on and off for 20 years, held a Child Care Administrator's license (through TDFPS), and served on a number of boards dealing with what might be called children's behavioral counseling organizations; one board she chaired. Plaintiff asserts that she is "intimately and totally identified with Woodside Trails, both in Texas and nationally." See Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint, at 5. In 2003, Plaintiff was voted by the Board -- consisting of her friends and family -- to be Executive Director [*4] of Woodside Trails; this process was repeated in June 2004. The Camp's mission was to serve severely emotionally disturbed adolescent boys, many of whom were sexual offenders. In the jargon, the Camp was known as a "primitive therapeutic camp" because it utilized the natural environment to provide therapy for the boys, such as having them construct semi-permanent structures (which they would later sleep in, at least some of the time).

At about the same time that Plaintiff became Executive Director of the Camp in 2003, Strayhorn became aware, via a story in the Dallas Morning News, of what she perceived to be a major problem in the state of foster care facilities in Texas. Strayhorn criticized TDFPS for lax regulation of these facilities and, according to Plaintiff, "bombarded [TDFPS] with multiple, extensive, and burdensome demands for information, analyses, and action," much of it focused on Woodside Trails. See Plaintiff's Response at 7. Subsequently, the Comptroller's office released "A Special Report on the Texas Foster Care System" entitled "Forgotten Children." [3] In that Report, Strayhorn depicted the worst of the foster care facilities, and included pictures of Woodside [*5] Trails (although neither the camp nor Plaintiff were mentioned by name in the Report).

Strayhorn's Report sparked intensified media interest; a local television reporter did a story on Woodside Trails that portrayed the Camp in a positive light. Plaintiff contends that after the Report's issuance, the Defendants (specifically Strayhorn) took a particularly nefarious obsession with Woodside Trails, attacking it for not meeting "permanent camp" standards even though it is a "primitive camp." Strayhorn's [*6] recommendation to shut down all camps not meeting the licensing standards for permanent therapeutic camps would have immediately shut down Woodside Trails.

The Defendants, Plaintiff alleges, went further: they called a child abuse hotline 40 times to make deceitful reports of violations at the Camp. They also reported to TDFPS that Plaintiff was "exposing children to sexual assault and

---

[1] Due to multiple requested extensions of time, the Plaintiff's response to the Comptroller's motion was not filed until December 13, 2006.

[2] This is the latest name change cum acronym for TDFPS which was previously known as the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services.

[3] The Plaintiff filed a Motion to Exclude from the Court's consideration the contents of this report, which the Defendants' had originally attached to their Rule 12(b)(6) Motion. The Defendants, in response to Plaintiff's Motion to Exclude, assented, stating that they "do not object to this court excluding the report from consideration when deciding their Rule 12(b)(6) motion." See Comptroller Defendants' Response to Motion to Exclude at 2 (Clerk's Doc. No. 46). Therefore, the Court will not consider the report.

to imminent danger" and leaned on TDFPS to explain why it had not closed any of the camps in light of the Report. Defendants further allowed, or instructed their employees to allow, reporters from a San Antonio TV station to accompany them on a "follow up inspection" of Woodside Trails by posing as state employees. The Defendants also authorized the reporters and crew to fly a helicopter over the Camp and film the children. They contacted former Camp employees talking in depth only to those who were disgruntled and willing to disparage the Camp. They reported violations to OSHA and to the Bastrop County Health and Sanitation Department. They questioned local pharmacists about pharmaceuticals taken by the children. They obtained a copy of Plainitfr s marriage certificate and her husband's expunged juvenile [*7] record.

On August 25, 2004, TDFPS revoked the Camp's license -- thereby effectively shutting it down -- citing 32 violations of "minimum standards." See Plaintiff's Response at 15. Other camps, which had four and nearly five times the number of violations as Woodside Trails were not shut down. As an alternative to revocation of its licence, the Camp was not allowed the option of utilizing a "corrective action plan," despite the fact that other camps were given this option. Plaintiff contends that the only reason her camp was shut down was because TDPFS decided that kowtowing to Defendants' pressure was the only way to avoid political recriminations. On February 18, 2005, via a letter from an employee, TDFPS revoked Plaintiff's Child Care Administrator's license.

In August 2006, Plaintiff filed this suit, claiming (via §§ 1983 and 1985) violations of her procedural and substantive due process, equal protection, First Amendment, Fourth Amendment, and Fifth Amendment rights. On October 11, 2006, the Comptroller Defendants filed their motion to dismiss what at that time was the First Amended Complaint. After several extensions of time to respond were granted, on December 13, 2006, the [*8] Plaintiff responded to the 12(b)(6) motion, and also filed a motion seeking leave to file her Second Amended Complaint. With regard to the Comptroller Defendants, the Second Amended Complaint seeks to add one claim and two new defendants. Further, it adds a little more "flesh" to the First Amendment retaliation claim, as well as to the equal protection claim. The Comptroller Defendants have objected to the amendment, arguing that the amendment would be futile because the proposed Fourth Amendment claim to be added against them is time-barred and fails to state a claim. In a separate Report & Recommendation issued today, the Court has concurred with this argument. For purposes of this motion, therefore, the Court focuses on the claims stated in the Second Amended Complaint (other than the Fourth Amendment claim) and the arguments made in the Plaintiff's response. Notably, with the Second Amended Complaint, the Plaintiff decided to drop all of her pendent state law claims against the comptroller Defendants, and thus the claims before the Court on this motion are only the federal claims made against the Comptroller Defendants. [4]

[*9] II. DISCUSSION

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), "a claim will not be dismissed unless the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief" Gen. Elec. Capital Corp. v. Posey, 415 F.3d 391, 395 (5th Cir. 2005). "A district court cannot dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim 'unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts that would entitle him to relief. '" United States ex rel. Bain v. Georgia Gulf Corp., 386 F.3d 648, 653-54 (5th Cir. 2004). The complaint must be liberally construed in favor of the plaintiff and all facts pleaded therein must be taken as true. Kane Enters. v. MacGregor (USA) Inc., 322 F.3d 371, 374 (5th Cir. 2003). "However, conclusory allegations or legal conclusions masquerading as factual conclusions will not suffice to prevent a motion to dismiss." Jones v. Alcoa, Inc., 339 F.3d 359, 362 (5th Cir. 2003).

A. Procedural Due Process Claim

[4] In her Response to the Rule 12(b)(6) Motion Plaintiff contends that she is also advancing a § 1986 cause of action. There is not, however, a § 1986 claim made in either the First or Second Amended Complaints, and the Court will treat this statement in the response as an error.

The Comptroller Defendants make a number of arguments regarding Plaintiff's procedural due process claims. Each is taken up in turn.

1. [*10] Plaintiff's Property Interest in Woodside Trails

The Defendants first argue that Plaintiff does not have a constitutionally protected property interest in Woodside Trails, and therefore her procedural due process claim against them should be dismissed. Because the Constitution protects -- rather than creates -- property interests, the existence of a property interest is determined by reference to existing rules or understandings that stem from an independent source such as state law. Phillips v. Washington Legal Foundation, 524 U.S. 156, 164, 118 S. Ct. 1925, 141 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1998). "The hallmark of property . . . is an individual entitlement grounded in state law, which cannot be removed except for cause." Woodard v. Andrus, 419 F.3d 348, 354 (5th Cir. 2005).

Defendants, in support of their proposition that Plaintiff does not have a property interest in Woodside Trails, cite Gregory v. Mitchell, a 1981 Fifth Circuit case that held that the district court properly dismissed a § 1983 claim brought by the shareholders in a state chartered bank because the plaintiffs did not have standing: "neither officers nor stockholders . . . can maintain an action to redress an injury to [*11] the corporation even though the value of their stock is impaired as a result of the injury." Gregory v. Mitchell, 634 F.2d 199, 202 (5th Cir. 1981). They also cite a recent First Circuit case noting that it is a "tenet" of the law of corporations that "[a]ctions to enforce corporate rights or redress injuries to [a] corporation cannot be maintained by a stockholder in his own name . . . even though the injury to the corporation may incidentally result in the depreciation or destruction of the value of the stock." Pagan v. Calderon, 448 F.3d 16, 28 (1st Cir. 2006).

Plaintiff, in her Second Amended Complaint, states that "Woodside Trails is a Texas non-profit corporation." See Second Amended Complaint, P 23 at 6. Under Texas law, just as non-profit corporations do not differ from the more traditional, profit-based model in their capacity to sue and be sued, see Macedonia Baptist Church v. Gibson, 833 S.W.2d 557, 559 (Tex. App. -- Texarkana, 1992) (writ denied), an officer, owner, or executive of a non-profit corporation may not sue individually to recover for injuries done to the corporation. Pagan, 448 F.3d at 28; [*12] see also Gregory, 634 F.2d at 202. Plaintiff contends that her rights and duties in connection with the Camp "cover[] all the incidents of ownership that title would convey." See Plaintiff's Response at 29 (Clerk's Doc. No. 43) (stating that Plaintiff was the Executive Director elected by family members, and the Camp "could not be closed or transferred without her consent"). Even granting that all of Plaintiff's assertions are true, her argument misses the point. She has no constitutionally protected property interest for the very reason the Pagan and Gregory courts noted: the corporation must sue to vindicate its own rights, and a shareholder or executive cannot stand in its shoes. Pagan, 448 F.3d at 28. Therefore, the Court recommends that Plaintiff's procedural due process cause(s) of action, insofar as they claim a property interest in Woodside Trails, be dismissed.

2. Plaintiff's Property Interest in Her Job and License

Defendants next arguments are that: (1) Plaintiff has no property interest in her employment status at Woodside Trails, and (2) they did not deprive Plaintiff of her property interest in her child care [*13] license.

Texas is an at-will employment state and the issue of whether there is "[a] property interest in employment . . . must be decided by reference to state law." Bishop v. Wood, 426 U.S. 341, 344, 96 S. Ct. 2074, 48 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1976). In Texas, there exists a presumption that employment is at-will unless that relationship has been expressly altered in one of two ways: (1) via contract; or (2) express rules or policies limiting the conditions under which an employee may be terminated. Muncy v. City of Dallas, 335 F.3d 394, 398 (5th Cir. 2003). Defendants point out that Plaintiff does not plead or allege that either alteration took place, and further point out that Plaintiff was never fired (and is still a member of the Camp's Board). In response, at the hearing regarding this motion, Plaintiff pointed the Court to P 21 of Second Amended Complaint where she alleges that "There was a universal explicit understanding and agreement among the board members that she was not an employee at will, but was guaranteed employment at Woodside Trails . . . [from] year to year." See Second Amended Complaint at 5-6. [5]

[*14] While Plaintiff may have a recognizable property interest in her job for purposes of a procedural due process claim, Plaintiff is overlooking the fact that the Comptroller Defendants are incapable of having violated that property interest, in that they were not the agency that revoked the Camp's license. At bottom, Plaintiff is complaining that, when the Camp was effectively shut down by TDFPS, her employment de facto terminated because she had no more clients. Put differently, while Plaintiff may allege that the Comptroller Defendants caused her to lose her job, that is not enough to state a procedural due process claim against the Comptroller Defendants. It would have been impossible, by virtue of their very position in the structure of Texas state government, for the Comptroller Defendants to provide Plaintiff any procedures that would satisfy due process at all. The Comptroller's Office and its employees did not, and could not, unilaterally shut Woodside Trails down, and therefore cause Plaintiff to lose her job (if in fact she has lost that job). Rather, the entity with a due process duty under the Constitution is the entity that revoked the Camp's and the Plaintiff's [*15] licenses - TDFPS. Thus, the procedural due process claim against the Comptroller Defendants is groundless. Thus, to the extent the Plaintiff has a claim against the Comptroller Defendants, the claim must be a substantive due process cause of action (which are taken up below).

This same issue bleeds into the Defendants' next argument: Plaintiff's allegations that she was deprived of procedural due process, because of the state administrative (SOAH) proceedings accorded her were inadequate. Plaintiff contends that the SOAH process "did not provide meaningful due process to Plaintiff because [the hearings] did not occur before the state had already damaged her reputation, closed her camp, abruptly removed foster children in her care and prohibited her from contacting those children and deprived her of the use and benefit of her child care administrator's license." See Plaintiff's Response, at 31 (Clerk's Doc. No. 43).

As with the prior issue, there is no need to get into the niceties of procedural due process law in a § 1983 cause of action to resolve this issue. [6] Instead, it only needs to be noted that it was TDFPS, not the Defendants, that deprived Plaintiff and her Camp of [*16] licenses, and it was only TDFPS that had the statutory power to do so, and thus it was only TDFPS that had the corresponding legal duty to provide due process to Plaintiff. It is worth noting here that the Court is not saying that its eyebrows have not been raised by the treatment of Plaintiff in this case. Nor is the Court intimating that Plaintiff can assert no procedural due process claims against any of the named defendants. The Court is merely making clear that the defendants tagged with depriving Plaintiff of her procedural due process rights must be those who actually had a hand in depriving Plaintiff of her license.

Given the foregoing, [*17] the Court recommends that all claims Plaintiff has made against the Comptroller Defendants regarding her license or employment at Woodside Trails be dismissed.

B. Substantive Due Process

Defendants contend that Plaintiff's claims under the other wing of Fourteenth Amendment due process jurisprudence -- substantive due process -- must also fail, because their conduct cannot be classified as arbitrary or conscience shocking. The Supreme Court's last major pronouncement on the contents of a substantive due process claim came in County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 118 S. Ct. 1708, 140 L. Ed. 2d 1043 (1998).

---

[5] Defendants' cite a Texas Supreme Court case for the proposition that the "employer must unequivocally indicate a definite intent to be bound not to terminate the employee except under clearly specified circumstances." Montgomery County Hosp. Dist. v. Brown, 965 S.W.2d 501, 502, 41 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 537 (Tex. 1998). While this is no doubt the case, the Court would be engaging in weighing just how "unequivocal" or "definite" the intent of the Camp's agreement with Plaintiff was if it were to grant the motion to dismiss on this issue. This is not appropriate at this stage of the litigation.

[6] The issue, it seems, would turn on availability of pre-verus post-deprivation notice and hearing. See, e.g., Cleveland Board of Education v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 542, 105 S. Ct. 1487, 84 L. Ed. 2d 494 (1985) ("The root requirement of the Due Process Clause is that an individual be given an opportunity for a hearing before he is deprived of any significant protected interest").

The Court reiterated and reinforced its half-century old "shock the conscience" test, see Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165, 72 S. Ct. 205, 96 L. Ed. 183 (1952), stating that "conduct that shocks the conscience and violates the decencies of civilized conduct" in turn violates due process rights. Lewis, 523 U.S. at 847. See also Breithaupt v. Abram, 352 U.S. 432, 435, 77 S. Ct. 408, 1 L. Ed. 2d 448 (1957) (reiterating that conduct that "'shocked the conscience' and was so 'brutal' and 'offensive' that it did not comport with traditional ideas of fair play and decency" would violate substantive [*18] due process); Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 327, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251 (1986) (same); United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 746, 107 S. Ct. 2095, 95 L. Ed. 2d 697 (1987) ("So-called substantive due process prevents the government from engaging in conduct that shocks the conscience . . . or interferes with rights implicit in the concept of ordered liberty"). Squarely put, Justice Souter, writing for the Court, stated that, "the substantive component of the Due Process Clause is violated by executive action only when it can properly be characterized as arbitrary, or conscience shocking, in a constitutional sense." Lewis, 523 U.S. at 847 (citations omitted).

The phrase "in a Constitutional sense" is important. Substantive due process is not meant as "a 'font of tort law to be superimposed upon whatever systems may already be administered by the States.'" Id. at 848 (quoting Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693, 701, 96 S. Ct. 1155, 47 L. Ed. 2d 405 (1976)). Put differently, "the Constitution does not guarantee due care on the part of state officials; liability for negligently inflicted harm is categorically beneath the threshold of constitutional due process." Id. (quoting Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 328, 106 S. Ct. 662, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1986). [*19] Instead, only "conduct intended to injure in some way unjustifiable by any government interest is the sort of official action most likely to rise to the conscience-shocking level." Id.

In her pleading, Plaintiff lists the following actions -- worth reiterating here -- that she argues rise to the level of conscience-shocking behavior, as a matter of law:

. Strayhorn lacked legal authority to carry out her investigation into Texas's foster care system.

. The investigation was motivated solely by Strayhorn's gubernatorial ambitions.

. Defendants have refused to retract or modify the many alleged inaccuracies and falsehoods in the "Forgotten Children" report.

. Defendants, angry that Plaintiff spoke out against them and defended herself, retaliated against her.

. In order to get TV reporters onto the grounds at Woodside Trails to secretly film Plaintiff and some of the foster children, Defendants lied about their affiliation.

. Acting as Defendants' agents, TV reporters flew over the Camp in a helicopter at a low attitude to film the Camp and its inhabitants.

. Defendants, during the course of their investigation, obtained Plaintiff's marriage [*20] license and her husband's expunged juvenile record.

. Defendants contacted the Camp's local pharmacy to obtain confidential drug prescription information about the Camp's employees and the foster children there.

. Defendants used local law enforcement agents in a similar manner.

. The Defendants made false reports to OSHA about working conditions at the Camp.

. Defendant Ford threatened a chairwoman of the Camp, who also happened to be a state employee, with negative employment actions because of her service with the Camp.

Plaintiff is of course correct that Defendants' burden in a motion to dismiss is high, but the same holds true for her burden in advancing a substantive due process claim. The Fifth Circuit has held, for example, that a county hospital's failure to screen blood such that plaintiff was infected with HIV is only negligent behavior, and does not shock the conscience. Kinzie v. Dallas County Hosp. Dist., 106 Fed. App'x 192, 194 (5th Cir. 2003). Conversely, the Fifth Circuit held that where a teacher fabricated a charge of sexual abuse against a student's father -- the girl was four years old and the teacher guided her hands [*21] over a keyboard to type out the allegation -- did shock the conscience. Morris v. Dearborne, 181 F.3d 657, 668 (5th Cir. 1999).

No doubt much of the Defendants' behavior in this case, delineated above, is untoward and petty. No doubt much of the behavior is (much) less than one would expect from an elected official or her staff However, the Court cannot go further than that. It cannot say, even with all of the excesses and misjudgments of this investigation, that Defendants' "conduct intended to injure [Plaintiff] in some way unjustifiable by any government interest." Lewis, 523

U.S. at 848 (emphasis added). Put differently, Defendants' conduct here does not, in the same way the teacher's fabrication of sexual abuse claim did, shock the judicial conscience. See Perez v. Unified Govt. Of Wyandotte County/Kansan City, Kan., 432 F.3d 1163, 1168 n.4 (10th Cir. 2005) (issue of conscience-shocking behavior as it pertains to substantive due process is a question of law for the Court, not a question of fact for the jury). That is to say, Texas surely has a governmental interest in being aware of and vigilantly investigating [*22] the state of foster child care in Texas, particularly given that foster children are a politically powerless constituency saddled with the burden of being unable to vote or champion their own cause. Because the Court finds that, even taking as true all of the Plaintiff's allegations regarding the Comptroller Defendants' actions, that the conduct does not shock the conscience, the substantive due process claim should be dismissed.

Defendants also argue that the substantive due process claim must be dismissed under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine is grounded in the First Amendment right to petition the government. Originally, it provided that parties who petition the government for governmental action favorable to them cannot be prosecuted under the antitrust laws even though if their petitioning is motivated by anti-competitive intent. Gibbes v. Ameristar Casino Vicksburg Inc., 137 F. App'x 673, 674 n.2 (5th Cir. 2005). The doctrine has its origins in two U.S. Supreme Court cases: Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961) and United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626(1965). [*23] Plaintiff argues that the Fifth Circuit has not applied the Noerr-Pennington doctrine outside the field of antitrust law, and urges the Court to follow the Fifth Circuit case Video International Production, Inc. v. Warner-Amex Cable Communications, Inc., 858 F.2d 1075 (5th Cir. 1988). There, the Fifth Circuit noted that the "point of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is to protect private parties when they petition the government for laws or interpretations of its existing laws even though those private parties are pursuing their goals with anticompetitive intent." 858 F.2d at 1083.

This argument ignores the more recent case of Bayou Fleet, Inc. v. Alexander, a Fifth Circuit case from 2000. There, the Circuit stated that "[a]lthough the Supreme Court has limited its discussion of Noerr-Pennington immunity to cases involving antitrust litigation, this Court has extended the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to include claims under section 1983." Bayou Fleet, Inc. v. Alexander, 234 F.3d 852, 859 (5th Cir. 2000). [7] Plaintiff's argument also fails to recognize the clear trend among the federal courts to extend the Noerr-Pennington [*24] doctrine beyond antitrust law. See e.g., Herr v. Pequea Township, 274 F.3d 109, 115 (3d Cir. 2001) (overruled on other grounds, United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. v. Township of Warrington, PA, 316 F.3d 392, 400 (3d Cir. 2003) ("principles relied upon [under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine] are not limited to antitrust liability" and "[t]he First Amendment right to petition extends to all departments of government . . . [t]he protection it affords thus applies . . . to petitioning state agencies."); Gorman Towers, Inc. v. Bogoslavsky, 626 F.2d 607, 615 (8th Cir. 1980) (section 1983) (landowners' secret meetings with city officials to petition for enactment of city ordinance to rezone plaintiffs property within doctrine); Sawmill Products, Inc. v. Town of Cicero, 477 F. Supp. 636, 642 (N.D. 111.1979) (section 1983) (protesting presence of plaintiff's sawmill which was then shut down by town ordinance); Weiss v. Willow Tree Civic Ass'n, 467 F. Supp. 803, 816-18 (S.D.N.Y. 1979) (section 1983) (lobbying town officials and filing groundless judicial and administrative complaints to oppose zoning [*25] permit); Aknin v. Phillips, 404 F.Supp. 1150, 1153 (S.D.N.Y. 1975), aff'd, 538 F.2d 307 (2d Cir. 1976) (section 1983) (urging officials to enforce unconstitutionally vague noise ordinance against plaintiff's discotheque); Sierra Club v. Butz, 349 F. Supp. 934, 938-39 (N.D. Cal. 1972) (contractual interference) (filing lawsuit and administrative appeals to halt plaintiff's logging operation; filings constitutionally privileged even if motivated by malice)). [8] [7] There is also authority for the proposition that the Supreme Court has applied Noerr-Pennington outside of the antitrust context. See e.g., Barnes Foundation v. Township Lower Merion, 242 F.3d 151 (3d Cir. 2001).

---

[8] Plaintiff also argues that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine only applies to private persons, not government officials. Defendants cogently argue that Plaintiff is suing them in their individual, not official, capacities -- as they must, see Esteves v. Brock, 106 F.3d 674, 677 (5th Cir. 1997) ("As a state officer acting in her official capacity, however, Brock is protected by the Eleventh Amendment from suit under section 1983 for money damages") -- therefore she cannot deny that Noerr-Pennington applies in this case because the case law infra, e.g. Herr, 274 F.3d 109 (3d Cir. 2001), holds that the immunity attaches to officials sued in

[*26] Plaintiff's other argument regarding the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is that "the actions of the Comptroller Defendants went well beyond appropriate petitioning activity" that the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine would protect. [9] [*27] The Third Circuit has squarely held that Noerr-Pennington immunity protects the petitioning activity of public entities, at least so long as the protected petitioning activity constitutes the petitioning of a distinct public entity authorized by state law to resolve the issue at stake. See Herr, 274 F.3d at 119; Mariana v. Fisher, 338 F.3d 189 (3d Cir. 2003). A publicity campaign directed at the general public and seeking government action is covered by Noerr-Pennington immunity. Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 499-500, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988). In Manistee Town Center v. City of Glendale, 227 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir.2000), the Ninth Circuit held that Glendale, the city, was protected by Noerr-Pennington immunity for its lobbying of the county (Maricopa). Id. at 1093. [10]

Here, the Defendants lobbied TDPFS to take action on a problem they thought important: the state of foster care in Texas. Stern v. United States Gypsum, Inc., 547 F.2d 1329 (7th Cir. 1977), a § 1985 case, is also enlightening. [11] There, Noerr-Pennington immunity was extended to executives at the defendant company even though they made charges they knew to be false about an IRS agent to his superiors. Id. at 1342-46. Given this, whether Defendants are viewed as government officials lobbying another branch of government or private citizens (who are employed by the government) [*28] their lobbying for action on a cause celebre, is a petitioning activity protected by Noerr-Pennigton's grant of immunity. Bayou Fleet, 234 F.3d at 859 ("Noerr-Pennington immunity applies to any concerted effort to sway public officials regardless of the private citizen's intent"). This is an additional reason for dismissal of Plaintiff's substantive due process claims against the Comptroller Defendants.

C. Equal Protection

Defendants also argue that Plaintiff's Equal Protection clause claim must be dismissed because Plaintiff fails to identify a similarly situated person or entity that was treated differently. Plaintiff counters that she has stated a claim under the Equal Protection clause because she was not offered so-called "risk evaluation" -- a procedure "which might have allowed her to remain in contact with children [who were removed by TDFPS] after the evaluation was completed" -- that was offered to other counselors similarly situated. See Plaintiff's Response at 32 (Clerk's Doc. No. 43). Plaintiff further contends that Woodside Trails was subjected to increased scrutiny than were other camps, and, moreover, camps that had more regulations [*29] violations -- both in quantity and in quality -- were given more lenient compliance options. [12]

Defendants question, rightly, how the Equal Protection clause violation can be laid at their feet, when the injuries complained of are injuries to Woodside Trails, not Plaintiff, and, moreover, the complained-of actions were taken by TDFPS, not the Comptroller's Office. "A party who wishes to make out an Equal Protection claim must prove 'the the individual capacity (and even the dissent, whose reasoning the Plaintiff champions, agrees with this point). Therefore, the whole issue of whether Noerr-Pennington immunity is only available to private parties is moot because all the Defendants are private parties being sued in their individual capacity.

---

[9] That is, Plaintiff argues, some of the activity enumerated above cannot be classified as petitioning activity. This is true, but, as the Court has just found, that activity, in any event, does not violate her substantive due process rights.

[10] The Court is aware of the "sham" litigation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity, however, it is difficult to see how that exception would apply to this case and neither party briefed this point. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) (defining the "sham" exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity to include "only lawsuits that are both objectively baseless and subjectively intended to abuse process").

[11] It is worth noting the peculiar nature of the facts in this case. As discussed in the text, Defendants, even though government employees when the “campaign” against Woodside Trails took place, are for purposes of this suit private citizens. See infra note 7. Therefore, cases where the defendants are government officials and cases where the defendants are private citizens are instructive for present purposes.

[12] While Plaintiff includes perfunctory language about equal protection violations in each of her first six counts, the only legal arguments she makes in her Response are those delineated above.

existence of purposeful discrimination' motivating the state action which caused the complained-of injury.'" McCleskey v. Kemp, 481 U.S. 279, 292-293, 107 S. Ct. 1756, 95 L. Ed. 2d 262 (1987) (citation omitted); Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 264-266, 97 S. Ct. 555, 50 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1977). "Discriminatory purpose in an equal protection context implies that the decisionmaker [*30] selected a particular course of action at least in part because of, and not simply in spite of, the adverse impact it would have on an identifiable group." Johnson v. Rodriguez, 110 F.3d 299, 306-07 (5th Cir. 1997).

Plaintiff cannot state a valid Equal Protection claim against the Defendants. The charges she levels in her Second Amended Complaint are, in the first place, injuries sustained by the Camp, and, as noted above, Plaintiff cannot sue to recover for injuries to the Camp. Second, even if Plaintiff is referring to the revocation of her license -- an argument she does not make in the Equal Protection clause context -- this was action taken by TDPFS, not the Defendants. [13] The complained of "state actions" were made by the officials other than the Defendants here, see McCleskey, 481 U.S. at 292-93. For these reasons, it is recommended that the Comptroller Defendants' summary judgment motion on Plaintiff's Equal protection clause claim be granted.

[*31] F. First Amendment Retaliation Claim [14]

Defendants' contend that Plaintiff's First Amendment retaliation claims fails. They put forth a number of different arguments. However, the central point here is this: The Fifth Circuit has set forth the framework for determining when a public employee's speech rights have been violated. To prevail on a § 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim, a public employee must establish the following: (1) he suffered an adverse employment action; (2) his speech involved a matter of public concern; (3) his interest in commenting on matters of public concern outweighs the employer's interest in promoting efficiency; and (4) his speech motivated the employer's adverse action. Oscar Renda Contracting, Inc. v. City of Lubbock, Texas, 463 F.3d 378, 382 (5th Cir. 2006). Plaintiff cannot bring a First Amendment [*32] retaliation claim because she was not a public employee, and, for that matter, was not an employee of Strayhorn's or the Comptroller's office. She is not, in other words, a member of the possible universe of plaintiffs that could bring a First Amendment retaliation claim. [15] Therefore, it is recommended that this claim be dismissed.

[*33] G. State Law Claims

Plaintiff, in her Second Amended Complaint, agreed to drop all her pending state law claims against the Comptroller Defendants. Therefore, the Court will recommend that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss be granted as to the state law claims.

---

[13] Although it is not entirely clear from her Response, it appears that Plaintiff, when she complains that the children at the Camp were removed without the option of "risk evaluation" (a process that was offered to others accused of abuse) is arguing about an equal protection violation personal to her. See Plaintiff's Response at 35-36. However, even if that is the case, the point remains that the "risk evaluation" was a TDFPS decision, not one made by the Comptrollers.

[14] Contrary to Defendants' assertion, in Count I of her Second Amended Complaint, Plaintiff pleads a First Amendment retaliation claim. See Complaint at 39.

[15] For example, one of Defendants' arguments here is that because Plaintiff's license was restored after the administrative hearing, and because she has no protected interest in her employment, she cannot uphold her burden because the Fifth Circuit has construed Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693, 96 S. Ct. 1155, 47 L. Ed. 2d 405 (1976), to require "a section 1983 plaintiff to show stigma plus an infringement of some other interest." Blackburn v. City of Marshall, 42 F.3d 925, 935-36 (5th Cir. 1995). In other words, Defendants contend Plaintiff cannot show the "plus" because all of her other claims fail. This argument, however, puts the cart before the horse. The Fifth Circuit, in Breax v. City of Garland, noted that "Stigma, by itself, without an impact on one's employment, does not constitute an adverse employment action." 205 F.3d 150, 158 n. 14 (5th Cir. 2000) (citing Blackburn, 42 F.3d at 935-36) (emphasis added).

III. RECOMMENDATIONS

Based on the above, the Magistrate Court RECOMMENDS that the District Court GRANT Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss (Clerk's Doc. No. 22) and dismiss all of the claims against Carole Strayhorn, Vicki Anderson, and Ruthie Ford for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted.

IV. WARNINGS

The parties may file objections to this Report and Recommendation. A party filing objections must specifically identify those findings or recommendations to which objections are being made. The District Court need not consider frivolous, conclusive, or general objections. See Battle v. United States Parole Comm'n, 834 F.2d 419, 421 (5th Cir. 1987).

A party's failure to file written objections to the proposed findings and recommendations contained in this Report within ten (10) days after the party is served with a copy of the Report shall bar that [*34] party from de novo review by the District Court of the proposed findings and recommendations in the Report and, except upon grounds of plain error, shall bar the party from appellate review of unobjected-to proposed factual findings and legal conclusions accepted by the District Court. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(C); Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 150-53, 106 S. Ct. 466, 88 L. Ed. 2d 435, (1985); Douglass v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n, 79 F.3d 1415, 1428-29 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc).

To the extent that a party has not been served by the Clerk with this Report & Recommendation electronically pursuant to the CM/ECF procedures of this District, the Clerk is directed to mail such party a copy of this Report and Recommendation by certified mail, return receipt requested.

SIGNED this 21<st> day of February 2007.

ANDREW W. AUSTIN

UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

End of Document

First Am. Title Co. v. Devaugh

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

December 7, 2006, Argued ; February 22, 2007, Decided ; February 22, 2007, Filed

File Name: 07a0073p.06

No. 06-1171

Reporter

480 F.3d 438 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 3801 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,604; 2007 FED App. 0073P (6th Cir.)

FIRST AMERICAN TITLE COMPANY, a California Corporation; TRANSNATION TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, an Arizona Corporation; LAWYERS TITLE INSURANCE CORPORATION, a Virginia Corporation; and CHICAGO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, a Missouri Corporation, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. MELISSA R. DEVAUGH, in her capacity as the LAPEER COUNTY REGISTER OF DEEDS; FRAN FULLER, in her capacity as the EATON COUNTY REGISTER OF DEEDS; MILDRED DODAK, in her capacity as the SAGINAW COUNTY REGISTER OF DEEDS; VIRGINIA MCLAREN, in her capacity as the TUSCOLA COUNTY REGISTER OF DEEDS; and LINDA M. LANDHEER, in her capacity as the NEWAYGO COUNTY REGISTER OF DEEDS, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: Rehearing, en banc, denied by First Am. Title Co. v. Devaugh, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861 (6th Cir., July 12, 2007)

Summary judgment granted by, Injunction granted at First Am. Title Co. v. DeVaugh, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75595 (E.D. Mich., Sept. 25, 2008)

Prior History: First Am. Title Co. v. Devaugh, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60708 (E.D. Mich., Dec. 22, 2005)

Disposition: The appellate court affirmed the dismissal of the complaint against the fifth county register, but reversed the decision of the district court as to the remaining four county registers, and remanded for further proceedings that were consistent with the opinion.

Core Terms

registers, copies, records, Sherman Act, immunity, deeds, public body, state-action, district court, enhanced, public record, anticompetitive, authorizes, bulk, non-paper, contracts, reproduction, municipality, discount, state policy, articulated, foreseeable, purchasers, inspection, powers, anticompetitive conduct, unofficial, no-resale, digital, challenged practice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

An appellate court reviews de novo a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. To survive the 12(b)(6) motion, the complaint must allege facts which, if proved, would entitle it to relief. The court construes the complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiff, accept its factual allegations as true, and determine whether it can prove no set of facts in support of its claims that would entitle it to relief. Although this is a liberal pleading standard, it requires more than the bare assertion of legal conclusions. Rather, the complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Scope

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN3[] Scope, Exemptions

The Parker doctrine exempts anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the state as sovereign, or, by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service from Sherman Act control. The United States Supreme Court later established a two-part test for determining whether Parker state-action immunity saves a state statute or a county practice from preemption by the Sherman Act: First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN4[] Sherman Act, Scope

The threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe, is whether the activity is required by the State acting as sovereign.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Scope

A state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct may be clearly articulated within the meaning of Midcal.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6[] Legislation, Interpretation

One of the most basic canons of statutory interpretation is that a more specific provision takes precedence over a more general one. This is true even when there is no direct conflict between the general statute and the specific one.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN7[] Preliminary Considerations, Federal & State Interrelationships

A state court's opinion on an issue of federal law is entitled to no deference whatsoever.

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

HN8[] Local Governments, Duties & Powers

As a matter of Michigan law as interpreted by the Michigan Court of Appeals, a county's state-granted general powers to make contracts and manage its own business affairs implicitly encompass the power to condition bulk public record sales on relinquishment of the right to resell the records.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

Plainly the requirement of clear articulation and affirmative expression is not satisfied when the state's position is one of mere neutrality respecting the actions challenged as anticompetitive.

Counsel: [1] ARGUED: David A. Ettinger, HONIGMAN, MILLER, SCHWARTZ & COHN, Detroit, Michigan, for Appellants. Bonnie G. Toskey, COHL, STOKER, TOSKEY & McGLINCHEY, Lansing, Michigan, for Appellees.

ON BRIEF: David A. Ettinger, HONIGMAN, MILLER, SCHWARTZ & COHN, Detroit, Michigan, for Appellants. Bonnie G. Toskey, COHL, STOKER, TOSKEY & McGLINCHEY, Lansing, Michigan, Marcia L. Howe, JOHNSON, ROSATI, LaBARGE, ASELTYNE & FIELD, Farmington Hills, Michigan, Christina M. Grossi, GILBERT, SMITH & BORRELLO, Saginaw, Michigan, for Appellees.

Judges: Before: BATCHELDER and GRIFFIN, Circuit Judges; PHILLIPS, District Judge.*

Opinion by: McGLINCHEY

Opinion

[*439] GRIFFIN, Circuit Judge. The plaintiffs-appellants are four title insurance companies that do business in Michigan: First American Title Company (a subsidiary of First American Corporation), Transnation Title Insurance Company (a subsidiary of LandAmerica Financial Group, Inc.), Chicago [2] Title Insurance Company (a subsidiary of Fidelity National Financial, Inc.), and Lawyers Title Insurance Company (a subsidiary of LandAmerica Financial Group, Inc.), collectively referred to as "First American." [*440] The defendants-appellees are the

* The Honorable Thomas W. Phillips, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Tennessee, sitting by designation.

Registers of Deeds of five counties in Michigan: Lapeer, Eaton, Saginaw, Tuscola, and Newaygo, collectively referred to as "the registers."

First American alleges that the Lapeer, Eaton, Saginaw, and Newaygo County registers refuse to provide duplicate records in non-paper formats, or to provide duplicate paper records at a bulk discount, unless First American agrees not to sell or give the duplicate records, unofficial copies of the copies, or the information therein, to anyone else. First American contends that this no-resale condition is an anticompetitive practice that violates the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. First American also alleges that the Tuscola County Register violated the Sherman Act by refusing to provide official title record copies in non-paper format, and by refusing to provide paper copies at a bulk discount; First American does not allege that the Tuscola County Register imposed [3] a no-resale condition on the availability of such copies.

The registers moved to dismiss the Sherman Act claims for failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted, FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6), on the ground that the challenged practices qualify for state-action immunity. The district court granted the registers' motion, and First American appeals. For the reasons that follow, we affirm the dismissal of the Sherman Act claims with regard to the challenged practices of the Tuscola County Register because those practices are covered by state-action immunity from antitrust liability. But we reverse the dismissal of the Sherman Act claims with regard to the challenged practices of the other four county registers and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I.

Because First American asserted claims under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and the United States Constitution, the district court had federal-question jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. The district court had supplemental jurisdiction over First American's state-law claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a) [4] because they "so related" to First American's federal-law claims as to "form part of the same case or controversy." Id.; Davet v. City of Cleveland, 456 F.3d 549, 553 (6th Cir. 2006). Because the appellants filed timely notices of appeal, we have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

II.

In general, a register of deeds ("register") is a government official charged with the tasks of (1) recording all deeds, mortgages, and other instruments that convey an interest in land in the register's county, and (2) maintaining copies of those records for public inspection and reproduction. In Michigan, a register operates only in the county in which she has been elected; each county register therefore has an effective monopoly because obtaining a complete listing of real estate title documents otherwise entails obtaining title records directly from every person and entity engaged in real estate transactions within the county. As First American explains without contradiction from the registers, this "task would be essentially impossible, since there would be no incentive for individuals to identify themselves or provide documents concerning their [5] transactions to a private party [such as plaintiff title companies], and the cost of collecting this data would be prohibitive."

As a title insurer, First American's business includes compiling, inspecting, and researching each document that is recorded and maintained by the registers in the [*441] counties where First American provides title insurance. Based on information in those documents, First American creates, maintains, and provides indices and abstracts of that information. The development of such a document index -- called a tract index or a title plant -- enables First American to retrieve title documents more quickly and accurately than it could if it used the registers' grantor-grantee indices. This is because a tract index, unlike a register's grantor-grantee index, lists records by parcel of real estate. First American provides its tract indices to title insurance customers and to other companies that do not have their own indices, thus providing a superior source of title information. This enables title insurers and parties to real estate transactions to identify and resolve defects in title.

The Michigan Legislature ("the Legislature") requires registers, upon payment [6] of a fee, to record "reproductions . . . of all deeds, mortgages, maps, and instruments or writings authorized by law to be recorded in his or her office, and left with him or her for that purpose." M.C.L. § 565.491; see also M.C.L. § 565.583. Since 1921, the Legislature has authorized the counties by statute > to purchase or make, establish and maintain a system of abstracts of title to all lands in said county; to make and sell abstracts of title and furnish information concerning the conditions of title to such lands and to charge such fees therefor as shall be from time to time determined by the proper authorities of said counties as hereinafter provided.

M.C.L. § 53.141; see also M.C.L. § 565.201(1) (specifying the information that an instrument must contain in order to be recorded with a register of deeds); M.C.L. §§ 565.411 and 565.412 (register may receive and record a sealed, certified copy of any final judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction that affects or relates to the title of real estate that is situated within [7] his county, and it may collect the same fee as charged for recording a conveyance).

Perhaps most relevant, the statute governing reproduction of registers' records, now M.C.L. § 565.551, provides, in full:

> Sec. 1. (1) A register of deeds shall furnish proper and reasonable facilities for the inspection and examination of the records and files in his or her office, and for making memorandums or transcripts from the records and files during the usual business hours, to an individual having a lawful purpose to examine the records and files. However, the custodian of the records and files may make reasonable rules and regulations with reference to the inspection and examination of the records and files as is necessary to protect the records and files and to prevent interference with the regular discharge of the duties of the register of deeds.
> (2) If an individual requests a reproduction of a record or file of a register of deeds, the register of deeds shall do 1 of the following, at the register of deeds' option:
>
> (a) Reproduce the record or file for the individual pursuant to . . . sections 24.401 to 24.403 of the Michigan Compiled Laws, [8] using a medium selected by the register of deeds. Unless a different fee is provided for by law, the fee for a reproduction under this subdivision other than a paper copy shall not exceed the reasonable costs to the register of deeds.
>
> (b) Provide equipment for the individual to reproduce the record or file pursuant to [same statutory sections noted above], using a medium selected by the register of deeds. Unless a different fee is provided for by law, the fee for a reproduction [*442] under this subdivision other than a paper copy shall not exceed the reasonable costs to the register of deeds.
> (c) Authorize the individual to reproduce the record or file on the premises using equipment provided by that individual. This subdivision does not apply unless the individual requests authorization to reproduce the record or file using equipment provided by that individual.
> (3) A register of deeds may prohibit the reproduction of an instrument temporarily left with the register of deeds to be recorded in the register of deeds' office.

M.C.L. §§ 565.551(2)(a) and (b) incorporate M.C.L. §§ 24.401 through 24.403, which are [9] part of the Records Reproduction Act of 1992. In turn, M.C.L. § 24.402 provides that a Michigan governmental entity or official may reproduce a record via photograph, photocopy, microreproduction, optical media, data transfer, digitization, digital migration, digital imaging, magnetic media, printing, and any other method or medium that is approved by the Department of History, Arts, & Libraries. When a register makes a paper copy of a record, M.C.L. §§ 600.2567(1)(b) and (4) authorizes him or her to charge $1.00 per page.

None of these statutory provisions, nor any others identified by the registers, addresses the registers' authority to regulate or restrict private parties' re-sale of record copies or their sale of unofficial copies of those record copies or of information contained therein.

III.

In February 2005, First American filed a three-count complaint in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan. Count one alleges that the registers committed antitrust violations under § 2 of the Sherman Act and seeks injunctive relief. Specifically, First American alleged that the registers used their monopoly [10] power to restrict competition in the provision of title information in their counties by imposing license restrictions and anticompetitive contracts on title companies and, in some cases, by refusing to provide discounted rates for the bulk purchase of title records. First American alleged that the registers intended these restrictions to hamper the title companies' long-standing practice of re-selling title record copies as part of "title plants" and title searches to companies and to people engaged in real estate transactions.

First American further alleged that the registers abused their positions as public repositories of land title records, in contravention of Michigan statutes that are intended to make title information readily available to buyers and sellers of real estate. First American contends that the registers' practices have increased title insurance costs for home buyers and sellers and raised barriers to entry into the title insurance market in these five counties, thereby preventing title insurers from offering faster, higher-quality title searches.

Count two is a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim alleging that the registers violated First American's [11] federal constitutional rights to procedural due process, substantive due process, and equal protection. Count three alleges that the registers established and maintained systems of indices or tracts in violation of M.C.L. § 53.141 et seq.

The registers moved to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted, and First American filed opposition briefs. In June 2005, the district court dismissed First American's Sherman Act claims (count one) and its federal due-process and equal-protection claims (count [*443] two) for failure to state a claim. The district court declined to dismiss First American's state statutory claim (count three) at that juncture. [1]

With regard to count one, the district [12] court held that the registers qualified for state-action immunity from Sherman Act antitrust liability, citing a Michigan statute that granted the registers the general power to make contracts. Relying on Michigan Paytel Joint Venture v. City of Detroit, 287 F.3d 527 (6th Cir. 2002), the district court concluded that, because the state had granted the registers the general power to contract, the registers had "antitrust immunity in setting terms within a contract." [2]

[13] In June 2005, First American moved for reconsideration with regard to the dismissal of its Sherman Act antitrust claim, contending that the district's court's "ruling on the State Action Immunity doctrine established a new, virtual per se immunity rule, which is contrary to controlling Supreme Court and Sixth Circuit precedent and confounds the basic premises of the doctrine." In August 2005, the district court denied reconsideration, stating that > a tension exists between the United States Supreme Court['s] reasoning in Community Communications Company, Inc. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982), and the subsequent Sixth Circuit reasoning in Michigan Paytel Joint Venture v. City of Detroit, 287 F.3d 527 (6th Cir. 2002). Given this tension, the court's conclusion that Defendants' actions are protected by the state action exception to the Sherman Act is certainly debatable. However, the court's decision did not constitute palpable error. It was an attempt to faithfully construe the broad language used in a recently published Sixth Circuit decision. Plaintiffs['] arguments, which are quite persuasive, are best directed [14] at the Sixth Circuit if the Plaintiffs seek appellate review and further explanation of that court's reasoning in Michigan Paytel.

In January 2006, First American and the other plaintiffs filed a timely notice of appeal with regard to the dismissal of their Sherman Act claims.

---

[1] The district court rejected the registers' abstention and preclusion arguments, and the registers have not appealed.

[2] With regard to count two's procedural due-process claim, the district court held that First American failed to establish a liberty or property interest in the ability to purchase public records at a bulk rate with the right to resell them. With regard to the substantive due-process and equal protection claims, the district court held that the registers' practices bore a rational relation to the legitimate state interest in maintaining and increasing revenue from public record sales. Regarding count three, the district court denied summary judgment, finding "a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the Registers are indeed illegally maintaining a system of abstract of title" in violation of Michigan statute. The district court later issued a separate opinion dismissing count three, holding that the relevant state statute did not provide a private right of action. First American has not appealed the dismissal of counts two and three.

IV.

HN1[] We review de novo a dismissal under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. S.E. Texas Inns, Inc. v. Prime Hospitality Corp., 462 F.3d 666, 671 (6th Cir. 2006) (citation omitted). To survive the 12(b)(6) motion, First American's complaint must allege facts which, if proved, would entitle it to relief. Id. (citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). We construe the complaint in the light most favorable to First American, accept its factual allegations as true, and [*444] determine whether it can prove no set of facts in support of its claims that would entitle it to relief. Id. "Although this is a liberal pleading standard, it requires more than the bare assertion of legal conclusions. Rather, the complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting [15] all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory." Id. at 671-72 (citation omitted).

V.

First American brings its claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, which provides that HN2[] "[e]very person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. The sole issue on appeal is whether these registers' challenged practices are exempt from the Sherman Act under the "state action" immunity doctrine, which was first set forth in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). Parker held that > nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history . . . suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its [16] officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress.

> The Sherman Act makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state. The act is applicable to "persons" including corporations . . . .
>
> There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain state action in the Act's legislative history. The sponsor of the bill which was ultimately enacted as the Sherman Act declared that it prevented only "business combinations." [citations to Cong. Rec. omitted] That its purpose was to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations, abundantly appears from its legislative history.

Parker, 317 U.S. at 351 (citations omitted). HN3[] The Parker doctrine "exempts 'anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the state as sovereign, or, by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service' from Sherman Act control." Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass'n, 442 F.3d 410, 440-41 (6th Cir. 2006) (quoting City of No. Olmsted v. Greater Cleveland Reg'l Transit Auth., 722 F.2d 1284, 1287 (6th Cir. 1983) [17] (quoting City of Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 413, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (Brennan, J. [3] (" Lafayette "))), cert. granted on other grounds, -- U.S. --, 127 S. Ct. 852, 166 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2007).

[*445] The Supreme Court later "established a two-part test for determining whether [Parker state-action immunity] saves a state statute [or a county practice] from preemption by the Sherman Act: 'First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself.'" Tritent Int'l Corp. v. Kentucky, 467 F.3d 547, 554-55 (6th Cir. 2006) (quoting Calif.

---

[3] In Parts II and III of his opinion, which we quote and rely on here, Justice Brennan spoke only for four Justices: himself and Justices Marshall, Powell, and Stevens. Several of the registers attack Lafayette as "merely a plurality opinion having no precedential force." Their attempt to escape Lafayette is unavailing. As the Supreme Court noted twenty-five years ago, the Lafayette plurality's "standard has since been adopted by a majority of the Court." City of Boulder, 455 U.S. at 51 (citing New Motor Vehicle Bd. of Calif. v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96, 109, 99 S. Ct. 403, 58 L. Ed. 2d 361 (1978) and Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105).

Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980) ("Midcal")); see also Brentwood, 442 F.3d at 441. Both Midcal elements "are directed at ensuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy." FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992) (" Ticor ") (citing Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1988)). [18]

The Supreme Court has held that Midcal 's second prong does not apply to municipalities:

> [T]he requirement of active state supervision [Midcal 's second prong] serves essentially an evidentiary function: it is one way of ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy. In [19] Midcal we stated that the active state supervision requirement was necessary to prevent a State from circumventing the Sherman Act's proscriptions "by casting . . . a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially a private price-fixing arrangement." 445 U.S., at 106 . . . . Where a private party is engaging in the anticompetitive activity, there is a real danger that he is acting to further his own interests, rather than the governmental interests of the State. Where the actor is a municipality, there is little or no danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. The only real danger is that it will seek to further purely parochial public interests at the expense of more overriding state goals. This danger is minimal, however, because of the requirement that the municipality act pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy [Midcal 's first prong]. Once it is clear that state authorization exists, there is no need to require the State to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function.

Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 46-47, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) [20] (" Hallie ").

Finally, like other judicially-imposed exemptions from the antitrust laws, the state-action immunity doctrine must be narrowly construed. Brentwood, 442 F.3d at 441 (citing Ticor, 504 U.S. at 636) ("[W]e have held that state-action immunity is disfavored . . . .")).

VI.

We hold that the challenged practices of the Saginaw County, Eaton County, Lapeer County, and Newaygo County registers do not qualify for Parker state-action immunity because they are not "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy," Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105.

First, the registers do not claim that the state of Michigan requires them to follow the challenged practices. The registers do not claim that a state statute or regulation requires them to prohibit purchasers from re-selling or otherwise providing title record copies or information to other private parties. [4] They do not claim that a state [*446] statute or regulation prohibits them from offering a bulk discount on paper copies without a no-resale restriction. Nor do they claim that a state statute or regulation prohibits them from making title records available in [21] more convenient and readily searchable non-paper formats, such as microfiche or digital images or information on a compact disc or "memory key," without a no-resale restriction.

Nonetheless, in order to establish [22] that the challenged practices are "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy" per Midcal, the registers need not show that the Legislature required the practices.

---

[4] As a condition for continuing to sell title records to First American, the Lapeer register required First American to sign an agreement that prohibited it from using the documents for any purpose other than internal underwriting. First American signed the agreement for 2001 but refused to renew for 2002. The Lapeer register then refused to sell title records to First American at a bulk discount and in non-paper form as it had previously done. Beginning in 2003, the Eaton register required First American to sign a similar agreement and likewise stopped providing title records at a bulk discount and in non-paper formats when First American refused to agree to the restrictions on resale. The Newaygo and Saginaw registers took similar measures beginning in December 2004 and January 2005, respectively.

McCarthy v. Middle Tenn. Elec. Membership Corp., 466 F.3d 399, 414 n.25 (6th Cir. 2006) ("With regard to the first prong of the Midcal test, we do not require explicit authorization . . . .") (citations and quotation marks omitted). [5]

In Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 95 S. Ct. 2004, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1975), [23] the Supreme Court stated that HN4[] "[t]he threshold inquiry in determining if an anticompetitive activity is state action of the type the Sherman Act was not meant to proscribe[,] is whether the activity is required by the State acting as sovereign." Id. at 790. The Supreme Court later cited Goldfarb with approval in Midcal, 445 U.S. at 104. The Supreme Court has since clarified that:

> Goldfarb, however, is not properly read as making compulsion a sine qua non [of] state action immunity. In that case, [it was undisputed that] the Virginia State Bar, a state agency, compelled Fairfax County lawyers to adhere to a minimum fee schedule. 421 U.S., at 776-78 . . . . The Goldfarb court therefore was not concerned with the necessity of compulsion - its presence in the case was not an issue. The focal point of the Goldfarb opinion was the source of the anticompetitive policy, rather than whether the challenged conduct was compelled . The Court held that a State Bar, acting alone, could not immunize its anticompetitive conduct. Instead, the Court held that private parties, acting alone, were entitled to [24] Parker immunity only if the State "acting as sovereign" intended to displace competition. 421 U.S., at 790 . . . .
>
> Although Goldfarb did employ language of compulsion, it is beyond dispute that the Court would have reached the same result had it applied the two-pronged test later set forth in Midcal. . . . Although we recognize that the language in Goldfarb is not without ambiguity, we do not read that opinion as making compulsion a prerequisite to a finding of state action immunity.

[*447] Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. U.S., 471 U.S. 48, 105 S. Ct. 1721, 1728-29, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36 (1985) (" Southern Motor "). In short, HN5[] "a state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct may be 'clearly articulated' within the meaning of Midcal ." Southern Motor, 105 S. Ct. at 1729. Thus, the registers "need not point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization for [their] challenged conduct." Southern Motor, 105 S. Ct. at 1730 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). But the registers must show that "the State as sovereign [the Legislature] [25] clearly intends to displace competition in a particular field with a regulatory structure . . . ." Id.

The parties' disagreement can be seen as a divergence on how to define the relevant particular field" in which the Legislature "clearly intend[ed] to displace competition," id. As noted above, it is effectively impossible for private parties (such as the plaintiff companies) to induce the parties to all real estate transactions in a county to provide them with grantor/grantee and other title information. And all parties to a real estate transaction must report the transaction and record the change of title with the register, who alone keeps the original documents thus generated. The Legislature understood these obvious and uncontested realities when it enacted the legislation that defined the powers and responsibilities of the registers. Therefore, we conclude that for purposes of the Sherman Act, the Legislature intended that the registers have a monopoly on (1) mandatory acquisition of real estate transaction information from the parties to the transaction, and (2) recordation of the transaction and possession of the original, official title documents thus generated. [26] We hold that the Legislature "clearly intend[ed] to displace competition" with the registers to that extent.

However, we cannot conclude from this that the Legislature further intended to displace competition in the provision of unofficial duplicate title documents or title information, which is all that First American seeks to do. On the contrary, if the Legislature wished to grant the county registers a broader monopoly -- a monopoly on the provision even of duplicate title documents or mere title information -- it could have done so. It has not.

---

[5] On a related note, First American cannot defeat state-action immunity by showing that the registers' imposition of a no-resale condition was a misuse of or exceeded their legal authority. *Stringham v. Hubbard, No. Civ-S-05-0898, -- F. Supp. 2d --, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78154, 2006 WL 3053079, at 3 (E.D. Cal. Oct. 26, 2006) (U.S.M.J.) (citing Lancaster Cmty. Hosp. v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Dist., 940 F.2d 397, 402 & n.10 (9th Cir. 1991)), R&R adopted, -- F. Supp. 2d --, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87921, 2006 WL 3498405 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 5, 2006) (U.S.D.J.).

This does not yet conclude the inquiry in First American's favor. The question remains, even though the Legislature has not expressly given the registers a monopoly on the provision of duplicate title documents and title information, does such a monopoly "logically result from" the powers that the State did expressly give the registers? Put another way, is the imposition of a no-resale condition by these registers a "foreseeable result" of the monopoly or anticompetitive powers that the Legislature did expressly give the registers?

The "foreseeable result" and "logical result" formulations stem from the Supreme Court's [27] opinion in Hallie. There, the Supreme Court considered a Wisconsin statute that authorized cities to build, add to, alter, and repair sewage systems, including the power to "describe with reasonable particularity the district to be served." Hallie, 471 U.S. at 41. The Wisconsin Legislature had also enacted a statute providing that a city operating a public utility "may by ordinance fix the limits of such service in unincorporated areas. Such ordinance shall delineate the area within which service will be provided and the municipal utility shall have no obligation to serve beyond the area so delineated." Id. A third Wisconsin statutory provision authorized the Department of Natural Resources ("DNR") to require a city to construct its sewage system so that other areas could connect to it. Id. It [*448] also provided, however, that the DNR's order would be void if the area seeking to connect to the sewer system refused to be annexed by the municipality; in other words, the Wisconsin Legislature effectively authorized municipalities to condition connection to its sewage system on an agreement to be annexed. Id.

The city of Eau Claire refused to provide sewer [28] service to neighboring townships unless they agreed to be annexed, and the townships contended that this violated the Sherman Act. The Supreme Court held that the city's practice qualified for state-action immunity from antitrust liability:

> The Towns contend that these statutory provisions do not evidence a state policy to displace competition in the provision of sewage services because they make no express mention of anticompetitive conduct. [But] . . . the statutes clearly contemplate that a city may engage in anticompetitive conduct. Such conduct is a foreseeable result of empowering the City to refuse to serve unannexed areas. . . . [I]t is sufficient that the statutes authorized the City to provide sewage services and also to determine the areas to be served. We think it is clear that anticompetitive effects logically would result from this broad authority to regulate.

Hallie, 471 U.S. at 41-42 (internal citations omitted).

Here, by contrast, it was decidedly not foreseeable that the powers expressly granted to the registers would result in any of these four registers' challenged practices. In reaching this conclusion, we have considered [29] Michigan statutes governing county powers generally, statutes governing access to public records, and statutes governing county register records specifically.

First, the Legislature authorized and required the registers to record deeds and related instruments that affect or pertain to real property title -- such as mortgage satisfactions, [6] [30] tax liens or certificates, [7] and court

---

[6] See M.C.L. § 565.42 ("Any mortgage shall also be discharged upon the record thereof by the register of deeds, in whose custody it shall be, whenever there shall be presented to him a certificate executed by the mortgagee . . . specifying that such mortgage has been paid, or otherwise satisfied or discharged; or upon the presentation to such register of deeds of the certificate of the circuit court . . . certifying . . . that said mortgage has been duly paid, or upon the presentation to such register of deeds of a certificate of the register in chancery of the county . . . certifying that a decree of foreclosure of any such mortgage has been duly entered in his office, and that the records in his office shows [sic] that such decree has been fully paid and satisfied.").

M.C.L. § 565.43 provides, in part, "Every certificate described in [M.C.L. § 565.42], and the proof or acknowledgment of the certificate, shall be recorded at full length, and a reference shall be made to the book and page containing the certificate, in the minute of the discharge of the mortgage made by the register upon the mortgage."

judgments [8] -- and to store the original records thus generated. See M.C.L. § 53.94 (providing, in pertinent part, "The board of supervisors of each county shall, from time to time, provide suitable books, at the expense of the county, for the entering and recording of all deeds and matters required by law to be entered and recorded by the register of deeds."). The Legislature also authorizes county boards to [*449] authorize registers to make copies of the records and keep the copies on hand. See M.C.L. § 691.1102 (if the county board of commissioners instructs the register to do so, the register may make copies of the original records in her possession, keeping one copy in her office, and storing one copy in a separate building).

As the Lapeer register correctly points out, "Based on this myriad of statut[es], the register is the only official with the authority to store and make a copy from its [original] record . . . . The Plaintiffs, as with all the public, may obtain a copy of the register's record . . ., but they can never store or copy the official record . . . ." But none of these powers and obligations of the register foreseeably or logically results in the registers conditioning non-paper copies or bulk-discounted paper copies on a no-resale restriction -- let alone on the sale of unofficial (uncertified) copies [31] (i.e. "copies of copies") or of the title information contained therein.

Second, the Legislature authorized the registers to "make reasonable rules and regulations with reference to the inspection and examination of the records and files as is necessary to protect the records and files and to prevent interference with the regular discharge of the duties of the register of deeds." M.C.L. § 565.551(1). The registers present no evidence or reason to believe that the sale of unofficial copies of the certified copies, or the sale of the information contained therein, would somehow affect the integrity of the originals or interfere with the registers' discharge of their duties. Therefore, we hold that it is not foreseeable that the powers granted in M.C.L. § 565.551(1) would logically result in the challenged practices. Cf. Lapeer Cty. Abstract & Title Co. v. Lapeer Cty. Register of Deeds, 264 Mich. App. 167, 691 N.W.2d 11, 16 (Mich. Ct. App. 2004) ("MCL 565.551(1) generally pertains only to the in-office inspection of records, [not] . . . the reproduction of those records. More specifically, [32] the 'reasonable rules and regulations' language . . . only pertains to the inspection and examination of records, not their reproduction and distribution. . . . It has nothing to do with the making of contracts for the sale of copies, let alone entering into contracts that provide only for the restricted use of such copies.").

Third, when a party requests a copy of a record held by a register, the Legislature authorizes the register to choose whether to reproduce the record itself or provide equipment for the requestor to make the reproduction. See M.C.L. §§ 565.551(2)(a) and (b). It is not foreseeable that granting the registers this discretion would logically result in the challenged practices.

Fourth, when a party requests a copy of a record held by a register, the Legislature authorizes the register to choose whether to reproduce the record on paper or in some other format. See M.C.L. § 565.551(2)(a) (register may "[r]eproduce the record or file for the individual pursuant to . . . [M.C.L. §§ 24.401 - 24.403], using a medium selected by the register of deeds."). That is, a register may permissibly [33] have a policy of not making non-paper copies available to anyone. It is not foreseeable, however, that merely granting registers discretion as to the medium of the copies would result in the registers discriminating between purchasers who wish to use the information in the marketplace and purchasers who do not. That is, the discretion to provide all purchasers with only paper copies does not logically result in providing some purchasers with non-paper copies but denying them to others who might compete with the registers in the provision of title information.

Fifth, the Legislature authorizes the registers to charge a statutorily fixed fee for each copy. For paper copies, the registers [*450] may charge $ 1.00 per 8.5-inch by 11-inch single-sided page, M.C.L. §§ 600.2567(1)(b) and (4), and, for non-paper copies, the register may charge enough to recoup its "reasonable costs," M.C.L. §§ 565.551(2)(a) and (b). It is not foreseeable that granting a register the discretion to charge a fee to cover its costs

---

[7] See M.C.L. § 211.135 (before recording deed or contract, register must obtain certificates confirming that taxes have been paid and all tax liens satisfied on the property for past five years).

[8] See M.C.L. §§ 600.6055(1) and (2) (whenever real estate is sold by execution of a judgment, the executing officer must file a certificate of sale with the county register within ten days, and the register must record it).

would result in the register refusing to make non-paper copies, despite payment of the fee, unless the purchaser agreed to relinquish [34] his right to re-sell the copies or the information they contain.

Sixth, in 1996, the Legislature enacted the Enhanced Access to Public Records Act, M.C.L. §§ 15.441 - 15.443 ("the enhanced access act"). The enhanced access act provides that, "[u]pon authorization of the governing body of the public body, [a public body may] provide enhanced access for the inspection, copying, or purchasing of a public record that is not confidential or otherwise exempt by law from disclosure." M.C.L. § 15.443(1)(a). The act defines enhanced access as "a public record's immediate availability for public inspection, purchase, or copying by digital means," and it cautions that "[e]nhanced access does not include the transfer of ownership of a public record." M.C.L. § 15.442(a) (emphasis added). The act further provides that if a public body does provide enhanced (i.e., digital) access to a public record, it may "charge a reasonable fee established by the public body's governing body" for doing so, M.C.L. § 15.443(1)(b), which is defined as "a charge calculated to enable a public body to recover [35] over time only those operating expenses directly related to the public body's provision of enhanced access." M.C.L. § 15.442(g).

We first note our uncertainty with regard to whether the enhanced access act even applies to county registers. [9] The enhanced access act claims blanket coverage of all entities that are considered public bodies and all records that are considered public records under the Michigan Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), see M.C.L. § 15.442(e) and (f). [10] By contrast, the Inspection of Records Act, M.C.L. § 565.551, by its terms, applies specifically and only to county registers.

[36] This difference in the two statutes' coverage is significant. HN6[] "One of the most basic canons of statutory interpretation is that a more specific provision takes precedence over a more general one." United States v. Perry, 360 F.3d 519, 535 (6th Cir. 2004) (citations omitted); see also Simpson v. United States, 435 U.S. 6, 15, 98 S. Ct. 909, 55 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1978) [11] [37] (referring with approval to "the principle that gives precedence to the terms of the more specific statute where a general statute and a specific statute speak to the same concern, even if the general provision was enacted later") (emphasis added). [12] This [*451] is true even when there is no direct conflict between the general statute and the specific one. See Green v. Bock Laundry Mach. Co., 490 U.S. 504, 524, 109 S. Ct. 1981, 104 L. Ed. 2d 557 (1989) ("A general statutory rule usually does not govern unless there is no more specific rule.") (citing D. Ginsberg & Sons, Inc. v. Popkin, 285 U.S. 204, 208, 52 S. Ct. 322, 76 L. Ed. 704 (1932)).

Because the question of whether the enhanced access act applies to county registers is a question of state law, we note that the Michigan courts follow this same rule of statutory construction. See People v. Bewersdorf, 181 Mich. App. 430, 450 N.W.2d 271, 272 (Mich. Ct. App. 1989) (holding that the Motor Vehicle Code's specific sentencing scheme applicable to convictions for operating under the influence of intoxicating liquor "prevails to the exclusion of the general habitual-offender statute"), aff'd in pt & rev'd in pt on other grounds, 438 Mich. 55, 475 N.W.2d 231

[9] The Michigan courts have not yet had occasion to provide guidance on this issue.

[10] The Michigan FOIA definition of public body excludes the judiciary but includes every state officer, employee, or agency in the executive branch, except the Governor and Lieutenant Governor and their executive offices and executive office employees; every agency or other body in the legislative branch; and every county, regional, or local body or agency. M.C.L. §§ 15.232(d)(i-v). It defines public record as "a writing prepared, owned, used, in the possession of, or retained by a public body in the performance of an official function, from the time it is created" and defines "writing" to include every "means of recording or retaining meaningful content." M.C.L. §§ 15.232(e) and (h).

[11] Simpson was superseded by statute, but on other grounds. See United States v. Moore, 917 F.2d 215 (6th Cir. 1990).

[12] See, e.g., Sherrod v. Genzyme Corp., 170 F. App'x 375, 378 (6th Cir. 2006) ("M.C.L. § 445.774a(1)'s specific authorization of non-compete agreements trumps the other statutes' inclusion of such agreements within their general prohibition on 'consideration' as a condition of employment.").

(Mich. 1991) (reading general provision and specific provision not to conflict with one another). It seems, then, that the enhanced access act may not apply to county registers. [38] [13]

Even assuming, without deciding, that the enhanced access act applies to county registers, it does not help the registers' case for state-action immunity. [14] [39] The registers emphasize that "the Enhanced Access to Records Act . . . permits, but does not mandate Counties to provide 'enhanced access' to public records." That is correct, [15] but irrelevant. It does not change the fact that it is not reasonably foreseeable that simply allowing a register to make records available for digital copying would lead a register to refuse to do so unless the purchaser gives up his right to sell unofficial copies of those copies or the information therein.

Several of the registers seize upon the enhanced access act's statement that "[e]nhanced access does not include the transfer of ownership of a public record." Registers Fuller, McLaren, and Landheer argue, "Plaintiffs ignore that the Enhanced Access to Records Act not only foresees such restrictions on sale or transfer, [*452] but, actually, specifically contemplates them." They also argue that "the requestor does not, by statute, secure an ownership interest in the documents, and the requestor thus cannot convey or sell to others what it does not own." But this provision of the enhanced access act has nothing to do with registers' right to restrict the sale or transfer of certified copies (provided by a register), let alone the sale or transfer of uncertified "copies of copies" [40] (made by a title insurance company from the certified copy) or the title information therein. M.C.L. § 15.442(a)'s caveat about ownership of public records obviously refers to the original public record, which remains owned and possessed by the public body, regardless of how many digital copies of the record are sold. First American uses in the marketplace only what it owns -- not the original public record, but unofficial "copies of copies" and the title information contained therein. The registers also attempt to bolster their case for state-action immunity by reference to yet another provision of the enhanced access act. M.C.L. § 15.443(d) authorizes public bodies to > [p]rovide another public body with access to or output from its geographical information system for the official use of that other public body, without charging a fee to that other public body, if the access to or output from the system is provided in accordance with a written intergovernmental agreement that contains all of the following:

>
> (i) A statement specifying that the public body receiving access to or output from the system without [41] charge is prohibited from providing access to the system's output to a third party unless that public body does both of the following:

---

[13] The Lapeer register admits as much: "Actually, the more specific statute, MCL 565.551, controls. * * * MCL 15.443 is not relevant."

[14] Conversely, we are not persuaded by First American's argument that the enhanced access act shows that the registers are not entitled to state-action immunity.

First American asserts, "The Enhanced Access Act not only did not contemplate pricing structures to punish competition . . . it prohibits them." But the enhanced access act does no such thing; it authorizes public bodies to provide copies to other public bodies free of charge, not to private parties free of charge, and it says nothing about prohibiting or allowing private parties to re-sell copies or the information therein.

First American also asserts, "The language in the Enhanced Access Act relating to pricing confirms that restrictions against resale not only were not contemplated by the Legislature, but are contrary to the goals of the Act. This Act limits the fees public bodies may charge to 'an amount that enables the public body providing access to or output from its system to recover over time its operating expenses directly related to providing access to output from its system to a third party.'" We fail to see how a limitation on the fees that public bodies may charge for digital copies evinces an intent to prohibit public bodies from imposing no-resale conditions on private purchasers of those copies.

[15] The last subsection of the act provides: "This act does not require a public body to provide enhanced access to a specific public record if that public body has not established an enhanced access policy in accordance with subsection (5) with respect to that specific record." M.C.L. § 15.443(6).

(A) Collects from the third party a fee described in subsection (2), or waives that fee in accordance with the written terms of the intergovernmental agreement.

(B) Conveys to the providing public body that [a] portion of any fee collected under subsection (2) that is directly attributable to the operating expenses of the providing public body in furnishing the output from the system to the third party.

. . . .

(iii) A statement specifying the portion of any fee collected under subsection

(2) and collected from a third party that the receiving public body shall convey to the providing public body.

Id. (emphasis added). The registers' reliance on this provision is misplaced. The existence of this provision actually undermines the registers' argument that the Legislature "specifically contemplate[d]" restrictions on private purchasers' sale or transfer of uncertified record copies ("copies of copies") or the title information therein. The Legislature authorized public bodies to enter into such agreements only with [42] other public bodies. That is why M.C.L. § 15.443(d) repeatedly refers to intergovernmental agreements, and only intergovernmental agreements, through which a public body can obtain geographical information without a fee if it promises either not to resell the information or to turn over part of any monies it receives by reselling the information.

The existence of M.C.L. § 15.443(d) shows that, when the Legislature wished to authorize a public body to impose a no-resale condition to the provision of public record copies, the Legislature knew how to do so and did so explicitly. Cf. Marx v. Centran Corp., 747 F.2d 1536, 1545 (6th Cir. 1984) (after noting that 12 U.S.C. § 93(a) contained an express cause of action and § 93(b) did not, this court remarked, "[t]his difference between the two [*453] subsections leads to the conclusion that 'when Congress wishes to provide a private damages remedy, it knew how to do so and did so expressly.'") (quoting Touche Ross & Co. v. Redington, 442 U.S. 560, 572, 99 S. Ct. 2479, 61 L. Ed. 2d 82 (1979)).

If anything, the registers' case is undermined [43] by the fact that the Legislature chose not to enact a similar provision authorizing public bodies to impose a no-resale condition on the provision of public record to private parties. This reasoning comports with the long-established canon of statutory construction, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, "the mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another." See Millsaps v. Thompson, 259 F.3d 535, 546 (6th Cir. 2001) ("Under the expressio unius principle, '[w]hen a statute limits a thing to be done in a particular mode, it includes the negative of any other mode.'") (quoting Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp. v. Nat'l Ass'n of R.R. Passengers, 414 U.S. 453, 458, 94 S. Ct. 690, 38 L. Ed. 2d 646 (1974)). [16] The Michigan courts also follow this canon of construction. See People v. Jahner, 433 Mich. 490, 446 N.W.2d 151, 155 n.3 (Mich. 1989) (citing, inter alia, Stowers v. Wolodzko, 386 Mich. 119, 191 N.W.2d 355 (Mich. 1971)).

[44] In any event, the rationale of M.C.L. § 15.443(d) is inapposite when the recipient of public records is a private party. That provision contemplates that a public body give up its right to resell public record information (or agree to share the fee from such resale) precisely because the public body received the information free of charge. Here, by contrast, First American is not entitled to receive, and does not seek to receive, title record copies for free in any quantity or format.

Moreover, the registers should hope that the enhanced access act does not apply to them because one of its provisions recognizes and assumes that private parties sell information obtained from digital copies of public records. Section 4 provides that "[a]n individual elected or appointed to a board of governing body of a city, village, township or county shall not have an ownership interest in, or accept compensation from, a person who sells information that is obtained from a public record of that city, village, township or county." M.C.L. § 15.444 (emphasis added). As First American points out, one can obtain an "ownership interest" [45] in a private company, but not in a local or county government.

---

[16] See, e.g., Cavanaugh v. Cardinal Local Sch. Dist., 409 F.3d 753, 756 (6th Cir. 2005) ("Applying the canon of exclusio unius est exclusio alterius. . . we conclude . . . .").

Finally, even if the enhanced access act does not apply to county registers, its fourth section still undermines the registers' claim that the Legislature contemplated restrictions on the resale of public record copies or information contained therein. At least for digital copies provided under the enhanced access act, the Legislature contemplated precisely the opposite, i.e., that private parties would buy copies and sell them (or their information) as they have long done.

The district court began its Sherman Act discussion by correctly noting that the state Legislature's "intention to authorize [the challenged] anticompetitive behavior need not be express in a statute. It is enough that it is the foreseeable result of acts [that] the statute [expressly] authorizes." June 13, 2005, Dist. Ct. Op. at 7 (citing City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 373, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991) and Michigan Paytel Joint Venture v. City of Detroit, 287 F.3d 527, 535-36 (6th Cir. 2002)). But the district court did not meaningfully discuss, let alone apply, the [*454] standard for [46] state-action immunity enunciated by the Supreme Court in Omni and Hallie and by this court in Michigan Paytel. [17]

Namely, the district court did not independently determine whether, for purposes of the Sherman Act, the challenged anticompetitive practices were a foreseeable or logical result of the statutory authority that the Legislature did give the registers. Rather, the district court simply followed a Michigan Court of Appeals decision that did not involve the Sherman Act or any antitrust statute, Lapeer Cty. Abstract & Title Co. v. Lapeer Cty. Register of Deeds, 264 Mich. App. 167, 691 N.W.2d 11 (Mich. Ct. App. 2004). As the Michigan Court of Appeals remarked, "The complaint also alleged an antitrust violation and a violation of federal constitutional rights contrary to 42 USC 1983, but those claims are not at issue in this appeal." Id., 691 N.W.2d at 14 n.2 [47] (emphasis added).

The district court uncritically adopted Lapeer as follows:

> The Michigan Inspection of Records Act provides that the Registers have the option to produce requested records using a medium the Registers select. M.C.L. § 545.551 [sic, § 565.551(2)]. The Registers can also make reasonable regulations regarding their examination. Id. The Registers argue that these statutory provisions give them the authority to make conditions on bulk sales of records. However, the Michigan Court of Appeals expressly rejected the notion that M.C.L. § 545.551 [sic, § 565.551] gave Registers the authority to enter contracts that restrict the resale of public records. . . . At the same time, [however,] the court found that this statute did not prohibit Registers from entering into such contracts. [citation omitted] The Court held that Registers have the ability to restrict the dissemination of information provided in bulk form under a county government's general power to make contracts and a county's general power to manage its own business affairs. Id. at 176-77 (citing M.C.L. §§ 45.3 [18] [49] , 46.11 [19]). The [48] court noted,
>
>> Simply as an exercise of the general power to contract, defendant has the authority to propose and enter into contracts in which it provides concessions, such as a reduced bulk rate fee or copies in microfilm form, in return for a purchaser agreeing to special conditions, such as a restriction on the use of the copies provided. Such a quid pro quo arrangement is a usual and inherent part of the contracting process.

[17] The district court did not cite Southern Motor, 471 U.S. 48, 105 S. Ct. 1721, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36 (1985).

[18] M.C.L. § 45.3 is extremely general, providing, "Each organized county shall be a body politic and corporate, for the following purposes . . . to make all necessary contracts, and to do all other necessary acts in relation to the property and concerns of the county." This provision does not refer to the register of deeds, let alone to the provision of duplicate title records or title information.

[19] M.C.L. § 46.11(l) provides that a county board of commissioners may "[r]epresent the county and have the care and management of the property and business of the county if other provisions are not made." M.C.L. § 46.11(m) provides that a county board of commissioners may "[e]stablish rules and regulations in reference to the management of the interest and business concerns of the county as the board considers necessary and proper in all matters not especially provided for in this act or under the laws of this state." These provisions do not refer to the register of deeds, let alone to the provision of duplicate title records or title information.

> Further, the negotiation of such contracts is within the broad statutory grant of authority provided [*455] for the care and management of the property and business concerns of a county.

> Id. This court will not question the judgment of the Michigan Court of Appeals regarding the statutory authority under which the Registers are acting when they make conditions on bulk sales. The very policy reason behind the Parker [state-action] exception, respect for state sovereignty, cautions the court against delving too deeply into state law matters to determine whether the Parker exception applies.

June 13, 2005, Dist. Ct. Op. at 7-8.

If this were a question of state law, the federal courts would indeed be obligated to defer to the decisions of the Michigan courts. But we are not deciding a question of state law; as noted above, First American has not appealed the dismissal of its state-law claim. HN7[] A state court's opinion on an issue of federal law -- or, in our case, a state court's opinion on a state-law issue that also arises [50] in federal law -- is entitled to no deference whatsoever. See *Wallace v. Cranbrook Educ. Cmty., No. 05-73446, -- F. Supp. 2d --, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71251, 2006 WL 2796135, 6 (E.D. Mich. Sept. 27, 2006) ("Although federal courts must defer to a state court's interpretation of its own law, federal courts 'owe no deference' to a state court's interpretation of federal law.") (quoting United States v. Miami Univ., 294 F.3d 797, 811 (6th Cir. 2002)); accord Hawkman v. Parratt, 661 F.2d 1161, 1166 (8th Cir. 1981). [20]

HN8[] As a matter of Michigan law as interpreted by the Michigan Court of Appeals, a county's state-granted general powers to make contracts and manage its own business affairs implicitly encompass the power to condition bulk public record sales on relinquishment of the right to re-sell the records. That tells us nothing, [51] however, about whether a county's exercise of that latter power qualifies for state-action immunity from Sherman Act liability. See, e.g., Philip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application 455 (2d ed. 2000) ("We would therefore disagree . . . with decisions holding . . . that the bare power to make contracts implies the power to enter into anticompetitive exclusive arrangements [for purposes of federal antitrust law].").

Because the Michigan Court of Appeals was interpreting only Michigan law in Lapeer County Abstract, it was not bound by the principles and presumptions that govern federal antitrust law. Following the Supreme Court, this court has emphasized that the state-action immunity doctrine, like other judicially imposed exemptions from the antitrust laws, must be narrowly construed. Brentwood, 442 F.3d at 441 (citing Ticor, 504 U.S. at 636). The Michigan Court of Appeals labored under no such stricture when it decided what implicit powers can be inferred from the registers' explicit powers under Michigan law.

Moreover, in the Sherman Act context, the Supreme Court has [52] made clear that a "neutral" state view towards a state subdivision's allegedly anticompetitive conduct is insufficient to trigger state-action immunity. This, too, is a rule of law that did not apply to the Michigan Court of Appeals's interpretation of Michigan law in Lapeer County Abstract.

The Supreme Court has provided a helpful contrast between a "neutral" state view of anticompetitive conduct and a state's [*456] requirement or endorsement of the anticompetitive conduct. Considering whether a Mississippi agency's setting of transportation prices was exempt from the Sherman Act, the Supreme Court explained,

> The Mississippi statute stands in sharp contrast to the Colorado Home Rule Amendment, which we considered in Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 . . . (1982). In Boulder, the State Constitution gave municipalities extensive powers of self-government. Id., at 43-44 . . . . Pursuant to this authority, the city of Boulder prohibited a cable television company from expanding its operations. The Court held that because the Home Rule Amendment did not evidence an intent to displace competition in the cable [53] television industry, id. at 55 . . ., Boulder's anticompetitive ordinance was not > enacted pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. This holding was premised on the fact that Boulder, as a "home rule municipality," was authorized to elect free-market competition as an alternative to regulation. Id. at 56 . . . .

[20] See Wayne v. Vill. of Sebring, 36 F.3d 517, 526 (6th Cir. 1994) ("We reject the state court of appeals' interpretation of federal law.").

>
> In this case, on the other hand, the Mississippi Public Service Commission is not authorized to choose free-market competition . Instead, it is required to prescribe rates for motor common carriers on the basis of statutorily enumerated factors. [state statutory citation omitted] These factors bear no discernible relationship to the prices that would be set by a perfectly efficient and unregulated market. Therefore, the Mississippi statute clearly indicates that the legislature intended to displace competition in the intrastate trucking industry with a regulatory program.

Southern Motor, 471 U.S. at 65 n.25, 105 S. Ct. at 1731 n.25 (emphasis added).

The registers' situation here is akin to the situation in City of Boulder: Michigan statute gives the counties the power to make contracts, but it [54] leaves the counties free to allow competition in the provision of duplicate title records and the information contained therein. In other words, Michigan statutory law leaves the counties free to provide duplicate title records to purchasers, in any format or quantity, without mandating that the purchasers give up their right to re-sell the official copies (or to sell unofficial copies of those copies, or the information therein). Unlike Hallie, the state statutes do not "plainly show that 'the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of.'" Hallie, 471 U.S. at 44 (quoting Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 415). So far as Michigan statutory law shows, the Legislature is neutral towards the anticompetitive condition these registers have imposed on purchasers of title records. The Legislature does not contemplate the displacement of competition in the unofficial-copy / title information market any more than it contemplates free competition in that secondary market.

This is fatal to the Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim with regard to these four registers because the Supreme Court holds that HN9[] "plainly the requirement [55] of 'clear articulation and affirmative expression' is not satisfied when the State's position is one of mere neutrality respecting the . . . actions challenged as anticompetitive." City of Boulder, 455 U.S. at 55. Contrary to the district court's conclusion, granting counties the general power to contract or manage their business affairs cannot imply state authorization to impose this anticompetitive restriction: "[a]cceptance of such a proposition -- that the general grant of power to enact ordinances necessarily implies state authorization to enact specific [*457] anticompetitive ordinances - would wholly eviscerate the concepts of 'clear articulation and affirmative expression' that our precedents require." Id. at 56. [21]

[56] The district court appears to have acknowledged that the Supreme Court's decision in City of Boulder rendered the registers ineligible for state-action immunity:

> In Community Communications Company, Inc. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982), the Supreme Court held that the City of Boulder was not immune to the Sherman Act when its alleged anticompetitive actions were made pursuant to the general Home Rule Amendment to the Colorado Constitution. A general grant of power to a local government was not a sufficiently articulated state policy that would make its actions immune to Sherman Act prohibitions. Id.. . . The general power to make contracts is a general grant of authority similar to Home Rule authority.

June 13, 2005, Dist. Ct. Op. at 8-9 (emphasis added). The district court went on to assert, "[h]owever, more recent decisions of the Supreme Court and the Sixth Circuit have broadened Parker immunity for local governments since the City of Lafayette and City of Boulder decisions." Id. at 9. For this proposition, the district court cited Hallie, 471 U.S. 34, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24; Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382; [57] and Michigan Paytel, 287 F.3d 527.

---

[21] See also Hertz Corp. v. City of N.Y., 1 F.3d 121 (2d Cir. 1994) (holding that in Sherman Act § 1 action, state-action immunity did not apply to city ordinance that prohibited basing vehicle rental fees and decisions on the renter's residence; city acted pursuant to general home-rule powers, not any specific grant of authority over vehicle rentals).

The district court provides no explanation, however, as to how these two Supreme Court decisions overruled or modified City of Boulder. We conclude that neither Hallie nor City of Columbia expanded City of Boulder 's standard for municipal/county state-action immunity so as to cover the allegedly anticompetitive conduct challenged here.

As discussed above, Hallie predicates municipal/county state-action immunity on whether the particular anticompetitive conduct was a foreseeable or logical result of the powers actually expressly granted to the municipality/county, and the imposition of a no-resale condition was not a foreseeable or logical result of the powers that the Legislature granted to the registers.

The district court's reliance on our decision in Michigan Paytel to sustain state-action immunity here is also unpersuasive. First, to the extent that a Sixth Circuit decision allegedly conflicts with a Supreme Court decision, the district court is obligated to follow the Supreme Court decision. See, e.g., Harries v. Bell, 417 F.3d 631, 635 (6th Cir. 2005).

In any event, our decision [58] in Michigan Paytel is consistent with the Supreme Court decisions discussed above: Lafayette (1978), City of Boulder (1982), Southern Motor (1985), Hallie (1985), Omni (1991), and Ticor (1992). In Michigan Paytel, we reaffirmed the rule that "[g]rants of general or neutral authority to govern local affairs will not satisfy the 'clear articulation' component of the state action exemption from antitrust liability." 287 F.3d at 534. There, Michigan Paytel and Ameritech submitted competing bids for an exclusive contract to provide the Detroit Police Department with in-cell telephones for use by prisoners. Ameritech won the contract, and Paytel sued [*458] under the Sherman Act, contending that Ameritech and the City of Detroit had acted "to maintain Ameritech's dominance in the pay telephone service market in the Detroit metropolitan area" by entering into the exclusive contract. Id. The Michigan Paytel panel reasoned that > [n]o Michigan statute expressly authorizes the City to execute an exclusive contract with a telephone service provider for telephone service in its prisons. However, the Home Rule City Act does grant the City [59] the authority to bid out public contracts and to contract for the maintenance of its prisons. Under the Michigan Constitution, these provisions must be "liberally construed in the[] favor" of municipalities. We therefore conclude that the City is immune from antitrust liability because anticompetitive effects are the logical and foreseeable result of the City's broad authority under state law and the Michigan Constitution to bid out public contracts for the maintenance of City prisons. As the district court observed, " Under the bidding process, there would be only one successful bidder. Thus, only one bidder would have the right to install and service the pay telephones. "

Id. at 535-36 (emphasis added) (internal citations omitted); see M.C.L. § 117.3(j) (permitting city to bid out services, such as prison phone service, to " a private organization") (emphasis added). In other words, the Legislature expressly authorized the city of Detroit to bid out contracts for city services such as the maintenance of city jails, and it is inherent in that process that only one bidder can win the right to provide the service. In our [60] case, by contrast, there is no bidding process, and the applicable statutory provisions do not inherently result in or contemplate an exclusive or favored position for the county registers in the provision of unofficial copies or title information.

Finally, we note that allowing these four registers to be potentially held liable for violating the Sherman Act would not thwart the purpose of the Parker state-action exception -- respect for state sovereignty. As the Supreme Court explained in Lafayette, > [T]he fact that the governmental bodies sued are cities, with substantially less than statewide jurisdiction, has significance. When cities, each of the same status under state law, are equally free to approach a policy decision in their own way, the anticompetitive restraints adopted as policy by any one of them, may express its own preference, rather than that of the State. Therefore, in the absence of evidence that the State authorized or directed a given municipality to act as it did, the actions of a particular city hardly can be found to be . . . restraints that "the state . . . as sovereign" imposed.

435 U.S. at 414 (footnotes omitted) (quoting [61] Parker, 317 U.S. at 352).

VII.

Unlike the other four registers, the Tuscola County register is not alleged to have imposed a no-resale condition on its sale of bulk-discounted paper records or its sale of records in non-paper format. First American alleges only that the Tuscola register "refuses to provide copies of land title records at a reasonable rate or in a cost-effective medium. The only way for title insurers to purchase land title records in Tuscola County today is to make copies of all records recorded, on paper, at the much higher rate of $1.00 per page." In the context of the rest of the complaint and the other filings in this case, we take this to mean that the Tuscola register refuses to (1) make title record copies available in non-paper form, such as microfiche or digital/computer format, and (2) [*459] offer a discount for the bulk purchase of paper copies of title records. The district court correctly held that these two practices of the Tuscola County register qualify for state-action immunity from Sherman Act liability.

As noted above, the Legislature has expressly granted the registers discretion to determine the medium in which original records are [62] reproduced. M.C.L. § 565.551(2)(a). Under Hallie (U.S.), Michigan Paytel (6th Cir.), and other precedents, the Legislature could easily foresee that a register could exercise this discretion to refuse to provide copies in non-paper form. To put it another way, the Legislature took more than merely a "neutral" stance toward the refusal to provide non-paper copies; it expressly authorized and endorsed that practice as the register's option. See Southern Motor, 105 S. Ct. at 1729 ("a state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct may be 'clearly articulated' within the meaning of Midcal.") (emphasis added). Thus, in refusing to make non-paper copies available, the Tuscola County register acted pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy and cannot be sued under the Sherman Act.

The Tuscola County register's alleged refusal to provide a bulk discount for paper copies presents a less obvious question, but the answer is ultimately the same. Unlike the registers' discretion to provide copies in paper or non-paper form, the Legislature has not expressly granted registers the discretion whether [63] or not to offer a bulk discount. At first blush, then, Tuscola County's refusal to provide a bulk discount might seem to run afoul of the rule that "the requirement of 'clear articulation and affirmative expression' is not satisfied when the State's position is one of mere neutrality respecting the . . . actions challenged as anticompetitive." City of Boulder, 455 U.S. at 55.

On the other hand, the Legislature did not merely grant counties the general power to contract; it enacted statutes that address the registers' provision of title record copies in some detail. The Legislature required registers to make title records available for inspection, required them to provide certified copies of title records upon request, authorized them to provide copies in non-paper form, and specified a $1.00 per-page fee for paper copies -- yet it chose not to require them to provide bulk discounts. In fact, of the many title record details addressed by the Legislature, it did not even mention the registers' discretion to offer bulk discounts, let alone specify how such discounted rates might be calculated if the registers chose to offer them. In this context, it is reasonably [64] foreseeable that a register accorded the discretion to provide paper copies at such a hefty per-page fee would choose to reap the revenues generated by that fee rather than forgo them. Accordingly, we hold that the Tuscola register's refusal to provide a bulk discount qualifies for state-action immunity.

VIII.

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the dismissal of the Sherman Act claims with regard to defendant Tuscola County Register of Deeds.

We reverse the dismissal of the Sherman Act claims, however, with regard to the no-resale condition imposed by defendants Registers of Deeds of Lapeer County, Saginaw County, Eaton County, and Newaygo County, and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

We hold only that the registers' practice of conditioning bulk discounts, non-paper reproduction, or reproduction of records generally, on the purchaser's agreement not to sell the official certified copies (or unofficial "copies of copies," or the information therein) to third parties, does not [*460] qualify for state-action immunity. We intimate no opinion on the merits of the Sherman Act claims. Moreover, even if the district court determines that the registers have violated [65] the Sherman Act, that will mean only that the registers may not condition bulk discounts, non-paper reproduction, or reproduction of records generally, on the purchaser giving up his right to sell the official certified copies (or unofficial "copies of copies," or the information therein) to third parties. [22]

[66]

End of Document

[22] Furthermore, a finding of a Sherman Act violation will not obligate the registers to (1) reproduce records for First American or anyone else, rather than merely providing equipment for the purchaser to reproduce the records himself; (2) offer a bulk discount to First American or anyone else for the reproduction of paper or non-paper records; or (3) make records available to First American or anyone else in non-paper format in the first place. The Legislature has expressly granted the registers discretion to determine the medium in which original title records are reproduced, i.e., paper or non-paper. M.C.L. § 565.551(2)(a). The Legislature has also expressly granted the registers discretion to fulfill a title record request either by reproducing the record itself or by providing equipment for the purchaser to do the reproduction (or, if the purchaser requests it, by letting the purchaser bring in his own equipment and doing the reproduction). M.C.L. §§ 565.551(2)(a)-(c).

The registers will still have the authority, under M.C.L. § 565.551(2)(a), to offer non-paper reproduction, in any of the formats prescribed by the records reproduction act, M.C.L. § 24.402, to all purchasers or to no purchasers. Nor will the district court's decision affect the registers' authority to offer bulk discounts to all purchasers or to no purchasers.

Abbott Labs. v. Mylan Pharms., Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

February 23, 2007, Decided

Case No. 05 C 6561

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12839 *; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,617

ABBOTT LABORATORIES, Plaintiff, v. MYLAN PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., Defendant.

Prior History: Abbott Labs. v. Mylan Pharms., Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13782 (N.D. Ill., Mar. 28, 2006)

Core Terms

patents, antitrust, Counterclaims, alleges, sham, patentee, infringement, tests, motion to dismiss, misrepresentation, antitrust violation, anti-competitive, declarations, procurement, compounds, immunity, generic

Counsel: [*1] For Abbott Laboratories, an Illinois corporation, Plaintiff: Daniel E. Reidy, LEAD ATTORNEY, James R. Daly, Jason G. Winchester, Melissa B. Hirst, Jones Day, Chicago, IL.

For Mylan Pharmaceuticals, Inc., a West Virginia corporation, Defendant: Brian S. Roman, Morgantown, WV; Jill M. Ondos, Canonsburg, PA; John A. Leja, McGuireWoods LLP, Chicago, IL; Lynn E. Eccleston, Richard S Meyer, McGuire Woods, LLP - McLean, McLean, VA; Robert J. Waddell, Timothy H. Kratz, McGuire Woods LLP - Atlanta, Atlanta, GA.

For Mylan Pharmaceuticals, Inc., a West Virginia corporation, Counter Claimant: t: Brian S. Roman, Morgantown, WV; Jill M. Ondos, Canonsburg, PA; Lynn E. Eccleston, McGuire Woods, LLP - McLean, McLean, VA; Robert J. Waddell, McGuire Woods LLP - Atlanta, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: Virginia M. Kendall, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Virginia M. Kendall

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff Abbott Laboratories ("Abbott") has brought suit against Defendant Mylan Pharmaceuticals, Inc., ("Mylan") for alleged infringement of two patents used in the manufacture of the pharmaceutical "Depakote." Mylan has filed several counterclaims, two of which allege that Abbott's procurement and [*2] enforcement of the patents constitute federal antitrust violations. Abbott moves to dismiss these two counterclaims pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Because Mylan has adequately stated a claim for Walker Process fraud, Abbott's Motion to Dismiss is denied.

Facts

For purposes of a motion to dismiss, the Plaintiff's version of the facts of the case is taken as true. In the late 1980's and early 1990's, Abbott procured a number of patents from the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") in connection with production of the drug Depakote. Abbott has sued Mylan for infringement of two of these patents, Nos. 4,988,731 ("the '731 patent") and 5,212,326 ("the '326 patent"). [1] Mylan counterclaims that during the prosecution of these two patents, two individual employees of Abbott made misrepresentations to the PTO that were material to Abbott's procurement of the patents.

[*3] Specifically, Mylan alleges that Abbott employee Dr. Bauer submitted a declaration to the PTO during prosecution of the '731 and the '326 patents in which he testified that he had prepared certain compounds or "ionic oligomers" in accordance with the process detailed in the patent, and then tested the compounds. Dr. Bauer testified to the weight and structure of the compounds based on the results of the tests he performed. But Mylan alleges that the tests performed were known to be incapable of measuring the type of oligomer detailed in the patents and that Dr. Bauer could not have reached the conclusions to which he testified on the basis of the tests he performed. Mylan alleges that Dr. Bauer mislead the PTO by suggesting that his tests supported his conclusions and by failing to disclose that the tests he performed were inappropriate for the compounds that he tested. Mylan alleges that Dr. Lambert's declaration corroborated Dr. Bauer's testimony and that a person of Dr. Lambert's skill in the relevant art would have known that the tests were inappropriate and the results inaccurate.

Mylan also alleges that Dr. Bauer's and Dr. Lambert's misrepresentations before the PTO were material [*4] to the PTO's decision to grant Abbott the patents. The PTO examiner rejected the continuation-in-part applications for the '731 and the '326 because they were not supported by the specification of the originally-filed application as required by 35 U.S.C. § 112. The Patent Appeals Board reversed the examiner's decision and stated in its opinion that it based its decision to reverse on the declarations of Drs. Bauer and Lambert.

Finally, Mylan alleges that as a result of the fraudulent procurement of the '731 and '326 patents, Mylan has not been able to enter the market for generic Depakote and has been subject to suit by Abbott.

Legal Standard

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("Rule") 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the claims alleged in the complaint. See Cler v. Illinois Educ. Ass'n., 423 F.3d 726, 729 (7th Cir. 2005). A complaint will not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless there is no set of circumstances that could be proved that would entitle the plaintiff to relief. See Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984); DeWalt v. Carter, 224 F.3d 607, 612 (7th Cir. 2000). [*5] But a plaintiff may plead facts that show that he has no claim, meriting dismissal. See McCready v. Ebay, 453 F.3d 882, 888 (7th Cir. 2006).

Immunity from Antitrust Suit

Generally, a patentee suing to enforce statutory rights is immune from suit for antitrust violations even if the suit has an anti-competitive effect. See Glass Equip. Dev., Inc. v. Besten, Inc., 174 F.3d 1337, 1343 (Fed. Cir. 1999). A patentee who brings suit for patent infringement may be subject to antitrust liability if the alleged infringer can prove either: (i) that the infringement suit was "sham litigation" designed to interfere with legitimate business relationships; or (ii) that the patent was obtained through knowing and willful fraud, known as "Walker Process" fraud. See Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1068 (Fed. Cir. 1998); citing Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). Sham litigation and Walker Process are independent legal theories; if the elements of Walker Process liability have been met, liability can be imposed without the additional requirements [*6] for sham litigation. See Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1071. Because antitrust actions against patentees are almost always brought as counterclaims to a patent infringement action, Federal Circuit precedent governs determination of whether the patentee's conduct constitutes an antitrust violation. Id. at 1067-68.

[1] The facts underlying Mylan's Complaint have been summarized in this Court's June 13, 2006 Memorandum Opinion and Order.

Abbott argues that Mylan's Third and Fourth Counterclaims as alleged do not fall within either of these exceptions to immunity. Because Mylan has properly pled a claim for Walker Process fraud, and because any similarity between this litigation and prior litigation between Abbott and other generic manufacturers is a factual issue for discovery, Mylan's Third and Fourth Counterclaims of Walker Process fraud will not be dismissed. Because existence of prior successful litigation to enforce these patents as well as Mylan's own answers to the Complaint and allegations in the Counterclaims foreclose allegations that Mylan's suit is a sham, Mylan may not proceed on a sham litigation theory.

1. Walker Process Fraud

In order to succeed on a claim of Walker Process fraud and defeat immunity, an antitrust plaintiff must show: (1) that [*7] the patentee obtained the patent through knowing and willful misrepresentation of facts to the PTO; (2) that the patentee was aware of the fraud at the time it brought suit; (3) independent evidence of the patentee's deceptive intent toward the PTO; (4) that the PTO relied upon the misrepresentation, such that it would not have issued the patent but for the misrepresentation. See C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Sys., Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1364 (Fed. Cir. 1998); accord Unitherm Food Sys. v. Swift-Eckrich, Inc., 375 F.3d 1341, 1358 (Fed. Cir. 2004), rev'd in part on other grounds, 546 U.S. 394, 126 S.Ct. 980, 163 L. Ed. 2d 974 (2006). Additionally, as discussed in the following section, a plaintiff who demonstrates the elements of fraud must independently allege antitrust injury.

Walker Process claims are fraud claims and are subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). See Medimmune, Inc. v. Genentech, Inc., 427 F.3d 958, 967 (Fed. Cir. 2005), rev'd on other grounds, 549 U.S. __, 127 S. Ct. 764, 166 L. Ed. 2d 604 (2007), . In order to plead a Walker Process claim in accordance with Rule 9(b), Mylan must identify "with particularity the reference or group of [*8] references that, but for their omission from [Abbott's] patent applications, the PTO would not have granted the applications." Netflix Inc. v. Blockbuster, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63154, 2006 WL 2458717 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 22, 2006).

At this early stage in the litigation, Mylan has pleaded sufficiently the elements of a Walker Process claim. Mylan specifically alleges that Abbott presented two declarations to the PTO that relied upon scientific methods that were known at the time to be inappropriate for testing the specific compounds in Abbott's material. Mylan also specifically alleges, with citation to the proceedings before the Patent Board of Appeals, that but for the declarations containing the misrepresentations Abbott's '731 and '326 patents would not have been approved. While Mylan generally avers Abbott's intent to defraud the PTO, it does not do so in isolation; rather, Mylan supports the inference of intent with the specific actions before the PTO and specific allegations of the state of the art at the time of the actions supporting intent to defraud. Abbott relies heavily upon a prior determination by another court in this district that Abbott's conduct before the PTO did not [*9] constitute inequitable conduct. See Abbott v. Torpharm, 309 F. Supp. 2d 1043 (N. D. Ill. 2004). Mylan was not a party to that litigation. While the Court may take judicial notice of the existence of such litigation, the Court may not take the facts stated in that opinion to be true for application to a different plaintiff. See GE Capital Corp. v. Lease Resolution Corp., 128 F.3d 1074, 1083 (7th Cir. 1997) (finding that a court "cannot achieve through judicial notice what it cannot achieve through collateral estoppel" when the plaintiff in a subsequent action was not a party to the previous action and "has never been afforded an opportunity to present its evidence and arguments on the claim").

Abbott will have an opportunity at summary judgment to offer to this Court the same evidence as it offered before the court in Torpharm; for purposes of a motion to dismiss, however, the Court takes Mylan's well-pleaded allegations as true and therefore denies the motion to dismiss the claims.

2. Sham Litigation

"In order to prove that a suit was within [the] "sham" exception to immunity, an antitrust plaintiff must prove that the suit was both [*10] objectively baseless and subjectively motivated by a desire to impose collateral, anti-competitive injury." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1071, citing Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia

Pictures Indus., Inc. ("PRE"), 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). To invoke the 'sham' exception the claimant must show "some abuse of process" and show "more than a failed legal theory." C.R. Bard, 157 F.3d at 1368 (internal citations omitted). If an antitrust defendant had probable cause to institute proceedings, requiring only "a reasonable belief that there is a chance that a claim may be held valid upon adjudication," the antitrust defendant cannot be found to have engaged in sham litigation. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 62-63.

As discussed above, Abbott has been sued for antitrust violations concerning the '731 and '326 patents previously by other generic drug manufacturers. See, e.g., Torpharm, 309 F. Supp. 2d 1043 (and previous opinions in same litigation); Abbott v. Alra, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16611, 1997 WL 667796 (N.D. Ill. 1997). Both these proceedings ultimately resolved in Abbott's favor and found the patents valid. [*11] "A winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham." PRE, 508 U.S. at 61 n.5; accord In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 363 F. Supp. 2d 514, 517 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (relying on evidence of successful prior litigation against other competitors to enforce same patent in finding no evidence of sham litigation).

Additionally, the conduct precipitating Abbott's patent infringement suit, admitted by Mylan, was Mylan's decision to file an Abbreviated New Drug Application ("ANDA") in which Mylan specifically challenged the validity, enforceability, and/or scope of Mylan's '731 and '326 Patents. See Answer at PP 15-17. On the basis of the prior litigation upholding the same patents, and on the basis of Mylan's own averments in its Answer and Counterclaims, Mylan cannot proceed on a sham litigation theory.

Antitrust Injury

In the alternative, Abbott argues that even if the pleading requirements for an antitrust violation have been satisfied, Mylan lacks standing to bring these antitrust claims against Abbott because Mylan cannot allege antitrust injury. While Federal Circuit law governs [*12] antitrust suits arising out of a patentee's conduct in enforcing its patent, the Federal Circuit continues "to apply the law of the appropriate regional circuit to issues involving other elements of antitrust law such as relevant market, market power, damages, etc." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1068. To establish antitrust injury, an antitrust plaintiff must show that "claimed injuries are of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and reflect the anti-competitive effect of either the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Kochert v. Greater Lafayette Health Services, Inc. 463 F.3d 710, 716 (7th Cir. 2006) quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

By the terms of the Hatch-Waxman Act, an infringement action by a patentee against an ANDA Paragraph IV filer tolls the effectiveness of an approved ANDA to allow for resolution of the suit. See 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii) (describing the moratorium on effectiveness of a generic application pending resolution of infringement suit based on the application). A patentee has only a limited [*13] period in which to commence suit after infringement action after an ANDA has been filed; the period in which to commence suit starts from the date of ANDA filing, not ANDA approval. See id. [2] Taking Mylan's allegations of fraudulent conduct before the PTO as true for purposes of this motion, using the regulatory advantage afforded via a fraudulently-procured patent to prevent Mylan's entrance into the relevant market is the type of anti-competitive effect that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

[*14] Mylan has adequately alleged that it is prepared to enter the market for generic Depakote but for Abbott's actions in fraudulently procuring the patents. While Abbott makes clear its belief that Mylan cannot carry its burden to demonstrate injury, "a prediction that the plaintiff will be unable to meet its challenges is not a good reason to dismiss a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6)." Xechem, Inc. v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 372 F.3d 899, 902 (7th Cir. 2004) (denying patentee's motion to dismiss counterclaim of generic manufacturer for failure to allege injury). Mylan's Third and Fourth Counterclaims will not be dismissed for failure to allege antitrust injury.

[2] As discussed in detail in Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Ben Venue Lab., 90 F. Supp. 2d 540 (D.N.J. 2000), the structure of these statutes means that, if antitrust injury were tied to the status of FDA approval relative to the required timing of the suit, antitrust injury would be "wholly contingent on the vagaries of timing of agency action" and go against the purpose of the Hatch-Waxman Act. Id. at 545. If the FDA approved the ANDA before the patentee filed its motion to dismiss the antitrust counterclaim, then antitrust injury would exist; but if the FDA took too long to complete the approval process, the generic company would be unable to establish injury to support its antitrust counterclaim.

Finally, both parties have referenced minor differences between the Answer and Counterclaims filed before this Court and the Answer and Counterclaims filed in a related action that was transferred to this district. To cure these differences, Mylan has leave to amend its Answer and Counterclaims to include the information in the related action that was not in the document filed in the action before this Court.

Conclusion

Because Mylan has adequately pleaded the elements of an antitrust counterclaim on the [*15] basis of Walker-Process fraud, Abbott's Motion to Dismiss Mylan's Third and Fourth Counterclaims is denied. The Court grants Mylan leave to file an Amended Answer and Counterclaims to consolidate the papers from prior related actions.

Virginia M. Kendall, United States District Judge

Northern District of Illinois

Date: February 23, 2007

Wholesale Electricity Antitrust Cases I & II

Court of Appeal of California, Fourth Appellate District, Division One

February 26, 2007, Filed

D047697

Reporter

147 Cal. App. 4th 1293 *; 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 253 ; 2007 Cal. App. LEXIS 261 ; 2007 Cal. Daily Op. Service 2045; 2007 Daily Journal DAR 2645; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,616

WHOLESALE ELECTRICITY ANTITRUST CASES I & II

Prior History: [*1] Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding Nos. 4204 and 4205, Superior Court of San Diego County, Nos. GIC758487, GIC758565, GIC760743, Joan M. Lewis, Judge, Superior Court of San Francisco County, Nos. 318189, 318343, Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. BC249705.

Core Terms

electricity, wholesale, rates, regulation, antitrust, energy, preemption, damages, market-based, filed rate doctrine, tariffs, prices, anti trust law, federal preemption, defendants', plaintiffs', principles, markets, demurrer, refunds, preempted, trial court, court of appeals, charges, manipulation, federal court, anticompetitive conduct, transmission, interstate, violations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Demurrers

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews a trial court's sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend de novo, exercising its independent judgment as to whether a cause of action has been stated as a matter of law. The appellate court gives the complaint a reasonable interpretation, reading it as a whole and its parts in their context. A judgment based on a dismissal must be affirmed if any of the grounds for demurrer raised by the defendant is well-taken and disposes of the complaint.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Questions of Fact & Law

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

When the issues regarding federal preemption involve undisputed facts, it is a question of law whether a federal statute or regulation preempts a state law claim and, on appeal, an appellate court independently reviews a trial court's determination on that issue of preemption.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions

HN3[] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Courts apply a presumption against federal preemption unless the State attempts to regulate an area in which there is a history of significant federal regulation.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

HN4[] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

A reviewing court's task is to examine the precise language of the federal law or regulation to determine whether a particular state law claim is preempted. As to each state law claim, the central inquiry is whether the legal duty that is the predicate of the claim constitutes a requirement or prohibition of the sort that federal law expressly preempts.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction

HN5[] US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Authorities & Powers

The Federal Power Act (FPA) grants the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce. Through the FPA, Congress has meant to draw a bright line easily ascertained, between state and federal jurisdiction. This was done in the FPA by making FERC jurisdiction plenary and extending it to all wholesale sales in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states. This power includes the exclusive authority to determine the reasonableness of wholesale rates.

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Preemption

HN6[] Administrative Proceedings, Preemption

Preemption-related doctrines will continue to apply when market-based electric energy rates are involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction

HN7[] Private Actions, Remedies

Injunctive relief under the unfair competition law, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq., in the context of energy regulation is preempted, because it would encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, both to enforce and to seek remedy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law

The central purpose of the antitrust laws, state and federal, is to preserve competition. It is competition--not the collusive fixing of prices at levels either low or high--that these statutes recognize as vital to the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Standing, Requirements

One of the elements of standing to seek antitrust damages for anticompetitive conduct is a sufficient showing of injury, with respect to: (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages. A court must evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN10[] Private Actions, Remedies

Damages awards in antitrust cases may not be based upon sheer guesswork or speculation. Rather, a plaintiff seeking such damages must establish to a reasonable probability that there was some causal connection between the defendant's wrongful act and the damages alleged, such as lost profits. Once that has been accomplished, the jury will be permitted to act upon probable and inferential proof and to make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

HN11[] US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Authorities & Powers

See 16 U.S.C. § 824d(a).

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

HN12[] US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Authorities & Powers

In 16 U.S.C. § 824d(c), the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is authorized to require public utilities to file and disclose schedules showing all rates and charges for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such rates and charges, together with all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to such rates, charges, classifications, and services.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

HN13[] US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Authorities & Powers

See 16 U.S.C. § 824e(a).

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN14[] US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Authorities & Powers

In 16 U.S.C. § 824e(b), the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is entitled to prescribe the effective dates of refunds that it orders. The broad scope of 16 U.S.C. § 824d(a), (c), and § 824e(a), (b), must invoke the rule that antitrust damages will not be proper where there is a risk of duplicative recovery.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Preemption

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction

HN15[] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

Even considering its difficult history, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has been provided with sufficient regulatory authority such that federal preemption principles must be applied to antitrust/unfair competition law challenges arising from wholesale electricity market activities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN16[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine provides that state law, and some federal law (e.g. antitrust law), may not be used to invalidate a filed rate nor to assume a rate would be charged other than the rate adopted by the federal agency in question. The filed rate doctrine has prohibited not just a state court (or a federal court applying state law) from setting a rate different from that chosen by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), but also from assuming a hypothetical rate different from that actually set by FERC.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN17[] US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Authorities & Powers

Application of the filed rate doctrine to market-based rates that have not been filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) would be an unwise and unprecedented expansion of the doctrine. The market-based rate regime established by FERC continues FERC's oversight of the rates charged. FERC only permits power sales at market-based rates after scrutinizing whether the seller and its affiliates do not have, or have adequately mitigated, market power in generation and transmission and cannot erect other barriers to entry. According to FERC, these conditions assure that the market-based rates charged comply with the Federal Power Act's requirement that rates be just and reasonable. This oversight is ongoing. Further, FERC contends that such procedures effectively constitute review of rates prior to their implementation. FERC also has a remedies provision regarding refunds in 16 U.S.C. § 824e(a) and (b). While market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside of the purview of the doctrine.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

The trial court dismissed the coordinated actions of plaintiffs, a group of public entities and retail purchasers of electricity, for damages and other relief against defendants, a number of companies and their subsidiaries which were generators, sellers, or traders of electricity at wholesale. The trial court sustained defendants' joint demurrer to the master complaint on the grounds of lack of jurisdiction. Plaintiffs alleged violations of California’s antitrust laws (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720), as well as violations of California's unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.). The allegations arose out of market conditions and events during the California energy crisis of 2000 and onward, relating to claims for damages and injunctive relief for anticompetitive activity and/or unfair competition in the wholesale electricity market. (Superior Court of San Diego County, JCCP Nos. 4204 and 4205, Joan Marie Lewis, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the trial court correctly applied the doctrines of field and conflict preemption. Plaintiffs’ claims and prayer for relief would impermissibly require a “fair price” determination, already found to be barred by preemption principles in prior case law. Antitrust damages will not be proper where there is a risk of duplicative recovery. The nature of plaintiffs’ alleged injury (equivalent to an entitlement to refunds) was apparently inseparable from the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to forestall. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) has been provided with sufficient regulatory authority such that federal preemption principles must be applied to plaintiffs' antitrust/UCL challenges arising from wholesale electricity market activities. Plaintiffs acknowledged that FERC refunds were a potential remedy and offset for their claims. Moreover, they were unable to show how any damages from defendants’ conduct, recoverable under an antitrust theory, would be separate in nature from the allegedly overpaid rates that they paid for power, which would also give rise to any refund requests. The court found that the filed rate doctrine, relied on by the trial court as an alternate ground for its ruling on demurrer, reinforced the court’s conclusions regarding preemption. (Opinion by Huffman, J., with McConnell, P. J., and Irion, J., concurring.) [*1294]

Headnotes

CA(1)[] (1)

Constitutional Law § 32—Distribution of Governmental Powers—Between Federal and State Governments—Express and Implied Powers of Federal Government—Preemption.

A reviewing court's task is to examine the precise language of the federal law or regulation to determine whether a particular state law claim is preempted. As to each state law claim, the central inquiry is whether the legal duty that is the predicate of the claim constitutes a requirement or prohibition of the sort that federal law expressly preempts.

CA(2)[] (2)

Electricity, Gas, and Steam § 2—Regulation and Control—Federal Preemption—Authority of Federal Energy Regulatory Commission—Rates.

The Federal Power Act (FPA) grants the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce. Through the FPA, Congress meant to draw a bright line easily ascertained, between state and federal jurisdiction. This was done in the FPA by making FERC jurisdiction plenary and extending it to all wholesale sales in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states. This power includes the exclusive authority to determine the reasonableness of wholesale rates. Preemption-related doctrines will continue to apply when market-based rates are involved.

CA(3)[] (3)

Unfair Competition § 10—Actions—Damages and Injunctive Relief—Context of Energy Regulation—Federal Preemption.

Injunctive relief under the unfair competition law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.) in the context of energy regulation is preempted, because it would encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, both to enforce and to seek remedy.

CA(4)[] (4)

Unfair Competition § 1—Purpose of Antitrust Laws.

The central purpose of the antitrust laws, state and federal, is to preserve competition. It is competition—not the collusive fixing of prices at levels either low or high—that these statutes recognize as vital to the public interest.

CA(5)[] (5)

Unfair Competition § 8—Actions—Standing to Seek Antitrust Damages for Anticompetitive Conduct—Elements.

One of the elements of standing to seek antitrust damages for anticompetitive conduct is a sufficient showing of injury with respect to: (1) the nature of the [*1295] plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages. A court must evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them.

CA(6)[] (6)

Unfair Competition § 10—Actions—Damages and Injunctive Relief—Establishing Entitlement.

Damages awards in antitrust cases may not be based upon sheer guesswork or speculation. Rather, a plaintiff seeking such damages must establish to a reasonable probability that there was some causal connection between the defendant's wrongful act and the damages alleged, such as lost profits. Once that has been accomplished, the jury will be permitted to act upon probable and inferential proof and to make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly.

CA(7)[] (7)

Electricity, Gas, and Steam § 2—Regulation and Control—Federal Energy Regulatory Commission—Availability of Antitrust Damages.

16 U.S.C. § 824d(c) authorizes the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to require public utilities to file and disclose schedules showing all rates and charges for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such rates and charges, together with all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to such rates, charges, classifications, and services. 16 U.S.C. § 824e(b) entitles the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to prescribe the effective dates of refunds that it orders. The broad scope of 16 U.S.C. § 824d(a), (c), and § 824e(a), (b), must invoke the rule that antitrust damages will not be proper where there is a risk of duplicative recovery.

CA(8)[] (8)

Electricity, Gas, and Steam § 2—Regulation and Control—Federal Preemption—Federal Energy Regulatory Commission—Application to Antitrust and Unfair Competition Claims—Wholesale Electricity Market Activities.

Even considering its difficult history, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) has been provided with sufficient regulatory authority such that federal preemption principles must be applied to these antitrust/unfair competition law challenges arising from wholesale electricity market activities. In coordinated actions brought by plaintiffs, a group of public entities and retail purchasers of electricity, for damages and other relief against defendants, a number of companies and their subsidiaries who were generators, sellers, or traders of electricity at wholesale, plaintiffs acknowledged that FERC refunds are a potential remedy and offset for their claims. Moreover, they were [*1296] unable to show how any damages from defendants' conduct, recoverable under an antitrust theory, would be separate in nature from the allegedly overpaid rates that they paid for power, which would also give rise to any refund requests. Accordingly, the trial court correctly applied the doctrines of field and conflict preemption in sustaining defendants' demurrer to the master complaint without leave to amend.

[7 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Constitutional Law, §§ 19, 22.]

CA(9)[] (9)

Electricity, Gas, and Steam § 2—Regulation and Control—Filed Rate Doctrine.

The filed rate doctrine provides that state law, and some federal law (e.g., antitrust law), may not be used to invalidate a filed rate nor to assume a rate would be charged other than the rate adopted by the federal agency in question. The filed rate doctrine has prohibited not just a state court (or a federal court applying state law) from setting a rate different from that chosen by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), but also from assuming a hypothetical rate different from that actually set by FERC. Application of the filed rate doctrine to market-based rates that have not been filed with FERC would be an unwise and unprecedented expansion of the doctrine. The market-based rate regime established by FERC continues FERC's oversight of the rates charged. FERC only permits power sales at market-based rates after scrutinizing whether the seller and its affiliates do not have, or have adequately mitigated, market power in generation and transmission and cannot erect other barriers to entry. According to FERC, these conditions assure that the market-based rates charged comply with the Federal Power Act's requirement that rates be just and reasonable. This oversight is ongoing. Further, FERC contends that such procedures effectively constitute review of rates prior to their implementation. FERC also has a remedies provision regarding refunds in 16 U.S.C. § 824e(a) and (b). While market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside of the purview of the doctrine.

Counsel: Lerach, Coughlin, Stoia, Geller, Rudman & Robbins, Leonard B. Simon, Pamela M. Parker and Frank J. Janecek, Jr., for Plaintiffs and Appellants Ruth Hendricks, People of the City and County of San Francisco, City of Oakland and County of Santa Clara.

Best, Best & Krieger, C. Michael Cowett, Robert J. Hanna, Mary E. Coburn, James P. Gilpin and William C. Pate for Plaintiffs and Appellants Borrego [*1297] Water District, Fallbrook Public Utility District, Helix Water District, Padre Dam Municipal Water District, Ramona Municipal Water District, Sweetwater Authority, Valley Center Municipal Water District, Vista Irrigation District, Yuma Municipal Water District, Metropolitan Transit Development Board, San Diego Trolley, Inc., and San Diego Transit Corporation.

Levine, Steinberg, Miller & Huver, Harvey R. Levine, Richard A. Huver; Patricia A. Meyer & Associates, Patricia A. Meyer, Marisa Janine-Page and [2] Matthew T. Poelstra for Plaintiffs and Appellants Cruz Bustamante, Ruth Hendricks and Barbara Matthews.

Kiesel, Boucher & Larson and Raymond P. Boucher for Plaintiffs and Appellants Cruz Bustamante and Barbara Matthews.

Krause, Kalfayan, Benink & Slavens, James C. Krause, Ralph B. Kalfayan, David B. Zlotnick; Keegan, Macaluso & Baker, Patrick N. Keegan; and Hoyt E. Hart II for Plaintiff and Appellant Pamela Gordon.

Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, William Bernstein, Joseph R. Saveri and Barry Himmelstein for Plaintiffs and Appellants Oscars Photo Lab, Pier 23 Restaurant and Mary L. Davis.

Dennis J. Herrera, City Attorney, and Theresa L. Mueller, Deputy City Attorney, for Plaintiff and Appellant City and County of San Francisco.

John A. Russo, City Attorney, Barbara Parker and Izetta C. R. Jackson, Deputy City Attorneys, for Plaintiff and Appellant City of Oakland.

Ann Miller Ravel, County Counsel, and Cheryl A. Stevens, Deputy County Counsel, for Plaintiff and Appellant County of Santa Clara.

Pillsbury, Winthrop, Shaw & Pittman, Douglas R. Tribble, Connie J. Wolfe, John M. Grenfell and Michael J. Kass for Defendants and Respondents Cabrillo Power I, LLC, [3] Cabrillo Power II, LLC, Louis J. Dorey, Dynegy, Inc., Dynegy Marketing & Trading, Dynegy Power Marketing, Inc., El Segundo Power, LLC, Long Beach Generation, LLC, Matt K. Schatzman and Charles Watson.

Latham & Watkins, Daniel Murray Wall, Michael J. Weaver and Kimberly A. Hicks for Defendants and Respondents Sempra Energy, Inc., Sempra Generation and Sempra Energy Trading Corporation.

Coughlan, Semmer & Lipman, R. J. Coughlan, Jr.; Williams & Connolly and Stephen D. Raber for Defendant and Respondent AES Corporation. [*1298]

Kirkland & Ellis, Tony L. Richardson, Jeffrey S. Davidson and James B. Ransom for Defendant and Respondent Morgan Stanley Capital Group, Inc.

Judges: Huffman, J., with McConnell, P. J., and Irion, J., concurring.

Opinion by: Huffman

Opinion

[256]

HUFFMAN, J.—Plaintiffs and appellants Borrego Water District et al. (Borrego), a group of public entities and retail purchasers of electricity, filed this action for damages and other relief against defendants and respondents AES

Corporation et al. (AES), a number of companies and their subsidiaries which are generators, sellers, or traders of electricity at wholesale (defendants). In their master complaint filed in 2002 in these [4] coordinated actions, plaintiffs allege violations of California's antitrust laws (Bus. & Prof. Code, [1] § 16720; hereafter the Cartwright Act), as well as violations of California's unfair competition law (§ 17200 et seq.; hereafter the UCL). [2] These allegations all arise out of market conditions and events during the California energy crisis of 2000 and onward, relating to claims for damages and injunctive relief for anticompetitive activity and/or unfair [257] competition in the wholesale electricity market.

In response to the filing of this action, and after a delay of several years due to removal to federal court and remand to state court, all defendants brought and renewed a joint demurrer to the master complaint, on the grounds of lack of [5] jurisdiction. Defendants argued the subject matter of the master complaint was preempted by federal law that had occupied the field of wholesale electricity market control and regulation, because plaintiffs' theories of recovery would inevitably require the superior court to determine reasonable rates for wholesale power sales. Defendants further argued that a regulatory doctrine, the filed rate doctrine, barred the filing of this action for damages. (See Public Utility v. Dynegy Power Marketing (9th Cir. 2004) 384 F.3d 756 (Snohomish); Public Utility, Grays Harbor, WA v. IDACORP (9th Cir. 2004) 379 F.3d 641, 647 (Grays Harbor).) The trial court agreed and sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

Plaintiffs appeal, contending the ruling was erroneous because California case law, Younger v. Jensen (1980) 26 Cal.3d 397 [161 Cal. Rptr. 905, 605 P.2d 813] (Younger) and Spielholz v. Superior Court (2001) 86 Cal.App.4th 1366 [104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197] (Spielholz), should support a finding that state law can provide an independent ground for regulation of the anticompetitive [6] or unfair [*1299] conduct of defendants, through an award of antitrust damages, such that there should be no finding of federal preemption. Plaintiffs found further support for their theory of general applicability of state antitrust laws in the context of electricity market disputes in the United States Supreme Court case of Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States (1973) 410 U.S. 366 [35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022] (Otter Tail Power).

Our analysis of the master complaint and pertinent case law convinces us that the trial court correctly applied the doctrines of field and conflict preemption in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. We find additional support for that conclusion in the filed rate doctrine, relied on by the trial court as an alternate ground for its ruling on demurrer. (California ex rel. Lockyer v. Dynegy, Inc. (9th Cir. 2004) 375 F.3d 831, 852–853 (Dynegy).) We affirm the judgment of dismissal.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A

Master Complaint; Coordinated Proceedings

Since 2001, these coordinated proceedings have included a total of six actions originating both in San Diego and in other counties. Plaintiffs, the [7] People of the State of California (suing through city attorneys) and 21 retail purchasers of electricity, filed their master complaint in 2002. These plaintiffs did not purchase power directly from defendants, which are wholesalers, but rather from several investor-owned utilities, including San Diego Gas & Electric and Southern California Edison. Although several of the plaintiffs originally sought class certification, those matters were apparently stayed pending the demurrer proceedings and are not before us on this appeal. [3]
[258]

---

[1] All statutory references are to this code unless otherwise stated.

[2] Sections 17200 through 17209 are commonly referred to as the unfair competition law or UCL. (Stop Youth Addiction, Inc. v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal.4th 553, 558, fn. 2 [71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731, 950 P.2d 1086].)

[3] Certain of the plaintiffs, public officials whom we denote the Bustamante group, do not join in the antitrust claims but make additional UCL claims based on Penal Code violations. (Pen. Code, §§ 395, 396.) The same basic theories pertain to all the causes of action and we need not discuss these additional distinctions separately.

A number of major named defendant groups have settled this case and are not participants in this appeal (Reliant [8] Energy, Duke Energy, Williams Energy Marketing & Trading, and Mirant Americas Energy, etc.). [4] The remaining defendants, and their subsidiaries for whose activities they are sued, are four [*1300] groups of generators, sellers, or traders of electricity at wholesale (Dynegy, Inc.; Morgan Stanley Capital Group, Inc.; AES Corporation; and Sempra Energy, Inc.). [5]

Plaintiffs assert a number of alleged violations of the Cartwright Act (first cause of action) and the unfair and/or unlawful prongs of the UCL statute (second and third causes of action), [9] occurring around 2000, during a period of intense governmental and commercial activity to deregulate the electricity markets pursuant to 1996 state legislation, Public Utilities Code section 330 et seq. (Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d 831, 835 ["Noting the energy industry restructuring already underway, the California Legislature decided that reshaping the market for California energy could help provide competitive, lower cost and reliable electricity service, while preserving the state's commitment to developing diverse, environmentally sensitive electricity resources. [Citation.] Assembly Bill 1890 ('AB 1890') established the legal structure for the deregulation and restructuring plan"].)

In the introductory allegations of the master complaint, plaintiffs allege that they are entitled to recover damages and other equitable and injunctive relief, based on injuries incurred during this period and "arising from defendants' manipulation, distortion, and corruption of California's deregulated wholesale electricity market. Defendants' unfair and unlawful business practices and illegal restraints of trade included combining to withhold supply from [10] electricity markets and colluding to fix electricity prices. This conduct forced electricity users to pay electricity prices based not on competitive market forces, but prices which were grossly inflated due to defendants' conduct. [¶] This action seeks to remedy that conduct, which caused widespread electricity shortages and astronomical prices. Defendants' manipulation of what was supposed to be a competitive market for wholesale electricity harmed all Californians and destabilized the California economy, which depends on a reliable supply of competitively priced energy. The total harm caused by defendants' conduct is, at this point, unknown. …"

Plaintiffs' master complaint cites to several examples of defendants' alleged exploitation of the changes since 1996 in the energy market's new regulatory and economic structure. These include practices of "conspiring to withhold the supply of energy into the PX and ISO [power exchange and Independent System Operator, nonprofit public benefit corporations established by the Legislature] markets and to manipulate the price at which [*1301] wholesale energy was sold." Plaintiffs allege this constituted "gaming the market" to create false [11] shortages and prevent the [259] sale of electricity at competitive rates. [6]

The master complaint describes how the ISO was charged with balancing the supply of energy offered for sale into the market with demand at certain points in time, and was required to purchase energy on the spot market to meet any shortfalls. This spot market was susceptible to manipulation regarding the price of wholesale energy, which was set by the "market clearing price," or the highest price offered for sale of energy necessary to meet the load. This scheme was supposed to promote competition to attract new sources of power and lower the price of electricity, but according to plaintiffs, it was subject to abuse.

Additionally, defendants' communications and information sharing were alleged to be made for the purpose of and having the [12] effect of manipulating supply and fixing prices. Defendants "manipulated supply such that the ISO was forced to issue shortage warnings during the Summer of 2000 even though the State had sufficient generating capacity. Defendants accomplished this by withholding supply from the PX and ISO markets, thus

---

[4] Apparently, those settlements with those other defendants also included other related claims, and are not informative with regard to the issues on this appeal.

[5] In addition to suing these four major employers in the business of wholesale electric trading and marketing, plaintiffs named three individual defendants, who were management employees of the Dynegy group. No separate allegations are made about the individual defendants and we refer to all defendants collectively.

[6] The ISO continues to manage the wholesale electricity market, but the PX is no longer in operation. Plaintiffs' allegations relate to the period during which the PX was still participating in the market.

creating artificial shortages of electricity which, in turn, raised the market clearing prices on the wholesale energy markets. Much of this withholding was executed by simply shutting down or restricting the output of operational electricity generators. … [¶] This sort of activity provided the pretext—electricity shortages—for defendants' collusive and outrageous sales prices offered into the wholesale energy markets operated by the PX and ISO. From their respective trading floors, defendants coordinated the prices for electricity they offered for sale, otherwise known as 'bid rigging.' "

Plaintiffs therefore alleged that defendants' conduct departed from a competitive model, and they could "wield 'market power,' i.e., the ability to control the market price." This conduct "materially raised electricity prices in the PX and ISO markets, which in turn, resulted in higher [13] retail prices to consumers." The relief sought included actual and treble damages, restitution, civil penalties, and injunctive relief.

B

Demurrer/Opposition

In June 2005, after remand from federal court, defendants renewed their joint demurrer, asserting a lack of jurisdiction in the superior court, based on [*1302] federal preemption, as well as failure to state the causes of action. Defendants asserted plaintiffs' claims, based on conduct occurring in the wholesale energy market, cannot be adjudicated in state court because that is a field which is regulated by the federal government through the Federal Power Act (FPA; 16 U.S.C. § 791a et seq.) and placed within the exclusive authority of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC). Defendants relied on federal case law holding that state law claims arising from wholesale transactions in the interstate electricity market are preempted under the FPA and that the filed rate doctrine applies to rates regulated under the FPA. (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756; Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 647.)

Defendant argued the cases cited by plaintiffs as precluding a finding of preemption, such as Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397, [14] and Spielholz, supra, 86 Cal.App.4th 1366, were distinguishable [260] and more limited than plaintiffs believed. Opposition and reply papers were filed, supported by extensive judicially noticeable material from FERC records. [7]

[*15] At oral argument in the trial court, defendants responded to plaintiffs' theories with the observation that there were ongoing refund requests before FERC by one of the defendants' subsidiaries, San Diego Gas & Electric, and defendants contended FERC was the proper forum. Plaintiffs continued to argue that in light of the various changes in the FERC regulatory process, from filed rates to a market-based type of regulation, Congress could not have intended to preempt the field when it enacted the FPA. Plaintiffs relied on Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397, to contend concurrent state antitrust regulation in the wholesale market was appropriate, also citing to a related case in which a federal district court judge had observed that it was possible to establish a violation of the *Cartwright Ac*t without reference to the FPA's " 'just and reasonable' " rates standard. (Hendricks v. Dynegy Power Marketing, Inc. (S.D.Cal 2001) 160 F. Supp. 2d 1155, 1163 (Hendricks).) In plaintiffs' view, it was possible to establish damages for anticompetitive conduct by defendants that were not measured by rate regulation standards. Plaintiffs contended that antitrust damages should be measured [16] by what price the market would have set if anticompetitive forces were not operating, as distinguished from the [*1303] FERC standard of a just and reasonable rate, which was tied to how much money defendants were entitled to be making. The matter was taken under submission.

C

---

[7] Plaintiffs appropriately request judicial notice on appeal of various FERC proceedings and decisions in the record, outlining the scope of its jurisdiction as granted by the FPA (16 U.S.C. § 791a et seq.). These orders and decisions deal with rate schedules and proposed market-based rates and tariffs, and are submitted by plaintiffs to provide examples of FERC's duties to review whether rates and rate-related practices are just and reasonable, and to provide remedies for violations. (16 U.S.C. §§ 824d, 824e.) We need not discuss several of plaintiffs' arguments made below, which are not pursued on appeal, such as the purported distinction between the roles of sellers and other participants in the market, such that "at a minimum the case should proceed against traders and generators."

Ruling

After oral argument, the trial court issued its order, setting forth its reasoning as follows. First, the court granted the respective requests for judicial notice of rulings and orders issued by FERC. The demurrer was sustained on the basis that all claims were preempted and Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397, was distinguishable. The court primarily relied on the authority of a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decision, Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756, to conclude that plaintiffs' claims and prayer for relief would impermissibly require a "fair price" determination, already found to be barred by preemption principles in Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641. The court concluded the field preemption and conflict preemption principles barred each of plaintiffs' claims.

Further, the trial court rejected plaintiffs' argument that Otter Tail Power, supra, 410 U.S. 366 [17] , would bar a finding of preemption, "because that case concerned federal antitrust laws and not state antitrust laws as Plaintiffs allege in their Master Complaint." The court further noted that in light of its finding that preemption bars plaintiffs' claims, it was not required to reach the issue of the applicability of the filed rate doctrine; nevertheless, those [261] principles would bar these claims (relying on, e.g., Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756; Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641; Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d 831). These rulings were dispositive and the master complaint was dismissed.

Plaintiffs, through liaison counsel, timely filed their notice of appeal.

DISCUSSION

The main thrust of the complaint is that defendants' conduct, their alleged "manipulation, distortion and corruption" of the wholesale electricity market in California, "forced electricity users to pay electricity prices based not on competitive market forces, but prices which were grossly inflated due to defendants' conduct," thereby giving rise to an entitlement to antitrust damages and unfair competition remedies in favor of plaintiffs. To avoid the effect of [18] federal preemption in this heavily regulated area, plaintiffs seek to distinguish between the regulatory authority granted to FERC to order compliance with its policies, such as by ordering refunds to electricity [*1304] consumers, and the types of damages and other relief recoverable under the Cartwright Act and/or the UCL.

We first set forth rules regarding federal preemption in this factual and legal context. We then address the filed rate doctrine.

I

QUESTIONS OF LAW PRESENTED

To address these issues as resolved on demurrer, we apply basic standards of review. HN1[] "We review the trial court's sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend de novo, exercising our independent judgment as to whether a cause of action has been stated as a matter of law. [Citations.] We 'give the complaint a reasonable interpretation, reading it as a whole and its parts in their context. [Citation.]' [Citation.] A judgment based on a dismissal must be affirmed if any of the grounds for demurrer raised by the defendant is well-taken and disposes of the complaint. [Citation.]" (Gallivan v. AT&T Corp. (2004) 124 Cal.App.4th 1377, 1381 [21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 898].)

HN2[] "When the issues regarding federal [19] preemption involve undisputed facts, it is a question of law whether a federal statute or regulation preempts a state law claim and, on appeal, we independently review a trial court's determination on that issue of preemption. [Citations.]" (Smith v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2005) 135 Cal.App.4th 1463, 1476 [38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 653] (Smith).)

A preliminary question of law we must address is whether plaintiffs are entitled to claim the benefit of "the general rule disfavoring implied preemption." (Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. Public Utilities Com. (2004) 121 Cal.App.4th 1303, 1311–1312 [18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 435] (Southern California Edison).) This is sometimes termed a "presumption against preemption. HN3[] 'We apply a presumption against federal preemption unless the state attempts to regulate an area in which there is a history of significant federal regulation.' [Citation.]" (Grays Harbor, supra, 379

F.3d 641, 648, fn. 7.) Plaintiffs rely on Smith, supra, 135 Cal.App.4th 1463, to argue that the Cartwright Act may provide alternative schemes of regulation of wholesale electricity markets, to the extent that such claims are not inconsistent with federal preemption [20] in this area. They hinge this claim upon their perception that antitrust damages arising from defendants' anticompetitive conduct are different in nature from any penalties or refunds that FERC might order resulting from the same type [262] of conduct. They argue the party claiming federal preemption (defendants) have the burden to show specific state law claims are preempted. (Smith, supra, at p. 1475.)

[*1305]

In response, defendants cite to Southern California Edison, supra, 121 Cal.App.4th 1303, to say that the "presumption against preemption" is "characteristically applied where the field is one that the states have traditionally occupied and regulated. [Citation.] The presumption 'is not triggered when the state regulates in an area where there has been a history of significant federal presence. [Citation.]' [Citation.] Inasmuch as the field of interconnection [wholesale electricity distribution] agreements has a history of significant federal presence, the presumption against preemption is not applicable here." (Id. at pp. 1311–1312.) We agree with those observations and those of the court in Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 648, footnote 7, [21] that "[t]his presumption is almost certainly not applicable here because the federal government has long regulated wholesale electricity rates."

We therefore seek to examine, free from any such presumption against preemption, the respective merits of the arguments by both plaintiffs and defendants regarding the application of preemption principles here.

II

PREEMPTION PRINCIPLES

CA(1)[] (1) As set forth in Smith, supra, 135 Cal.App.4th 1463, 1476, HN4[] our task is to examine "the precise language of the federal law or regulation to determine whether a particular state law claim is preempted. [Citations.] 'As to each state law claim, the central inquiry is whether the legal duty that is the predicate of the [claim] constitutes a requirement or prohibition of the sort that federal law expressly preempts. [Citations.]' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

To carry out this analysis of the scope of preemption in the energy/electricity context, we first outline the leading case authority dealing with similar claims arising out of the California energy crisis in the wholesale electricity market, as issued by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. We then compare the [22] nature of the antitrust/UCL damages requested, to the remedial powers allocated by the FPA (16 U.S.C. § 791a) to FERC (formerly the FPC (Federal Power Commission) [see hist. & stat. notes, 16 U.S.C.A. (2000) foll. § 792, p. 78]). We note that although preemption principles are closely intertwined with the "filed rate doctrine," which is central to FERC's operations, we may nevertheless discuss them separately. (California ex rel. Lockyer v. F.E.R.C. (9th Cir. 2004) 383 F.3d 1006, 1011 (Lockyer).) The reason is that the historic filed rate doctrine is undergoing fast-paced evolution in the context of energy deregulation, such as the aftermath of the 1996 California legislation with which we are dealing. (Pub. Util. Code, § 330 et seq.; Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d 831, 852–853.) We will address this evolution to the extent necessary in part III, post.

[*1306]

Finally, with this background set forth, we will analyze plaintiffs' arguments that certain alternative federal and state authority shows that antitrust relief in the state courts is not inconsistent with the grant of federal authority to regulate [23] the wholesale electricity market. (E.g., Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397; Otter Tail Power, supra, 410 U.S. 366.)

A

Recent Ninth Circuit Authority

CA(2)[] (2) In Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 644, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals [263] built upon earlier authority (Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d 831), to address "contract-related claims against energy wholesalers by a public utility which contends it was forced to pay exorbitant prices for electricity." (Grays Harbor, supra, at p. 644.) The court upheld a district court dismissal of such contract claims on preemption grounds. It first set forth basic preemption principles: "As an initial matter, it is clear that HN5[] the Federal Power Act (the 'FPA') grants FERC ' "exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce." ' [Citations.] Through the FPA, ' "Congress meant to draw a bright line easily ascertained, between state and federal jurisdiction. … This was done in the Power Act by making [FERC] jurisdiction plenary and extending it to all wholesale sales in interstate commerce except [24] those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the States." ' [Citation.] This power includes the exclusive authority to determine the reasonableness of wholesale rates. [Citations.]" (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 646–647.)

In Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d 831, 839, the court explained the operation of the ISO tariffs filed with FERC, and said that "the ISO tariff binds the companies to important obligations and duties that are relevant and necessary to the state law claim." (Ibid.) For example, "the ISO must file schedules showing its rates and charges, and the practices and regulations affecting such charges. [Citation.] The filing enables FERC to determine whether the ISO rules and regulations pertaining to those charges are reasonable, as required by the FPA. [Citation.] Once filed with a federal agency, such tariffs are the 'equivalent of a federal regulation.' [Citations.] … Besides specifying the generators' responsibilities, the tariff also details penalties and remedies for non-compliance." (Ibid.)

Even though the unsuccessful plaintiff in Grays Harbor was claiming contract damages (nominally [25] state law causes of action), the court of appeals read its complaint as seeming, impermissibly, "to require the district court, at some point, to determine the fair price of the electricity that was delivered under the contract. This determination is clearly within FERC's jurisdiction [*1307] for determining the reasonableness of wholesale rates. [Citations.] At the very least, the requested relief intrudes on an 'identifiable portion' of a field that the federal government has occupied and addresses a matter that is 'in any way regulated by the federal government.' [Citation.]" (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d at p. 648.)

The court of appeals also rejected the plaintiff's claim that "market-based rates are not within FERC's exclusive jurisdiction over wholesale rates." (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 649.) The federal court acknowledged that FERC had changed its policies from requiring filed rates to allowing market-based rates. However, traditional preemption principles continue to apply because, "by asking the court to set a fair price, Grays Harbor is invoking a state rule (specifically, contract law) that would interfere with the method by which [26] the federal statute was designed to reach its goals (specifically, FERC regulation of wholesale electricity rates). To permit Grays Harbor to receive in its court action what is essentially a refund would create a conflict with FERC's authority over wholesale rates. And such a result would make state law stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress under the FPA." (Id. at p. 650, fn. omitted.) The court ruled the contract [264] claims would interfere with FERC's exclusive jurisdiction to set wholesale rates and were barred by field preemption, conflict preemption, and the filed rate doctrine. (Id. at pp. 648, 650, 651.)

In the next case, Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756, the court extended the reasoning in Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, from the contract field to the antitrust field. The federal court found that preemption rules applied to preclude a California state law antitrust court action that was essentially challenging market-based rates. The court explained its reasoning: "The fundamental question in this case is whether, under the market-based [27] system of setting wholesale electricity rates, FERC is doing enough regulation to justify federal preemption of state laws. The answer to this question is controlled by two recent decisions of this court: Dynegy, [supra,] 375 F.3d 831, and Grays Harbor, [supra,] 379 F.3d 641. Under the system at issue here, FERC has waived many of the requirements that applied under the cost-based system. For example, the actual prices are no longer filed with FERC 60 days before they can be charged and the utilities do not provide FERC with detailed schedules of their costs. Instead, the price of wholesale electricity is determined in the markets operated by the PX and the ISO. [¶] FERC continued to oversee wholesale electricity rates, however, by reviewing and approving a variety of documents filed by the defendants, the PX, and the ISO." (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756, 760, italics added.)

[*1308]

The federal court of appeals then gave several examples of how FERC was continuing to exercise its regulatory power to a sufficient degree to justify continued federal preemption. These included considering applications for approval of [28] market-based tariffs upon a showing that the seller lacked or had mitigated its market power; requiring power sellers to file quarterly reports, which contained certain required information including the minimum and maximum rate charged and the total amount of power delivered during the quarter; and reviewing "detailed tariffs filed by the PX and the ISO, which described in detail how the markets operated by each entity would function." (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756, 761.)

Next, the court in Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756, described how FERC had taken action to order wholesalers to disgorge profits that resulted from the anticompetitive practices involved in that particular case. From all of these factors, the federal court decided that HN6[] preemption-related doctrines would continue to apply when market-based rates are involved, as laid out in Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641. (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d at pp. 760–761.) Even though Grays Harbor was a contract case, the same reasoning applied to the claims by Snohomish, alleging violations of state antitrust and unfair competition law. The court concluded [29] that both types of claims sought to have the district court "determine the rates that 'would have been achieved in a competitive market.' This is the same determination as the 'fair price' determination that we held was barred by preemption principles in Grays Harbor. We therefore hold that Snohomish's claims are barred by the filed rate doctrine, by field preemption, and by conflict preemption." (Snohomish, supra, at p. 761.) The plaintiff's proper course of action was to apply to FERC to redress its claims that the prices in the wholesale electricity markets were not just and reasonable or that the defendants sold electricity in violation of the filed tariffs. Snohomish's state antitrust claims were [265] dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. (Id. at p. 762.)

B

Nature of Remedies: FERC Regulatory Scheme/Antitrust Damages

CA(3)[] (3) Notwithstanding the above authority, plaintiffs contend that they may continue to pursue their claims for relief, damages pursued under the Cartwright Act and the UCL (alleging unlawful or unfair conduct), as alternative theories of recovery. However, in their reply brief, plaintiffs appear to admit that injunctive relief [30] is not available, although their position is unclear. In any case, in Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756, the court noted [*1309] such injunctive relief has been held to be barred in this context by preemption principles, as well as the filed rate doctrine. (Id. at pp. 761–762; Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d at pp. 849–853.) Ninth Circuit cases have held that HN7[] injunctive relief under the UCL in this context of energy regulation is preempted, because it would " 'encroach[] upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to FERC, both to enforce and to seek remedy.' " (Snohomish, supra, at p. 762; see Dynegy, supra, at pp. 836, 852.)

CA(4)[] (4) We therefore focus upon plaintiffs' remaining claims for antitrust damages for the defendants' anticompetitive conduct. HN8[] "[T]he central purpose of the antitrust laws, state and federal, is to preserve competition. It is competition—not the collusive fixing of prices at levels either low or high—that these statutes recognize as vital to the public interest." (Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 232 F.3d 979, 988 (Knevelbaard).) [31]

CA(5)[] (5) Plaintiffs' arguments require a comparison of antitrust relief to the remedies available from FERC under the FPA. HN9[] One of the elements of standing to seek antitrust damages for anticompetitive conduct is a sufficient showing of injury with respect to: " '(1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.' " (Knevelbaard, supra, 232 F.3d 979, 987.) A court must " 'evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them.' [Citation.]" (Ibid.; see Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 709, 723 [187 Cal. Rptr. 797] [antitrust standing is required under the Cartwright Act].)

CA(6)[] (6) It is well accepted that HN10[] damages awards in antitrust cases may not be based upon "sheer guesswork or speculation." (Suburban Mobile Homes, Inc. v. AMFAC Communities, Inc. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 532, 545 [161 Cal. Rptr. 811].) Rather, a plaintiff seeking such [32] damages must establish to a reasonable probability that there was some causal connection between defendant's wrongful act and the damages alleged, such as lost profits. (Ibid.) "Once that has been accomplished, the jury will be permitted to act upon probable and inferential proof and to 'make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly.' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

Plaintiffs say they can prove an entitlement to antitrust damages in state court, on the basis that the injuries they sustained as consumers from the [*1310] anticompetitive acts of defendants are mainly unrelated to FERC's normal duties of regulating rates and tariffs for the delivery of electricity on a wholesale basis. Plaintiffs believe they can show all the elements of "antitrust injury," i.e., " '(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, [266] (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.' " (Knevelbaard, supra, 232 F.3d 979, 987.) Plaintiffs believe that the injury they allege is distinct from the high energy prices allegedly caused by defendants' [33] actions in creating collusive supply, demand, and price manipulation. They say their claims "are based on duties and obligations that arise entirely independently of any 'tariff' relevant to this case." However, they admit that if FERC were to award any refunds, these would have to be offset against any court award of antitrust or UCL damages, and vice versa.

Defendants rely on the FPA statutory scheme as preempting the field, according to the basic principles explained in Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d 1006, 1011, as follows: "The Federal Power Act governs the transmission and wholesale sales of electrical energy in interstate commerce. [Citation.] Pursuant to its authority under the FPA, FERC has exclusive jurisdiction over interstate wholesale power rates. [Citations.] The FPA requires that all rates for the transmission and sale of wholesale electricity be filed with FERC and published for public review. [Citation.] FERC is obligated to ensure that wholesale power rates are 'just and reasonable,' [citation], and applied in a non-discriminatory manner, [citations]. Indeed, FERC's authority to determine whether wholesale rates are 'just and reasonable' is exclusive. [34] [Citation.]" (Lockyer, supra, at p. 1011.) As explained in Dynegy, the wholesale producers' filings will enable FERC "to determine whether the ISO rules and regulations pertaining to those charges are reasonable, as required by the FPA. [Citation.] Once filed with a federal agency, such tariffs are the 'equivalent of a federal regulation.' [Citations.]" (Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d at p. 839.)

CA(7)[] (7) Defendants accordingly argue that the FPA preempts this field and requires that any such relief be requested from FERC, such as refunds to purchasers. They point to 16 United States Code section 824d(a), providing that FERC is charged with regulating and disclosing "just and reasonable rates" as follows: HN11[] "All rates and charges made, demanded, or received by any public utility for or in connection with the transmission or sale of electric energy subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and all rules and regulations affecting or pertaining to such rates or charges shall be just and reasonable, and any such rate or charge that is not just and reasonable is hereby declared to be unlawful." (16 U.S.C. § 824d(a).) [35] Likewise, HN12[] in 16 United States Code section 824d(c), FERC is authorized to [*1311] require public utilities to file and disclose "schedules showing all rates and charges for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such rates and charges, together with all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to such rates, charges, classifications, and services."

FERC also has the power under 16 United States Code section 824e(a) to prohibit "[u]njust or preferential rates, etc." and to order remedies as follows: HN13[] "Whenever the Commission, after a hearing held upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that any rate, charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affected such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, [267] practice, or [36] contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order." HN14[] In 16 United States Code section 824e(b), the commission is entitled to prescribe the effective dates of refunds that it orders. We believe the broad scope of these statutes must invoke the rule that antitrust damages will not be proper where there is a risk of duplicative recovery. The nature of plaintiffs' alleged injury (equivalent to an entitlement to refunds) is apparently inseparable from the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to forestall. (Knevelbaard, supra, 232 F.3d 979, 987.)

Plaintiffs, however, offer several reasons why these applications of preemption theory were wrongly decided or distinguishable from their claims, as we next discuss.

C

Alternative Approaches Relied on by Plaintiffs to Preclude a Preemption Finding

Plaintiffs rely on California law (Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397; Spielholz, supra, 86 Cal.App.4th 1366) to argue no federal preemption principles apply here. They also cite to Otter Tail Power, as representing the concept that activities coming under the jurisdiction [37] of a regulatory agency "nevertheless may be subject to scrutiny under the antitrust laws." (Otter Tail Power, supra, 410 U.S. 366, 372.) Plaintiffs seemingly argue for a "back to basics" approach to preemption, based on this older case law focusing on congressional intent. Further, they point to language in the Lockyer opinion (Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d 1006) as showing that the federal courts here recognized that FERC is not doing a good enough job, such that alternative remedies should [*1312] now be allowed through this state antitrust action. We discuss these theories in turn.

In Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397, the court explained that an agency such as the FPC (now FERC) must take antitrust considerations into account when it determines " 'public interest' " and " 'public convenience and necessity,' " but the agency "has 'no power to insulate utilities under its regulation from the operation of the antitrust acts, or to determine when an antitrust violation has taken place. Otter Tail Power[, supra,] 410 U.S. 366, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 … .' [Citations.]" (Younger, supra, at pp. 407–408.) The Supreme Court decided that [38] a parallel piece of legislation, the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. § 717 et seq.), did not preclude the state Attorney General from investigating possible violations of California antitrust law. It reasoned that the act did not expressly prohibit investigation or other activity regarding state antitrust laws, and that such practices could be consistent with the federal counterparts. (Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d at p. 408.) The Supreme Court therefore found no federal preemption of the state Attorney General's investigation of alleged conduct such as " 'price fixing, monopolization, divisions of markets, and restraint of trade,' " and said "[h]ypothetical conflict between federal law and enforcement of California antitrust provisions within the scope of the investigation, even if assumed, is not ground for preemption since it may never arise in fact. [Citations.]" (Ibid.) Instead, state investigations into possible violations of California statutes that were in harmony with federal antitrust laws were deemed to be permissible and not preempted. (Id. at p. 409.)

Plaintiffs argue the authority of Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397, 409, is not restricted to [268] authorizing state antitrust investigation [39] procedures, but should also extend to authorizing state antitrust enforcement actions, such as this complaint. We disagree, because more than a "[h]ypothetical conflict between federal law and enforcement of California antitrust provisions" (id. at p. 408) is present here, in light of the extensive nature of the FERC regulatory scheme over the wholesale electricity market. In the FPA, we are presented with " ' "a bright line easily ascertained, between state and federal jurisdiction. … This was done in the Power Act by making [FERC] jurisdiction plenary and extending it to all wholesale sales in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the States." ' [Citations.] This power includes the exclusive authority to determine the reasonableness of wholesale rates. [Citations.]" (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 646–647.) Plaintiffs cannot explain why the trial court would not have to second-guess FERC rate determinations in fixing antitrust damages to punish defendants for the alleged anticompetitive conduct, because such conduct would directly affect the reasonableness of the rates charged.

[*40] [*1313]

In the UCL context, in Spielholz, supra, 86 Cal.App.4th 1366, those plaintiffs were allowed to proceed with false advertising allegations that a telecommunications carrier had falsely advertised a "seamless calling area" existed, where in reality, there were gaps where wireless telephone users were unable to connect calls. The Court of Appeal found no federal preemption of such claims, because the main allegations dealt with false advertising, such that any effect on rates was merely incidental. Here, however, as stated by the trial court, "This can be contrasted to the instant case, involving the FPA, where Plaintiffs' allegations concern conduct directly related to rates charged and ultimately paid." We agree with the trial court's analyses of the California case law claims, because plaintiffs have been unable to show why the alleged anticompetitive conduct by defendants inflicted any different kind of injury on them, that is separate from the rates charged and ultimately paid. This is not a case in which incidental damages are claimed to arise from conduct that is not covered by the federal legislation, such as false advertising.

In its ruling, the trial court [41] also rejected the argument that Otter Tail Power would bar a finding of preemption, since that case concerned federal antitrust laws and not state antitrust laws. There, the Supreme Court relied on legislative history to find nothing in the FPA that would "insulate electric power companies from the operation of the antitrust laws." (Otter Tail Power, supra, 410 U.S. 366, 374–375.) Rather, to the extent that voluntary business relationships are utilized to control the interstate distribution of power (as opposed to governmental regulation), "courts must be hesitant to conclude that Congress intended to override the fundamental national policies embodied in the antitrust laws." (Ibid.) The court in Otter Tail Power held there is no basis to conclude that the limited power granted to the FPC/FERC to regulate certain aspects of electrical supply (e.g., ordering interconnections of power lines) "was intended to be a substitute for, or to immunize Otter Tail from, antitrust regulation for refusing to deal with municipal corporations." (Ibid.) This authority is distinguishable because these plaintiffs are attempting to claim injury by invoking the same subject [42] matter covered by the government regulatory authority, but recharacterizing it as antitrust injury, all the while seeking to recover damages [269] for overcharged payments and allegedly excessive rates. This is a distinction without a difference.

Plaintiffs next argue that the authority of MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. (1994) 512 U.S. 218 [129 L. Ed. 2d 182, 114 S. Ct. 2223] and Maislin Industries, U. S. v. Primary Steel (1990) 497 U.S. 116 [111 L. Ed. 2d 94, 110 S. Ct. 2759] should indicate that the kind of market-based tariffs that are in use here are not properly regulated solely by the FPA and FERC. In Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d at p. 1013, the court of appeals summarized and distinguished those same holdings in a closely analogous factual context (regulatory challenges by the state to the actions of [*1314] the federal agency). The court explained the nature of these different market-based regulatory schemes as follows: "In MCI, the Supreme Court held that the FCC could not eliminate rate-filing requirements for any class of carrier, even when necessary to promote competitive markets. In Maislin, the Court held that the ICC could [43] not allow common carriers to charge unfiled, privately negotiated rates lower than the filed rates, even when the carriers were in highly competitive markets. [Citation.] As the Court stated in Maislin, the existence of a competitive market 'cannot provide the ICC authority to alter well-established statutory filed rate requirements.' [Citation.]" (Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d 1006, 1013.) The court of appeals then distinguished the FERC regulatory scheme from those schemes, in the course of rejecting an argument that the FERC procedures were fatally defective: "The agencies in MCI and Maislin relied on market forces alone in approving market-based tariffs. In contrast, FERC's system consists of a finding that the applicant lacks market power (or has taken sufficient steps to mitigate market power), coupled with strict reporting requirements to ensure that the rate is 'just and reasonable' and that markets are not subject to manipulation. Here, FERC required the wholesale seller to file a market analysis every four months, and quarterly reports summarizing its transactions during the preceding three months. These transaction summaries include both [44] long and short-term contracts, purportedly with reports of some sales for intervals as small as ten minutes. FERC has affirmed in its presentation before us that it is not contending that approval of a market-based tariff based on market forces alone would comply with the FPA or the filed rate doctrine. Rather, the crucial difference between MCI/Maislin and the present circumstances is the dual requirement of an ex ante finding of the absence of market power and sufficient post-approval reporting requirements. Given this, FERC argues that its market-based tariff does not run afoul of MCI or Maislin, and we agree." (Ibid., italics added.)

Plaintiffs have provided no reason to depart from the above analysis, and disregard the fact that the FPA includes certain safeguards to oversee the reasonableness of rates for the wholesale electricity market. It does not make any difference that in Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d 1006, 1013, the court of appeals reached those conclusions but nevertheless went on to criticize the regulatory efforts of FERC as "abdicating its regulatory responsibility." (Id. at pp. 1014–1015.) [45] At that time, the court of appeals accepted the argument that "even if market-based tariffs are lawful in concept, FERC failed to administer the tariffs in accordance with their terms and abused its discretion in limiting available remedies for regulatory violations." (Id. at p. 1014.) Specifically, in Lockyer, [270] the court found fault with FERC's past policies as follows. First, it had implemented market-based tariffs so as to virtually deregulate the wholesale electricity industry and remove it from statutorily required oversight, but without providing appropriate safeguards, such as "enforceable [*1315] post-approval reporting that would enable FERC to determine whether the rates were 'just and reasonable' and whether market forces were truly determining the price." (Ibid.) Second, these crucial transactional reporting requirements were not followed during the subject time period: "Indeed, non-compliance with FERC's reporting requirements was rampant throughout California's energy crisis. FERC itself has acknowledged that during the height of the energy crisis the quarterly reports of several major wholesalers failed to include the transaction-specific data [46] through which the agency at least theoretically could have monitored the California energy market … .[¶] … [¶] Thus, the very mechanism that distinguished FERC's tariff from those prohibited by the Supreme Court in MCI and Maislin was, for all practical purposes, non-existent while energy prices skyrocketed and rolling brown-outs threatened California's businesses and citizens." (Ibid.)

Notwithstanding those past institutional failures on the part of FERC, the court of appeals in Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d 1006, acknowledged that FERC possessed "broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior" (id. at p. 1015), such as ordering refunds in instances where utilities violated FPA provisions (exceeding approved rates or charging unapproved rates; FPA, § 205, 16 U.S.C. § 824d). [8] FERC can also order profits to be disgorged when a regulated utility fails to comply with requirements for posting rates and nondiscrimination requirements. Such remedial power (e.g., the power to order retroactive refunds) "is inherent in FERC's authority to approve a market-based tariff in the first instance." (Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d at pp. 1015–1016.) [47] This result was required in order to avoid having only an illusory remedy available from FERC under a market-based tariff system. The court of appeals therefore returned the matter to FERC "to reconsider its remedial options in the first instance." (Id. at p. 1018.)

CA(8)[] (8) Plaintiffs interpret all these authorities as showing that state antitrust regulation should be allowed in this instance, to fill the gaps left when FERC scaled back its activities and abdicated its regulatory responsibilities. We cannot agree, because HN15[] even considering its difficult history, FERC has been provided with sufficient regulatory authority such that federal preemption principles must be applied to these antitrust/UCL challenges arising from wholesale electricity market activities. Plaintiffs acknowledge that FERC refunds are [48] a potential remedy and offset for their claims. Moreover, they have been unable to show how any damages from defendants' conduct, recoverable under an antitrust theory, would be separate in nature from the allegedly overpaid rates that they paid for power, which would also give rise to any refund requests. The authority of Hendricks, supra, 160 F. Supp. 2d, 1155, 1163 (decided in 2001), regarding permissible concurrent theories of [*1316] relief, lacks persuasiveness in light of more recent case law such as Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756 and Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d [271] 641 (decided in 2004). [9] Similarly, although plaintiffs rely on Younger, supra, 26 Cal.3d 397 to contend concurrent state antitrust regulation in the wholesale market is appropriate, that case has not been extended beyond its facts pertaining to permissible investigations regarding matters within antitrust state jurisdiction, and this is not the right case to do so. (Id. at pp. 406–409.)

[*49] Plaintiffs' attempts to rely on fundamental case law from the 1970's and 1980's are unsuccessful because they cannot bring themselves within those general exceptions to well-established preemption principles. Rather, the logic of the recent Ninth Circuit authority in this area is persuasive and should be followed here. (Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756.) The trial court properly sustained the demurrers on preemption grounds.

III

---

[8] The FPA, § 205, cited in Lockyer, supra, 383 F.3d 1006, 1015–1016, is now codified at 16 United States Code section 824d. (U.S.C.A. Tables, vol. I, p. 251.)

[9] See also T & E Pastorino v. Duke Energy Trading (9th Cir. 2005) 123 Fed.Appx. 813, holding UCL allegations regarding transactions in the wholesale energy market fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of FPA, where tariffs approved by FERC would provide the context for determination of any violations of the UCL.

EFFECT OF FILED RATE DOCTRINE

The trial court's ruling stated that in light of its finding that federal preemption bars plaintiffs' claims, it was not required to reach the issue of the applicability of the filed rate doctrine. However, it concluded those principles would nevertheless bar these claims (relying on, e.g., Snohomish, supra, 384 F.3d 756; Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641; Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d 831, 851–853). All these issues have been fully briefed on appeal. Although the preemption ground alone would provide a sufficient basis to uphold the ruling on demurrer, in an abundance of caution, we will also address the closely related filed rate doctrine issues. Commentators [50] have referred to this line of case law as applying and/or conflating the filed rate doctrine together with field and conflict preemption. (Cal. Antitrust and Unfair Competition Law (Cont.Ed.Bar 3d ed. 2005 supp.) § 7.06, p. 41.)

CA(9)[] (9) " 'At its most basic, HN16[] the filed rate doctrine provides that state law, and some federal law (e.g. antitrust law), may not be used to invalidate a filed rate nor to assume a rate would be charged other than the rate adopted by the federal agency in question.' [Citations.] '[T]he filed rate doctrine has prohibited not just a state court (or a federal court applying state law) from setting a rate different from that chosen by FERC, but also from assuming a hypothetical rate different from that actually set by FERC.' " (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 650–651.)
[*1317]

Also in Grays Harbor, the court addressed contemporary concerns that HN17[] application of "the filed rate doctrine to market-based rates that have not been filed with FERC would be an unwise and unprecedented expansion of the doctrine." (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 651.) The court found no such barrier to the use of this doctrine, for the following [51] reasons: "[T]he market-based rate regime established by FERC continues FERC's oversight of the rates charged. FERC only permits power sales at market-based rates after scrutinizing whether 'the seller and its affiliates do not have, or have adequately mitigated, market power in generation and transmission and cannot erect other barriers to entry.' [Citation.] According to FERC, these conditions assure that the market-based rates charged comply with [272] the FPA's requirement that rates be just and reasonable. [Citations.] This oversight is ongoing … . [¶] … Further, FERC contends that such procedures effectively constitute review of rates prior to their implementation. [Citation.]" (Ibid.) FERC also has a remedies provision regarding refunds in 16 United States Code section 824e(a) and (b).

Based on those factors, the court of appeals stated that "while market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, we conclude that they do not fall outside of the purview of the doctrine." (Grays Harbor, supra, 379 F.3d 641, 651.) Although this analysis of the evolution of this regulatory [52] method is very general in nature, it is nevertheless persuasive and we have been given no reason to depart from it here. Instead, the allegations of the master complaint amount to requests for penalties for alleged anticompetitive conduct by defendants, and these potentially would interfere with FERC supervision of market-based rates and any enforcement activities allowed under FERC procedures. We are reluctant to engage in policy analysis to the extent that plaintiffs request in this fast-changing and highly regulated area.

Moreover, in light of these conclusions, we need not address in detail plaintiffs' limitations argument, that FERC was without jurisdiction as to conduct occurring prior to October 2, 2000, due to its own rulings about its assertion of jurisdiction as depending on the timing of events giving rise to claims filed. We find the filed rate doctrine to be instructive in this context and conclude that it reinforces our conclusions regarding preemption. (Dynegy, supra, 375 F.3d at pp. 852–853; Entergy La., Inc. v. Louisiana Pub. Ser. Comm'n (2003) 539 U.S. 39, 47 [156 L. Ed. 2d 34, 123 S. Ct. 2050] [filed rate doctrine may apply to state [53] regulators through federal preemption under the supremacy clause].) The trial court correctly sustained the demurrer without leave to amend on this ground as well.
[*1318]

DISPOSITION

The judgment of dismissal is affirmed. Plaintiffs are to pay the ordinary costs on appeal.

McConnell, P. J., and Irion, J., concurred.

Marin v. Evans

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington

February 27, 2007, Decided ; February 27, 2007, Filed

NO. CV-06-3090-RHW

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13492 *

AMBROSIO MARIN and MIGUEL SANCHEZ, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. WILLIAM EVANS and JUAN MARIN, Defendants.

Core Terms

affirmative defense, matter of law, antitrust, duty to mitigate, Preservation, notice, mitigate, enterprise, preempts, courts

Counsel: [*1] For Ambrosio Marin, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Howard W. Foster, LEAD ATTORNEY, Johnson & Bell LTD - IL, Chicago, IL.; Terry P Abeyta, LEAD ATTORNEY, Abeyta Nelson, Yakima, WA.

For Miguel Sanchez, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: David Roger Hevel, LEAD ATTORNEY, David Hevel Law Office, Kennewick, WA.; Howard W. Foster, LEAD ATTORNEY, Johnson & Bell LTD - IL, Chicago, IL.; Terry P Abeyta, Abeyta Nelson, Yakima, WA.

For William Evans, Defendant: Brendan Victor Monahan, Velikanje Moore & Shore PS, Yakima, WA.

For Juan Marin, Defendant: Ryan M Edgley, Edgley & Beattie PS, Yakima, WA.

Judges: ROBERT H. WHALEY, Chief United States District Judge.

Opinion by: ROBERT H. WHALEY

Opinion

ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR A PRESERVATION ORDER; DENYING, IN PART, AND GRANTING, IN PART, PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO STRIKE

Before the Court is Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Defendants' Affirmative Defense (Ct. Rec. 15) and Plaintiffs' Motion for a Preservation Order (Ct. Rec. 18). The motions were heard without oral argument.

I. Plaintiffs' Motion for Preservation Order

Plaintiffs ask the Court to enter [*2] a Preservation Order for two separate pieces of evidence: (1) Plaintiffs' class 1-9 forms; and (2) all of Evans Fruit Co.'s employees' e-mails. In support of their motion, Plaintiffs rely on the fact that in a separate case involving Zirkel Fruit Co, the plaintiffs in that case alleged that the defendants destroyed evidence. The connection to this case is the same attorneys that represented the defendants in that case are representing Defendants in this case.

Here, it is undisputed that Defendants have taken steps to prevent destruction or spoilation of the evidence. Moreover, Plaintiffs have failed to establish that there is any evidence of past evidence destruction concerning the parties to the current case. Accordingly, a preservation order is not necessary. See Capricorn Power Co. v. Siemens Westinghouse Power Corp., 220 F.R.D. 429, 433-34 (W.D. Pa. 2004) (recognizing that in the absence of significant concern that evidence will be destroyed, preservation order is rarely justified).

II. Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Defendants' Affirmative Defenses

Rule 12(f) provides that "the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or [*3] any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. R. 12(f). The primary purpose of 12(f) is to "avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial." A defense may be stricken if it is insufficient as a matter of law, Waste Mgmt. Holdings, Inc. v. Gilmore, 252 F.3d 316, 347 (4th Cir. 2001) or if it fails to adequately give notice to the opposing party. Wyshak v. City Nat'l Bank, 607 F.2d 824, 827 (9th Cir. 1979). A decision to strike material from the pleadings is vested to the sound discretion of the trial court. Nurse v. United States, 226 F.3d 996, 1000 (9th Cir. 2000).

Plaintiffs ask the Court to strike the Defendants' duty to mitigate defense, statute of limitations defense, and preemption defense on the grounds that these affirmative defenses: (1) do not provide adequate notice; and (2) are legally insufficient as a matter of law.

A. Adequacy of Notice

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' assertions of these affirmative defenses failed to provide them with adequate notice. [*4] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide that a party must state "in short and plain terms" its "defenses to each claim asserted." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(b). The key to determining the sufficiency of pleading an affirmative defense is whether it gives the plaintiff fair notice of the defense. Wyshak, 607 F.2d at 827. A defendant need not set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim, but rather, must only provide fair notice of the claim and the grounds upon which it rests. Id.

Here, although Defendants have provided a fairly short and succinct listing of their affirmative defenses, it cannot be said that Plaintiffs were not given fair notice of the defense.

B. Legally Sufficiency

Plaintiffs assert that Defendants' affirmative defenses are not sufficient as a matter of law. An affirmative defense is legally insufficient as a matter of law when it does not constitute a valid defense under the claims and facts alleged. Gilmore, 252 F.3d at 347. If the issue is a pure legal question, courts are generally disinclined to grant a motion to strike if there are "disputed and substantial questions [*5] of law," especially where there is no showing of prejudicial harm. Augustus v. Bd. of Pub. Instruction of Escambia County, Florida, 306 F.2d 862, 868 (5th Cir. 1962). Under such circumstances, the court should defer ruling on the motion and leave the sufficiency of the allegations for determination on the merits. Id.

1. Duty to Mitigate

Plaintiffs argue that a duty to mitigate defense cannot be asserted against a RICO claim. RICO prohibits individuals or enterprises from engaging in a pattern of racketeering activity. Mendoza v. Zirkle Fruit Co., 301 F.3d 1163, 1168 (9th Cir. 2002). The purpose of RICO is to protect: (1) lawful enterprises from being utilized by individuals for unlawful purposes; and (2) the public from individuals who would use an enterprise as a tool to facilitate illegal activity. Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 164, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 (2001). Rotella v. Wood, 528 U.S. 549, 557, 120 S. Ct. 1075, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1047 (2000).

The Court did not find any federal case law dealing with the precise issue of whether a duty to mitigate is a legally sufficient defense against a RICO claim. Generally, when there is an unsettled [*6] area in RICO law, the federal courts can turn to antitrust law for guidance. Imagineering, Inc. v. Kiewit Pacific Co., 976 F.2d 1303, 1311 (9th Cir. 1992). In dealing with the question of whether broad common law defenses are allowed in antitrust claims, the courts examine whether the common law defense controverts the primary purposes underlying the particular federal statute in question. Perma Life Mufflers Inc. v. Int'l Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 138, 88 S. Ct. 1981, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1968) rev'd on other grounds, Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984).

Plaintiffs cite to Perma Life and Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards, Inc. v. Berner, 472 U.S. 299, 105 S. Ct. 2622, 86 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1985), for the proposition that a failure to mitigate "is not a recognized affirmative defense to RICO claims." In Perma Life, the Supreme Court rejected the idea that courts have the power to undermine the antitrust acts by denying recovery to injured parties merely because they were in pari delicto, i.e., mutually or equally at fault. 392 U.S. at 137. There, the Supreme Court indicated that it would be inappropriate to invoke broad common-law barriers [*7] to relief where a private suit served important purposes. Id. More importantly, however, the Court reserved ruling on whether truly complete involvement and participation could be a basis for barring a plaintiff's antitrust action because the record before the Court did not support such a finding. Id. at 140.

In so ruling, the Supreme Court in Perma Life implied that a factual inquiry would be necessary to determine whether an affirmative defense based on the plaintiff's culpability could be asserted against an antitrust claim. This conclusion finds further support in Bateman. Indeed, the Supreme Court in Bateman explicitly held that a in pari delicto could be asserted in a federal securities case when certain factual circumstances were present. 472 U.S. at 310-11.

Moreover, other courts have recognized the affirmative defense of failure to mitigate in claims brought under federal statutes. See In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation 280 F.3d 124, 149-50 (2nd Cir. 2001) (noting that a duty to mitigate in antitrust claims serves the important purpose of preventing plaintiffs from seeking treble damages and [*8] profiting by refusing to mitigate) (Jacobs, CJ., dissenting); Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 559 (7th Cir. 1987) (the plaintiff is required to mitigate damages, but the plaintiff is not required to engage in an undue risk to mitigate); Litton Systems v. AT & T, 700 F.2d 785, 820 n.47 (2nd Cir. 1983) (stating without explanation that a defendant has a duty to mitigate in an antitrust claim); see also Bieter Co. v. Blomquist, 987 F.2d 1319, 1329 (8th Cir. 1993) (appearing to operate under the assumption that a duty to mitigate is a valid defense in RICO claims).

Here, there is no case law on point that directly supports the argument that the Court should rule, as a matter of law, that the affirmative defense of failure to mitigate can never be asserted in a civil RICO claim. Even if the Court were to analogize to an antitrust case, those cases relied upon by Plaintiffs do not establish that such an affirmative defense can never be asserted as a matter of law. Instead, these cases support the conclusion that the Court should consider the facts of the case in determining whether a defendant can assert an affirmative defense [*9] at trial. Thus, the Court declines to strike this affirmative defense at this stage in the proceedings.

2. Statute of Limitations

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' statute of limitation defense is legally sufficient as a matter of law and should be stricken. The statute of limitations period for a RICO civil action is four years. Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assoc., 483 U.S. 143, 156, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1987). The Ninth Circuit follows the "injury discovery" rule which has two components. Grimmett v. Brown, 75 F.3d 506, 510-512 (9th Cir. 1996). First, the four year statute of limitations period begins to run when a plaintiff knows, or should have known, of his or her injury. Id. at

510. Second, "a new cause of action accrues for each new and independent injury, even if the RICO violation causing the injury happened more than four years before." Id.

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that "defendants have depressed their wages by knowingly employing vast numbers of illegal immigrants, more than 5,000 in the last four years." (Ct. Rec. 1). Plaintiffs' complaint was filed on September 29, 2006. Given that it is possible that there may be [*10] questions of fact regarding when Plaintiffs knew about the injury, and whether Plaintiffs are relying on the "new and independent injury" to assert the basis for the RICO violations that occurred prior to 2002, it is premature to strike this affirmative defense at this stage of the proceedings.

3. Preemption

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' defense that the Immigration Reform Control Act (IRCA) preempts Plaintiffs' civil RICO claim is legally insufficient as a matter of law and should be stricken. A RICO violation is established when the claimants show that they have suffered an injury caused by a pattern of racketeering activity that was perpetrated by either an (a) enterprise or (b) individual in control of an enterprise. § 1962(a)-(d). RICO defines "racketeering activity" as "any act which is indictable under the Immigration and Nationality Act, section 774 . . . committed for the purpose of financial gain." 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961(1). Section 774 is codified as § 1324 of the IRCA. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1324.

Here, Defendants' affirmative defense that the IRCA preempts RICO is legally insufficient. The Court adopts Judge Van Sickle's [*11] reasoning in Mendoza v. Zirkle Fruit Co., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21126, 2000 WL 33225470 (E.D. Wash. 2000), that Congress would not have included violations of the immigration laws, including 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a), as a predicate act under RICO if had intended the IRCA to preempt civil RICO actions. Therefore, the Court strikes Defendants' affirmative defense that IRCA preempts Plaintiffs' civil RICO claims.

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

1. Plaintiffs' Motion for a Preservation Order (Ct. Rec. 18) is DENIED.

2. Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Defendants' Affirmative Defense (Ct. Rec. 15) is DENIED in part; and GRANTED, in part. The Court strikes Defendants' affirmative defense that IRCA preempts Plaintiffs' civil RICO claims.

IT IS SO ORDERED. The District Court Executive is directed to enter this Order and forward copies to counsel.

DATED this 27<th> day of February, 2007.

s/ Robert H. Whaley

Chief United States District Judge

End of Document

Smith Wholesale Co. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

April 21, 2006, Argued ; February 27, 2007, Decided ; February 27, 2007, Filed

File Name: 07a0082p.06

No. 05-6053

Reporter

477 F.3d 854 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 4254 ; 2007 FED App. 0090P (6th Cir.) ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,619

SMITH WHOLESALE COMPANY, INC., RICE WHOLESALE CO., INC., ANDALUSIA DISTRIBUTING CO., INC., DIXIE TOBACCO & CANDY CO., GEORGE WHOLESALE CO., LTD., INDEPENDENT WHOLESALE INC., L.P. SHANKS CO., MCCARTY-HULL CIGAR CO., INC., R.C. TAYLOR DISTRIBUTING CO., REIDSVILLE GROCERY CO., INC., A.B. COKER CO., INC., AFFILIATED FOODS, INC., ACADIA WHOLESALE & TOBACCO CO., CALDWELL WHOLESALE CO., INC., NOVELART MANUFACTURING CO., YAKIMA DISTRIBUTING CO., INC., HUNTSVILLE WHOLESALE GROCERY, PELICAN STATE CIGAR & TOBACCO, INC., Plaintiffs-Appellants, STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, and STATE OF TENNESSEE, Intervenor Plaintiffs, M.K. GROCERY CO., INC., and CORSO, INC., Plaintiffs, v. R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, Defendant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: US Supreme Court certiorari dismissed by, in part Andalusia Distrib. Co. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 128 S. Ct. 38, 168 L. Ed. 2d 810, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 9964 (U.S., Sept. 28, 2007)

US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Andalusia Distrib. Co. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 128 S. Ct. 356, 169 L. Ed. 2d 24, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 10307 (U.S., Oct. 1, 2007)

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee at Greeneville. No. 03-00030--J. Ronnie Greer, District Judge.

Smith Wholesale Co. v. R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31961 (E.D. Tenn., Nov. 29, 2005)

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

discount, wholesalers, distributors, cigarettes, customers, brands, purchasers, sales, target, price discrimination, pricing, competitors, plaintiffs', savings, volume, products, manufacturer, fourth-tier, Robinson-Patman Act, retail, dealers, quantity, buyer, favored, district court, best price, formula, levels, take advantage, commodities

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

An appellate court reviews a district court's decision granting summary judgment de novo.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The evidence must be viewed in a light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, giving that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. However, the nonmoving party must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. It must present significant probative evidence in support of its complaint to defeat the motion for summary judgment. A mere scintilla of evidence is insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, motions for summary judgment are disfavored in antitrust litigation. This general rule, however, does not preclude the use of summary judgment in an antitrust case in which there clearly are no genuine issues of fact to try, indeed, the very purpose of a motion for summary judgment, to eliminate a trial where it would be unnecessary and merely result in delay and expense, warrants summary disposition of such cases when appropriate. Accordingly, the absence of any relevant probative evidence in support of a litigant's antitrust claims will expose such claims to summary judgment disposition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN4[] Coverage, Commerce Requirement

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN5[] Coverage, Commerce Requirement

Essentially, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) makes it unlawful for a seller to discriminate in price between purchasers of the same or similar goods actually sold, whether to the ultimate purchaser or for resale, if the effect of such price discrimination may be to lessen competition substantially in a line of commerce or with the competitors of the seller or its customers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN6[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Three categories of competitive injury may give rise to a Robinson-Patman claim: primary-line cases involve conduct that injures competition at the level of the discriminating seller and its direct competitors; secondary-line cases, implicate price discrimination that injures competition among the discriminating seller's customers, typically referred to as favored and disfavored purchasers; and tertiary-line cases entail injury to competition at the level of the purchaser's customers. A viable secondary-line price discrimination claim brought pursuant to the Act requires proof that (1) the relevant sales were made in interstate commerce; (2) the commodities at issue were of 'like grade and quality; (3) the defendant discriminated in price between different purchasers of the like commodities; and (4) the effect of such discrimination may be to injure, destroy, or prevent competition to the advantage of the favored purchaser, i.e., one who received the benefit of such discrimination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN7[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In the context of quantity discounts, that an inference of competitive injury arises from evidence that some purchasers had to pay their supplier substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN8[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust law. The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has preferred to resolve antitrust claims on a case-by-case basis, focusing on the particular facts disclosed by the record. Regardless of the mechanics of a pricing structure, if there is evidence of discrimination in price between different purchasers of the same commodities, and if the effect of that discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition, then there is a prima facie violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN9[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

A price discrimination within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) is merely a difference in price. This fundamental, understated principle is by no means simplistic. Although the Robinson-Patman Act proscribes unequal treatment of different customers in comparable transactions, Congress did not intend to outlaw price differences that result from or further the forces of competition, and the Act should be construed consistently with broader policies of the antitrust laws. The Act does not bar a distributor from ever offering lower prices or discounts; instead, it prohibits distributors from discriminating among purchasers in doing so. Thus, a manufacturer may utilize promotional arrangements and provide financial incentives to favor its product or even to disfavor competing brands, and manufacturers need not guarantee that all customers benefit to the same degree. Indeed, by definition, an incentive-based program will lead to different outcomes for different purchasers. Incentives and concessions provide greater benefits to those purchasers who choose to align their own competitive objectives with those of their supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN10[] Robinson-Patman Act, Defenses

Functional availability is technically not an affirmative defense, but the negation of an element of the plaintiff's case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN11[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

From a practical standpoint, the doctrine of functional availability is, where quantity discounts are concerned, nothing more than judicial recognition that cheaper by the dozen is a too well-accepted practice of commerce to be anti-competitive in every instance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN12[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

Courts have refused to find price discrimination under 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) when the purchaser's decision or capacity to take advantage of the best discount made available on a reasonably equivalent basis to all dealers who made the commitment to obtain them was determined by elements within its control, i.e., unrelated investments; poor credit ratings; management issues, inventory decisions, or marketing strategies; or a decision to promote the competitor's product, and not by disproportionately small purchasing power or the pricing structure itself.

Counsel: ARGUED: Kyle M. Keegan, ROY, KIESEL, KEEGAN & DeNICOLA, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, for Appellants. Thomas Demitrack, JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellee.

ON BRIEF: Kyle M. Keegan,Chris D. Kiesel, ROY, KIESEL, KEEGAN & DeNICOLA, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Earl R. Booze, HERRIN, BOOZE, RAMBO, JENKINS & WHEELER, Johnson City, Tennessee, for Appellants. Thomas Demitrack, Robert S. Walker, Michelle K. Fischer, JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE, Cleveland, Ohio, William C. Bovender, HUNTER, SMITH & DAVIS, Kingsport, Tennessee, Eric P. Berlin , JONES DAY, Chicago, Illinois, for Appellee.

Judges: Before: MOORE, GRIFFIN, and CUDAHY, Circuit Judges.*

Opinion by: Griffin

Opinion

[*2] [*856] GRIFFIN, Circuit Judge. In this case alleging illegal price discrimination in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act ("the Act"), 15 U.S.C § 13(a) [2] , the plaintiffs-appellants, eighteen full-service wholesalers who are also direct distributors for defendant R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company ("RJR"), appeal the district court's order of summary judgment entered pursuant to [*857] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) in favor of defendant RJR. We affirm.

---

* The Honorable Richard D. Cudahy, Senior Circuit Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, sitting by designation.

I.

The eighteen plaintiffs-appellants in this case, lead by plaintiff Smith Wholesale Company, are full-service distributors serving grocery and convenience stores and other retail outlets in a multi-state region, primarily in the southeastern United States. Tobacco products constitute 50% or more of their revenues. All of the plaintiffs are direct distributors of defendant RJR, some having distributed RJR's products for more than fifty years. Plaintiffs also purchase cigarettes from all other major manufacturers, as well as fourth-tier manufacturers.

Cigarettes are divided into four price categories or tiers. The most expensive, first-tier or premium, cigarettes are manufactured by defendant RJR (Camel and Winston cigarettes), as well as Philip Morris USA, Inc., Lorillard Tobacco Company, Liggett-Vector Brands, and Commonwealth Brands. Second-tier [3] and third-tier cigarettes are also produced by the major manufacturers, but their prices are substantially lower than first-tier cigarettes. Fourth-tier brands are produced by smaller manufacturers (including Liggett and Commonwealth) and sell at prices somewhat lower than third-tier brands. All of RJR's discounted, non-premium brands are collectively classified as "savings" brands. RJR's second-tier product is Doral; its third-tier cigarettes include Monarch, Best Choice, Citation, and Cardinal. RJR does not price any of its savings brands at the fourth-tier level.

RJR is the second largest cigarette manufacturer in the United States, with a market share of approximately 22% prior to its July 2004 merger with the United States operations of Brown & Williamson. [1] The newly formed Reynolds American now has a market share of approximately 31%. At the other end of the spectrum, the fourth-tier segment has grown from 0.89% of all cigarette sales in 1998 to around 15% in 2003, making it the fastest growing portion of the cigarette market. [3] Competitive pressure increased following the industry's 1998 Master Settlement Agreement, which settled smoking and health litigation by requiring per [4] carton payments to the settling states. That agreement led to the rapid growth of producers of fourth-tier cigarettes that did not make settlement payments. RJR's market share has decreased in this competitive environment.

In April 2000, in an effort to allay its declining market share, RJR sought to enlist wholesalers in RJR's marketing efforts by providing financial incentives to wholesalers willing to focus on RJR savings brands. The new Wholesale Partners Program ("WPP") emphasized its savings brands because of the importance of RJR's Doral savings brand to its overall business. The WPP revised RJR's wholesale pricing structure through a three-level pricing system, ranging from Level 1 (the least favored), Levels 2 "A" through "H," to Level 3 (the most favored), which based price discounts [5] and back-end monies [2] on a comparison of the distributor's sales of RJR's savings brands to its sales of non-RJR savings brands. All wholesalers could earn a base discount by participating in Level 1, although the amount of the Level 1 discount diminished over time until it ended in June 2003. To earn discounts at Level 2 or payments at Level 3, wholesalers [*858] were required to meet quarterly targets based on their sales of RJR savings brands as a percentage of their total savings brand sales.

Wholesalers that met their share targets earned the same Level 2 discounts. [3] [6] For five quarters beginning in the third quarter of 2002, wholesalers also earned additional, progressively higher quarter-end payments (so-called Levels 2A through 2H rebates), depending on the extent to which their RJR savings share exceeded the base share targets. [4]

---

[1] Philip Morris USA, Inc., by contrast, accounted for nearly 50 of all cigarette sales in 2000. Marlboro, Philip Morris's largest brand, commanded a 38 share, over 50 higher than the combined shares of all of RJR's brands.

[2] Rebates paid to distributors at the close of each quarter.

[3] Wholesalers received certain Level 3 payments (received as quarterly rebates) once they qualified for Level 2 discounts, as long as changes in their RJR share during the relevant quarter did not differ meaningfully from changes in RJR's statewide share during the same period. Level 2 wholesalers also earned other Level 3 rebates to the extent they performed additional functions that RJR sought to reward.

[4] RJR modified the WPP several times from August 2000 to the present. From the second quarter of 2002 through the third quarter of 2003, Level 2 contained the eight price categories (Levels A-H). Level 2A was set at the minimum Level 2 RJR share of savings ("SOS") brands threshold to 1.5 share points above this minimum SOS threshold; only when a distributor exceeded

The discount/rebate structure of the WPP is best summarized by the magistrate judge in his Report and Recommendation in this case:

> First, in each state the defendant ascertained what percentage of each wholesaler's total sales of savings brand cigarettes consisted of RJR's savings brand cigarettes. Each wholesaler was then ranked in descending order, with the wholesaler having the highest percentage of RJR cigarettes listed at the top, and the wholesaler selling the smallest percentage of defendant's products [7] (relative to the total sales of savings brand cigarettes) at the bottom. The defendant thereupon listed the volume of its savings brand cigarettes sold by each of the distributors. It is important to note that the distributor listed at the top, which sold the highest percentage of defendant's products, did not necessarily sell the highest volume of defendant's products; indeed, the distributor with the highest percentage of defendant sales very easily could have been the distributor that sold the lowest volume of defendant's products.
>
> After determining the volume of defendant's cigarettes sold by each distributor in the descending order discussed in the preceding paragraph, [defendant] ascertained the [4] total volume of RJR savings cigarettes sold in each state. Defendant then selected as its state target the RJR percentage of that wholesaler whose volume sales, when added to all those above it, equaled eighty-five percent (or as close thereto as possible) of defendant's total wholesale volume in the state. Defendant thereafter calculated a "share-of-savings" target for each wholesaler, using the state targets described above. The target was stated in terms of defendant's [8] "savings brands" as a percentage of the total sales of cheap cigarettes sold by a distributor. For those wholesalers doing business in more than one state (and there were several), defendant had yet another formula that adjusted a multi-state wholesaler's target goals to reflect the different states in which that wholesaler does business. The closer a wholesaler comes to the goal established for it, the higher the incentive level applicable to it. And the higher the incentive level, the lower the price it pays for defendant's [*859] cigarettes. It is at first difficult to understand, and even more difficult to describe in words, but it does have a mathematical logic to it, and the resulting state target is intended to capture eighty-five percent of the volume of defendant's savings brand in any particular state.
>
> As noted, the incentive level in which any wholesaler was placed determined the amount that wholesaler paid for defendant's savings brand cigarettes. Obviously, some wholesalers participated at higher levels than others, which meant that they purchased their cigarettes from defendant at a cheaper price. This price differential resulted in this litigation.

Because participation [9] in the WPP did not depend on the volume of a wholesaler's RJR sales, small wholesalers were treated ostensibly the same as large wholesalers. From August 2000 through the first quarter of 2004, all discounts and rebates received under RJR's WPP were based solely on a distributor's RJR SOS brands. Beginning in the second quarter of 2004, RJR adopted a "share of market" approach, whereby WPP quotas, and resultant discount/rebate levels, were thereafter based on the distributor's total RJR sales (savings and premium) as a percentage of all cigarettes it sold. [5]

The WPP's per carton premium brand price differences between Level 1 and [10] the best price from August 2000 to present were approximately: ($0.55) August 2000 - April 2001; ($0.50) May 2001 - May 2002; ($0.57) June 2002 - December 2002; ($0.85) January 2003 - June 2003; ($1.12) July 2003 - September 2003; ($0.75) October 2003 - March 2004; and ($0.74) April 2004 - present. All wholesalers entered the program at Level 2. A Level 2 wholesaler that missed Level 2 in any quarter received a three-month grace period to maintain its Level 2 status. The WPP placed no limit on the volume that wholesalers could sell to any customer and capped quarterly increases its Level 2A SOS quota by 30.1 points would it then qualify for Level 2H back-end monies. In 2003, RJR again modified the WPP to further reduce the Level 2 and 3 back-end monies available to Level 2A distributors.

---

[5] Only the WPP for the years 2000-2003 are at issue in the present case. The 2004-2005 WPP is identical to that of its competitor, Philip Morris USA, Inc.'s Wholesale Leaders Program, which has been similarly challenged as a violation of the antitrust laws and is currently pending before this court. See Smith Wholesale Co. et. al. v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., Case # 05-6481.

in a wholesaler's target at 0.5%, even if RJR's actual share increased by a larger percentage, while reducing a wholesaler's target by the full amount of any decrease in RJR's actual share.

Fifteen of the eighteen plaintiffs have participated at Levels 2 and 3 at some point since 2000. However, plaintiffs complain that to attain the best price on RJR products -- achieved by fewer than 8% of RJR's direct distributors in 2002 and 2003 -- a distributor's RJR savings brand sales were required to meet ever higher percentage quotas. Plaintiffs allege that it was impossible to meet RJR's SOS targets because they sell [11] to retailers in rural, lower income areas that had a uniquely high demand for the cheapest, fourth-tier cigarettes. Plaintiffs complain that because RJR's highest share quotas, and its most favored prices, are not practically and realistically achievable by [5] plaintiffs, all have been classified as Level 1 distributors (some for the entire complaint period) under the WPP.

On January 31, 2003, plaintiff Smith Wholesale Company filed suit in federal court against defendant RJR alleging that, through implementation of the WPP, RJR engaged in illegal price discrimination in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, [*860] 15 U.S.C. § 13(a), and further, that RJR wrongfully terminated its direct purchasing status in retaliation for raising antitrust complaints about the WPP to its retail customers. On February 18, 2003, Smith amended its complaint to add another wholesaler, Rice Wholesale Company ("Rice"), after RJR ended its wholesale agreement with Rice. Smith and Rice filed preliminary injunction motions, seeking reinstatement of their wholesale agreements, which were granted on February 7 and March 4, 2003, respectively. [6] [12] On June 11, 2003, Smith and Rice amended their complaint for the third time, adding nine additional plaintiffs. Ten of these plaintiffs simultaneously sought a preliminary injunction against the further 1% discount reduction at Level 1 under the 2003 WPP. On July 3 and 14, 2003, the district court granted motions by the states of Tennessee and Mississippi to intervene in the litigation on behalf of their consumers, wholesalers, manufacturers, and the economies of their states. [7] On August 6, 2003, the district court enjoined the 2003 WPP's 1% discount reduction for Level 1 distributors, but later stayed it. Following issuance of the preliminary injunction, additional distributors joined the litigation, and the complaint was amended for the fifth time, to bring the total number of plaintiffs to twenty-two. Plaintiffs seek damages for loss of profits, customers, sales, goodwill, and business value that allegedly resulted from RJR's discriminatory pricing. Plaintiffs also seek permanent injunctive relief.

[13] After discovery concluded, RJR filed a motion for summary judgment, which the district court referred to the magistrate judge who, after hearing extensive argument by the parties, issued a Report and Recommendation advising that RJR's motion for summary judgment should be granted and plaintiffs' complaint dismissed. On June 3, 2005, after full briefing of plaintiffs' objections, the district court issued a Memorandum Opinion and Order, in which it adopted and approved the magistrate judge's Report and Recommendation and granted summary judgment in favor of RJR. In its decision, the district court concluded that summary judgment was appropriate because RJR's discounts were "functionally available" to the plaintiffs, i.e., "[t]he practice of conditioning price concessions and allowances upon the customer's purchase of a specific quantity of goods will not give rise to a Robinson-Patman violation if the concessions are available equally and functionally to all customers." Bouldis v. U.S. Suzuki Motor Corp., 711 F.2d 1319, 1326 (6th Cir. 1983). The district court opined, in pertinent part:

> [T]his case does not involve a quantity discount, the plaintiffs' [14] [sic] were told about the discount, and the plaintiffs were permitted to participate in the program. The Court FINDS that RJR's discount is available to all customers using a nondiscriminatory formula, even though different customers may pay different prices, and that there is no evidence that the program was not evenly administered. Therefore, this Court FINDS that RJR's discount was functionally available to the plaintiffs in both theory and in fact.

---

[6] RJR appealed, but voluntarily dismissed its consolidated appeal of those preliminary injunctions on June 27, 2005, after the entry of summary judgment in its favor in the instant case.

[7] The States have not joined in the present appeal from the order granting summary judgment to defendant.

[*861] * * *

> [6] Although the plaintiffs contend that RJR's discounts are not functionally available to them because of the demands of their customers, applicable case law does not support the plaintiffs' conclusion that the demands of a purchaser's customer can render a discount functionally unavailable. Courts have refused to find discrimination when the buyer's inability to take advantage of the best discount was within the control of the buyer, such as poor credit, management choices, decisions not to hold inventory, or particular marketing strategies. See Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1327; *[Shreve*Equipment, Inc. v. Clay Equipment Corp.], 650 F.2d [101], 105 [(6th Cir. 1981)]; Edward J. Sweeney [& Sons Co. v. Texaco, Inc.], 637 F.2d [105], 121 [(3d Cir. 1980)]; [15] Chapman v. Rudd Paint & Varnish Co., 409 F.2d 635, 643 (9th Cir. 1969).
> The Court FINDS that the undisputed fact that an outside influence, not in the control of RJR, i.e. plaintiffs' customer demands, frustrated their performance does not render the discount functionally unavailable. Therefore, because RJR's discount was functionally available, under the undisputed facts of this case, the defendant has demonstrated the lack of an essential element of the plaintiffs' case, i.e. price discrimination.
>
> In this case, the Court also FINDS that there is no causal link between RJR's practices and the plaintiffs' alleged injuries. Plaintiffs contend that they did not make a voluntary choice to emphasize fourth-tier or other non-RJR brand[s] over RJR'[s] products, but that they have simply responded to the demands of their customers. Therefore, by their own admission, the plaintiffs' inability to participate in WPP is attributable to an outside influence over which RJR had no control. In effect, the plaintiffs seek to reap the rewards of the WPP without furthering the [16] purpose of that program, i.e., increasing the demand for RJR products.
> The Court FINDS that, because the plaintiffs did not take advantage of a lower price or discount which was functionally available on an equal basis, no price discrimination has occurred. In the alternative, the Court FINDS that any alleged discrimination was not the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' injuries.

Plaintiffs' timely appeal followed.

II.

HN1[] This court reviews a district court's decision granting summary judgment de novo. Kessler v. Visteon Corp., 448 F.3d 326, 329 (6th Cir. 2006). HN2[] Summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c). The evidence must be viewed in a light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, giving that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Kessler, 448 F.3d at 329. However, "the nonmoving party must do more than simply show that [17] there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts, Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), it must present significant probative evidence in support of its complaint to defeat the motion for summary judgment." Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone County, Ky., 440 F.3d 336, 341 (6th Cir. 2006). "A mere scintilla of evidence is insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the non-moving party." Kessler, 448 F.3d at 329.

HN3[] [*862] In this circuit, motions for summary judgment are disfavored in antitrust litigation. Expert Masonry, Inc., 440 F.3d at 341. This general rule, however, does not preclude the use of summary [7] judgment in an antitrust case in which there clearly are no genuine issues of fact to try -- "[i]ndeed, the very purpose of a motion for summary judgment, to eliminate a trial where it would be unnecessary and merely result in delay and expense, warrants summary disposition of such cases when appropriate." Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1324. "Accordingly, 'the absence of any relevant probative evidence in support [18] of a litigant's antitrust claims will expose such claims to summary judgment disposition.'" Id. (quoting Davis-Watkins Co. v. Serv. Merch., 686 F.2d 1190, 1197 (6th Cir. 1982)).

III.

A.

Plaintiffs contend that the district court erred in dismissing their claims of illegal price discrimination under § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 13(a) provides, in pertinent part:

> HN4[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce . . . and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences [19] in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered . . . .

HN5[] "Essentially, this section makes it unlawful for a seller to discriminate in price between purchasers of the same or similar goods actually sold, whether to the ultimate purchaser or for resale, if the effect of such price discrimination may be to lessen competition substantially in a line of commerce or with the competitors of the seller or its customers." Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1325.

HN6[] Three categories of competitive injury may give rise to a Robinson-Patman claim: "primary-line" cases involve conduct that injures competition at the level of the discriminating seller and its direct competitors; "secondary-line" cases, like the instant case, implicate price discrimination that injures competition among the discriminating seller's customers, typically referred to as "favored" and "disfavored" purchasers; and "tertiary-line" cases entail injury to competition at the level of the purchaser's customers. Volvo Trucks North America, Inc. v. Reeder-Simco GMC, Inc. (" Volvo Trucks "), 546 U.S. 164; 126 S. Ct. 860, 870, 163 L. Ed. 2d 663 [20] .

A viable secondary-line price discrimination claim brought pursuant to this Act requires proof that "(1) the relevant . . . sales were made in interstate commerce; (2) the [commodities at issue] were of 'like grade and quality'; (3) [the defendant] 'discriminate[d] in price between' [different purchasers of the like commodities]; and (4) 'the effect of such discrimination may be . . . to injure, destroy, or prevent competition' to the advantage of the favored purchaser, i.e., one who 'receive[d] the benefit of such discrimination.'" Volvo Trucks, 126 S. Ct. at 870 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 13(a)).

[*863] [8] In the recent Volvo Trucks decision, the Supreme Court addressed the issue of secondary-line price discrimination under § 13(a), albeit in a very narrow context. [8] The Volvo Trucks decision nonetheless yields

---

[8] The precise issue addressed by the Court was "whether a manufacturer offering its dealers different wholesale prices may be held liable for price discrimination proscribed by Robinson-Patman, absent a showing that the manufacturer discriminated between dealers contemporaneously competing to resell to the same retail customer[?]" 126 S. Ct. at 866. Reeder, a Volvo dealer, commenced suit against Volvo alleging that its sales decreased because Volvo offered other favored dealers price concessions not offered to Reeder. At issue were specially ordered heavy-duty trucks supplied by Volvo and sold by franchised dealers through a competitive bidding process by which the retail customer stated its specifications and invited bids from dealers franchised by different manufacturers. When a Volvo dealer received the customer's specifications, it contacted Volvo and requested a discount off the wholesale price. Volvo then decided, on a case-by-case basis, whether to offer a discount and, if so, what the discount would be, taking into account such factors as industry-wide demand and the retail customer's history of purchasing certain brands of trucks. The dealer then incorporated the discount offered by Volvo into its bid and purchased the trucks only if the retail customer accepted the bid.

In 1997, Volvo announced a projected reduction in the number of authorized dealers. Coincidentally, Reeder learned that Volvo had given another dealer a price concession greater than the concessions Reeder typically received. Reeder suspected that it was one of the dealers Volvo targeted for elimination. Reeder filed suit, alleging losses attributable to Volvo's purported violations of state law and the Robinson-Patman Act. Reeder prevailed at trial and on appeal to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court, however, reversed and remanded, concluding that "[a]bsent actual competition with a favored Volvo dealer . . . Reeder cannot establish the competitive injury required under the Act." 126 S. Ct. at 870. The Supreme Court held that Reeder's proffered comparisons fell short of showing price discrimination, because in none of the specific instances important observations about the underlying policy and purpose of the Robinson-Patman Act that are relevant to the present appeal. Justice Ginsburg, writing for the majority, noted that:

> Section 2, "when originally enacted as part of the Clayton [21] Act in 1914, was born of a desire by Congress to curb the use by financially powerful corporations of localized price-cutting tactics which had gravely impaired the competitive position of other sellers." FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 543, 80 S. Ct. 1267, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385, and n. 6 . . . . Augmenting that provision in 1936 with the Robinson-Patman Act, Congress sought to target the perceived harm to competition occasioned by powerful buyers, rather than sellers; specifically, Congress responded to the advent of large chain stores, enterprises with the clout to obtain lower prices for goods than smaller buyers could demand.
> * * *
>
> Mindful of the purposes of the Act and of the antitrust laws generally, we have explained that Robinson-Patman does not "ban all price differences charged to [*864] different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality," Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 220, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) (internal quotation marks omitted); rather, the Act proscribes "price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition," ibid.
> * * *
>
> [9] A hallmark of the [22] requisite competitive injury, our decisions indicate, is the diversion of sales or profits from a disfavored purchaser to a favored purchaser. FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 518-519, 83 S. Ct. 358, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466 (1963). . . . We have also recognized that a permissible inference of competitive injury may arise from evidence that a favored competitor received a significant price reduction over a substantial period of time. See FTC v. Morton Salt Co. [" Morton Salt "], 334 U.S. 37, 49-51, 68 S. Ct. 822, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 44 F.T.C. 1499 (1948) . . . .

126 S. Ct. at 869-70.

[23] The Volvo Trucks Court further explained:

> Interbrand competition, our opinions affirm, is the "primary concern of antitrust law." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 51-52, n.19, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977). The Robinson-Patman Act signals no large departure from that main concern. Even if the Act's text could be construed in the manner urged by Reeder and embraced by the Court of Appeals, we would resist interpretation geared more to the protection of existing competitors than to the stimulation of competition. In the case before us, there is no evidence that any favored purchaser possesses market power, the allegedly favored purchasers are dealers with little resemblance to large independent department stores or chain operations, and the supplier's selective price discounting fosters competition among suppliers of different brands. . . . By declining to extend Robinson-Patman's governance to such cases, we continue to construe the Act "consistently with broader policies of the antitrust laws." Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 220, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (quoting Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 80, n.13, 99, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153 S. Ct. 925, 440 U.S. 69, 99 S. Ct. 925, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1979)) [24] . . . .

---

upon which Reeder relied did Reeder compete with beneficiaries of the alleged discrimination for the same customer. Moreover, Reeder failed to demonstrate that the compared dealers were consistently favored vis-a-vis Reeder; Reeder merely cited occasions when it competed with non-Volvo dealers for a sale to a customer. The Court noted that "[t]he Act centrally addresses price discrimination in cases involving competition between different purchasers for resale of the purchased product. Competition of that character ordinarily is not involved when a product subject to special order is sold through a customer-specific competitive bidding process." Id. at 866. "Here, there is no discrete 'favored' dealer comparable to a chain store or a large independent department store -- at least, Reeder's evidence is insufficient to support an inference of such a dealer or set of dealers." Id. at 871.

Id. at 872-73 (footnote omitted).

The Supreme Court's discussion in Volvo Trucks regarding the underpinnings of the Robinson-Patman Act serves as a backdrop for our evaluation of plaintiffs' secondary-line price discrimination claim. As the Volvo Trucks Court explained and this court has noted, the Robinson-Patman Act was originally enacted in part to "prohibit all devices by which large buyers gained discriminatory preferences over smaller ones by virtue of their greater purchasing power," Lewis v. Philip Morris, Inc., 355 F.3d 515, 520 (6th Cir. 2004), and, hence, it is well established, HN7[] in the context of quantity discounts, that an inference of competitive injury arises from "evidence that some purchasers had to pay their supplier 'substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay.'" Texaco, Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 559, 110 S. Ct. 2535, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1990) (quoting Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 46-47).

The WPP, however, is not a quantity discount program; rather, its market-share targets are calculated using a percentage of its savings brand [25] sales rather than a designated quantity, thus distinguishing it from volume discount programs. Such market-share discount pricing structures present different concerns than volume-based discounts. Market-share discounts theoretically level the [*865] playing field by allowing competing purchasers of like commodities to participate on equal terms, regardless of size, because such discounts depend not on volume purchases, but on the percentage of purchases of a particular category of products.

There is a dearth of precedent addressing the legality of market-share discount programs under the Act; heretofore, legal challenges to secondary-line pricing practices under § 13(a) have arisen in the original context contemplated by the Act -- discriminatory pricing arising from standard quantity discounts. We nonetheless would be remiss if we were to suggest that market-share [10] discounts are immune from Robinson-Patman scrutiny. It is certainly conceivable that under certain circumstances, as alleged here by plaintiffs, market-share discounts could be administered in such a manner that such incentives cross the fine line from pro-competitive incentives to exclusionary, anti-competitive price discrimination. [26] Indeed, the Supreme Court has noted that price discrimination may arise under various pricing structures, not limited to volume-based discounts:

> While, as noted, the immediate and generating cause of the Robinson-Patman amendments [to the Clayton Act] may have been a congressional reaction to what were believed to be predatory uses of mass purchasing power by chain stores, neither the scope nor the intent of the statute was limited to that precise situation or set of circumstances. Congress sought generally to obviate price discrimination practices threatening independent merchants and businessmen, presumably from whatever source.

FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 520, 83 S. Ct. 358, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466 (1963). See also Alan's of Atlanta, Inc. v. Minolta Corp., 903 F.2d 1414, 1422 n.16 (11th Cir. 1990) ("Though the birth of the RPA was motivated by a desire to place 'big' purchasers on par with 'small' ones, the Act's applicability is not limited to big buyer/small buyer cases. . . . It is one of general applicability and prohibits discriminations generally." (internal citations and quotation marks omitted)).

Consequently, the Supreme Court has prescribed [27] a case-by-case evaluation of antitrust claims: HN8[] "Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust law. This Court has preferred to resolve antitrust claims on a case-by-case basis, focusing on the particular facts disclosed by the record." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 466-67, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (internal quotation omitted). In sum, regardless of the mechanics of a pricing structure, if there is evidence of discrimination in price between different purchasers of the same commodities, and if the effect of that discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition, then there is a prima facie violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

B.

HN9[] "'[A] price discrimination within the meaning of [§ 13(a)] is merely a difference in price.'" Texaco, Inc., 496 U.S. at 558 (quoting Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. at 549). This fundamental, understated principle is by no means simplistic. Although the Robinson-Patman Act "proscribes unequal treatment of different customers in comparable transactions," FTC v. Borden Co., 383 U.S. 637, 643, 86 S. Ct. 1092, 16 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1966), [28] "Congress did not intend to outlaw price differences that result from or further the forces of competition[,]" and the Act "should be construed consistently with broader policies of the antitrust laws." Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 220 (quotation omitted). [*866] The Act "do[es] not bar a distributor from ever offering lower prices or discounts; instead, [it] prohibit[s] distributors from discriminating among purchasers in doing so." Krist Oil Co., Inc. v. Bernick's Pepsi-Cola of Duluth, Inc., 354 F. Supp. 2d 852, 856 (W.D. Wis. 2005) (citing Borden, 383 U.S. at 646). Thus, a manufacturer may utilize promotional arrangements and provide financial incentives to favor its product or even to disfavor competing brands, and manufacturers need not "guarantee that all customers benefit to the same degree," Comcoa, Inc. v. NEC Tel., Inc., 931 F.2d 655, 664 (10th Cir. 1991). Indeed, by definition, an incentive-based program will lead to different outcomes for different purchasers. Incentives and concessions provide greater benefits to those purchasers who choose to align their own competitive objectives with those of their supplier. [29] Commitment to a particular product is the sine qua non of an incentive program. Precision Printing Co. v. Unisource Worldwide, Inc., 993 F. Supp. 338, 352 (W.D. Pa. 1998).

[*11] C.

In an effort to better define the parameters of "a difference in price" in secondary-line price discrimination claims under § 13(a), numerous courts, including this court and the district court herein, have utilized the doctrine of "functional availability," a theory that "'is a judicial graft on § 2(a) and is not explicitly embodied in the text of the statute.'" Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 145 F.3d 320, 326 (5th Cir. 1998) (quoting Precision Printing Co., 993 F. Supp. at 350). [9] [31] "According to this court-created rule, the plaintiff in a Robinson-Patman Act suit cannot recover damages for lower prices paid by its competitors to the defendant if those same prices were available to the plaintiff from a practical standpoint and on equal terms with its competitors." *American Tara Corp. v. Int'l Paper Co., No. 79C1470, 1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14211, 1981 WL 375752, at 1 (N.D. Ill. July 30, 1981) (unpublished). [10] The rationale underlying the doctrine is that [30] functional availability negates two essential elements of a § 13(a) claim: "Where a purchaser does not take advantage of a lower price or discount which is functionally available on an equal basis, it has been held that either no price discrimination has occurred, or that the discrimination is not the proximate cause of the injury." Shreve Equipment, Inc. v. Clay Equip. Corp. [" Shreve "], 650 F.2d 101, 105 (6th Cir. 1981). See also *American Tara Corp., 1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14211, 1981 WL 375752 at 2 ("If the lower prices afforded its competitor were equally available to the plaintiff, any discrimination and competitive advantage suffered by the plaintiff is attributed not to the defendant's program but to the plaintiff's failure to take advantage of its opportunity to receive those prices.").

Plaintiffs maintain that functional availability is an affirmative defense, with the burden of proof placed squarely on defendant [*867] to show that RJR's favored price was practically available to all customers. Although several courts have referred to functional availability as a "defense," see Comcoa, Inc., 931 F.2d at 664, DeLong Equip. Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1516 (11th Cir. 1989), *Allied Sales and Serv. Co., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7774, 2000 WL 726216 at 17, Calumet Breweries, Inc. v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., 951 F. Supp. 749, 753-55 (N.D. Ind. 1994), and Cain v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc., 757 F. Supp. 1120, 1123 (D. Ore. 1991), [32] we agree with the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal's assessment, obviously shared by this court in Shreve, that HN10[] functional availability "is technically not an affirmative defense, but the negation of an element of the plaintiff's case." Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc., 145 F.3d at 326 n.17 (citing Kintner & Bauer, 3 Federal Antitrust Law, § 25.7

[9] "By statute, an otherwise illegal discriminatory payment for, or furnishing of, services or facilities is permissible if made available on proportional terms to all purchasers. 15 U.S.C. §§ 13(d), (e). Section 13(a) contains no comparable language, but the 'functional availability' [doctrine] has been judicially extended to that section." *Allied Sales & Serv. Co. v. Global Indus. Techs., Inc., No. Civ. A. 97-0017-CB-M, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7774, 2000 WL 726216, at 17 (S.D. Ala. May 1, 2000) (unpublished).

[10] The doctrine of functional availability is not to be confused with the issue of "functional discounts" -- i.e., discounts based upon a particular marketing or distribution function, such as warehousing or delivery services, performed by the customer receiving the discount. See Texaco, Inc., 496 U.S. at 571 ("A functional discount that constitutes a reasonable reimbursement for the purchaser's actual marketing functions will not violate the Act.").

(1983)). See also Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc. [" Sweeney "], 637 F.2d 105, 120 (3d Cir. 1980) ("[A] uniform pricing formula applicable to all customers is not a price discrimination under the act[,]" if the favorable "price was available, not only in theory but in fact, to all purchasers. "); Precision Printing Co., 993 F. Supp. at 350 ("Although often referred to as a defense, [functional availability] really is not a defense at all . . . ."). Consequently, if an essential element of the plaintiff's case (i.e., discrimination in price between purchasers of like commodities) is negated by evidence showing that a pricing or discount scheme is functionally available to all participants on an equal basis, summary judgment is appropriate. If, however, proof has been made [33] that there has been discrimination in price, then "§ 2(b) of the Act specifically imposes the burden of showing justification upon one who is shown to have discriminated in prices." Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 45.

[*12] HN11[] From a practical standpoint, the doctrine of functional availability "is, where quantity discounts are concerned, nothing more than judicial recognition that 'cheaper by the dozen' is a too well-accepted practice of commerce to be anti-competitive in every instance." Calumet Breweries, Inc., 951 F. Supp. at 753.

The doctrine of "functional availability" stems from Morton Salt, in which the Supreme Court deemed a volume discount program to be illegal under the circumstances because the manufacturer set the minimum purchase requirement so high that it was impossible for small buyers to obtain the discounts received by large buyers. In so holding, the Court noted that "[t]heoretically, these discounts are equally available to all, but functionally they are not." Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 42.

This court has applied the functional availability doctrine in two cases in which the plaintiffs challenged volume discounts under [34] § 13(a). In Shreve, the plaintiff, a farm equipment retailer, brought suit against the defendant manufacturer, alleging price discrimination due to its preclusion from the defendant's volume discount plan. 650 F.2d at 102. The defendant offered the volume discount to all of its dealers on a sliding scale -- the more equipment a dealer purchased during the year, the higher the percentage of discount it received at the end of that year. The plaintiff's president, who was also its primary stockholder, voluntarily signed a contract to act as the territorial manager for the defendant and thereby received special advantages which were unavailable to other dealers. The contract also contained a condition that the acceptance of such employment would prevent the plaintiff from receiving the volume discount given to other dealers. The Shreve Court held that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff's president clearly understood that the plaintiff would not receive the discount. [*868] Therefore, it was not the existence of the discount program which caused the plaintiff's alleged injury, but the president's voluntary choice of an employment relationship with the defendant which [35] caused the loss of the discount. Under such circumstances, "[t]he discount was functionally available to Shreve but it chose not to take advantage of the discount plan. Therefore, the discount plan was not the proximate cause of any alleged injury suffered by Shreve." Id. at 107. Accordingly, the Shreve Court reversed, in pertinent part, a judgment awarded to the plaintiff.

In Bouldis, the plaintiff, Bold-Morr, Inc., a former Suzuki motorcycle dealership, appealed a summary judgment dismissing its claims that the defendant manufacturer Suzuki's promotional programs and business policies constituted forms of price discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. Suzuki maintained that participation in its programs was contingent upon a dealer's overall credit worthiness and presented evidence that its adverse credit decisions with respect to the plaintiff were based upon Bold-Morr's poor financial condition. The testimony of the plaintiff's officer indeed indicated that he experienced cash flow and inventory problems which, at various times, prevented him from participating in the promotional sales. In affirming the district court's order granting [36] summary judgment, this court stated:

> The practice of conditioning price concessions and allowances upon the customer's purchase of a specific quantity of goods will not give rise to a Robinson-Patman violation if the concessions are available equally and functionally to all customers. . . . Further, a claim of price discrimination will not lie if the buyer failed to take advantage of a price concession which was realistically and functionally available. See Shreve Equipment, Inc., supra, 650 F.2d at 105. The legislative history reveals that the aim of the Act is to prevent a large buyer from gaining discriminatory preferences over the small buyer solely because of the large buyer's greater purchasing power. See Federal Trade Comm. v. Henry Broch & Co., 363 U.S. 166, 168-69, 80 S. Ct. 1158, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1124 (1960); Morton Salt Co., supra, 334 U.S. at 43[.]

> [13] In granting summary judgment on this claim, the district court found that the various concessions and allowances made available by Suzuki's promotional programs were practically and realistically available to Bold-Morr. We agree. A review of the record demonstrates that the purchasing [37] conditions imposed were well within the means of the average Suzuki dealer.
> * * *
>
> It is also important to note that the promotional packages were intended to enhance the sale of products to dealers by providing economic incentives to purchase the promoted models. Moreover, Suzuki did not expect a dealer to participate in every promotional program. It was a matter of discretion with each dealer, in the exercise of its business judgment, whether to take advantage of the promotion. Appellant Pete Bouldis testified that on some occasions he participated in the promotional programs and at other times he did not, despite the fact that he had the financial ability to do so. Bouldis testified that he had cash flow and inventory problems which prevented him, at times, from participating in the promotional sales. Accordingly, by appellant's own admission, there is no causal link between Suzuki's practices and appellant's alleged injuries. See generally, 16C Von Kalinkowski, [Business Organizations], supra, at § 31.01[5][c] [(1982)].
>
> [*869] Accordingly, we conclude that Suzuki's promotional programs were equally and functionally available to Bold-Morr, and, therefore, [38] § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended, was not violated.

Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1326-27.

The courts of other circuits have likewise determined the viability of § 13(a) secondary-line price discrimination claims by using the functional availability doctrine. For instance, in Sweeney, the defendant oil company, Texaco, sold its gasoline to various wholesale distributors, including the plaintiff. When Texaco unilaterally altered the location where the plaintiff could load his delivery trucks with defendant's gasoline, causing the plaintiff to incur higher distribution costs and eliminate its locational advantage, the plaintiff filed suit, claiming that this action was tantamount to discriminatory pricing in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals, citing Morton Salt and noting that price discounts must be available not only in theory, but in fact, to all purchasers, held that the plaintiff had failed to establish that the hauling allowance formula constituted unlawful price discrimination under § 13(a):

> In the case before us, it is the distributors, not Texaco, who determine where to place their bulk storage [39] plants, and it is the distributors, not Texaco, who decide which retail stations they will supply. Texaco has no control over those decisions; it calculates the hauling allowance solely on the bulk plant's location in relation to the nearest pickup point. On this record, we cannot conclude that Texaco's formula forecloses any distributor from an advantageous hauling allowance. The record also fails to show that small buyers, whom the act was primarily intended to protect, are disadvantaged by the formula.

Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 121.

In Krist Oil Co., the defendant supplied the plaintiff's retail outlets with Pepsi products. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant engaged in price discrimination because it linked its price to the retailer to the retailer's price to its customers. The plaintiff had chosen to increase its retail price on Pepsi to pay for certain capital investments, which then led the defendant to charge the retailer a higher price. In granting the defendant's motion to dismiss the Robinson-Patman allegations for [14] failure to state a claim, the court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the pricing structure was functionally unavailable to [40] it, finding instead that "the lowest case price is unavailable to plaintiff not because of its disproportionately small purchasing power but because of other unrelated investments plaintiff made." Krist Oil Co., 354 F. Supp. 2d at 857. The court noted that the plaintiff faced a choice that was "not an inequity imposed by the pricing structure but a fundamental economic conundrum faced by all sellers," i.e., "purchasers are left with a choice between selling more bottles at a lower per bottle profit or selling fewer bottles at a higher profit for each." Id. The district court added, "It is curious that plaintiff has instituted a lawsuit seeking to free itself from the shackles of lower profits." Id.

In Capital Ford Truck Sales, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 819 F. Supp. 1555 (N.D. Ga. 1992), the court held that there was no violation of § 13(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act when the defendant manufacturer offered special discount incentives for trucks remaining in inventory at its plant, without applying the discount to vehicles that were in dealer stock at the time the incentives were announced, where the discounts on the manufacturer's inventory [41] [*870] were made available to the complaining plaintiff dealership on an equal basis with other dealers, and discounts were not applied retroactively to trucks held in any other dealer's inventory. 819 F. Supp. at 1571. The court further held that the defendant's pricing system, which granted standard quantity discounts and conditioned price concessions on the number of trucks a dealer sold in a single transaction, did not give rise to price discrimination where the discounts were functionally and realistically available to all customers:

> Ford Motor avers in its motion for summary judgment that the maximum purchase quantity discounts . . . were realistically available to all dealers.
>
> Plaintiffs respond by adducing evidence which indicates that, because Capital Ford was not selling to large quantity purchasers, it did not qualify for the maximum price assistance under the [discount] program. This appears, however, to be the result of a marketing decision by Capital Ford to concentrate on sales to smaller volume customers as opposed to large fleet purchasers. Plaintiffs do not allege that Defendant in any way restricted the customers to whom Capital Ford could [42] sell, and Plaintiffs have adduced absolutely no evidence that the purchase quantity discounts offered under the [discount] program were not realistically available to all dealers if they chose to bid larger volume buyers. See Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1326; Shreve Equipment, 650 F.2d at 105.

Id. at 1578-79.

Finally, in American Tara Corp., the defendant paper company, which produced a type of tissue paper used for one-time carbon paper, initiated a discount program based upon a percentage of past purchases of its product rather than a specific quantity. *1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14211, 1981 WL 375752 at 1. If, in 1978 or 1979, a manufacturer purchased from defendant an amount of tissue equal to 25% of the total tissue it purchased from all suppliers in 1977, that manufacturer would receive a 2.5% rebate on all of its one-time carbonizing tissue purchases from defendant during 1978 or 1979; a purchase of 26-40% of its 1977 purchase total from defendant in 1978 or 1979 would result in a percentage rebate based on a sliding scale. *1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14211, 1981 WL 375752 at 1. The program further provided that a manufacturer who expressed an intention to participate in [43] the program would not be affected by price increases during the program. The plaintiff manufacturer did not qualify for the rebate and brought suit alleging price discrimination against the defendant pursuant to § 2(a), arguing that the defendant's rebate program was not functionally available to it "not because, as in Morton Salt, plaintiff was too small to buy the amount necessary to qualify for a rebate but because plaintiff could not buy that amount from defendant without placing itself in extreme jeopardy." *1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14211, [WL] at 2. Citing Sweeney and [15] Shreve, the district court nonetheless upheld the pricing formula and granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, stating:

> Although this dispute over the repercussions of choosing to participate in the program creates an issue of fact, the issue is not material and does not preclude granting summary judgment. Even if the facts were as plaintiff states, defendant did not discriminate against plaintiff. The factors which plaintiff claims made the program disadvantageous to plaintiff are not unique to plaintiff. If in 1978 plaintiff could not have bought from defendant 25% of the amount it bought from all suppliers [44] in 1977 "without placing itself in extreme jeopardy," plaintiff's competitors could not have bought that percentage from defendant without taking the same risk. Defendant's program may have been, as [*871] plaintiff argues, a bad bargain. As long as defendant offered the same bad bargain to plaintiff as to its competitors, however, defendant did not violate the Robinson-Patman Act.
>
> * * *
>
> The holdings in [Shreve and Sweeney] reflect the rationale for the functional availability defense and control our holding in this case. The plaintiffs in those cases and in this case could have qualified to receive the lower > prices but chose based on their business judgment, to suffer competitive injury if their competitor's purchased at the lower price rather than assume the disabilities or risks in the commitment necessary to purchase at the lower price.

>
> Since plaintiff's competitors had to make the same decision, Tara's choice, not defendant's program, was responsible for the price discrimination. Therefore, the rebates which defendant gave plaintiff's competitors were functionally available to plaintiff and did not violate the Robinson-Patman Act.

*1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14211, [WL] at 3. [11]

[45] Conversely, other courts have held that, under certain circumstances, pricing mechanisms may render a quantity discount practically unavailable to the plaintiff. See DeLong Equipment Co., 887 F.2d at 1516-17 (citing Shreve and acknowledging the functional availability doctrine, but reversing district court order granting summary judgment to defendant manufacturer where the plaintiff distributor presented substantial evidence that it was not given an opportunity to buy the "special" lower-priced item); *Allied Sales and Serv. Co., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7774, 2000 WL 726216 at 18 (denying summary [16] judgment to the defendant where issues of fact existed as to whether the challenged repair discount was functionally available to the plaintiff, i.e., what the criteria for discount actually were and whether the plaintiff knew about the discount); Caribe BMW, Inc. v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft, 19 F.3d 745, 752 (1st Cir. 1994) (reversing district court's order dismissing complaint for failure to state a [*872] claim where allegations that the plaintiff retailer did not know that its competitors were receiving favored treatment from the defendant manufacturer [46] were sufficient to establish that favored treatment was not functionally available: "[W]e do not see how ordinarily one could say that a seller has made favored treatment 'available' to a disfavored customer if the disfavored customer does not know about the favored treatment."); Calumet Breweries, Inc., 951 F. Supp. at 754-55 (in the context of granting a preliminary injunction, concluding that there was ample evidence that volume discount was only theoretically, but not functionally, available to the plaintiff because retroactive quantity adjustments in effect resulted in a secret discount that only the favored wholesaler could obtain, and the defendant handicapped the plaintiff by limiting the array of product choices available to it and by imposing restrictive inventory requirements); National Dairy Products Corp. v. Federal Trade Com., 395 F.2d 517, 523 (7th Cir. 1968) (affirming Federal Trade Commission order requiring dairy distributor to cease unlawful price practices where evidence showed that discriminatory quantity discounts favoring chain store customers and "[w]e also cannot accept National's argument that the disfavored independents should have joined [47] voluntary or cooperative groups and thus obtained higher discounts.").

As reflected in the above cases, the functional availability doctrine has been applied historically in the context of quantity discounts, yet its underlying rationale -- that a discount equally and realistically available to all purchasers

---

[11] See also Metro Ford Truck Sales, 145 F.3d at 326 (Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals held that wholesale discount program, offered by the defendant manufacturer to all of its authorized truck dealers to help with bidding for large volume purchasers, did not constitute unlawful price discrimination because program was in fact, and not merely theoretically, available to all dealers and the plaintiff conceded that the discounts were available to it on an equal basis with other Ford dealers); Comcoa, Inc., 931 F.2d at 664 (Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals held that availability "defense" applied to special volume discounts offered on technologically obsolescent equipment; court approved jury instruction that stated for the availability doctrine to apply, "the implementation of a discount program need not guarantee that all customers benefit to the same degree as other customers, as long as the program is evenly administered"); Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 929 (9th Cir. 1980) (summary judgment proper where it was undisputed that defendant manufacturer made contested discounts "equally available to any qualified purchaser in any market"); FLM Collision Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 543 F.2d 1019, 1024-25 (2d Cir. 1976) ("[W]hile the incentive payment plan did not set a single uniform price for all types of sales made by Ford to its dealers, it was administered with an even hand, without any discrimination among the dealers who purchased from Ford."); Rod Baxter Imports, Inc. v. Saab-Scania of America, Inc., 489 F. Supp. 245, 247 (D. Minn. 1980) (no price discrimination occurred where bonus payments under Sell-a-Bration sales incentive program were "available on a reasonably equivalent basis to all dealers who made the commitment to obtain them" and the failure of some dealers to reach their quotas was the result of factors other than program, such as low inventory, poor financing, reduced sales forces, and poor management).

of a like commodity does not constitute discrimination in price within the meaning of § 13(a) -- is no less relevant in judging the legality of market-share discount formulas such as the WPP.

The doctrine seemingly defies the logic that a rational purchaser of goods will always seek to obtain the best discount or concession that is available to it; if a higher discount is realistically and practically available, why would a reasonable purchaser not take advantage of the best possible price? However, the functional availability doctrine reflects the realities of the marketplace and recognizes that purchasers in competitive markets, particularly multi-brand distributors or wholesalers, must make difficult economic choices, prioritize brand sales and often decline conditional discounts for reasons unrelated to their actual ability to obtain them. Thus, as reflected in the [48] above cases, the HN12[] courts have refused to find price discrimination under § 13(a) when the purchaser's decision or capacity to take advantage of the best discount made "available on a reasonably equivalent basis to all dealers who made the commitment to obtain them," Rod Baxter Imports, Inc., 489 F. Supp. at 249, was determined by elements within its control -- i.e., unrelated investments (Krist); poor credit ratings (Bouldis); management issues, inventory decisions, or marketing strategies (i.e., Shreve, Capital Ford and Sweeney); or a decision to promote the competitor's product (Amer. Tara Corp. -- and not by disproportionately small purchasing power or the pricing structure itself.

The doctrine also underscores the fact that the Robinson-Patman Act neither ensures success nor excuses purchasers from making difficult decisions about which competing brands to carry, market, or promote:

> In any competitive economy we cannot avoid injury to some of the competitors. The law does not, and under the free enterprise system it cannot, guarantee businessmen against loss. That businessmen lose money or even go bankrupt does not necessarily [49] mean that [*873] competition has been injured. H.R. Rep. No. 1422, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 5-6.

[17] Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. at 519. [12]

---

[12] Plaintiffs cite the Caribe, Calumet Breweries, and National Dairy decisions for the proposition that, pursuant to § 13(a), a seller cannot legally condition price concessions on self-damaging sacrifices by a buyer, particularly where sacrifices of equal magnitude would not be required of the buyer's more favored competitors. However, we find these cases to be inapposite to the present circumstances. All of these cases involved inherently suspect volume discounts which permitted large buyers to secure a competitive advantage over a small buyer because of the large buyer's quantity purchasing ability. In Caribe, allegations that the plaintiff retailer did not know that its competitors were receiving favored treatment from the defendant manufacturer were sufficient to establish that the favored treatment was unavailable to the retailer so as to allow a claim to proceed under § 13(a). Contrary to the present plaintiffs' assertion, the case did not turn upon the plaintiff's argument that it should not be required to give up various advantages of its importer's contract. Rather, the Caribe court specifically declined to endorse that argument and made clear that "if a seller makes its favorable prices and terms available to an otherwise disfavored customer, that customer has no legal right to complain." 19 F.3d at 751.

The present case bears little resemblance to Calumet Breweries, Inc., a case of "blatantly discriminatory" favoritism, where the defendant supplier structured its volume discount program to specifically favor its largest customer, by effectively granting a secret discount, imposing inventory restrictions, and limiting the array of products available to the disfavored customer. 951 F. Supp. at 754. Noting that, pursuant to Morton Salt, an inference of competitive injury arises from any quantity discount, the court stated, "[n]othing in the Robinson-Patman Act or the cases interpreting it suggests that [the disfavored purchaser's] decision to emphasize other brands and remain a (relatively) small seller of [the defendant's] products ipso facto means [the defendant] may charge [the disfavored purchaser] a higher price." Id. at 755. As noted by Barbara O. Bruckman in Discounts, Discrimination, and Exclusive Dealing: Issues Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 68 Antitrust L.J. 253, 270 (2000), Calumet "should not be read to weaken the general principle that if a customer can take advantage of a discount but chooses for its own reasons not to do so, the seller is not later liable under Section 2(a) for losses that the customer may suffer by virtue of that choice."

Finally, in National Dairy, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals held that an order of the Federal Trade Commission requiring a dairy product distributor using volume discount schedules in various states to cease unlawful price practices was not an abuse of discretion, noting that "[w]e also cannot accept National's argument that the disfavored independents should have joined voluntary or cooperative groups and thus obtained higher discounts. The Robinson-Patman Act does not force them to sacrifice

[50] Here, the district court, acknowledging this court's Bouldis and Shreve decisions, applied the functional availability doctrine to the present circumstances, concluding that summary judgment in favor of RJR was warranted because the undisputed evidence demonstrated that the WPP program was nondiscriminatory, evenly administered, and therefore functionally available on an equal basis to all of RJR's direct distributors. Plaintiffs dispute this conclusion. [13]

[51] [*874] IV.

A.

Despite the fact that the SOS formula of the WPP is uniformly applied to all of RJR's wholesale distributors, plaintiffs nonetheless maintain that the WPP results in price discrimination [18] because the share targets are grossly inflated, arbitrary, unrealistic, and impossible for plaintiffs to meet. Plaintiffs broadly claim that they are pawns in RJR's battle against fourth-tier cigarette manufacturers and that RJR, rather than compete lawfully against its fourth-tier competition by lowering prices on certain of its cigarette brands, adopted the WPP in 2000 to foreclose distributors from selling fourth-tier brands altogether to their retail customers. Such sweeping complaints about the cigarette industry are, however, not the appropriate focus of this secondary-line price discrimination suit.

More to the point, plaintiffs allege that the WPP disfavors them because, unlike RJR's other distributors, they operate largely in rural "low-end" segments of the market where their retail customers demand fourth-tier brands, and RJR does not price any of its brands at the fourth-tier price level. The gravamen of plaintiffs' price discrimination claim is set forth in PP 26-28 of their [52] Fifth Amended Complaint, in which plaintiffs aver:

> 26.
>
> In August 2000, in response to competition from lower-priced 4th tier cigarette manufacturers, RJR dramatically changed the discount pricing structure of its products for its distributors by implementing the WPP. The WPP set up three separate price tiers for distributors, Levels 1, 2, and 3. Under the WPP, if a distributor's sales of RJR "value priced" brands, as compared with its sales of 4th tier brands and the value priced brands of other manufacturers, do not meet a pre-determined goal in terms of RJR market share of sales, the pricing structure penalizes such distributors on their net (discounted) price. RJR does not price any of its cigarettes at the 4th tier level. This scheme by RJR is aimed at coercing distributors to limit sales of 4th tier brands and other competitors' brands, and designed to force sales of RJR products at higher prices. In implementing the WPP, RJR set the standard for the best discount and back-end monies at such an extreme level that for an overwhelming majority of distributors, including Plaintiffs, the WPP's best price could never be achieved.
>
> 27.
>
> RJR's products are indispensable [53] to Plaintiffs' wholesaler business because their customers (i.e., retail stores) demand that the wholesaler carry a full range of tobacco products so that they can buy all manufacturers' cigarettes from one wholesaler. However, because Plaintiffs service retailers who sell to poorer consumers, they must offer cheaper 4th tier cigarettes to compete as a distributor. This has resulted in [the] inability to obtain the WPP's best price from RJR. Plaintiffs are forced to compete directly against distributors their independence." 395 F.2d at 523. The present case, unlike National Dairy, neither involves a volume discount nor avers that plaintiffs must join forces and sacrifice their independence in order to protect themselves from large distributors.

---

In sum, none of these cases support plaintiffs' assertion that § 13(a) does not require them to change their business structure, reconfigure their customer base, or undertake an expensive and risky business plan. To the contrary, a discount program may be functionally available even when the choice "would have threatened [the plaintiff's] very existence," *Amer. Tara, 1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14211, 1981 WL 375752 at 2, or when the choice "would not be economically possible." *The Iams Co. Litigation, No. C-3-90-014, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22759, 1992 WL 1258514, at 2 (S.D. Ohio July 24, 1992) (unpublished).

[13] To the extent plaintiffs argue that the district court's order granting summary judgment in favor of defendant is improper because it is inconsistent with the court's earlier preliminary injunction ruling, this argument is without merit. It is well established that "[t]he purpose of a preliminary injunction is simply to preserve the status quo; thus, findings of fact and conclusions of law made by a district court in granting a preliminary injunction are not binding at a trial on the merits." United States v. Edward Rose & Sons, 384 F.3d 258, 261 (6th Cir. 2004).

> receiving substantially better prices and whose markets overlap with various portions of Plaintiffs' markets. Critically, Plaintiffs have no significant control [*875] over consumer demand, and cannot reduce their sales of 4th tier cigarettes, or other RJR competitors' products, without losing retailer customers. Given Plaintiffs' customers and market for sales, the best price under RJR's WPP is impossible for them to achieve.
> 28.
>
> Through the WPP, RJR penalizes distributors, including Plaintiffs, who sell 4th tier and other RJR competitors' cigarettes, by reducing allowed discounts and back-end monies as a means of preventing them from distributing cigarettes of RJR's competitors. [54] As a result, Plaintiffs must pay substantially more than their own [19] competitors for the same RJR products, which places Plaintiffs at a severe competitive disadvantage and has resulted in substantial competitive injury.

The WPP's pricing formula thus purportedly places plaintiffs in a no-win situation -- either accede to RJR and destroy their business or meet customer demands and attempt to absorb RJR's discriminatory price differences while suffering debilitating lost profits. Plaintiffs contend that the alleged price disadvantage instigated by the WPP "has caused Plaintiffs to experience millions of dollars in lost profits," and has "caused a loss of customers and threatened the viability of Plaintiffs' businesses." (Complaint, P 29). According to plaintiffs, the "very existence" of the allegedly favored competitors is not similarly threatened because these competitors have a pre-existing "higher-end" customer base that does not demand fourth-tier cigarettes, thus allowing the competitors to qualify for the WPP's best prices.

In response, defendant contends that its best price is as functionally available to each plaintiff as it is to any of that plaintiff's competitors and the [55] relative size of the competitors is irrelevant because all are treated the same in a market-share-based program. Defendant posits that plaintiffs have a choice, albeit difficult: either they can attempt to attain defendant's marketing goals by curtailing their sales of fourth-tier cigarettes or they can continue to promote fourth-tier cigarettes and receive a lower discount on defendant's products.

Plaintiffs counter that this purported "choice" is unpalatable -- because most retailers prefer to buy their stock from a single distributor, if plaintiffs curtail the sale of fourth-tier cigarettes, their customers will take their entire business elsewhere. Thus, dropping competitor products from inventory would result in an immediate loss of customers because they operate as full-line, full-service distributors. Plaintiffs maintain that "§ 2(a) does not require buyers to attempt . . . to drastically change their business structure and radically reconfigure their customer base in order to avoid price discrimination, particularly when such an expensive and risky business plan would lead at best to massive losses."

Plaintiffs further assert that genuine issues of material fact exist regarding [56] whether the WPP's best discounts were functionally available to them, first arguing that in granting summary judgment, the district court erroneously concluded that plaintiffs' "inability to take advantage of the best discount" was because of "an outside influence, not in the control of RJR . . . ." Plaintiffs maintain that in so holding, the district court failed to recognize that the WPP's principal mechanism of discrimination - grossly inflated share targets -- is solely within RJR's control. [14]

[57] [*876] In this regard, plaintiffs presented evidence allegedly showing that in the first quarter of 2003, the WPP's Level 2H share target in states where plaintiffs conduct their business exceeded RJR's alleged state savings brands market share in such states and that RJR's market-share figures used for the WPP calculations were inflated above RJR's actual state market share. The Level 2H target was, according to plaintiffs, as much as 22.5 points higher than RJR's actual market share in the pertinent areas. Plaintiffs allege that RJR's representation that

---

[14] Plaintiffs also suggest that the district court's pronouncement in this regard fails as a matter of law to the extent it suggests that factors outside of the seller's (RJR's) control, such as consumer demand, are irrelevant to the functional availability issue. Otherwise stated, although plaintiffs agree that certain circumstances solely within the buyer's control, such as poor credit, see Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1325, cannot render a program functionally unavailable, any circumstances not within the buyer's control are relevant to a determination whether the qualifications for the best price can be met as a functional or practical matter. Plaintiffs maintain that none of the circumstances making the WPP's best prices functionally unavailable in the instant matter are within plaintiffs' control.

the WPP share target was set around 30% below RJR's actual savings brands state share is deceptive, because the particular target used as the basis for this computation is the Level 2A target, the second worst of ten price levels, and thus it would not entitle a distributor to RJR's best discounts.

[*20] Plaintiffs' economic expert opined that RJR's best prices were not practically available to most distributors, including all plaintiffs. Nine of the original plaintiffs competed against Level 2H distributors, ten plaintiffs competed against Level 2G distributors, and one plaintiff competed against Level 2F distributors. From the second quarter [58] 2002 through the third quarter 2003, only 7 - 8% of RJR's 700 direct distributors reached their Level 2H targets under the WPP. During this same time period, only an additional 4% of RJR distributors achieved Level 2G or higher, and only an additional 6.5% of RJR distributors reached Level 2F or higher. Most distributors failed to reach even Level 2C or higher. Plaintiffs claim that this inability of over 90% of RJR wholesalers to achieve the WPP's best price applies throughout the complaint period. Consequently, plaintiffs maintain that a share target set well in excess of RJR's actual market share is not "well within the means of the average" distributor, Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1326, and also favors those competitor distributors with a pre-existing customer base that already purchase a greater share of RJR products. Plaintiffs further allege that there are serious flaws in the methodology used by RJR to compute its share targets. Plaintiffs complain that the data does not accurately capture non-reporting members, cash and carry purchases, or sales volume in certain counties within a state. [15] The mean per capita income provided by RJR is allegedly of little probative [59] value because it masks relevant information about variations in income between different areas of a given county and does not account for the presence of nationwide convenience store chains in those areas (selling a higher percentage of RJR's second-tier Doral brand and other expensive products) and smaller, independent and rural retailers (selling a higher percentage of discount cigarettes to primarily local consumers). [*877] Finally, plaintiffs produced evidence in the form of letters and testimony that when they attempted to qualify for RJR's best price, they suffered a substantial decline in the financial welfare of their businesses.

[60] In sum, according to plaintiffs, the record evidence indicates that: (1) distributors cannot measurably increase the demand for RJR products; (2) plaintiffs do everything they can to sell as many RJR products as possible; (3) RJR's own data shows that the WPP's best price is practically achievable by only 8% of all distributors; and (4) plaintiffs and their most favored competitors did not face the same bad business choice in attempting to qualify for the WPP's best price. Plaintiffs argue that each of these genuine issues of material fact on the functional availability issue warrants reversal of the district court's order granting summary judgment to defendant.

B.

As previously noted, a secondary-line price discrimination claim brought under § 13(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act requires proof that the defendant discriminated in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, in interstate sales, and the effect of that discrimination was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Volvo Trucks, 126 S. Ct. at 870. The parties do not dispute that the relevant sales were made in interstate commerce [61] and that the commodities were of like grade and quality.

Accepting as true plaintiffs' allegations in the context of this summary judgment review, we nonetheless conclude that summary judgment is warranted because the undisputed material facts [21] demonstrate that RJR's best discount under the WPP was functionally available to plaintiffs on an equal basis, thus affirmatively disproving the element of discrimination in price.

---

[15] Specifically, plaintiffs assert as follows:

> Perhaps even more glaring a deficiency in RJR's experts' per capita income comparison is the binary classification of each county within a state as either "served" or "unserved." RJR's methodology fatally makes no provision for sales volume (in units or dollars) in any "served" county. A county in which a Plaintiff sells 10 cartons of cigarettes per month was given equal weight to one in which that same Plaintiff sold 10,000 cartons per month. This analysis made no effort to accurately reflect concentrations in Plaintiffs' business.

We initially note that the WPP does not bear any of the obvious hallmarks of a discriminatory pricing program. RJR developed a share-based program, not a quantity-based program of the sort condemned by the Supreme Court in Morton Salt. Plaintiffs do not claim that they are too small to take advantage of the discount [16] or allege that they, unlike other wholesalers, were ignorant of its terms or deprived of access to the WPP. Further, there is no evidence that RJR manipulated the WPP to favor certain wholesalers. To the contrary, the evidence shows that RJR has evenhandedly applied the WPP, treating all of its wholesalers equally and offering all of them the same qualification terms. Each wholesaler performed equivalent functions to obtain the discounts.

[62] To determine the share-of-savings targets, RJR first calculated an overall state target by ranking all of its wholesalers in the state, starting with the wholesaler with the highest RJR savings share (which, as RJR points out, was not necessarily the wholesaler with the highest volume) and ending with the wholesaler with the lowest RJR savings share. RJR then selected as the state target the RJR savings percentage of the wholesaler whose volume, when added to the volume of the wholesalers [*878] with higher savings brands shares, accounted for approximately 85% of RJR's wholesale volume in the state. RJR then calculated a share-of-savings target for each wholesaler, using the previously calculated state targets and weighting them to reflect the percentage of the wholesaler's business in different states. Because participation in the program did not depend on the volume of a wholesaler's RJR sales, small wholesalers were treated the same as large wholesalers.

Reiterating plaintiffs' core argument that RJR's best share-of-savings targets were unattainable (1) because they serviced retailers who sold to poorer customers, (2) resulting in a uniquely high demand for fourth-tier cigarettes, [63] plaintiffs have proffered neither statistical evidence nor expert testimony to support these allegations. No plaintiff presented evidence both (1) that it sold only in lower-income areas in the states within its service area and (2) that the demand for fourth-tier cigarettes was higher in its sales area than in other areas of the state.

RJR, on the other hand, presented comparisons of the average per capita income in the counties served by each plaintiff to the average per capita income in the remaining counties in the states in which the plaintiff sold. This evidence, in the form of U.S. Department of Commerce data on county income levels, showed that the average per capita income in the served counties exceeded that of the counties not served for most plaintiffs. Only three of the original plaintiffs (Smith, Rice, and Pelican) sold in counties that had statistically lower average income levels than the remaining counties in the states in which they sold. Two of the plaintiffs (Rice and Smith) sold in virtually the same areas as another allegedly favored wholesaler, Virginia Wholesale, that earned discounts at an upper level of the WPP. Another plaintiff, Pelican, admitted that higher-income [64] areas existed within its own sales area. In sum, the data showed that plaintiffs sell in a range of counties, from some that have relatively low incomes to others that have relatively high incomes.

Plaintiffs' expert conducted no analysis of this issue and admitted that he did not plan to offer an opinion on whether plaintiffs sold in lower-income areas. He did not factor income levels [22] into a computation of lost profits. Two plaintiffs (A.B. Coker and Yakima) conceded that their sales areas included entire states, not merely low-income pockets in those states. Other plaintiffs [17] conceded that they served higher-income portions of their sales areas or that higher-income areas existed in their sales areas. Some plaintiffs conceded that they had no evidence that they served lower-income areas or that their perception that they served lower-income areas was simply conjecture. [18]

---

[16] Although not alleged in their complaint, plaintiffs broadly argue that WPP favors the largest distributors -- "[T]he fact that 85 of RJR's volume may have qualified for Level 2 "A" pricing did not translate into 85 of RJR's distributors qualifying for that price. The 21 largest distributors (of around 700 direct accounts) control 50 of RJR's sales volume and are at the WPP's highest program levels." This vague assertion is insufficient to support a claim that the WPP favors larger distributors by virtue of their greater purchasing power.

[17] Plaintiffs A.B. Coker, Andalusia, Caldwell, Church Point, Huntsville, Independent, Bates, Shanks, Pelican, Taylor, Reidsville, and Yakima.

[18] Plaintiffs Affiliated, Dixie, George, Shanks, McCarty-Hull, Pelican, Rice, and Topicz.

[65] Further, because plaintiffs failed to substantiate, with comparative data, differences in fourth-tier demand between the areas of states where they sell and those states as a whole, plaintiffs have thus failed to show that actual demand for fourth-tier cigarettes was, in fact, higher in their sales areas. Again, plaintiffs' expert did not address this issue. Moreover, plaintiffs presented no evidence that RJR's share in areas where plaintiffs sold was any different than RJR's statewide shares in the states where the allegedly less-affluent areas were located. In sum, plaintiffs are unable to verify the grounds for their price discrimination claim -- that they predominantly [*879] service retailers who sell to poorer customers, resulting in a uniquely high demand for fourth-tier cigarettes -- in turn foreclosing proofs that the WPP actually disfavored plaintiffs on the basis of these characteristics. In any event, there is no evidence that anything other than plaintiffs' marketing decisions impacted their ability to obtain the WPP's best prices. The undisputed evidence demonstrates that plaintiffs faced a choice that was "not an inequity imposed by the pricing structure but a fundamental [66] economic conundrum faced by all sellers." Krist Oil Co., 354 F. Supp. at 857.

Plaintiffs could alter their sales mix at any time so as to qualify for the varying discount levels. Plaintiffs complain that only a small percentage of wholesalers actually reached Level 2H. However, this is a neutral fact, not a material issue, which simply reflects the outcome of different choices made by different wholesalers. The legality of RJR's incentive program does not turn on whether, in fact, each wholesaler actually achieved the highest level in the WPP program. The very nature of an incentive program necessarily leads to different outcomes based on performance. See, e.g. Comcoa, 931 F.2d at 664; Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 121-22. As long as defendant offered the same best price to plaintiffs as to their competitors, using a nondiscriminatory pricing formula, defendant did not violate the Robinson-Patman Act.

Finally, with regard to plaintiffs' allegations of inflated shares, plaintiffs' proofs are lacking in a demonstration or appropriate comparison regarding how any discrepancy between actual and reported market share affected plaintiffs more than [67] other supposedly favored wholesalers. Moreover, importantly, plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate how this allegedly improper calculation detrimentally affected competition. In essence, plaintiffs suggest that RJR did not have to set its discount levels in the particular manner set in the WPP: "RJR could set share targets that are reasonably related to each distributor's past sales and market share. This design, contrary to RJR's WPP, would treat all distributors equally at the outset because targets would be set according to the cigarette demands of each distributor's actual market and available customer base." However, we will not entertain plaintiffs' invitation to re-engineer the uniformly applied WPP incentive program to make it more reasonable for some participants. See Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 121-22 (declining to impose a "station by station" formula "[g]iven the evenhanded application of the formula" and the "substantial administrative burden" on the defendant); Rod Baxter Imports, Inc., 489 F. Supp. at 249 ("The evidence presented by plaintiff tending to indicate that some dealers would have been better or worse off if a longer base period [68] was used, does not in the court's view establish that the program [23] was unfair or that it may have had the effect of substantially limiting competition."). As the magistrate judge noted in his Report and Recommendation in the instant case:

> [T]he Court disagrees with the plaintiffs that defendant's decision to set the target goals on a statewide basis was arbitrary and improper. To be sure, there are two "arbitrary" factors in defendant's calculation. Using a state to set its targets, as opposed to some other geographical or demographical area, was arbitrary, but no other geographical area would have been any less arbitrary. And using eight-five percent as the baseline target also could be said to be arbitrary, since defendant could have chosen ninety percent, or seventy-five percent, or any other percentage. But picking a number fifteen percent below defendant's market share in a given state was not unreasonable. Plaintiffs [*880] essentially argue that defendant should have set the targets on a per-distributor basis which, of course, would be tantamount to having no market-share-based incentive program at all. These targets treat all distributors equally; each has the same opportunity [69] to achieve higher discount levels. From the fact that unpleasant, even draconian, business decisions might be required, it does not follow that the discount scheme is discriminatory.
>
> Admittedly, the "reasonableness of choice" issue is troublesome. . . . But if the reasonableness or unreasonableness of business decisions is a factor that must be considered with respect to functional availability of a market-share-based discount program, then such a discount program always will be as > inherently suspect as a volume-based discount program. Any given distributor could claim that it could not meet a market-share goal because it would be required to alter its business in some fashion which the distributor subjectively determines to be unreasonable. No seller could ever know if its program was lawful under Robinson-Patman; the legality of any market-share-based discount program only could be ascertained with respect to each and every buyer after a jury decides whether the business decisions forced upon that buyer were reasonable or not. Although plaintiffs argue they are not challenging market-share-based discount programs per se, in reality they are, simply because any distributor [70] could challenge the target goal as unreasonable as to it; and if that distributor prevails, the entire discount program would collapse as unworkable. The result would be "tailor-made" discounts which themselves presumptively violate the Robinson-Patman Act.

> * * *
> Defendant's program is designed to promote its financial welfare at the expense of that of the wholesalers. Perhaps it is unfair, but it is not illegal.

The Robinson-Patman Act proscribes price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition, and, in the absence of such a showing, we will not intercede so as to micromanage the distribution system of defendant. As the Supreme Court noted in Volvo Trucks, the Robinson-Patman Act does not bar a manufacturer from restructuring its distribution system to refine productivity:

> The dissent assails Volvo's decision to reduce the number of its dealers. . . . But Robinson-Patman does not bar a manufacturer from restructuring its distribution networks to improve the efficiency of its operations. If Volvo did not honor its obligations to Reeder as its franchisee, "any remedy . . . lies in state laws addressing unfair competition and [71] the rights of franchisees, not in the Robinson-Patman Act." Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 28.

[24] Volvo Trucks, 126 S. Ct. at 873 n.4.

C.

Under the circumstances, we affirm the district court's order granting summary judgment in favor of defendant. As the district court properly found, the WPP's market-share discount was offered to all wholesalers using a non-discriminatory formula. It was therefore functionally available to plaintiffs not only in theory, but in fact. The capacity of plaintiffs to qualify for the WPP's best discount was a matter of marketing strategy and brand prioritization, a choice inherent and unavoidable in multi-brand incentive programs. Because the WPP discount was functionally available to plaintiffs, a requisite [*881] element of a prima facie secondary-line price § 13(a) claim, price discrimination has not been established, and plaintiffs' claim therefore fails as a matter of law.

Application of the WPP program may ultimately cull the number of RJR's distributors. However, the functional availability doctrine does not require a supplier to ensure the success of its customers. Whether this potential loss of participating wholesalers [72] will ultimately benefit defendant remains to be seen.

Affirmed.

End of Document

Gibson v. Office of the AG of Cal.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

February 28, 2007, Decided; February 28, 2007, Filed

CV 07-00838 FMC (JCx)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105204 *

PAULA LAUREN GIBSON, ESQ., and ANNETTE D. GOODE-PARKER, Plaintiffs, vs. OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA; BILL LOCKYER; RICHARD M. FRANK; JAMES THOMAS GREENE; KATHLEEN FOOTE; LOUIS MAURO; JACOB APPLESMITH; BARBARA MOTZ; and DOES 1-10, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Dismissed by, Dismissed by, Without prejudice, in part, Motion denied by, As moot Gibson v. Office of the AG of Cal., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105205 (C.D. Cal., Apr. 10, 2007)

Dismissed by Gibson v. Office of the AG of Cal., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105202 (C.D. Cal., June 5, 2007)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part, Costs and fees proceeding at Gibson v. Office of the Ag of Cal., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110660 (C.D. Cal., Oct. 10, 2007)

Core Terms

Plaintiffs', allegations, permission, rights, Defendants', conspiracy, employees, limitations, damages, reasonable accommodation, breach of contract, motion to dismiss, cause of action, contractual, complaints, exhaustion, grievances

Counsel: [*1] Paula Lauren Gibson, Pro se, Los Angeles, CA USA.

For Paula Lauren Gibson, Annette D Goode-Parker, Plaintiffs: Mark A McBride, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Mark McBride PC, Beverly Hills, CA USA.

Annette D Goode-Parker, Pro se, Los Angeles, CA USA.

For Office of The Attorney General State of California, Bill Lockyer, Richard M Frank, James Thomas Greene, Kathleen Foote, Louis Mauro, Jacob Applesmith, Barbara Motz, Defendants: Stephanie L Quinn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Murphy Campbell Alliston and Quinn, Sacramento, CA USA; Thomas Allen Cregger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cregger and Chalfant, Sacramento, CA USA.

Judges: FLOKENCE-MARIE COOPER, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: FLOKENCE-MARIE COOPER

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS AND DENYING MOTION TO STRIKE

This matter is before the Court on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and Motion to Strike (docket no. 12), filed on February 9, 2007. The Court has read and considered the moving, opposition, and reply documents submitted in connection with the motion. The Court deems this matter appropriate for decision without oral argument. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; Local Rule 7-15. Accordingly, the hearing set for March 5, 2007, is removed from the Court's calendar. For the reasons and in the manner set forth [*2] below, the Court hereby GRANTS the Motion to Dismiss and DENIES the Motion to Strike as MOOT.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On December 11, 2006, Plaintiffs Paula Lauren Gibson and Annette D. Goode-Parker (collectively "Plaintiffs") filed their Complaint in the Superior Court of the State of California, County of Los Angeles. The Complaint states that Plaintiffs' action is "for breach of contact [sic] and under 42 U.S.C. § 1981, § 1983 to recover damages against defendant for violation of plaintiffs federal constitutional or statutory rights to assembly and free speech and to petition for redress of grievances, to privacy and to contract without interference under color of state law, guaranteed by the First, Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and also under the California State Constitution for violations of Article 1, Sections 1, 2 and 7." (Compl. ¶ 4.)

The Complaint alleges, inter alia, that Plaintiff Gibson ("Gibson") is the sole African-American Deputy Attorney General in the statewide Antitrust Law Section of the California Department of Justice, Office of the Attorney General ("OAG"). (Id. at ¶ 5.) In or about 2001, Gibson was transferred to the Antitrust Section from the Health, Education and Welfare Section as part of an agreement [*3] (the "2001 Agreement") entered into by Gibson and OAG to resolve complaints of disability discrimination and denial of reasonable accommodation made by Gibson to the State Personnel Board and Department of Fair Employment and Housing. (Id. at ¶¶ 25-27.) Plaintiff Goode-Parker ("Goode-Parker") is a Senior Legal Analyst (paralegal) in the statewide Antitrust Law Section and provides many of the "reasonable accommodation" services required by Gibson. (Id. at ¶¶ 6, 25.)

On June 25, 2003, Gibson filed a private legal malpractice action in the Los Angeles Superior Court, on behalf of Goode-Parker and against California attorney Harold Greenberg ("Greenberg"). (Id. at ¶ 31.) Although the OAG has a policy of requiring attorneys within its employ to receive permission to engage in the private practice of law, Gibson did not seek such permission in connection with her representation of Goode-Parker until April 21, 2004. (Id. at ¶¶ 32-33, 35, 72-73.) Gibson's request was ultimately denied by Defendant Kathleen Foote ("Foote"), Senior Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Section, on the alleged grounds that the existence of a separate and pending claim filed by Greenberg against Gibson [*4] with the State Board of Control created a "conflict of interest." (Id. at ¶ 37.)

In June 2004, Gibson filed a grievance concerning the denial of permission. (Id. at ¶ 40.) In the interim, she continued with her representation of Goode-Parker and defended against a separate action brought against her (by Greenberg) in the Los Angeles Superior Court. (Id. at ¶ 41.)

On November 19, 2004, Gibson was advised that she would be terminated if she did not withdraw from representing Goode-Parker, notwithstanding the fact that there had not yet been any formal action regarding her grievance. (Id. at ¶ 46.) Although Gibson protested to Defendant Foote, she ultimately withdrew as requested on December 9, 2004. (Id. at ¶¶ 47-48.) The Complaint alleges that, as a result of her forced withdrawal, Gibson was required to pay another, private attorney to substitute into the case and Goode-Parker "was denied the assistance of the attorney of her choice who was knowledgeable about the case. . . ." (Id. at ¶ 49.)

Around this same time, Gibson allegedly requested two reasonable accommodations to her own and Goode-Parker's work schedules, which Gibson believed to be encompassed by the 2001 Agreement. (Id. at [*5] ¶¶ 42-43.) However, these requests were denied by Defendant Jacob Applesmith. (Id. at ¶ 44.)

In or about December 2005, Gibson requested—and was given permission-to file a malicious prosecution action against Greenberg. (Id. at ¶ 54.) Such permission was granted on the condition that Gibson was prohibited from arguing that the OAG's requirement that she seek permission prior to filing any private legal action "was unlawful, unconstitutional or otherwise improper." (Id.) However, subsequent to her filing of the suit, Gibson received "threatening" communications from Defendant James Thomas Greene, Chief Assistant Attorney General for the Public Rights Division, requesting her to explain her authority for having filed the malicious prosecution action. (Id. at ¶¶ 58, 60.)

In the interim, Greenberg filed a demurrer to Gibson's malicious prosecution action, which was sustained on the grounds that Gibson had "unclean hands" because of her failure to seek permission from her employer to represent Goode-Parker in the related malpractice action. (Id. at ¶ 62.) Gibson did not appeal the decision sustaining the demurrer "because she did not want to have to ask for permission to file an appeal" from [*6] her employer and/or because she feared further adverse action. (Id. at ¶ 63.) Apart from Gibson's failure to file the appeal, the Complaint alleges that Gibson and Goode-Parker have "foregone various opportunities to petition for redress in the form of filing lawsuits" because of the need to obtain prior permission from their employer. (Id. at ¶ 65.)

Defendants removed the action to this Court on February 5, 2007. By means of the instant motion, they seek to dismiss all causes of action against all of them, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In the alternative, they move to strike Plaintiffs' prayer for punitive damages pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(0.

DISCUSSION

I. Motion to Dismiss

A. Legal Standard

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permits a defendant to seek dismissal of a complaint that "fail[s] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed. R. Civ, P. 12(b)(6). The Court will not dismiss claims for relief unless the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of the claims that would entitle him to relief. Thompson v. Davis, 295 F.3d 890, 895 (9th Cir. 2002); see also Steckman v. Hart Brewing, Inc., 143 F.3d 1293, 1295 (9th Cir. 1998). All material factual allegations in the complaint are assumed to be true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Nursing Home Pension Fund, Local 144 v. Oracle Corp., 380 F.3d 1226, 1229 (9th Cir. 2004) ("The general rule for 12(b)(6) motions is that allegations of material fact made in the complaint should be [*7] taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.") (citing Burgert v. Lokelani Bernice Pauahi Bishop Trust, 200 F.3d 661, 663 (9th Cir. 2000)). However, the Court "is not required to accept legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations if those conclusions cannot be reasonably drawn from the facts alleged." Clegg v. Cult Awareness Network, 18 F.3d 752, 755 (9th Cir. 1994) (internal citations omitted).

If the Court dismisses the complaint, it must decide whether to grant leave to amend. Denial of leave to amend is "improper unless it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by any amendment." Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005).

B. Plaintiffs' Claims for Relief

1. First Cause of Action—Violation of Rights under 42 U.S.C. § 1983

Plaintiffs' first cause of action is styled as a claim for "violation of first amendment right to assembly and petition for redress" and "violations of the California State Constitution, Article 1, sections 1, 2, and 7," pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that the OAG's policy of requiring that attorneys within its employ obtain permission prior to engaging in the private practice of law, embodied in a comprehensive "Incompatible Activities

Statement," constitutes a prior restraint and a violation of Plaintiffs' rights to privacy and to petition the Government for redress of grievances. (Coml. ¶ 76.)[1]

As a threshold matter, Plaintiffs' § 1983 claims against Defendant [*8] OAG are barred because, as a "state agency," it is not a "person" subject to liability under the statute. See, e.g., Maldonado v. Harris, 370 F.3d 945, 951 (9th Cir. 2004) ("State agencies. . . are not 'persons' within the meaning of § 1983, and are therefore not amenable to suit under that statute.") (citing Will v. Mich. Dep 't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 70, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 109 S. Ct. 2304 (1989)).[2] Defendants Lockyer, Frank, Applesmith and Mauro, to the extent that they are being sued in their official capacities, are also not amenable to suit under § 1981 See, e.g., Will, 491 U.S. at 71.[3] Contrary to Plaintiffs' arguments, the fact that said Defendants removed this action to this Court does not constitute a waiver of their "immunity" from suit, as that "immunity" derives not from the Eleventh Amendment but from the fact that Defendants are not "persons" within the meaning of the statute. See Bank of Lake Tahoe v. Bank of Am., 318 F.3d 914, 917 (9th Cir. 2003); see also Lapides v. Bd. of Regents, 535 U.S. 613, 617, 122 S. Ct. 1640, 152 L. Ed. 2d 806 (2002).

To the extent that the individual Defendants are being sued in their individual capacities, Defendants argue, inter alia, that Plaintiffs' claims are nonetheless barred by the applicable statute of limitations, which is two years. See, e.g., Jones v. Blanas, 393 F.3d 918, 927 (9th Cir. 2004) ("[A] § 1983 action filed in California today would clearly be governed by California's new two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions."). Specifically, Defendants argue, Plaintiffs' claims for violation of their First Amendment speech [*9] and petition rights, if any, necessarily accrued no later than the date(s) on which Gibson was denied permission to represent Goode-Parker in the malpractice action and/or when she decided to withdraw "under protest." Defendants are correct in pointing out that these events all took place more than two years prior to the filing of the Complaint.

In their Opposition, Plaintiffs do not address Defendants' statute of limitations arguments in any way, nor is it clear from the Complaint that they are complaining about any activity—imposition of restrictions on speech or other violations of rights—that took place after December 9, 2004 (the date of Gibson's withdrawal). Plaintiffs unequivocally had knowledge of any cognizable injury to their ability to assemble and petition for grievances at the time that Gibson received notice that her request for permission to continue with her representation of Goode-Parker was definitively denied, i.e., no later than November 19, 2004. RK Ventures, Inc. v. City of Seattle, 307 F.3d 1045, 1058 (9th Cir. 2002) ("A statute of limitations under § 1983. . . begins to run when the cause of action accrues, which is when the plaintiffs know or have reason to know of the injury that is the basis of their action.") (citing Cabrera v. City of Huntington Park, 159 F.3d 374, 379 (9th Cir. 1998)). For this reason [*10] alone, the Court agrees that Plaintiffs' first cause of action is subject to dismissal against all remaining Defendants. However, such dismissal should be without prejudice, as the Court finds that amendment could serve to clarify the specific unlawful

---

[1] As Plaintiffs recognize, the OAG's promulgation of an "Incompatible Activities Statement" is required by Cal. Govt. Code § 19990, which provides that "[a] state officer or employee shall not engage in any employment, activity, or enterprise which is clearly inconsistent, incompatible, in conflict with, or inimical to his or her duties as a state officer or employee." Cal. Govt. Code § 19990 further provides that "[e]ach appointing power shall determine, subject to approval of the department, those activities which, for employees under its jurisdiction, are inconsistent, incompatible or in conflict with their duties as state officers or employees."

[2] "'To sustain an action under section 1983, a plaintiff must show (1) that the conduct complained of was committed by a person acting under color of state law; and (2) that the conduct deprived the plaintiff of a federal constitutional or statutory right.'" Hydrick v. Hunter, 466 F.3d 676, 689 (9th Cir. 2006) (quoting Wood v. Ostrander, 879 F.2d 583, 587 (9th Cir. 1989)).

[3] In addition, because he is no longer serving as Attorney General, Defendant Lockyer is no longer a proper Defendant in his official capacity. See Defs' Request for Judicial Notice ¶1; Fed. R. Civ. P. 25(d).

actions at issue and the nature of the Constitutional violations (Federal and State) alleged. See, e.g., Cabrera, 159 F.3d at 380 ("The accrual of a § 1983 claim depends upon the substantive basis of the claim.").[4]

2. Second Cause of Action—Breach of Contract

Plaintiffs' Second Cause of Action for "breach of contract" is brought against Defendant OAG only. A claim for breach of contract under California law consists of the following elements: (1) the existence of a contract; (2) performance by the plaintiff or excuse for nonperformance; (3) breach by the defendant; and (4) damages. First Commercial Mortgage Co. v. Reece, 89 Cal. App. 4th 731, 745, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 23 (2001) (citing 4 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (4th ed. 1997) Pleading, § 476, p. 570)); see also Amelco Electric v. City of Thousand Oaks, 27 Cal. 4th 228, 243, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 38 P.3d 1120 (2002) ("Under a breach of contract theory, the plaintiff must demonstrate a contract, the plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, the defendant's breach, and damage to the plaintiff.").

Here, Plaintiffs have identified and alleged the existence of a written contract between Gibson and the OAG—the 2001 [*11] Agreement—and a separate "oral" agreement with Goode-Parker, which allegedly encompassed the same terms. (Compl. ¶¶ 85-86.) However, Plaintiffs have failed to allege any facts giving rise to a breach. As Defendants point out, Plaintiffs simply allege that the contract(s) were "breached" when OAG representative Adrian Randolph Esq. made statements that the 2001 Agreement would not be enforced unless Gibson agreed to retire. (Id. at ¶ 91.) However, such statements alone do not constitute a "breach," absent allegations that actual actions were taken in violation of the Agreement's terms. See, e.g., Romano v. Rockwell Int?, Inc., 14 Cal. 4th at 488(1996) ("A cause of action for breach of contract does not accrue before the time of breach.").

The only other allegations pertaining to Defendant OAG's "breach" of contract are contained in paragraph 93 of the Complaint, in which Plaintiffs allege that they were denied their promised "fresh start" with the Antitrust Section because they had been subjected to negative terms and conditions of employment, including but not limited to denial of challenging work assignments, reduction in job responsibilities, and "miscellaneous threats and actions." (Compl. ¶ 93.) However, the [*12] 2001 Agreement, attached as an Exhibit to the Complaint, expressly provides that nothing in its provisions "modifies Gibson's classification, salary, benefits or other terms or conditions of employment," except to the extent that it provides for certain reasonable accommodations for her disability. (Compl., Exh. 1, at 2.) Moreover, it is well-established under California law that state civil service employees cannot sue their employers for "breach of contract" for the imposition of unfavorable terms and conditions of employment. See, e.g., Kim v. Regents of University of California, 80 Cal. App. 4th 160, 164, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10 (2000) ("[O]ur Supreme Court has made it clear that civil service employees cannot state a cause of action for breach of contract or breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.") (citing Shoemaker v. Myers, 52 Cal. 3d 1, 23-24, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 (1990)); see also Miller v. State, 18 Cal. 3d 808, 814, 135 Cal. Rptr. 386, 557 P.2d 970 (1977) ("Nor is any vested contractual right conferred on the public employee because he occupies a civil service position since it is equally well settled that the terms and conditions of civil service employment are fixed by statute and not by contract.") (internal quotations omitted). Accordingly, Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for breach of contract arising out of the 2001 Agreement or any other "employment" agreement.

3. Third Cause [*13] of Action—Interference with Contract

Plaintiffs third cause of action purports to be both a claim for interference with contract and contractual advantage and a claim for conspiracy to interfere with constitutional rights pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1985(3), against Defendants Mauro and Motz.[5] However, as discussed below, Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under either legal theory.

---

[4] Defendants' additional arguments vis avis Plaintiffs' first cause of action are directed to the issues of qualified immunity and Goode-Parker's lack of standing. The Court determines that these arguments will be more appropriate for consideration after amendment of the Complaint, if any.

Enacted as the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1981, 42 U.S.C. § 1985(3) prohibits conspiracies "for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws[.]" Holgate v. Baldwin, 425 F.3d 671, 676 (9th Cir. 2005) (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 1985(3)). Accordingly, to state a claim for relief under § 1985(3), a plaintiff must allege: (1) the existence of a conspiracy to deprive the plaintiff of the equal protection of the laws; (2) an act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and (3) a resulting injury. See Addisu V. Fred Meyer, Inc., 198 F.3d 1130, 1141 (9th Cir. 2000) (citing Scott v. Ross, 140 F.3d 1275, 1284, rehearing den., 151 F.3d 1247 (9th Cir. 1998)).[6]

Here, Plaintiffs Complaint is entirely devoid of any substantive allegations concerning the existence of a conspiracy between Mauro and Motz. Rather, it simply alleges that, on July 27, 2005, Mauro faxed a copy of the 2001 Agreement to Motz, "in breach of the agreement to keep the same confidential," and that Motz "commenced to interfere with [*14] the terms of the contract to plaintiffs' detriment." (Compl. ¶¶ 99-100.) These allegations are insufficient to show the requisite "meeting of the minds" between Mauro and Motz. See, e.g., Woodrum v. Woodward County, 866 F.2d 1121, 1126 (9th Cir. 1989) ("To prove conspiracy between Rosson and the social services employees under § 1983, an agreement or meeting of minds to violate the Woodrums' constitutional rights must be shown."); see also Hoefer v. Fluor Daniel, Inc., 92 F. Supp. 2d 1055, 1057 (CD. Cal. 2000) ("A conspiracy requires a meeting of minds.").[7]

To the extent that Plaintiffs seek to state a claim for the common law tort of intentional inference of contract, they are required to allege (1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage. Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., 19 Cal. 4th 26, 55, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709, 960 P.2d 513 (1998) (citations omitted). However, because both Defendant Mauro and Defendant Motz are employees of the OAG, Plaintiffs cannot meet even the first element. As Defendants point out, it is well established that a party cannot state a claim for interference with contract against a party to the alleged contract and/or the party's agents [*15] or employees. See Shoemaker v. Myers, 52 Cal. 3d 1, 24, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 (1990) ("[C]orporate agents and employees acting for and on behalf of a corporation cannot be held liable for inducing a breach of the corporation's contract.") (citations omitted). In their Opposition, Plaintiffs provide no argument as to why this principle should not equally apply to their claims, where the Defendants alleged to have interfered with their contractual rights are employees and/or agents of the contracting party—i.e., the OAG.

4. Fourth Cause of Action—Whistleblower Retaliation

Plaintiffs' final cause of action is for "Violation of California Whistleblower Protection Acts" (Cal. Govt. Code §§ 8547-8547.12), against Defendants OAG, Greene, Applesmith and Motz. Plaintiffs allege that, starting in November 2004, Defendants took numerous adverse actions against them (including the denial of the requests for additional, reasonable disability accommodations) in retaliation for their exercise of statutory and constitutional rights (including their First Amendment "petitioning" activities). (Compl. ¶¶ 109-110.) Plaintiffs further allege that, on or about December 12, 2004, Gibson filed complaints with the State Personnel Board ("SPB"), alleging the denial of two

---

[5] Defendant Mauro was the Senior Assistant Attorney General for the Government Law Section. Defendant Motz was Plaintiffs' immediate supervisor. (Compl. ¶¶ 12, 15.)

[6] Although the Complaint also references 42 U.S.C. § 1981, in their Opposition. Plaintiffs implicitly concede that 42 U.S.C. § 1985(3) is the only section under which their "conspiracy" claim can be brought. (See Opp'n at 8.)

[7] In addition, although not yet addressed in the Ninth Circuit, numerous other circuit and district courts have held that, pursuant to the application of the "infra-corporate conspiracy doctrine," individual employees of a single employer/governmental agency cannot conspire with one another for the purposes of giving rise to liability under § 1985(3). See Hoefer, 92 F.Supp.2d at 1057-58 (collecting cases). Given the weight of the case law in favor of applying the doctrine, the Court agrees that it serves as an additional bar to Plaintiffs' claims as currently alleged.

reasonable accommodation requests and "whistle-blower" [*16] retaliation. Gibson filed additional complaints pertaining to additional acts of retaliation at some point thereafter. (Id. at ¶¶ 111-112.) Plaintiffs acknowledge that all of these complaints remain pending with the SPB at this time. (Id. at ¶ 115).[8]

The exhaustion of administrative remedies before the SPB is a statutory prerequisite to the filing of a suit for damages under the California Whistleblower Protection Act. See Cal. Govt. Code § 8547.8(c) ("[A]ny action for damages shall not be available to the injured party unless the injured party has first filed a complaint with the State Personnel Board pursuant to subdivision (a), and the board has issued, or failed to issue, findings pursuant to Section 19683."). Moreover, "in California, a requirement that administrative remedies be exhausted is jurisdictional." California Correctional Peace Officers Assn. [CCPOA] v. State Personnel Bd., 10 Cal. 4th 1133, 1151, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693, 899 P.2d 79(1995) (citation omitted); see also Hood v. Hacienda La Puente Unified School Dist., 65 Cal. App. 4th 435, 441, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448 (1998).

In their Opposition, Plaintiffs offer no explanation as to why they have met the exhaustion requirements in their case, notwithstanding their failure to obtain a final decision from the SPB, other than the blithe assertion that the filing of an SPB claim is not a condition precedent to suit. (See Opp'n at 8.) At the same time, the Complaint [*17] itself alleges that the SPB has failed to issue timely findings as required by Cal. Govt. Code § 18671.1 (Compl. ¶ 115), which may be deemed to constitute an exhaustion of "all available administrative remedies" in the absence of a waiver. See Cal. Govt. Code § 18671.1[9] Nevertheless, the facts as alleged indicate that there has been a waiver of the statutory time limits on Plaintiffs' part, given that they have waited more than two years from the date of filing of the SPB complaints to file this lawsuit, and more than a year and a half after the expiration of the statutory time period for issuance of a decision. See, e.g., CCPOA, 10 Cal. 4th at 1156 n.6 (failure to object to SPB's failure to issue a decision "within a reasonable time after expiration of the statutory time limit" constitutes an implicit waiver thereof). Accordingly, absent additional allegations regarding actions taken to protect against waiver of the statutory time limits, Plaintiffs cannot circumvent the statutory exhaustion requirements by virtue of their objections to the SPB's failure to issue timely findings. Concomitantly, they cannot bring a claim for violation of the California Whistleblower Protection Act at this time.[10]

II. Motion to Strike

Because Defendants' motion to dismiss is granted [*18] in its entirety, their alternative motion to strike Plaintiffs' prayer for punitive damages is moot.

CONCLUSION

---

[8] In addition, Defendants have requested the Court to take judicial notice of the pending SPB actions. Over Plaintiffs' objections, the Court agrees that these matters are the proper subject of judicial notice and are proper for consideration on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). See Fed R. Evid. 201; Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F. 3d 699, 706 (9th Cir. 1998) ("A district court ruling on a motion to dismiss may consider documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions. . .") (internal quotation marks omitted). At the same time, the Court sustains Defendants' objections to Plaintiffs' "exhibits" to their Opposition to the Motion, as they are not the proper subject for judicial notice.

[9] Specifically, Cal Govt. Code § 18671.1 provides that "the period from the filing of the petition to the decision of the board shall not exceed six months or 90 days from the time of the submission, whichever time period is less, and except that the board may extend the six-month period up to 45 additional days" and that "the provisions relating to the six-month or the 90-day periods for a decision maybe waived by the employee but if not so waived, a failure to render a timely decision is an exhaustion of all available administrative remedies."

[10] In addition, the Court is cognizant of the fact that the pending SPB complaints appear to be directed only to retaliatory action taken against Gibson, and not Goode-Parker. Any amended Complaint must include allegations sufficient to establish exhaustion by both Plaintiffs.

Based on the foregoing, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (docket no. 12) is GRANTED, without prejudice to Plaintiffs' filing of an amended complaint to cure, if possible, the defects identified herein, except that Plaintiffs' § 1983 claims against the OAG and Defendants Lockyer, Frank, Applesmith and Mauro in their official capacities are dismissed without leave to amend. Said amended complaint shall be filed no later than ten (10) days from the date of entry of this Order.

Defendants' Motion to Strike is DENIED as MOOT.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

February 28, 2007

/s/ Flokence-Marie Cooper

FLOKENCE-MARIE COOPER, JUDGE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

March 1, 2007, Decided; March 1, 2007, Filed

Civil Action No. 01-1652 (JAG); MDL Docket No. 1419

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100238 *; 2007 WL 5297755

IN RE K-DUR ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates To: All Actions

Subsequent History: Later proceeding at In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102182 (D.N.J., Mar. 12, 2007)

Prior History: In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96066 (D.N.J., Jan. 2, 2007)

Core Terms

patent, Plaintiffs', purchasers, indirect, preempted, argues, sham, cases, competitors, federal patent law, standing to bring, parties, antitrust, motion to dismiss, inequitable conduct, lack standing, patent holder, patent law, Defendants', state law, infringement, customers, Consolidated, antitrust claim, monopolization, marketplace, bad faith, cause of action, federal law, allegations

Counsel: [*1] For STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY, Special Master: STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY, LEAD ATTORNEY, BLANK, ROME, LLP, PRINCETON, NJ.

For HIP HEALTH PLAN OF FLORIDA, INC., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: DANIEL BERGER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER & MONTAGUE, PC, PHILADEPHIA, PA; LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: SHELLY L. FRIEDLAND, COHEN, MILSTEIN, HUSFLD & TOLL, P.L.L.C., NEW YORK, NY; THEODORE M. LIEVERMAN, SPECTOR, ROSEMAN & KODROFF, PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ALLYN ZISSEL LITE, LITE DEPALMA GREENBERG, LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: BARRY L. REFSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY, ARONCHICK, SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For AMY REICHERT, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, GREAT LAKES HEALTH PLAN, INC., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, JOSEPH J. MORGAN, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, CARL M. WALLACE, NORMA SEABROOK, ISRAEL REXACH, ELIAS HUSAMUDEEN, WILLIAM WASNICKI, GUY ANDERSON, ROBERT SEABROOK, STEVEN ROBINSON, On behalf of Correction officers benevolent association security benefits fund, [*2] on behalf of themselves and all other similarly situated, Consol Plaintiffs: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For JACQUELINE CUNDIFF, Consol Plaintiff: DAVID K. LIETZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, COALE, COOLEY, LIETZ & MCINERNY, ESQS., WASHINGTON, DC; FREDERICK P. FURTH, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, THE FURTH FIRM LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For ESTELLE TRAVERS, on Behalf of Herself and all Others Similarly Situated, Consol Plaintiff: GUIDO SAVERI, RICHARD ALEXANDER SAVERI, LEAD ATTORNEYS, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, SAVERI & SAVERI, INC., SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For MECHANICAL CONTRACTORS-UA LOCAL 119 WELFARE PLAN, by and through its Trustees, Danny Price, William Morrison, Phillip Holloway, J. Bradley Donaghey, Glen Reed Jr. and Stanley Small, IBEW-NECA LOCAL 505 HEALTH & WELFARE PLAN, by and through its Trustees, Donnie Adams, Terry N. Adams, Fred J. Moore, Charles S. Belk, Charles Freeman and Larry Smith, A.F. OF L.-A.G.C. BUILDING TRADES WELFARE PLAN, by and through its Trustees, Larry Fincher, Gordon Parmer, Charles Loftin, Gene Stokely, Jack Terry and Andy Joiner, Consol Plaintiffs: [*3] JOSEPH J. DEPALMA, LEAD ATTORNEY, LITE, DEPALMA, GREENBERG, LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

For ESTATE OF STANLEY NEMSER, Consol Plaintiff: ALLYN ZISSEL LITE, LEAD ATTORNEY, LITE DEPALMA GREENBERG, LLC, NEWARK, NJ; ANN D. WHITE, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, ANN D. WHITE LAW OFFICES, P.C., JENKINTOWN, PA.

For CONSUMERS FOR AFFORDABLE HEALTHCARE COALITION, Consol Plaintiff: STEVEN J. PFEFFERLE, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, TERHAAR ARCHIBALD PFEFFERLE & GRIEBEL, MINNEAPOLIS, MN.

For WALGREEN CO., Consol Plaintiff: DEBORAH S. CORBISHLEY, LEAD ATTORNEY, KENNY, NACHWALTER, SEYMOUR, ARNOLD, CRITCHLOW & SPECTOR, PA, MIAMI, FL.

ECKARD CORPORATION, THE KROGER CO., ALBERTSON'S INC., SAFEWAY, INC., HY-VEE, INC., Consol Plaintiffs, Pro se.

For NATALIE SUTIN, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: LIONEL Z GLANCY, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, Los Angeles, CA.

For ROSE LIPSCOMB, NEW YORK STATE-WIDE SENIOR ACTION COUNCIL, INC., MASSACHUSETTS SENIOR ACTION COUNCIL, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiffs: ALLYN ZISSEL LITE, LEAD ATTORNEY, LITE DEPALMA GREENBERG, LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

For [*4] GEORGE BURNS, Individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: ANDREW ROBERT JACOBS, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERMAN, SAUTER, RECORD & JARDIM, P.C., MORRISTOWN, NJ.

For MILDRED GROSSMAN, on her own behalf and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: C. OLIVER BURT, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, BURT & PUCILLO, PC, NORTHRIDGE CENTRE, WEST PALM BEACH, FL.

For LOUISIANA WHOLESALE DRUG CO. INC, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: PETER S. PEARLMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COHN, LIFLAND, PEARLMAN, HERRMANN & KNOPF, LLP, SADDLE BROOK, NJ; REBEKAH R. CONROY, WALDER HAYDEN & BROGAN, ROSELAND, NJ.

For UNITED FOOD AND COMMERCIAL WORKERS LOCAL 56 HEALTH & WELFARE DEPARTMENT, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, PATRICK J. LYNCH, Consol Plaintiffs: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ; THEODORE M. LIEVERMAN, SPECTOR, ROSEMAN & KODROFF, PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For FRANCES IRENE STEADMAN, Consol Plaintiff: FREDERICK T. KUYKENDALL, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, GARDNER, MIDDLEBROOKS, FLEMING, GIBBONS & KITTRELL, PC, [*5] MCADORY BUILDING, BIRMINGHAM, AL; JAMES H MCFERRIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, SOUTHEASTERN LEGAL GROUP, BIRMINGHAM, AL; S C MIDDLEBROOKS, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, GARDNER, MIDDLEBROOKS, FLEMING & GIBBONS, PC, MOBILE, AL.

For DAWN MAFFEI, Consol Plaintiff: MICHAEL G. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA.

For LEONARD BROWN, Consol Plaintiff: JENNIFER SHARON ABRAMS, JOSEPH J. TABACCO, JR., LEAD ATTORNEYS, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, BERMAN, DEVALERIO, PEASE & TABACCO, PC, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For ARKANSAS CARPENTERS HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, On its own behalf & on behalf of all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: GREG THOMPSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, PROVOST & UMPHREY, BEAUMONT, TX.

For MARY MARGARET PIETSCH, individually and on behalf of a class of persons similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: LYNN L. SARKO, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, KELLER & ROHRBACK, LLP, SEATTLE, WA; RON KILGARD, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, DALTON, GOTTO, SAMSON & KILGARD, PLC, PHOENIX, AZ.

For DONALD W. HANNU, on behalf [*6] of himself and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: NEIL A. MCEWEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, INVER GROVE HEIGHTS, MN.

For BETTY SAAD, Consol Plaintiff: DIANE A. NYGAARD, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, LEAWOOD, KS.

For EVELYN BARCZAK, ANTHONY DEBELLA, on behalf of himiself and others similiarly situated, Consol Plaintiffs: MICHAEL J. FLANNERY, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, CAREY & DANIS, ST. LOUIS, MO.

For AGATHA AGATHA "NIKKI&quo MCCUTCHON, Consol Plaintiff: THOMAS M. SOBOL, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, CAMBRIDGE, MA.

For RITE AID CORPORATION, Consol Plaintiff: BARRY L. REFSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY, ARONCHICK, SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA; JERRY L. TANENBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEY, SCHNADER HARRISON SEGAL & LEWIS LLP, CHERRY HILL, NJ; STEVE D. SHADOWEN, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA.

For COBALT CORP., Consol Plaintiff: CHARLES J. BARNHILL, JR., WILLIAM P. DIXON, LEAD ATTORNEYS, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, MINER, BARNHILL & GALLAND, ESQS., MADISON, WI; MARY C. NASH, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT [*7] ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, COBALT CORPORATION, MILWAUKEE, WI; RICHARD W. COHEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, LOWEY, DANNENBERG, BEMPORAD & SELINGER, ESQS., THE GATEWAY, WHITE PLAINS, NJ.

For CVS MERIDIAN, INC., Consol Plaintiff: BARRY L. REFSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY, ARONCHICK, SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA; STEVE D. SHADOWEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA.

For ROBERT MITCHELL, Consol Plaintiff: DAVID J. SHEA, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, MANTESE, MILLER & SHEA, PLLC, TROY, MI; KENNETH J. MCINTYRE, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, DICKINSON WRIGHT, ESQS., DETROIT, MI; ROBERT L. MICHELS, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, WINSTON & STRAWN LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

Judges: STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY, SPECIAL MASTER.

Opinion by: STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY

Opinion

SPECIAL MASTER'S REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS ON DEFENDANTS' SCHERING-PLOUGH CORPORATION, KEY PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., UPSHER-SMITH LABORATORIES, INC., WYETH AND ESI

LEDERLE APPLICATIONS TO THE SPECIAL MASTER TO DISMISS CERTAIN CLAIMS IN INDIRECT PURCHASERS' AMENDED CONSOLIDATED CLASS ACTION COMPLAINT

ORLOFSKY, SPECIAL MASTER

INTRODUCTION

This [*8] consolidated antitrust action has been transferred to the District of New Jersey by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1407. Pursuant to Rule 53 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure[1] and by consent of all parties in the above-captioned action, I have been appointed by order of this Court, dated April 12, 2006, to preside as a Special Master to review and decide all currently pending and future motions directed to Judge Joseph A. Greenaway, Jr, and Magistrate Judge Madeline Cox Arleo including, but not limited to discovery disputes, class certification and summary judgment (the "Appointment Order") (Docket No. 316). The Appointment Order provides that the decision of the Special Master on any matter before the Special Master will conclusively resolve that matter unless an appropriate objection is filed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(g).

This Report [*9] and Recommendation will decide Defendants' Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle Applications to the Special Master to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint (the "Partial Motion to Dismiss"). This Report and Recommendations is based upon the parties' written submissions in support of and in opposition to the Partial Motion to Dismiss and the oral argument presented by the parties at a January 24, 2007 hearing before me.

BACKGROUND

The factual background of this consolidated action and the underlying motions have been set forth in detail in Judge Greenaway's decision in this case, see In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F.Supp.2d 517 (D.N.J. 2004), and my Report and Recommendation on: (1) Defendants Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc. and Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc.'s Motion for Sanctions against Plaintiff Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; (2) Plaintiff Commonwealth of Pennsylvania's Cross-Motion to Dismiss; and (3) Motion of James Morgan to Intervene as Class Representative (Docket No. 328). Familiarity with that factual background is presumed [*10] and will not be repeated in this Report and Recommendation except where necessary to resolve this motion.

DEFENDANTS' APPLICATION TO DISMISS CERTAIN CLAIMS IN THE INDIRECT PURCHASER PLAINTIFFS' AMENDED CONSOLIDATED CLASS ACTION COMPLAINT

Pending before me are the Applications of Defendants, Schering-Plough Corporation ("Schering"), Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Key"), Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc. ("Upsher"), Wyeth and ESI Lederle ("ESI") (collectively, "Defendants"), to dismiss certain claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint (the "Partial Motion to Dismiss"). The relief sought from the Court is a determination that, inter

---

[1] (a) Appointment.

(1) Unless a statute provides otherwise, a court may appoint a master only to:

(A) perform duties consented to by the parties;

***

(C) address pretrial and post-trial matters that cannot be addressed effectively and timely by an available district judge or magistrate judge of the district.

alia, the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' (the "IP Plaintiffs") lack standing to bring the Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims contained in their Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint (the "Amended Complaint") and, therefore, those claims should be dismissed. Alternatively, Defendants seek a determination that the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims are preempted by Federal law and, therefore, cannot be considered by this Court.

At an earlier stage of this litigation, when the IP Plaintiffs moved [*11] to amend the original Complaint, the parties stipulated that the Defendants had reserved the right to raise the defense of "futility" with respect to any claims raised in the IP Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint. See Transcript of Oral Argument of January 24, 2007, at 4. For purposes of this Report and Recommendations (the "Report"), I shall treat Defendants' respective Applications as the Defendants' exercise of the reserved "futility" defense with respect to those claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint to which the respective Applications to Dismiss specifically apply.

I.LEGAL STANDARD GOVERNING MOTIONS TO DISMISS ANTITRUST CLAIMS

When considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a court is "required to accept as true all allegations in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn from them after construing them in a light most favorable to the non-movant." Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1261 (3d Cir. 1994) (citation omitted). However, a court need not accept a plaintiff's "bald assertions or legal conclusions." Morse v. Lower Merion School Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997). [*12] "The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." In re Burlington Coat Factory Securities Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1420 (3d Cir. 1997) (citation omitted). Thus, "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the Plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957).

However, summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot." Lum v. Bank of Am., 361 F.3d 217, 228 (3d Cir. 2004) (citing Poller v. Columbia Broad. Sys., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962)); see also *Brotech Corp. v. White Eagle Int'l Tech. Group, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11552, 2004 WL 1427136, at 3 (E.D. Pa. June 21, 2004) (citation omitted) ("The dismissal standard is higher in antitrust cases than generally"). Moreover, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has directed that "[courts] should be extremely liberal in construing antitrust complaints." See Lum, at 228 (quoting [*13] Knuth v. Erie-Crawford Dairy Co-op. Ass'n, 395 F.2d 420, 423 (3d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 913, 93 S. Ct. 966, 35 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1973)).

II.DISCUSSION

A.Schering and Key's Application to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Amended Complaint

On September 8, 2006, Schering-Plough Corporation and Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (collectively "Schering") submitted an application to the Special Master to dismiss certain claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint (the "Schering Motion"). In support of the Schering Motion, Schering simultaneously filed a memorandum in support of the Schering Motion (the "Schering Opening Brief").

In its opening brief, Schering notes that the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' ("IP Plaintiffs" or "Plaintiffs")[2] original complaint challenged the legitimacy of the Schering-Upsher and Schering-ESI Lederle settlement agreements, but did not claim that the Schering patent was invalid. By comparison, Schering argues that the Amended Complaint contains "an entirely new cause of action" ("Count III") that does not depend on the legality of the settlement agreements, rather it states a Walker Process monopolization claim exclusively against Schering, Schering contends that [*14] Count III alleges that the Schering patent was obtained by fraud on the Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") or inequitable conduct, and maintained through sham litigation. (Schering Op, Br. at 1.)[3] Finally, Schering notes that this claim does not rely upon the settlement agreements, but seeks damages from a time period long before the settlements were entered into. Thus, Schering argues that the Plaintiffs essentially seek the right to bring a Walker Process claim and litigate the validity of Schering's patent notwithstanding the lawfulness of the settlement agreements. Schering argues that such relief is not permitted under existing law. (Id. at 2.)

First, Schering argues that Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims should be dismissed because Plaintiffs lack standing to bring them. Instead, Schering argues that only competitors have standing to bring such claims. (Schering Op. Br. at 2.) In particular, Schering contends that it is "settled patent law" that only parties who have been threatened with a patent infringement suit have standing to bring an action pursuant to Walker Process Equip. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965) ("Walker Process"). (Id. at 6.) Moreover, Schering asserts that two cases from the District Court for the District of New Jersey have confirmed this principle of law, see, In re Remeron Antitrust Litig., 335 F.Supp.2d 522 (D.N.J. 2004) ("Remeron") and Carrot Components Corp. v. Thomas & Betts Corp., 229 U.S.P.Q. 61 (D.N.J. 1986) ("Carrot Components"). (Id.) In addition, Schering cites to a number of additional cases in support of its argument that only competitors have standing to bring Walker Process claims. Further, Schering argues that the limitations placed on standing are based on "sound policy considerations" and notes that even the Walker Process [*16] court "expressed concern about subjecting patent holders to a proliferation of suits challenging the validity of their patents." (Id. at 7.) Schering adds that if parties such as the Indirect Purchasers are given standing, it would essentially precipitate a situation where consumers would have standing to challenge the validity of the patents. Schering argues that such a situation would "undermine settled principles of patent law" which provide that a patent holder may only be subject to Walker Process suits by those against whom the patent holder takes action. Finally, Schering argues that it is "particularly inappropriate" to permit the Indirect Purchasers to relitigate the patent validity issues that were settled in the underlying action. (Id. at 8.)

Second, Schering argues that the Plaintiffs' monopolization claims, although brought under state law, are preempted by federal patent law. (Schering Op. Br. at 2.) Specifically, Schering argues that because Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims are based on, inter alia, Schering's conduct before the PTO, the claims are preempted by federal patent law. (Schering Op. Br. at 9.) Schering relies, in particular, on Semiconductor Energy Lab. Co., Ltd. v. Samsung Electronics, Co., Ltd., 204 F.3d 1368 (Fed. Cir. 2000) [*17] ("Semiconductor Energy") in support of its preemption argument. Schering argues that the Semiconductor Energy court rejected that plaintiff's argument that it had avoided preemption by alleging a claim that required proof of elements "beyond bad faith misconduct before the PTO." (Id. at 10.) Schering argues that the Semiconductor Energy court ultimately dismissed that plaintiff's state law claim precisely because it had failed to allege more than the elements found in the patent law cause of action for inequitable conduct. Based on this precedent, Schering contends that in In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 363 F.Supp.2d 514 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) ("Cipro"), the Court had similarly dismissed inequitable conduct and sham litigation claims brought under state antitrust and consumer protection law. (Id. at 10.) Schering argues that in Cipro, the court dismissed indirect purchaser's Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims because the success of those claims was dependent on proving that the patent holder had withheld or misrepresented information before the PTO and, therefore, the court determined that the claims rested entirely on patent law and,

---

[2] This reference to the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs as "Plaintiffs" is limited to the discussion contained in this section of the Report. Subsequent references to "Plaintiffs," that is, as contained in the "Analysis" section of this Report, is intended to refer to the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs and the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs collectively.

[3] References to Schering's Memorandum in Support of its Application to the Special Master to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint shall [*15] be cited as "Schering Op, Br. at __."

thus, were preempted. (Id. at 10-11.) [*18] Schering urges that the IP Plaintiffs' sham litigation claims fail for the same reasons. Schering contends that these claims in this case are wholly dependent on proof of Schering's enforcement of a patent that was allegedly procured by fraud on the PTO and, therefore, are simply an extension of Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims. (Id. at 11.) Schering notes that in Cipro, the court held that the indirect purchaser's sham litigation claims were preempted because federal patent law controls conduct before the PTO, conduct upon which the instant claims are similarly based. According to Schering, the fact that the IP Plaintiffs claim that Schering's patent suits were "objectively" baseless does not change this result. (Schering Op. Br. at 12.) Finally, Schering asserts that the IP Plaintiffs admit that their sham litigation claims are based on the merits of Schering's patent and contend that this fact further supports the conclusion that these claims are preempted under federal patent law (Id.)

As a consequence, Schering argues that Count III of the Amended Complaint, and any claims in Counts I, II and IV that purport to state Walker Process [*19] or sham litigation claims should be dismissed.[4]

B.Wyeth and ESI Lederle's Application to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Amended Complaint

Contemporaneous with Schering's submission of the Schering Motion, Wyeth and ESI Lederle (collectively "ESI") submitted an application to the Special Master to dismiss portions of the Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint filed by the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs (the "ESI Motion"). In the memorandum accompanying ESI's motion, ESI similarly [*20] contends that the IP Plaintiffs assert a Walker Process monopolization claim in Count III of the Amended Complaint based on Schering's alleged fraud upon the PTO. (ESI Op. Br. at 1.)[5] However, ESI further argues that the IP Plaintiffs also incorporate Walker Process claims into Count II of the Amended Complaint which seeks restitution, disgorgement, constructive trust, and unjust enrichment under state law and Count IV which seeks damages for restraint of trade under state law. (Id.) As a result, ESI moves for dismissal of the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims in Count III of the Amended Complaint and to the extent they appear in other counts of the Amended Complaint. (ESI Op. Br. at 1.)

First, ESI argues that Count III and all other Walker Process claims should be dismissed for lack of standing. ESI contends that federal court decisions from the District of New Jersey and other federal courts provide that Walker Process claims are [*21] reserved to parties who are competitors of a patent holder, or parties against whom a patent holder has tried to enforce its patent. By comparison, ESI notes that the IP Plaintiffs are simply purchasers of K-Dur and, further, do not allege that Schering enforced or threatened to enforce its patent against them. Therefore, ESI argues that the IP Plaintiffs lack standing to bring Walker Process claims. (Id. at 2.) Like Schering, ESI cites Remeron and Carrot Components as decisions from the District of New Jersey which support the argument that a party lacks standing to bring a Walker Process claim unless that patent holder has enforced or threatened to enforce their patent against that party. (Id. at 8.) ESI also cites a number of cases, including Remeron and Cipro, for the premise that standing to allege a Walker Process claim can only be exercised by a patent holder's competitors. (Id. at 9.) In addition, ESI argues that the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims should be dismissed because the IP Plaintiffs have not alleged and cannot allege that they were competitors of Schering and, further, that they do not allege that Schering enforced or threatened to enforce the patent for K-Dur [*22] against them. (Id. at 13.) Accordingly, ESI contends that the claims in this case suffer from the same defects as those claims brought in the Remeron case. Further, ESI adds that the IP Plaintiffs' "more remote status" as indirect purchasers of K-Dur

---

[4] Schering has also objected to Count III of the Indirect Purchasers Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint on the basis that no states recognize Walker Process claims under state law, that the instant Walker Process claims are barred by the applicable statutes of limitation and that the IP Plaintiffs do not allege injury prior to the date that generic entry occurred. I have given due consideration to these additional arguments. However, as discussed in more detail below, because I have resolved the instant motions to dismiss based on the litigants' respective standing and preemption arguments, I find that it is unnecessary to address the substance of these remaining arguments for purposes of this Report and Recommendations.

[5] References to Wyeth and ESI Lederle's Memorandum in Support of their Application to Special Master to Dismiss Portions of the Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint on behalf of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs shall be cited as "ESI Op. Br. at __."

weakens any argument that they have standing to bring a Walker Process claim. (Id.) ESI also challenges the decision of the District Court of the District of Columbia in Molecular Diagnostics Labs. v. Hoffman LaRoche, Inc., 402 F.Supp.2d 276 (D.D.C. 2005) ("Molecular Diagnostics") claiming that the court's conclusion that direct purchasers have standing to bring Walker Process claims is an "anomaly" among courts that have considered the issue and argues that, in any event, the decision does not provide support for the IP Purchasers' assertion of their claims. (ESI Op. Br. at 14.) Finally, ESI contends that the Walker Process claims asserted against ESI are particularly problematic because the Amended Complaint fails to allege that ESI did anything to help obtain the Schering patent and notes that ESI was, in fact, a defendant in a patent infringement action brought by Schering against ESI. ESI argues that the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process [*23] claim "turns standing on its head" because not only do the IP Plaintiffs lack standing to bring such a claim, but they purport to bring this action against one of the few entities that might actually have standing to bring such a claim. Therefore, ESI reiterates that the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process claim should be dismissed for lack of standing. (Id. at 15.)

Second, ESI argues that, even if the IP Plaintiffs have standing, their Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims should be dismissed because they are based on alleged misconduct before the PTO and, therefore, are preempted by federal patent law. (Id.) In support of its preemption argument, ESI relies upon several cases, including Cipro, Semiconductor Energy and Abbott Labs. v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346 (Fed. Cir. 1991), in each of which, ESI notes, the courts dismissed state law causes of action that were based on misconduct before the PTO. (Id. at 16.) Similarly, ESI argues that because the IP Plaintiffs' state law Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims are based "exclusively" on Schering's alleged fraudulent activity before the PTO, they are preempted by federal patent law and should be dismissed. (Id. at 17-18.) ESI further [*24] argues that to allow these claims to go forward would constitute "an inappropriate collateral intrusion on the regulatory procedures of the PTO" and a usurpation of Congressional authority that was reserved to federal patent law. (Wyeth Op. Br. at 18.)

Therefore, ESI argues that the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims should be dismissed.[6]

C. Upsher's Application to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Amended Complaint

Like Schering and ESI, Upsher has also made an application to dismiss certain claims in the IP Plaintiffs' [*25] Amended Complaint (the "Upsher Motion"). In support of the Upsher Motion, Upsher asserts that under Count III the Amended Complaint, the IP Plaintiffs assert a wholly new cause of action alleging Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims, but argues that these claims are alleged against Schering only. (Upsher Op. Br. at 1.)[7] Upsher further argues that because the IP Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts reflecting that Upsher is liable for Schering's conduct, as alleged in Count III, Upsher cannot be held liable for any damages arising from that count of the Amended Complaint. (Id. at 1-2.) Accordingly, Upsher moves to dismiss Count III of the Amended Complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Id. at 2.)

D. Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Response in Opposition to the Applications

[6] ESI also argues that the IP Plaintiffs' claims for damages beginning in 1989 should be dismissed and that the claims should be limited to a period beginning in March 2002. ESI also incorporated certain sections of Schering and Upsher's respective memoranda in support of their motions to dismiss. I have given due consideration to these additional arguments, However, as discussed in more detail below, because I have resolved the instant motions to dismiss based on the litigants' respective standing and preemption arguments, I find that it is unnecessary to address the substance of these remaining arguments for purposes of this Report and Recommendations.

[7] References to the opening brief in support of Upsher-Smith's Application to the Special Master to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint shall be cited as "Upsher Op. Br. at __."

On October 23, 2006, the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("IP Plaintiffs" or "Plaintiffs")[8] filed a memorandum of law in opposition to the respective [*26] Defendants'[9] motions to dismiss (the "IP Plaintiffs Answering Brief"). The IP Plaintiffs argue, inter alia, that they have standing to assert their monopolization claims (see IP Plfs, Ans. Br. at 2)[10] and that those claims are not preempted by patent law. (Id. at 6.)

First, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants' standing argument is focused exclusively on the Walker Process component of their monopolization claim, and not the Orange Book and "sham litigation" allegations. [*27] (Id. at 1-2.) With respect to Walker Process, the Plaintiffs argue that the "gist" of the case was that "proof that the patent holder obtained the patent through knowing and willful misrepresentation of facts to the PTO 'would be sufficient to strip [the holder] of its exemption from the antitrust laws.'" (Id. at 3 (citing Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 176).) Plaintiffs argue that in this case, their goal is to strip Defendants of Noerr-Pennington antitrust immunity, rather than to "annul" the patent in question. (Id.) Plaintiffs claim that, consistent with Walker Process, they have standing to bring an antitrust action notwithstanding the fact that the underlying facts in support of the claim include fraudulent procurement of a patent. (Id. at 4.) Plaintiffs add that the rationale articulated by the court in Molecular Diagnostics reflects why the Defendants' standing arguments are incorrect. Plaintiffs further note that Defendants' reliance on Remeron in support of their standing argument is misplaced. Plaintiffs argue that the court's rationale for the decision in Remeron decision is "sparse" and note further that the decision was even criticized by the court in Molecular Diagnostics. [*28] (Id. at 4-5.) Therefore, Plaintiffs argue that if their fraud on the PTO or sham litigation claims are proven, then the Defendants antitrust immunity will be "stripped away" and the Indirect Purchasers will be able to pursue their antitrust claims of monopolization. (Id. at 6.)

Second, Plaintiffs argue that their claims are not preempted by federal patent law. Plaintiffs assert that when monopolization claims are "properly viewed," they do not conflict with federal patent law, and are not preempted. (IP Plfs. Ans. Br. at 6.) Plaintiffs argue, based on Supreme Court precedent that state antitrust law "is a uniquely inappropriate context in which to find preemption by federal law." (Id.) Instead, Plaintiffs argue that their monopolization claims would only be preempted if they posed an obstacle to execution of federal patent law. (Id.) Further, Plaintiffs argue that the case of Dow Chem. Co. v. Exxon Corp., 139 F.3d 1470 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("Dow") stands for the principle that "even if a court is required to adjudicate a question of federal patent law in connection with resolving a state law claim, the patent laws will not preempt the state-law claim if the plaintiff must also prove additional [*29] elements not found in a federal patent law cause of action." (Id. at 7-8.) Plaintiffs argue that unlike the cases cited by the Defendants, their claims are actually state law antitrust claims, not patent claims masquerading in "state law garb." Plaintiffs note that while their claims do require consideration of conduct before the PTO, they also require proof of elements specific to antitrust claims, which, in effect, take these claims out of the realm of claims that would otherwise be preempted by federal patent law. (Id. at 8.) In addition, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants' preemption argument rests solely on the decision in Cipro. However, Plaintiffs argue that the Cipro decision is unpersuasive for the reasons articulated by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Zenith Elect. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340, 1355 (Fed. Cir. 1999) ("Exzec"), in which the court stated that "'asserting [a] patent in the marketplace allegedly having known that the patent was unenforceable due to inequitable conduct' is a sufficient species of 'bad faith marketplace conduct' to defeat a preemption defense." (Id. at 9.) Thus, Plaintiffs argue that the Cipro Court's attempt to distinguish Dow on [*30] the basis that the patent holder threatened plaintiff's customers, fails because that activity was "no more wrongful" than the prosecution of the sham litigation that occurred in this case. (IP Plfs. Ans. Br. at 10.) Furthermore, Plaintiffs argue that Walker Process provides that the mere maintenance of a fraudulently procured patent would be sufficient "marketplace conduct" to give rise to

---

[8] This instant reference to the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs as "Plaintiffs" is limited to the discussion contained in this section of the Report. Subsequent references to "Plaintiffs," that is, as contained in the "Analysis" section of this Report, is intended to refer to the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs and the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs collectively.

[9] The term "Defendants" as used here is consistent with the IP Plaintiffs' use of that term in their Reply Brief, which is understood to apply to all of the defendants in this action (i.e., Schering, Key, Upsher, Wyeth and ESI Lederle).

[10] References to the Indirect Purchasers' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss shall be cited as "IP Plfs. Ans. Br. at __."

antitrust liability and, therefore, their antitrust claims, as pled, would not be preempted by federal patent law. (Id. at 10-11.)

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that state law consistently recognizes monopolization claims similar to those asserted in this case. In particular, Plaintiffs observe that state antitrust laws, which are patterned after federal antitrust laws, allow monopolization claims, a fact which Defendants do not dispute. (Id. at 11-12.) Thus, Plaintiffs contend that there is no reason to treat these monopolization claims differently because they rely upon Walker Process allegations, since such state law claims have no more deleterious public policy impact than similarly situated federal claims.

In light of the foregoing, the IP Plaintiffs argue that the Defendants' respective motions [*31] to dismiss should be denied.[11] (Id. at 29.)

E.Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Response in Opposition to the Applications

Contemporaneous with the submission of the IP Plaintiffs' Reply Brief, the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs (the "DP Plaintiffs") similarly filed a memorandum opposing the motions to dismiss Count III of the IP Plaintiffs Amended Complaint (the "DP Plaintiffs' Answering Brief"). The DP Plaintiffs challenge the Defendants' collective reasoning and their reliance [*32] upon Remeron as a basis to dismiss the IP Plaintiffs' claims. (DP Plfs. Ans. Br. at 2.)[12] Specifically, the DP Plaintiffs argued that the Remeron decision had been criticized for having failed to provide sufficient justification for its result. By comparison, the DP Plaintiffs argued that other decisions had "affirm[ed] an overcharged purchaser's standing to assert such claims" and cited two cases in support of this argument. (Id. at 3.) As a consequence, the DP Plaintiffs argued that the respective applications to dismiss should be denied, (Id. at 4.)

F.Schering's Reply in Support of the Application to Dismiss

In further support of its application to dismiss certain claims in the IP Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, Schering reasserts the arguments made in its Opening Brief.

First, Schering contends that the IP Plaintiffs concede that under federal patent law "they lack standing to force [*33] a patent holder to litigate the validity of his patent." Further, Schering argues that under federal antitrust law, the IP Plaintiffs also lack standing to sue an "alleged monopolist" for damages. (Schering Reply Br. at 1.)[13] Schering contends that notwithstanding the IP Plaintiffs' claim that under state law they have standing to assert a Walker Process monopolization claim, prevailing case law contradicts this argument and cites Remeron, Cipro and In re DDA VP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-CV-2237 (S.D.N.Y.) ("DDAVP") in support of the argument that purchasers of a patented product simply do not have standing to bring a Walker Process monopolization claim. (Id. at 2.) In addition, Schering argues that Molecular Diagnostics, a case heavily relied upon by the Plaintiffs, cannot overcome this contrary precedent. Schering argues that not only does Molecular Diagnostics represent a minority view on the issue, but that it arguably draws a distinction between direct and indirect purchasers and [11] Like Schering and ESI, the Indirect Purchasers have made additional arguments in opposition to the motions to dismiss. In particular, they have argued that the subject claims are not time barred, that the length of the damages period has no bearing on the motions to dismiss and that ESI's argument that it cannot be liable for pre-joinder injuries is incorrect. I have given due consideration to these additional arguments. However, as discussed in more detail below, because I have resolved the instant motions to dismiss based on the litigants' respective standing and preemption arguments, I find that it is unnecessary to address the substance of these remaining arguments for purposes of this Report and Recommendations.

[12] References to the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant Schering-Plough, Wyeth and ESI Lederle's Applications to Special Master to Dismiss Portions of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint shall be cited as "DP Plfs. Ans. Br. at __."

[13] References to Schering's Reply Memorandum in Support of its Application to the Special Master to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint shall be cited as "Schering Reply Br. at __."

"strongly impl[ies]" that indirect purchasers of a patented product would lack standing. (Schering Reply Br. at 3.) Furthermore, Schering argues that a significant number of cases limit [*34] "competitor standing" under Walker Process to entities that have actually been sued for patent infringement or "face a serious threat of suit for infringement" and counsel that Walker Process standing should be "narrowly construed." (Id.) Finally, Schering argues that the IP Plaintiffs' standing argument, if adopted, would "radically rewrite well-established patent law." (Id. at 4.) Schering urges that, under the Plaintiffs' theory, any patent could be the target of numerous challenges by consumers and, further, any actual or potential competitor of a patent holder, who otherwise was not under threat of suit, could buy the patented product and bring a consumer Walker Process claim.

Second, Schering emphasizes that state law causes of action that are based on fraud or inequitable conduct before the PTO are preempted by federal patent law. (Id.) Based on this precedent, Schering again argues that the IP Plaintiffs' monopolization claim is preempted [*35] because the only wrongful conduct alleged is conduct before the PTO. Furthermore, with respect to the IP Plaintiffs' contention that their claims are not preempted because they require elements of proof beyond those required to substantiate patent invalidity, Schering argues that all of the Federal Circuit's preemption cases involve state law claims which contain elements beyond those necessary to invalidate a patent. Citing Semiconductor Energy, Schering notes that the Federal Circuit held that the plaintiff's RICO claim was preempted because the wrongful conduct alleged in that matter related to the patent holders' efforts to obtain the patent and targeting the plaintiff for a patent infringement suit. (Id. at 6.) Thus, Schering argues that the issue of preemption hinges on the nature of the wrongful conduct alleged, noting that if the conduct alleged is conduct before the PTO or related to the initiation of litigation against an alleged infringer, the claim will be preempted, whereas if the claim is also predicated on marketplace conduct, then the claim might not be preempted. (Schering Reply Br. at 6.) Schering's position is that the resolution of this motion is governed by Semiconductor [*36] Energy because here, as in Semiconductor Energy, the only conduct alleged by the IP Plaintiffs in the Amended Complaint is conduct before the PTO and the filing of infringement suits, not "marketplace conduct." Thus, Schering argues that because the IP Plaintiffs have failed to allege any "bad faith misconduct in the marketplace," Plaintiffs' claims challenging Schering's conduct before the PTO and Schering's alleged filing of "sham litigation" are preempted and should be dismissed. (Id. at 7.) Finally, Schering argues that, in order to preserve the "careful balance" in patent law between the rights of patent holders and the rights of challengers, the group of prospective challengers has been intentionally restricted to direct competitors. Schering argues that to open the door to competitors would markedly change patent law and patent policy, a result that existing case law counsels against. (Id. at 7-8.) Thus, Schering requests that the Court grant its motion to dismiss.[14]

G.ESI's Reply in Support of the Application to Dismiss

ESI has also submitted a reply brief in support of its application to dismiss portions of the Amended Complaint. ESI reiterates that the Amended Complaint still does not allege that ESI was involved, in any way, in obtaining the Schering patent, (ESI's Reply Br. at 1.)[15] Having reviewed the IP Plaintiffs' Answering Brief, ESI argues that the IP Plaintiffs have conceded that ESI and Upsher are not defendants to Count III of the Amended Complaint. ESI notes that Upsher's Opening Brief asserts that Count III asserts Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims against Schering only and that the IP Plaintiffs made no effort to oppose or even respond to Upsher's motion in this regard. Thus, ESI argues that the IP Plaintiffs have apparently conceded that Count III of the Amended Complaint raises claims against Schering alone and, as such, the IP Plaintiffs are barred from seeking recovery from ESI under Count III of the Amended Complaint. (ESI's Reply Br. at 1.)

---

[14] As noted above, Schering has sought dismissal of these claims on grounds not discussed in the above summary. However, because I have resolved the pending motions to dismiss based on the litigants' respective standing [*37] and preemption arguments, I find that it is unnecessary to address the substance of these remaining arguments for purposes of this Report and Recommendations.

[15] References to Wyeth's [*38] and ESI Lederle's Reply Brief in Support of their Application to the Special Master to Dismiss Portions of the Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint on behalf of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs shall be cited as "Schering Reply Br. at __."

Next, ESI argues that the Walker Process claim contained in Count III of the Amended Complaint and any other allegations of the Amended Complaint that purport to independently allege or incorporate a Walker Process claim should be dismissed for lack of standing. To this end, ESI reiterates that federal courts in New Jersey and elsewhere have held that unless a patent holder has enforced or threatened to enforce its patent against a party, that party does not have standing to pursue a Walker Process claim. ESI cites Remeron and Carrot Components in support of its argument on this point. Further, ESI notes that Plaintiffs' primary argument in response to this case law is simply that these cases have been wrongly decided. In response, ESI cites to a recent decision in the DDAVP case and argues that the DDAVP decision strongly contradicts Plaintiffs' assertion that these other cases were wrongly decided. ESI also challenges the IP Plaintiffs' assertion [*39] that Defendants have tried to mischaracterize Plaintiffs' claims as "arcane patent law claims." (Id. at 3-4.) Rather, ESI concedes that the IP Plaintiffs' claims are, in fact, antitrust claims, but argues that indirect purchasers simply do not have standing to pursue antitrust claims based on Walker Process. In addition, ESI argues that Plaintiffs are wrong in asserting that courts that have denied standing in Walker Process cases have applied some unique standing rule. Rather, ESI contends that these courts have simply applied "general antitrust standing principles" in determining that only parties against whom a patent has been enforced have standing to bring Walker Process claims. (ESI's Reply Br. at 4.) ESI also notes that the IP Plaintiffs "misleadingly argue" that "purchasers" have standing to pursue Walker Process claims, but argue that the IP Plaintiffs do not cite a single case which reflects that indirect purchasers have standing to pursue Walker Process claims. (Id. at 5.) Further, ESI notes that the one case upon which Plaintiffs base their standing claims — Molecular Diagnostics — only ruled that direct purchasers had standing to bring a Walker Process claim, but did not [*40] articulate a general rule applicable to "purchasers." (Id.) Thus, Plaintiffs argue that Count III of the Amended Complaint should be dismissed for lack of standing. (Id. at 7.)

Finally, ESI argues that the Walker Process claim in Count III and the related allegations in Counts II and IV should be dismissed because they are preempted by federal patent law. ESI contends, however, that the IP Plaintiffs misrepresent ESI's position with respect to preemption. Instead, ESI argues that, pursuant to a Walker Process claim, the only theory upon which damages could be recoverable for a period dating back to 1989 is based upon misconduct before the PTO. Under these circumstances, ESI argues that Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims are preempted. In addition, ESI notes that it is not seeking dismissal of all of the IP Plaintiffs' claims that implicate issues of patent law, rather it is seeking dismissal of those claims dating back to the 1989 time period, claims which ESI contends necessarily rely upon Schering's conduct before the PTO. Therefore, ESI requests that the Court dismiss all Walker Process claims asserted by the IP Plaintiffs against ESI.[16]

II.Upsher's Reply in Support of the Application to Dismiss

In response to the Plaintiffs' support for Count III of the IP Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, Upsher reiterated certain points made in its Opening Brief. In addition, Upsher noted that neither the IP Plaintiffs, nor the DP Plaintiffs have raised any opposition to the Upsher Motion, and that neither set of plaintiffs have asserted that Upsher could be held liable for any Walker Process or "sham litigation" claims lodged against Schering. (Upsher Reply Br. at 2.)[17] Thus, Upsher argued that it is appropriate to dismiss Count III of the Amended Complaint to the extent that it relates to, or is intended to relate to Upsher. (Id.)

I.Analysis

---

[16] Like Schering, ESI has also sought dismissal [*41] of these claims on grounds not discussed in the above summary. However, because I have resolved the instant motions to dismiss based on the litigants' respective standing and preemption arguments, I find that it is unnecessary to address the substance of these remaining arguments for purposes of this Report and Recommendations.

[17] References to Upsher-Smith's Reply in Support of its Application to the Special Master to Dismiss Certain Claims in the Indirect Purchasers' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint [*42] shall be cited as "Upsher Op. Br. at __."

The Defendants[18] have moved to dismiss certain claims contained in the IP Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. Motions to dismiss are governed by Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Although neither the Defendants, nor the IP Plaintiffs or the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs (the "DP Plaintiffs") (collectively "Plaintiffs") have specifically articulated a standard of review on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, it is well settled that the standard of review articulated on page 4 of this Report and Recommendation governs these motions to dismiss.

The Defendants and the Plaintiffs agree that this matter is fundamentally governed by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Machinery and Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). However, the parties disagree as to how Walker Process is to be construed and applied to the claims that are the subject of the Motions to Dismiss. [*43] Therefore, an analysis of the prevailing case law for each of the "futility" defenses raised by the Defendants in the respective Motions to Dismiss is in order.

i.Standing

Defendants claim that under Walker Process and other prevailing case law, the IP Plaintiffs lack standing to bring the Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims raised in Count III of the Amended Complaint. (See Schering Op. Br. at 5-8; ESI Op. Br. at 8-12; Upsher Op. Br. at 1-2.) In contrast, the Plaintiffs argue that, as consumers of K-Dur, the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have been unduly affected by Schering's fraudulent and/or "inequitable conduct" before the PTO, Schering's "sham litigation" actions against Upsher and ESI, and the resulting settlement agreements entered into by the Defendants and, as such, have standing to bring these claims against the Defendants. (See IP Plfs. Ans. Br. at 1-6; DP Plfs. Ans. Br. at 1-4.)

a.Walker Process

In Walker Process, respondent brought a patent infringement action claiming that defendant had infringed respondent's patent for a process used in aeration equipment for sewage treatment systems. 382 U.S. at 173. In turn, petitioner counterclaimed for a declaratory judgment [*44] on the ground that the patent was procured by fraud on the Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") and was, therefore, invalid. Id. at 174. Further, petitioner argued that if respondent's patent was procured by fraud on the PTO and then was consciously used to exclude petitioner from the marketplace, it would constitute a prima facie violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Id. at 175.

The Supreme Court found, initially, that "a person sued for infringement may challenge the validity of [a] patent on various grounds, including fraudulent procurement." Id. at 176. The Court went on to note that a party need not actually be sued in the first instance, rather the validity of a patent may be challenged under the Declaratory Judgment Act. Id. In addition, the Court added that, "we have recognized that an injured party may attack the misuse of patent rights." Id. (emphasis added). Finally, the Court concluded that actual proof that respondent "knowingly and willfully misrepresented" facts to the PTO would be sufficient to remove respondent's exemption from the antitrust laws, see id. at 177, and subject respondent to a claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Ultimately, Walker [*45] Process stands, in relevant part, for the principle that a party other than the United States may sue "to cancel or annul a patent." Id. at 175. While Walker Process does not define the precise scope of the class of "injured part[ies]" who "may attack the misuse of patent rights," the facts of the case certainly reflect that direct competitors — i. e., parties against whom "threats of suit" for infringement may be raised and/or an action for patent infringement may be brought — are legally cognizable claimants.

b.District of New Jersey decisions

[18] The use of the term "Defendants" in this section of this Report refers to all of the named defendants in this action (i.e., Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle).

i.Carrot Components

Since Walker Process was decided, numerous courts have examined the issue of which "injured parties" have standing to bring a Walker Process claim. However, there are few directly applicable cases that have been decided in the District of New Jersey. In 1986, the District Court for the District of New Jersey decided Carrot Components Corp. v. Thomas & Betts Corp., 229 U.S.P.Q. 61 (D.N.J. 1986) ("Carrot Components"). In Carrot Components, plaintiff sought a declaration of invalidity on two patents held by the defendant or a declaration of non-infringement and for damages related to defendant's monopolistic business practices. [*46] Defendant, in turn, moved to dismiss the complaint.

During the course of the litigation the parties agreed that in order to seek declaratory relief in the context of a patent related antitrust action, a plaintiff must demonstrate both "a reasonable apprehension that it will face an infringement suit if it commences or continues the activity in question" and that it has "actually produced the accused device or [is] actually prepared to produce such a device." Carrot Components, 229 U.S.P.Q. at 63. The court determined that plaintiff could not support its claims for relief. First, with respect to the declaratory judgment claim, the court found, inter alia, that as a distributor of the allegedly infringing product, plaintiff "[had] not demonstrated the imminence of conflict with the defendant," see id. at 64, and, thus, could not meet the jurisdictional prerequisites for a declaratory judgment action. Second, with respect to plaintiff's monopolization claim, the court found, inter alia, that the complaint was deficient in that plaintiff had failed to demonstrate that defendant "[had] wielded exclusionary power through the use of his patent in a relevant market, to the detriment of the [*47] plaintiff." Id. (emphasis in original). Ultimately, the court found that plaintiff lacked standing to sue based on the conclusion that "plaintiff must at least be able to allege facts that indicate that the defendant has enforced, or has sought to enforce, or has threatened to enforce its fraudulently obtained patent against the plaintiff itself." Carrot Components, at 64 (citing Indium Corp. of Am. v. Semi-Alloys, Inc., 566 F. Supp. 1344, 1352-53 (N.D.N.Y. 1983)).

Thus, Carrot Components' basic contribution to the issue of Walker Process standing is the conclusion that, with respect to declaratory judgment claims, only parties that have been directly threatened with suit or who can demonstrate that they reasonably anticipate a patent infringement suit or some effort by the patent holder to enforce the subject patent against them will have standing to bring such a claim for relief.

ii.Remeron

Eighteen years later, the District Court revisited the issue of Walker Process standing in the context of a patent litigation in In re Remeron Antitrust Litig., 335 F.Supp.2d 522 (D.N.J. 2004) ("Remeron"). In Remeron, a multi-district litigation, the plaintiffs, each a direct purchaser of the drug [*48] mirtazapine, filed separate actions against the defendants alleging "'an overall scheme' to monopolize the relevant market" for the drug. Remeron, at 526. Among other things, plaintiffs alleged that defendant Organon had obtained the subject patent through fraud on the PTO and brought Walker Process claims pursuant to Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Defendants moved to dismiss. The Remeron court acknowledged that fraudulent procurement of a patent or enforcement of a patent obtained by fraud could form the basis of a claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act if the other elements of the claim were present. However, the court concluded that the plaintiffs, as direct purchasers of mirtazapine, did not have standing to bring a Walker Process claim. In support of this conclusion, the court noted that: (1) plaintiffs had never had the patent enforced against them; (2) were not threatened with enforcement; and (3) were not in a position to manufacture a competing version of the drug. Remeron, at 529.

The Remeron court reached this conclusion based, in part, on its acceptance of the legal principles emanating from Carrot Components. In fact, the court found that "[a] plaintiff does not have standing [*49] to assert a Walker Process claim unless '[the] defendant had sought to enforce the patent against the plaintiff, or that plaintiff had some reasonable basis for fearing such attempted enforcement.'" Remeron, 335 F.Supp.2d at 529. The court went on to observe that "Walker Process and its progeny involve antitrust counterclaimants who where potential or actual competitors in patent infringement suits." Id. Relying on this precedent, the court concluded that because plaintiffs, as direct purchasers of mirtazapine, did not produce the drug nor were prepared to do so, and were not party to the initial patent infringement suits, they lacked standing to bring a Walker Process fraud claim.[19] Id.

Like Carrot Components, Remeron stands for the proposition that only a party that has had a patent enforced against it, or has been threatened with suit, has standing to bring a Walker Process or "sham litigation" claim. Moreover, the Carrot Components and Remeron decisions certainly suggest that parties who are not actually or prepared to be direct competitors of parties holding a patented product lack [*50] standing to bring such claims. Thus, the conclusion to be drawn from Carrot Components and Remeron is that direct and indirect purchasers of a patented product simply lack standing to bring Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims.

c.Other federal decisions

A number of federal cases outside the District of New Jersey have analyzed Walker Process and its progeny in an attempt to ascertain and/or define the parameters of standing for prospective Walker Process claimants. The results of these cases, while mixed, favor limiting the number of potential Walker Process claimants. I now turn to an examination of those cases.

i.DDAVP

The issue of Walker Process standing was most recently addressed in In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-Civ.-2237 (CLB) (S.D.N.Y.) ("DDAVP"). In DDAVP, the plaintiffs, direct and indirect purchasers of the drug desmopressin acetate ("DDAVP"), filed separate class actions alleging violations of federal and state antitrust law and charging that defendants had unlawfully maintained a monopoly over the market for desmopressin acetate by, inter alia, allegedly procuring the applicable patent by fraud or inequitable conduct before the PTO and "instituting [*51] and prosecuting" a "sham litigation" action against certain prospective competitors. In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-Civ.-2237 (CLB), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96201, slip op. at 2-3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2006). Defendants moved to dismiss the complaints on the grounds that, inter alia, plaintiffs lacked standing to bring the antitrust claims and that the state law antitrust claims were preempted by federal law. Specifically, Defendants argued that plaintiffs lacked standing because "they are purchasers and not competitors or would be competitors of [the defendants], and because neither [defendant] ha[d] ever threatened to enforce the patents against [the] [p]laintiffs...." 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96201, Id. at 5.

While the DDAVP court concluded that the plaintiffs' respective complaints could be dismissed based solely on their failure to plead fraud with particularity, the court went on to consider whether plaintiffs were "proper" antitrust plaintiffs and, as such, whether they had standing to bring a Walker Process claim. Following a review of applicable case law respecting Walker Process standing, the court noted that:

> Plaintiffs have not alleged and cannot, that they did compete or would have competed with Defendants, nor that [*52] they have been sued or threatened with an infringement lawsuit by Defendants. Rather, they allege that they have paid higher prices for desmopressin acetate by virtue of Defendant's misconduct before the PTO and subsequent actions, which prevented the lower prices, which would have ensued from generic competition.

2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96201, Id. at 9.

Noting that there was no binding precedent from the Southern District of New York with respect to this issue, the court examined other cases that had addressed this issue. Citing Remeron and Cipro, the court noted that those courts had found, respectively, that absent a threat of suit or the reasonable anticipation of suit, a party does not have standing to bring a Walker Process claim and that non-infringing consumers of patented products similarly lacked standing. The court contrasted Remeron and Cipro, with the decision of the District Court for the District of Columbia in Molecular Diagnostics, in which the court found that customers, who are direct purchasers of a patented product, have standing to bring a Walker Process claim. DDAVP, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96201, at 10-11. Having reviewed these cases, the DDAVP court concluded that the better argument was articulated in the Remeron and Cipro [*53] cases. As a consequence, the court held that, as consumers, plaintiffs simply lacked standing to bring a Walker Process claim against the defendants, and that this defect was a sufficient alternative basis for dismissing the complaints.

---

[19] The Remeron court also dismissed, without significant comment, plaintiffs' "sham litigation" claim.

Although certainly not binding precedent in the District of New Jersey, DDAVP adds further support to the existing body of case law holding that consumers of patented products lack standing to bring Walker Process claims.

ii.Molecular Diagnostics

In support of their argument that the IP Plaintiffs, as indirect purchasers of K-DUR, have standing to bring a Walker Process claim, Plaintiffs rely primarily on the decision in Molecular Diagnostics Labs. v. Hoffman-LaRoche, Inc., 402 F. Supp. 2d 276 (D.D.C. 2005) ("Molecular Diagnostics"). Molecular Diagnostics is emblematic of the dispute among federal courts regarding which parties have standing to bring a Walker Process claim. In Molecular Diagnostics, plaintiff, Molecular Diagnostics Laboratories ("MDL"), a direct purchaser of the subject patented product, Thermus aquaticus DNA polymerase ("Taq"), brought suit under Section 1 of the Sherman Act charging that they had been forced to pay artificially inflated [*54] prices for Taq as a result of defendants' enforcement of the patent, which plaintiffs allege was obtained by fraud on the PTO. Molecular Diagnostics, 402 F.Supp.2d at 278. Defendants moved to dismiss the complaint on a number of grounds, including but not limited to lack of standing.

In defense of the complaint, MDL argued it had standing to bring a Walker Process claims due to its status as a direct consumer of Taq. In response, defendants argued that only competitors or entities against whom a fraudulently obtained patent had been or could be enforced would have standing to bring a Walker Process claim. Id. at 279. Defendants specifically relied on Carrot Components and Remeron in support of their position.

As a result, the Molecular Diagnostics court undertook a review and analysis of these key decisions. First, the court found Carrot Components factually distinguishable from the facts at issue in Molecular Diagnostics. The court noted that the plaintiff in Carrot Components was a competitor, not a customer of the defendant in the case. Further, the court found that the ruling in Carrot Components was limited to the facts of that particular case and concluded that the case "did not [*55] purport to establish a rule of general applicability." Id. at 280. Second, with respect to Remeron, the court found that although the plaintiff in that case was a customer of the defendants, the Remeron court had offered "little justification" for its holding. Id. The court concluded that, in the absence of any compelling justification for the Remeron decision, the court need not follow the Remeron precedent. Moreover, the court surmised that the Remeron court may have confused the harm to be addressed through a Walker Process claim. In the opinion of the Molecular Diagnostics court, "[a] Walker Process claim is not a fraud claim, as the [Remeron] court intonates, but an antitrust violation. The harm is not the invalid patent, but the use of the invalid patent to establish a monopoly." Molecular Diagnostics, at 280. Thus, the court concluded that "there is little reason to think that standing requirements for Walker Process claims differ from standing requirements in more conventional antitrust actions." Id. at 281. Accepting plaintiffs' argument that direct purchasers generally have standing to prosecute antitrust claims, the court concluded that there was "no reason to limit [Walker [*56] Process] standing to competitors." Id. Thus, the court found that "direct purchasers have standing to pursue Walker Process claims." Id. at 282.

In contrast to Carrot Components and Remeron, cases which Molecular Diagnostics criticizes, Molecular Diagnostics stands for the principle that, like competitors, direct purchasers are equally well-suited to pursue Walker Process claims against both patent holders, whose patents are obtained through fraud or "inequitable conduct" on the PTO and those who collude with them. However, Molecular Diagnostics cannot reasonably be construed to have held that consumers, regardless of their station, have standing to pursue Walker Process claims.

iii.Asahi Glass

A predecessor to both Remeron and DDAVP, Asahi Glass Co. Ltd. v. Pentech Pharma., Inc., 289 F. Supp. 2d 986 (N.D. Ill. 2003) ("Asahi Glass"), is also representative of that line of cases holding that only competitors have standing to prosecute Walker Process claims.

In Asahi Glass, plaintiff, Asahi, who was a supplier of the active ingredient[20] in a generic version of the drug Paxil, sued the defendant, Glaxo, the patent holder, in an effort to have the patent for Paxil declared invalid. Through the [*57] suit, plaintiff sought to prevent defendant from interfering with Asahi's sales of its amorphous paroxetine hydrochloride product to other potential manufacturers of generic Paxil. Plaintiff also sought to challenge a settlement agreement between Glaxo and Pentech, a former customer of Asahi, which Asahi believed violated antitrust law by restraining trade in the antidepressant market. In particular, Asahi believed that potential customers were not purchasing its paroxetine product because they feared being sued by Glaxo. Id. at 989. Defendants moved to dismiss.

The court noted several problems in plaintiff's case, not the least of which was the fact that it was highly unlikely that Glaxo, as the patent holder, would have reason to sue a party in the plaintiff's position; i.e., a supplier of amorphous paroxetine. The court observed that if plaintiff's potential customers (i.e., generic competitors of Glaxo) were deterred by Glaxo's threat of suit, then those customers had a cause of action against Glaxo, but Asahi had no right to bring an action on that basis. In addition, the court noted that "not being under a serious, [*58] palpable, foreseeable, imminent threat of being sued, Asahi cannot obtain a judicial declaration that the patent is invalid or if valid not infringed...by the sale of the amorphous product." Asahi Glass, at 990. The court went on to note that since Asahi did not sell an antidepressant drug, it was not in the "market" for that drug and, therefore, lacked standing to sue. "The general rule is that suppliers do not have 'standing'...to complain about a violation of the antitrust laws at the customer level." Id. Further, the court noted that "[i]f suppliers of targets of antitrust violators...were allowed to sue, potential plaintiffs would be stumbling over each other and the targets themselves, though their claim to relief is primary, might find themselves unable to obtain any relief." Id. at 991.

Thus, like Remeron and DDAVP, Asahi Glass provides support for the principle that a party who is not a direct competitor, e.g., a supplier, or is not the target of a suit by a patent holder, simply does not have standing to bring a Walker Process—styled antitrust claim.

d.The IP Plaintiffs' lack standing to sue

Although other cases were cited and relied upon by the parties in support of and in [*59] opposition to the IP Plaintiffs' claim of standing to bring Walker Process claims, the cases discussed above form the basic foundation for the arguments upon which the respective parties have relied. Having thoroughly reviewed the above-referenced cases, as well as a number of the other cases that have been cited by the parties, I conclude, as the did the court in DDAVP, that the Courts in Cipro and Remeron have the better side of the argument on the issue of Walker Process standing.

First, although none of the cases cited above, or that I have otherwise reviewed for purposes of deciding the respective motions are binding on this Court (excepting, of course, Walker Process), the majority of decisions which have considered the issue, have reached the conclusion that, unlike competitors, customers (e.g., indirect purchasers) do not, generally speaking, suffer exposure to the type of harm that Walker Process claims are specifically designed to remedy. In analyzing the Walker Process fraud claim, the Remeron court undertook a review of the extant Walker Process jurisprudence and distilled that body of case law to a conclusion that these cases "involve antitrust counterclaimants who were [*60] potential or actual competitors in patent infringement suits." Remeron, 335 F.Supp.2d at 529. In so concluding, the court simply accepted the narrow holding of Walker

[20] That active ingredient was amorphous paroxetine hydrochloride.

Process itself, and similar cases which have followed Walker Process. See Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 174 ("We have concluded that the enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of § 2 of the Sherman Act provided that the other elements necessary to a § 2 case are present") (emphasis added); see also Bourns v. Raychem Corp., 331 F.3d 704, 711 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Only an actual competitor or one ready to be a competitor can suffer antitrust injury"); Indium Corp., 566 F.Supp. at 1352-53 ("[I]n order to establish antitrust standing to assert a Walker Process claim, the plaintiff must at least be able to allege facts that indicate that the defendant has enforced, or has sought to enforce, or has threatened to enforce its fraudulently obtained patent against the plaintiff itself") (emphasis added).

Since Walker Process was decided, federal courts have fairly consistently measured a party's standing to assert such claims by their status as a competitor in the marketplace. This view has prevailed [*61] in cases where courts have been confronted with plaintiffs who were suppliers of such allegedly infringing products, see Asahi Glass[21] and Carrot Components, supra, or were consumers of such products. See In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 363 F.Supp.2d 514 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (recognizing a "serious question [as to] whether indirect plaintiffs have standing to assert a Walker Process claim"), Remeron, supra and DDAVP, supra. Furthermore, if anything, the Supreme Court's decision in Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) ("AGC"), stands for the proposition that not every party connected with a violation of federal antitrust laws has standing to bring an antitrust claim. Indeed, as the Court noted in AGC, "[t]he existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party." Id. at 542.

Against the backdrop of this case law, I conclude that Molecular Diagnostics is an isolated anomaly. The fact that the Molecular Diagnostics court found an exception to the general rule of antitrust standing in that case certainly does not mean that the "rule" has lost sway in cases where antitrust claims are based on Walker Process-type allegations. See Molecular Diagnostics, 402 F.Supp.2d at 279 n.4 (admitting that with the exception of Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059 (Fed. Cir. 1998) and Argus Chem. Corp. v. Fibre Glass-Evercoat Co., 812 F.2d 1381 (Fed. Cir. 1987), "neither the parties nor the court have been able to identify an instance in which a customer litigated a Walker Process claim").

This is, by no means, an exceptional case. In this case, Upsher and Wyeth represent the "identifiable class [*63] of 'persons' whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest." The fact that, at the end of the day, they chose settlement over litigating the underlying patent dispute to a conclusion does not change their role in this dynamic. Nor does it alter the status of the Indirect Purchasers. In the context of this case, the Indirect Purchasers are the "more remote party" whose interest in "antitrust enforcement" is diminished by the presence of both competitors.

Second, I am persuaded by Defendants' argument that antitrust policy, generally speaking, does not support a legal theory which would allow parties having the most tenuous relationship with a particular patent holder's or licensee's attempt to enforce a fraudulently procured patent against its competitors to assert claims that parties who may have suffered more direct injury have settled, or simply chosen not to pursue. Clearly, the boundaries of standing, even in the context of antitrust claims of monopolization based upon Walker Process-type allegations, simply cannot be stretched as far as the Plaintiffs would have this Court extend them. If this Court were to conclude that indirect purchasers had [*64] standing to bring Walker Process claims, it would turn antitrust policy on its head, and extend antitrust standing to an extraordinary level. Furthermore, I am sensitive to the Defendants' concerns that expanded standing may open the door to additional rounds of litigation on matters that have conclusively and lawfully been resolved. I do not believe that antitrust policy or patent law contemplates a scenario in which parties only tangentially affected by a patent holder's suit to enforce a patent against its competitors, regardless of whether the patent was fraudulently procured, which is ultimately settled by the original litigants, may be relitigated by consumers or indirect purchasers. Not only would such a result likely discourage settlement and inject a significant level of uncertainty into the process of adjudicating patent disputes, it would become exponentially more costly for all parties involved.

---

[21] See Asahi, 289 F.Supp. at 990 (noting that because supplier of active ingredient contained in an allegedly infringing product was not "under a serious, palpable, foreseeable, imminent [*62] threat of being sued" by the patent holder, they lacked standing to obtain a judicial declaration of invalidity); see also Aventis Enviro. Science U.S.A. v. Scotts Co., 383 F.Supp.2d 488, 496 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) ("It is equally well-established that mere suppliers of products to the targets of antitrust violations do not have standing to assert antitrust claims").

Moreover, although Plaintiffs rely heavily on Molecular Diagnostics for their conclusion that the IP Plaintiffs have standing to bring Walker Process claims, Molecular Diagnostics is not as helpful to Plaintiffs' position as they suggest. Importantly, even the Molecular Diagnostics [*65] court was aware that "[c]onferring standing upon every individual tangentially affected by an alleged antitrust violation presents the risk of duplicative recovery, and may subject defendants to an onslaught of litigation." Molecular Diagnostics, 402 F.Supp.2d at 281. Thus, the Molecular Diagnostics court counseled that courts should "examine other factors in addition to antitrust injury, such as the potential for duplicative recovery, the complexity of apportioning damages, and the existence of other parties that have been more directly harmed, to determine whether a party is a proper plaintiff...." Id. Surely, the IP Plaintiffs can take little comfort from this statement. As the Court noted, indirect purchasers do not have "frequent interactions" with patent holders and do not have a "strong incentive to discover and litigate [an] offense." In addition, there is considerable "difficulty in determining damages" for indirect purchasers. Moreover, because indirect purchasers are two steps removed from the underlying injury (i.e., to competitors), ascertaining their damages is a far more speculative endeavor. Finally, as compared to competitors and direct purchasers, indirect purchasers [*66] have certainly been less "directly harmed" than their counterparts.

For these reasons, I conclude that the IP Plaintiffs lack standing to bring Walker Process claims in Count III of the Amended Complaint and in the other Counts of the Amended Complaint whether explicitly asserted, or incorporated by reference.

ii.Preemption

In addition to arguing that the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims fail for lack of standing, Defendants also contend that the Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims fail because they are preempted by federal law. In response, Plaintiffs argue that prevailing case law provides that the IP Plaintiffs' claims are not, in fact, preempted by federal law. As a result, an analysis of the key cases cited by the parties is in order.

a.Federal Circuit cases

i.Semiconductor Energy

In support of their argument that the IP Plaintiffs claims are preempted by federal law, Defendants have relied, in part, on a decision from the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals (the "Federal Circuit") in Semiconductor Energy Lab. Co., Ltd. v. Samsung Elect. Co., Ltd., 204 F.3d 1368 (Fed. Cir. 2000) ("Semiconductor Energy"). In Semiconductor Energy, plaintiff, Semiconductor Energy Laboratory ("SEL") [*67] sued defendants, several Samsung entities ("Samsung"), alleging that Samsung's production and sale of competing technology infringed a patent held by SEL. Initially, the district court granted SEL's motion for summary judgment and dismissed Samsung's federal and state law based Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations ("RICO") counterclaims. Following a bench trial, the court found SEL's patent unenforceable due to inequitable conduct before the PTO. The parties appealed the respective judgments.

On appeal to the Federal Circuit, the court had to determine whether the district court had, in any way, abused its discretion in its dismissal of Samsung's state law RICO claims. After analyzing Samsung's New Jersey RICO counterclaims, the court concluded that they were preempted by federal patent law. In particular, the court noted that the counterclaims were more closely analogous to a state law-based abuse of process counterclaim that had been found preempted in Abbott Labs. v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346 (Fed. Cir. 1991), than to the intentional interference with contractual relationship claims that had been addressed in Dow Chem. Co. v. Exxon Corp., 139 F.3d 1470 (Fed. Cir. 1998). The [*68] court also noted that "the wrong alleged and for which state tort damages [are] sought [is] no more than bad faith misconduct before the PTO," and found that the counterclaims, as pled by Samsung, "occup[ied] a field identical in scope with the inequitable conduct defense." Semiconductor Energy, 204 F.3d at 1382. Therefore, the court concluded that there was no distinction between the required elements of proof for a state law RICO claim and the defense of inequitable conduct under federal law. Accordingly, the court ultimately found that, "[a]...state cause of action predicated so squarely on the acts of inequitable conduct would be 'contrary to Congress' preemptive regulation in the area of patent law.'"

Thus, Semiconductor Energy stands for the proposition that, in the context of an antitrust action, where there is no fundamental difference between the required elements of proof in a state law-based claim and claims or defenses arising under federal patent law, the state law-based claims will be found to be preempted by federal law.

ii.Dow

In defense of their position that the IP Plaintiffs have standing to pursue Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims against the Defendants, [*69] Plaintiffs rely, in part, on a decision from the Federal Circuit in Dow Chem. Co. v. Exxon Corp., 139 F.3d 1470 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("Dow"). In Dow, plaintiff-appellant, the Dow Chemical Company ("Dow Chemical"), appealed from the judgment of a district court which, inter alia, dismissed Dow Chemical's state law unfair competition claim against defendant, Exxon Corporation ("Exxon"), the holder of a patent for wire and cable devices manufactured with a particular insulating polymer. Dow, 139 F.3d at 1471. In the underlying action, Dow Chemical had filed a two-count complaint against Exxon seeking a declaratory judgment of non-infringement or, alternatively, invalidity and unenforceability (Count I) and for unfair competition, under state law, based on Exxon's alleged threats to customers of Dow Chemical for alleged infringement of Exxon's patent (Count II). Id. at 1472. As a result of certain developments in the case, the district court ultimately dismissed both Counts I and II of the complaint. Dow Chemical appealed, alleging that the district court should have decided its state law unfair competition claim and that the court erred in dismissing the claim because it implicated the issue [*70] of inequitable conduct. Exxon cross-appealed.

Upon review, the Federal Circuit framed the issue this way: "whether state courts, or federal courts adjudicating state law claims, may hear a state law tort claim for intentional interference with...contractual relations that implicates the patent law issue of inequitable conduct or, alternatively, whether such a claim is preempted by federal patent law." Id. at 1473. Having framed the issue, the court found that, "provided the state law cause of action includes additional elements not found in the federal patent law cause of action and is not an impermissible attempt to offer patent-like protection to [a] subject matter addressed by federal law," such a claim would not be preempted. Id. The court's finding was based, in part, on its analysis of Supreme Court precedent and its conclusion that the state cause of action at issue did not "present an 'obstacle' to the execution and accomplishment of the patent laws." Id. at 1475. In addition, the court concluded that the intent of the particular cause of action was to address an issue that was "traditionally [in] the domain of state law" (i.e., ensuring the integrity of commercial contracts) [*71] and that the cause did not seek "to offer patent-like protection to intellectual property...." Dow, at 1475. Moreover, the court added that, "a tort claim for intentional interference with contractual relations requires elements entirely different from those required for inequitable conduct before the PTO." Id. at 1477 (emphasis added). Thus, based on its review of the facts and law, the court was convinced that a state law tort claim of intentional interference with contractual relations was a different animal than a state law claim relying upon proof of inequitable conduct and, therefore, concluded that the lower court's judgment should be reversed. "[B]ecause it requires entirely different elements to establish a prima facie state tort action for intentional interference with contractual relations, it plainly is not a preempted alternative or additional state law remedy for inequitable conduct," see Dow, at 1477, therefore, "we must reverse the judgment of the district court." Id. at 1479.

Thus, in contrast to Semiconductor Energy, Dow holds that a state law claim that implicates issues of patent law, is not preempted where the elements of proof underlying the claim do not rely, [*72] in their entirety, on issues of patent law.

iii.Exzec

Plaintiffs also rely on the Federal Circuit's decision in Zenith Elect. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340 (Fed. Cir. 1999) ("Exzec") to support their argument that the IP Plaintiffs "monopolization claims are not patent claims, do not conflict with patent law, and are not preempted." (IP Plfs. Ans. Br. at 6.)

In Exzec, plaintiff-appellants, Zenith Electronics Corp. ("Zenith"), the assignee of a patent for touch panel systems for computers, and Elo Touch, the licensee of Zenith's patent, sued Exzec, alleging that Exzec's competing touch panel system infringed Zenith's patent. Exzec, 182 F.3d at 1343. Exzec, in turn, filed two counterclaims, both for unfair competition, one arising under federal law[22] and the other arising under Illinois common law. In support of these claims, Exzec alleged that Elo Touch knew that Exzec's touch panels utilized a different technology than the patented touch panels and, therefore, did not infringe Zenith's patent. Exzec further alleged that, despite this knowledge, Elo Touch "falsely stated" to Exzec's customers that Exzec had infringed the Zenith patent and was incapable of producing a non-infringing [*73] touch panel. Id. Elo Touch moved to dismiss Exzec's counterclaims. The district court found that Exzec had pleaded viable claims in both cases, and denied the motion to dismiss. In particular, with respect to the state law claim, the district court found that dismissal was inappropriate because defendant had "sufficiently alleged" that Elo Touch had "acted in bad faith" and, as such, the defense of "privilege" was not available to Elo Touch. Id. at 1344. Elo Touch subsequently filed a motion for reconsideration, which was denied. Elo Touch then petitioned for permission to appeal and the Federal Circuit granted the petition.

On appeal, the Federal Circuit undertook an analysis of the substance of Exzec's state law-based unfair competition claims in light of certain recent Federal Circuit precedent. Citing Dow, the court noted that it had previously held that tortious interference with contractual relations claims were not preempted by federal patent law "because the claims involved allegations of bad faith marketplace conduct by the patentee." Id. at 1355. The court added that, although the claim [*74] in Dow involved inequitable conduct, where a patent holder "knowingly makes baseless infringement assertions against a competitor's customers" the patent holder may be subject to liability. Exzec, 182 at 1355. Further, citing Hunter Douglas v. Harmonic Design, Inc., 153 F.3d 1318 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("Hunter Douglas"), the court noted that it had concluded that state tort claims that were based on publicizing a patent, were not preempted by federal patent law "if the claimant can show that the patent holder acted in bad faith in its publication of the patent." Id. Thus, the court distilled Hunter Douglas to mean that "to avoid patent law preemption of...state tort law claims, bad faith must be alleged and ultimately proven, even if bad faith is not otherwise an element of the tort claim." Id. Based on its understanding of this case law, the court found that "bad faith [was] a prerequisite to Exzec's state-law tortious interference claim [and, that] without it, the claim was preempted by patent law."

Thus, Exzec construed Dow and like cases to permit exceptions to automatic patent preemption where a party brings state law-based claims which rely upon facts implicating issues of patent law, [*75] provided that acts of "bad faith" conduct in the marketplace are alleged and, ultimately, proven.

b.Other decisions

i.Cipro

In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 363 F.Supp.2d 514 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) ("Cipro"), was a multi-district litigation in which plaintiffs, direct and indirect purchasers of the drug ciprofloxacin hydrochloride, brought an action against the brand-name manufacturer of the drug and prospective generic manufacturers, alleging that defendants had illegally agreed to restrain trade in the relevant market in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Initially, plaintiffs moved to have certain agreements between the defendants declared per se unlawful under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. These motions were denied by the court. Following that denial, the indirect plaintiffs amended their complaint to add a new count (Count V) alleging Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims. The substance of these claims was that Defendant Bayer had made certain misrepresentations to the PTO in order to obtain its patent for ciprofloxacin hydrochloride and then, knowing that the patent was invalid, enforced the patent against its competitors. Cipro, at 542-43. Bayer subsequently [*76] moved to dismiss Count V on two bases: (1) that the indirect plaintiffs' state law-based Walker Process claims were preempted by federal law; and (2) that they were barred by the applicable statute of limitations. Id. at 543.

[22] That particular claim was brought under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a).

In analyzing Bayer's motion to dismiss, the court noted that "[o]rdinarily, antitrust claims premised on the enforcement of a fraudulently procured patent are brought by an accused infringer as a counterclaim to the original charge of infringement." Id. at 543. The court found the indirect purchasers' Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims to be "unusual" because "they [were] brought by indirect purchasers of the patented item and because they [were] asserted under state law." Id. at 543. Upon review of the indirect plaintiffs' Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims, the court concluded that the claims, although allegedly based on state law, actually rested entirely upon federal patent law because if the plaintiffs were unable to demonstrate that Bayer intentionally withheld information from or misrepresented material aspects of the product to the PTO, their Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims could not survive. "There is simply no theory for [*77] proving a Walker Process antitrust violation in this case that would not require a showing of misconduct before the PTO." Id. Based on its factual finding that the indirect plaintiffs' claims were dependent on a showing of misconduct before the PTO, the court ultimately concluded, inter alia, that the indirect plaintiffs' state antitrust claims were preempted by federal law. Id. at 544. As a result, the court also concluded that those claims should be dismissed. "Whatever the reasons for indirect plaintiffs bringing Walker Process and sham litigation claims under state law, those claims are preempted by federal patent law and must, therefore, be dismissed." Id. at 543.

Therefore, Cipro holds that in circumstances where a party brings Walker Process or "sham litigation" claims based on state antitrust law, but those claims are ultimately dependent upon proof of a violation of federal patent law, those claims are automatically preempted by federal law and, as a result, are subject to dismissal.

c. IP Plaintiffs' claims are preempted

As discussed in detail above, I have concluded that the IP Plaintiffs lacked standing to bring Walker Process claims against the Defendants and those claims [*78] should be dismissed. However, assuming, as did the court in Asahi Glass, that my analysis of that issue is incorrect, see Asahi Glass, 289 F.Supp.2d at 991, I further conclude that Plaintiffs' Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims are subject to dismissal because they are preempted by federal patent law.

I reach this conclusion based on the determination that, as with my resolution of the issue of standing, the Defendants also have the more persuasive argument on the question of preemption. Having given due consideration to Semiconductor Energy, Dow, Exzec, and Cipro, I conclude, in light of the circumstances of this case, that the "better" and more persuasive reasoning may be found in Semiconductor Energy and Cipro.

In Semiconductor Energy, the Federal Circuit found Samsung's New Jersey RICO counterclaims were preempted because "the wrong alleged and for which state tort damages [were] sought [was] no more than bad faith misconduct before the PTO." Semiconductor Energy, 204 F.3d at 1382. In so finding, the Semiconductor Energy court specifically distinguished Dow on the grounds that, in Dow, not only did the state cause of action contain elements of proof that were not elements [*79] of the defense of "inequitable conduct," but that "the state tort as applied was not an impermissible attempt to offer patent-like protection." Id. (emphasis added). In this case, the IP Plaintiffs purport to bring claims pursuant to twenty-four states' respective antitrust and/or consumer protection laws. Although these respective statutes do not contain identical language or identical elements of proof, they all suffer from the same defect; i.e., they fundamentally rely upon evidence of fraud or "inequitable conduct" before the

PTO, or evidence derivative of those actions to satisfy their respective elements of proof.[23] Stated another way, these state statutes, as the IP Plaintiffs would have this Court apply them, would, in fact, constitute an "impermissible attempt to offer patent-like protection."[24]

In this regard, I take note of Count III of the Amended Complaint and, in particular, the IP Plaintiffs' allegation that "Schering's '743 Patent was obtained through material, intentional misrepresentations and material, intentional omissions in Schering's communications with the PTO...." See Amd. Complt. ¶ 215. In making this claim, [*82] the IP Plaintiffs draw upon allegations made earlier in the Amended Complaint that specifically relate to Schering's alleged unlawful conduct in obtaining the '743 patent through fraud on the PTO. See Amd. Complt. ¶¶ 62-122. Thus, in this case, just as in Semiconductor Energy, it is apparent that "the wrong[s] alleged and for which and for which state law...damages [are] sought [is] no more than bad faith misconduct before the PTO." This conclusion is ultimately fatal to Count III, because, as presently pled, Count III ends up "occupy[ing] a field identical in scope" to issues already reserved to and adequately addressed by federal patent law. Therefore, on this basis alone, the Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims contained in Count III and other Counts of the Amended Complaint are preempted by federal law. See Semiconductor Energy, 204 F.3d at 1382 ("[a]...state cause of action predicated so squarely on the acts of inequitable conduct would be 'contrary to Congress' preemptive regulation in the area of patent law'") (citing Abbott Labs. v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346, 1357 (Fed. Cir. 1991)).

Even if reasonable people could disagree about the extent to which IP Plaintiffs' state [*83] law antitrust claims rely upon conduct before the PTO, evidence of marketplace conduct, as Defendants have argued (see Hrg. Tr. at 24-25), is sorely lacking. As the parties are already aware, evidence of marketplace conduct can revive a claim otherwise subject to preemption under federal patent law. See e.g., Semiconductor Energy, at 1382. As construed by the Federal Circuit in Dow and reaffirmed in Semiconductor Energy, "marketplace conduct" is intentional conduct having a direct impact upon non-competitors (i.e., customers). See Dow, 139 F.3d at 1477; Semiconductor Energy, at 1382. See also Exzec, 182 F.3d at 1340 ("While the tortious interference claims in Dow Chemical involved inequitable conduct, we also noted that a holder of a valid and enforceable patent who knowingly makes baseless infringement assertions against a competitor's customers may also be subject to...liability"); Hunter Douglas, 153 F.3d at 1334 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("The state law remedies in Dow Chemical were directed to allegedly tortious conduct in the marketplace"); Cipro, 363 F.Supp.2d at 544-45 ("The marketplace conduct in Dow was Exxon's threats to Dow's customers, not activity that occurred before the PTO [*84] or in the context of a litigation").

---

[23] For example, in order to state a claim under the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, a party must prove the following three elements: "1) unlawful conduct by the defendants; 2) an ascertainable loss on the part of the plaintiff; 3) a casual relationship between the defendants' unlawful conduct and the plaintiff's ascertainable loss." N.J. Citizen Action v. Schering-Plough Corp., 2002 WL 32344594, at *2 (N.J. Super. L. May 12, 2002). [*80] Further, in order to state a monopolization claim under the New Jersey Antitrust Act, a party must prove the following four elements: "1) relevant geographic and product market; 2) high probability of success of monopolization, 3) specific intent, and 4) conduct to further an attempt to monopolize." D'Arrigo v. South Jersey Hosp., 2006 WL 2795337, at * 11 (N.J. Super. L. Aug. 25, 2006). By comparison, "[i]n order to state a claim for abuse of process, the moving party must show: (1) an ulterior motive and (2) some further act after an issuance of process representing the perversion of the legitimate use of the process." *Falzo v. County of Essex, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19468, 2005 WL 2129927, at 4 (D.N.J. Aug. 31, 2005) (citation omitted). Although the elements of these respective claims are different, the means of proof is effectively the same because the "issue[s] at bar relate[] directly to administrative proceedings before the PTO ...." see Abbott Labs. v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346, 1356 (Fed. Cir. 1991) or are derivative of administrative proceedings before the PTO. Similarly, because the state law claims posed by the IP Plaintiffs in this matter relate directly to or are derivative of Schering's alleged fraudulent [*81] activities or "inequitable conduct" before the PTO, there is essentially no difference between the instant claims for relief and the claims brought in Abbott Labs. or Semiconductor Energy, as each set of claims ultimately challenges conduct before the PTO.

[24] The "as applied" test is the proper test for evaluating state law claims. See Hunter Douglas, Inc. v. Harmonic Design, Inc., 153 F.3d 1318, 1335 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("If a plaintiff bases its tort action on conduct that is protected or governed by federal patent law, then the plaintiff may not invoke the state law remedy, which must be preempted for conflict with federal patent law.... This approach, which considers whether a state tort, 'as-applied,' conflicts with federal patent law, is consistent with that employed by the Supreme Court in cases involving preemption of state unfair competition law").

Thus, what plainly distinguishes the claims in this case from those in Dow, and like cases, is the absence of any legally cognizable allegations of "marketplace conduct." See Exzec, 182 F.3d at 1355 (affirming lower court denial of motion to dismiss counterclaims where patent licensee was alleged to have acted in "bad faith" by making false representations to competitor's customers"); Dow, 139 F.3d at 1477 (reversing lower court judgment dismissing state law unfair competition claim where complaint alleged threats made by patent holder to sue competitor's customers for patent infringement). By comparison, in cases where claims have been found preempted, allegations (or evidence) of "marketplace conduct" have been noticeably absent. See Semiconductor Energy, 204 F.3d at 1382 ("[T]he wrong alleged and for which and for which state law tort damages [are] sought [is] no more than bad faith misconduct before the PTO"); Cipro, 363 F.Supp.2d at 545 ("Indirect plaintiffs' Count V does not allege any malfeasance in the marketplace such as threats to Barr or its customers, but instead rests entirely upon actions that occurred before the PTO"); CardioVention, Inc. v. Medtronic, Inc., 430 F.Supp.2d 933, 941 (D. Minn. 2006) [*85] ("Accordingly, federal patent law preempts [plaintiff's] Count III claim, because the claim does not allege any actionable conduct except conduct before the PTO. As the allegations are coextensive with patent law, they are preempted by patent law"). In light of the allegations contained in the Amended Complaint, the IP Plaintiffs' Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims clearly belong with this latter group of cases.

Therefore, even assuming, arguendo, that the IP Plaintiffs had standing to bring their Walker Process claims, I find that these same Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims, as asserted in Count III and, either explicitly or by reference, in other Counts of the Amended Complaint, are preempted by federal patent law because they rely, either directly or derivatively, upon allegedly fraudulent or inequitable conduct before the PTO to substantiate those claims.

d.Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' opposition to the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

Although the pending motions to dismiss do not address the DP Plaintiffs' claims, the DP Plaintiffs have raised several arguments in opposition to the pending motions which must be considered.

On October 23, 2006, Mr. Pearlman filed [*86] the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Memorandum In Opposition to Defendants Schering-Plough, Wyeth, and ESI Lederle's Applications to Special Master to Dismiss Portions of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint (the "DP Plaintiffs' Answering Brief"). In that Answering Brief, the DP Plaintiffs essentially took the position that "overcharged purchasers" have standing to assert Walker Process claims. At the oral argument at the January 24, 2007 hearing before me, Mr. Sorenson (incorrectly identified in the transcript as Mr. Lieverman), speaking on behalf of the DP Plaintiffs, presented oral argument on the Motions to Dismiss, limiting himself to two minutes. See Transcript of January 24, 2007 Oral Argument at 78-79. Thereafter, on January 26, 2007, I received a letter from Mr. Refsin, submitted on behalf of the DP Plaintiffs. Mr. Refsin's January 26, 2007 letter indicated that he was writing because my ruling on the pending Motions to Dismiss "could affect the DP Plaintiffs' pending challenge to the exclusionary payments made by Schering even though we do not have Walker Process claims and were not afforded an opportunity to participate fully in Wednesday's [*87] argument." (Refsin Letter, at 1.)

Although Mr. Refsin was present at the oral argument on January 24, 2007, he did not at that time request an opportunity to be heard. While I was somewhat surprised by Mr. Refsin's letter stating that the DP Plaintiffs "were not afforded an opportunity to participate fully in Wednesday's argument," particularly in light of Mr. Pearlman's Answering Brief filed on October 23, 2006, and Mr. Sorenson's presentation at the oral argument on January 24, 2007, I overruled the Defendants' objections to the submission of Mr. Refsin's letter and agreed to consider it. I also gave the Defendants an opportunity to reply to Mr. Refsin's letter of January 26, 2007, which they did in a February 1, 2007 letter from Mr. Nields, addressed to me. I have now considered Mr. Pearlman's Answering Brief, filed October 23, 2006, Mr. Refsin's letter of January 26, 2007, and Mr. Nields' letter of February 1, 2007 in response.

In Mr. Refsin's letter of January 26, 2007, the DP Plaintiffs contend that if this Court were to adopt Defendants' argument that patent policy dictates that purchasers not be afforded standing to assert antitrust claims involving a challenge to the validity [*88] of a patent, "a glaring gap" would be created in the protections provided by the antitrust laws. (Refsin Letter, at 1.)

Mr. Refsin also noted in his letter that ". . . in ruling on Defendants' motion to dismiss the Indirect Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims, we ask the Court to consider the effect that its ruling may have on the pending challenges to the exclusionary payments that Schering made to settle the underlying patent litigation." (Id. at 3.)

In his letter of February 1, 2007 in response to Mr. Refsin's letter, Mr. Nields pointed out: "Schering does not contest a purchaser's standing to bring a claim challenging the lawfulness of settlements based on an allegation of improper payments." Mr. Nields goes on to note:

> What we contest is a purchaser's standing to bring a Walker Process and sham litigation claims based solely on patent issues. The cases hold that purchasers lack standing to bring such claims. And a contrary rule would lead to the absurd result that purchasers could re-litigate patent issues that were compromised in a perfectly lawful settlement.

(Nields Letter, at 1.)

The record is clear that the pending motions filed by Defendants to dismiss portions of the Indirect [*89] Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint relate solely to the question of whether the IP Plaintiffs have standing to assert Walker Process and sham litigation claims. Given the narrow issue that I must decide, I express no view on the DP Plaintiffs' "pending challenges to the exclusionary payments that Schering made to settle the underlying patent litigation" and expressly limit my holding to the precise issues raised by Defendants' motions to dismiss portions of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint. I express no view as to the merits of the claims asserted by the DP Plaintiffs, or the defenses which Defendants may advance to defeat those claims.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, I conclude that the respective Applications of Defendants Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle to dismiss certain claims contained in the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint should be granted. Accordingly, Count III of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint is dismissed with prejudice. [*90] To the extent that other Counts of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint incorporate and/or allege, either explicitly or by reference, the claims contained in Count III, those claims are also dismissed with prejudice.

As provided in the Order entered by Magistrate Judge Arleo in this matter, the Special Master's decision on any motion can be appealed to Judge Greenaway in the manner, and subject to the standards of review set forth in Rule 53 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and applicable Local Rules.

ENTERED this

1st day of March, 2007

/s/ Stephen M. Orlofsky

STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY

SPECIAL MASTER

ORDER

The Special Master having considered the Applications of Defendants Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle to Dismiss Certain Claims Contained in the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint, the briefs filed by all parties in support of and in opposition to the Applications, as well as the oral argument of counsel, for the reasons set forth in the foregoing Report and Recommendations;

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, this 1st day of March, 2007, that:

(1) [*91] the Defendants' respective Applications are GRANTED; and,

(2) Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Count III of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint, and any other portion of the Amended Complaint which purports to state a Walker Process or sham litigation claim that is not dependent on the legality of the settlement agreements challenged in the initial Complaint, are DISMISSED with prejudice.

ENTERED this

1st day of March, 2007

/s/ Stephen M. Orlofsky

STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY

SPECIAL MASTER

Flowers v. Exxonmobil Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama, Western Division

March 2, 2007, Decided; March 2, 2007, Filed

CV-05-CO-02317-W

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112966 *

ROSETTA G. FLOWERS, et al., Plaintiffs, vs. EXXONMOBIL CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

royalties, antitrust, lease, settlement, Plaintiffs', mineral, Ownership, anti trust law, anticompetitive, summary judgment, competitors, sections, Stream, allegations, consumers, lessor, oil, antitrust claim, drainage, extract, genuine, parties, lessee, seller, terms

Counsel: [*1] For Rosetta G Flowers, Stanley Godwin, Shellye Stanley Mccarty, Fred Stanley, Jr., Sandra Ziglar Wilson, Autry Ziglar, Bobby Ziglar, Clark Ziglar, Plaintiffs: C Knox McLaney, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, MCLANEY & ASSOCIATES PC, Montgomery, AL USA; John W Sharbrough, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, THE SHARBROUGH LAW FIRM, Mobile, AL USA; George W Walker, III, BOLES HOLMES PARKMAN and WHITE, LLC, Auburn, AL USA; Richard Hamilton Gill, COPELAND FRANCO SCREWS & GILL, P.A., Montgomery, AL USA.

For Gladden Smith, Ruthie Smith, Elizabeth T Vinson, Kathy Holiday, Sheila Holiday, Patsy Alexander, Voncile Holiday, Connie Holiday-Buggs, Jimmy C Vinson, Willanette M Troutman, Gladys M Stanton, Robert H Maxwell, Pumpelly Mineral Trust of 1990, Harry H Riddick, Dorothy A Riddick, Renee Riddick Wilbur, Earl E Manning, JR, Darrell Fink, Norma Fink, Gertrude Smith, Henry Oneal Mckinley, Claude Moye, Rodger Parker, Frances Parker, Estelle M Hinote, John L Player, Stoney W Daw, Doris Daw Godwin, Eula Horn, David E Myrick, Trudy O Shackelford, Gary Helton, Donald Ray Helton, Roy Helton, Irma Helton, Marion Kyser, V David Jellenc, Altmayer Limited Partership, Julia S King, Christopher Stallworth King, Jean S Maxwell, Thomas [*2] H Stallworth, JR, Mary L Helton, Sandra O Montgomery, Rita Harper, Carolyn R Hassebrock, Elizabeth R Ellis, Bill Rigby, Ruth R Jackson, Debra Milligan, Patty Muhl, Theresa R Harding, Terry J Rigby, Victor Mitchell, Wanda Sue Carlson, Lanier M Myrick, Pumpelly Mineral Trust of 1990, Patrick M. Kingsmill for Regions Bank as Trustee, Bessie Mae Turner, Hazel Higdon, Annie H Troutman, Annie Ruth Nolin, Charlotte T Miller, Claudine W Mcmullen, Laura Jane Trammell, Willie James Wearren, Minnie Louise Guin, W, Benjamin H Watson, Mary Loucinda W Daniels, Cynthia W Tate, Mattie Frances Watson Brown Lisenby, Lester Jackson Watson, JR, Kathleen B Reaves, Hope Miller Zeanah, Martha Troutma Yim, Todd Troutman, Yvonne Wearren, James E Trammell, James Lee Miller, James O Tatro, Jeanette S Farror, Carey F Stanley, Thomas Harvey, Shellye Stanley Mccarty, Fred Edwin Stanley, JR, Carolyn Etheridge, Geneva S Wearren, Harold L Davis, David M Turner, John R Turner, Scott, Rozanne Truscott Turner, Phillip Rigby, Selby O Eidson, Linda E Farrior, Bobbie E King, Delton Smith, Plaintiffs: C Knox McLaney, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, MCLANEY & ASSOCIATES PC, Montgomery, AL USA; George W Walker, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, BOLES [*3] HOLMES PARKMAN and WHITE, LLC, Auburn, AL USA; John W Sharbrough, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, THE SHARBROUGH LAW FIRM, Mobile, AL USA; Richard Hamilton Gill, LEAD ATTORNEY, COPELAND FRANCO SCREWS & GILL,P.A., Montgomery, AL USA.

For Exxonmobil Corporation, Defendant: C Meade Hartfield, LEAD ATTORNEY, BRADLEY ARANT BOULT CUMMINGS LLP, Birmingham, AL USA; M Christian King, LEAD ATTORNEY, LIGHTFOOT FRANKLIN & WHITE LLC, Birmingham, AL USA.

For Burlington Resources Oil And Gas Company, L.P., Louisiana Land & Exploration Co., Defendants: Jarrod White, Sandy G Robinson, CABANISS JOHNSTON GARDNER DUMAS & O'NEAL, Mobile, AL USA.

Judges: L. SCOTT COOGLER, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: L. SCOTT COOGLER

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OF OPINION

I. Introduction.

The Court has for consideration Defendant ExxonMobil Corporation's (hereinafter referred to as "ExxonMobil") Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 42), filed on August 14, 2006.[1] Plaintiffs filed this class action[2] suit against ExxonMobil, Louisiana Land & Exploration Co. (hereinafter referred to as "LL&E"), and Burlington Resources Oil & Gas Company, L.P. (hereinafter referred to as "Burlington"), on November 10, 2005, to "redress the devaluation and drainage[3] of Plaintiffs' mineral [*4] interests caused by ExxonMobil's operation of Big Escambia Creek field." Plaintiffs amended their Complaint on December 16, 2005, (Doc. 22), and they filed their Second Amended Complaint (Doc. 63) on January 11, 2007, to include allegations of conspiracy to fix prices and abuse of monopsony power under the Sherman Antitrust Act, as well as claims for breach of implied covenants related to their drainage theory of recovery against all three defendants. Plaintiffs also allege claims against defendants LL&E and Burlington for breach of contract, breach of implied covenants and duties, and unjust enrichment related to the underpayment of royalties. Id. The issues raised in ExxonMobil's motion have been fully briefed by the parties and are now ripe for decision. For the reasons set forth herein, ExxonMobil's motion is due to be granted in part and denied in part.

II. Facts.[4]

---

[1] On January 19, 2006, defendant ExxonMobil filed its Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint. (Doc. 23.) The Court entered a briefing schedule (Doc. 25), and the parties fully briefed the motion. On June 16, 2006, ExxonMobil filed a Supplemental Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint (Doc. 34), and this Court again ordered the parties to brief the motion. Because ExxonMobil relied on several affidavits, along with Plaintiffs' cancelled settlement checks, in support of its Supplemental Motion to Dismiss, this Court determined that the motion would be more appropriately considered as a motion for summary judgment. (Doc. 40.) ExxonMobil then filed the instant Motion for Summary Judgment in response to the Court's Order.

[2] Plaintiffs define the proposed class as:

> All sole proprietorships, partnerships, corporations, other entities, and natural person in the United States, its territories, possession and protectorates who have received royalty payments from one or more of the Defendants or one of their co-conspirators on gas and other substances produced from the Big Escambia Creek Field [*5] ("BEC") under leases which, (a) provide gas royalty payments on a "market value at the well" or "market value at the mouth of the well" basis and (b) are "standard" leases for royalty payment purposes.

(Doc. 63, p. 36.) Plaintiffs allege that the class exceeds six hundred individuals nationwide.

[3] When Plaintiffs use the term "drainage" they are referring to "the migration of oil or gas in a reservoir due to pressure reduction caused by production from a nearby well bottomed in the reservoir." (Doc. 63, p. 10.)

[4] The facts set out in this opinion are gleaned from the parties' submissions of facts claimed to be undisputed, the plaintiffs' complaint, and the Court's own examination of the evidentiary record. All reasonable doubts about the facts have been resolved in favor of the nonmoving party. See Info. Sys. & Networks Corp. v. City of Atlanta, 281 F.3d 1220, 1224 (11th Cir. 2002). These are the "facts" for summary judgment purposes only. They may not be the actual facts. See Cox v. Adm'r U.S. Steel & Carnegie Pension Fund, 17 F.3d 1386, 1400 (11th Cir. 1994).

The plaintiffs in this case own mineral interests in the Big Escambia Creek field (hereinafter referred to as "BEC"), which is located in Escambia County, Alabama, and is comprised of thirty-five sections. There are approximately eighteen wells presently in production within the BEC. Numerous wells have been plugged and abandoned over the years, and the field is not considered "unitized." Some of the plaintiffs in this case have leases with ExxonMobil for gas units that are still in production, while at least one other plaintiff receives royalties on a lease for a gas unit that has been plugged and abandoned.[5]

The Royalty Owner Plaintiffs' property interests in this case are created by virtue of an oil and gas lease whereby the Ownership Group, including ExxonMobil, obtained the exclusive right to explore and extract the minerals, including all the constituent parts of the Full-Well Stream as defined in Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint. In the BEC, the Ownership Group [*6] buys for its own account and then accumulates and sells the product to third parties. The lease agreements require the Ownership Group to pay the Royalty Owner Plaintiffs payments based on the "market value at the well." Under the terms of most of the leases, the Royalty Owner Plaintiffs are entitled to receive between 12.5% and 16.66% of the market value of the gas substances produced from the leased land. The Operator and Ownership Group are responsible for the proper determination, calculation, distribution, and payment of royalties due and owing to the Royalty Owner Plaintiffs on the market value of the Full-Well Stream and gas substances produced in the BEC or in connection therewith.

The production from each BEC well flows into a central gathering system, as well as primary separators, which removes condensate and water. The gas from the wells is then commingled into a single stream and delivered to the Gas Treating Facility where hydrogen sulfide is extracted and converted into elemental sulfur. The gas stream exiting the "tailgate" of the Gas Treating Facility is composed primarily of hydrocarbons, which are then compressed and moved to a dehydration facility, where water is [*7] removed. The gas stream then enters the BEC Gas Plant, which extracts the valuable hydrocarbons, such as ethane, propane, butane, and natural gasoline. The marketable products produced at the BEC include sulfur, residue gas, carbon dioxide, and natural gas.

The Ownership Group employs a "cost netting rate" to fix the price of the Full-Well Stream and impose proper and legal costs on the royalty owners. The plaintiffs in this case allege that additional and unreasonable costs are passed down to them through this system of determining royalty payments. From January 1988 through June 2005, Plaintiffs allege that the Royalty Owner Plaintiffs were paid $12,050,454.53 in royalties. The class owns a decimal interest in the BEC Field production in the amount of 0.04002928, which, according to Plaintiffs, means that the Ownership Group paid the Royalty Owner Plaintiffs royalties based upon total field production valued at $301,040,501.60. Plaintiffs contend that the actual value of the total field production for that period was in excess of $3 billion.

On January 26, 1998, Ms. Aline Moye commenced the action entitled Aline Moye, etc., et al. v. ExxonMobil Corporation, et al., Civil Action No. [*8] CV-98-20, in the Circuit Court of Monroe County, Alabama. (Doc. 12.) The Moye action alleged claims against ExxonMobil arising out of its royalty calculation practices with respect to gas and gas substances produced from the BEC. Id. On March 24, 2003, the Monroe County Circuit Court certified a voluntary, opt-out litigation class of royalty owners in the BEC, pursuant to Alabama Rules of Civil Procedure 23(a) and 23(b)(3). Id. After approximately seven years of litigation, mediation, and settlement negotiation, the class representatives in Moye, class counsel, and ExxonMobil reached a proposed settlement. (Doc. 24.) On June 1, 2005, the Monroe County Circuit Court entered an order preliminarily approving the settlement and conditionally certifying a settlement class. Id. Notice of the settlement was both published and mailed to class members. Id. After the time for objecting to or opting out of the class settlement had expired and this Court denied Plaintiff's motion for an injunction under the All Writs Act, the State Court conducted a settlement fairness hearing on December 20, 2005. Id. That court then entered its Final Judgment approving the settlement.

---

[5] Plaintiffs Rosetta G. Flowers, Stanley C. Godwin, Clark Ziglar, Bobby Ziglar, Autry Ziglar, and Sandra Wilson are plaintiffs who receive royalties for gas units that are still in production, while plaintiff Fed Stanley, Jr., receives royalties for a gas unit that has been plugged and abandoned.

Plaintiffs chose not to opt out of the Moye settlement, thus participating [*9] in the benefits of that agreement. Id. Plaintiffs Flowers and Godwin were ultimately the only members of the more than six hundred member settlement class who objected to the proposed settlement in any form. Id. Their objections were overruled by the State Court.

III. Summary Judgment Standard.

Summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The party moving for summary judgment "always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of [the evidence] which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The movant can meet this burden by presenting evidence showing that there is no genuine dispute of material fact, or by showing that the nonmoving party has failed to present evidence in support of some element of its case on which it bears the ultimate burden of proof. Id. at 322-23. In evaluating the arguments of the movant, the court must view the evidence in [*10] the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Mize v. Jefferson City Bd. of Educ., 93 F.3d 739, 742 (11th Cir. 1996).

Once the moving party has met his burden, Rule 56(e) "requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings and by [his] own affidavits, or by the 'depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file,' designate 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)). "A factual dispute is genuine only if a 'reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.'" Info. Sys. & Networks Corp. v. City of Atlanta, 281 F.3d 1220, 1224 (11th Cir. 2002) (quoting United States v. Four Parcels of Real Property, 941 F.2d 1428, 1437 (11th Cir. 1991)).

IV. Discussion.

According to Plaintiffs, ExxonMobil has combined and conspired with the other members of the Ownership Group to plug and abandon wells in some sections of the BEC, while draining those sections from adjacent and nearby wells, thereby devaluing and misappropriating the plaintiffs' mineral interests. (Doc. 63, p. 2.) They allege that "[i]n order to successfully drain [their] minerals, ExxonMobil together with the other Defendants exercised oligopoly powers in the field to prevent exploration, development, and production by other drillers." Id. By doing this, Plaintiffs contend that ExxonMobil and the other defendants in this case violated the antitrust laws of the United States "and generally failed to act as a reasonably [*11] prudent operator in connection with the [BEC]." Id.

Plaintiffs' remaining claims against ExxonMobil are for violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act and breach of implied covenants relating to their drainage theory. (See Exhibit A to January 4, 2007, Hearing.)

A. Release.

As set out in the parties' Settlement Agreement and Release, upon receipt of the settlement proceeds, all claims, asserted or unasserted, were released and discharged.[6] Like any contract, a release must be interpreted by

---

[6] The Agreement provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

> 3.17 Release and Indemnification of the Companny
>
> a. Upon the Company's payment of the Settlement Proceeds under paragraph 3.11, above, each Class Representative and Settlement Class Member shall be deemed and adjudged to release, acquit and forever discharge the Company from any and all claims, demands, damages (whether actual or punitive), debts, liabilities, accounts and causes of action of every kind and nature, whether in law or in equity, arising in contract or in tort, including but not limited to claims for alleged fraud, breach of fiduciary duties, accounting, conversion, suppression, negligence, joint enterprise, [*13] conspiracy, unjust enrichment, constructive trust, declaratory relief, injunctive relief, wantonness, and every other claim or theory of recovery, legal or equitable, of any type or character whatsoever, directly or indirectly, whether asserted or not, that he, she or it may have had or may now have as a result of, or arising or resulting from the calculation, payment, and reporting of royalties on natural gas . . . produced from BEC by the Company . . . .

(Doc. 43, Exhibit B.)

ascertaining the intentions of the parties expressed in the written agreement, and full effect must be given to those intentions. See, e.g., Johnston v. Bridges, 288 Ala. 156, 258 So. 2d 866, 871 (Ala. 1972). Alabama law requires that releases "must have effect according to their terms and the intentions of the parties thereto." Ala. Code § 12-21-109. Even though the Monroe County Circuit Court did not have jurisdiction to adjudicate claims grounded in federal antitrust law, it did have the jurisdiction to approve a settlement of all claims submitted to it, including antitrust claims. See Adams v. Robertson, 676 So. 2d 1265, 1301 (Ala. 1995) ("Even where a court does not have the power to adjudicate a claim, it may still approve release of that claim as a condition of the settlement of an action before it."). However, as Plaintiffs point out [*12] in their response to ExxonMobil's motion, the Moye release does not dispose of the claims alleged in the Second Amended Complaint.[7] (Doc. 64, p. 5.) The claims no longer arise out of the calculation, payment, and reporting of royalties. Instead, as stated above, the claims are based on ExxonMobil's alleged drainage activities, which appear to not be released under the language of the Moye settlement. Therefore, the endorsement on the reverse of the Moye settlement checks does not appear to be a general release of all Plaintiffs' claims in the Second Amended Complaint.

B. Plaintiffs' Antitrust Claims.

Plaintiffs contend that "[i]n order to completely and successfully drain Plaintiffs [sic] minerals ExxonMobil prevented competitors from drilling in those shut-in sections." (Doc. 64, p. 5.) As a result of ExxonMobil's actions, Plaintiffs allege that their mineral interests in the shut-in sections were devalued. Id. The "gravamen" of Plaintiffs' complaint is that ExxonMobil's drainage scheme would not have been [*14] possible unless they could prevent competitors from drilling in the closed sections. Id. Plaintiffs believe that by alleging ExxonMobil "committed acts designed to restrain competition in a market for its benefit and to the detriment of others," they have alleged "precisely the kind of injury the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." Id.

ExxonMobil argues that it is entitled to summary judgment on the first and second counts of the Second Amended Complaint[8] due to the fact that "[b]ecause no antitrust injury is or can be alleged, plaintiffs cannot assert a valid claim under the federal antitrust laws. Accordingly, plaintiffs are without standing to assert an antitrust cause of action against ExxonMobil." (Doc. 43, p. 23.) ExxonMobil avers that Plaintiffs' antitrust claims fail because they have not identified an antitrust injury and are without standing to assert an antitrust cause of action. (Doc. 43, p. 23.)

An analysis of standing requires the Court to examine the allegations contained within Plaintiffs' Complaint. See Amey, Inc. v. Gulf Abstract & Title, Inc., 758 F.2d 1486, 1497 (11th Cir. 1985). A private plaintiff seeking to recover under the antitrust laws must have standing beyond the customary "injury in fact" and "case in controversy" required by [*15] Article III of the Constitution. Florida Seed Co. v. Monsanto Co., 105 F.3d 1372, 1374 (11th Cir. 1997) (citing Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1448 (11th Cir. 1991)). The Eleventh Circuit follows a two-pronged approach in determining whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust suit. Id. First, the plaintiff must prove that it has suffered an "antitrust injury" - an injury which "the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Id. (quoting Brunswick v. Pueblo Bowl-

---

[7] The Court is aware of the fact that ExxonMobil's motion for summary judgment was filed prior to the Court granting Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File Second Amended Complaint (Doc. 54). (Doc. 61.) However, in Plaintiffs' previously filed response to ExxonMobil's Supplement to Motion to Dismiss (Doc. 36) they directed the Court's attention to language in paragraph 3.17 of the Settlement Agreement which states:

> The Released Claims do not include claims related to oil or condensate produced from BEC, claims for drainage, or any other claims unrelated to the calculation, payment, or reporting of royalties on gas produced from BEC and/or on all gas substances extracted from such gas, as set forth above.

(Doc. 43, Exhibit B (emphasis added).)

[8] ExxonMobil's motion seeks summary judgment on the first through third counts of the Amended Complaint, which were all claims arising under the federal antitrust laws. However, under the Second Amended Complaint only the first two counts allege antitrust injuries, while Count Three deals with alleged breaches of implied covenants relating to Plaintiffs' drainage theory claims.

O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Amey, 758 F.2d at 1492-93. Second, the plaintiff is required to "establish that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws." Id. (citing Municipal Utilities Bd. of Albertville v. Alabama Power Company, 934 F.2d 1493, 1499 (11th Cir. 1991)). The Eleventh Circuit has adopted the "target area" test that was used by the Fifth Circuit to determine whether a plaintiff has standing and is within the market affected by the alleged antitrust violations. See Austin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Ala., 903 F.2d 1385, 1388 (11th Cir. 1990); Amey, 758 F.2d at 1496.[9] The test requires a plaintiff to both "'prove that he is within that sector of the economy endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry' and that he or she is 'the target against which anticompetitive activity is directed.'" Florida Seed, 105 F.3d at 1374 (quoting National Indep. Theatre Exhibitors, Inc. v. Buena Vista Distribution Co., 748 F.2d 602, 608 (11th Cir. 1984)). Basically, the plaintiff "must show that it is a customer or competitor in the relevant antitrust market." Id. (citing Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)).

ExxonMobil contends that "[i]n an effort to manufacture an effect [*16] on competition, plaintiffs characterize their relationship with ExxonMobil as that of a buyer and seller." (Doc. 43, p. 25.) According to ExxonMobil, this characterization is incorrect as a matter of law, as title to the gas stream upon severance at the well vests in it and not the individual Royalty Owner Plaintiffs. Id. Therefore, ExxonMobil believes that the correct representation of the basis of Plaintiffs' alleged injury is as a lessor owed a contractual obligation and not as a competitor or market participant. Id. at 26.

In Alabama, as well as several other states, title to oil and gas vests in the lessee under the non-ownership theory, "which recognizes the migratory nature of oil and gas and requires actual possession to establish ownership." NCNB Texas Nat. Bank v. West, 631 So. 2d 212, 223 (Ala. 1993). Therefore, the lessor landowner has "'the right to reduce the oil and gas to possession or to sever this right for economic consideration.'" Id. (quoting Sun Oil Co. v. Oswell, 62 So. 2d 783, 787 (1953)). A "royalty owner is not considered . . . to be engaged in any 'sale' of gas." Mobil Oil Corp. v. Fed. Power Comm'n, 463 F.2d 256, 260, 149 U.S. App. D.C. 310 (D.C. 1971). For states following both ownership and non-ownership theories, once the gas exits the mouth of the well, "the entire ownership of the gas is in the lessee, none being reserved in the lessor." J.M. Huber Corp. v. Denman, 367 F.2d 104, 113-14 (5th Cir. 1966). The lessor simply [*17] is not a seller of gas, to say otherwise would be tantamount to saying that "[t]he developer of a shopping center [becomes] a seller of food because he leases to a supermarket on percentage rental terms." Mobil Oil Corp. v. Fed. Power Comm'n, 463 F.2d 256, 262, 149 U.S. App. D.C. 310 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

ExxonMobil urges that since all Plaintiffs owned was a right to receive payments for the sale of gas pursuant to the terms of the mineral leases, Plaintiffs cannot be sellers of natural gas. (Doc. 43, p. 28.) According to ExxonMobil, Plaintiffs cannot be considered consumers in the market for gas processing services because they have no gas to sell or be processed. Id. Therefore, it argues that since Plaintiffs are neither suppliers nor consumers in any relevant market, they could not have suffered an antitrust injury. Id. ExxonMobil relies upon the Tenth Circuit opinion in Elliott Indus. Ltd. Partnership v. BP America Prod. Co., 407 F.3d 1091 (10th Cir. 2005), in which the plaintiffs argued that BP and ConocoPhillips had formed an illegal cartel to horizontally fix prices for gas processing services at anti-competitively high levels and injured the class by depressing the gas' wellhead value resulting in the underpayment of royalties. Id. at 1123. That court upheld the dismissal of the plaintiff's antitrust claims because it failed to allege a proper antitrust injury. Id. at 1125. The [*18] Court noted that any injury suffered by Elliott as a result of the processing fee was "not an antitrust injury because it ha[d] no adverse effect on competition or consumers." Id. The Tenth Circuit emphasized that "although Elliot trie[d] to characterize itself as a consumer of gas processing services and also a supplier of natural gas and NGLs, Elliott [was] a royalty interest owner in a lease to Appellees," thus concluding that "[m]ere injury as a landlord or lessor entitled to royalties would not by itself be the kind of injury to competition that the antitrust laws are designed to prevent." Id. (citing R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 148 (9th Cir. 1989) (en banc) (holding that the allegations of the lessors that the lessees conspired to depress production of geothermal steam and thereby reduce royalty payments were insufficient as a matter of law because the lessors were not competitors in the same market as the alleged malefactors)). Even if BP and ConocoPhillips' conduct was harmful to competition, the court did not find that Elliott's injury was a result of the alleged anticompetitive behavior. Id. (citing Pool Water Prods. v. Olin Corp., 258 F.3d 1024, 1033 (9th Cir. 2001)). "An anticompetitive injury would exist if, for example, Elliott had alleged that Appellees were conspiring with gas purchasers [*19] to keep downstream sales prices artificially low, such that Elliott's resulting royalty payments were reduced." Id.

---

[9] The Eleventh Circuit adopted the case law of the former Fifth Circuit handed down as of September 30, 1981, in Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1981) (en banc).

In a previously filed response to ExxonMobil's Motion to Dismiss, Plaintiffs attempted to distinguish the decision in Elliott from the facts of the case at hand. They noted that in Elliott, 407 F.3d at 1123, the relevant market activities were post production activities "one tier removed downstream from the Plaintiffs' alleged harm," whereas in the present action Plaintiffs have alleged that the anticompetitive acts occurred at, or before, the production level. According to Plaintiffs, "ExxonMobil exercised its monopoly power and conspired with others to shut-in some sections in BEC and proceeded to drain the shut-in sections from nearby wells it owned and controlled." (Doc. 64, p. 5.)

ExxonMobil believes that the antitrust claims raised by Plaintiffs mirror those alleged in Elliott, and, therefore, summary judgment should be granted for the same reasons. (Doc. 43, p. 29.) It also urges the Court that the parties' relationship in this case is governed by the mineral lease and not by competition. (Doc. 43, p. 30.) The business relationship between Plaintiffs and ExxonMobil was cemented in the form [*20] of the mineral leases. Therefore, ExxonMobil's duties to Plaintiffs are "not derived from the antitrust laws' vision of how competitors should behave; they are derived from the [leases] it has with [P]laintiffs." UNR Industries, Inc. v. Continental Insurance Co., 607 F. Supp. 855, 860, 46 B.R. 430 (N.D. Ill. 1984). Finally, ExxonMobil contends that Plaintiffs cannot state a claim based on the allegations relating to gas treating and processing costs - Plaintiffs do not own the rights to explore for, develop, or market the gas and gas related products. (Doc. 43, p. 32.) The mineral leases grant the lessee with the exclusive right to explore, remove, and dispose of the minerals. In Plaintiffs' complaint, they state "Royalty Owner Plaintiffs' property interests in this matter is created by virtue of an oil and gas lease whereby the Ownership Group and others obtained the exclusive right to explore, develop and extract (produce) the minerals, including all the constituent parts of the Full-Well Stream as defined herein." (Doc. 63, p. 13.) Plaintiffs also allege that "[t]he lessee under an oil and gas lease undertakes the exploration and development of the property to extract the product." Id.

Plaintiffs have previously argued that they have alleged an antitrust injury and have standing [*21] to bring an action alleging an antitrust violation under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. (Doc. 27, p. 9.) They turned to the Supreme Court case of Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982), to support an expansive reading of section 4. In McCready, the Court "recognized, '[t]he statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers . . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.'" Id. at 472 (quoting Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236, 68 S. Ct. 996, 92 L. Ed. 1328 (1948)). Relying on McCready, as well as the Eleventh Circuit opinion in Amey, 758 F.2d 1486, Plaintiffs contended that they have identified a market area that was adversely affected by the alleged antitrust activities and pleaded facts which support allegations that their alleged injury occurred within that market area. Plaintiffs have offered that they "participate in the market as both producers of Gas Substances and purchasers of Defendants' gas production services, therefore, the alleged injuries, i.e., harming the reservoir, etc., flow as a 'foreseeable' and 'necessary' step in furthering the objectives of the conspiracy . . . ." (Doc. 27, p. 13.) They believe that this puts them "squarely" within the market endangered [*22] by the alleged conspiracy. Id. Plaintiffs argue that their allegations that ExxonMobil's alleged anticompetitive activities have irreparably harmed the BEC reservoir, devalued their property, and resulted in the underpayment of royalties are collectively "antitrust injuries" within the meaning of section 4 of the Clayton Act. Plaintiffs cite to Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979), to support their contention, but the case states that "acquiring goods or services for personal use" is enough to show that there has been an injury to property "when the price of those goods or services is artificially inflated by reason of the anticompetitive conduct complained of." Id. at 339. However, as established in the preceding paragraphs, Plaintiffs are not acquiring goods or services for their own personal use. Rather, they are royalty owners who have leased away their right to the minerals in question. "In exchange for consideration, including the payment of royalt[ies], ExxonMobil was given the exclusive right to explore for and develop the leased minerals." (Doc. 68, pp. 3-4.) They are not consumers of ExxonMobil's services.

Plaintiffs simply have not alleged an antitrust injury because they are neither consumers nor competitors in the relevant [*23] market. Their allegations regarding the exploration, development, and production of the gas substances at the BEC does not establish that they are market participants. In fact, at most, the allegations, if proven, amount to nothing more than a breach of the lease between the parties. The rights to explore, develop, and produce gas substances at the BEC have been leased to ExxonMobil, and, therefore, Plaintiffs cannot state a claim for antitrust injury and are without standing to bring such a claim. Plaintiffs' reliance on McCready is misplaced because unlike the plaintiff in that case who was a customer with the right to choose her mental health care provider from the market affected by antitrust violations, Plaintiffs do not have a right to choose gas processors or leasehold developers so as to become participants in the alleged relevant market.

Plaintiffs are correct in asserting that the fact that antitrust liability may be predicated on acts that are otherwise a breach of contract does not immunize the anticompetitive activity. See, e.g., Maris Distributing Co. v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 302 F.3d 1207, 1219 (11th Cir. 2002) ("Anticompetitive actions are not immunized by virtue of being memorialized in a contract."); City of Vernon v. Southern California Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1361, 1368 (9th Cir. 1992). However, a plaintiff must still have standing [*24] to bring the antitrust action independent of the claim based upon breach of contract. Contract power should not be automatically equated with market power because to do so "would place significant additional risks on such legitimate business practices as exclusive dealing arrangements . . . ." Maris, 302 F.3d at 1224 (citing Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 438 (3rd Cir. 1997)). Even though "a party who exercises contract power may have market power and may violate the antitrust laws under some circumstances, the mere existence and exercise of contract power does not show that a defendant had market power or violated the law." Id. at 1219 (emphasis in original).

V. Conclusion.

For the reasons set forth above, ExxonMobil's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 42) is due to be GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. ExxonMobil is entitled to summary judgment as to Counts One and Two of Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint.

Done this 2nd day of March 2007.

/s/ L. Scott Coogler

L. SCOTT COOGLER

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Paul v. Intel Corp. (In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig.)

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

March 7, 2007, Decided

MDL Docket No. 05-1717-JJF, Civil Action No. 05-485-JJF, CONSOLIDATED ACTION

Reporter

476 F. Supp. 2d 452 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16134 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,631

IN RE: INTEL CORP. MICROPROCESSOR ANTITRUST LITIGATION; PHIL PAUL, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. INTEL CORPORATION, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Magistrate's recommendation at Paul v. Intel Corp. (In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig.), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103979 (D. Del., May 18, 2007)

Prior History: Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v. Intel Corp. (In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig.), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3407 (D. Del., Jan. 12, 2007)

Core Terms

allegations, commerce, subject matter jurisdiction, motion to dismiss, contends, prices, state law claim, microprocessors, antitrust, Sherman Act, domestic, reasonably foreseeable, consumer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), a court is authorized to dismiss a complaint if the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the claims. Motions brought under Rule 12(b)(1) may present either a facial or factual challenge to the court's subject matter jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In reviewing a facial challenge under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), the court must accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. The court's inquiry under Rule 12(b)(1) is limited to the allegations in the complaint, the documents referenced in or attached to the complaint, and matters in the public record. However, the court may consider documents attached as exhibits to a motion to dismiss without converting the motion to dismiss to a motion for summary judgment, if the plaintiff's claims are based on the documents and the documents are undisputedly authentic.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN3[] Jurisdiction, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(3), subject matter jurisdiction may be raised at any time during the course of a case and may be raised sua sponte by the court. Once the court's subject matter jurisdiction over a complaint is challenged, the plaintiff bears the burden of persuasion to establish that subject matter jurisdiction exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN4[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The Sherman Act was amended by the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 (FTAIA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a, in 1982. The FTAIA carves out activity involving foreign commerce from the reach of the Sherman Act unless the conduct has a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on United States commerce, and the effect gives rise to a claim under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN5[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 (FTAIA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a, explicitly bars antitrust actions alleging restraints in foreign markets for inputs that are used abroad to manufacture downstream products that may later be imported into the United States. Clearly, the domestic effects in such a case, if any, would obviously not be direct, much less substantial and reasonably foreseeable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN6[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Foreign commerce is preeminently a matter of national concern, and therefore, it is important for the Federal Government to speak with a single, unified voice. Congress has spoken under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 (FTAIA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a, with the direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effects test, and Congress' intent would be subverted if state antitrust laws were interpreted to reach conduct which the federal law could not.

Counsel: [1] Michael D. Hausfeld, Esquire; Daniel A. Small, Esquire; Brent W. Landau, Esquire and Allyson B. Baker, Esquire of COHEN, MILSTEIN, HAUSFELD & TOLL, P.L.L.C., Washington, D.C. James L. Holzman, Esquire; J. Clayton Athey, Esquire and Laina M. Herbert, Esquire of PRICKETT JONES & ELLIOTT, P.A., Wilmington, Delaware. Interim Liaison Counsel for the Class Plaintiffs.

David M. Balabanian, Esquire; James L. Hunt, Esquire; Christopher B. Hockett, Esquire and Nora C. Cregan, Esquire of BINGHAM McCUTCHEN LLP, San Francisco, California. Richard A. Ripley, Esquire of BINGHAM McCUTCHEN LLP, Washington, D.C. Richard L. Horwitz, Esquire and W. Harding Drane, Jr., Esquire of POTTER ANDERSON & CORROON LLP, Wilmington, Delaware. Attorneys for Defendant Intel Corporation.

Judges: Joseph J. Farnan Jr., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Joseph J. Farnan Jr.

Opinion

[*453] MEMORANDUM OPINION

March 7, 2007

Wilmington, Delaware

Farnan, District Judge.

Pending before the Court is Defendant Intel Corporation's Motion To Dismiss Plaintiffs' Foreign Conduct Claims (D.I. 221 in Civil Action No. 05-485 and D.I. 311 in MDL Docket No. 05-1717). [1] For the reasons discussed the Court will grant [2] Defendant's Motion.

BACKGROUND

Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. and AMD International Sales & Service, Ltd. (collectively, "AMD") filed this action against Intel Corporation and Intel Kabushiki Kaisha alleging antitrust claims under the Sherman Act, violations of the California Business and Professions Code, and tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. Following the filing of AMD's action, multiple class action lawsuits were filed. Those lawsuits have since been consolidated and a First Amended [*454] Consolidated Complaint (the "Amended Complaint") has been filed by Interim Liaison Counsel for Class Plaintiffs.

By their Amended Complaint, Class Plaintiffs seek to represent a class comprising United States consumers, both individuals and companies from numerous states, who purchased computers containing Intel x86 microprocessors in the United [3] States at allegedly inflated prices. The allegations of Class Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint are similar to, and at times, identical to the allegations of AMD's Complaint. Like AMD, Class Plaintiffs seek relief under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Count I), alleging that Intel has engaged in anticompetitive conduct in the United States which has resulted in Intel obtaining an unlawful world-wide monopoly over the x86 microprocessor market. Class Plaintiffs allege that they have been injured and will continue to be injured by this conduct "by paying more for x86 microprocessors purchased directly from Intel than they would have paid and would pay in the future in the absence of Intel's unlawful acts, including paying more for personal computers and other products in which x86 microprocessors are a component, as a result of higher prices paid for x86 microprocessors by the manufacture of those products." (D.I. 49 at P 245.) In connection with their Sherman Act claim, Class Plaintiffs request the Court to enjoin Intel from engaging in the violations alleged in the Amended Complaint.

Class Plaintiffs also raise a variety of state law claims, including: [4] (1) a claim based on Section 16720 of the California Business and Professional Code for Intel's alleged participation with other co-conspirators in "a continuing unlawful trust in restraint of . . . trade and commerce" (Count II); (2) a claim based on Section 17200 et seq. of the California Business and Professional Code for unfair competition (Count IV); (3) a claim based on violation of California state tort law prohibiting monopolies (Count III); (4) a claim under the laws of twenty states, including the state of California, for antitrust and restraint of trade violations (Count V); (5) a claim under the laws of twenty-three states for violations of state consumer protection and unfair competition laws (Count VI); and (6) a claim under California common law for unjust enrichment and disgorgement of profits (Count VII). In connection with these claims, Class Plaintiffs seek a variety of relief, including punitive damages, treble damages, disgorgement of profits, the establishment of a constructive trust from which the Class Plaintiffs can seek restitution based on the disgorgement of profits, the costs of bringing this lawsuit, and reasonable attorneys' fees.

[1] In citing to additional documents throughout this Memorandum Opinion, the Court will refer to the docket item numbers used in Civil Action No. 05-485-JJF.

By the instant Motion, [5] Intel requests the Court to dismiss the foreign conduct claims alleged in the Amended Complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. [2] The parties have fully briefed Intel's Motion, and therefore, this matter is ready for the Court's review.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1), the Court is authorized to dismiss a complaint if the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the claims. Motions brought under Rule 12(b)(1) may present either a facial or factual challenge to the Court's subject matter jurisdiction.

[*455] In this case, the Court is presented with a facial challenge to subject matter jurisdiction. HN2[] In reviewing a facial challenge under Rule 12(b)(1), the Court must accept all factual allegations [6] in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. The Court's inquiry under Rule 12(b)(1) is limited to the allegations in the complaint, the documents referenced in or attached to the complaint, and matters in the public record. Gould Elecs., Inc. v. United States, 220 F.3d 169, 176 (3d Cir. 2000). However, the Court may consider documents attached as exhibits to a motion to dismiss without converting the motion to dismiss to a motion for summary judgment, if the plaintiff's claims are based on the documents and the documents are undisputedly authentic. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. White Consolidated Indus., Inc., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993).

HN3[] Pursuant to Rule 12(h)(3), subject matter jurisdiction may be raised at any time during the course of a case and may be raised sua sponte by the Court. Once the Court's subject matter jurisdiction over a complaint is challenged, the plaintiff bears the burden of persuasion to establish that subject matter jurisdiction exists. Kehr Packages, Inc. v. Fidelcor, Inc., 926 F.2d 1406 (3d Cir. 1991).

DISCUSSION

I. The Parties' Contentions

[7] By its Motion, Intel contends that the allegations of foreign conduct contained in Class Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 ("FTAIA"). Intel contends that Class Plaintiffs' foreign conduct allegations are virtually identical to the allegations that the Court struck from AMD's Complaint, and therefore, these allegations should also be stricken here. Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v. Intel Corporation, 452 F. Supp. 2d 555 (D. Del. 2006). Intel contends that Class Plaintiffs' claims are even more remote than AMD's claims, because Class Plaintiffs allege the same chain of events alleged by AMD, but go on to further allege that the weakening of AMD in the market resulted in Intel charging higher prices overseas to third parties for microprocessors who then installed these higher priced Intel chips into computers that were eventually sold in the United States Market, which in turn led to higher retail prices for those computers in the United States. Intel contends that this winding chain of events does not evidence the

---

[2] Intel has also moved separately from this Motion to dismiss Class Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint for a variety of other reasons. Briefing on that Motion was completed on February 28, 2007, and the Court will address that Motion by separate Memorandum Opinion and Order.

"direct, substantial and foreseeable effect on U.S. commerce" [8] that is required for subject matter jurisdiction under the FTAIA.

Intel also contends that the various state law claims asserted by Class Plaintiffs are limited by the FTAIA. Intel's argument rests on both the Supremacy Clause, as well as on the letter and interpretation of the various state laws, which Intel contends contain provisions making them consistent with federal law or precluding them from applying to foreign conduct.

In response, Class Plaintiffs contend that Intel's foreign conduct is relevant to proving the unlawfulness of Intel's domestic conduct, and therefore, Class Plaintiffs can base their claims on foreign misconduct, even if Intel cannot ultimately be held liable for that foreign misconduct. In support of its position, Class Plaintiffs direct the Court to the Special Master's discovery decision concluding that foreign conduct was relevant to AMD's domestic claims.

Class Plaintiffs also contend that Intel's foreign conduct satisfies the FTAIA's domestic commerce exception. Specifically, Class Plaintiffs contend that Intel's foreign conduct has a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on domestic [*456] commerce and gives rise to Plaintiffs' antitrust claims.

[9] II. Whether The Court Has Jurisdiction Over Class Plaintiffs' Sherman Act Claims Based On Intel's Alleged Foreign Conduct

HN4[] The Sherman Act was amended by the FTAIA in 1982. The FTAIA carves out activity involving foreign commerce from the reach of the Sherman Act unless the conduct has a "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect" on United States commerce, and the effect gives rise to a claim under the Sherman Act. F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd v. Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. 155, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004) (emphasis and brackets in original).

In its previous decision related to AMD's foreign conduct allegations, the Court analyzed the application of the FTAIA to virtually the same allegations asserted here by Class Plaintiffs. Intel, 452 F. Supp. 2d at 559-563. The Court finds no reason to depart from its previous analysis. Class Plaintiffs contend that the appropriate focus of the direct, substantial and foreseeable inquiry is the effect on commerce and not the effect on any particular plaintiff. However, the effect on commerce is exactly what the Court considered in the context of AMD's motion. Here, Class Plaintiffs make the same allegations as AMD, [10] and therefore, Class Plaintiffs' allegations have the same "twists and turns" that the Court noted with respect to AMD's allegations, plus additional "forks in the road" concerning whether the weakened condition of rivals like AMD ultimately led Intel to charge higher prices for its microprocessors, which in turn caused original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs") to charge retailers higher wholesale prices for PCs, which in turn caused retailers to pass that price increase on to consumers in the form of higher retail prices for PCs. That this speculative chain of events is insufficient to create the direct, substantial and foreseeable effects on commerce required by the FTAIA has been confirmed by other courts who have considered similar allegations concerning the downstream effects on commerce of component products. [3] See e.g., United Phosphorus, Ltd. v. Angus Chem. Co., 131 F. Supp. 2d 1003 (N.D. Ill. 2001), aff'd 322 F.3d 942 (7th Cir. 2003) (HN5[] "The FTAIA explicitly bars antitrust actions alleging restraints in foreign markets for inputs . . . that are used abroad to manufacture downstream products . . . that may later be imported into the United States. [11] Clearly, the domestic effects in such a case, if any, would obviously not be 'direct,' much less 'substantial' and 'reasonably foreseeable.'")

As for the "new" case law that Class Plaintiffs raise in their Answering Brief, the Court notes that each of these cases pre-date the Supreme Court's decision in F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd v. Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. 155, 124 S.

[3] Though discussed in the context of the causation inquiry, the Court noted in its previous decision that allegations that Intel engaged in overseas conduct which resulted in higher PC prices and loss of consumer choice in the United States "are not direct domestic effects of any alleged foreign conduct of Intel, but secondary and indirect effects that are also the by-product of numerous factors relevant to market conditions and the like." Intel, 452 F. Supp. 2d at 561.

Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004), the seminal case interpreting the FTAIA. Further, the Court has already addressed several of the cases cited by Class Plaintiffs in the context of AMD's [12] motion to dismiss and concluded that they are inapplicable. Intel, 452 F. Supp. 2d at 562-563.

Class Plaintiffs also direct the Court to the Special Master's decision to allow [*457] AMD and Class Plaintiffs to obtain foreign discovery to prove their claims related to monopoly power and anticompetitive conduct. The Special Master's decision was rendered after this Court's decision regarding AMD's motion to dismiss and pertains to the scope of discovery concerning the parties' "domestic commerce" claims. Indeed, the Special Master acknowledged this Court's decision to dismiss AMD's foreign conduct claims and noted that he was not authorized to decide any substantive issues in connection with that decision. Accordingly, the Court finds no conflict between its decision to dismiss Class Plaintiffs' foreign conduct claims and the Special Master's discovery decision.

In sum, the Court concludes that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction under the FTAIA over Class Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims to the extent those claims are based on the alleged foreign conduct of Intel. Accordingly, the Court will grant Intel's Motion to dismiss and strike paragraphs 145-149, 159-162, 169, 178-179, 185-187, 190, [13] 193, 197-198, 204-205 and 210 of the Amended Complaint.

III. Whether The Court Has Jurisdiction Over Class Plaintiffs' State Law Claims Based On Intel's Alleged Foreign Conduct

With respect to the state antitrust law claims asserted by Class Plaintiffs, Intel contends that these claims are also limited by the FTAIA. According to Intel, a contrary approach that would run afoul of both the Foreign Commerce Clause and the Supremacy Clause. Intel also contends that Class Plaintiffs' state consumer protection claims are modeled after the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTCA") which applies the same "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable test" to foreign commerce that is applied under the FTAIA.

In response, Class Plaintiffs contend that their state law claims are not limited by any statutory provisions comparable to the FTAIA. Class Plaintiffs also "dispute Intel's assertion on this motion to dismiss that application of these state laws to Intel's foreign conduct would be unconstitutional," but decline to fully address that argument in light of their assertion that Intel's foreign conduct falls within the reach of the FTAIA. (D.I. 263 at 1.)

The Court has already concluded [14] that Class Plaintiffs have not satisfied the jurisdictional prerequisites of the FTAIA with respect to their foreign conduct allegations. Class Plaintiffs have also not demonstrated that their state law claims should be applied beyond the boundaries set by the FTAIA and the FTCA. As the Supreme Court has recognized, HN6[↑] "[f]oreign commerce is pre-eminently a matter of national concern," and therefore, it is important for the Federal Government to speak with a single, unified voice. Japan Line, LTD v. County of Los Angeles, 441 U.S. 434, 448, 99 S. Ct. 1813, 60 L. Ed. 2d 336 (1979). Here, Congress has spoken under the FTAIA with the "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effects" test, and the Court is persuaded that Congress' intent would be subverted if state antitrust laws were interpreted to reach conduct which the federal law could not. Similarly, Defendants have pointed out that numerous states turn to the FTCA for guidance in applying their consumer protection laws, and the FTCA applies a standard substantially similar to that applied under the FTAIA. Plaintiff has not offered any argument to the contrary. Accordingly, in the circumstances of this case, the Court concludes that Class Plaintiffs [15] state law claims are limited by the reach of their applicable federal counterparts, and therefore, the Court will dismiss Class Plaintiffs' state law claims to [*458] the extent that they are based upon Intel's alleged foreign conduct.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed, the Court will grant Intel's Motion To Dismiss Plaintiffs' Foreign Conduct Claims.

An appropriate Order will be entered.

ORDER

At Wilmington, this 7 day of March 2007, for the reasons discussed in the Memorandum Opinion issued this date;

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Defendant Intel Corporation's Motion To Dismiss Plaintiffs' Foreign Conduct Claims (D.I. 221 in Civ. Act. No. 05-485; D.I. 311 in Civ. Act. No. 05-md-1717) is GRANTED.

2. Class Plaintiffs' claims based on upon Intel Corporation's alleged foreign conduct are DISMISSED, and paragraphs 145-149, 159-162, 169, 178-179, 185-187, 190, 193, 197-198, 204-205 and 210 of the First Amended Consolidated Complaint are STRICKEN.

Joseph J. Farnan Jr.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Amado v. Microsoft Corp.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

March 13, 2007, Decided; March 13, 2007, Filed

CASE NO. SA CV 03-242 DOC (ANx)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96487 *; 2007 WL 9837821

CARLOS ARMANDO AMADO, Plaintiff, v. MICROSOFT CORPORATION, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Affirmed in part and vacated in part by, Remanded by Amado v. Microsoft Corp., 517 F.3d 1353, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 4065 (Fed. Cir., 2008)

Prior History: Microsoft Corp. v. Amado, 549 U.S. 1071, 127 S. Ct. 703, 166 L. Ed. 2d 547, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 8901 (2006)

Core Terms

licenses, infringing, Software, install, sales, counts, patent, products, injunction, user, spreadsheet, per unit, escrow, royalty, customers, permanent injunction, functionality, reexamination, database, damages, dollars, eBay, irreparable harm, parties, irreparable injury, circumstances, discovery, licensees, Dissolve, contempt

Counsel: [*1] For Carlos Armando Amado, Plaintiff: A Max Olson, Charles S Barquiest, Hector G Gallegos, Nicole M Smith, Scott C Moore, Vincent J Belusko, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Morrison & Foerster, Los Angeles, CA.

For Microsoft Corporation, a Washington corporation, Defendant: Ali R Sharifahmadian, Joseph A Micallef, Leslie L Jacobs, Jr., Michael J Songer, Robert Jones Worrall, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Arnold & Porter, Washington, DC; Isabella E Fu, Ronald L Johnston, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Microsoft Corporation, Redmond, WA; James S Blackburn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Arnold & Porter, Los Angeles, CA.

For Microsoft Corporation, Counter Claimant: Ali R Sharifahmadian, Joseph A Micallef, Leslie L Jacobs, Jr., Michael J Songer, Robert Jones Worrall, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Arnold & Porter, Washington, DC; Ronald L Johnston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Isabella E Fu, Microsoft Corporation, Redmond, WA; James S Blackburn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Arnold & Porter, Los Angeles, CA.

For Carlos Armando Amado, Counter Defendant: A Max Olson, Charles S Barquiest, Hector G Gallegos, Scott C Moore, Vincent J Belusko, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Morrison & Foerster, Los Angeles, CA.

For Microsoft Corporation, Counter Claimant: Ali R Sharifahmadian, Leslie L Jacobs, Jr., Michael J Songer, [*2] LEAD ATTORNEYS, Arnold & Porter, Washington, DC; Ronald L Johnston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Isabella E Fu, Microsoft Corporation, Redmond, WA; James S Blackburn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Arnold & Porter, Los Angeles, CA.

For Carlos Armando Amado, Counter Defendant: A Max Olson, Charles S Barquiest, Hector G Gallegos, Scott C Moore, Vincent J Belusko, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Morrison & Foerster, Los Angeles, CA.

Judges: DAVID O. CARTER, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DAVID O. CARTER

Opinion

ORDER [1] DENYING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM JUDGMENT, [2] GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISSOLVE THE PERMANENT INJUNCTION, AND [3] GRANTING IN PART PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR AN ORDER AWARDING PLAINTIFF $ 2.00 PER UNIT FOR INFRINGING SALES FROM JUNE 6, 2005 THROUGH DECEMBER 3, 2006

Before the Court are (1) Defendant Microsoft's Motion for Relief from Judgment, (2) Microsoft's Motion to Dissolve the Permanent Injunction, and (3) Plaintiff Carlos Amado's Motion for an Order Awarding Plaintiff $ 2.00 per Unit for Infringing Sales from June 6, 2005 through December 3, 2006 ("Escrow Motion"). After considering the moving, opposing, and replying papers, as well as oral arguments, the Court hereby (1) DENIES Microsoft's Motion for Relief from Judgment, [*3] (2) GRANTS Microsoft's Motion to Dissolve the Permanent Injunction, and (3) GRANTS IN PART Amado's Escrow Motion.

I. BACKGROUND

A. General Overview and Time line

Plaintiff Carlos Armando Amado ("Amado") holds a number of United States patents related to the interaction between computer database and spreadsheet programs. Defendant Microsoft Corp. ("Microsoft") develops and sells computer software, including database and spreadsheet programs. In March 2003, Amado filed a complaint alleging that Microsoft programs infringed three of his patents. After claim construction, the case was narrowed to the alleged infringement of one patent: United States Patent Number 5,293,615 ("the '615 patent").

After trial, the jury returned a unanimous verdict on June 6, 2005. The jury found that Access 95 and Excel 95, and Office Professional 95, which includes Access 95 and Excel 95, and all subsequent forms of those products infringe claim 21 of the '615 patent both literally and under the doctrine of equivalents. The jury found that Microsoft was liable for direct infringement (35 U.S.C. § 271(a)), inducing infringement (35 U.S.C. § 271(b)), contributory infringement (35 U.S.C. § 271(c)), and infringement [*4] for shipping components outside the United States (35 U.S.C. §§ 271(f)(1) and 271(f)(2)). The other asserted claims of the '615 patent were found not to be infringed. Claim 21 was found not to be invalid for obviousness. The jury also found that Microsoft's infringement was not willful. The parties had previously stipulated that the number of licenses sold between March 7, 1997 and July 31, 2003 were 109,872,000 in the United States and 113,937,800 in foreign markets. The jury awarded damages for the period from March 7, 1997 through July 31, 2003 in the amount of $ 4,400,000 for domestic sales and $ 4,560,000 for foreign sales.

On August 2, 2005, the Court found laches, which barred Amado from recovering damages during the laches period, i.e. prior to March 7, 2003. Because the damages found by the jury reflected a per unit royalty of four cents, the Court awarded Amado a four cent per unit royalty for sales of the infringing products beginning on March 7, 2003. [1] This resulted in an award of $ 5,911,269. [2] At this time, the Court also entered a permanent injunction, upon Amado's motion, enjoining the sale and distribution of:

---

[1] If the sales figures are rounded to the nearest million, they are 110 million for sales in the United States, and 114 million for foreign sales. With these rounded sales figures, the damages figures returned by the jury corresponds precisely to a four cent per unit royalty.

[2] Amado received this $ 5,911,269 damages award, plus interest in December [*6] 2006, after the Court ordered the clerk to close the damages escrow account and transfer the final balance to Amado. The balance as of the date of that order, December 12, 2006, was $ 6,145,302.79.

> any version of Microsoft's Access software or any version [*5] of Microsoft's Office suite of programs that includes Access, that includes the capability of, when loaded on a computer, connecting a spreadsheet program to a database program in a manner that would infringe claim 21 of the '615 patent.

Aug. 2, 2005 Order at 27:23-28. However, the Court stayed the injunction pending the resolution of any appeal in the case. Under the terms of the injunction, during the pendency of the stay, Microsoft was ordered to deposit two dollars per unit for sales of the infringing products into an interest bearing escrow account from June 6, 2005 onward. Id. at 28:13-15. The Court noted that "[t]he ultimate fate of the money paid into this account will depend on subsequent developments in this case, including a potential negotiated settlement between the parties, or an appeal to the Federal Circuit." Id. at 27:14-16.

The parties cross appealed the jury verdict and this Court's judgment to the Federal Circuit. On June 14, 2006, the Federal Circuit affirmed this Court's judgment "in all respects" in a per curiam opinion. See Amado v. Microsoft Corp., 185 Fed. Appx. 953 (Fed. Cir. 2006). However, the Federal Circuit explicitly stated that it did not view the August 2, 2005 Order as having determined the ultimate disposition of the funds Microsoft was required to deposit into the escrow account during the pendency of the stay. Id. Thus, the Federal Circuit returned the issue of distributing the escrow funds to this Court. On August 23, 2006, after rejecting Microsoft's petition for a rehearing en banc, the Federal Circuit issued its mandate.

On September 12, 2006, Plaintiff moved to enforce the injunction on the grounds that it had become effective on August 30, 2006 and that Microsoft's continued sales of the same discs the jury found infringed the '615 patent along with a separate Service Pack 2 "fix" did [*7] not remove the capability of infringement from the products. The Court denied Amado's motion as premature because Microsoft's appeal was still pending as it had petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari.

On October 2, 2006, Amado brought a motion for contempt for Microsoft's failure to make escrow deposits for Software Assurance and Recurring licenses. These license-types were included in the stipulated sales figures upon which the jury verdict was based. By entering into the stipulation as to the total sales of the accused products, Microsoft avoided having to produce the discovery Amado sought into its unit sales and revenue data. Microsoft agreed to the use of the stipulated sales figures at trial and for purposes of the accounting. Due to the stipulation, neither the Court nor the jury made a determination as to whether Software Assurance and Recurring licenses represent "sales of the infringing products." At the October 23, 2006 hearing on this motion, the parties reached a compromise, whereby Microsoft would make additional escrow deposits to bring the amount in the escrow account in line with Amado's expectations based on the stipulated sales figures. Consequently, [*8] the Court withheld any ruling as to whether Software Assurance and Recurring licenses represent sales of the infringing products such that Amado is entitled to a royalty for these license types during the escrow period.

On November 27, 2006, the Supreme Court denied certiorari. Accordingly, under the terms of the injunction, the injunction would have gone into effect on December 4, 2006. However, on December 1, 2006, the Court ordered that the stay remain in effect pending the resolution of the parties' motions relating to the escrow and the injunction. On December 5, 2006, the Court scheduled all such motions for hearing on February 5, 2007 and provided that the stay would remain in effect until seven days after the Court's ruling on these motions.

B. The Reexamination

Following over two years of litigation, the jury's verdict finding the '615 patent valid and that Microsoft Office and Access infringed claim 21 of this patent, and the Court's denial of Microsoft's motion for judgment as a matter of law and motion for a new trial, Microsoft petitioned the Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") to reexamine claim 21 of the '615 patent. The petition was based on two prior art references: (1) [*9] a user's guide to a spreadsheet program called SuperCalc and (2) an article by Judy Duncan describing the Q+E software program. Microsoft relied upon the Duncan article at trial. Microsoft was also aware of the existence of a program called SuperCalc because the '615 patent, a copy of which was attached to Amado's Complaint, describes SuperCalc as prior art. However, Microsoft claims that it did not know the details of SuperCalc's functionality until after trial when it first located the SuperCalc User's Guide.

Microsoft's reexamination petition was granted on September 21, 2005 and the PTO preliminarily rejected claim 21 as anticipated by both the Duncan article and SuperCalc in a non-final office action on April 26, 2006. The PTO examiner concluded that claim 21 was anticipated by the SuperCalc User's Guide and the Duncan article. On July 26, 2006, Amado responded to the preliminary rejection of claim 21. The parties dispute whether Amado's response was consistent with this Court's claim construction or limited the scope of claim 21 in a way that contradicts the evidence and arguments presented at trial. As of the parties' briefing, there has been no final determination by the PTO [*10] regarding the validity of claim 21.

C. License Counts

As discussed above, the jury's verdict and the Court's subsequent rulings were based on the parties' stipulation regarding total sales of the accused products. For example, the jury's damages award was based on the parties' stipulation that 109,872,000 licenses were sold in the United States and 113,937,800 in foreign markets during the relevant time period, March 7, 1997 through July 31, 2003. These figures were based on spreadsheets prepared by Price Waterhouse on behalf of Microsoft and produced by Microsoft during discovery. The spreadsheet figures reflect total license counts for the accused products without any elaboration regarding what types of licenses were included in the total count.

The August 2, 2005 Order required Microsoft to "pay into [escrow] two dollars per unit for sales of the infringing products from June 6, 2005 onward." Aug. 2, 2005 Order at 28:14-15. At the hearing on this Motion, Microsoft agreed with the Court's prediction that assuming monthly sales of the infringing products were in line with the stipulated sales figure, the average sales per month would be five million licenses, resulting in an average [*11] monthly escrow deposit of $ 10 million. However, when Microsoft began making escrow deposits, Amado noticed that the sales numbers were lower than predicted and that Microsoft was reporting "net" license counts, instead of "total" licenses. On November 14, 2005, Amado requested an explanation. In response, Microsoft informed Amado that it was excluding Software Assurance and Recurring licenses because these license types did not represent "sales of the infringing products."

As discussed above, the parties first informed the Court of this dispute in October 2006, when Amado moved to hold Microsoft in contempt for its failure to make escrow deposits for Software Assurance and Recurring licenses. At that time, Microsoft told the Court that Software Assurance licenses and Recurring licenses are accounting mechanisms from its MS Sales database used to record additional revenue related to prior sales. See Decl. of James Borgman in Supp. of Def. Microsoft's Opp'n to Amado's Mot. for Contempt Re: Microsoft's Failure to Make Escrow Deposits Required by Ct. Order ("Borgman Decl."), P 9. Thus, rather than representing sales of products, Microsoft explained, Software Assurance Licenses are multi-year [*12] maintenance agreements and Recurring Licenses represent installment payments. Id. PP 6, 8. According to Microsoft, Recurring licenses relate to the second and third installments payments under volume licenses called Enterprise Agreements. These Enterprise customers purportedly receive the right to make all copies of the licensed software at the time of the first payment, such that Recurring licenses do not correspond to the delivery of additional units of Microsoft products. However, Microsoft concedes that there are circumstances in which a customer with a Software Assurance agreement is eligible to receive new releases of software. Nevertheless, Microsoft asserts that since June 6, 2005 it has not issued a new release of the infringing products, Microsoft Office and Access, and its distribution of Service Pack 2 to Software Assurance customers included a "fix" that removed the functionality found to infringe Amado's '615 patent. Thus, under these circumstances, Microsoft avers that any copy of the infringing products received by Software Assurance customers has been accounted for under other license types included in the judgment or the escrow payments. Id. P 7.

Amado's present Motion [*13] for distribution of the stay-related escrow funds asserts that Microsoft's calculations as to total licenses, net licenses and even Software Assurance and Recurring licenses have changed numerous times during the escrow period.

On November 14, 2005 Microsoft presented Amado with a spreadsheet in response to his request about the lower than expected license counts. The spreadsheet contained license counts for sales from June 6, 2005 through October 28, 2005. Specifically, the spreadsheet disclosed 28,393,892 "total" licenses (an average of 5.67 million units per month) and 16,032,866 "net" licenses, which excluded Software Assurance and Recurring licenses (an average of 3.2 million units per month). Ex. R to Oct. 2, 2006 Decl. of Scott Moore in Supp. of Pl.'s Mot for Contempt ("Oct. 2, 2006 Moore Decl."). This spreadsheet also disclosed 6,944,751 Software Assurance licenses and 5,416,275 Recurring licenses. Id. Of the 12,361,026 licenses excluded from the "net" license count, 56.2 percent were Software Assurance licenses and 43.8 percent were Recurring licenses.

On June 13, 2006, Microsoft provided spreadsheets for June 2005 through April 2006, showing total license counts of 60,041,098 [*14] (an average of 5.46 million units per month) and net licenses of 33,286,920 (an average of 2.94 million units per month). See Ex. AA to Oct. 2, 2006 Moore Decl. These spreadsheets did not include a breakdown of either Software Assurance or Recurring licenses. On August 18 and September 20, 2006, Microsoft provided updated spreadsheets showing only total and net license counts; again there was no breakdown of Software Assurance or Recurring licenses. See Exs. DD, EE to Oct. 2, 2006 Moore Decl. According to Amado the "total" license counts for the same eleven month time period (June 2005 through April 2006) "inexplicably" changed. The total licenses increased by 18,073,978 licenses or 30.10%, [3] whereas the "net" license counts remained approximately the same (increasing by only 17,924 or 0.05%). [4]

On October 30, 2006, Microsoft informed Amado [*15] that it "may have over-counted certain types of licenses in the license counts previously provided to you." Ex. 6 to Jan. 15, 2007 Decl. of Nicole Smith ("Smith Decl.). On November 16, 2006, Microsoft informed Amado that approximately 23 million licenses had been incorrectly added to the total license counts to all months through June 2006 because Academic licenses had been added to totals that already included these licenses. Ex. 7 to Smith Decl.

In November and December 2006, Microsoft submitted Notices of Deposit to the Court, which included spreadsheets that purportedly show the number of Software Assurance and Recurring licenses excluded by Microsoft throughout the escrow period. According to Amado, these spreadsheets show that Microsoft changed its methodology yet again following the October 2006 contempt hearing at which the Court expressed more concern about Software Assurance licenses than Recurring licenses. For the period June 2005 through October 2005, the Software Assurance and Recurring license allocations changed "radically" between the November 14, 2005 and the November 20, 2006 spreadsheets. In the 2006 version, the Recurring license count doubles, whereas the Software [*16] Assurance license count decreases by 50% from the counts in the 2005 spreadsheet covering the same five-month period of time (June through October 2005). [5]

Finally, according to Microsoft's December 2006 Notice of Deposit, it sold 102,117,579 "total" licenses during the eighteen-month escrow period and 52,292,108 "net" licenses, whereas the Notices of Deposit reports actually filed with the Court, according to Amado's calculation, reported 55,310,507 "net" licenses. See Smith Decl. P 5. These figures did not include sales between November 25, 2006 through December 3, 2006 and consequently, on January 24, 2007, Microsoft wrote to Amado to update the total license counts to include the sales for these days. "Microsoft admits that it has sold 103,115,257 Total [*17] licenses from the beginning of the escrow period through December 3, 2006." Jan. 29, 2007 Decl. of Scott Moore ("Moore Decl.") P 3 (internal quotations omitted).

---

[3] The June 13, 2006 spreadsheet shows 60,041,098 total licenses, whereas the August 18, 2006 spreadsheet shows 78,115,076 for the same time period (June 2005 through April 2006).

[4] The June 13, 2006 spreadsheet shows 33,286,920 net licenses, whereas the August 18, 2006 spreadsheet shows 33,304,844 for the same time period (June 2005 through April 2006).

[5] The November 2005 spreadsheet shows 6,944,751 Software Assurance licenses and 5,416,275 Recurring licenses, whereas the November 2006 spreadsheet shows 2,881,238 Software Assurance licenses and 10,171,879 Recurring licenses for the same five-month period (June through October 2005). See Pl. Mot. for $ 2.00 per Unit of Infringing Sales at 11:3-8; Oct. 2, 2006 Moore Decl., Ex. R; Notice of Escrow Deposit, filed Dec. 26, 2006, Ex. B.

D. Microsoft's Fix

Microsoft continues to sell versions 2002 (XP) and 2003 of Office Professional and Access, which the jury found infringed Amado's '615 patent. However, during the pendency of its appeal, Microsoft designed, implemented, and released a software fix to remove the infringing functionality from its products. Microsoft began to release the fix in the fall of 2005. As of February 2006, Microsoft included an additional Service Pack 2 ("SP2") disc in all of its distributions of the infringing products. One of the programs on SP2, shim DLL disables the infringing feature by making an open Excel spreadsheet read-only when functioning in conjunction with Access, thereby making it impossible for a user to send changed data from an Access linked table back to an open Excel spreadsheet. Decl. of Andrew M. Warden, P 7, Micallef Decl., Ex. N. In addition, if a user attempts to delete the reference to the shim DLL in the Windows registry, the SP2 code will detect this and re-write the shim DLL reference. Id. P 7. Amado asserts [*18] that adding the SP2 disc to the packaging of unmodified, infringing software does not avoid infringement or comply with the Court's injunction.

SP2 contains software wholly unrelated to the accused functionality, including updates that address potential security risks. In addition, every purchaser of Access and Office is now required to install SP2 as a condition of its license agreement. On the other hand, the shim DLL fix is not automatically installed when the user installs Office or Access, even though Microsoft could have made the fix automatic. For example, before a user can install Microsoft Outlook, they are required to install Service Pack 1. Sept. 11, 2006 Decl. of Richard Taylor ("Taylor Decl."), P 9. [6] By contrast, a user can install Office and Access without installing SP2. Moreover, when a user inserts the disc labeled "Service Pack 2," instead of installing the program, the disc displays a document titled "Office 2003 Service Pack 2 CD Installation." Id. P 12.

Microsoft distributes Access and Office through three [*19] distribution channels to three different types of customers - retail, original equipment manufacturers ("OEM") and volume or enterprise licensees. First, with regard to retail customers, the SP2 CD on its face states that its installation is a mandatory part of installation of the overall product. Moreover, an addendum to the retail customer's end user license agreement requires that these customers install all discs contained in the package in order to have a valid license to use the software. Second, OEMs install Microsoft's Office and Access software onto the computers they manufacture prior to shipping the computers to their customers. As to this distribution channel, Microsoft notified its OEM licensees that SP2 was a required supplement under the terms of their license agreements and made installation of SP2 mandatory for all OEM licensees by the end of February 2006. [7] Finally, Microsoft has shipped the SP2 disc to both new and existing volume licensees, who also received other communications indicating that installation of SP2 was mandatory to remain in compliance with the terms of their volume licenses. [8] Consequently, any user that failed to install SP2 by the end of February [*20] 28, 2006 is breaching its licensing agreement with Microsoft.

On the other hand, Amado has uncovered evidence that at least some fraction of Microsoft [*21] customers are actively seeking ways to avoid or uninstall the fix so that they can continue to use the live-link feature that was found to infringe Amado's patent. Amado has presented fourteen messages posted on various internet websites in which users discuss the fact that SP2 removes the live-link functionality between Access and Excel due to a legal

---

[6] There is sufficient space on the disc containing the domestic version of Office and Access to include all of SP2 on that disc. Sept. 11, 2006 Taylor Decl. P 14.

[7] According to Microsoft, the OEMs use a master disc from Microsoft to create a master image of the software. This master image of Office and Access is then copied onto the computers the OEMs manufacture. Therefore, once the OEMs installed the SP2 disc onto the master image, used to produce the computers, the master, as well as the copies, became a "fixed" version of Office and Access. Consequently, the end users of the OEMs' computers received their computers with SP2 already installed. However, at least some OEMs send users back-up discs of Office and Access and SP2, which can be re-installed if necessary.

[8] Volume or Enterprise licensees are business entities and other organizations. According to Microsoft, the information technology departments of these licensees will install the software in one of two ways - most likely they create a master image, like the OEMs, which is then installed on the individual computers in the office, but they may alternatively use the discs from Microsoft to install the software on each computer individually.

issue and seek advice about how to retain this functionality. [9] Jan. 13, 2007 Decl. of Richard Taylor P 17. At least some of these users state that they plan not to install SP2 or have in fact reinstalled the software without installing SP2 in order to keep the live-link feature. According to Microsoft, a user cannot selectively install SP2; thus, if someone desires to get around the fix, they must avoid installing SP2 at all.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Microsoft's Rule 60(b) Motion for Relief From Judgment

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b) allows a court to relieve a party or its legal representative from a final judgment in certain circumstances. The appropriate reasons for relief from the judgment are: "(1) [*22] mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect; (2) newly discovered evidence; (3) fraud; (4) a void judgment; (5) a satisfied or discharged judgment; or (6) 'extraordinary circumstances' which would justify relief." Sch. Dist. No. 1J, Multnomah Cty. v. Acands, Inc., 5 F.3d 1255, 1263 (9th Cir. 1993) (quoting Fuller v. M.G. Jewelry, 950 F.2d 1437, 1442 (9th Cir. 1991)).

In addition to the grounds for relief set forth in clauses (1) through (5), Rule 60(b)(6) allows the court to relieve a party from a final judgment or order for "any other reason justifying relief from the operation of the judgment." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(6). The Supreme Court has interpreted this catch-all provision narrowly, requiring the moving party to show "extraordinary circumstances suggesting that the party was faultless in the delay." Pioneer Inv. Servs. v. Brunswick Assocs., 507 U.S. 380, 393, 113 S. Ct. 1489, 1497, 123 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1993). Relief under Rule 60(b)(1), (2), or (3) may not be brought more than one year after the judgment was entered. Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b). By contrast, there is no time limitation for bringing a motion under Rule 60(b)(6). However, the standard for setting aside a judgment under this provision is much [*23] higher than that for Rule 60(b)(1) through (5). See Pioneer Inv. Servs., 507 U.S. at 393. Moreover, a Rule 60(b)(6) motion may not be premised "on one of the grounds for relief enumerated in clauses (b)(1) through (b)(5)." Liljeberg v. Health Servs. Acquisition Corp., 486 U.S. 847, 863, 108 S. Ct. 2194, 100 L. Ed. 2d 855 (1988). The extraordinary circumstances requirement of Rule 60(b)(6) prevents the clause "from being used to circumvent the 1-year limitations period that applies to clause (1), [(2), and (3)]." Id. at 863 n.11; Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b). Finally, although Rule 60(b)(6) does not delineate the specific factors that justify relief, the Supreme Court has observed that it provides courts with authority "to vacate judgments whenever such action is appropriate to accomplish justice." Id. at 863-64 (quoting Klapprott v. United States, 335 U.S. 601, 614-615, 69 S. Ct. 384, 93 L. Ed. 266 (1949) (internal quotations omitted)).

Microsoft purports to bring its Motion for Relief from Judgment under Rule 60(b)(6), asserting that Amado narrowed the claims of his '615 patent in arguments made to the PTO during the reexamination that Microsoft initiated after the entry of judgment in this case. Microsoft contends that it [*24] could not have brought its Motion under any other clause of Rule 60(b) because the context of "a patentee disclaiming a portion of his patent rights in order to distinguish prior art during the reexamination proceedings" is not covered by Rule 60(b)(1) through (5). Def. Mem. of P. & A. in Supp. of Mot. for Relief from J. 10:22-23. Presumably, Microsoft brings this Motion under Rule 60(b)(6) to avoid the one-year time limitation for bringing motions under the other subsections of Rule 60(b) because the judgment in this case was entered over a year ago on August 2, 2005. Amado argues that Microsoft is attempting to disguise its Rule 60(b)(2) motion based on the new evidence gleaned from the reexamination proceedings as a Rule 60(b)(6) motion. Microsoft responds by arguing that the evidence does not qualify as "newly discovered" because it was not in existence at the time of trial. See Jones v. Aero/Chem. Corp., 921 F.2d 875, 878 (9th Cir. 1990) (Rule 60(b)(2) requires movant to show that "the evidence (1) existed at the time of trial, (2) could not have been discovered through due diligence, and (3) was 'of such magnitude that production of it earlier would have been likely to change [*25] the disposition of the case'").

---

[9] Microsoft has objected to this evidence on the grounds of lack of authentication, hearsay and prejudice. These objections are OVERRULED.

Microsoft is technically correct that Amado had not made the three statements in response to the non-final office action finding claim 21 invalid as anticipated by SuperCalc and the Duncan article at the time of trial. Nevertheless, the prior art upon which Microsoft's reexamination petition and the non-final office action are based, was in existence at the time of trial. Microsoft was aware of SuperCalc throughout this litigation as it was cited in the '615 patent, which was attached as an exhibit to Amado's March 7, 2003 Complaint. In addition, Microsoft was aware of the Q+E program that was the subject of the Duncan article at least since early 2004 as indicated by its Response to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 3, stating that Microsoft provided its expert with a copy of Q+E. In fact, the jury specifically found that the Duncan article regarding Q+E did not invalidate Amado's '615 patent. Moreover, the Court is skeptical as to Microsoft's claim that it could not have uncovered the SuperCalc User's Guide through the exercise of due diligence during the trial. See Decl. of Joseph Micallef in Supp. of Microsoft's Mot. for Relief from J. P 2. Microsoft [*26] filed its Petition for Reexamination on August 11, 2006, nine days after the Court entered judgment and only two months after the trial. Given that Microsoft was able to find the User's Guide so quickly after trial, it is likely that Microsoft could have uncovered it prior to trial through the exercise of due diligence. Microsoft had a full and fair opportunity to litigate its invalidity case both at the summary judgment stage and at trial, but was unsuccessful. Microsoft failed to appeal either the Court's denial of summary judgment or the jury's verdict rejecting its invalidity defense. Instead, Microsoft waited until the Court entered its final judgment after over two years of litigation to seek a second bite at the invalidity apple through its Request for Reexamination. Microsoft's late reexamination petition lead to the newly discovered evidence of Amado's statements to the PTO in response to the non-final office action. Rule 60(b)(2) motion based on newly discovered evidence must have been brought by August 2, 2006. Thus, Microsoft's Motion for Relief from Judgment filed on December 4, 2006 was four months too late.

Even if the Court were to entertain Microsoft's Motion under Rule 60(b)(6), [*27] the present circumstances are not of the extraordinary variety dictating that the judgment in this case be vacated to accomplish justice. "'Extraordinary circumstances' do not include situations in which 'a litigant who has let the normal appeals channels lapse seeks to have a second bite at the apple.'" Spacey v. Burgar, 207 F. Supp. 2d 1037, 1048 (C.D. Cal. 2001) (quoting United States v. Wyle, 889 F.2d 242, 250 (9th Cir.1989)). Microsoft litigated its invalidity defense at trial and the jury's special verdict specifically rejected Microsoft's contention that claim 21 of the '615 patent was invalid because it was obvious in light of prior art. See Special Verdict Form, Dkt. no. 432, P 7 (finding Claim 21 valid). As other courts have concluded "parties should not be permitted to abuse the [reexamination] process by applying for reexamination after protracted, expensive discovery or trial preparation." Freeman v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 661 F. Supp. 886, 888 (D. Del. 1987) (quoting Digital Magnetic Systems, Inc. v. Ansley, 213 U.S.P.Q. 290 (W.D. Okla. 1982)). Given that Microsoft waited until after the judgment in this case to file its Petition for Reexamination, while simultaneously [*28] failing to appeal the jury's finding of validity, Microsoft was not faultless in the delay and justice does not require overturning a jury verdict at this late stage based on statements made to the PTO. Because the Court finds that Microsoft has not satisfied the requirements of either Rule 60(b)(2) or (6), the Court declines to examine the three statements Amado made to the PTO that purportedly narrow the scope of his patent.

The present Motion is distinguishable from that addressed by the Fifth Circuit in Bros, Inc. v. W.E. Grace Mfg., Co., 320 F.2d 594 (1963). [10] In Bros, the issue was whether the patented invention had been described in a preprinted publication more than a year prior to the patent application. Id. at 606. The patent at issue was involved in three different suits in various circuits and the judgment from which the defendant sought relief in the Fifth Circuit was a grant of summary judgment on the basis of res judicata in light of findings of infringement and validity in another case. Id. at 602. In the related case, an employee of the patentee had previously averred in his affidavit that the brochure describing the patented machine in detail had not been prepared [*29] or distributed until long after the road show at which the patented machine was displayed. Id. at 603. It was later discovered that the brochure had been distributed at the road show which occurred more than a year prior to the patent application. Id. Although the motion for relief from judgment could be viewed as a motion under Rule 60(b)(2) for newly discovered evidence or under Rule 60(b)(3) for fraud, the Fifth Circuit concluded that equitably the district court should consider the motion under Rule 60(b)(6) because what had occurred was "something more" than simply newly discovered evidence or fraud. Id. at 609.

---

[10] The Fifth Circuit later reversed the district court's order granting relief under Rule 60(b)(6), finding that an essential part of the patented invention was not disclosed in the brochure. Bros, Inc. v. W. E. Grace Mfg. Co., 351 F.2d 208, 216 (5th Cir. 1965).

Unlike in Bros, there is no evidence of fraud. Moreover, unlike the patentee in Bros who deliberately put the defendant off-track by averring that the brochure had not been distributed at the road show, Amado disclosed both prior art references to Microsoft. Microsoft had ample opportunity to find the SuperCalc [*30] User's Guide and could have filed its Request for Reexamination anytime during the two years that elapsed between the Complaint and the trial. Instead, Microsoft waited until two months after trial to seek reexamination. In addition, even if Amado's statements to the PTO are "something more" than newly discovered evidence, they do not meet the extraordinary circumstances necessary to justify relief under Rule 60(b)(6). Justice does not dictate relief from a judgment based on statements made in a reexamination proceeding initiated by Microsoft over two years after the filing of Amado's complaint and two months after the jury found claim 21 of the '615 patent to be valid. Microsoft cannot circumvent the enforcement of Amado's valid patent through its Rule 60(b) Motion.

Finally, Amado asks the Court to award him costs and attorney's fees associated with briefing and arguing this Motion. The Court declines to make such an award.

B. Dissolving the Injunction

Microsoft also seeks an order dissolving the permanent injunction entered on August 2, 2005 on the ground that eBay v. MercExhange, 547 U.S. 388, 126 S. Ct. 1837, 164 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2006), changed the law regarding the issuance of permanent injunctions in patent cases. [*31] On May 15, 2006, the Supreme Court overruled the Federal Circuit's "general rule" that "a permanent injunction will issue once infringement and validity have been adjudged." Id. at 1841. The Supreme Court held "only that the decision whether to grant or deny injunctive relief rests within the equitable discretion of the district courts, and that such discretion must be exercised consistent with traditional principles of equity, in patent disputes no less than in other cases governed by such standards." Id. The Supreme Court opinion in eBay does not specifically address the presumption of irreparable harm relied upon by Amado and this Court in issuing the instant injunction. However, such a presumption contradicts the explicit wording of the four-factor test the Supreme Court instructs district courts to apply and unduly constrains the equitable discretion that eBay confers. In particular, to obtain an injunction under well-established principles of equity "[a] plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) that it has suffered irreparable injury." eBay, 126 S. Ct. at 1839.

While the Court applied the traditional four factor test [11] in determining whether to grant injunctive relief in this case, the [*32] Court's analysis was colored by the "general rule" of "infringement equals permanent injunction" overruled in eBay. See Aug. 2, 2005 Order at 22:6-11. Moreover, in its analysis of irreparable harm, the Court relied on the presumption of irreparable harm that arose, pre-eBay, when a patent was found to be both valid and infringed, rather than placing the burden on Amado to show irreparable injury. Id. at 20:21-24; cf. eBay, 126 S. Ct. at 1839 (the "plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) that it has suffered irreparable injury"). In addition, the Court's analysis of the public interest noted that there would be significant costs to the parties bound by an injunction that would likely be borne, ultimately, by the public. Aug. 2, 2005 Order at 21:21-28. Finally, in balancing the hardships, the Court expressed concern about the ramifications and scope of the permanent injunction, but noted the Federal Circuit's "hard line on denial of injunctive relief based on damage to businesses found to be infringers." Id. at 22:6-8. Thus, while the Court applied the traditional equitable factors, its decision to grant an injunction was influenced by the controlling Federal Circuit law at that time, which [*33] required a case to be "exceptional to justify the denial of a permanent injunction." MercExchange, LLC v. eBay, Inc., 401 F.3d 1323, 1339 (Fed. Cir. 2005), overruled by eBay v. MercExhange, 547 U.S. 388, 126 S. Ct. 1837, 164 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2006).

---

[11] "(i) Whether the plaintiff would face irreparable injury if the injunction did not issue, (ii) whether the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law, (iii) whether granting the injunction is in the public interest, and (iv) whether the balance of hardships tips in the plaintiff's favor." See Aug. 2, 2005 Order at 20:2-8 (quoting Odetics, Inc. v. Storage Tech. Corp., 14 F. Supp. 2d 785, 794 (E.D. Va. 1998) (citing Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 312, 102 S. Ct. 1798, 1803, 72 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1982))).

Microsoft requests that the Court reexamine and dissolve the injunction previously entered in this case on the ground that eBay changed the law governing the issuance of a permanent injunction in a patent case by, inter alia, requiring the plaintiff to show irreparable injury and that public interest would not be disserved by an injunction. See z4 Techs., Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 434 F. Supp 2d 437, 440-441 (E.D. Tex. 2006) (refusing to apply a presumption of irreparable harm because plaintiff [*34] could not cite to any Supreme Court or Federal Circuit case requiring the application of a rebuttable presumption of irreparable harm with regard to a permanent injunction); Keg Techs., Inc. v. Laimer, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1364, 1371 (N.D. Ga. 2006) (finding that the evidence adequately demonstrated irreparable injury). Microsoft argues that Amado cannot show irreparable harm because he is not in the business of selling any software that practices claim 21 of the '615 patent, is not a competitor of Microsoft, and has never sold a license of his patent or otherwise successfully commercialized it. In response, Amado argues that eBay did not change the law. Amado also contends that Microsoft has waived any right to challenge the injunction by failing to challenge it during the first appeal. Amado further argues that the law of the case bars this belated attack on the injunction because the Federal Circuit mandate controls.

Although eBay only explicitly overruled the Federal Circuit's "general rule" that a finding of patent infringement required the issuance of a permanent injunction absent special circumstances, it also altered the proper application of the traditional four-factor test in patent [*35] cases. For instance, in its discussion of the well-established principles of equity that the courts must follow in determining whether to issue a permanent injunction, the Supreme Court placed the burden on the plaintiff seeking a permanent injunction to prove that he has suffered irreparable injury. eBay, 126 S. Ct. at 1839 (referencing the test from a non-patent case, Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 311-12, 102 S. Ct. 1798, 72 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1982) and concluding that "[t]hese familiar principles of equity apply with equal force to disputes arising under the Patent Act"). Consequently, by requiring that the application of this four-factor test in patent cases be consistent with its application in non-patent cases, eBay eliminates the presumption of irreparable harm that this Court relied on in issuing the permanent injunction in this case. Several district courts, who have applied this four factor test post-eBay, have refused to apply the presumption of irreparable harm relied upon by Amado and the Court. See, e.g. z4 Techs., Inc., 434 F. Supp 2d at 440-441; *Voda v. Cordis Corp., No. CIV-03-1512-L, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63623, 2006 WL 2570614, at * 5 (W.D. Okla. Sept. 5, 2006)*; Paice LLC v. Toyota Motor Corp., No. [*36] *2:04-CV-211-DF, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61598, 2006 WL 2385139, at * 4 (E.D. Tex. Aug. 16, 2006)*.

A court may revisit an equitable order upon changed circumstances. Gilmore v. California, 220 F.3d 987, 1007 (9th Cir. 2000) ("long-established principle of equity practice that a court may, in its discretion, take cognizance of changed circumstances and relieve a party from a continuing decree"). Contrary to Amado's assertion that the Federal Circuit mandate ties this Court's hands, "[a]n appellate mandate does not turn a district judge into a robot, mechanically carrying out orders that become inappropriate in light of subsequent factual discoveries or changes in the law." EEOC v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 417 F.3d 789, 796 (7th Cir. 2005) (internal citations and quotations omitted); see also Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County, 466 F.3d 391, 395 (6th Cir. 2006) ("an equitable remedy should be enforced only as long as the equities of the case require"). Rather, a court may exercise its discretion to reconsider a previously decided issue when there has been an intervening change in law. See, e.g. Wopsock v. Natchees, 454 F.3d 1327, 1333 (Fed. Cir. 2006) ("law-of-the-case principles [*37] do not bar a court from departing from earlier rulings when there is 'an intervening change of controlling legal authority'"). Thus, because eBay represents an intervening change in law, the Court finds it appropriate to revisit the propriety of the injunction in this case.

An injunction is warranted if Amado proves the following four factors:

> (1) that [he] has suffered an irreparable injury; (2) that remedies available at law, such as monetary damages, are inadequate to compensate for that injury; (3) that, considering the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant, a remedy in equity is warranted; and (4) that the public interest would not be disserved by a permanent injunction.

eBay, 126 S. Ct. at 1839. After eBay, Amado cannot rely on a presumption of irreparable injury. Such a presumption conflicts with the Supreme Court's reasoning that the right to exclude does not automatically justify the issuance of injunction in every patent case. Id. Thus, post-eBay Amado must prove irreparable injury. See, e.g. z4 Techs., Inc., 434 F. Supp 2d at 440-441; *Voda, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63623, 2006 WL 2570614, at * 5*; *Paice LLC, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61598, 2006 WL 2385139, at * 4*. Irreparable harm exists only where an injury cannot be [*38] remedied by monetary damages. See, e.g. Abbott Labs. v. Andrx Pharms., Inc., 452 F.3d 1331, 1348 (Fed. Cir. 2006) ("in light of arguable sufficiency of monetary damages, [plaintiff] has not established that irreparable harm supports the grant of the [preliminary] injunction"). In moving for a permanent injunction, Amado relied on the now defunct presumption of irreparable harm. The Court accepted this argument because at that time, this presumption was the accepted law. See Aug. 2, 2005 Order 20:21-24 (citing Richardson v. Suzuki Motor Co., Ltd., 868 F.2d 1226, 1247 (Fed. Cir. 1989).

In his Opposition to Microsoft's Motion to Dissolve the Permanent Injunction, Amado's only argument as to irreparable harm is that Microsoft "took Amado's invention, incorporated it into its products," and "precluded him from entering the market." Pl.'s Opp'n to Microsoft's Mot. to Dissolve the Permanent Inj. at 22:16-20. However, as Microsoft points out in its Reply, these are the same allegations of willful infringement that Amado presented to the jury, this Court and the Federal Circuit, who have all rejected this argument. By contrast the evidence at trial demonstrated that Amado does not compete with [*39] Microsoft, does not sell a product covered by the patent and is no longer even attempting to commercialize or license the patent. Moreover, Amado's patent only covers a very small component of the infringing products - claim 21, the only claim that the jury found Microsoft Office and Access infringed, covers a single feature linking Access and Excel. See eBay, 126 S. Ct. at 1842 (Kennedy, J. concurring) ("When the patented invention is but a small component of the product the companies seek to produce and the threat of an injunction is employed simply for undue leverage in negotiations, legal damages may well be sufficient to compensate for the infringement and an injunction may not serve the public interest"). Thus, Amado's injury can be adequately compensated through monetary damages.

As to the public interest, even prior to eBay, the Court found that the public interest was disserved by granting an injunction in this case. See Aug. 2, 2005 Order at 21:19-28. Thus, because Amado has not proven irreparable injury, money damages are adequate to compensate any future injury and the public interest is not served by an injunction, the injunction previously issued in this case is hereby [*40] dissolved.

Finally, Amado asks the Court to order Microsoft to pay his costs and attorney's fees pursuant to Local Rules 11-9 and 83-7. The Court declines to make such an award.

C. Distribution of the Stay-Related Escrow Funds

As to the disposition of the funds in the stay-related escrow account, the parties' positions could not be further apart. Microsoft contends that Amado should receive an award of $ 1,013,110. Def.'s Opp'n 20:7. Microsoft calculates this figure based on a four cent per unit royalty and sales of 25,327,766 (for net licenses excluding Software Assurance and Recurring licenses) between June 6, 2005 and February 28, 2006. By contrast, Amado seeks an award of $ 206,230,514. Amado's calculation is based on a two dollar per unit royalty and sales of 103,115,257 (for the total licenses, including Software Assurance and Recurring licenses) sold between June 6, 2005 and December 3, 2006. Jan. 29, 2007 Moore Decl. P 3; Pl.'s Reply 3:26.

Microsoft concedes that Amado should receive an award for the net licenses sold between June 5, 2005 and February 28, 2006. Thus, the following issues must be resolved by the Court: (1) Should the escrow award be based upon the net license counts [*41] or the total license counts? (2) Are the units sold after February 28, 2006 "sales of the infringing products" such that Amado should receive an award for licenses sold between February 28, 2006 and December 3, 2006? and (3) How much should Amado receive per unit?

1. Net Licenses v. Total Licenses

Throughout this case, the jury's and court's findings were based upon the number of total licenses because Microsoft stipulated that these total license counts represented sales of the accused, and ultimately infringing, products. During discovery, Microsoft refused to authenticate the unit sales and revenue data it had produced. Consequently, to resolve this discovery dispute and obviate the need to produce additional sales and revenue data to Amado, Microsoft stipulated that the total license counts in the spreadsheets, prepared by Price Waterhouse on behalf of Microsoft and produced by Microsoft during discovery, represented sales of the accused products. The spreadsheets contained total license counts for sales of Office and Access without indicating what types of licenses were included in the total count. However, the total license counts included Software Assurance and Recurring licenses. [*42] In addition, Microsoft was aware that Software Assurance and Recurring licenses were included in these figures during discovery because these license types were discussed at the deposition of Microsoft 30(b)(6) designee Richard Smith. [12] Judicial estoppel, or the doctrine of preclusion of inconsistent positions, "precludes a party from gaining an advantage by taking one position, and then seeking a second advantage by taking an incompatible position." Rissetto v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local 343, 94 F.3d 597, 600 (9th Cir. 1996). Microsoft gained an advantage by stipulating to the total license counts during discovery because this stipulation enabled Microsoft to avoid producing the detailed revenue and unit sales information requested by Amado. Microsoft allowed the jury to reach a verdict based on the stipulated figures that included Software Assurance and Recurring licenses. Microsoft, likewise, did not object when the Court used figures that included Software Assurance and Recurring licenses for the accounting.

Now, eighteen months after the judgment was entered in this case, Microsoft seeks to base the escrow award on the net license counts, rather than the total license counts used at trial and in the accounting without objection, because Microsoft contends that Software Assurance and Recurring licenses do not represent "sales of the infringing products." According to Microsoft, Recurring licenses are accounting mechanisms to track installment payments and Software Assurance licenses represent maintenance agreements. However, Software Assurance licenses entitle customers to software updates. Microsoft 30(b)(6) designee Thomas Bailey testified that Software Assurance licenses allow customers to "get the newest version" of Office Professional 2003 "automatically." Dep. of Thomas Bailey at 46:3-20, Decl. of Scott Moore in Supp. Pl.'s Undercount Mot., Ex. F, Docket No. 583. Consequently, any Software Assurance licensee who purchased version 2002(XP) of the infringing products had the right to upgrade to version 2003. If these customers upgraded to version 2003 during the escrow period, then [*44] their Software Assurance licenses do indeed represent "sales of the infringing products." Moreover, as Amado points out, a Software Assurance license entitles the entity licensee to give each seat (i.e. employee) an additional free copy of the software for his or her home use such that each license actually represents installation of the infringing products on two computers, even though it is only counted as a single license.

In addition, as discussed above, the parties first brought this issue of net licenses versus total licenses to the Court's attention in October 2006. At the hearing on Amado's contempt motion, the Court expressed concern over the exclusion of the Software Assurance licenses from Microsoft's escrow payments, but did not question the exclusion of Recurring licenses. Following this October 23, 2006 hearing, the number of Software Assurance licenses reported by Microsoft dropped precipitously, whereas the number of Recurring licenses increased dramatically in comparison to the numbers previously reported for the same five-month time period. Specifically, the November 2005 spreadsheet shows 6,944,751 Software Assurance licenses and 5,416,275 Recurring licenses for June [*45] 2005 through October 2005, whereas the November 2006 spreadsheet shows 2,881,238 Software Assurance licenses and 10,171,879 Recurring licenses for the same period. See Pl. Mot. for $ 2.00 per Unit of Infringing Sales at 11:3-8; Oct. 2, 2006 Moore Decl., Ex. R; Notice of Escrow Deposit, filed Dec. 26, 2006, Ex. B.

Microsoft's Opposition largely ignores Amado's evidence about its constantly changing license counts. Microsoft's only response is a footnote stating that its MS Sales database from which it derives the license and revenue information provided to Amado and the Court is a live database, which is constantly updated. [13] Def.'s Opp'n to Pl.'s [12] Smith testified that "in excess of 90 percent" of the revenue reflected in the sales summaries Microsoft produced was attributable to the sale of the product license, [*43] and not the Software Assurance component." Dep. Tr. of Richard Smith at 23:1-6, Moore Reply Decl., Ex. I.

---

Mot. 18:20-28. At the February 5, 2007 hearing, the Court asked Microsoft why the licenses counts kept changing to the benefit of Microsoft. Counsel for Microsoft reiterated that MS Sales was a live database. Counsel further claimed that MS Sales was designed to track revenue and not count licenses. This explanation is inadequate. The fact that MS Sales is a live database does not explain the drastic changes in license counts for the same historical periods of time.

Microsoft stipulated to sales figures that included Software Assurance and Recurring licenses at trial and during the accounting. The jury verdict and the Court's judgment are both based on these stipulated sales figures. At no point prior to the entry of judgment, did Microsoft object to the use of these figures or in any way alert Amado or the Court to any inaccuracy or unfairness in using the stipulated sales figures, which included Software Assurance and Recurring licenses. Microsoft is correct that the question of whether Software Assurance licenses and Recurring licenses represent "sales of the infringing products" was not raised at trial. The parties stipulation as to the sales figures obviated any need for the jury to determine which licenses were properly included as "sales of the infringing products." While Microsoft has a plausible argument that Recurring licenses do not represent additional sales or installations of the infringing products, the [*47] same cannot be said with regard to Software Assurance licenses. Thus, the Court might be willing to exclude Recurring licenses from the license counts for purposes of the stay escrow, despite the inclusion of these licenses in the jury's award. However, in light of the constantly changing license counts and the fact that following the October 23, 2006 contempt hearing, Microsoft provided "updated" license counts, in which 4,063,513 Software Assurance licenses present in a prior spreadsheet for the same five month period vanished and 4,755,604 Recurring licenses not present in that prior spreadsheet appeared, the Court cannot confidently accept either of these counts as accurate. The inference is too strong that the disappearing Software Assurance licenses reappeared as Recurring licenses.

Doubts as to damages are resolved against the infringer. See Sensonics, Inc. v. Aerosonic Corp., 81 F.3d 1566, 1572 (Fed. Cir. 1996) ("[I]f actual damages can not be ascertained with precision because the evidence available from the infringer is inadequate, damages may be estimated on the best available evidence, taking cognizance of the reason for the inadequacy of proof and resolving doubt against [*48] the infringer"); Kori Corp. v. Wilco Marsh Buggies & Draglines, 761 F.2d 649, 655 (Fed. Cir. 1985) ("Fundamental principles of justice require us to throw any risk of uncertainty upon the wrongdoer rather than upon the injured party"). Specifically, "[w]hen the calculation of damages is impeded by incomplete records of the infringer, adverse inferences are appropriately drawn." Sensonics, Inc., 81 F.3d at 1572 (citing Lam, Inc. v. Johns-Manville Corp., 718 F.2d 1056, 1065, 219 U.S.P.Q. 670, 675 (Fed. Cir. 1983)). In contrast to the unreliable counts for Software Assurance and Recurring licenses (net licenses), the total license counts have not changed and therefore, the Court can confidently use these total licenses as the basis of the escrow award.

Finally, Amado objects to the use of the reduced "net" license counts on the ground that these counts and the underlying summary spreadsheets are inadmissible because they violate the Best Evidence Rule and do not fall within any exception to the hearsay rule. [14] Under the Best Evidence Rule, a party must generally produce the original document to prove the contents of a "writing" or "recording." Fed. R. Evid. 1002. The MS Sales database [*49] qualifies as a "writing" or "recording." See Fed. R. Evid. 1001(1). Because Microsoft has never submitted the original MS Sales database to the Court, for the Court to rely on its reduced "net" license counts, Microsoft must submit materials that satisfy an exception to the Best Evidence Rule. See Fed. R. Evid. 1003-1007. However, none of these exceptions permit Microsoft to introduce its reduced license counts. Rule 1003 is inapplicable because Microsoft has never submitted a duplicate of the MS Sales database. Fed. R. Evid. 1003. Rule 1004 is inapplicable because the original database has not been lost or destroyed and is not in the possession of a party opponent. Fed. R. Evid. 1004. Rule 1005 is inapplicable because the MS sales database is not a public record. Fed. R. Evid. 1005. Rule 1007 permits the introduction of written admissions of a party opponent in lieu of the original. Fed. R. Evid.

---

[13] This footnote also explains that there was an error in the creation of some [*46] spreadsheets provided to Amado because Academic licenses were double counted. However, this error is not relevant to the changes in the counts for Software Assurance and Recurring licenses because it did not affect these licenses.

[14] Microsoft did not respond to these evidentiary objections.

1007. Microsoft cannot invoke this exception to introduce its reduced "net" license counts. However, this exception permits Amado, Microsoft's party opponent, to introduce the "total" license counts. Finally, while Rule 1006 permits the introduction of summaries in lieu of originals for voluminous [*50] writings or recordings "which cannot be conveniently examined in court," to invoke this exception the originals or duplicates must be made available to the other party. Fed. R. Evid. 1006. Microsoft has never made the MS Sales database available to Amado, despite Amado's requests for discovery of the MS Sales database before and after trial. [15] Consequently, Rule 1006 is likewise inapplicable and the Court sustains Amado's objection to the reduced "net" license counts on the basis of the Best Evidence Rule. The Court also sustains Amado's hearsay objection to the "net" license counts. These summary spreadsheets were prepared solely for purposes of this lawsuit and therefore are not admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. See, e.g., Palmer v. Hoffman, 318 U.S. 109, 113-15 63 S. Ct. 477, 87 L. Ed. 645 (1943) (reports prepared for use in court are not considered records of regularly conducted business); United States v. Miller, 771 F.2d 1219, 1238 (9th Cir. 1985) (summaries "prepared in response to litigation rather than in the regular course of business" are not admissible under Fed. R. Evid. 803(6)).

Therefore, for the reasons set forth above, the Court will base the escrow award on the same methodology used at trial and during the accounting - the total license counts, 103,115,257.

2. Sales of the Infringing Products

The Injunction entered in this case bars Microsoft from:

> making, using, selling, or importing any version of Microsoft's Access software or any version of Microsoft's Office suite of programs that includes Access, that includes the capability of, when loaded on a computer, connecting a spreadsheet program to a database program in a manner that would infringe claim 21 of the '615 patent

Aug. 2, 2005 Order 27:23-28 (emphasis added). Under the explicit terms of the Injunction, a violation occurs once Office or Access software is loaded onto a computer with the capability of connecting a spreadsheet program and database program in a manner that infringes claim '21 of the '615 patent. Microsoft does not deny that the Office [*52] 2003 versions of Office and Access are the same versions of the software that the jury found infringed claim 21 of Amado's '615 patent. Nor does Microsoft deny that after February 28, 2006, the installation process requires that the user first install Office and Access before inserting the separate SP2 disc to install the fix that removes the infringing functionality. Therefore, even if the user upholds its obligations under its licensing agreement with Microsoft and installs the SP2 disc, infringement has already occurred when the user installs the SP2 disc because the Injunction is violated as soon as the first disc containing Office or Access is installed onto a computer.

Microsoft argues at length in its Opposition that Amado should be required to submit new evidence of infringement. These arguments ignore the jury's verdict finding that the 2003 versions of Office and Access infringe claim 21 of Amado's 615 patent. The law of the case doctrine precludes a court from "reexamining an issue previously decided by the same court, or a higher court, in the same case." U.S. v. Smith, 389 F.3d 944, 948 (9th Cir. 2004); accord Exxon Corp. v. United States, 931 F.2d 874, 877 (Fed. Cir. 1991). [*53] Thus, because jury found that the 2003 versions of Office and Access infringed claim 21 of the '615 patent, this determination, already upheld on appeal, is not open to reexamination.

Microsoft continued to sell the infringing 2003 versions of Office and Access after February 28, 2006. There is only one difference between sales prior to February 28, 2006 and those after that date: sales of Office and Access after February 28, 2006 include a separate SP2 disc that contains, inter alia, a fix to remove the infringing functionality. However, this fix is not automatically installed when the user installs Office or Access. Instead, to remove the infringing functionality, the user must install the separate SP2 disc. Moreover, when a user inserts the disc labeled "Service Pack 2," instead of installing the files, the disc displays a document titled "Office 2003 Service Pack 2 CD Installation," describing the SP2 files, without indicating that the user is required to install these files. Jan. 13, 2007 Taylor Decl. P 11. According to Amado's expert, Dr. Richard Taylor, a user must manually navigate to the shim DLL file on the SP2 disc and then manually install it in order to removed the infringing [*54] functionality from Office and Access. Jan. 13, 2007 Decl. P 12. Thus, Microsoft relies on both the user's decision to install SP2 and his or her technological sophistication to figure out how to manually install the files to ensure that the infringing functionality is removed. Accordingly, rather than ensuring its software is no longer "capable" of infringing Amado's '615 patent, Microsoft places the burden on its customers to remove the infringing functionality after the software containing the infringing live link-feature is already installed.

[15] In the fall [*51] of 2003 Amado filed a motion to compel discovery into the MS Sales database, which resulted in the parties' stipulation to use the Price Waterhouse spreadsheets as to "total licenses," which Amado could rely on at trial as sales of the accused products.

By contrast, Microsoft could have made the SP2 fix a mandatory part of the installation process, such that a user could not install Office or Access without installing the SP2 shim DLL fix. Microsoft has made at least one prior fix a mandatory part of the installation process: before a user can install Microsoft Outlook, they are required to install Service Pack 1. Sept. 11, 2006 Taylor Decl., P 9. In addition, according to Microsoft, the 2007 version of Office and Access contains a modified code disabling the infringing functionality in a single disc that is automatically installed when the customer installs Office or Access. Microsoft has, [*55] however, given the user two incentives to install SP2: (1) the SP2 disc contains software, wholly unrelated to the accused functionality, that addresses potential security risks and (2) installation of SP2 is required under Microsoft's licensing agreement with each Office and Access user. Nevertheless, these incentives fail to ensure that Office and Access are not capable of infringing. Unlike a mandatory fix that the customer must install as part of the installation process for Office or Access, the infringing software is already installed before it is even possible to install the voluntary fix.

Amado argues that Microsoft's voluntary "fix" is insufficient as a matter of Federal Circuit law because Microsoft cannot shift the burden of complying with the court order to its customers. In Stryker Corp. v. Davol Inc., 234 F.3d 1252 (Fed. Cir. 2001), the Federal Circuit affirmed the district court's contempt finding where the infringer continued to sell the infringing product with slight modifications that relied on its customers to use the product as instructed. Id. at 1260. The defendant modified the spike that previously supported the infringing surgical irrigator, added clips to the [*56] device, and instructed its customers to use the support clips and not the spike alone to support the irrigator. At the contempt hearing, the defendant submitted an expert opinion that it would be unreasonable to use the modified device without the clips. Id. at 1256. In response, the plaintiff submitted test results showing that the modified spike alone could support the irrigator and anecdotal evidence that hospitals were using the modified device without the clips. Id. at 1260. This evidence was sufficient to hold the defendant in contempt.

Similarly, Amado has submitted anecdotal evidence that customers are ignoring their license agreement with Microsoft and deliberately avoiding installing the SP2 fix or uninstalling it to retain the infringing functionality. In addition, Dr. Taylor's unrefuted expert opinion is that it would not be unreasonable for customers not to install SP2, thereby avoiding the fix. Moreover, infringement occurs by default when Office or Access is installed and thus, regardless of whether the user ultimately disables the infringing functionality, infringement has occurred as soon as the software is downloaded, which by Microsoft's design occurs before the user [*57] can install the shim DLL fix on the SP2 disc.

Finally, the Court is aware that the above analysis is more applicable to retail and volume licensees than OEMs. [16] The Court is also aware that the IT departments of some volume licensees will create a master image of the software onto which the SP2 fix is downloaded prior to installing the software and use this non-infringing master to copy the software onto other computers in the organization similar to the process used by OEMs. However, there is no way to know what percentage of volume licensees install the software by using this type of master image and what percentage install the discs one by one (Office/Access, then SP2) on each computer in the organization. Moreover, the Court does not know what percentage of Microsoft's licenses are attributable to each of its three distribution channels. When the Court inquired at the February 5, 2007 hearing as to the breakdown of these numbers, Microsoft responded that MS Sales did not separate licenses by distribution channel. Counsel for Microsoft gave the Court a rough estimate that retail likely accounted for ten percent, OEMs for thirty percent, and volume licensees for sixty percent. In [*58] response, counsel for Amado told the Court that he had seen a spreadsheet tracking OEMs licenses for 2003 showing that these licenses only accounted for 4.45 percent of worldwide sales (significantly lower than the thirty percent estimate). Finally, as discussed in more detail above, during the escrow period Microsoft's license counts have continually changed. In light of these ever-changing numbers, the Court is inherently skeptical as to the accuracy of the figures presented by Microsoft. Consequently, the Court is not breaking out the OEM licenses or some portion of the volume licenses from the license counts because there is not any reliable information on which to do this.

---

[16] Yet, some OEMs send discs of the software along with the computers containing the software and therefore, at least some OEM customers could uninstall Office or Access and re-install the software without the SP2 fix.

For the reasons set forth above, the Court finds that the voluntary SP2 shim DLL "fix" is ineffective. The 2003 versions of Office and Access sold along with a separate SP2 disc, like the 2003 versions sold without the SP2 disc, infringe claim 21 of the '615 patent. Accordingly, Amado is entitled [*59] to an award from the escrow account for the entire period of time sought in his Motion: June 6, 2005 through December 3, 2006.

3. Per Unit Award

As a condition of the stay of the Injunction, the Court ordered Microsoft to pay into an escrow account "two dollars per unit for sales of the infringing products." Aug. 2, 2005 Order 28:13-19. As the Federal Circuit correctly noted in its per curiam opinion, the August 2, 2005 Order did not determine the ultimate disposition of the escrow funds. In ordering the two dollar per unit escrow payments, the Court ensured that Microsoft set aside the upper limit of any eventual stay-related escrow award. The Court never indicated that Amado would receive two dollars per unit; rather the Court left the determination of how much Amado should receive per unit for another day, observing that this issue could be rendered moot by subsequent developments in the case. However, the parties have not reached a negotiated settlement and the Federal Circuit has affirmed the jury verdict and this Court's judgment "in all respects," while explicitly carving out the disposition of the escrow money as a remaining issue not covered by its appellate mandate. The question [*60] of the disposition of the money in the stay-related escrow account, therefore, has been returned to this Court.

Amado moves the Court for an order awarding him the full two dollars per unit. By contrast, Microsoft argues that Amado should receive the reasonable royalty found by the jury - four cents per unit. The Court begins its analysis with the jury verdict. The jury was instructed that the amount of damages must be "adequate to compensate for the infringement" and not "less than a reasonable royalty for the use made of the invention by the infringer." Jury Instruction No. 49, Ex. D to Jan. 22 Decl. of Joseph Micallef; see 35 U.S.C. § 284. Amado argued at trial that he was entitled to a reasonable royalty of two dollars per unit. The jury disagreed and awarded Amado an amount that equaled precisely four cents per unit. In its August 2, 2005 Order, the Court denied Amado's motion for judgment as a matter of law on the issue of damages, finding that substantial evidence supported the jury's determination of damages. Aug. 2, 2005 Order 5:26, 6:6-8. The Court also found that the jury's award was the "appropriate measure of damages" for the accounting period, rejecting Amado's proposed [*61] two dollars per unit alternative. Id. at 17:26-27, 18:3. Amado is now asking, yet again, for an award of two dollars per unit, despite the jury's award of four cents per unit.

Amado vehemently argues that this Court cannot award him anything less than two dollars per unit. His arguments misunderstand the Court's intention in awarding two dollar per unit escrow payments. The Court ordered escrow payments representing the upper limit of any potential award if the verdict was upheld on appeal to protect against any under-counting of licenses, as in fact occurred. Amado argues that an award of anything less than two dollars per unit would result in an impermissible compulsory license, thereby constituting an unconstitutional taking and violating his Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial on post-verdict sales. In support of this proposition, Amado cites a Supreme Court case discussing Congress' rejection of legislation that would have given courts the "power to cancel a patent which has been used as an instrument to violate antitrust laws." Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386, 416-17, 65 S. Ct. 373, 89 L. Ed. 322, 1945 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 607 (1945) (concluding that antitrust law does not permit a court to fashion [*62] a remedy whereby the antitrust violators lose their rights over their patents and modifying decree to permit the reservation of reasonable royalties for the licensing of the patents). Amado also cites another Supreme Court case construing 35 U.S.C. § 271(c) and (d) and concluding that the patent holder did not engage in patent misuse and was not barred from seeking relief against contributory infringement, even though it refused to license its method patent to allow competitors to sell a nonstaple commodity, propanil, which had no use except as a herbicide (the patented method). Dawson Chem. Co. v. Rohm & Haas Co., 448 U.S. 176, 199, 201-02, 215, 100 S. Ct. 2601, 65 L. Ed. 2d 696 (1980) ("Compulsory licensing is a rarity in our patent system, and we decline to manufacture such a requirement out of § 271(d)").

Although theses cases show a general disfavor for compulsory licenses, they do not establish a categorical rule, barring any type of compulsory license. In fact, contrary to Amado's assertion, this Court has the authority to issue a "compulsory" license by staying an injunction pending appeal, as recognized by the Federal Circuit. See Standard Havens Prods. v. Genor Indus., 897 F.2d 511, 512 (Fed. Cir. 1990) [*63] (discussing the traditional four factors considered when determining whether to grant a stay of an injunction pending appeal). Thus, even if the stay, in effect, results in a compulsory license, there is no prohibition against allowing such a "compulsory license" pending appeal when, as in the instant case, the Court determines that such a stay is appropriate after evaluating the four factors. See Aug. 2, 2005 Order 22-27. In addition, the Supreme Court recently held that not all patentees are entitled to an injunction against post-trial infringement. eBay, 126 S. Ct. at 1841. As Justice Kennedy noted in his concurrence, damages may be sufficient compensation where the patented invention represents only a small component of the infringing product and the patentee licenses the patent, instead of using it to produce and sell. Id. at 1842 (Kennedy, J. concurring). District courts applying eBay and following the guidance of Justice Kennedy's concurrence have awarded monetary damage for future infringement based on the jury's reasonable royalty calculation. See, e.g. z4 Techs., Inc., 434 F. Supp. 2d at 442.

Courts granting stays pending appeal often condition the stay upon the payment of [*64] an amount equal to the reasonable royalty found by the jury. See, e.g. In re Hayes Microcomputer Prods., 766 F. Supp. 818, 823 (N.D. Cal. 1991) (conditioning stay on defendants' depositing the 1.75% royalty, awarded by the jury for sales of the infringing products, into a savings account); Moxness Prods. v. Xomed, Inc., 7 U.S.P.Q. 2d 1877, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16060, at *16 (M.D. Fla. 1988) (awarding a twenty percent royalty to plaintiff during the stay, which was the rate determined by the jury to be reasonable); cf. Shiley, Inc. v. Bentley Labs., Inc., 601 F. Supp 964, 966, 971 (C.D. Cal. 1985) (ordering defendant to pay plaintiff an increasing royalty amount during a six-month transition period, beginning at twelve percent which was the reasonable royalty found by the jury, and increasing to fifteen and finally eighteen percent). Instead of awarding a specific royalty to plaintiff during the stay period, the August 2, 2005 Order directed Microsoft to pay a certain amount into escrow for each sale of Office or Access, but reserved the issue of the ultimate disposition of those funds for a later date. In addition, unlike the payments ordered as conditions of the stays in these other [*65] cases, the two dollars collected in the escrow was fifty (50) times greater than the four cent reasonable royalty the jury awarded based on the evidence at trial. The Court ordered payment of this higher sum, without determining what percentage would ultimately be awarded to Amado, because it represented the maximum amount Amado might ultimately be awarded and thereby ensured that there would be sufficient funds to cover any eventual award. Now that the jury's verdict and this Court's judgment have been affirmed by the Federal Circuit, the issue of the disposition of these escrow funds must be resolved.

To determine how much to award Amado per sale, the Court starts with the jury's reasonable royalty of four cents. At a minimum, Amado is entitled to receive what the jury found to be a reasonable royalty. In light of the fact that following the jury's verdict and the Court's denial of its motion for judgment as a matter of law, Microsoft was aware that Office and Access infringed claim 21 of Amado's '615 patent, Amado may be entitled to more than the four cents reasonable royalty for infringement during the stay-related escrow period. Thus, because the jury found that Microsoft had infringed [*66] Amado's patent, Microsoft was aware that it would ultimately have to pay Amado some amount for each sale of the infringing products during the escrow period if the verdict was upheld on appeal. Moreover, while Microsoft argues that the SP2 "fix" adequately removed the infringing feature, Amado had notified Microsoft that an acceptable fix would be distributed on the same disc as the infringing products and would remove the infringing functionality automatically as part of the installation. Microsoft choose to ignore this request and distribute a voluntary fix such that the products continued to be "capable of infringement." Thus, although Microsoft's pre-trial infringement was not willful, the same cannot be said about its post-trial infringement. Under 35

U.S.C. § 284, damages may be trebled for willfulness. While not directly applicable to this post-trial stay pending appeal, the Court uses this trebling for willfulness as a guideline. Moreover, the trebling of the four cent royalty awarded by the jury represents the upper limit of any potential future jury award for infringement during the escrow period. Given that Microsoft was on notice of its infringement and chose to implement [*67] a "fix" that relied upon its customers to remove the infringing functionality, the Court finds that Amado is entitled to receive twelve cents per unit.

III. DISPOSITION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court makes the following rulings:

1. Microsoft's Motion for Relief from Judgment is DENIED;
2. Microsoft's Motion to Dissolve the Permanent Injunction is GRANTED;
3. Amado's Motion for an Order Awarding him a Royalty for Sales of the Infringing Products from June 6, 2005 to December 3, 2006 is GRANTED IN PART.

The Clerk is ORDERED to close the stay-related escrow account and transfer $ 12,895,348.99 to an account identified by counsel for Amado. This amount represents a twelve cent per unit royalty for the 103,115,257 total licenses sold between June 6, 2005 and December 3, 2006, together with post-judgment interest required by 28 U.S.C. § 1961 at the statutory rate of 3.77%. After transferring this amount to Amado, the Clerk is ORDERED to transfer all remaining funds in the escrow account to an account identified by counsel for Microsoft.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: March 13, 2007

/s/ David O. Carter

DAVID O. CARTER

United States District Judge

Appendix A

The twelve cent per unit royalty for sales [*68] of the infringing products from June 6, 2005 through December 3, 2006 and the statutory post-judgment interest through December 3, 2006 were calculated as follows:

Period	Sales	Royalty	Beginning Balance
June-05	12,743,534	$ 1,529,224.08	$ 1,529,224.08
July-05	3,202,651	$ 384,318.12	$ 1,918,280.70
August-05	2,875,953	$ 345,114.36	$ 2,269,537.24
September-05	5,353,874	$ 642,464.88	$ 2,919,268.99
October-05	4,218,985	$ 506,278.20	$ 3,434,592.92
November-05	3,184,682	$ 382,161.84	$ 3,827,752.05
December-05	8,557,666	$ 1,026,919.92	$ 4,866,532.76
January-06	5,122,022	$ 614,642.64	$ 5,496,757.63
February-06	3,380,622	$ 405,674.64	$ 5,920,032.44
March-06	6,767,586	$ 812,110.32	$ 6,749,263.82
April-06	4,655,696	$ 558,683.52	$ 7,329,557.93
May-06	4,838,779	$ 580,653.48	$ 7,932,922.99
June-06	16,930,220	$ 2,031,626.40	$ 9,989,949.96
July-06	3,901,423	$ 468,170.76	$ 10,489,075.88
August-06	3,546,867	$ 425,624.04	$ 10,948,285.08
September-06	5,320,121	$ 638,414.52	$ 11,621,755.11

Period	Sales	Royalty	Beginning Balance
October-06	4,866,449	$ 583,973.88	$ 12,241,740.51
November-06	2,650,449	$ 318,053.88	$ 12,598,991.44
December-06	997,678	$ 119,721.36	$ 12,757,752.41

Period	Interest	Ending Balance
June-05	$ 4,738.50	$ 1,533,962.58
July-05	$ 6,142.18	$ 1,924,422.88
August-05	$ 7,266.87	$ 2,276,804.11
September-05	$ 9,045.73	$ 2,928,314.72
October-05	$ 10,997.28	$ 3,445,590.21
November-05	$ 11,860.79	$ 3,839,612.84
December-05	$ 15,582.24	$ 4,882,114.99
January-06	$ 17,600.17	$ 5,514,357.80
February-06	$ 17,121.06	$ 5,937,153.50
March-06	$ 21,610.59	$ 6,770,874.41
April-06	$ 22,711.59	$ 7,352,269.51
May-06	$ 25,400.57	$ 7,958,323.56
June-06	$ 30,955.16	$ 10,020,905.12
July-06	$ 33,585.16	$ 10,522,661.04
August-06	$ 35,055.51	$ 10,983,340.59
September-06	$ 36,011.52	$ 11,657,766.63
October-06	$ 39,197.05	$ 12,280,937.56
November-06	$ 39,039.61	$ 12,638,031.05
December-06	$ 3,953.16	$ 12,761,705.57

In [*69] addition, Plaintiff is entitled to post-judgment interest on the $ 12,761,705.57 ending balance as of December 3, 2006 from December 4, 2006 through today, March 13, 2007, in the amount of $ 133,643.42. Thus, the total award is $ 12,895,348.99.

In re Tableware Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

March 13, 2007, Decided ; March 13, 2007, Filed

No C-04-3514 VRW

Reporter

484 F. Supp. 2d 1059 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17480 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,678

IN RE TABLEWARE ANTITRUST LITIGATION; THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO ALL ACTIONS

Subsequent History: Class certification granted by In re Tableware Antitrust Litig., 241 F.R.D. 644, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21166 (N.D. Cal., Mar. 13, 2007)

Prior History: In re Tableware Antitrust Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50838 (N.D. Cal., May 25, 2006)

Core Terms

Bath, depo, plaintiffs', boycott, antitrust, conspiracy, horizontal, competitors, tableware, defendants', rollout, manufacturers, conspire, group boycott, damages, cases, alleged conspiracy, department store, summary judgment, retailers, vertical, anti trust law, products, summary judgment motion, motive, chain, circumstantial evidence, alleged agreement, collusion, suppliers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN1[ ] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In reviewing a summary judgment motion, the court must determine whether genuine issues of material fact exist, resolving any doubt in favor of the party opposing the motion. Summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is "genuine," that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. And the burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact lies with the moving party. When the moving party has the burden of proof on an issue, the party's showing must be sufficient for the court to hold that no reasonable trier of fact could find other than for the moving party. Summary judgment is granted only if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

With regard to a motion for summary judgment, the nonmoving party may not simply rely on the pleadings, however, but must produce significant probative evidence supporting its claim that a genuine issue of material fact exists. The evidence presented by the nonmoving party is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor. The judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN3[] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a), provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue. Although this language can be read to afford relief to all persons whose injuries are causally related to an antitrust violation, the doctrine of "antitrust standing" precludes such an interpretation. Only those who meet the requirements for "antitrust standing" may pursue a claim and to acquire "antitrust standing," a plaintiff must adequately allege and eventually prove "antitrust injury."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

To determine whether the plaintiffs have standing to pursue their antitrust claim, the court considers five factors: (1) the nature of the plaintiffs' alleged injury -- whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages. To conclude that there is antitrust standing, the court need not find in favor of the plaintiffs on each factor; generally, "no single factor is decisive." Yet courts give great weight to the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury. A showing of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing. To demonstrate an antitrust injury, it is not enough that the plaintiffs' claimed injury flows from the unlawful conduct; an antitrust injury must flow from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN5[] Standing, Requirements

The party alleging the antitrust injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN6[] Standing, Requirements

The second factor for determining whether the plaintiff have standing to assert an antitrust claim assesses whether the plaintiffs' asserted injuries were the direct result of the defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct. To assess the directness of this injury, courts look to the chain of causation linking the plaintiffs' injury to the alleged restraint in the market. Directness in the antitrust context means close in the chain of causation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN7[] Standing, Requirements

With regard to whether plaintiff have standing to assert an antitrust claim, courts consider whether the plaintiffs' damages are speculative. A damages claim is speculative if (1) the alleged injury was indirect; and (2) the alleged effects may have been produced by independent factors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Complex antitrust cases invariably involve complicated questions of causation and damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Standing

With regard to whether plaintiff have standing to assert an antitrust claim, damages related to lost profits are distinct from those related to increased costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN10[] Private Actions, Standing

Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois holds that a plaintiff does not state a claim for relief for an illegal overcharge due to an anticompetitive agreement if the plaintiff did not purchase directly from a member of the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN11[] Private Actions, Standing

Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois is inapplicable to claims against remote sellers when the plaintiffs allege that the sellers conspired with intermediates in the distribution chain to fix the price at which the plaintiffs purchased.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN12[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Although the United States Supreme Court lists "group boycotts" among the classes of economic activity that warrant per se invalidation under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the Supreme Court acknowledges that exactly what types of activity fall within the forbidden category is far from certain.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN13[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

With regard to group boycotts under antitrust law, a per se standard generally applies to cases involving joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle. A paradigmatic boycott is defined as collective action among a group of competitors that may inhibit the competitive vitality of rivals. In these cases, the boycott often cut off access to a supply, facility or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete, and frequently the boycotting firm possessed a dominant position to the relevant market. In addition, the practices are generally not justified by plausible arguments that they are intended to enhance overall efficiency and make markets more competitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN14[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The category of restraints classed as group boycotts is not to be expanded indiscriminately, and the per se approach has generally been limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN15[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reads Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationary Printing Co., and its progeny as establishing three criteria for determining whether the per se standard applies to a group boycott: (1) the boycott cuts off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the victim firm to compete; (2) the boycotting firm possesses a dominant market position; and (3) the practices are not justified by plausible arguments that they enhanced overall efficiency or competition. In the Ninth Circuit, these three criteria are indicative of per se illegal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Under antitrust law, the term "dominant" is plainly chosen to stand for something different from antitrust's term of art "monopoly."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN17[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Under antitrust law, the United States Supreme Court has expressly limited the per se rule in the boycott context to cases involving horizontal agreements among direct competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN18[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Under antitrust law, there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN19[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Under antitrust law, the modern formula by which courts determine the existence of concerted action is as follows: the correct standard is that there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the parties. That is, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the parties had a conspicuous commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN20[] Sherman Act, Claims

Under antitrust law, conspiracies may be shown either by direct or circumstantial evidence. Only rarely will there be direct evidence of an express agreement in conspiracy cases; hence, circumstantial evidence plays a pivotal role in antitrust litigation. Although interpreting such evidence and drawing inferences from it ordinarily are responsibilities of the factfinder, the United States Supreme Court mandates a threshold judicial assessment of such evidence as follows: antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. The inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN21[] Sherman Act, Claims

With regard to establishing conspiracies under antitrust law, two separate inquiries are relevant to this issue: (1) whether the defendant had any rational motive to join the allege conspiracy, and (2) whether the defendant's conduct was consistent with the defendant's independent interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN22[] Sherman Act, Claims

With regard to antitrust law, permitting the inference of conspiratorial behavior from circumstantial evidence consistent with both lawful and unlawful conduct will deter pro-competitive conduct -- an especially pernicious danger in light of the fact that the very purpose of the antitrust laws is to promote competition. Courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter pro-competitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN23[] Sherman Act, Claims

With regard to establishing conspiracies under antitrust law, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has crafted a two-part test to be applied whenever plaintiffs rest their case entirely on circumstantial evidence. First, defendants may rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice. The burden then shifts back to the plaintiffs to provide specific evidence tending to show that defendants were not engaging in permissible competitive behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN24[] Sherman Act, Claims

Direct evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 conspiracy must be evidence that is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN25[] Sherman Act, Claims

With regard to conspiracies under antitrust law, a defendant is entitled to summary judgment when it provides a plausible and justifiable alternative interpretation of its conduct that rebuts the alleged conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN26[] Sherman Act, Claims

Under antitrust law, complaints by retailers regarding other retailers are natural -- and from the manufacturer's perspective, unavoidable -- reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN27[] Sherman Act, Claims

With regard to establishing conspiracies under antitrust law, the plaintiffs have the burden to provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendants were not engaging in permissible competitive behavior. Such evidence must tend to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. In assessing this evidence, the court also considers (1) whether the defendants had "any rational motive" to join the alleged conspiracy, and (2) whether the defendants' conduct was consistent with the defendant's independent interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN28[] Sherman Act, Claims

With regard to establishing conspiracies under antitrust law, if the factual context renders a party's claim implausible - if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense - the party must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary. The plaintiffs need not demonstrate the existence of an explicit conspiracy, only that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN29[] Procedural Due Process, Self-Incrimination Privilege

The drawing of an adverse inference from the invocation the Fifth Amendment in a civil suit is proper when incriminating evidence is also presented.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN30[] Sherman Act, Claims

Under antitrust law, complaints by competitors, standing alone, are not sufficient to show a conspiracy.

Counsel: [1] For W. Scott Young, on behalf of himself & all other similarly situated, Plaintiff: Alex C. Turan, Henry A. Cirillo, Michael P. Lehmann, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Furth Lehmann & Grant LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Richard Alexander Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cadio Zirpoli, Geoffrey C. Rushing, Guido Saveri, Lisa Saveri, Saveri & Saveri Inc., San Francisco, CA.; Craig C. Corbitt, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gene LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Joseph M. Alioto, Alioto Law Firm, San Francisco, CA.

For Federated Department Stores, Inc., Defendant: Jeffrey A. LeVee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Los Angeles, CA.; Phillip Aaron Proger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Toby G Singer, Jones Day, Washington, DC.; Thomas Demitrack, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Cleveland, OH.

For The May Department Stores Company, Defendant: Catherine E. Sison, Ronald J. Dolan, LEAD ATTORNEY, The May Department Stores Company, Office of Legal Counsel, St. Louis, MO.; David Dong-In Sohn, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Lenox, Inc., Defendant: Tammy Albarran, Terri Garland, Morrison & Foerster, San Francisco, Ca.

For Waterford Wedgewood, U.S.A., Defendant: Amy E. Richardson, Patrick Pearse O'Donnell, LEAD [2] ATTORNEYS, Joseph Collins Cavender, Justin Emerson Dillon, Harris, Wiltshire, Grannis LLP, Washington, DC, US.; Jeffrey C. Hallam, LEAD ATTORNEY, San Francisco, CA.

For Bed Bath & Beyond, Inc, Witness: Dawn Michelle Irizarry, Proskauer Rose LLP, LA, CA.

Judges: VAUGHN R WALKER, United States District Chief Judge.

Opinion by: VAUGHN R WALKER

Opinion

[*1061] ORDER

Plaintiffs in these consolidated cases allege that May Department Stores Co ("May") and Federated Department Stores, Inc ("Federated"), which operate department stores across the United States, and Lenox, Inc ("Lenox") and Waterford Wedgwood, USA ("Waterford"), both of which produce fine tableware sold in the United States, conspired with one another to boycott Bed, Bath and Beyond, a competitor of May and Federated. Plaintiffs claim to have purchased fine tableware from May and Federated during the period of the alleged boycott and were thus injured because the boycott impaired competition in that product market. Plaintiffs bring suit under § 1 of the Sherman Act, alleging that defendants' conduct is condemned per se.

On November 17, 2006, Federated (joined by May) and Waterford moved for summary judgment asserting a variety of grounds. [3] Doc # 116; Doc # 128. For reasons discussed below, the court GRANTS Waterford's motion for summary judgment and GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART Federated's and May's motion for summary judgment.

I

In early 2000, both Waterford and Lenox considered expanding the distribution channels for their high-end tableware lines to include Bed, Bath & Beyond and other specialty retailers. Doc # 183 at Ex 67 ("In a perfect world, this [Bed, Bath & Beyond partnership] is the kind of new distribution that we should be exploring; otherwise, we will be forever in the grip of the department stores. However, we will have to assess the amount of angst at Federated compared with the prize before we decide whether or not to be a part of this [Bed, Bath & Beyond] test."). See also Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 48:8-51:15.

On March 7, 2001, Bed, Bath & Beyond and Waterford executives met and agreed to proceed with a test project. Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 74:12-75:9; Ex 32 ("A * * * meeting in New York when we agreed to proceed with the test * * *"). During subsequent meetings, Bed, Bath & Beyond and Waterford personnel finalized site plans for the opening of a fine china department at [4] Bed, Bath & Beyond. Doc [*1062] # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 82:11-84:8; Doc # 179, Ex 5 (Johnson depo) at 144:1-16; Doc # 183, Ex 72.

Lenox also met with Bed, Bath & Beyond to discuss the prospect of distributing tableware. Doc # 179, Ex 2 (Gavin depo) at 50:19-53:6, 56:18-21, 58:15-24, 59:8-21; Ex 6 (Krangel Depo) at 94:8-98:23, 106:3-19; Doc # 180, Ex 14 (Scala depo) at 68:5-70:11, 71:12-19. Eventually, on March 30, 2001, Lenox agreed to participate in a test rollout with Bed, Bath & Beyond. Doc # 179, Ex 2 at 64:20-65:3; Doc # 183, Ex 59 ("We will be piloting a 7 store test program in Bridal tabletop products"). The parties confirmed specific product assortments at subsequent meetings. Doc # 179, Ex 2 at 139:20-142:2; Doc # 180, Ex 15 (Temares depo) at 59:9-63:22, 160:2-161:3; Doc # 179, Ex 5 (Johnson depo) at 73:20-74:9, 198:18-199:9.

Because Waterford had an interest in knowing the identities of the other manufacturers participating in the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout, its executives had their "ear to the ground from day one about which manufacturers were going to be participating and who were not going to be participating." Doc # 179, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 156:8-14. Indeed, Waterford's [5] Mielke testified that he probably mentioned the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout during conversations with Lou Scala and Moira Gavin at Lennox. Doc # 179, Ex 2 (Gavin depo) at 139:20-141:9); Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 153:24-157:7; Ex 60 ("Lenox and Waterford are anchoring the department.").

On May 31, 2001, Lenox informed May about its plans to distribute through Bed, Bath and Beyond "as a '6 door test,' starting in 9/01," Doc # 182, Ex 44 at May 65281. Lenox further mentioned that Waterford would also be participating in the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout. Doc # 179, Ex 7 (Locraft depo) at 179:13-16. The evidence suggests that this news spurred the retailers into action. Gregory Locraft, an executive at May, was "agitated, disappointed, concerned [and] upset" by this news. In a raised voice, Locraft exclaimed "you do what you have to do and we'll do what we have to do." Doc # 179, Ex 7 at 176:14-16. Soon thereafter, May executive Don Engelman called Carl Mielke at Waterford to confirm whether Waterford intended to participate in the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout. Mielke told Engelman that Waterford was "working on something" with Bed, Bath & Beyond. Doc # 180, Ex 10 at 163:11-12.

[6] The next day, Lenox contacted May executive Judith Hofer "to try to take care of the situation" and "settle things down." Doc # 179, Ex 6 at 206:16-25. Hofer was "very professional" in response, but reiterated Locraft's admonition, "you have to do what you need to do to grow your business and we need to do what we need to do." Id at 209:7-9.

About a week after the May 31 meeting, Federated contacted both Lenox and Waterford to complain about their participation in the rollout. Federated's Salus telephoned Lenox President Krangel and said he was "concerned" about the decision. Doc # 179, Ex 6 (Krangel depo) at 241:9-10. At the end of the conversation, Salus told Krangel: "[y]ou have to do what you have to do to grow your business and we have to do what we need to do with our business." Doc # 170, Ex 6 (Krangel depo) at 239:16-25, 236:19-244:17; Doc # 180, Ex 14 (Scala depo) at 148:5-149:19, 151:3-12.

On the same day, Federated president Terry Lundgren and executive Janet Grove telephoned Waterford CEO Chris McGillivary about the Bed, Bath & Beyond program, warning that it "was not going to help the relationship between the two companies." Doc # 179, Ex 9 (McGillivary depo) at 65: [7] 5-66:11. A few days later, [*1063] James Zimmerman, Federated's CEO, telephoned Anthony O'Reilly, Chairman of Waterford, to discuss Waterford's participation in the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout. According to Waterford, Zimmerman said he "would advise against it." Doc # 180, Ex 19 at FED 001223; Ex 16 (Zimmerman depo) at 24:4-26:6, 29:4-30:3.

On June 12, 2001, Federated executives held an internal meeting during which the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout was mentioned. Doc # 179, Ex 3 (Grove depo) at 129:13-130:14. One week later, Helaine Suval, a vice-president at Federated, sent an email summarizing the meeting as relayed to her from Federated's Dawn Robertson (Suval did not attend the meeting). The email states in pertinent part:

> Waterford, Lenox and All-Clad have agreed to sell Bed, Bath & Beyond (6 stores). Major point of contention - [Federated's president] Terry Lundgren involved. Federated has threatened to drop them if they go ahead and sell BB&B. No new initiatives with them in stores[.]

Doc # 181, Ex 38. Robertson disputes the accuracy of the Suval email; although unable to recall what was said at the meeting, Robertson firmly relates what was not said. She contends that [8] nobody at the meeting "stated that Lenox or Waterford, or any of their products, would be dropped by Federated or any of its stores, nor did any Federated [employee] at the meeting state that there would be no new initiatives with Lenox." Doc # 131, Ex T, P 4. The point, of course, is that the evidence discloses conflicting versions of events, albeit both from Federated personnel.

Around June 12, 2002, May executive Tom Hayes had a meeting with Scala at Lenox, the substance of which Hayes relayed to Gregory Locraft. Doc # 179, Ex 7 at 215:20-23. According to Locraft's notes, Hayes maintained that he would not distribute several Lenox and Gorham brands if Lenox sold to Bed, Bath & Beyond. Doc # 179, Ex 7 at 218:17-21; Doc # 183, Ex 57.

The concerns of Federated and May appear to have borne fruit. Waterford's McGillivary told his subordinate, Carl Mielke, "[t]his is bad * * *, [w]e need to stop the test." Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 113:5-18. McGillivary remarked to Mielke "[w]e needed to find a way to stop this and we need to tell [Bed, Bath & Beyond] we can't do this test, and we can't tell them that it is because of Federated." Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 111: [9] 21-113:25, 115:22-116:10. Accordingly, Mielke drafted a script of what to tell Bed, Bath & Beyond, which McGillivary approved. Doc # 181, Ex 10 at 119:20-120:5, 130:22-131:7; Doc # 181, Ex 31-33.

On June 12, 2001, Mielke called James Peikon and Todd Johnson at Bed, Bath & Beyond and told them Waterford would not be able to participate in the test program. Doc # 179, Ex 5 (Johnson depo) at 78:3-79:18; Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 120:6-15, 130:22-134:21. According to Mielke, Peikon and Johnson told Mielke that his reasons were "bullshit," Doc # 180, Ex 10 at 133:3-25, and that "[t]hese F - - - - up department stores will promise you guys anything if you don't sell us but will go right back to F - - - - you up the - - - like they always have." Doc # 181, Ex 32.

At McGillivary's instruction, Mielke reported his conversation with Bed, Bath & Beyond to Federated's Janet Grove. Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 134:22-136:18; Doc # 181, Ex 31. According to Mielke, Grove said "[t]hat's great[,] [y]ou guys do what you have to do and we do what we have to do, but I'm glad you guys made this decision." Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 136:19-137:17; Doc # 179, Ex 3 (Grove depo) [10] at 83:7-18.

[*1064] Next, Lenox called Bed, Bath & Beyond and terminated its participation in the Bed, Bath & Beyond program. Doc # 180, Ex 15 (Temares depo) at 168:5-169:22. Lenox's Krangel called Bed, Bath & Beyond President and CEO Steven Temares and told him that Lenox needed to "pull back." Doc # 180, Ex 15 (Temares depo) at 95:13-96:4, 99:15-101:14, 103:16-107:22, 109:16-110:15, 168:5-170:16). Temares thought Krangel's purported justification for pulling out of the deal "was a bunch of horse shit," sounded "scripted" and made no sense. Doc # 180, Ex 15 at 111:8-112:16, 170:17-171:7:

> It is just inconsistent with common sense since I sat with them at a meeting a month before, that I imagine people told him all along where we were in the process, that we had selected the assortment, that they approved the fixturing, that we had gone through with the selection of stores, that we involved all these people and time and effort and we had numerous meetings at all different levels in the organization, so common sense would indicate that what he said is farfetched.

Id, Ex 15 at 170:17-172:17.

Finally, on June 18, 2001, Federated's Zimmerman wrote to O'Reilly at Waterford, praising [11] him for making the "right decision":

> I wanted to write and tell you I think your team made the right decision. You have a great brand and it needs to be protected and enhanced. I assume you played a role and I think you did the right thing for all partners in this game. Thanks for listening to me as I voiced my thoughts.

Doc # 180, Ex 18; Ex 16 (Zimmerman depo) at 26:13-20, 28:1-29:1.

About one year later, Waterford began to sell its Wedgwood tableware products to Bed, Bath & Beyond in August 2002 and its Waterford brand products in November 2004. Lenox followed suit in November 2002. Doc # 179, Ex 2 (Gavin depo) at 221:12-221:21, 231:2-21, 243:21-244:9; Doc # 183, Ex 62; Doc # 183, Ex 67 at 29.

II

In its order denying defendants' motion to dismiss, the court remarked that plaintiffs "appear to state claims (presumably in the alternative) for (1) vertical minimum resale price maintenance, (2) horizontal price fixing and (3) an exclusionary group boycott." Doc # 52 at 5. Since that time, plaintiffs have shed the first two theories of relief, rendering this suit, in plaintiffs' words, "a group boycott case." Doc # 161 at 8.

As a legal matter, however, this case is [12] better characterized as three group boycott cases: in plaintiffs' view, the successful boycott of Bed, Bath & Beyond arose from (1) a horizontal agreement between Federated and May, (2) a horizontal agreement between Waterford and Lenox and (3) vertical agreements among all defendants. Moreover, plaintiffs presumably regard each set of agreements as independently sufficient to effect the boycott of Bed, Bath & Beyond. Although plaintiffs add these alleged agreements together to arrive at one grand (and overdetermined) conspiracy, various antitrust doctrines impel the court to distinguish among these three categories at various points along the court's analysis.

HN1[] In reviewing a summary judgment motion, the court must determine whether genuine issues of material fact exist, resolving any doubt in favor of the party opposing the motion. "[S]ummary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is 'genuine,' that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson v Liberty Lobby, 477 US 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 [*1065] (1986). "Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law [13] will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment." Id. And the burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact lies with the moving party. Celotex Corp v Catrett, 477 US 317, 322-23, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). When the moving party has the burden of proof on an issue, the party's showing must be sufficient for the court to hold that no reasonable trier of fact could find other than for the moving party. Calderone v United States, 799 F2d 254, 258-59 (6th Cir 1986). Summary judgment is granted only if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. FRCP 56(c).

HN2[] The nonmoving party may not simply rely on the pleadings, however, but must produce significant probative evidence supporting its claim that a genuine issue of material fact exists. TW Elec Sery v Pacific Elec Contractors Ass'n, 809 F2d 626, 630 (9th Cir 1987). The evidence presented by the nonmoving party "is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor." Anderson, 477 US at 255. "[T]he judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there [14] is a genuine issue for trial." Id at 249.

III

A

HN3[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue * * *." 15 USC § 15(a). Although this language could be read to afford relief to all persons whose injuries are causally related to an antitrust violation, Lucas v Bechtel Corp, 800 F2d 839, 843 (9th Cir 1986), the doctrine of "antitrust standing" precludes such an interpretation. Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v NFL, 791 F2d 1356, 1363 (9th Cir 1986). "Only those who meet the requirements for 'antitrust standing' may pursue a claim * * *; and to acquire 'antitrust standing,' a plaintiff must adequately allege and eventually prove 'antitrust injury." Glen Holly Entertainment, Inc v Tektronix Inc, 352 F3d 367 (9th Cir 2003) (citing Associated Fed Contractors of California, Inc v California State Council of Carpenters, 459 US 519, 530-35, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)).

HN4[] To determine whether plaintiffs have standing to pursue their antitrust claim, the court considers five factors:

(1) [15] the nature of plaintiffs' alleged injury -- whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall;

(2) the directness of the injury;

(3) the speculative measure of the harm;

(4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and

(5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Associated General Contractors, 459 US at 538-45;

To conclude that there is antitrust standing, the court need not find in favor of plaintiffs on each factor, see Amarel v Connell, 102 F3d 1494, 1507 (9th Cir 1996); generally, "no single factor is decisive." R C Dick Geothermal Corp v Thermogenics, Inc, 890 F2d 139, 146 (9th Cir 1989) (en banc). Yet courts give great weight to the nature of plaintiffs' alleged injury. See Amarel, 102 F3d at 1507. Indeed, the Supreme Court has noted that "[a] showing of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing." Cargill, Inc v Monfort of Colorado, Inc, 479 US 104, 110, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 n5 (1986). To demonstrate an antitrust injury, it is not enough that the plaintiffs' claimed injury [*1066] flows from the unlawful conduct; an antitrust injury must "flow[] [16] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Atlantic Richfield Co v USA Petroleum Co, 495 US 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L.Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (quoting Brunswick Corp v Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc, 429 US 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

Plaintiffs principally rely on Blue Shield v McCready, 457 US 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982), in asserting their injury was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall. In McCready, the Supreme Court held that an individual had standing to sue her health insurer for reimbursement of payments to a clinical psychologist for allegedly conspiring with physicians to bar clinical psychologists from the market by excluding their services from coverage under the insurance policy. In doing so, the Court rejected the argument that the plaintiff lacked standing because she was not an actor in the relevant market and because the more appropriate plaintiffs were the psychologists. Id. The Court reasoned that antitrust remedies "cannot be restricted to those competitors whom the conspirators hope to eliminate from the market. * * * As a consumer of psychotherapy services * * * [the plaintiff] was within that area of the economy * * * endangered by [the] breakdown [17] of competitive conditions." Id at 479-80. Even though the plaintiff "was not a competitor of the conspirators, the injury she suffered was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirator sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market." Id at 483.

Like the plaintiff in McCready, plaintiffs here are consumers in the restrained market - the tableware market. And by purchasing tableware directly from the alleged co-conspirators, plaintiffs participated in the area of the economy endangered by anticompetitive conditions. See id at 480. See also Glen Holly Entertainment, 352 F3d at 372 (noting that "HN5[] the party alleging the injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market") (citing Eagle v Star-Kist Foods, Inc, 812 F2d 538 (9th Cir 1987). Accordingly, under McCready, although plaintiffs were not the direct target of defendants' boycott, their injuries were "inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict" on Bed, Bath & Beyond. See McCready, 457 US at 483. [18]

HN6[] The second factor assesses whether plaintiffs' asserted injuries were the direct result of defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct. Plaintiffs contend that defendants increased the price of its tableware by boycotting expansion to Bed, Bath & Beyond. To assess the directness of this injury, courts look to the chain of causation linking plaintiffs' injury to the alleged restraint in the market. See Associated General, 459 US at 540, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723; Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, Inc v GTE Directories Corp, 951 F2d 1158, 1162 (9th Cir 1991) ("Directness in the antitrust context means close in the chain of causation."). The chain of causation vis-a-vis Federated and May is direct because the boycott of Bed, Bath & Beyond allegedly affected the price plaintiffs paid Federated and May for Lenox and Waterford tableware. See Glen Holly, 352 F3d at 374 (antitrust injury flowed from discontinuation of a competing product). The chain of causation with respect to Waterford and Lenox, however, is more attenuated and, for reasons discussed below, implicates the so-called "direct purchaser" requirement.

Under the third factor, HN7[] courts consider whether plaintiffs' [19] damages are speculative. See Associated General, 459 US at 542. [*1067] In Associated General, the Supreme Court found the damages claim in question to be speculative because (1) the alleged injury was indirect; and (2) "the alleged effects * * * may have been produced by independent factors." Id; see also Eagle v Star-Kist Foods, Inc, 812 F2d 538, 542 (9th Cir 1987).

The court finds that plaintiffs' alleged damages are not speculative enough to eviscerate plaintiffs' standing. First, as discussed above, plaintiffs' asserted injury flows directly from defendants' alleged decision to boycott Bed, Bath & Beyond. Second, defendants do not suggest that plaintiffs' asserted injury may have stemmed from other exogenous market factors. Third, although the extent of plaintiffs' damages hinges on a complex counterfactual (the price of tableware if Bed, Bath & Beyond had participated in the market), "this complexity is not so unusual as to distinguish this case from other complex business disputes * * *." American Ad Management, Inc v GTE Corp, 190 F3d 1051, 1059 (9th Cir 1999). See also Forsyth v Humana, Inc, 114 F3d 1467, 1478 (9th Cir 1997) [20] ("HN8[] Complex antitrust cases * * * invariably involve complicated questions of causation and damages.").

The fourth factor -- the risk of duplicative recovery -- also weighs in favor of plaintiffs' standing. The purpose undergirding this factor is to avoid the risk "that potential plaintiffs may be in a 'position to assert conflicting claims to a common fund * * * thereby creating the danger of multiple liability for the fund." Eagle, 812 F2d at 542 (quoting Associated General, 459 US at 544). Even if Bed, Bath & Beyond could bring suit against defendants (it appears the statute of limitations has run, see 15 USC § 15(b)), duplicative recovery is unlikely because plaintiffs' damages are distinct from Bed, Bath & Beyond's. To the extent defendants' alleged tactics raised artificially the price for tableware, plaintiffs' damages exceed -- and thus diverge from -- Bed, Bath & Beyond's lost profits. See American Ad, 190 F3d at 1059-60 (damagesHN9[] related to lost profits are distinct from those related to increased costs).

As discussed above with respect to the speculative measure of harm factor, the court does not find [21] the apportionment of damages in this case to be exceedingly complicated. Furthermore, unlike Associated General, in which damages needed to be apportioned among "directly victimized contractors and subcontractors and indirectly affected employees and union entities," 459 US at 545, apportioning damages in this case would require only a determination of the damages suffered by direct customers.

In sum, because all five of the Associated General factors weigh in plaintiffs' favor, the court finds that plaintiffs have antitrust standing in this litigation, at least with respect to Federated and May.

One issue involving standing remains: inasmuch as plaintiffs' suit targets an alleged [*1068] horizontal agreement between Waterford and Lennox, plaintiffs run afoul of the so-called "direct purchaser" requirement from Illinois Brick Co v Illinois, 431 US 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). The Court inHN10[] Illinois Brick ruled that a plaintiff does not state a claim for relief for an illegal overcharge due to an anticompetitive agreement if the plaintiff did not purchase directly from a member of the conspiracy. In doing so, the Court precluded antitrust claims based on overcharges [22] that were "passed-on" through the distribution chain to the ultimate consumer. Id.

Illinois Brick does not preclude this suit entirely because plaintiffs purchased the relevant goods directly from Federated and May. Yet the allegations concerning a horizontal agreement between Waterford and Lennox implicate Illinois Brick, as plaintiffs stand as indirect purchasers vis-a-vis this alleged agreement. Putting aside, for a moment, the alleged vertical agreements, the allegations concerning an agreement between Waterford and Lennox are probative only to the extent they substantiate horizontal agreements between Federated and May or vertical agreements among defendants. See Arizona v Shamrock Foods, 729 F2d 1208 (9th Cir 1984) (concluding that HN11[] Illinois Brick is inapplicable to claims against remote sellers when the plaintiffs allege that the sellers conspired with intermediates in the distribution chain to fix the price at which the plaintiffs purchased). Moreover, if Federated and May succeed in obtaining summary judgment, leaving only an alleged horizontal agreement between Waterford and Lennox, then plaintiffs become indirect purchasers with respect to the [23] alleged conspiracy and thereby cease to have standing to sue.

B

The next issue posed by defendants' motions is whether the alleged agreements among defendants to prevent the sale of Waterford and Lenox tableware to Bed, Bath and Beyond is properly viewed as a group boycott deserving of per se scrutiny. HN12[] Although the Supreme Court lists "group boycotts" among the classes of economic activity that warrant per se invalidation under § 1, the Court acknowledges that "exactly what types of activity fall within the forbidden category is * * * far from certain." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc v Pacific Stationery & Printing Co, 472 US 284, 294-95, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985). See also id at 295 ("There exists more confusion about the scope and operation of the per se rule against group boycotts than in reference to any other aspect of the per se doctrine."). Or as one court quipped, using the term "boycott" is "the equivalent of yelling 'fire' in the halls of traditional antitrust jurisprudence." Universal Amusements Co v General Cinema Corp, 635 F Supp 1505, 1523 (SD Tex 1985).

The application of the per se rule to group boycotts developed [24] from a series of cases in which the Supreme Court invalidated such boycotts as § 1 violations. In Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Association v United States, 234 US 600, 611-14, 34 S. Ct. 951, 58 L. Ed. 1490 (1914), for example, the Court held unlawful concerted refusals to deal with wholesalers who sold directly to customers. Similarly, in Fashion Originators' Guild of America v FTC, 312 US 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949, 32 F.T.C. 1856 (1941), the Court deemed unlawful a joint "program" of textile and garment manufacturers that prohibited the sale of garments to stores that sold "style pirated" garments and the sale of fabrics to manufacturers who sold to stores selling pirated goods.

The Court's predilection for designating group boycotts per se unlawful law reached its highwater mark in Klor's Inc v Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc, 359 US 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). A retailer, Broadway, entered into an agreement with suppliers of appliances "either not to sell to Klor's or to sell to it only at discriminatory and highly unfavorable prices." Id at 209. Broadway argued that because consumers and other competitors had access to supply, the public was not injured. The Court disagreed with Broadway, [25] declaring that

> [g]roup boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category. They have not been saved by allegations that they were reasonable in the specific circumstances, nor by a failure to show that they "fixed or regulated prices, parcelled out or limited [*1069] production, or brought about a deterioration in quality."

Id at 212 (citing Fashion Originators' Guild v Federal Trade Commission, 312 U.S. 457, 466, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949, 32 F.T.C. 1856 (1941).

The Supreme Court has since retreated from its stance in Klor's, and has cautioned against blindly fixing the per se label on all concerted refusals to deal. See Richard A Posner, Antitrust Law (2d ed 2001) ("A boycott * * * used to be deemed a per se violation * * *; [t]he Supreme Court has wisely abandoned that position, which anyway was never taken seriously"). Indeed, in Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc v Pacific Stationery Printing Co, 472 US 284, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985), the Court rejected, except for a narrow category of cases, the per se characterization for concerted refusals to deal. Under this new standard, the Court declined [26] to apply the per se approach to the expulsion of a member from a cooperative purchasing agency because the agency achieved "economies of scale in both the purchase and warehousing of wholesale supplies." Northwest Wholesale, 472 U.S. at 295, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202.

According to the Northwest Wholesale Court, HN13[] a per se standard generally applies to cases involving "joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by 'either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle." Northwest Wholesale, 472 US at 294 (quoting L Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 261-62 (1977)). See also P Areeda & L Kaplow, Antitrust Analysis: Problems, Text, and Cases 333 (5th ed 1997) (defining paradigmatic boycott as "collective action among a group of competitors that may inhibit the competitive vitality of rivals"). In these cases, "the boycott often cut off access to a supply, facility or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete, and frequently the boycotting firm possessed a dominant position to the relevant market. In addition, the practices were generally not justified [27] by plausible arguments that they were intended to enhance overall efficiency and make markets more competitive." Northwest Wholesale, 472 US at 294.

Guided by Northwest Wholesale, the Court in FTC v Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 US 447, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986), refused to apply the per se designation to an agreement by competitors, dentists, to deny patient X-rays to insurance companies. These X-rays posed a problem for Indiana's dentists because they enabled insurance companies to review the appropriateness of the dentists' charges. The Court declined to invoke the per se rule and "forc[e] the [dentists'] policy into the 'boycott' pigeonhole," reasoning that > HN14[] the category of restraints classed as group boycotts is not to be expanded indiscriminately, and the per se approach has generally been limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor.

Id at 458.

A number of courts have construed Northwest Wholesale and Indiana Federation of Dentists as holding that per se analysis is inappropriate unless the boycotting [28] party possesses market power or exclusive access to an element in effective competition. See, e g, Hahn v Oregon Physicians' Service, 868 F2d 1022, 1030 (9th Cir 1989). But in FTC v Superior Court Trial Lawyers Association, 493 US 411, 110 S. Ct. 768, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990), the Supreme Court concluded that at least some group boycotts among horizontal competitors are per se unlawful without [*1070] regard to the market power of the participants. This case involved an agreement by members of a bar association not to represent indigent criminal defendants unless the District of Columbia increased their compensation. The Court held that this agreement "was unquestionably a 'naked restraint' on price and output" and, as such, was per se unlawful. Id at 423. See also NYNEX Corp v Discon, Inc, 525 US 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998) (limiting per se scrutiny to cases "involving horizontal agreements among direct competitors").

HN15[] The Ninth Circuit reads Northwest Wholesale and its progeny as establishing three criteria for determining whether the per se standard applies to a group boycott:

> (1) the boycott cuts off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary [29] to enable the victim firm to compete;
>
> (2) the boycotting firm possesses a dominant market position; and
>
> (3) the practices are not justified by plausible arguments that they enhanced overall efficiency or competition.

Adaptive Power Solutions, LLC v Hughes Missile Systems Co, 141 F3d 947, 950 (9th Cir 1998) (quoting Hahn v Oregon Physicians' Serv, 868 F2d 1022, 1030 (9th Cir 1988)). In the Ninth Circuit, these three criteria "are indicative of per se illegal conduct." Adaptive Power Solutions, 141 F3d at 950.

Notwithstanding the importance of this court's determination whether to apply per se scrutiny, neither party deals with this issue adequately. Defendants misstate the Ninth Circuit's test and portray these factors as prerequisites for adopting the per se approach. See Doc # 184 at 2 ("horizontal agreements are eligible for per se condemnation only if * * * "). Plaintiffs relegate their analysis to a footnote, asserting that (1) the boycott cut off Bed, Bath and Beyond's access to two of the principal suppliers of high-end tableware (Lenox and Waterford); (2) the firms instigating the boycott [30] (Federated and May) held dominant positions in the retail tableware market; and (3) there are no plausible justifications for the boycott. Doc # 161 at n4.

With respect to the first factor, the court notes that Waterford and Lennox were suppliers of tableware products necessary to enable Bed, Bath & Beyond to compete in the high-end tableware market. Further, defendants allegedly cut off this essential supply in order to obstruct Bed, Bath & Beyond's access to this market. The second factor (whether the boycotting firm possesses a "dominant" position in the market) is difficult to assess on the present record. In 2001, Federated and May were the third and fourth largest department store chains in the United States, respectively. Doc # 181, Ex 35 at 26-27. Although this ranking among department stores does not imply market power, it may suggest that defendants held a "dominant" position. As the Seventh Circuit observed in Toys

"R" Us, Inc v FTC, 221 F3d 928 (7th Cir 2000), the HN16[] term "dominant" was "plainly chosen to stand for something different from antitrust's term of art 'monopoly." Id at 936. In view of this uncertainty, the court finds that this second [31] factor weighs in neither party's favor.

Most damaging to Federated's argument in favor of rule of reason review is the third factor -- whether the boycott arguably enhances efficiency or competition. In accordance with this consideration, courts have noted that in the following factual settings, the effect of a refusal to deal is "more complex" than in the "classic boycott" scenario: industry self-regulation, sports leagues, health care, noneconomic boycotts and access to joint venture facilities. ABA Section of Antitrust [*1071] Law, Antitrust Law Developments, 114 (5th ed 2002). The conduct alleged by plaintiffs falls within none of these exceptions. Nor does Federated proffer an independent pro-competitive justification for the alleged horizontal agreements to boycott Bed, Bath and Beyond. This silence is unsurprising, as the alleged horizontal agreement falls squarely within the ambit of per se treatment as dictated by Northwest Wholesale: "joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle." Northwest Wholesale, 472 US at 294. [32] Accordingly, the court concludes that the alleged horizontal agreement between Federated and May constitutes a classic boycott and thus warrants per se treatment.

The court hastens to add that its conclusion does not extend to the alleged vertical agreements to boycott Bed, Bath & Beyond. HN17[] The Supreme Court has expressly "limit[ed] the per se rule in the boycott context to cases involving horizontal agreements among direct competitors." NYNEX Corp v Discon, Inc, 525 US 128, 136, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998). The vertical agreements therefore warrant per se treatment only to the extent they implemented the alleged horizontal agreements -- a distinction plaintiffs appear to acknowledge. See Doc # 161 at 9 ("Since, as explained above, the boycott of [Bed, Bath & Beyond] at issue here includes horizontal, as well as vertical, agreements, the per se rule applies.").

As such, plaintiffs need not define and support a relevant market (as they would need to do for a § 2 claim), nor do they need to demonstrate harm to competition, something which is presumed in a per se case, see Fortner Enterprises, Inc v United States Steel Corp, 394 US 495, 498, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (1969) [33] ("' [T] here HN18[] are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.'" (quoting Northern Pacific R Co v United States, 356 US 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958)). But plaintiffs' decision to rely on per se scrutiny comes at a cost: it renders the existence of a horizontal agreement essential to their suit.

To sum up the court's analysis heretofore, plaintiffs lack standing to rest their case on an agreement between Waterford and Lennox and lack the evidentiary wherewithal to rely alone on the alleged vertical agreements and proceed under the rule of reason. The upshot is that the alleged agreement between Federated and May is the cornerstone of plaintiffs' legal theory; without it, the case collapses. With these insights in mind, the court turns to the substance of plaintiffs' suit.

C

The essential issue propounded by defendants' summary judgment motions is whether plaintiffs adduced enough evidence of concerted action to survive summary judgment. [34] In Monsanto Co v Spray-Rite Service Corp, 465 US 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), the Supreme Court announced HN19[] the modern formula by which courts determine the existence of concerted action:

> The correct standard is that there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the [parties]. That is, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that [the parties] had a conspicuous commitment to a common [*1072] scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

465 US at 768.

HN20[] Conspiracies may be shown either by direct or circumstantial evidence. The Court recognizes, however, that "[o] nly rarely will there be direct evidence of an express agreement" in conspiracy cases; hence, circumstantial evidence plays a pivotal role in antitrust litigation. Although interpreting such evidence and drawing inferences from it ordinarily are responsibilities of the factfinder, the Supreme Court mandates a threshold judicial assessment of such evidence as set forth in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co v Zenith Ratio Corp, 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986):

> [A]ntitrust law limits the range of permissible [35] inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Thus, * * * conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. * * * To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. * * the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [them].

Id at 588 (citations omitted).

Citing its earlier decision in First National Bank v Cities Service Co, 391 US 253, 288-289, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968), the Court in Matsushita identified HN21[] two separate inquiries that are relevant to this issue: (1) whether the defendant had "any rational motive" to join the allege conspiracy, and (2) whether the defendant's conduct "was consistent with the defendant's independent interest." Matsushita, 475 US at 596-97.

Animating the Matsushita standard is the Court's concern that "HN22[] permitting the inference [36] of conspiratorial behavior from circumstantial evidence consistent with both lawful and unlawful conduct would deter pro-competitive conduct -- an especially pernicious danger in light of the fact that the very purpose of the antitrust laws is to promote competition." In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F3d 1090, 1094 (9th Cir 1999). See also Matsushita, 475 US at 593 ("Courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter pro-competitive conduct.").

Relying in part on Matsushita,HN23[] the Ninth Circuit has crafted a two-part test to be applied whenever plaintiffs rest their case entirely on circumstantial evidence. First, defendants may "rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice." In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F3d at 1094 (citing Richards v Neilson Freight Lines, 810 F2d 898, 902 (9th Cir 1987). The burden then shifts back to plaintiffs to provide specific evidence tending to show that defendants were not engaging [37] in permissible competitive behavior. See City of Long Beach v Standard Oil Co of California, 872 F2d 1401, 1406 (9th Cir 1989).

The present action implicates this two-part test because plaintiffs have not produced direct evidence in support of their group boycott theory. As noted by the Ninth Circuit, "[d]irect HN24[] evidence in a [§] 1 conspiracy must be evidence that is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted." In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F3d at 1093-94. As plaintiffs appear [*1073] to concede, none of plaintiffs' evidence satisfies this test, at least with respect to an alleged agreement between Federated and May.

Turning to the Ninth Circuit's two-part test, the court first finds that defendants proffer a "plausible and justifiable reason" for acting as they did. In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F3d at 1094. City of Long Beach v Standard Oil Co, 872 F2d 1401, 1406 (9th Cir 1989) (defendant HN25[] is entitled to summary judgment when it "provides a plausible and justifiable alternative interpretation of its conduct that rebuts the alleged conspiracy"). Defendants assert [38] that Federated and May were concerned that the sale of its tableware products by Bed, Bath & Beyond would broaden the distribution into a lower prestige channel, a valid and lawful concern. See Winn v Edna Hibel Corp, 858 F2d 1517, 1520 (11th Cir 1988) (recognizing a company's interest in avoiding the "cheapening" of the image of its products); Richards v Neilson Freight Lines, 810 F2d 898, 902 (9th Cir 1987) (finding independent self-interest an adequate explanation).

Prior to 2001, Bed, Bath & Beyond, a national "big-box" retailer of kitchen, bath and other items, was selling various standard tableware products, including, for example, lower-end dinner plates manufactured by Lenox. Doc # 131, Ex B, (Johnson depo) at 30:10-12, 37:24-40:2; Doc # 141, Ex C (Lundgren depo) at 38:14-21. Bed, Bath & Beyond became interested in expanding its offerings to include more expensive china and crystal manufactured by Lenox, Waterford and others. Doc # 131, Ex E (Temares depo) at 35:11-16. Federated and May opposed the broad distribution its manufacturers sought because Federated and May had made significant investments in the sale of Lenox and Waterford products. [39] Doc # 141, Ex C at 39:4-40:2, 44:12-45:9. See also Monsanto, 465 US at 763 (complaints HN26[] by retailers regarding other retailers are "natural -- and from the manufacturer's perspective, unavoidable -- reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals").

Consequently, the burden shifts back to HN27[] plaintiffs to provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendants were not engaging in permissible competitive behavior. See City of Long Beach v Standard Oil Co of California, 872 F2d 1401, 1406 (9th Cir 1989). Such evidence must "tend [] to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Matsushita, 475 US at 588. In assessing this evidence, the court also considers (1) whether the defendants had "any rational motive" to join the alleged conspiracy, and (2) whether the defendants' conduct "was consistent with the defendant's independent interest." Id at at 596-97.

The court focuses on the alleged agreement between Federated and May because, as established above, this suit turns on the existence of such an agreement. Plaintiffs assert that a horizontal agreement may be inferred from the following [40] pieces of information:

(1) one week after May was advised by Lennox in May 2001 of Lenox's and Waterford's intent to participate in the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout, Federated contacted both Lenox and Waterford to complain about the rollout;

(2) both Federated and May used similar language when they separately pressured Lenox and Waterford to break their deal with Bed, Bath & Beyond ("you do what you have to do, and we will do what we have to do") (Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 136:19-137:17);

[*1074] (3) in a letter from Federated's Zimmerman to a Waterford executive, written after Waterford terminated its participation in the rollout, Zimmerman thanked Waterford for doing "the right thing for all partners in the game" (Doc # 180, Ex 18); and

(4) Federated's Zimmerman "took the Fifth" when asked at deposition whether Federated and May entered into any agreements concerning their approach to the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout (Doc # 180, Ex 16 at 48:6-13).

With respect to the first point, defendants note that that plaintiffs offer no evidence that Federated learned of the manufacturers' plans from May. Federated asserts that it probably learned about the rollout from [41] the manufacturers themselves, as employees from Federated met with the employees of Lenox and Waterford regularly. Doc # 186, Ex HH, (Gavin depo) at 44:21-45:11, 48:21-49:2, 129:4-8; Ex LL, (McGillivary depo) at 153:9-21.

Defendants also dispute plaintiffs' reasoning concerning the second piece of evidence -- the allegation that employees of Federated and May, in separate conversations, used similar language in speaking to the manufacturers about the rollout ("you do what you have to do, and we will do what we have to do"). Doc # 161 at 19, 31. According to defendants, the similarity is unsurprising because the phrase is precisely what retailers should say in order to avoid implicating the antitrust laws.

Third, defendants argue that Federated's letter to Waterford did not refer to May when it thanked Waterford for doing "the right thing for all partners in the game." In support, defendants claim that Federated and Waterford frequently referred to each other as "partners." Doc # 141, Ex F, ("Grove depo") at 67:14-24, 69:9-13, 84:7. Federated's expert also used the term "partner" to describe the nature of the relationships between vendors and retailers. Doc # 131, Ex DD at PP 48, [42] 64, 79.

Regarding plaintiffs' fourth point, defendants cite Curtis v. M&S Petroleum, Inc., 174 F.3d 661, 675 (5th Cir 1999), for the proposition that the invocation of the Fifth Amendment by Federated's CEO is not sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact. Defendants also urge the court to interpret Zimmerman's conduct in light of prior events: When the New York attorney general's office deposed Zimmerman in 2004, he testified that he could not recall a conversation he had with an executive at Waterford. In response, the attorney general's office indicted him for perjury. A New York trial court dismissed the indictment, but the attorney general's office had appealed the dismissal. As a result, when he was deposed in this action, Zimmerman invoked his Fifth Amendment rights. Doc # 131, Ex X (Zimmerman depo) at 20:20-22:25.

Finally, defendants aver that all witnesses pertinent to this case have denied the existence of any communications between Federated and May regarding Bed, Bath & Beyond. See Doc # 141, Ex C (Lundgren depo) at 75:25-76:7; Ex F (Grove depo) at 88:15-19, 91:10-17; Ex G, (Engelman depo) at 99:19-25; 192:24-193:4; Ex H (Locraft depo) at 181: [43] 11-24, 273:20-274:6, 275:1-10; Doc # 131, Ex D (Hofer depo) at 158:24-159:2, 214:15-24. Nor were employees of Bed, Bath & Beyond, Lenox or Waterford aware of any communications between Federated and May. Doc # 131, Ex B (Johnson depo) at 239:12-14; Ex I (Mielke depo) at 158:18-159:6; Ex J (Krangel depo) at 300:14-18; Ex K (Gavin depo) at 255:12-16.

Defendants' methodical critique of plaintiffs' evidence implies that Matsushita demands a certain quantum of evidence of [*1075] verbal agreement to avoid summary judgment. Yet the Matsushita court never insisted that any particular kind of evidence of collusion was required. Instead, the Court demanded that the evidence be of such quality that makes collusion a likely explanation of the activity before the court. Matsushita's analysis, moreover, arose from the context of a highly improbable twenty-year-long predatory pricing conspiracy; as such, the Court required high-quality evidence to permit such a conspiracy to be presented to a jury. Matsushita, 475 US at 587-88 ("HN28[] If the factual context renders respondents' claim implausible - if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense - respondents must come forward [44] with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary."). Hence, plaintiffs need not demonstrate the existence of an explicit conspiracy, only that "the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action." Id at 588.

The court therefore assesses whether defendants had "any rational motive" to conspire and whether defendants' conduct was consistent with their independent interest. Matsushita, 475 US at 596-97. Plaintiffs correctly note that Federated and May had a "rational motive" to conspire against Bed, Bath & Beyond. The gravamen of plaintiffs' theory is that Federated and May acted together in an effort to block a new entrant's access to the market. The reasons why such behavior would be economically rational are straightforward. During the alleged conspiracy, consumers were steadily migrating from department stores to home specialty chain stores, such as Bed, Bath & Beyond, and bridal registries (which made up a significant portion of the tableware business) were following suit. Doc # 180, Ex 10 (Mielke depo) at 43:25-44:25. Federated and May, as established market participants, [45] could reasonably fear that Bed, Bath & Beyond would erode their profit and market share. As one commentator remarked, "[w] here the 'victim' [of an exclusionary group boycott] is a competitor of the alleged conspirators, there is no mystery as to why the defendants would want to injure the rival. It is axiomatic that firms prefer to have fewer rather than more rivals." Kenneth L Glazer, Concerted Refusals to Deal Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 70 Antitrust L J 1, 17 (2002)

But the motive to conspire articulated by plaintiffs works both ways: insofar as Bed, Bath & Beyond's competitive threat encouraged conspiracy, it also bolsters defendants' version of the events -- that Federated and May pressured the manufacturers unilaterally. Accordingly, each party's account of the events make "economic sense," see Adaptive Power Solutions, LLC v Hughes Missile Systems Co, 141 F3d 947, 953 (9th Cir 1998), and the emergence of Bed, Bath & Beyond as a competitor does not weigh in either party's favor.

Yet this same economic intuition fails to account for the alleged conspiracy between Lenox and Waterford. Nothing in the present record establishes an [46] economic motive for a conspiracy between Waterford and Lenox to back out of the Bed, Bath & Beyond rollout. Nor do plaintiffs articulate why Waterford and Lenox would have harbored animosity toward Bed, Bath & Beyond. Manufacturers generally lack incentives to conspire to undercut an upstart retailer like Bed, Bath & Beyond; to the contrary, such manufacturers have every reason to establish ties with these newcomers. This intuition appears to have played out here: Lennox and Waterford commenced dealings with Bed, Bath & Beyond that were ruptured at the bidding of Federated and May.

In light of plaintiffs' evidence and defendants' market conditions, the issue for the [*1076] court is to determine whether plaintiffs satisfy their burden and "tend [] to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Monsanto, 465 US at 768. That determination is clear-cut with respect to the alleged horizontal conspiracy between Lennox and Waterford. As discussed above, the theory that Lennox and Waterford conspired to boycott Bed, Bath & Beyond neither makes economic sense nor finds support in the record. See Michael v Intracorp, Inc, 179 F3d 847 (10th Cir 1999) [47] (granting summary judgment in circumstantial evidence case because plaintiffs failed to demonstrate any motive to conspire); Orson, Inc v Miramax Film Corp, 79 F3d 1358, 1370 (3d Cir 1996) (affirming summary judgment for defendant in part because of lack of motive to conspire). Accordingly, the court concludes that plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence of an agreement between Lennox and Waterford falls short of the standard under Matsushita.

Turning to the alleged agreement between Federated and May, the court finds that plaintiffs satisfy their burden, albeit with little evidence to spare. First, the court agrees with plaintiffs that Federated's and May's simultaneous behavior within a two-week period constitutes a pattern of uniform business conduct that bespeaks a tacit agreement or even so-called "conscious parallelism." See Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets v Darling-Deleware Co, 998 F2d 1224, 1242-43 (3d Cir 1993). To be sure, that Federated learned about the rollout one week after Lenox informed May about the program hardly establishes that Federated communicated with May, as Federated met with its manufacturers on a regular basis. But defendants [48] fail to explain precisely when or how Federated learned of the rollout from its manufacturers, leaving open the inference of horizontal communications. See generally Interstate Circuit, Inc v United States, 306 US 208, 225-26, 59 S. Ct. 467, 83 L. Ed. 610 (1939) ("When the proof supported, as we think it did, the inference of such concert, the burden rested on appellants of going forward with the evidence to explain away or contradict it.").

The parallel language ("you do what you have to do, and we will do what we have to do") used by Federated and May also carries some weight. Granted, in both situations, business executives plausibly repeated this boilerplate to clarify that each company had to act independently, not collusively. And it would be anomalous for antitrust law to regard efforts against collusion as evidence of collusion. But antitrust law does not direct executives to invoke the particular phrase at issue; as such, the striking similarity permits an inference of concerted action. See e g, De Jong Packing Co v USDA, 618 F2d 1329 (9th Cir 1980) (continuance of conspiracy inferred from identical letters sent separately at the same time); Apex Oil v Di Mauro, 822 F2d 246, 255-57 (2d Cir 1987) [49] ("striking" similarity of defendants' separate notebook entries of conversations among them gives rise to reasonable inference of conspiracy).

Federated's phrase ("partners in the game") in its letter to Waterford may also suggest a collusive agreement between Federated and May. That said, if the phrase is construed to encompass May, then Federated's assertion simply offers an opinion that Waterford's exclusive relationship with the various department stores is symbiotic; it does not necessarily imply an agreement between the department stores. Nevertheless, Federated's alleged acknowledgment of May's interests tends to undercut defendants' contention that they acted independently. See Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, 998 F2d at 1242-43.

[*1077] Finally, Zimmerman's "pleading the Fifth" may be relevant to the present dispute. In Baxter v Palmigiano, 425 US 308, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1976), the Supreme Court held that HN29[] the drawing of the adverse inference from the invocation the Fifth Amendment in civil suit is proper when incriminating evidence is also presented. See id at 317-18. The Ninth Circuit interprets Baxter as licensing the drawing of an adverse inference [50] in the civil context only if "independent evidence exists of the fact to which the party refuses to answer." Doe by & Through Rudy-Glanzer v Glanzer, 232 F3d 1258, 1264 (9th Cir 2000). This proviso is said to broker the competing interests of the party asserting the privilege and those of the adverse party, "who is deprived of a source of information that might conceivably be determinative in a search for the truth." SEC v Graystone Nash, Inc, 25 F3d 187, 190 (3d Cir 1994). Here, defendants neither contend that corroborating evidence is lacking nor counsel against drawing an adverse inference based on Zimmerman's invocation of the privilege. This omission impels the court to conclude that Zimmerman's invocation of the Fifth Amendment may have deprived plaintiffs of probative testimony.

In view of plaintiffs' evidence and the market conditions defendants' faced, the court finds that plaintiffs satisfy their burden and tend to exclude the possibility that the Federated and May acted independently. Accordingly, the court finds that plaintiffs raise an inference of unlawful conspiracy between Federated and May sufficient to overcome defendants' summary [51] judgment motion.

The court stresses that plaintiffs only survive summary judgment on the basis of the alleged horizontal agreement Federated and May: the vertical communications remain relevant to the extent they abetted the alleged horizontal agreement, but such communications cannot serve as an independent ground for antitrust liability under the rule of reason. Even if plaintiffs provided evidence under the rule of reason, which they have not, Monsanto and its progeny would require the dismissal of any vertical claims because plaintiffs' evidence suggests, at most, that Lenox and Waterford caved to complaints from Federated and May. See Monsanto, 465 US at 763, (explaining that distributor complaints "arise in the normal course of business and do not indicate illegal concerted action"); OSC Corp v Apple Computer, Inc, 792 F2d 1464, 1468 (9th Cir 1986) (holding that "[dealer] complaints followed by termination are not enough to provide sufficient proof of an antitrust conspiracy"); The Jeanery, Inc v James Jeans, Inc, 849 F2d 1148 (9th Cir 1998), 849 F2d at 1157 ("HN30[] Complaints by competitors, standing alone, are not sufficient [52] to show a conspiracy."); Isaksen v Vermont Castings, Inc, 825 F2d 1158, 1162 (7th Cir 1987) (Posner, J).("Complaints to a supplier, made by competitors of a dealer who is cutting prices below suggested levels are not, standing alone, evidence of agreement"). Hence, even if plaintiffs pursued a claim under the rule of reason, their evidence is insufficient to raise an inference of unlawful conspiracy or combination.

IV

In sum, the court GRANTS Waterford's motion for summary judgment and GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART Federated's and May's motion for summary judgment. The matter is set down for trial on June 11, 2007.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

March 13, 2007

VAUGHN R WALKER

United States District Chief Judge

End of Document

Del Junco v. Hufnagel

Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division Three

March 15, 2007, Filed

B191456

Reporter

2007 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 2134 *

TIRSO DEL JUNCO, JR., M.D., Plaintiff and Respondent, v. V. GEORGES HUFNAGEL et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Notice: [*1] NOT TO BE PUBLISHED IN OFFICIAL REPORTS. CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT, RULE 8.1115(a), PROHIBIT COURTS AND PARTIES FROM CITING OR RELYING ON OPINIONS NOT CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED, EXCEPT AS SPECIFIED BY RULE 8.1115(B). THIS OPINION HAS NOT BEEN CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED FOR THE PURPOSES OF RULE 8.1115.

Prior History: APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. BC309389. Soussan G. Bruguera, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed in part and reversed in part with directions.

Core Terms

website, trial court, counterfeit, surgeries, sanctions, default, cross-complaint, documents, damages, medicine, terminating sanctions, public affairs, preliminary injunction, patients, unfair, cause of action, propria persona, court rule, discovery, exemption, contends, likeness, training, vascular, vexatious litigant, punitive damages, attorney's fees, domain name, injunction, persuasive

Counsel: James S. Link and William H. Dailey for Defendants and Appellants.

Moore, Sorensen & Horner and Michael J. Kaufman for Plaintiff and Respondent.

Judges: ALDRICH, J.; KLEIN, P.J., CROSKEY, J. concurred.

Opinion by: ALDRICH

Opinion

INTRODUCTION

Defendant and appellant V. Georges Hufnagel created a website that looked like the website of plaintiff and respondent Tirso Del Junco, Jr., M.D. Hufnagel's website libeled Dr. Del Junco. Hufnagel appeals from the default judgment entered in favor of Dr. Del Junco. We find unpersuasive all contentions raised by Hufnagel except for the argument that the punitive damage award cannot stand. Reversal of the judgment would ordinarily be necessary because it [*2] includes an award of $ 200,000 in punitive damages despite the fact that Dr. Del Junco never introduced evidence of Hufnagel's financial condition. However, we are rendering a conditional appellate judgment providing Dr. Del Junco with a choice between accepting the judgment as modified or returning to the trial court to present to the trial court evidence on the issue of punitive damages.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

1. Facts.

Dr. Del Junco was a trained general and vascular surgeon licensed in California. As part of his general surgery residency, Dr. Del Junco received rotations in female or gynecological surgery, including pre-operative management, surgery, and post operative management. He is a fully licensed, practicing doctor specializing in general and vascular surgery. Hufnagel had her medical license revoked in California and New York, and disciplinary proceedings were pending against her in the state of Hawaii. [1]

Dr. Del Junco had an internet [*3] web page with the domain name of "drdeljuncojr.com." The purpose of the website was to provide information about procedures performed by him for women who had significant fibroid disease or endometriosis. He promoted these surgical procedures as alternatives to hysterectomies.

On November 25, 1998, in an unrelated lawsuit, Hufnagel was declared a vexatious litigant. (Code Civ. Proc., § 391.1.)

In March 2003, Hufnagel began operating a counterfeit website that mimicked Dr. Del Junco's in many ways, including content, appearance, and layout. Hufnagel's website had the domain name of "drdeljunco.com." The counterfeit website had a photograph of Dr. Del Junco and a link to contact him. However, when it was engaged, the viewer was directed to a web page featuring Hufnagel and urged to contact Hufnagel. Additional links on the counterfeit website directed potential patients to contact Hufnagel for purposes of evaluation and potential surgery at her Mexican clinic.

The counterfeit website included, in large print, in the same font style as on Dr. Del Junco's website, the words, "FEMALE ALTERNATIVE SURGERY." The contact information where Dr. Del Junco could [*4] be reached was on both websites, as was Dr. Del Junco's address.

Hufnagel's counterfeit website contained the same logo as the one that appeared on Dr. Del Junco's website. The logo had an artistic drawing of a woman with the words "INSTITUTE for ALTERNATIVE MEDICINE" in an arc above the woman. There was a list of medical terminology underneath the logo on Dr. Del Junco's website, in rectangular boxes. Hufnagel's website also placed the identical medical terms in rectangular boxes below the logo. However, on Hufnagel's website, another box appeared in between the logo and the list of terms. The box contained the following statements:

> "Please note the Institute for Female Alternative Medicine is not registered by California State Department of Corporations. This is not a regulated entity. It pays no taxes and no Corporate records exist.
>
> "This does not officially exist. This is a fraud on the public. Furthermore, Dr. Del Junco has no specialized medical training in medicine or in female medicine. He is a vascular student."

Hufnagel's website duplicated a quote found on Dr. Del Junco's website that stated having a "hysterectomy for benign fibroid tumors or ovarian [*5] cysts is an archaic procedure . . . ." However, underneath the quote on Hufnagel's website, the following appeared:

> "This is a quote [from] Dr. Hufnagel. Del Junco has not studied hormonal sciences. He misdiagnosed Susan Bucher as a key issue. See Susan Bucher button on this site for further information.
>
> Dr. del Junco Jr. General/Vascular Surgeon
>
> "He has no training at all in women's medicine. He is not a specialist." [2]

[1] Hufnagel was also known as Vikki G. Hufnagel.

There were other differences in the two websites. As examples, at the top of Hufnagel's counterfeit website there was a box that contained a disclaimer stating that the website had been "created by the supporters of the work of Dr. Vicki Hufnagel." The box also provided information about her book and stated that chapters from the book had been "removed in the infamous raid by [*6] the [California Medical Board] . . . ." [3] Hufnagel's website stated that Dr. Del Junco had been using her work, for which he failed to give credit, and accused Dr. Del Junco of performing failed procedures.

[*7] Prior to April 2003, Dr. Del Junco's internet website generated a minimum of 75 email inquiries from women per month. Since Hufnagel began operating her counterfeit website, inquiries to Dr. Del Junco from potential patients dropped significantly. Further, as a result of the decline in inquires, there was a marked drop in surgeries performed by Dr. Del Junco and his receipts from surgeries decreased. The statements on the counterfeit website harmed Dr. Del Junco's reputation. Once he learned of the counterfeit website, Dr. Del Junco expended $ 3,212 in redesigning his website.

2. Procedure.

a. The initial proceedings.

On January 22, 2004, Dr. Del Junco filed a complaint for damages and for injunctive relief. Dr. Del Junco alleged causes of action for defamation, unauthorized use of name and likeness for business purposes (Civ. Code, § 3344), unfair business practices (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200), interference with prospective business advantage, and permanent injunction.

On January 23, 2004, the trial court entered a temporary restraining order restraining Hufnagel from operating a website with the domain name of "drdeljunco. [*8] com" or any variation of Dr. Del Junco's name.

Even though Hufnagel had been declared a vexatious litigant in the prior case, she initially represented herself in violation of the vexatious litigant order.

On February 11, 2004, in propria persona, Hufnagel filed approximately 140 pages purporting to respond to the request for a preliminary injunction and purporting to include allegations of a cross-complaint. These documents had no semblance of proper pleadings and did not conform to court rules.

On February 23, 2004, Hufnagel, in propria persona, filed and served an amended opposition to preliminary injunction. The pleading did not conform to court rules as it cited federal cases, but did not attach them. The opposition never addressed the issue of whether it was proper to issue a preliminary injunction.

On February 23, 2004, Hufnagel, in propria persona, filed a one-page answer that was combined with a request to dismiss Dr. Del Junco's complaint.

On February 23, 2004, Hufnagel, in propria persona, filed a cross-complaint without permission of the court. These documents were not served on Dr. Del Junco.

---

[2] The underlining did not appear in Hufnagel's counterfeit website. We have added this emphasis as the underlined statements are discussed in detail in subsequent parts of this opinion.

[3] The disclaimer at the top of the counterfeit website read: "This site was created by the supporters of the work of Dr. Vicki Hufnagel. The site is informational [and provides] full and complete disclosure which Dr. Del Junco's site does not provide. This site is to make [] aware of the politics of medicine and the economic driving forces that take place everyday that . . . drive all medical care. [P] Dr. Hufnagel had worked on a book titled Prescription for Evil which had several Chapters of Dr. Del Junco [] are posted here. These Chapter's [sic] were removed in the infamous raid by the [California Medical Board] on Dr. Hufnagel's home."

It appears that during its investigation of Hufnagel, the California Medical Board searched her home. We assume that the reference to a "raid" is to this search.

Dr. Del Junco filed a motion to strike the answer and cross-complaint. Hufnagel, [*9] in propria persona, subsequently withdrew the cross-complaint.

On March 5, 2004, Hufnagel filed a request to dismiss Dr. Del Junco's complaint.

On March 9, 2004, attorney William H. Dailey appeared in court to substitute in as counsel for Hufnagel. Upon his statements that he was going to file an opposition to the motion for preliminary injunction, the trial court continued the hearing on the motion. However, thereafter no written documents were filed. No substitution of attorney form was filed.

On April 5, 2004, Dr. Del Junco filed a motion requesting sanctions be imposed on Hufnagel. In addition to other arguments, Dr. Del Junco noted that his counsel was forced to spend considerable time because of Hufnagel's improper actions.

On April 9, 2004, the trial court issued a preliminary injunction against Hufnagel enjoining her "from operating or continuing to operate a website with the domain name of 'drdeljunco.com' or any variation of" Dr. Del Junco's name. The trial court declined to rule on Dr. Del Junco's request for sanctions.

On April 28, 2004, Dr. Del Junco filed a motion to strike Hufnagel's answer and cross-complaint. Dr. Del Junco requested sanctions. He argued that the [*10] answer and cross-complaint were in improper form and filed without leave of court and Hufnagel's dilatory tactics forced Dr. Del Junco's counsel to expend unnecessary time in reviewing, researching, and responding to baseless filings.

On May 24, 2004, the trial court denied the motion to strike as moot, based upon the representation that an answer and amended cross-complaint had been filed. The trial court reserved the issue of sanctions.

On May 24, 2004, Hufnagel filed an answer through attorney Dailey.

On June 3, 2004, Dr. Del Junco filed a motion for reconsideration of the May 24, 2004, ruling with regard to the issue of sanctions. The reconsideration motion informed the trial court that contrary to prior representations, no cross-complaint had been filed by Hufnagel.

Hufnagel filed no opposition to the motion for reconsideration.

In July 2004, Hufnagel filed a first amended cross-complaint. The trial court sustained Dr. Del Junco's demurrer to the first amended cross-complaint without leave to amend. No opposition to the demurrer had been filed by Hufnagel.

In a minute order dated August 17, 2004, the trial court granted the motion for reconsideration and sanctioned Hufnagel [*11] the sum of $ 2,036.30 for the reasons stated in the motion. Additionally, the trial court sanctioned Hufnagel $ 6,036.30 in the form of attorney fees. Pursuant to the trial court's directive, Dr. Del Junco prepared a proposed order detailing the reasons for the sanction order. On October 21, 2004, the trial court ordered Hufnagel to pay $ 6,036.30 in sanctions for (1) filing a volume of documents that purported to oppose Dr. Del Junco's motion for preliminary injunction, but the documents were not in proper form and did not conform with Court Rules; (2) filing a cross-complaint without permission of the court which violated the vexatious litigant order; (3) filing and serving an opposition to the preliminary injunction that failed to comply with the court rules as it cited federal cases but did not attach them, thus, burdening Dr. Del Junco's counsel; and (4) filing and serving on March 5, 2004, a request for dismissal form requesting Dr. Del Junco's complaint be dismissed. The trial court found Hufnagel's documents were procedurally defective and her actions were willful and without justification and improperly burdened Dr. Del Junco to incur unnecessary expense. The sanctions were [*12] due and payable within 45 days. (The October 2004 order did not mention the $ 2,036.30 sanction order contained in the August 2004 minute order.)

Hufnagel did not pay the sanctions, which remained unpaid as of January 10, 2005.

As of September 12, 2004, Hufnagel was still operating a website in violation of the injunction. She did so through March 2005.

On September 14, 2004, Dr. Del Junco served interrogatories on Hufnagel. Hufnagel did not respond to this discovery. Dr. Del Junco's counsel telephoned attorney Dailey in an attempt to meet and confer; attorney Dailey did not return the telephone calls.

A case management conference was held in October 2004. Hufnagel did not appear and she did not file a case management conference statement. Attorney Dailey called the court stating he would be late. However, he never made an appearance.

b. The motion for terminating sanctions.

On January 11, 2005, Dr. Del Junco filed a motion for terminating sanctions pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure sections 128, 128.6, and former 2023. [4] The motion was supported by the declaration of attorney Michael Kaufman. The motion recounted [*13] the events that preceded the motion, and argued it was appropriate to strike Hufnagel's answer and enter default because she failed to respond to discovery, failed to abide by court orders and procedures, failed to pay sanctions, and violated the preliminary injunction.

On January 24, 2005, Hufnagel, through attorney Dailey, filed a single-page opposition to the motion for terminating sanctions. In the opposition document, it was stated, without evidentiary support, that Hufnagel was impoverished, discovery would be answered prior to the hearing on the motion to terminate, and Hufnagel had complied with the injunction but due to a misunderstanding the website server company had not been able to immediately deactivate the links in Hufnagel's counterfeit website.

On February 14, 2005, the trial court granted the motion for terminating sanctions. [*14] The trial court struck Hufnagel's answer and entered default based upon a pattern of conduct by Hufnagel and her counsel, and the violation of court rules, local rules, fast track rules, the Code of Civil Procedure, and orders of the court. The trial court did not base its decision on the failure to pay monetary sanctions.

On July 25, 2005, Hufnagel filed an ex parte application for an order shortening time for a hearing of a motion to set aside the default. In an attached declaration, attorney Dailey declared, with little explanation, that he caused the delays. In Hufnagel's 14 line declaration she declared that her finances had not allowed her to hire other legal counsel and her health was poor. The application was denied.

c. Default judgment.

On November 30, 2005, Dr. Del Junco filed an application for entry of default judgment. Dr. Del Junco supported his request with his declaration and that of his attorney. Dr. Del Junco requested damages in the total sum of $ 563,585.26.

On November 30, 2005, judgment by court after entry of default was entered against Hufnagel in favor of Dr. Del Junco in the sum of $ 558,724.90, broken down as follows: $ 200,000 in general damages; [*15] $ 136,212 in special damages; $ 200,000 in punitive damages; $ 21,914 in attorney fees; and $ 598.90 in costs. The trial court also entered a permanent injunction.

Hufnagel appeals from the judgment.

DISCUSSION

1. The defamatory statements are actionable.

Hufnagel contends that the statements in the counterfeit website are not actionable because they are not defamatory. This contention is not persuasive.

---

[4] The relevant portion of former Code of Civil Procedure section 2023 is currently found in Code of Civil Procedure section 2023.030.

" 'The sine qua non of recovery for defamation . . . is the existence of falsehood.' [Citation.]" (Franklin v. Dynamic Details, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal.App.4th 375, 384; Civ. Code, § 45 ["Libel is a false and unprivileged publication by writing . . . or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation."].)

Dr. Del Junco received, as part of his general surgery residency, rotations in female or gynecological surgery, including pre-operative management, surgery and post operative management. He is a fully licensed, practicing doctor specializing in general and vascular surgery with [*16] all of the necessary medical training to perform surgeries. He is not a student. However, the counterfeit website stated that "Dr. Del Junco has no specialized medical training in medicine or in female medicine. He is a vascular student." The website also stated that Dr. Del Junco "has no training at all in women's medicine. [P] He is not a specialist." The false import of these statements is that Dr. Del Junco is not a licensed physician and does not have the educational background to perform the procedures he promotes. Even though, as Hufnagel notes in her reply brief, her website stated that Dr. Del Junco was a "General/Vascular Surgeon," any reasonable reader of her counterfeit website would conclude that Dr. Del Junco lacked the medical training to perform the surgeries he promotes and performs. As such, the statements in Hufnagel's website cast serious doubt on Dr. Del Junco's professional ability and are defamatory. (Civ. Code, § 46(3) [slander is a false statement that tends to injure one in his or her "profession, trade or business, either by imputing to him [or her] general disqualification in those respects which the office or other occupation [*17] peculiarly requires, or by imputing something with reference to his [or her] office, profession, trade, or business that has a natural tendency to lessen its profits"].)

Contrary to Hufnagel's argument, the quoted statements, taken in context and when the website is read as whole, are not statements of opinion. (Franklin v. Dynamic Details, Inc. supra, 116 Cal.App.4th at p. 385 [under totality of circumstances opinions are protected unless "a reasonable fact finder could conclude the published statement declares or implies a provably false assertion of fact"]; see discussions in Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 19, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1; Baker v. Los Angeles Herald Examiner (1986) 42 Cal.3d 254, 260, 228 Cal. Rptr. 206.) Accusing a physician of being untrained and lacking the proper credentials are not statements of opinion. They are statements of fact. (Compare with Franklin v. Dynamic Details, Inc., supra, 116 Cal.App.4th 375 [emails expressed opinions].)

The statements in the counterfeit website damaged Dr. Del Junco's professional reputation and were actionable.

2. The public affairs exemption [*18] to Civil Code section 3344 does not apply.

Dr. Del Junco's photograph was on a link of Hufnagel's website. Hufnagel contends this knowingly use of Dr. Del Junco's likeness is not a violation of Civil Code section 3344 because the website comes under the public affairs exemption. This contention is not persuasive.

Civil Code section 3344 provides in subdivision (a) that "[a]ny person who knowingly uses another's name, . . . photograph, or likeness, in any manner, . . . without such person's prior consent, . . . shall be liable for any damages sustained by the person or persons injured as a result thereof." Subdivision (d) provides for an exemption when the name or likeness is used in connection with any news or public affairs. [5]

---

[5] Civil Code section 3344, subdivision (a) and (d) read in pertinent part:

"(a) Any person who knowingly uses another's name, . . . photograph, or likeness, in any manner, . . . without such person's prior consent, . . . shall be liable for any damages sustained by the person or persons injured as a result thereof. In addition, in any action brought under this section, the person who violated the section shall be liable to the injured party or parties in an amount equal to the greater of seven hundred fifty dollars ($ 750) or the actual damages suffered by him or her as a result of the unauthorized use, and any profits from the unauthorized use that are attributable to the use and are not taken into account in computing the actual damages. In establishing such profits, the injured party or parties are required to present proof only of the gross revenue attributable to such use, and the person who violated this section is required to prove his or her deductible expenses. Punitive damages may also be awarded to the injured party or parties. The prevailing party in any action under this section shall also be entitled to attorney's fees and costs.

[*19] The exemption found in subdivision (d) of Civil Code section 3344 is designed to protect uses that are not commercial, such as public affairs and news. Reports that are "public affairs" are not limited to those "covered on public television or public radio." (Dora v. Frontline Video, Inc. (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 536, 546.) They are protected because they report a matter of public interest. (Id. at pp. 545-546 [documentary on surfing addresses significant influence of sport on the popular culture and use of surfer's name, voice and likeness in the film was not actionable]; Gionfriddo v. Major League Baseball (2001) 94 Cal.App.4th 400, 415-417 [use of former baseball players' names, images, and likenesses in websites, print and video publications, audiovisual programs and television programs come within public affairs exemption]; Montana v. San Jose Mercury News, Inc. (1995) 34 Cal.App.4th 790 [reproduction of previously published pages depicting football player in commercial poster was not actionable].)

Here, Hufnagel did not simply "borrow" Dr. Del Junco's likeness or name to promote [*20] new medical procedures, or to even discuss the options available to women. She did not simply disagree with his medical judgment. Hufnagel's website was not designed to provide options to women seeking medical advice. Rather, Hufnagel's use of Dr. Del Junco's photograph and name were purposefully designed to disparage his reputation and challenge his competency. She accused him of lacking the education and credentials to practice medicine. Hufnagel cites to no case concluding that the public affairs exception applies when the information provided is false.

Hufnagel suggests that the disclaimer and the true statements about Dr. Del Junco in the website absolve her of liability. First, the disclosure actually compounds the defamatory effect. It states that the counterfeit website is designed to provide "full and complete disclosure which [Dr. Del Junco's] site does not provide." This disclaimer suggests that the information in the counterfeit website is accurate. However, as discussed above, the statements about Dr. Del Junco's qualifications to practice medicine are false. Hufnagel's counterfeit website was designed to impersonate Dr. Del Junco's website and to steal patients from [*21] Dr. Del Junco. The public affairs exception was not designed to protect this type of writing.

The defamatory statements in the counterfeit website are not protected by the public affairs exemption in Civil Code section 3344, subdivision (d).

3. The complaint stated a cause of action for violating the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200).

Hufnagel cites Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163 (Cel-Tech) to argue that Dr. Del Junco was required to include allegations of anti-trust violation in order to plead a violation of Business and Professions Code section 17200. This contention is not persuasive.

Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq. prohibits unfair competition, in any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising and any act prohibited by [Business and Professions Code sections 17500-17577]." The words in the statute are in the disjunctive. [*22] They list separate wrongs. (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 180.) In Cel-Tech, cellular telephone sellers brought an action against a company that sold cellular telephones below cost to gain subscribers for its cellular service. Hufnagel points to the following sentence found on page 187 of Cel-Tech: "When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word 'unfair' in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient *violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." (Italics added, fn. omitted.) Cel-Tech limited this statement to the facts before it: "This case involves an action by a competitor alleging anticompetitive practices. Our discussion and this test are limited to that context. Nothing we say relates to actions by consumers or by competitors alleging other kinds of violations of the unfair competition law such as 'fraudulent' or 'unlawful' business practices or 'unfair, deceptive, [*23] untrue or misleading advertising.' " (Id. at p. 187, fn. 12.)

"(d) For purposes of this section, a use of a name, . . . photograph, or likeness in connection with any news, public affairs, or sports broadcast or account, or any political campaign, shall not constitute a use for which consent is required under subdivision (a)."

Unlike Cel-Tech, the allegations in Dr. Del Junco's complaint focused on prongs in Business and Professions Code section 17200 addressing "fraudulent," "deceptive," and "untrue" business practices.

Here, Hufnagel's website was designed to redirect prospective patients from Dr. Del Junco to Hufnagel. The counterfeit website had a domain name (drdeljunco.com) that was almost identical to the domain name of Dr. Del Junco's website (dr.deljuncojr.com). Hufnagel's website was identical to Dr. Del Junco's in its lay-out and contained the same logo, which would lead users to believe that the counterfeit website was actually Dr. Del Junco's. Yet, if a user accessed links on the counterfeit website, they were directed to information on Hufnagel and her institute in Mexico. The counterfeit website defamed Dr. Del Junco. Thus, the counterfeit website was designed to steal patients from Dr. Del Junco and to defame him. As such, it violated Business and Professions Code section 17200 as it was likely to deceive the public. (Cf. Olsen v. Breeze, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 608, 618 [*24] [requires showing that public is likely to be deceived]; Standard Oil Co. of California v. F.T.C. (9th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 653, 658-659 [commercial speech not exempt from First Amendment protection, but comment on subject of public interest may not be misleading or deceptive]; accord, Committee on Children's Television, Inc. v. General Foods Corp. (1983) 35 Cal.3d 197, 211, 197 Cal. Rptr. 783.)

Dr. Del Junco pled a violation of Business and Professions Code section 17200.

4. The complaint stated a cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

Hufnagel contends Dr. Del Junco failed to state a cause of action for intentional interference with prospective business advantage. [6] This contention is not persuasive.

[*25] The tort of intentional interference with prospective business advantage "consists of intentional and improper methods of diverting or taking business from another that are not within the privilege of fair competition. [Citations.] [P] . . . [P] It has been suggested that the tort of inducing breach of contact 'is merely a species of the broader tort of interference with prospective economic advantage.' [Citations.] However, interference with prospective economic advantage, unlike inducing breach of contract, requires wrongful conduct other than the act of interference itself. (Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., [Inc.,] supra, 11 [Cal.4th] 393.)" (5 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Torts, § 741, pp. 1069-1071.) "In this context, 'an act is independently wrongful if it is unlawful, that is, if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard.' [Citation.]" (Stevenson Real Estate Services, Inc. v. CB Richard Ellis Real Estate Services, Inc. (2006) 138 Cal.App.4th 1215, 1220.)

Hufnagel contends no independently wrongful act was shown. This argument ignores the [*26] pleadings. The complaint alleged that the counterfeit website was designed to disrupt and damage Dr. Del Junco's practice by diverting potential patients to Hufnagel. Hufnagel's deceptive actions violated Business and Professions Code section 17200. Thus, we need not address other "independently wrongful" acts.

Dr. Del Junco stated a cause of action for intentional interference with prospective business advantage.

5. The trial court had the jurisdiction to issue the terminating sanction.

Hufnagel contends the trial court lacked the jurisdiction to issue the terminating sanction. She argues the court exceeded its powers in striking the answer and entering default. This contention is not persuasive.

A number of statutes provide authority for the trial court to terminate a case. For example, Code of Civil Procedure section 575.2permits dismissal of a case for the violation of fast track rules where noncompliance is the fault of the party and not counsel. (Garcia v. McCutchen (1997) 16 Cal.4th 469; Tliche v. Van Quathem (1998) 66 Cal.App.4th 1054, 1061.) Former Code of Civil Procedure section 2023 permits trial courts [*27] to impose terminating sanctions and strike pleadings as a discovery sanction. Additionally, the statutes recognize that the courts have the inherent authority to dismiss an action. (Code Civ. Proc., §§ 581, subd. (m), 583.150; Lyons v. Wickhorst (1986) 42 Cal.3d 911, 915, 231 Cal. Rptr. 738; Progressive Concrete, Inc. v. Parker (2006) 136 Cal.App.4th 540, 551.) [7]

[6] The tort is variously known as interference with " 'prospective economic advantage,' " " 'prospective contractual relations,' " and " 'prospective economic relations.' " (Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. (1995) 11 Cal.4th 376, 378.)

[*28] Trial courts should only exercise this authority in extreme situations, such as when the conduct was clear and deliberate, where no lesser alternatives would remedy the situation (Lyons v. Wickhorst, supra, 42 Cal.3d at 917), the fault lies with the client and not the attorney (cf. Garcia v. McCutchen, supra, 16 Cal.4th 469), and when the court issues a directive that the party fails to obey. (E.g., former Code Civ. Proc., § 2023.)

Here, from the start of the case to the time the trial court issued the terminating sanction, Hufnagel showed no interest in taking part in the case or in following orders of the court. All of her actions were those of an obstructionist, not a participant in the process. She filed documents in propria persona that did not follow proper form, were lengthy, contained irrelevant information, and violated court rules. She filed documents without serving them. She personally filed documents that violated a prior vexatious litigant order. She failed to comply with the injunction and continued to operate the counterfeit website. She did not pay sanctions when ordered. When she had counsel, things did not improve. Misrepresentations [*29] were made to the court, documents were not filed when promised, responses to interrogatories were never delivered, and phone calls were not returned. The actions of Hufnagel and her counsel were willful and deliberate and caused unnecessary delay and wasted the trial court's resources. The actions caused Dr. Del Junco to incur unnecessary expense. Under these circumstances the trial court had the jurisdiction to strike Hufnagel's answer and enter default.

Hufnagel correctly states she could have been held in contempt for violating court orders and the trial court could have issued other orders, such as an order compelling her to answer discovery. Thus, she suggests that the trial court had to take such actions before issuing the terminating sanctions. However, there is nothing in the record to suggest that such hearings, or sanctions, would have provided the impetus Hufnagel needed to properly prosecute this case. She had already been deemed a vexatious litigant in another case, yet she filed documents in propria persona that did not comply with court rules. Given the history of this case it would have been futile for the trial court to issue other orders before striking Hufnagel's [*30] answer and entering default. It is clear that Hufnagel had no intention of answering discovery, filing proper and timely papers, or complying with court orders. She and her counsel had withdrawn from the case. No lesser remedy would have changed Hufnagel's conduct.

We agree with Hufnagel that some of the responsibility for the problems fall at the feet of her counsel. However, the record suggests that attorney Dailey's actions were part and parcel of Hufnagel's strategy of delaying and throwing darts at others, rather than taking responsibility for her own actions.

The trial court had the jurisdiction to strike Hufnagel's answer and enter default.

6. The matter must be returned to the trial court for additional evidence on damages.

Dr. Del Junco was awarded damages in the sum of $ 558,724.90 broken down as follows: $ 200,000 in general damages; $ 136,212 in special damages; $ 200,000 in punitive damages; $ 21,914 in attorney fees; and $ 598.90 in costs.

As part of the special damages, Dr. Del Junco requested and received $ 133,000 in special damages for loss of income. This award was based upon the following evidence: Hufnagel began to operate her counterfeit website in 2003. [*31] In April 2003, Dr. Del Junco's internet website generated e-mail inquiries, many of which resulted in surgeries Since Hufnagel began operating her website, the inquiries Dr. Del Junco received from potential patients dropped significantly. As a result of the decline in inquiries, Dr. Del Junco performed far fewer surgeries in 2004

---

[7] Code of Civil Procedure section 583.150 reads: "This chapter does not limit or affect the authority of a court to dismiss an action or impose other sanctions under a rule adopted by the court pursuant to Section 575.1 or by the Judicial Council pursuant to statute, or otherwise under inherent authority of the court."

Code of Civil Procedure section 581, subdivision (m) reads: "The provisions of this section shall not be deemed to be an exclusive enumeration of the court's power to dismiss an action or dismiss a complaint as to a defendant."

than he had performed in 2003, and his income from surgeries was reduced by $ 141,000. Dr. Del Junco attributed the decline in the number of surgeries and his loss of income in 2004 to the confusion caused in the minds of prospective patients by Hufnagel's website and the chilling effect it had on them. Dr. Del Junco typically booked surgeries nine months to one year in advance. Thus, the impact of the Hufnagel's website was felt in 2004. [8]

[*32] Hufnagel argues it is speculative to assume that Dr. Del Junco's drop in income for 2004 was related to the counterfeit website. She argues as follows: (1) In the first quarter of 2005, Dr. Del Junco performed 7 major surgeries and 28 major surgeries in 2003; (2) The amount of surgeries performed by Dr. Del Junco for the first quarter of 2005 was comparatively the same as those performed in 2003; (3) If her website caused Dr. Del Junco to lose income from surgeries, then the number of surgeries in the first quarter of 2005 should have been less than the number performed in 2003.

However, it is Hufnagel who speculates. She makes the assumption that the surgeries in the first quarter of 2005 correlate to the statistics provided for the full years of 2003 and 2005. Hufnagel may not take Dr. Del Junco's discussion and statistics extrapolate them to 2005, when she knows nothing about the surgeries in 2005. Without more information, Hufnagel's argument is hollow as it lacks sufficient data and information. Dr. Del Junco provided sufficient proof that he lost earnings in 2004. This evidence is not speculative.

As Hufnagel contends, Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 Cal.3d 105, 284 Cal. Rptr. 318 [*33] held that evidence of a defendant's financial condition is a prerequisite to an award of punitive damages and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to introduce such evidence. There was no such evidence presented to the trial court by Dr. Del Junco in support of his motion for default judgment.

At oral argument, Dr. Del Junco argued for the first time that Hufnagel is foreclosed from asserting there was no evidence of her financial worth. This argument is premised upon Dr. Del Junco's statement that Hufnagel refused to respond to discovery on this issue. (Mike Davidov Co. v. Issod (2000) 78 Cal.App.4th 597, 608-609 [by failing to abide by court's order to produce financial records defendant waived right to complain that there was no evidence of defendant's financial condition].) However, the only evidence presented to the trial court was that Hufnagel had failed to respond to form interrogatories. These interrogatories did not inquire about Hufnagel's financial condition. Further, the statement in Dr. Del Junco's brief that Hufnagel failed to appear for a deposition is unsupported by citation to the record, and thus cannot be considered by us.

The foregoing conclusion [*34] would normally lead to a reversal of the judgment because the $ 200,000 award for punitive damages cannot stand. However, we believe that justice will be served by issuing a conditional reversal that permits Dr. Del Junco to accept the judgment as modified or to return to the trial court for additional proceedings, during which he can present the required evidence.

---

[8] Dr. Del Junco presented the following evidence with regard to the number of surgeries he performed and the amount of income he derived therefrom:

2003

28 majors - $ 280,000 $ 328,000

16 minors - $ 48,000

2004

16 majors - $ 160,000 $ 187,000

9 minors - $ 27,000

2005 through March

7 Majors - $ 70,000

1 minor - $ 3,000

(3 minors scheduled for May)

c. The trial court did not err in awarding attorney fees.

Hufnagel contends we must strike the attorney fees award. This contention is not persuasive.

Civil Code section 3344 states that the "prevailing party in any action under this section shall . . . be entitled to attorney's fees and costs." (See fn. 5.) As stated above, Dr. Del Junco stated a cause of action for violating Civil Code section 3344. Thus, when he proved the allegations in the complaint with regard to this cause of action, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs.

Dr. Del Junco's counsel (attorney Michael J. Kaufman) declared that the attorney fees incurred by Dr. Del Junco as of April 19, 2005, the date of the motion for judgment, was $ 21,914. In a motion filed in June 2004, attorney Kaufman declared [*35] that his customary hourly billing rate was $ 300 per hour, based upon his over 25 years in practice and extensive trial experience, however, he was billing Dr. Del Junco $ 250 per hour. The trial court had before it the voluminous file containing many pleadings filed by Dr. Del Junco in response to the inappropriate and lengthy documents filed by Hufnagel and her attorney. Thus, the trial court had evidence of attorney Kaufman's hourly rate and the amount billed to Dr. Del Junco. Additionally, the trial court could use its own expertise in evaluating the attorney fee request. (In re Marriage of Jovel (1996) 49 Cal.App.4th 575, 588; In re Marriage of Ananeh-Firempong (1990) 219 Cal.App.3d 272, 280, 268 Cal. Rptr. 83.) Based on this record, we cannot conclude that the record lacked substantial evidence to support the attorney fee award.

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed in all respects except as to the award of punitive damages. The award of punitive damages is reversed and remanded to the trial court for further proceedings only on the issue of the amount of punitive damages, unless within 20 days of the date this opinion is filed Dr. Del Junco [*36] files with the clerk of the court and serves on Hufnagel a written consent to modify the judgment by striking the punitive damage award of $ 200,000, in which event the judgment is modified to award Dr. Del Junco $ 363,585.26, and in such event the judgment is affirmed as modified.

Dr. Del Junco is awarded costs on appeal.

ALDRICH, J.

We concur:

KLEIN, P.J.

CROSKEY, J.

End of Document

Manuel Augusto Colón Cabrera Melba Correa Miranda, Demandantes-Apelados v. Caribbean Petroleum Corporation, et al., Demandados-Apelantes; Estado Libre Asociado de Puerto Rico, Recurrido

Tribunal Supremo De Puerto Rico

16 de marzo de 2007

AC-2006-27

Reportero
170 D.P.R. 582 *; 2007 PR Sup. LEXIS 47 ; 2007 TSPR 48

Manuel Augusto Colón Cabrera Melba Correa Miranda, Demandantes-Apelados v. Caribbean Petroleum Corporation, et al., Demandados-Apelantes; Estado Libre Asociado de Puerto Rico, Recurrido

Historia Previa: [1] Materia: Injunction, Daños y Perjuicios por Violación a las Leyes de Monopolio y por Incumplimiento de Contrato. Tribunal de Apelaciones: Región Judicial de Bayamón-Panel VII. Juez Ponente: Hon. Rafael L. Martínez Torres.

Tesis de LexisNexis ®

Administrative Law > Governmental Information > Freedom of Information > General Overview

HN1[] Governmental Information, Freedom of Information

Un derecho liberal de acceso a información pública en poder del Estado. No obstante, también tal derecho no es absoluto y cede en casos de imperativo interés público.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Methods of Disclosure > General Overview

Administrative Law > Governmental Information > Freedom of Information > General Overview

HN2[] Freedom of Information, Methods of Disclosure

El Artículo 1(b) de la Ley de Documentos Públicos,3 L.P.R.A. § 1001(b), define un documento público como todo documento que se origine, conserve, o reciba en cualquier dependencia del Estado Libre Asociado de Puerto Rico de acuerdo con la ley o en relación con el manejo de los asuntos públicos y que de conformidad con lo dispuesto en la*3 L.P.R.A. § 1002* se haga conservar permanentemente o temporalmente como prueba de las transacciones o por su valor legal. Conforme a ello, la documentación recopilada y conservada como parte de una investigación efectuada por la Oficina de Monopolios satisface la definición antes transcrita.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Methods of Disclosure > Record Requests

Administrative Law > Governmental Information > Freedom of Information > General Overview

HN3[] Methods of Disclosure, Record Requests

En Puerto Rico existe un derecho general de acceso a información pública en poder del Estado. Tal derecho surge en virtud del Artículo del Código de Enjuiciamiento Civil,32 L.P.R.A. § 1781. Dicha disposición establece que todo ciudadano tiene derecho a inspeccionar y sacar copia de cualquier documento público de Puerto Rico, salvo lo expresamente contrario dispuesto en ley. El derecho de acceso a información pública también surge como colorario del derecho a la libertad de expresión, ya que sin conocimiento de los hechos no hay posibilidad de expresión. Por tanto, resulta innegable que el acceso a información constituye un componente importante de una sociedad democrática en donde el ciudadano puede emitir un juicio informado sobre las actuaciones del gobierno.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Methods of Disclosure > Record Requests

Administrative Law > Governmental Information > Freedom of Information > General Overview

HN4[] Methods of Disclosure, Record Requests

En vista de la importancia que tiene el derecho a obtener información publica, el Estado no puede negarse caprichosamente y de forma arbitraria a permitir su acceso.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Statutory Exemptions

HN5[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Si bien se ha reconocido que se debe hacer un análisis liberal al atender una solicitud de acceso a información custodiada por el Estado, se debe aclarar que tal derecho no puede ser absoluto. Se ha dejado abierta la puerta para que, llegado el momento, se haya resuelto sostener la confidencialidad de cierta información dependiendo de los intereses envueltos.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Statutory Exemptions

HN6[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

En el ordenamiento puertorriqueño no se cuenta con una legislación especial que disponga las excepciones en las que el Estado puede mantener ciertos documentos fuera del escrutinio público. Sin embargo, el Tribunal Supremo ha afirmado los supuestos en los que el estado validamente puede reclamar la confidencialidad, a saber: (1) cuando una ley así lo declara; (2) cuando la comunicación esta protegida por alguno de los privilegios evidenciarios que pueden invocar los ciudadanos; (3) cuando revelar la información puede lesionar derechos fundamentales de terceros; (4) cuando se trate de la identidad de un confidente y (5) cuando sea información oficial conforme laRegla 31 de Evidencia. Para mantener la confidencialidad, el Estado tiene la carga de probar que satisface cualquiera de las excepciones antes enumeradas.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Statutory Exemptions

HN7[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

La confidencialidad de las investigación gubermentales surge precisamente al amparo de una ley.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Statutory Exemptions

HN8[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

En la legislación federal se establece como una de las excepciones a la divulgación, los casos en los que se dispone la confidencialidad por virtud de una ley.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Statutory Exemptions

HN9[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Véase*10 L.P.R.A. § 271*.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Statutory Exemptions

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Methods of Disclosure > Record Requests

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

HN10[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Toda etiqueta legislativa de confidencialidad debe evaluarse frente al derecho de acceso a información invocado por el ciudadano. En vista de que tal derecho es de carácter fundamental, la legislación debe someterse a un análisis de escrutinio estricto. Al mismo tiempo, debe ser interpretada restrictivamente a favor del acceso. En síntesis, toda ley que pretenda ocultar información a un ciudadano bajo el palio de la confidencialidad tiene que justificarse a plenitud. Ello se satisface si la legislación (1) cae dentro del poder constitucional del gobierno; (2) propulsa un interés gubernamental importante o sustancial; (3) el interés gubernamental no esta relacionado con la supresión de la libre expresión; y (4) la restricción concomitante del derecho a la libre expresión no es mayor que la esencial para propulsar dicho interés. Así pues, el Estado puede invocar el manto de secretividad en casos de imperativo interés publico.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > Scope of Delegated Authority

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN11[] Legislative Controls, Scope of Delegated Authority

Se ha delegado en la Oficina de Monopolios la labor de fiscalizar e investigar las practicas monopolisticas.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Evidence > Privileges > Trade Secrets > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

HN12[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

La preservación de secretos de negocio constituye un interés apremiante del Estado.

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Administrative Law > ... > Freedom of Information > Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN13[] Defenses & Exemptions From Public Disclosure, Commercial Information & Trade Secrets

La Ley Núm. 77 de 25 de junio de 1964, conocida como Ley de Monopolios y restricción del Comercio,10 L.P.R.A. § 257 constituye un interés apremiante capaz de sostener la norma de confidencialidad con respecto a la información obtenida de personas privadas durante una investigación efectuada por la Oficina de Monopolios.

Abogados: Abogados de la Parte Apelante: Lcdo. Eduardo A. Vera Ramírez, Lcda. Isabel Garcés Castro, Lcda. Eileen Landrón Guadiola.

Abogados de la Parte Apelada: Lcdo. Manuel A. Colón Cabrera, Lcdo. Andrés Díaz Nieves, Lcdo. Eduardo Goitía Rodríguez.

Oficina del Procurador General: Lcda. Vanessa Ramírez, Procuradora General Auxiliar, Lcda. Mariana D. Negrón Vargas, Subprocuradora General, Lcdo. Salvador J. Antonetti Stutts, Procurador General.

Jueces: Opinión del Tribunal emitida por el Juez Presidente señor Hernández Denton. El Juez Asociado señor Rebollo López no intervino. La Jueza Asociada señora Rodríguez Rodríguez inhibida.

Opinion Por: Federico Hernández Denton

Opinion

[*586] San Juan, Puerto Rico, a 16 de marzo de 2007.

Hemos reconocidoHN1[] un derecho liberal de acceso a información pública en poder del Estado. No obstante, también hemos reiterado que*tal derecho no es absoluto* y cede en casos de imperativo interés público. En vista de ello, nos corresponde resolver si la [2] norma de confidencialidad dispuesta en el Artículo 15 de la Ley Núm. 77 de 25 de junio de 1964, conocida como Ley de Monopolios y Restricción del Comercio,10 L.P.R.A. sec. 257 y ss. (en adelante, Ley Núm. 77) para la información obtenida durante una investigación efectuada por la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos adscrita al Departamento de Justicia (en adelante, Oficina de Monopolios) responde a un interés apremiante del Estado y si el alcance de dicha norma se justifica para proteger tal interés.

El apelanteCaribbean Petroleum Corporation(en adelante, Caribbean Petroleum) recurre de una sentencia del Tribunal de Apelaciones que concluyó que Manuel Colón Cabrera y Melba Correa Miranda (en adelante, señor Colón Cabrera) tenían derecho a descubrir, tras un examen en cámara, la información producto de una investigación efectuada por la Oficina de [*587] Monopolios contra varios distribuidores de gasolina, entre los que figuraba el demandado. Por entender que el Estado demostró tener un interés apremiante en investigar y procesar las violaciones a la Ley Núm. 77, modificamos la sentencia recurrida para que el Tribunal de Primera Instancia, luego de un examen en cámara, y en ausencia de las [3] partes, del expediente y el informe producto de la investigación realizada por la Oficina de Monopolios, ordene la divulgación de la información que no sea impertinente, no sea de naturaleza privilegiada y no revele las técnicas de investigación del Departamento de Justicia o la identidad de informantes. Asimismo, el tribunal no podrá divulgar la información que haya sido obtenida de las personas privadas sujetas al poder de investigación de la Oficina de Monopolios bajo el palio de confidencialidad. Resolvemos, por tanto, que el acceso limitado al que tiene derecho Colón Cabrera responde a los privilegios evidenciarios y al mandato legislativo recogido en el Art. 15 de la Ley Núm. 77,supra.

I.

El señor Colón Cabrera arrendó a Caribbean Petroleum una propiedad inmueble sobre la cual enclava una estación de servicio de gasolina. Tras varias controversias entre las partes, el señor Colón Cabrera instó una acción por daños y perjuicios e incumplimiento de contrato contra Caribbean Petroleum. Entre las alegaciones, incluyó una causa de acción al amparo de la Ley Núm. 77 por discrimen en precios.

Estando el caso pendiente de resolver ante el Tribunal de Primera Instancia, [4] el Departamento de Justicia comunicó a los medios noticiosos del país que la Oficina de Monopolios había realizado una investigación sobre la industria de la gasolina. Dicha investigación reveló que los programas de incentivos de los distribuidores de gasolina eran [*588] contrarios a los intereses de los detallistas y violaban las disposiciones de la Ley Núm. 77. En atención a ello, y en aras de proteger el libre mercado, el Departamento de Justicia emitió órdenes de cese y desista contra los distribuidores y, en adición, presentó una querella ante el Departamento de Asuntos al Consumidor contra una de las compañías investigadas.

Al enterarse de estos hallazgos, el señor Colón Cabrera solicitó al Tribunal de Primera Instancia que ordenara al Departamento de Justicia entregarle copia del estudio y/o informe con los resultados de la investigación, en particular lo concerniente a Caribbean Petroleum. Fundamentó su solicitud en que la información recopilada era pública al haber sido divulgada a los medios y que, además, era fundamental para probar sus alegaciones ante el tribunal.

Por su parte, Cribbean Petroleum se opuso a la solicitud en base a lo dispuesto en el Art. 15 de la Ley Núm. 77 [5] a los efectos de que toda información obtenida en el curso de una investigación civil efectuada por la Oficina de Monopolios debía mantenerse en estricta confidencialidad. De igual forma, el Departamento de Justicia se opuso mediante una comparecencia especial. Adujo que el acceso a la información tendría el efecto de obstaculizar la labor de investigación de la Oficina de Monopolios, ya que la mayor parte de la información obtenida es privilegiada y las personas la entregan voluntariamente bajo una expectativa de confidencialidad. El Tribunal de Primera Instancia acogió los planteamientos del Estado y denegó el acceso.

Inconforme, el señor Colón Cabrera presentó una solicitud de revisión ante el Tribunal de Apelaciones. En ella alegó que el foro de instancia debió permitirle el acceso en consideración a su derecho constitucional a la libertad de expresión. Así las cosas, y luego de la comparecencia de las partes, el Tribunal de Apelaciones revocó la determinación recurrida y ordenó el acceso a los documentos luego de efectuarse un examen en cámara con el fin de proteger [*589] información privilegiada sobre otras compañías, la identidad de informantes y las técnicas de investigación criminal. [6] Sostuvo que en nuestro ordenamiento rige una norma liberal en cuanto al acceso a información pública en poder del Estado y que el Estado no demostró un interés apremiante que justificase la norma de confidencialidad dispuesta en la ley Núm. 77.

De esta determinación Caribbean Petroleum apela ante nos y alega como único error que el señor Colón Cabrera no tenía derecho a inspeccionar los documentos en cámara. Sostiene que tal información es confidencial a tenor con lo dispuesto en el Artículo 15 de la Ley Núm. 77 y está cobijada por los privilegios evidenciarios establecidos en las Reglas 30 y 31 de Evidencia, relativos a secretos de negocio e información oficial. 32 L.P.R.A. R. 31, R. 30.

En vista de que el recurso plantea una cuestión novel y de alto interés público, resolvimos acoger el recurso como*certiorari* y acordamos expedir. Con el beneficio de la comparecencia de las partes, procedemos a resolver.

II.

Consideramos, en primer lugar, si la información objeto de la solicitud puede catalogarse como información pública. Es necesario hacer esa determinación preliminar en vista de que, una vez un documento sea catalogado como público, cualquier ciudadano tiene derecho a solicitar [7] su acceso sujeto a determinadas excepciones.

HN2[] El Artículo 1(b) de la Ley de Documentos Públicos,3 L.P.R.A. 1001(b), define un documento público como "[t]odo documento que se origine, conserve, o reciba en cualquier dependencia del Estado Libre Asociado de Puerto Rico de acuerdo con la ley o en relación con el manejo de los asuntos públicos y que de conformidad con lo dispuesto en la*sec. 1002* de este título se haga conservar permanentemente o temporalmente [*590] como prueba de las transacciones o por su valor legal." Conforme a ello, resolvemos que la documentación recopilada y conservada como parte de una investigación efectuada por la Oficina de Monopolios satisface la definición antes transcrita.

Aclarado esto, concierne recordar queHN3[] en Puerto Rico existe un derecho general de acceso a información pública en poder del Estado. Tal derecho surge en virtud del Artículo del Código de Enjuiciamiento Civil,32 L.P.R.A. 1781.Dicha disposición establece que "todo ciudadano tiene derecho a inspeccionar y sacar copia de cualquier documento público de Puerto Rico, salvo lo expresamente contrario dispuesto en ley." El derecho de acceso a información pública también surge como colorario del derecho [8] a la libertad de expresión, ya que sin conocimiento de los hechos no hay posibilidad de expresión. Por tanto, resulta innegable que el acceso a información constituye un componente importante de una sociedad democrática en donde el ciudadano puede emitir un juicio informado sobre las actuaciones del gobierno.Pedró Juan Soto v. Miguel Giménez Muñoz, 112 D.P.R. 477 (1982);David Noriega Rodríguez v. Hon. Rafael Hernández Colón, 130 D.P.R. 919 (1992).

HN4[] En vista de la importancia que tiene el derecho a obtener información pública,[1] el Estado no puede negarse caprichosamente y de forma arbitraria a permitir su acceso.Ligia M. Ortiz v. Mercedes Bauemeister, 152 D.P.R. 161;Rolando Silva Iglesia v. Panel sobre elFiscal Especial Independiente, 137 D.P.R. 821 (1995);Sol Luís López Vives v. Policía de Puerto Rico, 118 D.P.R. 219 (1987);Soto v. Giménez, supra. Por tanto, dicha negativa debe estar fundamentada y justificada.De darse estas circunstancias, el Estado estaría legitimado para restringir el acceso de los ciudadanos a documentos de carácter público.

[9] HN5[] Si bien hemos reconocido que- como norma general- [*591] se debe hacer un análisis liberal al atender una solicitud de acceso a información custodiada por el Estado, debemos aclarar que tal derecho no puede ser absoluto.Id. A tales efectos, hemos dejado abierta la puerta para que, llegado el momento, resolvamos sostener la confidencialidad de cierta información dependiendo de los intereses envueltos.

HN6[] En nuestro ordenamiento no contamos con una legislación especial que disponga las excepciones en las que el Estado puede mantener ciertos documentos fuera del escrutinio público. Sin embargo, este Tribunal ha afirmado los supuestos en los que el estado válidamente puede reclamar la confidencialidad, a saber: (1)cuando una ley así lo declara; (2) cuando la comunicación está protegida por alguno de los privilegios evidenciarios que pueden invocar los ciudadanos; (3) cuando revelar la información puede lesionar derechos fundamentales de terceros; (4) cuando se trate de la identidad de un confidente y (5) cuando sea información oficial conforme laRegla 31 de Evidencia.Id.,Angueira v. J.L.B.P., 150 D.P.R. 10 (2000).Para mantener la confidencialidad, el Estado tiene [10] la carga de probar que satisface cualquiera de las excepciones antes enumeradas.

III.

En este caso,HN7[] la confidencialidad surge precisamente al amparo de una ley[2].Resulta pertinente recordar nuestras expresiones en el caso de*Davila v. Superintendente de Elecciones, 82 D.P.R. 264, 281 (1960)*, a los efectos de que para resolver que el derecho reconocido en el art. 409 del Código [*592] de Enjuiciamiento Civil no es aplicable a una clase determinada de documentos no podemos menos que exigirle a la Asamblea Legislativa una orden clara y terminante. Entendemos que esta afirmación descansa en el hecho de que el legislador realizó un balance previo entre los intereses en conflicto: por un lado, el acceso a información por un ciudadano y, por el otro, los interés del estado en que determinada información permanezca fuera del escrutinio público.Por ende, reiteramos lo expresado en*Efraín Santiago v. Maggie Bobb, 117 D.P.R. 153 (1986)* a los efectos de que el medio más efectivo para salvaguardar la información sensitiva recopilada por el Estado en su gestión oficial es mediante legislación especial.

[11] No cabe duda que, con respecto a la información obtenida por la Oficina de Monopolios, el legislador dio una orden inequívoca de que permanecieran en estricta confidencialidad. A tales efectos, dispuso en el Artículo 15 de la Ley. Núm. 77,supra, que "…HN9[] [l]a informaciónobtenida en el uso de las facultades otorgadas en esta

---

[1] En la jurisdicción federal este derecho ha sido incorporado mediante legislación federal con el fin de someter a escrutinio público las operaciones de las agencias federales.Freedom of Information Act,5 U.S.C.A. 552 ss.

[2] De hecho,HN8[] en la legislación federal se establece como una de las excepciones a la divulgación, los casos en los que se dispone la confidencialidad por virtud de una ley. Freedom of Information Act,supra.

Además, es oportuno señalar que en uno de los intentos por legislar sobre acceso a información pública, proyecto del Senado Núm. 494 de 1973, se incluyó como excepción a la divulgación aquella materia dispuesta por orden ejecutiva o*mandato expreso de ley.* Efrén Rivera Ramos,La Libertad de Información: Necesidad de su Reglamentación en Puerto Rico,44 Rev. Jur. UPR 67 (1975) sección se mantendrá en estricta confidencialidad, excepto en tanto sea necesaria para usarla para fines de cualquier acción judicial por parte del estado."10 L.P.R.A. § 271 (énfasis suplido)

No obstante, en nuestro ordenamiento la clara intención del legislador de mantener ciertos documentos bajo el palio de la confidencialidad no es suficiente. Así,HN10[] toda etiqueta legislativa de confidencialidad debe evaluarse frente al derecho de acceso a información invocado por el ciudadano.*Soto v. Giménez, supra.*En vista de que tal derecho es de carácter fundamental, la legislación debe someterse a un análisis de escrutinio estricto. Al mismo tiempo, debe ser interpretada restrictivamente a favor del acceso.En síntesis, toda ley que pretenda ocultar información a un ciudadano bajo el palio de la confidencialidad tiene que justificarse [12] a plenitud. Ello se satisface si la legislación (1) cae dentro del poder constitucional del gobierno; (2) propulsa un interés gubernamental importante [*593] o sustancial; (3) el interés gubernamental no está relacionado con la supresión de la libre expresión; y (4) la restricción concomitante del derecho a la libre expresión no es mayor que la esencial para propulsar dicho interés.Ortiz v. Bauemeister, supra;Angueira v. J.L.B.P, supra;*Soto v. Giménez, supra.*Así pues, el Estado puede invocar el manto de secretividad en casos de imperativo interés público.Id.

Por tanto, debemos examinar si el interés del Estado en este caso es lo suficientemente apremiante para justificar la norma de confidencialidad dispuesta en la Ley Núm. 77,supra.

IV.

De una lectura de la exposición de motivos de la Ley Núm. 77 se desprende que su objetivo primordial fue evitar la concentración económica en un grupo reducido de personas[3]. En específico, se establece que "[e]s principio fundamental de la democracia puertorriqueña- como lo expresa la Constitución del Estado Libre Asociado de Puerto Rico- que la voluntad del pueblo es la fuente del poder público, [13] concibiéndose el sistema democrático como aquel que asegura la libre participación del ciudadano en las decisiones colectivas.No es compatible con esa aspiración democrática la concentración del poder económico en unas pocas personas y entidades, en forma tal que éstas se coloquen en posición de dominar áreas o sectores de la economía puertorriqueña[…]" (Énfasis suplido).

[*594] Así, la Ley Núm. 77 se promulgó con el fin de "evitar la confabulación entre firmas para dominar el mercado, [el] [14] acaparamiento de materias primas, [los] aumentos indebidos en los precios resultantes de una posición monopolística, [las] prácticas discriminatorias en las relaciones con clientes [y] la concentración extrema de la actividad económica y de la riqueza en algunos grandes consocios de empresas."[4]

A esos fines,HN11[] se delegó en la Oficina de Monopolios la labor de fiscalizar e investigar las prácticas monopolísticas. Mediante esa delegación, el legislador quiso dotar al Estado con los instrumentos investigativos necesarios para identificar y erradicar las violaciones a la Ley Núm. 77. No cabe duda que dichas facultades constituyen un componente fundamental en nuestra sociedad democrática, toda vez que la concentración del poder económico resulta en la concentración del poder político y social, lo que, indiscutiblemente, contradice la aspiración de un sistema en el que [15] haya participación ciudadana en igualdad de condiciones. Así lo entendieron los propulsores de la Ley Núm. 77 al expresar que "el pueblo [tiene que asegurarse] de que no han de germinar en Puerto Rico[…] concentraciones de poder económico, para no correr el riesgo de que toda la vida económica del país pueda quedar a merced de un grupo reducido de personas que actúen movidas por su puro interés privado. Ante una situación de tal naturaleza, es difícil concebir que las decisiones colectivas vayan a tomarse verdaderamente a base de la libre participación de todos los ciudadanos."[5] [*595] Tomando en cuenta la

---

[3] El Tribunal Supremo de Estados Unidos, explicando los propósitos de la legislación federal análoga, expresó: "the Sherman Act[…]was a populist legislation which reacted to the increasing concentrations of economic power which followed on the heels of industrial revolution. The Sherman Act was the first legislation to deal with the problems of participation of small economic units in an economy increasingly dominated by economic titans."National Broiler Marketing Ass'n v. U.S, 436 U.S. 816 (1978).

[4] Vistas Públicas de la Ley Núm. 77,supra, celebradas el 10 de marzo de 1964 sobre el P. de la C. 909, Monopolios, Pág. 2.

dimensión del problema que quiso resolver la Asamblea Legislativa mediante la aprobación de la Ley Núm. 77 y, además, considerando que se trata de un asunto que incide sobre los cimientos de nuestra sociedad democrática, entendemos que los propósitos que subyacen dicha legislación son de la más alta jerarquía y constituyen un interés apremiante del Estado.

[16] En su comparecencia, el Estado aduce como fundamento para oponerse al reclamo de acceso a información que revelar la misma obstaculizaría las investigaciones futuras de la Oficina de Monopolios. Sostiene que tal conclusión se deriva del hecho de que las personas privadas, de ordinario, someten voluntariamente la información, que de otra manera no estaría accesible por ser en su mayoría privilegiada, bajo la expectativa de que se mantendrá en confidencia. Entendemos dicha preocupación.

Consideramos que al Estado le sería sumamente oneroso conseguir dicha información por otros medios. Sin la información que obtiene la Oficina de Monopolios como parte de una investigación, no se pueden lograr los objetivos de la Ley Núm. 77, los cuales -como mencionamos anteriormente- son de la más alta jerarquía. En otras palabras, un menoscabo a la facultad investigativa de la Oficina de Monopolios, como el contemplado en este caso, incide sobre el interés apremiante de evitar la concentración económica en nuestro país al no poder el Estado poner en vigor las disposiciones de la Ley Núm. 77 con la efectividad y rapidez que se requiere.

En adición, la confidencialidad se sostiene en atención a que [17] la información obtenida contiene datos sensitivos sobre las prácticas y métodos de mercadeo de las personas privadas sujetas al poder de investigación de la Oficina de Monopolios que, como norma general, no está accesible al público. En otras palabras, dichas personas revelan sus secretos de negocio bajo la certeza de que se mantendrán en estricta confidencialidad. En*Fulana de Tal v. Demandado A,* [*596] 138 D.P.R. 610 (1995) sostuvimos queHN12[] la preservación de secretos de negocio constituye un interés apremiante del Estado.Por ende, si permitimos el acceso a la informaciónobtenida por la Oficina de Monopolios se vería menoscabado dicho interés.

En vista de lo anterior, el legislador ordenó mantener fuera del escrutinio público la informaciónobtenida por la Oficina de Monopolios en el curso de una investigación. De una lectura del Art. 15,supra, surge que la confidencialidad establecida por virtud de dicha disposición se limita a la información que voluntariamente someten personas privadas a la Oficina de Monopolios bajo el palio de confidencialidad.

Ahora bien, en el expediente o informe producto de una investigación efectuada por la Oficina de Monopolios [18] puede haber otro tipo de información, ya sea información proveniente de otras fuentes o información elaborada por la Oficina de Monopolios, que no está cobijada por la confidencialidad del Art. 15,supra, y es, por consiguiente, divulgable. Por "información elaborada" debe entenderse el producto o resultado de la investigación efectuada por la Oficina de Monopolios, como por ejemplo, las conclusiones, impresiones o interpretaciones hechas a partir de ella. Es decir, la información contenida en cualquier documento, en el expediente o informe que sea resultado de un análisis atribuible a la propia Oficina de Monopolios.

En vista de lo anterior, el Tribunal de Primera Instancia debe realizar un examen en cámara y en ausencia de las partes con el fin de determinar lo que puede estar sujeto a divulgación. Así, el tribunal permitirá la divulgación de toda información pertinente, no privilegiada y que no revele técnicas de investigación del Departamento de Justicia o la identidad de informantes. El tribunal tampoco divulgará la información que haya sidoobtenida por la Oficina de Monopolios de personas privadas bajo el palio de confidencialidad. En el caso de que dicha información [19] [*597] conste en el informe final o en el expediente producto de la investigación, el tribunal deberá tomar las medidas cautelares necesarias para salvaguardar la norma de confidencialidad que, como mencionamos anteriormente, contribuye a lograr los objetivos de la legislación anti-monopolística.

---

[5] Exposición de Motivos de la Ley Núm. 77, aprobada el 25 de junio de 1964. A modo de comparación, muchos tribunales federales han expresado que el propósito principal de la legislación federal de monopolios es preservar un sistema de libre mercado en donde haya igual oportunidad de participación ciudadana. Véase por ejemplo,Glen Holly Entertainment, Inc. v. Tektronix Inc., 343 F.3d 1000 (2003);El Aguila Food Products, Inc. v. Gruma Corp, 301 F. Supp. 2d 612 (2003);U.S. v. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659 (1990);Wei v. Bodner, 127 F.R.D. 91 (1989);O'Neill v. Coca-Cola Co., 669 F. Supp. 217 (1987);Rosenberg v. Cleary, 598 F. Supp. 642 (1984).

En conclusión, resolvemos que el objetivo que promueve*HN13*[] la Ley Núm. 77 constituye un interés apremiante capaz de sostener la norma de confidencialidad con respecto a la informaciónobtenida de personas privadas durante una investigación efectuada por la Oficina de Monopolios.

V.

Por los fundamentos que anteceden, se modifica la Sentencia del Tribunal de Apelaciones a los fines de que al efectuar el examen en cámara, en ausencia de las partes, también se excluya la información obtenida de las personas privadas sujetas al poder de investigación de la Oficina de Monopolios. Se devuelve el caso al Tribunal de Primera Instancia para que continúe con los procedimientos de forma compatible con lo aquí resuelto.

Se dictará Sentencia de conformidad.

Federico Hernández Denton

Juez Presidente

SENTENCIA

San Juan, Puerto Rico, a 16 de marzo de 2007.

Por los fundamentos expuestos en la Opinión [20] que antecede, la cual se hace formar parte íntegra de la presente, se modifica la Sentencia del Tribunal de Apelaciones a los fines de que al efectuar el examen en cámara, en ausencia de las partes, también se excluya la información obtenida de las personas privadas sujetas al poder de investigación de la Oficina de Monopolios. Se devuelve el caso al Tribunal de Primera Instancia para que continúe con los procedimientos de forma compatible con lo aquí resuelto.

Así lo pronunció, manda el Tribunal y certifica la Secretaria del Tribunal Supremo. El Juez Asociado señor Rebollo López no intervino. La Jueza Asociada señora Rodríguez Rodríguez inhibida.

Aida Ileana Oquendo Graulau

Secretaria del Tribunal Supremo

Kinderstart.com, LLC v. Google, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose Division

March 16, 2007, Decided ; March 16, 2007, Filed

Case Number C 06-2057 JF (RS)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22637 *; 2007 WL 831811

KINDERSTART.COM, LLC, a California limited liability company, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. GOOGLE, INC., a Delaware corporation, Defendant.

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR CITATION

Prior History: KinderStart.com, LLC v. Google Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22648 (N.D. Cal., Mar. 16, 2007)

Disposition: Defendant's motion to dismiss granted without leave to amend. Defendant's motion to strike claim #4 granted, and motion to strike second amended complaint denied as moot.

Core Terms

alleges, website, monopolization, search engine, advertising, user, relevant market, Internet, motion to dismiss, antitrust, leave to amend, public forum, anticompetitive, competitors', sites, argues, unfair, state action, asserts, public interest, Blockage, termination, purposes, Web, Sherman Act, manipulation, exclusionary, anti-SLAPP, defamation, Deflation

Counsel: For Kinderstart.Com, LLC, a California limited liability company, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Gregory John Yu, LEAD ATTORNEY, Global Law Group, San Mateo, CA.

For Google, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Defendant: David H. Kramer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bart Edward Volkmer, Esq., Colleen Bal, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, Palo Alto, CA.

Judges: JEREMY FOGEL, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JEREMY FOGEL

Opinion

ORDER [1] GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND, DENYING SPECIAL MOTION PURSUANT TO CAL. CIV. CODE § 425.16, AND DENYING MOTION TO STRIKE AS MOOT

[re: docket nos. 16, 49, 51, 52, 54, 59]

Defendant Google, Inc. ("Google") moves to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") of Plaintiff KinderStart.com, LLC ("KinderStart"), pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil

[1] This disposition is not designated for publication and may not be cited.

Procedure. [2] Google also moves [*2] specially to strike the fourth claim of the SAC pursuant to California's "anti-SLAPP" statute, Cal. Code Civ. Pro. § 425.16. Finally, Google moves to strike the entire SAC for perceived structural insufficiencies or, alternatively, to strike KinderStart's third claim as improperly filed. [3] KinderStart opposes the motions. The Court heard oral argument on October 27, 2006.

For the reasons set forth below, the Court will grant the motion to dismiss without leave to amend and will deny the "anti-SLAPP" motion. The motion to strike will [*3] be denied as moot.

I. BACKGROUND

1. Procedural Background

On March 17, 2006, KinderStart filed the instant action on behalf of itself and others similarly situated. On April 12, 2006, KinderStart filed a First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), alleging nine claims for relief: (1) violation of the right to free speech under the United States and California Constitutions; (2) attempted monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act; (3) monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act; (4) violations of the Communications Act, 47 U.S.C. §§ 201, et seq.; (5) unfair competition under California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200, et seq.; (6) unfair practices under California Business and Professions Code § 17045; (7) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (8) defamation and libel; and (9) negligent interference with prospective economic advantage. The Court dismissed the FAC with leave to amend in an order dated July 13, 2006 ("July 13th Order"). KinderStart filed the operative SAC on September 1, 2006, asserting six claims for relief: (1) attempted monopolization [*4] in violation of the Sherman Act; (2) monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act; (3) false representations in violation of the Lanham Act; (4) violation of free speech rights under the United States and California Constitutions; (5) unfair competition in violation of California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200 et seq.; and (6) defamation and libel.

2. Factual Allegations of the Second Amended Complaint

KinderStart alleges the following facts, which are presumed to be true for the purpose of the motion to dismiss. KinderStart operates a website, www.KinderStart.com, which is a directory and search engine for links to information and resources on subjects related to young children. At one point, KinderStart was "one of the choicest Internet destinations for thousands of parents, caregivers, educators, nonprofit and advocacy representatives, and federal, state and local organizations and officials in the United States and worldwide to access health, education and other vital information about infants and toddlers." SAC P 28. It launched in May 2000 and monthly page views by visitors "reached approximately 10,000,000 by 2005." Id. [*5] P 31.

Google is the world's most widely used search engine. Id. P 2. It is "the dominant actor in the world of searching all forms of text, Web and image content on the Internet." Id. P 33. It "invites anyone with an Internet connection worldwide to perform searches for Websites and Webpages" and presents results of its searches on a results page. Id. P 3. It "induces an entire generation of users, the public, and the cyberspace community at large to expect and believe that Search Results generated from a search every single time will be (a) objective and neutral, (b) untrammeled by human intervention or preference and (d) [sic] accompanied by a disclosure of every incidence of removal of Websites from appearing in Search Results." Id. P 129. Google states on its "Technology Overview" page: "There is no human involvement or manipulation of results, which is why users have come to trust Google as

---

[2] Unless otherwise indicated, references to Rules hereinafter will refer to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

[3] The Court will refer to the three motions respectively as: "motion to dismiss;" "'anti-SLAPP' motion;" and "motion to strike."

KinderStart has moved for administrative relief relating to a minor delay in the submission of its opposition to the "anti-SLAPP" motion and motion to strike. The Court will grant this relief to the extent that it is not already moot.

a source of objective information untainted by paid placement." Id. P 116. Google represents on its website "that removal of Websites and Web Content from Google's index is not done except (a) upon request of the webmaster of the website, (b) in the case of 'spamming [*6] the index,' or (c) as required by law." Id. P 87.

Google offers a system for rating the usefulness of websites known as PageRank. According to the SAC, "[a]t one time, PageRank in its nascent form was an automated, computer algorithm to calculate and measure the extent and nature of hyperlinking within the Internet to a particular Website and its web pages. After PageRank was licensed from Stanford University, Defendant developed a system of converting the actual mathematical result into a whole number score from '1' up to '10'." Id. P 142. PageRank now appears on the Google Toolbar that web users may download for free. Id. P 78, 140. Google explains: "'Wondering whether a new website is worth your time? Use the Toolbar's format PageRank TM display to tell you how Google's algorithms assess the importance of the page you're viewing.'" Id. P 140. KinderStart alleges that "PageRank is not a mere statement of opinion of the innate value or human appeal of a given Website," but instead is "a mathematically-generated product of measuring and assessing the quantity and depth of all the hyperlinks on the Web that tie into a PageRanked Website, under programmatic determination [*7] by Defendant Google." Id. P 141. "PageRank as promulgated and propagated by Defendant Google throughout the Internet, is now the de facto and prevailing standard for rating Websites throughout the United States." Id. P 46.

Google also has commenced programs to make digital copies and archives of university libraries and "with the Library of Congress as financial partner, is creating a digital, searchable archive of published books, larger than nearly any library of written and published materials in the world." Id. P 111. "The incremental flow of revenues from Defendant Google shared and split with its library partners as state institutions, allow them to overcome their otherwise adverse shortfalls in funding and revenues." Id. P 113. "These financial inflows from the Google partnerships make such institutions financially entwined and dependent upon Defendant." Id.

KinderStart enrolled in Google's AdSense Program in 2003, and paid for a series of sponsored links from Google. Id. P 32. In or about August 2003, KinderStart began placing advertisements from the Google Network onto its site and receiving payments from Google for these placements. Id. On [*8] March 19, 2005, KinderStart's website "suffered a cataclysmic fall of 70% or more in its monthly page views and traffic." Id. P 174. KinderStart eventually "realized that common key word searches on Defendant Google's search engine no longer listed KSC.com as a result with any of its past visibility." Id. With this drop in search engine referrals, KinderStart's "monthly AdSense revenue suffered an equally precipitous fall by over 80%." Id. P 175. KinderStart's website "was officially, practically and illegally Blocked by Defendant Google." Id. P 176. KinderStart was not notified in advance that this would occur and has not been instructed how it can cause Google to cease the "Blockage." Id. P 178. To the best of its knowledge, KinderStart has never violated Google's Web Recommendations and Google has not notified KinderStart of any such violation. Id. P 184. KinderStart's website was given a PageRank of "0" until April 7, 2006, after which time it was raised to "7," before being dropped to "0" again on or about July 13, 2006. Id. P 186.

Google "artificially manipulates and deflates PageRanks downward of Websites . . . based on events, factors, impression [*9] and opinions having no correlation, relation or connection to the parameters, variables and factors that are naturally and normally utilized for the PageRank algorithm as managed and executed solely within the control and management of Defendant." Id. P 272. Google engages in the practice of "Blockage" of websites by "delisting, de-indexing and censoring" websites, including the unacknowledged practice of isolating a website from search queries, either permanently or for an unspecified probationary period. Id. PP 11, 154. "Blockage and/or PageRank Deflation [] occur in Search Results or Webpage views based on discriminatory political or religious content or vague and/or overbroad content guidelines." Id. P 100. [4] "It has been and continues to be, difficult if not impossible . . . to move [a] Website out of the probationary or permanent Blockage by calling, e-mailing or otherwise notifying Defendant Google, and there is no process to get a report of whether or why a Website might have been penalized and thereby Blocked." Id. P 156. Although Google initially denied engaging in "Blockage," it has admitted engaging in the "euphemistically" named practices of "'search [*10] quality improvement' or anti-Webspamming." Id. P 157. The practice of "Blockage" has been positively correlated with "the failure and/or the reduction in AdWords advertising" on multiple occasions. Id. P 170.

[4] Google denies most, if not all, the allegations made against it by KinderStart, but denies with particular vehemence the allegation of its possession of discriminatory political or religious views. These allegations are one subject of a motion for Rule 11 sanctions against KinderStart and its counsel, see Motion for Sanctions 5, which motion is addressed in a separate order filed concurrently herewith.

KinderStart believes that "over 1000 other sites of California and nationwide Websites that participated in AdSense suffered a loss of traffic and referrals as a result of Blockage by Defendant Google." Id. P 177. KinderStart also claims that Google has interfered with KinderStart's First Amendment rights, see e.g. id. P 257, and "has engaged in predatory conduct and anticompetitive [*11] conduct directed toward achieving the objective of controlling prices and/or destroying competition." Id. P 209. KinderStart asserts that the Google search engine is "an essential facility for the marketing and financial viability of effective competition in creating, offering and delivering services for search over the Internet." Id. P 219. Although MSN and Yahoo! also operate in the search engine market, they are losing market share. Id. P 48.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

For purposes of a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff's allegations are taken as true, and the Court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411, 421, 89 S. Ct. 1843, 23 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1969). Leave to amend must be granted unless it is clear that the complaint's deficiencies cannot be cured by amendment. Lucas v. Department of Corrections, 66 F.3d 245, 248 (9th Cir. 1995). When amendment would be futile, dismissal may be ordered with prejudice. Dumas v. Kipp, 90 F.3d 386, 393 (9th Cir. 1996).

On a motion to dismiss, the Court's review is limited to the face of the complaint and matters judicially noticeable. North Star Int'l v. Arizona Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 581 (9th Cir. 1983); [*12] MGIC Indemnity Corp. v. Weisman, 803 F.2d 500, 504 (9th Cir. 1986); Beliveau v. Caras, 873 F.Supp. 1393, 1395 (C.D. Cal. 1995). However, under the "incorporation by reference" doctrine, the Court also may consider documents that are referenced extensively in the complaint and accepted by all parties as authentic, even if they are not physically attached to the complaint. In re Silicon Graphics, Inc. Securities Litigation, 183 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 1999). "Under the 'incorporation by reference' rule of this Circuit, a court may look beyond the pleadings without converting the Rule 12(b)(6) motion into one for summary judgment." Van Buskirk v. Cable News Network, Inc., 284 F.3d 977, 980 (9th Cir. 2002).

III. DISCUSSION

1. Motion to Dismiss

a. Claim I: Attempted Monopolization in Violation of the Sherman Act

KinderStart's first claim alleges attempted monopolization in two markets under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. SAC PP 207-08. KinderStart identifies these two markets as: (1) the "Search Market," which consists of search engine design, implementation, and usage [*13] within the United States; SAC P 34; and (2) the "Search Ad Market," which consists of a "universe of advertisers who seek and pay for online advertising [and who] target and reach Internet browsers and users of search engines." SAC P 38. Google allegedly participates in the Search Ad Market through the AdWords and AdSense programs, id., and derives at least ninety-eight percent of its total company revenue from search-related advertising. SAC P 43.

In order to make out a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must define the relevant market. Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997). The relevant market is "the field in which meaningful competition is said to exist." Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 1997). To prevail on such a claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition, (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose, (3) a dangerous probability of success and (4) causal antitrust injury. Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1477.

The Court concluded in its July [*14] 13th Order that KinderStart had failed to allege facts sufficient to support each of the four elements of an attempted monopolization claim. The Court also noted that KinderStart had not sufficiently described the markets relevant to its claim. The SAC suffers from essentially the same defects. To the extent that the Search Ad Market is severable from the Search Market, KinderStart does not have standing to bring a claim for attempted monopolization of the Search Ad market.

i. Relevant Market

Failure to allege adequately the relevant market is an appropriate ground for dismissal of a Sherman Act claim. Tanaka v. University of Southern California, 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001). "A 'market' is any grouping of sales whose sellers, if unified by a monopolist or a hypothetical cartel, would have market power in dealing with any group of buyers." Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995). The Supreme Court has explained that the relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to consumers. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481-82, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). [*15] In some instances, one brand of a product can constitute a separate market. Id. "The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Tanaka, 252 F.3d at 1063. The allegations of the SAC are insufficient to meet this standard.

KinderStart has failed to allege that the Search Market is a "grouping of sales." It does not claim that Google sells its search services, or that any other search provider does so. Rather, it states conclusorily that "[a]ny search engine must be free to the user because of past user experience and expectations with search engines and due to the preexisting governmental and technological policy of Internet freedom and Internet neutrality." SAC P 54. KinderStart cites no authority indicating that antitrust law concerns itself with competition in the provision of free services. Providing search functionality may lead to revenue from other sources, but KinderStart has not alleged that anyone pays Google to search. Thus, the Search Market is not a "market" for purposes of antitrust law.

Nor has KinderStart alleged adequately that the Search Ad Market is a [*16] relevant market. KinderStart argues that the Search Ad Market is distinct from other forms of advertising on the Internet and that it should be considered as such for purposes of antitrust analysis. However, there is no logical basis for distinguishing the Search Ad Market from the larger market for Internet advertising. Because a website may choose to advertise via search-based advertising or by posting advertisements independently of any search, search-based advertising is reasonably interchangeable with other forms of Internet advertising. The Search Ad Market thus is too narrow to constitute a relevant market.

KinderStart might have argued that the Search Market and the Search Ad Market combine to form one market for antitrust purposes. However, such a combined market, even if alleged, would suffer from the same lack of breadth that renders the Search Ad Market inadequate.

ii. Elements of Attempted Monopolization of the Search Market and the Search Ad Market

Because KinderStart has failed to plead a relevant market, its attempted monopolization claim is subject to dismissal. Its repeated failure to plead a relevant market, see July 13th Order 12, n.2, suggests strongly that [*17] further leave to amend the complaint would be futile. However, in order to inform the exercise of its discretion, the Court also has assessed the elements of attempted monopolization as currently pled. Based on this assessment, the Court concludes that further leave to amend is not warranted.

(1) Specific Intent to Monopolize

KinderStart argues that Google's conduct alone demonstrates the requisite intent to monopolize, pointing to the Supreme Court's dictum that "evidence that the conduct was not related to any apparent efficiency" can satisfy the requirement that an antitrust Plaintiff show predatory intent. Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 13 (citing Aspen Skiing

Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 608 n.39, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985)). [5] KinderStart makes three basic allegations regarding decisions allegedly made by Google that are not related to any apparent efficiency.

[*18] First, KinderStart alleges that Google removed from its index sites that it "unfairly and arbitrarily deemed [] in its sole discretion to be spam or marginal viewer content, . . . in order to redirect users and valuable search traffic to sites competing against such Websites." SAC P 63(a). However, it does not allege that Google engaged in this activity with an intent to gain a monopoly. It does not claim that such arbitrary conduct was part of an effort to drive KinderStart, an alleged competitor, out of the Search Market. Instead, KinderStart alleges that such arbitrary conduct pertained to an effort to direct traffic to third-party sites that competed with KinderStart. Nothing in the allegation refers to KinderStart's competition with Google.

Second, KinderStart alleges that Google terminated "the AdSense contracts of competitors as Class members relying upon internal and/or disclosed reasons on pretense and not related to economic sense or business justification." SAC P 62(c). It does not allege, however, that Google terminated its AdSense contract. Any injury thus was suffered by unnamed class members, not by KinderStart. Article III requires that a plaintiff identify [*19] a concrete injury-in-fact. Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 155, 110 S. Ct. 1717, 109 L. Ed. 2d 135 (1991). If KinderStart can allege no injury to itself, it cannot achieve standing by alleging the injury of unnamed class-members. Lierboe v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 350 F.3d 1018, 1022-23 (9th Cir. 2003). Because KinderStart does not have standing to bring a claim for termination of an AdSense contract, the Court may not consider such alleged contract terminations in determining whether KinderStart has alleged the requisite intent for an attempted monopolization claim.

Third, KinderStart alleges that:

> Google foregoes short-term profits by completely or effectively Blocking traffic out of Blocked sites of members of the Class which host AdSense ads, which thereby reduce Google's revenue from AdSense advertisers which would otherwise pay Google which in turn shares such revenues with AdSense hosting sites. On information and belief, Google is unable to produce any legitimate economic or business justification to unilaterally terminate the course of dealing with members of the Classes which used to be listed in the Google index but was [sic] completely or effectively [*20] Blocked. It is contrary to business or economic sense because the inclusion of Websites of such aggrieved Class members would otherwise yield greater search results and user traffic using the Engine, which thereby generates more AdSense revenue for both Websites and for Google.

SAC P 172. This allegation does not establish predatory intent because, as the Court explained in its July 13th Order, "KinderStart's allegations that Google removed KinderStart from search results and lowered its PageRank do not suffice to allege predatory conduct as opposed to legitimate competitive actions." July 13th Order 12.

Even assuming that KinderStart has alleged arbitrary actions that are unrelated to business efficiency, the alleged actions do not demonstrate Google's intent to monopolize the Search Market or the Search Ad Market. This pleading deficiency has persisted despite the specific direction given by the Court in its July 13th Order.

(2) Anti-Competitive Conduct

KinderStart makes extensive allegations in the SAC that it identifies as relating to "anticompetitive and exclusionary practices and conduct." See SAC PP 58-64. KinderStart also includes a section in the SAC entitled [*21] "Defendant as an Unfair Competitor," in which it makes a series of further allegations. SAC PP 65-82. KinderStart summarizes these allegations as follows:

> Defendant Google has engaged in predatory conduct and anticompetitive conduct directed toward achieving the objective of controlling prices and/or destroying competition in the relevant markets of the Search Market > and the Search Ad Market, including the following: (a) PageRank Deflation of competitors' Websites; (b) filing misleading statements with the SEC and state securities regulatory agencies about Search Results being produced and presented for viewing; (c) Blockage of competitors' Websites; (d) unfair and uncompetitive use of the PageRank patent in promoting and practicing it as the de facto standard on the Internet to degrade competitors' Websites, and/or failure to practice the PageRank patent in the disclosed preferred embodiment in a lawful manner; (e) claiming disclosure of PageRank processes and calculations as a trade secret to further advance its integrity and reliability when in fact its use and publication serves in certain instances as a weapon and pretense for unfair conduct and practices; (f) false [*22] advertising about the purported objectivity of Search Results with the Engine; (g) willful termination and reduction of Search Engine referrals and revenues to competitors' Websites by means of PageRank Deflation or termination of AdSense contracts without business justification; and (h) sudden, sharp price escalation of AdWords Advertisements with the use of LPQ [Landing Page Quality] and price discrimination among AdWords partners with the use of LPQ.

---

[5] This footnote references an antitrust textbook in which the author discusses situations in which the alleged antitrust violator has "overwhelming market [share], perhaps 80 or 90 percent."

SAC P 209. The Court concludes that these allegations do not state a claim for actionable exclusionary or anti-competitive conduct, either individually or collectively.

(a) PageRank Deflation and Blockage of Competitors' Websites

The Court previously has explained that "KinderStart's allegations that Google removed KinderStart from search results and lowered its PageRank do not suffice to allege predatory conduct as opposed to legitimate competitive actions." July 13th Order 12. KinderStart has not articulated a reason for the Court to alter this decision.

(b) Filing Misleading Statements with the SEC and False Advertising About the Objectivity of Search Results

KinderStart asserts that allegations of false advertising [*23] and false statements to the SEC establish a claim of anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct. However, it cites no authority indicating that the statements made to the SEC have special relevance to the antitrust inquiry. Accordingly, the Court assesses Google's alleged misrepresentations to the SEC in conjunction with KinderStart's allegations of false advertising as to the objectivity of Google's search engine, search results, and PageRanks.

The parties agree that KinderStart must allege facts that would overcome the presumption that any misrepresentation had a de minimus effect on competition. See American Prof'l Testing Service, Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal and Prof'l Publ'n, Inc., 108 F.3d 1147, 1152 (9th Cir. 1997). To meet this pleading burden, KinderStart must allege that the representations were (1) clearly false; (2) clearly material; (3) clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance; (4) made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter; (5) continued for prolonged periods; and (6) not readily susceptible to neutralization or other offset by rivals. Id. The SAC fails to meet at least two of these requirements. Principally, KinderStart [*24] fails to allege adequately that Google's representations are "clearly false." A statement by Google to the effect that its results are objective almost by definition cannot be "clearly false." Although Google has published information about manual manipulation of search results, see SAC P 153, a reasonable person could understand that such a statement is not in conflict with the limited, manual removal of what Google considers bad links, or other such practices. In fact, Google's statements about objectivity are more reasonably understood to pertain to Google's stated refusal to alter search results for compensation. See SAC P 121 (citing Google's S-1 Form, filed on April 29, 2004). In addition, KinderStart has not sufficiently alleged that Google deprived it of the ability to neutralize such statements or that it was otherwise unable to do so. [6]

[*25] Even viewing KinderStart's allegations in the light most favorable to KinderStart, any anticompetitive effect of Google's alleged false representations thus was de minimus. Moreover, KinderStart's allegations about false advertising lack the specificity and detail necessary to support a claim of anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct.

(c) Unfair and Uncompetitive Use of the PageRank Patent

---

[6] The Court expresses no opinion as to the adequacy of KinderStart's pleading of the other four requirements for overcoming the de minimus presumption.

KinderStart argues that Google's patent and copyrights cannot shield it from liability. Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 14. However, it alleges no facts indicating that Google used its patent in an anticompetitive manner. Instead, it merely restates its prior conclusory assertions that Google has behaved in an anti-competitive manner. As discussed above, these assertions are insufficient to state a claim for attempted monopolization.

(d) Claiming PageRank Processes and Calculations as a Trade Secret

KinderStart cites no authority holding that a company's claim of trade secret protection for the processes and calculations of a central aspect of the service it provides may constitute anticompetitive or exclusionary behavior. KinderStart does not argue this point in its opposition to the motion [*26] to dismiss.

(e) Termination of Search Engine Referrals and Revenues

KinderStart alleges conclusorily that Google willfully terminated and reduced Search Engine referrals and revenues to competitors' Websites by means of PageRank Deflation or termination of AdSense contracts without business justification. SAC P 209(g). It does not allege, however, that Google breached its AdSense contract with KinderStart. For the reasons discussed in the July 13th Order, PageRank Deflation does not amount to anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct. See July 13th Order 12. Because it does not allege a breach of its own contract with Google, KinderStart lacks standing to bring the latter claim.

(f) Price Manipulation

KinderStart claims that Google uses its LPQ website ranking system to charge exorbitant prices and also to discriminate among purchasers. This assertion is insufficient to support a claim of anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct for at least four reasons. First, because it does not allege an injury to itself as a result of the alleged conduct, KinderStart lacks standing to assert this claim. Second, charging high prices, by itself, does not constitute anticompetitive or exclusionary [*27] behavior. See Verizon Communs., Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). Third, absent predatory pricing, discriminatory pricing does not threaten competition. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 340, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). Finally, KinderStart fails to allege the nature of Google's anticompetitive conduct with any specificity. [7]

For the foregoing reasons, each of KinderStart's allegations is insufficient to establish anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct. The Court noted in order dismissing the FAC that KinderStart had failed to "allege facts sufficient to support a claim of anti-competitive conduct, such as denial of access to an essential facility or refusal-to-deal." July 13th Order 12. Despite the Court's clear direction in the July 13th Order, KinderStart still has [*28] failed to allege an adequate factual basis for its claim. [8]

(3) Dangerous Probability of Achievement of Monopoly Power in the Relevant Market

KinderStart alleges that Google has a dominant market share in both the Search Market and the Search Ad Market:

> [A]s of July 2006, Defendant Google has garnered in excess of 55% market share of all closed and open access search engine use on a combined basis within the Search Market and in excess of 75% market share of all open access search engine use within the Search Market.

SAC P 36.

> Within the Search Ad Market, Defendant Google carries a market share of at least 75% of the relevant market based on total revenues among advertisers in the U.S., in which Google's AdWords and AdSense programs dominate.

SAC P 39.

---

[7] The only specific allegation about Google's pricing policy or conduct relates to its creation of an auction system to allow advertisers to bid to place their advertisements. SAC P 64(a).

[8] KinderStart makes conclusory allegations that Google has denied access to an essential facility, SAC PP 219-21, and has refused to deal, SAC P 227, but it makes insufficient factual allegations to support such claims.

> In [*29] each of the Search Market and the Search Ad Market, Defendant Google has established and retains no less than 50% market share of the relevant markets. Such market shares demonstrate that Google has a dangerous probability of success in monopolization of such markets.

SAC P 211. [9] However, "[a] mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the predator's high price." American Professional Testing Service, 108 F.3d at 1154. KinderStart alleges that Google's two largest competitors, Yahoo and Microsoft, are losing share of the relevant markets; SAC P 48; that massive investment requirements and entrenched buyer preferences create significant barriers to entry to the relevant markets; SAC P 53-54; and that Google's wealth of user data gives them great advantages over any new online advertising program or search engine. SAC P 57. Given these allegations, the Court concludes that, were KinderStart able to identify [*30] a relevant market for antitrust purposes, it might be able to allege a dangerous probability of achievement of monopoly power. However, because KinderStart is unable to allege other essential elements of its claim, the Court need not resolve this question.

(4) Causal Antitrust Injury

Because KinderStart brings suit under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, it must allege causal antitrust injury. Rebel Oil Co, 51 F.3d at 1433. The Rebel Oil court explained:

> Under [*31] Section 4, private plaintiffs can be compensated only for injuries that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. To show antitrust injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition. If the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury, even if the defendant's conduct is illegal per se.

Id. (citations omitted) (citing Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum, Inc., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990)). The court added: "Of course, conduct that eliminates rivals reduces competition. But reduction of competition does not invoke the Sherman Act until it harms consumer welfare." Id. This Court concludes, as it did in dismissing the FAC, see July 13th Order 12, that KinderStart still has not alleged a sufficient connection between the harms allegedly done to it by Google through PageRank and Blockage [10] and any harm to competition or consumers.

[*32] Because KinderStart has failed, despite several opportunities to do so and specific direction from the Court, to identify a relevant market for antitrust purposes, or to allege specific intent to monopolize, anticompetitive conduct, or causal antitrust injury, the Court concludes that further leave to amend the complaint would be futile. Accordingly, the attempted monopolization claim will be dismissed without leave to amend.

b. Claim II: Monopolization in Violation of the Sherman Act

KinderStart next asserts a claim for monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, the elements of which are: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant submarket, (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, and (3) causal antitrust injury. Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1475. As with attempted monopolization, a plaintiff claiming monopolization first must define the relevant market. Id. KinderStart alleges monopolization of two markets: the Search Market and the Search Ad Market. As discussed above, KinderStart

---

[9] See also SAC P 37 ("When AOL's market share based on the Engine in the Search Market is combined with Google's native market share derived from its own website, the Engine of Google is used in excess of 60% of all search queries among users within the Search Market in the U.S."); SAC P 41 ("Dangerous probability of success in monopolizing the two relevant and related markets exists because Google' [sic] market shares is steadily rising and is in each market upward of 60% or more.").

[10] In contrast, KinderStart does not have standing to complain of harms done to third parties.

would not have standing to assert a claim for monopolization of the Search Ad Market, even if it could distinguish that [*33] market from the Search Market.

i. Relevant Market

KinderStart alleges the same relevant markets as it did in its claim for attempted monopolization. For the reasons discussed previously, the Court concludes that KinderStart has failed to allege a relevant market for the purposes of its monopolization claim. As discussed above, KinderStart's repeated failure to allege a relevant market supports dismissal without leave to amend. In the interest of completeness, the Court nonetheless will address the adequacy of KinderStart's pleading with respect to the remaining elements of the monopolization claim.

ii. Elements of a Monopolization Claim

(1) Possession of Monopoly Power

KinderStart alleges that Google has monopoly power over the Search Market and the Search Ad Market, of which it controls 50% and 65%, respectively. SAC PP 216-17. The Supreme Court has explained that monopoly power exists where a company has the power to control prices or exclude competition. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). Although it argues in its opposition brief that Google has such power, Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 15, KinderStart does not identify [*34] any allegations to that effect in the SAC.

KinderStart does allege that Google has control over an essential facility within the market. SAC P 219-21. The Court explained in the July 13th Order that a facility is "essential" only if control of the facility carries with it the power to eliminate competition in the downstream market. July 13th Order 14 (citing Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 544 (9th Cir. 1991); see also id. at 546 ("When a firm's power to exclude rivals from a facility gives the firm the power to eliminate competition in a market downstream from the facility, and the firm excludes at least some of its competitors, the danger that the firm will monopolize the downstream market is clear. In this circumstance, a finding of monopolization, or at least attempted monopolization, is appropriate, and there is little need to engage in the usual lengthy analysis of factors such as intent."). However, while KinderStart claims in its opposition brief that Google has the power to eliminate competition in the downstream market, it does not allege facts supporting its argument in the SAC. [11]

[*35] KinderStart also argues that Google has violated Section 2 under the "refusal to deal" doctrine as set forth in Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985). [12] The Court rejected this argument in its dismissal of the FAC, and KinderStart has made no additional factual allegations that would affect the Court's analysis. July 13th Order 14-15.

(2) Willful Acquisition or Maintenance of that Power

KinderStart alleges that Google willfully acquired and maintained its monopoly power. SAC PP 218, 223-24, 232-33. Google does not argue the insufficiency of these allegations in its motion or reply.

(3) Causal Antitrust Injury

---

[11] The most relevant allegation in the SAC asserts: "Defendant, through the maintenance, exercise and abuse of monopoly power, have [sic] forced Class I and Class II Plaintiffs to either surrender their business or to expend time and resources to find another means to secure Web traffic and reach and serve consumers." SAC P 229. To the extent that Plaintiffs may still "expend time and resources to find another means to secure Web traffic and reach and serve consumers," Google does not have the power to eliminate downstream competition. Google has no obligation to aid its alleged competitors, and the Court cannot relieve these alleged competitors of the effort required to compete in an apparently lucrative market.

[12] KinderStart makes this argument following its discussion of Google's alleged monopoly power. To the extent that it contributes to KinderStart's overall claims for attempted monopolization and monopolization, it provides no support for other parts of KinderStart's argument, such as its argument that Google engaged in exclusionary conduct.

KinderStart's [*36] pleading burden with respect to a causal antitrust injury in a monopolization claim is the same as it is with respect to an attempted monopolization claim. As discussed above, the Court concludes that even if KinderStart could allege a relevant market, its showing of antitrust injury is insufficient.

c. Claim III: False Representations in Violation of the Lanham Act

KinderStart next asserts a claim for false representations in violation of the Lanham Act. Google moves to strike this claim on the ground that it is beyond the scope of amendments permitted by the July 13th Order. Motion to Strike 6-8. [13] The July 13th Order neither expressly permitted or prohibited KinderStart from adding claims arising from the facts alleged in the FAC. While it would have been better practice for KinderStart to seek leave to add such additional claims, the Court is not required to strike such claims out of hand. Instead, the Court will exercise its discretion and assess the strength of the claim as it currently stands, in order to determine whether it should permit further amendment of the SAC.

[*37] The relevant section of the Lanham Act provides as follows:

> (1) Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which-- . . .
>
> > (B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, > shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.
>

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a).

Google argues that KinderStart lacks standing to bring an action under the Lanham Act on the basis of Google's alleged misrepresentations about the objectivity of its search results. To establish standing pursuant to the false advertising prong of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B), a plaintiff must show: "(1) a commercial injury based upon a misrepresentation about a product; and (2) that the [*38] injury is 'competitive,' or harmful to the plaintiff's ability to compete with the defendant." Jack Russell Terrier Network of Northern Ca. v. American Kennel Club, 407 F.3d 1027, 1037 (9th Cir. 2005). KinderStart does not allege an injury to itself from the misrepresentation as such; rather it alleges that is has been injured by Google's alleged manipulation of its allegedly objective search results. KinderStart thus lacks standing to bring a "blockage" claim under the false advertising prong of the Lanham Act.

Moreover, KinderStart has no cognizable claim relating to PageRank, because any misrepresentations made through PageRank are not made "in commercial advertising and promotion." The Ninth Circuit has held that "[w]hile the representations need not be made in a 'classic advertising campaign,' but may consist instead of more informal types of 'promotion,' the representations [] must be disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constituted 'advertising' or 'promotion' within that industry." Coastal Abstract Serv., Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 173 F.3d 725, 735 (9th Cir. 1999). [14] PageRank is neither a "classic advertising [*39] campaign," nor a "more informal type[] of promotion." Even if Google had attempted "to dilute Google's claimed objectivity with a factual assertion to reroute the public's beliefs and understanding of search results," Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 20, such an attempt would not satisfy the standard articulated by the Ninth Circuit.

d. Claim IV: Violation of Free Speech Rights Under the United States and California Constitutions

i. Free Speech Rights Under the United States Constitution

---

[13] The Court addresses Google's motion to strike the entire SAC below.

[14] The Ninth Circuit cited Gordon & Breach Science Publishers v. American Inst. of Physics, 859 F.Supp. 1521 (S.D.N.Y.1994), adopted the test it set forth, and applied it to the case before it.

KinderStart alleges that Google has violated its rights under the Free Speech Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. See U.S. Const. amend. I. (providing that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech."). Demonstration of state action is "a necessary threshold" [*40] that a plaintiff must cross before a Court can consider whether a plaintiff's First Amendment rights have been infringed. George v. Furlough, 91 F.3d 1227, 1230 (9th Cir. 1996). In the case of private-party defendants, a plaintiff must show that "the private parties' infringement somehow constitutes state action." Id. at 1229 (citing Dworkin v. Hustler Magazine, 867 F.2d 1188, 1200 (9th Cir. 1989)). The Supreme Court has articulated four different approaches by which to identify state action in different contexts: (1) public function; (2) joint action; (3) governmental compulsion or coercion; and (4) governmental nexus. George v. Pacific-CSC Work Furlough, 91 F.3d 1227, 1230-32 (citing Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 939, 102 S. Ct. 2744, 73 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1982)). The Ninth Circuit also has applied the "symbiotic relationship" test to identify state action. See, e.g., Brunette v. Humane Society of Ventura County, 294 F.3d 1205, 1213 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Burton v. Wilmington, 365 U.S. 715, 81 S. Ct. 856, 6 L. Ed. 2d 45 (1961)). "Satisfaction of any one test is sufficient to find state action, so long as no countervailing [*41] factor exists." Kirtley v. Rainey, 326 F.3d 1088, 1092 (9th Cir. 2003) (citations omitted).

KinderStart argues that First Amendment protections apply in the instant action because (1) there is a close nexus between or entwinement of Google and state agencies; (2) a symbiotic relationship exists between Google and state agencies; and (3) Google's search engine is a public forum. [15] For the reasons discussed below, the Court concludes that KinderStart has not sufficiently alleged state action under any of these theories. [16]

[*42] (1) Nexus/Entwinement

"[T]he nexus test asks whether 'there is a such a close nexus between the State and the challenged action that the seemingly private behavior may be fairly treated as that of the State itself.'" Kirtley, 326 F.3d at 1094-95 (citing Brentwood Academy v. Tennessee Secondary School Athletic Ass'n, 531 U.S. 288, 295, 121 S. Ct. 924, 148 L. Ed. 2d 807 (2001)) (emphasis added). The actions that form the basis of the SAC relate to the alleged manipulation of search results and PageRanks. See, e.g., SAC PP 11-12, 174, 179. The actions alleged by KinderStart as a basis for a finding of state action relate to Google's digital library projects. See, e.g., id. PP 254-55. These two sets of actions are distinct. KinderStart cannot establish state action on the basis of actions that are peripheral to the claims articulated in the SAC. KinderStart has alleged no facts suggesting that a close nexus existed between Google and any state entity in the creation or execution of Google's alleged policy of favoring some websites over others in the results of a web search. [17] Accordingly, the nexus or entwinement test does not support a finding of state action in the present [*43] case.

(2) Symbiotic Relationship

---

[15] KinderStart does not explain how its discussion of Google as a public forum connects with its state actor argument. See Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 22-25. KinderStart provides no authority indicating that success on its public forum arguments would render the state action inquiry unnecessary. Accordingly, the Court will consider the arguments regarding the public forum to the extent that they contribute to the dispositive issue in this claim: the presence of state action.

[16] The Court explained in the July 13th Order that KinderStart had not met the public function, joint action or governmental compulsion/coercion tests. KinderStart has added no allegations in the SAC that would allow the Court to find state action on any of these bases. To the extent that KinderStart reasserts facts in the SAC that pertain to the public function, joint action, or government coercion/compulsion tests for state action, see SAC PP 110, 253, 255, the Court reaffirms its earlier conclusion that KinderStart's pleading is insufficient to meet any of the applicable tests.

[17] Moreover, even if KinderStart had complained of actions associated with Google's relationship with state universities, the level of entwinement might not be sufficient to establish state action. In Brentwood, eighty-four percent of an ostensibly private association's members were public schools which "largely provided for the Association's financial support" and whose officials, acting in their official capacity, "overwhelmingly perform[ed] all but the purely ministerial acts by which the Association exist[ed] and function[ed] in practical terms." Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 299. In addition, the state appointed members to the association's governing body, and association employees participated in the state retirement system. Id. at 300. KinderStart's allegations fall far short of the level of "entwinement" with respect to finances, organization and personnel described in Brentwood.

"[I]f a private entity . . . confers significant [*44] financial benefits indispensable to the government's 'financial success,' then a symbiotic relationship may exist." Brunette, 294 F.3d at 1213. Such a relationship may be sufficient to establish state action. Id. "In a symbiotic relationship the government has 'so far insinuated itself into a position of interdependence (with a private entity) that it must be recognized as a joint participant in the challenged activity.'" Id. (citing Burton, 365 U.S. at 725) (emphasis added). Here, Kinderstart does not allege the existence of a symbiotic relationship between Google and a government with respect to the activities that form the basis of the SAC. KinderStart only alleges that a symbiotic relationship exists with respect to Google's digital library projects. See SAC PP 254-55.

(3) Public Forum

KinderStart argues that the Google search engine "is now a public forum." Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 25. KinderStart alleges in the SAC that:

> Anyone with Internet access can go to Defendant's own website or any number of thousands of other Websites having a 'Google Search Box' as provided by Google to use the Engine without payment [*45] or charge. . . . Google has willfully dedicated the Engine for public use.

SAC P 91.

> Defendant Google created and now manages, with the largest search engine in history, a freely accessible, nationwide public forum for the exchange and flow of Speech Content by virtue of the Engine. Defendant Google has intentionally, willfully and openly dedicated the Engine for public use and public benefit. Defendant Google, by and through the Engine, is a speech intermediary.

SAC P 251.

These allegations repeat much of what the Court found insufficient in dismissing the FAC. See July 13th Order 8-9. For example, KinderStart alleged in the FAC that Google is a "speech intermediary." FAC P 104. KinderStart now argues that access to speech content on the Internet through the Google search engine warrants treatment of the search engine as a public forum, that KinderStart's goal of gaining further exposure of its speech requires as much, and that Google's search engine also should be treated as a public forum because third-party speech emanates from the return of search results. None of these arguments has merit.

KinderStart cites no authority suggesting that a search [*46] engine is a public forum for speech simply because it allows consumers to find speech on the Internet. The principal case upon which KinderStart relies, Cornelius v. NAACP, 473 U.S. 788, 800, 105 S. Ct. 3439, 87 L. Ed. 2d 567 (1985), does not hold that a private space may be transformed into a public forum merely because it is used for speech. Rather, the Supreme Court explained that the manner in which a forum is used is relevant to the classification of that forum for First Amendment purposes. Nor does KinderStart's argument find support in Currier v. Potter, 379 F.3d 716, 722 (9th Cir. 2004) (concluding that the general delivery service, not the mail system as whole, is the forum at issue in a case where it was "axiomatic" that the First Amendment was implicated). Finally, KinderStart provides little argument or authority suggesting that the emanation of third-party speech from a search engine somehow transforms that privately-owned entity into a public forum. [18]

[*47] KinderStart also has failed to address the contradiction in its pleadings noted by the Court in the July 13th Order. As the Court observed,

> KinderStart's argument that "[t]he sole function and purpose of the [Google] search engine is to promote and realize 24-7 speech and communication, openly and freely'" is inconsistent with its allegation that "Defendant

[18] KinderStart cites National A-1 Advertising, Inc. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 121 F.Supp.2d 156, 179 (D. N.H. 2000), for the proposition that "third party speech emanates through the return of a 'hit' by a search engine." This appears to be a restatement of its first argument that a search engine is a public forum for speech because it allows web-users to access speech. However, National A-1 Advertising provides minimal support for KinderStart's argument. The case pertains to the registration of domain names and does not address the issues presented in this case.

> Google derives at least 98% of its total company revenues from [] search-driven advertising, which exceeded $ 3.1 billion for the year ended December 31, 2004.

July 13th Order 9 (citations omitted). KinderStart nonetheless continues to allege that Google received 98% of its revenues in 2004 from search-driven advertising. To the extent that KinderStart has amended its allegations with respect to Google's commercial purpose, it has deemphasized speech, stating: "The Engine operates 24-7 to allow any user to perform a search for Websites and Web Content and viewing and receiving speech and information of all forms." SAC P 91. KinderStart has not alleged facts tending to show that Google has dedicated its search engine for public use as a forum for speech.

ii. Free Speech Rights Under the California [*48] Constitution

The California Supreme Court has held that a "protective provision more definitive and inclusive than the First Amendment is contained in [California's] constitutional guarantee of the right of free speech and press." Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Ctr., 23 Cal.3d 899, 908, 153 Cal. Rptr. 854, 592 P.2d 341 (1979) (citation omitted), aff'd sub. nom. PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 78, 100 S. Ct. 2035, 64 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1980). "[S]ections 2 and 3 of article I of the California Constitution protect speech and petitioning, reasonably exercised, in shopping centers even when the centers are privately owned." Pruneyard Shopping Ctr., 23 Cal.3d at 910. In Trader Joe's Co. v. Progressive Campaigns, 73 Cal.App.4th 425, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 442 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999), the California Court of Appeal, applying Pruneyard, held that a trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that a stand-alone grocery store had the right to exclude petitioners. The Trader Joe's court explained that > [Pruneyard] did not hold that the free speech and petitioning activity can be exercised only at large shopping centers. Nor did it hold that such activities can be exercised on any [*49] property except for individual residences and modest retail establishments. Rather, in resolving the specific dispute before it, the court developed a balancing test which can be applied to other situations. Pruneyard instructs us to balance the competing interests of the property owner and of the society with respect to the particular property or type of property at issue to determine whether there is a state constitutional right to engage in the challenged activity.

Id. at 433. The court held that because Trader Joe's, unlike the shopping center in Pruneyard, neither invited nor provided facilities for the public to meet friends, eat, rest, be entertained or otherwise congregate, it revealed a stronger interest in maintaining exclusive control, and that the "single structure, single-use store" was "not a public meeting place and society has no special interest in using it as such." Id.

A three-justice plurality of the California Supreme Court subsequently clarified the relationship between California's free speech clause and private property in ruling that the California Constitution did not guarantee petitioners access to an urban apartment [*50] complex:

> [W]e conclude that the actions of a private property owner constitute state action for purposes of California's free speech clause only if the property is freely and openly accessible to the public. By establishing this threshold requirement for establishing state action, we largely follow the Court of Appeal decisions construing [Pruneyard]. For example, our Courts of Appeal have consistently held that privately owned medical centers and their parking lots are not functionally equivalent to a traditional public forum for purposes of California's free speech clause because, among other things, they are not freely open to the public.

Golden Gateway Ctr. v. Golden Gateway Tenants Assn., 26 Cal.4th 1013, 1033, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 336, 29 P.3d 797 (2001) (plurality opinion). Two years later, the California Court of Appeal considered the question of what constituted a public forum (though not the question of state action) in light of Golden Gateway:

> Nothing in Golden Gateway can be interpreted to support the conclusion that any large business establishment is a public forum for expressive activity simply because it is 'freely and openly accessible to the public. [*51] ' . . . Rather, the test appears to remain whether, considering the nature and circumstances of the private property, it has become the 'functional equivalent of a traditional public forum.'

Albertson's, Inc. v. Young, 107 Cal.App.4th 106, 117-18, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 721 (Cal. Ct. App. 2003) (holding that the privately-owned sidewalk outside a grocery store at a shopping center was not a public forum).

This Court explained in its July 13th Order that KinderStart had not alleged sufficiently that users' freedom to use the Google search engine extends to the realm of speech. July 13th Order 10. The Court noted that "[n]owhere does KinderStart allege that Google has invited the public to speak through Google's search engine, either by enabling public editing of results/rankings or by promising that every website created by the public will be indexed, ranked, and displayed." Id. KinderStart alleges that Google "claims that it indexes every site it locates on the Internet," SAC P 54, but it also alleges that Google publicly acknowledges that it stops indexing pages in some circumstances. SAC P 151. As in the FAC, KinderStart does not suggest that the public has the ability to [*52] edit rankings or search results. Thus, KinderStart fails to allege facts tending to show that Google's search engine, encompassing its index, web search form, Results Pages and PageRank scores, is the "functional equivalent of a traditional public forum." See Albertson's, 107 Cal.App.4th at 117-18.

e. Claim V: Unfair Competition in Violation of California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200 et seq.

KinderStart next claims that Google has violated California Business and Professions Code § 17200, which prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. According to KinderStart, "Defendant Google has engaged in, and continues to engage in, [] unfair competition. Defendant's acts and practices are wrongful, arbitrary, without reasonable business or commercial justification, unethical, oppressive, and have caused substantial harm and injury to Plaintiff KSC . . . ." SAC P 264. KinderStart alleges that Google's unlawful business practices include PageRank deflation [*53] of competitors' websites, filing misleading statements with the SEC, blockage of competitors' websites, unfair and uncompetitive use of the PageRank patent, claiming PageRank processes as a trade secret, false advertising about the purported objectivity of the search engine, wilful termination and reduction of referrals to competitor sites, and sudden, sharp price escalation. Id. P 266. KinderStart alleges that it "has suffered irreparable injury in fact and have [sic] lost money, property, value, business opportunities as a result of Defendant Google's actions and practices and bring this cause of action on behalf of itself and on behalf of all other similarly situated and injured [class members]." Id. P 268. KinderStart also alleges that the AdSense agreement deceives the public into expecting that it can benefit by participating in the program. Id. P 265.

The Court dismissed the Section 17200 claim in the FAC on the grounds that KinderStart had alleged no facts to support its conclusory allegations and that KinderStart had not adequately pled a violation of the antitrust laws. July 13th Order 17. Both inadequacies remain in the SAC.

First, Kinderstart still fails [*54] to identify specific terms of the AdSense agreement that are deceptive and does not indicate how the agreement as a whole is deceptive. Nor has KinderStart alleged facts in the SAC suggesting that the public would expect that participation in the program would prevent a participant's removal from Results Pages or devaluation of a participant's PageRank. Accordingly, KinderStart has failed to allege a deceptive business practice.

Second, as the Court explained in its July 13th Order, "[w]hen a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word 'unfair' in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy of spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 186-87, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). In light of the insufficiency of KinderStart's claims for attempted monopolization and monopolization, these claims cannot form the basis of a Section 17200 claim.

Because Kinderstart [*55] has failed to plead sufficient facts to allege a deceptive business practice, and because the Court will dismiss the antitrust claims in the SAC without leave to amend, the Court also will dismiss the Section 17200 claim without leave to amend. In light of this disposition, the Court does not reach Google's alternative argument that KinderStart has failed to identify a redressable injury that would confer standing under Article III or California's Proposition 64. See Motion to Dismiss 33-35.

f. Claim VI: Defamation and Libel

KinderStart asserts a claim for defamation and libel against Google based on Google's public presentation of a PageRank of '0' for KinderStart.com. "The tort of defamation exists whenever a false and unprivileged statement which has a natural tendency to injure or which causes special damage is communicated to one or more persons who understand its defamatory meaning and its application to the injured party." Jackson v. Paramount Pictures Corp., 68 Cal.App.4th 10, 26, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998) (citation omitted). To prevail on these claims, KinderStart must allege a provably false statement. See Edwards v. Hall, 234 Cal.App.3d 886, 901-03, 285 Cal. Rptr. 810 (Cal. Ct. App. 1991). [*56]

The Court dismissed the defamation and libel claim in the FAC on the basis that KinderStart had failed to explain how Google caused injury to it by a provably false statement about the output of Google's algorithm regarding KinderStart.com, as distinguished from an unfavorable opinion about KinderStart.com's importance. The Court noted that the FAC included only the conclusory assertion that Google's actions have "cause[d] irreparable harm and damage to the goodwill, value and revenue-generating capabilities of KinderStart KSC's Website . . . ." July 13th Order 22 (citing FAC P 170).

KinderStart now alleges:

> 275. The statements of PageRank are false because Plaintiff's site KS.com and those sites of members of Class III, in spite of Defendant Google's wrongful conduct, retain Website Content and remain hyperlinked to other sites throughout the Internet, and continue to have relevance to users. Further, a 0-PR for any Website is mathematically impossible within the normal operation of the algorithm within the Engine.
>
> 276. Defendant Google holds out in public PageRank as an opinion of the value of a given Website of Class III members but the user reliably and reasonably [*57] believes that the numerical figure presented with PageRank is based on the application and embodiment of an issued U.S. patent and determined by objective methods, with one or more computer algorithms.
>
> . . .
>
> 278. Defendant Google has failed to disclose to the user and the public the methodology, operation and basis for a PageRank figure of a Website and has repeatedly overridden and substituted the normal, computer-determined PageRank figures with its standard methodology with a human-determined value below the calculated figure produced by the computer algorithm, in some cases all the way down to 0-PR.
>
> . . .
>
> 281. Defendant Google's defamatory and libelous statements using PageRank Deflation of KS.com and those sites of members of Class III to artificially low figures placed them from time to time temporarily and permanently inside Google-designated "bad neighborhoods" and directly and proximately caused a loss of business and revenues whereby prospective and actual business partners and viewers of such deranked sites stop or refrain from doing business or from visiting and engaging with such sites.

SAC P 275-76, 278, 281. The core of these allegations seems to be that [*58] KinderStart was harmed as a result of a false statement by Google that Google had determined objectively that the KinderStart website was not worth visiting, when in fact Google objectively had determined the opposite. However, the allegations are vague and ambiguous, and KinderStart makes only general claims as to the type of injury it allegedly suffered. While the defect conceivably could be cured by amendment, in this instance further leave to amend is inappropriate because materials properly before the Court under the incorporation-by-reference doctrine, see In re Silicon Graphics, Inc. Securities Litigation, 183 F.3d 970, 986 (9th Cir. 1999), establish that Google in fact does not represent that PageRank is a purely objective process free from human involvement. In addition, KinderStart still has failed to identify a provably false statement, and Google is entitled to immunity under the common interest privilege.

KinderStart alleges that the public reasonably interprets PageRank as an objective statement. SAC P 276. According to KinderStart, PageRanks "are presented as objective facts or opinions based on provably true or false facts, and are reasonably understood [*59] by those to whom publications are made as objective facts and opinions based on provably true or false facts." SAC P 279. KinderStart asserts that Google has made a series of statements about the objectivity of its search results and the absence of human manipulation from these search results. SAC P 116-29. KinderStart also alleges that Google represents that in order to provide users with "thorough and unbiased search results," it will stop indexing pages "only at the request of the webmaster who's responsible for the pages, when it's spamming our index, or as required by law." SAC P 151 (emphasis in original). KinderStart does not allege that Google has made specific statements about the objectivity of its PageRank tool, other than to say that Google describes PageRank as explaining "how Google's algorithms assess the importance of the page [a web user is] viewing." SAC P 140. It alleges that PageRank "is a mathematically-generated product of measuring and assessing the quantity and depth of all the hyperlinks on the Web that tie into a PageRanked Website, under programmatic determination by Defendant Google." SAC P 141. It also represents that Google has stated that it will [*60] remove a website from its index if "it didn't conform with the quality standards necessary to assign accurate PageRank." SAC P 153.

These factual allegations do not tend to prove that Google ever has represented that PageRank is objective and free from human manipulation. Google's discussion of objectivity in its April 29, 2004, S-1 form, which properly may be incorporated by reference here, indicates that the objectivity to which Google refers is the absence of paid influence in its search results. See SAC P 121 ("Objectivity. We believe it is very important that the results users get from Google are produced with only their interests in mind. We do not accept money for search result ranking or inclusion. We do accept fees for advertising, but it does not influence how we generate our search results."). KinderStart's allegation that PageRank is subject to "programmatic determination" actually undermines its claim that Google represents PageRank as free from human manipulation. The term "programmatic determination" necessarily implies human inputs that define the parameters of the program. KinderStart's own allegations are inconsistent with a claim that PageRank is an independently-discoverable [*61] value free from programmatic manipulation. Moreover, KinderStart itself alleges that Google represents that it will remove a website from its index "if it didn't conform with the quality standards necessary to assign accurate PageRank." SAC P 153. KinderStart does not seriously dispute that such a statement is equivalent to a statement that Google will assign a PageRank of zero if a website does not meet Google's quality guidelines.

KinderStart's argument that it is mathematically impossible to assign a PageRank of zero presumes that Google in some way has represented that PageRank is a purely objective measure. As discussed above, PageRank is a creature of Google's invention and does not constitute an independently-discoverable value. In fact, Google might choose to assign PageRanks randomly, whether as whole numbers or with many decimal places, but this would not create "incorrect" PageRanks.

The Court noted in the July 13th Order that the question of whether a reasonable person might consider PageRank a matter of opinion or a statement of fact might not be resolvable at the pleading stage. July 13th Order 21. The Court noted that KinderStart's position would be bolstered by evidence [*62] that Google actually had represented that PageRank is "objective." Id. Despite this express direction from the Court, KinderStart has not alleged any additional facts sufficient to support its assertions. To the contrary, KinderStart has alleged that "Google holds out in public PageRank as an opinion of the value of a given Website," and that users reasonably believe that PageRank is objectively determined. SAC P 276. KinderStart's apparent acknowledgment that Google itself holds out PageRank as an opinion undermines any claim that Google has made a provably false statement concerning KinderStart's PageRank.

Google also asserts correctly that KinderStart fails to allege malice and that any statement by Google, even if provably false, thus is subject to California's common interest privilege and right of fair comment. Motion to Dismiss 26. KinderStart argues that its pleading gives Google fair notice that malice is claimed. Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 33. However, because the SAC does not indicate which specific actions by Google demonstrate malice toward KinderStart, KinderStart has not alleged malice sufficiently. Although malice may be proved by legitimate inferences, [*63] Burnett v. National Enquirer, Inc., 144 Cal.App.3d 991, 1007-08, 193 Cal. Rptr. 206 (Cal. Ct. App. 1993), it still must be alleged in a discernible manner. The two sets of allegations identified by KinderStart as bases for inferring malice are inadequate. See Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 34 (citing SAC P 58(d); SAC PP 144-45). [19] Neither alleges facts with the required degree of specificity. One does not even appear among the allegations pertaining to defamation, see SAC P 58(d) (anticompetitive behavior), and the other does not refer to KinderStart. See SAC PP 144-45. Because it concludes that the common interest privilege bars the instant defamation action, the Court need not decide whether the right of fair comment also applies.

[19] The term "malice" does not appear in the SAC.

Cal. Civil Code § 47(c) provides that a communication is privileged when made

> [i]n a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, (1) by one who is also interested, or (2) [*64] by one who stands in such a relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication to be innocent, or (3) who is requested by the person interested to give the information.

Google argues that any statement it makes through the PageRank feature of its toolbar is privileged as a communication by a person "who is requested by the person interested to give the information." Motion to Dismiss 27-28. On September 22, 2006, Google provided the Court with a printout explaining the proactive steps that a user must take to solicit a PageRank. Volker Decl. Exh. B [20]. In order to receive PageRank information, a user must download and install the toolbar, activate the PageRank feature, navigate to a particular website, and then rest the cursor over the PR icon on the toolbar. Id. The Court concludes that such actions constitute a request for information within the meaning of Cal. Civ. Code § 47(c). The Court also concludes that KinderStart has not alleged actions that amount to "excessive publication, [] a publication of defamatory matter for an improper purpose, or [defamation] beyond the group interest. [*65] " Brewer v. Second Baptist Church, 32 Cal.2d 791, 797, 197 P.2d 713 (1948). [21] The Brewer limitations on the scope of publication do not apply in the instant action, in which the publication is limited to the PageRank shown when an individual user visits the website.

[*66] g. Google's Assertion of Immunity from Suit

Google argues that it is immune from all claims asserted by KinderStart in the SAC both under general First Amendment principles and under the Communications Decency Act, 47 U.S.C. § 230(c)(2)(A). However, because the Court will grant the motion to dismiss on other grounds, the Court need not address these arguments.

2. Special Motion Pursuant to the California "Anti-SLAPP" Statute

Google has filed a special motion to strike pursuant to California's "anti-SLAPP" Statute, Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. In particular, Google moves to strike Count Four of the SAC, which alleges that Google has infringed KinderStart's freedom of speech under the United States and California Constitutions. Google also moves to strike Count Nine of the FAC, which alleges Google's negligent interference with KinderStart's prospective economic advantage. [22] Google seeks attorney's fees pursuant to the statute.

[*67] The "anti-SLAPP" staute provides that:

> A cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States of California Constitution in connection with a public issue shall be subject to a special motion to strike, unless the court determines that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim.

Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)(1). Actions that qualify for the remedy afforded by this statute include:

---

[20] Google requests judicial notice of this printout and other web-page printouts. The Court will grant this request.

[21] "For this conditional privilege extends to false statements of fact, although the occasion may be abused and the protection of the privilege lost, by the publisher's lack of belief, or of reasonable grounds for belief, in the truth of the defamatory matter, by excessive publication, by a publication of defamatory matter for an improper purpose, or if the defamation goes beyond the group interest. Thus the privilege is lost if the publication is motivated by hatred or ill will toward plaintiff, or by any cause other than the desire to protect the interest for the protection of which the privilege is given." Id. (citations omitted).

[22] Google cites no authority indicating that the Court may strike a claim from a superseded complaint. The Court need not address its power to do so because it will deny all aspects of the motion on other grounds.

> (1) any written or oral statement or writing made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law; (2) any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body, or any other proceeding authorized by law; (3) any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest; (4) or any other conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue [*68] of public interest.

Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e). Perceiving abuse of this section, the California legislature passed Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17, which provides generally that the "anti-SLAPP" law may not be used against actions brought solely in the public interest. Section 425.17 also provides that the "anti-SLAPP" law does not apply to certain commercial lawsuits, although this is not true of lawsuits against a person or entity engaged in the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement, or other promotion of literary work.

Google argues that it meets the threshold requirement of Section 425.16 that its speech be protected by the United States or California Constitutions. "Anti-SLAPP" Motion 5-6. It asserts that it "speaks" in the form of PageRanks and search results, id., and that it is a corporation engaged in the creation of a literary work. Id. at 13-14. However, the Court concludes that even if Google's characterizations of its speech are accurate, the actions that form the basis of KinderStart's claims against Google are not of public interest. See Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(3)-(4).

"The definition of 'public interest' within the [*69] meaning of the "anti-SLAPP" statute has been broadly construed to include not only governmental matters, but also private conduct that impacts a broad segment of society and/or that affects a community in a manner similar to that of a governmental entity." Damon v. Ocean Hills Journalism Club, 85 Cal.App.4th 468, 479, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 205 (Cal. Ct. App. 2000). The boundaries of 'public interest' have not been precisely defined, but the cases that have found that a party's speech to be of 'public interest' involve matters in the public eye, conduct that could directly effect a large number of people beyond the direct participants, or a topic of widespread public discussion. Rivero v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, 105 Cal.App.4th 913, 924, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 81 (Cal. Ct. App. 2003). The conduct at issue here does not meet these criteria. Although the instant lawsuit received media coverage after it was filed, there is no indication that a significant number of customers became aware of KinderStart's low PageRank or Google's removal of KinderStart from Google's search results prior to the filing of the lawsuit. Nor is there any indication that any debate or discussion [*70] arose over these matters, except between Google and KinderStart. Tellingly, KinderStart has yet to identify the similarly situated websites that it alleges suffered similar treatment at the hands of Google. [23] The Court finds it implausible that the fate or content of these websites could have been of public interest when an interested party apparently cannot identify them. [24]

[*71] Google argues that the Court should follow New.Net, Inc. v. Lavasoft, 356 F.Supp.2d 1090 (C.D.Cal. 2004), and find public interest in the conduct at issue in this case. The New.Net court described the dispute in that case as follows:

> This case presents a dispute between two downloadable software providers, New.net whose software, NewDotNet, is downloaded onto individual computers often without the knowledge or request of the computer owner, and Lavasoft whose software, Ad-aware, is purposefully downloaded by the computer user to detect [23] KinderStart has filed the declaration of Daniel D. Savage ("Savage"), a manager of TradeComet.com LLC. Savage asserts that a sudden increase in minimum bids for keywords under AdWords caused a dramatic drop in TradeComet.com's revenue. This single declaration of one other company does not transform the conduct in this case into a matter of public interest.

[24] The Court is unpersuaded by Google's reference to the large traffic counts claimed by KinderStart in its SAC. The Court has explained elsewhere that the "anti-SLAPP" statute covers statements made in connection with a public issue, not statements that could have an impact on the public. Order Den. Special Mot. to Strike and Den. Req. for Att. Fees, Sherwood v. Wavecrest Corp., C 05-02354 (N.D.Cal., Nov. 1, 2005). The alleged volume of traffic that moved to other sites as a result of the conduct in question may indicate impact on the public, but it does not indicate that the conduct itself was a public issue.

> and remove programs like the one written by New.net. New.net complains that the injuries caused by Ad-aware's inclusion of NewDotNet in its database are actionable under both state and federal law.

New.Net, 356 F.Supp.2d at 1095-96. The court explained that "Lavasoft had its genesis in a project to notify the public that unwanted software applications were being downloaded to personal computers without the user's knowledge or consent." Id. at 1105. Lavasoft programmed its software "relying primarily on submissions from the public." Id. The court described Ad-aware as "a service [*72] akin to Consumer Reports and other consumer information, databases, but in a new form," and analogized it to a "newspaper, magazine, or other material that addresses a matter of public importance." Id. at 1106. The court emphasized the importance of evidence of an ongoing public debate about Internet privacy and the threats posed by software like NewDotNet: "[this evidence] confirm[s] that there is indeed a community concerned with internet privacy, that the subject is a matter of public discussion, and that [New.net's] surreptitious downloads are a topic of discussion and concern in that context." Id. The court further noted that much of the speech with which New.Net took issue was not in fact Lavasoft's speech, but rather "speech engaged in by numerous others in the internet community including individual computer users." Id. The court concluded:

> Because the issue of public awareness of, and protection from, the unknown are at the heart of the public information service Defendant provides and because that service is of public significance, speech in this area should not be chilled by litigation brought by Plaintiff who seeks to stifle speech [*73] to enhance its profits.

Id.

New.Net is distinguishable from the instant case in at least three ways. First, while the NewDotNet software was a subject of discussion, there is no evidence that there has been any public debate about the contents of the KinderStart website or that Google was contributing to such debate. Second, while the relief sought by New.Net would have stifled speech by many parties beyond the lawsuit, including other companies and members of the public, there is no risk of such a sweeping effect on speech in this case. Third, the search services Google provides do not have "the issue of public awareness of, and protection from, the unknown" at their heart.

Alternatively, the Court concludes that, even if the conduct at issue is of public interest, the interest is limited. "[W]here the issue is not of interest to the public at large, but rather to a limited, but definable portion of the public (a private group, organization, or community), the constitutionally protected activity must, at a minimum, occur in the context of an ongoing controversy, dispute or discussion, such that it warrants protection by a statute that embodies the public policy of [*74] encouraging participation in matters of public significance." Du Charme v. International Broth. of Elec. Workers, Local 45, 110 Cal.App.4th 107, 119, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 501 (Cal. Ct. App. 2003). The Du Charme court contrasted such limited public interest with "widespread public interest," citing cases which involved the construction of a mall, domestic violence, a religious institution with extensive media coverage, a television show that created significant debate, and child molestation in youth sports. Id. at 117. In contrast, it is difficult to see how KinderStart's low PageRank and the exclusion of KinderStart from Google's search results are matters of public significance that merit protection by a "statute that embodies the public policy of encouraging participation in matters of public significance."

3. Motion to Strike

Finally, Google moves to strike the SAC in its entirety. Google asserts that the SAC contains structural deficiencies, irrelevant allegations, and a misleading and improper use of ellipses. Google also moves to strike KinderStart's Lanham Act claim on the basis that the Court did not grant KinderStart leave to include additional claims [*75] in the SAC. In light of the foregoing discussion, the motion to strike is moot.

Having concluded that it should grant the motion to dismiss, the Court must consider whether to grant leave to amend the complaint. Leave to amend may be denied for reasons including "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, [and] futility of amendment." Foman v.

Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962). In its July 13th Order, the Court gave KinderStart explicit, detailed direction that KinderStart largely failed to follow in the SAC. Instead, KinderStart reasserted the same deficient allegations identified in the July 13th Order. The instant case has been intensively litigated for more than eleven months. Under these circumstances, the Court concludes that there is no reasonable likelihood that KinderStart will cure the defects in the SAC by further amendment. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss will be granted without leave to amend.

IV. ORDER

Good cause therefor appearing, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

(1) [*76] The Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED without leave to amend. [25]
(2) The Special Motion Pursuant to Cal. Civ. Code § 425.16 is DENIED.
(3) The Motion to Strike is DENIED as moot.

DATED: March 16, 2007

JEREMY FOGEL

United States District Judge

End of Document

---

[25] KinderStart's pending motion for a preliminary injunction, filed on May 26, 2006, is denied as moot.

Person v. Google, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose Division

March 16, 2007, Decided ; March 16, 2007, Filed

Case Number C 06-7297 JF (RS)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22499 *; 2007 WL 832941

CARL E. PERSON, Plaintiff, v. GOOGLE, INC., Defendant.

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR CITATION

Subsequent History: Complaint dismissed at Person v. Google, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47920 (N.D. Cal., June 25, 2007)

Prior History: Kinderstart.com LLC v. Google, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82481 (N.D. Cal., July 13, 2006)

Core Terms

Google, advertising, allegations, proposed complaint, motion to dismiss, monopolization, pricing, website, relevant market, monopolies, leave to amend, Sherman Act, Internet, appears, Cartwright Act, Donnelly Act, consumer, click, amended complaint, discriminatory, practices, keyword Counsel: For Carl E. Person, Plaintiff: Carl E. Person, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carl E. Person Law Office, New York, NY.

For Google Inc., Defendant: David H. Kramer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, Palo Alto, CA; Jonathan M. Jacobson, Sara Ciarelli, Susan B. Creighton, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY; Meredith K. Kotler, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, P.C., New York, NY.

Judges: JEREMY FOGEL, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JEREMY FOGEL

Opinion

ORDER [1] GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND

[re: docket no. 17]

Defendant Google, Inc. ("Google") moves to dismiss the First Amended Complaint ("FAC") of Plaintiff Carl E. Person [2] for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons discussed below, the motion will be granted with leave to amend.

---

[1] This disposition is not designated for publication and may not be cited.

[2] Plaintiff, acting pro se, states that he is an attorney.

[*2] I. BACKGROUND

1. Procedural Background

Plaintiff filed the initial complaint in this action on June 19, 2006 in the Southern District of New York. The initial complaint included six claims: (1) attempted monopolization and monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) conspiracy to restrain trade and fix prices in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (3) attempted monopolization and price fixing in violation of Section 340 of the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340; (4) deceptive acts and practices in violation of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 349, 349-c; (5) false advertising in violation of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 350, 350-e; and (6) monopolization, conspiracy to fix prices, and discriminatory pricing in violation of the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720.

On July 27, 2006, Google moved to dismiss the complaint for improper venue and for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. On August 3, 2006, Plaintiff opposed the motion and requested leave [*3] to amend his complaint by the addition of two paragraphs. [3] Plaintiff did not add claims to his complaint. On September 20, 2006, one week after oral argument on the motion, Plaintiff informed Judge Patterson that he wished to make further amendments to his complaint. In a letter dated September 18, 2006, Judge Patterson determined that Plaintiff had exercised his right to amend his complaint on August 3, 2006, and declined to grant Plaintiff further leave to amend. On October 11, 2006, Judge Patterson granted the motion to dismiss for improper venue without deciding whether Plaintiff stated a claim upon which relief can be granted.

[*4] On November 27, 2006, the instant case was transferred to the Northern District of California. The operative complaint at the time of the transfer was the FAC, that is, Plaintiff's original complaint as amended as of right on August 3, 2006. [4] On January 5, 2007, this Court issued an order relating the instant case to KinderStart.Com, LLC v. Google, Inc., No. C 06-2057 JF (RS). On January 25, 2007, Google moved to dismiss the FAC for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. On February 9, 2007, Plaintiff moved for leave to file a document that he entitled "First Amended Complaint," but that in fact would have been, in light of Judge Patterson's earlier ruling, a second amended complaint. The proposed pleading includes more factual detail and adds claims under California law. [5] On February 13, 2007, the Court granted in part and denied in part Plaintiff's motion and instructed Plaintiff

---

[3] The paragraphs were:

"95A. Google's anticompetitive activities as alleged are specifically intended to increase Google's income, profits and of the keyword-targeted internet advertising market, and to deprive competitors Yahoo, MSN and any others of income, profits and market share."

"146A. Plaintiff is a consumer as to his candidacy and part-time book selling activities and, upon information and belief, many hundreds of thousands of AdWords advertisers during the past 3 years are also consumers in their Google advertising activities, including consumers who are (i) candidates for public office, (ii) offering unwanted personal goods for resale and/or (ii) [sic] retired or self employed persons, acting part-time, offering goods or services to supplement their income."

See Google Opposition to Motion for Leave to Amend Ex. B.

[4] To the Court's knowledge, no single document exists that incorporates the amendments made to the complaint on August 3, 2006. Since the amendments do not disrupt the numbering of paragraphs in the original complaint, the Court will cite to the FAC using the numbering of the original complaint and of the amendments.

[5] The proposed complaint includes fifteen claims: (1) monopolizing and attempting to monopolize in violation of Sherman Act § 2; (2) denial of use of essential facility to competitor and denial of non-discriminatory use of AdWords in violation of Sherman Act § 2; (3) conspiracy to fix prices and unreasonably restrain trade in violation of Sherman Act § 1; (4) violation of the California Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720; (5) violation of the California Unfair Practices Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17000, et seq.; (6) violation of the New York Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340; (7) breach of contract; (8) rescission of contract; (9) reformation of contract; (10) violation of the California Consumer Legal Remedies Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 1770(a); (11) unfair competition in violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.; (12) false and misleading advertising in violation of that he "should be prepared to argue why leave to amend should be granted in the event that the Court grants the motion [to dismiss]." February 13, 2007 Order 2. On February 20, 2007, Plaintiff filed opposition to the motion to dismiss. The Court heard oral argument on that [*5] motion on March 9, 2007.

[*6] 2. Factual Background

Plaintiff is an attorney, businessperson, and candidate for statewide office in New York, and a customer of Google's "AdWords" services. FAC P 8. Plaintiff alleges the following: Google is a global technology leader focused on improving the ways people connect with information. FAC P 11. Google maintains the world's largest index of web sites and other content. Id. AdWords is a program used by businesses to promote their products and services with targeted advertising. Id. Such advertisements appears either to the right of or above a searcher's displayed search results and are designated as "sponsored." FAC P 23. The advertisements are triggered by a searcher's use of a keyword designated by a Google advertiser. FAC P 20. Google auctions these keywords to potential advertisers, FAC P 24, and charges the auction winner when a user clicks on the sponsored link. FAC P 21, 27. Google previously advertised five cents as its minimum per-click price and fifty dollars as the maximum per-click price, but changed these amounts to one cent and one hundred dollars, respectively, in 2005. FAC P 24.

Plaintiff alleges that "[s]omewhere along the way, AdWords [*7] was able to start overcharging its smaller customers such as Plaintiff by imposing requirements that increased the cost to Plaintiff and other small-business advertisers and made advertising by them unprofitable, while at the same time reducing the cost to high-volume advertisers (generally large corporations) to increase their profitability and use of AdWords." FAC P 19. "Google is requiring Plaintiff and other small-business advertisers to pay as much as 100 times or more per click than the amount per click paid by monopolizing and other large established advertisers who by their established name or trademark are able to get a substantially higher rate of clicks (or 'clickthrough rate' or 'CTR') for the same number of times their ads are served up to Google searchers." FAC P 28. "Google is requiring each of its advertisers to be as successful as a monopolist, and charging them substantially more (or denying them use of AdWords) if not." FAC P 29. "AdWords has monopoly power for a variety of distinguishing reasons . . ., with the result that Yahoo and Microsoft/MSN keyword-targeted Internet advertising are poor, undesirable substitutes for AdWords." FAC P 30A. "Google is extending [*8] its market monopoly in this way to every aspect of business in the United States and making existing monopolies larger, turning potential monopolies into monopolies, and preventing small and new businesses from competing." FAC P 30. In 2005, Google introduced the "Quality Score," "quality-based minimum bids," and "landing page quality," which pertain to Google's process for determining a website's minimum bid required for a keyword to run. FAC P 31. "Google then started to charge Plaintiff and its other small-business advertisers an additional amount per click based on apparent human evaluation of the website 'landing page' created by the advertiser . . . ." FAC P 32. "Without consulting Plaintiff or other small-business advertisers, Google turns off most of the ads and labels them as 'inactive', having the effect of upsetting the advertiser's AdWords marketing program or refuses to allow ads to be placed for a variety of reasons, with the same discouraging effect." FAC P 33.

Plaintiff alleges that Google has conspired with a number of other large corporations such as Amazon.com and eBay, Inc. in an effort to "increase its sales to the major advertisers . . ., and reduce if not eliminate [*9] the profitable use of AdWords by the Plaintiff and other small businesses." FAC P 39. "AdWords has become an advertising boon for the large, successful, monopolizing companies, without having to compete significantly with smaller competitors." FAC P 49. "Google has a monopoly, and controls pricing, terms, and whether the Plaintiff and other small businesses are able to make any use of AdWords to compete with AdWords large corporate customers." FAC P 69.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17500-09; (13) class action claims under California law; (14) deceptive acts and practices in violation of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 349, 349-c; and (15) false advertising in violation of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 350, 350-e.

For purposes of a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff's allegations are taken as true, and the Court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411, 421, 89 S. Ct. 1843, 23 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1969). Leave to amend must be granted unless it is clear that the complaint's deficiencies cannot be cured by amendment. Lucas v. Department of Corrections, 66 F.3d 245, 248 (9th Cir. 1995). When amendment would be futile, dismissal may be ordered with prejudice. Dumas v. Kipp, 90 F.3d 386, 393 (9th Cir. 1996).

On a motion to dismiss, the Court's review is limited to the face of the complaint and matters judicially noticeable. North Star Int'l v. Arizona Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 581 (9th Cir. 1983); [*10] MGIC Indemnity Corp. v. Weisman, 803 F.2d 500, 504 (9th Cir. 1986); Beliveau v. Caras, 873 F.Supp. 1393, 1395 (C.D. Cal. 1995). However, under the "incorporation by reference" doctrine, the Court also may consider documents that are referenced extensively in the complaint and accepted by all parties as authentic, even if they are not physically attached to the complaint. In re Silicon Graphics, Inc. Securities Litigation, 183 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 1999). "Under the 'incorporation by reference' rule of this Circuit, a court may look beyond the pleadings without converting the Rule 12(b)(6) motion into one for summary judgment." Van Buskirk v. Cable News Network, Inc., 284 F.3d 977, 980 (9th Cir. 2002).

III. DISCUSSION

1. Claims Under the Sherman Act

a. Relevant Market

In order to make out a claim for attempted monopolization or monopolization, a plaintiff must define the relevant market. Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997). The relevant market is "the field in which meaningful competition is said to exist." Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 1997). [*11] Failure to allege the relevant market is an appropriate ground for dismissal of a Sherman Act claim. Tanaka v. University of Southern California, 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001). "A 'market' is any grouping of sales whose sellers, if unified by a monopolist or a hypothetical cartel, would have market power in dealing with any group of buyers." Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995). The Supreme Court has explained that the relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to consumers. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481-82, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). In some instances, one brand of a product can constitute a separate market. Id. "The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Tanaka, 252 F.3d at 1063.

Plaintiff defines the relevant market in the FAC as "'keyword-targeted Internet advertising' in which advertisers pay to have their advertisements displayed (alone or among an ordered group of ads identified as such) near the search results [*12] obtained from Internet search engine (such as the search engines of Google and Yahoo) using the keyword(s) selected by the advertiser." FAC P 43. The Court finds no basis for distinguishing the Search Ad Market from the larger market for Internet advertising. Search-based advertising is reasonably interchangeable with other forms of Internet advertising. A website may choose to advertise via search-based advertising or by posting advertisements independently of any search. The Search Ad Market thus is too narrow to form a relevant market for antitrust purposes. Accordingly, the Court will dismiss the monopolization and attempted-monopolization claims included in the FAC.

The proposed complaint defines the relevant market as the market > for monetizing traffic at any one or more websites through a distributed computing system enabling the auction or sale of keyword-targeted internet advertising to competing advertisers from a database of advertisers with ads triggered by the specific search words used by free or paid, online Google-powered searches, initiated by users from browsers or www.google.com or other websites, of User-Designated Information Databases, and payment for [*13] the advertising, at a price per click determined by auction and/or Google, for each click on any of the displayed ads, collected by Google on an immediate or periodic basis, from a previously-designated > and current source of payment for the advertiser, with the payments divided by agreement among Google, the owner of the website initiating the search, the advertiser, any agencies or brokers, and any others. Hereinafter, this described system is referred to as the 'Website Traffic Monetizing Market' and Google dominates this market.

Proposed Complaint P 12. As so defined, the proposed market apparently would include almost anyone who hopes to turn a profit while either buying, selling, or consulting on the sale of keyword-advertising. Plaintiff also alleges that Google's "purpose is to foreclose competition in the business of developing website traffic and monetizing (or converting to revenue) the website traffic or hits for the benefit of the website owner, and to reduce the value of websites to their owners and enable Google to purchase or otherwise acquire them at less than their fair market value in a non-monopolized market." Proposed Complaint P 19. The allegations at the [*14] end of this paragraph suggest that the relevant market might include anyone who operates a website. Thus, as presently framed, Plaintiff's definition of the relevant market is vague and overbroad.

b. Exclusionary or Anticompetitive Conduct

The core of both the FAC and Plaintiff's proposed new pleading appears to be a series of allegations that Google discriminates between large corporations that purchase AdWords keywords and small businesses that make similar purchases. However, beyond making conclusory allegations that Google acts as a monopoly and has denied access to an essential facility, Plaintiff fails to allege exclusionary or anticompetitive conduct. Although Plaintiff alleges high and discriminatory pricing, high prices, by themselves, are not anticompetitive or exclusionary. See Verizon Communs., Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). Absent predatory practices, discriminatory pricing does not threaten competition. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 340, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990).

Perhaps because of his failure to identify a relevant market, it is difficult to determine what types of competition Plaintiff believes are [*15] threatened by Google's actions. It may be that the competition at issue is between Google and other major Internet advertising providers, such as MSN and Yahoo, who are "poor, undesirable substitutes for AdWords," FAC P 30A, but that does not appear to be the focus of the FAC. Instead, the FAC provides a somewhat confusing picture of Google's competitors and, as Plaintiff concedes, does not allege that Plaintiff himself is a competitor of Google. See Opposition 3. Nor do Plaintiff's monopolist-by-association allegations clarify his pleading, as they suggest that the competition at issue is for dominance of the Internet and the larger economy. See e.g. FAC P 30 (alleging that Google "mak[es] existing monopolies larger, turn[s] potential monopolies into monopolies, and prevent[s] small and new businesses from competing"), FAC P 66 (appearing to imply that Google is a monopolist because of its dealing with the "monopolist eBay"). Finally, while it appears that Plaintiff is concerned about the competition between small and large corporate advertisers who use Google's services, see e.g. FAC PP 49, 69, it is unclear if Plaintiff believes that Google has a stake in that [*16] competition. The proposed complaint suffers from similar deficiencies. While Plaintiff appears to attempt to allege more than discriminatory or high pricing, he still fails to state a claim with sufficient clarity.

c. Conspiracy to Restrain Trade

Google moves to dismiss Plaintiff's claim that Google conspires to restrain trade or monopolize on the basis that Plaintiff does not allege that Google conspires with competitors to fix prices. Indeed, as Google suggests, the FAC appears to allege that Google has agreed to high and discriminatory prices with a number of large clients. This is not actionable under the Sherman Act. See 49er Chevrolet, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 803 F.2d 1463, 1468 (9th Cir. 1986) ("[I]t is a longstanding antitrust principle that Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not preclude a party from unilaterally determining the parties with whom it will deal and the terms on which it will transact business."). The Court finds no argument in Plaintiff's opposition explaining why this principle does not apply to the FAC; the Court concludes that it applies equally to the proposed complaint.

d. Reference to the Sarbanes-Oxley Act

Both the FAC and [*17] the proposed new complaint make reference to the Sarbanes Oxley Act of 2002, P.L. No. 107-204, and request injunctive relief thereunder. See FAC PP 106-08, Proposed Complaint PP 106-08. Plaintiff provides no meaningful explanation of the grounds on which he seeks relief under this act apart from stating that he believes it enables him to seek injunctive relief.

2. Claims Under New York Law

a. Claims Under the Donnelly Act

The third claim in the FAC alleges violation of the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340, by monopolization, attempted monopolization, price-fixing, and unreasonable restraint of trade. FAC PP 130-35. Google moves to dismiss the claim on the basis that to the extent that the statute provides any basis for relief, its scope is constrained by federal law. Motion 12-13 (citing People v. Rattenni, 81 N.Y.2d 166, 613 N.E.2d 155, 597 N.Y.S.2d 280 (1993), which explains that "[t]he Donnelly Act was modeled on the Federal Sherman Act of 1890, and thus we have observed that State antitrust law should generally be construed in light of Federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language [*18] or the legislative history justify such a result." Id. at 171 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).). Plaintiff provides no argument in response beyond the bare assertion that the claim is actionable. See Opposition 14. In light of this lack of argument, the Court concludes that the Donnelly Act claim suffers from the same defects as Plaintiff's Sherman Act claims and is subject to dismissal. There appears to be no material difference between the Donnelly Act claim in the FAC and claim six of the proposed complaint.

b. Claims Under Other Sections of the General Business Law

The FAC asserts claims for deceptive acts and practices in violation of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 349, 349-c and false advertising in violation of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 350, 350-e. Google moves to dismiss these claims on numerous bases. These claims appear to be based upon a theory that, after agreeing to a certain pricing structure, Google could not terminate the agreement and offer a different pricing structure. Such allegations are not sufficient to state a claim under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 349, 349-c, [*19] 350, 350-e. These statutes require the allegation of consumer-oriented conduct, see Exxonmobil Inter-America, Inc. v. Advanced Info. Eng'g Servs., Inc., 328 F.Supp. 2d 443, 447 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (discussing requirements of section 349); Maurizio v. Goldsmith, 230 F.3d 518, 522 (2d Cir. 2000) (discussing requirements of section 350), and the FAC does not contain sufficient allegations of such conduct. While Plaintiff may have paid Google to participate in the AdWords program, he is not a consumer in the sense of those sections, and he fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The claims under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 349, 349-c or §§ 350, 350-e that are included in the proposed complaint do not differ materially from those of the FAC. See Proposed Complaint PP 251-277.

3. Claims Under California Law

a. Cartwright Act Claim

The FAC asserts a claim under the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-70. Google moves to dismiss the Cartwright Act claim on the same basis that it moves to dismiss the Donnelly Act claim. Motion 12-13 (citing Freeman v. San Diego Assn. of Realtors, 77 Cal. App. 4th 171, 183 n.9, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 (1999) [*20] ("In analyzing [plaintiff's] Cartwright Act claims we frequently examine federal precedent because the Cartwright Act is similar in language and purpose to the Sherman Act. However, federal precedents must be used with caution because the acts, although similar, are not coextensive.")). Plaintiff offers no explanation as to how the substance of his Cartwright Act claim differs from that of his Sherman Act claims. See Opposition 14. The Court concludes that this claim is also subject to dismissal.

b. Other Claims Under California Law

The proposed complaint adds eight additional claims under California law, none of which is legally sufficient as presently framed.

i. Secret Rebates Injuring Competition in Violation of the California Unfair Practices Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17000, et seq.

Plaintiff fails to allege a secret rebate or discount that would constitute a violation of this statutory section. It is not clear from this proposed claim that Google is alleged to have done anything more than offer a bulk discount. Moreover, the claim is built on implication and lacks factual specificity.

ii. Breach of Contract and the Implied Covenant [*21] of Good Faith and Fair Dealing [6]

Plaintiff's proposed breach of contract claim states a number of alleged provisions of the AdWords agreement, Proposed Complaint P 172 A-O, and then alleges that "Google has intentionally failed to live up to, and has breached, each of [these] AdWords Promises." Id. P 173. Plaintiff does not explain how the alleged provisions relate to the specific language and terms of the AdWords agreement. Nor does Plaintiff allege exactly how Google breached the agreement. Instead, he attempts to link Google's IPO, Plaintiff's political campaigns, the complexity of AdWords, and the reasonable expectations of small business owners.

iii. Rescission of Contract Under Cal. Civ. Code § 1689(b)

[*22] Plaintiff's proposed rescission claim, pled in the alternative to his reformation claim, lacks factual specificity because it is built around expansive readings of what Google implied by making a number of unambiguous and uncontroversial statements. [7]

iv. Reformation of Contract to Delete Illegal Venue Provision

Plaintiff may not challenge the venue provision in the AdWords contract because Judge Patterson has found that provision [*23] enforceable.

v. Violation of the California Consumer Legal Remedies Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 1770(a)

The "underlying purpose" of the California Consumer Legal Remedies Act is "to protect consumers against unfair and deceptive business practices." Cal. Civ. Code § 1760. A consumer is "an individual who seeks or acquires, by purchase or lease, any goods or services for personal, family, or household purposes." Cal Civ. Code § 1761(d). Since Plaintiff's stated purpose for using AdWords is commercial and political, he is not a consumer under the definition of the act and may not bring an action on basis of the facts alleged.

vi. Unfair Competition in Violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.

Plaintiff seeks damages under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. However, that act provides for injunctive relief and penalties, not damages. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17202-03, 17206.

vii. False and Misleading Advertising in Violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17500-09

---

[6] Neither the breach of contract claim nor the reformation of contract claim identifies the law under which it is brought. Reading them in the context of the rest of the proposed complaint, the Court concludes that Plaintiff intended to bring them under California law.

[7] For example, the proposed complaint includes the following two paragraphs that describe representations by Google:

"C. That Google was conducting a legitimate auction in which the highest bidder was able to obtain the best ad position;

D. Impliedly, that Google was not manipulating the auction results through arbitrary, subjective evaluations of the Plaintiff's ad copy, website, or landing page to require the Plaintiff to bid 10, 20, 50 or 100 times the minimum price to be able to have the Plaintiff's ad run at all (in the least favorable position)."

Proposed Complaint PP 191 C-D.

The proposed [*24] claim for false and misleading advertising lacks factual detail in that it does not identify the false and misleading statements allegedly made by Google. Proposed Complaint PP 232-40.

viii. Class Action Claims Under California Law

As Google notes, Plaintiff may not pursue claims as a class representative and at the same time serve as counsel to that class. See In re. Cal. Micro Devices Sec. Litig., 168 F.R.D. 257, 260 (N.D. Cal. 1996). Moreover, a purported class representative may not represent a class unless he is able to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

4. Further Leave to Amend

Having considered the procedural history of the case, the Court concludes that it should permit Plaintiff to amend his claims. As Judge Patterson noted, "[t]hough it does appear that Plaintiff's claims will be difficult to sustain, it does not appear that they are 'clearly doomed.'" October 11, 2006 Order 14-15, Kramer Decl. Ex. G. Accordingly, Plaintiff may file a second amended complaint within thirty days of the date this order is filed. Any amended complaint shall be limited to the six claims [8] included in the original complaint. [9] Plaintiff should consider [*25] including only a subset of those claims. [10]

IV. ORDER

Good cause therefor appearing, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the motion to dismiss is GRANTED with leave to amend. Plaintiff shall file any amended complaint within thirty [*26] days of the issuance of this order. [11]

DATED: March 16, 2007

JEREMY FOGEL

United States District Judge

[8] The proposed complaint splits the original claim under section two of the Sherman Act into two separate claims. If Plaintiff concludes that he must split his Sherman Act § 2 claims and assert one claim for attempted monopolization and another for monopolization, he may do so, thereby raising the total number of claims in the amended complaint to seven.

[9] This restriction is ordered without prejudice to a future motion for leave to amend the complaint if Plaintiff is able to state a viable claim in an amended complaint.

[10] The Court did not reach Google's argument that the entire proposed complaint would be subject to dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, but, if appropriate, it will consider a similar argument as to an amended complaint.

[11] To the extent that Plaintiff's motion to file an amended complaint, filed on February 9, 2007, was not disposed of by the Court's order on February 13, 2007, that motion is denied.

Waters v. Sigmon

United States District Court for the Central District of California

March 20, 2007, Decided; March 20, 2007, Filed

CV 06-2300-GHK (SSx)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105073 *

B. Benedict Waters v. Glenn Sigmon, et al.

Core Terms

anti-SLAPP, Defendants', alleges, counterclaim, motion to dismiss, merits, litigation privilege, termination, amended complaint, motion to strike, malicious, summary judgment motion, privacy, prong, leave to amend, personnel file, Lanham Act, retaliation, discovery, official proceedings, definite statement, abuse of process, discriminatory, quasi-judicial, declaration, motions, argues, amend, costs, facie

Counsel: [*1] B Benedict Waters, Plaintiff, Pro se, Los Angeles, CA USA.

For Glenn Sigmon, Robert Carey, Martha, Complete Restoration Services Inc, Mark Eugene Goodfriend, Defendants: Mark E Goodfriend, Mark E Goodfriend Law Offices, Encino, CA USA.

For Complete Restoration Services Inc, Glenn Sigmon, Complete Restoration Services Inc, Glenn Sigmon, Robert Carey, Counter Claimants: Mark E Goodfriend, Mark E Goodfriend Law Offices, Encino, CA USA.

B Benedict Waters, Counter Defendant, Pro se, Los Angeles, CA USA.

B Benedict Waters Also Known as Byron Benedict Waters, Counter Defendant, Pro se, Los Angeles, CA USA.

Judges: GEORGE H. KING, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: GEORGE H. KING

Opinion

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (In Chambers) Order Re: (1) Defendants' Motion to Strike; (2) Defendants' Motion to Dismiss / for a More Definite Statement / to Stay; (3) Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment

On January 17, 2007, Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss, for a More Definite Statement, and/or to Stay or Abate. On February 20, 2007, Defendants also filed a Motion to Strike pursuant to the California anti-SLAPP statute. On February 12, 2007, Plaintiff tiled a renewed Motion for Leave to [*2] File a Motion for Summary Judgment. We have considered all of the papers filed in support of and opposition to these motions and deem this matter suitable for resolution without oral argument. L.R. 7-15.

I. Anti-SLAPP Motion

California Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16[1] "allows a defendant to move to strike a plaintiff's complaint if the complaint stems "from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue."' Verizon Del., Inc. v. Covad Comrstc'ns Co., 377 F.3d 1081, 1090 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Cal. Code Civ. Pro. § 425.16(b)(1)). These motions are known in common parlance as "anti-SLAPP motions." Id. "[D]efendants sued in federal courts cart bring anti-SLAPP motions to strike state law claims and are entitled to attorneys' fees and costs when they prevail." Id. at 1091.

A. Timeliness

Plaintiff argues that Defendants' anti-SLAPP motion is untimely. Section 425.16(f) provides that the "motion may be filed within 60 days of the service of the complaint or, in the court's discretion, at any later time upon terms it deems proper." The 60-day window runs anew from the service of each new amended complaint. See Yu v. Signet Bank/Vir., 103 Cal. App. 4th 298, 314, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516 (2002) (holding that anti-SLAPP motion filed within 60 days of the filing of a Third Amended complaint, which was itself [*3] filed two years after the initial complaint, was nonetheless timely). In this case, the First Amended Complaint ("FAC") was deemed filed by order of the Court on December 18, 2006. The sixtieth day thereafter was February 16, 2007. Because our order was served on Defendants by mail, Defendants were entitled to an additional three days to respond. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(e), see also Lam v. Ngo, 91 Cal. App. 4th 832, 842, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 582 (2001) (rule allowing party additional time to file when served by mail applied to time limit set by § 425.16(f)).[2] And as that third day fell on the Sunday prior to Presidents' Day, Defendants were entitled to file their motion by the end of business of the next day which was not a Sunday or a federal holiday. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a). As that day was February 20, 2007, the date on which the motion was filed, it appears that the motion is timely.

Plaintiff raises two objections to the timeliness of the motion. First, he relies on the fact that the statutory language measures the time to file an anti-SLAPP motion from the time of the "the service of the complaint[.]" § 425.16(0 (emphasis added). According to Plaintiff, the FAC was served on Defendants by mail on September 18, 2006, at the time Plaintiff filed his Motion for Leave to File an Amended Complaint. Contrary [*4] to Plaintiff's argument, however, the document he alleges was served on Defendants in September was a proposed First Amended Complaint. As Defendants had already answered to the original Complaint, the document served by Plaintiff could not become operative without leave of the Court. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). As our Local Rules indicate "[a]n amended pleading allowed by order of the Court shall be deemed served upon the parties . . . on the date the motion to amend is granted." L.R. 15-3. Thus, the effective date of service of the operative FAC was December 18, 2006, the date we granted Plaintiff's motion to amend and ordered the FAC filed.

Plaintiff's second objection is that our December 18, 2006 order allowed Defendants thirty days to respond to the FAC. Thus, he argues, Defendants' delay in filing the anti-SLAPP motion until the last day of the sixty day window provided in section 425.16(f) was in violation of the deadline set out in our order. However, we lack the discretion to refuse to consider the merits of an anti-SLAPP motion that is timely filed under the deadline set out in the statute. See Lam, 91 Cal. App. 4th at 840 ("[T]he statutory language certainly implies that the trial court must consider a special anti-SLAPP suit motion on the merits [*5] if it is filed within the 60-day deadline."). Thus, we agree with Defendants that the motion was timely filed and should be addressed on the merits.

---

[1] Unless otherwise denoted, all subsequent statutory citations arc to the California Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] State law applies a five-day extension while the Federal Rules provide a three-day extension. As the rules would be in direct conflict, the three day extension applies in federal court. See Verizon, 377 F.3d at 1091 (holding that when procedural provision of the anti-SLAPP statute conflicts directly with a Federal Rule, the Federal Rule applies).

B. Merits of the Anti-SLAPP Motion

1. Analytical Framework

In addressing the merits of an anti-SLAPP motion, we apply a:

> two-step process for determining whether an action is a SLAPP. First, the court decides whether the defendant has made a threshold showing that the challenged cause of action is one arising from protected activity. A defendant meets this burden by demonstrating that the act underlying the plaintiff's cause fits one of the categories spelled out in section 425.16, subdivision (e). [¶] ... [¶] In deciding whether the initial 'arising from' requirement is met, a court considers the pleadings, and supporting and opposing affidavits stating the facts upon which the liability or defense is based.

Navellier v. Sletten, 29 Cal. 4th 82, 88-89, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530, 52 P.3d 703 (2002) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

> If the court finds that such a showing has been made, it must then determine whether the plaintiff has demonstrated a probability of prevailing on the claim. . . . [T]he plaintiff must demonstrate that the complaint is both legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable [*6] judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited.

Id. at 88-89 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

We apply this analysis on a claim-by-claim basis. See ComputerXpress, Inc. v. Jackson, 93 Cal. App. 4th 993, 1004, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 625 (2001). Here, Defendants seek to strike two claims from the FAC: the Sixth Claim, which alleges "Invasion of Privacy" against Defendant Mark Goodfriend; and the Tenth Claim, which alleges "Abuse of Process" against Defendants Goodfriend, Complete Restoration Services, Inc. ("CRS"), and Glenn Sigmon. We address each in turn.

2. The Sixth Claim for Invasion of Privacy

The Sixth Claim alleges that Defendant Goodfriend "invaded Plaintiff's privacy by deliberately and maliciously publishing to a third party Plaintiff's entire personnel file." (FAC 15, ¶ 101 (emphasis in original)) In support of their motion, Defendants provide a declaration indicating that the "third party" to whom Plaintiff's personnel file was provided was a "Deputy Labor Commissioner" who was presiding over a Labor Code claim that Plaintiff had filed with the California Department of Labor Standards Enforcement (the "DLSE proceeding"). (See Goodfriend Dec. ¶ 4.) Plaintiff does not contest this fact by contradicting it with his own declaration. He merely points [*7] out that the FAC does not name the third party who received the file. As noted above, we are entitled to look beyond the four corners of the FAC and to rely on affidavits in determining whether the claim "arises from" activity protected by the statute. See Navellier, 29 Cal. 4th at 89. Thus, for the sake of this analysis, we accept as a factual matter that the "publication" alleged in the Sixth Claim was to a Labor Commissioner presiding over a quasi-judicial administrative enforcement proceeding.

Included within section 425.16(e)'s definition of protected activities is "any written or oral statement or writing made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law[.]" § 425.16(e)(1). The language of the provision appears to clearly encompass sending documentation in opposition to a claim in a DLSE proceeding before a Labor Commissioner. See, e.g., Harris v. King, 60 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 1187, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 (1998) (workers' compensation proceeding). Plaintiff does not contest that such a proceeding is an "official proceeding authorized by law," Instead he raises three apparent[3] arguments as to why the Defendants cannot satisfy the "arising from" prong of the analysis.

First, Plaintiff argues that Defendants have failed to show that their alleged [*8] activities constituted participation in "matters of public interest" or "in connection with a public issue." However, courts have consistently held that, provided a Defendant's activities fall within the textual ambit of section 425.16(e)(1)—i.e. they are "written or oral statement[s] or writing[s] made before a[n] . . . official proceeding authorized by law"—anti-SLAPP movants need not make an independent demonstration that the activity is of public interest or in connection with a public issue. See A.F. Brown Elec. Contractor, Inc. v. Rhino Elec. Supply, Inc., 137 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1129-30, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2006); Navarro v. IHOP Properties, Inc., 134 Cal. App. 4th 834, 842-42, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385 (2005); Blackburn v. Brady, 116 Cal. App. 4th 670, 675, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 (2004). Thus, this argument fails.

Second, Plaintiff argues that Goodfriend was not required to submit his entire personnel file as part of the DLSE proceeding. The DLSE Notice of Claim states that Defendants were required to "bring [P]laintiff's personnel file, including all time and 'payroll records to [a] conference" in which they were to "discuss the validity of and to settle" Plaintiff's DLSE claim. In the alternative, Defendants were permitted to submit payment in the full value of Plaintiff's claim to the DLSE. Apparently, instead of undertaking either option—showing up in person with Plaintiff's records or sending payment in full—Defendants attempted to resolve the matter without a hearing by submitting [*9] Plaintiff's personnel records to the Labor Commissioner. (See Motion to Strike, Ex. 2, 4.) While we take no position on the wisdom or merits of Goodfriend's approach, we have no doubt that Plaintiff's personnel records, which the Defendants were instructed to bring with them to the conference, are "writings" that were submitted "in connection with an issue under consideration or review in the [DLSE] proceeding." See Blackburn, 116 Cal. App. 4th at 677 (internal quotation omitted); compare Paul v. Friedman, 95 Cal. App. 4th 853, 866, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 82 (2002) (holding that scurrilous details from securities dealer's personnel file were " personal matters bearing no relationship to the claims asserted" in a securities arbitration and thus that they were not communications falling within § 425.16(e)(1)). Thus, Plaintiff's second argument fails.

Third, Plaintiff argues that the activities of Defendant Goodfriend are not protected because Goodfriend was not a party to the DLSE proceeding. However, it is clear that Goodfriend's role in the proceeding was in serving as counsel for the other Defendants. (See Motion to Strike Ex. 2 ("We are counsel for Complete Restoration Services, Inc. Defendant in the above-referenced [DLSE] case.").) The anti-SLAPP statute protects "qualifying acts committed by attorneys [*10] in representing clients in litigation," including the submission of arguments and evidence in an official proceeding. Rusheen v. Cohen, 37 Cal. 4th 1048, 1056, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516, 128 P.3d 713 (2006). Thus, Plaintiff's third argument fails as well.

Thus, we find that Defendants have met their burden of showing that the conduct alleged in Claim Six arises from activity protected by the anti-SLAPP statute. The burden now shifts to Plaintiff to present a prima facie case of success on the merits. Plaintiff raises two arguments on this point.

Defendants' attack on the Sixth Claim is based on their argument that the litigation privilege, in section 47(b) of the Civil Code, bars Plaintiff's claim. If a claim is barred by such privilege, Plaintiff cannot, as a matter of law, demonstrate a prima facie case of success on the merits. See Rusheen, 37 Cal. 4th at 1065; see also Healy v. Tuscany Hills Landscape & Recreation Corp., 137 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 547(2006) ("[S]tatements which come within the protection of the litigation privilege of Civil Code section 47, subdivision (b), are equally entitled to the benefits of section 425.16."). "The litigation privilege is absolute; it applies, if at all, regardless whether the communication was made with malice or the intent to harm. Put another way, application of the privilege does not depend on the publisher's 'motives, morals, ethics or intent.'" Silberg v. Anderson, 50 Cal. 3d 205, 220, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 (1990) (internal citation omitted).

---

[3] Plaintiff does not delineate which of his arguments address the "arising from" prong of the analysis and which address the "prima facie merits" prong of the anti-SLAPP analysis. As Plaintiff is pro se, we construe his arguments liberally and apply them to the analysis in the manner most favorable to him.

Plaintiff seeks [*11] to avoid this bar by arguing that the activity alleged in the Sixth Claim is "conduct, not communication" and thus is not protected by the litigation privilege. (See Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Strike 6 (citing Drum v. Bieau, Fox & Assocs., 107 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1024, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 602 (2003)). We note initially that the case cited by Plaintiff has been expressly rejected by the California Supreme Court for applying an overbroad conception of "conduct," to the conduct/communication distinction under the litigation privilege. See Rusheen, 37 Cal. 4th at 1065 (disapproving Drum). We also note that, other than a hare assertion of the rule, Plaintiff provides no explanation regarding why Goodfriend's action—submitting evidentiary material to a quasi-judicial proceeding—should be considered conduct and not communication. Nor is this argument supported by the law. A claim whose gravamen lies in the submission of relevant documents to a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding is considered to arise from a communicative act. See Rusheen, 37 Cal. 4th at 1062 (holding that submission of allegedly perjured declarations of service used to procure judgment was communicative). Moreover, such a submission undertaken in connection with an official proceeding is a communication protected by the litigation privilege when it is "(1) [*12] made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) that have some connection or logical relation to the action." Silberg, 50 Cal. 3d at 212.

Here, all four elements are met. The personnel file was submitted to a quasi-judicial proceeding. It was submitted by litigants and their counsel. It was submitted to achieve the ends of the litigation.[4] And, given that Defendants were instructed to bring the file to the conference, it undoubtedly has a connection with the issues in the proceeding.

Thus, as the litigation privilege applies to the activities that form the basis of the allegations in Claim Six, Plaintiff cannot demonstrate a prima facie case of success on the merits. For this reason Plaintiff's other argument—that his privacy interest in certain material within the file is protected from disclosure by law—must fail as well.[5] As Plaintiff has not met his burden on the second prong of the anti-SLAPP analysis, Defendants' motion to strike the Sixth Claim is GRANTED.

Thus, as the absolute litigation privilege applies to the activities that form the basis of the [*13] allegations in Claim Six, Plaintiff cannot demonstrate a prima facie case of success on the merits. For this reason Plaintiff's other argument—that his privacy interest in certain material within the file is protected from disclosure by law—must fail as well. As Plaintiff has not met his burden on the second prong of the anti-SLAPP analysis, Defendants' motion to strike the Sixth Claim is GRANTED.

---

[4] Plaintiff points out that he prevailed in the DLSE proceeding. But the privilege does not and cannot turn on the parties' ultimate success on the merits of the proceeding.

[5] Despite the fact that in Silberg the California Supreme Court described the litigation privilege as "absolute," see Silberg, 50 Cal. 3d at 220, and that Court has held that the litigation privilege applies to claims for invasion of privacy, see Ribas v. Clark, 38 Cal. 3d 355, 364, 212 Cal. Rptr. 143, 696 P.2d 637 (1985), there are a few court of appeal decisions holding that certain claims for invasion of privacy rights protected by the state constitution can overcome the litigation privilege. See Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney, 85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 359, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 (2000); Urbaniak v. Newton, 226 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1141, 277 Cal. Rptr. 354 (1991); Cutter v. Brownbridge, 183 Cal. App. 3d 836, 844, 228 Cal. Rptr. 545 (1986). Others courts have disagreed. See Jacob B. v. County of Shasta, 137 Cal. App. 4th 225, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81 (2006); Wise v. Thrifty Payless, Inc, 83 Cal. App. 4th 1296, 1303 n.1, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 437 (2000). The Supreme Court has granted review of a case addressing the issue. See Jacob B., 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605, 139 P.3d 1 (2006) (order granting review). Plaintiff does not press this point. Moreover, even if the cases holding the litigation privilege as nonabsolute in the face of a constitutional privacy claim are correctly decided, the decisions are distinguishable from the facts of this case. Each of these cases involved the defendants' purely voluntary submission of plaintiffs' private, but minimally relevant, matters to an official proceeding. In these cases, defendants' submission of the private materials was a matter of their own strategic choices. In contrast, in this case the file was affirmatively sought by the tribunal. Defendants were instructed in official correspondence to bring Plaintiff's personnel file to the conference before the Labor Commissioner. The fact that it was mailed to the Commissioner, as opposed to physically carried to the conference, is a distinction that warrants no difference. Because the Labor Commissioner required the file to be produced, Defendants are entitled to rely on that instruction in claiming the litigation privilege. Cf. Jeffrey H., 85 Cal. App. 4th at 360 ("[It is] clear that the litigation privilege applies when the disclosure is made pursuant to a judicial determination[.]").

3. The Tenth Claim for Abuse of Process

Defendants also seek to strike the Tenth Claim, which alleges abuse of process arising from counterclaims filed by Defendants in this action. The analysis is largely the same as above. Defendants' conduct—filing a counterclaim with this Court—is petitioning activity falling under § 425.16(e)(1). See Navellier, 29 Cal. 4th at 90. Because the gravamen of the Claim lies in actions filed before the court, it is similarly subject to the litigation privilege in Civil Code section 47(b), even if, as Plaintiff alleges, the counterclaim is wholly spurious. See Ruskeen, 37 Cal. 4th at 1061.[6] Plaintiff's opposition provides no arguments as to why the outcome for this claim should be any different. Thus, as Plaintiff cannot meet his burden on the second prong of the anti-SLAPP analysis, Defendant's motion to strike the Tenth Claim is GRANTED.

4. Attorney's Fees

A defendant who prevails on an anti-SLAPP motion is entitled to recover "his or her attorney's fees and costs." § 425.16(c). Thus, within fourteen days hereof, Defendants are ORDERED to file a declaration detailing their costs and fees. Such costs and fees shall be limited to those incurred in litigating Plaintiff's Sixth and Tenth Claims, including those incurred in the current motion. Defendants' failure to file such a declaration shall result in Defendants' waiver of their entitlement to recover their fees. Within thirty days thereafter, Plaintiff may tile objections, if any, to Defendants' fee calculations. Plaintiff's failure to timely file objections shall be deemed his waiver of any such objections.

H. Motion to Dismiss I for a More Definite Statement 1 to Stay

Defendants move: (1) to dismiss the First Claim, for racially discriminatory termination pursuant 42 U.S.C. § 1981, as to defendant Goodfriend only; (2) to dismiss the Third Claim, for retaliation pursuant 42 U.S.C. § 1981; (3) to dismiss the Fourth and Fifth Claims, which allege violations of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a); (4) to dismiss the Sixth Claim, for invasion of privacy, or in the alternative, to require a more definite statement; (5) to dismiss the [*15] Tenth Claim for abuse of process; and (6) to stay all remaining claims against Defendant Goodfriend, in order to allow him to properly represent his clients without creating conflicts of interest.

A. The First Claim Against Goodfriend

The First Claim alleges that Plaintiff was terminated from his employment with CRS in a racially discriminatory manner. As to Defendant Goodfriend, the FAC merely alleges that Goodfriend "actively participated in" Sigmon and CRS's racially motivated termination of Plaintiffs' employment.

Under 42 U.S.C. § 1981, the liability of individuals who play some role in a discriminatory termination, as opposed to the employers themselves, is unclear. No Ninth Circuit cases directly address the scenario. See *Bruin v. Mills College, 06-05209 WHA, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19847, 2007 WL 419783, at 3 (N.D. Cal. February 6, 2007) ("[T]he Ninth Circuit has not expressly authorized an employee to sue a non-employer defendant under 42 U.S.C. 1981.").[7] Other circuits have held that § 1981 liability can lie against individual non-employer defendants. See Whidbee v.

---

[6] Additionally, this claim appears to be legally insufficient because a claim for abuse of process cannot arise from the mere filing of a lawsuit. See [*14] Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc., 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1169, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 (1986) ("[T]he mere filing or maintenance of a lawsuit—even for an improper purpose—is not a proper basis for an abuse of process action.").

[7] El-Hakem v. BJY Inc., 415 F.3d 1068, 1073 (9th Cir. 2005) held a CEO jointly liable with a corporation under § 1981, but did not actually discuss the individual liability issue.

Garzarelli Food Specialties, Inc., 223 F.3d 62, 75 (2nd Cir. 2000); Cardenas v. Massey, 269 F.3d 251, 268-9 (3d Cir. 2001); Foley v. University of Houston System, 355 F.3d 333 (5th Cir. 2003); Johnson v. University of Cincinnati, 215 F.3d 561, 571 (6th Cir. 2000); Turner v. Ark. Ins. Dept., 297 F.3d 751, 754 (8th Cir. 2002); Allen v. Denver Pub. Sch. Bd., 928 F.2d 978, 983 (10th Cir. 1991).

However, this liability is generally grounded on the personal involvement of owners or managers in discriminatory decisions. Moreover, dicta in Ninth Circuit cases seems to suggest that in order for an individual to have liability under the [*16] statute, the individual's actions must be personally motivated by racial animus. See El-Hakem, 415 F.3d at 1074 (holding that there was sufficient evidence of individual's racially discriminatory intent, without specifically holding that such intent was a requisite to individual liability).

The allegations against Goodfriend, which state nothing other than his undefined "active participation," are insufficient to state a claim. Absent some allegation that Goodfriend played a role in the decision-making process that led to Plaintiff's termination, or that he carried out others' instructions to terminate Plaintiff with an intent to discriminate against Plaintiff on the basis of his race, the claim cannot stand. Thus, as to Goodfriend, the First Claim is DISMISSED. Although we allow Plaintiff leave to amend this claim, we remind him that any amendments must have a reasonable basis in fact. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b)(3) (requiring that "allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support"), (c) (subjecting party who pleads facts without sufficient factual basis to sanctions). Moreover, this claim will be permitted to stand against Goodfriend only if Plaintiff can allege that Goodfriend participated in the termination as it [*17] occurred. Goodfriend's after-the-fact role as an attorney in defending the Defendants against Plaintiff's lawsuit cannot form the basis of his liability on this claim.

B. The Third Claim for Retaliation

The Third Claim alleges that Defendants Sigmon, CRS, and Goodfriend caused the counterclaims in the current action to be brought against Plaintiff in retaliation for his filing of the original Complaint in this case. Defendants argue that the claim should be dismissed because their conduct—petitioning the Court by filing a counterclaim—is protected by the First Amendment.

We agree. Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, "[I]hose who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability." Manistee Town Center v. City of Glendale, 227 F.3d 1090, 1092 (9th Cir. 2000). Filing a counterclaim is considered a "petition" for purposes of the application of the doctrine. See Freeman v. Lasky, Haas & Cohler, 410 F.3d 1180, 1184 (9th Cir. 2005). The Ninth Circuit has extended the reach of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine beyond its root in antitrust law. Thus, the doctrine now provides an immunity from various lawsuits grounded in a defendant's petitioning activities, including actions for violations of civil rights, see Manistee Town Center, 227 F.2d at 1092, as well as claims for retaliation, see Sanghvi v. City of Claremont, 328 F.3d 532, 543 (9th Cir. 2003), and claims arising under the Federal Housing Act, see White v. Lee, 227 F.3d 1214, 1232 (9th Cir. 2000).

"Where a claim involves [*18] the right to petition governmental bodies under Noerr-Pennington . . . we apply a heightened pleading standard." Or. Natural Res. Council v. Mohla, 944 F.2d 531, 533 (9th Cir. 1991). Thus, a claim that grounds liability in the filing of a counterclaim can only move forward if Plaintiff sufficiently pleads that the counterclaim is a "sham." Id. In order to survive a motion to dismiss, the complaint must allege both that: (1) the counterclaim is "objectively baseless"; and (2) that the filing of the claim was improperly motivated by Defendants' intent to retaliate. See Manistee Town Center, 227 F.3d at 1094. Such pleading must go beyond "conclusory allegations," which are "not sufficient to strip a defendant's activities of Noerr-Pennington protection." Mohla, 944 F.2d at 533.

Here, the FAC alleges that Defendants filed their counterclaim in an effort to retaliate against Plaintiff for exercising his rights in filing his 42 U.S.C. § 1981 claim. (FAC ¶¶ 57-31.) While this may be sufficient to meet the second, subjective, motivation prong of the sham pleading requirement, it is insufficient to meet the first, objective, prong. While the FAC contains some conclusory allegations that Defendants' counterclaims were "load[ed]" with "slanderous, humiliating, false, malicious statements, rumors and gossip[,]" there are no allegations [*19] sufficient to establish that the counterclaim is entirely "objectively baseless." Nor has Plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the counterclaims as legally meritless or to strike the immaterial and scandalous matters allegedly contained therein.[8]

Thus, as Plaintiff has not met the heightened pleading standard required of Claims that seek to afford liability based on petitioning activity, the Third Claim must be DISMISSED, with leave to amend. Again, we warn Plaintiff that, while we permit him to amend this claim, such amendments must have a reasonable basis in fact, and that alleging facts without an adequate evidentiary basis could result in the imposition of sanctions. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b)(3), (c).

C. The Fourth and Fifth Claims for Violations of the Lanham Act

Defendants move to dismiss the Fourth and Fifth Claims for Violations of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), because Plaintiff lacks standing to sue. Plaintiff's Lanham Act claims allege that Defendants have engaged in false commercial advertising that misstates the services provided by Defendants, and that such advertising has the potential to divert customers from Plaintiff's competing mold removal business. Defendants' argument fails to comprehend [*20] that the Lanham Act covers more than claims alleging trademark infringement. The Act also prohibits various forms of unfair and deceptive advertising.

"[F]or standing pursuant to the 'false advertising' prong of § 43(a) of the Lanham Act . . . , a plaintiff must show: (1) a commercial injury based upon a misrepresentation about a product; and (2) that the injury is 'competitive,' or harmful to the plaintiff's ability to compete with the defendant." Jack Russell Terrier Network of N. Cal. v. Am. Kennel Club, Inc., 407 F.3d 1027, 1037 (9th Cir. 2005). We find Plaintiff's allegations sufficient to meet this standard at the pleading stage. Thus, Defendants' motion to dismiss the Lanham Act claims is DENIED.

D. The Sixth Claim for Invasion of Privacy

As we have already stricken the Sixth Claim pursuant to Defendants' anti-SLAPP motion, the motion to dismiss this claim, or to require it to be replead to allege greater particularity is DENIED as MOOT.

E. The Tenth Claim for Abuse of Process

As we have already stricken the Tenth Claim pursuant to Defendants' anti-SLAPP motion, the motion to dismiss this claim is DENIED as MOOT.

Plaintiff seeks leave to replead this claim as a claim for malicious prosecution, which is not subject to the litigation immunity addressed above. However, it is clear that a claim [*21] for malicious prosecution is not ripe in the current action because such a claim is contingent on favorable termination of the alleged maliciously prosecuted litigation:

> "The theory underlying the requirement of favorable termination is that it tends to indicate the innocence of the accused, and coupled with the other elements of lack of probable cause and malice, establishes the tort, that is, the malicious and unfounded charge . . . against an innocent person . . . ." Because of this requirement, it is obvious that a defendant cannot cross-complain or counterclaim for malicious prosecution in the first or main action since a claim cannot state a cause of action at that stage of the proceedings.

---

[8] Plaintiff has sought to file a summary judgment motion against the counterclaims, which we have denied as premature because discovery in the case has not been completed. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(2), (3) (providing the district court with authority to manage discovery and motion practice through the scheduling order). But a perusal of that motion does not plainly reveal that no "objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome[.]" Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1518 (9th Cir, 1996) (quoting Prof? Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993)).

Jenkins v. Pope, 217 Cal. App. 3d 1292, 1298, 266 Cal. Rptr. 557 (1990) (quoting Babb v. Superior Court, 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 (1971)).

Thus, leave to amend to allege a malicious prosecution claim is DENIED because such amendment would be futile. Moreover, once a defendant has satisfied its burden of showing that a claim arises from activity protected by the anti-SLAPP statute, a plaintiff cannot amend the claim to avoid a pending motion to strike. Simmons v. Allstate Ins. Co., 92 Cal. App. 4th 1068, 1073, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 397 (2001).

F. Motion to Stay

Defendant Goodfriend's motion to stay any remaining claims pending against him is DENIED as MOOT as all such claims have been stricken or dismissed. Inasmuch [*22] as we have granted Plaintiff leave to amend certain claims, Goodfriend may renew his stay motion in the event we, after consideration of the amendments, permit any claim to go forward against him.

III. Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File Motion for Summary Judgment

Plaintiff seeks leave to file a motion for summary judgment. It appears that this request seeks reconsideration of our August 31, 2006 order denying his original motion as premature. The request is DENIED.

While Plaintiff takes issue with our original grant of Rule 56(1) relief in our August 31, 2006 order, he fails to recognize the significance of the fact that his motion was filed extremely early in the case. Although it is true that a motion for summary judgment may be filed at any time, when "a summary judgment motion is filed so early in the litigation, before a party has had any realistic opportunity to pursue discovery relating to its theory of the case, district courts should grant any Rule 56(0 motion fairly freely." Burlington N. Santa Fe R.R. Co. v. Assiniboine & Sioux Tribes of Fort Peck Reservation, 323 F.3d 767, 774 (9th Cir. 2003). "[L]ightning-quick summary judgment motions can impede informed resolution of fact-specific disputes." Id. Further, when little or no discovery has taken place, "the party making a Rule 56(f) motion cannot be expected to frame [*23] its motion with great specificity as to the kind of discovery likely to turn up useful information, as the ground for such specificity has not yet been laid." Id.; see also Metabolife Intl, Inc. v. Wornick, 264 F.3d 832, 846 (9th Cir. 2001) (noting that a district court is required to provide non-moving party with opportunity to conduct discovery of "information that is essential to its opposition").[9] Thus, although Defendants' original Rule 56(f) request was not particularly specific, it was timely made prior to the hearing date for the motion, and it adequately informed the Court of reasons why a summary judgment motion was premature.

Rule 16(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides us with the authority to enter orders governing scheduling, including orders limiting the time in which the parties can conduct discovery and file dispositive motions. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(2), (3). In this case, the scheduling conference is presently set for March 26, 2007. However, in light of the fact that we are still at the pleading stages, we VACATE the scheduling conference currently set for March 26, 2007, and take it OFF CALENDAR. We will re-set the scheduling conference once the pleadings are closed. At that time, we will set cutoff dates for discovery and dispositive motions.

IV. Conclusion

The Special Motion to Strike [*24] is GRANTED. The Sixth and Tenth claims are STRICKEN without leave to amend. Defendants are awarded costs and attorney's fees on these claims as detailed above. The Motion to [9] We further note that premature consideration of summary judgment motions, particularly those granted prior to the close of discovery, often leads to wasteful re-litigation of issues. See, e.g., Burlington N. Santa Fe, 323 F.3d at 774 (remanding for additional discovery and reconsideration of grant of early motion for summary judgment).

Dismiss / for a More Definite Statement / to Stay is GRANTED in PART and DENIED in PART. The First Claim as to Defendant Goodfriend, and the Third Claim as to Defendants CRS, Sigmon, and Goodfriend are DISMISSED, with leave to amend. The remainder of the Motion is DENIED for the reasons stated above. Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File a Motion for Summary. Judgment prior to the entry of the scheduling order is DENIED.

Plaintiff is ORDERED to file a Second Amended Complaint within twenty days hereof. Plaintiff's failure to timely file such an amended complaint shall be deemed his waiver of any right to amend as addressed in this order. Defendants are ORDERED to answer or otherwise respond to the Second Amended Complaint within ten days of its filing. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Wilson v. General Motors Corp.

Supreme Court of New Jersey

January 29, 2007, Argued ; March 20, 2007, Decided

A-58 September Term 2006

Reporter

190 N.J. 336 *; 921 A.2d 414 ; 2007 N.J. LEXIS 342 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,638

RICHARD M. WILSON, INDIVIDUALLY AND ON BEHALF OF ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT, v. GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION, GENERAL MOTORS OF CANADA, LTD., FORD MOTOR COMPANY, FORD MOTOR COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD., TOYOTA MOTOR CORPORATION, TOYOTA MOTOR SALES, U.S.A., INC., TOYOTA CANADA, INC., HONDA MOTOR COMPANY, LTD., AMERICAN HONDA MOTOR CO., INC., HONDA CANADA, INC., DAIMLERCHRYSLER AKTIENGESELLSCHAFT, DAIMLERCHRYSLER CANADA, INC., MERCEDES-BENZ CANADA, INC., NISSAN MOTOR COMPANY, LTD., NISSAN NORTH AMERICA, INC., NISSAN CANADA, INC., BMW OF NORTH AMERICA, INC., BMW CANADA, NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE DEALERS ASSOCIATION AND CANADIAN AUTOMOBILE DEALERS ASSOCIATION, DEFENDANTS-RESPONDENTS.

Prior History: [*1] On appeal from the Superior Court, Appellate Division.

Core Terms

antitrust, dealers, consumers, allegations, complaints, conspiracy, consumer fraud, plaintiffs', indirect

Syllabus

(This syllabus is not part of the opinion of the Court. It has been prepared by the Office of the Clerk for the convenience of the reader. It has been neither reviewed nor approved by the Supreme Court. Please note that, in the interests of brevity, portions of any opinion may not have been summarized).

Richard M. Wilson v. General Motors Corporation, et al. (A-58-06)

Argued January 29, 2007 -- Decided March 20, 2007

PER CURIAM

Four separate complaints, filed as class action lawsuits, were consolidated under the Wilson v. General Motors caption. In their complaints, the class-action plaintiffs allege violations of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S.A. 56:9-1 to -19, and that those acts constituted "unconscionable practices" in violation of the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J.S.A. 56:8-1 to -20, (CFA).

The foundation of the plaintiffs' claims is that the manufacturing defendants, with the aid and assistance of the dealer association defendants, entered into a series of agreements resulting in actions intended to ensure that New Jersey consumers could not [2] purchase new cars sold to dealers in Canada and, instead could only purchase those same cars in the United States at higher prices. The complaints allege that the defendants sought to restrict the supply of, and the alternative sources for, new vehicles for New Jersey consumers in order to artificially drive up the prices for vehicles purchased in New Jersey. The complaints further allege that by preventing New Jersey consumers from having an alternative supply of cars from Canada, the manufacturing defendants unreasonably increased the costs incurred for their products by New Jersey consumers. Plaintiffs acknowledge that the conduct, the purpose of which was to make sure consumers would pay higher prices for the manufacturing defendants' vehicles, included actions directed at the manufacturing defendants' new vehicle dealers.

In affirming the lower court's dismissal of the complaints, a majority of the Appellate Division reasoned that: 1) the only acts and practices included in the complaint are anti-competitive acts in furtherance of an antitrust conspiracy-each of the acts by defendants were explicitly directed at dealers; 2) there is no act alleged that constitutes a deception [3] or includes any type of misleading behavior directed at the plaintiffs; and 3) all of the acts complained of affect plaintiffs only in their status as indirect consumers. According to the Appellate Division majority, the complaints do not include any facts that constitute an unconscionable commercial practice apart from the antitrust conspiracy and the acts undertaken in furtherance thereof. As such, the majority concluded that the plaintiffs' complaints cannot state a claim for relief under the CFA. The majority noted that to hold otherwise would be to create an "end run" around the plain intention of the Legislature embodied in the Antitrust Act.

One member of the appellate panel dissented, finding that in reading the allegations of the complaints as required for purposes of a motion to dismiss under Rule 4:6-2(e), plaintiffs have alleged the fundamentals of a consumer fraud action, i.e., that independently of the price-fixing conspiracy, defendants have engaged in conduct in violation of the CFA. The dissent noted that it was alleged that the manufacturing defendants, among other things, sought and obtained agreement from their United States dealers to: 1) not honor new car [4] warranties on cars imported from Canada; 2) not install properly calibrated imperial measure speedometers and odometers in cars imported from Canada which had metric speedometers and odometers; and 3) taking measures to enforce the agreements by refusing to provide United States buyers of new Canadian cars with information regarding recalls. The dissent was of the view that these actions suggested the fundamentals of a CFA cause of action independent of the price-fixing, antitrust violation. The dissent also concluded that the CFA claims could be pursued without creating a conflict between the Antitrust Act and the CFA.

Plaintiffs appeal as of right based on the dissent in the Appellate Division.

HELD: The allegations in these class-action complaints essentially assert an anti-competition scheme in violation of the New Jersey Antitrust Act. There are no allegations or communications with, or directed to, consumers "in connection with the sale or advertisement" of vehicles that would entitle plaintiffs to relief under the Consumer Fraud Act.

1. Federal law is followed when interpreting our own antitrust statute. For purposes of this appeal, it is uncontested that indirect [5] purchasers, such as plaintiffs, who did not purchase vehicles directly from defendants, have no standing to assert a private right of action under the New Jersey Antitrust Act. (P. 5)

2. The alleged wrongdoing is essentially directed to the sale of vehicles in Canada and their importation into the United States. There are no allegations of communications with, or directed to, consumers "in connection with the sale or advertisement" of vehicles as required under the CFA. Even if the complaints can be said to allege an "unconscionable commercial practice, deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, or the knowing concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact…in connection with the sale or advertisement" of a motor vehicle to a putative plaintiff in violation of the CFA, the Court agrees with the Appellate Division majority that the allegations in the complaints, which basically assert an anti-competition scheme in violation of the Antitrust Act without any allegation of a direct or indirect statement or communication with any plaintiff, are precluded under the federal antitrust case, Illinois Brick, (Pp. 6-8)

3. The Court leaves for [6] another day whether a CFA action would be precluded where the allegations of a violation of the Antitrust Act include communications with, or statements to, New Jersey consumers that are clear violations of the CFA. (P. 8)

Judgment of the Appellate Division is AFFIRMED.

Counsel: Donna Siegel Moffa argued the cause for appellant (Trujillo Rodriguez & Richards, attorneys; Ms. Moffa, Lisa J. Rodriguez and Nicole M. Acchione, on the briefs).

William R. Sherman, a member of the District of Columbia bar, argued the cause for respondents Campbell Campbell Edwards & Conroy, attorneys for Ford Motor Company and Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd., (Lavin, Coleman, O'Neil, Ricci, Finarelli & Gray, attorneys for General Motors Corporation and General Motors of Canada, Ltd., Krovatin & Associates, attorneys for American Honda Motor Co., Inc., Cooper, Rose & English, attorneys for Nissan North America, Inc., Marshall, Dennehey, Warner, Coleman & Coggin, attorneys for DaimlerChrysler Canada, Inc. and Mercedes-Benz Canada, Inc. and Connell Foley, attorneys for National Automobile Dealers Association; Bryan D. McElvaine, Joseph E. O'Neil, Gerald Krovatin, Peter M. Burke, Kevin M. McKeon and [7] Brian G. Steller, on the brief).

Judges: Justices LaVECCHIA, WALLACE, RIVERA-SOTO, STERN (t/a) and LINTNER (t/a).

Opinion

[*337] [415] PER CURIAM.

Plaintiffs appeal as of right, pursuant to Rule 2:2-1(a)(2) following a dissent in the Appellate Division, from a judgment affirming the dismissal of their complaints in the Law Division. [1] Plaintiffs' [*338] complaint alleged violations of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S.A. 56:9-1 to -19, and that those acts constituted "unconscionable practices" in violation of the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J.S.A. 56:8-1 to -20 (CFA). [2] The appeal to the Appellate Division challenged only the dismissal of plaintiffs' claims under the CFA, and, in an unpublished opinion, a majority of the Appellate Division affirmed the judgment dismissing the CFA complaint.

[*8] In the words of plaintiffs' brief,

> [t]he gravamen of Plaintiffs' complaints was that the Manufacturing Defendants, with the aid and assistance of the dealer association defendants, entered a series of agreements pursuant to which they took various actions intended to ensure that New Jersey (and other United States) consumers could not purchase new cars sold to dealers in Canada and, instead could only purchase those same cars in the United States--at higher prices.

According to plaintiffs,

> [t]he complaints allege that the Manufacturing Defendants, in concert with the automobile dealer association defendants, engaged in a wide-ranging conspiracy to prevent vehicles that they had sold to dealers in Canada from being exported and sold to consumers in New Jersey (and the United States), so that consumers of the Manufacturer-Defendants' vehicles would have to pay higher prices for those vehicles.

---

[1] Four separate complaints, filed as class actions, were consolidated under the Wilson v. General Motors caption.

[2] The Wilson and Kaufman complaints do not expressly state "causes of action [in] violation of N.J.S.A. 56:9-3," as do the Williams and Tatte complaints. However, the Wilson and Kaufman complaints allege that "[d]efendants have engaged in unfair methods of competition in violation of the standards of conduct established by the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S.A. 56:9-1, et seq. The violation of this [A]ct constitutes unfair and unconscionable practices, which are actionable pursuant to the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act 56:8-2." According to the Wilson and Kaufman complaints:

> The contract, combination and conspiracy alleged herein was an unconscionable commercial practice prohibited by the New Jersey Fraud Statute and other state statutes prohibiting price fixing. The unconscionable commercial practice consisted of a continuing agreement, understanding and concert of action among the Defendants and their co-conspirators the substantial terms of which were to eliminate the import of new cars from Canada into the United States and thereby raise, fix, stabilize or maintain prices of new automobiles sold or leased in the State of New Jersey and throughout the United States at artificially high levels.

[*339] "The complaints allege that Defendants sought to restrict the supply of, and the alternative sources for, new vehicles for New Jersey consumers in order to artificially drive up the prices for vehicles purchased in New Jersey." Plaintiffs further allege that [9] "[b]y preventing New Jersey consumers from having the alternative of a supply of cars from Canada, the Manufacturing Defendants unreasonably increased the costs incurred for their products by New Jersey consumers." Thus, plaintiffs [416] acknowledge that "[t]he conduct, the object of which was to ensure that consumers paid higher prices for the Manufacturing Defendant[s'] vehicles, included actions directed at the Manufacturing Defendants new vehicle dealers[.]"

In affirming the dismissal of the complaints the Appellate Division majority concluded:

> Because the only acts and practices included in the complaint are anti-competitive acts in furtherance of an antitrust conspiracy, because there is no act alleged that constitutes a deception or includes any type of misleading behavior directed at these plaintiffs, because all of the acts complained of affect plaintiffs only in their status as indirect consumers, we conclude that their complaint cannot state a claim for relief under the Consumer Fraud Act. To conclude to the contrary, as we found in Sickles [v. Cabot Corp., 379 N.J. Super. 100, 877 A.2d 267 (App.Div.), certif. denied, 185 N.J. 297, 884 A.2d 1267 (2005)], would be [10] to create an "end run" around the plain intention of the Legislature embodied in the Antitrust Act. See Sickles v. Cabot Corp., supra, 379 N.J. Super. 100 at 117 [877 A.2d 267] (quoting Abbott Labs. [Inc. v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503, 506, 38 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 961 (Tex.1995)].

As stated in Sickles v. Cabot Corp., 379 N.J. Super. 100, 107, 877 A.2d 267 (App.Div.), certif. denied, 185 N.J. 297, 884 A.2d 1267 (2005), "[w]e follow federal antitrust law in interpreting our own antitrust statute," see N.J.S.A. 56:9-18, and under Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, reh'g denied, 434 U.S. 881, 98 S. Ct. 243, 54 L. Ed. 2d 164 (1977), indirect purchasers, such as plaintiffs, who did not purchase vehicles directly from defendants have no standing to assert a private right of action under the New Jersey Antitrust Act. Those propositions are uncontested for purposes of this appeal.

According to the Appellate Division majority:

> Carefully read, the complaint rests only on allegations that are traditional anticompetitive behaviors that plaintiffs argue affect them indirectly. They have [*340] identified no acts undertaken by defendants except for those in furtherance of the [11] antitrust conspiracy. Each of the acts by defendants that were explicitly directed at dealers, including conspiracy, refusal to sell to dealers in Canada who might export cars to the United States, instituting chargebacks, requiring agreements not to export and terminating dealerships of uncooperative dealers, are allegations of antitrust activities with an indirect effect on plaintiffs, recovery for which is barred under Illinois Brick. Even the few factual allegations that are not directed solely at the dealers, including tracking VIN numbers, causing domestic dealers to refuse to honor warranties or to install imperial measure odometers and speedometers, or refusing to provide recall information to domestic purchasers of Canadian vehicles, are acts in furtherance of the conspiracy and are only acts that affect plaintiffs indirectly. The complaints simply do not include any facts that constitute an unconscionable commercial practice apart from the antitrust conspiracy and the acts undertaken in furtherance thereof.
>
> However expansively we may understand the term "unconscionable commercial practice" as it is used in the Consumer Fraud Act, the heart of plaintiffs' appeal asks [12] us to read that language to effect a repealer of Illinois Brick. Plaintiffs suggest that factual allegations that sound only in antitrust violations can support a claim by indirect purchasers through use of the Consumer Fraud Act where the Legislature has specifically rejected such a cause of action under the Antitrust Act itself. In doing so, [417] plaintiffs ask us to accomplish by judicial analysis of the Consumer Fraud Act a result which our Legislature has expressly rejected. We decline to do so.

The dissenting Appellate Division judge concluded that reading the allegations of the complaint as required for purposes of a motion to dismiss under Rule 4:6-2(e), "plaintiffs have alleged the fundamentals of a consumer fraud cause of action, i.e., that independently of the price-fixing conspiracy, defendants have engaged in conduct that violates the [CFA]." The judge believed that allegations that the "Manufacturing Defendants" > among other things, sought and obtained agreement from their United States dealers to: [(1)] [n]ot honor new car warranties on cars imported from Canada; and [(2)] [n]ot install properly calibrated imperial measure speedometers and odometers [13] in cars imported from Canada which had metric speedometers and odometers[] . . . [as well their taking of] measures to enforce the [] agreements[] [by] [r]efusing to provide U.S. purchasers of new Canadian cars with information regarding recalls . . . suggest[ed] the fundamentals of a CFA cause of action, which is independent of the price-fixing, antitrust violation.

The dissenting judge also concluded that those "CFA claims . . . may be pursued without creating a conflict between the Antitrust Act and the CFA."

[*341] The alleged wrongdoing was essentially directed to the sale of vehicles in Canada and their importation into the United States, and there are no allegations of communications with, or directed to, consumers "in connection with the sale or advertisement" of vehicles, as required by N.J.S.A. 56:8-2. See also N.J.S.A. 56:8-1 (definitions). Even if the complaints can be said to allege an "unconscionable commercial practice, deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, or the knowing concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact . . . in connection with the sale or advertisement" of a motor vehicle to a putative [14] plaintiff, in violation of N.J.S.A. 56:8-2, we agree with the Appellate Division majority that the allegations in the complaints, which essentially assert an anticompetitive scheme in violation of the Antitrust Act without any allegation of a direct or indirect statement or communication with any plaintiff, are precluded under Illinois Brick However, we leave for another day whether a CFA action would be precluded when the allegations of a violation of the Antitrust Act include communications with, or statements to, New Jersey consumers that are clear violations of the CFA.

Affirmed.

JUSTICES LaVECCHIA, WALLACE, RIVERA-SOTO, and APPELLATE DIVISION JUDGES STERN and LINTNER, temporarily assigned, join in this opinion. CHIEF JUSTICE ZAZZALI and JUSTICES LONG, ALBIN and HOENS did not participate.

End of Document

In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the District of Maine

March 21, 2007, Decided ; March 21, 2007, Filed

MDL DOCKET NO. 1532

Reporter

241 F.R.D. 77 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20563 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,648

IN RE NEW MOTOR VEHICLES CANADIAN EXPORT ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Subsequent History: Objection overruled by In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41043 (D. Me., June 5, 2007)

Vacated by, Remanded by Brown v. Am. Honda (In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig.), 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 6483 (1st Cir. Me., Mar. 28, 2008)

Prior History: In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 235 F.R.D. 127, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29371 (D. Me., 2006)

Core Terms

plaintiffs', class action, prices, antitrust, arbitrage, statewide, ending, certification, discovery, consumer, damages, class certification, consumer protection, federal court, conspiracy, named plaintiff, certify

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN1[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

According to the U.S. Supreme Court, if, at the time a class is certified it is clear that the named plaintiffs suffered no injury, they cannot represent the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN2[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A class definition should be precise and that is so, in order that people can determine whether they are class members. But precise or not, the accuracy of the ending date cannot be confidently established at certification in a case where causation and impact may diminish as outside market forces (e.g., exchange rates) fluctuate.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A court has the power to test disputed premises early on if and when a class action would be proper on one premise but not another; a district court must conduct a rigorous analysis of the prerequisites established by Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 before certifying a class; a district court must formulate some prediction as to how specific issues will play out in order to determine whether common or individual issues predominate in a given case; and a district court is not limited to the allegations raised in the complaint, and should instead make whatever legal and factual inquiries are necessary to an informed determination of the certification issues. No particular level of factfinding by the district judge is mandated at the certification stage. First, discretion is left to the district judge. Second, what is appropriate for determining whether there is an efficient market in a securities case is quite different from market determinations, market behavior and market definitions for antitrust purposes.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN4[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Mississippi does not provide for class actions in its state courts at all. That is Mississippi's choice to make as a matter of state procedure for its state courts, but not for the federal courts. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 sets the procedural criteria for when class actions are permitted in federal court and a federal judge must follow that Rule. A class is properly certifiable under Rule 23 to enforce Mississippi antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

Georgia provides that under its consumer protection statute, an injured consumer may bring an action individually, but not in a representative capacity. O.C.G.A. § 10-1-399.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

In Montana, a consumer can sue for actual damages, or $ 500 if greater, and attorney fees, but only as an individual but not a class action. Mont. Code Ann. § 30-14-133.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN7[ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

Utah allows actual damages, or $ 2,000 if greater, but not in a class action (unless the transaction violated a specific administrative rule or court decision, and then a class action is available). Utah Code Ann. § 13-11-19.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN8[ ] Preliminary Considerations, Federal & State Interrelationships

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit reads Hanna v. Plumer as stating a principle for resolving a direct conflict between two strictly procedural rules. It rejects the proposition that Hanna commands that the Federal Rules be woodenly applied irrespective of a discoverable substantive, as distinguished from a merely procedural, state purpose.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN9[ ] Preliminary Considerations, Federal & State Interrelationships

When the issue is one of state substance and federal procedure, the state substantive rule controls.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN10[ ] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The state supreme court has held that Alabama's ban on class actions in consumer cases extends to every other state's deceptive practices law if the lawsuit is in Alabama state court and has labeled the bar on class actions as a procedural bar.

Counsel: [1] For WILLIAM H BROWN, Consol Plaintiff: MARC H EDELSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOFFMAN & EDELSON, LLC, DOYLESTOWN, PA.

For MICHAEL ROSEN, Consol Plaintiff: ROBERT J. BERG, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERNSTEIN, LIEBHARD & LIFSHITZ, LLP, FORT LEE, NJ.

For JENNIFER MCDONOUGH, ANDREW L POINTER, Consol Plaintiffs: FRED TAYLOR ISQUITH, LEAD ATTORNEY, WOLF HALDENSTEIN ADLER FREEMAN & HERZ, NEW YORK, NY; MARY JANE FAIT, WOLF HALDENSTEIN ADLER FREEMAN & HERZ LLC, CHICAGO, IL.

For MIRIAM SCHVOM, Consol Plaintiff: FRED TAYLOR ISQUITH, LEAD ATTORNEY, WOLF HALDENSTEIN ADLER FREEMAN & HERZ, NEW YORK, NY; LEE ALBERT, LEAD ATTORNEY, MAGER & GOLDSTEIN LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For NEW WHITE ELECRIC CO INC, Consol Plaintiff: BERNARD PERSKY, LEAD ATTORNEY, LABATON, RUDOFF & SUCHAROW, NEW YORK, NY.

For MADHUSMITA GUPTE, ASHOK NIGAM, ESTELA MAHABIR, LISA SAIZON, Consol Plaintiffs: LEE SQUITIERI, LEAD ATTORNEY, SQUITIERI & FEARON, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL R. LAPINSKI, SQUITIERI & FEARON, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For ST GEORGE HUNT, Consol Plaintiff: JOSEPH C. KOHN, LEAD ATTORNEY, KOHN, SWIFT & GRAF, PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MICHAEL M. BUCHMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, MILBERG, WEISS, BERSHAD & SCHULMAN, LLP, NEW YORK, [2] NY.

For ROBERT I ELAN, LYNN HORWITZ COE, JEFFREY COE, Consol Plaintiffs: JOSEPH P. GARLAND, LEAD ATTORNEY, KLEIN & SOLOMON, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; KLARI NEUWELT, LEAD ATTORNEY, LAW OFFICE OF KLARI NEUWELT, NEW YORK, NY.

For JATIN BHAIDIS, Consol Plaintiff: CHRISTOPHER A. SEEGER, LEAD ATTORNEY, SEEGER, WEISS, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For ZORAIDA LUNA, Consol Plaintiff: RICHARD B. BRUALDI, LEAD ATTORNEY, NEW YORK, NY.

For BRUCE B BELODOFF, Consol Plaintiff: CURTIS V. TRINKO, LEAD ATTORNEY, LAW OFFICE OF CURTIS V. TRINKO, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For MARIO C PATANE, Consol Plaintiff: JOSEPH M. PATANE, MARIO N. ALIOTO, LEAD ATTORNEYS, TRUMP, ALIOTO, TRUMP & PRESCOTT, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For AAA EGG FARM, Consol Plaintiff: GUIDO SAVERI, LEAD ATTORNEY, SAVERI & SAVERI, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For GEORGE C JAYNES, JANE A JAYNES, JILLIAN R WEADER, CATHY-ANN ACCOMANDO, Plaintiffs: JOSEPH J. TABACCO, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERMAN, DEVALERIO, PEASE, TABACCO, BURT & PUCILLO, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For B ALISON SHARRETT, Plaintiff: MICHAEL M. BUCHMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, MILBERG, WEISS, BERSHAD & SCHULMAN, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For JASON LEYNER, Plaintiff: ALLYN Z. LITE, LEAD ATTORNEY, LITE, [3] DEPALMA, GREENBERG & RIVAS, LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

For JOSEPH CARROLL, Plaintiff: KRISHNA B. NARINE, LEAD ATTORNEY, SCHIFFRIN & BARROWAY, LLP, RADNOR, PA; MICHAEL M. BUCHMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, MILBERG, WEISS, BERSHAD & SCHULMAN, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For DEBORAH MCCOMB, CARLOS VELEZ, Plaintiffs: BERNARD PERSKY, LEAD ATTORNEY, LABATON, RUDOFF & SUCHAROW, NEW YORK, NY.

For ANDRE RODRIGUEZ, Plaintiff: H. ADAM PRUSSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, POMERANTZ, HAUDEK, BLOCK, GROSSMAN & GROSS, NEW YORK, NY; MARVIN A. MILLER, LEAD ATTORNEY, MILLER LAW LLC, CHICAGO, IL; PATRICK EDWARD CAFFERTY, LEAD ATTORNEY, MILLER, FAUCHER & CAFFERTY, LLP, ANN ARBOR, MI.

For DANIEL E HERSCHBERG, Plaintiff: H. ADAM PRUSSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, POMERANTZ, HAUDEK, BLOCK, GROSSMAN & GROSS, NEW YORK, NY.

For JOHN C CROW, Plaintiff: JARED B. STAMELL, LEAD ATTORNEY, STAMELL & SCHAGER, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For ROBERT M JAFFE, Plaintiff: ROBERT SCOTT PALMER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERMAN, DEVALERIO, PEASE, TABACCO, BURT & PUCILLO, WEST PALM BEACH, FL.

For ALL PLAINTIFFS, Plaintiff: BRYAN L CRAWFORD, LEAD ATTORNEY, HEINS MILLS & OLSON PLC, MINNEAPOLIS, MN; CRAIG C. CORBITT, LEAD ATTORNEY, ZELLE, HOFMAN, VOELBEL, MASON & [4] GETTE, LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; DANIEL B. HARRIS, MARIA GRAESSER POTE, MATTHEW D. PEARSON, JOSEPH J. TABACCO, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BERMAN, DEVALERIO, PEASE, TABACCO, BURT & PUCILLO, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; FRANCIS J BALINT, JR, LEAD ATTORNEY, BONNETT, FAIRBOURN, FRIEDMAN &

BALINT, P.C., PHOENIX, AZ; PATRICK BARRETT, LEAD ATTORNEY, BARRETT LAW OFFICE, P.A., NASHVILLE, TN; ROBERT S. FRANK, CHARLES A. HARVEY, JR., LEAD ATTORNEYS, HARVEY & FRANK, PORTLAND, ME; ROBERT SCOTT PALMER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERMAN, DEVALERIO, PEASE, TABACCO, BURT & PUCILLO, WEST PALM BEACH, FL; TODD A. SEAVER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERMAN DEVALERIO PEASE TABACCO BURT & PUCILLO, BOSTON, MA; ANN D. WHITE, MAGER WHITE GOLDSTEIN, JENKINTOWN, PA.

For DENNIS AYLWARD, BARRY KUSHNER, PARRY SADOFF, MARTY RESSA, LINDA RESSA, JIMMIE MOORE, ALAN SCHLESINGER, DAVID PHILLIPS, CYDE COZAD, TOM LEWIS, KATHERINE BARRETT RILEY, HENRY KORNEGAY, JOHN COLE, ANDER FIELDS, KENNETH J MARTINEZ, RUBY MCALLISTER, RANDAL PETERSON, JASON SENGEL, CYNTHIA SENGEL, ALLISON ARRINGTON, CYNTHIA D MURPHY, SUSAN LACAVA, CYNTHIA DALE, WILLIAM BAGIN, JACK BERKE, ARLENE BERKE, HILARY ELLIOT, JACKIE HERALD, LARRY KINDBERG, LINDSAY MEDIGOVICH, ROBERT SCHERZER, EDITH THAYER, [5] Plaintiffs: ROBERT S. FRANK, LEAD ATTORNEY, HARVEY & FRANK, PORTLAND, ME.

For I G HOLDINGS INC, Plaintiff: HOLLIS SALZMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, LABATON, RUDOFF & SUCHAROW, NEW YORK, NY; ROBERT S. FRANK, LEAD ATTORNEY, HARVEY & FRANK, PORTLAND, ME.

For CATHERINE SCHMIDT, Plaintiff:JOHN P. ZUCCARINI, ELWOOD S. SIMON AND ASSOC. P.C., BIRMINGHAM, MI.

For WILLIAM DINKEL, Plaintiff: DANIEL D. OWEN, RICHARD M. PAUL, III, LEAD ATTORNEYS, SHUGHART, THOMSON & KILROY, KANSAS CITY, MO.

For PAUL MELANGAGIO, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: RICHARD M. HAGSTROM, LEAD ATTORNEY, ZELLE, HOFMANN, VOELBEL, MASON & GETTE LLP, WALTHAM, MA; ROXANNE BARTON CONLIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, CONLIN LAW FIRM, DES MOINES, IA; SCOTT H. PETERS, LEAD ATTORNEY, PETERS LAW FIRM, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA; CRAIG C. CORBITT, LEAD ATTORNEY, ZELLE, HOFMAN, VOELBEL, MASON & GETTE, LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For WILLIAM WURGLER, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, PAMELA WURGLER, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, PAUL ELSOME, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, DAN OZAYDIN, individually and on behalf of all [6] others similarly situated, DEANN OZAYDIN, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs: RICHARD M. HAGSTROM, LEAD ATTORNEY, ZELLE, HOFMANN, VOELBEL, MASON & GETTE LLP, WALTHAM, MA; ROXANNE BARTON CONLIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, CONLIN LAW FIRM, DES MOINES, IA; SCOTT H. PETERS, LEAD ATTORNEY, PETERS LAW FIRM, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.

For MILBERG WEISS BERSHAD & SCHULMAN LLP, Plaintiff: RICHARD M. HAGSTROM, LEAD ATTORNEY, ZELLE, HOFMANN, VOELBEL, MASON & GETTE LLP, WALTHAM, MA.

For JOHN MILTON MATTER, ANGELA M NEMESH, JOHN NEMESH, RONALD A ACHS, JOHN COOK, DAVID KIOUS, PHILLIP COMORSKI, PETER MCINNESS, KEVIN RUSER, EVELYN AULD, JASON MERCER, DONALD MOHR, RONALD JEWELL, SUSAN GRAY, AUBREY V SPEAR, III, JAMES WEIR, ELIZABETH WEIR, DAVID PERDUE, Plaintiffs: RICHARD M. HAGSTROM, LEAD ATTORNEY, ZELLE, HOFMANN, VOELBEL, MASON & GETTE LLP, WALTHAM, MA; TODD A. SEAVER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERMAN DEVALERIO PEASE TABACCO BURT & PUCILLO, BOSTON, MA.

For BARRY COHEN, SARAH EPSTEIN, SURI SKORSKI, ELI ELBAZ, SEAN GREGOR AND ASSOCIATES CO LPA, Plaintiffs: MARK SCHLACHET, LEAD ATTORNEY, LAW OFFICES OF MARK SCHLACHET, CLEVELAND, OH.

For GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION, GENERAL [7] MOTORS OF CANADA, LTD, Defendants:CHRISTA C. COTTRELL, DAVID H. DECELLES, MATTHEW S. BUCKLEY, MATTHEW M. WAWRZYN, RICHARD C. GODFREY, LEAD ATTORNEYS, DAVID J. ZOTT, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, CHICAGO, IL; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For FORD MOTOR COMPANY, FORD MOTOR COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD, Defendants: MMARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; WILLIAM R. SHERMAN, VERNER, LIIPFERT, BERNHARD, MCPHERSON & HAND, WASHINGTON, DC.

For TOYOTA MOTOR CORPORATION, Defendant: MICHAEL R. LAZERWITZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, CLEARY, GOTTLIEB, STEEN & HAMILTON, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For TOYOTA MOTOR SALES USA INC, Defendant: MICHAEL R. LAZERWITZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, CLEARY, GOTTLIEB, STEEN & HAMILTON, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DYLAN SMITH, JAMES T. KILBRETH, VERRILL & DANA, PORTLAND, ME; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For TOYOTA CANADA INC, Defendant: JOHN P PASSARELLI, LEAD ATTORNEY, MCGRATH [8] NORTH LAW FIRM, OMAHA, NE; MICHAEL R. LAZERWITZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, CLEARY, GOTTLIEB, STEEN & HAMILTON, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC;DYLAN SMITH, JAMES T. KILBRETH, VERRILL & DANA, PORTLAND, ME; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For HONDA MOTOR COMPANY LTD., Defendant: ROBERT A. VAN NEST, LEAD ATTORNEY, KEKER & VAN NEST, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For AMERICAN HONDA MOTOR COMPANY INC, Defendant: DAVID SPEARS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RICHARDS, SPEARS, KIBBE & ORBE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DOROTHY R MCLAUGHLIN, RACHAEL E MENY, RAGESH K TANGRI, ROBERT A. VAN NEST, LEAD ATTORNEYS, DANIEL PURCELL, KEKER & VAN NEST LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; JOHN H. RICH, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, PERKINS, THOMPSON, HINCKLEY & KEDDY, PORTLAND, ME; JOHN A. SHOPE, LEAD ATTORNEY, FOLEY HOAG LLP, BOSTON, MA; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For HONDA CANADA INC, Defendant: DANIEL PURCELL, KEKER & VAN NEST LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; JOHN H. RICH, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, PERKINS, THOMPSON, HINCKLEY & [9] KEDDY, PORTLAND, ME; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC; ROBERT A. VAN NEST, LEAD ATTORNEY, KEKER & VAN NEST, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For DAIMLERCHRYSLER AKTIENGESELLSCHAFT, Defendant: JAMES C. EGAN, JR, LEAD ATTORNEY, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For DAIMLERCHRYSLER CANADA INC, Defendant: CARRIE M. ANDERSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; JAMES C. EGAN, JR LEAD ATTORNEY, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; MITCHELL WAYNE BERGER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER SINGERMAN, FORT LAUDERDALE, FL; WILLIAM J. KAYATTA, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; FERDOSE AL-TAIE,JONATHAN L. SICKLER, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For MERCEDES-BENZ CANADA INC, Defendant: JAMES C. EGAN, JR, LEAD ATTORNEY, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; KIRSTEN A. LOCKHART, STEVEN A. NEWBORN, JONATHAN L. SICKLER, LEAD ATTORNEYS, WEIL, GOTSHAL [10] & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; MITCHELL WAYNE BERGER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER SINGERMAN, FORT LAUDERDALE, FL; ROBERT D KINSEY, JR, LEAD ATTORNEY, KINSEY ROWE LAW FIRM, LINCOLN, NE; WILLIAM J. KAYATTA, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For NISSAN MOTOR COMPANY LTD, Defendant: PETER SULLIVAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER, LLP, LOS ANGELES, CA; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For NISSAN NORTH AMERICA INC, NISSAN CANADA INC, Defendants: HAROLD J. FRIEDMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, FRIEDMAN, GAYTHWAITE, WOLF & LEAVITT, PORTLAND, ME;PETER SULLIVAN , LEAD ATTORNEY, GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER, LLP, LOS ANGELES, CA; LAURENCE H. LEAVITT, FRIEDMAN, GAYTHWAITE, WOLF & LEAVITT, PORTLAND, ME; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For BMW OF NORTH AMERICA INC, Defendant: DANIEL L. GOLDBERG, LEAD ATTORNEY, BINGHAM MCCUTCHEN LLP, BOSTON, MA; DANIEL S. SAVRIN, BINGHAM MCCUTCHEN LLP, BOSTON, MA; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, [11] PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For BMW CANADA, Defendant: DANIEL L. GOLDBERG, LEAD ATTORNEY, BINGHAM MCCUTCHEN LLP, BOSTON, MA; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE DEALERS ASSOCIATION, Defendant: BRUCE C. GERRITY, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRETI, FLAHERTY, BELIVEAU, PACHIOS & HALEY, LLP, AUGUSTA, ME; GLENN A. MITCHELL, LEAD ATTORNEY, STEIN, MITCHELL & MEZINES, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID U. FIERST, STEIN, MITCHELL & MEZINES, WASHINGTON, DC; ROY T. PIERCE, PRETI, FLAHERTY, BELIVEAU, PACHIOS & HALEY, LLP, PORTLAND, ME; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For CANADIAN AUTOMOBILE DEALERS ASSOCIATION, Defendant: ANDREW J. FORMAN, DEBORAH A. GARZA, LEAD ATTORNEYS, FRIED, FRANK, HARRIS, SHRIVER & JACOBSON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC; RICHARD L. O'MEARA, MURRAY, PLUMB & MURRAY, PORTLAND, ME.

For ALL DEFENDANTS, Defendant: DAVID J. ZOTT, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, CHICAGO, IL; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD [12] LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC; JONATHAN L. SICKLER, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; WILLIAM R. SHERMAN, VERNER, LIIPFERT, BERNHARD, MCPHERSON & HAND, WASHINGTON, DC.

For MERCEDES-BENZ USA, LLC, DAIMLERCHRYSLER CORPORATION, DAIMLERCHRYSLER MOTORS CO, INC LLC, Defendants: ALLAN M HUSS, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAIMLERCHRYSLER CORPORATION, AUBURN HILLS, MI; CARRIE M. ANDERSON, DAVID N. SOUTHARD, JAMES C. EGAN, JR, FERDOSE AL-TAIE, JOHN E. SCRIBNER, JONATHAN L. SICKLER, KIRSTEN A. LOCKHART, STEVEN A. NEWBORN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; CLIFFORD RUPRECHT, PIERCE, ATWOOD LLP, PORTLAND, ME; MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For SAAB CARS USA INC, SATURN CORPORATION, Defendants: DANIEL P. CHESIRE, LEAD ATTORNEY, LAMSON DUGAN LAW FIRM, OMAHA, NE; DANIEL E. LAYTIN, DAVID J. ZOTT, JEFFREY R MILLER, RICHARD C. GODFREY, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, CHICAGO, IL.

For VOLVO CARS OF NORTH AMERICA LLC, Defendant: MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC; WILLIAM R. SHERMAN, VERNER, LIIPFERT, BERNHARD, MCPHERSON & HAND, WASHINGTON, DC.

For AUDI OF AMERICA INC, Defendant: JERI [13] ROUSE LOONEY, JOHN M HOCHHAUSLER, PATRICIA A. MUSITANO,SUSAN J WELDE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, LORD BISSEL LAW FIRM CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES, CA; ROSEMARIE R. HORVATH, LEAD ATTORNEY, CITY OF OMAHA, OMAHA, NE.

For AUDI CANADA, VOLKSWAGEN CANADA INC, Defendants: JERI ROUSE LOONEY, LEAD ATTORNEY, LORD BISSEL LAW FIRM CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES, CA; ROSEMARIE R. HORVATH, LEAD ATTORNEY, CITY OF OMAHA, OMAHA, NE.

For VOLVO CARS OF CANADA LTD, Defendant: MARGARET M. ZWISLER, HOWRY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC; WILLIAM R. SHERMAN, VERNER, LIIPFERT, BERNHARD, MCPHERSON & HAND, WASHINGTON, DC.

For BASS FINEBERG LEASING INC, Defendant: CHRISTINA M JANICE, LEAD ATTORNEY, ROBERT W HARTMAN, ZASHIN & RICH CO., L.P.A., CLEVELAND, OH.

For GENERAL MOTORS ACCEPTANCE CORP, Defendant: CHRISTA C. COTTRELL, DANIEL E. LAYTIN, DAVID H. DECELLES, DAVID J. ZOTT, MATTHEW S. BUCKLEY, MATTHEW M. WAWRZYN, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, RICHARD C. GODFREY, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, CHICAGO, IL.

For DAIMLERCHRYSLER FINANCIAL SERVICES AMERICAS LLC, Defendant: ALLAN M HUSS, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAIMLERCHRYSLER CORPORATION, AUBURN HILLS, MI; CARRIE M. ANDERSON, JAMES C. EGAN, JR, FERDOSE AL-TAIE, KIRSTEN A. LOCKHART, WEIL, [14] LEAD ATTORNEYS, GOTSHAL & MANGES, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For CALIFORNIA STATE COURT PLAINTIFFS, Interested Party: ATHENA JIANGXIAO HOU, JUDITH A ZAHID, CRAIG C. CORBITT, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ZELLE, HOFMAN, VOELBEL, MASON & GETTE, LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; PAUL F. MACRI, WILLIAM D. ROBITZEK, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BERMAN & SIMMONS, P.A., LEWISTON, ME.

For NEW MEXICO STATE COURT PLAINTIFFS, Interested Party: H. LADDIE MONTAGUE, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; PAUL F. MACRI, WILLIAM D. ROBITZEK, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BERMAN & SIMMONS, P.A., LEWISTON, ME.

For DESTINE JOHNSON, HELEN J KERNS, C WAYNE BARTLEY, MELONIE C BANKS, Movants: W. GORDON BALL, LEAD ATTORNEY, BALL & SCOTT, KNOXVILLE, TN.

Judges: D. BROCK HORNBY, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: D. BROCK HORNBY

Opinion

[*78]

SUPPLEMENTAL ORDER ON CLASS CERTIFICATION OF STATE DAMAGE CLASSES

This case involves an alleged antitrust conspiracy to elevate or maintain U.S. car prices by preventing lower-priced Canadian cars from entering the American market. Remaining damage claims are based upon various state antitrust and consumer protection statutes. On May 12, 2006, I entered a [*79] preliminary order that approved certification [15] of separate Rule 23(b)(3) damage classes of retail purchasers in each of five "exemplar" states. Order on Mot. for Class Cert.: Exemplar State Damage Classes ("May 12 Order") (Docket Item 361). Although the defendants had not challenged the plaintiffs' proposed ending date ("the present") for the class, I became concerned about the typicality of certain named plaintiffs' claims. I reserved judgment on the ending date for membership in the five classes and permitted further discovery and briefing. After oral argument on February 21, 2007, I now conclude that the class period should end April 30, 2003. Cross-border arbitrage opportunities may have waxed and waned before that date, but their scope is a proper subject for antitrust impact and damage analysis when the record is complete. I also address the remaining proposed statewide damage classes, and direct the preparation of a certification order. Once it is entered, it will be final for appeal purposes under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f).

Ending Date

In my May 12 Order, I did not finally certify the five exemplar classes because under the typicality analysis I was uncertain that the [16] named plaintiffs' claims were "typical of the claims . . . of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P.

23(a)(3). HN1[] The Supreme Court has said that if, at the time the class is certified it is clear that the named plaintiffs suffered no injury, they cannot represent the class. Gen. Tel. Co. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 156, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982) (discussing East Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc., v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403, 97 S. Ct. 1891, 52 L. Ed. 2d 453 (1977)). [1] Here, comments by the plaintiffs' lawyers led me to conclude that at least one named plaintiff in Kansas had purchased his vehicle at a time when exchange rates made Canadian car prices higher than American cars, contrary to the overall theory of the plaintiffs' case. From the exchange, I thought that my concern involved a narrow question of determining actual prices and exchange rates. [2] As a result, I said in my May 12 Order:

> One final issue that comes up under typicality . . . raises concern about the ending date for the proposed classes: that particular named plaintiffs' claims (or the defenses to those claims) may not be typical of those of the class. As I have already noted, the plaintiffs virtually [17] concede that their Kansas plaintiff bought a car at a time, 2005, when the exchange rates were such that Canadian cars were priced higher than American cars; since there was no arbitrage opportunity, the conspiracy could not have increased American prices. This concession calls into question the chronological scope of the damage class: when should the class end? The plaintiffs' reply memorandum suggests that this is a discovery problem; that some defendants used data in their response to the plaintiffs' certification motion that the plaintiffs had not seen previously; that the plaintiffs need to see comparable data for all the defendants; and that therefore I should not deny certification based on a merely "speculative conflict." Essentially, the plaintiffs ask me to certify the class now at its broadest and worry later about its proper scope and whether the named plaintiffs' claims are typical.
>
> I do not believe that is the proper way to proceed. Instead, as to certification of the individual state damage classes, I defer decision until the pertinent discovery problems are resolved and I request Magistrate Judge Kravchuk to hold a prompt conference and set appropriate deadlines. Then [18] I will determine the class definition (and whether the named plaintiffs are representative).

May 12 Order at 25-26 (footnotes omitted).

In retrospect, I believe that I should have confined my expression of concern to the [*80] appropriateness of the particular named Kansas plaintiff, rather than raise a question about the class ending date; after all, the antitrust conspiracy to restrict supply is allegedly ongoing. Instead, I have provoked a debate over when the arbitrage [19] window of opportunity closed, or whether it was ever open, or how far open it needed to be, a far broader controversy than I expected and one that would require a complete determination of the plaintiffs' causation and damage case to resolve. [3]

[20] Specifically, in response to my May 12 Order, the plaintiffs engaged their economic expert, Dr. Robert E. Hall of Stanford University and the Hoover Institution, to perform data analysis. Dr. Hall assessed the profitability of purchasing new cars and light trucks in Canada and re-selling them in the United States. Expert Rpt. of Prof. Robert E. Hall on the Timing of Profitability of Exporting New Vehicles from Canada to the U.S. ("Hall Arbitrage Rpt.") (Docket Item 425). He examined various data and documents produced by the defendants, as well as some publicly

---

[1] A different question is presented if that fact appears after certification. Gen. Tel. Co., 457 U.S. at 156.

[2] Indeed, in rejecting then the defendants' challenge to the opening date of the class, I observed merely that the Fourth Amended Complaint "is broad enough to permit proof that the conspiracy had begun earlier [than January 1, 2001] and thus that impact could have started January 2001. Whether that assertion can be proven will await summary judgment or trial." May 12 Order at 25 n.46 (citation omitted).

[3] Both sides urge upon me the make-or-break effect of a class certification ("an intense pressure is brought to bear upon the defendants with no judicial finding that any fact out there is so," Hr'g Tr. p. 66, Feb. 21, 2007 (defendants); "So, you know, there is a flip side to his argument too, and that's why the courts that have considered class certification tend to urge certification, tend to lean in favor of certification because without it--and indeed the public policy surrounding Rule 23 recognizes that . . . without the device as the first step, the plaintiffs will never really ever be able to get their day in court," Id. pp. 85-86 (plaintiffs)). Certainly those generally recognized effects make me take very seriously the importance of the decision and reinforce my ordinary desire as a trial judge to "get it right," but they cannot lead me in one direction or the other. That would be an unprincipled rule of law.

available data and documents, id. P 3, and information he obtained from importers, id. P 35 n.32. Dr. Hall concluded that for the time period in question, the percentage of Canadian vehicles (weighted by sales) that had price gaps larger than export costs (the arbitrage opportunity that the conspiracy allegedly sought to preempt) declined to less than 10% after April 30, 2003. Hall Arbitrage Rpt. P 46. As a result, the plaintiffs proposed that the class ending date be moved back from their original proposal ("the present") to April 30, 2003. Pls.' Mot. & Mem. of L. for Class Cert. of the Non-Exemplar States ("Pls.' [21] Mot.") at 47 (Docket Item 418). The defendants, in turn, presented the analysis of their expert, Dr. Joseph P. Kalt of Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government. Expert Rpt. of Joseph P. Kalt ("Kalt Rpt.") (Docket Item 461, Ex. 3 part 1). Dr. Kalt found fault with Dr. Hall's computations on a variety of grounds (e.g., inadequate data and improper interpretation of data; improperly treating imported Canadian cars as "new"; failing to consider vertical unilateral restraints; choosing ten percent as the cutoff measure). Kalt Rpt. at 4-5. In response, the plaintiffs defended Dr. Hall's data and analysis and pointed out that without his ten percent calculation, the class period would end January, 2004. [4] Pls.' Reply Mem. of L. Concerning Class Cert. ("Pls.' Reply Mem.") at 6 (Docket Item 475); See also Hr'g Tr., Feb. 21, 2007, pp.15-16. They advanced that date as an alternate closing point for the class. Id.

[22] The defendants' primary unhappiness with Dr. Hall's analysis flows from their continuing insistence that I determine now whether the alleged horizontal conspiracy actually impacted American car prices. (They insist that it did not.) In my May 12 Order, I explained in detail why individual statewide damage classes are certifiable based upon various states' substantive law and why I would not make a final determination of the existence of antitrust impact at the certification stage. I see no need to reexamine that [*81] issue. [5] [25] The only question I address now is narrow: the proper ending point for the various statewide damage classes. In response to my expression of concern, I was expecting only uncontroversial evidence of exchange rates and actual prices so as to exclude a time period when Canadian car prices were higher than American. I was not seeking a precise calculation of the actual arbitrage opportunity from month to month and model to model or a decision now of how many available imports (or the threat of them) it would take to make American prices move (the 10% controversy). Realistically, that will be possible only after all pricing and damage discovery and expert analysis are [23] complete. [6] As I have said, I probably should have left the proposed ending date of the class untouched by my concern over the typicality of the named plaintiffs. But now the plaintiffs have admitted that they cannot prove damages to a class after April 30, 2003. I therefore end the class period at that date. I do not resolve the experts' conflict over the adequacy of the pricing data (the defendants did not provide full discovery in time for Dr. Hall's calculations, as he repeatedly points out, although the plaintiffs' lawyers seem to say that what he had was sufficient), how it is interpreted (issues such as proper interpretation of data entry fields in the Powers Information Network forms, see footnote 8 infra), the volume of threatened imports required to provoke movement in American car prices, etc. An ongoing illegal conspiracy to restrict supply justifies an open ending date for the class at this stage, narrowed only by the plaintiffs' admission. The alternative would be a complete assessment of antitrust causation and damages now, requiring

---

[4] Hall's rebuttal report actually says that without the ten percent calculation, the period of export profitability would have ended in May 2004 (suggesting an alternate class ending date of April 30, 2004 rather than January 2004). Rebuttal Expert Report of Prof. Robert E. Hall on the Timing of Profitability of Exporting New Vehicles from Canada to the United States ("Hall Rebuttal Rpt.") P 12 (Docket Item 475). Since the plaintiffs cite this paragraph of Hall's report as the basis for their January 2004 date, see Pls.' Reply Mem. at 6, I assume the January date is an error; but it is immaterial to my analysis because I accept the plaintiffs proposed ending date of April 30, 2003.

[5] Dr. Hall's analysis is persuasive that price differentials at some level inspire cross-border arbitrage opportunities. Whether an illegal agreement halting Canadian imports (or removing their threat) produced antitrust causation or retail purchase price impact remains to be proven at trial or demonstrated at summary judgment. The question for me at certification, however, is not who will win the merits of that argument, but whether the plaintiffs' proof, adequate or inadequate, meets the tests of commonality, impact and predominance. I concluded in my May 12 Order that it does. As I also observed then, this is not the time to determine what vertical restraints the individual manufacturers maintained, their legality and their effect.

[6] The commentators have said that HN2[] the class definition should be precise, Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 21.222 (2004), and that is so, in order that people can determine whether they are class members. Id. But precise or not, the accuracy of the ending date cannot be confidently established at certification in a case where causation and impact may diminish as outside market forces (e.g., exchange rates) fluctuate.

completion of fact and expert discovery. This would generate what PolyMedica warned against, an "unwieldy trial on the merits" [24] of causation at the class certification stage. [7] *In re PolyMedica [82] Corp. Sec. Litig., 432 F.3d 1, 17 (1st Cir. 2005). If, when we reach the stage of determining causation and damages, a class ending date of April 30, 2003, turns out to be too broad (or too narrow), the ending date can then be altered or amended. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1)(C); May 12 Order at 23 ("the defendants may be able to prove that the arbitrage opportunities in certain years were so limited that there would be no antitrust impact from a horizontal company"). My May 12 concern (over whether certain named plaintiffs could represent the class if they had purchased during a time when the arbitrage opportunity reversed) has been satisfied by substituting plaintiffs who purchased at a different time.

[26] I reiterate: for certification of the class, I do not finally determine when pricing impact appeared, disappeared or reappeared in response to varying arbitrage opportunities. Once the record is complete, that variation may provoke the creation of future subclasses, alteration of the scope of class certification, or judgment for the defendants in whole or in part. Indeed, the close of discovery and summary judgment practice will soon be upon us. The defendants can then advance their assertions based upon a complete record. [8]

7

PolyMedica held that "[t]he district court was entitled to look beyond the pleadings . . . in its resolution of the class-certification question." In re PolyMedica Corp. Sec. Litig., 432 F.3d 1, 19 (1st Cir. 2005). PolyMedica based that holding upon the statement from Tardiff that HN3[] "a court has the power to test disputed premises early on if and when the class action would be proper on one premise but not another," Tardiff v. Knox County, 365 F.3d 1, 4-5 (1st Cir. 2004); from Smilow that a "district court must conduct a rigorous analysis of the prerequisites established by Rule 23 before certifying a class," Smilow v. Southwestern Bell Mobile Sys., 323 F.3d 32, 38 (1st Cir. 2003); from Mowbray that "a district court must formulate some prediction as to how specific issues will play out in order to determine whether common or individual issues predominate in a given case," In re Waste Mgmt. Holdings, Inc., v. Mowbray, 208 F.3d 288, 298 (1st Cir. 2000); and PolyMedica's preference for "the majority view" which it characterized as: "a district court is not limited to the allegations raised in the complaint, and should instead make whatever legal and factual inquiries are necessary to an informed determination of the certification issues." PolyMedica, 432 F.3d at 5. I do not read PolyMedica as mandating a particular level of factfinding by the district judge at the certification stage. First, under all the cited cases considerable discretion is left to the district judge. Second, what is appropriate for determining whether there is an efficient market in a securities case is quite different from market determinations, market behavior and market definitions for antitrust purposes. I continue to believe that I followed the teaching of PolyMedica correctly in examining the proof the plaintiffs will use and the defenses the defendants will raise. I have looked "beyond the pleadings," "test[ed] designated premises," "conduct[ed] a rigorous analysis of the [Rule 23] prerequisites," tried to predict "how specific issues will play out," and made the inquiries I believe are necessary. See May 12 Order at 16-24. PolyMedica also counsels:

> Exercising its broad discretion, and understanding the correct definition [in PolyMedica, of an efficient market] and the factors relevant to that determination, the district court must evaluate the plaintiff's evidence of [in PolyMedica, an efficient market] critically without allowing the defendant to turn the class-certification proceeding into an unwieldy trial on the merits.

432 F. 3d at 17 (emphasis original).

[8] There would also be some procedural unfairness in making an entirely new ruling on the record now. Magistrate Judge Kravchuk made perfectly clear as she arranged for discovery and briefing on the class-ending-date issue that she was not reopening my original May 12 decision. Rpt. of June 1, 2006 Disc. Conf. and Order, at 2 (Docket Item 369) ("[W]hile the court certainly wanted to hear from both sides regarding the economic analysis underlying the proposed 'closing date,' this briefing opportunity was not intended as a relitigation of the motion for class certification."). If I were inclined now to reverse my ruling of May 12, in fairness I would have to allow the plaintiffs fulsome discovery on all the issues that the defendants have posed and give notice that the entire issue of damage class certification was up for reexamination. For the same reason, I do not resolve a computation controversy the specifics of which emerged just days before the hearing, a controversy that continues to develop. (On December 1, 2006, Dr. Kalt said that Dr. Hall wrongly interpreted certain data entries made by the Power Information Network, LLC, which compiles automobile pricing data for certain manufacturers, Kalt Rpt. at 24-25; Dr. Hall responded on December 15, 2006, that he had interpreted the data entries correctly, citing published articles, which I have examined. Hall Rebuttal Rpt. PP 15-16. Nothing further happened on the record until February 16, 2007, five days before the February 21, 2007, oral argument, when the defendants filed an affidavit by a Power employee stating that Dr. Hall had misinterpreted the data entries. Decl. of Mike Murray (Docket Item 519). Clearly the plaintiffs were not in a position to respond to that late-filed

[27] *Additional Damage Class Certifications

The plaintiffs ask me now to certify damage classes for one more exemplar state, Kansas (I earlier declined to do so because their Kansas plaintiff purchased at a time when the arbitrage opportunity seemed to flow the other direction; now they have a plaintiff who purchased when the arbitrage opportunity was more demonstrable), and for the remaining seventeen states where they have state antitrust and/or consumer protection claims. Initially, I was reluctant, preferring to await any appellate guidance that the defendants might obtain if they persuade the First Circuit to accept their interlocutory appeal. But under Rule 23(f) as amended, each class certification is subject to discretionary interlocutory appeal, so it is preferable to make the certification decisions now. I see no reason to repeat my May 12 exercise for each of Kansas and the other 17 states. The briefing on both sides has been excellent, but neither side has presented anything to show that the substantive laws of any of these additional states will fall outside the range of analysis that I performed in my May 12 Order. I conclude that the May 12 analysis, finding [28] statewide damage classes appropriate under Rule 23(b)(3) for the substantive law of each of the five states then at issue, would produce the same conclusion for [*83] a separate statewide damage class here for each of the remaining 18 states.

There is one new issue. The defendants argue that four of the additional states (Georgia, Mississippi, Montana, Utah) prohibit class actions as a matter of state law and, as a result, that I may not certify a statewide damage class for any of those four states.

I start with Mississippi, where the plaintiffs make a state law antitrust claim. HN4[] Mississippi does not provide for class actions in its state courts at all. That is Mississippi's choice to make as a matter of state procedure for its state courts, but not for the federal courts. The defendants have drawn to my attention no attempt by Mississippi to limit the plaintiffs' substantive rights under Mississippi's antitrust law (unlike consumer protection where Mississippi does have a statutory prohibition of class actions. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-15(4)). As I stated in my May 12 Order, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 sets the [29] procedural criteria for when class actions are permitted in federal court and a federal judge must follow that Rule. I conclude that a class is properly certifiable under Federal Rule 23 to enforce Mississippi antitrust law. See Hanna v. Plumer, 380 U.S. 460, 85 S. Ct. 1136, 14 L. Ed. 2d 8 (1965); 7A Charles Alan Wright et. al., Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 3d, § 1758 at 118 (3d ed. 2005) ("The Hanna decision resolves any doubt as to the availability of a class action in a federal court under Rule 23 in a diversity action, even in a state that does not recognize the procedure."); Erwin Chemerinsky, Federal Jurisdiction, § 5.3 at 317 (Aspen Law & Business 4th ed. 2003) ("[I]t is now clearly established that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure . . . are to be applied by the federal court, even if there is a conflicting state requirement and even if the application of the federal Rule might determine the outcome of the case."); Linda S. Mullenix, Should Mississippi Adopt a Class-Action Rule--Balancing the Equities: Ten Considerations that Mississippi Rulemakers Ought to take into Account in Evaluating Whether to Adopt a State Class-Action Rule, 24 Miss. C.L. Rev. 217, 218-19 & nn.8-9 (2005) [30] (citing several cases involving class action practice under Federal Rule 23 in federal courts based on Mississippi state law claims).

Georgia, Montana and Utah are different. In each of those states, the plaintiffs' claim arises under the consumer protection statute. In creating a consumer substantive right to relief, each respective statute defines the damages a consumer can recover by simultaneously eliminating or severely limiting the consumer's ability to use a class action in the process. HN5[] Georgia provides that under its consumer protection statute, an injured consumer "may bring an action individually, but not in a representative capacity." Ga. Code Ann. § 10-1-399. HN6[] In Montana, a consumer can sue for actual damages, or $ 500 if greater, and attorney fees, but only as "an individual but not a class action." Mont. Code Ann. § 30-14-133. HN7[] Utah allows actual damages, or $ 2,000 if greater, "but not in a class action" (unless the transaction violated a specific administrative rule or court decision, and then a class action is available). Utah Code Ann. § 13-11-19. I conclude that these three states [31] have gone beyond merely procedural rules and have defined the substantive recovery available to an injured consumer (e.g., an individual fixed-damage recovery floor, but no class recovery) or defined the capacity to sue (no representative capacity).

affidavit before the hearing; post-hearing briefing continues to develop the issue. I learned only yesterday from the defendants' reply memorandum that Power maintains different sets of data with different applicable glossaries. I am not in a position to resolve that controversy now.)

HN8[] The First Circuit reads Hanna "as stating a principle for resolving a direct conflict between two strictly procedural rules," Marshall v. Mulrenin, 508 F.2d 39, 44 (1st Cir. 1974); accord Gil-De-Rebollo v. The Miami Heat Assoc., Inc., 137 F.3d 56 (1st Cir. 1998). It rejects the proposition "that Hanna commands that the Federal Rules be woodenly applied irrespective of a discoverable substantive, as distinguished from a merely procedural, state purpose." Marshall, 508 F.2d at 44. The Seventh Circuit is even more explicit:

> The second class of pretty easy cases is where the state procedural rule, though undeniably "procedural" in the ordinary sense of the term, is limited to a particular substantive area, such as contract law, or tort law. For then the state's intention to influence substantive outcomes is manifest [*84] and would be defeated by allowing parties to shift their [32] litigation into federal court unless the state's rule was applied there as well.

S.A. Healy Co. v. Milwaukee Metro. Sewerage Dist., 60 F.3d 305, 310 (7th Cir. 1995) (citations omitted). [9] For Georgia, Montana and Utah the consumer class limitation is substantive. [10] [33] HN9[] When the issue is one of state substance and federal procedure, the state substantive rule controls. Therefore, I conclude that a statewide damage class is not certifiable for Georgia, Montana and Utah, but is certifiable for each of 15 additional states. [11]

Trial Manageability

My May 12 Order assumed a separate trial for each statewide damage class. I then learned that both sides had been proceeding on the understanding that there would be a single trial of all remaining states. I directed the plaintiffs to propose a trial management plan for such an approach. See Procedural Order of June 16, 2006 (Docket Item 376). They have done so, and the defendants have criticized it. I choose not to resolve their disagreements over consolidated trial management at this time. My class certification is state-by-state, not some national, regional, or other grouping of states. Any manageability issues under the class action rules, therefore, should be judged on the basis of each single statewide class, and I conclude (as I did in my May 12 Order) that each statewide antitrust or consumer protection class action is separately manageable. When we are closer [34] to trial, and I can determine how many states remain in play, that will be a better time to assess whether it is best to proceed to trial state-by-state, as I had originally assumed, or allow some kind of consolidation under Fed. R. Civ. P. 42.

Conclusion

I am prepared now to enter my final order certifying a statewide damage class separately for each of the 20 states. That order is based upon the state substantive law of each of those states and federal procedural (class action) law. By April 11, 2007, the plaintiffs shall file a proposed order that meets all the requirement of Rule 23(c)(1)(B) (defining the class, the claims, issues, defenses and re-appointing class counsel). The defendants shall respond within fourteen days thereafter, but need not renew the objections they have raised already. I defer notice issues (discretionary for the 23(b)(2) injunctive class; mandatory for the 20 separate 23(b)(3) damages classes; mandatory for the proposed settlement classes for defendants Toyota and CADA [12]; and mandatory for the proposed dismissal

---

[9] Daigle v. Maine Med. Ctr., Inc., 14 F.3d 684, 689 (1st Cir. 1994), is similar: "Since the federal Evidence Rules governing hearsay and impeachment do not seek to displace the Health Act's policy of limiting frivolous malpractice suits, the federal rules [which the court did not enforce] and the state statute can peacefully coexist, each operating within its own sphere of influence."

[10] These states appear to be unlike Alabama, where HN10[] the state supreme court has held that Alabama's ban on class actions in consumer cases extends to every other state's deceptive practices law if the lawsuit is in Alabama state court and has labeled the bar on class actions as a procedural bar. See O'Keefe v. Mercedes-Benz USA, 214 F.R.D. 266, 285 (E.D. Pa. 2003) (discussing Ex Parte Exxon Corp., 725 So. 2d 930 (Al. 1998)).

[11] The states are: Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, South Dakota, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

[12] At oral argument I expressed my concern that a class member would not be able to make an intelligent decision whether to opt out of the proposed settlement classes given the current state of proceedings, as well as my concern over the expense and confusion of several successive notices.

of NADA) until I understand what the First Circuit intends to do and can hear further [35] about notice from counsel.

SO ORDERED.

DATED THIS 21ST DAY OF MARCH, 2007

/s/ D. BROCK HORNBY

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Lori Rubinstein Physical Therapy, Inc. v. PTPN, Inc.

Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division Four

March 23, 2007, Filed

B187172

Reporter

148 Cal. App. 4th 1130 *; 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 351 ; 2007 Cal. App. LEXIS 415 ; 2007 Cal. Daily Op. Service 3077; 2007 Daily Journal DAR 3867; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,651

LORI RUBINSTEIN PHYSICAL THERAPY, INC., et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. PTPN, INC., et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Subsequent History: Rehearing denied by Lori Rubenstein Physical Therapy v. PTPN, Inc., 2007 Cal. App. LEXIS 789 (Cal. App. 2d Dist., Apr. 10, 2007)

Time for Granting or Denying Review Extended Lori Rubinstein Physical Therapy, Inc. v. PTPN, Inc., 2007 Cal. LEXIS 7136 (Cal., June 22, 2007)

Review denied by Lori Rubinstein v. Ptpn, 2007 Cal. LEXIS 7741 (Cal., July 18, 2007)

Disposition: The court affirmed the trial court's judgment.

Core Terms

providers, preferred provider, insurers, subscribers, antitrust, physical therapy, restrictions, geographic, contracting, rates, anti trust law, negotiate, immunity statute, healthcare, efficient-sized, formation, plans, unfair competition, patients, health care service plan, violates, compete, costs, physical therapist, Cartwright Act, regulations, immunized, forces

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Antitrust laws rest on the premise that the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of democratic political and social institutions. Antitrust laws place primary reliance on market forces to discipline economic behavior. If a monopoly or a cartel is created, the antitrust laws may be invoked to restore a situation of diffused power, but once that competitive balance is restored, there should be no need for continuing government oversight. The invisible hand of the market provides the discipline, so no regulators or bureaucrats are required once the proper competitive balance is restored. Thus, ordinarily, antitrust laws are invoked to condemn restraints on competition such as market allocations and group boycotts because it is understood that market forces unhampered by these restraints will restore a proper competitive balance and produce the most efficient allocation of resources. Unique aspects of the health care market serve to distort the market forces and make it less likely that market forces alone will produce efficient allocation, high quality, and lower prices.

Healthcare Law > Managed Healthcare > General Overview

HN2[] Healthcare Law, Managed Healthcare

Health & Saf. Code, § 1373.9, requires insurers offering preferred provider organization (PPO) plans to give reasonable consideration to proposals by providers wishing to contract to become preferred providers, unless the providers propose to serve a geographic area that is adequately served by the PPO plans' existing preferred providers.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN3[] Healthcare Litigation, Antitrust Actions

Ins. Code § 10133, allows an insurer to contract for alternative rates with any provider and offer the benefit of those alternative rates to their insureds. The antitrust laws cannot be applied to forbid that which another statute expressly allows.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4[] Legislation, Interpretation

Statutes must be construed with reference to the whole system of law of which they are a part so that all may be harmonized and have effect.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN5[] Healthcare Litigation, Antitrust Actions

Ins. Code § 10133, allows an insurer to contract with any provider to become a preferred provider, and Health & Saf. Code, § 1373.9, requires the insurer to consider proposals by other providers wishing to become preferred providers only if the existing preferred providers do not adequately serve the geographic area proposed to be served by the other providers. The consumers' interests are protected by the extensive regulatory oversight to ensure that each plan has sufficient preferred providers in the areas in which it operates to adequately serve those subscribers. Cal. Code Regs., tit. 28, §§ 1300.51, 1300.67.2, 1300.67.2.1. Thus, the simple allegation that an insurer has entered into an exclusive contract with a provider group does not describe conduct that violates the antitrust laws. This is not to say there can never be an antitrust violation if one or more providers or provider groups use coercion, threats, or intimidation to convince an insurer to refuse to negotiate with other providers or provider groups.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN6[] Healthcare Litigation, Antitrust Actions

Combinations or groups of providers formed as efficient-sized contracting units are a new product within the health care marketplace and are subject only to those antitrust prohibitions applicable to the conduct of other presumptively legitimate enterprises. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770, subd. (g); Ins. Code § 10133.6; Health & Saf. Code, § 1342.6. In other words, the groups' conduct in forming efficient-sized contracting units is exempt from the antitrust laws, although their conduct in negotiating alternative rates of payment is subject to antitrust enforcement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Constitutional Law > Separation of Powers

HN7[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Although the unfair competition law's scope is sweeping, it is not unlimited. Courts may not simply impose their own notions of the day as to what is fair or unfair. Specific legislation may limit the judiciary's power to declare conduct unfair. If the legislature has permitted certain conduct or considered a situation and concluded no action should lie, courts may not override that determination. When specific legislation provides a safe harbor, plaintiffs may not use the general unfair competition law to assault that harbor.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

Plaintiffs, [1] providers of physical therapy services, filed suit against defendants, a corporation that negotiated with health insurers to become a preferred provider group and one of the insurers with whom the corporation negotiated alternative rates of payment. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants violated California's antitrust and unfair competition laws (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 17200 et seq.) by engaging in an improper market allocation through the corporation's geographic restrictions and by engaging in a group boycott through the insurer's exclusive contract with the corporation. The corporation was alleged to be the largest group of physical therapy providers in California. The trial court granted defendants' motions for judgment on the pleadings. (Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. BC317517, Carl J. West, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment. There was no doubt that the contractual relationship between defendants inhibited plaintiffs' ability to compete, at least on a price basis, because of the low out-of-pocket costs to patients who utilized the services of the corporation's members; however, that competitive disadvantage is expressly authorized by Ins. Code, § 10133. Moreover, by choosing to subscribe to a preferred provider organization (PPO) plan, the subscribers themselves impaired the nonpreferred providers' ability to compete for their business. To the extent that the subscribers' choice to limit competition among providers might result in higher costs and/or decreased quality, the subscribers were protected by the statutory and regulatory scheme designed to ensure that PPO plan subscribers have adequate access to high quality and cost effective health care. Furthermore, the simple allegation that an insurer has entered into an exclusive contract with a provider group does not describe conduct that violates the antitrust laws. The corporation's imposition of geographic restrictions was expressly immunized by Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770, subd. (g), Ins. Code, § 10133.6, and Health & Saf. Code, § 1342.6. (Opinion by Willhite, J., with Epstein, P. J., and Manella, J., concurring.) [*1131]

Headnotes

CA(1)[] (1)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 1—Purpose of Antitrust Laws—Health Care Market.

Antitrust laws rest on the premise that the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of democratic political and social institutions. Antitrust laws place primary reliance on market forces to discipline economic behavior. If a monopoly or a cartel is created, the antitrust laws may be invoked to restore a situation of diffused power, but once that competitive balance is restored, there should be no need for continuing government oversight. The invisible hand of the market provides the discipline, so no regulators or bureaucrats are required once the proper competitive balance is restored. Thus, ordinarily, antitrust laws are invoked to condemn restraints on competition such as market allocations and group boycotts because it is understood that market forces unhampered by these restraints will restore a proper competitive balance and produce the most efficient allocation of resources. Unique aspects of the health care market serve to distort the market forces and make it less likely that market forces alone will produce efficient allocation, high quality, and lower prices.

CA(2)[] (2)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 1—Health Care Market—Contracts Conferring Preferred Provider Status—Alternative Rates—Immunity from Antitrust Liability.

A nonpreferred health care provider's ability to compete was inhibited, at least on a price basis, by the contractual relationship between a corporation that negotiated to become a preferred provider group and one of the health insurers with whom the corporation negotiated alternative rates of payment because of the low out-of-pocket costs to patients who utilized the services of the corporation's members. That competitive disadvantage, however, is expressly authorized by statute. Ins. Code, § 10133, allows an insurer to contract for alternative rates with any provider and offer the benefit of those alternative rates to its insureds. The antitrust laws cannot be applied to forbid that which another statute expressly allows.

[Simon et al., Matthew Bender Practice Guide: Cal. Unfair Competition and Business Torts (2004) § 5.77; 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Contracts, § 593; 13 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Equity, § 107.]

[*1132] CA(3)[] (3)

Statutes § 39—Construction—Giving Effect—Harmonizing.

Statutes must be construed with reference to the whole system of law of which they are a part so that all may be harmonized and have effect.

CA(4)[] (4)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 1—Health Care Market—Contracts Conferring Preferred Provider Status—Immunity from Antitrust Liability.

Ins. Code, § 10133, allows an insurer to contract with any provider to become a preferred provider, and Health & Saf. Code, § 1373.9, requires the insurer to consider proposals by other providers wishing to become preferred providers only if the existing preferred providers do not adequately serve the geographic area proposed to be served by the other providers. The consumers' interests are protected by the extensive regulatory oversight to ensure that each plan has sufficient preferred providers in the areas in which it operates to adequately serve those subscribers (Cal. Code Regs., tit. 28, §§ 1300.51, 1300.67.2, 1300.67.2.1). Thus, the simple allegation that an insurer has entered into an exclusive contract with a provider group does not describe conduct that violates the antitrust laws. This is not to say there can never be an antitrust violation if one or more providers or provider groups use coercion, threats, or intimidation to convince an insurer to refuse to negotiate with other providers or provider groups.

CA(5)[] (5)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 1—Health Care Market—Groups of Providers Forming Efficient-sized Contracting Units—Immunity from Antitrust Liability.

Combinations or groups of providers formed as efficient-sized contracting units are a new product within the health care marketplace and are subject only to those antitrust prohibitions applicable to the conduct of other presumptively legitimate enterprises (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770, subd. (g); Ins. Code, § 10133.6; Health & Saf. Code, § 1342.6). In other words, the groups' conduct in forming efficient-sized contracting units is exempt from the antitrust laws, although their conduct in negotiating alternative rates of payment is subject to antitrust enforcement.

CA(6)[] (6)

Unfair Competition § 1—Scope—Legislative Limitations on Courts' Ability to Declare Conduct Unfair—Safe Harbor Provisions.

Although the unfair competition law's scope is sweeping, it is not unlimited. Courts may not simply impose their own notions of the day as to what is fair or unfair. Specific legislation may limit the judiciary's power to declare conduct unfair. If the Legislature has permitted certain conduct or considered a situation and concluded no action should lie, [*1133] courts may not override that determination. When specific legislation provides a safe harbor, plaintiffs may not use the general unfair competition law to assault that harbor.

Counsel: The Foundation for Taxpayer and Consumer Rights, Harvey Rosenfield, Pamela Pressley; Blecher & Collins, Maxwell M. Blecher and James Robert Noblin for Plaintiffs and Appellants.

Hooper, Lundy & Bookman, Blake R. Jones and Jay N. Hartz for Defendant and Respondent PTPN, Inc.

Hogan & Hartson, Gary L. Urwin and Richard L. Stone for Defendant and Respondent Blue Cross of California.

Judges: Willhite, J., with Epstein, P. J., and Manella, J., concurring.

Opinion by: Willhite

Opinion

[352] WILLHITE, J.—In 1982, the California Legislature enacted legislation that paved the way for the proliferation of a new kind of health care service plan, the preferred provider organization (PPO). That year, the Legislature amended Insurance Code section 10133 to allow private health insurers to contract with hospitals and providers of [353] medical services for alternative rates of payment for those services, thus permitting insurers to create panels of "preferred providers" for the insurers' subscribers. That amendment was followed a few years later by legislation that enables providers to form groups [2] or combinations to more efficiently negotiate with insurers to become preferred providers. In doing so, the Legislature immunized certain conduct from antitrust liability. In this case, we are asked to determine whether the conduct of one such group of providers (which imposed territorial restrictions on its members) and one insurer (which made the members of that group the virtually exclusive preferred providers for physical therapy services) comes within the scope of this immunity. We hold that it does.

BACKGROUND [1]

[*3] There are two named defendants in this lawsuit. The first is PTPN, Inc., a corporation that was founded by independently owned and licensed physical [*1134] therapy practices to negotiate with health insurers to become a preferred provider group. The second is Blue Cross of California, one of the insurers with whom PTPN negotiated alternative rates of payment. PTPN, which is alleged to be the largest group of physical therapy providers in California, limits its membership based in part upon geographic considerations; it does not allow new members whose practices are located within a certain radius of an existing member's practice. For the most part, the members of PTPN are the exclusive preferred providers of physical therapy services for Blue Cross, which is alleged to be the largest provider of PPO coverage in California. [2] PTPN also has contracted with many other insurers, including most managed care organizations in the country, to make PTPN members the preferred providers of physical therapy services for those insurers.

[*4] Under the Blue Cross PPO plan, a member of PTPN who provides physical therapy services to a Blue Cross subscriber will receive the negotiated rate of payment as a preferred provider directly from Blue Cross. If a Blue Cross subscriber receives treatment from a physical therapist who is not a preferred provider, the subscriber must pay for the treatment and may receive a small portion of that payment as reimbursement from Blue Cross.

Plaintiffs Lori Rubinstein Physical Therapy, Inc., and One on One PT are providers of physical therapy services. They are not, however, members of PTPN, and are not preferred providers for Blue Cross's PPO plan. They filed the instant action on behalf of themselves and all other non-PTPN-affiliated physical therapist providers in California (they estimate there are tens of thousands of such providers). Plaintiffs allege that PTPN and Blue [354] Cross violate California's antitrust and unfair competition laws (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 17200 et seq.) by engaging in an improper market allocation (through PTPN's geographic restrictions) and a group boycott (through Blue Cross's exclusive contract with PTPN). They [5] assert that Blue Cross's exclusive arrangement with PTPN and PTPN's restrictions on membership unlawfully restrain competition for Blue Cross insured patients and have foreclosed actual and potential competitors of PTPN members from competing on the [*1135] merits for patients with private health insurance. They assert this restraint on competition has resulted in higher prices to patients, less innovation, less variety in service offerings, and lower quality in physical therapy services. [3] They seek an injunction prohibiting PTPN and Blue Cross from imposing any geographic restrictions on members of PTPN, from imposing a group boycott against non-PTPN members, and from making PTPN the exclusive physical therapy providers for any insurer.

---

[1] Because this appeal comes to us following the granting of motions for judgment on the pleadings, which are equivalent to demurrers (Smiley v. Citibank (1995) 11 Cal.4th 138, 146 [44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 441, 900 P.2d 690]), our statement of facts is based upon the allegations of the second amended complaint. "[W]e treat as true all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law. [Citation.] However, we disregard allegations that are contrary to law or to facts that may be judicially noticed [citation] or are contradicted by the express terms of an exhibit incorporated into the complaint. [Citation.]" (Freeman v. San Diego Assn. of Realtors (1999) 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 178, fn. 3 [91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534].)

[2] The complaint alleges there are some physical therapists who are not members of PTPN who are preferred providers for Blue Cross "for idiosyncratic reasons"—e.g., some may have been "grandfathered" into their status as preferred providers, and some are affiliated with physician groups that are preferred providers.

[3] For example, plaintiffs allege that Blue Cross subscribers may not be able to receive the physical therapy they need because some PTPN members have more patients than they can adequately serve and thus limit their appointments to 15 minutes rather than a full hour, or because the PTPN member practicing in the subscriber's location may not be qualified to provide certain specialized treatments.

[*6] PTPN and Blue Cross moved for judgment on the pleadings. [4] The trial court granted their motions, finding that the conduct at issue was authorized by statute and that plaintiffs failed to allege an antitrust violation under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) or under Business and Professions Code section 17200. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

[7] DISCUSSION

A. The Legislative Scheme Facilitating PPO Plans

HN1[] CA(1)[] (1) Antitrust laws "rest 'on the premise that the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of our economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of our democratic political and social institutions.' [Citation.]" (Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson (1976) 16 Cal.3d 920, 935 [130 Cal. Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833].) As one treatise explains, "Antitrust laws place primary reliance on market forces to discipline economic behavior. If a monopoly or a cartel is created, the antitrust laws may be invoked to restore a situation of diffused power, but once that competitive balance is restored, there should be [*1136] no need for continuing government oversight. The 'invisible hand' of the market provides the discipline, so no regulators or bureaucrats are required once the proper competitive balance is restored." (Sullivan & Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated [355] Handbook (2000) § 1.3, pp. 5–6, fn. omitted.) Thus, ordinarily, antitrust laws are [8] invoked to condemn restraints on competition such as market allocations and group boycotts because it is understood that market forces unhampered by these restraints will restore a proper competitive balance and produce the most efficient allocation of resources.

But, as many commentators acknowledge, unique aspects of the health care market serve to distort the market forces and make it less likely that market forces alone will produce efficient allocation, high quality, and lower prices. (See, e.g., Greaney, Chicago's Procrustean Bed: Applying Antitrust Law in Health Care (2004) 71 Antitrust L.J. 857, 858, 863–866; Sage & Hammer, Competing on Quality of Care: The Need to Develop a Competition Policy for Health Care Markets (1999) 32 U. Mich. J.L. Reform 1069, 1072–1073; Sullivan & Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated Handbook, supra, § 13.4, pp. 670–671.) Indeed, as a result of these distortions, health care costs soared in the absence of government intervention and regulation. (Woo, Antitrust and California's New Preferred Provider Organization Legislation: A New Alternative in Health Care Cost Containment (1984) 12 Pepperdine L.Rev. 121, p. 121, fn. 1 [9] (hereafter Woo).)

In 1982, the California Legislature sought to contain those rising costs by enacting legislation designed to encourage the development of PPO plans. (Stats. 1982, ch. 329, § 8, p. 1613.) In a PPO plan, there is a designated panel of preferred providers with whom a third party payor has contracted to provide medical services to insureds at discounted rates. The providers agree to discount their rates in part because they are guaranteed a defined pool of patients who have an economic incentive to use a preferred provider. Although the insureds typically are not precluded from using providers who are not preferred providers, they have to pay significantly more for services from nonpreferred providers. (Woo, supra, 12 Pepperdine L.Rev., at pp. 124–125.)

To facilitate the development of PPO plans, the Legislature amended Insurance Code section 10133 to allow an insurer to "negotiate and enter into contracts for alternative rates of payment with institutional [and, after July 1, 1983, with professional] providers, and offer the benefit of these alternative rates to insureds who select those providers." (Ins. Code, § 10133, [10] subds. (b), (e).) Alternatively, the Legislature permitted insurers to "limit payments under [*1137] a policy to services secured by insureds from institutional [and] professional providers, charging alternative rates pursuant to contract with the insurer." (Ins. Code, § 10133, subd. (c).)

[4] There were, in fact, several motions for judgment on the pleadings. PTPN and Blue Cross filed two motions, one asserting statutory authorization and the other asserting lack of antitrust injury, directed at the first amended complaint (plaintiffs filed the first amended complaint before serving the original complaint on either defendant). The trial court granted those motions with leave to amend. Plaintiffs filed a second amended complaint containing minor revisions. Noting there was little difference between the first and second amended complaints, the trial court deemed the original motions for judgment on the pleadings to be motions directed to the second amended complaint, and allowed the parties to file supplemental briefs. The parties did so, and the court subsequently granted the motions without leave to amend and entered judgment against plaintiffs.

The Legislature subsequently found in 1985, however, that individual providers "have not proven to be efficient-sized bargaining units for these contracts" and that groups or combinations of providers would be more efficient-sized contracting units for PPO plans. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770, subd. (d); Ins. Code, § 10133.6; Health & Saf. Code, § 1342.6.) But because the formation of these groups required an agreement among competitors, the Legislature recognized that antitrust laws were serving as a disincentive to the formation of such groups due to providers' concerns that they would be "found guilty of committing per se antitrust violations." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770, subd. (e).) To alleviate this problem, the Legislature enacted three virtually identical [11] statutes stating its intent "that the formation of groups and combinations of providers and purchasing groups for the purpose of creating efficient-sized contracting units be recognized as the creation of a new product within the health care marketplace, and be subject, [356] therefore, only to those antitrust prohibitions applicable to the conduct of other presumptively legitimate enterprises." [5] (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770, subd. (g); Health & Saf. Code, § 1342.6; see Ins. Code, § 10133.6.) For ease of reference, we refer to these statutes collectively as the immunity statute.

[*12] In addition to this portion of the statutory scheme designed to facilitate the development of PPO plans, the Legislature enacted statutes to provide regulatory oversight of the plans and "to promote the delivery and the quality of health and medical care to the people … who enroll in, or subscribe for the services rendered by, a health care service plan." (Health & Saf. Code, [*1138] § 1342.) To that end, the Legislature created the Department of Managed Health Care, which "has charge of the execution of the laws of this state relating to health care service plans and the health care service plan business including, but not limited to, those laws directing the department to ensure that health care service plans provide enrollees with access to quality health care services and protect and promote the interests of enrollees." (Health & Saf. Code, § 1341, subd. (a).) The Legislature also directed the Insurance Commissioner, in consultation with the Department of Managed Health Care, to promulgate regulations "designed to assure accessibility of provider services in a timely manner" to PPO plan subscribers in a cost efficient [13] manner. (Ins. Code, § 10133.5, subd. (b).) [6] [14] The Legislature further directed the Governor to convene a task force on health care service plans to research, among other things, how the changes in health care delivery have affected the health care economy and whether the goals of managed care (such as controlling costs and improving quality and access to care) are being satisfied. (Health & Saf. Code, § 1342.1.) Finally, the Legislature enacted HN2[] Health and Safety Code section 1373.9, which requires insurers offering PPO plans to give "reasonable consideration" to proposals by providers wishing to contract to become preferred providers, unless

---

[5] The Legislature's reference to the creation of a "new product" is in response to the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society (1982) 457 U.S. 332 [73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466], to which the Legislature cited in Business and Professions Code section 16770, subdivision (e). In Maricopa, the Supreme Court held that groups of physicians who agreed to maximum fee schedules for reimbursement by insurance companies committed per se antitrust violations. The Supreme Court rejected the provider groups' reliance on Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS (1979) 441 U.S. 1 [60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551] for the proposition that their fee schedules involved price fixing only in a literal sense and did not constitute illegal price fixing. The court in Maricopa explained that in Broadcast Music, the blanket license that was offered was an entirely new product that was different from the product an individual composer could offer, whereas the provider groups in Maricopa were offering the same product—medical services—but simply were offering them at a fixed price. (Maricopa, supra, 457 U.S. at pp. 355–357 [73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466].) By referring in the immunity statute to the provider groups as a "new product," the Legislature emphasized that the formation of those groups to offer services at fixed prices would not constitute illegal price fixing.

[6] Those regulations are found in title 28 of the California Code of Regulations, and include detailed requirements related to patient accessibility to services and geographic accessibility standards. (See, e.g., Cal. Code Regs., tit. 28, §§ 1300.67.2, 1300.67.2.1.)

the providers propose to serve a geographic area that is adequately served by the PPO plans' existing preferred providers. [7]

[357] It is against the backdrop of all these statutes and regulations that we must analyze plaintiffs' claims.

B. Plaintiffs' Claims Evaluated Under the Legislative Scheme

Plaintiffs contend that PTPN's geographic restrictions on membership, coupled with Blue Cross's designation of PTPN members as the exclusive preferred providers of physical therapy services, foreclose non-PTPN physical therapists from competing to provide services [15] to Blue Cross subscribers. They argue that although the immunity statute authorizes the formation of provider networks, it does not allow those networks to violate the antitrust [*1139] laws—which prohibit group boycotts and territorial market allocations—while doing so. They also assert that even if the immunity statute immunized all activity in connection with the formation of provider networks, the conduct at issue is not conduct related to the formation of PTPN, but rather it is conduct related to the operation of the PTPN network and PTPN's contractual relationship with Blue Cross.

In examining whether the conduct alleged constitutes an unlawful restraint on competition that is not exempt from antitrust enforcement under the immunity statute, it is important to distinguish between the two markets in which plaintiffs compete with PTPN and/or its members. The first market involves competition to provide physical therapy services to patients, including Blue Cross PPO plan subscribers—a market in which plaintiffs compete with PTPN members. The second market involves the competition to become Blue Cross preferred providers—a market in which plaintiffs compete with PTPN itself [16] (rather than its individual members). We examine each area of competition to determine if the complaint alleges a cognizable unlawful restraint.

1. Competition to Provide Services to Blue Cross Subscribers

The complaint alleges that, due to the exclusive contract between Blue Cross and PTPN, plaintiffs and other non-PTPN physical therapists cannot reasonably compete to provide physical therapy services to Blue Cross PPO plan subscribers. The reason: The subscribers are required to pay far more to receive services from a physical therapist who is not a preferred provider.

CA(2)[] (2) There is no doubt that the contractual relationship between Blue Cross and PTPN inhibits plaintiffs' ability to compete, at least on a price basis, because of the low out-of-pocket costs to patients who utilize the services of PTPN members. [8] But that competitive disadvantage is expressly authorized by statute. HN3[] Insurance Code section 10133 allows an insurer to contract for alternative rates with any provider and offer the benefit of those alternative rates to their insureds. The antitrust laws cannot be applied to forbid that [358] which another statute expressly allows. CA(3)[] (3) (Cf. Stafford v. L. A. etc. Retirement Board (1954) 42 Cal.2d 795, 799 [270 P.2d 12] [17] [HN4[] statutes must be " 'construed with reference to the whole system of law of which [they are] a part so that all may be harmonized and have effect' "].)

[*1140]

Moreover, by choosing to subscribe to a PPO plan, the subscribers themselves impair the nonpreferred providers' ability to compete for their business. To the extent that the subscribers' choice to limit competition among providers might result in higher costs and/or decreased quality, the subscribers are protected by the statutory and regulatory scheme designed to ensure that PPO plan subscribers have adequate access to high quality and cost effective

---

[7] The statute defines "reasonable consideration" as "consideration in good faith of the terms of proposals for affiliation prior to the time that contracts for alternative rates of payment are entered into or renewed. A plan may specify the terms and conditions of affiliation to assure cost efficiency, qualification of providers, appropriate utilization of services, accessibility, convenience to persons who would receive the provider's services, and consistency with the plan's basic method of operation, but shall not exclude providers because of their category of license." (Health & Saf. Code, § 1373.9, subd. (b)(1).)

[8] We note that a subscriber might be willing to pay the additional cost to be treated by a non-PTPN member if that physical therapist offered services that were sufficiently better or better suited for the subscriber. Thus, plaintiffs may still compete on the basis of quality or innovation.

health care. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770; Health & Saf. Code, §§ 1341, [18] 1342, 1342.6, 1373.9; Ins. Code, §§ 10133.5, 10133.6; Cal. Code Regs., tit. 28, §§ 1300.51, 1300.67 et seq.)

2. Competition to Become Preferred Providers

CA(4)[] (4) The complaint does not allege that Blue Cross or PTPN have engaged in conduct that directly restrains plaintiffs from negotiating with Blue Cross to become preferred providers. Instead, the complaint alleges that plaintiffs are foreclosed from becoming preferred providers because Blue Cross and PTPN have agreed to make PTPN members the exclusive or virtually exclusive preferred providers for Blue Cross's PPO plan. But once again, that conduct is authorized by statute. HN5[] Insurance Code section 10133 allows an insurer to contract with any provider to become a preferred provider, and Health and Safety Code section 1373.9 requires the insurer to consider proposals by other providers wishing to become preferred providers only if the existing preferred providers do [19] not adequately serve the geographic area proposed to be served by the other providers. And once again, the consumers' interests are protected by the extensive regulatory oversight to ensure that each plan has sufficient preferred providers in the areas in which it operates to adequately serve those subscribers. (See, e.g., Cal. Code Regs., tit. 28, §§ 1300.51, 1300.67.2, 1300.67.2.1.) Thus, the simple allegation that an insurer has entered into an exclusive contract with a provider group does not describe conduct that violates the antitrust laws.

This is not to say there can never be an antitrust violation if one or more providers or provider groups use coercion, threats, or intimidation to convince an insurer to refuse to negotiate with other providers or provider groups. (G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 256, 268 [195 Cal. Rptr. 211].) But as the trial court found in this case, plaintiffs make no such allegation. In fact, it appears from the exhibit attached to the complaint that Blue Cross intended to negotiate with non-PTPN members who served areas in [20] which PTPN did not have an adequate number of members, which prompted PTPN to modify its geographic restrictions to ensure adequate coverage. [*1141]

Plaintiffs contend, however, that the exclusive contract between Blue Cross and PTPN unlawfully restrains competition because PTPN places geographic restrictions on its members. Thus, plaintiffs contend that PTPN and Blue Cross engage in a territorial market allocation that violates the Cartwright Act. Plaintiffs' contention fails because PTPN's imposition of geographic restrictions is expressly immunized by the immunity statute.

CA(5)[] (5) The immunity statute proclaims that HN6[] combinations or groups of providers formed as "efficient-sized contracting units" are "a new product within the health care marketplace" and are subject [359] "only to those antitrust prohibitions applicable to the conduct of other presumptively legitimate enterprises." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16770, subd. (g); Ins. Code, § 10133.6; Health & Saf. Code, § 1342.6.) In other words, the groups' conduct in forming efficient-sized contracting units is exempt from the antitrust laws, although their conduct [21] in negotiating alternative rates of payment is subject to antitrust enforcement. [9] (See Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal.3d 903, 923, fn. 7 [221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375].)

In the present case, PTPN's imposition of geographic restrictions on its members is immunized because it is part of the formation of an efficient-sized contracting unit. The regulations governing PPO plans require Blue Cross (and other insurers) to contract alternative rates of payment with a sufficient number of preferred providers in all geographic areas in which they have subscribers to ensure there will be adequate access to health care services for their subscribers. (See, e.g., Cal. Code Regs., tit. 28, §§ 1300.51, 1300.67.2, [22] 1300.67.2.1.) To create the most efficient-sized contracting unit, PTPN must include a sufficient number of providers to allow Blue Cross to meet the regulatory requirements (or to exceed those requirements, if Blue Cross so desires). At the same time, PTPN must limit its membership sufficiently to ensure a patient volume for each member that will provide an incentive for the members to reduce their rate of payment. The geographic restrictions PTPN imposes on its members thus must be viewed as conduct related to the formation of an efficient-sized contracting unit, and therefore PTPN is exempt from antitrust enforcement under the immunity statute for the imposition of those restrictions. PTPN's subsequent enforcement of its geographic restrictions and its modification of those restrictions

---

[9] For example, if two or more groups each formed contracting units and agreed that only one group would negotiate with each insurer, that conduct could be subject to antitrust enforcement. There is no such conduct alleged in this case.

in response to Blue Cross's need for additional providers also is excluded from antitrust enforcement [*1142] under the immunity statute because it is conduct aimed at maintaining the efficient size of the contracting unit. [10]

[*23] 3. Liability Under the Unfair Competition Law

In addition to alleging that PTPN's and Blue Cross's conduct violates the Cartwright Act, plaintiffs allege that conduct violates the unfair competition law. They argue on appeal that even if their Cartwright Act claim fails, they have stated an unfair competition claim because the conduct they allege violates the policy or spirit of the Cartwright Act and therefore is "unfair" under Business and Professions Code section 17200. They are incorrect.

CA(6)[] (6) In Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163 [83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527], the Supreme Court discussed [360] the scope of the unfair competition law: HN7[] "Although the unfair competition law's scope is sweeping, it is not unlimited. Courts may not simply impose their own notions of the day as to what is fair or unfair. Specific legislation may limit the judiciary's power to declare conduct unfair. If the Legislature has permitted certain conduct or considered a situation and concluded no action should lie, courts may not override that determination. When specific legislation provides a 'safe harbor,' plaintiffs may not use the general [24] unfair competition law to assault that harbor." (Id. at p. 182.)

As we have explained, the Legislature expressly authorized or exempted from antitrust enforcement the conduct alleged in this case. It is from the Legislature or the Department of Managed Health Care that plaintiffs must seek their desired remedy. The courts are not empowered to overrule the Legislature's judgment in these matters. Accordingly, we affirm the trial court's ruling granting PTPN's and Blue Cross's motions for judgment on the pleadings.
[*1143]

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. PTPN and Blue Cross shall recover their costs on appeal.

Epstein, P. J., and Manella, J., concurred.

A petition for a rehearing was denied April 10, 2007, and appellants' petition for review by the Supreme Court was denied July 18, 2007, S152370.

End of Document

[10] In light of our holding that the immunity statute exempts PTPN's imposition of geographic restrictions on its members from antitrust enforcement, we need not address whether plaintiffs allege antitrust injury arising from those restrictions—i.e., whether the alleged territorial market allocation restrains competition in the relevant market, the negotiation to become a Blue Cross preferred provider. (See, e.g., Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc. (1977) 429 U.S. 477, 489 [50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690] [antitrust plaintiff must establish "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation"].)

Washington v. Haupert

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

September 14, 2006, Argued ; March 27, 2007, Decided

No. 05-4225

Reporter

481 F.3d 543 *; 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 7129 **

LEON WASHINGTON and CLARA WASHINGTON, Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. JAMES HAUPERT, JOEL SLYGH and FRED ROGERS, Defendants-Appellants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, in part, Petition granted by Washington v. Haupert, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73264 (N.D. Ind., Sept. 23, 2008)

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court Northern District of Indiana, Fort Wayne Division. No. 03 C 96--Theresa L. Springmann, Judge.

Washington v. City of Fort Wayne, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45553 (N.D. Ind., Nov. 2, 2005)

Disposition: The court affirmed the district court's order denying the officers' summary judgment motion.

Core Terms

arrest, district court, qualified immunity, chair, summary judgment, photographs, domestic battery, scratched, probable cause, overturned, responded, Hello, summary judgment motion, police officer, downstairs, insolent, angry, juice, touch, jail, neck, rude

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Rights Law > ... > Immunity From Liability > Local Officials > Individual Capacity

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reviews a district court's denial of summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment should be granted where the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In the summary judgment context, the evidence and all inferences that reasonably can be drawn from the evidence are construed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Immunity From Liability > Local Officials > Individual Capacity

HN4[] Local Officials, Individual Capacity

Governmental actors performing discretionary functions are entitled to qualified immunity and are shielded from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known. The United States Supreme Court has defined a test to determine whether a government actor is entitled to qualified immunity. First, the plaintiff must present evidence that, taken in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, would allow a reasonable factfinder to determine that the plaintiff has been deprived of a constitutional right. If the plaintiff meets that burden, the court must determine whether the particular constitutional right was clearly established at the time of the alleged violation. If the right was clearly established, the government actor is not entitled to qualified immunity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Absence of Essential Element

Civil Rights Law > ... > Scope > Law Enforcement Officials > Arrests

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Probable Cause

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Arrests > Probable Cause

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Arrests > Warrantless Arrests

HN5[] Burdens of Proof, Absence of Essential Element

Where 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 plaintiffs allege that police officers violated their Fourth Amendment rights to be free from unreasonable seizure, in order to survive summary judgment, the plaintiffs first must present evidence which would allow a reasonable factfinder to determine that they were arrested without probable cause. The Fourth Amendment permits warrantless arrests only if the arresting officer has probable cause to believe that a crime has been committed. In order to have probable cause for an arrest, law enforcement agents must reasonably believe, in light of the facts and circumstances within their knowledge at the time of the arrest, that the suspect had committed or was committing an offense. Reasonableness turns on what the officers knew, not whether they knew the truth or whether they should have known more.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Domestic Offenses > Domestic Assault > Elements

HN6[] Domestic Assault, Elements

Indiana defines domestic battery as a person who knowingly or intentionally touches an individual who--(1) is or was a spouse of the other person; (2) is or was living as a spouse of the other person as provided in subsection (c); or (3) has a child in common with the other person--in a rude, insolent, or angry manner that results in bodily injury to the person described in subdivision (1), (2), or (3) commits domestic battery, a Class A misdemeanor. Ind. Code § 35-42-2-1.3(a) (2006).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Rights Law > ... > Immunity From Liability > Local Officials > Individual Capacity

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN7[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In reviewing a denial of summary judgment on the basis of qualified immunity, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit adopts the facts as specified by the district court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Rights Law > ... > Scope > Law Enforcement Officials > Arrests

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Probable Cause

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Arrests > Probable Cause

Civil Rights Law > ... > Immunity From Liability > Local Officials > Individual Capacity

HN8[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Legal Entitlement

Typically, cases in which the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has affirmed the grant of summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds to police officers involve arrests in which a witness, most commonly the putative victim, provides sufficient support to justify the officers' decision. The complaint of a single witness or putative victim alone generally is sufficient to establish probable cause to arrest unless the complaint would lead a reasonable officer to be suspicious, in which case the officer has a further duty to investigate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law

The United States Supreme Court's holding in Matsushita, regarding the burden of proof for nonmovants in the summary judgment context, is limited to antitrust law.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN10[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

A court may not make credibility determinations at the summary judgment stage.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Rights Law > ... > Immunity From Liability > Local Officials > Individual Capacity

HN11[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

When qualified immunity turns on a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 defendant's actual conduct, a district court should consider not only the plaintiff's allegations, but all the undisputed facts in the record when deciding whether the defendant's conduct violated clearly established legal principles.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN12[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

When faced with an argument that a district court mistakenly identified clearly established law, a court of appeals can simply take, as given, the facts that the district court assumed when it denied summary judgment for that (purely legal) reason. The appellate court is not required to accept the facts as described by the district court, although in most instances it is appropriate to do so. But, in cases where the appellants are not asking the appeals court to resolve factual disputes or determine whether the evidence is sufficient, it is appropriate for the appeals court to look beyond the factual account of the district court to all undisputed evidence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Need for Trial

HN13[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

On summary judgment a court may not make credibility determinations, weigh the evidence, or decide which inferences to draw from the facts; these are jobs for a factfinder. However implausible the non-moving party's account might seem, it is not the court's place to decide who is telling the truth. Where the parties present two vastly different stories, it is almost certain that there are genuine issues of material fact in dispute. Summary judgment is only appropriate when there is no room for a difference of opinion concerning the facts or the reasonable inferences to be drawn from them.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Immunity From Liability > Local Officials > Individual Capacity

HN14[] Local Officials, Individual Capacity

For qualified immunity purposes, to be clearly established, the constitutional right in question must be sufficiently clear that a reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Scope > Law Enforcement Officials > Arrests

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Probable Cause

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Arrests > Probable Cause

HN15[] Law Enforcement Officials, Arrests

A reasonable officer would understand that what he was doing violated a plaintiff's right to be free from unreasonable seizure, if the officer fabricated a police report in order to justify the plaintiff's arrest. Innumerable decisions have clearly established the right to be free from arrest without probable cause.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN16[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is not appropriate when the facts are disputed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Need for Trial

Civil Rights Law > ... > Scope > Law Enforcement Officials > Arrests

HN17[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Need for Trial

If the question of probable cause to arrest arises in a damages suit, it is a proper issue for the jury if there is room for a difference of opinion concerning the facts or the reasonable inferences to be drawn from them.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN18[] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

In reviewing a summary judgment order, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit is not in a position to resolve swearing contests between litigants.

Counsel: LEON WASHINGTON, Plaintiff - Appellee, Pro se, Fort Wayne, IN.

CLARA WASHINGTON, Plaintiff - Appellee, Pro se, Fort Wayne, IN.

For JAMES HAUPERT, JOEL SLYGH, FRED ROGERS, Defendants - Appellants: Carolyn M. Trier, HUNT SUEDHOFF KALAMAROS, Fort Wayne, IN, USA.

Judges: Before CUDAHY, MANION, and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: CUDAHY

Opinion

[*544] CUDAHY, Circuit Judge. Leon and Clara Washington were arrested for domestic battery by the defendant police officers on January 30, 2001. The plaintiffs claim that they were simply play-fighting when Clara Washington mistakenly called 911. In January 2002, the plaintiffs brought a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 lawsuit against the City of Fort Wayne, Officer James Haupert, Officer Joel Slygh and Sergeant Fred Rogers (collectively, "the officers"). The plaintiffs argue that the officers violated their Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizure by arresting them without probable cause. Officer Haupert, Officer Slygh and Sergeant Rogers filed a motion for summary judgment on the [2] basis of qualified immunity. The district court denied the officers' motion for summary judgment, and they now appeal. We affirm.

I. Background

On January 30, 2001, Clara and Leon Washington along with other family members returned home to Fort Wayne from Mississippi, where they had attended the funeral of Clara's brother. After arriving home, in an attempt to cheer Clara, Leon threw a few snowballs at Clara. Their two sons joined in, and Clara also threw some snow back at Leon. The family moved some furniture into the house and then went inside. Leon went upstairs to take a shower and rest. In 2001, Leon and Clara were not residing together in the same home; however, Clara offered Leon her room for the evening since she planned on staying downstairs that night.

At some point later in the evening around 9:00, Clara called up to Leon and asked him to come downstairs. She then called out to Leon offering him a glass of juice. Leon put his hands on her back to let her know that he had come downstairs. At that point, the plaintiffs claim that they playfully dashed a small amount of juice and water on each other. Clara then went to pick up a chair that had been knocked over earlier in [3] the day. Leon, then, jokingly grabbed the chair and threatened Clara with it. Clara then said something [*545] to the effect of "Put it down or I'll call 911." Leon let go of the chair and went back upstairs to go to bed.

According to Clara, her sister then called from Mississippi. Clara and her sister discussed their brother's death and the possibility that it might have been a murder. Clara then decided to call the Fort Wayne police to discuss her brother's death and dialed 911. She claims that she hung up, though, realizing that she should not have called. The 911 operator called back, and Leon answered the phone. According the Clara, she told the operator that there was no problem. To this, the operator responded that she was going to send a police car out in any event.

The following transcript of the 911 call provides a slightly different account.

Q: 911, what is your emergency?
A: Uh, would you get a car up to 2222 Drexel Avenue, please.
Q: 2222 . . . (beep) Hello . . . (rustling noise) Hello . . . . (beep) Hello (beep, ringing).
Male: Hello.
Q: Hello. Can I speak to the woman that I was just speaking to please . . . hello?
A: Hello.

Q: Ma'am. [4]
A: Yes.
Q: What's the problem on Drexel?
A: Uh, my husband, uh, tryin' to fight me.
Q: Has he hit you?
A: No.
Q: Is he the one that hung up?
A: Uh, no the . . . yeah yeah.

Q: Does he have any weapons?
A: No.
Q: Does he . . . has he been drinking?
A: No.
Q: Alright [sic] we are going to send the police out. If anything happens before they get there call us back.
A: Ok.
Q. Thank you.
A. Bye.

Officers James Haupert and Joel Slygh responded to the call. According to Clara, when the officers arrived, she explained to them that she was depressed about her brother's death. She also told them that she and her husband had been playing around earlier, specifically mentioning that they had dashed juice and water on each other. At that point, one of the officers went upstairs to talk with Leon. According to Leon, he was awakened as Officer Haupert was coming up the stairs. The officer asked him if he had a gun, to which Leon responded no. Officer Haupert then proceeded to question him about the situation and why the 911 call had been placed. Leon told him that there was nothing going on and that he did not know 911 [5] had been called. Officer Haupert then asked him to come downstairs.

According to the plaintiffs, the officers continued to ask them about what had happened. At some point, Clara asked if they were going to jail for calling 911, to which Officer Slygh responded, "No, you ain't going to jail." Officer Haupert added, "But if you ever do something like this again, you will go to jail."

The officers provide a vastly different account of the conversation with the Washingtons leading up to their arrest. According to the officers, Clara Washington said that she and her husband had been arguing and had thrown water and juice on each other during the argument. Clara also told them that Leon had grabbed her shoulders with both hands and pushed her into the kitchen. Clara then told the officers that she had grabbed a chair and [*546] tried to hit Leon with it in an attempt to defend herself. Clara then said that Leon had held the leg of the chair across her chest and neck and hurt her with it. She claimed that it was painful when Leon choked her with the chair.

According to Officer Haupert, Leon reported that he had been asleep upstairs when Clara came up to the bedroom and began to argue with him. [6] Both officers report that Leon told them that Clara jumped on Leon and said, "You wanna fight mother f_ _ _ _ _!" Leon also told the officers that Clara had scratched him on the back of his neck. Leon then reported that he had gone downstairs with Clara. He told the officers that he and his wife began wrestling over a chair, and Clara scratched his hand and face. Leon reported that it was painful when Clara scratched him. The police officers took nine photographs of the Washington's home and of Leon Washington's face, neck and hand.

At some point, the officers went outside. They returned some time later with Sergeant Fred Rogers. According to the plaintiffs, Rogers said that they were offering conflicting stories and inquired as to what was going on. According to Clara, she then said, "Officer, I'm telling the truth." To which, Sergeant Rogers responded along the lines of, "How you telling the truth when this guy here is scratched up?" Clara then said something like, "Apparently you have a problem with ladies." At that point, according to the plaintiffs, Sergeant Rogers ordered Officer Haupert to arrest Clara. Leon then asked, "You're not taking her to jail for this, are you?" To [7] which Rogers allegedly responded, "Yeah, and you're going, too." At that point, Leon Washington was also placed under arrest.

According to the defendants, after Sergeant Fred Rogers arrived, Clara told him that she had been scratched. At that point, the decision was made to make a dual arrest for domestic battery.

The Information for Domestic Battery, listing Clara Washington as the defendant, provides that she "did knowingly or intentionally touch Leon Washington . . . [i]n a rude, insolent or angry manner, to wit: by scratching, and/or hitting said Leon Washington." The Information was signed by "J. Haupert 1652F." The Information for Domestic Battery, listing Leon Washington as the defendant, provides that he "did knowingly or intentionally touch Clara G. Washington . . . [i]n a rude, insolent or angry manner, to wit: striking her." This record was signed by "Joel C. Slygh # 1655F." The domestic battery charges were dismissed by the state on October 5, 2001.

On January 29, 2003, Leon Washington and Clara Washington filed the present lawsuit against Officer Haupert, Officer Slygh, Sergeant Rogers and the City of Fort Wayne in state court, alleging a violation of their Fourth Amendment [8] right to be free from false arrest pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, as well as claims under state tort law. The defendants removed the lawsuit to federal court. On July 15, 2005, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment, asserting that they were entitled to qualified immunity. The district court granted the motion as to the City of Fort Wayne on the grounds that it did not maintain an unconstitutional policy or custom (see Strauss v. City of Chicago, 760 F.2d 765, 768 (7th Cir. 1985)) but denied the motion as to the individual defendants. Officer Haupert, Officer Slygh and Sergeant Rogers appeal.

II. Discussion

HN1[] We review a district court's denial of summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds de novo. Leaf v. Shelnutt, 400 F.3d 1070, 1077 [*547] (7th Cir. 2005). HN2[] Summary judgment should be granted where the "pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). HN3[] The evidence and all inferences that reasonably [9] can be drawn from the evidence are construed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, here, the plaintiffs. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

HN4[] Governmental actors performing discretionary functions are entitled to qualified immunity and are "shielded from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known." Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1982). In Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 200, 121 S. Ct. 2151, 150 L. Ed. 2d 272 (2001), the Supreme Court defined a test to determine whether a government actor is entitled to qualified immunity. First, the plaintiff must present evidence that, taken in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, would allow a reasonable fact finder to determine that he has been deprived of a constitutional right. Id. at 201. If the plaintiff meets that burden, the court must determine whether the particular constitutional right was clearly established at the time of the alleged violation. Id. If the right was clearly established, the government actor is not entitled [10] to qualified immunity.

The HN5[] plaintiffs allege that the defendants violated their Fourth Amendment rights to be free from unreasonable seizure. In order to survive summary judgment, the plaintiffs first must present evidence which would allow a reasonable fact finder to determine that they were arrested without probable cause. See Booker v. Ward, 94 F.3d 1052, 1057 (7th Cir. 1996). The Fourth Amendment permits warrantless arrests only if the arresting officer has probable cause to believe that a crime has been committed. Thompson v. Wagner, 319 F.3d 931, 934 (7th Cir. 2003). "In order to have probable cause for an arrest, law enforcement agents must reasonably believe, in light of the facts and circumstances within their knowledge at the time of the arrest, that the suspect had committed or was committing an offense." Payne v. Pauley, 337 F.3d 767, 776 (7th Cir. 2003); see also Beck v. Ohio, 379 U.S. 89, 91, 85 S. Ct. 223, 13 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1964). Reasonableness turns on what the officers knew, not whether they knew the truth or whether they should have known more. Gramenos v. Jewel Companies, 797 F.2d 432, 439 (7th Cir. 1986); [11] see also Thompson, 319 F.3d at 934.

The Washingtons were arrested for domestic battery, which HN6[] Indiana defines as:

> A person who knowingly or intentionally touches an individual who:
>
> (1) is or was a spouse of the other person;
>
> (2) is or was living as a spouse of the other person as provided in subsection (c); or
>
> (3) has a child in common with the other person; in a rude, insolent, or angry manner that results in bodily injury to the person described in subdivision (1), (2), or (3) commits domestic battery, a Class A misdemeanor.

Ind. Code § 35-42-2-1.3(a) (2006). Here, in order to allege a constitutional violation, the Washingtons must present sufficient evidence that would allow a jury to conclude that the officers unreasonably believed that the Washingtons had knowingly or intentionally touched each other in a [*548] rude, insolent or angry manner that resulted in bodily injury.

HN7[] In reviewing a denial of summary judgment on the basis of qualified immunity, we adopt the facts as specified by the district court. Johnson v. Jones, 515 U.S. 304, 317, 115 S. Ct. 2151, 132 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1995); Leaf, 400 F.3d at 1078; McKinney v. Duplain, 463 F.3d 679, 688 (7th Cir. 2006). [12] The district court assumed the following facts for purposes of determining the defendants' summary judgment motion. "Clara had juice in her hands and playfully dashed it on Leon." Washington v. City of Fort Wayne, No. 1:03-CV-96-TS, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45553, slip op. at 4 (N.D. Ind. Nov. 2, 2005). "Leon then playfully picked up a chair to get back at her, but she threatened to call 911." Id. "Clara accidentally called 911 and hung up." Id. "The operator asked Clara if there was a problem at her home, and Clara responded, 'Uh, my husband, uh, tryin' to fight me.'" Id. "Clara told them [Officers Haupert and Slygh] that Leon was asleep, that there was no trouble, and that she and Leon had been playing around." Id. "They [Haupert and Slygh] questioned him [Leon] and he confirmed Clara's story." Id. In response to Sergeant Rogers' inquiry, "Clara said, 'Officer, I am telling the truth,' to which Sergeant Rogers said, 'How you telling the truth when this guy here is scratched up.'" 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45553, [WL] at 5. "When Leon asked them, 'You're not taking her to jail for this, are you?' Sergeant Rogers ordered his arrest as well." Id.

Based on these facts, a reasonable jury could find it was not reasonable [13] for the officers to believe that Leon and Clara Washington had committed a crime, namely domestic battery. The plaintiffs described their interactions as "playful," in no way implying that they had touched each other in a "rude, insolent, or angry manner." Moreover, besides a passing reference to being scratched, the plaintiffs did not mention any claims of bodily injury to the officers. Cf. Simmons v. Pryor, 26 F.3d 650, 654 (7th Cir. 1993) (holding that the defendant police officer had probable cause to arrest the husband for domestic battery where officers witnessed the couple "passing licks with open hand," the wife told the officer about the violence which was corroborated by other witnesses and the officer knew of the wife's previously obtained order of protection).

HN8[] Typically, cases in which we have affirmed the grant of summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds to police officers involve arrests in which a witness, most commonly the putative victim, provides sufficient support to justify the officer's decision. See Beauchamp v. City of Noblesville, 320 F.3d 733, 743 (7th Cir. 2003) ("The complaint of a single witness or putative victim [14] alone generally is sufficient to establish probable cause to arrest unless the complaint would lead a reasonable officer to be suspicious, in which case the officer has a further duty to investigate."); see also Woods v. City of Chicago, 234 F.3d 979, 987 (7th Cir. 2000); Guzell v. Hiller, 223 F.3d 518, 519-20 (7th Cir. 2000); Tangwall v. Stuckey, 135 F.3d 510, 516 (7th Cir. 1998); Gerald M. v. Conneely, 858 F.2d 378, 381 (7th Cir. 1988); Gramenos, 797 F.2d at 439. But, importantly, in the present case, there are no witnesses offering testimony to support the officers' version of the Washingtons' arrests. Both Clara Washington and Leon Washington deny any physical altercation which would qualify as domestic battery under Indiana law, and they claim that they told the officers they were simply play-fighting.

The defendants attempt to rebut the Washingtons' account of their arrest by couching it in a couple of legal arguments, both of which fail. First, the officers argue that the facts offered by the Washingtons, [*549] and relied on by the district court to find that genuine issues of material facts exist, [15] are irrelevant or immaterial, and therefore should not preclude summary judgment. Appellant's Opening Br. at 12. The parties dispute the contents of the conversation leading up to their arrest on the night of January 30, 2001. What was conveyed to the officers goes to the heart of probable cause, and therefore, these facts are relevant and material to this motion. Second, relying on Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), the defendants also contend that the plaintiffs must provide "more persuasive evidence to support their claim" since the "factual context renders the claims asserted by the party opposing summary judgment implausible." See Appellant's Opening Br. at 12. Matsushita does not apply to the present case since HN9[] its holding is limited to antitrust law. And, more importantly, whether the Washingtons' story is "implausible" rests on whether they are credible, and we are not in a position to make that assessment. See Payne, 337 F.3d at 770-71 (holding that HN10[] a court may not make "credibility determinations" at the summary judgment stage).

The defendants offer an account of the "undisputed facts," which [16] differs from that relied on by the district court in two important ways. [1] [17] The defendants rely on photographs taken by Officer Haupert of the

[1] The "undisputed facts" as described by the defendants are as follows:

Washingtons' kitchen, most notably of an overturned chair, and of Leon Washington's face, hand and neck. The district court did not include a discussion of these photographs in its account of the facts, which it should have. [2] See Green v. Carlson, 826 F.2d 647, 651 (7th Cir. 1987) (holding that HN11[] when qualified immunity turns on the defendant's actual conduct "the district court should consider not only the plaintiff's allegations, but all the undisputed facts in the record when deciding whether the defendant's conduct violated clearly established [*550] legal principles"). Regardless, these photographs do not change the outcome of the decision to deny summary judgment to the defendants, since neither the photograph of the overturned chair nor the photographs of Leon Washington establish probable cause for the Washingtons' arrest.

[18] As for the overturned chair, according to the Washingtons, the chair was overturned when they were moving their things in from the truck. Even if that explanation was not conveyed to the officers, the overturned chair, in light of the Washingtons' account of their conversation with the officers, does not alter our conclusion that the plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to allow a reasonable jury to find that the officers lacked probable cause to arrest them. Although the overturned chair itself may not be in dispute, the facts surrounding it certainly are.

The other "undisputed fact" offered by the defendants is the alleged scratches on Leon Washington, which Officer Haupert photographed. [3] The photographs certainly show abrasions of some kind on Leon Washington's chin and hand; any mark on his neck is more difficult to make out. However, we must credit the plaintiffs' story. See Payne, 337 F.3d at 777. The photographs, in light of the Washingtons' account of the night of their arrests, do not alter our conclusion that the plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts for a reasonable factfinder to conclude that the officers lacked probable cause to arrest them. [19] A jury should consider what weight, if any, should be given to these photographs in determining whether the defendants had probable cause to arrest the Washingtons. Cf. Maxwell v. City of Indianapolis, 998 F.2d 431, 435 (7th Cir. 1993) ("To the extent that the presence or absence of probable cause turns on the resemblance of Maxwell to the descriptors and photograph of the fugitive Moore, the question necessarily becomes a factual one for the jury.")

In asking this court to reverse the district court's denial of summary judgment, the officers are asking us to make credibility determinations, which as previously discussed, is an inappropriate request. HN13[] "On summary

---

> The undisputed facts show that the police officers were called by Clara Washington to the Appellees' residence because of a domestic problem. The undisputed facts show that there was a chair overturned in the kitchen. Officer Haupert took photographs of the chair. The undisputed facts show that Clara Washington told the police officers that Leon Washington had put his hands on her shoulders and scratched her. She told the police officers that she and Leon Washington had dashed juice on each other. The undisputed facts show that Leon Washington had several scratches on him. Officer Haupert took photographs of the scratches.

Appellant's Opening Br. at 12.

2

Judge Manion, writing separately, argues that this court must accept the facts as set forth by the district court and therefore should not consider the photographs or the 911 transcript. Since the transcript of the 911 call was in fact considered by the district court, we address only the photographs. In Johnson v. Jones, 515 U.S. 304, 115 S. Ct. 2151, 132 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1995), the Supreme Court affirmed this court's decision to dismiss an appeal for lack of jurisdiction because the appellants, police officers appealing the district court's denial of summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds, asked this court to determine a question of sufficiency of the evidence. Id. at 313. The Court stated that HN12[] "[w]hen faced with an argument that the district court mistakenly identified clearly established law, the court of appeals can simply take, as given, the facts that the district court assumed when it denied summary judgment for that (purely legal) reason." Id. at 319 (emphasis added). The appellate court is not required to accept the facts as described by the district court, although in most instances it is appropriate to do so. But, in cases, such as the present one, where the appellants are not asking the court to resolve factual disputes or determine whether the evidence is sufficient, it is appropriate for this court to look beyond the factual account of the district court to all undisputed evidence.

[3] Incidentally, assuming arguendo that the photographs of the scratches on Leon Washington were sufficient to establish probable cause, the officers only would have had probable cause to arrest Clara Washington, since the photographs only support bodily injury suffered by her husband.

judgment a court may not make credibility determinations, [20] weigh the evidence, or decide which inferences to draw from the facts; these are jobs for a factfinder." Payne, 337 F.3d at 770 (citing Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). However implausible the Washingtons' account might seem, it is not our place to decide who is telling the truth. "Where the parties present two vastly different stories--as they do here--it is almost certain that there are genuine issues of material fact in dispute." Payne, 337 F.3d at 770; see also Qian v. Kautz, 168 F.3d 949, 953 (7th Cir. 1999) ("[S]ummary judgment is only appropriate when there is no room for a difference of opinion concerning the facts or the reasonable inferences to be drawn from them."). Viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, the Washingtons have alleged sufficient facts for a jury to find that they suffered a constitutional violation pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 by being subjected to unreasonable seizure.

We are now required to examine whether the contours of the alleged constitutional violation were clearly established at the time of the incident. [21] Saucier, 533 U.S. at 201. If not, the defendants [*551] are entitled to qualified immunity. HN14[] "To be 'clearly established,' the right in question must be 'sufficiently clear that a reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right.'" Miller v. Jones, 444 F.3d 929, 934 (7th Cir. 2006) (quoting Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 640, 107 S. Ct. 3034, 97 L. Ed. 2d 523 (1987)). According to the plaintiffs, the police officers fabricated a police report in order to justify their arrests. HN15[] A reasonable officer would have understood that what he was doing violated their right to be free from unreasonable seizure. See Driebel v. City of Milwaukee, 298 F.3d 622, 652 (7th Cir. 2002) (holding that "innumerable decisions . . . have clearly established the right to be free from arrest without probable cause").

HN16[] Summary judgment is not appropriate when the facts are disputed as they are here. HN17[] "[I]f the question of probable cause arises in a damages suit, it is a proper issue for the jury if there is room for a difference of opinion concerning the facts or the reasonable inferences to be drawn from them." Maxwell, 998 F.2d at 434; [22] see also Moore v. Marketplace Rest., Inc., 754 F.2d 1336, 1347 (7th Cir. 1985); Lester v. City of Chicago, 830 F.2d 706, 715 (7th Cir. 1987). Since HN18[] we are not in a position to "resolve swearing contests between litigants," we must affirm the district court's denial of summary judgment. Payne, 337 F.3d at 770.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the district court's denial of the defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Concur by: MANION

Concur

MANION, Circuit Judge, concurring. I concur. On interlocutory appeal from the denial of qualified immunity, this court must accept the facts as set forth by the district court. Johnson v. Jones, 515 U.S. 304, 317, 115 S. Ct. 2151, 132 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1995). In this case, the district court stated that under the facts as alleged by the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs "never accused each other of battery or otherwise gave an impression to the officers that they were involved in a domestic dispute." District Court Opinion at 6. This factual finding seemingly conflicts with the content of the 911 tape, as summarized in the district court opinion, as well as the physical evidence presented to the district court [23] in the form of photographs of an overturned chair and scratches on Leon's face. The 911 call indicated that Leon had committed domestic battery and the scratches on Leon indicated that Clara had committed that same offense. And the overturned chair supports the view that a domestic dispute had been under way. Even if the Washingtons disclaimed any dispute once the officers arrived, the officers could still have reasonably disbelieved the Washingtons' story. Thus, it would seem that even accepting the Washingtons' version of the facts, the officers would be entitled to qualified immunity. But the district court read the record differently, stating that the Washingtons never "gave an impression to the officers that they were involved in a domestic dispute." District Court Opinion at 6. On interlocutory appeal, contrary to the court's statement that an "appellate court is not required to accept the facts as described by the district court . . .", see supra at 12 n.2, that is precisely what we must do. On appeal from the denial of qualified immunity, this court lacks jurisdiction to review the record to determine whether the district court's summary of the facts is supported by the [24] record evidence. Johnson, 515 U.S. at 319-20 ("For these reasons, we hold that a defendant entitled to invoke a qualified immunity defense may not appeal a district court's summary judgment [*552] order insofar as that order determines whether or not the pretrial record sets forth a 'genuine' issue of fact for trial."). See also Via v. LaGrand, 469 F.3d 618, 625 (7th Cir. 2006) ("However, on interlocutory appeal of a denial of qualified immunity, this court generally lacks jurisdiction to review the full record. Instead, we may only consider whether the defendant is entitled to qualified immunity given the factual disputes found by the district court." (footnote omitted)). Therefore, given the district court's recital of the facts, I agree that affirmance is appropriate.

Vitacost.com, Inc. v. Gaia Herbs, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida

March 28, 2007, Decided

CASE NO. 06-81141-CIV-MIDDLEBROOKS/JOHNSON

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22266 *; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,668

VITACOST.COM, INC., Plaintiff, vs. GAIA HERBS, INC., Defendant,

Prior History: Vitacost.com, Inc. v. Gaia Herbs, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6393 (S.D. Fla., Jan. 26, 2007)

Core Terms

antitrust, products, distributor, allegations, resale price, consumer, anti trust law, manufacturer, competitor, prices, amended complaint, retailers, motion to dismiss, enforcer, damages

Counsel: [*1] For Vitacost.Com, Inc., Plaintiff: Ira Kerker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Vitacost.com, Boynton Beach, FL.

For Gaia Herbs, Inc., Defendant: David Lee Ross, LEAD ATTORNEY, Greenberg Traurig, Miami, FL; G. Allan Van Fleet, Paul J. Brown, Greenberg Traurig LLP, Houston, TX US.

Judges: DONALD M. MIDDLEBROOKS, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: DONALD M. MIDDLEBROOKS

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS, GRANTING FINAL LEAVE TO AMEND

This Cause comes before the Court on Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (DE 16), filed March 8, 2007. The Court has reviewed the record and is fully advised in the premises.

Plaintiff Vitacost.com ("Vitacost") filed this complaint in state court on November 20, 2006, alleging violations of the Florida Antitrust Act, Fla. Stat. § 542.15 et seq. Defendant Gaia Herbs, Inc. ("Gaia Herbs") filed a timely notice of removal and now moves to dismiss Plaintiff's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Defendant filed a previous motion to dismiss, which I granted on January 29, 2007 (DE 11). In that order I found that Plaintiff had failed to adequately allege that it had standing [*2] to bring an antitrust action, and I granted Plaintiff leave to amend its complaint.

I. Plaintiff's Amended Complaint

Defendant Gaia Herbs markets and sells herbal supplements through third-party distributors, including sales in Florida. The Defendant has one hundred thirty seven contracted distributors within 250 miles of Palm Beach County. See Pl. Amd. Complaint, P 6.

Plaintiff Vitacost is a retail seller of dietary supplements, and it owns and manufactures its own dietary supplements under the brand name Nutraceuticals Sciences Institute ("NSI"). Id. at P 5. Vitacost does not distribute Gaia Herbs products, nor has it ever distributed these products. Prior to the filing of this complaint, Plaintiff and Defendant had discussed entering into a business relationship where Plaintiff would purchase and then sell Defendant's products.

In early 2005 Plaintiff's purchasing manager contacted Defendant's customer service manager about opening an account with Gaia Herbs. See Id. at P 7. Plaintiff alleges that Gaia Herbs would only open the account with Plaintiff if Plaintiff agreed not to sell Gaia Herbs products below a certain price, a condition that Plaintiff refused. [*3] See Id. at P 8.

Vitacost alleges that it is suffering a direct injury to itself by not being allowed to carry Gaia Herbs products. See Id. at P 10. Defendant notified Plaintiff in October of 2006 that it was not going to sell its products through e-commerce retailers any longer, as this was no longer consistent with the company's business model. Vitacost alleges, however, that Defendant still markets its products through internet retailers. See Id. at P 12-13.

Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's practice of mandating a minimum re-sale for its products represents an antitrust injury to Vitacost, as it cannot compete for business with other retailers who agree to the minimum price and are able to sell Gaia Herbs products. See Id. at 22-24.

After the breakdown of these discussions, Plaintiff filed the instant lawsuit, alleging violations of the Florida Antitrust Act, Fla. Stat. § 542.15 et seq. Specifically, Plaintiff makes claims of monopolization, conspiracy to monopolize, price-fixing, and unlawful resale price maintenance. See Id., P 17-28. Vitacost is seeking an order requiring Gaia Herbs to allow Plaintiff to re-sell its products, [*4] as well as damages for the business it alleges it has lost from not being able to sell Defendant's products. See Id.

II. Analysis

A motion to dismiss is appropriate when it is demonstrated "beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). For the purpose of the motion to dismiss, the complaint is construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and all facts alleged by the plaintiff are accepted as true. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984). Regardless of the alleged facts, however, a court may dismiss a complaint on a dispositive issue of law. Marshall County Bd. of Educ. v. Marshall County Gas Dist., 992 F.2d 1171, 1174 (11th Cir. 1993). "Conclusory allegations in the complaint need not be taken as true and the plaintiff must allege sufficient facts to support his allegations." Marine Coatings of Alabama, Inc. v. United States, 792 F.2d 1565, 1568 (11th Cir. 1986).

In interpreting the Florida Antitrust Act, existing case law holds that a court must rely on the body [*5] of federal case law interpreting the Sherman Act. See All Care Nursing Serv. v. High Tech Staffing Servs., 135 F.3d 740, 746 (11th Cir. 1998) ["Federal and Florida antitrust laws are analyzed under the same rules and case law. Fla. Stat. § 542.32 ("It is the intent of the Legislature that, in construing this chapter, due consideration and great weight be given to the interpretations of the federal courts relating to comparable federal antitrust statutes."); see also St. Petersburg Yacht Charters, Inc. v. Morgan Yacht, Inc., 457 So. 2d 1028, 1032 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.1984) ("The Florida legislature has, in effect, adopted as the law of Florida the body of antitrust law developed by the federal courts under the Sherman Act."); Fla. Stat. §§ 542.16 (Florida antitrust laws complement federal antitrust laws), 542.18 (analogous to § 1 of the Sherman Act).

Defendant first argues that Plaintiff lacks standing to assert an antitrust injury in this case. The Eleventh Circuit follows a two-part test to determine whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. See Florida Seed Co. v. Monsanto Co., 105 F.3d 1372, 1374 (11th Cir. 1997), [*6] citing Municipal Utils. Bd. of Albertville v. Alabama Power Co., 934 F.2d 1493, 1499 (11th Cir. 1991).

First, the plaintiff must establish that it has suffered "antitrust injury." Id. As the Supreme Court has made clear, to have standing antitrust plaintiffs "must prove more than injury casually linked to an illegal presence in the market [i.e., but for causation]. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendant's acts unlawful." Id., citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-o-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

Second, the plaintiff must establish that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. See Id. This determination is predicated on the "target area test," where an antitrust plaintiff must prove that he is within that sector of the economy endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry, and that he is the target against which anticompetitive activity is directed. See Id. Basically, a plaintiff must show that it is a customer or competitor in the relevant antitrust market. [*7] See Id.

A. Antitrust Injury

Based upon the allegations in the complaint, the Plaintiff has not asserted an antitrust injury. Plaintiff is a distributor of products similar to the Defendant's, and the main injury it asserts is economic damages to itself as a result of not being able to sell Defendant's products. See Pl. Amd. Complaint P 25,27,28. Vitacost then asks the Court to order the Defendant to sell its products to Plaintiff. This alleged injury is very similar to that before another court in this circuit, where the judge noted that "Plaintiffs complain of injury largely to themselves, not injury that inures to the public detriment. This is not antitrust injury." JES Props., Inc. v. United States Equestrian, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43122 (M.D. Fla. 2005).

Plaintiff's complaint simply does not allege that Defendant's actions have adversely affected competition in the relevant market, aside from one passing reference stating only that Defendant's actions are "hurting all consumers." See Pl. Amd. Complaint P 26. There is no allegation that Gaia Herbs products represent a monopoly for a particular type of supplement, and that consumers [*8] are paying inflated prices because there is no other option in the dietary supplement market. Instead, Plaintiff states that it has its own brand of dietary supplements that competes with the very products at issue in this case, and it describes the vitamin supplement industry as "very competitive" in its amended complaint. See Id. P 5,25. Given these facts, it is difficult to imagine how competition suffers from Plaintiff being unable to sell Defendant's products.

The Plaintiff is not a consumer paying allegedly inflated prices, nor is it a distributor that has suffered an injury as a result of being unable to sell an artificially high-priced product due to the manufacturer's price fixing. Here the Plaintiff has never sold a Gaia Herbs product.

I find this situation to be very analogous to cases where existing distributors of a product have alleged antitrust injuries after losing their distribution rights through mergers. Relying on Brunswick, courts have consistently denied standing to distributors who were terminated, or whose contracts were not renewed, following a merger. See Florida Seed Co., 105 F.3d at 1375. In fact, the injury in Florida Seed [*9] may even be more significant than that alleged here, as the Plaintiff there actually had an existing business relationship and lost the profits therefrom as a result of the merger. Here Vitacost did not even have an existing business relationship with Gaia Herbs, and its alleged damages are entirely speculative. [1] Therefore, Vitacost's claim of antitrust injury fails as a matter of law.

Other courts of appeals have agreed that injuries to distributors generally do not qualify as antitrust injuries. "Competitors and consumers in the market where trade is allegedly restrained are presumptively the proper plaintiffs to allege antitrust injury. In contrast, a commercial intermediary, such as a distributor or sales representative, generally lacks standing because its [*10] antitrust injury is too remote." Serpa Corp. v. McWane, Inc., 199 F.3d 6, 10 (1st Cir. 1999).

[1] See JES Props. Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43122 at 38 (plaintiff claimed its damages as the profits it would have made on housing developments; court found such damages too remote and speculative to represent an antitrust injury).

B. Efficient Enforcer

While the lack of an antitrust injury alone causes Plaintiff's complaint to fail, I will also address the efficient enforcer prong of the standing test, as Vitacost's complaint fails here as well. As noted above, the Eleventh Circuit has held that to satisfy this prong, a plaintiff needs to be either a consumer or competitor of the Defendant or the Defendant's products. See Florida Seed Co., 105 F.3d at 1374. Plaintiff has failed to allege sufficient facts in its complaint indicating that it is either a consumer of Defendant's products or a competitor. It is undisputed that Vitacost is not a consumer for purposes of this test, as it is a distributor hoping to sell Defendant's products to consumers. Vitacost does claim in the amended complaint that it is a competitor of Gaia Herbs, but a careful analysis reveals that the competitor allegations are inadequate as a matter of law.

Vitacost is not an actual distributor of Gaia Herbs products, rather it wants to become a distributor. This fact is crucial, because a plaintiff must [*11] be a current distributor or a distributor who actually had its prices restrained in order to maintain an action for resale price maintenance. See Serpa Corp. v. McWane, Inc., 14 F. Supp. 2d 147, 151 (D. Mass. 1998), aff'd 199 F.3d 6. Here Vitacost was not a distributor that had been selling Defendant's products, then lost the distributorship as a result of an allegedly anticompetitive action.

Additionally, the anticompetitive action alleged in this case is not an example of predatory pricing, where a manufacturer sells its goods at a price below the cost basis in order to drive out competition. Instead, the Defendant has a policy of not allowing retailers to sell its products below a certain price level.

The Supreme Court has stated that, in antitrust actions, a competitor "may not complain of conspiracies that . . . set minimum prices at any level." Atl. Richfield Co. v. United States Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 337, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (U.S. 1990), citing Matsushita Electric Industrial Corp. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n. 8, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Minimum resale prices, without more, are not examples of antitrust violations, as they [*12] do not inhibit competition. Here, the Plaintiff's own complaint acknowledges that the vitamin supplement market is very competitive, and that there are multiple producers of similar products. It also does not allege a conspiracy on Defendant's part to fix prices. In such a competitive market with various suppliers, the Defendant's unilateral policy of setting a minimum resale price is not anticompetitive.

The Eleventh Circuit has previously held that a product manufacturer may unilaterally announce its resale prices without committing an antitrust violation. "Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." De Long Equipment Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1506 (11th Cir. 1989), citing United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919).

Furthermore, "Under Colgate, the manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination." Id. This is exactly [*13] the scenario that appears in the present case. Plaintiff, in two separate complaints, has not alleged facts sufficient to demonstrate any agreement or conspiracy on the part of Defendant and other distributors, as required by Fla. Stat. § 542.18. [2]

[2] Section 542.18 mirrors the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. As I previously noted, courts must use federal caselaw interpreting the Sherman Act for claims under the Florida Antitrust Act.

The Eleventh Circuit, in interpreting the Sherman Act, has stated that "Section One applies only to agreements between two or more businesses; it does not cover unilateral conduct." Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla. v. Clear Channel Communs., 376 F.3d 1065, 1071 (11th Cir. 2004).

Furthermore, "Even where a single firm's restraints directly affect prices and have the same economic effect as concerted action might have, there can be no liability under § 1 in the absence of agreement." Id., citing Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986).

[*14] Plaintiff alleges only that Defendant's policy of minimum resale prices is a price fixing scheme, and in one sentence of the amended complaint it alleges that another retailer, VitaminShoppe, has agreed to participate in this scheme. See Pl. Amd. Complaint P 22. There are no allegations of any specific agreement between Defendant and VitaminShoppe to fix prices, only conclusory allegations. As noted above, mere conclusory allegations need not be taken as true for purposes of a motion to dismiss, and Vitacost must allege sufficient facts to support its allegations. See Marine Coatings of Alabama, Inc., 792 F.2d at 1568.

III. Conclusion

Vitacost has failed as a matter of law to demonstrate its standing to bring an antitrust action against Gaia Herbs. Plaintiff has not shown either that it has suffered an antitrust injury, or that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. The alleged injury is nothing more than damages to Vitacost itself, stemming from its inability to sell the Defendant's products. Its alleged damages of lost profits from these non-existent sales are entirely speculative.

The Plaintiff has also failed to demonstrate that it [*15] is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. It is not a consumer of Defendant's products, and it is also not a current distributor. While Vitacost claims that Gaia Herbs is illegally setting minimum resale prices, the Supreme Court has stated that competitors cannot complain about minimum resale prices when competition exists. Finally, this circuit's case law holds that a manufacturer is free to unilaterally set a minimum resale price for its products, and there are no factual allegations in the complaint indicating anything other than a unilateral pricing decision by Gaia Herbs. Under existing Eleventh Circuit case law, Plaintiff's claim fails as a matter of law.

I have already given the Plaintiff an opportunity to amend its complaint to address the standing issue, and Plaintiff has again failed to satisfy the Eleventh Circuit's standing requirement. At this point I am highly skeptical that the Plaintiff can plead sufficient facts to satisfy this test. That said, I will give Plaintiff one final opportunity to meet the standing requirement. In particular, Plaintiff must review this circuit's case law and address whether there is any support in the law for its alleged antitrust [*16] injury.

Accordingly, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (DE 16) is GRANTED. Plaintiff must file an amended complaint within seven (7) days of the date of this Order.

DONE AND ORDERED in Chambers at West Palm Beach, FL, this 28th day of March 2007.

DONALD M. MIDDLEBROOKS

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

United States v. SBC Communs., Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

March 29, 2007, Decided ; March 29, 2007, Filed

Civil Action No. 05-2102 (EGS), Civil Action No. 05-2103 (EGS)

Reporter

489 F. Supp. 2d 1 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22947 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,655

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC. and AT&T CORP., Defendants. Civil Action No. 05-2102 (EGS); UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. VERIZON COMMUNICATIONS, INC. and MCI, INC., Defendants. Civil Action No. 05-2103 (EGS)

Subsequent History: Motion denied by United States v. SBC Communs., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45791 (D.D.C., June 26, 2007)

Core Terms

customers, mergers, Tunney Act, amici, proposed settlement, final judgment, public interest, connections, antitrust, Divestiture, network, factors, parties, carriers, remedies, settlements, complaints, mockery, harms, divested, markets, firms, last-mile, Reply, violations, fiber, district court, merging, judicial power, competitors

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN1[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

The Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, requires a court to determine whether proposed final judgments are in the public interest. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e)(1). The statute does not further define the meaning of "in the public interest," but specifies that in making the public interest determination, the court shall consider: (A) the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations, provisions for enforcement and modification, duration of relief sought, anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered, whether its terms are ambiguous, and any other competitive considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment that the court deems necessary to a determination of whether the consent judgment is in the public interest; and (B) the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets, upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint including consideration of public benefit, if any, to be derived from the determination of the issues at trial. § 16(e)(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN2[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

The Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, a court is not required to conduct an evidentiary hearing nor is it required to permit anyone to intervene. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e)(2). Instead, the procedure for making the public interest determination is generally left to the discretion of the court. § 16(f). The court is permitted to take testimony of government officials or expert witnesses, appoint a special master or expert consultant, authorize participation by other parties as amici or interveners, or take such other action in the public interest as the court may deem appropriate. § 16(f).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN3[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Under the 2004 amendments to the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, a court must consider all of the enumerated factors, as opposed to just ambiguity of terms, enforcement mechanisms, and third-party harms. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e)(1)

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN4[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Review under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, is not limited solely to determining whether entry of those consent judgments would make a mockery of the judicial function.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN5[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In the context of review under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, a district court should not inquire beyond the complaint unless the complaint makes a mockery of judicial power. Apart from that rare case, a district court is not permitted to reach beyond the complaint to evaluate claims that the government did not make and to inquire as to why they were not made.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN6[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In the context of review under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, it is only if the complaint underlying the consent decree is drafted so narrowly as to make a mockery of judicial power can the district court reject a consent decree due to matters outside the scope of the underlying complaint. In all other cases, a court cannot do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN7[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In the context of review under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, a district court is not permitted to reject proposed remedies merely because the court believes other remedies are preferable. Instead, the question is not whether a proposed remedy is the best one, but only whether it is within the reaches of the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN8[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In the context of review under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, district courts should be deferential to the government's predictions as to the effects of the proposed remedies. Accordingly, the relevant inquiry is whether there is a factual foundation for the government's decisions such that its conclusions regarding the proposed settlements are reasonable.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN9[] Legislation, Interpretation

The statement of a lone legislator, unaccompanied by a corresponding change in the statutory language, is insufficient to override a well-established judicial construction of a statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN10[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

It is improper for a court to require a proposed settlement to perfectly remedy antitrust violations when those violations have not yet been proven at trial, and when the government needs room to negotiate a settlement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN11[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In the context of review under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia will approve proposed settlements if they are within the reaches of the public interest. The government need not prove that the settlements will perfectly remedy the alleged antitrust harms; it need only provide a factual basis for concluding that the settlements are reasonably adequate remedies for the alleged harms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN12[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

In the context of review under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, a district court should pay attention to a proposed judgment's clarity in order to make implementation of the judgment manageable. In addition, the court should closely examine compliance mechanisms in a proposed settlement. Finally, the court should be concerned with any allegations that the proposed settlement will injure a third party. These factors along with others are explicitly enumerated in the Tunney Act's text, and must all be considered by the court. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e)(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN13[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Under the amended Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, a court cannot reject proposed settlements merely because the government failed to address antitrust issues not raised in its complaints. Further, the court must accord deference to the government's predictions about the efficacy of its remedies, and may not require that the remedies perfectly match the alleged violations because this may only reflect underlying weakness in the government's case or concessions made during negotiation. The Tunney Act only requires that the court consider specific enumerated factors in making its public interested determination. These factors can be loosely separated into two groups. The first group of factors address the competitive impact of the proposed remedies, i.e., how well the settlement remedies the harms alleged in the complaints. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e)(1). The second group of factors address issues unrelated to the competitive impact of the settlement. § 16(e)(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN14[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

The Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, does not require the government to employ any specific type of analysis in evaluating and settling cases. The government need not prove its underlying allegations in a Tunney Act proceeding.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN15[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e)(2) requires consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of the issues at trial.

Counsel: [1] For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff (1:05-cv-02102-EGS): Claude F. Scott, Jr., Jared A. Hughes, Lawrence M. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEYS, David T. Blonder, James J. Schwartz, Matthew C. Hammond, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, DC.

For SBC COMMUNICATIONS INC., Defendant: William Randolph Smith, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael L. Lazarus, CROWELL & MORING, L.L.P., Washington, DC.

For AT&T CORP, Defendant: Wilma A. Lewis, LEAD ATTORNEY, William Randolph Smith, CROWELL & MORNING LLP, Washington, DC.

For VERIZON COMMUNICATIONS INC., Defendant (1:05-cv-02102-EGS): Aaron Martin Panner, Joseph S. Hall, Mark C. Hansen, KELLOGG, HUBER, HANSEN, TODD, EVANS & FIGEL, PLLC, Washington, DC.; David Earl Wheeler, Washington, DC.; John Thorne, Arlington, VA.

For FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION, Interested Party: James J. Schwartz, LEAD ATTORNEY, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, DC.

For COMPTEL, Movant: Kevin R. Sullivan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Peter M. Todaro, KING & SPAULDING, Washington, DC.; Mary Catherine Albert, COMPTEL, Washington, DC.

For ALLIANCE FOR COMPETITION IN TELECOMMUNICATIONS, Movant: Gary Leland Reback, LEAD ATTORNEY, CARR & FERRELL, LLP, Palo Alto, CA.

For [2] AMERICAN ANTITRUST INSTITUTE, INC., Movant: Jonathan Laurence Rubin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Patton Boggs LLP, Washington, DC.

For NEW JERSEY DIVISION OF THE RATEPAYER ADVOCATE, Movant: Christopher J. White, LEAD ATTORNEY, STATE OF NEW JERSEY, Newark, NJ.

For TIME WARNER TELECOM INC., Movant: Benjamin Wallace Jackson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Washington, DC.; Theodore C. Whitehouse, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER LLP, Washington, DC.

BRENDA SMITH, Movant, Pro se, Virginia Beach, VA.

For LEVEL 3 COMMUNICATIONS, LLC, Movant: Bernard A. Nigro, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, Washington, DC.

For NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE UTILITY ADVOCATES, Amicus: Kathleen F. O'Reilly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Washington, DC.; David C. Bergmann, OFFICE OF THE OHIO CONSUMERS' COUNSEL, Columbus, OH.

For SPRINT NEXTEL CORPORATION, Amicus: Charles Thomas Kimmett, Jr., Timothy J. Simeone, LEAD ATTORNEYS, HARRIS, WILTSHIRE & GRANNIS LLP, Washington, DC.

For ELIOT SPITZER, Attorney General of New York, Amicus: Mary Ellen Burns, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeremy R. Kasha, Keith Gordon, OFFICE OF NEW YORK ATTORNEY GENERAL, New York, NY.

For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, United States Department [3] of Justice-Antitrust Division, Plaintiff (1:05-cv-02103 EGS): Claude F. Scott, Jr., Lawrence M. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, David T. Blonder, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, DC.

For VERIZON COMMUNICATIONS INC., Defendant (1:05-cv-02103 EGS): John Thorne, LEAD ATTORNEY, Arlington, VA.; Mark C. Hansen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Aaron Martin Panner, Evan T. Leo, Joseph S. Hall, KELLOGG HUBER HANSEN TODD & EVANS, PLLC, Washington, DC.; David Earl Wheeler, Washington, DC.

For MCI, INC., Defendant: Aaron Martin Panner, Joseph S. Hall, Mark C. Hansen, KELLOGG HUBER HANSEN TODD & EVANS, PLLC, Washington, DC.; David Earl Wheeler, Washington, DC.; John Thorne, Arlington, VA.

Judges: Emmet G. Sullivan, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Emmet G. Sullivan

Opinion

[*2]

OPINION

In the span of a couple of weeks in early 2005, four of this nation's largest telecommunications companies announced that they had agreed to merge, leaving only two companies in their place. Mergers of this magnitude have, as can be expected, engendered heated opposition, which has [*3] been reflected in the filings of numerous interested parties in this case. Arguments have been put forth regarding the mergers' effects in several [4] major industries, including residential telephone service, cellular telephone service, and internet services. This Court, however, is not tasked with deciding whether these mergers as a whole run afoul of the antitrust laws, nor whether they are altogether in the public interest, nor whether they should be approved by other branches of the federal government. This Court's role is much more limited. The only question facing this Court, under the procedures crafted by Congress, is whether the divestitures agreed upon by the merging parties and the Department of Justice are "in the public interest."

Pending before the Court is plaintiff United States' motion for entry of the proposed final judgments in each of these civil antitrust cases. The procedure governing acceptance of these proposed judgments is specified in Section 2(b) of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16(b)-(h), otherwise known as the Tunney Act. Upon consideration of the motions and supporting memoranda, the filings of several amici curiae admitted for this case, the responses and replies thereto, the arguments made by all parties at multiple hearings, the applicable law, [5] and the entire record, the Court determines that entry of the proposed final judgments is in the public interest. Therefore, for the reasons stated herein, plaintiff's motion for entry of final judgments in both cases is GRANTED.

BACKGROUND

I. Background of Proposed Final Judgments

A. SBC-AT&T Merger

SBC Communications, Inc. ("SBC"), formerly Southwestern Bell, is a regional bell operating company ("RBOC"), formed as one of the seven regional holding companies to result from the breakup of AT&T's local telephone business in 1984. United States v. SBC Comm., Inc., 05-2102-EGS, Compl. P 7 (hereinafter "SBC Compl."). In 2005, after having acquired two other RBOCs, Pacific Telesis and Ameritech, during the 1990's, SBC served over 50 million switched access lines, both residential and business, in 13 states. Id. SBC has fiber optic or copper connections to virtually all of the commercial buildings in its franchised territory. Id.

AT&T Corp. ("AT&T") is the nation's largest interexchange carrier ("IXC"), offering traditional long distance telephone service, as well as one of the largest competitive local exchange carriers ("CLEC"), offering local [6] network exchange and access for voice and data services. Id. P 8. AT&T serves consumers and businesses across the United States and around the globe, and owns significant local network assets within SEC's 13-state operating territory including direct fiber optic connections to numerous commercial buildings. Id. Pursuant to an Agreement and Plan of Merger dated January 30, 2005, SBC agreed to acquire AT&T for approximately $ 16 billion. Id. P 9.

B. Verizon-MCI Merger

Verizon Communications, Inc. ("Verizon"), formerly Bell Atlantic Corporation ("Bell Atlantic"), is the nation's largest RBOC. United States v. Verizon Comm., Inc., 05-2103-EGS, Compl. P 7 (hereinafter "Verizon Compl."). Bell Atlantic was another of the seven regional holding companies to result from the AT&T breakup. Id. Since that time, Bell Atlantic acquired Nynex, another RBOC, and GTE Corporation, an ILEC that provided local exchange and other services in 28 states, and [*4] formed Verizon. Id. In 2005, Verizon served over 50 million switched access lines, both residential and business, in 29 states plus the District of Columbia. Id. Verizon has fiber optic or copper connections to virtually [7] all of the commercial buildings in its franchised territory. Id.

MCI, Inc. ("MCI") is one of the nation's largest IXCs, offering traditional long distance telephone service, as well as one of the largest CLECs, offering local network exchange and access for voice and data services. Id. P 8. MCI serves consumers and businesses across the United States and around the globe and owns significant local network assets within Verizon's 29-state operating territory including direct fiber optic connections to numerous commercial buildings. Id. Pursuant to an Agreement and Plan of Merger dated February 14, 2005, as amended on March 4, March 29, and May 2, 2005, Verizon agreed to acquire MCI for approximately $ 8.54 billion. Id. P 9.

C. Alleged Competitive Harms

Plaintiff, the United States through the Department of Justice ("DOJ"), filed complaints in both of these cases on October 27, 2005. The government sought to enjoin the mergers on the grounds that the mergers would "substantially lessen competition for (a) Local Private Lines that connect hundreds of commercial buildings in [SBC and Verizon]'s franchised territory to a carrier's network or other local destination, [8] and (b) other telecommunications services that rely on Local Private Lines." SBC Compl. P 1; Verizon Compl. P 1. Specifically, the complaints are concerned with hundreds of commercial buildings in metropolitan areas where the two merging parties (either SBC and AT&T, or Verizon and MCI) are the only two firms that own or control a direct wireline connection to the building. SBC Compl. P 3; Verizon Compl. P 3. The government alleged that due to these competitive harms, the mergers violated Section 7 of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. SBC Compl. P 32; Verizon Compl. P 32.

The complaints address the same type of competitive harm for each merger, and differ only in geographic scope due to the territorial coverage of the RBOCs, SBC and Verizon. The SBC Complaint addresses harms in metropolitan areas in SBC's territory, specifically with regard to buildings where SBC and AT&T are the only two firms that own or control direct wireline connections. SBC Compl. P 3. Analogously, the Verizon Complaint addresses harms in metropolitan areas in Verizon's territory, specifically with regard to buildings where Verizon and MCI are the only two firms that own or control [9] direct wireline connections. Verizon Compl. P 3. Apart from that difference, and the identities of the parties, the complaints are drafted virtually identically.

The government's detailed description of the alleged competitive harm is based on "local loops" and "local private lines," which are components of telecommunications networks operated by the merging parties. Local loops, sometimes referred to as "last-mile" connections, are typically either copper or fiber-optic transmission facilities that connect commercial buildings to a carrier's network. SBC Compl. P 12. These last-mile connections are necessary assets for providing service to business customers located in the building. Id.

The government defines a Local Private Line ("LPL") as a dedicated, point-to-point circuit offered over copper and/or fiber-optic transmission facilities that originates and terminates within a single metropolitan area and typically includes at least one local loop. Id. P 13. LPLs are sold in both retail markets (to business customers) and wholesale markets (to other [*5] carriers). Id. LPL circuits are sometimes referred to as "special access." Id. Depending on how they are configured, [10] LPLs can be used to carry voice traffic, data, or a combination of the two. Id. P 14. LPLs may be purchased as standalone products, but are also an important input to value-added voice and data telecommunications services that are offered to business customers. Id.

For the vast majority of commercial buildings in its respective territory, either SBC or Verizon is the only carrier that owns a last-mile connection to the building. SBC Compl. P 15; Verizon Compl. P 15. Thus, in order to provide voice or data telecommunications services to customers in those RBOC-only buildings, competing carriers typically must lease the connection from SBC or Verizon as LPL service, i.e. special access. SBC Compl. P 15; Verizon Compl. P 15.

For a small percentage of commercial buildings (though accounting for a substantial percentage of customer demand and revenue), other competitors (CLECs) have built or acquired their own last-mile fiber-optic connections, separate from the RBOCs, to connect their networks to the buildings. SBC Compl. P 16. [1] Once a CLEC has incurred the high fixed cost to construct a last-mile connection to a building, the CLEC can usually provide service to business customers [11] in the building at a lower cost than it would otherwise be able to do if it had to lease the connection from the RBOC. Id. It can also provide alternative access to other CLECs seeking to serve business customers in the building, i.e., LPL service can be resold on the wholesale market. Id.

AT&T is among the leading CLECs in SBC's territory in the number of buildings it has connected with its own last-mile fiber facilities, as is MCI in Verizon's territory. SBC Compl. P 17; Verizon Compl. P 17. For hundreds of buildings in SBC's and Verizon's territory, AT&T and MCI respectively are the only CLECs with a last-mile connection into the building. SBC Compl. P 17; Verizon Compl. P 17. In these buildings, the instant mergers would thus reduce [12] the number of carriers with last-mile connections from two to one. SBC Compl. P 18; Verizon Compl. P 18. The parties accordingly refer to these buildings as "2-to-1" buildings.

The government states that the relevant product markets affected by the mergers are the markets for LPLs, and voice and data telecommunications services that rely on LPLs. SBC Compl. P 19. [2] LPLs themselves are a recognized service category among telecommunications carriers and end-user business customers, as customers typically purchase LPLs in standard bandwidth increments. Id. P 21. LPLs are distinct from switched local exchange telephone services. Id. P 22. Switched local exchange lines route calls through a central office, do not necessarily use a dedicated circuit, and thus do not offer the guaranteed bandwidth, high service levels, and security that LPLs

---

[1] Competitive providers have to date deployed independent connections to approximately 30,000 individual commercial buildings, representing roughly 1% of the 3 million commercial buildings nationwide. Nat'l Ass'n of State Util. Consumer Advocates Resp., Selwyn Decl. at 6.

[2] The government is vague about the relevant geographical areas for these product markets, alleging that they are no broader than each metropolitan area and no more narrow than each individual building. SBC Compl. P 24.

provide. Id. Carriers often rely on LPL circuits to connect a business customer's location to their networks, enabling the carrier to supply value-added data networking, Internet access, local voice, and long distance services to [*6] the business customer. Id. P 23. AT&T and MCI were among the largest competitors to SBC and Verizon respectively [13] in the market for LPLs. SBC Compl. P 20; Verizon Compl. P 20.

Based on this background, the government claims that the mergers would eliminate competition for LPL service to 2-to-1 buildings, resulting in higher prices for both retail and wholesale customers. SBC Compl. P 25; Verizon Compl. P 25. The government also claims that the mergers would tend to lessen the competition for retail voice and data telecommunications services provided over LPL access to 2-to-1 buildings. SBC Compl. P 26; Verizon Compl. P 26.

The government acknowledges that other competitors (CLECs) could build new last-mile connections to buildings in response to the mergers, but that such entry is difficult, time-consuming, and expensive. SBC Compl. P 27. The government identified five factors that affect whether a CLEC [14] would build a new last-mile connection to a particular building: (1) the proximity of the building to the CLEC's existing network interconnection points; (2) the capacity required at the customer's location (and thus the revenue opportunity); (3) the availability of capital; (4) the existence of physical barriers, such as rivers and railbeds, between the CLEC's network and the customer's location; and (5) the ease or difficulty of securing the necessary consent from building owners and municipal officials. Id. Because their costs are so substantial, firms typically only build a connection after they have secured a customer contract of sufficient size to justify the anticipated construction costs. Id. P 28.

Therefore, the government states that although entry may occur in some 2-to-1 buildings, conditions for entry are unlikely to be met in hundreds of those buildings, and thus entry is unlikely to eliminate the competitive harms that would result from the mergers. SBC Compl. P 29; Verizon Compl. P 29. Accordingly, the government alleged that the mergers would violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act because they eliminate or substantially lessen competition in the markets for [15] LPLs and voice and data telecommunications services that rely on LPLs, and would correspondingly raise prices for those products. SBC Compl. P 32; Verizon Compl. P 32.

D. Proposed Remedy

The government's proposed remedies for the alleged antitrust harms of the mergers are specified in the proposed final judgments. See Pl.'s Mot. for Entry of Final J. at 2-3. Apart from the difference in geographic scope due to the identities of the parties, the proposed final judgments are practically identical and require the same type of divestitures. See id., Proposed SBC-AT&T Final J. at 1-17 & Proposed Verizon-MCI Final J. at 1-16.

The proposed final judgments require defendants, within 120 days after the closing of the mergers, or five days after notice of the entry of the Final Judgment by the Court, whichever is later, to divest the "Divestiture Assets." Proposed SBC-AT&T Final J. at 5. [3] The Divestiture Assets are defined in terms of an indefeasible right of use ("IRU"), a long-term leasehold interest that gives the holder the right to use specified strands of fiber in a telecommunications facility. Id. at 4. All of the IRUs must be for a minimum of 10 years, may not [16] include any recurring fee, [*7] and cannot limit the right of the acquirer to use the asset as it wishes. Id.

The Divestiture Assets consist of IRUs for lateral (or last-mile) connections to hundreds of buildings in the identified metropolitan areas along with transport facilities sufficient to enable the IRUs to be used by the purchaser to provide telecommunications services. Id. at 3. The divestitures must be accomplished in such a way as to satisfy the United States that the Divestiture Assets can and will be used by the acquirer as part of a viable, ongoing telecommunications business. Id. at 7. All Divestiture Assets in a given metropolitan area must be divested to a single acquirer unless otherwise approved by the United States. Id. at 7-8.

---

[3] If defendants do not accomplish the divestiture within the periods prescribed, the proposed final judgments provide that the Court will appoint a trustee selected by the United States to effect the divestitures. Id. at 8-11.

To ensure that the acquirer [17] has adequate capacity to serve customers in a given location, the lateral connection to be divested will consist of an IRU for the greater of (1) eight fiber strands or (2) one-half of the currently unused fiber strands in AT&T's or MCI's facilities serving the building. Id. at 4. The strands shall connect the point of entry of the building to the splice point with fiber used to serve different buildings. Id. The fiber strands may be provided from those controlled by either of the merging parties. Id. To ensure that the acquirer can connect the last-mile connections to its network facilities, the divestiture includes IRUs for transport facilities sufficient to connect the divested last-mile connections to locations mutually agreed upon by defendants and the acquirer. Id. at 3.

Each proposed final judgment includes a list of specific buildings for which lateral connections must be divested. Id. at 18-27. Using information provided by the parties and other CLECs, the government compiled a list of 2-to-1 buildings as described in the complaints. Pl.'s Resp. to Ct.'s Order of July 25, 2006, at 8. The government then applied an algorithm to determine if entry by another [18] competitor was likely for each 2-to-1 building, based on the criteria identified in the complaints. Id. The proposed final judgments encompass all 2-to-1 buildings where it was determined that entry by another competitor was unlikely. Id. [4]

The proposed final judgments also include additional terms regarding notice of the proposed divestitures, financing, preservation of assets, compliance inspections, and a ban on reacquisitions. Proposed SBC-AT&T Final J. at 11-15. The proposed final judgments are set to expire ten years from the date of their entry. Id. at 16. They also specify that this Court retains jurisdiction to enable any party to apply at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary to carry out or construe the judgments. Id. at 15.

II. Procedural History

A. Tunney Act Procedures

The government filed the complaints [19] in both of these cases on October 27, 2005. At the same time, the government filed stipulations and proposed final judgments designed to remedy the alleged anti-competitive harms. Pl.'s Mot. for Entry of Final J. at 2-3. Amended proposed final judgments for both cases were filed on November 28, 2005. Id. at 3. In December, the Court consolidated the two cases. Order, Dec. 21, 2005.

In compliance with the procedures mandated by the Tunney Act, the government filed Competitive Impact Statements ("CIS") for both mergers with the Court on November 16, 2005. The government [*8] also published the proposed final judgments and CISs in the Federal Register on December 15, 2005. See SBC-AT&T CIS, Proposed Final Judgment, Complaint, Amended Stipulation, 70 Fed. Reg. 74,344 (Dec. 15, 2005); Verizon-MCI CIS, Proposed Final Judgment, Complaint, Stipulation, 70 Fed. Reg. 74,350 (Dec. 15, 2005) (Verizon-MCI Merger). Finally, the government published separate summaries of the terms of the proposed final judgments in the Washington Post for seven days beginning on December 8, 2005 and ending on December 14, 2005. Pl.'s Mot. for Entry of Final J. at 3. Within the [20] 60-day period for public comments, which ended on February 13, 2006, three comments were received. Id. These comments were filed by the Alliance for Competition in Telecommunications ("ACTel"), COMPTEL, and the New York Attorney General.

The government filed the public comments and its response to the comments with the Court on March 21, 2006. The comments and response were also published in the Federal Register on April 5, 2006. See Response to Public Comments on the Proposed Final Judgments, 71 Fed. Reg. 17,164 (Apr. 5, 2006). On that same day, the government filed with the Court its Certificate of Compliance with the Tunney Act procedures, and its motion for entry of the proposed final judgments.

---

[4] In the final tally, the proposed final judgments cover 383 buildings for the SBC-AT&T merger and 365 buildings for the Verizon-MCI merger.

The SBC-AT&T merger closed on December 18, 2005, and the Verizon-MCI merger closed on January 6, 2006. Pl.'s Resp. to Public Comments at 7 n.10. The government states that this is in keeping with its standard practice that neither the stipulations nor pending proposed final judgments prohibit the closing of the mergers. Id. (citing ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 387 (5th ed. 2002)).

B. Amici Curiae

Over the course of the [21] proceedings, several parties have been granted leave to participate as amici curiae. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(f)(3). "COMPTEL is an association of competitive local communications providers that are both wholesale customers of and competitors to the merging parties in the Local Private Line service markets that are the subject of the Complaints." COMPTEL's Mot. to Intervene at 5. COMPTEL members include Sprint Nextel, XO Communications, RCN Corporation, Covad Communications, and over 300 other members. Id. Defendants AT&T and MCI were members of COMPTEL prior to the mergers. Id. The Court permitted COMPTEL to participate as an amicus on May 10, 2006.

ACTel is a group of firms whose "members includes both [CLECs] and [IXCs] that buy Local Private Lines from the merging companies." ACTel's Mot. to Intervene, Ex. 1 at 3 (comments to Proposed Final Judgments). ACTel members combine these purchased LPLs with additional facilities, technology, and services to sell their own value-added telecommunications services, sometimes in competition with the merging parties, to business customers. Id. The Court permitted ACTel to participate as an amicus on May 10, 2006.

[22] The New York Attorney General is charged with enforcing federal and state antitrust and consumer protection laws. N.Y. Att'y Gen. Mot. to Intervene at 2. The New York Attorney General "advocates in federal and state administrative and judicial proceedings on behalf of New York State consumers and small businesses, and the public interest generally." Id. The Court permitted the New York Attorney General to participate as an amicus on July 25, 2006.

The National Association of State Utility Consumer Advocates ("NASUCA") is a [*9] voluntary, national association of 44 consumer advocates in 41 states and the District of Columbia. NASUCA Mot. to Intervene at 3. "NASUCA's members are designated by the laws of their respective states to represent the interests of utility consumers before state and federal regulators and in the courts." Id. Members operate independently from state utility commissions as advocates primarily for residential ratepayers. Id. The Court permitted NASUCA to participate as an amicus on July 25, 2006.

Sprint Nextel Corporation ("Sprint") is corporation that was a significant purchaser of LPL services from the merging parties. Sprint Mot. to Intervene at 3. [23] Sprint relies on those services to provide connectivity to its cellular telephone sites. See id. The Court permitted Sprint to participate as an amicus on July 25, 2006.

The New Jersey Division of Rate Counsel ("Rate Counsel"), formerly known as the New Jersey Ratepayer Advocate, "is a division within the Department of the Public Advocate, that represents and protects the interests of all utility consumers, including residential, business, commercial, and industrial entities." N.J. Rate Counsel Mot. to Intervene at 2. The New Jersey Rate Counsel participates actively in relevant federal and state administrative and judicial proceedings. Id. The Court permitted the New Jersey Rate Counsel to participate as an amicus on August 8, 2006.

C. Compilation of the Court's Record

In response to the initial materials and motion filed by the government, ACTel and COMPTEL filed oppositions to the motion for entry of the proposed final judgments, and replies were filed thereto. On July 12, 2006, the Court held a hearing involving the government, the merging parties, ACTel, and COMPTEL. See Order, July 7, 2006 (setting out instructions to counsel for the hearing). At the hearing, [24] the Court noted that there was no party specifically representing the public in the matter. See Hr'g Tr., July 12, 2006, at 5. At the conclusion of the hearing, the Court took the matters under advisement. Id. at 223. Following the hearing, the Court also requested the Federal Communication Commission's ("FCC") Memorandum Opinion and Order regarding the mergers. See Order, July 14, 2006.

The Court held another hearing on July 25, 2006, to discuss further proceedings for the case. Based on that hearing, the Court permitted three new parties to participate as amici as described above. In addition, the Court found there to be insufficient material in the record, which consisted largely or exclusively of unverified legal pleadings, to allow the Court to adequately discharge its duties under the Tunney Act. Hr'g Tr., July 25, 2006, at 7. Rather than hold an evidentiary hearing, the Court ordered the government to provide further materials that would allow the Court to make the public interest determination required by the Tunney Act. Id. at 8, 22. The Court allowed the government to decide exactly what types of materials were appropriate to submit. Id. at 10-11, 22. [25] The Court also provided the other parties and amici the opportunity to respond to this supplemental filing. Appropriate protective measures were put in place to allow for the submission of confidential material. See Order, July 25, 2006; Order, August 15, 2006.

The government's supplemental submission consisted of a memorandum explaining its submission, the declaration of W. Robert Majure, an economist in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, and various technical materials provided by the merging parties and other telecommunications firms. Pl.'s Submission [*10] in Resp. to Order of July 25, 2006 (hereinafter "Gov. Supp."). These technical materials consisted of retail customer statements, network maps and buildings lists of the merging parties and other firms, business plans of other firms, interrogatory responses by other firms, internal business records of the merging parties, and the divestiture assets purchase agreements for three firms that have agreed to purchase Divestiture Assets from AT&T under the proposed final judgments. Id., Decl. of Jared A. Hughes (describing technical materials submitted).

Responses to the government's supplemental submission were [26] filed by all of the admitted amici, as well as Verizon and AT&T. The responses of several amici included declarations by economists or other experts. See COMPTEL Resp. (including declaration of economist Joseph Gilliam); N.Y. Att'y Gen. Resp. (including declaration of Nicholas Economides, Ph.D., Economics); NASUCA Resp. (including declaration of Lee L. Selwyn, Ph.D.); Sprint Resp. (including declaration of Keith L. Kassien). The government also submitted a reply to these responses, including a reply declaration of Robert Majure. Pl.'s Reply Submission in Resp. to Order of July 25, 2006 (hereinafter "Gov. Reply").

The Court held a hearing on November 30, 2006, to discuss the supplemental filings. At the hearing, the government represented that six purchasing agreements had been reached for the Divestiture Assets, pending only approval of the proposed final judgments. Hr'g Tr., Nov. 30, 2006, at 24. After hearing from the government, merging parties, and all amici, the Court took the matter under advisement. In addition, the government and amici were permitted to file, and did file, supplemental responses to the specific arguments raised at the hearing.

ANALYSIS

[27] I. Scope of Review Under the Tunney Act

HN1[] The Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974, also known as the Tunney Act, requires the Court to determine whether the proposed final judgments are "in the public interest." 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1). The statute does not further define the meaning of "in the public interest," but specifies that in making the public interest determination, the Court shall consider:

> (A) the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations, provisions for enforcement and modification, duration of relief sought, anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered, whether its terms are ambiguous, and any other competitive considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment that the court deems necessary to a determination of whether the consent judgment is in the public interest; and

> (B) the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets, upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint including consideration of public benefit, if any, to be derived from the determination [28] of the issues at trial.

15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1). HN2[] The Court is not required to conduct an evidentiary hearing nor is it required to permit anyone to intervene. 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(2). Instead, the procedure for making the public interest determination is generally left to the discretion of the Court. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(f). The Court is permitted to take testimony of government officials or expert witnesses, appoint a special master or expert consultant, authorize participation by other parties as amici or interveners, or "take such other action in the public interest [*11] as the court may deem appropriate." Id.

The Tunney Act as it stands is the product of amendments recently enacted in the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004. A body of law interpreting the Tunney Act's vague language has developed since its inception, but no court has yet examined the impact of the 2004 amendments. While amici argue that the 2004 amendments expanded the Court's scope of review under the Tunney Act, a close reading of the law demonstrates that the 2004 amendments effected minimal changes, and that this [29] Court's scope of review remains sharply proscribed by precedent and the nature of Tunney Act proceedings.

A. 2004 Amendments and Legislative History

The 2004 amendments to the Tunney Act made two relevant changes to the text of the statute: (1) the Court "shall" instead of "may" consider the enumerated factors in making its public interest determination; and (2) there are additional and amended factors to consider in making the determination. See Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004, Pub. L. No. 108-237, § 221(b)(2) (codified at 15 U.S.C. § 16). The additional factors are "whether [the proposed final judgment's] terms are ambiguous," and "the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets." Id. The catch-all factor was amended from "any other consideration bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment" to "any other competitive considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment that the court deems necessary to a determination of whether the consent judgment is in the public interest." Id.

The amendments also included a set of Congressional findings. Congress stated that [30] the purpose of the Tunney Act "was to ensure that the entry of antitrust consent judgments is in the public interest." Id. § 221(a)(1). Congress further states that "it would misconstrue the meaning and Congressional intent in enacting the Tunney Act to limit the discretion of district courts to review antitrust consent judgments solely to determining whether entry of those consent judgments would make a 'mockery of the judicial function'." Id. Finally, Congress stated that the purpose of the amendment was to "effectuate the original Congressional intent in enacting the Tunney Act and to ensure that United States settlements of civil antitrust suits are in the public interest." Id.

The legislative history provides further explanation for the amendments. [5] Several legislators spoke of the need to prevent judicial "rubber-stamping" of proposed consent decrees. See 150 Cong. Rec. S3613-14, 53619 (Apr. 2, 2004) (Statements of Senators Hatch and Dewine); [6] 150 Cong. Rec. H3659-60 (June 2, 2004) (Statements of Representatives Scott and Conyers). Senator Leahy stated that there was concern that judicial discretion in making the public interest determination resulted in [31] an overly deferential review of prosecutors' judgments. 150 Cong. Rec. at S3615. In his view, the amendments mandate instead that "the court make an independent judgment [*12] based on a series of enumerated factors." Id.

---

[5] "The court applies the traditional tools of statutory interpretation in determining congressional intent, looking to the text, structure, purpose, and legislative history of a statute." Me. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. FERC, 372 U.S. App. D.C. 82, 454 F.3d 278, 282 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

[6] Some senators refer to the amendments as Title II of the Standards Development Organization Advancement Act. When passed in its final form, however, Title II of the Act was renamed the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act.

Senator Kohl, however, was the lone legislator to articulate in depth the rationale for the Tunney Act amendments. See id. at S3615-18. Generally, he stated that the purpose of the amendments was to renew the district court's responsibility to independently examine proposed antitrust [32] settlements. Id. Senator Kohl traced the history of the Tunney Act, describing Senator Tunney's concerns with the political influence of large companies in these matters, which had been triggered by the ITT antitrust settlement in 1971. Id. at 53616. He spoke of the text, legislative history, and early interpretation of the original Tunney Act to demonstrate Congress's intent to prevent judicial "rubber-stamping" of antitrust settlements, and require judicial scrutiny instead. Id. [7]

Senator Kohl stated that the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals had subsequently interpreted the Tunney Act in a manner that made meaningful review of the consent decrees almost impossible. Id. at S3617. He specifically pointed to decisions that held that final judgments should only be rejected by courts if they make "a mockery of judicial power." Id. (citing [33] and quoting United States v. Microsoft, 312 U.S. App. D.C. 378, 56 F.3d 1448 (D.C. Cir. 1995), and Mass. School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. United States, 326 U.S. App. D.C. 175, 118 F.3d 776 (D.C. Cir. 1997)). He stated that to the extent these decisions are contrary to the Congressional findings in the amendments, they are overruled. Id. at 53618. In his view, the amendments intend "to assure that courts undertake meaningful review of antitrust consent decrees to assure that they are in the public interest and analytically sound." Id. This is in part accomplished by requiring examination of the enumerated factors, which is "intended to preclude a court from engaging in 'rubber stamping' of antitrust consent decrees, but instead to seriously and deliberately consider these factors in the course of determining whether the proposed decree is in the public interest." Id.

In order to understand the findings in the 2004 amendments, the Court must therefore closely examine D.C. Circuit precedent regarding Tunney Act review. Moreover, to the extent that this precedent has not been overruled by the 2004 amendments, it is still binding on this Court. As the concept of "mockery of judicial power" [34] is specifically highlighted by both the Congressional findings and legislative history, the Court's inquiry begins there.

B. "Mockery of Judicial Power"

In United States v. Microsoft, 312 U.S. App. D.C. 378, 56 F.3d 1448 (D.C. Cir. 1995), the Circuit court reviewed the district court's rejection of a consent decree under the pre-amended Tunney Act. In analyzing the proper scope of review in a "public interest" inquiry, the Circuit court considered whether district courts should evaluate proposed settlements by examining issues outside the underlying complaint. See id. at 1458-60. The Circuit court concluded that in evaluating a proposed settlement, the Tunney Act does not permit the district court to "reach beyond the complaint to evaluate claims that the government did not make and to inquire as to why they were not made." Id. at 1459.

It is with regard to this conclusion that the Circuit court invoked the concept of "mockery of judicial power." Id. at 1462. The court stated:

> But, when the government is challenged for not bringing as extensive an action [*13] as it might, a district judge must be careful not to exceed his or her [35] constitutional role. A decree, even entered as a pretrial settlement, is a judicial act, and therefore the district judge is not obliged to accept one that, on its face and even after government explanation, appears to make a mockery of judicial power. Short of that eventuality, the Tunney Act cannot be interpreted as an authorization for a district judge to assume the role of Attorney General.

Id. In other words, the court held that district courts cannot reach beyond the complaint unless the limited nature of the complaint makes a mockery of judicial power. For example, if an antitrust complaint and proposed settlement in this case only addressed the telephone connections for a single household residence, but none other in the entire country, such an absurd complaint would seem to violate the "mockery" standard.

---

[7] Senator Kohl also noted that the text of the pre-amended Tunney Act contained "no standards governing how a court is to conduct this review." Id. at 53616.

This particular understanding of the "mockery" standard, however, may have been altered (or misconstrued) by a subsequent decision. In Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. United States, 326 U.S. App. D.C. 175, 118 F.3d 776 (D.C. Cir. 1997), the court held that in a Tunney Act proceeding, the "district court must examine the decree in light of the violations [36] charged in the complaint and should withhold approval only if any of the terms appear ambiguous, if the enforcement mechanism is inadequate, if third parties will be positively injured, or if the decree otherwise makes 'a mockery of judicial power.'" Id. at 783 (quoting Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1462). This formulation of the "mockery" concept apparently casts it as a standard of review, to be used unless there are other specific problems with the consent decree.

The 2004 amendments to the Tunney Act clearly overruled the Circuit court's holding in Massachusetts School of Law. First, HN3[] a court must now consider all of the enumerated factors, as opposed to just ambiguity of terms, enforcement mechanisms, and third-party harms. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1) (as amended). Second, the Congressional findings in the text of the amendments state that HN4[] Tunney Act review is not limited "solely to determining whether entry of those consent judgments would make a 'mockery of the judicial function'." Pub. L. No. 108-237, § 221(a)(1)(B). This statutory language appears to overrule Massachusetts School of Law's use of the "mockery" standard [37] of review.

It is somewhat awkward and unusual for Congress to overrule judicial precedent through a "finding" as opposed to through the operative language of a statute. Nonetheless, this finding was approved by the whole of Congress and the President in the final version of the Act. Therefore, the Court must accept it as a definitive statement of Congressional intent. See Ranbaxy Laboratories Ltd. v. Leavitt, 373 U.S. App. D.C. 377, 469 F.3d 120, 124 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (holding that courts, like agencies, "must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress" (quoting Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. NRDC, 467 U.S. 837, 842, 104 S. Ct. 2778, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1984)); see also Red Lion Broad. Co. v. FCC, 395 U.S. 367, 380-81, 89 S. Ct. 1794, 23 L. Ed. 2d 371 (1969) ("Subsequent legislation declaring the intent of an earlier statute is entitled to great weight in statutory construction."). Accordingly, the Court cannot use the "mockery of justice" standard as the general standard of review under the Tunney Act.

That being settled, the Court now turns to the two most significant legal questions concerning the public interest determination under the amended Tunney Act: (1) whether this Court has any authority to inquire [38] into matters outside the scope of [*14] the complaint as drafted; and (2) how much deference, if any, is accorded to the government's evaluation of the adequacy of the proposed settlements.

C. Review Beyond the Complaints

Some of the amici have argued that, in making its public interest determination, the Court can and should consider matters other than those specifically addressed by the government's complaints. The text of the amended Tunney Act is silent as to whether the Court can probe beyond the scope of the government's complaint in making a public interest determination. The legislative history similarly provides no direct guidance on the question. Therefore, the D.C. Circuit's previous holding remains binding on this Court.

As described above, the D.C. Circuit held in Microsoft that HN5[] a district court should not inquire beyond the complaint unless the complaint makes a mockery of judicial power. 56 F.3d at 1462. Apart from that rare case, a district court is not permitted to "reach beyond the complaint to evaluate claims that the government did not make and to inquire as to why they were not made." Id. at 1459. The Circuit court derived [39] this limitation from the language of the Tunney Act factors, specifically the factors focusing on the "alleged violations" and "violations set forth in the complaint." Id. (citing 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)). In addition, the Circuit court based its decision on constitutional concerns that overriding prosecutorial discretion to initiate antitrust suits infringes on the proper separation of powers. Id. at 1458-60. Finally, the Circuit court took note of the argument that the government could constrain Tunney Act review by drafting a narrow complaint, but explained that this argument has little force because the "court's authority to review the decree depends entirely on the government's exercising its prosecutorial discretion by bringing a case in the first place." Id. at 1459-60.

Nothing in the text or legislative history of the 2004 amendments undermines this reasoning. While the drafters of the 2004 amendments stated that "mockery of judicial power" should not be the general standard of review under the Tunney Act, the Microsoft decision did not make it so. Rather, HN6[] it is only if the complaint underlying the consent decree is [40] drafted so narrowly as to make a mockery of judicial power can the district court reject a consent decree due to matters outside the scope of the underlying complaint. Id. at 1462. In all other cases, a court cannot do so. Id. at 1459.

Some amici, however, maintain that the 2004 amendments do allow the Court to examine matters beyond the scope of the complaint. The textual basis for this assertion is the added factor that the Court must consider, "the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets." 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1); see, e.g., Sprint Resp. at 17. The plain language, however, does not compel the result amici seek. Rather, the text is ambiguous because "relevant markets" could refer to the markets implicated by the merger as a whole, or only those markets implicated by the government's complaint.

The legislative history favors the latter interpretation. It states that the purpose of that specific added language is to "ensure that the Tunney Act review is properly focused on the likely competitive impact of the judgment, rather than extraneous factors irrelevant to the purposes of antitrust [41] enforcement." 150 Cong. Rec. S3618 (Statement of Senator Kohl). As review is focused on the "judgment," it again appears that the Court cannot go beyond the scope of the complaint. See Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1459 ("We therefore dismiss the [*15] claim that the last line in section 16(e)(1), the catchall clause allowing the district court to entertain 'any other considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment,' authorizes the wide-ranging inquiry the district court wished to conduct in this case."). Therefore, the 2004 amendments have left in place the Circuit's holding that this Court cannot look beyond the complaint in making the public interest determination unless the complaint is drafted so narrowly as to make a mockery of judicial power.

D. Standard of Review for Proposed Remedies

The remaining core question concerning Tunney Act review is how much deference, if any, is accorded to the government's evaluation of the adequacy of the proposed settlements. The overall standard for the Court is deciding whether entry of the proposed settlements is "in the public interest." 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1). No explanation of this standard is provided, [42] apart from the aforementioned Congressional finding that it is more stringent than a "mockery of judicial power" standard. The text of the amended Tunney Act specifies factors the Court must consider in making its determination, but is silent as to whether the Court should defer to the government's conclusions regarding those factors. While the legislative history of the original Tunney Act and 2004 amendments make clear that the Court is not to "rubber-stamp" proposed settlements, Congress has not instructed how much scrutiny the Court should apply instead.

In this respect, the 2004 amendments have not altered the conundrum courts face under the Tunney Act. The D.C. Circuit confronted this puzzle in some depth in the Microsoft case. The Microsoft court was aware that Congress sought to foreclose "judicial rubber-stamping," and require an "independent" determination of whether a proposed settlement is in the public interest. 56 F.3d at 1458. The great difficulty with the "public interest" standard was that there was "virtually no useful precedent." Id. At the very least, no appellate court had ever approved a district court's rejection of a settlement as outside [43] the public interest. Id. This assessment appears just as true today as it did in 1995.

The Circuit court nonetheless addressed the question of how to evaluate whether a proposed remedy is adequate to address an alleged antitrust violation. It held that HN7[] a district court is not permitted to reject proposed remedies merely because the court believes other remedies are preferable. Id. at 1460. Instead, the question is not whether a proposed remedy is the best one, but only whether it is "within the reaches of the public interest." Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Such a rule is justified because "[r]emedies which appear less than vigorous may well reflect an underlying weakness in the government's case, and for the district judge to assume that the allegations in the complaint have been formally made out is quite unwarranted." Id. at 1461. Even though the government has alleged antitrust harms, a court considering a proposed settlement does not have actual findings that defendants engaged in illegal practices, as would exist after a trial. Id. Moreover, room must be made for the government to grant concessions in the [44] negotiation process for settlements. See id. ("it could also be that this was a concession the government made in bargaining").

For these reasons, the Circuit court also held that HN8[] district courts should be deferential to the government's predictions as to the effects of the proposed remedies. Id. Accordingly, the relevant inquiry is whether there is a factual foundation for the [*16] government's decisions such that its conclusions regarding the proposed settlements are reasonable. See id. (stating that Professor Arrow's opinion that the remedies in question were appropriate provided a sufficient basis for finding the government's remedies reasonable).

The textual changes in the 2004 amendments do not address these holdings and in no way undermine them. The amendments' legislative history also provides little reason to question the Circuit's holdings or reasoning. The legislative record for the most part only contains several general statements that district courts should "carefully review," "undertake meaningful and measured scrutiny of," and "independently review" proposed consent decrees. 150 Cong. Rec. S3616-17. The Circuit, however, already considered the same Congressional [45] sentiments in analyzing the pre-2004 Act. See Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1458.

A couple of the statements of Senator Kohl though warrant closer inspection. First, he specifically cited the "reaches of the public interest" language and stated that this holding along with others make it "difficult if not impossible for courts to exercise meaningful scrutiny" of proposed decrees. 150 Cong. Rec. S3617. There is no indication, however, that Congress intended to overrule the holding. Instead, it appears that Congress chose to strengthen review by expanding the list of factors a court must consider. See id. at 3618.

Second, Senator Kohl stated that courts should assure that consent decrees are "in the public interest and analytically sound." Id. This formulation perhaps indicates that the Court should examine whether the proposed settlement remedies the harms identified in the complaint in an analytically sound manner. This echoes several arguments made by amici that the Court should guarantee that the government has followed sound, established antitrust principles in reaching a settlement. This argument, however, is ultimately without force because the "analytically sound" language [46] was not actually added to the text of the statute. HN9[] The statement of a lone legislator, unaccompanied by a corresponding change in the statutory language, is insufficient to override a well-established judicial construction of the statute. See Ruhe v. Bergland, 683 F.2d 102, 104 (4th Cir. 1982) (holding that legislative history unaccompanied by a legislative act is insufficient to overrule prior statutory interpretation). [8] Moreover, the Circuit's reasoning in Microsoft is still persuasive, as HN10[] it is improper for a court to require a proposed settlement to perfectly remedy antitrust violations when those violations have not yet been proven at trial, and when the government needs room to negotiate a settlement.

[47] Some amici nevertheless contend that this Court should apply the standard of review for remedies utilized after antitrust violations have been proven at trial. See, e.g., COMPTEL Resp. at 10; ACTel Resp. to Nov. Hr'g at 2-3. In their view, antitrust remedies "must be effective to redress the violations and to restore competition." See Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 573, 92 S. Ct. 1142, 31 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1972) (internal quotation [*17] marks omitted). These arguments, however, fail to account for the binding precedent in this Circuit, the lack of change effected by the 2004 amendments, and the nature of Tunney Act proceedings that call for limited review. HN11[] This Court instead will approve the proposed settlements if they are "within the reaches of the public interest." See Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1460. The government need not prove that the settlements will perfectly remedy the alleged antitrust harms; it need only provide a factual basis for concluding that the settlements are reasonably adequate remedies for the alleged harms. See id. at 1460-61.

[8] In fact, an earlier version of the amendments would have required a "reasonable belief, based on substantial evidence and reasoned analysis, to support the United States' conclusion that the consent judgment is in the public interest." H.R. 1086, § 221 (as reported in Senate out of committee). That this language was removed in the final bill indicates that no change to the standard of review was intended by Congress. This history thus indicates that Senator Kohl's statements better reflect statutory language that was omitted, rather than the Act that was passed.

E. Additional Considerations

Finally, the Circuit court in Microsoft mentioned several other factors [48] that courts should consider, though it did not indicate that its analysis was exhaustive. HN12[] A district court should pay attention to a proposed judgment's clarity in order to make implementation of the judgment manageable. Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1461-62. In addition, the court should closely examine compliance mechanisms in a proposed settlement. Id. at 1462. Finally, the court should be concerned with any allegations that the proposed settlement will injure a third party. Id. The Massachusetts School of Law decision held that these were the only specific factors to consider, 118 F.3d at 783, but the 2004 amendments have clearly overruled that holding. After the 2004 amendments, these factors along with others are explicitly enumerated in the Tunney Act's text, and must all be considered by the Court. 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1).

F. Summary of Tunney Act Review

In conclusion, HN13[] under the amended Tunney Act, the Court cannot reject the proposed settlements merely because the government failed to address antitrust issues not raised in its complaints. Further, the Court must accord deference to the government's predictions [49] about the efficacy of its remedies, and may not require that the remedies perfectly match the alleged violations because this may only reflect underlying weakness in the government's case or concessions made during negotiation. The Tunney Act only requires that the Court consider specific enumerated factors in making its public interested determination.

These factors can be loosely separated into two groups. The first group of factors address the competitive impact of the proposed remedies, i.e., how well the settlement remedies the harms alleged in the complaints. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1) (requiring consideration of: "the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations," "duration of relief sought," "the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets, upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint," and "any other competitive considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment"). The second group of factors address issues unrelated to the competitive impact of the settlement. See id. (requiring consideration of: [50] "provisions for enforcement and modification," "anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered," "consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of the issues at trial," and "whether its terms are ambiguous").

The Court will first consider the competitive impact factors, examining to what degree the proposed settlements remedy the alleged harms. This requires analyzing the government's view of the settlements, as well as amici's arguments regarding the settlements' inadequacies. Finally, the Court will consider the non-competitive [*18] factors as they relate to the proposed settlements.

II. Overall Approach of Proposed Settlements

A. Rationale of Proposed Settlements

In the government's view, the proposed settlements perfectly remedy the alleged antitrust violations because the proposed final judgments require asset divestitures at all buildings where harm is alleged - the 2-to-1 buildings where entry is unlikely. Gov. Supp., Mem. at 7. The buyer of the divested lateral (or last-mile) connection for each building is expected to replace the competition lost due to the mergers. Id. at 9 As new sales opportunities arise [51] in those buildings, the asset-buyers will be positioned to compete, just as AT&T or MCI would have been. Id. Customers seeking access or connectivity to a particular building will thus have the option of two facilities-based provides, just as they did before the mergers. Id.

The opinion of economist Robert Majure provides a basis for the government's building-based approach. Majure has analyzed numerous mergers in the telecommunications industry and supervised the economists tasked with analyzing the instant mergers. Gov. Supp., Majure Decl. PP 1-2. In his view, the proposed remedies are straightforward because the asset-buyers "step into the shoes of AT&T or MCI." Id. P 16. These asset-buyers can then offer a competitive alternative to customers - either tenants of the buildings or other carriers seeking a building connection in order to provide services to the tenants. Id. In other words, the divestitures provide a remedy for both the retail and wholesale markets.

The proposed settlements require that at least eight strands of fiber be divested for each lateral connection. In Majure's view, this amount of fiber is sufficient to serve the likely customer demand in [52] any particular building. Id. P 20. He further opines that the settlement's use of IRUs (indefeasible rights of use) instead of divestitures of full ownership of the strands is adequate because IRUs are industry-standard arrangements that carriers routinely employ. Id. P 22. The ten-year terms of the IRUs are appropriate in his view because of the dynamic nature of the industry, the fact that customer contracts are typically one to three years, and that DOJ's general policy is to limit settlements to ten years. Id. P 23. The divested assets are also effective because they include additional assets necessary to connect the lateral connection with the buyer's transport network. Id. P 24.

Finally, one of the keys to this building-based approach is Majure's conclusion that AT&T and MCI did not have any unique qualifications as a competitor in the LPL market. See id. P 17. Majure states that he "found no evidence suggesting a unique competitive role for either" AT&T or MCI. Id. For this reason, any supplier who buys the divested assets can provide an adequate competitive option for customers. Id.

B. Potential Inadequacies of the Government's Approach

[53] The amici have presented several related arguments that question the government's building-based approach, and thus the adequacy of the proposed settlements. First, they argue that the government's view of the relevant market is simplistic and unrealistic, and that actual customers instead employ a multi-building perspective. Second, they argue that the government's view addresses in part the retail LPL market, but not the wholesale market. Third, they argue that for these two reasons and others, the government has [*19] overlooked the uniquely powerful competitive positions of AT&T and MCI before the mergers, and thus has proposed an inadequate remedy. Finally, they argue that the government's position is inconsistent with well-established antitrust analysis, and that the government has not provided sufficient proof of the efficacy of the proposed remedy. The Court will consider each of these arguments in turn, as well as the government's response.

First, amici contend that actual business customers do not purchase LPL services on a single-building basis, but rather seek to purchase from a single provider integrated telecommunications services to connect multiple buildings. See, e. [54] g., COMPTEL Resp., Gilliam Decl. at 5-13; N.Y. Att'y Gen. Resp., Economides Decl. at 8-11. Therefore, the competitive position of LPL providers depends not on access to a single building, but access to a network of buildings. Thus, customer pricing data is not available on a single-building basis, but rather consists of contracts for multi-building services. For these reasons, amici argue that the proposed remedies are structurally inadequate because they do not replace the competitive strength of AT&T's and MCI's large networks. See, e.g., COMPTEL Resp., Gilliam Decl. at 10-13.

The government responds that while carriers may seek to combine LPLs for multiple locations into a network for customers, LPLs are distinct inputs that are priced and sold separately. Gov. Reply, Majure Decl. P 9. In effect, the government's rationale is that restoring competition for single-building LPLs will restore competition for multi-building networks. The government acknowledges that a firm's network size can be a competitive advantage if it can cover all of a customer's locations, but argues that AT&T's and MCI's networks were not sufficiently large. Id. P 27 n.40 (pointing out that AT&T owned [55] lateral connections for only 4% of the commercial buildings where it provided service and leased LPL access for the other buildings (citing NASUCA Resp., Selwyn Decl. P 13)).

Second, amici contend that the proposed settlements do not remedy harms in the wholesale market for LPL services. The wholesale market involves selling LPL access to buildings to other telecommunication carriers, who in turn sell services to the building tenants. The amici argue that AT&T and MCI acted as major resellers in the wholesale market, in competition with SBC and Verizon, and were able to resell access at especially low rates because they could acquire LPL access at very favorable rates. See, e.g., ACTel Resp. at 25-28; N.Y. Att'y Gen. Resp., Economides Decl. at 21-22. The proposed settlements would thus be inadequate because the buyers of the divested assets could not replace AT&T and MCI's presence in the wholesale market.

The government responds that business records demonstrate that AT&T and MCI did not benefit from favorable rates unavailable to other LPL resellers. Gov. Reply, Majure Decl. P 31. Rather, those rates were available to any carrier spending a minimum of $ 10 million annually. [56] Id. Moreover, evidence shows that neither AT&T nor MCI generated a large amount of revenue from its LPL reselling. Id. P 31 & n.53. Further, under the proposed final judgments, the government is obligated to ensure that buyers of the Divestiture Assets have the ability to be a viable competitor for wholesale LPL service. See Gov. Reply at 17; Proposed SBC-AT&T Final J. at 7-8.

Third, amici argue that AT&T and MCI were especially strong competitors in the relevant markets not only because of their large networks and strength in the wholesale market, but also because of their [*20] high name recognition, extensive customer service operations, significant customer base, and dominance in the long-distance telephone service market. See, e.g., COMPTEL Resp. at 30-33, N.Y. Att'y Gen. Resp., Economides Decl. at 13-16, 33; NASUCA Resp., Selwyn Decl. at 18-23. The proposed settlements would thus be inadequate to replace the lost competition because only a fraction of AT&T's and MCI's assets are being divested among multiple, smaller firms.

The government responds that the only relevant attributes of AT&T and MCI are those that directly affect the market for LPLs. Gov. Reply, Majure [57] Decl. P 19. Majure states that the evidence shows that AT&T's LPL services were often priced significantly higher than other carriers. Id. P 28. Majure notes that MCI set low prices for LPLs, but only during the period it was in bankruptcy, and raised prices after emerging from bankruptcy. Id. P 29.

Finally, amici contend that the government's inadequate view of the market is the result of the failure to follow established antitrust principles, specifically those in DOJ's own Merger Guidelines. See DOJ & FTC, Horizontal Merger Guidelines (rev. ed. 1997) ("Merger Guidelines"). Specifically, the amici point to the government's failure to properly determine the relevant geographic markets and conduct market concentration analyses using the Hirschman-Herfindahl Index ("HHI"), a commonly used antitrust analysis tool. See, e.g., COMPTEL Resp. at 8-9, 24-28; N.Y. Att'y Gen. Resp. at 6-13; Sprint Resp. at 25-26. In addition, they claim that the government has failed to provide sufficient evidence to support the complaint's allegations as well as the proposed remedy. See, e.g., ACTel Resp. at 28; COMPTEL Resp. at 15.

The government responds that individual buildings [58] are relevant geographical markets under the Merger Guidelines, and that HHI analysis, though useful in other situations, would add little in understanding the situation with 2-to-1 buildings. Gov. Reply, Majure Decl. PP 3-14. The government also notes that the Tunney Act does not require it to prove its underlying case as if this proceeding were a trial on the merits.

C. Sufficiency of Proposed Remedies

As an initial matter, amici's arguments regarding DOJ's method of analyzing the mergers are not substantial. The government has proffered a reasonable explanation of how its analysis conforms to the established policies in the Merger Guidelines. Moreover, HN14[] the Tunney Act does not require the government to employ any specific type of analysis in evaluating and settling cases. See Section I.D, supra. Finally, the government is correct that it need not prove its underlying allegations in a Tunney Act proceeding. See id. To require the government to do so would fatally undermine the practice of settling cases and would violate the intent of the Tunney Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(2) (specifying that the Act does not require a court to hold an evidentiary [59] hearing).

Notwithstanding the government's counter-arguments, the amici have presented two significant shortcomings of the proposed settlements. First, the government acknowledged that network size matters because carriers are in a better competitive position when they own lateral connections to more locations customers seek to interconnect. See Gov. Reply, Majure Decl. P 27 n.40. Therefore, buyers of the Divestiture Assets may not be able to fully replace AT&T or MCI in the competitive landscape because their networks may not be as extensive. In fact, the divestiture agreements already reached encompass [*21] multiple buyers, indicating that AT&T and MCI's networks will be split up.

Second, the amici have presented convincing reasons why AT&T and MCI were especially competitive firms in the LPL market, specifically their extensive customer bases, customer support services, and complimentary offerings of other services. Even if AT&T and MCI did not offer LPL services at the lowest price, they may have offered the best options for customers due to other qualities such as superior customer service or existing business relationships. It is quite possible that the buyers of the Divestiture [60] Assets may not be able to offer overall services of the same quality to customers, and thus the proposed settlements would not replace the competition lost to the mergers.

While these shortcomings could reduce the effectiveness of the proposed settlements, they do not completely undermine the settlements. Even accounting for these issues, the government has presented a reasonable basis for concluding that the proposed settlements will replace much of the competition lost to the mergers, if perhaps not all of it. Therefore, the Court finds that the proposed settlements are reasonably adequate, and thus within the reaches of the public interest. See Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1460.

III. Accounting for the Likelihood of Entry

The amici argue that the proposed settlements are inadequate because the government overestimated the likelihood of competitor entry, and thus failed to require divestitures in enough buildings. The government contends, however, that it made predictions for entry in a reasonable manner that is as accurate as practically possible.

In both of the complaints, the government recognized that competitors could build new last-mile connections to [61] buildings in response to the mergers. The government identified five factors that affect whether a firm would build a new last-mile connection to a particular building: (1) the proximity of the building to the firm's existing network of interconnection points; (2) the capacity required at the customer's location (and thus the revenue opportunity); (3) the availability of capital; (4) the existence of physical barriers, such as rivers and railbeds, between the firm's network and the customer's location; and (5) the ease or difficulty of securing the necessary consent from building owners and municipal officials. The government also noted that because their costs are so substantial, firms typically only build a connection after they have secured a customer contract of sufficient size to justify the anticipated construction costs.

As is typical in established antitrust analysis, the government had to account for the possibility that the entry of new firms may replace competition lost to the merger. See Gov. Reply, Majure Decl. P 15; Merger Guidelines §§ 1.32, 3.0. In order to account for entry, the government created an algorithm to identify 2-to-1 buildings where the competitive [62] harm was not likely to be offset by entry. Gov. Supp., Majure Decl. P 14. The government specifically focused on two of the five identified factors -- proximity to another carrier's network and likely customer demand at the particular building. Id. If a building had customer demand over a certain threshold, and a competing carrier had facilities within a certain distance, the government considered entry likely in that building and did not require divestiture. Id. P 14 n.17 (describing algorithm in detail).

The amici contend that the government's entry algorithm was unreasonable because the government accounted for only two of [*22] the five identified factors that determine whether entry is likely. See, e.g., ACTel Resp. at 14-17; N.Y. Att'y Gen., Economides Decl. at 30-33; Sprint Resp. at 7-8. The amici also argue that the government's algorithm overlooks that fact that firms will not build new connections until they have a committed revenue opportunity. See, e.g., COMPTEL Resp. at 22. The amici further contend that the distance factor in the entry algorithm does not properly take into account the fact new connections with existing networks can only be made at certain points. [63] NASUCA Resp., Selwyn Decl. at 30. Finally, they argue that the entry algorithm should have been under-inclusive rather than over-inclusive. Id. at 51.

While the government's entry algorithm does not account for all relevant factors, it is a reasonable, practical prediction of likely entry. Quite reasonably, the algorithm is based on the two most important and easily measured factors -- customer demand, a proxy for potential revenue, and distance, a proxy for overall cost. The other factors, such as physical barriers and licensing hurdles, are far more difficult to measure on a building-by-building basis. See Gov. Reply, Majure Decl. P 18. Because the proposed final judgments need not be perfect remedies, the entry algorithm can be a reasonable instead of perfect prediction of entry. Moreover, there is no requirement that the government account for entry in an under-inclusive as opposed to over-inclusive manner. Finally, the algorithm accounts for the need for committed revenue to begin construction because interested firms can bid on customer contracts before constructing a new connection. The competitive bidding by an outside firm can create competition even if the firm has [64] not yet constructed a connection. See id. P 16. Because the entry formula is a reasonable, if not perfect, prediction of likely entry, the proposed settlements are within the reaches of the public interest.

IV. Remedies for Additional Buildings or Markets

The amici argue that the proposed settlements are inadequate because they do not require divestitures for other buildings or other markets affected by the mergers. Primarily, the amici argue that if the mergers create competitive harms for 2-to-1 buildings, they must similarly create competitive harms in "3-to-2" or "4-to-3" buildings, i.e., buildings where the mergers reduce the number of carriers with connections to two or three. See, e.g., ACTel Resp. at 29-30; Sprint Resp. at 19-22, 29. In addition, some amici argue that the settlements are inadequate because they fail to remedy competitive harms in markets for other products that indirectly rely on LPL services.

Amici argue that based on standard economic models, a decrease in competitors will result in higher prices for buildings where connected carriers decrease from four to three, or from three to two. See, e.g., N.Y. Att'y Gen., Economides Decl. P [65] 61. The government correctly responds, however, that the underlying complaints in these cases only address 2-to-1 buildings. See Gov. Reply at 25 n.82. The complaints are clearly and explicitly limited to 2-to-1 buildings. SBC Compl. PP 3, 18, 25, 29; Verizon Compl. PP 3, 18, 25, 29. Therefore, amici seek to challenge the proposed settlements on grounds beyond the scope of the complaints. That the government chose to address only 2-to-1 buildings does not render the complaints so narrow as to make a mockery of judicial power. See Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1462. Accordingly, the Court cannot find the proposed settlements inadequate for failing to address matters outside the scope of the complaints. See id. at 1459.

[*23] Some amici also argue that the proposed settlements are inadequate because they fail to remedy competitive harms in the general LPL market that are not the specific anti-competitive harms identified in the complaints. See, e.g., ACTel Resp. at 9-11; NASUCA Resp., Selwyn Decl. at 11-12. They also argue that the settlements should have addressed the market for LPL-based telecommunications services besides services for the building's tenants. [66] See NASUCA Resp., Selwyn Decl. at 38-40 (focusing on markets for residential customers, wireless carriers, and internet service providers); N.J. Rate Counsel Resp. at 3-11, 21-22 (focusing on mass market consumers). Again, however, these areas of concern are outside the scope of the complaints. Therefore, they cannot be grounds for rejecting the proposed settlements. See Microsoft, 56 F.3d at 1459.

V. Consideration of Remaining Factors

The first additional factor to consider is "anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered." The government states that the only other remedy "actually considered" was seeking to enjoin the entire transactions and proceeding to trial. Gov. Supp., Mem. at 14. Success at trial was surely not assured, so pursuit of that alternative may have resulted in no remedy at all. While a trial may have created an even greater evidentiary record, that benefit may not outweigh the possible loss of the settlement remedies. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(2) (HN15[] requiring "consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of the issues at trial").

The government also indicates, [67] however, that it considered certain detailed alternatives in crafting the particular terms of the Divestiture Assets. Gov. Supp., Mem. at 15. First, as some of the amici had proposed, the government considered whether to divest customer contracts along with "live" circuits that serve those customers, instead of currently unused, "dark" fiber. See Gov. Supp., Majure Decl. P 18. Some amici contend that this would have been a more effective remedy than the divestiture of dark fiber, which they claim is of little value. See, e.g., COMPTEL Resp., Gilliam Decl. P 24; NASUCA Resp., Selwyn Decl. at 54-60. The government's rationale though was that divesting live circuits would have been disruptive and costly for customers, and that the dark fibers are still of value because the customer contracts are relatively short in duration (typically one to three years) and thus will soon be up for competitive bidding. Gov. Supp., Majure Decl. P 18. The government notes that the selling price of the Divestiture Assets may be low, but explains that buyers often pay lower prices for assets divested under consent decrees. Gov. Reply at 20-21.

The government also considered whether to include wiring [68] or electronics inside the building as part of the Divestiture Assets. See Gov. Supp., Majure Decl. P 21. Some amici consider this to be a significant flaw in the proposed settlements because although a carrier may have a connection to a particular building, the connection may not extend to all the floors in the building. See ACTel Resp. at 7-8, 12-14. The government's justification, however, is that the additional costs of internal wiring and electronics is too small to prevent connected firms from competing, and divesting those materials would be disruptive to existing customers. Finding these explanations rational, the Court concludes that the government's choices amongst these alternatives were reasonable, and thus that the proposed settlements are within the reaches of the public interest.

[*24] The next factor to consider is the proposed settlements' "provisions for enforcement and modification." The proposed final judgments contain standard provisions that maintain the Court's jurisdiction and enure compliance with the decrees as entered. See Proposed SBC-AT&T Final J. at 8-16. The Court retains jurisdiction over the action for further orders necessary to carry out, construe, [69] modify, enforce, or punish violations of the proposed final judgments. To preserve the Divestiture Assets until divested, the proposed final judgments require the preservation of the Divestiture Assets and bar any actions that would interfere with the divestitures. To ensure all necessary actions are being taken to comply with the judgments, the proposed final judgments require the defendants or trustees, if appointed, to make regular submissions of affidavits describing efforts to comply with the judgments. Finally, the government may investigate any potential violations of the judgments, by, among other things, gathering documents, interviewing employees on the record, and requesting written submissions. These are adequate provisions for the enforcement and modification of the final judgments.

The final factor to consider is "whether [the proposed final judgments'] terms are ambiguous." As the government states, the proposed final judgments contain no significant ambiguities -- they are clear and specific regarding the assets to be divested, how the divestitures will occur, to whom the assets may be divested, the circumstances in which modifications may be made, and how the judgments [70] can be enforced. See Gov. Supp. at 15-16; Proposed SBC-AT&T Final J. at 3-16. While some terms of the purchase agreements are left to negotiation by the acquirers and defendants in commercial arms-length transactions, this is appropriate for these types of divestitures. Therefore, the Court finds that the terms of the proposed final judgments are not ambiguous.

CONCLUSION

The Court has complied with the procedures mandated by the Tunney Act and conducted a review of the proposed final judgments in accordance with the Act as amended in 2004 and the precedent of this Circuit. By requiring the government to submit supplemental material and admitting several interested parties to act as amici curiae, the Court has availed itself of a record sufficient for the review mandated by the Act. Upon review of the material submitted and arguments raised by all parties, the applicable law, and the entire record, the Court determines that entry of the proposed final judgments is in the public interest. Therefore, plaintiff's motion for entry of final judgments in both cases is GRANTED. An appropriate Order accompanies this Opinion.

Signed by: Emmet G. Sullivan

United [71] States District Judge

March 29, 2007

End of Document

LexisNexis®

Am. Steel Erectors, Inc. v. Local Union No. 7, Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental & Reinforcing Iron Workers

United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts

March 30, 2007, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO. 04-12536-RGS

Reporter

480 F. Supp. 2d 471 *; 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23684 ; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,764

AMERICAN STEEL ERECTORS, INC. et al. v. LOCAL UNION NO. 7, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BRIDGE, STRUCTURAL, ORNAMENTAL & REINFORCING IRON WORKERS

Subsequent History: Affirmed in part and reversed in part by, Remanded by Am. Steel Erectors, Inc. v. Local Union No. 7, Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 16321 (1st Cir. Mass., Aug. 1, 2008)

Prior History: Am. Steel Erectors, Inc. v. Local Union No. 7, Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental & Reinforcing Iron Workers, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4348 (D. Mass., Feb. 6, 2006)

Core Terms

targeting, exemption, projects, anti trust law, antitrust, self-interest, wages, summary judgment, bargaining, Davis-Bacon Act, contractors, conspiracy, violates, subsidy, steel, hire

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Right to Organize

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN1[] Collectives & Cooperatives, Clayton Act

Labor unions are excluded from the operation of the antitrust laws by both a statutory and a nonstatutory exemption. The statutory exemption is derived from §§ 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 17, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, and from the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 101-115. Section 6 of the Clayton Act declares that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce, nor shall labor organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 17. Thus, restraints on the sale of an employee's services, however much they curtail competition, are not in themselves combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce under the Sherman Act. Congress reaffirmed the statutory exemption in passing the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which repudiated the U.S. Supreme Court's holding that the Clayton Act's labor antitrust exemption did not immunize unions engaged in "illegal" activity. The exemption was strengthened further by the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 151-169, which guarantees the right of workers to organize unions, to bargain collectively, and to engage in coercive activity, including strikes, as a means of enforcing legitimate union demands.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN2[] Collectives & Cooperatives, Clayton Act

The U.S. Supreme Court has held that the Sherman Act, § 20 of the Clayton Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, and the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 101-115, should be read as a harmonizing text defining a comprehensive statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws. For the statutory labor exemption to apply, a union must act unilaterally in its own self-interest and not in combination with any nonlabor party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Protected Activities

HN3[] Collectives & Cooperatives, Clayton Act

The U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the preservation of jobs is within the area of proper union concern. Union activity having as its object the preservation of jobs for union members is not violative of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Protected Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

As the U.S. Supreme Court has observed, so long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with nonlabor groups, the licit and the illicit under § 20 of the Clayton Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A rimless wheel conspiracy is one in which various defendants enter into separate agreements with a common defendant, but where the defendants have no connection with one another, other than the common defendant's involvement in each transaction. While the imagery of a spoked, but rimless, wheel is quite vivid, the object of the alleged "rimless wheel" conspiracy is no different than that of the horizontal conspiracy, and therefore no more a violation of the antitrust laws, whatever other laws might be implicated.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN6[] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(b)(4)(ii).

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN7[] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

A union's holding out a job target fund as an incentive to employers to hire its members is not an improper objective under the Labor Management Relations Act.

Counsel: [1] For Ajax Construction Company, Incorporated, Plaintiff: Michael E. Avakian, LEAD ATTORNEY, Smetana & Avakian, Springfield, VA.

For American Aerial Services, Incorporated, American Steel Erectors, Incorporated, Bedford Ironworks, Incorporated, D.F.M. Industries, Incorporated, Ronald Beauregard, Ajax Construction Company, Incorporated, Plaintiffs: Geoffrey R. Bok, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stoneman, Chandler & Miller, Boston, MA.

For American Aerial Services, Incorporated, American Steel Erectors, Incorporated, Bedford Ironworks, Incorporated, D.F.M. Industries, Incorporated, Ronald Beauregard, American Aerial Services, Incorporated, Plaintiffs: Carol Chandler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stoneman, Chandler & Miller, Boston, MA.

For American Steel Erectors, Incorporated, Bedford Ironworks, Incorporated, D.F.M. Industries, Incorporated, Ronald Beauregard, Ajax Construction Company, Incorporated, Plaintiff: Paul F. Kelly Segal, LEAD ATTORNEY, Roitman & Coleman, Street Boston, MA.

For Local Union No. 7, Defendant: Paul F. Kelly Segal, LEAD ATTORNEY, Roitman & Coleman, Street Boston, MA.

For Charles Wright, Local Union No. 7, Defendants: Mickey Long Law, Offices of Mickey Long, Boston, MA; [2] Stephanie R. Pratt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Burton E. Rosenthal, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mary T. Sullivan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Indira Talwani LEAD ATTORNEY, Segal, Roitman & Coleman, Boston, MA.

Judges: Richard G. Stearns, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Richard G. Stearns

Opinion

[*473]

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER ON DEFENDANT LOCAL UNION NO. 7'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

March 30, 2007

STEARNS, D.J.

On December 2, 2004, six nonunion steel erector companies - American Steel Erectors, Inc., Ajax Construction Company, Inc., American Aerial Services, Inc., Bedford Ironworks, Inc., D.F.M. Industries, Inc., and Ronald Beauregard d/b/a Independent Welding ("nonunion companies" or "plaintiffs") - brought this antitrust Complaint against Local Union No. 7 of the International Association of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental & Reinforcing Iron Workers ("Union" or "Local 7"). [1] Plaintiffs allege that Local 7 conspired with the Building Trades Employers' Association of Boston and Eastern Massachusetts ("BTEA"), and various named and unnamed unionized construction companies, to injure or destroy the business of steel erector companies that do not hire members of Local 7.

[3] At the heart of the alleged conspiracy is a Job Target Fund ("Fund") supported by dues paid by members of Local 7. Because of the labor-intensive nature of the construction industry, unionized employers are at a competitive disadvantage when bidding against "open shop" contractors on privately-funded projects. In the 1980's, unions representing the building and construction trades initiated a national program of funded job targeting to stanch the loss of jobs to nonunion shops. In the typical job targeting program, a union establishes a fund to which its members are required to contribute. The fund then offers to pay a subsidy to unionized employers bidding on projects "targeted" by the union. The subsidy is intended to make up the difference between a concessionary wage agreed to by the union and regular union scale. If the bid is successful, union workers on the job receive the union-scale wage, while the subsidized employer benefits from lower labor costs. [2] This is the model that Local 7 emulated in establishing the Fund. Plaintiffs recognize that the antitrust laws do not bar unions from offering incentives to employers to hire their members. Plaintiffs allege, however, that [4] Local 7 goes a step further by administering the Fund "in a fashion that is inconsistent with State and Federal law, thereby exposing it[self] to antitrust liability." Plaintiffs' Opposition to Summary Judgment, at 2.

The Complaint alleges that the Union's activities relative to the Fund violate the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 (Counts I, II, and III), and the Labor Management and Relations Act ("LMRA"), 29 U.S.C. § 187 (Count IV). [3] On August 1, 2006, the Union [*474] filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that its activities with regard to the Fund are protected by both the statutory and the nonstatutory labor antitrust exemptions. The Union further contends that the claim under the LMRA fails because of plaintiffs' inability [5] to show that the Fund subsidies paid to employers constitute "threat[s], coerc[ion], or restraint[s]" in pursuit of an unlawful objective. The court heard oral argument on the Union's motion on December 14, 2006.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The material facts viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiffs are as follows. Local 7 represents iron workers employed by construction companies who are signatories to a master Collective Bargaining Agreement ("CBA")

[1] Plaintiffs had also named as defendants Charles Wright, the Union's former President and current Business Agent and Analyst, and the Steel Erection and Ornamental Iron Industry Advancement Fund. On March 29, 2005, plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed the Fund from the suit. On June 10, 2005, the court allowed Wright's motion to dismiss.

[2] See Herbert R. Northrup & Augustus T. White, Subsidizing Contractors to Gain Employment: Construction Union "Job Targeting", 17 Berkeley J. Emp. & Lab. L. 62, 71 (1996).

[3] Plaintiffs also asserted state-law claims for tortious interference with advantageous contractual and economic relations (Counts V and VI), and violations of the Massachusetts Unfair Business Practices Act, G.L. c. 93A (Count VII). On February 6, 2006, the court dismissed the state-law claims as preempted by the LMRA.

negotiated between the Union and the BTEA. The plaintiffs are six open shop contractors who compete with BTEA members for steel erection work.

In or around 1990, Local 7 established the Fund to make the hiring of its members more attractive [6] in geographical areas where union-scale wages and benefits undercut the ability of BTEA contractors to compete. In 1992, the members of Local 7 voted to adopt a check-off system under which employers would deduct Fund contributions from their paychecks. On November 1, 1993, Local 7 and the BTEA agreed to incorporate the check-off system into the CBA. [4] Under the CBA, a BTEA employer pays the worker's job targeting contribution directly to the Union, which deposits it into the Fund. [5] The Fund, in turn, distributes wage subsidies on a case-by-case basis to BTEA employers who successfully bid on targeted projects.

The largest Boston area construction [7] projects employing structural steel workers are government-financed public works projects, including the "Big Dig," the Boston Harbor cleanup, and the renovation of the terminals and parking facilities at Logan Airport. Federally-funded construction projects are subject to the Davis-Bacon Act, 40 U.S.C. §§ 276a-276a-5. [6] [8] The Davis-Bacon Act requires contractors working on construction projects financed in whole or in part with federal funds to pay workers no less than the wage that is determined by the Secretary of Labor "to be prevailing for the corresponding classes of laborers and mechanics on projects of a [similar] character." [7] 40 U.S.C. § 3142(b). The Act also bars the refunding of any portion of a worker's Davis-Bacon wages as a "kickback" to the employer, "regardless of any contractual relationship." 40 U.S.C. § 3142(c)(1). [8] Massachusetts [*475] has enacted a "Little Davis-Bacon Act" requiring that the "prevailing wage" be paid on state-subsidized construction projects. See G.L. c. 149, § 26.

DISCUSSION

The parties agree as to the applicable law. "Labor exemption from antitrust laws stems from both congressional and judicial recognition of the need to ensure that organized labor is able to operate effectively without fear of antitrust liability." [9] HN1[] Labor unions are excluded from the operation of [9] the antitrust laws by both a statutory and a nonstatutory exemption. The statutory labor exemption is derived from §§ 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 17, 29 U.S.C. § 52, and from the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C. §§ 101-115. See Allied Int'l, Inc. v. Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n, 640 F.2d 1368, 1379 (1st Cir. 1981). The history of the exemption begins in 1914 with the passage of the Clayton Act. Section 6 of the Act declared that "[t]he labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce . . . nor shall [labor] organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal

---

[4] Section 9 of the CBA states that "[i]t is agreed that the Working Dues Deduction of two percent (2%) of the total package plus .85 for a Market Recovery Program and .03 for the Political Action League will be withheld out of net pay for each and every hour paid."

[5] There is no dispute that the Union has exclusive control over the money deposited into the Fund.

[6] The Act's provisions were recodified in 2002 as 40 U.S.C. §§ 3141-3144.

[7] The motives that led to the passage of the Davis-Bacon Act in 1931 were not entirely benign. The chief sponsor of the Act, Representative Robert L. Bacon of New York, introduced the antecedent of Davis-Bacon in 1927 with the stated purpose of preventing the loss of local unionized construction jobs to black workers migrating from the South. The Act has been the target of several repeal efforts and has been suspended on at least four occasions by four different Presidents during national emergencies.

[8] Davis-Bacon is supplemented by the Copeland Anti-Kickback Act of 1934, 18 U.S.C. § 874, which makes it a federal crime for an employer "by force, intimidation, or threat . . . or by any other means whatsoever" to induce any employee into making a kickback.

[9] Michael Scheinkman, Running Out of Bounds: Over-Extending the Labor Antitrust Exemption in Clarett v. National Football League, 79 St. John's L. Rev. 733, 741 (2005).

combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 17. [10] Since the enactment of § 6, "it would seem plain that restraints on the sale of the employee's services to the employer, however much they curtail the competition among employees, are not in themselves combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce under the Sherman Act." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 503, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 (1940). [10] In addition, the Clayton Act provides that no injunction shall issue "prohibit[ing] any person whether singly or in concert, from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do . . . ." 29 U.S.C. § 52.

[11] In 1932, Congress reaffirmed the statutory exemption in passing the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Act repudiated the Supreme Court's holding in Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 41 S. Ct. 172, 65 L. Ed. 349, 18 Ohio L. Rep. 366 (1921), that the Clayton Act's labor antitrust exemption did not immunize unions engaged in "illegal" activity. In 1935, Congress strengthened the exemption further in passing the (Wagner-Connery) National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA"), 29 U.S.C. §§ 151-169. The NLRA was intended to redress the "inequality of bargaining power" between employees and employers that "tends to aggravate recurrent business depressions, by depressing wage rates . . . and by preventing the stabilization of competitive wage rates and working conditions . . . ." Id. § 151. The NLRA guarantees the right of workers to organize unions, to bargain collectively, and to engage in coercive activity including strikes as a means of enforcing legitimate union demands. [11]

[*476]

[12] This succession of labor-friendly statutes led to tension between federal antitrust law, which seeks "to preserve business competition and to proscribe business monopolies," Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 809, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939 (1945), and federal labor law, which sanctions the elimination of "competition which is based on differences in labor standards," Apex Hosiery Co., 310 U.S. at 503, in order "to preserve the rights of labor to organize to better its conditions through the agency of collective bargaining." Allen Bradley, 325 U.S. at 806. HN2[] The Supreme Court in United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 231, 61 S. Ct. 463, 85 L. Ed. 788 (1941), sought to reconcile these competing considerations by holding that the Sherman Act, § 20 of the Clayton Act, and the Norris-LaGuardia Act, should be read as a "harmonizing text" defining a comprehensive statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws.

For the statutory labor exemption to apply, a union must act unilaterally in its own self-interest and not in combination with any non-labor party. [12] Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 622-623, 95 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975). [13] As the First Circuit has explained, > the Sherman Act does not proscribe concerted union activity "so long as [the] union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups." [Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 232] . . . . While "the test to determine if a union's actions are in its 'self-interest' has not been precisely formulated," the principle . . . is that activities are in the self-interest of a labor organization "if they bear a reasonable relationship to a legitimate union interest."

---

[10] Congress passed the Clayton Act in response to the Supreme Court's decision in the Danbury Hatters' Case, Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 28 S. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488, 5 Ohio L. Rep. 617 (1908). In Loewe, the Court held that the actions of the United Hatters Union in publicizing a secondary boycott constituted an illegal restraint of trade under the Sherman Act. Compounding the injury, the Court held that individual members of the union could be held liable for treble damages under section 7 of the Sherman Act.

[11] In 1947, Congress enacted the Taft-Hartley Act, a package of amendments to the NLRA extending the Wagner-Connery Act prohibitions against unfair labor practices by employers to coercive union tactics such as jurisdictional strikes, secondary boycotts, and "common situs" picketing. The intent of the amendments was to redress a perceived imbalance of bargaining power between unions and employers and to crack down on corrupt practices by some labor leaders.

[12] The nonstatutory labor exemption protects unions from legal restraints that would otherwise inhibit the collective bargaining process. See Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 237, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996) (collective bargaining agreements almost by definition are "combinations in restraint of trade").

> Adams, Ray & Rosenberg v. William Morris Agency, 411 F. Supp. 403, 410 (C.D. Cal.1976). In particular, the labor exemption has been applied when the union acts to protect the wages, hours of employment, or other working conditions of its member-employees, objectives that are at the heart of national labor policy.

Allied Int'l, 640 F.2d at 1380 (some citations omitted).

[14] The Union argues forcefully that the Fund's purpose of promoting the hiring of Local 7 members is manifestly in the Union's self-interest. HN3[] "The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the preservation of jobs is within the area of proper union concern. . . . Union activity having as its object the preservation of jobs for union members is not violative of the anti-trust laws." Intercont'l Container Transp. Corp. v. New York Shipping Ass'n, 426 F.2d 884, 887 (2d Cir. 1970). See also Manno Elec., Inc., 321 NLRB 278, 298 (1996) (use of a job targeting program to "maintain the union wage scale . . . and obtain work for its members" is a legitimate union interest), aff'd per curiam mem., 127 F.3d 34 (5th Cir. 1997) (Table).

Plaintiffs do not contest the proposition that job targeting serves a legitimate interest of the Union. Rather, plaintiffs contend that the check-off system, when it is applied to federally-funded projects, involves [*477] the Union in illegal activity. Plaintiffs insist that it cannot be in the Union's self-interest to unlawfully subvert the Davis-Bacon Act and other prevailing wage laws. Plaintiffs' argument is not a new [15] one. It surfaced in 1988 in a petition brought by a contractors' association seeking a ruling from the Administrator of the Department of Labor (DOL) Wage and Hour Division that job targeting programs violate the Copeland Anti-Kickback Act. The Copeland Act argument was rejected, but the Administrator agreed that the deduction of job targeting fund contributions from Davis-Bacon wages violates both the Davis-Bacon Act and the DOL prevailing wage regulations. The dispute percolated its way through the federal courts, culminating in a decision by the D.C. Circuit affirming the Administrator. See Bldg. and Constr. Trades Dep't. v. Reich, 309 U.S. App. D.C. 244, 40 F.3d 1275, 1283 (D.C. Cir. 1994). As plaintiffs point out, subsequent court decisions have adhered to the holding in Reich. See Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, Local 357 v. Brock, 68 F.3d 1194, 1198 (9th Cir. 1995) (holding that the direct and voluntary payment of rebates of Davis-Bacon wages to a targeting fund is not permitted); Can-Am Plumbing v. NLRB, 355 U.S. App. D.C. 160, 321 F.3d 145, 152 (D.C. Cir. 2003) (affirming Board precedent holding that the deduction of job targeting fund contributions from Davis-Bacon wages [16] is inimical to public policy).

Although plaintiffs devote a great deal of energy to their Davis-Bacon argument, it misses a fundamental point. Even assuming that plaintiffs have standing to object to a violation by the Union of the Davis-Bacon Act, [13] no cause of action under the Act is plead in the Complaint. Moreover, even if the check-off system violates Davis-Bacon (which given the holding in Reich would appear to be the case), the Union's allegedly illegal conduct is irrelevant to an antitrust analysis. HN4[] As the Supreme Court observed in Hutcheson, "[s]o long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit under § 20 [of the Clayton Act] are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means." 312 U.S. at 232 (footnote omitted). In other words, the issue is not whether the Union's requirement that all members contribute to the Fund violates some law, but whether it violates the antitrust laws, which it does not.

[17] With respect to the second prong of the statutory labor exemption, plaintiffs concede that the Fund was established by the unilateral action of the Union and not in combination with the BTEA. Plaintiffs argue, however, that because BTEA members are required by the master CBA to deduct contributions from workers' wages

[13] Plaintiffs rely on McDaniel v. Univ. of Chicago, 548 F.2d 689, 695 (7th Cir. 1977), for the proposition that the Davis-Bacon Act creates a private right of action. The Union, relying on United States v. Binghamton Constr. Co., 347 U.S. 171, 176-177, 74 S. Ct. 438, 98 L. Ed. 594 (1954), insists that only the Secretary of Labor can enforce the wage provisions of the Act, and in the specific instance of the Union's job targeting program, has declined to do so. Given the court's decision to allow summary judgment for the Union, this is not a matter that need be resolved, although I would be inclined to think that if there is a Davis-Bacon private right of action, only an aggrieved union member would have standing to bring suit. Cf. NLRB v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, Local 48 (Kingston Constr.), 345 F.3d 1049 (9th Cir. 2003). See also 64 Am. Jur. 2d Public Works and Contracts, § 222 (2007) (warning practitioners that the Davis-Bacon Act does not as a rule confer a private right of action).

irrespective of their source, they are for all [*478] practical purposes the agents of the Union in a horizontal conspiracy to violate the Davis-Bacon Act. Assuming that this is true, and assuming that such a conspiracy would in fact violate the antitrust laws, a BTEA employer's ministerial act of deducting and mailing a worker's job targeting contribution to the Union is simply too slender a reed on which to rest the nullification of a century of congressional policy exempting unions from the sanctions of the antitrust laws. [14] [18] Because the court agrees that the Union's job targeting program is protected by the statutory labor exemption, the court will enter summary judgment in favor of the Union on Counts I, II, and III of the Complaint. [15]

Plaintiffs also allege that the [19] Union's use of the Fund violates the LMRA, which prohibits a union from engaging in conduct designed to:

> HN6[] threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce . . . where . . . [the] object thereof is -- > (A) forcing or requiring any employer . . . to join any labor or employer organization . . . .
> (B) forcing or requiring any person to . . . cease doing business with any other person . . . .

29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4)(ii).

The Union argues that the decision taken through the Fund to grant or deny an employer subsidy does not constitute coercive conduct in the pursuit of an unlawful objective, as the LMRA requires. The court in *Grinnell Corp. v. Road Sprinkler Fitters Local Union No. 669, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7897, 1997 WL 311498, at 14 (D. Md. June 3, 1997), aff'd, 133 F.3d 914 (4th Cir. 1998) (Table), held in an analogous case that:

> the withdrawal of targeting did not constitute coercion but was a lawful bargaining strategy employed by the Union. Grinnell had been a principal user of targeting during the period of time when it had been permitted by the Union to participate in the program. The Union hoped that, [20] by exercising its right to deny targeting to Grinnell, it could persuade this employer to accede to other [*479] demands which the Union was making during the bargaining sessions. Indeed, at one point during its negotiations with Grinnell, the Union even offered to reinstate targeting if Grinnell in turn would agree to certain of its other demands. When Grinnell decided not to accept these proposals, it remained excluded from targeting. In the absence of proof of coercion or threats, defendants' conduct did not constitute an unfair labor practice.

The same is true here. There is nothing in the record to support plaintiffs' assertion that the Union resorted to coercive restraints or tactics. HN7[] The Union did no more than hold out the Fund as an incentive to employers [14] As an alternative theory, plaintiffs allege that the Union is the instigator of a "rimless wheel conspiracy" with individual BTEA members. As plaintiffs envision it, the Union stands at the hub of a conspiratorial wheel with spokes radiating to the BTEA contractors on its perimeter. HN5[] "A rimless wheel conspiracy is one in which various defendants enter into separate agreements with a common defendant, but where the defendants have no connection with one another, other than the common defendant's involvement in each transaction." Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 203 (4th Cir. 2002), citing Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 755, 66 S. Ct. 1239, 90 L. Ed. 1557 (1946). While the imagery of a spoked but rimless wheel is quite vivid, the object of the alleged "rimless wheel" conspiracy is no different than that of the horizontal conspiracy, and therefore no more a violation of the antitrust laws, whatever other laws might be implicated.

---

[15] The Union argues that even if its conduct is not shielded by the statutory labor exemption, it falls within the nonstatutory exemption, which protects conduct conducive to the lawful functioning of the collective bargaining process. Brown, 518 U.S. at 236. The Union correctly points out that the plaintiffs' argument in opposition, which relies on Mathiowetz Constr. Co. v. Minn. Dep't of Transp., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3389, 2002 WL 334394 (D. Minn. Feb. 27, 2002), is somewhat shaky as Machiowetz relied on Mackey v. Nat'l Football League, 543 F.2d 606 (8th Cir. 1976), the holding of which the Supreme Court substantially undercut in Brown. See, e.g., Clarett v. Nat'l Football League, 369 F.3d 124, 133-134 & n.14 (2d Cir. 2004). Because the court agrees that the Union's activities with respect to the Fund are insulated from the antitrust laws by the statutory labor exemption, there is no need to decide definitively whether the nonstatutory exemption also applies (although the Union makes a persuasive case that it does).

to hire its members. [16] This is not an improper objective under the LMRA. Manno Elec., Inc., 321 NLRB at 298. Consequently, the Union's motion for summary judgment on Count IV will also be allowed.

[21] ORDER

For the foregoing reasons, Local 7's motion for summary judgment is ALLOWED as to all remaining counts of the Complaint. The Clerk will enter judgment for the Union and the case will be closed.

SO ORDERED.

/s/ Richard G. Stearns

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

[16] The court does not read the Complaint, despite its prolixity, to allege an alternative "cease doing business" violation of the LMRA.

Fox Hollow of Turlock Owners' Ass'n v. Sinclair

United States District Court for the Eastern District of California

March 30, 2007, Decided ; March 30, 2007, Filed

1:03-CV-05439 OWW DLB

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27762 *; 2007 WL 987873

FOX HOLLOW OF TURLOCK OWNERS' ASSOCIATION, et al., Plaintiff, v. RICHARD SINCLAIR, et al., Defendants; AND OTHER CONSOLIDATED ACTIONS.

Subsequent History: Motion to strike granted by, Motion denied by Fox Hollow of Turlock Owners' Ass'n v. Sinclair, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44148 (E.D. Cal., June 4, 2007)

Costs and fees proceeding at Sinclair v. Katakis, 2013 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 502 (Cal. App. 5th Dist., Jan. 23, 2013)

Related proceeding at Katakis v. Sinclair (In re Sinclair), 2015 Bankr. LEXIS 1957 (Bankr. E.D. Cal., June 15, 2015)

Related proceeding at Flake v. Neumiller & Beardslee, 9 Cal. App. 5th 223, 215 Cal. Rptr. 3d 277, 2017 Cal. App. LEXIS 182 (Jan. 31, 2017)

Core Terms

cause of action, trust deed, alleges, Lenders, definite statement, Garage, second amended complaint, mutual mistake, deposits, lease, rents, motion to strike, grounds, unfair, racketeering activity, reformation, subdivision, fraudulent, unfair competition, constitutes, refinancing, accounting, collateral, enterprise, parties, amend, deeds

Counsel: [*1] Richard - Sinclair, Plaintiff, Pro se, Oakdale, CA.

Brandon Sinclair, Plaintiff, Pro se, Oakdale, CA.

Gregory Mauchley, Plaintiff, Pro se, Oakdale, CA.

Mauctrst LLC, Plaintiff, Pro se.

For California Equity Management Group Inc., Andrew Katakis, Fox Hollow of Turlock Owner's Association, Plaintiffs: Timothy Matthew Ryan, Ryan Firm, Anaheim, CA.

For Fox Hollow of Turlock Owners Association, a California Nonprofit Mutual Benefit Corporation, Defendant: Timothy Matthew Ryan, Ryan Firm, Anaheim, CA.

For Deborah Sinclair, Defendant: Richard C. Sinclair, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Office of Richard C. Sinclair, Oakdale, CA.

For Richard - Sinclair, Defendant: Lisa Blanco Jimenez, Stockton, CA.

Stanley M. Flake, Trustee of the Capstone Trust, Plaintiff, Pro se, Oakdale, CA.

Lairtrust, LLC, Plaintiff, Pro se.

Capstone LLC, Pro se.

Judges: Oliver W. Wanger, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Oliver W. Wanger

Opinion

ORDER (1) DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STRIKE (247); (2) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT (251); AND (3) REFERRING PENDING SANCTIONS MOTION TO MAGISTRATE JUDGE BECK (258).

I. INTRODUCTION

[*2] Defendants Mauctrst LLC, Capstone LLC, LairTrust LLC, Stanley Flake, as Trustee of Capstone Trust, Gregory Mauchley, Brandon Sinclair, and Richard Sinclair (collectively, "the Defendants") move to strike the Second Amended Complaint, filed by Plaintiff California Equity Management Group, Inc. ("CEMG") on August 26, 2005, for failure to comply with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 15(a). The Defendants also move, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(e), to require Plaintiff to more definitely state the First, Second, Third, Tenth, Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-First, Twenty-Second, and Twenty-Third Causes of Action in the Second Amended Complaint.

II. MOTION TO STRIKE

A. Background.

On April 7, 2005, CEMG moved for permission to file a second amended complaint to allege new causes of action, and to support with new theories, causes of action already alleged. A May 24, 2005, order authorized amendment. (Doc. 147.) Counsel of record for both CEMG and Plaintiff Fox Hollow of Turlock Owners' Association ("the Association") filed a Second Amended Complaint [*3] the following day. (Doc. 149.) The caption inadvertently identified the Association as the filing party, not CEMG, as contemplated by the order of May 24.

The Defendants filed a Motion to Strike the Second Amended Complaint, on the grounds that the Association had not obtained leave to file it. The attorneys subsequently stipulated to correct the erroneous caption, and agreed that CEMG would file a Second Amended Complaint. An August 3, 2005, order gave CEMG until August 24, 2005, to file. (Doc. 244.)

CEMG, however, did not file its Second Amended Complaint until August 26, 2005. CEMG's counsel states that he was on vacation on August 24, and had left to his staff the task of filing the Second Amended Complaint, which they did not accomplish.

B. Legal Standard for Motion to Strike.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a) reads, in relevant part:

> A party may amend the party's pleading once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is served or, if the pleading is one to which no responsive pleading is permitted and the action has not been placed upon the trial calendar, the party may so amend it at any [*4] time within 20 days after it is served. Otherwise a party may amend the party's pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires.

(emphasis added).

Defendants argue that the district court's grant to CEMG of leave to amend expired with the expiration of the 15-day period allowed in its order, so that the late amendment was without leave and is without legal effect.

A pleading cannot be amended without leave of court or consent of the opposition, and where (as here) such leave or consent is required and not obtained, the amendment is a nullity. See, e.g., United States ex rel. Mathews v. HealthSouth Corp., 332 F.3d 293, 296 (5th Cir. 2003); Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1484. However, CEMG's Opposition to the Motion to Strike may fairly be considered a motion for the enlargement of the period within which to file the Second Amended Complaint.

In the Ninth Circuit, there is no rigid rule against allowing a late filing attributable to attorney negligence, particularly where no prejudice results. Pincay v. Andrews, 389 F.3d 853, 860 (9th Cir. 2004) [*5] (citing Pioneer Inv. Serv. v. Brunswick Assoc. Ltd P'ship, 507 U.S. 380, 395 n. 14, 113 S. Ct. 1489, 123 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1993)). Rather, a district court entrusted with discretion to weigh the equitable factors enunciated by the Supreme Court in Pioneer. These include, "[1] the danger of prejudice to the [opposing party], [2] the length of the delay and its potential impact on judicial proceedings, [3] the reason for the delay, including whether it was within the reasonable control of the movant, [4] and whether the movant acted in good faith. 507 U.S. at 395. Here, where there was no showing of any prejudice or bad faith and the delay was negligible(only three days), striking the complaint is not warranted.

The motion to strike is DENIED.

III. MOTION FOR A MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT

A. Summary of the Motion.

The Second Amended Complaint alleges twenty-three separate causes of action. The Defendants request more definite statement of eleven of these.

CEMG's First, Second, and Third Causes of Action request equitable reformation of certain deeds of trust. The First Cause of Action alleges mutual mistake as the grounds for the request; the Second, unilateral [*6] mistake; and the Third, fraud. The Defendants claim that CEMG fails to plead fraud and mistake with particularity.

California Business and Professional Code § 17200 ("Unfair competition; prohibited activities") forms the basis for CEMG's Tenth, Thirteenth, and Fifteenth Causes of Action. The Defendants seek more definite statements of these claims on the grounds that in their present form the allegations do not specify whether the acts by which the Defendants allegedly violated a statute were unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent.

The Defendants argue that the Nineteenth Cause of Action, which alleges violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961, et seq., does not plead racketeering activity with requisite particularity.

The Twentieth Cause of Action seeks an accounting of deposits and rents received. Defendants argue that the Plaintiff should be required to state the period for which it seeks an accounting.

Finally, Defendants claim that Causes of Action Twenty-One, Twenty-Two, and Twenty-Three -- for breach of contract, money had and received, and bad faith retention of security [*7] deposit, respectively -- fail to allege whether the contract is written or oral, and move the court upon this basis to require the Plaintiff to make them more definite.

B. Motion for a More Definite Statement as to the First, Second, and Third Causes of Action.

1. Overview of the First, Second, and Third Causes of Action.

CEMG alleges that, in the course of developing the Fox Hollow subdivision ("Fox Hollow," or "the subdivision"), the Defendants sought refinancing for certain loan obligations which were secured by deeds of trust on each lot of the subdivision. (Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") P 42.) The lots were appraised as part of the refinancing process, and the values assigned were based in large measure on the assumption that each unit would have access or legal right to at least one garage appurtenant to the lot on which the unit was located. (SAC P 43.) Most of Fox Hollow's twenty lots featured a garage for each housing unit. For Lots 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 18, there was also one garage sited on a second lot. (SAC P 36.) The Defendants secured refinancing on the lots, and deeds of trust were drafted. The "Garage Lots," identified as Lots 2A, [*8] 6A, etc., however, were not mentioned in the trust deeds, despite the fact that their corresponding housing-unit lots' appraisal values depended on access to the garages.

The Defendants later defaulted on their loans, and the lenders foreclosed upon the Fox Hollow lots, including Lots 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 18. (SAC P 50.) After purchasing the lenders' rights to the lots at a foreclosure sale, CEMG discovered that the deeds of trust did not encumber the Garage Lots, which were not collateral for the new loan. (SAC P 53.)

CEMG seeks equitable reformation of the trust deeds, as well as the deeds of conveyance, to include the Garage Lots. (SAC P 55.) CEMG advances three alternative legal theories in support the requested relief.

In its First Cause of Action, CEMG seeks reformation of the trust deeds on the grounds of mutual mistake. (SAC P 48.) Specifically, CEMG alleges that the lenders and the Defendants agreed and intended that the trust deeds should include the Garage Lots among the collateral for the prospective refinancing, that these lots were included in the original grant deeds for later individual lots after the subdivision was established, but that the title company [*9] to which they left the task of drafting the relevant conveyance and security documents omitted the Garage Lots from the legal description through error. (SAC PP 45-49.) Due to this clerical scrivener's error, the instruments do not reflect the true understanding of the parties. (SAC P 51.) In addition, CEMG alleges that "sometime after the Lenders' Deeds of Trust were executed and delivered to the Lenders, the Defendants. . .became aware of the mutual mistake regarding the legal description in such deeds of trust," and nonetheless "failed to notify the Lenders of the mutual mistake or to take any action to correct the error." (SAC P 54.) Finally, CEMG argues that the Defendants should be estopped from claiming that the trustee deeds and deeds of trust did not incorporate the Garage Lots into the collateral, on the grounds that the Defendants benefitted from the real property appraisals which included the Garage Lots, which facilitated refinancing. (SAC P 56.)

In its Second Cause of Action, CEMG seeks reformation of the trust deeds on the grounds of unilateral mistake with knowledge. (SAC PP 61-62.) CEMG alleges that the lenders drafted the deeds of trust, and each failed to include [*10] the Garage Lot or Lots as part of the collateral. (SAC P 61.) CEMG further alleges that the Defendants, "and each of them," knew of the lenders' mistake when the deeds of trust were executed, but failed to raise the issue. (SAC P 62.)

In its Third Cause of Action, CEMG seeks reformation of the trust deeds on the grounds of fraud, alleging that the Defendants actively misled the lenders into believing that the collateral for the trust deeds, as drafted, included the Garage Lots. (SAC P 65.)

2. Analysis of the First, Second and Third Causes of Action.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 9(b) demands that, when allegations of fraud or mistake are made, the circumstances constituting the alleged fraud must be stated with "particularity." The allegations must be specific enough to give Defendants notice of what they are alleged to have done, so that they may defend against the accusations. Concha v. London, 62 F.3d 1493, 1502 (9th Cir. 1995). [1]

[1] The Defendants point out that CEMG states these causes of action on information and belief only. Though it is true that CEMG avers its first three causes of action only on "information and belief," see, e.g., SAC, PP 43, 47, this alone is not fatal to the complaint:

> Allegations of the circumstances of a fraud based on information and belief, which are commonplace and often a necessity in many litigation contexts, usually do not satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b), unless accompanied by a statement of the facts upon which the pleader's belief is founded, but the application of the rule may be relaxed as to [*11] Actions for the reformation of a contract is governed by California Civil Code Section 3399, which provides:

> When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of one party, which the other at the time knew or suspected, a written contract does not truly express the intention of the parties, it may be revised on the application of a party aggrieved, so as to express that intention, so far as it can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons, in good faith and for value.

See also Shupe v. Nelson, 254 Cal. App. 2d 693, 62 Cal. Rptr. 352 (1967) (in action based on mistake, "aggrieved party" under § 3399 need not be an original party to transaction).

With respect to the First Cause of Action, which alleges mutual mistake on the part of the lenders, the Defendants, and a scrivener's error by the title company, the SAC does not allege that the responsibility for the scrivener's error lies with the Defendants or the lenders. [2] A mutual mistake occurs where both parties share the same factual misconception. Sutter Youth Org., v. Borsen, 214 Cal. App. 2d 676, 680, 29 Cal. Rptr. 628 (1963). The claim for mutual mistake [*12] is sufficiently definite to enable the Defendants to frame a response. The motion for a more definite statement is DENIED as to the First Cause of Action.

The Second Cause of Action is for unilateral mistake, which requires that the plaintiff be mistaken and the other (non-mistaken) party to the instrument suspected or had knowledge of the mistake at the time the instrument was drawn up. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3399; see Pac. State Bank v. Greene, 110 Cal. App. 4th 375, 389, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 739 (2003). At oral argument, the court erroneously observed that the second amended complaint fails to allege that the non-mistaken party to the original instrument had knowledge of the mistake. However, Paragraph 62 does allege that Defendants [*13] knew of the mistake at the time the deeds were executed. The motion for a more definite statement is DENIED as to the Second Cause of Action.

The Third Cause of Action is for reformation on the ground that the deed was executed as a result of fraud. Averments of fraud must be accompanied by the "who, what, when, where, and how" of the misconduct charged. A plaintiff must set forth more than the neutral facts necessary to identify the transaction. The plaintiff must set forth what is false or misleading about a statement, and why it is false. Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). Here, Plaintiffs allege that the "failure of the Lender Deeds of trust to contain a legal description of the Garage Lots resulted from the false representations of Defendants . . . to the Lenders that the Lender Deeds of Trust secured the Lenders against all of the property constituting the Lot or Lots on which they were securing loans, and the intentional omission of Defendants . . . to inform the Lenders that the Lenders Deeds of Trust were not secured against the Garage Lots." (SAC P 65.) This plainly describes [*14] the nature of the allegedly fraudulent representations and omissions, putting Defendants on notice of "what is false or misleading" and "why it is false." Plaintiffs further allege that the false representations and omissions were knowingly and intentionally made by Defendants "in that Defendants were the original owners of the Fox Hollow Subdivision." (Id. at P 66.) This sufficiently describes who made was involved in the alleged fraud. The motion for a more definite statement as to the Third Cause of Action is DENIED.

C. Motion For a More Definite Statement as to the Tenth, Thirteenth, and Fifteenth Causes of Action. > matters peculiarly within the opposing party's knowledge that the pleader is not privy to at the time the document is being drafted.

1. Summary of the Tenth, Thirteenth, and Fifteenth Causes of Action.

5A Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 3d § 1298.

[2] This necessarily implicates that title company, which is not a party to this lawsuit. The title company, potentially responsible party, is not identified. It is hard to understand how the Plaintiff has not ascertained the identity of the title company.

CEMB alleges that it acquired fee simple title to lots 11 and 18 of the subdivision from the GMAC Mortgage Corporation ("GMAC"). (See SAC P 25.) These lots (the "GMAC Lots") "were subject to valid and enforceable written residential lease agreements (the 'GMAC Leases')." (SAC P 82.)

CEMG alleges that the Defendants intentionally interfered with CEMG's rights under these leases by (a) representing to the tenants of the GMAC Lots that Defendants "were the owners [*15] of such lots and were entitled to the deposits and rents under the GMAC Leases," and (b) collected rents from the tenants under the GMAC Leases after the date on which title was transferred to Plaintiff and continuing through the present time. (SAC P 84, Eighth Cause of Action.) CEMG claims that the Defendants' collection of deposits and rents also constitutes conversion. (SAC P 87, Ninth Cause of Action.)

The Tenth Cause of Action alleges that the false representations and conversion of deposits and rents constitute an "unfair trade practice" under Business and Professions Code Section 17200. (SAC P 91.)

In the Eleventh and Twelfth Causes of Action, which are not challenged here, CEMG alleges that the Defendants intentionally interfered in a similar manner with its lot 7 lease (SAC PP 92-99), and converted to their own use the rents due to it thereunder (SAC PP 100-102), respectively. The Thirteenth Cause of Action alleges that this intentional interference with contract and conversion constitutes an unfair trade practice under § 17200. (SAC PP 103-104.) The Fourteenth Cause of Action, which is not challenged here, alleges that the Defendants slandered title to certain Fox Hollow [*16] subdivision lots. (SAC PP 105-110.) The Fifteenth Cause of Action alleges that this slander constitutes an unfair trade practice under § 17200. (SAC PP 111-112.)

2. Analysis of the Motion for a More Definite Statement as to the Tenth, Thirteenth, and Fifteenth Causes of Action.

California's unfair competition law ("UCL"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, et seq., prohibits "unfair competition" which is defined to "include any unlawful, unfair[,] or fraudulent business act or practice. . . ." "Because the statute is framed in the disjunctive, a business practice need only meet one of the three criteria to be considered unfair competition." McKell v. Washington Mut. Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1471, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227 (2006).

The purpose of the UCL "is to protect both consumers and competitors by promoting fair competition in commercial markets for goods and services." Kasky v. Nike, Inc., 27 Cal. 4th 939, 949, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296, 45 P.3d 243 (2002). The scope of the statute is broad, including "anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law." Perfect 10, Inc. v. CCBill, LLC, 340 F. Supp. 2d 1077, 1108 (C.D. Cal. 2004). [*17]

"Although the unfair competition law's scope is sweeping, it is not unlimited." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 182, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Its purpose is to permit courts to enjoin on-going wrongful business conduct to enable courts to "deal with innumerable new schemes which the fertility of man's invention would contrive." Cel-Tech Communications, 20 Cal. 4th at 181 (1999)(emphasizing the fact that § 17200 is an equitable remedy). With this in mind, the California Supreme Court has narrowed the definition of the term "unfair" to mean "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Id. at 187. However, Cel-Tech did not narrow the term "unlawful," see Kearney v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 39 Cal. 4th 95, 131, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 730, 137 P.3d 914 (2006). "Unlawful" acts or practices include any which are "forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made. [*18] " Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994). Nor did Cel-Tech address or narrow the term "fraudulent." See Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 187 n.12 (acknowledging that the holding does not apply to allegations of fraudulent or unlawful business practices). However, the second amended complaint does not explain whether Plaintiffs are alleging an "unfair" business act or practice, [3] an "unlawful" one or a "fraudulent" one.

Remedies under the UCL are limited injunctive relief or restitution. Valdez v. Himmelfarb, 144 Cal. App. 4th 1261, 1267, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 195 (2006). The complaint is also unclear as to the remedies sought by these claims.

The motion for a more definite statement as to the Tenth, Thirteenth and Fifteenth Claims is GRANTED, but Plaintiffs are reminded that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11 [*19] requires good-faith bases for these claims to be re-alleged.

D. The Nineteenth Cause of Action.

CEMG has conceded that its Nineteenth Cause of Action, which alleges a civil RICO claim, needs to be stated more definitely. Defendants' motion is GRANTED as to this cause of action.

In re-pleading this cause of action, CEMG must meet RICO's civil action requirements. A RICO civil complaint must at least allege: (1) that a 'person' within the scope of the statute (2) has utilized a 'pattern of racketeering activity' or the proceeds thereof (3) to infiltrate an interstate 'enterprise' (4) by (a) investing the income derived from the pattern of racketeering activity in the enterprise; (b) acquiring or maintaining an interest in the enterprise through the pattern of racketeering activity; (c) conducting the affairs of the enterprise through the pattern of racketeering activity; or (d) conspiring to commit any of the above acts. 18 U.S.C. § 1962. A plaintiff in a private, civil RICO action must also allege that he was injured in his business or property 'by reason of one of the foregoing. 18 U.S.C. § 1964[c]. The racketeering [*20] enterprise must be separate from the racketeering acts or activity. Chang v. Chen, 80 F.3d 1293, 1298-99 (9th Cir. 1996).

Section 1961 enumerates acts which are each considered to be acts of "racketeering activity" and which, in RICO parlance, are often called the "predicate acts." The most important predicate acts for RICO violation are: (1) "any act or threat involving murder, kidnaping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, dealing in obscene matter, or dealing in a controlled substance or listed chemical (as defined in Section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act), which is chargeable under State Law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year;" (2) any of more than twenty types of conduct indictable under enumerated provisions of the United States Code, ranging from mail fraud and wire fraud, through robbery and extortion, to white slave trade; or (3) any offense involving fraud "connected with" a bankruptcy case, "fraud in the sale of securities," or any act related to a controlled substance or listed chemical "punishable" under federal law. 18 U.S.C. § 1961; see generally Wagh v. Metris Direct, Inc., 363 F.3d 821 (9th Cir. 2003). [*21] No such predicate acts are alleged in the complaint.

The motion for a more definite statement as to the Nineteenth Cause of Action is GRANTED.

E. The Twentieth Cause of Action.

The Twentieth Cause of Action seeks an accounting of deposits and rents paid. However, CEMG specifies neither the period for which it seeks the accounting, nor if it seeks an accounting of any sums more than deposits taken and the amount of rents paid under leases. Defendants are entitled to be apprised of what must be accounted for and for what period. The motion for a more definite statement is GRANTED with regard to the Twentieth Cause of Action.

F. The Twenty-First, Twenty-Second, and Twenty-Third Causes of Action.

The Twenty-First, Twenty-Second, and Twenty-Third Causes of Action are for breach of contract, money had and received, and bad faith retention of tenants' security deposits. Defendants seek more definite statements of these

---

[3] A single act of misconduct may form the basis of a UCL suit. Madrid v. Perot Systems Corp., 130 Cal. App. 4th 440, 464, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 (2005).

causes of action on the grounds that CEMG fails to allege whether the contracts upon which the causes of action are based are oral or written.

CEMG responds by referring the court to the Eighth, Tenth, and Eleventh Causes of Action, [*22] which, according to CEMG, "each allege written residential lease agreements." Mem. in Opp. at 9. The lots described in those claims are not the same as those alleged in the Twenty-First through Twenty-Third causes of action.

The Defendants' motion with regard to these causes of action is GRANTED. Plaintiffs shall re-plead the Twenty-First, Twenty-Second, and Twenty-Third causes of action in a manner that indicates the nature of the contract at issue.

VI. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above:

(1) Defendants' motion to strike is DENIED.

(2) Defendants' motion for a more definite statement is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. The motion is DENIED as to the First, Second, and Third Causes of Action, and GRANTED as to the Tenth, Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-First, Twenty-Second, and Twenty-Third Causes of Action.

(3) As indicated during oral argument, the still-pending motion to amend/correct a prior sanctions order (Doc. 258) is referred back to Magistrate Judge Dennis L. Beck, who issued the original sanctions order. If the parties are mutually satisfied that there is no further need for this motion [*23] to be heard, they are instructed to file a stipulation taking the motion off calendar.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: March 30, 2007

/s/ Oliver W. Wanger

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Jim Hood ex rel. Miss. v. Microsoft Corp.

Chancery Court of Mississippi, Hinds County

March 30, 2007, Decided; March 30, 2007, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. G2004-1542 O/3

Reporter
2007 Miss. Trial Order LEXIS 1 *

JIM HOOD, ATTORNEY GENERAL ex rel. STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, PLAINTIFF v. MICROSOFT CORPORATION, DEFENDANT

Core Terms

pleadings, summary judgment, unfair, parens patriae, Antitrust, antitrust claim, damages, standing to bring, trade practice

Judges: [*1] CHANCELLOR DENISE OWENS.

Opinion by: DENISE OWENS

Opinion

ORDER

THIS MATTER is before the Court on the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings or, in the alternative, Motion for Summary Judgment filed by Defendant Microsoft Corporation. Having heard arguments on the matter and all premises considered, this Court finds that Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment is partially well taken and the certain relief requested shall be GRANTED. Any and all other relief requested shall be DENIED. The Court further finds as follows:

Statement of Facts

This action involves a Complaint filed by Jim Hood, Attorney General for the State of Mississippi (hereinafter "Plaintiff"), against Defendant Microsoft Corporation (hereinafter "Defendant"). The Attorney General brings this action on behalf of the State of Mississippi and also as parens patriae for citizens of the State of Mississippi who have purchased Defendant's products. Plaintiff seeks relief under the Mississippi Antitrust Act, Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-1 and 75-21-3 and the Mississippi Consumer Protection Act, Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-1 et seq. Microsoft sought to remove this action to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, but the action was remanded back to this Court.

Defendant Microsoft is a supplier [*2] of computer software for personal computers. The Complaint basically alleges that Microsoft, through a series of illegally anti-competitive actions, all of which rook place outside the State of Mississippi, has sold personal computer software within the State of Mississippi at inflated, monopolistic prices. Defendant Microsoft has filed a Motion for Judgments on the Pleadings pursuant to Rule 12 (c) of the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure alleging that all of Plaintiffs claims as pled fail as a matter of law. Defendant also moves for Summary Judgment pursuant to Rule 56 (c) alleging the Plaintiff's claims are barred by the doctrine of unclean hands.

Legal Analysis

Rule 12(c) states that "after the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings. If . . . matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56 . . ." M.R.C.P. 12(c). Rule 56(c) of the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure provides that summary judgment shall be granted by a court if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with [*3] affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. . . ." M.R.C.P. 56(c). "[w]hen looking at the grant or denial of summary judgment, this Court, as well as the trial court, considers all evidentiary matters before it--admissions in pleadings, answers to interrogatories, depositions, affidavits, etc." Rein v. Benchmark Const. Co., 865 So.2d 1134, 1142 (Miss. 2004). In Rein v. Benchmark Const. Co., the Court held that because the trial court made its decision after reviewing the complaint, answer and motion to dismiss, the response to the motion to dismiss and the accompanying exhibits, its decision is properly labeled a summary judgment. Id. The evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion has been made. If in this view the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, summary judgment should forthwith be entered in his favor. Otherwise the motion should be denied. Martin v. Simmons, 571 So. 2d 254, 258 (Miss. 1990).

State Antitrust Claims

Defendant Microsoft asserts that Plaintiff's antitrust claim must fail because at the time of the enactment of the Mississippi Antitrust Act in 1900, rulings of the United States Supreme Court had held that states could only regulate intrastate commerce and not interstate commerce. Pursuant [*4] to these rulings, the Mississippi Supreme Court in Standard Oil of Kentucky, ex rel. Attorney General, 65 So.2d 468 (Miss. 1914) held that to be regulated under Mississippi's antitrust laws, there had to be intrastate acts taken by the alleged monopolist. Standard Oil of Kentucky also held that wrongful acts wholly taking place out of Mississippi would not support jurisdiction of Mississippi to prosecute under its own antitrust law where the only contacts with the state were monopolistic sales within the state. Defendant argues that Mississippi State Tax Commission v. Brown, 193 So. 794 (Miss.1940), requires that under Mississippi law a statute has to be construed in accordance with the legislature's constitutional powers at the time the statute was enacted.

The Court does not find Defendant's argument on this point to be well taken. While enacting the Mississippi Antitrust Act, the legislature specifically provided that "this chapter shall be liberally construed in all courts to the end that trusts and combines may be suppressed, and the benefits arising from competition and business preserved to the people of this state." Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-39. This Court concludes that it was the intent of the legislature at the time of the enactment of the Mississippi Antitrust Act that the Act be construed as broadly as possible, consistent, of course, with [*5] constitutional restrictions. As those constitutional restrictions have been liberalized through the ensuing 100 years, the scope of the act is to be liberally construed to reach the limits of constitutionality. Defendant's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings on this point is denied.

Defendant also asserts that the Attorney General has no parens patriae standing to bring the antitrust claims pled in the Complaint on behalf of the individual citizens of the State of Mississippi. The parens patriae doctrine allows a state to bring an action on behalf of its citizens. This doctrine is limited; however, a state cannot attempt to pursue the interest of a private party only for the sake of the interest of the private party. To assert parens patriae standing, the state must articulate a quasi-sovereign interest, "that is, some set of interests that the state has in the well-being of its citizens which is sufficiently concrete to create an actual controversy between the state and the defendant. Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico ex rel. Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 601-602 (1982).

The only antitrust claim that this Court discerns in the Complaint is that the State of Mississippi seeks damages "for the injury suffered by the citizens of the State of Mississippi who purchased the [*6] Defendant's products at inflated prices." The Court believes this to be simply an attempt by the state to pursue the interest of private parties, which will not support parens patriae standing. Id. at 602. The State of Mississippi, of course, is entitled to pursue its own proprietary claims for damages it claims to have suffered as a result of the Defendant's alleged monopolistic practices, but as the Complaint now reads, the State has no standing to pursue state antitrust claims on behalf of Mississippi citizens who purchased Microsoft's products.

Consumer Protection Act

This Court finds that the Complaint does not state a claim under the unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive trade practices enumerated in Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-5 (2). The Court finds no such allegations in the Complaint.

The Court finds that the Attorney General does have statutory standing to bring an action under Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-5 (1) for unfair methods of competition affecting commerce and unfair trade practices affecting commerce against the Defendant. An action may only be brought under § 75-24-5 (1) and/or § 75-24-5 (9) which specifically authorizes the Attorney General to bring an action in the name of the State for injunctive relief to restrain practices prohibited under § 75-24-5.

The [*7] Court construes the additional relief authorized by Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-11 to be supplementary to § 75-24-9. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-11 authorizes the Court to make "such" additional orders or judgments, including restitution, as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any monies or property, real or personal, which may be acquired by means of any practice prohibited by this chapter . . . ." The authorization of the Court to "make such additional orders or judgments" in § 75-24-11 comes immediately after the provision for injunctive relief and makes sense only in connection with the provision authorizing injunctive relief. The section for private actions for damages is entirely separate. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-15. The Court, therefore, finds that the Attorney General has statutory authority under § 75-24-9 to seek injunctive relief for violations of § 75-24-5 (1) and seek restitution for any person who lost money or property by means of any practice prohibited by § 75-24-5 (1).

The Court further finds that the Attorney General is authorized to seek civil penalties for violations based on clear and convincing evidence of § 75-24-5 (1). Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-19 (b) provides in pertinent part,

> In any action brought under Section 75-24-9, if the court finds from clear and convincing evidence, that a person knowingly and willfully used any unfair or deceptive [*8] trade practice, method or act prohibited by Section 75-24-5, the Attorney General, upon petition to the court, may recover on behalf of the state a civil penalty in a sum not to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($ 10,000.00) per violation.

As set forth in § 75-24-19 (b), a civil penalty is available, if established by sufficient proof, for each violation.

Defendant's Other Contentions

The Court finds that Plaintiff has no parens patriae standing to bring a common law action for restitution/unjust enrichment as set forth in Count I of the Complaint. Any damages claimed by the State in its proprietary capacity could be recoverable, if proven but would not, in the Court's opinion, constitute restitution or enrichment damages.

Defendant asserts that the Attorney General is prevented from prosecuting this litigation because of the equitable doctrine of "unclean hands." The Attorney General's Office of Consumer Protection served for a brief period as mediator between Defendant and individual claimants represented by one of the lawyers now representing the Attorney General. There is a significant question in the Court's mind as to what extent the doctrine of unclean hands would apply to the State. If it does apply, the Court [*9] feels it would take an extreme situation, which does not exist here. The Court finds no "willful inequity" committed by the State or by the Attorney General. O'Neill v. O'Neill, 551 So.2d 228, 233 (Miss. 1989). Defendant has shown no injury as a result of the alleged misconduct on the part of the Attorney General. Rodeway Inns International. Inc. v. Amman Enterprises, Inc., 742 F.Supp 365 (Miss. 1990).

The Attorney General is charged with enforcing the laws of the State of Mississippi. The Attorney General's Office also supplies informal dispute settlement in consumer protection claims.

With respect to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's count for civil conspiracy, the Court notes that Mississippi is a notice pleading state. Notice of the claim has properly been given. The Court is not going to dismiss the claim on the pleadings.

The Court also denies Defendant's statute of limitations claims. Under Mississippi law, the statute of limitations does not run against the State of Mississippi in accordance with Miss. Code Ann. §15-1-51.

Conclusion

The Court finds that the Plaintiff does have standing to bring claims for unfair methods and unfair trade practices pursuant to Miss. Code Ann.§ 75-24-5 (1) and § 75-24-9. The Plaintiff is also authorized to pursue claims for additional relief pursuant to Miss. Code Ann.§ 75-24-11 and § 7524-19. The Plaintiff may also assert claims for civil conspiracy as outlined in the [*10] Complaint. The Court further finds that the Plaintiff has no parens patriae standing to bring private parties' antitrust claims for damages and penalties as pled in its Complaint; therefore, Plaintiffs claims for damages and penalties pursuant to the Mississippi Antitrust Act are hereby dismissed. The Court also dismisses Plaintiff's claims asserting unfair methods of competition and deceptive trade practices pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-5 (2).

Based on the foregoing reasons, the Court hereby finds that the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings or in the alternative, Motion for Summary Judgment is partially well taken and certain relief requested shall be GRANTED. Any and all other relief requested shall be DENIED.

SO ORDERED and ADJUDGED this 30th day March, 2007.

/s/ Denise Owens

CHANCELLOR DENISE OWENS

End of Document

Stolfa v. Arnold Sales Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

March 30, 2007, Decided; March 30, 2007, Filed

06-CV-2085 (JS)(WDW)

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114969 *

PHILIP STOLFA, BRUCE MILLIGAN, JOHN ARTINO, THOMAS MASCOLA, JOHN AMENDOLARE, THOMAS ROCHE, and WILLIAM G. GANNON, Plaintiffs, - against - ARNOLD SALES COMPANY, INC., Defendant.

Core Terms

Distributor's, terminated, state-court, state court, cause of action, abstention, products, pricing, Clayton Act, breached, federal court, discriminatory, antitrust, covenant, factors, distribution agreement, chain store, proceedings, complains, Handheld, Shop, baked goods, Robinson-Patman Act, competitors, customers, injuries, dismissal with prejudice, motion to dismiss, punitive damages, good faith

Counsel: [*1] For Plaintiffs: David H. Besso, Esq., Long, Tuminello, Besso, Seligman & Werner, LLP, Bayshore, NY.

For Defendant: James J. Stricker, Esq., Kasowitz, Benson, Torres & Friedman LLP, New York, NY.

Judges: Joanna Seybert, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Joanna Seybert

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

SEYBERT, District Judge,

INTRODUCTION

On May 4, 2006, Plaintiffs Philip Stolfa ("Stolfa"), Bruce Milligan ("Milligan"), John Artino ("Artino"), Thomas Mascola ("Mascola"), John Amendolare ("Amendolare"), Thomas Roche ("Roche"), and William G. Gannon ("Gannon") (collectively, "Plaintiffs") commenced this action against Arnold Sales Company, Inc. ("Defendant" or "Arnold"). The Complaint alleges thirty-two counts encompassing eight separate causes of action. Plaintiffs allege that Defendant (1) violated Section 2 of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 ("Clayton Act"), as amended by the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13, 13a ("Robinson-Patman Act") (collectively, the "Acts"), through practices of discriminatory pricing; (2) violated Section 2 of the Clayton Act through discriminatory offers of advertising discounts; (3) wrongfully terminated each of Stolfa's, Milligan's, Artino's, and Gannon's Distributor's Agreements; (4) unlawfully breached [*2] by failure to supply each of Stolfa's, Milligan's, Artino's, and Gannon's Distributor's Agreements; (5) breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing with each of the seven

Plaintiffs; (6) terminated each of Plaintiff's distribution agreements on purely pretextual grounds; (7) tortiously interfered with each of Plaintiff's business relations; and (8) harmed, through its tortious actions, Plaintiffs and the general public to the extent that punitive damages should be awarded.

Presently pending before the Court is Defendant's motion to dismiss all but three of the thirty-two counts pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1), for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and 12(b)(6), for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Defendant is not arguing at this time to dismiss the individualized breach of contract claims made by Stolfa, Milligan, and Artino (counts 3-5). For the reasons set forth herein, Defendant's motion to dismiss all but three of the thirty-two claims is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. The request to dismiss Gannon's wrongful termination claim (sixth cause of action) is DENIED; the remaining claims Defendant sought to dismiss (causes of action 1, 2 and 7-32) are [*3] DISMISSED with prejudice.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs are independent distributors of Defendant's manufactured baked goods. (Compl. ¶ 15.) Each had independently entered into Distributor's Agreements with former wholesalers of Defendant, who was assigned the interest in the agreements, whereby each Plaintiff was assigned an exclusive territory in which he could sell and distribute Defendant's food items. (Id. ¶¶ 15-29.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendant's pricing and advertising policies violate federal antitrust law and further allege that Defendant unlawfully breached Plaintiffs' Distributor's Agreements in varied ways when it terminated each of their agreements.

The Distribution Process

Each Plaintiff delivered Defendant's baked goods along an exclusive route. (Id. ¶ 15.) These routes generally consist of two types of retail stores: "cash stores," which are smaller shops such as delicatessens and convenience stores, and "chain stores," which are businesses (usually supermarkets) having multiple locations throughout New York. (Id. ¶ 35.)

Plaintiffs (the distributors) obtained the Arnold products from the wholesaler on consignment, for which Plaintiffs were billed at a predetermined price. Plaintiffs, [*4] in turn, sold the products to the retail stores at a higher price, with the difference in price comprising Plaintiffs' compensation. (Id. ¶ 31.) While the cash stores would pay Plaintiffs upon delivery of the products, the chain stores paid the wholesalers directly. (Id. ¶ 35.) Any products not ultimately sold to the customers of the retail stores prior to the products' "sell by" date, would be taken back to the wholesaler by Plaintiffs. Both the retail stores and Plaintiffs would receive a credit for the price initially paid for the "stale" products. (Id. ¶ 32.)

Implementation Of Computerized System

Originally, each Plaintiff would document all sales made, prices charged, and all "stale" products removed on multi-paged, carbonized forms, of which copies would be given to Defendant and the retail stores, and Plaintiffs. (Id. ¶ 34.) Defendant would then use the information received to, among other things, settle the accounts of Plaintiffs and calculate their compensation. (Id. ¶ 33.)

In April 2000, Defendant decided to replace the carbonized, manual forms with handheld computers only with respect to distributions to chain stores. Defendant gave notice to its wholesalers, who in turn gave [*5] notice to Plaintiffs, that all distributors of Defendant's baked goods would be required to purchase or lease from Defendant a handheld computer system by June 9, 2000 for use with all chain store customers on Plaintiffs' routes. (Id. ¶¶ 37-38.) The computer had an initial purchase price of $6,000. (Id. ¶ 37.) Distributors were informed that failure to comply would be seen as an inability to fulfill their obligation to distribute Defendant's baked goods and would be deemed a breach of their Distributor's Agreements. (Id. ¶ 38.)

Plaintiffs were extremely displeased by this new requirement. Under the new system, prices of Defendant's goods would change daily and Plaintiffs, who had paid full price for the product, would be forced to sell that same product at a sale price set by the computer on any given day. (Id. ¶ 41.) According to Plaintiffs, under the previous billing system, Defendant credited the retail stores directly for any adjustment to the sales price and absorbed the lost profit; distributors were not affected. (Id. ¶ 42.) In addition, under the new system Plaintiffs would be required to submit documentation for credits based on mid-week sales. (Id. ¶ 42.) As a result, Plaintiffs [*6] allege that the handheld computer system would make it more difficult for them to earn profits and recapture credits owed to them by Defendant. (Id. ¶¶ 40-43.) Finally, they argue that the purchase itself was a financial hardship due to the high cost, which represented a significant percentage of their annual income. (Id. ¶ 40.)

Plaintiffs' State Court Actions

Plaintiffs determined, due to the negative impact that it would have upon their businesses, that the requirement to obtain a handheld computer was in violation of their Distributor's Agreements. (Id. ¶ 44.) Thereafter, Plaintiffs filed four separate actions in the Supreme Court of New York, County of Suffolk, in order to prevent Defendant from terminating their Distributor's Agreements due to an unwillingness to obtain the computer. (Id. ¶ 45.) These suits were consolidated and are collectively referred to as the "Handheld Litigation," which is still pending in state court.[1] Plaintiffs in the Handheld Litigation requested, and were granted, a preliminary injunction restraining Defendant from terminating their Distributor's Agreements. (Id. ¶ 45.)

Almost three years later, on February 9, 2004, the preliminary injunction was clarified; Defendant was still restricted from terminating the Distributor's Agreements based on a failure to obtain the computer but was allowed to terminate the agreements for other "for cause" reasons, as permitted by the Distributor's Agreements. (Id. ¶ 46.) Thereafter, Defendant began terminating each of Plaintiff's distribution agreements for reasons that Defendant contends were "for cause." (Id. ¶ 47.) Plaintiffs allege, however, that the reasons stated for the terminations were merely pretextual and used solely to avoid violating the narrow preliminary injunction. (Id. ¶ 47.) They therefore allege that these terminations were unlawful breaches of their Distributor's Agreements. (See id.)

Although Plaintiffs do not state it in their Complaint, it is important to note at the outset that Defendant contends that, in 2004, Plaintiffs Mascola, Amendolare, and Roche also filed additional individual lawsuits in New York Supreme Court, Suffolk County.[2] (Def.'s Mem. of Law 3-5.) These suits involve multiple causes of actions alleging that Defendant [*8] breached the Distributor's Agreements by terminating them. (Id.) The individual lawsuits are ongoing and should not be confused with the Handheld Litigation. Thereafter, in May 2006, the current Complaint was filed to recover damages related in various ways to Defendant's termination of each of the Plaintiff's Distributor's Agreements.

DISCUSSION

Defendant moves to dismiss all but three of the thirty-two counts. Although Defendant moves to dismiss pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6), most of its arguments relate to Plaintiffs' failure to state a claim under which relief may be granted. The Court first sets forth the standards of review to be used and then analyzes each of the substantive issues involved.

[1] The lawsuits, which were consolidated, were Cola v. Arnold Foods Company, Inc., Index No. 01-596; Baker v. H.J.S. Distributor's, Inc., Index No. 01-595; Roche v. Nature's [*7] Best Group, Inc., Index No. 01-483; Peligrini v. Nature's Best Group, Inc., Index No. 01-484. (Compl. ¶ 45 n.1.) Plaintiffs Roche, Mascola, Amendolare, Artino, Gannon, and Stolfa (among others) came together in Roche, Index No. 01-483, and Plaintiff Milligan is a plaintiff in Baker, Index No. 01-595. (Def.'s Mem. of Law 3-4.)

[2] Mascola v. Arnold Sales Company, Inc., Index No. 04-24003 (Sup. Ct., Suffolk County, N.Y.); Amendolare v. Arnold Sales Company, Inc., Index No. 04-21891 (Sup. Ct., Suffolk County, N.Y.); Roche v. Arnold Sales Company, Inc., Index No. 04-28898 (Sup. Ct., Suffolk County, N.Y.). (Def.'s Mem. of Law 4-5.)

I. Standard Of Review On Motion To Dismiss

A. Rule 12(b)(1)

In considering a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1), the Court may consider affidavits and other materials beyond the pleadings to resolve jurisdictional questions. See Robinson v. Gov't of Malaysia, 269 F.3d 133, 140 n.6 (2d Cir. 2001). Under Rule 12(b)(1), the Court will deem true the factual allegations contained in the complaint. See Jaghory v. New York State Dep't of Educ., 131 F.3d 326, 329 (2d Cir. 1997). When, however, there is a question involving federal [*9] jurisdiction, such jurisdiction must be shown affirmatively. See Shipping Fin. Servs. Corp. v. Drakos, 140 F.3d 129, 131 (2d Cir. 1998) (citing Norton v. Larney, 266 U.S. 511, 515, 45 S. Ct. 145, 69 L. Ed. 413 (1925)). Accordingly, the court will not draw references favorable to the party asserting jurisdiction. See id.

B. Rule 12(b)(6)

In reviewing a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), each fact alleged by the Plaintiff must be taken as true and all possible inferences should be viewed in favor of the pleader. See Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1174 (2d Cir. 1993); see also G-I Holdings, Inc. v. Baron & Budd, 238 F. Supp. 2d 521, 534 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). Further, "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Hosp. Bldg. Co. v. Trs. of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, (1976)(quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). Additionally, Plaintiffs are not required to state specifics such as underlying legal theory or facts when they plead their initial claims. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a); see also Phillips v. Girdich, 408 F.3d 124, 130 (2d Cir. 2005).

The pleader is only required to demonstrate that she is entitled to relief and to give the opposing party "fair notice . . . of what the claim is and on what grounds it stands." Twombly v. Bell Atl. Corp., 425 F.3d 99, 108 (2d Cir. 2005)(internal quotations omitted). Finally, although there has been much debate, the Second Circuit recently reiterated that there are no heightened or more specific pleading standards demanded of pleaders in cases of antitrust violations. See id.

II. The Clayton Act Claims

It is with these [*10] lenient pleading standards squarely in mind that the Court first examines the Clayton Act claims presented by Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violated Section 2 of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Although Plaintiffs do not specifically identify the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act Defendant allegedly violated, it appears they are claiming violations of Section 13 of the Robinson-Patman Act for discriminatory pricing and Section 13(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act for discriminatory offers of advertising discounts.

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under the Acts because (1) Plaintiffs lack standing under the Acts, (2) Plaintiffs have failed to allege an anti-trust injury, (3) Plaintiffs have failed to allege that sales were made in interstate commerce, (4) the facts alleged are not specific as to any individual Plaintiff, and (5) Plaintiffs have failed to allege a prima facie case under Section 13(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. Because the Court finds that Plaintiffs lack standing under the Acts, the Court will not analyze Defendant's remaining arguments with respect to the Acts.

A. Standing Requirements For Antitrust Actions [*11]

To determine who has standing to bring a private cause of action under the Robinson-Patman Act, the Court must look to Section 4 of the Clayton Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 15. When reading Section 4 of the Clayton Act, it appears that even those indirectly injured by antitrust violations would have the standing necessary to file suit. Id.; see also Schwimmer v. Sony Corp. of America, 637 F.2d 41, 46 (2d Cir. 1980). Courts have found, however, that the wide net cast by the Clayton Act is too broad and must therefore be limited in order to prevent speculative claims of antitrust injuries from being brought by remote participants. See Schwimmer, 637 F.2d at 46. As a result, only certain classes of individuals are given standing to claim injuries suffered due to antitrust violations.

As Plaintiff correctly points out, the Robinson-Patman Act allows remedies to be sought for three categories of "competitive injury." See Volvo Trucks North America, Inc. v. Reeder-Simco GMC, Inc., 546 U.S. 164, , 126 S. Ct. 860, 870, 163 L. Ed. 2d 663 (2006). The first category is primary-line injuries, which occur where predatory pricing decreases "competition at the level of the discriminating seller and its direct competitors." Id. The next category, secondary-line injuries, are injuries that negatively impact competition as among the discriminating seller's customers (i.e., favored and disfavored purchasers of the discriminatorily priced goods). Id. [*12] The last category, tertiary-line injuries, involve injuries to competition among customers of the favored and disfavored purchasers. See id. To put it simply, to fall within these classes, it is necessary that a plaintiff be the one "targeted" by the antitrust violations and, in turn, be within the target group intended by the statute to obtain relief.[3] Schwimmer, 637 F.2d at 46-47. This limitation on standing means that, on occasion, there will be injuries suffered due to antitrust violations that will not be redressed by the Acts.

B. Application Of The Standing Requirements

Although Plaintiffs set forth the three categories of injury to demonstrate the supposed "broad" nature of the Clayton Act, they fail to indicate into which class of potential litigants they fall. Thus, it is left to the Court to determine into which of the three classes, if any, Plaintiffs fall. When reviewing the pleadings, accepting all facts as true and drawing all inferences in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the Court finds that Plaintiffs do not have standing to go forth with their antitrust claims.

Plaintiffs stress that they must only plead a set of facts that may show a possibility of harming competition, and that a motion for dismissal should not be granted merely because it does not appear that Plaintiffs have a significant chance of winning. On this matter of law, they are correct. See Bernheim v. Litt, 79 F.3d 318, 321 (2d Cir. 1996). They must, however, allege facts to support their standing to bring federal antitrust claims.

1. Discriminatory Pricing Claims

Plaintiffs maintain that they are within the class of persons who should be protected by the Robinson-Patman Act because Defendant set prices for its goods to be purchased by Stop & Shop (and, in turn, to be sold to [*14] Stop & Shop's customers) substantially below those prices set for Stop & Shop's competitors (i.e., the cash stores), thereby creating a class of favored and disfavored purchasers. (Pls.' Opp'n 7-8.) Plaintiffs contend that this discriminatory pricing not only injured competition among Stop & Shop and its competitors, but it also harmed competition among the distributors of bakery products by diminishing profits realized on goods sold to Stop & Shop and its customers. (Id. at 7.) Defendant contends that because Plaintiffs are neither competitors of Arnold, competitors of Stop & Shop, nor customers of the favored or disfavored purchasers, they lack standing under the Acts. (Def.'s Mem. of Law in Supp. 6; Def.'s Reply 2.)

Plaintiffs clearly do not fall within the "primary-line injury" class because Plaintiffs are not direct competitors of Defendant. The correct party to file suit for a primary-line injury in this case would be manufacturers competing with

---

[3] The Court in Schwimmer went on to further illuminate the rationale behind creating standing "boundaries":

> Thus, it is recognized that treble damage actions, effective and attractive as they are in deterring violations of the federal antitrust laws, must have some boundaries. Consequently, the standing requirement is designed, in essence, to limit access to treble recovery to a target of the anticompetitive conduct. Thus, the standing rules exclude a non-target whose damages are more difficult to prove and, in all likelihood, highly speculative. Where, as here, the substantive law provides few 'bright lines' separating permissible from impermissible conduct, it is especially important to have clear standing rules in order to avoid abuses of the Clayton Act's private enforcement remedy. [*13]

Schwimmer, 637 F.2d at 46-47.

Defendant to place their own baked goods in as many stores as possible. Similarly, Plaintiffs do not come within the "tertiary-line injury" class, as that category includes injuries sustained by customers of the favored and unfavored purchasers. [*15] In the present case, the proper party to file suit claiming a "tertiary-line injury" would be the customers of the local delicatessen, who had to pay higher prices for Defendant's goods because the delicatessen was charged higher prices by Defendant.[4]

Plaintiffs also do not fall within the "secondary-line injury" class, as Plaintiffs are not the competitors of the purchasers receiving the favored pricing (i.e., Stop & Shop). Here, the correct party to claim a secondary-line injury would be competitors of the chain stores, such as local delicatessens, alleging that competition was injured due to discriminatory pricing that favored the chain stores.

The closest Plaintiffs come to clarifying into which group they fall, albeit not well, is when they state that "[b]y reason of this discriminatory pricing scheme, competition . . . between the distributors of bakery products to Stop & Shop and its competitors, is substantially lessened." (Pls.' Opp'n 7.) The only further explanation offered is that the discriminatory pricing caused the distributors to earn less profit on certain sales and that certain distributors realized diminished profits because they happened to have more Stop & Shop chain [*16] stores on their routes than other distributors.[5]

Although not exactly clear, the Court assumes that Plaintiffs are attempting to claim that they have viable antitrust claims due to an injury to competition among the Plaintiffs themselves. This argument, however, does not bring them within the "secondary-line injury" category. Plaintiffs have predetermined exclusive routes based on geographical area for delivering Defendant's baked goods. Regardless of how many chain stores or cash stores each Plaintiff has on his route, they are not competing with one another. In addition, it does not appear that they are in a position to compete for routes, as Defendant is not permitted to terminate a Distributor's Agreement simply to give it to a different distributor. Being that Plaintiffs have the exclusive right to deliver Defendant's products to the retail stores along their routes, competition among Plaintiffs cannot be viewed as being injured under any set of facts presented by Plaintiffs. They are not competing with each other.

Ultimately, this Court finds that Plaintiffs, under any interpretation of the facts presented, do not fall within any of the three categories. Thus, because [*17] Plaintiffs do not fit within any of the three classes carved out to be protected by the Acts, Plaintiffs lack standing to bring their discriminatory pricing claim, and such claim is DISMISSED with prejudice.

2. Discriminatory Promotional Allowances

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant violated antitrust law by making it more difficult for cash stores to receive discounts through the use of advertising displays. (Compl. ¶¶ 64-69.) Defendant offers retailers of their bread products what amounts to a 5% discount if they set up within their stores a display focused on Defendant's goods. (Compl. ¶ 65). Plaintiffs allege that because chain stores, but not cash stores, pay Defendant directly for Defendant's bread products, the chain stores are given the advertising discounts automatically, and without confirming the display.[6]

---

[4] As set forth above, Defendant's bread products are given to Plaintiffs on a consignment basis, meaning that there is no middleman in terms of ownership. (Compl. ¶ 31). In other words, Plaintiffs pick up the bread products and deliver it that day; they do not take ownership and do not incur added costs. Thus, in this case, since there is no true middleman, the customers of the cash stores, for example, would be able to sue if they were trying to compete in some form.

[5] Although not vital to deciding the antitrust issues in this case, it is worth noting that the purpose of our body of antitrust law, from the Sherman Act and onward, is to protect competition itself, and in turn, consumers. The goal has never been to prevent a competitor from earning less profits in the face of furious competition, and it is also not concerned with any one, specific competitor thriving or not. It is competition itself that the law seeks to insulate. See, e.g. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) (relating that antitrust law is in place for "the protection of competition, not competitors").

[6] Like with the discriminatory pricing claim, it may be that the cash stores actually did suffer an antitrust injury. That issue, however, is not for this Court to decide.

(Compl. ¶¶ 66-68). There is no mechanism in place, however, under which cash stores are credited with the advertising discount.

The issue at hand is whether Plaintiffs, independent distributors of Defendant's baked goods, have the required standing to recover under the Clayton Act based on these potential violations. For the reasons discussed in Section II.A.1., supra, Plaintiffs [*18] lack standing to bring this claim. Once again, it appears that Plaintiffs seek to fit themselves within the "secondary-line injury" class, but the parties with standing in this category would be the owners of the cash stores, not Plaintiffs. Although Plaintiffs may have been indirectly injured by these alleged violations, it does not mean that they are automatically allowed to bring suit under the Clayton Act. Thus, because Plaintiffs lack standing, this Court DISMISSES Plaintiffs' Clayton Act claims (causes of action one and two) with prejudice.

III. Applying The Rooker-Feldman Doctrine To Gannon

Defendant next requests that all five individual claims[7] brought by Plaintiff William M. Gannon be dismissed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. This doctrine has been understood as preventing the losing party in a state court action from turning around and filing the same suit in federal court. See, e.g., Bridgewater Operating Corp. v. Feldstein, 346 F.3d 27, 29-30 (2d Cir. 2003). The Rooker-Feldman doctrine exists in order to protect the constitutional concept that only the United States Supreme Court, and not any federal court, has appellate jurisdiction to review final state-court decisions. See id.

Recently, the Supreme [*19] Court revisited the Rooker-Feldman doctrine in Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Industries Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 125 S. Ct. 1517, 161 L. Ed. 2d 454 (2005). In Exxon Mobil, the Supreme Court limited what it viewed to be a growing, unnecessary expansion of the applicability of the doctrine, stating: "The Rooker-Feldman doctrine . . . is confined to cases of the kind from which the doctrine acquired its name: cases brought by state-court losers complaining of injuries caused by state-court judgments rendered before the district court proceedings commenced and inviting district court review and rejection of those judgments." Id. at 284. This formulation effectively means the losing party is attempting to have the district court overturn a state-court decision. In these cases, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine applies and the federal court will dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. This rule applies even if the constitutional claims brought in federal court are not identical to, but are "inextricably intertwined" with, the claims that were originally rejected in state court. See id. at 287 n.1 (quoting District of Columbia Ct. of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482 n.16, 103 S. Ct. 1303, 75 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1983)).

Plaintiffs argue that Rooker-Feldman is inapplicable because Gannon does not seek review of the constitutionality of the state court decision. Rather, Gannon seeks to assert distinct claims that accrued eight months [*20] after the state court decision was rendered. Defendant contends, however, that Rooker-Feldman bars Gannon's claims because Gannon essentially asks this Court to review the state court judgment dismissing Gannon's claims with prejudice. In fact, Defendant argues, Gannon seeks to hold Defendant liable for doing that which the state court determined Defendant had a right to do - terminate the Distributor's Agreement. (Def.'s Reply 5-6.)

This Court finds much guidance in the Second Circuit's decisions in McKithen v. Brown, No. 03-PR-0168, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 5763 (2d Cir. March 13, 2007), and Hoblock v. Albany County Bd. of Elections, 422 F.3d 77 (2d Cir. 2005), both of which applied the Rooker-Felman doctrine as announced in Exxon Mobil. In Hoblock, the Second Circuit advised that, pursuant to Exxon Mobil, to determine whether Rooker-Feldman applies, there are four requirements that must be satisfied:

> First, the federal-court plaintiff must have lost in state court. Second, the plaintiff must complain of injuries caused by [a] state-court judgment. Third, the plaintiff must invit[e] district court review and rejection of [that] judgment[]. Fourth, the state-court judgment must have been rendered before the district court proceedings commenced . . . . The first and fourth of these requirements may be loosely [*21] termed procedural; the second and third may be termed substantive.

---

[7] These counts are for breach of contract due to wrongful termination, breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, termination of distributorship on purely pretextual grounds, and tortious interference with business relations.

Hoblock, 422 F.3d at 85 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted and alteration in original).

In the present case, on January 11, 2005, Gannon's state-court claims were dismissed in their entirety "upon the application of the defendant, and upon consent of the plaintiff." (Aulivola Affirm. Ex. J.) Although Gannon does not raise the argument, the Court questions whether Gannon may be properly classified as a "state-court loser" where his claims were dismissed upon consent. Nevertheless, the federal action was commenced in May 2006; therefore, the fourth prong is clearly satisfied.

Assuming that the procedural requirements are satisfied, "the application of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine turns on whether the second and third 'substantive' requirements are met. McKithen, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 5763, at *18-19. The substantive requirements, "the Hoblock panel explained, can be reduced to the following statement: 'federal plaintiffs are not subject to the Rooker-Feldman bar unless they complain of an injury caused by a state judgment.'" (Id. at *19 (quoting Hoblock, 422 F.3d at 87) (emphasis in original).) The Second Circuit further explained that "[a] federal suit complains of injury from a state-court judgment, even if it [*22] appears to complain only of a third party's actions, when the third party's actions are produced by a state-court judgment and not simply ratified, acquiesced in, or left unpunished by it." Hoblock, 422 F.3d at 88. It follows, therefore, that when a plaintiff brings the same or similar claims in federal court seeking a result different from the one he received from state court, such plaintiff "does not, for that reason alone, run afoul of Rooker-Feldman." Id. at 87. Rather, "applicability of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine turns not on the similarity between a party's state-court and federal-court claims (which is, generally speaking, the focus of ordinary preclusion law), but rather on the causal relationship between the state-court judgment and the injury of which the party complains in federal court." McKithen, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 5763, at *20 (emphasis in original).

The McKithen court went on to hold Rooker-Feldman inapplicable to that case because McKithen sought redress for an injury that existed, in its exact form, prior to the state-court judgment. Therefore, the Second Circuit advised, "a party is not complaining of an injury 'caused by' a state-court judgment when the exact injury of which the party complains in federal court existed prior in time to [*23] the state-court proceedings, and so could not have been 'caused by' those proceedings. Id. at *21-22.

Gannon filed suit in state court as one of the plaintiffs in the Handheld Litigation seeking (1) a declaratory judgment interpreting both his and Defendant's legal rights as per the Distributor's Agreement, (2) a permanent injunction prohibiting Defendant from terminating his Distributor's Agreement and from asserting any rights under the Distributor's Agreement to Gannon's detriment, and (3) a declaratory judgment finding that Defendant was not entitled to require Gannon to acquire the computer. (See Aulivola Affirm. Ex. I at 26-27.) As noted above, Gannon's state-law claims were dismissed with prejudice on January 11, 2005. On or about July 28, 2005, Defendant terminated Gannon's Distributor's Agreement. (Compl. ¶ 92.)

It is not clear to the Court, however, that the injury of which Gannon complains - termination of the Distributor's Agreement - was caused by the state-court decision. First, while Defendant argues that the state-court decision permitted Defendant to terminate Gannon's Distributor's Agreement, it appears that dismissal of Gannon's state-court claims was with Gannon's consent, and [*24] the order does not discuss the merits of the underlying claims. (Def.'s Reply 6; Aulivola Affirm. Ex. J.) As such, this Court cannot comfortably conclude that the state court authorized the termination of Gannon's Distributor's Agreement. Second, the Handheld Litigation, other than Gannon's claims, remains pending and, yet, Defendant terminated each of the other Plaintiff's Distributor's Agreements as well. It seems, therefore, that the state court order did not necessarily cause the injury of which Gannon complains.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's motion to dismiss Gannon's individual claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction based on the Rooker-Feldman doctrine.

IV. Applying The Abstention Doctrine To Amedolare, Mascola, & Roche

Defendant next requests that this Court abstain from exercising jurisdiction regarding the litany of individual breach of contract claims brought by Plaintiffs Amedolare, Mascola, and Roche because these Plaintiffs already have substantially similar claims pending in state court. Defendant brings its request pursuant to the abstention doctrine enunciated in Colorado River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1976). As all the parties agree, abstaining from exercising jurisdiction when it is properly [*25] before the Court is rarely practiced. "The doctrine of abstention . . . is an extraordinary and narrow exception to the duty of a District Court to adjudicate a controversy properly before it." County of Allegheny v. Frank Mashuda Co., 360 U.S. 185, 188-89, 79 S. Ct. 1060, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1163 (1959).

Under Colorado River, a court may abstain from exercising its subject matter jurisdiction to "conserve federal judicial resources . . . where the resolution of existing concurrent statecourt litigation could result in comprehensive disposition of litigation." Woodford v. Cmty. Action Agency of Greene County, Inc., 239 F.3d 517, 522 (2d Cir. 2001) (internal quotations omitted). However, the Court in Colorado River also made clear that abstention is the "exception, not the rule" and is only proper in "exceptional circumstances." Colorado River, 424 U.S. at 813.

The Colorado River Court set forth a test for federal courts to employ when determining whether abstention is proper in light of a concurrent state-court action. This test involves balancing the following six factors: (1) assumption of jurisdiction over res; (2) inconvenience of the federal forum; (3) avoidance of piecemeal litigation; (4) order in which the actions were filed and whether proceedings are more advanced in one of the fora; (5) the law that provides the rule of decision; and (6) protection of the federal plaintiff's rights. See Moses H. Cone Mem'l Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 15-16, 103 S. Ct. 927, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1983); Colorado River, 424 U.S. at 818-19; Woodford, 239 F.3d at 522; De Cisneros v. Younger, 871 F.2d 305, 307 (2d Cir. 1989).

A. [*26] Parallel Proceedings

Defendant requests that the Court abstain from making any determination in this case and, instead, allow the issues to be resolved by the state court. Plaintiffs argue that the actions are not parallel and that abstention is inappropriate.

The Second Circuit has defined parallel proceedings with regard to abstention as proceedings where the parties' issues and relief sought are substantially the same. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, PA. v. Karp, 108 F.3d 17, 22 (2d Cir. 1997). Here, although Plaintiffs proclaim otherwise, the issues being pursued are essentially the same in both the state court and federal court actions. Although there are variations as to the damages sought and some claims are for allegedly unique breaches, upon closer analysis, the complaints are substantially the same.

In the individual state court actions, for example, each of Amedolare, Mascola, and Roche is suing for damages related to termination of his underlying Distributor's Agreements. (Stricker Aff. Exs. L, N, and O.) These Plaintiffs are seeking injunctive or, in the alternative, monetary relief in the state-court proceedings. (Id.) In this action, they are suing for damages related to the underlying termination of the Distributor's Agreements. In the state-court [*27] action, they allege a breach for failure to provide baked goods to Plaintiffs once the agreements were terminated. (Id.) In the instant action, they again speak of Defendant's failure to supply baked goods, but here Plaintiffs couch the claim in terms of "wrongful breach" and "breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing." The amount of damages sought may be different, but that is not as telling as the fact that both the state and federal claims revolve around the same issue: whether Defendant properly terminated Plaintiffs' distribution agreements as and when it did. As such, the Court finds that this action and the pending state actions are parallel proceedings for the purposes of abstention.

B. Application Of The Colorado River Factors

Having determined that there are parallel state and federal actions, the Court will apply the Colorado River factors to determine whether or not abstention is appropriate in this case. In order for a court to abstain from the exercise of jurisdiction, all the factors do not have to be met and no one factor is determinative. Considerations include "both the obligation to exercise jurisdiction and the combination of factors counseling [sic] against [*28] that exercise." Colorado River, 424 U.S. at 818-19; see also Moses H. Cone, 460 U.S. at 15-16 (holding that the Court "declined to prescribe a hard and fast rule for dismissals of this type . . . the decision whether to dismiss . . . does not rest on a mechanical checklist, but on a careful balancing of the important factors . . . ."); Woodford, 239 F.3d at 522 (noting that "'[n]o one factor is necessarily determinative . . . [and] [o]nly the clearest of justifications will warrant dismissal'" (internal quotations and emphasis omitted)); De Cisneros, 871 F.2d at 307 (noting that "the Supreme Court admonishes that no single factor is necessarily decisive"). The analysis should be employed with caution as it is "heavily weighted in favor of the exercise of jurisdiction." Moses H. Cone, 460 U.S. at 16. As a result, when the Court examines each factor, a determination that the facts as they pertain to a particular factor are neutral, or do not favor abstention, shall weigh in favor of retention of jurisdiction. See, e.g., Woodford, 239 F.3d at 522 (citing Village of Westfield v. Welch's, 170 F.3d 116, 122 (2d Cir. 1999)("[W]ith respect to the first Colorado River factor, 'the absence of a res points toward exercise of federal jurisdiction.'").

All parties agree that both the first and second Colorado River factors are not relevant here. The first factor deals with res, which is not applicable here, and the second factor [*29] as well is not applicable because the federal venue is not less convenient for the parties.

The third factor, whether there is a risk of piecemeal litigation, very much concerns the Court in this case and weighs heavily in favor of abstention. As noted, both the state and federal claims revolve around the same issues: whether Defendant wrongfully terminated and breached the Distributor's Agreements. As such, the risk of piecemeal litigation and inconsistent judgments are great. If this court were to rule for Plaintiffs, hypothetically speaking, that would necessarily involve a determination that Defendant wrongfully terminated and breached the distribution agreements. If the state court rules in favor of Plaintiffs in the pending actions, it also would have to conclude that Defendant wrongfully terminated and breached the agreements. Therefore, the risk of incongruent and potentially contradictory rulings weighs on this Court in favor of abstention.

The fourth factor looks at which suit was filed first and the current stage of each proceeding. These issues have been argued in state court since Fall 2004. Defendant argues, and Plaintiffs do not dispute, that, since that time, there has [*30] been extensive discovery and motion practice. (Def.'s Mem. 16.) In fact, the individual state action brought by Mascola was scheduled for trial for September 2006. (Stricker Aff. Ex. M.) In contrast, the instant federal action was filed in May 2006. The action before this Court is in its infancy; discovery has not yet commenced and this motion is the first and only motion to be filed. The state court has been handling the individual actions for significantly longer than this Court and is much more familiar with the intricacies involved. There has been much discovery conducted, costs incurred, and time spent regarding the state-court actions. Therefore, the fourth factor also weighs in favor of abstention.

The fifth factor asks whether federal law or state law will provide the rule of decision on the merits. As Defendant points out, all the claims in the federal action, apart from the Clayton Act claims which have already been dismissed for lack of standing, are New York common law claims. Accordingly, New York law will govern the claims, regardless of the claim being brought in federal court. Therefore, the fifth factor also weighs in favor of abstention.

Finally, the sixth factor looks [*31] to allow Plaintiffs to bring their action in federal court if there is a fear that Plaintiffs' rights will not be adequately protected by the state court. In the present case, there is absolutely no fear of Plaintiffs' rights going unprotected. Plaintiffs are all New York residents and business owners and state law governs; surely the state court is capable of protecting their rights. Plaintiffs argue that because they are asserting different claims in this action, the rights they want protected via the present claims will not be protected by the state-court actions. As discussed in Section IV.A., supra, because the federal and state claims are in fact parallel, as they involve substantially the same issues and damages, this argument is unavailing. If the state court finds that Defendant wrongfully terminated the distribution agreements, Plaintiffs will recover what they are rightfully owed pursuant to the state-court decision. Therefore, the sixth factor as well weighs in favor of abstention.

Although two of the six Colorado River factors are not at issue, and, therefore, arguably point toward the exercise of jurisdiction, four of the six factors weigh heavily in favor of abstention. The risk of piecemeal [*32] litigation and inconsistent judgment, combined with the chronology and posture of the state-court actions, the fact that state law will be applied regardless of the forum, and that Plaintiffs' rights are well protected by the state court, coalesce to urge this Court to abstain from exercising its subject matter jurisdiction.

A similar scenario was seen in Telesco v. Telesco Fuel and Masons' Materials, Inc., 765 F.2d 356 (2d Cir. 1985). In Telesco, where the actions were "essentially the same," the cases had been in state court for a significant period of time already, with much in the way of hearings and discovery having taken place, and the federal court had not moved beyond the pleadings stage, the Court dismissed the federal action. See id. at 362-63. So too here, the Court finds that, although the abstention doctrine teaches that abstaining from exercising jurisdiction is the exception and not the rule, the factors here present a set of "exceptional circumstances" that warrant federal abstention. See Colorado River, 424 U.S. at 819-20. This conclusion is warranted based on consideration of all the Colorado River factors, but especially in light of the significant risk of piecemeal litigation and inconsistent judgments should both actions go forth. Thus, the Court exercises its discretion to abstain from [*33] exercising jurisdiction over these claims. The individual claims brought by Plaintiffs Mascola, Amedolare, and Roche (causes of action 14-16 and 21-23) are DISMISSED with prejudice.

V. Duplicative State Claims

Although Defendant does not seek to dismiss Plaintiffs' primary contract claims,[8] which are allegations of breach of contract due to wrongful termination, it does move for dismissal of the numerous other state law claims brought by Plaintiffs. In sum, Defendant argues that all the other contract claims are merely duplicative and derivative of the initial wrongful termination causes of action (causes of action 3-6). Plaintiffs argue that, pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8 and 18(a), they have sufficiently pleaded additional claims in the alternative. The Court holds that Plaintiffs have not correctly utilized the right to plead in the alternative and, therefore, their additional claims, which are merely duplicative of their wrongful termination claims, must be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

1. Breach Of Contract - Failure To Supply

The first questionable causes of action are phrased as breach of contract due to a failure to supply Plaintiffs with Defendant's [*34] bread products every day since the distribution agreements were terminated (causes of action 7-10). Defendant argues that the failure to supply claims should be dismissed because, if Defendant is found to have wrongfully terminated Plaintiffs' distribution agreements, then Defendant would be liable for all damages incurred due to the wrongful termination, which necessarily includes a failure to supply Plaintiffs with bread products. If, on the other hand, Defendant is found to have rightfully terminated the distribution agreements, then it would no longer have any responsibility to supply Plaintiffs with bread products after such termination. Therefore, the failure to supply claims are not claims pleaded in the alternative because they are based on the same event, underlying facts, and repercussions that are the focus of the primary wrongful termination contract claims. See, e.g., O'Hearn v. Bodyonics, Ltd., 22 F. Supp. 2d 7, 11-12 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) (dismissing a secondary contract claim because it was duplicative of the primary breach of contract claim).

Plaintiffs, after citing to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, cite to Aiena v. Olsen, 69 F. Supp. 2d 521 (S.D.N.Y. 1999), to demonstrate how each of their alternative pleadings was appropriate and lawful. Aiena, however, is easily distinguishable [*35] from the current situation. In Aiena, alternative pleadings were allowed, but only because the Plaintiff was unsure of several things, such as whether the plan at issue was governed by ERISA. Given the uncertainties in Aiena concerning (a) whether certain arrangements constituted an ERISA plan and (b) the scope of ERISA preemption, the Court held that "it would be foolish to put all of one's eggs in either . . . basket." Id. at 532.

Unlike Aiena, there are no "uncertainties" in the present case. Plaintiffs know exactly what type of case it is — breach of contract — and they know exactly how the events unfolded. The only question is whether the breach was lawful. There is no risk here, like in Aiena, that the Plaintiffs are "put[ting] all of [their] eggs in [one] basket" if they would have only filed the primary wrongful termination claim. Therefore, the case cited by Plaintiffs for support actually reiterates why they did not properly plead in the alternative. This reasoning similarly applies to each of the other related contract claims. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' failure to supply claims are DISMISSED with prejudice.

2. Breach Of Covenant Of Good Faith And Fair Dealing

---

[8] As discussed in Section III, supra, Defendant does move to dismiss Gannon's wrongful termination claim on the basis of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine; however, that motion is DENIED.

Defendant requests that the [*36] causes of action for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing be dismissed as well (causes of action 11-15, 17).[9] In New York, there is an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing underlying every express contract. See, e.g., Fasolino Foods Co., Inc. v. Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, 961 F.2d 1052, 1056 (2d Cir. 1992). It is well established, however, that breaching the implied covenant is not a separate breach in and of itself, but is simply a breach of the contract itself. See id. ("Under New York law, parties to an express contract are bound by an implied duty of good faith, but breach of that duty is merely a breach of the underlying contract.") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); see also Village on Canon v. Bankers Trust Co., 920 F. Supp. 520, 534 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (holding that the implied covenant does not "provide an independent basis for recovery").

This conceptualization of the meaning of the implied covenant is quite apparent when one looks at the Complaint. The breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing claims are explained in exactly the same terms as the primary contract cause of action: Defendant terminated the distribution agreements and then breached the covenant by failing to provide the bread products. (See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 108.) This formulation is not pleading in the alternative, but pleading [*37] in the repetitive. For these reason, Stolfa's, Milligan's, Artino's, Mascola's, Amendolare's, and Gannon's claims for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing are DISMISSED with prejudice.

3. Termination Based On Purely Pretextual Grounds

Defendant moves to dismiss Plaintiffs' causes of action for termination based on purely pretextual grounds. The same reasoning also applies here. These causes of action are only a restatement of their fundamental contract claims — that the distribution agreements were wrongfully terminated. Once again, Plaintiffs are attempting to plead the same claims, not an alternative one.

Moreover, a party's reason for terminating a contract is not important. Once a party establishes an appropriate reason for terminating an agreement, whatever underlying motivation the party may have had for the termination is "legally irrelevant." Refinement Int'l Co. v. Eastbourne N.V., 815 F. Supp. 738, 742 (S.D.N.Y. 1993); see also ESPN, Inc. v. Office of the Comm'r of Baseball, 76 F. Supp. 2d 383, 409 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (finding that "motive is irrelevant" to the issue of whether a party properly terminated a contract where the party had an independent right to terminate). Provided that Defendant did not wrongfully terminate the Distributor's Agreements, it is irrelevant that Defendant may have had other reasons for wanting to [*38] terminate the agreements, for instance, because Plaintiffs would not purchase the handheld computers. Once good cause is established, that is all that matters.[10] Accordingly, if this Court finds under the original wrongful termination claims that the reasons given by Defendant for the termination were valid, it will not matter whether Defendant had ulterior motives as well. The Court holds, therefore, that each redundant claim related to the original wrongful termination claims must be DISMISSED with prejudice.

4. Tortious Interference With Prospective Business Relations

The final cause of action supposedly made in the alternative similarly fails to stand up as an actual alternative pleading. It is well settled that a contract claim may not be pleaded as a tort unless a plaintiff shows a violation of a legal duty independent of the contract itself. See United States ex rel. Evergreen Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Merritt Meridian Constr. Corp., 95 F.3d 153, 162 (2d Cir. 1996); see also Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. York Hunter, Inc., 945 F.

---

[9] Cause of action 16 is a claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing brought by Roche. Since Roche did not also bring a wrongful termination claim, Defendants did not seek to dismiss his implied covenant claim as duplicative; however, as held in Section IV, supra, Roche's sixteenth cause of action is dismissed pursuant to the abstention doctrine.

[10] Plaintiffs, in their opposition papers, contend that the causes of action based on pretextual termination should stand because Defendant did not explain what valid reasons it had for terminating the agreements. The Court does not see the rationale of this statement. Whether a party lists the reasons for the termination is irrelevant in the context of these duplicative claims. Just as with the other redundant claims, the reasons for termination will be argued via the primary wrongful termination claims, with the ultimate decision resting on whether the breach was lawful because it was "for cause," or whether the reasons offered by Defendant for the terminations were, in fact, pretextual and nothing more.

Supp. 742, 749 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (citing Clark-Fitzpatrick, Inc. v. Long Island R.R. Co., 70 N.Y.2d 382, 389, 516 N.E.2d 190, 521 N.Y.S.2d 653 (1987)). "This legal duty must spring from circumstances extraneous to, and not constituting elements of, the contract, although it may be connected with and dependent upon the contract." Evergreen Pipeline Constr. Co., 95 F.3d at 162. Here, Defendant had no legal duty to Plaintiffs apart from an obligation to supply Plaintiffs with bread products until the agreements were [*39] terminated. If the Court determines that the agreements were terminated by Defendant without cause, then it will lead to the ruling that Defendant breached the contract — not that Defendant committed some separate tort. For this reason, the claim of tortious interference cannot be described as anything but a breach of the underlying contract.

Moreover, Plaintiffs failed to allege any facts that could be interpreted to meet the elements necessary for a tortious interference claim. One element of a tortious interference claim is that the Defendant must have actively interfered with the Plaintiffs' business dealings by contacting or otherwise influencing a third party with whom the Plaintiffs do business. See Lombard v. Booz-Allen & Hamilton, Inc., 280 F.3d 209, 214 (2d Cir. 2002). Here, there are no allegations of Defendant doing anything other than terminating Plaintiffs' Distributor's Agreements and failing to supply bread thereunder.[11] Accordingly, this Court fails to see, while assuming as true all facts presented by Plaintiffs, how there could have potentially been a tortious interference with Plaintiffs' prospective business dealings. For the foregoing reasons, the Court DISMISSES with prejudice Plaintiffs' claims of tortious interference.

VI. Plaintiffs' [*40] Request For Punitive Damages

As their final cause of action, Plaintiffs request punitive damages in the amount of $10,000,000.00. They seek this punitive award based on Defendant's allegedly "egregious tortious conduct" towards the Plaintiffs and the general public. (Compl. ¶ 253.) There is no separate cause of action in New York for punitive damages. See Martin v. Dickson, 100 F. App'x 14, 16 (2d Cir. 2004) (citing Paisley v. Coin Devise Corp., 5 A.D.3d 748, 749-50, 773 N.Y.S.2d 582, 583 (2d Dep't 2004). In addition, the punitive damages cannot be allowed to stand as related to Plaintiffs' tortious interference claim, as this Court has dismissed those causes of action.

Punitive damages may be recovered, however, for a breach of contract claim where the general public has been harmed in some way. See, e.g., Evergreen Pipeline Constr. Co., 95 F.3d at 160-62. This Court strains to see even potential harm to the general public in this case, let alone actual harm. Plaintiffs allege harm to competition, which may in turn harm the public, but they do not have standing to bring those Clayton Act claims and, therefore, should not be able to seek punitive damages related to them. The only claims remaining in this action are four counts of breach of contract for wrongful termination. The thrust of Plaintiffs' arguments with respect to such claims relate to how Plaintiffs were harmed [*41] as distributors of Defendant's products. They do not allege harm to the general public as a result of the breach of contract claims. Accordingly, Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim of punitive damages is hereby GRANTED and such claim is DISMISSED with prejudice.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, the Defendant's motion to dismiss 29 of Plaintiffs' 32 claims is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's anti-trust claims and duplicative contract claims is GRANTED, and Defendant's motion to dismiss Gannon's wrongful termination claim (cause of action six) is DENIED. In sum, four of the thirty-two counts are permitted to go forward: Stolfa's, Milligan's, Artino's, and Gannon's claims of breach of contract due to wrongful termination of the Distributor's Agreements (causes of action 3-6).

SO ORDERED

/s/ JOANNA SEYBERT

---

[11] As Defendant points out, the only "interference" that Plaintiffs mention is that by terminating their agreements, Defendant interfered with Plaintiffs' ability to sell and deliver Defendant's bread products to their customers. This fact does not constitute tortious interference, but merely termination of the agreement.

Joanna Seybert, U.S.D.J.

Dated: Central Islip, New York

March 30, 2007

[In re Bulk Extruded Graphite Prods. Antitrust Litig.]

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

April 4, 2007, Decided

Civ. No. 02-6030 (WHW)

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25070 *; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,660

In re: BULK EXTRUDED GRAPHITE PRODUCTS ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, Motion denied by In re Bulk [Extruded] Graphite Prods. Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54906 (D.N.J., July 30, 2007)

Prior History: In re Bulk [Extruded] Graphite Prods. Antitrust Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45762 (D.N.J., Apr. 24, 2006)

Core Terms

graphite, pricing, price fixing, extruded, bulk, diligence, investigations, products, fraudulent concealment, concealment, defendants', notice, summary judgment motion, suspicions, customers, genuine, summary judgment, cause of action, settlements, deposition, non-moving, antitrust, tolled

Counsel: For In re: BULK [EXTRUDED] GRAPHITE PRODUCTS ANTITRUST LITIGATION this document relates to" ("ALLL ACTIONS" or specify by tittle and case number the individual application cases if the docu, In Re: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For INDUSTRIAL GRAPHITE PRODUCTS, INC., Plaintiff: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ; SAMUEL D. HEINS, LEAD ATTORNEY, HEINS MILLS & OLSON P.L.C., MINNEAPOLIS, MN.

For CERADYNE, INC., Consol Plaintiff: DANIEL R. KARON, LEAD ATTORNEY, WEINSTEIN KITCHENOFF SCARLATO & GOLDMAN LTD., CLEVELAND, OH; LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ; SAMUEL D. HEINS, LEAD ATTORNEY, HEINS MILLS & OLSON P.L.C., MINNEAPOLIS, MN.

For SGL CARBON A.G., SGL CARBON, L.L.C., SGL CARBON GmbH, Defendants: ADAM NELSON SUBERVI, BRIAN J. MCMAHON, JENNIFER A. HRADIL, GIBBONS, PC, NEWARK, NJ.

For ROBERT J. KOHLER, Defendant: BRIAN J. MCMAHON, LEAD ATTORNEY, ADAM NELSON SUBERVI, GIBBONS, PC, NEWARK, NJ.

Judges: William H. Walls, United States Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: William H. Walls

Opinion

OPINION

[*2] Walls, Senior District Judge

Before the Court is defendants' motion for summary judgment. Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 78, the motion is decided without oral arguments. The motion is denied.

FACT AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Defendants SGL Carbon, LLC ("SGL US"), SGL Carbon AG ("SGL AG"), and SGL Carbon GmbH ("SGL GmbH") are sellers of bulk extruded graphite products. [1] Defendant Robert J. Koehler ("Koehler") is Chairman of the Board of Management of SGL AG. Defendants are alleged to have engaged in a world-wide conspiracy to fix, raise, stabilize and maintain at artificially high levels the prices charged for bulk extruded graphite products in the United States and elsewhere.

In December 2002, certain purchasers of bulk extruded graphite, [*3] Industrial Graphite, Inc., Graphite Machining, Inc., Midwest Graphite Co., and Semco Carbon, filed a complaint, which alleged that defendants engaged in price fixing from as early as 1993. In April 2006, the Court certified the class of bulk extruded graphite purchasers represented by named plaintiffs. [2]

In May 2004, defendants moved to dismiss the action, arguing that it was time-barred under Section 4B of the Clayton Act. This section bars any private antitrust action not "commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." 15 U.S.C. § 15b. Though the present action [*4] had been brought more than four years after the plaintiffs' alleged initial injury, plaintiffs claimed that the statute of limitations was tolled because defendants fraudulently concealed their wrongdoing. In its October 28, 2004 opinion, this Court rejected defendants' argument that plaintiffs had insufficiently pled fraudulent concealment and denied their motion to dismiss. In its decision, the Court stated that once the factual record evolved, the issue of fraudulent concealment might better be determined.

Since that time, the parties have engaged in considerable discovery. In their motion for summary judgment, defendants once again bring the issue of fraudulent concealment before the court. They argue that plaintiffs' action must be dismissed because the action is time barred under 15 U.S.C. § 15(b).

LEGAL STANDARD

A. Summary Judgment

Summary judgment is appropriate when the moving party establishes that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that [it] is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Only a genuine and material factual dispute between the parties will defeat a motion for summary [*5] judgment. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). A factual dispute is genuine if a reasonable jury could find for the non-moving party on that issue. It is material if, under the substantive law, that issue would affect the outcome of the suit. See id. at 248.

[1] An additional company, UCAR Carbon Company ("UCAR"), which is now known as GrafTech, was also named as a defendant in the Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint ("Amended Complaint"). On March 8, 2004, this Court approved the settlement with UCAR.

[2] The Court certified the following class: "All persons (excluding federal government entities, defendants, and their respective parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates) who purchased Bulk Extruded Graphite Products in the United States, directly from the defendants, their affiliates or subsidiaries, during the period January 1, 1993 through December 31, 1998." Class Certification Order, No. 02-6030, April 4, 2006.

A court must enter summary judgment "against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The party moving for summary judgment "bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of [the record]" that show that there is no genuine material issue of fact as to the non-existence of that element. Id. at 323. When the burden of proof for a particular factual element falls on the non-moving party, the moving party must initially demonstrate that the non-moving party cannot meet its burden with the evidentiary material of record admissible at trial. See id. at 322-23. [*6]

Once the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56, "its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts in question." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). To survive a motion for summary judgment, a nonmovant must present more than a mere scintilla of evidence in his favor. Woloszyn v. County of Lawrence, 396 F.3d 314, 319 (3d Cir. 2005). The opposing party must set forth specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial and may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of its pleadings. Shields v. Zuccarini, 254 F.3d 476, 481 (3d Cir. 2001).

At the summary judgment stage the court's function is not to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter, but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249. In so doing, the court must construe the facts and inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Curley v. Klem, 298 F.3d 271, 276-77 (3d Cir. 2002).

B. Fraudulent Concealment

The burden of establishing fraudulent concealment [*7] falls on the plaintiff who invokes that doctrine to toll the statute of limitations. Forbes v. Eagleson, 228 F.3d 471, 487 (3d. Cir. 1993). The plaintiff must show "(1) an affirmative act of concealment; (2) which misleads or relaxes the plaintiff's inquiry, who (3) exercised due diligence in investigating his cause of action." In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1178 -1179 (3d. Cir. 1993).

The defendant must affirmatively act to conceal the plaintiff's claim. The affirmative acts of concealment may be separate from the underlying price-fixing conspiracy or, if the conspiracy is self-concealing, the acts of concealment may be performed as part of the conspiracy itself. See In re Mercedes-Benz Antitrust Litig., 157 F.Supp.2d 355, 369 (D.N.J. 2001); Pennsylvania v. Milk Indus. Management Corp., 812 F. Supp. 500 (E.D. Pa. 1992). The statute of limitations is tolled "'until the plaintiff knows, or should reasonably be expected to know, the concealed facts supporting the cause of action . . . .'" Forbes v. Eagleson, 228 F.3d 471, 487 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting Oshiver v. Levin, Fishbein, Sedran & Berman, 38 F.3d 1380, 1392 (3d Cir. 1994)). [*8]

Courts should not toll the statute of limitation if the "antitrust causes of action 'were nonetheless discovered or could with reasonable diligence have been discovered notwithstanding such a concealment and well within the appropriate time for commencing such actions.'" Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F. 2d at 1179 (quoting Pinney Dock and Transport Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d at 1483 (6th Cir. 1988)). The plaintiff must exercise due diligence in investigating his cause of action. He may demonstrate this by either proving that he did in fact exercise reasonable diligence or by proving that a reasonably diligent plaintiff would not have had notice of his potential claim. Forbes, 228 F.3d at 487; In re Mercedes, 157 F.Supp.2d at 373.

DISCUSSION

Defendants argue that the statute of limitations should not be tolled for fraudulent concealment because plaintiffs had "reason to know of a possible claim more than four years before the complaint was filed." (Def.'s Memo. at 21.)

They maintain plaintiffs "cannot prove they 'exercised due diligence in attempting to discover their claim.'" (Id. [*9] at 22.) [3]

To support their claim that the plaintiffs had reason to know of their claim before December 1998, defendants make the following assertions: (1) plaintiffs could and did perceive that SGL Carbon, LLC and UCAR had the same prices for bulk extruded graphite from 1993 to 1996; (2) defendants' customers and certain plaintiffs made statements which demonstrated that before 1998 they had harbored suspicions that SGL Carbon, LLC and UCAR had worked together [*10] to set prices of bulk extruded graphite; (3) plaintiffs had access to public information regarding government investigations and settlements relating to price fixing in the graphite industry by the defendants and other corporations.

A. Similarity of Defendants' Prices

According to defendants, a review of the 1993-1996 price announcements in evidence demonstrates that SGL Carbon LLC and UCAR increased their prices for bulk extruded graphite products by similar amounts during that time. They also offer deposition testimony of officers of the plaintiff corporations that these officers believed that different suppliers of bulk extruded graphite products sold comparable products at identical or similar prices.

Plaintiffs point out that parallel pricing does not, as a matter of antitrust law, establish price fixing. Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1232 (3d Cir. 1993). Courts have held that knowledge of "apparent parallel price increases" is not sufficient to demonstrate that plaintiffs should have known that they had an antitrust cause of action. United Nat'l Records, Inc. v. MCA, Inc., 609 F.Supp. 33, 37 (N.D. Ill., 1984). [*11] See King & King Enterprises v. Champlin Petroleum Co., 657 F.2d 1147, 1156 (10th Cir.1981). The Third Circuit recognizes that it is common for similar products to be similarly priced in a competitive market. See In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litigation, 385 F. 3d 350, 359 (3d. Cir. 2004). In his deposition, a former UCAR executive, Robert Hart, expressed a similar view that parallel pricing is not necessarily a sign of price fixing.

B. Customer Suspicions of Price Fixing

Defendants also present evidence that numerous class members had expressed suspicions that the leading producers of bulk extruded graphite had colluded to fix prices. In 1996, the accounting firm KPMG Peat Marwick LLP ("KPMG") conducted a survey of 32 SGL US bulk extruded graphite customers; seven of these customers expressed to KPMG interviewers some suspicion that the Defendants were fixing prices. Frank Schoch, now the president and co-owner of one the named plaintiffs, Graphite Machining, Inc. ("GMI"), testified in a deposition that he has long been suspicious of pricing practices in the extruded graphite industry. During the 1980s, Mr. Shoch sent several [*12] letters to the United States Department of Justice, which requested that they investigate price fixing in the graphite industry. Matthew Shane, the General Manager of GMI, also testified in a deposition that he had noticed similarities in pricing between competing extruded graphite sellers, and considered it to be suspicious behavior.

As Plaintiffs point out, the customer statements (and KPMG's paraphrases of customer statements) defendants quote from KPMG's survey are unverifiable hearsay. Such hearsay statements would not be admissible at trial, and so are inadmissible to support motions for summary judgment. Indeed, subsequent statements of the interviewees cast the reliability of the survey evidence into doubt. Declarations of two of the seven quoted interviewees indicate

---

[3] Defendants also argue that the action is time barred because the plaintiffs filed suit more than four years after any alleged act of concealment occurred. However, the statute of limitations begins to run when "the plaintiff knows, or should reasonably be expected to know, the concealed facts supporting the cause of action," Forbes, 228 F.3d at 487, not when the last act of concealment occurred. Defendants do not dispute that there exists a material issue of fact as to alleged acts of concealment before June 1997. (Def. Reply at 5.)

that they had no basis for believing that the defendants were engaged in price fixing, and that representatives of SGL Carbon LLC justified increased prices by referring to their own increased costs.

Mr. Schoch's deposition testimony is also of limited value in proving that plaintiffs had notice of the defendants' alleged price fixing. The fact that Mr. Schoch, throughout the 1980s and 1990s, and Mr. Shane, [*13] in 1996 or 1997, suspected that sellers of graphite products were engaging in price fixing is hardly dispositive of the issue of whether plaintiffs had notice before 1998. [4] Mr. Schoch's and Mr. Shane's pre-1998 suspicions of price fixing could lead a reasonable factfinder to determine that a diligent plaintiff would have been noticed before 1998. But that factfinder could also decide that their suspicions do not prove that a reasonably diligent plaintiff would have been on notice of his claim.

[*14] C. Government Investigations and Settlements

Defendants also demonstrate that from 1997 to 1999 public information was available about government investigations of price fixing in the graphite industry and about related settlements into which members of that industry, including certain defendants, entered. Defendants point to numerous industry and government press releases, wire service stories, and newspaper articles that discuss an ongoing Department of Justice investigation into pricing practices in the graphite industry and litigation brought by the government and private parties against corporations in that industry (including certain of the defendants). These documents date from 1997 to 1999. According to defendants, they prove that a reasonably diligent plaintiff would have been aware of a potential cause of action for price fixing in the bulk extruded graphite market before 1998.

The vast majority of the public information relating to antitrust investigations and settlements in the graphite industry concerns graphite electrode pricing or refers to investigations of price fixing by producers of generic "graphite products." All of the settlements related to graphite [*15] electrode pricing. [5] Only one wire service story and two SEC filings state that UCAR had been served subpoenas for documents relating to both graphite electrodes and "bulk graphite." The relevant story and the filings each contain only one sentence that mentions subpoenas relating to bulk graphite.

D. Conclusion

The sum of defendants' evidence is not nearly enough to compel a reasonable jury to find that a diligent plaintiff would have had notice of his claim before December 1998. Defendants have not shown that plaintiffs will be unable to meet their burden for proving fraudulent concealment at trial. A material issue of fact exists, and the Court will not grant summary judgment.

It is on this 4th day of April, 2007,

ORDERED that defendants' motion for summary judgment be DENIED.

s/ William H. Walls

United States Senior District Judge [*16]

---

[4] Plaintiffs state, without direct evidentiary support, that Mr. Schoch only acquired a controlling stake in plaintiff corporation GMI in 2000. The record demonstrates that Mr. Schoch started a graphite machining company in 1978, which he sold to SGL Carbon LLC in 1997. As of 1998, Mr. Schoch owned a company named Mercury Machine and Tool, for which Mr. Shane also worked. The Court is not satisfied that defendants have established that Mr. Shoch and Mr. Shane worked for GMI before 2000. It would be unfair for this Court to impute Mr. Schoch's and Mr. Shane's pre-1997 suspicions, much less notice, of price fixing to GMI.

[5] The plaintiffs in the private graphite electrode civil actions were steelmakers because graphite electrodes are used for certain types of steel production.

End of Document

Rhino Sports v. Sport Court, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Arizona

April 4, 2007, Decided ; April 5, 2007, Filed

CV-02-1815-PHX-JAT (Lead), CV-06-3066-PHX-JAT (Cons)

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25687 *; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,686

Rhino Sports, Inc., an Arizona corporation; and John E. Shaffer, individually, Plaintiffs/Counterdefendants, v. Sport Court, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Defendant/Counterclaimant. Connor Sport Court International, Inc., a California corporation, Plaintiff, vs. Rhino Sports, Inc., an Arizona Corporation, John E. Shaffer, individually, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Sanctions disallowed by, Motion denied by Rhino Sports, Inc. v. Sport Court, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32970 (D. Ariz., May 2, 2007)

Core Terms

counterclaim, amend, antitrust, argues, propose an amendment, settlement agreement, motion to amend, futile, affirmative defense, pleadings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN1[ ] Pleadings, Counterclaims

Leave to file a counterclaim is governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(f). Leave to file an amended answer is governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). Although technically different, the standards for granting each are similar.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN2[ ] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN3[] Judges, Discretionary Powers

While the decision to grant or deny a motion to amend is within the discretion of the district court, Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) declares that leave to amend shall be freely given when justice so requires; this mandate is to be heeded. This liberality is not dependent on whether the amendment will add causes of action or parties. The extremely liberal policy in favor of amendments, however, is subject to some limitations. The United States Supreme Court has established that motions to amend should be granted unless the district court determines that there has been a showing of: (1) undue delay; (2) bad faith or dilatory motives on the part of the movant; (3) repeated failure to cure deficiencies by previous amendments; (4) undue prejudice to the opposing party; or (5) futility of the proposed amendment. Generally, this determination should be performed with all inferences in favor of granting the motion. Significantly, the party opposing amendment bears the burden of showing prejudice, futility, or one of the other permissible reasons for denying a motion to amend.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN4[] Pleadings, Counterclaims

A motion to amend a pleading to assert a counterclaim is governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(f). Under Rule 13(f), when a pleader fails to set up a counterclaim through oversight, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, or when justice requires, the pleader may by leave of court set up the counterclaim by amendment. Like Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a), Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(f) is interpreted liberally to settle all claims in one action. However, leave to file a counterclaim may be denied if the counterclaim is totally lacking in merit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN5[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Under United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit case law, a plaintiff must identify a relevant product market when asserting an antitrust claim. As the Tanaka court explained, a relevant product market encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description. The geographic market extends to the area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternative sources of supply. The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand. The failure to identify a relevant market is a proper ground for dismissing an antitrust claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

In Todd, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit stated that because market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, courts hesitate to grant motions to dismiss for failure to plead a relevant product market. The Todd court explained that to survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, an alleged product market must bear a rational relation to the methodology courts prescribe to define a market for antitrust purposes--analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand--and it must be plausible. The Todd court further explained that cases in which dismissal on the pleadings is appropriate frequently involve either (1) failed attempts to limit a product market to a single brand, franchise, institution, or comparable entity that competes with potential substitutes or (2) failure even to attempt a plausible explanation as to why a market should be limited in a particular way.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

HN7[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides that the Sherman Act does not prohibit persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly.

Counsel: [*1] For Rhino Sports Inc, an Arizona corporation, John E Shaffer, Plaintiffs: Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Daniel S Mason, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Daniel Paul Beeks, David W Dow, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Mohr Hackett Pederson Blakley & Randolph PC, Phoenix, AZ.; George Hamilton King, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chandler, AZ.; John D Everroad, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jamie A Brown, Ray Kendall Harris, Fennemore Craig PC, Phoenix, AZ.

For Connor Sport Court International, Inc., a California corporation, Plaintiff: Gordon K Hill, Peter M deJonge, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Thorpe North & Western LLP, Sandy, UT.; Mark M Bettilyon, Samuel C Straight, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Ray Quinney & Nebeker PC, Salt Lake City, UT.

For Sport Court Inc, a Delaware corporation, Defendant: Arthur B Berger, Mark M Bettilyon, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Ray Quinney & Nebeker PC, Salt Lake City, UT.; David L Stott, Peter M deJonge, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Thorpe North & Western LLP, Sandy, UT.; P Douglas Barr, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stoll Keenon & Park LLP, Lexington, KY.; Robert M Wolesensky, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sport Court Inc, Leander, TX.; Douglas F Behm, Jennings Strouss & Salmon PLC, Phoenix, AZ.

For Sport Court Inc, [*2] Counter Claimant: Arthur B Berger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ray Quinney & Nebeker PC, Salt Lake City, UT.; Douglas F Behm, Jennings Strouss & Salmon PLC, Phoenix, AZ.; P Douglas Barr, Stoll Keenon & Park LLP, Lexington, KY.

For Rhino Sports Inc, John E Shaffer, Counter Defendants: Christopher Thomas Micheletti, Daniel S Mason, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA.; George Hamilton King, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chandler, AZ.; John D Everroad, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jamie A Brown, Ray Kendall Harris, Fennemore Craig PC, Phoenix, AZ.

Judges: James A. Teilborg, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: James A. Teilborg

Opinion

ORDER

Pending before the Court is Defendant Rhino Sports, Inc.'s Motion to Amend (Doc. # 122). [1] Rhino Sports, Inc. and John E. Shaffer (collectively referred to as "Rhino") seek to amend their answer to Connor Sport Court International,

---

[1] The introductory paragraph recites that only "Rhino Sports, Inc. moves to amend its answer." However, considering that the attorneys for Rhino Sports, Inc. also represent John E. Shaffer and that the subsequent reply was filed on behalf of both defendants, the Court assumes Mr. Shaffer joins in the motion to amend.

Inc.'s Complaint by asserting additional affirmative defenses and counterclaims for violations of the Sherman Act and the Arizona Antitrust Law, and for unfair competition.

[*3] II. Legal Standards

Rhino seeks leave to amend pursuant to Rules 13(f) and 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. HN1[] Leave to file a counterclaim is governed by Rule 13(f). Leave to file an amended answer is governed by Rule 15(a). Although technically different, "the standards for granting each are similar and thus will be considered simultaneously." Unispec Development Corp. v. Harwood K. Smith & Partners, 124 F.R.D. 211, 213 (D.Ariz. 1988).

A motion to amend a pleading is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a), which provides:

> HN2[] A party may amend the party's pleading once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is served or, if the pleading is one to which no responsive pleading is permitted and the action has not been placed upon the trial calendar, the party may so amend it at any time within 20 days after it is served. Otherwise a party may amend the party's pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) [*4] . HN3[] While the decision to grant or deny a motion to amend is within the discretion of the district court, "Rule 15(a) declares that leave to amend 'shall be freely given when justice so requires'; this mandate is to be heeded." Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962); see, e.g., Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 330, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971); United States v. SmithKline Beecham, Inc., 245 F.3d 1048, 1052 (9th Cir. 2001) ("A district court's discretion to deny leave to amend . . . is not absolute.") (citing Foman); Cal. Architectural Bldg. Prods., Inc. v. Franciscan Ceramics, Inc., 818 F.2d. 1466, 1472 (9th Cir. 1987). "In exercising its discretion[,] . . . 'a court must be guided by the underlying purpose of Rule 15--to facilitate decision on the merits rather than on the pleadings or technicalities. . . . Thus, 'Rule 15's policy of favoring amendments to pleadings should be applied with extreme liberality.'" Eldridge v. Block, 832 F.2d 1132, 1135 (9th Cir. 1987) (citations omitted); Morongo Band of Mission Indians v. Rose, 893 F.2d 1074, 1079 (9th Cir. 1990) (stating [*5] that leave to amend is generally allowed with "extraordinary liberality"). "This liberality . . . is not dependent on whether the amendment will add causes of action or parties." DCD Programs, LTD. v. Leighton, 833 F.2d 183, 186 (9th Cir. 1987).

The extremely liberal policy in favor of amendments, however, is subject to some limitations. The United States Supreme Court has established that motions to amend should be granted unless the district court determines that there has been a showing of: (1) undue delay; (2) bad faith or dilatory motives on the part of the movant; (3) repeated failure to cure deficiencies by previous amendments; (4) undue prejudice to the opposing party; or (5) futility of the proposed amendment. Foman, 371 U.S. at 182; see SmithKline Beecham, 245 F.3d at 1052; Texaco, Inc. v. Ponsoldt, 939 F.2d 794, 798 (9th Cir. 1991); W. Shoshone Nat'l Council v. Molini, 951 F.2d 200, 204 (9th Cir. 1991); Cal. Architectural Bldg. Prods., 818 F.2d. at 1472; Poling v. Morgan, 829 F.2d 882, 886 (9th Cir. 1987). "Generally, this determination should be performed [*6] with all inferences in favor of granting the motion." Griggs v. Pace Am. Group, Inc., 170 F.3d 877, 880 (9th Cir. 1999) (citing DCD Programs, 833 F.2d at 186). Significantly, "[t]he party opposing amendment bears the burden of showing prejudice," futility, or one of the other permissible reasons for denying a motion to amend. DCD Programs, 833 F.2d at 187; see Richardson v. United States, 841 F.2d 993, 999 (9th Cir. 1988) (stating that leave to amend should be freely given unless opposing party makes "an affirmative showing of either prejudice or bad faith").

HN4[] A motion to amend a pleading to assert a counterclaim is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(f). Under Rule 13(f), "[w]hen a pleader fails to set up a counterclaim through oversight, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, or when justice requires, the pleader may by leave of court set up the counterclaim by amendment." Like Rule 15(a), Rule 13(f) is interpreted liberally to settle all claims in one action. Unispec Development Corp., 124 F.R.D. at 213 (citing 2001, Inc. v. Novaglas Corp., 60 F.R.D. 649 (E.D.N.Y. 1973)). [*7]

However, leave to file a counterclaim may be denied if the counterclaim "is totally lacking in merit." Id. (citing United Brick & Clay Workers v. Hydraulic Press Brick Co., 371 F.Supp. 818 (S.D.Mo. 1974).

Like the court in Unispec Development Corp., this Court "will consider whether the proposed amendment and counterclaim are meritorious, i.e., survive the 'futility' test and whether . . . [the] motion constitutes bad faith, dilatory action or would cause undue delay or prejudice." Id. at 214.

II. Discussion

In opposition to Rhino's motion to amend, Connor Sport Court International, Inc. ("Sport Court") first argues that the proposed amendment is futile because Rhino released the affirmative defenses and counterclaims in whole or in part pursuant to the parties' prior settlement agreement dated March 9, 2004. The settlement agreement provides, in part, that the parties:

> completely release, acquit, and forever discharge one another … from and against any and all claims, demands, rights, obligations, debts, expenses, liabilities, defenses, or causes of action, whether or not alleged, recited, described, or currently asserted, [*8] whether known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, fixed or contingent, which they have, may have, or could assert against the other.

Sport Court notes that Rhino's proposed amendment seeks redress for anti-competitive acts within the past four years and that the settlement agreement was entered into three years ago. According to Sport Court, this shows that Rhino is improperly seeking to assert claims and defenses for alleged conduct that occurred prior to the settlement agreement and which conduct was subject to release under the terms of the agreement. In contrast, Rhino argues that, at most, the settlement agreement bars claims that may have existed before March 9, 2004, and that it is entitled to assert claims against Sport Court based on conduct occurring thereafter. Rhino further avers that the affirmative defenses and counterclaims rely only on conduct occurring after March 9, 2004. At this stage of the proceedings, and considering Rhino's representations concerning the timing of the conduct made subject of the proposed affirmative defenses and counterclaims, the Court is unable to conclude, as Sport Court requests, that the proposed amendment is futile because of the [*9] March 9, 2004, settlement agreement.

Second, Sport Court argues that the proposed amendment is untimely because Rhino was aware of the facts underlying its present antitrust counterclaims as evidenced by Rhino's answer, filed in December 2002, to Sport Court's counterclaim. In contrast, Rhino argues that the proposed amendment is timely because Sport Court's complaint was filed on December 21, 2006, and Rhino filed its original answer on February 7, 2007, less than two months ago. Rhino further argues that the proposed amendment is timely because the affirmative defenses and counterclaims rely only on conduct occurring after March 9, 2004, which conduct was not the subject of the prior proceedings between the parties. The Court agrees with Rhino, finding that the proposed amendment, which Rhino represents relates to conduct occurring after the March 9, 2004, settlement agreement, is not untimely.

Third, Sport Court argues that the proposed antitrust counterclaim fails to allege and define a proper antitrust "product market" as a matter of law. HN5[] Under Ninth Circuit case law, Plaintiff must identify a relevant product market when asserting an antitrust claim. Tanaka v. University of Southern California, 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001). [*10] As the Tanaka court explained, a relevant product market:

> encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description. The geographic market extends to the "'area of effective competition' … where buyers can turn for alternative sources of supply." The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand.

Id. (quoting Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hospital, 861 F.2d 1440, 1446 (9th Cir. 1988)). The failure "to identify a relevant market is a proper ground for dismissing" an antitrust claim. Id. (citing Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1105 (9th Cir. 1999)).

Sport Court contends that Rhino has failed to reference or analyze the rule of "reasonable interchangeability" or explain why substitute products, such as concrete, wood, rubber, vinyl or painted acrylic, are not included in the narrow product market of recreational flooring. Sport Court further contends that there is "no allegation concerning cross-elasticity of demand or other consumer considerations." Thus, Sport Court concludes that "Rhino's [*11] relevant product market allegation fails to satisfy the required pleading standards as a matter of law."

Countering, Rhino quotes Twombly v. Bell Atlantic Corp., 425 F.3d 99, 108 (2nd Cir. 2005), which rejected the argument "that antitrust complaints merit a more rigorous pleading standard, whether because of their typical complexity and sometime amorphous nature, or because of the related extraordinary burdens that litigation beyond the pleading stage may place on defendants and the courts." Further, Rhino quotes Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 199-200 (2nd Cir. 2001), HN6[] which stated that "[b]ecause market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, courts hesitate to grant motions to dismiss for failure to plead a relevant product market." As the Todd court explained: "To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, an alleged product market must bear a 'rational relation to the methodology courts prescribe to define a market for antitrust purposes - analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand . . . and it must be 'plausible.'" Todd, 275 F.3d at 200 (citations omitted). The Todd court [*12] further explained:

> Cases in which dismissal on the pleadings is appropriate frequently involve either (1) failed attempts to limit a product market to a single brand, franchise, institution, or comparable entity that competes with potential substitutes or (2) failure even to attempt a plausible explanation as to why a market should be limited in a particular way.

Id. (citations omitted).

Based on the foregoing case law, and the federal notice pleading standards, Rhino argues that it has adequately alleged a relevant product market, that being "indoor and outdoor modular recreational flooring." Rhino also argues that Sport Court's position, that the product definition could include other alternative recreational substitutes such as concrete, wood, rubber, vinyl or painted acrylic, involves questions of fact and is inconsistent with the admissions of Sport Court's former president in these proceedings. In other words, Rhino argues that the relevant product market allegation is the same market that Sport Court's former president described and that it is "disingenuous" for Sport Court to now complain that the relevant product market is inadequately pleaded. The Court [*13] agrees with Rhino and finds that the relevant product market allegation in the proposed amendment is adequately pleaded. [2]

Finally, Sport Court argues that the proposed antitrust counterclaim violates HN7[] the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which provides that "the Sherman Act does not prohibit … persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly." Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia, 508 U.S. 49, 56, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) (quoting Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961)). [*14] Rhino counters that its antitrust counterclaim is not about efforts to influence government action; instead the Rhino states that the counterclaim concerns abusive contractual relations, improper economic interference, improper harassment of dealers and distributors, industrial espionage, and other alleged unlawful activities perpetrated with the intent to maintain a monopoly. The Court agrees, finding that the proposed antitrust counterclaim is not based on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that Sport Court has failed to show that the proposed amended answer and counterclaim will cause undue delay, is being made in bad faith or with a dilatory motive, will cause undue prejudice to Sport Court, or is futile.

Accordingly,

---

[2] In addition, Sport Court's argument that Rhino's antitrust claim faces a high hurdle and is rarely successful, which Sport Court argues highlights the importance of requiring precise and accurate allegations, is insufficient to allow a finding that the antitrust claim cannot proceed as a matter of law at this stage of the proceedings.

IT IS ORDERED that Defendant Rhino Sports, Inc.'s Motion to Amend (Doc. # 122) is GRANTED;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Court shall file the lodged amended answer and counterclaim (Doc. # 123) as of the date of this Order.

DATED this 4th day of April, 2007.

James A. Teilborg

United States District Judge

Bartholomew v. Bail Bonds Unlimited, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

April 5, 2007, Decided ; April 5, 2007, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 05-4165 SECTION K(2)

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25506 *; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,663

DENISE BARTHOLOMEW VERSUS BAIL BONDS UNLIMITED, INC., ET AL

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part, Dismissed by Bartholemew v. Bail Bonds Unlimited, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70918 (E.D. La., Sept. 17, 2008)

Prior History: Bartholomew v. Bail Bonds Unlimited, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22980 (E.D. La., Mar. 28, 2007)

Core Terms

antitrust, sham exception, Sherman Act, conspiracy, Bail, cause of action, anti trust law, anticompetitive, shields

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint must be liberally construed in favor of the plaintiff, and all facts pleaded in the original complaint must be taken as true. A district court may not dismiss a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The question therefore is whether in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and with every doubt resolved in his behalf, the complaint states any valid claim for relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Defenses

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination or conspiracy that unreasonably restrains interstate for foreign trade. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine instructs that the federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government. That doctrine instructs that the Sherman and Clayton Acts do not reach political activities, no matter how nefarious those activities may be. The Noerr-Pennington applies to private parties seeking government action. The Sherman Act cannot be predicated upon attempts to influence the passage of enforcement of laws. The United States Supreme Court has held that the Sherman Act does not prohibit two or more persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or monopoly. The Court has extended Noerr, stating that, Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN3[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The United States Supreme Court has definitively stated that a "conspiracy exception" to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine must be rejected. Overall, Noerr-Pennington stands for the proposition that any type of conspiracy exception would have nothing to do with the policies of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

As a general rule, lobbying and other efforts to obtain legislative, executive, judicial and quasi-judicial actions do not violate the antitrust laws. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN5[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine does have one exception: it does not shield petitioning activity that is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. Under this sham exception, if the petitioner seeks to use the governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process-as an anticompetitive weapon, the petitioning activity will not be protected from antitrust liability. The sham exception governs situations in which the petitioner's "activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable governmental action. The absence of a genuine desire for governmental action may be evidenced by a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims indicating that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused.

Counsel: [*1] For Denise Bartholomew doing business as A+ Bail Bond of Louisiana, Plaintiff: Samuel S. Dalton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Samuel S. Dalton, Attorney at Law, Jefferson, LA; Raylyn R. Beevers, Steven Michael Mauterer, Wiley J. Beevers, Beevers & Beevers, LLP, Gretna, LA.

For Bail Bonds Unlimited, Inc. also known as BBU, Louis M Marcotte, III, Lori M Marcotte, Marcotte, Inc., Defendants: Richard W. Westling, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Office of Richard W. Westling, LLC, New Orleans, LA.

Lt. Guy Crosby, individually and in his official capacity, Defendant, Pro se, Belle Chasse, LA.

Capt. William Giangrosso, individually and in his official capacity, Defendant, Pro se, Fort Worth, TX.

For Sheriff Harry Lee, individually and in his official capacities, Defendant: Daniel Rault Martiny, LEAD ATTORNEY, Martiny & Associates, Metairie, LA; Franz L. Zibilich, Martiny & Associates, LLC, Metairie, LA.

For Bankers Insurance Company, erroneously sued as Bankers Insurance Company of Florida, Defendant: Michael Hudson Ellis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael H. Ellis, Attorney at Law, Metairie, LA; Preston Lee Hayes, Chehardy, Sherman, Ellis, Breslin, Murray, Recile & Griffith, Metairie, LA.

Judges: STANWOOD [*2] R. DUVAL, JR., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: STANWOOD R. DUVAL, JR.

Opinion

The defendant, Bail Bonds Unlimited, Inc., Marcotte Inc., Louis M. Marcotte, III, and Lori Marcotte ("the Marcotte Defendants"), filed a Motion to Dismiss the Antitrust Claims Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) and (6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (Rec. Doc. 56), which came before the Court for hearing on February 21, 2007. Oral argument was waived by the parties and the matter was taken under submission on the briefs only. The Court, having considered the record, the evidence submitted, the law and applicable jurisprudence, is fully advised in the premises and ready to rule.

ORDER AND REASONS

I. BACKGROUND

This suit arises out of a cause of action filed by plaintiff, who alleges civil rights violations, civil RICO claims, Sherman Anti-Trust violations, and pendent state law causes of action centering around the activities of the defendants Louis and Lori Marcotte, and their bail bonding company, Bail Bonds Unlimited ("BBU"). On December 6, 2006, the Marcotte Defendants filed a motion seeking dismissal of the Civil Rights Act and state law claims based on the Court's August 30, 2006 ruling [*3] that these claims had prescribed as to another defendant. The present motion seeks dismissal of Plaintiff's antitrust claims.

The Plaintiff claims that the Marcotte Defendants violated federal antitrust law, particularly Section 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, in that all defendants engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize the commercial bail bond business in Jefferson Parish, Louisiana. (Rec. Doc. 49, Complaint, P 1 & 10-17). Specifically, the complaint alleges that "the 'roll out' scheme was created by the Racketeering Enterprise, Marcotte III, BBU and Bankers participation therein, for the sole purposes of maximizing BBU's profits, hindering oppressing and suppressing BBU's competition, including but not limited to the competition from Plaintiff, in the Bail Bond Business within Jefferson Parish, Louisiana…" (Rec. Doc. 56). These violations involved a conspiracy with a variety of government actors, including Sheriff's Deputies and Judges, who were unlawfully influenced, including through bribery, to treat the Marcotte Defendants' bail bond business favorably and to the detriment of the plaintiff (Rec. Doc. 49). The Complaint alleges that "the Racketeering Enterprise then ordered [*4] the authoritative staff of the Jefferson Parish Jail at Gretna, Louisiana, which it controlled through bribes, gifts and favors . . . to allow the Racketerring Enterprise and BBU to take custody of all the arresters whose bonds had been set at $ 2500 or less, each morning (Rec. Doc. 56).

The Marcotte Defendants, however, seek dismissal of the antitrust causes of action based on the rules of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which provides immunity from the antitrust laws. This doctrine shields the actions of private individuals seeking anticompetitive action from the government. In Plaintiff's opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss, plaintiff claims that the defendant's activities alleged in the Complaint are not protected by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, rather they fall within the "sham exception" to that Doctrine.

II. LAW AND ANALYSIS OF THE COURT

A. Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim

HN1[] In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the complaint must be liberally construed in favor of the plaintiff, and all facts pleaded in the original complaint must be taken as true. Campbell v. Wells Fargo Bank, 781 F.2d 440, 442 (5th Cir. 1980). [*5] A district court may not dismiss a complaint under FRCP 12(b)(6) "unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 101-102, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957); Blackburn v. Marshall, 42 F.3d 925, 931 (5th Cir. 1995). The Fifth Circuit defines this strict standard as, "The question therefore is whether in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and with every doubt resolved in his behalf, the complaint states any valid claim for relief." Lowrey v. Texas A&M University System, 117 F.3d 242 (5th Cir. 1997), citing 5 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1357, at 601 (1969).

Plaintiff asserts that the Marcotte Defendants, and their Co-Defendants violated federal antitrust and laws by when they acted as a Criminal RICO enterprise for the sole purpose of maintaining a monopoly within the Parish of Jefferson (Rec. Doc. 56). Plaintiff claims they were prevented from having access to the Louisiana Judiciary by the actions of the Defendants in [*6] concert with Official Public Custodians. The Marcotte Defendants contend that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields them from liability for the alleged violations of the Sherman Act and the antitrust causes of action in the complaint.

B. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" that unreasonably restrains interstate for foreign trade. See 15 U.S.C. § 1 (West 2000). The Noerr-Pennington doctrine instructs that the federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government. Astoria Entertainment, Inc. v. Edwards, 159 F.Supp.2d 303, 320 (E.D. La. 2001) (citing City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 379-380, 111 S.Ct. at 1345-54 (1991). That doctrine, distilled from two Supreme Court cases, and based upon political and constitutional concerns, instructs that the Sherman and Clayton Acts do not reach political activities, no matter how nefarious those activities may be. Id. The Noerr-Pennington applies to private parties seeking government [*7] action. Id. In Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 81 S.Ct. 523, 5 L.Ed.2d 464 (1961), the Supreme Court relied upon basic statutory construction and constitutional theory to find that the Sherman Act cannot be predicated upon attempts to influence the passage of enforcement of laws. Id. (citing Eastern, 365 U.S. at 136, 81 S.Ct. at 528). The Court held that "the Sherman Act does not prohibit two or more persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or monopoly." Id. In United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S.Ct. 1585, 14 L.Ed.2d 626 (1965), a case involving attempts to influence the Secretary of Labor to set a higher minimum wage, the Court extended Noerr, stating that, "Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purposes." Id. (citing Pennington, 381 U.S. at 670, 85 S.Ct. 1585, 85 S.Ct. at 1593.) Pennington's significance lies in the fact [*8] that it entailed more than the general lobbying activity seen in Noerr, but immunized lobbying directly to executive officials with commercial functions. Id. at 321.

Noerr-Pennington's reach was magnified by the Court in City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382,, 499 U.S. 365, 111 S.Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991), in that the Court held no conspiracy exception existed for Noerr-Pennington, even one limited to situations involving "some element of unlawfulness." Id. (citing Omni at 499 U.S. at 383, 111 S.Ct. at 1356.) By stating that there is no conspiracy exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the Supreme Court overruled those prior cases, such as Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 108 S.Ct. 1931, 100 L.Ed.2d 497 (1988), which stated that corrupt practices in connection with lobbying activities stripped an actor's immunity. Id. Indeed, HN3[] the Court definitively stated that "[g]iving full consideration to this matter for the first time, we conclude that a "conspiracy exception" to Noerr must be rejected." Id. Overall, Noerr-Pennington stands for the proposition that any type [*9] of conspiracy exception would have nothing to do with the policies of the antitrust laws." Id.

The result of these cases is that, HN4[] as a general rule, lobbying and other efforts to obtain legislative, executive, judicial and quasi-judicial actions do not violate the antitrust laws. Id. (See Acoustic Systems v. Wenger Corp., 207 F.3d 287 (5th Cir.2000); See also Bayou Fleet, Inc. v. Alexander, 234 F.3d 852, 862 (5th Cir.2000) (citations omitted)). Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose." Id. (citing Omni, 499 U.S. at 380, 111 S.Ct. at 1354).

However, HN5[] the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does have one exception: it does not shield petitioning activity that is "a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Livingston Downs Racing Ass'n v. Jefferson Downs, Corp., 192 F.Supp.2d 519, 530 (M.D. La.2001) (citing Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144). Under this sham exception, if the petitioner seeks "to use the governmental process-as opposed [*10] to the outcome of that process-as an anticompetitive weapon," the petitioning activity will not be protected from antitrust liability. Id.; see also Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). The sham exception governs situations in which the petitioner's "activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable governmental action." See Allied Tube & Conduit Corp., 486 U.S. 492, 500 n.4, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988). The absence of a genuine desire for governmental action may be evidenced by "a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims" indicating that "the administrative and judicial processes have been abused." Livingston, 192 F.Supp.2d at 530 (citing California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972)).

In her opposition, Plaintiff only mentions the "sham exception," but fails to apply it to the facts of this case (Rec. Doc. 56). Plaintiff defines defendant's activities and states that once those factual allegations are taken as true, "it becomes clear" the sham exception applies. However, the Plaintiff fails show how defendant's activities were not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable [*11] governmental action. The Plaintiff asserts the Marcotte Defendants controlled the staff of the Jefferson Parish Jail through "bribes, gifts and favors," and they did this in order to allow them to take custody of all the arresters whose bonds had been set at $ 2500 or less, each morning. Clearly, the Defendants' actions represent a good-faith effort to petition the Government for favorable action. The author of the memorandum even states that he "is not sure that the sham exception applies to the foregoing activities" (Rec. Doc. 56).

The sham exception will apply if the petition seeks to use the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome, as an anticompetitive weapon. See Livingston, 192 F.Supp.2d at 530. Here, the Plaintiff claims that the "roll out" scheme was created "for the sole purposes of maximizing BBU's profits, hindering, oppressing and suppressing BBU's competition…" Therefore, the Marcotte Defendants clearly sought to use the outcome of maximizing their profits and hindering competition, as an anticompetitive weapon. They were not merely using the governmental process as a method which, in itself, would injure plaintiff. This Court finds that the [*12] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine applies to the facts of this case, and the Marcotte Defendants are immune from Sherman Act liability. Therefore, the antitrust causes of action in the complaint should be dismissed.

For the foregoing reasons,

IT IS ORDERED that the Defendant's Motion to Dismiss the Antitrust Claims is hereby GRANTED.

New Orleans, Louisiana, this 5th day of April, 2007

STANWOOD R. DUVAL, JR.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

[In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig.]

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

April 5, 2007, Decided

MDL Docket No. 1663, Civ. No. 04-5184 (GEB), Civ. No. 05-1079 (GEB)

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25633 *

IN RE INSURANCE BROKERAGE ANTITRUST LITIGATION; IN RE EMPLOYEE-BENEFIT INSURANCE BROKERAGE ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates To: ALL ACTIONS

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Subsequent History: Appeal filed, 03/19/2007

Application granted by, Costs and fees proceeding at [In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40729 (D.N.J., June 5, 2007)]

Prior History: [In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25632 (D.N.J., Apr. 5, 2007)]

Disposition: Defendants' motion to dismiss granted, with final opportunity for Plaintiffs to amend.

Core Terms

conspiracy, brokers, insurers, contingent, Particularized, plaintiff's claim, allegations, Plaintiffs', Antitrust, horizontal, customers, broker-centered, global, carriers, alleged conspiracy, anticompetitive, Sherman Act, Consolidated, allocate, commissions, markets, conspirators, commission agreement, motion to dismiss, per se violation, Defendants', renewals, bid, partner, bid-rigging

Counsel: For EAGLE PRODUCTS, INC., Movant: HOWARD J. SEDRAN, LEVIN, FISHBEIN, SEDRAN & BERMAN, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For STEPHEN LEWIS, Plaintiff: ADAM J LEVITT, FRED TAYLOR ISQUITH, WOLF HALDENSTEIN ADLER FREEMAN & HERTZ LLP, CHICAGO, IL; JAYNE ARNOLD GOLDSTEIN, MAGER & GOLDSTEIN LLP, CORAL SPRINGS, FL; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MARK C. RIFKIN, WOLF, HALDENSTEIN, ADLER, FREEMAN & HERZ, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For DIANE PRUESS, Plaintiff: ADAM J LEVITT, FRED TAYLOR ISQUITH, MARY JANE EDELSTEIN FAIT, WOLF HALDENSTEIN ADLER FREEMAN & HERTZ LLP, CHICAGO, IL; JAYNE ARNOLD GOLDSTEIN, MAGER & GOLDSTEIN LLP, CORAL SPRINGS, FL; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MARK C. RIFKIN, WOLF, HALDENSTEIN, ADLER, FREEMAN & HERZ, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For OPTICARE HEALTH SYSTEMS INC, (CIVIL 05-1168), Plaintiff: EDITH M. KALLAS, MILBERG, WEISS, BERSHAD & SCHULMAN, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOE R. WHATLEY, CHARLENE P. FORD, OTHNI J. LATHRAM, RICHARD P. ROUCO, WHATLEY, DRAKE, LLC, BIRMINGHAM, AL; JOHN J. STOIA, MARY LYNNE CALKINS, [*2] [*2] RACHEL LYNN JENSEN, THEODORE JOSEPH PINTAR, LERACH, COUGHLIN, STOIA, GELLER, RUDMAN & ROBBINS, LLP, SAN DIEGO, CA; JOSEPH P. GUGLIELMO, LILI R. SABO, WHATLEY

DRAKE & KALLAS, NEW YORK, NY; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; BONNY ELAINE SWEENEY, JAMES DANIEL MCNAMARA, LERACH COUGHLIN STOIA GELLER RUDMAN & ROBBINS, SAN DIEGO, CA; PETER S. PEARLMAN, COHN, LIFLAND, PEARLMAN, HERRMANN & KNOPF, LLP, SADDLE BROOK, NJ.

For MARYANN WAXMAN, (CIVIL 05-1079), Plaintiff: KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; LILI R. SABO, WHATLEY DRAKE & KALLAS, NEW YORK, NY; PETER S. PEARLMAN, COHN, LIFLAND, PEARLMAN, HERRMANN & KNOPF, LLP, SADDLE BROOK, NJ.

For SUNBURST HOSPITALITY CORPORATION, (CIVIL 04-5742), Plaintiff: ELLEN MERIWETHER, MELODY FORRESTER, MICHAEL STEVEN TARRINGER, TIMOTHY FRASER, BRYAN L. CLOBES, MILLER, FAUCHER & CAFFERTY, LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For GOLDEN GATE BRIDGE, HIGHWAY AND TRANSPORTATION DISTRICT, [*3] [*3] REDWOOD OIL CO, Plaintiffs: FREDERICK P. FURTH, MICHAEL P. LEHMANN, THOMAS P. DOVE, JON T. KING, THE FURTH FIRM LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; JULIO J. RAMOS, THE FURTH FIRM LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, NJ.

For SHELL VACATIONS LLC, Plaintiff: DOUGLAS A. MILLEN, STEVEN A. KANNER, WILLIAM HENRY LONDON, MUCH, SHELIST, FREED, DENENBERG, AMENT & RUBENSTEIN, PC, CHICAGO, IL; FREDERICK P. FURTH, MICHAEL P. LEHMANN, THOMAS P. DOVE, JON T. KING, THE FURTH FIRM LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; JULIO J. RAMOS, THE FURTH FIRM LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, NJ.

For BAYOU STEEL CORP, (CIVIL NO. 05-1800), Plaintiff: AUSTIN B COHEN, HOWARD J. SEDRAN, LEVIN, FISHBEIN, SEDRAN & BERMAN, PHILADELPHIA, PA; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For REDWOOD OIL COMPANY, (CIVIL NO. 05-1798), Plaintiff: JAMES S. SHEDDEN, LAWRENCE WILEY SCHAD, MICHAEL S HILICKI, TONY KIM, BEELER, SCHAD & DIAMOND, PC, CHICAGO, IL; KENNETH [*4] I. [*4] TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; W. TIMOTHY NEEDHAM, JANSSEN MALLOY NEEDHAM MORRISON REINHOLTSEN & CROWLEY, EUREKA, CA.

For CLEAR LAM PACKAGING INC, (CIVIL 05-1797), Plaintiff: KATHLEEN CURRIE CHAVEZ, CHAVEZ LAW FIRM, GENEVA, IL; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT M. FOOTE, FOOTE, MEYERS, MIELKE & FLOWERS, GENEVA, IL; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For DR ROBERT H KIMBALL, (CIVIL 05-2374), Plaintiff: JAMES L REED, TRAVIS SCOTT CRABTREE, LOOPER REED & MCGRAW, HOUSTON, TX; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For DAVID BOROS, (CIVIL NO. 05-1793), Plaintiff: CADIO ZIRPOLI, GEOFFREY C. RUSHING, SAVERI & SAVERI, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; GUIDO SAVERI, RICHARD ALEXANDER SAVERI, SAVERI & SAVERI, INC., SAN FRANCISCO, CA; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For SHELDON LANGENDORF, (CIVIL 05-3284), ESTELLE LANGENDORF, (CIVIL 05-3284), Plaintiffs: KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; LARRY R. DRURY, CHICAGO, IL; ROBERT ANDREW [*5] SANTILLO, [*5] TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For Cellect, LLC, City of Stamford, Gateway Club Apartments, Ltd., Michigan Multi-King Corp., GLENN SINGER, The Enclave, LLC, The Omni Group of Companies, Plaintiffs: KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For COMCAR INDUSTRIES, INC., Plaintiff: KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; JOSEPH PRESTON STROM, STROM LAW FIRM LLC, COLUMBIA, SC US; MARIO ANTHONY PACELLA, STROM LAW FIRM LLP, COLUMBIA, SC US.

For ROBERT MULCAHY, Plaintiff: ELLEN MERIWETHER, MELODY FORRESTER, MICHAEL STEVEN TARRINGER, MILLER, FAUCHER & CAFFERTY, LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For SIGNUM LLC, (CIVIL NO. 05-4047), Plaintiff: ARTHUR CAMDEN LEWIS, LEWIS, BABCOCK & HAWKINS, LLP, COLUMBIA, SC; JAMES M. GRIFFIN, JAMES M. GRIFFIN LAW OFFICE, COLUMBIA, SC; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; RICHARD A HARPOOTLIAN, COLUMBIA, SC; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For [*6] KLLM INC, (CIVIL [*6] NO. 05-4046), Plaintiff: ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; ROY H. LIDDELL, THOMAS M. LOUIS, JULIE C. SKIPPER, WELLS, MARBLE & HURST, PLLC, JACKSON, MS.

For FORTUNE BRANDS INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-4137), Plaintiff: ERNEST SUMMERS, III, LISA COLLEEN SULLIVAN, HOWREY, SIMON, ARNOLD & WHITE, LLP, CHICAGO, IL US; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US; THOMAS LOUIS RUFFNER, HOWREY LLP, CHICAGO, IL US.

For SLAY INDUSTRIES, (CIVIL NUMBER 05-5698), Plaintiff: JEFFREY J. LOWE, ST. LOUIS, MO; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MICHAEL J. FLANNERY, CAREY & DANIS, ST. LOUIS, MO; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For SLAY TRANSPORTATION CO INC, (CIVIL NUMBER 05-5698), Plaintiff: JEFFREY J. LOWE, ST. LOUIS, MO; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For PALM TREE COMPUTERS SYSTEMS INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-5238), DELTA RESEARCH INSTITUTE INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-5238), Plaintiffs: DAVID HUGHES HARRIS, GOLDSTEIN, BUCKLEY, CECHMAN, RICE [*7] & PURTZ, PA, FORT MYERS, [*7] FL; KENNETH G. GILMAN, GILMAN & PASTOR, LLP, BOSTON, MA; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For EMERSON ELECTRIC CO., (CIVIL NO. 05-5697), Plaintiff: DOROTHY L. WHITE-COLEMAN, WHITE, COLEMAN & ASOCIATES, LLC, ST. LOUIS, MO US; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For DELTA PRIDE CATFISH INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-5290), Plaintiff: JULIE C. SKIPPER, ROY H. LIDDELL, WELLS, MARBLE & HURST, PLLC, JACKSON, MS; KENNETH I. TRUJILLO, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For CAMERON OFFSHORE BOATS INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-5696), Plaintiff: H. ALAN MCCALL, STOCKWELL SIEVERT, LAKE CHARLES, LA US; JOSEPH N. KRAVEC, SPECTER & SPECTER, PITTSBURG, PA US; ROBERT ANDREW SANTILLO, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For Tri-State Container Corp., Plaintiff: NATALIE FINKELMAN BENNETT, SHEPHERD, FINKELMAN, MILLER & SHAH, LLC, COLLINGSWOOD, NJ.

Connecticut Spring & Stamp Co., Plaintiff, Pro se.

For BELMONT HOLDINGS CORP., PLAINTIFF [*8] IN CIV. 05-5533, Plaintiff: [*8] CHRISTINA DONATO SALER, KOHN SWIFT & GRAF, PHILADELPHIA, PA US.

For AMERICAN STANDARD, INC., PLAINTIFF FROM DOCKET 05-4573, AMERICAN STANDARD COMPANIES, INC., PLAINTIFF IN DOCKET 05-4573, Plaintiffs: BARBARA T. SICALIDES, PEPPER, HAMILTON, PHILADELPHIA, PA; JOANNA J. CLINE, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, CHERRY HILL, NJ.

For SINCLAIR OIL CORP, Plaintiff in 06-3844, Plaintiff: GEORGE M. HALEY, J. ANDREW SJOBLOM, E. BLAINE RAWSON, HOLME ROBERTS & OWEN, SALT LAKE CITY, UT US.

AIR LIQUIDE AMERICA L.P., Plaintiff, Pro se.

AIR LIQUIDE LARGE INDUSTRIES U.S. LP, Plaintiff, Pro se.

AIR LIQUIDE USA LLC, Plaintiff, Pro se.

AL America Holdings, LLC, Plaintiff, Pro se.

American Air Liquide Holdings, Inc., Plaintiff, Pro se.

American Air Liquide, Inc., Plaintiff, Pro se.

American Plumbing and Mechanical, Inc., Plaintiff, Pro se.

Huntsman Advance Materials LLC, Plaintiff, Pro se.

HUNTSMAN CORPORATION, Plaintiff, Pro se.

Huntsman Holdings, LLC, Plaintiff, Pro se.

HUNTSMAN LLC, Plaintiff, Pro se.

International Risk Insurance Company, Plaintiff, Pro se.

John Baird, Plaintiff, Pro se. [*9].

PLAINT [*9] CORPORATION, Plaintiff, Pro se.

For MARK TOBEY, KIM VAN WINKLE, Intervenor Plaintiffs: GREGG ABBOTT, AUSTIN, TX US.

For MARSH & MCLENNAN COMPANIES, INC., Defendant: ANDREW T. BERRY, GARY N. WILCOX, MCCARTER & ENGLISH, LLP, NEWARK, NJ; C. LARRY CORBO, III, CAROLE ELAINE HOWARD, JACKSON WALKER LLP, HOUSTON, TX; CHRISTOPHER J. ST. JEANOS, JOHN ROBERT OLLER, MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL P. JORDAN, P. RYAN BECKETT, BUTLER, SNOW, O'MARA, STEVENS & CANNADA, PLLC, JACKSON, MS US; FREDERICK BARTLETT WULFF, SR, JACKSON WALKER LLP, DALLAS, TX; GREGORY K. CONWAY, WILLKIE, FARR & GALLAGHER, WASHINGTON, DC US; KEVIN F HORMUTH, KEVIN F. O'MALLEY, GREENSFELDER & HEMKER, ST LOUIS, MO US; PHILIP RITCHEY SIMS, WILLIAM F. GRACE, CHAFFE MCCALL, NEW ORLEANS, LA US.

For MARSH INC., Defendant: ANDREW T. BERRY, GARY N. WILCOX, MCCARTER & ENGLISH, LLP, NEWARK, NJ; CAROLE ELAINE HOWARD, JACKSON WALKER LLP, HOUSTON, TX; CHRISTOPHER J. ST. JEANOS, JOHN ROBERT OLLER, MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL P. JORDAN, P. RYAN BECKETT, BUTLER, SNOW, O'MARA, STEVENS & CANNADA, PLLC, JACKSON, MS US; DAVID C [*10] GUSTMAN, [*10] JILL CHRISTINE ANDERSON, FREEBORN & PETERS, CHICAGO, IL US; FREDERICK BARTLETT WULFF, SR, JACKSON WALKER LLP, DALLAS, TX; KEVIN F HORMUTH, KEVIN F. O'MALLEY, GREENSFELDER & HEMKER, ST LOUIS, MO US.

For MARSH USA INC., Defendant: ANDREW T. BERRY, GARY N. WILCOX, MCCARTER & ENGLISH, LLP, NEWARK, NJ; C. LARRY CORBO, III, CAROLE ELAINE HOWARD, JACKSON WALKER LLP, HOUSTON, TX; CHRISTOPHER J. ST. JEANOS, JOHN ROBERT OLLER, MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL P. JORDAN, P. RYAN BECKETT, BUTLER, SNOW, O'MARA, STEVENS & CANNADA, PLLC, JACKSON, MS US; FREDERICK BARTLETT WULFF, SR, JACKSON WALKER LLP, DALLAS, TX; GREGORY K. CONWAY, WILLKIE, FARR & GALLAGHER, WASHINGTON, DC US; KEVIN F HORMUTH, KEVIN F. O'MALLEY, GREENSFELDER & HEMKER, ST LOUIS, MO US; PHILIP RITCHEY SIMS, WILLIAM F. GRACE, CHAFFE MCCALL, NEW ORLEANS, LA US; CHRISTOPHER J. ST. JEANOS, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL P. JORDAN, BUTLER, SNOW, O'MARA, STEVENS & CANNADA, PLLC, JACKSON, MS US; DAVID C GUSTMAN, FREEBORN & PETERS, CHICAGO, IL US; GREGORY K. CONWAY, WILLKIE, FARR & GALLAGHER, WASHINGTON, DC US; JILL CHRISTINE ANDERSON, FREEBORN & PETERS, CHICAGO, IL [*11] [*11] US; JOHN ROBERT OLLER, MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US; KEVIN F HORMUTH, KEVIN F. O'MALLEY, GREENSFELDER & HEMKER, ST LOUIS, MO US; P. RYAN BECKETT, BUTLER, SNOW, O'MARA, STEVENS & CANNADA, PLLC, JACKSON, MS US; PHILIP RITCHEY SIMS, WILLIAM F. GRACE, CHAFFE MCCALL, NEW ORLEANS, LA US.

For SEABURY & SMITH, INC., DOING BUSINESS AS MARSH ASVANTAGE AMERICA, Defendant: MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US.

For B&T CORPORATION, (CIVIL 05-1168), BB&T INSURANCE SERVICES, INC., (CIVIL 05-1168), Defendants: ALAN L. BRIGGS, JAMES PAUL WEHNER, JR., AMY LYNN BROWN, HOLLY BROOKE JAMES, SQUIRE, SAMDERS & DEMPSEY, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC US; HOWARD J.C. NICOLS, SQUIRE, SANDERS & DEMPSEY, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JACK LOUIS WUERKER, SQUIRE SANDERS & DEMPSEY, VIENNA, VA US.

For BRANCH BANKING & TRUST COMPANY, (CIVIL 05-1168), Defendant: ALAN L. BRIGGS, JAMES PAUL WEHNER, JR., AMY LYNN BROWN, SQUIRE, SAMDERS & DEMPSEY, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC US; HOWARD J.C. NICOLS, SQUIRE, SANDERS & DEMPSEY, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For UNUMPROVIDENT CORPORATION, Defendant: DEBORAH E HYRB, PATRICK SHEA, PAUL HASTINGS, JANOFSKY & WALKER, LLP, STAMFORD, CT [*12] [*12] US; JENNIFER BATES MCINTYRE, ROSEANN OLIVER, PERKINS COIE LLC, CHICAGO, IL; RACHEL ROSS KRAUSE, OGDEN & SULLIVAN, PA, TAMPA, FL US; STEVEN PAUL DEL MAURO, RANDI F. KNEPPER, MCELROY, DEUTSCH, MULVANEY & CARPENTER, LLP, MORRISTOWN, NJ; TIMON V SULLIVAN, OGDEN & SULLIVAN, PA, TAMPA, FL US.

For ACE INA HOLDINGS, (CIVIL 05-1800, PUR. TO ORDER DATED 3/11/2005), Defendant: JEREMY J BRANDON, JOHNNY W. CARTER, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, DALLAS, TX US; LIZA M. WALSH, MARC D. HAEFNER, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ; M. DUNCAN GRANT, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For ACE LIMITED, (PUR. TO ORDER DATED 3/11/2005, Defendant: ALAN N. SALPETER, CHICAGO, IL; H. LEE GODFREY, JEFFREY R. SEELY, JOHNNY W. CARTER, MICHAEL P. GEISER, NEAL S. MANNE, VINEET BHATIA, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, HOUSTON, TX; JEREMY J BRANDON, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, DALLAS, TX US; ROBERT J KRISS, MAYER, BROWN, ROWE & MAW, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; MARC D. HAEFNER, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ.

For ACE USA, (PUR. TO ORDER DATED 3/11/2005), Defendant: ALAN N. SALPETER, CHICAGO, IL; FREDERIC STANLEY, JR, STANLEY, DEHLINGER & RASCHER, ALTAMONTE SPRINGS, [*13] FL US; [*13] GRETHCHEN S. SWEEN, JEREMY J BRANDON, JOHNNY W. CARTER, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, DALLAS, TX US; H. LEE GODFREY, JEFFREY R. SEELY, L. JANE RAY, MICHAEL P. GEISER, NEAL S. MANNE, VINEET BHATIA, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, HOUSTON, TX; LIZA M. WALSH, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ; M. DUNCAN GRANT, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT J KRISS, MAYER, BROWN, ROWE & MAW, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; MARC D. HAEFNER, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ.

For WILLIS GROUP HOLDINGS LIMITED, (CIVIL 05-1168), WILLIS GROUP LIMITED, (CIVIL 05-1168), WILLIS NORTH AMERICA INC., Defendants: ANASTASIA ANGELOVA, RICHARD C. PEPPERMAN, II, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL GROUP, INC., Defendant: CARL H POCDTKE, DLA PIPER RUDNICK GARY CARY US LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, LAYALIZA KLEIN SOLOVEICHIK, MARTIN FLUMENBAUM, REBECCA CAREN SHORE, ROBERTA A. KAPLAN, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, NEW YORK, NY; KENNETH A. GALLO, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; MARK A. ARONCHICK, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA; SAMUEL BAYARD ISAACSON, STEPHEN W SCHWAB, DLA PUPER RUDICK [*14] GRAY CARY US LLP, [*14] CHICAGO, IL.

For THE ST. PAUL TRAVELERS COMPANIES, INC., Defendant: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; MICHAEL J. GARVEY, SIMPSON THACHER & BARTLETT LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For BROWN & BROWN, INC., Defendant: BARRY G. SHER, KEVIN C. LOGUE, SARAH EMILY HAGANS, VICTORIA ASHWORTH, PAUL HASTINGS JANOFSKY & WALKER, LLP, NEW YORK, NY US; THEODORE ALLAN KITTILA, PAUL, HASTINGS, HANOFSKY & WALKER, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For ACORDIA INC, WELLS FARGO, (CIVIL 05-1168), Defendants: ALAN L. KILDOW, DLA PIPER RUDNICK GRAY CARY US LLP, MINNEAPOLIS, MN; CARLOS F. ORTIZ, DLA, PIPER, RUDNICK, GRAY & CARY, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; SONYA RAE BRAUNSCHWEIG, DLA, PIPER, RUDNICK, GRAY, CARY & US, LLP, MINNEAPOLIS, MN.

For NATIONAL FINANCIAL PARTNERS CORP., Defendant: WILLIAM F. CLARKE, JR., SKADDEN ARPS, SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM. LLP, NEW YORK, NJ.

For PRUDENTIAL FINANCIAL, INC., (CIVIL 05-1064), Defendant: CHRISTOPHER C. GILBERT, MARTIN B. UNGER, UNGER LAW GROUP, PL, ORLANDO, FL US; DOUGLAS SCOTT EAKELEY, JOHN R. MIDDLETON, LOWENSTEIN SANDLER PC, ROSELAND, NJ.

For THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA, INC., (CIVIL 05-1064), Defendant: JOHN R. MIDDLETON, LOWENSTEIN [*15] SANDLER [*15] PC, ROSELAND, NJ.

For U.S.I. HOLDINGS CORPORATION, Defendant: RACHEL L. GERSTEIN, ROBERT HARDY PEES, AKIN, GUMP, STRAUSS, HAUER & FELD, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; RICHARD B. ZABEL, AKIN, GUMP, STRAUSS, HAVER & FELD, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For ACE INA, Defendant: FREDERIC STANLEY, JR, STANLEY, DEHLINGER & RASCHER, ALTAMONTE SPRINGS, FL US; GRETHCHEN S. SWEEN, JEREMY J BRANDON, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, DALLAS, TX US; H. LEE GODFREY, JEFFREY R. SEELY, JOHNNY W. CARTER, L. JANE RAY, NEAL S. MANNE, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, HOUSTON, TX; MARC D. HAEFNER, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ.

For ACE INA HOLDINGS INC, Defendant: ALAN N. SALPETER, CHICAGO, IL; H. LEE GODFREY, JEFFREY R. SEELY, MICHAEL P. GEISER, NEAL S. MANNE, VINEET BHATIA, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, HOUSTON, TX; JOHNNY W. CARTER, SUSMAN GODFREY, LLP, DALLAS, TX US; M. DUNCAN GRANT, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT J KRISS, MAYER, BROWN, ROWE & MAW, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; MARC D. HAEFNER, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ.

For ACE LTD, (CIVIL 05-1167), Defendant: M. DUNCAN GRANT, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MARC D. HAEFNER, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ.

For AON CORPORATION, Defendant: AMY D [*16] HARMON, MARGUERITE [*16] S. WILLIS, RUSSELL THOMAS BURKE, NEXSEN, PRUET, JACOBS & POLLARD, COLUMBIA, SC; BENJAMIN R. OSTAPUK, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; DANIEL EDWARD LAYTIN, ELIZABETH A. LARSEN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, LEDA DUNN WETTRE, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ; JILL M. STEINBERG, BAKER DONELSON BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, MEMPHIS, TN; JOHN ARMANDO BOUDET, GREENBERG TRAURIG, PA, ORLANDO, FL US; LESLIE M. SMITH, RENEE WICKLUND, RICHARD C GODFREY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

For AON CORP, (CIVIL 05-1801), Defendant: DONALD A. ROBINSON, LEDA DUNN WETTRE, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AON SERVICES GROUP, (CIVIL 05-1167), Defendant: LESLIE M. SMITH, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, LEDA DUNN WETTRE, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For MARSH USA INC., (CONNECTICUT) (CIVIL 05-1168), Defendant: ANDREW T. BERRY, MCCARTER & ENGLISH, LLP, NEWARK, NJ; MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US.

For HILB, ROGAL & HOBBS, (CIVIL 05-1168) FORMERLY KNOWN AS HILB, ROGAL, & HAMILTON COMPANY, Defendant: MICHAEL R. GRIFFINGER, [*17] WILLIAM P. DENI, JR., GIBBONS, [*17] DEL DEO, DOLAN, GRIFFINGER & VECCHIONE, PC, NEWARK, NJ; SHAWN PATRICK REGAN, HUNTON & WILLIAMS, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JONATHAN MICHAEL WILAN, NEIL KEITH GILMAN, HUNTON & WILLIAMS LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For ARTHUR J GALLAGHER & CO, Defendant: ANDREW KENNETH LEVINE, BROAD AND CASSEL, TALLAHASSEE, FL US; DANIELLE A. R. COFFMAN, WINSTON & STRAWN, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DAVID EMILIO MOLLON, EDWIN MICHAEL LARKIN, LINA M. VIVIANO, WINSTON & STRAWN LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JAMES S. RICHTER, WINSTON & STRAWN LLP, NEWARK, NJ; KATHERINE E BORDEN, STEPHEN CHARLES SCHULTE, TERRY M. GRIMM, CHICAGO, IL.

For LEXINGTON INSURANCE COMPANY, Birmingham Fire Insurance Co. of PA, NEW HAMPSHIRE INSURANCE CO., Defendants: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; KENNETH A. GALLO, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For U.S.I HOLDINGS CORP, Defendant: PATRICK CHARLES SCHMITTER, ROBERT HARDY PEES, RICHARD B. ZABEL, AKIN, GUMP, STRAUSS, HAUER & FELD, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For HARTFORD FINANCIAL SERVICES GROUP INC, Defendant: ANDREA ROBINSON, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING, HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; GREGORY M. REISER, WILMER, CUTLER, PICKERING, HALE & DORR, LLP, [*18] PRINCETON, NJ; JAMES E. FOSTER, VIRGINIA [*18] B. TOWNES, AKERMAN SENTERFITT, ORLANDO, FL US; MARCI A EISENSTEIN, WILLIAM M HANNAY, SCHIFF HARDIN, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; PAUL ADAM ENGELMAYER, WILMER, BUTLER & PICKERING, ESQS., NEW YORK, NY; ROBERT W. TRENCHARD, ROBIN L. ALPERSTEIN , WILMER, CUTLER, PICKERING, HALE & DORR, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY;MARY SUSAN HENIFIN, BUVHANAN INGERSOLL, PC, PRINCETON, NJ.

For HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant: ANDREA ROBINSON, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING, HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; JAMES E. FOSTER, VIRGINIA B. TOWNES, AKERMAN SENTERFITT, ORLANDO, FL US; ROBERT W. TRENCHARD, WILMER, CUTLER, PICKERING, HALE & DORR, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; MARY SUSAN HENIFIN, BUVHANAN INGERSOLL, PC, PRINCETON, NJ.

For PROPERTY & CASUALTY INSURANCE COMPANY OF HARTFORD, Defendant: MARCI A EISENSTEIN, WILLIAM M HANNAY, SCHIFF HARDIN, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; MARY SUSAN HENIFIN, BUVHANAN INGERSOLL, PC, PRINCETON, NJ.

For TWIN CITY FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Nutmeg Life Insurance Co., The Hartford Fidelity & Bonding, Defendants: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; MARY SUSAN HENIFIN, BUVHANAN INGERSOLL, PC, PRINCETON, [*19] NJ.

For AON GROUP INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-1801), [*19] Defendant: BENJAMIN R. OSTAPUK, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; DANIEL EDWARD LAYTIN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; JILL M. STEINBERG, BAKER DONELSON BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, MEMPHIS, TN; JOHN ARMANDO BOUDET, GREENBERG TRAURIG, PA, ORLANDO, FL US; LESLIE M. SMITH, RICHARD C GODFREY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AON DIRECT GROUP INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-1801), Defendant: DANIEL EDWARD LAYTIN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; JILL M. STEINBERG, BAKER DONELSON BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, MEMPHIS, TN; LESLIE M. SMITH, RICHARD C GODFREY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AFFINITY INSURANCE SERVICES INC, (CIVIL NO. 05-1801), Defendant: DANIEL EDWARD LAYTIN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; JILL M. STEINBERG, BAKER DONELSON BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, MEMPHIS, TN; LESLIE M. SMITH, RICHARD C GODFREY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

[*20] For HEALTHCARE PROVIDERS SERVICE ORGANIZATION, (CIVIL [*20] NO. 05-1801), Defendant: DANIEL EDWARD LAYTIN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; JILL M. STEINBERG, BAKER DONELSON BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, MEMPHIS, TN; LESLIE M. SMITH, RICHARD C GODFREY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

For AMERICAN RE CORPORATION, Defendant: DAVID GRAIS, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; MOLLY LEHR, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For AMERICAN RE-INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant: DAVID GRAIS, JOHN F. COLLINS, MOLLY LEHR, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; EAMON O'KELLY, DEWEY BALLANTINE, NEW YORK, NY US; HOUSTON S. PARK, III, STEPHENS, LYNN, KLEIN, LA CAVA, HOFFMAN, WEST PALM BEACH, FL US; KRISTIN ANN MEISTER, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK CITY, NY US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For MUNICH-AMERICAN RISK PARTNERS INC, Defendant: DAVID GRAIS, JEFFREY S. RUGG, MOLLY LEHR, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; EAMON O'KELLY, DEWEY BALLANTINE, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For AON RISK SERVICES COMPANIES INC, Defendant: BENJAMIN R. OSTAPUK, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; DANIEL [*21] EDWARD LAYTIN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, [*21] CHICAGO, IL; JOHN ARMANDO BOUDET, GREENBERG TRAURIG, PA, ORLANDO, FL US; LESLIE M. SMITH, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AON RISK SERVICES INC U.S., Defendant: BENJAMIN R. OSTAPUK, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; DANIEL EDWARD LAYTIN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; LESLIE M. SMITH, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AON SERVICES GROUP INC, Defendant: BENJAMIN R. OSTAPUK, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; DANIEL EDWARD LAYTIN, KIRKPATRICK & LOCKHART, NICHOLSON, GRAHAM, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; JOHN ARMANDO BOUDET, GREENBERG TRAURIG, PA, ORLANDO, FL US; LESLIE M. SMITH, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For UNIVERSAL LIFE RESOURCES, DOING BUSINESS AS ULR, Defendant: DAVID A. GABIANELLI, HANCOCK ROTHERT & BUNSHOFT LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; ERIC NEAL MACEY, STEPHEN J SIEGAL, NOVACK & MACEY, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; SCOTT L. METZGER, DUCKOR, SPRADLING, METZGER & WYNNE, SAN DIEGO, CA US; [*22] STEPHEN P. YOUNGER, PATTERSON, BELKNAP, WEBB & TYLER, NEW YORK, NY.

For [*22] UNIVERSAL LIFE RESOURCES INC, DOING BUSINESS AS ULR INSURANCE SERVICES INC, Defendant: ERIC NEAL MACEY, NOVACK & MACEY, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; NED GELHAAR, HANCOCK, ROTHERT & BUNSHOFT, LLP, LOS ANGELES, CA US; SCOTT L. METZGER, DUCKOR, SPRADLING, METZGER & WYNNE, SAN DIEGO, CA US; STEPHEN P. YOUNGER, PATTERSON, BELKNAP, WEBB & TYLER, NEW YORK, NY.

For WILLIS GROUP HOLDINGS LTD., Defendant: ANASTASIA ANGELOVA, RICHARD C. PEPPERMAN, II,, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; FREDRICK H. MCCLURE, TAMPA, FL US; JOHN L. WARDEN, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, NEW YORK, NY US; RICHARD C. PEPPERMAN, II,, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For WILLIS GROUP LTD., WILLIS NORTH AMERICAN INC, Defendants: ANASTASIA ANGELOVA, RICHARD C. PEPPERMAN, II,, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; FREDRICK H. MCCLURE, TAMPA, FL US; JOHN L. WARDEN, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, NEW YORK, NY US.

For BENEFITS COMMERCE, Defendant: ERIC NEAL MACEY, NOVACK & MACEY, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; SCOTT L. METZGER, DUCKOR, SPRADLING, METZGER & WYNNE, SAN DIEGO, CA US; STEPHEN P. YOUNGER, PATTERSON, BELKNAP, WEBB & TYLER, NEW YORK, NY.

For [*23] DOUGLAS P. COX, Defendant: ERIC NEAL MACEY, NOVACK & MACEY, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; SCOTT L. [*23] METZGER, DUCKOR, SPRADLING, METZGER & WYNNE, SAN DIEGO, CA US; STEPHEN P. YOUNGER, PATTERSON, BELKNAP, WEBB & TYLER, NEW YORK, NY.

For METLIFE INC, Defendant: CHRISTOPHER C. GILBERT, MARTIN B. UNGER, UNGER LAW GROUP, PL, ORLANDO, FL US; JAMES W. CARBIN, DUANNE MORRIS, LLP; EDWARD G. BIESTER, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, DUANE MORRIS, LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; PAUL JEFFREY RIEHLE, SEDGWICK DETERT MORAN & ARNOLD, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; MARGARET MARY O'ROURKE, WOLFF SAMSON, PC, WEST ORANGE, NJ.

For ST PAUL TRAVELERS COS INC, Defendant: PAUL C. CURNIN, SIMPSON THACHER & BARTLETT, NEW YORK, NY.

For ZURICH AMERICAN INSURANCE CO., DOING BUSINESS AS ZURICH NORTH AMERICA, Defendant: ANN M. ASHTON, DAVID S. TURETSKY, GEORGE E. ANHANG, RALPH C. FERRARA, LEBOEUF, LAMB, GREENE & MACRAE, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; GIL M. SOFFER, MATTHEW J. CANNON, KATTEN MUCHIN ZAVIS ROSENMAN, CHICAGO, IL; JONATHAN E. RICHMAN, LEBOEUF, LAMB, GREENE & MACRAE, LLP, NEW YORK.

For NATIONAL FINANCIAL PARTNERS CORPORATION, Defendant: DONNA L. MCDEVITT, TIMOTHY ALAN NELSEN, SKADDEN ARPS SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM & LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

For AMERICA RE-INSURANCE CO, Athena Assurance Co., Gulf Insurance Co. [*24] , Indemnity Insurance Co. North America, ST. PAUL FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE CO., ST. PAUL MERCURY [*24] INSURANCE CO., Westchester Surplus Lines Insurance Co., AMER REINSURANCE CO, Illinois Union Insurance Co., THE INSURANCE COMPANY OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, HARTFORD STEAM BOILER INSPECTION & INSURANCE COMPANY, NATIONAL UNION FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF PITTSBURG PA, Defendants: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For WELLS FARGO & CO, Defendant: CARLOS F. ORTIZ, DLA, PIPER, RUDNICK, GRAY & CARY, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; SONYA RAE BRAUNSCHWEIG, DLA, PIPER, RUDNICK, GRAY, CARY & US, LLP, MINNEAPOLIS, MN.

For HILB ROGAL & HAMILTON CO, Defendant: JONATHAN MICHAEL WILAN, NEIL KEITH GILMAN, HUNTON & WILLIAMS LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For BB&T CORP, Defendant: ALAN L. BRIGGS, JAMES PAUL WEHNER, JR., SQUIRE, SAMDERS & DEMPSEY, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC US; JACK LOUIS WUERKER, SQUIRE SANDERS & DEMPSEY, VIENNA, VA US.

For BRANCH BANKING & TRUST CO, Defendant: ALAN L. BRIGGS, JAMES PAUL WEHNER, JR., HOLLY BROOKE JAMES, SQUIRE, SAMDERS & DEMPSEY, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC US.

For HUB INTERNATIONAL LTD, Defendant: ALAN SETH RABINOWITZ, NEW YORK, NY.

For AMERICAN RE CORP, Defendant: EAMON [*25] O'KELLY, JEFFREY S. RUGG, DEWEY BALLANTINE, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For [*25] MARSH USA INC., (ILLINOIS), MARSHA USA INC, MARSH & MCLENNAN INCORPORATED, Defendants: ANDREW T. BERRY, MCCARTER & ENGLISH, LLP, NEWARK, NJ.

For AMERICAN RE-INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant: MOLLY LEHR, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For AON BROKERS SERVICES INC, Defendant: BENJAMIN R. OSTAPUK, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; JOHN ARMANDO BOUDET, GREENBERG TRAURIG, PA, ORLANDO, FL US; LESLIE M. SMITH, KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DONALD A. ROBINSON, LEDA DUNN WETTRE, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AON GROUP INT, Defendant: DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AMERICAN RE INSURANCE CO, Defendant: JEFFREY S. RUGG, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For MERCER HUMAN RESOURCE CONSULTING INC, Defendant: CAROLE ELAINE HOWARD, JACKSON WALKER LLP, HOUSTON, TX; FREDERICK BARTLETT WULFF, SR, JACKSON WALKER LLP, DALLAS, TX.

For MERCER HUMAN RESOURCE CONSULTING OF TEXAS INC, Defendant: CAROLE ELAINE HOWARD, JACKSON WALKER LLP, HOUSTON, [*26] TX; FREDERICK BARTLETT WULFF, SR, JACKSON WALKER LLP, DALLAS, TX; MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, NEW YORK, NY.

For [*26] ACE American Insurance Co., Defendant: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; MARC D. HAEFNER, CONNELL FOLEY, LLP, ROSELAND, NJ.

For AIU Insurance Co., National Union Fire Insurance Co. of Louisiana, Defendants: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; KENNETH A. GALLO, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For American Alternative Insurance Co. Corp., Defendant: DAVID GRAIS, EAMON O'KELLY, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For American Casualty Co. of Reading, CNA FINANCIAL CORP., Continental Casualty Co., Defendants: MICHAEL R. BLANKSHAIN, MICHAEL LEE MCCLUGGAGE, BETH L. FANCSALI, WILDMAN, HARROLD, ALLEN & DIXON, LLP, CHICAGO, IL US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; JOHN MICHAEL AGNELLO, CARELLA BYRNE BAIN, GILFILLAN CECCHI STEWART & OLSTEIN, PC, ROSELAND, NJ; MATTHEW JOSEPH CACCAMO, WILDMAN, HARROLD, ALLEN & DIXON, CHICAGO, IL US; MELISSA E. FLAX, CARELLA, BYRNE, BAIN, GILFILLAN, ROSELAND, NJ.

For AMERICAN HOME ASSURANCE CO., AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL INSURANCE CO., Commerce and Industry Insurance Co., Defendants: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, [*27] NEW YORK, NY; KENNETH A. GALLO, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For AON GROUP, INC., AON [*27] RE, INC., AON SERVICES GROUP, INC., Defendants: DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For AON RISK SERVICES INC US, Defendant: JOHN ARMANDO BOUDET, GREENBERG TRAURIG, PA, ORLANDO, FL US; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For Arthur J. Gallagher Risk Management Service, Defendant: JAMES S. RICHTER, WINSTON & STRAWN LLP, NEWARK, NJ.

For AXIS REINSURANCE CO., AXIS Specialty Insurance Co., AXIS Surplus Insurance Co., Defendants: WILLIAM F. CLARKE, JR., SKADDEN ARPS, SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM. LLP, NEW YORK, NJ; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For Berkshire Hathaway, Inc., Defendant: CATHERINE FLORENCE AUGUST JOHNSON, MUNGER, TOLLES & OLSON, LLP; LOS ANGELES, CA US; CHRISTOPHER P. ANTON, BUDD LARNER PC, SHORT HILLS, NJ; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH J. SCHIAVONE, BUDD LARNER, PC, SHORT HILLS, NJ.

For Chicago Insurance Co., National Surety Corp., Defendants: STEVEN P. HANDLER, AMY GRAHAM DOEHRING, GEOFFREY A. VANCE, LAZAR P. RAYNAL, MCDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, LLP, CHICAGO, IL US; DANIEL [*28] J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For Crum & Forster Holdings Corp, United States Fire Insurance Co., Defendants: LOUIS G. CORSI, LANDMAN, [*28] CORSI, BALLAINE & FORD, NEW YORK, NY US; CHRISTOPHER G. FRETEL, STEPHEN JACOBS, LANDMAN, CORSI, BALLAINE & FORD, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; JOHN HERBERT NOORLANDER, LANDMAN, CORSI, BAILAINE & FORD, NEWARK, NJ.

For EXECUTIVE RISK INDEMNITY INC., FEDERAL INSURANCE CO., The Chubb Corp., VIGILANT INSURANCE CO., Defendants: PETER RICHARD BISIO, HOGAN & HARTSON, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO., Defendant: STEVEN P. HANDLER, AMY GRAHAM DOEHRING, GEOFFREY A. VANCE, LAZAR P. RAYNAL, MCDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, LLP, CHICAGO, IL US.

For General Re Corporation, General Reinsurance Corp., Defendants: CHRISTOPHER P. ANTON, BUDD LARNER PC, SHORT HILLS, NJ; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH J. SCHIAVONE, BUDD LARNER, PC, SHORT HILLS, NJ.

For GREENWICH INSURANCE CO., Indian Harbor Insurance Co., Defendants: AMY E. BARABAS, ROBERT A. ALESSI, TAMMY L. ROY, CAHILL, GORDON & REINDELL, LLP, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; JOHN L. THURMAN, FARRELL [*29] & THURMAN, PC, SKILLMAN, NJ.

For HARTFORD STEAM BOILER INSPECTION AND INSURANCE CO., National Union Fire Insurance Co. of Pittsburg, PA, [*29] Defendants: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; KENNETH A. GALLO, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US.

For Liberty Mutual Fire Insurance Co., Liberty Mutual Holding Co., LIBERTY MUTUAL INSURANCE CO., WAUSAU UNDERWRITERS INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendants: BRIAN E. ROBISON, VINSON & ELKINS, DALLAS, TX; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; KATHRINE MARLENE MORTENSEN, KORNSTEIN, VEISZ, WEXLER & POLLARD, NEW YORK, NY US.

For Mt. Hawley Insurance Co., RLI CORP, Defendants: AUGUSTA MORGAN RIDLEY, BRIAN ROBERT MEINERS, GRACIELA RODRIGUEZ, KEVIN RICHARD SULLIVAN, KING & SPALDING, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For Pacific Insurance Co., Ltd, Defendant: MARY SUSAN HENIFIN, BUVHANAN INGERSOLL, PC, PRINCETON, NJ.

For RLI Insurance Corp, Defendant: AUGUSTA MORGAN RIDLEY, BRIAN ROBERT MEINERS, GRACIELA RODRIGUEZ, KEVIN RICHARD SULLIVAN, KING & SPALDING, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For Summit Global Partners of Florida, Inc., USI Insurance [*30] Services of Florida, Inc., Defendants: ROBERT HARDY PEES, AKIN, GUMP, STRAUSS, HAUER & FELD, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For The Continental Insurance [*30] Group, Defendant: MICHAEL R. BLANKSHAIN, MICHAEL LEE MCCLUGGAGE, BETH L. FANCSALI, WILDMAN, HARROLD, ALLEN & DIXON, LLP, CHICAGO, IL US; MATTHEW JOSEPH CACCAMO, WILDMAN, HARROLD, ALLEN & DIXON, CHICAGO, IL US.

For TRAVELERS INDEMNITY COMPANY, RLI INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendants: MITCHELL JAY AUSLANDER, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For UNITED STATES FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant: LOUIS G. CORSI, LANDMAN, CORSI, BALLAINE & FORD, NEW YORK, NY US; CHRISTOPHER G. FRETEL, STEPHEN JACOBS, LANDMAN, CORSI, BALLAINE & FORD, NEW YORK, NY US; JOHN HERBERT NOORLANDER, LANDMAN, CORSI, BAILAINE & FORD, NEWARK, NJ.

For XL Capital Ltd, Defendant: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; JOHN L. THURMAN, FARRELL & THURMAN, PC, SKILLMAN, NJ.

For AON RISK SERVICES OF THE CAROLINAS INC, Defendant: AMY D HARMON, MARGUERITE S. WILLIS, RUSSELL THOMAS BURKE, NEXSEN, PRUET, JACOBS & POLLARD, COLUMBIA, SC; DONALD A. ROBINSON, ROBINSON & LIVELLI, ESQS., NEWARK, NJ.

For INSURANCE CO OF THE STATE [*31] OF PENNSYLVANIA, (CIVIL NO. 05-4046), Defendant: KENNETH A. GALLO, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, [*31] NY.

For MARSH & MCLENNAN INC, Defendant: ANDREW T. BERRY, MCCARTER & ENGLISH, LLP, NEWARK, NJ; DANIEL P. JORDAN, P. RYAN BECKETT, BUTLER, SNOW, O'MARA, STEVENS & CANNADA, PLLC, JACKSON, MS US.

For C. V. Starr & Co., Defendant: ROBERT A. MAGNANINI, BOIES, SCHILLER & FLEXNER, LLP, SHORT HILLS, NJ.

For FIRST MARKET INTERNATIONAL INC, Defendant: MAYANNE DOWNS, KIMBERLY DUNKEL HEALY, KING, BLACKWELL, DOWNS & ZEHNDER, PA, ORLANDO, FL.

For AMERICAN ALTERNATIVE INSURANCE CORPORATION, Defendant: JEFFREY S. RUGG, MOLLY LEHR, DEWEY BALLANTINE, LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For Discover Re Managers, Inc., UNITED STATES FIDELITY AND GUARANTY SPECIALITY INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendants: EDWARD F. MALUF, MIRIAM THERESA DOWD, PHILIP L. BLUM, BINGHAM MCCUTCHEN, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For DISCOVER REINSURANCE COMPANY, DISCOVERY MANAGERS LTD, UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY COMPANY, Defendants: BARRY HASSELL, COPELAND, COOK, TAYLOR & BUSH, RIDGELAND, MS; CHARLES GREG COPELAND, MICHAEL W. BAXTER, [*32] COPELAND, COOK, TAYLOR & BUSH, RIDGELAND, MS; EDWARD F. MALUF, MIRIAM THERESA DOWD, PHILIP L. BLUM, BINGHAM MCCUTCHEN, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For MARK A SMITH, [*32] (CIVIL NUMBER 05-5698), Defendant: KEVIN F HORMUTH, KEVIN F. O'MALLEY, GREENSFELDER & HEMKER, ST LOUIS, MO US.

For AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL GROUP, Defendant: CHRIS S. COUTROULIS, CARLTON FIELDS, PA, TAMPA, FL US; JAMES E. FOSTER, VIRGINIA B. TOWNES, AKERMAN SENTERFITT, ORLANDO, FL US; STEVEN J BRODIE, CARLTON FIELDS, PA, MIAMI, FL US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For CHUBB CORPORATION, THE, Defendant: DUSTIN E DEESE, MARVIN E. BARKIN, TRENAM, KEMKER, SCHRARF, BARKIN, FRYE, O'NEILL & MULLIS, TAMPA, FL US; DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY.

For HARTFORD INSURANCE CO OF THE SOUTHEAST, HARTFORD UNDERWRITER INS. CO., Defendant: ANDREA ROBINSON, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING, HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; JAMES E. FOSTER, VIRGINIA B. TOWNES, AKERMAN SENTERFITT, ORLANDO, FL US; ROBERT W. TRENCHARD, WILMER, CUTLER, PICKERING, HALE & DORR, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For USI HOLDINGS INC, Defendant: DENIS L. DURKIN, BAKER & HOSTETLER, LLP, ORLANDO, FL; PATRICK CHARLES SCHMITTER, RACHEL L. GERSTEIN, RICHARD B. ZABEL, ROBERT [*33] HARDY PEES, AKIN, GUMP, STRAUSS, HAUER & FELD, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For JOSEPH E LAMPEN, Defendant: KEVIN F HORMUTH, KEVIN F. O'MALLEY, GREENSFELDER & HEMKER, ST LOUIS, [*33] MO US.

For MARSH USA INC OF LOUISIANA, Defendant: DANIEL P. JORDAN, P. RYAN BECKETT, BUTLER, SNOW, O'MARA, STEVENS & CANNADA, PLLC, JACKSON, MS US.

For NAVIGATORS INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant: ELLIOTT ABRUTYN, MORGAN, MELHUISH & ABRUTYN, LIVINGSTON, NJ.

For NAVIGATORS INSURANCE SERVICES OF TEXAS INC, Defendant: ELLIOTT ABRUTYN, MORGAN, MELHUISH & ABRUTYN, LIVINGSTON, NJ; ELTON F DUNCAN, JESSICA G ROUX, KELLEY SEVIN, THOMAS A. FRENCH, DUNCAN, COURINGTON & RYDBERG, NEW ORLEANS, LA US.

For THE CONTINENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; JOHN MICHAEL AGNELLO, CARELLA BYRNE BAIN, GILFILLAN CECCHI STEWART & OLSTEIN, PC, ROSELAND, NJ; MATTHEW JOSEPH CACCAMO, CHICAGO, IL US; MELISSA E. FLAX, CARELLA, BYRNE, BAIN, GILFILLAN, ROSELAND, NJ.

For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Defendant: SUSAN J. STEELE, UNITED STATES ATTORNEY'S OFFICE, NEWARK, NJ.

For Guy Carpenter & Company, Inc., MARSH & MCLENNAN COMPANIES, INC., Marsh Advantage America, Marsh Global Broking, [*34] Inc. (Missouri), Marsh Global Broking, Inc. (New Jersey), Marsh Global Placement, MARSH INC., MARSH USA INC. (Connecticut), MARSH USA INC., Seabury & Smith Inc., MARSH & MCLENNAN COMPANIES, [*34] INC., Marsh Advantage America, MARSH INC., Defendants: CHRISTOPHER J. ST. JEANOS, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY US.

For MARSH & MCLENNEN, DEFENDANT IN 06-3844, Defendant: DARREN K NELSON, PARR WADDOUPS BROWN GEE & LOVELESS, SALT LAKE CITY, UT US.

For MARSH, DEFENDANT IN 06-3844, Defendant: DARREN K NELSON, PARR WADDOUPS BROWN GEE & LOVELESS, SALT LAKE CITY, UT.

For AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL SPECIALTY LINES INSURANCE CO., Consol Defendant: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; KENNETH A. GALLO, PATRICIA C. CROWLEY, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For LEXINGTON INSURANCE CO., Consol Defendant: DANIEL J. LEFFELL, NEW YORK, NY; PATRICIA C. CROWLEY, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For National Association of Professional Insurance Agents, National Association of Professional Insurance Agents, Amicus: WILLIAM F. MEGNA, MORRIS, MANNING & MARTIN, LLP, PRINCETON, NJ.

For Independent Insurance Agents & Brokers of [*35] America, Inc., Amicus: SHAFFIN ABDUL DATOO, VENABLE LLP, NEW YORK, NY US.

Judges: GARRETT E. BROWN, JR., U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: GARRETT E. BROWN, JR.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION

BROWN, Chief Judge

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

This matter comes before the Court upon the renewed [*36] motion of Defendants [1] to dismiss, pursuant to Federal Rule of Procedure 12(b)(6), Plaintiffs' claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act, as set forth in Plaintiffs' First Consolidated Commercial Class Action Amended Complaint and First Consolidated Employee Benefits Class Action Amended Complaint (collectively, "Complaints"). Oral argument was held on March 1, 2007. The Court, having considered the parties' written submissions and oral argument, and for the reasons discussed herein, grants the Renewed Motions to Dismiss without prejudice.

[*37] BACKGROUND

This action involves numerous class actions filed against various insurance brokers and insurers. The class actions allege violations of federal and state antitrust laws, the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") and common law. These class actions have been consolidated into the present action.

Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint on or about August 1, 2005 and a corrected amended complaint on or about August 15, 2005. Plaintiffs make claims on behalf of a proposed class of insureds who purchased or renewed insurance policies with the Defendant Insurers through the Defendant Brokers. Plaintiffs allege that the Defendants "engaged in a combination and conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale of insurance by coordinating and rigging bids for insurance policies, allocating insurance markets and customers and raising, or maintaining or stabilizing premium prices above competitive levels." Corrected First Consolidated Amended Commercial Class Action Compl., P 1. The Complaints asserted six causes of action: (1) RICO violations; (2) violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act; (3) violations of the antitrust laws of forty-eight [*38] states and the District of Columbia; (4) breaches of statutory and common-law-based fiduciary duties; (5) aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty; and (6) unjust enrichment.

After these causes of action were aligned and severed into two types of matters (one involving commercial property and casualty insurance coverages ("Commercial Case") and the other involving employee benefits insurance plans ("Employee-Benefits Case")), the Court consolidated all actions into two accordingly aligned dockets. See In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184 (FSH), Docket Entry No. 118, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44904 (D.N..J. May 25, 2005); In re Employee-Benefits Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 05-1079 (FSH), Docket Entry No. 20, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44909 (D.N.J. Aug. 8, 2005). Consequently, Plaintiffs filed one consolidated amended complaint per each respective docket, and then altered these two submissions by filing two corrected amended complaints. See In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184 (FSH), Docket Entry No. 201, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44904 (D.N.J. May 25, 2005); In re Employee-Benefits Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 05-1079 (FSH), Docket Entry No. 2, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44909 (D.N.J. Aug. 8, 2005).

[1] AIG Defendants (Commercial Defendants); Chubb Defendants (Chubb Corp., Federal Ins. Co., Executive Risk Indem., Vigilant Ins. Co.); Fireman's Fund Defendants (Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., Chicago Ins. Co., National Surety Corp.); XL Defendants (Greenwich Ins. Co., Indian Harbor Ins. Co., XL Capital Ltd.); Mid-Size Brokers (Brown & Brown Inc., Brown & Brown Ins. Benefits, Inc., et. al); Berkshire Defendants (Berkshire Hathaway, Inc., General Re Corp., General Reinsurance Corp.); CNA Defendants (CNA Financial Corp., Continental Ins. Corp., American Cas. Co. Of Reading, PA, Continental Cas. Co.); Defendants Axis, Berkshire, Crum & Forster and RLI (Axis Reinsurance Co., Axis Speciality Ins. Co., Axis Surplus Ins. Co., Berkshire Hathaway, Inc., General Re Corp., General Reinsurance Corp., Crum & Forster Holdings Corp., U.S. Fire Ins. Co., RLI Corp., RLI Ins. Co., Mt. Hawley Ins. Co.); BB&T Defendants(BB&T Corp., Branch Banking & Trust Co., BB&T Ins. Services, Inc.).

The extensive facts and procedural history in this case have been set [*39] forth previously by the Court and are repeated only where relevant to the instant motion.

In the October 3, 2006 Opinion, the Court concluded that the allegations set forth in Plaintiffs' First Consolidated Amended Complaints "have insufficient particularity to demonstrate 'concerted action' by all of the Defendants under the Sherman Act." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig, 04-5184, (FSH), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73054, Docket Entry No. 720, at 26 (D.N.J. Oct. 3, 2006). The Court further stated that in lieu of filing an amended complaint, Plaintiffs were permitted to file a Supplemental Statement of Particularity which "shall set forth, with the degree of particularity required under 9(b), the identity of the conspirators and the role of each Defendant in the alleged conspiracies. Id. at 29. The Court further required Plaintiffs to "aver sufficient facts to inform each Defendant of its alleged participation in the conspiracies." Id. The Court also concluded that Plaintiffs did not allege sufficient facts to show that an "implied or express agreement existed between the alleged conspirators." Id. 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73054 at 26. Pursuant to the two orders of the Court and accompanying opinion, see In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig, 04-5184 (FSH), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73054 [*40] Docket Entries Nos. 123,720-21 (D.N.J. May 25, 2005 and Oct. 3, 2006), Plaintiffs filed their RICO Case Statement and Plaintiffs' Statements of Particularity supplementing the Complaints. See, e.g., In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entries Nos. 843, 844, 845.

The Court stated that Defendants, upon receipt of the Particularized Statements, could file either a subsequent motion to dismiss, a motion for judgment on the pleadings or a motion for summary judgment (after the completion of fact discovery). In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 720, at 29-30. Defendants filed the current motions to dismiss on December 21, 2006.

DISCUSSION

I. Standard for a Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) may be granted only if, accepting all well-pleaded allegations in the complaint as true, and viewing them in the light most favorable to plaintiff, plaintiff is not entitled to relief. Oran v. Stafford, 226 F.3d 275, 279 (3d Cir. 2000); [*41] Langford v. City of Atlantic City, 235 F.3d 845, 850 (3d Cir. 2000); Bartholomew v. Fischl, 782 F.2d 1148, 1152 (3d Cir. 1986). The Court may not dismiss a complaint unless plaintiff can prove no set of facts that would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); Angelastro v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 764 F.2d 939, 944 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 935, 106 S. Ct. 267, 88 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1985). "The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974).

Under Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must "accept the allegations in the complaint as true, and draw all reasonable factual inferences in favor of the plaintiff. [The motion can be granted] only if no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved." Turbe v. Government of the Virgin Islands, 938 F.2d 427, 428 (3d Cir. 1991)(citing Unger v. Nat'l Residents Matching Program, 928 F.2d 1392, 1394-95 (3d Cir. 1991)); see also Langford, 235 F.3d at 850; [*42] Dykes v. Southeastern Pa. Transp. Auth., 68 F.3d 1564, 1565 n.1 (3d Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1142, 116 S. Ct. 1434, 134 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1996); Piecknick v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 36 F.3d 1250, 1255 (3d Cir. 1994); Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1261 (3d Cir. 1994). A complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim where it appears beyond any doubt "that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984)(citation omitted).

A complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that "the facts alleged in the complaint, even if true, fail to support the . . . claim . . ." Ransom v. Marrazzo, 848 F.2d 398, 401 (3d Cir. 1988). Legal conclusions made in the guise of factual allegations, however, are given no presumption of truthfulness. Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)(citation omitted); see also Morse v. Lower Merion Sch. Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997)(stating that "a court need not credit a complaint's [*43] 'bald assertions' or 'legal conclusions' when deciding a motion to dismiss.")(citations omitted).

Courts are reluctant to grant motions to dismiss antitrust claims. See, e.g., Lum v. Bank of America, 361 F.3d 217, 223 (3d Cir. 2004) ("In considering a motion to dismiss, a court must accept as true all of the factual allegations in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences from those facts in favor of the plaintiffs. (citations omitted). A court may dismiss the complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations."); Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 197-98 (2d Cir. 2001) ("On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, we construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accepting the complaint's allegations as true. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim 'unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.' Thus, '[t]he issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer [*44] evidence to support the claims.'") (citations omitted).

II. Sherman Act

A. Plaintiffs' Particularized Statements

According to Plaintiffs, the issue before the Court is whether the Particularized Statements allege sufficient facts "to show that an implied or express agreement existed between the alleged conspirators" and "to inform each defendant of its alleged participation in the conspiracies." See In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 720. Plaintiffs claim that the Particularized Statements satisfy the requirements set forth in the Court's Opinion. According to Plaintiffs, the Statements describe the seven broker-centered conspiracies in the commercial case and the three broker-centered conspiracies in the employee benefits case. Plaintiffs contend that these conspiracies operate as classic "hub and spoke" (plaintiffs describing the "hub" as being the broker and the "spokes" as the strategic partner insurance carriers), and that these participants conspired to allocate customers and reduce competition. Plaintiffs also contend that the Particularized Statements allege facts from which it may be inferred that an industry-wide [*45] global conspiracy arose out of the operation of the broker-centered conspiracies. Defendants, however, claim that the facts Plaintiffs allege do not support a global conspiracy or any broker-centered conspiracies, and fall short of the pleading requirements set forth in the Court's October Opinion as well as Rule 9(b).

Plaintiffs' Brief sets forth several categories of facts alleged in the Particularized Statements relating to the conspiracies, including: the formation of the conspiracies; the interdependent operation of the spokes of each broker defendant hub; the brokers' anticompetitive and exclusionary practices with their alleged insurance carrier partners; bid-rigging and other direct evidence of the existence of a conspiracy; other evidence of the conspiracies, including circumstantial evidence, plus factors and facilitating devices; actions against interest and facts relating to a plausible global conspiracy.

According to Plaintiffs, the alleged conspiracies began in the early to mid-1990's, when each Broker Defendant, beginning with Marsh, decided to "consolidate their markets." See Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry [*46] No. 849, at 4. Plaintiffs claim that "consolidating markets" means to "funnel the bulk of their business to a select number of preferred insurers." Id. Plaintiffs allege that insurers were invited to be among a select few to whom a broker's business was directed upon entering contingent commission agreements with brokers. Id. at 4-5. Plaintiffs submit in the Particularized Statements that the brokers' decision to consolidate their markets was a "dramatic change in their method of doing business," and that the brokers changed their practices to steer the bulk of their business to their preferred customers. Commercial Statement ("Comm. St."), PP 13, 17, 18, 20. According to Plaintiffs' Commercial Statement, the "dramatic consolidation of carrier markets began to be undertaken by most of the Broker Defendants at approximately the same time period . . . ." Comm. St., P 17. Plaintiffs cite to several specific facts to support these allegations. See, e.g., Comm. St., P 17 (an internal document stating that between 1993 and 2001 there has been "[t]remendous consolidation in [the top ten brokers] marketplace. The way they do business is fundamentally different than in years [*47] past . . . ."); Comm. St., P 18 ("brokers, including USI, Wells Fargo/Acordia, Aon, all consciously trying to limit their preferred carriers in order to leverage bonus programs); Comm. St., P 18, n.4; P 28. Plaintiffs further contend that "every broker embarked on the same or similar consolidation program" and that "[n]ot one deviated." Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 6.

Plaintiffs also allege that the Broker Defendants communicated their strategy of consolidating the markets to prospective insurance partner carriers and to each other. Id. at 6. More specifically, Plaintiffs contend that the partner carriers were aware of "(1) who the other partner carriers were; (2) all 'tiers' or levels of preferred status, and who was on them; and (3) what level of contingent commission payments was necessary to achieve preferred status or entry to a specific tier." Id. at 6-7; see also Employee Benefits Statement ("EB St."), PP 261, 71; Comm. St., PP 71, 141. Further, Plaintiffs claim that the insurers had such details regarding specific arrangements between other insurers and partner brokers including the amount [*48] of contingent commissions paid by competitors. Id. at 6; see also Comm. St. PP 63, 31, 223, 448, 109, 112, 115-16, 117, 119, 120-21, 126, 114. Plaintiffs contend that the details regarding these arrangements were disclosed despite the fact that the agreements contained confidentiality provisions which prohibited the disclosure of their terms. Id. at 8; see also Comm. St., P 84.

Plaintiffs submit that the Broker Defendants disclosed information to insurers relating to the premium volume they delivered to other insurers, citing to examples such as Aon disclosing to CIGNA the premium volume it delivered to Met Life, Unum, Aetna and Prudential. Id., EB St., P 261; see, e.g. Comm. St., P 513 (regarding Wells Fargo disclosing information with Hartford); Comm. St. P 591 (regarding disclosures made by HRH to Hartford); Comm. St., P 513 (regarding Wells Fargo's disclosures to Chubb). Plaintiffs claim that evidence exists regarding the exchange of information relating to broker agreements directly between insurer partners and that brokers distributed information collectively to a group of insurers. Id. at 9; EB St., P 118; Comm. St., PP 151, 61, 480-81. Plaintiffs [*49] allege that "in each broker-centered conspiracy, the brokers facilitated the exchange of information relating to the identity of the market partners, their level of participation in the brokers' book, and the details of their specific contingent commission arrangements." Id. at 10.

Plaintiffs claim that the agreements at issue were motivated by anticompetitive and exclusionary conduct and were not procompetitive. See Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 11 (stating that, for example, brokers agreed with insurers to "shift" or "roll" entire blocks of business to preferred insurers without the benefit of any competitive bidding); see also Comm. St., PP 157, 488, 44; EB St., P 88. Plaintiffs also allege that brokers shielded insurer partners from competition by agreeing not to bid renewals competitively or limited the circumstances of renewals. Id.; see, e.g., Comm. St., P 44 (BB&T instructed producers not to move renewals from Travelers); P 170 (Chubb and Marsh discuss strategy to retain renewals without marketing them). Plaintiffs allege that the insurers paid for and expected unfair competitive advantage [*50] and protection from competition as a result of their agreements with broker partners. Id. at 12; see also Comm. St., PP 164-65; 166; 168; 225; EB St., P 243.

Plaintiffs claim that in the Particularized Statements they have put forth direct evidence of a conspiratorial arrangement. Id. at 13. Plaintiffs submit that they have pled particularized facts describing the involvement of Marsh and Insurer Defendants ACE, AIG, Munich/Am Re, Liberty Mutual, St. Paul/Zurich and XL to cooperate in order to protect the business of the designated insurer. Id.; see, e.g., Comm. St., P 190 (AIG submitted a predetermined losing bid in order to protect Zurich); P 192 (Munich/Am Re submitted a predetermined losing bid to protect AIG). Moreover, Plaintiffs contend that Marsh employee Kathryn Winters, in her plea agreement with regulators, "admitted that a primary goal of the scheme was to maximize contingent commissions and 'protect the incumbent insurance carrier when their business was up for renewal.'" Id.; Comm. St., P 189. Plaintiffs also claim, for example, that HRH promised to move existing books of business to certain carriers in return for contingent commission payments. [*51] Id. at 15. Plaintiffs cite to internal memos from Travelers and Hartford to support this assertion. Comm. St., PP 570-72.

According to Plaintiffs, the Particularized Statements also include plus factors or circumstantial evidence, which they claim, if proven, are probative of the existence of the broker-centered and global conspiracies. Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 16. Plaintiffs allege that there was an economic motivation to collude for both insurers and brokers. Id.; see also Comm. St., PP 11-14. For example, Plaintiffs claim that the collusive agreement increased the broker's contingent commission revenue by limiting bidding to a smaller number of insurers. Id.; Comm. St., PP 12-13, 15. Plaintiffs allege that the insurers would have a motive to collude so long as the cost of paying contingent commissions to the brokers was offset by the advantages in paying them. Id.; Comm. St., P 14. Plaintiffs also claim that information exchanges and organizational structures within the industry provided mechanisms to facilitate the alleged conspiracy and monitor compliance. Comm. St., PP 602-609. Consequently, [*52] Plaintiffs contend that the primary mechanism for monitoring the conspiracy was the exchange of information about the terms of the contingent commission agreements. Id. at 18; Comm. St., PP 603-605. Plaintiffs also cite to industry mechanisms that provided an opportunity for Defendants to exchange information, for example, a "National Study Group" and participation in LIMRA, which Plaintiff contends conducted surveys on issues relating to broker compensation and Rule 5500 disclosure practices. Comm. St., P 607; EB St., PP 318-21. Plaintiffs claim that the CIAB and the Council of Employee Benefits Executives also provided forums to discuss partnering relationships, broker compensation and contingent commission disclosures. Comm. St., PP 610-21; EB St., P 325.

In the Particularized Statements, Plaintiffs allege that there were methods in place to discipline participants who failed to comply with the conspiracy. Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 19. For example, Plaintiffs claim that brokers stopped placing premium with particular insurers or discontinued their practice of protecting renewal business when insurers [*53] did not pay certain contingent commissions. Id.; see, e.g., Comm. St., P 73 (XL business plan stating "PSAs are a prerequisite for doing business with Marsh Global Broking, and identify preferred markets for Aon . . . [w]e know [Marsh and Aon] will move even more business away from XL unless we provide them some incentive to continue."); Comm. St., P 179 ("Liberty Mutual lost a renewal account despite having met the terms specified by Marsh because there was 'no PSA.'"); Comm. St., P 174 ("Chubb - we are now being heavily penalized by Marsh for not having new contingent commission agreements signed so that we are being systematically excluded from . . . placements that we would otherwise like the chance to write."). Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' non-disclosure policies also facilitated the agreement, claiming that "the documents reveal that brokers were concerned that if disclosure of contingent commissions were made, the door would be open for a non-conspiring broker to come in and steal the business." Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 20; see also Comm. St., PP 76-102; EB St., P 176.

Plaintiffs set [*54] forth facts in the Particularized Statements which they claim demonstrate "actions against interest." Comm. St., PP 14, 15. Some of the statements include allegations that it would be irrational in a non-conspiratorial market "for a broker to cut off his own supply outlets i.e. restrict its business to those paying the largest contingent commissions, unless the other major brokers went along with the arrangement;" "for insurers to pay contingent commissions for access to a broker's business unless its other major rivals did so as well;" "for a broker to protect an insurer partner (i.e., by not bidding renewals or permitting it to raise a bid), at the expense of a client;" "for the insurers to refuse to bid on business or to submit a falsely inflated bid, in order to protect the business of a rival insurer;" "for insurers to allow their proprietary information to be disseminated to other insurers by the brokers;" and "for insurers to fail to make Form 5500 disclosures at the behest of a broker." See Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 21.

Finally, Plaintiffs claim that all of the above-mentioned facts and [*55] categories of facts support the existence of the broker-centered and global conspiracies. Id. 23. Plaintiffs claim that "[b]ecause each broker had relationships with multiple insurers and each insurer had relationships with multiple brokers, and because detailed information about the contingent commission arrangements, and what they bought, were freely available among all, a global conspiracy may be inferred." Id. at 24. Further, Plaintiffs explain that "[r]ather than operating as an amorphous conspiracy with 50 unconnected members, the global conspiracy operated through the interdependence of more organized and controlled subparts - i.e. the broker-centered wheels." Id. While Plaintiffs claim that this parallel adoption of anticompetitive business practices by the broker-centered conspiracies may, on its own, support an inference of collusion, Plaintiffs contend that they have put forth facts that demonstrate the participation of many insurers in the conspiracies and mechanisms through which participants shared information and enabled participants to monitor the actions of their coconspirators. Id. at 25.

B. Sherman Act, Section 1

Section 1 of the [*56] Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To properly plead a violation of Section 1, a plaintiff must allege "(1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted action was illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action." Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 442 (3d Cir. 1997).

The first element, concerted action, constitutes the "very essence of a section 1 claim." Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 998 (3d Cir. 1994) (noting that "unilateral action, no matter what its motivation, cannot violate [section] 1") (quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 110 (3d Cir. 1980)). The Third Circuit has stated that "[a] general allegation of conspiracy without a statement of the facts is an allegation of a legal conclusion and insufficient of itself to constitute [*57] a cause of action." Com. of Pa. ex rel. Zimmerman v. PepsiCo, Inc., 836 F.2d 173, 182 (3d Cir. 1988). Only "allegations of conspiracy which are particularized . . . will be deemed sufficient." Id. at 181 (quoting Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding, Inc., 641 F.Supp. 1359, 1370 (D.N.J. 1986); id. at 182 (stating that, on a motion to dismiss, plaintiffs must "present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.'") (citations omitted). To adequately allege concerted activity, Plaintiffs are not required, at this stage of the proceedings, to provide all the details of the alleged conspiracies. Id. (quoting Black & Yates, Inc. v. Mahogany Asso., 129 F.2d 227, 231-32 (3d Cir. 1941)), but they must, at a minimum, "plead the facts constituting the conspiracy, its object and accomplishment," such as "the date of the alleged conspiracy," or "its attendant circumstances." Id.; see also *Mowrer v. Armour Pharmaceutical Co., Civ. No. 92-6905, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18367, at * 8 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 30, 1993)* (holding that plaintiffs must plead "the general composition [*58] of the conspiracy, some or all of its broad objectives, and [each defendant's] general role in that conspiracy.").

The requirement that conspiracy allegations be pled with adequate specificity is not a mere technicality, but rather, is grounded in considerations of judicial economy and fairness to the defendants. Zimmerman, 836 F.2d at 182 ("It is simply not fair to the defendants, and it would be an onerous imposition on the judicial process, to permit litigation to go forward on the basis of [] conclusory and speculative allegations."); see also Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1409, at 55 (2003) ("Conspiracy allegations frequently name one or two specific persons or firms and also sweep in other unnamed conspirators. The openness of the charge invites confusion where only a few of the possible conspirators have engaged in readily proved collaborative conduct."); see finally In re Tower Air, Inc., 416 F.3d 229, 237 (3d Cir. 2005) ("[e]ven at the pleading stage, a defendant deserves fair notice of the general factual background for the plaintiff's claims.').

This requirement is also particularly important where, as [*59] here, Plaintiffs' conspiracy claims are predicated on fraud, as previously determined by the Court, and thus are subject to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). [2] In Lum v. Bank of America, the Third Circuit held that antitrust and RICO claims based on theories of fraud are subject, like explicit fraud claims, to the heightened pleading requirement of Rule 9(b). 361 F.3d at 228-29. The Court noted that "generally, the pleading standard for Section 1 claims is the short and concise statement standard of Rule 8(a)," but stated that "[b]ecause plaintiffs allege that the defendants accomplished the goal of their conspiracy through fraud, the Amended Complaint is subject to Rule 9(b)." Id. at 228 (emphasizing that under Rule 9(b), "all averments of fraud . . . shall be stated with particularity.") (emphasis in original). In the Court's October 3rd Opinion, Plaintiffs were required to submit Statements of Particularity which conformed to the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b).

[2] Rule 9(b) provides: "In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally."

[*60] C. Per Se Analysis

In assessing liability under Section 1, courts generally evaluate agreements pursuant to one of three approaches. Continental Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 277 F.3d 499, 508-509 (4th Cir. 2002) ("[T]he Supreme Court has authorized three methods of analysis: (1) per se analysis, for obviously anticompetitive restraints, (2) quick-look analysis, for those with some procompetitive justification, and (3) the full 'rule of reason,' for restraints whose net impact on competition is particularly difficult to determine."). "Generally, conduct alleged to violate the Sherman Act is scrutinized under the rule of reason rather than the per se rule, and 'departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect.'" Mid-West Underground Storage, Inc. v. Porter, 717 F.2d 493, 496 (10th Cir. 1983) (quoting Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977)). "It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act." United States v. Topco Assoc., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607-608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). [*61] "Per se rules of illegality are judicial constructs," FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 432-33, 110 S. Ct. 768, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990), "and are based in large part on economic predictions that certain types of activity will more often than not unreasonably restrain competition." United States v. Brown Univ., 5 F.3d 658, 670 (3d Cir. 1993) (citing Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 344, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982)) ("Once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it, it has applied a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable."); Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985) ("[The] per se approach permits categorical judgments with respect to certain business practices that have proved to be predominantly anticompetitive.").

Plaintiffs claim that the alleged horizontal conspiracies to allocate business in this case should be treated as a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Defendants, however, submit that Plaintiffs have not alleged conduct that is per se unlawful. [*62] Defendants insist that Plaintiffs have admitted that there are procompetitive reasons for brokers to seek to consolidate their business with a smaller number of insurers. During oral argument, however, Plaintiffs claimed that they admit nothing of the sort. Rather, Plaintiffs contend that while procompetitive justifications for the partnership agreements and contingent commission agreements could exist, none are present here. Plaintiffs claim that while they do not challenge contingent commission payments or partnership agreements, they do challenge the use of these devices to allocate business, restrict competition and exclude outsiders. Plaintiffs also argue that no procompetitive justification exists for acts such as protecting incumbency and giving first and last looks. Plaintiffs claim this conduct is anticompetitive, exclusionary and used as a means to minimize competition and deter efficiency. Plaintiffs claim that just because it is possible that in a different situation an incentive agreement could be used for procompetitive reasons, that does not make the agreements at issue legitimate. In the Particularized Statements, Plaintiffs allege that "the Broker Defendants and Insurer [*63] Defendants engaged in a per se unlawful scheme to allocate customers and markets through explicit and tacit agreements whereby the brokers would direct the bulk of their business to a limited number of "partner" insurers in exchange for kickbacks paid by the insurers to the brokers, nominally referred to as "contingent commissions." Comm. St., P 1.

Defendants devote a significant portion of their argument in favor of dismissal to the absence of a per se violation. Defendants claim that per se violations involve conduct so inherently anticompetitive that it is per se illegal and so there is no need for a factual inquiry into the anticompetitive effects. Defendants maintain that it is in the unilateral, independent interest of brokers to maximize revenue and thus a horizontal conspiracy cannot be inferred by this conduct.

The per se approach "permits categorical judgments with respect to certain business practices that have proved to be predominantly anticompetitive. Courts can thereby avoid the 'significant costs' in 'business certainty and litigation efficiency' that a full-fledged rule-of-reason inquiry entails." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 289 [*64] (quoting Maricopa Cty. Medical Society, 457 U.S. at 343-44). "Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct." Id. at 290 (quoting National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents of Univ. Of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 103-104, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984)). Defendants claim that the conduct Plaintiffs challenge, the alleged steering by brokers of the bulk of their business to preferred insurers in exchange for contingent commissions, is not per se unlawful. Defendants contend that the "strategic partnerships" are a type of preferred provider agreement, and are commonplace throughout the economy and have consistently held not to be per se illegal. Defendants' Brief, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entries Nos. 823, 846, at 18; citing Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57, 62 (1st Cir. 2004); Quality Auto Body, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 660 F.2d 1195, 1202-1203 (7th Cir. 1981). Defendants claim that preferred provider agreements [*65] may have procompetitive effects and so courts do not treat them as per se unlawful.

A classic example of a per se violation of Section 1 is "an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition . . . This Court has reiterated time and time again that 'horizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.' Such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act." Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49, 111 S. Ct. 401, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1990) (citations omitted). "The essence of a market allocation violation, however, is that competitors apportion the market among themselves and cease competing in another's territory or for another's customers." Mid-West Underground Storage, 717 F.2d at 497.

Because Plaintiffs have alleged the Section 1 claim as a per se violation, even at the pleading stage Plaintiffs must set forth sufficient facts evidencing a horizontal conspiracy involving market or customer allocation in order for their claim to survive a motion to dismiss. The Court will examine Plaintiffs' particularized facts [*66] to determine whether the global conspiracy and/or the broker-centered conspiracies adequately allege Section 1 claims in light of the Court's previous order and the limitations of a per se violation. See Garot Anderson Agencies, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield United, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3446, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 70, 235, at 70, 161 (N.D. Ill. 1993) ("Characterization of an agreement as horizontal or vertical is important because certain horizontal agreements have been declared per se illegal while vertical agreements covering the same subject matter have not.").

D. Global and Broker-Centered Conspiracies

In the October 3rd Opinion, the Court concluded that the allegations regarding the "global conspiracy" lacked sufficient particularity to demonstrate "concerted action" by all of the Defendants under the Sherman Act. The Court stated that "[w]hile the conduct of bid-rigging has been stated with particularity, the pleadings must identify the purported subset of conspirators in this conduct and the nature and scope of each alleged conspirator's role." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig, 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 720, at 26. Further, the Court determined that Plaintiffs [*67] failed to "explain how such a large and diverse group of Defendants acted, combined or conspired as part of a single conspiracy." Id. The Court stated that even at the dismissal stage, Plaintiffs must aver sufficient facts to make the existence of the pleaded conspiracy among so great a number of alleged co-conspirators plausible.

The Complaints also allege the existence of a series of "separate but parallel" conspiracies, "each involving a Defendant Broker and the insurance companies with which each had Contingent Commission Agreements." Comm. Compl., P 429; EB Compl., P 338. The Court concluded that Plaintiffs did not specifically identify the entities which allegedly conspired with each Broker Defendant, rather referred to "the insurance companies with whom [the Broker Defendant] had Contingent Commission Agreements." The Court also concluded that the Plaintiffs did not adequately allege the role of each Defendant in the conspiracy. According to the Court, Plaintiffs did not challenge the legality of contingent commissions, and did not put forth evidence to show that these contingent commissions were more than business relationships. The Court determined that the Plaintiffs did [*68] not plead sufficient facts to adequately allege a Section 1 contract, combination or conspiracy.

1. Express or Implied Agreements

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs have still not alleged facts that show an express or implied agreement existed among the conspirators, and thus have failed to show how the alleged conspiracy among so many Defendants is plausible. Defendants claim that the Complaint and the Particularized Statements consist of allegations "about individual brokers communicating with individual insurers about contingent commission agreements, their purposes, and their effects." Defendants' Brief, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entries Nos. 823, 846, at 7. Defendants also submit that Plaintiffs have failed to establish concerted action, and that Plaintiffs do not allege that any broker agreed with another broker or that any insurer agreed with another insurer to distribute policyholders or placements in any identifiable way. Id. at 8. Defendants claim that Plaintiffs' allegations are devoid of a method for the market allocation, and only allege a few isolated examples of bid-rigging in individual placements. Defendants contend [*69] that it is implausible that insurers would agree and pay for an uncertain scheme and that unilateral "steering" by brokers does not constitute a customer or market allocation. Id. at 9.

Plaintiffs rely on Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darlington-Delaware Co. and In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litigation in support of their position that the facts they have alleged, if proven, support an inference of a horizontal conspiracy. 998 F.2d 1224 (3d Cir. 1993); 385 F.3d 350, 356-61 (3d Cir. 2004). Plaintiffs claim that the facts alleged cannot be viewed in a compartmentalized manner, but rather must be viewed in their totality. Further, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants cannot simply defeat their claims by proffering a plausible rationale for their conduct. Plaintiffs claim that the Particularized Statements allege sufficient facts to show that each of the Defendants in each of the broker-centered conspiracies was "aware that its contract was not an isolated transaction but part of a larger arrangement" the "necessary consequence of which . . . is restraint of interstate commerce." United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 275, 62 S. Ct. 1070, 86 L. Ed. 1461, 1942 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 777 (1942).

[*70] 2. Communication Among Members of the Conspiracy

Defendants also claim that Plaintiffs have not alleged any communications between brokers or between insurers that show a collusive agreement to allocate customers or markets. Defendants' Brief, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry Nos. 823, 846, at 7. Defendants claim that Plaintiffs have not alleged any method for the market allocation (by specific line of insurance, customer, geographic area), and have not alleged that any broker agreed with other brokers or insurers agreed with other insurers to competitive constraints. Plaintiffs maintain that proof of direct communication among the "spokes of the wheel" is not necessary to establish the existence of a "hub and spoke" conspiracy. Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 29. Plaintiffs rely on Masonite, which states "[i]t is not clear what precise point of time each appellee became aware of the fact that its contract was not an isolated transaction, but part of a larger arrangement. But it is clear that as the arrangement continued, each became familiar with its purpose and [*71] scope." Masonite, 316 U.S. at 274-75. Plaintiffs also note the Supreme Court's decision in Interstate Circuit, which found that "[i]t is elementary that an unlawful conspiracy may be and often is formed without simultaneous action or agreement on the part of the conspirators . . . [a]cceptance by competitors without previous agreement of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act." Id. (citing Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 227, 59 S. Ct. 467, 83 L. Ed. 610 (1939)).

Plaintiffs point to Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. FTC, 221 F.3d 928 (7th Cir. 2000) for guidance regarding the inferences that can be made when establishing a horizontal conspiracy. "[T]he critical question here is whether substantial evidence supported the Commission's finding that there was a horizontal agreement . . . It acknowledges that such an agreement may be proved by either direct or circumstantial evidence." Id. at 935. Plaintiffs claim that they have put forth sufficient evidence [*72] to conclude that each broker was the "ringmaster" of a horizontal arrangement to allocate premium and reduce competition among members of each broker-centered conspiracy and that the members of each broker-centered conspiracy had a connection with one another and were aware of each others involvement. Plaintiffs also contend that they have supplied sufficient facts to describe the facilitation of communications among the participants and that the formation of "strategic partnerships" entailed a dramatic departure from past business practices. Plaintiffs claim that there is direct evidence in the Marsh and Willis broker-centered conspiracies of collusive arrangements such as submission of bids to protect the business of one another. See Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 33.

3. Global Conspiracy

Plaintiffs claim that they have set forth adequate evidence to support an inference of a global conspiracy. Plaintiffs claim that the alleged broker-centered conspiracies operated in a parallel fashion. Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 34-35. Plaintiffs [*73] also claim that "the partnership arrangements were created out of a motive by the broker to increase its contingent commission revenue at the expense of the interests of its clients" and that "the brokers sacrificed their clients' interests in the best product at the best price, for the interests of their co-conspirators, in order to increase their short-term profits." Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 37. Defendants contend that "strategic partnerships" are a type of preferred provider agreement. Plaintiffs, however, maintain that "while it may be true that some preferred provider agreements have procompetitive effects, these agreements, as detailed in the Statements did not." Id. at 39. Plaintiffs cite to several cases which they claim support their theory that lawful acts may be utilized for an unlawful purpose. See, e.g., Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 707, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962) ("Acts which are themselves legal lose that character when they become constituent elements of an unlawful scheme.").

Plaintiffs claim that it was not in the economic self-interest of the insurers [*74] to pay for access to a broker's book of business in the absence of an understanding that their major rivals were making similar payments. Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 38. Plaintiffs claim that while it is "possible that an insurer would provide economic incentives to a broker so as to encourage the delivery of certain types of quality of business in order to meet its strategic objectives, that is not what is alleged here. Here, the Statements allege that insurers made those payments because they were required to do so in order to access a broker's book of business." Id. (emphasis in original). Plaintiffs claim that "the evidence shows that insurers were reluctant to pay contingent commissions, at least at the level demanded, and if they could have secured premium volume without making the payment, they would have done so." Id. (citing In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599, 615 (7th Cir. 1997) ("reluctant accomplices" are not less liable for that fact).

4. Mid-Sized Brokers and Other Defendants' Separate Arguments

While certain Defendants [*75] [3] join the Commercial Defendants' Omnibus Motion to Dismiss, they also write separately regarding particular reasons why Plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed against them. The Chubb and Fireman's Fund Defendants claim that the Complaint and the Particularized Statements are devoid of allegations that constitute bid-rigging against them. XL claims that there are only a few allegations against them contained in Plaintiffs' pleadings, and these allegations fail due to a lack of specificity as to any fraudulent conduct by XL. XL also contends that Plaintiffs lack standing since Plaintiffs fail to allege that any one of the named Plaintiffs was defrauded by them and the action is "merely a proposed class action." XL's Brief, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 814, at 3 (emphasis in original). The Midsized Brokers claim that Plaintiffs have again failed to sufficiently plead claims against them regarding the global and broker-centered conspiracies, and that Plaintiffs lack standing to assert allegations against them since there are no allegations that any of the named Plaintiffs were their customers. The Berkshire Defendants contend that there is no factual [*76] basis for their liability as their direct activities with brokers were not unlawful and they are not liable for their subsidiaries' actions. CNA Defendants submit that the allegations against them do not constitute bid-rigging claims or implicate CNA in the customer or market allocation scheme or the Willis-centered conspiracy. Defendants AXIS, Berkshire, Crum & Forster and RLI argue that Plaintiffs have expressly made no claim of bid-rigging against them and there are no facts to suggest any horizontal coordination aside from the alleged bid-rigging. They contend that the allegations against them are based solely on the steering of business to certain of the insurers, which is not unlawful, and that there are no allegations that they declined to compete. BB&T Defendants contend that there are no bid-rigging claims against them, and that the steering of business is the only activity plead to implicate them in the alleged conspiracies. BB&T Defendants also contend that if the federal claims are dismissed against them, that the state claims should follow due to a lack of standing.

[3] Chubb Defendants, Fireman's Fund Defendants, XL Defendants, Mid-Sized Broker Defendants, Berkshire Defendants, CNA Defendants, AXIS, Berkshire, Crum & Forster and RLI Defendants and BB&T Defendants.

[*77] Plaintiffs claim that despite these certain brokers' supplemental briefs which assert that no facts are alleged to tie them to the global conspiracy, each of the mid-sized brokers is "alleged to have participated in broker-centered arrangements that operated in a similar manner to the described broker-centered conspiracies, even if a specific broker-centered conspiracy has not been alleged." Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 46. Plaintiffs also address the arguments submitted on behalf of AXIS, Berkshire, Crum & Forster and RLI, in which Defendants claim there is no evidence of horizontal coordination among any insurers. Plaintiffs claim that each of these Defendants is alleged to have entered into strategic partnerships with one or more of the Broker Defendants to receive guaranteed access to business and protection from competition. [4] Id. at 47. Plaintiffs claim that the "slight evidence rule" applies here with regard to these Defendants. Plaintiffs cite to United States v. Consolidated Packaging Corp., 575 F.2d 117, 126 (7th Cir. 1978), which states "[o]nce the conspiracy has been established, [*78] slight evidence is needed to connect a particular participant . . . Even a single act may be sufficient to draw a defendant within the ambit of a conspiracy where the act is such that one may infer from it an intent to participate in the unlawful enterprise." Plaintiffs also claim that the Statements allege that the midsized brokers engaged in the same conduct with respect to their strategic partners as the other members of the conspiracy, and that an inference that they joined the conspiracy is warranted. Id. at 48.

Regarding the standing arguments set forth by certain Defendants, Plaintiffs claim that they allege that all of the Defendants [*79] participated in the global conspiracy that harmed all of the Plaintiffs and the members of the proposed class, regardless of whether they had direct dealings with each of the Defendants. Plaintiffs recognize that the "Defendants' standing arguments are relevant only if the Court concludes that the Statements do not adequately allege a horizontal conspiracy." Plaintiffs address HRH's contention that the Court should not consider the HRH-centered conspiracy because there are no allegations that any of the named plaintiffs retained HRH. Id. at 49. Plaintiffs, however, contend that the "allegations concerning the HRH broker-centered conspiracy are properly considered in connection with the global conspiracy that HRH is alleged to have participated in, regardless of whether any of the plaintiffs dealt directly with HRH." Id. Plaintiffs also contend that they have sufficiently alleged that Berkshire is responsible for its participation in the Marsh-centered conspiracy as a preferred carrier. Additionally, Plaintiffs claim that Berkshire may be held indirectly liable under an agency theory for the conduct of its subsidiaries.

E. Plaintiffs' Particularized Statements Do Not [*80] Sufficiently Allege the Necessary Facts to Support a Horizontal Conspiracy to Allocate the Market or Customers

While courts are reluctant to dismiss antitrust claims, Plaintiffs are still required to make a sufficient showing that the behavior alleged falls within the purview of prohibited behavior under the Sherman Act. In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F.Supp. 2d 517, 529 (D.N.J. 2004) ("While courts should be reluctant to grant dismissals in antitrust cases, it is axiomatic that a plaintiff asserting an antitrust claim must plead a quantum of facts sufficient to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss."). Courts have held that because "[t]he existence of an agreement is 'the very essence of a section 1 claim,'" a plaintiff is required to prove "'some form of concerted action.'" In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 356-57 (quoting Alvord-Polk, 37 F.3d at 999). "In other words, there must be a 'unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of minds' or a 'conscious commitment to a common scheme.'" Id. (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

---

[4] Plaintiffs claim that RLI and Berkshire are alleged to be participants in the Marsh broker-centered conspiracy and that Crum & Forster participated in four conspiracies (Aon, Gallagher Marsh and Willis) and Axis in three conspiracies (Aon, Marsh and Willis). Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket Entry No. 849, at 47, n. 52.

1. [*81] Horizontal Conspiracy

The first question confronted by this Court is whether the challenged conduct involves a "horizontal" restraint among competitors. The Court is satisfied, at this stage in the proceedings, with the level of specificity contained in the Particularized Statements which identify the majority of the conspirators and their roles in the conspiracy. In re Elec. Carbon Prods. Antitrust Litig., 333 F.Supp. 2d 303, 311-12 (D.N.J. 2004) ("if 'inferences can be fairly drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators' which indicate that they participated in the conspiracy, the Court should construe the Complaint 'liberally in the plaintiffs' favor' at the motion to dismiss stage and allow the case to proceed. Indeed, 'in the antitrust context, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.'"(quoting Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1976))).

Plaintiffs have roughly identified time periods of the alleged conspiracies, the participants and some of the behavior which Plaintiffs [*82] claim show a concerted agreement to collude. As noted in Interstate Circuit, if the "spokes" of the conspiracy have communicated and agreed with one another or accepted the alleged practices based on the participation of others in the scheme, a common conspiracy may be inferred. 306 U.S. at 222-23; see also Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764 ("[T]he antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the [defendant] and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective."); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946) (evidence must show "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.").

In this case, Plaintiffs have alleged that in the 1990's, brokers decided to consolidate their markets, which they contend was a radical change in the way they previously did business. Plaintiffs allege that the Broker Defendants communicated this strategy to prospective insurance partner carriers and to each other. Plaintiffs claim that the partner carriers knew who the other carriers [*83] were, the tiers or levels of preferred status and who was on them and what level of contingent commission payments were necessary to reach that status. Plaintiffs claim the insurers had such details regarding these arrangements between insurers and brokers such as the amount of contingent commissions paid. Plaintiffs also allege these arrangements were disclosed despite confidentiality provisions and that brokers disclosed information to the insurers regarding premium volume they delivered to the other insurers. Plaintiffs submit that they have put forth facts regarding the exchange of information regarding broker agreements directly between the insurer partners and collective information distribution from the brokers to a group of insurers. Plaintiffs assert that the insurers knew the identity of the market partners, the level of participation and the details of the arrangements. Plaintiffs allege some instances of bid rigging among the insurers. Plaintiffs put forth facts that they claim demonstrate mechanisms to facilitate the conspiracy, including organizational structures, contingent commission agreements, a national study group and surveys. Plaintiffs also assert that there were [*84] methods to discipline members of the conspiracy such as brokers stopping placements or ceasing to protect renewal business. Plaintiffs assert actions against interest, including that it was not in the insurers interest to pay contingent commissions for access to a broker's business unless other insurers were participating as well.

Based on the Complaint and Particularized Statements, viewing all of the allegations as true, Plaintiffs have established facts which could show, if proven, that a horizontal collusion among the insurers was plausible in the broker-centered conspiracies. Plaintiffs are not required, at this stage, to allege all facts supporting a horizontal conspiracy, however, there is a threshold showing that must be satisfied in order for Plaintiffs to move forward. "The question of whether a combination in restraint of trade is illegal per se or subject to the 'rule of reason' is influenced by whether the restraints are horizontal or vertical, that is, whether they stem from an agreement among competitors or are the result of an agreement between parties at different levels of the distribution system." *Shulton, Inc. v. Optel Corp., 1986 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19775, 69-70 (D.N.J. 1986). [*85] The Court's prior order required Plaintiffs to set forth facts that show the alleged horizontal conspiracy was plausible. At this stage, it appears that the communications among the competitor insurers and the mechanisms in place to exchange information and police the alleged conspiracy, could have made this relationship plausible when viewing the facts as true. However, while it might have been plausible that the Defendants agreed to engage in some sort of behavior, it cannot survive as a horizontal conspiracy unless what the competitors agreed to do was "unlawful." Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764; American Tobacco Co., 328 U.S. at 810. While the allegations are sufficient at this stage to infer that the Insurer Defendants agreed to participate in the contingent commission agreements with the Broker Defendants and exchanged information regarding those agreements, the allegations regarding the common, unlawful scheme is unclear. There are not sufficient allegations that it was the Insurer Defendants, at the same level of competition, who participated in the division of the market or customers or agreed to such an unlawful scheme [*86] as initiated by the Broker Defendants. While there was an exchange of information about these contingent commission agreements, which Plaintiffs allege were a method by which the market or customers were allocated among the insurers, Plaintiffs have not shown that the insurers colluded to allocate business.

2. Per Se Violation - Market or Customer Allocation

While Plaintiffs have set forth particularized facts that support the possible existence of a horizontal relationship among the Defendant Insurers, the Court must assess whether the alleged restraint is anticompetitive. Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 298 ("A plaintiff seeking application of the per se rule must present a threshold case that the challenged activity falls into a category likely to have predominantly anticompetitive effects."). The allegations supporting the horizontal market or customer allocation scheme are lacking. The Court is not persuaded that the showing of a per se violation, i.e. a horizontal conspiracy to allocate the market or customers, has been set forth in the pleadings or the Particularized Statements. Due to the nature of their allegations, and [*87] the fact that Plaintiffs forgo a rule of reason analysis, they must allege activity which has been designated per se illegal. In the Complaint and Particularized Statements there is an absence of a common plan or scheme to divide the market among the alleged conspirators in some unlawful manner. Plaintiffs claim that Defendants utilized legitimate practices, such as contingent commission agreements, to facilitate an anticompetitive and exclusionary scheme. However, the scheme that Plaintiffs allege is not apparent. In this case, it appears that there were, in some instances, "tiers" of defendants who received benefits for providing certain contingent payments to brokers. The allegations, however, are devoid of how the markets were divided or customers allocated to further this scheme, and that the Insurer Defendants agreed to participate or further this particular allocation of the brokers' business. While Plaintiffs will not, at this stage or perhaps ever, possess all of the details of how this alleged operation was executed, it would appear that there should be some sort of method of allocation of the customers or market of which insurers were aware to make the alleged broker-centered [*88] conspiracies plausible.

Without some sort of anticompetitive conduct, this claim cannot survive, regardless of how Plaintiffs characterize the relationship between the brokers and the insurers. Facts have been alleged to indicate a contingent commission program being conducted by the brokers who received certain amounts of commissions from a fixed number of insurers who allegedly paid higher commissions to receive more of the brokers' business. That alone is not a horizontal conspiracy to allocate the market. Horizontal conspiracies allocating territories or dividing up customers have been held to be per se illegal. See, e.g., Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 734, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988); Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984); Topco Assoc., Inc., 405 U.S. at 608. Here, Plaintiffs have alleged that the participants in each broker-centered conspiracy "agreed and understood that members of the conspiracy purchased a flow of premium and protection from competition in return for contingent commission payments." Plaintiffs' Opposition, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket [*89] Entry No. 849, at 2. But the Plaintiffs have failed to allege that what was purchased constitutes a market or customer allocation scheme.

Plaintiffs allege that the brokers funneled the bulk of their business to a select number of preferred insurers, and insurers were invited to be among a select few to whom a broker's business was directed once they entered into contingent commission agreements and agreed to make the payments in exchange for the business. Id. at 4-5. Plaintiffs claim that the aim of the conspiracy was "the allocation of premium volume to preferred insurers and the protection of insurers from competition." Id. at 13. Plaintiffs have set forth an alleged instance of a "customer allocation scheme" among "Broker Defendant HRH and Insurer Defendants CNA, St. Paul/Travelers and The Hartford to divide HRH's portfolio of 'select commercial' accounts among its three partner insurers." Id. at 15 (referring to Comm St., P 568). Plaintiffs claim that documents exist which describe these insurers' understanding of the amount of business to be divided among these three carriers as well as the arrangements each carrier made with the broker. Id. (referring to Comm. [*90] St., PP 570-572). Specifically, Plaintiffs cite to the Assurance of Discontinuance entered into by St. Paul/Travelers with the State of New York, which states that "in return for hidden contingent commissions to HRH, the Big Three carriers would split among themselves more than 80% of HRH's select commercial accounts nationwide . . . [the insurers] understood . . . that HRH offered available books of business to only one Big Three Carrier at a time. Only if the chosen carrier chose not to take a large enough share of the book would the business be offered to another Big Three carrier. Travelers knew who the other members of the Big Three were and all agreed not to compete for available books of business on the basis of commission paid to HRH." Id. at 15-16 (citing St. Paul AOD at 19). Defendants respond to Plaintiffs reliance on these facts as improper, as they contend "[t]he Assurance contains no facts that support an inference of any Sherman Act violation, i.e., any horizontal agreement among Travelers, CNA and/or The Hartford to refrain from competing with each other for policyholders." Defendants' Reply, In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 04-5184, Docket [*91] Entry No. 875, at 5, n. 3. Defendants maintain that Plaintiffs have not alleged facts to establish that the "strategic partnerships" with individual brokers constituted an agreement to "allocate policyholders or placements in any identifiable way, to exclude any insurer or broker from the market, to refrain from competing with one another for any business, or to adopt any other competitive restraints." Id. at 5. The Court is not satisfied that Plaintiffs have set forth sufficient allegations that the conduct alleged, i.e. the consolidation of the insurance markets and the steering of certain customers based on contingent commission payments, constitutes a per se illegal horizontal customer or market allocation scheme. While the Court will not assess the merits of Plaintiffs' allegations at this juncture, it is necessary for Plaintiffs to adequately allege conduct which constitutes market or customer allocation and not just the steering of business to preferred partners.

3. Leave to Amend the Complaint and/or Revise the Particularized Statements

While Plaintiffs claim it is clear that the brokers were the "ringmasters" of the alleged conspiracies, it is not [*92] clear whether the insurers themselves were collaborating or agreeing in some way to further this per se illegal market or customer allocation scheme. Instances of bid-rigging may show that there was collusion among the insurers, however, these allegations are limited to the Marsh and Willis broker-centered conspiracies. In terms of a global conspiracy, the Court is permitted to make an inference as to its existence if Plaintiffs show that the conspiracy is plausible. To allege such a conspiracy, Plaintiffs may set forth allegations of parallel anticompetitive behavior which was the "product of collusion rather than coincidence, and may also set forth "plus factors" at the summary judgment stage to strengthen the plausibility of the conspiracy pleading. Twombly v. Bell Atl. Corp., 425 F.3d 99, 114 (2d Cir. 2005) (citing In re Pressure Sensitive Labelstock Antitrust Litig., 356 F.Supp. 2d 484, 492 (M.D. Pa. 2005) (noting that "a plaintiff need not allege the existence of . . . plus factors in order to plead an antitrust cause of action")(quoting Lum, 361 F.3d 230)).

The Plaintiffs must allege that the behavior of Defendants is anticompetitive [*93] and indicative of a per se violation of the Sherman Act to establish the broker-centered conspiracies. If and when Plaintiffs are able to amend their Complaints and/or revise their statements to set forth the alleged anticompetitive market or customer allocation scheme, the Court will assess the plausibility of a global conspiracy. See, e.g., In re Elec. Carbon Prods. Antitrust Litig., 333 F.Supp. 2d at 312 ("Simply using the 'global term 'defendants' to apply to numerous parties without any specific allegations' that would tie each particular defendant to the conspiracy is not sufficient. However, it is also true that, if '[i]nferences can be fairly drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators' which indicate that they participated in the conspiracy, the Court should construe the Complaint 'liberally in the plaintiffs' favor at the motion to dismiss stage and allow the case to proceed.") (citations omitted).

Because so much time has been invested in this case by all parties, and because courts should construe Plaintiffs' allegations liberally at this stage of the proceedings, this Court grants Plaintiffs leave to amend their Section 1 claims and further [*94] revise the Particularized Statements setting forth the alleged market or customer allocation scheme and Defendants' agreement to engage in such a scheme in order to comply with the pleading requirements as set forth above. The Court recognizes that many of the Mid-Size Broker Defendants and others wrote separately regarding bid-rigging allegations and standing. Many of these arguments are dependent upon the revised Particularized Statements and the Court's determination of whether a global conspiracy may be inferred. Thus, Plaintiffs are also permitted to set forth additional facts or allegations regarding the aforementioned Defendants and their roles in the alleged scheme. Defendants may file a subsequent motion to dismiss, motion on the pleadings or motion for summary judgment (after the completion of fact discovery).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motions to Dismiss are granted. Plaintiffs' claims alleging violations of 15 U.S.C. § 1 are dismissed without prejudice. The Court will permit Plaintiffs one final opportunity to amend these claims and/or revise the Particularized Statements within thirty days of the entry of this Opinion. [*95] An appropriate form of Order accompanies this Opinion.

Dated: April 5, 2007

s/ Garrett E. Brown, JR., U.S.D.J.

Gibson v. Office of the AG of Cal.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

April 10, 2007, Decided; April 10, 2007, Filed

CV 07-00838 FMC (JCx)

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105205 *

PAULA LAUREN GIBSON, ESQ., and ANNETTE D. GOODE-PARKER, Plaintiffs, vs. OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA; BILL LOCKYER; RICHARD M. FRANK; JAMES THOMAS GREENE; KATHLEEN FOOTE; LOUIS MAURO; JACOB APPLESMITH; BARBARA MOTZ; and DOES 1-10, Defendants.

Prior History: Gibson v. Office of the AG of Cal., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105204 (C.D. Cal., Feb. 28, 2007)

Core Terms

allegations, permission, damages, rights, cause of action, amended complaint, motion to dismiss, grievance, amend, reasonable accommodation, public concern, first cause, Whistleblower, violations, adverse employment action, limitations, employees, overtime, lawsuit

Counsel: [*1] Paula Lauren Gibson, Plaintiff, Pro se, Los Angeles, CA USA.

For Paula Lauren Gibson, Annette D Goode-Parker, Plaintiffs: Mark A McBride, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Mark McBride PC, Beverly Hills, CA USA.

Annette D Goode-Parker, Plaintiff, Pro se, Los Angeles, CA USA.

For Office of The Attorney General State of California, Bill Lockyer, Richard M Frank, James Thomas Greene, Kathleen Foote, Louis Mauro, Jacob Applesmith, Barbara Motz, Defendants: Stephanie L Quinn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Murphy Campbell Alliston and Quinn, Sacramento, CA USA; Thomas Allen Cregger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cregger and Chalfant, Sacramento, CA USA.

Judges: FLORENCE-MARIE COOPER, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: FLORENCE-MARIE COOPER

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFFS' FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT AND DENYING MOTION TO STRIKE

This matter is before the Court on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and Motion to Strike Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint (docket no. 32), filed on March 23, 2007. The Court has read and considered the moving, opposition, and reply documents submitted in connection with the motion. The Court deems this matter appropriate for decision without oral argument. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; Local Rule 7-15. Accordingly, the hearing set for April [*2] 16, 2007, is removed from the Court's calendar. For the reasons and in the manner set forth below, the Court hereby GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and DENIES the Motion to Strike as moot.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND[1]

Plaintiff Paula Lauren Gibson ("Gibson") has been employed as a Deputy Attorney General ("DAG") for the State of California since 1984. (FAC ¶ 1.) In or about 2001, she was transferred to the Antitrust Law Section from the Health, Education and Welfare Section, pursuant to an agreement entered into between herself and Defendant Office of the Attorney General ("OAG") to resolve complaints of disability discrimination and denial of reasonable accommodations she had made to the State Personnel Board and Department of Fair Employment and Housing. (Id. at ¶¶ 110, 112, Ex. 14.) Gibson is the sole African-American DAG in the Antitrust Law Section. (Id. at ¶ 5.)

Co-Plaintiff Annette Goode-Parker ("Goode-Parker") is a Senior Legal Analyst (paralegal) in the statewide Antitrust Law Section and provides many of the "reasonable accommodation" services required by Gibson. (Id. at ¶¶ 2, 6, 118, Ex. 14.) She is also the only African-American in her position in the Antitrust Section. (Id. at [*3] ¶ 6.) At some unspecified point in time, she resided in the same household as Gibson. (Id. at ¶¶ 68, 85(5).)

On June 25, 2003, Gibson filed a private legal malpractice action in the Los Angeles Superior Court, on behalf of Goode-Parker and against California attorney Harold Greenberg ("Greenberg"). (Id. at ¶ 44.) Although the OAG has a policy of requiring attorneys within its employ to receive advance permission to engage in the private practice of law, Gibson did not seek such permission in connection with her representation of Goode-Parker until April 21, 2004. (Id. at ¶¶ 33-35, 51)[2] Gibson's request was ultimately denied by Defendant Kathleen Foote ("Foote"), Senior Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Section, on the grounds that the existence of a separate and pending claim filed by Greenberg against Gibson with the State Board of Control created a "conflict of interest." (Id. at ¶ 53.) Foote was apparently notified of the pending Board claim by defendant Jacob Applesmith ("Applesmith"), Senior Assistant Attorney General for the Employment, Regulation and Administrative Law Section. (Id.)

In June of 2004, Gibson filed a grievance concerning the denial of her request [*4] to represent Goode-Parker, arguing, inter alia, that the OAG's policy of requiring advance permission for engaging in the private practice of law violated the First Amendment. (Id. at ¶ 57, Ex. 5.) Around the same time, Greenberg filed a lawsuit against the State of California and Gibson individually, which was dismissed as to Gibson by means of an Anti-SLAPP motion in October of 2004. (Id. at ¶ 58.)

On November 19, 2004, Gibson was advised that she would be terminated from her employ with the OAG if she did not withdraw from representing Goode-Parker in the malpractice action, notwithstanding the fact that there had not yet been any formal action regarding her grievance. (Id. at ¶ 59.) Although Gibson protested to Defendant Foote, she ultimately withdrew as requested on December 9, 2004. (Id. at ¶¶ 60, 63.) However, Defendant James Thomas Greene ("Greene"), the Chief Assistant Attorney General for the Public Rights Division, agreed, via separate email, to consider review of Gibson's June 2004 grievance. (Id. at ¶ 62, Ex. 7.)

On December 30, 2004, Greene, acting on the designation of the Attorney General, denied the grievance. (Id. at ¶ 64, Ex. 5.) Greene noted that "it is the Department's view that [*5] given the breadth of law dealt with by this Office, it is extremely difficult for a [DAG] to engage in the private practice of law and not come into conflict with the Department's interests or those of a client." (Ex. 5 at 104-05.) He further noted that the prior approval process is essential to be "an effective deterrent against conflicts between a public employee's official duties and his or her outside activities," and is not an unconstitutional "prior restraint." (Id. at 105-06.)

Gibson appealed the denial of her grievance to "the next level." (FAC ¶ 64.) On February 25, 2005, Defendant Richard Frank, Chief Deputy Attorney General, rendered a determination upholding the denial. (Id. at ¶ 65, Ex. 10.) Specifically, Frank noted that he agreed "with CAAG Greene's conclusions that the Department's pre-approval

[1] All facts are taken from the allegations set forth in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), and the Exhibits attached thereto, as indicated herein.

[2] As discussed in the Court's prior order, the OAG's policy is embodied in paragraph 9 of a comprehensive "Incompatible Activities Statement," adopted pursuant to Cal. Gov't. Code § 19990. (See id. at ¶ 35, Ex. 2.)

requirement is not an unconstitutional prior restraint and that [Gibson's] involvement in the malpractice lawsuit created a conflict of interest." (Ex. 10 at 119.) Plaintiff appealed Frank's decision to the Department of Personnel Administration; that appeal was subsequently denied. (FAC ¶ 67.)

In the interim, Gibson requested and received permission to represent herself in connection with [*6] two additional legal matters related to the underlying Greenberg malpractice suit. First, on January 21, 2005, she was granted permission to appeal a sanctions order that had been issued against her in that lawsuit, subject to certain limitations. (Id. at ¶ 69, Ex. 11 at 135.) Those limitations included, inter alia, that (1) the representation be confined to specific issues; (2) OAG resources not be used and/or that Gibson's affiliation with the OAG not be invoked; and (3) any criticisms of Gibson's performance by the court be promptly communicated to Greene. (Ex. 11 at 137.) Second, on December 1, 2005, Gibson was granted permission to file a malicious prosecution action against Greenberg in response to Greenberg's litigation against her. (Id. at ¶ 72; Ex. 11 at 121-22.) That permission was also conditioned upon Gibson's compliance with certain conditions, including but not limited to (1) that she not "disparage the Office of the Attorney General or its policies, including the incompatibility policy"; (2) that OAG resources not be utilized; and (3) that any criticisms expressed by the court be reported. (Ex. 11 at 121-22.)

Gibson appealed the imposition of the limitations in connection [*7] with the grant of permission to pursue the sanctions litigation, but her appeal was denied by Defendant Frank. (Id. at ¶ 70.) Plaintiff requested an appeal of the limitations imposed in connection with the malicious prosecution action on or about December 14, 2005, but no action has been taken on that request. (Id. at ¶ 73.) However, the malicious prosecution case was dismissed in its entirety in when the court sustained Greenberg's demurrer on an "unclean hands" defense. (Id. at ¶ 80.)

Separate and apart from her requests for permission to engage in the outside practice of law, Gibson requested certain "reasonable accommodations" from her employer for herself and Goode-Parker, in or about October 2004. Specifically, Gibson requested (1) a flexible work schedule; and (2) modification of Goode-Parker's additional duties in order to maximize the time she would be available to assist Gibson. (Id. at ¶ 100.) That request was denied on November 19, 2004. (Id. at ¶ 103.) Subsequent to that time, Gibson and Goode-Parker were purportedly subjected to additional, adverse employment actions, including but not limited to the denial of challenging assignments/reassignment of cases, denial of overtime [*8] compensation, and negative performance evaluations. (See id. at ¶¶ 88, 104, 118.)

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On December 11, 2006, Plaintiffs filed a Complaint in the Superior Court of the State of California, County of Los Angeles, alleging various violations of their Constitutional rights, as well as claims for breach of contract, interference with contract and contractual advantage, and violations of California's "Whistleblower Protection Acts," Cal. Gov't. Code §§ 8547-8547.12. Defendants removed the action to this Court on February 5, 2007. On February 9, 2007, they filed a Motion to Dismiss and Motion to Strike.

On February 28, 2007, the Court issued a written order granting the Motion to Dismiss. The Court dismissed the first cause of action (under 42 U.S.C. § 1983) with prejudice against Defendant OAG and Defendants Lockyer, Frank, Applesmith and Mauro in their official capacities. All other causes of action against all other Defendants were dismissed without prejudice to Plaintiffs' filing of an amended complaint to address the specific defects identified by the Court.

Plaintiffs filed the FAC on March 13, 2007. By means of the present motion, Defendants once again seek dismissal of all claims against them. In the alternative, [*9] they move to strike paragraphs 138 and 140 of the FAC, along with Plaintiffs' prayer for punitive damages, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f).

DISCUSSION

I. Motion to Dismiss

A. Legal Standard

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permits a defendant to seek dismissal of a complaint that "fail[s] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The Court will not dismiss claims for relief unless the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of the claims that would entitle him to relief. Thompson v. Davis, 295 F.3d 890, 895 (9th Cir. 2002); see also Steckman v. Hart Brewing, Inc., 143 F.3d 1293, 1295 (9th Cir. 1998). All material factual allegations in the complaint are assumed to be true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Nursing Home Pension Fund, Local 144 v. Oracle Corp., 380 F.3d 1226, 1229 (9th Cir. 2004) ("The general rule for 12(b)(6) motions is that allegations of material fact made in the complaint should be taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.") (citing Burgert v. Lokelani Bernice Pauahi Bishop Trust, 200 F.3d 661, 663 (9th Cir. 2000)). However, the Court "is not required to accept legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations if those conclusions cannot be reasonably drawn from the facts alleged." Clegg v. Cult Awareness Network, 18 F.3d 752, 755 (9th Cir. 1994) (internal citations omitted).

If the Court dismisses the complaint, it must decide whether to grant leave to amend. Denial of leave to amend is "improper unless it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by any amendment." Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005). However, [*10] the district court's discretion to deny leave to amend is decidedly broader where the plaintiff has previously filed an amended complaint. Miller v. Yokohama Tire Corp., 358 F.3d 616, 622 (9th Cir. 2004) ("Where the plaintiff has previously filed an amended complaint, as Miller has done here, the district court's discretion to deny leave to amend is 'particularly broad.'").

B. Plaintiffs' Claims for Relief

1. First Cause of Action—Violation of Rights under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1983

a. First Amendment Claims

The first cause of action in the FAC is entitled "Violation of Plaintiff's [sic] First Amendment Right to Assembly and Petition for Redress," pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1983, against Defendants Lockyer, Frank, Greene, Foote, Metz, Applesmith, and Mauro, in their individual capacities. Although the Court admonished Plaintiffs, via its prior dismissal order, to "clarify the specific unlawful actions at issue and the nature of the Constitutional violations (Federal and State) alleged," Plaintiffs have in instead added additional, disjointed allegations (divided into three "counts"), as well as substantial paragraphs of legal argument. However, the Court understands that the gravamen of Plaintiffs' first cause of action continues to be that Defendants' actions in denying Gibson permission to represent Goode-Parker, and/or [*11] in imposing certain restrictions on Gibson's ability to otherwise engage in private legal practice, deprived Plaintiffs of their First Amendment rights to speech and petition for grievances. As in their original complaint, Plaintiffs allege that the OAG's policy of requiring that attorneys within its employ obtain permission prior to engaging in the private practice of law constitutes an unlawful "prior restraint" and has served to chill them from engaging in "further petitioning activities." (FAC ¶¶ 36, 87-88.) Plaintiffs also allege that the petitioning activities they did engage in resulted in their employer's undertaking the specific acts of retribution enumerated above. (Id. at ¶¶ 90-91.)

In their motion, Defendants raise numerous objections to the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' allegations. Most prominently, Defendants argue that they are entitled to qualified immunity because Plaintiffs have failed to allege that they have engaged in any protected First Amendment activity. The Court agrees.[3]

It is well established in this judicial circuit that "a public employee's litigation must involve a matter of public concern in order to be protected by either the Petition Clause or the Speech Clause of the First Amendment." Rendish v. City of Tacoma, 123 F.3d 1216, 1220 (9th Cir. 1997); see also Settlegoode, 371 F.3d at 513 ("Where plaintiff is a government [*12] employee claiming violations of his First Amendment rights, he must show that two things were clearly established: (1) that his speech involved a matter of public concern, and (2) that the interests served by allowing him to express himself outweighed the state's interest in promoting work-place efficiency and avoiding workplace disruption.") (citing Pickering v. Bd. of Educ., 391 U.S. 563, 568, 20 L. Ed. 2d 811, 88 S. Ct. 1731 (1968)) (additional citation omitted). Whether a public employee's speech addresses a matter of public concern is a determination of law, not fact, which must be "made in light of 'the content, form, and context' of the expressive conduct 'as revealed by the whole record.'" Alpha Energy Savers, Inc. v. Hansen, 381 F.3d 917, 924 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 147-48, 75 L. Ed. 2d 708, 103 S. Ct. 1684 (1983)).[4] As a general matter, "[s]peech that concerns issues about which information is needed or appropriate to enable the members of society to make informed decisions about the operation of their government merits the highest degree of first amendment protection," while "speech that deals with individual personnel disputes and grievances and that would be of no relevance to the public's evaluation of the performance of government agencies, is generally not of public concern." Id. (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Here, the pleadings definitively establish that none of Plaintiffs' [*13] speech and "petitioning" activities in any way involved a matter of public concern. Goode-Parker, through Gibson, filed a private lawsuit for money damages against an attorney she had apparently retained to represent her in a personal, "domestic dispute." (FAC ¶ 44, 48.) Plaintiffs have cited no authority (nor has the Court found any) which stands for the proposition that a lawsuit of such an intimately private nature somehow implicates the public's evaluation of the performance of government agencies. Compare, e.g., Ulrich v. City & County of San Francisco, 308 F.3d 968, 978-979 (9th Cir. 2002) (collecting cases where speech held to be protected involved (1) the allocation of school funds, (2) the failure to grant pay raises that might affect the hiring and retention of police officers, (3) a city's preparedness to respond to fires due to budget cuts and firefighter layoffs, and (4) inappropriate standards affecting patient care at a public hospital).

Plaintiffs' additional "petitioning" activities—appealing the sanctions order against Gibson and filing the malicious prosecution action against Greenberg—likewise involved quintessentially "private" matters. Accordingly, Defendants are entitled to qualified immunity from suit under § 1983 vis a vis Plaintiffs' First Amendment claims, [*14] such that dismissal, with prejudice, is appropriate at this time. See, e.g., Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201, 121 S. Ct. 2151, 150 L. Ed. 2d 272 (2001) ("If no constitutional right would have been violated were the allegations established, there is no necessity for further inquiries concerning qualified immunity.").[5] Because dismissal with prejudice is appropriate on qualified immunity grounds, the Court need not consider Defendants'

---

[3] "Public officials are immune from liability for section 1983 damages 'insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known.'" Settlegoode v. Portland Pub. Schs., 371 F.3d 503, 512-513 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, 102 S. Ct. 2727 (1982)).

[4] Because it involves a threshold question of pure law, it is appropriate to consider Defendants' qualified immunity defense in this case in the context of a motion to dismiss. See, e.g., Weisbuch v. County of Los Angeles, 119 F.3d 778, 783 n.1 (9th Cir. 1997) ("It is illogical to say that something is a question of law, and that it is reviewed de novo, yet that it can never be decided on the pleadings.")

[5] It is clear to the Court that Plaintiffs cannot, by means of an additional opportunity for amendment, plead any facts concerning any speech and petitioning activities that would involve a matter of public concern. As both the original complaint and FAC make clear, Plaintiffs' "petitioning" activities were limited to the filing of the Greenberg malpractice action and various satellite matters.

additional arguments regarding the statute of limitations, the sufficiency of allegations against individual Defendants and/or Goode-Parker's standing.

b. Other Constitutional Claims

To the extent that the FAC purports to state additional claims for violations of 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 and/or 1983 based on racial discrimination in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment or other Constitutional provisions, the allegations are so vague and unclear that the Court cannot make a determination as to their basic nature, much less their sufficiency. However, the Court will afford Plaintiffs one final opportunity to amend their complaint to clearly identify, in concise and plain terms, (1) the nature of the Constitutional rights involved; and (2) the specific actions taken (within the relevant limitations period) by the individual Defendants in violation of those rights.

2. Second Cause [*15] of Action—Retaliation Under the First Amendment Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983

Plaintiffs' second cause of action appears to be duplicative of the first cause of action, in that it alleges that Plaintiffs suffered various adverse employment actions as a result of their "petitioning activities" vis a vis the Greenberg litigation. (FAC ¶¶ 107-08.) As set forth above, Plaintiffs cannot state a claim for relief based on any retaliation taken on account of those activities because they did not involve matters of "public concern." However, Plaintiffs also make vague allegations concerning retaliation allegedly taken in response to a complaint made by Gibson against Defendant Applesmith, their making of requests for reasonable accommodations, and/or their expressing of concerns about racial hostility in the workplace. Given the ambiguous and virtually unintelligible nature of the allegations, the Court will, as with the first cause of action, afford Plaintiffs one additional opportunity to amend their complaint and clearly identify: (1) the protected activity at issue (engaged in during the relevant limitations period); and (2) the adverse employment actions taken. See, e.g., Coszalter v. City of Salem, 320 F.3d 968, 973 (9th Cir. 2003) ("In order to state a claim against a government [*16] employer for violation of the First Amendment, an employee must show (1) that he or she engaged in protected speech; (2) that the employer took 'adverse employment action'; and (3) that his or her speech was a 'substantial or motivating' factor for the adverse employment action.").

3. Third Cause of Action—Breach of Contract

As in the original Complaint, Plaintiffs' Cause of Action for "breach of contract" is brought against Defendant OAG only. Once again, Plaintiffs allege that the OAG has "breached" the terms of the 2001 transfer agreement with Gibson, as well as a similar "oral" agreement made with respect to Goode-Parker. (FAC ¶ 110-112, 118.) Plaintiffs allege that the various "breaches" consisted of (1) denial of overtime and reasonable accommodation assistance (for Gibson) and overtime compensation (for Goode-Parker), on an "emergency" or "informal" basis; (2) failure to make Goode-Parker's reasonable accommodation assistance a priority over her other work; (3) "micro-management" of Plaintiffs' work; and (4) failure to be assigned challenging work. (Id. at ¶ 118(1)-(4)). Plaintiffs also now allege that Defendants breached the terms of a "memorandum of understanding" ("MOU") between the OAG and [*17] their respective unions by denying them flexible work hours and "docking" Goode-Parker's time using "the pretext" of her "being on an alternative work schedule." (Id. at ¶ 119.)

The Court agrees with Defendants that Plaintiffs have failed to allege conduct which is inconsistent with the terms of the transfer agreement. The alleged denials of unlimited assistance to Gibson in the form of overtime paralegal support from Goode-Parker and failure to prioritize that assistance over Goode-Parker's other work are not denials of any accommodations specifically contemplated therein. Rather, the agreement explicitly provides that approval for overtime "for the paralegal designated to assist Gibson" (i.e., Goode-Parker) is "subject to supervisory oversight as may be necessary from time to time." (Ex. 14 at 155.) Gibson's "ability to give assignments to the paralegal designated" is likewise "subject to supervisory oversight and approval as may be necessary from time to time." (Id.). Plaintiffs' remaining allegations of "breach of contract" (including the MOU) concern the imposition of undesired conditions of employment which, as the Court noted in its prior order of dismissal, cannot form the basis [*18] for a breach of contract claim by civil service employees under California law. See, e.g., Kim v. Regents of University of California, 80 Cal. App. 4th 160, 164, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10 (2000) ("[O]ur Supreme Court has made it clear that civil service employees cannot state a cause of action for breach of contract or breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.") (citing Shoemaker v. Myers, 52 Cal. 3d 1, 23-24, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 (1990)); see also Miller v. State, 18 Cal. 3d 808, 814, 135 Cal. Rptr. 386, 557 P.2d 970 (1977) ("Nor is any vested contractual right conferred on the public employee because he occupies a civil service position since it is equally well settled that the terms and conditions of civil service employment are fixed by statute and not by contract.") (internal quotations omitted).

Even if Plaintiffs had sufficiently alleged "breach" of a particular contractual agreement between themselves and the OAG, the Court agrees with Defendants that they have failed to allege any foreseeable contract damages. See Erlich v. Menezes, 21 Cal. 4th 543, 558, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978 (1999) ("Contract damages are generally limited to those within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into or at least reasonably foreseeable by them at the time; consequential damages beyond the expectations of the parties are not recoverable."). Plaintiffs' allegations regarding damages (purportedly in the amount of $20,000,000.00) are limited to damages in the nature [*19] of "severe emotional and physical distress," including depression, lost sleep, anxiety, rashes and skin problems, and aggravation of Gibson's arthritis. (FAC ¶ 129.) Plaintiffs cannot recover such damages in connection with standard employment contract(s). See, e.g., Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal. 4th 503, 516, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994) ("[D]amages for mental suffering and emotional distress are generally not compensable in contract actions.") (citation omitted); Rodriguez v. IBM, 960 F. Supp. 227, 232 (N.D. Cal. 1997) ("[T]he emotional distress and punitive damages claimed by Plaintiff are not recoverable on a breach of contract claim."). Indeed, the mere fact that they are endeavoring to do so further evinces their attempt, as Defendants point out, to circumvent the bar to relief in the nature of contract by California civil service employees who are dissatisfied with the conditions of their work environment. See, e.g., Shoemaker, 52 Cal.3d at 25. For this reason as well as the others set forth above, Plaintiffs' breach of contract claim is subject to dismissal, with prejudice.

4. Fourth Cause of Action—Violation of Whistleblower Protection Act

Plaintiffs' fourth cause of action purports to state a claim for violation of Cal. Gov't. Code §§ 9149.20-9149.23, known as the "Whistleblower Protection Act," against Defendant OAG. However, these provisions only impose [*20] liability for a public employee's "use or attempt to use the official authority or influence of the employee for the purpose of intimidating, threatening, coercing, commanding, or attempting to intimidate, threaten, coerce, or command any person for the purpose of interfering with the right of that person to disclose to a legislative committee improper governmental activities." See Cal. Gov't. Code § 9149.23(a) (emphasis added). Here, Plaintiffs do not allege that Defendant OAG has interfered with their rights to disclose improper conduct to a legislative committee, or even that they have attempted to make such a disclosure. Rather, their allegations (cryptic though they may be) are limited to their making of internal complaints about particular supervisors (i.e, Applesmith) and suffering retaliation as a result.

Moreover, the Whistleblower Protection Act only permits actions against individual employees, not employers. See Cal. Gov't. Code § 9149.23(b) ("Any employee who violates subdivision (a) may be liable in an action for civil damages brought against the employee by the offended party."); *see also Konig v. State Bar of Cal., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19498 26 (N.D. Cal. 2004) ("Government Code section 9149.23 only applies to employees. . . ."). As set forth above, Plaintiffs are not bringing their claim against any of the individual Defendant [*21] supervisors, but rather against the OAG alone. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for violation of the Whistleblower Protection Act, Cal. Gov't. Code §§ 9149.20-9149.23. Leave to amend is also inappropriate, as this is Plaintiffs' second attempt to plead a "whistleblower" cause of action.

II. Motion to Strike

Because Defendants' motion to dismiss is granted in its entirety, their alternative motion to strike is moot.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (docket no. 32) is GRANTED. Plaintiffs' third and fourth causes of action are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. With respect to their first and second (§§ 1981 and 1983) causes of action, Plaintiffs may file a second amended complaint within twenty (20) days from the date of this order. Said amended complaint shall not assert claims for violation of Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights arising out of their "petitioning" activities in connection with the Greenberg litigation or for breach of contract and shall comply with the mandate of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 to plead "a short and plain" statement of the claims alleged.

Defendants' Motion to Strike is DENIED as MOOT.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

April 10, 2007

/s/ Florence-Marie Cooper

FLORENCE-MARIE COOPER, JUDGE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT [*22] COURT

End of Document

Reilly v. Medianews Group, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

April 10, 2007, Decided ; April 10, 2007, Filed

No. C 06-04332 SI

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29419 *

CLINTON REILLY, Plaintiff, v. MEDIANEWS GROUP, INC, et al., Defendants.

Prior History: Reilly v. Medianews Group Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8139 (N.D. Cal., Jan. 24, 2007)

Core Terms

newspaper, antitrust, consumer, Clayton Act, summary judgment, defendants', anti trust law, competitors, purchaser, genuine, prices

Counsel: [*1] For Clinton Reilly, Plaintiff: Joseph M. Alioto, Joseph Michelangelo Alioto, Jr., Thomas P. Pier, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Alioto Law Firm, San Francisco, CA, US.; Daniel R. Shulman, Gray, Plant, Mooty, Mooty & Bennett, P.A., Minneapolis, MN.

For Medianews Group, Inc., California Newspapers Partnership, Defendants: Gary L. Hailing, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael W. Scarborough, Tyler Mark Cunningham, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA.; Alan L Marx, Steven C. Douse, King & Ballow, Nashville, TN.

For The Hearst Corporation, Defendant: Daniel M. Wall, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sadik Harry Huseny, Latham & Watkins LLP, San Francisco, CA, U.S.A.

For Stephens Group, Inc., Gannett Co., Inc., Defendants: Gordon L. Lang, LEAD ATTORNEY, Nixon Peabody LLP, Washington, DC.; John H. Riddle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul Joseph Byrne, Esq., Nixon Peabody LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For The McClatchy Company, Intervenor: Michael A. Berta, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, Palo Alto, CA.

For The McClatchy Company, Intervenor: Charles E. Biggio Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, New York, NY, US.

For Media Alliance and San Francisco Bay Guardian, Intervenor: James Russell Wheaton, LEAD ATTORNEY, [*2] The First Amendment Project, Oakland, CA.

Judges: SUSAN ILLSTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SUSAN ILLSTON

Opinion

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BASED ON PLAINTIFF'S LACK OF STANDING

Plaintiff Clinton Reilly brought this antitrust case to block and undo a series of transactions through which, he claims, the past and present owners of the major San Francisco Bay Area newspapers have begun to consolidate ownership of those newspapers, to divide up geographic markets, and ultimately to forego competing with each other. [1] Pursuant to an expedited case management schedule stipulated to by the parties, trial is currently set, for April 30, 2007.

On April 6, 2007, the Court heard argument on defendants' motion for summary judgment based on plaintiff's lack of standing. Defendants argue that because plaintiff is not threatened with any "antitrust injury," he does not have standing [*3] to bring this suit. Having considered the arguments of the parties and the papers submitted, and for good cause shown, the Court DENIES defendants' motion.

LEGAL STANDARD

Summary adjudication is proper when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). In a motion for summary judgment, "[if] the moving party for summary judgment meets its initial burden of identifying for the court those portions of the materials on file that it believes demonstrate the absence of any genuine issues of material fact, the burden of production then shifts so that the non-moving party must set forth, by affidavit or as otherwise provided in Rule 56, specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." T.W. Elec. Service, Inc. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 630 (9th Cir. 1987) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)).

In judging evidence at the summary judgment [*4] stage, the Court does not make credibility determinations or weigh conflicting evidence, and draws all inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. See T.W. Electric, 809 F.2d at 630-31 (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)); Ting v. United States, 927 F.2d 1504, 1509 (9th Cir. 1991). The evidence presented by the parties must be admissible. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). Conclusory, speculative testimony in affidavits and moving papers is insufficient to raise genuine issues of fact and defeat summary judgment. See Thornhill Publ'g Co., Inc. v. GTE Corp., 594 F.2d 730, 738 (9th Cir. 1979).

DISCUSSION

Defendants argue that plaintiff lacks standing to bring this suit because the actions of which he complains do not threaten him with any antitrust injury. Plaintiff responds that, as a subscriber to the San Francisco Chronicle and frequent purchaser of other Bay Area newspapers, he is threatened with antitrust injury because defendants' actions are likely to result in price increases and diminished diversity of [*5] content. [2]

I. Chief Judge Walker's standing analysis in Reilly I

The issue, of plaintiff's standing arose in prior case before Chief Judge Walker, Reilly v. The Hearst Corp., 107 F. Supp. 2d 1192 (N.D. Cal. 2000) ("Reilly I"). Chief Judge Walker's standing analysis in Reilly I supports a finding of standing in this case. In Reilly I plaintiff alleged that Hearst's acquisition of the San Francisco Chronicle violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. As in this case, plaintiff brought his claims under section 16 of the Clayton Act. Id. at 1194. At the time, Hearst published the San Francisco Examiner, which was a major daily and an active competitor to the Chronicle. Id. at 1193-94.

[1] The order issued on November 28, 2006 contains a more detailed summary of the relevant facts of this case.

[2] Plaintiff also argues in a footnote that he has standing as an advertiser. As discussed below, this argument, fails.

Before proceeding to the merits, Chief Judge Walker analyzed whether plaintiff had standing to bring his claims "as a subscriber [*6] to the Chronicle and single-copy purchaser of the Examiner . . . ." Id. at 1194. He concluded that Reilly did have standing, stating:

> Plaintiff claims that the challenged transactions would eliminate one of only two providers of daily newspaper news, features and opinion in what plaintiff contends is the relevant market. . . . These claims, while novel, would appear to state a cognizable injury to plaintiff as a consumer of newspaper news, features and opinion and to competition in that market; if proved, such a claim would entitle plaintiff to injunctive relief under section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26.

Id. at 1195. In reaching this conclusion, Chief Judge Walker relied heavily on the congressional intent regarding newspaper markets reflected in the Newspaper Preservation Act ("NPA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1801-1804. He stated:

> Standing analysis in this case is informed, in part, by the [NPA]. The NPA provides an antitrust exemption for an otherwise unlawful combination or merger of two newspapers' business operations if the market for newspaper circulation [*7] and advertising does not provide sufficient revenue to support independent publication of the newspapers. In that situation, the NPA permits two newspaper firms to combine their business operations as long as they continue to produce separate newspapers.
>
> Although the NPA does not confer affirmative rights on newspaper readers or advertisers or competing newspaper firms, the Sherman Act and Clayton Act should be read bearing in mind the legislative purposes that prompted enactment of the NPA; namely, encouragement of multiple sources of newspaper news, features and opinion. The NPA thus imports distinctly non-economic considerations into the antitrust statutes, which otherwise exclusively confine their scope to matters of economic consequence. Under this statutory framework, the elimination of a newspaper represents a cognizable injury to interests protected by the antitrust laws, and this injury supplies a ground for standing under Article III.

Id.

Defendants here argue that Chief Judge Walker's finding of standing is inapplicable because this case does not involve the NPA. In Reilly I, defendants argue, the NPA was at issue because as part of the challenged acquisition, [*8] the Chronicle and the Examiner would be terminating a joint operating agreement ("JOA") that was permitted under the NPA. According to defendants, in Reilly I plaintiff "sued to prevent termination of the San Francisco JOA and to ensure the continued existence of the Examiner." Reply at 3:1-2. This Court agrees with plaintiff that defendants' argument misinterprets both the nature of Reilly I, and Chief Judge Walker's use of the NPA in the Reilly I standing analysis.

Plaintiff in Reilly I sued to maintain the existence of two viable, editorially independent newspaper competitors in the San Francisco market. Whether the competitors existed pursuant to the JOA, or as fully independent papers, was not plaintiff's concern. Moreover, Chief Judge Walker ultimately treated the proposed merger of the JOA competitors as a court would treat the proposed merger of any competitors. He stated: "a transaction terminating a JOA is subject to ordinary antitrust scrutiny." Id. at 1203. "The court concludes that in an antitrust challenge to a proposed merger of JOA newspapers, the defendants may avoid liability by proving the traditional failing company [*9] defense . . . ." Id. The existence of the JOA was thus critical to understanding and analyzing the facts of the case, but it did not alter the Court's analytical antitrust framework. Reilly I was not an "NPA case" or a "JOA case"; it was an antitrust case, like this one, dealing, with consolidation in a local newspaper market.

Similarly, the standing analysis did not depend on the involvement of the NPA in the facts of Reilly I, as defendants here suggest. Chief Judge Walker simply noted that the NPA reflects a congressional concern with "encouragement of multiple sources of newspaper news, features and opinion," and "the Sherman Act and Clayton Act should be read bearing in mind [these] legislative purposes." Id. at 1195. There is no reason to think that Congress was only concerned with newspaper diversity in situations where the NPA is involved.

This Court agrees with the analysis of standing made in Reilly I. The NPA evidences that Congress values the existence of separate sources of newspaper content in a community, and that loss of separate sources injures consumers. The existence of the NPA thus strongly suggests that loss of diversity of [*10] content is a "threatened loss or damage 'of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 113, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). This conclusion is consistent with the Supreme Court's broad interpretation of the Clayton Act, which "does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated." Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982).

II. General antitrust standing

Even under the traditional antitrust analysis, independent of the newspaper context, plaintiff has standing as a consumer. Plaintiff brings this case under section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, which provides in pertinent part: "[any] person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss, or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 26 [*11] . [I] order to seek injunctive relief under § 16, a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage 'of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" Cargill, 479 U.S. at 113 (1986); see also Glen Holly Entm't Inc. v. Tektronix Inc., 352 F.3d 367, 371 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Only those who meet the requirements for 'antitrust standing' may pursue a claim under. the Clayton Act; and to acquire antitrust standing,' a plaintiff must adequately allege and eventually prove 'antitrust injury.").

In the context of a claim under section 4 of the Clayton Act, which, unlike section 16, provides for monetary damages, the Ninth Circuit summarized the antitrust injury requirement as follows:

> Antitrust injury is made up of four elements: "(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent."
>
> In addition, we impose a fifth requirement, that "the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors." "In other words, [*12] the party alleging the injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market." In fact, and as the district court recognized, "Consumers in the market where trade is allegedly restrained are presumptively the proper plaintiffs' to allege antitrust injury."

Glen Holly, 352 F.3d at 372 (citations omitted) (emphasis added).

"To maintain an antitrust divestiture suit [(section 16)], a private plaintiff must generally meet all the requirements that apply to the damages. [(section 4)] plaintiff, except that the injury itself need only be threatened, damage need not be quantified, and occasionally a party too remote for damages might be granted an injunction." Lucas Auto. Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1234 (9th Cir. 1998); see also Cargill, 479 U.S. at 111 ("It is plain that § 16 and § 4 do differ in various ways. For example, § 4 requires a plaintiff to show actual injury, but § 16 requires a showing only of 'threatened' loss or damage; similarly, § 4 requires a showing of injury to 'business [*13] or property,' while § 16 contains no such limitation.") (citations omitted). "[U]nder both § 16 and § 4 the plaintiff must still allege an injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." Cargill, 479 U.S. at 111

"The central purpose of the antitrust laws, state and federal, is to preserve competition. It is competition . . . that these statutes recognize as vital to the public interest." Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2000). "Every precedent in the field makes clear that the interaction of competitive forces . . . is what will benefit consumers." Id. The Sherman Act:

> was enacted in the era of "trusts" and of "combinations" of businesses and of capital organized and directed to control of the market by suppression of competition in the marketing of goods and services, the monopolistic > tendency of which had become a matter of public concern. The end sought was the prevention of restraints to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended to restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods [*14] and services, all of which had come to be regarded as a special form of public injury.

Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469,493-94, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 (1940).

> A refusal to compete with respect to the package of services offered to customers, no less than a refusal to compete with respect to the price term of an agreement, impairs the ability of the market to advance social welfare by ensuring the, provision of desired goods and services to consumers at a price approximating the marginal cost of providing them.

FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 459, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986); see also Glen Holly, 352 F.3d at 377 ("Antitrust law addresses distribution restraints in order to protect consumers from the higher prices or diminished choices that can sometimes result from limiting intrabrand competition.") (citation omitted).

In Lucas Automotive, 140 F.3d 1229, the Ninth Circuit "decide[d] whether a distributor and downstream purchaser of vintage automobile tires has standing to bring an antitrust action under the Clayton Act against a competitor and supplier for damages and divestiture." Id. at 1230. [*15] The district court had dismissed the plaintiffs claims on summary judgment because the plaintiff "has not produced any evidence to show that [defendant] has in fact raised these prices on brand name vintage tires. Therefore, it has not suffered any actual injury." Id. at 1235 (quoting case). The Ninth Circuit reversed the district court, stating:

> We conclude that [plaintiff], . . . as a customer in a market controlled by a monopolist, has standing to assert a § 7 claim for equitable relief, including divestiture, under § 16 [of the Clayton Act]. It established a prima facie case, both that it was an active participant in the vintage tire market and that [defendant's] conduct in that market violated § 7. This showing was thus sufficient to avoid summary judgment on [plaintiff's] Clayton Act § 7 claim for equitable relief.

Id. at 1237. In Lucas, therefore, it was sufficient that plaintiff was an active consumer in a market in which there was anti-competitive activity; the Ninth Circuit did not require the plaintiff to present evidence of a prior or imminent raise in prices. Similarly here, plaintiff is an active [*16] consumer in the Bay Area newspaper market, in which he alleges there is anti-competitive activity.

Defendants suggest that Lucas is distinct because here there is no evidence that "a price increase is virtually inevitable, as was the case in Lucas Automotive . . . ." Reply at 8:25. Nowhere in Lucas, however, did the Ninth Circuit find or suggest that a price increase was "virtually inevitable." The Ninth Circuit only found that plaintiff had shown "prima facie, that [defendant]'s conduct threatens substantially to lessen competition' and 'tends to create a monopoly' . . . ." 140 F.3d at 1236. Here, whether defendants' actions threaten to lessen competition, create a monopoly, or raise prices, is the issue the Court must decide after trial. Plaintiff alleges anti-competitive acts in the Bay Area newspaper market, and provides evidence that he is an active consumer in that market, see Reilly Depo. (Scarborough Decl., Ex. 1) at 47-48, 52-53. This is sufficient under Lucas to defeat summary judgment. See 140 F.3d at 1237.

CONCLUSION

In sum, Lucas and Reilly I, supported by the purposes underlying the antitrust statutes, [*17] compel this Court to find that plaintiff has raised a genuine issue as to whether he has valid antitrust injury in this case. "Consumers in the market where trade is allegedly restrained are presumptively the proper plaintiffs to allege antitrust injury." Glen Holly, 352 F.3d at 372. Plaintiff here presents evidence that he is "an active participant in the [newspaper] market and" alleges that defendants' "conduct in that market violate[s]" the Sherman Act. [3] Lucas, 140 F.3d at 1237. This is "sufficient to avoid summary judgment on [plaintiff's] Clayton Act . . . claim for equitable relief." Id. For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court concludes that plaintiff has standing to assert his Clayton Act claims, and DENIES defendants' motion for summary judgment.

[*18] IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: April 10, 2007

SUSAN ILLSTON

United States District Judge

End of Document

[3] Plaintiff is not, however, an "active participant" in the Bay Area newspaper advertising market. Apart from a handful of advertisements placed in the Chronicle by two limited liability companies in which plaintiff is a shareholder, plaintiff has not engaged in any advertising in Bay Area newspapers. A shareholder has no standing to assert a claim based on an injury to a corporation. See Shell Petroleum, N.V. v. Graves, 709 F.2d 593, 595 (9th Cir. 1983). Furthermore, in deposition plaintiff offered no more than a vague plan "in my head" to do some future advertising in Bay Area newspapers. See generally Scarborough Decl., Ex. A (Reilly Dep.) at 180-183. Plaintiff therefore does not have standing as a consumer of newspaper advertising space.

Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee

April 10, 2007, Filed

No. 4:02-CV-23

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26611 *

BIRDA TROLLINGER, VIRGINIA BRAVO, KELLY KESSINGER, IDOYNIA MCCOY, REGINA LEE, PATRICIA MIMS, LORI WINDHAM and ALEXANDER HOWLETT, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. TYSON FOODS, INC., JOHN TYSON, ARCHIBALD SCHAFFER III, RICHARD, BOND, KENNETH KIMBRO, GREG LEE, KAREN PERCIVAL, AHRAZUE WILT and TIM MCCOY, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38882 (E.D. Tenn., May 29, 2007)

Prior History: Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23329 (E.D. Tenn., Mar. 28, 2007)

Core Terms

affirmative defense, estoppel, summary judgment motion, antitrust, statute of limitations, individual defendant, entitled to summary judgment, scope of employment, amended complaint, Clayton Act, employees, estoppel defense, summary judgment, nonmoving party, no evidence, Memorandum

Counsel: [*1] For Birda Trollinger, Robert Martinez, Tabetha Eddings, Doris Jewell, Plaintiffs: Howard W Foster, LEAD ATTORNEY, Johnson & Bell, Ltd., Chicago, IL; William G Colvin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Horton, Maddox & Anderson, PLLC, Chattanooga, TN; Thomas Clifton Greenholtz, Chambliss, Bahner & Stophel, P.C., Chattanooga, TN.

For Virginia Bravo, Kelly Kessinger, Idoynia McCoy, Regina Lee, Patricia Mims, Lori Windham, Alexander Howlett, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs: Howard W Foster, Johnson & Bell, Ltd., Chicago, IL.

For Tyson Foods, Inc., Defendant: Christopher H Steger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Roger W Dickson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Travis R McDonough, Miller & Martin, Chattanooga, TN; Colleen M Lauerman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Frank R Volpe, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark D Hopson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thomas C Green, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sidley, Austin, Brown & Wood, Washington, DC.

For John Tyson, Archibald Schaffer, III, Richard Bond, Kenneth Kimbro, Greg Lee, Karen Percival, Ahrazue Wilt, Tim McCoy, Defendants: Colleen M Lauerman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Frank R Volpe, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sidley, Austin, Brown & Wood, Washington, DC; Travis R McDonough, Miller & Martin, Chattanooga, TN.

Judges: CURTIS [*2] L. COLLIER, CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: CURTIS L. COLLIER

Opinion

MEMORANDUM

Before the Court are the following motions for summary judgment filed by Plaintiffs Birda Trollinger, Virginia Bravo, Kelly Kessinger, Idoynia McCoy, Regina Lee, Patricia Mims, Lori Windham and Alexander Howlett (collectively "Plaintiffs"):

1. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment as to all Defendants' First Affirmative Defense to the Second Amended Complaint (estoppel) (Court File No. 186).
2. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment as to all Defendants' First Affirmative Defense to the Second Amended Complaint (statute of limitation) (Court File No. 188) [1].
3. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment as to all Defendants' First Affirmative Defense to the Second Amended Complaint (scope of employment) (Court File No. 190).

[*3] Plaintiffs filed memorandums in support of their motions (Court File Nos. 187, 189, 191). Defendants Tyson Foods, Inc., John Tyson, Archibald Schaffer III, Richard Bond, Kenneth Kimbro, Greg Lee, Karen Percival, Ahrazue Wilt, and Tim McCoy (collectively, "Defendants" or " Tyson") filed a consolidated memorandum in opposition to the motions (Court File No. 201). [2]

After carefully considering the arguments of counsel and the applicable law, the Court will GRANT Plaintiffs' motions for summary judgment on Defendants' estoppel and statute of limitations affirmative defenses (Court File Nos. 186 and 188) and GRANT IN PART AND DENY IN PART Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on Defendants' scope [*4] of employment affirmative defense (Court File No. 190).

I. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This case commenced with Plaintiffs' complaint filed on April 2, 2002 (Court File No. 1). Subsequently, Plaintiffs filed amended complaints with the latest filed on June 24, 2005 [3] (Court File No. 3, Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint; Court File No. 115, Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint). On August 11, 2005, Defendants filed their answers to the Amended Complaint ("Answer") (Court File Nos. 117, 128-135).

In their answers, Defendants assert three affirmative defenses: (1) Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the doctrine of estoppel; (2) Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the statute of limitations; and (3) to the extent any wrongdoing or violation of the law was committed by individuals, such wrongdoing or violations of the law were committed by employees acting outside the scope of their employment and was inconsistent with Tyson's corporate [*5] policy.

In their summary judgment motions, Plaintiffs argue they are entitled to summary judgment as to the estoppel affirmative defense because this defense is not available in cases brought pursuant to the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 et seq., and Defendants have produced no evidence to support that defense. As to the statute of limitations affirmative defense, Plaintiffs claim summary judgment is proper because the "separate accrual rule" precludes application of the statute of limitations. Finally, Plaintiffs argue they are entitled to summary judgment on Defendants' scope of employment affirmative defense because

---

[1] Defendants concede that summary judgment is appropriate as to the statute of limitations affirmative defense. "In light of Judge Edgar's prior ruling on defendants' motion for summary judgment as to two of the named plaintiffs under a statute of limitations theory, . . . defendants do not dispute that this affirmative defense is unavailable as to those plaintiffs who were employed by Tyson during the class period." (Court File No. 201, Defendants' Consolidated Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motions For Summary Judgment ("Def.'s Memo"), at 1, n.1).

[2] Discovery in this case is ongoing. The Court recently held a Management Conference in the case and set discovery deadlines. Even though discovery is not yet complete, no party has asked the Court to delay ruling on these motions pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f).

[3] The Court will simply refer to the latest filed complaint as "Complaint."

Defendants have produced no evidence to support that defense, and even if there is some evidence to support such a defense, the individual defendants are not entitled to summary judgment because they are liable for their own individual actions.

Because Defendants do not dispute the second affirmative defense is inapplicable, the Court need not discuss the defense at any length.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment is proper where "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, [*6] and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Initially, the burden is on the moving party to conclusively show no genuine issues of material fact exist, Leary v. Daeschner, 349 F.3d 888, 897 (6th Cir. 2003), and the Court must view the evidence and draw all reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587-88, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, (1986). However, the nonmoving party is not entitled to a trial merely on the basis of allegations, but must come forward with some significant probative evidence to support its claim. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). If the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case with respect to which it has the burden of proof, the moving party is entitled to summary judgment. Id. at 323.

The Court determines whether sufficient evidence has been presented [*7] to make the issue of fact a proper jury question, but does not weigh the evidence, judge the credibility of witnesses, or determine the truth of the matter. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); Weaver v. Shadoan, 340 F.3d 398, 405 (6th Cir. 2003). The standard for summary judgment mirrors the standard for directed verdict. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250. The Court must decide "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Id. at 251-52. There must be some probative evidence from which the jury could reasonably find for the nonmoving party. If the Court concludes a fair-minded jury could not return a verdict in favor of the nonmoving party based on the evidence presented, it may enter a summary judgment. Id.; Lansing Dairy, Inc. v. Espy, 39 F.3d 1339, 1347 (6th Cir. 1994).

II. ANALYSIS

A. Estoppel Affirmative Defense

Plaintiffs argue they are entitled to summary judgment as to Defendants' estoppel affirmative defense because estoppel "is not [*8] available in cases brought pursuant to the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO")," 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 et seq. (Court File No. 187, Plaintiff's Memorandum ("Pl.'s Memo"), at 1-2). Plaintiffs further argue even if the defense were available, Defendants have produced no evidence to support that defense. For the first proposition they rely upon federal Anti-Trust law and South-East Coal Co. v. Consolidation Coal Co., 434 F.2d 767, 784 (6th Cir. 1970).

Defendants argue (1) Judge Edgar already ruled the estoppel defense is proper, which constitutes the law of the case; and (2) there are genuine issues of material fact in dispute with regard to each element of the estoppel defense. Defendants rely upon the following facts to support their assertion of this affirmative defense: Tyson has a corporate Code of Conduct that mandates compliance with all federal laws; all employees are required to report any known or suspected violations to Tyson; none of the Plaintiffs ever reported any illegal alien employees to Tyson; and Tyson was justified in relying upon Plaintiffs failure to report illegal alien hiring to conclude its workforce [*9] was legal.

The Court finds it necessary to determine at the outset whether Defendant's contention the law of the case has already been established on this issue is accurate. After carefully reviewing Judge Edgar's opinion, the Court does not agree Judge Edgar ruled that estoppel is a valid defense in RICO actions. Judge Edgar merely addressed whether the defense was pleaded in compliance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c). See Court File No. 84, Memorandum and Order, at pp. 4-6. Judge Edgar did not consider or discuss the legal issues involved nor did he discuss the factual basis for such a defense. Id. In fact, he specifically stated his "decision d[id] not preclude the parties from filing motions for summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 concerning the estoppel defense once there has been discovery." Id. at 6. Because this issue has not been decided by Judge Edgar or by this Court, the Court is not bound by any earlier ruling and will proceed to address the issue.

There is not much case law addressing the availability of estoppel as an affirmative defense in RICO actions. In fact, the Court [*10] only found one case where a Plaintiff contended the defense was not available in RICO actions. See *United Power Ass'n., Inc. v. L.K. Comstock & Co., No. 3-89 CIV 766, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18874, 1992 WL 402906, 7 (D. Minn. October 27, 1992) ("Plaintiffs argue that these equitable defenses [waiver, laches and estoppel] are not available in an antitrust /RICO action"). [4] However, there is ample case law agreeing with Plaintiffs' position that estoppel is not available as a defense in private antitrust law suits. Telectronics Proprietary, Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 687 F. Supp. 832, 841 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) ("'[I]t is highly unlikely that estoppel can be readily allowed to defeat antitrust claims.'") (quoting Bernstein v. Universal Pictures, Inc., 517 F.2d 976, 981 (2d Cir. 1975)); Am. Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 365 F. Supp. 1073, 1098 (D. N.J. 1973) ("The common law defenses of laches, waiver and estoppel have no application in a federal antitrust action."), rev'd in part on other grounds by, 521 F.2d 1230 (3rd Cir. 1975); South-East Coal Co., 434 F.2d at 784 (noting the estoppel defense might be proper [*11] in certain negligence and contract cases but there is no evidence Congress intended it to be a defense in antitrust cases); Int'l Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. Gen. Tel. & Elec. Corp., 296 F.Supp. 920, 926 (D. Haw. 1969) ("The doctrines of estoppel and waiver do not in general apply in transactions that are forbidden by statute or that are contrary to public policy.") (quoting Am. Sur. Co. of New York v. Gold, 375 F.2d 523, 528 (10th Cir. 1966)).

Likewise, there is sufficient case law supporting Plaintiffs' contention Congress closely patterned RICO after the Clayton and Sherman antitrust acts. See Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assoc., 483 U.S. 143, 150, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1987) [*12] (noting "[e]ven a cursory comparison of the two statutes reveals that the civil action provision of RICO was patterned after the Clayton Act."); Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 370 F.3d 602, 612 (6th Cir. 2004) (recognizing Congress modeled RICO's civil-suit provision on similar language in the antitrust laws (§ 4 of the Clayton Act and § 7 of the Sherman Act)).

Since RICO was closely modeled after the Clayton Act and the Sherman Act, it logically follows the estoppel defense should be precluded from RICO actions, just as it is precluded from antitrust actions. Compare Agency Holding Corp., 483 U.S. at 152 (holding the 4-year statute of limitations for a Clayton Act action is the most appropriate limitations period for RICO actions due to the similarities in purpose and structure between RICO and the Clayton Act and the clear legislative intent to pattern RICO's civil enforcement provision on the Clayton Act); Trollinger, 370 F.3d at 612 (holding because Congress modeled RICO's civil suit provision after antitrust laws and antitrust laws require a private plaintiff show proximate cause in order to have standing to sue, RICO civil [*13] claims also require proximate cause). Accordingly, the Court will GRANT Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment as to Defendants' first affirmative defense (estoppel) (Court File No. 186). [5]

B. Statute of Limitation Affirmative Defense

---

[4] The Court notes the court in United Power Association, Inc. rejected Plaintiff's argument; however, it did not do so on the merits of the plaintiff's argument. Rather, it was because the equitable defenses were so closely intertwined with other issues the court did not feel summary judgment was appropriate.

[5] Since the Court finds estoppel is not available as an affirmative defense in RICO actions, there is no need to address whether a genuine issue of material fact exists in this case with respect to such a defense.

Because Defendants concede the statute of limitations affirmative defense is not applicable, the Court will GRANT Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on this issue (Court File No. 188).

C. Scope of Employment Affirmative Defense

Plaintiffs allege they are entitled to summary judgment as to the scope of employment affirmative defense because Defendants have produced no evidence to support that defense, and even if there is some evidence to support such a defense, the individual defendants are not entitled to summary judgment because [*14] they are liable for their own individual actions. Defendants point to evidence they suggest shows any "wrongdoing was committed by individuals who were acting pursuant to their own agendas and for their own benefit, and were not acting pursuant to any socalled "Willful Blindness Policy." Def.'s Memo at 6. They also argue to the extent there may have been violations of the law these violations were committed without the knowledge of the corporation and in violation of the corporation's specific instructions to its employee.

Generally, a corporation may be held liable for the criminal acts of its employees and agents done within the scope of their employment with the intent to benefit the corporation. *United States v. Peterson, Nos. 97-4469, 97-4470, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 20336, 1999 WL 685917, at 12 (6th Cir. Aug. 23, 1999); United States v. Carter, 311 F.2d 934, 941-42 (6th Cir. 1963); Cont'l Baking Co. v. United States, 281 F.2d 137, 149 (6th Cir. 1960). This general rule applies to RICO actions. See Davis v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 6 F.3d 367, 379 (6th Cir. 1993) (noting vicarious liability under RICO may be imposed on corporate [*15] "persons" on account of the acts of their agents, particularly where the corporation benefitted by those acts).

Based upon the arguments advanced by the parties, the Court is not willing to conclude summary judgment is appropriate as to Tyson's scope of employment affirmative defense. It seems to the Court the issue of whether the employees' actions benefitted Tyson is fact determinative. At this stage of the litigation the Court must assume all the facts stated by Defendants are true. If all the facts as Defendants have stated them are true, it may be that certain acts committed by Tyson employees and agents were outside the scope of their employment. Accordingly, the Court will DENY Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment as to Tyson on this issue.

Of course, the Court's action on this affirmative defense as to Tyson has no application to any individual defendant's liability or responsibility for their own personal conduct. Defendants appear to argue the individual defendants should not be held liable for the actions of others merely because of their status as officers, employees or agents of Tyson. Defendants' argument is misplaced, however, since Plaintiffs accuse the individual [*16] defendants of violating RICO by conspiring to violate RICO and execute the "Illegal Immigrant Hiring Scheme." Complaint at P57. Thus, it is clear Plaintiffs are not attempting to hold the individual defendants liable for the acts of others. Rather, Plaintiffs are alleging the individuals defendants themselves committed the violations. Since individual defendants are liable for their own actions regardless of whether they were acting in the scope of employment, Defendants' third affirmative defense is inapplicable to the individual defendants. See United States v. Wise, 370 U.S. 405, 416, 82 S. Ct. 1354, 8 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1962) (holding "a corporate officer is subject to prosecution under § 1 of the Sherman Act whenever he knowingly participates in [the] . . . conspiracy-be he one who authorizes, orders, or helps perpetrate the crime-regardless of whether he is acting in a representative capacity."); A & M Records, Inc. v. M.V.C. Distrib. Corp., 574 F.2d 312, 315 (6th Cir. 1978) ("[A] corporate officer or agent is personally liable for torts committed by him even though he was acting for the benefit of the corporation."). Thus, the Court will GRANT Plaintiffs' motion for [*17] summary judgment as to Defendants' third affirmative defense with respect to the individual defendants (Court File No. 190). [6] [6] The Court notes in responding to Plaintiff's motion, Defendants made reference to the fact Judge Edgar had already held the scope of employment defense was available, and as such, the law of the case had been established on this issue. While it is true Judge Edgar had stated Tyson had a right to defend itself in such a manner, he never stated the individual defendants had such a right. See Court File No. 84, Memorandum and Order, at 13. Therefore, there had been no prior determination as to the availability of the defense to the individual defendants, and accordingly, no "law of the case" on this issue.

---

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court will GRANT Plaintiffs' motions for summary judgment as to Defendants first and second affirmative defenses (Court File Nos. 186 & 188). However, the Court will GRANT IN PART AND DENY IN PART Plaintiffs' [*18] motion for summary judgment as to Defendants' third affirmative defense (Court File No. 190).

An Order shall enter.

CURTIS L. COLLIER

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

FTC v. Foster

United States District Court for the District of New Mexico

April 13, 2007, Decided

No. CIV 07-352 JB

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34203 *; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,670

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Plaintiff, vs. PAUL L. FOSTER, WESTERN REFINING, INC., and GIANT INDUSTRIES, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part FTC v. Foster, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55163 (D.N.M., Apr. 26, 2007)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Ftc v. Foster, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110914 (D.N.M., May 10, 2007)

Core Terms

merger, prices, temporary restraining order, petroleum product, anti-competitive, competitors, injunction, northern, acquisition, believes, refinery, merits, public interest, markets, lessen

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN1[] Remedies, Injunctions

Section 13(b) (15 U.S.C.S. § 53(b)) of the Fair Trade Commission (FTC) Act, provides for the grant of a preliminary injunction where such action would be in the public interest -- as determined by a weighing of the equities and a consideration of the Commission's likelihood of success on the merits. This standard departs from the traditional equity standard, which requires plaintiff to demonstrate: (i) irreparable damage, (ii) probability of success on the merits and (iii) a balance of equities favoring the plaintiff. The traditional standard is not appropriate for an independent regulatory agency's implementation of a federal statute where the standards of the public interest measure the propriety and the need for injunctive relief. Agencies acting to enforce a federal statute are not held to the high thresholds applicable where private parties seek interim restraining orders. The Fair Trade Commission is not required to establish that the proposed transaction would in fact violate § 7 (15 U.S.C.S. § 18) of the Clayton Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN2[] Remedies, Injunctions

To determine the likelihood of success on the merits, courts measure the probability that, after an administrative hearing on the merits, the Fair Trade Commission (FTC) will succeed in proving that the effect of the proposed transaction may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, in violation of § 7 (15 U.S.C.S. § 18) of the Clayton Act. The FTC satisfies its burden of showing the likelihood of success on the merits if it raises questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful as to make them fair ground for thorough investigation, study, deliberation and determination by the FTC in the first instance and ultimately by a court of appeals. When the FTC demonstrates a likelihood of ultimate success, a counter-showing of private equities alone does not suffice to justify the denial of a preliminary injunction barring a merger.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN3[] Remedies, Injunctions

While the showing by the Fair Trade Commission (FTC) of likelihood of success creates a presumption in favor of preliminary injunctive relief, courts must still weigh the equities in order to decide whether enjoining the merger would be in the public interest. The principal public equity weighing in favor of issuance of preliminary injunctive relief is the public interest in effective enforcement of the antitrust law--a public equity consideration in the mind of Congress when it enacted § 13(b) (15 U.S.C.S. § 53(b)). Section 13(b) is intended to preserve the status quo until the FTC can perform its statutory responsibility: determining whether, in fact, the effect of the transaction at issue may be substantially to lessen competition.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN4[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Section 7 (15 U.S.C.S. § 18) of the Clayton Act prohibits any transaction where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. Section 7 seeks to forestall anticompetitive mergers in their incipiency before their effects occur; § 7 thus requires a prediction about the merger's impact on future competition. Section 7 does not require proof that a merger or other acquisition has caused higher prices in the affected market. All that is necessary is that the merger create an appreciable danger of such consequences in the future. A predictive judgment, necessarily probabilistic and judgmental rather than demonstrable is called for. With respect to anticompetitive effect, the fact that prices might be lower than current prices after a merger does not mean that the merger will not have an anticompetitive effect; consumers would still be hurt if prices after the merger did not fall as far as they would have absent the merger.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN5[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

In determining whether a transaction is likely to impair competition, courts analyze: (i) the line of commerce or product market in which to assess the transaction; (ii) the section of the country or geographic market in which to assess the transaction; and (iii) the transaction's probable effect on competition in the product and geographic markets.

Counsel: [*1] For Plaintiff: Thomas J Lang, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C.

For Western Refining, Inc., Plaintiff: Andrew G. Schultz, Henry M. Bohnhoff, Patrick Shay, Thomas A. Outler, Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin, & Robb, P.A., Albuquerque, New Mexico; Marc G. Schildkraut, Michael P.A. Cohen, Heller Erhman LLP, Washington, D.C.

For Giant Industries, Inc., Plaintiff: Andrew G. Schultz, Henry M. Bohnhoff, Patrick Shay, Thomas A. Outler, Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin, & Robb, P.A., Albuquerque, New Mexico; Tom D. Smith, Jones Day, Washington, D.C.; Hugh R. Whiting, Jones Day, Houston, Texas.

Judges: James O. Browning, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: James O. Browning

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

THIS MATTER comes before the Court on the Plaintiff's Motion for Temporary Restraining Order, filed April 12, 2007 (Doc. 9). The Court held a hearing on the motion on April 13, 2007. The primary issue is whether Plaintiff Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") has demonstrated that the standards for a temporary restraining order are met here. Consistent with the Court's ruling at the hearing on this application, for the reasons given at the time of the hearing, and because [*2] the FTC has satisfied the standard required for a temporary restraining order to issue, the Court will grant the application for a temporary restraining order.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Western Refining, Inc. is a publicly traded company headquartered in El Paso, Texas. Western owns and operates a single refinery in El Paso. From its refinery, Western provides petroleum products to El Paso, west Texas, Albuquerque, Tucson, Phoenix, and Juarez, Mexico. Western's parent entity is Paul L. Foster, who also serves on Western's Board of Directors, and is its President and Chief Executive Officer. Western supplies the northern New Mexico market through historic shipping rights on the Plains pipeline.

Giant Industries, Inc., is a publicly traded company headquartered in Scottsdale, Arizona. Giant is an independent refiner and marketer of petroleum products with one refinery in Yorktown, Virginia, and two refineries in the Four Corners region of New Mexico.

On August 26, 2006, Giant, Western, and a wholly-owned subsidiary of Western entered into an Agreement and Plan of Merger by which Western agreed to acquire all of the voting securities of Giant in exchange for approximately $ 83 [*3] per share, plus $ 275 million in assumed liabilities.

LAW REGARDING TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDERS

HN1[] Section 13(b) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) "provides for the grant of a preliminary injunction where such action would be in the public interest -- as determined by a weighing of the equities and a consideration of the Commission's likelihood of success on the merits." FTC v. H.J. Heinz Co., 345 U.S. App. D.C. 364, 246 F.3d 708, 714 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Congress intended this standard to depart from what it regarded as the traditional equity standard, which it characterized as requiring the plaintiff to demonstrate: "[i] irreparable damage, [ii] probability of success on the merits and [iii] a balance of equities favoring the plaintiff." Id. (citing H.R. Rep. No. 93-624, at 31 (1971)). Congress determined that the traditional standard was not appropriate for an independent regulatory agency's implementation of a Federal statute where the standards of the public interest measure the propriety and the need for injunctive relief. See id. (citing H.R. Rep. No. 93-624, at 31). Agencies acting to enforce a federal statute are not held to the high thresholds [*4] applicable where private parties seek interim restraining orders. FTC v. Weyerhaeuser Co., 214 U.S. App. D.C. 254, 665 F.2d 1072, 1082 (D.C. Cir. 1981). The FTC is not required to establish that the proposed transaction would in fact violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. See FTC v. H.J. Heinz Co., 246 F.3d at 714; FTC v. Food Town Stores, Inc., 539 F.2d 1339, 1342 (4th Cir. 1976)("The district court is not authorized to determine whether the antitrust laws have been or are about to be violated. That adjudicatory function is vested in the FTC in the first instance.").

HN2[] To determine the likelihood of success on the merits, courts measure the probability that, after an administrative hearing on the merits, the FTC will succeed in proving that the effect of the proposed transaction "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly," in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. FTC v. H.J. Heinz Co., 246 F.3d at 714. The FTC satisfies its burden of showing the likelihood of success on the merits if it "raise[s] questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful as to make them fair [*5] ground for thorough investigation, study, deliberation and determination by the FTC in the first instance and ultimately by the Court of Appeals." FTC v. Beatrice Foods Co., 190 U.S. App. D.C. 328, 587 F.2d 1225, 1229 (D.C. Cir. 1978). When the FTC demonstrates a likelihood of ultimate success, a counter-showing of private equities alone does not suffice to justify the denial of a preliminary injunction barring a merger. See FTC v. Weyerhaeuser Co., 214 U.S. App. D.C. 254, 665 F.2d 1072, 1083 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

HN3[] While the FTC's showing of likelihood of success creates a presumption in favor of preliminary injunctive relief, courts must still weigh the equities in order to decide whether enjoining the merger would be in the public interest. FTC v. H.J. Heinz Co., 246 F.3d at 726. The principal public equity weighing in favor of issuance of preliminary injunctive relief is the public interest in effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. FTC v. University Health, Inc., 938 F.2d 1206, 1225 (11th Cir. 1991). The Congress specifically had this public equity consideration in mind when it enacted section 13(b) See FTC v. Food Town Stores, Inc., 539 F.2d at 1345-46. [*6] Congress enacted Section 13(b) to preserve the status quo until the FTC can perform its statutory responsibility: determining whether, in fact, the effect of the transaction at issue "may be substantially to lessen competition." See id.

LAW REGARDING ANTI-COMPETITIVE MERGERS

Section 7 HN4[] of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, prohibits any transaction "where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U.S.C. § 18. Section 7 seeks to forestall anti-competitive mergers "in their incipiency" before their effects occur; Section 7 thus requires a prediction about the merger's impact on future competition. See United States v. Phila. Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963).

> Section 7 does not require proof that a merger or other acquisition has caused higher prices in the affected market. All that is necessary is that the merger create an appreciable danger of such consequences in the future. A predictive judgment, necessarily probabilistic and judgmental [*7] rather than demonstrable is called for.

Hosp. Corp. of Am. v. FTC, 807 F.2d 1381, 1389 (7th Cir. 1986). With respect to anti-competitive effect, "the fact that prices might be lower than current prices after [a] merger does not mean that the merger will not have an anticompetitive effect[;] [c]onsumers would still be hurt if prices after the merger did not fall as far as they would have absent the merger." FTC v. Staples, Inc., 970 F. Supp. 1066(D.D.C. 1997).

HN5[] In determining whether a transaction is likely to impair competition, courts analyze: "[i] the "line of commerce" or product market in which to assess the transaction; [ii] the "section of the country" or geographic market in which to assess the transaction; and [iii] the transaction's probable effect on competition in the product and geographic markets." FTC v. Swedish Match N. Am., Inc., 131 F. Supp. 2d 151, 156 (D.D.C. 2000)(citing United States v. Marine Bancorp., 418 U.S. 602, 618-23, 94 S. Ct. 2856, 41 L. Ed. 2d 978 (1974)).

ANALYSIS

The Court emphasizes that this hearing involves a request for a temporary restraining order, and is not a preliminary injunction [*8] hearing. To a considerable degree, the Court has to rely upon representations of what the evidence will be rather than on actual evidence. The Court has heard no expert testimony, and because of the late filing, the Court has not been able to thoughtfully review the submitted affidavits.

The Court has concerns whether the FTC is defining the market and region accurately, and whether it is including all the competitors that should be considered. While the Court is concerned that the evidence may not ultimately support a finding of anti-competitive results from the merger, there is some evidence that the merger will be anti-competitive. At this stage, the Court is not in a position to weigh the evidence. At the end of the day, the Court believes that there is a serious question, on the record before it, whether the effect of Western's proposed acquisition of Giant "may be substantially to lessen competition" for the bulk supply of gasoline and light petroleum products to northern New Mexico in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act and Section 5 of the FTC Act. 15 U.S.C. § 18.

The Court believes that the FTC's strongest argument is that Western competes with [*9] Giant by providing bulk supplies of light petroleum products to northern New Mexico at Albuquerque prices via the Plains pipeline. While the Court has not had time to fully digest the FTC's recent Aloha Petroleum, Inc. case, the Court is tentatively persuaded that Western is a participant in the Albuquerque market, even though it does not own a terminal in Albuquerque. By acquiring Giant, Western would increase, perhaps significantly, its share of the bulk supply of light petroleum products to northern New Mexico and reduce the number of competitors that could respond to an output decrease or price increase in the market. In the bulk gasoline market, Western's acquisition of Giant would reduce the number of such competitors. An acquisition that increases the degree of market concentration in a concentrated market suggests that the acquisition will harm competition.

The FTC's Exhibit 5 is styled "New Mexico Crude Oil Pipeline Fact Sheet" and indicates that Giant prepared the document. The document indicates that Giant believes additional product marketed to Albuquerque and Santa Fe will spur price competition. The fact sheet states: "Price Competition. Additional production of petroleum [*10] products will help spur price competition in northern New Mexico markets, including Albuquerque and Santa Fe." Exhibit 5. With the addition of the 400 mile Jal pipeline to Giant's assets, there is the possibility that Giant may bring its refinery near Gallup to capacity and then supply more petroleum products to the Albuquerque area.

The Court believes this evidence, when considered with Exhibit 6, gets the FTC to where it needs to be to secure a temporary restraining order. While the Defendants vigorously dispute that the Court can even consider Exhibit 6, someone at Giant generated this document to show Giant's incremental supply marketing after the potential mid-2007 utilization increase. The document reflects that the prices in the Albuquerque/Santa Fe area could drop in the six to eight percent range, which would translate to a savings of about $ 7 million dollars to those consumers. While the Court has many questions about this document, including its admissibility against Giant, it is some evidence that, if the merger does not proceed, prices in the Albuquerque/Santa Fe could decline merely from greater utilization of the Giant refinery.

The FTC has also presented argument [*11] and charts that indicate that the other competitors in the market do not have the ability to increase their volume of product to the Albuquerque/Santa Fe market. The conclusion from this representation is that an increase in price by the Giant/Western merger could put the enlarged competitor in a position of decreasing product for the region and thus increasing cost, because competitors could not increase their supply in the area. While the Court is reluctant to say, on the record before it, that the merger would create a combined firm able to in any way dominate northern New Mexico, the Court does think this evidence shows that the merger has the possibility of lessening competition.

The FTC has demonstrated that, as a result of the merger, Giant, which would otherwise likely increase its potential and actual supply of light petroleum products to the northern New Mexico market, may end up re-directing supply away from that market, because a combined Western/Giant firm would be susceptible to the economic incentives and mechanisms that presently lead Western to direct its supply elsewhere. The FTC has also shown, based on historical market trends, that the remaining competitors in [*12] the market are unlikely to expand output to counter any supply reduction the Western/Giant merger may create. The FTC has further demonstrated that, even if the merger leads to an actual increase in the supply of light petroleum products to the market, the resulting increase would not equal the supply that Giant would likely provide if it did not merge. "[T]he fact that prices might be lower than current prices after the merger does not mean that the merger will not have an anti-competitive effect. Consumers would still be hurt if prices after the merger did not fall as far as they would have absent the merger." FTC v. Staples, Inc., 970 F. Supp. at 1092.

The Defendants have brought a number of arguments, some with considerable force, before the Court that the merger will not reduce competition in the Albuquerque and surrounding areas. The problem for the Defendants is that the standard for receiving a temporary restraining order is not that great. The Court believes that, today, it must find whether there is a serious question and, if so, set the matter for a hearing on the request for a preliminary injunction.

The Court does not believe that the equities override [*13] the FTC's showing of possible anticompetitive effects from the merger. The equities point in different and conflicting directions. In the end, the Court believes that it is in the public's interest to consider more thoroughly the possible anticompetitive effects of the merger and maintain the status quo until that can be done.

IT IS ORDERED that the Plaintiff's Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order is granted. Defendants Paul L. Foster and Western Refining, Inc., including its domestic and foreign agents, divisions, subsidiaries, affiliates, partnerships, and joint ventures, are enjoined from acquiring any stock, assets, or other interest, directly or indirectly, from Defendant Giant Industries, Inc.

04/13/07

James O. Browning

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

[Capital City Cab Serv. v. Susquehanna Area Reg'l Airport Auth.]

United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania

April 18, 2007, Decided ; April 18, 2007, Filed

Civil Action No. 1:06-CV-671

Reporter

2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28527 *; 2007-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,677

CAPITAL CITY CAB SERVICE, INC., and AYAL SALAME, Plaintiffs v. SUSQUEHANNA AREA REGIONAL AIRPORT AUTHORITY, et al., Defendants

Subsequent History: Sanctions allowed by, Motion denied by Capital City Cab Serv. v. Susquehanna Area Reg'l Airport Auth., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89707 (M.D. Pa., Nov. 5, 2008)

Prior History: Capital City Cab Serv. v. Susquehanna Area Reg'l Airport Auth., 470 F. Supp. 2d 462, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85555 (M.D. Pa., 2006)

Core Terms

second amended complaint, motion for leave, antitrust, Airport, amend, equal protection claim, allegations

Counsel: [*1] For Capital City Cab Service, Inc., Ayal Salame, Plaintiffs: Joseph T. Sucec, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gardners, PA.

For Susquehanna Regional Airport Authority, Alfred Testa, Defendants: Dean F. Piermattei, Rhoads & Sinon, Harrisburg, PA; Stephanie E. DiVittore, Rhoads & Sinon LLP, Harrisburg, PA.

For Salgals, Inc., Randy Hicks, Defendants: Dean F. Piermattei, Rhoads & Sinon, Harrisburg, PA.

Judges: Yvette Kane, Chief Judge.

Opinion by: Yvette Kane

Opinion

MEMORANDUM

Before the Court is Plaintiffs' motion for leave to file a second amended complaint. (Doc. No. 28.) The parties have briefed the motion, and it is ripe for disposition. For the following reasons, the motion will be granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Procedural Background

On November 27, 2006, this Court granted Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' amended complaint (Doc. No. 11) pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). (Doc. No. 26.) In the order, the Court allowed Plaintiffs ten (10) days to file a motion for leave to amend pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a). (Doc. No. 26.) [*2] On December 5, 2006, Plaintiffs filed a motion for leave to file a second amended complaint (Doc. No. 28) and filed a brief in support of the motion on December 19, 2006 (Doc. No. 29). Plaintiffs' proposed second amended complaint includes two counts: a federal antitrust claim and an equal protection claim. Plaintiffs' complaint seeks injunctive as well as monetary relief. Defendants filed a brief in opposition on January 3, 2007 (Doc. No. 32), and Plaintiffs replied on January 12, 2007 (Doc. No. 33).

B. Factual Background

Most of the pertinent factual allegations in this case are addressed in the Court's November 27, 2006, order. (Doc. No. 26.) Because Plaintiffs proposed second amended complaint includes several new allegations that require elaboration, a brief summary is necessary.

Capital City Cab Services, Inc. ("Capital City"), is a taxicab company located in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and owned by Plaintiff Ayal Salame. Salame is an Israeli-born United States citizen. In 2004, Defendants Susquehanna Area Regional Airport Authority ("SARAA") and American Taxi, a competitor of Capital City, entered into an exclusive operating agreement at Harrisburg International Airport [*3] ("HIA") after a competitive-bidding process. That agreement, according to Plaintiffs, substantially limits Capital City's ability to compete for outbound fares from the airport because American Taxi has exclusive access to the garage facilities as well as the queue. In the second amended complaint, Plaintiffs additionally allege that American Taxi and Alfred Testa, who served as the Director of Aviation at SARAA during the time relevant to this case, worked in concert to ensure that American Taxi would win the contract by manipulating insurance requirements throughout the bidding process.

Salame and many of Capital City's taxicab drivers are Muslim. Many of the drivers speak Arabic as their primary language, but are United States citizens or legal residents. Plaintiffs allege that Testa refused to allow Capital City's drivers to conduct prayer rituals at HIA. [1] Plaintiffs also claim that Testa, on multiple occasions, stated that "he wanted 'no Arabs at his airport' and for Capital City to send 'only American cab drivers down here (to HIA for fares).'" (Proposed Second Am. Compl. P 45.)

[*4] Plaintiffs also assert that American Taxi was the only white-owned taxicab company in the metropolitan market. Defendant American Taxi is owned and managed by Josie and James Salinger. Non-parties United Cab and Keystone Cab are owned by Maher Saber, an Egyptian national. Penn Central Taxi is owned by Manuel Cardona, who is Puerto Rican.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a) allows a party to amend its pleading after a responsive pleading has been filed "by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires." Courts have discretion to deny a motion for leave to amend, Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962), but "[l]eave to amend must generally be granted unless equitable considerations render it otherwise unjust," Arthur v. Maersk, Inc., 434 F.3d 196, 204 (3d Cir. 2006). Such equitable considerations include "undue delay, bad faith, dilatory motive, prejudice, and futility." In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1434 (3d Cir. 1997).

[1] In their reply brief, Plaintiffs indicate that they are not asserting First Amendment claims against SARAA. (Doc. No. 33, at 10.) Rather, it is Plaintiffs' position that denying Capital City's drivers the right to pray at HIA supports Plaintiffs' claims of intentional discrimination under the Equal Protection Clause.

When evaluating the last consideration, [*5] futility, the court must apply "the same standard of legal sufficiency as applies under Rule 12(b)(6)." Id. Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is proper when, taking all factual allegations and inferences as true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Markowitz v. Northeast Land Co., 906 F.2d 100, 103 (3d Cir. 1990). Thus, if "under any reasonable reading of the complaint, the plaintiff may be entitled to relief," Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, 455 F.3d 225, 233 (3d Cir. 2006), the Court should permit a party to amend a pleading.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Sherman Act claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides, in relevant part, that: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' exclusive operating agreement violates the Sherman Act because it reduces access to the garage facility at HIA and limits taxicabs' ability to acquire outgoing fares. (Proposed Second Am. Compl. P 22.) Plaintiffs further allege that Defendants colluded [*6] to restrict Plaintiffs' access to outgoing fares. (Id.)

Throughout the briefs, Plaintiffs' arguments focus on whether Pennsylvania state law allows SARAA to enter into the exclusive contract. [2] Whether the Municipal Authorities Act, 53 Pa. Cons. St. §§ 5601-5622, authorized SARAA to enter in the contract at issue has already been decided by this Court. It does. (Doc. No. 26, at 12) ("[T]he Court finds no basis for a determination that SARAA exceeded the broad discretion afforded it under the [Municipal Authorities Act] by entering into an exclusive contract."). Plaintiffs' argument that the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission has sole jurisdiction over a common carrier's coverage area is equally unpersuasive in deciding whether federal antitrust law prohibits the exclusive operating arrangement at issue before the Court.

[*7] In order to state an claim that an exclusive operating agreement violated federal antitrust law, a plaintiff has the burden to define the relevant product and geographic markets in which the allegedly anticompetitive conduct occurred. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-30, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961); Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997). In their brief in opposition, Defendants cite to Double D Spotting Service, Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554 (8th Cir. 1998), for the same proposition. In response, Plaintiffs declare that "Paragraph 22 [of the proposed second amended complaint] identified Harrisburg International Airport as the 'relevant market' Double D Spotting apparently requires." (Doc. No. 33, at 6.) Yet Plaintiffs "definition" is legally insufficient even under the liberal notice-pleading requirements under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a). Electronics Communs. Corp. v. Toshiba Am. Consumer Prods., 129 F.3d 240, 245 (2d Cir. 1997) ("Without any allegation as to how market-wide competition will be affected, the complaint fails [*8] to allege a claim on which relief may be granted."). Indeed, in Queen City, the Third Circuit expressly held that a district court may dismiss a complaint "[w]here the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor. . ." 124 F.3d at 436.

Simply put, Plaintiffs' definition of the relevant market as "Harrisburg International Airport" fails to meet the minimum antitrust requirements. Even if HIA constituted a cognizable relevant geographic market, the Court notes that "[e]xclusive dealing contracts are analyzed under the rule of reason," Minnesota Ass'n of Nurse Anesthetists v. Unity Hosp., 208 F.3d 655, 660 (8th Cir. 2000), and Plaintiffs have not alleged that the anticompetitive agreement

---

[2] The first two of Plaintiffs' three questions presented are (1) "Does the [Municipal Authorities Act] deny Defendant SARAA the explicit power to issue an exclusive contract?" and (2) "Does the regulatory power of the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission preempt the power of Defendant SARAA to regulate taxicab service at Harrisburg International Airport?" The third (and last) question relates to Plaintiffs' Equal Protection claim.

between SARAA and American Taxi was unreasonable. Thus, Plaintiffs' antitrust claims are insufficient as a matter of law, and amendment would be futile on Count I.

B. Equal Protection [*9] claims

The Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution provides, in relevant part, that "No state shall . . . deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." U.S. Const. amend. XIV. In the proposed second amended complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants, acting under color of state law, entered into the complained-of contract with the intent to discriminate against Plaintiffs on the basis of ethnicity. Vill. of Arlington Heights v. Metro. Hous. Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 265-66, 97 S. Ct. 555, 50 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1977); cf. Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1, 20-21, 68 S. Ct. 836, 92 L. Ed. 1161 (1948) (Fourteenth Amendment prohibits judicial enforcement of racially restrictive covenants). Unlike Plaintiffs' previous complaint, which did not specify any different treatment of Plaintiffs, the proposed second amended complaint includes clear allegations of purposeful discrimination proscribed by the Fourteenth Amendment. Thus, the Court will grant Plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend with respect to their Equal Protection claims.

C. Punitive Damages and Qualified Immunity

Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend should be denied in part because [*10] Plaintiffs cannot recover punitive damages against SARAA, Testa, or Randy Hicks (an officer of SARAA). The Court agrees that Plaintiffs cannot pursue a claim of punitive damages against SARAA itself, see *Moore v. Susquehanna Area Reg'l Airport Auth., No. 02-0535, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45023, 2005 WL 2430790, at 8 (M.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2005), but may maintain such claims against the individual defendants, id.

Defendants also argue that the individual defendants enjoy qualified immunity. However, the Third Circuit has held that "a civil rights complaint filed under § 1983 against a government official need only satisfy the notice pleading standard of Rule 8(a), regardless of the availability of a qualified immunity defense." Thomas v. Independence Twp., 463 F.3d 285, 295 (3d Cir. 2006). In this case, it is clear that Plaintiffs can state an Equal Protection claim, and therefore amendment will not be futile. Accordingly, the Court will permit Plaintiffs to amend the pleadings to include their Equal Protection claims.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court will grant in part Plaintiffs' motion to file a second amended complaint. An appropriate order follows.

ORDER

AND [*11] NOW, on this 18th day of April, 2007, upon consideration of the parties' arguments in the briefs and for the reasons set forth in the accompanying memorandum, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT Plaintiffs' motion for leave to file a second amended complaint is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:

(1) Plaintiffs' proposed amendments in Count II (equal protection) will be allowed.

(2) Plaintiffs' proposed amendments to Count I (antitrust) will be stricken.

(3) Plaintiffs' claims for punitive damages against SARAA will be stricken.

/s/ Yvette Kane, Chief Judge

United States District Court

Middle District of Pennsylvania

In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

April 19, 2007, Decided; April 19, 2007, Filed

Civil Action No. 01-1652 (JAG) (Consolidated Cases); MDL Docket No. 1419

Reporter
2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97508 *; 2007 WL 5309212

IN RE K-DUR ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates To: All Actions

Subsequent History: Magistrate's recommendation at, Summary judgment granted, in part, summary judgment denied, in part by In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97509 (D.N.J., Sept. 25, 2007)

Prior History: In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102182 (D.N.J., Mar. 12, 2007)

Core Terms

documents, summary judgment, generic, discovery, purchases, Defendants', summary judgment motion, reimbursed, responses, branded, records, undisputed, Requests, reflecting, genuine issue of material fact, class action, no evidence, Interrogatories, antitrust, incapable, discovery request, Pharmaceuticals, non-moving, argues, unjust enrichment, material fact, amend, consolidated actions, discovery response, essential element

Counsel: [*1] For STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY, Special Master: STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY, LEAD ATTORNEY, BLANK, ROME, LLP, PRINCETON, NJ.

For HIP HEALTH PLAN OF FLORIDA, INC., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: DANIEL BERGER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER & MONTAGUE, PC, PHILADEPHIA, PA; LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: SHELLY L. FRIEDLAND, COHEN, MILSTEIN, HUSFLD & TOLL, P.L.L.C., NEW YORK, NY; THEODORE M. LIEVERMAN, SPECTOR, ROSEMAN & KODROFF, PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ALLYN ZISSEL LITE, LITE, DEPALMA, GREENBERG & RIVAS, LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: BARRY L. REFSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY, ARONCHICK, SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For AMY REICHERT, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, GREAT LAKES HEALTH PLAN, INC., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, JOSEPH J. MORGAN, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, CARL M. WALLACE, NORMA SEABROOK, ISRAEL REXACH, ELIAS HUSAMUDEEN, WILLIAM WASNICKI, GUY ANDERSON, ROBERT SEABROOK, STEVEN ROBINSON, On behalf of Correction officers benevolent association security benefits [*2] fund, on behalf of themselves and all other similarly situated, Consol Plaintiffs: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For JACQUELINE CUNDIFF, Consol Plaintiff: DAVID K. LIETZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, COALE, COOLEY, LIETZ & MCINERNY, ESQS., WASHINGTON, DC; FREDERICK P. FURTH, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, THE FURTH FIRM LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For ESTELLE TRAVERS, on Behalf of Herself and all Others Similarly Situated, Consol Plaintiff: GUIDO SAVERI, RICHARD ALEXANDER SAVERI, LEAD ATTORNEYS, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, SAVERI & SAVERI, INC., SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For MECHANICAL CONTRACTORS-UA LOCAL 119 WELFARE PLAN, by and through its Trustees, Danny Price, William Morrison, Phillip Holloway, J. Bradley Donaghey, Glen Reed Jr. and Stanley Small, IBEW-NECA LOCAL 505 HEALTH & WELFARE PLAN, by and through its Trustees, Donnie Adams, Terry N. Adams, Fred J. Moore, Charles S. Belk, Charles Freeman and Larry Smith, A.F. OF L.-A.G.C. BUILDING TRADES WELFARE PLAN, by and through its Trustees, Larry Fincher, Gordon Parmer, Charles Loftin, Gene Stokely, Jack Terry and Andy Joiner, Consol [*3] Plaintiffs: JOSEPH J. DEPALMA, LEAD ATTORNEY, LITE, DEPALMA, GREENBERG & RIVAS, LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

For ESTATE OF STANLEY NEMSER, Consol Plaintiff: ALLYN ZISSEL LITE, LEAD ATTORNEY, LITE, DEPALMA, GREENBERG & RIVAS, LLC, NEWARK, NJ; ANN D. WHITE, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, ANN D. WHITE LAW OFFICES, P.C., JENKINTOWN, PA.

For CONSUMERS FOR AFFORDABLE HEALTHCARE COALITION, Consol Plaintiff: STEVEN J. PFEFFERLE, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, TERHAAR ARCHIBALD PFEFFERLE & GRIEBEL, MINNEAPOLIS, MN.

For WALGREEN CO., Consol Plaintiff: DEBORAH S. CORBISHLEY, LEAD ATTORNEY, KENNY, NACHWALTER, SEYMOUR, ARNOLD, CRITCHLOW & SPECTOR, PA, MIAMI, FL; STACEY K. SUTTON, LEAD ATTORNEY, KENNY NACHWALTER, PA, MIAMI, FL.

For ECKARD CORPORATION, THE KROGER CO., ALBERTSON'S INC., SAFEWAY, INC., HY-VEE, INC., Consol Plaintiffs: STACEY K. SUTTON, LEAD ATTORNEY, KENNY NACHWALTER, PA, MIAMI, FL.

For NATALIE SUTIN, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: LIONEL Z GLANCY, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, Los Angeles, CA.

For ROSE LIPSCOMB, NEW YORK STATE-WIDE SENIOR ACTION COUNCIL, INC., MASSACHUSETTS SENIOR ACTION COUNCIL, [*4] on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiffs: ALLYN ZISSEL LITE, LEAD ATTORNEY, LITE, DEPALMA, GREENBERG & RIVAS, LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

For GEORGE BURNS, Individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: ANDREW ROBERT JACOBS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RAMSEY BERMAN, PC, MORRISTOWN, NJ.

For MILDRED GROSSMAN, on her own behalf and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: C. OLIVER BURT, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, BURT & PUCILLO, PC, WEST PALM BEACH, FL.

For LOUISIANA WHOLESALE DRUG CO. INC, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: PETER S. PEARLMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COHN, LIFLAND, PEARLMAN, HERRMANN & KNOPF, LLP, SADDLE BROOK, NJ; REBEKAH R. CONROY, WALDER HAYDEN & BROGAN, ROSELAND, NJ.

For UNITED FOOD AND COMMERCIAL WORKERS LOCAL 56 HEALTH & WELFARE DEPARTMENT, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, PATRICK J. LYNCH, Consol Plaintiffs: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, TRUJILLO, RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ; THEODORE M. LIEVERMAN, SPECTOR, ROSEMAN & KODROFF, PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For FRANCES IRENE STEADMAN, Consol Plaintiff: FREDERICK [*5] T. KUYKENDALL, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, GARDNER, MIDDLEBROOKS, FLEMING, GIBBONS & KITTRELL, PC, BIRMINGHAM, AL; JAMES H MCFERRIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, SOUTHEASTERN LEGAL GROUP, BIRMINGHAM, AL; S C MIDDLEBROOKS, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, GARDNER, MIDDLEBROOKS, FLEMING & GIBBONS, PC, MOBILE, AL.

For DAWN MAFFEI, Consol Plaintiff: MICHAEL G. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA.

For LEONARD BROWN, Consol Plaintiff: JENNIFER SHARON ABRAMS, JOSEPH J. TABACCO, JR., LEAD ATTORNEYS, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, BERMAN, DEVALERIO, PEASE & TABACCO, PC, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

For ARKANSAS CARPENTERS HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, On its own behalf & on behalf of all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: GREG THOMPSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, PROVOST & UMPHREY, BEAUMONT, TX.

For MARY MARGARET PIETSCH, individually and on behalf of a class of persons similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: BRITT L. TINGLUM, LYNN L. SARKO, LEAD ATTORNEYS, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, KELLER & ROHRBACK, LLP, SEATTLE, WA; RON KILGARD, LEAD [*6] ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, DALTON, GOTTO, SAMSON & KILGARD, PLC, PHOENIX, AZ.

For DONALD W. HANNU, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: NEIL A. MCEWEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, INVER GROVE HEIGHTS, MN.

For BETTY SAAD, Consol Plaintiff: DIANE A. NYGAARD, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, LEAWOOD, KS.

For EVELYN BARCZAK, ANTHONY DEBELLA, on behalf of himiself and others similiarly situated, Consol Plaintiffs: MICHAEL J. FLANNERY, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, CAREY & DANIS, ST. LOUIS, MO.

For AGATHA AGATHA "NIKKI&quo MCCUTCHON, Consol Plaintiff: THOMAS M. SOBOL, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, CAMBRIDGE, MA.

For RITE AID CORPORATION, Consol Plaintiff: BARRY L. REFSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY, ARONCHICK, SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA; JERRY L. TANENBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEY, SCHNADER HARRISON SEGAL & LEWIS LLP, CHERRY HILL, NJ; STEVE D. SHADOWEN, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA.

For COBALT CORP., Consol Plaintiff: CHARLES J. BARNHILL, JR., WILLIAM P. DIXON, LEAD ATTORNEYS, [*7] COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, MINER, BARNHILL & GALLAND, ESQS., MADISON, WI; MARY C. NASH, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, COBALT CORPORATION, MILWAUKEE, WI; RICHARD W. COHEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, LOWEY, DANNENBERG, BEMPORAD & SELINGER, ESQS., WHITE PLAINS, NJ.

For CVS MERIDIAN, INC., Consol Plaintiff: BARRY L. REFSIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY, ARONCHICK, SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA; STEVE D. SHADOWEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA.

For ROBERT MITCHELL, Consol Plaintiff: DAVID J. SHEA, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, MANTESE, MILLER & SHEA, PLLC, TROY, MI; KENNETH J. MCINTYRE, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, DICKINSON WRIGHT, ESQS., DETROIT, MI; ROBERT L. MICHELS, LEAD ATTORNEY, COUNSEL NOT ADMITTED TO USDC-NJ BAR, WINSTON & STRAWN LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

Judges: STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY, SPECIAL MASTER.

Opinion by: STEPHEN M. ORLOFSKY

Opinion

SPECIAL MASTER'S REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION ON THE MOTION OF DEFENDANTS, SCHERING-PLOUGH CORPORATION, KEY PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., UPSHER-SMITH LABORATORIES, INC., WYETH

AND ESI LEDERLE FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AGAINST INDIRECT [*8] PURCHASER PLAINTIFF ARKANSAS CARPENTERS HEALTH AND WELFARE FUND

ORLOFSKY, SPECIAL MASTER

INTRODUCTION

This consolidated antitrust action has been transferred to the District of New Jersey by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1407. Pursuant to Rule 53 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure [1] and by consent of all parties in the above-captioned action, I have been appointed by order of this Court, dated April 12, 2006, to preside as a Special Master to review and decide all currently pending and future motions directed to Judge Joseph A. Greenaway, Jr. and Magistrate Judge Madeline Cox Arleo including, but not limited to discovery disputes, class certification and summary judgment (the "Appointment Order") (Docket No. 316). The Appointment Order provides that the decision of the Special Master on any matter before the Special Master will conclusively resolve that matter unless an appropriate objection is filed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(g).

This Report and Recommendation will decide Defendants', Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle, Motion for Summary Judgment Against Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund (the "Motion"). This Report and Recommendations is based upon the parties' written submissions in support of and in opposition to the Motion and the oral argument presented by the parties at a March 26, 2007 telephonic hearing before me.

BACKGROUND

The factual background of this consolidated action and the underlying motions have been set forth in detail in Judge Greenaway's decision in this case, see In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F.Supp.2d 517 (D.N.J. 2004), and my Report and Recommendation on: (1) Defendants Schering-Plough Corporation, Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc. and Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc.'s Motion for Sanctions against Plaintiff Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; (2) Plaintiff Commonwealth of Pennsylvania's Cross-Motion to Dismiss; and (3) Motion of James Morgan to Intervene as Class Representative (Docket No. 328). [*10] Familiarity with that factual background is presumed and will not be repeated in this Report and Recommendation except where necessary to resolve this motion.

DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AGAINST INDIRECT PURCHASER PLAINTIFF ARKANSAS CARPENTERS HEALTH AND WELFARE FUND

Pending before me is the motion of Defendants, Schering-Plough Corporation ("Schering"), Key Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Key"), Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc. ("Upsher"), Wyeth and ESI Lederle ("ESI") (collectively, "Defendants"), for summary judgment on the class action complaint of Indirect Purchaser Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund (the "Motion"). The relief sought from the Court is a determination that there no evidence to support each element of the claims brought in the Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund ("Arkansas Carpenters") class

---

[1] (a) Appointment.

(1) Unless a statute provides otherwise, a court may appoint a master only to:

(A) perform duties consented to by the parties;

* * *

(C) address pretrial and post-trial matters that cannot be addressed [*9] effectively and timely by an available district judge or magistrate judge of the district.

action complaint (the "Complaint"), that there are no genuine issues of material fact that are in dispute and that, therefore, the Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

History of the Dispute

On May 22, 2006, Schering filed separate letter motions to compel certain discovery responses from Arkansas Carpenters and Great Lakes Health Plan (Docket [*11] No. 318). Following the completion of briefing on the respective letter motions, I issued the Special Master's Report and Recommendation on Schering-Plough Corporation's May 22, 2006 Letter Motions to Compel Discovery from Indirect Purchaser Class Representatives Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund and Great Lakes Health Plan (Docket No. 336) (the "Report").

In that Report, I found, pursuant to a July 14, 2006 e-mail from counsel to Arkansas Carpenters, that Arkansas Carpenters intended to remain in the case, that it had begun the process of responding to Schering's discovery requests and would be providing deposition dates to Schering. (Report, at 8.) In addition, I found that, to that point, Arkansas Carpenters' response to the discovery that Schering had served upon it was, "by any measure, unsatisfactory." (Id.) However, relying upon counsel's representation, I also found that Arkansas Carpenters was attempting to comply with its discovery obligations. As a consequence, I granted Schering's motion and ordered Arkansas Carpenters to provide "complete answers" to Schering's discovery requests within thirty (30) days. (Report, at 8.) This ruling was memorialized in an order [*12] of the same date (the "Order") (Docket No. 337). Finally, the Report admonished Arkansas Carpenters to "be mindful of the fact that any further failure on its part to comply with discovery, including the attached Order, shall be dealt with appropriately, including the possible imposition of sanctions, up to and including its dismissal." (Report, at 8-9.)

I. LEGAL STANDARD GOVERNING MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Pursuant to Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a motion for summary judgment shall be granted "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "In deciding whether there is a disputed issue of material fact, the court must view the evidence in favor of the non-moving party by extending any reasonable favorable inference to that party; in other words, 'the non-moving party's evidence is to be believed and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in [that party's favor].'" *Brown v. City of Camden, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56215, 2006 WL 2177320, at 3 (D.N.J. July 27, 2006) [*13] (quoting Hunt v. Cromartie, 526 U.S. 541, 552, 119 S. Ct. 1545, 143 L. Ed. 2d 731 (1999)). "A dispute is 'genuine' if 'the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party.'" Dasrath v. Continental Airlines, Inc., 467 F.Supp.2d 431, 443 (D.N.J. 2006) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). "A fact is 'material' only if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the applicable rule of law." Id. Therefore, "[d]isputes over irrelevant or unnecessary facts will not preclude a grant of summary judgment." Id.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on the Arkansas Carpenters' Class Action Complaint

On January 17, 2007, Defendants moved for an order granting summary judgment against the Arkansas Carpenters' Complaint pursuant to Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (the "Motion") (Docket No. 398). In support of their motion, Defendants filed a memorandum of law ("Defendants' Memo. of Law"). In Defendants' Memo. of Law, Defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment on the Complaint because there is no evidence supporting the key elements of each claim for relief brought by Arkansas Carpenters. In particular, Defendants [*14] claim that there is no evidence showing: (1) that Arkansas Carpenters paid for K-Dur; (2) the price of such payments, if any; and (3) that such payments would have been lower with earlier generic entry. (Defs.' Memo. of Law, at 1.) [2] Thus, Defendants argue that Arkansas Carpenters cannot demonstrate a compensable injury.

In support of their position, Defendants rely upon a number of "undisputed facts" that are material to Arkansas Carpenters' claims. These "undisputed facts" include, but are not limited to the following: (1) Schering served its First Set of Interrogatories and Document Requests on July 1, 2004; (2) Arkansas Carpenters did not provide responses to this discovery in the intervening twenty-two (22) months; (3) on May 22, 2006, Schering filed a motion to compel discovery against Arkansas Carpenters; (4) the motion to compel was granted on July 21, 2006; (5) Arkansas Carpenters [*15] produced only two documents in response to Schering's discovery requests and neither document demonstrated that Arkansas Carpenters had made any payments for K-Dur or its AB-rated generics; (6) Arkansas Carpenters did not produce any other documents in response to the discovery requests; (7) in response to the Defendants' First Set of Requests for Admission, Arkansas Carpenters admitted that it did not have any documents: (a) reflecting payments for K-Dur or generic versions of the drug; (b) from which the average price paid for K-Dur or generics could be calculated; (c) from which to compare the per pill payments for K-Dur versus generics; and (d) showing the average co-payment for K-Dur versus generics; and (8) Arkansas Carpenters did not provide any interrogatory responses from which such information could be determined. (Defs.' Memo. of Law, at 2-3.) [3]

Relying upon the [*16] foregoing "undisputed facts," Defendants argue that Arkansas Carpenters is incapable of demonstrating an injury with respect to each of its claims and, therefore, is incapable of substantiating its claims for relief. Conversely, Defendants argue that they have satisfied their burden on summary judgment by demonstrating the abject lack of evidence in support of the essential elements of the respective claims. (Id. at 3-4.) Defendants argue that without such evidence, their alleged conduct cannot constitute actionable claims for relief and that, as a result, Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law. (Id. at 5.)

B. Arkansas Carpenters' Opposition to the Motion for Summary Judgment

In response to the Motion, Arkansas Carpenters submitted a Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment against Arkansas Carpenters Fund ("Arkansas Carpenters' Memo. of Law"). In their Memo. of Law, Arkansas Carpenters argues that the only fact that is relevant for purposes of the Motion is whether Arkansas Carpenters paid for, or reimbursed plan members for purchases of K-Dur, or its generic equivalent. (ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 1.) [4] Indeed, Arkansas Carpenters argues [*17] that it did, in fact, make payments or reimbursements for purchases of K-Dur and that this fact and contention is supported by the Declaration of James Rosemergy (the "Rosemergy Declaration") which was submitted in support of the IP Plf's. Memo. of Law.

Similarly, Arkansas Carpenters argues that Defendants' Motion must be denied because the only fact upon which Defendants rely -- i.e., whether Arkansas Carpenters purchased or reimbursed for purchases of K-Dur -- is disputed by Arkansas Carpenters. Arkansas Carpenters notes that the Declaration attaches partial records which detail the purchases of K-Dur made by Arkansas Carpenters. (Id.) While Arkansas Carpenters admits that an antitrust plaintiff must show injury or "impact" as an element of an antitrust claim which is separate from damages, it notes that that the payment records it has produced clearly reflect that Arkansas Carpenters made some payments for K-Dur, thereby creating a disputed issue of material fact which [*18] precludes the entry of summary judgment. (Id. at 2.) Arkansas Carpenters also argues that in response to Schering's Requests for Admission, it noted that it was not

---

[2] References to Defendants' Schering-Plough Corporation, Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle, Memorandum of Law in Support of Their Motion for Summary Judgment Against Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund shall be cited as "Defs.' Memo. of Law at __."

[3] In addition to the undisputed facts specifically identified in the Memo. of Law, the Defendants submitted a broader Statement of Undisputed Facts in Support of their Motion for Summary Judgment Against Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund (the "Defs.' Statement") (Docket No. 398).

[4] References to Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment Against Arkansas Carpenters Fund shall be cited as "ACHWF Memo. of Law, at __."

capable of producing specific data related to purchases or reimbursements of K-Dur because this information was in the hands of its pharmaceutical benefits manager/plan administrator (the "Administrator"). Further, Arkansas Carpenters argues that it specifically denied the request that it had no documents in its possession that its plan members purchased K-Dur. (Id.)

Arkansas Carpenters adds that the alleged absence of impact is the only issue challenged by Defendants' Motion. Arkansas Carpenters notes, however, that Defendants have not challenged the sufficiency of its responses to the discovery requests or whether it is an adequate class representative. Thus, Arkansas Carpenters contends that with respect to the single, narrow legal question presented by Defendants' Motion, the documents submitted in opposition to the Motion conclusively preclude summary judgment. (ACHWF Memo. of Law, at 2-3.)

Alternatively, Arkansas Carpenters originally argued that the Motion should be denied because it was entitled, pursuant to Rule 56(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, [*19] to a brief period of time within which to review the documents produced by the Arkansas Carpenters' Administrator. (Id. at 3.) Arkansas Carpenters argued that Rule 56(f) requests are usually granted provided that the non-movant demonstrates why it cannot presently respond to the allegations and identifies what additional investigation needs to occur. To this end, Arkansas Carpenters noted that the Declaration reflects the difficulties that Arkansas Carpenters has experienced in trying to obtain documents from both former and current benefit administrators. Further, Arkansas Carpenters explained that in order to make the purchase records available, counsel for Arkansas Carpenters would need to conduct a page-by-page review of the documents produced and then redact any confidential personal information as required by HIPAA. Arkansas Carpenters contended that it would take significant time to conduct this review. However, once this review had been completed, Arkansas Carpenters contended that it would prove difficult to demonstrate that Arkansas Carpenters reimbursed some plan participants for purchases of K-Dur and, as a result, sustained an antitrust injury. (Id. at 3-4.)

Therefore, [*20] Arkansas Carpenters contends that Defendants' Motion should be dismissed. Alternatively, Arkansas Carpenters asked the Court to defer the Motion for thirty (30) days to permit the continued review of the Administrators' documents. (Id. at 5.) [5]

C. Defendants' Reply in Support of Motion for Summary Judgment on the Arkansas Carpenters Class Action Complaint

In further support of its Motion, on March 14, 2007, Defendants submitted their Reply in Further Support of their Motion for Summary Judgment Against Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund ("Defendants' Reply Memo.") (Docket No. 425). In their Reply, Defendants contend that in Defs.' Memo. of Law, they established the following: (1) that Arkansas Carpenters admitted it has no evidence reflecting that it would [*21] have benefited from earlier entry of generic K-Dur; (2) that Arkansas Carpenters admitted that it has no evidence reflecting that it would have bought generic K-Dur given earlier generic entry; and that (3) Arkansas Carpenters has admitted it has no evidence demonstrating that generic K-Dur would have been cheaper then branded K-Dur. (Defs.' Reply Memo. at 1.) [6]

Importantly, Defendants note that Arkansas Carpenters has proffered only one fact -- i.e., that it had plan members which bought K-Dur. However, Defendants argue that without evidence that Arkansas Carpenters would have paid

---

[5] Arkansas Carpenters' request for relief under Rule 56(f) is now moot. Pursuant to a March 23, 2007 letter from Theodore Lieverman, Esq. to me (Docket No. 427), Arkansas Carpenters withdrew its request for this relief. In addition, during the March 26, 2007 telephonic hearing before me, Mr. Lieverman reiterated that Arkansas Carpenters was not seeking this relief under Rule 56(f). Hrg. Tr. at 13.

[6] References to Defendants' Schering-Plough Corporation, Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc., Wyeth and ESI Lederle, Reply Memorandum of Law in Support of Their Motion for Summary Judgment Against Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund shall be cited as "Defs.' Reply Memo. at __."

a cheaper price for generic K-Dur given earlier generic entry, Arkansas Carpenters singular fact is insufficient to establish that it suffered a compensable injury. Further, Defendants reemphasize that Arkansas Carpenters has had sufficient time to collect and produce discovery in support of its claims, [*22] but has failed to produce adequate admissible evidence. (Id.)

Defendants note that not only does Arkansas Carpenters not dispute that it bears the burden of proving each element of its claims, but also argue that Arkansas Carpenters must show that it actually paid for K-Dur and that the payments for K-Dur were higher than they would have been had generic entry occurred earlier. (Id. at 2.) To this end, Defendants argue that Arkansas Carpenters has presented no evidence that it paid for K-Dur. Specifically, Defendants note that the Rosemergy Declaration submitted by Arkansas Carpenters simply attaches random pharmacy records of unidentified individuals, which do not, in any respect, identify their relationship to Arkansas Carpenters and, further, that there is no evidence in the records themselves which demonstrate that Arkansas Carpenters paid any money in connection with the purported purchases. Furthermore, Defendants note that the records do not contain a single entry reflecting payments for generic K-Dur or reflect the amount of such payments. Thus, Defendants argue that because Arkansas Carpenters cannot demonstrate that it would have bought generic K-Dur at a cheaper price had [*23] generic entry occurred earlier, Arkansas Carpenters simply cannot prove that it suffered an injury. (Defs.' Reply Memo. at 2.)

In addition, Defendants argue that the documents submitted by Arkansas Carpenters should be stricken. First, Defendants contend that Arkansas Carpenters cannot rely upon documents which contradict Arkansas Carpenters' earlier admission that it had no documents reflecting that it had made payments for branded or generic K-Dur. In addition, Defendants argue that Arkansas Carpenters cannot escape an earlier binding admission by submitting an affidavit in response to the summary judgment motion that contradicts that very admission. (Id. at 3.)

Second, Defendants emphasize that Rule 56(e) requires an affidavit submitted in response to a motion for summary judgment to, inter alia, be made based on "personal knowledge" and "show affirmatively" that the affiant is competent to testify about the matter contained in the affidavit. In this regard, Defendants contend that the records submitted by Arkansas Carpenters should be stricken because Mr. Rosemergy, as counsel to the Indirect Purchasers, does not have personal knowledge of the accuracy of the documents provided by [*24] the Administrator. Moreover, Defendants note that several courts have found that affidavits submitted, on summary judgment, by counsel who lack personal knowledge, fail to create a genuine issue of material fact. (Defs.' Reply Memo. at 3-4.)

Third, Defendants argue that Arkansas Carpenters should not now be permitted to rely upon documents that were not produced in response to the Court's July 21, 2006 Order. Defendants note that they specifically sought documents related to Arkansas Carpenters' purchases of K-Dur as early as July 2004. (Defs.' Reply Memo. at 4.) Nonetheless, Arkansas Carpenters never produced the instant records despite the fact that the Declaration reflects that these documents had been gathered as early as April 2001. In contrast, Defendants note that Arkansas Carpenters produced only two documents, neither of which pertained to Arkansas Carpenters' payments for branded or generic K-Dur. Thus, Defendants argue that because Arkansas Carpenters failed to produce the instant records in response to the Court's Order, these records should be stricken by the Court. (Id.)

Finally, Defendants contend that Arkansas Carpenters' argument that it may wait until trial to present [*25] the evidence in support of its claims is simply wrong as a matter of law. Instead, Defendants argue that any party opposing summary judgment cannot withhold its evidence until trial, but instead must present whatever evidence it has in opposition to the motion. (Id. at 6.) [7]

In light of the foregoing arguments, Defendants contend that the Motion should be granted. (Id. at 8.)

---

